

SAN FRANCISCO HISTORY BOOK

Rxii

SAN FRANCISCO
PUBLIC LIBRARY

REFERENCE BOOK

Not to be taken from the Library

151A-238
49051

Index to The Argonaut - - Vol. LXIII

ALFRED HOLMAN, EDITOR

July 1 to December 31, 1908

EDITORIAL.

Aguinaldo's new ambition, 114.
Aids to beauty, 2.
Alternative plainly stated, 243.
American forum, The, 370.
Another constitution, 179.
Government in Turkey.
Another "example" under the Oregon system, 359.
Argonaut's Ticket, The, 274.
Assaulting the home, 147.
Assault upon Francis J. Heney, 337.
Balkan imbroglio, The, 226.
Beginning at the beginning, 227.
Theodore Roosevelt, Jr.
Better use for Goat Island, A, 194.
Bigotry in England, 195.
Boy detective, The, 193.
Bryan and the Philippines, 82.
Bryanized Democracy, 33.
Bugaboo exploded, A, 243.
Cabinet organization, 433.
California and a new tariff, 193.
California in presidential elections, 81.
Campaign, The, 66.
Case of J. Dalrymple Brown, The, 434.
Case of Judge Dunce, The, 226.
Casey at the bat, 210.
Chairmanship, The, 2.
Republican convention.
Chinese throne, The, 337.
Choosing the man, 163.
Mr. Bryan and Mr. Taft.
Civil service in practice, 227.
Cleveland in retirement, 19.
Cliff House, The, 243.
Congress, 385.
Conscription in England, 131.
Constitutional amendments, The, 275.
Converting the heatben, 291.
Credit an index of character, 177.
Cred of one "politically dissatisfied," The, 290.
Crisis of Democracy, The, 370.
Death of William J. Biggy, 369.
Democracy or a republic, A, 113.
Denver convention, The, 2.
Denver convention, The, 17.
Depopulating France, 115.
Detective and his pay, The, 161.
Devil, The, 195.
Dixie duke, A, 163.
Direct primary in Oregon, The, 241.
Disaffection of India, 386.
Divine right pegs out, 353.
Dog and dog, 242.
The Examiner and Francis J. Heney.
Down-town movement, The, 225.
Dreyfus and Mrs. Stinchel, 419.
Dr. Jordan's ultimatum, 179.
"Earthquake clause" decision, The, 227.
Election, The, 289.
Elihu Root and the senatorship, 354.
End of the campaign, 273.
Exploiting the public, 258.
Feminine sensibility and masculine case, 67.
Foot on the forest, The, 162.
The Calaveras Grove.
Forker, Burton, and "Brother Charlie," 371.
Foreign entanglement, A, 387.
Germ folly, The, 210.
Gompers can not drive the labor vote to Bryan, 82.
Governor Gillett, 241.
Gratifying, 100.
Mr. Heney again on duty.
Grover Cleveland, 1.
Hair and the hat, The, 115.
Harriman-Gould deal, The, 82.
Hatfield case, The, 274.
Heteb Heteb project, The, 291.
His name is Dennis, 51.
Historical value of street names, 146.
House of Lords, The, 386.
Impending conflict, An, 1.
Organized labor at the Democratic convention.
Incident and its moral, An, 2.
Labor troubles on the Oregon berry farms.
Invasion of England, The, 419.
Issue postponed, An, 3.
Mr. Gompers at the Democratic convention.
Jack London, plutocrat, 99.
Japan and the fleet, 275.
Japan's assimilative genius, 98.
Japan resumes her traditions, 145.
Judge Hanford on unionism, 129.
Knocked at a closed door, A, 417.
Labor agitation, The, 243.
Late President Gilman, The, 273.
Late Senator Allison, The, 99.
Latest outbreak at Stanford, The, 306.
Leaders and followers, 338.
Let this "issue" rest, 354.
Line of battle, The, 49.
Lines are drawn, The, 289.
Literary value of two statesmen, 115.
Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Bryan.
Logic of equal suffrage, The, 242.
Man who missed his chance, A, 339.
Minister and society, The, 162.
Money in our pocket, 161.
State Bank Commission report.
Morocco again, 162.
Mote and the beam, The, 418.
Mr. Bryan, 33.
Mr. Bryan and the Democratic party, 305.
Mr. Bryan's plans, 354.
Mr. Hearst's convention, 66.
Mr. Hearst's nemesis, 161.
Mr. Hearst's party, 81.
Mr. Heney and the bear's tail, 51.
Mr. Johnson and the graft cases, 419.
Mr. Sinclair speaks, 274.
Mr. Taft and the tariff, 417.
Mr. Taft's speech of acceptance, 65.
Mr. Taft's Southern aims, 418.
Mystery and a guess, A, 114.
The Gallagher explosion.
National affairs, 305.
Naval quarrel, A, 83.
New Congress, The, 353.
New deal in the Pacific, A, 369.
New element of humor, A, 147.
The Yellowstone Park stage robbery.
New Senate, The, 433.
New times and old grooves, 385.
New Turn in the Hatfield case, 290.
New way with divorce, A, 3.
New York and the Taft administration, 434.
"Nickel-in-the-slot," The, 259.
Not as other men, 227.
Nullity, farce, and scandal, 257.
Old age pensions, 34.

