"Together," by Robert Herrick. Published by the Macmillan Company, New York.

Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton, who died August 10, began her literary career at the age of fourteen, when she contributed a poem to a Boston newspaper. When she was eighteen she published her first hook—a small volume of stories, poems, and sketches which had appeared in periodicals. At twenty she married her publisher, William V. Moulton, who edited the Boston True Flag. That was in 1855 (she was born in 1835 at Pomfret, Connecticut), and was the beginning of a succession of many happy and prosperous years, very active both socially and in letters. As a writer she will be remembered longest for her poetry.

An extraordinary commission has been created in Paris to investigate the affairs of the Order of the Legion of Honor, created by Napoleon, as a signal mark of merit for distinguished service rendered to the State. This original purpose of its founder has been gradually subverted and the cross has been bestowed for rather ordinary causes, frequently political.

LA MARQUISE

TURKISH CIGARETTES

"FINEST MADE"

10 for 25 Cents

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

By Sidney G. P. Coryn.

The total number of books published in America during 1907 was 9620, from which may be subtracted 695 new editions, leaving 925 really new books appearing in the United States.

Of these 6517 were by American authors or were new editions manufactured in the United States, the others being by English or other foreign authors or consisting of imported editions, bound or in sheets.

We are gradually making good our literary declaration of independence, every year producing a larger proportion of the books we read, especially fiction. In quantity if not in quality we are catching up with England, where last year 9914 books appeared, only 294 ahead of us, whereas in 1906 the English publications outnumbered the American by 1464.

Autobiography of Oliver Otis Howard, Major-General United States Army. Published by the Baker & Taylor Company, New York. In two volumes.

Among personal recollections of the Civil War this fine work must take a high place. General Howard gives us the story of his life from childhood down to his participation in the presidential electoral campaign of 1904. From the personal standpoint the history of early half a century has never been better written.

The work is divided into four parts, the first of the four being devoted to early years, the second and the most important to the Civil War, the third to the Reconstruction period, and the fourth to military departmental work of various kinds, civil occupations and foreign travel.

The writer of personal reminiscences of an historical kind is always under temptation to wander afield and to diminish the value of his work by incursions into domains outside the sphere of his own observations. General Howard is to be congratulated upon the strictest possible observance of his self-imposed limits, and for this reason his autobiography has not only an extraordinary interest, but its evidential value is enhanced. He does not give us a history of the war, but of that part of the war that he himself witnessed, and how large a part that was needs no indication.

General Howard's active military life began with his appointment to the colonelcy of the Third Maine Regiment and his immediate departure for the front. It was the beginning of a strenuous service to which there are very few parallels. We have fine pictures of the battles of Bull Run, of Williamsburg, Fair Oaks, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Missionary Ridge, Dalton-Resaca, Oostanaula, Cassville, Pickett's Mill, Kenesaw, Smyrna Camp, Peach Creek, Atlanta, Ezra Church, Jonesboro, Lovejoy's Station, Griswoldville, Averysboro, and Bentonville. The descriptions are always concise and easily to be understood by the non-military reader. The author has a happy facility in anecdote, narrative, and sometimes in dialogue, while his personal modesty is admirable, but not unexpected in conjunction with so much distinguished valor. There have been many books of Civil War reminiscence, but none that is better justified than this or that is more readable, more pleasing, or more instructive. By its conscientious preparation General Howard has rendered a service to history and to his country. The work is rounded off by eighteen well chosen and well executed illustrations.

The Next Step in Evolution, by Isaac K. Funk, D. D., L.L. D. Published by Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York; 50 cents.

The fifth edition of this striking little work ought to find a larger audience than the earlier issues if only for the reason that the number of receptive minds is now much greater. Those who have not had farewell to spirituality because they find themselves in hopeless disagreement with the anthropomorphism of the churches will welcome an aspect of religious expectation that is sustained by the signs of the times and that does violence to any rational scheme of evolution. Dr. Funk believes in the "second coming of Christ," but as an incarnation in a collective humanity and a general awakening of spiritual comprehension rather than as a phenomenon appealing directly to the senses. He writes persuasively and from enthusiastic conviction, and although his book can be read in an hour or two it can hardly fail to leave an ineffaceable impression.

The Greater Love, by Anna McClure Sholl. Published by the Outing Publishing Company, New York; $1.50.

An undeniably powerful story is a little narrowed by its narrow mental environment. Professing to show "that there is no escape from the consequences of an offense against the laws governing the sexes, no matter how extenuating the circumstances may be," we are presented with a picture of society claiming to be representative of the world at large, but actually representative only of its pigotry and its pettishness. Eleanor Valgrave need not have endured the persecution of the miserable and washish clique in her native town for one moment longer than she desired. The great outside tolerant world was open to her and it would have learned her story with the polite shrug of kindly unconcern.

When Eleanor went to Paris she met Valgrave and was fascinated by him. He could not marry her, as his insane wife was still alive. He returned to her aid during the siege of Paris, when she was panic-struck and helpless, and as the legal tie was still impossible it was dispensed with. When Valgrave's wife eventually dies he is in Africa, and he is carried off by disease while on his way back to marry Eleanor, leaving her with a little daughter, Constance.

When Eleanor returns to her native town in America many years afterwards she is famous as an artist and wealthy. Her story is known only to her relatives, but it need hardly be said that it is divulged by an ill-tempered sister-in-law. Then the social persecution begins. The Rev. Magnus Hatherley, a rather ridiculous clergyman, breaks his engagement with Constance because he fears to perpetuate the taint in her blood. Constance herself leaves her mother and becomes a governess in another town when she learns that the union between her father and mother was irregular, and thus proves, contrary to the intention of the author, that she is a heartless little prig. Eleanor eventually leaves the country and effaces herself in order that she may not hinder her daughter's matrimonial prospects, and so we are left in a state of helpless disgust at the victory of conventions that doubtless exist in certain circles, but that are wholly strange to the wider world of real men and women.

The story will be read and enjoyed because of its strong human interest, but it will be read also with curiosity as affording a glimpse of social spheres that are as strange as they are repellent.

Jean Jacques Rousseau, by Jules Lemaître. Translated by Jeanne Mairet and published by the McClure Company, New York; $2.50.

The character of Rousseau will always be an attractive one because it is so human. We have a wondrous fellow feeling with the sinner, and when the sinner suffers and repents we feel that here is indeed a lesson within the comprehension of us all.

A series of lectures is not perhaps the best way to study biography, but much may be forgiven when the lectures are so historical, so closely reasoned, and so critical as those of M. Lemaître. There are ten of these lectures in all and their subjects are so well chosen that the breaks in continuity almost disappear. Nothing could be better than the discourse on the "Confessions." That on "The Reveries" is equally good, while the lectures on the great epochs of Rousseau's life are discriminating and sympathetic.

Views and Reviews, by Henry James. Published by the Ball Publishing Company, Boston; $1.50.

It is a little strange that these lesser writings of Mr. Henry James should now make their appearance for the first time. Unless we are mistaken, there is much more of the same kind that might advantageously be rescued from the ephemeral form in which it originally appeared.

As a reviewer we sometimes see Mr. James to best advantage. The present volume contains some twelve specimens of this kind of work, and it is well that they should be preserved as models of what literary criticism ought to be. The novels of George Eliot, for instance, have never received abler treatment. The famous libel suit between Whistler and Ruskin is inimitably recalled. Some of the limitations of Dickens are set forward with admirable insight, although we may wonder if Mr. James would say now as he said in 1865 that it would be an "offense against humanity" to place Mr. Dickens among the greatest novelists. Neither, perhaps, would he repeat his judgment of the same year that Matthew Arnold's supreme virtue is "that he is not offensively clever." Mr. Arnold certainly was not offensively clever, but perhaps Mr. James would now concede his positive as well as his negative claims to a place in the pantheon of literature. Even the verdicts of Mr. James, nearly all of them, need the kindly modifications of time, and perhaps this volume is even more useful as a study of Mr. James than of the subjects to which the essays are devoted. But it should on no account be missed.

The Church of Today, by Joseph Henry Croker. Published by the Pilgrim Press, New York and Chicago.

This is a plea for the recognition of the church as a "supreme necessity," but the author seems not always to be aware that if the church is no longer so recognized it is the fault of the church, and not of the people, who are seldom indifferent to "supreme necessities." The book is written broadly, tolerantly, earnestly, but it would be more effective if it placed religious organizations upon the defensive rather than the people who are not therefore insensitive to spiritual needs because they find their gratification outside the church rather than within it.

"I Never Dine Without It."

Chafing Dish Cooking
Many dainty dishes can be prepared in a chafing dish.

LEA & PERRINS SAUCE
THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE
adds a piquant flavor indispensable to good Chafing Dish Cooking
Fish, Shrimps, Oysters, Clams and Lobsters; Frogs' Legs and Welsh Rarebit are given an appetizing and delicate relish by its use.
Imitated but Never equalled. JOHN DUNCAN'S SONS, Agents, N. Y.

Vacation Questions Quickly Settled
Call or write to Dept. Ad. 948 Flood Building for literature and beautifully illustrated booklets on California Resorts and Outing Places.

ROWING—BATHING—FISHING—CAMPING—EXCELLENT HOTELS
SOUTHERN PACIFIC TICKET OFFICES
884 Market St., 14 Powell St., Ferry Depot

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.

Attractions with the charm of novelty will be noticeable by their absence next week at the theatres, but it may be said with truth that the plays to continue are well worth seeing. The New Alcazar Theatre will have a change of bill, though not an entirely new offering, and at the Van Ness and the Princess the pieces now running successfully will be kept on the boards. The Orpheum will present some new people in vaudeville, and one of the programme numbers is to be a dramatic sketch for which there is advance consideration.

"The Man of the Hour," George Broadhurst's comedy of political life and suggestion, will continue at the Van Ness Theatre. The play and the players in the cast are discussed in another column.

At the New Alcazar Theatre next week White Whittlesey will appear in the last offering of his engagement, "One Summer's Day," in which the star won deserved commendation on a previous occasion. Mr. Whittlesey is doing the leading rôle in "Brother Officers" this week with something more than satisfactory art. In fact, it may be said that the actor in the long line of heroes that has been waked to life under his always intelligent and sympathetic treatment has shown the ease of power and confidence to a greater extent than ever before. His success during his season at the New Alcazar has been positive, and yet no more than his talent and his application have fairly earned.

In "One Summer's Day" Mr. Whittlesey assumes the rôle of an old bachelor, outwardly cynical, but really sentimental. It is a John Drew part, was received with high favor when that polished actor first presented it, and Mr. Whittlesey will not fail in strength or pathos in his impersonation. The company will be well placed in the supporting cast and the management, as always, will give the mounting painstaking attention.

Ferris Hartman is doing some of his best work at the Princess Theatre in "The Toy Maker," which will be continued all next week. There is real comedy in the part and Mr. Hartman is peculiarly happy in his characterization. His songs, "I Got Plenty" and "A Picture No Artist Can Paint," have new verses, of course, but never enough for the audience. Zoe Barnett, as Elsa and the living doll, was never more completely possessed by the spirit of her part. It is a distinctive and harmonious creation, quite as commendable for its restraint and dainty discretion as for its graces of melody and movement. Walter de Leon is a handsome Frederick, thoroughly at ease in the rôle, and without the apologetic air which has marked his appearance in parts not so well suited to his ability. Arthur Cunningham has some good music in the monastery scenes and, as ever, sings it effectively. Mr. Cunningham realizes, though many singers do not, that most auditors like to hear the words as well as the vibrations of the voice, even if the sense and sentiment of the song are weak and the singing organ all that may be desired. In the toy-shop scene and in the dance at the opening of the second act the chorus does its full share.

At the Orpheum next week, beginning with the matinee performance Sunday, the leading feature will be Edna Phillips and a supporting company of four in a comedietta entitled "Lost, a Kiss in Central Park." The Grassys, three in number, have an illusionary novelty which is said to combine mystery and melody. The Wilson Brothers are German dialect comedians and yodelers, and are expected to please in each line. Carter and Bluford will sing and dance with appropriate stage settings of their own. Next week will be the last of the wonderful gymnasts, the Four Baltus; Eugene and Willie Howard, the Hebrew messenger boy and the thespian; and Dolesch and Zillbauer, the accordion duetists. The De Haven Sextette, with Sydney C. Gibson, will also terminate their engagement. A new series of Orpheum motion pictures will be the finale.

David Warfield, the San Francisco actor who has become one of the bright shining stars of the New York stage under the management of David Belasco, will return to the home of his youth early next month. His engagement of five weeks at the New Alcazar Theatre will begin Monday, September 7, in "The Music Master." He will be supported by the players who last appeared with him in New York. Reserved seat tickets for the Warfield season will go on sale at the New Alcazar box-office next Thursday morning.

"The Wizard of the Nile" will be presented at the Princess Theatre week after next, with Ferris Hartman in the title-rôle. Sybil Page, the favorite prima donna, will make her first appearance at the theatre in the musical comedy.

Miss Phæbe Davies came from New York specially to direct the staging of "The Man of the Hour" at the Van Ness Theatre.

Frank Worthing, whose long illness last season caused the abandonment of a plan to star, will resume his place as leading man with Grace George in "Divorçons" for her preliminary tour, after which he will be placed at the head of a company of his own in the play called "Our Pleasant Sins."

David Warfield returned from Europe a few days ago, and during his vacation is thought to have broken a stage record. He did not go into a single theatre.

Frank Daniels has been added to the Charles Frohman forces and will be the chief feature of "Hook of Holland." It was "Miss Hook of Holland" in New York and London, but in compliment to the star they have removed the "Miss."

Isadora Duncan, who was last known in New York as the dancing teacher who marched her class in good order from the ballroom of the burning Hotel Windsor, nearly ten years ago, returned recently and appeared at the Criterion Theatre as a dancer of classical dances.

LITERARY NOTES.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

The 100th anniversary of Tennyson's birth—August 6, 1809—is to be celebrated at Haslemere next July by the reproduction of some of the scenes from the "Idylls of the King," parts of which were written at Aldworth, Haslemere, where the poet lived for many years and where he died.

The reminiscences of the Duke of Argyll have just been published in this country under the title "Passages from the Past." The author, at that time the Marquis of Lorne, was one of the most popular governors-general of Canada, and in the course of his career has come into more or less intimate contact with the public men of his day, both in this country and in Europe.

Richard Mansfield's biography has been prepared by his friend and secretary for many years, Paul Wilstach. Parts of it will be published in Scribner's Magazine, and it begins in the September number with an account of his apprenticeship.

Dr. Hale, Colonel Higginson, Mr. J. T. Trowbridge, and Julia Ward Howe are about the only survivors whose work harks back to the time when Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton was at the height of her fame and conducted a sort of literary salon. In England, too, the literary characters with whom Mrs. Moulton was once closely associated have nearly all passed away.

Mary Sigsbee Ker made the cover design for the August American Magazine. She is a daughter of Commander Sigsbee, who was in charge of the Maine at the time it was blown up in 1898.

George W. Cable is reading the final proofs of a novel written by him which Charles Scribner's Sons will publish early in September. The title is "Kincaid's Battery." In time it covers the whole period of the Civil War, and the scene is mainly New Orleans and the region comprised within that city's line of defense.

New Publications.

A little volume on Brahms, by H. C. Colles, has appeared in The Music of the Masters series. It is pleasantly and competently written and is enriched by a Chronological Table and a Bibliography. It is published by Brentano's, New York.

"Our Rich Inheritance," by James Freeman Jenness, is a little volume of broad and rational religious thought dedicated "to those in every place and of every time who are minded to make the most of life with its gifts and opportunities." It is published by Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York. Price, 30 cents.

"The Widow," by Helen Rowland. Published by the Dodge Publishing Company, New York. We are not sure that we should have wished to marry this particular widow, but the fact that "the man" did wish to marry her is responsible for a little volume of really clever dialogue in which the widow shows an almost supernatural knowledge of men and of the human heart. Chacun à son goût.

Among practical books in singing an honorable place must be given to Professor Wanrell's "The Art of Singing," just issued from the office of the Fresno Republican. Professor Wanrell's personal reputation as a singer needs no mention. That he has deeply studied his subject from the educational point of view is evidenced by this valuable and original little treatise that can hardly fail to be of value to students of all grades. The price is $1.

Ira D. Sankey, the noted hymn writer and singing evangelist, died August 13, aged sixty-eight, at his home in Brooklyn, after an illness extending over several years. He was for years associated with Dwight L. Moody, the evangelist, and his hymn, "The Ninety and Nine," the words of which were written by Elizabeth C. Clephane, was one of his earliest works.

CURRENT VERSE.

The Caravan.

From underneath the carob shade
A wavering line of gray and white,
I watch it lose its form and fade
Like dreams across the face of night.

Whither it goes I can but guess,
Haply where ruined Tadmor stands,
The voiceless haunt of loneliness,
Amid the desert's swirling sands;

Or toward the Tigris' tawny tide
Into that land of ancient thrift
Where Bagdad's rich bazaars spread wide,
And Haroun's minarets uplift;

Or toward the swart Arabian skies,
The homes of sempiternal calms,
Where pilgrims seek their paradise
Through Mecca girdled with its palms.

Yet howsoever it fares, I fare,
In buoyant spirit I am one
With those that drink the untrammelled air,
The nomad children of the sun.

From camel-back I scan the waste
A fair oasis sign to find,
And stranger to all thoughts of haste
Let my kaffeyeh take the wind.

Sandaled with silence, on I press,
Rousing before the flower of morn,
Through spaces where forgetfulness
Seems to have dwelt since time was born.

And when, with soothing touch, comes night
After the round of jars and joys,
Above the head, in Allah's sight,
The hosts of heaven wheel and poise.

Throughout the strangely tranquil days
I join in prayer and fast and feast,
Looking on life with long, slow gaze
As does the fatalistic East.

And then—and then—the goal!—Ah, me!
At last, wherever rangeth man,
How well we know that there must be
One bourne for every caravan!

—Clinton Scollard, in The Smart Set.

Friend Death.

"Friend Death," quoth he, "a moment stay,
Till I have finished my score with life,
Who has fooled and cheated me all the way,
With a witless strife.

"Friend Death," quoth he, "a moment stay,
I have a duty yet to do;
There is the devil still to pay,
A good stiff reckoning, too.

"Friend Death," quoth he, "a moment stay;
What of my wife and little one?
I must warn them well while yet it is day
Of the setting sun.

"Friend Death," quoth he, "a moment stay,
A drink and a kiss for luck at the last;
I was ever one for a daring play,
Staked all on a cast.

"Friend Death," quoth he, "a moment stay;
I must have time to think on God;
Surely you give one time to pray—
So soon a clod.

"Friend Death," quoth he, "a moment stay,
It will all be over so soon, so soon;
I hear the pipes of my boyhood play
An old, old tune.

"Friend Death," quoth he, "O, friendly Death,
The music is calling and I am fair;
Fain for the home where I first drew breath,
And my mother again."
—R. W. Gilbert, in "Goldenrod and Lilies."

In the Place de la Bastille.

On a clear day in Paris, walking where
A century ago red riot leapt
Torrent-like down the streets, I was aware
How, far on the horizon rim, there crept
Pale, ominous clouds; and listening, I heard
Dim, unmistakable, a muttered word:
The thunder's prelude and the tempest's threat.
The hour was bright with sun and jest and song
In the hilite capital—and yet, and yet,
The place was Paris and men's woes are long;
Sudden, for me, beneath that tranquil sky,
The tragic tumbrels, hark! go rumbling by!
—Richard Burton, in Scribner's Magazine.

Weingartner, the eminent musical director, recently concluded a letter of defiance in these words, addressed to the Graz Association and his Viennese critics: "I declare to you that I shall introduce in several of Wagner's works the cuts I deem necessary, without heeding in the least any kind of protest. Allow me to add to this declaration that I consider the terms 'Wagner' and 'Wagnerite' as by no means allied, but as diametrically opposed to each other. I esteem Wagner so highly that I must permit myself the honor of confessing myself to be a positively enthusiastic anti-Wagnerite." This declaration of independence recalls to the critic of the New York Evening Post that comic dictionary of musicians in which Wagner is referred to as the man who wrote some excellent operas, but also "foisted on the world the Wagnerites, which was not kind of him."

In recently published reports of the fair which took place at the home of the Daughters of Jacob, New York, mention was made of the chief usher, a "lad" aged 105 years, and of the "girls" who sold candy and lemonade, although they were only 103 and 107 years old. Some doubt was expressed as to the ages of these inmates of the home. Albert Kruger, the superintendent, said that there was no exaggeration.

Real comfort—an easy-chair, a good magazine, and a pair of our glasses.

HIRSCH & KAISER

218 Post St.

Opticians

JUST A BOOK STORE

Robertson's

1539 Van Ness Ave.

NEAR PINE

"Next to the White House"

EDUCATIONAL

IRVING INSTITUTE Boarding and Day School for Girls

2126 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Music, languages, art, elocution. Kindergarten, primary, grammar, high school, and advanced grades. Accredited by the universities Twenty-ninth year. Non-sectarian. Pupils admitted at any time. New term opens Monday August 3.

MISS ELLA M. PINKHAM, Principal.

CALIFORNIA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

Irving Institute Building
Full corps of teachers in every department.
Send for catalogue.
HERMANN GENSS, President.

THE HAMLIN SCHOOL

A Boarding and Day School for Girls
Miss Hamlin announces the reopening of the school August 10. It is accredited by the California Universities and by Eastern colleges. Advanced courses of study are offered to High School graduates and to those who have left school, with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to school diploma.

Classes in Instrumental and Vocal Music and in Drawing and Painting are formed and facilities are given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basket Ball, etc. For particulars address
MISS HAMLIN,
2230 Pacific Ave., San Francisco.

Oakland Conservatory of Music

1170 Madison Street, Oakland, Cal.

The largest, oldest established, and most thoroughly equipped school of genuine music instruction on the Pacific Coast.
Conducted on the lines of the most noted European and Eastern schools.
Full prospectus on application.
Director, ADOLF GREGORY.

SAN MATEO, CALIFORNIA

Miss Friend's Boarding and Day School for Girls

—WILL OPEN ON—

Monday, September 14

—AT—

105 TILTON AVENUE

Telephone 171

BERKELEY PREPARATORY SCHOOL

Boarding and Day School for Boys
2207 Dwight Way, Berkeley, Cal.
Fall term opens August 24
J. H. WHITE, Principal

SNELL SEMINARY 2721 Channing Way

Berkeley
Girls' boarding and day school. Certificate admits to University of California, Stanford and Eastern colleges. Opens August 10. Superior location. Outdoor life.
MRS. EDNA SNELL POULSON, Principal

MORRISTOWN SCHOOL, Morristown, N.

College Preparatory Boarding School for Boys
Small classes. Individual attention. Gymnasium, quarter-mile track, athletic fields and tennis courts. Especially healthful location, an hour from New York.
F. C. WOODMAN, Headmaster.

Miss Harker's School

Home and Day School for Girls. Certificate admits to College. Excellent Departments Music and Art. New building, thoroughly modern, steam heated. Address.
MISS HARKER, Palo Alto, Cal.

PENNSYLVANIA, Ogontz School P. O.

OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES
Twenty minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. The late Mr. Jay Cooke's property. Miss SYLVIA J. EASTMAN, Miss ABBY SUTHERLAND, Principals.

CASTILLEJA SCHOOL

Palo Alto, California

Home and day school for girls. University preparatory. Outdoor physical training a special feature. Opens August 24. Illustrated catalogue.
MISS MARY I. LOCKEY, A. B., Principal.

OFFENBACH'S LAST OPERA.

By Josephine Hart Phelps.

Boredom must always fly before Offenbach's music. At the American Theatre "The Tales of Hoffmann" are so melodiously... the accompaniment of an orchestra throbbing with the sensuousness that is more particularly a characteristic of the music of Latin composers, that we feel that the opera gives almost a new sensation.

The piece is billed as "fantastic opera," but its entirety would perhaps come under the ad of comic opera, which includes such light, semi-serious compositions as the melodious "Maritana" and "The Bohemian Girl." The music of the piece is so spontaneously, irresistibly sweet to be called ambitious, but could cast into shame the facile puerilities of our musical comedy composers. The harp, with its delicate prelude, at the beginning of the second act, the intermezzo ending the third act and the epilogue—some at indifferently performed, in spite of the able leadership of Paul Steindorff—the numerous lovely duets and trios, the delicious orchestration, all afforded music-lovers an evening of true pleasure.

The vocal strength of the company is not remarkable, but it is adequate to the demands. Miss Mason and Thomas Persse, formerly well known to San Franciscans for their work with the Southwell Opera Company, filled the principal rôles. Mr. Persse's inflexible tenor little changed. The singer made a handsome appearance in his gracefulness, but such extremely amatory individual as the German poet might have softened his vigorous tones to the languorous softness of love's quivering murmur. As it is, Mr. Persse sings evening through in strident, unshaded tones.

Edith Mason's once beautiful voice is used with such discretion that it must have been in use that deprived its upper range of some of the elasticity and beauty that once enabled the fair singer to appear to such advantage in some of the lighter rôles of Italian opera. Miss Mason never fails to make a successful and charming appeal, both to the eye and the ear. "The Toy Maker" has deprived the first act of "The Love Tales of Hoffmann" its novelty, but the mechanical movements and staccato warbling of the pretty, flaxen-haired automaton were so daintily done that they offered piquant contrast to the more vigorous effects attainable in subsequent acts.

In spite of faulty breathing, Bernice Ames's contralto pleased by its rich and pebbly quality, and Charles Swickard, who combines the triple responsibilities of tenor, stage director, and baritone, made a good stage appearance, and sang most acceptably.

A fairly good and quite numerous chorus added a grand-operatic air to the scene, and it was not for the vocal and histrionic qualities of the minor members of the company and a certain lack of finish in such little parts as the high-pitched mockery of the opera's fair guests over the discomfiture of the first man, one would be justified in most warmly recommending the performance to the attention of one's friends.

Paul Steindorff conducted with his usual ability, and received a very warm welcome from an enthusiastic house that seemed delightedly glad to renew the pleasures of olden days.

Truly, it is a world of graft. We are just beginning to find it out. Magazines, newspapers, and even novels have been enlightening the world as to its own corruption before the man took up the subject.

And who are the principal victims, since they realized its own power and began to use the steam-shovel ruthlessness and calm scrupulousness of capital? Who but the masses of professional and clerical toilers that are being crushed between the upper and the lower millstone of capital and labor?

Labor, in fixing prices, ignores the laws of supply and demand. The laborer comes in, goes earlier, and is paid, as he ought to be for every hour of over-work. The clerk works toils at night, and on holidays, doing the work of two while wearing himself out in the toilsome process of making his employer rich. The employer uses his valuable man as long as he is available, keenly noting his talent for obedience, his sense of duty, his lack of initiative, his honesty, his industry, and reliability; keenly noting, too, the graying hair, his stooping back, his air of nervous exhaustion.

The time comes when the slave is wrung dry of usefulness, and he is cast forth. Youth, with its illusions, its glowing ideals its high standards of honor, takes his place, and the drama is played out again.

The next thing we know of there will be a national union of clerks. For, at present, somebody has to pay, and he who is paying is the uncivilized wearer of holed shirts who does his work honestly, pays his bills, buys a homestead and a few small investments, pays his taxes without sneaking out of doing his just share, and keeps the treasury full for the greedy hands of grafting politicians. He is a patient man, is the white-shirted toiler, but his time of revolt will come, and "The Man of the Hour," with its revelation of the numerous nets of grafters that are spread wide to catch the accumulations of the patient workers that toil between millstones, will help to bring it on.

"The Man of the Hour," although possessing abundance of sentiment, is a man's play. An unusually large percentage of men attend, and rush out into the foyer during the entr'actes to talk it over luxuriously.

The company at the Van Ness Theatre is much the same as when the play was presented at an earlier date, except for the selection of Cyril Scott for the rôle of the young mayor who brings confusion to the ranks of the grafters.

Mr. Scott is a popular matinee idol in New York, it seems. I am rather surprised at it. He doesn't seem to have the make-up. I think it must be due to his air of church-social, devoted-son goodness, plus refinement and good looks. He was almost pretty once, I feel sure, with his small, neat features, curly dark hair, and a certain feminine sweetness of expression.

What constitutes matinee-idol charmfulness? I am sometimes persuaded that a little touch of femininity is one of the indispensable qualities. And yet women are supposed to be swayed by the lordly, domineering manliness that in primeval times exercised its prerogative of subjugating the chosen mate with a club. Probably what fetches the matinee maiden particularly is the successful appeal to her sense of romance. That is White Whittlesey's gift. He is something of an idealist. You can see it in the cut of his mouth, in the way he utters passages of poetry. And women like that, in this world of sordidness of money-getting, and of graft.

Which brings us again to "The Man of the Hour." Mr. Scott fills the main rôle with marked ability, though not, to my thinking, quite so acceptably as Frederick Perry, who gave to the reforming mayor the white heat and high-mettled resolve of a younger, less experienced, and less carpet-knight hero than Cyril Scott makes of him.

But the play is well acted, right through. Ruby Bridges speaks so well, so clearly, so feelingly, that in spite of the least suggestion in the world of primness, of prunes, and of prisms, she wins sympathy.

Mr. Butterfield repeats his success as the smiling and engaging Perry, and, in a series of scenes of boy-and-girl courtship with Evelyn Moore, who acts as a jocular reflector of his famous smiles, holds up the sentimental comedy of the play.

But the real and irresistible comedy of the piece lies in the character of the two bosses, played by Louis Hendricks and Felix Haney, the same live and virile actors that impersonated them before. The portrayures are doubly remarkable, partly from the inspiration of George Broadhurst's original conception, partly from the immense skill with which they are worked out. The contrast of the two types is so poignant—Horri-gan all direct momentum, uncompromising, pig-headed aggressiveness, and the domination of a brute will; Phelan shrewd, dimpled, florid, persuasive, genial, full of the bonhomie of the more cheerful Celtic type, and with the instinctive good manners—of their kind—that proceed from a good heart. Phelan and his sort constitute the sunshine of muddy political weather.

Neil Moran, William Lamp, and William Lloyd acceptably filled out the rôles of the corrupt magnate, the Wall-Street plunger, and the venal judge, and Ethel Brandon is still retained to play the part of the mother. Several minor rôles—Mr. McQuarrie as the avenging spy, the footman with the broken-hearted voice, and the tempted alderman—were given with earnestness, and with a creditable absence of that effect of mechanical routine which so often stamps the work of players during a long run.

But that is partly because the play is a live play, since it is a faithful reflex of things that prevail in the life of today. It is a good thing for men to see. It heartens us up to see honor proudly hold its own, incorruptible in the midst of corruption, and in spite of Horri-gan's strong and fearfully convincing argument as to the prevalence of graft, one feels that the abstract love of right is a blessed thing in this place of temptations that somehow keeps the world in general on the right path.

During the past month death has removed two former favorites of the theatrical world who were especially well known and greatly admired in San Francisco. Helen Dineon, whose pathetic story is familiar, was in her day one of the brightest of comedienne, one of the most expressive and pleasing of singers. Gracie Plaisted, whose death occurred Monday, was even more widely known as a soprano in opera, and numbered her admirers by hundreds. She was born in Suisun, and was educated at Mills Seminary. After the success won at her first appearances in San Francisco she went East and afterwards to Australia, and sustained prominent rôles in many leading burlesque and opera companies. Returning to this city in 1891, she was for a long time one of the stars of the old Tivoli Opera House Company. She retired some years ago, but again returned to the stage last season, appearing in Seattle. She was the wife of George Bartlett, of Oakland, and her death occurred at their home in that city.

A gentleman who was buying a turkey from old Uncle Ephraim asked him, in making the purchase, if it was a tame turkey. "Oh, yais, sir, it's a tame tu'key all right." "Now, Ephraim, are you sure it's a tame turkey?" "Oh, yais, sir; dere's no so't o' doubt 'bout dat. It's a tame tu'key all right." He consequently bought the turkey, and a day or two later, when eating it, came across several shot. Later on, when he met old Ephraim on the street, he said, "Well, Ephraim, you told me that was a tame turkey, but I found some shot in it when I was eating it." "Oh, dat war a tame tu'key all right," was Uncle Ephraim's reiterated rejoinder; "but de fac' is, hoss, I's gwine to tell yer in confidence dat dem 'ere shot was intended for me."

If Mme. de Sevigne, the great French woman writer of the century of Louis XIV, who in her "Letters" praised so much the virtue of the Vichy cure that she made it celebrated, came once more into this unhappy or happy world, she would find a considerable change in the Vichy of those days and the one of today. When in 1676 she visited this celebrated watering place, she wrote to her daughter, the Countess de Grignan, that only twenty-two "Christians" were taking the cure. Last year 87,066 visitors were registered, and they were not all "Christians," but people of all creeds and nationalities.

15 KEARNY STREET

PHONE DOUGLAS 2219

Eugene Korn

THE HATTER

AGENCIES

"MILLER, N. Y.," Silks and Operas "JAMESON, LONDON," Derbys "JOHN B. STETSON," Philadelphia KNAPP De Luxe and Felts

AMUSEMENTS

ORPHEUM ELLIS STREET NEAR FILLMORE

Absolutely Class A Theatre Building

Week beginning this Sunday afternoon Matinee Every Day

ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE

EDNA PHILLIPS and Company in "Lost—A Kiss in Central Park"; THE GRASSYS; WILSON BROTHERS; CARTER and BLUFORD; FOUR BALTUS; HOWARD and HOWARD; DOLESCH and ZILLBAUER; New Orpheum Motion Pictures; last week and immense hit, DE HAVEN SEXTETTE with SYDNEY C. GIBSON.

Evening prices, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box seats, $1. Matinee prices (except Sundays and holidays), 10c, 25c, 50c. Phone, WEST 6000.

PRINCESS THEATRE Ellis Street near Fillmore

S. LOVERICH, Manager Phone West 663

Matinee Saturday and Sunday THIS AND NEXT WEEK ONLY FERRIS HARTMAN ARTHUR CUNNINGHAM and the Entire Princess Company in the delightful Musical Concert.

THE TOY MAKER Monday, September 7, FERRIS HARTMAN in "THE WIZARD OF THE NILE." Special engagement of the favorite prima donna, SYBIL PAGE. Popular prices—Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Mats. (except Sundays and holidays), 25c, 50c.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Tel. West 6036

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers Corner Sutter and Steiner Sts. Absolute Class "A" Bldg. Seventy-Seventh Week of the Alcazar Stock Co. Week Commencing MONDAY, AUGUST 31 Farewell of WHITE WHITTLESEY and the Alcazar Players, in R. V. Edmund's idyllic comedy.

ONE SUMMER'S DAY A Beautiful Production. Prices: Evenings, 25c to $1. Matinees (Saturday and Sunday), 25c to 50c. Monday, September 7—DAVID WARFIELD and DAVID BELASCO'S New York Company in "THE MUSIC MASTER." Sale of seats begins at 9 o'clock Thursday morning, September 3, at the Alcazar box office.

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove St.

Phone Market 500

Tonight, Sunday Night, and ALL NEXT WEEK

Matinee Saturday Only W. A. Brady and Jos. R. Grismer announce

The Man of the Hour

A story of present-day conditions by George Broadhurst. Coming—"THE GIRL QUESTION."

Roy C. Ward Jas. W. Dean Jas. K. Polk Geo. E. Billings

GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.

ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE EFFECTED

312 California Street. Phone Douglas 2283 San Francisco, Cal.

THE LATEST STYLES IN

Choice Woolens

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

108-110 Sutter St. French Bank Bldg.

MT. TAMALPAIS AND MUIR WOODS

VIA SAUSALITO FERRY FOOT OF MARKET ST. LEGAL HOLIDAYS—SUNDAY TIME

Table with columns for WEEK DAY, Lv. San Francisco, Lv. Muir Woods, and Lv. Tamalpais, listing departure times for various days of the week.

TICKET OFFICE AT SAUSALITO FERRY

A HIGH BALL

made of

HUNTER WHISKEY

is a Delightful, Cool Refreshment

UNIQUE IN FLAVOR

HENRY CAMPE & CO., Inc. Distributors for California and Nevada, San Francisco, Cal.

VANITY FAIR.

The eternal problem of how to be happy though married sinks into insignificance beside the greater question of how to be beautiful though plain. Baths, massage, paints, powders, cosmetics, Christian Science, gymnastics, and good temper clamor competitively for recognition, and that all women are not yet alike beautiful is proof that something still remains to be discerned and that art and nature are not yet fully reconciled.

The satin bath is just now coming into vogue. It was practiced in ancient Egypt; that, of course, goes without saying. Nothing of the kind stands much of a chance nowadays without the assertion that it was known to the ladies of the land of Khem, although why that should be a recommendation it is hard to say, if we may judge from the angular presentations that have come down to us.

The results of the satin bath are said to be highly satisfying. The victim, or the patient, emerges pink and smiling. The skin reassumes its infantile texture and the hand moves visibly backward upon the dial of time.

The whole thing is really very simple. It can in fact be done at home and with the appliances that are usually to be found in the domestic laundry or in the tool-box of a long-suffering husband. The chief ingredients are pumice powder, fine sand-paper, the humble and unassuming flat iron and a variety of brushes.

Take, for instance, the hardness of the elbows. The elbows have a great deal of work to do. They are often uncovered and as a result they become out of shape and sometimes even calloused. All this, we are told, can be removed by sand-paper, which must, of course, be very fine. Rub steadily until the offending cuticle is removed. If the elbows become red and sore they should be anointed with cocoa butter and covered for a day or two. If the operation is carefully done the trouble will not recur for a long time. Perhaps a jack plane would be quicker, but its use is not recommended.

The pumice-stone powder performs useful functions. We are advised to take a soft brush, dip it in warm water and the powder and go over the whole body. This is said to "take off the dead complexion and wake up the muscles." Then there are the wire brushes, to which fabulous virtues are ascribed. They are dipped in soap lather and their application is said to make the nervous woman forget that there are such things as nerves. No less efficacious is the violet bath, compounded of hot water, ten drops of strong ammonia, a teaspoonful of horax, and some violet perfume. A little benzoin may be added.

The sheath skirt, it seems, is answerable for the various thinning processes now on the market. The sheath skirt is only for the slender, and the woman who goes the right way to work can lose seven pounds a week. The whole secret is in the pumice powder, but it must be applied relentlessly in conjunction with the other baths, and two or three hours a day of vigorous rubbing are by no means too much. As for diet, she can eat what she likes, except candy. She must not drink with her meals and there must be only three meals a day.

A valuable adjunct is the ironing process. First comes the bath and a massage with rough towels. This makes the skin soft and pliable. Then a covering of flannel is placed on the skin and the hot iron is applied as in other laundry operations. This is said to be "magical" in getting rid of superfluous flesh. Henceforth there will be no excuse for undue bulk. Five or six hours a day deducted from the usual periods of leisure is a mere nothing when devoted to the pursuit of lofty aims, and surely no self-respecting woman will grudge them.

That the enforcement of the Deceased Wife's Sister bill would meet with some opposition in England was inevitable. A good many clergymen denounced it as being in opposition to what they were facetiously pleased to call the law of God, but very few of them have dared to incur the penalties of direct defiance. But there was at least one such case and it has just been settled, although it turned not so much on the right to be married as upon the right to Holy Communion.

The plaintiffs were Celan Neville Banister and his wife, who were recently married under the new law. They were refused Holy Communion by the Rev. Henry Thompson, vicar of Eton, Norwich, on the ground that they were "open and notorious evil livers, so that the congregations are thereby offended." This seems rather strong language toward a couple who are legally married, and the result was an action against the vicar on the ground that he had committed a breach of ecclesiastical law. No action of course was needed to prove a breach of good manners nor a condition of congenital idiosyncrasy.

The case was tried before the Dean of Arches at Westminster, and that lofty potentate has just rendered his decision after the lapse. He would have thought five minutes enough. He finds that the plaintiffs are in every way suitable to receive such benefits and ceremonies as the church may have to offer, that they could in no way be described as "open and notorious livers," that the defendant had failed to justify his action and must be admonished accordingly, and that he must refrain from such acts in the future. So much for the Rev. Henry Thompson, vicar of Eton, Norwich, who is thus in the unenviable position of being rescued from utter oblivion only by his own act of studied and wanton brutality. But then what can one expect?

We all know Marcel Prévost, the witty Frenchman who has studied women with an assiduity that, otherwise directed, might have placed him in the front rank of original scientific research. Mr. Prévost, writing in Figaro, revives an old charge against women's letters. A woman, he says, never intends by the letter what she seems to intend. There is always a veiled meaning, always a devious diplomacy. "Woman," he adds, "makes use of a letter just as she employs a glance, a smile, dress, or language, in a manner that is very precise, very carefully thought out, but is quite different from common usage. And after all, does a woman's hat serve to cover her head? Does a woman's parasol keep off the sun? Does a woman's watch show what time it is? Are a woman's shoes good for walking? Why, then, should a woman's letter serve to convey her real thoughts to the person addressed, just like the letter of some honest grocer, who writes 'I send you five pounds of coffee,' because he really does send you five pounds of coffee?"

That may be all very well in France, where letter-writing is still one of the fine arts. But one never writes letters in America. We send messages by mail and they are usually as direct as that of the grocer quoted by M. Prévost. Letter-writing, like all the other arts, has become one of the superfluities of life, as must be inevitable with every civilization that has lost its soul.

Mr. Kunz, whose name is associated with the California gem, kunzite, has some pronounced theories as to the jewelry that women ought or ought not to wear. He says that the barbarous jewelry now so much in vogue has a demoralizing influence upon the women who wear it. We might perhaps be disposed to join issue with Mr. Kunz upon this point and to suggest that it is demoralized women who wear barbarous jewelry. But let that pass.

"Women," says Mr. Kunz, "must take into consideration their adaptability to jewels quite as carefully as they consider the fit, the color, the design of a gown." That, of course, is a counsel of perfection, and perhaps Mr. Kunz forgets the fact that a great many women wear jewelry not from aesthetic considerations at all, but to show how rich they are. But Mr. Kunz speaks the words of truth and soberness when he goes on to point out that a woman's jewels are an intimate part of her character and that they emphasize the private nature of her temperament so clearly that sometimes they unconsciously reveal where they are intended only to hide. That, of course, is true, and it applies to other things than jewelry. A woman's exterior is infinitely more eloquent of secret things than that of a man, whose costume is regulated within very narrow limits by convention. And it is the little things in a woman's dress that huddle so unrestrainedly of her character. The polished finger nails, for example, or the costly jewel on the shirtwaist, are more eloquent of an innate vulgarity than even the Merry Widow hat, and when we have once noticed one of a dozen such details we need go no further. We know at once what she usually talks about, what she reads, how she holds her knife and fork, how she does her hair at breakfast time, and her general appearance an hour or so before she opens the street door to go out. No woman can dress contrary to her character. Beyond certain limits she has no free will in the matter at all. Place her before the hat counter or the jewelry case and she will gravitate irresistibly toward the articles that correspond to her nature, and as the variety is so immense the correspondence is a close one. It is one of nature's little ways to show her hatred of a secret. Cherish our privacies of character as much as we will, she compels us to label ourselves in the sight of all men.

But to return to Mr. Kunz, who is so anxious to be polite that sometimes he mitigates the deserved severity of his censures. Earrings, he says, "are becoming more and more fashionable, the pear-shaped pendant, rather long earrings with the screw attachment. Small pins, exquisitely jeweled haps and tortoise-shell combs and hair ornaments studded with precious stones such as diamonds and pearls are the regular adornment of a woman of good taste. The chief fault in the matter of good taste that one fortunately only occasionally sees in the jewels worn by American women is in a bad combination of precious stones and gown. Take the long chains and santeoire which may contain almost any variety of gems. They must have a certain harmony with the gown worn, because one must bear in mind that pink coral would be out of keeping with a rose pink gown, for instance, as also would turquoise be with bottle green."

On the subject of diamonds Mr. Kunz has not much to say, except that it is still the favorite stone for lovers. When in doubt as to the propriety of wearing diamonds, it is a good safe rule to put them back in the drawer. To wear diamonds at the wrong time, in the wrong combination, in the wrong place, or of the wrong size is among the cardinal and unpardonable sins of the toilette. As to young girls, Mr. Kunz says:

The selection of precious stones most adapted to young girls, being very largely left at the discretion of their elders, is confined to turquoise, pearls, sapphires, rubies, or perhaps the stones little less rare, such as peridot, pink topaz, or small garnet. Coral, which occurs in so many tints, from pale rose and red to the dark ox-blood color, is particularly appropriate when worn with laces, or very thin filmy fabrics. The Oriental designs that are more or less barbaric in their design are worn only by certain women to whom they belong by reason of their adaptability to a certain style, but the most delicate designs in jewelry are the most adaptable to any type of well-dressed woman.

Mr. Kunz takes a liberal view, but then he does not say exactly what he means by a young girl. Girls who are really young would do better to avoid jewels altogether and certainly jewels of a bright color. Mothers can do almost more in the way of self-disclosure by what they allow their daughters to wear than by what they wear themselves.

The newspapers are printing a ridiculous story about the probability of an American girl becoming the "first lady of the land" in Turkey. It is based upon nothing more substantial than the fact that the leader of the Young Turks party, an exile in Paris, has been often seen in the company of an "American woman of excellent family." The name of the lady is not mentioned, but the far-fetched assumption is that Turkey is about to become a republic and that Prince Sabahedire will be its president.

No one can pretend to say what is on the knees of the gods regarding Turkey, but a Mohammedan nation such as the T should become republican is about as likely as that it should be transplanted bodily to the moon, which would be a fortunate thing for civilization although a little rough to the moon. Turkish reform ideas do not very far beyond the possibility of substituting one kind of despot for another, and should there be a revolution we may render her with profit that those who draw sword usually perish by the sword and the leaders of revolution rarely profit by revolution. The "beautiful American woman of excellent family" need not therefore offer robes of state either this week or merely upon the ground that Prince Sabahedire has looked graciously upon her. We have no means of knowing whether he "was orientally has got" or whether the lady's question has a reasonable hope of being "added to the lot." Let us hope that dictation will forbid the bans.

From a letter in the New York Times we get a long desired definition of a lady. It is:

At a heavy transfer point on Sixth Avenue, a few seats being vacant on a Twenty-Third Street car, a youth darted under the arm of a woman and plumped himself down in the seat was about to occupy. Glaring, she hurled at him: "If I wasn't such a perfect lady I'd swear you on the mouth." Another young man arose, took his hat, and begged her to sit down. When she beamed upon him and said, "Sir, you're a gentleman; them others is hogs."

The Heiress—But why should I marry? I don't love you. Her Suitor—Oh, that's right. I shan't be at home very much, know.—London Opinion.

W. & J. SLOANE

FURNITURE

Exclusive lines for Parlor, Library, Living Room, Dining-Room, Bedroom, Hall, Summer Homes and Offices.

CARPETS

Special weaves and colorings in the greatest variety. Domestic Wiltons and Whole Piece Axminsters. We show all grades.

RUGS

Both Oriental and Domestic. This is by far the largest and choicest stock of Rugs on the Coast. Our Orientals are selected as individual pieces.

Upholstery—Interior Decoration

Our long experience and unequalled facilities enable us to admirably execute special orders.

Van Ness and Sutter

Gaining in popularity every day because it deserves it

Old Gilt Edge
Whiskey

Rye or Bourbon

Bonestell, Richardson & Co.

PAPER

The paper used in printing the Argonaut furnished by us.
CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE
118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna, San Francisco.

The Irresistible Current

By Mrs. I. Lowenberg

Price $1.50

Is saturated with an object that is expressed with every evidence of conviction and with no small literary skill. That differences in creed should be an enemy to love, that Jew and Gentile should be separated by religion, is unfortunately no new thing, but Mrs. Lowenberg helps us to appreciate its folly, its pathos, and its needless tragedy.

The opening scene is in New York, where we are introduced to two Jewish families from Germany. The next scene is twenty years later in Missouri. The second generation is growing up in the new Western world, but not without the religious disabilities and creed prejudices that should belong exclusively to a past day in human history. The story is a long one and the plot is intricate, but it is vividly colored by splashes of genuine passion and of real tragedy. The "irresistible current" is the tendency toward a better philosophy of life, an agreement upon the essentials of human conduct that shall take the place of creeds, and a reliance upon a human love and brotherhood that is, after all, the highest expression of the best religion.—The Argonaut.

FOR SALE AT ALL BOOKSTORES

Published by Broadway Publishing Company, New York

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

A Positive Relief For PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all Irritations of the Skin. Removes all odor of perspiration. Delightful after Shaving. Sold everywhere, or on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample Free. GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY, Newark, N.J.

Mild, Rich and Satisfying

Sanchez y Haya

Clear Havana Cigars

Factory No. 1 Tampa, Fla.

Tillmann & Bendel
Pacific Slope Distributors

Clubbing List.

By special arrangement with the publishers, and by concessions in price on both sides, we are enabled to make the following offer, open to all subscribers direct to this office. Subscribers in renewing subscriptions to Eastern periodicals will please mention the date of expiration in order to avoid mistakes:

American Magazine and Argonaut.....	$4.25
Argosy and Argonaut.....	4.40
Atlantic Monthly and Argonaut.....	6.70
Blackwood's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.20
Century and Argonaut.....	7.00
Commoner and Argonaut.....	4.10
Empire and Argonaut.....	4.35
English Literature and Argonaut.....	5.75
English Illustrated Magazine and Argonaut.....	4.70
Forum and Argonaut.....	6.00
Harper's Bazar and Argonaut.....	4.35
Harper's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.70
Harper's Weekly and Argonaut.....	6.70
Home Beautiful and Argonaut.....	4.75
International Magazine and Argonaut.....	4.50
Life and Argonaut.....	7.50
Slide's Weekly and Argonaut.....	6.70
Ve and Argonaut.....	7.75
Whincott's Magazine and Argonaut.....	5.25
Wells's Living Age and Argonaut.....	9.00
Mexican Herald and Argonaut.....	10.50
Wentley's Magazine and Argonaut.....	4.40
Nineteenth Century and Argonaut.....	7.25
North American Review and Argonaut.....	8.00
Out West and Argonaut.....	5.25
Overland Monthly and Argonaut.....	4.50
Political Science Quarterly and Argonaut.....	4.90
Puck and Argonaut.....	7.50
Review of Reviews and Argonaut.....	5.00
Ribner's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.25
Start Set and Argonaut.....	5.25
Nicholas and Argonaut.....	6.00
Inset and Argonaut.....	4.25
Centre Magazine and Argonaut.....	5.75
Once-a-Week New York World (Democratic) and Argonaut.....	4.25
Weekly New York Tribune (Republican) and Argonaut.....	4.50
Weekly New York Tribune, Weekly New York World, and Argonaut.....	5.25

Romeike's Press Clipping Bureau

Will send you all newspaper clippings which may appear about you, your friends, or any subject on which you want to be "up to date." A large force in my New York office reads 50 daily papers and over 2000 weeklies and magazines, in fact, every paper of importance published in the United States, for 5000 subscribers and, through the European Bureaus, all the leading papers in the civilized globe. Clippings found for subscribers and pasted in slips giving name and date of paper, and re-mailed day by day.

Write for circular and terms.

HENRY ROMEIKE
110 and 112 W. 26th St., New York
Branches: London, Paris, Berlin, Sydney.

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

A citizen of culture and poetic taste went to a public library and asked for Shelley's "Prometheus Unbound." He was rather taken aback when the librarian replied with great hauteur: "We don't keep any unbound books in this library."

A doctor spending a rare and somewhat dull night at his own fireside received the following message from three fellow practitioners: "Please step over to the club and join us at a rubber of whist." "Jane, dear," he said to his wife, "I am called away again. It appears to be a difficult case—there are three other doctors on the spot already."

The pious old lady who, returning from a visit to the Zoo, announced that she "always did enjoy a visit to the Theological Gardens," and the servant who, describing her master's last illness, explained that the "doctors held a consolation and found that it was something eternal," have found a recent equal in the lady who observed that when she was in Italy she "saw so many people in the garb of monks with tonsils on their heads."

A firm of shady outside London brokers was prosecuted for swindling. In acquitting them the court, with great severity, said: "There is not sufficient evidence to convict you, but if any one wishes to know my opinion of you I hope that they will refer to me." Next day the firm's advertisement appeared in every available medium with the following, well displayed: "Reference as to probity, by special permission, the Lord Chief Justice of England."

There was one young woman in the box party at the theatre who took no part in the noisy clatter and giggle. With her gaze fixed upon the stage she watched the progress of the play, indifferent to the gayety around her except that her delicate, aristocratic, finely chiseled features bore a look of weariness and a scornful smile curled her lips. At last, however, she turned her head slowly and looked at the other members of the party. Then she spoke to the elderly matron sitting by her side. "That girl in the blue kimono," she said, "thinks she is the whole custard!"

Mr. Halloran returned from a political meeting with his interest aroused. "There's eight nations represented in this ward of ours," he said, as he began to count them off on his fingers. "There's the Irish, Frinch, Eytallians, Poles, Germans, Rooshians, Greeks, an'—" Mr. Halloran stopped, and began again: "There's the Irish, Frinch, Eytallians, Poles, Germans, Rooshians, Greeks, an'—aint it queer I don't remember the other wan? There's the Irish, Frinch—" "Maybe 'twas Americans," suggested Mrs. Halloran. "Sure, that's it," said her husband. "I couldn't think."

An English drill sergeant, whose severity had made him unpopular with his company, was putting a squad of recruits through the funeral exercise. Opening the ranks, so as to admit the passage of a cortege between them, the instructor, by way of practical explanation, walked slowly down the lane formed by the two ranks, saying as he did so: "Now I am the corpse. Pay attention!" Having reached the end of the lane, he turned round, regarded the recruits with a scrutinizing eye, and then remarked: "Your 'ands is right and your 'eads is right, but you 'aven't got that look of regret you ought to 'ave!"

In the olden times a woman in the north of Scotland went to visit her husband, who was condemned to be hanged on the following day. The doomed man began to give his instructions to his wife preparatory to hiding her farewell, when all at once she broke in upon the conversation, and exclaimed: "By the by, John, whaur will I plant the tatties this year?" The unfortunate man, as may be imagined, grew exceedingly indignant at the indifference of his wife, and exclaimed, angrily: "What need I care whaur ye plant them? I'm not likely to need any o' them." "Hech," replied the woman, turning to the warden with a wag of the head, "ooor John's huffed because he's gaunt to be hanged the morn," and marched out of the cell.

The other day a man walked into a barber's shop, deposited upon a table a number of articles which he took from a satchel, and arranged them with artistic care. "This is pomade," said the visitor. "I am well supplied," said the barber. "This is bear's grease." "I am full up with bear's grease." "Here is some fine bay rum." "Don't doubt it, but I make my own bay rum and put on foreign labels. Nobody knows the difference." "Here is some patent cosmetic for the moustache." "I know it is for the moustache, also for the whiskers, and all that, but I'm thoroughly stocked and reeking with cosmetic at present." "Here are an electric brush, a duplex elliptical hair dye, lavender water, and a patent face powder." "I don't want any of them." "I know you don't." "Then why do you ask me to buy them?" "I did not ask you to buy them. Did I say anything to you about buying them?" "Come to think of it, you didn't." "I did not come here to sell anything. I only wish to let you know that I possess all the toilet articles that a gentleman has any business with. Now, don't try to sell me anything or praise up your wares. I am stocked, stocked, stocked. Now give me an easy shave without asking me to buy anything."

Among the financial friends of Henry Ward Beecher was one old broker in New York—an aggressive Unitarian, which sect he often said bore "the trade mark of honesty." One day he met Mr. Beecher hurrying toward Wall Street ferry to avoid the downpour of a sudden rainstorm. "Take my umbrella," said the broker. "I don't need it; the coming bus takes me to my door." At the ferry Mr. Beecher met a lady, a prominent church worker of a sister church, who, having no umbrella, was lamenting her inability to reach her car safely. The urbane preacher forced the umbrella upon her as he said: "I will be out your way tomorrow and will call and get it." But the great expounder of truth and honesty was horrified when upon opening the umbrella the good sister at once discovered a pasted slip upon which was written in a bold round hand: "Stolen by some Presbyterian thief!"

THE MERRY MUSE.

Nurseryettes.
I like Mr. Bryan,
His talk is so warm;
And if we don't heed him,
He'll do us no harm.

He'll stick to his farm,
With his pigs and his steers,
And he won't run again
For another four years.
—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

His Choice.
He read the Bible. He preferred
Its tales to any other word.

Being a married man, he chose
To read of other mortals' woes.

He read the story, and believed,
How Father Adam was deceived.

He read of Abraham and Sairy—
A tale the most extraordinary.

He read of Jacob, how for years
He labored for those lovely dears.

He read of Lot—his wife a wreck—
The true original rubberneck.

He read of Samson—how love ruled him,
And how the base Delilah fooled him.

He learned of David and the strife
Kicked up about Uriah's wife.

He learned of Job, that sorry wight,
Whose sad experience was a fright.

He learned of Solomon, who had
A thousand wives. (They drove him mad.)

He learned of Ananias, who Was stricken dead. (His wife was, too.)

Being a married man, he rose
Refreshed from other people's woes.
—Puck.

Father's Summer.
We hear a lot from poet chaps
Who move our hearts to pity
Because poor father has to stay
And work hard in the city
The while his family enjoys
A glorious vacation;
But this shows that the poet tribe
Has missed its calculation.

For what does father do
But quit his work at two
And, after a most nifty lunch, hikes to the base-hall ground;
At eight dines à la carte,
Then makes an early start
For the local Coney Island, where the wheels are going 'round.

We hear about his toiling hard
To meet his wife's expenses,
And how he sends away each week
His dollars and his cents;
But that is most feckless stuff
The poet chaps are stewing,
For making gray hairs sprout is just What father is not doing.

He sees a summer show
Where cooling breezes blow,
And then he gets a touring car and has a midnight room;

And the only care he knows
Is when this message shows:
"We've all been bored to death here and now we're coming home."
—Denver Republican.

A young Canadian humorist who went over to England, hoping to find London editors in receptive mood, forwarded a contribution to Punch with this note: "Dear Sir—I arrived in London this morning and paid a visit to Westminster Abbey this afternoon. I found this call depressing, for a man naturally shrinks from inspecting the spot where he is to be buried."

A. Hirschman.
For fine jewelry and silverware. 1641-1643 Van Ness Avenue.

BANKING

The Anglo-Californian Bank, Ltd.
Established 1873
Head Office—London
Main Office—Pine and Sansome Streets, San Francisco
Branches—1020 Van Ness Avenue, Mission and Sixteenth Streets, San Francisco
Managers: I. Steinhart, P. N. Lilienthal
Capital paid in.....$ 1,500,000
Surplus and undivided profits.....1,449,721
A General Banking Business Conducted. Accounts of Corporations, Firms, and Individuals Solicited. Correspondence invited.
Safe Deposit Vaults at Van Ness Avenue and Mission Branches.

French Savings Bank
108 Sutter Street, near Montgomery
Paid-up Capital.....$ 600,000
Total Assets.....4,270,800
Strictly a Savings Bank. Open Saturday Evening from 7 to 8:30
OFFICERS—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, 1st Vice-President; Leon Boqueraz, 2d Vice-President; A. Bousquet, Secretary; P. A. Bergerot, Attorney.
DIRECTORS—N. C. Babin, J. A. Bergerot, Charles Carpy, Arthur Legallet, G. Beleney, H. de St. Seine, J. M. Dupas, Leon Boqueraz, J. E. Artigues, J. S. Godeau, John Ginty.
SAFE DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT
The French-American Bank occupies offices in the same building.

The German Savings and Loan Society
526 California St., San Francisco
Guaranteed Capital.....$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash.. 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds.. 1,453,983.62
Deposits June 30, 1908..... 34,474,554.23
Total Assets..... 37,055,263.31
OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohde; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.
BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohde, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse, and W. S. Goodfellow.
MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22d Streets. For receipt and payment of deposits only.

LONDON PARIS NATIONAL BANK
N. W. cor. Sutter and Sansome
CAPITAL.....$ 2,500,000
SURPLUS.....620,000
Sig Greenbaum, President
H. Fleishbaker, Vice-President and Mgr.
R. Altschul, Cashier

The National Bank Roll of Honor
The title "Roll of Honor National Bank" is a distinction of which any financial institution in the United States may be proud. As is well known a "Roll of Honor Bank" is one possessing surplus and profits in excess of capital. A place on the Roll of Honor can not be bought, it must be earned.
This bank has for a long time been known as a "Roll of Honor Bank" among banks and bankers.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF Berkeley
UNITED STATES DEPOSITORY
A. W. NAYLOR, Pres., F. M. WILSON, Vice-Pres.
F. L. NAYLOR, Cashier, F. C. MORTIMER, Asst. Cashier.

THE BERKELEY NATIONAL BANK
United States Depository
Berkeley, Cal.
HOUSEHOLD AND COMMERCIAL ACCOUNTS INVITED
DIRECTORS—George P. Baxter, Pres.; J. W. Richards, Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Bangs, Vice-Pres.; Louis Titus, Dr. Thomas Addison, A. G. Freeman, Duncan McDuffie, Perry T. Tompkins, F. L. Lipman, W. J. Hotchkiss, and Whitney Palache. P. H. ATKINSON, Cashier.

Connecticut Fire Insurance Company
Established 1850 OF HARTFORD
Total Assets.....$5,817,423
Surplus to Policy-Holders.....2,118,394
BENJAMIN J. SMITH
Manager Pacific Department
518 CALIFORNIA STREET
San Francisco

WESTERN ASSURANCE COMPANY
TORONTO
U. S. Assets.....$2,493,154
Surplus.....483,989
PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT
1004 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE
SAN FRANCISCO
J. J. KENNY, Manager W. L. W. MILLER, Assistant Manager

MARKET ST. 1st Con. 5%
Due 1924. Coupons March and September
BAY CITY'S POWER CO. 1st 5%
Due 1930. Coupons March and September
WESTERN PACIFIC 1st 5%
Due 1933. Coupons March and September
SUTRO & CO.
BROKERS
412 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.
We have a Direct Wire to N. Y.

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

With a final flurry of house parties and week-ends spent out of town the summer season is rapidly coming to a close, and within the next fortnight most of the very large contingent of San Franciscans who have deserted the city during the past few months will be at home. Many of those who are abroad or who are loth to miss the beautiful September days in the country will not return, but the end of August will bring back a host of society wanderers. There are many prospects for a gay winter, but the list of débutantes is far from decided upon and many of the pretty huds are considering as to whether they will delay their introduction to society until another season.

The engagement is announced of Miss Mary Foster, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Foster, to Mr. Henry Norbury Kuechler. No date is announced for the wedding.

The engagement is announced of Miss Pauline Duncan of Illinois, niece of Mrs. Edward L. Griffith of Ross Valley, to Mr. Richard D. Girvin of San Francisco and Menlo Park. No date is announced for the wedding.

The wedding of Miss Madeleine Bohrmann, sister of Mr. William Charles Bohrmann, to Mr. Henry Clay Miller will take place today (Saturday) at St. John's Church, Ross Valley. The ceremony will be celebrated at high noon by the Rev. Charles L. Miel. The maid of honor will be the bride's sister, Miss Elizabeth Bohrmann, and the bridesmaids will be her cousins, Miss Edna Davis, Miss Sidney Davis, Miss Marie Louise Foster, and Miss Mina Van Bergen. The best man will be the bridegroom's brother-in-law, Mr. Frank Findley, and the ushers will be Mr. Lucius Allen, Mr. Philip Tompkins, Mr. Louis Beedy, and Mr. Harry Lamberton. After the ceremony there will be a breakfast at the home of the bride's cousin, Mrs. Charles J. Foster, at which only the members of the bridal party and the two families will be present. Mr. Miller and his bride will leave on a wedding journey and on their return will occupy an apartment at the Claremont, on Jackson and Jones Streets.

The wedding of Miss Anna Foster, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Foster, to Dr. Lawrence Draper took place on Saturday last at the home of the bride's parents in San Rafael. The ceremony was celebrated at four o'clock in the afternoon in the garden by the Rev. Lynn T. White. The bride's sister, Miss Mary Foster, was the maid of honor and Miss Louisiana Foster and Miss Martha Foster, also sisters, were the bridesmaids. Mr. Henry Norbury Kuechler was the best man and the ushers were the bride's brother, Mr. Arthur W. Foster, Jr., and Dr. Frank Dray.

Mrs. Frederic Hope Beaver and Miss Isabel Beaver will entertain at an informal dance on Friday evening next at their home in Webster Street, in honor of Miss Mauricia Mintzer.

Mrs. Cesar Bertheau entertained at a dancing party last night (Friday) at California Hall in honor of her daughter, Miss Helen Bertheau, who is to be a débutante of a season or two hence.

Miss Jennie Crocker and Mr. Templeton Crocker have been entertaining a party of guests in their private car in the McCloud River region recently. Their guests were: Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. Scott, Mrs. Walter Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Horace Pillsbury, Miss Linda Cadwallader, and Mr. Duane Hopkins.

Miss Christine Pomeroy entertained at an informal tea on Sunday afternoon last in honor of Miss Parran Simpson.

Mr. and Mrs. William Tuhhs entertained at a dinner on Sunday evening last at their home in Burlingame in honor of Miss Ethel Mary Crocker.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a résumé of movements to and from this city and Coast and of the whereabouts of absent Californians:

Admiral Richardson Clover and Mrs. Clover, Miss Dora Clover, and Miss Beatrice Clover, who are at their country place, Lavergne, near Napa, for the summer, left last week for a motor trip to the Yosemite Valley. They will return to their Washington, D. C., home about October 1, and plan to leave shortly after for Egypt, Persia, and the Holy Land, where they will travel for several months.

Bishop William Ford Nichols, Mrs. Nichols, Miss Claire Nichols, and Miss Margaret Nichols have returned from a stay of a few weeks at Tahoe and are occupying the Episcopal residence on Webster Street for the winter.

Mrs. J. G. Kittle and Mr. Allen Kittle will leave during the fall for Egypt, where they will spend the winter.

Miss Jennie Crocker and Mr. Templeton Crocker are spending a few weeks at Del Monte.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Josselyn, Miss Mary Josselyn, Miss Marjorie Josselyn, and Miss Myra Josselyn went down recently to their country place at Woodside, having spent most of the summer at the Episcopal residence on Webster Street, which they had leased for a year.

Mrs. Dudley Newton Knox (formerly Miss Lily McCalla) sailed on Tuesday for the Orient, where she will join her husband, Lieutenant Knox, U. S. N., who is with the fleet.

Mrs. William Howard, who has made her home in Boston for several years past, is in California for some weeks and went recently to Del Monte.

Miss Maud Bourn and Miss Rhett of New York sailed recently for England, where they will travel for three or four months. Mrs. Bourn will go later in the season to New York and she and Miss Bourn will spend the winter there.

Mr. and Mrs. Laurance Scott and Miss Margaret Newhall have returned from a motor trip to Tahoe.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hammond and Miss Julia Langhorne have left Homourg and are motoring in Switzerland.

Mr. and Mrs. Perry Eyre, who have been abroad during the summer, have sailed for home.

Mrs. Philip Van Horne Lansdale and Miss Bertha Sidney Smith, who went abroad early in the summer, were, when last heard from, in Iceland.

Mr. and Mrs. Dixwell Hewitt are again at their home on Broadway, after a month's sojourn in Lake County.

Mrs. Margaret Irvine and her son, Mr. J. William Byrne, have returned from a six months' stay in Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert J. Dibblee have been the guests of Dr. Harry L. Tevis at his country place near Alma.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Oxnard are at the Potter in Santa Barbara for a brief stay.

Miss Lillie Lawlor will leave next week for New York.

The Rev. Edward Morgan will return next week from a stay of a month at Lake Tahoe.

Miss Sallie Maynard has been the guest of Miss Flood at Del Monte.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Dean and Miss Helen Dean, who have been at the Hotel Rafael since their return from New York, will spend the winter at the Fairmont.

Mr. and Mrs. James Otis, Miss Frederica Otis, and Miss Cora Otis arrived in San Francisco last week. Mrs. Otis and Miss Cora having spent the summer in the East and Mr. Otis and Miss Frederica having visited South America and Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. George Lent have been visiting in San Mateo as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hooker.

Mr. Barbour Lathrop and Mr. Drummond MacGavin, who have been traveling in Africa and Europe for the past six months, are now en route to San Francisco.

Mrs. James Sperry and Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Carrigan, who have spent the summer at the Sperry cottage in Sausalito, are again at their house in town.

Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Livermore and Miss Elizabeth Livermore, who are spending the summer at their country home, Montesol, in Sonoma, will leave late in the fall for Europe for an indefinite stay abroad.

Miss Elsa Draper and Mr. Morgan Draper are spending a week at Del Monte.

Mrs. L. L. Baker, who has spent the summer months in Sausalito, has taken an apartment at Hillcrest for the winter.

Miss Elizabeth Parran Simpson has arrived from New York and with her father, Colonel W. A. Simpson, U. S. A., will spend the winter at the Hillcrest.

Mr. Wilberforce Williams is at present in the East on a brief trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Selah Chamberlain (formerly Miss Edith McDonald) are occupying the H. P. Livermore house on Russian Hill and will spend the winter there.

Miss Frances McKinstry has been visiting Miss Marguerite Barron at the latter's home near Mayfield.

Mr. James Potter Langhorne, Jr., has returned from a hunting trip in Mendocino County.

Mrs. Gaston Ashe, who is spending the summer at her ranch in San Benito County, has been in town for the past fortnight.

Captain and Mrs. John Burke Murphy are spending a month in Portland, Oregon, as the guest of Captain Murphy's parents, Major and Mrs. Murphy.

Miss Coppee has returned to her home in Ross Valley, after a stay at Lake Tahoe.

Miss Constance Borrowe is in San Rafael as the guest of Mrs. William Horn.

Miss Ruth Richards of San Diego has been spending some time in Sausalito as the guest of Miss Dorothy Baker.

Mrs. John C. Kirkpatrick and Miss Susanne Kirkpatrick have returned from a sojourn abroad of several months' duration.

Mr. and Mrs. Phil K. Gordon are spending a week or two at Tahoe Tavern.

Mr. and Mrs. Fritz King have returned from a stay of six months in the Eastern States.

Mrs. H. L. Van Wyck and Miss Gertrude Van Wyck, who have been abroad for several years past, have returned to San Francisco.

Mrs. Abraham Lincoln Brown and son of Los Angeles are visiting Mr. and Mrs. I. Lowenberg of 2196 Jackson Street.

Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Spreckels, who have been spending several weeks at Tahoe Tavern, returned on Monday last.

At Out-of-Town Hotels.

The following visitors from San Francisco are registered at Aetna Springs: Mr. William H. Hill, Mr. Carmen C. Hanna, Mr. Richard Bradley, Mrs. H. Witzemann, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Lefavor, U. S. N., Miss Witzemann, Mr. Willis W. Brown, Mr. F. T. Martens, Miss Maud O'Connor.

A few of the recent registrations from San Francisco at the Tavern of Tamalpais are Mr. F. Winslow, Miss Christina Judah, Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Barker, Miss Dorothy E. Chapman, Mr. Charles E. Dohie, Mrs. M. S. Dohie, Mr. Harry G. Clark, Mr. Burton G. Clark, Mr. George A. McGowan.

Among recent arrivals from San Francisco at Byron Hot Springs are the following: Rev. W. J. Cantwell, Rev. W. J. Butler, Rev. James J. Gannon, Rev. F. M. McQuaid, Rev. J. F. Nugent, Rev. L. P. Moran, Mr. W. H. Scott, Mr. Thomas Finnigan, Mr. A. L. Meyerstein, Mr. C. H. Wall, Mr. Joseph K. Carey, Mr. E. M. Wall, Mr. E. C. Denigan.

Recent arrivals at Hotel Del Monte from San Francisco include Mrs. O. Bowen, Mr. Oscar H. Curtaz, Miss Curtaz, Miss Ethel Wilson, Mr. Charles T. Crocker, Miss Crocker, Miss Gertrude Jolliffe, Miss C. J. Flood, Miss Sallie Maynard, Mr. C. E. Colwell, Mrs. N. H. Colwell, Mrs. Paul F. Kingston, Mrs. M. Kingston, Mr. Paul J. Kingston, Miss Isahel Fowler, Mr. Albert Fowler, Mr. M. A. Hirshman, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Havens, Mrs. P. Umhens, Mr. O. Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Hansen, Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Hickman, Mrs. A. T. Dunphy, Miss Florence George, Mrs. Tohin, Miss Agnes Tobin, Mrs. A. Loughborough, Miss Zane, Mr. and Mrs. H. Williar, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Blankfield, Mr. and Mrs. Ward A. Dwight, Mrs. H. Haire, Mrs. Charles S. Levy, Mrs. E. W. Sutton, Miss L. Goldsmith, Miss Florence Lundborg, Miss Julie Heyneman, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Putnam, Mr. and Mrs. V. S. Beardsley, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Pelton, Miss E. Umhens.

At the Hotels.

Among those now at the Hotel Jefferson are Mr. C. H. House, Mr. W. H. Scott, Mr. H. Handlon, Mr. Thomas Finnigan, Mr. Joseph D. Minor, Mr. Charles P. Gale, Mr. L. B. Hesse, Mr. William McKay, Mr. E. V. Daily, and Mr. A. F. Jenkins.

Among the registrations at the Hotel St. Francis are Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Maud, of Rutherford; Major and Mrs. Charles McKinstrey, Mr. and Mrs. Leopold Michels, Mr. Francis B. Loomis, Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Kennedy, of Hawaii, and Mrs. Phoebe Davies Grismer.

Among visitors at the Fairmont Hotel are Mr. and Mrs. H. Knipping, of Tsing Sein, China; Mr. and Mrs. James S. McCandless and family, of Honolulu; Mr. H. C. Ackerley, Dr. Douglas Long, Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Yerxa, Mrs. Phillip Forve and the Misses Mary and Louise Forve, Mrs. Albert Busch and Mr. John W. Mitchell, of Los Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Holmes and Miss Bolt, of Pasadena; Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Brehman, Mr. and Mrs. Whitwell W. Cox, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Shanke and Mrs. Louis P. Evans, of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. N. P. Heffley, of New York; Mrs. A. B. Steinhach and Miss Steinhach, of Portland, and Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Stevens and Miss Emmerton, of San Gabriel.

While nothing in ex-President Cleveland's will, which was filed several weeks ago, indicates the amount of his fortune, it has been made known that his personal and real property amounts to $250,000.

YOUR HAND

is the only one that can unlock your box in our Safe Deposit Vaults. Your valuables in one of our steel boxes can not be lost by theft or fire. For this protection $4.00 per year and up.

CROCKER SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS

CROCKER BUILDING Junction Post and Market, S. F.

Pears'

Pears' Soap furnishes all the skin needs, except water. Just how it cleanses, softens and freshens the delicate skin-fabric, takes longer to expound than to experience. Use a cake.

Sold in every quarter of the globe.

FAIRMONT HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

A homelike and comfortable hotel. Superbly situated. Magnificently Appointed. Perfectly Served.

Palace Hotel Company

ALL NEXT WEEK

August 31st—Sept. 5th

DEL MONTE Golf Tournament

Reduced Railroad Rates
Reduced Hotel Rates,
$3 to $5.50 per day
American Plan

Make your reservations now. Address
H. R. WARNER, Manager

The Peninsula
SAN MATEO, CAL.

A home in the country practically within San Francisco's gates. Only thirty minute away. Frequent trolley and train service. See S. P. time-tables. Located in the heart of one of the most beautiful gardens in the State. No winds, no fogs. All the accommodations that culture and refinement demand. Progressive in every detail. Well-equipped club house, and commodious garage.

Winter Rates in force September 1, 1918

JAS. H. DOOLITTLE, Manager.

Hotel Rafael

San Rafael, Cal.

Open year around. Headquarters Automobile League. New and commodious garage. Fifty minutes from San Francisco. Complete change of climate. Tiburon or Sausalito Ferry. All modern conveniences.

F. N. Orpin, Proprietor.

ROUND THE WORLD

TOURS DE LUXE

Leaving in August, September and October. Membership limited to twelve. Programmes for the asking.

THOS. COOK & SON

32 Powell Street, San Francisco

BECAUSE we believe there are those who wish to lunch quietly, in refined surroundings, yet inexpensively, we opened

YE TEA CUP INNE

1427 Bush Street, below Van Ness (upstairs)

Hotel St. Francis

The spirit of good service and the facilities that produce it.

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF JAMES WOODS

Why Not Make Your Home At The Hotel Jefferson

Turk and Gough Streets
Facing Jefferson Square

A superior class hotel with every modern convenience and comfort. Operated on the American and European plans. Special rates to permanent guests. Special attention paid to the table—we invite comparisons. Management Noah W. Gray, formerly manager Alexander Young Hotel, Honolulu, and Hotel Pottler, Santa Barbara.

You Can Live At The Hotel Jefferson Better And For Less Than At Home

Hotel dei Coronado

Motto: "BEST OF EVERYTHING"
Most Delightful Climate on Earth
American Plan. Summer rates $3.50 per day each and upward, or $21.00 per week each and upward

"Good Music" and "Fine Automobile Road, Los Angeles-Riverside to Coronado." Golf, Tennis, Polo, and other outdoor sports every day in the year. New 700-foot ocean pier, for fishing. Boating and Bathing are the very best. Send for booklet to

MORGAN ROSS, Manager,
Coronado Beach, Cal.
Or see H. F. NORCROSS, Agent,
334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles.
Tel. A 6789; Main 3917.
22d Street and Broadway

Byron Hot Springs

The waters cure rheumatism—the environment is perfect—the hotel comfortable and supplied with an unexcelled table. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, ground floor, James Flood Building; Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market St., or address hotel.

Sherman, Clay & Co., occupying this entire building at Kearny and Sutter Streets, S. F., are headquarters for every kind of musical instruments from Steinway pianos down. You have no need to go elsewhere for any article pertaining to the music business.

Sherman, Clay & Co.

Steinway and Other Pianos—
Victor Talking Machines

KEARNEY AND SUTTER, S. F.
1635 Van Ness Ave. Broadway at 13th
San Francisco Oakland

John F. Forbes

Certified Public Accountant

601 KOHL BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy people who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Brigadier-General J. B. Aleshire, U. S. A., quartermaster-general of the army, arrived last week on an official tour of inspection and to consider the improvements planned in the military reservations in this vicinity.

Major W. A. Bethel, U. S. A., judge advocate of the Department of California, left on Saturday last for Seattle, Washington, where he is attending the annual meeting of the American Bar Association. He will be absent about ten days.

Major Samuel W. Dunning, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., Fort Shafter, Hawaiian Territory, has been ordered to proceed upon the first available transport to San Francisco, reporting upon arrival to the department commander for duty at Department Headquarters in connection with the manoeuvres at Atascadero Ranch, with headquarters in this city.

Major Guy L. Edie, Medical Corps, U. S. A., has been appointed a member of the board to meet in Washington, D. C., for the purpose of reviewing the proceedings and findings of medical examining boards in the cases of medical officers who have been found by such boards to be disqualified for promotion for reasons other than physical disability contracted in the line of duty.

Major Charles E. Woodruff, Medical Corps, U. S. A., has been granted three months' leave of absence, to take effect on September 8.

Major W. C. Dawson, U. S. M. C., and Lieutenant A. B. Owens, U. S. M. C., are appointed on a board of survey, depot quartermaster's office, San Francisco.

Commander A. S. Halstead, U. S. N., was commissioned a commander in the navy from July 1, 1908.

Captain John B. Christian, Ninth Cavalry, U. S. A., has been appointed assistant professor of natural and experimental philosophy at the Military Academy, West Point.

Captain James N. Pickering, First Infantry, U. S. A., has been ordered to the Presidio of Monterey and report to the commanding officer at that post for duty in the School of Musketry.

Captain William R. Davis, Medical Corps, U. S. A., has, in addition to his present duties, been assigned to temporary duty in charge of the medical supply depot in San Francisco, during the absence on leave of Lieutenant-Colonel D. M. Appel, Medical Corps, U. S. A.

Lieutenant L. W. Littlefield, U. S. N., is detached from the Washington and ordered to the Pennsylvania as ordnance officer.

Lieutenant E. W. McIntyre, U. S. N., is detached from duty at Washington, D. C., and ordered to continue treatment at the Naval Hospital, Mare Island.

Lieutenant Adna R. Chaffee, Jr., Fifteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., is redetailed as a student officer at the Mounted Service School, Fort Riley, Kansas, and upon the conclusion of the manoeuvres at Fort Riley will report at the school not later than September 25.

Lieutenant Jarvis J. Bain, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A., has been relieved from duty at the Engineer School and at the post of Washington Barracks and will proceed to Newport News and take the transport about September 1 for Havana for duty with the Second Battalion of Engineers, U. S. A.

Lieutenant William R. Bettison, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., has been ordered to report to the commanding officer of the Coast Artillery School, at Fort Monroe, Virginia, for the purpose of taking a course of instruction in that school.

Lieutenant George E. Turner, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., has had Gilroy designated as his station while on duty in connection with the Progressive Military Map of the United States.

Lieutenant Thomas E. Selfridge, First Field Artillery, U. S. A., has been relieved from his present duties at Hammondsport, New York, and is ordered to repair to Washington, D. C., and report in person to the chief signal officer of the army for duty.

Lieutenant Edward H. De Armond, Sixth Field Artillery, U. S. A., has been redetailed as student officer at the Mounted Service School, Fort Riley, Kansas.

Lieutenant John J. Burleigh, Twenty-Second Infantry, U. S. A., has been granted fifteen days' leave of absence, which took effect on Tuesday last.

Lieutenant P. A. Capron, U. S. M. C., and Lieutenant L. W. T. Waller, Jr., U. S. M. C., are ordered detached from expeditionary service on the arrival of the Albany at Mare Island and will sail on September 5 for the Philippines.

Assistant Surgeon H. W. B. Turner, U. S. N., is appointed an assistant surgeon in the navy from July 30, 1908.

The Ben Greet Players recently completed a season of open-air dramatic productions on the grounds of Columbia University in New York City, in close proximity to the roar of metropolitan traffic. The plays presented were "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "As You Like It," "Twelfth Night," "The Tempest," and "The Merry Wives of Windsor."

The Late Isaac Upham.

Isaac Upham, accidentally killed at San Jose on August 17, was long and honorably connected with the history of California. Born in North Union, Maine, he came to California in 1860 and was first employed as a clerk in Yuba County. In 1863 he became county superintendent of schools for Butte County, being elected as superintendent of schools in Yuba County in 1867. In 1870 Mr. Upham moved to San Francisco, eventually purchasing a half interest in the firm of Henry Payot & Co., the name of the firm being later changed to Payot, Upham & Co. During Mr. Upham's business life he occupied many positions of trust. He was president of the Oakland Board of Education from 1885 to 1890; president of the San Francisco Board of Trade, 1889 and 1890; a member of the board of managers of Agnews State Hospital and was elected president in 1900. He was also president of the San Francisco Traffic Association and a director in the San Francisco and San Joaquin Valley Railway Company, while his connections with charitable work were extensive and effective. In addition to his other activities Mr. Upham was a member of the Sons of the Revolution and was warmly interested in the cause of the Republican party. He leaves two sons, Isaac Oliver and Benjamin Prince.

The funeral was on August 19 from the First Unitarian Church of San Francisco, the interment being in the family plot at Mountain View Cemetery.

Princely Happiness.

Perhaps there was a time when princes were supposed to have a monopoly of the world's happiness, but we hardly need the Grand Duke Michael of Russia to assure us to the contrary. No one is now likely to accuse a Russian grand duke of being happy, so that it is not easy to understand why the Grand Duke Michael should rush into print in order to tell a palpitating world that there are troubles even in the royal family of Russia. This is what he says:

Belonging, as I do, to the imperial blood, and being a member of one of the reigning houses, I should like to prove to the world how wrong it is in thinking—as the majority of mankind are apt to do—that we are the happiest beings on this earth. There is no doubt that financially we are well situated, but is wealth the only happiness in this world? Take also into consideration the many official duties belonging to our position, and how much more we are exposed to public opinion than simpler mortals. Which is the greatest happiness in this world? Surely love for a woman—the choice of our future wife and family life. And even in this we have not the facilities of private individuals. We have even less choice.

We will let it go at this, Michael. We are not greatly interested in you, but if we had ever suspected you of being happy we should be driven to the belief that Providence is no longer interested in the affairs of this world.

Miss Emmy Destinn, the eminent Bohemian soprano, who has never been heard in New York, will sing at the Metropolitan Opera House during the coming season. Miss Destinn rivals abroad the popularity of Miss Geraldine Farrar, with whom she had a famous difference of opinion regarding the privilege of singing the rôle of "Madame Butterfly" in Berlin. She began her vocal studies with the celebrated Italian diva, Marie Loewe-Destinn, in 1892. In 1898 she was engaged for the Berlin Royal Opera; in 1901 she sang at Bayreuth, and in 1904 at Covent Garden, London. She has been singing in London during the past season with conspicuous success.

The obitographic will of the late James H. Budd, dated July 14, 1908, was filed for probate in Stockton August 5. The widow, Inez H. Budd, is the sole legatee and named as executrix without bonds. The will is very short, and the only property mentioned is $30,000 in money and certificates of deposit in the Wells-Fargo Nevada Bank. There is fully $10,000 worth of other property.

A season of 130 concerts by the Queens Hall Orchestra in London was closed with the cooperation of Saint-Saëns, who received a greeting of immense cordiality. "Dr. Saint-Saëns can still play, in spite of his seventy-three years, and many a younger pianist might envy the pearly delicacy of his runs and the charm of his touch," says the London World.

The first installment of William L. Crook's "Reminiscences of Andrew Johnson in the White House" appears in the September Century Magazine.

DR. ROBERT E. O'CONNELL, DR. GEORGE D. O'CONNELL, DENTISTS, Hastings Building, Post Street and Grant Avenue. Tel. Douglas 2733.

THE OCULARIUM
Henry Kahnt Co.
OPTICIANS
KODAKS & SUPPLIES
SCIENTIFIC INSTRUMENTS
Catalogues Free
644 MARKET ST.
OPP. PALACE HOTEL
BRANCH 1309 VAN NESS AVE.

At the Hotel Normandie
S. E. cor. Sutter and Gough
Table-d'Hote Luncheon
75 cents—and a
Table-d'Hote Dinner
$1.00—Sundays $1.25.
Unsurpassed cuisine, perfect service, refined surroundings.

Hotel Majestic
(Sutter and Gough)
A homelike hotel for refined people. Very best cuisine. Moderate prices. Rates on application.

Hotel Colonial
THE SELECT HOTEL OF SAN FRANCISCO
Stockton above Sutter Street
American and European Plans
Special Rates to Permanents
HOWARD T. BLETHEN, Manager
Telephone, Kearny 4754

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel
"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"
Building, concrete, steel and marble.
Located, most fashionable shopping district.
210 rooms, 135 baths.
Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests.
Most refined hostelry in Seattle.
Absolutely fireproof.
Rates, $1.00 up English Grill.

Tennent's
TRADE MARK
J. B. Tennent
Ale and Stout
from Wellpark Brewery
Glasgow, Scotland
Forbes Bros., Agents, 1926 Sutter St.

GOODYEAR "HIPPO" HOSE
The best and strongest Garden Hose.
Guaranteed to stand 700 lbs. pressure.
Try it and be convinced.
GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY
R. H. PEASE, President
587, 589, 591 Market St. at Second St.
SAN FRANCISCO

Aetna Springs for September Holidays
SEPT. 5, SATURDAY SEPT. 6, SUNDAY SEPT. 7, HOLIDAY SEPT. 9, HOLIDAY
This is the most delightful season of the year at Aetna, and Aetna is always delightful. Pure air, beautiful surroundings, comfortable appointments, good cooking. Autos will meet trains from Tiburon Friday p. m., September 4, and Saturday a. m. and p. m., September 5. Send for Folder Describing the Grape Cure at Aetna.
AETNA SPRINGS, NAPA COUNTY, CALIFORNIA

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

"Morning, doctor! Going to hunt—or have you been?"—Fliegende Blätter.

"Maud is a decided blonde, isn't she?" "Yes, but she only decided last week."—Town Topics.

"Wunst I got a dollar a word." "G'wan!" "Fact. Fer talking back to a judge."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

The Writer's Child—Pa, what is penury? The Writer—Penury, my son, is the wages of the pen.—Cleveland Leader.

He—She is such a charmingly innocent girl, isn't she? She—Oh, yes; she has taken years to acquire it.—The Tailor.

Sister Ann—Did yer get any marks at school ter-day, Bill? Bill—Yus, but they're where they don't show.—Sketch.

"Doctor, if this operation is successful I'll pay you double." "I shall be entirely satisfied with my regular fee."—Smorti Set.

"I don't believe in that doctor." "Why?" "He didn't tell me everything I wanted to eat was bad for me!"—London Opinion.

Ashley—Do you have much variety in your boarding-house? Seymour—Well, we have three different names for the meals.—The World.

"What did father say when you asked him for me?" "He didn't say anything. He fell on my neck and wept."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Mistress—Did the mustard plaster do you any good, Bridget? Maid—Yes; but, heggorry, num, ut do bite the tongue!—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"Waiter, get me a newspaper so I can hide my yawns; this concert is so stupid." "Yes, miss; I'll bring the largest I can find."—Fliegende Blätter.

"Have you ever loved and lost?" sighed the swain. "Nope," responded the maiden, promptly. "I've won every breach of promise suit I ever brought."—Cleveland Leader.

Ella—I'm to be married tomorrow, and I'm terribly nervous. Stello—Yes; I suppose there always is a chance of the man getting away up to the last minute.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"What do you see in me to love?" sighed the ardent swain. "Oh, I don't know," answered the girl. "This is the silly season, you must remember."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Howard—Why did he marry her at all if he were going to get a divorce so speedily? Coward—Because he didn't think it would be honorable to break their engagement.—Pioneer Press.

"This play in its intensity," said the go-out-between-the-acts young man, "fairly takes my breath away." "I only wish it would!" gloomily remarked the lady in the next seat.—Baltimore American.

Briggs—Is there such a thing as a scientific kiss? Griggs—Surely. One in which you succeed in breaking away from the girl without becoming engaged to her.—Des Moines Register and Leader.

The Parson—I intend to pray that you may forgive Casey for throwing that brick at you. The Patient—Mebhe yer riv'rence 'ud be saving toime if ye'd just wait till Oi git well, and then pray for Casey.—Sloper's.

"But," said the fair maid, "you seem rather young to be wearing the title of colonel." "Anyway," replied the heedless youth, "I've participated in seventeen summer engagements."—Cleveland Daily News.

"I've got you down for a couple of tickets. We're getting up a raffle for a poor man of our neigh—" "None for me, thank you. I wouldn't know what to do with a poor man if I won him."—Philadelphia Press.

Mrs. Stubb—It states in this magazine, John, that the shortest men on earth are the Laplanders. Mr. Stubb—H'm! They couldn't be any shorter than an American man after his summer vacation.—Chicago Daily News.

"Yes," remarked the race horse, "all my achievements have been due simply to putting my best foot forward." "Yes?" replied the mule. "Now, I find that I accomplish most by putting my best foot backward."—Philadelphia Press.

Tovane—I never saw a man who was so fond of entertaining as Henpeck is. It's really remarkable. Browne—Oh, that's not so strange. You see, his wife is quite pleasant to him when there's company in the house.—Philadelphia Press.

Miss Sweetner—Isn't it laughable to see the youthful airs Fan Billwink gives her self? She must be at least ten years older than I am. Miss Copsicum—Fully—and you wouldn't tear under the wing, you know, either.—Chicago Record-Herald.

"Well, what does the hat bill come to this summer?" inquired Mr. Juggins. "Let me see," said Mrs. Juggins, producing the long paper. "My black Merry Widow, Lottie's pink Merry Widow, Ella's green and Mami's mauve Merry Widow—total $99.90." "Gee!" said Mr. Juggins. "Nearly a hundred! Well, with the 10 cents remaining, I guess I'd better have my old straw done up again."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

"Augusta," said Mr. Wyss when the quarrel was at its height, "you have devised a great variety of ways to call me a fool?" "Merely a matter of necessity," replied Mrs. Wyss. "You have devised so many ways of being one."—The Bohemian.

"What did you mean by this poem?" inquired a delegation of admirers. "I didn't mean anything," answered the great poet, frankly. "I wrote that poem for a monthly magazine. I did not expect it to be published in a book collection."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Mr. Cad—Can I see that burglar who was arrested for breaking into my house last night? Inspector (hesitatingly)—Well, I don't know. What do you want to see him for? Mr. Cad—Oh, there's nothing secret about it. I just wanted to find out how he managed to get into the house without waking my wife.—Illustrated Bits.

The Camel's Complaint.

Canary birds feed on sugar and seed,
Parrots have crackers to crunch;
And, as for the poodies, they tell me the noodles
Have chickens and cream for their lunch.
But there's never a question
About my digestion—
Anything does for me!

Cats, you're aware, can repose in a chair,
Chickens can roost upon rails;
Puppies are able to sleep in a stable,
And oysters can slumber in pails.
But no one supposes
A poor camel dozes—
Any place does for me!

Lambs are inclosed where it's never exposed,
Coops are constructed for hens;
Kittens are treated to houses well heated,
And pigs are protected by pens.
But a camel comes handy
Wherever it's sandy—
Anywhere does for me!

People would laugh if you rode a giraffe,
Or mounted the back of an ox;
It's nobody's habit to ride on a rabbit,
Or try to bestride a fox.
But as for a camel, he's Ridden by families—
Any load does for me!

A snake is as round as a hole in the ground,
And weasels are wavy and sleek;
And no alligator could ever be straighter
Than lizards that live in a creek.
But a camel's all lumpy,
And humpy and humpy—
Any shape does for me!
—Charles E. Caryl, in "The Admiral's Caravan."

WANTED UNIMPROVED PROPERTY IN THE BURNT DISTRICT

To Exchange for Desirable Income Property

MONEY TO LOAN AT PREVAILING RATES ON FIRST MORTGAGE SAN FRANCISCO REAL ESTATE

COZY MARINE VIEW RESIDENCE
8 rooms, attic and basement. North side of Green St., near Buchanan
$6,800. CAN ARRANGE MORTGAGE

GUY T. WAYMAN
232 MONTGOMERY STREET MILLS BUILDING

36TH YEAR PHONE DOUGLAS 777

SCHMIDT LITHOGRAPH CO.
LABELS. CARTONS ETC.

SECOND AND BRYANT STS. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
SAN FRANCISCO, LOS ANGELES, PORTLAND, SEATTLE.

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS
Bear the script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label. Get "Improved," no tacks required.

Wood Rollers Tin Rollers

Toyo Kisen Kaisha
(ORIENTAL S. S. CO.)

S. S. Hongkong Maru...Saturday, Aug 29, 1908
S. S. Tenyo Maru...Friday, Sept. 25, 1908
S. S. Nippon Maru (via Manila)...Tuesday, Oct. 20, 1908

Steamers sail from company's piers, Nos. 42-44, near foot of Second Street, 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Hiogo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.

Round-trip tickets at reduced rates. For freight and passage apply at office, 240 James Flood Building. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

Round Trip Rates

Baltimore	$107.50
Boston	110.50
Chicago	72.50
*Denver-Colo. Spgs-Pueblo	55.00
Houston, Texas	60.00
Kansas City	60.00
Memphis	67.50
Minneapolis	73.50
New Orleans	67.50
New York	108.50
Omaha	60.00
Philadelphia	108.50
St. Louis	67.50
St. Paul	73.50
Washington, D. C.	107.50

On sale Sept. 15 and 16
* On sale Sept. 14 and 15 To Denver only Sept. 21 to 27
To Kansas City only on sale Sept. 23-24-25

These tickets are good on California Limited

Back East EXCURSIONS

Phone Kearny 315 F. W. PRINCE 673 Market St.

Mr. Publisher:

Does it interest you to know that ALL the mechanical work on THE ARGONAUT is done by us? Fact.

WILLIAMS PRINTING CO.,
Phone, Douglas 2905. 406 Sutter Street

Does Not Sting the Tongue

A New Pipe Mixture
OF EXCEPTIONAL MERIT
MILD SWEET SMOKE

2 oz. 25c. 4 oz. 50 cts.

M. BLASKOWER,
201 Montgomery St. 1117 Van Ness Ave.

Leather Rockers

Regularly Sold at $48.00

$26.50

This is a full Turkish design, upholstered in first-grade black leather, constructed on a framework of the best seasoned hardwood, and thorough in workmanship and materials throughout. The fringe is of an excellent design to match.

FURNITURE CARPETS RUGS DRAPERIES

D. N. & E. WALTER & CO.
WHOLESALE RETAIL Van Ness and Sacramento SINCE 1888

BLASKOWER'S SMOKING MIXTURE
M. BLASKOWER, 201 MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXIII. No. 1641.

SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 5, 1908.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10 payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breems Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opera. In New York, at Brenano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at F and Thirteenth Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Denison News Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains.

Published at 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal. Telephone, Kearny 5895.

destroy the self-poise which is the foundation of all that is worthiest in character. Prohibition is akin to the guardianship which saves the child by putting the sugar bowl beyond its reach, baffling but not checking or regulating its propensities, dwarfing rather than developing its powers of restraint. At its best prohibition would promote virtue through restriction and denial rather than through self-control—a virtue comparable with that to be found in every penitentiary and insane asylum in the land.

That prohibition is ineffective is the lesson of universal experience. No law that ever was made or ever can be made will keep men from doing that which they feel they have a right to do and which they have the means of doing. Prohibition has long been tried in Maine, in Kansas, and in local communities the country over, only to multiply demonstrations of its practical inability to enforce sobriety. The history of prohibition movements sufficiently characterizes them as fitful and temporary—as passing fads, tending to run a limited course ultimately to break down before the common sense and sober judgment of men.

The present prohibition movement is much like those which have come before it at various times during the past half century. It is more widespread because intercommunication is easier and more expeditious than at former times. It comes, too, at a time when the air is charged with socialistic ideas and when the conditions which beget a sentimental coöperation and enthusiasm are highly favorable. It will run its course precisely as do other sentimental "isms." It will have its day of popularity and success and ultimately it will collapse. Nothing persists, nothing lasts, whose roots are not grounded in fixed principle. Prohibition of the liquor traffic as distinct from its regulation has no such foundation.

The present prohibition movement finds its main support in the resentment which all men feel for the aggressions of the liquor interest. The liquor business has never been a creditable one in the United States. A certain stigma has always been upon it. But so long as the manufacturer was content to supply the wholesaler, and the wholesaler to answer the demands of the trade, it was tolerated even where it was not approved. But of late years the spirit of commercialism has seized with special avidity upon the liquor business. Manufacturer and dealer have not been content to meet the demand of the trade—they have reached out to promote and extend that demand. The brewing firms have been especially active along this line. They have brought to the work of promoting the traffic in their products not only large business insight, but large capital. It has become the universal custom for brewers to take leases of desirable retail sites in towns large and small and to push the traffic by thoroughgoing methods. This system was largely responsible for the fact that before the disaster San Francisco had something like four thousand drinking places, a large proportion of them in residential districts. This system gives to Sacramento, a town of not more than forty thousand people, more than two hundred drinking places.

To "protect" a business thus promoted and extended the liquor traffic has gone into politics. It has organized a solid political force and allied it everywhere with the most vicious elements in local politics. Those who seek to hold our politics to worthy conditions have everywhere to combat the saloon vote. Thus, the liquor interest has become in behalf of its pocket an active promoter of vice, and on top of this an ally of low politics. Is it surprising that multitudes have risen in disgust and resentment to rebuke these practices? And is it surprising that this movement has hit upon a policy which easily appeals alike to prejudice and to moral impulse?

We are told that the liquor interest, including the brewing and the wine interests, is alarmed over the prospect of a prohibition campaign in this State and that preparation is making for an "aggressive fight." With all due respect we must say that the more aggressive the fight made by the liquor interest, the more the prohibition movement will be helped. If the liquor interest in its legitimate phases wants to protect itself, if it wants to take the wind from out the sails of its adversaries, its wisest course is to abandon any policy smacking of aggression. The surest and best way to combat the extravagances of prohibition is to cut out the abuses of the traffic. For so long as the liquor interest lends its organizing power and its capital to the promotion of the drink habit, and so long as the saloon is the ally of low politics, the prohibition movement in one form or another will persist. Mistaken as it is at the point of fundamental principle, bound as it is in the long run to collapse, prohibition none the less has a tremendous power of appeal to the moral instinct of men and the sympathies of women. The surest way to promote it, let us repeat, is to fight it aggressively. The quickest way to discourage and defeat it is to eliminate those abuses which contribute to its strength.

In this connection it is not untimely to give a word of warning to the tobacco interest. The tobacco traffic, while widely regarded as a vicious thing, nevertheless does not excite the same degree of resentment as the liquor traffic. Even those who look upon tobacco using with disapproval none the less are easily able to tolerate the tobacco traffic. But in recent years the tobacco traffic has taken on accessories which tend to discredit it widely. The slot machine with its open invitation to a demoralizing vice clicks merrily on every cigar counter, and it is raising against the tobacco traffic ten thousand critics. The "back room" which is a common attachment of the cigar store tends likewise to widespread offense. The public is coming to look upon the cigar store as an ally and promoter of the vice of gambling. The sentiment is one that will grow because it has reason to grow. The moral sense of the community condemns gambling especially in those forms which invite and demoralize youth. The tobacco traffic is defying this sentiment in its universal employment of the slot machine and in its too-common alliance with the "back room." If the tobacco traffic would avoid a crisis similar to that which now confronts the liquor traffic, it must cast off these extraneous and vicious attachments. Society will not tolerate any traffic in alliance with gambling in seductive and demoralizing forms.

Japan Resumes Her Traditions.

Disquieting rumors are leaking out of Washington, like trickling water from an overloaded reservoir. These rumors relate to what the publicists and correspondents call "the Japanese question." We of the Pacific Coast who are personally interested in this "question" had settled comfortably in the belief that the State Department was attending to this matter satisfactorily and that all was peace and comity between Tokio and Washington. It appears, however, that the publicists and correspondents have discovered a "hitch" in the negotiations between this country and Japan in regard to the proposed treaty under which immigration privileges are to be materially modified. Japan, it is said, will not agree to the exclusion of her laborers from the United States unless similar prohibition is imposed on similar immigration from Europe. Japan is willing to advise her peasantry to keep out of the United States, its territories, and dependencies, and she is even prepared, for her own economic welfare, to place the severest restrictions on all emigration from the empire; but she is strongly inclined to resent discrimination on our part against any class of Japanese citizens.

If there is substantial basis for this complexion of our existing relations with Japan, it will not be denied that the Japanese are logical in their contention. We would similarly resent the attempt of any foreign power

THIRTY-SECOND YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: The Prohibition Movement—Japan Resumes Her Traditions—Historical Value of Street Names—Assaulting the Home—A New Element of Humor—Editorial Notes.....	145-148
CAMPAIGN TOPICS.....	148
ANTAGONIC RIVALRY IN MANHATTAN: Manager Savage and Manager Fiske Make Simultaneous Presentations of "The Devil".....	149
OLD FAVORITES: "The Closing Scene," by Thomas Buchanan Read.....	149
MARON VON STERNBURG'S CAREER: The Late German Ambassador Won American Good Will by Unaffected Interest and Plain Speaking.....	149
THE VIGILANTES' VENGEANCE: XXIX. By Jerome A. Hart.....	150
THE KING OVER THE WATER: Romance of the Pretender, James Francis Edward, "The Old Cbevalier".....	151
THE SILVER TOES OF FATIMA. By Edith Hecht.....	152
INDIVIDUALITIES.....	152
BOOKS AND AUTHORS. By Sidney G. P. Coryn.....	153
LITERARY NOTES: Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip—New Publications.....	154
BOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.....	154
"BROTHER OFFICERS" AGAIN. By Josephine Hart Phelps.....	155
CHARITY FAIR.....	156
TORQUETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.....	157
THE MERRY MUSE.....	157
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy.....	158-159
CURRENT VERSE: "Poor Mary," by Mary McNeil Fenollosa; "Unknown"; "The Spur," by Aldis Dunbar; "Beauty's Path," by Florence Earle Coates.....	159
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day.....	160

The Prohibition Movement.

The principles which underlie the affairs of society do not change. Now, when half the country is in a fever of enthusiasm for prohibition, the principle of prohibition is precisely what it was last year or ten years ago, when the thing was all but universally condemned and repudiated. Now, as then, prohibition regarded as a working theory is false in logic, a mistake in morals, ineffective in practice, a mere fad as distinct from a serious and permanent cause.

Prohibition is false in logic because it assumes (1) that men may be made virtuous by law; (2) that it is proper function of society to safeguard men against their normal propensities; (3) that laws may properly be adjusted to the weaklings of society rather than to the average and normal man. Boiled down, the logic of prohibition is this, namely, that because some men make vicious use of liquors, their legitimate and proper use must be denied to all men.

Prohibition is a mistake in morals because it is a substitution of restrictive authority, a thing naturally and inevitably demoralizing, for the principle of self-control, a thing essentially wholesome. It tends to weaken the moral muscles of the individual; it tends to to discriminate, upon caste or economic distinctions, against even the humblest of our own citizens. It is true that the proposed treaty with Japan provides for the exclusion of American laborers from Japan; but as American laborers have no desire to labor in Japan, none of our unions and "exclusion leagues" has offered objection to this voluntary concession, or uttered protest against the treaty's derogation of the dignity of American labor. We must hold in remembrance that the Japanese are a "proud and sensitive" people, and we must not lose sight of the fact that most of them, even among the coolie class, are of the samurai caste or descendants of the warrior vassals of the daimios. They are a nation of soldiers whose traditions are loud with battle, crimson with slaughter, and bright with the glory of heroic sudden death. The history of the Japanese during two thousand years is the history of a fighting race; when they were not fighting with their foreign neighbors in Korea or in China they were cutting the throats of each other in civil wars that surpassed in savage ferocity anything accomplished by the tribes of mediæval or modern Europe. The insignia of their bushido or knighthood was two swords and the soul of the samurai was believed to abide in these swords. It was the ancient custom of a Japanese gentleman to immolate himself on the altar of his personal honor in the sacred rite of seppuke or hara-kari, the instrument of sacrifice being a short, sharp knife, and the seat of honor being somewhere in the stomach of the dishonored gentleman. The leopard can not change his spots; neither can you make a silk purse out of a sow's ear; and it is just as impossible to convert a Japanese from what he is into something that approaches our ideal of what he ought to be. The Japanese have never been conquered and naturally they deem themselves unconquerable. They have condescended to adopt certain Western notions, especially in the art of war; but they have never consented to acknowledge their inferiority as a people or as individuals to anything that walks erect and seeks to lord the earth.

Which brings us directly to the somewhat significant visit recently paid by Baron Takahira, Japanese ambassador at Washington, to President Roosevelt at Sagamore Hill. It was given out that the "mission" was "diplomatic," but its purport was a state secret. Anyway its nature was important enough to induce an ambassadorial journey and insistent enough to urge immediate conference instead of waiting until the President's return to Washington.

Whatever may be doing under the surface of the Japanese event in the chancelleries of Washington, it may be safely surmised that the motives are inspired in Tokio. The new Japanese cabinet is distinctly and avowedly reactionary in that it has responded to the popular demand for a return to the "ancestral principle" of Japanese polity. It is conceded that the future policy of Japan will be more imperial than constitutional; that the attitude of the government in its foreign relations especially will be more determined and aggressive; and that the diplomatic and political modernity of the Hayashi ministry will be replaced by strict adherence to national tradition.

Marquis Katsura, the prime minister, is one of the ablest statesmen in Asia. He is an imperialist of the most pronounced character, and it is largely due to his genius as a leader of his people that they have attained to the position they now hold among the powers of the earth. The associates of the Marquis Katsura in the cabinet are Count Komura, minister of foreign affairs, a diplomat whose experience ranges from Peking to Washington and includes the missions to London and St. Petersburg; Baron Goto, minister of communications, former governor-general of Formosa and recently president of the South Manchuria Railway, one of the highest authorities on governmental finance in Japan; Admiral Saito, whose splendid achievements during the war with Russia attracted the attention of the world; General Terauchi, minister of war, whose uncompromising militarism is regarded even in Japan as detrimental to any policy of retrenchment in army and navy expenditures that may be broached hereafter; Mr. Komatsubara, minister of education, the only liberal in the cabinet, but needed by the bureaucracy because of his profound knowledge of the mental and moral requirements of the populace; Viscount Okabe, minister of justice, a man of broad education and approved ability as a jurist; Baron Ōura, minister of agriculture, a Satsuma patriot and an ardent supporter of the Yamagata clan, an allegiance that insures his close adherence to the military party of the empire; and Baron Hirata, minister of home affairs, also a faithful follower of Prince Yamagata and the war lords of the Elder Statesmen.

To properly appreciate the force and purpose of this cabinet it must be understood that the individual ability of the members in any one direction was not considered in their selection. The special aptitude of each official is subordinated to the purpose and intention of the cabinet as a whole. Only in minor detail are the cabinet officers specialists. The will of the administration is primarily the will of the emperor, and the Katsura cabinet is an embodiment of the principle of the Mikado's divine right to rule the empire of Japan as despotically as he pleases. In the promulgation of this intensely imperial policy Premier Katsura and his advisers are sustained by the mass of the Japanese people, whose samurai instinct, fostered by centuries of vassalage to the daimio overlords, can not be eradicated by half a century of constitutional government. As a matter of fact, only the most enlightened of the Japanese people have fully realized the meaning of a constitutional form of government. The emperor has always been the son of heaven for the populace, and he has never been other than the liege lord of the most powerful nobles of the empire.

Reciprocally the emperor and his advisers are constrained to regard the welfare and desires of the people. This welfare includes the honor of the nation, and the desire of the people is preëminently a demand that Japan shall command the utmost respect of the world. It is not likely, therefore, that the present administration will submit humbly to dictation from the United States in the matter of a treaty that deprives the meanest of Japanese citizens any right or privilege which we guarantee to the citizens or subjects of the most favored nations.

Historical Value of Street Names.

San Francisco should name one of its streets after Vasco Nunez Balboa. Every schoolboy knows why. No more appropriate honor could be conferred on the discoverer of the Pacific Ocean than the perpetuation of his name in an official designation of the broad boulevard skirting the shore of the sea upon which "with eagle eyes he stared," while all his men "looked at each other with a wild surmise—silent, upon a peak in Darien."

The suggestion revives an old controversy concerning the best nomenclature for the streets of a city: Should streets be named for convenience only or should the names embody the history of the city? If convenience is to be the sole purpose of naming streets, the simplest method is the best: Let us number all streets running north and south and designate those running east and west by the letters of the alphabet; or vice versa; and if we would reduce the topography of our city to absolute simplicity we may call the lettered streets "avenues." The only objection to this manner of naming streets is in the limitation of the alphabet—there could be only fifty-two "corners," from First Street and Avenue A to Twenty-Sixth Street and Avenue Z; but the city authorities who would lay out a city in this "simplified" style could add all the names conventional to all cities—"Broadway," "Main," "Market," "Front," "Water," "East," and "West." After that they could name the streets after the Presidents, and having exhausted these national names to date they could select the names of the States, and when all the States had been used they could begin with "Forest" and "Grove," and any botany will furnish names for an almost endless nomenclature of "Laurels," "Oaks," "Pines," and "Sycamores."

The city of San Francisco is largely burdened with such meaningless designations, but they have not been arranged to fit the rule of convenience except in the names of the numbered streets south of Market Street. Five of the "cross streets" in this section of the city are named after men that were active in laying the foundation of San Francisco as it existed before the great fire of 1906. Howard Street was named in honor of W. D. M. Howard, who came to Monterey in 1839 as a cabin boy in the ship California from Boston and afterwards became the leading merchant of the Pacific Coast. Brannan Street and Bryant Street were named after Samuel Brannan and Edwin Bryant, both well-known citizens in the earliest history of San Francisco after the American occupation. Stevenson Street was named after Colonel J. D. Stevenson, who commanded the New York regiment of volunteers sent to California by the United States government in 1847. Folsom Street was named in honor of Joseph L. Folsom, the assistant quartermaster of this regiment. Another street paralleling these streets was originally named Mellus Street, after Henry Mellus, a member of the firm of Howard, Mellus & Co., but a quarrel between Howard and Mellus induced the senior partner to exert his influence with the ayuntamiento or supervisors of that period to have the name changed from Mellus to "Natoma." East of First Street are Fremont Street, named after John C. Fremont, the "Pathfinder," a personage who looms large in national history and in the history of California; Spear Street, named after Nathan Spear, whose residence in California dated from 1823 and at one time owning a monopoly in the hide and tallow trade of the California coast; and Beale Street, named after Lieutenant Beale of General Kearny's command, wounded at the battle of San Pasqual in San Diego County during the revolt of the Spanish Californians against the invading and usurping Gringos, in 1846.

The history of the conquest of California by the Americans is linked with that of the Spanish pastoral period and the founding of the mission of St. Francis de Assisi, from which San Francisco takes its name under an official order by General Kearny while serving as military governor of Alta California in 1847, by the names of the streets in what is now known as the Mission district of the city. Francisco Guerrero was alcalde of San Francisco in 1839 and sub-prefect in 1841. Don Joaquin Castro was one of the original grantees under the Spanish régime, when the services of the first families of California were rewarded with landed domain covering leagues in lieu of acres. Jesus Valencia, Jose Sanchez, and Jesus Nunez owned all that section of the peninsula from the Potrero and the Bernal rancho to the Presidio. Intersecting this district along the ridge that overlooks the bay and channel of the Golden Gate is a street called Devisadero because the view from this elevation is a continuous panorama of landlocked harbor and towering hills from Mount Hamilton to Tamalpais. This street divides the eastern from the western section in a historical sense, separating the ancient settlement of Yerba Buena from the city that was planted by the Americans in the sand dunes and along the shore of the bay between Rincon Hill and Clark Point and Telegraph Hill. Davis Street in this section was named after William Heath Davis, a merchant who came to San Francisco in 1831 and was a member of the first ayuntamiento now the only survivor of that first "low wash o civilization" flung up by Yankee enterprise against the last remnant of Spain's Pacific empire never wholly absorbed by the rebel republic of Mexico. Within the eastern section of the city the history of the conquest is plainly written in the names of the streets—Montgomery, Kearny, Dupont, Stockton, Mason, Jones, Leavenworth, and Drumm. Captain Montgomery commanded the American sloop-of-war Portsmouth under Commodore Sloat, and with Captain Samuel Francis Dupont of the Cyane raised the American flag on Portsmouth Square July 7, 1846. General Kearny commanded the American troops during the American occupation and was third military commander during that transition period. Commodore R. F. Stockton was second military commander of the American forces in California, succeeding Commodore Sloat. Colonel Mason was the fourth military commander, following General Kearny. He was succeeded by General Riley, the last of these military commanders; and it is notable in this connection that neither Sloat, the first commander, nor Riley, the last to exercise absolute military authority in California, has been named in any of the thoroughfares or divisions of the city that owes so much to the respective administrations. Jones Street was named after Commodore A. Jones of the American frigate United States, who, in August, 1842, captured Monterey under a misapprehension based upon a report that war had been declared between this country and Mexico and that an English man-of-war was sailing to take California in the name of Queen Victoria. Leavenworth Street was named in honor of Rev. T. M. Leavenworth, chaplain of Stevenson's regiment. Drumm Street was named to perpetuate the memory of Lieutenant Drumm of the warship Portsmouth, and this is all that is recorded of him.

Much of this history should be familiar as any household word to San Franciscans, but most of it is now very little of it is taught in the schools of San Francisco, and so little is such learning regarded by our citizens that only recently it was necessary to correct their pronunciation of a number of the names of the principal streets. This indifference to the historic value of street nomenclature was exemplified when Dupont Street was widened between Market and Buena Vista Streets and called Grant Avenue. There were oth-streets that could have been named for General Grant without infringing upon the only record we possess indicating that Rear-Admiral Dupont was the actual founder of the American city of San Francisco. Something similar was intended in the proposition to change the name of Devisadero Street to "Funston Avenue" in compliment to General Funston, a worthy soldier and a newspaper hero of magnitude, but a part of the history of San Francisco only in the fact that he was in charge of the government troops during the calamity period of April, 1906. If it was proper or necessary that General Funston should be thus honored for strict and adequate performance of his duty, his name could have been inscribed on the corner of one of the streets bearing the conventional and therefore meaningless titles common to the vast majority of American cities. It was certainly not proper nor in any degree necessary that the only descriptive Spanish name in San Francisco should be taken from one of our most beautiful streets and General Funston's substituted.

Assaulting the Home.

A new word has been added, temporarily let us hope, to the vocabulary of the English-speaking race. More accurately, the word itself is old, but the meaning is new, and its application has been narrowed to define a specially vicious condition. The word is "affinity," and it is used as a soft-sounding synonym for words of ancient lineage descriptive of a sex relation that has never been legitimized by any race or people living upon a plane far removed from barbarism. An "affinity" is a woman that takes the place of a wife while the wife is living and in full possession of her marital rights. The difference between an "affinity" and other women of the same moral standard is in the open and unblushing avowal of the illicit relationship. The wife's redress is divorce, as in ordinary cases of flagrant and persistent infidelity by the husband.

Notable among recent instances of "soul-mating," as the advocates of this new phase of debauchery call it, is the Earle-Kuttner episode. Ferdinand Pinney Earle is an artist of some repute in New York; Julia Kuttner was a "settlement worker," and a woman of more than ordinary culture and refinement. Earle was a married man, but he had tired of his legitimate wife, and when he met Miss Kuttner he claimed her as his "affinity." Miss Kuttner, nothing loth, accepted the man's proposition and accompanied him to his home. Disgust rather than resentment drove Mrs. Earle from the house, and shortly after she secured a divorce from her husband. One year later, and twelve days after a babe had been born to them, Earle was arrested for beating and choking his "affinity." It is a story that drips from the pen of a Zola; a story that better fits the environment of the slums and stews of a great city than the atelier of an artist or the home of a refined and cultivated woman. Yet, in all candor, it must be said that the woman got no more than she deserved from her miserable apology for that which goes to the making of a man. The consequences were inevitable. A husband that would deliberately insult his own wife by compelling her to make way in her own home for his odalisque would not hesitate to beat and choke the woman that he had thus invited to supplant the wife. It was the brute in the man that induced the first transgression and the same brutality was certain to manifest itself, sooner or later, in the manner that eventually characterized the treatment inflicted upon his "affinity" by artist Earle.

Marriage is not only a sacred obligation, but it is a guaranty of the solidarity of every institution of civilized society. Abolish marriage as it is now established in civilized communities and the social structure would crumble as a house built on the sand; civil government would be impossible; and a species of anarchy would prevail, involving every relationship now serving to solidify and perpetuate civic righteousness, civic probity, and civic morality. Property interests would be inextricably involved and laws governing succession and inheritance would be swept from the statute books. The direst evil that could be thrust upon humanity would be the abolition of marriage as a civil contract.

Even in those half-civilized countries where polygamy is recognized the headship of the household is in the wife and the "affinity" or "favorite" is entirely subordinate. It is the first wife of the Turk that governs all the others and is supreme by the law of the Koran in the counsel and affection of her husband. In China the wives of a man that can afford to have more than one are numbered, and their position in the household is strictly determined by the number they bear. In all nations and tribes the laws are made to conform to the natural requirements of the marriage relation, to the end that there shall be no violent and unseemly wrangling by the offspring of marriage over the accumulated property of the family when, in the course of nature, the father of the family shall have ceased to exercise his control.

Thus it is clear that aside from the moral issue involved, formal marriage is a necessary adjunct of definite government. But it is the moral purpose that appeals to the civilized man most strongly. The home is the basis of what may be called Saxon civilization, and the home is where the wife, the mother, abides, be it a palace or a hut or a tent in the desert. It is the home idea and the effort to preserve the home from all contamination that has made the Saxon strain dominant in the affairs of the world. It was a predilection for "affinities" that made all-conquering Rome an easy spoil for the Goth and the Frank, reared at the knees of mothers who reigned supreme in their homes. There were no "affinities" in that age among that people, and it was reserved for a civilization ripe almost to rottenness to produce a breed of men tolerant of conditions that encourage the severance of the marriage tie upon trivial provocation.

American civilization has reached the point where it is necessary to decide once for all whether marriage is a solemn and lasting obligation or merely a temporary convenience to be dispensed with at the will or the whim of the contracting parties. We have tolerated loose ideas concerning the marriage relation, until divorce by collusion has merged into open defiance of marriage itself and the laws that prohibit the violation of the marriage relation. It is a most abhorrent condition when an action for divorce can be forced upon a wife that has been true to her vows and obligations by a husband that has "found an affinity." Yet the "affinity" is the direct and logical consequence of the collusive divorce. It is the last refuge of the hestial husband that has failed to move his wife from her determination to preserve the integrity of her wifehood—a brutal assault upon her self-respect far more heinous than the blows that the plug-ugly of the slums showers upon his blow-calloused helpmate.

A New Element of Humor.

Bret Harte in his most exuberant flights never conceived a more humorous "situation" than the one that came as a climax to a stage robbery by "a lone highwayman" in the Yellowstone Park last week. Seven stage-coaches containing 125 passengers were "held up" by one man, armed with an automatic rifle, and the helpless victims were compelled to contribute about $2000 in cash. Thus far the rules of the game were strictly followed, although the number of stages stopped and the number of passengers robbed were considerably in excess of the conventional complement in such cases made and provided either in history or romantic fiction. That the robber used an automatic rifle and smokeless powder may be regarded as a concession on the part of the bandit to modern science; he was an up-to-date footpad, that was all, and he preferred the latest contrivance in lethal weapons to the ancient and obsolete saved-off shotgun loaded with buckshot, sixteen to the pound, long celebrated in Western and especially in Californian song and story.

The humor of the episode developed after the dramatic feature had ended, and it was contributed exclusively by the indignant passengers. Instead of strutting their brief hour on the stage where the limelight dazzles and splendors, posing as temporary heroes and heroines, and thereafter retiring gracefully into the obscurity from which they had involuntarily emerged, these passengers "organized" with a "chairman" and a "secretary," and after uttering their thoughts and opinions in loud words and strong language, they "unanimously" adopted a series of "resolutions" reciting the gross indignity to which they had been subjected and requesting the Secretary of the Interior of the United States to make an investigation with a view to ascertaining whether there had been neglect of duty on the part of the park guardians and whether "the aggrieved citizens have means of redress and compensation from the government." Whence it is fair and logical to conclude that truth is funnier than fiction.

Old Californians and those who are familiar with the habits, customs, and traditions of the wilder and woolier West will smile broadly when they read in these resolutions that "these travelers were entirely defenseless, as by the rules of the park tourists and visitors are not permitted to carry weapons of offense or defense." Any one who has looked into the dark and deadly muzzle of a road agent's shotgun will appreciate the absurdity of a protest against a rule that prohibits the carrying of offensive or defensive weapons into a region where such tools are utterly useless without the accompanying privilege of what is technically known as "the drop," a precaution that is invariably provided by the person or persons conducting the hold-up. The history of the Far West from the headwaters of the Green River and along the Pacific littoral from Vancouver to Ensenada, is replete with instances in which stages loaded with sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, desperadoes, and "bad men" of varying "records," all of them armed from boot to collar, have been held up by one, two, or three men, tall or short, or tall and short, and ignominiously deprived of their "guns," knives, and money. The question naturally arises: What would these "tourists and visitors" have done if they had been permitted to "carry weapons of offense and defense" into the bandit belt of the Yellowstone reservation? It is possible, no doubt, that some fool tourist, unacquainted with the rules of the game, might have attempted to "draw," and it is also possible that the relatives of the fool tourist would subsequently have telegraphed for the remains. Fool tourists, however, seldom take themselves as seriously as that.

There is not the slightest desire to censure these "tourist and visitors" for harboring ill feeling towards a government that so flagrantly failed in its duty towards those whom it is its province to protect. Neither is it our purpose to defend the Interior Department from the implication contained in these Yellowstone resolutions that the secretary of that department or some coördinate authority should have so arranged the circumstance that the bold bandit would have been caught in the act. It is not our intention to make light of the humiliation and chagrin of these passengers incident to an adventure peculiarly humiliating and eminently provocative of the profoundest chagrin. The episode is cited merely to show that East is East and West is West and that never the twain shall meet. It is a study in contrasts. These were pilgrims from the Near East and Farther East; they came into the West wholly unprepared to accept Western conditions as they might find them, demanding that Eastern methods and Eastern conventions should be applied singularly in their case; they would have expressed no surprise if they had found a policeman in khaki at every crossroad; they would have taken it as a matter of course if the park patrol had been ordered to escort them through the wilderness of the great reservation. Moreover, notwithstanding the pleasure they have derived from the perusal of Bret Harte's vivid descriptions of hold-ups in the West, they could not accommodate themselves to the reality in the spirit of those to the manner born or reared.

The Westerner, on the other hand, not only expects to be held up every time he fares forth on a journey by stage through the unsettled sections of his horizonless domain, but he is somewhat disappointed when he arrives at his journey's end unrobbed. This expectation induces the precaution of traveling light financially, and as a rule he refrains from bearing arms. He argues that he who steals his purse will steal trash, and he does not feel bound to risk his life in defense of the express company's treasure-box. Highway robbery is, in the opinion of the true Westerner, an ancient if dishonorable custom of the country, and its regulation absolutely within the province of the sheriff of the county in which the robber practices his profession. The Western rule in these affairs is to submit as gracefully as the circumstances may allow, to yield promptly to every demand of the man behind the gun, to "drive on" when so ordered, and finally to report the incident to the sheriff, who in his turn summons a posse and starts in pursuit of the robber. If the sheriff knows his business and if the robber has not got too far beyond his jurisdiction the next act in the little comedy is "a running fight," perhaps, a dead robber or two, another in shackles, and a conviction before a duly constituted court of justice. Nobody thinks of adopting resolutions of regret, condolence, or protest, and such resolutions as the aftermath of a highway robbery in the West are as laughable and ridiculous in the purview of the Western-bred man as similar resolutions would be in the opinion of the Easterner if adopted by a caucus of the citizens held up by "thugs" in New York or Chicago every night in the year.

Therefore, it is pertinent to inquire: Why should these "tourists and visitors" object by resolution to being held up in the Far West, insisting on "rules and compensation" from the government, while they forever hold their peace when subjected to similar indignity in Central Park or on Prairie Avenue? Why should the Interior Department be denounced for inadequately protecting touring pilgrims in the Yellowstone Park, while the police departments of the robber-infested cities of the effete East are not only permitted to escape such denunciation, but are oftentimes eulogized in the public prints for their "efficiency" and their "vigilance," upon the hypothesis that if they had not been so efficient and vigilant there would have been more robberies on the highways of those cities? We fear that the Eastern sense of humor is not as highly developed as this saving human quality is in the West. Or if it is, the Yellowstone resolutions would indicate that it lacks breadth and is not provoked to genuine laughter except when the other fellow's ox is gored. Perhaps those "tourists and visitors" who were not held up are laughing as heartily at those resolutions as any citizen of the West.

Editorial Notes.

The Fresno Republican quotes a recent remark of the Argonaut's characterizing His ex-Excellency Dr. Pardee as "a weak creature of essentially feminine mind," and asks: "Did you ever hear any of his decidedly masculine vocabulary?" Yes, we have heard something of that vocabulary, but bad never thought to regard it as masculine. We have never thought, indeed, of vulgarity as belonging exclusively to any particular gender. Dr. Pardee's "vocabulary" we long ago set down among the several outward marks of that mental and moral weakness which characterizes the man. Strong men do not cultivate a lurid "vocabulary"; they make themselves heard—and heeded as well—by quiet forms of speech. It is the man who feels the need of some extraneous aid to emphasis, who knows himself weak, who resorts to oaths and epithets. Our good friend Rowell will have to find some better proof of manliness in his friend Pardee than the habit of blankety-blanking everything and everybody.

Mr. Chafin, Prohibition candidate for the presidency, is good enough to let us know precisely how he would apply his nostrum in case of his success. Failing the support or approval of the national legislature, and on his own personal responsibility and initiative, he would apply all the military and naval power of the country to the forcible suppression of the liquor traffic in all its branches. Of course, we need not take Mr. Chafin too seriously. The danger of his candidacy is not of the kind to make our flesh creep, but his pleasant little programme is useful as showing the state of mind of those who allow themselves to be obsessed by a single moral idea. In pursuit of a project that is no doubt a fit subject for ordered and balanced political reflection Mr. Chafin would overthrow the whole structure of representative and democratic government, would play the part of a despot, and would plunge the country into practical anarchy. But why indeed should he stop at America? If the army and the navy are to be used for domestic coercion, why not apply them also to foreign countries who may show themselves a little backward in the cause of prohibition? Why not declare a holy war with a rallying cry of Prohibition or Death?

The original Almack's Club in London, afterwards known as Willis's Rooms, had a curious origin. It began as a tavern, started by Lord Bute's butler, McCall, who proposed to give it his own name—McCall's, but judicious friends warned him that the tremendous unpopularity of Scots in London at that time, for which McCall's master was largely responsible, would spell ruin to an establishment so called. "Very well," said McCall, "I will call it Almack's." The present Almack's Club is a more fashionable organization which chose to adopt the old name.

The political term "gerrymander" celebrates the name of Elbridge Gerry, a governor of Massachusetts, who was an adept in the art of so arranging election districts that his own side had a dominating proportion of representatives. The story goes that Russell, the editor of the Continental, had in his office an election map of Massachusetts, in which the painter Stuart thought he saw a district in the shape of a salamander, and pointed it out. "A Gerrymander," answered Russell, and the word became a proverb.

The Somaliland Mullah is reported to have burnt alive followers who were found guilty of having used cartridges otherwise than in warfare.

The lepers on the island of Molokai wanted the fleet to pass by that lonesome spot so that they could get a glimpse of it.

CAMPAIGN TOPICS.

That Mr. Gompers would be unable to swing the labor vote to his own particular point of the compass was a foregone conclusion to those who know that the laborer has his own political convictions and that he holds them just as strongly as any one else. Reports from all over the country show that there is the expected spirit of independence amongst labor men and something more than a suggestion of resentment at being, as it were, tied up in a parcel and delivered at the Democratic counter. There are, of course, some unions who announce that they will obey. That is to say, there are some unions where Democrats are in a majority, but it is evident enough that to talk about a solid labor vote is nonsense.

Take, for instance, the International Women's Garment Workers of New York, which is one of the American Federation of Labor unions. This particular body took Mr. Gompers's instructions under consideration, and this is more than a great many of the unions have done. Its members not only decided to send no contributions, but they passed a resolution adverse to Mr. Bryan. So much for a solid labor vote with the finger of Mr. Gompers on the trigger.

Then, again, there is the Central Labor Union of Philadelphia that met on August 23. The union was exhorted in terms almost scriptural in their fervor to "stand by Gompers" and indorse the Democratic national ticket. But the union did nothing of the sort. In fact, the atmosphere of the whole Arctic north was perceptible in the room and Mr. Gompers was referred to the committee of fifteen, and if he gets any sympathy from the committee of fifteen it will be in some unforeseen manner. The Bryanites were in a hopeless minority from the beginning. Two or three of the unafraid voiced their convictions, but it would have been better for them had they remained silent. The main effect of their plea was to arouse the representative of the Cigar Makers' Union, a gentleman rejoicing in the name of William Shakespeare. "When Samuel Gompers says the Democratic party is fair to labor he tells a deliberate untruth," shouted Shakespeare. "Let him turn to the Democratic solid South if he wants to find conditions that are horrible and a disgrace to civilization. Neither Gompers nor the executive board of the American Federation of Labor has the right to dictate how the American workingman shall vote, what he shall eat, or what he shall wear. We have cut loose from the despotism of hard employers and we will not tolerate it from our own leaders. They have bitten off more than they can chew and they will learn their mistake.

"We can not be led by the nose like cattle. It is too late in the day of civilization for that. I don't know what is hack of this movement, but I do know it is not for the best interests of the American workingman."

There is plenty more of the same kind from many different parts of the country. Another cigar maker spoke right out in meeting at the Central Federated Union of New York. His name was only Brown and he could hardly be expected to speak with the fervor of William Shakespeare (of Philadelphia), but he did protest that for the unions to go into party politics would be fatal to their best interests. But enough said. In the words of the immortal William Shakespeare (of Philadelphia) the Gomerites "have bitten off more than they can chew."

A determined effort is being made to show that Mr. Taft is insincere in his avowed determination to secure a revision of the tariff. Those who ought to know better, and who of course do know better, say that revision may be upward or downward and that when Mr. Taft refers to the tariff he does so with his tongue in his cheek. A few days ago he was asked if he would make a tariff speech in reply to Mr. Bryan's address at Des Moines, which is said to have caused an exciting time in Wall Street, where nerves and inflamed conscience are still the fashionable ailments. Mr. Taft said that his views on the tariff were well known, that he had expressed them often enough, and with special clearness in his Bath speech, and that their repetition seemed to be hardly necessary. It may be remembered that in his Bath speech he said:

Speaking my individual opinion, and for no one else, I believe that since the passage of the Dingley bill there has been a change in the business conditions of the country making it wise and just to revise the schedules of the existing tariff. The sentiment in favor of a revision of the tariff is growing in the Republican party, and in the near future the members of the party will doubtless be able to agree on a reasonable plan.

Mr. Taft now goes on to say that if elected he will instantly call an extra session of Congress to take up the question and to do it on the broad grounds of the public good and in deference to what he believes to be the intention of the people. There is no double entente in his mind and there should be a warm reception to every attempt to represent him as a shuffler. Speaking at Columbus, Ohio, he was even more explicit than he was at Bath. He said:

Whenever the tariff imposed is largely in excess of the differential between the cost of production in the two countries, then there is formed at once a great temptation to monopolize the business of producing the particular product and to take advantage of profit in the excessive tariff. This denies to the people altogether the economies of production that competition under a protective tariff should develop.

When changes take place in the conditions of production likely to produce a very large reduction in the cost of production in the United States it is time that the schedules should be reexamined, and if excessive they should be reduced so as to bring them within the jurisdiction of the rule by which the amount of tariff to be imposed under the protective system is properly determined.

There is no reason to feel surprised at such utterances nor to suppose that they indicate the slightest departure from sound Republican policies. Mr. McKinley at least was never supposed to have weak knees on the subject of a protective tariff and in Mr. McKinley's impressive speech at Buffalo, his farewell speech, he said in unmistakable terms that the time had come to reform the tariff, and by speaking of reform he meant a change that would bring the schedules more in touch with changed conditions and in the interests of the people as a whole and not of a section nor of a class.

Democrats are naturally a little gleeful over the senatorial squabble in Iowa, but a glance at actual conditions should dispel their cheerfulness and replace it by a profound and wholesome gloom. Majorities are stuhhorn things, and the Republican vote is too large to be overcome. Why even when Cleveland was elected in 1892 Iowa remained loyal to the Republican party by a plurality of 20,000, and the managers today have every ground for complacency.

But complacency is not the same thing as over-confidence. The Democrats will do their best and they are encouraged by the fact that the gold men who rejected Bryan in 1896 and 1900 and those who refused to support him in 1904 have come back to the fold and have fallen upon each other's necks with tearful promises never to quarrel again—till next time. Mr. Bryan himself is blowing gently upon the smoking flax. He chose Des Moines to begin his campaign outside of his own State, and, while the Republicans are safe enough if they do their political duty, there must be no folding of the hands to sleep.

Ex-Governor Myron T. Herrick of Ohio has no doubt at all of Mr. Taft's success. He says:

Mr. Taft will maintain the traditions and continue the policy of President Roosevelt if he considers them necessary to the administration of the government. All one has to do is to look at Mr. Taft's history to decide that he is independent and fearless, and can't be led by any one. He's a good judge, and knows right from wrong. He will see that everybody gets justice. In England those who are students of politics speak with great admiration of Judge Taft and commend highly his work in the Philippines.

Congressman James Francis Burke of Pittsburg utters a word of timely warning against the fallacy that Mr. Bryan could do no harm in the White House in the face of an adverse Senate. He points out that merely as a disburser of money the President is without a rival in the world. Through the agencies under his control he will this year disburse about a billion dollars.

Congressman Burke goes on:

In view of the fact that during the fifteen years of Bryan leadership the States controlled by his party have decreased from 23 to 12; the number of senators from 48 to 31; the number of representatives in Congress from 220 to 164, and that at that time the Democratic party was in control of the ground, whereas it is now, as a consequence of his teachings, a hopelessly heterogeneous mass of Populistic elements, the American people can see little prospects of a constructive policy if Mr. Bryan should succeed.

These are useful figures, known already in a general way, but now presented with precision.

During the last few months we have heard from all sorts and conditions of men as to their political intentions and sympathies and we have noted with satisfaction that the Republican side of the national balance has shown its fitting and rightful preponderance. But we were in doubt about the harbers, whose connection with the intellectual factors of the struggle is so unquestioned that it would be a fatal mistake to undervalue their influence upon the national choice. What would the harbers do? Would they inscribe upon their banners the magical formula of "Taft and the Trusts" or would they he found hearing aloft the imperishable sentiment of "Bryan and Bust"? There was a tragical feeling of uncertainty. There was no foregone conclusion in the matter. It had been whispered abroad, doubtless by some stealthy Democrat, that William H. Taft shaves himself and visits a tonorial emporium only once in four months to have his hair cut. Thirty-five cents in four months—it may be cheaper down East—is not much to pay in support of one of our great industries, and we felt that if the charge were true Mr. Taft would be leading a forlorn hope.

But the charge is not true and there is halm in Gilead. The Barbers' Convention, in New York assembled, has considered this matter and the verdict is not guilty. Mr. Taft does not shave himself; he would scorn the act, and as for the four months' imputation it is a scandalous libel. Mr. Taft has his hair cut every month, while as a matter of fact it is Mr. Bryan who shaves himself, and there is some pictorial reason to believe that he never has his hair cut at all. After the chairman had significantly expressed his gratification at the result of the inquiry he inadvertently ejaculated "next" and the business of the convention proceeded.

If children are to play their usual part in the present campaign, there will have to be an editorial staff to revise their communications before publication. Mr. Taft has received a letter from a small person who says: "Dear Mr. Taft—My daddy thinks a lot of you and I like everybody my daddy likes, especially when I have never met them." The concluding qualification is no doubt conscientious, but it is undiplomatic and it ought to be deleted.

The sense of political responsibility possessed by the Prohibition candidate is worthy of a woman's club, and in the words of Mr. Barkis we "can say no fairer than that." Mr. Eugene W. Chafin informs us:

If I am elected President of the United States on November 3 and have a Congress that refuses to pass a prohibitory law, I shall use the power conferred upon me by the Constitution, and call out the militia and the standing army and the navy, and force prohibition on every inch of territory under the American flag.

But why stop at the "American flag," Mr. Chafin? Thus frolicsomenly inclined and with the militia, the standing army, and the navy at your command, why stop at revolution at home? Why not invade Canada and enforce prohibition "from Greenland's icy mountains" to "India's coral strand"? Declare a Jihad, a Holy War, and "try to make us orthodox, by apostolic blows and knocks," as it seems we can't be moved in any other way. But all the same we are glad of the warning, although the danger can hardly be described as imminent.

SATANIC RIVALRY IN MANHATTAN.

Manager Savage and Manager Fiske Make Simultaneous Presentations of "The Devil."

They are playing "The Devil" at two of the theatres this week and the result shows, as was to have been expected, that the malevolent personage of many titles is very attractive to the crowd. He always has been, when we come to think of it, though he has usually been named Mephistopheles in the play. And he is still an importation, this time from Buda-Pesth, whence almost anything not entirely delightful might come if the suggestion in the name is not misleading. Again, he is still a stirrer-up of strife, whereat he chuckles with the many.

Briefly, one Ferenc Molnar, a young Hungarian playwright who had not previously startled the public, wrote a play entitled "Der Teufel" which attained success in German Europe without a single false start. Of course, American managers were at once eager to secure the right of presentation. They are not to be condemned for their desire to play certainties. Henry W. Savage thought he had captured the prize. He gained possession of the manuscript, had Oliver Herford make the play over into English, and a month ago produced the adaptation in Hartford under the title "The Cloven Foot." It promised well, before a rural audience, but there seemed to be a possible advantage in changing the last act—making a happier disposition of the afflicted characters. The matter was taken under serious consideration, and in the meantime announcement was made that the play would have its metropolitan presentation at the Garden Theatre early in September.

But when you deal with "The Devil" you are not sure of anything. Suddenly flashed upon the Manhattan public the intelligence that Harrison Grey Fiske would bring out Molnar's play, adapted and translated by Alexander Konta and William Trowbridge Larned, at the Belasco Theatre on Tuesday evening, August 18. This was, it is alleged, a bolt from the blue that shocked Manager Savage inexpressibly. However, theatrical people are nothing if not resourceful. Rush messages radiated from the manager's office, and his scattered forces were brought in from seashore and mountain retreats in the provinces, their vacations summarily vacated. There were only three days left for rehearsals and for the indispensable outfitting by stage carpenters and scene painters. For the equally important preliminary press work the time was even more inadequate, but there are many paths to publicity and most of them soon became warm to the tread. Newspaper columns, billboards, banner-bearers, and electric lights told of the contest about to take place, and the only uncertainty was whether it would be confined to the theatres. Threats of injunctions, and processes, and writs, and all the various methods and materials of court procedure, were muttered and whispered and hissed. Nothing came of the rumblings and lightning flashes except simultaneous presentations of the play in the presence of large audiences. And a quite satisfactory conjunction, too.

It is no longer a manager's battle, however the sides of rights and royalties are resolved. The play itself, and the art of the actors in the title-rôle, are the rime interests in the dramatic field. First, it may be said that Molnar's play is a brilliant and powerful satire. It tells a story of real life with a joyless ending, and its figures are forceful creations. A Viennese artist is about to be married to a young heiress. The match is really arranged by a former sweetheart of the artist, now married to a rich merchant. The artist and his earlier love have been nothing to each other for six years, and she has come to consider herself merely a good friend and visits his studio to sit for her portrait. Enter, a casual acquaintance of the artist, really a tempter, whose comments and suggestions stir up a passion which has slumbered since the former lovers were parted by her marriage. That is all there to it, except, of course, the involved interests of the husband and the bride-to-be. In every scene the shadow of the evil one hovers over the characters, and its influence drives them inevitably to the catastrophe. But he is witty, even humorous, while he nets and peevishly entangles his victims. "A wife is like a mole—without it the eyesight is clearer." "Consider how stupid it would be if every one told the truth; there'd be no conversation." "There is only one true woman—the other fellow's wife." "When a tigress has already swallowed her man the other man has nothing to fear from her." These are specimen quotations from the cynical dialogue.

Edwin Stevens is "The Devil" in Mr. Savage's production, an actor with an established reputation for excellent character work in former years in Daly's and Charles Frohman's companies. He is probably as versatile as any member of the theatrical profession, perhaps the most eminent in this respect, since Mansfield no longer here. As a comedian in comic opera he has long been a star, and he goes from the legitimate drama to the frivolity of the musical comedy libretto with ease and sureness. In his present production, for he was certainly first in the part in America (though he had the aid of Julius Herzka, actor-general of the Volks Theatre, Vienna, who he over to assist Manager Savage), he has made, as always, so far as his New York record shows, a popular success. He is a suggestion of the "Faust" Mephistopheles, but he emphasizes the humor of the rôle and makes it more materialistic than mystical. He is well portrayed by Dorothy Dorr and Paul McAllister.

George Arliss, in the Fiske production, gives a more subtle character to the central figure. He is polished, suave, and keen, but more inclined to mystery and magic than to mirth. The Konta and Larned version is more cynically pessimistic than that of Mr. Herford, and less calculatingly diverting. Mr. Arliss, accomplished actor as he has proved himself in his support of Mrs. Fiske, makes all his points and without marked effort. It is as well, perhaps, that there is a contrast in the styles of the two leading actors in the rival productions.

Both the Belasco Theatre and the Garden have been besieged by anxious applicants for seats since the opening night, and a long run seems certain for the two exploitations of satanic mischief. FLANEUR.
NEW YORK, August 24, 1908.

OLD FAVORITES.

The Closing Scene.

Within his sober realm of leafless trees
The russet year inhaled the dreamy air,
Like some tanned reaper in his hour of ease
When all the fields are lying brown and bare.

The gray barns looking from their lazy hills,
O'er the dim waters widening in the vales,
Sent down the air a greeting to the mills,
On the dull thunder of alternate flails.

All sights were mellowed and all sounds subdued,
The hills seemed farther, and the streams sang low;
As in a dream the distant woodman hewed
His winter log with many a muffled blow.

The embattled forests, erstwhile armed in gold,
Their banners bright with every martial hue,
Now stood, like some sad beaten host of old,
Withdrawn afar in Time's remotest blue.

On slumbrous wings the vulture held his flight;
The dove scarce heard his sighing mate's complaint;
And like a star slow drowning in the night,
The village church vane seemed to pale and faint.

The sentinel cock upon the hillside crew—
Crew thrice, and all was stiller than before,
Silent till some replying warder blew
His alien horn, and then was heard no more.

Where erst the jay, within the elm's tall crest,
Made garrulous trouble round her unfledged young,
And where the oriole hung her swaying nest,
By every light wind like a censor swung;

Where sang the noisy masons of the eaves,
The busy swallows, circling ever near,
Foreboding, as the rustic mind believes,
An early harvest and a plenteous year;

Where every bird which charmed the vernal feast
Shook the sweet slumber from its wings at morn,
To warn the reaper of the rosy east,—
All now was songless, empty and forlorn.

Alone from out the stubble piped the quail,
And croaked the crow through all the dreamy gloom;
Alone the pheasant, drumming in the vale,
Made echo in the distant cottage loom.

There was no bud, no bloom, upon the howers;
The spiders wove their thin shrouds night by night;
The thistle down, the only ghost of flowers,
Sailed slowly by, passed noiseless out of sight.

Amid all this, in the most cheerless air,
And where the woodhine shed upon the porch
Its crimson leaves, as if the Year stood there,
Firing the floor with his inverted torch;

Amid all this, the centre of the scene,
The white-haired matron, with monotonous tread,
Plied the swift wheel, and with her joyless mien,
Sat like a Fate, and watched the flying tread.

She had known Sorrow—he had walked with her,
Of supped, and broke the bitter ashen crust;
And in the dead leaves still she heard the stir
Of his black mantle trailing in the dust.

While yet her cheek was bright with summer bloom,
Her country summoned and she gave her all;
And twice War howled to her his sable plume,—
Regave the swords to rust upon the wall.

Regave the swords,—but not the hand that drew
And struck for Liberty its dying blow;
Nor him who, to his sire and country true,
Fell 'mid the ranks of the invading foe.

Long, but not loud, the droning wheel went on,
Like the low murmur of a hive at noon;
Long, but not loud, the memory of the gone,
Breathed through her lips a sad and tremulous tune.

At last the thread was snapped,—her head was bowed;
Life dropped the distaff through his hands serene,—
And loving neighbors smoothed her careful shroud,
While Death and Winter closed the autumn scene.

—Thomas Buchanan Read.

It is almost impossible at the present time to find an unappropriated site for the development of water-power within reasonable distance of a market anywhere in the Northwestern States, or on the west side of the Sierra Nevadas. The extent to which this utility is passing into the hands of large companies is shown by the fact that in California alone four of them have an aggregate capital of fifty-five million dollars and operate thirty hydro-electric plants and eighteen steam plants. The largest of these corporations supplies power to twenty-six individual lighting companies and twelve electric railways, in addition to a number of cities and towns where it has its own sub-stations. There is in constant operation in the State more than two hundred thousand horse-power derived from water.

Henry Farman, the aeroplane expert, has gone back to Paris. The exhibitions of his airship in New York were a financial failure, probably through bad management.

BARON VON STERNBURG'S CAREER.

The Late German Ambassador Won American Good Will by Unaffected Interest and Plain Speaking.

Baron Hermann Speck von Sternburg, German ambassador to the United States, died suddenly at the Hotel Victoria, in Heidelberg, August 23. He had gone to that city from America to consult a famous specialist concerning a malignant affection on the side of his head, suspected to be cancer, but which really came from the bite of a poisonous insect in China many years ago. His death occurred suddenly and unexpectedly from inflammation of the lungs. The baroness was with him at the time.

Messages of sympathy and condolence were received by Baroness von Sternburg from the Kaiser, from President Roosevelt, and many friends of her husband in the diplomatic service. In the baron's long career he had won the highest regard of many, and from all who had known him well came expressions of sincere regret.

From his youth the late ambassador was a close student, yet one who found absorbing interest in real affairs:

Baron von Sternburg was of German ancestry, as his name indicates, but his place of birth was Leeds, England. At that time—August 21, 1852—his father, Baron Alexander, and his mother, Baroness Martha (Shaw) Speck von Sternburg, were living in that place. The son was educated in Germany at the Furstenschule St. Afra, Meissen, Saxony, and the military academy at Potsdam, Prussia. He made special studies in international law, political economy, and military and naval sciences. Entering the army, he took part in the Franco-German War, in the Second Saxon Dragoons. His active military career continued thereafter until 1885.

He was then appointed military attaché of the German legation in Washington. In 1889 he was reappointed to the same post, and was transferred to the general staff of the German army, with the rank of major. In 1890 he entered the diplomatic service, and was made first secretary of legation at Peking, and remained in China six years. He then became chargé d'affaires at Belgrade, Servia. In 1898 he returned to Washington as first secretary of the German embassy. In the same year he served as the representative of Germany on the Samoan Commission. In 1900 he became German consul-general for British India and Ceylon. He was married in that year, in London, to Miss Lillian May Langham of Louisville and took his bride to Calcutta.

His third visit to the United States was the beginning of still more important diplomatic work:

In 1903 he was sent to Washington as minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary on a special mission relative to the Venezuelan claims. He had conducted the delicate negotiations in regard to Samoa so well that he was intrusted with this more important function, and his ability and success in settling the difficulties regarding Venezuela were such that he was appointed ambassador to the United States in July, 1903, to succeed Baron von Holleben. His close personal friendship with Mr. Roosevelt dated from the time of his service as secretary of the embassy, when Mr. Roosevelt was Assistant Secretary of the Navy. Ambassador von Sternburg was one of the so-called tennis cabinet of the President, and they frequently played with Secretary Garfield and Assistant Secretary Murray in close contests over the net.

There were incidents in the service of Baron von Sternburg, even in connection with the United States, which proved that he was not always complaisant:

He was one of the German commissioners conspicuous in the negotiations following the outbreak of the Boxer troubles in China. He was recalled from his secretaryship to Berlin for a special conference with the authorities there. A letter written by Major-General Chaffee to Field Marshal Count von Waldersee, commander of the international forces in China, accused the German troops of barbarism. Baron von Sternburg demanded an apology from the United States government. It became necessary for the Cabinet to move in the matter, and a letter was written finally under the direction of John Hay, then Secretary of State, which soothed the angry feelings of the German war lords.

As late as 1903 the relations between Germany and the United States were not of the most friendly character:

Beginning with the incident at Manila during the Spanish war, when the German admiral showed marked friendliness for the Spaniards, mutual distrust had grown, and this had been fostered by Herr von Holleben, the German ambassador, who had narrowly escaped becoming involved in the presidential election of 1900.

In order to improve these relations the German emperor ordered an American yacht and sent Prince Henry of Prussia to attend the launching and make a tour of the country. He discovered that a change in ambassadors was needed, and Baron Speck von Sternburg was selected. Almost by magic relations between the two governments improved. Friendliness took the place of suspicion. The gift of a statue of Frederick the Great, which the emperor made to the United States, the embarrassment of the government soon became a most prized present, and was dedicated at the War College with elaborate ceremonies. Germany became a friend instead of a suspected foe, and in many ways did the German ambassador foster better relations. Through his efforts a tariff war between Germany and the United States was avoided by the postponement of the imposition of the maximum German duties, and as a result the North commission went abroad and a new commercial agreement was made by the two governments.

Some of the sturdy virtues of the ambassador may be traced easily in his ancestral line:

The grandfather of Baron Hermann Speck von Sternburg, Herr Speck, was a cattle drover who took his steers to England and made a fortune in beef. With his money Herr Speck went back to Saxony, where he purchased the estate of Sternburg. He was made a knight. His son, Alexander, for services recognized by the imperial house, was made a baron, taking as his title the name of the estate purchased by the rich old cattle drover.

It is pointed out that Baron Sternburg belonged to the newer school of diplomats. He sympathized with the idea that an ambassador can do the best service for his country by winning the good will and interest of the people among whom he lives as an envoy. He was a frank admirer of what is best and most helpful in American life, and he mingled freely with Americans, speaking and writing without what was once considered necessary diplomatic reserve.

THE VIGILANTES' VENGEANCE.

By Jerome A. Hart.

XXIX.

When the Vigilante leaders had arrived at Fort Vigilant, and the prisoners were locked in their cells, the force was dismissed by the grand marshal. Their officers were warned to have the men ready to report for duty when the signal sounded on the alarm bell. A guard of some six hundred men was kept on duty; these patrolled the streets immediately surrounding the fort, keeping them free from interlopers.

Scarcely had he entered than Carleton sent for Truax, the legal counsellor of the executive committee. "Judge," he began abruptly, "it is my opinion that we had better get this business cleaned up now. I question the advisability of keeping these two murderers over night in this building. Up to the present we have met with no bad luck. But the fact remains that we hold three men here as prisoners, and that their friends are among the corrupt and lawless classes, men who live by ballot-box stuffing, hangers-on of saloons, ward heelers, and toughs."

"You're right, Carleton, and their friends are so numerous that they may attempt a rescue."

"Very true, judge. Now in order to head off any attempted rescue, I have given out that the trial of Clancy is to begin tomorrow. As for the other two men, I have told all inquirers that they are merely detained for a time. But these reports I have set afloat to hoodwink the public. I believe we had better go ahead and try Clancy now. If we find him guilty, let us hang him today."

"I agree with you," said the counsellor promptly, "with the exception that I suggest we hang all three of them now. Live men are hard to manage; besides they always have friends. Dead men need no managing, and dead men have few friends. In this world, Carleton, dead men don't count. Dead men are no good. You will find these three individuals much less trouble after they are hanged than before."

"Generally speaking, you are right, judge. Still I am not so sure about Mulligan. He is suspected of several murders, but none of them recent. Of course, he is an all-round rascal, and I know of no man who would look better at the end of a rope. But Vigilante executions should take place immediately on the heels of the crime. That is why I am so anxious to execute Clancy now. It is not many hours since his victim was walking the streets of this city, a strong and vigorous man, and today we met his funeral procession on our way back from the jail. To hang Clancy at once will be an object-lesson to the thieves, thugs, and murderers who now swarm all over the city."

"How about Costa's killing of Robertson?"

"The murder that Costa committed is much more recent than Mulligan's crimes. If we find Costa guilty I recommend hanging him alongside of Clancy."

"Probably you are right," replied the counsellor. "I merely wished to know the opinion of the court before court is convened."

Here both men smiled grimly.

"Did you have any trouble inside of the jail?" inquired the judge.

"No. Everything went very smoothly. Four of us, accompanied by a guard of riflemen, demanded admittance. After some parleying through the wicket, a deputy sheriff returned and admitted us. We asked for the sheriff, who appeared in short meter. I told him we had come for Michael Clancy, and asked that he be immediately delivered to us, handcuffed. The sheriff requested permission to confer with his attorney, who was in attendance. He did so, and then handed me this written reply."

The judge advocate took the paper, and read it aloud: "Confronted by the large body of armed men with which you threaten this jail, my only recourse is to yield. I notify you, however, that I do so under protest, and merely because I am powerless to resist you. I shall deliver to you the man you ask for, but not handcuffed. If you desire to have him manacled you may have your own men put the irons on him."

"I told the sheriff," resumed Carleton, "that so long as he delivered Clancy peaceably, we could take care of him after we got him. In a few moments two of his deputies appeared with Clancy between them. I asked if he was armed, to which the sheriff replied in the negative. None the less I had our men search him and they found an ugly knife in his boot. This was taken from him, and then he was manacled, led out, and put in the carriage."

"Was there any resistance to giving up the other two prisoners?"

"None whatever. When I made the demand the sheriff yielded, and both men were placed at my disposal."

"Were you not surprised at the readiness with which the sheriff gave up the men?"

"I had anticipated some resistance; but when the sheriff looked out of his barred windows and saw the thousands of troops surrounding the jail, and when he glanced up through the skylight of the inner court and saw some of my riflemen looking down on him with their rifles ready, he concluded that there was no use in resistance. He was right. The sheriff is quite quick in seeing the point of anything."

"Did he try to get you to offset his written protest by a written demand or receipt?"

"Yes. He wanted a receipt for the bodies of the three prisoners."

"Which of course you refused to give?"

"Naturally. I firmly declined to do so."

"That's right. Avoid in every way putting yourself on record in these matters. In addition to the danger to your liberty, if things should take an untoward turn, there is always the danger of civil suits against you for damages."

"Indeed?" said Carleton, lifting his eyebrows. "That is not a very agreeable contingency."

"No," said the judge dryly, "not agreeable, but inevitable, in my judgment."

"Changing the subject, let me ask what the Law-and-Order men have been doing this morning, judge? I have not been in a position to hear anything of them."

"They held a meeting in the fourth district court room at ten o'clock today."

"Many there?"

"About a hundred—mostly lawyers."

"Well, lawyers are useful for counsel, but not so much for action. Was their meeting a success?"

"Quite the contrary. They were all down in the mouth. Herman, who was there, tried to encourage them. But the general is still trying to get hold of some arms, and still failing to find them. Furthermore, his attempt to organize the militia, with or without arms, is a pitiful fiasco. The militia are disbanding, and their arms are disappearing."

"Indeed? What is becoming of their arms?"

"Kin savvy? No savvy," replied the judge. "Five drayloads of muskets were delivered here this morning, but I have not the vaguest idea where they came from."

Again the two Vigilantes smiled.

"But let us get to work with this Clancy trial, judge. By this time most of the members of the executive committee must have had their lunch. Suppose you get the members of the committee together, and tell them what they are to do."

"I shall set about it at once. It would be wise to hold a trial with all the forms of law, and to have a jury of twelve men—all Vigilantes, of course. You act as judge, Carleton; I will defend the prisoners, and Carwell can act as prosecuting attorney. We will give the jury every appearance of fairness, letting them withdraw from the courtroom for deliberation if it is thought expedient. Then, when they render their verdict, the executive committee will carry it out."

"That sounds fair, judge."

"Of course it does. Then when these facts are spread throughout the community, as they surely will be, it will put a much more favorable aspect on the Committee of Vigilance. The people will see that our trials are fair and above board, and in every way in accordance with the forms of the regular tribunals."

"Excellent! Now, judge, suppose you start the committee to work, and we'll hold the trial as soon as possible. By the way, you remember that we finally decided to erect the scaffold in the street instead of in the fort? Would you think it advisable to put up the scaffold after or before—?" And Carleton stopped and smiled.

"On mature consideration," replied Truax, with an answering smile, "I would consider it unwise to begin erecting a scaffold in the street before—that is, immediately. However, our men might have the timbers all prepared so that it can be put together in a few moments when the trial is—that is in case—in short, if they are found guilty." And the two men separated to go about their preparations for the trial.

* * * * *

Some hours after the prisoners had been safely lodged in Fort Vigilant, the big bell on top of the building boomed forth the quick beat which the populace had come to know. It was the signal calling together the Vigilante forces. From all over the city the men responded. Soon the approaches to Fort Vigilant were closely guarded, while on the fringes of the soldiery hung an enormous crowd.

Again the bell sounded a signal, and around the throng there ran a murmur that it was the call for the Vigilante Tribunal to convene.

Slowly the minutes passed. So thought the waiting throng in the street. But to the prisoners in the clutch of the Vigilantes the time flashed by as if on lightning wings. If the proceedings of the tribunal were formal, they were also rapid. And at last the impatient crowd heard the big bell boom again. This time it was not a quick beat, but a slow and solemn tolling. And the crowd knew then that the prisoners had been condemned—it was their passing bell.

As the great bell overhead continued to toll, a swarm of men poured from the portals of Fort Vigilant, carrying timbers and tools. In the centre of the street they hastened to erect a scaffolding. Inside the fort the doomed men could hear the dull knocking and hammering which told them that busy hands were building the scaffold on which they were to end their lives. And as the gallows slowly rose, company after company of Vigilantes marched up, until finally the entire force was massed around the square as it had been that morning massed around the jail. Dense crowds stood as close to the square of troops as the circling cavalymen permitted. The tops of buildings commanding the scene were black with human bodies. But inside the square of Vigilante troops no one was permitted to enter.

There was one exception. A closed carriage dashed rapidly down the street, slowly penetrated the crowd, but was stopped at the line of bayonets. A hurried conference followed with the officer in command. The carriage was allowed to enter the square, and drove up to the portal of Fort Vigilant. Out of it there stepped a woman, dressed in black, and heavily veiled. With her was a priest. He spoke through the wicket to the doorkeeper, but, though apparently excited and urgent, he was forced for some minutes to wait. While standing at the door still waiting, the woman heard the hammering, and turned toward the street. When she saw the planks of the scaffold, she shuddered violently, and averted her face.

"Who is she?"—"Who is with the priest?"—"Who is the woman with Father Seraschi?"

Such were the murmurs that ran around the excited crowd.

The door opened. An officer spoke to the woman. She lifted her veil, he gazed at her scrutinizingly, and allowed her and the priest to enter.

"It's Arabella Kelly!" said a voice.

"That's Bella Costa—Charley Costa's girl!" echoed another.

Then in feverish whispers the crowd discussed the tragedy unrolling itself before their eyes.

"Costa had sent for Bella."—"He was going to marry her before he was hanged."—"He was going to do the right thing by Bella."—"Yes, Costa always was a square sport."—"He was dead game, but this wedding business might upset him."—"Would he die game?"—"Would he leave much money to Bella?"

The ante-mortem wedding did not take long. In less than a quarter of an hour the weeping woman again crossed the threshold of Fort Vigilant, this time a bride. The priest was not with her—he was needed still. Two stalwart Vigilantes had each a hand under her arm-pits, and as they walked along her feet trailed on the ground. Sobbing hysterically, she was lifted into the carriage, which at once drove away.

As the two Vigilantes who had borne the bride turned to reënter the fort, a woman's voice rose from the crowd: "She aint got any bridesmaids!" That the throng was slightly hysterical was shown by the ready laugh which ran around, quickly followed by sombreness and reproach when from an obliging Vigilante came this toothsome rumor:

"Costa didn't send for her to marry him. It was the priest—he wouldn't absolve Costa unless he married Bella first."

Soon the small army of workmen had completed the scaffold. It stood in the street immediately in front of Fort Vigilant. The fort and the entire block was surrounded by soldiery, while around the scaffold itself was a smaller square of soldiers in quadruple rank. The scaffold was elevated well above the street standing on four posts. Its platform was reached by steps. On the north and south sides of the platform heavy posts rose above the platform. Over them ran a cross beam, dangling from which were two new noosed ropes. Practically the whole platform was a hinged trap door, maintained in position by a sliding trigger held by a rope; this, when cut, would let the platform fall.

Outside the hollow square of infantry a mounted patrol rode continuously around the square. On the roof of Fort Vigilant a squad of twenty-five sharpshooters closely watched the crowd. But if there were any friends of the doomed men present, they were overawed by the Vigilante numbers.

Again a signal sounded from the great bell on the roof. The door opened, and a small procession appeared. It was headed by the executive committee escorted by a company of pistol-men selected from each Vigilante company. Behind came the prisoners under heavy guard.

At the head came Clancy. He was a man of mean appearance, with a cunning face, distorted by terror which he vainly attempted to conceal. His arms were bound together at the elbows; thus his hands were loose, and every finger on them was incessantly working. The muscles of his face seemed stretched and tense. He walked unsteadily, and could not keep step with his guards, who walked beside him, each with hand under his arm. Clancy was led up the steps by his guard, and placed in position on the south side of the scaffold. Then Costa came. He seemed composed. He was a handsome man of twenty-five, with a very dark complexion, black eyes, mustache, and hair. His arms were bound as were Clancy's, and he too was supported by guards, although his step was firm, and he seemed to need no assistance.

The crowd had received Clancy in silence. His ignoble appearance, his craven terror, set them against him. But when Costa appeared, his youth, his handsome face, his cool demeanor—all this impressed the crowd. A murmur ran around—a dull murmur of revolt. A frail elderly man made his way toward the line of bayonets shaking his fist and shouting: "That's not right! What! Hang a man like that! Stop! Stop, I say!" He did not even reach as far as the line of bayonets—overwhelmed by his own emotion he suddenly fell to the ground in a fit, writhing convulsively in the dirt, while the two condemned men gazed down at him with glassy eyes.

On the platform stood the hangman, oddly attired in a black robe and cap. The priest who officiated at Costa's wedding ceremony was not permitted to appear on the scaffold. Both men had received such ghost comfort as the priest could give them before they left Fort Vigilant. No time was lost; as soon as the mounted steps they were put in position under the gallows, their legs and arms were strapped, their collars removed, and the nooses put around their necks with the knots carefully adjusted under the left ear.

When all was ready, Carleton addressed the condemned men.

"The executive committee has decided that if you desire to say anything you may do so," he said. "But I warn you that any profane or obscene language will be the signal for springing the trap. Costa, have you anything to say?"

"No," said Costa calmly, "I have nothing to say. I am being lynched, but it is useless for me to protest. So I have nothing to say."

"But I have," cried Clancy. "I've got lots to say. All you folks here think I'm a hardened sinner, but you're mistaken. In a few minutes I must meet my Maker. Do you think I am afraid to meet him? Because I aint. I haven't lived a day that I wasn't ready to meet my Maker. What you got to say to that? Eh? What would my poor old mother say if she was to see her son standing on this scaffold being murdered by the Vigilantes? Do you all understand that? I say I'm being murdered by the Vigilantes. I defy anybody to prove that I committed a murder or done any dishonorable action. I've always been a gentleman. I forgive every man living as I expect my Redeemer to forgive me—all except the Vigilantes. I didn't get a fair trial. No legal jury would have convicted me. And my life was sworn away by them that was bad friends to me. But I'm sure I'll meet my Maker, for I've always lived an honest life. Nobody ever said Mike Clancy was crooked. I was taught by my poor old mother to pray, and from the days of my youth I have prayed as I pray now."

"Mary, Mother of God the Son, pray for me!

"Mary, Mother of Jesus Christ—"

His voice rose to a shriek. Carleton made a silent signal. The hangman pulled on the black cap.

From beneath Clancy's cap there still streamed a babble-babble of inarticulate curses and prayers. The hangman left the platform; the trigger was pulled; with a slam the heavy trap-door fell. The two bodies shot heavily downward; both heads instantly assumed a hideous slantwise position, jammed tightly against the right shoulder; each body twirled for a moment—oscillated—stopped.

With awed faces the vast crowd gazed silently on the inert forms which a few moments before had been living, breathing men. And still, under the eyes of all, the epileptic writhed, and kicked, and slavered in the lust of the street, unheeded by all. For to them the mystery of life was not so compelling as the mystery of death.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Copyright 1908 by Jerome A. Hart.

THE KING OVER THE WATER.

romance of the Pretender, James Francis Edward, "The Old Chevalier."

For sixty-five years was James Francis Edward, son of James II of England and Mary of Modena, a king without a throne, and never with conscious eyes did he look upon London, the capital of the land whose sovereignty he claimed. Among the romances of royalty here is none to match the story of the Old Chevalier, but his biographer seems forced to show that there is more of weakness and indecision than of courage and determination, more of constancy to creed than of loyalty to high ideals, in the record. He was a Pretender, proclaimed by his step-sister, Queen Anne, not merely to the crown of England, but to the right and title of a conqueror.

Martin Haile is the author of this first connected biography of the royal exile who was known as James II, and it follows in natural succession his earlier volume on Queen Mary of Modena, mother of the ill-fated prince. The book is a monument of research, laid aside from its devotion to a great figure is notable as a series of historical views of the courts of Europe from 1688 to 1766. From Sweden to Spain, from Charles XII to Pope Benedict XIII and Louis XIV, all countries and sovereigns of the Continent were more or less concerned in the pretensions and hopes of the young king of his line, and the biographer has given credit to all who aided the dying cause of the Stuarts, and attention, though less enthusiastic, to all who were prominent in opposition.

There is little in the first chapter even of King James and his queen, who abandoned their London palace and fled across the Channel when Prince James was five months old, on the approach of the invading conqueror, William of Orange. In the early years of his exile King James hoped for restoration, for his son if not for himself:

Even to secure the throne for the son for whose sake he had more than once declared he only labored, James II could not swerve from the inflexible attitude of king by legitimate right. The crown of Poland (on the death of King John Sobieski) was offered him almost at the same moment, and with an equally determined refusal, in which he was not applauded by the queen. He declared he could not accept the allegiance of any other nation without violating the duties of his own. The more worldly-wise were dismayed. Duke Rinaldo of Modena; the Duke of Berwick, who writes in his memoirs of William's proposal: "It was, if I may say so, a great imprudence to refuse such an offer"; the King of France himself attempted in vain to modify the compromising disposition of the English king and queen; the Rizzini, the Modenesse envoy, does not even venture to touch upon his master's counsel with regard to the rights of Prince of Wales.

King James II died in his retreat in France in 1701 and his crown was handed down to the boy who was to spend a lifetime in vain endeavors to sustain it:

Meanwhile, at St. Germain, the queen had entered upon duties as regent to her son, who was now thirteen years and three months old. The first council was held at six o'clock in the evening of September 24, "the young king being present." His governor, Lord Perth, was declared duke; Lord Middleton, his Secretary of State, Earl of Middleton and Montmouth; Secretary Caryl, Lord Caryl of Dunford; and David Vairne, clerk of the King's Closet.

At the next council, again attended by James, the manifesto or declaration to be sent in his name to the people of England and Scotland was drawn up and sent for approval to Louis XIV through Mme. de Maintenon and the Marquis de Torcy. By his will, James II had commanded his son to take no revenge against his father's enemies nor against his own, and never to use any force in matters of religion.

William III's reply to Louis XIV's recognition of the sovereignty of James III was to recall his ambassador, the Earl of Manchester, from Paris, and to return to England to take more drastic measures against his young kinsman than the publication of libels in which no one believed. He succeeded, not without trouble, in getting a bill passed attainting James of high treason, with the liability of being executed without a trial or any other ceremony than a privy-seal warrant, in the event of his falling into the hands of the reigning sovereign.

There was an opportunity for the friends of James when King William died, but it was not seized:

When William III, riding Sir John Fenwick's horse, was thrown by a stumble over a molehill before the Abjuration Bill had passed the House of Commons, the Tories, while toasting "the little gentleman in black velvet" who had occasioned the fall, hoped that by repeated delays the king's death might occur before the third reading, but William was not to be balked of his last blow at the life of the child whom he had despoiled and persecuted from the cradle. The bill was carried to Kensington Palace on the eve of his last day and a facsimile of the signature which the paralyzed hand could no longer trace was affixed by the side of his dying bed.

The lack of leadership among the Jacobite party, the good order in which the mechanism of government was left by William III, the fact that the Princess Anne was the daughter of the last Stuart king, while the legitimate heir was but thirteen years of age, the reluctance of the English people to receive a king from the hands of their late enemy, the King of France, as well as the illusion cherished by thousands that the Princess Anne would practically rule as regent for her brother, may be counted among the reasons, not forgetting the powerful one of hatred of the Catholic religion, which caused the accession of Anne to pass unchallenged and undisturbed in England.

Among the well-drawn pen pictures in the biography is this of a partisan of James III whose measures for his service ended in failure:

It was said of Lord Mar by the Master of Sinclair that all he inherited from the family of his mother, Lady Mary Maule, daughter of the Earl of Panmure, was "the hump he has got on his back, and his dissolute, malicious, meddling spirit." The description was that of an enemy, who likewise speaks with contempt of Mar's military incapacity; but Atterbury, Bishop of Rochester, writing some years later, says that he was "as crooked in mind as he was in body." Like many deformed in person Lord Mar was gifted with a silvery tongue, a persuasive eloquence, and a beguiling way with women. Unfortunately he was incapable of turning to any useful purpose the enthusiasm which his passionate, moving speeches aroused in his followers, and neither the sarcasms of old Lord Breadalbane, who advised him to set up a printing press to record his daily achievements, nor the visible discontents of men like Lord Huntly and the Master of Sinclair, could induce him to alter his methods, or to withdraw his confidence from the outlawed Rob Roy MacGregor, who was well known to be in the pay of the Duke of Argyll, and whose outlawry was left as a safe cloak for his proceedings as a spy in the Jacobite camp.

Early in his career came the love story of the young king, and some of its chapters are like those of the romances of the time:

However sincere and deep was James's grief at the loss of "the best of mothers," he had not much time to spend in mourning, before turning his thoughts to other things. The queen had not lived to see him restored to the throne of his ancestors, nor had she seen the other great wish of her life fulfilled, his happy marriage to insure the continuance of his race. But her buoyant, high-minded courage, her indomitable habit of looking at the bright side of things, led her to say, not long before her death, that her son's prospects had never looked so favorable; and she knew and rejoiced that the negotiations to find a fitting bride had ended in the choice of the Princess Clementina, daughter of Prince James Sobieski, granddaughter of the famous John Sobieski, King of Poland, and reputed one of the greatest heiresses in Europe. Clementina's claim, which had been mooted two years previously, had been in abeyance so long as a niece of Austria or France, a daughter of Muscovy, or a sister-in-law of Sweden could be hoped for; but after Captain Charles Wogan, sent on a tour of inspection of various princesses of Europe, had pronounced the Princess of Baden a dwarf, the Princess of Furstenberg afflicted "with some redness about her nose," and the Princess of Saxony as too old, he had arrived at Ohlau, the court of Prince John Sobieski, after a dreadful journey from Prague. "I have been overturned in sledges, swum in chaizes, and slid down precipices." He sends a very favorable description of Princess Clementina, "the darling of the family . . . in point of sense, discretion, and evenness of temper, and a very becoming modesty. She is about fifteen (she was sixteen) years of age, low of stature, with light brown hair, very pretty black eyes, and genteel little features with a good shape . . . very devout and no manner of airs or variety of humor." She has "a good mixture of haughtiness in her composition, but cunning enough to disguise it upon occasion." She is healthy, but somewhat thin. Prince James is so anxious for the match, and so apprehensive of that with the Czar's daughter, that he promises to make Clementina's portion larger than that of her sister's. As Wogan was a Catholic, and it was deemed expedient that the final negotiations and formal demand for the princess's hand should be made by a Protestant, James Murry, one of James's most faithful adherents, was sent to Ohlau at the end of June, with full credentials and letters to Prince James Sobieski and his wife, and to the young princess; who in a demure little letter answers that, after the expressions of kindness in the king's letter, and the consent of her parents,—"I may sans sortir de la modestie declare to you, sire, that paternal authority had not much trouble to make itself obeyed, or to make my fate depend upon that of your majesty."

There were many difficulties in the way of the marriage:

Although James's marriage negotiations were supposed to be absolutely secret, they were announced in the Amsterdam Gazette, and at the same time the news arrived at Urbina that the Elector of Hanover "had solicited" the emperor to prevent the marriage. Charles VI, as we are aware, and as the imperial ambassador in Rome admitted to Cardinal Gualterio, "was not in a position to refuse anything to the Elector of Hanover." Unwillingly enough, the odious injunction was obeyed of first desiring Prince James Sobieski not to give his daughter to James III, and then ordering her arrest. The two empresses, Charles VI's mother and his wife—the former was Princess Clementina's aunt—did their best to render the order inoperative by sending a special messenger to Ohlau, bidding Princess James and her daughter to depart without a moment's delay, while the emperor's orders to the Governor of Innsbruck went leisurely by post; but the traveling preparations absorbed so much time that the two princesses arrived at Innsbruck twelve hours after the order for their arrest had reached the governor's hands.

With the aid of four trusted friends the princess was finally liberated and carried off in triumph. but the meeting of the royal lovers was still uncertain and strange precautions were necessary:

The mother of the young princess lost heart as the crucial moment drew near, and sent Wogan orders not to come to Innsbruck until the 27th at eight o'clock at night; and when the rescuing party arrived there, sent again to urge delay until the following morning, on account of the badness of the weather and the darkness of the night. But Wogan was firm; he returned answer that the foul weather made for their advantage, "that it was no time to deliberate now, and that all motherly fondness ought to give way." Clementina herself was resolute, and had procured a rope ladder which she meant to use in case of need. The trouble was with Jenny, the maid, who had the important part to play of taking the princess's place in bed for as many hours as she could remain there undiscovered; Chateaufort, who, under cover of a love affair, had won the consent of the gate-porter to bring a woman into the castle for an hour or so, had arranged to take her in, and to let the princess out disguised in Jenny's traveling cloak and hood. As the time drew near, Jenny lost heart, and had to be cajoled and bribed and persuaded, the present of a handsome suit of damask at last turning the scale. She set out at eleven o'clock at night with Captain Wogan—Major Gaydon and Chateaufort preceding them, when one of the latter inadvertently mentioned "the princess," upon which Jenny started and stopped, asking if Captain O'Toole was such a madman as to expect to carry off a princess. "It will never do," said she, "and for my part . . . then they were obliged to stop her mouth with fresh protestations and some pieces of gold. Chateaufort took her into the castle without difficulty, and up to the princess, who, after asking her mother's blessing, stood ready, bathed in tears, in a furred cloak and hood, and with a parcel of jewels in her hand—the priceless pearls, and some diamonds, which had belonged to Mary Queen of Modena, and which James had been able to convey to his bride. Jenny, while enveloping her in the traveling cloak and hood which she herself had worn, bade her dry her eyes, and cheered her up with comforting assurances of Captain O'Toole's "honor and worth." Clementina passed out unchallenged, Chateaufort hiding her good-night in the porter's presence, and in a voice loud enough to reach Captain Wogan's ear, who was waiting as near the gate as he dared approach.

The rain and snow heat with violence, and the princess's first words were to apologize for keeping him waiting in such weather; and she laughed as she got her feet wet in the kennel. Wogan led her unnoticed to the inn, where the fire had gone out during the long hours of waiting; they had not ventured to disturb the house by asking for more wood, so Mrs. Misset could only dry the princess's feet and change her shoes and stockings, drawing over them Gaydon's and Wogan's muffs, before leaving Innsbruck at two o'clock in the morning of the 28th of April. They had not reached the first stage of their journey before it was discovered that the princess's parcel of jewels had been left behind; she was for going on without them, but to leave such a mark of identity was not to be thought of, and Captain O'Toole rode back "on the spur." He was gifted with uncommon strength, and was able to lift the inn door off its hinges, secure the precious parcel which lay on the table, and get away again unobserved.

Thus were the bonds sealed which made the king secure in his choice:

During the few days at Bologna, Clementina had been able to provide herself with linen; and with what Major Gaydon describes as "pearl-colored stuff" for a gown and coiffe. On the morning of the 9th of May she rose at five, put on the pearl-colored gown and the coiffe, tied with white ribbons, confining her beautiful hair—with Mary of Modena's pearls round her neck—and went, attended by Mrs. Misset, to the church for confession and communion; after which the marriage ceremony was performed by Mr. Maves, with James Murry as proxy for James III. Before it began, Murry read aloud a declaration from "James, by the grace of God, king," etc., than which a stranger message can seldom have saluted the ears of a bride. It was necessitated by circumstances, for a valid marriage would render Princess Clementina a more desirable capture than ever to George I, as James would be incapable of contracting another marriage while she lived—and she was seventeen years of age. The paper, which Murry was to read "in the most solemn and efficacious manner," set forth that out of affection for the princess, whom the malice of their enemies would seek with redoubled energy to apprehend if a marriage with "an absolute procreation" had been solemnized between them, therefore ". . . we judged it advisable by these presents to restrain the procreation in such a manner that if the said princess should be prevented by violence from joining us after the marriage has been celebrated . . . the said marriage shall be of no effect. . . . Cardinal Gualterio writes of it as a "Matrimonio de futuro," at the same time expressing a doubt whether the presence of a priest would not render it a valid marriage in any case.

In spite of a quarrel and separation for four years, James and Clementina were really happy together. She bore him two sons, Charles Edward, Prince of Wales, who was known as the Young Chevalier, and Henry Benedict, Duke of York.

Little space is given in the book to the attempt of the Pretender in 1715 to invade England from Scotland, and the defeat of his Scottish adherents under Lord Mar by the Duke of Argyll, but the story of the effort made by Prince Charles in 1744 is more fully described. The captivating youthful extravagances of the prince, his estrangement from his father and younger brother, and the vain endeavors which repeated the experience of the Old Chevalier are depicted with care. The closing scenes of the life of the king are shown in all their pathos. Both James and Clementina were laid to rest in St. Peter's in Rome with all of royal pomp, though the queen preceded her royal mate by more than thirty years.

Though there is argument in the volume as well as history, it is a worthy effort, especially valuable for its chronological side notes, appendices, and complete index. It is illustrated with a number of fine portraits.

"James Francis Edward, the Old Chevalier," by Martin Haile. Published by J. M. Dent & Co., London, E. P. Dutton & Co., New York; price, $4 net.

Viscountess Molesworth has started a jam factory at her country home, Yalter's Hall, Kent, where the industry is flourishing in a gratifying manner.

THE SILVER TOES OF FATIMA.

By Edith Hecht.

It was with trepidation that Ahou Josef pushed aside the silken curtains to his royal master's audience room.

Had the Caliph been angered by his plain speech of yesternight?—a speech as necessary for him to make as it was unpleasant for his sovereign to hear. sugar plum it with compliments as the vizier might.

The royal countenance had been unruffled. save for a quick gleam in the eyes and a momentary deepening of the vertical furrow between the brows. Then the ever suave voice had answered, "I thank thee for thy plainness of speech, zealous servant. Thou shalt see how I reward such loyalty—but go now"—and the gesture of dismissal had been imperious, final.

All night long Ahou Josef in his palace had awaited with Oriental stoicism the summons that might either bring him the howstring or load him with honors.

But the night had passed without royal message, and here he was as usual for the regular morning audience. His usual precedence was accorded him—pashas, dervishes, and beggars alike made way for him, the favored one, as usual.

Delays were dangerous. He stepped in. The Caliph was seated among many cushions, reclining calmly. He rose, and checked Ahou Josef's obeisance, himself kissing the vizier on the mouth.

"So reward I plainness of speech, and now no more. The Persian princess is to be returned to her royal father with full honors, as prisoner of war. Thou art right—it ill becomes a descendant of Mahomet; he dare not commit the crime unspeakable of making a royal princess a concubine—only one of the legal four can she be, and then she must be asked of her royal father with all due honor. . . . But what will you? . . . it was a moment's temptation . . . the maiden was wondrous fair, like all those Persian women . . . mahfisch; it is over, and a descendant of the Prophet forgets himself no more. Now to other things—and a cup of coffee first."

The slaves served the coffee in the gold, jewel-studded cups reserved for royalty alone. Warily Joseph raised his cup to his lips—poison might lurk therein—but the Caliph arrested the uplifted arm of his subject. "Nay, nay, Josef, not so. That thou mayest know the worth of my love, drink of this," tasting of his own cup and then holding it to Josef. "I will drink thine."

After this condescension what was there to fear? The routine of the morning business went on and was finished. A messenger was sent to Persia with the envoy of honor asking the hand of the princess for the Caliph's son. Thus might peace be cemented. This was the Caliph's own suggestion.

Business over, the Caliph clapped his hands. "And now, Josef, a gift for thy loyalty—a girl of beauty—I would fain have kept her for myself, but"—he shrugged his shoulders—"from the crown of her head and the tips of her rosy fingers, to the end of her silver toes, she is thine—thus do monarchs reward honest servants." The girl had been brought in, her glorious face unveiled, her wonderful, svelte body swathed in a silver-spangled cloud; her slender feet in heavily brodered silver coverings.

Quivering with elation and triumph, Joseph kissed and re-kissed the hem of the royal garment.

"The silver-limbed Fatima"—did the girl shiver slightly—"will he sent to thee as hefts a royal gift, in a kingly coach—that remains thine to keep." The Caliph smiled.

Josef bent his gaze on the girl. She raised her fine, dark eyes to him with look so sad and eloquent—was it compassion; was it fear, or both? Josef knew naught save that this first time love for a woman entered with the passion. She should have naught to fear from him. Respectfully, as a Christian would, he kissed the tips of her fingers. Again that slight shiver, and then he himself dropped her veil; for the Caliph, her sovereign, waved her dismissal.

Carefully Josef lowered the veil with his own fingers. "It is not meet that my wife—with thy leave, my wife, my lord"—the Caliph nodded assent—"should be stared at by others." Concubines Josef had had and cast off in plenty, never yet had he taken a wife.

"When will my sovereign send the lady—my wife," his voice quivered with a new-horn pride, "to me?"

"If thou wishest her to wife—and her hirth is worthy"—was there a sneer in the words?—"thou mayest have a week for the bridal festivities, and another week for dalliance. Thou wilt hear from me when I want thee next—about two weeks hence." Again the gleam of yesterday and the deepening vertical furrow between the eyebrows. The girl cast down her wondrous eyes and clasped her hands convulsively together. Was it virgin fear?

The wedding festivities of Josef were beyond compare. Many a portly Pasha—the Caliph's brother himself—came in secret spleen that his daughter had not been chosen first wife of the handsome vizier.

All this for a slave girl who spoke as yet not one word. However, disappointment was bravely hidden, for the dread Caliph himself appeared at the first night's festivities. Though he came not again, every day of the marriage feast brought priceless gifts from him to the bride and groom.

The girl remained quiet, passive, calm, among the women when they dressed her in the bridal pink. One only, her gorgeous footgear, she arranged herself; that was her whim: no living mortal could see those slender feet. Eunuchs and women alike humored the whim of the vizier's toy. Time enough when her husband chose to heat it out of her. Even to the bridal bed she wore the silver brodered stockings. Josef noticed, and then she spoke her first words to him. "It is my will, but if thou wishest," mechanically she repeated; "from the crown of my head and the tips of my rosy fingers to my silver toes I am thine." And then she threw herself, sobbing, on his shoulder. "I love thee, Josef," she said simply, at the end. His arm went round the quivering waist, he raised the tear-stained face and kissed her reverently. Then as Lohengrin led Elsa, not like an Oriental voluptuary, he led her to the bridal bed. "Have thy will," he answered simply.

For one week, for two, Josef lived in bliss unspeakable. The girl took his caresses passively at first, after the first week kissing him with passionate fervor. Could there be sadness and hopelessness in that same intensity?

On the thirteenth night, as they lay together, the moon gleaming in through the latticed window, she said: "The Caliph, thy master, comes tomorrow to call on his subjects."

"How knowest thou, my precious dove," answered he, astonished.

"He told me so when he sent me to thee and commanded me to live with thee."

"Commanded, heart's love?" Josef was wounded to the quick.

"Aye, commanded me," she answered calmly, with quiet, conclusive dignity. "Else had I loved thee too much, knowing what I know—oh! my heart's treasure, my lamh," throwing herself passionately on his breast. "'Tis done now and I love thee, and"—she laughed a strange laugh—"after sipping the poison, why not drink of it? Thou art mine alone to the ends of the earth. He commanded me to live with thee, and under penalty of worse for thee not to show my feet to thee until tonight. . . . From the crown of my beautiful head and the tips of my rosy fingers, I am thine; look!—fiercely she tore off the silver brodered footgear from the ghastly, toeless, seamed, scarred feet—"look at thy leper bride."

Before Josef's gasp of horror died from his lips, in walked the Caliph. "I have given thee a bride worthy of thy hirth, thou leper dog." He spat in Josef's face. "And now begone to thy unclean fate, thou and thy slut."

With quiet dignity Josef put his arm around the girl.

"I and my wife go hence, my lord. I thank thee. Thou hast given me the greatest of gifts. Thou hast given me love."

And the palace gates clanged on them as they were driven forth with the howls of whips and the hooted kicks of servitors; the man's arm in shield around the woman's shoulders to guard her from the howls as together they sought the colony of the unclean.

Dickens's Inclination to Mimicry.

Charles Dickens, who sent to Samuel Rogers several of his hooks, who dedicated "Master Humphrey's Clock" to him, and who frequently assisted at the famous breakfasts in St. James's Place, was accustomed, rather cruelly, it may be thought, to take off his host's very characteristic way of telling a story; and it is, moreover, affirmed by Percy Fitzgerald that, in the famous readings, "the strangely obtuse and owl-like expression, and the 'slow, husky croak' of Mr. Justice Stareleigh in the 'Trial from Pickwick' were closely modeled upon the author of the 'Pleasures of Memory.'" That Dickens used thus to amuse his friends is confirmed by the "Confidences" of the late Frederick Locker, who perfectly remembered the old man, to see whom he had been carried, as a boy, by his father. He had also himself heard Dickens repeat one of Rogers's stock anecdotes (it was that of the duel in a dark room, where one of the combatants, humanely firing up the chimney, brings down his adversary); and he speaks of Dickens as imitating Rogers's "calm, low-pitched, drawling voice and dry hitting manner very comically." At the same time, it must be remembered that these reminiscences relate to Rogers in his old age. He was over seventy when Dickens published his first hook, "Sketches by Boz."

Walter Pater was an old man at fifty, bald as a coot and grotesquely plain. He loved pictures; but there was one picture which always gave him pain—the one which he could see any day in the looking glass. He was not the recluse that some persons have called him, but he did not care for feminine society. He regarded woman much as did Dean Swift, who wrote, "A very little wit is valued in a woman, as we are pleased with few words spoken intelligibly by a parrot." "You don't approve of marriage," a friend once observed to Pater. "No," he replied, "nor would anybody else if he gave the matter proper consideration. Men and women are always pulling different ways. Women won't pull our way. They are so perverse."

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Young Marshall Field has shown marked talent for oratory in his last term at Eton College. He says, however, that if he were not an American he should join the British army.

Miss Freida Klingel is the first woman driver of a taxicab in New York City. It is said that Miss Klingel was formerly a chorus girl, and she made the change from stage to cab without difficulty.

Mrs. Durham, of Offenham, who is ninety-nine years old, was recently confirmed, in her own cottage, by the Bishop of Worcester. She told the prelate that she had been so busy all her life that she had not had time to be confirmed before.

Fritzi Scheff, the actress, is no longer a countess, having been divorced from her noble German husband. It is something to give up a title like Fredericka Anna, Countess von Bardeleben, but it was too long for large type on the theatrical posters.

Professor John M. Manly, head of the English department of the University of Chicago, has been invited by the German government to deliver a series of lectures in Germany. He will speak at the University of Göttingen, and will talk on "English literature."

John Paul, a well-known Indian guide, is officially recognized by King Edward as the chief of the Milicet tribe in New Brunswick, and authorized to act as its representative. No requisition from the tribe to the British government is valid without his indorsement. Chief Paul has acted as guide in New Brunswick for the royalty of England. As a hunter he is said to be mighty, and as a guide and scout unrivaled.

Richard Croker has been made an honorary burgess of Dublin. At a formal and imposing ceremony he signed the roll and received from the lord mayor a certificate granting him the freedom of the city. The roll is limited to distinguished persons who have rendered service to Ireland or to the cause of liberty at home and abroad, and the names of three Americans precede that of Mr. Croker—General Grant, Edward Potter, commander of the ship Constitution, which brought relief to Ireland in 1880, and the late Patrick A. Collins, who was at one time mayor of Boston. Among the other hurgesses are Gladstone, Parnell, Dillon, and Ripon.

Victor Watteyne, a coal-mine expert and chairman of the Belgian Bureau of Mines, has arrived in this country. He comes here as the guest of the government and will inspect all the large and unsafe coal mines of the United States and suggest means of decreasing the mortality of the miners. He says that if the American mines had the same protection against accident and suffocation as the Belgian mines there would be about two thousand lives saved each year.

William E. Russell, Jr., a son of Colone William E. Russell of the engineer corps of the army, and Harry G. Weaver of Illinois are the two cadets now dismissed from West Point for hazing. Their six comrades, Georg Washington Chase of New York, James Gillespie of Pennsylvania, Byron Quimby Jones of New York, William Nalle of Virginia, William Wellington Prude of Alabama, and Isaac Spalding of Oklahoma, have been suspended for a year without pay and allowances.

Count Louet von Goetzen, the Prussian minister at Hamburg, is prominent among the diplomats likely to be considered for appointment as ambassador to the United States. He is only forty-two years of age, but in that time he has worked himself upward from a Uhlai to a general, became attaché to the American ambassador in 1898, and while in the United States wooed and won Mrs. Mary Stanley Lay of Baltimore. An American diplomat, in conversation with Emperor William in January, this year, made a complimentary reference to Count von Goetzen. "I am glad to hear you say this," said the emperor, "because Count von Goetzen will be the next ambassador to Washington." Although the intention of the emperor appeared to be definite when he spoke, the report that the count had been selected to succeed Baron von Sternburg caused some irritation in the German diplomatic service, owing to the minister's youth and this feeling may cause the decision to be changed. Various diplomatic changes are being gazetted in October, and among them probably will be a successor to the haron at Washington.

Admiral Sperry would not allow any "international" pugilism while his fleet was in Australian ports. What is begun in sport is liable to become dead earnest when the honor of nations is involved. In the old days the meeting of American and British warships used to be the signal for fistie encounters. An old Briton insisted there was no malice in these affairs, holding that the men of the two services were "whelps of the same breed" who wanted to "freshen themselves up a bit." Admiral Sperry may have heard this theory accepted, but he was not disposed to take chances.

Maurice Francis Egan, who is now Minister to Denmark, has finished the last of his Sea-ton Maginnis stories, which will appear in book form some time during next year. The last two stories include some very interesting delineations of theatrical characters.

LA MARQUISE

TURKISH CIGARETTES

"FINEST MADE"

10 for 25 Cents

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

By Sidney G. P. Coryn.

A remarkable collection of Dickens letters has been made available through the liberality of Mr. William K. Bixley, the St. Louis collector, and the enterprise of the Bibliophile Society. For the first time we know the exact facts of the love affair between the novelist and Miss Maria Beadnell and for the first time we have conclusive proof that the character of Dora Spenlow was drawn from life and that "David Copperfield" is practically an autobiography. The Dora of "David Copperfield" becomes the Flora Finching of "Little Dorrit," while the author himself makes his reappearance as Arthur Clennam.

The letters are numerous and as an intimate revelation of the writer they are unequalled in value and interest. They fall into two distinct groups, those that were written to Miss Beadnell in the early and more romantic years and the subsequent correspondence with the lady after she became Mrs. Winter. That Dickens had a love affair with the original of Dora is a fact made known by Foster. That these letters have practically been suppressed for so many years that their publication in England was found to be impossible, is evidence of their intimate character and of the light that they throw upon the sentimental side of Charles Dickens.

The Firing Line, by Robert W. Chambers. Published by D. Appleton & Co., New York; $1.50.

"The Firing Line" is a distinct improvement upon "Some Ladies in Haste," but there is still no sign that Mr. Chambers is returning to the fuller excellence of his earlier stories. The scene is mainly in Florida. Garret Hamil, a young landscape artist, is employed by Mr. Cardross to change the wilderness of his estate into a paradise, and as Mr. Cardross has an adopted daughter, Shiela, who is bewilderingly lovely, it requires no great effort of the imagination to forecast the final chapters. Unfortunately, Shiela has contracted a secret and madcap marriage with a boy acquaintance some two years before, and we are at once plunged into a tangle of perplexities and broken hearts from which we know that there will be due emergence, but at the cost of the unlucky young husband.

The idea is, of course, as old as the hills. It is relieved from banality by the brilliance of the dialogue and the development of the character of Malcourt, who is introduced as a rake and a rake and who forces his way to the centre of the stage and compels our almost reluctant applause. Malcourt is a second Sydney Carton, and the resemblance is too clear to be accidental. Gambler and débauché, he yet protects the friendless young actress, Miss Wilming, as she says herself, "for nothing," and his act of final renunciation is weird and almost sublime. It may be said that there is never such a man as Malcourt, but he is just as real as Jekyll and Hyde, and they are real enough to every man who has the courage to look straight at his own possibilities.

That Shiela is an almost impossible character must be admitted. Among the chief figures of this story she is the only one who was not born in the purple. A foundling, she yet combines in herself enough wit and vivacity, intelligence, and culture liberally to supply the whole aristocratic cast, and if the author intended thus to point his moral and adorn his tale we may forgive him the exaggeration. Hamil is one of Mr. Chambers's regular and orthodox young men, nice to look at, irreproachable in his honor, but not overburdened with brains. But he is courageous or he would not wish to marry Shiela and so to incur the perpetual penalty of that young lady's conversational powers, which will outlast her beauty. Without Malcourt the book would lose most of its charm, but Malcourt is drawn with so much audacity and with such enigmatical strength as to be vivid and distinctive.

A valuable feature of the book is its picture of Florida with its population of alligators and aristocrats. Those who are chronically curious as to the ways of the struggling rich will find much to satisfy them. Mr. Chambers has at least studied his ground exhaustively. He supplies the local color with a lavish and graceful hand and the result is a novel that is by no means equal to his best, but that is worth reading and even worth remembering—in parts.

More. A Study of Financial Conditions Now Prevalent, by George Otis Parker. Published by Little, Brown & Co., Boston; $1.

The fact that this book contains only some two hundred pages and that it covers a wide economic field is evidence at least of condensation. But it is not free from a disposition to superficiality as well. The tariff, for example, can not be disposed of in a few glib paragraphs, and that the author admits as much intensifies our regret that he has attempted it. We carry away the general impression that in pursuit of his aim he underestimates the obstacles.

The author's general view is that we must alleviate the present situation not so much by a redistribution of wealth as by an increase of its total. That, of course, is sound enough, and he does well to point out that the chief panaceas now before the nation, such as Free Silver, Single Tax, Socialism, and Government Ownership, promise no increased product and create no new values. They aim only to adjust discrepancies. To increase the total of products it is only necessary that savings be rightly employed in productive rather than in unproductive ways. That, of course, is a revelation only to those who have never read Adam Smith, Mill, or Ricardo, but it is just as well that the axioms and the alphabet of the old school should be once more repeated and in terms so condensed, so novel, and so attractive.

The Circular Staircase, by Mary Roberts Rinehart. Published by the Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis; $1.50.

If all the detective stories were equal to this one we should not be so tired of that particular brand of fiction. When that inimitable spinster, Miss Innes, determined to take a furnished house out of town she little foresaw a series of adventures that was to begin with the mysterious murder of a man upon her threshold and that would involve her in the fraudulent bank failure which is really the hinge of the story. As a rule the detective novel is guiltless of humor and it palls accordingly. This novel is full of humor of the dry and caustic variety. We should like to know Miss Innes in real life and also her maid Liddy, and while we are glad that the various love affairs culminate successfully, it is the valiant old lady who tells the story who makes the deepest impression on the mind.

The Lost Goddess, by Edward Barron. Published by Henry Holt & Co., New York; $1.50.

A thoroughly readable story of adventure. A party of Americans, including a married woman and her adopted sister, learn that a white woman is held in captivity by the Tigrane Indians, who live somewhere near the sources of the Amazon. Animated by chivalry and the spirit of adventure, they determine to charter a yacht and go in quest of the prisoner. Their voyage is, of course, full of the most exciting episodes, there is fighting galore, and if the hero fails to find the beautiful captive, who never existed at all, he finds some one else who is just as good. As a story of continuous adventure "The Lost Goddess" is thoroughly worth reading.

Lee and His Cause, by John R. Deering, D. D. Published by the Neale Publishing Company, New York and Washington; $1.50.

It is in no sense a reproach to the author to say that his book is a special plea. He says himself that it will not please everybody, because "it was made to vindicate but one side." His only question is, "Does it do so?" And of that the reader must judge for himself according to his predilections and his logic, and in the light of history. But he will at least recognize in the author a splendid loyalty to his cause and an enthusiastic sincerity that is an adornment to his writing.

People and Problems, by Fabian Franklin. Published by Henry Holt & Co., New York.

The author was at one time professor of mathematics in the Johns Hopkins University. He was editor of the Baltimore News from 1895 to 1908, and he brought to his editorial work not only a profound sense of public responsibility, but a mind trained to the higher processes of reasoning and unerring in its search for essentials.

His present volume is chiefly composed of editorials contributed to the Baltimore News during his editorial term of some fourteen years. They are about sixty in number and in subject they range over well nigh every department of human activity throughout the civilized world. Disagreement there must necessarily be on current political affairs and many of these editorials will not commend themselves to party feeling. That, however, is not the point, and that is that these editorials approach the ideal of such writings as closely as anything that we have seen. For directness, for universal and accurate knowledge, for polish of diction, logical force, and ethical feeling they represent the best type of a journalism that is not now much in evidence, but that must be revived if journalism is to become once more a reputable power in human affairs.

Julie's Diary, a Personal Record. Published by John W. Luce & Co., Boston.

This book is described as an "authorized translation," but as the original is not mentioned nor the name of the author we may assume a ruse de guerre. It purports to be the diary of a young girl of Denmark who falls in love with an actor and is seduced and then deserted by him. The language used is clear, and while it is passionate it is in no way erotic.

The Pafraets Book Company, Troy, New York, has published a volume of poems and translations by Frederic Rowland Marvin.

Just a little on CHEESE is delicious. It adds zest to Welsh Rarebits, Macaroni with Cheese, Cheese Toast, Rice with Cheese and all Chafing Dish Cooking.

LEA & PERRINS SAUCE

THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

More dishes can be perfectly seasoned with Lea & Perrins Sauce than with any other relish. For Seventy Years it has given satisfaction throughout the world.

LEA & PERRINS SIGNATURE ON WRAPPER AND LABEL

John Duncan's Sons, Agents, New York

Vacation Questions Quickly Settled

Call or write to Dept. Ad. 948 Flood Building for literature and beautifully illustrated booklets on California Resorts and Outing Places.

ROWING—BATHING—FISHING—CAMPING—EXCELLENT HOTELS
SOUTHERN PACIFIC TICKET OFFICES
884 Market St., 14 Powell St., Ferry Depot

LITERARY NOTES.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

Among the novels announced for the fall by the Macmillan Company is a story entitled "Helianthus," on which Ouida worked for years and which was completed just before her death.

Stanley Weyman, whose "The House of the Wolf" was published eighteen years ago, says his new novel, "The Wild Geese," is to be his last. He is quoted:

I have told all the tales I have to tell. I should not care to go on writing till the critics began to hint that I was repeating myself, and the public was beginning to feel that it had had about enough of me. I consider I have been fortunate; critics, publishers, the public have all treated me well, and I am not going to presume upon it. I am fifty-three; I have had a long run, and would far sooner quit the stage now, whilst I am still playing to a full house, than go on and tire the audience and ring the curtain down at last on half-empty benches.

In spite of this resolution, which is not a good one, it may be predicted with confidence that the author will not lapse into idleness or even forego creative work.

The late Mrs. Moulton's three volumes of poetry, "Swallow Flights," "In the Garden of Dreams," and "At the Wind's Will," will this winter be gathered in a single-volume edition. Each one has sold well, and the three combined will probably be in demand as a holiday gift.

According to German statistics, 750,000,000 of what would be known in this country as dime novels for youthful readers were bought last year in Germany at a cost of $12,500,000, and the Durer Union of Berlin demands that governmental action be taken to prevent their sale. Dime novels may have had effect on some boys, but most men read dime novels when they were boys, and in many cases they induced a love for reading which finally brought them to good literature.

Zola's "Paris" and Tolstoy's "Resurrection" have been suppressed in Japan because trouble among soldiers in several barracks has been traced to those novels, if the statement of S. K. Friedman, a newspaper man lately returned from the Orient, is to be accepted.

"The Sisters of Napoleon" is the subject of a book soon to be issued in London. It is by a French writer, M. Joseph Turquan, and it has been translated by W. R. H. Trowbridge. The sisters of Napoleon appear to have had a greater influence on the march of events during his reign than is generally supposed, and it was undoubtedly this influence that did more to damage him in the esteem of the French people than his interminable wars.

New Publications.

A good story for boys is "The Forest Play-fellow," by E. K. Sanders, author of "Angelic of Port Royal." It is published by E. P. Dutton & Co., New York. Price, $1.25.

A successful story of Wall Street and finance with mitigating circumstances in the way of love sentiment is "The Magnet," by Alfred O. Crozier, published by the Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York; $1.50.

The Doxey Book Shop Company, Baltimore, has published in dainty volume form the address on "True Manhood" delivered by Cardinal Gibbons to the graduating class of Worcester University in 1907, with alterations and additions by his eminence.

"The Green Carnation," by R. S. Hichens, is a story of London society and of some degenerate young men in whom a sort of supernatural cleverness takes the place of intelligence and virtue. Published by Mitchell Kennerly, New York. Price, $1.

Lucy Fitch Perkins, the author of "The Goose Girl," needs no introduction. Another winsome book from her pen has now been published by A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago. It is entitled "A Book of Joys" and is a story of a New England summer, full of the most enjoyable and humorous characterization.

The Neale Publishing Company, New York and Washington, have published a new and charming little work by Anna Virginia Russell, who is known, or ought to be known, by every child in America. It is entitled "The Story Told by the Pins," and while it has a moral it is not an aggressive one. Price, $1.

The thoughts and the doings of the New England deep-sea fishermen have seldom been better portrayed than by George S. Wasson in his "Home from Sea," published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston. "Killick Cove," by Mr. Wasson, is well known. Now we have another series of stories equally good, evidently based upon intimate knowledge and with a contagious affection for a class of men as fine as any ever produced by America. Price, $1.50.

Thanks to Thomas Carlyle we know something of the Abbey of Bury St. Edmunds and of how Brother Samson was once elected as abbot. In his novel "A Bottle of Smoke" Corke Don-Carlos tells us the story again and also of how a poor monk loved a lady and served her and what came of it all. Novels such as this, wholesomely corrective as they are of an unbalanced modernity, are not as numerous as they should be. This one, at least, can be read with profit as being historically faithful, and told with tenderness and sincerity. Published by R. F. Fenno & Co., New York; $1.50.

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.

David Warfield at the New Alcazar Theatre next Monday evening in "The Music Master" will be the figure of first importance in the dramatic field. It is eight years since Warfield was here in "The Auctioneer," and the actor has grown tall and broad in achievement since those days. Even then his ability as a character comedian was acknowledged, but it is doubtful if many foresaw the scope of his powers. Under David Belasco's inspiring tutelage and criticism he has proved the possession of greater gifts and his right to a place in the first rank, for the true comedian is the greatest of actors. Mr. Warfield has won the keys to the heart of his public, and he has won them fairly.

"The Music Master" is a domestic drama that in less capable hands might easily be appraised below its real worth. Supporting Mr. Warfield during his engagement at the New Alcazar will be seen the company that surrounded him in this production in New York. David Belasco knows the value of adequate and harmonious accessories, and in addition to the strong and practical cast will give the play a perfect setting. It will undoubtedly be received here, as it has been in Manhattan and in Boston, with enthusiastic commendation, and this beyond and outside of the natural admiration and friendship for the star in his old home.

Concluding a prosperous run of two weeks next Sunday night at the Princess Theatre, "The Toymaker" will be followed Monday afternoon, at a special Lahor Day matinee, by a production of "The Wizard of the Nile." In this musical eccentricity Ferris Hartman will again have a rôle of notable fun-making possibilities, and his past success in the part might be referred to if it were necessary to introduce him. As Kibosh, the Persian magician, he was once most warmly welcomed at the old Tivoli Opera House after an absence which both comedian and audience rejoiced to find at an end, and on that occasion demonstrated his just claim to continued favor. Miss Sybil Page will make her first appearance at the Princess in this production, and will be seen as Cleopatra. Others who will be well placed in the piece are Arthur Cunningham as Cheops, Zoe Barnett as Abydos, Arthur Cunningham as Simoona, Wallace Brownlow, Walter Catlett, Walter de Leon, Fred Kavanaugh, Maybelle Baker, Grisella Kingsland, and Myrtle Dingwall are also named in the cast.

At the Van Ness Theatre the third and last week of "The Man of the Hour" will open at the holiday matinee on Labor Day. The play has attained more than ordinary success during its present season, and for reasons easily understood. It is a picture of actual conditions, in true colors, and presented with the appeal of artistic effort. Something more than well-modeled fitness for the parts characterizes the actors in the cast, headed by Cyril Scott. They have identified themselves with the masterful figures in this tangle of modern politics, and each creation is one that may be remembered with pleasure. Last, but not least, is the seldom appreciated yet perfectly apparent finish of the stage management in all the details of the presentation. To Mrs. Phoebe Davies Grismer is due the credit for this exemplification of knowledge and method, as she came from the East to give personal attention to the work. Second visits to the play—third in many instances—are now the rule with playgoers.

The Orpheum bill for next week contains some of the best acts in vaudeville. The Trapnell Family of acrobats are something out of the ordinary. The troupe consists of three women, a man, and a youth. All their evolutions are performed with great agility and grace. Amelia Summerville, who will make her first appearance at the Orpheum, is a musical comedy favorite, and her vaudeville debut is an event of more than ordinary interest. She will present a musical monologue, entitled "Mrs. Get-Rich-Quick's Supper Party," in which she introduces impersonations of Harry Lauder, May Irwin, Eva Tanguay, Donald Brian, and other stage celebrities, and sings several new songs. The three Moshers, expert cyclists, will be a feature. Two of the Moshers are notable riders and the third is a diverting comedian. Fred Warren and Al Blanchard, minstrel and musical comedy stars, will contribute to the enjoyment. Next week will be the last of the Grassys, the Wilson Brothers, and Carter and Bluford. Edna Phillips, who has scored a great hit in the bright little skit, "Lost—A Kiss in Central Park," will also close her engagement.

A new and handsome playhouse, named the Valencia Theatre, will be opened Saturday evening of next week, September 12. The building is situated on Valencia Street near Fourteenth and is a fine fire-proof structure, decorated with taste, and fitted with careful attention to the comforts of the people who appear on the stage as well as the audience.

Dramas of high class will be presented, and a stock company of more than ordinary merit has been engaged. "The Great Ruby" by Cecil Raleigh, a strong play, originally produced at Drury Lane Theatre in London and brought to this country by Augustin Daly, will be the opening attraction at the new theatre, and well directed efforts are joined to make the presentation worthy of the occasion. Robert Warwick, who has been prominent in the support of several stars, will head the new company, with Miss Willette Kershaw, a young and attractive actress. Sedley Brown will be the stage director.

5th Edition (Aug. 15)—Exhausted on publication.

6th Edition (Aug. 19)—Not quite equal to orders in hand.

The 7th Edition, to be published next week, will, we hope, enable us to fill all orders received to date of

Robert Herrick's new novel of marriage

TOGETHER

THE SUM AND SUBSTANCE OF THE WHOLE MATTER IS that this novel of marriage. "Together," is a book of the extremest interest to all novel readers, and particularly so to those who are married. Montaigne once said that it has been alleged from the beginning of the world that those in the institution of marriage wish to get out, and those who are out of it wish to get in. If this is true, the interest of this novel can be imagined. For the critics declare that here for the first time the peculiarly American aspects of marriage are treated with something of the frankness and breadth of Zola and Tolstoy; that Mr. Herrick writes with the brilliancy and fearlessness of a Balzac; and that the keenness of his analysis is worthy of Ibsen.

"Scarce a page but is tense and strong."—Record-Herald.

"A masterpiece of keen vision and vivid depiction."—Mail.

"An absorbing story . . . likely to make a sensation."—New York Evening Post.

"A book of the first magnitude, that handles a momentous theme boldly, wisely, sympathetically, and with insight."—The Forum.

TOGETHER

A Novel of Marriage

Price, $1.50

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY, Publishers

Your eyes are faithful servants—give them the care and attention they require.

Our business is to tell you how.

HIRSCH & KAISER

218 Post St.

Opticians

JUST A BOOK STORE

Robertson's

1539 Van Ness Ave.

NEAR PINE

"Next to the White House"

THE LATEST STYLES IN

Choice Woolens

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

108-110 Sutter St.

French Bank Bldg.

Bonestell, Richardson & Co.

PAPER

The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us.

CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE

118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna, San Francisco.

THE CITIZENS' ALLIANCE, 920 Merchants Exchange, calls the attention of the public to their Free Labor Bureau, located at No. 10 City Hall Ave., San Francisco, and No. 804 Broadway, Oakland. All classes of male help furnished absolutely free.

"The Citizens' Magazine" for September is now ready. Subscription $1.00 per year. Orders solicited.

EDUCATIONAL

IRVING INSTITUTE Boarding and Day School for Girls
2126 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

Music, languages, art, elocution. Kindergarten, primary, grammar, high school, and advanced grades. Accredited by the universities. Twenty-ninth year. Non-sectarian. Pupils admitted at any time. New term opens Monday, August 3.

MISS ELLA M. PINKHAM, Principal.

CALIFORNIA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

Irving Institute Building

Full corps of teachers in every department. Send for catalogue.

HERMANN GENSS, President.

THE HAMLIN SCHOOL

A Boarding and Day School for Girls

Miss Hamlin announces the reopening of the school August 10. It is accredited by the California Universities, and by Eastern colleges. Advanced courses of study are offered to High School graduates and to those who have left school, with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to a school diploma.

Classes in Instrumental and Vocal Music and in Drawing and Painting are formed and facilities are given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basket Ball, etc. For particulars address

MISS HAMLIN,

2230 Pacific Ave., San Francisco.

Oakland Conservatory of Music

1170 Madison Street, Oakland, Cal.

The largest, oldest established, and most thoroughly equipped school of genuine musical instruction on the Pacific Coast.

Conducted on the lines of the most noted European and Eastern schools.

Full prospectus on application.

Director, ADOLF GREGORY.

SAN MATEO, CALIFORNIA

Miss Friend's Boarding and Day School for Girls

— WILL OPEN ON —

Monday, September 14

— AT —

105 TILTON AVENUE

Telephone 171

PENNSYLVANIA, Ogontz School P. O.

OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES

Twenty minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. The late Mr. Jay Cooke's fine property. Opens August 24. Illustrated catalogue.

MISS SYLVIA J. EASTMAN, MISS ABBY A. SUTHERLAND, Principals.

CASTILLEJA SCHOOL

Palo Alto, California

Home and day school for girls. University preparatory. Outdoor physical training a special feature. Opens August 24. Illustrated catalogue.

MISS MARY I. LOCKEY, A. B., Principal.

"BROTHER OFFICERS" AGAIN.

By Josephine Hart Phelps.

"Brother Officers" was a charming play when first we saw it, played in first-class style by a Henry Miller company. It is still sweet, and wholesome, and optimistic, and charming, but it is strange how early a fading of their bright new coloring will steal over these pleasant little society dramas, when the predominant motive is neither as deep as a well nor as wide as a church door. The motive in "Brother Officers" is the ineradicability of the lines of caste. But this is the age of the Golden Calf, and the Calf is in the habit of calmly stepping over lines of caste, even in England, home of social conservatism.

Therefore, since John Hinds, plebeian by birth but gentleman at heart, was accepted in the most exclusive circles of the First Lancers' families, and since he was pruned and polished to all the outward demeanor and deportment of true gentlemanhood, and, further, since his dramatic creator made him so much finer, nobler, and worthier than the men whose blood, breeding, and lineage he envied, it seems a little unreasonable that he should be regarded as so thoroughly out of the pale when it came to the question of a matrimonial alliance.

But hold! John Hinds, officer in a crack regiment, was not rich. He only had enough money to float him comfortably in his bachelor estate. The caste line is only crossed for purposes of matrimony when the Golden Calf is around, and that animal never makes the transit for a less dowry or sentiment than one hundred thousand pounds at least. So perhaps we need not quarrel with the author for putting into the mouth of Lord Hunstan— who, by the way, was going to marry Trade—"You can't run a cart horse beside a blooded racer," and, "If Lady Roydon married him, in time he would get on her nerves." In a situation such as is developed in this play, in which the plebeian and the aristocrat are placed in unconscious rivalry, and of which the deduction is that blood will tell, it is important to make careful choice of the actor who plays the part of the successful wooer. He should show, or seem to show, the look, the air of race.

White Whittlesey did very well in eliminating or subduing his romantic good looks, in that first act which shows Lieutenant Hinds awkward, restrained, and a breaker of unwritten laws of good manners, among the lily-handed aristocrats he was to consort with. A suit of tan is a wonderful annihilator of romantic good looks, and a brown business suit, invidiously contrasting its owner with the wearers of uniforms, would make an Apollo look like a barnyard fowl.

In the second act Lieutenant Hinds comes out dressed with perfect appropriateness. His gaucheries have departed. He is liked, even loved, by the little set which makes him one of them. He has become as easy and genial as Lancer Pleydell, his comrade, sponsor, and hero, bids him to be.

So there is no earthly reason why he shouldn't marry Lady Roydon if Lady Roydon wants him. Luckily for her—from the point of view of the patrician—she wants Lancer Pleydell, whose lineage is pure, but whose ideas of right and wrong concerning financial expenditure are characterized by that confusion so often to be noticed in the minds of handsome, impecunious sons of English gentlemen of fiction.

On the whole, the only conclusion we can come to is that the author, like John Hinds, is a "bit of a snob." They are both very likable, warm-hearted, hero-worshipping, patrician-idolizing snobs, but snobs they are, if they are going to make out that Lancer Pleydell is the man for Lady Honor Roydon.

A weak point in the New Alcazar presentation is the assignment of Howard Hickman to the character of Lancer Pleydell. Mr. Hickman plays a mild villain, such as the lieutenant in "Taps," very neatly, but as a romantic hero he is way off. And besides, there was White Whittlesey, an expert in that sort of thing, to cast him even more completely in the shade.

The company gave a very pleasing rendition of the play, although it strikes me that Bessie Barriscale is placed too soon in the post of leading lady. She has not yet acquired the technique of emotional expression. A frown does duty for sorrow, distress, or mere vexation. The voice swings on and on in a cadenced monotone. In spite of her having so pleased the public in "The Rose of the Rancho," Miss Barriscale impresses me as lacking in a sense of humor. She is rather heavy in style, and after her probationary period is over will probably shine more in heavy leading rôles than as the more frivolous and mirthful ingénue.

Some years ago "The Toy Maker" stirred up considerable of a furor here in San Francisco. So much so that everybody conceived it his duty to go, and, generally speaking, went. There are some people who never enter a theatre unless the whole world is talking so persistently about some special attraction that self-respect drives them to see it so that they may be in the running. They are the kind of people that always, when on a European tour, faithfully do every mouldy old-age church and ruin that lies in their itinerary.

I have always identified "The Toymaker" as the operetta that waked up excellent people of that type, hauled them out of their retreats, and sent them off to the theatre to see Annie Myers as Elsa, the wonderful mechanical doll.

People seem to remember Annie Myers in the rôle, as they remember Collamarini as Carmen. She must have done well indeed, for hers was the doll type of face, and with her small size, sprightly tendency, and natural fund of humor, she had a rôle made for her.

Zoe Barnett's is not at all the doll type of face, her features being too marked and irregular. But as the mechanical doll going through its paces, like the loose cannon in Victor Hugo's "Ninety-Three," with sudden wild tangents, unexpected onslaughts, and abrupt and unforeseen halts, the piquant little actress was sufficiently amusing in herself to drive away all reminiscient comparisons.

Nor was Walter De Leon's Frederick at all amiss as a bit of humorous acting. The youth's boyish air, and his freedom from stock comedy tricks lent greater freshness and zest to the highly amusing scene of Frederick's struggles with his twenty-thousand-dollar doll.

With Arthur Cunningham's melodious below, reinforced by a vigorous male chorus, to soothe their savage souls, and with a chorus of shapely girls worthy of old Tivoli days further to appeal to their love of things tuneful and symmetrical, the audience finds itself in a state of great good humor at the Princess Theatre performances.

Ferris Hartman is the same old favorite; likable, never provocative of wild merriment, but gently titillating one's sense of fun, the comedian plays the rôle of Guggenheimer, the toy-maker, in good style, really giving a touch of character to the part.

The finale of the first act, which is as far as I saw, is a thing to rejoice a child's heart, with all the fascinating automatons going through their tricks in a manner loved by the nursery; but I noticed that the grown-up youngsters in the audience took very kindly to the thing, and cast eyes of special favor upon the life-size and exquisitely shaped dolls for whose symmetrical perfection Herr Guggenheimer so audaciously claimed the sole credit.

A pretty oortoon at the Orpheum proved a counter attraction at this point, but I don't believe I really saw anything else worth while. For the oortoon really was worth while. She is only a cake-walking, skirt-dancing, coon-song-singing "artist," but her type is interesting. The beautiful oortoon has figured in many an old-fashioned novel of the South, but we in California, until vaudeville scoured the earth for varieties of types, knew nothing of her. Carter, as she is billed, of the team of Carter and Bluford, is an exceedingly handsome tropical-looking girl, with a sinuous form which is prettily and generously displayed. The pair do "character songs with appropriate scenic settings," and when the pretty oortoon doffed her Africanly gorgeous costume, sleeked her ebon hair in Indian style, and assumed the dress of an Indian maiden, she was one of the prettiest and most Pocahontas-like of figures.

If one cares for acrobatics the four Baltus are well worth while. Their baby-blue figures go through really thrilling evolutions, their strong man being able to seize, with the most casual air, one of the group by the crown of his head, and calmly hold him upside down in mid-air. The entire quartette are wonderfully strong, and marvelous balancers, and I doubt not, judging from their work, are doomed for the comparatively short life of the athlete who scorns all risks and never hesitates to tax every bone, muscle, fibre, and nerve of his body to make a good show on the stage.

Both the acts of the Howard boys and the De Haven sextette entertain the house, but they are stereotypes.

It seems to me that vaudeville has comparatively few sensations to offer. Once in a while some personage from the stage suddenly breaks out into vaudeville, and occasionally somebody takes to moulding clay interestingly, or making artificial diamonds, but as a general thing the personalities, plays, and people of vaudeville are humdrum and unoriginal.

Following "The Man of the Hour" at the Van Ness Theatre will come the musical play, "The Girl Question," which has had a long run in Chicago. Paul Nicholson heads the cast and he is supported by a large company, which includes a much vaunted chorus of stage beauties.

Too Much Salomé.

Why so much about Salomé nowadays? Why any Salomé at all? Who was Salomé, that the American public in the year 1908, when there are really several important things to think about, should develop a sudden, general, and intrusive interest in her personality, as interpreted by a hundred symbolic dancers? Is any answer possible to these questions, asks the New York Mail.

It is unnecessary, of course, to explain anything in the way of popular caprice, especially when the popular caprice is assisted by advertising. Yet there is a reason for everything—even for Salomé. As an appeal to the public fancy, she is making good abundantly. How did she get her hold?

Chiefly because she is so completely a work of the imagination. She is supposed to be derived from a Bible story, and yet she is not once mentioned by name in the Bible—the Salomé of the Scriptures being quite another and very different person. Like Faust, and the Wandering Jew, and Peter Rugg in New England, she has been built up piece by piece, as the centuries went past, by the restless human mind; and now that she is quite fully embodied at last, the human mind is as delighted with her as is a fond father with a pretty, wayward child of his own begetting. Nothing in life, nothing else in literature or in art, is so interesting as are these piecemeal products of the imagination of a thousand years.

She is bad and that is a great element in her attraction. The alluring, decadent music of Strauss helped her to get her grip, and another powerful factor has been the interest in that new and strange thing, the interpretative and philosophical dancing of Isadora Duncan, which every Salomé dancer tries to imitate, in some small way at least.

So with one thing and another, here is Salomé, full-fledged—or unfledged, as the case may be. Is she baleful? Doubtless. There is in the world a kind of wholesome, natural badness, and there is an unwholesome, morbid badness. Salomé is in the unwholesome class. Yet we doubt if it renders her any the less baleful to insist that she shall wear shoes and stockings and at least two petticoats, as the acting mayor of Asbury Park has decreed. Sometimes, when one considers what an engine of destruction the petticoat has been in the moral history of the world, one almost regards it as an assistant in the propagation of wickedness, not as a deterrent.

And Salomé must dance her course. The surest way of getting rid of her is to make people sick of her. There are some signs that they are beginning to get so.

Cecilia Rhoda, the popular young prima donna of the old Tivoli Opera House and later of the Princess Theatre company, is now a principal in support of Richard Carle in "Mary's Little Lamb." The company concludes a successful engagement at the New York Theatre this week and then will go on tour.

Louis James will make his first appearance in the Mansfield production of "Peer Gynt" in New Orleans about the middle of September, and comes later to San Francisco.

ORPHEUM ELLIS STREET NEAR FILLMORE Absolutely Class A Theatre Building

Week beginning this Sunday-afternoon

Matinee Every Day

ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE

TRAPNELL FAMILY, including Europe's leading lady gymnasts; AMELIA SUMMERVILLE; THREE MOSHERS; WARREN and BLANCHARD; THE GRASSYS; WILSON BROTHERS; CARTER and BLUFORD; New Orpheum Motion Pictures; Last Week of EDNA PHILLIPS and Company, in "Lost—A Kiss in Central Park."

Evening prices, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box seats, $1. Matinee prices (except Sundays and holidays), 10c, 25c, 50c. Phone, WEST 6000.

PRINCESS THEATRE Ellis Street near Fillmore

S. LOVERICH, Manager Phone West 663

Class "A" Theatre

Toy Matinee Today (Saturday). Every child presented with a toy.

Last Two Nights Ferris Hartman in "The Toy Maker." Last matinee tomorrow.

Beginning Labor Day Matinee, Monday Next

FERRIS HARTMAN

In the Merry Musical Eccentricity

THE WIZARD OF THE NILE

First Appearance of SYBIL PAGE Holiday Matinee Admission Day

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Tel. West 6036

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers

Corner Sutter and Steiner Sts. Absolute Class "A" bldg.

Commencing Monday evening, Sept. 7, David Belasco presents DAVID WARFIELD and his New York company in

THE MUSIC MASTER

A comedy-drama by Charles Klein. Four seasons in New York

Prices: Evenings and matinees, 50c to $2.

Matinee Saturdays. Special Admission Day Matinee Wednesday

To be followed by "A Grand Army Man," a new American play by David Belasco, Pauline Phelps and Marion Short.

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove St.

Phone Market 500

Nightly, including Sunday

Beginning with MONDAY, SEPT. 7

THIRD AND LAST WEEK

Holiday Matinee Monday (Labor Day). Special Prices.

THE MAN OF THE HOUR

A story of present-day conditions by George Broadhurst

Matinee Saturday

Sept. 14—The musical hit, "The Girl Question"

VALENCIA THEATRE Valencia St. Bet. 13th and 14th

San Francisco's newest and most beautiful playhouse

OPENS SATURDAY EVENING, SEPT. 12

Box office opens next Monday, Sept. 7, at 9 a. m.

Valencia Stock Company

—18—

THE GREAT RUBY

Cecil Raleigh's famous London and New York success, in six acts and sixteen scenes

Telephone, Market 17. Prices, 15c to 75c

The MYSTERY OF THE YELLOW ROOM

The Remarkable French Detective Story

N. Y. Evening Post says:

"For sheer originality and ingenuity we reckon this the best detective story published for some time . . . as original as it is fascinating. Not often does a detective story end with so total a surprise, which, nevertheless, when known seems logical and natural."

BRENTANO'S, Publishers, Fifth Ave. and 27th St., N. Y.

AND AT ALL BOOK STORES AND BOOK STALLS

VANITY FAIR.

France seems to be a good deal of a real democracy, and for her President she has a real democrat. M. Fallières's daughter has just been married, and when we remember the paroxysms of flunkeyism indulged in by certain people in this country upon a corresponding occasion we can the more admire the simplicity and restraint of the celebration in Paris. When the worthy President was asked by the press to supply a description of his daughter's tresseau, he flatly refused and practically told the officious scribes to mind their own business. "Anna," he said, "was neither horn nor hred a princess, nor has she become one. She is the daughter of a simple French citizen who for a short time is discharging a great public function and who, when his course of office is run, will be prepared to retire into private life and attend to his vintages." As a result we have only the most meagre information as to Mlle. Fallières's dress, and when we turn to the French newspapers for particulars of an event that must, we would suppose, have thrilled the nation to its core, we find nothing more than a few lines recording the fact in the usual stereotyped way. No one in France has called Mlle. Fallières the "Princess Anna." No swarms of reporters have dogged her footsteps to find out what she had for dinner, to intercept scraps of her private conversation, or to persuade her maids to betray domestic privacies. It may almost be said that since M. Fallières was called to the presidency neither his wife nor his daughter have ever been referred to in the public press in connection with a news item, and that surely is one of the signs of a real democracy.

The young Queen of Spain is attracting a good deal of attention nowadays. Her second child was born prematurely and it is hardly a secret that the misadventure was due to the horrors of a hull-fight that was attended by the young queen a few days before. The spectacle was unusually gory. Several hulls were killed and horses and matadors suffered severely. The king and queen left the arena hastily before the conclusion of this elevating exhibition. It was noticed that the queen was greatly distressed and that her eyes were full of tears. A few days later Prince Jaime was ushered into the world some little time ahead of the schedule, but apparently without disastrous results.

Of course there has been an outcry of commiseration. Special correspondents have vied with one another in denunciation of hull-fight barbarities and in their demand that an English princess be spared a spectacle that has become a tradition among the Spanish people and that is in fact a national ceremonial. The young queen's rebellion, not only against the barbarities of the hull-fight, but against the lesser hardships of an irritating court routine, is cited with approval, and when it becomes evident that the people of Spain are muttering with discontent towards a queen who is Spanish only in name, who is not only foreign, but aggressively foreign, we are told that the Spanish are a decadent people and that the queen is in the right of it.

But are there not two sides to this question? Even when we have made all possible concessions in favor of a woman, even when we have recognized to the full her difficult and distasteful lot, is there not a word to be said for the Spaniards themselves? The queen was not placed in her present position by the dictates of an arbitrary fate. She placed herself in that position, and she did it with the fullest possible knowledge of all that it would imply. She voluntarily determined to surrender her freedom as an English princess and to take on the yoke of a Spanish queen. By so doing she knew well that she would assume obligations, religious, social, and ceremonial, toward her adopted people. She knew that she would have to change her religion, if, indeed, we do not profane the word by its use in such a sense. Now we are told that she loses no opportunity to show that the change is superficial only, and if this is so the Spanish people have a right to be annoyed. She knew that her children would be Spaniards and would inherit Spanish rank and Spanish fortune, but she is said to do her best to bring up her first horn as English and to saturate him with English ideas. Is that fair to the Spanish people? She knew the etiquette of a Spanish court and she accepted it. She knew that the royal etiquette had all the binding force of a religious faith and it is a part of her royal duty to abide by it and not to affront it. She knew that the hull-fight was a Spanish institution and that she would be expected to countenance it. Diplomacy, if not a sense of duty, should counsel her not to imperil her husband's throne by open defiance of a sacred convention.

There is nothing to be said for the hull-fight, not even by the swarms of Americans who cross the Mexican frontier at Tia Juana to see it, not even by the English men and English women who hunt foxes and chase tame deer to an agonizing death. Queen Victoria does right to abhor it, although there is no record that she disapproves of those other and equally cruel sports that are more familiar to her. But she could discontinue the hull-fights far more effectively than by ostentatious withdrawal in obedience to dictates, honorable in themselves, but wholly incomprehensible to the Spanish people. The old Queen Victoria would have found a way to do it without an affront to popular prejudice, but the young queen has done the reverse. She has placed the people on the defensive with regard to the hull-fights and she has deeply wounded their prejudices. She has failed to recognize that she could not at the same time be an English princess and a Spanish queen. She has been willing to accept the prestige of her new position and to shut her eyes to its obligations.

The marriage itself was, of course, an outrage. Princess Victoria may have fallen in love with King Alfonso. There is no accounting for taste in such matters, but we have our doubts. She wanted, presumably, to be Queen of Spain, and she must have known all that was implied thereby. There is no position in life that does not bear its price label more or less legibly attached. In this instance it was clear enough, and the price should be paid with a good heart and without petulance. There are fifty ways in which the queen can inculcate moral lessons in her people without antagonizing them, but no good fruit can ever come from a soil of resentment.

The wisdom of Solomon may well be coveted by the modern judge, who must solve problems from which the average mortal would shrink in dismay. Disputes between men are often perplexing enough, but here at least the judge is upon more or less familiar ground, which is certainly not the case where both parties are women and the bone of contention is an article of dress. La Belle Otero has just figured in a Parisian court for her refusal to pay for certain costumes supplied to her. She will, of course, have the sympathy of her sex, although it must be paradoxically admitted that from a jury of her own sex she would receive an adverse verdict in the space of about five seconds. It has been said—although the hase charge is unworthy of repetition—that no woman ever pays a dressmaker's bill without rage and resentment and that no woman ever sees another woman compelled to pay, at the point of the hayonet, so to speak, without exultation.

La Belle Otero refused to pay for her costumes on the ground that the charge was exorbitant, and this was the knotty point for judicial decision. There were five costumes in dispute. The first was an Odalesque tea gown, $150; then came a Mandarin tea gown, $240; the third was a vaporous cloak, $200; the fourth was a Simplette costume, $110, and the last was an Ophelia costume, $240.

Not unnaturally, the judge wanted further information. He had not been to school for a long time and his memory of the respective composition of these varying costumes was a trifle dull. He did not even know the difference between an Odalesque and a Mandarin, and one wonders how such a man thus plunged in the cimmerian darkness of ignorance ever attained to the dignity of the bench. Surely some rudimentary knowledge and intelligence should be demanded from our judges.

The dressmaker herself was thus called to the witness stand. She explained not only the composition of these costumes and the nature of the material needed for their erection, but she expatiated on the artistic skill needed for their creation, the imaginative flights that they represent, and the idealistic power which can not exactly be weighed or measured, but that ought certainly to be paid for. She was so eloquent and so convincing that the judge made a peremptory order for immediate payment. The record does not say if La Belle Otero was present in court. If she was not present she made a tactical mistake, as she might have melted the hard heart of this judge and persuaded him in her favor. Perhaps she was afraid that she might be asked to attire herself in these costumes one after the other in order that the court might have an opportunity to decide whether the resulting effect in enhancement of the lady's charms was really equivalent to the price demanded. But La Belle Otero ought to pay and look pleasant. That she will pay after the peremptory order of the court to that effect, there can be "no manner of doubt whatever." But that she will look pleasant is highly improbable.

Professor Metchnikoff of the Pasteur Institute is represented as saying so many startling things that we sometimes wonder if he may not be the victim of the sensational reporter except for the fact that the sensational reporter does not flourish in France. The professor's latest discovery is said to be a means for preventing the hair from turning gray. Let us hasten to add that Professor Metchnikoff has nothing but commiseration for those whose hair is already gray, but others, who are willing to be warned in time, can indefinitely postpone the evil day by curling or waving the hair or in some way submitting it to the action of a hot iron. It is the heat that is the essential factor.

Professor Metchnikoff, in spite of his advanced age, has a fine head of hair which shows no trace of grayness. He has always used a curling iron, not from any feeling of vanity, but because he maintains that the pigmentary cells of the hair are liable to be attacked by microbes which are easily destroyed by the action of a hot iron. Thus the cells are preserved and with them the primitive color of the hair.

Another Frenchman, by the way, has just returned to his own country and has published his opinion of American women. André Brouillet is a portrait painter and is therefore an expert. He says that American women are the most beautiful in the world:

From a mixture of German and English blood has resulted a new type superior to the two original types and combining the best qualities of each. The women generally are large and robust, but with all the grace which comes from constant exercise.

They have the reputation of being coquettish. It is true that they are tremendously fond of dress, but they are sagacious in the matter of artifice. They never dye the hair, for example. I saw many women who, though still young, were quite gray. I can imagine nothing more delightful than the contrast this made with the youthfulness of their faces and figures.

Deviating for the moment into the sphere of censure, M. Brouillet says that in many cases the art collections of the country are purchased merely for display, and not from a love of art. But this is not exactly a news item.

W. & J. SLOANE

FURNITURE

Exclusive lines for Parlor, Library, Living Room, Dining-Room, Bedroom, Hall, Summer Homes and Offices.

CARPETS

Special weaves and colorings in the greatest variety. Domestic Wiltons and Whole Piece Axminsters. We show all grades.

RUGS

Both Oriental and Domestic. This is by far the largest and choicest stock of Rugs on the Coast. Our Orientals are selected as individual pieces.

Upholstery—Interior Decoration

Our long experience and unequalled facilities enable us to admirably execute special orders.

Van Ness and Sutter

MURPHY, GRANT & CO.

134 to 146 Bush Street

Jobbers and Manufacturers

Dry Goods

White Goods

Furnishing Goods

Notions, etc.

We sell to Storekeepers only.

Ask your dealer for our Goods

Overalls
Jumpers
Blouses
Engineers' Coats
Khaki Coats and Pants
Work Shirts
Negligee Shirts
Golf Shirts
Collars
Cuffs Blanket Lined Clothing
Waterproof
Sweaters
Sweater Coats
Cardigan Jackets
Blankets

Silkolines
Quilts
Comforters
Lace Curtains
Prints
Percales
Apron Gingham
Fancy Gingham
Flannellettes
Broad Cloths
Table Cloths
Napkins
Table Damask
Crash
Face Cloths
Towels

Turkish Towels
Linen
Persian Lawns
Organdies
Men's Handkerchiefs
Women's Handkerchiefs
Piques
Men's Hosiery
Men's Underwear
Women's Hosiery
Women's Underwear
Brown Shirtings
Bleached Shirtings
Wide Bleached Sheetings
Wide Brown Sheetings

Ducks
House Linings
Colored Denims
Laces
Embroideries
Silk Gloves
Colored Burlap
Silk Gloves
Tickings
Sheets
Pillow Cases
Sateens
Notions
Ribbons
Kid Gloves

The Irresistible Current

By Mrs. I. Lowenberg

Price $1.50

Is saturated with an object that is expressed with every evidence of conviction and with no small literary skill. That differences in creed should be an enemy to love, that Jew and Gentile should be separated by religion, is unfortunately no new thing, but Mrs. Lowenberg helps us to appreciate its folly, its pathos, and its needless tragedy.

The opening scene is in New York, where we are introduced to two Jewish families from Germany. The next scene is twenty years later in Missouri. The second generation is growing up in the new Western world, but not without the religious disabilities and creed prejudices that should belong exclusively to a past day in human history. The story is a long one and the plot is intricate, but it is vividly colored by splashes of genuine passion and of real tragedy. The "irresistible current" is the tendency toward a better philosophy of life, an agreement upon the essentials of human conduct that shall take the place of creeds, and a reliance upon a human love and brotherhood that is, after all, the highest expression of the best religion.—The Argonaut.

FOR SALE AT ALL BOOKSTORES

Published by Broadway Publishing Company, New York

A GRAND FINALE TO A CHAPTER OF COURSES

LIQUEUR Pères Chartreux

-GREEN AND YELLOW-

This famous cordial, now made at Tarragona, Spain, for centuries distilled by the Carthusian Monks (Pères Chartreux) at the Monastery of La Grande Chartreuse, France, and known throughout the world as Chartreuse. The above cut represents the bottle and label employed in the putting up of the article since the Monks' expulsion from France, and it is now known as Liqueur Pères Chartreux (the Monks, however, still retain the right to use the old bottle and label as well), distilled by the same order of Monks, who have securely guarded the secret of its manufacture for hundreds of years, taking it with them at the time they left the Monastery of La Grande Chartreuse, and who, therefore, alone possess a knowledge of the elements of this delicious nectar. No Liqueur associated with the name of the Carthusian Monks (Pères Chartreux) and made since their expulsion from France is genuine except that made by them at Tarragona, Spain.

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafés. Bätjer & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N. Y. Sole Agents for United States.

36TH YEAR PHONE DOUGLAS 200

SCHMIDT LITHOGRAPH CO. LABELS CARTONS ETC.

SECOND AND BRYANT STS. SAN FRANCISCO, LOS ANGELES, PORTLAND, SEATTLE.

Mild, Rich and Satisfying

Sanchez y Haya Clear Havana Cigars

actory No. 1 Tampa, Fla.

Tillmann & Bendel Pacific Slope Distributors

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

The chauffeur was taking his load of tourists for a ride through the residence portion of the metropolis and pointing out to them the state mansions of the nabobs. "I've often heard," said the portly dowager with the diamonds, "of these Oliver Wendel homes. Would you mind showing us one of 'em?"

Distressed at his son's refusal to enter the ministry and his preference for dealing in horses, a worthy farmer in the Midlands was telling his sorrow to a neighbor. "Oh," said the latter, "don't take it too much to heart. I believe Tom will lead more men to repentance as a horse dealer than ever he would as a minister."

A local church appointed a committee to get subscriptions for a chime of bells. They had seen nearly all the congregation. When they went to see a rather poor member they told him they would like a small amount toward it. He promised to give as much as he could, but he said, "Don't you think it would be cheaper to put a whistle in?"

The teacher received the following note explaining the absence of one of her pupils the day before: "Plese excoose Henny for absents yesterday. Him an' me got a chance of a ride to a funeral in a carriage, an' I let him stay to home as he had never rode in a carriage an' never went to a funeral, nor had many other pleasures. So plesse excooze."

In a jury trial in New York recently the attorney for the defendant started in to read to the jury from a certain volume of the supreme court reports. He was interrupted by the court, who said: "Colonel _____, it is not admissible, you know, to read the law to the jury." "Yes, I understand, your honor; I am only reading to the jury a decision of the supreme court."

In New Haven the committee of a graduating class once went to a local jeweler with a commission for a large badge. They had in view a design representing a youthful graduate surveying the universe. "About how large would you like the figure?" the jeweler asked. "Well," said the spokesman, "we thought the graduate ought to cover about three-quarters of the badge and the universe the rest."

The following colloquy took place between Councilor Sealingwax and a witness who "would talk back": "You say, sir, the prisoner is a thief?" "Yes, sir. 'Cause why, she has confessed she was." "And you also swear she worked for you after this confession?" "Yes, sir." "Then we are to understand that you employ dishonest people to work for you, even after their rascalities are known?" "Of course. How else would I get assistance from a lawyer?"

After being conducted through an old church by the verger, a visitor was so pleased with the official's courtesy and information that he insisted on giving him half a crown. The man shook his head sadly. "Thank you, sir," he said, "but it's quite against the rules." "I'm sorry for that," said the visitor, about to return the half-crown to his pocket. "But," added the verger, "if I were to find a coin lying on the floor it would not be against the rules for me to pick it up!"

Little Dick, the village "had hoy," was wading through a shallow swamp catching frogs with a small landing-net. He had just caught a fine specimen and transferred it to his bucket, when a young lady who was out for a walk happened along. "Little boy," she said, "don't you know it's very cruel to catch those poor little froggies?" Dick straightened up and looked at her. She wore a gorgeous "creation" on her head, and something in its trimmings attracted his attention. "I want 'em to wear on my hat," he said.

A young lady whose heauty is equal to her bluntness in conversation was visiting a house where other guests were assembled, among them the eldest son of a rich manufacturer. The talk turned on matrimonial squabbles. Said the eligible "parti," "I hold that the correct thing for the husband is to begin as he intends to go on. Say that the question was one of smoking. Almost immediately I would show my intentions by lighting a cigar and settling the question forever." "And I would knock the thing out of your mouth!" cried the imperious beauty. "Do you know," rejoined the young man, "I don't think you would be there!"

A tourist in Brittany came to Quimper, and he found in the place beside the river an old woman selling trinkets. "Wbat is the price of this?" he asked, taking up an antique ring of silver and sapphires. "Is it for your wife or your sweetheart?" said the old woman. "For my sweetheart." "Fifty francs." "Fifty francs! Nonsense!" And the tourist turned angrily away. "Come back," said the old woman. "Take it for ten. You've been lying to me, though; you have no sweetheart. Had the ring been for her, you'd have bought it at once without regard to its price." "I will take it," said the tourist, smiling. "Here are the ten francs." So the old woman wrapped the ring up. "But you haven't a wife, either," she grumbled. "If it had been for her, you'd have heaten me down to five francs. Oh, you men!"

Dawson was suddenly seized with a terrific toothache, and he repaired at once to a dentist. He did not succumb any too readily to the gas administered, but in the course of time he was sleeping peacefully, and the offending molar was removed. "How much, doctor?" asked the patient after the ordeal was over. "Ten dollars," said the dentist, business being dull. "Ten dollars?" roared Dawson. "Yes, sir," said the dentist. "It was an unusually hard job getting that tooth out, and you required twice the ordinary amount of gas." "Humph!" ejaculated Dawson, as he paid up. "Here's your money, but I tell you right now the next time I take gas from you you've got to put a meter on me."

THE MERRY MUSE.

Time and Money.

The flowers bloom; The flowers die; Vacation days Go swiftly by. They heard him murmur With a sigh "The days are shorter— So am I!" —Washington Star.

Disappointing.

Now homeward plods his weary way The tired vacationist, To find that through his weeks of play He hasn't once been missed. —Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Just a Thought.

For kissing there are reasons just, And many, too, I'm thinking; But frequently much kissing's done To learn if he's been drinking. —Detroit Free Press.

Jane of Boston.

Jane is a heterogeneous maid, Incomprehensible, too, I'm afraid. Postulatory in dress— Nor lives the man who could quite understand Her odd insinuatoriness and All her salubrioness.

Yet she's no acatalectical girl, No unaccountably statuesque pearl, No plus-phenomenal freak; She is the purely compatible bud Of that confabulatory blood Which must evolve the unique.

All her marked cognoscibility proves She breathes deep exigencies when she moves, Uncolliquant as can be: Hyperasthetical? Yes, but I'll state Incrystallizableness makes that trait Supererogatory.

Sum her up then as an alogy lass, Rather microphyllous, hap, in the mass, Ultra-mundane when she balks: Still she's as good as there is in the land— I'd like her well could I but understand Half what she says when she talks. —Richmond Times-Dispatch.

In the Distant Future.

When people quit joking of mother-in-law, I am going to pay what I owe. When Pittsburg stops talking of people named Thaw, I am going to pay what I owe. When my friends make their calls without asking for loans, I am going to pay what I owe. When the river tugs whisper in soft undertones, When dentists pull molars by long-distance 'phones, I am going to pay what I owe.

When high license lessens the number of jags, I am going to pay what I owe. When men's parties no longer are mentioned as "stags," I am going to pay what I owe. When the street urchin ceases to carry a gun, When gamesters and grafters are all on the run, When the dome of the postoffice shines in the sun, I am going to pay what I owe.

When straps in the street cars are things of the past, I am going to pay what I owe. When chauffeurs quit driving their autos so fast, I am going to pay what I owe. When the trusts have concluded they don't want the earth, When heiresses mate in the land of their birth, When people get paid all they think they are worth, I am going to pay what I owe. —Chicago News.

For sheer simplicity of phrase and conception few have surpassed that delightful old lady who, with a shrewd twinkle in her eye, inquired whether "soda-water" should be written as two separate words, or if there should be a syphon between them?"

A. Hirschman

For fine jewelry and silverware. 1641-1643 Van Ness Avenue.

J. F. TWIST, DENTIST, 1476 Eddy Street, near Fillmore. Phone West 304.

BANKING

The Anglo-Californian Bank, Ltd.

Established 1873 Head Office—London Main Office—Pine and Sansome Streets, San Francisco Branches—1020 Van Ness Avenue, Mission and Sixteenth Streets, San Francisco Managers: I. Steinbart, P. N. Lillenthal Capital paid in.....$1,500,000 Surplus and undivided profits..... 1,449,721 A General Banking Business Conducted. Accounts of Corporations, Firms, and Individually Solicited. Correspondence invited. Safe Deposit Vaults at Van Ness Avenue and Mission Branches.

French Savings Bank

108 Sutter Street, near Montgomery Paid-up Capital.....$ 600,000 Total Assets..... 4,270,800 Strictly a Savings Bank. Open Saturday Evening from 7 to 8:30 OFFICERS—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, 1st Vice-President; Leon Boqueraz, 2d Vice-President; A. Bousquet, Secretary; P. A. Bergerot, Attorney. DIRECTORS—N. C. Bahin, J. A. Bergerot, Charles Carpy, Arthur Legallet, G. Beleney, H. de St. Seine, J. M. Dupas, Leon Boqueraz, J. E. Artigues, J. S. Godeau, John Ginty. SAFE DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT The French-American Bank is located in the same building.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., San Francisco Guaranteed Capital.....$ 1,200,000.00 Capital actually paid up in cash. 1,000,000.00 Reserve and Contingent Funds..... 1,453,983.62 Deposits June 30, 1908..... 34,474,554.23 Total Assets..... 37,055,263.31 OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Godfellow & Eells, General Attorneys. BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte, Ign. Steinbart, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse, and W. S. Goodfellow. MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22d Streets. For receipt and payment of deposits only.

LONDON PARIS NATIONAL BANK

N. W. cor. Sutter and Sansome CAPITAL.....$ 2,500,000 SURPLUS..... 620,000 Sig Greenbaum, President H. Fleishacker, Vice-President and Mgr. R. Altschul, Cashier

The National Bank ROLL OF HONOR

The title "Roll of Honor National Bank" is a distinction of which any financial institution in the United States may be proud. As is well known a "Roll of Honor Bank" is one possessing surplus and profits in excess of capital. A place on the Roll of Honor can not be bought, it must be earned. This bank has for a long time been known as a "Roll of Honor Bank" among banks and bankers.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF Berkeley UNITED STATES DEPOSITORY

A. W. NAYLOR, Pres. F. M. WILSON, Vice-Pres. F. L. NAYLOR, Cashier. F. C. MORTIMER Assn. Cashier.

THE BERKELEY NATIONAL BANK United States Depository Berkeley, Cal.

HOUSEHOLD AND COMMERCIAL ACCOUNTS INVITED DIRECTORS—George P. Baxter, Pres.; J. W. Richards, Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Bangs, Vice-Pres.; Louis Titus, Dr. Thomas Addison, A. G. Freeman, Duncan McDuffie, Perry T. Tompkins, F. L. Lipman, W. J. Hotchkiss, and Whitney Palache. P. H. ATKINSON, Cashier.

Connecticut Fire Insurance Company OF HARTFORD

Established 1850 OF HARTFORD Total Assets.....$5,817,423 Surplus to Policy-Holders..... 2,118,394 BENJAMIN J. SMITH Manager Pacific Department 518 CALIFORNIA STREET San Francisco

WESTERN ASSURANCE COMPANY TORONTO

U. S. Assets.....$2,493,154 Surplus..... 483,989 PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT 1004 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE SAN FRANCISCO J. J. KENNY, Manager W. L. W. MILLER, Assistant Manager

MARKET ST. 1st Con. 5% BAY COUNTIES POWER CO. 1st 5% WESTERN PACIFIC 1st 5%

Due 1924. Coupons March and September Due 1930. Coupons March and September Due 1933. Coupons March and September

SUTRO & CO. BROKERS

412 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F. We have a Direct Wire to N. Y.

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

Weddings galore are promised for the fall and early winter and the dates for several of these interesting events have already been announced and others are soon to be told to society. The wanderers are beginning to return to town and soon the avenues will be gay every afternoon with shoppers or callers.

The engagement is announced of Miss Lillian Shoobert, daughter of Mrs. John E. Shoobert of Sausalito, to Mr. Thomas C. Van Ness, Jr. No date is announced for the wedding.

The engagement is announced of Miss Nannie Van Wyck, daughter of Mrs. Sidney M. Van Wyck, to the Rev. Arthur B. Chinn of Kentucky. Their wedding will be an event of this month and will be celebrated very quietly at the Van Wyck home on Webster Street.

The engagement is announced of Miss Ellen Page, granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Nightingale, to Dr. James F. Pressley. No date is announced for the wedding.

It is announced that the wedding of Mrs. Howard Walter, daughter of Rear-Admiral Stephen B. Luce, U. S. N., and Mrs. Luce, to Colonel Montgomery M. Macomb, U. S. A., will take place at Newport on October 7.

Mr. and Mrs. William Mintzer will entertain at a dance at their home on Pacific Avenue on Tuesday evening next in honor of their son and daughter, Master Lucio and Miss Mauricia.

Miss Martha Calhoun and Miss Margaret Calhoun were the hostesses at an informal dance on Tuesday evening of last week at their home on Broadway.

Mrs. W. H. Howard entertained recently at a luncheon at Del Monte, her guests being Colonel Marion P. Maus and Mrs. Maus, Mr. and Mrs. Edward W. Howard, Dr. and Mrs. Kiersted, Mrs. M. C. Low, Miss Flora Low, Miss Frances Howard, and Mr. Kenneth Howard.

Mrs. Ferdinand Stephenson entertained at a luncheon and bridge party on Thursday of last week at her home in Ross Valley.

Mr. Charles Rollo Peters was the host at an open-air dinner on Friday evening of last week at his Monterey home in honor of his niece, Miss Elizabeth Woods.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick McNear entertained at a dinner on Tuesday of last week at their home in Menlo Park. Their guests were Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Pringle, Mr. and Mrs. George Almer Newhall, and Mr. and Mrs. Norris Davis.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Gallois entertained at a dinner and theatre party on Monday evening of last week. Their guests were Miss Mary Keeney, Miss Florence Hopkins, Miss Jeanne Gallois, Mr. Roger Boqueraz, Mr. John Gallois, and Mr. Horace Hill, Jr.

Mrs. F. W. Van Sicklen, Miss Hilda Van Sicklen, and Miss Dorothy Van Sicklen entertained at a dinner on Saturday evening last at the Claremont Country Club in honor of Miss Harriet Stone and Miss Marian Stone of Hayward.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a résumé of movements to and from this city and Coast and of the whereabouts of absent Californians:

Senator Francis G. Newlands and Mrs. Newlands have returned to Reno, after a brief stay at the Fairmont, and were accompanied by Mrs. Jessie Newlands Eldridge.

Mrs. James Potter Langhorne has returned from Santa Barbara, where she was the guest of Mrs. Margaretta Hayne for three weeks.

Miss Leslie Page, who is spending the summer as the guest of the John Hays Hammonds at Gloucester, Massachusetts, will not return until some time in October.

Mr. William Fisher has returned from a visit to the Bourn country place at St. Helena.

Mrs. James A. Robinson has returned from a visit to Tallac.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Martin have gone to Shasta for a month.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Sadoc Tobin will close their Burlingame home about October 1 and will spend the winter at the Fairmont.

Miss Helen Baker and Miss Dolly Cushing were in town recently as the guests of Miss Claire Nichols.

Mr. and Mrs. Orville C. Pratt (formerly Miss Emily Wilson) have been motoring through France and will return home about October 1.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Athearn Folger and Miss Edith Chesbrough have spent golf week at Del Monte.

Mrs. Edward Barron, Miss Marguerite Barron, and Miss Evelyn Barron will leave shortly for England to remain a year.

Mr. Mountford Wilson has returned from a stay at Lake Tahoe.

Mr. Joseph D. Redding left recently for a trip to New York.

Mrs. Camilo Martin and Miss Mary Hyde will go abroad during the fall to remain some months.

spending the summer in Sonoma County. Mrs. Pringle will leave shortly for a visit to Charleston, South Carolina.

Mr. and Mrs. Norris Davis have gone to Tahoe to remain several weeks.

Miss Maude O'Connor has been at Aetna Springs as the guest of Mrs. I. L. Requa.

Mr. and Mrs. Norman McLaren and Miss Constance McLaren have returned to their Sacramento-Street home, after spending the summer at their cottage at Lagunitas.

Mr. Raymond Armsby has returned to town, after a visit to Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Kohl at Tahoe.

Mrs. Rosenstock and Mrs. J. R. K. Nuttall went recently to Santa Barbara to visit Mr. and Mrs. Evans Pillsbury.

Mrs. I. Lawrence Poole has returned from a visit to Mr. and Mrs. Harry Babcock at Tahoe and is in San Rafael for the month of September.

Mr. and Mrs. Edgar N. Wilson and Miss Maud Wilson, who have been at Belvedere during the summer, will occupy an apartment on Pacific Avenue near Scott Street during the winter.

Mr. Thomas Sherwin has gone to Boston to remain permanently.

Mr. and Mrs. George T. Marye are at Del Monte for a stay.

Mr. Everett W. Bee has returned from a visit to Del Monte.

Mr. and Mrs. Kirkham Wright and Miss Marian Wright have returned from a trip to Portland.

Mrs. Theresa Casserly and Miss Margaret Casserly went recently to the Peninsula Hotel at San Mateo for a stay of several weeks.

Miss Natalie Hunt has visited Blithedale recently as the guest of Miss Elena Brewer.

Mrs. Blair and Miss Jennie Blair, who are at present visiting in Napa County, will spend the winter at the Hotel Granada.

Mr. and Mrs. Sherwood Hopkins have returned to their home in Menlo Park, after a visit to Boca.

At the Hotels.

Among the visitors at the St. Francis Hotel are Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Manwaring, Colonel and Mrs. Maus, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Trowbridge of Pasadena, and Mr. William Banning of Los Angeles.

Among those recently registering at the Hotel Jefferson are Mr. C. S. Wright, Honolulu; Mr. E. H. Gerber, Sacramento; Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Howard, Los Angeles; Mrs. F. S. Rice and Miss Rice, Bakersfield; Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Elliott, Stockton; Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Montgomery, Los Angeles; Mrs. S. E. Halsted and Mrs. A. H. Lackland, Honolulu; Mr. S. R. Parker, Honolulu; Miss G. K. Brown and Miss Florence Hill, Honolulu; Mr. and Mrs. Edward G. Keen, Honolulu.

Among recent registrations at the Fairmont Hotel are Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gilson, Mr. and Mrs. James Hetherington, Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Buck, Mr. and Mrs. P. B. Steward of New York, Colonel and Mrs. Charlesworth and family, of Salisbury, England; Mr. and Mrs. James Cator, of Alexandria, Virginia; Mr. and Mrs. R. V. Norris and family, of Wilkesbarre, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Carter, of Honolulu; Mr. and Mrs. C. B. McCormick, of Los Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. Charles C. Coleman, and Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Leadbetter and Miss Georgiana Leadbetter, of Portland.

At Out-of-Town Hotels.

Among the arrivals from San Francisco at Byron Hot Springs are the following: Mr. J. W. Hamm, Mr. and Mrs. H. K. Gregory, Miss Mabel Gregory, Mr. S. H. Woodruff.

Registrations from San Francisco at Hotel del Coronado include the following: Mr. James D. Phelan, Mr. and Mrs. Sydney L. Plant, Dr. F. F. Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. T. H. B. Varney, Miss Maud E. Varney, Miss Emily J. Reed, Miss Morsc, Mr. Charles Farquhar-hausen.

A few of the recent arrivals from San Francisco at the Tavern of Tamalpais are Mrs. Louis Straus, Miss Emma Straus, Miss Jessie Hannay, Miss Clara J. Nelson, Mrs. C. Dreyfuss, Mrs. N. Sutherland, Miss M. Kingston, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Brown, Mrs. Rose Oppenheimer, Mrs. S. B. Blake, Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Doe, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Lindsey, Miss L. Brady, Miss Selma Asher, Mr. Carl Jolls, Mrs. G. W. Jolls, Mr. and Mrs. A. Petzold, Miss Adel Petzold.

Recent arrivals from San Francisco at Hotel Del Monte include Mr. and Mrs. P. D. Bernard, Miss Rhoda A. Bernard, Mrs. J. J. McCue, Miss Josephine Lindley, Miss Alice N. Wilkins, Miss A. H. Perkins, Mr. A. J. Val- kel, Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Hicks, Mr. and Mrs. George T. Marye, Jr., Miss Lily O'Connor, Mrs. William Blackwell, Miss Blackwell, Dr. K. R. Strues, Miss Chesebrough, Mr. and Mrs. W. Ralston, Mr. Robert A. Roos, Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Roos, Mrs. George H. Howard, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Gedge, Miss Gedge, Mrs. P. N. Remillard, Miss Lillian Remillard, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Oyster, Miss Elizabeth Oyster, Mr. Alfred J. Oyster, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Stewart, Mrs. William Smith O'Brien, Miss Gertrude O'Brien, Mr. and Mrs. M. G. Rogers, Mrs. Edward Barron, Miss Evelyn Barron, Miss Jennie Bickford, Mrs. D. P. Creswell, Mr. and Mrs. Nat Messer, Miss Marjorie Shepard, Miss Elsa Draper, Mr. and Mrs. F. V. De Sola, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Burnett, Mr. and Mrs. John M. Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Cotton, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Cuyler Lee, Mr. and Mrs. Willis Polk, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Crocker, Mrs. Eugene J. Bates, Miss Edith C. Mau, Mrs. George Hill Stoddard, and Miss Georgie Hammon.

CURRENT VERSE,

Poor Mary.

Who made of me a human?
I never gave consent.
They fashioned me a woman
And thrust me in a tent.
They trained of me a mincing ape
Conforming to a crowd.
They never gave my soul a shape
Or wrapped it in a shroud!

It fares as best it chooses
What way its mood may seek.
A reptile in the oozes
A God upon a peak.
If cities chance to lure it
It purrs amid the roar
Then, laughing to abjure it
Rides on the storm once more.

Yet, though a living spirit,
It is not all divine:
For if a comrade near it
But smile the countersign
It hurtles back unwary
To hurn the flesh away.
Then wise ones say, "Poor Mary,
She's not so well today!"

—Mary McNeil Fenollosa, in The Craftsman.

Unknown.

I am not fickle! If I knew you, Love,
I would be true!
My eyes would send, straight as the star above,
Their glance to you.
My hands would clasp you—never let you go,
My lips but whisper, Love, I love you so!
My heart would hold you in its close embrace
And every blush upon your perfect face
Would feed my passion. So would I be true
If I but knew you, Love—if I but knew!

Beauty's Path.

All ugliness wears on its brow the brand
Of Time and Dissolution; from of old,
Its doubtful journey through a shifting sand,
The life in its opidian breast is cold.
But beauty's path is one forever bright'ning
In glory, to each far horizon's rim;
Warm in the rose and golden in the lightning,
Love's altar flame, the upward way to Him,—
Beauty, transcending all that bans and bars,
Moves as the light moves on, eternal as the stars!

Too well acquaint with passions that benumb,
Earth is with them no more in kind accord.
'Tis only by ascending one may come
Where waits for her the new, the unexplored.
She longs—ah, how she longs!—to break asunder
Her ancient chains, to lave in morning dew,
To stand a little space 'mid realms of wonder,
To feel her nearness to the good and true.
She longs for beauty—vernal though the years—
To touch the dried-up spring and fount of happy tears!

—Florence Earle Coates, in The Outlook.

The Spur.

Because of your strong faith, I kept the track
Whose sharp-set stones my strength had well-nigh spent.
I could not meet your eyes if I turned back:
So on I went.
Because you would not yield belief in me,
The threatening crags that rose, my way to bar,
I conquered inch by crumbling inch—to see
The goal afar.

And though I struggle toward it through hard years,
Or flinch, or falter blindly, yet within,
"You can!" unwavering my spirit hears:
And I shall win.
—Aldis Dunbar, in The Century Magazine.

Jules Simoneau, French restaurant keeper and friend of bohemians, and who was good to Robert Louis Stevenson, died August 23 at Monterey as the result of a fall. Among Simoneau's effects are an autographed set of Stevenson's works and many letters from the novelist. Simoneau was eighty-nine years of age.

Camille D'Arville has been engaged by the Messrs. Shubert as a co-star with Jefferson De Angelis and Emma Carus in "The Gay White Way," which will open a new theatre in Harlem September 28.

Tony Pastor, the veteran vaudeville manager, died at his home near New York August 26.

TO LET—In Mill Valley, comfortably furnished house of 9 rooms and 2 baths, electric light, large grounds, stable, horses and carriage. Convenient location. Telephone Kearny 4544.

Pears'

Don't simply "get a cake of soap." Get good soap. Ask for Pears' and you have pure soap. Then bathing will mean more than mere cleanliness; it will be luxury at trifling cost.

Sales increasing since 1789.

FAIRMONT HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

A comfortable Hotel, whose superb location, magnificent appointments, unequalled cuisine are only exceeded by the perfect service extended to each guest.

Palace Hotel Company

SEPTEMBER FESTIVAL OF SPORTS

at Matchless

DEL MONTE

TENNIS TOURNAMENT

Sept. 7th to Sept. 19th

Write for reservations. H. R. WARNER, Manager

The Peninsula

SAN MATEO, CAL.

A home in the country practically within San Francisco's gates. Only thirty minutes away. Frequent trolley and train service. See S. P. time-tables. Located in the heart of one of the most beautiful gardens in the State. No winds, no fogs. All the accommodations that culture and refinement demand. Progressive in every detail. Well-equipped club house, and commodious garage.

Winter Rates in force September 1, 1908

JAS. H. DOOLITTLE, Manager.

ROUND THE WORLD

TOURS DE LUXE

Leaving in August, September and October. Membership limited to twelve. Programmes for the asking.

THOS. COOK & SON

32 Powell Street, San Francisco

LUNCHEON and afternoon tea—that's all. But we devote ourselves to making these especially attractive to those who seek comfort and careful service.

YE TEA CUP INNE

1427 Bush Street, below Van Ness (upstairs)

Hotel St. Francis

The spirit of good service and the facilities that produce it.

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF JAMES WOODS

Why Not Make Your Home At The Hotel Jefferson

Turk and Gough Streets Facing Jefferson Square

A superior class hotel with every modern convenience and comfort. Operated on the American and European plans. Special rates to permanent guests. Special attention paid to the table—we invite comparisons. Management Noah W. Gray, formerly manager Alexander Young Hotel, Honolulu, and Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

You Can Live At The Hotel Jefferson Better And For Less Than At Home

Hotel del Coronado

Motto: "BEST OF EVERYTHING" Most Delightful Climate on Earth American Plan. Summer rates $3.50 per day each and upward, or $21.00 per week each and upward "Good Music" and "Fine Automobile Road, Los Angeles-Riverside to Coronado." Golf, Tennis, Polo, and other outdoor sports every day in the year. New 700-foot ocean pier, for fishing. Boating and Bathing are the very best. Send for booklet to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado Beach, Cal. Or see H. F. MORCROSS, Agent, 334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles. Tel. A 6789; Main 3917. 22d Street and Broadway

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort" Building, concrete, steel and marble. Located, most fashionable shopping district. 210 rooms, 135 baths. Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests. Most refined hostelry in Seattle. Absolutely fireproof. English Grill. Rates, $1.00 up

Sherman, Clay & Co., occupying this entire building at Kearny and Sutter Streets, S. F., are headquarters for every kind of musical instrument from Steinway pianos down. You have no need to go elsewhere for any article pertaining to the music business.

Sherman, Clay & Co.

STEINWAY AND OTHER PIANOS—VICTOR TALKING MACHINES

Kearny and Sutter, S. F. 1635 Van Ness Ave. San Francisco Broadway at 13th Oakland

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy officers who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Brigadier-General Philip Reade, U. S. A., has sailed from Nagasaki on the transport Thomas for this city. He will be retired in October.

Colonel Marion P. Maus, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., commander of the Department of California, is detailed as a member of the Army Retiring Board to meet at San Francisco, vice Brigadier-General Frederick Funston, U. S. A., relieved.

Colonel John L. Clem, U. S. A., left on Thursday for San Antonio, Texas, where he will assume his duties as chief quartermaster of the Department of Texas.

Lieutenant-Colonel David L. Brainard, deputy commissary general, U. S. A., is detailed as chief commissary of the camp of instruction to be held at Atascadero ranch, vice Captain Henry T. Ferguson, commissary, U. S. A., relieved and detailed as assistant to the chief commissary of that camp.

Major H. L. Roosevelt, assistant quartermaster, U. S. M. C., upon being relieved by Captain H. L. Matthews, U. S. M. C., is ordered detached from the First Provisional Regiment, U. S. Marines, at Havana, Cuba, to proceed to Washington, D. C., and report to the major-general, commandant.

Major William Stephenson, Medical Corps, U. S. A., has sailed from Manila on the transport Thomas for this port, en route to Washington, D. C.

Lieutenant-Commander J. J. Raby, U. S. N., was commissioned lieutenant-commander from July 1, 1908.

Captain Edward M. Shinkle, Ordnance Department, U. S. A., has been ordered to proceed to each of the posts in the Artillery District of Puget Sound for the purpose of making the semi-annual inspection of installed armament.

Captain Chauncey B. Humphrey, Twenty-First Infantry, U. S. A., has been granted two months' leave on a surgeon's certificate of disability.

Lieutenant E. E. Spafford, U. S. N., is detached from the Olympia and ordered to the Supply, sailing from San Francisco about September 10.

Lieutenant Claude E. Brigham, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., who has been ordered to Fort Monroe, Virginia, for a course of instruction in the Coast Artillery School, has been relieved from assignment to the One Hundred and Sixty-Eighth Company, Coast Artillery Corps, and placed on the unassigned list.

Lieutenant Kurtz Eppley, Tenth Infantry, U. S. A., has been ordered to report to Lieutenant-Colonel William A. Nichols, Thirteenth Infantry, U. S. A., president of the examining board at Fort Leavenworth, for examination for promotion.

Lieutenant George F. Royelle, Jr., Twenty-Second Infantry, U. S. A., competitor in the army rifle competition at Fort Sheridan, has been granted leave for twenty days, to take effect upon the completion of his duties in connection with the competition, provided this does not interfere with this officer leaving Seattle for this station about September 15.

Lieutenant Robert K. Spiller, Twenty-Sixth Infantry, U. S. A., has been ordered to report to Colonel Marion P. Maus, U. S. A., president of an army retiring board at San Francisco, for examination by the board.

Ensign O. C. F. Dodge, U. S. N., is detached from the Whipple and ordered to continue treatment at the Naval Hospital, Mare Island.

Ensign C. H. Shaw, U. S. N., is detached from the Fox and ordered to the Whipple.

Midshipman E. R. Leonard, U. S. N., is detached from the California and ordered to the Fox.

Pay Inspector E. D. Ryan, U. S. N., is ordered to duty in charge of the navy pay office at Seattle, Washington, on September 30.

Assistant Paymaster G. A. Helmicks, U. S. N., is ordered to the Pacific Station and sailed from this port today (Saturday).

Surgeon M. F. Gates, U. S. N., is detached from the Charleston and ordered to the Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

The first volume of the collected plays—"Théâtre"—of Tristan Bernard has appeared in Paris. This writer is as nearly a humorist as a Frenchman can be, a good story-teller, and without too much literature. He has been manager of an aluminum factory, and was once ready for final admission to the grave Paris bar, having all his university degrees and having served the required "stage," but he broke away in 1894 and took charge of the Parisian Velodrome Buffalo (reminiscent of Colonel Cody), and since then has been writing books and plays endlessly. He is more like Dickens than Mark Twain—and uses very good French.

Florence Roberts is to be seen in a new play this season called "Louise." It is by Genevieve Haines.

Marie Cahill has a new musical comedy entitled "The Boys and Betty."

Grand Opera at Covent Garden.

Artistically and financially the opera season just closed has been the most successful London has had for many years. There were eighty-one performances of twenty-four works. Verdi heads the list with twenty-three performances and Wagner and Puccini have each fifteen to their credit, leaving twenty-eight performances by eight other composers. The opera most often played was "Traviata," seven times. Next came "Lucia," with six performances, and "Il Barbiere," also with six. Five productions of "Otello," "Rigoletto," "Mme. Butterfly," and "La Bohème" were given, and "Aida" came next in the list with four. This makes forty-three performances of eight operas. Though there were no novelties, the revivals of "I Pescatori di Perle," "Otello," and "Gli Ugonotti" might almost be put in that class, so seldom are they sung in England. A study of the list of operas performed shows that the repertoire has been practically fixed by the leading prima donnas, which is only another way of saying that the London public wanted to hear the singers and not the works. The chorus was a great feature of the season. To a New York opera-goer used to a perfectly trained chorus the languid, elderly ladies who held the stage at Covent Garden at stated intervals and with an air of extreme fatigue sang the notes required of them were a great trial in other seasons, but this year an effort was made to drill and train the chorus properly.

If the plans of Martin Beck, head of the great Orpheum vaudeville circuit, materialize, New York will have soon one of the most extraordinary playhouses in existence. The theatre is designed primarily for the development of new material for the vaudeville stage. The public will be barred from the new playhouse, managers and critics will compose the audience, and the productions will be largely those by unknown authors. Amateur actors from local dramatic schools will be given an opportunity once a week to put on plays and sketches. The building, five stories tall, will contain offices for the executive and working staffs of the various booking offices. Plays, sketches, and ideas submitted and deemed meritorious will be given a private presentation with adequate mounting. A mechanical corps will experiment with scenic effects and design and create scenery, properties, and costumes. The plans also include presentation of entire plays as well as of vaudeville acts and sketches.

The story published recently in the New York papers of the theft of diamonds worth $50,000 from the country home of Commodore Frederick G. Bourne at Oakdale, Long Island, is now denied, and it was suspicious at the time because of its palpable resemblance to the plot of a sensational novel entitled "The Circular Staircase," which was published a week or two ago. The details of the alleged secret chamber were conspicuously similar. Faking newspaper correspondents have a way of drawing upon current fiction for inspiration, declares the Springfield Republican. But the giving away of a costly automobile to the first comer by a disgusted owner really happened in Springfield, exactly as in Lloyd Osbourne's yarn, "Baby Bullet." Sometimes real life rivals fiction.

At the Mountain Park Theatre, Springfield, Massachusetts, the stock company presented last week "The First Born," the pathetic play of Chinese life which was first produced at the Alcazar Theatre in San Francisco.

Henry Woodruff has left "Brown of Harvard" and the management of Henry Miller, and will be a co-star with Henrietta Crossman, appearing as Orlando to Miss Crossman's Rosalind in "As You Like It."

DR. ROBERT E. O'CONNELL, DR. GEORGE D. O'CONNELL, DENTISTS, Hastings Building, Post Street and Grant Avenue. Tel. Douglas 2733.

15 KEARNY STREET

PHONE DOUGLAS 2219

Eugene Korn

THE HATTER

AGENCIES

- "MILLER, N. Y.," Silks and Operas
- "JAMESON, LONDON," Derbys
- "JOHN B. STETSON," Philadelphia
- KNAPP De Luxe and Felts

THE OCULARIUM
Henry Kahn & Co.
OPTICIANS
KODAKS & SUPPLIES
SCIENTIFIC INSTRUMENTS
Catalogues Free
644 MARKET ST.
OPP. PALACE HOTEL
BRANCH 1309 VAN NESS AVE.

YOUR HAND
is the only one that can unlock your box in our Safe Deposit Vaults. Your valuables in one of our steel boxes can not be lost by theft or fire. For this protection $4.00 per year and up.
CROCKER SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS
CROCKER BUILDING Junction Post and Market, S. F.

After using this brand you will not bother with any other
Old Gilt Edge Whiskey
Rye or Bourbon

Hotel Colonial

THE SELECT HOTEL OF SAN FRANCISCO
Stockton above Sutter Street
American and European Plans
Special Rates to Permanents
HOWARD T. BLETHEN, Manager
Telephone, Kearny 4754

Hotel Rafael

San Rafael, Cal.
Open year around. Headquarters Automobile League. New and commodious garage. Fifty minutes from San Francisco. Complete change of climate. Tiburon or Sausalito Ferry. All modern conveniences.
F. N. Orpin, Proprietor.

Roy C. Ward Jas. W. Dean
Jas. K. Folk Geo. E. Billings

GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.
ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE EFFECTED
312 California Street. Phone Douglas 2283
San Francisco, Cal.

John F. Forbes

Certified Public Accountant
601 KOHL BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO

Tennent's

Ale and Stout
from Wellpark Brewery
Glasgow, Scotland
Forbes Bros., Agents, 1926 Sutter St.

GOODYEAR "HIPPO" HOSE

The best and strongest Garden Hose. Guaranteed to stand 700 lbs. pressure.
Try it and be convinced.
GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY
R. H. PEASE, President
587, 589, 591 Market St. at Second St.
SAN FRANCISCO

Aetna Springs for September Holidays

SEPT. 5, SATURDAY SEPT. 6, SUNDAY SEPT. 7, HOLIDAY SEPT. 9, HOLIDAY
This is the most delightful season of the year at Aetna, and Aetna is always delightful. Pure air, beautiful surroundings, comfortable appointments, good cooking. Autos will meet trains from Tiburon Friday p. m., September 4, and Saturday a. m. and p. m., September 5. Send for Folder Describing the Grape Cure at Aetna.
AETNA SPRINGS, NAPA COUNTY, CALIFORNIA

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

Teacher—Now, Johnny, what was Washington's farewell address? Johnny—Heaven.—New York Sun.

"Was that you I kissed in the conservatory last night?" "About what time was it?"—Philadelphia Inquirer.

She—Yes, whenever I see a man in a dark street I always run. He—And do you ever catch one of them?—Harper's Weekly.

Mr. Phusser—Cynthia, I have joined a Don't Worry Club. Mrs. Phusser—I am sorry for the club. It will have to change its name.—Boston Traveler.

Louie—Uncle, what's chagrin? Uncle—Well, it's what a stout man feels when he runs and jumps on a car that doesn't start for half an hour.—Chicago Daily News.

She—This dress doesn't become my complexion. I must change it. He—More expense? I can't stand it; you'll ruin me. She—You silly! I don't mean the dress—I mean the complexion.—Chicago Journal.

Sparks—I wonder why it is a woman lets out everything you tell her? Parks—My dear boy, a woman has only two views of a secret—either it is not worth keeping, or it is too good to keep.—Stray Stories.

Mrs. Henpeck (to her husband)—What would you do if I were to die? Henpeck—It would drive me crazy. Mrs. H.—Would you marry again? Henpeck—I don't think I would be as crazy as that.—Pioneer Press.

Tam—Of course the bride looks lovely, as brides always do. Nell—Yes, but the bridegroom doesn't look altogether fit; seems rather run down. Tam—Run down? Oh, yes, caught after a long chase.—Philadelphia Press.

"Have you read the platform of our party?" "Yes," answered Farmer Cornotssel. "What do you think of it?" "It's a good platform. But what I want to know is why politics should be the only business that allows a man to collect in advance on the strength of his good intentions?"—Washington Star.

"What would you do," the bridegroom whispered hoarsely, "if, by some terrible accident, I should be drowned?" In the mild moonlight he saw his young wife pale and shudder.

"Oh, don't, Tom," she cried. "How can you? You know I don't look well in black!"—Chicago Inter Ocean.

"How fast do you usually travel?" "I don't pay much attention to that," answered the motorist. "I get most of my excitement in watching the rapidity with which pedestrians move out of my way."—Washington Star.

"Is your husband up yet?" asked the early morning caller. "I guess he is," replied the stern-looking woman. "I'd like to say a few words to him." "I'd like to say more than a few. He hasn't come home yet."—Philadelphia Press.

The Powder Manufacturer—Fancy old Bill, of all people, going into the gunpowder shed with a lighted candle. I should have thought that would be the last thing he'd do. The Workman—Which, properly speakin', it were, sir.—The Sketch.

"Remember," said the earnest inventor, "it isn't so very many years since the telephone caused laughter." "That's true," answered the man who has trouble with central. "At first it caused laughter; now it causes profanity."—Washington Star.

Hubbie—My dear, if I can not leave the office in time for dinner tonight I will send you a note by a messenger? Wife—You need not go to that expense, George, for I have already found the note in your coat pocket.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Garge—Ef t' missus doan' get better by next Tewsday fortnight I'll sen fer t' doctor. Farmer—Why not before, Garge? Garge—Wull, it'll be fowrty year nex' Tewsday fortnight since we 'ad t' doctor, an' I'd like t' make it even fowrty.—The Tatler.

"The physically unfit should be removed," declared the new thinker of old thoughts. "I'm glad to hear you say so," responded the gentleman chauffeur. "It will make me feel easier in my mind when running over a decrepit pedestrian."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Hub—But if you like the young fellow, Kate, why do you object to our daughter marrying him? Wife—Oh, she'll marry him for all that; but I want to give her a chance to say, when they quarrel, that "Mother didn't want me to marry you, anyway."—Boston Transcript.

An Ideal Home Site

That's what lots in Presidio Terrace (at Washington and First Avenue) are.

It's the only residence park in San Francisco and absolutely the only portion of San Francisco where you can build your home and feel assured that your sun and light won't be taken away from you and you won't have the value of your residence impaired by the construction of unsightly flats or other buildings adjacent to your home.

The restrictions in Presidio Terrace are not onerous. A minimum limit of $7000 is what your home must cost—that's about all.

Bituminized streets, artificial stone sidewalks, telephone and electric wires, gas and water pipes, all constructed, mean a big saving for you in trouble and expense.

None of the lots in Presidio Terrace are less than 45 feet front, by reason of which ample space is provided for light and lawns.

Prices are extremely reasonable and the terms are to suit the purchaser.

We can tell you more about Presidio Terrace if you will call, or, if you prefer, we will send you illustrated folder.

BALDWIN & HOWELL 318-324 Kearny Street

Mr. Publisher:

Does it interest you to know that ALL the mechanical work on THE ARGONAUT is done by us? Fact.

WILLIAMS PRINTING CO., Phone, Douglas 2905. 406 Sutter Street

Byron Hot Springs

The waters cure rheumatism—the environment is perfect—the hotel comfortable and supplied with an unexcelled table. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, ground floor, James Flood Building; Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market St., or address hotel.

Toyo Kisen Kaisha (ORIENTAL S. S. CO.)

S. S. Tenyo Maru.....Friday, Sept. 25, 1908 S. S. Nippon Maru (via Manila)..... 1908Tuesday, Oct. 20, 1908 S. S. Hongkong Maru.....Tuesday, Nov. 17, 1908

Steamers sail from company's piers, Nos. 42-44, near foot of Second Street, 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Higo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.

Round-trip tickets at reduced rates. For freight and passage apply at office, 240 James Flood Building. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

Round Trip Rates

Table with 2 columns: City and Rate. Includes Baltimore ($107.50), Boston ($110.50), Chicago ($72.50), Denver-Colo. Spgs., Pueblo ($55.00), Huston, Texas ($60.00), Kansas City ($60.00), Memphis ($67.50), Minneapolis ($73.50), New Orleans ($67.50), New York ($108.50), Omaha ($60.00), Philadelphia ($108.50), St. Louis ($67.50), St. Paul ($73.50), Washington, D. C. ($107.50)

On sale Sept. 15 and 16 * On sale Sept. 14 and 15 To Denver only Sept. 21 to 27 To Kansas City only on sale Sept. 23-24-25

Back East EXCURSIONS

Phone F. W. PRINCE Kearny 315 673 Market St.

MT. TAMALPAIS AND MUIR WOODS VIA SAUSALITO FERRY FOOT OF MARKET ST. LEGAL HOLIDAYS—SUNDAY TIME

Table with 3 columns: Lv. San Francisco, Lv. Muir Woods, Lv. Tamalpais. Rows for WEEK-DAY, SATURDAY, and TAMALPAIS ONLY.

Does Not Sting the Tongue A New Pipe Mixture OF EXCEPTIONAL MERIT MILD SWEET SMOKE 2 oz. 25c. 4 oz. 50 cts.

M. BLASKOWER, 201 Montgomery St. 1117 Van Ness Ave.

1858—50th Anniversary Sale—1908

UNUSUAL BARGAINS IN EVERY DEPARTMENT

ALTA CALIFORNIA: SAN FRANCISCO THURSDAY, APRIL 7, 1909.

Special Notices.

Notice—The Subscribers to the British Relief

MARRIED.

In this city, April 6th, by Rev. Dr. Scott, Mr. STEPHEN D. MERRILL, of Reginald's Ferry, Calaveras county, to Mrs. MARY P. CASE, formerly of Michigan. In Benicia, March 31st, WM. W. CRAPMAN to LIZZY

27th, P. P. HERRICK, March 18th, THOMAS

BLE.

atical Instrument

SH WATER

1 30

1 50

9.

str.

in 17

Miscellaneous.

Goods Sold to the Trade Only. KENN

D. N. & E. WALTER, IMPORTERS OF

CARPETS;

Floor and Table Oil Cloths, 250 PIECE

DRUGGETS, MATTING, For S

Window Shades and Fixtures AT PRIC

CORNICES, CURTAIN BANDS, EX I

AND Thre

UPHOLSTERERS' GOODS. 6,00

89 SACRAMENTO STREET, Opposite Newhall, Gregory & Co.

A good assortment of Upholsters' and Mattress

NEEDLES constantly on hand. mh22-2p

WESS AND LUBIN'S

This is a facsimile of an advertisement published by us in the Alta California nearly fifty years ago, a copy of which is now on exhibition in our store.

You will notice that we then sold to the trade only.

WE ARE NOW RETAILERS

As Well As Wholesalers

FURNITURE—CARPETS—RUGS—DRAPERIES

D. N. & E. WALTER & CO.

Van Ness and Sacramento

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXIII. No. 1642.

SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 12, 1908.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10 payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breems Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opéra. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at F and Thirteenth Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Denison News Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains.

Published at 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal.
Telephone, Kearny 5895.

THIRTY-SECOND YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: Money in Our Pocket—The Detective and His Pay—Mr. Hearst's Nemesis—Morocco Again—The Minister and Society—The Punishment Fits the Crime—The Fool 'n' the Forest—Choosing the Man—A Diffident Duke	161-164
CAMPAIGN TOPICS	164
A FRIENDLY INVASION: The Exposition and the "Entente Cordiale" Bring Crowds of Frenchmen to England	165
OLD FAVORITES: "Love Not," by Caroline Elizabeth Norton; "Ode to Autumn," by John Keats; "Primeroses," by Robert Herrick	165
INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All over the World	165
AN INTREPID PRESS PERPLEXED: XXX. By Jerome A. Hart	166
A STIRRING STORY OF THE SEA: Randall Parrish Tells of a Stolen Yacht, a Fair Prisoner, and a Recovered Treasure	167
MONSIEUR'S MISADVENTURE. Translated from the French	168
BOOKS AND AUTHORS. By Sidney G. P. Coryn	169
CURRENT VERSE: "The Truth," by Theodosia Garrison; "The Sentinel Scot," by Robert Gilbert Welch; "We Two in Arcady," from London Dispatch; "The Lost Glamour," by Clinton Scollard	170
LITERARY NOTES: Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip—New Publications	170
FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT	170
DRAMA: "One Summer's Day." By Josephine Hart Phelps	171
VANITY FAIR	172
STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise	173
THE MERRY MUSE	173
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy	174-175
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day	176

Money in Our Pocket.

Some interesting deductions may be made from the statement recently issued by the State Bank Commission based on the reports of 506 commercial and savings banks within their jurisdiction. It appears from this statement that the banks have loaned on real estate $189,873,709. Roughly estimated, this is a per capita mortgage of about $94. This money has been used in the development of the State. Little of it has gone out of California, and that modicum has returned in material of substantial value which the assessor will appraise for future taxation. Most of this money is in circulation within our borders.

Loans on stocks and bonds amount to $133,780,536. The bulk of this money has probably gone out of the State, and the interest on the loans is coming to the lepositors in the banks. In addition to these loans the savings banks own stocks and bonds amounting to $63,217,170.49, and the commercial banks own $35,394,417.37 of the same security. The character of these stocks and bonds is not stated, but it is presumed that all of them are standard or the Bank Commissioners would not have passed them as safe resources. It is presumed also that in case of need they can all be readily converted into cash; otherwise they are not a proper offset to the banks' liabilities to their depositors.

The aggregate deposits in the banks of the State amount to $408,624,663.07. Distributed equally among the population of the State, this would give every inhabitant about $204. The deposits in the State savings banks amount to $246,102,659, a per capita deposit of $123. Of this amount $42,267,416, or $27 per capita, is credited to the banks outside of San Francisco. The metropolitan banks, commercial and savings, contain deposits amounting to $200,700,860, or $501 per capita of an estimated population of 400,000. The savings deposits in this city amount to $137,098,974, or $342 per capita. The excess of the savings deposits in the State over the commercial is $85,691,896; and the excess in this city is $73,497,088.

From this showing it is evident that all the money in the State gravitates to San Francisco. The comparatively small per capita of savings deposits outside of San Francisco would also indicate that the banks of the metropolis hold a very large proportion of the money placed at interest by the people of the interior cities, towns, and counties.

Altogether it is an excellent summary of local and State financial conditions. It shows aggregate wealth in excess of the normal, and it indicates personal thrift by the majority of those who earn their livelihood by hand and brain. The records of the commercial deposits are indicative of a healthy business condition; and it is especially gratifying to know that the bulk of the money is circulating in our own channels of industry and trade.

The Detective and His Pay.

Among the anomalies with which the so-called graft prosecution has made us sadly familiar is the part now being played by Detective Burns and the salary that he receives for playing it. For the month of July Mr. Burns received the respectable sum of $625 from the city treasury. His salary for August is not yet audited, but the amount will presumably be the same. For many months now this official has been in receipt of a salary of about $7500 per annum from the public purse and for the performance of services that are at least dubious and that are often mischievous. Is it not about time for the city to arouse itself to a situation that, viewed from the financial aspect alone, is in ill-accord with the need for civic economy?

That such a salary should be paid to a detective is a grotesque piece of extravagance. It would be an impossible piece of extravagance but for the fact that Messrs. Spreckels, Heney, and the others have manœuvred themselves into a position where they can compel San Francisco to pursue their private vengeance for them and to reward their instruments. The prosecution has now reached a point where it is simply a weariness to the flesh. Not one man in ten knows what is being done, or cares. But every one knows that nobody has been punished, that there is no one in jail, and that most of the chief criminals have been formally immunized and can live for the rest of their lives without work, honest or dishonest. Why, then, does Mr. Burns continue to draw a salary so much larger than the income of the vast majority of the citizens who pay it to him? Whatever of importance he has ever discovered is now a matter of court record and a salary of $625 a month for prying into the records of prospective jurors seems excessive.

It is excessive from every point of view. It becomes ludicrous when we compare it with the salaries paid to State and city officials whose administrative services are demanded by constitution and charter and whose duties are constructive and indispensable. The governor of California receives only $6000 a year, and we are expected to believe that the services of a criminal detective are worth $1500 a year more than this. The secretary of state receives only $3000 a year, and we may therefore assume that a detective is worth two and one-half secretaries of state. Turning to San Francisco itself, we find that the mayor is rated far below the detective, for the mayor receives only $6000 a year as against the detective's $7500. The detective is worth nearly two auditors, or two treasurers, or two coroners, for these officials receive $4000 a year each. He is worth more than the district attorney, who gets $5000 a year, and perhaps in this case he really is worth more. But the detective has the advantage of the United States circuit judge, who gets $7000 a year, or $500 a year less than Mr. Burns, while as for the United States district judge with his $6000 a year, he must certainly be "small potatoes" in comparison with Mr. Burns.

With the exception of the governor, there are very few State officials who get more than $3000 a year, but perhaps with good conduct they may all be detectives one day. The controller, the treasurer, the attorney-general, the surveyor-general, the superintendent of public instruction, the adjutant-general, all these useful officials receive $3000 a year for hard work in the public service done in the light of day. Mr. Burns, it seems, is worth any two of them. We can bracket the values of the State controller and State treasurer, or the attorney-general and the superintendent of public instruction, and even throw in a clerk or two, and Mr. Burns will still be ahead. In this new schedule of values the criminal detective, privately employed and publicly paid, is at the top. Ambition can soar no higher in the life of the State.

Of course the whole business is a scandal from beginning to end, but this particular part of it is peculiarly flagrant. It is a monstrous injustice that the rate-payers should be mulcted in such a sum and to pay for work that belongs to the ordinary routine of duty of the sheriff and of the police. There is nothing legitimate for Mr. Burns to do other than the work already provided for by the normal means and the normal officials. And there being no work for Mr. Burns, he ought not to be paid for doing it. He should be allowed to subside with what grace he can into those humbler spheres of life and their rewards from which he ought never to have emerged.

Mr. Hearst's Nemesis.

Optimism is one of the dominant characteristics of Mr. Hearst's campaign on behalf of his candidates, Messrs. Hisgen and Graves. The other day there was an election in Vermont in which the Republicans polled 48,000 votes, the Democrats 26,000, and Mr. Hearst's party 1000. Undaunted by the awful disparity of this vote, Mr. Hearst's newspapers announced in large type that the Independence party of Vermont had immediately taken "third place" among the political factors of that rock-ribbed commonwealth. The three tailors of Tooley Street could have claimed no more. As a fellah toiling on the banks of the Nile is to the towering pyramid of Cheops, so is the Independence party of Vermont to the total vote of that State. In the name of the Prophet—figs!

What would have happened in Vermont if Mr. Hearst had personally conducted his campaign there can only be surmised. Success might have been assured by at least ten more votes. It is never quite safe to leave to others what you ought to do yourself, and Mr. Hearst's experience should have impressed this axiom upon his understanding. There is not the slightest doubt that if Mr. Hearst had handled his campaign in this city during the late primaries the Independence party would not have been reduced to the absurdity of a measly 193 votes. Mr. Hearst should have spoken to the citizens of San Francisco from the stump instead of trusting to the arguments and predictions and blandishments of his editors. And we warn Mr. Hearst that unless he comes to California and infuses some of his own enthusiasm into the electors, Mr. Debs will come under the wire by more than a distance. Mr. Debs is not neglecting this corner of the political vineyard; he is hastening to us in a blood red car which he has paid $20,000 for the season, and his clarion call will soon be loud in the land. That is what Mr. Hearst ought to be doing instead of wasting his time and breath in the sterile Indiana and hopeless Ohio.

Mr. Debs is much wiser in his generation. He is getting around in the places where Mr. Hearst thinks he is most impregnably "organized." California is one of those places. Mr. Hearst was born in California. He may not be one of our favorite sons, but he is a native son, and that accident should count for something. Mr. Debs is taking no chances on the possibility that Mr. Hearst may be unpopular with the crank vote of the State. He is coming to gather it to the aching void of Socialism, and if Mr. Hearst does not rouse himself while it is yet the day before election he may awake on the morning after to find that the serpent has swallowed the toad.

Out in Indiana and along the banks of the pellucid Wabash Mr. Hearst is scattering manna in the wilderness with an unsparing tongue. He is telling the Hoosiers and Buckeyes that they live and vote on a "historic battleground" and that he intends to "make it historic today as the scene of victory for his new party." Then he lands into the candidates of the old parties with hip-smiting vigor and thigh-smashing thwacks. He calls one of the candidates "an overgrown messenger boy," and he buffets the other with the epithetical designation of "peerless prestidigitator of modern politics." His own candidate is "Honest Tom" Hisgen. He wants to know whether the people shall rule the trusts or shall the trusts rule the people, and the broad and boundless prairie echoes no answer—only the wind whispers in the sycamores and the crow calls to his mate across the fields of Indiana.

Unfortunately for Mr. Hearst and "Honest Tom" Hisgen, Mr. Debs has been over all that ground. Anything that Mr. Debs has lost Mr. Hearst is welcome to find. And farther West, where rolls the muddy Platte and hears no sound save Bryan's gnashings, the horny-handed Populist clutches a Democratic vote all heedless of his duty to "Honest Tom" Watson. The corn-fed vote of Nebraska is not for Hearst. The South may not be "solid" for Bryan, but it is not even a decimal for Hearst. It is difficult, therefore, to figure out where the "strength" of Mr. Hearst's party lies. Perhaps the East Side of New York will vote for him, but everywhere else the electors are too busy getting ready to vote for Taft, Bryan, or Debs to pay much attention to Mr. Hearst.

Still it is a shame that Mr. Hearst should permit Mr. Debs to invade his very hearthstone and rake the embers for coals. There are votes in California that are Mr. Hearst's by birthright; but unless the owner of the Independence party looks to his own Mr. Debs will appropriate the entire outfit. It isn't much, to be sure, but it is worth more effort than Mr. Hearst is making to save it.

Morocco Again.

The action of Germany in recognizing Mulai Hafid as Sultan of Morocco is a little perplexing, unless we may assume that the Emperor William is ready and willing to pick a quarrel—an assumption by no means unlikely with the lord of so many legions. France, England, and Spain have been giving their support to Sultan Abd-el-Aziz, who has now had rather a bad beating from his rival and half-brother Hafid. The Moors themselves—although their wishes in the matter do not count for very much—seem to prefer Hafid, because he is a good Moor and a good Mohammedan, whereas Aziz is tainted with the European virus and has yearnings toward civilization. Hitherto the great powers have been in some kind of surface agreement and have made a clumsy pretense at unison. Now comes the declaration of Germany supporting the claim of Mulai Hafid, the agreement is dissipated, and the political pot in France begins at once to boil.

If the German emperor merely wishes to ingratiate himself with the successful sultan, to bask as it were in the rays of the rising sun, he must be willing to run a tremendous risk and to pay a tremendous price for trade privileges which would no doubt fall to him in any case. If Europe has any right in Morocco at all, which of course she has not, the claim of France is the only one that has much validity about it. Morocco is next door to Algeria and France has enough to do in Algeria to give her a decided interest in the contagious brawls, political and religious, of Morocco. France has poured out blood and money in support of Abd-el-Aziz and her nerves are now so much on edge that she is not likely to brook a wanton and almost offensive interference from Germany. There is inherited bad blood upon both sides and there is no such thing as insignificance in any possible disputes between the two countries. Wars may be made as much by popular clamor as by the intention of statesmen, and of popular clamor in France just at present there is enough and to spare.

But is Germany willing to fight? There is certainly nothing in Morocco worth fighting about, but it would be foolish to shut our eyes to irresistible tendencies that must either be diverted or march to their culmination. Germany is intensely sore at her isolation, she bitterly resents the alliance between France and England, she is being strangled within her own frontiers by the lack of seaports, and she is harassed by a Social Democracy that will not be permanently checked. Bismarck once proved the efficacy of a great national cause in silencing dissension and in creating unity, and it may well be that a war would appeal to the emperor as the least of many evils. He himself is prematurely old, his health is precarious, he has had no chance to show his military genius or to use the mighty machine of destruction that he has devoted his life to lubricate and to polish. The power that has prepared four and a half million men for the field will put them into the field sooner or later. The existence of the German army is itself a cause for war.

Then, too, there is the intense antagonism between Germany and England, one of the few antagonisms of modern international life that is broad based upon popular hatred. England and France are practically allied, thanks to the diplomacy of King Edward. There is no conscience in European politics, and if England and Germany are destined to try their strength it would suit England to have that trial sooner rather than later. Lord Cromer, who knows the situation better than any man living, said in the House of Lords a few weeks ago that a great war would presently be forced upon Great Britain, and he referred of course to Germany. A British navy of 315 warships at that moment was assembled in the North Sea, and we need not look very far to discover the significance and the timely import of Lord Cromer's words. It is, of course, conventionally correct to speak of all wars as impossible and as though the battle of Armageddon had already been fought, but those who are able to read the signs of the times are not inclined to look upon the Morocco situation without misgiving, not indeed as a thing that is worth fighting about, but as a possible pretext for those who are willing to fight.

The Minister and Society.

The Rev. E. Baker, lately pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Oakland, would have been better advised had he made his resignation a little less sensational. His farewell sermon probably loses some of its coherence from the necessities of newspaper abbreviation, for while it is comparatively easy to follow his tirade against society in general, it is by no means easy to find the precise reasons that have led him to his present step. He tells us that he has lived through seven and a half years of "attack, criticism, gossip, and bricks," that the church is a "select club," that its members "pray on Sunday and lie on Monday," that church membership now means nothing, and that the church doctrine of hellfire is repugnant to him. There is much more of the same kind, but we still fail to understand why the Rev. E. Baker has retired from the First Presbyterian Church in order to become the manager of a school of scientific salesmanship. We may hope that the change will be both lucrative and sedative.

Now if the human weaknesses of the church and of society in general have led Mr. Baker to this step he would have better consulted his own dignity by intimating that he was no longer equal to the task of the ministry. For the task of the ministry is to combat these very things and to hold up an ideal life that shall counteract its greeds and its vices. If these things did not exist, neither would the church exist, and they are not to be met by vituperation, but by the steady and helpful inculcation of their opposites. If, on the other hand, Mr. Baker now finds, after seven and a half years' ministry, that he is no longer in sympathy with the Presbyterian creed, then, once more, let him say so, but with due remembrance of the fact that he was once in full sympathy with it, hellfire, infant damnation, and all, and at a time when it was even narrower than it is now. He joined the church knowing its creed and he thereby tacitly undertook to preach that creed. If he is now unable to carry out his contract upon conscientious grounds, a few dignified words of explanation would be enough.

It is strange that so many ministers nowadays resort to sound and fury when they decide to change their occupation. Thersites in the pulpit is not an edifying sight. Members of other professions do not find it necessary to ring the tocsin upon such occasions and to summon all and sundry to hear their reasons and to listen to fiery arraignments of the world, the flesh, and the devil, which, after all, are pretty much the same as they have ever been. It seems to be a case of exaggerated ego.

The Punishment Fits the Crime.

A trial of no ordinary interest has just been brought to a conclusion in London. Ten members of the Mile End board of guardians—corresponding roughly to our supervisors—have been convicted of corruptly using their official position to enrich themselves. In other words, they entered into collusion with a building contractor and shared with him the proceeds of the dishonest agreement. It was a common case of vulgar bribery and, under ordinary circumstances, in no way worthy of special record.

But there are some features in connection with this trial that arrest our attention. In the first place it occupied twenty days, and this is said to be the longest criminal trial that has occurred in England for many years. The jury was chosen practically from the first dozen men upon the list and the trial went steadily forward from start to finish without a hitch of any kind and without unseemly incidents. As soon as the verdict of guilty was returned the judge passed sentences aggregating 102 months' imprisonment with hard labor, and fines totaling $4600, the imprisonment to be extended indefinitely until the fines shall be paid. Within an hour of the sentence all the defendants were in prison, where they will remain until the expiration of their terms without any possibility of liberation or escape by a resort to technicalities or by appeal. The case is finally and absolutely closed and the general public will never hear of it again, until the names of these wretched men shall appear in the formal list of the term expired.

One other point is perhaps worthy of mention. In passing sentence the judge regretted his inability to order restitution of the amounts received in bribes, inasmuch as the details could not be ascertained. "This money," he said, "like other ill-gotten gains, I suspect, has quickly gone," but he went on to express the hope that the authorities would apply the amount of the fines to the relief of the ratepayers who had been victimized. The most severe sentences were passed upon two men named Hirst and Warren, the judge explaining his severity on the ground that Hirst has been three times mayor of West Ham and that Warren was a sort of leader among the guardians.

There is no need to make any comment upon these proceedings or to draw comparisons that are painfully obvious. Nor is there any need to point a moral which "jumps to the eye." Let it suffice to say that London is to be enviously congratulated on having laid by the heels a gang of official rascals and of having given so stern a warning of the fate that inevitably awaits those who might imitate them.

The Fool i' the Forest.

Something more than mere sentimentalism will move the Californian to rejoice that "The Mother of the Forest" of the Calaveras grove of Big Trees still stands in columnar majesty with her stalwart family of great-girthed, russet-mailed, emerald-plumed giants. For a time it was feared that these trees were fated to perish from the earth; that the flames creeping out from a sheep-herder's pot-boiling camp-fire or the embers of a fool "camper's" bacon-frying contrivance would destroy the only living survival of the age beyond "the dawn of history." Happily this disaster was averted and only the bald and ragged crest of "The Mother" was scorched; only another scar added to those already inflicted by time and the hand of God.

Better, far better, that these age-defying monarchs should perish by the slivering stroke of the thunderbolt than that they should waste to cinders and ashes in the ignoble flame of a fire kindled by a Slavonian goatherd or a grocer's clerk obtruding his puny presence upon nature in her solitude. Long before the herder's ancestry learned the use of the element which their illiterate and sacrilegious descendant employed to warn a can full of cheap chicory to appease the craving of:

degenerate stomach these trees were sturdy saplings; a thousand years anterior to the period when the most ancient progenitors of the grocer's clerk took for themselves the names of their overlords and abandoned their holes in the rock to make local habitation in abject vilenage to a barbarian chieftain these trees were deep-rooted in the glacial mud of the mountains still trembling in the throes of their upheaval. When Abraham fed his flocks on the scant pasture of Ur in the land of the Chaldees the giant redwoods of California were vigorous shoots not yet barked to record their age in annular growth, though centuries had elapsed since their seed had thawed from the cold embrace of the ice drift; while the armies of Sesostris were devastating the world from Ethiopia to the Indus the last of the post-pliocene mastodons may have rubbed his gigantic tusks against the rough bark of "The Father of the Forest," now prostrate and dry-rotted in the Calaveras grove; if ethnologists have guessed accurately, the southward wandering Toltec tribes paused in the shade of these trees to recuperate from the fatigue of their long march, and that was three centuries before Columbus set foot on the islands of the Carib Sea. Dynasties founded to outlast the memory of man have passed to oblivion since the seed of the sequoia winged its flight on the northwest wind to its final resting place on the slope of the Californian Sierra; racial types have changed to fit their shifting environment and mingled to produce a hundred new phases of humanity since our redwoods began to grow; nations have come and gone, and only man has persisted coeval with these trees as they now stand.

So old are the ever-living redwoods of the Sierran forests that they have outlived the use of commerce. The centuries have eaten their hearts and they are no longer timber; they have ceased to be appraised in the lumber market; they are interrogation marks and exclamation points on the pages of the Book of Time. John Muir, venerable guardian of this garden of the Lord, once said that the Almighty could plant these trees and blast them with the wrath of his storms through all the ages, permitting them to survive every vicissitude of millennial existence, and that at last a fool and a touch-wood splinter tipped with sulphur in incendiary conjunction with a fistful of crackling twigs could destroy the divine handiwork in a few hours of a midsummer day. Once upon a time this Brother of the Forest, traversing his usual way through the country of the giants, discovered a grease-grimed herdsman, born in a land where the vegetation creeps on the surface of the earth, in the act of building a fire at the base of a sequoia. The fire was never lighted. The twigs and brambles were kicked into the cañon by indignant feet heavy-booted for a long journey. Then the astonished and terrified exile of Tuscany listened to a brief history of the tree upon which he had sought to commit this sacrilege—history intermingled with up-to-date objurgation. When Muir had ended, the Italian (degenerate scion of the Cæsars, perchance) muttered his "No savvey," and silently slunk away, only delaying, like the Arab, to fold his dirty blankets. But even the eloquence and admonition of John Muir is powerless against the match of the sheep-herding Goth and the cheese-paring Vandal; and some day there will be no more redwoods in California.

Choosing the Man.

In the political contest now under way the personality of the candidates selected by the two great opposing parties is an element of interest and of determining power greater than in any campaign for forty years. Mr. Taft and Mr. Bryan have so long been prominent in public life that they are known and appreciated as few party leaders have been before nominating conventions had made them the centre of discussion and criticism. Greeley, Hayes, Garfield, Cleveland, Harrison, Bryan, and Parker, were not understood and had little claim to national regard when they were suddenly brought face to face with momentous responsibilities. More than one of these were potential as candidates because their lines of thought and action were practically unknown. With no damning facts in the record it is easy to establish a claim to the possession of sagacity and power. There need be no pretensions of the kind in any summing up of the qualifications of Mr. Bryan or Mr. Taft.

It is significant that on this turning point two great newspapers of the East, that might have been expected to continue as advocates of Mr. Bryan's cause, have swung to the support of Mr. Taft. Many other journals have taken the same important step, but in perhaps no other instances are there so many weighty and particular connections.

The Springfield Republican may fairly be named first in reviewing this movement. It has long been sturdily independent in its political views, and it has been at one with Mr. Bryan on many of the important issues of the day. Anti-imperialism, tariff reform, opposition to all special privileges, and vigorous attacks on the "reactionaries," have been and still are distinctive features of its able and incisive editorial utterances. No paper more consistently represents the advanced ideas of New England. In the announcement of its position in this campaign it declares that the paper from its first issue "has been dedicated to an essential democracy, whose first and last thought is for the advantages of the people in enlightenment, in self-government, and the advancement of the common interest." It has weighed all considerations hinging on the coming election, struck a balance, and gone where, to its mind, "the largest popular advantage is to be found."

From its temperate yet positive statement this paragraph is quoted as a clear-eyed view of the striking characteristics that distinguish the two opposing leaders:

The business in hand is no longer spectacular—it is of a homely sort, but necessary to the national well-being and the permanent advantage of the people. The times call not for the agitator, but the man with patient, constructive ability, in full sympathy with the popular cause—for a wide seeing and capable handling of large things, and these often of a very delicate nature. Great as has always been our respect for Mr. Bryan—his stainless character, his ability for brilliant leadership, his resolution of nature—the doubt as to his capacity beyond that of a helpful propagandist has not been satisfied during the years of his great prominence before the American people.

Recalling the fact that Mr. Bryan left his command at the time of the war with Spain to secure a ratification of the treaty of peace, to which the Philippine acquisition was appended, and thus demanded a share in the decision for which there was no official warrant, the Republican declares that the action, no matter how explained, "left an impression of political time-serving not to be effaced." It believes that Mr. Bryan's career has "developed the orator and the doctrinaire at the expense of the practical, well-posed administrator." But in the record of Mr. Taft it finds warrant for confidence:

Mr. Taft is fitted by nature and training to be a better administrator of the questions which press upon the country for prosecution and solution than President Roosevelt—better, we believe, than Mr. Bryan. The assurances regarding his welcome for the abiding faith in the new Republicanism and the Democracy are absolute. Whether Judge Taft has approved of all the restless methods of his chief we do not know, and doubt—that he stands unwaveringly by him on the main lines of the President's fight for the people, and the purpose to transform the Republican party from one of special privilege to one of equal opportunity, seems to be established. So much demonstrated, Mr. Taft's candidacy makes a wide appeal, and not only so, but it brings him under strong bonds to the people.

Maryland is normally a Democratic State, for it always elects a Democratic governor though it has given Republican pluralities in presidential elections since 1892, ranging from 32,224 in 1896 to a pitiful 51 in 1904. But the Bryan sort of Democracy has never been popular there. It was hardly to be expected that the Baltimore Sun would be enthusiastic in support of the twice-defeated leader, but it could not have been accused of inconsistency if in the interest of harmony it had chosen to say no good of his opponent. Again, however, the personality of the candidates decides the issue, and the Sun is straightforward in announcing its choice:

The master hand in the construction of the Democratic platform was Mr. Bryan's. He was consulted about every item. It is understood that he formulated the most important declarations. It is probable that in quoting from the platform Mr. Bryan is literally quoting himself. If, as the Democratic nominee asserts, the paramount issue in this campaign is "the rule of the people," the use of their government "for the protection of their rights and the promotion of their welfare," the proposition submitted to the voter is not only a very practical one, but a very simple one. It is the judgment of the Sun that the material welfare of the people of the United States—industrial and financial—would be promoted to a greater degree by the election of Mr. Taft than by the election of Mr. Bryan; that their rights would be safeguarded as carefully by Mr. Taft as by Mr. Bryan.

These are the views of two great newspapers that might well have been found under the banner of Democracy had the welfare of the people seemed to demand a Bryan victory rather than a Democratic victory. But, even to them, the comparison is unfavorable in any light.

A letter written for publication by Grover Cleveland shortly before his death has been given to the press during the past week. It will not weaken the force of its arguments to recall the differences between the ex-President and his aspiring rival in the party. In fact, the sentiments expressed by newspapers of every shade of opinion since Mr. Cleveland passed away but heighten the stature of that statesman, and make more evident the fact that he towered far above the most conspicuous of those who belittled his leadership. From the letter referred to the following paragraphs are taken:

When it became apparent that Mr. Taft would be the nominee of his party, that Mr. Hearst and his party would make a clean-cut effort for emplacement as a national factor and not endeavor to gain any immediate advantage for themselves by any such process as fusion; in fact, would seek to destroy Bryanism, or rather Mr. Bryan's hold on the Democratic party, not by forcing the hold to relax, but by lessening that which he had to hold, conjecture as to the result in the November conclusions could be of but one sort among sensible men. With the several other parties disorganizing, redeveloping, and procreating, the Republican party is certain, though with considerably lessened strength, to move on to a safe victory sustained by the popular support of reforms which should not redound to its glory solely, those reforms having been the work of decent men of all parties.

There is fear on my part of being misunderstood in what I am about to say, but surely the fair-minded man must realize when he considers my attitude toward my own party, all now a matter of immutable record, that it is prompted by a sense of simple fairness. Personally and officially I have had the opportunity of knowing many things concerning Mr. Taft that were not a matter of general knowledge, and with a keen interest I have watched his large share in the conduct of our national affairs in very recent years. His excellence as a Federal judge in Cincinnati is something not to be underestimated or overemphasized, for should he come to the presidential chair the qualities which made him a judge of high ability, which I know him to have been, will be the most needful to him as President of the United States. His high ideals of honesty and of relative justice, his great capacity for severe labor and his humorous wisdom in the face of the serious problem are attributes equally valuable and commendatory to a people seeking him in whom they may repose the trust of their collective interests while they turn their increased attention to their pressing individual demands.

In short, Mr. Bryan has not stood the tests of time and of emergencies. His ideas, his methods, his pose, are no longer attractive, certainly not assuring in the face of eventful probabilities. For as many years as he has been gaining notoriety on the political rostrum and the lecture platform by word of mouth, Mr. Taft has been steadily pursuing the path of official duty and actual achievement. Mr. Taft has said much, but nothing that dims his record; he has accomplished a great deal more, and nothing that has not strengthened his character in patience, courage, and wisdom.

A Diffident Duke.

His Royal Highness, Duke Ferdinand de Montpensier, first cousin of Alfonso, King of Spain, brother of Duke Philip of Orleans, pretender to the throne of France whenever that royal furniture is ready for occupancy, and nephew of Emperor Wilhelm of Germany; has been in town. The importance of this announcement is not so much in the personage or personality of the visitor as in the name of his family. The Montpensiers achieved eminence through the political and royal alliances which some of them made, out of which much disturbance of the peace of nations was provoked. There was Catharine Marie de Lorraine, Duchesse de Montpensier, born 1552, daughter of the Duke of Guise, wife of the second Louis, Duc de Montpensier, of France—a lady of great ability whose knowledge of the finesse of statecraft and whose tendency to intrigue, conspiracy, and treasonable plots on behalf of the League served to keep Henri III awake o' nights and worried poor Catharine de Medici more than that mother of kings, herself a past mistress in the black art of mediæval politics, cared to admit even to her favorite astrologer, Cosmo Ruggieri.

Another of the royal house of Montpensier, also a woman, who made a big stir in the world and was finally niched in history's temple of fame, was Anne Marie Louise d'Orleans, born in Paris May 29, 1627, only daughter of Gaston of Orleans and the Duchesse de Montpensier. "La Grande Mademoiselle," as she was called, was one of the most vivacious women of the seventeenth century, a period when women controlled the destinies of empires by their wit, their smiles, and their favor. Born to enormous wealth, she saw no reason why she should share it with anything less worthy than a crowned head, but finally, if we may credit the somewhat scandalous memoirs of Saint-Simon, she yielded to the impulse of a personal affection and secretly married Antoine, Duke Lauzun. In the meantime, however, the granddaughter of Henry IV played her rôle of "La Grande Demoiselle" with impetuous fury. She espoused the cause of Condé in the civil wars of the Fronde, rode at the head of armies, scaled the walls of Orleans under fire at greater risk than was incurred by Jeanne d'Arc, and saved Condé after the battle of the Faubourg Saint Antoine from massacre by opening the gates of Paris for his retreat and covering the flight with the guns of the Bastille, which she emptied ruthlessly upon the roaring populace of the city. As age cooled the hot Bourbon blood of this Amazon, repentance became her sole purpose in life, the remainder of which was occupied largely with her devotions and her "Memoirs," for her versatility included a fine literary talent unhampered by scrupulous regard for the feelings of those whom she might happen to dislike.

The father of the royal guest at the Fairmont was Antoine Marie Philippe Louis d'Orleans, Duc de Montpensier, fifth son of Louis Philippe, King of France for a brief and troublous period. His youthful profession was arms and he won distinction as a soldier in two campaigns in Algeria. He married the Infanta Maria Louisa, sister of Queen Isabella II of Spain, and thereby nearly caused a rupture between England and France. The revolution of 1848 drove him out of Spain and he took refuge in England, afterwards crossing over to Holland with his family, where he embarked for Spain. His eldest daughter, Princess Marie, was married, in 1864, to her cousin, the Count de Paris, heir-male of the royal house of Orleans. After the flight of Isabella II from Spain, the duke was proposed as a candidate for the crown, but that was as far as it went. However, his highness did not despair, and in 1878 his third daughter became the wife of King Alfonso XII. The throne of Spain remained in the family only a month or two. Queen Mercedes died in June of the year of her marriage. The duke died in 1890.

Notwithstanding our well-known love for dukes, this one has persistently refused to give audience to our ambassadors of the press. His secretary has received the young gentlemen of the Fourth Estate and given them all the information deemed necessary concerning his royal master. A Montpensier could not condescend to a familiar interview with anything less aristocratic than a Montmorency or a Montferrat, and none of the cards sent to him by the local newspapermen bore those names. Our curiosity, therefore, regarding the duke's opinion of us, as far as his observation has gone, is still unsatisfied. We don't know what he thinks of our climate; we are completely in the dark concerning his views on the political situation; we are not informed, as to whether he has ever heard of Mr. Bryan, whether he knows that Mr. Hearst has invented a political propaganda similar to that which convulsed Madrid at the accession of Alfonso, whether he approves the platforms of any of the parties, or whether he entertains the vaguest notion as to the reason why the graft prosecution is all prosecution and no conviction. We would like to hear his highness express surprise at our phenomenal uprising from our recent calamity, but thus far he has vouchsafed no remarks on that subject in the presence of the reporters. It would be interesting to know what a Montpensier thinks of our social conditions, comparing them favorably or unfavorably with those to which he is accustomed in Seville and Madrid and the courts of Europe; but the secretary has not transmitted to the press even the obscurest hint that the duke has given this matter the slightest thought.

The reporters have been compelled to report the duke from afar. They have looked upon him as through a glass, darkly, notwithstanding the fierce light that beats upon a Montpensier. This exclusiveness is irritating. We would like to know our royal visitor more intimately. We want him to understand that our lachstring is exposed to his grasp if he would only take it in hand. We fear that he may go back to Spain with false ideas regarding our hospitality, of which he must have heard even in Madrid. We are, indeed, a most hospitable folk, especially when it is dispensed in the entertainment of celebrities, hereditary or fortuitous. We would like to show the duke around a bit; we would like to dine him and wine him and make his stay with us pleasant and memorable. Our orators would be delighted to talk to him; our smart set would be glad to receive him with their arms wide open; our leading citizens would eagerly arrange one of their famous banquets for him if he would only say the word, even though that word were uttered by the subsidized lips of his secretary. Duke Ferdinand de Montpensier doesn't know what he is missing by denying the newspaper men the privilege of telling him.

CAMPAIGN TOPICS.

From the standpoint of the local partisan there may seem to be no connection between the issues of the national campaign and the fight for and against Governor Hughes in New York. But the connection is there all the same and it is a close one. If Governor Hughes fails to get the renomination it will give heart of grace to the Bryanites all over the country. "Behold," they will say, "the reality of Republican protestations and he warned in time." Governor Hughes is something more than an able and efficient executive. He is a man—shall we say the man—with a moral idea. He represents the newly awakened spirit of sane and balanced reform, and his nomination is something more than a local issue. It is an opportunity to show that the Republican party is a party of the people and not of the politicians.

It is for this reason that the politicians of New York State have begun to "furiously rage together." They hoped that President Roosevelt, whose antipathy to the governor is well known, would unite with them in unseating the man whose single will has kept their noses from the trough. But they were disappointed. The meeting at Oyster Bay had no definite result, but it was perfectly well known that the weight of opinion was to the effect that it would be had politics to publicly crucify Governor Hughes for carrying out the very policy that his party has avowedly adopted. If the Oyster Bay conference had been distinctly adverse to the governor, the New York politicians would have sung to a different tune, but now they are beginning to ask by what right such a conference presumes to dictate to New York. One and all of them—Woodruff, Parsons, Odell, Barnes, Hendricks—are determined that they will have a man after their own hearts at Albany. The effect of such a crime upon the fortunes of the party at large will concern them not at all, but they may stay their hand if the prospects of defeat looms sufficiently clear ahead of them. And that the rejection of Hughes will mean a Democratic victory is the conviction of many who are likely to know. And if New York should go Democratic in the matter of the governorship, why should it not also go Democratic in the matter of the presidency? And if New York should declare for Bryan—why, where are we?

The national point of view is tersely expressed by the Philadelphia Ledger and indeed by many other responsible newspapers. The Ledger says:

Those whose first concern is for the election of Mr. Taft have readily recognized what a blow would be given to his candidacy by the rejection of Hughes, which would be everywhere interpreted as a repudiation of all his conspicuous services for the advancement of our civic standards. If the Republican party will not stand by Hughes in New York, it would be said, what could Taft be expected to accomplish in the larger field? Even machine politicians of the smallest calibre must perceive this peril. It is so plain, indeed, that their opposition to the renomination of Hughes is likely to disappear before the convention. However unwilling, they must acquiesce or invite disaster.

We shall see what we shall see. In the meantime we may hope that "good politics," not to speak of good morals, will prevail at New York.

Reports of dissension in the labor ranks as a result of Gompers's politics come thick and fast. A report from New York says that the unions are surprised, while one daring delegate goes so far as to accuse Gompers of "quibbling." The national secretary of the Pavers and Rammers says:

"It would be more honest for Gompers to come out openly and ask the unions to vote for Bryan than to praise Bryan and the Democratic party as the friends of labor, then declare that union men should support the friends of labor, and follow this up by saying that there is no party politics in his campaign. This cheap kind of nonsense is an insult to the intelligence of union men."

The Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers declares that Gompers's course will cause dissensions of a far-reaching character in the unions and the dissensions are indeed already very apparent.

We are plunged into a profound dejection by had news from New Orleans. On Saturday, August 29, only seven Bryan buttons were sold over the counter of the Times-Democrat, and three of them were bought by the same man. Seven dollars for the great cause and on a half-holiday, too, when the spirit of generosity should be abroad in the air.

The Times-Democrat is more than a little perplexed and it lifts the chastening rod more in sorrow than in anger. Why, the country districts are doing better than the city. The "spirit of commercialism" rules the city, while the rural population have a "loyalty to their standard of political principles." The hearts of the Southern farmer and of his man Friday will swell with pride as they read this tribute to their disinterested public spirit. For the first time in their lives they will realize that "they look beyond the ephemeral effects of party victories to the great underlying principles of action and policy that make nations great." Who would have thought it?

But there is worse to come, although we hate to see these efforts to create a class consciousness and to array the city against the country. But perhaps the truth ought to be known, and the Times-Democrat tells us that the dwellers in the country are proud of their Bryan buttons (one dollar per button) and wear them where every one can see them, whereas the city man "has been known to hide his under his coat lapel." Moved by righteous indignation, the Times-Democrat says truly that "a man who feels that way ought not to buy a Bryan button," but when we are further told that "if the Great Commoner knew it he would insist on returning the dollar of such a faint-hearted supporter" we must express a dissenting opinion. Mr. Bryan would not return the dollar. He would scorn the action.

Mr. Taft's attitude on the labor question is not at all a matter of doubt or obscurity, but we can none the less appreciate his recent speech, not so much for the contained facts that are already well known as for the vigor and independence that it manifests. Upon the record of the Republican party in its relation to labor, Mr. Taft said:

"I want to make one statement first, that never in the history of this country has there been an administration that has passed more measures directly in the interest of the laboring classes than has the present Republican administration."

"Take the employers' liability act. Congress has passed a law by which railroad men engaged on interstate railroads shall be put on a level with the corporation in dealing with it in respect to the damages that they sustain, growing out of their employment."

"Then there are also all of these safety-appliance acts, which I hope will tend to reduce the awful sacrifices of life among the employees of the railroad companies. Then, too, there are other measures—the government employees' compensation-for-injuries act, and that which requires interstate commerce employees to serve only a certain number of hours and forbids their service longer."

On the question of injunctions Mr. Taft was no less positive. Denying that he was "the father of injunctions" in labor cases, he pointed out that he had never done anything but follow a well-established precedent in such matters. It was a good precedent, but it was not of his making:

"It has been my lot to lay down the rules with respect to the rights of labor in two or three cases, and I refer to those cases as a full statement of what I believe the rights of labor to be with reference to its employment. Labor has the right to unite in organizations for the purpose of looking after the united interests of labor in its controversy with capital, because if it did not unite, and was not permitted to unite, then it would be helpless."

"Laborers have the right not only to unite, but to contribute funds which, in times when they wish to leave the employ of their employer when they did not like his terms, may support their fellow members. They have the right to appoint officers who shall control their action if they choose. They have the right to invite all other laborers to unite with them in their controversy, and to withdraw if they choose from association with their employer."

"But they have not the right to injure their employers' property; they have not the right, by what is called a 'secondary boycott,' to invite a third person into the controversy who wishes to keep out, by threatening a boycott with him unless he assists them in the fight."

"In the fight between the employer and the employee or the united employees they must fight it out between themselves and they must not involve the rest of the community in it by a system of duress. This law I believe is a fair law, and, being a fair law, when I was on the bench I attempted to enforce it."

In this notable speech there is no attempt to hedge. Mr. Taft takes his stand on the broad ground of human right, and it is safe to say that no human being would disagree with him but for the blinding effects of class bias and greed.

That tariff reform is actually under way is shown by the work of Senator Burrows, who is in charge of the subcommittee on the administrative features of revision. A similar work will now be started by another sub-committee of the Senate committee on finance, of which Senator Hopkins of Illinois is chairman. Mr. Hopkins's committee is composed of himself and Senators Burrows, Penrose, Money, and Tulliferro. To this committee has been entrusted the work of preparing a bill for the Senate, as it is directed to "consider what changes in the customs rates are desirable, and to secure proof of the relative cost of production in the United States and other competing countries."

While in Washington recently, attending a meeting of the Burrows committee, Senator Hopkins said he would not call his organization together until some time during the fall. In the meantime, however, he will ask the Departments of State, Agriculture, and Commerce and Labor to procure such information for him as they can through their representatives abroad relative to the cost of production in foreign countries with a view to supplying to the committee the best information possible in conducting its comparisons. That Mr. Hopkins appreciates the magnitude of this inquiry is made manifest by the preparation that he is making.

He also apprehends no little difficulty in reconciling the conflicting interests which are always involved in tariff changes. Already the Eastern manufacturers are making known their demands for free raw materials, while the Western producers are beginning to stand out stiffly for the protection of such articles as wool, hides, and ores. The Senate finance committee has no purpose of trying to rob the House committee on ways and means of its prerogative of originating tariff legislation, but is simply preparing itself for the intelligent consideration of the subject after the House bill shall reach the Senate.

Mr. Bryan has many engagements ahead, and now that he has said to one chairman, "Don't introduce me again as the next President of the United States," all the other chairmen should accommodate him. An introduction like that gets on a man's nerves in his third campaign for an office he never won.

Mr. Bryan recognizes that he must win New York—"or bust." He went there straight from Des Moines and had a three-hour conference with the local leaders. The result was an arrangement to speak in New York City, Syracuse, and Rochester between September 16 and 20 and again early in October in New York City and Buffalo. Democratic reports are to the effect that Mr. Bryan can easily carry New York if he will only speak often enough. It will of course be rather a strain upon him, but then there is always the phonograph. Chairman Mack said that New York would be all right if "Mr. Bryan would make a swing through the State."

A great many nice things were said to Mr. Bryan on this auspicious occasion. Senator Culherson, for instance, assured him that West Virginia and Maryland would certainly be found among the faithful, but then Senator Culherson has been spending the summer in Maryland and the hospitality of the South is not of the kind that is conducive to political foresight. However that may be, Mr. Bryan's advisers all spoke of a "strong drift" that would become still more pronounced when their candidate had thrown his oratorical banners to the wind. So great a reliance upon the witching power of Mr. Bryan's voice is touching and impressive.

A FRIENDLY INVASION.

The Exposition and the "Entente Cordiale" Bring Crowds of Frenchmen to England.

Is it the exposition or the entente cordiale that brings so many French people to England? It must be remembered that the Frenchman is not naturally a traveler. The patriotic Gaul looks upon his own country as an oasis in the desert and the frontiers of his land as a kindly interposition of Providence between it and a surrounding savagery. If foreign travel is recommended to him he is sincerely perplexed. Why, then, should he travel? Is there anything elsewhere that is not to be found in France? Assuredly no. So he stays at home.

But the present French invasion of England is a reality, and there being no Channel tunnel the visitors come by water. It is, after all, a trifling journey. Eight hours from Paris to London and the cost, including hotels, interpreters, and guides, a mere bagatelle. Never before have so many French people braved the perils of the mighty deep, and while the passage from Dover to Calais is only about ninety minutes, it is surprising what Father Neptune can do in the way of concentrated discomfort when he is really pressed for time.

The Feast of the Assumption was a great day for the French tourist. Most Englishmen would be much puzzled if required to give the date of this festival, but the Frenchman knows all about it, because he gets two days' holiday, which shows the importance of the part played by holidays in the preservation of the spirit of true piety. On the first of these two days no less than five thousand French people came in to London. They started on Friday night, reaching London early on Saturday morning. Then they had all day to see London and then returned by the evening boat. Some of them stayed over Sunday and got back to work on Monday morning. It is not easy to see London in the course of a day, or even of two days, especially when a great exhibition is the pièce de resistance, but these good people did their best and will no doubt rank as lifelong authorities upon everything English. They enjoyed themselves, too, in spite of the past and prospective terrors of the Channel passage. Among them were five hundred employees of a firm of coal merchants, sons of Anak all of them, and a little disturbing to the rooted English convictions that Frenchmen are small men. Then there was a French choral society, and its members lifted up their voices in season and out of season, celebrating each new spectacle with a more or less appropriate song. Then there was an artistic society and a musical group known as the Trompes and Trompettes, who were good enough to bring their instruments with them. They went to the exhibition and duly did their duty to the French exhibits, but they preferred the streets, crowding the tops of the omnibuses and complimenting their hosts by ineffective imitation of the British cheer. Westminster Abbey and the Tower of London were special favorites, the latter edifice being regarded as the Basilica of England, and perhaps not inappropriately. The scene at the departure of the evening trains was a thoroughly joyous one. The choral society sang continuously, the trompes and the trompettes played something said to be "God Save the King," and with salvos of cheers for the English the festive crowds departed. The entente was as cordiale as any one could wish.

English-speaking travelers on the Continent have often wondered why the shopkeepers do not procure some competent revision of the English notices placed in the windows. The announcement that "English speak here" is hardly calculated to give the fullest confidence in the linguistic abilities to be found inside, but now that London herself has gone into the business of catering for Frenchmen, it must be confessed that she is an even greater offender in this respect. A good many of the restaurants here have "dropped into French" since the invasion began, and their efforts are sometimes enough to provoke a war, especially with a sensitive people like the French. Here are some of these shocking announcements, and the number might be increased almost indefinitely:

- Pot de dé jour 1 personne.
- Ginger beer (jar verre).
- Ginger beer (en glaçon).
- Plat de pain hauré.
- Pâté de veau et jambon.
- Pudding de gruits.
- Gambon et œufs.
- Haddock et 2 œufs joches.
- Pommes de terre grites.

How much it saves for the courtesy of the visitors at they are still able to shout "Vive l'Angleterre" and at the entente cordiale is not hopelessly broken down such a weight of execrable French! But perhaps a Frenchman who saw these atrocities did not suspect that they were intended to be French. Let us at least hope not.

A great number of these people bring cameras with them, and they are not a little surprised to find that there are no restrictions and that they may photograph or try to photograph anything they please. That they may use their cameras in a fortified town like Dover they found to be especially remarkable. Not on to be forgotten was a scene between a Dover policeman who could speak French and a crowd of widely arrived tourists who were painfully anxious not to imperil the entente cordiale by injudicious photography. Almost in vain were the official assurances at messieurs et mesdames might photograph anything they pleased, the castle, the fortifications, the guns, the kilted Highlanders then marching up the street—"even me," in a final and conclusive persuasion. The guests evidently thought that their hosts were a little foolhardy thus to throw open the defenses of England, it being the fixed conviction of the average Frenchman, and indeed of the average continental, that the snapshot of a tourist might easily cause the whole empire to crumble into ruins.

Whether it be the exposition or the entente cordiale that has brought this invasion of England, it is of unquestioned benefit to both countries. A better understanding must result and a natural alliance must be strengthened.

LONDON, August 21, 1908.

OLD FAVORITES.

Primroses.

Why do ye weep, sweet hahes? Can tears
 Speak grief in you,
 Who were hut horn
 Just as the modest morn
 Teem'd her refreshing dew?
 Alas! you have not known that shower
 That mars a flower;
 Nor felt th' unkind
 Breath of a blasting wind;
 Nor are ye worn with years;
 Or warp'd, as we
 Who think it strange to see
 Such pretty flowers, like to orphans young.
 To speak by tears before ye have a tongue.

Speak, whimpering younglings, and make known
 The reason why
 Ye droop, and weep,
 Is it for want of sleep;
 Or childish lullaby?
 Or, that ye have not seen as yet
 The violet?
 Or hrought a kiss
 From that sweetheart to this?
 No, no; this sorrow, shown
 By your tears shed,
 Would have this lecture read,
 "That things of greatest, so of meanest worth,
 Conceived with grief are, and with tears brought forth."
 —Robert Herrick.

Love Not!

Love not, love not! ye hapless sons of clay!
 Hope's gayest wreaths are made of earthly flowers—
 Things that are made to fade and fall away
 Ere they have hlossom'd for a few short hours.
 Love not!

Love not! the thing ye love may change;
 The rosy lips may cease to smile on you,
 The kindly-heaming eye grow cold and strange.
 The heart still warmly heat, yet not he true.
 Love not!

Love not! the thing you love may die,
 May perish from the gay and gladsome earth;
 The silent stars, the blue and smiling sky,
 Beam o'er its grave, as once upon its hirth.
 Love not!

Love not! oh warning vainly said
 In present hours as in the years gone by!
 Love flings a halo round the dear one's head,
 Faultless, immortal, till they change or die.
 Love not!
 —Caroline Elizabeth Norton.

Ode to Autumn.

Season of mists, and mellow fruitfulness!
 Close bosom-friend of the maturing sun;
 Conspiring with him how to load and bless
 With fruit the vines that round the thatch-eaves run;
 To bend with apples the mossed cottage-trees,
 And fill all fruit with ripeness to the core;
 To swell the gourd, and plump the hazel-shells
 With a sweet kernel; to set hudding more,
 And still more, later flowers for the bees,
 Until they think warm days will never cease,
 For summer has o'erhripped their clammy cells.

Who hath not seen thee oft within thy store?
 Sometimes whoever seeks abroad may find
 Thee sitting careless on a granary floor,
 Thy hair soft-lifted by the winning wind;
 Or on a half-reaped furrow sound asleep,
 Drowsed with the fume of poppies, while thy hook
 S pares the next swath and all its twined flowers;
 And sometimes like a gleaner thou dost keep Steady thy laden head across a brook;
 Or by a cider-press, with patient look,
 Thou watchest the last oozings, hours by hours.

Where are the songs of Spring? Ay, where are they?
 Think not of them, thou hast thy music, too,
 While harred clouds bloom the soft-dying day,
 And touch the stubble-plains with rosy hue;
 Then in a wailful choir the small gnats mourn
 Among the river sallows, borne aloft
 Or sinking as the light wind lives or dies;
 And full-grown lambs loud bleat from hilly hourns:
 Hedge-crickets sing; and now with treble soft
 The redbreast whistles from a garden-croft,
 And gathering swallows twitter in the skies.
 —John Keats.

In August, just passed the anniversary of a "famous victory"—to-wit, of Blenheim, which is a corruption of Blindheim, the village on the Upper Danube where John Churchill won his dukedom, his magnificent palace in Oxfordshire, and his yearly pension of £5000. This is still enjoyed by his heir, the present Duke of Marlborough, who places annually on the date a French fleur-de-lis flaglet over the bust of his ancestor in the guardroom of Windsor Castle—the condition of his tenure of the estate of Blenheim.

Two students of the Medico-Chirurgical College, Philadelphia, employed their summer vacation hunting rattlesnakes and copperheads in the mountains near Emmitsburg. They captured a number of large reptiles, from which they obtained about $1500 worth of venom, which will be shipped to the Pathological Institute in Paris.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Captain W. J. McDonald of the Texas Frontier Rangers, announces his acceptance of an invitation to accompany President Roosevelt next year on a hunting trip into Africa.

President L. H. Bailey of the New York State College of Agriculture declines to head the President's curious committee to investigate the social and economic conditions of American farmers, with a view to their improvement.

Mrs. Zelia Nuttall is now in Mexico as field director of the Reid-Crocker expedition, which is excavating the Pyramids of the Sun and Moon. The work is being carried on with funds furnished by Mrs. Whitelaw Reid and Mrs. Crocker of San Francisco.

Robert Dunn, mountain climber and newspaper correspondent, has succeeded in climbing Mount Wrangell, the active Alaskan volcano, located in the great bend of the Copper River, with an estimated height of 17,500 feet. He made the final ascent on July 30.

John J. Hayes, the Marathon winner at the recent Olympic games, has gone over to the professional ranks. He has signed a winter's contract with a New York vaudeville house and every day will tell the story of his great race accompanied by moving pictures.

Mrs. Phœbe Rideout has been elected to succeed her late husband as the president of the bank at Oroville, and also as president of the banks at Marysville and Gridley. Mrs. William H. Langdon has been reelected president of the Union Savings Bank at Modesto.

Mrs. E. G. McAllister, widow of a cousin of the famous Ward, recently returned from England in triumph. She had managed to spend more than two months touring Europe solely with a wardrobe not too big to put in a small suit case and not too heavy for a spirited woman to carry all by herself.

Theodore A. Bingham, who has been police commissioner of New York City since 1906, is a graduate of West Point, and retired from the army in 1904 with the rank of brigadier-general. While in the army he performed distinguished services as engineer officer and as military attaché in various legations.

Salvatore Cortesi, the Italian editor, has been engaged for many years in journalism, and his career in that profession has been signalized by a number of brilliant achievements. In 1891, after the memorable lynching of Italians in New Orleans, he came to America as the representative of the Tribuna, the leading Roman paper.

M. Maurice Maeterlinck, who, it is announced, is to receive the Nobel prize for literature this year, has been called "the Belgian Shakespeare"—a title he is by no means averse from holding. As he is now only forty-six, it is probable that he has not yet given us of his best. Last year he purchased the ancient Abbey of Saint Wandrille, in Normandy. This historic retreat was in ruins, but the poet set about having the place repaired, so that he can entertain his friends amid picturesque surroundings.

His Highness Abbas Pasha Hilmi, Khedive of Egypt and sovereign of Nubia, of the Soudan, of Kordofan, and of Darfur, who recently arrived in London, is the Admirable Crichton of living rulers. He is strikingly handsome, and is thirty-four years of age. He is an accomplished pianist, a lover of gardening, a clever farmer, a skillful engineer, a scientist, a keen business man, and a noted breeder of horses. He frequently amuses himself by driving a railway engine, he commands his luxurious yacht in person, and he is known far and wide as a daring motorist. To these accomplishments the khedive adds fluency in German, French, English, Arabic, Turkish, Italian, and Persian and a knowledge of military tactics.

The death of William F. Vilas, at the comparatively early age of sixty-eight, removes a man who, when only forty-four years old, appeared to have before him one of the most promising political careers of any man in the country, observes the Boston Transcript. His speech as permanent chairman of the Democratic national convention which nominated Mr. Cleveland for the first time was widely commented on from one end of the country to the other. The youth, the dash, the brilliancy of the young presiding officer who at the age of twenty-four had risen to the rank of lieutenant-colonel in the volunteer army, and in the practice of law in the succeeding two decades had attained considerable distinction, led the country to believe that a real leader was coming out of the West. His subsequent appointment to the Cabinet, in which he was promoted from the Postoffice to the Interior Department, and his election in 1891 to the United States Senate, accorded with this popular expectation. But Mr. Vilas got no further. His was one of the many political careers in America which came to a rather sudden stop, without any fault on the individual's part, but rather from the course of circumstances over which he had little or no control. The Democratic party left Mr. Vilas on the silver question, and as soon as it had recovered from that lunacy, there was no Democratic party left in Wisconsin, the new sociological issues raised by Roosevelt and La Follette respectively having taken the place in the popular mind of the old-time party divisions. And in this new alignment Mr. Vilas found no place.

AN INTREPID PRESS PERPLEXED.

By Jerome A. Hart.

XXX.

When the governor and General Herman had witnessed the impressive march of the Vigilantes to and from the jail for their prisoners, and when they learned of the swift justice that had been meted out to the condemned men by the Vigilante tribunal, they began to realize how powerful were the forces with which they had to deal.

As yet, Herman had been utterly unable to obtain arms. The governor had sent a trusted henchman, one Richard Mahoney, down to Santa Josefa to secure the arms in the militia armory there. But Jackson had just learned that the messenger had failed in his mission. The arms had been duly secured, loaded on a sloop, and brought up the bay. But as they were nearing the city, a scow schooner, apparently carelessly sailed, came alongside, fastened grappling hooks to their shrouds, placed a guard with cocked pistols over the sloop's crew, transferred the guns and ammunition to the schooner, and took their leader, Mahoney, prisoner. When the governor read this astounding incident to Herman from a dispatch which he had just received by a courier the general fairly boiled with rage.

"Why, these men are drunk with power!" he shouted. "That is piracy, governor—piracy on the high seas. Every man connected with that act, either as principal or accessory, is liable to be hanged under the United States laws."

"Yes, general, but the United States laws work very slowly," replied the governor. "In the meantime the State government is defied, and we must endeavor to assert its power. I find myself blocked at every turn—particularly by the difficulty of obtaining information. The only newspaper here which is not in awe of the Vigilantes is the Clarion. Its editor, Newton, has requested me to apply to him for news, and he will gladly keep me posted. Let us go to Newton's office, general."

There they were at once shown into the private office of the editor-in-chief, who had won some little fame on the dueling field as well as on the editorial tripod. Although he greeted the two gentlemen cordially, Newton betrayed such suppressed excitement that the governor inquired the cause.

Newton's response seemed enigmatic. "Have you seen this morning's Clarion, might I ask, governor?" he inquired.

"No. I have been so much occupied today that I have not had time to look at the papers at all, although I read your journal regularly, Mr. Newton."

"Then look at that, sir," exclaimed Newton indignantly, holding a microscopic sheet before the two gentlemen. "Look at that—do you recognize it?"

"At this distance, I do not. Although I am familiar with most of the newspapers here, that little sheet is strange to me."

"And yet," said Newton, dramatically, "that, governor, is the Clarion." And he spread out the tiny journal and glared at it.

"What?" exclaimed the governor in surprise. "Is that the Clarion? Why, what has happened to your newspaper, Mr. Newton?"

Newton shook his head. "That," said he, gazing mournfully at the little sheet, "is all that is left of the once prosperous Clarion. That is the work of the Vigilantes."

"How can that be?" asked the governor. "I confess I do not understand you."

"Gentlemen," began the editor, with an oratorical air, "when the deplorable events which are now afflicting our community were casting their shadows before them, the Clarion did not hesitate to express its honest and unprejudiced views. We stated then, as we state now, that every community should be ruled by the duly elected and constituted authorities."

Here both of his hearers nodded approval. "What has been the result of that declaration, gentlemen?" declaimed Newton in measured tones. "How has this community rewarded the Clarion for its advocacy of ideas which are absolutely rudimentary in their honesty and truth? Look, gentlemen," said the aggrieved editor, holding up another newspaper. "Look at that! Do you recognize that sheet?"

"It resembles the Argus," replied Herman, "although I must confess it looks much larger than the Argus."

"It is the Argus, gentlemen," solemnly asserted Newton, "puffed up, crammed, stuffed with Vigilante pap. And the reason of its bloated and drowsical appearance is because the Argus is batten on advertising unjustly taken from the columns of the Clarion."

"What brought about this extraordinary change in the two newspapers?" asked the governor.

Editor Newton gazed with melancholy eyes on his shrunken sheet. "Gentlemen," said he, "it all sprung from an article which I wrote and printed in the Clarion concerning the unfortunate encounter which caused the present Vigilante organization. With your permission I will read it to you."

With a certain enjoyment of his own prose, even if it had wrought his ruin, the editor began:

"Intense excitement was caused in this city last evening by a street affray between Mr. Clancy and Mr. Fitzwilliams." Newton paused. "Here I will interrupt myself, gentlemen," he said, "long enough to remark that the use of the word 'affray' in this article called forth abuse from my contemporaries. Some of them hint that Fitzwilliams was shot unawares by Clancy, and that it was not an 'affray' but an 'assassination.' To this I have replied that I am prepared to defend, in the manner customary among gentlemen, my use of this term. But to resume my reading:

"Motives of delicacy, needless to explain, force us to abstain from commenting on this affair. It is sub judice. It is now before the courts. But we could not justify ourselves in refraining from the sternest condemnation of the present mob spirit. At a time when the courts of justice are regularly administered, and when there exists no necessity for such an illegal organization, we strongly condemn the conspirators now defying the law. We learn that a number of highly respectable merchants, some of them our warm friends, are mixed up in this Vigilance Committee. None the less, we wish to be understood as unqualifiedly condemning the movement. We refrain from expressing any opinion on the affray between Mr. Clancy and Mr. Fitzwilliams. If Mr. Clancy be guilty, let him be punished. If he be innocent, we will express our conviction to that effect before the whole world. But he must have a fair and legal trial."

Here Editor Newton paused again, and gazed at his auditors.

"This was evidently printed before the attack on the jail," remarked Jackson.

"Yes, governor," replied Newton. "It was written the day after the—er—mur—ahem—affray. Now, general, what do you suppose was the first result of this perfectly honest expression of opinion?"

"I am sure I have no idea," was the reply.

"It resulted," went on the editor, "in the receipt that very afternoon of a note reading as follows:

"To the editor of the Clarion—Dear Sir: The undersigned, importers, commission merchants, and auctioneers in this city, will no longer subscribe to or advertise in the Clarion."

"Appended to this document were the names of two hundred and fifteen of the leading firms of this city, and among them, gentlemen," mourned Newton, with tears in his voice, "were the fifteen leading auctioneers."

"The auctioneers? Indeed!" commented the governor. "That would mean a heavy loss to you, would it not, Mr. Newton?"

"Yes, a very heavy loss," replied the editor. "You perhaps know, governor, and General Herman as a banker certainly does, that the largest volume of business done here is that conducted by the auctioneers. Why, the auction ads alone mean thousands of dollars a week to a newspaper—t-h-o-u-s-a-n-d-s, gentlemen!"

"How did you receive this attack on the liberty of the press, may I ask?" inquired Herman.

"With absolutely unruffled serenity, gentlemen," replied the editor explosively. "It is true that I was forced to cut down the size of my journal to the insignificant sheet you see before me. But the spirit that animates it is still as it was of old. The day after receiving this offensive and threatening manifesto from the traders and shop-keepers of the city I printed the following paragraph:

"We have some words of explanation to make this morning in regard to the Clarion's diminished size. Our editorial paragraph concerning the Committee of Vigilance gave offense to a number of persons, who thereupon immediately signified their displeasure by canceling their subscriptions. Also a number of merchants who had already taken offense at this paper—perhaps because in the past it had criticized them for unwarrantable speculations—collected upon the leading auctioneers and by threats forced them to withdraw their advertisements from the Clarion. Some shop-keepers on Front Street gathered together a number of copies of the Clarion yesterday, and made a bonfire of them. Some two hundred and twelve persons in all withdrew their subscriptions yesterday from this journal. We appeal to our citizens to say whether they are willing that freedom of speech should be crushed out. The sacred position of a public journalist must not be degraded by compulsory subservience to the adherents of a cabal. The Front Street merchants may damage the business of the Clarion, but we assure them that they can not control the sentiments of its editor."

Newton paused, and polished his heated brow with a large bandana. He gazed at his visitors. "What do you think of that, gentlemen?" he asked.

"Bravely spoken!" said the governor.

"Hear! hear!" cried Herman.

"I thank you for your approval, gentlemen," said the editor, with dignity. "But the most discouraging, the most revolting part of my narrative remains to be told. I have already pointed out to you the prosperous condition of my rival, the Argus. When you hear in what way this was brought about, you will grow sick at heart. Up to the very hour of going to press that sheet was uncertain what position it would take. It had even prepared two editorials, copies of which were brought to me by a trusted employee of mine who took—er—employment—er—temporarily with the Argus. Here is the first of the two editorials prepared by my cowardly contemporary. Pray listen to it:

"The so-called Vigilantes have defied the law. They bear the brand of treason. They can no more escape that brand than could Benedict Arnold. There are huckstering sheets that batten on the business patronage of these truculent Vigilante shop-keepers—low newspapers that, fungus-like, have sprung from putrefaction, and fill the air with their noisome stench. When the Vigilantes and their newspaper defenders shall have been crushed, these newspapers will sink beneath the indignation of reasserted law, and of loyalty to our common country. As for the Vigilantes themselves, we do not see how men in their senses can lend themselves to the perpetration of such a dreadful crime. The governor is about to issue a proclamation calling on them to disperse. The entire forces of the State must be called out to suppress the insurrection. If insufficient, the Federal government will lend its assistance. After the issuance of the governor's proclamation the Vigilantes are guilty of treason. Any Vigilantes found with arms after that proclamation is issued are subject to death by the halter."

"That is good, sound, Law-and-Order doctrine," said the governor. "I did not know that the Argus had taken such ground. I am glad to hear it."

"Audi olteram partem," intoned the editor solemnly. "Hear the other side! There are always two sides to everything, and the Argus is usually on both. In this particular case it had to stand by one, and it was in doubt. Here is the second editorial the Argus editor prepared:

"The members of the Committee of Vigilance have a great work before them. True, they are engaged in what might be called a revolution, but revolution is an inherent right. If we stop short of taking the administration of the laws from the hands of corrupt and inefficient men, then we voluntarily place ourselves on untenable ground. The existing revolution is right or wrong. If right, it must be made effective and complete. If wrong, we are subject to punishment. The justification must be placed on the ground of the inherent right of revolution. We can not afford to recognize the power now lodged in the hands of corrupt and inefficient men as officers of the law. It is folly to attempt to dodge the question. We must meet the question boldly as men and patriots."

Again the editor looked at them interrogatively. "And what do you think of that, gentlemen, may I ask?" said he.

"Rank Vigilante stuff as was ever penned!" cried Herman warmly.

"At least it is treasonable, even if rather inclined to trim," added the governor.

"Well, that is what the Argus printed. And I assure you, gentlemen, that up to half an hour of going to press they did not know which of these two editorials to print. McRae, the editor of the base sheet, could not make up his mind, even after consulting two or three of his associates. At last they settled the thing and how do you think they did it?"

"No idea," said Herman.

"They tossed up a half-dollar to decide," uttered Newton in low and cutting tones. "Heads or tails—that is the way the policy of that loathsome sheet is formulated. They might as well load a newspaper with shaking dice."

"How did the Argus treat the Vigilantes after the merchants attacked you, Mr. Newton?" asked the governor.

"With fulsome flattery, sir," replied Newton. "The paper was so inundated with advertising that they were obliged to increase its size, as you see. Let me read you some of the sycophantic words with which the fawned upon the hands that fed them. Listen:

"The present era of justice administered by the people themselves has, by the corrupt organs of the ballot-box stuffers, been called 'a reign of terror.' Do good and just men so regard it? We answer emphatically no. They know that it is the only salvation of the noble city they have toiled to build up. There is a earnest feeling prevailing among all good citizens that it was high time to do something to redeem the character of our city. Had the Committee of Vigilance come forward we would have been lost, and our city would have become the prey of gamblers, debauchees and political hell-hounds. Now, owing to the leadership of the Committee of Vigilance, we are about to reclaim our city from these criminals, and inaugurate an era of justice and people's rights."

"As a result of this indecent flap," said Newton solemnly, "the Argus was at once rewarded with the patronage of the auctioneers. And I give you my word of honor, gentlemen, that they are running this morning fifty-seven columns of advertising where last week they had only nineteen."

It was difficult to wrest the editor from the consideration of his personal grievances, but his two visitors were intent on learning all they could about the happenings of the day. By close questioning they finally succeeded in getting from him some useful items of news. They asked first about Judge Tower expressed intention to grant a writ of habeas corpus for the body of some prisoner incarcerated in Fort Vigilant.

"I am informed by my correspondent at the capitol that Tower is inflexible," replied Newton. "Already the writ has been prepared here by Mulligan's friend and the papers will be served at Fort Vigilant as soon as Tower affixes his signature."

"Have petitions been submitted to any other judges inquired the governor.

"Yes, I hear that Fox has been applied to, but I refuses to act."

"Why?"

"He says that, until Federal questions arise, the Federal courts should not interfere."

"He is not the only Federal official here who seem indisposed to protect United States citizens," remarked Herman with some acerbity.

"When is Tower expected?" asked Jackson.

"I am told, governor, that he will reach the city tomorrow," responded Newton. "He will be amazed at the disorganized condition of the Law-and-Order men. What was the result of the Law-and-Order ma

A STIRRING STORY OF THE SEA.

Randall Parrish Tells of a Stolen Yacht, a Fair Prisoner, and a Recovered Treasure.

Good stories of the sea are unaccountably scarce, for a never-failing welcome awaits them. Randall Parrish, practiced in the romance of adventure, is the author of the latest—"The Last Voyage of the Donna Isabel"—and it may well be commended, though faint echoes of earlier story-tellers come to the ear now and then as its pages are turned. There is no lack of excitement in this tale of an American adventurer, who cruises against his will, in South Pacific waters, and with all its strange mischances and desperate struggles there is still a love story entangled with the fortunes of the hero, from the first chapter.

This selection describes the second fateful meeting of the two prominent figures in the story:

My glance wandered from the motionless woman fronting me in such white eyes to Celeste, who had sunk back upon the bed, her blue eyes staring at me across the brass rail, evidently experiencing difficulty in translating my rapid English speech.

"I had enjoyed but little opportunity of examining the particular vessel we were thus employed to capture, as I dared not leave the hotel except after nightfall," I continued more slowly. "Yet I knew her place of anchorage, and that she was a steam-yacht of some seven hundred tons burden, schooner rigged, with lines promising great speed. Otherwise I relied entirely upon the knowledge of the officers under me. We boarded what I believed to be the Esmeralda soon after midnight, overcame the small harbor watch with little difficulty, captured the engine-room, and, by holding a gun at his ear, persuaded the engineer to operate his machinery in our service. The very audacity of the attempt brought comparatively easy success. The patriotic celebration in the city favored us greatly, as it left the roadstead almost totally unguarded, and we succeeded in getting safely out to sea unobserved. The main cabin had been secured by my orders when we first arrived aboard, and I came below just now, after all danger seemed far astern, to learn if any officers were hidden away here. I had examined all the other state-rooms, finding them empty, and at last opened this door in my quest. Not until I saw you did I in the slightest realize that we were on board the wrong vessel, or that we were engaged in anything except an honorable adventure of war!"

That the hasty details of my story both startled her and impressed her with its truth was evident enough, yet her lips curled with contempt, and her eyes remained unbelieving.

"How many men accompanied you?"

"A crew of twenty, with two officers."

"Peruvians, I presume?"

"No madam," reluctantly, "a hotchpotch dragged from the Seven Seas."

Her expressive face darkened, her fingers clenching again nervously about the chair-back.

"And you really expect me to believe that preposterous tale!" she burst forth, indignation shattering all ordinary bonds of speech. "You must, indeed, think very highly of my intelligence. You—why, you are a sea-robber, a pirate!"

My cheeks flushed to the harsh words. I could feel the surge of blood, yet I met her gaze quietly.

"I have told you the exact truth, Lady Darlington, as I promised," I returned, seeking to speak calmly, "without any real hope that you would believe. Yet I want you to try. It is all bad enough as it stands, without endeavoring to make it appear worse."

It is one thing to be in supreme authority on a vessel, even under incriminating circumstances, and quite another to rule only by sufferance with the danger of sudden deposition:

They came up together, two steps at a time, Tuttle in his shirt-sleeves, and, as they attained the bridge, Bill Anderson swung himself out of the hatch and started after them. I backed away, the ugly iron pin grasped in my hand.

"You'd better keep back," I warned, threateningly, "I'm ready to brain the first man who attempts to touch me."

Tuttle stopped, his jaw working savagely, his eyes on mine.

"Will you promise to keep quiet, sir, and let us get out of this?"

"Damn you, no!" stubbornly, all my senses leaving me at sight of his hateful face. "I'll speak that ship yonder if I have to fight the crew of you single-handed."

"Then fight, you cockerel, and be damned to you!" roared Anderson; and he pressed past the two of them and sprang at me.

It was hot, swift work while it lasted. The bridge, being narrow, permitted only two to come at me at a time. I struck twice, laying open the big brute's scalp, and dropping him so his head hung dangling down over the deck, his body huddled against the rail. I aimed to do as well by Tuttle, but the descending pin landed on his uplifted arm, and, before I could draw back for another blow, the fellow at the wheel released the spokes and jumped at my back, throttling me with his hands as the weight of his body crushed me to the planks. Grasping the rail, I half tore myself loose, rising to one knee, and struck him twice in the face; but others of the crew came tumbling on top of us, pinning me helplessly down. It was all the work of a breathless moment, and as I lay there, the knee of a negro crunching into my chest, I saw De Nova spring to the wheel and whirl it hard down, while Tuttle, his left arm dangling, his teeth set from pain, began jangling the bells in the engine-room. Scarcely had the echo reached us when a strange voice hailed sharply from out the dense fog.

"Steamer ahoy! What vessel is that?"

From my uncomfortable position I could perceive the startled Tuttle staring directly ahead of him into the fog-bank, hesitating as to what course to pursue. This his nasal voice answered:

"Steamer-yacht Cormorant, Panama to Easter Island, for pleasure. Who are you?"

"H. M. S. Victory, on cruise. Stand by, while we send a boat."

A deep oath sprang to Tuttle's lips, his fingers convulsively gripping the rail. Then he appeared to rally, the very intensity of his fear making a new man out of him. "Lively, lads, clear the deck," he commanded harshly. "Here, one of you take the wheel. Now, De Nova, bundle that fighting fool down into the chart-house, and stand over him with a gun. Two of you fellows carry the hoatswain into the fo-castle; lively, now."

They were certainly expeditious enough in my case, dragging me bumping down the steps, and flinging me in between table and bench with a violence that made me groan. I caught the glimmer of a steel barrel in De Nova's hand as he drew close the sliding door.

There were other terrors on the yacht after the mutiny had been quelled:

"We do not believe in ghosts, Mr. Stephens, you and I," her voice growing firmer with conviction. "Our education and training make such a conception impossible. There is a natural cause for this, a reason, an actual presence back of the shadow. There must be, and we must find it. It frightens me; I am trembling now from head to foot, yet I will not believe anything so horrible. Where did you stand when you saw this apparition?"

I stepped back to the spot beside the stove, realizing that she still clung tightly to me.

"Here, and I lifted my eyes like this."

She leaned eagerly forward, her breath on my cheek, her fingers clutching my arm.

"Why—why, this is a mirror you are looking into! See! What is it reflected there? Turn up the light until I locate the spot. Oh, I see now—the open pantry door. Mr. Stephens, there is where your ghost stood—it was the shadow of a man reflected in that mirror."

Our eyes met, all my former terror fled, shame and anger dominating me.

"Dade?"

"It might be—certainly some one who sought in that way to terrorize officers and crew, and thus compel them to turn back. Whoever it was, he killed Mr. Tuttle, and now seeks to accomplish the same end with you. What are you going to do?"

"Trace him down. The last time the fellow went directly from here to the fore-castle. There must be a passageway from stem to stern."

She caught me as I turned, her gray eyes wide with apprehension.

"You will take me with you?"

"That will be impossible, Lady Darlington. I know nothing regarding this passage amidships, but it must surely lead through the coal bunkers and the engine-room."

"But—but I can not let you go alone," utterly forgetting to conceal her agitation. "Truly, I could not bear to do it. Whoever this man may be, he will become desperate when cornered. Your very life will be in danger."

"And you really care?" my hand clasping hers, my eyes eagerly searching the gray depths.

Driven among floating ice in the lower latitudes, it is certain that the vessel will meet disaster, and these passages describe the crisis:

Suddenly there came a tremendous shock which sent me sprawling forward, and flung Dade headlong against the wall. As I struck the deck a thunderous crash and roar sounded forward; the stern of the vessel seemed to spring upward into the air, sliding us both down against the front of the cabin. Instantly there followed two muffled reports, accompanied by a further uplifting of the stern. Everything loose came tumbling down upon us, and, as I pulled myself to my knees, I found the deck slanting upward like the steep side of a hill.

"Oh, Lord, sir, what's been done?"

"We've hit something hard; ice, likely. Jump now, and help me get out the women."

The awful, sickening poise of the stricken boat, swinging stern-up to the bottom of the waves, was enough to shatter the courage of any man, and I could read speechless terror in Dade's face. Yet the lad stayed with me, and together we clambered up the incline of the deck, gripping at the table to help us. The hanging-lamp rested flat against the beam, but continued to burn. The door on the after-cabin was either locked or had become stuck; I did not wait to learn which, but burst it open with a swift, heavy kick. The light streamed in upon a scene of chaos—overturned furniture and broken glass. Celeste lay in one corner screaming hysterically; Lady Darlington was upon her knees, holding herself partially erect by clasping the brass rail of the bed.

"Quick!" I cried, before either could speak. "Gather up all the warm clothing you can reach. We must get on deck. Here, let me help you!"

We were scarcely a minute at the task; and the four of us, laden with apparel, slid and scrambled down the slope of cabin floor to the companion-steps. Here I caught Lady Darlington more closely to me, helping her climb the inverted steps. Her face was pale, her eyes fearless.

"What is that? What has happened?"

"I hardly know myself; only that we have hit something and are badly damaged."

It was like night on deck, the enveloping fog so dense that a human form was indistinguishable five feet away. Fortunately but little wind stirred, and the sea had gone down. We clung to the rail to keep from sliding forward, and endeavored to obtain some conception as to what had occurred. I could distinguish De Nova's voice as he sang out a sharp order. I hallowed my hands and hailed. A dim smudge leaned over the rail above and peered down.

"Was zat you, monsieur?"

"Ay, with the women. What is it, De Nova, a total smash?"

"By gar, oui. Ze whole bow cave in; ze deck crush to ze main hatch; ze after-bulkhead was ze only sing w'at hold us up. Sacre, it not hold long."

Out of the deepest danger, as ever, comes a new and unexpected gift, though treasure is always a shining possibility in a mariner's outlook:

They came howling about me like so many wolves, eager to see with their own eyes, but I crowded them back, snatching the candle from De Nova's fingers and throwing the flickering light down level with the deck.

"It's a brass-bound chest, men," I cried, straightening up and facing them. "But it is going to require some hard digging to get it out. About all I can see is the handle of it."

I never comprehended before how the passion and lust for gold can express itself upon men's faces. Tense, motionless, breathing heavily, their features drawn, their eyes gleaming feverishly in the yellow flame, they stared at me and then at that ice-front, demented and speechless. No one thought of where we were—castaways, our lives the sport of winds and waves, a sodden wreck under us, our nearest port a thousand miles away across a stormy sea; all we realized at that moment was that there, just before us, under that mantle of ice, lay buried three million pesos. God! the collar of my jacket seemed choking me; I breathed as if a man's fingers clutched my throat, and I saw McKnight's burly form shaking as if he had an ague fit. Three million pesos! The hot blood rushed to my head, a lava stream, and De Nova's face, white as chalk behind his little black moustaches, seemed dancing before me ghostlike. Damn him! the fellow made me think of Salvatore, the man who, just above, frozen and dead, had guarded this treasure for one hundred and twenty-six years. I cast the suggestion aside with a curse and a laugh, grasping Kelly by the shoulder to steady myself—to realize these were real men, this task before us real work. It was like coming forth from under an anesthetic, leaving me weak as a child, yet with brain clear and faculties aroused to action. Johnson thrust forward the cleaver.

What more could be asked, after surmounting tidal waves of trouble from every quarter of the compass, than a happy conclusion, where, with a dash of the pen, the greatest difficulty of all is deftly removed? As has been shown, the novelist fares briskly forward throughout the work. There is almost breathless haste in the telling, as there was in the movement of the many encounters and complications. The reader will find no good place to rest, once embarked with the hero and his oddly assorted companions.

"The Last Voyage of the Donna Isabel," by Randall Parrish. Published by A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago; price, $1.50.

meeting this morning? I understood that you were to be present, governor—you and General Herman."

"I am sorry to say that it was very slimly attended. There were not more than a hundred men there, and most of them were lawyers. I had hoped to see there our representative business men, as well as a certain number of the brawn and sinew of the people, the mechanics and the laboring men. But they were entirely unrepresented. Furthermore, there was a crowd of ruffians outside the hall who shouted at us as we came out, and who impressed me as being hired bullies of the Vigilantes."

"That's the way they struck me. I think their intention was to break up the meeting," added Herman.

"And how are you getting along, general, in your attempt to enroll recruits for the militia?" asked Newton.

"Badly—very badly. Not only are we getting no new recruits, but the old militia companies are going over bodily to the Vigilantes. What is worse, they are taking their arms with them. I so informed the Law-and-Order meeting."

"Were there many men of prominence present at that meeting, governor?"

"Senator Burke was there, and Colonel Brewer, and one or two others. But they did not seem inclined to take a prominent part. In fact, Burke had nothing at all to say."

"I hear that some Vigilantes yesterday detected Burke engaged in a careful scrutiny of the rear of their fort from the building abutting on the court-yard," said Newton.

"Have they taken any steps in that matter?" queried the governor.

"They have been indulging in some threats in consequence concerning Burke. They even attribute to his instigation a rumored attempt to blow up the fort. It is said that some combustibles or explosives were found at the rear of the building night before last. At all events, Burke seems to think that he has lost no Vigilantes, for I hear that he is leaving for the springs."

"Humph!" grunted Herman. "Another one of our Law-and-Order heroes! Another prominent citizen in a funk!"

"I suppose you saw the two funeral processions yesterday, governor?" inquired Newton.

"No, I did not. Were they largely attended?"

"The processions themselves were very long. Clancy's funeral took place from the engine house of the Burke Fire Company. They had eighty-four carriages, eighty horsemen, and four hundred firemen in uniform. It was a fine sight. However, there were very few in the procession outside of the firemen and some of Clancy's political friends. The people on the sidewalks seemed indifferent."

"How about Costa's funeral? Any excitement over that?"

"No, governor, none whatever. It was a very small affair compared with Clancy's. You see, Costa was only a gambler. He did not run with the fire-boys, so there was no organized effort to give him a good send-off. It's true, Bella Costa hired all the carriages she could get in town, although most of them were empty. But Bella swears she will put up a bigger monument than Clancy's if she has to make it a hundred feet high. And I believe she will."

"Now that these two men have been executed, there remains but one prisoner in Fort Vigilant—is that not so?" inquired Herman.

Just as the editor was about to reply, a messenger entered and placed a note on his desk. He read it and seemed startled.

"A moment ago, general, I would have replied 'yes' to your question," he said. "Then I would have told you that there was but one prisoner in Fort Vigilant—Reuben Mulligan. But from this note I have just received from my city editor I find that there is now no prisoner there."

"Indeed?" said the governor looking up with interest. How is that? Have the Vigilantes released Mulligan?"

"No, but God has," said the editor, solemnly. Reuben Mulligan was found dead in his cell this morning, an artery opened in his arm. The Vigilantes give out that it was suicide."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Copyright 1908 by Jerome A. Hart.

From Winnipeg comes news of the death of Louis Riel, the only son of the leader of the Red River Rebellion in Western Canada, which first brought Lord Wolseley into prominence, and made him Sir Garnet. In the approach of Colonel Wolseley, Riel fled across the border into the United States, where he remained for some years. Returning to Canada he was elected member of the House of Commons, but in 1885 he again headed an armed insurrection, and this time he was captured, tried for treason, convicted, and hanged. His son Louis, who has just passed away, was only thirty-six, and was employed as an engineer on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

Diplomatic circles are discussing with lively and on the whole sympathetic interest the report which reaches us that in the event of Taft's election his selection as ambassador to the Court of St. James will be Henry Dabot Lodge.

One-fourth of Alaska is a coal field, is announced at Washington by Alfred H. Brooks, chief geologist of the Alaskan Division of the Geological Survey.

MONSIEUR'S MISADVENTURE.

M. Ravenot, collector for ten years in a banking house, was a model employee. Never had he given occasion for the least criticism, and never had the slightest error in his accounts been noted. He lived alone, made few acquaintances, was temperate in all his habits, and seemed happy and satisfied. If perchance some one remarked to him, "It must be tempting to handle such large sums of money," he would reply:

"Why? Money that does not belong to one is not money."

So, when he failed to make his usual appearance one day, no suspicion of wrongdoing on his part entered the minds of any one who knew him. Even the supposition of a crime seemed impossible. The police traced his movements the day before the disappearance. He had presented his last check near the Montrouge gate at about 5 o'clock, the receipts amounting to about 200,000 francs. After that, nothing could be discovered. It was finally decided that the collector had been the victim of thieves. He had doubtless been robbed, murdered, and thrown into the river.

One man in Paris shrugged his shoulders on reading all this in the daily papers: that man was Ravenot himself.

At the very moment when the expert detectives of the police force lost track of him, the collector was making his way to the Seine, along deserted streets. Hiding under the arch of a bridge, he donned a suit of civilian's clothes, brought there the night before, put the 200,000 francs into his pocket, made a bundle of his uniform, weighted it with a stone, and threw it into the river. He then walked quietly back to the city and took lodging at a hotel.

By taking advantage of his start in time, he could have hoarded a train and got out of the country. He was too shrewd, however, to believe that a few miles of space would protect him from the law, and he had no illusions as to the fate awaiting him. He would be caught at last. This fact accepted, he decided upon his course of action.

The following day he put the 200,000 francs into a large envelope, sealing it with five seals. He then repaired to a notary's office.

"Monsieur," said he to the lawyer, "in this envelope are funds which I wish to deposit in a safe place, as I am about to set out on a long journey and I do not know when I shall return. Is there anything to prevent my leaving this paper in your keeping?"

"Nothing," replied the notary. "Shall I give you a receipt for it?"

A receipt! He had not thought of that. To whom could he have it made out? Not in his own name, surely. If he were to keep it on his person he would lose all the benefits of his act. He hesitated for a moment in face of this unforeseen obstacle, then replied:

"I am quite alone in the world. The trip I am about to take is hazardous. A receipt would risk being lost or destroyed. On account of this condition of things, could you not keep the paper with you, making a record of it? In that case, it will merely be necessary for me to mention my name to you or your successor on my return. You can make a note on the envelope that it can be reclaimed only under that condition. If there is any risk, you can see that I am the only one to take it."

"Very well. Your name, please."

"Henry Duverger," replied the collector, without hesitation.

When he was in the street, Ravenot drew a sigh of relief. The first part of his programme was carried out. No matter what happened now, the money was out of harm's way. He knew what was awaiting him, but he reasoned that at the end of his term of imprisonment he could claim the fruit of his theft and live in comfort to the end of his days without drudgery. He would buy an estate in the country and he known to every one as M. Duverger.

He waited another day and then deliberately gave himself up to the authorities. What was the use of losing any time? He did not tell what disposition he had made of the funds, however. He merely said:

"I don't know where the money is. I dropped asleep on a bench in the park and was robbed."

Because of his irreproachable antecedents, he was given only a short sentence—five years. He received his sentence without a quiver of the eyelids. He was only thirty-five years old. At forty he would be free and rich. He considered his imprisonment as only a necessary sacrifice.

He was a model prisoner, just as he had been a model collector. He watched the days pass by without impatience or ennui, taking the best care of his health.

At last the moment of his deliverance arrived! He accepted the trifle accorded to departing convicts, but his only anxiety was to get to the notary's office to reclaim his deposit. How often he had dreamed of this hour. Over and over again he had rehearsed the scene he was about to enact. He would enter the office. Of course the notary would not recognize him.

"Your business, monsieur?"

Then he would reply:

"I have come for a deposit made here five years ago."

"What sort of a deposit? In whose name?"

"In the name of Monsieur—"

Here he stopped abruptly and exclaimed:

"I can't remember the name!"

He thought and thought, but to no purpose. He dropped down on a bench in the park, a faintness stealing over him. He said to himself:

"Collect yourself, and think. Monsieur—Monsieur—it began with—what letter?"

For an hour he explored the depths of his memory, seeking some clew, some thread, that would lead up to the missing name. It seemed to dance before him, around him, eluding him just as he was about to seize upon it.

At first, this was only unpleasant; then it became irritating, even physically painful. Waves of heat swept over his body. His muscles contracted and he grew restless. He hit his feverish lips and was torn with the desire to cry out or to fight. Finally he rose up impatiently and thought:

"There's no use in trying to remember the name. It will probably come to me of itself if I wait."

But a haunting idea can not be banished so easily. No matter how much he watched the passers-by or listened to the noise of the streets, under it all ran the refrain:

"Monsieur—Monsieur."

Night came on. The walks were deserted. The unfortunate man, quite worn out, went to a small hotel, hired a room and threw himself down on the bed without undressing. He did not fall asleep until daylight. He awoke rested, but his momentary satisfaction was destroyed by the haunting thought of the forgotten name.

"Monsieur—monsieur—what could it be?"

A new feeling now began to torture him—fear. What if he were never to remember the name! He left the hotel and walked for hours in the vicinity of the notary's office. For the second time night fell. He fairly dug his nails into his skull, muttering:

"I shall certainly go mad!"

He wandered about, tortured by his thoughts, hitting his head against lamp-posts, jostling the people he passed, and getting in the way of carriages. He wished some one would attack him to give him an excuse to fight, or that a horse would trample on his tortured body.

Finally he saw the Seine below him, sparkling in the sunlight. Mechanically, he descended the steps leading to the river, and lay down on the bank to bathe his hot brow. He felt the water creep over his head and neck. He felt himself slipping downwards, but he made no attempt to cling to the bank. He was now in the river. The chill roused him to action. He struggled, stretched out his arms, and tried to swim. He went down, rose again, and suddenly, in a last, despairing effort, his eyes filled with a wild light, he shouted:

"I have found the name! Duverger! Help! Help! Du—"

But the wharf was deserted. The water lapped softly against the great stone columns supporting the bridge; the shadowy arches flung the name back in echo. The waves rose and fell, reflecting the green and red lights. One, rolling in higher than the others, seemed to lick the shore greedily,—then all was still!

—Translated for the Argonaut from the French by H. Twitchell.

Moving Picture Photography in Colors.

It has been found possible to take photographs for cinematograph reproduction by a modification of the Lumière process which show the natural colors of the objects photographed, no matter how rapid the manipulation. The inventor has recently exhibited his work in Paris and London and describes it in simple terms:

When I show you a wax phonograph or gramophone record, and observe that it is a band of music or the voice of a singer, you are aware that it is in reality an engraven record of the complex sound waves set in motion by these performances, and you know that when the wax tablet or cylinder is placed in a suitable machine these sound waves can be repeated, and the original music reproduced in the same way. When I show you a small roll of cinematograph film, bearing, say 5000 little photographs, these photographs having no trace of color about them, you are to understand that they carry within themselves in their long range of tones and half-tones, so to speak, a record of the color waves received by the lens when the picture was taken, and when this film is run through a hioscope projector, fitted with the proper attachment, the recorded color waves are again set in motion, and the scene is reproduced in its proper colors.

What Mr. Smith says of the appearance of the films is certainly true. Looking at them as one holds them in the hand no trace of color can be detected, but the moment they are put in the projector behind the color filter all the varying shades of color are thrown with life-like perfection on the screen.

Beginning October 1 the postage rate applicable to letters mailed in the United States for delivery at any place in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland will be two cents an ounce or fraction of an ounce.

At last the title for the new DeKoven-Smith comic opera, in which Grace Van Studford is to star this season, has been selected. It is to be "The Golden Butterfly."

The Utopian New Theatre.

New York is to have a nonprofit-making, play-producing theatre, sustained at least in part by subscription, which its enthusiastic holders believe will accomplish great things for dramatic art. The first official statement of the promoters guarantees that the institution is to be democratic and intended to amuse in a worthy way. The building of the New Theatre is to be finished a year hence. It faces Central Park West, between Sixty-Second and Sixty-Third Streets, and will have entrances upon three sides. With the selection of an executive staff, including Winthrop Ames as director, Lee Shubert as business manager, John Corbin as literary manager, the way has been cleared for thousands of ambitious playwrights to offer their wares to the New Theatre.

A reading committee composed of competent, broad-viewed and experienced men is to be formed and every play submitted to the New Theatre management will be promptly and carefully read. The discovery and exploitation of unknown American dramatists is to be one of the primary objects of the enterprise. Dramas that will make their appeal to the whole body of intelligent playgoers are to be sought. Brisk, wholesome comedy and popular plays are to be welcomed. The financial scheme of the New Theatre provides that only the running expenses and a low rent shall be earned, so that the exigencies of profit-making will not hinder the management. The reading committee has not yet been appointed, and for that reason authors are requested not to forward manuscripts until announcement is made of the formation of the committee, because there is as yet no provision for dealing with manuscripts.

Winthrop Ames, the director, specialized at Harvard in dramatic literature, studied American and European acting and stagecraft, and his practical experience in American theatrical management has been gained in the last four years conducting the Castle Square Theatre in Boston, a stock company with a weekly change of hill. Mr. Ames took this position because it gave him the greatest range of experience with plays and audiences, and he achieved a reputation. Mr. Ames has studied over sixty European theatres and opera-houses. He has already purchased a site and has had plans drawn for his proposed theatre in Boston, but has postponed that project to assume the directorship of the New Theatre in New York City.

Mr. Corbin was born in Chicago, and is a graduate of Harvard, where he took the degree of master of arts (1893) with honors in English. His honor thesis, "The Elizabethan Hamlet," was awarded the Sohler prize, and was subsequently published in book form. Afterward he pursued his studies in the English drama at Balliol College, Oxford. He wrote "Schoolboy Life in England," "An American at Oxford," and "A New Portrait of Shakespeare," the latter being a critical account of an undescribed portrait. Subsequently he was instructor in English at Harvard, assistant editor of Harper's Magazine, and on the editorial staff of the Encyclopædia Britannica. For seven years he was dramatic critic in New York—one year on Harper's Weekly, and three years each on the New York Times and the Sun.

Lee Shubert's business management of the New Theatre will be entirely separate from the enterprises with which his firm is identified, which include the conduct of Daly's Theatre, the Lyric, Majestic, Casino, Herald Square, and Hippodrome, and theatres in seven other cities. Plays will be presented on the repertory system, with several plays in production at the same time, presented in alternation, continuing for longer or shorter periods according to public favor. Ten or fifteen plays can be produced each season without cutting short the runs of popular successes. Opera comique will be given one night and maybe at one matinée a week. These operas will be given by singers and orchestra of the Metropolitan Opera Company and will be of the lighter type unsuited to the Metropolitan. Well-balanced, capable, all-around companies will be aimed at rather than companies conducted on a star basis.

American and English newspapers have a way of mangling the name of the Sultan of Turkey. Often he is called simply "Ahdul"—nothing more. Sometimes it is "Ahdul the Artful," "Ahdul the Wary." The proper way to write the name, according to the London Chronicle, is "Ahd-ul-Hamid," or, as some would transliterate it, "Ahd-l-Hamid." This means "Servant (or slave) of the praised one," i. e., God, or Allah. The "ul" or "l" merely represents the Arabic definite article, which in writing is always joined to the following word. "Ahd" is a common first name with Mahometans, as in Ahd-ul-Kadir, Ahd-ul-Latif, Abd-ul-Aziz. "Ahdul," with or without the Hamid, makes nonsense, but no one seems to notice it.

Germany already taxes the bachelor, it seems. The Strasburg town council not long ago adopted as an experiment a sliding scale of payment with regard to municipal employees' salaries, discrimination being made in favor of married couples with children. A standard schedule of salaries is the basis of the scheme, but it only benefits in full married men with families up to three children.

Lolita Robertson, whose dramatic career began at the Alcazar Theatre in this city, is now a member of the "Commencement Days" company in Boston. The comedy was written by Virginia Frame and Margaret Mayo.

LA MARQUISE

TURKISH CIGARETTES

"FINEST MADE"

10 for 25 Cents

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

By Sidney G. P. Coryn.

In announcing the appearance of a new work on Alfred the Great, the John Lane Company remarks on the "curious fact" that Alfred, whose importance in history it is hard to over-estimate, has been rather overlooked in favor of King Arthur. But perhaps it is not altogether a case of historical importance which has never been able to compete either in the popular imagination or in literature with the glamour surrounding the legendary hero. The places occupied by King Arthur, his queen, and his court, are not due so much to political achievements or even to the mass of mythical romance associated with them as to the fact that they represent a progressive moral ideal and set forth a picture of human temptation, fall, expiation, and redemption. King Alfred is a fine figure of ancient history, great in peace and war and statecraft, hut Arthur and Guinevere and Launcelot and the Grail belong as much to this day as to any other, because they deal with the facts of life that do not grow old and because they deal with moral aspirations that belong to all ages alike.

The Shoulders of Atlas, by Mary E. Wilkins Freeman. Published by Harper & Brothers, New York; $1.50.

Mrs. Freeman sets her stage in a New England country town and her characters are displayed with all the convincing skill of her earlier works. There is Henry Whitman, who has worked all his life in a shoe store and who finds the leisure of his suddenly acquired prosperity so irksome that he furtively returns to his bench. There is his inimitable wife, practical, sharp of tongue, but with a heart overflowing with human kindness. There is Eliza Farrell, whose beauty is a cause of deep suspicion to the village virgins and whose mysterious death supplies an element of tragedy. And there is the still more beautiful Rose, who brings with her the atmosphere of the fashionable metropolis and who adapts herself to a censorious community by the strength of her beautiful character. Other figures, more or less in the background, make up the usual complement of village life, where useful duty is faithfully performed and where conscience is still stronger than ambition.

It is the dominance of conscience in Mrs. Freeman's novels that give them their great attraction, an attraction hardly second to that of faithful portrayal. The Ten Commandments are not an archaeological curiosity in Mrs. Freeman's New England town. They are living realities and guides of life, not obtrusive, but permanent facts and to be accepted as such even when violated. Mrs. Whitman's remorse after she has suppressed the unsigned and undated will which, she supposes, would dispossess her, is a fine bit of work, while the author's courage is nowhere better shown than in her sketch of Rose, the poor sex-crazy girl whose mania tempts her to the threshold of murder. It would perhaps have been better if the death of Eliza Farrell had been omitted altogether, or else entirely cleared up. We do not know if she was murdered, or died naturally or accidentally, and the incident leaves us unsatisfied, but this is a small defect in a refreshing, wholesome, and human book.

Peggy at Spinster Farm, by Helen M. Winslow. Published by L. C. Page & Co., Boston; $1.50.

When the Spinster and her niece tire of city life they determine to live for a while in the country, and they are fortunate to have any choice in the matter. The niece has a lover who lurks inconspicuously in the background, while as for the Spinster she would marry the professor in a moment but for the recollection of an earlier admirer, who has gone his way but who perhaps may return.

But the object of the book is not to tell us about the lovers, who considerately show up and fulfill the purpose of their being unobtrusively and in the final pages. We are more interested in the description of the country life with its appreciation of nature and the gentle companionships that are denied us by the city. The Spinster and Peggy have a quiet sense of humor of their own and they convey their experiences with a quaint enjoyment that holds us irresistibly.

Letters of Cortes, Translated and Edited, with a Biographical Introduction and Notes Compiled from Original Sources, by Francis Augustus MacNutt. Published in two volumes by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.

The appearance of the second volume of this work will be hailed with satisfaction by students of the Spanish conquest. The letters themselves are of the highest importance as a concise and authentic story from the pen of Cortes himself, while their value is increased by the biographical introduction and notes that show every mark of conscientious and careful accuracy.

The letters are five in number, and they are addressed to the Emperor Charles V. Volume I was devoted to the first two letters, and we have now the third, fourth, and fifth letters, and a fragment of a letter from Bishop Zumarraga. The three letters of the present volume are dated respectively May 15, 1522, October 15, 1524, and September 3, 1526. Together they constitute a minute and detailed history for the four years and a half, a history unimpeachable at the points of scope and authority. The third letter occupies 145 pages, the fourth letter sixty pages, and the fifth 126 pages. With other matter we have a volume of 374 pages boldly printed and artistically bound.

The illustrations are not numerous, but they are of exceptional interest. As a frontispiece we have a portrait of Charles V in 1519, reproduced from an old print. Then there is a plan of Mexico City, from "The Conquest of Mexico," by Diaz del Castillo. The two remaining illustrations are maps, the first being of Yucatan and the adjacent territories, compiled by Dudley Costello in 1854, and the second being a map of the South Sea and the Gulf of California, from Lorenzana's Hist. de Nueva España, 1770.

The Nun, from the French of René Bazin. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York; $1.

This is one of the most notable of the novels inspired by the campaign against the congregations in France. We have an exquisite picture of the four Sisters of St. Hildegarde at Lyons devoting their lives to education, to charity, and to self-discipline. Then comes the order for expulsion and the Sisters go out into the world, helpless and friendless, to earn such living as they can find. Sister Pascale is the youngest among them and the most liable to succumb to the temptations from which she had sheltered herself in the cloister because she had realized that "I should be more easily ruined than most girls. I ought to take refuge." There is something strangely pathetic in the vicissitudes of these poor women, desolate and scattered, and in the case of Pascale pathos gives way to tragedy as her pretty face leads her into temptation and so down the road to shame and death.

The book is of course written with the intention to arouse sympathy for the congregations. And we may indulge in sympathy to the utmost without failing in our recognition of the justice of a law which is no more than the assertion of the supremacy of the people.

In the Woods and on the Shore, by Richard D. Ware. Published by L. C. Page & Co., Boston.

The true sportsmen will find here a book after his own heart. It is the work of a sportsman and the stories are of actual experience, told with all the enthusiasm that only experience can give. The eleven chapters are entitled "With the Newfoundland Stags," "The Black Moose," "Shore Bird Shooting," "The Beach," "Wild Fowl Decoying," "Two Bears," "The Opening of the Season," "The Trout of Nepisquit," "Brant Shooting at Monomoy," "Battery Shooting," and "The Hunted." A large number of illustrations from the author's own photographs are a valuable addition to the book, specially worthy of praise being the remarkable picture entitled "The Death of the Black Moose."

Principles of Psychic Philosophy, by Charles B. Newcomb. Published by Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company, Boston; $1.50.

Mr. Newcomb is well known as a translator of the vagaries of the New Thought into a sane and helpful philosophy. His first volumes were among the best, if not the best, of their kind, while his present book, although in a different form, is no less suggestive and valuable. There are twelve chapters and the author suggests that two days be given to each. We do not know if there is any special virtue in such a plan, but the temptation to read the whole book at one sitting is very strong. It is certainly full of the kind of teaching conducive both to health and to happiness.

Old Spanish Masters, engraved by Timothy Cole, with historical notes by Charles H. Caffin, and comments by the engraver. Published by the Century Company, New York.

The letter-press of this fine work rivals the illustrations in value and interest. They are thirty-one full-page illustrations, being reproductions from Murillo, El Greco, Velasquez, Morales, Ribera, Zurbaran, Cano, and Goya. The ten chapters are devoted to "Early Native Art and Foreign Influence," "Beginnings of Italian Influence," "The Development of Italian Influence," "Conclusion of Italian Influence," "Culmination of Native Art in the Seventeenth Century," "The Seventeenth Century School of Valencia," "The Seventeenth Century School of Andalusia" (in two chapters), "Decline of Native Painting," and "The Bourbon Dynasty." As a study of Spanish art, this work deserves the highest praise for its lucidity and insight.

Under the title of "Folks Back Home" the McClure Company, New York, have published a volume of short stories, thirteen in number, by Eugene Wood. They are narratives of simple folk, photographically accurate, humorous, tender, and pathetic by turns.

The Cooking School

Best Chefs and Cooks say that the secret of their success is the careful use of

LEA & PERRINS SAUCE

THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

It gives a delightfully appetizing flavor to all Soups, Gravies and Stews, and is the ideal sauce for Steaks, Roast Meats, Fish, Salads and Rarebits.

An Excellent Appetizer.

JOHN DUNCAN'S SONS, Agents, N. Y.

Vacation Questions Quickly Settled

Call or write to Dept. Ad. 948 Flood Building for literature and beautifully illustrated booklets on California Resorts and Outing Places.

ROWING—BATHING—FISHING—CAMPING—EXCELLENT HOTELS
SOUTHERN PACIFIC TICKET OFFICES
 884 Market St., 14 Powell St., Ferry Depot

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.

David Warfield's reception at the New Alcazar Theatre last Monday evening was a demonstration which unnerved even that veteran of many triumphs. It proved conclusively the warmth of popular regard for the comedian in his old home, and was as creditable to those who took part as to the artist who has won distinction. Not alone the theatre, but the lobbies, the entrance, and even the street were filled by the enthusiastic playgoers, gathered to welcome David Belasco's brightest star. Since the opening night the crowds have been but little less in magnitude and seats are still at a premium. All comment on the play, the comedian, and the supporting company has been notably favorable, even when not in terms of high praise. "The Music Master" will continue all next week, and will be reviewed by the dramatic critic of the Argonaut in the next issue of the paper.

At the Van Ness Theatre "The Man of the Hour" will conclude its extended and successful season next Sunday night and be followed Monday evening by the big musical comedy event, "The Girl Question." This production, with its large cast and host of attractive accessories, had a run of nearly a year at one theatre in Chicago, and is expected to captivate playgoers everywhere. Prominent among the principals in the piece are Paul Nicholson, Henrietta Tedro, Marguerita de Von, Nina Collins, Thomas de Vassy, Russell Lennon, and Lewis Wood. The chorus is strong in numbers and in musical gifts, and its attractiveness furnishes the press agent with inspiration for many sentences liberally sprinkled with adjectives. In the course of the performance several new and taking songs are to be heard for the first time here. Prices for seats during this engagement will range from $1.50 to 50 cents.

Saturday evening of this week, September 12, the new and handsome Valencia Theatre will open its doors to receive its first audience. As the attraction for the opening Cecil Raleigh's play, "The Great Ruby," has been prepared, and the occasion should be of more than ordinary importance in a theatrical way, as it not only offers a drama of interest and power, one in which Ada Rehan and Blanche Bates have shone, but it introduces a new stock company to San Francisco of which much may be expected. Robert Warwick, the leading man, has won laurels as principal in support of Mary Manning, Katherine Grey, and Virginia Harned. The leading lady, Miss Willette Kershaw, is hardly less well known and admired. The stage direction is in the hands of Sedley Brown, and he has chosen a large and well balanced company to interpret the rôles which are often as important as those given to the leading artists. All indications are for an auspicious inaugural and a prosperous season at the new playhouse.

"The Wizard of the Nile" is filling the Princess Theatre to its capacity this week, as it should, for it is distinctly the best offering so far of the Hartman engagement. Mr. Hartman was never in happier mood or conditions than as Kibosh in Egypt, and that is saying a great deal. Miss Sybil Page, the prima donna who appears as Cleopatra, is pleasing in every way. Her voice is sweet if not powerful, and her presence is winning. Zoe Barnett is congenially fitted with a boy rôle, and plays with zest, taking especial enjoyment in a melodramatic bit. Sarah Edwards is handsome as the queen, and a marked improvement is to be noted in the comparative quiet of her method. Arthur Cunningham, than whom there is no more valuable or deservedly popular member of the company, is mirth-provoking and musical as Cheops. Walter Catlett does the unfortunate down-trodden king with appreciation. Myrtle Dingwall, one of the real jewels, perhaps the brightest gem in the chorus chaplet, has the rôle of Mirza, and makes it much more than an incidental attraction. Her song is done with spirit and yet with ease, and it reveals a charming voice which may well achieve greater things.

Next week comes "The Fortune Teller," with the return of Christina Nielsen, the crystal-voiced soprano, in the title-rôle. All the favorites are well placed in the long list of characters, and the comic opera, which is one of the best of the Herbert and Smith productions, should be particularly pleasing.

Beginning at the Sunday matinée performance, the new bill at the Orpheum will present a number of taking features. Chief of these, undoubtedly, will be the appearance of Charmion, the beautiful trapeze performer, who disrobes on her aerial perch with composure and careful attention to the proprieties. The act is widely praised. Frank Gardiner and Lottie Vincent will introduce their spectacular fantasy, "Winning a Queen," with scenes at Port Arthur, on the moon, and at last in a terrestrial habitation, and accompany the journeys through space and safe arrival with comedy and song. The other new people will be Fred Warren and Al Blanchard, two minstrel and musical comedy stars of renown; A. O. Duncan, the ventriloquist, who is famed in his line of business, and the Two Pucks, two clever youngsters, who will introduce new songs and novel costumes. With this programme Amelia Summerville, the Three Moshers, and the sensational Trapnell Family of acrobats will conclude their engagements.

Dustin Farnum will be seen here a few weeks hence in the elaborate production of "The Squaw Man."

Rose Stabl is coming to the Coast with "The Chorus Lady."

LITERARY NOTES.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

Leonidas Andreiyeff, who is announced as the successor of Maxim Gorky, is introduced to English readers in "Silence," a short story translated by John Cournoos and recently published in book form.

E. V. Lucas is to contribute a volume to the fiction of next season. It will be called "Over Bremerton's: An Easy-Going Story." The tale has for its hero an old second-hand bookseller.

The Houghton-Mifflin Company is preparing a little book for autumn publication, fully expecting that it will be read by everybody, for this is its title: "The Mystery of Golf: a brief Account of Games in General; their Origine; Antiquite; and Rampance; and of the game ycleped Golfe in particular; its Uniqueness; its Curiousness; and its Difficulties; its anatomical, philosophical, and moral Properties, together with divers Concepts on other Matters to its appertaining."

Maxim Gorky, who is at present living in the Island of Capri, has written a play which deals with the life of the lowest class of Russian emigrants in America.

New Publications.

It is our conviction that the man who proposes a conundrum should be executed without benefit of clergy, but for the sake of those who hold contrary opinions A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago, have published a little volume entitled "Dame Curtsey's Book of Guessing Contests." A cursory glance leads us to suppose that this book contains every known conundrum and many that are not known, while the table of contents and the classification are useful features. The price is 50 cents.

Brentano's of New York have published "The Evacuation of England," by L. P. Gratacap. Regarded as a prediction, we are a little prejudiced by the introduction, which supposes the recollection of President Roosevelt to a third term, but even the most adroit feet may sometimes slip on the road of prophecy. It may be that the Gulf Stream is to be deflected and that a resulting inhospitable climate will compel the King of England to transfer himself and his people to Australia. If this should happen the author will be entitled to say "I told you so."

Under the title of "Shelburne Essays," by Paul Elmer More, we have a collection of scholarly writings that appeared originally in the Washington University Bulletin, the Nation, and the New York Evening Post. The essays are eleven in number and their subjects are "The Greek Anthology," "The Praise of Dickens," "George Gissing," "Mrs. Gaskell," "Philip Freneau," "Thoreau's Journal," "The Centenary of Longfellow," "Donald Mitchell," "James Thomson," "Chesterfield," and "Sir Henry Wotton." The volume is published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York, and the price is $1.25.

The Lamb Shakespeare.

While we think it better that children should leave the classics alone until they are old enough to read them in their entirety, there can be nothing but praise for the edition of "The Lamb Shakespeare for Young People" now being issued by Duffield & Co., New York. "The Tempest," "A Midsummer Night's Dream," and "As You Like It" are now ready bound in cloth, gilt, for 80 cents and in limp lambskin for $1. They are certainly tasteful little volumes, each being illustrated by reproductions of the chief scenes of the action as they would be visualized by the young, while a further feature is made of songs from the plays set to music for school use. Other volumes in the press are "The Merchant of Venice," "King Henry V," and "Twelfth Night."

Educational Books.

The American Book Company, New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago, have just published the following works: "Er Soll Dein Herr Sein," edited by Martin H. Haertel, Ph. D., with notes, exercises, and vocabulary; price, 30 cents. Brownson's Xenophon, "Hellenica" (selections), edited by Carleton L. Brownson, Ph. D., with notes and vocabulary; price, $1.65. Richman and Wallach's "Good Citizenship"; price, 45 cents. Goethe's "Hermann und Dorothea," edited by Waterman T. Hewett, Ph. D., with notes and vocabulary; price, 60 cents. "Spanish Reader," by Charles Alfred Turrell, A. M.; price, 80 cents.

CURRENT VERSE.

The Sentinel Scot.

I daurna droop my weary cen,
Though dark the nicht and slow,
Gin I watch weel, the Scottish Queen
Sleeps weel in Fontainebleau.

Wha wudna guard a lassie wee,
Ower fond o' play and dance,
Borne frae her mither ower the sea
To wed the Heir o' France?

About her doors my watch I keep
Frae many foes aroun',
As Mons Meg frae its rocky steep
Guards Edinboro' toon.

It watches ower the Cannongate,
And ower the High Street there,
And keeps the toon till, soon or late
The queen comes hame aince mair.

Rest, lassie, safe frae many plots,
A Scotsman guards ye—so
Shall Mary Stuart, Queen o' Scots,
Sleep weel in Fontainebleau.
—Robert Gilbert Welsh, in Appleton's Monthly.

The Truth.

That glorious flame that was my youth
Is burnt to ashes, flung
And scattered, and I know the truth—
I, who one day was young.

Wisdom is mine my peers among,
No craft my skill defies;
I hear beyond the flattering tongue
And see beyond surmise.

And this my wisdom—I, grown wise,
Would toss it all in fee
For one of Youth's exquisite lies
That one day cheated me.

For this is wisdom's worth—to see
That ignorance was fair,
And more than Truth is Comedy
With rose leaves on her hair.
—Theodosia Garrison, in Ainslee's Magazine.

We Two in Arcady.

When we two walked in Arcady
(How long ago it seems!)
How thick the branches overhead,
How soft the grass beneath our tread!
And thickets where the sun burned red
Were full of wings astir, my dear,
When we two walked in Arcady
Through paths young hearts prefer.

Since we two walked in Arcady
(How long ago it seems!)
High hopes have died disconsolate;
The calm-eyed angel men call Fate
Stands with drawn sword before the gate
That shuts out all our dreams, my dear,
Since we two walked in Arcady
Beside the crystal streams.

Beyond the woods of Arcady
The little brooks are dry,
The brown grass rustles in the heat,
The roads are rough beneath our feet,
Above our heads no branches meet.
And yet, although we sigh, my dear,
Beyond the woods of Arcady
We see more of the sky!

—London Dispatch.

The Lost Glamour.

The world has lost its glamour, some declare,—
Life is a round of immemorable days;
Fled are the nymphs and dryads, fauns and fays,
That ranged the forest ways and found them fair.
Gone is the dream that moved mankind to dare
Heroic errandries, nor brook delays;
Round the unknown hangs no mysterious haze
To tempt the adventurous band the veil to tear.

The world has lost its glamour? Nay, not so!
The valiant knight may slay the dragon still,
For there are wrongs to right with ringing blow;
Discovery but waits the ardent will!
The glamour lost? Ask those that gallop go,
Hand clasped in band, adown yon grassy bill!
—Clinton Scollard, in New Orleans Times-Democrat.

In Beerbohm Tree's production of "Faust" at Her Majesty's Theatre in London this month the music will, as usual, form an important feature of the general entertainment. There are many composers who have been attracted by the Goethe story, among them Gounod, Berlioz, and Boito. Mr. Tree, however, has engaged Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor to compose the incidental music for his new piece. But in order that his patrons may be charmed with some familiar strains Mr. Tree has arranged for popular fragments from Gounod's opera to be played as entr'actes. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, who is an ex-student of the Royal College of Music, and who now lives at Croydon, was born in 1875, and first won fame with his poetic setting of "Hiawatha."

The death, some little time ago, of Dr. William Henry Drummond was a real loss to Canadian literature. His books, "The Habitant," "Johnnie Corneau," and "The Voyageur," are an agreeable reflection of French-Canadian life. Dr. Drummond left a collection of poems and a selection of these is to be published with the title "The Great Fight." It will be welcomed by those who appreciate the sentiment to be found so richly in old Canada.

William Pruette, once popular singer at the Tivoli Opera House, is in the cast of the New York company that has just produced "Algeria," a new musical play by Victor Herbert and Glen MacDonough.

We consider other things than profit in our business. This is one of the reasons we are always busy.

HIRSCH & KAISER

218 Post St.

Opticians

JUST A BOOK STORE

Robertson's

1539 Van Ness Ave.

NEAR PINE

"Next to the White House"

Bonestell, Richardson & Co.

PAPER

The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us.

CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE

118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna, San Francisco.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

A Positive Relief For PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all afflictions of the skin.

Removes all odor of perspiration. Desirable after Shaving. Sold everywhere, or mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample Free.

GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY, Newark, N.J.

EDUCATIONAL

IRVING INSTITUTE Boarding and Day School for Girls
2126 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

Music, languages, art, elocution. Kindergarten, primary, grammar, high school, and advanced grades. Accredited by the universities. Twenty-ninth year. Non-sectarian. Pupils admitted at any time. New term opens Monday, August 3.

MISS ELLA M. PINKHAM, Principal.

CALIFORNIA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

Irving Institute Building
Full corps of teachers in every department.
Send for catalogue.
HERMANN GENSS, President.

THE HAMLIN SCHOOL

A Boarding and Day School for Girls

Miss Hamlin announces the reopening of the school August 10. It is accredited by the California Universities and by Eastern colleges. Advanced courses of study are offered to High School graduates and to those who have left school, with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to a school diploma.

Classes in Instrumental and Vocal Music and in Drawing and Painting are formed and facilities are given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basket Ball, etc. For particulars address
MISS HAMLIN,
2230 Pacific Ave., San Francisco.

Oakland Conservatory of Music

1170 Madison Street, Oakland, Cal.

The largest, oldest established, and most thoroughly equipped school of genuine musical instruction on the Pacific Coast.
Conducted on the lines of the most noted European and Eastern schools.
Full prospectus on application.

Director, ADOLF GREGORY.

MORRISTOWN SCHOOL, Morristown, N. J.

College Preparatory Boarding School for Boys

Small classes. Individual attention. Gymnasium, quarter-mile track, athletic fields and tennis courts. Especially healthful location, an hour from New York.

F. C. WOODMAN, Headmaster.

Miss Harker's School

Home and Day School for Girls. Certificate admits to College. Excellent Departments in Music and Art. New building, thoroughly modern, steam heated. Address,
MISS HARKER, Palo Alto, Cal.

PENNSYLVANIA, Ogontz School P. O.

OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES

Twenty minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. The late Mr. Jay Cooke's fine property. MISS SYLVIA J. EASTMAN, MISS ABBY A. SUTHERLAND, Principals.

CASTILLEJA SCHOOL

Palo Alto, California

Home and day school for girls. University preparatory. Outdoor physical training a special feature. Opens August 24. Illustrated catalogue.
MISS MARY I. LOCKEY, A. B., Principal.

"ONE SUMMER'S DAY."

By Josephine Hart Phelps.

There is always a reflex wave of magnetic sympathy spreading from consciousness to consciousness, and increasing the number of those hastening to a common goal, when a great multitude of people are united in one common interest. Theatrical managers have reason to be thankful that it is so. So have hotel proprietors. So have book publishers, when it is a question of a popular book, or music composers when a popular song is concerned.

"The Music Master," aside from its merits as a play and the magnetic talent of David Warfield, has had so much advertising that it is evident all who ever go to the theatre at all feel that they must not fail to see the current attraction at the New Alcazar.

Yet many of these people are entirely out of the theatre-going habit. They ordinarily no more think of taking in the theatres than they think of going to a meeting of the stock board.

What, you, constitutes the ordinary theatrical audience at the humdrum, routine performances that languidly serve to keep the theatres open during the interludes between high-water mark attractions?

Apparently it is young people either in the tentative or the sentimental stage of courtship, who feel the necessity of escaping from the rally of the family circle to the comparative solitude of crowds. Or it is young married people who, not yet pinned to the hearthstone by the cares of child-rearing, experience a sense of blankness when the day's work is over, and intellectual communion does not seem to spring up with sufficient spontaneity to keep them satisfied at home.

Then, of course, there are the extempore festive parties—celebrants of birthdays, or other family anniversaries, who only go to the theatre to make holiday on such occasions. There is also the bored tourist, who must escape from himself, and from the vicinity of his hotel bedroom. There are, too, lonely spinsters, who join forces, and, while losing themselves in the mimic love stories of stageland, renew a sense of romance in their metaphorically dusty hearts.

There are even old bachelors, who, deprived of a legitimate vent for the floods of sentiment within them—for old bachelors are often tenderly sentimental—look on with moistened eyes of sympathy, or perhaps with pishing, pshawing, contempt, at the sentimental follies of the footlight favorites.

But a "representative audience" in the true sense of the word we rarely see. Truly it could be seen this week. There were doctors and lawyers, writers and financiers, artists and men of business. There were society dames, school-teachers, and stenographers. There were people in society and out of it, the metropolitan and the suburbanite, who went or are going to see David Warfield.

But it is all the exception which only proves the rule. It is pleasant to see a buzzing audience assembling that has many interests, many ideas, many acquaintances in common. A community of interest extending over great numbers tends to exhilaration, a feeling that was even experienced by many during the days immediately following the great earthquake; and, indeed, many were saved from despair, and the weaker vessels perhaps from madness, by that reassuring sense of one great bond of common interest.

Yet in this metropolis of the West, this great and growing city which is the gateway to the Orient, the better class of theatre-goers have no common rallying place, no favorite play-house where they may see familiar faces, and, between acts, exchange opinions with familiar friends.

No doubt it is because it is the reign of triviality in the American stage. The better class of American theatre-goers are not catered to. Therefore they stay away. They have learned to dispense with theatrical entertainment, only turning out occasionally when Mrs. Fiske, or the Henry Miller company, or John Drew, or some such attraction is brought out. That we have had a lot of these high-class attractions lately does not do away with the fact that there are long seasons of dullness between times when there is nothing to be seen worth while.

This acustoms people who, under more favoring conditions, would regularly support the theatres, to dispensing with dramatic entertainment altogether, except when the owners of big reputations come and make it imperative that one should go for one's credit's sake.

And these possible theatre-goers themselves are very culpable, often, through indolence and indifference, allowing attractions that are worthy of attention to pass unheeded, because they have not the commercial magnet of a big name.

It was so during the recent Katherine Grey season, when four representative plays were played by an excellent company, of whom one, by the way, Robert Warwick, the leading man, is at present in the city at the new Valencia Theatre. Every performance given by this company was well worth while. The plays contained food for thought and discussion. Each one was by a dramatist of different nationality, and all left in the mind some germ of thought, or speculation, or doubt, or question, which could have furnished conversation, discussion, argument, for half a hundred gatherings.

But the people at whom these plays were aimed took very little notice, or none at all. Probably they were too busy playing bridge, or five hundred. For there are plenty of people who have minds who petrify them with cards, either for lack of more stimulating mental diversion or because cards are the style.

On reflection, I have come to the conclusion that the inhabitants of big cities leave social occasions too much to chance. Anything that brings a number of people together who know, and are interested in each other's identities, is a social occasion.

If the better class of women in San Francisco decreed it there could be a time and a place for general promenade in the city where one, dressed in one's street best, could go to walk, confident of seeing many familiar faces pleased at seeing and being seen, and exhilarated at the holiday sensation of being one of many united by a common interest.

If the men and women of San Francisco decreed it there could be a time and place set for a daily or weekly carriage promenade where occupants of vehicles could file up and down, or round and round, just for the pleasure of adding to the exhilaration of outdoor enjoyment the greater exhilaration of being one in the common interest of seeing and being seen.

They do it in the Latin countries, they do it even in chilly, conventional London. Then why not here in joyous San Francisco, which, whatever its summer climate may be, has a population of pleasure-loving, mercurial people who turn as readily as children to any diversion which promises escape from the grayness and monotony of humdrum life.

Today in San Francisco there are many women's clubs, containing sections devoted to certain branches of literature and the drama. And what in heaven's name do these students of the drama feed their minds on, when it comes to the question of seeing stage representation, so much more vital than the mere reading of the great dramas, written by the English and Continental master dramatists? In our city there are literary, artistic, and professional people who are chained to their oars, being sometimes unable through a lifetime to find opportunity for travel. They never reach the great capitals of Europe, never see the ideal performances of the master dramas. If all these people really wanted to keep abreast of the leading dramatic thought of the day, they would form a sufficiently formidable clientele to be catered to.

But they never will. Nobody takes the initiative. Theatre managers never run risks. Who can blame them? The "dead game sports" in the theatrical business are all in heaven. The present managers are like the butchers and bakers, who never overload themselves with unsalable wares.

So we see pretty, rippling little plays like "One Summer's Day," which is a charming, ephemeral butterfly of a play. The pulse does not beat faster when seeing it, the brow does not knit, the heart never stands still in the absorption of interest.

"One Summer's Day" is all right. I know that I, for one, enjoyed it. There was such a lazy, restful atmosphere about the picnic spot by the Thames; the hay was real hay, and the willow-tree a real willow-tree. And the gipsy girl was pretty. I never saw Louise Brownell look prettier. I liked her gipsy. She was such a lazy, sensuous animal. She burrowed into the hay-mow like a luxurious cat, and smiled an untheatrical, soulless smile, which expressed the pure joy of living and of gathering casual kisses and siller from good-looking young men who followed her to her trysting place by the banks of the Thames.

And pretty Bessie Barriscale looked so sweet and girlish in her picnic blue and white, with her fair head hatless, and snooded in the prevailing style; and White Whittlesey was a very likable Major Dick, and Will Walling made Phil's hapless love for Maysie so sincere that I caught an accent of sympathy in the murmur of "Stung!" from the young man behind me who conceived it his duty to amuse his circle.