Oregon situation, The, 387.
Oregon situation, The, 339.
Oriental partnership, An, 211.
"Our husband," 19.
Mr. Parkman of Emporia.
Our unsubsidized sea traffic, 258.
Pageantry in Quebec, 97.
Photograph in statercraft, The, 131.
Plain speech on the labor question, 18.
Political phenomenon, A, 194.
Politics in Canada, 194.
Possibilities of the airship, 98.
Pot and the kettle, The, 178.
The workman's vote.
Power site by a dam site, A, 177.
Mr. Hall's claim in the Hetch-Hetchy.
President and Congress, The, 433.
President Dunway—and some reflections, 6.
President-elect and the Pacific Coast, The, 337.
Presumption of Innocence, The, 129.
Primary election, The, 97.
Private control of public powers, 388.
Prohibition movement, The, 145.
Prospective white man's burden, A, 388.
Punishment fits the crime, The, 162.
Punishment for bribery in London, 162.
Real issue, The, 225.
Religious opinion and political life, 306.
Rice in California, 211.
Roosevelt and Bryan, 209.
Ruef at liberty and why, 17.
Saving grace of the bull-whip, The, 130.
Seeming inconsistency, A, 99.
Senatorial service, 131.
Senatorship, The, 113.
The "woman question."
Sins of political omission, 210.
Slowly but surely seeing the truth, 35.
Graft prosecution.
Sober second thought, 355.
Social problem solved, A, 35.
Divorce question solved.
Sorrows of a queen, The, 49.
Sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal, 65.
Mr. William Jennings Bryan's career.
Speaker of the House, The, 370.
Springfield mob, The, 114.
Spirit and the voice of the West, The, 226.
Standard Oil case, The, 66.
Tariff and finance, 388.
Test case, 209.
Liquor license in Los Angeles.
The Examiner and Mr. Heney, 67.
Third Trial for Abraham Ruef, 18.
Tom Johnson on himself, 354.
Transcontinental rates and Oriental traffic, 290.
Twenty-six pleas in extenuation, 83.
Case of Edward J. Ryan, N. Y.
Two conventions, 34.
Undesired visitor, An, 211.
Venturesome word or two, A, 34.
Women in politics.
War clouds in Europe, 242.
What organized labor wants, 307.
Who got the money? 435.
The Panama purchase.
Who owns the laboring man? 178.
Why should women vote? 130.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Admiral Evans, 116.
Aerial navigation in warfare, 389.
American fleet in Australia, 195.
American marine, 84.
Automobile loop-the-loop, 52.
Business and politics, 307.
California Weekly, The, 389.
Case of Colonel Stewart, The, 243.
Case of Edna Clark, The, 339.
Charles Webb Howard, 52.
Claudianes boys, The, 52.
Colonel Henry Watterson and the Cleveland letter, 196.
Count Tolstoy, 195.
Convicts as subjects for medical experiment, 371.
Conviction of Blake, The, 243.
Court of arbitration in England, 371.
Death rate of babies in Chicago, 67.
Democratic newspapers, 115.
Democratic nominee for Vice-President, 36.
Direct primary in Washington, 68.
Direct primary, The, 420.
Dr. Eliot retires, 307.
Dryness, 195.
Dr. Pardee's vocabulary, 148.
Eastern criticism of San Francisco affairs, 372.
Fresno Republican advises, The, 67.
Georgia politics, 68.
Government of Turkey, 83.
Governor-elect Cosgrove, of the State of Washington, 435.
Governor Hughes, 4.
Governor Hughes, 68.
-equitable Life Building in New York, 36.
Heney-Ruef incident, 3.
Henry A. Butters, 276.
Immunity contract, The, 116.
Independent League ticket, 36.
Judge John Garber, 420.
Labor unions in politics, 132.
"Lincoln Road," 51.
Lincoln-Roosevelt League, 52.
Lincoln-Roosevelt League, The, 115.
London condemned by the Rev. W. Kingscote of Greenland, 228.
London Times, The, 4.
Lord Ripon retires, 436.
Miss Mary Greenleaf's broken engagement, 3.
Motor-cars, 389.
Mr. Andrew Carnegie and the tariff, 372.
Mr. Andrew Carnegie's opinion on war, 211.
Mr. Chafin, Prohibition candidate for the presidency, 148.
Mr. Frank H. Hitchcock, 371.
Mr. Hearst's campaign, 211.
Mr. Heney and the Lincoln-Roosevelt League, 83.
Mr. Heney and the newspapers, 228.
Mr. Heney's conduct in court, 36.
Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Gompers, 276.
Mr. Roosevelt's proposed trip to California, 211.
Mr. Roosevelt's word to the Transmississippi Congress, 228.
Mr. Rudolph Spreckels to confer with the President, 228.
Mr. Spreckels in politics, 84.
Mr. Taft's mail, 68.
Mr. Theodore Bell, 84.
Mr. Woodruff and the senatorship, 435.
Mrs. C. P. Huntington's Paris house, 3.
Mrs. Taft, 307.