There was pretty, though slightly strained, sentiment in the scenes between Dick and Maysie, and, in the general atmosphere of sentiment, even young Glendinning's moon-struck boy inspired sympathy. For, after all, he was but obeying the law of nature, which enjoins youth to love, love, love. And nature does not care a tinker's damn whether the object of young Vealy's affection is a billionaire or a beggar, a saint or a gipsy.

So one can not complain of a nice, wholesome little play, of which the humor is really humorous and the sentiment appealing.

And no one could reasonably take exception to the manner of presentation at the New Alcazar, or to the intelligent acting.

Only, to recur to my original point, it seems light nourishment to proffer to palates that are hungering for something more vital. Here, in a city of nearly five hundred thousand inhabitants, when one wishes to see a play, a real play, a play of emotions, something "deep as love, deep as first love, and wild with all regret," one looks over the ground and can only find "One Summer's Day."

A Hammerstein Conservatory of Music.

Manager Oscar Hammerstein has made an important dual announcement in connection with his musical projects. One was that he would produce grand opera in his new Philadelphia opera house during the coming season and the other was that part of the new house will be devoted to a conservatory of music.

When he began his campaign to sell seats and boxes in the new house there was little response. Mr. Hammerstein now is able to report that the advance sale amounts to $250,000. Of this amount $150,000 has been subscribed for seats and $100,000 for boxes. Twenty of the twenty-eight boxes in the grand tier have been taken, and negotiations are pending for seven of the remaining eight.

To produce such opera as Hammerstein will give Philadelphia will cost $30,000 weekly. That such a sum is required will be readily seen when some of the items are known. The orchestra and chorus will each cost $5,000 weekly. Every time Melba sings, the charge is $3,000, Tetrazzini $2,000, and Mary Garden $1,700, not to count the many singers of a lesser note. The lighting and other expenses of running the house are enormous.

Emil Girnudet, director of the Paris Conservatory, and Mme. Lehmann, the prima donna, who has been conducting a vocal studio in Germany since her retirement, have been asked by Mr. Hammerstein to become instructors for the conservatory, with the result that they have tentatively agreed to preside over the destiny of the school.

Unless there is a marked improvement in the manners and morals of the automobilists there are hard times in store for them in England. John Burns, the cabinet minister, has officially warned the fraternity that their fate is in their own hands, and that drastic results will ensue if they do not put their house—or better, their motor car—in order. Just what he will do he does not say. Perhaps he will take a leaf out of the new German automobile law, which makes the automobile owner personally accountable in a high degree for the least misbehavior of his car. In this country the similar tendency to stringent law-making now noticeable has been proclaimed by the Automobile Club as a warning to all automobile drivers, and it is in hearty accord with the movement to punish severely infractions of the law.

Hundreds of motoring enthusiasts are gaining a realistic idea of some of the hardships the participants endured in the famous New York to Paris automobile race by exhibitions of the victorious motor car in Eastern cities. The exhibitor gives a lecture, illustrated with stereopticon views, on the memorable run. It is comprehensive to a degree, covering, as it does, the movement of the cars from the time they left New York until the machine, America's only entrant, pulled into Paris the winner by a margin of twenty-six days. The celebrated car is the occasion of unending interest. Travel-stained as it is, no one would imagine by inspecting it that it had gone through the trials and tribulations which was its share in the race in which it achieved lasting fame.

There is a statue of Byron in London, in Hamilton Gardens, separated only by a railing from the broad drive in Hyde Park, and facing directly across the monstrous effigy of Achilles. Even on April 19 Byron's statue receives no attention save for the single wreath of Gloire de Dijon roses placed at its foot under the bequest of the lady who left a legacy for this purpose, and for the insertion of a memorial notice in the Times until the day that the Dean of Westminster allows Byron's name to be inscribed in the Poets' Corner of the Abbey.

Nance O'Neil is to make another effort to secure recognition in New York. The Shuberts will present Miss O'Neil at the Majestic Theatre in the early part of October. The actress will be seen in a play of modern life entitled "Agnes," written by George Cameron, a pseudonym for a well-known American author.

Eugene Walter's drama, "Paid in Full," now being played by four companies in America, was produced this week by Charles Froberman at the Aldwych Theatre in London. The play was first brought out in New York eight months ago.

15 KEARNY STREET

PHONE DOUGLAS 2219

Eugene Korn THE HATTER

AGENCIES

"MILLER, N. Y.," Silks and Operas
"JAMESON, LONDON," Derbys
"JOHN B. STETSON," Philadelphia
KNAPP De Luxe and Felts

AMUSEMENTS

ORPHEUM ELLIS STREET NEAR FILLMORE

Absolutely Class A Theatre Building

Week beginning this Sunday afternoon

Matinee Every Day

ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE

CHARMION, the Perfect Woman; GARDINER and VINCENT; WARREN and BLANCHARD; A. O. DUNCAN; TWO PUCKS; AMELIA SUMMERVILLE; THREE MOSHERS; New Orpheum Motion Pictures; Last Week; the Immense Sensation, THE TRAPNELL FAMILY.

Evening prices, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box seats, $1. Matinee prices (except Sundays and holidays), 10c, 25c, 50c. Phone, WEST 6000.

PRINCESS THEATRE Ellis Street near Fillmore

S. LOVERICH, Manager Phone West 663

Matinee Saturday and Sunday Last Two Nights of "The Wizard of the Nile" BEGINNING MONDAY NIGHT

FERRIS HARTMAN In the Fascinating Musical Comedy THE FORTUNE TELLER Recapture of Christina Nielsen Arthur Cunningham and all the Princess favorites in the cast Popular Prices—Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Mats. (except Sundays and holidays), 25c, 50c.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Tel. West 6036

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers Corner Sutter and Steiner Sts. Absolute Class "A" bldg.

Commencing Monday evening, Sept. 14—Second week of David Belasco's presentation of DAVID WARFIELD and his New York company in

THE MUSIC MASTER

A comedy-drama by Charles Klein Prices: Evenings and Matinees, 50c to $2 Matinee Saturday Next—Mr. Warfield in his latest artistic triumph, "A GRAND ARMY MAN," an American play by David Belasco, Pauline Pelps and Marion Short.

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove St.

Phone Market 500

BEGINNING MONDAY, SEPT. 14

Every Night, Including Sundays

Matinee Saturdays

THE GIRLY MUSICAL PLAY THE GIRL QUESTION

With Paul Nicholson—12 Songs—50 Pretty Girls in Real Shleeth Gowns 339 Nights in Chicago Prices: $1.50 to 50c

GO Of course you will go to the VALENCIA THEATRE

Valencia St., bet. 13th and 14th

San Francisco's newest and most beautiful play-house, absolutely fireproof, strictly Class A building. Designed as the permanent home of the best stock company ever seen in San Francisco. Opens this Saturday evening, September 12, with the VALENCIA STOCK COMPANY, including ROBERT WARWICK and 35 associate players, in Cecil Raleigh's gigantic London and New York success, in six acts and fourteen scenes, entitled

THE GREAT RUBY

Prices, 15c to 75c. Box seats, $1. Matinees every Wednesday, Saturday, and Sunday. Telephone 17 Market. Owing to the magnitude of the productions, curtain will rise promptly at 8 o'clock evenings and at 2 o'clock matinees.

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS
Bearing the script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label. Get "Improved," no tacks required.
Wood Rollers Tin Rollers

GOODYEAR "HIPPO" HOSE

The best and strongest Garden Hose. Guaranteed to stand 700 lbs. pressure. Try it and be convinced. GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY R. H. PEASE, President 587, 589, 591 Market St. at Second St. SAN FRANCISCO

VANITY FAIR.

A correspondent is so obliging as to send us two cuttings from a French newspaper on the subject of Monte Carlo and the gambling institutions conducted under the supervision and for the benefit of that eminent ruler and scientist, the Prince of Monaco. It will be remembered that the Prince of Monaco is the greatest living authority upon deep-sea life and that he enriches the museums of the world with the results of his dredging expeditions. It is said that he pays special attention to the devil-fish, finding much delight in the habits of that engaging creature as it lurks in the dark recesses of the ocean and spreads its tentacles for the destruction of the unwary.

The first of the two cuttings has the sinister heading of "Seven More." Its translation follows:

There is a slight reduction in the number of suicides for the current week. Of the seven unhappy ones whom the bandits of Monte Carlo have hurried to their death after first robbing them, four have hanged themselves in the garden and one has hanged himself in his room at the Hotel de Paris. This last one was cut down, nearly dead, and taken to the hospital at Monaco, where he is being cared for in the greatest secrecy. A woman also has poisoned herself at Monaco, only a few steps from the museum that was raised to his own glory by Albert I. Still another, a young man thirty years of age, shot himself dead on Monday evening at nine o'clock on one of the benches fronting the great staircase of the Casino. And yet, among the statesmen who meet regularly at The Hague to combat the scourge of war, not a single delegate has yet dreamed of suggesting the suppression of the slaughter-house of Monaco.

This is very plain talking. Are we to understand that even when times are slack there are seven suicides a week at Monte Carlo as a direct result of the gambling halls? It would seem so. And yet Monte Carlo is a sort of Mecca for the traveling American, who does not necessarily gamble, but who likes to see the distinctive forms of iniquity in other countries. It probably does not occur to him as he sits in the shining hall of the Casino, or watches the glittering throng as it passes to and fro, that one among them must inexorably pay the life forfeit before the sun rises again, or that day by day the splendor of Monte Carlo demands its pitiful toll of a wrecked and wasted and dishonored human life. No wonder that the Prince of Monte Carlo should find a sort of fascination in the devil-fish.

The other clipping is in lighter vein, but yet not without its sinister significance. It explains how the Prince of Monaco, wishing to confer a Cross of Honor upon three yachtsmen in accordance with ancient custom, has been embarrassed by his failure to find any three men willing to receive such a decoration at his hands, those who are entitled to the distinction fearing to be taken for superannuated croupiers. Such a disinclination was apparently foreseen, inasmuch as the order to be conferred is a cunning imitation of that of the Crown of Italy.

It is thus evident that the Principality of Monaco has its own domestic troubles to contend with. Truly all is not gold that glitters. The throngs of pleasure-seekers, the ring of coin upon the tables, the lamps, the laughter, and the jests, are but the surface coverings. Beyond and behind, where the lights of the Casino melt into the liquid darkness of the Mediterranean night, there is the tree with its horrible burden of the mortal, and above the sound of revelry is the pistol shot that is the knell of a despairing soul.

The New York Evening Post is to be congratulated. To its many excellences—and in our modern journalism it is as the shadow of a palm tree in a thirsty land—it adds the supreme felicity of being in full agreement with the Argonaut on the marriage question. The New York Evening Post asks if the possession of an American wife is an indispensable condition attached to the post of German ambassador at Washington. It would almost seem so. The widow of Baron von Sternburg is an American:

Out of four German diplomats who have been seriously mentioned for appointment to Washington, three have American wives. Evidently the Kaiser, if the condition we have supposed really holds good, is at no embarrassment to find among his subjects men with the needed qualification. Yet neither Count von Goetzen, Count Bernstorff, nor Baron Mumm von Schwarzenstein has attained even a minute share of the peculiar kind of fame that has fallen to the Castellanes and the Yarmouths. We are consequently driven to conclude that when an American princess enters the portals of a European palace, it is not inevitable that she shall come out by way of the divorce court. Intermarriage between this country and Europe is much more frequent than the public is aware of; and that it is also much more happy than the generality suspects follows from the first condition. Not for the sensationalists, however, are the nine alliances that lead to quiet and obscure felicity; the tenth that fails, is their game, and the larger the accompanying photographs the better.

The public is not aware of the frequency of international marriages because it depends for its news of this kind mainly upon the journalistic vultures whose depraved palates reject everything that falls short of putrescence, a journalism that picks up the carrion of the divorce court and purveys it as the news of the world.

But the object of the Evening Post is not to talk about the German ambassador, but rather the hook of M. Hugues Le Roux, which is very justly called absurd. M. Le Roux asks why American girls marry foreigners, and because he is so much more of a gentleman than some of our own penny-a-liners who propound the same question, he answers it not without some dignity and even sense. The American girl, he says, "has wealth without obligations"; and he continues: "Her father has no hereditary domain to keep up, no name to live up to, no following of relatives or strangers to support. Her money is all cash, cash, and available at any moment." In other words, she has money but no values, the power to buy everything except the permanent possessions of life. The Evening Post summarizes the situation with precision:

Hence what the American girl looks for in a titled husband and a palace is not sensation, excitement, new fields of glory to win, but a sense of solidity that shall tie her down to earth, that shall transmute her wealth into values which she feels to be more exalted and more durable than her ready check-book and freedom from all responsibility.

M. Le Roux is good enough to give us a list of American women who have borne European names and generally with distinction, a list usefully to be studied by the journalistic Pharisees who lurk in the shadows of scandal and rejoice in the vilification of their countrywomen. Here is the list transferred bodily from the French text:

Princesse San Faustino, née Campbell; Comtesse Gheradesche, née Taylor; Princesse Rospigliosi, née Bronson; Princesse Colonna, née Mackay; Marchesa da Vita, née Dunham; Marchesa di Spinola; Lady Herbert, née Wilson; Lady Barclay, née Chapman; Lady Johnson, née Pinchot; Lady Lowther, née Blight; Lady Goschen; Mrs. Joseph Chamberlain, née Endicott; Mrs. Arthur Lee, née Moore; la feue Lady Curzon, née Leiter; Lady Parker, née Vantine; Lady Chylesmore, née French; Mme. La Générale Hulton, née Hoffman; les Duchesses de Marlborough, nées Hammersleigh et Vanderbilt; les Duchesses de Manchester, nées Zimmermann et Iznaga; Lady Craven, née Martin; la Duchesse of Suffolk, née Leiter; Lady Essex, née Grant; Lady Randolph Churchill; Lady Leigh, née Beckwith; la Princesse Hatzfeld, née Huntington; Baronne von Kettler, née Ledyard; Baronne von Sternburg, née Langham; Princesse Isenberg, née Lewis; Baronne von Brunning, née Mackay; Baronne von Goetzen, née Lay; Comtesse von Waldersee, née Lee; Duchesse de Dino, née Livingston; Duchesse de Valençay (Mme. Morton); Comtesse de Castellane (Mme. Gould); Duchesse de la Rochefoucauld, née Mitchell; Marquise de Talleyrand, née Curtis; Baronne Sellière, née Ryley; Comtesse de Choiseul, née Hooper; Comtesse de Cambrun, née Longworth; Princesse de Poix, dont la mère, Comtesse de Courval, est née Ray, etc.

The "souvenir season" has begun, and the managers of several of the London hotels have hit on a novel antidote. They are providing cheap souvenirs for their American visitors to carry away, in the hope that they will overlook such expensive trifles as silver spoons or lace-fringed serviettes. One hotel manager says:

I felt convinced that if the craze for souvenir collecting were acknowledged and not ridiculed, our visitors would be quite willing to accept a less expensive present, as long as it came from London.

During the next month we intend to present our American visitors with little ice spoons as souvenirs. We give at luncheon tiny cheap nickel spoons, very pretty to look at, and useful as well. The handles are ornamented with flowers, and the name "London" is printed along them.

Paper serviettes, strong enough not to tear, with views of London, will be provided at afternoon tea. At dinner dainty fans in crinkled white paper, ornamented with roses, forget-me-nots, and white heather, will be given as souvenirs to the ladies. The rose represents England, the forget-me-not begs our American friends to remember us, and the white heather wishes them good luck on their return to their own country.

The American men will receive little match cases in white leather, with "London" printed on them in gilt lettering.

At one time we tried presenting the American ladies bouquets of flowers, but this compliment was not at all appreciated by the ardent souvenir-hunter, who lovingly eyed the more substantial spoons.

An ingenious remedy for souvenir-hunting has been suggested by one of the managing directors of another hotel. The idea is to provide pretty menu booklets instead of the ordinary menu cards.

Each little booklet will be bound in thin suede, and stamped with the name of the hotel.

On one page will be the menu, opposite that the wines, on another the music programme, and at the end a blank page headed "Names," in which all the names of the guests dining with each separate party can be written. The booklets are provided with thin ball programme pencils, and are scented with violet perfume.

It is to be feared that these expedients will hardly satisfy the souvenir hunter. He is indeed a hunter, and he values only what falls to his own gun. The souvenir must be a mark of prowess, it must have a personal as well as a geographical significance. All the same the experiment is worth trying if only to show its futility.

Among the lamentable tendencies of modern journalism is a disposition toward an undue adulation of women. To a certain amount of this kind of thing there can be no objection. It is a part of what is now called "the movement" and there is no reason why the editorial sanctum should be immune from an insidious domestic influence that has invaded the office of the statesman and the study of the clergyman. But even virtues can be carried too far, and when the glorification of "the sex" is inopportune, when it is achieved at the expense of men, when it is purposeless and wanton, it seems time to protest.

Take, for instance, the case of the Philadelphia Ledger. It may be that editorial topics are scarce in the Quaker City. They must be, or so trivial a sight as a woman caught in the rain without an umbrella would hardly attract the editorial pen. Now it would have been enough to say that under such circumstances the woman maintains her self-possession, that her face is wreathed in smiles, and that she preserves her habitual attitude of serenity. That is about what the Ledger does say, and it is a credit to the editorial imagination if not to the editorial veracity. Every one knows that a woman's behavior in the face of a wetting is diametrically opposed to this, but let that pass. The writer had his reason for this obsequious display and it would be impious to draw the veil of domestic privacy.

But why not stop there? Why go on to make an offensive comparison with the conduct of a man under similar tribulation? The man, we are told, would lose his presence of mind. He would hurry under shelter to protect his suit and even would not hesitate to put his straw hat under his coat. Poor, degraded, abject wretch! It is a wonder that Providence allows him to go on living.

Now, this sort of thing is far too common and it ought to stop. It is based upon the assumption that men will never retaliate, that they are so accustomed to sit in sackcloth and ashes and to eat the bread of vituperation that they would hardly know what to do with fair play if they got it. Even if this particular accusation were true, even if it were a fact that a woman looks upon a wetting with philosophic indifference and the ruin of hat and costume with equanimity, we may ask who pays for the hat and costume if not the very man who is thus held up to obloquy and contempt for his economical effort to save his own uninteresting and comparatively cheap apparel? Moreover, the woman can go home whenever she wants to and change everything from the ground floor up, whereas the man must sit in his damp clothing for the rest of the day.

The Heiress—Oh, papa! The earl has proposed! Papa Bigwadd—H'm! What's his proposition?—Puck.

W. & J. SLOANE

FURNITURE

Exclusive lines for Parlor, Library, Living Room, Dining-Room, Bedroom, Hall, Summer Homes and Offices.

CARPETS

Special weaves and colorings in the greatest variety. Domestic Wiltons and Whole Piece Axminsters. We show all grades.

RUGS

Both Oriental and Domestic. This is by far the largest and choicest stock of Rugs on the Coast. Our Orientals are selected as individual pieces.

Upholstery—Interior Decoration

Our long experience and unequalled facilities enable us to admirably execute special orders.

Van Ness and Sutter

City of Paris

ONE OF OUR PATTERN HATS

MILLINERY OPENING

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

A clergyman of a country village in New Jersey desired his clerk to give notice that there would be no service in the afternoon, as he was going to officiate with another clergyman. The clerk announced at the close of the service: "I am desired to give notice that there will be no service this afternoon, as our minister is going a-fishing with another clergyman."

A Kansas woman, who recently returned from a trip to Europe, says wet weather hasn't bothered this country at all in comparison with what she saw abroad. She says that they ran into a town named Venice, where the water covered every street and you couldn't get anywhere except in boats. She added: "You bet we only stayed one day in that slosh."

Roger Minot Sherman, while arguing a celebrated case, said that his opponent could no more prove his point than he could cut a hair lengthwise. While he was still talking the opponent, who happened to have a very sharp knife, pulled a hair from his beard and split it. As he held it up the court began to laugh, and Mr. Sherman quickly called out, "I said a hair, sir, not a bristle."

Speaker Cannon, on his seventieth birthday, referred in a jocular way to the precocity of the twentieth-century child. "Why, before long," he said, "we shall hear of the baby that has just been weaned turning to its nurse and saying: 'I have every reason to be satisfied with your past services, and shall not fail to recommend you among my acquaintances. Pray accept this dollar for yourself.'"

At a dinner of a legal association held in Washington not long ago one of the speakers told of a farmer's son in Illinois who conceived a desire to shine as a legal light. Accordingly he went up to Springfield, where he accepted employment at a small sum from a fairly well-known attorney. At the end of three days' study he returned to the farm. "Well, Bill, how'd ye like the law?" asked his father. "It aint what it's cracked up to be," responded Bill gloomily. "I'm sorry I learned it."

One of the comedians of a Boston company went out with a fishing party and soon began to suffer from thirst and evident failure with the hook. Finally one of the crowd took pity on the sufferer and fastened a bottle of beer to his fishing line while he was on a voyage of exploration. When the actor returned he found his line rather heavy and started to haul in what he thought was the biggest fish of the day. Gleeful over his changed luck, he shouted to the captain: "Hey, captain, this is the place. Anchor right here; we're sailing over a brewery!"

The young man and the girl were standing outside the front door having a final chat after his evening call. He was leaning against the doorpost, talking in low tones. Presently the young lady looked around to discover her father in the doorway, clad in a dressing gown. "Why, father, what in the world is the matter?" she inquired. "Joba," said the father, addressing himself to the young man, "you know I have never complained about your staying late, and I'm not going to complain of that now; but for goodness' sake stop leaning against the bell push and let the rest of the family get some sleep."

At a recent trial in Scotland an elderly spinster was called to the witness box to be examined. "What is your age, madam?" inquired the counsel. "Sir," answered the witness, "I am an unmarried woman, and dinna think it right to answer that question." The judge interposed and told her she should answer. "Oh, weel, then," she said reluctantly, "I am fifty." "Not more than fifty?" questioned the counsel sternly. "Weel, dinna fash yersel," she replied, "I am sixty." The inquisitive lawyer still further asked if she had any hopes of getting married, to which Miss Jane replied: "Weel, sir, I winna tell a lee; I hinna lost hope yet," scornfully adding, "but I widna marry you, for I am sick and tired o' your palaver already."

Most specimens of pulpit humor betray confusion of terms merely, but sometimes there is purpose under them. One clergyman, who is often quoted, was announcing a communion service for the following Sunday, with confirmation in the evening, and he put it: "The Lord will be with us in the forenoon, and the bishop in the evening." At another time, when his congregation had tried hard but without success to raise by contribution a sum of money to meet the interest charges on the usual mortgage, he announced: "I need not say here how much this church stands in need of immediate funds. We have tried to obtain this in the customary way and have tried honestly. Now we are going to see what a bazaar will do." One more faux pas came in a sermon directed against the very human fault of vanity. "Many a good woman comes in God's house to show off (perhaps she doesn't quite realize it, but the fact is unchanged)—to show off her best clothes." Then he glanced across the crowded pews and added: "I am thankful, dear friends, to see that none of you come here for so unworthy a reason."

At one army post where a number of recruits were temporarily stationed an old sergeant was ordered to ascertain to what religious sect each man belonged, and to see that he joined the party told off for that particular form of worship. Some of the men had no liking for church, and declared themselves to be atheists. But the sergeant was a Scotsman and a man of experience. "Ah, weel," said he, "then ye hae no need to kape holy the Sabbath, and the stables bae na been claned out lately." And he ordered them to clean out the stables. This occupied practically the whole day, and the men lost their usual Sunday afternoon's leave. Next Sunday a broad smile crept over the face of the sergeant when he heard that the atheists had joined the Church of England.

According to all accounts, the arrival of the Cameron Highlanders in Pekin to replace the Middlesex regiment as legation guards created something of a sensation among the inhabitants. The kilt is a source of great wonderment. The Cbina Times asserts that the natives are hard at work trying to assimilate the Scotch language. They are reported as already making favorable progress. Instead of their favorite expression, "Me no savvy," they now employ "I dinna ken," and they greet the foreigner with "Guid marnin'!" with an excellent Auctermuchty accent. It is added that some Chinese compradores, who are men of inquisitive turn of mind, want to know "What for new soldier man cathee clothes allee same missis?" which recalls the story of the Russian Crimean veteran who declared that the best fighters in the British army were the women!

THE MERRY MUSE.

Fie, Willie!

Willie got some Japalac, Very shiny, very black, Caught his little sister Sou. Willie said, "This is on you." Little Sou was dumf with fear, So Willie left a souvereer. —Harvard Lampoon.

Planters and Politicians.

Prosperity is with us! There is joy along the line. The corn is most abundant, And the speech crop doing fine! —Washington Star.

Still She Was Loved.

"I can not sing the old songs—" Her promise short and terse She kept. But then she went and sang The new ones—which were worse. —Boston Traveler.

From a Private Colonel.

There once was an old army colonel, Whose wit was a wellspring etolonel; But for those who would shrink From their authorized work, His language was something infolonel! —Army and Navy Life.

Overdue.

Advised to try the harefoot cure, By doctors, one and all, he tried. "Tis shoesless!" he exclaimed, at length, And then, perchance, for shame he died. —Puck.

In 1912.

Nothin' at all to say, William; nothin' at all to say; There aint no Democrat party, so go on an' have your way. Fix up th' platform to suit you; put in what planks you may choose; You've been on all sides of everything, so you've got plenty to use; Put in a dash of free silver; hammer whomever you will; You're the committee on platform—you're the original Bill; You might as well keep on runnin'—seem to be built thataway; Nothin' at all to say, William; nothin' at all to say. —New York Times.

Dean Ramsay once told of a young Englishman who had taken a Scottish shooting, and thought himself quite nationalized. Next year he met a genuine Scot of the old school at a German watering-place, and proceeded to pose as one himself, talking of Scotland and haggis and sheep's head and whisky, boasting of Bannockburn, professing devotion to Queen Mary, and extolling Scott and Burns over all English writers. On taking leave of his friend he said, "Well, sir, next time we meet, I hope you will receive me as a real countryman." "Weel," said the other, "I'm jest thinkin', my lad, ye're nae Scot, but I'll tell ye what ye are—you're jest an impruived Englishman."

A. Hirschman

For fine jewelry and silverware. 1641-1643 Van Ness Avenue.

BANKING

The Anglo-Californian Bank, Ltd.

Established 1873
Head Office—London
Main Office—Pine and Sansome Streets, San Francisco
Branches—1020 Van Ness Avenue, Mission and Sixteenth Streets, San Francisco
Managers: I. Steinhart, P. N. Lilienthal
Capital paid in.....$1,500,000
Surplus and undivided profits..... 1,449,721
A General Banking Business Conducted. Accepts of Corporations, Firms, and Individuals Solicited. Correspondence invited.
Safe Deposit Vaults at Van Ness Avenue and Mission Branches.

French Savings Bank

108 Sutter Street, near Montgomery
Paid-up Capital.....$ 600,000
Total Assets..... 4,270,800
Strictly a Savings Bank Open Saturday Evening from 7 to 8:30
OFFICERS—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, 1st Vice-President; Leon Boqueraz, 2d Vice-President; A. Bousquet, Secretary; P. A. Bergerot, Attorney.
DIRECTORS—N. C. Babin, J. A. Bergerot, Charles Carpy, Arthur Legallet, G. Belency, H. de St. Seine, J. M. Dupas, Leon Boqueraz, J. E. Artigues, J. S. Godeau, John Ginty.
SAFE DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT
The French-American Bank is located in the same building.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., San Francisco
Guaranteed Capital.....$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash. 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds.. 1,453,983.62
Deposits June 30, 1908..... 34,474,534.23
Total Assets..... 37,055,263.31
OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourney; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Ellis, General Attorneys.
BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.
MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22d Streets. For receipt and payment of deposits only.

LONDON PARIS NATIONAL BANK

N. W. cor. Sutter and Sansome
CAPITAL - - - $2,500,000
SURPLUS - - - 620,000
Sig Greenebaum, H. Fleishacker,
President Vice-President and Mgr.
R. Altschul, Cashier

The National Bank ROLL OF HONOR

The title "Roll of Honor National Bank" is a distinction of which any financial institution in the United States may be proud. As is well known a "Roll of Honor Bank" is one possessing surplus and profits in excess of capital. A place on the Roll of Honor can not be bought, it must be earned. This bank has for a long time been known as a "Roll of Honor Bank" among banks and bankers.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF Berkeley

UNITED STATES DEPOSITORY
A. W. NAYLOR, Pres. F. M. WILSON, Vice-Pres.
F. L. NAYLOR, Cashier. F. C. MORTIMER, Asst. Cashier.

THE BERKELEY NATIONAL BANK

United States Depository Berkeley, Cal.
HOUSEHOLD AND COMMERCIAL ACCOUNTS INVITED
DIRECTORS—George F. Baxter, Pres.; J. W. Richards, Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Bangs, Vice-Pres.; Louis Titus, Dr. Thomas Addison, A. G. Freeman, Duncan McDuffie, Perry T. Tompkins, F. L. Lipman, W. J. Hotchkiss, and Whitney Palache. P. H. ATKINSON, Cashier.

Connecticut Fire Insurance Company

Established 1850 OF HARTFORD
Total Assets.....$5,817,423
Surplus to Policy-Holders..... 2,118,394
BENJAMIN J. SMITH
Manager Pacific Department
518 CALIFORNIA STREET
San Francisco

WESTERN ASSURANCE COMPANY

TORONTO
U. S. Assets.....$2,493,154
" Surplus..... 483,989
PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT
1004 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE
SAN FRANCISCO
J. J. KENNY, W. L. W. MILLER,
Manager Assistant Manager

MARKET ST. 1st Con. 5%

Due 1924. Coupons March and September
BAY COUNTIES POWER CO. 1st 5%
Due 1930. Coupons March and September
WESTERN PACIFIC 1st 5%
Due 1933. Coupons March and September

SUTRO & CO. BROKERS

412 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.
We have a Direct Wire to N. Y.

HUNTER WHISKEY

IS A PURE RYE PRODUCT OF HIGHEST QUALITY AND UNIQUE FLAVOR, HENCE MOST WHOLESOME, GUARANTEED UNDER THE NATIONAL PURE FOOD LAW.

HENRY CAMPE & CO., Inc. Distributors for California and Nevada, San Francisco, Cal.

H. J. COOPER

Expert Accountant and Auditor
705 KAMM BUILDING
717 MARKET STREET
Phone Douglas 1342 San Francisco

THE CITIZENS' ALLIANCE, 920 Merchants Exchange, calls the attention of the public to their Free Labor Bureau, located at No. 10 City Hall Ave., San Francisco, and No. 804 Broadway, Oakland. All classes of male help furnished absolutely free.
"The Citizens' Magazine" for September is now ready. Subscription $1.00 per year. Orders solicited.

Clubbing List.

By special arrangement with the publishers, and by concessions in price on both sides, we are enabled to make the following offer, open to all subscribers direct to this office. Subscribers in renewing subscriptions to Eastern periodicals will please mention the date of expiration in order to avoid mistakes:

- American Magazine and Argonaut.....$4.25
- Argosy and Argonaut..... 4.40
- Atlantic Monthly and Argonaut..... 6.70
- Blackwood's Magazine and Argonaut... 6.20
- Century and Argonaut..... 7.00
- Lammaner and Argonaut..... 4.10
- Lasmopolitan and Argonaut..... 4.35
- Current Literature and Argonaut..... 5.75
- English Illustrated Magazine and Argonaut..... 4.70
- Forum and Argonaut..... 6.00
- Harper's Bazar and Argonaut..... 4.35
- Harper's Magazine and Argonaut..... 6.70
- Harper's Weekly and Argonaut..... 6.70
- House Beautiful and Argonaut..... 4.75
- International Magazine and Argonaut... 4.50
- Judge and Argonaut..... 7.50
- Leslie's Weekly and Argonaut..... 6.70
- Life and Argonaut..... 7.75
- Lippincott's Magazine and Argonaut.... 5.25
- Mitell's Living Age and Argonaut..... 9.00
- Mexican Herald and Argonaut.....10.50
- Munsey's Magazine and Argonaut..... 4.40
- Nineteenth Century and Argonaut..... 7.25
- North American Review and Argonaut... 8.00
- Out West and Argonaut..... 5.25
- Overland Monthly and Argonaut..... 4.50
- Political Science Quarterly and Argonaut..... 4.90
- Puck and Argonaut..... 7.50
- Review of Reviews and Argonaut..... 5.00
- Scribner's Magazine and Argonaut..... 6.25
- Smart Set and Argonaut..... 5.25
- St. Nicholas and Argonaut..... 6.00
- Unset and Argonaut..... 4.25
- Theatre Magazine and Argonaut..... 5.75
- Three-a-Week New York World (Democratic) and Argonaut..... 4.25
- Weekly New York Tribune (Republican) and Argonaut..... 4.50
- Weekly New York Tribune, Weekly New York World, and Argonaut..... 5.25

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

There is so perceptible a change in the population of the city within the past fortnight, since the out-of-town sojourners have returned home, that it is a cause of constant remark. The shopping district on Van Ness Avenue is the scene of many delighted greetings and the social calendar is beginning to fill up in a way that presages well for the winter's gayeties.

The engagement is announced of Miss Bertha Savage, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Savage, to Henry Hebburn Wilkins, both of San Rafael. No date is announced for the wedding.

The engagement is announced of Miss Ashleigh Turner, daughter of Mrs. Reginald White, to Mr. Joseph Seitz. Their wedding will be an event of the early winter.

The engagement is announced of Miss Maud Welsh, daughter of the late Mr. J. M. Welsh and Mrs. Welsh of Stockton, to Mr. Frank Dutton of this city. Their wedding will be an event of the fall.

The wedding of Miss Betsy Angus, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Stewart Angus, to Mr. C. St. George Holden took place on Wednesday evening of last week at the home of the bride's parents on Union Street. The ceremony was performed at half-past eight o'clock by the Rev. Lee Wood of San Mateo. Miss Mary Angus, the bride's sister, was the maid of honor and the bridesmaids were the bridegroom's sister, Miss Milward Holden, and Miss Marian Wright. Mr. Hillier Deuprey was the best man. After their wedding journey Mr. and Mrs. Holden will make their home in this city.

The wedding of Miss Dollie Bainbridge Tarpey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. F. Tarpey, to Mr. J. Paulding Edwards, took place on Wednesday evening last at the Fairmont Hotel. The ceremony was celebrated at nine o'clock in the evening by the Rev. Father McSweeney of St. Francis de Sales Church, Oakland. Mrs. Arthur Tarpey, sister-in-law of the bride, was matron of honor; Miss Alice Cleary, the bride's cousin, was the maid of honor, and Miss Marie Butters and Miss Marguerite Butters, sisters of the bridegroom, were the bridesmaids. Mr. A. D. Schindler was the best man and the ushers were: Mr. Melville Dozier, Mr. Arthur Tarpey, Dr. D. H. Moulton, Mr. Russell Selfridge, Mr. Arthur Goodfellow, Mr. Arthur Kales, Mr. Charles K. Field, and Mr. Victor N. Metcalf. Mr. and Mrs. Edward will sail next week for Honolulu for a month's stay and on their return will make their home in Chico.

The Friday Night Club, which has existed for so many seasons under the management of Mr. Edward M. Greenway, will be known hereafter as the Assemblies, the change being made to avoid confusion with other organizations having similar titles. Mr. Greenway announces that no changes will be made in the club save the name and the hour of opening the balls, which is designated as promptly nine o'clock. The dates of the balls will be December 18, 1908; January 29, 1909, and February 19, 1909, and they will take place at the Fairmont.

Mrs. Edward L. Griffith was the hostess at an informal dance on Friday evening of last week in honor of her son, Mr. Millen Griffith.

Miss Jeanne Gallois entertained at a luncheon on Tuesday of last week at the Fairmont in honor of Miss Florence Hopkins. Those present were: Miss Claire Nichols, Miss Augusta Foute, Miss Martha Calhoun, Miss Margaret Calhoun, Miss Maude Wilson, Miss Mary Keeney, Miss Anita Mailliard, and Miss Helen Baker.

Miss Martha Calhoun and Miss Margaret Calhoun entertained at a dinner on Thursday of last week at their home on Broadway. Those present were: Miss Florence Breckinridge, Miss Mary Keeney, Mr. Percy King, Dr. Tracy Russell, Mr. William Gring, and Mr. Boyd Van Benthuyzen.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a résumé of movements to and from this city and Coast and of the whereabouts of absent Californians:

Mrs. William H. Crocker and Miss Mary Ethel Crocker, who are now at Del Monte for a visit, will leave about September 20 for the East. Miss Ethel Mary will return to school in Maryland and Mrs. Crocker will sail during October for Europe. Mr. William Crocker, Jr., and Mr. Barclay Farr, who has been his guest during the summer, left last week for the East with the E. H. Harriman family in the private car of the latter.

Senator and Mrs. Francis G. Newlands have returned to their home in Nevada, after a visit to Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Sharon at Menlo Park.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Duplessis Beylard and Miss Sophie Beylard returned this week from Lake Tahoe, where they have spent the summer months.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Lansdale have gone from their home in San Mateo to Santa Barbara and will spend a few weeks at the Potter. Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, Miss Harriet Alexander, Miss Janetta Alexander, and Miss Mary Crocker Alexander left on Thursday of last week for their home in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hammond and Miss Julia Langhorne, who have been in Switzerland for several weeks, are now in Paris for a fortnight, going about the middle of the month to London to remain until they sail for America on September 30.

Mrs. J. G. Kittle and Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Dibble have returned to their home in Ross Valley, after a month's stay at Tahoe.

Miss Florence Breckinridge left last week for Lake Tahoe, where she will be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. William S. Tevis.

Miss Linda Cadwalader has gone to Burlingame for a visit to Mrs. Henry T. Scott.

Miss Mary Josselyn has gone to Colorado, where she will be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. David R. C. Brown at Aspen.

Mr. and Mrs. William Babcock have returned to their home in San Rafael, after a European trip of six months' duration.

Mrs. Arthur Page left last week for the East, where she will join her daughter, Miss Dorothy, and they will spend the winter there.

Mr. Edward M. Greenway is spending a few weeks at Del Monte.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Frederick Kohl have closed their country place at Lake Tahoe and are again at their Burlingame home.

Miss Carrie Gwin, who has been in San Rafael for the summer, has taken an apartment at the Hillcrest, where she is domiciled for the next several months.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank B. Findley left last week for an Eastern trip and will be absent for a month or six weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. George Almer Newhall went recently to Del Monte for a brief stay.

Mr. and Mrs. Timothy Hopkins and Miss Lydia Hopkins, who have been at Del Monte, have returned to their home at Menlo Park.

Miss Stella McCalla, who returned recently from this city to her home in Santa Barbara, has gone East with her sister, Mrs. Miller, to spend the winter.

Mr. E. H. Harriman, Mrs. Harriman, Miss Mary Harriman, Miss Carrel Harriman, Mr. Russell Harriman, Mr. Roland Harriman, Dr. Lyle, and Mr. Thomas Pierce took rooms at the Fairmont Hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry N. Stetson (formerly Miss Josephine Brown), who have been traveling in Europe since their marriage in April, have returned and are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Oxnard.

Mrs. William F. McNutt and her little granddaughter, Miss Marie Louise Potter, returned on Sunday morning last from Colorado, where they have been for six weeks as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. David R. C. Brown (formerly Miss Ruth McNutt).

Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Rathbone have spent the holidays at Del Monte.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank B. Anderson, Miss Florence Hopkins, and Mr. Edward W. Hopkins left last week for the East and will go on a month's motor trip there.

Mrs. Robert C. Woods and Miss Elizabeth Woods have returned to town from Monterey, where they spent the summer months.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Oxnard have returned from a visit of several weeks' duration in Southern California.

Mrs. Wilcox and Mr. Alfred Wilcox arrived last week from their home in Los Angeles for a brief stay.

Mrs. J. LeRoy Nickel, Miss Beatrice Nickel, and Mr. George Nickel have gone East recently. Miss Beatrice will enter school there and Mr. Nickel will go to Yale.

Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Jones, Miss Helen Jones, Mr. Paul Jones, and Mr. Frank Jones have returned to their home in town, after a stay of several months at their country place in Ross Valley.

Dr. and Mrs. Gustavus Simmons have returned to their home in Sacramento, after spending the summer at their cottage at Inverness.

Mr. and Mrs. William Geer Hitchcock, Mr. and Mrs. John S. Drum, Miss Sara Drum, and Mr. William Drum went recently to Del Monte for a visit.

Mr. and Mrs. Dixwell Hewitt are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Fred Sharon at their country place in Menlo.

Mrs. George Borrowe left London August 22 en route for San Francisco to visit her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bosqui.

Among the visitors from the East are Mrs. R. K. Hines and her daughter, Miss Hannah Hines, from Macon, Georgia. They are the guests of Mrs. George Geft and her daughter, Mrs. George Draper Stratton, of Piedmont.

Mr. William H. Keith, who has been passing several weeks in this city, leaves on Monday next for New York.

Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Tobey of Palo Alto have arrived at the Tahoe Tavern for a few weeks' sojourn.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kohl, who have been in San Mateo and San Francisco for a week, returned to Lake Tahoe on Saturday last.

Of the twenty-three theatrical productions that ran over 100 nights in New York last season thirteen were "musical." This fact causes the New York Evening Post man to observe that one would have supposed the preponderance of the "musical" plays to be even larger, for did not Voltaire say that "what is too stupid to be spoken is made into a song"?

At the Hotels.

The following are among the registrations at the Hotel St. Francis: Mr. Albert Bonnel de Meziere and Mr. Frederick John Stephens, from Tahiti; Mr. J. Ross Clarke, of Montana; Mr. J. W. Pearson; Mr. David Warheld; Miss Amelia Summerville; Mr. Nat C. Goodwin; Mr. George Weeden; Dr. J. E. Stubbs, of the University of Nevada; Hon. John W. Noble; Colonel and Mrs. W. C. Greene, of Cananea; Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. Scott; Dr. F. Kruger, of Seoul; Mr. E. L. Heller, of New York; Herr Karl von Newinski, of Germany; Mr. B. Kindenberger; Mr. R. Kindenberger; Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Goldschmidt, Mr. Louis Goldschmidt, Dr. and Mrs. N. Chompret, and Dr. Sitsch, of Paris; Rear-Admiral Richardson Clover, Mrs. Clover, and family.

Among recent registrations at the Fairmont Hotel are the following: A. L. Barber, U. S. A., Manila; Dr. and Mrs. Hughes, U. S. A.; Dr. George Rothganges, U. S. N.; Commander and Mrs. C. A. Carr, U. S. N.; Mr. C. De Wit Williams, Mrs. F. B. Woolsey, Mrs. M. B. Williams, Miss C. Williams, Miss J. L. Williams, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. John W. Edminson, of Pasadena; Mr. A. W. Ballard, Mrs. B. Winston, Miss Winston, Mr. W. F. Marshall, and Mr. Walter Parker, of Los Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Gilson, of Liverpool, and Mr. James Phelps Stokes, of New York. Among passengers by the Mongolia registered at the Fairmont are Rear-Admiral J. N. Hemphill, Captain H. C. Brown, U. S. M. C.; Mr. and Mrs. M. Graham, of London; Mrs. K. G. Halleck and Mrs. W. N. W. Blayney, of Denver; Mr. A. L. Spitzel, Mr. L. Spitzel, Mrs. Wilson, of Shanghai; Mrs. Gardner Wilder, of Honolulu; Mr. and Mrs. G. J. Freshman, of Chicago; Mrs. Richardson, Miss Richardson, Miss Brillack, Mr. F. W. Kelley and Mrs. Kelley.

The Bank of California's New Home.

The Bank of California opened its new building at Sansome and California Streets to the public Tuesday, and from 10 o'clock in the morning until long after regular banking hours the building was thronged with visitors. The desks of the officers were loaded with flowers, gifts from friends.

The new home of the Bank of California is said to be the equal of any bank building in the world, and it is said that the only two bank buildings in the Western hemisphere that could compare with it are the Bank of Montreal's building and the classic old home of the Girard Bank in Philadelphia.

The exterior of the building is copied from the temple of Jupiter Stator in the Roman Forum, and the fluted columns are exact counterparts of the columns in the temple. All the stone work is Raymond granite, and, like nearly all the material in the building, is a California product.

The interior of the building is 112 feet deep by eighty feet wide by fifty feet high, or about the height of four stories in an ordinary office building. A marble wainscoting fourteen feet high surrounds the interior, and the windows rise above this to a height of thirty-five feet.

The office furniture and partitions are steel, finished in imitation of French mahogany, while the counters are black Belgian marble, a rare and costly product. The ceiling is a classical design in gilt picked out with pale blue. The cost of the building is said to be close to $2,000,000.

Important Notice.

The Majestic Improvement Company announces the opening of the Hotel Mann, at the northwest corner of Powell and O'Farrell Streets, during the month of September, under the management of Mr. N. M. Kellar, formerly of the hotels Waldorf-Astoria, Majestic, and St. Regis, of New York, and the Hotel Fairmont of San Francisco. Also that the Hotels Majestic and the Majestic Annex are now under the management of Mrs. Dora Peysers.

A delegate just returned from the London Peace Conference describes a linguistic display worth witnessing. Every speech was delivered in three languages; that is to say, while an Englishman was talking, a German and a French stenographer were frantically taking him down, and the minute the speaker resumed his seat the German rose and read from his notes a fluent translation, the Frenchman following suit. There was the same trilingual rapid-fire performance when either French or German was spoken.

When Willie saw a peacock for the first time he said to his mother: "Oh, mamma, you should have seen it! Electric lights all over the ferns and a turkey underneath!"

DR. ROBERT E. O'CONNELL, DR. GEORGE D. O'CONNELL, DENTISTS, Hastings Building, Post Street and Grant Avenue. Tel. Douglas 2733.

IT'S not a large place; we'd rather care well for a few people than indifferently for many. The table, the service, and the surroundings are our specialties.

YE TEA CUP INNE
1427 Bush Street, below Van Ness (upstairs)

Pears'

Soap, like books, should be chosen with discretion. Both are capable of infinite harm.

The selection of Pears' is a perfect choice and a safeguard against soap evils.

Matchless for the complexion.

FAIRMONT HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

From every standpoint the best Hotel for permanent residence

Applications for apartments for the winter should be made at an early date with the management

Palace Hotel Company

Tennis Tournament

CONTINUES ALL NEXT WEEK at Matchless

Del Monte

The finals will be full of intense interest. Every one you know will be there. Friday and Saturday will be the biggest days of the whole event.

Write for reservations.

H. R. WARNER, Manager

The Peninsula

SAN MATEO, CAL.

A home in the country practically within San Francisco's gates. Only thirty minutes away. Frequent trolley and train service. See S. P. time-tables. Located in the heart of one of the most beautiful gardens in the State. No winds, no fogs. All the accommodations that culture and refinement demand. Progressive in every detail. Well-equipped club house, and commodious garage.

Winter Rates in force September 1, 1908

JAS. H. DOOLITTLE, Manager.

ROUND THE WORLD

TOURS DE LUXE

Leaving in August, September and October. Membership limited to twelve. Programmes for the asking.

THOS. COOK & SON

32 Powell Street, San Francisco

Hotel St. Francis

The spirit of good service and the facilities that produce it.

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF JAMES WOODS

Why Not Make Your Home At The Hotel Jefferson

Turk and Gough Streets Facing Jefferson Square

A superior class hotel with every modern convenience and comfort. Operated on the American and European plans. Special rates to permanent guests. Special attention paid to the table—we invite comparisons. Management Noab W. Gray, formerly manager Alexander Young Hotel, Honolulu, and Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

You Can Live At The Hotel Jefferson Better And For Less Than At Home

Hotel del Coronado

Motto: "BEST OF EVERYTHING" Most Delightful Climate on Earth

American Plan. Summer rates $3.50 per day each and upward, or $21.00 per week each and upward "Good Music" and "Fine Automobile Road, Los Angeles-Riverside to Coronado." Golf, Tennis, Polo, and other outdoor sports every day in the year.

New 700-foot ocean pier, for fishing. Boating and Bathing are the very best. Send for booklet to

MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado Beach, Cal. Or see H. F. NORCROSS, Agent, 334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles. Tel. A 6789; Main 3917. 22d Street and Broadway

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"

Building, concrete, steel and marble.

Located, most fashionable shopping district.

210 rooms, 135 baths.

Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests.

Most refined hostelry in Seattle.

Absolutely fireproof. English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

Sherman, Clay & Co., occupying this entire building at Kearny and Sutter Streets, S. F., are headquarters for every kind of musical instrument from Steinway pianos down. You have no need to go elsewhere for any article pertaining to the music business.

STEINWAY AND OTHER PIANOS—VICTOR TALKING MACHINES

Kearny and Sutter, S. F.

635 Van Ness Ave. San Francisco

Broadway at 13th Oakland

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy officers who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Lieutenant-Colonel Robert R. Stevens, U. S. A., will be relieved from duty as chief quartermaster of the Department of Texas upon the arrival in San Antonio of Colonel John M. Clem, U. S. A., and will proceed to San Francisco to assume the duties of chief quartermaster of the Department of California.

Major Ira A. Haynes, adjutant-general, U. S. A., is announced as assistant to the adjutant-general of the Department of the Visayas, P. I., and will in addition to his other duties assume charge of the office of judge advocate of that department, relieving Major George H. Morgan, adjutant-general, U. S. A., of that duty.

Captain Cornelius C. Smith, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., is relieved from duty in the Sequoia and General Grant National Parks and with his troop will march to reach the Presidio of San Francisco about September 15.

Captain James Pickering, First Infantry, U. S. A., has been ordered to proceed to the Presidio of Monterey and report in person to the commanding officer of that post for duty at the School of Musketry.

Captain J. S. Dewitt, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., was here last week on leave, en route to Washington, D. C.

Captain Samuel V. Ham, quartermaster, U. S. A., is ordered to proceed to the Presidio of San Francisco and report in person to the commanding officer for duty as quartermaster of that post.

Captain John A. Murtagh, Medical Corps, U. S. A., has been granted two months' leave with permission to go from Manila to Japan and China.

Captain Edmund D. Shortlidge, Medical Corps, U. S. A., has had his resignation of his commission as an officer of the army accepted by the President, to take effect on September 15.

Lieutenant E. W. McIntyre, U. S. N., has been detached from the Washington and ordered to continue treatment at the Naval Hospital at Mare Island.

Lieutenant W. R. Van Auker, U. S. N., has been detached from the St. Louis and ordered to the Washington.

Lieutenant David L. Roscoe, First Cavalry, U. S. A., has been granted four months' leave of absence on a surgeon's certificate of disability.

Lieutenant Frederick Mears, U. S. A., has been transferred from the Eleventh Cavalry to the First Cavalry.

Lieutenant Bruce Palmer, Tenth Cavalry, U. S. A., arrived here last week and was assigned to duty at department headquarters until the sailing of the first available transport for the Philippines, when he will leave to join his regiment.

Lieutenant Rowland B. Ellis, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., has been granted three months and fifteen days' leave of absence, to take effect about November 21.

Lieutenant Guy B. G. Hanna, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., has been transferred from the unassigned list to the Ninety-Ninth Company, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A.

Lieutenant Garfield L. McKinney, Medical Corps, U. S. A., has reported at headquarters, Department of California, and is assigned to temporary duty there until the sailing of the transport Crook on September 15.

Passed Assistant Surgeon E. M. Brown, U. S. N., has had the unexpired portion of his sick leave revoked and is ordered to the Naval Recruiting Station, Los Angeles.

Assistant Surgeon J. A. Biello, U. S. N., has been detached from duty with the Pacific Torpedo Fleet and ordered to the Naval Hospital, Mare Island.

Assistant Surgeon Henry W. B. Turner, U. S. N., has been ordered to the Naval Medical School Hospital, Washington, D. C., for duty.

Assistant Surgeon J. T. Duhigg, U. S. N., is detached from duty at the Naval Recruiting Station, Los Angeles, and ordered to duty with the Pacific Torpedo Fleet.

Orders have been issued as follows regarding the duties of medical officers in connection with the manoeuvres at Atascadero: Captain Henry S. Kierstedt, Medical Corps, U. S. A., Presidio of Monterey, to accompany the Twentieth Infantry and five companies of the Eighth Infantry; Captain Robert L. Carswell, Medical Corps, U. S. A., Depot of Recruits and Casuals, Angel Island, to accompany the Eighth Infantry from Fort McDowell; Lieutenant Howard McC. Snyder, Medical Corps, U. S. A., Army General Hospital, to accompany two troops of the Fourteenth Cavalry from the Presidio of San Francisco; Lieutenant Joseph A. Worthington, Medical Corps, U. S. A., Army General Hospital, to accompany Company A, Engineer Corps, from Fort Mason.

Melbourne has a new theatre—the King's—capable of seating two thousand people, and only five months intervened between foundation stone and completion. This is claimed to be a world's record. Two hundred men worked on it night and day, and on public holidays as well.

At Out-of-Town Hotels.

Among recent arrivals from San Francisco at Hotel del Coronado are Mr. M. P. Brasch, Mr. D. J. McKay, Mr. Paul M. Henry, Mr. R. W. Martindale, Mrs. D. H. Bibb, Miss Bibb, Mr. G. T. Marsh.

Among recent arrivals from San Francisco at Byron Hot Springs are the following: Judge and Mrs. Frank H. Kerrigan, Mr. H. H. Cosgriff, Mr. C. H. Meyerstein, Miss Helen Gray, Miss Alice Small, Mr. Charles Mattheas, Mrs. Lewis, Mr. F. J. Anthony, Mr. S. Walker, Mr. S. H. Woodruff, Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Feigenbaum.

The following are among the registrations from San Francisco at Etna Springs: Mr. F. H. Gassaway, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Wilson and son, Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Wood, Mr. G. H. Hufschmidt and family, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hamilton, Mrs. Hamilton, Mr. and Mrs. M. Ehrman, Mr. William G. Volkman, Miss Martha Galloway, Mr. and Mrs. C. Adams and daughter, Mr. L. H. Hufschmidt and family, Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Teltey, Miss Lelia Hamilton, Mr. Henry St. Goar and family.

Among recent registrations at The Peninsula, San Mateo, are Mr. and Mrs. John Spruance, Mr. and Mrs. G. Y. Doane, and Mrs. J. S. Morgan, of San Francisco; Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Hintz, of Oakland; Mrs. Spencer Ashlin and daughter, Mrs. Ed. C. Hetzell, Mrs. J. McCabe, Mrs. Charles Leimer, Mrs. Clara Baum, Mr. A. J. Zadig, Mrs. H. Zadig, Miss A. N. Rhea, Mr. John Huff, His Highness Duke Ferdinand de Montpensier and party, Mr. A. Bibhero, Mr. Frank S. Andrews and Mr. F. D. Andrews, of Berkeley; Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Zellerbach, Mrs. Theo. Steiner and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Kelley, Dr. and Mrs. F. R. Orella, Mr. and Mrs. James Green, Miss Willette Kersbaw, and Miss Lydia Gibbins.

Recent arrivals from San Francisco at Hotel Del Monte include Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Long, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Long, Miss Helen Jones, Mr. Harold P. Hill, Mrs. J. Campbell Shorb, Miss Ethel Shorb, Miss Josephine Hannigan, Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Ford, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Roos, Mr. and Mrs. I. M. Green, Mrs. B. F. Howland, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Ernes, Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell McNutt, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. F. M. DeLano, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. DeLano, Mrs. E. V. Cowell, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Baldwin, Mr. and Mrs. Cuyler Lee, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Langdon, Mr. J. H. Noyes, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Fennimore, Mr. and Mrs. Leslie C. Tubbs, Mrs. S. P. Dodge, Mr. H. C. Dodge, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Newhall, Mr. and Mrs. E. Wright, Mrs. Edwin R. Dimond, Mrs. C. Roos, Mrs. L. Schloss, Mr. and Mrs. Gerald L. Rathbone, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. T. Ball, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Goldman, Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Tubbs, Miss Alice C. Stodard, Mr. George H. Stodard, Mr. and Mrs. D. Roth, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Booth, Mrs. M. L. Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Young, Mr. and Mrs. George T. Balch, Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Porter, Mr. H. B. Porter.

Paste Jewelry.

A report from Newport says that paste jewels are coming more and more into favor, and that they may be seen almost any evening at the larger social affairs. Who would have thought there was so much sense at Newport?

It is said that the English queen often wears imitation stones, considering them to be quite as beautiful as the genuine thing, as of course they are. It is only the expert who can tell the difference and women do not usually dress for the benefit of the expert. And even the expert could hardly detect the difference between the real and the imitation without a close examination, which would be impossible in a drawing-room. The fact of the matter is that if you are rich whatever you wear will be supposed to be genuine, and if you are poor whatever you wear will be assumed to be artificial.

Another reason for wearing paste is the peace of mind that it gives. During the last few years a small fortune in the way of jewelry has been lost. A certain amount, of course, finds its way back through the efforts of the police, but there are still many valuable jewels that have disappeared permanently, notably those lost by Mrs. John R. Drexel and Mrs. J. Stewart Barney. Several seasons ago Mrs. Perry Belmont lost a magnificent sunburst of diamonds, which loss was reported to the police. The late chief of police, Benjamin H. Richards, was responding to the call of Mrs. Belmont at her cottage just at sunset one day, when he saw on the road of the driveway the missing jewel. Mrs. Belmont told the chief what she had called on him for. Taking the jewel from his pocket, he handed it to her.

Rich, mellow, perfectly aged in wood and very delicately flavored

Old Gilt Edge Whiskey Rye or Bourbon

THE OCULARIUM
Henry Kahnt Co.
OPTICIANS
 KODAKS & SUPPLIES
 SCIENTIFIC INSTRUMENTS
 Catalogues Free
644 MARKET ST.
 OPP. PALACE HOTEL
 BRANCH 1309 VAN NESS AVE.

YOUR HAND

is the only one that can unlock your box in our Safe Deposit Vaults. Your valuables in one of our steel boxes can not be lost by theft or fire. For this protection $4.00 per year and up.

CROCKER SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS

CROCKER BUILDING Junction Post and Market, S. F.

Hotel Majestic

(Sutter and Gough)

A homelike hotel for refined people. Very best cuisine. Moderate prices. Rates on application.

Hotel Colonial

THE SELECT HOTEL OF SAN FRANCISCO Stockton above Sutter Street

American and European Plans Special Rates to Permanents HOWARD T. BLETHEN, Manager Telephone, Kearny 4754

Hotel Rafael

San Rafael, Cal.

Open year around. Headquarters Automobile League. New and commodious garage. Fifty minutes from San Francisco. Complete change of climate. Tiburon or Sausalito ferry. All modern conveniences.

F. N. Orpin, Proprietor.

Roy C. Ward Jas. W. Dean
Jas. K. Polk Geo. E. Billings

GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.

ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE EFFECTED

312 California Street. Phone Douglas 2283 San Francisco, Cal.

John F. Forbes

Certified Public Accountant

601 KOHL BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Tennent's

TRADE MARK

J. R. Tennent

Ale and Stout

from Wellpark Brewery Glasgow, Scotland

Forbes Bros., Agents, 1926 Sutter St.

Byron Hot Springs

The waters cure rheumatism—the environment is perfect—the hotel comfortable and supplied with an unexcelled table. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, ground floor, James Flood Building; Peck-Judab Co., 789 Market St., or address hotel.

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

"Mrs. Bildad says that she talks in her sleep." "That isn't the worst of it, either. She talks when she is awake."—Life.

Actor—Are we alone? Voice from the audience—You would be—if we could get our money back at the box-office.—Footlights.

Wife—What would you like for your birthday, dear? Husband—Nothing at all. I haven't any money.—Megendorfer Blätter.

"Pa!" "Well, what is it now?" "Pa, when I grow up, how will I keep from marrying the wrong woman?" "You won't."—Life.

Doctor—You have some sort of poison in your system. Patient—Shouldn't wonder. What was that last stuff you gave me.—New York Sun.

Blobbs—A politician always reminds me of a piano. Slobbs—How so? Blobbs—If he's square he's considered old-fashioned.—Philadelphia Record.

George—Gertie has decided to marry young Multimill. She thinks she can make something out of him. Ethel—About how much?—London Opinion.

Mrs. Benham—As the story goes, Rip Van Winkle slept twenty years. Benham—I wonder if his breakfast was ready when he woke up.—Town Topics.

She (sentimentally)—How like life are the waves of the sea! He—You bet. Come to the shore in great style, and go away broke.—Sydney Newsletter.

"I hardly know my wife by sight. You see, I made her acquaintance at the masked ball, and now we're traveling in our auto all the time!"—Jugend.

She—I understand that drinking is one of your failings. He—You have been misinformed. It is one of my most pronounced successes.—Chicago Journal.

"I was introduced to your wife today, and she glared at me." "I can't account for that." "I can. I s'pose I'm your scapegoat, you old fraud."—Kansas City Journal.

"The way to get away with anything in this world, my boy, is to stick to it—stick to it!" "Yep, that's the way the cat got away with the fly paper just now."—Houston Post.

Editor—Did you interview the leader of the suffragettes, as I instructed? Reporter—I called on her, but she wouldn't talk. Editor—She wouldn't! Was she dead?—Puck.

Eve (in the garden)—Adam, I've got to have another dress. Adam—Eve, you're the most resolute woman I've ever known. You're always turning over a new leaf.—The Tatler.

"You say you read every word of the advertisements in that magazine?" "Yes," answered Miss Cayenne. "It's a relief to find something that isn't in dialect."—Washington Star.

Blox—Bimberly is exceedingly modest, isn't he? Knox—I hadn't noticed it. Blox—Well, he never talks about himself. Knox—Oh, that isn't modesty; it's discretion.—Chicago News.

Miss Watson—Did Mr. Sark say to you as I entered the drawing-room last night, Clara, "Is that the beautiful Miss Watson?" Clara—Yes, dear, with the accent on the "that."—Evening Post.

Jeweler—Yes, that engagement ring is plated, but it is warranted for ten years. Purchaser—Haven't you got anything cheaper, warranted for about ten weeks?—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"I started to tell my wife about a woman who made her own fall gown." "Well?" "She capped my story with one about a man who made a million dollars."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

"I hear you are going to take your family to Europe." "Thinking some of it." "How will you go?" "By balloon." "But that isn't practical." "It will be by the time we get ready."—Nashville American.

First Weather-Bureau Man—Where's that flag we hang out when there's going to be fair weather? Second Weather-Bureau Man—I hung it out last week and a storm came up and carried it away.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Mrs. Mugins—My husband is a perfect crank. Mrs. Bugins—All husbands are, my dear. Mrs. Mugins—But fancy a man who complains that my mustard-plasters are not as strong as those his mother used to make.—Stray Stories.

"Your business college for young ladies seems to be all right." "It is all right." "Do you give the girls a good practical business training?" "In reply to that question I can only say that 60 per cent of our graduates marry their employers the first year."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

"Leaving, eh? At the height of the season, too! What are you going to do?" the mistress snarled. "I aint a-goin' to do nothin', mum," the cook answered complacently. "Karma, the new fortune teller down to the pier, read my pam last night, and it turns out I'm to marry money before the full o' the moon."—Boston Transcript.

The Customer—When I bought a car from you a few weeks ago you said you would be willing to supply a new part if I broke anything. The Molar Agent—Certainly, sir. What can I have the pleasure of providing you with? The Customer—I want a pair of new ankles, a floating rih, a left eye, three yards of cuticle, a box of assorted finger-nails, four molars, two hicuspids, and a funny-bone.—The Sketch.

Ex-President Dooley's Own Story of His Big Hunt.

"A Sunday's Fishin' at Mud Lake," be ex-Prisidint Dooley. [Price two hundred an' forty thousand dollars.] Sundah, th' ilivinth iv July, woke clear an' fair. We detarmined on an arly start, an' th' nine-nine saw us un-comfortably enscened in a corner iv th' smoker. Our outfit had been carefully selected. Fr th' bimift iv young sportsmen, p'raps a few wurruds on th' equipment may not be amiss. In th' first place th' Nimrod shud provide himsilf with a sthrong pair iv shoes. Button shoes are excellent, but not so aisy to put on again afther th' niciss'ry nap afther lunch. I mesilf prefer ordh'n'ry lace shoes, with a loop behind. Th' loop shud be made iv cloth, which is aisy on th' middle finger, that must be employed to pull th' shoe on th' foot. Socks shud be worn inside th' shoes an' between th' shoes an' th' feet. Th' rest iv th' apparel fr pickered, perch, an' bullhead fishin' consists iv a pair iv pants an' a shirt iv some dark materyal, undherwear, if convenient, although this is a matter iv personal taste, an' some kind iv hat. A silk hat, although tasty, is not advised. Tb' adventurer shud provide himsilf with a coat collar an' necktie to guard again th' chill night air an' th' withering glances iv ladies in th' sthreet-car.

"This much fr th' costume. To protict wansilf again th' finny monstherers it is niciss'ry to provide wansilf with a rod, some line, an' a hook, which, whin thrown into th' water an' violently raised an' lowered, prevints th' maddened craters frm leapin' into th' boat an' atin' th' lunch. Th' line is attached to th' rod at th' end most remote frm th' fisherman. At th' other end iv th' line is attached th' hook, which is in turn attached to th' forestry in th' bottom of th' lake, to th' side iv th' boat, to th' fisherman, or, in some rare instances, to th' fish. In case th' hook he-comes hopelessly entangled in a fish, I do not know what advice to give. But this is an unusual occurrence, an', in th' rough life iv th' wilderness, it is not possible to provide again ivry emergency. Provisioning th' expedition is th' most seeryous matter. I have found th' brand known as Boodweiser th' most nourishing, but many men skilled in woodcraft prefer th' blander Pilsner. However individjool taste inclines, th' beer shud be carried in glass bottles holdin' at laste a pint. Excellent sport is sometimes to be obtained durin' th' arly hours iv th' expedition by hurling th' empty bottles at switchmen, station-agents, an' th' other semi-savage fauna iv th' outskirts iv th' wilderness. This is a neat, though iv course not a serious, test iv marksmanship. In practisin' it th' party shud be careful to larn that th' thrain intends to proceed an' is not goin' to stop at th' next switch."—American Magazine.

Mild, Rich and Satisfying Sanchez y Haya

Clear Havana Cigars
Factory No. 1 Tampa, Fla.
Tillmann & Bendel
Pacific Slope Distributors

SCHMIDT LITHOGRAPH CO.
36TH YEAR PHONE 005425 200
CALIFORNIA MADE
SCHMIDT LITHOGRAPH CO.
LABELS CARTONS ETC.
SECOND AND BRYANT STS. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
SAN FRANCISCO, LOS ANGELES, PORTLAND, SEATTLE.

MT. TAMALPAIS AND MUIR WOODS
VIA SAUSALITO FERRY
FOOT OF MARKET ST.
LEGAL HOLIDAYS—SUNDAY TIME
TICKET OFFICE AT SAUSALITO FERRY

Toyo Kisen Kaisha (ORIENTAL S. S. CO.)
S. S. Tenyo Maru.....Friday, Sept. 25, 1908
S. S. Nippon Maru (via Manila).....
.....Tuesday, Oct. 20, 1908
S. S. Hongkong Maru..Tuesday, Nov. 17, 1908
Steamers sail from company's piers, Nos. 42-44, near foot of Second Street, 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Hiogo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.
Round-trip tickets at reduced rates.
For freight and passage apply at office, 240 James Flood Building. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

Santa Fe
Round Trip Rates
Baltimore.....$107.50
Boston.....110.50
Chicago.....72.50
*Denver-Colo. Spgs-Pueblo.....55.00
Huston, Texas...60.00
Kansas City.....60.00
Memphis.....67.50
Minneapolis.....73.50
New Orleans.....67.50
New York.....108.50
Omaha.....60.00
Philadelphia.....108.50
St. Louis.....67.50
St. Paul.....73.50
Washington, D. C. 107.50
On sale Sept. 15 and 16
* On sale Sept. 14 and 15
To Denver only Sept. 21 to 27
To Kansas City only on sale Sept. 23-24-25
Back East EXCURSIONS
Phone Kearny 315 F. W. PRINCE 673 Market St.

THE LATEST STYLES IN
Choice Woolens
H. S. BRIDGE & CO.
Merchant Tailors
108-110 Sutter St. French Bank Bldg.

Press Clippings
Are money-makers for Contractors, Supply Houses, Business Men and Corporations.
ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
Phone, Kearny 392. 88 First Street

Mr. Publisher:
Does it interest you to know that ALL the mechanical work on THE ARGONAUT is done by us? Fact.
WILLIAMS PRINTING CO.,
Phone, Douglas 2905. 406 Sutter Street

Continuance of our
50th ANNIVERSARY SALE
Unusual Reductions
In High Grade Furniture, Carpets, Rugs and Draperies
D. N. & E. WALTER & CO.
Wholesale Retail Van Ness and Sacramento Since 1858

Does Not Sting the Tongue
BLASKOWER'S SMOKING MIXTURE
M. BLASKOWER, 201 MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
A New Pipe Mixture
OF EXCEPTIONAL MERIT MILD SWEET SMOKE
2 oz. 25 cts. 4 oz. 50 cts.
M. BLASKOWER
201 Montgomery St. 1117 Van Ness Ave.

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXIII. No. 1643.

SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 19, 1908.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10 payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breams Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opéra. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at F and Thirteenth Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Denison News Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains.

Published at 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal. Telephone, Kearny 5895.

THIRTY-SECOND YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL—Credit an Index of Character—A Power Site by a Dam Site—The Pot and the Kettle—Who Owns the Laboring Man—Another Constitution—Dr. Jordan's Ultimatum—Editorial Notes.....	177-179
CAMPAIGN TOPICS.....	180
LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.....	180
TWO THEATRICAL MISFITS: "The Mollusc" Produced by Frohman at the Garrick Theatre—Arnold Daly in a Bowery Play.....	181
OLD FAVORITES: "Beth Gélert," by William Robert Spencer.....	181
INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All over the World.....	181
JUDGE VERSUS VIGILANTE: XXXI. By Jerome A. Hart.....	182
THE STRUGGLE IN TEXAS: Davy Crockett and Sam Houston Figure in a Stirring Romance of Early Days	183
THE BOHEMIAN JINKS: The Grove Play Has Now Become a Distinctive Feature of Dramatic Art.....	183
PICKET NUMBER TEN. By George Shedd.....	184
BOOKS AND AUTHORS. By Sidney G. P. Coryn.....	185
LITERARY NOTES: Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip—New Publications.....	186
FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.....	186
DRAMA: Warfield and Belasco. By Josephine Hart Phelps	187
VANITY FAIR.....	188
STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.....	189
THE MERRY MUSE.....	189
CURRENT VERSE: "When the Song Is Done," by Arthur Upson; "The Outlaw," by Humphreys Park; "To the Apollo Belvedere," by Elsa Barker; "The Moor Grave," by John Galsworthy; "The Brides of May and September," by Sarah N. Cleghorn; "Ninon Grown Old," by Fannie Heaslip Lea.....	190
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy.....	190-191
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day.....	192

Credit an Index of Character.

There is nothing very surprising in the circumstance that San Francisco was able to dispose of three or four million dollars' worth of municipal bonds; neither was it matter for newspaper astonishment that these bonds were "eagerly sought." San Francisco is one of the solvent cities of the world; its trade is opulent; its overseas commerce is increasing with the rapidly increasing demand of Asia and the Pacific littoral; its resources are virtually limitless in the productive capacity of California and the Pacific States; its credit financially has never been impeached or even suspected; its security for the payment of any debt it may contract is as substantial as any that could be offered by the capitals of Europe or America. Why, then, should its bonds not be "gilt-edged" in the markets of the world? The promptitude with which the money-lenders responded to San Francisco's proffer was not surprising, because the temporary need of this city was apparent and the consequent necessity of a bond issue inevitable. The bond-buyers have long been prepared to meet San Francisco's financial demand. They were waiting for this investment.

The credit of a city, like that of a citizen, may be two-fold. A man in private life may be a cantankerous, quarrelsome, unneighborly person and at the same time a man of unimpeachable integrity in all his business dealings; he may even be a kind husband and an indulgent father. Many citizens are immoral in their personal habit, but the soul of honor in their business relations. These are not companionable or likable in the sense that they are agreeable neighbors or fit associates for men whose ideas of decency are based on strict moral conventions; but none of us would hesitate on that account to lend them money or give them credit for merchandise. Commercial integrity is entirely distinct from personal disposition and predilection.

San Francisco's fame as a peaceable, law-abiding community has been blown upon by its own citizens. For months now lengthening into years we have been quarreling among ourselves over matters in themselves quite trivial in comparison with what should be the real purpose of our existence. Envy, chicane, rank treachery, small ambitions of small men, false accusations, crimination and recrimination, during a long period, have served to keep alive the bitterest of personal animosities. But the unseemly hubbub is in the nature of a family quarrel, in which the immediate neighborhood takes no more interest than it would take in a dog-fight in the street; and beyond the provincial pale the circumstance that Mr. Spreckels has financed a prosecution intended to overthrow his personal enemies and business rivals excites no comment whatever. Even Mr. Heney's serial failures to convict those whom Mr. Spreckels accuses are unnoticed outside of the bailiwick in which he swaggers and blusters so futilely. Neither Mr. Spreckels nor Mr. Heney, nor the entire outfit of graft prosecutors, can injure San Francisco's commercial good name. The bond-buyers do not care the worth of an interest-bearing coupon whether Mr. Spreckels likes or dislikes Mr. Calloun; the bankers of New York are indifferent to the personal prejudices of Mr. Phelan; and nobody is in the least concerned whether Mr. Heney is earning the salary that Mr. Spreckels pays him for marking time in the accomplishment of Mr. Spreckels's private revenges.

As a matter of fact it is doubtful if the methods of the graft prosecution have seriously injured the moral status of this city in the eyes of the world at large, or as much of the world as may have taken the trouble to inquire what all the row may be about. Anyway, the reputation that Mr. Spreckels and Mr. Phelan have given San Francisco has not had the slightest weight in the money market or in the commercial world. San Francisco is far greater than the Spreckels contingent, and while she can not deny that she is involved in a disgraceful controversy reeking with mercenary motives, rank with venal purposes, smelling to high heaven with the foul odors of rotten politics, she is still able to command the highest respect from those whose good opinion is worth asking. The destiny of San Francisco can not be retarded by the little men who are trying to pull down what better men are determined to build up. She has ever been as her own poet described her, "serene, indifferent to fate." She has suffered much, endured much, and may be fated to suffer much more, to endure vastly more before her era of perfect peace arrives; but when the final chapter is written it will not contain even a mention of the graft prosecution or those who prosecuted. Full-grown men do not recall the colics of childhood; the histories of nations do not record the petty quarrels of obsolete political factions; cities rise and fall in response to the irresistible impulse of unswerving circumstance, and are not permanently disturbed by the retching and gulping of their flatulent citizens.

It is easy to imagine the comment that would have been made by the graft prosecution press if the bankers and bond-buyers had hesitated or refused to take our bonds. Those newspapers would have expressed hypocritical regret to conceal inward exultation. It would have been charged that our sins of omission and commission were so heinous that the money markets of the world had declared us bankrupt; that the inability of the graft prosecution to convict anybody, in spite of perjured juries and repudiated immunity contracts, had reduced us to the condition of a lean beggar appealing hopelessly to the cold charity of safe, sane, and conservative finance; that in failing to punish all those whom the graft prosecution had accused we were ourselves convicted of such high crimes and misdemeanors that nobody would lend us money with which to rehabilitate our own financial condition. If the bond-buyers had refused to buy our bonds, the refusal would have been hailed by the graft prosecution and its news paper satellites as retributive justice upon us for not bending to the will of Mr. Spreckels and bowing to the behests of Mr. Phelan. It happened otherwise, and consequently there has been no incentive for hypocritical reproach, no chance to denounce anybody for bringing disgrace and ruin upon the community. It's too bad, and we are almost persuaded to offer the graft prosecution our insincerest condolences.

A Power Site by a Dam Site.

Because William Ham Hall, controlling certain lands and rights in the Hetch Hetchy Valley, has fixed a high price for his land and reserved his right to generate power from the waterflow within his ownership jurisdiction, the proponents of the municipal water supply scheme are in conspicuous and rancorous dudgeon. Everything was proceeding apparently as smoothly as the surface of a sierran trout pool; the junketing committee of the board of supervisors had "been over the ground" and were absolutely satisfied with the result of their investigation; only a few acres had to be purchased at a nominal price, a few water rights paid for in insignificant sums; and little more remained except the selection of reservoir sites, the issuance of a few millions of dollars' worth of bonds, the laying of the pipe, and possibly the purchase, under condemnation proceedings if necessary, of the Spring Valley's local distribution system. The public utilities committee of the board of supervisors were reported "jubilant," the municipal ownership advocates were "enthusiastic," and everybody was happy.

Now comes William Ham Hall with his ultimatum, and the aspect of the entire proposition suffers a change much for the wores. Mr. Hall wants $200,000 for his reservoir rights, including about 900 acres of land, and reserves for his own use the power rights. It is not the price that Mr. Hall has stipulated for his property that worries the supervisors and those who are urging them forward in this matter; provided the citizens of San Francisco vote bonds for the establishment of a municipal water system to the amount of $35,000,000 or $40,000,000, a preliminary expenditure of $200,000 would be but a mere bagatelle—a drop in the bucket, so to speak in accurate metaphor. But the advocates of this Hetch Hetchy proposition are not satisfied with all the water that Mr. Ham can sell to them for potable use—they demand all the power that this water can produce. What the supervisors and their colleagues will do with this power is an after consideration. Perhaps they will establish a municipal lighting plant involving the bonding of the city for a few more millions. San Francisco's bonding capacity is away above par just now, and the opportunity to make hay while the sun shines could not be lost. There is a limit, of course, to the financial credit of the city, but why not press the limit? Some of us need the money and there are more difficult methods of getting it than by bonding the city for water plants and lighting power plants.

The fact that Mr. Hall refuses to part with his power rights induces the suspicion that he is reserving those rights for the San Francisco Gas and Electric Company; indeed, it is so charged by the organs of the Municipal Ownership League. Mr. Hall himself stoutly maintains that his reservation is in the interest of a New York corporation specially organized to develop this power, and he as stoutly avers that the organization was effected long before the Hetch Hetchy water scheme was broached. There is also more than a hint that the Spring Valley corporation is also in conspiracy with Mr. Hall with intent to defraud San Francisco of its Sierra water supply, and thereby retain its own income and profits from the business of supplying San Francisco with water.

All of which may be true or untrue. It is impossible, in the absence of direct and competent testimony, to either affirm or deny the statements and deductions printed in the daily press. And really it is of no moment whether the public service corporations are balking the municipal water scheme or not; the crux of the present situation is Mr. William Ham Hall and his proposition. Does Mr. Hall own this property? Has he a right to dispose of it? Is Mr. Hall in possession of power rights in the Hetch Hetchy Valley? Has he a right to reserve those rights if he desires to do so? In the answers to these direct and pertinent questions is the first solution of the matter now before the house. There seems to be no dispute regarding the possessory title of Mr. Hall to the land, for it is asserted by some of the more economical municipal ownership enthusiasts that if the city considers the price too high it could, possibly, be lowered by a condemnation suit. That is an acknowledgment that Mr. Hall owns the land and has a right to sell it for any price he can get or any price the court may allow. There seems to be some doubt, however, of Mr. Hall's right to use the power generated by the waters of the valley. It is cited that Article 6 of the agreement between the city of San Francisco and Secretary Garfield of the Interior Department, expressly provides that the city of San Francisco shall have the right to sell to Modesto and Turlock irrigation districts any excess of electric power generated by the flow of the city's water; and further, that no power plant shall be interposed on the line of flow except by the city of San Francisco and for the purposes heretofore stipulated.

Even a stipulation as binding on the parties to the contract as this one appears to be could not bind others than those signatory to it. Mr. Hall is reported to claim that he acquired his rights before the Yosemite government reserve was extended over the Hetch Hetchy Valley. It is not likely that Secretary Garfield, in his agreement with the city of San Francisco, undertook to convey to the city any rights not in full possession of the government of the United States. Neither is it likely that he intended that the agreement should operate retroactively to swallow any private rights that might have existed before the government extended its reservation. Hence, unless Mr. Hall can be forced out of his possessory title by the government itself, by compelling him to accept lieu lands, for example, it is improbable that he will be disturbed. As it is the stated intention of Mr. Hall to use his power, he can not be compelled to set a price on it preliminary to its sale to the city; and it is not probable that condemnation proceedings would lie against him in any amount except the exorbitant possibilities of his proposed enterprise. In this view of the matter it is fairly safe to assume that even the advocates of this municipal ownership scheme would not dare to assess such an enormous "preliminary expense" against the bonds to be voted by the people. No municipal ownership advocate has as yet suggested that the bulk of the money obtained from the sale of the water bonds shall be absorbed by the expense of purchasing the right to use the power generated by the water primarily intended for drinking, sprinkling, and hydrant use in San Francisco.

Altogether it seems a very difficult question that now confronts the board of supervisors of this city, and one that would almost discourage the municipal ownership advocates from further dallying with the Hetch Hetchy project.

The Pot and the Kettle.

The Kilkenny controversy between Mr. Hearst and Mr. Bryan over the workingman's vote is amusing rather than edifying. Both parties to the wrangle assume that the workingman is a political chattel and each claims him for his very own. The workingman who would vote for Mr. Taft is a traitor to his order; the workingman who would vote for Mr. Debs is a traitor to Mr. Hearst; and the workingman who would vote for Mr. Tom Watson is a traitor to Mr. Bryan. The workingman who would vote for Mr. Eugene C. Griffin hasn't been classified.

Usually a distinction is made by Mr. Hearst and Mr. Bryan between the workingman and the laboring man. The term "workingman" is general, and inclusive of the designation "laboring man." All men except the members of corporations and trusts and the idle or predatory rich work for their livelihood. These, say Mr. Hearst and Mr. Bryan, work the workingmen. The laboring man is one that works with his hands and belongs to a union or one that works with his hands and doesn't belong to a union. There is an irresistible conflict between the laborer of the unions and the laborer who doesn't wear a button or badge or other symbol of his trade affiliation. It is not a caste distinction; it is an economic segregation.

Ordinarily both Mr. Hearst and Mr. Bryan confine their solicitude to the laboring man; preferably to the laboring man that belongs to a laboring man's organization. They prate of "the dignity of labor," they champion "the rights of labor," and they make no pretense whatever of their utter contempt for the laboring man that will not or can not belong to a union. In times of political stress, however, Mr. Hearst and Mr. Bryan sink these subtle distinctions and address themselves omnifारiously to "workingmen." The multitude of votes among workingmen is vastly greater than the votes of the laboring men and still more vastly greater than the votes of the laboring men that have bound themselves by the oaths of their unions.

Just now the appeal is to workingmen. It is conceded by Mr. Hearst and Mr. Bryan that all votes are alike, whether they are the votes of laboring men in or out of the unions or votes of workingmen who are not subject to the labor classification in its special and technical definition. At the same time Mr. Bryan attempted a coup by inducing Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the Federation of Labor, to use his influence upon the organization of which he is the head to secure the delivery of that vote in bulk or, failing in the wholesale manipulation of the labor vote, to make consignment of the vote in job lots. Naturally Mr. Hearst resented this "bargain" or "conspiracy" or whatever it might be called arranged by Mr. Bryan and Mr. Gompers. The union labor vote is a valuable political asset and has always been claimed by Mr. Hearst by right of discovery and innumerable caveats of preemption. Mr. Bryan's business arrangement with Mr. Gompers and the plank in Mr. Bryan's platform promising everything to the workingmen looked to Mr. Hearst like an infringement on his personal property rights. It was necessary, therefore, to expose Mr. Bryan's insincerity by informing the Gompers following that Mr. Bryan had, on a certain obscure and wholly forgotten occasion, called the workers of the window-glass trade "public beggars," thereby casting a stigma of reproach and opprobrium upon all the workingmen in the United States. Not satisfied with this terrific knock-out stroke, Mr. Hearst followed it up with another directed at one Haskell, chairman of Mr. Bryan's committee of resolutions and platform, whom he accused of being a member of a citizens' alliance organized to encourage all kinds of laboring men, union or non-union, to practice their several trades and occupations in the cross-roads village of Muskogee, Indian Territory, or, as it is now situated, in the State of Oklahoma.

What Mr. Bryan will answer to these awful accusations can not be prophesied. Perhaps Mr. Bryan himself is uncertain as to the course he will pursue in stemming the tide of opposition which Mr. Hearst has thus incited against him. There is apparently no defense, for Mr. Hearst's affidavits are sworn to by some of the most reputable and veracious window-glass workers in the window-glass trade. The affidavits are presumably unimpeachable, and Mr. Bryan will certainly experience great difficulty in convincing the labor unions that his remark, specifically directed at the window-glass union, was not intended to blanket every labor union on the face of the earth. Consequently every labor union vote will be withdrawn from Bryan and given to Mr. Hearst's candidate, "Honest Tom" Hisgen; or to "Honest Tom" Watson; or to "Honest Eugene" Debs—unless, of course, Mr. Hearst shall find similar treason to the labor unions in the careers of Mr. Watson and Mr. Debs.

It is not an unseemly quarrel—this family row between Mr. Hearst and Mr. Bryan. On the contrary, it is seemly in the highest degree. It is in strict keeping with Mr. Hearst's ideals of what constitutes the best statesmanship, and it is not contrary to Mr. Bryan's own practice to smite his enemy on the hip after he has smitten him on the cheek. But as Mr. Bryan in this instance seems to be the under dog, the disinterested outsider is not averse from lending aid and comfort to the downtrodden and oppressed. Therefore it is our pleasure to inform Mr. Bryan, through the Iroquois Club of this city, of course, that Mr. Hearst once advocated in the newspaper owned by him and published in San Francisco a resort by the fruit-growers of California to Asiatic labor, preferably Chinese, in the harvesting, preservation, and shipment of their fruit. This was a direct assault by Mr. Hearst on the interests of the white laboring men of California, and in direct conflict with the fundamental principles of unionism on the Pacific Coast. Mr. Hearst may try to deny this charge that he once favored importation of Chinese cheap labor to handle the fruit crop of California, but an hour's research by the executive committee of the Iroquois will reveal the damnable proof in the files of Mr. Hearst's newspaper. Then, to be sure, when confronted by the palpable and irrefutable evidence of his guilt, Mr. Hearst will say that the crime was committed by one of his agents—by his local managing editor or by the office boy or some other irresponsible employee; whereupon Mr. Bryan may calmly retort that if Mr. Hearst is not responsible for the acts of his agents neither is he (Bryan) responsible for the business affiliations of his agent, Mr. Haskell.

All of which should teach Mr. Hearst that if he would live by the sword he must expect to die by the sword, and that if he persist in living in a glass house he should exercise great care in throwing stones, or refrain altogether from that dangerous pastime.

Who Owns the Laboring Man?

The Rev. Peter C. Yorke, whose political influence was largely instrumental in forwarding the venal political ambition of Eugene Schmitz and his gang of free-booting supervisors, has recently delivered one of his characteristic addresses upon the interrogatory: "Who Owns the Laboring Man?" Father Yorke hastened to apologize for his insinuation that the laboring man is owned by anybody, explaining that he but echoed the raucous and ribald "tone of the public press and political discussion." Notwithstanding his apology and explanation, Father Yorke did not explicitly or very emphatically deny that the rank and file of "organized labor" is, to a large extent, owned and controlled by persons whom the orator called "leaders." Perhaps he was thinking of his own disastrous "leadership"; perhaps he recalled the "leadership" of Mr. Abraham Ruef. Anyway he admitted that there is "a certain element" in the organized section of the "laboring class" that "votes blindly on their leaders' advice."

One of the lesser faults to be found with all utterances from Father Yorke is his insistence that the "class" of which he is a "leader" must be considered above every other constituent of the community. He will not concede that the laborer is only worthy of his hire. In his published opinion the mere accident that a man is born and bred to manual labor is sufficient to raise him above his fellow-citizens, entitling him to privileges and prerogatives that must be denied to other citizens if the laborer's interests are in anywise jeopardized. Father Yorke and demagogues of similarly small calibre go even farther than this general proposition; they narrow the "rights of labor" to the prescriptions of the labor unions; they excommunicate the non-union laborer and declare him to be pariah and anathema; they invert the pyramid and compel the social structure to balance itself on its apex; there is no formula of equality in the proletarian creed of the Yorkes, the Hearsts, and the Debs. Unless the laboring man is also a union man he is a thing of contempt, to be reviled, boycotted, thumped, persecuted, driven to the poorhouse, the penitentiary, or the morgue. That has been the policy of the unions in San Francisco, where the tyranny of organized labor has exercised supremacy of despotism; other communities have been similarly afflicted in direct ratio to the strength or weakness of the resistance opposed to the "leaders" and owners of the labor that herds in the unions.

Father Yorke says that "the laboring man is owned by his home, his family, and by God." These, of course, are mere words. Father Yorke does not include the non-union laborer in his category of ownership. The non-union laborer doesn't deserve a home; his family shall perish from lack of food if the unions can accomplish that conclusion of their logic; and he hasn't any God fit to be named in the same prayer with that of the laboring man that belongs to a union. He is a heretic to be burned on a pile of faggots from a union woodyard or stretched as far as he will reach on a rack decorated with a union label.

It will be argued by Father Yorke and the others of his noisy tribe that it is the non-union laborer's own fault—that by joining a union he may absolve himself of his heresy and receive full shrift from the “leaders” and owners of organized labor. But he can not join a union unless it shall please the union to admit him, which very often does not accord with its brutally selfish policy, and if he be admitted himself his sons will be excluded from apprenticeship and so thrown upon the human scrap heap from which the criminal class is recruited. Even though he be furnished with a ticket, he must promise not to work for less than the union scale, even though there may be no work for him at that rate, and if, paraphrasing Father Yorke, “he strives for enough wages to secure comfort for his family and for another start in life, as well as for provision for his old age,” no woe that the union can cause to betide him will be sufficient to appease the hatred of his former comrades. Apostasy by a union man, even though the apostate was driven to his revolt by the moan of a dying wife and the outcry of starving babes, is the unpardonable sin of unionism’s selfish creed of tyranny. We must go back to the middle ages to match the bigotry of the latter-day “leader” of organized labor, and we must recall the vassalage of the feudal system to find comparison for the servitude of labor under the oligarchy that these leaders have instituted.

Another Constitution.

The news of constitutional government in Turkey is received by civilization with a sort of vague complacency. We do not quite know in what way the unspeakable Turk will be benefited by a constitution, but he seems in some fashion to be following in our footsteps and he is therefore to be commended. We felt the same way in the case of Persia, and our satisfaction was hardly mitigated by the fact that the streets of Teheran were forthwith filled with fighting factions and that a reign of political liberty seemed to be identical with a reign of terror. No doubt the Persians meant well. So do the Turks, according to their lights. These interesting nations may yet reach the ultimate goal of freedom and even evolve a whole code of blue laws, prohibitionists, labor bosses, and the general machinery of final and complete emancipation.

Constitutional government seems to be such a good thing that we are disposed to dismiss the question of Turkey from our minds and to congratulate ourselves that the “sick man of Europe” is well on his way to convalescence. But we are likely to be reminded that the fire is hotter than the frying pan and that when misgovernment has become a settled condition, a sort of “vested interest,” its forcible reform may be attended by dangers even greater than its continuance. The very monstrosity of Turkish rule has placed the empire outside the domain of international ethics. Piece after piece has been lopped from Turkish domain and placed under the protection or the influence of the other powers. Bosnia and Herzegovina, for example, are under the control of Austria, while Turkey’s suzerainty over Egypt is merely nominal so long as the English hand rests heavily upon the Nile. Now if the Young Turks are to become supreme in Constantinople, if a parliament is to be assembled and a constitution established, if order and good government are to take the place of a bloody chaos, what answer will be returned to the very natural demand that all these territories be returned to their lawful ruler? The demand will certainly be made as soon as the need for foreign control and protection has disappeared, as soon as a reasonable assurance can be given that the tortured nationalities will henceforth be allowed to live in peace. Will the authorities at Vienna relinquish their ambitions toward the Balkan provinces; will they facilitate a reform movement that strips Austria of power and control? Will England gracefully admit the practical suzerainty of Turkey over Egypt? Will Russia acquiesce in the restoration of eastern Rumelia merely because Turkey finds herself on the penitent form? The demoralization of Turkey has been a source of profit to the great powers. Their unctuous protestations of horror for massacre and misrule have invariably been followed by an adroit partition of Turkish territory, and while they have watched prayerfully around the bed of the “sick man,” they have not neglected to take an inventory of his portable property through their ears. Are they likely to view his unexpected recovery as an interposition of Providence, and what will they say when asked to give an account of their disinterested stewardship?

It is possible to have too much even of a good thing, and this rage for constitutional government may become a nuisance. There is usually a strange lack of agreement between the governors and the governed as to the right moment for the introduction of free institutions. India, for instance, believes that she can now govern herself with distinction, but England hides her enthusiasm at the prospect. “Egypt for the Egyptians” is a popular cry at Cairo and Alexandria, but we have not yet heard of the withdrawal of any British regiments. But if Persia and Turkey can govern themselves democratically, or think they can, why not Egypt and India? Be it also remembered that Turkey is the headquarters of the Mohammedan world and that the Sultan is a sort of pontiff to about one-tenth of the population of the world. India and Egypt are already in a state of profound unrest. The deeps of Oriental life were strangely moved when Japan proved that the white man’s prowess is sometimes a bubble that may be pricked, but the effect of this demonstration will be as nothing to that of the Turkish upheaval. An aggressive reform party dominant in the Ottoman empire will have the force of a religious movement. It will shake the East out of her lethargy, it will give a dangerous cohesion to the Mohammedan world, and it will call the attention of the whole Orient to the fact that the green flag is still at the masthead. The foreign offices of Europe will, of course, make their usual protestations of delight at Turkish reform. But their thoughts will be unfit for publication.

Dr. Jordan’s Ultimatum.

Dr. Jordan is to be congratulated upon his ultimatum to the students of Stanford University, an ultimatum received “without a murmur,” as strong pronouncements usually are. Henceforth the drunken student will not be tolerated at Stanford, and those who can not keep away from the saloon will be compulsorily kept away from the university, which “is no place for the man who can be drunk and feel no shame.” Dr. Jordan went on to say that to be tough is no sign of manliness, but is simply the sign of a fool, and that the youth who can not resist temptation can not be trained for success in life.

All this is, of course, very good, and we may hope that it is the beginning of better things at Stanford. Not that Stanford is any worse than some other universities where both education and discipline have abdicated in favor of a riotous and dissipated hoodlumism. If Dr. Jordan sticks to his guns, as of course he will, Stanford can easily take a leading position in the work of reestablishing an educational ideal that is sadly weatherworn. He may at least feel that the enthusiastic commendation of the community is behind him.

That there should be need for such stern admonition from university presidents is proof that the higher scholastic life is grievously faulty where it should be particularly strong. The college that imparts nothing but facts to its students has not only missed its vocation, but it is in danger of becoming a nuisance, since there can be nothing more mischievous in a community than knowledge without character. Ignorance itself is a far lesser evil. There can be no character without discipline or without the restraint that must first be external before it can be self-imposed, but neither learning nor character is consistent with the saloon habit.

It may be questioned if the highest function of the college is to produce either literary people or learned people. Let us rather have a common level of intelligent people, of people with minds receptive to ideas, of people who can talk or at least listen to others talk of science, religion, history, and politics, of people whose minds are not utterly at the mercy of the latest popular whim, the newest book, or the current editorial. Let us have people who know how to put a leisure hour to a decent use whether it be indoors or outdoors, people who naturally gravitate toward things of good repute. If the university can not produce such material as this, and in considerable volume, it certainly can not justify its existence by an occasional prodigy or a literary star. We need to raise the general level rather than to cultivate the exceptional while the rank and file are soaking in the saloon or exercising what they facetiously call their minds over the vicissitudes of the athletic field. And the first of all steps is to enforce discipline and to see to it that those who are educationally privileged by a collegiate training act with common decency and self-respect. Then perhaps our universities will cease to turn out so many youths who seem rather to hate than to love knowledge, who combine a placid self-satisfaction with an arrogant and contemptuous ignorance, and who really appear to suppose that these things constitute manliness when they are united to dissipation. For these reasons the firm stand taken by Dr. Jordan will be warmly applauded and the results watched with expectation and confidence.

Editorial Notes.

If anything could bring the Springfield tragedy to the point of ridicule it is the admission of the woman whose complaint of outrage was the cause of the whole horrid business. This woman now confesses that the negro whose murder by the mob was the beginning of the riot was wholly innocent of the offense charged against him and that so far as she knows his only crime was to be black. This is bad enough in all conscience, but the report of the special grand jury shows a situation even worse. The police are charged with disobedience to orders, with a refusal to disperse the mob, and with an actual participation in the rioting. If the police had done their duty at the start there would have been no need for the soldiers and Springfield would have been saved a disgrace that has been talked of all over the civilized world. But the disgrace is not so much in the riot itself as in the shameful city government that made the riot, sooner or later, inevitable. The indictments that are now flying around Springfield like autumn leaves are good enough in their way if the spirit of retribution is really on the wind, but they ought to be preliminary to a thorough cleaning of the stables if history is not to repeat itself at the first chance.

That Mr. Bryan should draw all kinds of auguries from the State election in Maine is to be expected. We shall hear a lot about the “pulse of the country” and “political barometers,” with all the other catchwords that sound well and mean nothing. In 1904 the Republican State vote in Maine was reduced from 34,132 to 25,800, and as a result we heard all sorts of prognostications in favor of Parker, but his defeat was none the less overwhelming. Local issues in Maine are now more acute than they were then. The Democratic candidate for governor, Obadiah Gardner, is unusually popular and is said to have shaken hands with more voters than any other man in the State, and to have kissed more babies. He was hotly opposed to the administration of the prohibition law and temporarily won the hearts of many good Republicans by his avowal that “rum, however freely sold, can not do so much harm as the hypocrisy that accompanies the administration of the prohibitory law.” On the other hand, the Republican candidate, Fernald, was equally strong in his opposition to any meddling with the prohibition law or the resubmission of the constitutional amendment and this, without question, cost him a great many votes that will be given unhesitatingly for Taft and Sherman. The part of wisdom is to draw neither comfort nor discouragement from State elections that are usually decided by local issues and that afford no trustworthy indications on the larger national choice.

In no mere conventional terms it may be said that the death of Philip N. Lillenthal leaves San Francisco poorer in the best elements of good citizenship, and at a time when they can ill be spared. No worthy movement, benevolent, social, or financial, ever failed to secure his interest and aid. He was one of those men to whom his fellow-citizens naturally turned for guidance and advice not only at times of danger or crisis, but at every opportunity to advance the common interest or to serve the common welfare. Whatever prominence came to him was unsought and undesired, and was due rather to the natural gravitation of civic virtue than to even the most legitimate ambition. Mr. Lillenthal’s career is too well known to need even the briefest recapitulation. Some of his best-known benevolences have been the talk of the streets since his death, but they are far outnumbered by the deeds of personal kindness, help, and encouragement that are known only to their many recipients. It is certainly a hard fate that extinguishes such a life at the time of its greatest usefulness and that leaves the community at large with so keen a sense of personal loss.

All the world knows that gold, silver, and gems are constantly disappearing in India to swell the hidden stores of the people. What no one knows is the accumulated amount. The late Dunning MacLeod estimated that there might be $1,500,000,000 in hidden gold alone. Of silver there may be even more in proportion, as the silver rupee has long been the common money current of India. Of hidden gems no one has ever been bold enough to estimate the value.

CAMPAIGN TOPICS.

Mr. Cleveland's "message from the grave" has been the topic of the hour in political circles. That a great party leader should leave such a legacy to his followers, a legacy of opposition to his political successor and of support and comfort to his opponents, is so unprecedented as to merit all the attention that it has received. Scarcely an important newspaper in the country but has added its quota to the discussion, while Mr. Cleveland's letter has already been the text from which innumerable political sermons have been preached. When Dr. Miller of Omaha, for twenty-five years a Democratic leader, said that "Cleveland's message from the grave will cost William J. Bryan thousands of votes" he merely expressed an opinion uppermost in the minds of thoughtful men. When he goes on to say "a vote by any friend of Cleveland for Bryan would desecrate the grave and dishonor the memory of Grover Cleveland," and "Cleveland is dead, but he speaks louder from the grave in that message than he could have done had he been alive today," there will be plenty of good Democrats to agree with him.

The press comments are particularly interesting. From the Democratic press comes little in the way of criticism, but this may be due to the fact that there is no Democratic press. The Buffalo Times, quoting from Chairman Mack, does indeed refer to the letter as having been "flushed, flared, and waved as would a shipwrecked sailor who had obtained possession of a red shirt." The grammar used seems a little dubious and we are not quite clear whether it is the shipwrecked sailor or the red shirt that would be "flushed, flared, and waved," but grammatical considerations are rarely proof against the fervor of political energy. The Buffalo Times continues:

Although the Republican party may be digging the graves of the dead for campaign material on which to support its cause, the people are looking forward to the most virile, progressive, honest leader among the living today.

The eagerness with which the Republican press has grabbed at the Cleveland letter indicates most substantially the weakness of their campaign. For a year prior to his death Mr. Cleveland was an extremely ill man. His death occurred before the Democratic candidate had been nominated or the platform framed. Dragging from his grave an alleged utterance of his dying days presents the most pitiful spectacle of a great party's appeal for power ever presented to the American people. The face of American citizens in this campaign is not to the past, but to the progressive spirit, independence, and love of liberty of the nation's people. Like a vulture the Republican machine hovers over the graves of the past.

The Richmond News Letter adopts a deprecating tone, asking us to remember that Mr. Cleveland, after all, was human:

Apparently Mr. Cleveland had determined, in the series of articles he began, to throw all the weight of his name, his influence, and his intellect in favor of Mr. Taft and to strike Mr. Bryan a body blow. It is a question whether this utterance of his coming from the grave will not be more effective than it would have been from a living man. But the Democrats must meet it and doubtless will. Our hope is that in parrying and striking back they will, as far as possible, direct their strokes at the living and spare the memory of the honored dead.

The Louisville Herald remarks that "the voice of Cleveland pursues his party. Even in death he speaks and Bryan can not escape the vigorous utterances of his mighty predecessor." Summing up the situation, the Herald says:

Grover Cleveland was in an exceptional position from which to view the conditions prevailing in the realm of national politics. Removed himself from the turbulent region of party factionalism, and with his broad experience of men and affairs, he was able to survey the field dispassionately and mark with accuracy the trend of sentiment and events. There will be nothing written during the present campaign so fair, so judicial, so statesmanlike and noble in tone as this review of parties and policies, this balancing of possibilities and prophesying of results.

The Philadelphia Evening Telegraph considers that the posthumous message of Grover Cleveland is the most important document contributed to the literature of the present campaign:

If there be a wavering Democrat this year who had hitherto followed Grover Cleveland with the fealty of one submissive alone to patriotic leadership, this message, which was written shortly before his death, should be as a light unto the feet and lamp unto the path. More and more, with the days of his retirement from the White House, men of all parties were enlightened as to his love of country and his devotion to the interests of the people. From the perspective of the private station he gathered wisdom, and out of its fullness he formulated this judgment of what was expedient if the American people were to continue prosperous and government maintained on stable principles.

The New York Globe, rising superior to mere party issues, finds that the supreme merit of Mr. Cleveland's letter is in its wholesome optimism, all the more apparent and all the more salutary from the fact that pessimism has begun to assert itself more than ever before in our national life:

Mr. Cleveland's deliberate judgment, reached almost on his deathbed, was that William H. Taft would and should be elected President because embodying to a greater degree than any other candidate the orderly progress in which the dead statesman believed, and this judgment he did not hesitate to express.

But aside from the immediate pertinence of the document it is vastly cheering as to a matter much more important than even the November result. A determined effort has been made to convince the country that it was growing more wicked—that the tendencies of the time are toward the bad rather than the good. This propaganda has had such success that the sensible optimism that heretofore has been one of the most precious of American traits is curdled in many minds to a peevish and fruitless pessimism. But Mr. Cleveland is able to say: "It seems to me, as I review the last half century, that from the mental vision I may draw two certain conclusions: We, as individuals and citizens, are better, wiser, cleaner handed than we were, and are rising steadily to planes higher than we have yet known." Possessed of this belief, it is not strange that Mr. Cleveland distrusted a Bryanism the main reliance of which is on arousing the spirit of blind discontent.

The New York Evening Mail thinks that the letter is of the highest importance and interest and continues:

These words, which come in a sense from beyond the grave, carry all the weight that attaches to the counsel of an ex-President, and a Democrat long the commanding figure in his party and in the nation. It will interest the American people to know that Grover Cleveland thought so highly of Mr. Taft. Will it please Mr. Bryan and Mr. Gompers to get his opinion, undoubtedly the correct one, that when working-men vote solidly it is because they think their welfare is bound up with the general prosperity, and is either hindered or promoted by the policies of a party?

The Brooklyn Standard-Union says that it is "impossible to overestimate" the importance of the letter, suggesting as it does the clairvoyance of those about to depart:

The most striking feature of this address to the people of the man who twice served them as President and three times led the Democratic party are his flat and final rejection of anti-imperialism, his assertion that the tariff will not be a paramount issue in this presidential election, nor in the next one, and his advocacy of the breaking up of the "Solid South."

The Providence Journal finds nothing in Mr. Cleveland's letter to justify the assertion that he had abandoned his lifelong political principles. The letter is indeed an assertion of Democratic faith "which the Democratic party seems to have forgotten":

It was inevitable that Bryanism should drive him and men like him to break the party ties of a lifetime. It is safe to say that the arguments in favor of Mr. Taft from Mr. Cleveland's pen will have overwhelming force with hundreds of thousands of voters. This letter is by all odds the most important document which the presidential contest of 1908 has thus far produced.

The Pittsburg Dispatch writes along the same lines. It was Mr. Cleveland who was faithful to his party and Mr. Bryan who has betrayed it:

Reaffirming his adherence to the vital principles of the older Democracy, Mr. Cleveland predicted the election of Mr. Taft, and stated the reasons leading him to that opinion. Without apparent bitterness he wrote of Mr. Bryan as of one who has led the Democratic party away from its vital principles. Had Mr. Cleveland lived until the publication of this article it might have been made the subject of bitter controversy. Under present circumstances it stands unique and peculiar—the sentence pronounced upon a party by its former leader as he faced the common fate of mankind—the grave. We can not say that Mr. Cleveland's utterance will have any effect upon the campaign. There is no evidence that it was intended to influence the vote of any man. But the paper will profoundly impress that portion of the public that looks below the surface—below the froth of partisan clamor—for causes and effect.

The Chicago Tribune refers to the letter as "the voice from the grave of a strong and patriotic man":

In his old age, on his deathbed, free from partisan prejudice, Grover Cleveland gave it as his judgment that William H. Taft should be elected President, because he embodied to a greater degree than any other candidate the constructive and progressive force and sentiment of the country.

The Kansas City Star says that the profound sincerity of Mr. Cleveland was never more apparent than it is now:

He laid aside all partisan considerations. He discussed things as he saw them. He deplored the obstructions that mere party loyalty has put in the way of national and sectional progress. He contended that the party in power is not to have the full credit for the success of the government, nor sole blame for its failures. Mr. Cleveland foresaw the nomination of Mr. Taft and Mr. Bryan, and forecast Mr. Taft's election. His tribute to Mr. Taft is as just as it is generous.

The New York Times refers to the "fearless honesty" of Mr. Cleveland and says:

His preference for Secretary Taft is frankly declared, as the preference of a sound Democrat, however, who places the welfare of his country above the temporary advantage of his party. As he wrote this paper in his study, just before his last illness, he foresaw the nomination of both Taft and Bryan, and he foresaw also the triumph at the polls of the able and wiser man, the just and efficient judge, the brilliant colonial administrator, the competent minister of state. This utterance of the departed statesman is a welcome and valuable help to the Taft campaign. It can not fail of effect. It has none of the qualities of a partisan document, but, though it lacks, as might have been expected, some of the polish of Mr. Cleveland's state papers, it is worthy of acceptance as safe, patriotic, and unprejudiced counsel.

The Oregonian points out that Mr. Cleveland has said very little about Mr. Bryan, but he makes it clear that in his opinion Mr. Bryan ought not to be elected:

It was Mr. Cleveland's view that Mr. Taft ought to be elected because he stands for the permanence of right principles, and moreover that he would be elected, not merely because of those principles, but also because of the weakening effect on Mr. Bryan's canvass produced by the course of Mr. Hearst and Mr. Watson and their followers, and in greater degree because of the rapidly increasing strength of the Socialist party under the present leadership of Mr. Debs.

The Springfield Republican is nearly the only newspaper that thinks it worth while to defend the authenticity of the document itself. To speak of the letter as being spurious is "partisan nonsense":

There is convincing internal evidence that he was the author and that he wrote the article when in feeble health. A forger would have imitated Mr. Cleveland's rather heavy style, but he would have taken the state papers, written in the prime of the late President's career, for his model. The recent article contains sentence after sentence which a clever imitator would have been incapable of, simply because he never could have attained that peculiar awkwardness of construction in which the feebleness of a man of exhausted powers manifested itself. The characteristic literary hemsishes of Mr. Cleveland's style were inevitably emphasized and exaggerated in a composition undertaken in the last two or three months of his life; nor can this be deemed surprising by those who have ever had the opportunity to observe the compositions of persons much enfeebled by disease or old age.

We have not yet heard the last of the Cleveland letter, but so remarkable an agreement of journalistic opinion is proof of the influence that it must exercise upon the course of the campaign.

The doubloon is doomed, as its fellow, the "piece of eight," long has been. A few weeks ago it was proclaimed by the common crier, from the steps of the Royal Exchange of London, that the doubloon is no longer legal tender in the West Indies and British Guiana. Thus these magical names, which recall Robinson Crusoe, and pirate stories without number, are relegated forever to romance.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

History of Street Names.

SAN FRANCISCO, September 18. EDITOR OF THE ARGONAUT:—We were much interested in your suggestion of naming our great thoroughfares after some prominent characters who figured in the early history of this Coast.

We have applied names to our streets and plazas that bear names directly connected with the history of California since its seizure from Mexico. We have Portsmouth Square, Montgomery, Stockton, Fremont, and other streets; but no locality named after Commodore Sloat, who made the seizure before he had official notice of the declaration of war between the United States and Mexico.

But even the few who did historic work in our early history are overshadowed by names having little claim to even so small a distinction.

Personally, in our early Coast Survey work on this Coast, we endeavored to retain all the old Spanish and Indian names for prominent headlands, streams, localities, and mountains.

We would not go so far back as Balboa because he belongs to another and far distant part of the coast of the Pacific Ocean; and he was not on a voyage of discovery.

The early Spanish discoverers of this part of the coast were Juan Rodriguez Cahrillo (a Portuguese navigator in the service of Spain), Bartolomé Ferrer or Ferrelo, Bartolomé Fernandez, and masters Antonio Carrera and S. Remo.

The expedition followed the coast from Cape San Lucas to Cape Mendocino and to 42½ degrees off shore; time 1542-43.

The second expedition was undertaken in 1602-03 under Sebastian Vizcaino, with Torihio Gomez de Corvan, and Martin de Aguilar.

We do not mention Francis Drake because he was the arch-plunderer on his retreat homeward in 1579 from Drake's Bay.

For one hundred and sixty-six years Spain made no more explorations.

In 1769 the first land expedition came from New Spain, and from the Bay of San Diego marched along the coast as far as San Pedro Point, about thirteen miles south of Point Lohos, and discovered San Francisco Bay, but not the Golden Gate.

The officers of this expedition were Gaspar de Portolá, governor of the Californias; Don Miguel Costansó, the observer and engineer, and the Franciscan friars, Father Juan Crespi and Francisco Gomez.

The expedition returned to San Diego, and in 1770 again started north, having a "paquet hot" for carrying provisions, with Most Rev. Father President Junipero Serra. The expedition founded the Mission of San Carlos at Carmel Bay and established the Presidio of Monterey.

In 1772 a land expedition from Monterey around the east shore of San Francisco Bay was made by Commandante Don Pedro Fages, accompanied by Father Juan Crespi, and from the hills of Berkeley he looked through the Golden Gate, which he named La Bocana de la Enseñada de los Farallones.

The first land expedition that reached La Bocana was made under the command of Captain Don Fernando Rivera y Moncada with Father Francisco Palou and a young sacristan in 1774. This party came through the San José Valley, along the western shore of the Bay of San Francisco, crossed over the low gap of Laguna Merced to the ocean beach, thence to the summit of Point Lohos and there planted the cross.

In 1775 the "paquet hot Son Carlos," alias Toyson de Oro or Golden Fleece, entered the bay through La Bocana de la Enseñada de los Farallones, under the command of Juan de Ayala, with Father Vicente Santa Maria as chaplain.

In 1776 came the expedition from Mexico to found a colony and establish a presidio to command La Bocana. Colonel Juan Bautista Anza, who led this vanguard of our Western civilization, was one of the most remarkable men of his day, and to whom California owes a deep debt of gratitude. He gave permanency to the foundation of this far outlying colony of Spain. He brought soldiers, colonists, and cattle through fifteen hundred miles of desert lands without loss and without conflict with the tribes he passed through.

After his arrival at Monterey he made a survey of the outlines of the bay, accompanied by Ensign Moraga, Father Pedro Font and ten soldiers. He followed the course of the 1774 expedition to Point Lohos, then selected the site for the Presidio of San Francisco and Fort San Joaquin, followed the shores of La Bocana, viewed the bay from Alta Loma, our Telegraph Hill, selected the site for the present Mission of San Francisco, reconnoitred through San Andrés Valley, followed the borders of the bay hence to Antioch, crossed the Mount Diablo range, reached Monterey, and in a week was on his way to Mexico. The Presidio of San Francisco was established June 29, 1776, five days before the Declaration of Independence of the United States.

With this short and hurried résumé of the discovery of this coast and this bay, we suggest that there are names attached thereto that warrant their application to the best ornaments of the city, whether avenues or boulevards, or parks.

GEORGE DAVINSON.

After the foregoing letter had been set up, a report came from Los Angeles that Professor Arnteni and party from Madrid had reached that city to search for the grave of the first discoverer of this Coast, Juan Rodriguez Cahrillo. He had found in the archives at Madrid a sketch from Cahrillo's records which indicated roughly the locality of the bay in which he died. Professor Davidson at once wrote to the consul for Spain at San Francisco suggesting that Professor Arnteni seek for the burial place of Cahrillo on Prince Islet, in the northeast part of Cuyler's Harbor, on San Miguel Island, the westernmost of the Santa Barbara chain of islands.

In a government publication of 1886 Professor Davidsor had identified each and all the anchorages, points, capes, etc. reported by Cahrillo and Ferrelo. In the stormy winter weather of November, 1542, Cahrillo's vessels were forced to take refuge in this small bay. Here he took possession of the country and named the island "La Islade la Posesion," "Una de los Islas de San Lucas"; and the bay he named "e Puerto de la Posesion."

From an injury he died on Wednesday, the third day of January, 1543; but Ferrelo does not state where he was buried. In memory of his heroic chief Ferrelo renamed the island "Juan Rodriguez."

Prince Islet rises 303 feet above the sea, has very steep sides, coarse herbage on top, and is five hundred yards in extent. There were two native villages on the main island but in 1852 were found no signs of any native habitation around the bay.

A national fund is being raised in Siam to commemorate King Chulalongkorn's forty-one years' reign—the longest in the history of Siam. The fund will be devoted to the erection of a statue to the king, any surplus remaining will be handed over to his majesty to be expended for public purposes.

TWO THEATRICAL MISFITS.

"The Mollusc" Produced by Frohman at the Garrick Theatre—Arnold Daly in a Bowery Play.

Charles Frohman has brought us from London a really amusing and generally excellent comedy in "The Mollusc," and for this he will profit as he deserves, but he might have done more for a loyal and discriminatingly appreciative following. It was an easy matter to decide after seeing the play well done in England that it would please Americans—if it were well done here. Both theme and treatment are humanly indigenous and genuinely entertaining. Mr. Frohman might well have chosen more carefully the little company that he has introduced the comedy to New York. However, it is a good day's work for better things.

Nobody likes the name, until he has seen the play; then he understands that there is no other title for it, and that the character whose disposition suggests the title could be correctly classified by no other term. Hubert Henry Davies is the author, and this work proves that he is not merely a playwright. There is genius in his selection of a common type for stage presentation and in his exposition of its character. Briefly, a human mollusc is one whose selfishness, laziness, and induced invalidism have become chronic. They are numerous in real life, male and female, and infinite in the variety of their self-imposed martyrdom. Mr. Davies presents a specimen whose redeeming qualities have not jellied, though the process is well advanced when the curtain goes up.

Mrs. Baxter, the mollusc in the play, is a wife, petted and indulged, still young and attractive, with a plaintive but positively unyielding inertness that is exasperatingly unreal to everybody but herself. Her husband, her brother, and the governess are the other figures. Even Brother Tom is unsympathetic, but without illusions. "Lazy folk drift with the tide, but molluscs use all their energy and ingenuity to cling rather than to move. My sister is the queen of molluscs." A plot is formed to stir the delightful but distracting victim of self-hypnosis. Mr. Baxter makes love to the governess in the most delicate and discreet but intentionally undisguised way. This is not enough. Then the brother succumbs to the attractions of the governess, and still the languid but restlessly inconsequent wife is spineless. The husband sprains his ankle and refuses her aid, because she is "not used to doing things for people," and finally the mollusc really moves.

So simple and yet so real a story would seem too slight even for comedy purposes without added interests, but with only four people on the stage attention is never allowed to wander. The play has been running nearly three hundred nights at Sir Charles Wyndham's Criterion Theatre in London, and is now fairly started on what promises to be a successful career in New York at the Garrick Theatre. Sir Charles Wyndham himself created the part of Mr. Baxter in the original production. Here, Mr. Frohman has given the part to Joseph Coyne, who is a capable comedian in musical comedy, where farcical methods are admired, but hardly equal to the requirements of delicate situations deftly turned to advantage. Miss Alexandra Carlisle, the mollusc, is more satisfactory. She is an actress of experience and personal charm, with a physique which makes unmistakably apparent the unfounded assumption of ill health. There are opportunities for her, even, that are not seized. In the winning part of the governess Miss Beatrice Forbes Robertson makes a delightful impression. She is bright, blonde, and slender, a natural contrast for the brunette plumpness of Miss Carlisle. The wise yet truly sentimental Brother Tom is done with ease and sureness by Forrest Robinson. The performance is a remarkable one as it is, but the droll, semi-tragic story might be better developed in better hands. There is purpose in the play, frothy as it is.

A new American play, produced last week at Wallack's Theatre, is an example of the play of purpose which fails to reach the mark. It is a drama of city life and Bowery characters in the main, written by Owen Kildare, who should know his materials well, as he is a newspaper writer who grew up in lower Manhattan. But his work is unconvincing melodrama. Arnold Daly, he of the Bernard Shaw cult, assumes the leading rôle, and with a devotion to its slang and traditional Bowery attitudes and methods that deserves a better medium. He is rescued from the alluring fields of vice by an attractive young teacher who busies herself with the work of redemption, and in the true romantic manner the two proceed to fall in love with each other. The curtain does not fall on prospective wedded bliss, however. An opportunity for heroic self-sacrifice is offered, and the Bowery boy grasps it firmly and takes the consequences. He has been shown that his predilection for his teacher can result only in loss of place and suffering for her, and he renounces his love. To make it effectual he pretends to return to evil ways, and by sheltering an acquaintance of other days, who is known to be a crook, he wins the stern and unwelcome attention of official authority.

Mr. Kildare has named his play "Regeneration," and undoubtedly it was his intention to show the difficulties that beset an earnest effort to rise to cleanliness and strength from demoralizing conditions. He hoped to show how a sturdy, self-respecting character might be built up through the aid of a tender, patient, unselfish woman, and the drawing of such characters gave ample scope to his talent. He has succeeded merely in presenting people of the story world, whose motives, sentiments, and conclusions are romantic always, but seldom real.

Admirers in plenty have asserted the artistic strength of Arnold Daly's stage appearances, and his intelligent perception of dramatic possibilities. He has scarcely demonstrated such possessions in this venture. His versatility, his serious intention, his capacity for the demands of the play, were shown, beyond dispute, but he should have recognized the fact that the work itself is artificial in construction, unsound in logic.

It is seen that theatrical misfits persist. A good play can not inspire dull actors; good acting can not galvanize into life a sawdust play. FLANEUR.

NEW YORK, September 8, 1908.

OLD FAVORITES.

Beth Gelert.

The spearman heard the hughle sound,
And cheerily smiled the morn;
And many a brach, and many a hound,
Attend Llewellyn's horn.
And still he hlew a louder hlast,
And gave a louder cheer:
"Come, Gêlert, come, wert never last
Llewellyn's horn to hear!
Oh, where does faithful Gêlert roam—
The flower of all his race:
So true, so brave—a lamh at home,
A lion in the chase?"

'Twas only at Llewellyn's hoard
The faithful Gêlert fed;
He watched, he served, he cheered his lord,
And sentinelled his hed
In sooth he was a peerless hound,
The gift of royal John:
But now no Gêlert could be found,
And all the chase rode on.
And now, as o'er the rocks and dells
The gallant chidings rise,
All Snowdon's craggy chaos yells
The many-mingled cries!

That day Llewellyn little loved
The chase of hart and hare:
And scant and small the hooty proved,
For Gêlert was not there.
Unpleas'd Llewellyn homeward hied,
When, near the portal-seat,
His truant Gêlert he espied,
Bounding his lord to greet.
But when he gained his castle door,
Aghast the chieftain stood;
The hound all o'er was smeared with gore;
His lips, his fangs, ran blood!

Llewellyn gazed with fierce surprise,
Unused such looks to meet:
His favorite checked his joyful guise,
And crouched and licked his feet.
Onward in haste Llewellyn passed,
And on went Gêlert too;
And still, where'er his eyes were cast,
Fresh blood-gouts shocked his view!
O'erturned his infant's hed he found,
With blood-stained cover rent,
And all around, the walls and ground
With recent blood hesprent.

He called his child—no voice replied—
He searched with terror wild;
Blood, blood, he found on every side,
But nowhere found his child!
"Hell-hound! my child's by thee devoured!"
The frantic father cried;
And to the hilt his vengeful sword
He plunged in Gêlert's side!
His suppliant looks, as prone he fell,
No pity could impart;
But still his Gêlert's dying yell
Passed heavy o'er his heart.

Aroused by Gêlert's dying yell,
Some slumberer wakened nigh:
What words the parent's joy could tell,
To hear his infant's cry!
Concealed beneath a tumbled heap,
His hurried search had missed,
All glowing from his rosy sleep,
The cherub hoy he kissed!
Nor scathe had he, nor harm, nor dread,
But, the same couch beneath,
Lay a gaunt wolf, all torn and dead—
Tremendous still in death!

Ah! what was then Llewellyn's pain!
For now the truth was clear;
His gallant hound the wolf had slain
To save Llewellyn's heir.
Vain, vain, was all Llewellyn's woe;
"Best of thy kind, adieu!"
The frantic howl which laid thee low,
This heart shall ever rue!"
And now a gallant tomh they raise,
With costly sculpture decked;
And marbles, storied with his praise,
Poor Gêlert's hones protect.

There, never could the spearman pass
Or forester unmoved;
There oft the tear-hesprinkled grass
Llewellyn's sorrow proved,
And there he hung his horn and spear,
And there, as evening fell,
In fancy's ear he oft would hear
Poor Gêlert's dying yell.
And till great Snowdon's rocks grow old,
And cease the storm to brave,
The consecrated spot shall hold
The name of "Gêlert's Grave."
—William Robert Spencer.

Gold, silver, and lead mines are, it is said, to be worked extensively in the bleak district of Innishowen, County of Donegal, Ireland, overlooking the Atlantic, and experts have expressed the belief that it is almost impossible to estimate the wealth of the minerals. Specimens of the ore were shown at an exhibition in New York, and some American financiers decided to take the matter up if subsequent investigation proved satisfactory. A mining expert examined the mine, and after his report a syndicate was formed.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

The three-year-old son and heir of the Czar Nicholas is insured for $2,500,000 and pays the highest premium in the world.

John Hays Hammond has been chosen president of the National League of Republican Clubs, succeeding General Edwin A. McAlpin, who recently resigned.

Colonel Henry M. Nevius of Red Bank, New Jersey, was elected commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic at the annual meeting in Toledo, Ohio.

Miss Selma Lagerlof, besides being the most popular writer in Sweden, has just received an honorary degree from the University of Upsala. She is the first woman in Sweden to receive this distinction, and it is said to be only a matter of time when she will get the Nobel prize.

England's oldest admiral, Richard Moorman, has just celebrated his ninety-eighth birthday. Probably no other naval officer in the world can boast of a longer record, as he entered the British navy at thirteen. His memory of service afloat goes back to the year 1823.

Arthur Burrows, the eldest practicing barrister in London, has completed his ninety-sixth year. His connection with the law extends to nearly seventy-eight years, as he entered as a student at Lincoln's Inn in November, 1830, but he still attends at his chambers almost daily.

Lady Philip Snowden, an English suffragette, arrived in Boston from London last week, and was surprised to learn that her engagements to speak at Vassar College and Chicago University had been canceled. Lady Snowden is young and attractive and finds it difficult to understand why she is regarded as "an ogre."

John Boyes, the white king of the Kakykus, will pilot President Roosevelt in his great hunting trip through British East Africa. Boyes has lived in British East Africa for ten years, after having been shipwrecked. He was made king of a large tribe, and his authority is recognized by the British government. He is a Yorkshireman by birth.

Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, neurologist, poet, essayist, and novelist, has been elected to a foreign fellowship in the Royal Society of England. The election is one of the choicest distinctions to which a scientist can aspire and it has fallen to the lot of only three other Americans now living, Alexander Agassiz, naturalist, and George W. Hill and Simon Newcomb, astronomers.

Christine Nilsson, now the Countess di Casa Miranda, recently celebrated the sixty-fifth anniversary of her birth at the little crofter's cottage at Gadsley in Smaland, Sweden, from which she used to start out on her concert trips when eight years old. In recent years the singer has made a practice of spending a few weeks of each summer in the land of her birth. Each year the inhabitants of the country towns turn out to greet her, and in acknowledgment of such compliments she often consents to sing a simple ditty from the porch of the inn.

Appleton P. C. Griffin, formerly of the Boston Public Library, but for the last eleven years connected with the Library of Congress, has been appointed to the position made vacant by the death of Ainsworth R. Spofford as a merited recognition of long and useful services. Mr. Griffin, as chief bibliographer of the National Library, has edited a series of bibliographies covering all questions of the day as they have arisen, an undertaking which has brought the resources of the book world into closer touch with current affairs than had before been possible.

Lionel E. Sackville-West will be forced to contest his right to the title and estate of his uncle, the late Lord Sackville-West. In 1903 the court disallowed the claim of Ernest Henry Sackville-West to be recognized as the son of Lord Sackville-West by Josefa Duran, a Spanish dancer who married the English diplomat in Madrid. Lord Sackville-West claimed that Señora Duran had a husband living when she went through the marriage ceremony with him. The case will now be reopened. The late Baron Sackville was driven from his position as British minister at Washington by President Cleveland in 1888 because of the famous Murchison letter, and this incident not only discredited him, but ended his diplomatic career.

Princess Friedrich Luitpold, sister of the German empress, one of whose compositions was recently performed at a sacred concert at Dresden, is the latest recruit to the ranks of royal composers who have challenged public criticism. The Duchess of Orleans, eldest daughter of the Archduke Joseph of Austria, has won golden opinions by her charming songs, many of them set to Hungarian words; Archduchess Marie Valerie of Austria has also composed a number of pretty songs; Princess Feodora of Reuss (a princess of Saxe-Meiningen) is credited with considerable talent and originality in composition; and Grand Duchess Cyril of Russia also possesses considerable gifts as a composer. The male royalties whose musical talent has taken the same direction are quite numerous, ranging from the German emperor and Grand Duke Michael Michaelovitch of Russia to the blind landgraf of Hesse-Cassel, incomparably the most talented of all royal musicians, whose many compositions, chiefly produced at Paris, are very highly esteemed.

JUDGE VERSUS VIGILANTE.

By Jerome A. Hart.

XXXI.

When the senatorial fight, with its sensational incidents, had ended, Judge Tower remained at the capital, detained there by his official duties. He was sorely tempted to neglect them and go to the Bay City, where stirring events were in progress. But he tarried until matters had reached such a pass that, in his opinion, duty absolutely commanded him to go. Mrs. Lyndon and Diana were already there, and they were not surprised to receive a note requesting them to secure accommodations for him at the International Hotel. This note was speedily followed by Tower in person.

In matters of moment, he was extremely uncommunicative to his women folk. He did not tell them why he had left the capital so hurriedly, but they surmised from his demeanor that he had important reasons. No sooner was he arrived than he hastened to the custom-house to see his friend Hamlin, collector of the port. There he acquainted Hamlin with his intentions concerning the Vigilantes.

Hamlin heard him with some misgivings. "Don't you think, judge, it would be well to refrain from any move for the present?" he inquired. "You can scarcely be a party to the action of a petitioner suing for a writ to be heard before you as a judge."

"I can not honorably keep aloof," replied Tower firmly. "I am told that a petition for a writ will be made to me as soon as this terrorized city learns that a judge of competent jurisdiction is here who will entertain such a petition. The judges here, both Federal and State, are completely cowed by this illegal mob calling itself the Committee of Vigilance. That fellow Fox, who does not adorn the Federal bench, has allowed it to become known extra-judicially that he will not hear petitions for writs of habeas corpus when leveled at the Vigilantes."

Hamlin looked much disturbed. "None the less, judge," said he, "I would strongly advise you to take no active part in this mess. Look at Senator Wyley—he agrees with you and me and the rest of our party that this body of law-breakers should be suppressed. But he is not proclaiming his views in public places; in fact, I am a little inclined to think the senator is keeping out of the way."

"Senator Wyley has a right to walk according to his own lights," replied Tower curtly. "Although not a personal intimate, I am his political friend, but I do not therefore consider that my freedom of action is at all hampered by what he may do in this matter."

"No, no, of course not," interrupted Hamlin, hastily. "The issue is only partly political."

"I regard it as entirely outside of politics. The issue is simple—it is the law against mob rule. I am inflexibly opposed to the body of men calling themselves the Vigilantes. I will do all that I can to suppress this illegal organization. I am not a party to originating a petition to be heard before me, but I am convinced that an opportunity will speedily arise for the hearing of such a petition."

"Do you know of any yet?"

"No, but in a city of this size there must be friends of the men imprisoned in the Vigilante headquarters who have the courage to take steps for their release."

The sentence seemed prophetic, for his words were echoed by a loud rapping. Hamlin appeared surprised at its violence, and went to the door. Scarcely had he unlatched it when in there burst a man trembling with terror.

"Is that you, Mahoney?" asked Hamlin. "Why, I scarcely knew you. What's the matter with you?"

"They're after me!" moaned Mahoney in a hoarse croak. "Oh, Mr. Hamlin, they're after me I tell you!"

"Who are after you?"

"The Vigilantes!" replied Mahoney, still in the same terrified undertone.

"You need have no fear, my man," here interrupted Tower. "If you have committed no crime you are entitled to the protection of the law. I will see that you are so protected. Why do they pursue you? Of what are you accused?"

"I aint guilty of any crime at all, sir," whimpered Mahoney. "But they're after me—the Vigilante police. All I did was to go to the armory in Santa Josefa for to get some guns for the governor. We was bringing them up the bay in a sloop, but just as we got off Pinole Point a Vigilante boat come alongside of us, and took the arms, and arrested me, and took me to their fort. Then they lemme go, but they warned me to keep my mouth shut, or they'd give me a hundred lashes."

"When was all this?"

"Last night, sir. I tried to keep a still tongue in my head, but I got to runnin' round the saloons, and drank too much, and told about it. This morning I got the tip that the Vigilante police was after me. They was coming for me just now down the street, and I run up here, hopin' the collector would protect me."

"He will do so, no doubt," said Tower. "As a Federal officer, his offices will surely not be invaded by the self-styled police officers of this Vigilante mob."

"You may be right, judge," here interrupted Hamlin, "but while we are theoretically under the protection of the Federal government here, I would prefer to take this man to the armory of Company B, of which I am captain. It is a substantial building quite near here, and probably we shall find there some members of my militia company. I think he will be safer there than here."

"Probably you are right," said Tower, after a moment's reflection. "But lest we be attacked on the way, suppose we arm ourselves. I see you have a gun-rack here—I will borrow a rifle."

"And I will give one to Mahoney here and carry one myself. And now let us take up our line of march for the armory."

With their rifles over their shoulders the three men descended to the street. But scarcely had they gone half way to the armory when a squad of Vigilante police appeared.

"Halt, there!" cried the leader.

"Who are you, sir?" inquired Tower sternly. "Who are you to stop peaceable citizens on their way along the street?"

"My name is Lupkins," replied the leader, looking up in surprise, as one unaccustomed to be opposed. "I am a police sergeant of the Committee of Vigilance. And who are you, sir?"

"My name is Tower, and I am chief justice of the State Supreme Court. I order you to stand back, and let us pass."

"And I refuse," said Lupkins firmly. "My orders are to arrest this man Mahoney here, and take him to Fort Vigilant. I intend to do so."

"If you lay a hand on that man you do it at your peril," retorted Tower, menacingly.

"Vigilantes!" cried Lupkins, turning to his squad, "pay no attention to these threats. Take Mahoney. If these men resist, you have your orders." And he waved his hand defiantly toward the gigantic Tower.

The Vigilante squad hesitated.

"Again I warn you not to touch this man," returned Tower, fiercely. "I forbid you to attempt to arrest him. As a justice of the Supreme Court of this State, I shall not allow such an outrage on the law to be perpetrated in my presence."

As he spoke, Tower shifted his rifle to his left hand, and held it horizontally across the breast of the trembling Mahoney, as if to interpose a bulwark between him and the Vigilantes.

Lupkins still seemed surprised at Tower's audacity.

"I have already told you, sir," he said, "that I intend to arrest this man, and I shall do so." And so saying, he grasped the barrel of Tower's rifle and made as if to thrust it aside. As he reached for the rifle, a shot was heard, coming apparently from the Vigilantes; the ball whistled between the faces of the two contending men.

With the sound of the shot, every nerve and muscle in Tower's great body seemed keyed to instant action. Still holding the rifle, he reached with his right hand for the arm-pit of his waistcoat. Drawing from a spring there a long bowie-knife, he plunged it deeply into Lupkins's neck. As he withdrew the weapon, red blood spouted from the wound. It was evident that the carotid artery was severed. With a groan the stricken man fell to the ground.

With the dripping knife in his right hand, the rifle in his left, Tower still stood over the fallen Vigilante, glaring into the colorless face. It seemed as if he were waiting for a movement from the wounded man to attack him again.

But Hamlin was cooler and less ferocious. "Hurry! hurry! judge!" he cried. "Don't waste any time here, or these men will attack us! Come on! Let's get to the armory!"

Yet so reluctantly did Tower leave his prey that Hamlin and Mahoney almost had to drag him away.

They were not then pursued by the Vigilantes of the police squad, who were more intent on looking after their wounded sergeant than in seizing the man who had stabbed him. As the three men fled, the Vigilantes were already lifting Lupkins up and carrying him into an adjacent shop.

Tower, Hamlin, and Mahoney, succeeded in reaching the armory. They found there a small group of militiamen, but as soon as the warriors learned what had happened, they displayed the utmost celerity in quitting the building. As the last militiaman was leaving, Mahoney asked if he was coming back.

"Not much," replied he, briefly. "There will be about five thousand Vigilantes here in fifteen minutes."

And he was right. It seemed even less when the great bell on Fort Vigilant pealed forth the alarm, and in not many minutes the Vigilantes were assembling around and in front of the armory.

From behind the iron-shuttered windows Tower and Hamlin cautiously surveyed the scene without. The terrified fugitive from the Vigilantes' justice cowered in the back part of the room. Bewildering must have been the thoughts that passed through Mahoney's mind as he sat shaking there and reflected that he was the cause of all this turmoil—it was for him that the great bell boomed forth its summons calling armed men from every quarter of the city—it was to seize his clammy body that mounted couriers were clattering over the pavements to summon additional forces—it was to preserve him from these menacing thousands that these two cool, grim men were now standing at the window with their loaded rifles in their hands.

Fifteen minutes after the fugitives had entered the armory, at least a thousand armed men were drawn up in the street below. In half an hour the number had doubled. In an hour some four thousand armed men were in line, had surrounded the entire block, and had cut off all approaches to the building. Several times Hamlin had shouted from the shuttered windows, and asked for a truce to have speech with the leaders. In every case he was told that he would have to wait for the arrival of the executive committee.

At last five members of that committee arrived; they demanded that those within the armory immediately give up John Tower and Richard Mahoney, granting a truce of five minutes for a reply. Tower appeared in person at the window; throwing open the iron shutter, he offered to surrender if the other two were allowed to go free. To this the leader of the Vigilantes briefly replied that they would make no conditions.

"Will you read a written communication if we submit one?" inquired Hamlin.

"Submit your communication—we may answer it," was the laconic reply.

Hamlin indited this brief note which he thrust through the wicket of the iron door:

GENTLEMEN OF THE VIGILANCE COMMITTEE: If the executive committee will give us protection from violence, we will agree to surrender.

JOHN TOWER,
ROBERT HAMLIN.

After some minutes a rap was heard on the door, and the following communication was returned through the wicket:

GENTLEMEN: If John Tower and Richard Mahoney, together with all arms and ammunition, be surrendered to us, we will give you and the building in which you now are protection from violence. An answer is required in fifteen minutes, it being now ten minutes to four. By order of the executive committee, of which we are members.

NUMBERS TWELVE, THIRTEEN, FIFTY, FORTY-FIVE.
By SIXTY-SIX, Secretary.

The answer soon came back from the besieged:

GENTLEMEN OF THE VIGILANCE COMMITTEE: If you will also agree to see that Judge Tower and Mr. Mahoney are protected while in your hands from violence from persons outside your organization, we will then agree to surrender on the terms of the note just received.

ROBERT HAMLIN,
JOHN TOWER.

In a few minutes came the answer from the Vigilantes:

We will agree to protect Judge Tower and Richard Mahoney from violence from parties outside our organization. We beg to remind you that the time proposed in our first note has already expired. By order of the executive committee, of which we are members.

NUMBERS TWELVE, THIRTEEN, FIFTY, FORTY-FIVE.
By SIXTY-SIX, Secretary.

When this note was received, the besieged men, in their quick glance through the wicket, saw that a brass howitzer had been brought up and trained on the building. It was quite evident that if they did not yield at once, the Vigilantes would batter down the walls. Resistance was useless. There was nothing to be done. There were thousands against three men, one of them imbecile from terror. Tower and Hamlin hesitated no longer. They unbarred and threw open the iron doors of the armory, and a company of Vigilantes marched in. The three men were searched and disarmed. Tower's still sticky knife was taken from its spring-scabard in his waistcoat. All the militia-men's arms in the armory were removed, some three hundred muskets, while large quantities of ammunition and other articles were carried out and loaded on drays to be hauled away.

While this was going on, the prisoners were placed in two carriages, Tower and Hamlin in the first, Mahoney in the second. This last and least dangerous prisoner, shaking with fear, was honored by having three Vigilantes in the carriage with him, while Tower and Hamlin were guarded only by two. But there was no lack of guards. Mounted Vigilantes surrounded the carriages all the way from the armory to Fort Vigilant. As on the day when Clancy and Costa were taken from the jail, so on this day also, the thousands of armed Vigilantes were followed by many more thousands of citizens whose master-spirit seemed to be curiosity.

At last Fort Vigilant was reached. Here Hamlin was dismissed at the portal with a stern admonition. But Tower and Mahoney were escorted within, where they were placed in separate cells. At the door of each guards were set, carrying muskets with fixed bayonets.

Like many Bay City buildings of that period, Fort Vigilant had iron doors and shutters for fire protection. Therefore its seeming was somewhat like a prison and somewhat like a fortress. The door clanged behind him; the key rattled in the lock; the State's chief justice sat down on the cot bed and ruminated.

As he sat there staring before him, he saw something written on the wall. He leaned forward and examined it. It ran thus:

June the thirteenth. I despare of enny help. The Vigillyanty stranglers think they are goen to hang me on a gallus. But I have opuned an artry in my arm, and am sloly bleding to deith. I am groing weaker and weaker. May god punish the Vigillyanty assasins.

REUBEN MULLIGAN.

"Humph!" exclaimed Tower. "Did they think to scare me by putting me where I could see the last scrawl of that half-witted suicide? Then they don't know their man. Suicides are always cowards, and whatever else I may be, I am not that."

Again he looked at the writing: "May God punish the Vigilante assassins!" he quoted, with a sneer. "Well, the late Mulligan may leave that for God to do. But if I get out of here, I think I'll attend to some of them myself."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Copyright 1908 by Jerome A. Hart.

The population of the world could be contained in the little State of Delaware if people would be satisfied to live in as congested a state as they do in elever blocks in New York City.

THE STRUGGLE IN TEXAS.

Davy Crockett and Sam Houston Figure in a Stirring Romance of Early Days.

The story of the great struggle in Texas is among the most notable to be found in American records. If romance can not take the place of history, it is at least the most valuable of history's adjuncts and especially so when it is written with the care and the fidelity to be found upon every page of Mr. Everett McNeil's "In Texas with Davy Crockett." The characters of Crockett and of Sam Houston are unique in history. They were the products of an environment to which there is no parallel and that can never be repeated. They were the towering figures in a struggle born of racial antipathies and fostered by the long continued barbarities that marked the Mexican dominion in Texas.

The author is to be congratulated upon the stirring pages in which he records some of the final scenes in the conflict. Unencumbered by historical details that are, or that ought to be, a part of the mental equipment of every American, he shows us some of the leading incidents of the struggle with all the vivid precision of an eye-witness. That he has thrown his story into the form of a romance adds to its interest and in no way detracts from its value either as a picture of the strenuous days that have passed or as a direct narrative of heroic incident.

Here, for instance, is a scene in a dance hall of San Antonio at a time when the relations between Mexicans and Americans were at the breaking point. The two boys around whom the story centres have entered the hall in search of the Mexican desperado Vasquez:

At this moment the beautiful Mexican girl whirled almost directly in front of the boys, and her eyes, dancing as fascinatingly as her feet, flashed into their faces. For a minute she pirouetted before them, suddenly she gazed up to Trav, lightly as a flitting butterfly, and stopped, bowing and smiling, directly in front of the astonished boy, whose face flushed the color of the crimson mantilla that now hung in pretty disorder about her neck, and held out a soft little dimpled hand to him.

Trav stared at the little hand blankly for an instant, then gingerly seized it, gave it a couple of quick jerks, and dropped it as if the soft flesh burned his fingers.

"Dance, she wants you to dance with her, you young idiot," bellowed a rough voice from the crowd.

But there was no dance in Trav's trembling legs; and, hardly knowing what he did, so great was his embarrassment, he stepped back and turned his back on the girl.

Instantly the room was in an uproar. A dozen men, desperadoes every one of them, headed by the huge, red-whiskered bulwark to the pair of black snake-like eyes, rushed toward Trav, to avenge what they deemed an insult to the beautiful Mexican girl; while the owner of the pair of black eyes moved swiftly among the Mexican men, speaking in short, quick sentences to here and there a man, who at once began working his way through the crowd toward the spot where the two boys stood surrounded by the angry men.

"You won't dance to please this little beauty, eh?" roared he of the red whiskers. "Well, then, dance to please me," and he jerked out of his belt a huge double-barreled pistol and leveled it at Trav's feet, whose legs ceased to tremble now that he had to deal only with men. "Dance, you white skunk. Lively now, or—" and the pistol flamed and the ball buried itself in the floor not half an inch from Trav's feet. "Dance, or off goes a toe at the next shot. Dance, you—"

"Now, don't get too ripporously rambunctious, friend," and the tall form of Davy Crockett, his cloak thrown open and one hand resting on his belt suggestively near the butt of his pistol, stepped in front of the bewhiskered champion. "The youngster meant no offense. He was just naturally dazzled by the beauty of the gal."

For an instant Red Whiskers glared at Crockett in astonishment at his temerity in daring to brave his wrath; and then, as he caught the cold, steadfast glitter in Crockett's eyes, the hand that had been about to turn the pistol in his direction remained where it was.

"Hey!" he roared, his red eyes glowing like coals of fire. "I an Big Ike, the Red Terror of Texas, who never met his equal in man, beast, or devil. I drink blood, eat raw flesh, and pick my teeth with the bones of the men I have killed. Now, who be you that dares to come between Big Ike and the object of his wrath?" and, with every red whisker bristling, he turned on Crockett a pair of furious, bloodshot, tigerish eyes.

"I am that same Davy Crockett," and the gleam in the cold, steadfast eyes never wavered, and the hand never left the belt near the butt of the pistol, "fresh from the backwoods of Tennessee, half horse, half alligator, and a little touched with the snapping-turtle, shaggy as a bear, wolfish about the head, active as a painter, and can grin like a hyena till the bark curls off a gum-log. I can wade the Mississippi, leap the Rio Grande, ride upon a streak of lightning, and slip without a scratch down a honey-locust. I can whip my weight in wildcats, and, if any gentleman pleases, for a ten-dollar bill he can throw in a painter. I can hug a bear till his ribs crack and he growls for mercy, and I promise to swallow, without gagging, if you will skewer back his ears and grease his whiskers, this same Red Terror of Texas, who drinks blood and eats raw flesh, and picks his teeth with the bones of the men he has killed," and Crockett paused, his eyes still on the tigerish eyes of Big Ike.

The story of the fall of the Alamo is put into the mouth of Mrs. Dickinson, whose husband had been killed in the fight and who tells her story to General Houston:

"For many minutes that dreadful firing continued," she began, again in the monotonous undertone, "and soon the smoke was so thick I could see men only when the swirling air lifted it, and showed them loading and shooting as fast as swift hands could ram powder and balls home and it rifles to shoulders. Then, suddenly, I heard the Texans hearing wildly, and a minute later my husband came running through the smoke to the window where I stood, his face black with the grime of battle and his eyes shining.

"We have beat them back!" he cried. "We have beat them back!" I felt as if I must tell you. Hold the baby up here where I can see her face. But they will come again. Now I must be going," and, with a hungry look into baby's face and mine, he hurried back to his men.

"For a few minutes there was a lull in the firing, and the smoke of battle rose in the air and hung in a cloud above the Alamo. Powder-blackened men hurried by the window where stood, carrying water and ammunition to their comrades on the roofs and walls, and, as they passed, they joked and laughed, like schoolboys on a frolic; and yet, there was not one among them who did not know what the end was to be.

On the roof of the convent, behind a rampart of sand bags, I saw Davy Crockett. He was loading rifles; and, as soon as he had loaded one, he would smile and nod his head and lean it up against the sand bags, within quick reach of his hand. Already there were six rifles standing in the row of loaded guns leaning against the sand bags. With the seventh gun in his hand, I saw him suddenly pause, drop the unloaded gun, catch up one of the loaded rifles, throw it to his shoulder and almost instantly fire; and, almost at the same moment, the crash of the dreadful sounds of the firing guns and the fierce yells of the men began again, more terrible than before, and the smoke of the powder rose thickly and hung in heavy clouds above the Alamo.

"Again and again I saw Davy Crockett throw a rifle to his shoulder and fire, until the six guns were emptied. I saw him reload again and again and fire; and then the thick smoke settled down between us and hid the convent from my sight.

"So far I had not seen a Mexican; but now," and a shudder ran through her frame, "the heads of dark-faced men began appearing above the walls of the convent yard, and I saw the clubbed rifles of the Texans knocking them back, knocking them back until their arms must have grown weary with the knocking, but still the row of heads along the top of the wall grew thicker and thicker each moment, and soon shoulders were appearing, and then, with a wild yell, two Mexicans leaped over the wall inside the yard. Before their feet touched the ground the knives of the Texans had killed them. But now the top of the wall was swarming with Mexicans—they were dropping to the ground like apples shaken from a tree, and soon the whole convent yard was a wild turmoil of fighting, dying men.

"The Texans fought like lions among an overwhelming, barking, biting pack of hounds. They uttered no sounds, but struck, struck, struck, with knives and clubbed rifles; and, when one went down, there was a circle of dead Mexicans around him. No quarter was asked, nor thought of. Each fought until he fell dead fighting. Not a coward, not a shirker among them. From the convent roof, from the church roof, the rifles, even the cannon, of the Texans were turned on the Mexicans in the convent yard, until their dead covered the ground; but still they swarmed over the walls, and slowly, but surely, like a hundred dogs clinging to a lion, were worrying the Texans to death.

The death of Davy Crockett was worthy of his life. Bowie was already dead, murdered on his sick bed after accounting for a Mexican with each of his pistols:

"Now, of the hundred and eighty-five Texans that were living men when the fight began, only half a dozen remained alive, and these were still fighting, standing in an angle of the church near the entrance, their backs to the wall, their faces to the snarling pack of Mexicans that were trying to pull them down, a rampart of dead Mexicans around them. From where I sat I could see this last heroic stand of the bravest men that ever lived; and, even in that moment of horror, my heart thrilled at the sight. How scornfully they defied the overwhelming numbers of the soldiers of Santa Anna! How fearlessly and skillfully they met the knives and bayonets and sword thrusts of the jackals around them! "And foremost among this little band of heroes I saw the tall form of Davy Crockett. He was bleeding from a gash across the forehead, his clothing was torn and cut by a hundred bayonet-thrusts and knife-stabs; but still unconquered and undaunted he swung the deadly barrel of his rifle—all that was left of his loved Betsey—and struck with his long knife; and at every blow a Mexican went down. One by one his comrades fell, until he stood alone, the last of that heroic band.

"For a dread moment the fighting ceased. The cowardly jackals paused in awe of the terrible prowess of the king lion. I heard Colonel Almonte shout, 'Surrender!' I heard Crockett answer, 'Never!' I heard another officer yell, 'At him! At him!' And then the fight began again—a hundred, all that could get within striking distance, against one man, "I saw him strike down two men with the rifle barrel. I saw another fall back with a knife thrust deep in his heart. Then I saw a bayonet pierce deep into his own brave breast, saw him sink down, still striking, with a hundred knives and bayonets stabbing at him. A minute later and I saw his dead body tossed aloft on the points of bayonets and borne outside the church."

The fight on the Alamo comes near the end of the book, but not so near as to exclude the final triumph of American arms under Houston and the overthrow of Santa Anna with a loss of six hundred and thirty killed, two hundred and eight wounded, and seven hundred and thirty prisoners, with great stores of arms and money, and all this with a cost to the Texans of six men killed and twenty-five wounded.

"In Texas with Davy Crockett," by Everett McNeil. Published by the E. P. Dutton Company, New York; $1.50.

The late Sir Henry Parkes, who was known as Australia's Grand Old Man, was a coiner of picturesque and impressive phrases. His was "The crimson thread of kinship," which Mr. Deakin used in a message of welcome to Admiral Sperry. Another of those felicitous oratorical inspirations was "One people, one destiny," in which Sir Henry, advocating Australian Federation, crystallized the movement into a captivating phrase of four words that traveled through the length and breadth of the island-continent, and became a really potent factor in the creation of the commonwealth. The Earl of Jersey was governor at the time, and Lady Jersey contributed a poem to a Sydney magazine under the title of "One People, One Destiny."

Menama, the principal port of the Bahrein Islands, the centre of the pearl fisheries, gets its fresh water from the ocean. Visitors often note boats anchored a few hundred yards from the shore, the boatmen engaged in drawing fresh water from springs at the bottom of the sea. These springs well up strongly at a considerable depth, and the entire water-supply of the town is obtained from them. The fresh water is procured in two ways—either in a goatskin water bag, which a diver takes down with him and carefully closes before bringing it to the surface, or by letting down long hollow pipes of bamboo, weighted at the lower end, through which the water rises up uncontaminated to the surface.

The bureau of engraving and printing at Washington is turning out new emergency notes under the Aldrich-Vreeland law at the rate of about $3,500,000 a day, and new vaults must be built to store them in.

THE BOHEMIAN JINKS.

The Grove Play Has Now Become a Distinctive Feature of Dramatic Art.

Mr. Porter Garnett, the scribe and the recorder of the Bohemian Club jinks, prefers the title of Grove Play for a performance that may have had its frivolous beginnings, but that has gained such dignity with age as to be an "extremely interesting literary phenomenon." Mr. Garnett's book is to be heartily commended to those who take a serious interest in conscientious and artistic dramatic work and work that is so far distinctive as to be worthy of rank with the great nature dramas of antiquity.

Mr. Garnett divides his book into five chapters, with a valuable appendix containing a chronological list of jinks from 1872 to 1908. The first chapter, devoted to "The Setting," has perhaps the largest amount of general interest, although it is safe to say that no part of the volume will be missed by those who have once been introduced to the charm and the significance of the Grove Play. It is nine o'clock, we are told, when the performance begins on the Saturday night nearest the full of the moon of August and six hundred men—for no women are allowed to enter this second Eden—are gathered in a spacious glade of the redwood forest:

Rows of redwood logs are used for seats. All is darkness save for a group of tiny shaded lights that make the figures of the men and their surroundings dimly visible. They are the lights for the musicians in the orchestra pit. Beyond them is a stage innocent of scenery except that supplied by Nature. On either side of this stage two immense trees forming the proscenium arch stretch upward into the greater darkness overhead, where the black masses of their foliage, mingling with the foliage of their fellows, are vaguely outlined against an indigo sky. On all sides great trunks—ten, fifteen feet in diameter, two hundred, three hundred feet in height—tower aloft. At the back of the stage is an abrupt hillside covered with a dense growth of shrubs and small trees, picked out here and there with the shafts of redwood. Amid the tangle of brake and brush, the trail, which the eye can scarcely see by day, winds its devious course.

It would indeed be strange if such environment failed to awaken the muse or if there should be incongruity between such a stage and its filling. The prologue to "The Hamadryads," the grove play of 1904, fittingly expresses a sentiment that is both real and present:

Gather, ye forest folk, and cast your spells
Over these mortals. Touch their world-blind eyes
With fairy unguents. Open their eyes of fancy.
Lull all their memories of yesterday
And seal the gates of sorrow. Waken, brothers,
Waken, ye gentle spirits of hill and stream.
The magic hour arrives. Begins the dream.

There is no curtain to raise, except the curtain of darkness. Suddenly the stage is lighted by artificial means, supplementing the light of the moon, and the play has begun:

Now the voice of an actor rises rhythmically in a passage of poetry; now a troupe of choristers sing a mighty chant while the orchestra leaps to their aid with a great volume of sound that fills every recess of the grove. Splendid figures, in auras of light that seem to emanate from their persons, appear at various points on the hillside and take part in the action; a band of dancers run upon the stage and perform a sylvan dance with gracile wavings of branches or the clinking of cymbals. Again and again through this fabric of poetry, music, and spectacle, the maleficent Spirit of Care intrudes his hideous presence uttering threats and vituperation, only to be discomfited in the end by some god or hero who personifies the spirit of goodness and right, and who is the savior of the grove and its denizens. This dénouement, achieved in allegory or by symbolism, is finally resolved by the death of Care.

That such a play, performed con amore, free from the tribute of popular clamor, should leave a profound impression upon the minds of the spectators is not to be wondered at. It is the drama in its highest form, linked with external nature and expressing the facts of human consciousness.

The second chapter of Mr. Garnett's work is devoted to the "History and Development" of the grove play. The perfection of presentation that has now been reached implies a steady growth and a profitable experience. The whole of the labor of composition as well as the staging falls upon members of the club, and the fact that there is only one performance a year speaks much for the energy and the devotion of those concerned.

The synopses of the various plays that have been produced occupies a fascinating chapter. "The Man in the Forest, A Legend of the Tribe," by Charles K. Field, was rendered in 1902, with music by Joseph K. Redding. Every existing copy of this play was destroyed in the fire, "The Legend" alone surviving, and this finds a place in Mr. Garnett's book. In 1903 the play was "Montezuma," by Louis A. Robertson, with music by Humphrey J. Stewart. This was followed in 1904 by "The Hamadryads, A Masque of Apollo," by Will Irwin, with music by W. J. McCoy. Then came "The Quest of the Gorgon, A Musical Drama," by Newton I. Tharp, with music by Theodor Vogt. In 1906 the play was "The Owl and Care," by Charles K. Field, with music by Humphrey J. Stewart. "The Triumph of Bohemia," by George Sterling, with music by Edward F. Schneider, was produced in 1907, while the latest play up to the present time, that of 1908, was "The Sons of Baldur, A Forest Music Drama," by Herman Scheffauer, with music by Arthur Weiss. The synopses of these plays are all carefully worked out with full and carefully chosen quotations, while the illustrations, twenty-five in number, are admirable. The book is distributed by A. M. Robertson, San Francisco, and its price is $1.50.

PICKET NUMBER TEN.

By George Shedd.

The sun was already down when we trotted around the nose of the hill in a long twisting line, four jaded troops. The horses pricked up their ears, the men grunted contentedly. At last we were in sight of the spot where we were to halt for the night.

Because a mummified old medicine-man chose to foam at the mouth (chewing soap) and see a vision of brand-new scalps, our work was cut out for us. A band of Banlocks was off the reservation, raiding, harrying, spotting the country with blood and ashes; so much worse than usual was the outbreak the colonel himself had taken in hand the task of driving them back; and we had done our sixty miles this day without a glimpse of the quarry. But we were hard on their heels. Three hours' back we had come on a ruined cabin, and something by the smoking door that made the colonel's grizzled eyebrows grow ominous and the troopers beg for an early flight.

The horses, sniffing water, quickened their pace down the stony road. A small level patch of green lay at our feet, with a brook flowing along one edge and an old shack, untouched by any marauding hand, in the middle: an oasis in the wide waste of treeless hills. The wonder was that the Indians had passed it by.

"Who lives there?" asked the colonel.

"Johnny-under-the-Hill," I replied, in my official character of guide.

"Johnny-under—ch?"

"Yes, sir. He's a little off in the head, and it's the only name he's known by, but he answers to it. It isn't Indian—he's white all right. And an old soldier."

"Old vet, is he?" returned the colonel, his tone softening a bit. "Well, he'll have company tonight."

Five minutes later we turned in upon the flat and the bugle sounded. Soon the horses were rolling and rerolling upon the ground, working some sort of comfort into their tired bodies; the troopers had little piles of twigs blazing beneath their smoky cups of coffee, and already jests were being flung about among them. The business of the camp was, however, brief. Guards were posted somewhere out of sight, horses hobbled, fires out. And the dusk of the long summer twilight had hardly sifted down upon the earth when the men were asleep in their blankets, troop by troop, in a circling row around the edge of the flat. Oh, the colonel was not the one to be caught by any night rush!

Meanwhile I had seen nothing of old Johnny, Johnny-under-the-Hill. The two or three times before when I had stopped here his singular infirmity had impressed itself deeply upon my mind. During the day he seemed mild enough, and rational, showing me his tiny garden and a fruit-bearing plum thicket by the creek; but on each occasion I had been awakened at night by an odd sensation. His voice had spoken out in the darkness, "Captain, I report for duty," and, after a pause, in answer apparently to some fancied word, "Picket Number 10." After that, until I fell asleep, I heard his footsteps up and down, up and down, in front of the house. And a certain awe always grew upon me at thought of him holding this solitary vigil in the hills. I was wondering now how old Johnny would take the presence of the soldiers.

My curiosity had not long to wait. We were lying about the grass in a group, the colonel, his officers and I, having a last smoke before rolling into our blankets, when the old fellow appeared from somewhere, drew his feet together and gave a rusty salute. On his shoulder lay his carbine, on his head a dilapidated army cap. He was in a great state of excitement: his eyes had a mad light; his lean, brown, eager face, half covered with a ragged beard, worked and twisted; his body, crippled with rheumatism, was almost erect; and his gun trembled with a kind of ague. It was as if a phantom had risen up among us.

"Captain Burnham, I report for duty!"

He had the name right enough, but not the title. For a moment the colonel sat fully surprised; gradually he began to pull his moustache in perplexity.

"What is your name, my man?" he asked, gently.

"John Haven, sir." And with a trace of impatience, "Why you know it! John Haven, Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry."

"What's that?" exclaimed the colonel, with a little in-taking of breath.

"Troop B, sir. I report for duty."

"My old troop! Haven—Hav—My God, this!"

He sprang to his feet. The rest of us sat fixed, just as we were, hushed in the presence of this unfolding drama which we did not understand.

"Picket Number 10. I report for duty, sir," he reiterated.

In old Johnny's face there was no recognition other than that of the officer. His voice had the same stilted tone I had heard the nights when I had been aroused by his strange actions. He stood waiting as if for something further to happen: while the colonel's brow wrinkled and wrinkled. At last the latter raised his head, and said,

"Take your post, sir." He gravely returned the old man's salute, watched him march straight through the row of sleeping troopers, out past the sentinel line, up to the top of a small knoll, where he began his picket, pacing back and forth and now and then pausing as if to listen. For a good three minutes, I think, the colonel stared after him, finally sat down to remain silent for the rest of the evening, but once I saw him shake his gray head as if under a burden of memories.

Twilight slowly thickened into darkness. A breath of air stirred the ashes of the dead camp-fires, and fell quiet. One by one my companions rolled up in their blankets, pilowing their heads upon their saddles. Only the officer of the guard, who smoked for wakefulness, and the colonel, busy with his thoughts, kept their seats. The great round moon rose in the east, spreading a haze of silver light along the hills: under its shining face the circling row of sleeping soldiers lay whitened, and still as a row of the dead. The murmur of the near-by brook and the stir of the horses as they steadily cropped the grass within the circle were the only sounds. Yonder on the knoll, pacing and listening, clearly outlined in the bright moonlight, moved the figure of old Johnny—Picket Number 10.

The immensity of space, the peace of night, seemed to have driven all fatigue from my body; the sight of the old man, under the spell of his wild phantasy, bound, as by a chain, to his tireless vigil, quickened the thought within my mind. I was oppressed by a sense of mysteries, of tragedies hidden in the hollows of the land, read by only the high, all-seeing stars. What was the cause of this mad fire in his brain? What held him a prisoner in the past? An hour I watched him, until gradually his form grew dimmer, farther off, and my eyelids were sealed close.

Sound of a shot brought me to my knees. The death-shriek of an Indian echoed it. The bugle flung its sharp staccato warning on the air. It was dark, the moon behind a cloud in the west, but by the starlight I saw a ripple run round the row of sleepers, men rolling over upon their stomachs, heard the slap of rifles thrown across saddles—and silence. One minute—two!—followed by a distant rush somewhere of horses' feet, and there appeared for an instant against the faint dawn light along the east a silhouette of wild tossing riders.

The surprise had failed. But the colonel sent out scouts to make sure there was no ruse, though knowing as we did our enemy, who stakes all on the first cunning stroke, we guessed that we should see no more of them here. And moreover, they had not, perhaps, suspected the nature of their game until they heard the bugle.

Johnny-under-the-Hill had given the alarm, so reported the officer of the guard. In the tension of the moment we had forgotten him. The moon crept out from behind its cover and showed the knoll empty; but we found him there, found him at his post—Picket Number 10. He was lying on the ground, the blood trickling from two stabs in his body, still alive; near him, face down, with hands knotted in the grass, was a dead Indian. Old Johnny! When we had checked his wounds as best we could, we bore him gently down the slope and through the soldiers, already asleep once more, and laid him on a blanket by his doorstep. We knew there was no hope—one glance told us that life was fast ebbing away.

His eyes opened, he struggled to speak.

"Captain, I re—"

The effort was too much for his little strength and he lay back gasping, his hand reaching out aimlessly. The colonel took the gnarled fingers and held them in his own strong grasp, and I honored him for the tear that stole down his bronzed cheek. The rest of us stood by, grave. We had all seen death come to men, yes, and faced it ourselves, but in its approach now we were touched by something of its solemnity.

When finally the colonel looked up and spoke, his voice was rough with sorrow.

"For this man," he said, "life was more painful than death will be. I was a captain in the Civil War, and he was my best trooper. He followed me through all the campaigns until one day near the close of the war. When we went into a fight it was really he who led the men, not I, and he went in with a laugh. You see a man like that once in a while. But that wasn't where he was harvest. When the other fellows were worn out, or sick, or what is worse, homesick, he cheered them up. You know what it is to be in the saddle day and night, how hard it is to smile then. John Haven did it. He seemed made of iron, ready any time for extra night service or to lend a hand when the doctor's knife was busy—and this is what is left of him! There is something worse to come, though; his name stands on the military records dishonored and disgraced."

"Maybe some of you have a brother—well, he had one. The boy was in the troop, too, a mere stripling, ten years younger than John, and not so strong. But there was the same pluck in him. I've seen him, staggering with fever, climb into his saddle and ride without a word. Oh, those were hard times! John watched over him like a mother, helping him where he could. As the months went by the young fellow grew thinner, yet he never gave in, nor would he take a leave. The fun, he said, was just beginning. And after a little came our big raid.

It was during the time just following the Wilderness campaign. There was fighting every day, for we were at each other's throats at last. Finally came orders for the cavalry to get round the Confederate lines and to cut into them from behind: five thousand started on that ride. Not a man who could stick in his saddle remained behind, and those who couldn't begged to be tied on their horses. The second day we got separated from the main column, a couple of hundred of us, completely lost; and the enemy knew it. We did not turn back. Some of you perhaps know what it is to have a hard officer—our major was one. And he swore we should go where we had started if it ended in death.

"From that time on it was a race with the enemy. We lost all direction, on one night finding ourselves where we had been the night before. Our blind road took us through woods and swamps that confused and misled us continually, and the rain fell every day. I remember that we saw the sun but once. At night we threw ourselves on the wet ground, never daring to build a fire, at day-break we stumbled on. For a whole week we lived like this, ever hungry, ever exhausted, and every day we fought the enemy. The dead lay where they fell, the wounded—who knows? Half the men had flung their guns away, because they had no powder, and when they fought it was only with bare sabres. If our ride did not end in death, it at least passed through it.

"One night we got into a swamp that seemed to have no outlet. John had done sentinel duty the night before, it was his brother's turn now, but the boy was sick. John went with him to his post and when the latter fainted took his place. And when the relief made its rounds he was found asleep—on duty."

The colonel's voice grew husky and he stopped. We heard only the struggling breath of the dying man on the ground. The light along the eastern rim of hills was strengthening, the sky became pearl and pink.

"That was a time for a man to show mercy," went on the speaker once more. "An officer must know when to draw the lines tight, when to let them go loose; but our major knew only one way, and that was to hold them fast always. He had John Haven court-martialed at sunrise, and would have had him shot then and there had not the rest of us borne him down. As it was, John was stripped of his uniform and dishonorably discharged. After all, shooting would have been more merciful, for now he was alive, but with a broken heart. And—as sure as I believe in God—I think that officer shall have his punishment some day, as this poor victim of his savage spirit shall have his reward.

"For a whole week, I have said, we had been in this swamp, but on the morning of John's disgrace we got out of it, after a fight. Those seven days of floundering in that terrible quagmire, of purposeless heating hack and forth, of bitter starvation, of cold, of hand-to-hand encounters and desperate struggles and bloody conflicts, have no name in history. It made one of those numberless small battles that stand overshadowed by the great ones, unknown in fact, except by those who fought through it: we call it simply The Swamp. On the last morning of it we cut our way through the enemy, found higher ground at last, and got back to our lines.

"It was in the fight of that morning that I saw the last of John Haven—until now. When the order was given to charge, I found him ready with the rest, his face pale, wearing the look of one who seeks death. I saw his brother go down, shot through the heart, but John never paused, never wavered, riding straight ahead. Once I was hard pressed and he saved my life. When next I saw him, through a sudden rift of smoke, he was lying on the ground, quiet, blood flowing from a gash in his head; next minute I was swept on by the fury of the battle."

That was the end of the story. The colonel's eyes were fixed upon old John's haggard face as if to read in it the misery of all the intervening years. We others gazed wonderingly upon the man whose soul was a hero's, whose life a tragedy. All was silent. The dawn gradually spread wider, a bird in the plum-thicket by the creek began to sing. Suddenly the bugle sounded its golden notes along the morning. Old John stirred, sat up.

"Captain Burnham," he cried, in a clear, ringing voice, "I report for duty."

Breathless we waited.

Then answered the colonel steadily, as if reading an order, "Trooper John Haven, Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, Troop B, is mentioned for conspicuous bravery at Picket Number 10, relieved from duty, and honorably discharged from service in the army of his country."

A change slowly came upon the old man's face, a light that transfigured it, and from his lips escaped a whisper, a sigh of rest: "Now I can sleep!"

Katharine Tynan's latest book, "The Lost Angel," is a collection of romantic tales of lovers, the scenes being laid in England, Scotland, and France, but chiefly in this author's own beloved Ireland. Miss Tynan, or Mrs. H. A. Hinkson, as she is known to her intimates, was born in Dublin and lived there until her marriage, since which her home has been in England. Her husband, a London harrister, is also a native of Ireland, and he also is a well-known novelist.

LA MARQUISE

TURKISH CIGARETTES

"FINEST MADE"

10 for 25 Cents

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

By Sidney G. P. Coryn.

At a recent meeting of the Library Association of England there was some spirited discussion as to the proper place of the novel in the free library. Opinions ran all the way from the total exclusion of fiction to its inclusion in unlimited quantities, one speaker demanding a "severe discrimination," while another put in a plea for the reader whose strenuous life necessitated a literature that would make little or no demand upon the mind. The representative of Glasgow urged the general adoption of a rule enforced in his city to the effect that no novel should be bought until it is a year old and that the amount spent upon novels should not be more than 10 per cent of the total expenditure. It was finally resolved that "mere ephemeral fiction, of no literary, moral, or educational value, even if without offense, is not within the proper province of a public lending library." Upon this we shall most of us agree, but none the less it seems to bring the literary censor within speaking distance, and our soul abhors him.

A Mistaken Marriage, by F. E. Mills Young. Published by the John Lane Company, New York; $1.50.

Even those who do not admire the problem novel will be fascinated by this important book. The scene is laid in South Africa, and while this may repel a certain kind of reader who is disinclined to look over the garden wall it will be an added attraction to those who can appreciate intimate description and vivid local coloring.

Sara Lovall, young, beautiful, idealistic, goes from England to South Africa in order to marry the man to whom she became engaged several years before. She supposes Arthur Morrison to be poor, too poor to come home to fetch her, and she attributes his apparently waning ardor to an honorable disinclination to identify his wife with colonial struggles and hardships. After the wedding she slowly realizes several unpleasant things. Arthur Morrison is not poor, but rich. His boyish sentiment is entirely dead, but he was too cowardly to make a timely avowal. So far from being gratified at the girl's arrival, he is intensely chagrined, while his nature has changed under the corrupting touch of opportunity and he has become greedy, cruel, and a debauchee.

All this comes to his wife slowly. She becomes used to neglect, but she does not understand the character of the women with whom her husband associates nor the questionable nature of his business. Full illumination comes to her only when Aimée Davidson, to whose house her husband has persuaded her to go as a guest, insolently admits her relationship to Morrison, and then the outraged wife seeks shelter in flight. Morrison divorces her upon an infamous charge of infidelity, and the remainder of poor Sara's life would have been spent in poverty and humiliation but for Michael Strange, who made her acquaintance on the day of her landing and has worshiped her from afar ever since.

The story is too long, but it is undeniably powerful. There is no jar to the credulity nor deviation from probability. It is a story that in broad outline must have been acted a thousand times in real life, and if sometimes we are irritated by Sara's simplicity, by her foolish refusal to marry while her first husband was still alive, by her rather exaggerated feminism, the author has done no violence to a type nor passed the limits of a common experience. The book leaves us face to face with a problem which is not solved either by rigidity or by laxity of divorce laws, which seems indeed to grow from the facts of human nature that are beyond the reach of any law. And incidentally we have added largely to our knowledge of social South Africa.

The Study of Nature, by Samuel Christian Schmucker. Published by the J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia.

This is one of the most satisfactory books for the study of nature that we have seen. The teacher who really wishes to instill a love of nature into the minds of children will find it a veritable treasure house of advice, suggestion, and information. The theory of nature study is well worked out in the first part of the book, while the "materials" are insects, some water-dwellers, the frog and the toad, the reptiles, the birds, domestic animals, wild animals, the general life of the plant, reproducing the plant, and the heavens. There can be no teacher and no school so deeply immersed in the life of the city as to fail to find in this book a practical guide and a wise counselor.

The Life of Goethe, by Albert Bielschowsky. Published in three volumes by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.

A certain danger awaits the reviewer who allows himself to do more than announce the third volume of this remarkable and impressive biography. The temptation to linger over its wealth of narrative, its prolific yet discriminating detail, its profound and sympathetic analysis is indeed a strong one, but one to be inexorably resisted. But the lover of Goethe will find nothing lacking in this feast of good things, no feature wanting in the picture that it presents of the man who was of all others within recent historical periods the most complete and the most perfect.

The third volume is concerned with the period between the years 1815 and 1832, that is to say from the Congress of Vienna to Goethe's death. It includes, therefore, what may be called the Marianne von Willemer epoch and the political work of the poet in the Weimar ministry. Nowhere is the author more happy than in his examination of the psychological processes that alternated so remarkably between statecraft and poetry. The examination continues indeed all through the work and we are invited again and again to wonder at a dual nature that could so triumphantly express itself at opposite poles of human activity. Goethe's modesty forbade him to give us all the results of a self-analysis in which he certainly indulged, but the phenomenon of his own power was never without its perplexities for him. The inspiration under which he wrote seemed to be something apart from himself, melodies that sometimes reached him through the barriers between the sensuous and the spiritual. He wrote under compulsion, as an amanuensis, and in obedience to dictates not his own, and when the divine fire ceased he turned to the affairs of the world until the summons should again become insistent.

For Goethe the supersensuous and the spiritual was the noumenon. Only in that realm could he walk with firm, unwavering feet. Only from that height could he speak with a certainty of a "thus saith the Lord." The affairs of the world were for him a mirage, full of deceptions and uncertainties, and among them he walked doubtfully. Because Goethe's genius was complete he was untainted with the weird, the eccentric, and the unwholesome which cling to those of lesser calibre who must perforce halt in some middle sphere of dim conflicts and truths distorted in half-lights. That the author understands Goethe so fully is no small tribute to his own perception. That he helps us to understand him speaks much for his lucidity and the admirable care that distinguishes his work. This also may he said of the translator, Professor William A. Cooper of Stanford University, who has performed an immense labor with such ability that we are conscious of none of the disadvantages that usually attend a rendering from one language to another.

Arkinsaw Cousins, by J. Breckenridge Ellis. Published by Henry Holt & Co., New York; $1.50.

Arkansas has never figured largely in literature and this capital story should therefore have a welcome. Core City, Arkansas, seems to be filled with the family of the Thornberys. They are at the apex of the social pyramid and at the base, but the cement of cousinly clannishness never weakens. From start to finish we watch the progress of this remarkable family with admiration and even with enthusiasm. They are a very lovable crowd with their humor, their happy-go-lucky providence, and their shrewd kindness. They are good people, too, with a sense of duty and an honor for womanhood. "Arkinsaw Cousins" is a good and wholesome book to read and one that stimulates a belief in human nature.

The Well in the Desert, by Adeline Knapp. Published by the Century Company, New York; $1.50.

It would be hard to find a better story of the desert or one in which romance and adventure are more happily combined. The hero is Gard and we are introduced to him on his escape from an undeserved imprisonment. Through the treachery of the man to whom he originally owed his trouble he is again captured, but is once more liberated by an accident while on his way to jail. Then comes his life on the desert as a kind of modern Robinson Crusoe, his discovery of gold, and his final return to civilization and the ensuing rehabilitation of his name.

That the author knows her subject and is saturated with the life of the desert is evident enough. She can also create strong and virile characters.

To the End of the Trail, by Richard Hovey. Published by Duffield & Co., New York; $1.25.

This little book is appropriately titled, inasmuch as it contains all that remains, or nearly so, of the writings of Richard Hovey. Among the longer poems is "The Laurel," an ode to Mary Day Lanier, which was written long ago for private circulation and is now published for the first time. Several of the songs, too, are new, while the bibliographical notes by Mrs. Hovey are interesting and important. This edition, now complete, of Mr. Hovey's poems should find a place in every American library.

What the White Race May Learn from the Indian, by George Wharton James. Published by Forbes & Co., Chicago; $1.50.

The author probably knows as much about the Indian as any man living. Nor is there any lack of discrimination in his praise and admiration. If he is kind to the virtues of the red man, he is not blind to his faults; both are set forth judiciously. Mr. James has indeed written a book worth reading even by those who are not particularly interested in Indians. The chapters on diet, education, hospitality, sex questions, mental poise, immortality, and others are models of sane and helpful advice, enhancing our respect for the red man and showing the benefit to ourselves of imitating whatever is worth imitation in the aboriginal life of the country. The illustrations are numerous and good.

The Car and the Lady, by Grace S. Mason and Percy F. Megargel. Published by the Baker & Taylor Company, New York.

This is one of the few automobile stories that are not tiresome to the uninitiated and that can be read with delight by those innocent of automobile lore. It is the story of a road race from New York to Portland by two rival tourists who have the further incentive of the favors of a pretty girl that will certainly be given to the winner. We are told that the true history of a transcontinental race underlies nearly every detail, and the story is indeed so minutely told as to give it a practical value. As a romance it is both vivid and dramatic and must surely be a delight to the automobile enthusiast.

Betty of the Rectory, by Mrs. L. T. Meade. Published by Grosset & Dunlap, New York; $1.

The story would be stronger if the hero were not a clergyman, although it must be admitted that the Rev. Geoffrey Pevensey is by no means the emaculated figure in which the ordinary novelist seems to rejoice. Pevensey believes himself to be under the inherited curse of insanity, and although Betty refuses to hear his secret on the eve of their marriage, we feel that he ought to have insisted upon telling her. How she eventually learns of it and how her husband is saved are set forth with marked skill, while the character of the beautiful Betty is not one to be forgotten.

"How to Get a Position and How to Keep It," by S. Roland Hall, is a sound book for young men who are inclined to think that hard work is no longer essential to success. Mr. Hall gives much practical advice on letters of application, good and bad form, etc. Published by Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York. Price, 50 cents.

"I Never Dine Without It."

Chafing Dish Cooking

Many dainty dishes can be prepared in a chafing dish.

LEA & PERRINS SAUCE

THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE adds a piquant flavor indispensable to good Chafing Dish Cooking

Fish, Shrimps, Oysters, Clams and Lobsters; Frogs' Legs and Welsh Rarebit are given an appetizing and delicate relish by its use.

Imitated but Never equalled. JOHN DUNCAN'S SONS, Agents, N. Y.

Interior of magnificent living room.

FOR SALE

A BARGAIN

Beautiful Artistic Residence

12 rooms and 3 baths; hardwood inlaid floors throughout.

Unobstructed Marine View

The mantels and fixtures in this house are the most attractive ever installed in this city. House just completed, has never been occupied.

EXTRA LARGE CORNER LOT

75 x 102 ft. with "L."

For full particulars see

Shainwald, Buckbee & Co.

No. 27 Montgomery St.

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.

A new, handsome, and spacious playhouse was added to the attractions of San Francisco last Saturday evening, when the Valencia Theatre opened its doors to the public for the first time. Every available portion of space in the auditorium was filled by the audience that gathered to celebrate the event. The play offered on the stage and the company participating were attractions in themselves sufficient to account for a large patronage, and they should be given credit for their share in the success of the opening. Walter Hoff Seeley, for the management, and J. Charles Green, for the owners, made brief addresses of congratulation and promise.

In "The Great Ruby" the new stock company were able to make a pleasing impression. Robert Warwick, the leading man, as the Indian prince, was distinct and forceful with the ease of experience. Miss Willette Kershaw, the leading woman, has an agreeable personality and notable ability. A number of well-known actors were seen in the less important rôles, among them being Reginald Travers, Robert Leonard, and Wallace Shaw. Peggy Monroe made her professional debut in an ingénue rôle. In scenic investment the play revealed the ample resources and eminent ability of a management determined to do things well. Altogether, the new theatre's beginning is most auspicious.

Next week, beginning Monday evening, "The Conquerors" will be produced. This is a strong play, made known by William Faversham and Viola Allen. It was written by Paul Potter, and tells a romantic story of the Franco-Prussian war. The strength of the Valencia company will be shown to advantage in the distribution of characters.

"The Girl Question" is running merrily before large audiences at the Van Ness Theatre and will be continued all next week. It is a musical comedy of much more than average quality, and it is presented in a gratifyingly generous style. There is good singing, good dancing, good comedy in abundance, offered by a big company. Paul Nicholson and Henrietta Tedro are at the front in most of the fun-making, and they have earned their position. There are others, however, who could not easily be replaced, and the chorus of "show-girls" and "broilers" is metropolitan in numbers and attractiveness. Several of the musical hits are already popular with those who whistle for sincere if mistaken love of music, and also with the unfortunates who try to whistle while in the theatre, betraying the vacancy in their topmost part as does an empty ink-bottle in the wind.

At the New Alcazar Theatre overflowing crowds attest the strength of David Warfield's hold on the play-going public. Some have had the good fortune to see him already more than once, while others, who have the bad habit of deciding at a late hour, have not yet been able to secure anything but standing-room. A third week of "The Music Master" begins next Monday evening. The play and the star are reviewed at length in another column.

"The Fortune Teller," somewhat abbreviated, has pleased Princess Theatre patrons particularly this week, and principally because Christina Nielsen in the title-rôle is delightful to eye and ear, and Arthur Cunningham, as Sandor, the gipsy lover, has songs worthy of his voice. Miss Nielsen as a comic-opera prima donna promises well. Her voice is pure, sweet, and flexible, and used with discretion; her dramatic ability is as yet but partially developed, but nature has been generous in gifts to her. Ferris Hartman, as Boris, had no great opportunity but made the most of what was in his way, and with excellent judgment did not attempt to force a great victory.

Next week, the sixth of Mr. Hartman's engagement, "The Toreador" will be put on by special arrangement with Manager George Edwardes of the Gaiety Theatre, London. The musical play has been seen here, and memories of its earlier production at the Tivoli Opera House are still pleasant. It has much sparkling music, some amusing comedy, and possibilities in the way of handsome costumes and stage effects that will not be slighted. Mr. Hartman will have a droll part as Tommy Gigg, and Arthur Cunningham will be the real Toreador. Both Christina Nielsen and Sybil Page are in the cast, with all the other favorites of the Princess company well placed.

Beginning Sunday afternoon the Orpheum will offer a bill which is notable for the number of people in the several acts. First come Jesse Lasky's "Pianophiends," in which nine players perform on five pianos. There is singing and dancing as well in this popular number, an octette being presented which is said to rival the famous double sextette of "Florodora." The Seven Yulians are famous acrobats and athletes. Claud and Fannie Usher have a classic little playlet in "Fagan's Decision," which is a study in New York slang. The Reiff Brothers are tuneful singers and graceful dancers. It will be the last week of Gardiner and Vincent, A. O. Duncan, the Two Pucks, and of Charmion in her transformation act. A series of new and realistic motion pictures, showing the famous Marathon race at the Olympic games, London, will be shown.

David Warfield will appear in "The Grand Army Man" during his present engagement at the New Alcazar Theatre.

George Leon Moore, formerly with the Princess Theatre Company and pleasantly remembered for his success as young Bronson in "The Belle of New York," is now with the "Algeria" company which is delighting patrons of the Broadway Theatre in New York. He made the hit of the piece the first night, singing "Love Is Like a Cigarette."

LITERARY NOTES.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

Mark Twain has forsaken New York as a place of residence and henceforth will live in his Italian villa at Redding, Connecticut.

Professor George McLean Harper of Princeton University, after a year abroad, during which he has been working upon his life and critical study of Sainte-Beuve, the great French critic, for Lippincott's French Men of Letters series, has now collected all his material for the work and will return to America this month. He expects to revise and rewrite the book at Princeton during the autumn, and it will probably be issued during the early part of next year. It is based in great part upon original research and will no doubt be one of the most important books of its season.

Louis Becke's new novel, promised in the fall, is to be called "The Adventures of Louis Blake," and the action will be laid chiefly in the south seas of the Pacific. It is reported that the wanderlust has again seized hold of Mr. Becke, and that he is about to start off on a two or three years' journey.

The report that the works of Molière have been suppressed in Japan is discussed in the Depêche de Toulouse by a writer who says that the reason for the action must be evident to any one who knows the Japanese people. Molière's ridicule of old age would be enough. But in nearly every work some father is made the butt of jokes and gross wit by his child or children. Paternal authority is dethroned and undermined. Youth is always victorious at the expense of age. Plays of the class of "Fourberies de Scapin" would be impossible in Japan, where filial affection is the prime virtue. The ideas of the author also clashed with those of the Japanese as to the relation of husband and wife. The Japanese wife must obey without question. In the presence of her husband she may not even speak aloud, and therefore scenes and quarrels are impossible. In fact, Molière is, in the eyes of the people of the Land of the Rising Sun, an anarchist, who holds nothing sacred, and to prevent a spread of his influence his works must be banished.

Lippincott's Magazine for October will contain a complete novel by Miss Jessie Kaufman of San Francisco. Very little fiction has been written about Hawaii because there are very few writers who are competent to do it. Miss Kaufman is one of the select few, having spent much time on the islands and being thoroughly familiar with the society she depicts. She is a graceful writer and well qualified to show the life as it actually is—the delightful social functions, the welcome accorded visitors from the outside world, the trials of the housekeeper, all the advantages and disadvantages of living in this tropical garden spot. But aside from its atmosphere and local color, the tale has a strong, well-defined plot to commend it—a plot with a mystery, hanging upon the advent of a pair of impostors who create much trouble and amass considerable profit before a suspicious young American lawyer succeeds in "spilling their guns." Altogether, "A Jewel of the Seas" bids fair to deserve the interest that it will arouse in San Francisco.

New Publications.

Charles H. Pope of Boston has published "The Pioneers of Maine and New Hampshire, 1623 to 1660; a Descriptive List. Drawn from Records of the Colonies, Towns, Churches, Courts, and Other Contemporary Sources," by Charles Henry Pope.

"Stop and Think," by L. R. Andrews, is a valuable and helpful little book to be commended as a cure for pessimism and the more domestic malady of the "blues." Its four divisions are devoted to "Forethought," "Thoughts on Business," "Thoughts on the Home," and "Thoughts on Health." Published by L. R. Andrews, San Diego. Price, 50 cents.

Under the title of "Beyond the Blue Grass," George Cresswell Gill has written a good story of Kentucky. He tells the story of the way Ginseng County threw off the lassitude of generations, and of the traditional; of the way Edward Singleton's influence and energy penetrated every corner of the picturesque old county, straightened the lines, mapped the territory and promoted a railroad. It is published by the Neale Publishing Company, New York and Washington; $1.50.

The Lloyd Scott Travel Talks.

Manager Will L. Greenbaum's first attraction this season will be Lloyd Scott, A. B., the famous traveler, in a series of Travel Talks, illustrated with colored lantern slides, moving panoramas, and motion pictures. Although educated for the law, Mr. Scott has devoted most of his life to globe-trotting with his camera.

The travel talks are not the stereotyped form of lecture, but personal narratives and anecdotes combined with useful information. The subjects will be "India," "Japan," "Russia," "Egypt," and "Ireland." Two parallel courses will be given, so that one may attend the entire series without going on successive nights. Course A will be given Monday, Thursday, and Saturday nights, October 5, 8, 10, and Monday and Wednesday, October 12, 14. Course B will be given on the alternate nights, Wednesday and Sunday nights being always omitted.

The travel talks will be given at Christian Science Hall, and the box office for the sale of the course tickets will open Monday, September 28, at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s Van Ness Avenue store. The prices for the entire course are $2, $3, and $4. Seats for single events will be on sale Thursday, October 1, and prices will be 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1. Mail orders for course tickets may now be sent to W. L. Greenbaum at the box office and will receive careful attention.

At the conclusion of the engagement in this city a course will be given at Maple Hall, Oakland, which has been refitted and remodeled into a handsome auditorium.

Hatford Manor, Faringdon, formerly the home of the poet Chaucer, and a part of the Pusey estate, has been sold to the leaseholder, George Baylis, of Wyfield Manor, Newbury, the largest producer of barley in England. Pusey is said to have been granted to the family of that name by Canute by tenure of a horn, which is still in Mr. Bouverie Pusey's possession and bears the inscription: "Kyng Knoude gave William Pewseye horn to holde by tby Londe."

The tickets to George Cohan's new Gaiety Theatre in New York bind the women who use them to remove their hats during the performance, according to a "contract" printed on the reverse side of the ticket, directly back of the seat coupon. As the coupon must be produced upon demand by the seatholder to prove a right to the seat, the printed "agreement" always will be available to the management of the theatre.

You do not really know what eye-relief is until you have tried eye-glasses with our improved guard.

HIRSCH & KAISER

218 Post St.

Opticians

JUST A BOOK STORE

Robertson's

1539 Van Ness Ave.

NEAR PINE

"Next to the White House"

Bonestell, Richardson & Co.

PAPER

The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us.

CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE

118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna, San Francisco.

Tennent's

Ale and Stout

from Wellpark Brewery
Glasgow, Scotland

Forbes Bros., Agents, 1926 Suter St.

MR. PARRISH'S GREAT SEA STORY

The LAST VOYAGE

of the

DONNA ISABEL

Is Published and on Sale
at All Bookstores Today

The publishers believe this the most exciting story Randall Parrish has yet written, and that it will be his most popular one. They have issued a first edition of 30,000 copies.

A. C. McCLURG & CO., Publishers.

WARFIELD AND BELASCO.

By Josephine Hart Phelps.

"The Music Master" is more a portrait than a play. Upon this portrait both author and actor have lavished an infinitude of pains, developing to the last tint and shade all the kindness, the gentleness, the loveliness, and the sweet humor, wholesome as a ripe nut, of the tender-hearted musician toward whom cruel old age is hastening, hearing the twin evils, poverty in one hand and loneliness in the other.

"The Music Master" will please Germans particularly, as the language of the fatherland is much in evidence. The old music master has a delightful German accent, perfect as only David Warfield can make it. His young protégé, Poons, the 'celloist, who can speak German only, is in love with pretty Jenny, who can speak English only. The lack of means of communication is a har, but the lovers bridge it, as only lovers can. The frequent relapses of the two Germans into their native language, the agitated splutterings of the hearing lover, when he throws aside the restricting English, and plunges into a flood of guttural protestations, the comments and half-soliloquies of genial old Von Barwig, who acts as a sort of beneficent Providence to the blushing pair, all tickle the ribs of German auditors, some of whom say that the German used is so racy and idiomatic as to be in some cases untranslatable.

David Belasco has, with his usual minute care, and inspired elaboration of trifles, built up an interior in the household of Miss Houston, keeper of a boarding-house for musical Bohemia, that forms a realistic and highly interesting background to the figure of Von Barwig, the music-master. The company has been carefully selected; Marie Bates marshals into line the elderly coquettes of the good-hearted Miss Houston with a recognition of the humor of the part that few actresses can surpass. Agousto Aramim, an Italian actor, and Louis Verande, a French one, fill with continental color the rôles of the two musicians of corresponding nationality. George Woodward's Al Costello is a study from life. So are the representatives of the musicians' and brickmakers' unions. A curious juxtaposition truly. As Herr Von Barwig says, when he finds that the music hall of his new employer that was to be his out of commission because it is built with non-union bricks, "What have I to do with bricks?" But the intervention of the union into the destiny of the music-master is another hit of Belasco realism.

The play with David Warfield in it has become one of those attractions which the public regard as absolutely obligatory to see. Prices have gone up—some say to the huge annoyance of Mr. Warfield himself—and the Sutter-Street playhouse is full to capacity every night.

A fair, pretty, blonde girl, Miss Antoinette Perry by name, plays with an effect of gentleness and sweetness the part of the daughter whom fate has, in her babyhood, so cruelly reft from the fond arms of the longing father. Pretty, baby-faced Antoinette Walker is well placed in the rôle of dimpled Jenny, beloved of August Poons, the German 'celloist who is just plunging and spluttering into his first bath of the English. So the matter of providing suitable players has been carefully looked after. There is, to be sure, a group of supposititious "swells" trailing in and out of the parlors of Mr. Henry Stanton, who fail to make apparent the authenticity of their connection with swiftness. Cruger père is stilted and oratorical; Cruger mère lacks manner and is self-effacing; Cruger fils isn't anything in particular except young-man-in-love-with-his-girl, and the Cruger nieces fail to uphold the family credit as representatives of the great world of society.

Indeed, this bit of drawing-room life forms the weakest scene, or scenes, rather, in the play, being tame, flat, and unconvincing. But, generally speaking, the production as a whole is characterized by that completeness of ensemble which we recognize as one of David Belasco's claims to greatness as a caterer to the dramatic tastes of the public. At the point at which Mr. Belasco lays down the brush, David Warfield steps in and completes the picture, filling it out with strokes so delicate, yet so sure, as to give the portrait the aspect of life.

There are many pleasant chords of sentiment sounded in "The Music Master." Friendship and kindness and goodness—"Good faces, kind faces," says Von Barwig at the last, when he looks upon the grieving countenances of the friends who will miss him—a benevolence of attitude toward young love; the practicing musicians play their loudest when they hear the explosion of honest Poon's kiss to his pretty Jenny. There is the goodness of heart toward her hoarders of sentimental Miss Houston, who, by the way, makes me think of E. M. Holland in petticoats. There is any quantity of goodness piled up in "The Music Master." Besides Von Barwig's goodness, which is simple, and real, and lovable, there is the oratorical goodness of Mr. Cruger, which is rather oppressive, as, indeed, is the whole Cruger family. There is the philanthropic goodness of Helen Stanton, and the off-hand, devil-may-care, slang-dealing goodness of Al Costello, keeper of the freak museum in which Von Barwig plays.

The intention on the part of the author has been to create an atmosphere which is stimulating to all those emotions of sympathy, compassion, and affectionate regard which are so prized by that connoisseur in mimic emotions, the confirmed theatre-goer.

The dominant motive in the play is paternal love. There is not a love scene in it for the heroine, in spite of the presence of a rather pikerish young man who is more her suitor than her lover. And Belasco and Warfield between them play very expertly upon our sympathies.

From the moment that we see Herr von Barwig gravitating involuntarily toward the sprig of youth blooming in Miss Houston's shabby boarding-house and kindly pinching Jenny's round, rosy cheek, we feel that he has a father's heart in his breast. The scene in which the music-master gives a lesson to his own unrecognized child is beautifully played, so delicately and touchingly does the actor indicate the involuntary yet carefully repressed outflow of the tenderness long hoarded in the father's breast. That utterance, "one, two, three," in a voice that slightly quavers, then grows stronger, as if hiding defiance to an emotion that threatens mastery, is one over which students of dramatic art well might dwell, as showing the possibilities of expressing emotion with a minimum of physical effort.

That Mr. Warfield duly recognizes the time when physical effort will tell is shown in the later scene, with the betrayer of Von Barwig's wife and the reputed father of his child, when the musician taxes the betrayer with his crime, sweeping aside in the flood of his wrath the prayers and palliations of weak, hoastful pretense. The strained, agitated, hysterical voice, and the wild, yet monotonous pounding of a nervous hand upon the piano were the striking outward manifestations of an anguish and a sense of outrage long and hardly repressed. Nerves and sympathies alike vibrated in overwhelming response to those moving indications of a gentle and loving nature wrought to the supremest pitch of reproach and protesting grief.

Yet even this scene was surpassed, when, in a later one, the father, after trying in vain to deny his hungry heart the gratification of its longing, broke down in response to the daughter's tacit appeal, and gave free vent to all the up-springing tenderness of long repressed affection. "My little baby, my little baby!" he cries brokenly, as he kisses the young face of his woman-child.

For all his undeniable limitations David Belasco often has inspirations, and the simplicity of Von Barwig's expressions is one of them. The old musician always speaks in character. He does not pose or utter noble sentiments. He indulges in no polysyllables, except when he lets loose on the villain hater—aptly played by Oscar Eagle—a rolling tide of German hotly minted in a heart that hates treachery and evil.

And when he tenderly uttered those simple words to the grown daughter who was hut a baby when she was stolen from him, an electric wave of sympathy swept like a tide through the house, and the eyes moistened involuntarily.

Still the play is no great thing. While it contains many delightful realistic effects, Belasco appeals too studiously to pretty sentiment to make for large effects. Like Clyde Fitch, he never hesitates to defer the onward sweep of the play for the purpose of introducing small, entertaining details of atmosphere. That these things are well done goes without saying; but they detract from the forcefulness of his theme. His comedy is often puerile. The scene between Von Barwig and the Cruger nieces is a case in point. However, while Jove—meaning Belasco—nods occasionally, Mr. Warfield never does, and is just as artistically conscientious in conveying the quizzical state of mind of the old musician, in such trifling scenes, as he is in painting the tired longing of a breaking heart.

I very much question if the abruptness of Helen toward her music master, when she finally summons resolution to obey her putative father and dismiss him, is in keeping with the tender friendliness she had previously shown him. But Belasco wanted to put on the pathetic stop, so he made things a little more tragic for Von Barwig than they had need to be, just to give the wave of sympathy a good, big impetus. The premeditation of it is too plainly revealed, and, to a more discerning mind, the pathos of the scene is lessened, instead of increased.

The stiltedness and artificiality of the drawing-room intercourse as pictured in the play would seem to argue that the versatile dramatist will never find firm footing in a society comedy. Let us hope he will never try. He is popular in his own field, and while Belasco will never write a great play, he can reach a great multitude with his kindly, refreshing sentiment. Of his other qualities, the warm coloring of the atmosphere he creates, the ingenuity of his situations, his natural dialogue, and his remarkable sense of stagecraft, one does not need to speak. The world knows it well already. The setting of "The Music Master" is extremely simple, but there are the abounding suggestions which create the atmosphere of the musical Bohemia in which Herr von Barwig lives. And there is the fine old fellow himself—Belasco gave him to us. His face, with its searching, tender eyes, its kindly, flexible mouth, imprints itself on the memory. One hears him saying in his voice of the heart, "It gives me much sentiment," or listens with tender sympathy as he says to the unconscious, golden-haired daughter in her home of wealth, "I could not take money from you."

Gertrude Fleming's Farewell Concert.

Miss Gertrude Fleming, who is soon to leave for Europe to continue her music study as the protégée of Jean de Reszké and Luisa Tetrazzini, will appear in a farewell concert Sunday afternoon, September 20, at three o'clock, at the Van Ness Theatre, a testimonial benefit tendered by her many friends. Dr. H. J. Stewart will direct the music, and Louis Newbauer, flute soloist, will assist in the programme. Miss Fleming will sing arias from the grand operas and other selections. Among the musical people of the city Miss Fleming has been regarded with admiration and interest for years. She is only fifteen years old, but has been singing and studying since she was six, and her future career promises to be marked by notable success.

N. J. La Vigne in Concert.

Noe Joseph La Vigne, a distinguished haritone, will be heard in concert at Lyric Hall, Thursday evening, October 1. His numbers will include selections from "Rigoletto," "I'Pagliacci," and "Faust," and he will also sing several French, Italian, and English ballads. Mr. La Vigne will be assisted by Miss Betty Scholtz, violinist, and a graduate of the Berlin Conservatory of Music. Miss Alma Rudolph will preside at the piano.

J. B. Aleshire, quartermaster-general, has been accompanying Secretary of War Wright on a tour of the Western army posts. General Aleshire says that it is difficult for the government to get good horses for the use of the cavalry. The restoration of the old Morgan type of horses is deemed desirable, and there is a movement on foot in Colorado to establish a government breeding farm for the raising of modern cavalry horses. "Good horses are hard to get, and any stock country that will pay particular attention to raising the type of horses needed for the army will find a steady and profitable market," says the general.

A restaurant keeper at Marienhad has a straw hat which he values at $1000. It is not a handsome object, but he was many years in collecting the materials from which it is made. Every straw in it has been touched by the lips of royalty, for the thing is woven from the straws put in the drinks of the crowned heads of Europe who frequent his café.

GRANADA HOTEL - OPENS - OCTOBER 1, 1908. Situated at Sutter and Hyde Streets. Midway between the business and resident sections of the city. A strictly first-class Hotel on the American plan. ABSOLUTELY FIRE PROOF. All rooms and baths outside exposure; every modern improvement; luxuriously furnished. Perfect service and cuisine, and an atmosphere of home comfort rarely met with in a hotel. Special monthly terms to families. Reservations can be made at the hotel. E. S. DE WOLFE, Manager Formerly proprietor Hotel Pleasanton

AMUSEMENTS The Lloyd Scott "TRAVEL TALKS" Illustrated with beautiful colored views, moving panoramas, and motion pictures. Christian Science Hall Sacramento and Scott Sts. Subjects: "INDIA," "JAPAN," "RUSSIA," "EGYPT," "IRELAND" Two Courses, commencing Monday, October 5. Course A—Monday, Thursday, Saturday evenings, 5th, 8th, 10th; Tuesday and Friday, 13th and 15th. Course B—Tuesday and Friday, 6th and 9th; Monday, Thursday, Saturday, 12th, 15th, 17th. COURSE TICKETS (5 subjects), $4.00, $3.00, $2.00. On sale Monday, September 28, at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s, Van Ness above California. SINGLE EVENTS 50c, 75c, $1.00. Ready Thursday, October 1, at both stores. Mail orders for course tickets now received. Address Will L. Greenbaum. Oakland Course—"Maple Hall" commencing Monday, October 19. Beatrice Fine-Anna Miller Wood concert Thursday, October 22.

ORPHEUM ELLIS STREET NEAR FILLMORE Absolutely Class A Theatre Building Week beginning this Sunday afternoon Matinee Every Day ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE THE PIANOPHENDS; SEVEN VUILLANS; THE USHERS; REIFF BROTHERS; GARDINER and VINCENT; A. O. DUNCAN; THE TWO PUCKS; New Orpheum Motion Pictures, showing the famous Marathon Race at the Olympic Games, London; Last Week CHARMION, the perfect woman. Evening prices, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box seats, $1. Matinee prices (except Sundays and holidays), 10c, 25c, 50c. Phone, WEST 6000.

PRINCESS THEATRE Ellis Street near Fillmore S. LOVERICH, Manager Class "A" Theatre Phone West 663 Matinee Saturday and Sunday Last Two Nights of "The Fortune Teller" BEGINNING MONDAY NIGHT Next Week Only FERRIS HARTMAN In the Famous Musical Play THE TREADOR Arthur Cunningham and all the Princess favorites in the cast Popular prices—Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Mats. (except Sundays and holidays), 25c, 50c.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Tel. West 6036 BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers Corner Sutter and Steiner Sts. Absolute Class "A" bldg. Commencing Monday Evening, Sept. 21, Third Week of David Belasco's Presentation of DAVID WARFIELD And His New York Company in THE MUSIC MASTER Prices, Evenings and Matinees, 50c to $2. Matinee Thursday and Saturday Next—Mr. Warfield in "A Grand Army Man." Note—Mr. Warfield will not appear elsewhere in California than in San Francisco and Los Angeles.

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove St. Phone Market 500 Every Night Including Sunday Matinee Saturday SECOND AND LAST WEEK BEGINS MONDAY, SEPT. 21 The Successful Girly Musical Play THE GIRL QUESTION With PAUL NICHOLSON Great Cast, Pretty Girls, Fun and Song Hits Sept. 28—JOHN E. YOUNG, in "THE TIME, THE PLACE AND THE GIRL."

VALENCIA THEATRE Valencia St. nr 13th Phone 17 Market San Francisco's newest and most beautiful playhouse Beginning Sunday Matinee VALENCIA STOCK COMPANY Including Robert Warwick In Paul Potter's Famous Play The Conquerors Matinees Every Sunday, Wednesday and Saturday In preparation—The latest sensation, "THE DEVIL."

Liqueur Pères Chartreux GREEN AND YELLOW DAINTY DELICIOUS EXQUISITE CORDIAL OF THE CENTURIES At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafés Bâtier & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N.Y., Sole Agents for United States.

VANITY FAIR.

Dr. Allan M. Lane Hamilton of New York has been interviewed for the last time. At least he says so, but then he admits that he said the same thing upon the last occasion. But to do Dr. Hamilton justice, he does not belong to the ranks of the publicity hunting alienist, that dangerous and pestilent creature whose mission in life is to poison justice and to mislead juries. Dr. Hamilton is a real scientist, and that means of the non-advertising kind, but wherever medical knowledge is studied and valued Dr. Hamilton's eminence needs neither exploitation nor defense.

Dr. Hamilton was interviewed by the Philadelphia Ledger, and while the main subject of his conversation was insanity from the legal standpoint he allowed himself to be diverted into some of the bye paths and to speak of society in general and its hearing upon the question of alienism. But his opening words are worth quoting as showing his own standing and the very positive point of view from which he speaks. He says:

I have had forty years' experience in the courts and in private practice with cases of insane people, and here we are, in this enlightened—I use the word in its colloquial sense—enlightened period of 1908, and I am confronted with a restless, blasé, impudent state of ignorance in science and morals in my own country that is hopelessly tangled.