Municipal Traction Company of Cleveland, Ohio, The, 291.
Nat Goodwin's marriage, 211.
New arrangement with Japan, 389.
New York mayoralty recount, The, 19.
Oregon politics, 389.
Owens River water bonds, 52.
Philip N. Lilienthal, 179.
Politics in Maine, 179.
Postal savings banks, 20.
President and Mr. Pulitzer, The, 420.
Protection of birds in Oregon, 132.
Reclamation of the Sacramento Valley, 212.
Resolutions of respect for ex-President Cleveland, 19.
Retirement of Secretary Metcalf, The, 389.
Rice throwing at weddings, 68.
Ruef case, The, 291.
Sacramento Union offers reward for valor, 36.
Sale of Hunter's Point drydock, 339.
Senator Platt's successor, 339.
Senatorship in Ohio, The, 389.
Slot machine gambling, 4.
Springfield affair, The, 179.
Standard Oil in Oklahoma, The, 84.
Stanford Student, The, 339.
"Suffragette" movement, 372.
Taft's prospective cabinet, 19.
Taft's strong points, 19.
Transmississippi Congress, The, 243.
Transportation in Washington, 83.
Umatilla Indians, The, 84.
Water supply for San Francisco, 3.
W. J. Barnett, 20.
William Hoff Cook, 20.
Woman's suffrage, 389.

BOOK REVIEWS.