It is popular ignorance, the ignorance of the average jury, that is the stock in trade of the alienist quack. The average jury will believe anything that any "expert" charlatan chooses to tell it, will believe it as though it were a declaration from a new Sinai.

But let that pass. It is with Dr. Hamilton's survey of New York society that we are most concerned. Perhaps it is not wise to take New York as a "fair example," but Dr. Hamilton does so. He says:

I take New York as a fair example of general standards. Our bohemianism is brutal, vulgar; it has no fellowship or camaraderie in it. It is a region of cafés and restaurants, where men and women prey upon one another. Our society is imitative without originality, with absurd exhibitions of loud taste and ill-proportioned artistry. We are free to the verge of open revolt against the laws of Moses, that are needed, but ignored. We have all the license of foreign decadence, with a unique degeneracy of our own that no foreign city would endure because of its cruelty, its savagery. We read chiefly false exaggerations of science and outrageous exposés of forbidden crimes. Of course, press censorship is impossible in the present state of political conflict, but I consider that a large part of the so-called emotional insanity that leads to crime in New York is due to these sensationally false and blatant exposures in certain newspapers of disasters that we never heard of before and would never hear of again except for their impression upon half-formed minds and young people.

"National degeneracy," says Dr. Hamilton, is our chief menace, and he asks what meaning is attached to the word "home" in New York. The word has been "demoralized by the modern standards of living."

Dr. Hamilton is impressed with the "brutality of conditions," with the absence of contentment and of placidity, and with the feverish emulation that lays the seeds of insanity:

Over here if a Newport society woman gives a pink tea the woman who is married to a man living on $900 a year must have her pink tea, too. The effect of that pink tea in a cheap flat is demoralizing, to say the least. There is a good sign in the recent exodus of people to the country, but there is not half as much of that as there ought to be. The trouble is that there is no standard, there is no definite appreciation of right and wrong; we none of us know where we are in our professional capacities or in our moral outlook.

That is the trouble with society in its wider as well as its narrower meaning. There is no sense of right and wrong, no moral yardstick with which to measure thoughts and deeds.

An article in the New York Sun deals pleasantly with the tribulations of the hostess who finds that she must entertain ill-mannered guests. It might be supposed that to a certain extent the hostess has a remedy ready to her hands. Having once experienced the vagaries of a badly behaved visitor, she can surely protect herself in the future by revising her invitation list and omitting the name of the offender. But this, it seems, she can not always do. In large houses there is sometimes a dearth of guests and offers of hospitality must fall, like the rain, upon the unrighteous as well as upon the righteous. Then, again, it is not entirely a matter of invitation at all:

In large houses guests are needed, and in some of them they come and go with as much freedom as they would in a hotel. Guests invite other guests who are friends of theirs, but may not be in the least known to the hostess. Women invite men whom they have met only once, and sometimes they are as hospitable to women whose acquaintance they are anxious to continue. A hostess with a big house to fill can not always be sensitive about the demeanor of her guests.

One would suppose that a self-respecting hostess would rather have fewer guests and confine herself to ladies and gentlemen, but the behests of the society juggernaut are not always conducive to self-respect.

One of the great grievances of the modern entertainer is the refusal of guests to come by the train indicated. Few establishments can look after eighteen or twenty people who insist on traveling by trains that arrive within a quarter of an hour of each other:

When the hostess writes for you to come on the 3:35 she means that it is convenient for her to have you take that train and no other. Yet there are very few persons who have any regard for her feelings in the matter. They decide what hour will suit them and arrive then.

When a social lion has been invited the hostess must, of course, be prepared for eccentricities. The lion will not always roar just at the right time nor in the correct key, and sometimes he sulks in the corner of his golden cage when he should be prancing up and down for the edification of other guests. In other words, he is liable to prefer a cigar in his own room to the company of the expectant group on the lawn. And the lionesses are just as troublesome as the lions, and even more so. The most beautiful woman in the party is apt to go to bed for the afternoon just when she is expected to be most in evidence. These are among the penalties for entertaining the king of beasts:

"I had a man in my house once," said a woman who knows all the peculiarities of guests that it is possible for the possessor of a large house to learn, "who could not be got downstairs before lunch, try as we might. His wife told me he did the same thing at home, so I knew he was not imposing on me.

"At different periods of the morning I would see one of the men servants ascending to his room with a brandy and soda. After that had happened several times enough appetite had been aroused for his morning coffee. That was followed after a brief interval by a few more drinks to give him the courage to allow his valet to dress him. By following that routine every day he managed to get downstairs in time for lunch.

"He was a nice man, and I liked him very much. I rather liked having him in the house, too, but I thought it was imposing too much on any man to ask him to go through all that trouble every day just to accommodate his hostess. Even if he did go through the same routine at home, he had to take less trouble about it there. So I stopped inviting him."

Unpunctuality at meals is a vice that has nearly disappeared, and this, we are told, is due to a rebuke administered three years ago to a young woman who was then very much in the favor of society:

She was such a popular figure at that time that she thought she could do just about anything she pleased. The young millionaire who had invited her down to his Long Island estate was just about as spoiled as she and was especially punctilious in the matter of promptness at meals.

One night this young woman came down to dinner half an hour late. The host, after having waited as long as he cared to, told his twenty guests not to wait any longer, and all were seated when, without apparent embarrassment, the young woman entered the dining-room. It took nerve, but she was equal to it.

She giggled an apology as she took her place next the host. He was rather rude in the frankness with which he showed the displeasure he felt.

The next night she was late again. The guests waited for only a minute and then went to dinner. When the actress came down half an hour late again she entered the dining-room and started to walk to the place next the host, where she had sat the night before. But the place of honor was occupied that night by another woman. The host arose as she approached, but without much politeness.

"You must have forgotten, Miss von Fox," he said in a cold, deliberate tone that gave every other guest the full benefit of every word he said, "that we dine at half-past eight, although I had supposed after what happened last night that you would not fail to remember it. You will find your seat at the other end of the table."

He was young, a bachelor, and very rich. Perhaps he was rude in addition, but his action had a splendid effect. I haven't heard of anything of the kind since.

Of course everybody at the house party told of what had happened and the story went the rounds thoroughly. And it had a good effect. It relieved the country house hostess of one bother.

The hero of this occasion certainly was rude, if a rich man can be rude. A gentleman would have found the better way.

The "Cullinan," the largest diamond in the world, which was presented by the Transvaal government to King Edward, has been cut into two beautiful white stones, one of which will be set in the royal crown and the other in his majesty's sceptre. Details of the cutting have been given by Sir Henry de Villiers, who arrived at Plymouth from Quebec, where he was the South African representative. Having heard recently of the progress of the diamond cutters in Holland, he explained that the two chief gems resulting will ornament the sceptre and the crown of King Edward. When it was shipped to England it was a moot question what the quality of the diamond would be, experts being unable to tell the perfection of a stone from the rough. Now it has been found to be of superfine quality, pure white, and possessed of remarkable brilliance and lustre. The cutting will employ three artisans for nine months. One of the diamonds will weigh 425 carats and the other will be slightly smaller, but both will be immeasurably larger than the Koh-i-Noor (102 carats). The great cost of cutting will probably be met by the value of the chips which come from the two perfect gems.

There is weeping and wailing among the women of New York who have been accustomed to replenish their wardrobes from the periodic sales of goods seized by the customs authorities. Hitherto it has been the practice to sell these goods in small lots, and it was no uncommon experience to buy a hundred-dollar gown for a tenth or a twentieth of its value. But the United States marshal who has charge of these auction sales has seen a great light. Just before the last occasion he was approached by the representative of a Boston firm, who offered a good price if the goods were sold in one lot. He wanted to buy them, but he did not intend to waste his time in bidding for the things piecemeal and against the competition of a crowd of desperate and despairing women. The marshal fell in with the idea and as a result he netted $1650, as against $900 received for a similar lot the previous year.

The scene of the latest sale is well described by the New York Evening Post. The usual notices were sent out to the effect that three trunks full of dresses, imported by Mrs. L. E. A. Parker on La Provence and seized for non-payment of duty, would be duly auctioned. The dresses were divided into 149 lots. The invoice value was about $10,000, to which duty to the extent of about $5000 must be added. But as the dresses had been packed in trunks for over a year their value was supposed to have decreased to $10,000:

As soon as the doors of the court-room, guarded by a squad of special officers wearing gold badges, were thrown open, a large number of the women buyers, familiar figures at these sales, forced their way in ahead of every one else. The light of anticipation broke out upon their faces as they saw the masses of silk, satin, and laces, mixed with rare furs, spread out on long, legal tables. But within five minutes they received a shock.

"I wish to announce," it was the voice of Henkel speaking, "that the goods here will be offered in three lots—Lot No. 1, of packages from one to sixty-five; Lot No. 2, of packages from sixty-six to 125, and Lot No. 3, packages 126 to 149. The days are over when people can buy one hundred-dollar gowns for a dollar and a quarter. We aren't having these sales for the benefit of the public. They are to get as much money for the government as possible. My duty is to get all I can for the government, and it is because of that that I am selling the goods this way."

The general opinion of the women present was that if the United States marshal should be so fortunate as to escape immediate arrest and condign punishment at the hands of an outraged nation, he would certainly not avoid ultimate retribution from indignant Providence. But the marshal smiled the smile of impenitence. The sale was over in a few minutes and a much larger sum was realized than ever before.

Gouverneur Morris in Everybody's gives us a new view of life at Newport. He says that Bailey's Beach is the nearest that Newport will ever get to trial marriage:

It does not, of course, furnish complete proofs of compatibility; but it gives considerable go on. The possibility of hitching one's star to a cork leg or a cloven hoof is done away with. The man who continuously leaps into the air and enters the water stomach first is pretty sure to be good-natured; the woman who doesn't mind getting her hair wet will put up with greater trials; and those who literally bask in that frigid water, hour after hour, can of course stand anything. Think well, too, of that woman who is the quickest to change from land to sea clothes, and vice versa. She will occasionally be on time.

Many other truths come home to one; the baleful influence of the shoe upon the male foot; the fact that the colors of expensive socks are not always fast; the resemblance between the distinguished foreigner, as he runs and skips and festively sports, and the sandpiper turned loose on a good feeding-ground; that the girl whom you saw at tennis in filmy, floating white things, and thought as slender and graceful as Canova's Psyche, has legs like the columns of Hercules (and doesn't care), that the walk which was dignified in the reading-room is a waddle on the beach; and that every man over thirty years of age, no matter how thin of arm and leg and chest and neck, looks as if he had swallowed one melon—whole.

W. & J. SLOANE

FURNITURE

Exclusive lines for Parlor, Library, Living Room, Dining-Room, Bedroom, Hall, Summer Homes and Offices.

CARPETS

Special weaves and colorings in the greatest variety. Domestic Wiltons and Whole Piece Axminsters. We show all grades.

RUGS

Both Oriental and Domestic. This is by far the largest and choicest stock of Rugs on the Coast. Our Orientals are selected as individual pieces.

Upholstery—Interior Decoration
Our long experience and unequalled facilities enable us to admirably execute special orders.

Van Ness and Sutter

GOODYEAR "HIPPO" HOSE

The best and strongest Garden Hose. Guaranteed to stand 700 lbs. pressure.

Try it and be convinced.

GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY

R. H. PEASE, President
587, 589, 591 Market St. at Second St.
SAN FRANCISCO

THE LATEST STYLES IN

Choice Woolens

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

108-110 Sutter St.

French Bank Bldg.

A SALE WITH A REASON

WE wish to discontinue certain stock patterns of various articles in different departments. These will be placed on special sale at greatly reduced prices.

THEY INCLUDE

Dinnerware, Glassware, Kitchenware, Silverware, Artware, Crystalware and Lamps.

NATHAN-DOHRMANN CO.

1520-1550 Van Ness Ave.

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

A physician, upon opening the door of his consultation room, asked: "Who has been waiting longest?" "I have," spoke up the tailor, "I delivered your clothes three weeks ago."

Tom Reed and Jerry Simpson, the noted Populist Congressman, were great friends. Their good relationship came after this incident: "Say, Jerry," said Reed one day, "why are you a Populist?" "For the same reason," said Simpson, "that you are a Republican. A majority of the people of our respective districts are of our way of thinking."

Henry B. Stanford, for several years the leading man with Sir Henry Irving's company, tells of an incident which occurred while rehearsing "Faust" with him at the Lyceum Theatre in London—they were doing the Brocken scene and the famous actor had occasion to reprove an army of exuberant supers. He stopped the rehearsal and all was silence. Then, in a quiet, grim way, he said: "Very charming—but you must remember that you are in hell—not picnicking on Hampstead Heath."

An Englishman was recently invited by a New Yorker to accompany him on a hunting trip on Long Island. "Large or small game?" laconically asked the Briton, who has hunted in every quarter of the globe. "You don't expect to find lions and tigers on Long Island, do you?" queried the New Yorker. "Hardly," responded the Briton with a laugh, "but I like a spice of danger in my hunting." "If that's the case," answered the other, with a grin, "I'm your man, all right. The last time I went out I shot my brother-in-law in the leg!"

The demand that the Sultan of Turkey dispense with his harem recalls the story of the cannibal chief who became converted and asked the missionary to admit him to the church. "But you have more than one wife," objected the missionary. "My church does not allow that." The chief departed in dejection, but returned again in a few days and announced, with evident satisfaction, that he now had only one wife and was ready for baptism. "But," objected the clergyman, doubtfully, "where are your other wives?" "Oh," replied the convert, "I have eaten them!"

As the brisk philanthropist thrust her fare into the cab driver's hands she saw that he was wet and apparently cold after the half hour of pouring rain. "Do you ever take anything when you get soaked through?" she asked. "Yes, ma'am," said the cahnman, with humility. "I generally do." "Wait here in the vestibule," commanded the philanthropist. She inserted her house key in the lock, opened the door, and vanished, to reappear a moment later. "Here," she said, putting a small envelope in the man's outstretched hand. "These are two-grain quinine pills; you take two of them now and two more in half an hour."

It is told of the youth of a young German prince, many years ago, and presumably the present Emperor of Germany, that upon one occasion, his tutor having been changed, the newcomer in examining the young prince asked: "Can your highness tell me how much is nine times twelve?" "Seventy-two," replied the prince, with royal promptness. The tutor paled, but soon recovered his equanimity. "Permit me to state to your highness that your highness's former tutor, whom I have had the honor to succeed as an instructor to your royal highness, appears to have been a person of rather limited capabilities," he said.

One of the lectures in which the late Bishop Potter was most entertaining illustrated the eccentricities of the artistic temperament and contained this anecdote of Landor, the poet. Landor, he said, was at the same time the most violent and brutal and most delicate and sensitive of men. He adored flowers. The gardens of his beautiful villa at Florence were full of flowers, and the poet walked among them daily, never plucking them, only bending over them reverently to admire their loveliness and their perfume. His cook one day served him a wretched dinner, and in his rage the poet threw the man out of the window into a bed of splendid roses. As the cook writhed with a broken leg below, Landor from his window exclaimed in a horror-stricken voice: "Good gracious, I forgot the roses!"

An English farmer recently went into a restaurant in Liverpool and called for some bread and cheese. "What kind would you like, sir?" inquired the waiter, "Cheshire, Yorkshire or Gorgonzola?" "Fancy name, that last," said the farmer; "I'll try a bit of that." He thought it so tasty that he bought a pound, took it home for his wife late at night, and left it for her on the sideboard in the kitchen. Next morning he came in from his before-breakfast round and asked her if she had found the parcel. "Oh, yes," she replied; "I saw it there all right, and very good mottled soap it is, no doubt, when you know how to use it. But I couldn't make it lather very well when I washed the children, and after I'd done they smelled so strong that I've turned 'em out for a breath of fresh air, just to sweeten 'em a bit before they go to school."

One afternoon a young woman stepped up to the telegraph counter in a local department store, and in a trembling voice asked for a supply of blanks. She wrote a message on one blank, which she immediately tore in halves; then a second message was written out that was treated in the same way; finally a third was accomplished; and this she handed to the operator with a feverish request that it be "rushed." When the message had gone on the wire and the sender had departed, the operator read the other two for her own amusement. The first ran: "All at an end. Have no wish to see you again." "Do not write or try to see me any more," was the tenor of the second message. The third was to this effect: "Come at once. Take next train if possible. Answer."

THE MERRY MUSE.

Sad!

She looked an angel, Ethereal, fair; For earth too lovely, A being rare. She looked an angel, But she was not, For speaking, she said: "Geel! aint it bot?"

—Boston Traveler.

Discovered.

She was a student at Vassar, While he was a Princeton man; And during the Newport season They gathered a coat of tan Which caused unlimited wonder—Knockers cried "What a disgrace!" For each of the pair was sunburned On opposite sides of the face. —Life.

Stung.

There once was a bulldog named Cesar Saw a cat and he thought he would tassar, But the cat was too fly, And she scratched out an eye; Now Cesar just sasar and flasar. —Philadelphia Press.

I Wonder!

My papa he was born some place away up in New York; And mamma in Chicago, where they manufacture pork; And I was born in Pittsburg; and I'm awful glad, you bet; But aint it awful funny that we three ever met? —Lippincott's.

Opening of the Maryland Season.

Lingering at Long Dock—Hark, the auctioneer! Oysters by the wagonload, huge as the pier; Horny-handed oystermen, naked breast and back, Mouthfuls of delightful oaths seasoned with tobac: Oysters bulging from the hold, Oysters towering high; Proper treasure, legal measure, Who's a-goin' to buy!

Lingering at Long Dock—roustabout, aboy! The cargo 'neath the hatches is a-lubberin' for joy; Tongers up from Tangier, tongers up the tide Where Chester River ripples o'er the beds the gods provide: Oysters by the basketful, Oysters by the ton; Long Dock, where the pungies lie, Slumbering in the sun! —Baltimore Sun.

The Outcast.

You ask me why I weep and moan, like some lost spirit in despair, and why I wander off alone, and paw the ground and tear my hair? You ask me why I pack this gun, all loaded up, prepared to shoot? Alas! my troubles have begun—the women folk are canning fruit! There is no place for me to eat, unless I eat upon the floor; and peelings get beneath my feet, and make me fall a block or more; the odors from the boiling jam all day assail my weary snoot; you find me, then, the wreck I am—the women folk are canning fruit! O, they have peaches on the chairs, and moldy apples on the floor, and wormy plums upon the stairs, and piles of pears outside the door; and they are boiling pulp and juice, and you may hear them yell and hoot; a man's existence is the deuce—the women folk are canning fruit.—Emporia (Kansas) Gazette.

An Oxford student was showing two fair cousins through Christchurch College. "That," he explained, "is the picture gallery; that, the library; and that tower contains the famous hell, 'Great Tom of Oxford.'" Stooping quickly, he picked up a stone and sent it crashing through a second-story, ivy-framed window, where there immediately appeared a face, purple with rage. "And that," added the young man, helpfully, "is the dean." Thus it was that he came to leave one seat of learning for another.

A. Hirschman

For fine jewelry and silverware. 1641-1643 Van Ness Avenue.

J. F. TWIST, DENTIST, 1476 Eddy Street, near Fillmore. Phone West 304.

BANKING

The Anglo-Californian Bank, Ltd. Established 1873. Head Office—London. Main Office—Pine and Sansome Streets, San Francisco. Branches—1020 Van Ness Avenue, Mission and Sixteenth Streets, San Francisco. Managers: I. Steinhart, P. N. Lilienthal. Capital paid in.....$1,500,000 Surplus and undivided profits.....1,449,721

A General Banking Business Conducted. Accounts of Corporations, Firms, and Individuals Solicited. Correspondence invited. Safe Deposit Vaults at Van Ness Avenue and Mission Branches.

French Savings Bank

108 Sutter Street, near Montgomery. Paid-up Capital.....$ 600,000 Total Assets.....4,270,800 Strictly a Savings Bank. Open Saturday Evening from 7 to 8:30

OFFICERS—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, 1st Vice-President; Leon Boqueraz, 2d Vice-President; A. Bousquet, Secretary; P. A. Bergerot, Attorney.

SAFE DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT. The French-American Bank is located in the same building.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., San Francisco. Guaranteed Capital.....$ 1,200,000.00 Capital actually paid up in cash.....1,000,000.00 Reserve and Contingent Funds.....1,453,983.62 Deposits June 30, 1908.....34,474,554.23 Total Assets.....37,055,263.31 OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohde; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

LONDON PARIS NATIONAL BANK

N. W. cor. Sutter and Sansome. CAPITAL - - - $2,500,000 SURPLUS - - - 620,000 Sig Greenbaum, H. Fleishacker, President, Vice-President and Mgr. R. Altschul, Cashier

The National Bank ROLL OF HONOR. The title "Roll of Honor National Bank" is a distinction of which any financial institution in the United States may be proud. As is well known a "Roll of Honor Bank" is one possessing surplus and profits in excess of capital. A place on the Roll of Honor can not be bought, it must be earned. This bank has for a long time been known as a "Roll of Honor Bank" among banks and bankers.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF Berkeley

UNITED STATES DEPOSITORY. A. W. NAYLOR, Pres. F. M. WILSON, Vice-Pres. F. L. NAYLOR, Cashier. F. C. MORTIMER, Asst. Cashier.

THE BERKELEY NATIONAL BANK

United States Depository Berkeley, Cal. HOUSEHOLD AND COMMERCIAL ACCOUNTS INVITED. DIRECTORS—George P. Baxter, Pres.; J. W. Richards, Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Jones, Vice-Pres.; Louis Titus, Dr. Thomas Addison, A. G. Freeman, Duncan McDuffie, Perry T. Tompkins, F. L. Lipman, W. J. Hotchkiss, and Whitney Falache. F. H. ATKINSON, Cashier.

Connecticut Fire Insurance Company

Established 1850 OF HARTFORD. Total Assets.....$5,817,423 Surplus to Policy-Holders.....2,118,394 BENJAMIN J. SMITH, Manager Pacific Department 518 CALIFORNIA STREET San Francisco

WESTERN ASSURANCE COMPANY

TORONTO. U. S. Assets.....$2,493,154 Surplus.....483,989 PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT 1004 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE SAN FRANCISCO J. J. KENNY, Manager W. L. W. MILLER, Assistant Manager

MARKET ST. 1st Con. 5%

Due 1924. Coupons March and September. BAY COUNTIES POWER CO. 1st 5% Due 1930. Coupons March and September. WESTERN PACIFIC 1st 5% Due 1933. Coupons March and September

SUTRO & CO. BROKERS

412 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F. We have a Direct Wire to N. Y.

THE LABEL

A BLEND OF STRAIGHT RYE WHISKIES—FOUND ON THE BOTTLE OF

HUNTER BALTIMORE RYE

IS IN CONFORMITY WITH THE PURE FOOD LAW, AND MEANS THAT IT IS COMPRISED OF ABSOLUTELY PURE RYE WHISKIES BLENDED FOR THE PURPOSE OF MAKING IT A MORE MELLOW AND PALATABLE DRINK THAN ANY STRAIGHT WHISKEY, WHETHER BOTTLED IN BOND OR OUT OF BOND.

HENRY CAMPE & CO., Inc. Distributors for California and Nevada, San Francisco, Cal.

H. J. COOPER

Expert Accountant and Auditor 705 KAMM BUILDING 717 MARKET STREET Phone Douglas 1342 San Francisco

THE CITIZENS' ALLIANCE, 920 Merchants Exchange, calls the attention of the public to their Free Labor Bureaus, located at No. 10 City Hall Ave., San Francisco, and No. 804 Broadway, Oakland. All classes of male help furnished absolutely free. "The Citizens' Magazine" for September is now ready. Subscription $1.00 per year. Orders solicited.

Clubbing List.

By special arrangement with the publishers, and by concessions in price on both sides, we are enabled to make the following offer, open to all subscribers direct to this office. Subscribers in renewing subscriptions to Eastern periodicals will please mention the date of expiration in order to avoid mistakes:

- American Magazine and Argonaut.....$4.25
Argosy and Argonaut.....4.40
Atlantic Monthly and Argonaut.....6.70
Blackwood's Magazine and Argonaut... 6.20
Century and Argonaut.....7.00
Cammeron and Argonaut.....4.10
Cosmopolitan and Argonaut.....4.35
Current Literature and Argonaut.....5.75
English Illustrated Magazine and Argonaut.....4.70
Forum and Argonaut.....6.00
Harper's Bazar and Argonaut.....4.35
Harper's Magazine and Argonaut.....6.70
Harper's Weekly and Argonaut.....6.70
House Beautiful and Argonaut.....4.75
International Magazine and Argonaut... 4.50
Judge and Argonaut.....7.50
Leslie's Weekly and Argonaut.....6.70
Life and Argonaut.....7.75
Lippincott's Magazine and Argonaut... 5.25
Littell's Living Age and Argonaut.....9.00
Mexican Herald and Argonaut.....10.50
Munsey's Magazine and Argonaut.....4.40
Nineteenth Century and Argonaut.....7.25
North American Review and Argonaut... 8.00
Out West and Argonaut.....5.25
Overland Monthly and Argonaut.....4.50
Political Science Quarterly and Argonaut.....4.90
Puck and Argonaut.....7.50
Review of Reviews and Argonaut.....5.00
Scribner's Magazine and Argonaut.....6.25
Smart Set and Argonaut.....5.25
St. Nicholas and Argonaut.....6.00
Sunset and Argonaut.....4.25
Theatre Magazine and Argonaut.....5.75
Thrice-a-Week New York World (Democratic) and Argonaut.....4.25
Weekly New York Tribune (Republican) and Argonaut.....4.50
Weekly New York Tribune, Weekly New York World, and Argonaut.....5.25

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

Singularly without incident in the matter of entertaining have been the first days of September, but already rumors of teas, receptions, dinners, and dances for the déshutantes of the winter are heard, and October will probably begin a season of unusual gaiety. Del Monte has attracted many during the past fortnight, but train and motors are bringing home the last of the sojourners now, even those who lingered after a lengthy holiday jaunt.

The engagement is announced of Miss Agnes Foster Buchanan, daughter of Mr. Edward Young Buchanan, to Dr. Daniel Crosby of Fruitvale. Their wedding will take place during the early winter.

The engagement is announced of Miss Vera Meyer, daughter of Captain and Mrs. H. L. E. Meyer, to Mr. Hugh Huddleston Owens. No date is announced for the wedding.

The wedding of Miss Phyllis Moulton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Moulton of Fair Oaks, to Mr. Charles Merrill took place on Thursday evening at the First Unitarian Church, on Geary and Franklin Streets. The ceremony was performed at half-past eight o'clock by the Rev. Bradford Leavitt. Miss Alyse Warner, the bride's cousin, was the maid of honor, and the two matrons of honor were Mrs. Leonard Hammond and Mrs. Louis Pierce. Little Miss Frances Merrill was the ring-bearer. Mr. Ralph Merrill was the best man, and the ushers were Mr. Leonard Hammond, Mr. Carl Wolff, Mr. Arthur Hooper, and Mr. Roger Topp. After a month's honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. Merrill will return to this city.

The wedding of Miss Gertrude Whitaker, daughter of the late Mr. Andrew Whitaker, to Mr. Edward H. Gerher of Sacramento took place on Tuesday evening last at the Fairmont. The ceremony was performed at nine o'clock by Bishop William Ford Nichols. Miss Emma Gerher was maid of honor and Mr. Roger Scott was the best man. After a wedding journey through the Eastern States, Mr. Gerher and his bride will make their home in Sacramento.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a résumé of movements to and from this city and Coast and of the whereabouts of absent Californians:

Mrs. Bowman H. McCalla was in town for several days this week from her home in Santa Barbara.

Admiral Richardson Clover, Mrs. Clover, Miss Dora Clover, and Miss Beatrice Clover were in town for several days last week from their country place at Napa and were guests at the St. Francis.

Mrs. Joseph B. Crockett went up this week to Napa Valley, where she will be the guest of Mrs. Horace Blanchard Chase.

Mr. and Mrs. Orville C. Pratt (formerly Miss Emily Wilson) will sail from England on September 19 for America.

Mrs. James Coffin, Miss Natalie Coffin, and Miss Sara Coffin will close their Ross Valley home for a part of the winter and will come to town.

Miss Florence Breckinridge has returned from a visit to Mr. and Mrs. William S. Tevis at Lake Tahoe.

Miss Martha Calhoun and Miss Margaret Calhoun have returned from a visit to Miss Louise Boyd in San Rafael.

Mrs. William Mayo Newhall, Miss Margaret, Miss Marion, and Miss Elizabeth Newhall arrived last week from Santa Barbara, where they have spent a month.

Mr. and Mrs. Fredrick McNear will come up shortly from their home in Menlo and will occupy a house on Clay and Webster Streets for the winter.

Dr. and Mrs. Lawrence Draper (formerly Miss Anna Foster) have returned from their wedding journey and are at their new home on Washington Street.

Mrs. Edward J. Pringle, Miss Nina Pringle, and Miss Hess Pringle are expected home next week from Mendocino County, where they have spent the summer.

Mrs. James A. Robinson and Mr. Porter Robinson have gone to Santa Barbara for a visit.

Mrs. Morgan G. Bulkeley, who has been visiting her mother, Mrs. James F. Houghton, at San Jose, has returned to her home in Hartford, Connecticut.

Miss Katharine Martin has returned to Santa Cruz, after a visit in town of a few days.

Mrs. George Boyd left on Tuesday of last week for an Eastern trip.

Bishop William Moreland of Sacramento and Mrs. Moreland were in town for a few days last week.

Mr. and Mrs. George M. Pinckard will close their San Rafael home in a few weeks and will spend the winter at the Hotel Granada on Sutter Street.

Mrs. William H. Howard has gone to Seattle to visit her son William.

Miss Emma Grimwood has been in town recently as the guest of Mrs. C. O. Alexander.

Mrs. George H. Howard and her sons, George and Henry, left last week for New York.

Mr. Wilberforce Williams has returned from an Eastern trip of several weeks' duration.

Mrs. Charles G. Hooker and Miss Jennie Hooker have returned to their apartment at the Lafayette, after a stay at Del Monte.

Miss Christine Pomeroy and Miss Augusta Gibbs Foute have returned from a visit to Mrs. Horace Blanchard Chase at her home in the Napa Valley.

Mrs. John C. Kirkpatrick and Miss Susanne Kirkpatrick have gone to their country place at Pleasanton to spend a few weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis McComas have taken a cottage in Mill Valley for the fall and winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Pringle have returned to their home at Menlo Park, after a brief stay at Del Monte.

Mr. and Mrs. Vanderlynn Stow and their son, Mr. Ashfield Stow, left on Wednesday last for the East. Mr. Stow will return in about a month, but Mrs. Stow will remain for some weeks longer. Mr. Ashfield Stow will enter Harvard.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Coleman have returned to their Burlingame home, after a motor trip to Del Monte.

Miss Elena Robinson has been visiting Miss Kate Herrin in Shasta.

Miss Elizabeth Livermore has been in town recently as the guest of Miss Newell Drown.

Mrs. George C. Boardman and Miss Dora Winn left last week for the East, where they will spend some weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell McNutt have been spending their honeymoon at Del Monte.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Hamilton, who have spent the summer at Menlo Park, are returning to town this month.

Miss Teresa Thompson has been visiting in San Rafael as the guest of Miss Margaret Mee.

Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Watson have returned from a visit to Colorado.

Mr. Charles Norris left last week for New York to remain permanently.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry M. Holbrook have returned from Coronado and are at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John D. Spreckels on Pacific Avenue, where they will spend the winter.

Miss Frances Jolliffe will return next month to America from Paris, but will probably spend the winter in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Tohey of Palo Alto returned from Lake Tahoe on Tuesday last.

Mr. Isaias W. Hellman, accompanied by two members of his family, left here for his summer home on Lake Tahoe on Sunday last.

The Frederick Kohls closed their summer home on Lake Tahoe on Wednesday last and returned to the city the following day.

At Out-of-Town Hotels.

Among recent registrations from San Francisco at Hotel del Coronado were Mrs. Annie Richmond, Mrs. A. Pond, Miss H. Pond, Mr. Jack B. Sehree, Mrs. S. W. Haynes, Miss Florence Haynes, Miss M. E. Jaquillard, Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Howard, Mr. L. F. Yates, Mrs. W. D. Winch.

Among the arrivals from San Francisco at Byron Hot Springs during the past week were Colonel A. Andrews, Mr. A. F. Andrews, Mrs. S. Baker, Miss Emma M. Baker, Mrs. William A. Case, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Speiker, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Everson, Mr. H. A. Taussig, Mr. L. Taussig, Mr. E. Taussig, Mr. S. Walker, Mrs. E. Hammond, Mr. William M. Noyes, Mr. and Mrs. J. Napthaly.

A few of the recent arrivals from San Francisco at the Tavern of Tamalpais were Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Boyd, Mr. Charles Fletcher Scott, Mr. L. S. Moore, Miss I. Block, Miss Mary D. Haley, Mr. A. B. Sharkey, Mr. John F. Rhoads, Mrs. J. H. Dyer, Miss Dyer, Miss P. Lopez, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Miller, Dr. William C. Dawson and wife, Mr. and Mrs. James E. Lane, Miss Mary L. Hood, Mrs. Louis Goodchild, Mrs. William Greger.

Recent arrivals at Hotel Del Monte from San Francisco include Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Green, Miss Elizabeth Newhall, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Mathieu, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Spencer, Mr. and Mrs. George R. Chambers, Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Wright, Mrs. F. W. Bishop, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Adams, Mr. and Mrs. R. Gardner, Mrs. W. R. Griffith, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Peter, Miss Mary Murphy, Mrs. J. B. Sheridan, Miss Isabel Sheridan, Mr. and Mrs. George Francis, Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Eva, Mr. and Mrs. Randolph V. Whiting, Mr. and Mrs. Cuyler Lee, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Booth, Mrs. Gus Boyer, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Howell, Mrs. I. L. Borden, Miss Hester Borden, Miss Adelaide Linne, Mr. S. M. Cohn, Mr. and Mrs. Noble Eaton, Mrs. Joseph Hill, Mr. and Mrs. P. R. Doolan, Miss Marion Doolan, Mrs. John W. Allyne, the Misses Allyne, Dr. and Mrs. M. Lovegrove, Mrs. J. J. Anderson, Miss Theresa Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. W. Welsh, Mr. S. R. Marvin, Mr. Paul H. Sperry, Dr. and Mrs. John E. Davis, Dr. George B. Somers, Judge and Mrs. Carroll Cook, Miss Elsie Cook, Miss B. Wade.

Creston Clarke has gone into vaudeville. He will appear in a present-day comedy of stage life entitled "The Old-Timer."

CURRENT VERSE.

When the Song Is Done.

When the song is done
And his heart is ashes,
Never praise the Singer
Whom you, silent, heard.
What to him the sound?
What your eyes' fond flashes?
When the singing's over
Say no word!
Ye who darling stood,
Think, your noon of praises,
Can it glimmer down
To his deepest bower?
Never round him shone
Once your garden-mazes:
Now his wandering's over
Bring no flower!
—Arthur Upson, in The Bellman.

The Outlaw.

I drank of the sunlight on the spring,
And the sunlight on the brook;
I stretched at night on the gray, hard rock,
And soft was the sleep I took.

I woke with the morning on my face,
And my heart was free from care;
And my hands were free and my feet—as free
As the red hawk wheeling there.

But I thought of the houses down in the vale,
And I thought of the little flowers
That look so fair and smell so sweet
In the wake of the summer showers.
—Humphreys Park, in Appleton's Magazine.

To the Apollo Belvedere.

O poet's vision, petrified by art
In those high days when Song was deified,
Before the pure, free joy of nature died,
Or man was hunched with a contrite heart!
From the dull rubble of our modern mart
I turn to thee—thou being justified
In everlasting beauty, passion, pride!
In our cold age thou hast no counterpart.

Glorious Apollo! Little now remains
To prove our plodding race was ever young,
That once man's blood flowed freely in his veins,
That out of sheer delight he loved and sung,
When now a lyric measure thrills his tongue,
'Tis mainly to recount his hidden pains.
—Elsa Barker, in The Forum.

The Moor Grave.

I lie out here under a heather sod,
A moor-stone at my head; the moor-winds play above.
I lie out here—in graveyards of their God
They would not hurry desperate me who died for love.
I lie out here under the sun and moon;
Across me bearded ponies stride, the curlews cry.
I have no little tombstone screed, no "Soon
To glory shall he rise!"—but deathless peace have I.
—John Galsworthy, in London Nation.

The Brides of May and September.

I saw my sisters meeting along the shady way
That led between the houses and the sea;
The bride of late September, the bride of early May,
They met before the church of Cloverdale.

The springtime bride was hanging on her young stalwart's arm,
Pink as the rosy bonnet that she wore:—
The autumn bride trudged slowly the long mile from the farm,
Her nine stepchildren walking on before.

And oh, the little lame one had all her hair in curls,
And spruce were all the newly mothered hand:
A father in each boy's hat, a flower in each girl's,
And each child had a comfit in its hand!
—Sarah N. Cleghorn, in Everybody's Magazine.

Ninon Grown Old.

Dead roses, in the silence of a book . . .
An idle chance, my fingers found the page,
Then chilled to mark the panoply of age
On youth's lost dream; the petals Love forsook
And left to fade, forgotten of his look.
Between their crumbling fragments sings the Sage:
"Tomorrow's woe is yesterday's just woe—
Who dances, pays the toll his folly took."
So be it! And the toll were thrice as great,
The dance was mine! It should be mine again,
If mine it were to say. Alone I wait,
Within a dusk of memory and pain;
But, when these withered roses flushed elate,
All night at Love's slim feet my soul has lain.
—Fannie Heaslip Lea, in New Orleans Times-Democrat.

"The Social Guide" is the name of the new play which Clyde Fitch has written for Maxine Elliott. The latter also has another piece called "The Chaperone," by Marion Fairfax.

THE LEADING NEW YORK HAT, "THE MILLER," Eugene Korn, Agent, 15 Kearny St.

To LEASE—12-room furnished house, 2122 Pacific Avenue. Apply between 12 and 2.

Pears'

The public's choice since 1789.

"Your cheeks are peaches," he cried.

"No, they are Pears'," she replied.

Pears' Soap brings the color of health to the skin.

It is the finest toilet soap in all the world.

FAIRMONT HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

The Social Center of San Francisco

Therefore, the ideal hotel for winter residence

Applications for apartments for the coming season should be made at once with the management

Palace Hotel Company

HOTEL DEL MONTE

TENNIS FINALS

will be played out

FRIDAY AND SATURDAY
September 18th and 19th

The banner events of the whole tournament
Make reservations for this week-end by wire or phone.
Address H. R. WARNER, Manager

The Peninsula

SAN MATEO, CAL.

A home in the country practically within San Francisco's gates. Only thirty minutes away. Frequent trolley and train service. See S. P. time-tables. Located in the heart of one of the most beautiful gardens in the State. No winds, no fogs. All the accommodations that culture and refinement demand. Progressive in every detail. Well-equipped club house, and commodious garage.

Winter Rates in force September 1, 1908

JAS. H. DOOLITTLE, Manager.

ROUND THE WORLD

TOURS DE LUXE

Leaving in August, September and October. Membership limited to twelve. Programmes for the asking.

THOS. COOK & SON

32 Powell Street, San Francisco

A PLACE with the quality of Elder's, or Vickery's—only that they feed the soul, while we feed the body.

YE TEA CUP INNE
1427 Bush Street, below Van Ness (upstairs)

Hotel St. Francis

The spirit of good service and the facilities that produce it.

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF JAMES WOODS

Why Not Make Your Home At The Hotel Jefferson

Turk and Gough Streets Facing Jefferson Square

A superior class hotel with every modern convenience and comfort. Operated on the American and European plans. Special rates to permanent guests. Special attention paid to the table—we invite comparisons. Management Noab W. Gray, formerly manager Alexander Young Hotel, Honolulu, and Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

You Can Live At The Hotel Jefferson Better And For Less Than At Home

Hotel del Coronado

Motto: "BEST OF EVERYTHING" Most Delightful Climate on Earth

American Plan. Summer rates $3.50 per day each and upward, or $21.00 per week each and upward

"Good Music" and "Fine Automobile" Road, Los Angeles-Riverside to Coronado. Golf, Tennis, Polo, and other outdoor sports every day in the year.

New 700-foot ocean pier, for fishing. Boating and Bathing are the very best. Send for booklet to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado Beach, Cal. Or see H. F. NORCROSS, Agent, 334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles. Tel. A 6789; Main 3917. 22d Street and Broadway

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"

Building, concrete, steel and marble.

Located, most fashionable shopping district.

210 rooms, 135 baths.

Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests.

Most refined hostelry in Seattle.

Absolutely fireproof. English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

Sherman, Clay & Co., occupying this entire building at Kearny and Sutter Streets, S. F., are headquarters for every kind of musical instrument from Steinway pianos down. You have no need to go elsewhere for any article pertaining to the music business.

Sherman Clay & Co.

STEINWAY AND OTHER PIANOS—VICTOR TALKING MACHINES

Kearny and Sutter, S. F.

35 Van Ness Ave. Broadway at 13th
San Francisco Oakland

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy officers who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Colonel Marion P. Maus, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., commanding the Department of California; Lieutenant-Colonel John B. Bellinger, deputy quartermaster-general, U. S. A., chief quartermaster, manoeuvre camp, and Lieutenant-Colonel John Biddle, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A., chief of staff, manoeuvre camp, have returned from a trip to Atascadero on duty in connection with the manoeuvres, but will go down next week to remain during the manoeuvres.

Major William C. Davis, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., has been ordered to proceed to Fort Monroe, Virginia, for temporary duty, and upon the completion thereof will proceed to and take station at Boston, Massachusetts, until the completion of special work in connection with searchlights heretofore assigned to him, when he will proceed to and take station at Fort Revere, Massachusetts.

Major Samuel W. Dunning, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., arrived on the last transport from his station in Honolulu and will assume his duties as adjutant-general of the manoeuvre camp, Atascadero.

Major Frank R. Keefer, Medical Corps, U. S. A., Presidio of Monterey, arrived in San Francisco last week, reporting upon arrival to the adjutant-general, Department of California, for assignment to duty as acting chief surgeon of the department during the absence of Colonel George H. Torney, Medical Corps, U. S. A., chief surgeon.

Captain Thomas Q. Ashburn, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., has been detailed as quartermaster and commissary of the transport Crook, and sailed on September 15 on that transport for Manila. He will return immediately to San Francisco from Manila as quartermaster and commissary of the transport Warren, and will then join his proper station.

Captain Morris E. Locke, U. S. A., promoted on August 25 from first lieutenant, First Field Artillery, U. S. A., has been assigned to the Third Field Artillery, U. S. A.

Captain Thomas B. Lamoreux, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., Captain Andrew Hero, Jr., Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., and Lieutenant Wesley W. K. Hamilton, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., have been ordered to report on October 15 to Colonel Frederick Marsb, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., president of an examining board at the Presidio of San Francisco, for examination to determine their fitness for promotion.

Captain Frederick G. Stritzinger, Twenty-Second Infantry, U. S. A., School of Musketry, Presidio of Monterey, has been ordered to proceed to Benicia Arsenal, on duty in connection with the work of perfecting an experimental falling target recently submitted by the School of Musketry to the board of officers now in session for the purpose of revising the small arms firing regulations.

Captain Junius Gregory, Medical Corps, U. S. A., arrived here last week from his station at Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, with a detachment of recruits.

Captain William R. Davis, Medical Corps, U. S. A., Fort Mason, has been ordered to join Company B, Hospital Corps, U. S. A., and be attached thereto during the march to the Camp of Instruction, Atascadero, reporting upon arrival to the camp commander for assignment to duty.

Commander A. P. Niblack, U. S. N., has been detached from duty in command of the Severn and ordered to the command of the Hartford.

Lieutenant George C. Mullen, U. S. A., retired, upon his own application is detailed as professor of military science and tactics at St. Matthew's Military School, Burlingame.

Lieutenant Charles L. Hall, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A., was ordered to proceed upon the return to duty of Lieutenant Ralph T. Ward, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A., to the manoeuvre camp, Atascadero, and to report for duty to the commanding officer, Company A, First Battalion of Engineers, U. S. A.

Lieutenant Augustus B. Van Wormer, Eighth Infantry, U. S. A., Cloverdale, California, will stand relieved from duty in connection with the Progressive Military Map of the United States and will proceed to the manoeuvre camp, Atascadero, in time to reach that place upon the arrival of his regiment.

Lieutenant William J. McCaughy, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., has been granted leave of absence for one month on account of sickness.

Lieutenant Harold W. Jones, Medical Corps, U. S. A., has been granted three months' leave of absence, to take effect about January 15, 1909, upon the arrival of the transport Buford at Manila. He is authorized to return to the United States via Asia and Europe.

Lieutenant Leonard S. Hughes, Medical Reserve Corps, U. S. A., Fort McDowell, will, in addition to his other duties, report to the commanding officer, Depot of Recruits and Casuals, Angel Island, for temporary duty during the absence of Captain Robert L. Carswell, Medical Corps, U. S. A., at the Camp of Instruction, Atascadero.

Lieutenant John P. Kelly, Medical Reserve Corps, U. S. A., Fort Miley, has been ordered to proceed without delay to the Camp of Instruction, Atascadero, reporting upon arrival to the commanding officer for temporary duty.

Lieutenant Henry F. Lincoln, Medical Reserve Corps, U. S. A., was ordered to accompany Troop G, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., on its return march from duty in the Sequoia and General Grant National Parks to its proper station, the Presidio of San Francisco.

The U. S. S. Wyoming is to be placed in commission on October 1 at Mare Island Navy Yard, and it is probable that she will make a cruise to test her oil burners and furnish a basis for the further development of that form of motive power.

The Late Mrs. William F. Herrin.

Mrs. Anna Van Clief Herrin, wife of Mr. William F. Herrin, died at her home in this city at one o'clock on the morning of Tuesday, the 15th instant.

Mrs. Herrin's death was wholly unexpected, as she was supposed to be slowly recovering from her severe illness of some months ago, an illness induced by a long-standing affection of the heart. Until about ten days ago Mrs. Herrin was recuperating at her country home in Sbastia County, but a relapse supervening, her physicians recommended her return to San Francisco. For a time her condition seemed to be critical, but she gradually gained strength, and her sudden collapse on Tuesday morning came therefore as a peculiarly painful shock.

Mrs. Herrin was the daughter of Judge and Mrs. Peter Van Clief. She was born in Sierra County in 1859. Her father was chief justice of the Supreme Court of California and her aged mother, who survives her, was in the house at the time of her death. Mrs. Herrin leaves three children, Kathryn, Alice, and William.

Mrs. Herrin was an influential and devoted, although never a prominent, figure in the benevolent life of the city. Delighting in a personal and unobtrusive charity, the natural charm of her unselfish disposition seemed to be accentuated in proportion to her own sufferings. Countless acts of kindly helpfulness have endeared her to many sections of the community and the sympathy that is extended to her family in their bereavement is unstinted and sincere.

The funeral took place from the residence on Broadway and Scott Street at 9:30 on Wednesday morning.

At the Hotels.

Among the recent registrations at the St. Francis are Mr. John T. Byrne, general passenger agent of the Santa Fé; Mr. William Pedrick, Jr., passenger agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad; Colonel E. A. Wall, of Salt Lake; Brigadier-General Philip Reade, and Mr. F. J. V. Schiff, United States Commissioner to the World's Fair at Tokio.

Among recent registrations at the Fairmont Hotel are Mr. Arthur Letts, Mr. Adolph Fleishman, Mr. Robert Wankowski, Mr. R. L. Follme, Mr. W. G. Schreiber, Mr. Thomas Foulkes, Mr. J. A. Maxfield, and Mr. Niles Pease, of Los Angeles; Admiral W. H. Whiting, Mrs. Whiting, Miss Marie Whiting, and Miss Magoon; Mr. Carter Harrison and Mr. Carter Harrison, Jr., of Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Bliss and Miss C. F. Barnes, Mrs. Gladys L. Lamberton, and Mrs. J. Park White, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Rogers and Miss Kathe Rogers, of Philadelphia; Judge Sepulveda, Mrs. and Miss Sepulveda, of Mexico City; Mrs. J. H. Hecht and Miss Frankenstein, of Boston; Mr. and Mrs. W. Boardman Reed, of Springfield, Mass.; Dr. Karl Reihl, of Munich; Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Stewart and Mrs. A. J. Lewtwaite, of Portland.

The Study of Languages.

Professor T. B. de Filippe, the well-known teacher of languages and author of Spanish and French text-books, has returned from abroad and opened his studio at 732 Franklin Street.

DR. ROBERT E. O'CONNELL, DR. GEORGE D. O'CONNELL, DENTISTS, Hastings Building, Post Street and Grant Avenue. Tel. Douglas 2733.

YOUR HAND

is the only one that can unlock your box in our Safe Deposit Vaults. Your valuables in one of our steel boxes can not be lost by theft or fire. For this protection $4.00 per year and up.

CROCKER SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS

CROCKER BUILDING Junction Post and Market, S. F.

Our reputation is back of every bottle we sell

Old Gilt Edge Whiskey

Rye or Bourbon

THE OCULARIUM
Henry Kahnt & Co.
OPTICIANS
PERFECT FITTING
EYEGLASSES
AT MODERATE PRICES
644 MARKET ST.
OPP. PALACE HOTEL
BRANCH 1399 VAN NESS AVE.

Hotel Rafael

San Rafael, Cal.

Open year around. Headquarters Automobile League. New and commodious garage. Fifty minutes from San Francisco. Complete change of climate. Tiburon or Sausalito Ferry. All modern conveniences.

F. N. Orpin, Proprietor.

Ray C. Ward Jas. W. Dean
Jas. K. Polk Geo. E. Billings

GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.

ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE EFFECTED

312 California Street. Phone Douglas 2283
San Francisco, Cal.

Byron Hot Springs

The waters cure rheumatism—the environment is perfect—the hotel comfortable and supplied with an unexcelled table. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, ground floor, James Flood Building; Peck-Judab Co., 789 Market St., or address hotel.

MT. TAMALPAIS
AND MUIR WOODS
VIA SAUSALITO FERRY
FOOT OF MARKET ST.
LEGAL HOLIDAYS—SUNDAY TIME

Lv. San Francisco		Lv. Muir Woods		Lv. Tamalpais
WEEK DAY	SUN-DAY	WEEK DAY	SUN-DAY	WEEK DAY	SUN-DAY
9:45 A.	*7:15 A.	1:40 P.	10:40 A.	7:25 A.	9:28 A.
*8:15 A.	2:40 P.	12:16 P.	1:40 P.	11:10 A.	1:40 P.
1:45 P.	*9:15 A.	4:45 P.	1:40 P.	4:14 P.	12:16 P.
SATUR. DAY	9:45 A.	2:45 P.	SATUR. DAY	1:40 P.	3:10 P.
Tamalpais only	12:45 A.	5:45 P.	SATUR. DAY	4:40 P.	6:40 P.
	3:45 P.	* Tamalpais only		9:50 P.	8:15 P.
	14:45 P.	* Muir Woods only

TICKET OFFICE AT SAUSALITO FERRY

EDUCATIONAL

IRVING INSTITUTE Boarding and Day School for Girls

2126 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO. Music, languages, art, elocution. Kindergarten, primary, grammar, high school, and advanced grades. Accredited by the universities. Twenty-ninth year. Non-sectarian. Pupils admitted at any time. New term opens Monday, August 3.

MISS ELLA M. PINKHAM, Principal.

CALIFORNIA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

Irving Institute Building Full corps of teachers in every department. Send for catalogue. HERMANN GENSS, President.

THE HAMLIN SCHOOL

A Boarding and Day School for Girls Miss Hamlin announces the reopening of the school August 10. It is accredited by the California Universities and by Eastern colleges. Advanced courses of study are offered to High School graduates and to those who have left school, with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to a school diploma.

Classes in Instrumental and Vocal Music and in Drawing and Painting are formed and facilities are given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basket Ball, etc. For particulars address MISS HAMLIN, 2230 Pacific Ave., San Francisco.

Oakland Conservatory of Music

1170 Madison Street, Oakland, Cal.

The largest, oldest established, and most thoroughly equipped school of genuine musical instruction on the Pacific Coast.

Conducted on the lines of the most noted European and Eastern schools. Full prospectus on application.

Director, ADOLF GREGORY.

PENNSYLVANIA, Ogontz School P. O. OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES

Twenty minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. The late Mr. Jay Cooke's fine property. Miss SYLVIA J. EASTMAN, Miss ABBY A. SUTHERLAND, Principals.

CASTILLEJA SCHOOL

Palo Alto, California

Home and day school for girls. University preparatory. Outdoor physical training a special feature. Opens August 24. Illustrated catalogue. MISS MARY I. LOCKEY, A. B., Principal

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

"Ever experience a stage-robber?" "Once I asked a chorus girl to lunch."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

"How was the table at your summer resort?" "Splendid! Never had such canned goods in my life!"—Life.

First Visitor—What a singular chin the old boy has? Second Visitor—Singular! I should call it plural.—The Toller.

"We lost a wheel." "How did you get home?" "One of the girls let us take her Merry Widow hat."—Boston Traveler.

Dyer—I don't think I will take a vacation this year. Ryer—Why not? Dyer—I still owe the doctor for fixing me up after last year's.—Puck.

"You know the poet says a man must be either the hammer or the anvil." "Lots of fellows I know are more like the bellows."—Boston Transcript.

Gushing Young Woman (to coronet of garden party)—Oh, Sir James, I hear you have an acetylene plant, and I simply adore tropical flowers!—Punch.

Jack—The fortune teller said I would marry a blonde. Belle—Did she say how soon? Jack—In six months. Belle (cayly)—I can easily be a blonde by that time, Jack.—Sketch.

Politician—Congratulate me, my dear, I've won the nomination. His Wife (in surprise)—Honestly? Politician—Now what in thunder did you want to bring up that point for?—The Globe.

D'Aubist—Do you think my battle picture expresses, as I have meant it to, all the poignant horrors of war? Krittick—Oh, yes; it's the awfulest thing I ever saw.—Cleveland Leader.

Benevolent Old Gentleman—I am sorry, Johnny, to see you have a black eye. Promising Youth—You go home and feel sorry for your own little boy—he's got two!—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"She's got a future." "Can she act?" "No, but she can work her eyes better than any lady in the business, and as for wearing swell clothes—gee! she couldn't do better if she was twins."—Life.

Hiron Greene—What did your sister say when you told her I was going to make a speech in the town hall tonight? Willie—She didn't say nothin'; she just laughed till she had hysterics!—Stray Stories.

Trotter (who has been abroad)—So Maud and Charlie finally married? Miss Homer—Yes. Trotter—I suppose they are happy? Miss Homer—Undoubtedly; they each married some one else.—Chicago Daily News.

"There goes a man who once offered to make me independently rich." "But he didn't appear to know you. At least he gave you no sign of recognition." "You see, I refused to buy the stock."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Gatemon (at the musical comedy)—Don't you want to come back? Castleton—No. Gatemon—Well, take this pass check, anyway. You can hand it to some chap on the outside. Castleton—My dear fellow, I haven't an enemy in the world.—Life.

Sossenach Humorist (amusing himself at expense of Highland Caddie)—Hoots, ye ken. ma wee bit laddie, yon was nae so muckle had a shot the noo. What think ye? The Bit Loddie—Eh! Ah'm thinken ye'll learn Scotch quicker'n ye'll ever learn gouf.—Punch.

Phatboy—Why did you have such an ugly-looking cur as that stuffed? Binks (with emotion)—That dog saved my life. Phatboy—Well, well! How? Binks—When we got back from our wedding tour my wife baked a cake for me, and the dog ate it.—Half-Holiday.

Mrs. Casey on Philosophy.

Philosopher Dooley of Chicago, discovered and photographed by Peter Finley Dunne, has a soul-mate in New York, found and credibly reported by one of the bright young men on the staff of the New York Sun's city editor. Mrs. Casey may become Mrs. Dooley later, but at present she sells fruit near the entrance to the Brooklyn Bridge and discourses on this, that, and the other to the friendly newspaperman. Witness this evidence of affinity with the sage of Archey Road:

If you wud be happy know what ye want to do that won't get ye into jail and do it. No philosopher ever went to jail. He stopped being a philosopher before he got there.

Ye may have to fight for it. All right. The man—or leddy—who wouldn't fight for what he wants doesn't deserve to get what he wants.

Ye'll hear people widout our learning blaming men for being stingy. Ye might as well blame thim for having blue eyes or a black beard. Wud ye say that blue eyes was a bad habit? Ye might if ye was foolish. Philosophy is a grreat thing. If I didn't have it there's many a man I'd give a clout on the jaw for being this or being that whin I might as well give him the back of me hand for his onpleasant habit of having a nose that was longer than me own.

Politics is the same. Whin I was young and ignorant and Casey was what my Michael is now—young and handsome and full of polytics—I'd fight for his polytics as quick as I'd take a cup of tea wid a frind, and enjoy it as much. 'Twas worriting work at that, for Casey was an independent; he'd be all for the parthy what wud give him the most for to spind in his precinct. "And why not, darlint?" he'd say to me. "If there's anny difference betune the two except which will do the most for ye I've niver found it out." So wan eliction I'd be fighting the leddy on the flure above and taking tea wid the wan on the flure below, and the next eliction 'twud he the other way 'round. In that way I learnt the strent of the tea and the ar'rm of all me neighbors.

My Michael is not the same. He's a sthrong parthy man. 'Tis the principle of the thing that gets him. Whin he was eighteen our distrikt leader hacked him for to lick a Coenties Slip bully. Whin they tuk the bully to Gouverneur Hospital the leader give Michael the money he'd won on him, and be says, "What's ye're polytics, Casey?"

"What's yours?" say Michael. "I'm for Joodge Par-rker," says the leader. "So am I," says Michael; "who is he and what's he running for and on what ticket?" says Michael, and he's never changed his polytics since.

I love him for sticking to his principles, but I cud relish having him get some of the good things what come to the precinct captain on the other side. There's a la-ad my Michael cud put out wid one punch, but he gets invitations from his distrikt leader to grub at wan of thim swell snares on Broadway, where, as Michael says, ye sit down to a hundred dollars' worth of food and a thousand dollars' worth of booze, wid a band playing on one side of ye and a dozen dolls from the leading t'eatres on the other side, eating lobsters wid Long Acre cutups, while the rayporters ar'e going the rounds finding out who is among those prisint and who has got her divorce and who has been indicted for racetrack gambling and all the other things what's going on in society.

The Last Subdivision of Hayward Park

(SAN MATEO)

Consisting of 150 Lots
IS NOW ON SALE

This work has been done:
Streets are graded and macadamized.
Sewers are laid.
Water mains are laid.
Gas mains are laid.
Sidewalks and curbs are laid.
Electric-light poles are in place.
And wires installed.
Fire hydrants are in place.
Palms and shade trees have been planted.
This work has been done.

The Peninsula Hotel is in the centre of Hayward Park.
Visit the tract and see for yourself.

Fine double frontage lots from $650 up; terms only 1-5 cash, balance monthly

On October 1 the present schedule of prices will be withdrawn and the prices of all lots then remaining unsold will be raised.

GO TO SAN MATEO SUNDAY

Our agent is there

FRANK S. GRUMMON, 310 Second Ave., San Mateo

BALDWIN & HOWELL

318-324 Kearny Street

John F. Forbes

Certified Public Accountant

601 KOHL BUILDING

SAN FRANCISCO

Mild, Rich and Satisfying

Sanchez y Haya

Clear Havana Cigars

Factory No. 1 Tampa, Fla.

Tillmann & Bendel
Pacific Slope Distributors

Toyo Kisen Kaisha
(ORIENTAL S. S. CO.)

S. S. Tenyo Maru.....Friday, Sept. 25, 1908
S. S. Nippon Maru (via Manila).....
.....Tuesday, Oct. 20, 1908
S. S. Hongkong Maru...Tuesday, Nov. 17, 1908

Steamers sail from company's piers, Nos. 42-44, near foot of Second Street, 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Hiogo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.

Round-trip tickets at reduced rates.
For freight and passage apply at office, 240 James Flood Building. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

36th YEAR PHONE DOUGLAS 200

SCHMIDT LITHOGRAPH CO.
LABELS
CARTONS ETC

SECOND AND BRYANT STS. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. SAN FRANCISCO, LOS ANGELES, PORTLAND, SEATTLE.

Mr. Publisher:

Does it interest you to know that ALL the mechanical work on THE ARGONAUT is done by us? Fact.

WILLIAMS PRINTING CO.,
Phone, Douglas 2905. 406 Sutter Street

Does Not Sting the Tongue

BLASKOWER'S SMOKING MIXTURE

M. BLASKOWER,
201 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

A New Pipe Mixture

OF EXCEPTIONAL MERIT
MILD SWEET SMOKE

2 oz. 25 cts. 4 oz. 50 cts.

M. BLASKOWER

201 Montgomery St. 1117 Van Ness Av.

D. N. & E. WALTER & CO

ORIENTAL RUG SALE.

ORIENTAL RUG SALE.

Continuation of our 50th Anniversary Sale—this week

ORIENTAL RUGS

The values we are offering are SO REMARKABLE that we can not send rugs on approval or make exchanges during this sale.

VAN NESS & SACRAMENTO.

The Argonaut.

OL. LXIII. No. 1644.

SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 26, 1908.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10 payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies, 10 cents. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the territory supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to The Argonaut Publishing Company.

Entered at the San Francisco postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breems Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue, in Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opéra. In New York, at Brenneke, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company, Washington, at F and Thirteenth Streets. The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, Foster & O'Rear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by news agents, and by the Denison News Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains. Published at 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal. Telephone, Kearny 5895.

THIRTY-SECOND YEAR

FRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: The Boy Detective—California and a New Tariff—A Political Phenomenon—Politics in Canada—A Better Use for Goat Island—Bigotry in England—The Devil—Editorial Notes	193-196
PAIGN TOPICS	196
BARRIE SCORES AGAIN: "What Every Woman Knows" Is Received in London with Delighted Enthusiasm	197
FAVORITES: "The Wreck of the Pocahontas," by Celia Thaxter	197
VIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All over the World.	197
VISITORS AT FORT VIGILANT: XXXII. By Jerome A. Hart.	198
ASSACHUSETTS STORY: Henry Longan Stuart Writes a Dramatic Novel and Calls It "Weeping Cross"	198
MAGISTRATE'S NEW WINTER COAT. Translated for the Argonaut by Hanna Larsen from the Danish of Peter Nansen.	200
US AND AUTHORS. By Sidney G. P. Coryn.	201
PUBLICATIONS	201
RARY NOTES: Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.	202
R AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.	202
IA: Melodrama—Ballad Opera. By Josephine Hart Phelps	203
TY FAIR	204
YETTES: Grave and Gay. Epigrammatic and Otherwise	205
MERRY MUSE.	205
ONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy.	206-207
ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day.	208

The Boy Detective.

A boy of nineteen, named Oliver, described as a special agent attached to the district attorney's office, has been adjudged as guilty of contempt of court for his offense being an attempt to interview two jurors temporarily passed in the Ruef case. It is stated that Oliver was acting under instructions from a man named Schindler, who gave him the names of the jurors and instructed him to "make some inquiries." He did not tell Oliver not to speak to the jurors themselves, as he "understood that." It seems that Oliver understood nothing of the sort, as he proceeded to call upon the men and to question them. It is thought that there was only one offense in the case of the prosecution, and that was to be found in the fact that there will be no disposition to be unduly harsh upon Oliver himself, but the incident is useful as throwing upon the reckless and conscienceless procedure of the district attorney marked the course of the prosecution almost at its beginning. Detective Burns has dismissed Oliver from his service—he could hardly do so with the statement that he does not hold the boy culpable except for his inexperience. But why was a boy employed upon such work as this without warning or presumptive knowledge of the law? Considering the salary that Mr. Burns receives from the taxpayers of San Francisco, presumably for doing this very work of tracking and vivisection prospective jurors, it seems strange that he can not supervise the young folks to whom his duties are delegated. There is an old legal maxim that seems appropriate to the case. It is, Qui facit per alium facit per se. Perhaps the district attorney can translate this for Mr. Burns, although it may be doubted.

The prosecution is of course reaping where it has sown. It is filled with a desperate alarm lest it shall be unable to convict even Ruef, and if it can not convict Ruef, what hope can it have elsewhere? It knows that there is no honest man in San Francisco who is not saturated with distrust of its every move and its every word, and this accounts for the feverish suspicion that it directs against each name on the venire list. The prosecution is, in other words, in the precise position predicted for it by the Argonaut. It gave immunity to criminals of its own arbitrary choosing. It played fast and loose with the chief criminal of them all, and now it looks as though it could neither convict him nor any one else.

The display of venomous acerbity in the court on Tuesday shows the pass to which both prosecution and defense in the Ruef case have come. If we were not painfully accustomed to such indecent collisions between the legal bravos upon either side, we could hardly believe that a court of justice could be so degraded or that public time could be so discreditably squandered. First we have the complaint of a jurymen that his mind has been so affected by the intolerable shadowing of prosecution detectives that he can no longer approach his duties without prejudice, and then we have a furious quarrel between Messrs. Heney and Ach in which personal insults, taunts, and recriminations are exchanged with a power of glib abuse better fitted to the atmosphere of a bar-room than a court of justice. If the effect of these abominable scenes was confined to the people immediately responsible, it would be bad enough. But it is not so confined. It is a discredit to San Francisco and a slur upon the administration of justice.

California and a New Tariff.

Excellent advice is offered by Congressman Needham to the general committee on tariff revision for California. Mr. Needham speaks from intimate personal knowledge of his subject and also by authority as a member of the ways and means committee of Congress, before whom the petition on behalf of Californian products and industries must be presented. In his address to the committee the congressman advised that the committee's report should deal primarily with those industries in which California is preëminent or in which this State possesses a virtual monopoly. He explained that this course of action was most important unless it was the intention of the committee to extend its effort to include all the industries that will be subjected to scrutiny in the impending investigation looking to a revision of the tariff. The purpose of Californians should be directed upon the interests of Californian production, and the main effort should be concentrated on those products and manufactures that are exclusively Californian.

A tariff revision controversy is one of the most selfish that may be introduced in parliamentary debate. When a demand arises in any country for a revision of the tariff those who utter the demand are thinking of their own interests wholly. Every tariff revisionist is only eager to revise his neighbor's tariff—his own is always low enough or, possibly, altogether too low. This distinction is like that which Bishop Warburton, a famous English prelate of the eighteenth century, made in his definition of orthodoxy and heterodoxy—

"orthodoxy," said the bishop, "is my doxy; heterodoxy is the other man's doxy."

In consequence of this selfish attitude any effort to revise the existing tariff is immediately provocative of a universal conflict, offensive and defensive. It is generally conceded that the tariff ought to be revised, but nobody is willing to submit to an impartial apportionment of the protective duties based upon the axiomatic economical proposition that the protection shall confer the greatest good upon the greatest number. The manufacturer insists that his product shall be protected under the highest possible tariff, because a larger portion of the accruing profit is thereby distributed among the men employed by him in this particular production. As consumers, these men desire a low tariff on those things which they consume; but the manufacturer meets this argument with the counter claim that a high tariff on his product enables him to pay wages that will purchase whatever the laborer may desire, with less strain upon his financial resources than would ensue if the cost of the thing coveted and the amount of wages were both lowered by the tariff. This manufacturer, however, is quite willing, if a tariff revision is absolutely necessary, that it shall be applied to the business of any other manufacturer.

Sections are in the same attitude towards each other. The wool-growing States insist that their industry must be protected or the States will lapse into bankruptcy; the cotton-growing States urge the same plea; but if the best interests of the whole country demand a lower tariff the wool-growers will not object if it is based on the cotton-growers, and the cotton-growers will threaten another section of the country if it is clipped somewhat of their golden fleece. The consumer who is not peculiarly interested in either wool or cotton, cries a plague of both houses and demands that his tweeds made in New Jersey shall be as cheap as the shoddy he is now compelled to wear, and that his wife's cotton skirts shall not cost as much as real Irish linen.

It is clear, therefore, that the rule of national economic reform is everybody for himself and revision take the hindmost. California is peculiarly open to attack from any or all interests that may be threatened by tariff revision. California is a garden and an orchard rather than a factory. Here the fruits of the earth grow to perfection in a soil especially adapted for their cultivation, nurtured by a climate that insures a profitable return in spite of adverse expense, provided the competition of inferior foreign products is kept within reasonable bounds by a just protective tariff. But the very circumstances that have contributed to set California apart from the rest of the world in the production of fruit, wine, every variety of nuts, better olives and better olive oil than can be imported from Syria or the Mediterranean; the fact that our oranges are superior to those of France and Italy, our lemons of finer flavor than those of Spain, our citrus fruits of every variety more desired in the markets than those of any other country, our honey of better quality than that of Hymettus—all these singular advantages over other lands are so many distinct targets for envy and shining marks for the shafts of self-interest. If it shall be decided that one of two industries must be "sacrificed" to appease the demand for a lower tariff, we may be sure that the one least harmful to the interests of the greater number will be offered on the smoldering altar of the tariff-tinkering goddess, whoever she may be—a parsimonious, close-fisted, thrift-haunted jade, no doubt. California is in this category, and it behooves us to begin early in the work of defending our solitary position. We must go before the ways and means committee of Congress prepared to show not only that California is dependent upon her special industries, but also that unless these industries are fully protected an important branch of American commerce will suffer irreparable damage, and in that degree inflicting injury upon the general commerce of the nation. Our representative before the committee on ways and means must be subtle, wise, and so well informed upon the minutest details of his subject that none of those representing adverse interests will be able to trip him or belittle the cause in which he appears. He must keep always in mind that the questions he will be called upon to answer are not inspired wholly by a desire to arrive at the truth, but may be framed merely to procure evidence that our interests are of inferior importance to others undergoing the same process of investigation. If this method of attack is successful, the result will serve the double purpose of injuring California's most valuable industries and at the same time assisting to save less important but wider spread interests.

There are tricks in every trade, but in none is trickery more prevalent than in politics, and in none is the game played with less scruple than in revising a tariff wherein so many personal advantages are to be gained or lost, not only by those financially concerned in the matter, but by those whose political ambitions are intimately involved. It is a very serious emergency that confronts us, and it will require our best statesmanship to preserve what we have gained at the cost of so much labor, expense, and persistent application upon the industrial and scientific problems of our productive resources.

A Political Phenomenon.

Speculation as to the reason why the current campaign is "apathetic" occupies much of the thought of publicists, politicians, statesmen, and citizens generally who are interested in public affairs. The "quietude" of preëlection conditions, the absence of "burning issues," the mildness of the campaign oratory, and the lack of editorial vehemence, all contribute to the expression of a phenomenon rare in American politics. So calm and placid is the general trend of the event that the noise of Mr. Hearst in vociferous denunciation of Mr. Bryan is quite perceptible. What is the matter with the shouting captains and the spellbinders and the howling dervishes of political campaigns? Why do the orators of the parties go about merely arguing, sometimes "conceding," treating their opponents with courtesy, and so frequently declaring their willingness to leave the final verdict to the discretion and best judgment of the people?

It has been suggested that one reason why the disturbers of the national peace are not so loud in their wail this year is because the "campaign contributions" have been cut to the actual necessities of the presidential canvass. The laws governing these contributions and compelling absolute publicity of every expense contracted by the campaign committees are not only very strict, but they have forced the candidates and their managers to scan closely the source of every dollar contributed to their campaign funds. It would be stretching the meaning of the phrase, perhaps, far beyond the intention of its application in this instance, to say that the candidates and their managers had "awakened to a moral consciousness of the turpitude of venal assistance from interested sources"; but there is not the slightest doubt that money in unlimited amounts poured into a political campaign has much to do with the clamor thereof. Orators are loud in their acclaim or vehement in their oratory in proportion to the salary they receive; newspapers may not be directly influenced by the same motive, but indirectly they are stirred to strenuous effort by the vociferation of the orators; thence it is easy to excite the passions of the populace. It is possible that this theory of the political "apathy" now prevalent in this campaign is a partial explanation of the phenomenon. It may be considered a surface indication at least.

Going a little deeper, is it not possible that the people themselves are largely responsible for the safety, the sanity, and the conservatism of the campaign up to this point? The republic has existed almost a century and a half. In that time the citizens should have gained a certain amount of wisdom from their experience in self-government. They should have learned in that time to think for themselves. Most of them are fairly intelligent, made so by education in the public schools, where the history of the nation is taught with more or less attention to detail and some regard for accuracy. Why is it not reasonable to suppose that these citizens are competent to digest the paramount issues of a political campaign and to resolve its complexities for themselves?—not as thoroughly, perhaps, nor as logically as they could be formulated and resolved by the orators and the editors, but sufficiently to lay the foundation of a firm conviction in the minds of every voter? It is possible that this view of the matter may argue a larger discretion and a more intelligent apprehension in the masses of the commonwealth than some cynical observers of popular prejudice will be willing to admit; but it must be taken into consideration that even the densest mentality of a heterogeneous citizenship must have gained some knowledge of the fatuity of much of the discussion indulged in preceding campaigns; that even the most superficial minds must have comprehended much of the inutility, the factitious character, and the small purpose of a vast amount of the politics offered by the conventions and presented by the orators in previous contests. Surely it is not difficult to distinguish fustian from cloth of gold, and the difference between leather and prunella is obvious enough.

Furthermore, why not ascribe the apparent indifference of the masses of the people to the "issues" presented in the platforms and formulated by the orators and editors, to the circumstance that everybody at this time is attending strictly to his own affairs. The voters may be minding their own business and giving but a cursory attention to the business of the politicians. It is a season succeeding a somewhat disquieting period of financial stringency, and the majority of the citizens are repairing leaks and cracks in their bank accounts and safe-deposit boxes—mending their fences, as the statesmen would phrase it. Politics is a recreation with many persons; and these are probably attending to business rather than pleasure.

Finally, why not state it simply and succinctly, thus: Everybody has decided how he shall vote. Nobody is alarmed as to the outcome of the election. Only one of two men can be elected—Mr. Taft or Mr. Bryan. Neither of these candidates can throw the ship of state on the reefs of administrative disaster. If Mr. Taft is elected he will be supported by the Republican majority in Congress, and the people are as well satisfied with the conduct and record of the Republican party as they have ever been with the record and administration of any party. If Mr. Taft is elected there is no present danger to be apprehended. If Mr. Bryan is elected he will be opposed by a Republican majority in Congress. If he is inclined to force whimsical, fantastic, and impractical innovations upon the government by way of economic and political experiment, he will be promptly checked. Therefore, through the mass of voters who will finally decide the question of the presidency, there is a certain disposition toward indifference—the country will be governed as heretofore; by the people and for the people, who will make it plainly manifest to those in temporary power whether the administration of affairs is consonant with the popular idea or not. Heated and rancorous discussion of political issues before an election is little better than so much sound and fury; it is in the calm and deliberative aftertime that the processes of national government are determined.

Politics in Canada.

Without in any way trenching upon the domain of party politics in Canada, it is permissible to wish Sir Wilfrid Laurier all possible success in the electoral campaign that he has just begun near Montreal. His opening speech was made a few days ago at the little town of Sorel, on the St. Lawrence, palpitating with political excitement and resplendent with the flags of old France, of England, and of the United States. The mingling of the flags was in its way typical of the power exercised by the prime minister of Canada, a power emanating quite as much from tact and courtesy as from intellectual ability. The thickly populated province of Quebec is intensely French in language, religion, and tradition. Allegiance to the English flag is an affair of the head, but the tri-color of France calls forth a passionate devotion that is as strong now as ever it was. But when we have once left Quebec behind us we find a sturdy Anglo-Saxon element that has been slowly filling the vast plains of Manitoba and the Northwest territories and finding its way to the Pacific Coast, a vigorous pioneer element that is the very antithesis of the old-world and conservative peoples of the French stock. No ordinary ability was needed to govern the east and the west, to allow the Frenchman to keep his traditions unviolated while giving free scope to the Anglo-Saxon dominance of the west. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has done this and he has done it with conspicuous success. The habitants of the east feel that they are governed by a good Frenchman and that their religion and their sentiments are safe at his hands, while the people of the west have never entertained even a fleeting suspicion that the integrity of the dominion is endangered by its prime minister or that Sir Wilfrid Laurier has ever swerved in his duty to the country as a whole. That is no small feat and it speaks volumes for a political genius too common nowadays. Sir Wilfrid's perfect oratory in both languages has of course helped him much. What has helped him still more is his unflinching kindness and his freedom from every taint of bitterness. He is a born ruler because he has a genuine affection for all sorts and conditions of men.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has been prime minister since 1897. That is to say, he has twice appealed to the electorate with success and his friends entertain no doubt that he will now do so for the third time. Although he has only now fired his first gun in the campaign, the opposition have been in the field for weeks. They have said all that they have to say over and over again and the people are just at that point of weariness when a new voice comes as a relief. Laurier will of course have things all his own way in Quebec, but the great fight will come in Ontario, where the English element is very strong. But he has a chance even in Ontario. The opposition to his scheme of a new transcontinental railway to run north of the Canadian Pacific line has been largely silenced by recent events. The Canadian Pacific has been in serious trouble. The line was first paralyzed by a great labor strike and then dislocated by washouts the north of Lake Superior. All through traffic has been made a wide detour southward by Sault Ste. Marie with consequent delay and congestion. The new line would have saved all this, and this is evident even to those who were most hotly opposed to a tapping of the country resources.

Except for the personality of Sir Wilfrid Laurier the Canadian campaign will be a dull one. There is in fact, nothing much to talk about. Prosperity has been continuous throughout the country, a cool patriotism has animated the races and of scandals have been none. The prime minister says he is confident to win because there is no reason why he should be turned out. And he seems to be right.

A Better Use for Goat Island.

When Greater San Francisco is an accomplished fact and not a controversial theory; when compromise, concession, and a public spirit superior to provincial ideas of things and the village notion of a metropolis, have combined to create a city on this Far Western verge worthy of its name, then, perhaps, something will be done to clear the barren waste now known as Goat Island hummock in the bay lies nearly midway between San Francisco and the Alameda shore. It is a part of the national domain of the government. It is absolutely necessary to the government, and is used as a lighthouse station, a cable crossing, a wireless graph outpost, and a site for a naval school. It is not necessary to remove any of these governmental appliances if the island were ceded to the State and placed under the control of the State Harbor Commissioners to be utilized as a base for docks and wharves, a ferry landing, and a great union depot for the continental railroads that are centering at this point. If the national government should deem it advisable or impractical to enter upon joint occupancy of the island with the State, the government settlements on Angel Island, where there is great water and where the facilities for conducting the government business are quite as adequate and convenient as they are in their present location. If it is urged that emergencies may demand the erection of batteries or heavy guns on Goat Island, it may be demonstrated that the State occupancy need not interfere with the government purpose in this regard, with the supposition that the harbor is not only well fortified but that other more advantageous places, but that further fortification may be effected where guns will do more than if they were emplaced on Goat Island. It could be argued that the government has abandoned the fortifications of Alcatraz, a far less post of defense than is afforded by the island in question.

On the other hand, it is obvious that Goat Island is essential to the full realization of the Greater San Francisco scheme. Especially necessary in the contingency is this island as a landing place for the transit system between the central city of San Francisco and its boroughs of Oakland, Alameda, Berkeley, and the back-lying country now contemplated as part of the great municipality. It will be the policy of the administration of the greater city to facilitate utmost extent the interurban traffic of a vast metropolitan area. If Goat Island is included in the territorial area of the greater city the actual ferry time between the business centre on this side of the bay and the Alameda shore will be reduced to five minutes. The passenger traffic on the other side will be handled by swift trains and electric cars, and the forty minutes now required to convey passengers from this city to Broadway in Oakland or to the residence districts of Berkeley and Alameda would be cut in half; continuous travel by this route for forty minutes ought to enable a passenger whose business is in San Francisco to reach his home in what is now Alameda County at a point as far east as Melrose or Elmhurst.

Another great advantage to the proposed greater city would be the actual conjunction of ship and car at wharves built to accommodate the deep-sea traffic of the Pacific. No time would be lost in lightering or transshipment across the bay. The trains would run directly into the Goat Island union depot and passengers and freight would be distributed without delay east or west.

These are the chief advantages that would accrue to the State ownership of Goat Island; but there are many others of minor importance, all complementary to the main purpose of concentration of traffic and its rapid movement throughout the proposed greater city.

The proposition is not a new one. It has been often broached at discussions of San Francisco's future and in the public press. But heretofore obstacles apparently insuperable have been thrown in the way of its accomplishment. There has been no united and determined effort to overcome these objections or even to ascertain whether they were irremediable. It would seem, however, that before we can undertake seriously the consolidation of the bay cities into a compact, homogeneous municipality, we ought to consider this very important detail of our intention. Goat Island is at present a stumbling block; it may be made a stepping-stone.

Bigotry in England.

The display of religious bigotry in England in connection with the Eucharistic Congress is baffling and discouraging to those who contend that the world does move forward and not backward. Here we have a number of high dignitaries of the Roman Catholic Church who propose to do nothing more revolutionary than to walk through the streets in orderly procession and bearing the symbols of their faith. An iniquitous law is invoked in order to prevent them from carrying out their project, and the prime minister, fearing an actual riot, is compelled to ask that the Host be not displayed in public. And all this in a country that professes to enjoy religious liberty and where the corymbant performances of the Salvation Army are viewed with toleration and sympathy.

Now the view that the Argonaut takes of this whole wretched business is perhaps a little different from that usually expressed. Among the responsible parties the prime minister made the gravest mistake when he wrote a private letter of deprecation and remonstrance to the organizers of the procession, a letter that he now declines to make public. That was the temporizing act of a man not ordinarily weak, but apparently frightened into weakness by a fanatical Protestant mob. What he should have done was to make an open declaration to the effect that a discreditable law had been invoked by a narrow and deplorable prejudice, but that the law having been invoked must be obeyed at all costs. He should then have pledged himself to further the repeal of the law at the earliest possible moment. Had Mr. Asquith followed such a course as this he would have secured the applause of the Catholics and of all good citizens, while administering a stern rebuke to the intolerance of their enemies. He would have prevented all chance of a riot, he would have vindicated the majesty of the law, and he would have advanced the cause of religious toleration. To ask privately that the law be kept as a favor to himself and to prevent a troublesome disturbance—for this seems to be the purport of his letter—was a singularly inept performance for a clear-headed statesman.

The only question for Mr. Asquith to determine was whether the law forbidding the public carrying of the Host was or was not obsolete. He might have answered the question in any way he wished, but he should have answered it publicly. If he decided that the law was obsolete like many old legal survivals, then he should have said so and proceeded to protect the procession by all necessary force. But if the law was not obsolete, then again he should have said so and courteously asked that it be observed until its repeal could be effected. To write a private letter was a sad piece of indiscretion.

The law, of course, is not obsolete. It dates no further back than 1829, when the Catholic Emancipation Act provides that no Catholic ecclesiastic shall exercise any of the rites of his religion except in churches or in private houses. Laws do not die of old age in seventy-nine years, and even so late as 1852 a proclamation was issued forbidding a Roman Catholic procession in the streets. A few days after this proclamation a procession of Catholic school children in Stockport did actually produce a riot in which several people were killed or injured, although neither vestments nor symbols were used. If it be held that these laws have become obsolete, what are we to say of the right of royal veto, for example, which has not been used for over two hundred years. No jurist would contend that the technical power has lapsed.

The law against Catholic processions would of course have been repealed long ago if attention had been called to it. It will certainly be repealed now, thanks to the threats of the narrow-brained fanatics who invoked it in order to humiliate the Catholics and who have succeeded only in humiliating themselves. But it is disconcerting to find that there are so many of them in existence, and we can only wonder what chance there is for such schemes as international arbitration while different brands of Christians in the same country persist in "hating each other for the love of God."

The Devil.

On the night of October 23 (note the day), 1538, Dr. Johann Faust was carried off by the devil. The account of his ending is scarcely less circumstantial than that of his life prior to the final digression. Biographers of the time say that he was born in Würtemberg, that he grew up to become a magician, astrologer, and soothsayer, and that his reputation for loose living was earned by assiduous practice. A hundred years earlier another Johann Faust, or Fust, also German, was reputed to have intimate acquaintance with the devil, though it was discovered later that his black magic was performed with the aid of a printer's cub and the first printing press. In after years it was believed that the Shylockian methods by which he gained possession of poor old Gutenberg's invention were more devilish than any other of his arts. Of this earlier Faust there are positive records as well as apocryphal stories of dark doings.

Legends of Dr. Faust made up a book sold at Frankfurt-on-the-Main fifty years after he had been separated from his habitat, and while the traditions were still plentiful. Copies of the work were carried to England and new versions began to appear immediately. It seems to be a fact, more or less peculiar, that thoughts of the devil are prolific breeders. Christopher Marlowe founded his second play, "The Tragedy of Dr. Faustus," on the German book and its brood of translations and plagiarisms, and the work on the stage achieved instant success and inspired a flutter of imitations. In one form or another, verse or prose, story or drama, the legendary history of the German wonder-worker appeared in France, Spain, Italy, Poland, and Holland. As the protagonists of this first world-play, Faust and the devil were raised to an eminence of regard upon which they reappear at intervals. Faust, the seeker of delights beyond knowledge and wisdom; the devil, a cunning and complaisant aid for a consideration not to be waived.

Marlowe's play and many of its successors were tragedies, but the impressiveness of the stage spectacles lessened with repetition. Faust and his compelling assistant became familiar, and the inevitable resulted. From tragedy they dropped to farce, and even to pantomime. There was really little of mystery about them, little to inspire the delightful thrills of terror, outside of the suggestive direction taken in the final disappearance. It was easy to laugh at the play and the actors when close acquaintance dispelled the illusions. It was quite as easy to make Faust a pantaloon and the devil a harlequin. In fact, it was impossible to keep them above the ridicule and laughter of the multitude. From mirth-provoking buffoons for the entertainment of adults they descended to the indignity of marionettes and were shuffled and thumped on the narrow board of a curtained booth at fairs to amuse children.

Another century brought a reappearance in a more dignified form. Joost van Vondel in 1654 wrote his "Lucifer," and this may have given direction to the thoughts of Milton, who, six years blind, began "Paradise Lost" in 1658. The Lucifer of Milton, more than the Lucifer of Enoch and the Satan of Job, persisted and persists in theological writings. He is a more impressive figure, seemingly above demanding contracts signed in blood pledging the delivery of souls in payment for services performed. But the use of the character stirred recollection. Again the stage claimed him, and another, ever descending line of devils in disguise disported themselves along the way from comedy to musical burlesque.

Goethe's greatest poem, which harks back to the Faust of Würtemberg legend, was the work of many years. It was written and published in parts, the first appearing in 1790, the second in 1833. Gounod took an episode from the poem for the story of his opera, produced in Paris in 1859, and it is still one of the popular offerings of the grand opera stage. The Mephistopheles of the opera is much better known than the Mephistopheles of the poem, and he is gross and obvious or lean and subtle as operatic bassos differ in physical proportions. Lighter musical plays and serious prose dramas built upon the same legend and situations have been numerous.

Novelists have but seldom utilized the mediæval machinery and suggestions of the black-art master. Wilhelm Hauff, a German fictionist, published "The Memoirs of Satan" in 1825, in which was presented a mysterious and malevolent tempter in human form, whose satisfaction was apparent when he had coaxed a pair of lovers on to ruin. Ferenc Molnar, a Hungarian playwright, now has taken the same plot for a drama, and his work is not only sensationally successful in Europe, but, having been translated, adapted, and transplanted in America, is already being offered in playhouses throughout the country. Molnar's devil is malignant but well mannered, sly as Joey Bagstock and almost as humorous, with wit and satire. He will differentiate mainly, as does the older Mephistopheles, by reason of the varying capacity of his impersonators.

Again, however, is his playhouse descent rapid and inevitable. Tabloid preparations of Molnar's play are to be seen in the vaudeville houses and moving picture shows. Almost before he awakens the interest of amusement seekers in the orchestra circle of high-priced theatres he will become the object of derision in the cent-a-minute shows of the penny arcades. Poor old devil! His day as a wonder-worker, tangible and familiar, even with red fire and star trap exit, is over. He is a grand opera figure now or nothing. Yet the seven deadly sins persist.

Editorial Notes.

Those who suppose that France has fully recovered from the anti-Dreyfus mania would do well to mark, learn, and inwardly digest the verdict of "not guilty" pronounced by the Paris court that tried the man who shot Dreyfus on the occasion of Zola's funeral in the Pantheon. This man Gregori admits that he shot Dreyfus and glories in it. Every one present saw him do it and no one pretends to deny that he did it. Indeed, his only defense is that he shot at Dreyfusism and not at Dreyfus, which is the sort of plea we should expect to find in "Alice in Wonderland" or in a Gilbert and Sullivan comic opera. But yet this curious lunatic is "not guilty," although he says he is guilty. The heads of these jurymen ought to be phrenologically examined in the interests of science.

It may be doubted if the welcome given by Australia to the American fleet has any of the profound political significance that some people are anxious to attach to it. It was a spontaneous ebullition of feeling at the meeting of neighbors who speak the same language, and who suddenly realize that they ought to see and know a great deal more of each other. Perhaps the sight of the American fleet was a reminder to Australians that they themselves might "go and do likewise" and develop themselves into an independent power. Certainly England would have no objection, as there are practically no ties between Australia and the mother country except a willingness on the part of Australia to be protected by England—at England's sole expense.

Probably history can show us nothing comparable to the demonstration called forth by the eightieth birthday of Count Tolstoy—or quite so inexplicable. The press of the whole world has given itself up to biography, laudation, stricture, and rebuke. The aged author himself received many thousands of congratulatory telegrams from all parts of civilization, while the Aus-sian government has been perplexed and almost stultified by the frenzied adulation of the people and by their determination to express their hero-worship in ways that might easily become dangerous. How can we account for it? Tolstoy is of course eminent as an author, but others have been more eminent and less appreciated. He is the advocate—perhaps the inventor—of a philosophy that would extinguish humanity within a generation. He teaches a system of personal conduct impossible to the best and the wisest among us and with that system his own life is avowedly in discord. He is inconsistent, illogical, unpractical, but he is followed and revered as though he were the harbinger of a new dispensation. Perhaps the environment rather than the man himself must contain the solution of the problem, and this without any failure to recognize a personal heroism and a splendid devotion that must also play their parts in the creation of this unprecedented display of a popular tribute.

CAMPAIGN TOPICS.

Colonel Henry Watterson seems to be the only one inclined to throw doubt upon the authenticity of the now celebrated Cleveland letter, but isolation has no terrors for Colonel Watterson—quite the contrary. He invites us to suspend our judgment until we know more about a document that, he says, was hawked among the metropolitan newspapers at a very low price before it found a purchaser. The colonel thinks that there are internal evidences that it is spurious, but then it is precisely upon its internal evidences that most people think it to be genuine. He shakes his head portentously because there is no "authorized statement" from Mrs. Cleveland, but it is hard to see why Mrs. Cleveland should issue such a statement when Colonel Watterson himself is the only one who seems to need it. Mr. Cleveland, we are told, was not used to "slop over" as in the reference to Mr. Taft where he says "his high ideals of honesty and justice are valuable and commendatory." Even in the staid and deliberative atmosphere of Louisville this can hardly be called slopping over, but it is strange that the colonel did not call attention to the apparent misuse of the word "commendatory." Surely the word should have been "commendable"—a strange error on the part of a man whose literary accuracy was sometimes even labored and ponderous.

The grim means of execution, the guillotine, which stands rusting in France today for want of employment, has had an interesting and, needless to say, tragic history. The machine in its perfected form was the invention of Dr. Guillotin, who was born in 1728 and some fifty years later was elected a member of the constituent assembly. He was much interested in getting the government to adopt a new form of execution and about three years after he entered the assembly succeeded in gaining his point. Prior to this, decapitation was a form of execution by which only the people of rank were permitted to sever their connections with this mundane sphere, the common people being hanged by the neck until they were dead. Dr. Guillotin proposed that "in all cases of capital punishment it shall be of the same kind, and executed by means of a machine." Many stormy debates were indulged in in the assembly, and when the measure was passed nothing was said about the kind of instrument that should be used except the sword. It was not long, however, until the executioner, who was doing active work in those days, pointed out how inconvenient and expensive the sword method was, and then the assembly adopted a machine built along the lines suggested by Dr. Guillotin. In 1792 Paris saw the first execution by means of the guillotine, or Louisette, as it was then called. Later it took the name of its inventor. The criminal first executed by its means was a notorious highwayman by the name of Pelletier, and so successful was the decapitation that the government established similar machines in all the departments of France. It is popularly believed that Dr. Guillotin perished on the machine that he had persuaded the assembly to adopt, but as a matter of fact he died a natural death in 1814.

Cheese must have been a rather dear or scarce article of food in 1502, for it is recorded in the "blackbooks" of the Honorable Society of Lincoln's Inn that at Easter term, 1502, it was "agreed by the governors and benchers this term that if any one of the society shall hereafter cut cheese immoderately at the time of dinner or supper, or shall give cheese to any servant or to any other, or shall carry it away from the table at any time, he shall pay four pence for each offense. The butlers of the society shall present such defaulters weekly, under pain of expulsion from office."

Some English surgeons have received permission from the Egyptian government to make investigations among the mummies and other things in the Cairo museums in order that something may be learned of the almost prehistoric surgery. It is known that the early Egyptians were adepts in performing certain operations which are even now considered difficult.

There is no reason to deplore Mr. Taft's determination to go on a campaign tour and to give the electors an opportunity to make his personal acquaintance. Circumstances alter cases and front-porch oratory that a month or so ago seemed to be all that would be needed has now become inadequate. We are all of us ruled by sentiment and emotion, while personal magnetism counts for more than policies.

About a month ago Chairman Hitchcock assured the public that "it could be stated in a formal and official manner that Mr. Taft would make no speeches outside the city of Cincinnati during the campaign." Perhaps he had Mr. Taft's authority for that pronouncement and perhaps he hadn't. That it went somewhat against the grain is shown by Mr. Taft's own statement less than a week later that nothing pleased him more than "making at least one speech a day," although he doubted the wisdom of "hurried speeches from the rear end of a train."

But the train oratory has come at last. Mr. Taft has made something like a triumphal progress through Ohio, and we may judge of the severe inroad upon earlier resolutions by the news item to the effect that "Mr. Vorys pulled the candidate by his coat tails, while the crowd clung to his right hand and the conductor shouted 'all aboard!'"

Mr. Bryan's programme has been similarly modified. We were told that he would make "a few prepared speeches" and would then seek a dignified retirement. The gift of silence is not among Mr. Bryan's accomplishments, and therefore we are not surprised to find that old methods have once more prevailed and that voters will find it by no means easy to keep outside the range of his voice. The more conservative elements among the Republicans are inclined to regret Mr. Taft's activity. We are reminded that presidential candidates who have toured the country have always been defeated, while Garfield, Harrison, and McKinley, who stayed at home and confined themselves to front-porch oratory, were successful. Even Blaine's defeat, we are told, was indirectly due to his peregrinations. Burchard's fatal alliteration would probably never have seen the light if Mr. Blaine had stayed beneath his own vine and figtree. But it is easy to ride the precedent nightmare to death. Mr. Taft will not lose his dignity by meeting the electors face to face, not even when it becomes a tug-of-war between his right hand and his coat tails.

It would be hard to find fault with Mr. Taft's campaign speeches so far as they have gone. He has the happy knack of saying something every time rather than dealing in the eloquent platitudes that mean nothing. On his way through Ohio he made distinct points in every speech. Upon one occasion, for instance, he made it clear that government regulation of interstate business should be of such a nature as to cause the least possible shock to conditions. It must be not only sound in legal principle, but the interpretation and the enforcement of law must be clear and speedy. Upon another occasion he pledged himself to further the policy of government supervision of the stocks and bonds of interstate railways, while at still another place he made it clear that the Republican party had made the best record during the last four years of any administration since the time of Washington.

But one of his most crushing points was made at Carey. Referring to Mr. Bryan's assault on the Philippine policy of the administration, he said: "I assert without hesitation, and I know what I am talking about, that the war was continued two years longer in the Philippines because of the attitude of Mr. Bryan and his party on that subject."

Terence V. Powderly has a few timely words to say on the vexed question of the injunction in labor disputes. Mr. Powderly is chief of the Division of Information and Distribution of Labor under Secretary Straus, and he is therefore in a peculiarly advantageous position to know the facts. He says:

The introduction of partisan politics into a labor organization leads to differences and ill feelings that do not end with the close of a political campaign. Workingmen are Democrats and Republicans, as they are Protestants, Jews, and Catholics, and it is a hazardous thing for any one to attempt to turn their votes to any particular party. Of course, there are many men out of employment as the result of the recent depression, but, to my knowledge, men are returning to their old occupations all over the country and at their old rates of pay.

If you show me a single union that has been dissolved, that has lost a member, that has even lost prestige or the respect of the community through the use of the injunction in labor disputes, then I'll admit that the injunction has done harm; but you can't point to one instance wherein labor has lost ground through it. To my mind, the injunction has drawn employer and employed closer together. Take our railway organizations. Today the officers have the entry to the offices of presidents and general managers of railroads, and now their differences are settled through conciliation, without even waiting for the arbitration stage.

The efforts that have been made to induce the President to take the stump on behalf of Mr. Taft do not reflect much credit on the political acumen of those who are responsible. Mr. Roosevelt's politics are of the practical variety, and no one knows better than he that such a shock to the dignity of the presidential office could do nothing but harm to his cause. From Oyster Bay comes an official assurance that "for the twentieth time the President wants to deny the statement that he is going to take an active part in the campaign this fall. Mr. Roosevelt is extremely busy attending to the duties of his office and he sees no occasion for taking the stump."

It seems to have been Mr. Hitchcock that first suggested the preposterous idea. At least he does not deny the explicit statements to that effect that have been made very fully in New York, and if he really has so little sense of the fitness of things as to suppose that a series of stump speeches by the President would be of value to Mr. Taft, we can hardly be surprised that there should be some dissatisfaction with his conduct of the campaign.

In support of the charge that Mr. Bryan had stigmatized American workmen as "public beggars" comes an affidavit from James Campbell. As was once said by a celebrated jurist, "the truth will sometimes come out even in an affidavit," and in this instance Mr. Campbell is so precise that we can hardly question his memory. He says:

I was formerly president of the International Association of Window Glass Workers, embracing the United States, Belgium, and France; also president for three years of the Window Glass Workers' Association of the United States, and was chief State factory inspector of the State of Pennsylvania for two terms of four years each.

I also declare that in 1893, while the Wilson bill was being considered by Congress, I was in Washington, D. C., with a committee of the Window Glass Workers' Association in the interests of the Window Glass Workers of the United States.

Our committee was present at a hearing accorded to the window glass manufacturers of the United States by the ways and means committee. During the discussion that followed, Mr. William Jennings Bryan, who was a member of the ways and means committee, in talking to Mr. James A. Chambers of the manufacturers' committee, referred to the manufacturers as "robbers." I then said to Mr. Bryan:

"If you consider the manufacturers robbers, what do you think of the workers?"

To which Mr. Bryan replied:

"They are a lot of public beggars."

In reply I said:

"I do not consider it begging to try to maintain the American standard of wages."

Those who advocate the participation of women in political life will be encouraged to hear of the Women's Club of Memphis. These good ladies have decided to take a definite stand in the matter of the presidential election and to throw the weight of their influence upon the side of Mr. Bryan. Now they would have been better advised had they confined themselves to a statement of what they are pleased to call their convictions, but nothing so prosaic as this would satisfy them. They must give their reasons also and these reasons are embalmed in a set of resolutions passed at a recent meeting and given out to the world for its delectation.

The reasons for their political preferences are two in number. At the first glance we are surprised at the moderation of the Democratic dames of Memphis, and we acquired a momentary respect for an assembly of women who could confine their reasons for any action whatever within such narrow limits. But when we see the true nature and inwardness of the reasons advanced, we understand at once their all-inclusive nature and we recognize that such trifling considerations as the tariff issue, imperial policies, and the corporation problem would be entirely superfluous and superfluous. The first of the reasons why the Women's Club of Memphis has determined to throw the vast weight of its intelligence and prestige upon the side of Mr. Bryan is the fact that many frivolous newspapers have referred to President Roosevelt's daughter as the "Princess Alice," and that such a monarchical suggestion went unrebuked from the White House. It is strange that Mr. Bryan should have overlooked a point like this, but it would really seem that when we want true profundity of thought we have to go to the women. But the second count in the indictment is even more serious. Mr. Bryan is a grandfather, and this can be said neither of Mr. Roosevelt nor of Mr. Taft.

Far be it from us to appeal against a decision so obviously based upon conceptions of true statesmanship and of the national welfare. The Women's Club of Memphis has justified its existence, and has triumphantly proved the right and the capacity of women to govern the nation as well as the individual. And yet it might be urged diffidently and even shrinkingly that Mr. Bryan is as little deserving of praise for the presence of grandchildren in his illustrious family as Mr. Roosevelt is deserving of blame for a corresponding absence. Both praise and blame must be allotted elsewhere and surely the ladies of Memphis should be aware of this.

The opinions of the various vice-presidential candidates as to the nature and scope of the duties that they covet is no doubt very interesting—but superfluous. Even a lawyer could find no more than one meaning in the clauses of the Constitution of the United States that deal with this subject. The Constitution says:

The Vice-President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no vote unless they be equally divided.

Later on we find a further reference in Article II, Section 1, Subdivision 5:

In case of the removal of the President from office, or his death, resignation or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice-President.

It is of course a free country, and Mr. Kern is at liberty to elaborate his "conceptions" to any extent he pleases, but he might have curtailed his labor by a preliminary examination of the Constitution.

Finances are not as they should be in the Democratic campaign. Mr. Bryan estimates that the Democratic national campaign will muster 8,000,000 votes. Now if these 8,000,000 people would but contribute 25 cents each—and what after all is 25 cents to a patriotic Democrat?—just see how ample would be the campaign fund. But Colonel Watterson is more modest still. Some impecunious, or parsimonious, Democrat sent him a nickel and the gallant colonel worked himself into a perspiring enthusiasm by visions of a similar contribution from every Democrat in the country. Colonel Watterson does not seem to have made any references to the widow's mite, and he thereby missed his opportunity. Perhaps he never heard the story, but there is a wonderful efficacy about such allusions and some command of them is worth acquiring—even in the South.

The Archbishop of Canterbury is required by ancient custom to prepare a plate of soup for the king, should his majesty at any time prefer a request for refreshment at the hands of the prelate.

MR. BARRIE SCORES AGAIN.

"What Every Woman Knows" Is Received in London with Delighted Enthusiasm.

It was an audience of overflowing good humor that greeted Mr. Barrie's new play at the Duke of York's Theatre. Every one knew that there would be fun galore in "What Every Woman Knows," and if there should be also a dose of kindly philosophy, in other words a moral, why the sugar coating would be so thick that even unpalatable virtue would slip down unobserved. Of course the theatre was full, and it would have been hardly possible to throw a stone in any direction without hitting a celebrity. Prince Francis of Teck was there and Sir Edward Russell, and when Mr. Winston Churchill was discovered with his fiancée the great crowd, like the ranks of Tuscany, could "scarce forbear to cheer." Indeed, it did cheer and the lady smiled and blushed very becomingly. The profession itself was in full force to see Mr. Barrie's triumph. There was Miss Marion Terry, Mr. E. H. Willard, Miss Maud Adams, Mr. Comyns Carr, Mr. and Mrs. Lewisohn (Miss Edna May), Mr. Haddon Chambers, Mr. Beerbohm Tree, and Mr. Zangwill, while Mr. George Bernard Shaw shed the light of his cynical presence upon the scene. Indeed, Mr. Barrie had all the encouragement that any playwright could desire.

"What Every Woman Knows" is a Scotch play. The hero, John Shand (Mr. Gerald Du Maurier), is a Scotchman, dour, unsmiling, and even forbidding. Aleck Wylie (Mr. Henry Vibart), father of the family, is Scotch, and therefore his two sons, David and James (Mr. Sydney Valentine and Mr. Edmund Gwenn), are Scotch. The heroine is the daughter Maggie (Miss Hilda Trevelyan), and lest we should be overweighted by North of Tweed folk we have just a suggestion of delightful wickedness in the Comtesse de la Brière (Mrs. Tree) and Lady Sybil Lazenby (Miss Lillah McCarthy). Mr. Venables (Mr. Norman Forbes) and a maid (Miss Madge Murray) complete the cast.

The first act shows us how John Shand becomes betrothed to Maggie Wylie. Now, poor little Maggie deserves lovers, but she has had none. As she says herself, she "has no charm" and she quite lacks that indefinable "come hither" in her eye that, so we are told upon excellent authority, is more to a girl than good looks. When the Wylie family suspect that their house is being burglarized they sit up to surprise the intruder. And sure enough they catch him. But it is no ordinary burglar, but only John Shand, whose unappeasable thirst for learning is such as to tempt him to quaff illicit and midnight nectar from the amply filled and otherwise unused bookshelves of the Wylies.

Such an occurrence comes as a direct intervention of Providence to the canny Scotchman, who sees nothing but unloved spinsterhood and dependence for Maggie. Moreover, John Shand's determination to learn commends itself to his captor, and so a bargain is speedily struck. Will John Shand agree to marry Maggie in due season in return for his education? John Shand, unhesitating and unsmiling, will agree, and so the curtain rings down on a situation pregnant with possibilities.

And so they are married, and although John Shand is not at all in love with his wife, the audience is in love with her, and it is quite right that they should be, because there is safety in numbers. Shand is now a rising politician. His speeches have attracted attention in the House of Commons. There "Shandisms" appeal to the public, and a cabinet position is just ahead of him if he can rise to his full oratorical height in the approaching debate. But there is domestic discord in the Shand household. The faithless John has fallen hopelessly in love with Lady Sybil Lazenby, and if he is thwarted just at this crisis of his career, what will become of the speech upon which so much depends? Then Maggie rises to the heights. Nothing must interfere with the speech. If John believes that his inspiration can come only from the flighty Sybil, then to the flighty Sybil must he go, and so she arranges that her husband and the fair one shall be invited to the same country house, where he can write his speech under the only auspices that he believes can be favorable.

But the speech at its preliminary reading is a disappointment. It is flat, stale, and unprofitable. There's none of the old ring about it, none of the inimitable lashes that made the orator a power in the country. None of the "Shandisms" for which delighted audiences had so often waited. John's future as a statesman is rembling. He has been tried in the balances and it would seem that he has been found wanting. And, worst of all, two weeks with the Lady Sybil have wearied him with that frail beauty almost to the point of disgust.

Then the triumphant Maggie comes upon the scene. She, too, has written a speech, and now we understand where the inspiration came from. Now at last we know the author of the "Shandisms" and the true source of those touches of delicious humor upon which political party had been wont to rely. She had always typed her husband's speeches for him, and taking advantage of her opportunity she had inserted a word here and a sentence there, just those little magic touches which had lifted his orations from the dead level of the commonplace. When John Shand had written "Let us not be engulfed by the flowing tide," Maggie had inserted an exhortation to "dam the flowing tide," and so on all the way through. At last John had found his inspiration. He was merely stupid, the mental failing of his sex. The wit, the effervescence, the captivating turns of speech, were all Maggie's.

This, of course, is "what every woman knows," a knowledge epitomized by Maggie when she says that woman was not created from the rib of Adam, but from his funny bone. Perhaps the existence of the funny bone was unknown in biblical days.

All the way through the acting was of a high order. Miss Hilda Trevelyan carries away the supreme laurels, but then her part of a little plain Scotchwoman saying little but suggesting unutterable things was peculiarly appropriate to her powers. But nothing could have been better than Du Maurier's acting. He made of Mr. Barrie's conception of Shand a living reality with his dry speech and his Scotch tongue as though to the manner born. And the delighted audience took particular care to tell Miss Trevelyan and Mr. Du Maurier exactly what it thought about them, and they are never likely to have a pleasanter recollection than the thunders of applause and the recalls that would not be silenced or satisfied.

LONDON, September 5, 1908. PICCADILLY.

OLD FAVORITES.

The Wreck of the "Pocahontas."

I lit the lamps in the light-house tower,
For the sun dropped down and the day was dead;
They shone like a glorious clustered flower—
Ten golden and five red.
Looking across, where the line of coast
Stretched darkly, shrinking away from the sea,
The lights sprang out at its edge—almost
They seemed to answer me!
O warning lights! hurn bright and clear,
Hither the storm comes! Leagues away
It moans and thunders low and drear—
Burn till the break of day!
Good-night! I called to the gulls that sailed
Slow past me through the evening sky;
And my comrades, answering shrilly, hailed
Me hark with boding cry.
A mournful breeze began to blow,
Weird music it drew through the iron bars,
The sullen billows hoiled below,
And dimly peered the stars;
The sails that flecked the ocean floor
From east to west leaned low and fled;
They knew not what came in the distant roar
That filled the air with dread.
Flung by a fitful gust, there beat
Against the window a dash of rain—
Steady as tramp of marching feet
Strode on the hurricane.
It smote the waves for a moment still,
Level and deadly white for fear;
The hare rock shuddered—an awful thrill
Shook even my tower of cheer.
Like all the demons loosed at last,
Whistling and shrieking, wild and wide,
The mad wind raged, while strong and fast
Rolled in the rising tide.
And soon in ponderous showers, the spray,
Struck from the granite, reared and sprang
And clutched at tower and cottage gray,
Where overwhelmed they clung
Half drowning to the naked rock;
But still burned on the faithful light,
Nor faltered at the tempest's shock,
Through all the fearful night.
Was it in vain? That knew not we.
We seemed, in that confusion vast
Of rushing wind and roaring sea,
One point whereon was cast
The whole Atlantic's weight of brine.
Heaven help the ship should drift our way!
No matter how the light might shine
Far on into the day.
When morning dawned, aghast the din
Of gale and breaker hoomed a fun!
Another! We who sat within Answered with cries each one,
Into each other's eyes with fear,
We looked through helpless tears, as still,
One after one, near and more near,
The signals pealed, until
One glimpse of hulk half heaving slow,
Then closed the mists o'er canvas torn
And tangled ropes swept to and fro
From masts that raked forlorn.
Weeks after, yet ringed round with spray,
Our island lay, and none might land;
Though hued the waters of the bay
Stretched calm on either hand.
And when at last from the distant shore
A little boat stole out to reach
Our loneliness, and bring once more
Fresh human thought and speech,
We told our tale, and the hoatmen cried:
"Twas the Pocahontas—all were lost!
For miles along the coast the tide
Her shattered timbers tossed."
Then I looked the whole horizon round—
So beautiful the ocean spread
About us, o'er those sailors drowned!
"Father in heaven," I said—
A child's grief struggling in my breast—
"Do purposeless thy children meet
Such bitter death? How was it best
These hearts should cease to beat?
O wherefore! Are we naught to Thee?
Like senseless weeds that rise and fall
Upon thine awful sea, are we
No more than, after all?"
And I shut the heavy from my sight,
For I thought of the dead that lay below;
From the bright air faded the warmth and light,
There came a chill like snow.
Then I heard the far-off rote resound
Where the breakers slow and slumberous rolled,
And a subtle sense of Thought profound
Touched me with power untold.
And like a voice eternal spake
That wondrous rhythm, and "Peace, be still!"
It murmured "how thy head and tace
Life's rapture and life's ill,
And wait. At last all shall be clear."
The long, low, mellow music rose
And fell, and soothed my dreaming ear
With infinite repose.
Sighing I climbed the light-house stair,
Half forgetting my grief and pain;
And while the day died, sweet and fair,
I lit the lamps again. —Celia Thaxter.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

M. Clemenceau, the French premier, is a martyr to indigestion and has been a regular visitor to Carlsbad for the past twenty years. It is easier to direct a government than a stomach.

Miss Ellen M. Bigelow of Athol, Massachusetts, has entered upon her fifty-sixth year as a teacher in the public schools. She is said to be the oldest school teacher in point of service in the State.

Captain R. F. Scott, commander of the Discovery Antarctic expedition, and Miss Kathleen Bruce were married recently, in the Chapel Royal at Hampton Court, near London. The bride is a sculptor, and was a pupil of Rodin.

Ogden Mills Reid, only son of Whitelaw Reid, publisher of the New York Tribune, has begun work as a reporter on his father's paper. Young Mr. Reid, who is twenty-five years old, is a Yale graduate of the class of 1904. Subsequently he took a course at the Yale Law School.

King Alfonso played in an exciting polo game at the Spring Hill grounds near Rugby during his recent visit to England. The king had several fine individual runs, one almost from goal to goal, and it was noticed that he limped whenever he dismounted. He used five ponies in all.

M. and Mme. Eugène Gouard, who started on their wedding day in 1896 to walk round the world, crossed from Dover to Calais a few days ago. During the past twelve years they have walked 60,000 miles through Europe, Siberia, Japan, North and South America, and North Africa.

Major-General Leonard Wood has been in attendance at the manoeuvres of the German army in Alsace-Lorraine, which came to an end September 10. He speaks highly of the courtesy of the German military authorities. From Saarbrücken, General Wood went to France, where he will be present at the French manoeuvres.

Miss Ruby Abrams, who was recently graduated at the head of the art class in Cooper Institute, is deaf and until a few years ago was also dumb. She has been an art student ever since she was graduated at the head of her class six years ago at the Institute for the Improved Instruction of Deaf Mutes, and has the record of having won four prizes during her art courses.

Mme. Marisha-Aldrich, Hammerstein's newest grand opera star, is an American. Except for a few concerts, she has never been heard in public, and has the unusual distinction of possessing a contract as prima donna without ever singing with an orchestral accompaniment. Mme. Marisha-Aldrich is a native of Boston, and is not yet thirty years of age. Her parents are wealthy Hungarians.

William M. Chase has had the extraordinary compliment of a request from the Italian government to give his portrait, painted by himself, to hang on the walls of the Uffizi Palace in Florence, along with other portraits of artists painted in likewise. The only other American besides Sargent and Chase so honored is George Peter Alexander Healy, who died in 1894, after a long career of success as portrait painter.

Johann Martin Schleyer invented Volapük in a flash of inspiration one sleepless night. Devotion to the original Volapük is still paid by a publication printed in Gratz, the capital of Styria, Austria, entitled Volapükabled Lexendonik, and at present edited by the aged Bishop Schleyer himself, who took up the work on the retirement of the previous editor eighteen months ago. Bishop Schleyer is now seventy-six years old.

Waldorf Astor, Jr., has seriously entered upon a turf career by securing admission for his race horses into the Kingsclere stable, which is the most fashionable racing establishment in England. It is owned jointly by the Dukes of Portland and Westminster, who purchased it a few years ago and transferred it from a public stable into a private one, excluding all other owners. Astor has hitherto confined his racing ventures to a few steeplechases in hunt races.

The celebrations on September 11 throughout Russia in honor of the eightieth birthday of Count Tolstoy passed off quietly and no arrests were made. The authorities at the last moment relaxed the severity of their orders prohibiting celebrations and permitted the people to give special theatrical performances of Tolstoy's plays, on the promise that political demonstrations would not be attempted. The only repressive measure of importance in St. Petersburg was the suspension of the reactionary newspaper, Znamya, for an outrageous attack on Tolstoy.

The Rev. Dr. Hiram Bingham is in America for the third time since he left the country in 1853 with his wife as a missionary to the Gilbert Islands, and each of his visits has been a short one. For more than fifty years he has labored among the people of the islands, and to his efforts, and to those of his wife, now dead, the civilization of the savages is due. The monument which Dr. Bingham has raised to himself is a translation of the Scriptures from Hebrew to Gilbertese and a complete dictionary of the island language. He was fifty-two years old when he began his task of translation. The manuscript of his dictionary was accidentally lost when complete and the work had to be done over again from the first page.

LADY VISITORS AT FORT VIGILANT.

By Jerome A. Hart.

XXXII.

When Tower's friends learned that he was a prisoner in Fort Vigilant, locked in a cell like the murderers Clancy and Costa, their indignation knew no bounds. Every means was set in motion to procure his release. Appeals were made to the Federal officials in the custom-house, the navy office, the postoffice, and other important government bureaus. The prisoner's influential friends also sought the protection of General Murray, commanding the military post at the Presidio; General Ruhl, in command of the Federal arsenal on Yedras Island; Admiral Farquhar, the commander of the naval station at Benito; and Captain Shotwell, who commanded the warship Monroe. But the Federal officials seemed half-hearted; the civilians protested their powerlessness to overstep their official functions; the officers of the army and navy declared that Federal interference in State affairs was an extremely delicate matter; and that they would have no right to interfere until the State had asked help from the Federal government, which then might or might not issue orders to them to act.

The civilians holding Federal posts were more sympathetic. Like the prisoner, they were Southerners, and belonged to the same faction of the Democratic party as Tower. Still, however great their sympathy, however strong their desire to aid him, they were powerless; their hands were tied. In the face of a force of six thousand armed men, which the Vigilantes' ranks now numbered, the protests of civilian officials meant nothing. All they could do was to address the heads of their departments at Washington; this they did, and their letters were duly received—and filed.

The executive committee of the Vigilantes showed no desire to impose unnecessary hardships on their important prisoner. He was permitted to receive friends freely, although a guard stood at the door during all of their interviews. Hamlin, the port collector, Dr. Porter, Colquhoun, Bandy, and Quirk came to see him almost daily. They kept him informed of the condition of Lupkins, the Vigilante sergeant whom he had stabbed, and on whose fate his own was believed to depend. For, although the Vigilante leaders were extremely reluctant to hang such a formidable prisoner as the chief justice of the State, they had behind them thousands of hot-headed and ignorant men; the privates might force the generals to sentence Tower to death, however much the leaders might be indisposed to go to such an extreme.

It was some days after his arrest before Tower saw Mrs. Lyndon and Diana. They had been unable to secure admittance to Fort Vigilant, until Eugene Yarrow's influence cut the Vigilante red tape sufficiently to secure them a pass. He also accompanied the two distressed ladies to the Vigilante headquarters. As they drove through the heart of the city, with the streets crowded with people and vehicles, Yarrow exclaimed:

"It is difficult to believe that a few squares away in this busy city an extra-legal body holds in strict confinement a justice of the Supreme Court."

"Difficult?" cried Mrs. Lyndon. "Why it is absolutely incredible. It was not so bad, perhaps, when the Vigilantes were trying common murderers whom everybody knew to be guilty. But the idea of their arresting such a man as Judge Tower! And for acting merely in self-defense too!"

Diana's face showed that she was much more disturbed over the arrest than Mrs. Lyndon, who evidently believed firmly that some relief would come.

"Do you think, Mr. Yarrow, that the judge is really in any danger?" asked Diana.

Eugene hesitated before replying. "I would like to assure you that there is no danger, Miss Diana," he replied, at last, "but it would not be the truth."

Mrs. Lyndon looked at him with startled eyes. "Why what can you mean?" she cried. "You do not believe it possible that the Vigilantes would—"

"I mean," he said gravely, "that the situation is no longer in the control of the Vigilante leaders. Lupkins, the man who attacked Judge Tower and whom the judge wounded, is lying at the point of death. If he dies, the hot-headed thousands in the ranks of the Vigilantes will force the leaders to—but here we are at the fort."

As they alighted from the carriage the ladies noticed with growing anxiety the sand-bag breastworks, the heavy guard, and the cannon on the roof. When they reached the iron door they were stopped by two sentries with muskets. Yarrow produced their pass, and they were at once admitted. But when he attempted to follow them, the sentries barred his way with their bayonets.

"The pass only reads for two ladies," said one. "You can't go in."

It was true. Yarrow had neglected to have himself included in the pass. And he was forced to content himself with a reassuring smile and a wave of the hand to the two ladies as their alarmed faces disappeared behind the closing door.

At the door of Tower's cell they encountered another sentry, who admitted them after a glance at their pass. They found the prisoner more composed than they had expected. His iron courage, his impassive demeanor, seemed unchanged.

Diana was almost in tears as a result of Yarrow's discouraging remarks. "Oh, uncle, dear uncle," she cried, throwing her arms around him, "why did you come here and get into this tangle? It was not your quarrel."

"These Vigilantes have been attacking the law, Diana," replied the judge gently. "I am an officer of the law, and any men who quarrel with the law quarrel with me."

"But some other judges are not interfering," protested Mrs. Lyndon. "There is Judge Fox, for example—he refuses to have anything to do with it."

"Fox may settle the matter with his own conscience, if he can," replied Tower, concisely. "Mine impels me to defend the law."

"Oh, I can never forgive myself," lamented Diana. "When I think, uncle, how I used to dispute with you about these Vigilantes, and say they were right, and that I hoped they would arrest and punish all the—"

"You are not the first, Diana," interrupted Tower, "nor will you be the last to applaud the rule of the mob until it turns on some one you love."

There was a depressing pause, during which Diana wept silently. Her girlish advocacy of the tempestuous tribunals, the passionate judgments of the Vigilantes, now shocked her when she saw the man who was her father's friend and who had been to her more than a father, locked in a Vigilante cell, in danger of his life.

"There, there, Diana, don't cry," said Mrs. Lyndon, soothingly. "You could not know what would happen, and it is not at all your fault that it did happen. You can best show you are sorry by helping your guardian out of his present situation."

Diana looked up inquiringly through her tears, and Tower also looked inquiringly at Mrs. Lyndon.

"This is what I mean," she went on, in answer to their unspoken queries. "Mr. Yarrow tells us that the leaders of the Vigilantes are not at all unfavorably disposed toward the judge, but that it is the hot-headed mob among them who hate him. Now, Diana, you have more influence with him than I have—why don't you urge him to write to the Vigilante leaders, asking consideration at their hands—promising to leave this city and return to—"

"Stop!" cried Tower, his brow darkening. "I know what kindly feelings actuate you, Mrs. Lyndon, but I can not consent to humble myself before the leaders of this mob."

Diana joined her entreaties to those of Mrs. Lyndon, but he remained obdurate. It was only after an hour of pleading that he relented slightly, and consented to make a draught of such a letter, "for them to look at tomorrow," as he said. But he would yield no further, and they at last left him without having obtained his promise to send it.

As the cell-door was locked behind them by the turnkey, Mrs. Lyndon asked that official if there would be any objection to their sending some fruit and other delicacies to the prisoner.

"No, ma'am, I guess not," he replied affably, "but the other lady said she was goin' to send some today."

The "other lady"—Mrs. Lyndon and Diana looked at one another searchingly.

"Has there been another lady here today?" inquired Diana in surprise.

"Oh, yes," replied the turnkey, "it's the same lady—the one that comes every day."

Again the two visitors exchanged glances.

"How does she look? I wonder if it is the judge's aunt, Mrs. Banks?" asked Mrs. Lyndon.

"Oh, no, she aint old enough to be his aunt—it's a young lady," answered the guard, "quite a good looker, with yellow hair. And her name aint Banks—it's Leigh."

The two murmured simultaneously "Sophia Lucretia!" And as they drove in silence up the street with Yarrow, who had dutifully waited for them long, it impressed him that the emotion which seemed most to sway them was not grief, but anger.

When Tower was alone, he reflected deeply on the entreaties he had just heard. At last seizing a pen, he wrote for some minutes. But on reading it over, he shook his head.

"I don't like to ask favors from these d—d pork-sellers," he muttered.

Just as he was about to destroy the draft, he was told that his two friends, Hamlin and Porter, were waiting to see him. They were admitted, and Tower's first question, very naturally, related to the condition of Lupkins.

"How is he getting along?" Tower inquired. "I may be suspected of ill-feeling toward him, but it is an error. I never was so deeply interested in the health of a man in my life."

Although Tower was a mirthless man, this remark was apparently intended to be playful. But it did not bring a smile to the serious faces of his friends.

"The community shares your feelings, judge," replied Hamlin. "I never knew an invalid so solicitously treated as Lupkins, nor one about whose health such anxiety is expressed. But the latest news is only that he is about the same."

"Have you heard of the manner in which he is being nursed and attended?" inquired Porter.

"No. Where is he?"

"Judge, for a fact, he is installed in a Law-and-Order stronghold! The firemen of Pennsylvania Engine No. 12 have turned over their entire establishment to the august invalid. The engines and hose-carts have been taken out, beds and carpets installed, and every comfort and convenience prepared for the patient and his nurses and doctors. Out in the street they have spread sawdust on the roadway and sidewalk in order to muffle the sounds of traffic. Guards warn inquirers to lower their voices, and there is a solemn hush all day long around the engine-house.

"Is his condition at all encouraging?"

"This morning I saw Dr. Dole, the physician in charge," replied Hamlin. "He told me that the operation of taking up the artery had been successful, and they hoped the man would be out of danger by the twelfth day. He told me also that they were inundated with telegrams from all over the State—not only Law-and-Order men, but Vigilantes. Were not the situation so grave, he said, it would be ludicrous to see such keen interest in so pitiful a person."

"Is he so worthless a fellow?" asked Porter.

"I am told that he is a wretched loafer," replied Hamlin. "When Clancy and Costa were to be executed there was difficulty in securing a hangman. No Vigilante was willing to accept that unpleasant position. It looked as if they would have to kidnap some man on the street and force him to perform the office. But when Lupkins heard of the hitch, he at once volunteered to be hangman—for a handsome consideration."

"The man must be without shame," commented Tower.

"Dr. Dole told me another incident," went on Porter, "which seems to show that the fellow's womenkind are of the same stripe as he is. Both his mother and wife are in attendance at his bedside: one day, while Lupkins was apparently asleep, Dole heard the women, in animated undertones, discussing how much the Vigilantes would probably give to the mourning widow of Lupkins should he die. They became so wrought up that a dispute arose as to the amount the mother ought to get if the widow got twenty-five thousand dollars. In the midst of this the invalid opened his eyes and muttered: 'Let up, will you! I oint dead yet.'"

"Talking of money for Lupkins," said Hamlin, "a benefit is to be given him at the American Theatre this week."

"Does this mean sympathy from the community at large?" inquired Tower.

"No; the benefit is inspired by the Vigilantes. They are under heavy expense. It is costing them something like two thousand dollars a day to keep up their organization. Lupkins's illness, with his corps of doctors, surgeons, and nurses, has added so largely to their expenses that they want the public to help them."

"In short, they want to dance, but refuse to pay the piper. That is what might be expected from a lot of skinflint shopkeepers," said Tower, with a bitter sneer.

"We've got to take them as we find them, for they're on top," remarked Porter philosophically. "And this is a good time to tell you, judge, that Hamlin and I have come today to urge you to make some advances toward conciliating them. What would you say to addressing a letter to the executive committee—nothing humiliating—nothing in any way affecting your honor—but a straightforward, manly letter asking for greater lenience at their hands?"

"Ask mercy of the Vigilantes? No! no!" cried Tower. "I am unalterably opposed to placing myself in the attitude of a supplicant."

"But listen to us, judge," pleaded Porter. "Look the facts in the face. These Vigilante leaders are in a critical position. They are between the devil and the deep sea. The executive committee secretly favors letting you go, for you are a very awkward customer on their hands. But they have behind them this large body of hot-headed men, and unless they can allege some plausible motive for releasing you, they dare not do it. Now, why not present to them your case as a judicial officer of the State; ask in temperate language that you be freed in order to take up your judicial duties; make any reasonable promises they may require. If you will do this, your friends are convinced that the executive committee will be disposed to let you go."

For a time Tower remained silent, plunged in thought. At last he spoke: "I am extremely reluctant to make any overtures to this illegal body," he said. "My ward, Diana Wayne, and her companion, Mrs. Lyndon, have been urging me this very morning to follow the course you recommend. They were so urgent that after they had gone I roughly drafted a few lines. I was half tempted to destroy the draft, but I will read it to you and hear your opinion." An taking up a paper from the table Tower thus began:

"To the Executive Committee of the Vigilantes—Gentlemen: To give me an opportunity to vindicate my fair name, which is dearer far than life, I request the charges against me be submitted to a legal tribunal. I will interpose no delay, make no application for change of venue or bail, and will object to no juror because he is a member of your organization. I am willing to submit my cause to a jury composed of honest men. I shall be content if every man on the job be a member of the Vigilance Committee. I am informed that your body is composed of men of honor. If so, you desire only to do justice."

Both Tower's friends listened attentively to the reading. Hamlin shook his head. "I do not believe that the Vigilantes will consider this request favorably said he. "Their members believe that the courts this city are corrupt. The offer to submit your case to one of the criminal tribunals here would not entertained by them."

"Furthermore," added Porter, "they are bent

A MASSACHUSETTS STORY.

Henry Longan Stuart Writes a Dramatic Novel and Calls It "Weeping Cross."

our resigning your office as supreme justice. You say nothing of that in your letter. Do I understand that you are willing to resign?"

"No, I most assuredly will not resign," exclaimed Tower firmly. "I have done nothing which any honest man should not do. When I drew my knife on the vigilante officer it was in self-defense. A pistol had been fired at me by one of his party, and he was extending his hand to seize my weapon. I was entirely justified in my act. Were I to resign my office, it would be a practical admission of guilt. I shall refuse to resign."

"In that case you had better not forward this letter to the Vigilantes," said Hamlin. "It would only make them believe that you were becoming intimidated, and our request would be refused. Why not make an appeal to the Federal power?"

"By that I presume you do not mean the civilian officials of the Federal government?" asked Porter, with a twinkle in his eye.

"By no means," replied Hamlin hastily. "As collector of the port—that is, as an official—I could do absolutely nothing to aid Judge Tower."

"Could you not, as collector of the port, place at his disposal a revenue cutter?" inquired Porter.

"What good would that do him?" queried Hamlin somewhat warmly. "Judge Tower is on land, and unmolested within a Vigilante cell."

"If it were known that a revenue cutter was at his service, I believe there would be an attempt made by some bold and determined friends to rescue him from the Vigilantes," remarked Porter.

"If that were possible," said Hamlin, still with some warmth, "what is the reason that Captain Shotwell's ship does not afford the required refuge? Shotwell is very friendly to Judge Tower, and he has moored his ship at the foot of this very street that he may thus command Fort Vigilant with his guns."

"Here is an idea, gentlemen," interrupted Judge Tower, who regarded with some misgiving the dispute between his two friends, which was gradually growing warmer. "If I prefer petitions in any quarter, why not make my appeal where it may do me some immediate good? Captain Shotwell commands a United States ship-of-war; then why should I not send my petition to him as an American citizen legally restrained of liberty?"

"Admiral Farquhar has already been approached by the Vigilantes," replied Hamlin, "and they boast that Farquhar sympathizes with them."

"But Shotwell is a Southern man," said Porter. "He commands his own ship, is not in waters immediately under Farquhar's command and may entertain different ideas from those of the admiral."

"At least the experiment is worth trying," added Tower. "There is precedent for it. Not long ago an American warship was lying in a foreign harbor under Captain Ingraham's command. A Hungarian refugee who had only taken out his first papers for American citizenship applied to Ingraham for protection from Austrian kidnapers. The refugee, Koszta, was at once received on the deck of Ingraham's ship. That gallant sailor said that any man with even partial American citizenship should not be refused the protection of the stars and stripes. When an Austrian corvette demanded Koszta, Ingraham refused, and timed his shotted guns at the corvette. The United States rang with plaudits."

"Surely Shotwell will do as much for an American citizen kidnaped in one of our own ports as Ingraham did for a half-naturalized Hungarian in a foreign seaport," exclaimed Hamlin.

"He could not refuse!" cried Porter. "I am glad you both think so," said Tower. "I shall at once prepare a letter to Captain Shotwell, stating that I have been seized with force and violence by an armed body of outlaws; that I am illegally imprisoned in the heart of this city, and that I ask for his protection. This epistle should be delivered with speed and safety, so I will write it now, and urge you gentlemen to see that it reaches Shotwell."

"His friends assured him that the charge would be sacredly carried out, and Tower drew to him writing materials and indited in a firm hand the words: "To Captain Shotwell, commanding the United States ship-of-war Monroe."

While Tower was absorbed in his writing Hamlin said to Porter in an undertone:

"What could you possibly have meant just now, Porter? How could any group of friends, however bold, succeed in breaking into this fortress with its hundreds of armed guards? What chance would they have to rescue Tower? What show would they have if they put him aboard a revenue cutter or any other vessel?"

"Don't you see the blind alley these fellows are in?" whispered Porter with a meaning smile. "The Vigilante leaders are already so much embarrassed over their danger as Tower's jailors—their danger from their own mob—that they would themselves con-
[REMAINDER ON PAGE 200]

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Copyright 1908 by Jerome A. Hart.

The Vienna Academy of Sciences has spent nearly $9000 in working ten tons of uranium ore for radium.

The inimitable Montaigne tells us that "few have wedded their sweethearts, their paramours or mistresses, but have come home by Weeping Cross and ere long repented their bargain." Perhaps Richard Fitzsimon, Irish Royalist, embryo Jesuit, and one of Cromwell's bondmen in America, had but an imperfect recognition of this truth. Perhaps he was so blinded by overwhelming passion as to recognize nothing, and this in its way is fortunate for us, for his strange story supplies material for one of the great books of the day, a romance so stately that it should have few successful competitors for popular favor.

When Fitzsimon landed at Boston he found himself within the clutch of that arch-wolf Endicott, who set him to work as a scavenger until further disposition could be made of him. His disquisitions on the Puritan life of Boston are not more severe than might be expected from a Catholic and a slave:

Their Sabbath begins, like that of the Jews, who are their great prototypes, at sundown the day before. Then I was seized and flung into the bridewell, lest I should in some way profane the Sabbath, so that I told them plainly they had changed God's ordinance for me: "Six days shalt thou work, and the seventh spend in prison." In the morning my good suit of cloth was brought me, indeed the other was by now not to be borne in any close assembly, and I was taken to their meeting-house, in which I have since inquired and been told I sinned not, for we are not bidden resist everything unto death only those things that are essential, a moderation by which a Catholic can ever be known, but poor, deluded Quakers will suffer death for the putting on or off of a hat, and think they improve upon the martyrs. I say I was taken to church and put upon the end bench under the eye of the marshal, together with any malefactors that might be jailed at the time, and I have sat next to trembling wretches that were to die on the next day, a very horrible neighbourhood, and heard them abused and hell painted for them by the wolves in the pulpit, until I longed to shew them the mercy and clemency of God. There was one batch of pirates that behaved very disorderly, winking upon the women and bandying wags with one another, tho' they were to hang the next week, and when I would not join in with them railed upon me for a square-toes, and crowding against me on both hands forced me from my seat, with other pleasantries of the same sort, and I think this business of bringing criminals to church were best pretermitted. God shall surely speak best to these hardened hearts in the silence and gloom of their cells.

Fitzsimon is eventually handed over as an indentured servant to Captain Fleming of Long Meadow of Pecosack and his life becomes more tolerable. His master is humane and a gentleman who knows the life of the soldier, but in the person of his daughter we are at once introduced to romance in its most passionate and imaginative form.

Fitzsimon is not at once enamored of the fair Agnes, and it takes all of her voluptuous insistence to kindle within him an answering spark to her own fire. There is indeed nothing in fiction much finer than the description of the bold assault that she makes upon the heart of the prisoner and his own reluctance, slowly overcome, to another and a more tender captivity. She recommends him to let his love locks grow and he answers that they would be incongruous with a leather collar. "She did not answer, but took down a great coil of her own hair from under her cap . . . and put it against my head where the light fell upon it." Mistress Agnes at least was no Puritan. And upon another occasion:

"I fear me you are sickening for somewhat, Richard," says she, "come, let me feel your forehead"; but I mumbled some excuse, and slipping out the door, was on my way to find work in the orchard, when as I past the kitchen window, which was open, my mistress calls to me, more insistent this time, "Richard, come here to me, I say."

And when I went in, "Pull up my sleeves for me," says she, "they are nearly slipt down into the soap-suds."

"You will pardon me, madam," says I, "my hands are wet, too, with carrying of water."

"You lie," says she, looking at them, "you have packed none since dinner."

"Well," I said, "they are soiled from my labour."

"Are you crazed," said she, stamping her foot. "Wipe your hands if they be wet and do my bidding without further words."

"Now," says I to conscience, "you see, I am put in obedience" but as a reward for my stoutness, she gives me a most happy advice, which was, when a thing were thrust as 't were into my very face, from the poison to such an antidote, as now, when pulling up the sleeves, I could not help remarking the whiteness of Mrs. Agnes's arms, which was very wonderful, I recited to myself that beautiful little versicle from the psalm "Miserere," which is used in our service before Solemn Mass. Lavabis me, et super nitivem dealbabor—Thou shalt wash me and I be made whiter than snow.

"What are you muttering under your breath, Richard," says my mistress, seeing my lips move.

I blushed and looked very sheepish, but forget now what answer I made her. She turned right about from her work and looked me full in the face.

"I am sure you have been bewitched, Richard," says she, "no man in his senses ever acted as you are acting. Tell me plainly, good man, are you ill?"

"I think, indeed, madam," I faltered, "that I am best in the open."

"Then for God's sake abide there," she said, flushing angrily, "for a week I have had you round my skirts, so I could not move but your foot was on my gown; now it is with much ado I can get a civility from you. If you are a cavalier, I pray they send no more out to us."

"Shame," scoffs the devil, "ask her pardon, and play the man. Your scruples would be ridiculous in a monk."

"Bravo!" says conscience, approving me. "Fight the good fight! time enough to talk of pardons when the victory is won. You are a beleaguered city, Richard, and these things which were lawful in time of peace are rank treason now. Therefore keep your gates close, and have a watchword at the postern."

Of course, the lady has her way and we may fear, indeed, that she is little more than a wanton and knowing no restraint—indeed, none at all—in the satisfaction of her passion. There is the tremendous scene where they are awakened from sleep by the clamor of the dying servant and the demand of Agnes that her lover shall kill him lest he be still alive in the morning and babble of what he has seen. And there is the night ride through the forest:

We were in the depth of the wood's obscurity by the time I was done eating; as alone as though we were at the sea's bottom. She put back her hood and laid her head upon my shoulder.

"Is my head heavy for you, Diccon?" she asked. "'T is when 't is lightest," I answered, "that it irks me sorest."

"It is only heavy now with sleep," says she.

I told her in an access of passion that I would it might sleep nowhere else all our lives.

"She put up her mouth and kissed me on the cheek. "'T would tire you in a month, dear," said she, "I am an old bitter-tongued woman, Diccon. There never was a man I was so sharp with as yourself. Why do you bear me so patiently?"

"Ye are the sweetest woman in all the earth, Madam Agnes," says I, "and were there to be naught for me evermore but sharp speeches, I had rather them at your tongue than all the world's soft flatteries."

"Can you not put me round in front of you," says she presently, "I am weary craning my neck to get at your lips."

I checked the mare while she stepped round on my boot toe, and she nestled in my arms, while we went on at a foot pace.

"Is not the wood still and silent," says she next, "and yet I never felt fear in the forest. When I was a little maid there was a wood quite next our gardens and I would take all my child's troubles and scalded hearts into it for comfort, and wept when 't was cut away."

"Do not speak to me of your childhood," I begged her.

"She asked me, why not."

"I know not," I said, "but tonight it fills my heart with tears."

She threw her arms round my neck in an abandonment of affection and put her face against my bosom, the grey mare plodding on toward the house, with her freight of folly and frailty, constant and unhurried as God's purpose. I know not how it happened, whether I checked the mare or she stopped feeling the rein slack on her neck. Only that we were on the forest track, soft and deep with mould and last year's leaves and the beast away from us thrusting her nose in among them while I held my mistress to my heart.

"Say you love me! Say you love me!" I repeated, clinging to this assurance, it seems, as the one thing not vile or ignoble in all this tempest of shame and violence.

I know not if she answered. I think she told me so o'er and again, but my ears were deaf with passion. I know she did not return one of the kisses I rained upon her eyes and lips, upon her bosom, through the lace, from which the red cloak dropped as I held her, like a great clot of blood from a mortal wound. She was cold and motionless, a woman of marble, her lips parted, her eyes closed, her arms fallen from my neck and laid along her sides: I must hold her or she would have fallen. There was a mist before my own eyes, no thought in my brain save only this; that here was I falling, falling headlong, through flowers and roots of flowers into the mire beneath.

One more extract must suffice to show the strength of powerful narrative. Fitzsimon determines to fly to a Jesuit mission in Canada and he takes Agnes with him. They are married by one of the priests, who asks, "If I bid you in God's name, send this woman away, and come with us, will ye do it?" and receiving a wearied and affirmative answer says, "'T is well. I will absolve you and marry you, too." Then there is the Indian raid:

We went on toward the fire, running where the way was clear and level enough. So breathless and helpless was I when I reached it, that I must fling myself upon the ground a while to recover my breath, and it was thus, within the shadow of the great rock where I had confessed my sin, that I witnessed its punishment.

With his back to one of the boulders, fastened indeed to it by a great rope that passed twice or thrice round his body under the armpits, was an old gray man. He was not dead, limp as his body hung, for from time to time a convulsion would seize upon all his members, and he would turn his face up to the darkening sky. There were some three or four Indians in the enclosure; all but one of them, wearied by now I suppose with their barbarous work, sat wrapped in cloaks by the great fire, cooking or fingering their spoil; but besides the great fire there was a little low one, not more than a few embers, kindled at their victim's feet, and before this the Indian Queasy squatted on his heels with a red-hot skewer in his hand, blowing at the ashes with puffed cheeks. As I gazed he leapt to his feet and thrust it into the captive's flesh.

"Ah!" says he in English, spitting in his face. "You beat Indian? You kick Indian out of your yard? Kick him now!"

It was but for a moment I watched all this, the next I had leapt from behind the rock and ran across at him. At my approach he turned, and with a neigh like a scalded horse, thrust at me with the skewer. I ran him through his bowels.

"These are your wages," said I, "treacherous, bloody dog, take you your wages!" and kicked him aside as he fell. He did not die at once, but crawled on hands and knees away to the rocks. I heeded him no more, but cut at the cords that bound my old master to the stake.

"Master! Master!" cried I, as I hacked and tore at the rope. I kicked the fire from his feet, but they were charred almost away, and he fell into my arms. He rolled his eyes upon me, the lids were cut off and the balls swimming in blood, but he knew my voice.

"Ye bloody papist," says he in a dreadful Scots' accent. "Where's my lassie?"

"She is safe, she is safe!" I cried. "She is at hand." As I spoke I heard from below the deep bay of a running dog, nearer and louder each instant.

"Oh!" says he, slipping from my arms, all his limbs writhing at once. "I am an old man, will none put me from my paining?"

The dog scrambled over the boulder, his tongue hanging out, and flung himself upon the old man, howling, and licking his wounds. I think he was dead by then. I laid the body down, and climbing the rock over which the dog had leaped, saw my mistress and the priests toiling up the slope through the snow, behind them the two Indian lads, laden with our baggage.

There are many other incidents such as these, but the extraordinary power of the book lies not so much in incident as in the dramatic picture of a human conscience and of heroic moral valor. The character of Richard Fitzsimon is a great piece of creative work that burns its impress upon the imagination and will not be effaced.

"Weeping Cross," by Henry Longan Stuart. Published by Doubleday, Page & Co., New York; $1.50.

Emperor Franz Joseph still enjoys his favorite pastime of hunting at Ischl, and in spite of his seventy-eight years climbed 5000 feet the other day and shot four stags.

THE MAGISTRATE'S NEW WINTER COAT.

Among the papers of the late Magistrate C. M. Holst a sealed envelope was found bearing the following directions: "The inclosed statement I wish to be published after my death in Berlingske Tidende or whatever paper may be at that time the official organ of the Danish kingdom."

The paper has so far as I know not yet appeared in Berlingske Tidende. It reads as follows:

I wish to make a confession—for the benefit of our courts, legislators, and moralists—of a theft which I committed in the fortieth year of my age, the year after my appointment by his majesty the king to the magistracy in the beloved city in Jutland, where not long ago I celebrated my twenty-fifth anniversary in the service of the king.

It was at a stag dinner at the house of the Judge Crown Chamberlain Lilje, who has now been dead for many years. After dinner the judge, with Baron Ornhjelm, Dr. Kolbein, and myself, sat down to a game of whist.

It was a very animated party. We had been drinking a good deal at the table, and we drank more during the game. We did not give the cognac—a very fine old Charente—a chance to get flat in the bottle. Ornhjelm especially was soon in a very befogged condition. He was bragging in a manner anything but gentlemanly of his ability to drive a bargain in horses. That very day, he said, he had palmed off a pair of old saw-bucks on a stupid country preacher at a price at least a hundred dollars in advance of what they were really worth. He pulled out a fat pocket-book and triumphantly showed us the roll of bills that he had done the poor minister out of.

Ornhjelm was slobbering over a fat Havana cigar and playing his cards in a most asinine way. I was comparatively sober. Not that I had not been drinking and was still relishing the stuff, but my brain was perfectly clear, and I knew precisely what I was saying and doing.

We were playing dummy, and it was my turn to sit out. I pushed my chair away from the table, and as I did so I happened to look down. My eyes fell on a fifty-dollar bill lying under the table. I did not doubt for a moment that it had fallen from the hands of the baron, when he had his pocket-book out.

Now, this is what passed in my mind: I was on the point of bending down to pick up the bill and restore it to its rightful owner. But suddenly I was seized by an irresistible impulse to keep it. I had no income but my salary. It was large enough for me to live pretty comfortably as a bachelor; it was not so large but that I was obliged to manage very carefully in order to meet the social demands on a man in my official position. Besides I still had some debts contracted during my student years. To put it briefly, fifty dollars meant something to me. It occurred to me that the sum would enable me to order a much-needed new overcoat for the winter.

But that was not all. I felt a thrill of sensuous pleasure at the bare thought of becoming a thief.

I laid my plan quickly and executed it with a coolness that excited my own intense interest and filled me with a secret pride in my clever assurance. While I pretended to watch the game I took a fresh cigar, cut off the point, but dropped my knife as if by accident. It fell exactly in the right spot close to the bill. The other men were too much occupied with the game and too much affected by the cognac to think of being courteous.

With an oath—to simulate chagrin over the accident—I bent down, pretended that I had difficulty in finding what I was looking for, and improved the time by quietly and comfortably tucking the bill inside of my boot. I was very careful to stick it well down into the boot and to pull my trousers well down over the boot.

The whole thing consumed only a few seconds. Then I straightened myself with a tired sigh, leaned back in my chair, and puffed away at my cigar with lazy enjoyment. I resumed my interested remarks on the conduct of the game, taking particular pleasure in directing some well-turned malicious sentences toward the intoxicated baron.

The exciting moment came when the game was at an end. The baron had lost ten or twelve dollars and took out his pocket-book to settle up. He emptied his bills on the table and began to turn them over. "The devil, what a millionaire," I said; "we ought to have plucked him better." As I said so I lifted my glass to drink with the doctor and asked him to convey my compliments to his wife. The glass was still at my lips when I heard the baron say: "The devil, I have lost fifty dollars." I emptied my glass quietly and said: "You have made yourself out worse than you are, baron. Probably it was only fifty dollars you did the minister out of. Or perhaps the magistrate's cognac has the opposite of the usual effect on you. We have arrived at the stage when we see double; I—for example—seem to see you twice as drunk as you probably are, while you seem to see only half."

This not particularly select witticism raised a laugh even from the baron. But a few minutes later, when he had fingered his bills once more, he said: "No, on my soul and salvation, I am fifty dollars short. Listen," he turned to our host, "will you be kind enough, judge, to count? When I left the hotel I had eight fifty-dollar bills and one hundred and fifty dollars in fives. I can't make it out to be more than seven fifty-dollar bills."

The judge took the roll of bills and counted them amid the noisy laughter of the players. My friend the doctor will be able, if he survives me, to testify to the feeling of depression that settled over the party when the judge declared: "No, there are only seven fifty-dollar bills," and the baron, in reply to his grave question, "But are you certain there were more?" said: "Drunk as I am, I know there were eight big bills when I left the hotel, so help me God. I counted them just before I left."

There was an uncomfortable pause. Then the judge said: "I am sorry, baron, but if the money was there it can of course be found."

For a moment I remember I had a feeling of pity, not for the baron, but for the amiable and courteous host, who evidently felt very much pained that such a thing should have happened in his irreproachable household. I was on the point of taking out the vanished bill and declaring that it was all a joke, but I did not. Partly because I wanted the money and partly because I felt again the sensuous thrill of pleasure in committing a crime. The lure was all the stronger from the consciousness that as I sat there I was combining in one person the criminal and the executor of the law.

Then began a feverish search for the lost money, coupled with questions and conjectures. "Are you sure, baron, that the bill is not left in some corner of your pocket?" "Didn't you stop at some store on your way up?" "Couldn't it be possible that you counted wrong when you dressed? Perhaps the bill is in the pocket of your other coat."

The baron, who by this time was quite sober, repeated in rather an unpleasant tone of voice that no misunderstanding was possible.

At last I remarked, throwing a tinge of offended irony into my voice, but speaking in quite a cold and business-like manner: "As the baron is so certain of his point, of course we who have been sitting at the card-table with him have nothing to do but to submit to be searched. As the chief executive of this city, I await the orders of the baron in the matter."

My words had the desired effect. The baron had sense enough to see that it was not possible in a respected household like that of the judge to go to such lengths. He declared grandiloquently that after all it was a mere trifle and that the whole thing would no doubt be cleared up in the morning. The money would, of course, be found either at the house or at the hotel. Anyway, he didn't care about the paltry fifty dollars.

We said good-bye still under the cloud of depression. The judge whispered to me in the hall that he would like to see me the following day.

I walked with the doctor. We both regretted the bad behavior of the baron. If he had not been so drunk, if, in other words, he had known what he said and did, he ought to have been severely reprimanded. He had practically accused the judge's guests of theft. I talked myself into quite a heat of passion over the matter. At last my good friend the doctor tried to laugh it all off.

"Well, suppose it were true," he said. "Suppose you or I had taken the fifty dollars. Would it not have been justifiable from an ethical point of view to rob the baron of his dishonest gains? Should we not have been merely the instruments of avenging justice? Would not the preacher whom he cheated have given us absolution in the name of the Lord?"

"Don't mix the name of God in this matter," I said. "As for me, I think theft is the ugliest of all crimes. I can understand how when frenzied it is possible to commit murder. There may sometimes be fine and high feelings at the root of the impulse to kill. And I can find excuses for those who steal under the pressure of want and hunger, but theft with no motive but that of gain is the lowest of all crimes."

As I spoke I plumed myself on the ring of genuineness with which I voiced my indignation. At the same time I hoped that the bill would not work its way out of the boot while I walked.

At the market-place I parted from the doctor. As soon as I was alone I bent down to assure myself that the money was still there and moved it to a safer hiding-place. I went home gayly whistling and reflecting that I would not change the fifty-dollar bill before the first of the month, when my salary was due. I always changed one or more large bills at the local bank on the day when I drew my salary.

When I came home I lit all the lamps in my room, making it look quite festive, took out a bottle of fine old Madeira, and lit a good cigar. I thought to myself that the baron was probably lighting one of the cigars he had filched from the judge's supply. Was he, after all, better than I?

I have seldom enjoyed a feeling of more perfect well-being. Before me on the table by the side of my glass lay the stolen bill. I felt very rich, all the more because my wealth had come so suddenly and without trouble—like an inheritance or like winning in a lottery.

Before going to bed I hid the bill in a packet of letters that lay in an unlocked box in my store-room. This would be the last place where any one would look for it, where it lay, so to speak, in the highway. I put it inside of the only yellow envelope in the packet so that I could easily find it.

The first thing I did in the morning was to go to the tailor and be measured for a new winter coat. I ordered a silk lining. This was like getting a present, so why not have it as fine as possible?

I went directly from the tailor to the judge, whom

I found in his office. He came to meet me with great cordiality, but with an anxious look on his face.

"My dear friend," he said, "was not that a most annoying affair last night? What do you advise me to do? Unfortunately, there seems no explanation possible except that one of the servants, either my own old Lars or Christian, who came in for the evening must have stolen the money. I know them both a thoroughly honest men, and I can't understand it at all but however it may be, appearances certainly are against them. But the fact is that I would not for anything in the world bring either of them into trouble; they both have families and they are both attached to me and my home. So I want the affair hushed up if possible and arranged without scandal. I had thought, therefore, that I might write the baron that I had found the bill after the guests had gone and that I inclosed it to him. Would not you do the same in my place? Is it not the only proper course to take? Could any one find the least cause for suspicion in that? This was the subject, dear friend, upon which I wished to consult you."

Now the late Judge Lilje was anything but a wealthy man. With very little private fortune, he made an earnest effort to fill in a dignified manner his important social position, and was considered an ornament to the district.

I was sorry that he should pay this sum to the rich baron, to whom fifty dollars meant absolutely nothing. To the judge it meant a loss that would at least be felt even though it did not impose any serious hardship.

Therefore I answered: "My dear Judge Lilje, it seems to me that you take this matter altogether too seriously. Speaking for myself, I am by no means sure that the baron really did lose the fifty dollars at your house. We all know that he was not in a very clear state of mind last night. Who knows if he really lost anything at all? At all events I advise you to wait a day or two."

I succeeded in quieting the judge's scruples, after which I went directly to the hotel. It was as expected, the baron had not yet left. In fact, he was not yet; I found him in bed.

"Now between you and me, baron—as we are both bachelors," I said, "could you really, if it came to an investigation, maintain in court that after your horse trade with the minister and before the dinner at Judge Lilje's you did not stop at any place where it might be possible that the fifty dollars could have vanished? In addition to being a bachelor, you know, I am also a magistrate. In my official capacity, therefore, I am perfectly familiar with the little asylum in Graven's Alley."

The baron and I understood each other. He maintained that he did not think the money could have disappeared in Graven's Alley, but to avoid the gossip of a small town and to spare our venerable host all further annoyance, the baron wrote a letter to the judge stating that he had found the missing bill at the hotel and that he regretted what had taken place.

So everything ended beautifully.

My new winter coat, purchased with the baron's fifty dollars, was excellent and gave good service for a number of years. When it was no longer presentable for street wear I used it in the court-room on cold days. It has saved many a poor thief from a harsh sentence.

In the days of its glory it played at least a secondary part in the courtship that secured me a sweet and lovely wife, with whom I lived happily for twenty years, until she was taken away by death. My wife brought me some money, and so it has always been easy for me to resist any impulse to repeat the theft, which, on my word of honor, is the only one I have ever committed.

I have no doubt it will be said after my death that I was an irreproachable magistrate. So I was—with this one exception.

But this exception—ought it not to be recorded after my death? Is it not more interesting, more instructive, than all the good things that can be said about me? Suppose fortune had not given me a wife with money—Suppose—

I leave my thoughtful readers to draw the conclusion.—Translated for the Argonaut by Hanna Larsen from the Danish of Peter Nansen.

The first commemorative tablet to be set up in the new main hall of the London Central Criminal Court has the following inscription: "Near this site William Penn and William Mead were tried in 1670 for preaching to an unlawful assembly in Gracechurch Street. This tablet commemorates the courage and endurance of the jury, Thomas Vere and Edward Bushell and ten others, who refused to give a verdict against them, although locked up without food for two nights, and were fined for final verdict of not guilty."

George Presbury Rowell of New York, prominent for many years in the newspaper advertising business, died a few days ago. He began the publication of the American Newspaper Directory in 1869. This publication made accessible for the first time to every one a complete list of newspapers. In 1888 he established Printer's Ink, a weekly publication.

A proposal is under consideration in Paris for the introduction of a government label which would guarantee the authenticity of champagne, and, while costing the producer only a penny for each bottle, would at the same time serve the useful purpose of adding from $600,000 to $800,000 annually to the revenue.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

By Sidney G. P. Coryn.

Ruskin somewhere draws attention to the debt that literature and the arts owe to war, and now we find Mr. Howells saying something of the same kind. He tells us that when he began to come forward the Civil War was just over, and as a result the literary tendency of the country was toward reconciliation, moral peace, and the wholesome and inspiring facts of life. He now finds a great change, a "literary demoralization," and a "sentimentalism that consists in a frank appeal to the bare emotions that are unadorned." Modern writing aims "rather at a glittering superficiality than at an analysis of human motive or at a tasteful portrayal of human life." "We have come," says Mr. Howells, "to a period in our writings of quick impressions . . . of character-drawing done for the sake of an outward novelty in appearance rather than to indicate the eternal inward motives and experiences of human nature."

Borderland Studies, by George M. Gould, M. D. Published by P. Blakiston's Son & Co., Philadelphia; 2 volumes.

If the medical profession is to receive a not undeserved trouncing it ought to be at hands so well qualified as those of the author. Dr. Gould was editor of the Medical News and of the Philadelphia Medical Journal, as well as being the author of a series of medical and other works. He now takes his own profession in hand with a faithful sincerity that commands our admiration, although it may be doubted if even his strictures will serve to awaken the force of a popular superstition that has now chosen the doctor rather than the priest for its object. Dr. Gould seems to maintain that considerable sections of the medical profession have so far fallen from the original grace of their high calling as to deserve a classification at the points of vanity, hypocrisy, and ignorance with Christian Scientists, healers, astrologers, mediums, and the unclean hordes of quackery. And he seems to make good his contention.

His chapter on crank, megalomaniac, morphinomaniac, dotard criminal, and insane physicians is particularly interesting. He says that the class is a large one and is mainly composed of specialists and "leading consultants." These vultures prey upon popular ignorance, and the more abominable their practices, the more spectacular their operations, the more unblushing their criminality, the more sensational their treatments, the greater is their golden harvest. The author very truly says that the whole profession is smirched by its black sheep, since they are allowed to retain the diplomas given to them in the days of their innocence.

Other important chapters are "Disease and Sin," "Some Intellectual Weeds of American Growth," "Some Ethical Questions," and the "Seven Deadly Sins of Civilization." Indeed, the whole work is well worth reading. It is forceful, direct, and sincere.

White Rose of Weary Leaf, by Violet Hunt. Published by Brentano's, New York.

This is hardly a book for the schoolgirl, if, indeed, there is any class of literature from which that progressive young person is still debarred. It is the story of Amy Stevens, governess and "adventuress," who, being entirely friendless and penniless, is naturally supposed to be also entirely without morals, as of course such persons usually are. Acting on a sudden impulse, she saves Sir Mervyn Dymond from suicide and loses her situation as a result. Becoming secretary to that somewhat dissolute aristocrat, she finds herself once more stranded upon his death, and with a record more dubious than ever. She eventually becomes companion in the household of Mr. Dand, who is already a little tired of his young, beautiful, and silly wife and quite ready to fall victim to the unconscious wiles of Amy. To further summarize the story would be to brutalize it. The author herself keeps upon the right side of the safety line, although she sometimes steers very close to the wind. Amy reminds us strongly of Jane Eyre. Without beauty or any special charm except uncompromising efficiency, and without any desire to fascinate, she lays an irresistible spell upon every man with whom she comes in contact, and if she eventually falls, her fall is dignified and even splendid. We could wish her a better fate.

The Diary of a Looker-On, by C. Lewis Hind. Published by the John Lane Company, New York; $2.

These charming essays have appeared from time to time in American and English newspapers and magazines, and their publication in volume form will be welcomed by a wide circle of admirers. They have been amended either by extension or curtailment and grouped according to the months when they were written and in the order of their origin.

The author will not take a high place among the essayists. His position of detachment, as a "looker-on" prevents him from touching the heart and he is too discursive and too brief to touch the head. Under the heading of February, for example, we find seven essays on such diverse subjects as "A Maeterlinck Matinee," "A Mission Service," "A Vision on the Rhone," "Thomas Hardy," "Danes," "Modern Dutchmen," and "Old Dutchmen." The seven essays occupy twenty-three pages and there are very few of more than four pages throughout the volume.

But though their proper place is in the newspaper or magazine rather than in this volume, these little papers are wonderfully clever with a whimsical sagacity and a humorous insight all their own. They cover nearly the whole field of impressionism—art, music, literature, religion, philosophy, natural history, travel, education, and there is always a dainty touch and a quaint conceit.

The Statue, by Eden Philpotts and Arnold Bennett. Published by Moffat, Yard & Co., New York.

This is one of the stories that remain uninteresting in spite of continuous sensation. The first chapter introduces us to an air of unreality when we are asked to suppose that Carl Courlander, intriguer and financier, has laid out his vast grounds and built a statue two hundred feet high without the knowledge of his friends or intimates. Then follows Courlander's murder on the eve of his loan to Germany, which would have precipitated an European war. We have the trial and conviction of his business rival, Crampiron, the continuing mystery of the statue, Crampiron's escape from prison, and a tangle of politics, cabinet meetings, love affairs, mysteries, and romances. The story fails to impress because the authors are carelessly undeterred by improbabilities, however glaring.

My Life and My Lectures, by Lamar Fontaine, C. E., Ph. D. Published by the Neale Publishing Company, New York and Washington; $3.

The author certainly has a story worth telling, and that he knows how to tell it is proved by his book. When he was ten years old he was captured by Comanche Indians. For sixteen years he has wandered through the strange nooks and corners of the world. He crossed the Sahara on a camel, explored the Chinese Wall, the Amazon, and the Great Andean Plateau. He was wounded sixty-seven times in the Civil War and was one of the Six Hundred Morris Islands prisoners, and we have General Robert E. Lee's word for it that sixty men fell from his single rifle at Waterloo Bridge in 1862. If, therefore, he can not tell a good story it is not for lack of material, but that he can indeed tell the best kind of a story in the best kind of a way is sufficiently shown by his fascinating book.

Fairy Tales from Folk Lore, by Herschel Williams. Published by Moffat, Yard & Co., New York; $1.

The author has succeeded in finding something new in folk lore. He tells us that each of his tales is a piece of genuine folk lore, never before published, from the early days of a different nation and possessing, therefore, the characteristics of the people from whom it sprang. The tales are certainly remarkable and worthy of publication and of a wide perusal.

The Standard Concert Guide, by George P. Upton. Published by A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago; $1.75.

Music lovers of all grades will welcome a volume of such practical utility and scope. Mr. Upton's earlier works are well known, covering the standard oratorios, cantatas, and symphonies. These are incorporated in the present volume, which has been thoroughly revised and edited and contains additional matter in regard to the leading poems and works by Brückner, Cowen, Dvorak, Elgar, Franck, Mackenzie, Parker, Parry, Sinding, Strauss, and Tschalkowsky. The text is without technicalities and is particularly suited to those whose appreciation of music is unscientific, while nearly sixty well executed illustrations add largely to the interest of the volume.

New Publications.

If the Socialists are going to adopt the propaganda by short story we may as well give up the fight. Charles H. Kerr & Co. have published a volume entitled "Stories of the Struggle," by Morris Winchevsky. There are fifteen of them.

Those who wish to know something of the English campaign against Socialism should become acquainted with the publications of the British Constitution Association. P. S. King & Son, Westminster, London, have just issued a handy little volume entitled "Political Socialism. A Remonstrance," edited by Mark H. Judge and containing a collection of papers by members of the Association, with presidential addresses by Lord Balfour of Burleigh and Lord Hugh Cecil. These papers are of a high order, thoughtful, sincere, and direct, and having a world-wide application. The price is given as one shilling, but the publishers would do well to arrange for American representation.

James P. Haverson has hit upon a new vein in his "Sour Sonnets of a Sorehead and Other Songs of the Street." His verse is direct and rich in humorous argot, while the illustrations are vigorous and clever. Published by the H. M. Caldwell Company, Boston and New York.

"The Blotting Book," by E. F. Benson, is a good detective story in which the murderer is detected by the impression in a blotting book of an incriminating letter. This particular feature is, of course, sadly hackneyed. The modern criminal, knowing what is expected of him, always attends to the blotter with scrupulous care. The story is published by Doubleday, Page & Co., New York. Price, $1.

SOUPS

Stews and Hashes are given just that "finishing touch" which makes a dish perfect, by using

LEA & PERRINS SAUCE

THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

It is a delicate seasoning for all kinds of Fish, Meats, Game, Salads, Cheese and Chafing Dish Cooking. It gives appetizing relish to an otherwise insipid dish. For over Seventy Years it has been the favorite sauce.

See that Lea & Perrins signature is on wrapper and label Beware of inferior sauces put up in similar bottles

John Duncan's Sons, Agents, New York

The Emporium

Announces the OPENING of its NEW STORE on Thursday, October 1st. 1908.

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.

There is a lesson for wisecracks of the theatrical world in the success of David Warfield, but it is useless to point it out. Those who can not see it could not be made to appreciate it.

The fourth and positively the last week of David Warfield in "The Music Master" at the New Alcazar Theatre begins next Monday.

The Valencia Theatre is drawing well this week with Paul Potter's play, "The Conquerors," produced with a beauty and amplitude of stage settings that may well be regarded as establishing a record in the city.

"Girl" plays have had a vogue for more than one season, and there is probably the best of reasons for their success. At the Van Ness Theatre for the past two weeks "The Girl Question" has been doing well.

Next week, "The Time, the Place, and the Girl" comes to the Van Ness, and in spite of the similarity of name the offering is new and different. It is another musical comedy by an entirely distinct company, though of course there is fun and melody and rhythmic movement by a big organization of principals and chorus.

"The Toreador" at the Princess Theatre this week is to be ranked with the most pleasing of its productions in the year of comic opera which is nearly completed. Christina Nielsen and Sybil Page sing with charm. Zoe Barnett has a Spanish siren stiletto part eminently to her taste.

Monday evening next "The Highwayman," a Smith and De Koven success, will be put on at the Princess. Ferris Hartman will have the rôle of Foxy Quiller, a detective-policeman, and will duplicate his former amusing characterization. Arthur Cunningham will have one of the most congenial of parts in Dick Fitzgerald, an Irish soldier of fortune.

Belasco and Mayer, owners and managers of the New Alcazar Theatre, have leased the Novelty Theatre for a limited season and will produce next week, beginning Sunday afternoon, "The Devil," the present reigning dramatic sensation in New York.

Sunday afternoon the Orpheum will present some specially attractive features for the new bill of the week. Jane Courthope, supported by Charles Forrester and Master Ross, will appear in a sketch of mining life entitled "Lucky Jim."

Claude and Fannie Usher in their slang classic, "Fagan's Decision," the Reiff Brothers, and of Jesse Lasky's "Pianophiends."

"The Grand Army Man" will be presented at the New Alcazar Theatre before the close of David Warfield's engagement. There is as insistent a demand for his appearance as Wes. Bigelow as there was for his opening at Von Barwig.

Dustin Farnum will open at the Van Ness Theatre in "The Squaw Man" on October 11.

Oscar Apfel, long a favorite with the Princess Theatre comic opera company and an actor of intelligence and capacity, is now in Minneapolis, engaged as stage director at the new Lyric Theatre.

LITERARY NOTES.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

The Rev. John Bannister Tahb of St. Charles's College, Ellicott City, Maryland, is nearly blind, but he remains at the college for the present, not as a guest, as the faculty would gladly have him, but as a boarder, the arrangement being permitted because he would seek some other asylum were he not allowed to have his own way.

Andrew Lang tells the "story of the life and death of Jeanne d'Arc" in a book soon to be published in London. Mr. Lang hopes that he has been able to throw new light on certain obscure parts of the Maid's history.

Plans have been formed at Richmond, Virginia, for a revival of the famous Southern Literary Messenger, once conducted by Edgar Allan Poe. The magazine in its reestablishment will be edited from Richmond, its original home, by Southern men.

Mrs. Flora Annie Steel has often shown us in her novels and stories that she has a wide knowledge of modern life in India. In her latest work, "India Through the Ages," she shows that she knows the country's past as well.

The Lloyd Scott Travel Talks.

Next Monday morning the sale of course tickets for the two courses of illustrated Travel Talks by Lloyd Scott will open at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s Van Ness Avenue store. The courses are so arranged that subscribers can go three times in the first week and twice the second and hear all the interesting subjects.

Interesting and fascinating as these entertainments are, few realize the fact until at least one of them has been heard. The constant changing of views, motion pictures, and panoramas keeps spectators continually absorbed, and, as an Eastern critic wrote, "it is taking a foreign journey in an easy chair."

Saturday matinees will be given for school children at half-rates, and the announcement of these will appear next week. The subjects will be "Ireland," "Egypt," "India," "Japan," and "Russia."

Special rates will be made schools, colleges, seminaries, and study clubs on application to Will L. Greenbaum at Lyric Hall.

As a dramatic author, Denman Thompson has done with New England (in his way, to be sure) just what Boucicault did with his native environment, what De Musset and Augier did with French life and morals and what the younger Dumas did with the Parisian Bohemia of his day.

Henry Miller is soon to produce another play by the author of "The Servant in the House." Its title is "The Winter Feast," and the scenes are laid in Iceland at the time of the heroic age, when Druidism still lingered there.

Mrs. Casey's Politics, Fruit, and Geography.

'Tis bad for'm for to boast, as my Michael said to the cop from the Oak-Street station who t'reatened to break his head, and Michael tukt the nightstick away from him and thim tukt it all over him wid his bare fists.

"They do better in polytics. The wonderer is they ever lose. 'Tis so like fighting. But Bryan's an Irish name, too. If he would shrut less and thrade more 'twud be a gr-rand thing for the party. To shrut and to pose; thim is Mr. Bryan's worst faults. As the dear dead poet says, 'Why, man, he doth hesthride the narrow wurruld,' he says, 'like a Colossus'—a sort of a giant, d'ye mind?—'like a Colossus; and we petty men,' says he, 'walk undher his huge legs and peep about,' he says, 'to find ourselves dishonorable graves,' says he.

"Casey and I—'twas whin me ould man wus living—wanst heard a actor wid Eddie Booth say thim lively lines and I niver forgot thim. They fit Mr. Bryan and there's a man I love too. My Michael wud fight for him. He does. He's captain of our precinct and anny man, be he Dago, Greek, or Scandi-hoovian, who won't promise to vote for Mr. Bryan gets a walop from my Michael. He has most of thim pledged.

"Thim apples is two for five or three for tin cints. Thank ye. They come from Oregon. And that's a fa'ar country too. 'Tis further than Albany, and that's curious, for the boats only run as far as Albany. Ye transfer there to the ca'ars, Michael says, and stop in 'em till you come to the ind. That's Oregon. I shud love to see some of those forn pa'arts of the United States. But Teddy has been pinching them so fast it bothers me for to kape thrack of all the forn counthries we own.

"He's a great pincher, Teddy is. But he's a man I love, at that. He has taking ways. If a thing looks good to him 'It's mine,' says he. And it is so, no matter how much of a holler the man who owned it first lets out. The people never saw it till Teddy got it, so they think it's his. That makes it his, d'ye see?"—New York Sun.

The La Vigne Concert.

The concert to be given by M. Noe Joseph La Vigne, dramatic baritone, at Lyric Hall next Thursday evening, October 1, at 8:15, is arousing no little interest. M. La Vigne will be assisted by Miss Betty Scholtz, a talented young violinist, and Miss Alma Rudolph and Mr. F. B. Kirwan will act as accompanists. M. La Vigne will sing the prologue to "I Pagliacci," "La Donna e Mobile," from "Rigoletto," Schubert's "Erl-King," Mattei's "Tis Not Time," Roedel's "Coming of the King," Tosti's "Good-Bye," and several other selections. A feature of his work will be that he will give all of his numbers in their original languages. Miss Scholtz, who is a graduate of the Berlin Conservatory of Music, will play De Beriot's Seventh Concerto, op. 76, Schumann's Traumeri, Eichorn's First Hungarian Dance, Vieuxtemps's Fantasia from Lombardi, and the Legende of Wieniawski. Reserved seats will range from 75 cents to $1.50, and will be ready at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s Van Ness Avenue store Tuesday morning at nine o'clock.

Sarasate, the Spanish violinist, is dead. His name in full was Pablo Martin Meliton Sarasate y Navasquez, and he was born in Pamplona, Spain, in 1844. He was a student at the Paris Conservatoire when he was twelve years old, and began while yet a youth his career as a player, appearing in concerts in all parts of Europe and in North and South America. As a composer his work was essentially Spanish, and brilliant, but it was confined to fantasias and dances.

Eye-comfort is often the result of knowing where to get your glasses.

HIRSCH & KAISER

218 Post St.

Opticians

JUST A BOOK STORE

Robertson's

1539 Van Ness Ave. NEAR PINE

"Next to the White House"

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS. Bear the script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label. Get "Improved," no tacks required. Wood Rollers Tin Rollers

Bonestell, Richardson & Co.

PAPER

The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us. CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE 118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna, San Francisco.

Tennent's

Ale and Stout

from Wellpark Brewery Glasgow, Scotland

Forbes Bros., Agents, 1926 Sutter St.

MT. TAMALPAIS AND MUIR WOODS VIA SAUSALITO FERRY FOOT OF MARKET ST. LEGAL HOLIDAYS-SUNDAY TIME

Table with 6 columns: WEEK DAY, Lv. San Francisco, SUN-DAY, Lv. Muir Woods, WEEK DAY, Lv. Tamalpais. Includes departure times for various days and ferry information.

FOR SALE

A BARGAIN

Beautiful Artistic Residence

12 rooms and 3 baths; hardwood inlaid floors throughout.

Unobstructed Marine View

The mantels and fixtures in this house are the most attractive ever installed in this city. House just completed, has never been occupied.

EXTRA LARGE CORNER LOT

75 x 102 ft. with "L"

For full particulars see

Shainwald, Buckbee & Co. No. 27 Montgomery St.

Interior of magnificent living room

MELODRAMA—BALLAD OPERA.

By Josephine Hart Phelps.

The Mission is great. Start not, gentle North-of-Market. Anyway, it's great on the map of the city, and in the figures of the census. But it is a mighty good place to keep away from, if you're looking for a seat in the cars.

The Mission now contains 60 per cent of the city's population. At least so they have claimed in a local journal devoted to the material betterment of that delightful section. I believe it, too, most firmly, for the whole 50 per cent are very much in evidence, particularly in the evenings, when they pour frantically into the street-cars, and proceed to get themselves as far as possible removed from the quietness of the fireside hearth.

As a result of this special frenzy for amusement the Mission is liberally sprinkled with cheap vaudeville theatres. There are any quantity of San Francisco people that never set foot in the Mission, and, indeed, with that calm, egotistic indifference of the city animal to all that fails to specially concern him, are blandly oblivious of all facts concerning the Mission except that one incontrovertible fact of its existence.

For the instruction of these people, I will inform them that, since the fire, Mission Street is promoted to a grade akin to that formerly enjoyed by upper Market Street. Mission Street is lined with candy stores, ice-cream saloons, freak sideshows, Midway Pleasures, vaudeville theatres, restaurants, department stores, gaping crowds, and electric lights. In a word, Mission Street, in the language of south of Market, is it.

But all the same, it has been reserved for Valencia Street, that soberer and more decorous parallel to the showier thoroughfare, to be the location of the most high-class theatre of the Mission. This is the Valencia Theatre, a handsome and commodious play-house, with a stage lofty and ample enough to warrant the putting on of the showiest and most scenic of Adelphi dramas. They have been, therefore, running "The Great Ruby," which makes the yokels stare.

Common sight though it is, it is not wholly uninteresting to see an automobile whiz by, leaving a cloud of dust and odoriferousness in its wake. But in "The Great Ruby," all necks are craned when a car comes zig-zagging on and off, while, anon, a later and loftier tally-ho quite casts its less ample predecessor into the shade. These vehicles disport themselves on a tremendous stage set for a street scene in front of a jewelry store, in which all kinds of exciting events are transpiring, and before the windows of which passes and repasses a multitude of mimic urbans.

For life in "The Great Ruby" is screwed up to concert pitch, and goes to the tune of a persistent orchestra, which, by the by, is too subdued for the rather poor acoustics of the building.

There are a lot of vague people in "The Great Ruby" who talk too much. That is one mistake of this otherwise effective melodrama. In this style of drama people should be concise, even reticent. Movement, breathless movement, is the thing, for melodrama is action, not acting. I did not quite know what all these talky-talky people were up to, and didn't particularly care, but when the prince and the count-hurglar had a fight in mid-air, in a very realistic looking balloon, with dim masses of painted vapor all about them, my, but it was some pumpkins! Then it was melodrama, and I really almost persuaded my well-regulated pulse to accelerate its beat in time with those all about me.

The management of the Valencia Theatre has engaged a large company of satisfactory talent, and it looks as if the enterprising Alcazar was going to have a rival, as the new theatre is near enough to Market Street to draw patrons from sections of the city other than the Mission.

Robert Warwick is the big card. He is the leading man. We shall see him do some real acting in "The Conquerors," an opportunity which is scarcely afforded in "The Great Ruby," although he makes a fine appearance as the Indian prince. Mr. Warwick has duly cultivated the voice and manner appropriate to the hero of melodrama, although it seems scarcely necessary that he should pitch his already deep voice away down into his diaphragm. He will probably experience a decided sense of relief when he fishes it up again in "The Conquerors."

Miss Willette Kershaw is pretty and has an engaging personality. She is the leading woman, but has a decided bent for the line of work of the more sprightly ingenue. Miss Kershaw dresses to kill, which pleases the women mightily.

Blanche Douglas made an effective heavy villainess in "The Great Ruby." Miss Douglas, by the way, entered in one scene gowned in a creation which sent a consolidated thrill down the spine of the assembled femininity in front.

A whisper woke the air, A soft, light tone, and low.

It was "Directoire." But the fair wearer had not nailed her colors to the mast. She had had a misgiving at the last moment, and had pinned together the folds of the coquettish division with a disappointingly decorous brooch.

It seems to me that there are too many characters and scenes in "The Great Ruby," there being fourteen of the latter, which gives the public more for its money than it had bargained for.

Quite the most artless character in the play is the story-book detective, who hables state secrets in the hearing of the most casual of listeners, and who seems to be in the right place when he is being babied by Lady Garnet, after being tricked by a delightfully melodramatic quartet of thieves. The author has been rather neglectful of his opportunities. A detective should either thrill us or amuse us in melodrama, and Cecil Raleigh causes his to do neither. But it is rather a comfort to see a detective around any way. One of the unwritten laws of melodrama is that there should always be a suggestion of spectacular crime in the background, so, on the whole, we derived a modicum of satisfaction from the presence of the kindergarten detective.

* * *

Once more we have heard "Maritana," that shallow yet limpid fount of sweet and simple melodies from which we have all quaffed in the long ago. The last time I saw the opera Emma Abbott appeared as Maritana, wearing in the gipsy girl's guise of court lady, a huge, shallow diamond in the middle of her forehead, which gave her a hateful look, suggesting wicked Little Three Eyes in the fairy tale.

Edith Mason was a much prettier, but tamer Maritana, indulging in no such tutterings, gaspings, and heart-clutchings as honest Emma, who always conscientiously delivered the goods to the last and least consignment. Miss Mason is sweet and placid, utterly un-suggestive in her Saxon fairness, of the traditional gipsy whose darkling yet vivid beauty captured the sated regards of the Spanish king.

As the Italian beauty in "The Loves of Hoffman," Miss Mason's face had looked so pretty beneath its setting of chon hair that it was a pity she did not, in "Maritana," similarly conform to stage conventions. But her sweet, trilling voice was charmingly at ease in the execution of Maritana's pretty melodies, and, indeed, the entire company was so disposed that the evening was one of uncarping enjoyment.

I do not think that Thomas Persse has the temperament for Don Cesar, but goodness gracious, what man out of a book ever had? Don Cesar de Bazan is about as unreal as they make them. The dash and swagger of the part is very much in line with the purely mechanical adjustment of situation and plot. The fact that the chorus is on the stage seeming to be suggestive of the need for change of theme, the Angelus is, as it were, announced, and all hands around plump down on their knees and sing their little hymn.

Don Cesar de Bazan takes a refreshing little nap, preceding the hour of his hanging, and innocent Lazarillo seizes the opportunity to sing over his unconscious figure, in the rich contralto voice of Bernice Holmes, that singularly inappropriate ballad about the "mansions of the blest," whither the reckless roysterer is presumably wending his way.

The "Let Me Like a Soldier Fall" was not so palpably dragged in, and was the most enjoyable number sung by Thomas Persse, who gave it with fine spirit, and with full employment of that unshunnable ring in his voice, which, in passages of tender sentiment, is sometimes too forth-putting.

Even the slight rôle of the king was sung agreeably by Robert Lett, although in the smallest of voices.

"And which song did you enjoy most of all?" I asked different ones who had heard and enjoyed the ballad opera. One said, "Scenes That Are Brightest." Another, "Let Me Like a Soldier Fall." One even voted for the chorus, "Pretty Gitana, Tell Us, Tell Us," I think because the voter had pleasant memories of a group gathering around the home piano and singing it in gleeful chorus.

That is the charm of "Maritana." It is a sort of home opera. Everybody knows it, or a good part of it. Everybody has sung something from it, one time or another. So we forgive the loud creaking of the machinery that is so plainly audible, for the sake of the delightful old tunes that we love:

The tunes that the voice of girlhood sung, The chords that we loved full well, When hopes were buoyant, hearts were young, When fairy-bells in the flower-cups rung, And ever there fell from a maiden's tongue, The words of a witching spell.

A scrap of rather commonplace, if pretty, newspaper rhyme, but it expresses the charm of "Maritana." "In Happy Moments" is a special instance, and, as rendered by Mr. Swickard, is to my taste the song of the whole tuneful group that has been sung with the most appealing sentiment. I can not say that the singer prepared us for the pleasure he gave us. We knew in advance that he had a most agreeable voice. He had already demonstrated that fact in "The Love Tales of Hoffman," but even as that nefarious schemer, Don Jose, he needn't have made himself so pointedly villainous. To be sure, there is very little consistency about these pastebord villains, but even so, it was rather funnily incongruous when the self-seeking schemer suddenly dropped his character and burst into that charming old ballad of tender retrospect. It was a treat, but I do wish Mr. Swickard wouldn't so often crook his knees and give them such a very villainous expression. Please, Mr. Swickard, sir, won't you stop that trick of crooking your knees, and when we go to see you in "Fra Diavolo," as we all most assuredly shall, we'll give you an extra round of applause in recognition of this slight reformation, as well as in memory of "In Happy Moments."

Concerts at the Greek Theatre.

Another series of concerts will be given in the Greek Theatre, Berkeley, on Saturday nights, beginning on the evening of September 26, and they will differ from those of the summer in that they will be orchestral where the programmes of the others were rendered by a big military band. The programmes Paul Steindorff, the director, is about to give will entail only music of the popular order, and will be given at popular prices. General admission is to be 25 cents, with an additional quarter for seats in the reserved section. There will be greater accommodations for the handling of the crowds and the sale of tickets each week will open earlier.

Mr. Steindorff will open the series on the night of September 26 and will play the second concert on the night of October 3. On the Saturday night following the Pasmore Sisters will entertain, assisted by an orchestra of thirty-five pieces. The closing concert will be given by Steindorff on Saturday night, October 17.

The programme for the first concert has been submitted by Mr. Steindorff and approved by the university authorities. He will introduce it with the more light and airy compositions from Holst and Victor Herbert, and close with selections from Beethoven and Wagner.

At Bayreuth all the seats for twenty performances of Wagner's operas were sold several months in advance. Twenty times 1600 seats means 32,000, which, at $5 a seat, means $160,000. The expenses can not exceed $60,000, which leaves $100,000 profit in the hands of Wagner's heirs, according to the statistician of the New York Evening Post.

Henry E. Dixey will head one of "The Devil" companies which is to be sent on tour by Manager Savage.

GRANADA HOTEL

— OPENS —

OCTOBER 1, 1908

Situated at Sutter and Hyde Streets

Midway between the business and resident sections of the city

A strictly first-class hotel on the American plan. ABSOLUTELY FIRE PROOF.

All rooms and baths outside exposure; every modern improvement; luxuriously furnished.

Perfect service and cuisine, and an atmosphere of home comfort rarely met with in a hotel.

Special monthly terms to families. Reservations can be made at the hotel.

E. S. DE WOLFE, Manager

Formerly proprietor Hotel Pleasanton

GREEK THEATRE

Musical and Dramatic Committee of the University of California announces

FOUR POPULAR SATURDAY NIGHT ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS

with

MR. PAUL STEINDORFF

directing an orchestra of

FIFTY ARTISTS

BEGINNING SEPTEMBER 26

and October 3 and 17

Miss LYDIA STURTEVANT (Contralto) Soloist

The Misses Pasmore assisted by an orchestra of 35 on October 10.

ADMISSION - - 25 cents

Chair section 25 cents extra

LYRIC HALL

Larkin Street near Eddy

Thursday Evening, October 1, at 8:15

CONCERT

— GIVEN BY —

Mons. NOE JOSEPH LA VIGNE

Dramatic Baritone

Assisted by Miss BETTY SCHOLTZ, Violinist, and Miss Alma Rudolph and Mr. F. B. Kirwan, Accompanists.

Reserved seats, $1.50, $1 and 75c. On sale at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s, 1635 Van Ness Avenue, Tuesday morning, September 29.

AMUSEMENTS

The Lloyd Scott "TRAVEL TALKS"

Illustrated with over 100 colored views, panoramas and motion pictures

Christian Science Hall Sacramento and Scott Sts.

Two Courses, commencing Monday, October 5

Subjects: "INDIA," "JAPAN," "RUSSIA," "EGYPT," "IRELAND"

COURSE TICKETS (5 subjects), $4.00, $3.00, $2.00.

On sale Monday next at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s, Van Ness and California.

SINGLE EVENTS 50c, 75c, $1.00. Ready next Thursday, October 1, at both stores.

Oakland Course—Maple Hall, Monday, October 19.

Beatrice Fine-Anna Miller Wood Concert at Christian Science Hall, October 22.

ORPHEUM ELLIS STREET NEAR FILLMORE

Absolutely Class A Theatre Building

Week beginning this Sunday afternoon

Matinee Every Day

ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE

JANE COURTHOPE and Company, in a thrilling story of the Sierras, "Lucky Jim"; HILLARION and ROSALIA CEBALLOS and their PHANTASTIC PHANTOMS; VINIE DALY; SWOR BROTHERS; SEVEN YULLIANS; THE USHERS; REIFF BROTHERS; New Orpheum Motion Pictures; Last Week of Jesse L. Lasky's PIANOPHIENDS.

Evening prices, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box seats, $1. Matinee prices (except Sundays and holidays), 10c, 25c, 50c. Phone, WEST 6000.

PRINCESS THEATRE Ellis Street near Fillmore

S. LOVERICH, Manager

Class "A" Theatre Phone West 663

Matinee Saturday and Sunday

Last Two Nights of "THE TOREADOR"

Beginning Next Monday Night

FERRIS HARTMAN

In De Koven and Smith's charming musical romance

THE HIGHWAYMAN

ARTHUR CUNNINGHAM in his great rôle of Dick Fitzgerald

Popular prices—Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Mats. (except Sundays and holidays), 25c, 50c.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Tel. West 6036

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers

Corner Sutter and Steiner Sts. Absolute Class "A" bldg

Commencing Monday Evening, Sept. 28

Fourth and positively last week of David

Belasco's presentation of DAVID WARFIELD and his New York company in

THE MUSIC MASTER

Prices: Evening and matinee, 50c to $2

Matinee Thursday and Saturday

Oct. 5—MR. WARFIELD in "A GRAND ARMY MAN." For one week only.

NOVELTY THEATRE O'Farrell and Steiner Sts.

Phone West 3990

Week Commencing SUNDAY AFTERNOON,

September 27

Belasco & Mayer present

THE DEVIL

New York's Reigning Dramatic Sensation

Prices—Evening, 25c to $1. Matinee, 25c, 50c

Matinee Saturday and Sunday

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove St.

Phone Market 500

Beginning Monday, September 28

Matinee Saturday Only

Another Askin-Singer Company and Music

Play Hit—The Whirlwind Success

THE TIME, THE PLACE AND THE GIRL

—WITH—

JOHN E. YOUNG

And a Big Singing and Dancing Chorus

Prices, $1.50 to 50c

VALENCIA THEATRE Valencia St. or 14th Phone 17 Market

San Francisco's newest and most beautiful playhouse

VALENCIA STOCK COMPANY

Including ROBERT WARWICK

Beginning Sunday Matinee, September 27

THE SENSATION OF THE CENTURY

THE DEVIL

A play by Franz Molnar. Only authorized version to be seen in San Francisco.

Matinee Sunday, Wednesday and Saturday

Beginning October 5—"Graustark."

THE LATEST STYLES IN Choice Woolens

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

108-110 Sutter St. French Bank Bldg.

VANITY FAIR.

What times they do have in New York, to be sure. We have been reading the description of the annual fall fashion exhibition lately held in the Masonic Temple, and we naturally wonder why such enterprise and such initiative should be confined to the national metropolis. Why, if such a show as this could be transferred to the unsophisticated West there would be no hall large enough to hold the crowds, while the entrance fees of men alone would pay for the whole thing and then leave a handsome margin of profit.

The presiding genius of the show is Mrs. Elizabeth A. C. White, and what this gifted lady does not know of women's apparel is simply not knowledge. And what a sprightly way she has of conveying her teachings and with what a wealth of expedient she demonstrates them. The presence of more or less unprotected males does not daunt Mrs. White for a moment. If they are so careless of honor and reputation as to be present at such an exhibit, upon their own heads be the result. Many a man has lost his character for less than that.

Now, take the subject of corsets. It is a topic that we would fain avoid, but the choice is not ours. We do but blushing follow in Mrs. White's footsteps somewhat hoping that the ground will open and swallow us. Really we did not know that Mrs. White would talk about corsets, but wait a while. Mrs. White will do more than talk.

"Women of sense," began Mrs. White—and the severity of her glance dared women of any other variety to do as much as breathe—"understand that a good figure is a mighty fine asset." Pausing for a moment to challenge an impossible contradiction, this Boadicea among modistes plunged recklessly into her subject. "Corsets," she said, "are useful in concealing defects and in giving a woman the appearance of having a better figure than she really possesses." Open confession is good for the soul. Mrs. White seemed to be more at ease, while the women who heard her looked discreetly upon the ground as though deliberating a proposition now advanced for the first time. Such a thing had never occurred to any of them.

But what the reporter would call a "sensation" was now evident among the few brazen males who proved by their presence that they were dead to all sense of shame. Mrs. White with her concluding words had stamped upon the stage, and as though in obedience to a magician's call three young women were "discovered" in the centre of the stage and these three young women were clothed in corsets. They had, of course, other things on as well—under the corsets, but nothing over them. One young woman might without offense be called fat, very fat. The second was thin, very thin, while as for the third girl, the one with blue eyes and a dimple, who stood to the extreme left, even the most critical male eye could find no point for stricture. In fact, one of the more unabashed males present was understood to believe that she was a "peach."

Now note the commanding genius of Mrs. White. With a wave of her wand she dismissed her trio, only to cause their reappearance a few moments later. And what a change! What a transformation. In that so brief space of time they had unriveted their boiler plates and donned other coats of mail cunningly contrived to do the very things that Mrs. White had been talking about. It was a triumph of mind over matter. The fat girl was no longer fat, just "comfortable like," so to speak. The thin girl was no longer thin, but of a more reasonable and pleasant dimension, while as for the blue-eyed damsel with the dimple she was just as cute as ever. Art could do nothing for her where artistic nature had already done so much.

Then it was that Mrs. White soared to her finest flights of eloquence. She knew she had scored and that she only had to point her moral and adorn her tale. With a pathetic fervor she pleaded for the corset. The corset represented a duty that women owed to themselves and to the world, instead of which they allowed themselves to be deluded by the idea that these gifts of God could be handed out to any unreflecting woman who was willing to pay the price. But inspiration can not be bought. Aesthetic insight can not be bought. We must have patience and knowledge, labor and devotion. With these things "a woman can get the right kind of corset for $1." What do you think of that? No wonder there was applause in court, or that the enthusiasm of the men became unmanageable.

Now, corsets are had enough, but there was worse to follow. What are we to say to an exhibition of lingerie of all kinds and of all colors and upon a whole crowd of pretty girls? But there! After all there are limits, and we will accept Mrs. White's assurance that the demonstration "covered every detail."

We should like to leave this subject, but justice compels us to say that Mrs. White is not only a great demonstrator, but a great inventor. She has devised a contrivance for the abolition of the obtrusive hip and she displayed its potencies at the Masonic Temple. The victim was a fat girl named Julia, and it was a sight for men and angels—especially for those to see the application and the amazing efficacy of this great invention upon Julia.

When the new corset was in position and the proper pressure reached, the unfortunate girl simply wilted away, and the objectionable hip that could not be absolutely abolished and that simply had to find other quarters was forced up between her shoulders. Still another contrivance chased the offending hip in the opposite direction and brought it into collision with the ankle. It is, after all, a very simple matter of readjustment. Mrs. White made it abundantly clear that the female form divine, when rightly handled, is but as clay in the hands of the potter.

The London Globe reminds us that some of the observances of fashionable society had their origin in physical defects. The elevated handshake, it seems, is one of these observances. It appears that a prince, a leader of society in the French capital, had a carbuncle or some such inconvenient and painful growth on his shoulder. Whenever a friend gave him a handshake the operation, so far as the prince was concerned, was most painful. To prevent this he raised his hand horizontally to his shoulder, and, if we may use the expression, had "the whip hand."

This new method of handshake was the astonishment and admiration of certain persons always on the lookout for the latest in society, who thought that the prince had inaugurated a new fashion which one sees daily in operation in the Strand.

The dainty lace handkerchief which ladies use owes its origin also to the defects of nature. The unhappy Empress Josephine introduced the fashion. She suffered from bad teeth, and living in the time when American dentistry was unknown, she cast about her for some means to hide the defect. The cambric handkerchief with rich lace was the outcome. If the empress wished to laugh or had to open her mouth widely the handkerchief was requisitioned.

Again, yellow lace has its origin in sadness, according to tradition. A lady of distinction had lost her husband by shipwreck or some other cause. She was impressed with the idea that he would return, and vowed to continue wearing until he was restored to her the lace which adorned her dress when she said farewell. Like Josephine's handkerchief, her intimates thought her soiled lace was an innovation in fashion and adopted means to copy it.

We are allowed to imagine all sorts of unprintable things from the announcement that a "Salomé" dinner has lately been given in London. It is said that one of the great hostesses of the English metropolis issued dinner invitations to twenty or thirty women whose names figure in court and other fashionable lists. The guests were bidden to appear in Salomé costumes, if Salomé as represented by Maud Allan can be said to wear a costume at all. The competition in realism is said to have been keen, but as the reporters, by some unaccountable oversight, were not invited, we are left to draw upon our imagination for the actual results.

Dinner was served to an accompaniment of Salomé music tinkled by an orchestra hidden discreetly behind the fortification of palms and flowers, and when the coffee and cigarette stage had been reached some of the most graceful members of the party demonstrated that they had not only succeeded in matching Miss Allan's costume, but had learned some of her most captivating steps.

It was the intention of the British delegates to tell this story in horror-stricken accents, as convincing proof that the classical dances make for public immorality.

What are we coming to? If this sort of thing is not nipped in the bud it will be impossible for the honest journalist to get a living, and even the liberty of the press may be endangered. A certain lady, named in full by the New York press, has been interviewed by a reporter and requested to make public the real inside history of her dispute with her husband and the likelihood of divorce proceedings. It was a natural request, a simple request, and it ought to have been granted. It was a matter of general interest, and the public had a right to know precisely how the domestic trouble began, and the daily and nightly record of its progress. But the lady declined to give the desired particulars. Scornfully flouting the public curiosity, she refused to discuss the matter with the reporter, and as a result what might have been a spicy revelation was withheld from a waiting world. Has the press no rights then?

But there is worse to come. The enterprising reporter, thus baffled at the fountain head of knowledge, was still undaunted. The lady had a father and she had also a French maid. The battle for the public was not yet lost, and even when the father was obdurate in his refusal to chatter and gossip the reporter still remained hopeful. Indeed, in his magnanimous generosity, he made excuses for the father. Evil communications do corrupt good manners and association with a daughter thus lacking in public spirit and good feeling had doubtless infected him. But will it be believed that the maid also refused to say a word? She may have overheard things upon the back stairs and echoes of domestic turmoil may have been wafted through the doorway. Confidential letters may have been at her mercy, and even midnight visitors may have been within her cognizance. Alas, we shall never know, and we must accept the reticence of the French maid—hussy that she is—as evidence of a degenerate age or perhaps only of the concentrated effeteness of Europe. Anyway this alien invasion ought to be stopped. As a result of all this contumacy we have something almost like an apology from one of the great New York newspapers. Mindful of its sacred trust to the public and being unable to fulfill that trust to its own satisfaction, it explains to us with something suspiciously like a sob in its voice that it really did its best. It tried the lady and it tried her father and it tried her maid, but it was of no avail. The boudoir door remained shut and even the back stairs was unresponsive.

Town and Country gives us an interesting glimpse of the daily life of Queen Alexandra. Few people, we are told, can realize the comparative simplicity of the everyday life of the queen, especially when in Scotland or at Sandringham. While in Norfolk she spends much of her time in the open air, walking, driving, and doing short expeditions in her motor car. After breakfast she and one or more of the several ladies who may be staying in the house make an expedition to kennels, stables, and poultry yard to feed and interview the favorite dogs, horses, and poultry of the establishment. In the afternoon a drive is arranged, and the evenings pass cheerily with music, cards, and conversation. Dinner at Sandringham is always at 8:45. It may be mentioned that the royal servants' liveries have a quaint, old world appearance and are different in cut to those seen elsewhere. The coats are scarlet, made in the swallowtail style, with dark blue waistcoats edged by narrow gold braid. The men wear no collars, but have gold stocks; and white satin breeches and white silk stockings complete their stately costume. All the royal men servants are over six feet in height. The queen is an indefatigable letter writer. She has been known to write as many as forty letters in one day with her own hand; and Miss Knollys, her lady in waiting, often would get through a hundred, all written under the queen's personal supervision. Queen Alexandra's note paper is cream colored and rather rough, with the royal crown and address dark blue and of the simplest design.

During the shooting season the queen sends a great deal of game to her own particular friends, and the hampers are labeled "With the queen's compliments." At Christmas time she often presents her intimates with a sign photograph of herself in a silver frame. Queen Alexandra is a keen photographer and has transferred some of her photographs on china.

Grace Margaret Gould tells in the September Woman's Home Companion some of the ways the Parisian dressmaking establishment sell their goods to American women. Here one sure that she saw worked in one of the biggest establishments in Paris:

There was a sudden and evident commotion among the employes. "The princess! The princess! She has arrived!" they cried.

American eyes began to bulge. Out from a magnificent equipage stepped a regally gowned grand lady, attested by footman and maid, and received by the whole household establishment, to the neglect of all other customers. She was in a gracious mood this day and easy to be pleased, praising their past effort and selecting several of their new creations without regard to cost. After she had made her departure amid like ceremonies, there was no need of the saleswoman bothering her head over suggestions. Every American woman present wanted a gown copied from the one the princess had bought and she got it after much pleading and at a price far beyond the limit she had set.

And the point of this fable is this: The princess was no princess, but an employe of the house.

Every French gown has two prices—an American price and a French price. It is needless to say which is the greater price.

Along about April the cry goes up, "The Americans are coming!" and then the prices go up, too.

Along about November, when the Americans have left, you might almost say they are giving away gowns, only the Frenchman never does give away anything. Then it is that the Frenchwoman in general and the French actress in particular selects her wardrobe.

"Are you waiting for me, dear?" she said coming downstairs at last, fixing her hair. "Waiting?" exclaimed the impatient man. "No; not waiting—sojourning."—Yonkers Statesman.

W. & J. SLOANE

FURNITURE

Exclusive lines for Parlor, Library, Living Room, Dining-Room, Bedroom, Hall, Summer Homes and Offices.

CARPETS

Special weaves and colorings in the greatest variety. Domestic Wiltons and Whole Piece Axminsters. We show all grades.

RUGS

Both Oriental and Domestic. This is by far the largest and choicest stock of Rugs on the Coast. Our Orientals are selected as individual pieces.

Upholstery—Interior Decoration

Our long experience and unequalled facilities enable us to admirably execute special orders.

Van Ness and Sutter

Tickets on sale daily until September 30, 1908.

Good on California Limited.

Pullman reservations should be made early.

Ask for booklets.

September and October are ideal months in which to visit the Canyon.

Grand Canyon

and back

No one was ever prepared for it.
No one was ever disappointed.

$30

1 mile deep; 13 miles wide; 217 miles long; painted like a flower

F. W. PRINCE, G. T. A., 673 Market St., San Francisco
J. J. WARNER, Gen. Agt., 1112 Broadway, Oakland

THE OCULARIUM
Henry Kahnt & Co.
OPTICIANS
 PERFECT FITTING
EYEGLASSES
 AT MODERATE PRICES
644 MARKET ST.
 Opp. PALACE HOTEL
 BRANCA 1399 VAN NESS AVE.

appeals to particular people because it is particularly good
Old Gilt Edge Whiskey
 Rye or Bourbon

36th YEAR PHONE DOUGLAS 200

SCHMIDT LITHOGRAPH CO.
 LABELS
 CARTONS ETC.
 SECOND AND BRYANT STS. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
 SAN FRANCISCO, LOS ANGELES, PORTLAND, SEATTLE.

H. J. COOPER
 Expert Accountant and Auditor
 705 KAMM BUILDING
 717 MARKET STREET
 Phone Douglas 1342 San Francisco

EDUCATIONAL
WING INSTITUTE Boarding and Day School for Girls
 2126 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
 Music, languages, art, elocution. Kindergarten, primary, grammar, high school, and added grades. Accredited by the universities, thirty-ninth year. Non-sectarian. Pupils admitted at any time. New term opens Monday, August 3.
 MISS ELLA M. PINKHAM, Principal.
CALIFORNIA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
 Irving Institute Building
 all corps of teachers in every department. Catalogue.
 HERMANN GENSS, President.

THE HAMLIN SCHOOL
 A Boarding and Day School for Girls
 Miss Hamlin announces the reopening of the school August 10. It is accredited by the California Universities and by Eastern colleges. Special courses of study are offered to High school graduates and to those who have left school with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to a diploma.
 Courses in Instrumental and Vocal Music and Drawing and Painting are formed and facilities given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basketball, etc. For particulars address
 MISS HAMLIN,
 2230 Pacific Ave., San Francisco.

Land Conservatory of Music
 1170 Madison Street, Oakland, Cal.
 The largest, oldest established, and most thoroughly equipped school of genuine musical instruction on the Pacific Coast.
 Conducted on the lines of the most noted European and Eastern schools.
 Prospectus on application.
 Director, ADOLF GREGORY.

Miss Harker's School
 Boarding and Day School for Girls. Certificate to Colleges. Excellent Departments in Art and Art. New building, thoroughly modern heated. Address,
 MISS HARKER, Palo Alto, Cal.

PENNSYLVANIA, Ogontz School P. O.
WIZARD SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES
 15 minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. The late Mr. Jay Cooke's fine school. Miss SYLVIA J. EASTMAN, Miss ABBY BERLANO, Principals.

CASTILLEJA SCHOOL
 Palo Alto, California
 and day school for girls. University prepared. Outdoor physical training a special feature. August 24. Illustrated catalogue.
 MARY I. LOCKEY, A. B., Principal.

STORYETTES.
 Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.
 An Atchison merchant tried to sell a vacuum bottle to a Missourian. "It will keep anything hot or cold seventy-two hours," he explained. "Don't want it, I don't want it at all," replied the Missourian. "If I have anything worth drinking, I don't want to keep it seventy-two hours."

An instance of exclusiveness maintained under difficulties is reported from the ladies' cabin of a liner. All were sick except one lady and a cat, which wandered uneasily about. The lady ventured to stroke the cat, remarking, "Poor pussy." The cat was inclined to respond, and elevated its tail, in token of good will, when from a neighboring berth came in choking tones the words: "Excuse me, that is a private cat!"

An Irish maid in the service of a Washington family recently sought permission of her mistress to take an afternoon off for the purpose of consulting a dentist. Upon her return, the mistress said: "Well, Rosalie, did you have the tooth filled?" "I did, mum." "And what did the dentist fill it with—gold or amalgam?" "I don't know just what it was, mum; but from the way I feel, I should think it was with thunder and lightning, mum."

An old plasterer is called upon to give evidence for the plaintiff. Counsel for the defendant tries to bully him. "Have you ever been in prison?" "Yes, twice." "Ah! how long the first time?" "One whole afternoon." "What! And the second time?" "Only one hour." "And pray what offense had you committed to deserve so small a punishment?" "I was sent to prison to whitewash a cell to accommodate a lawyer who had cheated one of his clients."

One of the workers in a Chinese mission became much interested in two Chinamen who, she found, owned a flourishing laundry business in her own home neighborhood. She looked in once in a while to see how things were going with them, and one morning found Sam smiling and cheerful, as usual, but John was missing. "Where is John this morning?" she asked. "Oh," answered Sam amiably, "Christian gentleman hit him in the head with a brick, and he all same in hospital."

Theodore P. Roberts had a fluent command of language, both in speaking and writing, and was well liked by everybody. He could secure the attention of a negligent publisher if need be. To one such, who was remiss about sending vouchers, he once closed up a long letter with the sentence: "And, finally, my dear sir, permit me to say that it would be easier for a camel to ride into the kingdom of heaven on a velocipede than for any one to find a late copy of your paper in the city of New York."

Isaac O'Barns, once pension commissioner in Boston, appointed by President Franklin Pierce, was known for his terse and cutting sayings. It was told of him that he promised to subscribe for the erection of a Baptist church on condition that they should "baptize 'em in hot water." It is of Mr. O'Barns the story is told that when on his deathbed, or when he thought he was dying, and the doctor had pronounced his feet warm and said that no one had ever died with warm feet, the old gentleman inquired in a whisper whether the doctor had forgotten the case of John Rogers.

Mrs. Blank had been paying a charitable visit to poor old Victorie Dupreux, whom she found crippled with rheumatism. But if Victorie's limbs were disabled, her always entertaining tongue was not, and the time passed swiftly. "Mercy!" at last cried the lady, glancing at the clock that ticked wheezily above the French woman's stove. "Here it is five o'clock and I should have gone home half an hour ago!" "Geeve yourself no distress, madame," reassured Victorie. "Mon-sieur dose clock, she eses to lie hon herself for more zan seex year. She eses now to a preciseness one hour fast an' fifteen minutes slow."

A man slightly the worse off for that which inebriates, but does not always cheer, was on his way home when he collided with a box picket fence which had been placed around a tree to protect it. Being somewhat unsteady on his limbs, the man grasped hold of what he supposed was a picket fence and started to feel his way along it. After rotating around the tree for half an hour he appeared somewhat puzzled at the extraordinary length of the fence, but he kept bravely on for some time. Finally, however, his courage failed him, and he sank down at the foot of the box fence with a groan of despair. "Fenced in!" he moaned.

The American in the corner of the non-smoking first-class carriage insisted on lighting his cigar. The indignant Britisher in the other corner protested, but in vain. At the next station he hailed the guard with hostile intent, but the placid American was too quick for him. "Guard," he drawled, "I think you'll find that this gentleman is traveling with a third-class ticket on him!" Investigation proved him to be right, and the indignant Britisher was ejected. A spectator of the little scene asked the triumphant American how he knew about that ticket. "Well," explained the imperturbable stranger, "it was sticking out of his pocket and I saw it was the same color as mine."

It was at the funeral of a man who had left his young and attractive helpmeet a widow for the third time. At the time of his death their clergyman was away on a European trip, and in this emergency the Rev. Dr. Blank was called upon. When, however, he came to mention the widow in his prayer, it was evident that his data in regard to her had become a trifle confused. He said: "And now we commend to Thy care this widowed handmaid, who has been bereaved again and again and again." Then hesitating an instant, he added, "And perhaps again."

Colonel James Fisk was once called to meet a woman who recalled his father's days as a peddler and defamed him. He had lied to her about a yard of nine-penny calico, so she asserted, but Fisk did not think the old man would tell a lie for twelve and a half cents, although possibly "he might tell eight for a dollar." It is said that the elder Fisk refused to subscribe for the erection of a fence about the cemetery at Brattleboro, the home of the Fisks, on the ground that none was needed, because no man that was out of it wanted to get in and none of those who were in could get out.

THE MERRY MUSE.
 No Show.
 We do not always get the girl
 For whom we clamor,
 Which goes to show that life is no
 True melodrammer.
 —Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Sublime, or Near It.
 In Darkest Africa he stands
 Upon a mountain peak—
 A wondrous view his eye commands,
 As fine as man could seek.
 A mighty forest stretches far
 As his keen sight can reach.
 Would you know now what his thoughts are?
 Hark! Pregnant is his speech:
 "Bully!" —New York Sun.

The Rifleman.
 As a shot, there's none can beat him
 On either side the pond;
 But he says he'd really rather than not
 Miss-fire in the world beyond.
 —Boston Transcript.

A Lost Ideal.
 Time was when I fancied that she Could never be lacking in grace;
 Her figure was pleasing to me,
 She had an adorable face;
 Her voice was both gentle and sweet,
 Her fingers were pointed and small;
 I wish I had ne'er seen her eat
 Sweet corn from a nubbin at all.

Time was when it gladdened my heart
 If she happened to smile when we met;
 Ah, why must our pleasures depart
 While we long to be claiming them yet?
 I have lost an ideal I had,
 My heart has a commonplace throb;
 My thoughts of her always are sad
 Since I've seen her eat corn from the cob.
 —Chicago Record-Herald.

Tragedy.
 She'll be married tonight! And I'll be there to see
 The fun and the tears and the joy.
 She'd be hurt, to be sure, were I absent—for she
 Was my playmate when I was a boy.
 My playmate! Ah, yes, and the chum of my youth,
 And my ideal, as years took their flight—
 The one girl of all that I cared for, in truth—
 And she's going to be married tonight.

Does she dream how it's hurting my heart to be there?
 Can she guess all the anguish I feel?
 She will look in my eyes—will she know, will she care
 For the pain that my face may reveal?
 Will she note if I shudder in sudden fright
 At the solemn words sealing my doom?
 Will she pity? Who knows, who can tell? For, tonight
 She'll be married. And I am the groom!
 —Cleveland Leader.

One of the Ohio congressmen vouches for a statement which is indicative of the pessimistic view of the average politician when in the throes of defeat. The day after the routing of Parker in 1904 one of the Democratic newspapers in the Buckeye State sent out a circular telegram soliciting expressions of opinion from various politicians throughout the State. It is claimed that the quaintest of the lot was the reply of one county chairman, expressed in these terms: "County has gone for Roosevelt by 150. The people are in minority. Heaven preserve us!"

A. Hirschman
 For fine jewelry and silverware. 1641-1643 Van Ness Avenue.

BANKING
French Savings Bank
 108 Sutter Street, near Montgomery
 Paid-up Capital $ 600,000
 Total Assets 4,270,800
 Strictly a Savings Bank Open Saturday Evening from 7 to 8:30
 OFFICERS—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, 1st Vice-President; Leon Boceruar, 2d Vice-President; A. Bousquet, Secretary; P. A. Bergerot, Attorney.
 DIRECTORS—N. C. Bahin, J. A. Bergerot, Charles Carpy, Arthur Legallet, G. Beleney, H. de St. Seine, J. M. Dupas, Leon Boceruar, J. E. Artigues, J. S. Godeau, John Ginty.
SAFE DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT
 The French-American Bank is located in the same building.

The German Savings and Loan Society
 526 California St., San Francisco
 Guaranteed Capital $ 1,200,000.00
 Capital actually paid up in cash. 1,000,000.00
 Reserve and Contingent Funds. 1,453,983.62
 Deposits June 30, 1908. 34,475,983.23
 Total Assets 37,075,263.31
 OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.
 BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse, and W. S. Goodfellow.
 MISSION BRANCH, 2372 Mission Street, between 21st and 22d Streets. For receipt and payment of deposits only.

LONDON PARIS NATIONAL BANK
 N. W. cor. Sutter and Sansome
CAPITAL - - - $2,500,000
SURPLUS - - - 620,000
 Sig Greenebaum, H. Fleishacker,
 President Vice-President and Mgr.
 R. Altschul, Cashier

The National Bank ROLL OF HONOR
 The title "Roll of Honor National Bank" is a distinction of which any financial institution in the United States may be proud. As is well known a "Roll of Honor Bank" is one possessing surpluses and profits in excess of capital. A place on the Roll of Honor can not be bought, it must be earned.
 This bank has for a long time been known as a "Roll of Honor Bank" among banks and bankers.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF Berkeley
 UNITED STATES DEPOSITORY
 A. W. NAYLOR, Pres. F. M. WILSON, Vice-Pres.
 F. L. NAYLOR, Cashier. P. C. MORTIMER, Asst. Cashier.

THE BERKELEY NATIONAL BANK
 United States Depository
 Berkeley, Cal.
 HOUSEHOLD AND COMMERCIAL ACCOUNTS INVITED
 DIRECTORS—George P. Baxter, Pres.; J. W. Richards, Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Bangs, Vice-Pres.; Louis Titus, Dr. Thomas Addison, A. G. Freeman, Duncan McDuffie, Perry T. Tompkins, F. L. Lipman, W. J. Hotchkiss, and Whitney Palache. P. H. ATKINSON, Cashier.

MARKET ST. 1st Con. 5%
 Due 1924. Coupons March and September
BAY COUNTIES POWER CO. 1st 5%
 Due 1930. Coupons March and September
WESTERN PACIFIC 1st 5%
 Due 1933. Coupons March and September
SUTRO & CO.
BROKERS
 412 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.
 We have a Direct Wire to N. Y.

NATOMA BONDS "Gold Dredging"
 6% COUPONS APRIL AND OCTOBER
 Due 1917
 10% RETIRED ANNUALLY
 Determined by lot
RENEBOME & CO., Brokers
 508 CALIFORNIA STREET

Connecticut Fire Insurance Company
 Established 1850 OF HARTFORD
 Total Assets $5,817,423
 Surplus to Policy-Holders 2,118,394
BENJAMIN J. SMITH
 Manager Pacific Department
 518 CALIFORNIA STREET
 San Francisco

WESTERN ASSURANCE COMPANY
 TORONTO
 U. S. Assets $2,493,154
 " Surplus 483,989
PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT
 1004 MERCHANTS EXCHANGE
 SAN FRANCISCO
 J. J. KENNY, W. L. W. MILLER,
 Manager Assistant Manager

THE CITIZENS' ALLIANCE, 920 Merchants Exchange, calls the attention of the public to their Free Labor Bureau, located at No. 10 City Hall Ave., San Francisco, and No. 804 Broadway, Oakland. All classes of male help furnished absolutely free.
 "The Citizens' Magazine" for September is now ready. Subscription $1.00 per year. Orders solicited.

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

Prospects of weddings galore for the next few weeks are filling the minds of society folk at the present time, and all the pleasant appurtenances of events matrimonial are being discussed and planned with the greatest avidity.

The introduction of the debutantes is not a neglected matter either, and there is some new delightful rumor each day of a reception here, an elaborate tea there, perhaps a hall, and so on with fascinating uncertainty. One or two engagements are on the threshold of announcement, some of which are so thoroughly recognized already that the formal announcement will occasion but little surprise, while others will cause genuine amazement.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip N. Aronson, formerly of San Francisco, now of New York, announce the engagement of their daughter, Gladys Estelle, to Mr. Herman N. Lieberman of New York.

The wedding of Miss Evelyn Norwood, daughter of Mrs. William E. Norwood, to Mr. William Breeze, will take place on Monday evening, September 28, at the home of the bride's mother on Green Street. Miss Norwood will have no attendants and the bridegroom's brother, Mr. Thomas Breeze, will be best man. Only relatives and intimate friends will be present.

The wedding of Miss Maude Payne, daughter of Mrs. Eugene Freeman, to Mr. Samuel Russell Bogue, will take place on Wednesday, October 7, at the home of the bride on Pacific Avenue.

The wedding of Miss Sara Drum to Mr. John William Gill of Redlands will take place at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. William Geer Hitchcock, at San Mateo, on Wednesday, September 30. There will be no attendants. Mr. Gill and his bride will live in Redlands.

The wedding of Miss Nannie Crittenden Van Wyck, daughter of Mrs. Sidney M. Van Wyck, Sr., to the Rev. Austin Brockenborough Chinn will take place on October 5 at Trinity Church in this city. A small reception will follow at the home of the bride on Webster Street. Mr. Chinn and his bride will make their home at Menlo Park, where he has accepted the rectorship of Trinity Church.

The wedding of Miss Mary Eldred Hamlin, niece of Mrs. Parker Syms, to Lieutenant Lindsay H. Lacy, U. S. N., will take place at Coronado on October 29.

The wedding of Miss Roberta Thompson, daughter of Mrs. Frank Thompson, to Mr. George La Farge of Victoria, B. C., will take place on Saturday (today) at the home of the bride's mother in Palo Alto. It will be a quiet affair to which only relatives and a few intimate friends will be invited.

The wedding of Miss Florence Beall Hush, daughter of Mrs. Valentine Goldsmith Hush, to Mr. Charles Harvey Bentley will take place on Wednesday evening, September 30, at the home of the bride in Fruitvale.

The wedding of Miss Constance Dixon, daughter of Mrs. Harry St. John Dixon, to Mr. Charles Walker Duncan took place on Friday evening of last week at the home of the bride in Sausalito. There were no attendants of either bride or groom and only relatives were present. After their wedding journey, Mr. and Mrs. Duncan will live in Seattle.

The Friday Evening Dances will take place at Century Hall on the evenings of November 13, December 11, January 15, and February 12. The patronesses are Mrs. George F. Ashton, Mrs. Wakefield Baker, Mrs. James Potter Langhorne, Mrs. George Allen Moore, and Mrs. Louis Findlay Montague.

Miss Amy Tabot was the hostess at an informal dance on Friday evening of last week at her home on California Street.

Miss Edna Davis was the hostess on Tuesday of a tea in honor of Miss Maude Payne. Miss Helen Jones entertained at a luncheon on Wednesday last in honor of Miss Amy Bowles. Those present besides Miss Bowles were Miss Elena Brewer, Miss Harriett Alexander, Miss Martha Calhoun, Miss Margaret Calhoun, Miss Augusta Foute, Miss Susanne Kirkpatrick, Miss Louise Boyd, and Miss Marian Miller.

Miss Newell Drown was the hostess at a dinner on Thursday evening of last week in honor of Miss Elizabeth Livermore.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a résumé of movements to and from this city and Coast and of the whereabouts of absent Californians:

Mrs. William H. Crocker and Miss Ethel Mary Crocker left on Monday last for New York. Miss Ethel Mary will return to school in Maryland and Mrs. Crocker will spend the winter in New York.

Mrs. Henry T. Scott will leave shortly for the East to remain until nearly Christmas.

Mrs. Bowman H. McCalla has been spending a fortnight in town, having come up from her Santa Barbara home. Miss Stella McCalla sailed last week from New York for Europe and will go directly to Greece, where she will spend some time studying archaeology.

Mr. and Mrs. William Mintzer and their family and Mrs. Tewksbury left on Thursday of last week for the East, and will spend the winter in New York and Philadelphia.

Mr. and Mrs. George Mendell, Jr., have returned to their home on Pacific Avenue after a stay at Napa Soda Springs.

Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Livermore and Miss Elizabeth Livermore left this week for Europe, where they will travel for a year.

Mrs. Joseph B. Crockett went recently to the Napa Valley, where she is the guest of Mrs. Horace Blanchard Chase.

Mr. and Mrs. Ansel Easton, Miss Jennie and Miss Louise Easton left on Saturday last for New York, where Mrs. Easton and the Misses Easton will remain until next summer.

Mrs. William L. Elkins and Mr. Felton Elkins left last week for the East.

Mrs. Richard Girvin has returned to her home in Menlo, after a brief stay in San Rafael as the guest of her sister, Mrs. George Pinckard.

Miss Laura McKinstry has been visiting Mrs. Henry T. Scott at Burlingame.

Miss Ida Bourn returned on Sunday last to the Bourn country place at St. Helena, after a stay in town of a week's duration.

Mrs. William Mayo Newhall went East last week for a brief stay.

Miss Susanne Kirkpatrick has been visiting in Belvedere as the guest of Miss Maud Wilson.

Miss Edith Chesebrough has returned from a visit to Del Monte.

Miss Mary Keeney has been in San Rafael recently as the guest of Miss Louise Boyd.

Mrs. E. F. Preston and Mrs. Worthington Ames, who have been in Europe all summer, will sail for home on October 17.

Miss Hazel King left this week for Europe with Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Livermore, with whom she will travel for a year.

Miss Emily Carolan has returned from a visit to Mr. and Mrs. C. Fred Kohl at Lake Tahoe.

Mrs. Edwin Newhall, Miss Virginia and Miss Frances Newhall have returned from a European trip.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Duplessis Beylard and Miss Sophie Beylard have returned to their San Mateo home from Lake Tahoe, where they have spent two months.

Mrs. S. G. Wheeler and Miss Helen Wheeler have returned to their home in Sausalito, after spending the summer in Mendocino County.

Mr. and Mrs. James L. Flood have been visiting at Del Monte.

Mrs. Horace Pillsbury left on Saturday last for Boston, where she will spend two months as the guest of her parents.

Mrs. William P. Fuller and Miss Lucie King will leave next month for New York to spend several weeks.

Miss Genevieve Harvey, who has been the guest of her sister, Mrs. Oscar Cooper, for several weeks, has rejoined her mother, Mrs. J. Downey Harvey, at Del Monte.

Miss Elizabeth Livermore has been the guest of Miss Newell Drown in this city.

Miss Carrie Gwin has returned from a stay of several months at the Hotel Rafael and is at the Hillcrest.

Mrs. J. J. Brice, who has been in town for the past fortnight, has returned to her country place in Napa for a stay.

Mrs. T. Wain Morgan Draper and Miss Elsa Draper have returned to San Rafael, after a stay at the Potter, Santa Barbara.

Mrs. L. L. Baker, Miss Helen Baker, Mr. Herbert Baker, and Mr. Leavitt Baker, who have been in Sausalito during the summer months, have returned to town and are at the Hillcrest for the winter.

Miss Virginia Jolliffe has returned from a visit to her sister, Mrs. Herbert Moffit, at Lake Tahoe.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Carrigan are spending a fortnight in Mendocino County.

Miss Gertrude Ballard is in town for the winter, after having spent the summer season in Sonoma County.

Miss Alberta Touchard and Miss Natalia Hunt left last week for New York.

Miss Helen Woolworth, who has made her home abroad for several years, will return shortly from Switzerland to Paris, where she will spend the winter.

Mrs. Abraham Lincoln Brown and son left last Saturday for their home in Los Angeles.

Mr. Isaias W. Hellman closed his chalet on Lake Tahoe on Thursday last and returned home yesterday, accompanied by his daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Heller.

Mrs. Duane L. Bliss and Miss Bliss left here for the East on Sunday last to be away seven or eight months.

Lieutenant T. S. Graham, U. S. N. (retired, but on active service at Mare Island), and Mrs. Graham, are sojourning a few days at Tahoe Tavern.

Among the representatives of the United States army and navy at the Fairmont during the past few days were E. W. McIntyre, U. S. N., commander; M. C. Gorgas and Mrs. Gorgas, of Mare Island; B. B. Binner, U. S. N.; C. Anrum, A. G. Howe, J. O. Fisher, U. S. N.; Lieutenant William C. Christie, U. S. A.

Mrs. Richard S. Shainwald is leaving the city Sunday, September 27, accompanied by her daughter Seville. Miss Shainwald is about to enter school for her final year, continuing her musical education, in which she is now far advanced.

Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Hassan of Ottawa, Canada, accompanied by their two daughters, are at the Fairmont.

Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Whitney, who have spent the summer abroad, have returned to the Fairmont, where they have taken apartments for the winter.

Judge Carl von Nevinski of Germany, who has been studying American methods of jurisprudence, is again at the St. Francis, after a tour of the Pacific Coast.

Herr Carl de Gruyter, who is touring the world with his family, has taken apartments at the St. Francis.

The Harlan Updegraffs of Washington, D. C., were at the St. Francis a few days last week.

Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Swindell of Baltimore and their daughters, Jane and Margaret, are at the St. Francis.

Mr. and Mrs. Ansel Mills Easton, who were at the St. Francis last week making farewell calls on their city friends, have left for New York with their two daughters.

At the Hotels.

Among recent registrations at the Hotel Jefferson are Mr. Webb C. Ball, Cleveland; Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Wight, Honolulu; Major and Mrs. F. S. Rice and Miss Rice, Bakersfield; Mr. H. A. Wilder, Honolulu; Judge and Mrs. N. P. Chipman, Sacramento; Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Black, Manila, P. I.; Major and Mrs. W. R. Riley, Honolulu. Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Cherry have taken apartments for the winter.

Among the visitors from Los Angeles and the south at the Fairmont during the past week were the following: Mr. E. R. Willard, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Carr and two children, Mr. George E. Pillsbury, Mrs. A. C. Rogers, Mr. Z. T. Spalding, Mr. and Mrs. Sherley Ward, Mrs. Raymond Stephens and children, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Dohhs and children, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Liddle, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Graham, Mr. and Mrs. Hildor Hoberg, Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Thomas, and Miss Thomas.

Granada Hotel.

The new Granada Hotel will be a substantial addition to the hospitable capacities of the city. The hotel, which will be under the management of E. S. De Wolfe, former proprietor of the Hotel Pleasanton, is of steel frame, reinforced concrete; absolutely fire-proof throughout, and with 232 rooms. Just one-half of these are equipped with bath—and every room in the house is an outside room. Nothing has been omitted that can conduce either to comfort or luxury.

Mrs. Beatrice Priest Fine and Miss Anna Miller Wood will give a joint concert in this city prior to their departure for their Eastern homes. Both artists are well known and popular, and both have met with splendid success since leaving their native California. The affair will be under the management of Will Greenbaum, and will be given Thursday evening, October 22, at Christian Science Hall. An exceptionally interesting programme of solos and duets is promised.

Eleanor Rohson will be seen soon in a new play, by Richard Harding Davis, based upon his novel, "Vera, the Medium."

THE LEADING NEW YORK HAT, "THE MILLER." Eugene Korn, Agent, 15 Kearny St.

TO LEASE—12-room furnished house, 2122 Pacific Avenue. Apply between 12 and 2.

YOUR HAND

is the only one that can unlock your box in our Safe Deposit Vaults. Your valuables in one of our steel boxes can not be lost by theft or fire. For this protection $4.00 per year and up.

CROCKER SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS
CROCKER BUILDING Junction Post and Market, S. F.

TO LEASE

Handsome modern furnished residence of 14 rooms and 4 baths, located on choice corner of Pacific Avenue; ballroom, servants' rooms, and every modern convenience. Built only three years. Immediate possession can be given. Can be seen only by appointment and permit from this office.

SHAINWALD, BUCKBEE & CO.
Telephone Douglas 47 27 Montgomery St.

Pears'

"A cake of prevention is worth a box of cure."

Don't wait until the mischief's done before using Pears' Soap.

There's no preventive so good as Pears' Soap.

Established in 1789.

FAIRMONT HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

Where San Francisco Society gather

Recognized as providing every requisite for comfortable and enjoyable hotel life

Applications for apartments for the coming season should be made at once with the management

Palace Hotel Company

Hotel Del Monte

as an objective for your

WEEK-END VACATIONS

An easy and pleasant trip by motor or train. Plan to see—to enjoy—when you get there. Write for and reservations. H. R. WARNER, Manager

The Peninsula SAN MATEO, CAL

A home in the country practically a San Francisco's gate. Only thirty minutes away. Frequent trolley and train service. See S. P. time-tables. Located in the midst of one of the most beautiful gardens in the State. No winds, no fogs. All the accommodations that culture and refinement demand. Progressive in every detail. Well-equipped club house, and complete garage.

Winter Rates in force September 1, 1914

JAS. H. DOOLITTLE, Manager

ROUND THE WORLD

TOURS DE LUXE

Leaving in August, September and October. Membership limited to twelve. Programmes for the asking.

THOS. COOK & SON

32 Powell Street, San Francisco

A QUIET place for people of refined tastes. Daily accessories—prompt, courteous service—irreproachable cooking—cool rooms—moderate prices.

YE TEA CUP INNE
1427 Bush Street, below Van Ness (upstairs)

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy people who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Colonel Marion Maus, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., commanding the Department of California, Lieutenant-Colonel John Biddle, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A., and Lieutenant-Colonel John B. Bellinger, Quartermaster Department, U. S. A., left this week for Atascadero, where they will remain for about six weeks during the military manoeuvres held at that camp.

Lieutenant-Colonel John Biddle, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A., is announced as chief of staff, Camp of Instruction, Atascadero.

Major George W. Van Deusen, Second Field Artillery, having arrived in this city, is assigned to duty at Army Headquarters, Department of California, with station in this city, pending the departure of the transport on which he may secure accommodations, when he will stand relieved and proceed to Manila, reporting upon his arrival there to the commanding general, Philippines Division.

Major Samuel W. Dunning, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., is announced as adjutant-general, Camp of Instruction, Atascadero, and has reported to the commander of the camp for duty.

Lieutenant-Commander W. R. Gherardi, U. S. N., has been detached from the Naval War College, Newport, R. I., and ordered to the Bureau of Equipment, Navy Department.

Captain D. C. McDougall, U. S. M. C., has been ordered to proceed to Washington, D. C., and report in person to the major-general, commandant, upon the completion of the shooting at Sea Girt, New Jersey.

Captain Pierce A. Murphy, First Cavalry, U. S. A., has been ordered to assume charge of the office of judge advocate of the Department of the Visayas, Philippine Islands, relieving Major Ira A. Haynes, adjutant-general, U. S. A., of that duty.

Captain M. F. Steele, Sixth Cavalry, U. S. A., who has been delivering a course of lectures on military campaigns at the General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, for the past year, has reported for duty at department headquarters in this city. He will act as umpire at the manoeuvres at the camp at Atascadero.

Captain Edwin G. Davis, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., Fort Baker, is ordered to report to Colonel Marion Maus, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., president of an army retiring board at San Francisco, at such time as may be designated for examination by the board.

Captain William H. Tohin, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., has been detailed as quartermaster and commissary of the transport Buford, with station at San Francisco, and will report to the general superintendent, Army Transport Service, for duty.

Captain Charles Crawford, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., Camp of Instruction, Atascadero, arrived here last week and reported to the adjutant-general, Department of California, for duty in connection with the manoeuvres. On completion of this duty he returned to Atascadero.

Captain Ernest E. Haskell, Twenty-Second Infantry, U. S. A., has been granted leave for one month and fifteen days, dating from September 15.

Captain Henry T. Ferguson, commissary, U. S. A., Presidio of San Francisco, left last week for Atascadero for duty in connection with establishing the depot commissary at the Camp of Instruction.

Lieutenant E. E. Spafford, U. S. N., has had his orders to the Supply revoked and has been ordered to duty in connection with the fitting-out of the Wyoming at the Navy Yard, Mare Island, and to duty on board that vessel when commissioned.

Lieutenant Edmund L. Zane, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., is ordered to proceed to Fort Riley, Kansas, and report in person to the commandant of the Mounted Service School to take a course of instruction at that school.

Lieutenant T. C. Turner, U. S. M. C., has been ordered to report to the commandant, Navy Yard, Mare Island, for temporary duty at Marine Barracks when discharged from the hospital.

Lieutenant Arthur R. Ehrnbeck, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A., now on leave of absence at Los Angeles, has been ordered to proceed to Fort Bayard, New Mexico, and to report in person to the commanding officer, General Hospital, for observation and treatment.

Lieutenant Henry H. Scott, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., has been granted three months' leave of absence on a surgeon's certificate of disability.

Lieutenant Henry A. Schwabe, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., has been detailed as recorder of the Army Retiring Board appointed to meet at San Francisco, vice Lieutenant Edwin E. Pritchett, First Field Artillery, U. S. A., relieved.

Lieutenant William S. Browning, First Field Artillery, U. S. A., Presidio of San Francisco, has been ordered to proceed to Atascadero to join his battery.

Lieutenant James R. Mount, Medical Reserve Corps, U. S. A., Presidio of Monterey, was ordered to proceed with the Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., and five companies of the Eighth Infantry, U. S. A., from that station to the Camp of Instruction, Atascadero, and to report upon arrival to the camp commander for assignment to temporary duty.

Midshipman W. H. Walsh, U. S. N., has been ordered to continue treatment at the Naval Hospital, Mare Island.

The Charleston, commanded by Commander Harry Knapp, U. S. N., now at Bremerton, Washington, will leave about November 1 for the Asiatic Station for duty as flagship of the Third Squadron, Pacific Fleet.

Battery C, Field Artillery, U. S. A., has been ordered to embark at once, on arrival in San Francisco, on the transport scheduled to sail from this port for Manila on October 5. Upon arrival in Manila the organization will be reported to the commanding general, Philippines Division.

At Out-of-Town Hotels.

Among the arrivals from San Francisco at Hotel del Coronado are Mr. and Mrs. Wakefield Baker, Miss Marion Baker, Mr. Charles Fax, Mr. S. M. Spaulding, Mr. A. J. Buckley, Mr. J. W. Hine, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Mathewson, Mr. and Mrs. J. Meyer, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. P. Varney, Mrs. M. C. May, Mrs. Alice May-Sexton.

Among the arrivals from San Francisco at Byron Hot Springs are the following: Mr. William Curlett, Mr. R. D. McElroy, Mr. J. J. Mahoney, Mr. J. M. Patrick, Mr. Arthur B. Watson, Mr. P. L. Lowe, Mr. Samuel G. Buckbee, Mr. A. A. Brown, Mrs. H. Kohle, Miss M. Ehluck, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Littlepage, Mr. S. S. Naphthal.

A few of the recent arrivals from San Francisco at the Tavern of Tamalpais were Mr. Aug. J. Lang, Mrs. J. A. Stephens, Mr. E. Loessel, Miss Frieda Sieke, Miss Helen Lassel, Mr. Philip Bush, Mr. George A. Cohen, Mr. F. F. Thomasson; from Oakland—Mrs. Helen Kidd, Mrs. C. A. Oakland, Miss Edna O'Neil, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Day, Miss Jennie Vanna, Mrs. E. M. Miller.

Recent arrivals at Hotel Del Monte from San Francisco include Mr. and Mrs. L. S. Schoenfeld, Mr. and Mrs. D. Samuel, Miss Beryl Samuel, Mr. and Mrs. George McLaughlin, Miss Nellie McLaughlin, Miss Elizabeth Gardiner, Mr. J. W. McKenzie, Mr. S. L. Jones, Miss Marion Thompson, Judge James M. Troutt, Judge John Hunt, Mr. and Mrs. Bradford Webster, Judge William Lawlor, Mr. and Mrs. George N. Armsby, Mr. and Mrs. George R. Chambers, Mr. F. H. Kline, Mr. and Mrs. William A. Nelson, Dr. and Mrs. John Carrol Philip.

Napoleon III.

Professor Edward Larcher's forthcoming lectures in the French language at the Gymnasium Hall of the Hamlin School, 2230 Pacific Avenue, are anticipated with much pleasure. The lectures will be on Napoleon III, the first being on October 2 at 11 a. m. and on ensuing Friday mornings at the same hour. Tickets for the course, $3. These lectures will be followed or accompanied by a series of Tuesday afternoon lectures by Professor Charles M. Gayley of the University of California on "European Days."

Byron's "Sardanapalus," rewritten in accord with the discoveries made during the extensive excavations conducted by German, English, and French scientists on the sites of the great Assyrian cities, was produced a few days ago in Berlin at the Royal Opera before a brilliant assemblage of specially invited guests of the emperor. The audience, however, received the elaborate scenic studies rather coldly, although it appreciated the immense and scholarly labors bestowed upon them. The leading dramatic critics think that the spectacle of antique life is not likely to be popular. Professor Delitzsch, Germany's greatest Orientalist, had given eight months of almost continuous labor to this production. It was the object of the emperor to make the hillical past live in the mind of people who could not or would not read the Cuneiform inscriptions. Emperor William, who makes up the yearly deficit of the royal theatres and operas of about $750,000, said laughingly when the final curtain went down: "I think I have had my money's worth."

Foremost among those interested in the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition to be held at Seattle next year are capitalists of the metropolis. New Yorkers to a large degree have chosen Alaska as a summer resort and thousands of them go there every year. They return East with glowing stories of its wonderful summer climate and scenic grandeur; many of them are interested in the construction of huge summer hotels at various points along the Alaskan coast and naturally wish to attract the largest number of New Yorkers possible to the exposition. For this reason former New Yorkers resident in Seattle are determined that their building shall overshadow all others at the exposition.

The copyrights on the Wagner operas, including "Parsifal," are to expire in three years. As an indication of what may be expected in Germany the announcement from the Komische Opera in Berlin is interesting. The impresario says that from that time he will devote his theatre exclusively to model performances of the Wagner operas.

For the Orphanage.

There will be a Garden Fete and Street Fair at "The Uplands," San Mateo, October 3. It will be given for the benefit of the Bishop Armitage Orphanage, whose board of directors are Mrs. Henry T. Scott, Mrs. Mountford Wilson, Mrs. J. L. Flood, Mrs. G. W. Gibbs, Mrs. F. J. Carolan, Mrs. Le Worne, Mrs. E. D. Baylard, Mrs. J. D. Grant, Mrs. G. A. Pope, Mrs. J. B. Crockett, Mrs. W. S. Tevis, and Miss Maynard, and for the San Mateo Red Cross Guild Hospital, whose board of directors are Mr. W. B. Galloway, Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, Mrs. Ernest Coxhead, Mrs. W. S. Martin, Mrs. C. E. Green, Mrs. W. H. Crocker, Mrs. W. B. Tubbs, Mrs. F. J. Carolan, Mrs. L. I. Scott, and Miss Jennie Crocker.

There will be special electric cars running, and conveyances to escort the visitors to the grounds. There will be all kinds of amusements for children, as well as grown people, and many attractive things for sale. Refreshments will be served, etc. The military band will furnish music both afternoon and evening, and the entertainment will finish with a dance.

The Late Mrs. Patton.

Mrs. Patton of Berkeley passed away suddenly in Kemptville, Canada, on September 17, while visiting friends there. The news came as a great shock to her relatives and friends here. She was the widow of Alfred M. Patton of Toronto, Canada, and mother of H. S. Patton of Berkeley, Mrs. C. Edward Holmes of Belvedere, Mrs. E. Clarence Holmes of Berkeley, and Miss Helen Patton of Toronto.

Mustard manufacturers grow rich not by the quantity of mustard consumed, but by that which is wasted and left on the diners' plates. The saying is recalled by an interesting statement made by the postmaster-general as to the number of pens supplied for use by the public in the postoffices of England. It seems that last year the total was 1,250,000.

Stella Hammerstein, only daughter of Oscar Hammerstein, the grand opera and vaudeville impresario, is a principal in "The American Idea," the latest musical comedy by George Cohan, produced successfully in Boston.

DR. ROBERT E. O'CONNELL, DR. GEORGE D. O'CONNELL, DENTISTS, Hastings Building, Post Street and Grant Avenue. Tel. Douglas 2733.

Hotel Majestic

(Sutter and Gough)

A homelike hotel for refined people. Very best cuisine. Moderate prices. Rates on application.

Hotel Argonaut

Society of California Pioneers Building, Fourth Street near Market, San Francisco. Commercial, family; 400 rooms; rooms with detached bath, $1 per day; rooms with private bath, $1.50 and up per day; breakfast, 50c; luncheon, 50c; dinner, including wine, $1. Seating capacity, 500. The Hotel Argonaut's free bus meets all trains at ferries, steamship landings and all depots. EDWARD ROLKIN, Manager.

Sherman, Clay & Co., occupying this entire building at Kearny and Sutter Streets, S. F., are headquarters for every kind of musical instrument from Steiway pianos down. You have no need to go elsewhere for any article pertaining to the music business.

Sherman, Clay & Co.

STEINWAY AND OTHER PIANOS—VICTOR TALKING MACHINES

Kearny and Sutter, S. F.

1635 Van Ness Ave. | Broadway at 13th
San Francisco | Oakland

GOODYEAR "HIPPO" HOSE

The best and strongest Garden Hose. Guaranteed to stand 700 lbs. pressure.

Try it and be convinced.

GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY

R. H. PEASE, President
587, 589, 591 Market St. at Second St.
SAN FRANCISCO

Hotel St. Francis

The spirit of good service and the facilities that produce it.

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF JAMES WOODS

Why Not Make Your Home At The Hotel Jefferson

Turk and Gough Streets Facing Jefferson Square

A superior class hotel with every modern convenience and comfort. Operated on the American and European plans. Special rates to permanent guests. Special attention paid to the table—we invite comparisons. Management Noah W. Gray, formerly manager Alexander Young Hotel, Honolulu, and Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

You Can Live At The Hotel Jefferson Better And For Less Than At Hmme

Hotel del Coronado

Motto: "BEST OF EVERYTHING" Most Delightful Climate on Earth American Plan. Summer rates $3.50 per day each and upward, or $21.00 per week each and upward "Good Music" and "Fine Automobile Road, Los Angeles-Riverside to Coronado." Golf, Tennis, Polo, and other outdoor sports every day in the year. New 700-foot ocean pier, for fishing. Boating and Bathing are the very best. Send for booklet to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado Beach, Cal. Or see H. F. NORCROSS, Agent, 334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles. Tel. A. 6789; Main 3917. 22d Street and Broadway

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"

Building, concrete, steel and marble. Located, most fashionable shopping district. 210 rooms, 135 baths. Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests. Most refined hostelry in Seattle. Absolutely fireproof. English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

Hotel Rafael

San Rafael, Cal.

Open year around. Headquarters Automobile League. New and commodious garage. Fifty minutes from San Francisco. Complete change of climate. Tiburon or Sausalito Ferry. All modern conveniences. F. N. Orpin, Proprietor.

Roy C. Ward | Jas. W. Dean
Jas. K. Polk | Geo. E. Billings

GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.

ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE EFFECTED

312 California Street. Phone Douglas 2283
San Francisco, Cal.

John F. Forbes

Certified Public Accountant

601 KOHL BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

"That's the parson that married me." "Shall I soak him one for you?"—Simplicissimus.

Cook—My dog took first prize at the cat show. Hook—How was that? Cook—He took the cat.—Journal of Zoophily.

"Do you give your wife an allowance, or does she ask you for money when she wants it?" "Both."—Cleveland Leader.

Stella—He threatened to do something rash when I refused him. Bella—Goodness, he may propose to you again.—New York Sun.

Mrs. Gramercy—What do we need for dinner? Bridget—Shure, mum, Oi tripped over the rug an' we need a new set of dishes.—Puck.

Caller—So your cook has passed away to a better place? Hostess—Yes, hut I don't know if she'll stay; poor Bridget was very hard to suit.—Boston Traveler.

Miss Antique—Just think of the nerve of that impetuous fellow to propose to me. Miss Caustique—Nerve? Why, it was absolute recklessness.—Milwaukee News.

"It takes a baby mos' two years to learn to talk," said Uncle Ehen. "an' den it takes de res' of its lifetime to learn to keep f'um talkin' too much."—Washington Star.

Juvenile—Mama, when the fire goes out where does it go? Mother—I don't know, dear. You might just as well ask where your father goes when he goes out.—Town Topics.

"Every hit of food on this table," said the serving lady to Lamson, as he sat down to eat at the church supper, "was cooked by your wife." "Oh, I don't mind," rejoined Lamson faintly; "I'm not a hit hungry, anyway!"—New York Times.

"Of course," said the optimist, "if a man gets into the habit of hunting trouble he's sure to find it." "Yes," replied the pessimist, "and if he's so lazy that he always tries to avoid it, it will find him. So what's the difference?"—Catholic Standard and Times.

"He has everything to make a woman happy." "On the contrary, he has nothing but wealth." "Dear me! What more can a woman ask of her husband than that he have wealth?" "That he have brains, beauty, bravery!" "But—" "Or, failing these, heart disease!"—Life.

She—Frankly, now, if you had to choose between me and a million, what would you do? He—I'd take the million. Then you would be easy.—Life.

Weary Walker—I see five hundred more men has been t'rown out of work. Tired Traveler—Gee! Dere's gettin' to be too much competition in our business!—Puck.

Porpoise—What is the whale blowing about? Dagfish—Oh, he got so many notices for his feat in swallowing Jonah he's been blowing ever since.—Boston Transcript.

Tom—I ate some of the cake she made just to make myself solid. Dick—Did you succeed? Tom—I couldn't feel any more solid if I had eaten concrete or huilding stone.—Utica Herald.

Piper—The varra pest music I never heard whatever was down at Jamie MacLauchlan's. There was futeen o' us pipers in the wee hack parlor, all playin' different chuncs. I thoct I was floatin' in heaven!—Punch.

"You say this man stole your coat?" said the magistrate. "Do I understand that you prefer charges against him?" "Well, no, your honor," replied the plaintiff. "I prefer the coat, if it's all the same to you, sir."—Philadelphia Press.

"Politeness costs nothing," said the man of ready-made wisdom. "I guess," answered Mr. Cumrox, "that you never had any experiences with these café waiters who regulate their politeness by the size of the tip."—Washington Star.

Caller (trying to be complimentary)—I notice one interesting peculiarity about your little hoy. He is ambidextrous. Mrs. Struckoyle (with a frosty gleam in her eye)—Not at all, Mrs. Highsome. His legs are just as straight as anybody's.—Chicago Tribune.

"When we are married," said the girl, "of course you will shave every morning. That's one of the rules of our club. We all agreed not to marry any man who wouldn't shave every morning." "Well, what about the mornings I don't get home in time?" responded the young man. "I belong to a club, too."—Philadelphia Ledger.

FOR SOLID COMFORT Knitted Coats and Sweaters
LONG AUTO COATS

Golf Vests, Bath and Lounging Robes, Shawls, Pajamas

TRY US FOR

GOOD UNDERWEAR AND HOSIERY

Only Dependable Qualities Nothing High Priced

Gantner & Mattern Co.
KNITTERS

Corner
Van Ness
and California St.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

A Positive Relief
FOR PRICKLY HEAT,
CHAFING, and
SUNBURN, and all ailments of the skin.
Removes all odor of perspiration. Delightful after Shaving. Sold everywhere, or mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample Free.
GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY, Newark, N.J.

Byron Hot Springs

The waters cure rheumatism—the environment is perfect—the hotel comfortable and supplied with an unexcelled table. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, ground floor, James Flood Building; Peck-Judab Co., 789 Market St., or address hotel.

Toyo Kisen Kaisha
(ORIENTAL S. S. CO.)

S. S. Tenyo Maru.....Friday, Sept. 25, 1908
S. S. America Maru (via Manila).....
.....Tuesday, Oct. 20, 1908
S. S. Hongkong Maru..Tuesday, Nov. 17, 1908

Steamers sail from company's piers, Nos. 42-44, near foot of Second Street, 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Hitogo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.
Round-trip tickets at reduced rates.
For freight and passage apply at office, 240 James Flood Building. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

Mr. Publisher:

Does it interest you to know that ALL the mechanical work on THE ARGONAUT is done by us? Fact.

WILLIAMS PRINTING CO.,
Phone, Douglas 2905. 406 Sutter Street

Clubbing List.

By special arrangement with the publishers, and by concessions in price on both sides, we are enabled to make the following offer, open to all subscribers direct to this office. Subscribers in renewing subscriptions to Eastern periodicals will please mention the date of expiration in order to avoid mistakes:

- American Magazine and Argonaut.....$4.25
- Argosy and Argonaut..... 4.40
- Atlantic Monthly and Argonaut..... 6.70
- Blackwood's Magazine and Argonaut... 6.20
- Century and Argonaut..... 7.00
- Commoner and Argonaut..... 4.10
- Cosmopolitan and Argonaut..... 4.35
- Current Literature and Argonaut..... 5.75
- English Illustrated Magazine and Argonaut 4.70
- Forum and Argonaut..... 6.00
- Harper's Bazar and Argonaut..... 4.35
- Harper's Magazine and Argonaut..... 6.70
- Harper's Weekly and Argonaut..... 6.70
- House Beautiful and Argonaut..... 4.75
- International Magazine and Argonaut... 4.50
- Judge and Argonaut..... 7.50
- Leslie's Weekly and Argonaut..... 6.70
- Life and Argonaut..... 7.75
- Lippincott's Magazine and Argonaut.... 5.25
- Littell's Living Age and Argonaut..... 9.00
- Mexican Herald and Argonaut.....10.50
- Munsey's Magazine and Argonaut..... 4.40
- Nineteenth Century and Argonaut..... 7.25
- North American Review and Argonaut... 8.00
- Out West and Argonaut..... 5.25
- Overland Monthly and Argonaut..... 4.50
- Political Science Quarterly and Argonaut 4.90
- Puck and Argonaut..... 7.50
- Review of Reviews and Argonaut..... 5.00
- Scribner's Magazine and Argonaut..... 6.25
- Smart Set and Argonaut..... 5.25
- St. Nicholas and Argonaut..... 6.00
- Sunset and Argonaut..... 4.25
- Theatre Magazine and Argonaut..... 5.75
- Thrice-a-Week New York World (Democratic) and Argonaut..... 4.25
- Weekly New York Tribune (Republican) and Argonaut 4.50
- Weekly New York Tribune, Weekly New York World, and Argonaut..... 5.25

Romeike's Press Clipping Bureau

Will send you all newspaper clippings which may appear about you, your friends, or any subject on which you want to be "up to date." A large force in my New York office reads 650 daily papers and over 2000 weeklies and magazines, in fact, every paper of importance published in the United States, for 5000 subscribers and, through the European Bureaus, all the leading papers in the civilized globe. Clippings found for subscribers and pasted on slips giving name and date of paper, and are mailed day by day.
Write for circular and terms.
HENRY ROMEIKE
110 and 112 W. 26th St., New York.
Branches: London, Paris, Berlin, Sydney.

The best characteristically American furniture made today is Colonial
We have the best of that best—as well as the inexpensive

FURNITURE—CARPETS
RUGS—DRAPERIES

"Since 1858"
WHOLESALE—RETAIL

D. N. & E. WALTER & CO.
Van Ness and Sacramento

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXIII. No. 1645.

SAN FRANCISCO, OCTOBER 3, 1908.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10 payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breems Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opéra. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at F and Thirteenth Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Denison News Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains.

Published at 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal. Telephone, Kearny 5895.

THIRTY-SECOND YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: A Test Case—Roosevelt and Bryan—Casey at the Bat—Sins of Political Omission—An Oriental Partnership—Rice in California—An Undesired Visitor—Editorial Notes	209-212
CAMPAIGN TOPICS	212
THE LABOR UNION AND THE SINGER: "St. Martin" Describes the Lawsuits that Followed the Electrical Workers' Strike	213
CURRENT VERSE: "The Poet," by Armin Trebor; "Put Up the Sword," by James Jeffrey Roche; "In Autumn Colors," by Habberton Lulham; "The Wind Beguileth All," by Clinton Scollard	213
INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All over the World	213
THE FEDERAL POWER DEFIED: XXXIII. By Jerome A. Hart	214
IN THE DAYS OF JEFFERSON: Mary Johnston Writes a Fine Historical Novel of Sentiment and Plot	215
WINSTON CHURCHILL'S WEDDING: A Popular Ovation Attends the Marriage of Two Interesting People ..	215
OLD FAVORITES: "Love Triumphant," by Frederic Lawrence Knowles; "The Girl I Left Behind Me"; "Ballad of Dead Actors," by W. E. Henley	216
THE OLD MAN'S DREAM. By Douglass H. Morse	216
BOOKS AND AUTHORS. By Sidney G. P. Coryn	217
LITERARY NOTES: Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip—New Publications	218
FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT	218
A SATANIC DRAMA. By Josephine Hart Phelps	219
VANITY FAIR	220
STORYTTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise	221
THE MERRY MUSE	221
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy	222-223
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day	224

A Test Case.

Los Angeles has a city ordinance which requires that a retail license shall be obtained in due form wherever liquor is dispensed within the city limits. City Attorney Woolwine holds that liquor is "dispensed" whenever it is sold, wherever it is sold, to whomsoever it may be sold, and under whatever circumstances it may be sold. In the judgment of those who make up social clubs like the California, Jonathan, Union League, and University Clubs, the law does not apply to these organizations. Their contention is that the bona fide social club is in character and effect the home of its members; that it does not sell liquors for profit, but rather serves them to its members precisely as liquors may be served in an ordinary household. Attorney Woolwine makes no distinction between the bona fide club and the bogus club organized merely to evade the law. Thus there has been raised an issue of profound interest not only in Los Angeles, but elsewhere. Pending the determination of this issue, the Jonathan, Union League, and University Clubs of Los Angeles have "gone dry," awaiting the judgment of court in the case of the California Club, which is contesting the question. Attorney Woolwine's view of the matter was first considered adversely by a local justice of the peace and later upheld by Judge Ewing of the superior court on appeal. The case will now go for final determination to a higher court.

Roosevelt and Bryan.

From every point of view it is to be regretted that President Roosevelt has entered—perhaps we had better say jumped into—the campaign arena. And it is further to be regretted that, having entered into current discussions, the President has passed by the fundamental and vital principles of government to involve himself—and, what is worse, to involve the high office which he holds—in a personal and vituperative conflict of words. There was nothing in the situation to justify the innovation; and nothing worthy is likely to come of it.

The President of the United States is not a private citizen, therefore he is not his own master. He may, of course, shut his eyes to propriety and run amuck like a bull in a china shop; there is no law to prevent the President, more than any other citizen, from making a fool of himself. Nevertheless men of judgment and taste know where lies the line of legitimate restraint, and such men grieve to see it overlooked by the one who, above all others, ought to respect and safeguard it. Moreover, when the President permits himself to fall into personal controversy he does not live by his own rule of the square deal; he uses unfairly the immense advantage of a delegated authority and prestige. In his controversy with Mr. Bryan, Mr. Roosevelt is not merely lending the weight of his own personality to the cause which he advocates, but he is attempting to put behind it all the powers which attach to the presidency of the republic. A man of fine feeling, of a keen and sure sense of delicacy and propriety, would not have intruded as Mr. Roosevelt has intruded.

It is doubtful if a politician of shrewd perceptions and ordinary foresight would have dared to jeopardize the interests of his party as Mr. Roosevelt has done. Mr. Bryan, against whom the President's assault is directed, balances the latter's double weight of man and office by a rhetorical skill and poise in controversy which even his adversaries are forced to admire. Mr. Bryan is amazingly adept in the arts of the demagogue. To deal with the passions and prejudices of men is an art—a special trade—in which he is practical and expert. No man knows better how to turn the errors of his opponents to their confusion and to his own advantage, how to make plausible that which is illogical and inexpedient, how to guard and thrust and parry in the "tongue-fence" of a rhetorical duel. Mr. Bryan has learned to pluck the flower safely from the nettle danger, and all his art has been brought into play against the President. Having challenged him at his own game, Mr. Roosevelt hardly deserves sympathy for the emphasis which Mr. Bryan has been able to put upon those aspects of his own character and conduct which even his admirers and friends have too often found it necessary to deplore.

Against an artful, supple, shifty, and poised antagonist Mr. Roosevelt opposes an impulsive, intolerant, and turbulent disposition, a choleric temperament, an egregious self-conceit, and a reckless habit. It is as if a man of immense weight and powerful physical force, but unused to the practice of arms, were to try conclusions with a skilled swordsman—a falchion or a battle-mace against a rapier. Mr. Roosevelt is no match for Mr. Bryan, and there is reason for it in the constant success of all his undertakings and in the mental habit which that success has engendered. The mental attitude of Mr. Roosevelt is arrogant; the policy of Mr. Bryan is that of servile diplomacy. Mr. Roosevelt seeks to override and trample down all opposition; Mr. Bryan lures his enemy and ambushes him. Mr. Roosevelt is a warrior thirsting for the bubble reputation at the cannon's mouth; Mr. Bryan is a guerrilla shooting the warrior from cover. Mr. Bryan's vocation is deadlier than that of Mr. Roosevelt.

A man wiser in the tricks of Mr. Bryan's trade would not have yielded to the temptation so artfully presented by his adversary. The controversy which Mr. Roosevelt provoked and which Mr. Bryan so adroitly uses to his own advantage would have been avoided by a statesman of broader views and higher caution. Mr. Bryan knew what the result would be if he could draw the President of the United States into a personal controversy. He foresaw the advantages that would accrue from a hand-to-hand conflict with the chief executive of the nation. It was unquestionably his purpose to make of Mr. Roosevelt a stalking-horse for a closer attack upon the Republican administration, seeking to shift upon the party whatever sins of commission or omission he could prove against a President elected by that party. Mr. Bryan had little to lose by these tactics, and he believed that there was much to gain. He has subjected the President to criticism that he would never have dared to utter if the President had persisted in maintaining the high dignity of the office he occupies. The candidate of the Democratic party is now at liberty not only to attack from any quarter the man Roosevelt, but he is justified in any assault upon the President himself. Not only are Mr. Roosevelt's policies at the mercy of Mr. Bryan, not only are the personal acts of Mr. Roosevelt under fire from Mr. Bryan's artillery; but the Republican party is held responsible for these policies and these acts irrespective of every possibility that some of them may have been condemned or disapproved by the wiser elements of the party. Many things done by Mr. Roosevelt, many of his opinions and policies, are regretted even by Mr. Roosevelt's best friends and most ardent admirers. It is not likely that a man as skilled as is Mr. Bryan in the warfare of politics will permit any of these palpably impolitic actions and utterances of Mr. Roosevelt to escape the attention of the people, and it is equally certain that he will strive by every means that lies in his power to place the responsibility for these actions and utterances upon the Republican party. It is not the President that Mr. Bryan attacks; it is the party that placed Mr. Roosevelt in the presidency.

Mr. Bryan handles his weaponry better than does Mr. Roosevelt; his letters are better reading than are those of Mr. Roosevelt; his argument is more concise; his language is in better taste as a literary product; his statements may not be accurate, but they seem to be because they are stated with clearness and with the force that a writer long practiced in this branch of his trade can give to anything he writes, even though it may reek with fallacy and derive its most convincing conclusions from a premise of the rankest sophistry.

It is true that there are a large number of citizens who believe in Mr. Roosevelt so blindly and so implicitly that they can not see any impropriety in his present attitude. There are others, however, more capable, perhaps, of discriminating the obligations that have been laid upon Mr. Roosevelt, who not only deplore his conduct in this juncture, but are fearful that it may react upon the Republican presidential candidate. The personal and political intimacy of Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Taft virtually precludes the latter from public expression of disapproval of Mr. Roosevelt's effort on his behalf, however impolitic or dangerous it may be. He could not dictate a course of conduct to Mr. Roosevelt; no man could do that. He can not advise even in his own interest; Mr. Roosevelt would not listen. Mr. Taft, therefore, must bear not only the brunt of Mr. Bryan's assault upon the President, but he must endure whatever harm the President can inflict. It is an extremely unfortunate condition, and while Mr. Bryan is largely responsible for the existing plight of his adversaries, Mr. Roosevelt can not escape whatever blight may attach hereafter to consequences of his ill-advised and impetuous action.

Mr. Roosevelt has clearly mistaken the real issue in this campaign or he has deliberately misconstrued it. He has imagined in his egotism or he has forced himself to believe that his policies are the issues in dispute among the people. It is upon this hypothesis that he is quarreling with Mr. Bryan. As a matter of fact, the only dominant issue before the voters of the nation is the history and accomplishment of the two great parties. Subordinate to this overshadowing issue is the character and availability of the two leading candidates for the presidency. The Republican party stands for authority and efficiency in government; the Democratic party stands for disorganization and inefficiency. The Republican party is constructive in its basic policies; the Democratic party is destructive in its essential political elements. The policies of Mr. Roosevelt are in their best form the natural outgrowth of Republican conditions and may not be claimed by the President as his invention. Furthermore, any policy formulated by the President would of necessity have to be indorsed and legalized by the representatives of the Republican party; so that in the ultimate analysis Mr. Roosevelt is merely an adjunct to the party and wholly dependent upon that party for all he is politically. And he has not divine right to arrogate to himself privileges not inherent in the authority delegated to him by the party that elected him to the presidency. Above all, he has no right to jeopardize the success of the party by injecting himself into the campaign as the main issue in the controversy.

As to the candidates, it is sufficient to say that Mr. Taft represents all that the Republican party stands for, and that if elected he will faithfully adhere to the best traditions of the party while earnestly, honestly, and capably fulfilling every duty that may be put upon him in the execution of such policies as may be deemed good for the country under a strictly Republican party administration. On the other hand, the developments of the campaign are alone sufficient to indicate what would happen in the event of the election of Mr. Bryan. If he could not choose a man better fitted for a position of trust and responsibility than Governor Haskell, it is fair to presume that he would not make better selections in the organization of his cabinet or in the appointment of such officials as may come within his jurisdiction. As for the policies that he would seek to inaugurate, most of them have been discredited by the people in previous campaigns, many of them have been repudiated by the voters as Utopian and impracticable, and all of them are of dubious quality either as political expedients or remedial agents. The only danger that has arisen to threaten the success of the Republican party in this campaign is that which Mr. Roosevelt has thrust forward by attempting to subordinate the issues of parties and candidates to his own personality. There is a bare possibility that Mr. Bryan may be able to convince the unthinking mass of voters that Mr. Roosevelt is what he claims for himself; namely, that he is greater than the party and that the perpetuation of his personality in his policies is the only subject of debate in the campaign.

Casey at the Bat.

Those who are making assault upon the official "integrity" of Mr. Michael Casey, president of the Board of Public Works by the grace of our reform administration, are in danger of getting off on the wrong foot. Before pursuing this matter much further they should inform themselves as to the nature and character of Mr. Casey's real obligations. They should know that the performance of his official labors, sometimes styled official duties, is a mere incidental and casual matter. The purpose for which Mr. Casey was made president of the Board of Public Works was not so much to look after the public work as to round up the labor element as a contingent aid to the Phelan-Spreckels political machine. Casey was nominally named by the mayor, who, by the way, is an elegant old gentleman with a marvelous head of hair, but in truth he was the nominee of that particular section of the Democratic party which belongs to James D. Phelan. Casey's obligations, therefore, are to Phelan, and he is not a man to slight his duty as he sees it. In the year and a half or more during which he has been president of the Board of Public Works he has devoted himself to the business of creating a union-bait to be attached at the right time to the Phelan-Spreckels kite. The scheme was a broad one. Phelan was to round up his old followers and such new ones as his peculiar system of politics might be able to develop; Spreckels was to organize the Roosevelt Leaguers; Mike Casey was to bring in the unionites and the tarriers. It was a pretty plan, but it was founded only on conceit and hot air, and thus far it has not precisely worked out. Casey, however, who, as we have already remarked, is a man entirely faithful to his obligations as he conceives them, is still busy with his part of the job. In many respects, it remains to be added, Mr. Casey's activities have tended signally to illustrate the beauties of reform when it falls into the hands of self-seekers and incompetents and when it addresses itself to selfish ends.

The Germ Folly.

The Argonaut does not often talk about medical matters, firstly because it does not know much about them, and secondly because it is so far more pleasant to talk of health than disease, whether physical, political, mental, or any other kind. But now comes a temptation to refer to the case of Dr. Fred. T. Rustin, the former Yale baseball captain whose death is still a mystery to the Omaha authorities. The incident itself is not of public importance, but a lesson that may be drawn from some of the details has a distinct popular value. It seems that Dr. Rustin had determined to commit suicide by a novel and fantastic road. He deliberately inoculated himself with the germs of cancer, then with those of typhoid, and lastly with those of lockjaw.

He failed absolutely. The typhoid germs did indeed make him ill, but those of cancer and lockjaw were quite inoperative in a healthy body. His object, of course, was to leave no trace of suicidal intent. He may have eventually succeeded in some other and still more weird way, but the fact seems to remain that the germs of these frightful maladies, deliberately and scientifically introduced, were comparatively harmless.

Now is it not about time, pro bono publico, that we heard a little less of the germ theory of disease, or rather that the discoveries of science were made a little less available for popular misunderstanding? Reputable physicians, of course, know the facts and they are therefore perfectly aware that a disease germ is usually harmless unless it find a human soil favorable to its reproduction; and that the real trouble is therefore not so much with the germ itself as with the hospitality that we give to it by errors of diet, of ventilation, and of a hundred other kinds. Reputable physicians, to their credit, say as much whenever they can get an audience, but they know well that the average man does not want to be told how to live a regulated life, but he does wish very much to be told how to avoid the natural and proper results of an unregulated life. As a result the aforesaid average man is gradually falling into the belief that the citadels of his health are besieged day and night by myriads of malefic germs like the sands of the seashore for multitude and that his only hope of salvation lies in destroying them; whereas he can not effectively destroy them, while he can easily render them harmless by a systematic obedience to the laws of nature which would deprive them of their needed foothold.

As a result we have a sort of germ mania, and hardly a day is allowed to pass without adding some new horror to the dangers that surround us. With automobiles on the one hand and a germ on the other, our attitude of apprehension is becoming chronic. Hardly have we registered a resolution never again to lick a postage stamp, not even a cent stamp, because it contains enough microbes to poison a regiment, than we are called upon to eschew paper money, and indeed all money, for the same reason. It is of course a good thing to make a virtue of necessity, but we are hoping for better times. The "tainted money" superstition at least has had its quietus from Professor Hilditch of Yale University, who admits that the average bill contains about half a million bacteria, but adds the comfortable assurance that they are harmless and that as a matter of fact the new bills have more bacteria than the old ones. But the mischief has done its work and can not be overtaken. Paper money, we are satisfied, is a disease breeder, as are about a hundred other aids and conveniences to daily life. Have we not all of us read the learned words of a learned doctor to that effect? Have we not been told within the last few weeks that laziness is due to a microbe that malignly enters the sole of the naked foot and that the "poor white" of the South is therefore an object for tender commiseration rather than for censure? One by one all our moral failings are being traced to the ubiquitous microbe, and pretty soon the Ten Commandments will be replaced by a list of bacterial life.

This thing seems really to have gone too far, so difficult is it to draw the line between common-sense precaution upon the one hand and a mere senseless superstition upon the other. The doctors themselves are largely to blame if only for their failure to discountenance the medical charlatan who knows that a sensational "discovery" is the surest way to popular attention. It can not be questioned that public confidence in the doctor is not quite what it was once, simply because the public can not discriminate and is not helped to do so by the profession between the quack and the scientist, and there are just as many quacks with diplomas as without them. Let the reputable doctor tell us, as he knows to be the case, that disease germs are usually powerless in the body of the man who does not eat or drink too much, who exercises himself, who keeps his window open at night, and whose conscience is in good working order week days and Sundays alike, at the dinner table as well as in church. And let the physician devote himself less to laboratory research and more to patient and kindly and humble study at the sick bed. Then we shall hear a great deal less about bacteria which are positively beneficent in comparison with the nervous thrills, the frets, and the worries which our medical friends give us in such abundant quantities.

Sins of Political Omission.

Complaint is made by the local organ of Mr. Hearst's Independence party that none of the other party platforms contains planks condemnatory of the "blacklist." Wherefore those other parties aforesaid are suspected of secret antipathy for "labor" while offering a hypocritical pretense of friendship for the downtrodden and oppressed workingman; it is even hinted that these parties are the wolves of predatory capital clothed in the skin of the shorn sheep of the "laboring classes." It is not enough that the other parties did not denounce the boycott; it is no defense that the platform committees of these parties were not given an opportunity to discuss the advisability of putting in a plank demanding that the union label shall be printed on the ballots; it is immaterial that everything asked for by labor was inserted in the platforms; the "blacklist" was not subjected to political anathema, and therefore the only true friend of labor is the Independence party—all the others are "bogus."

A "blacklist," as we understand the term, is a list of persons who, for any reason, may be deemed undesirable by any employer of labor. The unions have banned the "blacklist" in its variety; they object to a "blacklist" singular and they object to the "blacklist" plural—a "blacklist" personal to the employer and the employed in his own shop and the "blacklist" that circulates from employer to employer in the shops of a particular trade. The unions also object to the basic necessity of a "blacklist," which is the discharge of an undesirable workman by his employer. Under stress of an insistent demand by the employers, however, the unions have finally condescended to permit the discharge of a workman provided he is discharged in accordance with the rules of the union in such cases made and provided. Otherwise the unions insist upon the right of declaring a boycott on the offending employer until he is forced to reemploy the undesirable workman.

It would seem that the boycott is an effective antidote for the "blacklist." It goes to the same purpose as the "blacklist," namely, the starvation of the person or persons against whom it is directed. If the "blacklist" is worthy of being included among the "live issues" of a national campaign, the boycott should have the same right of precedence; with this difference, however, that the platforms of the national parties should indorse the boycott and condemn the "blacklist." It is an unwritten axiom of the labor unions that every union laborer is worthy to be hired and that no employer shall question his worth. Upon this esoteric principle of the labor organizations the unions assume to dictate the policies of political parties under penalty of a solid "labor vote" against the party that dares to question the justice, validity, or even the constitutionality of the demands that labor makes upon them.

The platform committees of the dominant parties certainly committed a grave sin of omission when they neglected to insert a plank condemning the "blacklist," but if we consider the relative importance of the two "issues" we must give the boycott preferential eminence. That the platform committees forgot or deliberately refused to include a plank denunciatory of the "blacklist" is reason sufficient to alienate every "labor vote" in the United States from all the parties except the Independence party, in whose platform a plank to this effect is conspicuous; but the circumstance that none of the parties, the Independence party included, lifted the boycott into a national issue by indorsing it in unequivocal language, is evidence that American statesmanship is in a decline that verges perilously upon its dotage.

An Oriental Partnership.

A deputation of representative merchants of the Pacific Coast sailed last week for Japan on invitation of the chambers of commerce and boards of trade of that country to visit them and discuss matters of common interest and mutual profit. It is an excursion well worth while. It will result in an understanding of conditions that could not be procured in any other way. The visitors will be received with true Oriental hospitality; they will be fêted, wined, dined, and "shown around" with all the courtesy of the Japanese manner; nothing will be omitted by these genial and generous hosts that could contribute in the slightest degree to the comfort or pleasure of the guests. This is the method of the Japanese when there is something to be gained, and in this instance there is much to be gained. This invitation is in direct accord with the purpose of a settled policy looking to the strengthening of Japanese trade in the Pacific with an ultimate idea of controlling that trade. The commercial interests of Japan are almost wholly dependent upon this trade; for it is the intention of the Japanese to use it as the basis of their own monopoly of trade on the Asiatic continent. Already the Japanese steamship lines are displacing all others on the Pacific Ocean and in the China coastwise trade, extending even as far as Singapore and Bombay. Our merchants have been invited to Japan to counsel upon the advisability of making the Japanese the commercial brokers for American trade in China and the islands of the sub-tropical archipelagoes.

In this conference the political aspect of affairs will be sedulously subordinated to the commercial interests of those participating. As an earnest of the good feeling that exists between Japan and this country, and as a guarantee of the faith that the Japanese have in American policies hereafter to be formulated involving the diplomatic relations of the two countries, some of the most illustrious statesmen of Japan will be called upon to express their views on the necessity of a continued amicable understanding in all circumstances between the two nations. The Japanese are adept Orientals in this sort of thing. It is the axiom of Japanese policy in every phase of their contact with the outlander to avoid the disagreeable as long as possible. They would rather lie to a stranger than hurt his feelings by telling him the plain, unvarnished truth.

Notwithstanding all this, however, our merchants are not wasting their time in Japan. They will learn much that they did not know before they accepted this hospitable invitation. They will probably learn why the products of Canada are preferred to those of the Pacific Coast; they will learn why it is so difficult to sell goods in Japan and in China through English and German agents; they will learn that when an Oriental desires to receive certain merchandise in certain specified forms he can not be induced to take any other; they will learn that advertising circulars printed in English and sent to United States consuls to be distributed among the Japanese and Chinese are as valueless for trade purposes as if they had been printed in Choctaw or the dialect of the Aztecs. These are a few of the little things that our visiting merchants will learn. But the real point of their observations will be the knowledge that Japan is determined to dictate the commercial destiny of the Far East.

This national purpose of Japan can be accomplished only in two ways: By a successful war with the only country that can eventually enter into competition for the supremacy of the trade of the Pacific; or by a tacit agreement between the producers and exporters of this country and the merchants of Japan that all merchandise from this country to Asia shall pass through the hands of the Japanese. If the latter understanding can be arranged, the danger of a future war between Japan and the United States to determine the ownership of the commercial spoil of the Orient will be very remote. If we will share the profit of our trade with Asia, the Japanese will make no serious effort to take that trade by force and arms.

When our merchants are comfortably in conference with the commercial magnates of the island empire they will be assured that an Oriental is the best comrade among Orientals, and that the Japanese are the only Orientals capable of dealing directly with other Orientals in their business relations with the Western nations. It will be shown that vast expense is necessary in building up a trade directly between a Western people and an Asiatic race, and added to this expense will be the loss of time and futile energy. That will bring the Japanese merchant to the core of his argument: Why not save this expense, and economize this time and energy, by giving the business of the American trade in Asia to competent Japanese firms, taking all the profit and allowing the Japanese to make what profit he can upon the sale and re-exportation of the goods? It will be a plausible argument and one that will probably appeal to the Americans; for it is a fact that our commerce with Asia has, for many years, been conducted upon this basis. Our merchandise has been carried in foreign bottoms and distributed through foreign commission houses, or by agents of foreign countries who sold our goods if they had none of their own country to sell.

No doubt our merchants will return from Japan well pleased with their visit and loud in their encomiums of the Japanese; trust the Japanese for inciting that sort of feeling in the breasts of their guests. Let us hope, however, that some of these merchants will strive to go below the surface of the event in the effort to discover the real purpose of their Japanese hosts, and in that analysis of motives discern the staple profit of the transaction that will be proposed to them.

Rice in California.

One Richard R. Smith of Stockton has determined to his own satisfaction that rice may be grown successfully on the river bottom lands of California and he proposes next year to go extensively into the rice business. We hope Mr. Smith is right, and yet we can but recall that many another good man has been badly fooled and has come out a heavy loser in trying to do things that can't be done. Tobacco culture was once going to revolutionize the productive industry of California, and we remember once in the spirit of patriotism to have smoked a home-made cigar, the like of which before never existed, and we trust never will again. Then cotton was going to provide us with another tremendous resource, and somebody once did raise enough cotton to work up into a bale which was carried from one fair to another until it was literally worn out. Then there was the ramie fiber, out of which the everlasting fortune of California was to be made; and ramie production did go so far as to yield one suit of clothes of a curious and wonderful fit worn conspicuously by the ramie commissioner, who, as we recall it, was the only man who ever got a bean out of the whole business. We might vastly extend this list of productive lights that have failed in California; but perhaps it is enough to recall the old saw that one swallow does not make a summer. The fact that a San Joaquin farmer has produced a hatfull of rice by no means implies that it is safe to abandon the regular order of our demonstrated productive industry to go chasing after a novelty which may or may not prove to be worth while.

An Undesired Visitor.

With so large a supply of home-made labor leaders it seems hardly necessary to borrow those of other countries. But perhaps Mr. Keir Hardie came to us from England uninvited. It may be that having exhausted the possibilities of mischief in India and having the wanderlust still in his blood he has merely crossed the Atlantic to compare notes with his American confères and incidentally to await the cooling of English indignation at his escapade among the Hindus. It may be remembered that Mr. Keir Hardie is a Socialist member of the House of Commons who recently visited India and harangued the natives upon the rights of man until they nearly reached the mutiny and massacre point. Terrified by the frightful result of his own misdeeds, he returned to England in a hurry, passively accepted the public rebukes that awaited him, and now turns up in America to express his surprise that labor union men here while uniting on Labor Day should act upon their individual opinions at election time. He wants to tell us how much better they do these things in England, where Socialism has captured the labor organizations in their entirety and manipulates them without the slightest regard to the welfare of the country.

Socialism has not yet captured the labor unions in America, although the labor demands here have a startling resemblance to the class of legislation recently passed in England under direct Socialist pressure. The British courts recently decided that labor unions could be sued for acts done by their representatives and a very vulnerable point was thus disclosed in the unionist armor. But a special and exemptive act of Parliament soon rectified this little matter, and labor unions have been freed from the financial responsibility that rests upon all other combinations. No wonder Mr. Keir Hardie should applaud Mr. Gompers for his attempt to free American unionism from the restraints that are imposed upon all other sections of the community. It is the true Socialist propaganda—to victimize the few for the benefit of the many. No doubt Mr. Keir Hardie has great expectations of Socialist progress among American labor unions when he sees how closely Mr. Gompers follows the plan. Fortunately there are many signs that the individual labor unionist is quite able to see the end of the road upon which Mr. Gompers would have him set his foot. There is only one end to a movement which asks of the individual to put national considerations out of his mind and to vote solely in the interest of his own caste. That end is Socialism, and we may congratulate ourselves that so many workmen are refusing to be led to the brink of that abyss by Mr. Gompers.

Editorial Notes.

We are sorry to see that Mr. Hearst conducts his political campaign in the spirit of a Hearst newspaper, and if there is anything more expressive of moral degeneracy than this we should like to know what it is. His oratorical epithets stand out lurid, like the scare headlines with which we are so painfully familiar, and vituperation and bad names jostle each other the whole line of his oratory. Mr. Taft is "an overgrown messenger boy." Mr. Chanler of New York is "a little, counterfeit, brazen, near-gilt charm upon the watch-chain of Boss Murphy," while Mr. Bryan is the "rag-picker of politics," a "political shoplifter," and a "loose-skin man." We had supposed that the depravity of the Hearst newspaper was a matter of bargain and purchase, a calculated exploitation of popular vulgarity, but now at last we recognize the personal inspiration of the master mind.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie "can not escape the conclusion" that the abolition of war could be easily arranged by a declaration from the German emperor and an invitation to America, England, and France to cooperate in the good work. Mr. Carnegie is doubtful if the German emperor can rise to a height so sublime, but he is not without hope that "the angel of the Lord will appeal to him" before it is too late. Personally we have no great expectation of the celestial visitant or of his prospective influence upon the emperor. We have no means of knowing if "the angel of the Lord" suggested the first peace conference to the Czar of Russia, but we do know that one of the most notable wars in history began immediately afterwards. Perhaps the result would have been different had Mr. Carnegie been invited to place at the service of the conference some of that peculiar omniscience that has so bountifully descended upon him and that makes it so delightfully easy for him to regulate the affairs of the solar system. But in the meantime we may diffidently express our doubt if "the angel of the Lord" will select Mr. Carnegie for his mouthpiece, or the German emperor either, for that matter. International peace does not depend upon one man, even though he may possess all the concentrated wisdom of Mr. Carnegie himself.

Not even the chill of years serves to protect a long-suffering public against the scandals, domestic and other, which that histrionic hoodlum Nat Goodwin contrives always to set going. We can scarcely remember a time when Goodwin has not been trapesing somewhere about the world under conditions calculated to interest the morbid, kicking a wife out of doors, or getting a new wife under circumstances tending to scandalize the conventions. Time, no doubt, will cure this inveterate tendency to social irregularity and gross sensationalism, but time works slow and patience in this particular case has almost ceased to be a virtue.

A report from Washington is to the effect that President Roosevelt is on the point of starting for San Francisco on a campaigning tour and that "it is possible that Mr. Taft may accompany him." The Argonaut hopes profoundly that this purpose, if it really be a purpose, will be reconsidered. Mr. Roosevelt "swinging round the circle" of the United States with "Mr. Taft accompanying him." would be a spectacle that would fairly shock the country, and in the judgment of the Argonaut, it would give the election to Bryan. If Mr. Roosevelt wants to help Taft, his best course is to go to Oyster Bay, shut and bar the gate, and disconnect the telephone. What is needed from Mr. Roosevelt during the rest of this campaign is profound silence.

It is noted in a dispatch from Albuquerque that the Sacramento delegates are busy in season and out of season preaching the gospel of reclamation of the submerged lands of the Sacramento Valley. It ought not to be left for the Sacramento delegates to work alone in the interest of the great valley project. All of California is or ought to be interested in this project, which will do more than any other one thing possible to conceive to increase the production and wealth of the State.

The Earl of Rosse died at his seat, Birr Castle, King's County, last month in his sixty-eighth year. He had been in feeble health for a couple of years owing partly to a cycling accident. The late earl came of a family of scientists, and was himself devoted to scientific research. His father was the famous astronomer who built the great telescope at Birr Castle, which is still, after the lapse of more than half a century, one of the largest in the world. His brother is Charles Parsons, the inventor of the marine turbine engine. The late earl was a representative peer for Ireland, a Fellow of the Royal Society, and Chancellor of the University of Dublin. He married in 1870 the daughter of the fourth Baron Hawke, and is succeeded by his elder son, Lord Oxmanstown, of the Irish Guards, who served in the South African war.

Cricket dates from the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and had its origin in rounders and stool-ball. Lord Chesterfield was the first man of weight to take it up seriously and Eton the first public school. In those days scores were notched upon tally-sticks, the ball had heavy cross seams, the bats were curved, and the fielders stood almost in Indian file. The early laws of the game had their inception at the Star and Garter Inn, Pall Mall, and one of the few of these original laws which obtains today is that of the toss-up. The wickets were twenty-two inches high and the bail six inches in length. The first county match was when Kent played England, in 1711, and on this occasion vast sums of money changed hands.

It has been discovered that a happy miller's family living in the vicinity of the battlefield of Waterloo have derived a regular income since 1815 from the sale of a rusty iron nail. It was not many years after the battle that an eccentric Englishman on the strength of an eyewitness's evidence discovered that Napoleon's hat had been hanging on that nail, the emperor having rested a while at the mill during the battle. An offer for the old nail was immediately accepted by the previously guileless miller, who after the deal replaced it by another old nail and painted an inscription round it on the wall pointing out its historical value. One nail after another has gone to enrich collections as priceless Napoleonic relics.

Professor Dolbear of Tuft's College has found that at sixty degrees Fahrenheit the rate of the chirp of crickets is eighty per minute; at seventy degrees Fahrenheit the rate is 120 per minute, a change of four chirps per minute for each change of one degree. Professor Dolbear also notes that the individual crickets chirping by themselves observe no great regularity, but in chorus they keep in time as if led by the wand of a conductor. Again, the professor asserts that crickets in adjoining fields, preserving the same rate per minute, will follow different beats as of their respective conductors, "as one may easily perceive by listening."

In New Zealand the native Polynesian race, crowded by Europeans, is becoming extinct. Many of the imported animals run wild and multiply rapidly at the expense of the native species, even the streams being filled with European and American trout, which grow to great size. Introduced plants thrive quite as remarkably. New forests are being created designedly because the native trees, though yielding excellent timber, grow very slowly, and already many millions of larches, oaks, spruces, Douglas firs, and eucalyptus have been planted, while seedlings from them are being continually added.

Even blindness is not allowed to prevent the children of Paris from learning natural history and knowing what birds and beasts are like. A class at the Parisian school for the blind is taught by the use of a fine collection of stuffed animals, which the pupils learn to recognize by the touch.

Rome may at last be made a seaport. The idea of building a canal from Rome to the sea like that at Manchester, England, has been abandoned and instead it is probable that the channel of the Tiber will be dredged so that ships can come up to Rome from Fiumicino on the sea.

CAMPAIGN TOPICS.

The apparently impossible has happened and the Cleveland letter denouncing Mr. Bryan and advocating the election of Mr. Taft has been pronounced a forgery. Indeed, the author of this serious misdeed has confessed that Mr. Cleveland neither wrote the letter himself nor dictated it as it appeared in print. In justice to the New York Times, in which the letter found its first publication, and in justice to the almost unanimous press of the country which accepted it as authentic, it may be said that the document was submitted to Mr. Cleveland's executor, Mr. F. S. Hastings, who pronounced the signature to be genuine and the sentiments to be those of Mr. Cleveland. Mr. Hastings has now reversed his judgment and he declares both the signature and the article itself to be spurious.

The topic of the day is naturally the disclosures of the venality of Senator Foraker and of Governor Haskell. It is hard to account for the sensation these things have made except upon the theory that while every one knew that the Ten Commandments were being broken, no one had the least expectation that the culprits would or could be brought to justice. But how times have changed! Probably Senator Foraker is completely mystified at a sentence of excommunication for deeds that a few years ago would have been among the commonplaces of "practical politics."

Mr. Hearst would, of course, like to pose as a national benefactor on the ground of being the purveyor of letters presumably stolen. Providence moves, as we know, in a mysterious way, and if it uses vile instruments for beneficent purposes we can only profit and marvel. Judas Iscariot was one of the means in the redemption of the world, but Judas Iscariot is not in the pantheon of history. Nor is Mr. Hearst.

The New York World is one of the very few newspapers to handle Senator Foraker's downfall in terms of dignity. It has no sympathy for wrongdoing, but neither will it exult in the extinction of a popular star:

It is no mere personal or party matter when one of the ablest senators in the Congress of the United States is found to have been secretly employed by the Standard Oil Company, to have been a paid lobbyist of the Standard Oil Company, even to have borrowed money from the Standard Oil Company for the purchase of a newspaper which was to have been used to mislead public opinion. It is no mere personal or party matter when the exposure of this senator's secret relations with Standard Oil helps to discredit everything which he advocated in public affairs, the good as well as the bad.

The World is perhaps unduly pessimistic in its review of the consequences of this ill-smelling scandal:

For years to come demagogues on the platform will cite the Foraker betrayal of trust as an argument in favor of every sort of wildcat legislation that attacks property. Socialist orators will refer to it as proof that capitalists control the government and that Congress is only the tool of the money power. Anarchists will rejoice in it as evidence that the republic is rotten.

Senator Foraker's punishment has been swift, thanks to an enlightened and irresistible public conscience. Mr. Taft has severed relations with him. The Republican organization has abandoned him. His State will repudiate him if he is a candidate for reelection. His political career is ended. But the evil will survive.

There is, of course, another view and one that is more wholesome. The enemies of the American system will naturally make the best use of their chances, but a sound public opinion will see in the whole incident but one further proof that a new order of political conscience is on deck and that wrongdoing in high places will not be tolerated.

Mr. Taft comes out of the cloud with added distinction, and in this respect he stands well nigh alone. Recognizing that Senator Foraker could take no further part in his campaign, he yet refuses to say one word that could add to the smart of exposure. And this in opposition to the well-known view of the President that Mr. Taft should take advantage of the senator's dilemma. The President is said to regard the Foraker affair as a vindication of himself and Mr. Taft. He argues that Foraker fought the Roosevelt policies because they were aimed at the connection between corrupt policies and business and that the Foraker opposition was transferred to Taft because Taft represented the Roosevelt ideas. The President may be right enough on the plane of practical politics, but Mr. Taft is equally right on the ethical plane when he says "if it would win me every vote in the United States I can not hit a man when he is down."

There is no need to go into the case of Governor Haskell. Mr. Bryan has practically disowned him, and we need not question his sincerity or the fact that the whole affair came upon him as a revelation? But why was not Mr. Bryan in earlier possession of knowledge that was public property long ago? After all, there are none so blind as those who will not see, and Mr. Bryan is said to have ostentatiously destroyed a document that was handed to him and that contained a precise statement of Haskell's servile relations with Standard Oil. Mr. Bryan would have better served his own cause by opening his mind a little wider to unpalatable information that he has now been compelled to accept at the eleventh hour. He is not only compelled to accept it, but he accepts it so grudgingly that he loses whatever advantage might have accrued to him from a prompt act of repudiation.

The nomination of Governor Hughes of New York would receive its full valuation if it had come at some time when there were fewer big things in the air. As a matter of fact, it is about the biggest thing of them all. It is not an incident, but a portent. Politicians of the narrow-gauge variety—and there are very few others—seem wholly unable to recognize this triumph as due to anything else than the action of some individual. That the people should actually indicate their choice before the convention and should do it in such unmistakable terms as to convey a threat never enters the heads of those who have come to regard the voter as a mere dumb beast who may bleat a little or even hellow, but who can neither kick nor bite. The politicians have not been far wrong in their estimate of the voter, but they have forgotten that the world does move and that the "as it was in the beginning is now and ever shall be" may be a frail reed to rely upon with any confidence. The New York Sun expresses the situation very pithily when it says:

History may as well be put straight now as later. Governor Hughes was not renominated by the convention by the intervention of President Roosevelt or by Mr. Roosevelt's influence, personal or official. He was not renominated by the submission of Herbert Parsons and some of the other bosslets to the President's wishes. He was not renominated by anything the Secretary of State of the United States said or did at Saratoga. He was not even renominated by the auspicious hostility and accelerating resistance of Tim Woodruff and William Barnes, Jr. All of these things were results and incidents, not causes. They were results and incidents of Governor Hughes's strength with the people, recently manifested in ways unmistakable to the perceptions of the shrewder of the machine politicians, but ignored or misinterpreted by the more obtuse and far witted.

So, in spite of Mr. Roosevelt's scarcely disguised dislike and jealousy of Governor Hughes, in spite of the bitter opposition of an overwhelming majority of the second-rate bosses and leaders, in spite—most wonderful of all—of his own entirely passive if not absolutely interested attitude concerning the affair, the unorganized voters behind the organization have had their will.

This triumph of unorganized public sentiment over all the elements and factors usually decisive in a political convention is marvelous. The nomination is dictated by a boss, but for once the boss dictating the nomination is the boss intended and indicated by the spirit of our political institutions—the people. There never was anything quite like it before. May there be much that resembles it hereafter!

The newspaper chorus is almost unanimous. The New York Times says that the so-called leaders showed "deplorably bad judgment in trying to lead the people where the people would not go." The New York World, after the usual and deserved gibe at the bosses, says that Mr. Hughes's nomination "is a tremendous triumph for political independence and for the moral idea in government." The New York Tribune goes so far as to say that the opposition of the bosses will give to the governor just that kind of advertisement that will tell most in his favor with the people:

There was no organized effort to win delegates for him, and, indeed, powerful forces of various kinds were arrayed against him; but the demand for him was so overwhelming that all opposition was swept aside. The unconcealed reluctance with which many of the party leaders accepted him will give to his candidacy a wider appeal than could be exercised by one too completely satisfactory to a machine, and Democrats and Independents will be attracted to a candidate of whose consistent placing of the public over and above the party certain leaders have given indirect but convincing evidence. Indeed, it is doubtful if any candidate was ever offered for the governorship in this State who had such power as he to break down party lines and to impress the average voter as the candidate of the people, irrespective of party.

For these reasons the nomination of Mr. Hughes is not merely the strongest and best nomination which it could have made without doing itself grave discredit in the eyes of those who are accustomed to look to it to keep at least abreast of the best tendencies in American public life. By renominating him it ranges itself on the side of his ideals of public service, of efficient administration and unselfish loyalty to the people.

Speaker Cannon may be politically dead, as some of his enemies are husily asserting, but at least he refuses to act as a dead man should. Speaking to 5000 people at Topeka, Kansas, he said that there are three vital issues in the campaign. The revision of the tariff comes first. That the tariff must be revised is settled, but by whom and upon what lines remains to be determined. The second great question is the powers and relations of the executive, the legislative, and the judiciary departments. The third issue is class legislation:

"Mr. Bryan's stand on this question is such that it is hard to see where a man of sense and justice can sincerely support him for the highest office in the land. He would enact trust legislation that would affect only labor organizations and their members and let the rest of the country shift for itself. In his tariff stand he deals a blow at union labor for the benefit of the farmer and the consumer, and now by class legislation he would especially protect labor at the expense of the rest of the country.

"This is demagoguery, sir, and so long as I am Speaker of the House I shall oppose any legislation that does not protect or affect every class of people of this country exactly alike. If I had my way these three issues would alone form the basis of the battle of 1908 for control of the government of this nation between the two parties."

The Speaker is upon sure ground here and his manful stand on the subject of labor organizations ought almost to reconcile his Methodist enemies to his occasional use of language that may be politely called "iron clad."

Mr. Bryan's prediction that he will carry Maryland is disputed by J. L. Meyers, lately candidate for Congress from one of the Baltimore districts. Mr. Meyers declared recently that the Democratic leaders of Maryland not only fear that Bryan will meet his Waterloo there, but that the Democrats will lose two, and perhaps three, of their Congressmen. Mr. Meyers says that the Baltimore Sun's defection from the Democratic ranks and its open avowal for Taft has wrought havoc with Bryan's chances in Maryland, and the Republicans boast that they will carry the State by the highest majority in its history. Bryan is without the support of a single newspaper in Baltimore.

The report of the inland revenue commissioners of Great Britain for the year ending March 31 last—in which the lower tax on earned incomes below £2000 per annum came into force—shows that the income tax yielded £31,860,380. There were 241 incomes reported in the class from £10,000 to £50,000, and 517 in the class from £5000 to £10,000.

Mme. Louise Briand and Mme. Jeannes Menard, both graduate doctors of medicine, act as ship's physicians on two of the largest Mediterranean steamers.

THE LABOR UNION AND THE SINGER.

"St. Martin" Describes the Lawsuits that Followed the Electrical Workers' Strike.

There is interest everywhere in industrial circles in France because of the recent strike of the Electrical Workers' Union. Although the strike was a miserable failure, it is apparent that the labor unions are determined at least to try to control the situation and that a fierce struggle between government authority and organized labor is imminent—that it can not be avoided a great while longer. But for jealous rivalry between the leaders of the labor movement Paris, if not all the industrial centres of France, would now be in the throes of a mighty industrial upheaval. Quite recently organized labor declared its readiness to prove that it was master of the industrial situation by stopping, or at least retarding, the wheels of trade and commerce, but it could not agree as a whole with individual unions upon definite lines of procedure. Consequently in the confusion that was born of rivalry for the post of leader, anything like concert of action could not be secured. Meanwhile, however, the Electrical Workers' Union protested vigorously against any action by the federation of unions looking to a disturbance of the industrial situation. But, as subsequent events proved, it was a trick on the part of the electrical workers to create confusion in the federated unions, then inaugurate a strike in the name of their own union and thus drag the federated unions into the muss as sympathetic strikers, leaving the Electrical Workers' Union as the natural director of the whole movement.

The "strike" was ordered and the supposed machinery of wreck and ruin was started, but it was the most dismal and ridiculous failure in the history of labor strikes. It lasted just two hours, but meanwhile all Paris was in darkness, and that, too, without so much as a hint of what was going to happen. Then, as if to belittle the pretensions of the Electrical Workers' Union, and to prove not only that that labor union, but organized labor generally, is subject to a higher law than resolutions adopted by groups of workmen, the secretary of the Electrical Workers' Union was ordered before the proper court to answer to three suits against his union for damages sustained by three music-hall singers by reason of the electric lights being arbitrarily turned off for the space of two hours, thus depriving them of opportunity to employ their musical talents for that length of time—the demand being eight francs for each of the three singers. The secretary conducted his own case, and with characteristic pomposity he informed the court that the right of his union to strike and quit work, without reference to who might or might not be made to suffer thereby, was unlimited; moreover, his union was under no contract to supply light to the public. But the court took issue with the secretary and not only charged that his union grossly abused its right to strike when it ceased to serve the lighting company, but condemned him as an officer of the Electrical Workers' Union to pay the claims of the three plaintiffs for being deprived of their right to sing during the two hours that the music hall was in darkness by reason of the union's strike. But the court did not stop at that. It said there was no corporate or other need for calling the strike; that it was for the purpose of mobilizing the several labor unions at the call of an absurd rumor of military aggression which had alarmed the proletariat forces, and that the underlying intention of the Electrical Workers' Union was malicious; moreover, that such industrial disturbance was well calculated to overthrow the republic's economic life and deprive those who wanted to work of the sacred right to do so and earn their own living. The court then kindly informed the Electrical Workers' Union directly and all other labor organizations indirectly that there was no appeal from its decision.

The unrest which is seen and felt in labor circles does not come so much from the action of the electrical workers in precipitating a strike for a selfish purpose as from the ruling of the court on the question of the right of a labor organization to declare for a strike. The judgment of the court implies that conditions might be such as fully to justify a strike, but it seems to reserve the right to say when a strike is malicious in intention and when a strike would be justified by circumstances, thus leaving labor with no voice in the premises. But in one respect the court is certainly clear enough. To deprive by force or intimidation those who want to work of the sacred right to do so and earn their living will not be tolerated in France, and that those who do or undertake to deprive those who want to work of their right to work are guilty of malicious conduct and have malicious intention toward the economic life of the industrial situation. Hitherto labor-unionism in France has assumed the position that its right to strike is unlimited, and that although a given union, or its members, rather, may be serving a public utility or a public necessity they are not bound to serve their employers longer than they like, however much the public may be inconvenienced by giving up the employment, which they may give up without notice. It is this belief or understanding of their rights that made organized labor in France say "We are masters of the industrial situation," and until now their position has not been seriously questioned. In fact, labor strikes hitherto have resulted from disputes between employers and employees over wages or hours for a work day, but for a little time there has been an effort to federate all the labor unions so that if one class of labor or the employees of one establishment should strike, labor generally would go into voluntary idleness out of "sympathy" with the directly involved parties. The electrical workers' strike was an attempt to involve organized labor generally, but they made the mistake of inaugurating the strike for no purpose other than proving to the public that organized labor is the supreme master of the industrial situation and a very much more potent influence in the channels of manufacture and commerce than capital. The result of the effort of the electrical workers to show all this forth has been to set organization against organization and create a feeling of hostility that will materially hinder the scheme to merge the several unions into a federation of them all. It would not be taking a narrow view of the court's meaning in the Electrical Workers' Union case to say that the plan to federate all the unions is a "malicious intention and a conspiracy to overthrow the economic life of the nation."

ST. MARTIN.

PARIS, September 15, 1908.

CURRENT VERSE.

The Poet.

Throwing his pen aside:
"If I knew life," he cried,
"Then could I write."
But when with knowledge wide,
Stained by life's purple fruit,
Taking his pen one night—
Lo, he was mute!
—Armin Trebor, in Appleton's Magazine.

Put Up the Sword.

I have sung of the soldier's glory,
As I never shall sing again;
I have gazed on the shambles gory,
I have smelled of the slaughter pen.

There is blood in the ink-well clotted,
There are stains on the laurel leaf,
And the pages of fame are blotted
With the tears of a needless grief.

The bird is slaughtered for fashion,
And the heast is killed for sport;
And never the word compassion
Is whispered at Moloch's court.

For the parent seal in the water
Is slain, and her child must die,
That some sister or wife or daughter
Her beauty may beautify.

And the merciful thought we smother—
For such is the way of man—
As we murder the useless mother
For the "unhorn astrakhan."

But a season of rest comes never
For the rarest sport of all;
Will His patience endure forever,
Who noteth the sparrow's fall?

When the volleys of hell are sweeping
The sea and the hattle plain,
Do you think our God is sleeping
And never to wake again?

When hunger and ravenous fever
Are slaying the wasted frame,
Shall we worship the red deceiver,
The devil that men call Fame?

We may swing the censor to cover
The odor of blood—in vain;
God asks us over and over,
"Where is thy brother, Cain?"
—James Jeffrey Roche, in Century Magazine.

In Autumn Colors.

And memory paints a late September sun
Fast sinking in a far, low-lying west,
Where, over many a farm deep in the weald,
Trail level lines of faintly golden smoke,
Like broken rivers with their rising mists;
And in the forefront of my picture stands
A farm lad, who, with sideways tilted form,
Holds on his fork a heap of new-lit weeds,
Lifting the pile to let the air leap through;
A plain, brown figure backed by twenty miles
Of mellow meads, smoke trails, and sunset sky.
—Habberton Lulham, in "Songs from the Downs and Dunes."

The Wind Beguileth All.

The wind beguileth all;
Elusive lisper,
Hear him whisper, whisper, whisper,
Mellow in rise and eloquent in fall
He plays the lover,
With birdlike poise and dart and hover,
Lipping forevermore a madrigal.
White Janivere or sapphire June,
Autumnal days or hours Apirlan,
A golden tune
He heathes as from the ancient pipes of Pan.
Oh, wandering trouhadour,
Ever evasive,
Still penetrant, persistent and persuasive,
I love to lie and listen to your lure!
For now I know the lotused margs
Of the mysterious Nile,
Where, in the time long dead, the deep oared barges
Moored 'neath the shadow of some kingly pile;
And now I am aware of some fair garden
(Ah, radiant span!)
That hath for warden
The rose of Ispahan:
And now I am transported
By fluctuant melodies
To where the drowsing coral isles are courted
By the warm arms of Australasian seas.

Dawn flush, noon languor, eve's purple
Fallor behind the hill crests, if it fall
Upon attuned ears—the earth old call—
The wind, the minstrel wind, beguileth all!
—Clinton Scollard, in New York Sun.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Dr. Charlotte Schaefer, one of the graduates of the University of Texas, is professor of histology, biology, and embryology in the college.

Miss Marteina Kramers of Rotterdam, Holland, can read and speak thirteen different languages. She is the editor of Jus Suffragii, the official organ of the International Woman Suffrage Alliance.

Robert Alphonse Taft, oldest son of William H. Taft, is beginning his junior year at Yale with the assurance by the university faculty that he leads in scholarship the class of 1910. He will not go in for athletics.

Lord Milner, formerly governor of Transvaal and Orange River Colony and later High Commissioner for South Africa, is now visiting Canada and will give a series of addresses in the principal cities of the Dominion.

James J. Hill, president of the Great Northern Railroad, recently declared that $5000 will build an agricultural school and that the cost of a battleship will maintain a thousand of such schools. He is enthusiastic in his advocacy of all aids to productive agriculture.

Edward P. Allis, aged sixteen, the golf champion of Wisconsin, universally known as "Ned," recently scored a victory over Frank W. Jacobs of Madison, the State champion of 1907. The victor played good golf when only five years old, and at the age of eleven had the distinction of a biographical notice in a golf magazine.

George L. Glunt, superintendent of the 119-inch mill of the Carnegie Steel Company, at Homestead, has resigned his $10,000-a-year position to enter the ministry, and has been admitted to the Western Theological Seminary. Mr. Glunt has been a steel worker twenty-three years, and is a lifelong friend of W. Ellis Corey, president of the United States Steel Corporation.

Tresa ni Ailpin, a small thirteen-year-old girl from Limerick, was one of the honored musicians of the recent national Gaelic festival in Dublin. From her bow flowed jigs, hornpipes, and reels in such a liquid stream that not a toe in the audience but tapped in time, and when a company of small "rinche" dancers tripped out behind her one was minded of that famous piper of Hamelin town.

Miss Evelyn Beatrice Langman is said to lead in present distinction among American women sculptors. She was born in Ohio, studied in Chicago under Lorado Taft, and chose New York for her home. Two years ago in a notable competition representing many of the country's best sculptors she was awarded the commission for the great bronze doors of the memorial chapel for the Naval Academy at Annapolis.

Eugene Delano of New York and Clarke Washburn of Chicago recently returned from a visit to little-known northern wilds. They penetrated Labrador from the seacoast to the famous Grand Falls, one of the greatest cascades in the world. The falls are 300 miles from the sea and were reached only after an arduous journey of ten weeks. The only party of Americans who ever made the trip previously was one headed by Henry Bryant of Philadelphia, in 1892.

Edward Cecil Guinness, of the famous Irish firm of brewers, was made a baronet in recognition of his gift of $1,250,000 for the rebuilding of the slums of Dublin. The work occupied six years and when successfully accomplished, King Edward raised the baronet to the peerage with the title of Baron Iveagh. After the king visited Ireland last year, Lord Iveagh presented $250,000 to the Irish hospitals in commemoration of the sovereign's visit, and in return he was made a viscount.

Prince Eitel Frederick, the Kaiser's second son, has been growing stout in the last two years, and in order to reduce he has undertaken a novel cure, of which he has just finished the first stage. For several weeks he has been living the life of a common farm hand at his summer residence, Ingenheim Castle, near Charlottenburg, where from morning to night he is engaged in the hardest physical work. His daily programme is made up of seven hours' gardening, tree felling, hedge cutting, wood sawing, and carpentering.

Sir Max Waechter is a wealthy merchant of London who seeks to create the United States of Europe by a scheme of federation with a common tariff as its basic principle. He is now on a tour of the courts of Europe in the interests of his cause. After visiting Russia, Austria, and Hungary, and securing the support of leading ministers, Sir Max was received by several northern monarchs. Among the guests received on his yacht during his cruise was Prince Cassano of Italy, who is organizing a congress in Rome on the proposal.

Alexander Stewart Grav was until recently one of the most prominent and successful lawyers in Edinburgh, Scotland. In order to identify himself with the new movement which is organized for the purpose of calling public attention to the unemployed problem, especially in its bearing on the land question, he abandoned a fortune of nearly $250,000 and is now leader of the "Hunger Marchers" in England. Not long ago this band of unemployed men, led by him, walked from Manchester to London, a distance of 187 miles, and sent a petition to King Edward.

THE FEDERAL POWER DEFIED.

By Jerome A. Hart.

XXXIII.

When the community came to know that a Supreme Court justice was imprisoned at Fort Vigilant, Governor Jackson realized that the critical moment was at hand. If the State was to retain any semblance of authority, it could not permit a judge of its highest court to remain in illegal confinement. After taking counsel, therefore, the governor sent out some of his most trusted lieutenants on confidential missions. These messengers sought out certain men, prominent officially, professionally, or commercially, and asked them to meet the governor privately, in order to discuss various matters gravely affecting the common weal. The first to be asked were Carleton, president of the Vigilantes; Bascom, their secretary; Truax, their counsellor, and Carwell, their treasurer. These four officials made a quartet which was supposed to dominate the executive committee of the Vigilantes. Representing the United States navy were Admiral Farquhar, commandant of the Navy Yard, and Captain Shotwell, of the warship Monroe. The United States army was represented by General Ruhl, in command at the arsenal. General Herman was the head of the militia forces of the State, while Judge Fox represented the Federal judiciary.

With military punctuality, the soldiers and sailors were on hand promptly at the appointed hour; the civilians, as usual, a little late. The members of the conference showed by their demeanor that they realized the gravity of the task before them. After brief salutations, the governor, without waste of words, began:

"I have invited you here, gentlemen, to lay before you the present alarming crisis in this city, and to request your cooperation in ending a condition which disturbs the peace and good order of both city and State. For the time being, let us consider our conference as strictly private, and let us waive all questions of rank or status. Judge Fox, who is a member of the Federal judiciary, could scarcely take part publicly in a conference with gentleman representing an organization formally banded to resist the law. But he is not judicially cognizant of such a condition of things, and is here in his private capacity. Correspondingly, the gentlemen who here represent the Federal army and navy are also officially ignorant of the fact that the law is being opposed in this State. We will therefore assume that you now hear for the first time of these conditions. You may be certain that such conditions exist when I inform you that I am about to issue a proclamation declaring martial law."

"As its form is important, governor," here interposed Truax, "may we ask you to read the portion of your proclamation which supersedes the statutory law?"

"Certainly—I was about to do so. The passage covering the matter you refer to reads as follows:

"Combinations to resist by force the execution of legal process exist in this county. An illegal organization styling itself the Vigilance Committee is resisting the execution of criminal process. Therefore, I, John Jackson, governor of the State, do declare this City and County in a state of insurrection. I hereby order all militia companies of once to report for duty to Major-General Hermon. I furthermore order all combinations or organizations whatsoever, in opposition to or in violation of the laws, more particularly the association known as the Vigilance Committee, to disband forthwith, and to yield obedience to the laws."

"Has your proclamation been issued yet, governor?" inquired Judge Fox.

"It has just been completed by the printer, and is ready to distribute. That I have decided to issue such a proclamation shows how grave I consider the situation to be."

"Are the militia forces of the State in condition to restore order?" asked Admiral Farquhar.

The governor hesitated a moment before replying. "I have directed General Herman," he said at last, "to call on all the enrolled militia to report for duty; also to recruit such other troops as he may deem necessary, and to place his military forces at the disposal of the executive for the purpose of enforcing the laws."

"And I," added General Herman, "in pursuance of the governor's proclamation and orders, have directed all the enrolled members of the militia to report for duty at once. I have furthermore ordered all citizens between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, not already enrolled, to form themselves into companies, to elect officers, and to report for duty. These new recruits will be armed and mustered into the service."

"Without desiring to be offensive," said the Vigilante president, Carleton, "I would like to ask General Herman where he is going to get the arms to give his recruits. I do not say this with any desire to irritate the general, but I am convinced that every militia armory in the city is bare of arms, and that there are no muskets or rifles to be obtained for the State militia."

"I have the assurance, sir," replied Herman coldly, "of securing arms from General Ruhl, now in command of the United States arsenal here."

"I beg your pardon, general," here interposed Ruhl, "I am not aware that I had made any promise to furnish you with arms."

Herman gazed at him with surprise and discomposure. "General, you amaze me!" he cried. "Do you not remember promising Governor Jackson and myself, when we visited you at the arsenal, that you would furnish us with arms when requisition was duly made?"

"I remember the occurrence distinctly, sir," replied Ruhl calmly. "But at no time since has requisition been duly made upon me. Were I to furnish you with arms, under present conditions, I would grossly violate the United States laws. For in your general orders you declare the county to be in a state of insurrection, and it is exactly at such a time that every army officer is prohibited by Congress from issuing arms or munitions of war. You have been an officer of the United States army, general, and you surely should know that the authority to issue arms under these conditions belongs exclusively to the President."

"Nevertheless, my recollection agrees with that of General Herman," said the governor to Ruhl. "We both of us understood that you promised to issue arms when requisition should be made."

"I am sorry, governor," replied Ruhl blandly, "very sorry. But it seems to me it is not a question of your recollection, or General Herman's recollection, or mine. It is a question of law. When you shall have complied with the Federal laws, and when I shall receive orders to that effect from my superiors, I shall issue arms to you, but not before."

Jackson and Herman conferred together in whispers for a few moments, and it was evident that they were both suffering from extreme surprise and chagrin. When they had finished their whispered conference, the governor turned to Farquhar:

"Admiral," he said, "it seems that we can not hope for assistance from the representatives of the United States army. I trust we shall be more fortunate with the navy. You are aware that the authorities in this city have been over-awed by an illegal organization, and that one of the high officers of justice is now unlawfully imprisoned by a so-called Vigilance Committee. I therefore formally ask you to assist me, as governor of this State, to take the said prisoner, John Tower, justice of the Supreme Court, from the hands of this illegal organization, and to extend to him the protection of the laws of the United States."

Farquhar paused before replying, but it was deliberation, not hesitation. "If I could conscientiously comply," he began, measuredly, warily, "if the Constitution and the laws justified me in assisting you, believe me, governor, I would do so. But the Navy Department has always warned its officers not to interfere where the troubles within a State are strictly domestic, and where there is no collision with the United States laws. It has not yet been made clear to me that any law of the United States has been violated."

The governor stared at him. "Do you not think, admiral," said he, "that for an illegal organization to deprive a citizen of his liberty is against the laws of the United States?"

"The United States have no original jurisdiction over criminal matters, governor," replied the admiral. "While crimes committed on the high seas under the American flag might be considered as falling under the jurisdiction of the United States, there can be no question that crimes committed in this county, or anywhere else in your State, must fall under the original jurisdiction of the courts of this city, or county, or State."

"But this prisoner of the Vigilantes is a citizen of the United States," persisted the governor. "Is not their act a violation of his rights as such a citizen?"

"Again I must reply that his remedy for the criminal act lies in the State courts," responded Farquhar. "Even the Federal courts would have no jurisdiction in such a matter; therefore Federal officials of the army or navy can not interfere. No collision has yet arisen between the Federal and State authorities in this unhappy crisis, and until the Federal power is attacked or I am ordered by the Federal government to intervene, I am debarred from acting."

"Then Captain Shotwell does not agree with you," said Governor Jackson, coldly. "In reply to a petition from Judge Tower he has addressed a communication to the so-called Vigilance Committee, requesting them to deliver the person of Tower to him aboard of his ship."

"If he did so, I was not aware of it," briefly replied Farquhar, looking interrogatively at Shotwell.

"I merely did what common humanity impelled me to do, admiral," explained Shotwell. "I received a letter from this prisoner informing me that his life was in danger at the hands of an illegally constituted tribunal. I therefore addressed the Vigilantes a letter urging them to pause before breaking the laws of both State and nation, and requesting them to turn over to me the person of their captive."

"Had you consulted me, sir," rejoined Farquhar severely, "I should have advised you to refrain from mixing in this unhappy domestic trouble."

Shotwell gazed defiantly at Farquhar. "I did not regard it as at all necessary to consult you in the matter, sir," he replied, stiffly.

"If you had done so, captain, I would have ordered you not to interfere."

Shotwell's voice rose. "When we are at our respective stations, sir," he exclaimed, "I do not look upon myself as under your orders. You are commandant of the navy yard, fifty miles away, and not of the Pacific Station. My ship when in this harbor is not in waters under your command."

Farquhar regarded him fixedly. "Captain Shotwell," said he, "at the close of this conference you will repair to your ship and await orders from me. If you interfere in this local matter I will put you under arrest, remove you from command of your ship, and confine you at the navy yard, where you will be under my observation."

Shotwell grew pale, then red. He said no more. There was a deep silence in the room for some minutes. It was broken by Vigilante Carwell.

During all of the conference the Vigilantes had preserved a diplomatic silence, save for one or two brief questions. But the unhappy turn the negotiations were taking so pleased them that they could not conceal their gratification. The army was at odds with the governor; so was the navy. Herman was offended at Ruhl; so was the governor. And now, to crown it all, the two navy officers had fallen out. There seemed no hope of assistance from the Federal government, and the faces of the Vigilante leaders and their whispered confabs showed that the governor's failure would not make them mourn. It was their exultation which led Vigilante Carwell, for the first time, to speak, but before he ended his comrades wished he had been dumb.

"Admiral," said Carwell, "probably you do not know how far your subordinate, Captain Shotwell, went in his letter to the Vigilante Committee. He actually threatened to turn his guns on our headquarters; he boasted that he would batter down the walls of our fort if we did not yield up to him the murderer now imprisoned there."

"Of your—er—fort, did you say, sir?" asked Farquhar, raising his eyebrows slightly. "This also is a fact which had not been brought to my attention. Can it be possible, Captain Shotwell, that you have indulged in threats to open fire on a domestic seaport?"

"Not that he scared us at all," went on the excitable Carwell. "For as soon as he wrote us this threat we made our plans. We got everything fixed to secure an old hulk, which we would man with a crew and two hundred sharpshooters, all picked riflemen. Then if Shotwell dared to open fire on us we were going to lay the hulk alongside with a couple of tug-boats, while our riflemen cleared his decks. Then in a few minutes we would have floats abeam of him prepared with fires so that we could make them fast to the Monroe, and have her afire in fifteen seconds."

Again a sudden silence fell upon the gathering. Even his Vigilante colleagues looked in dismay at the indiscreet Carwell. Farquhar rose.

"What do you mean, sir!" he thundered. "Do you dare to talk thus to an officer of the United States navy? Perhaps you men of this Vigilance Committee misinterpret my reluctance to interfere in domestic broils. But you must not be weak enough to think that it is sympathy for you in your lawlessness. If you venture on any intrigue against the authority of the United States, I shall take summary action."

As if unconsciously, Shotwell, so lately hostile, moved across the room, and stood by his admiral.

"In the eyes of the law," Farquhar vociferated, "you Vigilantes are a mob. Mobs may over-awe the authorities of this city. With that I, as an officer of the United States, have nothing to do. But if I hear of the slightest resistance to Federal officials, civil or military, when carrying out the Federal laws, I shall take action. I shall send ashore an armed guard over the Mint and the United States Treasury. Such seditious and treasonable talk as that man just uttered in my presence I shall punish by imprisonment. As for Captain Shotwell's guns, they will be turned on Fort Vigilant if traitors lurk there, and every man and every gun at the navy yard or aboard the United States ships in these waters will be abused to destroy organizations which hatch treason."

The conference came abruptly to an end.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Copyright 1908 by Jerome A. Hart.

The most venerable rose tree in existence is said to bloom against the ancient church of Hildesheim, in Germany. Hildesheim has had a most eventful history. Notwithstanding the many parties which at different times have been in the ascendancy, they all seem to have respected and tended the rose tree, which, it is said, was planted by Charlemagne. The trunk is now almost as big as a man's body. There are five principal limbs trained against the church, the tree being protected by iron railings inclosing an area of about twenty-six square feet. The rude German soldiers in early ages tended the tree, Catholics and Protestants, in turn masters of the town, drained the ground, the soldiers of Turenne fastened up the branches with clamps, and those of Napoleon a century and a half later erected the railings.

The Vatican is wholly the palace of the Pope and he naturally has access to all its parts should he so wish. The palace covers about thirteen and a half acres, of which six acres are occupied by the twenty courts. There are about a thousand halls, chapels, and apartments. Since the Italian occupation of Rome the Vatican, the Lateran, and the villa of Castel Gandolfo enjoy extra territorial rights as the surviving remnant of the States of the Church. The Vatican has been the permanent seat of the Papacy since the healing of the schism of Avignon.

Count von Zeppelin's new balloon is being made by the firm of Spencer & Sons of Highbury, in North London, England. There are dozens of men and girls employed in the evolution of the balloon, which is composed of new cells of six-fold goldbeaters' skin. The work is being pushed forward with all possible speed.

IN THE DAYS OF JEFFERSON.

Mary Johnston Writes a Fine Historical Novel of Sentiment and Plot.

In "Lewis Rand" we have a novel of high order and one that brilliantly illuminates a strenuous episode in American history. Perhaps in few stories of its kind shall we find so striking a presentation of historical events in combination with a character portrayal of such sombre intensity. Certainly we shall nowhere find a more careful picture of the political life in the South that was the immediate background to the escape of Aaron Burr.

The author introduces us to her hero in the first chapter. Lewis Rand is the son of Gideon Rand, Virginia tobacco-roller, and in the conversation between the boy and the famous hunter, Adam Gaudylock, we see the first sparks of the ambition that indicated knowledge as the road to power. Lewis will never be a tobacco-roller like his father, nor will he be a hunter like Gaudylock. He would rather be "King of the Mississippi."

And so we find him in the bookshop at Richmond intent upon spending his two dollars in law-books and to the best advantage. And here, by one of those coincidences that we are still so foolish as to call accidental, the boy meets Mr. Jefferson, who is attracted by his eagerness and willing enough to help him or any one else along the difficult road to learning:

The shop near the bridge to which they resorted was dark and low, but learning was spread upon his counter, and a benevolent dragon of knowledge in horn spectacles ran over the wares for Lewis Rand. "De Jurc Maritimo, six shillings eightpence, my lad. Burnett's History and Demosthenes' Orations, two crowns. Mr. Gibbons' 'Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire,' a great book and dear! 'Common Sense'—and that's Tom Paine's, and you may have it for two pistareens."

The boy shook his head. "I want a law-book."

The genie put forth "The Principles of Equity," and named the price.

"I is too dear."

A gentleman lounging against the counter closed the book into which he had been dipping, and drew nearer to the would-be purchaser.

"Equity is an expensive commodity, my lad," he said kindly. "How much law have you read?"

"I have read 'The Law of Virginia,'" answered the boy. "I borrowed it. I worked for a week for Mr. Douglas, and read 'The Law of Nations' rest-hours. Mrs. Selden, on the Three-Notched Road, gave me 'The Federalist.' Are you a lawyer, sir?"

The gentleman laughed, and the genie behind the counter laughed. Young Mocket plucked Lewis Rand by the sleeve, but the latter was intent upon the personage before him and did not heed.

"Yes," said the gentleman, "I am a lawyer. Are you going to be one?"

"I am," said the boy. "Will you tell me what books I ought to buy? I have two dollars."

Mr. Jefferson buys for the boy "Locke on Government" and Coke, and so lays young Lewis under a debt of gratitude that is to grow stronger with the years until nefarious ambition shall blot out the memory of obligation.

A few years later Lewis Rand is Republican candidate for the House of Delegates at Richmond. Opposed to him is Ludwell Cary, Federalist, and member of the great Cary family of Virginia. The election is at the court-house and the voting is public with both candidates present. Custom demands that the man voted for shall thank the voter, "and that aloud and aptly, with no slurring acknowledgment of service":

Lewis Rand, a born speaker and familiar with his audience, was at no loss. "I thank you, Mr. Fagg. May your shadow never grow less. The old county—Mr. Jefferson's county, gentlemen—may be trusted to hold its own, in Richmond or in Washington, in heaven or in hell. Mr. Fagg, I will drink your health in a punch of the Eagle's brewing. Your very obliged friend and servant."

The long day draws to an end and Mr. Rand is elected, to the rage of the Carys, although their kinswoman, Jacqueline Churchill of Fontenay, as good a Federalist as any of them, finds mitigation for a political disappointment in the gallant bearing of the young victor. And when Lewis Rand, thrown from his horse, is carried to Fontenoy, to the very citadel of his political enemies, he does but complete a conquest of the beautiful Jacqueline that was begun long before.

Jacqueline, as the wife of Lewis Rand, becomes, in a sense, a bond of union between Rand and the Churchills and Carys. Not that they ever forgive Rand, nor indeed Jacqueline herself, but her presence in the house of their enemy produces a certain solicitude upon their part for his welfare. At least they would not have him disgrace himself, and when there are rumors that Rand has fallen a victim to the wiles of Burr they bestir themselves mightily to prevent an impending ruin. Jacqueline herself is deceived as to her husband's relations with the plotter, and when the extent of his pledge becomes known to her it is a staggering blow to her ideal, although not to her love and loyalty. Here is a glance at Colonel Burr himself:

The knocker sounded. "That is he," exclaimed Rand, and went into the hall to welcome his guest. Jacqueline returned to the drawing-room, and waited there before the fire. She was dressed in white, with bare neck and arms and her mother's amethysts around her throat. In a moment the two men entered. "This is my wife, Colonel Burr," said Rand.

Jacqueline curtsied. A small, slight, black-eyed, and smiling gentleman bowed low, and with much grace of manner took and kissed her hand. "Mr. Rand, now I understand the pride in your voice! Madam, I wish my daughter Theodosia were with me. She is my pride, and when I say that you two would be friends, I pay you both a compliment!"

"I have heard much of her," answered Jacqueline, "and nothing but good. My husband tells me that you have been in the South—and in Virginia we are welcoming you with a snowstorm!"

"The cold is all outside," said Colonel Burr. "Permit me."

He banded his hostess to the green-striped sofa, and seated himself beside her with a sigh of appreciation for the warmth and soft light of the pleasant room, and the presence of woman. "Your harp!" he exclaimed. "I should have brought a sheaf of Spanish songs such as the ladies sing to the guitar in New Orleans! My dear sir, your fair wife and my Theodosia must one day sing together, walk hand in hand together, in that richer, sweeter land! They shall use the mantilla and wield the fan. Crowns are too heavy—they shall wear black lace!"

He spoke with not unpleasant brusqueness, a military manner tempered with gallantry, and he looked at Rand with quick black eyes. "Yes, they must meet," said Rand simply. He spoke composedly, but he had nevertheless a moment's vision of Jacqueline, away from the snow and storm, walking in beauty through the gardens of a far country. He saw her with a circlet of gold upon her head, a circlet of Mexican gold. Crowns were heavy, but men—ay, and women, too!—fought for them. Hers should be light and fanciful upon her head. She should wear black lace if she chose—though he always liked her best in white—in her kingdom, in the kingdom he was going to help Aaron Burr establish. No! in the kingdom Aaron Burr should help Lewis Rand establish! His dream broke. He was not sure that he meant to come to an understanding with Burr. It depended—it depended. But still he saw Jacqueline in trailing robes, with the gold circlet on her head.

Rand never realized that the plot was known to Jefferson and was more than suspected even in the local politics of Richmond. The Carys and the Churchills knew it, and to save Jacqueline they were willing to make peace with her husband and so snatch him from the brink of the abyss. His break with Jefferson, who knows so much more than Rand ever suspects, is well told:

Rand also had risen. "In this room, what can I say? Your kindness to me has been very great. My God, sir, I should be stock or stone not to feel abashed! And yet—and yet—Will you have it at last? You ask discipleship—you must have about you tame and obedient spirits—a Saint James the Greater and a Saint James the Less to hearken to your words and spread them far and wide, and all the attentive band to wait upon your wisdom! Free! We are tremendously free, but you must still be Lord and Master! Well, say that I rebel!"

"I see that you have done so," said Jefferson, with irony. "I am not your Lord and Master."

"I would not, if I could, have shunned this interview tonight. For long we have felt this strain, and now the sharp break is over. I shall sleep the better for it."

"I am glad, sir, that you view it so."

"For years I have worn your livery and trudged your road—that fair, wide country road with bleating sheep and farmer folk, all going to markets dull as death! I've swinked and sweated for you on that road. Now I'll tread my own, though I come at last to the gates of Tartarus! My service is done, sir; I'm out of livery."

"Your road!" exclaimed the other. "Where does it lie, and who are your fellow-travelers? John Randolph of Roanoke and the new Republicans? or monarchism and the Federalists? Or have I the honor, tonight, to entertain a Virginian Caesar?—perhaps even a Buonaparte?" His voice changed. "Have you reflected, sir, that there is some danger in so free an expression of your mind?"

"I have reflected," answered Rand, "that there is no danger so intolerable as the chafing of a half-acknowledged bond. The clock is striking again. I owe you much, sir. I thank you for it. While I served you, I served faithfully. It is over now. I look you in the face and tell you this, and so I give you warning that I am free. Henceforth I act as my free will directs."

What Jefferson could not do, private and family persuasion were impotent to accomplish. The friendly plotting of Cary, the remonstrances of Major Churchill, are wasted and Rand plunges forward impetuously to his ruin. The offer of reconciliation with Jacqueline's family, the glittering bait of the governorship of Virginia, are alike powerless to tempt the young plotter from the imperial goal before him, and when at last Major Churchill speaks his mind our sympathies are with him:

Major Edward Churchill rose, stark and gray, with narrowed eyes and deliberating, pointing hand. "You are a villain, sir; yes, sir, a damned, skilled, heart-breaking villain! Bold! yes, you are bold—bold as others of your tribe of whom the mythologies tell! Arrogant as Lucifer, you are more wretched than the slave in your fields! You might have been upon the side of light; you have chosen darkness. It will swallow you up, and I, for one, shall say: 'The night hath its own.' You have chosen wrongly where you might have chosen rightly, and you have not done so in blind passion but in cold blood, fully and freely, under whatever monstrous light it is by which you think you walk! I have warned you of the gulf, and I have warned in vain. So be it! But do not think, sir, do not think that you will be allowed to drag with you, down into the darkness, the woman whom you have married! I wish that my niece had died before she saw your face! Do you know what she thinks of you, sir? She thinks you a lover so devoted that at her pleading you put forever from you a gilded lure; a gentleman so absolutely of your word that for her to doubt it would be the blackest treason; a statesman; and a patriot who will yet nobly serve Virginia and the country! God knows what she doesn't think you, the misguided child! She's happy, tonight, at Fontenoy, because she's coming home to you tomorrow. That I should have lived to say such a thing of Henry Churchill's daughter! When I rode away tonight, she was singing." He burst into spasmodic and grating laughter. "It was that song of Lovelace's! By God, sir, she must have had you in mind!"

"I could not love thee, dear, so much, Loved I not honor more."

Yes, by God, she was thinking of you! Ha ha, ha ha!"

For what remains the reader must consult the story itself, and it will repay him. It may be doubted if there is anything finer of its kind in fiction than the character sketch of Lewis Rand. Ambitious, impetuous, eloquent, and intellectual, we see him drawn slowly downward to the pit by an unquenchable thirst for power. Slowly and painfully our admiration turns to pity and then to contempt, with a genuine heartache for the lovely Jacqueline, the very type of a divine womanhood. The author has made a great success. She has added something to the literature of her country that we would not willingly miss.

"Lewis Rand," by Mary Johnston. Published by the Houghton-Mifflin Company, Boston and New York.

Britain, Canada, Australia, and New Zealand had to pay a deficiency of £62,362 on last year's working of the Pacific cable, according to the accounts published a few days ago.

WINSTON CHURCHILL'S WEDDING.

A Popular Ovation Attends the Marriage of Two Interesting People.

There is every reason why the wedding of Winston Churchill to Miss Hozier should excite an interest to which royalty is sometimes a stranger. To begin with, Mr. Churchill is the son of his father, and Lord Randolph is still something more than a memory in English politics. Secondly, Mr. Churchill is the son of his American mother, and Lady Randolph, now Mrs. Cornwallis West, is still one of the brilliant and picturesque figures of society life. Then again, Mr. Churchill himself has laid a firm hold on the imagination of the people. His experiences during the Boer War and as a prisoner in Pretoria are a proof that truth is sometimes stranger than fiction, and although his political views would have been anathema to his father, he has played the game with an unflinching humor, a matchless command of his temper, and a magnanimity that have won plaudits as well as an occasional brickbat. Miss Hozier, while not one of the prominent figures of society, is nevertheless well and favorably known. She is the daughter of the late Sir Henry Montague Hozier, who for thirty years was secretary for Lloyds. The ceremony was performed at St. Margaret's, Westminster, by the Bishop of St. Asaph, and Bishop Weldon, who was Mr. Churchill's headmaster at Harrow, delivered a congratulatory address.

The bride's dress is, of course, of paramount importance, but it was of a simplicity so severe as to preclude an extended description. It was of soft white satin, cut in beautiful lines and trimmed with priceless Venetian lace. Her long, white tulle veil fell to the hem of her skirt over a coronet of orange blossoms, and in her hand she held a white leather prayer-book. Miss Hozier did not follow the custom of providing a retinue of twelve bridesmaids. There were but five, and they wore picture dresses of cream satin, embroidered with a design of leaves in floss silk and silver beads. Their large picture hats were in stretched black satin encircled with wreaths of shell-pink and white camellias, with the chains and jeweled pendants presented to them by the bridegroom. The bridesmaids were led by Miss Nellie Hozier, sister of the bride, and she was followed by Miss Madeline Whyte, the bride's cousin; the Hon. Venetia Stanley, daughter of Lord and Lady Stanley of Alderley, Miss Horatia Seymour, and Miss Claire Frewen. The best man was Lord Hugh Cecil, son of the late Lord Salisbury, and it is therefore evident that political differences have not disturbed private friendships.

There were sixteen hundred wedding guests, and they seem all to have sent more or less substantial marks of their affection. The list of wedding presents occupies a column and a half of small type in the morning newspaper. There is, of course, the usual dreadful lack of imagination, and Mr. and Mrs. Churchill have been overwhelmed with presents for which they can have no possible use. There they all are in full force, the butter dishes, the clocks, the cigarette cases, the books, the tables, and the ash trays. If Mr. Churchill intended to open an hotel he could equip it with these useful articles and still have some to spare.

The gift of the king was a beautiful malacca cane with a massive gold knob, richly chased and engraved "W. L. S. C." The accompanying card reads: "To Mr. Winston Churchill, on the occasion of his marriage, with best wishes. Edward, R. and I." The bridegroom gave the bride a ruby and diamond cluster necklace, with ruby and diamond drop, and a pair of diamond cluster earrings. Lord Rosebery sent a silver inkstand, the Marchioness of Blandford, a table and fire screen; Viscount and Viscountess Castlereagh, a luncheon case; Lord Robert Cecil, a reading lamp; Earl Clarewilliam, an inkstand; Lord Curzon, a gold cup; the Earl of Jersey, a paper knife; Duchess of Marlborough, two Louis XVI wardrobes; Lord Ravleigh, two Japanese vases; the Duke of Westminster, a grog table; Mrs. George Cornwallis West, a gold dressing case; Mr. George Cornwallis West, a gold and tortoise-shell umbrella. The public bodies with which Mr. Churchill has been identified were well to the fore with all kinds of silverware too numerous to mention, while the number of books that were presented is quite unusual. Among these we notice nine volumes of Theodore Roosevelt's works from Mr. R. Donald, and the "Memoirs of the Countess de Boigne," from Lady Desborough. Lady Maud Warrender presented the "Vicar of Wakefield," while Mr. Churchill will now be able to read the "Arabian Nights," thanks to the generosity of Mrs. Paul Phipps.

After the wedding Mr. and Mrs. Churchill went to Blenheim and thence to Berlin, where the bridegroom is persona grata with the emperor. Mr. Churchill was the emperor's guests during the army manoeuvres in Silesia in the autumn of 1906, and the favorable impression that he then made has since been confirmed by his references to Germany in various public speeches. Speaking to a foreign diplomatist some time ago, the kaiser lamented the fact that British cabinet ministers so seldom came to Berlin, because he regarded such visits as highly conducive to Anglo-German friendship. Certainly no better representative could be found than Mr. Churchill under his present guardianship, and it may be said that no one understands the art of a fine hospitality better than the German emperor when he is in a mind to exercise it.

LOXDON, September 14, 1908.

THE OLD MAN'S DREAM.

By Douglass H. Morse.

He knew that he was drowsing in his chair and that the light was burning low. He thought that he would arouse himself, presently, before he had quite—ah! what was that—did some one knock just then, at the door? He could not be sure; it sounded so far away. He struggled to drag himself back to full consciousness and to listen. He fancied that he had very nearly succeeded; he felt that he was almost poised and then, in a twinkling he had lost his balance and he was slipping—slipping. He had a vague sense of trying to catch himself, of clutching at threads that snapped before him. Then before he was quite over the border he heard, or rather sensed, once more a rapping—very faint but very real, and the realness of it caught and held him there irresistibly. His nerves tingled in response, but it seemed an age before he could speak. Then, naturally enough, he cried, "Come in!" But his voice sounded foreign and distant like some one else's voice, and he found himself wondering dimly whether he really had spoken—whether—he—really—

Presently it occurred to him that the door had opened. His voice then—of course. The cloud lifted immediately; it was astonishing how clear everything became. Some one was coming in. He was aware of a strange, battered figure that stepped forward, uncertainly, screening a lighted miner's candle with one hand. Somehow or other even before the figure spoke, he knew that it was Dickie.

"Dad, I—I'm sorry to bother you once more—" the figure laughed nervously.

Yes, it was Dickie—of that much he was certain. But it was perfectly impossible for Dickie to be there, and he was equally certain of that; for his son had gone away, very far away, and he would never come back—at any rate never like that, in those outlandish clothes. Spruce, fastidious Dickie! It was so inconsistent—so utterly absurd that he perceived at once that he was dreaming, and began to admire the logical soundness of his own inference. To know that he was dreaming and yet to dream on! He could scarcely restrain a self-satisfied smile as he leaned back easily in his chair.

"I have come back, once more, against your orders," Dick was saying, "and against my own resolve. I have no right, I know, after—" he paused and clapped his hand to the back of his head in that old, awkward way.

"After my folly, and your injustice. I swore, then, it should be the last time—but I was mad when I swore. And so I went off to the mines—"

His voice broke buskily, and his face was so very white. The hand which he dropped from his head was gloved with blood, and his brown hair also was matted with black grime. For the first time he noticed that there was an ugly gasp behind Dickie's ear. This frightened him until he remembered that it was all a dream. He resolved that he would not forget that and become confused again. But why should Dickie look so terribly serious? Perhaps he did not know it was a dream. Or the whole, the situation was rather amusing, and he was half minded to laugh, but then—he might awaken, and he wanted to see the end.

Dickie, who had started again, stopped short and winced just a little at that flicker of a smile. Then he frowned at his candle and continued:

"Tonight I was working in an old shaft. The timbers must have been rotten. All I remember is the crash."

The other was listening now. The notion to laugh had suddenly left him.

"When I came to, everything was dark. I lit this candle. It is all I have—when it goes out I will be alone—off there in the darkness."

Oh—he wished Dickie would not look so solemn.

"Tomorrow is Sunday. They will not miss me till the next morning. The rocks are all about me—I am hemmed in—walled in—and the air—is growing—so—close."

There was a fearfulness about Dickie's voice that made him tremble. He moistened his lips and tried to speak, but the words rattled like parchment in his throat.

"Now," said Dickie, very softly. "I have come to say good-bye, and"—with his face a little whiter—"to tell you that I am—sorry." He paused and waited wearily.

"My head aches"—the form was growing indistinct—"I am very tired," he sighed, "I have come to tell you—I am—sorry—daddy." The murmur of his voice dwindled to a whisper. The candle still sputtered softly, but the form that held it was fading away. Only the eyes shone sorrowfully—as through a mist.

Then, at last, fear wrenched his naked soul, and the deep-tearing agony wrested loose his tongue.

"Dickie," he whimpered, "Dickie," and sprang towards those eyes with quivering arms—but they were gone in a mist.

"Stay!" he panted, snatching at the wraith behind the light, while anguish ran wet upon his brow—"Stay!"

The flame leaped up from the guttered candle and touched him lightly for one burning instant upon the wrist, and then candle and flame vanished alike, and there was only he standing with outstretched arms, all forlorn in the tense silent shadows. He moaned and sank back, fighting for breath.

And with that he awoke. He was seated in his chair and the light was burning low. So— he had forgotten, after all. Now, of course, he remembered; yet, as he stared woefully about the vacant room, a sudden terror seized him. He fancied that his wrist tingled—the wrist that he had burned in his dream—and precisely in that small spot where the dream candle had nipped him. He tried to laugh it off, but the silence seemed to get into his throat and strangle him. In a panic, he turned up the light, and thrust his hand full into the glare.

And there on his wrist he saw, quite clearly, the livid mark.

OLD FAVORITES.

Love Triumphant.

Helen's lips are drifting dust,
Ilium is consumed with rust;
All the galleons of Greece
Drink the ocean's dreamless peace;
Lost was Solomon's purple show
Restless centuries ago;
Stately empires wax and wane—
Babylon, Barhary, and Spain—
Only one thing undefaced.
Lasts, though all the world lies waste
And the heavens are overturned;
—Dear, how long ago we learned!

There's a sight that blinds the sun,
Sound that lives when sounds are done,
Music that reukes the birds,
Language lovelier than words,
Hue and scent that shame the rose,
Wine no earthly vineyard knows,
Silence stiller than the shore
Swept by Charon's stealthy oar,
Ocean more divinely free
Than Pacific's boundless sea—
—Dear, how long ago we knew!
Ye who love have learned it true.
—Frederic Lawrence Knowles.

The Girl I Left Behind Me.

The dames of France are fond and free,
And Flemish lips are willing,
And soft the maids of Italy,
And Spanish eyes are thrilling;
Still, though I bask beneath their smile,
Their charms fail to bind me,
And my heart falls back to Erin's Isle
To the girl I left behind me.

For she's as fair as Shannon's side,
And purer than its water;
But she refused to be my bride,
Though many a year I sought her;
Yet, since to France I sail'd away,
Her letters oft remind me
That I promis'd never to gainsay
The girl I left behind me.

She says "My own dear love, come home,
My friends are rich and many,
Or else abroad with you I'd roam,
A soldier stout as any;
If you'll not come, nor let me go,
I'll think you have resigned me."
My heart nigh broke when I answered "No"
To the girl I left behind me.

For never shall my true love have
A life of war and toiling,
And never as a skulking slave
I'll tread my native soil on;
But were I free or to be freed,
The battle's close would find me
To Ireland bound, nor message need
From the girl I left behind me.

—Anon.

Ballad of Dead Actors.

Where are the passions they essayed,
And where the tears they made to flow?
Where the wild humors they portrayed
For laughing worlds to see and know?
Othello's wrath and Juliet's woe?
Sir Peter's whims and Timon's gall?
And Millamont and Romeo?
Into the night go one and all.

Where are the braveries, fresh or frayed?
The plumes, the armors—friend and foe?
The cloth of gold, the rare brocade,
The mantles glittering to and fro?
The pomp, the pride, the royal show?
The cries of war and festival?
The youth, the grace, the charms, the glow?
Into the night go one and all.

The curtain falls, the play is played;
The beggar packs beside the heau;
The monarch troops, and troops the maid,
The thunder huddles with the snow.
Where are the revelers, high and low?
The clashing swords? The lover's call?
The dancers gleaming, row on row?
Into the night go one and all.

ENVOY.

Prince, in one common overthrow,
The hero tumbles with the thrall;
As dust that drives, as straws that blow,
Into the night go one and all.
—W. E. Henley.

The bronze tablet in memory of General Count de Robambeau, who commanded the French allies in the war of the revolution, and made his headquarters while in Newport in 1780-1781 at the Vernon House on Clarke and Mary Streets, and which had been placed on the house, now owned by Harwood E. Read, was unveiled and dedicated with appropriate ceremonies a few days ago. The unveiling was by the venerable Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, and a brief address was made by Count de Chambrun, counselor of the French embassy and a lineal descendant of the Marquis de Lafayette.

Another California Tradition Shattered.

That the Indians of Tiburon Island are neither cannibals nor ferocious is the information brought by Captain F. E. Thompson, who returned a few days ago after a nine months' sojourn on that "island of mystery." Captain Thompson made five landings on the island, and met and was entertained by Chief Francisco of the Seri Indians, and his son, Ponchita, and fifteen members of the tribe at Pearl Point, set down on Dewey's chart as "The Inferno." Instead of meeting cannibals and desperate characters, Captain Thompson was welcomed to the island under a flag of truce, spent some time in the company of Chief Francisco, and was invited by the chief to visit him at his home back in the country from the coast.

"I believe I am the first white man to bring back a friendly report from the island," said Captain Thompson. "I found the dreaded Seris, written about as head-hunters by explorers who have ventured into the Gulf of California, most hospitable, well-meaning, and kind-hearted. He took us on a tour of the island. We were gone several days, mounted on burros, of which he has a large herd. The long sand bar at Pearl Point is literally paved with pearl oysters, and I have no doubt that there is a fortune for any one who can get the chief's permission to exploit the place. When I left at the end of my first visit with him he presented me with a beautiful bow and arrow, artistically dyed with berry juices. In return I asked him what I could give him, and the only thing that struck his fancy was my shirt. I gave it to him and offered him another, but he refused, saying, 'I can wear but one shirt at a time.'"

Lovers of "Ivanhoe" will regret to learn that the moat which once defended Torquilstone Castle has been drained. So far as situation and location are concerned, the site of Front de Bœuf's stronghold, the siege of which is so thrillingly described by Scott, is identical with that of Todwick Manor House, a very ancient mansion not far from Todwick Church, and situated about half a mile distant from where, till a few years ago, stood the decayed trunk of the famous trysting tree in Hartbill Walk. A young oak, grown from a "Queen Oak" acorn in Sherwood Forest, was planted by the Duke of Leeds on the spot where the old trysting tree stood, and a walk straight across country brings one to the manor house. The moat was fairly wide and deep, and in digging up part of the ground traces of the foundation of a previous building were found. Not far removed from the manor house there is still to be seen the remains of the small religious house, now converted into a cottage, to which Ivanhoe was removed upon his rescue from the burning castle by the Black Knight.

A COMPLETE FOOD
Baker's Cocoa

50 Highest Awards in Europe and America

Registered U. S. Pat. Office

A medical writer says: Baker's pure cocoa acts as a gentle stimulant, invigorating and correcting the action of the digestive organs, furnishing the body with some of the purest elements of nutrition.

Walter Baker & Co., Ltd.
Established 1780. DORCHESTER, MASS.

GANTON & CO

A big clean story of Chicago business, industrial, and social life—"Old Man Ganton" is one of the great creations of fiction

At All Bookstores Today

PUBLISHED BY A. C. McCLURG & CO., CHICAGO

BY ARTHUR J. EDDY

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

By Sidney G. P. Coryn.

In announcing a complete edition of the works of Amrose Bierce for $100, the Neale Company informs us that the author is "a satirist, a man whose pen delights to cut and slash—to draw blood, if need be, and revel in the crimson stain." With these sanguinary attractions concentrated into ten volumes and for only $100, the edition should have a substantial sale. And the encomium—for it is so intended—is well deserved. Mr. Bierce has probably caused more pain than any writer of his day and generation, more resentment and more helpless indignation. With abilities that might have raised him to a high rank of constructive workmanship he has found his chief delight in a clever and destructive vituperation that was so applauded because it was so dreaded. He might have taken his place among the great writers of the day, but he has preferred to court a speedy oblivion by identifying himself with the things among us that are of least repute.

The Little Brown Jug at Kildare, by Meredith Nicholson. Published by the Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis; $1.50.

This may not be the best of Mr. Nicholson's stories, but it is none the less full of charming situations centring around a plot of whimsical ingenuity. The characters are two friends, Ardmore and Griswold, the governors of North and South Carolina, and the bewitching daughters of the governors. At the time the story opens a notorious desperado named Appleweight is the hone of contention between the two States. Appleweight's misdeeds are confined to the frontier line, and as he has political friends and a decided "pull" the public duty of his arrest becomes awkward and onerous. As an easy way out of the difficulty the two governors conveniently disappear, and their enterprising daughters, jealous for the official and paternal reputation, ensconce themselves in the gubernatorial offices and administer affairs, including that of Appleweight, with the aid of rubber stamps and official seals, not to speak of a delicious diplomacy. But they have other aid. Ardmore and Griswold, bosom friends, have parted at Atlanta station on their respective avocations. By a curious coincidence, not confined entirely to novels, Griswold happens to fall in with Miss Barbara Osborne, who is the daughter of the South Carolina governor, while Ardmore is similarly fortunate with Miss Geraldine Dangerfield, who is the daughter of the North Carolina governor. These fortunate young men so ingratiate themselves that they are invited, or rather graciously permitted, to help anonymously with their aid and advice in the grave dispute between the two States as to the much vexed Appleweight question, and so we have the spectacle of a difficult piece of diplomacy engineered at either end by a fascinating but mettlesome young woman, advised by her cavalier, and with the aid of the aforesaid official seals. Not until the end of the book do Ardmore and Griswold know that they have been pitted against each other, and by that time it really doesn't very much matter, as they have other things to think about.

Those who know Mr. Nicholson—that is to say every novel reader—can imagine how delightfully such a plot is handled. The story is told with a whole-hearted sense of fun and a spontaneity that are irresistible. If suffragettes would only pledge themselves to provide such situations as these their cause would be won.

The Oriental Tale in England in the Eighteenth Century, by Martha Pike Conant, Ph. D. Published by the Macmillan Company, New York; $2.

The author has performed a difficult task with commendable brevity and conciseness. By confining herself to the eighteenth century she very properly excludes the flood of Oriental literature witnessed by the last few years, and which of course comprises such writers as Kipling. She thus devotes herself rather to the beginnings of a popular interest destined to become phenomenal. Her period therefore begins with the appearance of "The Arabian Nights" and ends approximately with the efforts of Sir William Jones about 1784. To the word Oriental she attaches the same meaning as Galland, who first translated "The Arabian Nights" into French, when he says: "Je ne comprends pas seulement les Arabes et les Persans, mais encore les Turcs et les Tartares et presque tous les peuples de l'Asie jusqu'à la Chine, Mahométans ou païens et idolâtres."

The author divides her subjects into four groups, "The Imaginative," "The Moralistic," "The Philosophic," and "The Satiric." She adds a "Literary Estimate" of much acumen, while copious appendices and an index complete a work that will be valued by those who are interested in the successive invasions of our literature.

The Cobbler, by Elma A. Travis, M. D. Published by the Outing Publishing Company, New York; $1.50.

This is a story that begins with a wedding, and we have our doubts about the "ever after" when we understand that the bridegroom is the village cobbler, while the bride is the daughter of Judge Farrington. But Peter Caverley is no ordinary cobbler. Indeed, he is a quite delightful boy, a true Bohemian and a horn writer. We only wonder why he should be attracted by such a beautiful icicle as Elizabeth, who looks upon marriage as an interesting diversion from her astronomical studies, and who speaks of her eventual baby as "the infant." No wonder the doctor asks her "Haven't you any bovvels, Elizabeth?" And, although Elizabeth makes no reply, we can answer for her in the negative.

Of course, there is trouble, and although everything ends happily with tears and reconciliation, we are afraid that a sequel would show further rifts within the lute. Frankly, we do not like Elizabeth, but we do like the cobbler, and we heartily recognize a strong and humorous story.

The Life and Public Services of George Luther Stearns. Published by the J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia; $2.

It is strange that this work has not been done before, because it is so eminently worth doing and is now so well done. A man whom Whittier and Emerson believed to surpass all others they had known in magnanimity and disinterested endeavor ought not for so long to lack a competent biographer nor readers of his life story.

Although the author gives us a book of some four hundred pages, he never strays into prolixity or the superfluous, and this is more than can be said of a great many biographies by surviving relatives. He regards his subject from the public view-point, and therefore succeeds in writing a valuable chapter of history and doing it with energy and a skillful use of dialogue. Especially good are his chapters on "John Brown," "Harper's Ferry," "The Great Election," "Civil War," and "Reconstruction," while personal knowledge of his subject and a retentive memory conduce largely to a fascinating book and an important addition to the literature of the war.

The Technique of the Novel, by Charles F. Horne. Published by Harper & Brothers, New York; $1.50.

Dr. Horne has written a useful book and one that helps us to understand the vogue of the novel and the elements that must be cultivated if that vogue is to be maintained. The historical part of his work is carefully done, and from ample knowledge, while his analysis of the novel itself is almost indispensable to those who aspire toward good and permanent work. His chapters on "Plot," "Motive," "Character," "Emotion," "Background," and "Style" are models of careful dissection, while his conclusion that "truth and unity, truth to life underlying superficial lack of fact, and unity of purpose underlying superficial variety of expression, in these two are found the cardinal principles of the novel," might well be committed to memory by those who are ambitious to make their mark in fiction.

A Teacher of Dante, by Nathan Haskell Dole. Published by Moffat, Yard & Co., New York; $1.75.

The author has done a useful piece of literary exploration. Brunetto Latini is introduced to us by Dante himself, who meets Brunetto in hell and walks by his side with bended head "like a man who walks reverently." Brunetto predicts that if Dante will follow his star he can not miss the port of glory. The author tries to show us to what extent Brunetto was Dante's teacher and the influence of the master upon the pupil. Students of Dante will profit much from this learned contribution to a disputed problem. Other parts of an interesting and brightly written volume are devoted to "Dante and the Picturesque," "Lyric Poetry and the Novella," "The Rise of the Italian Drama," "Goldoni and Italian Comedy," and "Alfieri and Tragedy."

The Brotherhood of Wisdom, by Frances J. Armour. Published by the John Lane Company, New York; $1.50.

Wholly without prejudice against the "occult" or mystic story, we yet demand certain elements that are wholly lacking in "The Brotherhood of Wisdom." Even the rigid materialist can read Lytton's "Zanoni" or Crawford's "Mr. Isaacs" with ungrudging admiration simply because they have the semblance of sincerity and because they are saturated with an appropriate atmosphere. The present story contains no atmosphere, and we imagine that the theories would be repudiated even by the strange people who profess to study such things. It is simply an unmeaning riot of "astral bodies" and love-making.

History of California, by Helen Elliott Bandini. Published by the American Book Company, New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago.

This book claims to be an attempt to "present the history of California in so simple and interesting a way that children may read it with pleasure." It is certainly well done and perhaps is the best of its kind. The story is told simply and graphically, while the large number of full-page and thumb-nail illustrations by Roy J. Warner are exceptionally good.

Aunt Maud, by Ernest Oldmeadow. Published by the McClure Company, New York; $1.50.

The plot is not quite new, but then what plot is? Aunt Maud, anxious that her niece Irene shall have a happier love experience than her own, invites her to her house in order to meet Richard Camber, but foolishly confesses the scheme to Irene and also the fact that Camber is particeps criminis. Intense embarrassment is naturally the result, with frank explanations between the young people, who agree to play the rôle of lovers for the gratification of the aunt. The comedy nearly becomes tragedy, but we are saved by an ingenious expedient that is really delightful. "Aunt Maud" is well worth reading as a light, wholesome, and skillfully told story.

FISH

Is an important course in any well regulated dinner. It is rendered far more agreeable and appetizing by the addition of

LEA & PERRINS SAUCE

THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

It is the best relish for all kinds of Soups, hot and cold Meats, Game, Stews and Salads. For over Seventy Years Lea & Perrins have held the secret which makes their Original Worcestershire Sauce unequalled. It is a delicacy that should be on every table.

Beware of Imitations

John Duncan's Sons, Agents, New York

Our public libraries will invest a half-eagle wisely when they order

Pope's Pioneers of Maine and New Hampshire which we noticed in our issue of September 19. It is a valuable reference work and interests many of the best citizens of the Golden State.

Bonestell, Richardson & Co.

PAPER

The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us. CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE 118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna, San Francisco.

MURPHY, GRANT & CO.

134 to 146 Bush Street

Jobbers and Manufacturers

Dry Goods

White Goods

Furnishing Goods

Notions, etc.

We sell to Storekeepers only.

Ask your dealer for our Goods

- | | | | |
|------------------------|---------------|-------------------------|----------------|
| Overalls | Silklines | Turkish Towels | Ducks |
| Jumpers | Quilts | Linens | House Linings |
| Blouses | Comforters | Perins Lawns | Colored Denims |
| Engineers' Coats | Lace Curtains | Organdies | Laces |
| Khaki Coats and Pants | Prints | Men's Handkerchiefs | Embroideries |
| Work Shirts | Percales | Women's Handkerchiefs | Silk Gloves |
| Negligee Shirts | Apron Gingham | Piques | Colored Burlap |
| Golf Shirts | Fancy Gingham | Men's Hosiery | Men's Gloves |
| Collars | Flannellettes | Women's Hosiery | Tickings |
| Cuffs | Broad Cloths | Women's Hosiery | Sheets |
| Blanket Lined Clothing | Table Damask | Women's Underwear | Pillow Cases |
| Waterproof | Nankins | Brown Shirts | Sateens |
| Sweaters | Crash | Bleached Shirts | Notions |
| Sweater Coats | Face Cloths | Wide Bleached Sheetings | Ribbons |
| Cardigan Jackets | Towels | Wide Brown Sheetings | Kid Gloves |
| Blankets | | | |

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.

David Warfield will be seen next week in "A Grand Army Man" at the New Alcazar Theatre, beginning Monday evening.

"A Grand Army Man," written by Pauline Phelps and Marion Short, aided by David Belasco, is said to be a better play even than "The Music Master."

At the Van Ness Theatre that bright musical play, "The Time, the Place, and the Girl," has found popular favor and it will continue through the coming week.

"The Devil," with Howard Hickman in the title-role, will be continued all next week at the Novelty Theatre, under Belasco and Mayer's management.

The Valencia Theatre will continue its presentation of "The Devil," with Robert Warwick in the name-part, for another week.

"The Highwayman" at the Princess Theatre this week has been a triumph for Arthur Cunningham, who is especially happy in the role of Captain Scarlet.

Next week at the Princess Theatre that old-time favorite, "Ship Ahoy," will be revived, with Ferris Hartman in his original role of Colonel Mapleson Mulberry.

A French quartet of singers in their native costumes of Normandy will be the leading feature of the new bill at the Orpheum, beginning at the Sunday matinee.

Miss Evelyn Vaughan, who comes from the East heralded as a beautiful woman and an able actress, will play leading parts opposite Bertram Lytell during the coming season at the Alcazar.

At the Greek Theatre.

Paul Steindorff's popularity accompanies him everywhere. When he went to Idora Park in Oakland he attracted the music lovers from both sides of the bay and his recent return to the city of his greatest conquests brought goodly houses to the American Theatre. And on last Saturday night, when he gave the first concert of the Indian summer series of evening musical treats there were about five thousand people gathered in the big open-air theatre to hear his programme.

Miss Lydia Sturtevant was the soloist of the evening. She sang the first aria from the opera "Trovatore" and gave as her first encore "Annie Laurie."

The next concert will be given on the evening of October 3. It will begin at eight and end at ten o'clock.

LITERARY NOTES.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

Messrs. Henry Holt & Co. are issuing at once Angelo Neumann's "Reminiscences of Richard Wagner," translated by Miss Edith Livermore.

Swinburne's latest work, an essay on the "Age of Shakespeare," was published a few days ago.

Burglars visited Mark Twain's new home at Redding, Connecticut, a few days after the humorist with his family had moved in.

Notice—To the Next Burglar: There is nothing but plated ware in this house now and henceforth. You will find it in that brass thing in the dining-room over the corner by the basket of kittens.

Memoirs of Professor Hinzpeter, the Kaiser's late tutor, which have found their way into print in Berlin, show that one of his duties after the emperor's accession was to keep his majesty informed of all unfavorable comments made concerning him in Germany and abroad.

Mrs. Humphry Ward met Taine at the beginning of her career and is noticed in his letters, a recently translated edition of which has been published. Dining at Oxford, he sat next Miss Arnold, as she then was, and found her "about twenty, very nice looking, and dressed with taste, rather a rare thing here."

New Publications.

"Tamar Curze," a wildly grotesque story of natural magic, by Berthe St. Luz, has been published by R. F. Fenno & Co., New York.

The American Book Company, New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago, has published an "Algebra for Secondary Schools," by Professor E. R. Hedrick.

Silver, Burdett & Co., San Francisco, have published "The New Century Spelling Book," by A. N. McCallum and P. W. Horn.

Those who wish to know something of wireless telegraphy without the annoyance of technicalities should read a valuable little book by Walter W. Massie and Charles R. Underhill, with a special article by Nikola Tesla.

That "The Open Window," by "Barbara," is from the same pen as "The Garden of a Commuter's Wife" and "People of the Whirlpool" is sufficient introduction to a volume of twelve short stories arranged according to, and tempered by, the months of the year.

Cecile Chaminade, one of the best known composers in France and one of the foremost living composers of her sex, is to give a concert in New York, October 24, her first appearance in America.

Jessie Kaufman's Novel.

To overlook Jessie Kaufman's complete novel in Lippincott's Magazine for October would be to slight the gifts of the literary gods.

"A Jewel of the Seas" is a romance of Hawaii, and while there are already some few writers who have shown us the fictional possibilities of the Pacific islands, there is so far no one within our recollection who handles such a wealth of modern material with a touch so deft or with such humor and abandon.

Miss Kaufman should certainly continue to write. She has few effective competitors in a field that is so conspicuously her own.

Uganda, the vast native protectorate in the heart of what was almost until yesterday Darkest Africa, is the latest region of the earth to be brought within the sphere of "Cook's Conducted Tours."

A forgotten picture by Frans Hals, the famous Dutch master, has been discovered in a country house near Dublin and sold to the British National Gallery for twenty-five thousand pounds sterling.

NEW BOOKS OF SPECIAL POLITICAL VALUE

The United States as a World Power

By Prof. ARCHIBALD CARY COOLIDGE of Harvard University

A comparison of the five "world powers" and a discussion of the changes in the international relations of the United States during the last decade.

"Remarquable ouvrage; d'information précise, et de haute impartialité."—Revue du Mois.

Cloth, 385 pages, $2.00 net; by mail, $2.14

The Government of England

By Prof. A. LAWRENCE LOWELL of Harvard University

"The comprehensiveness and range of Mr. Lowell's work is one of the reasons for the unique place of his Government of England—for its place in a class by itself, with no other books either by British or non-British authors to which it can be compared.

The Sunday Sun, New York, alludes to the book as: "The remarkable work which American readers, including even those who suppose themselves to be pretty well informed, will find indispensable."

In two 8va volumes, uniform with Mr. James Bryce's "The American Commonwealth." $4.00 net

FOR THREE HUNDRED YEARS THE WORLD'S MOST FAMOUS CORDIAL

Liqueur Pères Chartreux

GREEN AND YELLOW

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafés, Barter & Co., 43 Broadway, New York, N. Y. Sole Agents for United States.

JUST A BOOK STORE

Robertson's

1539 Van Ness Ave.

NEAR PINE

"Next to the White House"

A SATANIC DRAMA.

By Josephine Hart Phelps.

The humorous invitation to "Go to the devil" which appears in brilliant electric letters over the door of the Valencia Theatre while Molnar's play of "The Devil" is running is likely to be only too well heeded. Never before have I witnessed a play of such ferocious, such uncontrolled cynicism; never one that made so palpable an appeal to the emotions that his satanic majesty is most assiduous in fanning.

I am convinced that this play, which on account of the lack of copyright is going to burst out like a series of dangerous fires all over the country, will leave a long trail of evil in its wake. The young it encourages to evil, by force of hateful suggestion, and not one person of maturer years who sits in front and by his or her presence tolerates this play out is the worse for it.

What makes it a more dangerous element of soul destruction is the art with which it has been put together and the wit and sardonic humor which, like unholy fires, lights up the polished discourse of Molnar's masterly fiend.

I call him masterly because, from the dramatic point of view, the author has conceived him in the right spirit. A sombrous devil would miss fire with the masses, who love to laugh. But this courteous, smiling, sneering fiend has, outward seeming, such stores of good fellowship to draw on, and so fascinates with his good-humored toleration of human frailties, his brilliant hursts of amusing satire, of apparently good-natured cynicism, that he insidiously wins to a general participation of his treacherous and easy attitude.

He is a very industrious devil, and is kept so unintermittently busy overturning barriers that interpose between the hearts of the lovers he has doomed to destruction, coaxing away objections, laughing down scruples, intensifying lures, magnifying signs of surrender, and manufacturing opportunities, that he compels admiration for his fertility of resource and it is difficult to imagine the poor, weak human heart of the observer, who, from temperament, sympathizes deeply with the lovers, ranging itself sternly on the side of the invisible angels of purity.

For the author helps by not one single word or suggestion the cause of morality. Only a degenerate talent, of which this century is so unfortunately prolific, could thus set forth with all the bravery of wit, the sting of satire, the lure of license, the douche of ridicule, and with an absolutely unashamed lack of reticence, the reasons for and against human beings yielding themselves up utterly to a glowing materialism.

The play is the old story of two lovers, of whom the woman is married, who are in the throes of all the good resolutions that precede her final swift downward descent. Satan through his infernal arts brings himself upon the scene at "the proper moment" in the person of Dr. Nicholas, a handsome, polished worldling, who is impatient that the lovers still dally with conscience, and defer the moment of surrender. This young man—for old Nick has become young Nick—excels in the art with which he can work upon a tropical imagination, and the ingenuity with which he bends circumstance to his aid. To hear his insidious suggestions of evil, to look upon an audience of young people, many of them, in this city of Latins, of volcanic temperament, listening absorbedly, to hear, occasionally, the semi-hysterical laughter of license, to realize that the author's tacit claim that the devil is too strong for human nature is almost true, and that this particular friend of the Hungarian dramatist will bring about nany a fall from grace.

At the end of the second act the evil suggestion is so rampant and powerful one feels that if angels visibly descended from heaven they could not purify the sullied passion of the lovers.

The only thing to be said of the play in the cause of morality is that the style of stage colloquy followed by Continental dramatists is often found, by an American audience, to be too long and metaphysical for their taste. To them these long passages of self-analysis are prolixity, for they are uninterpreted by the finer and more subtle art of the Continental actor.

So, toward the last hour of the play, the audience grew restless, and, absorbed though they had hitherto been by the bad eminence of his satanism, I could not but feel that those signs of horedom would lose Molnar's devil a few of the souls he might otherwise have won. And, besides, there was something of an anti-climax in the final act.

Robert Warwick, they say, draws a salary of a thousand dollars a month, and his performance of Dr. Nicholas justified the management in their recognition of the necessity of having a big drawing card in their company.

Mr. Warwick gave to his devil the presence, the polish, the suavity, the easy, satirical manner, and the suggestion of the fascination of evil which most surely kills the soul. Villain though he was, "Remorseless, treacherous, lecherous, kindless villain," his sway over the yielding lovers was made to seem irresistible.

Willette Kershaw was a pretty and appropriately tempting Jolan, but only half able to enter dramatically into the changing moods of this most feminine treader along the primrose path of dalliance.

Harry Von Meter may be credited with having done some good, as his hunging lover so tripped up the imagination as negatively to advance the cause of morality.

It may be added, for the information of the curious, that there is no red fire or visible supernatural effect employed. The play goes like a Parisian society drama, and, except for the suggestion of some exercise of hypnotic power on the part of the devil, and the free exhibition he makes of a nature of startling depravity, he is as human as the rest of them.

The jolly little troupe at the jolly little Princess are giving jolly performances that make for joy and pleasure. "The Toreador" was an instance. I saw it played after four rehearsals, and marked with pleasure the youthful zest of the performers and the completeness with which they communicated their enjoyment to the audience.

True, there was nothing superlative in the way of delicate artistic finish. Christine Nielsen had in this particular piece little opportunity to exhibit the finer resources of her fresh young voice. The musical honors all fell to Cunningham's share, although it was a pity that the haritone, in his gorgeous toreador costume, was not more of a professional beauty.

But then there was Zoe Barnett, vivid and piquant in her Spanish scarlet, a picture to the eyes, a pleasure to the ears, and a joy to the understanding.

The pretty Zoe is not horn to blush unseen—or what the haughty East conceives as unseen in this far-off Pacific State—and I wager we will hear of her yet as charming Broadway.

How hewitchingly the little Spanish siren wove her elusive charm around the honest British footman, who, in the person of Ferris Hartman, looked longingly, but in vain, for those gauzy, suggested, ever hovering, but never descending caresses to materialize. It was the prettiest hit in the evening, and enough in itself to give a musical comedy helle an impetus in her career.

As a contrast to this sophisticated little intriguante, Christine Nielsen, with her prettily girlish, unfinished manner, was like the veriest schoolgirl. The comparison of the two types of such fresh, charming girls is very interesting, and, indeed, the Princess may be congratulated upon counting in its company the daintiest, prettiest, and most engaging pair of singers rememberable in a local house of this class for many years back.

"Fagan's Decision" is the decision of the Orpheum audience. "Patsy" has everybody's vote and reigns the queen of the evening, to the judicial assembly in front who have learned, through long experience, to sift the wheat from the chaff. The two Ushers who play in "Fagan's Decision" are fortunate enough to have a thoroughly clever and entertaining playlet—written, it seems, by Fannie Usher herself—for a vehicle, with plenty of humor and the "heart interest" in the proper proportion. Fagan is an ex-featherweight pugilist who has been knocked out of commission by the opponent in his last fight dealing him a foul blow. Fagan is hored by living a life of peace, and cherishes an un-forgiving animosity against the man who "fouled" him. But being hored, and lonesome, and soft-hearted, he proposes to adopt a child. Hence Patsy, who is rescued by some philanthropist from the slums and plumped into Fagan's quarters for his inspection. Patsy is a very alarming looking em-cum-france for a law-hiding and conventionally disposed bachelor to saddle himself with. She has a truly feminine taste for finery, and her tenement-house toilet, which hovers uncertainly between masculine bifurcation and feminine petticoats, is crowned by a daring structure of straw and chicken feathers, which stamps her as the eternal feminine, in her love for flamboyant millinery.

Patsy is only a "kid," but it is plain to see that a few brief weeks with soft-hearted Fagan would transform her into a correctly shod, pompadoured, helted, shirt-waisted, high-heeled imitation in miniature of the very latest thing out in the line of pretty shop girls, and a loving despot over Fagan to boot.

For Patsy is a thoroughly genuine article and one can theorize with some interest over her future.

It is a strange, almost eerie, sensation to discover anything genuine in a vaudeville playlet, but we can have that experience this week at the Orpheum. The two Ushers have realistic methods of acting, and Sparkeris, the dog, snatching meek and fragmentary naps during intermissions between the tumultuous embraces of his young owner, adds to the realities by consistently remaining himself, and refraining from acting. The girl of this entertaining trio proves herself a most clever and understanding little actress, filling out her sketch of the wail from the slums with many clever hits of detail which show that Patsy has been studied from life.

Her quality of tone, assumed in imitation of the tenement-district voice, her "chippy" enunciation, her apparently unstudied, thoroughly natural gestures, her abrupt, childlike, unselfish gushes of gratitude and affection, are all instances of this study and will tend to preserve her queenship over the vaudeville audiences' susceptibilities throughout the Ushers' engagement.

The Lloyd Scott Travel Talks.

Next Monday night at Christian Science Hall Will Greenbaum will introduce Mr. Lloyd Scott's Travel-Talks, a series of interesting tales of travel illustrated by hundreds of hand-colored lantern views, moving panoramas, and motion pictures. Mr. Scott is said to be a man of brilliant attainments and a fine speaker, and the lanterns, picture machines, and views are all of the highest grade. The beauties of India will be discussed on Monday and Tuesday nights; Japan on Thursday and Friday nights; and Russia on Saturday night. A special school children's matinee will be given Saturday with Japan as the subject and half prices for the young folks.

The second week will be devoted to one night on Russia, and two each on Egypt and Ireland. Box offices are open at both of Sherman, Clay & Co.'s stores.

A course will be given in Oakland at Maple Hall, commencing Monday, October 19.

GRANADA HOTEL

— OPENS —

OCTOBER 1, 1908

Situated at Sutter and Hyde Streets

Midway between the business and resident sections of the city

A strictly first-class Hotel on the American plan. ABSOLUTELY FIRE PROOF.

All rooms and baths outside exposure; every modern improvement; luxuriously furnished. Perfect service and cuisine, and an atmosphere of home comfort rarely met with in a hotel. Special monthly terms to families. Reservations can be made at the hotel.

E. S. DE WOLFE, Manager
Formerly proprietor Hotel Pleasanton

Lloyd Scott

ILLUSTRATED TRAVEL TALKS

Colored Views, Panoramas, Motion Pictures

Christian Science Hall
Sacramento and Scott

INDIA—Next Monday eve, Oct. 3; next Tuesday eve, Oct. 6. JAPAN—Next Thursday eve, Oct. 8; next Friday eve, Oct. 9. RUSSIA—Saturday eve, Oct. 10; Monday eve, Oct. 12. EGYPT—Tuesday eve, Oct. 13; Thursday eve, Oct. 15. IRELAND—Friday eve, Oct. 16; Saturday eve, Oct. 17.

Course tickets (5 subjects), $4.00, $3.00, $2.00. Single tickets, $1.00, 75c, 50c. Box office Sherman, Clay & Co.'s. Special school children's mat. Saturday, Oct. 10—JAPAN. Children 25c and 50c.

Oakland Course—Maple Hall, commencing Monday, Oct. 19. Thursday, Oct. 22, Beatrice Fine-Anna Miller Wood Concert.

GREEK THEATRE

Musical and Dramatic Committee of the University of California announces

FOUR POPULAR SATURDAY NIGHT ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS

with

MR. PAUL STEINDORFF
directing an orchestra of

FIFTY ARTISTS

Next Concert October 3

The Misses Pasmore assisted by an orchestra of 35 on October 10.

ADMISSION - - 25 cents

Chair section 25 cents extra

SPECIAL TOUR

TO

VICTORIA NYANZA

THROUGH THE

African Wonderland

Leaving New York

TUESDAY, October 27, 1908

Programme for the asking

THOS. COOK & SON

32 Powell St., San Francisco

Our interest does not cease with a sale. We request our patrons to come in at any time and have their glasses re-adjusted.

HIRSCH & KAISER

218 Post St.

Opticians

AMUSEMENTS

ORPHEUM ELLIS STREET NEAR FILLMORE
Absolutely Class A Theatre Building

Week beginning this Sunday afternoon

Matinee Every Day

ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE

GADETS DE GASCOGNE, Quartette Francis; THE SAYTONS; "GENERAL" EDWARD LA VINE; BELLE HATHAWAY and her SIMIAN PLAYMATES; HILLARION and ROSALIA CEBALLOS' PHANTASTIC PHANTOMS; VINIE DALY; SWOR BROTHERS; New Orpheum Motion Pictures; Last Week JANE COURTHOPE and Company, in "Lucky Jim."

Evening prices, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box seats, $1. Matinee prices (except Sundays and holidays), 10c, 25c, 50c. Phone, WEST 6000.

PRINCESS THEATRE Ellis Street near Fillmore

S. LOVERICH, Manager

Class "A" Theatre Phone West 663

Matinee Saturday and Sunday

Last Two Nights of "The Highwayman"

BEGINNING NEXT MONDAY NIGHT

FERRIS HARTMAN

In the greatest of all musical comedy hits

SHIP AHOY

Arthur Cunningham and the entire Princess company in the cast

Popular prices—Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Mats. (except Sundays and holidays), 25c, 50c.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Tel. West 6036

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers

Corner Sutter and Steiner Sts. Absolute Class "A" Bldg.

COMMENCING MONDAY EVENING Fifth and Positively Last Week of DAVID WARFIELD and DAVID BELASCO'S New York Company

A GRAND ARMY MAN

A New American Play by David Belasco, Pauline Phelps and Marion Short.

Prices: Evening and matinee, 50c to $2

Matinee Thursday and Saturday

Sunday Eve., Oct. 11—Return of the Alcazar Stock Company. First presentation in San Francisco of "The Hypocrites."

NOVELTY THEATRE O'Farrell and Steiner Sts.

Phone West 3990

IT HAS CAUGHT THE TOWN

Commencing Sunday afternoon, October 4 Second Week of BELASCO & MAYER'S unequalled production of

THE DEVIL

IT HAS WON THE ENDURANCE TEST

Prices: Evening, 25c to $1. Matinees, 25c, 50c Matinees Sunday and Saturday

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove St.

Phone Market 500

Tonight, Sunday Night and All Next Week Matinee Saturday

The Whirlwind Musical Play Success

THE TIME, THE PLACE AND THE GIRL

—WITH—

JOHN E. YOUNG

A Big Chorus. 12 Song Hits.

Prices: $1.50, $1, 75c and 50c

VALENCIA THEATRE Valencia St. nr 14th Phone 17 Market

San Francisco's newest and most beautiful playhouse

Beginning Sunday Matinee, October 4

SECOND CROWDED WEEK OF

THE DEVIL

Robert Warwick in the title-role, with the full strength of the VALENCIA STOCK CO.

Matinees Sunday, Wednesday and Saturday

THE LATEST STYLES IN

Choice Woolens

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

108-110 Sutter St. French Bank Bldg.

VANITY FAIR.

Mrs. William Astor chooses the columns of the Delineator for an expression of her views on modern society. Perhaps her views are worth learning, at least by those very numerous persons who devour the "society novel" as though it were inspired, and give to it a credence in exact proportion to the abundance of its salacious details.

Now, Mrs. Astor appears to be without prejudice. She writes with marked dignity and she apportions her praise and blame with every evidence of impartiality. She would have us believe that noisy people—that people who are talked about in the driving Sunday supplement, and who like to see their names in print—are not in society at all. Just as we know that the lady who says that she is a lady is not a lady, so we may know that those who wish to be known as being "in society" are not in society at all.

Mrs. Astor refers to "certain New York women," and we can imagine an accompanying tone of voice that would obviate the need for any further indication. It is upon these women that the lash falls. In their effort to attract a following "they have given entertainments that belonged under a circus tent rather than in a gentlewoman's bome":

Their sole object is notoriety, a thing that no lady ever seeks, but rather shrinks from. Women of the stamp are few in New York, but alas! they are so appallingly active! They have done untold harm to the good name of American society in the minds of foreigners.

Mrs. Astor does not seem to think that the distinguished foreigner is fair game for the society dame merely because he happens to be distinguished. Distinction does not necessarily break down the social rules or arrogate the observances that have been ordained by polite society. Mrs. Astor says that "certain New York women" seize upon the stranger relentlessly and plunge him into a mad whirl of extraordinary festivities. This is what they call entertaining him, and no doubt he is entertained as we should be "as spectators of an Indian war dance," and thus he forms his opinion of us. Mrs. Astor has "never entertained a foreigner in my life unless he came to me with a letter of introduction":

The best women in New York society, those of the greatest influence and those who give it its true tone, are almost unknown outside of their own circle. Society newspaper notoriety is interesting to them, as it is to me, as a study, a very amusing one, too, sometimes, as one gains so much information about certain women supposed to belong to us, but whom we never see and do not know even by sight.

Mrs. Astor has had ambitions toward the salon as it is still to be found in Europe, but she fears that it could not be done in America:

The political hostesses have a much better chance of realizing such an ideal today than we women of New York. Over there you find at the big balls and musicales a brilliant array of cabinet ministers, journalists, ambassadors, men and women of the stage, painters and poets and the powers of the money world such as no leader in New York could bring together or would attempt to bring together.

I have thought of doing it all my life, but have never seen the possibility of success. In the first place, we have too many politicians in America, where in England they have statesmen. Many of our senators and congressmen seem to base their title to public favor upon their uncouth manners and lack of refinement, upon the fact that they have discarded socks or once wore blue jeans.

With all due respect to Mrs. Astor's opinion, it is not easy to understand why she can not found any sort of salon she wishes. Surely she can invite any one she pleases to her house, and there is nothing to prevent her from discriminating in favor of the best elements—intellectual and moral. The old French salon was nothing more than a natural gravitation of wit and mind toward certain houses where wit and mind were made welcome. The modern hostess does not welcome these things. She often prefers inanity and wealth. It is simply a matter of taste. She invites her guests because they belong to a particular social circle and without reference to mental affiliations. All these yearnings after the literary and intellectual salon are empty and insincere. Any woman of position who is accustomed to entertain can start a salon tomorrow if she wishes to. All she has to do is to confine her invitations for particular occasions to those who have shown that they have intellectual weight and who are likely to be congenial. There ought to be plenty of material in New York if Mrs. Astor wants to try. If she can not do it, it is because she is herself hound by conventions. Certainly the French salons, the best of them, made no discriminations whatever in favor of wealth. Mental stature was the only test, good manners being taken for granted. If it is really true that a salon can not succeed in America, it is because the wealth test can not be ignored.

As to the young people of society, Mrs. Astor has a word of comfort to say:

I can speak with authority about our young people. I have always kept in close touch with them. They are of a new age and often have ideas different from my own old, conservative ones. And they are full of health and abundant spirits, embodiments of the new age of athletic development and out-of-door sports.

It is perhaps true that they frequently go into excess in amusement, but they are not degenerate and they are not vicious. Our young men enter seriously upon the business of taking care of their large financial interests, and they often take up an individual business or profession in addition, going in for healthy sports only as a well-earned diversion.

This, of course, is very nice and gives us a distinct feeling of reassurance. We are willing to believe that society is not at all corrupt, whatever "society" may be, and that the old type of gentleman and gentlewoman is still unobtrusively in our midst. For which Te Deum Laudamus.

By the way, Speaker Cannon seems to think that Mrs. Astor referred to him when she spoke of senators and congressmen who "seem to have their title to public favor upon their uncouth manners and lack of refinement." Now, if Mr. Cannon thinks that the cap fits him he had better wear it, and as he seems anxious to parade the fact it must be admitted that the cap fits him very well indeed. But it is not likely that Mrs. Astor referred to Mr. Cannon. It is not likely that she would allow her mind to revert to Mr. Cannon for a single unnecessary moment, gratifying as such suggestions may be to Mr. Cannon. He need not therefore follow his line of least resistance and become rude, and he is very rude when he remarks:

Jerry Simpson is dead, but he always wore socks in Congress. Out in Kansas, they say, he did not wear socks. Anyhow, he does not need them now. All I can say about Mrs. Astor is that if the good Lord does not think any more about that woman and her views than I do, she is lost. Socks and manners haven't much to do with brains, anyway. Alexander and Caesar had no socks, and I guess the original Astor when he was trapping fur animals wasn't troubled with many socks.

But then what can one expect?

King Edward does not like being cinematographed, if such a word be permissible. A report from Marienbad describes his annoyance at finding that an operator had stolen a march upon him in the street, and had recorded his movements for the benefit of generations unborn. Prompt measures seemed to be called for, and the visit of a detective to the offending photographer proving unavailing, the chief of police tried his hand, but with no better luck. Then a government official intervened and explained to the camera criminal that the king was on a holiday and desired to preserve his privacy, but the ohdurate wretch refused to part with the films, which had been obtained legally and were his own property. There seemed to be nothing left but to summon the lord high executioner with his tub of boiling oil, or whatever other persuasive and coaxing methods may now be in vogue, but at the last moment Sir Stanley Clarke, the king's equerry, tried his hand. What actually passed is not known, but when Sir Stanley Clarke left the place he had all the films in his pocket and an international crisis had been avoided. Perhaps he merely bought the offending pictures, and this seems such a common-sense proceeding that it is hardly surprising that no one thought of it.

Young men who can not dance, and dance well, are to be excluded from London ball-rooms of any importance. It seems that certain royal guests have commented unfavorably upon the number of young men who accept invitations to halls and then show themselves neither usefully nor ornamentally. In future these languid ones must either dance or stay away. If they can not dance, then they must learn, and teachers of the art are rejoicing accordingly and gathering in the shekels.

If the Directoire gown is to be effective, that is to say, if the lower slit is made, so to speak, in good faith and is not to be a mere suggestion of things unseen, it is evident that the underlying revelations must be made the subject of anxious thought. The stocking, in other words, must be worthy of the occasion and there must be something to arrest the eye other than the mere contour, fascinating and delightful as mere contour sometimes is. A report from Paris says that the ornamentation of this mysterious garment has now reached an extreme of extravagance. The lifted skirt, or the open skirt, will now display alarming scarlet beetles and red lohsters with long claws lodged upon her ankle, or an ambitious flight of many-bued butterflies. White silk dragon flies are embroidered on pale blues, pinks, and heliotropes. For the fashionables who affect the morbid, there are even serpents worked in flaming passementerie on a dark stocking, so that with every movement the beaded length of the snake catches and sheds the light like shining scales.

A pleasant incident is reported from London in connection with the Eucharistic Congress. At the great meeting in Alhert Hall a strange woman accosted Cardinal Gibbons in the corridor and asked him for his blessing. The cardinal smiled and asked her who she was. The woman replied "Mary Anderson." The cardinal immediately invited the old-time actress to visit him at Norfolk House. Behind this incident there is the history of Miss Anderson's (Mrs. Navarro) devout career. She is a devoted Catholic and went to mass every morning when acting on the stage. Cardinal Gibbons has always known this. He recognized the difficulties which beset an actress and wished to express his satisfaction at her consistent piety. Therefore he received Miss Anderson at Norfolk House, gave her his blessing, and commended her for her edifying life.

Mary Anderson, by the way, was born in Sacramento, California. This is not necessarily to the credit of Sacramento, which seems to have forgotten the fact, but the people of the State capital would "do themselves proud" by looking up the house, if it still stands, and affixing a tablet thereto.

The poor little Queen of Holland is once more in trouble. The expectations of her people were aroused by the successive bulletins referring in language delicately veiled to the queen's health and the necessity for rest and quiet. Now comes the depressing announcement that the queen is very weak, and is "bearing her disappointment with composure."

It is to be feared that some ugly domestic tragedy has ruined the life of a young woman whose whole-hearted vivacity was once the talk of Europe. Rumors of an unhappy marriage and of actual ill-treatment have been persistent for several years. Of course, there have been contradicted, as such rumors always are and without much regard for truth. Perhaps the truth would be dangerous as the Dutch love their young queen with sort of sentimental devotion, and it would be idle any one—even a royal husband—was known to have caused her grief.

W. & J. SLOANE
ORIENTAL RUGS
REDUCED
SPECIAL SALE
DOMESTIC RUGS

In addition to our Special Sale of Domestic Rugs and Carpets, we offer until October 10 our ENTIRE ASSORTMENT of Oriental Rugs at Reductions of

20% to 40%

The assortment embraces Daghestans, Beloochistans, Khivas, Cashmeres, Mahals, Serapis, Khorassans, Kirmanshahs, Keshans, Runners, etc., of our own selection and importation, and carrying our usual guarantee.

Until October 10 we offer our ENTIRE STOCK, including Wiltons, Brussels, Axminsters, Imperial Smyrnas, etc., both plain and figured, at a

15% Reduction

Special attention is directed to our large assortment of this season's designs in sizes 8:3x10:6, 9x12, 9x14:3, 10:6x12, 10:6x13:6, 11:3x15, 12x12, 12x15, and 12x18.

We Are Also Offering GREAT REDUCTIONS in CARPETS & ORIENTAL RUGS

Van Ness and Sutter

Wells Fargo Nevada
National Bank

OF SAN FRANCISCO

ISAIAS W. HELLMAN..... President
I. W. HELLMAN, Jr..... Vice-President
F. L. LIPMAN..... Vice-President
FRANK B. KING..... Cashier
GEORGE GRANT..... Assistant Cashier
W. MCGAVIN..... Assistant Cashier
E. L. JACOBS..... Assistant Cashier

STATEMENT OF CONDITION

At Close of Business September 23, 1908

ASSETS

Loans and Discounts.....	$13,671,926.38
United States Bonds.....	6,539,232.82
Other Bonds.....	2,907,892.73
Customers' Liability on Letters of Credit.....	1,205,380.99
Bank Premises.....	1,041,048.97
Money on Hand.....	$6,427,377.08
Due from Banks.....	6,195,557.30
Redemption Fund with U. S. Treasurer.....	290,000.00
	$38,278,416.27

LIABILITIES

Capital.....	$ 6,000,000.00
Surplus and Undivided Profits.....	4,746,885.82
Sterling Credits, etc.....	1,205,380.99
National Bank Notes.....	5,586,597.50
Reserved for Taxes.....	23,812.05
Deposits.....	20,715,739.91
	$38,278,416.27

State of California, }
City and County of San Francisco } ss.
I, FRANK B. KING, Cashier of the above-named Bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 25th day of September, 1908.
FRANK B. KING, Cashier.
(Seal) O. A. EGGERS,
Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Correct—Attest:
PERCY T. MORGAN.
LEON SLOSS.
WM. HAAS.

Customers of this Bank are offered every facility consistent with prudent banking. New accounts are invited

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

Blanche Bates, in the course of a luncheon that she gave at Sherry's in New York to her sister artist, Miss Geraldine Farrar, said this about marriage: "In heaven, we are told," she remarked, "there is no marriage nor giving in marriage." Then she smiled and added: "No wonder, when there are not men enough even here to go around."

In a country village recently a couple took their baby to be christened, and on the clergyman asking what name they had chosen, the happy father replied, "Octopus, sir!" "What!" ejaculated the astonished divine, "but you can not call a child by so extraordinary a name." "Yes, sir, if you please," was the reply, "you see it's our eighth child and we want it called 'Octopus.'"

At the Fifth Avenue Hotel a Western man had left his family, which had accompanied him to the city, in their rooms so long that they had become uneasy about him. At last he returned to the rooms, and to the anxious inquiry of his wife, "Where in the world have you been so long?" he responded, calmly: "I've just been in the cuspadore, walking pro and con."

Bill Nye in his earlier days once approached the manager of a lecture bureau with an application for employment, and was asked if he had ever done anything in that line. "Oh, yes," said Bill. "What have you done?" "Well," replied Bill, "my last job was in a dime museum, sitting in a barrel with the top of my head sticking out—posing as the largest ostrich-egg in captivity."

A hearty laugh had gone almost around over the story of the fisherman who, to locate the place on the lake where he had had good luck, cut a nick in the side of his boat. "Almost around," for the Englishman sat solemn and silent. About five minutes later, however, he awoke with a roar of laughter, and when asked the trouble, replied: "Well, wouldn't it be a corking good joke if that fisherman got a different boat the next time he went out!"

When trouble was more general and more destructive in Ireland than at present, an Irish priest, a very good man, was disturbed by the inroads which strong drink was making on his flock. He preached a strong sermon against it. "What is it," he cried, "that keeps you poor? It's the drink. What is it keeps your children half-starved? Why, the drink. What is it keeps many of your children half-clothed? The drink. What is it causes you to shoot at your landlords—and miss them? The drink."

Quite trivial was the difficulty, but the two Frenchmen developed it into a quarrel and challenged each other to fight. On the morning of the duel they and their seconds tramped through the woods to the fatal spot, when one of the duelists, the challenging party, tripped and fell. His second helped him to his feet. "I hope you are not much hurt," said the other duelist. "I'm not much hurt; I only bumped my nose on the ground." "Does it bleed?" "Yes, a little." "Heaven be praised! Blood flows, and my honor is vindicated. Give me your hand, old boy!"

Vague but attractive news of dramatic doings in the metropolis reaches the most retired up-State districts. A farmer visiting New York wandered with his wife into a theatre where one of the gloomiest of Ibsen plays was in progress. For half an hour the good couple listened in puzzled silence to the mournful remarks thrown out by the group of Norwegians infesting the stage. Then at last, after a particularly harrowing prediction of sudden death to everybody in the last act, the farmer turned to his wife with these words: "Say, Mandy, I'm darned if this is 'The Merry Widow.' Let's go."

To the artist the occasion: "These chefs!" said one multimillionaire to another. "Mine, you know, draws a thousand a month. He used to be at the Café Royal. Escoffier recommended him. But his independence! One night I gave, just to show off, a dinner of two hundred covers. The afternoon of the dinner I found him motoring in the park in a taxicab with two French dancing girls. Of course, I hailed him and took him to task. 'Oh,' said he, 'a dinner of that sort I always leave to my assistants. With such masses of food it is impossible to introduce delicate, subtle, or original cooking. Now, little girls, shall we drive on?'"

After more than an hour of badgering by the lawyer for the prosecution the witness was moved to declare that he had already told everything of any consequence. "You have told me what you said to him: 'Gibson, this case will get into the courts some day.' Now I want to know what he said in reply," declared the lawyer, sternly. "Well, he said: 'Chumley, there isn't anything in this business that I'm ashamed of, and if any snoopin', little hee-hawkin', four-by-six, gimlet-eyed lawyer, with half a pound of brains and sixteen pounds of jaw, ever wants to know what I've been talking to you about, you can tell him the whole story.'"

This is a Sargent story: A millionaire of coarse extraction went to Mr. Sargent's studio and had his portrait done. When the portrait was finished, the millionaire looked at it closely, and then said with a frown, "Not bad, Mr. Sargent; not at all bad, but you've left out one most essential feature." Mr. Sargent bit his lips to hide a smile. "Excuse me, sir," he said, "but I thought you wouldn't care to have the—er—er—warts produced." The millionaire, purple with rage, shouted: "Confound it, sir, I'm talking about the diamond rings and pin—not the warts!"

Generous in thought and deed are the seamen of the navy. One of these, fresh from the long battleship cruise, entered a bank in San Diego, hailing the teller boisterously as follows: "Hello, matey! How's business?" "Business isn't any too brisk," replied the teller, indulgently, "but maybe it'll pick up. What can I do for you?" The jacky produced a check for $30, payable to bearer: "How will you have it?" asked the teller. The general seaman hesitated a moment, and then replied: "Matey, seein' that business ain't so good, I won't be hard on you. Gimme ten dollars now, an' I'll take the rest at ten a month."

THE MERRY MUSE.

Through Space.

Behold! The airship sets the pace, And with a majesty serene Proceeds to take long flights through space— The space in each month's magazine. —Washington Star.

Precedent.

A hat the size of Saturn's rings She wore, quite lost to view. But when I asked, "Why hide your head?" She looked surprised and only said: "The other girls all do."

In dress she wore cormorants, The dreaded sheath gown, too. A modest, shrinking maid is she, But fatefully she says to me: "The other girls all do."

So from her hook a leaf I took, And one I'll never rue. Now when I heg her for a kiss And then some more—I say just this: "The other girls all do!" —Puck.

To Father Time.

Backward, turn backward, O Time, in thy flight! Give us an autoless day and a night. Give us a "yellow" sans headlines to scan, A rustless skirt, and a hustless man, A babe teddy-bearless, a microbeless kiss, A fistful fight fageless, a straight-frontless miss, A giggleschoolgirl, and—better than that!—A summer-clad college man wearing a hat! I know, Father Time, that I'm asking too much, But turn to a day ere a dinner was lunch. Swing back to an age peroxideless for hair—An æon ere "rats" made their rendezvous there—An old-fashioned breakfast without Shredded Hay, A season when farmers went whineless a day, A hurg moving-picturless—ah, what a treat! A gumless-girl town and a trolleyless street; I'm asking too much, but I pray, Daddy Time, For days when a song had both substance and rhyme! —The Bohemian.

The Senate Sent It Back.

(Dedicated to nearly any State legislature.) The members of the house one day were working on a hill; They filled it chock with poppycock just wild enough to thrill, And when it was completed, and nothing seemed to lack— They sent it to the senate, but the senate sent it back— Said the thing was out o' whack. So the house piled more amendments to the hurly-hurly stack; Viewed their work with calm conviction, and with nerve more strong than knack They sent it to the senate, but the senate sent it back. The senate sent a message that was tintured with a slur— "In these absurd amendments the senate can't concur." But the house grew wild with fury, and said: "We'll have no slack." So they sent it to the senate, but the senate sent it back— Said the house was out o' whack; They hoped that some Samaritan would put them on the track. But the house, as mad as fiddlesticks, just wouldn't stand the crack— They sent it to the senate, and the senate sent it back. —Life.

Two clergymen in a Southern State were once discussing the process of sermon writing, when one of them remarked that the only really hard propositions for him were the introduction and the conclusion. "You remember," he said, "the sermon I preached at the installation of Brother Morley not long ago? Well, I flattered myself that the exordium and the peroration of that sermon were pretty well done." "Yes," responded the other divine, with a faint smile, "but, as I remember, they were awfully far apart."

A. Hirschman

For fine jewelry and silverware. 1641-1643 Van Ness Avenue.

BANKING

French Savings Bank

108 Sutter Street, near Montgomery
Paid-up Capital$ 600,000
Total Assets 4,270,800
Strictly a Savings Bank. Open Saturday Evening from 7 to 8:30
OFFICERS—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, 1st Vice-President; Leon Bocqueraz, 2d Vice-President; A. Bousquet, Secretary; P. A. Bergerot, Attorney.
DIRECTORS—N. C. Babin, J. A. Bergerot, Charles Carpy, Arthur Legallet, G. Beleney, H. de St. Seine, J. M. Dupas, Leon Bocqueraz, J. E. Artigues, J. S. Godeau, John Ginty.
SAFE DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT
The French-American Bank is located in the same building.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., San Francisco
Guaranteed Capital$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash. 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds.. 1,453,983.62
Deposits June 30, 1908..... 34,474,554.23
Total Assets 37,055,263.31
OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Reiter; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourney; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Godfrey & Bells, General Attorneys.
BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Reiter, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, P. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse, and W. S. Goodfellow.
MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22d Streets. For receipt and payment of deposits only.

LONDON PARIS NATIONAL BANK

N. W. cor. Sutter and Sansome
CAPITAL - - - $2,500,000
SURPLUS - - - 620,000
Sig Greenebaum, H. Fleishhacker,
President Vice-President and Mgr.
R. Altschul, Cashier

The National Bank ROLL OF HONOR

The title "Roll of Honor National Bank" is a distinction of which any financial institution in the United States may be proud. As is well known a "Roll of Honor Bank" is one possessing surplus and profits in excess of capital. A place on the Roll of Honor can not be bought, it must be earned. This bank has for a long time been known as a "Roll of Honor Bank" among banks and bankers.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK of Berkeley
UNITED STATES DEPOSITORY
A. W. NAYLOR, Pres. F. M. WILSON, Vice-Pres.
F. L. NAYLOR, Cashier. F. C. MORTIMER, Asst. Cashier.

THE BERKELEY NATIONAL BANK

United States Depository
Berkeley, Cal.
HOUSEHOLD AND COMMERCIAL ACCOUNTS INVITED
DIRECTORS—George P. Baxter, Pres.; J. W. Richards, Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Bangs, Vice-Pres.; Louis Titus, Dr. Thomas Addison, A. G. Freeman, Duncan McDuffie, Perry T. Tompkins, F. L. Lipman, W. J. Hotchkiss, and Whitney Palache. P. H. ATKINSON, Cashier.

MARKET ST. 1st Con. 5%
Due 1924. Coupons March and September
BAY COUNTIES POWER CO. 1st 5%
Due 1930. Coupons March and September
WESTERN PACIFIC 1st 5%
Due 1933. Coupons March and September

SUTRO & CO. BROKERS

412 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.
We have a Direct Wire to N. Y.

NATOMA BONDS 6%

Gold Dredging
COUPONS APRIL AND OCTOBER
Due 1917
10 per cent retired annually determined by lot
RENEBOME & CO., Brokers
508 CALIFORNIA STREET

Connecticut Fire Insurance Company

Established 1850 OF HARTFORD
Total Assets.....$5,817,423
Surplus to Policy-Holders..... 2,118,394
BENJAMIN J. SMITH
Manager Pacific Department
ALASKA-COMMERCIAL BUILDING
San Francisco

WESTERN ASSURANCE COMPANY

TORONTO
U. S. Assets.....$2,493,154
" Surplus 483,989
PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT
1004 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE
SAN FRANCISCO
J. J. KENNY, W. L. W. MILLER,
Manager Assistant Manager

THE CITIZENS' ALLIANCE, 920 Merchants Exchange, calls the attention of the public to their Free Labor Bureau, located at No. 10 City Hall Ave., San Francisco, and No. 804 Broadway, Oakland. All classes of made in U.S. furnished absolutely free.
"The Citizens' Magazine" for September is now ready. Subscription $1.00 per year. Orders solicited.

WHEN

THE TASTE OF COUNT-LESS THOUSANDS CENTRES ON

HUNTER
WHISKEY

AS AN IDEAL PRODUCT OF THE
STILL, ITS PURITY, MATURITY AND FLAVOR MUST BE SUPREME

GUARANTEED UNDER THE NATIONAL PURE FOOD LAW.

HENRY CAMPE & CO., Inc.
Distributors for California and Nevada,
San Francisco, Cal.

Byron
Hot Springs

The waters cure rheumatism—the environment is perfect—the hotel comfortable and supplied with an unexcelled table. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, ground floor, James Flood Building; Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market St., or address hotel.

36TH YEAR PHONE DOUGLAS 200

SCHMIDT LITHOGRAPH CO.
LABELS
CARTONS ETC.

SECOND AND BRYANT STS.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
SAN FRANCISCO
LOS ANGELES
PORTLAND, SEATTLE.

this winter

Yosemite—will be open all winter. Take Santa Fe to Merced, thence Yosemite Valley R. R. to El Portal. Stage ride (three and one-half hours) to Sentinel Hotel next morning.

Grand Canyon—Trails are open the year round. El Tovar Hotel on brink of Canyon under Fred Harvey management one of the finest hotels in Southwest. Our folders tell. Address

H. K. GREGORY, A. G. P. A., San Francisco
or JNO. J. BYRNE, A. P. T. M., Los Angeles

YOUR HAND

is the only one that can unlock your box in our Safe Deposit Vaults. Your valuables in one of our steel boxes can not be lost by theft or fire. For this protection $4.00 per year and up.

CROCKER SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS
CROCKER BUILDING Junction Post and Market, S. F.

HOTEL MANX

NOW OPEN

On Powell near Geary, Union Square—the core of the city—within a few minutes' walk of the railroad offices, the retail and wholesale districts.

The Hotel Manx presents every convenience and comfort characteristic of America's newest and best hotels. 300 rooms, each connecting with bath. Rooms $1.50 up.

N. M. KELLAR, Manager

John F. Forbes
Certified Public Accountant
601 KOHL BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO

EDUCATIONAL

IRVING INSTITUTE Boarding and Day School for Girls
2126 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

Music, languages, art, elocution. Kindergarten, primary, grammar, high school, and advanced grades. Accredited by the universities. Twenty-ninth year. Non-sectarian. Pupils admitted at any time. New term opens Monday, August 3.

MISS ELLA M. PINKHAM, Principal.

CALIFORNIA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
Irving Institute Building
Full corps of teachers in every department. Send for catalogue.
HERMANN GENSS, President.

THE HAMLIN SCHOOL

A Boarding and Day School for Girls

Accredited by the California universities and by Eastern colleges. Advanced courses of study are offered to high school graduates and to those who have left school, with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to a school diploma. Pupils charged from the week of entrance.

Classes in Instrumental and Vocal Music and in Drawing and Painting are formed and facilities are given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basket Ball, etc. For particulars, address
MISS HAMLIN,
2230 Pacific Avenue, San Francisco.

MISS FRIEND'S

Boarding and Day School for Girls
College, preparatory and general courses

105 TILTON AVE.
San Mateo, Cal.

Oakland Conservatory of Music

1170 Madison Street, Oakland, Cal.

The largest, oldest established, and most thoroughly equipped school of genuine musical instruction on the Pacific Coast.

Conducted on the lines of the most noted European and Eastern schools.
Full prospectus on application.
Director, ADOLF GREGORY.

PENNSYLVANIA, Ogontz School P. O.
OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES
Twenty minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. The late Mr. Jay Cooke's fine property. MISS SYLVIA J. EASTMAN, Miss ABY A. SUTHERLAND, Principals.

CASTILLEJA SCHOOL

Palo Alto, California

Home and day school for girls. University preparatory. Outdoor physical training a special feature. Opens August 24. Illustrated catalogue.
MISS MARY I. LOCKEY, A. B., Principal.

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

With the opening of October the winter season has fairly begun, and every day are there clearer indications that this will be one of the most brilliantly gay seasons for years. Cards are beginning to come for teas, teas, and yet again teas, at which the charming debutantes—and all of them may fairly come under that characterization this year—will be formally introduced. Much dancing is promised for the winter, with five or six exclusive organizations and several private balls in prospect.

The wedding of Miss Agnes Buchanan, daughter of Mr. E. Y. Buchanan, to Dr. Daniel Crosby, will take place at the home of the bride in Fruitvale on Thursday evening, October 15.

The wedding of Miss Evelyn Norwood, daughter of Mrs. William E. Norwood, to Mr. William Breeze, took place on Wednesday evening at the home of the bride on Green Street. The ceremony was performed at half-past 8 o'clock by the Rev. William Guthrie of the First Presbyterian Church. The bride was unattended. Mr. Thomas Breeze, the bridegroom's brother, was the best man. Only the relatives and a few intimate friends were present at the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Breeze have gone on their wedding journey, and on their return will live in this city.

The Colonial dances, which will be given under the direction of Mrs. Charles O. Alexander, will take place on January 15 and February 23 at the St. Francis Hotel. The patronesses are: Mrs. Alexander, Mrs. Robert Coleman, Mrs. William H. Crocker, Mrs. Sidney B. Cushing, Mrs. Albert J. Dibblee, Mrs. Joseph A. Donohoe, Mrs. Edward L. Eyre, Mrs. J. Athearn Folger, Mrs. Joseph D. Grant, Mrs. Walter S. Hobart, Mrs. Samuel Knight, Mrs. James W. Keeney, Mrs. George H. Lent, Mrs. Walter S. Martin, Mrs. William Mayo Newhall, Mrs. George A. Newhall, Mrs. George A. Pope, Mrs. Henry T. Scott, Mrs. Laurance Irving Scott, Mrs. William H. Taylor, Jr., Mrs. William S. Tevis, Mrs. Mountford S. Wilson, and Mrs. Robert J. Woods.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. Scott will entertain at a ball on the evening of December 4, in the new ballroom of the St. Francis Hotel.

Mrs. Mountford S. Wilson will entertain at a tea on Saturday afternoon, October 10, at her home on Pacific Avenue, in honor of her debutante niece, Miss Harriett Alexander.

Mrs. J. C. Kirkpatrick and Mrs. James M. Allen will entertain at a tea on November 5 at the Fairmont Hotel, in honor of their debutante daughters, Miss Susanne Kirkpatrick and Miss Clara Allen.

Mrs. Charles Keeney will entertain at a tea on October 31, in honor of her debutante daughter, Miss Ines Keeney.

Mrs. George T. Marye, Jr., was the hostess at a luncheon at the Fairmont on Wednesday of last week.

Mr. Thornwell Mullyall was the host at a dinner at the Fairmont on Thursday evening of last week in honor of Mrs. John C. Wilson.

Mr. and Mrs. John D. Spreckels, Jr., entertained at a dinner on Thursday evening of last week at the St. Francis in honor of Mr. Clayton of San Diego.

Miss Laura McKinstry was the hostess at a tea on Wednesday of last week at her home on Pacific Avenue in honor of Miss Elizabeth Parran Simpson. Assisting in receiving were Mrs. Gerald Ratbone, Mrs. Harry N. Stetson, Miss Elena Robinson, Miss Mary Keeney, Miss Marion Newhall, Miss Elizabeth Newhall, Miss Harriett Alexander, and Miss Clara Allen.

Mrs. Eleanor Martin was the hostess at an informal tea on Wednesday of last week in honor of Mrs. Bowen of Philadelphia.

Miss Dolly MacGavin was the hostess at an informal tea on Thursday afternoon of last week at her home on California Street.

Miss Dorothy Wood was the hostess at an informal tea on Monday afternoon last in honor of Miss Irene Hornby of Redlands.

Miss Stella Kane was the hostess at a bridge party last week at the home of her aunt, Mrs. George Gibbs.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Spreckels entertained informally at dinner in the Hotel St. Francis last week in honor of Mr. William Clayton of San Diego, who left for Yokohama on the Tenyo Maru.

Mrs. Maurice Casey and Mrs. Emory Winship entertained at a bridge party at their home on Pacific Avenue on Friday afternoon of last week.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a résumé of movements to and from this city and Coast and of the whereabouts of absent Californians:

Mr. and Mrs. James Wilcox of Philadelphia (the latter of whom was formerly Miss Jennie Griffith of this city) are here as the guests of Miss Caroline Griffith and Miss Alice Griffith at their home on Webster Street.

Mrs. George T. Marye, Jr., has gone to Washington, D. C., for a visit and will return here later.

Mrs. Walter S. Martin, Miss Jennie Crocker, and Mr. Templeton Crocker have returned from a week's sojourn at the McCloud Country Club.

Mr. and Mrs. C. O. G. Miller and Miss Marian Miller, who have been in Ross Valley during the summer, have returned to their Pacific Avenue home in this city.

Miss Leslie Page, who has spent the summer in the East as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. John Hays Hammond, will not return to California until December.

Mr. and Mrs. George M. Pinckard, who have been at their San Rafael home for the past two years, will spend the winter at the Hotel Granada in this city.

Mr. and Mrs. John F. Boyd and Miss Louise Boyd will leave in the near future for an Eastern trip to remain for several months.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Babcock will return in a few days from Lake Tahoe, where they have spent the summer.

Judge and Mrs. James A. Cooper have been spending a week at the McCloud River Country Club.

Captain and Mrs. William H. McKittrick came up last week from Santa Barbara and were the guests of Miss Houghton at her home on Franklin Street.

Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Lilley will close their San Rafael home in the near future and will spend the winter at the Hotel Granada on Sutter Street.

Mrs. Edwin Dimond leaves this week for a visit of several weeks' duration in New York.

Mrs. Simeon Wenban and her granddaughters, Mrs. Flora Dean Magee and Miss Ethel Dean, will occupy the Huntington house on Jackson and Broderick Streets for the winter months.

Mr. and Mrs. George A. Pope and their family and Mrs. William H. Taylor, who have been spending the summer in Europe, will sail for home on October 24.

Mrs. R. C. Foute and Miss Augusta Foute have taken an apartment at Hillcrest for the winter.

Mrs. Theodore Payne has returned from Europe and has taken apartments at the Fairmont for the winter.

Miss Elizabeth Newhall has returned from a visit to Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Welch in San Mateo.

Miss Margaret Newhall has returned from a visit to Miss Marjorie Josselyn at Woodside.

Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey Boardman have returned from the country and are at their Vallejo-Street home for the winter.

Miss Eleanor Morgan has returned from a stay of several weeks at Del Monte.

Mr. and Mrs. Ferdinand Stephenson, who have spent the summer at their country place in Ross Valley, have returned to their home on Steiner Street.

Miss Susanne Kirkpatrick has been staying in town as the guest of her cousin, Miss Clara Allen.

Mr. and Mrs. Wakefield Baker have returned from a brief visit to Coronado.

Dr. and Mrs. Albion Walter Hewlett will leave in a week or ten days for Ann Arbor, Michigan, where Dr. Hewlett has been appointed to the chair of medicine.

Mrs. A. N. Towne and Mrs. Clinton E. Worden came up last week from Del Monte to spend several days in town.

Miss Ruth Boericke and Miss Dorothy Boericke have recently been the guests of Miss Maud Wilson in Belvedere.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Bayne have returned from a month's stay at Foute's Springs.

Miss Doris Wilshire has returned from a visit of several weeks' duration in Los Angeles.

Mr. and Mrs. August Heilbronner will return to the city about October 15, having taken apartments at the Granada for the winter.

Miss Irene Sabin has been in town recently as the guest of Miss Alysse Warner.

Mrs. John M. Ellicott, wife of Commander Ellicott, U. S. N., and Miss Josephine Ellicott, who is to be one of the debutantes of the winter, are at present at 1809 Euclid Avenue, Berkeley, but expect to take an apartment in this city for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander MacKeigan, who have been at the St. Francis since their marriage about a week ago, have returned to Los Angeles.

Mr. Will Chapin of Sacramento is a guest at the St. Francis.

Dr. Howard S. Taylor and Mr. John Temple Graves, Independence League candidate for the vice-presidency, are at the St. Francis.

Among the railroad men who have been at the St. Francis during the past week are Mr. J. A. Clock, general Western agent of the Wisconsin Central; Mr. F. E. Singer, general freight agent of the same road, and Mr. R. F. Watkins, assistant treasurer of the Denver and Rio Grande.

Mrs. Charles O. Alexander will spend the winter at the Hotel St. Francis with her son and daughter.

Lieutenant Marcel Clamival of the First Reserve Regiment in Algeria, who has been staying at the St. Francis, leaves with the steamer Le Suprem.

Mr. and Mrs. William Kaufman have taken apartments at the St. Francis.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Eastland (formerly Miss Helen Wagner) are rejoicing in the advent of a little daughter.

Pears'

"A shining countenance" is produced by ordinary soaps.

The use of Pears' reflects beauty and refinement. Pears' leaves the skin soft, white and natural.

Matchless for the complexion.

FAIRMONT HOTEL

The scenic Hotel of the World
announces the completion of the Powell Street Tunnel Entrance

Guests may now enter from the corner of Powell and California and take elevator to any floor

Palace Hotel Company

Why Not Make Your Home At The Hotel Jefferson

Turk and Gough Streets
Facing Jefferson Square

A superior class hotel with every modern convenience and comfort. Operated on the American and European plans. Special rate to permanent guests. Special attention paid to the table—we invite comparisons. Management Noah W. Gray, formerly manager Alexander Young Hotel, Honolulu, and Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

You Can Live At The Hotel Jefferson Better And For Less Than At Home

Hotel Del Monte

as an objective for your

WEEK-END VACATIONS

An easy and pleasant trip by motor or train. Plenty to do—to see—to enjoy—when you get there. Write for rates and reservations.
H. R. WARNER, Manager

Roy C. Ward Jas. W. Dean
Jas. K. Polk Geo. E. Billing

GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.

ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE
EFFECTED

312 California Street. Phone Douglas 228
San Francisco, Cal.

H. J. COOPER

Expert Accountant and Auditor

705 KAMM BUILDING
717 MARKET STREET
Phone Douglas 1342 San Francisco

GOODYEAR "HIPPO" HOSE

The best and strongest Garden Hose.
Guaranteed to stand 700 lbs. pressure.

Try it and be convinced.
GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY
R. H. PEASE, President
587, 589, 591 Market St. at Second St.
SAN FRANCISCO

THE OCULARIUM
Henry Kahnt & Co.
OPTICIANS
PERFECT FITTING
EYEGLASSES
AT MODERATE PRICES
644 MARKET ST.
OPP. PALACE HOTEL
BRANCA 1399 VAN NESS AVE.

Gaining in popularity every day because it deserves it

Old Gilt Edge Whiskey
Rye or Bourbon

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"

Building, concrete, steel and marble. Located, most fashionable shopping district.

210 rooms, 135 baths. Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests.

Most refined hostelry in Seattle.

Absolutely fireproof. English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

Hotel Rafael

San Rafael, Cal.

Open year around. Headquarters Automobile League. New and commodious garage. Fifty minutes from San Francisco. Complete change of climate. Tihuron or Sausalito Ferry. All modern conveniences.

F. N. Orpin, Proprietor.

Sherman, Clay & Co., occupying this entire building at Kearny and Sutter Streets, S. F., are headquarters for every kind of musical instrument from Steinway pianos down. You have no need to go elsewhere for any article pertaining to the music business.

Sherman Clay & Co.

STEINWAY AND OTHER PIANOS—VICTOR TALKING MACHINES

Kearny and Sutter, S. F.

1635 Van Ness Ave. San Francisco

Broadway at 13th Oakland

For sale or exchange for real estate or commercial interests, an estate in the foothills of Santa Clara County, consisting of 550 acres of land, of which 100 acres are in orchard and vineyard, balance in grain land, woods and pasture. Large modern dwelling, with extensive and beautiful grounds. Winery, barns, men's quarters, and cottages are all newly built and in excellent condition. Pays large income, being exceptionally located to produce fruits and wines of the finest quality. Vineyard and orchard could be leased for a term of 5 years to bring good interest on the entire investment. Thousands of cords of wood to be cut, selling at $7 per cord on the spot. Water supply abundant. Further particulars on application. Address Box 22, Argonaut.

Tennent's

Ale and Stout

from Wellpark Brewery Glasgow, Scotland

Forbes Bros., Agents, 1926 Sutter St.

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy people who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Colonel William T. Wood, Inspector-General Department, U. S. A., who arrived recently from Washington, D. C., to inspect the quartermaster depot in this city and the military prison at Alcatraz, left on Friday of last week for Southern California to inspect the Soldiers' Home near Santa Monica.

Colonel David L. Brainard, U. S. A., chief commissary of the Department of California, went last week to Atascadero, where he will act as chief commissary of the manœuvre camp.

Colonel John B. Bellinger, U. S. A., depot quartermaster at San Francisco, left last week for Atascadero, where he will act as chief quartermaster of the manœuvre camp.

Colonel J. Walker Benet, Ordnance Department, U. S. A., Benecia Arsenal, has proceeded to Atascadero, where he will act as chief ordnance officer of the manœuvre camp.

Lieutenant-Colonel Adam Slaker, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., is relieved from duty at Fort Baker, and ordered to proceed to Fort Wright, New York, for duty.

Lieutenant-Colonel J. E. Mahoney, U. S. M. C., is detached from the Naval Hospital, Mare Island, and ordered to Washington, D. C., and to report to the major-general, commandant.

Major George E. Pickett, paymaster, U. S. A., San Francisco, has proceeded to Atascadero, where he is acting as chief paymaster of the manœuvre camp.

Captain Lucien Young, U. S. N., was assigned to duty as captain of the Mare Island Navy Yard on September 24.

Captain D. C. McDougal, U. S. M. C., is ordered when his temporary duty at headquarters, U. S. Marine Corps, is completed to return to the U. S. S. Colorado and resume his duties, reporting on October 15.

Captain M. F. Steele, Sixth Cavalry, U. S. A., who was ordered to Atascadero for duty during the manœuvres and who arrived there last week, has had his orders revoked and will proceed to Washington, D. C., to report to the chief of staff, U. S. A.

Captain C. D. Rhodes, Sixth Cavalry, U. S. A., Jolo, P. I., who arrived last week from Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, has gone to the camp at Atascadero for temporary duty during the manœuvres there.

Captain Clark D. Dudley, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., being now convalescent and able to travel, has been ordered to proceed to the Presidio of San Francisco to join his troop.

Captain Rogers F. Gardner, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., is ordered to proceed to Washington Barracks, D. C., and report in person to the commanding officer of the General Hospital at that post for observation and treatment.

Commander H. Phelps, U. S. N., is ordered home and granted three months' leave of absence when relieved from treatment at the Naval Hospital, Mare Island.

Chaplain L. P. Reynolds, U. S. N., is detached from the Pensacola and ordered to the Pacific Fleet, sailing from San Francisco for Cavite, P. I., about October 5.

Lieutenant R. C. Davis, U. S. N., is ordered to the Navy Yard, Mare Island, for duty in the steam engineering department of the yard.

Lieutenant H. L. Hodges, First Cavalry, U. S. A., who has recently been at the manœuvres in Pennsylvania, has arrived at Atascadero for temporary duty during the manœuvres.

Lieutenant William H. Winters, Thirteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., is detailed as professor of military science and tactics at the Kamehaha schools, Honolulu, H. I., and will sail from San Francisco on or about October 5.

Lieutenant George E. Turner, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., has had Paso Robles designated as his station, instead of Gilroy, while on duty in connection with the Progressive Military Map of the United States.

Lieutenant Leighton Powell, Thirteenth Infantry, U. S. A., is relieved from duty at the Presidio of Monterey and will join his regiment.

Ensign O. C. F. Dodge, U. S. N., is granted three months' leave of absence when relieved from treatment at the Naval Hospital, Mare Island.

Surgeon E. S. Bogert, U. S. N., is relieved from duty at the Naval War College, Newport, R. I., and ordered to the Naval Recruiting Station, New York.

Assistant Surgeon E. U. Reed, U. S. N., is detached from duty at the Navy Yard, Mare Island, and ordered to the Naval Training Station, San Francisco.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert P. Greer (formerly Miss Charlotte Ellinwood) are rejoicing in the arrival of a little daughter.

It is proposed to remove the newspaper kiosks on the Paris boulevards to give more space for pedestrian traffic.

DR. ROBERT E. O'CONNELL, DR. GEORGE D. O'CONNELL, DENTISTS, Hastings Building, Post Street and Grant Avenue. Tel. Douglas 2733.

At Out-of-Town Hotels.

Among recent arrivals from San Francisco at Byron Hot Springs were Mr. Fillmore White, Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Smyth, Miss Valerie Smyth, Mrs. James Shea, Mr. John Baker, Jr., Mr. D. C. Dinan, Mr. John R. Sheehan.

The following are among the registrations from San Francisco at Hotel del Coronado: Mr. M. Monahan, Mr. P. J. Ryan, Miss Grace Lafferty, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Hohson, Miss Blanche Wood, Mr. August C. Muento, Mr. H. B. Rodgers.

Recent arrivals at Hotel Del Monte include Mr. and Mrs. Henry Clarence Breeden, Mrs. E. W. Hedges, Dr. and Mrs. Grant Selfridge, Mrs. Margaret Irvine, Mr. James W. Byrne, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Houston, Miss Dean, Mr. and Mrs. Charles G. Lathrop, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Hale, Mr. and Mrs. John Hussey, Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Bernays, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Ewing, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. P. A. English, Colonel and Mrs. W. R. Parnell, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. S. Woods, Mr. M. S. Woods, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Coryell, Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Miller, Mrs. A. W. Ballard, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Booth.

At the Hotels.

Among the guests at the Hotel Argonaut are Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Hollingum, Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Richardson of Portland, Mr. H. E. Robinson and Mr. Charles Lister of Gilroy, Mr. Edward Hyatt, State superintendent of public instruction, and Miss Hyatt, Dr. and Mrs. M. W. files of Los Angeles, Mr. J. W. Schroeder, Seattle, and Mr. Charles Schiller, Los Angeles.

Among recent guests at the Fairmont Hotel are Colonel and Mrs. A. D. Davidson, Toronto; Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Darling and Mrs. A. D. McRae, Winnipeg; Mr. and Mrs. Edward Tilden and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Swift, Chicago; Rear Admiral W. T. Burrell and Mrs. Burrell; Lieutenant Haynes Ellis and Mrs. Ellis, Dr. Reginald B. Henry, U. S. N., Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Treat and Mr. and Mrs. Lowman of Seattle, Colonel and Mrs. Lucas of London, the Hon. Ho Kwan Puy of Peking, Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Penhallow of Hawaii, Mr. and Mrs. Jules Tessier of Quebec, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Wright of New Orleans.

It was when Mme. du Deffand was eighty, and blind, that Horace Walpole pronounced her to be the most interesting woman in France. Mme. de Stael, never beautiful, was the life of a party at forty-five.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Cooper (formerly Miss Anita Harvey) are rejoicing in the advent of a little daughter in their home.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Carrigan (formerly Miss Anna Sperry) are rejoicing in the advent of a little son in their home.

THE LEADING NEW YORK HAT, "THE MILLER." Eugene Korn, Agent, 15 Kearny St.

Hotel St. Francis

The spirit of good service and the facilities that produce it.

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF JAMES WOODS

Hotel Argonaut

Society of California Pioneers Building, Fourth Street near Market, San Francisco. Commercial, family; 400 rooms; rooms with detached bath, $1 per day; rooms with private bath, $1.50 and up per day; breakfast, 50c; luncheon, 50c; dinner, including wine, $1. Seating capacity, 500. The Hotel Argonaut's free bus meets all trains at ferries, steamship landings and all depots. EDWARD ROLKIN, Manager.

Hotel del Coronado

Motto: "BEST OF EVERYTHING" Most Delightful Climate on Earth American Plan. Summer rates $3.50 per day each and upward, or $21.00 per week each and upward "Good Music" and "Fine Automobile Road, Los Angeles-Riverside to Coronado." Golf, Tennis, Polo, and other outdoor sports every day in the year. New 700-foot ocean pier, for fishing. Boating and Bathing are the very best. Send for booklet to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado Beach, Cal. Or see H. F. NORCROSS, Agent, 334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles. Tel. A 6789; Main 3917. 22d Street and Broadway

Heat

Where you want it—
When you want it—
No smoke—no smell—no trouble.

Often you want heat in a hurry in some room in the house the furnace does not reach. It's so easy to pick up and carry a

PERFECTION Oil Heater
(Equipped with Smokeless Device)

to the room you want to heat—suitable for any room in the house. It has a real smokeless device absolutely preventing smoke or smell—turn the wick as high as you can or as low as you like—brass font holds 4 quarts of oil that gives out glowing heat for 9 hours. Finished in japan and nickel—an ornament anywhere. Every heater warranted.

The Rayo Lamp

is the lamp for the student or reader. It gives a brilliant, steady light that makes study a pleasure. Made of brass, nickel plated and equipped with the latest improved central draft burner. Every lamp warranted. If you cannot obtain the Perfection Oil Heater or Rayo Lamp from your dealer write to our nearest agency for descriptive circular.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY
(Incorporated)

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

Dyer—Well, I see Failing is on his feet again. Ryer—Yes; he was obliged to sell his auto.—Puck.

"I didn't see you in church yesterday." "No; Willie didn't sbovel a path through the Sunday papers in time."—Puck.

Polly—How do you like my bathing suit? Dolly—It must have been perfectly sweet before you outgrew it.—Cleveland Leader.

Barber—Hair getting thin, sir. Ever tried our hair preparation, sir? Customer—No, I can't blame it on that.—Boston Transcript.

He—Has your fortune ever been told? She—No; but I dare say papa will tell you if you really have serious intentions.—Sketch.

"You seem to manage remarkably well on your housekeeping money." "Yes; the storekeepers haven't sent in their bills yet."—Stray Stories.

"When they take woman away from the co-educational college," said the speaker, "what will follow?" "I will," cried a voice from the audience.—Success.

"Ah, I see you are married," exclaimed the merchant. "No, sir," replied the applicant for a position. "I got this scar in a railroad accident."—The Bohemian.

Tommy—Pop, what is retribution? Tommy's Pop—Retribution, my son, is something that we are sure will eventually overtake other people.—Philadelphia Record.

Mrs. Benham—Why does a man hate his mother-in-law? Benham—He doesn't bate her; he simply hates to think of the way she got into his family.—Harper's Weekly.

"De real resourceful man," said Uncle Eben, "when some one hands bim a lemon is ready wif de sugar and other fixin's to make it tof-able pleasant to take."—Washington Star.

Scott—What makes you think that the trust originated in Rhode Island? Mott—Dad used to speak of the trust in Providence as far back as when I was a boy.—Boston Traveler.

"Officer, I appeal for protection. A man is following me and attempting to make love to me." "Begorry, Ol've been lookin' for an escaped lunatic. Where is he?"—Kansas City Times.

"Do you think that Miss Kidder was having fun with me?" asked Chawlie. "Well, old chap, give me the details," was Awthur's response. "You see, I had my bull terrier with me. And I said to her, 'That dog knows as muc has I do.' And she said, 'Don't you think $4.50 was too much to pay for him?'"—Cleveland Leader.

"My poor man, how did you acquire such a thirst?" "It was dis-a-way, mister; when de doctor operated on me for appendercitis he forgot an' left a sponge inside o' me."—Boston Traveler.

Old Gent—Here, you boy, what are you doing out here, fishing? Don't you know you ought to be at school? Small Boy—There, now! I knew I'd forgot something.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"You know Miss Strong, don't you?" "Oh, yes; mannish sort of girl." "Is she, really?" "Yes; she used the telephone today for the first time in her life, and she didn't giggle once."—Philadelphia Press.

"I have written a book that everybody ought to read," said the author. "I am afraid it won't do," answered the publisher. "What the public seems to want now is a book that nobody ought to read."—Washington Star.

"How often does the trolley run past your house?" asked a tourist of a farmer. "Waal, they run by so frequent and so often that I can't keep no track of 'em, but I jedge the last one passed here two hours ago."—Harper's Bazar.

"My friends," said a temperance lecturer, lowering his voice to an impressive whisper, "if all the saloons were at the bottom of the sea, what would be the result?" And the answer came, "Lots of people would get drowned."—Stray Stories.

"That oldest girl of mine is finally engaged. The young man called as a notification committee last night." "And how did you receive the news?" "Got the family together and cheered for eighty-three minutes by a reliable clock."—Washington Herald.

Jenks—The boss told me this morning that I looked as if I had gone to bed with my clothes on. I told bim pretty sharply that he was mistaken. Clark—Oh, come now; you know you did it. Jenks—I did not! These are my brother's clothes.—Catholic Standard and Times.

"Really," said the stylish lady, enthusiastically, to her friend, "it is quite worth while going to the zoo, if only to see the wonderful supply of rhododendrons." "Is it?" replied her friend, languidly; "I like to look at the great, big, clumsy beasts, too, but it always smells so unpleasantly round the cages."—London News.

50-Foot Lots Only $7000

Terms to suit

Several swell lots left in Presidio Terrace, San Francisco's beautiful residence Park—Washington Street at First Avenue.

Particulars of BALDWIN & HOWELL

318-324 Kearny Street

Toyo Kisen Kaisha (ORIENTAL S. S. CO.)

S. S. America Maru (via Manila)..... Tuesday, Oct. 20, 1908
S. S. Hongkong Maru... Tuesday, Nov. 17, 1908
S. S. Tenyo Maru..... Friday, Dec. 11, 1908

Steamers sail from company's piers, Nos. 42-44, near foot of Second Street, 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Hiogo), Nagasaki and Sbanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.

Round-trip tickets at reduced rates. For freight and passage apply at office, 240 James Flood Building. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

MT. TAMALPAIS AND MUIR WOODS VIA SAUSALITO FERRY FOOT OF MARKET ST. LEGAL HOLIDAYS—SUNDAY TIME

Lv. San Francisco		Lv. Muir Woods		Lv. Tamalpais
WEEK DAY	SUN- DAY	WEEK DAY	SUN- DAY	WEEK DAY	SUN- DAY
9:45 A.	7:15 A.	1:40 P.	10:40 A.	7:25 A.	9:28 A.
.....	*8:15 A.	2:40 P.	12:16 P.	1:40 P.	11:10 A.
1:45 P.	9:15 A.	4:45 P.	1:40 P.	4:14 P.	12:16 P.
SATUR- DAY	9:45 A.	2:45 P.	SATUR- DAY	1:40 P.
Tamal- pais only	11:15 A.	4:40 P.	ONLY	3:10 P.
.....	12:45 A.	5:45 P.	4:40 P.
.....	* Tamalp. only	6:40 P.
.....	* Muir Woods only	8:15 P.
.....

TICKET OFFICE AT SAUSALITO FERRY

ROOS BROS.

men's overcoats

New Fall "Roos - Made" models in black—in Oxfords—in Fancy Tweeds—form-fitting and box effects—plain or silk lined. Their Quality and Style make them a Best Value. $15 to $55.

ROOS BROS.

Van Ness at Bush Fillmore at O'Farrell

Mr. Publisher:

Does it interest you to know that ALL the mechanical work on THE ARGONAUT is done by us? Fact.

WILLIAMS PRINTING CO., Phone, Douglas 2905. 406 Sutter Street

A BEDROOM completely furnished and decorated by us—an example of what may be obtained without incurring a large expense.

Furniture Carpets Rugs Draperies

D. N. & E. WALTER & CO. Van Ness and Sacramento

Wholesale Retail Since 1858

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXIII. No. 1646.

SAN FRANCISCO, OCTOBER 10, 1908.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10 payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breems Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opéra. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at F and Thirteenth Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Denison News Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains.

Published at 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal.
Telephone, Kearny 5895.

THIRTY-SECOND YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: The Real Issue—The Down-Town Movement—The Spirit and the Voice of the West—The Balkan Imbroglío—The Case of Judge Dunne—The "Earthquake Clause" Decision—Civil Service in Practice—Beginning at the Beginning—Not as Other Men—Editorial Notes	225-228
CAMPAIGN TOPICS	228
LETTERS TO THE EDITOR	238
A NEW GAMBLING SYSTEM: Lord Rosslyn and Sir Hiram Maxim Settle a Dispute With a Roulette Wheel	229
FROM ELDER FRENCH POETS: English Version of Eighteenth Century French Verse by General E. L. Huggins	229
INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All over the World	229
THE VIGILANTES' GRAND INQUEST: XXXIV. By Jerome A. Hart	230
THE PHILIPPINES IN WAR TIME: An Englishman Writes a Strong Novel in Defense of the American Soldier	231
SAN FRANCISCO ARTISTS ABROAD: Some Good Work Done by California Artists in New York	232
CURRENT VERSE: "Chanson Louis XIII," by Charlotte Prentiss. "Yggdrasil," by Ethel Talbot. "The Bond," by Alice Stone Blackwell. "In Autumn," by Alice E. Allen	232
BOOKS AND AUTHORS. By Sidney G. P. Coryn	233
LITERARY NOTES: Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip—New Publications	234
FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT	234
ANOTHER VIEW OF WARFIELD. By Josephine Hart Phelps	235
VANITY FAIR	236
STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise	237
THE MERRY MUSE	237
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy	238-239
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day	240

The Real Issue.

In the storm of personalities and in the fog of suspicion raised by those who are exposing, incriminating, and lampooning each other in connection with the presidential campaign, let the real issues not be overwhelmed and lost sight of.

The question before the American people is not whether Senator Foraker of Ohio was or was not in the service of the Standard Oil Company, nor whether Governor Haskell of Oklahoma is or is not a "friend" of the same corporation, nor whether Mr. Kern has or has not been employed as a corporation agent, nor whether Mr. Hearst is a faker or a public benefactor, nor whether the facile and adroit Bryan is more or less clever at intellectual fence and parry than the hot-headed Roosevelt. The question is whether the destinies of the country will be better served by the Republican or Democratic parties under the administrative direction of Judge Taft or Mr. Bryan. Here are all the issues summed up into one. Here is where the mind and the conscience of the country should concentrate itself, leaving personality, incrimination, recrimination, jealousy, malevolence, and vituperative rhetoric all to one side.

The Republican party stands for authority and efficiency in government. Its policies, which connect historically with those of the Federalist party of the day of our great grandfathers, are founded in conceptions of authority in government, and have been nourished and developed in the motives and habits of effective administration. The Democratic party stands for a loose theory of the national tie and for local and domestic as distinct from centralized tendencies in administration. Its fundamental notion is a relatively weak nationality and a relatively strong State system. It would refer to State authority many things which, like internal improvements, quarantine, and maintenance of social order, are now under Republican practice in the hands of national agencies. The Republican party would maintain the system of tariffs under which we have long operated and, enlarging upon the same idea, would subsidize the agencies of international traffic. The Democratic party would destroy the protective system and weaken the hands of the general government at ten thousand points. Here in a nutshell is the issue as between the parties.

The issue between candidates is in precise harmony with that between the parties. Mr. Taft is for the law as it stands defined in the Constitution and statutes. He stands for thorough-going methods in administration, for a severe equality before the law, for persistent assertion of the theories of a strong central government. Mr. Bryan stands for loose and shifting philosophies founded in slight respect for the law. He would regulate the course of government not by the fixed lights of established law and upon historic theories of its interpretation, but by the moods and whimsies of changing public opinion.

The issue, we repeat, is not between wrangling disputants who are filling the air with an unseemly clamor, but between the two great parties and the character, theories, and dispositions of the men whom they have made their champions.

The Down-Town Movement.

The return of San Francisco's great popular store, the Emporium, to its restored home on Market Street is a distinct event in the rehabilitation of the city. In the flamboyant phrase of the daily papers, it "marks an era" in the history of San Francisco. It comes, too, at a time and under circumstances to give encouragement to many whose enterprise has done much toward the physical restoration of our old business district. There has, let us frankly say, been some disappointment, not to say discouragement, on the part of those who went promptly to work to replace their destroyed holdings, and who under multiplied difficulties put up buildings which are now going begging for tenants. Many have felt the failure to lease new buildings within the burned district promptly upon their completion, due to a positive and possibly a permanent decline in the business vitality of the city; and this feeling is perhaps not unnatural when "To Let" signs may be seen in many store windows within the restored district. The return of the Emporium, therefore, regarded merely as a circumstance illustrating the tendencies of business, is a thing of cheering portent.

Those who look at the situation broadly, have never cherished the first doubt about the future. It has been plain as noonday from the very first that new San Francisco would sit in the lap of old San Francisco—that business would surely return from the temporary abiding places to which it was driven to its old habitat. But the building and occupancy of a business district is not the work of a day. Under the conditions of the past two years building has been difficult, costly, and slow. Prodigies and marvels have been achieved, truly, but not even yet is the old business district, regarded as a whole, ready to receive those who will ultimately come to it. For example, the fine building planned for the White House is only half done. The O'Connor & Moffat building is likewise in process, and the Sloane building is only just now fairly under way. And the situation as related to these leading establishments is duplicated in the case of a hundred others less conspicuous. The Shreve building, it is true, is practically ready for occupancy; and the Nathan-Dohrmann Company might come down town in a week if they were so minded. But there are a good many objections to moving into a district only half rebuilt. The streets everywhere are blocked with masses of building material, dust flies in insufferable clouds, pedestrians find it difficult and even dangerous to get about. Establishments like those of Shreve and the Nathan-Dohrmann Company are not disposed to isolate themselves and to make it difficult for customers to find them, even though their new quarters be ready and waiting.

The Christmas season, a season when business is most active in retail lines, is not far ahead, and the general plan on the part of retail dealers is to remain in the quarters occupied since the disaster until after the holiday time is over. Furthermore, a great number of small establishments which cluster like satellites about every retail centre, will follow rather than lead the down-town movement. On the whole, it is not surprising that the retail district remains for the present in temporary quarters, and it is inevitable that so long as it does so remain, many new buildings within the devastated district shall remain unoccupied. In the judgment of the Argonaut, the general movement down town will be delayed until the late spring or early summer of 1909. It will not be possible for leading dry goods establishments, like the White House, the City of Paris, and Newman, Levinson & Co., to get into their new quarters before midsummer; and so long as they remain in Van Ness Avenue there will be the centre of the active shopping district. When, with the return of these establishments to their restored quarters, the retail centre shall be transferred to its old home, it will be found that all the buildings now constructed and under way will fall short of meeting the demand for business house room.

The managers of the Emporium have shown courage in returning to Market Street a full half year in advance of the general down-town movement. And yet there is a wise discretion behind this courage. Market Street is more nearly restored than the region of which the Shreve building is the centre, and it has practically a direct connection with that populous part of the city known as the Mission. Of all the changes wrought by the disaster none other, perhaps, is so important as that made in the Mission. The population of this district has been doubled and possibly trebled since the fire. The Mission district, proper, has been built up much more closely than before, and its boundaries have been extended by the construction of new dwellings a full mile or more toward the south and west. It is said by those who assume to be wise in such matters that in the region south of Market Street—in the Mission chiefly—there lives 60 per cent of the population of the city. All this population, old and new, is directly and conveniently tributary to Market Street. Shoppers boarding the cars at a thousand points on the south side may without change land at the door of the Emporium. All this, of course, must have been calculated by the Emporium people when last week they moved their vast establishment from Van Ness Avenue to the old Market-Street location.

So far as may be judged from present indications, the new retail district will be identical with the old with this exception, namely, that the centre of the finer shopping quarter will be in Grant Avenue rather than in Kearny Street—one block to the west. If the owners of the old White House site at the corner of Post and Kearny Streets could have seen their way to make arrangements with the White House people, there would have been practically no change at all. But with the White House at the corner of Grant Avenue and Sutter Street, with Sloane & Co. in the same region, and with Shreve & Co. at the corner of Post Street and Grant Avenue, the last-named street bound to be the active centre, with Sutter Street as its northern boundary. The reopening of the Palaeo Hotel on its old site will, we think, carry an element of fine retail business as far down Market as Montgomery Street and hold it there, but that will no doubt be its eastern limit.

Those who see San Francisco day by day in its marvelous changes need not be told that the new city is to be finer and better than the old. Prior to the disaster there remained even in the best streets and in immediate neighborhood with new and modern structures many out-dated and out-classed buildings. All these, of course, were destroyed, and their places have largely been taken with structures of a far better type. Down-town San Francisco, although now only half completed, is today the most modern metropolitan district in the world. All the buildings are new and every one has been constructed upon principles unknown to the architecture of an earlier time.

No authoritative or adequate census of San Francisco has been taken since the smash-up. Estimates of population, therefore, must rest upon incidental indications—registration of voters, school attendance, postal revenues, street-car and ferry traffic, etc. By these several measures it is indicated that the metropolitan district of San Francisco, say the region within ten miles of a circle drawn around Kearny and Market Streets as a centre, is considerably more populous than three years ago. There has, of course, been a marked loss of population within the devastated district, but we believe that it has been compensated fully in the growth of the Mission district, the Richmond district, and other regions within the city limits. It is the opinion of experts who have no motive for exaggeration that the city of San Francisco proper has today as many people as it had on the 17th of April, 1906. This estimate is borne out by the records of street-car traffic, by postal receipts, and by other positive indications, not to mention the ceaseless crowds which throng every thoroughfare.

The Spirit and the Voice of the West.

It would be easy to make too much on the one hand and too little on the other of the Trans-Mississippi Congress which as we write is in session at San Francisco. It is true that the congress is an unofficial association and that it is powerless by direct processes to enforce its judgments and conclusions. Therefore, to those who can see no merit in an agency lacking tangible force, the congress may seem an ineffective and trivial thing.

But there is another and truer view of the Trans-Mississippi Congress. It is made up of men actively engaged in the work of building the great West. It gives to these men not only an opportunity to compare ideas and to contrast methods, but a chance to put their ideas and methods to the test of an intelligent, non-political, and unbiased criticism. It gives the man who has an idea, and who by his character and achievements is worthy of a hearing, the opportunity to make appeal to others who like himself are earnest in the work of developing or conserving great public interests. The Trans-Mississippi Congress gives to the men of the West a platform, a forum, from which they may address the whole people of the United States.

The value of such a forum is none the less important because it must be measured in intellectual and moral terms, for in the up-building of a country and in the conserving of its resources, intellectual and moral forces are more potent and therefore more important than mere physical forces. There are those who would deny this, and there are others who may not understand it, but it is the truth none the less.

Every country is controlled less by law and police than by the spirit of its people; and it is the especial function of organizations like that of the Trans-Mississippi Congress to create and direct this spirit. Within the half dozen or more years covered by the history of the trans-Mississippi association, its influence has been felt widely and so powerfully as almost to have transformed the internal policies of the government. It has practically created and put on its feet that great movement which is watering the deserts of the West, turning its most arid places into seats of population and production. It has stimulated the activities of government in the conservation of our native forests and in the protection of those vast areas loosely characterized as the public domain, and for more than half a century abandoned to the unrestrained uses or abuses of peripatetic and reckless stock rangers. It has revived the energies of government in relation to navigable streams and to our ocean harbors. It has emphasized, and by emphasizing it has practically corrected, the gross abuses under which the government was being robbed of its mineral and timber lands.

In a broader sphere it has stimulated in the people of the West a sense of their value and power in the ordering of public affairs and policies. It has reminded the people of the East, and the powers which centre in the East, that there are at the West interests not only material, but moral, which merit attention. And in a still broader sense it has emphasized the unity of interest between East and West. These are no slight services. They justify all the effort that the successive congresses have occasioned; they far more than cancel all accounts which may be charged up against an agency which, by asserting its own dignities and speaking with the voice of authority, has yet no actual power to enforce its own behests.

It is interesting and instructive to note that successive sessions of the Trans-Mississippi Congress attract the attention of large and larger men. In the congress now in session may be seen and heard the most potent figures of the West, men who find in the congress an opportunity not afforded elsewhere for addressing the country at large and inviting its cooperation. Perhaps it is in its character as a forum—as a means of addressing the American people—that the largest value of the congress is to be found; for high as is the level of American intelligence, and highly developed as are our agencies of intercommunication, there are few ways in which unofficial leadership may appeal for that support which is the breath of its life. If, indeed, the Trans-Mississippi Congress had no other function than to utter the voice of the West, it would still serve a great and useful purpose.

The Balkan Imbroglio.

In its issue of August 19 the Argonaut suggested that congratulations upon the declaration of constitutional government in Turkey might be a little premature and that the various powers that have taken portions of the empire under their "protection" might be reluctant to surrender their charges or to give an account of their stewardship. The new authorities at Constantinople, notably the young Turks, had foreseen the difficulties and dangers of a demand for restitution and were early in the field with an assurance that no such demand would be made and that the existing order of things would be respected. Bosnia and Herzegovina would continue under the direction of Austria, the status of Bulgaria under the suzerainty of Turkey would remain unchanged, and the rule of England in Egypt would be unchallenged. The young Turks were anxious that the advent of good government in Turkey should be without friction and that the powers should remain undisturbed in the exercise of their profitable benevolence.

But now it seems that Austria has hardened her heart against these assurances. Her position as "protector" of Bosnia and Herzegovina is obviously untenable, inasmuch as there is now no one from whom they need to be protected. They must either be ceded to a reformed Turkey or they must remain permanently under the control of Austria not as protected provinces, but as integral parts of the Austrian empire. Therefore, Austria has decreed their annexation and her intention to retain as her own property an immense area belonging to Turkey and temporarily entrusted to her care. The proposition is a simple one, and in the case of an individual we should know exactly what to call it.

The matter of Bulgaria is different. Bulgaria has been practically independent for many years and the suzerainty of Turkey has been no more than a figment. In throwing off the last shadow of Turkish sovereignty she has done no more than she has a right to do, and she has done it in good time to prevent a constitutional Turkey from strengthening the link or reasserting an ancient claim. She can hardly be expected to have a very tender consideration for the nerves of Europe or for the phantom "integrity" of Turkey, and as she has an army of about a quarter of a million splendid fighters she naturally seizes the opportunity to step into a new position that she feels herself able to defend.

So far as Europe is concerned, there is no question of right or wrong, of justice or injustice. Nothing can be considered except a balance of power that for these many years has rested upon a knife-edge. Bosnia and Herzegovina were not handed over to Austria from any feeling of benevolence, but only because their struggles under Turkish iniquity might hasten a break-up of the empire and a resulting scramble for the pieces. Bulgaria was given her practical independence for the same reason and to prevent a revolution that would disrupt the country. Europe would have been much better pleased to see these nationalities suffer in silence and she would not have lifted a finger for them if they had been butchered by Albanians and Bashi-Bazouks to the last man. But as they persisted in struggling under the knife and threatened to drag the whole edifice down with them, it was necessary to find some way to pacify them while preserving the nominal "integrity" of the Turkish empire. This is the arrangement that has now been shattered by Austria and by Bulgaria.

The possibilities of the situation are numerous, and none of them is cheerful. If Turkey acquiesces in Bulgarian independence she may as well wipe herself off the map at once, because other provinces will do the same thing and Bulgaria will aid and abet them. But can Europe allow Turkey to move her armies against Bulgaria and so start a fire of terrible danger? And will Bulgaria await to be attacked when she knows that she can seize Constantinople if she is only quick enough? Can the powers allow Austria to enrich herself by annexing Bosnia and Herzegovina without demanding similar compensation for themselves by the partition of the Turkish empire, and is such a partition possible without a quarrel over the spoils? Is there an agreement between Austria and Germany, because if so we may expect to see England, France, and Russia automatically forming a counter agreement.

The first step will probably be a strong effort, by overwhelming force if necessary, to restrain Bulgaria and Turkey from flying at each other's throats until a European conference can be summoned to take a cool-headed view of the situation. In any event, it is hard to see how Austria can be allowed to keep the provinces and it is equally hard to believe that she will give them up. If she keeps them, there must be compensation all round, and this is the very thing that has been dreaded for a quarter of a century as leading to almost certain war. It is a situation of extraordinary danger and one from which almost anything may be expected.

The Case of Judge Dunne.

The reasons why Judge Dunne ought not to be re-elected are plain to see. Primarily they are the same reasons why he should not have been elected in the first place, for now as then he is a man of low breeding, mediocre mentality, and defective professional equipment. He was brought to the bench originally not because he had any real preparation or fitness for judicial duties, but because he wanted a job and was able to bring the Native Sons' society and the saloon influence to bear upon a candidacy which was generally regarded as so ridiculous as to border upon scandal. Judge Dunne has now been on the bench for something like ten or twelve years, but he has used that period to so little purpose as to stand now where he stood at the beginning, a byword and a joke among lawyers. Wherever two or three members of the bar are gathered together there you are pretty certain to hear amid gurgles and guffaws the "latest" that has happened in Judge Dunne's court.

Judge Dunne's unfitness for judicial responsibility is an old story; there is no need to dwell upon it because it is known to everybody who has any acquaintance with our judicial conditions. But there are special and immediate reasons why he should not be re-elected at this time. They rest upon the history of the past year and a half. From the beginning of the Phelan-Spreckels-Heney movement, Judge Dunne has been openly a partisan of the prosecution. No ward-heeler ever "stayed with his friends" with a more implicit subserviency than has this man on the bench. It was the rulings of Judge Dunne in both the Schmitz and the Ruff cases that so crowded the records with error as to make it imperative for the higher courts to nullify the procedures. It was Judge Dunne who, according to the sworn testimony of Reverends Kaplan and Nieto, shared in the conspiracy to give Abe Ruff immunity and later, as judge on the bench, prevented the fact of the immunity grant from being disclosed in the evidence. It was Judge Dunne by whose subserviency and cooperation Abraham Ruff was held for the better part of a year as a private prisoner, sumptuously housed and luxuriously attended, during the period when an agent of Spreckels and Heney was trying to bribe, cajole, and frighten him into giving such "evidence" as they desired. It was Judge Dunne who again and again and still again and many times again passed over the sentence of the convicted Ruff as a means of maintaining a whip in the hand of the prosecution for the intimidation and enforcement of this same wretch, Abraham Ruff. It was Judge Dunne who, when the judgment of court was set aside on account of his own ignorances and irregularities by the Court of Appeals and later by the Supreme Court of the State, burst out in vulgar explosions of rage and resentment.

Is there a man in San Francisco, having any knowledge of our recent and current history, who does not know that Judge Dunne is an intense and passionate partisan of one party as against the other party in an important social and legal conflict now pending in our courts? This question needs no answer; everybody knows that in relation to the so-called graft prosecutions long ago Judge Dunne abandoned even a pretense of the judicial character, that he is body, soul, and breeches with the prosecution. Is there a man among us who, if he were charged with a crime related in any way to the great pending controversy, would be content to have Judge Dunne sit in judgment upon his case? Is a man whom all men know to be a blind and passionate partisan fit to preside in matters bound to come before Judge Dunne's court during the next year and a half? Questions like these need no answer.

When the special circumstances are considered and when on top of all there is scrutiny into the personal and professional qualities of the man, the impropriety of Judge Dunne's candidacy for reelection becomes open, manifest, and shameless. The man is unfit under any circumstances, because he is no lawyer, because he lacks the judicial temper and the poise of moral self-control. The man is unfit under the special circumstances because he is personally, immediately, and rancorously related to men and things bound to come before the court over which he seeks to preside. The most positive demonstration of Judge Dunne's unfitness lies in the fact of his wish to sit as a judge in matters wherein his partisanship is a public scandal.

The "Earthquake Clause" Decision.

Lawyers and courts never so command intellectual and moral respect, never so serve the public which sustains them, as when they disregard quibbles and trivialities and deal in broad spirit with the reason and the moralities of the things under their hand. The decision of the United States Court of Appeals, confirming a previous decision of the United States District Court in the matter of the "earthquake clause" in fire insurance policies, is a case in point. The court has dealt with this subject in the broadest spirit. It declares that words used in a policy of insurance must be given their common and ordinary meaning as distinguished from their technical meaning. It insists that the main intention of a policy of insurance shall have weight as against a subtle and therefore semi-fraudulent phraseology calculated and planned to mislead the insurer. This is common sense, and we are glad to be informed that it is sound law; it is in perfect moral accord with that principle of equity which insists that the prerequisite to standing in court is a clean score.

This decision practically wipes out the last defense of those dishonest insurance companies which sought by the aid of trickery in phrases to invade responsibilities in connection with the San Francisco fire of 1906. Probably the advantage to insurers will not be great in an immediate and specific sense, since the defaulting companies are mostly bankrupt as well as dishonest. The ultimate and larger value of the decision lies in the guaranty which this decision affords of the value of insurance policies in general under the direct and straightforward interpretation given them by the average insurer.

Civil Service in Practice.

We note by the daily papers that four inspectors of immigration, working on the California-Mexican border under the Chinese exclusion law, have been summarily dismissed from the service. Their names are E. Engelcke, John Canfield, B. Manning, and Embert Lee. We note further that all of these persons are listed as permanent employees of the government under the civil service law and that Engelcke, Canfield, and Manning have been under the civil service rules for a period longer than five years.

If men working under the civil service rules and with the guaranties which these rules imply may be dismissed arbitrarily, without any sort of investigation or adjudication, where is the protection, what is the good of the whole civil service business? The inspectors above named clearly have the right to be regarded innocent of misdoing until they are adjudged guilty; and as civil service employees they have the right to full investigation before dismissal. But by the action of the department they are thrown out by a mere turn of the wrist, so to speak, and are put into the position of men adjudged guilty or unfit before investigation. All this would be the worst kind of injustice under any system, and it becomes something worse in the face of the pretensions and guaranties of the civil service law.

The Argonaut knows nothing and therefore has no opinion with respect to the controversy pending in connection with the immigration service. But it does know that if the civil service rules may at any moment or in any case be suspended by an executive officer in the Department of Commerce and Labor, if men may be dismissed without inquiry and upon manifestly fraudulent pretense, then the whole civil service system is practically a nullity if not indeed a fraud.

Beginning at the Beginning.

Many persons the country over will follow with interest the effort of young Theodore Roosevelt, twenty years old, graduate of Harvard, son of a prosperous and distinguished father, to get himself going in the world. The lad has gone to work in a Connecticut factory picking wool at a wage of five dollars per week on a ten-hour working scale. The circumstance speaks well for his own hardihood and for the common sense of his father. And, let us add, it speaks well for his mother, for it is not every wife of a prosperous and distinguished husband who has the sense to consent that her boy shall begin life at the beginning.

Young Theodore's first day at the factory was an interesting one. Arriving early, he was escorted over the works by the superintendent, introduced to a bevy of stenographers who exhibited a truly feminine interest in the new apprentice, and later he was installed in a workingman's house, where he is to live as a sort of parlor boarder. He lunched with the superintendent, then, getting into working clothes, picked wool until the whistle blew. In the evening he dined with the general manager. These introductions having been gotten through with, he was presumed to be duly installed as a working apprentice.

Now the anomalies and difficulties of young Theodore's position are suggested by the experiences of his first day as we have related them. The ordinary young man who goes into a mill to pick wool at five dollars per week is not received by the superintendent, is not treated as a special guest, does not encounter the smiles of headquarters femininity, does not dine with the general manager. He takes up his work not under circumstances suggesting that he has stooped to it, but rather under the exhilaration of having found something for his hands to do. If at some future time, say after six months of faithful effort, he gets a friendly nod from the superintendent, it is a red-letter event, a circumstance suggestive of approval, of getting on in his work. It comes to him as a reward and as a stimulant. And if later he contrives to get a smile from one of the young ladies in the front office, it comes as another stimulating and inspiring circumstance, suggesting to him possibilities of which hitherto he has hardly dared to dream and supplying him with new motives to industry, self-denial and self-control. To dine with the general manager—this is a thing which comes, if it comes at all, further on in life, carrying with it a significance more profound than can easily be put into words.

Now by contrasting the case of the young man who, entering a factory, seeks to make his own way under regular and normal circumstances with that of young Theodore Roosevelt, we easily see the handicap which conditions put upon the son of the prosperous and distinguished man. Young Roosevelt has begun his work at the beginning in manly spirit, but he himself is removed by a thousand circumstances from the status of the average beginner. More will be expected from him—by his parents, by his friends, by his employers, by the public—than from the normal beginner; and at the same time he will inevitably be subject to unnumbered distractions and he will have to go forward without the aids and encouragements which come to the ordinary youth. The attentions which come to him by virtue of his parentage and connections mean nothing to him in relation to his individual career as a factory worker. He gets no inspiration, no succession of mental and moral uplifts as he goes on his way upward, because the recognitions which would have meant inspiration and uplift have come to him in advance. Another handicap, equally serious as tending to discouragement is this, namely, that young Roosevelt has at the beginning, as a free gift of the god of circumstance, all and more than the ordinary and normal youth is consciously working for or may ever reasonably hope to gain. He has fortune, social consideration, and culture, and, if he please, he may have leisure. True, there is more than these to come as the reward of work and discipline, but it is hardly within the scope of youthful wisdom to know this other than by precept. Young Roosevelt, therefore, and other sons of prosperity and social distinction, when they take up the work of life at its foundation—when they begin at the beginning—must carry a tremendous handicap as compared with the ordinary youth. Life may easily hold more for them ultimately, but in its immediate aspects they are at a disadvantage. In the early stages which lie near the beginning of industrial or business life they are bound to miss the unnumbered encouragements and aids to effort and content which come to the ambitious youth whose fortunes are all to make.

Some months ago there came into the Argonaut office a well-dressed, well-mannered, pleasant-spoken youth, the son of one of our well-known men of large fortune, seeking the opportunity to "become a journalist." His ideas as to how to go to work were vague, but he knew pretty definitely what he wanted ultimately. "How long do you think," he asked the editor, "will it take me to so qualify myself as to be able to command ten thousand dollars a year?" The editor found this question difficult to answer: he tried to explain that journalistic posts at ten thousand dollars per year are not so numerous as to crowd the market. He told the young man frankly that it would be easy to count on one's fingers all the ten-thousand-per-year editorial positions the country over, adding that the average successful working journalist at forty years of age regards himself as extremely well off if he is able to earn the one-fourth part of ten thousand per year. The ambitious visitor stood fairly aghast at the slenderness of the prospect. "Why," he said, "I have a fixed allowance of ten thousand dollars a year, and if I can't by professional industry earn an equal amount, the venture would seem to me not only useless, but ridiculous." And so it did appear; there didn't seem to be any logical reason why this youth, trained to measure values in money alone, encumbered with an allowance of ten thousand dollars per year—more than paid in advance for all he might hope to achieve in the way of mere money—should take upon himself toils and pains, with ceaseless self-denial, for the sake of earning presently a pittance, and ultimately scarcely more than a fourth of that generous sum which the god of fortune had already bestowed upon him. And yet there is today, working somewhere in San Francisco for a pittance and hoping for the future, a youth who twenty years from now will sit in a chair of editorial dignity and power as far above the mere custodian and spender of accumulated wealth in all the elements of manly character and potentiality as the stars are higher than the earth. But by what process was the youth trained to estimate things by the money standard alone to be made to know this fact? By what means was he to be impressed with the profound truth that the blessing of work lies in the doing of it, that its money reward is only incidental, casual, and minor? The editor could see no way to do it, and he did not try; but at the same time there was borne in upon him with new emphasis the lesson that large inherited wealth is truly a grievous handicap.

It is an old saw that there is no hardship like that of being born rich. It has been dinned into the ear of protesting youth from the beginning of civilization until now. It takes long years of experience with much wearisome rub of life to know its truth. But it is true all the same. Not only are the ultimate prizes of life for those who earn them, but the exhilarations of life are for those climbers-upward who start at the bottom of the ladder.

Not as Other Men.

It is an intense pleasure to watch the faltering steps of Mr. Rudolph Spreckels along the unaccustomed path of civic reform. His earlier dream of a court of virtue with himself on the judicial chair with pontifical power to bless and to ban has faded somewhat with the realization of undeviating failure all along the line, but he still feels it incumbent upon him to stand at the street corner and audibly to thank God that he is not as other men. The latest outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace that Mr. Spreckels has given us is a determination to disperse his racing stables and to retire from the turf, and his reasons—given by himself at some length—are worthy of careful attention.

Mr. Spreckels established his racing stable some years ago, and only a short while before he found vation. He supposed at the time that horse racing was a means of innocent rest and diversion besides being a useful encouragement to the breeding of good animals. That a noble sport should be tainted by commercialism and betting had never occurred to him, and he had won a great many races before it dawned upon him that certain evil persons were actually wagering money upon the results and that there were even those who made a living by the nefarious practices of the betting ring. It can be imagined with what a painful shock this information came to Mr. Spreckels. He, a leader in the cause of civic virtue, a bright and shining light in the ranks of reform, had inadvertently lent himself to a pernicious industry and to the possible corruption of youth. Those who should have cherished and preserved the purity of the race-track, a purity still unsullied and untarnished two short years ago, had actually allowed themselves to reap "material temporary gain" from the turf, in other words had become the victims of mammon if not the children of unrighteousness. The love of money, reflected Mr. Spreckels, is the root of all evil, and it should never be said that he, a leader in Israel, had encouraged so fatal a proclivity in others.

Therefore Mr. Spreckels's horses are on the market. He would like it to be understood that they are good horses, and the curious can easily ascertain the number of sinful races in which they have been respectively successful. Two of them, we are honestly warned, have not yet been fully tested and their money-earning capacities are therefore still uncertain. It would be well for their future owners to lay their bets with caution. But the rest of them have been fairly successful and their records will prove a reliable guide to the odds that should be laid on their future performances. Mr. Spreckels himself "can not conscientiously continue to participate in the sport," but if there are those whose moral development is still in the kindergarten stage—now is their chance to get on to a good thing.

Editorial Notes.

The Reverend W. Kingscote Greenland has interested, if not pleased, London by declaring that city to be the wickedest community in the world. This is chiefly interesting elsewhere because every other city on the face of the round earth is periodically told the same thing by some preacher eager to see his name in the papers and get himself more or less talked about. Of course London is no more wicked than it has always been—probably, indeed, like the rest of the world London gets better as time goes on. The cold truth is that the Reverend Greenland is seeking to make a stir in the world, and has fallen upon that outworn but none the less effective trick of decrying the morals of a city for the sake of arousing resentment and stirring up champions in rebuttal. Perhaps this device is newer in England than in America. It has been played so very often in every town, great and small, in this country that nobody takes serious notice of it. Those who really know anything about the world know that cities are pretty much alike, that good and bad is mingled in their make-up. They know that when a preacher rises in the pulpit to decry the morals of a whole community, he is merely striving for notoriety, that he is commonly a mountebank and invariably a chump.

Mr. Heney, man of delicate sensibilities and of punctilious habit that he is, thinks that the newspapers should be estopped from expressing opinions in matters pending before the court. This is both naive and charming; and the worth of it lies scarcely more in the precept enunciated by Mr. Heney than in the fine example embodied in his own manners. The suggestion comes with especial emphasis and value from one whose own habit of expression is unvaryingly controlled by the nicest feeling and the most scrupulous reserve.

Mr. Rudolph Spreckels is hurrying East to confer with the President and others. His precise purpose has not been given to the public, but probably it is to inaugurate a procedure under which an immunity bath after the San Francisco fashion shall be given to Senator Foraker, Governor Haskell, General du Pont, Senator Bailey, and others caught in the act, in order that the entire powers of moral correction may be centred upon that bold and bad "higher-up," Mr. Archbold.

Mr. Roosevelt has sent a representative all the way from Washington to San Francisco to inform the Trans-Mississippi Congress that "I believe in fair play." All of which would be important if it were true. The President no doubt believes in fair play as an abstract proposition, but in practice he always believes in the infallible wisdom of some personal friend and then, without other knowledge of the matter in question, puts the powers of the presidential office behind the theories thus imbibed. This may be fair play from the rip-snort, slap-dash standpoint, but not uncommonly it is foul play from the standpoint of reason, equity, and law.

CAMPAIGN TOPICS.

If there is to be a continuation of the present process of elimination, the field of politics will be turned into a dreary and a silent desert. It is now becoming fairly understood that none but the pure in heart can be allowed to hasten the virtuous steps of the rival presidential candidates, and already there is a dreary monotony in the successive and ominous splashes which announce that still another political warrior has walked the plank and gone down to eternal oblivion. A perfect reign of terror has been declared in political circles and no one knows where the next blow will fall. There is every reason to believe that the casualty list is by no means complete, as Mr. Hearst's friends say that he has a safe deposit box still fairly full of "incriminating letters" calculated to keep the pot boiling until election day, and that he promises to eclipse all previous efforts in a final blaze of denunciation that will simply wither the Republican and the Democratic parties out of existence.

In the meantime Governor Haskell quits the Democratic stage, but not with that spirit of chastened resignation that we should like to see. Indeed, Governor Haskell is very angry, especially as his abusive letter to the President remains unanswered. Interviewed at Guthrie, Oklahoma, Mr. Haskell breathed threats and fury against Mr. Hearst, and finished up by saying that he would forthwith bring an action for libel against him. It is to be hoped that he will do so, as we all know that when thieves fall out honest men come by their own. Mr. Hearst and Mr. Haskell must have a lot of private information about each other, and under the impetus of a libel suit some of it may come to light. But Mr. Haskell will not be satisfied with one victim. He sees red and thirsts for blood, and so his lawyers have been instructed to go into the whole matter and bring suits against every one who is suitable. Now really Mr. Haskell should have been in a better temper on arrival at Guthrie, seeing that a company of militia were at the station to meet him. But "his face failed to brighten" even with such a stimulus as this and his "usual smile" had worn right off.

General T. Coleman du Pont is similarly dissatisfied at his deposition as the head of the Speakers' Bureau of the Republican National Committee. As organizer of the Powder Trust he feels that it belonged to the eternal fitness of things that to him should fall the duty of providing the necessary oratorical ammunition with which to blow up the Democratic fortifications. That he happened to belong to an organization "in restraint of trade" against which the Republican artillery had been arrayed was his misfortune rather than his fault, and his friends in Delaware feel that he has been hardly used. The gallant general is conscious of his own rectitude, like the rest of us, and he does not quite realize that political officials nowadays must be not only innocent, but, like Caesar's wife, above suspicion. We are all sorry to see General du Pont of the Powder Trust thus forced to consume his own smoke, but immaculate purity demands that this particular gun be unloaded.

Then again there is Senator Bailey. As we clasp the senator's hand for the last time we feel the stirrings of an unmanly emotion. Better that we should sit forever among the impenitent than that we should endure such pangs as this. The senator has sold his stock farm in Texas as well as his "other interests" and will live henceforth in Washington or New York. He will quit politics for law and we rejoice to hear that already he has received several good offers. A report from Gainesville says:

While satisfied that he fully established his innocence of the false and calumnious accusations made against him, Senator Bailey is sensitive and feels that his own State did not treat him with the respect due one who had labored and fought so hard for Texas.

But even affliction has its uses. But for this heart-breaking separation we might never have known that Senator Bailey was sensitive. Texas has been ungrateful, and ingratitude is the hardest blow that noble minds can hear. But Senator Bailey may rest assured that the appreciation of the nation will follow him to his retirement and will take good care that he stays there.

But what about Senator Depew? With that innate worth that belongs to true greatness the senator denies the soft impeachment that be is the "greatest Standard Oil agent in the Senate." He would like to unveil his heart before us, but unfortunately his memory has become so treacherous that he simply can not rely upon it. He has vague recollections of a visit from constituents in relation to some oil company and of introductions to government officials, but really the senator's mind has been so occupied with higher things that the details of these sordid transactions have momentarily escaped him. Anyway, it's of no consequence.

The reputable press seems to be mildly amused by all this ugly business. The New York Evening Post asks who will be left to manage the campaign. "For our part we know of no one really good enough, since we do not live in the days of St. Francis or St. Elizabeth." The Springfield Republican speaks of "the degrading character of this form of party warfare upon its victims, the participants, and the people who watch the thrust and the stabbing." The Springfield Republican is one of the few newspapers that look upon this whole ugly business from the standpoint of public morality, but it finds some consolation in the fact that "Mr. Taft has left the muckraking to his exalted chief."

The New York Times thinks that there are those even outside of the madhouse who believe that the actors in this affair are making a singular spectacle of themselves. They wonder "how these controversies over treasurers and chairmen of speaking committees help the people to a clear understanding of the respective rights of Mr. Taft and Mr. Bryan."

The story comes from the Democratic national headquarters that if elected Mr. Bryan will appoint Judge George Gray of the Federal Circuit Court to the Supreme Bench in place of Chief Justice Fuller. No doubt Mr. Bryan will approve of this story, as it conveys the impression of moderation and conservatism, which are Mr. Bryan's best cards at the present moment.

But Judge Gray will not meet with approval from the radicals, who by no means like his recent opinion that the commodity clause of the Hepburn rate law was unconstitutional. Judge Gray said:

If the enactment in question be warranted by the commerce clause of the Constitution, it is hard to see what bounds may be set to the exercise of that power.

Mr. Bryan may be willing to allow the rumor that he will appoint Judge Gray to go uncontradicted for the sake of its effect upon conservatism, but he certainly can not approve of the decision in question.

The Boston Advertiser tells a story that may as well be taken cum grano salis. The Advertiser says:

One of the best posted Democratic politicians of this city a man who has no special interest in the presidential election, has brought back from New York a very strange story, after talking politics with his friends in Tammany Hall. It is to the effect that a "trade" has been made, by which Chanler is to be elected governor, and Taft is to carry the State. The "trade," of course, is a supposed secret between some prominent men in the Republican machine and Tammany Hall. It is inferred that the Republican machine is to allow a large number of votes to go to Chanler, while certain strong Democratic districts are to develop a striking hostility to Bryan on election day. How, when, and where the "deal" was made, nobody in Boston pretends to know; but the story has become general property in Democratic circles here and is implicitly believed. Members of the "inner circle" have been advised to let all the money they can raise on the two propositions—the election of Chanler as governor, and the election of Taft electors on the presidential ticket. There is no doubt that the men who tell the story believe it absolutely.

There is nothing actually impossible in this. Hughes is one of the best hated as well as the best liked men in New York. The administration would not be likely to make trouble in this event, as the President is more interested in the fate of Mr. Taft than in that of Mr. Hughes, whose genuflections to the White House have never been very pronounced. It is said that the story is implicitly believed by the medicine men of Tammany, who have told it in confidence to their Democratic friends from Massachusetts. The Advertiser continues:

If any such deal has been made or is contemplated, it may be taken for granted that Governor Hughes is well informed as to the plot. But his knowledge has not interfered with his own plans for helping on the national campaign. Even if the story were not strictly true, it is unquestionable that the governor is not likely to have an easy road to reelection. Therefore it required some spirit of self-sacrifice on the part of the New York governor to agree to absent himself from New York, to speak for the national ticket, when his own lieutenants were warning him that only by a spirited and constant campaign throughout the State could he hope to carry the election. Whether the State machine has or has not made a "deal" to elect Chanler, it is certain that many of the machine leaders will be delighted if Hughes fails of a reelection. The instinct of self-preservation would naturally lead a more selfish man to remain at home and to utilize every day until election day to make votes for himself. But Governor Hughes is a loyal Republican. He honestly considers it far more important to the country that Taft should be elected than that he himself should remain at Albany for another term. The loyal Republicans and the honest Democrats of New York State have their own duty at this juncture of affairs. No vote that can be had for Hughes should be lost.

But how about the people?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Prohibition in Maine.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., September 29, 1908.

EDITOR ARGONAUT:—Usually the Argonaut is fair and square in its editorials, but in your issue of the 5th instant you are hardly fair toward the State of Maine in your article on prohibition. The fact is the Maine law (so called) is as well enforced as any law in the State. There are people that steal everywhere. If a person needs liquor, it can be obtained legally. When the writer of the above was a boy there were few places of business (country stores, etc.), public houses, etc., that did not sell ardent spirits. I have seen a company of militia drawn in line and with one or two exceptions all took their "flip." In that village at that time there were seven or eight country stores and three taverns, and with the exception of one store all sold liquor. The law is so seldom broken there now that I have known people addicted to the drink habit to move there to get out of temptation. Then it was a place of 200 or 300 inhabitants, now 3000 or more.

The first Maine law (Neal Dow's) was passed in 1846. The people were unprepared for it, and after a short trial it was repealed. A short history of its passage may be interesting to you and your readers. Neal Dow was a Whig member (one of few in the State) from Portland. He presented the largest petition in favor of the law that had up to that time ever been presented to the legislature of the State. The legislature was strongly Democratic. The house playfully passed the act nearly unanimously and sent it to the senate. That body said, "Governor Hubbard likes his 'tod'; let us pass it. He will veto it." The governor said there had never been a measure come to him with such unanimity behind it, and approved it. It made a temperance man of him, and in 1851 he helped work for the Maine law, which is now part of the Constitution.

You are right as to the course of the dealers. There is a dealer of my acquaintance here that takes the same view. He says, "We should keep out of politics." Let them do it and they will fare better. HENRY HATCH.

The house shown to tourists as the ancient palace of the Capulets at Verona, which is associated with the story of Romeo and Juliet, has been completely destroyed by fire.

A NEW GAMBLING SYSTEM.

Lord Rosslyn and Sir Hiram Maxim Settle a Dispute with a Roulette Wheel.

I wonder if it would be possible to convince the "system" gambler of the folly of his course, even though one rose from the dead to do it. Presumably not, or long ere this the gambler would have thrown himself upon the bosom of pure chance and discarded the calculations and the methods that never yet led to anything but ruin.

This reflection, for which no claim of originality is made and which is therefore uncopyrighted, is elicited by the contest between Sir Hiram Maxim and the Earl of Rosslyn, a contest that already bids fair to culminate in the overthrow of the earl and the triumph of the knight. It need hardly be said that Sir Hiram was the advocate of a sober and mathematical common sense. He is no gambler, and indeed, holding the view that he does, he could hardly be so inconsistent as to woo the goddess of the green tables at Monte Carlo, a goddess who is so ungoddesslike as always to load the dice against her victims.

The dispute arose in this way. Lord Rosslyn maintained that it was possible to break the bank at Monte Carlo by means of a system elaborated with great care and in which he had the fullest confidence. Now, it would be unfair to call Lord Rosslyn a gambler, for that seems to imply a moral turpitude of which the noble earl is not guilty. Let us say, then, that Lord Rosslyn has "had experience," while expressing the hope that his contest with Sir Hiram Maxim may prevent the experiences yet to come from being disastrous. On the other hand, Sir Hiram maintained that the roulette wheel at Monte Carlo is so arranged that no matter where the money is placed the bank makes its percentage and that this percentage is a fixed quantity, "quite irrespective of what system is played or whether no system is played; it is always the same for the bank." When the contest was first started on a roulette wheel belonging to Sir Hiram and with imitation money and counters, Sir Hiram was quite emphatic in his certainty that Lord Rosslyn must lose. He admitted that his system was an ingenious one and that he would no doubt get lots of fun from it at Monte Carlo. But he would get nothing but fun, and his money would go inevitably to the bank, as of yore. Sir Hiram added: "I do not gamble personally. It is simply to me a matter of mathematics. Many people who talk about roulette do not know what it means. For instance, one man I know has what he thinks is an infallible 'system.' Why, the run that he counts on could only occur, by the law of probability, once in 2,147,483,648 times. He would have to wait more than twenty years for a chance! There are some possibilities which by geometrical progression only come once in 36,028,797,018,963,968 times. And then they talk of infallible systems! Lord Rosslyn and I, nevertheless, are going to do what has never been done before. The play will be carried out exactly as if real money were at stake, and I am arranging for a clear, infallible record to be taken of each spin. That will be done by a little system of my own, only it is a system on entirely a different subject from Lord Rosslyn's."

The contest took place in a private room in Piccadilly. No one was present except the gladiators and the clerks. The nominal capital of both was £10,000, and the maximum stake allowed £240, as at Monte Carlo. The play continued for six hours a day and the result of every spin was duly recorded. Sir Hiram worked the wheel and spun it until his arm ached, while Lord Rosslyn worked mysterious calculations in thousands of francs, smoked cigarettes continuously, and often asked for a few minutes' delay to complete his array of figures. Meanwhile the croupier for the bank and the stakeholder for Lord Rosslyn passed small fortunes of imitation money to each other with just as much gravity as though they were handling gold and bank notes.

The results day by day were just as might have been expected in any game of chance played without a system and where there is a percentage in favor of the bank. Sometimes Sir Hiram was the winner and sometimes Lord Rosslyn. On Wednesday, for instance, Lord Rosslyn started the day under a burden of 12,315 francs to the bad and during the morning he lost a further sum of 21,370 francs. Then there was a run on the red which came to his relief just as he was in danger of reaching the maximum stakes. This cleared off all his losses and left him 37,080 francs to the good since the start of the tournament. Sir Hiram Maxim, commenting on this sudden rally for the system, said: "Up to two o'clock today Lord Rosslyn appeared to be playing a system by which he had been a steady loser of about £1200. Then he suddenly changed. The stakes up to then amounted to £96. These he suddenly doubled to £192 each coup. By the greatest good luck, while playing on the red as against black, with the stakes still at £192, eighteen more reds than blacks turned up in the course of a few minutes, thus winning over £3200 in a very short period by 'flat' and not progressive coups, such as I have always understood the Rosslyn system to be."

The feature of the system is progressive stakes. Lord Rosslyn had a unit of five francs and he began his play with two units. The number of units staked varied with his success. He figured out each coup and announced each time the amount of the stake and the color he desired to back. He played only upon the even-money chances of black and red. Sir Hiram, on the other hand, played upon the percentage of odds given to the bank by "zero" turning up, and by the fixing of the maximum stake.

There is no need to record the varying fortunes of this singular contest, but the net result is, of course, a foregone conclusion, and it will be upon the side of mathematics. At the end of the play the bank will be the winner, as it always is and always must be. This, of course, by no means implies that to win at Monte Carlo is impossible, inasmuch as a great many people do win who have the sense to stop in time. It will only prove that the percentage in favor of the bank is invincible and that it must prevail at the end of any sufficiently long period of time.

The number of system players will not, of course, be reduced by a single unit, because a certain element of superstition enters into nearly all of them, and superstition is proof against either calculation or demonstration. But the contest is none the less an interesting one, and it may be hoped that Lord Rosslyn will remember its results to his benefit.

LONDON, September 25, 1908.

FROM ELDER FRENCH POETS.

English Version of Eighteenth Century French Verse by General E. L. Huggins.

YOU HAD MY WHOLE HEART.

Vous aviez mon cœur, moi, j'avais le vôtre,
Un cœur pour un cœur, bonheur pour bonheur.

You had my whole heart,
I thought I had thine,
No beguiling or art,
A heart for a heart.

Your heart is returned,
But alas! where is mine?
Your heart is returned,
But mine you have spurned.

The leaf and the bloom
And the fruit of the same,
Leaf color and bloom,
Sweet flower and perfume.

O what hast thou done?
My sovereign supreme
O what hast thou done?
To shame the fair sun.

An orphan bereft
Of mother and home,
An orphan bereft
With my grief I am left.

Deserted, alone,
Through the wide world to roam,
Deserted, alone,
But heaven hears my moan.

One day you will muse
Broken-hearted and old,
One day you will muse
On the love you refuse.

You will seek me one day,
But will not behold,
You will call me one day,
I shall not obey.

You will come to my door
With penitent head,
A friend, as of yore,
You will knock at my door.

It will coldly be said,
She is gone, she is dead,
Her spirit has fled
Will coldly be said.

—Desbordes-Valmore.

'TWIXT SLEEP AND WAKING.

Lying alone last night 'twixt sleep and waking,
My cruel mistress passed with queenly tread,
With smile of cold disdain and haughty head,
And scornful eyes, whereat my heart was breaking;
The vision was so true in all its seeming,
I scarcely could believe that I was dreaming.

But when she came and o'er me lowly bending
Upon me rained the kisses of her mouth,
Laden with all the perfume of the South,
Murmuring the while of blisses never ending
And in her eyes I saw the love-light gleaming,
Ah! then I knew that I was only dreaming.

—After Prosper Blanchemain.

THE ROSES OF SAADI.

As I passed through the Valley of Roses today,
I gathered the fairest and freshest for thee,
But my robes were so full that the knots burst away
And all my sweet roses fell into the sea.

A wave slowly bore them away from my sight,
Flaming forth like a cloud-billow rosy and red,
But on me you may breathe all their fragrance tonight,
For my robes are still sweet with the perfume they shed.

—Desbordes-Valmore.

THE ROSE.

Lorsque Venus, sortant du sein des mers,
Sourit aux dieux charmés de sa présence,
Un nouveau jour claire l'univers;
Dans ce moment la rose prit naissance.

The blushing wave bloomed into wondrous flower,
And rosy light burst forth, unknown till then,
When Aphrodite dawned on gods and men;
Thy birth, O Rose, was in that mystic hour,
Transcendent Rose, pride of the Paphian bower,
And sweet consoler of the thorny glen,
What virgin charms thy lily illumines, when
Upon the virgin heart Love seals his power.

Fair as the lily was the rose's breast:
But when the generous vine upon it bled,
Swift blushes o'er its swelling beauties spread,
Till every leaf the tender flame confessed;
While from thy wakened heart, O queenly Rose,
Amrosial incense on the air arose.

—De Parny.

Passengers by the transiberian express now reach Pekin from London in sixteen days, the North Chinese Railway having been induced to run the trains by night as well as by day.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

The Duke of Argyll has hurt the feelings of the Highlanders by saying that no man over sixty should appear in the kilts.

Bliss Perry, professor of literature at Harvard and editor of the Atlantic Monthly, might have been president of Smith College, but was not favorably impressed by the prospect.

John M. Ward was a star baseball player with the New York club twenty years ago. Now he plays golf and is one of sixteen players who will compete for the amateur championship, with a good chance of capturing the national title.

Robert W. Golet of New York has purchased of the Marquis de Goev for $300,000 the famous Sandri-court estate near Paris. The chateau is surrounded by a thousand acres of land and that extent will be doubled by Mr. Golet, purchasing from an adjoining property.

Mr. and Mrs. Vere Goldthwaite of Boston have just returned from Europe to permit Mrs. Goldthwaite, formerly Ellen Beach Yaw, to sing at the annual Maine festival. The diva has been offered by Mr. Conried, it is said, a three years' engagement at the Imperial Opera in Vienna.

Frank S. Hastings, executor of the estate of the late President Cleveland, has become a national figure with remarkable celerity. His prominence is due chiefly to his lack of knowledge concerning the letter ascribed to Mr. Cleveland and recently sold to a syndicate of Eastern newspapers by a magazine writer.

The Reverend Gertrude von Petzold, pastor of the Free Christian Church of Leicester, England, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Unitarian Church of Streator, Illinois. She is the first woman preacher appointed to any church in Great Britain, and was the first woman minister to officiate at a marriage in the country.

Miss Giulia Strakosch, who has recently been seen in musical comedy in New York, is the daughter of Max Strakosch, who first introduced grand opera in this country, and a niece of Patti. She was born in Austria and for the last three years has been doing concert work in England. She will begin an engagement in Brussels next January.

Jean Jaurès, one of the most conspicuous figures in French public life, has been a member of the Chamber of Deputies since 1885. He was born at Castres in 1859, and for some time taught philosophy at Albi and Toulouse. He edits a paper entitled La Petite République. He is the leader of the Socialist party in France and the author of a number of works on Socialism.

President Schurman has sounded the death knell of rushing at Cornell. Fearful lest the under class men might break out before college opened, he cut short his vacation. Consultations with leading upper class men were held, and as a result the president announced that rushing is at an end. He calls it a "brutish exhibition" and refers to the number of accidents at other colleges this year.

Chester S. Lord has been managing editor of the New York Sun for twenty-eight years. He joined the paper in 1872 as a reporter and for seventeen years was under Charles A. Dana and enjoyed his confidence to the end. Mr. Lord has served seven years, as a member of the board of regents of the University of the State of New York. He has two sons, both of whom are connected with the Sun.

Dr. Hall-Edwards of Birmingham, England, has devoted the past ten years to studies and experiments with the X rays, as a result of which his hands became affected and both have been amputated. In spite of the cost to him Dr. Hall-Edwards is still enthusiastic in his devotion to the science of radiography and will continue his work, though of course he will have to depend largely on his assistants.

The Emperor of Germany, to the indignation and dismay of tourists, has spread in large letters across the face of the North Cape, where thousands go to behold the Midnight Sun, the name of the royal yacht Hohenzollern. Steamship companies have followed his example, and certain manufacturing concerns, so that there is danger that the magnificent, monumentally impressive forehead of a continent may become simply the biggest billboard in the world, a colossal reproduction of the flamboyant and garish announcement of the side show of a country circus.

Lieutenant Graetz started from Dar-es-Salaam, the capital of German East Africa, more than a year ago to cross Africa in his automobile. He has not yet reached the Atlantic in German Southwest Africa, but he has made two-thirds of the journey, and at last accounts he hoped to accomplish his purpose before the end of this year. He has spent much of the time waiting for months at one place or another in the wilderness to receive from Europe duplicate parts of his machine that had broken down. Then he has been detained for weeks on the banks of rivers waiting for the water to fall so that he might cross, and his journey has been greatly lengthened by his efforts to circumvent obstructions in the way. He has often been compelled to tramp miles ahead to decide upon the best route. He has climbed mountains to spy out the lay of the land. He has bridged rivers and built corduroy roads across swamps.

THE VIGILANTES' GRAND INQUEST.

By Jerome A. Hart.

XXXIV.

In the executive committee's room at Fort Vigilant were gathered together some members of that body. On the platform were Chairman Carleton, Secretary Bascom, and Judge-Advocate Truax. Behind them rose a musket-rack, fitting background for so stern a tribunal. They were engaged in informal discussion, and Carleton was speaking of Lupkins.

"You will be gratified to hear," said he, "that Lupkins is at last out of danger. The wound from Tower's knife was supposed to be mortal, but, by the most sedulous care, our surgeons and physicians have succeeded in pulling him through."

"I hear that Lupkins and his people have not acted very well," remarked Carwell. "Is that true?"

"It is true. Lupkins sent his women folks to see Tower's friends with a money proposition; it would seem as if he had offered to give any testimony that would help Tower out in case of a trial."

"Do you mean a regular trial before the usual tribunals, or before the committee?" asked Carwell.

"Before the ordinary tribunals. However, I don't believe the offer will amount to much. If Lupkins stirs up any trouble when he gets well, we'll deport him."

"Is the excitement abating among Tower's friends?" inquired Judge Truax.

"No. If anything it has increased, I am sorry to say. Now that Lupkins is out of danger, they claim that there is no excuse for Tower's detention in Fort Vigilant. They are moving heaven and earth to get a writ of habeas corpus from a Federal judge, hoping to invade this building with the United States marshal's forces. They applied to Judge Fox, but he refused to grant the writ—I don't know on what ground."

"I heard that he refused because he didn't want to stir up trouble," chuckled Bascom.

A grim smile ran around the executive circle.

"That's good, but such a reason would scarcely be advanced by so keen-witted a man as Fox," remarked Truax. "As a matter of fact, I believe he alleged there was no Federal question involved in Tower's detention. Besides, it is the practice of Federal judges to refuse writs of habeas corpus for the relief of prisoners in the custody of the State until the petitioners shall have exhausted all means in the State courts."

"That is probably the correct explanation," observed Carleton. "But some other Federal judge, who does not split hairs so skillfully as Fox, might be induced to grant the writ. Then we would find ourselves in a direct clash with the Federal power."

"That would be bad!" exclaimed Bascom. "When Admiral Farquhar withdrew from the conference at the governor's rooms he was good and mad. Although at first he jumped on Captain Shotwell, when he left he seemed inclined to back him up."

"Very true," agreed Truax. "Even if Farquhar should not side with Shotwell, the captain declares that he is not under Farquhar's command, not being in waters circumjacent to the navy yard. He still threatens to open fire on this building if Tower's life is in danger."

"And Tower's friends are more active than ever," said Carwell. "During the last few days some mysterious tenants have leased the top floor of the building opposite. It is rumored that Tower's friends intend to post sharpshooters in that building, and to pick off our executioners if a scaffold is erected in the street."

"It would be easy to thwart that attempt by executing Tower inside of the building," replied Bascom.

"As to Shotwell's ship taking position where he can command this fort," remarked the chairman, "I look upon that as a bluff. I don't think he will begin any cannonade. But how about General Herman? He is threatening to seize the battery of guns now in front of the Federal Marine Hospital. He boasts that from the top of that hill he can 'plunk' Fort Vigilant without injury to the surrounding buildings."

"Herman won't do it," said Bascom briefly. "He is a good fighter, but he talks too much. He will threaten, but Governor Jackson will call him down."

"Well, if he only threatens this artillery practice, well and good," said Carleton, "but I don't want him to begin, for he is an old artillery officer."

"What I fear is not the State but the Federal power," interposed Truax. "The country at large is getting restless. Tower's old State, Texas, has taken action; the telegraphic dispatches say that the senator from Texas arose in the Senate yesterday and asked for information from the Departments of Justice, of War, and of the Navy concerning the 'rebellion' reported to exist in this State."

"Yes, and it was at the request of the Texas legislature that he put this question," added Carleton.

"Another disagreeable phase of our task is this—civil suits are to be feared," said Truax. "The Committee of Vigilance has now executed four murderers, and banished twelve other criminals. The dead men don't count for much, but the live ones may give us trouble. Daily they are arriving at distant cities, and they are threatening to bring civil suits for damages in the Federal courts against us as individuals."

A marked uneasiness at once became evident in the executive committee. They were all imperiling their lives, but apparently they had not thought of danger to their property. So oddly are men constituted that this danger seemed to press upon them more than bodily peril.

After some moments of silence, Bascom expressed their feeling. "I don't mind threats against my life," said he, "I hear of them daily. I am told that the Burke fire company gang threaten to kill me some night on my way home past their engine-house, but I have paid no attention to their yelping. Still I confess I don't like these threats of civil suits. It is bad enough to be killed in the performance of a public duty, but it is worse to have your estate mulcted by judgments which would leave your family destitute."

The men in the executive circle seemed tacitly to agree that Bascom had expressed their views. There was an awkward pause, which was broken at last by Carleton, who made haste to change the subject.

"This Mulligan suicide is a bad business," said he. "It is causing much harsh criticism of the committee."

"I hear there are not wanting those who are bringing charges of secret assassination against us," added Carwell.

"It would be well to have the exact facts prepared and printed in the Argus, I think," said Carleton.

"I will attend to the matter," volunteered Bascom.

"Apropos of the Argus," said Truax, "it is reported that Burke is paying Newton of the Clarion three hundred dollars a week to keep up a crusade against this committee."

"If Burke doesn't look out," cried Carwell threateningly, "he'll find that this committee will put him where he won't be able to subsidize newspapers."

"Burke isn't the only man paying money to anti-Vigilante sheets," said Carleton, meaningly. "I suspect Wyley also of keeping up this newspaper howl against us. He and Burke are bitter enemies politically, but they are both enemies of this committee."

"All the same, I notice that they are both prudent enough to stay away from this town," sneered Bascom. "Wyley is down in the southern counties, and Burke keeps out of sight at Sacrosanto."

"Wyley may have Federal reasons for keeping away from here," commented Truax. "He is the President's trusted representative, and it may be that he wishes to dodge appeals urging intervention of the Federal power. But he need have no fear of the President intervening."

"Why not?" asked Carwell.

"We are too near the election of delegates to the national convention," replied Truax significantly. "The President wants to succeed himself."

The small group had been gradually increasing as the members of the executive committee arrived by ones and twos, and at last Carleton seized his gavel.

"Gentlemen," he began, "I see that the hour has arrived for our regular meeting. The committee will please come to order."

When the roll was called and the minutes read, the chairman asked: "Mr. Secretary, have you any communications?"

"Yes," said the secretary, "I hold here two communications from Vigilantes 387 and 403, about pistols lost in the scuffle over the arrest of Tower near the militia armory. Jesse Seeligsohn—that is No. 387—claims $36 for a ten-inch Colt's revolver. William Grimm—No. 403—claims $20 for a pepper-box revolver. Both claim that their pistols were wrested from their hands in the affair."

"Is there any objection?" asked the chairman. "I hear none, and the claims will therefore be allowed and paid."

"I have here a communication," said the secretary, "which accompanied the banner hanging on the wall back of the chairman."

The eyes of the committee turned toward the banner of blue silk bordered with oak, olive, and fig leaves.

"As you will observe," continued the secretary, "the decorative border is emblematic of strength, peace, and plenty. And the inscription reads: To the Vigilance Committee of this city for protecting the lives and property of the citizens and residents. Presented to the Vigilance Committee by the ladies of All Saints' Parish as a testimonial of their approbation. Da right and fear not."

The secretary paused for a moment, and then went on:

"I'm not very strong on any kind of writing except business letters, so I asked Vigilante 109 to get up something for me in the society letter line."

"If No. 109 has prepared his letter of acknowledgment, probably the committee would like to hear it," said the chairman, smiling.

Vigilante Jennings arose in his place and read with much elocutionary effect:

"To the ladies of All Saints' Parish—This gift comes with particular appropriateness from the ladies. It is true that the strong man with loaded revolver in his hip pocket and bowie-knife concealed in his coat might defy the attacks of the thieves and thugs who infest our city. But it is different with weak and defenseless woman. She sits patiently at home awaiting her husband's return from his business. At every noise about the house she fears a burglar or a robber. If he is delayed, a thousand fears of murder and pillage come upon her heart and fill her with anguish and dismay. Such was the condition of our city. But now we live in peace. We sit beneath our vine and fig-tree safe and secure, and woman's heart feels greater security than is felt by strong men. The Committee of Vigilance accepts this gift, and will always heed and remember the motto it bears—Do right and fear not. And we trust that the ladies of All Saints' Parish and all the ladies of our city may rest convinced that the Committee of Vigilance will never cease to watch out sedulously for the protection of their lives and property.

Far the Committee of Vigilance.

By Sixty-Six, Secretary."

Amid the applause of the committee, Vigilante Jennings resumed his seat.

"Has the obnoxious paragraph in the report of the grand jury been submitted to the judge-advocate, Mr. Secretary?" asked the chairman.

"Yes," replied the secretary. "The judge-advocate has placed the revised report in my hands. I will omit the unobjectionable portion of the report, which is largely routine in its nature. The paragraph to which our committee objected was that speaking in terms of fulsome praise of the 'efficient and prompt action of the Honorable Court of Sessions in checking the progress of crime.' Likewise a paragraph which said 'The courts are the only lawful and constitutional tribunals to which the people can look for support, and for the vindication of their rights.' These and other objectionable phrases have been called to the attention of the grand jury by the judge-advocate, and as a result that body has agreed to strike them out. The judge-advocate has prepared the following paragraph which will take the place of the obnoxious sentences:

"History proves that Americans are a law-abiding people. But when they cease to have confidence in their courts they will have their rights and property protected by tribunals of their own establishing until such time as the locus can be executed in their spirit and their letter by the tribunals established by constitutional authority."

"As there is no objection," said the chairman, "the revised document will be sent to the grand jury, which will then be permitted to submit its report as revised by our judge-advocate."

"The grand jury report will probably be published tomorrow evening by the daily press," interrupted Carwell. "May I suggest that the judge-advocate prepare an editorial to pave the way for it, to appear in tomorrow morning's Argus."

"It has already been done," replied the chairman. "The secretary will please read."

The secretary arose and read:

"The enemies of the Committee of Vigilance have been using certain unscrupulous newspapers to give publicity to their slanders. The mere cowardly among them, who dare not use the local journals, have vented their malice in Atlantic sheets in order, like dastards, to disperse their poison without danger of publicly branding them with the infamous title of liar. Their scurrilous libels have been uttered loudly and confidently in bar-rooms and other public places. Even the sanctity of our courts has been violated by the scandalous ravings of alleged lawyers against the committee. But the Vigilance Committee has outlived this compaign of malicious invective. The citizens are delighted with the daily decrease of crime. Yet it is time that these volleys of vile missiles from a subsidized press should end. These miserable penny-a-liners must stop. Such assaults from the press by every pitiful dobsier who handles a pen, and who thinks he has a right to bespotter the committee with the slime of his evil imagination, will not be borne."

"This editorial," said the judge-advocate rising, "is to appear in tomorrow's Argus. I may add, however, that not only the Atlantic sheets, but even more distant journals are now being utilized to slander us. In the London Times, its correspondent here recently printed the following statement concerning us:

"The moral condition of the city is apparently declining from year to year. Its imperfect courts have now given way to a deliberate suppression of the law. This and the constant recurrence of incendiarism impels one to believe in the utter lawlessness of the population. The number of general conflagrations is extraordinary. There is no parallel in history to the combustibility of this city. Although it is only a few years old, it has been six times destroyed by fire. It has twice suffered grievously from inundations. Now a wild and impulsive process of execution by mob violence has been transformed into a regular tribunal outside the law. What if the jails were defective, the police remiss, and the ossizes remote? In a community pretending to any civilization the exertions of the citizens should have been turned to remedying these deficiencies rather than destroying them. No colony can be so formidable as the substitution of mob force for law."

The reading of this article from the London Times was received with a general murmur of indignation.

"Have you prepared any reply to this vicious attack?" asked the chairman.

"I have prepared a reply which I am about to forward, hoping that it will be printed," replied the judge-advocate. "I will read you a few lines. After some introductory remarks, I go on to say:

"The action of the Vigilance Committee was actuated by high moral ideas. The committee has not only arrested crime, but it has saved life and stimulated honest industry. As for the statement made by the Times, that this city has been twice inundated, it is radically in error. The city never has been inundated even once. Furthermore, we beg to point out to the London Times that our city would be impossible of inundation. It is not situated on any river, and although it is on a bay into which several rivers pour, yet such is the size of this harbor, and so great is the enormous gateway which leads from it to the ocean, that even during the greatest floods there is no appreciable elevation of the bay level. The city is situated on many hills, some of them several hundred feet high. Even the lowest part of the water front has never been inundated at any time within the memory of man. These slanders on our city must have been brought to the notice of the Times by evil-minded persons. Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus. And as this slander concerning inundations is utterly and unqualifiedly false, so are all the other statements in the paragraph referred to."

"Mr. Chairman," said Carwell rising, "in view of the numerous statements to our prejudice appearing in the Atlantic and European papers, as well as in the vile subsidized sheets here at home, I move that a vote of thanks be tendered to our judge-advocate for his able refutation of these slanders."

The resolution having been duly passed, the chairman asked:

"Mr. Secretary, is there any further business before the committee?"

"I have here a communication from one Roberts, a phrenologist, which reads as follows:

"Gentlemen of the Executive Committee—N.ct Wednes-do evening I propose delivering a lecture on the anatomy of crime, illustrated with skulls. I have the skulls of several criminals executed by Vigilance Committees in other parts of the State. If you have any skulls of criminals executed by you, I should be glad to use them in my lecture. If, however, you have none, and there are any criminals in your custody whom you intend soon to execute, I shall be pleased to examine their skulls while the men are still living, and very happy to confirm my forecast after the event. Should you feel interested in the physiology and philosophy of the causes of mental action prompting these men to pursue evil courses in life, I shall be delighted to have you accept an invitation which I now tender you to form part of my audience. Seats will be reserved for you in the front rows."

This communication produced a tendency toward unseemly mirth on the part of the executive committee, which was added to when the chairman said:

"We will refer the communication to the chief surgeon. Any further communications, Mr. Secretary?"

"None, Mr. Chairman—that is to say, none except the usual lot of letters from wives denouncing their husbands for infidelity, and requesting us to give them a good scare, but to be sure not to hurt them. There is nothing else before the committee."

"Move we adjourn," said Carwell.

"Before that is seconded," said the chairman, "I trust that Vigilante Carwell will temporarily withdraw his motion to adjourn, as the judge-advocate has a grave matter to lay before you."

After the motion was withdrawn, the judge-advocate rose and said: "Gentlemen of the committee, I consider it my duty to urge upon you most earnestly an immediate disposition of the case of Judge Tower. Whether you try, convict, and hang him—try, convict, and release him—or try and acquit him—whatever you do is not so material as that you do it now. Grave dangers confront the committee. We are in imminent peril of a clash with the Federal power."

"I would like to point out to the judge-advocate," interrupted Carwell, "that there is also danger of a clash with the main body of this committee. There are now about six thousand Vigilantes under arms. We of the executive committee number only forty men. If we try Tower and acquit him, it is my firm belief that the body of the committee will try us, and they might not acquit us."

From the murmured remarks which ran around, it was evident that the rest of the committee agreed with Carwell.

"Suppose we try Tower, and then submit the matter to the grand council," said the chairman. "There are two hundred members of the council. Such a move would divide up the responsibility and lighten the heavy burden now resting on this executive committee."

"That would be all right if we knew what kind of a verdict we were going to render, and what the grand council would do with it," said Bascom. "If we sentence him to death, the council will approve. If we acquit him, they will disapprove. Even if we rendered a verdict of acquittal, and the grand council should approve our verdict, the general body of the committee would disapprove of their approval."

"This is a very awkward juncture! I scarcely know what we can do," remarked Truax. "To hang a judge of the Supreme Court of the State would excite the horror of the civilized world, more particularly as he has not committed a murder."

"But he committed an assault with intent to murder!" cried Carwell.

"Still, a murderous assault is not punishable by death," replied Truax. "At the worst, a court would only sentence Judge Tower to a long term of imprisonment. This committee will not remain in existence indefinitely, and hence we can not sentence Tower to a long term of imprisonment. It does not seem possible for us to execute him without exciting the condemnation not only of this city, but of the State and the nation. I would vote for banishment."

"I am inclined to agree with the judge-advocate," said the chairman. "I do not believe it is expedient to execute Tower. It is impossible for us to imprison him for a long term. Hence I would vote for banishment."

"Suppose," said the judge-advocate, "that a hurry call be sent out, convening the grand council. We can have them all here in about two hours. In the meantime we can at once proceed to the trial of Tower. Then when we have decided on his sentence we can submit the matter to the approval, revision, or disapproval of the grand council. In fact, gentlemen," said the judge-advocate humorously, "as we are all here together, all thoroughly conversant with the facts, and all quite familiar with the dangers that confront our committee, we might perhaps settle the sentence before the trial."

It was decided to follow the advice of the judge-advocate. The secretary issued a call for the convening of the grand council to take place two hours later. The members of the executive committee began taking their allotted posts as officers and jurors of a secret tribunal. Carleton, the chairman, became the judge, and his first order was to the sergeant-at-arms, now the bailiff of the Vigilante court:

"You will proceed to the marshal of the Committee of Vigilance, and order him forthwith to turn over to you the body of the prisoner, John Tower. The said Tower you shall at once bring before the bar of this tribunal for trial."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Copyright 1908 by Jerome A. Hart.

THE PHILIPPINES IN WAR TIME.

An Englishman Writes a Strong Novel in Defense of the American Soldier.

The novel with a purpose is ordinarily one to be avoided because we suspect it of an intention to discuss things that we would rather not talk of. But Mr. Hyatt's story of "The Little Brown Brother" is an exception to the rule because its object is both welcome and gracious. Mr. Hyatt is an Englishman, but he has lived in the Philippines, and he was not only a spectator of the war, but his brother died fighting in the American ranks. For the sake of "the Boy I loved best of all God's creatures" Mr. Hyatt wants to say some things that the American soldier can not say for himself, and to say them with the impartiality of a foreigner. Recognizing that it is an invidious task for a man of one nation to write of the domestic affairs of another, he prefaces a word of "explanation, almost of apology, to the American nation." He would, he says, be bitterly sorry to write a word which could hurt the nation that his brother placed next to his own in affection and devotion.

There is no need to summarize this remarkable story. If the extracts that have been selected refer rather to the field and the pestilent swamp, to treachery and to courageous self-sacrifice, than to sentiment and romance, it is by no means because the latter elements are lacking. Indeed, the love story between Derek North and Clare Westley is of unusual and subtle charm from the time when we are introduced to them both at Calbayog until a natural delicacy suggests that they would rather be left alone and to their own devices. As a picture of Filipino life during the war the book has no equal. The author has an enviable power of tense description and he gives to his scenes almost the reality of a photograph.

A small American force reaches Calbayog at a time when the islands have been officially "pacified" and the need for military force declared to be at an end. In the outskirts of the town a shot has been fired from the neighboring hills and a soldier has been wounded, while rumors of an intended raid by the dreaded pulajanes are on every side:

"You wouldn't think that there innocent little citizen ever killed a man, would you?" remarked a private—an enlisted man is the correct term in the American service—indicating the Filipino to whom he referred by the simple device of throwing a pebble at him. "The women-folk would just slother over him at a New England missionary caucus, and the mayor would want to shake his hand and say he was proud; but I'll take my oath I saw him dancing round in red shoulder-straps and a big red sash the day we had that scrap on the side of the volcano. I had a crack at him then. I suppose I must have missed," he added regretfully.

The corporal to whom he spoke looked up from a tin of bacon and beans. "Better luck next time," he said sympathetically.

"There won't be no next time," remarked another private with a grin. "He's your blooming little brown brother now, bless his black little heart. You'll have to love him, or you'll have to get out of the islands mighty quick. The governor said so at Ilo-Ilo."

"Little brown—" growled the first speaker. "He aint no brother of mine. They took my hest pal prisoner in Luzon, and all we found of him was his head stuck on a post. I would teach 'em if I had my way. They would soon learn what it cost to torture good American citizens," and he got up and strode away wrathfully.

The corporal looked after him curiously. "Queer-tempered chap," he said. "Still, I guess most of us feel the same. Here, you long-haired little reptile, keep a bit further away, will you?" and he jumped up with a drawn revolver as a young native swaggered by, a naked holo in his hand.

"What is the trouble now, corporal?" It was the senior captain, a big raw-boned New Yorker, who asked the question.

The private answered. "Corporal Wilsher don't like my little brown brother there coming so close, captain," he drawled, in that easy tone of mingled independence and good comradeship which the American soldier assumes towards his officers when not actually on duty.

The captain hit his lips to stifle a laugh. "Oh, well, if that's a relative of yours, you can just keep him away, and any more of your family who happen around, see? You can go and tell the sergeant of the guard that I say no natives with holos are to come on the plaza."

Derek knows that the pulajanes are about to raid and he moves heaven and earth to persuade the local authorities to send troops. He fails utterly, not because he is disbelieved, but because the insurrection is officially at an end and the movement of soldiers would discredit the politicians at home:

An hour later, when Derek passed out of the huge, cool hall of the palace into the blazing sunlight of the plaza, he knew that he had failed, that he must write and tell Clare that, after all, the pulajanes would be allowed to do as they listed in Lamu, not because the governor disbelieved his story, but because in some way his hands were tied.

"I will look into the matter and do what I can," the old man had said. "I had been told nothing of it—in fact, I had barely heard of the pulajanes. I must thank you for the trouble you have taken; and if any action of mine can avert the danger, you may rest assured I shall spare no pains, only—" and he sighed, "I am not absolute, you know. I have colleagues."

And Derek had left him almost wishing he had never gone to the palace, for the weary face seemed to have grown perceptibly older, and he felt he had only added to a burden of sorrow and anxiety which was already too heavy for the brave old man to bear.

It was Captain Rawson who explained matters, as he and Derek sat in the court of the Service Club, smoking the first of many after-dinner cigars.

"Yes," he said. "The governor-general is a gentleman, not a politician, so he doesn't count. He was just sent out as a figurehead, because the last man went too far. But in the council he has only one vote against half a dozen, so he is always overruled. It's just breaking his heart, but he's a real tough fighter, and he won't give the grafters a rest. He's Uncle Sam's man, not merely a party's, and he don't care whether they get votes or no."

"And Furber?" asked Derek.

The captain expectorated at a small lizard before answering. "Commissioner Furber, sir? He belongs to my native city, where his father owns the street railroads and a few other trifles. He's a great man is Harrison B. Furber, and this is his only son, who was shoved in here because he happened to be a particular friend of parties in power. We have theories and culture and the Higher Life in our city, and he is supposed to represent them all and to teach them to the Filipinos, who, I hope, feel better for them."

Derek laughed. "I am afraid you don't sympathize with your fellow-citizens."

Rawson shook his head. "I'm a United States soldier," he said simply. "We've no theories, and we have got some little accounts to settle with our brown relations."

"So you don't think they'll take any steps with regard to the pulajanes?" asked Derek, reverting to the original subject.

"I'm sure," answered the other. "The constabulary can't put the thing down, and if they call in the army they are acknowledging their own failure. Anugar has been cited as the ideal of their system, the type of a perfect native governor; and, from the President downwards, they're bound to keep up this fiction. No, Lamu may be devastated and half those tao may die of sheer wretchedness, but the American nation is still going to hold that all is beautiful and peaceful and joyous."

"And if it found out the truth?"

The captain shrugged his shoulders. "It won't; but if it did, it would fire this party clean out, and—" He paused.

"Yes, and what?" asked Derek.

"And elect a fresh lot of sweeps, I suppose," replied Rawson.

And so when the pulajane outbreak becomes an actuality the soldiers are kept well away, lest they shall interfere with home theories, and a miserably small body of native constabulary is sent to certain death and destruction. The constabulary are brave enough, but they are natives and pitifully few in number, and even their white officers can not obviate the certain catastrophe:

Cochrane pointed up-stream. "They are not going to drive me back; but we must land and see to these wounded, although I expect the hanks are swarming with bolomen. We'll see what's round this bend. Good heavens! it's practically the end of the river! It just splits up into those marshy creeks. What a trap!" He jumped to his feet, signaling to the other canoes to stop, and as he did so, twenty or thirty rifles rang out from the bank.

Derek, who was now bringing up the rear, took in the situation at a glance—the half-exposed mud-flats ahead, the impossibility of landing. Retreat was the only course, and, without an instant's hesitation, he had his boat swung round and headed down-stream, an example which the other canoes followed immediately, though, before they could get back to the bend, there were a dozen or more dead and wounded in them.

As they drew within range of the first ambush again, Derek gave a curt order, and all his men, with the exception of the steersman and two in the bow, took out their paddles, picked up their rifles, and began firing rapidly into the jungle, disconcerting the aim of the pulajanes, and allowing the canoe to drift down almost hidden in a cloud of smoke. The men in the other boats were quick to see the ruse, and, when the danger-point had been passed finally, there was only one man added to the list of wounded.

Coote was lying in the bottom of the canoe very white and still, but he smiled faintly as the captain bent over him. "I've got my pass-out check, old man," he whispered. "So they have driven us back. Are my men all right? Many of them hit? Those other canoes came on, didn't they?"

Cochrane gulped at something in his throat, and—he had noticed where the wound was—lied bravely. "Yes, they are all right. My men caught it worst. You will have them all on parade again in a week. Won't he?" to the Boy, who was looking on with suspiciously quivering lips.

The Boy nodded and tried to laugh. "Of course he will; and then Dale will send you all back to Maslog. I'll get into his canoe, Cochrane, and sit with him. You go and see to the others."

As Cochrane was going, Coote raised his hand. "This is all my fault, I know," he said. "If I hadn't delayed you, it wouldn't have happened; but—I've paid for it."

"Nonsense!" answered the captain, with an attempt at cheerfulness. "It would have been much worse if we had been earlier, because then they would have let us land, and we should have had both holomen and riflemen. It was a trap, and we were lucky to get out at all. It was no one's fault; and, with that mud ahead, we had no course but to retreat."

Coote sighed. "I am glad he says so," he whispered to the Boy. "I was afraid it was worse—that all my men hadn't come on. You say they did well and only one or two were hit? Sometimes, I thought that perhaps I was too easy—not enough discipline—but I was awfully fond of them—I'm so glad they—did—well," and he sank back, dead.

Derek escapes with the survivors only to find that the native governor, Anugar, has offered an insult to Clare:

She looked up with wet, flashing eyes. "And then he tried to touch me, and I lashed him across the face with my riding-whip, and the servants ran in. It was now, just now.—Oh, Mr. North, where are you going? what are you going to do? Stay with me here. I want you—oh, I want you! I can't be left alone."

"I shall be back soon," he answered in a low voice, which Clare hardly recognized, "I shall be back very soon," and he strode out of the door.

She took a step forward, as if to follow him. "Come back—oh, come back, Derek!"

But apparently he did not hear, for he went on, striding towards the gate with no sign of his former weakness.

Rayne came forward eagerly to meet him. "Well?" he asked, "well, what is it?"

"Come with me. I will show you," was the only answer he got, and he followed wonderingly, in silence, to the plaza, where Derek suddenly stopped.

"Where is the governor?" he demanded of a lounging native, who started up when he saw the look in Derek's eyes.

"In the court. He went in just now," stammered the man. Derek brushed the doorkeeper aside, and, as if he knew by intuition where to go, opened the door of the big council-room and went half-way up it, unnoticed by a group of native officials, who, with their backs towards him, were poring over a map spread out on a small table. Then he drew his revolver, the revolver Clare had hidden him carry.

"Antonio Anugar," he cried in a loud voice.

At the sound of his name the Governor of Lamu sprang to his feet, and there in his own council-chamber, Derek North shot him between the eyes.

That the author has no love for the colored races is clear enough upon every page. He also seems to think that brotherhood between the white and the colored races can not be enforced by a phrase. But he has given us a story of the highest merit and one that deserves to be read and remembered.

"The Little Brown Brother," by Stanley Portal Hyatt. Published by Henry Holt & Co., New York, $1.50.

SAN FRANCISCO ARTISTS ABROAD.

Some Good Work Done by California Artists in New York.

Summer in New York has an intolerable sound, but there are many who find comfort and refreshing air in apartments on Washington Heights, overhanging upper Riverside. The Hudson here suggests a lake framed by the trees and the wooded Palisades. In an apartment one hundred feet above the river there is a sense of isolation, a serenity and calm approaching that of a wilderness. To those with memories of the hill-locked harbor of San Francisco it takes time to realize the vastness of New York Harbor. The Hudson at this point proves to be not a river, but a great arm of the sea, brackish for miles, the tides rising and falling as far north as Albany. It is a very glorious meeting of sea and river, whereby commerce is carried on with most remote northern and western points. There is an unceasing procession on the river of freight boats, barges, and other craft, in masses assuming the proportions of a whole water-front, being towed up or down stream by way of the Erie Canal, Great Lakes, as far west at least as Duluth. Tramp steamers, the same so familiar to us in San Francisco harbor, with their batteries of derricks, go up stream under steam deeply laden, sometimes returning so high that their propellers churn the water in fine cascades in their wake. Our naval ships ride as proudly on this great river as at home and give one a splendid sense of the unity of our grand land. At night the river is a colossal Grand Canal with the brilliant lighting of the moving craft and river steamers.

During the hottest weather, with window awnings lowered, the breeze comes fresh from the river, bringing voices of the multitude of swimmers on the floats below and the rhythmic pulsing of the motor-boats. From the swift palatial craft of the millionaire to the noisiest motor launch of the poor man, every type is represented, and Newport might not be more diverting or comfortable, while the south winds are saline and bracing enough to create the delusion.

Washington Heights is not to be confused with Harlem. It's an old and aristocratic neighborhood. The Jumel mansion is here, once the headquarters of Washington, and for a brief time the residence of Aaron Burr, who married Mme. Jumel. The name of Hamilton is kept in mind through the titular use of Hamilton Grange by club, library, and school.

Washington Heights is historic ground, as bronze tablets attest on the walls of Columbia University and at the old fort, recording the victories and defeats of the first year of the Revolution. It brings forcibly to mind the fact that during all the weary years of that war the Tories were safely entrenched in New York City, only leaving when victory came to the patriots, who waited courteously until the Loyalists were provided transportation by England to Nova Scotia.

Here, too, is the great New York University with its splendid Gothic architecture, a veritable crown to the great city, and thus well sung by the poet Gilder and another. On the old Auduhon estate, sacred to American ornithologists, is the new Hispano American Museum, erected and filled by the collections of A. P. Huntington. The Spanish-American Library promises to be monumental. The collection of Spanish art is the best in the land. Think of five Goyas and a great Velasquez to be seen at will—free to the public. This cardinal's portrait by Velasquez is the original of the copy in the Brussels museum and is painted with wonderful tenderness. The reds are beautiful beyond parallel and the background may be described as Whistlerian; or, better, this painting might well have been the inspiration of Whistler. Spanish wood carving is well represented in all its delicacy of treatment and sumptuous coloring. These carved saints are as gracefully modeled as if by the hand of a Japanese, and their decoration in color, incising, and much rich gilding, rivals a Buddhist temple painting. The Hispano-Moresque pottery with its inimitable glazes is of great interest to ceramic students, for was it not by way of Spain that Persian influence reached the majolica makers in Italy in the twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth centuries?

The California colony of working people have not much time for social life, but are responsive when met. There are several living on Washington Heights, among them Mrs. A. R. Wheelan and her sister, Miss Randall, and the Colvin Browns. The success attending Californians in New York is proverbial, and since 1906 many have sought this field. Mrs. Wheelan still illustrates and writes for St. Nicholas. Her fine book plates are given special exhibitions on Fifth Avenue at Dodd-Mead's, and also at Paul Elder's popular shop on East Nineteenth Street. In the newer field of dramatic design her success as Mr. Belasco's artist in the production of "The Rose of the Rancho" and "The Grand Army Man" is well known.

Sahel Morrison Niles was early lured into the very remunerative field of commercial art. She is known as the swiftest and most capable artist in her line in New York. This statement is authoritative.

The exhibition of work by Art League graduates, given in the spring at the National Arts Club, included work by older men like Turner, young men like Luis Mora, and the last year's students, including Miss E. Charlotte Fortune of San Francisco, who for two years has taken special honors and scholarships. The importance of her work attracted marked attention and she was one of the party of twenty-five artists invited by Mr. Spencer Trask to spend four weeks during May and June at his estate on Lake George. Here they sketched and rested and Miss Fortune sold five of her canvases. The Sketch Club of San Francisco has reason to be proud of its old treasurer.

Miss Alvira L. Judson, another Sketch Club girl, gave a private view in New York this summer of her miniature work, a large order executed for an English patron. Her work has great delicacy, life suggestion, pleasing color, and a breadth too rarely found in this medium.

The latest American sculptor is Chester Beach of San Francisco. There is marked enthusiasm on the part of the best critics. His work has been in demand at all the exhibitions on this side since his return from Paris last fall. He is already elected to associate membership in the National Academy of Design, a rare honor for so new a man. Let us as Californians give hearty greeting and an honor to this native son who has stepped so easily into his place in the art world of New York and Philadelphia. From the daintiest objet d'art to the portrait bust or monumental composition, his cunning hand follows the dictate of his active, poetic mind; both content and technic appeal. It will be a glad day for art lovers when his work is exhibited in San Francisco.

Miss Isadora Duncan, now giving her classic dances at the Criterion Theatre, under the management of Charles Frohman, is having good houses and appreciative audiences. The most conservative dramatic critics admit that her appeal is purely æsthetic. The enthusiasm of the first night's audience indicated a large proportion of artists and musicians. That she is one of the great world artists, that her influence is uplifting and far-reaching, is the consensus of opinion of those familiar with her art. E. C. B. F.

NEW YORK CITY, September 25, 1908.

It will be remembered that the undraped statuette of an American sculptor raised a storm of protest in London. Sir Martin Conway delivered the shot for the defense. "The hulk of Englishmen," he said, "are the descendants of two main constituent groups, an ancient group of Arctic peoples and an ancient group of Mediterranean peoples. It is the strong, big, law-and-order-loving Arctic lot that make all this hother. Those gaunt, red, cold folk have deep down inside them the memory of the glacial epoch, when they clothed themselves in skins and hunted the reindeer not far from the edge of enormous glaciers. The poor things, in this miserable English climate, have not in a mere ten or twenty thousand years had time to get warm through. Naturally when they see the representation of a nude figure it sets their teeth on edge. Sculptured nudes have an exactly contrary effect on the 'small dark man.' They stir in him the pleasant memory of ancestors who knew what it was to live in a decent climate. Let the happy English substratum of art lovers, instead of railing at their fellow-countrymen with the Pleistocene constitutions, pray earnestly for much hot weather."

The current number of the Scene Illustrata, of Rome, tells this story of the first Napoleon as a dramatic writer. The young man had seen a performance of "The Cid," which impressed him so forcibly that he decided to write a classic drama. Within a short time he had finished nearly four acts of a play, which he entitled "Hector." Then came his election as a brigadier-general and the manuscript was thrown into a desk, where he found it again by chance in 1805. Napoleon then sent for Luce de Lancival, gave him the manuscript and directed him to finish the play. This was done, but the players refused to accept it. When Napoleon returned to Paris from the coronation at Naples he learned of the contemptuous manner in which his work had been treated. He demanded the manuscript and wrote across it: "The players of the Comedie Française will produce the tragedy which in their stupidity they rejected. Napoleon." Two hours later the work was accepted, in three weeks it was produced before a brilliant audience, declared a success, and the alleged author was decorated with the grand cross of the Legion of Honor.

The influence of the fur-trader and the mission schools has had a marked effect upon the Ontario Indians. The women manage to keep step with their lords in this march toward civilized appearances. "I have seen moccasined feet peeping from beneath the folds of velvet gowns of royal purple," says a writer in the Wide World Magazine. "On the bank of the Rainy River I came upon a community of wigwags and tepees. About an open fire crouched three old hags, filthy and hideous. But in the door of a tepee not ten feet away stood a young squaw—perhaps a daughter of one of the hags—doing her hair with a curling-iron."

CURRENT VERSE.

Chanson Louis XIII.

Nay, I can not love you so—
Now you choose a dragging measure
Full of pauses, stepping slow
At the flying heels of pleasure.
Come from out your high-walled gloom,
Let us make a holiday
In the meadow's pleasant room
Where the sliding shadows play.
Here in golden splendor high
Butterfly loves butterfly:
Shall they live and love forever?
Never! never!

Still and still you sigh and plead,
Still and still I love you,
While the little breezes speed
Butterflies above you.
Still you love me, while the sun
Stands so high above us.
Butterflies, when day is done
Who will think to love us?

While there's azure in the sky
Butterfly loves butterfly.
Fluttered pinions in the air
Catch the sunlight, hold it there.
Over the soft-lifting breeze
Now the drooping branches sigh—
Love me now! Beneath the trees
Spread the lightest couch of love,
But above
Let there be no canopy
To obscure the shining skies
Or the shadows, fitting by,
Of the dancing butterflies.

Still and still you sigh and plead,
Still and still I love you,
While the little breezes speed
Butterflies above you.
Still you love me, while the sun
Stands so high above us.
Butterflies, when day is done
Who will think to love us?
—Charlotte Prentiss, in Atlantic Monthly.

Yggdrasil.

I am the tree Yggdrasil,
Beyond all good things and ill,
Oldest of all the trees,
Waters of many seas
Are of my wine spent lees.
Drink me, and have their fill.

My leaves put forth in the sky:
Before man on the earth was I.
I am of all things old.
When man shall be blindly rolled
With his own lost silver and gold,
Shall burn in time's furnace and die—
I shall stand firm in my place,
Not for gods or men to efface,
After the withering earth
Is shrunk from my rootlets' girth.
When death is even as birth,
And man hath no age nor race.

I shall be Yggdrasil,
The tree beyond time to kill,

End and beginning of things,
No bird in my branches sings—
Great seas with their rushing wings
Drink me, and have their fill.
—Ethel Talbot, in Westminster Gazette.

In Autumn.

I want to go where the leaves are burning,
Burning in scarlet and gold;
The wind is up and my heart is turning
Again to the forest old.

I want to go where the leaves keep dropping,
Dropping in crimson and brown,
From dawn till dusk, not a moment stopping,
They are drifting, drifting down.

I want to go where the leaves are blowing,
Blowing in russet and red;
The brook, like a voice, through the silence flowing,
Still whispers of summer dead.

Yet, why go back where the leaves are falling,
Falling again on the hill?
Though woods await and the winds are calling,
Thy voice is forever still.
—Alice E. Allen, in Ainslie's Magazine.

The Bond.

All things are bound together by a tie
Finer and subtler than a ray of light;
Color and sound and fleeting fragrances,
The maiden's smile, the star-beam sparkling bright,
Are knit together by a secret bond
Finer and subtler than a ray of light.

Sometimes an urn of memories is unsealed
Just by a simple tune, or sad or gay;
Part of the past with every quivering note
From its dark sleep awakens to the day,
And we live o'er again a long-past life,
Just through a simple tune, or sad or gay.

Some flowers bring men and women back to mind;
A well-known face smiles on us in their hue;
Their bright cups, moved by the capricious wind,
Will make us dream of eyes, black eyes or blue;
We in their fragrance feel a breath beloved;
Flowers bring back men and women whom we knew.
—Alice Stone Blackwell, from the Armenian.

It is telegraphed from Sydney that the American sailors were "much attracted by the novelty of pretty harmaids." The harmaids of Sydney and Melbourne are the prettiest in the world. They are mostly recruited from Tasmania, the insular State of the commonwealth, which has been christened the "Circassia of the Colonies," on account of the surpassing loveliness of its daughters, several of whom have found their way into the select pages of Dod and DeBrett.

"The Prima Donna" is the title of the new piece in which Charles Dillingham will present Fritzi Scheff this season. The new comic opera opens soon in Chicago.

LA MARQUISE

TURKISH CIGARETTES

"FINEST MADE"

10 for 25 Cents

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

By Sidney G. P. Coryn.

A report from Stockholm says that the Nobel prize for the best literary output this year will be awarded to Algernon Charles Swinburne. Such a distinction will certainly be received with applause by all English-speaking people. At a time when literature is singularly poor in great figures Mr. Swinburne's workmanship is of an order that would have placed him in the front rank at any previous age or among any group of poets that the world has ever known. If this distinction should indeed come to Mr. Swinburne, it will not be without an element of rebuke to the English government, which in the matter of the laureateship deliberately passed over the greatest living poet because of his former political views and gave the meaningless laurels to an inferior. Mr. Swinburne is seventy-one years of age and has been publishing poetry since 1861.

The Testing of Diana Mallory, by Mrs. Humphry Ward. Published by Harper & Brothers, New York; $1.50.

Mrs. Ward triumphs over her American public by sheer force of ability. She gives us a story that is almost the antithesis of modern canons, a story that represents society as a whole rather than some section invidiously chosen for castigation or réclame, a story that marches magnificently and voluminously onward to its culmination, complete, perfect, and polished in its every part. Mrs. Ward transports her readers to the scenes that she depicts, and we look at them from within and as parts of them. The house party at Lady Lucy's is a microcosm of English politics, with Diana herself representing the pole of imperialism and Markham, Lady Lucy's son, the extreme of a radical socialism. We listen to the clash of contending opinions and we are inclined perhaps to marvel a little at a social function where frivolity almost disappears under the weight of sober discussion upon great affairs.

Diana herself is magnificent. The sole companion of an intellectual father, she is left an orphan and wealthy at a time when her whole intense nature responds to the call of the graces of life and of a fervent imperialist patriotism. Gradually she becomes fascinated by the brilliance of Markham, and their betrothal receives the benediction of Lady Lucy, whose fortune is for the furtherance of her son's political career, and whose character is typical of an aristocratic exclusiveness that is almost hateful in its rigidity. Then comes the terrible disclosure that Diana's mother was among the vilest of the vile, and so Markham must decide between his betrothed and Lady Lucy's money, upon which depends his whole political career. Cad that he is, he chooses the money and the career, and Diana's agony is pictured in a fine consonance with her refined and clear-cut character.

Markham's career, purchased at such a price, goes down the broad road to destruction. Faithless to Diana, he is equally false to his party and to his political principles, and when he is struck down at a political meeting by a well-aimed brick we feel that even a Homeric justice has been satisfied. That Diana should come to him in the hour of his humiliation and almost at the gate of death, that she should marry him, is almost revolting in its self-abnegation, and we could almost wish that we had seen spared a sacrifice so utter. The incident is very close to the border line between servility and sublimity, but sublimity carries the day. Even though we close the book unfinished, we know that Diana would do just this thing and so keep her radiance undimmed. Nothing else was possible to the "eternal womanly," and although conventional congratulations are out of place, we feel that Mrs. Ward has bravely maintained a painful consistency. "Diana Mallory" is a monument of fiction in its most impressive and its most conscientious form. Its whole conception is marked by sincerity and by a power of massive and faithful presentation.

The Riverman, by Stewart Edward White. Published by the McClure Company, New York; $1.50.

Those who have read "The Blazed Trail" will expect something exceptional in "The Riverman," and they will not be disappointed. Such stories are a welcome corrective to the ove-sick romance that still claims an unduly large number of victims.

"The Riverman" is one of those stories that will live if only as a record of an industry all too rapidly on its way to extinction. Its picture of life in the great lumber camps and in the log-hurdened river is one to be transferred to canvas as quickly as may be ere it fade alike from reality and from memory along with the rugged, rough, and valorous human life that belongs to it. That it find a chronicler so artistic as Mr. White is a matter for congratulation.

In this story we have two male characters, the hero and the villain, with quite a number of others who hover dubiously on the border line between villainy and mere ruffianism. The hero and the villain, Jack Orde and Joe Newmara, are partners in the lumber work, the former attending to the practical duties of camp and river and the latter devoting himself to the business end of the venture. Then there is Heinzman, the German lumber king, a commanding figure of the tyrannical brute type, and Jimmy Bourke, or "Rough Red," whose ferocity is of the purely animal type and who does with his fists what Old Heinzman does with his cunning and overbearing mind. It is an admirable group and its figures play their parts with address and proportion.

The woman of the story is Carroll Bishop, who is wooed and won by Orde with unconventional vigor and carried back with him to the lumber camp. It is a daring experiment and that it was successful says as much for the wife as for the husband. But the chief delight of this story is not in its love-making, delightful as that is. Its strength lies rather in its complete and living picture of the lumberman, its convincing wealth of detail, and the skill with which the breath of an abounding life is breathed into its figures. The author's gamut is a wide one. He has an exhaustive knowledge of his subject from the physical point of view, while his felicity in depicting character is no less marked. He has given us an aspiring and a wholesome story, one to be read, and read again, and then preserved.

Beginnings in Industrial Education, by Paul H. Hanus. Published by the Houghton-Mifflin Company, Boston; $1.

This important plea for the industrial school ought to receive the widest and most sympathetic attention at a time when American industries are called upon to hold their own no longer by volume, but by quality. Dr. Hanus reminds us that the Germans who visited the St. Louis Exposition went home comforted as to the dangers of American competition and marveling at a complacency that prevented us from seeing the fatal handicap imposed by inferior quality. He now urges us to remedy this defect, to take our young men seriously in hand and to give them all that they need in an opportunity to learn.

In addition to his general treatment of industrial education, Professor Hanus gives us an able summary of what is being done elsewhere and by our competitors. His chapters on "Professional Preparation of High School Teachers" bears every mark of experience and capacity, while under the heading of "School Instruction in Religion" we have a word of emphatic warning against the dangers that a misguided zeal would impose upon us.

It might be wished that the author had said a word as to the restrictions imposed by labor unionism upon apprenticeship. Of what value is the finest system of industrial education so long as a self-constituted tyranny can dictate the number of trained boys who shall be allowed to earn their living by that training? The fact that labor unionism exercises this destructive power may go a long way to account for an apathy that is deplorable, but that is hardly surprising, and it would be interesting to know the professor's views on a situation that bids fair to neutralize the very efforts that he indicates.

Introduction to the Study of Economics, by Charles Jesse Bullock, Ph. D. Published by Silver, Burdett & Co., New York, Boston, and Chicago.

This substantial work is comprehensive, it is written with admirable clearness, and its author is obviously a master of his subject. But we are not sure that in his effort to be judicial he is not inconclusive. The older economic writers, such as Ricardo, Adam Smith, and Mill, lose little or none of their judicial strength in their effort to supply direct guidance upon disputed points, and while direct guidance may sometimes imply a political heterodoxy, that is one of the difficulties that must be faced by the economist.

But viewed as an attempt to present both sides of living controversies Professor Bullock has acquitted himself impartially and with distinction. The historical portions of his book are invaluable, while his treatment of general economic theories is sound and lucid. The chapters on "The Consumption of Wealth," "The Production of Wealth," and "The Theory of Exchange" are specially commendable. In the case of other topics, such as "Bimetallism," "Monopolies," "Transportation," "Land Nationalization," and "The Tariff," we have at least the advantage of knowing the position taken by the best opposing minds, and a presentation of conflicting theories that is impartial and comprehensive.

Angel Esquire, by Edgar Wallace. Published by Henry Holt & Co., New York; $1.50.

The detective story seems to be on the up-grade, and "Angel Esquire" shows how rapid has been its progress. A venerable malefactor who has made a fortune by gambling devices bequeaths his money to his accomplices and the daughter of his chief victim, the whole amount to go to the one who solves the secret of his vault lock combination. The lady, thus thrown into contact with a band of criminals, effects the reformation of one of them, but through his heart rather than his conscience, and the two are ultimately successful with the aid of Angel

Esquire, a detective whose knowledge of the genus criminal we suspect to be of the sympathetic variety. We are a little tired of what may be called the circumstantial detective story, and this variation is a welcome one, depending, as it does, upon cryptic writings, sliding doors, and the modern devices of electricity and mechanics.

Training the Bird Dog, by C. B. Whitford. Published by the Outing Publishing Company, New York; $1.25.

There is something fascinating about the training of a dog when the work is undertaken with sympathy, as of course it must be to be successful. Mr. Whitford not only understands his subject, but he knows how to talk about it, and his book is delightful reading not only for the sportsman, but for dog lovers in general. The illustrations are particularly good.

Richard Strauss, by Ernest Newman. Published by John Lane, New York.

This volume appears in the Living Masters of Music series, edited by Rosa Newmarch, and is fully the equal of the volumes that have preceded it. The author explains that he has not the honor of Dr. Strauss's acquaintance and that an independent critical attitude is therefore the better within his reach. We are not, however, without some interesting particulars of Strauss, thanks to the able introduction and personal note contributed by Mr. Alfred Kalisch.

The author has a keen and kindly perception of Strauss's faults, although "he remains by far the most commanding figure in contemporary music." He is too pictorial, "too crudely suggestive," and nothing that he now does is pure gold throughout.

The Peacock's Pleasance, by "E. V. B." Published by John Lane, New York.

The author reminds us that the peacock is the symbol of immortality and of mystical things 'not understood by the common people. Therefore the title is well chosen, because there is a strong suggestion of the superhuman through all these essays notwithstanding their rural nature. There are twelve in all, about birds, and gardens, and weeds and insects, all of them hinting at a vision of things below the surface and of an underlying and unifying life. In spite of an occasional deviation into fine writing, "E. V. B." has a very gentle and pleasing touch.

Roast Meats

Hot or cold, are given just that "finishing touch" which makes so many different dishes a delight when flavored with

LEA & PERRINS

SAUCE

THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

Soups, Fish, Chops, Stews, Game, Gravies, Salads, Cheese and nearly all the courses in a dinner are very greatly improved by its proper use. It is a good digestive. Leading chefs declare that Lea & Perrins Sauce is the Secret of Their Success as famous cooks.

See that Lea & Perrins signature is on wrapper and label.

John Duncan's Sons, Agents, New York

PUBLISHED THIS WEEK

JOHN MARSHALL AND OTHER ADDRESSES

By HORACE G. PLATT

1 Vol., 5x8 in., in Red Cloth, 282 pages, portrait frontispiece.

In this collection are presented thirty-four of the speeches made by Mr. Platt on various occasions, including the addresses on "JOHN MARSHALL," "THE WAR WITH SPAIN," and "AMERICAN IMPERIALISM."

For Sale by the following Booksellers, price $1.50:

A. M. Robertson, 1539 Van Ness Avenue.
Cunningham, Curtiss & Welch, 563-571 Market Street.
Paul Elder & Co., Van Ness Avenue and Bush Street.
Max H. Fay, 1239 Van Ness Avenue.
John J. Newbegin, 242 Market Street.
The New Book Store, 400 Sutter Street.
R. J. Machen, 654-656 Market Street.

Mail orders, enclosing 10 cents additional for postage, will be filled promptly.
THE ARGONAUT PUBLISHING CO., 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco

LITERARY NOTES.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

Rider Haggard returns to South Africa for the setting of his new story, "The Ghost Kings," now in press.

Henry C. White, who was paymaster under Lincoln and traveled with him on his circuit, has compiled a new volume about the great President. Mr. White knew Lincoln so intimately that he writes of him as a man rather than a heroic figure in history. Much of his book is made up from unpublished material as well as personal reminiscences hitherto unwritten.

John Townsend Trowbridge quietly observed the eighty-first anniversary of his birthday a few days ago at Riverton, New Jersey, where, with his wife, he is visiting at the home of his daughter. His well being and mental activity are happily evidenced in the fact that he has just completed another story for boys and girls, and is still planning to enjoy journeys to the far corners of the earth.

The Macmillan Company announces that "Helianthus," the novel by Ouida promised some years ago, is to be published at once. Nearly all of the story was in type before the author's death, and the proofs were corrected by her.

Otto H. Becher, whose "Whistler in Venice" is just published, is an American artist and etcher. His friendship with Whistler began in Venice and ended only with the artist's death. The two artists were constantly together during Whistler's sojourn in Venice and the book is made up of how he worked and how he played in the city of canals. Many etchings are reproduced from a collector's set never before published.

Booker T. Washington has followed his "Up from Slavery," one of the most remarkable books ever written, with "The Story of the Negro."

Noel Williams has made a two-volume work of "The Women Bonapartes." It traces the careers of the mother and three sisters of the great Napoleon. Although they differed widely in character, they were all four striking personalities. A great many of the chief figures of the consulate and the empire appear in Mr. Williams's pages.

New Publications.

Harper & Brothers, New York, have published a translation of Paul de Musset's "Mr. Wind and Mme. Rain," a tale from old Breton folk-lore. This must perhaps be called a fairy tale, but it is so unconventional as to deserve a place to itself. The price is 60 cents.

An unusually comprehensive book is "Physics for Secondary Schools," by Charles F. Adams, A. M. The instruction is concise and clear and there are illustrations upon nearly every page. Published by the American Book Company, New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago. Price, $1.20.

All children should be acquainted with the Life Stories for Young People Series, published by A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago. Among late issues is "Herman and Thunelda," translated from the German of Ferdinand Schmidt by George P. Upton. There are now about sixteen volumes in the series. Price, 60 cents each.

"A Cure for Care," by J. R. Miller, D. D., is written from the Christian standpoint and is intended to show the universality of divine law and man's power under that law to create his own fate. The ideas are good and the reasoning is persuasive and logical. The book is published by Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York. Price, 30 cents.

"The Galleon Treasure," by Percy Keese Fitzhugh, is a good story of the days when Cotton Mather held sway in Boston town and harried the witches to the content of his wicked heart. Witches on the land and pirates on the sea combine to make a stirring tale. The book is published by Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York, and the price is 75 cents.

Lovers of William Morris will delight in a little volume just published in the Everyman's Library by E. P. Dutton & Co., New York. It is entitled "The Early Romances of William Morris in Prose and Verse," and contains thirty poetic and eight prose selections. The introduction by Alfred Noyes is a weighty and valuable appreciation of Morris. Everyman's Library is already of substantial size and admirably inclusive.

"Woven in the Tapestry," by Emily Post, is a dainty little volume of mystical tales of Ateria, a country of long ago, and of the Pagan King Thyaterion and his daughter, the Princess Alacia, and of the Hermit in the Forest and of the stranger who came as his disciple. Also other tales of the dwellers in the village, and in the city, in the forest, and in the gardens of the king. It is published by Moffat, Yard & Co., New York.

"A Common-Sense View of the Mind Cure," by Laura M. Westall, has much to recommend. It contains no extravagance and no superstition and can hardly fail to be helpful and suggestive. But it is well to remember that in abolishing pain by mental processes we may be stifling a useful indication of a malady, and that point might be usefully considered by those who are apt to overlook the beneficence of suffering. The book is published by the Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York. Price, 75 cents.

The Life Stories for Young People series issued by A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago, and already comprising twenty volumes, has been enriched by an edition of "Undine," translated by George P. Upton from the German of Friedrich Baron de la Motte Fouqué. It is gratifying to find this further vitality given to a classic that ought to be imperishable. All the volumes of this series are exceptionally well chosen. The price is 60 cents each.

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.

Wilson Barrett's great play, "The Sign of the Cross," will follow "The Devil" at the Valencia Theatre, beginning next Sunday afternoon. Robert Warwick will pass from his powerful presentation of Molnar's fiendish physician to the rôle of Marcus Superbus, prefect of Rome. Miss Kershaw will appear as Mercia, the Christian maiden. The entire strength of the company will be utilized in the cast, and the settings of the play will be especially notable. The big stage allows a satisfactory latitude in scenic effects, and no opportunity will be slighted. The play will run only one week, with the usual matinees on Saturday, Wednesday, and Sunday.

"Ship Aboy" at the Princess Theatre this week is a revel of song and fun. Ferris Hartman has made the rôle of Colonel Mapleson Mulherry, the embarrassed impresario, peculiarly his own, and he is worth seeing more than once in it. Sybil Page and Sarah Edwards were never more attractive, musically and dramatically, than in this old but cheerful offering. Arthur Cunningham has two songs, one irresistibly comic, and makes a good deal of a small part. Zoe Barnett is captivating in appearance as well as tenuous in her part as the prima donna soubrette. Fred Kavanagh and Walter de Leon are pleasing and useful. The chorus is handsomely costumed, and sings and dances attractively.

Next week, the last but one of Mr. Hartman's engagement, "The Amerer" will be put on. This will be remembered as one of Frank Daniels's popular pieces, constructed for him by Victor Herbert, Frederick Rankin, and Kirke La Shelle. Hartman will have the rôle of Ifte Kahn, Joseph Fogarty will make his first appearance as Heezabard, the lord chamberlain, and Arthur Cunningham and all the other favorites will have good parts.

At the Van Ness Theatre this week "The Time, the Place, and the Girl" is in its last nights. Next Monday night comes "The Squaw Man," Edwin Milton Royle's four-act drama, which made something more than an ordinary success here on its first visit. This time, Dustin Farnum, so well remembered as the hero of "The Virginian," will have the leading rôle, and will make the most of it. Mary B. Conwell is the leading lady, and the long list of supporting players includes the names of Mitchell Lewis, Katherine Fisher, George Deyo, Logan Paul, Ruth Lloyd, Edith Perchet, and Alma Sedley. The company is under the management of Liebler & Co., and the elaborate scenic investiture of the piece is such as is confidently to be expected at the hands of this veteran firm of theatrical managers.

The Orpheum will offer as first in the list of new features for the bill opening Sunday afternoon that Italian sensation, Gennaro's Venetian Band. In addition to the capable handsomen and their eminent conductor, Miss K. Carter will sing to the accompaniment of the band. Mme. Theresa Renz, the famous equestrienne, will introduce her splendid trained horses, all of whom are prize-winners. Mme. Renz makes her appearance costumed in white on a horse of the same color and successfully performs a serpentine dance on horseback. Gracie Emmett, who some years back was the successful star of the drama, "A Barrel of Money," will present a farce called "Mrs. Murphy's Second Husband," supported by Elizabeth Rathburn, Ben Miles, and Lon W. Carter. The Jupiter Brothers, illusionists, who affect the make-up of cowboys, give a performance which mystifies the audience. Next week will be the last of "General" Edward La Vine, the Saytons, Belle Hathaway's monkeys, and of that admirable quartet, the Cadets de Gascogne. A new series of imported motion pictures will conclude the performance.

"The Time, the Place, and the Girl" will be seen for the last time at the Van Ness Theatre on Sunday night.

May Irwin will go on at the Garrick Theatre in New York, preceding "The Mollusc," in a curtain-raiser called "Mrs. Peckham's Carouse," which her sister, Flo Irwin, played over the Orpheum circuit last summer.

The really highest salary ever paid a vaudeville performer in America will be given Harry Lauder, the unique and great Scotch player, who comes to this country this month.

It is announced he will receive $4000 a week for twenty weeks, of which he must pay $25,000 as release money to the managers under whom he was playing in London. He will open in New York next Monday night.

Walter's "Paid in Full" completely failed to please the London play-going public, and was withdrawn from the bill of the Aldwych Theatre after two empty weeks. It received excellent press notices; in fact, so kindly were a majority of the critics that it might be believed they came prepared to praise the piece on the strength of its American success.

Mater Dolorosa.

Because of little low-laid heads all crowned
With golden hair,
Forevermore all fair young brows to me
A halo wear;
I kiss them reverently—alas! I know
The stains I bear.

Because of dear but close-shut holy eyes
Of heaven's own blue,
All little eyes do fill my own with tears,
Whate'er their hue;
And motherly I gaze their innocent
Clear depths into.

Because of little pallid lips which once
My name did call,
No childish voice in vain appeal upon
My ear doth fall.
I count it all my joy their joys to share
And sorrows small.

Because of little dimpled, cherished hands
Which folded lie,
All little hands henceforth to me do have
A pleading cry;
I clasp them as they were small wandering birds
Lured home to fly.

Because of little death-cold feet, for earth's
Rough roads unmet,
I'd journey leagues to save from sin or harm
Such little feet;
And count the lowliest service done for them
So sacred—sweet!

—Mary K. Field.

Mr. Horace Platt's Speeches.

"John Marshall and Other Addresses," by Horace G. Platt, just issued by the Argonaut Publishing Company, San Francisco, will be welcomed not only by a wide circle of the author's personal friends and acquaintances, but by all those who find a pleasure in the polished diction that expresses a refined and cultured thought. There are thirty-four addresses in this volume, and while the number should have been greater, we can congratulate the author on his success in collecting so many, after the fire of 1906 had destroyed the whole of a collection representative in its character and of much greater volume than the present. We can also congratulate the reader that so much has been spared of an oratorical record extending over many years and that San Francisco would be loth to wholly lose.

The thirty-four addresses now published are wisely left unarranged either by subject or chronology. They cover well nigh the whole field ordinarily surveyed by an alert and eager mind. Politics, history, philosophy, literature, all find their place, nor do we ever miss the tone of gentle and wise reflection that we have learned to associate with the author. This book, so free from bitterness or any touch of unkindness, can hardly fail to recall pleasant memories to thousands.

The Lloyd Scott Travel Talks.

Lloyd Scott, the traveler, on Monday night gave the first of his series of Travel-Talks at Christian Science Hall. He is an easy speaker and with a beautiful collection of colored views, moving pictures, and panoramas he kept his audience interested. "India" was his subject and it was repeated Tuesday night.

For the end of the week "Japan" will be given Friday night and at a special school children's matinee Saturday, at which the young folks will be given half rates. "Russia" will be given Saturday night. Next week, "Russia" Monday night, "Egypt" Tuesday and Thursday, and "Ireland" Friday and Saturday, with "Egypt" Saturday afternoon for the school children. Box office at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s.

The Lloyd Scott Travel-Talks will be given at Maple Hall in Oakland, commencing Monday, October 19. Three subjects will be given the first week, on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday nights, and the remaining two the following week, on Monday and Wednesday. The same prices as in San Francisco will prevail and the office will be at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s Oakland store.

The French Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has taken action against a cinematograph company for an act of unprecedented brutality to a horse. In a series of pictures called "The Lover's Revenge," a carriage drawn by a horse was seen to rush over the edge of a cliff and be dashed to pieces. The pictures were not "fake" pictures. An old blind horse harnessed to a carriage was really driven over the edge of the cliffs near Boulogne to obtain them.

"It used to be the height of my ambition to own a motor car," said the worried looking man. "And what is the height of your ambition now?" asked his friend. "To sell it."—Philadelphia Enquirer.

A COMPLETE FOOD
Baker's Cocoa50 Highest Awards in Europe and AmericaRegistered
U. S. Pat. Office

A medical writer says:
Baker's pure cocoa acts as a gentle stimulant, invigorating and correcting the action of the digestive organs, furnishing the body with some of the purest elements of nutrition.

Walter Baker & Co., Ltd.
Established 1870. DORCHESTER, MASS.

JUST A BOOK STORE

Robertson's

1539 Van Ness Ave.

NEAR PINE

"Next to the White House"

Frederic Fairchild Sherman
Publisher and Bookseller

42 West 39th Street NEW YORK CITY

PUBLICATIONS

KING SOLOMON AND THE FAIR SHULAMITE, with Seven Photographs, $1.50 net; $1.55 postpaid.
A DAY DREAMER'S HARVEST. BY HENRY
BYRON . . . $1.25 net; $1.33 postpaid.
ROSEMARY. Verses. BY EDITH ABERCROMBIE
MILLER . . . $1.00 net; $1.05 postpaid.

FIRST EDITIONS

of the works of Aldrich, Burroughs, Carmou, Holmes,
Howells, Longfellow, Lowell, Austin Dobson, Kipling,
Lang, Swinburne and others; also Pamphlets,
Autographs, Private Press Books, etc.

John F. Forbes
Certified Public Accountant
601 KOHL BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO

SPECIAL TOUR
TO VICTORIA NYANZA
THROUGH THE African Wonderland

Leaving New York
TUESDAY, October 27, 1908

Programme for the asking
THOS. COOK & SON
32 Powell St., San Francisco

GOODYEAR "HIPPO" HOSE

The best and strongest Garden Hose.
Guaranteed to stand 700 lbs. pressure.

Try it and be convinced.

GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY
R. H. PEASE, President
587, 589, 591 Market St. at Second St.
SAN FRANCISCO

ANOTHER VIEW OF WARFIELD.

By Josephine Hart Phelps.

"A Grand Army Man" recalls the James Herne plays. The characters are rustics—"There are twenty-four strangers in town," says the commander impressively, on the occasion of the opening of the new G. A. R. hall—and they are unthrillingly uninteresting. It is quite difficult to lose oneself in their affairs, and their squabbles are only mildly funny. In fact, looking over the shrunken audience, one questioned the wisdom of taking off "The Music Teacher," which one and all had on their conscience to see and which would probably still draw.

When one recalls the fine work of the company in "The Music Master," it follows as a matter of course that the various characters of "A Grand Army Man" were played in excellent style. But, just as we would be hored if we were thrown upon the society, excellent people though they be, of the simple-minded band that upheld the traditions of old army days, so we are in great danger of being bored in the play.

What prevents us is Warfield's natural, humorous, and feeling characterization of the G. A. R. commander, who is so terribly wounded in his family pride and family affections. And yet Warfield seems scarcely to have studied enough to mark out a sufficiently different characterization to that with which he familiarized the country in "The Music Master." There are so many points of resemblance as to induce a sense of monotony.

I noticed, by the way, that Warfield, whether consciously or unconsciously, employs, in expressing strong emotion, a favorite method of J. H. Stoddard's, with which the veteran actor used often to thrill his audiences. It is the use of the sudden, half hysterical shriek with which Von Barwig in "The Music Master" hurled his reproach and contempt when he was at last face to face with his old enemy. In "A Grand Army Man" he uses it in reproaching his adopted son, when the realization that the child of his heart is a thief comes in a great flood of anguish to his distracted brain. So, too, in his great agitation, he mechanically and measurely heats upon his knee, as Von Barwig did upon the piano lid.

It was fine. It was good art. But it was too much of the nature of repetition.

The details used in portraying the humorous side of the character were also similar, although the amusing representation of the family tiff and of the harmless tempers which Wes let off in sudden, startling shouts, gave opportunity for some variety.

An excellent piece of acting was done by William Elliott, who, as Robert, Wes's adopted son, gave us a most charmingly simple and sincere portrayal of the boyishness of a loved and spoiled son, of young, shy love, of bewilderment, when Robert's fault seemed to the stature of offense against the awe, and of sorrow and repentance at sight of the incredulous anguish of his adopted father.

The three dramatists, with Belasco no doubt to the fore, employed many admirable effects in exhibiting the manner in which Wes and his son stood their sorrow. There was pathos and humor in equal proportions throughout the play, and the dialogue is amusing and natural, but all the same the play did not hold one in a firm grip. I was perfectly willing to leave at the end of the second act, thereby, of course, losing the court scene, and I am not any more anxious to lose the closing act of a really interesting play than any one else. But in spite of Marie Bates's always amusing comedy, of Antoinette Perry's girlish simplicity, of the well-played characters that went to make up the G. A. R. post in the village coterie represented, the ending was not a wrench.

I came in for another or closing act at the performance of "The Devil" at the Novelty Theatre, and I must say that there was no evidence of anybody being even scorched. The performance was mild in the extreme and the characters seemed as virtuous as those in "The Grand Army Man."

This is good for morals, but had for art. It is just justice to the players to say that the last act of "The Devil" is the least interesting, but that was not their fault. The trouble was the intense mental respectability of the players, who were unable to exert enough imagination to shake it off. There was not the slightest suggestion of the abandon of headlong passion in the air, although

Mr. Glendinning, in the brief glimpse I had of his Sandor, seemed to give some indication of there being waged an inner struggle against those perilous forces of nature which the devil sought to awaken to sinister activity.

Mr. Hickman's devil was at a disadvantage beside Robert Warwick's, for the leading man at the Valencia has, added to his fine person, just enough of a deviation from the American type of feature to give to his Dr. Nicholas some Continental distinction of appearance.

As a further advantage to the Valencia performance both in appearance and type of beauty, Willette Kershaw does very well as a hit of tempting bait on the devil's hook. She seemed neither complex nor subtle, but she had the air of a woman deeply in love. A good deal of a feat of the imagination, too, when one thinks of her Sandor. That slight dryness of tone which Howard Hickman habitually employs in depicting the milder order of villain or a merely disagreeable character, deprived his devil of much of the atmosphere of wickedness which, like a sulphurous emanation, should surround his satanic majesty. Warwick's devil had it, and also the suggestion of lure, of a wicked fascination. In fact, the more I recall his Dr. Nicholas, the more it seems something of a dramatic feat which will win more recognition for the young player.

Recently I chanced upon a short story by Henry James which seemed to contain a germ, or, indeed, rather the whole theory of what constitutes the real romance of fiction.

The three characters of his story are discussing French novels, and, to the expressed distaste of one of them for the universality of the had woman in French fiction, another—the man in the trio—says, "My dear lady, their romance is their hadness. There isn't any other. It's a hard law, if you will, and a strange, but goodness has to go without that luxury. Isn't to be good just exactly, all round, to go without?" "One has heard it before—at least I have. One has heard your question put . . . "Why don't you, cher monsieur, give us the drama of virtue?" "Because, chère madame, the high privilege of virtue is precisely to avoid drama."

The expounder, in the story, following out his theory, puts it even more succinctly: "Behind these words we use—the adventure, the novel, the drama, the romance, the situation; in short, as we most comprehensively say, behind them all stands the same sharp fact that in their different ways they all represent the fact of a relation. The adventure is a relation; the relation is an adventure. The romance, the novel, the drama, are the picture of one. The subject the novelist treats is the rise, the formation, the development, the climax, and for the most part the decline, of one. And what is the honest lady doing on that side of the town?"

It so happens that in "The Story in It," the tale in question, a "relation" exists between the man and one of the women of the trio, while the other one cherishes for him a secret, pure love, which she regards as her romance, her adventure, her situation. And thus she passes out of the story, vindicating to herself her theory that a woman can figure in a romance and still be "an honest lady," while to the sinning, but happy, pair hers was "but a small, scared, starved, subjective satisfaction that would do her no harm, and nobody else any good." Who but a duffer—he (the man) stuck to his contention—would see the shadow of a story in it?

I found the whole argument intensely interesting, as offering an anglicized American's interpretation of the Continental attitude on the subject of fiction and the drama. I thought it most logically put, and realized, as I absorbed this new point of view, how curious to the Continental mind must seem our elaborate structure of fiction and drama which paints charming, graceful, shallow pictures of contemporary life, and, on account of the still existing Puritanism of purely American standards, consistently avoids following up those subterranean veins of ore across which are entangled the roots of great passions.

This is the situation, and practically the only situation available, which Molnar uses in his play of "The Devil." The moral of all this, it seems to me, is that there is no moral to the drama of passion, which devotes much more space to exploiting what Molnar's devil pleasantly calls "the technique of intrigue" than to painting the sure damnation of the sinner.

Queen Alexandra's favorite perfume, it is well known, is a certain scent which is a combination of rare essences, the secret of which is so carefully guarded that no money can purchase the recipe. The late Queen Victoria used this same perfume for more than fifty years. Nobody but the manufacturer knows the formula, but a Paris perfumer of long experience has pronounced it a blend of rose, violet, jasmine, lavender, and orange blossom.

A statue to Boswell was unveiled at Lichfield one day last month, and the evening before the event a Johnson supper was given, with sanded floor and candles for the only light, at the Three Crowns, where Johnson and Boswell used to stay.

At the Greek Theatre.

Saturday night's programme for the Greek Theatre in Berkeley is about the best thing that the musical and dramatic committee of the University of California has had to offer during the season. The Pasmore girls—Dorothy, Suzanne, and Mary—will play in concert, assisted by an orchestra of thirty-four pieces, led by the father of the clever sisters, H. B. Pasmore. The Pasmore Trio has established a reputation on the Coast that upholds the one made in Europe when the girls were still students and playing in company with recognized artists. After their appearance at the Greek Theatre on this occasion they will leave for Los Angeles. They are billed to play several concerts and give a few recitals in and around that city.

- Here is the programme for Saturday night:
1. Introduction and Hymn to California, for orchestra Pasmore (Poem by Charles Keeler)
 2. Concerto for violoncello and orchestra, op. 33 Saint-Saens Miss Dorothy Pasmore, soloist
 3. "Scene from a Western City," for orchestra C. A. Le Fortnia
 4. Concerto for piano and orchestra, op. 54 Schumann Miss Suzanne Pasmore, soloist
 5. Spanish symphony for violin and orchestra, op. 21 Lalo Miss Mary Pasmore, soloist

Miss Dorothy played the Saint-Saens concerto, with orchestra, in Beethoven Saal, Berlin; Miss Suzanne played the Schumann concerto, with Xaver Scharwenka at the second piano, in Bechstein Saal, Berlin; and Miss Mary played the Lalo concerto with Henri Marteau at Geneva.

Barrie's Dramatic Assistant.

In a recent issue was given a review of J. M. Barrie's new play by the London correspondent of the Argonaut. Additional comment on the piece and the author is at hand in the London papers. The Morning Post provides a curious pendant in a paragraph that crystallizes gossip, current for some years, about the assistance Mr. Barrie received in his earlier pieces, and then views the new comedy through that crystal. Says the Post: "In most, if not all, of his more recent plays Mr. Barrie is known to have had the assistance of the late Mr. Addison Bright, on whose death some feared that Mr. Barrie would write plays no more. It is not at all necessary to suppose that Mr. Bright's share in the business entitled him to be regarded as part author, but the combination was rich in result. Whatever Mr. Bright did or did not do, he did one thing of which your ordinary playwright is almost invariably incapable. He recognized Mr. Barrie's peculiar quality and was careful to preserve it. Mr. Barrie is, we take it, essentially a novelist, and not a dramatist. His plays, delightful as they are, have never shown the largeness of vision and simplicity of treatment of the true dramatist. His mind runs more on tactics than on strategy. He does not so much construct a bridge—and every great drama has the lines of a bridge—as lay down stepping-stones. When he has tackled a definite flesh-and-blood problem, and has attempted to work it out in accordance with established dramatic principles—as in 'The Wedding Guest'—he has been least successful and least himself. When he has gone his own way his work has been notable, as in 'The Admirable Crichton'—the last act of which is derivative of drama—and 'Peter Pan,' in which what drama there is pure 'spool.' Happily Mr. Barrie, after a long period of silence, has again put forth a play. It would be interesting to know, but perhaps impertinent to inquire, whether he has received assistance from another, or who that other is. Certainly it is difficult to detect in 'What Every Woman Knows' any alien hand."

Sentiment was said to have betrayed a workman who was committed for trial at the Thames Police Court a few days ago on a charge of larceny. It was alleged that he broke into the shop of his former employer, a tailor, stole two pairs of scissors, and damaged thirty-five women's costumes. Only one costume in the shop was not cut to pieces. It was made by Messau himself, and this fact first cast suspicion on him. "He had not the heart to destroy the coat he had made himself," declared the prosecuting solicitor.

Miss Evelyn Millard has begun her career as a manageress at the Garrick Theatre in London.

GRANADA HOTEL

— OPENS —

OCTOBER 1, 1908

Situated at Sutter and Hyde Streets Midway between the business and resident sections of the city

A strictly first-class hotel on the American plan. ABSOLUTELY FIRE PROOF. All rooms and baths outside exposure; every modern improvement; luxuriously furnished. Perfect service and cuisine, and an atmosphere of home comfort rarely met with in a hotel. Special monthly terms to families. Reservations can be made at the hotel.

E. S. DE WOLFE, Manager Formerly proprietor Hotel Pleasanton

Glasses are said to have been invented by Alessandro di Spina in the 13th century.

The glasses which we make are examples of the perfection which has been reached in their manufacture.

HIRSCH & KAISER

218 Post St.

Opticians

AMUSEMENTS

LLOYD SCOTT'S
Travel Talks
Christian Science Hall
JAPAN—This Friday evening, Saturday afternoon. RUSSIA—This Saturday evening. Next week—Russia, Egypt, Ireland.

Seats $1.00, 75c, 50c. Children (matinees), 50c and 25c. Oakland Course—Maple Hall, commencing Monday, Oct. 19. Box office next Tuesday, Sherman, Clay & Co., Oakland.

EXTRA This Sunday afternoon (Oct. 11) at 2:30

VAN NESS THEATRE
BLANCHE ARRAL
Colorata Prima Donna from St. Petersburg, etc.
In the GREATEST VOCAL PROGRAMME ever offered in this city accompanied by STEINDORFF'S GRAND OPERA ORCHESTRA and Louis Neubauer, flute.
Seats $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s; Sunday at theatre. Baldwin Piano used.

GREEK THEATRE BERKELEY

Musical and Dramatic Committee of the University of California offers

The Pasmore Sisters

Assisted by an Orchestra of thirty-five pieces, led by their father, H. B. Pasmore

TONIGHT (SATURDAY)

ADMISSION - - 25 cents
Chair section extra POPULAR PRICES

ORPHEUM ELLIS STREET NEAR FILLMORE

Absolutely Class A Theatre Building
Matinee Every Day

Week beginning this Sunday afternoon

ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE
THE ECCENTRIC GENNARO AND HIS VENETIAN GONDOLIER BAND with Miss K. Carter, Soloist; THERESA RENZ, Most Famous Equestrienne in the World; GRACIE EMMETT and Company; JUPITER BROTHERS; "GENERAL" EDWARD LA VINE; BELLE HATHAWAY'S SEMAN PLAY-MATES; THE SAYTONS; New Orpheum Motion Pictures. Last Week of the CADETS de GASCOGNE.
Evening prices, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box seats, $1. Matinee prices (except Sundays and holidays), 10c, 25c, 50c. Phone, WEST 6000.

PRINCESS THEATRE Ellis Street near Fillmore

S. LOVERICH, Manager
Class "A" Theatre Phone West 663

Matinee Saturday and Sunday
Last Two Nights of "SHIP AHOY."
Beginning Next Monday Night, Last Two Weeks of FERRIS HARTMAN.
Next Week Only, the Famous Musical Play.

THE AMEER

All the Princess Favorites in the Cast.
Popular prices—Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Mats. (except Sundays and holidays), 25c, 50c.
Coming—KOLB and DILL.

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove St.

Phone Market 500

Two Weeks, Beginning Monday, October 12.
Matinee Saturday
The Distinguished Actor,
DUSTIN FARNUM
(Management Liehler & Co.)

In Edwin Milton Royle's Stirring Story of the West,
THE SQUAW MAN
The Play of the Century.

Prices: $2, $1.50, $1, 75c and 50c.

VALENCIA THEATRE Valencia St. nr 14th Phone 17 Market

San Francisco's newest and most beautiful playhouse

Week Starting Sunday Matinee, October 11,

The Sign of the Cross

VALENCIA STOCK COMPANY
Including Robert Warwick.

Regular Matinees Every Sunday, Wednesday and Saturday.

VANITY FAIR.

It is a little late in the season to ask ourselves how we shall best observe the law of propriety when we go in swimming. We none of us particularly wish to be proper, but we do not wish to be markedly improper. In other words, we want to keep on the right side of the line, but just as close to the line as we can get.

These profoundly philosophical observations are induced by the swimming costume of Lady Constance Mackenzie as reported by feverish cable dispatches from England. Now Lady Constance is the very pink of propriety. The finger of rebuke has never been leveled at her. She is the daughter of an earl, the niece and the grandchild of duchesses, and, in fact, one of those women so few and far between who can make anything proper by simply doing it. And Lady Constance has been swimming and diving at a popular festival organized by her aunt, the Duchess of Sutherland, and clad in a sleeveless, tightly fitting combination garment ending several inches above the knee.

Propriety is, of course, a matter of convention, and it changes from day to day. Lady Constance wore a costume shocking to many Anglo-Saxon eyes, but identical with that of most of the watering places in Europe, where the women are just as irreproachable as elsewhere. A few years ago no bathing costume was considered even decent unless at the same time it was hideously shapeless and ugly. We have left these atrocities behind, but we still cling reverently to the stockings and the skirt, which serve no useful purpose and are a distressing impediment to the woman who really wants to swim and to dive.

We do well to be critical of those who are hyper-sensitive on the subject of propriety. It is no mere axiom that to the pure all things are pure, and the morals of those who see something immoral in bare legs and arms must be in a truly perilous plight. Henry Labouchere tells us that when he was in Mexico, very many years ago, he was accustomed to see the entire population bathe together at certain hours of the day and wholly innocent of clothing. We have his testimony that these people were decent and law abiding and their morality exceptionally high. It is to be feared that nowadays we are not quite so pure as this, but we surely might relax a little in the direction of common sense without any serious peril to such virtue as we have.

It is not impropriety that we dread, but unconventionality. We are horrified at the costumes, or lack of costumes, of Oriental peoples, while they in their turn are horrified at the spectacle of young girls in evening dress and clasped in the arms of men to whom they were introduced only half an hour before. We pride ourselves on our extreme propriety in hathing costumes, whereas those very costumes would excite not only the ridicule but the reprobation of our European cousins. The French mère de famille would say, and with much reason, that the stockinged, and especially the gartered, leg is infinitely more suggestive than the bare leg, as of course it is, and in her own daughters she would regard the stockings and the garters as serious indiscretions. The fellah woman of Egypt feels that she is obeying all the law and the prophets of propriety so long as she keeps her face decorously covered, no matter what exposure be made of the rest of her person, whereas the white woman feels that her face may be exposed upon any and every occasion. Therefore, let us be charitable, even though common sense be beyond our reach.

A writer in the Daily Mail gives us the comfortable assurance that, after all, we are not so very extravagant in the matter of dress, and that in fact we compare quite favorably with the excesses of earlier days. And we have this to our advantage, that whereas the men of a century or so ago used to spend quite as much upon their dress as the women, the extravagance now is mainly confined to one sex. A lady of fashion said recently that whereas a man could dress himself very satisfactorily on £400 a year, the well-dressed woman must spend that much every month. A hundred and fifty years ago some gentlemen would spend as much as £600 on a single suit, and would be satisfied with not less than three. An elegant man could "manage" with six summer and six winter suits at £100 each, and this without including the gold and silver buttons and the lace. The ladies, too, were by no means inexpensively dressed. When Mlle. de Tournon was married in Paris it was considered by no means a great affair, but her aunt offered her £700 for "fans, bags, and garters," and the bride herself bought several gowns at prices varying from £150 to £400. And these cheap gowns were only for common use, housework and the like we may suppose. For a single court gown she paid £800, and she would not be expected to wear it more than three or four times. When Mme. de Verre died she was found to have possessed 200 dozen cambric handkerchiefs, 450 skirts, and sixty pairs of stays, but history does not say what kind of stays they were.

Those were certainly costly days not only in the matter of dress, but of hospitality. M.

de Rohan kept one hundred and eighty horses always saddled for the convenience of his guests, and during the shooting season six hundred beaters were in daily employment. The household of Mme. de Cboiseul was supplied with thirty sheep a month for the consumption of guests. The receptions were of the most elaborate nature, and practically an open house was kept all the year round. Guests were at liberty to bring with them as many friends, horses, and dogs as they pleased, and they amused themselves in any way that seemed good to them.

Patrons of the Hotel Manhattan, New York, have noticed for some time that a certain unusual set of dining-room chairs has been missing from one of the smaller first floor dining-rooms. The chairs, which were specially designed for the hotel from an eighteenth century Austrian pattern, were greatly admired for the solidity of their comfort and beauty of their elaborately hand-carved backs. On the top of each back wooden leaves and wooden animals stuck out in all directions. The chairs were the pride of the management and the admiration of all the customers. But from the start that particular dining-room became the scene of constant mishaps and small social tragedies. Feminine guests were embarrassed at finding plates of bisque suddenly gushing down their décolleté gowns. Masculine diners were disconcerted to discover their shirt fronts unnecessarily studded with petit pois. The management at first said, "Clumsiness," and many waiters were discharged. But the waiters always gave the same excuse. The wooden leaves and animals which stuck up out of the backs of the beautiful chairs were found to be peculiarly adapted to catch in a waiter's coat sleeves. The cause of all the accidents was thus obvious. "We sold the chairs to an auctioneer for one-fifth of their original cost," says the assistant manager of the hotel. "They had already cost us twice their worth in angry patrons and needlessly discharged employees."

An English magazine says that Princess Henry of Battenberg is the only really literary member of the royal family. She has just written a history of the Isle of Wight which is to be published forthwith, but her most ambitious work is in German and is entitled "Trost im Teide." It was written within a year of the death of her husband, and although an English translation has been privately circulated in England, it has never been published there. It is said to show some marked ability and powers of expression.

Princess Henry's daughter, the present Queen of Spain, has also done some small things in the literary line. She wrote a small play in French for the members of the court at San Sebastian and she is said to have considerable knowledge of stage technic. But one always takes these royal productions with a grain of salt, because as a matter of fact they are often the work of some one who is not at all royal. No one supposes, for instance, that the German emperor actually paints the pictures politely credited to him, or writes the verses, or composes the plays and the sermons. There are always people who will do these things for royalty and hold their tongues about them, or who will at least give the royal work the final polish so that it can make a presentable bow to the public. There is, of course, no reason why royalty should not do creditable literary work, but the chances are against it. Good literary work demands originality, and royalty lives, moves, and has its being in an atmosphere of conventionality. To be original, to move one hair's breadth from the beaten path of custom is the one unpardonable sin for royalty, and under such conditions literature, to say the least of it, is handicapped.

There have been times in American history when an advocate of large families could not have cited the household of the White House as an example, says the Boston Globe, for small families have been the rule in the White House, and the census taker in more than one administration would have been obliged to report, "No family." Yet only two bachelors have been elected to the presidency, and one of these, Grover Cleveland, changed his condition by marrying before completing his first term. James Buchanan in his youth was a party to a romantic love affair, and after the death of the young lady he appears never to have thought of marrying. It has been said that few Presidents had what President Roosevelt would call large families. William Henry Harrison had the largest; he was the father of six sons and four daughters. He was the oldest man ever elected to the presidency. Hayes and Garfield had the next largest families; in the Hayes family were born eight children, and in the Garfield family seven, a large number in each case growing to maturity.

President Grant had four children, three sons and one daughter, and one of these sons, Frederick D. Grant, is a major-general in the army. Abraham Lincoln had four sons, Robert Todd Lincoln, who became Secretary of War under Presidents Garfield and Arthur, alone surviving to maturity. President Johnson had two daughters, Martha and Mary, Martha presiding over the White House during the frequent illnesses of her invalid mother.

President Arthur was a widower, and his sister presided over the White House. He had two children living, but his first child, a son, died in infancy. President Van Buren also was a widower. He had five sons, two of whom were Abraham, whose wife presided over the White House, and John, who was known as "Prince John." President Taylor had a son and two daughters, of whom one married Jefferson Davis.

President Pierce had three sons, two of whom died in infancy, and the third, a boy of thirteen, was killed in the presence of his parents in a railroad accident two months before his father's inauguration as President. President John Adams had a daughter and three sons, President Monroe had two daughters, and John Quincy Adams had several children. President Jefferson had five children, two of whom died in infancy. President McKinley's two daughters died while very young.

The London Chronicle says that diamonds are getting on the public nerve with the cutting of the great Cullinan. They have split it, and are making two stones of it, and when all is done it seems that we must calculate the value in carats. It is a matter of so much a carat. And the Cullinan stone at its biggest will be worth less than four million pounds, while its little brother will be only half as valuable. And this is nothing to the "Braganza," which weighs 1680 carats in its present state, and is worth, according to the expert, more than £58,000,000. This is—we may say it bluntly—not true. You can not eat a diamond, or drink it, or sleep in it, or make any use of it but to win a woman's smile. As a solemn fact of economy, it may be asserted that there is no man on earth who would give fifty-eight million pounds for a diamond. Because there is no man on earth that will buy the thing at the price he can not sell it at. Now is there a man who will buy a diamond for fifty-eight millions on the chance of another man's wanting another woman's smile?

According to the newspapers, it is the women who have taken exception to some of the straightforward talk in Robert Herrick's "Together." Evidently there are two sides to the question, even from a woman's point of view, as is shown by the following extract from a letter written by a clever Western woman: "Of course cludbon went off at a tangent, and if the diatribes of the club women elsewhere showed the same familiarity with the text as did those of our vicinity, it was a sad arraignment of the intelligence of the cult, for it was evident that not one had read the book. Some one had told them it concerned May and December bargains for mercenary consideration, and that was all they cared to know. But it is the people who have read the book who are doing the talking amongst themselves and to their friends. Some of our half-baked critics found it melodramatic and exaggerated, but women are prone to call it plain truth, and to recommend others to read it 'even if you have to buy it.' I know of one case where a woman is already regretting her divorce, in a way for since reading 'Together,' for the first time in her empty life she has begun to realize that there are two sides to a bargain, and that a man ought not to be a mere machine during the day, earning money for a woman's delectation, and an adoring satellite after working hours, worshipping miladi's social successes."

Forbes-Robertson, apropos of some recent sneers in London, has been saying a good word for American audiences and reviewers as compared with those of England: "I read the other day," he says, "an assertion by some one that American audiences were less cultivated than our own. It is such nonsense to talk like that. You will not find an audience more keen, more critical, more discriminating than a New York audience. Do you find such keenness about the drama in London? You must remember that there are critics in Boston, New York, or Chicago just as brilliant and as earnest as here. It is nonsense to write such things." And Mr. Robertson happens to know both sides of the sea.

During the repairing operations now being carried out at Exeter Cathedral workmen have extracted from the wall of the south tower a carved head which is said to be of Egyptian origin. In the opinion of antiquaries, the discovery of this head, which has been placed among the cathedral relics, points to the fact that a building existed on the site previous to the foundation of the Norman towers, commenced in the eleventh century and usually regarded as the most ancient portion of the edifice.

English Girl (with great distinctness, addressing the chef de gare)—Pardon, mon sieur! Voulez-vous chercher pour moi l'homme avec le mot, "cuisinier," autour de la couronne de son chapeau.—Punch.

W. & J. SLOANE

ORIENTAL RUGS SPECIAL SALE REDUCED DOMESTIC RUGS

In addition to our Special Sale of Domestic Rugs and Carpets, we offer until October 10 our ENTIRE ASSORTMENT of Oriental Rugs at

Until October 10 we offer our ENTIRE STOCK, including Wiltons, Brussels, Axminsters, Imperial Smyrnas, etc., both plain and figured, at a

Reductions of 20% to 40%

15% Reduction

The assortment embraces Daghestans, Beloochistans, Khivas, Cashmeres, Mahals, Serapis, Khorassans, Kirmanshahs, Keshans, Runners, etc., of our own selection and importation, and carrying our usual guarantee.

Special attention is directed to our large assortment of this season's designs in sizes 8:3x10:6, 9x12, 9x14:3, 10:6x12, 10:6x13:6, 11:3x15, 12x12, 12x15, and 12x18.

We Are Also Offering GREAT REDUCTIONS in CARPETS & ORIENTAL RUGS

Van Ness and Sutter

Marine View Residence

¶ We are offering for sale a magnificent home with large grounds, located in the choice residential district, on the sunny side of Washington Street, with unobstructed marine view. House contains 13 rooms, with additional bath rooms, servants' rooms, wine room, store room, laundry, etc., all perfectly modern and in good order. Lot 65 x 127.

PRICE $65,000

For further particulars and permit to inspect, apply to

G. H. UMBSSEN & CO., 20 Montgomery St.

HUNTER BALTIMORE RYE

HAS OBTAINED PREMIER HONORS AND MEDALS FOR BEING THE BEST BLENDED WHISKEY IN THIS COUNTRY; ITS GUARANTEE UNDER THE NATIONAL PURE FOOD LAW AS AN

Absolutely Pure Rye Whiskey

IS CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE OF ITS SUPERIORITY AND EXCELLENCE.

HENRY CAMPE & CO., Inc. Distributors for California and Nevada, San Francisco, Cal.

Byron Hot Springs

The waters cure rheumatism—the environment is perfect—the hotel comfortable and supplied with an unexcelled table. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, ground floor, James Flood Building; Peck-Judab Co., 789 Market St., or address hotel.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM

TOILET POWDER

A Positive Relief For PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all affections of the skin. Removes all odor of perspiration. Delightful after Shaving. Sold everywhere, or on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample Free. GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY, Newark, N.J.

this winter

Yosemite—will be open all winter. Take Santa Fe to Merced, then Yosemite Valley R. R. to El Portal. Stage ride (three and one-half hours) to Sentinel Hotel next morning.

Grand Canyon—Trails are open the year round. El Tovar Hotel on brink of Canyon under Fred Harvey management one of the finest hotels in Southwest. Our folders tell. Address

H. K. GREGORY, A. G. P. A., San Francisco or JNO. J. BYRNE, A. P. T. M., Los Angeles

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

An Englishman, witnessing his first baseball game, was struck by a hot one off the bat. On coming to, he asked, faintly: "What was it?" "A foul," they told him, "only a foul!" "My word!" he exclaimed, "I thought it was a mule."

A recent Parisian caricature shows a bearded Turk in a turban upon the crenellated roof of his house, looking through a field glass. "Allah is just," he exclaims. "Now that my neighbors' wives go about with faces uncovered I see that they are quite as homely as my own."

Beggs, Oklahoma, is said to be the place where a minister, marrying a negro couple, asked the woman: "Do you take this man for better or for worse?" She interrupted by explaining: "No, judge, I want him just as he is. If he gits any better he'll die, and if he gits any wuss I'll kill him myself."

Early in the forenoon a German peddler rapped timidly at the kitchen entrance. Mrs. Kelly, angry at being interrupted in her washing, flung open the door and glowered at him. "Did yez wish to see me?" she demanded in threatening tones. The peddler hacked off a few steps. "Vell, if I did," he assured her with an apologetic grin, "I got my vish; thank you."

A certain minister was deeply impressed by an address on the evils of smoking given at a recent synod. He rose from his seat, went over to a fellow minister, and said: "Brother, this morning I received a present of 100 good cigars. I have smoked one of them, but now I'm going home and burn the remainder in the fire." The other minister arose, and said it was his intention to accompany his reverend brother. "I mean to rescue the ninety and nine," he added.

A medical journal says that a handsome young lady stepped into the office of the young hachelor secretary of a State medical examining board. She (modestly)—Are you the secretary of the—State Board of Examiners? He (bashfully)—Yes, ma'am. She—I want a license to practice medicine in this State. He—You will have to be examined first. She—By you alone? He—No, ma'am; before the full board of examiners. She—Before the whole board! Why, that is terrible; I can not consent.

A colored woman of Alexandria was on trial before a magistrate charged with inhuman treatment of her offspring. Evidence was clear that the woman had severely beaten the youngster, aged some nine years, who was in court to exhibit his hattered condition. Before imposing sentence, his honor asked the woman whether she had anything to say. "Kin I ask yo' honah a question?" inquired the prisoner. The judge nodded affirmatively. "Well, then, yo' honah, I'd like to ask yo' whether yo' was ever the parent of a puctefly wuthless cullud chile."

The college president was entertaining a freshman at dinner, when the conversation turned upon football. To the student's surprise, the president displayed a thorough familiarity with the game, and proceeded to discuss it as earnestly as though it had been Greek or mathematics. Indeed, his treatment of the topic brought out so many points that the freshman had overlooked that the youth was moved to remark to his hostess: "Well, this talk with President Blank has showed me how true it is we never meet any one from whom we can't learn something!"

It was apparent that one of the conversationalists was an enthusiastic astronomer. He seemed sufficiently familiar with the smallest star to call it by its first name—that is, if stars have first names. Drawing his companion's attention to a particular star in close proximity to the handle of the dipper, he said: "Perhaps you may be able to appreciate the immensity of distance between that star and our earth when I say it would take more than 100 years for a forty-horse power automobile, running at full speed, to reach it." By the quality of awe in his friend's voice it was plain that he was unusually impressed, as he said: "No? A hundred years? Why, man, think of the gasoline bill."

An illustrious French prelate was at a great banquet, in company with many members of the French nobility and many other ecclesiastics. The conversation turned upon the life-long experience of priests, their insight into the depths of human nature, and the strange secrets of which, in virtue of their office, they must become the depositaries. To point his remarks, his eminence said: "For instance, gentlemen, the first confession I ever received was that of a murderer." At that moment, and while expressions of wonder, interest, and horror were still upon the lips of his auditors, the door opened and a nobleman of the highest rank, a man well known among them, entered the room. He saluted the company, and then paid his respects to the prince of the church, adding gracefully, as he turned to the company: "You are perhaps not aware, gentlemen, that I had the honor to be his eminence's first penitent." The consternation of the company and his eminence's state of mind may be imagined.

On the journey from Vienna to St. Petersburg, Cumberland, the thought-reader, entertained his fellow-passengers by guessing their thoughts. One of the travelers, a Polish Jew, who took the whole thing for a hoax, offered to pay Cumberland the sum of fifty roubles if he could divine his thoughts. Visibly amused, Cumberland acceded to his request and said: "You are going to the fair at Nishni-Novgorod, where you intend to purchase goods to the extent of twenty thousand roubles, after which you will declare yourself a bankrupt and compound with your creditors for three per cent." On hearing these words, the Jew gazed at the speaker with reverential awe. He then, without uttering a syllable, drew out of the leg of his hoot a shabby purse, and handed him the fifty roubles. Whereupon the great magician triumphantly inquired: "Then I have guessed your thoughts, eh?" "No," replied the Jew, "but you have given me a brilliant idea."

THE MERRY MUSE.

The Nifty-Thrifty Maiden.

I knew a maiden, thrifty some,
Who loved to save a nifty sum.
To clean her clothes their second season
A little gasoline she'd squeeze on.

Now this same maiden, thrifty some,
Upon her feet was thrifty some,
She'd dance till hot enough to smoke,
And she with gasoline asoak!

One day this maiden, thrifty some,
Danced dances up to fifty some;
Then burst aflame, runs the narration,
And saved the cost of her cremation.

—Puck.

Our Growing Vocabulary.

I purchased me a motor many, many years ago,
And used to mote me thisaway and that;
I slaughtered countless fauna and a dozen folk
Or so,
The world was sure my oyster, on a plat;
But now the outlook's different, and my motor gathers rust—
I spurn it—let it stand around and loaf;
I long for sport much stranger which is fuller far of danger—
Ah, how I'd rather aviate than chauf!
What fun is there in spinning through a city's dinky dinning?
How much I'd rather aviate than cbauf.

I'm sick of honking swiftly over common, stupid streets,
I'm sick of all the things the coppers do;
I'm ill of turning chickens into little fresh mince-
meats,

I'm bored of cutting ladies half in two.
I want to cleave the ether in a dizzy aeroplane
(Who doesn't is a dullard and an oaf)—
I long to skim the breezes like a bunch of well-skinned cheeses,
For I had rather aviate than chauf—
(I never, never bammer all this long-haired, newborn grammar,
So I had rather aviate than chauf).

—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Preparing the Advertisement.

We are getting him ready for college; he goes in a week,
Not, however, to learn a profession or Latin or Greek,
Or to tackle the myst'ries of science or pry into art;
No; our Jimmie goes there to assume a more difficult part.
He is end on the team, and he's known as an eat-
'em-up lad,
He's a piece of big art in the college's annual "ad."

Through the summer he limped from a sprain that he got in the fall,
Though they called it a tackle—another boy ran with the ball,
And our Jimmie went, swish, through the air like
a shot from a gun,
And they pulled him, half dead, from the pile, but the game had been won;
We have heard that "ad" drew one hundred and fifty new boys;
Now, he has to go back and make other publicity noise.

They have built a new building and boosted the president's pay,
And they've got quite a wad stuffed away in the bank, so they say;
Yes, our Jimmie helped some, but he'll carry that scar on his check,
And they may ship him home all disfigured and haggard and weak;
But they're fixing the "ad" that will bring them
the pupils next year,
And our Jimmie belongs in the thing, and his duty is clear.

—New York Sun.

In a Western court a negro was convicted of stealing a mule. Before the sentence was pronounced, the judge gave him an opportunity to speak for himself, and he said: "I wouldn't tuck der mule nohow if I hadn't read in de Testermint whar Jesus tuck a mule." The judge remarked: "Yes, but he didn't ride him to Kingston and try to sell him," and thereupon he gave the negro three years in the penitentiary.

A. Hirschman

For fine jewelry and silverware. 1641-1643
Van Ness Avenue.

BANKING

French Savings Bank

108 Sutter Street, near Montgomery
Paid-up Capital $ 600,000
Total Assets 4,270,800
Strictly a Savings Bank. Open Saturday
Evening from 7 to 8:30

OFFICERS—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur
Legallet, 1st Vice-President; Leon Boqueraz,
2d Vice-President; A. Bousquet, Secretary; P.
A. Bergerot, Attorney.
DIRECTORS—N. C. Babin, J. A. Bergerot,
Charles Carpy, Arthur Legallet, G. Belancy,
H. de St. Seine, J. M. Dupas, Leon Boqueraz,
J. E. Artigues, J. S. Godau, John Ginty.

SAFE DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT
The French-American Bank is located in the same building.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., San Francisco

Guaranteed Capital $ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash. 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds. 1,453,983.62
Deposits June 30, 1908. 34,474,554.23
Total Assets 37,055,263.31
OFFICERS—President, N. Oblandt; First
Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R.
Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourney; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells,
General Attorneys.
BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Oblandt,
Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte, Ign. Steinbart, I.
N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr.,
E. T. Kruse, and W. S. Goodfellow.
MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22d Streets. For receipt and payment of deposits only.

LONDON PARIS NATIONAL BANK

N. W. cor. Sutter and Sansome

CAPITAL - - - $250,000
SURPLUS - - - 620,000
Sig Greenebaum, H. Fleishhacker,
President, Vice-President and Mgr.
R. Altschul, Cashier

First National Bank

Berkeley, Cal.

Combined Resources over $5,500,000.00
A. W. NAYLOR, FRANK M. WILSON,
President, Vice-President.
F. L. NAYLOR, FRANK C. MORTIMER,
Cashier, Asst. Cashier.
W. S. WOOD, Trust Officer.
Depository of the
United States County of Alameda
State of California Town of Berkeley
BERKELEY BANK OF SAVINGS & TRUST CO.

THE BERKELEY NATIONAL BANK

United States Depository
Berkeley, Cal.

HOUSEHOLD AND COMMERCIAL ACCOUNTS INVITED
Directors—George P. Baxter, Pres.; J. W.
Richards, Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Bangs, Vice-
Pres.; Louis Titus, Dr. Thomas Addison, A. G.
Freeman, Duncan McDuffie, Perry T. Tompkins, F. L. Lipman, W. J. Hotchkiss, and Whitney Palache. P. H. ATKINSON, Cashier.

MARKET ST. 1st CON. 5%
Due 1924. Coupons March and September
UNITED R. R. of S. F. 4%
Due 1927. Coupons April and October
NORTH PAC. COAST R. R. 5%
Due 1912. Coupons January and July

SUTRO & CO.

BROKERS

412 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.
We have a Direct Wire to New York

NATOMA BONDS 6%

Gold Dredging

COUPONS APRIL AND OCTOBER
Due 1917
10 per cent retired annually determined by lot
RENEBOME & CO., Brokers
508 CALIFORNIA STREET

Connecticut Fire Insurance Company

Established 1850 OF HARTFORD
Total Assets $5,817,423
Surplus to Policy-Holders 2,118,394
BENJAMIN J. SMITH
Manager Pacific Department
ALASKA-COMMERCIAL BUILDING
San Francisco

WESTERN ASSURANCE COMPANY

TORONTO

U. S. Assets $2,493,154
" Surplus 483,989
PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT
1004 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE
SAN FRANCISCO
J. J. KENNY, W. L. W. MILLER,
Manager, Assistant Manager

THE CITIZENS' ALLIANCE, 920 Merchants
Exchange, calls the attention of the public to their Free
Labor Bureau, located at No. 10 City Hall Ave., San Francisco, and No. 804 Broadway, Oakland. All classes of male help furnished absolutely free.
"The Citizens' Magazine" for September is now ready. Subscription $1.00 per year. Orders solicited.

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

Débutantes and teas are the chief topic of the moment in the social world and announcements of events planned for these all-important young women are eagerly greeted.

Cards are out for practically all of the dancing clubs, save the Colonial Dances, and the Gayety Club has not as yet announced its plans for the winter, but is already a well assured fact that there is to be no dearth of dancing.

The engagement is announced of Miss Frances Reed, daughter of the late Reverend Frederick Reed and of Mrs. Henry C. Campbell of Sausalito, to Mr. Henry Milner Rideout of Boston. No date is announced for the wedding.

The wedding of Miss Gertrude Hyde-Smith, daughter of Mrs. Eleanor Hyde-Smith, to Mr. Baldwin Wood will take place on November 2 at the home of the bride on Fillmore Street. Miss Dorothy Gittings of Baltimore and Miss Helen Dean will be the bridesmaids. Mr. Stuart Lowery of Portland will act as best man.

The wedding of Miss Maude Payne, daughter of Mr. J. Eugene Freeman, to Mr. Samuel Russell Bogue took place on Wednesday evening at the home of the bride on Pacific Avenue. The ceremony was celebrated at nine o'clock by the Reverend Edward Morgan of St. Luke's Church. Miss Janet Coleman was the maid of honor and Mr. Knox Maddox acted as best man. About one hundred guests were present. After their return from their wedding journey Mr. Bogue and his bride will occupy an apartment on Washington Street, near Presidio Avenue.

The wedding of Miss Nannie Crittenden Van Wyck, daughter of Mrs. Sidney M. Van Wyck, to the Reverend Austin Brockenborough Chinn took place on Monday morning at Trinity Church. The ceremony was celebrated by Bishop William Ford Nichols at eleven o'clock. Miss Elizabeth Putnam, the niece of the bride, was her only attendant, and the bride's brother, Mr. Sidney Van Wyck, was the best man. After the wedding journey Mr. and Mrs. Chinn will make their home at Menlo Park.

The wedding of Miss Sara Drum to Mr. John William Gill of Redlands took place on Wednesday of last week at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. William Geer Hitchcock, in San Mateo. The ceremony was performed by Archbishop Riordan. There were no attendants of either bride or groom and only the members of the respective families were present at the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Gill will make their home in Redlands.

Dr. and Mrs. George B. Somers entertained at a dinner on Wednesday evening of last week in honor of Miss Evelyn Norwood and Mr. William Breeze, whose wedding was solemnized on Monday evening, the 28th. Their guests were Miss Ethel Lincoln, Miss Edna Hamilton, Miss Jeannette Hooper, Miss Evelyn Norwood, Mr. Herbert Punnet, Mr. John Kalston Hamilton, Mr. Frank Peterson, and Mr. William Breeze.

Miss Jennie Crocker was hostess at an informal luncheon in the Hotel St. Francis Thursday afternoon. Her guests were Mr. Walter Martin, Miss Virginia Jolliffe, Miss Gertrude Jolliffe, and Miss Mary Jolliffe.

Mrs. William B. Wilshire will entertain at a tea on October 14 in honor of her débutante daughter, Miss Doris Wilshire.

The Monday Night Skating Club has re-organized under the direction of Mrs. Ynez Shorb Buck and the dates of the meetings are: October 12, October 26, November 9, November 23, and December 7.

Mrs. William Cary Van Fleet was the hostess at a dance on Friday (yesterday) evening at California Club Hall in honor of her three sons, Allan, Clark, and Cary.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Martin entertained at a luncheon on Sunday at the Burlingame Club, at which her guests were Mr. and Mrs. Willard Drown, Miss Jennie Crocker, Miss Virginia Jolliffe, Miss Gertrude Jolliffe, Mr. Templeton Crocker, Mr. Thornwell Mullally, Dr. Tracy Russell, and Mr. Duane Hopkins.

Mrs. Charles O. Alexander was the hostess at a luncheon on Sunday last at the Burlingame Club, at which her guests were Miss Harriett Alexander, Miss Jeanne Gallois, Miss Mary Keeney, Mr. Wilherforce Williams, Mr. Samuel Hamilton, and Mr. George Willcutt.

Mrs. Covington Pringle was the hostess at a luncheon on Wednesday of last week at her home on Laguna Street in honor of Miss Maude Payne.

Mr. Russell Bogue was the host at a dinner and theatre party on Friday evening of last week in honor of his fiancée, Miss Maude Payne. The other guests were Miss Janet Coleman, Miss Gertrude Ballard, Mr. Cyril Tolbin, and Mr. Knox Maddox.

Mrs. Joseph L. King entertained at a tea on Monday afternoon in honor of Mrs. Orville Pratt. Assisting in receiving were Mrs. Lansing Kellogg, Mrs. Willard Drown, Mrs. George Cadwalader, Miss Mary Keeney, Miss Martha Calhoun, and Miss Edith Simpson.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a résumé of movements to and from this city and Coast and the whereabouts of absent Californians:

Mrs. James B. Crockett and Mrs. Samuel Knight sailed on Tuesday for Japan, where they will travel for the next two months.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. Scott left on Friday of last week for the East, where they will spend some weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hammond and Miss Julia Langhorne have arrived in New York from Europe and are guests at the Waldorf-Astoria.

Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Wilson and Miss Maude Wilson have closed their Belvedere home and are now occupying an attractive apartment on Pacific Avenue for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. James Carolan will leave in a few days for the East with their daughter, Mrs. Tinlow, who has spent the summer with them. Mr. and Mrs. Carolan will return after a brief visit.

Mr. and Mrs. Orville Pratt (formerly Miss Emily Wilson) have arrived from Europe and are at the Pratt home on California Street.

Miss Emma Grimwood has returned to her home in Fruitvale, after a visit to Mrs. J. B. Crockett at Burlingame.

Mrs. William P. Fuller and Miss Lucie King left on Tuesday for a stay of several weeks in New York.

Miss Edith Pillsbury, who has been abroad for several years, is now in New York and will return shortly to San Francisco.

Mr. and Mrs. George M. Pinckard have gone East for a visit of a few weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Dixwell Hewitt have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Sharon at Menlo Park.

Dr. and Mrs. Grant Selfridge have been spending a week at Del Monte.

Mrs. Louis Parrott is in Paris, where she will spend most of the winter.

Mrs. Edward Barron, Miss Marguerite Barron, and Miss Evelyn Barron are at the Fairmont. The Misses Barron will leave very shortly for England to remain for a year and will be joined there later by Mrs. Barron.

Miss Linda Cadwalader has returned to town, after spending some time at Burlingame as the guest of Mrs. Henry T. Scott.

Mrs. Hyde-Smith will sail during November for Honolulu, where she will spend some time as the guest of her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Dillingham.

Captain and Mrs. William H. McKittrick returned last week to their home in Santa Barbara, after a brief visit to Miss Houghton in this city.

Mr. George Cameron has returned from a stay of four months in Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. Garret W. McEnerney are expected to return from Europe in about ten days.

Miss Claire Nichols has returned from a visit to Miss Frances Howard at San Mateo.

Mrs. Sidney B. Cushing and Miss Eleanor Cushing have been spending a few days in San Mateo as the guests of Mrs. Charles E. Green.

Mr. Boyd Van Benthuyzen left on Friday of last week for an Eastern visit of several weeks' duration.

Mr. E. W. Hopkins and Miss Florence Hopkins will return from the East about October 15.

Mrs. A. H. Loughborough and Miss Elizabeth Zane have returned from a visit to friends in the Napa Valley.

Miss Augusta Foute has been visiting at Menlo Park as the guest of Miss Florence Breckinridge.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Welch, who have made their home at San Mateo for the past few seasons, will occupy their Eddy-Street home this winter.

Miss Lillie O'Connor is the guest of Mrs. William H. McKittrick in Santa Barbara.

Miss Margaret Stow of Santa Barbara has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. James Bishop in this city.

Mr. Barbour Lathrop and Mr. Drummond MacGavin have returned, after several months' travel in Mexico, the West Indies, and Europe.

Mrs. Marion P. Maus has gone to Paso Robles to remain during the time that Colonel Maus, U. S. A., is at Atascadero at the army manoeuvres.

Mr. Charles Rollo Peters has returned to his home in Monterey, after a visit to friends in this city.

Miss Olga Atherton has been visiting her aunt, Mrs. Edward L. Eyre, at Menlo Park.

Miss Stella Kane, who has been visiting her aunt, Mrs. George W. Gibbs, has returned to her home in the East.

Mr. Joseph Eastland, who has been traveling abroad for some time, has recently arrived in Paris.

Mrs. Burr M. Weeden has arrived from the East and will make her home with her brother, the Reverend William Hayes.

Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus Pierce have taken apartments at the St. Xavier for the winter.

Mr. Parker Whitney has returned from an Eastern visit.

Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Breeze, who are spending their honeymoon at Tahoe Tavern, will remain there until the 15th.

The Tevices closed up their chalet and houseboat on Lake Tahoe last week and returned on Tuesday. The Bahocks are the only remaining cottagers at Lake Tahoe, and they will return to San Francisco on Friday next.

Mrs. Rufus Steele, wife of the Sunday editor of the Call, is visiting Del Monte.

At the Hotels.

Among recent registrations at the Hotel St. Francis were: Mr. W. R. Wheeler, Assistant Secretary of Commerce; Mr. Nat Goodwin, of Reno, Nevada; Colonel Cody; Dr. E. W. Reed, U. S. N.; Rev. Frank Robinson and family of Shanghai; Mr. D. C. Eccles, of Ogden; Mr. Henry Weaver, of St. Louis; ex-Governor J. H. McGraw, of Washington; Miss Cora Peahody.

Among recent registrations at Hotel Argonaut are: Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Pickard, of Portland, Maine; Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Kay, of Vancouver, B. C.; Mr. A. Balk, of Dunedin, N. Z.; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sinclair and Mr. and Mrs. J. Lentzie, of New York City; Rev. Leight Layman and family; Miss J. McGraw, of San Jose, Cal.; Mr. and Mrs. Fred R. Morgan, of Toronto, Canada.

Among recent registrations at the Fairmont Hotel are Judge and Mrs. Sepulveda, Mr. Grayson Lewis, Mr. W. H. Gerry, Mrs. C. Madison Wood, Miss Wood and Miss Florence Wood, Mr. P. D. Spaulding, Mrs. J. W. Senni and maid, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Letts and family, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Morton, and Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Pease, all of Los Angeles; Mrs. Fred Cox and Miss Ted Cox, Mrs. J. H. Glide and Miss Eula Glide, of Sacramento; Mrs. M. J. White, Mr. M. J. White, Jr., and Miss Alice Wilson, of Georgia; Mrs. M. T. Campbell, of New York; Captain C. E. Clark and Mrs. Clark, U. S. N.; Mr. Thomas Hartigan, of Manila; Mr. A. L. De Loreza, of China; M. von Calumnski, of Austria; Mr. and Mrs. Mark H. Wheeler, of Victoria, B. C.; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Holmes, of St. Louis; Mr. H. B. Penhallow, of Hawaii.

At Out-of-Town Hotels.

Among the arrivals from San Francisco at Byron Hot Springs during the past week were the following: Rev. T. R. Lynch, Mr. and Mrs. James Shea, Mr. V. W. Gaskill, Mr. and Mrs. W. Chisholm, Mrs. A. McLeod.

Among recent arrivals at Hotel del Coronado from San Francisco were Mr. J. H. Huie, Mr. Edward Kendall, Mr. and Mrs. S. Ickelheimer, Mr. Sig. Niederberger, Mr. James H. Schwahacher, Mrs. L. Schwahacher and nurse.

Among registrations at Del Monte from San Francisco are the following: Miss G. Rosemond, Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Haight, Mr. and Mrs. William Crocker, Mr. and Mrs. Warren E. Murray, Mrs. George H. Newman, Mrs. J. F. Liddell, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Crowley, Mr. Frank Mathews, Mr. Oscar Frank, Mr. R. E. Warfield, Miss Alice S. Griffith, Mr. and Mrs. John G. Wetmore, Mrs. L. C. Pistolesi, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Baehr, Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Kern, Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Parks, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Nauman, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. McDougall, Mr. and Mrs. Phineas F. Ferguson, Miss Laura Ferguson, Miss Alice Lockwood, Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Hale, Mr. and Mrs. Guy Lathrop, Mr. Fred H. Kline, Mrs. L. F. Franks, Miss Lucy Baker Jerome, Mr. H. G. Platt, Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Neal.

The famous Guinness family is no nouveau riche concern. The first Guinness, according to the records of the family, was alive and kicking in Ireland somewhere in the thirteenth century. Only the name then was Magennis. Along about 1300 a McGuineez, squire to some valiant knight, was himself knighted on the field of battle and thereafter was known as Sir Don Guinness. Another of the family was created Viscount Magennis of Iveagh, but the title became extinct in the seventeenth century. The fortunes of the Guinness family were laid in 1759, when Arthur Guinness, gentleman, of Duhlin, bought the St. James's Gate Brewery in the Irish capital from Mark Rainsford. A couple of years later he married an heiress. It was their son who married the greatest heiress of the day, the daughter of Benjamin Lee. In addition to harrels of money, she had the blue blood of Edward III in her veins and was of the proud families of Percy, Stafford, and Mortimer. They named their son and heir Benjamin Lee Guinness, and when he came into his own he spent a fabulous sum in restoring the ruined Duhlin Cathedral to its present magnificent state. For this Queen Victoria made him a haronnet. The present Lord Ardilaun is his son.

The Hotel Manx, which was opened to the public last week, makes a new and creditable addition to the Union Square district. In appointments and furnishings this hotel ranks with the best San Francisco has to offer. N. M. Kellar, its manager, was formerly manager of the St. Regis, New York. The chef, Emil Burgmeister, was the working chef of the St. Regis at the same time.

Miss Ydya Kyakst, who has been described by the St. Petersburg papers as "the salvation of the Russian ballet," has made her English debut at the Empire Theatre, in London.

THE LEADING NEW YORK HAT, "THE MILLER," Eugene Korn, Agent, 15 Kearny St.

Pears'

There's a unique adaptability about Pears' Soap. It makes the child enjoy its bath, helps the mother preserve her complexion, and the man of the house finds nothing quite so good for shaving.

Have you used Pears' Soap?

Pears' the soap for the whole family

FAIRMONT HOTEL

Subway Entrance from Powell Street

NOW OPEN

The only one of its kind in California

Guests may now leave cars at Powell and California and go direct to the elevators

Palace Hotel Company

Why Not Make Your Home At The Hotel Jefferson

Turk and Gough Streets
Facing Jefferson Square

A superior class hotel with every modern convenience and comfort. Operated on the American and European plans. Special rates to permanent guests. Special attention paid to the table—we invite comparisons. Management Noah W. Gray, formerly manager Alexander Young Hotel, Honolulu, and Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

You Can Live At The Hotel Jefferson Better And For Less Than At Home

DEL MONTE CAT SHOW

October 16 and 17

The first and best to be held since the fire. A full entry list.

Special railroad and hotel rates. Address:

Miss GERTRUDE BLAINE, Supt.

2428 Pine St., San Francisco

H. R. WARNER, Manager

Hotel Majestic

(Sutter and Gough)

A homelike hotel for refined people. Very best cuisine. Moderate prices. Rates on application.

Hotel Argonaut

Society of California Pioneers Building Fourth Street near Market, San Francisco Commercial, family; 400 rooms; rooms with detached bath, $1 per day; rooms with private bath, $1.50 and up per day; breakfast, 50c luncheon, 50c; dinner, including wine, $1 Seating capacity, 500. The Hotel Argonaut's free bus meets all trains at ferries, steamship landings and all depots. EDWARD ROLKIN Manager.

TAE OCULARIUM
Henry Kahnt Co.
OPTICIANS
 PERFECT FITTING
EYEGASSES
 AT MODERATE PRICES
644 MARKET ST.
 OPP. PALACE HOTEL
 BRANCA 1309 VAN NESS AVE.

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"
 Building, concrete, steel and marble.
 Located, most fashionable shopping district.
 210 rooms, 135 baths.
 Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests.
 Most refined hostelry in Seattle.
 Absolutely fireproof.
 English Grill.
Rates, $1.00 up

FOR SALE—Finest residential lot in San Francisco, north side Pacific Avenue, between Devisadero and Broderick Streets, 63 ft. 9 in. by 132 ft. 7 in. Unsurpassed and unobstructible view of entire bay and city. Apply to owner, E. Clemens Horst, 215 Pine Street, San Francisco.

A woman with college education, experienced teacher, trained in editorial work, wants employment immediately in any way for which she is fitted. Address TEACHER, care Argonaut.

Hotel Rafael
 San Rafael, Cal.
 Open year around. Headquarters Automobile League. New and commodious garage. Fifty minutes from San Francisco. Complete change of climate. Tiburon or Sausalito Ferry. All modern conveniences.
 F. N. Orpin, Proprietor.

Sherman, Clay & Co., occupying this entire building at Kearny and Sutter Streets, S. F., are headquarters for every kind of musical instrument from Steinway pianos down. You have no need to go elsewhere for any article pertaining to the music business.

Sherman, Clay & Co.
STEINWAY AND OTHER PIANOS—
VICTOR TALKING MACHINES
Kearny and Sutter, S. F.
 635 Van Ness Ave. | Broadway at 13th
 San Francisco | Oakland

Hotel del Coronado
 Motto: "BEST OF EVERYTHING"
 Most Delightful Climate on Earth
 American Plan. Summer rates $3.50 per day each and upward, or $21.00 per week each and upward
 "Good Music" and "Fine Automobile Road, Los Angeles-Riverside to Coronado."
 Golf, Tennis, Polo, and other outdoor sports every day in the year.
 New 700-foot ocean pier, for fishing. Boating and Bathing are the very best. Send for booklet to MORGAN ROSS, Manager,
 Coronado Beach, Cal.
 Or see H. F. NORCROSS, Agent,
 334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles.
 Tel. A 6789; Main 3917.
 22d Street and Broadway

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy officers who are or have been stationed at points on the Pacific Coast:

Colonel John B. Bellinger, U. S. A., depot quartermaster, has returned to Atascadero for duty, after spending a few days in town in connection with his duties as superintendent of the army transport service in San Francisco.

Colonel P. S. Bonus, Ninth Cavalry, U. S. A., sailed from Manila on September 21 for this port.

Major Elisha S. Benton, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., Fort Miley, has been ordered to report on October 13 at the Army General Hospital, Presidio of San Francisco, to the board appointed for physical examination, and on October 14 will supervise the walking test to be undergone by himself and Major George W. Getchell, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A.

Major C. de W. Wilcox, General Staff, U. S. A., sailed for Manila on the transport Thomas on Monday last.

Major William M. Wright, Eighth Infantry, has been ordered to proceed to Atascadero to report for duty.

Major George W. McIver, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., in charge of the School of Musketry, Presidio of Monterey, has been authorized to ship the Benet-Mercie automatic machine gun, complete, just sent to that school for test and report as to its tactical value, to the Camp of Instruction, Atascadero, for the purpose of making certain firing tests and exhibiting it to the officers assembled at that camp.

Captain Sydney A. Coleman, U. S. A., American military attaché at London, made a balloon ascension on September 20 with the Hon. Charles Stewart Rolls, captain of the London section of the British army motor reserve. They reached an altitude of 5500 feet.

Captain John P. Ryan, Sixth Cavalry, U. S. A., will arrive here on the next transport from his station in Manila.

Captain John T. Nance, Ninth Cavalry, U. S. A., has been granted four months' leave of absence.

Captain Jesse McI. Carter, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., has been ordered to Atascadero for duty and will report on or about October 15.

Captain Jacques de L. Lafitte, Twelfth Infantry, U. S. A., now in New York on leave of absence, has been ordered to report to the commanding officer, Twelfth Infantry, U. S. A., Fort Jay, Governor's Island, New York, for temporary duty in connection with the movement of troops to Philadelphia, and upon completion of this duty Captain Lafitte will revert to a status of leave.

Captain S. B. Bootes, commissary, U. S. A., sailed for the Orient on the transport leaving this city on Monday.

Commander J. A. Hoogewerff, U. S. N., sailed on the transport Thomas on Monday last for the Asiatic Station.

Commander G. R. Slocum, U. S. N., has been commissioned a commander from July 19.

Lieutenant-Commander James E. Walker, U. S. N., sailed for his new station in the Orient on Monday last.

First Lieutenant T. C. Turner, U. S. M. C., has been ordered to report to the president of the Marine Examining Board, Mare Island, for examination for promotion.

Lieutenant Dennis P. Quinlan, Fifth Cavalry, U. S. A., Fort Huachuca, Arizona, has been granted two months' leave, to take effect on the return of his troop to their post from the manoeuvres at Atascadero, California.

Lieutenant James E. Fecht, Ninth Cavalry, U. S. A., sailed on the Thomas this week for Manila and will join his regiment.

Lieutenant William S. Browning, First Field Artillery, U. S. A., Presidio of San Francisco, has been ordered to proceed to Atascadero to join his battery.

Lieutenant Reginald H. Kelly, Fourth Infantry, U. S. A., has been ordered to report to Lieutenant-Colonel William A. Nichols, Thirteenth Infantry, U. S. A., president of an examining board at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, for examination to determine his fitness for promotion.

Lieutenant William J. McCaughey, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., has been granted twenty days' leave of absence, to take effect upon the expiration of the sick leave granted him.

Lieutenant Henry F. Lincoln, Medical Reserve Corps, U. S. A., now at the Presidio of San Francisco awaiting orders, will report to the commanding officer of that post for duty.

The Metropolitan Opera House in New York will be made more cosmopolitan by the engagement of the Danish tenor, Cornelius now of the Royal Opera House of Copenhagen. It is understood that he is secured for the next three years at an annual salary of $17,500. He has sung at Bayreuth, and Mrs. Wagner regards him as one of the finest living tenors in Wagnerian parts.

Frank Campeau, who did such excellent work as Trampas in "The Virginian," is to retire from the stage at the end of the season.

Love and the Aeronaut.

Won't you come and fly with me?
 I know sky paths all untraveled,
 Cloud banks, cool as cool can be,
 Ways through stars to be unraveled;
 Skirt with me the rainbows red,
 Flutter through the lazy hours
 Like the fleecy clouds and thread
 Vapory lanes and untraced showers.

Up and up and up—away!
 Leave the hills and clear the mountain,
 Dripping with the showery spray
 As a song bird in the fountain.
 Till the lights that twinkle far
 Where poor mortals fret and ponder
 Seem as distant as the star
 Twinkling in the heavens yonder.

Don't you feel the spread of wings?
 Don't you hear the anchor slipping?
 Bid farewell to earthly things—
 Heavens, Love! The gas bag's ripping!
 Quick, your hand, Love! Do not quake!
 Shades of Vergil, Homer, Sallust!
 We are just above a lake—
 I must throw you out as ballast!
 —J. W. Foley.

Mme. Blanche Arral's Concert.

Mme. Blanche Arral, who has appeared in Bucharest, Paris, St. Petersburg, and Brussels, will give a concert at the Van Ness Theatre next Sunday afternoon, under the management of Will L. Greenbaum. A grand opera orchestra under the direction of Paul Steindorff will play the accompaniments for five great arias announced in the programme arranged by Mme. Arral. The grand opera selections are from the works of Adam, Mozart, Thomas, and Saint-Saens, and in addition to these there will be a group of songs with piano accompaniment. The orchestra will also give several numbers.

Manager Greenbaum believes that music lovers will find in Mme. Arral a great artiste, and that her singing will cause something of such surprise as greeted the first appearances here of Giannini and Tetrizzini. It will be the first time in twelve years that a vocal concert with orchestral accompaniment has been offered.

Seats may be secured in advance at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s. General admission, $1.

Nearly fifty of the members of the New England Society of California Pioneers of '49 participated in the twenty-first annual meeting held at the United States Hotel in Boston, last month. At the business meeting the "Forty-Niners" elected officers as follows: President, Henry W. Bowen of Roslindale; vice-presidents, Edward O. Carpenter of Yonkers, N. Y., Captain John Weston of Somerville; treasurer, Isaac S. Pear of Cambridge; secretary, Stephen W. Foster of Boston. It was voted that, when the society ceases to exist, all the property and relics shall be donated to the Essex Institute in Salem. The society has upon its membership roll 544 names. Of the 171 who are living, ninety-two are more than eighty years of age.

Since the opening of the Powell-Street Subway, as the new tunnel entrance of the Fairmont has come to be officially called, it has jumped into immediate popularity. It cuts down the elevation and the incline fully one-third and adds greatly to the accessibility of the Fairmont. For all its magnificent situation—overlooking and commanding the whole panorama of bay and city—the Fairmont is only five minutes' ride from the ferries on the Sacramento-Street car or the California-Street cable cars. It is but ten minutes from the Third and Townsend Station.

F. M. Howarth, creator of the humorous characters "of E. Z. Mark" and "Lulu and Leander," which were familiar to readers of the comic papers, died in September last at his home in Germantown, a suburb of Philadelphia. He was about forty-five years old.

DR. ROBERT E. O'CONNELL, DR. GEORGE D. O'CONNELL, DENTISTS, Hastings Building, Post Street and Grant Avenue. Tel. Douglas 2733.

YOUR HAND
 is the only one that can unlock your box in our Safe Deposit Vaults. Your valuables in one of our steel boxes can not be lost by theft or fire. For this protection $4.00 per year and up.
CROCKER SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS
 CROCKER BUILDING Junction Post and Market, S. F.

After using this brand you will not bother with any other
Old Gilt Edge Whiskey
Rye or Bourbon

Hotel St. Francis
 The spirit of good service and the facilities that produce it.
 UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF JAMES WOODS

Tennent's
 TRADE MARK
J. R. Tennent
Ale and Stout
 from Wellpark Brewery Glasgow, Scotland
 Forbes Bros., Agents, 1926 Sutter St.

Roy C. Ward Jas. W. Dean
 Jas. K. Polk Geo. E. Billings
GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.
 ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE EFFECTED
 312 California Street. Phone Douglas 2283
 San Francisco, Cal.

EDUCATIONAL
IRVING INSTITUTE Boarding and Day School for Girls
 2126 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
 Music, languages, art, elocution. Kindergarten, primary, grammar, high school, and advanced grades. Accredited by the universities. Twenty-ninth year. Non-sectarian. Pupils admitted at any time. New term opens Monday, August 3.
 MISS ELLA M. PINKHAM, Principal.
CALIFORNIA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
 Irving Institute Building
 Full corps of teachers in every department. Send for catalogue.
 HERMANN GENSS, President.

THE HAMLIN SCHOOL
 A Boarding and Day School for Girls
 Accredited by the California universities and by Eastern colleges. Advanced courses of study are offered to high school graduates and to those who have left school, with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to a school diploma. Pupils charged from the week of entrance.
 Classes in Instrumental and Vocal Music and in Drawing and Painting are formed and facilities are given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basket Ball, etc. For particulars, address
 MISS HAMLIN,
 2230 Pacific Avenue, San Francisco.

MISS FRIEND'S
 Boarding and Day School for Girls
 College, preparatory and general courses
105 TILTON AVE.
 San Mateo, Cal.

Oakland Conservatory of Music
 1170 Madison Street, Oakland, Cal.
 The largest, oldest established, and most thoroughly equipped school of genuine musical instruction on the Pacific Coast.
 Conducted on the lines of the most noted European and Eastern schools.
 Full prospectus on application.
 Director, ADOLF GREGORY.

PENNSYLVANIA, Ogontz School P. O.
OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES
 Twenty minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. The late Mr. Jay Cooke's fine property. Miss SYLVIA J. EASTMAN, Miss ABBY A. SUTHERLAND, Principals.

Miss Harker's School
 Home and Day School for Girls. Certificate admits to College. Excellent Departments in Music and Art. New building, thoroughly modern, steam heated. Address,
 MISS HARKER, Palo Alto, Cal.

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

Wigg—I have a noiseless typewriter. Wagg—Is she a deaf mute?—Philadelphia Record.

“What ails me, doc?” asked the genial cluh-man. “You need a job. You’re suffering from overrest.”—New York Sun.

Mrs. Benham—How much did you pay the minister when we were married? Benhom—He fined me five dollars.—Harper's Weekly.

The Lady—Little boy, don't you know smoking will shorten your life? The Kid—Shucks! Wot do I care? I've seen every-ting dere is.—Boston Traveler.

Focetious Friend (teasingly)—Well, which rules—you or your wife? Mr. Youngæed (with hauteur)—You forget we can afford to keep a cook.—Baltimore American.

Stella—So your father handled him without gloves? Bello—Yes, and it would have been better for poor dear George if he had done it without shoes.—New York Sun.

Prospective Best Man—Got the marriage license yet? Prospective Bridegroom—No; I'm not going to get that until the last thing. She may go back on me.—Chicago Tribune.

“Have you ever loved and lost,” sighed the swain. “Nope,” responded the maiden, promptly. “I've won every breach of promise suit I ever brought.”—Cleveland Leader.

“Life is largely a pretense.” “Say the rest of it.” “I used to have to pretend that I liked cigarettes when I was a kid, and now it's the same with grand opera.”—Kansas City Journal.

Guide—What do you think of that? Isn't it a magnificent view? Miss Blassay—I must confess my disappointment. But then (apologetically), I've seen postals of the place, you know.—Puck.

Boreleigh—Yes, Miss Doris, I suffah dweadfully from insomnia, y' know. Miss Doris (suppressing a yawn)—Did you ever try talking to yourself, Mr. Boreleigh?—Boston Transcript.

“Do you regard the stage as an educator?” “Not exactly,” answered Miss Cayenne. “It would be unfortunate if we were to get our ideas of society from the problem play and our ideas of costume from the musical comedy.”—Washington Star.

“See here,” said the tailor, as he headed the young man off, “do you cross the street every time you see me to keep from paying the bill you owe me?” “I should say not,” replied the young man. “Then why do you do it?” asked the knight of the tape. “To keep you from asking for it,” answered the other.—Chicago Daily News.

Horace—I can't understand you girls. Now, you hate Mabel and yet you just kissed her. Helty—I know; but just see how the freckles show where I kissed the powder off.—The Tailor.

Marie—I think Chollie is a delightful dancer; he's so light on his feet! Lillian—When you're better acquainted with Chollie you'll discover that he's light at both ends!—Town and Country.

“There are some points about your writings that resemble Milton,” said the editor. “Do you think so?” cried the delighted author. “Yes,” the editor continued, “you employ almost the same punctuation marks.”—Stray Stories.

Miss Screecher—I wonder if Uncle Jim remembered me when he made his will? I used to sing for him. Lowyer—Yes, he evidently remembered you—at least your name isn't mentioned in the document.—Chicago Daily News.

Mulligan—The hys say ye licked poor Casey. Shure, he niver hurt iny man's feelin's. Harrigan—He's a snake in the grass. The blackguard referred to me as his contempirary, and I'll be the contempirary to no man livin'.—Puck.

“Why he so wrapped up in purely mercenary considerations?” said the persuasive campaigner. “Why not join us and fight for the cause?” “Young man,” answered Mr. Dustin Stax, “I'm not fighting for causes; I'm fighting for results.”—Washington Star.

English Clergyman—And when you arrive in London, my dear lady, don't fail to see St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey. Fair American—You het; I'll rattle those off sure; but what I've been hankering to see, ever since I was knee-high to a grasshopper, is the Church of England!—Punch.

Six-Years-Old Harry—Pa, if I get married will I have a wife like ma? Pa—Very likely. Six-Years-Old Harry—And if I don't get married, will I have to be an old bachelor like Uncle Tom? Pa—Very likely. Six-Years-Old Harry—Well, pa, it's a mighty tough world for us men, ain't it?—Success.

“Oh, I say,” remarked the Bluffer to his brother drummers in an endeavor to reawaken interest, “did you chaps hear that old Goldman, the proprietor of the Slowtown station restaurant, has just died?” “Has he?” drawled Snaffle, unsympathetically. “To whom did he leave the sandwiches?”—New York Globe.

SCHMIDT LITHOGRAPH CO. 36TH YEAR PHONE DOUGLAS 200 CALIFORNIA MADE LITHOGRAPH CO. SCHMIDT LITHOGRAPH CO. LABELS CARTONS ETC. SECOND AND BRYANT STS. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. SAN FRANCISCO, LOS ANGELES, PORTLAND, SEATTLE.

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS Bear the script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label. Get "Improved," no tacks required. Wood Rollers Tin Rollers

H. J. COOPER Expert Accountant and Auditor 705 KAMM BUILDING 717 MARKET STREET Phone Douglas 1342 San Francisco

Bonestell, Richardson & Co. PAPER The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us. CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE 118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna, San Francisco.

Toyo Kisen Kaisha (ORIENTAL S. S. CO.) S. S. America Maru (via Manila) Tuesday, Oct. 20, 1908 S. S. Hongkong Maru Tuesday, Nov. 17, 1908 S. S. Tenyo Maru Friday, Dec. 11, 1908 Steamers sail from company's piers, Nos. 42-44, near foot of Second Street, 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Hiogo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing. Round-trip tickets at reduced rates. For freight and passage apply at office, 240 James Flood Building. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

MT. TAMALPAIS AND MUIR WOODS VIA SAUSALITO FERRY FOOT OF MARKET ST. LEGAL HOLIDAYS—SUNDAY TIME

Mr. Publisher: All the mechanical work on THE ARGONAUT is done by us. WILLIAMS PRINTING CO. Phone Douglas 2905 406 Sutter St.

Clubbing List. By special arrangement with the publisher and by concessions in price on both sides, we are enabled to make the following offer, open to all subscribers direct to this office. Subscribers in renewing subscriptions to Eastern periodicals will please mention the date of expiration in order to avoid mistakes: American Magazine and Argonaut $4. Argosy and Argonaut 4. Atlantic Monthly and Argonaut 6. Blackwood's Magazine and Argonaut 6. Century and Argonaut 7. Commoner and Argonaut 4. Cosmopolitan and Argonaut 4. Current Literature and Argonaut 5. English Illustrated Magazine and Argonaut 4. Forum and Argonaut 6. Harper's Bazar and Argonaut 4. Harper's Magazine and Argonaut 6. Harper's Weekly and Argonaut 6. House Beautiful and Argonaut 4. International Magazine and Argonaut 4. Judge and Argonaut 7. Leslie's Weekly and Argonaut 6. Life and Argonaut 7. Lippincott's Magazine and Argonaut 5. Littell's Living Age and Argonaut 9. Mexican Herald and Argonaut 10. Munsey's Magazine and Argonaut 4. Nineteenth Century and Argonaut 7. North American Review and Argonaut 8. Out West and Argonaut 5. Overland Monthly and Argonaut 4. Political Science Quarterly and Argonaut 4. Puck and Argonaut 7. Review of Reviews and Argonaut 5. Scribner's Magazine and Argonaut 6. Smart Set and Argonaut 5. St. Nicholas and Argonaut 6. Sunset and Argonaut 4. Theatre Magazine and Argonaut 5. Thrice-a-Week New York World (Democratic) and Argonaut 4. Weekly New York Tribune (Republican) and Argonaut 4. Weekly New York Tribune, Weekly New York World, and Argonaut 5.

THE LATEST STYLES IN Choice Woolens H. S. BRIDGE & CO. Merchant Tailors 108-110 Sutter St. French Bank Bldg

Press Clippings Are money-makers for Contractors, Suppliers, Houses, Business Men and Corporations. ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU Phone, Kearny 392. 88 First Street

WE are thoroughly equipped to decorate and furnish country homes—in the matter of wall hangings, cretons, draperies, curtains, furniture and rugs.

Furniture Carpets Rugs Draperies D. N. & E. WALTER & CO. Wholesale Retail Since 1858 Van Ness and Sacramento

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXIII. No. 1647.

SAN FRANCISCO, OCTOBER 17, 1908.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10 payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company." Entered at the San Francisco postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breems Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opera. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at F and Thirteenth Streets. The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Denison News Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains. Published at 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal. Telephone, Kearny 5895.

THIRTY-SECOND YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: Governor Gillett—The Direct Primary in Oregon—Dog and Dog—The Logic of Equal Suffrage—War Clouds in Europe—A Bugaboo Exploded—Alternative Plainly Stated—The Labor Agitator and the Cure—The Cliff House—Editorial Notes.....	241-243
CAMPAIGN TOPICS.....	244
OLD FAVORITES: "Before Our Lady Came," "Atalanta Victorious," by William Morris.....	244
BLANCHE BATES IN A NEW MELODRAMA: David Belasco Keeps His Promise to Provide a Change of Style for His Star.....	245
A PHILOSOPHER'S FORECAST: Mr. Frederic Harrison Talks about the Coming Defeat of Woman.....	245
INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All over the World.....	245
VIGILANTES VERSUS JUDGE: XXXV. By Jerome A. Hart.....	246
A LIFE OF MIRABEAU: A New and Important Work Adds Largely to Our Knowledge of the French Revolution.....	247
A NEW ANIMOSITY: What the Japanese Say of Americans—Hard Times in Japan Laid at the Door of the United States. By Charles Lorrimer.....	248
CURRENT VERSE: "Three from Sedgemoor," by Edward Sydney Tyle; "The Gloucester Mother," by Sarah Orne Jewett; "To Stevenson—Of Some Critics," by Grace Hazard Conkling.....	248
BOOKS AND AUTHORS. By Sidney G. P. Coryn.....	249
DRAMA: Dustin Farnum's "Squaw Man." By Josephine Hart Phelps.....	250
LITERARY NOTES: Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip—New Publications.....	251
FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.....	251
VANITY FAIR.....	252
STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.....	253
THE MERRY MUSE.....	253
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy.....	254-255
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day.....	256

Governor Gillett.

Governor Gillett gives emphatic demonstration of his interest—and California's interest as well—in the pending presidential contest by taking the stump in behalf of Mr. Taft. This is a course entirely proper from every point of view. The people want to know, and they have a right to know, where and for what those who are commissioned to large public responsibilities stand.

This is a good time to say that Mr. Gillett, who is now in the closing months of his second year in office, is making an admirable governor. He goes about his work quietly; we do not hear much these days from the State house at Sacramento. Nevertheless, whoever looks into the administration of State affairs finds that things are going well. The business of the State is being carried forward efficiently and promptly; there are no abuses of power and we hear of no scandals. Now and again, to be sure, somebody who fails to get an appointment he wants takes a fling at the governor, but in every such instance thus far the motive has discredited the act.

Governor Gillett came into office under circumstances of some embarrassment, and early in his official term he encountered very serious problems, notably those involved in the street-car strike in San Francisco. In these various troubles he has carried himself with courage and dignity, commanding respect from friends and foes alike. Governor Gillett is avowedly a party man. He believes in party responsibility and, therefore, in party authority. He is a supporter of legitimate organization in politics, and he believes with the Argonaut that the vices of weakness in politics, as in other things, are more grievous than the vices of strength. He was elected governor by Republican votes; in the governor's office he represents Republican sentiment and Republican purpose. As the executive officer of the State he has slighted no duty, but at the same time he does not forget the source of his political strength nor his obligations to those who have cooperated with him in the enforcement of Republican politics. There are, we know, those who criticize this attitude. They are mostly the soreheads and the weeping Jeremiahs of Governor Gillett's own party. In the opposing party we hear no complaining, no reflection of ill-feeling or ill-will toward an official who has given himself wholly to his duties and who has wasted no time in sentimentalism and made no effort to build up a private and personal following.

The way to measure a man in large public station is to put his achievements beside his responsibilities. By this measure Governor Gillett is entitled to the fair opinion of every citizen. Great responsibilities rest in his hands and nobody can say that he has either slighted his work or made serious mistakes. The judgments of such a man—his views of pending conditions and situations—are worth public consideration; therefore we are pleased that Governor Gillett is to speak during the pending campaign.

The Direct Primary in Oregon.

It would call for large powers of invention to conceive a situation more involved in anomalies and confusions, more publicly reprobated and more privately damned, than that which mocks the political peace of our neighboring State of Oregon. It is a situation worth examining, particularly in view of the fact that the self-same system which has wrought such mischief in Oregon is now being urged upon California.

Since the time of the Civil War Oregon has been counted a Republican State. Local contentions have now and again turned the scale to the side of Democracy, but the general fixed level of political sentiment in Oregon has been pretty dependably Republican. Only once, indeed (in the year 1868), has the vote of Oregon ever been given to a national Democratic ticket, and in recent years Republican majorities in national elections have been overwhelming. Out of the total vote of 90,154 cast in 1904 the Republican presidential candidate received 60,455 as against 17,521 for the Democratic candidate. And yet in the face of this tremendous preponderance of Republican strength a dyed-in-the-wool Democrat sits in the State executive chair, while another Democrat, not only dyed-in-the-wool but bred-in-the-bone (he is a grandson of the late General Joe Lane of Breckinridge and Lane memory), is mayor of the city of Portland, the very centre and headquarters of Republican sentiment and power. This is not all. There sits in the Senate of the United States accredited from Oregon a man who is only nominally a Republican, having been a silverite rebel against party authority so recently as ten years ago. More anomalous still, a State legislature elected and due to convene next January, seventy-four of whose ninety members are Republicans, stands pledged under the direct primary system to elect a Democrat as Oregon's second representative in the United States Senate.

To sum up, Oregon, a State overwhelmingly Republican, is governed in her domestic affairs by a Democrat, is already represented by one senator more nearly a Democrat than a Republican, and is in the way of selecting an avowed Democrat as its second senator. And the facts being as here stated, it is hardly surprising that a great organ of Republican sentiment like the Portland Oregonian should avow the Republican party to be dead in Oregon and that thoughtful citizens generally should speak disparagingly of conditions which give nobody the opportunity to cast his vote in support of his political principles. Chaos is the one word which adequately describes the situation.

The circumstances leading up to the election of United States Senator Jonathan Bourne in 1906, under the operation of the direct primary law, may serve to illustrate some of the anomalies of Oregon's political condition as we have just outlined them. Bourne was originally a Massachusetts man who came to Oregon some twenty years or more ago. It would not be easy to define his personal status, for he is a man distinctly apart from the general life of the State. Nominally a lawyer, he has never practiced his profession. A man of wealth, he has never been actively engaged in any business. In a social sense he has chosen to live a life of retirement. His only public activities have been mining speculation and politics, and in the latter sphere he has had a curious rather than a brilliant part. Twice within twenty years he was elected to the State legislature and once he organized the famous "hold-up" which prevented the members of a legislature duly elected from organizing as they were required to do under the law. The purposes of this extraordinary and revolutionary procedure were political and personal, the object being to prevent the election of a senator against whom Bourne and others had motives of enmity.

On the whole, Mr. Bourne's political career up to 1906 had been anything but regular and creditable. He was not a representative man in politics, hardly a political boss, because he has never come to a position of authority, but rather a Dugald Dalgetty in the political sphere—a man ambitious to figure in political affairs, but without serious convictions or purposes. His venture into silverism some ten or twelve years ago was accredited rather to his presumed interest as a mine owner and to an inveterate propensity for political intrigue than to any more serious motive.

When through the adoption of the direct primary law the doors were thrown wide open to soaring ambition, Mr. Bourne, although as far removed as possible from anything like representative character as a citizen, boldly, and in the view of most persons ridiculously, entered the arena as a candidate. Under the system any man who chooses to announce himself may be a candidate for any office. There is no party convention, no machinery of any kind, by which candidates may be considered and sifted, no means by which the unfit or the unworthy may be put aside. The least qualified man in the State may, under the Oregon system, present himself for any office, claim character as a member of a party, whether that party accepts him or not, and seriously contest the election. Mr. Bourne, although unrecommended and unsupported by the party of which he assumed to be a member, set to work with tremendous energy in promotion of his candidacy. He advertised extensively in the newspapers, thereby hushing up criticism; for your average newspaper, be it said to the discredit of journalism, is rarely censorious of the man who contributes to its advertising revenue. Then Mr. Bourne set up at Portland a large bureau of correspondence, by the means of circular letters typewritten and duly signed with his own industrious pen, getting himself into direct relations with every voter whose name appeared on the great register. There is no limit under the Oregon law to the amount a candidate may spend in promotion of his own plans and there has never been a fixed limit to any game which Mr. Bourne has cared to play.

The election contested by Mr. Bourne was not complicated by the candidacy of anybody having strong claims to public favor. The men commonly associated in the public mind with senatorial honors did not enter the fight. Your senatorial type of man is hardly one to join in such a scramble; and this phase of the e-was duly illustrated in the contest of 1906. Mr. Bourne's four rivals before the people were respectable but commonplace men and in every instance men without much means. No one of them nor all of them together put into the campaign any such amount of money nor such organized effort as was expended by Mr. Bourne in promotion of his own candidacy. It is gossip at Portland that for postage stamps alone his bill of expense ran close up to five thousand dollars. In the primary election which followed Mr. Bourne won by virtue of being the leading man in the race. The total vote of Oregon is approximately 100,000, of which about seventy per cent participated in the election. Of this seventy per cent of the total vote, Bourne got approximately thirty per cent. Thus it was that under the direct primary system a man with a fraction of the popular vote, likewise with only a fraction of the vote of his own party, became the "regular Republican nominee," for whom Republicans elected to the legislature were required under their nominating pledges to vote.

It was the claim of those who promoted the direct primary system in Oregon that it would enable the "people to rule." We see in the case of Mr. Bourne's election how the performance matches the plan. It gave to a self-nominated candidate, who in the primary election had only a pitiful minority of the votes of all the electors and only a minority of the electors of the party which he claimed somewhat dubiously as his own, a "nomination" equivalent to an election. To summarize: It first eliminated all the names associated in the public mind with the senatorship. It then threw the election into a scramble where the advantage lay with the candidate who had money to spend in his own exploitation. It so divided the vote of the dominant party among a large group of candidates as to enable a man whom nobody really wanted to come out of the scuffle with more votes than any one of the other candidates. It practically gave the election not to the "people's choice," for there was no people's choice, but to a desperate political gambler who was willing to pour out money like water literally to buy an "election" which practically was on sale in the open market.

Whatever may be said for the direct primary in the form in which it has been adopted in Oregon, it has small claim to credit as a mechanism for determining and enforcing the "people's choice." This was sufficiently illustrated in the election of Senator Bourne and it has other and even more notable illustrations in more recent incidents—particularly in the pledge under which a Republican legislature now stands to elect a Democrat (Chamberlain) to the United States Senate next January. That, however, is another story and we will postpone its recital to another writing.

Dog and Dog.

The quarrel now raging between the Examiner and Francis J. Heney is in the nature of a family row. The Examiner is largely responsible for Heney. District Attorney Langdon was, two years ago, a part of the Examiner's political entourage and Heney is a special prosecutor by appointment of Mr. Langdon. If the Examiner had hinted the slightest objection to Mr. Heney at the time of his appointment, even Mr. Spreckels, bar'l and all, could not have influenced Mr. Langdon in Mr. Heney's behalf. On the contrary, it is common knowledge that the Examiner not only consented to the appointment of Mr. Heney, and advised that he be made Mr. Langdon's chief assistant in the graft prosecution, but actually urged him as the most efficient instrument for the purpose in view.

Hence it may be said that Mr. Heney was originally an Examiner protégé. Now, for some reason not fully explained, none is so poor within the Examiner's purview as to do him reverence. He is anathema beyond all others. The Examiner puts him to the question with a ferocity that would not discredit a familiar of the Spanish Inquisition. He is baited daily with a demand that he make confession concerning a certain sum of $30,000 presumed to have been paid to him by the Contra Costa Water Company, and he is questioned every morning regarding a subsequent fee of $10,000 which was paid to him by the same corporation. The Examiner's innuendo is plain to the dullest understanding, and it is a cruelly sinister insinuation. To use a phrase from the technical vocabulary of Detective Burns, the Examiner is trying—and not without success—to involve Mr. Heney "in the toils."

It is a quarrel that does not interest the general public beyond a natural curiosity. A dog fight on a street corner always gathers a crowd. Decent citizens would like to know, of course, why Mr. Heney was paid $30,000 in one lump sum and another fat fee of $10,000 after the first money had been given in exchange for Mr. Heney's receipt. The general public would like to know also why the Examiner attacks Mr. Heney at this late day, long after the fact that Mr. Heney had received this money was known to every lawyer in San Francisco, and many months after the balance sheet of the Contra Costa's ledger account with its legal advisers as exposed in the Dockweiler report had been filed in the archives of every San Francisco newspaper. Aside from this trivial desire to know what the row may be about, and the instinctive impulse that urges the average man to take delight in a free fight, there is nothing in the Examiner-Heney rumpus to stir a mutiny in the hearts of the citizens. There is not even popular hope that in the falling-out of these rogues honest men will get their due. When dogs eat dogs none but dogs are invited to the cannibal feast.

Until Mr. Heney answers the Examiner's questions, however, he will be seriously handicapped in his prosecution of other men accused of evil manners and crooked actions.

The Logic of Equal Suffrage.

Another complication has interposed to plague the souls of the woman suffrage sisterhood. An appeal to the wage-earning contingent of emancipated and emancipating femininity, setting forth the advantages to accrue from united action in the effort to wrest the ballot from the grudging grasp of tyrant man, reveals an insuperable objection on the part of the working women. These women declare that there is no sympathy between them and the women who are dependent for support upon the earning capacity of men. It is urged that the women conspicuous in the movement to secure the ballot for women desire the privilege merely to exercise equal power politically with men; while the only use that the working women could make of the ballot would be to better their condition by compelling their employers to give them increased wages and shorter hours of labor.

It was something of a shock to the ladies who are active in this suffrage movement to be told that they have never manifested the slightest interest in the actual condition of the working women; that they have never lent their moral or financial support to the labor unions of women; and that they have never assisted the wage-earning women in their "strikes," but on the contrary have frequently defied the women toilers when they have demanded redress for wrongs suffered at the hands of employers dependent on the custom of the well-to-do women of the community for their business profits. Argument, protestation, cajolery were of no avail against the simple statements of the representatives of woman labor. The women of the labor unions refused utterly to be convinced. They were as stubborn as their facts. The chasm between their dependent sisters and themselves was too wide to be bridged, and they would not even discuss the possibility of building the bridge.

The working women are willing enough to receive the ballot, but they insist that it shall be used to serve their special purposes; and they are free to admit that this use would not in its general application please the women who are leading the equal suffrage movement. Caste is a much more serious concern among women than among men. Women are far more exacting in their relations with each other than are men in their attitude towards each other. The distance between the woman employer and the woman employed is much greater than it is between man and man. It is very probable that the injection of politics into the households of the community through the medium of the feminine ballot would raise a loud disturbance. For a time at least the political equality of mistress and cook would breed dissension while the husband waited with his usual patience for the dinner long delayed; and imagine the strife that would certainly ensue upon the discovery by a Republican lady of the house that her maid servant was a rank and uncompromising Socialist, holding herself the equal of her employer not only in her voting capacity but socially, and demanding, in theory, of course, that all things should be in common between them. Or picture the despair of a home-coming husband married to a Democratic wife upon hearing loud words in argument of the tariff issue between the mistress and her Republican chambermaid. Eventually, no doubt, the employing women would select their servants as they select the materials of their gowns—for harmony; and the leading question after the matter of references had been disposed of would be: "How do you vote?"

Unless something akin to civil service rules shall accompany the ballot that may be given to the women political differences arising during a heated campaign may be deemed sufficient reason for the summary dismissal of a servant by a mistress holding political opinions of another complexion. Then again it is difficult to conceive what would happen when the servant attempted to electioneer her mistress into voting for a candidate that she did not like. From the woman's point of view, dictation from a servant is near allied to lèse majesté. The mistress of the house might consider it eminently proper to advise her servants how to vote; but would she listen patiently or without some manifestation of resentment to a harangue from her servants upon her political duties and the superior fitness of the union labor candidates to administer the affairs of the municipality?

In course of time, probably, matters would adjust themselves as they have done among men; but in the first flush of the ballot privilege, we fear that the home life of many a household would be grievously disturbed by the political dissensions of the women. There would certainly be trouble for any servant who should be chosen at the primaries in opposition to her mistress as a delegate to a party convention; presuming, of course, that the direct primary is defeated contemporaneously with the triumphant indorsement by the people of the suffrage amendment. And even if the direct primary law is enacted, there will still be ample opportunity for feminine rancor if the cook or the maid of all work shall receive more votes than the mistress for State charity commissioner or school director or other office to which it will be the custom of women to "aspire."

Seriously, however, we apprehend that the women who are leading this movement to secure unqualified suffrage have not canvassed all the possibilities of their purpose or taken full cognizance of the logic of their proposition. There is some reason to believe that the women most active in the suffrage movement were firm in the opinion that when all women should exercise the privilege of the ballot they would realize that their political interests were identical. They are beginning to learn that a vast body of women are so inimical to the ideals of the active suffragists as to endanger the accomplishment of those purposes at the hands of those whom they were certain would most enthusiastically support them. There is a broad hint of an irreconcilable conflict between the self-supporting suffragist and the suffragist who is dependent upon her husband for support.

War Clouds in Europe.

There seems to be no good cause for optimism as to affairs in eastern Europe except from the single fact that no fighting has occurred. Turkey has been stripped of her possessions in Bulgaria, Bosnia, and Herzegovina, and Crete, and if she has taken no forcible steps to recover them it is because she is pursuing her ancient policy of seeking her own ends by sowing dissensions elsewhere. Servia seems to be a shade less bellicose, but then her people can hardly be expected to shout continuously, and the fact that she is still without ammunition for her heavy artillery naturally suggests the prudence of delay. Austria continues to hold her stolen property and refuses even to discuss what she regards as an accomplished fact, while England asserts stubbornly that she can not recognize the validity of anything that has been done or of any change in the arrangement made by the Berlin treaty. There is therefore no mitigation in the crisis except from the fact that there have been no hostilities, and no one supposed that there would be hostilities without the usual preliminaries of discussion and diplomacy.

A European conference is of course to be called at once. Russia's foreign minister is in England and will go at once to France. He has done his little best to complicate the situation by insisting that the conference shall not confine itself to the immediate problem, but shall permit the introduction of some other question, presumably that of the Dardanelles. A conference is, of course, the only sane procedure, but the difficulties seem to be enormous. It is not possible to exclude Austria, and yet Austria refuses even to discuss the main event that necessitates a conference, that is to say, her annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina. There is some reason to believe that Germany incited Austria in the first place, and if so Germany will of course support her. Turkey will not be satisfied without the restoration of her suzerainty, and if she is not satisfied she must resort to force. Moreover, if Austria is allowed to retain what she has taken, the other powers will want something in the way of an equivalent, and in the meantime Austria declines even to admit that what she has done is open to question or argument. In the meantime a single shot from the enraged warriors on the frontiers could easily start the avalanche.

That the Berlin treaty should thus collapse like a house of cards is natural enough. It was founded upon a cruel expediency and without any reference to the interests of the small principalities, who were disposed of like merchandise. The difficulties that were then immorally evaded have now grown to a formidable stature and will be correspondingly hard to handle. Europe will have to reap where she has sown and the fruit will naturally correspond with the seed.

A Bugaboo Exploded.

The American Federation of Labor, according to its own official reports for the current year, is made up of 151 affiliated unions with a total membership of 1,538,970. This is the full strength—every individual reckoned—of that tremendous political engine with whose vengeance Mr. Gompers terrorized certain leading Republicans last summer and which he now assumes, under his direction, to lend its powers to the cause of Democracy personified by William J. Bryan.

In addition to the Federation of Labor there are eleven great labor unions not affiliated with the Federation of Labor. They are:

Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.....	66,408
Railroad (Steam) Conductors.....	43,000
Steam Shovel and Dredge Men.....	4,500
American Society of Equity.....	59,028
Letter Carriers, National Association.....	23,750
National Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association....	10,126
Bricklayers' and Masons' International Union, estimated	60,000
Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, estimated.....	70,000
Brotherhood of Operative Plasterers, estimated.....	20,000
Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, estimated.....	5,000
Sundry other unions and associations, at most.....	100,000
Total	461,812

The Federation of Labor with the great unaffiliated unions above named make a total of 2,000,782 persons in the ranks of organized labor in the United States. But not all these are voters. Many are foreigners without votes, another large element is made of women without votes, and there is a considerable proportion of minors likewise without votes. A careful authority estimates the non-voting union element at 800,000. We have, therefore:

Total organized labor.....	2,000,782
Non-voting unionists (foreigners, women and minors), estimated	800,000
Organized labor voters.....	1,200,782

According to the census of 1900 there were in the United States:

Manufacturing and mechanical wage-earners.....	5,306,143
Salaried clerks, etc.....	969,244
Total	6,275,387
Less non-voting foreigners, women and minors.....	1,200,000

Total voters in 1900, factories.....	5,175,387
Increase in eight years, males of voting age, 15 per cent (estimated)	900,000

Total voters in 1908, factories.....	6,075,387
--------------------------------------	-----------

Now let us compare the totals of voting factory workers with the total organized labor vote, the figures for both being for the year 1908:

Total factory vote.....	6,075,387
Total organized labor vote.....	1,200,782

Factory vote not controlled by labor unions.....	4,874,605
--	-----------

These figures speak for themselves. They show that the organized labor vote is bare twenty per cent of the factory vote alone in the United States.

But let us look a little further, comparing the organized labor vote with all other elements of our population:

Engaged in manufacturing and mechanical pursuits (1900)	7,375,387
Agricultural pursuits	10,381,765
Domestic and personal service.....	5,580,657
Trade and transportation.....	4,766,964
Professional	1,258,739

Total engaged in gainful occupations (1900).....	29,363,512
Increase in eight years (15 per cent).....	4,039,000

Total engaged in gainful occupations (1908).....	33,402,512
Labor union vote.....	1,200,782

Total non-union	32,201,730
-----------------------	------------

Again the figures speak for themselves. This showing exposes the bluff in Mr. Gompers's pretensions. Giving to organized labor every voter within its ranks, including the half million not affiliated with Mr. Gompers's Federation, we have bare four per cent of the whole industrial population. And to reduce the percentage to the vanishing point we have only to remember that the purposes behind organized labor are social rather than political; that the average working man, like the average citizen, feels himself fully competent to place his own vote; that the vast majority of union men are of fixed political convictions, trained to think and act for themselves in matters political; that other vast numbers of union men are employed in industries whose welfare is obviously dependent upon the policy of protection to which Mr. Bryan stands opposed—when we remember these things, there seems very little reason why Mr. Gompers's threats should excite any particular interest, much less cause anybody to be alarmed.

The Labor Agitator—and the Cure.

It is one of the blessings of a relatively dull time that labor unionism is more cautious in its aggressions than it was a while back. And yet every now and again the labor agitator raises his ugly head. Week before last it came in the form of a demand on the part of certain Oakland carpenters for a twenty-five per cent increase in wages already fixed at the generous level of $4 per day. Last week it developed in the insistence of some plaster workers that certain work in the First National Bank building, San Francisco, should be done in a difficult and costly way rather than in a simple and relatively inexpensive way. This week there is delay in a dwelling because the shingle-workers and the slate-workers can not determine among themselves to which class a little job of asphalt-shingle work "belongs." All of which makes the Argonaut very, very tired.

Again, and for the hundredth time, let us say to the property-owners and business men of San Francisco that our city will never be prosperous as it ought while we permit ourselves to be disturbed and badgered and bulldozed by professional trouble-breeders who make a trade of labor politics. We shall not be able to hold our own in competition with Los Angeles and Portland and Seattle and Ogden while they have relative freedom in the industries and while we writhe under the heel of the walking delegate. Now, when times are relatively dull, when labor is plentiful, and when work is slack—now is an advantageous time to act.

There are fifty men in San Francisco—possibly twenty-five—who could by united action say authoritatively to organized labor what its rights are and what the limits of its power. If they would, they could give to San Francisco freedom in industry, and they ought to do it. Now, we repeat, when times are relatively dull, is the time to act. Shame on you, gentlemen, shame on you, if you fail now to assert the liberty which the great-grandfathers of some of you laid down their lives for at Brandywine, King Mountain, and other bloody fields!

The Cliff House.

It is definitely settled that the architectural monstrosity built by the late Adolph Sutro upon the site of the old Cliff House, and of which we were relieved by a kindly fire some months ago, is to be replaced by a structure really appropriate and beautiful. In some respects the Cliff House is the most notable building in San Francisco, because it is the first seen by every visitor who approaches the city by the ocean gateway and the last view of all to those who sail away. It occupies a position so distinctive and in such striking relief as to come to the conscious notice of everybody. It means much, therefore, that we are to have on the famous cliff a building not only suited to the purposes for which the Cliff House is famous, but one illustrating the refinements and dignities of the architectural art.

Alternative Plainly Stated.

Mr. Stubbs of the Harriman system spoke not too plainly last week when he told the Transmississippi Congress that there will be no money available for railroad improvements and extensions if corporation-baiting shall continue to be the fashion in this country. It does not require a prophet to see that Mr. Stubbs is right. It takes money and a great deal of it to build railroads; and this money must come, if it comes at all, from a multitude of investors large and small. If railroad companies, whether they do right or do wrong, are to be "punished" at every turn, if all the newspapers and all the legislatures and many of the courts are to combine to "do up the railroads," then of course people will not buy railroad securities. And there will be no money in the hands of the great railroad generals like James J. Hill, E. H. Harriman, George Gould, and others to make improvements and extensions for which the traffic of the country cries aloud.

The case finds precise illustration right at home. Three years ago before the railroad-baiting began, Mr. Gould found no difficulty in raising money to extend his system to the Pacific Ocean. The Western Pacific road, now approaching completion, is the outcome of Mr. Gould's success in money-getting; and it will give to California a tremendous advantage in the form of enlarged facilities and an expedited service. Could Mr. Gould today raise money for the Western Pacific or for any other similar enterprise? This question has already been answered by events which will be recalled by every reader of this paragraph. It would be impossible for Mr. Gould to raise money for an enterprise like the Western Pacific or even to complete the job already under way. If the money arranged for two years ago were not already at hand, the Western Pacific enterprise would languish and the fractional sections of the road already built would fall into neglect and rot. The reason is that the people who commonly buy railroad securities—who supply the means for railroad construction—are afraid to make investments and are therefore out of the market. Their funds are either being invested in less profitable ways or are being hoarded and held to unproductive uses.

Mr. Stubbs is right—dead right. Either we must give the railroads fair play—holding them to their duties and to equal treatment of all comers, but at the same time giving them their due—or we must suffer the consequences in less efficient service, in congestion of traffic, in delay in the making of extensions. The thing is plain to the sight of common sense.

Editorial Notes.

The case of Colonel Stewart, who at last has for entirely proper reasons been retired from active military service, serves to illustrate one of the most serious faults of President Roosevelt as an administrator. Stewart, if not literally a maniac, is a man of such distempered mind and habit as to be unfit to command other men. This being the fact, beyond question he ought long ago, without evasion or false pretense, to have been dismissed the service or retired on account of infirmity. That another course has been taken, that Stewart has been "banished" and "punished" and made a bit of martyr withal, is due to that defect in the President's temperament which bears some correspondence to Colonel Stewart's own temperament. We have had in the Stewart case a vexatious and wholly unnecessary scandal; and perhaps the end is not even yet.

The conviction of one Blake on the charge of offering a bribe to a prospective juror in the Ruef case at the instance of one of Ruef's attorneys is gratifying in the sense that it shows that community self-respect, while much of the time fast asleep, is not absolutely dead. In the wretched history of the past two years nothing is more to be deplored than the open and shameless jury-fixing operations of both the Ruef-Schmitz and the Phelan-Spreckels-Heney-Burns outfits. It has been a case of dog versus dog; one side has been as bad as the other; both sides have gone the limit of shameless, violent, and revolutionary procedure. No decent man informed as to the facts can have any sympathy with either side. A plague o' both your houses—this is the universal sentiment among respectable people.

If the Transmississippi Congress shall be left free to work out its normal purposes, to stand as a free platform for the discussion of matters proper and vital to the western side of the continent, it will survive and continue an agency of vast usefulness. But if it is to be victimized by every enthusiast, hobbyist, and crank; if it is to be forced to consider the issues of prohibition, woman's suffrage, parcels-post proposals, and every other kindred agitation, it must speedily be ridden to its death. It would seem that the hobby-riding disturbers who have killed so many other promising agencies of public opinion ought in fair conscience and common decency to leave the Transmississippi Congress free to work out its normal and proper purposes.

A battleship today is not the same as a battleship in Nelson's day. The old wooden three-decker could only be destroyed by long and desperate close-quarter fighting. It would stand hours of battering. It would take hundreds of shot, and still be capable of fighting. But today, one unlucky shot, one blow from a torpedo, and the great fighting machine is a heap of scrap.

CAMPAIGN TOPICS.

The difficulty of finding men of a sufficiently angelic record for the various positions opened by the presidential campaign is exemplified in the case of Mr. James Kerr, who has been appointed a Democratic national committeeman from Pennsylvania. Now Mr. Kerr was put into his present place because the previous tenant, Colonel James M. Guffey, was convicted of having looked smilingly upon some corporation or other. Mr. Kerr was supposed to be without spot or blemish, clean within and clean without, and therefore worthy to champion the cause of the peerless one. But some unkind person who might be better employed has looked up a certain mischievous volume called the "Directory of Directors," a satanic roll of malefactors, and there as large as life he finds the immaculate name of Mr. Kerr and appended thereto the names of no less than twenty-one companies. It is true there does not seem to be an oil company among them, nor does Mr. Kerr's name suggest a sympathetic odor of kerosene. But who knows? The devil is fruitful in disguises, and in any case to be the director of twenty-one public companies is not a seemly position for a Democratic star. Moreover, Mr. Kerr has a record not unconnected with the New York Central Railroad, a connection described as "reprehensible but remunerative." Really Mr. Bryan should be more careful. He should remember that a man is known by the company he keeps and if he would but invest in a copy of the "Directory of Directors" it might save him many a fall by the way.

The New York Herald predicts the election of Mr. Taft by a reduced plurality, but the defeat of Mr. Hughes for the governorship of New York. Into Mr. Hughes's chances there is no need to enter, but it is certain that his own personal campaign will tell heavily in his favor. So far as the national issue is concerned, the Herald believes that there will be no heavy pluralities either way in New York State. The most sanguine Republicans do not expect Mr. Taft to carry the State by more than 50,000. The panic, says the Herald, has burst the Republicans with the workmen and with retail business men. On the other hand, the general fear that Mr. Bryan's election might precipitate another crisis or delay the return of prosperity will give Mr. Taft many votes.

Reports show that Governor Hughes is by far the most effective speaker on the Republican side. The speeches he made in Indiana and other States did more for his party than all other speakers combined. He is described as talking to the voters in a straightforward and business-like style that captivated them. He assumes that they are intelligent men not likely to be deceived by claptrap about the tariff or anything else. Republican speakers, by the way, are scarce, as the new purity movement means poverty. But then, as we know, poverty is always a guarantee of virtue.

A dispatch from Chicago to the New York Tribune says that Mr. Bryan is having difficulties with his speakers. They were well drilled in the duty of praising Mr. Roosevelt, and now that events have necessitated a change of tune they find it a little difficult to reverse their steps or to adapt themselves to new tricks:

Democratic campaigners in Iowa are in an unpleasant dilemma, according to reports brought here today. Acting on instructions from Bryan, issued quietly from Fairview early in the campaign, all the Democratic orators in the State loaded themselves up with speeches lauding President Roosevelt, and insisting that Bryan was the only man fitted to follow in his footsteps. Mr. Bryan himself was doing this in his own speeches at the time. All went lovely until Bryan changed front and began to make personal attacks upon the President. Not being great geniuses like Bryan, the Iowa spellbinders have not been able to switch with equal facility.

The Hartford Times (Dem.) comments on the situation in a similar vein. It says:

Mr. Bryan incapacitated himself for appealing to the conservative independent vote in all the Northern States when he started his campaign on radical lines, which tended to make his position indistinguishable from that of Mr. Roosevelt. Now his personal controversy with the President has deprived him of the advantage which he sought to gain by presenting himself to the Western voters as "a better Roosevelt man than Roosevelt." His bank deposit guarantee plan has proved a failure, and has helped greatly in keeping up the distrust of him that is felt by most of the business men of the country.

A certain amount of interest attaches to the utterances of Mr. Nicholas Longworth because of that gentleman's domestic proximity to the centre of inspiration. For this reason his recent speech at Rock Island, Illinois, has been much discussed, and usually from the hostile standpoint. Mr. Longworth's suggestion was to the effect that Mr. Taft should remain in office for eight years and should then give place to Mr. Roosevelt, who would return like Napoleon from Elba and give us eight years more of strenuous administration.

Now if this had emanated from a "common or garden" congressman it would have excited no attention, but under the circumstances it was hungrily seized upon by friend and foe alike, who accepted it as an indication of Rooseveltian intention. Mr. Longworth was first of all asked if he had meant what he said or whether the suggestion was simply the result of a kind of oratorical inebriation. He said that he did mean it, that he spoke in all seriousness, that he was greatly pleased by the publicity given to his utterances, and that he was forwarding to the President all the clippings that he could find. "I'll have a raft of them to send him, and I'm sure he'll be delighted when he sees them." Presumably Mr. Longworth had his own reasons for anticipating the delight of the President—referred to by Mr. Longworth as "Teddy."

Then came the trouble. There was consternation at Republican headquarters, tempered only by the reflection that the mischievous utterance had come too late to do any serious harm. But the publicity committee of the Democrats rose to their opportunity. The speech was instantly printed in leaflet form and sent to three hundred newspapers throughout the country with just such caustic comments as might be expected. Mr. Longworth was called the "Burchard" of the campaign and Democrats everywhere were incited to make the most of their chance.

The whole thing is, of course, a false alarm, because there is not the faintest reason to suppose that Mr. Longworth's words were inspired, that Mr. Roosevelt knew anything of them or would have approved them if he had known. If the President were to be answerable for everything said by his son-in-law, then indeed a new terror would be added to his office. But the real point is not the true significance of Mr. Longworth's utterance, but the significance that will be given to it by thoughtless and emotional people.

The New York Sun is quick to put words into the mouths of such people as these. After pointing out that the fate of the election must largely turn on the votes of anti-Roosevelt Republicans, it points out the inevitable effect of such utterances as this upon a wavering or undecided Republican section:

A more unfortunate statement has not yet been made in this canvass, and if it attracts the general attention which it deserves it is not unlikely to make Mr. Longworth the Burchard of the campaign. It is well known that Mr. Roosevelt, in graciously permitting the American people to select his successor—providing always that it was Mr. Taft or himself—bad said to intimate friends that while he could no longer serve his faithful people for the next four years and would change his work of multiplying bears into the destruction of lions, yet at the end of four years his faithful people could reasonably expect his triumphant reentry into the scene of his former achievements. It is apparent from Mr. Longworth's statement that this expectation is enjoyed not only by the inner circle of Mr. Roosevelt's friends, but also by his immediate family, and it is unreasonable to suppose that Mr. Longworth would have nominated his august father-in-law for reelection eight years hence if he believed that such suggestion was other than agreeable to Mr. Roosevelt.

The American people, we are reminded, are not disposed to turn their most exalted office into a merry-go-round in which Presidents shall mutually help each other to rotate in office. Already they dislike the way in which Mr. Taft's nomination was secured, and they certainly will not welcome a suggestion that would seem to imply that Mr. Taft at the end of four or eight years shall use his influence as President to have his successor succeed him. The Sun continues:

For this and other reasons it is all important that if the anti-Roosevelt Republicans are to be held in line for Mr. Taft in order to avoid the destructive evils of Bryanism, Mr. Taft should speedily convince this element of the Republican party that he will be something more than an ad interim President. Some friend should whisper in his ear that no presidential candidate has yet crossed the threshold of the White House as a "me too" President. The assurance is most necessary, for it is idle to gainsay that Mr. Taft's canvass has so far been a disappointment. From his past record as a judge and his splendid fidelity as a public administrator the people have been led to believe that he had a rugged personality that would quickly show when occasion arose that he was his own man and not the mere shadow of another. In his speeches we have with few exceptions failed to detect a note of reasonable self-assertiveness and avowed leadership. He has been at his best when he has assailed Mr. Bryan's vagaries. He has been at his worst when he has informed his countrymen that his purpose is to "climb Mr. Roosevelt's policies."

Seeing the prominence that has been given to Mr. Longworth's speech, it would be well for the President to mark it as uninspired just as quickly as he can do so.

Senator Foraker has announced that he will abandon his fight for reelection to the Senate until after the general election, and this is taken to be a graceful way of announcing to the public that he has practically abandoned all hope of again being chosen to represent Ohio in the United States Senate.

Senator Foraker is of course discredited, but it would be a mistake to suppose that he is robbed of his power for mischief. His ferocious attack upon Mr. Taft shows how the wind is blowing, and Mr. Taft did well to describe it as "ridiculous." No doubt it seemed to Mr. Foraker to be something absolutely ludicrous that Judge Doyle should have been recommended on the ground that he was "a man of high character and a lawyer of great ability and experience and would make a good judge," but to the average citizen these seem high qualifications, even though Judge Doyle could be shown to have once used kerosene oil in a lamp. However that may be, there is no doubt that Senator Foraker will do all that he can to defeat Mr. Taft.

La Follette has been meeting with reverses in Wisconsin. The nomination of Stevenson for the Senate by direct primary was the first and now comes a defeat of the La Follette faction by the platform-makers of the party. Perhaps this has softened his heart and persuaded him that even radicalism may go too far for modern taste. However that may be, his indorsement of Mr. Taft has been hearty and unreserved. Speaking at Madison, Wisconsin, Senator La Follette occupied the same platform with Mr. Taft, and he began his speech with the remark:

The desire to be absolute and exact as to what I shall say here today has brought me for many reasons to commit it to paper.

The senator then turned to Mr. Taft and continued:

Nature gave him poise, judicial temperament, great force of character, and tenacity as to purpose. His long life in the public service is distinguished for its marked ability, its wisdom, its integrity, its patriotism. He has taken advanced ground upon the great issues that are engaging the profoundest thought of the people of this great country.

Now, from a somewhat intimate acquaintance with him for the past twenty years I say today that he is progressive in principle and he is equipped most wonderfully in experience.

This tribute produced great enthusiasm among the audience, and when Mr. Taft followed he received something like an ovation.

Mr. Taft and Mr. Bryan nearly met at Minneapolis a few days ago. Mr. Bryan arrived at two o'clock and immediately sent a message to Mr. Taft's hotel that he would be glad to call upon him that afternoon. Mr. Taft hurried back to keep the appointment, but found an apology from Mr. Bryan, who had overlooked a dinner engagement. A further suggestion for a meeting fell through and the project had to be abandoned with many expressions of regret on each side.

OLD FAVORITES.

Before Our Lady Came.

Before our Lady came on earth
Little there was of joy or mirth:
About the borders of the sea
The sea-folk wander'd heavily;
About the wintry river side
The weary fishers would abide.

Alone, within the weaving-room,
The girls would sit before the loom,
And sing no song and play no play—
Alone, from dawn to hot mid-day,
From mid-day unto evening,
The men a-field would work, nor sing
Mid weary thoughts of man and God—
Before thy feet the wet ways trod.
Unkiss'd the mercant bore his care,
Unkiss'd the knights went out to war,
Unkiss'd the mariner came home,
Unkiss'd the minstrel men did roam.

Or in the stream the maids would stare,
Nor know why they were made so fair:
Their yellow locks, their hosoms white,
Their limbs well-wrought for all delight,
Seem'd foolish things that waited death—
As hopeless as the flowers beneath
The weariness of unkiss'd feet:
No life was bitter then, or sweet.

Therefore, O Venus! well may we Praise the green ridges of the sea
O'er which, upon a happy day,
Thou camest to take our shame away.
Well may we praise the curdling foam
Amidst which thy feet did bloom—
Flowers of the Gods; the yellow sand
They kiss'd atwixt the sea and land;
The bee-beset ripe-seeded grass
Through which thy fine limbs first did pass;
The purple-dusted butterfly
First blown against thy quivering thigh;
The first red rose that touch'd thy side,
And overblown and fainting died;
The flickering of the orange shade
Where first in sleep thy limbs were laid;
The happy day's sweet life and death,
Whose air first caught thy balmy breath:
Yea! all these things well praised may he,
But with what words shall we praise Thee?
O Venus! O thou love alive!
Born to give peace to souls that strive.

—William Morris.

Atalanta Victorious.

And there two runners did the sign abide
Foot set to foot—a young man slim and fair,
Crisp-haired, well-knit, with firm limbs often tried
In places where no man his strength may spare;
Dainty his thin coat was, and on his hair
A golden circlet of renown he wore,
And in his hand an olive garland bore.

But on this day with whom shall he contend?
A maid stood by him like Diana clad
When in the woods she lists her how to bend,
Too fair for one to look on and be glad,
Who scarcely yet has thirty summers had,
If he must still behold her from afar:
Too fair to let the world live free from war.

She seemed all earthly matters to forget:
Of all tormenting lines her face was clear,
Her wide gray eyes upon the goal was set
Calm and unmoved as though no soul were near;
But her foe trembled as a man in fear,
Nor from her loveliness one moment turned
His anxious face with fierce desire that burned.

Now through the hush there broke the trumpet's clang
Just as the setting sun made eventide,
Then from light feet a spurt of dust there sprang
And swiftly were they running side by side:
But silent did the thronging folk abide
Until the turning-post was reached at last,
And round about it still abreast they passed.

But when the people saw how close they ran,
When half-way to the starting-point they were,
A cry of joy broke forth, whereat the man
Headed the white-foot runner, and drew near Unto the very end of all his fear;
And scarce his straining feet the ground could feel,
And bliss unhop'd for o'er his heart 'gan steal.

But midst the loud victorious shouts he heard
Her footsteps drawing nearer, and the sound
Of fluttering raiment, and thereat afeared
His flushed and eager face he turned around.
And even then he felt her past him bound
Fleet as the wind, but scarcely saw her there
Till on the goal she laid her fingers fair.

There stood she breathing like a little child
Amid some warlike clamor laid asleep,
For no victorious joy her red lips smiled,
Her cheek its wonted freshness did but keep;
No glance lit up her clear gray eyes and deep,
Though some divine thought softened all her face
As once more rang the trumpet through the place.

But her late foe stopped short amidst his course,
One moment gazed upon her piteously,
Then with a groan his lingering feet did force
To leave the spot whence he her eyes could see;
And, changed like one who knows his time must be
But short and bitter, without any word
He knelt before the bearer of the sword:

Then high rose up the gleaming deadly blade,
Bared of its flowers, and through the crowded place
Was silence now, and midst of it the maid
Went by the poor wretch at a gentle pace.
And he to hers upturned his sad white face;
Nor did his eyes behold another sight
Ere on his soul there fell eternal night.

—William Morris.

Approaching completion in the shipyard of the Elswick Works at Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, is the Brazilian battleship Mina Geraes, which has superior armament and arrangement to the British Dreadnought class, as well as being the heaviest battleship yet built in the world. The cruiser Invincible and the battleship Superb, of the Dreadnought class, are also to be seen at the shipyard.

BLANCHE BATES IN A NEW MELODRAMA.

David Belasco Keeps His Promise to Provide a Change of Style for His Star.

A year ago it was rumored that Blanche Bates would leave the management of David Belasco and develop plans of her own, very definitely laid down. Some may have been misled by the report, but surely none who knows the star and the stage director could well have accepted it. Miss Bates is not merely an actress of charm and force, she is a young woman of intelligence and judgment. She knows what she can do with a good part in any company, for she proved it long ago in the day of Augustin Daly; but she also knows that good parts are scarce, and good managers scarcer. Remarkably successful as her career has been under the inspiration, guidance, and care of David Belasco, it has not been an independent flight. Exactness as the demands have been on the ability and magnetism of the star of "Under Two Flags," "The Darling of the Gods," and "The Girl of the Golden West," and impossible as it would be to imagine a long-continued vogue for these plays without the aid of such gifts as Miss Bates brought to them, it is a certainty no less that the plays with their well-studied and dextrously achieved effects were a first necessity with the star. It is not strange that Miss Bates became a trifle weary of these semi-spectacular triumphs, nevertheless. Their possibilities by no means marked the limit of her ambition or of her capacity. She has played Rosalind and Hedda Gahler, and with approval. Mr. Belasco was confronted with the necessity of furnishing a new range with contrasting outlook for his star if he would keep her energy and enthusiasm within bounds.

Now that "The Fighting Hope" is in its second week at the Stuyvesant Theatre, and the hasty judgments of a first night as well as lingering prejudices carried over from other seasons have been crowded back by well-founded opinion, the subtlety of Mr. Belasco's art and the real power of Blanche Bates's dramatic intuition and technic are much better understood. The play, an initial effort by William J. Hurlbut, a Chicago newspaper writer, is a domestic melodrama, with several well-managed situations, and much better in construction than in plan, but essentially theatrical and but little short of serious disappointment in course and climax. It has but five characters and the scene is the same in every act. This is surely a change in the Belasco method, and a radical change. It is much as if the eminent stage director had said to his star, "You think my efforts in the way of stage illusion and atmosphere are nothing. Well, then, see what you can do without them." And the actress accepts the challenge and is winning. With a bad play, all its action confined to one set of three walls, distinction in acting is required to win, and the distinction is not lacking.

The California actress has never had a rôle like this one, and is not likely soon to have another. Its call upon her emotional resources is sufficiently imperative, but in addition it requires her to win sympathy for a mistaken martyrdom. Her part is that of a woman whose husband has been sent to prison for certifying a fraudulent check on the bank in which he is cashier. His defense had been that he was obeying the order of the president of the bank. To establish this claim and clear her husband, the wife secures the position of secretary to the bank president and is at once placed in the most confidential relations with her employer. In the course of her duties she is made the custodian of a letter which proves conclusively her husband's guilt, and she burns it, notwithstanding the fact that the paper is necessary to clear the banker. Then her employer shows that he has fallen in love with her and she confesses her part in the plot against him. Of course, by this time she has discovered that she cares more for the financier than she does for the father of her two boys, and the complication that can be straightened out satisfactorily only by the removal of the offending husband is presented. As a further consideration for complete reversal of the heroine's sympathy it is shown that the guilty man had squandered his ill-gotten funds on another woman. That settles it, or at least makes the decisive bullet in the fourth act a messenger of poetic justice. It is not until this last act that the husband is permitted to show himself on the stage. He appears suddenly to confront his somewhat confused and altogether entangled helpmate with a story that he has been pardoned. Really he has escaped, and in the succeeding effort to elude his pursuers he is picked off by a pistol shot. It is easy to see at the fall of the curtain that the always upright and tender-hearted banker will be able to console the long-deceived but attractive widow.

In spite of this improbable plot, the play is not altogether unconvincing. Miss Bates does a great deal to make its appeal seem real, and her success is marked by large audiences that have encouraged Mr. Belasco to give a series of Thursday matinees as additional opportunities for the public. Charles Richman, who plays her part of the trusting banker, is to be commended for a consistent and finished performance. Howell Hansel, as the husband, has but one melodramatic scene, but he does it well. If the play continues for any time, it will be due to the art of the players.

In the meantime one is curious to know just what Mr. Belasco thinks of this reception of the play and his star. He should be too well-seasoned and practical a playwright to have any illusions concerning the character and value of the melodrama. There are few races of his handiwork in its construction, though it may not be denied that there is room for improvement in several of the scenes. One actually begins to question the ability of the playhouse worker to distinguish false sentiment from true, the actual from the merely seeming. With a little of the genuine to build upon and around, it is possible for the dramatist and the stage manager to utilize a lot of imitation stuff, but when there is confusion as to the real article and the papier-maché substitute the last hope fails. "The Fighting Hope" is a good title, and Miss Bates, not Mr. Belasco, is making it good, much to the satisfaction of her numerous friends. FLANEUR.

NEW YORK, October 8, 1908.

A PHILOSOPHER'S FORECAST.

Mr. Frederic Harrison Talks about the Coming Defeat of Woman.

The new book of essays by Mr. Frederic Harrison, the distinguished leader of Positivists, contains several thought chapters of special interest to women. In "Realities and Ideals" (Macmillan) there are three essays on the "burning questions" of the rights, duties, and claims of women and another essay on "votes for women," a subject which Mr. Harrison regards as charged with tremendous consequences, political, social, and moral:

"There is," he says, "nothing that I know of but law and convention to hinder a fair percentage of women from becoming active members of Parliament and useful ministers of the crown, learned professors of Hebrew and anatomy, very fair priests, advocates, surgeons, nay, tailors, joiners, cab-drivers, or soldiers, if they gave their minds to it.

"The shouting which takes place when a woman passes a good examination, makes a clever speech, manages well an institution, climbs a mountain, or makes a perilous journey of discovery always struck me as very foolish and most inconsistent. I have so high an opinion of the brains and energy, the courage and resource of women that I should be indeed surprised if a fair percentage of women could not achieve all in these lines which is expected of the average man.

"My estimate of women's powers is so real and so great that, if all occupations were entirely open to women, I believe that a great many women would distinguish themselves in all but the highest range, and that, in a corrupted state of public opinion, a very large number of women would waste their lives in struggling after distinction. Would waste their lives, I say. For they would be striving, with pain and toil and the sacrifice of all true womanly joys, to obtain a lower prize for which they are not best fitted, in lieu of a loftier prize for which they are preëminently fit.

"Let us teach them that this specious agitation must ultimately degrade them, sterilize them, unsex them. The glory of woman is to be tender, loving, pure, inspiring in her home; it is to raise the moral tone of every household; to refine every man with whom as wife, daughter, sister, or friend she has intimate converse; to form the young, to stimulate society, to mitigate the harshness and cruelty and vulgarity of life everywhere."

Continuing the subject in his paper on the work of women, Mr. Harrison says:

"Assume that the equalization of function is logically carried out—that employments, professions, habits, are interchangeable at will between the sexes. Grant that our mothers, sisters, daughters are just as likely to be printers, tailors, merchants, lawyers, and doctors, clerks, accountants, public officials, as our fathers, brothers, or sons.

"What would be the result? Our mothers would be as little at home as our fathers; they would come home so much fatigued, and as much in want of mere rest; they would be far too much absorbed in professional life to listen to the small troubles of their children, and too much women of business to give way to sentiment.

"That pure and sacred acknowledgment by the stronger of the moral claims of the purer sex would disappear the day that men continually found women in desperate competition with them for material power.

"How strangely some women deceive themselves in fancying that they can win in the battle of life by their own strength, and yet not sacrifice the moral ascendancy which centuries of civilization have secured to them.

"Blind and petty ambition! They can not have it both ways. If only a certain proportion of women succeeded in claiming their right to fight it out with men on equal terms, to sacrifice family and all the duties of family, to sacrifice all that is woman's exclusive privilege in order to win by their own energy industrial and professional careers for themselves, the charm which it has cost chivalry, religion, and modern refinement a thousand years to build up would be snapped at once, and men in the mass would come to regard women as mere female competitors.

"Can we doubt the result? Women, as physically the slighter and less capable of prolonged strain, must be beaten. Their very qualities of heart and brain, their tenderness, unselfishness, and refinement of organization would be a hindrance to them in the fight; the harder, stronger, less affectionate sex, free as men are from the handicap of periodic nervous prostration, would reassert their old brutal reign of force.

"The barbarism of earlier times would return, and the personal ambition of a few unwomanly women would have plunged their sex again into the horrible slavery of a subject and despised order."

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Hamilton Fish, assistant treasurer of the United States, in charge of the sub-treasury in New York City, has resigned his position to accept the Republican nomination for Congress from the Twenty-First New York District.

Robert Luce of Somerville, Massachusetts, was one of the two defeated aspirants for nomination as candidate for lieutenant-governor in the recent convention. The man who was to nominate Mr. Luce was unable to make the speech, so the candidate rose to nominate himself. It is declared that the fact that he sounded his own trumpet had nothing to do with his defeat, but it is doubtful that Mr. Luce's example will result in the general adoption of his plan.

The Maharajah Gakwar of Baroda has melted down and converted into bullion the celebrated gold and silver cannon of Baroda. Of these costly but useless toys, the silver guns were the inspiration of a former Gakwar. In order to "go one better" than his predecessor, the late Gakwar had the gold guns cast, and mounted at a cost, it is said, of £100,000. They reposed in the state armory and were the wonder and admiration of all visitors to the capital.

Vu Kyuin Willington Koo, a Chinese, has been chosen to edit the Daily Spectator at Columbia University. It is said to be the first time that a Chinese student has been placed at the head of an American college paper. Editor Koo, who is but twenty-two years old, is a slender chap, and is known throughout the university as a master of pure English. He speaks without accent, knows more about American politics than the average American, is a debater of wonderful ability, and one of the most popular men in the university.

Leon Daudet, son of Alphonse Daudet, the novelist, was the head of an impotent anti-Dreyfusist demonstration at Nimes a few days ago. The occasion was the dedication of a monument to Bernard Lazare, who wrote the first pamphlet demanding justice for Dreyfus. Single-handed, he aroused the interest of Scheurer-Kestner, Zola, and others, who later took an important part in the movement to establish the innocence of the accused officer. Major Dreyfus sent excuses, regretting that he was "unable to be present to render homage to my sincere friend."

Mrs. J. G. Phelps Stokes, who was Rose Pastor, and in her girlhood worked in a New York cigar factory, is an ardent Socialist. At a dinner given in honor of Eugene Debs a few days ago in the metropolis Mrs. Stokes took off the only jewel she was wearing, a large pearl pin, when an appeal was made for funds, and threw it into the contribution box, promising also "a brooch which I have at home and which I never wear." Her example was followed by other women present. Mrs. Stokes's wealthy husband, himself a convert to Socialism, is a candidate of the party for the assembly in one of the East Side districts.

David C. Stull of Provincetown, Massachusetts, is known to mariners generally as the ambergris king. He buys at first hands more of the precious substance than any other dealer, and has given a single check for $35,000 in payment for one lot. Two hundred dollars a pound is often paid, and he has paid as high as $500 a pound. Mr. Stull acts as agent for the Paris dealer who supplies ambergris to the great French perfumers. There is never a glut in the ambergris market. The variation in price is due not to any oversupply, but to the difference in the quality of the finds. Although the whalers are much more on the alert to discover the substance, there is not a great deal of it brought in, for the reason that the whaling industry has so fallen off.

Henri Poincaré, the leading mathematician of France, finally consented to deliver an opinion on the question arising out of the contest between Lord Rosslyn and Mr. Maxim over their recent roulette duel as to whether a calculation can defeat or at least correct a chance. M. Poincaré declares that there is no infallible martingale or method of doubling one's stakes after every loss. "All one can do," says M. Poincaré, "is to combine one's play so as to have a great chance of winning a little and a little chance of losing much, or a few chances of gaining much, and many chances of losing little. One can arrange his play so as to have one chance of winning a million francs and a million chances of losing one franc or a million chances of winning a franc and one chance of losing a million francs—and that's all."

Professor Peuck, director of the Berlin Deep Sea Institute and American exchange professor, has come to America for a short stay. The professor may lecture in New York on the interesting anthropological discovery made in a wonderful cave named the Wellerkerlhöhle, at Santis, Switzerland. Dr. Eckerhardt discovered this cave and later on Dr. Bachler unearthed in it numerous remains of a colony of bears with a quantity of human bones of the prepalæolithic period. The discovery showed that mankind dwelt in the cave and lived on the bears which they killed in hunting. Professor Peuck in the course of a visit to the cave ascertained that this state of things could only have occurred during the last interglacial era. He thereby is convinced that human beings must have lived in the mountains before the last glacial modification of the Alps, which, according to his calculation, was about 100,000 years ago.

VIGILANTES VERSUS JUDGE.

By Jerome A. Hart.

XXXV.

From the haste with which the executive committee prepared for the trial of Tower it was evident that Lupkins's rapid recovery had come to them as a relief. But it was also evident that their relief would prove of short duration unless two threatening dangers were averted.

One of these, of course, was the ever-present menace of Federal intervention. The other was the danger of the mass of the Vigilantes rising in rebellion against their leaders, and unceremoniously lynching Tower.

Some among the leaders professed to believe that there was a third danger—that of the escape of Tower. But they were not heeded. There were not wanting members of the executive committee who openly hoped that Tower might be rescued by his friends. So strongly was Fort Vigilant guarded that this hope was without any chance of realization. Those of the leaders who desired to be rid of their embarrassing prisoner in any way, even by his escape, naturally approved of the trial. And the executive committee generally looked forward with much anticipation to the trial, most of the members hoping that it might result in a favorable verdict. In that way they could release Tower, and end their predicament. For if they kept him, they had a series of dilemmas to face. There was a chance of the State or the city becoming strong enough to interfere; there was the constant dread of the Federal power; there was the fear of some overzealous Vigilante murdering Tower in his cell; there was even the possibility of suicide, as in the case of Mulligan, with its misconstructions and suspicions; and there was the ever-present danger of general rebellion in the Vigilante ranks and hasty lynching. It is not too much to say that the tribunal trying Tower hoped for his acquittal more earnestly than even Tower himself.

Tower was led into the executive committee's room by the marshal, and when the prisoner took his indicated place the two guards who had brought him from his cell took positions on either side of his chair, carrying muskets with fixed bayonets. Tower smiled grimly as he noted the extreme care with which he was guarded. Glancing around the room, he saw that at least the forms of law were to be observed. Twelve of the committee had been selected to act as jurymen; the chairman presided as judge; the judge-advocate officiated as prosecuting attorney; and the accused was provided with counsel.

After the prisoner had been permitted a brief and perfunctory conference with his counsel, the presiding judge said:

"John Tower, stand up. You are charged with assault, with intent to commit murder, made on the person of Samuel Lupkins. How say you, prisoner, do you plead guilty or not guilty?"

Tower remained seated, and calmly replied, "I refuse to plead."

"On what ground do you refuse?" asked the judge-advocate.

"On the ground that by pleading I would acknowledge the jurisdiction of this tribunal to try me, and that I will not do."

There was a whispered consultation among his judges. When it was ended the judge-advocate asked him:

"If you refuse formally to plead, at least you will state whether you are guilty of any crime?"

As calmly as before, Tower replied:

"I refuse to plead formally, but I will state that I am guilty of no crime whatever."

The presiding judge and the judge-advocate again conferred, when the president said:

"Let this be entered as a plea. The prisoner pleads not guilty."

Partly through his counsel and partly in person, Tower objected that he had no witnesses present. To this the answer was made that most of those concerned in the affray when he was arrested were members of the Vigilance Committee; that all of these were ready to testify; that the only non-members present at his arrest were his friend Hamlin and the prisoner Mahoney; that Hamlin had made a deposition or statement which would be read to the jury. The answer closed with the significant remark that Mahoney was "at hand."

The presiding judge announced that the trial would be conducted in the following order: First, statement to the jury by the prosecuting attorney of what he expected to prove; second, evidence for the prosecution; third, statement by the defendant's attorney to the jury; fourth, evidence for the defense; fifth, argument of counsel for the prosecution; sixth, argument of counsel for the defense; seventh, speech of the prisoner himself, if he desired to speak; eighth, closing argument of the prosecuting attorney.

The specific charges preferred by the prosecuting attorney were to this effect:

"I charge John Tower with resisting by violence the officers of the Committee of Vigilance while in discharge of their duty; second, I charge him with committing an assault with a deadly weapon, with intent to kill Samuel Lupkins, a police officer of the Committee of Vigilance."

The speeches of the prosecuting attorney lasted only fifteen minutes, and set forth these charges.

The defense briefly controverted the charges of the prosecuting attorney, and alleged that Tower, as an officer of the law, was not only permitted but obligated to resist an arrest by a person not acting under warrant of the law. In regard to his assault on Lupkins, it was claimed that the act was purely in self-defense.

When both sides had rested their case the prisoner was withdrawn and again placed in his cell. The jury then began their deliberations. Departing from the practice of courts, these were conducted in the courtroom, and in their discussions the other officers of the court freely joined.

As the jury manifested a strong disinclination to shoulder all the responsibility, and threatened to render no verdict at all, it was finally decided that the entire executive committee should join the jury, and that three-fifths of the votes cast should be required to convict.

This large jury of some forty men then proceeded to ballot.

On the first count of the indictment, that of resisting a Vigilante officer, the jury found Tower guilty.

On the second count, that of assaulting Lupkins with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, the prisoner was found guilty of assault only.

The question then arose as to what sentence should be inflicted. After long and heated debate, the following judgment was decided on:

"CONSIDERING that John Tower, having been convicted of certain charges after a full, fair, and impartial trial before the Committee of Vigilance, and the usual punishment in their power to inflict not being expedient in the present instance, it is therefore

"ORDERED, That the said John Tower be discharged from custody; and also be it

"ORDERED, That in the opinion of the Committee of Vigilance the interests of the State imperatively demand that the said John Tower shall resign his position as judge of the Supreme Court; and also be it

"ORDERED, That this judgment be read to John Tower, and on its being ratified by the grand council he be forthwith discharged from the custody of the Committee of Vigilance."

When this conclusion had been reached it was determined to submit the sentence for ratification to the grand council. That body had already been convened, and to the number of nearly two hundred was in attendance in the large hall adjoining. But it was speedily found that the grand council by no means agreed with the executive committee. The grand council voted unanimously that Tower was guilty on the first count of resisting an officer. On the second count it disagreed with the executive committee, which had found him guilty of simple assault only; the grand council unanimously found him guilty of assault with attempt to murder. Concerning this count, the executive committee pleaded earnestly with the grand council, but found the larger body obdurate. In addition to reversing the executive committee's verdict on the indictment, the grand council also set aside the committee's sentence; instead of discharging Tower from custody, the grand council voted with practical unanimity that he be "banished from the State under the usual penalty." The "usual penalty" was death.

The grand council, having voted on these matters almost unanimously, referred them back to the executive committee, with what was practically a threat if they did not reverse their verdict and their sentence. With this sweeping action, the members of the grand council disbanded and retired to their homes.

By this time the night was well advanced. The harassed executive committeemen again met in the chamber, and attempted to reconcile their own proceedings with those of the larger body. But it was a hopeless task.

"Gentlemen of the committee," said Carleton, "you probably observed how difficult it was to get the grand council to confine themselves to even a slight measure of conservative action. There was a strong undercurrent of desire for immediately executing Tower. This was only checked by myself and others of the executive committee going from one to another of the more influential members of the council and urging the inexpediency of executing Tower under the present circumstances. It was with the greatest difficulty that we got them to give up hanging and to consent to banishment."

"If that was the sentiment of the grand council," remarked Bascom, "I think the hanging fever will be even hotter in the general body of Vigilantes. We must not forget that it includes now over six thousand members, many of them ignorant, uneducated, and hot-headed men, with hundreds of foreigners among them. The grand council is certainly far superior in its individual members to the general body; if the council entertains such rancorous feelings, what may we not expect of the Vigilantes at large?"

"What you say is true," admitted Carleton, "but we must not yield to such unreasonable pressure. Lupkins is now out of danger. To inflict the murder penalty on Tower would be preposterous. The next most severe punishment is banishment, as long imprisonment is beyond our powers. Tower has already been heavily punished by his incarceration here, and the desperate condition of Lupkins has hung over his head as a menace for many days. If the committee were now to take any action against Tower's life it would utterly destroy the community's favorable opinion of this body of men."

"I agree entirely with our chairman," exclaimed the judge-advocate. "And I urge that we take measures for discharging our prisoner at once, before the grand council or the general body of the Vigilantes can interfere."

"But we lack one vote of a quorum now," declared Carwell. "Quite a number of the executive committee went home when the grand council left the building."

"Then go and wake up the marshal," replied the judge-advocate. "He sleeps in the building, and is surely here. That will make up a quorum."

In a few minutes the necessary quorum was obtained, and the executive committee voted its disapproval of the action of the grand council, and ordered the immediate discharge of Tower and his removal.

With the fateful document in his hand, the judge-advocate and the marshal proceeded to the cell of Tower. The prisoner was still up and dressed. With his fate still pending, he had little desire for sleep. The judge-advocate hastened to relieve the prisoner's mind.

"Judge," said he, "it is my duty to read to you the following order, which has just been approved by the executive committee:

"John Tower is hereby discharged from the custody of the Committee of Vigilance. He is placed under the care of the judge-advocate, with directions that he be taken to such place of safety as he may select. By order of the Executive Committee. SIXTY-SIX, Secretary."

When Tower had collected the few personal belongings with which his cell was equipped, he set forth accompanied by the judge-advocate. He was unconsciously directing his steps toward the main entrance, by which he had come, but Truax smiled and said:

"Softly, judge, if you don't mind we'll go out by the back way."

So Vigilante and prisoner made their exit through the stable-yard, and by a rear entrance gained access to a back street.

"Have you any particular friend here to whose house you would like to go, judge?" inquired Truax.

"I have many friends in the city, but I very much question whether it would be a friendly act to impose on them the burden of protecting me against your committee tonight."

"Oh, you need have no fear. The Vigilantes are not only well organized, but disciplined; they will obey the orders of the executive committee."

"I hope you are right. In that case I would like to go to the house of my friend Hamlin. It is not far from the centre of the city; but I do not think you need give yourself the trouble to escort me, sir."

"I would prefer to do so, if you don't object. The executive committee's order directs me to escort you to any place you select. While I apprehend no danger to your life or liberty, I would prefer to carry out the letter of the order."

With no further discussion the two men walked on together, and Truax did not abandon his former prisoner until he had left him at Hamlin's threshold.

Less than an hour had elapsed when there came a loud rapping at Truax's door.

"Who's there?" he cried.

"It's me—Bascom. Get up, judge! I must see you at once."

In a few moments Truax had opened the door. "What's the matter?" he inquired.

"There's hell to pay!" cried Bascom. "The news is around that we have discharged Tower. Three of our companies started to hunt him—the Rincon Guard, the French Legion, and the Bloody Seventh. Now over a thousand armed Vigilantes are hunting for him high and low. They swear to have his life."

"Then we must save him, Bascom! He was discharged from custody and formally placed under my protection."

"Well, you have a pretty big contract, judge. I don't envy you. But where did you take him? We must get hold of him and put him in a place of safety."

"I took him up to the house of his friend, Hamlin."

"Our boys are searching the houses of all his friends, so we'd better take him away from there quick. Perhaps they haven't thought of Hamlin's place yet. Come on! I have horses down at the door."

In a few minutes the two Vigilantes were at Hamlin's house. It was brightly lighted, and there were sounds as if many people were in the house.

"I'm afraid our boys are here ahead of us," exclaimed Truax.

"Maybe these are only Tower's friends, come to celebrate his release," replied Bascom.

They knocked at the door. When Tower appeared he gazed at the two Vigilantes keenly, and paused.

"I would like," he said, "to be able to say that I am glad to see you, Mr. Bascom, but it would not be true. As a matter of fact, I was never less glad to see any one in my life."

Bascom laughed. "None the less, judge," said he, "I come as a friend. Truax here and myself have learned that there are large bodies of Vigilantes scouring the streets, swearing to kill you. We feel that it is our duty to put you in a place of safety. This house is no longer safe. Come with us at once."

"Where do you intend to take me?"

"Either to my house or that of Truax."

Tower paused. "Without any disposition to seem churlish," he said, "I will freely confess that I have had enough of Vigilante hospitality to last me for a long time. If you don't mind, I would prefer to go to the warship Monroe, where Captain Shotwell, I am convinced, will give me shelter."

"An excellent idea!" cried Bascom. "Have you a horse among these out here, judge?"

"No."

"No matter—I have brought a man along with a horse for you."

"I think it would be better for us all to go on foot on our way down through the city," objected Truax. "We would attract less attention than mounted."

"All right—we'll leave our horses with my man, and walk. But don't lose any time, judge!"

"If you will wait a moment until I can say farewell to my friends, I will be with you," answered Tower, waving his hands toward the windows behind him, whence came the sounds of revelry and clinking glasses.

"It would be wiser to go at once," said Bascom. "We'll leave word with the servant that you'll return presently. The fewer who know you've gone and where you've gone, the better."

Tower hesitated a moment, but consented, and the three walked rapidly down the hill and through the streets, protected by the darkness from recognition. At more than one place in the residential streets they noticed an armed guard in front of a house, which was evidently being searched by a force of Vigilantes within. Further down the hills, where lay the night life of the city, the streets were lighter, and there were larger crowds than usual, for many-tongued rumor ran that "The Vigilantes were hunting for some one." But Tower's body-guard kept to the darker streets, and they passed through the excited quarter unmolested, and reached the water-front. They found a boat-landing, and Bascom brought forth a boatman from some "Sailors' Snug Harbor." Soon the oars were thumping in the rowlocks, and they were gliding over the bay toward the black warship.

Tower turned, as he sat in the stern-sheets, and gazed at the flaring city—at the lines of light rising from the dark water, and running like ribbons over the steep hills—luminous lines—lines which meant streets—streets along which raved and roared thousands of men clamoring for his life. He did not confide his thoughts to his companions, nor did either of them speak until the hail, "Monroe ahoy!" came from Bascom. The quick shout came back "Keep off!" and the marine at the head of the gangway pointed his piece at them until an officer came to ascertain who they were.

John Tower had often declaimed against "Federal centralism" and in favor of "State sovereignty." Yet he breathed more freely now that he was out of the sovereignty of this particular State. Although an opponent of Federalism, he was unfeignedly glad that at last he trod the deck of a Federal frigate.

He looked across the dark water—he followed with his eyes the dim bands of reflected light which at the land's edge became bright bands—he gazed at the real city which sparkled and shone on the hills above, and at the phantom city which wavered and shimmered on the waters below. And as he gazed John Tower murmured with deep feeling:

"Thank God!"

For that he was out of the turbulent city, and safely aboard ship, he had good reason to say thank God. Yet he was neither a religious man nor a coward.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Copyright 1908 by Jerome A. Hart.

David Lubin, formerly of California, has finally won complete success for his long-cherished plan to aid agriculture in a world-wide way. After appealing in vain to his own government to encourage agriculture by bounties on leading agricultural staples, instead of continuing a hopeless struggle he changed his base of operations in behalf of agricultural interests and appealed to the King of Italy with so much persuasiveness that his recommendations were adopted by that monarch much as he made them. The result is the endowment and permanent establishment at Rome of the International Institute of Agriculture. The test of its value is shortly to be made. Within a month delegates from forty-six nations will meet at the first session of the general assembly of the institute, and working plans will be considered and probably adopted.

The game of billiards was invented by a pawnbroker, William Kew by name, who flourished in London in the sixteenth century. He used to employ his leisure hours in wet weather when trade was dull by taking down the three balls which were the insignia of his profession and pushing them about the counter of his shop with a yardstick, after the manner of the game as at present played, and using boxes fastened to the sides of his counter for pockets. Out of this was developed a table with a fence of slight elevation about it to keep the balls from rolling off on the floor, and to enable the player to make what have since become known as cushion shots.

Few people who use the phrase are aware that "Jack Robinson" was a real person. As a politician John Robinson was a great favorite with George III. His political career was a long one, for he was a member for Harwich during twenty-six years, being on one occasion bitterly attacked by Sheridan, who, denouncing bribery and its instigators, replied to the cries of "Name, name," by pointing to Robinson on the treasury bench, exclaiming at the same time, "Yes, I could name him as soon as I could say Jack Robinson," and thus originated the saying still current.

Nevada passed a law several years ago allowing hunters to shoot wild horses and to sell their hides. This opened the way to a new and profitable industry, and within a few years 15,000 wild horses were killed. But the hunters got to shooting horses that were branded and shod, and upon the plea of the ranchmen, the legislature repealed the law.

A LIFE OF MIRABEAU.

A New and Important Work Adds Largely to Our Knowledge of the French Revolution.

No apology is needed for a life of Mirabeau. It ought to have been done long ago, but we are rewarded for our patience by the fine work of Dr. Fling, who now gives us the first of his three volumes on "Mirabeau and the French Revolution."

The tendency during the past century has been to consider the great actors of the revolution from the collective rather than the individual point of view. But they are worthy of separate treatment. Mirabeau was the most commanding of them all, because he was the most human, perhaps because he was saved from the descensus avari that would have made him inhuman. But there is room for a biography of Danton and even of Robespierre. Neither the historians nor the psychologist can afford to overlook the personalities of the men who bathed France in blood and fire and purified her in a few short years for the shining place that was her destiny. Had Mirabeau lived he must either have crushed The Mountain or been crushed by it. In the former event the French Revolution might not have been so conclusive. In the latter event there would have been one more name, and the greatest of them all, to add to the list of revolution martyrs. Everything is for the best in this best of all possible worlds.

Dr. Fling devotes his first volume to the youth of Mirabeau. It closes with his coming of age in the year 1774. The second volume will take us to the preparations for elections to the States General, and the third will deal with Mirabeau and the National Assembly. Not until the third volume, then, do we enter upon the better-known ground of the revolution proper, with which so many historians have made us familiar, and for this reason the first two volumes will be the more important.

The author opens his work with an admirable summary of the struggle against arbitrary government in France. The reign of Louis XV was full of the presage of the coming storm:

As the century wore on, the situation grew ever more critical. More than once France seemed on the eve of a revolution. The claims of the king and of the parliaments were irreconcilable; clearly, one of them must subdue the other. The suppression of the parliaments had been considered and even threatened by the king, but not until 1771 did he venture to resort to such an extreme measure.

It was upon such a situation that our hero was ushered into the world. It must have been from his father, whose eccentricities could not conceal his real benevolence and philanthropy, that the future author must have inherited his great traits. We can hardly suppose that his mother contributed much to that end, in view of the sketch given to us by the author:

She was lacking in delicacy and gave such publicity to everything connected with her married life that "the chaste widow has inferred that nature had refused her all natural shame." Desirous of reading, she could not open a serious book without going to sleep over it. She began pieces of needlework without number, soiled them all, but never completed anything unless absolutely obliged to do so by the needs of the household. When she did work, she sat upon her foot with her leg bent under her, her face close to the article she was making, the bed cover thrown over her, regardless of conventionalities, or the flight of time, or of the other demands that might be made upon her. Eating at irregular hours and indulging her love of dainties, she either had no appetite at table or she ate voraciously. As a rule she took her seat at the table with her arms crossed behind her back and with an absent look upon her face. She never concerned herself with her guests, neither serving them nor offering them anything. If she happened to be in good humor and talkative, "as she naturally possessed wit and humor when her chance came and the tap was once turned, she was no longer mistress of herself, and the paroxysm of laughter and talk resembled an attack of hysterics." After dinner, if she did not play cards, she fell asleep in her chair. For a man with the education, refinement, and temperament of the Marquis de Mirabeau, life with such a woman must have been, before it ended, what he himself described as "twenty years of nephritic colic."

Mirabeau was born on March 9, 1749, and we are told that when the father entered the chamber he was first greeted with the words, "Don't be frightened." The child certainly presented an unusual appearance even to a man who might have foreseen that something startling must be the natural progeny of a wife so extraordinary. Montigny, describing the infant, says:

Destined to be the most turbulent and the most nimble of youth, Gabriel was born with a twisted foot; to be the most eloquent of the men and of the orators of his century, he was tongue-tied at birth, and the dimensions of his head, his size and vigour, were unprecedented, and two molar teeth were already formed in his mouth.

After twenty years of a married life that must have been far from blissful, the marquis and his wife separated, and perhaps it is hardly to the discredit of the husband that he resorted to a lettre de cachet to make the separation both effective and final. And on the subject of these famous lettres the author gives us some valuable information:

The lettres de cachet, one of the most typical institutions of old French society, have been aptly called "the very essence of public life" before the revolution. Upon them rested the authority of the king and the honor of the family; for, in the last resort, the king had no other means of enforcing his will throughout the realm, and the family relied upon these arbitrary orders to protect itself against degenerate members. It is believed that the employment of lettres de cachet was largely confined to affairs of state and used by the noble against the roturier, yet this is far from the truth. The evidence shows conclusively that out of a thousand cases but four or five were of a political character, while the remaining nine hundred and ninety-five or six dealt with matters of police or of family. In all of these latter cases, the initiative was taken by the family, the government simply responding to the demands made upon it, demands multitudinous in number, varied in character, and not confined to any rank or class.

Of the boy's early years, of his quarrels with his father, his imprisonment, and the reconciliation between the marquis and his son we have a detailed and fascinating account, and one that does not fail to show the occasional flash of a fiery genius that was to illumine France and the world. We see him participating in the paternal government of the rural districts, a government in which benevolence played its part as well as arrogant cruelty. The marquis, for example, had established a council of prud'hommes in his barony, the council to consist of eight men, elected by the residents and to meet once each month for the amicable settlement of disputes without reference to the courts. Young Mirabeau was the instrument through which this beneficence was to be accomplished, and we read of his arrival and of the request of the curé that the election be postponed until Sunday:

Mirabeau readily agreed to the postponement. The dissatisfaction that existed in this parish, he learned from the curé, had been due to the killing of four goats by the guards of the marquis. The peasants were in a state of revolt. The curé agreed that "it is a good thing to destroy the goats; they have eaten more of my cabbages and hedges than they have left; and furthermore there is a decree of the parliament of Bordeaux that is formal concerning this matter; but there are unhappy beings who have no other means of nourishing their children, and I am acquainted with parishioners who would fight to the death if any one touched their goats." He then called a poor woman who had two infants. "She was exotente, could give them no nourishment, had not a square foot of land, and her sister was nursing one of the children. Two of the goats of this unhappy woman had been killed. Oh! That touched me." Mirabeau asked the price of the goats and gave the woman twelve livres. He then explained that his father would furnish milk to those who needed it, but there must be no goats. "Oh, if you could have seen this poor curé weep and throw his arms around my neck, then go to this woman shaking his arm and his head, and then, not being able to say anything, as if he were choking, come back again to me, that would have touched you." Another woman, who had lost a goat and had been obliged to beg, he engaged as a servant for the chateau and her son was to be employed as cow-herd. "The village was afire in a moment on account of those two acts: if you had seen as I did these villagers, lately on the point of revolt, touching their hats with smiling faces, you would have said, as I did, 'There are three hours well spent.'"

On June 22, 1772, Mirabeau was married to Mlle. de Marignane. The course of true love ran no smoother than usual, and the suitor was compelled to use not only his "famous power of fascination" upon the lady, but other and less subtle persuasions upon her father, the Marquis de Marignane, whose opposition was strenuous. M. Roux-Alphéran tells us how this was accomplished:

Mirabeau bribed a chambermaid, who opened to him stealthily the door of the house at daybreak. He went at once and took his stand in night robe, with unbuttoned collar, and in underclothes, at one of the windows lighting the stairway on the side of the street, displaying himself thus almost nude to the gaze of the passers-by. The Marquis de Marignane, awakened by the noise purposely made by Mirabeau in addressing some one on the street, hastened to the spot, and, believing that he beheld the seducer of his daughter, addressed him in bitter terms, to which Mirabeau replied coldly, "Monsieur le Marquis, tomorrow your daughter will be my wife or my mistress." The wedding was in fact celebrated some days afterwards.

But married life without income has its disadvantages, especially when it is accompanied with a habit of extravagance. Mirabeau and his young wife find themselves at once immersed in debts and difficulties, and although the dowry of the bride was a liberal one, it was not payable until after the death of her father. As the marquis outlived both his daughter and his son-in-law, his provision for their needs may be described as nominal only. Mirabeau's father refused to help, and so greatly was he worried by a state of affairs that he could do nothing to remedy that we find him appealing to the Duc de Vrillière for a lettre de cachet in order that his troublesome son may be confined until he come to his senses. This was the second occasion when this formidable weapon had been invoked against the young Mirabeau, and indeed he was even then confined to the Chateau de Mirabeau by royal orders. His father writes:

You had the goodness a few months ago to obtain for me an order of the king that exiled my son to the Chateau de Mirabeau. Paternal consideration for his young wife, who up to the present time has remained constantly attached to the lot of this madman, decided me not to ask for prison that he deserved only too well. Now he is throwing everything into disorder on my estate, selling the wood, the furniture, etc., interfering with my agents, and can not be permitted to remain there. A continuation of commiseration for his respectable wife restrains me and should restrain me. Do me the favor, Monsieur le Duc, to accord me a change of exile for him to the city of Manosque, adding to it the prohibition not to leave the city and its territory. M. le Marquis de Rochechouart, who should have the honor to see you tomorrow, and who has seen the letters and the proofs of his last follies, has promised me to speak to you about them. I hope that you will be good enough to accord me this new favor promptly.

The application was successful and young Mirabeau was ordered to repair forthwith to Manosque. But here we must leave him and await a second volume which is thus auspiciously introduced. The author is to be congratulated upon the excellence of his work, a work that is not only lucid and of a fascinating style, but which shows all the conscientious care of research that should place it among the most important historical works of the day.

"Mirabeau and the French Revolution," by Fred Morrow Fling, Ph. D., professor of European history in the University of Nebraska. In three volumes. Illustrated. Published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York; $3.50 per volume.

A NEW ANIMOSITY.

What the Japanese Say of Americans—Hard Times in Japan Laid at the Door of the United States.

"I will sell this vase to you for six yen," said a curio dealer in Yokohama to an English friend of mine the other day, "but please do not say you have bought it, as I refused to sell it to an American for the same price a few minutes ago."

"But why?" asked the Englishman, considerably mystified.

"Because we do not care to sell to Americans if we can help it!"

The man, a very respectable merchant, was not trying to curry favor with one customer by disparaging another; he was simply voicing a universal sentiment. The truth is a dislike for Americans has been slowly filtering through all classes of Japanese society for some time, but not until this year has it reached the shopkeepers, who, devoid of the tact and polish of their betters, frankly confess it.

There are several reasons for this animosity. In the first place, America, justly or unjustly, is held responsible for the present hard times in Japan. The recent Wall-Street panic, besides cruelly affecting money markets the world over, has impoverished and kept at home the majority of those wealthy Americans whom Japanese dealers have long considered their natural prey. Worse still, it has taught the few millionaires traveling abroad in spite of adverse circumstances caution in spending their money. Gone are the good old days when oil kings and pork packers bought $1 trays for $100, when railroad magnates found everything "too cheap" because the gold dollars they brought over mysteriously doubled by the subtle rulings of exchange when turned into yen.

Now globe-trotters from "the States" declare everything is "too dear." They have learned to commit the unpardonable sin of bargaining and bring a shrewd business instinct into their pleasure. Used in moderation, this shrewdness would be justifiable, even praiseworthy. But overworked, it sometimes proves disastrous in Japan. A case in point happened a few weeks ago when a rash citizen from Missouri saw a pair of exceptionally fine vases in a Tokio exhibition and priced them. The artist, their creator and a man of reputation, said, "Two thousand yen." "Well, I guess I'll give fifteen hundred," replied the man from Missouri, winking at his wife as if to say, "You don't catch the old man napping."

Before he could draw out his pocket-book the irate Japanese, indignant at the idea of bargaining over these beautiful children of his hands, like another Virginius struck them down on the spot and turned away with such a look of contempt as only a Japanese can summon at need.

Every educated, refined Japanese—artist or not—despises a man who is destitute of appreciation—and of respect—for beautiful things, which is another reason why traveling Americans meet with thinly disguised contempt. Certainly the average American globe-trotter has execrable taste—to his lasting shame he it confessed. Bright colors catch his eye, while the subdued masterpieces of old times, the valuable bronzes, the exquisite bits of gold lacquer, he looks upon un-moved. That is, he once looked upon them; no shopman dreams—except in rare cases—of spreading such treasures before him now.

"It is no use to show good things to Americans," one hears on all sides. "They do not like them. Therefore we manufacture especially for export to suit the foreign taste."

In the Nagoya potteries and the Kyoto cloisonné shops rooms and rooms of atrocities—blue, green, red, yellow atrocities, decorated with dragons in despairing contorted attitudes, with mournful storks and flowers which any humane gardener would immediately uproot—make a man of plain tastes blush for his country.

But deeper still is the root of the Japanese dislike of Americans. The school incident may be settled diplomatically, but it is by no means forgotten among the people. "We do not wish to sell to Americans because Americans do not wish our boys in their schools," the newspapers say. "There's the rub"—the rest might be overlooked—the New York banks might fail and still be forgiven, the millionaires might bargain and yet be absolved—but this hint of an inequality between nations is too much "Ca c'est vraiment trop fort," as the French say. At heart every Japanese is a patriot—not an extract, luke-warm patriot, but an active patriot—ready to explode like a live volcano at a moment's notice. Once touch his national honor and he is off.

So long as he only becomes angry in a righteous cause his steadfastness is no less praiseworthy than his irritation. But, unfortunately, he sometimes starts off on an idea half cocked as it were, and this is what he threatens to do now with regard to America. His press the most scurrilous, the most mischievous in the world, pricks him, fills his head with stories of American action, scorns to mention legitimate reasons for such action, suggests covert insults till every Japanese in the empire feels revengeful.

As one man said to me ruefully, "I can not be a soldier, because I am under size. Alas!

though I tried standing on my toes, but the recruiting officer found me out. But," his face brightened, "I will not despair. There are many ways to serve our country and I shall do it in the export business. I shall help Japan to become rich, so that when war comes she may successfully fight those who have affronted us."

The spirit is an undeniably formidable one, even if it is rooted in misunderstanding and prejudice.

CHARLES LORRIMER,
Tokio, October 19, 1908.

The Henry James Edition.

Book lovers will not overlook the fine edition of the Novels and Tales of Henry James now in course of issue by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. Twelve volumes are now available, including "Roderick Hudson," "The American," "Portrait of a Lady," "Princess Casamassina," and "The Tragic Muse." "The Wings of the Dove," "The Ambassador," and "The Golden Bowl" will bring the number of volumes to fifteen, and these will be followed by eight other volumes containing the shorter novels and tales, arranged so far as possible in chronological order of publication.

In addition to the advantages of careful literary revision by the author, these volumes have a still more important feature in their prefaces. These are of a three-fold nature. Each, in the first place, narrates the circumstances in which the book was written, and the various incidents of its working out. In the next place it is a critical examination of the book itself by its author and done with a candor and a detachment unique in the annals of authorship. These prefaces are certainly of unusual interest. Indeed, they constitute a new work by Mr. James.

From the mechanical point of view this fine edition is all that it should be. Paper, type, and workmanship are perfect, while the frontispiece illustrations are delicate works of art. The publishers are to be congratulated warmly on an edition so worthy of the author and of themselves. Price, in cloth, $2 a volume. In half levant, $4 a volume.

Some School Books.

The following books have been published by the American Book Company, New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago:

"Hyde's Primer of Reading Lessons for Young Children." Price, 25 cents.

"Plane and Solid Geometry," by Elmer A. Lyman, with graded problems and exercises. Price, $1.25.

"Elements of Physics," by George A. Hoadley, C. E., Sc. D. A concise new textbook, covering entrance requirements to college and university. Price, $1.20.

Arnold's "Fritz auf Ferien," edited by May Thomas, with notes, exercises, and vocabulary. Price, 30 cents.

Switzerland produces no coal and no iron. In the manufacture of machinery the raw material is nearly all brought from Germany, which also supplies the greater part of the coal. The tools used in the machine shops, however, are, for the most part, made in America. The country has an enormous amount of water power, however, and in its development the Swiss have gained a prominence in the water turbine work throughout the world, one firm being called upon to design the original water turbine which was installed at Niagara Falls. Hand in hand with this turbine development, practically the superlative in electrical engineering has been attained, and today Swiss machinery is being sent to all parts of the world. The Swiss are able to maintain their position only through their superior technical knowledge, for which they are indebted to their engineering institutions. In their vast experience they lay claim to being the first to develop the transmission of electrical power over long distances, and it is believed that before long all the Swiss state railways will be working under electrical power.

United States Consul Wilbur T. Gracey of Tsingtau says: "China may be a land of opportunity to the business man with money, but any young man who is willing to work will find better opportunities every day in the American cities. Many young men leave their homes in the United States, ship as stowaways, work their passage to China, or spend their last few dollars for tickets in the hope of finding good positions on their arrival, and are surprised to find them all filled. If a young man lands from America in Shanghai unknown, it may be safely said that it is impossible for him to secure even a temporary position."

In the current issue of the North American Review Judge Charles Sumner Lobinger of Manila, an American member of the Philippine judiciary, reviews the work of the first Filipino assembly and pronounces it good. The output of legislation was not large—not in itself a fault—but the laws enacted were not characterized by radicalism, and the assembly disappointed those prophets who had declared that it would impose an immense amount of crude theory on the statute book. But seventy-three laws were passed, including private and local bills. Nine related to education.

CURRENT VERSE.

The Gloucester Mother.

When Autumn winds are high
They wake and trouble me,
With thoughts of people lost
A-coming on the coast,
And all the ships at sea.

How dark, how dark and cold,
And fearful in the waves,
Are tired folk who lie not still
And quiet in their graves;—
In moving waters deep,
That will not let men sleep
As they may sleep on any hill;
May sleep ashore till time is old,
And all the earth is frosty cold.—
Under the flowers a thousand springs
They sleep and dream of many things.

God bless them all who die at sea!
If they must sleep in restless waves,
God make them dream they are ashore,
With grass above their graves.

—Sarah Orne Jewett, in McClure's Magazine.

To Stevenson—Of Some Critics.

They scan the page all musical with perfect word and phrase,

And frown to find you trivial who talk of primrose ways;

Nor fathom your brave laughter, nor know the way you tread—

O serious-hearted wanderer upon the hills of God!

There where you lie beneath the sky far in a lonely land,

You who were even glad to die—care not who understand

Your whimsical sweet strays of tune and your heroic mirth—

Diviner of Arcadian ways throughout the dreary earth!

—Grace Hazard Conkling, in Putnam's and The Reader.

Three from Sedgemoor.

A LEGEND OF SOMERSET.

"Hist!" said the mother: "dout the light!
Kirke's Lambs are on the road tonight

A-seeking the flyers of Monmouth's fight:
And I've three sons from Sedgemoor

That fought for the wrong King James.
There's Jan, my eldest, and Jeremy,

And Ebenezer, big as a tree:
Lord! take my life for the lives of the three,

My three sons from Sedgemoor
That fought for the wrong King James!"

Jan she set in the flour-bin wide;
Up chimney Jeremy prophesied;

But Ebenezer was hard to hide,
The biggest of all at Sedgemoor

That fought for the wrong King James.
Till she founden a nook in her faggot-store;

But ere she had fairly tedded him o'er,
Came a thundering knock on the farmhouse door,

And, "Open, you rebels of Sedgemoor;
In the name of our good King James!"

She pulled the bobbin and drew them in;
Five privates and Sergeant Paradine:

She gave them cider laeed with gin,
And asked for the news from Sedgemoor
And the luck of the two King James.
And "Was the dirty rebels heat
And the wicked Duke a-teaken yet?
And wasn't they thirsty by all this he't?
Don't ee spare our cider of Sedgemoor
For the sake of the good King James!"

I trow she did not speak in vain;
She filled their cups again and again,
Till the liquor sang in each silly brain,
The strong liquor of Sedgemoor
That never paid tax to King James;
One loosed his stock, and one shifted his wig;
One sank his forehead and snored like a pig,
But the Sergeant still sat tight and trig,
A-watching the widow of Sedgemoor,
In his duty to King James.

Till a sudden fury shook the man,
And "Woman!" he cried, "was this your plan,
To draw our wits in the cider-can,
The drugged cider of Sedgemoor,
You friend of the rebel James?
For this your vile conspiracy
I swear you shall hang, all four!" said he,
"Mother and sons on one gallows-tree,
With your three sons from Sedgemoor
That fought for the rebel James!"

She tacked the board with her hand, and said:
"Carl thy men if thee ool! Theer they lie, half dead;

But Sergeant, you've kep' a zober head
In spite of the liquor of Sedgemoor

That never paid nought to King James!
So take my three big lads if thee durst!

But thee must fight their mother wurst,
For the children dear that my hosom nurst,
My three sons from Sedgemoor
That fought for the kind King James."

He drew and struck, but she leapt aside
And caught the steel in her tender side;

"Coom hither; my three strong sons!" she cried,
"For the sake of the true King James!"

Then Jeremy sprang from the chimney-flue,
Jan from the flour rose ghastly to view,
And right and left the faggots flew
As Ebenezer of Sedgemoor

Fell on the men of King James.

But when the sopers lay tied and bound,
Like calves arow on the market ground,

Then the brave mother showed her wound;
Ah! the brave mother of Sedgemoor
That died for the rebel James!

And "Niver fret for your Mammy!" said she,
"ror the Lord God hath had mercy on me,
And He've took my life for the lives of my three,
My three children of Sedgemoor

That fought for our kind King James!"
—Edward Sydney Tyce, in The Spectator.

Comptroller Metz of New York is about to make a strenuous effort to collect $75,000,000 of special franchise taxes, long overdue from corporations.

Over 1000 tons of asbestos have been mined from a deposit discovered last year on the Island of Cyprus.

LA MARQUISE

TURKISH CIGARETTES

"FINEST MADE"

10 for 25 Cents

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

By Sidney G. P. Coryn.

A prominent newspaper laments that the short story of action is no longer written. "It seems to be the rule," said the scribe, "that nothing should be allowed to happen. There is page after page of words . . . but that is all. Nothing done, nothing doing! The characters breathe, they think, but how seldom, oh, how seldom, they act." It might be thought that breathing and thinking would reasonably be placed under the head of actions, and if the thinking is to any purpose, if it is fresh and original and sincere, it is even worth recording in the short story. Perhaps we have gone too far upon the other tack and must now experience a wholesome reaction, although it must be admitted regretfully that the average short story is just as lacking in thought as in action. But may be the intention is there, based upon a recognition that thought and sentiment, the head and the heart, are the most engrossing of all human topics. Fact and action we can get from the newspapers, but their mental source is the proper domain of fiction.

Wroth, by Agnes and Egerton Castle. Published by the Macmillan Company, New York; $1.50.

The authors are to be congratulated upon a story of unusual intensity. It requires indeed no ordinary courage to depict such passion as that of Juliana and to force the picture upon our acceptance.

Juliana, the English wife of the aged Conte di Belgiojoso dei Vespi, finds herself accidentally introduced into the midst of one of the periodic and blasphemous revelries at Hurlay Abbey. Her distress awakens the chivalry of Lord Wroth, whose natural nobility of mind and soul has been well nigh submerged by a desperate dissipation and debauchery. While Juliana is watching by the deathbed of her husband in Italy Lord Wroth is informed by his attorney that he must either take a wife within the course of a few days or lose the fortune left to him upon that condition. With the memory of the supposedly unattainable Juliana burned hopelessly into his memory and in consonance with his reckless and daredevil character, Lord Wroth publicly advertises that he will marry the woman who best pleases him and who will present herself at the New Tavern, Tunbridge Wells, on the following day. Juliana, whose husband is now dead, has come to England, unconsciously attracted by the memory of the man who chivalrously defended her at Hurlay Abbey. She sees the notice and, heavily veiled, presents herself among the crowd of wretched women who gather at the inn and among whom she recognizes her half-sister, a light-of-love actress who is willing enough to establish herself by marrying a lord. Amid a scene of wild hilarity Wroth makes his choice, and of course it is the actress, but Juliana persuades her to change places and, still heavily veiled, she herself marries Wroth, secretly signing the register in her own name and then relinquishing her husband to the frail beauty who caught his fancy at the tavern. For the unraveling of this strange situation the reader must be left to the story itself. That the authors succeed in winning our sympathy for Juliana and in compelling our admiration for Lord Wroth under conditions that seem to preclude either is nothing short of a tour de force. The plot is indeed one of audacity from beginning to end, and that it is sustained so successfully is due to exceptional energy and skill. The authors are to be congratulated upon a remarkable and successful story, equal to anything that has come from their pen.

Ganton & Co., by Arthur Jerome Eddy. Published by A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago; $1.50.

There ought to be material in Chicago for a good romance, and even the stockyards might be twisted into the service of art. But so far the work has not been done. Novelists of the Western metropolis seem to be fascinated either by the sordid greatness of its industries or by the domestic excesses of its magnates. Surely there is a middle ground of average humanity in Chicago with something worth the attention of the romancer. But we are not helped to find it.

Ganton & Co. is a strong story, but it is unlovely. There is hardly a single character worthy to be remembered. The young packer, Alan Borlan, does indeed fight the labor leaders with chivalrous valor, but that is all we know about him. Mr. Ganton is a marvel of brute intellectual force, rough, tempestuous, and uncultured, who has built up a vast business by methods now unpopular. There is something pathetic in his gradual surrender to the cancer that slowly saps his strength while clinging despairingly to the belief that his "stomick's all upset," but it can hardly be called a moral. We were inclined to like his wayward young son Will, who has a human love for pleasure, until we find him at dinner "bolting his glass of water in great gulps" and learn that his hands are large and finger nails short and stubby. We had hopes, too, of his other son, John, who is a student and therefore despised by his father, but the last page shows us John seated at his father's desk, picking up the threads of the business and squaring his shoulders to continue the ugly trade. The women are even worse. We could tolerate them if they were actively bad, but they are simply useless, mercenary, heartless. They have not even the dignity of vice. Those who want to know how the packing trade is carried on in Chicago, the infamies of the labor leaders with whom strikes and lockouts are matters of sale and barter, will find them here, and set forth with unusual vigor and comprehension. But "Ganton & Co." is not a work of art, because it leaves us where it found us. It gives us a glimpse of a commercial inferno and it leaves us without a suggestion of better things and without a single recollection that is not dreary and depressing. The book is interesting, because it is faithful and true and strong. Probably it is a photograph of conditions, but an artist would have touched it with the imagined beauty of things unseen.

Long Odds, by Harold Bindloss. Published by Small, Maynard & Co., Boston; $1.50.

This is one of those rare stories that increase knowledge and send us away in permanent possession of new facts and theories. There are five chief characters, each one drawn to the life and each one a type. There is Armsgill, who comes from a life of poverty and menial toil in the interior of Africa to find himself in possession of a fortune and that Amy Ratcliffe, whom he meets with her mother at Grand Canary, is willing to resume her engagement to him. Amy herself is of the conventional type, and in affairs matrimonial she has that kind of vice called prudence. Then there is Benicia, the daughter of the Portuguese commandant, splendidly beautiful and easily touched by a self-sacrifice that has lain outside her sphere of experience. The two remaining figures are Father Tiebout, a French Catholic missionary, and Nares, a Protestant medical missionary, heroic souls who endure deprivation and misery in full assurance that somewhere and somehow the soil of the dark and cruel continent will bear a harvest.

"Long Odds" is practically a story of adventure, but its picture of the enslaved degradation of the east coast of Africa is terrible in its fidelity. The trader Lamantine on his deathbed, and stricken with something like penitence, has exacted a promise from Armsgill that he will rescue the native girl who was his mistress and who has fallen into evil hands, and also that he will care for a party of negro boys who have been stolen. He accomplishes the double feat only after three journeys to the interior with his life in constant danger from his enemies and supported by the heroism of his missionary friends. The effect of his extraordinary self-sacrifice upon his betrothed and upon Benicia is finely told, and there are in fact very few stories that are so striking a combination of action and sentiment beside coming with so much force as a message from one of the darkest corners of the earth.

The High Adventure, by Hugh De Selincourt. Published by John Lane, New York.

We are introduced to four young men, rather commonplace and of the earth earthy, who live together in a bachelor establishment in London. The author's object seems to be to show us how a colorless and mediocre character may be redeemed by contact with a striking personality and by the power of a pure love. Bernard Linnell is the only one of the quartet who interests us. The others might indeed be dropped out of the story, except as reminders of Linnell's starting point. A casual introduction brings Linnell into contact with two men of striking intelligence and of an original and lovable girl. Under this inspiration we see him gradually unfold mentally and morally, shaking off the inertia of an existence without aim or ambition. Marriage becomes the coping-stone of a remarkable awakening, a process sketched by the author with much skill and with some disregard to les convenances. "The High Adventure" is a book well worth reading by thoughtful people.

The Sense of the Infinite, by Oscar Kuhns. Published by Henry Holt & Co., New York; $1.50.

That human consciousness is but a dim reflection, or even re-reflection, of a cosmic consciousness of unimaginable scope has been a favorite theory of the mystics of all times. Plato speaks of it as of a fact known to himself, while Emerson seems constantly to struggle with an inability to put his knowledge of it into words. Indeed, so vast is the literature of the subliminal consciousness, or by whatever name its periodic discoverers may be pleased to call it, that the author must have used considerable self-control in his handling of it. Indeed, he admits the excision of large departments of his subject, such as "Oriental Mysticism," although perhaps it would be hard to find much mysticism that is not Oriental. At least, it is only in the Orient that we find any definite claim to an exploration or a charting of the consciousness that lies above the normal.

But the book is a useful one, because it is both careful and sincere. The author tries to show some of the part that has been played by the sense of the Infinite not only in the reflections of philosophers, but in literature and in the great religious movements of the world. He seems to suggest that there have at all times been men who have known something of the superhuman consciousness or, to quote Emerson, of the "sublime vision" that "comes to the pure and simple soul in a clean and chaste body," and to have impressed some of the resulting energy upon the thought of their day. His treatment of Platonism, of the Renaissance, and of the Pietistic Movement is admirable in every way, and we may well hope to hear more from an author who has so eminently the faculty for diligent and diffident thought and research.

Hilary on Her Own, by Mabel Barnes-Grundy.

Published by the Baker & Taylor Company, New York; $1.50.

Hilary Forest, weary of country life and the humdrum effort to make both ends meet, decides to go to London and to earn her own living as a secretary. After a struggle with her family, she gets her own way, and with five pounds and some letters of introduction in her pocket she starts for the metropolis. The story of her adventures is amusingly told, but the young woman who would follow Hilary's example would do well to be a little less pert and a little more conventional. Prominent physicians rarely fall in love at first sight with young women seeking secretarial employment, and to start upon such a theory would spell disaster. The story, moreover, is somewhat marred by the introduction of well-known characters under a disguise that even a detective could penetrate. The mixture of fact and fiction is inartistic and confusing, but the story is really engrossing and is not one that will be left half-read.

Coffee and a Love Affair, by Mary Boardman Sheldon. Published by the Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York.

This is a charming little sketch of an American girl who goes as governess to the family of a cotton planter in Columbia, and meets many delightful people. The narrative is in the first person, it is full of delicate humor and incidentally it puts us on terms of speaking acquaintance with the coffee industry.

"I Never Dine Without It."

I find it gives an appetizing relish to an otherwise insipid dish. I like it on Soups, Stews and Hashes. It greatly improves Steaks, Roast Meats and Chops.

LEA & PERRINS

SAUCE

THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

Just a little on Cheese is a necessary finishing touch. Without it no Rarebit is complete. It is a good digestive.

Beware of Imitations.

John Duncan's Sons, Agents, New York.

JUST PUBLISHED

JOHN MARSHALL AND OTHER ADDRESSES

By HORACE G. PLATT

1 Vol., 5x8 in., in Red Cloth, 282 pages, portrait frontispiece.

In this collection are presented thirty-four of the speeches made by Mr. Platt on various occasions, including the addresses on "JOHN MARSHALL," "THE WAR WITH SPAIN," and "AMERICAN IMPERIALISM."

For Sale by the following Booksellers, price $1.50:

A. M. Robertson, 1539 Van Ness Avenue.
Cunningham, Curtiss & Welch, 563-571 Market Street.
Paul Elder & Co., Van Ness Avenue and Bush Street.
Max H. Fay, 1239 Van Ness Avenue.
John J. Newbegin, 242 Market Street.
The New Book Store, 400 Sutter Street.
R. J. Machen, 654-656 Market Street.

Mail orders, enclosing 10 cents additional for postage, will be filled promptly.
THE ARGONAUT PUBLISHING CO., 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco

DUSTIN FARNUM'S "SQUAW MAN."

By Josephine Hart Phelps.

It is scarcely to be expected of an American dramatist that he will turn out realistic pictures of the English aristocracy disporting on its native heath. But it is rather a pity that he attempts such a feat.

The society chatter in the first act of "The Squaw Man" sounds something like the hahhle of idiots. One grows alarmed, foreseeing a whole evening of suffering. But "The Squaw Man" is the sort of play that steadily improves during the progress of each act. The first is hopelessly, irredeemably, had. And, it may be added, Dustin Farnum fails to outshine the act. Handsome though he is, he is no drawing-room ornament. He has no more social ease and lightness than a wild western buffalo. His accent is crude, his voice unmodulated, his acting unwieldy. His renowned good looks call plaintively for the shadow of the cowboy hat. His legs ache for chaps. In fact, as a society ornament, this masculine beauty of the plains is distinctly all abroad.

But—soft you, now—things look very different in the next act. Captain James Wynnegate, who seems to be several kinds of a complete and accurately proportioned fool, has migrated to the plains under the shadow of a large, ugly cloud which rightly appertains to his cousin, the Earl of Kerhill. Jim is chivalrous—with the chivalry of fiction—and saddles himself with a blasted reputation, in order that his cousin-by-marriage, Diana—or Dianer, as Dustin Farnum calls her—shall continue to live unhappily with a titled rascal whom she does not love.

Now wouldn't that jar you? Please 'scuse slang, but really, only flippancy will do justice to the occasion. One simply can not take this sort of thing seriously.

However, Jim Carston, as Captain Wynnegate calls himself during his new life on the plains, simply must be saddled with a seated sorrow, and Edwin Milton Royle, the author, takes this one, faute de mieux.

In the second act we are introduced to cowboyland and cowboy types. There is some stuffing in this act, but the picture is amusing and tolerably interesting, until real, active drama dominates the scene, with the coming of the ever-womanly. Then the interest is at once tremendously enhanced.

Nat-u-ritch, the Indian girl, who ultimately becomes the wife of the squaw man, is a picturesque conception, because the author has been consistent, and bestowed upon her the humble reticence of her kind. She utters, if I remember aright, not more than half a dozen words during the play, but her admirable crime, her silent, dog-like devotion, and the relation she bears the unfortunately chivalrous squaw man, all lend to her figure a dignity and an interest, a significance, which make for dramatic strength.

Those are the qualities lacking in the character of Diana—rather uninterestingly indicated by Mary Conwell—who is merely a cog-wheel in the dramatic machinery of the first act, and a good deal of an excrescence in subsequent ones.

The story is not her story, nor is the tragedy any one's but Nat-u-ritch's. The problem of the Indian woman can only be solved by death. So Nat-u-ritch pays, and as the curtain falls upon Tahyvana slowly hearing the limp corpse of the heret little mother, one feels a sense of the profound solemnity that should accompany tragedy.

It really amounts to a salute to the ability of the dramatist, who, in spite of the foolishness and chatter of the first act, created a striking and moving situation and awakened feelings that were gratifyingly remote from the superficial sentiment inspired by Diana and Jim's blighted loves.

The play is very uneven in merit, being a curious mixture of artifice and realism. The cowboyisms in the second act, and the irruption of the English party and the American tourists into the Long Horn saloon are of the stagey stage. But every now and then Big Bill, or Tahyvana and his interpreter, or Bud Hardy, the sheriff—four rôles which were perfectly played by Messrs. Deyo, Lewis, Paul, and Frederick—brought a breath of intense reality upon the scene.

Dustin Farnum, who was distinctly away out of the picture in the first act, dispelled all seise of disapproval when he made his picturesque appearance in the second. He is so spectacularly good-looking and he has naturally such a guileless expression—no one with that guileless countenance could ever hope to be an all-round good actor—and he was in appearance so particularly well fitted to carry a romantic story upon his broad shoulders, that he was at once forgiven all his sins of omission and commission. One of the latter, by the way, is putting too much black on his eyelids. Another is too much monotonous embracing of the little half-breed son. Well, I am not sure. Perhaps that is the fault of the author. At any rate, there was too much of it, for I am quite sure that a healthy, active, half-Indian child of the plains would have rebelled and escaped with relief from those hot and choking caresses long, long before the scenes in which he figured were ended.

The play is put on in good style, all the details being so carefully worked out as to tend to the desired illusion. On Monday night, however, there was something radically wrong with the make-up of the child, the Indian complexion stain being smudged upon him so disfiguringly as to make the unconscious youngster look like a mangy monkey.

Dustin Farnum, by the way, perpetrated a speech. It was stigmatized as "punk" by the facetious youth who murmured, "A good system," when Tahyvana stolidly recommended the squaw man to kill his wife if she failed in humility and obedience.

Well, it was. But I don't think that lessened Mr. Farnum's popularity with the audience, that was metaphorically clapping him to its hosom because he was young and good-looking, and dark-eyed, and had an even line of white teeth showing through parted lips, in an open, artless, engaging smile of unaffected, hoyish pleasure over his reception.

He is disarmingly handsome, is the ex-Virginian, and big and childlike and lumbering, but I'll wager that if it were not for his beaux yeux, and his athletic figure, and the aforesaid white teeth, and a few other accessories, he would not be drawing a very fancy salary as an actor.

Blanche Arral's Concert Again Postponed.

Manager Greenbaum gives notice that he deems it advisable again to postpone the Blanche Arral concert, rather than have the artist appear when not at her very best. While she has entirely and absolutely recovered from a serious illness, she is still weak. The positive announcement is made that she will sing with the grand orchestra Sunday afternoon, October 25. She could have sung this Sunday, but it would have been necessary to make the programme lighter, and this the artist did not care to do, as she wants to give the public her very best. The same programme will be given and the same seats still hold good.

Manager Greenbaum says: "If any one who attends Blanche Arral's concert at the Van Ness Theatre on Sunday afternoon, October 25, does not feel that it was well worth waiting for, I will cheerfully refund his money after the concert."

The shawl was originally not a woman's garment exclusively, for the Scotch Highlander has his tartan plaid, and the men of northern Italy still wear a cloak which is very little more than a shawl. There can be no question that the shawl is more useful and more picturesque as an article of attire than the close-fitting coats both men and women now wear. The shawl could in case of emergency be used to protect two persons, or to wrap a child in, or as an extra bed-covering; its fashion did not change every three months, and it could be used and passed down in the family until it was worn out. Nowadays the only time when such articles are used is when people are making an ocean trip or traveling in Europe. "Traveling rugs," which are nothing more nor less than men's heavy shawls, are extremely "English," and for travelers they are considered very proper and desirable—but outside of a steamer, train, or carriage, no one who cares for what people will say would be seen with one.

Some years ago, at a session of the legislature of Kentucky, an effort to repeal the law offering a bounty on foxes' scalps was made, but was defeated by the appeal of a member from a mountainous and sparsely settled region. "Do the gentlemen want to deprive my constituents and me of the benefits of hearing the gospel preached?" he demanded, with indignation in his tone and overspreading his rugged countenance. "We are all Methodists up my way, and our preachers won't come without we can give 'em chickens. I know. We can't raise chickens unless the foxes are killed by somebody, that's sure; and there ain't nobody that can afford to spend their time hunting foxes and get nothing to pay for it. So, gentlemen, if you repeal this law, you'll be depriving my constituents of the benefit of hearing the gospel preached; that's the way it looks to me!" The law was not repealed at that session.

The government treasury continues to run behind. September revenues fell about $3,000,000 behind those of a year ago, while expenditures were $4,400,000 larger. This turns a surplus for the month last year of about $3,000,000 into a present deficit of about $4,000,000.

Pictures Whose Painters Are Dead.

Taking for its text the fate of a girl bearing the name of a dead painter renowned in Europe and America whose works sell at constantly increasing prices, while she earns her living by selling programmes in a circus, the Journal proposes a scheme for insuring artists against losing forever the fruit of their efforts. The paper suggests the formation of a society for the protection of artistic property which the government shall empower to collect for a certain number of years for the artist's benefit a percentage of the price every time a picture or sculpture is sold.

This society is to be on similar lines to societies which collect authors' fees on every new edition of a book and every production of a dramatic or musical work. The Journal says the society should keep a perpetual catalogue in which every artist for a small fee may enter each of his works with a minute description thereof. The society is to place its stamp on every work thus entered. An additional safeguard against forgeries is thus formed.

The idea is well received by the presidents of the new and old salons and other artistic societies. They believe the plan would make it as easy to follow the wanderings of a picture or a statue as a story or a musical piece.

The Lloyd Scott Travel Talks.

"Egypt," one of the most interesting countries in the world, will be the subject of the Lloyd Scott Travel Talks at Christian Science Hall for the school children's matinee this Saturday, and in the evening "Ireland" will be given. Mr. Scott's Irish lantern views were colored at the Duhlin Art School and are done in oil colors; most lantern views are water colors.

Next week the talks will be given in Oakland at Maple Hall, Monday evening, "India"; Wednesday, "Japan"; and Friday, "Russia." "Egypt" and "Ireland" the following week.

"To storage of Irish giant—£200" is a strange entry which appears in the books of the London and Northwestern Railway Company. The giant, whose chest measurement is six and a half feet, and who is presumably petrified, lies in a stone coffin which is more than twelve feet long at the Worship-Street goods depot in London, whither he was removed from Broad Street some years ago. He first came into the possession of the company about thirty years ago, when he was consigned from Manchester, and since then he has been in Chancery. Tradition says that he was found in County Antrim by a Mr. Dyer, who, after exhibiting him with profit in the north of England, entered into partnership with a showman named Kershaw. The partners disagreed, and the giant was sent to London, where Mr. Kershaw obtained an injunction to prevent his removal from the company's care. Since then all the parties to the legal proceedings and the judge who granted the injunction have died. The company is not inclined to disturb the giant, but in case a legal claim should be made for him it will charge the successful claimant for its tender care of him.

An application for a license to open a tobacco bureau has brought to public notice in France a forgotten war heroine, Mme. May, who in 1870 distinguished herself in a series of daring exploits. She was born in 1844 near Le Mans and was living at Metz at the time the war broke out. She offered her services as a scout and was accepted. At first she drove about the country in a cart, and after some time adopted masculine attire, which would permit her more easily to move about among the soldiers. Her cleverness in avoiding detection, as well as her courage, was soon recognized, and she was charged with carrying important dispatches to the furthest outposts along the frontier villages, which exposed her constantly to the risk of being caught and shot as a spy. She was, in fact, captured one day as she was carrying three important messages through the enemy's lines to the commander of the besieged forces at Thionville. She was searched by the Germans, who, to their honor be it said, treated her most decently and sent her away free, but with strict orders not to cross their lines again.

"AN EVENING OF SONG"

by
BEATRICE PRIEST FINE (Soprano)
AND
ANNA MILLER WOOD (Contralto)
Assisted by Fred Maurer and Wallace A. Sabin
CHRISTIAN SCIENCE HALL
Next THURSDAY EVE, Oct. 22, at 8:15

POPULAR PRICES—75c and $1.00. Seats ready Tuesday at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s. Baldwin Piano used.

W. L. Greenbaum announces that in order to have the public bear her AT HER BEST

BLANCHE ARRAL'S CONCERT with Grand Orchestra
WILL POSITIVELY BE GIVEN OCT. 25

Same seats hold good. Box office Sherman, Clay & Co.'s.

We will not sell you glasses unless we are convinced they will suit you.

HIRSCH & KAISER

218 Post St.

Opticians

JUST A BOOK STORE

Robertson's

1539 Van Ness Ave.

NEAR PINE

"Next to the White House"

GRANADA HOTEL

— OPENS —

OCTOBER 1, 1908

Situated at Sutter and Hyde Streets

Midway between the business and resident sections of the city

A strictly first-class Hotel on the American plan. ABSOLUTELY FIRE PROOF. All rooms and baths outside exposure; every modern improvement; luxuriously furnished.

Perfect service and cuisine, and an atmosphere of home comfort rarely met with in a hotel. Special monthly terms to families. Reservations can be made at the hotel.

E. S. DE WOLFE, Manager
Formerly proprietor Hotel Pleasantoo

Rich, mellow, perfectly aged in wood and very delicately flavored

Old Gilt Edge Whiskey

Rye or Bourbon

AMUSEMENTS

ORPHEUM ELLIS STREET NEAR FILLMORE
Absolutely Class A Theatre Building

Week beginning this Sunday afternoon

ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE

THE OPERATOR, an intensely dramatic playlet, with LYSTER CHAMBERS and CLARA KNOTT; REDFORD and WINCHESTER; LA PETITE MIGNON; McPIHEE and HILL; THERESA RENZ, World's Greatest Equestrienne; GRACIE EMMETT and Company; JUPITER BROTHERS; New Orpheum Motion Pictures; Last Week, Great Musical Farce, THE ECCENTRIC GENYARO AND HIS VENETIAN GONDOLIER BAND.

Evening prices, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box seats, $1. Matinee prices (except Sundays and holidays), 10c, 25c, 50c. Phone, WEST 6000.

PRINCESS THEATRE Ellis Street near Fillmore
S. LOVERICH, Manager
Class "A" Theatre Phone West 663

Last Two Nights of "THE AMEER"

Next Week

LAST OF FERRIS HARTMAN

The Mirrhful Musical Delight

THE OFFICE BOY

Popular prices—Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Mats. (except Sundays and holidays), 25c, 50c. October 26—KOLB and DILL and their Big Eastern Company in "Playing the Ponies."

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove St.
Phone Market 500

Monday, October 19

SECOND AND LAST WEEK

The Distinguished Star

DUSTIN FARNUM

In Edwin Milton Royle's Virile Western Play

THE SQUAW MAN

Every Night, Including Sunday—Matinee Saturday

October 26—"CHECKERS."

VALENCIA THEATRE Valencia St. nr 14th Phone 17 Market
San Francisco's newest and most beautiful playhouse

Week starting Sunday Matinee, October 18

VALENCIA STOCK COMPANY

Including ROBERT WARWICK

In an Elaborate Production of George Barr

McCutcheon's famous romance

GRAUSTARK

Or "Love Behind a Throne"

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.

Following the successful week's run of "The Sign of the Cross" at the Valencia Theatre will come a production of "Graustark," the famous romance by George Barr McCutcheon, dramatized by Miss Grace Hayward. The play shows how the fortunes of the young queen, Yevive of Graustark, were affected by the visit of a young American to the kingdom, and it contains many romantic situations. Willette Kershaw will have the rôle of the queen and Robert Warwick will be the adventurous American. With the adequate support ensured by the personnel of the Valencia company, and the elaborate and beautiful settings for the play which the management never spares, the production should be a notable one in every way.

Dustin Farnum will continue another week at the Van Ness Theatre in "The Squaw Man." The play and the company are reviewed at length in another column.

At the Princess Theatre this week "The Ameer" is being presented in a very attractive fashion. In many particulars it surpasses the best of former productions of the piece, and especially in the strength and brilliance of the chorus. Ferris Hartman is distinctly good in the star part, once done by Frank Daniels. Of the two comedians, almost anybody would prefer to see Hartman as the Ameer. His facial gymnastics may not be so unintermitting or so grotesque, but he acts with some show of enthusiasm, and has never yet attempted even an imitation of Daniels's familiar condescension and air of wearied indifference. Arthur Cunningham, who has come to be a master of make-up, is a picturesque and consistent Blakjak. Sarah Edwards is well suited in the music of her part, and sings with effect. Christina Nielsen was obliged to assume the leading feminine rôle at short notice, on account of the illness of Sybil Page, and acquitted herself most creditably. Walter de Leon's jester was only fairly well done; it might have been made to yield handsomely.

Next week, the last of Ferris Hartman's engagement, that merry musical farce, "The Office Boy," will be given. It abounds in pretty music and comedy situations and will give good opportunities to all the favorites. As it will be a good-bye week for the company which has long entertained the public delightfully, the audiences will undoubtedly be large throughout.

A notably good bill is announced for next week at the Orpheum, beginning with the matinee performance Sunday. Lyster Chambers and Clara Knott in an intense sketch, "The Operator," will be the head-line attraction. It tells a thrilling story of railroad life on the Nevada desert. Redford and Winchester are two clever burlesque jugglers fresh from European triumphs; La Petite Mignon, a remarkable mimic who has just returned from a successful tour abroad, will give imitations of Marie Dressler, Eva Tanguay, George Cohan, Anna Held, Fritzi Scheff, Eddie Foy, and other celebrities. McPhee and Hill, aerial artists, will present a novel act called "The Clown and the Tired Man." Next week will be the last of Theresa Renz in her equestrienne act, the Jupiter Brothers, illusionists, and Gracie Emmett and company in "Mrs. Murphy's Second Husband." It will also conclude the engagement of that eccentric musician, Gennaro, and his Venetian Gondolier Band.

The great racing play, "Checkers," played by Hans Roberts and others of the original cast, will follow "The Squaw Man" at the Van Ness Theatre.

On Monday evening, October 26, Kolb and Dill, supported by their Eastern company, will begin an engagement at the Princess Theatre in "Playing the Ponies."

Zoe Barnett, who has just completed nearly a year's engagement as comic opera soubrette at the Princess Theatre, with especial successes to her credit in "Wang," "The Belle of New York," and many other musical comedy offerings, is said to have accepted a contract with an Eastern firm of managers.

Grace Van Studdiford's appearance in "The Golden Butterfly," the new comic opera written for her by De Koven and Smith, did not provoke the critics to raptures of praise. The initial performance of the piece was in Washington, D. C.

The star of Daniel Frohman's second company in "The Thief" is Miss Helene Wilson, daughter of Robert Wilson of San Francisco. Miss Wilson is a recent graduate from a school of acting and is only twenty-two.

Co-Operation Publishing.

It is rather singular to note that several of the big firms of English publishers are adopting cooperative methods. If a large and costly book is to be produced, it is becoming quite customary for several firms to combine over it. They have their printing, binding, art work, and all the mechanical processes done as a joint undertaking, and the publishing revenue is "pooled" on behalf of the several firms lacking the book. This is not exactly new, as it was quite customary in the early Victorian age, but it is rather surprising to see this form of cooperation cropping up again. In one way it is a decided advantage. Instead of one publisher who may wish to bring out a work in a very handsome style finding it beyond his means to do so, he may get several other firms interested in the venture, and by thus combining a fine hook can be produced.

It must be admitted, however, that it is not wholly to the best interests of the author, for where so many divisions of profits enter into the transaction the author is likely to be forgotten. Another thing bearing on the remuneration of authors is this: Where a hook is published in very handsome style by several firms the original cost of production leaves only a narrow margin of profit for the author. These cooperative methods are usually at present confined to publishing books in a long series, and the method has not been applied very extensively to the works of one author, except in the case of one or two collected works.

LITERARY NOTES.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

Richard Burton, professor of English literature at the University of Minnesota, has three new books—essays, verse, and fiction—to be published by Little, Brown & Co. The novel, called "Three of a Kind," is just from the press.

Austin Brereton's "The Life of Henry Irving," described as the authoritative biography of the actor-manager, is nearly ready for publication by Longmans, Green & Co. The work, which will be issued in two large illustrated volumes, has been written largely from material supplied by Mr. Irving, and aims to give a complete account of his life, together with his various theatrical ventures.

William Winter's book of reminiscences is among the Moffat, Yard & Co.'s publications. It is devoted to the author's recollections of the famous actors with whom he has come in contact during his long career as a dramatic critic. It bears the title, "Other Days: Being Chronicles and Memories of the Stage."

Professor Ernest Francisco Fenellosa, the educator, author, and Orientalist, died in London September 21 of angina pectoris in his fifty-fifth year, leaving the manuscripts of a number of works on Japanese and Chinese art. These are to be edited and published by the widow, who is now on her way from England to the family home, Kohinata, Spring Hill, Alabama, and who is herself the author of two novels, "The Breath of the Gods" and "Truth Dexter," as well as a book of verse. Mrs. Fenellosa's pen name is Sidney McCall.

New Publications.

"The Whispering Man," by Henry Kitchell Webster, is a detective story with a plot so ingenious that we are inclined to forgive both improbabilities and an occasional faulty elucidation. It is published by D. Appleton & Co., New York; $1.50.

To the Life Stories for Young People Series, published by A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago, have been added "Arnold of Winkelried," "The Duke of Brittany," and "Marie Antoinette's Youth," all by George P. Upton. The price of these books—and there are now twenty in the series—is 60 cents each.

The Houghton-Mifflin Company, Boston and New York, have published "Ye Butcher, Ye Baker, Ye Candlestick-Maker, Being Sundry Amusing and Instructive Verses for both Old and Young, Adorned with Numerous Woodcuts," by Robert Seaver. The verse is good and with a modern moral, while the illustrations are whimsical. Price, 50 cents.

"My Auto Book," by Walter Pulitzer, is a sort of diary for the automobilist. The alternate pages are record blanks for the "Date of Run," "Those in the Party," "Places Visited," "Distance Covered," and "Special Incidents," while "Killings Can Be Omitted." The other pages are devoted to clever illustrations, and jokes. The book is published by the Outing Publishing Company, New York; $1.

The Lamb Shakespeare for the Young Series, published by Duffield & Co., New York, now contains "The Tempest," "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "As You Like It," "The Merchant of Venice," "King Henry V.," and "Twelfth Night." The plays are based on Charles and Mary Lamb's "Tales from Shakespeare," the type is large and clear, and the illustrations dainty. Cloth, 80 cents net; limp lambskin, $1 net.

"The Beckoning Heights," by Phoebe Fabian Lecky, is a successful story of the South. The Nunnery is an old Virginia home, haunted according to popular rumor, but Patsy Grigsby, who comes to live in her ancestral home, will have none of such superstitions. Patsy is indeed a charming creation, and the success of the story is due as much to the author's thorough knowledge of her subject as to a happy facility in conveying it. The book is published by the Neale Publishing Company, New York and Washington, and the price is $1.50.

Beatrice Fine-Anna Miller Wood Concert. One of the most interesting concerts of the season will be the joint recital of Beatrice Fine, soprano, and Anna Miller Wood, contralto, at Christian Science Hall next Thursday evening, October 22. It was a happy idea of Manager Greenbaum to combine these two artists at one concert, thus giving an opportunity for hearing some delightful and rarely heard duets. Both of these artists have won places for themselves in the East, and they leave for their homes shortly after this concert. The prices are 75 cents and $1, and the seats will be ready Tuesday at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s. There will be a dozen novelties on the programme.

Dustin Farnum is to be starred later in the season in a play by Edward Peple, author of "The Prince Chap," called "The Spitfire."

GUY DE MAUPASSANT

THE painter of humanity in words who without hatred, without love, without anger, without pity, merciless as fire, immutable as fate, holds a mirror up to life without attempting judgment. No reading could be more delightful than his quaint, delicious SHORT STORIES in which is pictured with marvelous skill the virile novelty of country scenes, and the comedy and tragedy underlying the whirl of Parisian life, in which love and laughter, tragedy and tears run side by side. Here are also embraced the remarkable Romances which caused Tolstoy to hail DE MAUPASSANT as the supreme realist and romance writer of his century. Included also are the Travels, Dramas and Verse, all sparkling with gems of description—Meissonier-like pictures in words.

Real Parisian STUDIES AND ORIENTAL LIFE marvelously pictured in this First Definitive Edition of DE MAUPASSANT'S Writings Translated by Linguists of International reputation, unexpurgated. Introduction by PAUL BOURGET of the French Academy. 327 Short Stories, Novels, Travels, Drama, Comedies and Verse.

Supreme Master of the SHORT STORY

SEVENTEEN HANDSOME DE LUXE BOOKS
Actual Size Eight by Five and One-Half consisting of 5500 pages, printed from a new cast of French Elzevir type—elegant and clear—on pure white antique egg-shell finished paper, made especially for this edition. Pages have deckled edges and liberal margins. There are 30 illustrations from original drawings. The books are exquisitely bound in Blue Vellum De Luxe Cloth, with distinctive brown and gold title label, silk headbands and gold tops.

INTRODUCTORY OFFER—Coupon Saves 50% MAIL TODAY

This set is a strictly subscription edition, $51.00 value. Heretofore it has been impossible to get DE MAUPASSANT'S WORKS except in limited editions at very high prices. We have only printed a limited number at the wonderfully low price of $24.00.

Prompt return of coupon will bring the books direct to you On Approval, all express charges prepaid.

Keep them ten days for examination. If unsatisfactory return them at our expense. If satisfactory they are yours for but a slight outlay each month.

THE WERNER COMPANY
AKRON, OHIO

Argonaut 10-08 5
The Werner Company, Akron, Ohio.

Please send me, charges prepaid, the complete works of GUY DE MAUPASSANT, in Seventeen (17) volumes, bound in Blue Vellum De Luxe Cloth. If satisfactory, I will remit you $2.00 at once and $2.00 per month for eleven (11) months. If not satisfactory, I will advise you within ten days.

Signature.....
Residence Address.....
City.....
State.....

The Testing of DIANA MALLORY

By every test this is Mrs. Ward's greatest novel. She has given us Lady Rose's daughter and Kitty Ashe—pictured them exquisitely in their brocaded backgrounds and historic settings. Now Mrs. Ward has moved on to a greater triumph. Here is a novel of today. Here is absolute reality. Never realism—but always convincing, actual life.

By Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD

WHAT A SAN FRANCISCO CRITIC SAYS:

The San Francisco Chronicle: "By far the strongest story in its purely human appeal to the emotions that Mrs. Ward has written since 'The History of David Grieve.' . . . No one can fail to be touched by the figure of the heroine."

HARPER & BROTHERS

VANITY FAIR.

Mrs. Roosevelt is probably the only lady in the country who, with full means to do what she likes in the adornment or rearrangement of her residence, must none the less accept the will of another and remain passive in all those matters of household management that are so dear to the feminine mind. When Mrs. Roosevelt returned to the White House a week or so ago she found everything precisely as she had left it. This does not mean that there could be no improvement upon perfection, but simply that the White House interior is in no way under her direction. It depends upon the will, first of all, of Congress, and then of Colonel Charles S. Bromwell, a young engineer who is in charge of the establishment and whose word "goes" in all matters of decoration, repair, maintenance, and alteration. The question of the White House comes before Congress every year, and it is for that august assembly to say whether alterations or repairs are necessary and whether it is simply a question of maintenance. Congress is, of course, guided by Colonel Bromwell, but whether Colonel Bromwell himself is wholly independent, whether he is adamant against the wishes of the first lady of the land, must of course be left to the imagination. He is supposed to be stern, inflexible, and beyond the reach of blandishment, but then so few of us are quite what we are supposed to be.

But the fact remains that Congress has provided nothing for the White House during the present year except maintenance. That means nothing more than the word implies. Discolored paint may be renewed and repairs may be effected, but nothing new must be bought and no money must be spent in alterations or in moving things about from one room to another. The new paint is the same color as the old, and when the workmen have finished they have done nothing that will arrest the eye. There may be a general effect of freshness, but there is no effect at all of novelty, and this must be a grievous trial to the housewife who delights in those salutary changes that are not without their mental effect upon herself and her family.

The New York World points out that next year there will be a new first lady of the land in the White House and that Congress in providing only for maintenance this year has doubtless remembered that fact and has reserved its generosity to welcome the new mistress. Colonel Bromwell in submitting his estimate for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, set the figures at $30,000, or $15,000 more than the current year. That means that $15,000 will be at the disposal of the new mistress next summer:

During the first year of a new family in the beginning on July 1 must all be passed before March 4, a mere nod from the new first lady of the land, if she has any particular idea of how things should be done, will be sufficient to get more money for her, even if her husband has not been inducted into office. With $15,000 to start with, the new first lady will be able to get new dishes if she does not like the kind used by the Roosevelt family, and probably have the wall coverings in several of the rooms changed. In a pinch it might be made to cover the cost of a few bits of furniture to take the place of the ugly stuff in the east room.

The settees in that room look exactly like the rattan covered seats in a summer car with the backs taken off, the only difference being that the legs of those in the east room are covered with gold leaf, while the street-car seats are merely painted yellow.

During the first year of a new family in the White House the cost of new furniture and maintenance runs up to about $1000 a week. That includes nothing in the way of wages for the attendants or light. That expense is borne on a separate roll; but as the cost of lighting the White House is carried in conjunction with the cost of lighting the very extensive grounds and the streets surrounding the house, it is impossible to tell just how much it costs to keep the home of the President of the United States habitable.

The exact relationship between a political constitution and feminine attire is not evident at the first glance, but it seems to be none the less true that emancipation in Turkey applies to the women quite as much as to the men. Harem life, while by no means a thing of the past, has at least been robbed of many of its historic features, and the rules of seclusion, if not abolished altogether, have at least been measurably relaxed. The veil will not quite disappear, but it will be thinner and more transparent, and to raise it will no longer be regarded as a proof of female depravity. Very few Turkish ladies have ever been away from the place they were born in; a few have got away, and under the old régime would not have been allowed to return, but now that is all changed, and in future wives will go abroad when their husbands are sent.

The present dress will only undergo a slight modification. Instead of the shapeless out-of-door cloak, the Turkish lady can now wear well-fitting dresses, or jackets and skirts, and be as smart and trim as her European sisters in public, but she must not wear a hat yet, and her head will be entirely enveloped in a sort of hood attached to the neck of her dress or coat, and made of the same material as her costume. The women will no longer be kept shut up in a closely shuttered house on a hot summer's day. They even already go about in open carriages and are to be seen enjoying themselves on the water in the afternoons and evenings.

But does any one suppose that Turkish women will be happier than they were before? They are now fairly on the road toward the nightmare called civilization, and before long they may even have suffragette clubs and be fully initiated into the system of trial marriages which prevails here under the protection of our divorce laws. So far as we may judge from reliable accounts of harem life in Turkey, the lot of the married woman in Turkey seems to be by no means unenviable. Domestic concord is the rule rather than the exception, and the interests of the woman are protected as much by the law of the land as by the kindness and indulgence of the husband. The Turkish woman is now very much in the position of her progenitor Eve when she left the Garden of Eden, except that Eve was driven forth, whereas her descendant has gone voluntarily. Her emancipation may lead to ultimate wisdom. There is a possibility of it, but her progress thereto will be a painful one.

The French government imposes a tax upon billiard tables and is therefore well informed as to the number existing in the country. It seems that the number is steadily decreasing. In 1894 the treasury returns showed that there were 95,000 throughout the whole of France, but this year the number is only 89,000. The treasury naturally laments this fact not through any enthusiasm for a fine game, but because its diminution implies a loss of revenue. Motoring, of course, is laid under contribution, as it is everywhere else in civilization, but golf is so far immune. The turn of the ancient and royal game may, however, come in due time, as no possible source of revenue is likely for long to escape the attention of the French government, especially if it concern the wealthy classes, and so we may yet find that golf clubs, halls, and even caddies will be laid under contribution to make up for the shrinkage in the billiard receipts.

Another curious item that reaches us from Europe is to the effect that pingpong threatens to resuscitate itself. If this fell game should really come to life again in Europe, it is to be hoped that a rigorous quarantine will be declared against it in all American ports. Pingpong is a weak imitation of lawn tennis and deserves to be denounced if only because of its degraded name. Now, there is much to be said for tennis. It requires skill of no mean order, it needs strength and agility, and it is played in the open air. But pingpong has none of these things to recommend it. It is not even necessary to walk around the table, while all the skill that can be given to it can be acquired in an hour. It is, no doubt, a nice amusement for children on a rainy day, but as a game for grown people who would resent a charge of idleness it is simply beneath contempt.

The dog's tailor now issues his regular trade circular, and to one of these we are indebted for the information that a chic tailor-made mantle replaces last year's seal-skin jacket. The new mantle is specially designed to protect the dog's chest when accompanying his mistress in her carriage or motorcar. Fido's handkerchief is now carried in a little purse attached to the leash. The lady experts whose specialty is canine hairdressing have decreed that the Parisiennes' pampered pets must use the same perfume as their mistresses.

The jewelry most in request for aristocratic dogs this winter will be gold bracelets, ornamented with diamonds, attached to the fore legs. The collar is frequently enriched with precious stones. Footwear for dogs has been condemned, as it made the pets' feet look large. Smart motoring dogs are now provided with automobile goggles and hood to protect them from dust.

Sydney Brooks contributes to Harper's Weekly an interesting account of the enormous expense of fox-hunting in "the Shires," the name by which the best hunting district of England is known. "There are probably in the United Kingdom two hundred and thirty thousand hunters," he says, "that cost their owners originally not less than seventy or eighty million dollars, and that involve a yearly expenditure of at least forty. More than one hunt in the Shires spends fifty thousand dollars a year, and a great many spend over twenty thousand. A well-known master of the foxhounds has put the cost of maintaining a popular pack at two thousand five hundred dollars a year for every hunting day. The compensation funds, the wages and clothing of the horsemen and whippers-in, the grooms, and the kennel-men, and the expenditure on forage and meat for horse and hound, when added together make it appear probable that the direct outlay on fox-hunting is hardly less than fifty or sixty million dollars a year."

Although the fox is so much in demand in England, he is afforded no protection by the law. Any one may kill a fox whenever and wherever he finds him, and although the hunting men will gnash their teeth and think unutterable things, their rage will be entirely impotent. As a matter of fact, foxes are very seldom killed in England, even when they are caught in the chicken roost, but their immunity is due to calculation and not to sentiment. Every villager knows that he can get double value for every chicken whose death can be laid at the door of a fox, and the evidence of the dark deed need not be too conclusive. The farmer's boy knows where the fox den is to be found even better than the huntsman, and a refusal to pay, and to pay liberally, for damage done would simply result in the ruthless extirpation of a litter of cubs that would provide sport for a season. So the huntsman simply pays up and tries to look pleasant, and when the farmer hears the fox at his fell work in the henhouse he simply turns over in bed and thanks Providence for an opportunity to sell his hens without taking them to market and at a price far beyond the current figures.

The London managers have been interviewed on the subject of the matinee hat. All of them gladly admitted that the majority of ladies who go to afternoon performances now take off their hats, and most of them do so of their own accord. All the theatres now in some way remind ladies that it will be for the comfort of every one if they do not wear their hats during a performance. Ladies have generally responded to such appeals. Some offenders, however, will not be influenced by any persuasion, and seem to enjoy a play more if they have the knowledge that by keeping on their hats they are preventing others behind them from seeing the stage. One manager went so far as to say that it was coming to be considered "had form" for a lady to be seen wearing a hat in a theatre. "When it becomes a mark of vulgarity," he added, "you may depend upon it that the matinee hat is doomed."

The woman who knows most about the inner life of European courts is the Honorable Charlotte Knollys, who has been Queen Alexandra's most intimate friend for many years, and who is now accompanying her majesty on a round of visits to the Scandinavian courts. Daughter of the king's private secretary, Lord Knollys, she has grown up in the royal household and her position at court is unique. She is the only person outside the royal family who may enter the queen's household without invitation. Her majesty reposes the greatest confidence in Miss Knollys who possesses a passkey which opens all the queen's jewel safes. When the crown jewels disappeared from Dublin Castle the queen's comment was: "I shall really have to offer to lend Miss Knollys to Lord Aberdeen (the viceroy) to mind his jewels, for I am perfectly certain no one would ever touch them if she were in charge." Miss Knollys acts as the queen's private secretary, handling all her correspondence. With the royal children she is a great favorite, and is known to the young princes of Wales as "Auntie Knollys." It is one of her duties to escort the children when they have to travel with out their parents.

Professor Gustave Eherlein, the famous German sculptor, whom the Kaiser sent to New York to investigate art conditions there grows eloquent on "America's living object of art—women. The great esteem in which woman is held in America, and the beauty that distinguishes the American woman above all her sisters, has led America's greatest artists to devote themselves principally to portrait painting," said the professor to an American correspondent. "The majority of these portrait painters studied in the French school—only a few follow in the footsteps of Sargent, the greatest painter America has produced. There is no more fascinating panorama in the world than a New York opera house, its boxes filled with gorgeously dressed women. How gracefully they throw their many-colored wraps over chairs and sit enthroned like princesses! In the United States woman has reached the zenith of perfection. No nation in the world can compete with America as to female beauty. I call them living objects of art, for each is a most beautiful expression of art, with her nobly formed head proudly poised on white shoulders framed in precious stones and lace. She is gowned as no queen ever dreamed of being gowned, and has the hair of a goddess, incomparably rich and of all enchanting tints."

W. & J. SLOANE

FURNITURE

Exclusive lines for Parlor, Library, Living Room, Dining-Room, Bedroom, Hall, Summer Homes and Offices.

CARPETS

Special weaves and colorings in the greatest variety. Domestic Wiltons and Whole Piece Axminsters. We show all grades.

RUGS

Both Oriental and Domestic. This is by far the largest and choicest stock of Rugs on the Coast. Our Orientals are selected as individual pieces.

Upholstery—Interior Decoration

Our long experience and unequalled facilities enable us to admirably execute special orders.

Van Ness and Sutter

Sherman, Clay & Co., occupying this entire building at Kearny and Sutter Streets, S. F., are headquarters for every kind of musical instrument from Steinway pianos down. You have no need to go elsewhere for any article pertaining to the music business.

Sherman, Clay & Co.

STEINWAY AND OTHER PIANOS—
VICTOR TALKING MACHINES

Kearny and Sutter, S. F.

1635 Van Ness Ave.
San Francisco

Broadway at 13th
Oakland

Hotel del Coronado

Motto: "BEST OF EVERYTHING"
Most Delightful Climate on Earth
American Plan. Summer rates $3.50 per day each and upward, or $21.00 per week each and upward
"Good Music" and "Fine Automobile Road, Los Angeles-Riverside to Coronado."
Golf, Tennis, Polo, and other outdoor sports every day in the year.
New 700-foot ocean pier, for fishing. Boating and Bathing are the very best. Send for booklet to

MORGAN ROSS, Manager,
Coronado Beach, Cal.
Or see H. F. NORCROSS, Agent,
334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles.
Tel. A 6789; Main 3917.
22d Street and Broadway

John F. Forbes
Certified Public Accountant
601 KOHL BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO

Roy C. Ward
Jas. K. Polk
Jas. W. Dean
Geo. E. Billings
GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.
ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE
EFFECTED
312 California Street. Phone Douglas 2283
San Francisco, Cal.

A FITTING FINALE TO A GOOD DINNER

A FITTING FINALE TO A GOOD DINNER

LIQUEUR Pères Chartreux

—GREEN AND YELLOW—

This famous cordial, now made at Tarragona, Spain, was for centuries distilled by the Carthusian Monks (Pères Chartreux) at the Monastery of La Grande Chartreuse, France, and known throughout the world as Chartreuse. The above cut represents the bottle and label employed in the putting up of the article since the Monks' expulsion from France, and it is now known as Liqueur Pères Chartreux (the Monks, however, still retain the right to use the old bottle and label as well), distilled by the same order of Monks, who have securely guarded the secret of its manufacture for hundreds of years, taking it with them at the time they left the Monastery of La Grande Chartreuse, and who, therefore, alone possess a knowledge of the elements of this delicious nectar. No Liqueur associated with the name of the Carthusian Monks (Pères Chartreux) and made since their expulsion from France is genuine except that made by them at Tarragona, Spain.

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafés, Bâtjer & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N. Y. Sole Agents for United States.

Byron Hot Springs

the waters cure rheumatism—the environment perfect—the hotel comfortable and supplied with an unexcelled table. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, ground floor, James Flood building; Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market St., or address hotel.

WESTERN ASSURANCE COMPANY

TORONTO
S. Assets.....$2,493,154
Surplus.....483,989
PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT
1004 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE
SAN FRANCISCO
J. KENNY, Manager W. L. W. MILLER, Assistant Manager

this winter

osemite—will be open all winter. Take Santa Fe to Merced, thence Yosemite Valley R. R. to El Portal. Take stage ride (three and one-half hours) to Sentinel Hotel next morning.

Grand Canyon—Trails are open the year round. El Tovar Hotel on the brink of Canyon under Fred Harvey management one of the finest hotels in the southwest. Our folders tell. Address

H. K. GREGORY, A. G. P. A., San Francisco or JNO. J. BYRNE, A. P. T. M., Los Angeles

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

Samuel Gompers, in a recent speech said that he felt that it is possible for a politician to speak well of everything, and said that he was reminded of a customer in a very untidy chop house in Syracuse. The guest picked up a soiled bill of fare and looking at it, said: "By Jove, what an excellent idea! Samples of the various dishes glued to the menu!"

At the convention of the Irish race last month in Dublin, two speakers, who had come from the United States, contributed the following sentences in the course of their speeches. One of them, in giving some details of personal history, informed his hearers that "he had left Ireland fifty-three years before, a naked little hoy, without a dollar in his pocket." Said the other: "Until last week, I had never set foot in the land of my hirth."

The minister of a certain parish in Scotland was walking one misty night through a street in the village when he fell into a deep hole. There was no ladder by which he could make his escape, and he began to shout for help. A laborer passing heard his cries, and, looking down, asked who he was. The minister told him, whereupon the laborer remarked, "Weel, weel, ye needna kick up sic a noise. You'll no be needed afore Sawhath, an' this is only Wednesday night."

A costermonger, while trundling his apple-laden cart down a London street, was run into by a coaching party. The coster's cart got the worst of it, losing a wheel, and its ruddy freight being scattered all over the street. The driver of the coach came back to settle for the damage, and expected to come in for a volley of choice cursing. But the coster looked at his cart, looked at his apples, looked at the coach, and finally gasped out: "Guv'ner, dere eyen't no word fer it!"

While walking in South Audley Street, one afternoon, Robert Louis Stevenson and Edmund Gosse met a stalwart heggar, whom Gosse refused to aid. Stevenson, however, wavered, and finally handed him a sixpence. The man pocketed the coin, forbore to thank his benefactor, but, fixing his eyes on Gosse, said, in a loud voice: "And what is the other little gentleman going to give me?" "In future," said Stevenson, as they strode coldly on, "I shall be 'the other little gentleman.'"

Father Vaughan, the London priest who has achieved notoriety, is said to have, in addition to his more deliberate rhetoric, the art of putting wisdom into a pointed phrase, which is the definition of the brightest wit. Often his irony is very quick and flashing. Once, when he was being shown a portrait of Henry VIII by Holbein at Trinity College, some one asked him what he would do if King Harry stepped down from his frame. "I should ask the ladies to leave the room," was his instant reply.

Congressman Francis W. Cushman of Washington some time ago had occasion to visit one of the noted physicians at the national capital and was compelled for many weary minutes to cool his heels in an ante-room. Finally, his patience becoming exhausted, he summoned an attendant, to whom he said: "Present my compliments to the doctor, and tell him if I am not admitted in five minutes I shall get well again." The physician found it convenient to admit Mr. Cushman at once.

Representative Cushman of Washington came to Speaker Cannon with a letter written by the Speaker himself. "Mr. Speaker," he said, "I got this letter from you yesterday and I couldn't read it. After I studied it quite a spell I showed it to twenty or thirty of the fellows in the House, and, between us, we have spelled out all the words except those last three. We can't make them out. I want to know if you won't translate those last three words?" Uncle Joe took the letter and studied it. "Those last three words that stuck you and everybody else," he said, "are 'personal and confidential.'"

In a New England village a man lost a horse one day, and, failing to find him, went down to the public square and offered a reward of $5 to whoever would bring him back. A half-witted fellow who heard the offer volunteered to discover the whereabouts of the horse, and, sure enough, he returned in half an hour, leading him by his bridle. The owner was surprised at the ease with which his half-witted friend had found the beast, and on passing the $5 to him, he asked: "Tell me, how did you find the horse?" To which the other made answer: "Waal, I thought to myself, where would I go if I was a hoss; and I went there, and he had."

It is not strange that the young lawyer congratulated himself when he married a young woman of exquisite mind—a thin, big-headed girl in spectacles. A friend from the East was introduced to the lady one night, and later on the bridegroom said to him: "George, what do you think of her?" George puffed thoughtfully on his cigar. "Well," he said, "to tell you the truth, she isn't much to look at, is she?" The husband's face fell. "Ah, hut," he said eagerly, "what a mind she has! Externally, perhaps, she isn't all that could be desired, hut within—ah! George, she has a beautiful mind." George smiled. "Then have her turned," he said.

Long after the death of the elder George Grossmith the British income tax commissioners sent to the son, the well-known actor, a notice assessing the income of the deceased at $10,000. Mr. Grossmith returned the document to the proper quarter, with the following note written across it: "I am glad to learn my father is doing so well in the next world; $10,000 is a great deal more than he ever made in this. Kindly forward this notice to his new address, and remember me affectionately to him."

THE MERRY MUSE.

The Unlimelit.

While great men and others are making more history By means of the usual secrets and mystery, The plain humble householder gets his hands history By cutting the grass in the dusk.

While all through the starlighted night sounds the ringing Of harmony grand as the chorus is singing, The plain, humble householder still is hy-jinging!— He can't get the baby to sleep.

Oh, work of the world that's so great in the viewing, From art down to politics, via some brewing, Oh, think not that you are the only thing doing— There's a whole lot of chores right at home. —Indianapolis News.

A Boxful of Mint.

Some one has sent me a boxful of mint, With the smell of the dew and the green of its glint, The dream of a spring at the foot of a hill, A willow-ook spreading its shade o'er a rill: A boxful of mint from the valleys of dawn, With the breath of the blossoms of Eden thereon!

Some one has sent me a boxful of green, With the spear-hloom all regal in purple-soft sheen; An odor of gardens, old gardens of song, Where roses recline and the daffodils throng: A boxful of mint from the shores of a stream Where harefooted Summer sits down in her dream!

Some one has sent me a whiff of the shine And the green of the vales that are sweethearts of mine; A glimpse of bright meadows, a gleam of sweet lane, And a heart in the land of the lilies again: A boxful of mint, full of dreams running over, With lilac and rose and the honey-sweet clover!

It sits on my desk, and I see o'er its brim The spring by the hill with the green round its rim; The trees in their glory, the flowers in their grace, And love in the door with a smile on her face: A boxful of mint—and good luck to the lass As I hruise the green joy on the brink of my glass! —Folger McKinsey, in Baltimore Sun.

The Laughing Hyena.

The Laughing Hyena meanders at night, Equipped with a ravenous appetite. He hasn't the will nor the skill for to kill His food for himself, so he wanders until A lion or leopard comes loping that way, And he follows behind till they fall on their prey. Then lingers, a grin, near the gruesome arena, In hopes they will share with the Laughing Hyena.

He frequents the places where lions foregather— And if one so much as remarks on the weather He cries, "What a hit!" and he laughs fit to split, Till the lion begins to believe he's a wit, And gains such a taste for applause, that, alack, He keeps the Hyena close by for a claque. (I've met many lions who claim that no keener A critic exists than the Laughing Hyena.)

This sycophant habit obtained such a hold, That once at a funeral 'twas not controlled; For he laughed and he laughed, and he chaffed the giraffe, Till the relatives rose in the widow's behalf, And they said: "All the funeral trappings are here And we guess there is room for one more on the bier." And every one claimed that they seldom had seen a More impromptu corpse than the Laughing Hyena.

My child, if you find you're acquainted with folks Who laugh very hard at your silliest jokes, With a thin sort of grin 'em before you begin— Be sure a Hyena lurks under their skin. And if you are wise you will plan their demise Ere the smoke of their incense has blinded your eyes. —Burgess Johnson, in Everybody's Magazine.

The African chieftain shook his head haughtily. "The duce," he said, "with your red calico, glass heads and brass wire. You shall not cross my country, Theodore, unless you pay me my own price." "And what may that be?" asked the intrepid hunter. "Half a dollar a word for every line you write."

A. Hirschman

For fine jewelry and silverware. 1641-1643 Van Ness Avenue.

Lessens Silver care, Prevents Silver wear.

ELECTRO SILICON

Imparts a wonderful brilliancy without scratching or marring the most delicate surface. Send address for FREE SAMPLE, or 15 cts. in stamps for full-sized box, post-paid. The Electro Silicon Co., 30 Cliff St., New York. Sold by Grocers and Druggists.

BANKING

French Savings Bank

108 Sutter Street, near Montgomery
Paid-up Capital$ 600,000
Total Assets 4,270,800
Strictly a Savings Bank, Open Saturday Evening from 7 to 8:30

OFFICERS—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, 1st Vice-President; Leon Boqueran, 2d Vice-President; A. Bousquet, Secretary; P. A. Bergerot, Attorney.

SAFE DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT
The French-American Bank is located in the same building.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., San Francisco
Guaranteed Capital$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash. 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds.. 1,453,983.62
Deposits June 30, 1908..... 34,474,554.23
Total Assets 37,085,263.31

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22d Streets. For receipt and payment of deposits only.

LONDON PARIS NATIONAL BANK

N. W. cor. Sutter and Sansome
CAPITAL - - - $2,500,000
SURPLUS - - - 620,000
Sig Greenebaum, H. Fleishacker, President, Vice-President and Mgr. R. Altschul, Cashier

First National Bank

Berkeley, Cal.
Combined Resources over $5,500,000.00
A. W. NAYLOR, FRANK M. WILSON, President, Vice-President.
F. L. NAYLOR, FRANK C. MORTIMER, Cashier, Asst. Cashier.
W. S. WOOD, Trust Officer.
Depository of the United States, County of Alameda, State of California, Town of Berkeley.
BERKELEY BANK OF SAVINGS & TRUST CO.

THE BERKELEY NATIONAL BANK

United States Depository
Berkeley, Cal.
HOUSEHOLD AND COMMERCIAL ACCOUNTS INVITED.
DIRECTORS—George P. Baxter, Pres.; J. W. Richards, Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Bangs, Vice-Pres.; Louis Titus, Dr. Thomas Addison, A. G. Freeman, Duncan McDuffie, Perry T. Tompkins, F. L. Lipman, W. J. Hotchkiss, and Whitney Palache. P. H. ATKINSON, Cashier.

MARKET ST. 1st CON. 5%
Due 1924. Coupons March and September
UNITED R. R. OF S. F. 4%
Due 1927. Coupons April and October
NORTH PAC. COAST R. R. 5%
Due 1912. Coupons January and July

SUTRO & CO.
BROKERS
412 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.
We have a Direct Wire to New York

NATOMA BONDS 6%

Gold Dredging
COUPONS APRIL AND OCTOBER
Due 1917
10 per cent retired annually determined by lot
RENEBOME & CO., Brokers
508 CALIFORNIA STREET

Connecticut Fire Insurance Company

Established 1850 OF HARTFORD
Total Assets.....$5,817,423
Surplus to Policy-Holders..... 2,118,394
BENJAMIN J. SMITH
Manager Pacific Department
ALASKA-COMMERCIAL BUILDING
San Francisco

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

Teas, both large and small, have marked the last week or two, and a number of others are scheduled for the coming month. Several of the debutantes are to be presented within the next three weeks, and the pretty buds are the chief topic of interest just now. Engagements are in the air still and there will be a few expected announcements before October ends, it is said.

The engagement is announced of Miss Geraldine Baggs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery Baggs of San Rafael, to Kernan Robson. Their wedding will be an event of next month.

The marriage of Miss Julia Currey, daughter of Mrs. Montgomery Currey, to Mr. Guy Reginald Bolton of New York took place on Thursday of last week at Trinity Church, Boston. Miss Alice Gilkie was the maid of honor and Mr. J. Stearn of New York was the best man. Their future home will be in New York.

The wedding of Miss Margaret Sheehan, daughter of Mr. John R. Sheehan of San Francisco, to Mr. Forbes J. Hennessey took place in New York on Wednesday of last week. Only relatives and a few intimate friends were present at the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Hennessey have sailed for Europe, en route around the world. They will make their home in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin White Newhall will entertain at a large tea on Saturday afternoon, October 24, at their new home on Pacific Avenue, in honor of their debutante daughters, Miss Virginia Newhall and Miss Frances Newhall.

Mrs. William Boericke will entertain at a tea on November 6 at her home on Washington Street, at which her debutante daughters, Miss Ruth Boericke and Miss Dorothy Boericke, will be formally presented.

Miss Erna St. Goar will entertain at a tea on October 20 in honor of Miss Anna Weller.

Mrs. Robert Sherwood will entertain at a dance on Friday evening, October 30, at Century Hall, in honor of her two debutante granddaughters, Miss Dorothy Chapman and Miss Avis Sherwood.

Miss Laura Baldwin will be the hostess at a luncheon on Friday of next week in honor of Miss Ruth and Miss Dorothy Boericke.

Mrs. Mountford S. Wilson entertained at a large tea on Saturday last at her home on Pacific Avenue in honor of her niece, Miss Harriett Alexander, who was formally introduced to society, as was also Miss Elizabeth Woods. Assisting in receiving were Mrs. Charles O. Alexander, Mrs. Robert J. Woods, Mrs. A. P. Scheld of Sacramento, Mrs. William S. Tevis, Mrs. George Lent, Mrs. Lorraine Irving Scott, Mrs. George Almer Newhall, Mrs. Walter Martin, Mrs. William Henry Taylor, Jr., Mrs. Sidney Cushing, Mrs. Orville C. Pratt, Mrs. Gerald Rathbone, Miss Elena Robinson, Miss Emma Grimwood, Miss Laura McKinstry, Miss Jennie Crocker, Miss Virginia Jolliffe, Miss Augusta Foute, Miss Margaret Calhoun, Miss Maud Wilson, Miss Ethel McAllister, Miss Helen Jones, Miss Innes Keeney, Miss Margaret Newhall, Miss Susanne Kirkpatrick, Miss Clara Allen, and Miss Vera de Saba.

Mrs. John C. Wilson entertained informally at luncheon in the St. Francis last Saturday, her guests being Mrs. Herbert Moffitt, Mrs. Willard Drown, Miss Gertrude Jolliffe, and Miss Virginia Jolliffe.

Mrs. George L. Cadwalader entertained at an informal tea on Thursday afternoon of last week in honor of her sister, Mrs. Orville C. Pratt.

Mrs. Herbert Moffitt entertained very pleasantly at luncheon in the St. Francis last week, her guests being Mrs. Walter Martin, Miss Jolliffe, Miss Gertrude Jolliffe, Miss Jennie Crocker, and Mrs. Will Magee.

Mrs. Gerald Rathbone was the hostess at an informal tea on Friday of last week at her home on Broadway in honor of Mrs. Orville C. Pratt (formerly Miss Emily Wilson).

Mrs. Wallace Bliss was hostess at a prettily appointed luncheon at the St. Francis Saturday afternoon, the guests afterward attending a performance of "The Grand Army Man" at the Alcazar. Those present were Mrs. L. E. Sprague, Mrs. H. W. Gray, Mrs. Walter E. Sabin, Mrs. Gertrude Cowles, Mrs. A. E. Cornwall, and Mrs. George Prentiss.

Mrs. A. Walter Hewlett entertained at an informal tea on Wednesday of last week at her attractive apartment on Pacific Avenue.

Mr. Frank Symmes entertained at luncheon in the St. Francis the other day in honor of some of the distinguished visitors to the Transmississippi Commercial Congress. Among the guests were Mr. Marsden Manson, Mr. John Barrett, Colonel Loveland, and President Benjamin Ide Wheeler.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a résumé of movements to and from this city and Coast and the whereabouts of absent Californians:

Mrs. William S. Tevis and her sons, Lloyd, William, Gordon, and Lansing, came down from their country place at Tahoe and, after a few days' stay at the Fairmont, are at their Burlingame home for a month before going to their Bakersfield ranch for the winter.

Mrs. Henry F. Allen, who has been abroad for the past year, returned to San Francisco on Wednesday of last week and is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. Bryant Grimwood at their home on Jackson Street.

Mrs. Charles P. Eells has returned from a sojourn of several months' duration in New York and Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Babcock have closed their home at Lake Tahoe and have returned to town.

Admiral Richardson Clover, U. S. N., retired, Mrs. Clover, Miss Dora Clover, and Miss Beatrice Clover, who have been at their country place in Napa County since the early summer, came to the city on Monday last and were guests at the St. Francis until Thursday, when they left for their Washington, D. C., home. They will leave shortly for some months' travel abroad.

Mrs. William H. Crocker sailed from New York last week for Europe, where she will visit her sister, Princess Poniatowski.

Mrs. C. G. Hooker and Miss Jennie Hooker left on Saturday last for a stay of some weeks' duration on the Atlantic Coast.

Miss Florence Breckinridge has returned to her home in Menlo, after a brief stay in town.

Mrs. Truxtun Beale and Miss Marie Oge have returned to their home in San Rafael, after several months' travel in Europe.

Mrs. C. B. Brigham is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Clarence Kempf, at Annapolis, and will be joined there in the near future by Miss Kate Brigham, who went recently to San Rafael to visit Mr. and Mrs. William Babcock.

Mr. William Duncan has arrived from his home in Illinois and is the guest of his aunt, Mrs. E. L. Griffith, in Ross Valley.

Dr. William E. Hopkins and Mrs. Hopkins, who had been at Bad-Nauheim for some time, have arrived in Paris to remain a few weeks before returning to San Francisco.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Frederick Kohl and Mrs. Horace D. Pillsbury left on Friday of last week for the East. Mrs. Pillsbury will visit her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Taylor, in Boston, until the holidays.

Mrs. A. P. Scheld of Sacramento has been in town for a week as the guest of friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Horatio P. Livermore, Miss Elizabeth Livermore, and Miss Hazel King sailed from New York on Thursday of last week for Italy and will spend an indefinite period in travel on the continent.

Mr. and Mrs. George Almer Newhall will come to town this week from their country place at Burlingame, but will leave shortly for a month's visit to New York.

Miss Marguerite Barron and Miss Evelyn Barron left on Saturday last for New York and will sail shortly for England, to remain a year. They will be joined later in the winter by Mrs. Barron, who is now a guest at the Fairmont.

Mrs. Jerome Lincoln and Miss Ethel Lincoln, who have been at their country place at St. Helena during the summer, are again at their home on Scott Street.

Miss Florence Dunham and Miss Marian Miller will leave in January for Europe.

Mrs. Camilo Martin, Mrs. Alexander Garceau, and Miss Hyde sailed for Europe on Thursday last and will spend most of the winter in Egypt.

Miss Ethel Dean has returned from a visit to friends in Santa Barbara.

Mrs. Julius Kruttschnitt and Miss Rebecca Kruttschnitt have returned to Chicago, after a visit to Mr. and Mrs. Julius Kruttschnitt, Jr., in Arizona.

Mrs. Henry J. Crocker arrived last week from New York, where she has been visiting since her return from Europe.

Mrs. William Casey and Miss Ruth Casey, who are in New York, will spend the winter in Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. John Drum, who have spent the summer in Ross Valley, have returned to their home on Broadway.

Miss Genevieve Harvey of Galt was in town for several days last week as the guest of the Misses Rodgers.

Mrs. Haldimand P. Young, who has been spending some time as the guest of her mother, Mrs. Alfred Hunter Voorhies, will sail for Manila on the November transport.

Dr. Arnold Genthe has returned from a stay of four months in Japan.

Dr. F. R. Odella and wife, accompanied by Dr. and Mrs. D. M. Graves, all of San Francisco, spent the week-end at Del Monte.

Among the representatives of "The Service" at Del Monte are W. H. H. Chapman, U. S. A., and Mrs. Chapman, F. F. Ryer, U. S. A., and J. W. Pickering, U. S. A.

Arthur Stedman, the younger son of the two sons of Edmund Clarence Stedman, and the only one living at the time of the poet's death, passed away on the 16th of September. He was forty-nine years old and a Yale graduate of '81. The greater part of his life was spent in New York, in which city he died. He was an industrious literary worker, and wrote much for newspapers and magazines. He was of much assistance to his father in the preparation of the "Library of American Literature."

At the Hotels.

Among recent registrations at Hotel St. Francis are the following: Lieutenant C. T. Griffiths, Fourth Infantry; Mr. and Mrs. Albert Pissis and Miss Ethel Pissis; Mrs. A. M. Easton, Burlingame; Captain H. P. Gray, Denver.

Among recent registrations at the Argonaut Hotel are: Mr. and Mrs. George C. Stickney, Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Lowe, Redwood; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Harrison, Seattle; Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Loftus, Los Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Earl Lee, Rochester, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Tibbets, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. McCarty, Newport, Pa.; Mr. G. S. Adolph, Los Angeles; Mr. J. R. Sheppard, Paris; Mr. J. C. Wilson, London; Mr. Felix Richardo, Madrid.

Among recent registrations at the Fairmont are: Mr. F. W. Rollins and Mr. Douglas Rollins, Concord; Mr. E. McGinn, Mrs. F. Gibbs, Portland, Ore.; Mrs. G. C. Phinney, Mr. W. C. Phinney, Mr. A. A. Phinney, Mr. Charles T. Huston, Mr. Frank Pierce, Seattle; Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Leonard, Mr. and Mrs. Justus Latterman, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Warner, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Brown, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Virgil G. Bogue, Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Yancy, Mrs. E. G. Snow, Mr. and Mrs. Channing W. Pennoyer, Los Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Scofield, Cleveland, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. P. E. Barry, Chicago; Mrs. Fletcher Ryer, Mrs. A. W. Foater, San Rafael; Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Hale, Sacramento.

At Out-of-Town Hotels.

Among the arrivals from San Francisco at Byron Hot Springs during the past week were the following: Mr. J. J. Haviside, Mr. C. J. Stoeval, Mr. S. H. Woodruff, Mr. and Mrs. Landry C. Babin, Dr. W. H. Morton.

A few of the recent arrivals from San Francisco at the Tavern of Tamalpais were: Mrs. J. W. Goldstein, Mrs. W. Blackwell, Mrs. J. J. Crawford, Miss Emily Ferguson, Mr. Harry Everett Gates, Mr. and Mrs. William Cronan, Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Marshall, Miss Amy Brown, Miss J. C. Cottrell.

The following are among the San Francisco registrations at Del Monte: Mr. and Mrs. Paul H. Ayers, Mr. T. H. Kline, Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Paxton, Mr. Hazlett L. Patron, Mr. and Mrs. William A. Pertz, Miss Page, Mr. James McHorn, Mr. and Mrs. R. I. Barry, Mr. Allan Dunn, Mr. R. E. Warfield, Mr. Frank Mathieu, Mr. W. H. Robinson, Mr. Oscar L. Frank, Mrs. William Blackwell, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Crim, Miss Grace Crim, Mr. John J. Craffrey, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Peixotto, Mr. M. D. Dougherty, Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Merry, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Houhhan, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Norton, Miss Lola Davis, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Booth, Mr. and Mrs. James Gresen, Miss Lydia Gibbons.

In September, Mme. Yvette Guilbert will appear at the Coliseum, London, and later in the year there is a possibility that she will be seen at one of the West End theatres in an English version of MM. Bison and Thurner's comedy, "Mariage d'Etoile," the adaptation having been prepared by Mr. Edward Knoblauch. It was in this piece that Mme. Jeanne Granier made such a hit in Paris a few weeks ago. The story deals with a young man, betrothed to the daughter of an actress, who eventually falls in love with the mother.

A large number of harmless snakes are now sold as pets, and, strangely enough, the majority of purchasers are women, remarks a London paper. The demand for small monkeys such as marmosets is on the decrease.

THE LEADING NEW YORK HAT, "THE MILLER," Eugene Korn, Agent, 15 Kearny St.

YOUR HAND

is the only one that can unlock your box in our Safe Deposit Vaults. Your valuables in one of our steel boxes can not be lost by theft or fire. For this protection $4.00 per year and up.

CROCKER SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS

CROCKER BUILDING Junction Post and Market, S. F.

HOTEL MANX POWELL AT O'FARRELL

Breakfast 50c, Luncheon 50c, Dinner $1, Sundays and Holidays $1.25

Chef, Emil Burgemeister, sous chef to M. Bailly of the Hotel Ritz, Paris, and laetery of the St. Regis, New York.

N. M. KELLAR, Manager

Pears'

Pears' is essentially a toilet soap. A soap good for clothes won't benefit face and hands. Don't use laundry soap for toilet or bath. That is, if you value clear skin. Pears' is pure soap and matchless for the complexion.

Sold in town and village

The Palace Hotel Company

announces the serving of

Afternoon Tea in the Laurel Court

FAIRMONT HOTEL

every afternoon from 3:30 to 6 p. m. beginning Thursday, Oct. 15

MUSIC

Yourself and friends are cordially invited to be present.

Why Not Make Your Home At The Hotel Jefferson

Turk and Gough Streets Facing Jefferson Square

A superior class hotel with every modern convenience and comfort. Operated on the American and European plans. Special rates to permanent guests. Special attention paid to the table—we invite comparisons. Management Noah W. Gray, formerly manager Alexander Young Hotel, Honolulu, and Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

You Can Live At The Hotel Jefferson Better And For Less Than At Home

FIRST DEL MONTE CAT SHOW

October 16 and 17

A big entry list of prize felines. Judging by Mr. Leland Norton. Special railroad and hotel rates. Every body invited.

H. R. WARNER, Manager

Hotel Rafael

San Rafael, Cal.

Open year around. Headquarters Automobile League. New and commodious garage. Fifty minutes from San Francisco. Complete change of climate. Tiburon or Sausalito ferry. A modern conveniences.

F. N. Orpin, Proprietor.

Hotel Argonaut

Society of California Pioneers Building Fourth Street near Market, San Francisco. Commercial, family; 400 rooms; rooms with detached bath, $1 per day; rooms with private bath, $1.50 and up per day; breakfast, 50c luncheon, 50c; dinner, including wine, $1. Seating capacity, 500. The Hotel Argonaut free bus meets all trains at ferries, steamship landings and all depots. EDWARD ROLKII Manager.

THE CITIZENS' ALLIANCE 920 Merchants Exchange, calls the attention of the public to their Fr Labor Bureau, located at No. 10 City Hall Ave., S. Francisco, and No. 804 Broadway, Oakland. All class of male help furnished absolutely free. Subscription to "The Citizens' Magazine" $1.00 per year. Orders solicited.

A COMPLETE FOOD
Baker's Cocoa
 50 Highest Awards in Europe and America

Registered U. S. Pat. Office

A medical writer says: Baker's pure cocoa acts as a gentle stimulant, invigorating and correcting the action of the digestive organs, furnishing the body with some of the purest elements of nutrition.

Walter Baker & Co., Ltd.
 Established 1780. DORCHESTER, MASS.

EDUCATIONAL

IRVING INSTITUTE Boarding and Day School for Girls
 2126 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
 Music, languages, art, elocution. Kindergarten, primary, grammar, high school, and advanced grades. Accredited by the universities. Twenty-ninth year. Non-sectarian. Pupils admitted at any time. New term opens Monday, August 3.
 MISS ELLA M. PINKHAM, Principal.
CALIFORNIA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
 Irving Institute Building
 Full corps of teachers in every department. Send for catalogue.
 HERMANN GENSS, President.

THE HAMLIN SCHOOL
 A Boarding and Day School for Girls
 Accredited by the California universities and by Eastern colleges. Advanced courses of study are offered to high school graduates and to those who have left school, with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to a school diploma. Pupils charged from the week of entrance.
 Classes in Instrumental and Vocal Music and in Drawing and Painting are formed and facilities are given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basket Ball, etc. For particulars, address
 MISS HAMLIN,
 2230 Pacific Avenue, San Francisco.

MISS FRIEND'S
 Boarding and Day School for Girls
 College, preparatory and general courses
 105 TILTON AVE.
 San Mateo, Cal.

Oakland Conservatory of Music
 1170 Madison Street, Oakland, Cal.
 The largest, oldest established, and most thoroughly equipped school of genuine musical instruction on the Pacific Coast.
 Conducted on the lines of the most noted European and Eastern schools.
 Full prospectus on application.
 Director, ADOLF GREGORY.

German Conversation, Literature, Readings, Grammar, etc.
 3115 CALIFORNIA STREET

French taught conversationally and grammatically by experienced lady teacher.
 Address Box 25, Argonaut.

PENNSYLVANIA, Ogontz School P. O.
OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES
 Twenty minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. The late Mr. Jay Cooke's fine property. MISS SYLVIA J. EASTMAN, MISS ABBY A. SUTHERLAND, Principals.

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy officers who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Colonel Marion P. Maus, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A.; Colonel Frederick A. Smith, Eighth Infantry, U. S. A.; Colonel Walter S. Schuyler, Fifth Cavalry, U. S. A.; Lieutenant-Colonel Robert R. Stevens, deputy quartermaster-general, U. S. A.; Lieutenant-Colonel Henry B. Moon, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A.; Lieutenant-Colonel John B. Bellinger, deputy quartermaster-general, U. S. A.; Major Reuben E. Turner, Eighth Infantry, U. S. A.; Major Frank R. Keefer, Medical Department, U. S. A.; Major Samuel W. Dunning, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A.; Major William M. Wright, Eighth Infantry, U. S. A.; Major George W. Melver, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., and Major Harry C. Benson, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., were ordered to report to the commanding officer, Camp of Instruction, Atascadero, for the purpose of undergoing the test in horsemanship, which they are taking October 16, 17, and 18.

Colonel William A. Simpson, adjutant-general, U. S. A., adjutant-general of the Department of California, has returned from a brief visit to the manoeuvre camp at Atascadero.

Colonel George L. Anderson, Coast Artillery Corps, acting inspector-general, U. S. A., inspector-general of the Department of California, has gone to Fort Stevens, Oregon, for the purpose of making the annual inspection of that post.

Colonel George H. Torney, chief surgeon of the Department of California, will return in about a fortnight from Washington, D. C., where he is on duty as member of an examining board for the promotion of officers.

Lieutenant-Colonel Robert R. Stevens, deputy quartermaster-general, U. S. A., has been announced as chief quartermaster of the Department of California, relieving Lieutenant Oliver P. M. Hazzard, Second Cavalry, U. S. A., assistant to the chief quartermaster, from further charge of that office. Colonel Stevens was ordered, in addition to his other duties, to take charge of the office of the chief commissary of the department, during the absence of the chief commissary at the manoeuvre camp.

Lieutenant-Colonel Louis Beechemin, Medical Corps, U. S. A., has been relieved from duty in the Medical Supply Depot in New York and is ordered to proceed to the Philippines via San Francisco for duty.

Major Henry L. Roosevelt, Quartermaster's Department, U. S. M. C., is relieved from duty with the Army of Cuban Pacification and directed to proceed to Washington, D. C., and report to the commandant of the Marine Corps.

Major John T. Knight, General Staff, U. S. A., has been detailed as an observer at the camp of instruction at Atascadero Ranch.

Major George W. Melver, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., Presidio of Monterey, has been ordered upon the completion of special duties to join his proper command.

Major James M. Kennedy, Medical Corps, U. S. A., Army General Hospital, Presidio of San Francisco, has, in addition to his other duties, assumed charge of the office of the chief surgeon, Department of California, during the temporary absence of the acting chief surgeon.

Captain Arthur Valentine, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., has been ordered to proceed to Washington Barracks, D. C., and to report in person to the commanding officer of the General Hospital at that post for observation and treatment.

Captain Samuel D. McAlister, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., Presidio of San Francisco, who was ordered to report in person to Brigadier-General William P. Hall, adjutant-general, U. S. A., president of a retiring board in Washington, D. C., for examination by that board, has been found incapacitated for service and retired by that board.

Captain William S. Scott, Quartermaster Department, U. S. A., has been relieved from construction work at Fort Mott and Fort Dupont, and has arrived at San Francisco and reported to the depot quartermaster in this city for assignment to duty as his assistant and as assistant to the general superintendent, Army Transport Service.

Captain Campbell E. Babcock, U. S. A., has been relieved as assistant to the depot quartermaster, and will sail on the transport Sheridan as quartermaster on November 5.

Captain Henry B. Clark, Quartermaster's Department, U. S. A., has been ordered relieved from duty as disbursing quartermaster at Portland, Oregon, and will then proceed to Fort Ward, Washington, to assume charge of construction work at that post.

Captain P. W. Huntington, Medical Corps, U. S. A., has been relieved from his present duty and ordered to sail from San Francisco about December 5 for the Philippines, where he will report to the commanding general for assignment to duty.

Lieutenant E. W. McIntyre, U. S. N., when discharged from treatment at the Naval Hospital, Mare Island, has been ordered to command the Active.

Lieutenant F. W. Osborne, U. S. N., has been detached from the Milwaukee and ordered to the Wyoming as senior engineer officer.

Lieutenant George C. Rockwell, U. S. A., has been transferred from the Thirteenth Infantry, U. S. A., Assistant Surgeon H. W. B. Turner, U. S. N., is detached from duty at the Naval Medical School Hospital, Washington, D. C., and ordered to course of instruction, Naval Medical School.

The One Hundred and Sixtieth Company, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., has been relieved from duty in the Department of California and is ordered to proceed by rail to Fort Stevens, Oregon, in time to arrive there November 3.

It was undoubtedly Goethe (writes a correspondent of the London Chronicle) who fixed the spelling of Mephistopheles's name for us. Previously it had varied with the taste and fancy of the speller, Marlowe, for instance, giving us a choice between Mephistophilis, Mephostaphilis, and Mephostophilus. The original spelling of the "Faustbuch" of 1587 is Mephostophilis. Some have seen in this two Hebrew words, meaning destroyer and liar; but Greek also has its adherents in this matter. Assuming that the last part of the name is connected with "philein," to love, the "Mephisto" has been variously identified as "me" (not) and "pbos" (light), as "nephos" (cloud), or as "mephitis" (noxious exhalation). It is impossible to decide; they were so loose with their use of Greek in former days. Did not the chemist Von Helmont make "gas" out of the Greek "chaos"? and an age which could trace the Latin word for woman—femina—to a combination of "fe" and "minor" (because woman has less faith than man), would be like Habakkuk—capable of anything.

A method of invisible writing which is said to have been largely used by prisoners for secretly communicating with their friends has been discovered and disclosed by Professor Gross of Germany. Take a sheet of common writing paper, moisten it well with clear water, and lay it on a hard, smooth surface, such as glass or stone, etc. After removing carefully all air bubbles from the sheet place upon it another dry sheet of equal size and write upon it your communication with a sharp-pointed pencil. Then destroy the paper upon which the writing has been done, and allow the wet paper to dry gradually by exposure to the air. When dry not a trace of the writing will be visible. But on moistening the sheet again with clear water and holding it against the light the writing can be read in a clear transparency. It disappears again after drying in the air, and may be reproduced by moistening repeatedly. Should the sheets be too much beated, however, the writing will disappear, never to reappear again.

DR. ROBERT E. O'CONNELL, DR. GEORGE D. O'CONNELL, DENTISTS, Hastings Building, Post Street and Grant Avenue. Tel. Douglas 2733.

THE OCULARIUM
Henry Kahnt & Co.
OPTICIANS
 PERFECT FITTING
EYEGASSES
 AT MODERATE PRICES
 644 MARKET ST.
 OPP. PALACE HOTEL
 BRANCA 1399 VAN NESS AVE.

Hotel St. Francis

The apartments on most floors in the North Wing are now finished and occupied. The Gymnasium, Club Room, Tapestry Room and Ball Room are nearing completion.

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF JAMES WOODS

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"
 Building, concrete, steel and marble.
 Located, most fashionable shopping district.
 210 rooms, 135 baths.
 Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests.
 Most refined hostelry in Seattle.
 Absolutely fireproof.
 English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

Turn the Wick

as high as you can—there's no danger—as low as you please—there's no smell. That's because the smokeless device prevents smoke or smell—that means a steady flow of glowing heat for every ounce of fuel burned in a

PERFECTION Oil Heater
 (Equipped with Smokeless Device)

You can carry it about and care for it just as easily as a lamp. Brass oil font holds 4 quarts burning 9 hours. Handsomely finished in japan and nickel. Every heater warranted.

The Rayo Lamp adds cheeriness to the long winter evenings. Steady, brilliant light to read, sew or knit by. Made of brass, nickel plated, latest improved central draft burner. Every lamp warranted. If your dealer cannot supply Perfection Oil Heater or Rayo Lamp write our nearest agency for descriptive circular.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY
 (Incorporated)

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

"How badly he looks?" "Yes; he's living on health foods now."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Londlady—You will either have to pay what you owe or leave. Slowpay—Thanks. The last place I was at they made me do both.—Stray Stories.

Mrs. Gallamer—Isn't Mr. Grabbenstacker a ladies' tailor? Mrs. Plummeram—Not exclusively. Mrs. Ruudam is one of his customers.—Brooklyn Life.

Briggs—Even divorce, nowadays, offers no sure relief. Griggs—How so? Briggs—Why, in nine cases out of ten a man is free to marry again.—Life.

First Toiler—My doctor ordered me to drink beer for insomnia. Second Toiler—Can't you sleep, then? First Toiler—Only at night.—Windsor Magazine.

Asked when he was married, the colored citizen replied: "All I know, sub, is dat it wuz des w'en she 'lowed she'd git me—ter de minute!"—Atlanta Constitution.

Pat—I hear yer woife is sick, Moike? Mike—Sbe is thot. Pat—Is it dangerous sbe is? Mike—Divil a bit. Sbe's too weak to be dangerous any more!—New York Sun.

Mr. Howard—Isn't it wonderful wbat force Niagara has? Mrs. Talkmuch—Marvelous! Do you know, when I first saw it for a full moment I couldn't speak.—Brooklyn Life.

Jasper—Whenever a great man dies, Longhair writes a poem about him. Rasper—Well, I must commend his consideration in not writing it before the great man dies.—Boston Globe.

"Where do you work, my good man?" "In a powder factory." "Mercy! What a hazardous occupation." "O no, mum. I seldom meets any automobiles on my way to or from work."—Puck.

Howell—Rowell thinks he is the whole thing. Powell—Yes, if he leans against a post for a few minutes he has the idea that the post couldn't stand without him.—Lippincott's Magazine.

"Papa what is a safety match?" Mr. Henpecked (looking carefully to see if his wife is within hearing)—A safety match, son, is when a bald-headed man marries an armless woman!—Short Stories.

"Very well, sir," cried Dr. Kwack, after his quarrel with the undertaker, "I'll make you sorry for this." "What are you going to do," sneered the undertaker, "retire from practice?"—Catholic Standard and Times.

Mayme—I hate these affectionate girls. Lucie—Why, I always thought you were one of them. Mayme—Well, anyway, I don't want Jane Jones to kiss me after she's been eating onions.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Angry Mother—You've got an awful nerve to ask me to give you back your ball when you nearly killed one of my children with it. The Boy—Well, ma'am, you've got ten children and we've got only one ball.—Chicago Tribune.

Lady Gnest—What are all these notches in the motor door, cut in a line? Mrs. Pannard—Just a fad of Jack's, my dear. Every time he runs down a man he cuts a notch—the way those Western bad men did on their gunstocks, you know.—Puck.

"Say, Bill," said the burglar to his pal, "this paper says we overlooked a package of bills amounting to $1000." "Aint the depravity of the rich something awful?" replied

Bill. "Trying to deceive that way. I seen them bills. They wasn't even receipted."—Philadelphia Ledger.

"I say, do you think that Wiggins is a man to be trusted?" "Trusted? Yes; rather. Why, I'd trust him with my life!" "Yes; but with anything of value, I mean!"—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Overheated Policeman (to medical gentleman who has been called to a bathing accident)—Sorry you've had the trouble of coming for nothing, sir. We tried artificial perspiration on the poor fellow, and he's all right now.—Punch.

Trotter—When young Biffkins left college a few years ago, he declared he was going to forge his way to the front. Did he make good? Homer—As a forger, yes. He's now occupying a front row cell in the penitentiary.—Chicago Daily News.

"A public official must be unflinching about laying down the law." "Yes," answered Senator Sorghum, "one of the great difficulties is that an official occasionally gets confused. Instead of laying down the law he starts in throwing down the law."—Washington Star.

The rebellious angels had just been cast out of heaven. In the swift downward flight Lucifer overtook Beelzebub. "What's troubling you, Bub?" he called. "An old problem," answered the future foot fiend, between somersaults—"Where are we going this fall?"—Philadelphia Record.

"Ab," said the candidate, "this is Farmer Whiffletree's place, I believe. And you have just celebrated your golden wedding, I understand?" "Golden wedding nuthin'," was the response. "I've just been sued for $10,000 wuth of breach of promise. You've got your card index mixed."—Washington Herald.

"I've walked many miles to see you, sir," began the tramp, "because people told me you was very kind to poor chaps like me." "Indeed?" said the genial, white-haired old man. "Are you going back the same way?" "Yes, sir." "Ab. Well, just contradict that rumor as you go, will you? Good morning."—Milwaukee News.

"I tell you," went on the old lady at a hotel, getting quite angry, "I won't have this room. I aint going to pay my money for a pigsty, and, as far as sleeping in one of them folding beds, I simply won't do it." The boy could stand it no longer. "Get on in, mum," said he, with a weary expression on his face. "This aint your room; it's the elevator."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

There is a place near Glasgow, Scotland, where a railway track runs for some distance beside the fence of a lunatic asylum. Not long ago, some workmen were busy repairing the bed of the railroad, when an inmate of the asylum approached one of the laborers, and, from his position on the inner side of the inclosure, began a somewhat personal conversation. Inmate—Hard work that! Laborer—Troth an' it is. Inmate—Whit pay dae ye git? Laborer—Sixteen bob a week. Inmate—Are ye mairrit? Laborer—I am, worse luck!—and have six children. A pause; then: Inmate—I'm thinking, ma man, ye're on the wrang side o' the fence.

An English minister was once visiting the Bishop of Derry when there were two or three other clericals in the house. One morning, one of the parsons being late for breakfast, the bishop sent another brother of the cloth to go and see what detained him. In a few minutes he returned with the information that the delinquent had cut himself in shaving, and was then audibly damming his blood.

50-Foot Lots Only $7000 Terms to suit

Several swell lots left in Presidio Terrace, San Francisco's beautiful residence Park—Washington Street at First Avenue.

Particulars of BALDWIN & HOWELL 318-324 Kearny Street

SPECIAL TOUR

VICTORIA NYANZA

THROUGH THE African Wonderland Leaving New York TUESDAY, October 27, 1908 Programme for the asking THOS. COOK & SON 32 Powell St., San Francisco

GOODYEAR "HIPPO" HOSE

The best and strongest Garden Hose. Guaranteed to stand 700 lbs. pressure. Try it and be convinced. GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY R. H. PEASE, President 587, 589, 591 Market St. at Second St. SAN FRANCISCO

H. J. COOPER

Expert Accountant and Auditor 705 KAMM BUILDING 717 MARKET STREET Phone Douglas 1342 San Francisco

Bonestell, Richardson & Co. PAPER

The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us. CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE 118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna, San Francisco.

SCHMIDT LITHOGRAPH CO. 36th YEAR PHONE DOUGLAS 200 CALIFORNIA MADE SCHMIDT LITHOGRAPH CO. LABELS CARTONS ETC. SECOND AND BRYANT STS. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. SAN FRANCISCO, LOS ANGELES, PORTLAND, SEATTLE.

THE LATEST STYLES IN Choice Woolens

H. S. BRIDGE & CO. Merchant Tailors 108-110 Sutter St. French Bank Bldg.

Romeike's Press Clipping Bureau

Will send you all newspaper clippings which may appear about you, your friends, or any subject on which you want to be "up to date." A large force in my New York office reads 650 daily papers and over 2000 weeklies and magazines, in fact, every paper of importance published in the United States, for 5000 subscribers and, through the European Bureaus, all the leading papers in the civilized globe. Clippings found for subscribers and pasted on slips giving name and date of paper, and are mailed day by day. Write for circular and terms. HENRY ROMEIKE 110 and 112 W. 26th St., New York. Branches: London, Paris, Berlin, Sydney.

Toyo Kisen Kaisha (ORIENTAL S. S. CO.)

S. S. America Maru (via Manila)..... Tuesday, Oct. 20, 1908 S. S. Hongkong Maru..... Tuesday, Nov. 17, 1908 S. S. Tenyo Maru..... Friday, Dec. 11, 1908 Steamers sail from company's piers, Nos. 42-44, near foot of Second Street, 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Hiogo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing. Round-trip tickets at reduced rates. For freight and passage apply at office, 240 James Flood Building. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

Table with 3 columns: Lv. San Francisco, Lv. Muir Woods, Lv. Tamalpais. Rows show weekly departure times for Sun, Mon, Tue, Wed, Thu, Fri, Sat, and Tamalpais only.

Mr. Publisher:

All the mechanical work on THE ARGONAUT is done by us. WILLIAMS PRINTING CO. Phone Douglas 2908 406 Sutter St.

Clubbing List.

- By special arrangement with the publishers, and by concessions in price on both sides, we are enabled to make the following offer, open to all subscribers direct to this office. Subscribers in renewing subscriptions to Eastern periodicals will please mention the date of expiration in order to avoid mistakes: American Magazine and Argonaut.....$4.25 Argosy and Argonaut..... 4.40 Atlantic Monthly and Argonaut..... 6.70 Blackwood's Magazine and Argonaut... 6.20 Century and Argonaut..... 7.00 Commoner and Argonaut..... 4.10 Cosmopolitan and Argonaut..... 4.35 Current Literature and Argonaut..... 5.75 English Illustrated Magazine and Argonaut 4.70 Forum and Argonaut..... 6.00 Harper's Bazar and Argonaut..... 4.35 Harper's Magazine and Argonaut..... 6.70 Harper's Weekly and Argonaut..... 6.70 House Beautiful and Argonaut..... 4.75 International Magazine and Argonaut... 4.50 Judge and Argonaut..... 7.50 Leslie's Weekly and Argonaut..... 6.70 Life and Argonaut..... 7.75 Lippincott's Magazine and Argonaut... 5.25 Littell's Living Age and Argonaut..... 9.00 Mexican Herald and Argonaut.....10.50 Munsey's Magazine and Argonaut..... 4.40 Nineteenth Century and Argonaut..... 7.25 North American Review and Argonaut... 8.00 Out West and Argonaut..... 5.25 Overland Monthly and Argonaut..... 4.50 Political Science Quarterly and Argonaut 4.90 Puck and Argonaut..... 7.50 Review of Reviews and Argonaut..... 5.00 Scribner's Magazine and Argonaut..... 6.25 Smart Set and Argonaut..... 5.25 St. Nicholas and Argonaut..... 6.00 Sunset and Argonaut..... 4.25 Theatre Magazine and Argonaut..... 5.75 Thrice-a-Week New York World (Democratic) and Argonaut..... 4.25 Weekly New York Tribune (Republican) and Argonaut 4.50 Weekly New York Tribune, Weekly New York World, and Argonaut..... 5.25

We call your attention to our weekly specials — offerings in furniture, carpets, rugs and draperies, worthy of your consideration.

WHOLESALE—SINCE 1858—RETAIL

D. N. & E. WALTER & CO. Van Ness and Sacramento

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXIII. NO. 1648.

SAN FRANCISCO, OCTOBER 24, 1908.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10 payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers.

Address all communications to The Argonaut, 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breems Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opéra. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at F and Thirteenth Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Denison News Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains.

Published at 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal. Telephone, Kearny 5895.

THIRTY-SECOND YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: Nullity, Farce, and Scandal—Our Unsubsidized Sea Traffic—Exploiting the Public—Another Example under the Oregon System—The "Nickel-in-the-Slot".....	257-260
A VOICE FROM THE SOUTH. From the Los Angeles Daily Times.....	260
CAMPAIGN TOPICS.....	260
PERSONALLY CONDUCTED: "Piccadilly" Writings of an American Guide Who Shows You London in Three Hours.....	261
OLD FAVORITES: "Buddha and the Woman," by Sir Edwin Arnold.....	261
INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All over the World.....	261
TWO FEUDS BEGIN TO TANGLE: XXXVI. By Jerome A. Hart.....	262
SOMETHING NEW ABOUT WAGNER: The Full Story of a Great Operatic Triumph Is Told for the First Time.....	263
NONE TO PRAY FOR THEM. By Anne Walsingham.....	264
THE ENGLISH LOBBY.....	264
BOOKS AND AUTHORS. By Sidney G. P. Coryn.....	265
NEW PUBLICATIONS.....	265
LITERARY NOTES: Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip..	266
FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.....	266
DRAMA: Romantic "Graustark." By Josephine Hart Phelps	267
THE WIFE'S CONFESSION: Eloquence and Power of the Great Scene in Henri Bernstein's "The Thief".....	267
VANITY FAIR.....	268
STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.....	269
THE MERRY MUSE.....	269
CURRENT VERSE: "Regret," by Purdy Van Kirk; "The Old Canoe," by George T. Marsb; "The Good Moment," by Gerald Gould; "Song," by Brian Hooker	270
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy.....	270-271
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day.....	272

Nullity, Farce, and Scandal.

Men and brethren of San Francisco, the Argonaut invites your attention to an article from the Los Angeles Times printed in its full text on another page. No citizen of San Francisco with a fair understanding of our affairs and with a true sense of his civic responsibilities can read this article without the feeling of chagrin and shame. Literally, it holds before us a mirror in which we may see pictured that which ought to bring a blush to the cheek of every citizen of San Francisco who loves his home and who respects himself. The Times article is not pleasant reading; none the less it needs to be read, that we may see our situation as it presents itself to others and that we may take counsel among ourselves of an abuse and a scandal which is devitalizing our community spirit and making the very name of San Francisco a byword and a reproach.

It is now two years and more since the so-called graft prosecution, upon presumptions of high moral purpose, began its operations. And yet not one guilty man is in prison or apparently in the way of going to prison. For all its high pretensions, for all its vaunted achievements, for all its disturbance of social and business conditions, for all the distress it has created, for all the bitterness and enmity it has engendered, for all the enormous sums of public money that it has wasted, for all the scandal it has brought upon San Francisco, it has accomplished nothing—absolutely nothing.

The failures of the prosecution make a record grievous enough; but more grievous still is another record made up of things which the prosecution has done. It would be a labor painful and futile to recite the wretched story in its details; it is sufficient merely to glance at the outline. First, there appears a fraudulent profession of public and moral purpose as a mask and shield for private malice; and upon this dark background there is traced a record which in its sinister aspects is hardly more than matched by the black career of Ruef and Schmitz in the heyday of their power. We need only refer to the grant of immunity to eighteen confessed boodlers, to the assumption of autocratic powers over the affairs of the city through a body of criminals retained in office for this purpose and bribed to subservience, to the elevation of two paroled criminals to the nominal mayoralty, to the alliance of the prosecution with such political and moral powers as rested in its hands with an iniquitous industrial strike, to the grant by the prosecution through cringing and corrupt officials of $720,000 out of the municipal funds for a socialistic street-car experiment, to the publicly declared sympathy of the prosecution with murder and anarchy, to the shameless trafficking with Schmitz and Ruef for "evidence," to the signed and sealed secret contract of immunity with Ruef, to the gross dealing with Ruef by threats and cajolements for testimony suited to the purposes of the prosecution, to the corruption of courts, to the subornation of witnesses, to the policy of pretense and falsehood, to systematic false accusation, to threats of violence, to the story grows long, and we break from it when only half way through a list of things so gross that the pen halts for weariness and shame.

In view of the record made by the prosecution, alike in what it has done and in what it has failed to do, there need be no confusion in any mind, no mystery as to causes and reasons. At the beginning the opportunity was all that could have been wished. The criminality of those who had debauched San Francisco was plainly apparent and the evidences of wrong-doing, legal and moral, were available. A course of straightforward integrity upon the basis of an honest purpose would have carried the prosecution to a success unmatched anywhere. If there had been honesty of motive, honesty in method, the purpose to do right with the will to do right, with no private and malicious aims and no deviation from the line of legitimacy and morality, the names of Rudolph Spreckels and Francis J. Heney—and that of James D. Phelan, too, for he would have come out of hiding long ago if the weather had been fair—would have had a high place among patriots, not only of their own day, but of permanent history. The failure is due to those courses above outlined in part, through which the prosecutors exhibited their malice, their meanness, their false purpose, their bogus character. As they proceeded from one act of presumption to another, public respect fell from them, and there was speedily lost to them that power without which no work founded in moral pretensions can ever be translated into achievement.

Let nobody imagine that the blunders and crimes of the prosecutors developed through inadvertence. Again and again and still again Messrs. Phelan and Spreckels and Heney were cautioned and even implored to cleave fast to the line of integrity and legitimacy. There are thousands who have not forgotten that the Argonaut week after week held up to the prosecutors pictures of what would surely come through departure from the line of legitimacy and honesty. Again and again while yet there was time to correct mistakes that had been made, to reestablish the prosecuting operations upon a straightforward basis, the Argonaut pointed out the inevitable consequences of things being done and pleaded with the agents of the prosecution for a course of simple honesty. The prosecution can not plead in justification of its course that it went wrong through lack of friendly bidding or through the failure of calm and sober and discreet counsels.

No principle which governs in the affairs of men stands more definitely fixed than this, namely, that great social movements require personal agents in harmony with their own spirit and character. Grapes are not gathered from thorns nor figs from thistles. Cheap and dishonest men, however fair their pretensions, however fortunate their opportunities and beginnings, do not carry to success projects which call for sincerity of purpose, plain integrity, and unyielding moral resolution. There is in the simple right of things, in the capacity to follow a plain, straight line of moral duty, a power which may move mountains. But neither Mr. Phelan nor Mr. Spreckels nor Mr. Heney, nor all of them together, with all the aids at their command, could summon and hold this simple power. The fault was in many forms. They were not honest in their purposes; they were not fair or straight in their pretensions; professing every virtue, they none the less aimed at sinister ends; they proceeded by devious and gross ways; when they encountered obstacles and difficulties, left integrity and honor and decency behind them; in the sequel they lost the respect of everybody and found themselves where they stand today, publicly and privately reprobated as men having within themselves no saving grace of that character which deserves, commands, and sustains public and private respect. They have failed not because the way was not fair before them and the means at their hand, but because they were not morally and intellectually qualified for the great task of regenerating a city. The pity of it is that in their failure San Francisco sees the collapse of hopes to which her highest faith was once pledged and which at home and abroad have stood associated with her civic honor.

Even at this late day there is no reason why the prosecution of criminals, high and low, responsible for the debauching of San Francisco should not proceed successfully. True, immunity has been granted in many cases under circumstances that would make it difficult to take the back track. But there is no reason why the more important figures associated with the shames of the Ruef-Schmitz régime should not yet be brought to punishment. The guilty men are here; evidence against them is available; there still remain courts which are not besmirched. Any honest prosecutor of reasonable legal capability ought not to find the least difficulty in convicting Ruef and Schmitz and possibly others. Our penitentiaries are full of men condemned upon testimony not more abundant or damning than that at the hands of the prosecuting office in San Francisco. The Argonaut ventures to declare that any fair-minded, respectable, straightforward prosecuting attorney drawn from any one of fifty-six California counties—leaving out San Francisco—would be able to send Ruef and Schmitz over the bay in thirty days.

The reasons why the graft prosecution as it is now organized can not do it are plain enough. The head and front of this prosecution in its legal phase is Francis J. Heney, than whom there is no more discredited figure in California outside the penitentiary. Putting aside his career in Arizona, considering only what has been developed concerning Mr. Heney in the past two years, we have a complete answer to all inquiries as to why the prosecution has failed. The history of the graft cases demonstrates that Mr. Heney is no lawyer, that he is incapable of drawing indictments that will hold or of so conducting a case in court as to protect the record against fatal legal errors. His pettifoggery, court-room manners, his braggadocio, his challenges to fight, his threats to shoot and to main, his vulgar tempers, his hectic rages, all stamp him as a ruffian, disqualified by lack of legal knowledge, lack of self-control, and by a gross ill-breeding for association with any moral movement and for contact with gentlemen. Even when he has succeeded tentatively through connivance with witnesses and judges in winning a case, in the sequel it is inevitably lost because he makes a record which the higher courts can not sustain. The most charitable view of Mr. Heney is that he is a wild man, one upon whose small mind vanity and malice unrestrained have wrought pitiful ruin, but the common opinion of him and one not unjustified by his own acts is that mentally and morally he is a vulgar pretender and a shameless fraud. This is the common judgment, and we have evidence in an incident of last week that it is the special and particular judgment of a man so fair, so poised, and so courteous as Associate Justice Henry Melvin of the State supreme court. When Judge Melvin declined to take the hand of Mr. Heney as one unworthy of recognition because a common and notorious liar, he did as every honest man is bound to do under similar circumstances. True, there are still those so blind and deaf to fact and reason and so dense to moral considerations as to apologize for Mr. Heney even where they can not approve. We see them in politics, in pulpits, and even in university chairs. Shame upon those who pretend to the character of teachers and leaders who lack either the wisdom to detect moral obliquity or the courage to act upon moral conviction!

The so-called graft prosecution, fraudulent and ineffective thing that it is, is going headlong to its collapse. The miserable record in the pending Ruef trial—if a procedure so extraordinary may be called a trial—illustrates the complete breakdown of the powers of the prosecution. In two months' persistent effort Mr. Heney has found it impossible to impanel a jury. Week after week the futile labor goes on at prodigious cost to the tax payers and under circumstances of the gravest injustice to jurors already "caught" and held prisoners in the custody of the sheriff while Ruef himself freely walks the streets. Could there be a spectacle more shameful in the eyes of gods and men? If in two months Mr. Heney, with all the aids that the public bounty and a sympathetic court can give him, can not succeed in getting a jury, what possible hope is there that he can carry this case or any other to an ultimate and honorable success?

Long ago those with any real knowledge of the facts lost faith in Mr. Heney and abandoned hope of any satisfactory outcome of the graft prosecution while he remains its legal head. Long ago even those nominally and normally friendly to the prosecution grew tired of delays and failures. Now the whole public is wearied, disgusted, and ashamed with a procedure which has become a stench through its ineffectiveness, its exhibitions of evil temper, and its prodigious cost. Mr. Heney ought to get out of the prosecution. While yet there is time and opportunity which somebody might turn to successful account, Heney ought to redeem his record so far as he may by giving place to another and better man. Now as at the beginning the public is eager to see something worthy and decent come out of this prosecuting movement. Particularly the conviction of Ruef and Schmitz would be a righteous and universal gratification. But a long-suffering public which long ago lost faith in Mr. Heney has now lost hope in his power to achieve anything in these cases. It is time for him to get out, to give over a work which in his hands is a mere futility.

If Mr. Heney's interest were in the cause of the graft prosecution as distinct from himself, if his aim and intent were for public service as distinct from the gratification of an unworthy vanity, he would tomorrow resign a responsibility which he is powerless to carry successfully. No man knows better than he that whatever another might do, he himself can do nothing in promotion of the graft cases. He knows that the people of San Francisco are being taxed thousands upon thousands of dollars to sustain a procedure which under his hand is mere nullity and farce. He knows that the good name of San Francisco is suffering. He knows precisely what his duty is, and if he were a man and not a bluffer he would take the one course consistent with self-respect. Nobody expects him to take this course; he will persist as long as he can find standing room in a foolish and futile routine, no matter what the cost, material or moral, may be to the long-suffering people of San Francisco.

Our Unsubsidized Sea Traffic.

A report to the effect that the Japanese steamship lines plying between this coast and Asia would shortly begin a "rate war" upon American shipping engaged in that trade has revived discussion of the proposition to subsidize American ships from the national treasury with the design of enabling them to compete with "foreign bottoms" now carrying the bulk of American commerce and threatening to monopolize the entire trade. The so-called "ship subsidy bill" was passed by the House of Representatives March 1, 1907, after eliminating the Senate provisions for payments to Pacific steamship lines. Fifty-two Republicans voted with the Democrats in opposition on the first roll-call. The bill passed the House by a vote of 155 to 144. The bill as amended went back to the Senate, where it failed to pass in the closing hours of the session because of the determined filibustering of its opponents. The original bill of this session, containing the subsidies stricken out by the House of Representatives, passed the Senate February 14, 1906. Wisely or unwisely, therefore, Congress has refused to assist American ships with money from the national fund in their effort to compete with the foreign carrying trade, and this enterprise is still further handicapped by the laws that confine the American carrying trade to American-built ships, refusing an American register to ships bought or built in foreign countries.

A very simple calculation will show that no reasonable subsidy by the American government to American ships, built in America and manned by American seamen earning the wages prescribed by the American unions, would suffice to place the American merchant marine on a footing of profitable competition with any foreign steamship line. Especially patent is this fact in the commerce of the Pacific. American labor can not, and would not if it could, compete with the labor of Asia in the operation of ships engaged in the carrying trade; to protect American industry it has been deemed necessary to encourage a wage scale for the production and manufacture of material for American ships far in excess of that paid to wage earners in any foreign country; a subsidy, therefore, in aid of American shipping interests would have to be sufficient not only to meet the subsidies of foreign governments to their ships, but it would have to be large enough to pay the difference of wages and the cost of material and equipment produced and manufactured under conditions with which the American producer and manufacturer can not compete.

A "rate war" by the Japanese, as threatened, ought to be a very safe proposition as far as that people are concerned. The Nippon Yusen Kaisha is virtually a government-controlled line, and the Toyo Kisen Kaisha is heavily subsidized by the government. In the event of a determination to monopolize the carrying trade of the Pacific, the Japanese government is prepared to increase its financial support to these and all other Japanese lines. The cost of operating Japanese ships is even less than that incurred in the operation of Lascar-manned British tramps; and all material and equipment is merely nominal in comparison with that required by American ships.

Until we are able to overcome these obstacles, or until we are ready to amend our laws to remove the prohibition upon the American ownership of foreign-built vessels, we may as well postpone the struggle for "the commercial supremacy of the Pacific" in this direction. Perhaps, after all, there is more of sentiment in the desire that the flag of the republic shall flaunt in every port than sincerity of purpose on behalf of the commercial interests of the country, which appear to be doing very well in spite of the lack of a dominating merchant marine. In 1906, for example, we built 650 steam vessels with an aggregate tonnage of 315,707 tons; and in 1907 we built 674 vessels of the same class aggregating a tonnage of 365,405 tons. There must have been sufficient incentive in our coast-wise trade at least to warrant this very perceptible increase. The total tonnage of the United States in 1907 was 6,938,794, which was only exceeded by that of Great Britain, whose "supremacy" in this respect began in 1860 when our merchant marine was brought to a standstill by the Civil War.

Our foreign trade has not suffered for want of American ships to carry it, as is shown by the fact that our exports of domestic merchandise for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, amounted to $1,853,718,024, and our imports for the same period to $1,434,421,425. And, as far as the shipper is concerned, our struggle for the "commercial supremacy of the Pacific" is by no means hopeless, for the customs statistics show that in 1906 the imports through San Francisco amounted to a value of $44,433,271, and the exports to $39,915,269; in 1907 the imports aggregated $54,094,570, and the exports $33,026,664. The import value in 1906 through the Puget Sound cities was $13,614,438, and the exports $49,234,861; and in 1907 the imports were $25,353,373, and the exports $43,659,308. This is the trade that we are told the Japanese desire to monopolize. There seems to be no immediately practical or effectual method of preventing this monopoly if that is really the Japanese purpose. But it is equally plain that the profit of this commerce to the American exporter and importer will not be impaired by that contingency.

Exploiting the Public.

Whether rightly or wrongly, the general public of San Francisco believes that the complicated transfer system put into effect on the first of October by the United Railroads Company is designed not for promotion of public convenience, but rather for the public discomfort. It is believed that the United Railroads Company seeks to emphasize the stubborn attitude of the board of supervisors in the Sutter-and-Market Streets matter by making it necessary for passengers to and from the ferry to transfer from one car to another. Believing it to be the purpose of the street car company to strike at the board of supervisors over the shoulders of the public, there is everywhere protest and resentment—naturally so.

The people of San Francisco almost unanimously believe the board of supervisors to be both stupid and wrong in the Sutter-and-Market Streets matter. They believe that if there had been less pigheadedness and more common sense in the board of supervisors a way would have been found to accommodate the contention to the ends alike of public convenience and of common equity. The public has sympathized with the contention of the United Railroads to the extent of wishing that the board of supervisors had proceeded in better temper, in more liberal spirit, and with more careful regard for the convenience of those who pass between the ferry and the business centre.

But because the public has stood with the United Railroads in this contention it is not willing to be exploited by the United Railroads through its own inconvenience and with consequent development of the spirit of resentment on its own part. It does not admit the right of the United Railroads to strike at the board of supervisors over its own head. It does not consent to be exploited and victimized to the end that it may, in sheer disgust, enlist its energies in behalf of the street car company and against the board of supervisors.

Whoever within the management of the United Railroads Company devised the scheme of fighting the board of supervisors by first inconveniencing and then angering the public has done a very wrong, likewise a very indiscreet, thing. Regarded as a line of policy, it is in ignorance or in contempt of a fundamental principle in the promotion of public opinion. First of all, it violates the spirit of good faith; second, it puts the United Railroads in the attitude of itself disregarding the public convenience. Hitherto in the Sutter-and-Market Streets contention the public has felt the cause of the United Railroads to be that of its own interest and comfort; it has felt the contention of the supervisors to be in disregard of its interest and comfort. With the inauguration of the new and annoying transfer rules, the public believes that the United Railroads Company stands upon a precise level with the supervisors in calculations based wholly upon considerations of pure selfishness.

The Argonaut ventures to offer to the United Railroads Company a word of friendly counsel: Stand firm against unfair aggression in the Sutter-and-Market Streets matter. But within the limitations imposed by the board of supervisors do everything that may possibly be done for the convenience of the people who ride in your cars. Put yourself in good relations with the people by doing whatever you may for the public convenience in so far as the board of supervisors will allow you. Within your privileges make the adjustments of your service promote the convenience of the public. In the Sutter-and-Market Streets matter the board of supervisors is stupidly and grossly at fault. This, gentlemen of the United Railroads Company, gives you the moral advantage. By acts of reprisal so aimed as to strike the board of supervisors through the public, you throw away this advantage. You put yourself on a level with the board of supervisors in this contention and incidentally you bring down upon yourselves merited reproach.

Another "Example" Under the Oregon System.

We have now, in accordance with a promise made last week, to deal with another situation illustrative of the workings of the direct primary in our neighboring State of Oregon. In June last an election was held under the primary law to choose members of a State legislature to meet in January next; and as usual in a State where the preponderance of Republican sentiment on any direct issue is heavy, the result was favorable to the Republicans. The legislature, due to convene at Salem in January next, will be made up of 90 members, of whom 74 will be Republicans and 16 Democrats; and a majority of the members of this same legislature, assuming to represent Republican ideas and opinions and wishing to see these ideas and opinions reflected in national policies, stand under definite pledge to vote for George E. Chamberlain, a dyed-in-the-wool Democrat, to succeed Senator Charles W. Fulton, the Republican incumbent.

To make it clear how this anomalous situation came about it will be necessary to set forth in some detail the workings of the direct primary system in Oregon. There are no party conventions in Oregon. Any citizen who cares to do it may, by filing a notice of his candidacy, present himself for any office to the electors in the district wherein he lives. In the case of legislative aspirants it is provided that the candidate may file either of two formal pledges or none at all with respect to his votes for United States senator if it shall devolve upon the legislature within the period of prospective membership to elect a senator. The first of these pledges is officially styled "Statement Number One" and is as follows:

I further state to the people of Oregon as well as to the people of my legislative district that during my term of office I will always vote for that candidate for United States Senator in Congress who has received the highest number of the people's votes for that position at the general election next preceding the election of a Senator in Congress, without regard to my individual preference.

An alternative statement officially styled "Statement Number Two" and is as follows:

During my term of office I shall consider the vote of the people for United States Senator in Congress as nothing more than a recommendation, which I shall be at liberty to wholly disregard if the reason for doing so seems to me to be sufficient.

The men who sought election to the legislature last spring were for the most part desperately eager, for one reason or another, to get into office; and with few exceptions they voluntarily pledged themselves under the provisions and in the terms of "Statement Number One." Nearly all the members of the legislature stand committed to the course prescribed by this pledge—to vote for the candidate for United States Senator who in the election preceding the legislative session (the same election in which the members of the legislature were chosen) shall have received the highest number of the people's votes.

In the senatorial campaign which began last spring, and which is due to culminate in the election of a senator by the legislature next January, there was on the Democratic side only one candidate, Governor George E. Chamberlain. The party being in the minority with no possible chance of success excepting by concentration of its vote, and being as a minority party relatively free from internal rivalries and jealousies, permitted its strongest man to go into the primary election—that is, the election to determine nominations—untroubled by rival candidates of his own political faith. Furthermore, large numbers of Democrats, friendly to the prospective party nominee and anxious to do him a favor, registered and voted in the primary as Republicans, casting their votes not for a strong Republican likely to win in the ensuing election, but for a weak man whose candidacy in the final contest might be the more easily overcome. They did not by this course change from Democrats to Republicans; they went only far enough to help a weak Republican to the nomination to the end that it might be easier for the candidate of their own party to beat him. Ultimately—in the final election—they gave their votes to the Democratic nominee.

On the Republican side there were in the primary two candidates for the senatorial nomination, the most notable, Senator Charles W. Fulton of Astoria, a man of natural strength but for the moment under a handicap through the fierce animosity of Mr. Francis

J. Heney, whose moral credit was then high in Oregon. Speaking from the standpoint of a responsible public prosecutor, Heney challenged the personal integrity of Senator Fulton, charged him with grave crimes, and declared that he would speedily indict and convict him for frauds in connection with the robbery of public lands. These charges, emphatically and authoritatively made, had a decisive weight against Fulton and vastly helped the candidacy of his Republican opponent in the primary. It would be another story to follow Mr. Heney's course and to exhibit the complete collapse of his so-called exposures. It is perhaps enough to say here that he has not even attempted to indict Senator Fulton; that he has not made good his charges; that he himself is now wholly discredited in Oregon and that Senator Fulton stands higher than before. But at the moment Heney's onslaught was sufficient to turn the tide against Fulton in the primaries, his vote being 23,202 to 25,740 for his opponent.

Senator Fulton's rival in his own party was a man who had never been thought of for the senatorship by anybody but himself. Measured by the ordinary and accepted standards of senatorial qualification, his candidacy was an impertinence. But circumstances favored him. Those who had personal or other reasons for objection to Fulton turned to him as affording the one chance to vent their resentment. Those who believed Mr. Heney—and at that time he is remembered, Mr. Heney had not as now been completely discredited—voted against Fulton upon the theory that they were punishing a rogue. Then, as we have already recited, there were large numbers of Democrats who, under motives already set forth, registered as Republicans in order that they might help Chamberlain's candidacy by giving him a weak opponent in the final election. The result was that the Republican vote was divided between two candidates, with the man of least consequence slightly ahead of the logical and more effective candidate.

By this means George E. Chamberlain became the Democratic candidate and one Cake, a man of small political or personal consequence, became the Republican candidate; and in the final election which followed Chamberlain beat Cake by a majority of bare 1500. This in a State in which the registered Republican vote is 80,921 and the registered Democratic vote 28,788.

The immediate situation in Oregon is truly a curious one. A legislature overwhelmingly Republican, representing a State likewise overwhelmingly Republican, stands pledged to elect a Democrat to the Senate next January. Since the exciting days which preceded the primary, when legislative candidates tumbled over each other to pledge themselves under "Statement Number One," there has been time for reflection, and reflection has brought repentance. Nobody is today more chagrined over the moral contradictions of the situation than those who voluntarily pledged themselves to vote for the "popular choice." There is not one man among those Republicans elected to the legislature under the "Statement Number One" who would not give something handsome to evade a pledge so ridiculously and foolishly given. Ingenuity is being worked overtime to find a way to escape from a situation now universally reprobated among Republicans. Nobody as yet has seen a way to go back on a pledge voluntarily and definitely made; but in matters of this kind it has been observed that where there is a will there is commonly a way.

It hardly needs to be told that Republicans, anxious to see Republican representation at Washington and resentful personally and otherwise of conditions which have made a Democrat, Chamberlain, the official nominee, will do what they may to break the resolution of weak-kneed legislators and to induce them to turn from Chamberlain even at the cost of self-stultification. The Portland Oregonian, which continues to be a great force in the land, does not go to the length of counseling members of the legislature in plain terms to break their oaths, but day by day its arguments tend to discredit the situation and to the encouragement of such members of the legislature as are seeking a way of escape from the ridiculous pledge of "Statement Number One." The Oregon legislature is made up of 90 members, 46 therefore making the majority required for the election of a Senator. It will take, besides the 16 Democratic members, 30 Republicans to elect Chamberlain. More than this number stand pledged under "Statement Number One." But a question has been raised under which it is possible that enough Republicans may slink out of their pledge to break Chamberlain's majority. In the general election which gave Chamberlain a majority over Cake, many of the Oregon counties voted not for Chamberlain, but for Cake. It is argued speciously by those who are anxious to find a loophole that a member of the legislature anxious to evade the pledge of "Statement Number One" may plead that as the representative of a particular county he is not pledged to Chamberlain unless his county gave to Chamberlain a majority of its votes. The logic of this quibble is not very good when it is put alongside the definite and unequivocal declarations of "Statement Number One," but it may be sufficient to afford gentlemen of easy conscience a small hole through which they may crawl. It is said that there is a sufficient number of "Statement Number One" Republicans in the legislature representing counties which did not vote for Chamberlain to break his majority.

It only remains to be added that Chamberlain's nomination—his "election," if it may be so called—rests upon no basis of popular will. His popular vote in round numbers was 52,500 to 51,000 for his Republican opponent, Cake, but the procedure from first to last was a hippodrome in which rival candidates of small calibre, conveniently elastic principles, and no dignity, made monkeys of themselves before an amused but disgusted public. There was no sifting of candidates; there was no public discussion of principles or issues; there was nothing but a scramble between cheap personalities for a degraded and debauched counterfeit of a great dignity. In the opinion of the Argonaut, Chamberlain, despite his so-called "election," will not be chosen by a Republican legislature to misrepresent the people of Oregon in the national council at Washington. We believe that a way—shabby and shameful, to be sure, but nevertheless a way—will be found by which the "Statement Number One" Republicans will discard their pledges and vote for some man of their own party. We do not believe there is strength enough even in so positive a declaration as "Statement Number One" to hold men to a policy fatal to their own party and in support of the nominee of the opposing party. One thing, indeed, might tend to "vindicate" the choice of Chamberlain, that is the election of Bryan with the vote of Oregon in his favor. Neither of these contingencies is probable.

The general situation in Oregon tends to the disgust of thoughtful and patriotic men of all parties. It is now plainly seen that a system devised upon a theory of popular choice does not support that theory. It is seen further that under the direct primary great abuses are possible—indeed, inevitable—due to the fact that the system affords no preliminary examination of the character of candidates and that it permits a candidate with a plurality, no matter how small, to win an election, and that—as in the case of Bourne—it permits an industrious politician with money at command to have things his own way. It is ridiculous to talk about a "people's choice" when, as in the case of Senator Bourne, a man may be elected to a high office on a basis of less than 15 per cent of the popular vote at any stage of the procedure. It seems unlikely that, for all its manifest faults, the direct primary system will be abandoned, but there is every reason to believe that it will be vitally amended. One suggestion is to the effect that the old party convention idea be ingrafted upon the system with advisory powers—that is, with power to recommend candidates for the primary vote; another, a modification calculated to annul any primary "nomination" which does not give the nominee a full majority of the registered vote of his own party. The purpose is universal in Oregon to make changes and readjustments that in future will prevent such anomalies and confusions as those involved in the election of Senator Bourne and in the "popular choice" of Mr. Chamberlain as his colleague.

The "Nickel-in-the-Slot."

The Argonaut trusts—perhaps it would be more accurate to say it hopes—that the local movement against the nickel-in-the-slot machine will not die a-borning. Whatever arguments may be urged against the vice of gambling apply with a special emphasis to the slot machine, as it stands open to all on the counter of every cigar store. A five-cent "play" is intrinsically as serious a thing in morals as a thousand-dollar wager on the race track or a ten-thousand-dollar deal in wild-cat mining shares. Its quality is on a precise level with the roulette wheel and the faro game. The fault of the nickel-in-the-slot machine is that its invitation is not only universally presented, but that it is presented under circumstances calculated to silence if not disarm condemnation. The pretense of the slot machine to make an honest return is fraudulent and therefore demoralizing. The publicity of the thing tends in many minds less sensitive to realities than appearances to mitigate its viciousness. The smallness of the stake is another circumstance tending to dull moral sensibility. Every circumstance and consideration connected with the slot machine goes to make it a menace to public morals and therefore a grave public danger. Gambling is bad enough when its appeal is made apart from circumstances tending to gloss over the social hazards involved in it. It is a doubly vicious thing when it takes a form calculated to relieve it of public reproach, to make its invitation a public one, and to present its appeal to every man or boy with a nickel in his pocket.

A VOICE FROM THE SOUTH.

[From the Los Angeles Daily Times, October 16, 1908.]

The discreditable vagaries of the graft prosecution in San Francisco seem to have become one of the permanent institutions of that distracted city, an incubus comparable in its sinister results with the shameful rule of Schmitz and Ruef. Day by day the dreary farce of Ruef's trial is continued in the courts, and day by day the ideals of law and justice are degraded by furious and unchecked tirades, by the personal and irrelevant abuse of the legal hucksters upon either side. A jury panel of 2400 names has already been exhausted, and no jury has yet been found to try a man whose guilt has been notorious to the whole nation. A community that would never grow weary of a hearty and honest attack upon wrongdoing is now utterly nauseated by this scandalous travesty of prosecution and by proceedings that are infinitely worse than the evils that they pretended to assail.

The agents of the prosecution have now been at work for over two years, and they have accomplished nothing. They might easily have convicted the whole body of guilty supervisors, but these venal creatures were allowed to go their way unpunished, with secret contracts of immunity in their pockets and in undisputed possession of their ill-gotten gains. They might have convicted Ruef, but they preferred to bargain with the arch criminal in order to secure his worthless testimony against the objects of their private resentments. Unable to bring even Ruef to the point desired of him, they first denied that any immunity had been promised to him, and then, when their pledge was published to the world, they ignored it. Small wonder that there should now be a general belief in San Francisco that the conviction even of Ruef has become impossible, so widespread and so deeply rooted is the distrust that these sinister tactics have created.

It is probably too late for the prosecution to retrace their steps or to reestablish in any degree whatever the public confidence that they once possessed in such full measure and that they have recklessly thrown away. However plaintively they may now ask for patience and support, the fact remains that with unexampled opportunities to do everything they have done nothing. They did, indeed, secure a conviction against Schmitz, but as a result of blunders of which an attorney's clerk would be ashamed, Schmitz has been liberated and today walks the streets a free man. Ruef is equally at liberty upon bail, although both these criminals could be incarcerated tomorrow upon other of the numerous indictments of which no use has been made. After two years of threat and bluster there is not a single criminal behind the bars as a result of their activities—nor is there much likelihood of a single criminal getting there.

From start to finish the course of some of those concerned has been marked by a crude perversity that is inexplicable, except upon the prevailing theory that there never was at any time a sincere intention to pursue criminality as such, but only a vendetta against personal and business enemies. It has taken the public a long time to awake to the fact that there has been no single straightforward intention behind these disgraceful proceedings and that no theatrical drama could be more artificial or more unreal.

The immunity given to the supervisors was received with a gasp of surprise, but the public was cajoled into the belief that such a step was necessary to the conviction of Ruef. There was no such motive behind that immunity, inasmuch as the prosecution had no intention to convict Ruef. Then came Ruef's conviction and plea of guilty, and once more the public believed in the spontaneity and genuineness of a sensational episode that had been planned and rehearsed between prisoner and prosecution, and that was based upon motives of which the public had no conception. The tears were all stage tears, and the penitence and contrition were simply well-acted "business." Then followed the shameless quarrel as to the existence of a contract between Ruef and the prosecution, a contract impudently and repeatedly denied by the very men whose signatures were appended to the published document. At last the public began to understand that from first to last they had been looking at a set stage, and that their applause and sympathy had been won and sustained by plausible pretense. Was it only notorious criminality that was to be immunized? Was it only a business rivalry that was to be punished?

No one wishes to see Ruef escape, but that undesirable consummation is within sight. It might be avoided if Heney would mercifully step out of sight and hearing, and if the duty of prosecuting attorney were entrusted to some man who would go about the business in a regular and recognized way according to legal methods and without personal insult or frenzied appeals to class prejudice and sectional hatreds. But it is to be feared that Heney has struck root and that his numerous and malodorous satellites and camp followers find the business too profitable to be curtailed or abandoned. There is, therefore, nothing to do but to wait till the patience of San Francisco is exhausted and a peremptory end to the whole business is recognized as the least of the evils in sight.

Canada has, once and for all time, rejected the twelve-foot canal as grossly incompetent, and its canal from Georgian Bay to the St. Lawrence by way of the Ottawa and Mattawa Rivers will be twenty-one feet deep, making Chicago and Milwaukee and Duluth ocean ports, subject only to sail of several hundred miles through exclusively British soil.

The plan of the proposed Henry Hudson memorial bridge at New York calls for a reinforced concrete span of 710 feet, and represents one of the boldest engineering projects of the time.

CAMPAIGN TOPICS.

A special correspondent of the New York Evening Post finds it hard to arrive at a definite conclusion as to political probabilities in Nebraska. He sees evidences of a "new order of things" when people are thinking rather than talking and going their own way rather than at the heels of the most vociferous orator of the day. The spectacle of a thinking electorate is certainly a novel one, unique in its way, and suggesting all sorts of possibilities. From the ordinary point of view there is "nothing doing" in Nebraska. The average speaker, we are told, can not draw a crowd, which is hardly surprising considering the mental calibre of the "average speaker." As a general rule the people will go to hear a man of national celebrity. Taft or Bryan or Hughes can draw a crowd, but the strange part of the thing is that when the speech is over the people go away without giving any indication of how they will vote.

Nebraska has the double importance of being one of the "doubtful" States and also the home of the Democratic candidate. In 1896 the Democrats and Populists combined and carried the State for Bryan by 13,576. Four years later McKinley carried it by 7822. Following the general example, it rolled up an enormous plurality for Roosevelt of 56,682.

The question now is, are there influences enough at work to carry the electoral vote of the State for Bryan? That the race is a close one here between Taft and Bryan is admitted on all sides. The "claims" are that Taft will win by not less than 15,000 or 20,000, and that Bryan will have not less than 15,000 plurality. What may be called the Omaha view is not likely to be as trustworthy as the views at the State capital, Lincoln, for the reason that the men here whose judgment is worth taking do not pretend to be in touch with the entire State.

Putting aside the "claims" of each side and getting down to bed-rock opinions here, one finds the feeling to be that George L. Sheldon is likely to be reelected governor, and that it is an even chance as between Taft and Bryan. One excellent Democratic authority here said: "If Bryan's majority in the State should be 7000, he would pull the Democratic State ticket through."

It need hardly be said that forecasts of this kind are not of much value, colored, as they invariably are, by personal bias. The situation is doubly doubtful in view of the reticence of which the correspondent thinks and of "the new order of things," which reminds us irresistibly of the intelligent parrot who couldn't talk much, but who was "a beggar to think."

Boss Cox of Cincinnati assigns the doubtful States to Taft with both hands, and he is willing to risk his money in defense of his prophecy. "Ohio," said Mr. Cox, "will give 125,000 for Taft and 75,000 for Harris for governor." New York will give a good plurality for Taft, but, in Mr. Cox's opinion, Hughes will run behind the ticket and be defeated unless Taft's plurality is sufficiently big to pull the governor through:

"Now, it is not the popularity of Judge Taft that will carry these States. It is the fear of Bryan. Had Gray or Johnson been nominated by the Democrats, either would have carried New York and Ohio. As Bryan was nominated, the people will choose the smaller of the two evils."

The fear of Bryan, says the oracle, is growing stronger every day. Bryan's statement that he would not take a second term has done him immeasurable harm in the eyes of those who recognize the caution and the sense of responsibility developed in the man who wants to succeed himself. Reverting to his own State, Mr. Cox said:

"I will take all the two-to-one money they want to offer on these figures (125,000 for Taft), and all the even money they can get together on 50,000 for Taft. Indiana is a certainty for Taft. There are no doubtful States around here."

Senator Foraker, by the way, seems to be doing his little best to "get even" with his enemies, although the personal treatment that he received from Mr. Taft was of the most chivalrous kind. Reports from Ohio say that the Senator has twelve stenographers at work sending appeals to vote for Bryan into every hole and corner of the State. It is hard to imagine the order of intelligence that would listen to such appeals coming so obviously from personal spite, but there may, of course, be some who will be beguiled.

Mr. Taft's visit to St. Louis was productive of much good political material. It is estimated that he came into contact with some sixty thousand persons during the day, while the great meeting in the Coliseum was of record dimensions. His subject was the trusts, but during the course of his speech he was interrupted by a man in the gallery who shouted: "Why don't you talk to the labor unions? What have you to say to labor?" Mr. Taft's reply was hot and to the point. "If the labor unions only knew it," he said, "I have done more for labor than Mr. Gompers or any other labor union leader." Another interruption was a query about campaign contributions. The reply was that, so far as he knew, no contributions had yet been made that would have the slightest tendency to embarrass any one.

Mr. Taft's references to the trusts and the proper policy of the future administration toward them were of the first importance. He made it clear that he was not opposed to the aggregation of capital for the purpose of effecting economies. Such aggregations, he said, "are to be commended rather than condemned. It is not inconsistent with competition and is an aid to our progress."

"When, however, it is accompanied by an attempt to monopolize business and to control prices, it then becomes illegal and the evil must be stamped out. This should be done by greater supervision of the business of such corporations, by Federal control through the Department of Commerce and Labor; by a series of reports each month; by constant examination by government agents, and by immediate and persistent prosecutions of all violations of law.

"The function of the next administration," he added, "is not to be spectacular in the enactment of great statutes laying down new codes of morals, or asserting a new standard of business integrity, but its work lies in the details of furnishing men and machinery to aid the hand of the Executive in making the supervision of the transactions so close, so careful, so constant, that the business men engaged in it may know promptly when they are transgressing the line of lawful business limitations and may be brought up standing whenever this occurs and may be prosecuted where the violations of law are flagrant and defiant, and promptly restrained and penalized."

The Democratic national campaign fund is said to be in sorry straits. Herman Ridder, the new treasurer, who took the place of the late lamented Haskell, admits that he is exhausting every resource to get money. The total funds that have come to the committee do not exceed $220,000, and this includes the $42,000 of the Denver convention fund. The expenses of the campaign to date have been in excess of the amount contributed, and unless a streak of unusual generosity develops somewhere the campaign managers will find a substantial deficit after election. It is said that Mr. Ridder has spent nearly $50,000 out of his own pocket in connection with the organization of a German-American Democracy throughout the country:

"I have been working on the German-American Democracy idea as a factor in this campaign since last spring. I have used my own money and it has cost me a small fortune. Incidentally I may say I'm quite confident that the German vote for Bryan will be a large one all through the country. Money has not been coming in any too fast. I have to go out after it. Some money has come in from various Democratic newspapers that have been raising funds through their columns. The small contributions are the ones that count in this campaign. There are mighty few large ones."

The poll undertaken by the New York World is attracting a good deal of attention. The Astor Theatre was selected for the purpose both as affording a fairly representative crowd and also because the current play has a kind of political moral attached to it. Cards were distributed in the audience on which those desiring to vote could record their choice for President and governor and also how they had last voted for those offices. The results of the second poll were as follows:

Number of votes cast.....	343
FOR PRESIDENT.
Taft.....	234
Bryan.....	96
Debs.....	8
Higsen.....	6
FOR GOVERNOR.
Hughes.....	195
Chanler.....	138
Shearn.....	5
FOR PRESIDENT IN 1904.
Roosevelt.....	170
Parker.....	36
Debs.....	6
FOR GOVERNOR IN 1906.
Hughes.....	174
Hearst.....	19

The total number of votes cast is not, of course, very large in proportion to the number of men who presumably were in the theatre, but the number of abstentions would be as great one way as the other. Without attaching too much importance to these polls, they do at least furnish a useful indication.

Mr. Gompers is uneasy in his mind. He fears some "insidious attempts" which will be made to defeat labor's campaign for its rights" between now and election day. We are warned that "no slander will be too vile to be placed in circulation" and it will be done so adroitly that there will be no time for a contradiction.

Now we would like to bring balm to the suffering soul of Mr. Gompers if we can do so. If he would only look at himself in a due perspective, the painful swelling of the head might subside and the blood run less feverishly. The Federation of Labor has a nominal membership of about 1,750,000. Probably about 40 per cent of these are voters, although a recent investigation placed the number at 33 per cent. But, giving Mr. Gompers the benefit of the doubt, the number may be placed at 700,000 voters. Now we may be sure that a large number of these have their own opinions. Some of them are Socialists and a half dozen or so of the weaker brethren among them may belong to the Independence party. In short, these 700,000 will be distributed among the parties in pretty much the same proportions as would be found in any other crowd of similar dimensions. Mr. Gompers need not, therefore, be troubled about "labor's campaign for its rights" and the possibility of a stampede on the eve of election. The number of voters influenced by him is so small that a procession of them would hardly be noticed in a busy street, and yet Mr. Gompers makes more noise than all other labor leaders put together, and if he would only be less ostentatious he would be so much less ridiculous.

The rather abortive effort to make political capital out of Mr. Taft's religious persuasions reminds the Springfield Republican of drastic action once taken by Macaulay under similar circumstances. In the words of the Republican:

Macaulay had his own ideas as to the limits within which constituents are justified in exercising their privilege of questioning a candidate; and, on the first occasion when these limits were exceeded, he made a notable example of the transgressor. During one of his public meetings a voice was heard to exclaim from the crowd in the body of the hall: "An elector wishes to know the religious creed of Mr. Marshall and Mr. Macaulay." The effect was instantaneous. Macaulay was on his legs in a moment. "Let that man stand up," he cried. "Let him stand on a form where I can see him." The offender, who proved to be a Methodist preacher, was hoisted to a bench by his indignant neighbors, nerving himself even in that terrible moment by a lingering hope that he might yet be able to hold his own. But the unhappy man had not a chance against Macaulay, who harangued him as if he were the living embodiment of religious intolerance and illegitimate curiosity. "I have heard with the greatest shame and sorrow the question which has been proposed to me; and with peculiar pain do I learn that this question was proposed by a minister of religion. I do most deeply regret that any person should think it necessary to make a meeting like this an arena for theological discussion. I will not be a party to turning this assembly to such a purpose. My answer is short, and in one word: Gentlemen, I am a Christian." At this declaration the delighted audience began to cheer. And such an answer is as satisfactory in America in the twentieth century as it was in England in the middle of the nineteenth.

The record does not say how the insolent preacher liked the pillory in which he was so promptly placed. It is to be regretted that no similar castigation can be applied to the impertinence of a later day.

PERSONALLY CONDUCTED.

"Piccadilly" Writes of an American Guide Who Shows You London in Three Hours.

It is a little strange that visitors to London should have to resort to American aid in order to get an intelligent personal knowledge of the most historically interesting city in the world. Guide books can, of course, be bought by the wagon-load. Some of them are good and some of them are bad, but all of them put together can not equal the solid comfort of a personal conductor who knows exactly what ought to be seen, why it ought to be seen, and the best way in which to see it.

It is perhaps appropriate that the best guide to be found in London should be an American. No doubt there are Londoners with an equal knowledge of the metropolis, but they must necessarily lack that fine knowledge of what will most appeal to the American mind and of the most sensitive spots in American sentiment. A great many of the most interesting bits of London are hard to find. Like Dr. Johnson, we may "take a walk down Fleet Street," but without a personal guide we shall surely look with unseeing eyes upon some of the choicest relics of his day or else spend an unreasonable amount of time and perhaps provoke contumely by vain inquiries. There are some things that even the London policeman does not know, even though we fail to exhaust his patient courtesy.

The American guide whose mission in life is to smooth the path of the American wayfarer starts on his daily pilgrimage from the Strand. He uses a sort of automobile omnibus and, although he neither advertises the fact of his own nationality nor specially invites his countrymen, we may safely take it that nine out of ten of his patrons are transatlantic visitors. He knows this well enough himself, for although his welcome to Germans or to Frenchmen is sincere enough, it is to Americans that he addresses his explanations and it is American susceptibilities that he has ever in mind. He takes care to point out Mr. Astor's property on the Strand and to tell us that the Waldorf Theatre is owned by that expatriated American and that the Waldorf Hotel was built with American money. He loses no chance to show what American capital is doing in London, showing, indeed, an astonishing power to penetrate the true inwardness of the great commercial establishments along the line of route. All this information is given through a megaphone and is therefore as much at the disposal of the crowds in the street as of the occupants of the omnibus. But the crowd does not seem to mind these dreadful disclosures, and listens with a good-humored interest to revelations of American control that, in the ordinary nature of things, ought to be disquieting.

But the knowledge of this remarkable guide is by no means confined to mercenary affairs. Indeed, it seems to have no confines at all. Like Sam Weller, his acquaintance with London is "extensive and peculiar." He knows everything that has ever happened everywhere, and under the spell of his megaphone the London of today melts away and the ghosts of the old times become real. His usual route is along Holborn and Oxford Street to the British Museum, and so he shows us where criminals used to pass on the way to Tyburn and the old taverns where they were allowed a final drink on their promise to pay for the same on the way back. We see the Dickens inns, Red Lion Square where Charles II hanged the ladies of Ireton and the regicides, and Gray's Inn with all its memories of Bacon. Our guide knows all about them; enough, indeed, to make many a hardened Londoner realize his ignorance of his heritage.

And still the wonder grew,
That one small head should carry all he knew.

But it was not until we reached the British Museum that the omniscience of our guide was fully disclosed. We had only about an hour for the most impressive collection of antiquities to be found in the world. The time was absurdly inadequate, but it was utilized to the utmost. It was a case of selecting the essentials, and no man ever knew better where to find them. We were taken through room after room, and if we supposed at first that our guide had made a life-long study of statuary we presently altered our opinion, as we find that he knew even more of archæology, still more of Egyptology, and even yet more of manuscripts or geology. No wonder that his retinue gradually increased and that casual visitors by the dozen joined his party, seizing the chance to see the museum as it should be seen, so far at least as time would permit.

Westminster Abbey was to be the ultimate goal, but on the way we passed the clubs, the parks, Piccadilly, and St. James. The guide had something to say about them all, and he always said the right thing. But it was at the abbey that his extraordinary knowledge came once more into the fullest play. He showed us the memorial to André, who was shot by Washington as a spy, and here our guide spoke out in propria persona. "The execution of André is one of the very few deeds which we regret in our War of Independence," he said. Poets' Corner evoked his enthusiasm, and it was contagious. He spoke of the great names of English literature as the common possession of the English-speaking race, and of their genius as recognizing no national boundaries. And then he recited Washington Irving's splendid eulogy of the abbey as holding more of the world's great men than any other monument on earth. And he did all this, not as one repeating a part, but with all the enthusiasm and spontaneity of a first effort. It was certainly a remarkable performance, and one that probably has not been equaled in any capital of the world. Three hours is not a great deal in which to see London, but it is certain that three hours could not be better spent or, it may be said, more economically, seeing that the charge for the whole thing was only a dollar and a half.

With the guide himself it was a matter of preparation and memory. He came to London some few months ago and set himself to work deliberately to study the ground and to fit himself for the work that he contemplated. He has done it well and it would certainly be hard to find a more comprehensive knowledge or a greater intelligence in setting it forth.

LONDON, October 9, 1908.

PICCADILLY.

OLD FAVORITES.

Buddha and the Woman.

When they came unto the river's side,
A woman—dove-eyed, young, with fearful face
And lifted hands—saluted, hending low:
"Lord, thou art he," she said, "who yesterday
Had pity on me in the fig-grove here,
Where I live lone and reared my child; hut he Straying amid the hlossoms found a snake,
Which twined about his wrist, while he did laugh
And tease the quick-forked tongue and open mouth
Of that cold playmate. But alas! ere long
He turned so pale and still, I could not think
Why he should cease to play, and let my breast
Fall from his lips. And one said, 'He is sick
Of poison'; and another, 'He will die';
But I, who could not lose my precious hoy,
Prayed of them physic, which might bring the light
Back to his eyes; it was so very small,
That kiss-mark of the serpent, and I think
It could not hurt him, gracious as he was,
Nor hurt him in his sport. And some one said,
'There is a holy man upon the hill—
Lo! now he passeth in his yellow robe—
Ask of the Rishi if there he a cure
For that which ails thy son.' Whereon I came Trembling to thee, whose brow is like a god's,
And wept and drew the face-cloth from my hape,
Praying thee tell what simples may be good.
And thou, great sir! didst spurn me not, hut gaze
With gentle eyes and touch with patient hand,
Then draw the face-cloth back, saying to me,
'Yea, little sister, there is that might heal
Thee first, and him, if thou couldst fetch the thing;
For they who need physicians bring to them
What is ordained. Therefore, I pray thee, find
Black mustard-seed, a tola; only mark
Thou take it not from any hand or house
Where father, mother, child, or slave hath died;
It shall he well if thou canst find such seed.'
Thus didst thou speak, my Lord!"

The Master smiled
Exceedingly tender. "Yea, I spake thus,
Dear Kisagotami! But didst thou find
The seed?"

"I went, Lord, clasping to my breast
The hape grown colder, asking at each hut
Here in the jungle and toward the town:
'I pray you give me mustard, of your grace,
A tola, hlaek'; and each who had it gave,
For all the poor are piteous to the poor;
But when I asked, 'In my friend's household here
Hath any peradventure ever died—
Husband, or wife, or child, or slave?' they said,
'O sister! what is this you ask? The dead
Are very many, and the living few!
So with sad thanks I gave the mustard hake,
And prayed of others; hut the others said,
'Here is the seed, hut we have lost our slave!
'Here is the seed, hut our good-man is dead!
'Here is some seed, hut he that sowed it died
Between the rain-time and the harvesting!
Therefore I left my child—who would not suck
Nor smile—heneath the wild vines by the stream
To seek thy face and kiss thy feet, and pray
Where I might find this seed and find no death,
If now, indeed, my hahy he not dead,
As I do fear, and as they said to me."

"My sister, thou hast found," the Master said,
"Searching for what none finds, that hitter halm
I had to give thee. He thou lovedst slept
Dead on thy hosom yesterday; today
Thou knowest the whole wide world weeps thy woe;
The grief which all hearts share grows less for one.
Lo! I would pour my blood if it could stay
Thy tears and win the secret of that curse
Which makes sweet love our anguish, and which drives
O'er fields and pastures to the sacrifice—
As these dumb heasts are driven, men their lords.
I seek that secret; hurry thou thy child!"

—Sir Edwin Arnold.

One of the steam shovels engaged in work on the Panama Canal, in the operation of which more than 300 employees were engaged, recently lifted out a quantity of dynamite which is described in an official report as being "more than a bushel." What would have happened if the shovel had struck the dynamite instead of the earth around it is easy to imagine. The explosive was in sticks three-quarters of an inch in diameter and five inches long, and the cartridges bore the trademark of a French manufacturer of dynamite and a date which appeared to be November 29, 1887. Unquestionably the dynamite was put in by the French and either failed to explode or was abandoned when the work ceased on that part of the French waterway. The dynamite appeared to be in perfect condition.

It is doubtful, if Victor Hugo and Dumas had combined their imaginations, whether they could have produced a more sensational incident than the struggle between a madman and two policemen on the span of the Williamsburg bridge, 332 feet above the surface of the East River, in New York, a few days ago. The spectacle of the madman, bent on suicide, climbing to the pinnacle of the bridge tower and pursued by two policemen who were compelled to scale the same dizzy eminence, was one which gave the New York crowd of thousands that watched it reinforcement in their old belief that the truth is occasionally as strange as fiction.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Lord Brassey, the great English authority on naval matters, is seventy-two years old, but he is devoting himself to studying German.

Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman would solve the negro problem by drafting the lazy members of the race into an industrial army with uniforms and brass buttons.

Cardinal Rampolla, who has been living in retirement since he missed the election to the papal throne, is mentioned as possible successor to Secretary Merry del Val. The cardinal for sixteen years occupied second place in the Roman Catholic hierarchy, and probably entertains hopes of eventually rising to the rank of primate.

Hon. W. S. Fielding, Canadian minister of finance, raises and spends a hundred million dollars a year on a seven-thousand-dollar salary, which is as low a commission as can be got anywhere. Mr. Fielding is the only prominent member left of the old cabinet that gathered about Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1896, having held his position twelve years.

Mme. Surcouf, wife of the distinguished aeronautical engineer, is one of the best known aeronauts in France. She has a long record of ascents to her credit, and has traveled many hundreds of miles in the air in all sorts of weather. When friends call upon her Mme. Surcouf frequently takes them for an excursion in one of her husband's balloons, and instead of having tea at home they take it in cloudland while sailing through space two or three thousand feet above the ground.

Mrs. Asquith, wife of the British prime minister, has long been one of King Edward's literary advisers. After his majesty came back to Marlborough House from taking part in the procession at the first jubilee, he sat down and wrote a line to the then Margot Tennant, to thank her for her recommendation of some amusing new book. "I have just returned," he wrote, "from taking part in the jubilee service of this wonderful, unforgettable day." Mrs. Asquith keeps that letter with other treasured ones in a volume covered with emerald-green calf.

J. H. Needling and A. C. Faure, from Pretoria, Transvaal, have registered as agricultural students at Cornell University. The young men are government students, and recently won scholarships awarded by the Transvaal department of agriculture. Eight scholarships were competed for and the young men who won them are all being sent to this country to be educated in different agricultural colleges. Both men will take the full four-year course in agriculture. They recently matriculated for Cape Town University and will therefore probably enter Cornell without condition.

Mme. Patti has made a promise to Father Bernard Vaughan to sing for his charities, and the concert will probably take place at the Albert Hall, London. Meanwhile, the great singer is staying at Craig-y-nos, where she and her husband, the Baron Cederström, have entertained in a quiet way throughout the summer. Paris sees them in the autumn, and Rome in the spring, of every year. For some time past Mme. Patti has been doing her best to get rid of Craig-y-nos, and would prefer a home in Norfolk, not very far from Sandringham.

Chancellor McCracken of New York University avers that the monopolistic spirit is not confined to the commercial world, but invades the college world also. The chancellor complained recently that "unconsciously the rich and strong neighbors of New York University have treated her as if she ought to be hanged or sent to the stake." As a consequence of this attitude New York University has been "neglected in comparison with its neighbors by those who give, or ought to give, to higher education." The university is, therefore, he declares, obliged to depend on the sacrifice of its professors and the collection of small subscriptions for its current support.

Prince Bülow, the imperial chancellor, the other day told 400 members of the International Press Congress, which recently began its sittings in Berlin, that the spirit of self-confidence which he has carried through life dates from an occasion in the early eighties in Paris, when the late M. de Blowitz offered him $6000 a year to join the staff of the London Times. The young diplomatic attaché, as Prince Bülow then was, had asked M. de Blowitz what chances he thought he might have in journalism. Prince Bülow said that the first mention of himself in the press was an observation by a Vienna newspaper while he was chargé d'affaires in Athens, and was to the effect that Bismarck would require to be a great statesman to repair the blunders of his representative in Greece.

Prince Francis of Teck, of the British royal family, recently addressed to a London publication a letter on the subject of dust-raising and inconsiderate driving in general, which ought to have good influence alike on owners and chauffeurs. The points made are not without application to conditions in this country as well as to those in England. Prince Francis, who is chairman of the Royal Automobile Club, says experience points to "the necessity of attacking the problem from the point of view of road construction more than from the point of view of motor-car construction." Until the problem can be taken in hand and solved from that point of view, he "would enjoin all motor drivers and motor-car owners to consider the conditions of our roads as we find them, and to drive accordingly."

TWO FEUDS BEGIN TO TANGLE.

By Jerome A. Hart.

XXXVI.

The din over the senatorial fight at the capital had died away. The Vigilante roar of battle had made the senatorial warriors dumb. The heated encounters in the larger city by the Bay silenced the skirmishers at Sacrosanto. It was not until the Committee of Vigilance had formally disbanded that men's minds turned again to the ordinary political battles of life.

The Vigilantes, in their determination to disband, were influenced by the obvious weakness of their dealings with Tower; also by the numerous damage suits brought against them in the Federal courts by persons whom they had banished. But there was nothing weak or timid about their disbanding. They held a final parade, and nearly the entire citizenry stopped work and turned the occasion into a holiday. The Vigilantes paraded with banners and bands of music, and headed their line with a float representing Fort Vigilant. Their entire force of seven thousand men was in line, including a battery of artillery, a battalion of riflemen, a battalion of pistolmen, four regiments of infantry, two squadrons of cavalry, and a police battalion. The column was headed by the Executive Committee riding three abreast, escorted by two companies of dragoons, and followed by a staff of some fifty mounted mediceos. Editor Newton's paper, the Clarion, stigmatized the parade as "seven thousand traitors under arms." But the traitors seemed cheerful, and even proud.

At the close of their parade the Committee of Vigilance formally disbanded, and turned over their arms to the State—not in the person of Governor Jackson, however, for he had been succeeded by Governor Keller, one of Burke's rivals in the senatorial fight.

Although the noise of the fighting had died away, the wounds from the bitter battle over the senatorial seats took long to heal. Keller was particularly unforgiving. He had discovered the treacherous way in which he had been used by Burke, and swore revenge. His threats were more to be feared than those of other enemies of Burke. Keller, acting for revenge, set to work at once to secure the nomination for the governorship. When ensconced in Jackson's chair, Keller controlled the State patronage; being of the same party as Burke, he punished that politician by refusing offices to all Burke's followers. Even under ordinary circumstances this would have injured Burke politically, for great as is a Federal senator's patronage, he needs a finger in the State pie. If he is reputed to have no influence with the State administration, it injures him with the "boys." In this case, Burke not only had no influence with the State machine, but was bitterly hated by its head, Keller. For a candidate merely to be a friend of Burke was enough to insure the active antagonism of the governor and the "organization."

Burke's chagrin was gradually turning to dismay at his failure to secure the Federal patronage he had hoped for. Senator Wyley's forecast to Tower of the senatorial situation had come true. The President had demanded that Senator Burke put in writing his applications for Federal appointments. This Burke had secret reasons for refusing to do. When the President failed to give faith to his spurious reasons, Burke grew irritated, and denounced the President on the floor of the Senate. Thus, he soon found himself in bitter feud with the President, and utterly unable to secure for his followers the offices with which he had hoped to reward them.

But what was gall and wormwood in Burke's already bitter cup was the knowledge that these appointments went to his rival, Wyley. To protests sent by friends from Burke to Wyley, the latter merely replied:

"I am keeping the letter and spirit of my obligation to Senator Burke. I have made no attempt to secure presidential appointments for my friends. I have proclaimed this fact widely. Senator Burke has treated the President in such fashion, publicly and privately, that our chief magistrate will neither meet him nor confer with him. If, then, the President asks my advice, how can I refuse it? It is certainly my duty, as a senator and a citizen, to give to the highest officer in the nation my counsel if he demands it. He has demanded it. I shall continue to do so."

The result of Wyley's Machiavellian course was that Burke found himself made politically a nullity. The debts he had incurred to office-seekers during his campaign he could not pay with Federal patronage. His treacherous conduct toward Keller had made him lose all hope of State patronage. Yet for these discomfitures he could blame no one of his followers. He had no one to blame but himself. Bitter was his anger.

His return to the Coast after his first session in the Senate was not the ovation to which he had looked forward, with rejoicing clients walking at the wheels of his triumphal car. On the contrary, he found himself almost alone. Those of his former political supporters whom he met treated him with coolness or distrust. The general public regarded him with doubt, as being mixed up with one of the Vigilantes' victims, Clancy. Nevertheless, Burke plunged at once into the thick of the fray. He made a bold attempt to reorganize the State machine—to take away the offices of the State Central Committee from the Keller men and place his followers in them. Thus he hoped to pave the way for the filling of the State offices at the next election with his own friends. Although warned by the party press that this would cause a hopeless split in his party, he did not refrain. Although not a stump-speaker, and not endowed with any gifts of eloquence, he determined to take the platform, there to denounce his enemies, Wyley the senator and Keller the governor. And this he did in a bitter campaign throughout the principal cities and towns of the State.

One of the most sensational features of his campaign was the reading of the fateful letter written in Burke's private rooms at midnight by Senator Wyley. This was the document in which Wyley agreed to surrender to Burke all the Federal patronage in consideration of Burke's agreeing to support him for the senatorial seat. It was a damning document politically, for it proved Wyley, over his own signature, to be treacherous to his friends to whom he had promised offices.

Burke dubbed it "The Scarlet Letter." On platform after platform he read it from end to end of the State to eager listeners. Many at first doubted that it was possible for their idol, Senator Wyley, to sign such a document by which he set down in black and white his disloyalty to his loyal followers. But all doubts were removed by the testimony of Judge Fox, who admitted reluctantly and with pain that it was true, for he had brought Wyley to the midnight meeting. Keller and Milton, bitter enemies of Burke, were bitter haters also of his rival Wyley; fastidious in revenge, they both decided to corroborate Burke's charge, both having knowledge of the document.

In this momentous letter, which Burke read from every platform in the State, occurred the phrases: "While in the Senate I will not recommend a single individual to appointment to office in this State. You shall have the exclusive control of this patronage so far as I am concerned."

To this formidable document the friends of Wyley attempted to make replies, but there was little to be said. They could not deny the genuineness of the letter. All they could say was to declare it "a conspiracy." They charged that Burke had inveigled Wyley into a trap to destroy him. They declared that Burke really opposed Wyley, but that the legislature had refused to listen to Burke's orders and had elected Wyley.

The friends of the two senators took up the quarrel, and many bitter speeches were made during the campaign. Judge Tower was among those who took the stump for Wyley. At the time when the midnight meeting was arranged, Tower had warned Wyley of the unwisdom of such a rendezvous. Afterwards—unlike many men—he did not say "I told you so"; he did not twit Wyley over his unheeded warning; but he took up the quarrel valiantly in his friend's behalf. He attempted, so far as was possible, to check the force of Burke's denunciations, and in the course of a speech at Sacrosanto he denounced Burke's faction—which was the Northern wing of the Democratic party—saying: "What is this party?—a miserable remnant of a faction sailing under false colors. They are the followers of one man, the personal chattels of a single individual, belonging heart and soul to Daniel Burke. They are yet ashamed to acknowledge their master."

Toward the close of Burke's bitter campaign against Wyley, the loungers in the Oriental Hotel one morning turned to look with interest at two men on their way into the dining-room. Their curiosity was explained by the fact that it was Senator Burke and his friend and follower, Judge Fox. They were late at breakfast, and when they entered but one long table was set in the centre of the room, at which several people were seated. Near one end of the table was Mrs. Lyndon, accompanied by Diana Wayne. At the other was Judge Bandy, a devoted henchman of Tower. Bandy was seated beside that brilliant if somewhat metallic beauty, Sophia Lucretia, with whom he was engaged in animated talk.

These four persons looked up as the two statesmen stalked down the long room. Looking at Miss Leigh, Senator Burke hesitated for a moment at sight of Bandy, and seemed as if he were about to seat himself at the other end of the table from Bandy and his companion. But Fox affected not to notice his chieftain's purpose, and somewhat ostentatiously took a seat not far from Bandy and well within hearing. Burke was naturally obliged to seat himself by Fox's side. Both the newcomers saluted the ladies at the other end of the table, and also bowed to Sophia Lucretia, pointedly ignoring her companion.

While they were waiting for their breakfast to be served, the waiters brought them the morning papers, and both were soon absorbed in the perusal of those sheets. Only a few minutes had elapsed when Fox looked up quickly and said:

"Senator, have you seen what Judge Tower said of you in his speech at Sacrosanto?"

"No. What speech, and when did he deliver it?"

"According to this account," answered Fox, his eyes fastened on the newspaper he was holding, "Tower delivered a speech at a Know Nothing meeting in Sacrosanto day before yesterday, in which he took occasion to denounce the Northern wing of the Democratic party, of which you are the honored leader. And this paper quotes him as saying: 'This party is based on no principle, but is a miserable faction sailing under false colors. Its members are the followers and personal chattels of a single individual; they belong, soul and body, to Daniel Burke.'"

"Well, what about it?"

"Such language as that is entirely indefensible. Don't you think you ought to resent it?" And Fox's voice grew louder.

Burke took the paper, and read carefully the words which had just been repeated to him by Fox. After a moment's reflection he replied:

"I don't see how this language can be considered as personally offensive to me. It is not leveled at me personally."

"But it attacks you through your party." "It is true that it seems to stigmatize the party of which I am a leader," assented Burke, reflectively.

"Of course it does!" went on Fox warmly. "And don't you see that by implication Tower reflects on you as its leader? When he stigmatizes us as a 'miserable faction,' and slurs you as its leader, does it not seem to you that he thus intends to cast a deliberate insult on you when he calls you the leader of a 'miserable faction'?" And Fox still raised his voice.

Again Burke paused and reflected before he replied. "It may be that you are right," said he, musingly. "From that point of view it may be that he intended to hurl at me a deliberate insult from the platform. It may be that we are mistaken. But if offense was meant, I shall take cognizance of the intended offense and shall resent it." And Burke's tone grew harsher and louder. "Furthermore," continued Fox, still in the same indignant tone, "such conduct on his part is indefensible. He can not have forgotten that he is under deep obligations to you for having used your influence to protect him during his imprisonment by the Vigilance Committee."

"True," replied Burke slowly, in his deep voice. "Very true. When the Vigilance Committee had imprisoned Tower in Fort Vigilant and his life was hanging on the life of Lupkins, I paid three hundred dollars a week to the Clarion newspaper to urge his acquittal. And now he makes a speech abusing me. This is the gratitude I get from him for the favors I have conferred. I have hitherto spoken of him as the only honest man on the bench of a corrupt Supreme Court. But I find I was mistaken. I take it all back. He is as bad as the rest of them. He is not only dishonest, but ungrateful."

A silence fell around the table and the women looked up uneasily. The silence was broken by Bandy, who said roughly:

"Mr. Burke, whom do you speak of as dishonest?"

Burke looked at him with a scowl, and replied curtly with the single word, "Tower."

"In that case," cried Bandy threateningly, "I shall inform Judge Tower of the language you have used concerning him."

"You may do so," replied Burke, coldly. "I am responsible for my language."

"If you are, sir," exclaimed Bandy harshly, "you should use the language to him and not in his absence. You would not dare use this language to his face."

"You are not the sort of man, sir," answered Burke sneeringly, "to tell me what I shall or shall not dare."

"I am the man to tell you, sir," retorted Bandy hotly, "that you would not dare to use such language about Judge Tower to his face, and you shall not dare to use such language to me concerning him. I shall hold you personally responsible for the language you have used concerning Judge Tower in my presence, and for your threatening language to me, sir. I shall send my friends to wait upon you." And as Bandy spoke he rose as if to leave the table.

Burke also rose, as did Fox. "You need not take the trouble to send your friends to me, sir," returned Burke, stiffly, "for I will not receive them. The relative positions we occupy would forbid my meeting you on the field. You are a Canadian, a British subject, and I am an American citizen. Sending or accepting a challenge could not affect your political rights as it would mine. In this State it debars one from holding office. Furthermore, I am a senator of the United States, and, as you very well know, am about to leave for Washington to take my seat. Under the circumstances, so great is the inequality in our positions that I will refuse to meet you."

"I shall force you to do so, sir," cried Bandy menacingly.

"You can not force me, sir! My courage is not in question, for I have never yet refused to meet any man, either on the field or in the street, either with weapons or without. If any gentleman holding official position and who is my equal," Burke added meaningly, "desires to take exception to my language or my conduct, I shall be glad to meet him. But I wish it distinctly understood that I can enter on no hostile meetings until after the close of the session of the United States Senate to which I must now hasten."

"Since you refuse me the satisfaction usual among gentlemen," shouted Bandy, "I will post you as a coward, sir, in every public place in this city."

"And if you do, sir," returned Burke menacingly, "I will cane you when I meet you, and if you make a move toward a weapon I will shoot you in your tracks."

For a moment Bandy glared at the threatening face of Burke, and then vociferating, "You shall hear from me, sir," he bowed to the frightened women, and strode swiftly from the room.

When Bandy had disappeared, Burke turned to them and said: "Ladies, I sincerely beg your pardon for this very unpleasant scene. It would not have happened had it been in my power to prevent it, but you will bear me out in saying that I had made no remarks whatever concerning this person who has just left the room, and that my conversation concerning another was private conversation and intended for the ear of my friend Judge Fox. I have the honor, ladies, to wish you a very good-morning." And, bowing profoundly, the two gentlemen quitted the room.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

SOMETHING NEW ABOUT WAGNER.

The Full Story of a Great Operatic Triumph Is Told for the First Time.

Angelo Neumann's "Personal Recollections of Wagner" will be received with deep interest not only by those who revere the memory of the "great artistic radical," but by all who love to look behind the scenes and to participate in the humor, the comedy, and the tragedy that find there an even better representation than upon the stage itself. Angelo Neumann is perhaps the greatest producer of Wagner's music operas. He directed opera troupes through Germany, Austria, Italy, and Russia. He was in almost continuous contact with Wagner himself, both in the strenuous work of rehearsal and at Wahnfried. He tells us of Anton Seidl, of Nikisch, of the Voglo, of Reicher-Kindermann, and of many others. He gives us perhaps the most intimate of all revelations of the opera stage and he does all this with such a wealth of detail and also with a personal unobtrusiveness that are beyond all praise. The work has now reached its fourth edition in Germany, and for its present admirable translation we are indebted to Miss Edith Livermore.

The author tells us that at the age of nineteen he found it utterly impossible one night to sit through an entire performance of "The Flying Dutchman." He was an ardent disciple of the master, but he had to leave the theatre "thoroughly bored" by the long duet in the second act. But within a few pages we read of the "unbounded enthusiasm" awakened in him by the Bayreuth performances and his proposal to transplant the whole colossal undertaking to Leipsic and to give it there in a complete cycle. Laying the matter before Liszt, he was asked to come to Wahnfried to see Wagner himself:

Promptly at the given hour I appeared at Wahnfried. Liszt received me with his well-known gentleness and talked with me a while, discussing the plan in a tone that fell in exactly with my views. Then he wrote a few hasty words on a scrap of paper, folded it in note form, and sent it up to Wagner, who was still in his bedroom. Presently the servant came down with the answer. Liszt looked at it a moment, smiled, then frowned and seemed to hesitate, but finally decided to let me see what Wagner had written. On one side I read in Liszt's handwriting, "Incomprehensible man. Neumann is here. Come down and talk it over with him," and Richard Wagner had written on the reverse, "Still more incomprehensible one. I've nothing on but my shirt—hence can't come down. Have considered Neumann's proposition, but still cling to the hope of repeating the 'Rings' at Bayreuth next season." So my plan had failed for the time.

Passing over the chapters on "Rheingold" and "The Valkyre," "Siegfried," and "Götterdämmerung," we come to that on "Organization and Reorganization" preparatory to the great venture at Berlin. Anton Seidl had gone to the capital to drill the symphony orchestra. His report was enthusiastic. "The master will be more than satisfied with our orchestra," he said. What, then, was Neumann's surprise to receive a telegram, "Victoria Theatre impossible. Not enough orchestra room. Anton Seidl." The orchestra accommodation had already been enlarged for the seventy performers needed for the "Nibelungen," and now came this crushing telegram:

I took the next train back and found Seidl waiting anxiously for me at the depot. As we drove through town he gave me the details of the affair. On my arrival I took a seat in the front row, ordered the orchestra to assemble, and asked Seidl to lead off the first few bars. But directly there was a storm of protest. "Impossible." They tried their hoves, sounded a measure, and repeated their first declaration unanimously. From my post of observation I watched the conflict in silence, but presently the cause of the whole trouble dawned upon me and I realized why the violinists had no room to handle their hoves. "Gentlemen," I called out, "would you be so good as to lay aside your heavy wraps? I shall ask you all to take off your hats and your overcoats too." When they had grudgingly complied I made the further request that they lay aside their mufflers, furs, and scarfs, and asked Seidl as well to remove his fur coat. The orchestra received these suggestions with shouts of ironical laughter, but I was firm and very much in earnest, and continued my demands, saying, "I'll show you presently, gentlemen, what I mean. I shall prove to you just how much space seventy winter overcoats, furs, scarfs, umbrellas and sticks can occupy." So I ordered the attendants to stack them all on the orchestra chairs of the front rows in full view. The sight of the actual space they occupied was not without its effect on the men, yet still they were loath to comply with my request, and took their places with shrugs and doubtful smiles.

When all were finally seated I asked Seidl to go on with the rehearsal. He was directing the introduction to "The Valkyrie," and this time—lo, and behold, it went without a single hitch.

Wagner himself conducted a rehearsal at Berlin. Upon seeing Scaria's name in the cast he bitterly reproached Neumann for engaging such a lout and demanded that he be discharged. This Neumann refused to do without at least a hearing, and to this Wagner grudgingly assented. Scaria's triumph was complete. At the close of the scene

Wagner sprang from his seat, flew down the steps, and tore on to the stage at such a frantic pace that I could scarcely follow, shouting "Where is he? Where is Scaria? That was glorious. Man alive, where did you get that voice," and catching the artist about the neck, he hugged him enthusiastically, kissing him and saying, "But you did that well—that was well done."

Lieban, who took the part of Mime, had a similar honor:

The master threw his arms about him in an ecstasy of enthusiasm, and when he exclaimed, "You did that wonderfully—it was simply matchless," the young fellow fairly cried for joy and kissed his hand in reverence and gratitude.

Of Wagner's rehearsals we get many curious details. At one time there was an almost personal conflict between the composer and Mme. Materna:

In the third act we had a most exciting incident. In the duet between Siegfried and Brunhilda we had introduced an effect that Seidl had formerly arranged under Wagner's direction. The latter seemed not to have noticed, until Vogl called his attention to it as something unusual and disturbing. Immediately Wagner began to scold, denouncing the rendering of the scene. Mme. Materna, who felt that Vogl had criticised her conception of the rôle, and considered it an intrigue on his part against her as a rival of his wife, immediately hurst into tears. It was a tragi-comic scene. On the stage the weeping prima donna—in the box the angry author. My first efforts were directed toward soothing Wagner, which I did by reminding him that he himself had originated that passage and approved of its introduction years ago. Finally, when that tempest was laid, he in turn helped me restore the injured artist—patting her gently on the back and comforting her with honeyed words of praise.

The way in which Wagner handled the musicians was eminently tactful, and of this there are many illustrations:

His little admonition to the musicians was most characteristic and worthy to be noted by many an orchestra of this day. "Gentlemen," he said, "I beg of you not to take my 'fortissimo' too seriously. Where you see 'ff' make a 'fp' of it, and for 'piano' play 'pianissimo.' Remember how many of you there are down there, against the one poor single human throat up here alone on the stage."

The appearance of the Wagner operas in France was a matter demanding some diplomatic adjustment. National feeling ran high and public sentiment as it might perhaps be manifested toward a German opera was a factor to be reckoned with. The delicate mission of sounding French susceptibilities was intrusted to Prince Hohenlohe, and Neumann presently found a note from the prince making an appointment for the following morning:

After a troubled night I appeared at the embassy at the appointed hour, to be met with the glad announcement of his excellency, "I brought your topic up at the dinner by asking if there would be any political reasons for not giving a Wagner performance with German artists in the German language—adding, as you had told me, that the orchestra and the chorus were French and the scenic effects had all been ordered in the Paris ateliers."

President Grevy answered promptly: "On one condition. That the first box subscribed for at these performances shall be mine." "And the second," said Gambetta, "shall be for me"—and so, said the prince, it was taken up all about the table, each member of the Cabinet ordering a box.

After some further conference, the prince dismissed me with these words, "Now sign your contract and he sure to reserve a box for me."

When Neumann went to London he carried with him a letter of introduction from Prince Frederick of Germany to the Prince of Wales, and Neumann relied upon this to secure the royal attendance which he believed to be essential to his success:

When I appeared for my audience the prince received me with gracious urbanity, offered me a cigar, and asked me to explain my plans, saying he had just had a personal note from his brother-in-law, Prince Frederick. He assured me he was most keenly interested in the success of my venture and begged me to let him know if he could be of any assistance. I said I had come to request the honor of his presence and that of the princess at the first cycle of the Richard Wagner operas. "How many performances does this make that you want us to attend?" "There are four evenings in the cycle," I answered. Instantly he said, "That's impossible—utterly impossible"—and asking me to sit beside him at his desk, he opened a ledger and showed me, "You see for yourself. There are the dinners my wife and I have accepted for the season—and here are the dinners we give ourselves." The list reached well into July. Then he continued, "Now how can I possibly get four evenings free?" to which I answered: "In that case, your highness, the Richard Wagner Opera Company is doomed, as far as London is concerned." "You horrify me," he declared. And after he had run through again in sotto voce the letter from Prince Frederick, "I hope you'll do all you can for Neumann in his undertaking. I shall be eternally grateful to you if you will!"—he asked, "And now how will this look to my brother-in-law?" Then he added, "At what time do your performances begin?" "At eight o'clock." "There, you see! And our dinners begin at 7:30."

Then he made further minute inquiries as to the details of our arrangements, and finally dismissed me with the following words: "I'll have to write my brother-in-law about it. The first night, yes; but four nights in one week? Well, I'll see what we can do."

Not only four nights, but actually eleven, the prince and all his suite attended our performances of the "Nibelungen Ring."

The eventual end of Scaria seems almost to justify Wagner's initial objection to him. The tragedy occurred in London at the first performance of "The Valkyre":

Emil Scaria, who sang Wotan that night, ended his long narration in the second act in triumph. But when the same man came out for the Valkyre scene in the third act, timid and shy, creeping like a hunted soul, with drooping shoulders and a trailing lance; when we saw him make his entrance from the wrong side, Heinrich Vogl (Niemann was singing Sigmund that night) sprang forward as suddenly as I, exclaiming, "My Heavens! Scaria has gone mad."

Imagine our horror as Scaria all through that most important scene transposed his entire part, singing the high notes all an octave below, and the low notes an octave above the score; and casting timid and appealing glances into the wings meanwhile, as though some danger threatened him from there.

As I had witnessed the last tragic appearance of Alois Anders in Vienna, I could not rid my mind of the striking similarity, and the hideous impressions of that awful night I shall never forget.

Even Niemann, Seidl, and others remarked at the time that Scaria must have been quite insane.

The next day was an intermission. Scaria, who seemed to have no recollection of the occurrences of the night before, complained of a violent headache and asked for two extra piano rehearsals for his rôle of the Wanderer in "Siegfried" the following night. Siedl's report of these rehearsals was not exactly reassuring. He had utterly forgotten the text and the music—the whole rôle seemed absolutely new to him. Poor Scaria!

An amusing incident occurred at Basle that may be quoted as showing some of the lesser perplexities of stage management:

After Easter we went to Basle. Here a queer incident took place that might have been a death blow to the final scene of the first act in "Siegfried." In some unexplained way the anvil which Siegfried's sword is to shatter at the end of the scene came to pieces of itself in the course of the act. As I noticed this from my box, I hurried behind the scenes, ordered the stage darkened, and called for a clever scene-shifter, who used to play the hear for us. We dressed him again in the bear skin in which he had already appeared and sent him onto the darkened stage, telling him to crawl carefully over to the anvil and arrange it for the final stroke. The audience simply saw a vague shape grovelling about on the stage; it appeared for a moment and then vanished. They hardly noticed the passing incident, and the great final scene was thus carried out successfully.

One final incident must suffice as evidencing a quickness and aplomb on the part of the author that stood him in good stead in many a tight place. Before the "Ring" could be given at the court theatre in Stuttgart the permission of Minister von Gunzert must be obtained, and the worthy minister's intelligence was not at an elevation to correspond with his self-esteem:

While we were discussing some minor details, the mighty one himself strode into the office and we laid our plans before him. Von Gunzert at once now took the helm; and what von Wehl and I had already arranged, he utterly ignored. Things had to be explained from the beginning, and each small point obstinately fought out and discussed. Finally, after a most stormy debate he made a remark which gave me my cue: "I'll tell you what: You say you're going to give this thing in Karlsruhe next week? Save me a seat and I'll run down and hear your show. If I like it—she goes! If I don't—she don't!" he said, in his broad peasant dialect.

The naive self-confidence of this speech was amusing, so I calmly said, "Ah—then, your excellency, we may as well decide against it now on the spot." Quite taken aback, he asked, "And why now?" "Because you would then be saving yourself the public disgrace of having misjudged so great a work at the first hearing. If you should condemn it now without a hearing, your excellency's ignorance would be your best excuse."

Of the visit to Russia nothing can be said now. Extracts are indeed inadequate to give an idea of a fascinating book whose only fault, if it is a fault, is in a too rigid adherence to chronological fact and a reliance upon letters and documents in preference to personal narrative. The trip to Russia was the last great undertaking of the author on behalf of Richard Wagner and his art. Now, he tells us, he has renounced his soaring plans and has bent all his energies to the building up of the national opera at Prague. The annual musical festival which has been instituted there was inaugurated to carry out the original designs of the great Master of Bayreuth.

"Personal Recollections of Wagner," by Angelo Neumann. Translated from the fourth German edition by Edith Livermore, with portraits and one of Wagner's letters in facsimile. Published by Henry Holt & Co., New York. $2.50.

The bureau of engraving and printing at Washington has completed designs suggested by Postmaster-General Meyer for a new issue of United States postage stamps. It is expected that shipments to postmasters will commence some time in November. The new issue has been designed with the object of obtaining the greatest simplicity commensurate with artistic results. The profile has been taken in each instance, giving a bas-relief effect. All the stamps are of a similar design, containing a head in an ellipse, the only decoration being laurel leaves on either side of the ellipse. The lettering is in straight lines, at the top being "U. S. Postage" and at the bottom the words "Two Cents." The one-cent stamp contains the head of Franklin, while all the others will bear that of Washington, taken from busts by Houdon. The colors are the reds and blues of the early stamps. Director Ralph of the bureau of engraving and printing regards the new stamps as the most artistic ever issued by the government.

The first international road congress, now in session in Paris, was undoubtedly inspired by the thrifty impulses of the French people. They have invested several hundred million dollars in building macadam roads, of which they already have twenty-three thousand miles. Their problem is to find means by which the principal thus invested shall not be lost. A kind of road had developed that met, there and here, the traffic for which it was intended. Iron tires wore off just about enough dust from the coarser fragments of stone composing the road to replace that carried off by wind and rain. In this way the larger stones were cemented together and a smooth, impervious shell formed over the surface. But the pneumatic tire has submitted the road to a wholly different wear, and the world must think out anew its road-building problem. No one questions the possibility of automobile-proof roads, but all the ways of building them now known appear decidedly expensive.

The Bulgarian flag is so new that the Turkish gunners did not recognize it, and with blank shots turned back a steamer flying it. The official realization of events is often slow in coming. When John Quincy Adams sought to enter Berlin as American minister to Prussia he was held up at the gate and the officer of the guard had doubts about letting him in, never having heard of the United States of America. A sergeant more intelligent than his superior knew all about the United States, and on his intercession Adams was allowed to proceed. The Turkish gunners have reasons of their own for official ignorance, which the Prussian lieutenant could not plead.

Armenia is a country of strong contrasts, of opposite extremes, of heat and cold, light and shade, drought and moisture, and contains more dark mysteries awaiting the solution of the future naturalist, geographer, philologist, and historian than Central Africa, Central America, and Hindostan, taken together. The ethnologist is still in doubt to what branch of the great European family the Armenian people belong; the philologist has not yet classified their language, the antiquarian knows next to nothing of their early history.

NONE TO PRAY FOR THEM.

By Anne Walsingham.

The house, its projecting angles shorn away to make it fit into the flat-faced row that had been built up to it, was one of the few old South Park houses remaining that dated from the days when San Francisco's inner circle of society centred in the Mission.

The exterior drew attention to itself merely from the commonplaceness of its type—dingy brown paint, a single bow-window jutting out in front, a scraggy growth of grimy fuchsia trying to cover its ugliness, thereby making it more so. The interior, however, more than redeemed the dingy commonplaceness of the outside. Nothing of the decoration of the walls and furniture had been changed, apparently, since its first occupancy, so when the agent told me I might rent it furnished just as it stood if I preferred I closed the bargain on the spot for the sake of the old mahogany furniture that looked as if it must have been brought around the Horn in the early fifties.

To satisfy my curiosity as to the history of the owner, the agent could tell me nothing beyond the fact that the owner had died recently and that the estate was held in trust for two minor heirs.

The quiet of this old-fashioned neighborhood suited my father's shaken nerves and I felt I had discovered in this spot a haven for his few remaining years safe from the intrusion of all but the few old friends still cherished in his decline.

The late occupant having lived and died here alone with apparently no relatives to dismantle the house for its new occupants, there were many self-revealing still left about the rooms that suggested the gentle spirit of an old lady who had revelled in the graceful little creature comforts of fine china, beautiful nappery, some rare old books, mostly of a devotional character, and a number of good old French prints. Among the few portraits that hung on the walls of the dining-room I chose the one who best fitted my mental picture of the late owner of the house, a sweet-faced, middle-aged woman with delicate features and a certain stamp of quality, until I felt I had almost known the lonely Mme. de Tours.

During the long hours of listening for the tinkle of my dear invalid's bell or brooding over the wrench of the coming parting with my father, I had unlimited time for reverie and rummaging in the old house. The little hall-room where trunks and boxes had been stored until the minor heirs should claim them had been a private chapel. The ceiling running up through two floors ended in a dome-shaped skylight; the altar, crowded out of its place at the end of the room by the piles of trunks, was pushed against the wall, and here, secure from the eye of the servants, I did not scruple to ransack everything I found, feeling that whatever diversion it brought me was well covered by my cash rental.

As a consequence, when I dragged up to the light from beneath a pile of old curtains a small portrait admirably painted, I did not hesitate to claim it for my own by the divine right of discovery. Why, I wondered, had this beautiful portrait been thrown into a rubbish pile? Nothing in the dining-room could touch it for either subject or work. Something of the dreamy-eyed beauty of the young Raphael was suggested in the broad forehead, rich coloring, the mouth sensitive almost to weakness, and the Seminarian's cap.

Nothing I could learn from the neighbors about the family of de Tours threw any light upon my portrait. Mme. de Tours, I was told, had continued to live here after her husband's death until she died; the daughter who had married her cousin had gone back to France to live, had also died, leaving two minor heirs to the diminished de Tours estate. Who, then, could be this dreamy-eyed youth, I still wondered, and why had he been thrown into the rubbish heap?

Later, coming across a packet of old letters, I brazenly opened them and sat hours poring over their quaint, cramped French. This was my solution to the mystery of the portrait. Louis, I found, had been the pride and hope of the house of de Tours, an erratic and probably somewhat spoiled boy. Louis upon reaching his majority had declined to enter the diplomatic service, as had been intended, and had chosen instead to take the holy orders of the priesthood. And later Louis, the dreamy-eyed, exquisite Louis, had met and succumbed to the fascinations of "the beautiful and unscrupulous Marie Barreau."

Whereupon, it seemed, Louis had been summarily turned out of the priesthood, his name forbidden to be mentioned in the family, and his picture torn from the wall and thrown into a rubbish heap.

In vain I searched for more light on the subject of Louis's picturesque career, going so far as to force locks when necessary to further my search—what mattered it to the two minor heirs if I knew the whole story of Louis? Nothing more, however, seemed known definitely. A letter I found in the pocket of an old brocade gown from Madeline de Tours a short time before her death and dated from Paris opined that poor Louis had either changed his name or killed himself and requested that her children be kept in ignorance of his existence.

My poor Louis! Looking at him where I had hung him over my desk, I wondered which of the alternatives he had chosen. I rather gloried in his frank declaration for his Marie, who, unfortunately, seemed to be also some one's else Marie too, inasmuch as she was already a married woman. But had he gone with her really? I often wondered when the deep eyes pleaded for him from his portrait.

Thereafter whenever I chanced into a Catholic church and came to the passage in the prayer-book—"for such as die in war or have none to pray for them," I offered a prayer for the repose of the soul of the outcast Louis, with the eyes that seemed to appeal for my sympathy.

One foggy afternoon in the late autumn I turned from the throng of busy shoppers along Kearny Street up Stockton and into Bush to the little church of Notre Dame des Victoires. It was the Feast of All Souls, and the altars, dimly lighted, were covered in the French fashion with black tapestry bearing the skull and crossbones to recall the worldly-minded to the inevitable end of all things. As it was late in the afternoon I found myself the sole occupant of the church. Slipping down the side aisle and dropping upon my knees, I sought first for strength and consolation in the approaching loss of my dear father. Then as I turned the pages of my prayer-book the old story in all its tragic pathos swept upon me in a great wave of pity for the hot youth and made love of Louis and Marie, and still I prayed my little prayer for the repose of the souls "of such as die in war or have none to pray for them."

Suddenly as I knelt, the door behind me, a side door, opened and I saw the figure of a tall priest bearing a pyx making a great clatter in the silent church as he took his place two pews behind me. Not wanting to be rude, I waited an instant until his head should be bowed in prayer before turning to see if it were our beloved père who had entered. To my surprise, the church was still empty. There was no one in the second pew behind me. I rose to leave the church, but as I reached the second pew an impulse to sit there controlled me. As I took my seat I muttered a hasty "Pardon" when I saw that after all the priest was there. As he turned to me the broad forehead, the deep, dreamy eyes, the rich coloring, and Seminarian's cap were just my picture that hung above his desk. "Louis" sprang to my lips, but I know I did not articulate the word. The eyes smiled their recognition. It seemed a perfectly natural thing that Louis should be in the church beside me. My blood did not run cold. Neither was I surprised when, the next instant, he was not there. Without any of the shivers supposed to accompany a visitation of the supernatural, I all at once found myself saying over and over, as if reciting the litany, "The inner underneath one—inner, inner, underneath—the inner underneath."

Upon reaching home I found my father had died unexpectedly and the following weeks I was plunged into a grief so deep as to crowd every other thought from my mind, until looking through his strong box of papers.

Again the words "The inner underneath one" came to me. I stopped to recall the impressions of my All Souls' evening, taking out the last papers idly. "Inner, underneath" rang through me. Inner what? I wondered. Touching the bottom of the box with my finger tips "underneath" repeated itself so insistently I looked underneath the box. In doing so I shook it a trifle and heard something shake from side to side. "Inner." I seemed to feel rather than hear. Pressing hard upon the bottom, a false plate gave way and revealed a letter addressed to me in my father's own hand.

This I took up feeling that it would explain his strange will that left the bulk of his property to his brother and gave me a mere fourth, but to provide against its being read by any one but myself he had secreted it in this way, knowing that his paralysis might extend to his hands and prevent his writing it later.

"Because ignorance is not innocence," the letter ran, "it is right for you to know the whole truth when you are old enough and strong enough to bear it, that you may understand the quality of your temperament."

My eyes eagerly devoured the truth from the pages. Poor mother! With no feeling of resentment, nothing but pity, born, perhaps, of an answering chord in my own heart, I read on until with horror I read the name of Louis de Tours, Seminarian. "Beautiful and unscrupulous" rang again in my ears as they had fallen from the letters of Mme. de Tours and I was listening to the characterization of my own mother, whom my childish ignorance had hallowed as a saint.

The devoted father I had loved all my life was now doubly lost to me. He had never been my father, but to save my erring mother had taken me for his own daughter.

Every act and impulse of my life have since that day been shadowed by my cruel illumination. When I walk along the street and catch a glimpse of myself in a show window my carriage instantly sbrinks as I realize I am the last person in the world to hold a high head, that I have no name, no place, no right to be in the world at all.

People call me a fortunate young woman, for although inheriting only a fourth of my father's estate, the society columns of the papers have heralded my beauty and wealth as my portion. Men have professed to love me for the fatal beauty of poor Marie Barreau. But between me and every natural pleasure looms the portrait I can not now but choose to keep of Louis de Tours.

Those of you who have known the beautiful little church of Notre Dame des Victoires before the great disaster, the sweet sanctity of its soft lights and dim altars, know too, for you can not evade him, the tall figure of Louis de Tours. Sitting within the chancel during the service of the mass, kneeling at the shrine of the Virgin, emerging from the confessional, or standing in the choir, have you not seen the tall figure with the broad brow?

At the solemn service of the mass on All Souls' Day have you not seen the young priest in the Seminarian's cap standing beside the priest as he offers the sacrifice for "such as die in war or have none to pray for them?"

You have seen him. You thought you were looking at a strange priest assisting as deacon, no doubt, and because you were intent on your prayers you did not count it strange that you saw him one moment and the next he was gone, neither did you think it strange nor uncanny the times you have entered the church on week days and thought the church was empty until you saw a tall figure at the other end, and when you went down to the altar to light a taper at the shrine found no one there after all. Every one of you who knew the church have seen him and thought nothing of it. But I, because I am the daughter of the outcast Louis de Tours and "the beautiful and unscrupulous Marie Barreau," see him more plainly than you. He comes and sits beside me and his deep eyes plead for sympathy and succor when I pray for "such as die in war or have none to pray for them." In bustling crowds the brushing of the Seminarian's robe against my own admonishes me that I am not alone; over the heads of kneeling worshippers or holiday throngs in the theatre the Seminarian's cap arises above all else.

It is for this reason that I have renounced the world and all the world holds dear, my fortune, my youth, and what people have chosen to call beauty, to spend my life in intercessory prayer for all "who die in war or have none to pray for them" in order that the restless spirit of the unhappy Louis de Tours may at last sleep in peace with his fathers.

Berlin is the fourth German city to establish a permanent ice skating rink. It is said that over 1000 people can skate there at one time without crowding. The admission is 18 cents and the rink is open from nine in the morning till twelve at night.

The English Lobby.

Meantime I beg my readers not to run away with the idea that this Parliament, with all its seriousness, does not know how to amuse itself (writes T. P. O'Connor in M. A. P.). Within the vast spaces of that great building at Westminster there are several worlds; each day and each story has its own separate and independent life. I have told how, in the earlier hours of the day, there is the vast world of politicians who are interested in the grand committees. There is another and even a vaster world—that of the men who are interested in what is called private bill legislation, the legislation which is necessary if a new railroad or a new tramway company or a new canal has to be brought into being. This is a great world in itself. Its chief figures are, of course, the great barristers who practice at what is called the parliamentary bar. These are the giants of the profession. No men earn such gigantic incomes—even at the bar. You hear of men having as much as £20,000 a year to their credit, and yet these men, as a rule, work only four months in the year. You know, of course, that no member of Parliament can practice at the parliamentary bar; the reason, of course, is that he may have to be a member of one of the parliamentary committees which try the case, and that thus he may be put in the irreconcilable positions of judge and advocate. Many parliamentary barristers have had to give up a splendid income when they decided to enter Parliament. Sir William Harcourt told me that he was earning £15,000 a year when he entered Parliament; "and, perhaps," he added, "I was a d—d fool to have done so." Mr. Cripps, who was in the last Parliament, used to make £20,000 a year, but he gave it willingly up to be a member of the House of Commons, but he has been fortunate enough since to go into another kind of practice—as arbitrator very often—and now is as rich as ever. Lord Robert Cecil has lost considerably by entering Parliament.

In addition to the great barristers, you see the solicitors—who swarm about the place. And there is a third—who sometimes are the same as the solicitors—namely, what are called parliamentary agents—that is to say they whose business it is to influence members of Parliament in favor of their bills. This is a very lucrative branch of the legal profession, because, of course, as a rule gigantic interests are involved in these parliamentary conflicts, often millions of money.

Rupert Lorraine, a new writer whose name has a suggestion of fiction in it, has won the hundred-guinea prize for a first novel offered by Fisher-Unwin, the London publisher. The story, entitled "The Woman and the Sword," will be published at once.

LA MARQUISE

TURKISH CIGARETTES

"FINEST MADE"

10 for 25 Cents

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

By Sidney G. P. Coryn.

The attention now being given to the works of Ouida, and especially to those not hitherto published, shows the extent to which we have overtaken a humanitarianism that found little enough recognition in its own day. It takes a long time to fashion the bay leaves into a crown, and the crown must usually be placed upon a grave instead of upon a living head. It is a little saddening to think that Ouida can not know what is being said of "Helianthus." No review ever read by her spoke, as now speaks the New York Tribune, of the "humanitarian enthusiasm which was part of her character from the very beginning." Never within her hearing was she praised for gathering up the "emotions of a lifetime and hurling them against the powers that dwell in luxury, waxing fat on oppression." She probably never read a reference to her "lovable personality," to her "true nobility of feeling," to her "tender sympathy," or her "complete good faith." The critics of twenty years ago would hardly read her books, much less praise them, and yet she wrote nothing wholly free from the beautiful characteristics of "Helianthus."

The Guest of Quesnay, by Booth Tarkington. Published by the McClure Company, New York; $1.50.

This successful story combines the virtues of irreproachable style, fine dialogue, and a plot that is as nearly novel as we have a right to expect in the twentieth century.

The hero is Larrabee Harman, who by his debauchery has well nigh broken the heart of his beautiful young wife and brought himself within sight of the physical and mental abyss from which there is no return. We are introduced to Larrabee and his unspeakable female companion in the outskirts of Paris and we witness the automobile accident from which Larrabee is dragged even less dreadfully under the disfigurement of blood and wounds than behind the mask that his infamous life had created.

Then the scene changes to provincial France and the hotel of Les Trois Pigeons. There is the inimitable maitre d'hôtel Amédée, and Mme. Boissard, and the strange Professor Kerdec and his still stranger pupil, Saffren, who has lost his memory and must gradually reacquire a knowledge of men and things. And among the guests at the neighboring chateau is the beautiful Mme. d'Armand, and the similarity of her name to that of Harmon will not escape the attentive reader. Indeed the dénouement contains no surprise. The secret of the plot is a stage secret only, and it is all the more charming for its gentle transparency. Without any pretensions to profundity, without psychological analysis, it is a charming and spontaneous romance and one of the books that it is good to own.

In and Around the Isle of Purbeck, by Ida Woodward. Published by the John Lane Company, New York; $6.

That so large and sumptuous a volume should be written, and interestingly written, of a piece of ground ten miles by twelve miles wide in extent is testimony to the historical and scenic importance of the place. The Isle of Purbeck is situated at the southeast corner of Dorset. To the north is the River Frome and the English Channel lies to the east. It contains Roman remains, while on Baden Hill was fought the great battle between the British and the Saxons when King Arthur led his people in person and when, says Nennius, "nine hundred and forty fell by his hand alone, no one but the Lord affording him assistance." A great fight, truly.

Of the records in this remarkable book the reader must be left to his own estimate. Certainly nothing seems to have escaped the author, who shows evidence not only of indefatigable research, but of an enviable literary charm and historical lucidity. But the illustrations are of a kind to awaken not only admiration, but enthusiasm. They are thirty-six in number, the work of John W. G. Bond, and they have all the charm of the original water-color sketches. The volume as a whole is a valuable and impressive addition to the local history of England.

Wulnoth, the Wanderer, by H. Escott-Inman. Published by A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago.

The author has made good use of the old Viking myths. He tells a story saturated with the atmosphere of the early days and with the sheer joy of life and battle, of the days before death became terrible. Wulnoth comes as a child to the hall of Hardacnut and rescues the little maid Edgiva from the sea and also from the great bear that threatens to make a meal of the little maiden. And, by the way, is not this same story told of Hereward the Wake? but Hereward had his great sword and Wulnoth only his knife, but they suffered alike from the jealousy of those who grudged such honors to a boy. Wulnoth is made Lord of Cantua by King Alfred himself and Lady Edgiva teaches him to read the thorn-crowned rune cross of the White Christ. Hardly a page of the story without its vigorous incident until the last great battle called the Field of the Great Slaughter "so vast was the number who lay there dead."

The author has caught the spirit of the times with great success. It is not easy to see how much of his work is imaginative or how much he has gathered from the old sagas, and that the line is invisible is a tribute to his skill. The book is finely printed, the frontispiece is distinctive, and the marginal tinted decorations are in good taste.

Tables of Stone, by Harold Begbie. Published by Doubleday, Page & Co., New York; $1.50.

John Diver, country born and bred, comes to London to earn his living and secures a sort of standing in society through the eccentricities of his dress and the direct force of an undeveloped character. The situation is full of admirable possibilities, but the author evades them all. John Diver with opportunity and polish becomes a sort of genius, a reformer in political affairs, and a writer of some distinction. But of the finer human qualities, of love and tenderness, he seems to be absolutely devoid, and we find to our disappointment that a character that we were prepared to admire is slowly becoming abhorrent and repulsive. Worst of all, we have a suspicion that the author is quite unaware of the Frankenstein monster that he is creating or that John Diver's treatment of his wife would shame an Apache Indian. The sensitive reader will lay down "Tables of Stone" with a feeling of impotent indignation.

The Story of New England Whalers, by John R. Spears. Published by the Macmillan Company, New York; $1.50.

Everything worth knowing about a vanishing industry is to be found in these pages and we rise from them with an increased admiration for the whaler and for the whale. The book seems to contain a great deal that has never been published before. Who knows, for instance, that the whale in swimming leaves a sort of oil ribbon behind him on the surface of the water and that this ribbon is sensitive to anything that crosses it? Perhaps it isn't true, but it is at least ben trovato. Who knows anything of the astonishing powers of communication possessed by whales, of their mutual helpfulness, and of their almost human affection? The book is written not from the standpoint of the scientist, but of the practical whaler, and it deals with the things that the whaler has seen and with the common beliefs of the seafolk. Nothing more readable of its kind has been written.

Insect Stories, by Vernon L. Kellogg. Published by Henry Holt & Co., New York; $1.50.

Professor Kellogg has placed the cause of popular science under great obligations. Very few teachers are able to cover so wide a range as is marked by his "Darwinism Today" upon the one hand and the present volume upon the other, and to do it with such uniform strength. "Insect Stories" is intended for young people, and those who are so fortunate as to read it can hardly fail to be launched on the stream of interest, observation, and research. The author gives us thirteen separate stories dealing with the familiar forms of insect life in California. His companion in the field is "Mary," and Mary seems to be just as intelligently inquisitive as he is himself. No creeping thing comes amiss to them and no form of life is too lowly to be irradiated by assimilable knowledge.

The Children's Longfellow. Published by the Houghton-Mifflin Company, Boston and New York; $3.

There is no reason why this should be called the Children's Longfellow, except that it contains the poems especially popular with children, and it seems almost a pity to use a term of limitation that is unneeded. The volume contains eighty poems and we are glad to see that, with three exceptions, none of them is abbreviated. The volume has eight full-page illustrations in color by popular artists; decorated title-page, sub-titles, and headings in color and is handsomely printed and bound. Nothing could be better as a present to child or adult.

The Leaven of Love, by Clara Louise Burnham. Published by the Houghton-Mifflin Company, Boston and New York; $1.50.

Violet Chamberlain quarrels with her husband because of his attentions to Belle Armitage. She leaves him and comes to California and by a curious coincidence both her husband and his charmer do the same thing unknown to each other. The plot is not of the hair-raising variety, but the story is redeemed from the commonplace by the character of Sibyl, whose philosophy is a combination of mental healing and the "new thought," which becomes very tolerable in the person of a lovely girl.

Cousin Cinderella, by Mrs. Everard Cotes. Published by the Macmillan Company, New York.

This book should be as successful as "An American Girl in London." It describes how Graham and Mary Trent, brother and sister, come from Canada to make the acquaintance of London. As a romance the story is distinctly clever, but it will be valued more for its humorous and often caustic comments upon English society, as viewed by two clever Canadians whose sympathies would naturally be for their transatlantic kin. The sketch strikes us as being implacably true upon both its Canadian and English sides, and then, too, there is an American girl who furnishes some interesting situations and completes the international triangle. Mrs. Cotes has a happy facility in drawing sketches of national types, and she is always convincing because she has neither prejudice nor malice.

The Wooing of Calvin Parks, by Laura E. Richards. Published by Dana Estes & Co., Boston; $1.25.

Mrs. Richards is perhaps more happy in her tales for young people. "The Wooing of Calvin Parks," strong as it is, seems to lack continuity, as though a number of episodes had been forced into unwilling alliance. But the episodes themselves are a capital rendering of New England life. Calvin Parks, the itinerant candy seller, is a fine piece of work, the quarrelsome twins are amusing, and Mary Sands is fresh and lovable. We could willingly have spared Mrs. Marlin and her repulsive daughter, but it takes all sorts to make a world, even in New England.

Cape Cod, by Henry D. Thoreau. Published by Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York; $2.

This is something more than the reissue of a classic. Mr. Clifton Johnson, who furnishes the introduction and the illustrations, imitated Thoreau by taking a leisurely tramp through the length of Cape Cod, noting every salient feature and recording his journey with a skillfully used camera. The result is a fine book with a pleasant introduction that might have been longer and thirty-three full-page illustrations well selected and of unusual interest. The volume will commend itself to Thoreau lovers.

New Publications.

Harper & Brothers, New York, have published "The Bachelor and the Baby," an amusing little sketch by Margaret Cameron.

The whole story of the American reaper has been told by Herbert N. Casson in "The Romance of the Reaper," published by Doubleday, Page & Co., New York. The author certainly justifies the use of the word "romance," for a more astonishing mechanical and commercial success has never been recorded. Mr. Casson is to be congratulated both upon his subject and his skill in handling it.

"How to Cook Meat and Poultry," by Olive Green, has been published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York, in the Homemaker Series, which now numbers six volumes of practical domestic value. The price is $1.

Duffield & Co., New York, have published a two-volume edition of "Pride and Prejudice," by Jane Austen. The issue is tastefully prepared and the colored illustrations by A. Wallis-Mills are an attractive feature of the volumes. Price, $2.50; postage, 15 cents.

A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago, have published "The Washington Year Book," compiled by Wallace Rice. The selections from Washington's speeches and writings are admirably made, while the marginal illustrations in tone and the typography are pleasing and artistic.

In "Wilderness Homes" the author, Oliver Kemp, assumes the rôle of guide, philosopher, and friend to those who want to build a forest camp and to build it themselves. It is a workmanlike book written for the amateur and all the instructions are within his compass. Enthusiasm and encouragement are skillfully instilled by illustrations and plans. The book is published by the Outing Publishing Company, New York, and the price is $1.25.

"Founders and Rulers of United Israel," by Charles Foster Kent, Ph. D., is the second of a series of six volumes to be known collectively as the "Historical Bible." Intended mainly for colleges and for theological students, it is an attempt to select the really vital parts of the Bible, to arrange them in chronological order, and to interpret their essential teachings into the thought and language of today. The series is published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

The "First Folio" Shakespeare.

"Two Gentlemen of Verona," "Taming of the Shrew," and "Coriolanus" have now been added to this edition that will be welcomed as a gain for Shakespearean students and a treasure for the antiquarian. The edition reproduces the First Folio text of 1623 and gives us Shakespeare in the original spelling and punctuation and free from the changes of three centuries, which, however, are indicated by abundant notes. The publishers are Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York.

Just a little on CHEESE is delicious. It adds zest to Welsh Rarebits, Macaroni with Cheese, Cheese Toast, Rice with Cheese and all Chafing Dish Cooking.

LEA & PERRINS

SAUCE

THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

More dishes can be perfectly seasoned with Lea & Perrins Sauce than with any other relish. For Seventy Years it has given satisfaction throughout the world.

LEA & PERRINS SIGNATURE ON WRAPPER AND LABEL

John Duncan's Sons, Agents, New York

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.

Dustin Farnum and the supporting company in "The Squaw Man" are completing the second week of a successful engagement at the Van Ness Theatre. Next week the character comedy, "Checkers," will be presented with substantially the complete cast and stage settings seen in New York. There has never been another company in the play, and the manager is still the same as on the opening night, five years ago. Although "Checkers" is often spoken of as a "racing" play because it contains a strong scene of track interest, it has many other equally attractive features, including a charming love story and innumerable dainty touches of light comedy. It has been played during eighteen different engagements in New York and will go back for another visit this season. Among the favorites in the company who will be remembered are Hans Robert and Dave Braham.

At the Valencia Theatre "Graustark" is just closing a profitable run and will be seen for the last times Saturday afternoon and evening. Sunday, at the matinee performance, "His Excellency, the Governor," will have its first presentation in San Francisco. The comedy is from the pen of Captain R. H. Marshall, author of "A Royal Family" and several other successful plays, and is already known as one of his greatest hits. It tells a story of interest and gives many opportunities for effective dramatic action. Robert Warwick as the governor will have a capital part, and Willette Kershaw as Stella de Gex will add to her list of pleasing character studies. Commencing with this play, Herman Heller will take charge of the orchestra and with an organization of selected musicians will make the music incidental to every production entirely worthy.

Ferris Hartman is in the last nights of his engagement at the Princess Theatre and is doing well in "The Office Boy," though its opportunities are far from magnificent. Arthur Cunningham, Sarah Edwards, and the Princess chorus are giving him loyal and winning assistance.

Next week Kolb and Dill, supported by their big Eastern company, open in "Playing the Ponies." It is a piece that is said to have made a success in New York, and it is planned to give room for the dialect humor and eccentric character specialties of the two comedians. Its story is coherent, if improbable, and its situations of the usual musical comedy order. Among its attractions are a number of songs which have developed into popular numbers in the East, such as "The Lily and the Bee," "The Queen of the Boulevard," "Dreamland," "Summer Girls," and "It Looks Like a Big Night Tonight." The company supporting the principals, C. William Kolb and Max M. Dill, includes Charles Sinclair, Lucy Monroe, Albert E. Duncan, Billy S. Clifford, Carlton Chase, Maud Lambert, Leola Maye, and Tom Clark.

Five new acts will be presented in the bill of the week at the Orpheum beginning Sunday afternoon, in addition to the holdovers from this week. Hope Booth will present a playlet called "The Little Blonde Lady," written by George M. Cohan, and have the assistance of Charles Deland and Frank Dixon. Miss Booth in private life is Mrs. Wolf, and her husband is a dramatic writer on the New York Telegraph. Next in interest will be Valadon, recently the associate of the famous Kellar and for five years a sensation at the Egyptian Hall, London, where he produced a series of illusions that startled the entire community. Lewis and Green, a popular team of comedians, will present a sketch entitled "Engaging a Cook," which is full of witty dialect and humorous complications. McPhee and Hill, skillful aerialists, will present an original act called "The Clown and the Tired Man." Black and Jones, colored eccentric dancing comedians, will contribute to the programme. Next week will be the last of Redford and Winchester, La Petite Mignon, and of Lyster Chambers and Clara Knott in the thrilling sketch, "The Operator."

"The Clansman," the sensational Southern play which has stirred up adverse criticism in some of the Eastern cities, follows "Checkers" at the Van Ness Theatre.

The Valencia Theatre management has succeeded in making arrangements for a production of "Peter Pan" during the coming holidays.

Arthur Cunningham, who has won the lasting regard of the theatre-going public as a comedian and a singer during his long and successful connection with the old Tivoli Opera House and the new Princess Theatre companies, will shortly begin a career as a star in the Irish plays once made famous by Joseph Murphy. Mr. Cunningham is an actor of studious character and purpose, and he never fails to present a forceful and consistent impersonation of the character allotted to him, even in the hazy atmosphere of musical comedy. He is a master of the art of make-up, and always happy in his portraiture. Best of all his equipment, however, is a baritone voice of power and resonance, which he uses with skill and judgment. The friends who will wish him unbounded success in his venture may be reckoned by hundreds.

Prizes are given at the Valencia Theatre Sunday matinees for criticisms of the play. Blank forms are distributed among the audience and then collected. Last Sunday a prize of $25, one of $15, another of $10, and ten of $5 were awarded fortunate writers. "His Excellency, the Governor," will be open for criticism at next Sunday's matinee.

LITERARY NOTES.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

Paul Bourget pronounces Edith Wharton's "The House of Mirth" the greatest novel America has produced.

Professor Charles Waldstein's work on "Herculaneum" has just been published by the Macmillan Company. Few archaeologists have attained to the rank of this learned New Yorker, whose occupation of the Slade professorship at Cambridge University has not been unworthy its former incumbent, John Ruskin. He points out that the literary and art treasures of Herculaneum must be of a vastly higher quality and in a better state of preservation than those hitherto discovered in the ruins of Pompeii. Unfortunately, the work is just now retarded by the attitude assumed by the Italian government.

The British government grants $500 a year each to John Davidson and William Watson in consideration of the merit of their poetical works. To Henry Austin Dobson is granted $1250 per annum "in recognition of his distinguished literary attainments and of his eminence as a poet." Alfred Austin receives as poet laureate $1000 a year.

In his latest book, "First and Last Things: a Confession of Faith and a Rule of Life," H. G. Wells will set forth in autobiographical form the convictions and ideas out of which have grown his series of social studies, his imaginative romances of other worlds, and his realistic novels about his fellow Britons. It will be published by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

Israel Zangwill has written a new play, "The Melting Pot," and the heroine speaks a line concerning the sanctity of marriage: "We are not native-born Americans; we hold our troth eternal." President Roosevelt, disliking the sentiment, suggests to Mr. Zangwill that he change the line so as to read: "Not being members of the 'Four Hundred,' we hold even our troth sacred." The President's line approximates the truth more nearly than Mr. Zangwill's, yet there are members of the "400," doubtless, who are faithful to marriage vows (observes the Springfield Republican). It is hard to make satire mathematically precise in its literary form.

Gustave Simon, the literary executor of Victor Hugo, says that the plan of "Les Misérables" was begun in 1829; that the writing of the book began in 1845 and was continued until 1848, when the revolution interrupted the work; twelve years later the manuscript was taken up and completed. Two months were occupied in the preface.

The fifty-eighth anniversary of the death of Balzac was celebrated by visits to the newly opened Balzac Museum at Passy, to his house at Jardies (afterward occupied by Gambetta), and to his grave in the cemetery of Père la Chaise, where a number of addresses were made.

Beyond the fact that she became the wife of William Godwin, and the mother of the wife of Shelley, little is remembered, except by the student, of Mary Wollstonecraft. Yet she was a woman of no little note in her day, and as the author of a vigorous pamphlet on "The Rights of Woman" she may fairly be said to be the ancestor of the suffrage movement that has been recently stirring English society and English politics into a fever heat of argument by tongue and opposition by physical force. Mary Wollstonecraft was many other things, and as a radical of the radicals she carried her theories into a practice that usually daunts even the bravest theorist. Falling in love with an American named Gilbert Imlay, she lived with him without the religious or legal bond that society holds essential, and she eventually paid the penalty of her over-confidence in man through his neglect and desertion. To the world, however, her sufferings seem worth the while in the series of letters that she wrote to him. They have become a classic in their kind, and although many editions have appeared from time to time since their first public appearance, they are too little known. A reprint in a small volume is now issued by the J. B. Lippincott Company.

Minetti String Quartet Concert.

The Minetti String Quartet announces its first concert of the series, to take place on Friday afternoon, November 6, at 3:15, at Century Hall, corner of Sutter and Franklin Streets, with this programme: Haydn, String Quartet in D major, op. 20, No. 4; Bach, Duo for two Violins and Piano accompaniment; Beethoven, String Quartet in F major, op. 18. Assisted by Mrs. Marie Stoney, pianiste. Tickets, $1, including reserved seat; admission, 50 cents. This is the sixteenth season of the organization.

For the Children's Hospital.

A clever and very successful innovation in charity work, which has met with the greatest approval in many Eastern cities, and in Los Angeles and Seattle on the Western coast, will be introduced by the Children's Hospital and Training School for Nurses on election day. The idea is called "Tag Day," and means the tagging with official badges or tags of men, women, and children, each separate tag calling for the payment of 10 cents. Several hundred of our prominent matrons and young girls will help in the good work. The entire city will be districted and the tagging will begin at the various electoral booths at seven o'clock in the morning. "Tag Day," with its modest appeal for so excellent a cause as the construction of a much-needed new hospital on the old site, should prove an unqualified success. The committee comprises Mrs. Helen Hecht, chairman; Mrs. Henry Payot, Mrs. L. N. Walter, Mrs. Botkin, Mrs. Bertha G. Lienthal, Mrs. M. H. de Young, Mrs. Silas Palmer, Mrs. J. W. Kerr, and Mrs. R. V. Watt.

Blanche Arral Positively Sings Sunday.

The long-postponed and anxiously awaited concert of Blanche Arral, the Belgian prima donna of whom Manager Greenbaum expects so much, will positively be given this coming Sunday afternoon, October 25, at the Van Ness Theatre.

The programme originally promised, with the five grand opera arias with orchestral accompaniment, will be faithfully carried out, and in addition the artist will sing some beautiful numbers with piano accompaniment, and Bishop's "Oh! Hear the Gentle Lark," with flute obligato, played by Louis Neubauer.

The seats are on sale at both of the Sherman, Clay & Co. stores, and the box office of the theatre will be open Sunday at 10 a. m. Phone orders will be carefully attended to.

A Prison Commission Benefit.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the California Prison Commission, with the object of securing funds to be used in furnishing homes for released prisoners, has made arrangement for a benefit performance at the Valencia Theatre on the evening of November 9. For the occasion the Valencia Theatre Stock Company, headed by Robert Warwick, will present the comedy, "Glittering Gloria," and an entertaining presentation of the play may confidently be anticipated. Tickets will be $2, and they may be obtained of the officers and directors of the auxiliary. Mrs. I. Lowenberg, 2196 Jackson Street, is president of the organization; Mrs. A. P. Woodward, 312 Haight Street, recording secretary; Mrs. California Newton, 2008 Vallejo Street, treasurer.

The French doll, hitherto supreme, is being dethroned, according to the National Society of Manufacturers. In the dressing of dolls German makers can not compete. They lack the Parisian knack and chic. But France no longer possesses a single firm for the manufacture of dolls' heads in china. There were five or six left a few years ago. Now there is none, whereas at least ten are flourishing in Germany. Nowadays, accordingly, all French dolls have Parisian clothes, but German faces.

We Publish Today a New Viking Romance

WULNOTH the WANDERER

A Story of King Alfred of England

READERS who enjoyed "The Thrall of Leif the Lucky" and "The Ward of King Canute," and who remember the beautiful form in which those books were issued, will appreciate this lusty tale of love and warrings.

By H. ESCOTT-INMAN

Illustrated and Decorated by THE KINNEYS

AT ALL BOOKSTORES

A. C. McCLURG & CO., PUBLISHERS

It has been our constant endeavor for more than twenty years to establish and sustain a reputation for making the best glasses.

HIRSCH & KAISER

218 Post St.

Opticians

JUST A BOOK STORE

Robertson's

1539 Van Ness Ave.

NEAR PINE

"Next to the White House"

THE LATEST STYLES IN

Choice Woolens

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

108-110 Sutter St.

French Bank Bldg.

H. J. COOPER

Expert Accountant and Auditor

705 KAMM BUILDING

717 MARKET STREET

Phone Douglas 1342 San Francisco

Byron
Hot Springs

The waters cure rheumatism—the environment is perfect—the hotel comfortable and supplied with an unexcelled table. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, ground floor, James Flood Building; Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market St., or address hotel.

Our reputation is back of every bottle we sell

Old Gilt Edge
Whiskey

Rye or Bourbon

ROMANTIC "GRAUSTARK."

By Josephine Hart Phelps.

"Graustark" belongs to the order of popular novels, which is to say that it is popular mush. But in this workaday world there are so many people toiling at uncongenial jobs for a living that they experience a certain luxury of sensation in escaping, through the medium of fiction, to a new world in which romantic follies are freely committed without punishment, and rank, wealth, and good clothes are accepted as a matter of course.

In "Graustark" universal prosperity is taken or granted, gold-laced uniforms are as common as dirt, and the heroine is a beautiful princess and the ruler of the mythical kingdom of Graustark. The hero is just a plain, entitled American, but he presumably rolls in money, and his tailoring is a dream. Counts and countesses, princes, harons, and a miscellaneous lot of courtiers float through the scenes, but the strongest impression left upon the mind is the fact that Princess Yctive, even while rejecting titled suitor after titled suitor, and deploring her maiden loneliness on her throne, manages to get in her osculatory inings.

For the American hero shows true American enterprise in overleaping the barriers imposed by the rank of his lady-love, and wins favors, one might say, at the cannon's mouth, since he wrests a love-avowal from the princess at the very foot of the throne.

It is easy, from the above, for the reader to draw conclusions as to "Graustark." It is designed to meet the tastes of the young and shallowly romantic, who have been assembling in large numbers at the opening performances, and dividing their sentiments between young hells over the love scenes and young giggles over the irreverent vandals in the gallery who interrupt the American's wooing with loud, explosive travesties of kisses.

It can not be very heartening to players to have the element of burlesque introduced into a performance which is intended to be serious, and it certainly must be annoying to the spectator who wants his little draught of pure romance delivered as per contract. But humans love an unexpected laugh, and the farcical interruption did not seem to be at all resented.

Robert Warwick's principal contributions to the rôle of the American wooer were height, good looks, and, as has been hinted, unexceptionable tailoring. His ability as a player lay largely in abeyance, as the sentiment in the piece is of the shallowest and the diction of the commonest.

Willette Kershaw looked very pretty as Princess Yctive, but indicated the exalted rank of the ruler of Graustark by a style of vocal delivery which was monotonous and altogether too little diversified by the vivacious and unaffected inflections that nature teaches us. But she was pardonable, because she made a pretty picture of herself so many times, and the expression of her face, although in effect a little too premeditated, was very pretty when the princess yielded herself to the spell of her lover's wooing.

At the Orpheum this week the bill seems to be unusually well proportioned to the needs of the average patron. Something pretty, something serious, something musical, and something funny, with odds and ends in between.

The something pretty is the equestrian act by Mme. Theresa Renz. Her horse Conversano, with his delicately modeled body, dainty little hoofs, and beautifully arched neck, is as faultlessly contoured as a beautiful woman. Unlike most trained animals, he looks happy in his act. Probably he has his little equine vanities. He is a model of good behavior, and dances with a business-like accuracy of step and time that would put many an awkward human to the blush.

The most serious number on the week's programme is "The Operator," a playlet representing a dramatic incident which takes place at a telegraph station on the plains, which consists of the misreading of a message by an exhausted and overtaxed operator, his despair when he discovers his mistake, and that it will probably result in the collision of two trains, and the clearing up of the tangle at the end when he is saved from exterminating his entire family by the discovery that he can avert the catastrophe. The leading rôle was well acted by Lyster Chambers, and the play was received with sympathetic interest by the audience.

The something funny in the bill is contributed with Irish heartiness by Gracie Emmett, who, in "Mrs. Murphy's Second Husband," is a creature of delight. For Gracie, who is stout and jolly, and the possessor of a brogue that is warranted not to fade in the wash, is dowered with the blessed gift of humor. It is easily conceivable that her playlet might not be funny with an inferior comedian in the title-rôle, but as it is, it is deliriously funny. One abandons one's self to the luxury of extreme mirth with the completeness that brings an after rest and refreshment to the entire system.

The musical element is large and generous, and hailed with enthusiasm by an audience that fairly revels in the blare and clamor of a brass band. This is supplied by Gennaro's Venetian Gondolier Band, who present a mingling of musical numbers which, in its entirety, is called "A Night in Venice." I can not say that there was much suggestion of the soft and dreamy sentiment appropriate to the nocturnal music enjoyed by a Latin people on a summer night. It seemed to me that the crashing harmonies evolved by Gennaro's baton were much more appropriate to the spirit of an American holiday, with a parade and a multitude in the foreground. But it was to an American audience that the entertainment was addressed, and they received it with such signs of favor as to keep the vivacious conductor smiling, bowing, wiping off his sweat-embellished countenance, and granting encores for a very appreciable interval of time after his number was concluded.

Gennaro is billed as an "eccentric," a claim which is founded principally upon the peculiar attitudes he strikes, and some farcical by-play in disciplining his band. He wears natty cream-colored trousers, which obligingly throw up in high relief, for the benefit of an interested audience, the peculiarities of his leg attitudes, which are many and various. Sometimes he crouches, sometimes assumes a pose appropriate to the duel. His assortment of smiles is a large asset in his collection of eccentricities. He greets the lighter, more delicate passages with a winking smile, which fades when he points sadly, reproachfully, remonstrantly to some offender, but the radiant sunburst which he shows to the audience, when, after stamping his foot conclusively, he turns with bedewed brow to acknowledge the applause might shame the orb of day.

His band plays with great dash and precision, but little shading. The members are profoundly attentive to their leader, which shows that in spite of all his spectacular nonsense, his attitudes, his dainty, dancing steps, and his little farces of punishment, the leader is a man of business.

There is an ineffective-voiced soprano in the troupe, and a drummer specialist, who, with a fixed expression that suggested light-hypnosis, executed a drummer solo, as it were, which, with the least exaggerated of hand motions, represented with cleverly executed crescendo and diminuendo the gradual approach, the crescendo effect of nearness, and the gradual passing away of some pageant whose movement was marked by the beat of drums.

First Loring Club Concert.

A programme of exceptional interest is announced for the opening concert of the thirty-second season of the Loring Club, at Christian Science Hall, on Tuesday evening, October 27. No less than four of the six numbers to be sung by the club will on this occasion be heard for the first time by a San Francisco audience. The most important of these, and one that will be looked forward to by music lovers, is "From Every Zone," this being a cycle of six songs for male chorus and orchestra, piano and organ, by Arnold Krug.

Since the club about a year ago gave a rendering of Brahms's "Rhapsodie" for contralto and male chorus, with orchestra, piano, and organ, requests have been made for its repetition, and this great composition is included in the programme of the concert of Tuesday evening. The club is fortunate in having been able to again secure for this work the assistance of Mrs. M. E. Blanchard, mezzo contralto, who gave an impressive interpretation of the exacting solo a year ago. Mrs. Blanchard will also be heard in Liszt's "Lorelei," and other solo numbers by Grieg, Burmeister, and Alicia Needham.

The orchestra will be that of Mr. Bernat Jaulou, who will also appear as solo violinist; and the pianist and organist are respectively Mr. Frederick Maurer, Jr., and Mr. Wallace A. Sabin.

The concert will be under the direction of W. C. Stadtfeld, the conductor of the Loring Club.

Mr. Hother Wismer.

Mr. Hother Wismer, the well-known violinist, will return to San Francisco at the end of October from his one-year sojourn in Europe. He has enjoyed his trip exceedingly and is enthusiastic over his studies with the great masters of the violin as Sauret, Cesar Thomson, Professor Marchot, and Ysaie. Mr. Wismer will again resume his violin class about November 1 at his residence, 2945 Fillmore Street.

Eugene Cowles is with Marie Cahill again this season, prominent in the cast of "The Boys and Betty."

THE WIFE'S CONFESSION.

Eloquence and Power of the Great Scene in Henri Bernstein's "The Thief."

Margaret Illington has in Henri Bernstein's play, "The Thief," one of the longest speeches known in the drama. It is practically a résumé of the play, yet, as given by the erring wife, Marie Voysin, it is never seemingly long, but always cumulatively effective. This is the speech:

"When my best friend, Isabelle, married Raymond, I felt a great sorrow unknown until then. It wasn't envy! It was self-pity. I felt that I, who am neither beautiful nor rich like my friend, I should never meet a man I should love and who would marry me, I should grow old all alone. I used to cry to think of it—really cry—a little every day. Then one day I fell in love. I fell in love with Raymond's best friend, a fascinating man to me, a kind of God, far out of my reach. Then I began to suffer really! I placed you so high that I dared not raise my eyes toward you, that I wouldn't have told my love to any human being, that to myself I scarcely owned my folly. Then, the impossible happened—you loved me. At first I scarcely perceived it. Afterward I didn't believe you. Such a hope was so far from me! During our engagement I lived in a dream—a delicious dream—with behind it a spectre—the fear that I should lose you again.

"Marriage came—and with it happiness un-speakable—but the spectre is always there, and it has never left me—it's the truth. For a year I have said to myself every minute of the day, 'I must keep my husband.' I knew the life you had led as a bachelor. I knew that you had been successful with women—beautiful and charming women with whom I couldn't compare, and so every day I set my teeth and said, 'I must keep my husband.' I didn't begin by doing wrong. At first I loyally tried to manage with our means. I went to small tradespeople, to Aline. Sometimes I thought myself nicely dressed; but when I came to compare myself with the different women we meet, who spend a lot on their clothes, I lost all joy and all confidence. How often I have watched you without your seeing! I have seen your eyes make comparisons in which I have suffered and I realized that because of bad weapons I was fighting a losing battle. Absurd, perhaps—but heavens, how real! How I have suffered! You shrug your shoulders, but you're a man and won't understand. I suffered in silence for a while and remained straight.

"My first beautiful gown was the cause of all the harm—it was a low-necked gown—a marvel, it was—Do you remember it? In a willful moment I had ordered it in the Rue de la Paix. I first wore it at a dinner at the Hartmanns. You were waiting for me in the small drawing-room, ready to start. I presented myself before you, my heart leaping in my throat. You said nothing—you looked at me—you looked at me in the glass, but you said nothing. Only at dinner you smiled at me, from time to time, a little sly, caressing smile—and I felt so proud, so buoyant, so happy. Things shone around me! We came home rather late; on the landing you took me in your arms and kissed me, and you murmured 'Little Marise, I'm proud of you.' I was lost. You don't understand—a woman in love would understand me. Ah, do you see, a compliment to a woman in love, a compliment! It is a heat which comes down, it makes your head swim, it is wine. One is intoxicated. I was lost.

"From that evening I would have nothing but the big dressmakers, nothing but the smartest frocks. Then to be complete, I wanted beautiful things of lawn and lace, and ravishing hats. It became a mania, and it spread without ceasing—and the debts increased terribly. One morning in February Aline hunted me up; I told her my worries. She immediately promised to get me out of my difficulties. She knew an underlinen maker, a Mme. Breton, who would take all my bills on her own account, both the old and the new. Of course I was to give promissory notes to this person and pay her interest—and what interest!—and both of them, Mme. Breton and Aline, arranged to send me very reasonable bills as a blind! I was to repay these women at leisure, as it suited me. But in a little time my payments on account weren't sufficient for them. They began to press me, to worry me, to push me hard. God, if only I had thrown myself into your arms—I longed to—but the risk. Richard—think of it!—the torturing fear of losing your love. Then you must remember.

"In April you had complained of the fall of stocks and I should have had to make this great confession at a bad moment! Anyway, I held my tongue, and a few days after our arrival here, just as I had received a terrifying telephone call, Isabelle, in front of me, carelessly threw some thousands of francs into her secretaire. Ten minutes later I was again passing the boudoir alone. On seeing the secretaire I felt a great shock inside. Almost without knowing what I was doing, I drew near. I pulled one of the handles, the drawer resisted—there was a paper knife lying on the table, and—my God, I—was lost! Richard, my love, my husband, forgive me, save me!"

GRANADA HOTEL

ABSOLUTELY FIREPROOF Sutter and Hyde Sts.

An American Plan Hotel. Giving the public every comfort and attention. The best of cuisine and service. Suites of rooms for families. Particularly desirable rooms for one person, with and without private bath.

E. S. de WOLFE, Manager

Connecticut Fire Insurance Company

Established 1850 OF HARTFORD

Total Assets.....$5,817,423
Surplus to Policy-Holders..... 2,118,394

BENJAMIN J. SMITH

Manager Pacific Department

ALASKA COMMERCIAL BUILDING
San Francisco

SPECIAL TOUR

TO

VICTORIA NYANZA

THROUGH THE

African Wonderland

Leaving New York

TUESDAY, October 27, 1908

Programme for the asking

THOS. COOK & SON

32 Powell St., San Francisco

HARTSHORN
SHADE ROLLERS
Bear the script name of
Stewart Hartshorn on label.
Get "Improved," no tacks required.
Wood Rollers Tia Rollers

AMUSEMENTS

BLANCHE ARRAL

The Belgian Prima Donna

Accompanied by STEINDORFF'S ORCHESTRA in the

GREATEST VOCAL PROGRAMME

ever offered in this city

This Sunday afternoon, Oct. 25, at 2:30

VAN NESS THEATRE

Seats $2.00, $1.50, $1.00. General admission $1.00.

BALDWIN PIANO USED

Next—EMILIO DE GOGORZA.

ORPHEUM ELLIS STREET NEAR FILLMORE

Absolutely Class A Theatre Building

Week beginning this Sunday afternoon

Matinee Every Day

ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE

HOPE BOOTH and Company, in GEORGE M. COHAN'S "THE LITTLE BLONDE LADY"; VALADON, the Magician; LEWIS and GREEN; MCPHEE and HILL; BLACK and JONES; REDFORD and WINCHESTER; LA PETITE MIGNON; New Orpheum Motion Pictures; Last Week of LYSTER CHAMBERS and CLARA KNOTT, in the thrilling success, "THE OPERATOR."

Evening prices, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box seats, $1. Matinee prices (except Sundays and holidays), 10c, 25c, 50c. Phone, WEST 6000.

PRINCESS THEATRE Ellis Street near Fillmore

S. LOVERICH, Manager

Class "A" Theatre Phone West 663

Matinee Saturday and Sunday

Last Two Nights of FERRIS HARTMAN and "THE OFFICE BOY"

Beginning Monday Night

KOLB AND DILL

And Big Eastern Company in Their Latest Success

PLAYING THE PONIES

Popular prices—Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c, $1. Mats. (except Sundays and holidays), 25c, 50c, 75c.

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove St.

Phone Market 500

Return Engagement Limited to One Week

BEGINNING MONDAY, OCT. 26

The Great Racing Play

CHECKERS

By Henry Blossom

Same big cast as last season

Hans Robert in the title-role

Prices: $1.50 to 50c

To Follow—"THE CLANSMAN."

VALENCIA THEATRE Valencia St. nr 14th Phone 17 Market

San Francisco's newest and most beautiful playhouse

Saturday Evening—Last Time of "Graustark"

Beginning Sunday Matinee, Oct. 25

The Delightful Comedy

HIS MAJESTY, THE GOVERNOR

By Capt. R. H. Marshall, author of "A Royal Family"

ROBERT WARWICK and the full strength of the Valencia Stock Company

Matinee Wednesday, all seats 25c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday, 25c and 50c. Evening, 25c to 75c; box seats, $1.

Next—"A NAVAJO'S LOVE."

VANITY FAIR.

The king is receiving commendation for his wedding present to Mr. Winston Churchill, a choice we are told that proves not only his powers of observation, but his kindly desire to give something that will be useful. His gift was a gold-headed Malacca cane. It is now remembered that Mr. Churchill without a stick would be almost as remarkable as Mr. Chamberlain without an eye-glass or an orchid:

During the hurly-burly of his last campaign in northwest Manchester, and again in Dundee, he carried everywhere a Malacca cane with a much-hattered silver knob for a "head." More than once he has been known to mount to the roof of a motor-car still carrying his walking stick, but he has never been known, even in the thick of election excitement, to leave his stick behind him. Many recent photographs have shown Mr. Churchill carrying his walking stick, and there are some people who detect in these a peculiar resemblance—purely accidental, no doubt—to Disraeli's way of holding a similar useful companion.

And here, by the way, is a good story of the Churchill wedding told by one of the public men of Manchester:

He himself was at the wedding, and shortly afterwards he was "spotted" by an elevator attendant. The dialogue was laconic:

"Been to the wedding, sir?"
 "Yes."
 "Fine lot of presents, were there not?"
 "Very fine."
 "He deserves 'em for what he's done."
 "What has he done?"
 "Got married."

The process of making the new woman goes on apace. The Directory hip is being slowly if painfully formed, and now we are to have the Empire hand. If women would but pay half as much attention to the remodeling of the inner nature as they do to the outer, what a world it would be, but no doubt they will attend to this when they get time. Rome, after all, was not built in a day.

The Empire hand is intended to match the sheath gown. Let us have consistency in all things, and what can be more inappropriate than the clinging slenderness of the gown with fingers that are fat and pudgy? The resources of the new feminine architecture are simply inexhaustible, and so art has again been called upon and, as usual, it triumphs. The new specifications can be carried out to the last agonizing detail.

A New York specialist tells us how the miracle is accomplished. First of all, the desired tapering effect must be secured, and this is done with the French clamp. These ingenious little instruments are like thimbles and so designed as to provide continuous pressure to each finger tip. They must be worn for about two hours a day, although one would suppose that the work could be done with a jack-plane in much less time. In the meanwhile, the hand itself must be reshaped into a better conformity with the costume.

First of all, the hands are massaged until all superfluous fat is removed and they begin to taper toward the fingers. Then comes the lemon bath, which is made of lemon juice stirred into a little finely powdered oatmeal. This is massaged into the hands until they become white. Then they are soaked in hot soapsuds, and finally come the chamois gloves, which leave the hands "slim, white, and soft."

Sometimes the hands must be "sweated," and for this inelegant word we must thank the expert. First put on a pair of cotton gloves wrung out of cold water. Over these come the chamois gloves, and then a pair of leather gloves. The patient must sit still for an hour, although she may talk.

But even the finest hand is of no value unless it be properly shown, and the expert tells us how this should be done:

This brings one to a study of the fashionable pose for the hands. The fingers should show that they are tapering and the hand should reveal its long, slender lines, and this it can do only when properly surrounded.

Different women choose different settings for their hands, but I think that of a London heavy is the most fetching. This woman makes it a point, whenever possible, to rest her hand upon a cushion.

It is quite simple and very attractive. The cushion rests upon the arm of a chair and on this she poses her long, tapering hand. Or a hand cushion is placed upon an ornamental table, and on this, as if by accident, the hand is delicately inclined.

Of course, being placed so carefully upon the cushion, one can be very sure that all the hand's pretty angles show. It is a study in curves, each of which leads to the tapering wrist or to the long, slim finger points. I earnestly recommend the hand cushion to the woman who can use it gracefully.

We are teaching women how to hold the hands to make them look slimmer. We also teach them how not to hold them. Perhaps the latter is the more important.

We tell the woman whose hands are pretty in shape to show them. This she can do best by extending the fingers to display their pretty curves. "Never close your hands" is one of our injunctions, "and never on any condition make your hands into fists."

The last injunction is important, although it may be remembered that the fist is not the natural weapon of the woman. The immortal came nearer to the facts when he said:

Let not your naughty tempers rise,

Your little hands were never meant
 To tear each other's eyes.

Or words to that effect. But perhaps the suffragette movement is responsible for the new injunction.

The nails must now be pointed, not sharply pointed, but the point must be clearly defined. For a time the fashion was to train the nails to match the finger tips, but they must now match the costume. There are, of course, disadvantages to the long nails. They may break, "even with the best of care," and in the event of such a calamity they must all be trimmed to match. But then ladies who govern their "naughty tempers" will not have to deplore broken finger nails.

The expert tells us that "knuckles are difficult," because they are "insistent." We should have thought that the energy that could accomplish the overthrow of the hip would hardly be daunted by a trifle like a knuckle. Why not cut it off, or squeeze it off, or crush it in?

Dr. Andrew MacPhail has unburdened himself in a contemporary upon the subject of the American woman, and we may hope that he now feels more comfortable. But he assures us that the American woman is only a name for a type and that its representatives are to be found as much in Europe as elsewhere.

The old-fashioned American novelist, says the learned doctor, writing in the Spectator, was used to explain the foolishness of his heroine upon the ground that she was of French descent. The novelist of today takes the foolishness for granted, because unless the heroine is silly she must be necessarily uninteresting and therefore a misfit in fiction:

A life of luxurious idleness alone appeals to the American woman of fiction. For reasons largely beyond her control, the primitive functions of woman, such as preparing food, clothing, etc., have become less incumbent upon her.

The doctor explains all these eccentricities by the theory that all the natural functions of women have been abrogated. The family has been destroyed. Where children are permitted to be born they are neglected, and the modern woman, instead of doing the duties appointed for her by nature, simply hires some one else to do them for her. Female energies therefore have been effectually stopped and the banked-up force finally breaks its barriers and runs riot in frivolity and worse. The modern woman suffers from what may be called suppressed maternity:

Deprived of the care of her children, a woman suffers a diminution of affection, and it is replaced by a noisy sentimentalism which is equally disastrous for the mother, the child, and the husband. It is the maternal instinct running riot.

And then Dr. MacPhail allows himself to draw a comparison. Be sure that he means nothing offensive by it. It is simply the direct speech that comes from a medical training. He says:

We have all seen and pitied the animal compelled to perform a new and ungenial task—the dog in a dance, for instance. Off the stage, we are told, these animals are subject to fits of ill temper, to outbursts of emotion, to discontent; they crave excitement and finally break down. It is not disclosing any professional confidence to say that symptoms of a somewhat similar nature have been observed in the case of an American woman as a result of her performance.

The woman, in other words, has been drawn from her natural avocations and forced to "do tricks." The love of unwholesome excitement, the glare of the arena, the applause of the spectators, has poisoned the blood, with the results that the novelist seizes upon as his best material. "And now," says Dr. MacPhail pathetically, "there are women who propose to add to their burdens by the additional obligation of casting the ballot and engaging in public life."

Cardinal Gibbons has been asked what he has to say to the stricture by Dr. MacPhail, and he points out what is obvious enough, that of the great majority of wealthy women who lead decorous lives we hear little or nothing, and that it is the noisy ones who monopolize public attention. His eminence says:

American women of a certain class and limited number perhaps are the idlest and unhappiest in the world. I refer to possession of exorbitant wealth, some of whom have neither religious principles nor domestic virtues to restrain them, and employ their vast fortunes merely for the gratification of their passions. But also there is a portion of our very wealthy class that lives quietly and virtuously. Against them and against our middle and poorer classes the charge of idleness is absolutely unfair.

Cardinal Gibbons went on to say that the foreign critic of America gets a distorted view of American social life from the scandals and divorces he reads in the newspapers, never seeming to be aware of the fact of a million happy homes which never get into print. "The really good women of America whose lives are actuated by sound principles," he continued, "that is, the majority of them, never get into the society that the foreigner sees. He draws his conclusions from a few extraordinary women who spend their lives and wealth in the pursuit of mad and meaningless pleasure."

At the same time it must be remembered that Dr. MacPhail's rather infelicitous term, "American women," was intended to have no geographical significance, inasmuch as representatives of the type are to be found pretty evenly distributed over civilization.

Are there still any contented wives, any wives who do not look upon their husbands as necessary evils, any wives without yearnings to "find their true sphere" or to "develop their own natures," or whatever the ugly slang of the day may be? If any of this backward brood still remain among us, let them read a book called "Why I Would Not Marry My Husband Again," and so learn how discontented, how fretful, and how peevish the modern woman ought to be.

The plot is a very simple one. The author imagines a number of women—or did he actually overhear them—who spend a quiet social hour in vivisectioning the men who were so unlucky as to marry them. And they do it "with the gloves off," so to speak. They are restrained by no foolish scruples of delicacy, for are they not modern? No topic is too domestic or too private for these cultured ladies.

Commenting upon this precious production, the Boston Transcript says:

"Why I Would Not Marry My Wife Again" is not yet written, but almost anybody can write it, now the trick has been disclosed. You have only to describe a coterie of fine, generous-hearted fellows, at once sane and chivalrous, and then let each of them publish the shortcomings of his wife. Naturally, you will have to make it clear to the reader that you know how gentlemen talk. This will not be difficult. Say you heard it yourself—that pleasant tirade—at a club. Indicate by a few deft touches the social eminence of the club. Call it an "exclusive" club.

It is strange, by the way, that the feminine code of ethics does not prohibit a discussion of the husband and that the male and female proprieties should in this respect be entirely opposed. There are, of course, a great many high-minded women who would upon no account discuss their husbands and who would withdraw from any society where such an offense was perpetrated. But they are by no means in a majority. Indeed, it may be said that the majority of women habitually discuss their husbands and compare notes with one another as to the respective frailties of their lords and masters. But there is hardly any man who allows himself to discuss his wife. Even in circles where female integrity is lightly thought of, even in the lowest class of club life, even among men who are "of the earth earthy" and who are, generally speaking, of the worthless variety, it is safe to say that there is practically no discussion of wives, no comparing of domestic notes, no complaints of irregularities or of hardships. The line is sharply drawn and a trespass would be met in nearly all cases with the stare of disapproval. Why is there such a difference between the sexes in this respect? That there is such a difference is hardly open to denial.

Fancy an invisible waiter, and this is not intended to imply any occult powers on the part of the waiter, but simply that he does not come within the line of sight. This boon has been devised by the Saranac Hotel in New York. The guest need no more than write his order on a pad and place it on a table which then sinks from sight to reappear laden with the selected viands. By this arrangement the diner is not reminded of the fact that waiters sometimes neglect the manicure parlor or that shaving is not always a daily ceremonial. Moreover, there would be no tips.

Paris authorities have discovered that the telephone system of the city is largely controlled by the nervous system of the telephone girls. The majority of these girls live alone and neglect their proper meals, and in consequence subscribers suffer from the telephone girls' nerves more than is necessary. The telephone officials, to remedy this condition of affairs, have organized canteens to provide their girls with luncheon and dinner at 12 cents and 14 cents a meal, consisting of roast beef and mutton, and plenty of sweets. The authorities have drawn the line at caramels, which, says the official circular, "tend to disorganize the service." Subscribers' complaints, it is stated, have diminished 30 per cent since the innovation.

W. & J. SLOANE

FURNITURE

Exclusive lines for Parlor, Library, Living Room, Dining-Room, Bedroom, Hall, Summer Homes and Offices.

CARPETS

Special weaves and colorings in the greatest variety. Domestic Wiltons and Whole Piece Axminsters. We show all grades.

RUGS

Both Oriental and Domestic. This is by far the largest and choicest stock of Rugs on the Coast. Our Orientals are selected as individual pieces.

Upholstery—Interior Decoration
 Our long experience and unequalled facilities enable us to admirably execute special orders.

Van Ness and Sutter

Sherman, Clay & Co., occupying this entire building at Kearny and Sutter Streets, S. F., are headquarters for every kind of musical instrument from Steinway pianos down. You have no need to go elsewhere for any article pertaining to the music business.

Sherman, Clay & Co.

STEINWAY AND OTHER PIANOS—
 VICTOR TALKING MACHINES

Kearny and Sutter, S. F.

1635 Van Ness Ave. | Broadway at 13th
 San Francisco | Oakland

Hotel del Coronado

Motto: "BEST OF EVERYTHING"
 Most Delightful Climate on Earth
 American Plan. Summer rates $3.50 per day each and upward, or $21.00 per week each and upward
 "Good Music" and "Fine Automobile Road, Los Angeles-Riverside to Coronado."
 Golf, Tennis, Polo, and other outdoor sports every day in the year.
 New 700-foot ocean pier, for fishing. Boating and Bathing are the very best. Send for booklet to MORGAN ROSS, Manager,
 Coronado Beach, Cal.
 Or see H. F. NORCROSS, Agent,
 334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles.
 Tel. A. 6789; Main 3917.
 22d Street and Broadway

Roy C. Ward | Jas. W. Dean
 Jas. K. Polk | Geo. E. Billings

GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.

ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE
 EFFECTED

312 California Street. Phone Douglas 2283
 San Francisco, Cal.

John F. Forbes
 Certified Public Accountant
 601 KOHL BUILDING
 SAN FRANCISCO

Reasons and Facts why Judge Carroll Cook SHOULD BE RE-ELECTED

(INCUMBENT)

When you cast your ballot for Superior Court Judges, be sure that JUDGE CARROLL COOK is one of the four judges for whom you vote.

Vote for a tried, honest, fair and courageous judge; such is JUDGE CARROLL COOK.

Twelve years' faithful service to all the people should be rewarded by reelection.

Always fearless and fair, is JUDGE CARROLL COOK.

JUDGE CARROLL COOK is controlled by no individual or corporation and is independent of newspaper dictation.

In the hundreds of criminal cases tried before him during his twelve years on the bench but five reversals can be found.

JUDGE CARROLL COOK, by his knowledge of law and experience and by his system of impaneling jurors—now adopted in many counties—has saved the taxpayers thousands of dollars.

Twenty-five years' practice as a lawyer enables JUDGE CARROLL COOK to expedite business so that great expense is saved to the taxpayer.

Hundreds of boys have been rescued by JUDGE CARROLL COOK from criminal careers.

By his policy of probation for youths in first offenses JUDGE CARROLL COOK has made men and good citizens of over 95 per cent of those on whom he exercised his judgment of character.

The decision rendered by JUDGE CARROLL COOK in sustaining the "Child Labor Law" should not be forgotten; it was the first on the subject and was sustained by the Supreme Court.

The reign of terror created by Siemsen and Dahner—the gas-pipe thugs—was stopped by JUDGE CARROLL COOK.

Arson, the most dangerous of all crimes, ran rampant until by examples made by JUDGE CARROLL COOK it ceased.

The foregoing facts and reasons are presented to you on behalf of JUDGE CARROLL COOK by the Non-Partisan Club, organized in February, 1908. All of the members enrolled, numbering 3000, endorse the above.

WM. GLINDERMAN, President.
JOS. P. STEVENS, Secretary.

MENNE'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

A Positive Relief For
PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all ailments of the skin.

Removes all odor of perspiration. Delightful after shaving. Sold everywhere, or mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample Free.

GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY, New York, N. Y.

this winter

Yosemite—will be open all winter. Take Santa Fe to Merced, thence Yosemite Valley R. R. to El Portal. Stage ride (three and one-half hours) to Sentinel Hotel next morning.

Grand Canyon—Trails are open the year round. El Tovar Hotel on brink of Canyon under Fred Harvey management one of the finest hotels in Southwest. Our folders tell. Address

H. K. GREGORY, A. G. P. A., San Francisco
or JNO. J. BYRNE, A. P. T. M., Los Angeles

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

An Atchison woman took an old-fashioned friend to church one night and remarked that the acoustics of the room were something awful. "Why," replied the old-fashioned lady, "I don't smell anything."

One of the papers handed in at the examination of students training for employment as teachers described Oliver Cromwell as "a man with coarse features and having a large, red nose with deep religious convictions beneath."

A colonel in General Lee's division in the late Civil War sometimes indulged in more apple-jack than was good for him. Passing him one evening, leaning against a tree, the general said: "Good evening, colonel. Come over to my tent for a moment, please." "S-s-cuse me, g-g-en'ral, s-s-cuse me," replied the colonel. "It's 'bout all I can do to stay where I am."

One of the foremen on a railroad has a keen Gaelic wit. One warm afternoon, while walking along the line, he found one of his men placidly sleeping on the embankment. The boss looked disgustedly at the delinquent for a full minute and then remarked: "Slape on, you lazy spalpeen, slape on, fur as long as you slape you've got a joh, but when you wake up you aint got none."

Some time ago Mr. Stead in London wanted to gather about him some of the brains of Europe and then make a trip around the world in the interests of everlasting peace. He asked G. Bernard Shaw to be one of the party, which invitation most men would have thought a compliment, but Mr. Shaw said: "My dear Stead, I have far more work to do than kings and queens, but if you will bring a collection of rulers to my house in Adelphi Terrace I should be very glad to talk to them any morning."

There was a thin and nervous woman, who could not sleep. She visited her physician, and the man said: "Do you eat anything just before going to bed?" "Oh, no, doctor," the patient replied. "Well," said the physician, "just keep a pitcher of milk and some hiescut beside you, and every night, the last thing you do, make a light meal." "But, doctor," cried the lady, "you told me on no account to eat anything before retiring." "Pooh, pooh," said the doctor, "that was three months ago. Science has made enormous strides since then."

As usual at the end of his speech, the spell-hinder announced that he would be glad to answer any questions of a political nature of interest to the audience. For some time he tried to "dodge" a prim, middle-aged woman, who looked as though she might be a prohibitionist. After vainly trying to attract his attention, she called out in a harsh voice: "Mr Speaker, honestly now, don't you think that plenty of water is beneficial to health?" "Well, er, ahem. Not always, madam. In fact, a friend of mine was seriously injured by it." "Indeed! How so?" "Madam, he was drowned."

Jerome K. Jerome, the humorist and playwright, knows from long experience much of the ins and outs of stage life. One of the early vicissitudes of his life as an actor was to be offered his choice of playing the part of either a soldier or a donkey in a pantomime—a real donkey with four legs. After careful consideration he thought the red coat the more becoming disguise, and chose the part of the soldier. Apparently he made a mistake, from the point of view of success at all events, for a few days afterwards the manager came to him and said, "You made a great mistake, Jerome, in not taking the part of the donkey. It would just suit you and there's five shillings a week more in it."

It is told of the late Ira D. Sankey that one day in Geneva he entered a music-hox shop and asked to see some music-boxes. The salesman graciously showed him a number, but none was what he wanted. "Have you none that play sacred music?" he asked. "Why," answered the salesman, "we have some that play a kind of half-way sacred music." "What?" inquired Mr. Sankey. "Oh, these Moody and Sankey hymns; I can't imagine what the people see in them, but we sell thousands of the boxes that play them. We have enormous orders for these boxes," continued the salesman, "from every part of Europe," and then he added, apologetically, "it's a matter of business, you know, with us."

The late Bishop Potter once in his early days had occasion to officiate at a christening in a small fishing village on the Massachusetts coast. The proud father, a young fisherman, awkwardly holding his first-born daughter, was visibly embarrassed under the scrutiny of the many eyes in the congregation, and his nervousness was not decreased by the sudden wailing of the infant as they stood at the font. When the time for the baptism of the babe arrived the hishop noticed that the father was holding the child so that its fat little legs pointed toward the font. "Turn her this way," he whispered, but the father was too disconcerted to hear or understand. "Turn her feet around," the hishop whispered again; but still there was no response. The situation was fast becoming critical, when an ancient mariner in the back of the church came to the rescue. Putting his weather-beaten hand to his mouth he roared across the room, "Head her up to the wind, Jack!"

It was closing time at the town library. Old Mr. Duke, who had filled the place of librarian for years, took down his coat and hat and with the assistance of his little daughter got them safely on. Together they started for the door. It was raining hard. "Wait a moment, child," said her father, and went back into the building. The girl remained, obediently. Five minutes passed. Then ten. She pushed open the door and walked in. Her father was bent over one of the card catalogues. "What are you looking for, father?" she inquired. He put the drawer back, suddenly abashed. "I'm getting old, Margaret," he said. "I couldn't find my umbrella, and I was searching for it under U in the lists."

In the course of his remarks the lecturer reviewed the agricultural prospects of the country, and as an illustration told a story of a poor farmer who had died, leaving to his wife the farm heavily mortgaged. He said that the widow set to work with a will and succeeded upon one year's wheat crop in paying off the entire mortgage. When he had completed his lecture, the gentleman shook hands and greeted the members of his audience. One middle-aged man finally approached him thoughtfully and began: "I say, mister, you told a story 'bout the widow raising a mortgage on one year's crop?" "Yes, my friend, that was a true story. It happened only two years ago." "Well, sir, could you tell me who that widow is?" She's just the kind of woman I've been looking for all the time."

THE MERRY MUSE.

A Martyr to Looks.

A maid with a close-fitting bodice Was watching a play called "Quo Vadice," But her clothes were so tight That she got no delight From the play, though she looked like a godice. —Boston Traveler.

A Rondeau.

She uses slang at times, I grieve to say, I note the tendency with great dismay, For slang—in women—is a thing I hate. She thinks, of course; that it is up to date. The proper language of The Girl To-day.

But it's had taste, which girls should not display, When I say that, she says, "Don't get too gay." "Impertinent" seems quite inadequate; She uses slang.

"Nit" is equivalent to "no" or "nay," And things provincial she declares are "jay"; Then a small-minded person is a "skate"! She "hurries"? No, she "hits a lively gait" Or "heats it" Why, it's simply fierce the way She uses slang. —Chicago News.

He Caught It.

I just caught the train with the young lady in it, In spite of the crush and the crowd that was there, But was down on my luck the very next minute I just caught the train with the young lady in it; For a rip and a cry and a scream rent the air, And the dancers all stopped;—'twas rent past repair. I just caught the train with the young lady in it. —Puck.

Today's Tangle.

Now Roosevelt's answered Bryan, and Haskell's answered Hearst; and everybody's lyn', to see who lies the worst; and Hearst has answered Haskell and all the coal-oil gang, and every one's a rasal who ought to go and hang. Now Kern has answered Sherman, and Sherman's answered Kern, and neither man has whiskers amounting to a dern; and Debs has answered some one, and some one's answered Graves, and Hughes has bought a ticket that's good for seven shaves. And Taft has challenged Botkin to meet him in debate, and Mrs. Pinkham's answered the man who pays the freight. To all this answer business no ending do I see; I know it's got me rattled and hatty as can be. —Emporia Gazette.

Lord Roberts once promised to inspect the boys' brigade battalion in Glasgow, but at the last moment was prevented by illness. A local officer was secured to fill his place, and in selling tickets for the inspection it was thought only fair to let purchasers know that the distinguished field marshal would not be present. One small brigade hoy came up and asked for two tickets for his father and mother. The clerk said, "Do your father and mother know that Lord Roberts is not to be present?" The hoy replied, with a look of self-confidence, "It's no Lord Roberts they're comin' to see, it's me."

A. Hirschman

For fine jewelry and silverware. 1641-1643 Van Ness Avenue.

BANKING

French Savings Bank

108 Sutter Street, near Montgomery
Paid-up Capital$ 600,000
Total Assets 4,270,800
Strictly a Savings Bank. Open Saturday Evening from 7 to 8:30
OFFICERS—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, 1st Vice-President; Leon Boqueraz, 2d Vice-President; A. Bousquet, Secretary; P. A. Bergerot, Attorney.
DIRECTORS—N. C. Bahin, J. A. Bergerot, Charles Carpy, Arthur Legallet, G. Beleney, H. de St. Seine, J. M. Dupas, Leon Boqueraz, J. E. Artigues, J. S. Godeau, John Ginty.
SAFE DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT
The French-American Bank is located in the same building.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., San Francisco
Guaranteed Capital$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash. 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds.. 1,453,983.62
Deposits June 30, 1908..... 34,474,554.23
Total Assets 37,055,263.31
OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohrer; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourney; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.
BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohrer, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, P. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse, and W. S. Goodfellow.
MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22d Streets. For receipt and payment of deposits only.

LONDON PARIS NATIONAL BANK

N. W. cor. Sutter and Sansome
CAPITAL - - - $2,500,000
SURPLUS - - - 620,000
Sig Greenbaum, H. Fleishhacker,
President, Vice-President and Mgr.
R. Altschul, Cashier

First National Bank

Berkeley, Cal.
Combined Resources over $5,500,000.00
A. W. NAYLOR, FRANK M. WILSON,
President, Vice-President,
F. L. NAYLOR, FRANK C. MORTIMER,
Cashier, Att. Cashier,
W. S. WOOD, Trust Officer.
Depository of the
United States County of Alameda
State of California Town of Berkeley
BERKELEY BANK OF SAVINGS & TRUST CO.

THE BERKELEY NATIONAL BANK

United States Depository
Berkeley, Cal.
HOUSEHOLD AND COMMERCIAL ACCOUNTS INVITED
DIRECTORS—George P. Baxter, Pres.; J. W. Richards, Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Bangs, Vice-Pres.; Louis Titus, Dr. Thomas Addison, A. G. Freeman, Duncan McDuffie, Perry T. Tompkins, F. L. Lipman, W. J. Hotchkiss, and Whitney Palache. P. H. ATKINSON, Cashier.

MARKET ST. 1st CON. 5%
Due 1924. Coupons March and September
UNITED R. R. of S. F. 4%
Due 1927. Coupons April and October
NORTH PAC. COAST R. R. 5%
Due 1912. Coupons January and July

SUTRO & CO.
BROKERS
412 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.
We have a Direct Wire to New York

All Kinds of Rubber Goods
Goodyear Rubber Co.
R. H. PEASE, President
587-589-591 Market Street
SAN FRANCISCO

WESTERN ASSURANCE COMPANY
TORONTO
U. S. Assets.....$2,493,154
Surplus..... 483,989
PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT
1004 MERCHANTS EXCHANGE
SAN FRANCISCO
J. J. KENNY, W. L. W. MILLER,
Manager, Assistant Manager

MT. TAMALPAIS AND MUIR WOODS VIA SAUSALITO FERRY
FOOT OF MARKET ST.
LEGAL HOLIDAYS—SUNDAY TIME

Lv. San Francisco		Lv. Muir Woods		Lv. Tamalpais
WEEK DAY	SUN- DAY	WEEK DAY	SUN- DAY	WEEK DAY	SUN- DAY
9:45 A.	17:15 A.	1:40 P.	10:40 A.	7:25 A.	9:28 A.
11:45 P.	8:15 A.	2:40 P.	12:16 P.	1:40 P.	11:10 A.
1:45 P.	9:15 A.	4:45 P.	1:40 P.	4:14 P.	12:16 P.
SATUR- DAY	9:45 A.	11:15 A.	2:45 P.	DAY ONLY	3:10 P.
Tamalpais only	1:45 P.	Tamalpais only	5:45 P.	9:50 P.	6:40 P.
Muir Woods only	3:45 P.	Muir Woods only	14:45 P.	8:15 P.

TICKET OFFICE AT SAUSALITO FERRY

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

Teas are the order of the day at present, and each week some charming debutante is formally presented to the social world. Dances galore are promised, both large and small affairs, and the season of 1908-09 will be indeed a gay one for the score or more of pretty girls who will get their first glimpse of gaiety.

The engagement is announced of Miss Ethel Hartson, daughter of Mr. Burnell Hartson, to Captain Caldwell Turner, U. S. M. C. Their wedding will be an event of February.

The engagement is announced of Miss Francesca Arques, daughter of Mr. Louis Arques of San Jose, to Mr. Kenneth Mackintosh of Seattle. Their wedding will be an event of next month.

The engagement is announced of Miss Harriet Meek, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Meek of San Lorenzo, to Mr. Stewart Samuel Hawley of Oakland. No date is announced for the wedding, which will probably be an event of the early winter.

The wedding of Miss Caroline McDougal, daughter of the late Commander Charles J. McDougal, U. S. N., and Mrs. McDougal, to Assistant Surgeon John L. Neilson, U. S. N., took place on Saturday last at the home of the bride at Mare Island, the Rev. A. A. McAlister, U. S. N., officiating.

The wedding of Miss Agnes Buchanan, daughter of Mr. E. Y. Buchanan, to Dr. Daniel Crosby, took place at the home of the bride in Fruitvale on Thursday evening of last week. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. David Evans of Grace Church, San Francisco. Mrs. Frederick Palmer was the matron of honor and Miss Elizabeth Holmes the maid of honor. Mr. Peter Crosby, the bridegroom's brother, was the best man. About fifty friends and relatives were present. After their wedding journey Dr. and Mrs. Crosby will live in Fruitvale.

Announcement has been made of the wedding of Miss Georgina Rose Poulteney, daughter of Mrs. Rose Poulteney, to Mr. William Petherick, on Monday, October 12. After their wedding journey Mr. Petherick and his bride will make their home in Sausalito.

Mr. and Mrs. James Monroe Allen and Mr. and Mrs. John Caldwell Kirkpatrick have sent out cards for a tea on Thursday, November 5, from four to seven o'clock, at the Allen home, 3400 Washington Street, at which Miss Clara Allen and Miss Suzanne Kirkpatrick will be formally presented to society.

Miss Louise Boyd entertained at a luncheon on Tuesday last at her home in San Rafael in honor of Miss Alice Oge.

Mr. and Mrs. Willis Polk entertained at a dinner on Monday of last week at their apartment at the St. Xavier.

Mrs. Eugene Lent was the hostess at a bridge party on Monday afternoon at her home on Eddy Street.

Miss Helen Baker entertained at an informal bridge party on Thursday of last week at her apartment at the Hillcrest.

Miss Maud Wilson entertained at an informal bridge party on Monday afternoon of last week.

Miss Floride Hunt was the hostess at a tea on Friday of last week at her home on Pacific Avenue in honor of Miss Marian Marvin. She was assisted in receiving by Mrs. Randell Hunt, Mrs. Roy Somers, Miss Marie Brewer, Miss Doris Wilshire, Miss Elena Brewer, Miss Helen Jones, and Miss Emily Johnson.

Miss Hanna du Bois and Miss Emily du Bois entertained at an informal tea on Tuesday of last week at their apartment at the Hillcrest in honor of Miss Virginia Newhall and Miss Frances Newhall.

Miss Suzanne Kirkpatrick was the hostess at a tea on Thursday of last week in the Laurel Court of the Fairmont.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a résumé of movements to and from this city and Coast and the whereabouts of absent Californians:

Colonel and Mrs. John A. Darling and Miss Hastings, after a summer in Maine, are now in their home in New London.

Mr. and Mrs. William G. Irwin and Miss Helene Irwin sailed last week from Europe for America, but will probably not return to San Francisco until later in the season.

Judge and Mrs. Ygnacio Sepulveda have left for their home in Mexico, after a visit to Mrs. Phebe Hearst at Pleasanton.

Mr. and Mrs. John Dahlgren and Miss Katharine Martin will come to town from Santa Cruz about November 1, having taken an apartment here for the winter.

Mrs. John F. Boyd and Miss Louise Boyd expect to leave on November 5 for New York, where they will spend most of the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Orville C. Pratt have returned from a visit to Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Cole in at Burlingame.

Mrs. Joseph L. King has returned from a visit to Reno.

Miss Julia Langhorne, who has spent the summer traveling in Europe, returned home on Saturday last.

Mr. C. H. Crocker has come over from Belvedere to spend the winter at the Hotel St. Francis.

Mrs. William Mayo Newhall returned on Saturday last from a sojourn of several weeks in the East.

Miss Katherine Mellus of Los Angeles has been spending a few days as the guest of the Misses Cheshrough.

Mr. and Mrs. C. O. G. Miller, Miss Marian Miller, Mr. H. M. A. Miller, and Mr. Henry E. Bothin are spending a fortnight on a motor trip to Southern California.

Admiral Louis Kempff, U. S. N., retired, and Miss Cornelia Kempff left on Saturday last for Washington, D. C., and will spend some time in the East.

Mrs. Adolph P. Scheld has returned to her home in Sacramento, after spending some days here as the guest of Mrs. Frederick Beaver and Mrs. George H. Lent.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph D. Grant have arrived in New York from Europe and are expected here about November 1.

Miss Gladys Brigham, who has been visiting her aunt, Mrs. Charles O. Alexander, here, has returned to her home at Los Gatos.

Mrs. Walter L. Dean has been in town recently from her home in San Rafael as the guest of her sister, Miss Alice Hager.

Mr. Louis F. Monteagle has returned from an Eastern trip of several weeks' duration.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Taylor, Jr., are in town for the winter, which they will spend with Mrs. W. H. Taylor, Sr.

Mr. J. M. Quay returned on Sunday last from a visit to his old home in Hudson, Ohio.

Mr. and Mrs. James Athearn Folger have returned to their country place at Woodside for a stay of a few weeks.

Mr. E. W. Hopkins and Miss Florence Hopkins have returned from an automobile tour in the Eastern States.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Dean and Miss Helen Dean, who have been in San Rafael for some time past, have taken apartments at the Fairmont for the winter.

Mrs. George H. Mendell, Sr., has returned from a visit to Portland, Oregon.

Major and Mrs. C. H. McKinstry have returned from a sojourn in Honolulu.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stetson Wheeler and Miss Olive Wheeler returned last week from Europe, where they have been traveling for some months.

Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Dray of Sacramento will spend the winter in this city.

Mr. and Mrs. Wellington Gregg, Miss Enid Gregg, and Miss Ethel Gregg have arrived in New York from Europe and are expected here next week. They will spend the winter months at the Fairmont.

Governor J. N. Gillett and Mr. and Mrs. John L. McNah of Ukiah arrived at Del Monte Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Miller have returned, after a year's absence, and have taken "The Hutch" in Sausalito.

Sir James and Lady Erskine, Lieutenant and Miss Erskine, of Scotland, arrived Saturday for a few days' stay at Del Monte.

Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Redding, who have spent the summer at the Peninsula Hotel, have taken apartments at the Fairmont for the winter.

Mrs. Frank Bliss, Mrs. E. A. Blackman, and Miss Blackman, of Santa Barbara, arrived Tuesday for an indefinite stay at Del Monte.

Mrs. Clinton E. Worden and Mrs. A. N. Towne returned to Del Monte, after a ten days' visit in San Francisco. They intend to make Del Monte their home indefinitely.

At Out-of-Town Hotels.

Among the arrivals from San Francisco at Byron Hot Springs during the past week were the following: Mr. J. F. Plageman, Mr. Charles F. Zinkand, Dr. and Mrs. Walter B. Coffey, Mr. S. H. Woodruff, Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Robinson.

A few of the recent arrivals from San Francisco at the Tavern of Tamalpais were: Mr. David S. Buchman, Mr. J. A. Rogers, Mrs. E. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Wells, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Crocker, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Payot, Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Houghton, Miss C. Sherman, Mrs. T. S. Bowens, Mr. and Mrs. Randolph Whiting, Mr. H. C. Bach, Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Burnham, Dr. Guy S. Millberry and family, Mr. J. Howard.

Among recent arrivals from San Francisco at Del Monte are the following: Dr. and Mrs. Herbert C. Moffitt and children, Mr. Leonard W. Buck, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Martin, Mr. H. R. Varrue, Mr. Elmer R. Varrue, Mr. Frank McC. Van Ness, Mr. and Mrs. C. O. G. Miller, Miss Marion Miller, Mr. H. M. A. Meller, Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Burns, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Duppy, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Kinigan, Dr. K. O. Sterns, Mrs. C. E. Burton, Miss C. Burton, Miss Gertrude Blaine, Mrs. B. E. Weaver, Mrs. Kennedy, Miss Armstrong, Miss Jane Marvin, Mrs. Huhhard, Mr. Everett Hays, Mrs. S. C. Lewis, Miss Nellie Brown, Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Force, Mrs. Charles Wilson, Miss Martha G. Wagner, Miss Lally M. Field, Mr. James M. Conley, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. French, Mrs. L. R. Tuttle, Miss Gladys R. Tuttle, Dr. and Mrs. Howard Monnaul.

THE LEADING NEW YORK HAT, "THE MILLER," Eugene Korn, Agent, 15 Kearny St.

CURRENT VERSE.

Regret.

Long ago,
In the sunset glow,
Beloved, my hand in thine,
Past the village and over the hill
We followed the road where it wandered at will
'Neath arching elm, and pine;
Honeyed perfume
Of huckwheat bloom,
Wild rose, soft milkweed feather,
With never a cloud in the radiant west—
Into Love's golden garden blest,
We wandered—we two—together.

Again today
I follow the way.
Ah, love, 'tis a journey long—
Long and dreary, and rough the road;
Ever I shift my wearisome load,
And search my heart for a song—
Yet only a sigh
Like a stifled cry
Is Echo's taunting jest;
Dear heart, be kind; ye know my goal—
Rest for my body, peace for my soul,
Folded close to thy breast.
—Purdy Van Kirk, in The Bohemian.

The Old Canoe.

My seams gape wide so I'm tossed aside
To rot on a lonely shore
While the leaves and mold like a shroud enfold,
For the last of my trails are o'er;
But I float in dreams on Northland streams
That never again I'll see,
As I lie on the marge of the old portage
With grief for company.

When the sunset gilds the timbered hills
That guard Timagami,
And the moonbeams play on far James Bay
By the brink of the frozen sea,
In fantom guise my spirit flies
As the dream-blades dip and swing
Where the waters flow from the Long Ago
In the spell of the beck'ning spring.

Do the cow-moose call on the Montreal
When the first frost bites the air,
And the mists unfold from the red and gold
That the autumn ridges wear?
When the white falls roar as they did of yore
On the Lady Evelyn,
Do the square-tail leap from the black pools deep
Where the pictured rocks begin?

Oh! the fur-fleets sing on Timiskaming
As the ashén paddles bend,
And the crews carouse at Rupert House
At the sullen winter's end;
But my days are done where the lean wolves run,
And I ripple no more the path
Where the gray geese race 'cross the red moon's face
From the white wind's Arctic wrath.

To the death-fraught way from the Saguenay
To the storied Nipigon
Once knew me well, now a crumbling shell
I watch the years roll on,
While in memory's haze I live the days
That forever are gone from me,
As I rot on the marge of the old portage
With grief for company.
—George T. Marsh, in Scribner's Magazine.

The Good Moment.

Here are the heights and spaces—here, in view
Of love and death, the silence and the sky,
We are content to put contentment by
And work our sad salvation out anew:
Here all mean ways of living, all untrue
Measures of life, are done with—you and I
Can gage our deeds by God's eternity,
And find the right a simple thing to do.

But when the uplifting moment passes—when
The pitiful happenings of every day
Encompass us, and windy words of men,
Will not the years beset, perhaps betray?
—Now, 'tis not hard to plan the perfect way;
Will it be easy to walk in it then?
—Gerald Gould, in Fortnightly Review.

Song.

Dear, though you wander over peace and passion,
Searching the days to prove yourself untrue,
You can not hide me. Still, in my own fashion,
I shall come back to you.

In other eyes, on lips that hid you doubt me,
In music, in the little things we knew,
In your blind prayers for happiness without me,—
I shall come back to you.

God keep you safe through all the ache of learning,
Through all the wrong you need to be and do,
Till in the wise joy of unfeared yearning
I shall come back—I shall come back to you!
—Brian Hooker, in Harper's Monthly.

Emilio De Gogorza, the Spanish haritone, will be the next artist presented by Manager Greenbaum. His season will open Sunday, November 8, and three concerts will be given in this city and one in Oakland.

YOUR HAND

is the only one that can unlock your box in our Safe Deposit Vaults. Your valuables in one of our steel boxes can not be lost by theft or fire. For this protection $4.00 per year and up.

CROCKER SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS

CROCKER BUILDING Junction Post and Market, S. F.

Pears'

The ingredients
in many soaps, require free alkali to saponify them.

The rich, cool
lather of Pears' does not result from free
alkali, fats or rosin.
Pears' and purity
are synonymous.

Matchless for the complexion.

The Palace Hotel Company

announces the serving of
Afternoon Tea in the Laurel Court

FAIRMONT
HOTEL

every afternoon from 3:30 to 6 p. m.
beginning Thursday, Oct. 15

MUSIC

Yourself and friends are cordially invited to be present.

Why Not Make Your Home At The Hotel Jefferson

Turk and Gough Streets
Facing Jefferson Square

A superior class hotel with every modern convenience and comfort. Operated on the American and European plans. Special rates to permanent guests. Special attention paid to the table—we invite comparisons. Management Noah W. Gray, formerly manager Alexander Young Hotel, Honolulu, and Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

You Can Live At The Hotel Jefferson
Better And For Less Than At Home

HOTEL
DEL MONTE

AN IDEAL PLACE FOR PERMANENT RESIDENCE

All the luxuries of the best city hotels
—amid superb natural surroundings—
special weekly and monthly rates.

H. R. WARNER, Manager

Hotel Majestic
(Sutter and Gough)

A homelike hotel for refined people. Very best cuisine. Moderate prices. Rates on application.

Hotel Argonaut

Society of California Pioneers Building,
Fourth Street near Market, San Francisco.
Commercial, family; 400 rooms; rooms with detached bath, $1 per day; rooms with private bath, $1.50 and up per day; breakfast, 50c;
luncheon, 50c; dinner, including wine, $1.
Seating capacity, 500. The Hotel Argonaut's free bus meets all trains at ferries, steamship landings and all depots. EDWARD ROLKIN, Manager.

A COMPLETE FOOD
Baker's Cocoa
 50 Highest Awards in Europe and America

Registered U. S. Pat. Office

A medical writer says: Baker's pure cocoa acts as a gentle stimulant, invigorating and correcting the action of the digestive organs, furnishing the body with some of the purest elements of nutrition.

Walter Baker & Co., Ltd.
 Established 1780. DORCHESTER, MASS.

Miss ELSIE de WOLFE

Represented by Mrs. EDGAR de WOLFE
 Interior Decoration and Objects d'Art
 Temporary Offices - Granada Hotel
 Telephone Franklin 422

EDUCATIONAL

IRVING INSTITUTE Boarding and Day School for Girls
 2126 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

Music, languages, art, elocution. Kindergarten, primary, grammar, high school, and advanced grades. Accredited by the universities. Twenty-ninth year. Non-sectarian. Pupils admitted at any time. New term opens Monday, August 3.

MISS ELLA M. PINKHAM, Principal.

CALIFORNIA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

Irving Institute Building
 Full corps of teachers in every department. Send for catalogue.
 HERMANN GENSS, President.

THE HAMLIN SCHOOL

A Boarding and Day School for Girls
 Accredited by the California universities and by Eastern colleges. Advanced courses of study are offered to high school graduates and to those who have left school, with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to a school diploma. Pupils charged from the week of entrance.
 Classes in Instrumental and Vocal Music and in Drawing and Painting are formed and facilities are given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basket Ball, etc. For particulars, address
 MISS HAMLIN,
 2230 Pacific Avenue, San Francisco.

MISS FRIEND'S

Boarding and Day School for Girls
 College, preparatory and general courses
 105 TILTON AVE.
 San Mateo, Cal.

Oakland Conservatory of Music

1170 Madison Street, Oakland, Cal.
 The largest, oldest established, and most thoroughly equipped school of genuine musical instruction on the Pacific Coast.
 Conducted on the lines of the most noted European and Eastern schools.
 Full prospectus on application.
 Director, ADOLF GREGORY.

Miss Harker's School

Home and Day School for Girls. Certificate admits to College. Excellent Departments in Music and Art. New building, thoroughly modern, steam heated. Address,
 MISS HARKER, Palo Alto, Cal.

PENNSYLVANIA, Ogontz School P. O. OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES

Twenty minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. The late Mr. Jay Cooke's fine property. Miss SYLVIA J. EASTMAN, Miss ABBY A. SUTHERLAND, Principals.

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy officers who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Rear-Admiral J. A. Rodgers, U. S. N., has been commissioned a rear-admiral from September 7.

Colonel Peter Bomus, Ninth Cavalry, U. S. A., arrived last week on the transport Sheridan from Manila and is now on leave of absence. He will be retired from active service on November 20. He is spending a fortnight in this city and will then proceed to New Orleans for a visit and will, it is probable, go abroad almost immediately after his retirement.

Colonel J. Walker Benet, Ordnance Department, U. S. A., chief ordnance officer, Camp of Instruction, Atascadero, was ordered to proceed on October 17 to Benicia Arsenal for the purpose of preparing and transmitting his cash paper as disbursing officer. Upon the completion of this duty he returned to the Camp of Instruction.

Lieutenant-Colonel Adam Slaker, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., has been granted leave of absence for one month.

Lieutenant-Colonel Louis Brechemin, Medical Corps, U. S. A., has been granted one month's leave of absence and will sail from San Francisco for the Philippines on the transport leaving December 5, instead of November 5.

Naval Constructor T. F. Ruhm, U. S. N., is ordered to the Bureau of Construction and Repair, Navy Department.

Commander A. P. Niblack, U. S. N., has been ordered to additional duty in command of the Chicago and Olympia.

Lieutenant-Commander Powers Symington, U. S. N., has been detached from the West Virginia and ordered home to await orders.

Lieutenant-Commander H. J. Ziegemeier, U. S. N., has been detached from command of the Chicago and Olympia and ordered to the West Virginia as navigator.

Major Walter A. Bethel, judge-advocate, U. S. A., judge-advocate of the Department of California, has been ordered, in addition to his other duties, to take charge of the offices of the chief quartermaster of the department and of the chief commissary of the department during the absence of Lieutenant-Colonel Robert R. Stevens, deputy quartermaster-general, U. S. A., chief quartermaster of the department.

Major William Stephenson, Medical Corps, U. S. A., having completed his examination for promotion, which was held at Washington, D. C., has been ordered to return to his regular station in the Philippines.

Captain Hubert L. Wigmore, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A., is ordered relieved from duty in the office of the quartermaster-general of the army and from further duty at Washington Barracks, D. C., and with the Second Battalion of Engineers, and will proceed to New York City to take station thereat and report in person to the senior officer of the Board of Engineers for duty as disbursing officer and recorder of that board and to Lieutenant-Colonel Solomon W. Roessler, Corps of Engineers, for duty under his immediate orders.

Captain A. S. Bickham, Quartermaster's Department, U. S. A., arrived from the Philippines on the transport Sheridan last week and has received orders to proceed at once to Philadelphia to report for duty at the clothing depot in that city.

Captain Arthur M. Shipp, Eighth Infantry, U. S. A., has been granted leave of absence for three months.

Captain Frank D. Webster, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., Camp of Instruction, Atascadero, has been granted one month and fifteen days' leave of absence, to take effect upon his return from the maneuvers.

Lieutenant B. Y. Rhodes, U. S. N., has been ordered to the Wyoming when that vessel is commissioned.

Lieutenant J. J. Hannigan is detached from the Albany and ordered to the Wyoming when commissioned.

Lieutenant H. T. Baker, U. S. N., is detached from the North Carolina and ordered to the Wyoming as executive officer and navigator.

Lieutenant Herman Kobbe, U. S. A., has been assigned to the First Cavalry and ordered to take station at Fort Rosecrans, San Diego, California.

Lieutenant Norman H. Davis, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., Presidio of San Francisco, has had the leave of absence granted him extended thirty days.

Lieutenant George E. Turner, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., Paso Robles, has been relieved from duty in connection with the Progressive Military Map of the United States upon completion of the quadrangle on which he is now working and will return to his proper station.

Lieutenant Oscar A. Russell, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., has been relieved from duty as judge-advocate of the general court-martial appointed at the Presidio of San Francisco and Lieutenant Arthur G. Hickson, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., has been detailed as judge-advocate in his stead. Lieutenant Russell has been ordered to proceed without delay to Fort Mason and to report to the commanding officer for duty in connection with taking over the public property at that post.

Lieutenant Louis Roberts Dougherty, U. S. A., has been assigned to the Second Regiment, Field Artillery, with station at the Presidio of San Francisco.

Lieutenant Edward W. Terry, Twenty-Second Infantry, U. S. A., has been ordered to proceed from Fort Gibbon, Alaska, to Fort William H. Seward, Alaska, for station.

At the Hotels.

Among recent registrations at the Granada Hotel were Mrs. C. L. Maynard, Mr. and Mrs. A. Heilbronner, Mr. W. R. Bacon, Mr. Frank Van Horn, of New York; Dr. and Mrs. Alex. Warner, Dr. B. Marshall, Miss Mary Jacks and Miss Margaret Jacks, of Monterey; Mr. and Mrs. Louis Hirsch, New York City; Mrs. and Miss Coggins.

The following are among the registrations at Hotel Argonaut: Mr. and Mrs. J. Gorham Morris, Vallejo; Mr. H. C. Heinrich, Chicago; Mr. J. E. Luttrell, Singapore, China; Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Cotterman, Toledo, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Thorpe, Los Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. Warren S. Shaw, Boston, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. R. McNery, San Bernardino, Cal.

The following are among the registrations at the Fairmont Hotel: Mr. G. S. Jackson, Yokohama; Mr. and Mrs. B. D. Baldwin, Honolulu; Mr. R. Uchida, Tokyo; Mr. L. A. Spence, Chicago; Mr. A. Mackay, Scotland; Mr. Albert Stenvenson, Chicago; Admiral and Mrs. P. C. Hallyday, Washington, D. C.; Mr. Ben C. Truman, Miss Truman, Mr. D. M. Dorman, Mr. N. S. Mullan, Mrs. Joseph W. Winston, Mr. and Mrs. M. Reider, Mr. and Mrs. T. T. Kellar, Los Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Davis, Austin, Texas; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Tobin, Burlingame.

The following are among the many visitors to the Hotel St. Francis: Baron Frederick von Schroeder; Mr. Paul H. C. Giong, Mr. Cheng Loo, Mr. Woo Hsin, China; Senator Thomas Kearns, Salt Lake; Major House, India; Mr. W. Wilfrid Wilson, England; Mr. Victor Rodite, Paris; Mr. A. Seale, Manila; Dr. and Mrs. Medin, Stockholm; Mr. C. Camacho, Chili; Dr. Otto Graf, Vienna; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Robertson, Australia; Colonel and Mrs. M. H. Hecht, Mrs. F. M. Miller and Miss Miller, Fresno; Mr. and Mrs. Louis Hirsch, New York; Mr. Norman W. Church, Los Angeles; Rev. Joseph S. Glass, Los Angeles; Captain and Mrs. George Reed, U. S. M. C.; Mrs. George Grant Mitchell and Miss Elizabeth Mitchell; Captain David T. Cordray, U. S. A.; Lieutenant and Mrs. R. C. Davis, Lieutenant and Mrs. C. S. Fries, Lieutenant and Mrs. G. A. Bisset.

Overland Route Book.

This artistic publication is designed "to create travel to California, with San Francisco as the central point." Certainly nothing could be better arranged to turn desirable faces toward the Golden West. The pages are simply crowded with delicately colored illustrations showing the growth of the State from the day when Indians were used to attack the railroad builders down, to the present time, when California's scenic wonders and commercial supremacy attract the wonder of the world. The colored letter-press is a good ally to the illustrations, the descriptions being terse and vivid. Those who wish to tempt their Eastern friends to San Francisco and the Pacific Coast can do nothing more effective than to send them a copy of this attractive and artistic production. It is issued by the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific passenger departments, San Francisco.

European Days.

Professor Gayley of the University of California gave the first of a series of lectures on "European Days" on Tuesday in the gymnasium hall of the Hamlin School, which was filled with an audience of well-known ladies. In a series of finely painted word-pictures he dwelt on the dramatic scenes of Versailles and transported his audience to the events which he so well portrayed. The next lecture is on the "Mysteries of the Temple," that great prison-house in Paris.

HOTEL MANX

POWELL AT O'FARRELL

Breakfast 50c, Luncheon 50c, Dinner $1, Sundays and Holidays $1.25

Chief, Emil Burgemeister, sous chef, M. Bailly of the Hotel Ritz, Paris, and latterly of the St. Regis, New York.

N. M. KELLAR, Manager

A LADY, experienced traveler, having highest references, social and otherwise, sailing in January for four months in Egypt, Italy, Sicily, Paris and London, wishes to chaperon two young ladies for the trip. Terms $2500 each, which will include all expenses. Further information on request. Address with references, P. O. Box 155, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.

THE OCVLARIVM
Henry Kahnt Co.
OPTICIANS
 PERFECT FITTING
EYEGLASSES
 AT MODERATE PRICES
 644 MARKET ST.
 OPP. PALACE HOTEL
 BRANCA 1399 VAN NESS AVE.

Hotel St. Francis

The Colonial Ball Room, a pure expression of a Classic period, is designed not as a picture, but as a background for the brilliant color of society.

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF JAMES WOODS

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"

Building, concrete, steel and marble. Located, most fashionable shopping district. 210 rooms, 135 baths. Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests. Most refined hostelry in Seattle. Absolutely fireproof. English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

FOR SALE OR EXCHANGE

for Real Estate or Commercial Interests

An Estate in the

Foothills of Santa Clara County consisting of 550 acres of land, of which 100 acres are in orchard and vineyard, balance in grain land, woods and pasture. Large modern dwelling, with extensive and beautiful grounds. Winery, barns, men's quarters, and cottages are all newly built and in excellent condition. Pays large income, being exceptionally located to produce fruits and wines of the finest quality. Vineyard and orchard could be leased for a term of five years to bring good interest on the entire investment. Thousands of cords of wood to be cut, selling at $7 per cord on the spot. Water supply abundant. Further particulars on application. Address Box 22, Argonaut.

Beautiful Furnished Home

for Rent from December 1

In San Mateo, opposite Uplands, and close to new polo fields. Rent very reasonable to desirable party.

Oscar Heyman & Brother

113 MONTGOMERY ST.

Hotel Rafael

San Rafael, Cal.

Open year around. Headquarters Automobile League. New and commodious garage. Fifty minutes from San Francisco. Complete change of climate. Titirun or Sausalito Ferry. All modern conveniences.

F. N. Orpin, Proprietor.

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

"He is good to his wife." "Indeed! How so?" "He doesn't live with her!"—Town Topics.

Church—My son lost an eye and an arm in the Philippines. Gotham—Oh, has football reached there already?—Yonkers Statesman.

Mrs. Knicker—How did you know your husband was working down in the office? Mrs. Youngbride—I telephoned, and Central said "Busy."—New York Sun.

First Society Matron—I've just paid $300 for a fascinating little rag to wear to your bridge. Second Society Matron—So charmed! Who is your ragman now?—Life.

"De successful men," said Uncle Ehen, "keeps quiet so's he kin hear opportunity knockin' at de do'. De failure tries to do all de knockin' hisse'f."—Washington Star.

Mother—Johnnie, why are you beating little sister? Surely she has not been unkind to you? Johnnie—No, mamma; hut she is so fearfully good. I simply can't stand her.—Fun.

Diggs—You believe that whisky is good for a cold, don't you? Swiggs—Yes, hut how did you know? Diggs—Oh, I've noticed that you nearly always have a cold.—Chicago Daily News.

"How is young Chunkett getting on in college?" "Splendidly. He would have made the scrub team his first year if he hadn't been deficient in all of his studies."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Blobbs—Bjones is the most unlucky fellow at cards I ever met. Slobbs—Then I suppose he is lucky in love. Blobbs—I suppose so. At any rate he has never been married.—Philadelphia Record.

"There is a movement on foot," said Mr. Snoope, "to prevent the marriage of weak-minded persons. What do you think of it?" "I think it's rot," answered Mr. Growch. "Why, who else even wants to get married?"—Cleveland Leader.

Tenement Tessie—And de novel says de heroine had a willowy form, used to pine for her lover and would spruce up when she seen him coming froo de gate. Shanty Sue—Gee, where did she work—in a sawmill?—Chicago Daily News.

Mrs. Mulligan—Mrs. O'Hooligan, I'm jist after comin' from the perlice station, an' they have yer son Moike there, dhrunk as a lord.

He was arristed this avening. Mrs. O'Hooligan—Moy! Moy! Dhrunk, is he? An' it isn't a wake, Mrs. Mulligan, since he promised me he'd kape out o' pollyticks.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Doctor—Did your husband follow my directions? Did he take the medicine I left for him religiously? Patient's Wife—I'm afraid not, doctor. He swore every time I gave him a dose.—Boston Transcript.

Squire's Daughter—Would you mind throwing your little hoy into the pond? I want to see if my dog will rescue him. Villager—Certainly not. Squire's Daughter—I do wish you would. You're the second woman I've asked who has said "No."—Pinch.

"What will we do when the trees are destroyed?" asked the forestry experts. "I suppose," answered the serenely solemn statesman after some thought, "that in such an event we will be obliged to depend for wood entirely on the lumher yards."—Washington Star.

"You are going to say something soulful," declared the fiancé. "I see it in your lovely eyes." "What I was going to say is this," responded the fiancée. "Won't you wear a rubber hand around your head nights, so as to train your ears not to stick out?"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Stranger (in Dreoryhurst)—Is there a place here where I can get a square meal? Uncle Welby Gosh—Yes, sir; there's a restur'nt 'round the cawner where you can git the best meal this side o' Chicago if you don't mind its bein' a leetle expensive. They'll sock you fur 35 cents, hut, hy gum! it's wuth it!—Chicago Tribune.

"But, look here," said the indignant antiquary. "In my article on early Grecian sculpture I distinctly mentioned Phidias. Why has his name been deleted?" The editor smiled quietly. "When," he said, "you find old man Phidias getting his work advertised in this paper under five shillings a line you come right around and let me know."—The Bangkok Times.

Young Wife (rather nervously)—Oh, cook, I must really speak to you. Your master is always complaining. One day it is the soup, the second day it is the fish, the third day it is the joint—in fact, it is always something or other. Cook (with feeling)—Well, mum, I'm sorry for you. It must be quite hawful to live with a gentleman of that sort.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

HUNTER
BALTIMORE
RYE

THE STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE FOR OVER FIFTY YEARS. A BLEND OF MARYLAND'S FINEST STRAIGHT RYE WHISKIES. THE AMERICAN GENTLEMAN'S WHISKEY.

HENRY CAMPE & CO., Inc.
Distributors for California and Nevada,
San Francisco, Cal.

THE CITIZENS' ALLIANCE, 920 Merchants Exchange, calls the attention of the public to their Free Labor Bureaus, located at No. 10 City Hall Ave., San Francisco, and No. 804 Broadway, Oakland. All classes of male help furnished absolutely free. Subscription to "The Citizens Magazine" $1.00 per year. Orders solicited.

Toyo Kisen Kaisha
(ORIENTAL S. S. CO.)

S. S. Hongkong Maru... Tuesday, Nov. 17, 1908
S. S. Tenyo Maru... Friday, Dec. 11, 1908
S. S. Nippon Maru (via Manila)...
..... Saturday, Jan. 2, 1909
Steamers sail from company's piers, Nos. 42-44, near foot of Second Street, 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Hiogo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.
Round-trip tickets at reduced rates.
For freight and passage apply at office, 240 James Flood Building. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

BONESTELL & CO.
PAPER

The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us.
CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE
118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna, San Francisco.

Mr. Publisher:

All the mechanical work on THE ARGONAUT is done by us.

WILLIAMS PRINTING CO.
Phone Douglas 2905 406 Sutter St.

36TH YEAR PHONE DOUGLAS 200

SCHMIDT LITHOGRAPH CO.
LABELS
CARTONS ETC.

SECOND AND BRYANT STS. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. SAN FRANCISCO, LOS ANGELES, PORTLAND, SEATTLE.

Clubbing List.

By special arrangement with the publishers, and by concessions in price on both sides, we are enabled to make the following offer, open to all subscribers direct to this office. Subscribers in renewing subscriptions to Eastern periodicals will please mention the date of expiration in order to avoid mistakes:

American Magazine and Argonaut.....	$4.25
Argosy and Argonaut.....	4.40
Atlantic Monthly and Argonaut.....	6.70
Blockwood's Magazine and Argonaut...	6.20
Century and Argonaut.....	7.00
Commoner and Argonaut.....	4.10
Cosmopolitan and Argonaut.....	4.35
Current Literature and Argonaut.....	5.75
English Illustrated Magazine and Argonaut	4.70
Forum and Argonaut.....	6.00
Harper's Bazar and Argonaut.....	4.35
Harper's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.70
Harper's Weekly and Argonaut.....	6.70
House Beautiful and Argonaut.....	4.75
International Magazine and Argonaut...	4.50
Judge and Argonaut.....	7.50
Leslie's Weekly and Argonaut.....	6.70
Life and Argonaut.....	7.75
Lippincott's Magazine and Argonaut...	5.25
Littell's Living Age and Argonaut.....	9.00
Mexican Herald and Argonaut.....	10.50
Munsey's Magazine and Argonaut.....	4.40
Nineteenth Century and Argonaut.....	7.25
North American Review and Argonaut..	8.00
Out West and Argonaut.....	5.25
Overland Monthly and Argonaut.....	4.50
Political Science Quarterly and Argonaut	4.90
Puck and Argonaut.....	7.50
Review of Reviews and Argonaut.....	5.00
Scribner's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.25
Smart Set and Argonaut.....	5.25
St. Nicholas and Argonaut.....	6.00
Sunset and Argonaut.....	4.25
Theatre Magazine and Argonaut.....	5.75
Thrice-a-Week New York World (Democratic) and Argonaut.....	4.25
Weekly New York Tribune (Republican) and Argonaut	4.50
Weekly New York Tribune, Weekly New York World, and Argonaut.....	5.25

EASY FOR YOU

If you have a room to furnish, let us submit a plan. We have the new things which you ordinarily see first in the houses of others. Let others first see these things in your house.

Furniture
Carpets
Rugs
Draperies

D. N. & E. WALTER & CO.

Van Ness and Sacramento

Wholesale
Retail and Since 1858

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXIII. No. 1649.

SAN FRANCISCO, OCTOBER 31, 1908.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10 payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breems Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opéra. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at F and Thirteenth Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Denison News Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains.

Published at 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal.
Telephone, Kearny 5895.

THIRTY-SECOND YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: The Late President Gilman—End of the Campaign—The "Argonaut's" Ticket—Mr. Sinclair Speaks—The Hatfield Case—The Constitutional Amendments—Japan and the Fleet—Editorial Notes.....	273-276
CAMPAIGN TOPICS	276
OLD FAVORITES: "The Elopement," by John Gerald Brennan; "In the Commonwealth".....	277
INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All over the World.....	277
DANIEL COIT GILMAN, EDUCATOR: Early President of the University of California, Head of Johns Hopkins a Quarter of a Century.....	277
NORTHERN AND SOUTHERN CHIVALRY: XXXVII. By Jerome A. Hart.....	278
A WOMAN'S JOURNEY: Mrs. Hubbard Tells How She Completed Her Husband's Work in Unknown Lahrador	279
A BAD CASE. By a Distressed Wife.....	280
"A THUNDERSTORM IN PARIS." Translated for the Argonaut from the "Annales" of Henri Nicolle.....	280
BOOKS AND AUTHORS. By Sidney G. P. Coryn.....	281
NEW PUBLICATIONS	281
LITERARY NOTES: Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip..	282
FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.....	282
CURRENT VERSE: "Summer's Close," by Madison Cawcain; "The Nced of the World," by Ella Wheeler Wilcox; "Minstrels in Bloomsbury," by Arthur Upson; "Men Never Know," by Helen Hamilton Dudley.....	282
DRAMA: The Racing Game in the Play. By George L. Shoals	283
VANITY FAIR	284
STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise	285
THE MERRY MUSE.....	285
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy.....	286-287
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day.....	288

The Late President Gilman.

The death of Daniel Coit Gilman, for twenty-five years president of Johns Hopkins, recalls one of the least pleasant episodes of California's educational history. Gilman, then in the very prime of life, was the second president of the University of California. He was not only a scholar, but an administrator of high capability; and if he had remained at Berkeley he would undoubtedly have given to the State University an impetus and an organization that would vastly have aided its subsequent development. But a rampant politicalism allied with Grangerism, failing to comprehend the man, took the attitude of suspicion and enmity towards him. In a hundred petty ways he was criticised, interfered with, and pestered by the political and social autocrats of a very crude day. His scholarship was sneered at by ignorance and presumption as "impractical" and his social manners, which, while gracious, were formal, elaborate, and elegant, served to make the point of many a vulgar joke. In sheer disgust Dr. Gilman abandoned the university, which for twenty years after floundered about helplessly and haplessly through a series of ill-considered and misfit administrations. Not for a full quarter of a century did it fairly emerge from the blight brought upon it by the resignation and departure of the one man who, associated with its beginnings, might have done great things for it. Dr. Gilman's later career at Johns Hopkins, testifying as it did to the largeness of his capabilities, has always been a reminder to persons of long memory of what California lost through its bad treatment of one of the most elevated and distinguished characters that our country or our era has produced.

End of the Campaign.

We are in the last days of a presidential campaign the like of which the present generation has not seen. In many respects the change is wholesome and refreshing. It is something to escape the brass-banding, the parading of uniformed and torch-bearing clubs, the furious rushing of cheap spellbinders up and down the land, the general over-excitation which has marked presidential seasons since the Civil War. These methods, in truth, had become familiar, tiresome, and ineffective. It was high time to abandon them. None the less, we probably owe much of the season's surcease to the fact that, owing to special circumstances which do not need to be explained, the funds available for campaign uses have been less than in former years. What would have happened if, as in other times, the campaign committees had been permitted to milk the corporations, we can only surmise. Probably it is a case where propriety has been aided by poverty. We have seen the like in other relationships and connections; it is by no means the first instance of better taste, better manners, a truer dignity, and a higher morality as a consequence of moderate as distinct from lavish resources.

But we are not quite sure that the dignity saved at the point of organized and subsidized flamboyancy has not been lost in the degeneracy of campaign tactics on the part of the candidates themselves. We have seen in the present year a distinct let-down from old-time ideas of propriety on the part of candidates. We have seen the nominees of both the great parties shouting into the ear of mechanical talking machines; we have seen them going, if not from house to house, at least from county to county making three-minute spiels, five to the hour, over automobile tailboards; we have seen in several of the so-called doubtful States a kind of personal "drumming" for votes on the part of presidential candidates better in accord with general conceptions of precinct politics than of anything higher. It is a far cry from these practices to the day when a presidential nominee was presumed to go into dignified retirement from convention day until he appeared at the polls at Charlottesville or Quincy to demonstrate his plain citizenship by casting his vote like any other of the multitude.

The change is due in part to a general modification of political and social ideas, and it was prodigiously promoted when Mr. Bryan took the stump twelve years ago. Largely, too, it is a product of that strenuous and obtrusive personalism which Mr. Roosevelt has introduced into the politico-officialism of the country. Whatever Mr. Roosevelt may or may not have done in other respects, he has certainly robbed the presidency of something of that dignified and almost reverent character which came to it by inheritance from the days of the fathers and which prior to eight years ago had been fairly sustained. If our ideas of the presidency and of the dignities and manners which ought to hedge it in have somewhat declined, the source of that decline will easily be identified by those who make permanent history in the character and doings of Mr. Roosevelt. Those who by taste or temperament like the slap-dash manner in the White House will commend Mr. Roosevelt; those who with the Argonaut believe that the virtues and the value of the presidential office would best be sustained by a more reserved and dignified bearing will feel that something has been lost through Mr. Roosevelt, and will hope for the day of its restoration.

On the other hand, there has been a distinct moral gain in the attitude of the presidential candidates toward each other during this campaign. The spectacle of Mr. Taft and Mr. Bryan present at the same board and each contributing to the gayety of a civic feast was distinctly a pleasant one. And pleasanter still was the meeting of these gentlemen at luncheon last week with a mutual friend. It is a cheerful and hopeful thing, truly, when candidates for the presidency may so respect each other and each respect himself that friendly meetings and greetings, even in the height of the campaign, are possible.

Practically speaking, it has been a campaign without definite "issues." Mr. Taft is an avowed and pledged tariff reformer; Mr. Bryan is a tariff reformer by tradition and likewise by specific pledge. Finance has not been an issue, since Mr. Bryan no longer stands for silver and since the country has not been impressed with his bank deposit guaranty proposals, nor even willing to take him seriously in this connection. Philippine policy likewise has cut no figure. The labor issue has degenerated into an amused speculation as to whether or not Mr. Gompers will be able to deliver the "organized labor vote"—if there be such a thing—according to the terms of the shameless trade made at Denver. Even the so-called Roosevelt policies have hardly formed an issue: first, because nobody has been able to define what these policies are; second, because they are as much Taft's as Roosevelt's; and third, because Bryan claims them as his own. With all his furious intrusions into the campaign, the President has not been able to make himself an issue, although at one time he came precious near making a wreck of Mr. Taft's chances by one of those running jumps into the fore-front of things so characteristic of him. Mr. Roosevelt's earlier letters served for the moment to put the campaign upon a basis of cheap personalism, and they have made a campaign burden which Taft is still carrying with embarrassment. His later letters have been innocuous, for the simple reason that nobody has paid the least attention to them. It would be an interesting inquiry as to what proportion of the voters of the United States have read so much as the tenth part of the over-much the President has written on the labor aspects of the campaign within the past ten days. On the whole, the nearest approach to an "issue" in this whole campaign has been the question whether the lists of campaign contributors should be given to the public before the election day or after—a great "issue" truly.

However, underlying these trivialities there is one definite issue concerning which there is no doubt or question in any intelligent mind. This issue is the history of the two great parties, with the record and character of their nominees. Where nominally the two men stand for the same thing, as, for example, tariff reform, there has been no question in any informed mind as to the real differences which separate them either in theory or in practice. By tariff reform Mr. Taft means a careful study of the tariff question by those who support the protective system, with such revision of the schedules as may be accomplished without destruction to the general principle involved and with the least possible disturbance of the business of the country. By tariff reform Mr. Bryan means quite another thing—a thing so well understood that it hardly needs to be described. We had a working demonstration of the Democratic theory under Mr. Cleveland some years back. And so all along the line, the proposals of Mr. Taft must be judged by the party through which he works and by the history and tendencies of the man himself. Likewise the proposals of Mr. Bryan must be estimated in the same general spirit of interpretation. Where the history of parties and their tendencies are so well understood, where the temperament, quality, relationships, and character men are so well known, there is no need for any voter to make a mistake. Those who want one kind of a government will vote for Taft; those who want some other kind will vote for Bryan.

One great captain of finance has been quoted in this campaign as declaring that it doesn't make any difference who is President. Possibly Mr. Harriman did not intend to be taken seriously; but whatever his idea may have been, the philosophy and politics of his remark are seriously at fault. It matters a great deal who is President of the United States, for the issues of prosperity or calamity lie in the balance. In other times the country has seen Republican and Democratic policies in the presidential office, and very recently it has seen confidence lost and business prostrate largely if not wholly through alarms originating in the White House, nourished by public addresses on the part of the head of the government and aggravated by boisterous shoutings when things were at their worst from out the Arkansas canebrakes. It matters much during the next four years whether we shall have sane, trained efficiency, mental competence, and moral poise in the White House or whether we shall have another and very different order of things. With Taft we may reasonably hope for an orderly conduct of public affairs, attended by steadiness of the national progress and by reasonable good fortune for the masses of the people. With Bryan in the White House we are likely to have—well, God knows what!

The Argonaut can see no other outcome of the campaign than the election of Mr. Taft. If the radical movement which, undeniably, is abroad in the land were strong enough to turn the tide away from Republicanism and towards Democracy—or rather let us say toward Bryanism—it would have been loud enough in its operations to have made itself heard. In the opinion of the Argonaut not one of the so-called doubtful States is really doubtful. We see no indication that Colorado, Connecticut, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, North Dakota, Rhode Island, South Dakota, or Wisconsin will change from Republicanism to Democracy. There have been serious party quarrels in Ohio and in New York, and it is to be expected under the special circumstances that there may be some defection from the regular party strength, but that this defection will be great enough to turn Ohio and New York, or either of them, from Taft to Bryan is hardly possible upon any system of political calculation worthy of a moment's reflection. Mr. Taft is, we think, now as good as elected. We hold to this opinion in the face of and despite the offensively aggressive assurances of the chairman of the Republican National Committee.

The "Argonaut's" Ticket.

In its general political faiths and beliefs the Argonaut is a Republican; it prefers, other things being equal, to vote for Republicans. But its partisanship does not descend to the "yellow dog" type of loyalty; and if it finds unworthy names on a Republican ticket and better names on some other ticket, it is a free scratcher. In general elections, the Argonaut's ticket is a good deal of a patchwork, and sometimes there are written on it the names of as many Democrats as Republicans. It does not so much vote for party or for mere men as for broad aims of political and social decency. It gives its ballot in support of what it believes to be the general good.

Under a practice initiated by Mr. Pixley more than thirty years ago, the Argonaut commonly prints in its issue preceding days of election the ticket that it intends to vote—a ticket made up of names chosen from every available source. This year it finds no reason to do this, because the election is limited to a few broad purposes, less related to men than to principles, and these purposes are all identified with Republican success.

We want Republicanism to rule in the affairs of the nation, therefore we shall vote for those electors who stand for the candidacy of Mr. Taft.

We want a Republican President to have the support of Republicans in Congress, therefore we shall vote for the Republican candidates. We do this with special pleasure in view of the fact that the nominee in each of our State congressional districts is a man of experience, of known opinions, and of demonstrated character.

We want to see a Republican elected to the national Senate, for the reasons above declared, therefore we shall vote for Republican legislative candidates. And in view of the fact that Republican men in the legislature mean support of Republican policies in State affairs, we thus vote with special satisfaction. Furthermore, we are pleased to believe that the election of a Republican legislature will imply the reflection of Senator Perkins.

In San Francisco the chief significance of this election lies in the reflection its results are bound to have upon the character of our local judiciary. There are four judicial candidacies in each party, but overshadowing them all is the issue whether or not San Francisco is to support or condemn Judge Dunne. The Argonaut believes Judge Dunne to be a pliant tool in the hands of the Phelan-Spreckels-Heney conspiracy. It knows him to be professionally inefficient, a gross partisan, a man wanting in the judicial sense of propriety and decency. It has the word of two ministers of religion, men of the highest character, that he is a plain liar. It is familiar with the record in the Ruef case, illustrating alike Judge Dunne's ignorance of and contempt for the law. It holds Judge Dunne responsible, in affiliation with Francis J. Heney, for the infamies and failures of the so-called graft prosecution. It believes that if the first Ruef case had been tried before a judge of sound character and sound legal standards—a man like Chief Justice Beatty, for example—the arch-criminal would have been in San Quentin more than a year ago.

We think Judge Dunne ought to be beaten, first that our judicial system may be purged of an incompetent and a biased judge, second as a rebuke to the sort of practice that has turned the graft prosecution into failure and contempt.

The practical way to beat Judge Dunne is to vote for the four Republican judicial nominees. To scratch any Republican name on the judicial ticket means, under our system of voting, to contribute to the possibility of Dunne's election, by weakening the vote of a competitor. It is not a case where Dunne stands in a direct rivalry with some one man on the Republican ticket; he stands in competition with them all, and to weaken one of the four nominees is to help him. Therefore, we say, if you want your vote to count against Dunne, vote for each of the four names on the Republican ticket. Don't "plump"; that is a vicious practice at all times, but is especially vicious at this time because it will help a candidacy which ought to be condemned.

All in all, this is an election in which the general purposes which the Argonaut thinks should be sustained are identified with Republicanism. We shall vote a straight ticket, something we have not done for many a year and are not likely soon to do again.

In another column the proposed "Acts" and constitutional amendments to be voted upon in this election are discussed in detail. For the purposes of this writing we need only to summarize the findings of the more extended discussion.

Senate Amendment No. 1—Vote yes.
Senate Amendment No. 14—Vote yes.
Senate Amendment No. 16—Vote yes.
Senate Amendment No. 32—Vote yes.
Senate Amendment No. 26—Vote yes.
Senate Amendment No. 19—Vote yes.
Senate Amendment No. 21—Vote yes.
Senate Amendment No. 33—Vote yes.
Senate Amendment No. 34—Vote yes.
Assembly Amendment No. 3—Vote no.
Assembly Amendment No. 7—Vote yes.
Assembly Amendment No. 8—Vote no.
Assembly Amendment No. 24—Vote no.
Assembly Amendment No. 28—Vote no.
Vote no on "Act" to remove the State capital from Sacramento to Berkeley.
Vote no on "San Francisco Sea-Wall Act."
Vote no on "India Basin Act."

Mr. Sinclair Speaks.

"The labor unions of San Francisco," says Mr. Upton Sinclair, "have submitted to graft and political domination." Now, wouldn't that jar you! When it is recalled that the San Francisco graft régime rode into authority upon the votes of union-laborism and held power over San Francisco for five infamous years through the backing of union-laborism, we can easily see the solidity of Mr. Sinclair's information and judgments. Evidently San Francisco has something to learn from one whose intuitions are so perfect and complete and who has the other merit of being willing to instruct us upon the basis of his casual prepossessions. Another interesting illustration of Mr. Sinclair's intuitive genius is his description of the editor of the Argonaut as a "fat, purse-proud, satisfied old gentleman sitting back in an easy-chair." Really, this is to the life, and it is quite enough in itself to establish

Mr. Sinclair's credit for infallible second-sight. Quite incidentally, isn't it a bit curious that these walking delegates of the downtrodden proletariat seem always to have abundant means to ride about the country in palace cars and automobiles and to stop at the highest priced hotels? Somewhere in this business of socialistic exploitation there must be big profits and quick returns.

The Hatfield Case.

A month or more ago one McAfee, a deputy United States marshal somewhere in Texas, arrested a small farmer of Collin County in that State, James Hatfield, upon a "feeling" that he had murdered a man named Campbell. There appears to have been no evidence at all connecting Hatfield with the Campbell case, but the noise made by the arrest and examination attracted wide attention and brought a multitude of curious people to the jail where Hatfield was confined, to have a look at him. Among this morbid and idle throng there was a woman who had once lived in San Jose and who was sure, without being able to tell precisely why, that Hatfield was none other than Dunham, who, some twelve years ago, murdered the McGlincy family in the Santa Clara Valley. Word was sent to California and the sheriff of Santa Clara County, who had known Dunham, went to Texas to see the prisoner. He was confident that the man under arrest was not Dunham, but the woman who had originally identified him became more positive and upon her declarations, confirmed by the opinions of Marshal McAfee, the governor of California was induced to order Hatfield brought to San Jose. The agents in this pleasant job were the sheriff of Santa Clara County, who all along has known that Hatfield is not Dunham, and a deputy who likewise was convinced that Hatfield was not the man wanted the moment he saw him in the Sherman (Texas) jail. For some reason McAfee and one of his assistants were brought along with the party on the trip home from Texas.

Hatfield, doubly handcuffed and guarded day and night, was brought two thousand miles away from his home to San Jose, where he arrived on Monday morning. On Monday afternoon the corridors of the San Jose jail were thrown open and hundreds of people who had known Dunham pressed in to see the suspect. One glance was enough. Hatfield is not Dunham. He is not even the same type of man, being a heavy, phlegmatic, uneducated creature of the "pore white" breed, aged about thirty-two, whereas Dunham was a nervous, alert, quick-spoken man of education and some breeding, and is now, if alive, forty-four. Not one person among the three thousand who saw Hatfield in the San Jose jail had a moment's doubt in declaring him not to be Dunham. It was a case where a morbid and whimsical woman and an insistent man-hunting official had put a tremendous hardship and cruelty upon an innocent man. Likewise it is a case where the county of Santa Clara and the State of California stand mulcted to the tune of several thousand dollars without rhyme or reason.