BY SIDNEY G. P. CORVYN.
Abraham Lincoln—Henry Bryan Binns, 89.
Adopting of Rose Marie, The—Carroll Watson Rankin, 398.
Alaska, the Great Country—Ella Higginson, 398.
Altar Stairs, The—G. B. Lancaster, 361.
Along the Riviera of France and Italy—Gordon Home, 423.
Anodée's Son—Harry James Smith, 319.
Angel Esquire—Edgar Wallace, 233.
Annabel Channice—Anne Douglas Sedgwick, 318.
Arkinsaw Cousins—J. Breckenridge Ellis, 185.
Art of Singing, The—Sir Charles Santley, 25.
As Others See Us—John Graham Brooks, 361.
Aunt Maud—Ernest Oldmeadow, 217.
Autobiography of Oliver Otis Howard, 137.
Barry Gordon—William Farquhar Payson, 398.
Bay Forty-Niners, The—Everett McNeil, 398.
Beginnings in Industrial Education—Paul H. Hanus, 233.
Bery of the Rectory—Mrs. L. T. Meade, 185.
Bible Series, A, 361.
Big Game Shooting on the Equator—Captain F. A. Dickison, F. R. G. S., 89.
Bond, The—Henry Boyce, 25.
Book of the Pearl, The—George Frederick Kunz, A. M., Ph. D., and Charles Hugh Stevenson, LL. M., D. C. L., 297.
Borderland Studies—George M. Gould, M. D., 201.
Brotherhood of Wisdom, The—Frances J. Armour, 217.
Builders of United Italy—Rupert Sargent Holland, 281.
Cambridge History of English Literature, The—Edited by A. W. Ward, Litt. D., and A. R. Waller, M. A., 321.
Canon and the Text of the New Testament—Caspar René Gregory, 105.
Captain Love—Theodore Roberts, 89.
Cape Cod—Henry D. Thoreau, 265.
Car and the Lady, The—Grace S. Mason and Percy F. Megarath, 185.
Charles the Bold—Ruth Putnam, 57.
Children's Longfellow, The, 265.
Children's Treasure Trove of Pearls, The—Edited by Mary W. Tilleston, 425.
Child's Guide to Mythology, A—Helen Archibald Clarke, 37.
Church of Today, The—Joseph Henry Croker, 137.
Circular Citrease, The—Mary Roberts Rinehart, 153.
Cohler, The—Elma A. Travis, M. D., 217.
Coffee and a Love Affair—Mary Boardman Sheldon, 245.
Coming Greatheart—H. C. Bailey, 319.
Coming Hare, The—Kene Bazin, 361.
Coming Science, The—Heward Carrington, 425.
Counsels by the Way—Henry Van Dyke, 398.
Courage of Captain Plum, The—James Oliver Curwood, 441.
Cousin Cinderella—Mrs. Edward Cotes, 265.
Damaged Reputation, A—Harold Bindloss, 398.
Daniel Boone, Backwoodsman—Frank McKernan, 377.
Diana of Dobson's—Cecily Hamilton, 9.
Drama and Life—A. B. Walkley, 121.
Destroyers, The—John F. Carter, Jr., 89.
Diary of a Looker-On, The—C. Lewis Hind, 201.
Distributors, The—Anthony Partridge, 361.
Divya's Ruby, The—F. Marion Crawford, 281.
Dubuque Union, The—Justin Huntly McCarthy, 319.
Evening Thoughts—J. R. Miller, 441.
Every Man for Himself—Norman Duncan, 345.
Evolution of Modern Orchestras, The—Louis Adolphe Coerne, Ph. D., 322.
Fairy Tales from Folk Lore—Herschel Williams, 201.
Famous French Salons—Hamel, 56.
Federal Usurpation—Franklin Pierce, 25.
Firing Line, The—Robert Chambers, 153.
First and Last Things—H. G. Wells, 321.
Ganton & Co.—Arthur Henry Eddy, 249.
Gardening in California, Landscape and Flower—John McLaren, 441.
Gentle Grafter, The—O. Henry, 398.
Genet Art, The—Edited by E. V. Lucas, 41.
Gilbert Noel—Will N. Harben, 377.
Gorgous Isle, The—Gertrude Atherton, 320.
Great Amulet, The—Maud Dover, 25.
Greater Love, The—Anna McClure Sholl, 137.
Great Miss Driver, The—Anthony Hope, 345.
Green Domino, The—Anthony Dyllington, 377.
Guest Knight, The—Henry De La Pasture, 73.
Guest of Ouesnay, The—Booth Tarkington, 265.
Halfway House—Maurice Hewlett, 57.
Happy Moralist, The—Hubert Bland, 121.
Health and Happiness—Rt. Rev. Samuel Fallows, D. D., LL. D., 297.
Henry James Edition, The, 248.
High Adventure, The—Hugh De Slincourt, 249.
Hiary on Her Own—Mabel Barne-Grundy, 249.

Historic Ghosts and Ghost Hunters—H. Addington Bruce, 322.
History of California—Helen Elliott Bandini, 217.
History of the United States Navy, A—John R. Spears, 89.
Holy Orders—Marie Corelli, 318.
Home Occupation for Boys and Girls—Bertha Johnston, 441.
Housekeeper's Week, The—Marion Harland, 281.
I and My True Love—H. A. Mitchell Keays, 345.
Ibid of the East, The—Frederika Macdonald, 41.
In and Around the Isle of Purbeck—Ida Woodward, 265.
Insect Stories—Vernon L. Kellogg, 265.
183.
Interpretation of Life, The—Gerhardt C. C. Mars, B. D., Ph. D., 361.
In Texas with Davy Crockett—Everett McNeil, In the Land of Mosques and Minarets—Francis Milton and Blanche McManus, 105.
In the Woods and on the shore—Richard D. Ware, 169.
Introduction to the Study of Economics—Charles Jesse Bullock, Ph. D., 233.
Irresistible Current, The—Mrs. I. Lowenberg, 89.
Island Pharises, The—John Galsworthy, 297.
Italia—William Roscoe Thayer, 121.
James Francis Edward, the Old Chevalier—Martin Haile, 151.
Jean Jacques Rousseau—Jules Lemaitre, 137.
Joan of Garioch—Albert Kinross, 316.
Judith of the Cumberland—Alice MacGowan, 345.
Julie's Diary, a Personal Record, 153.
Justice of the Mexican War, The—Charles H. Owen, 441.
Lady Julia's Emerald—Helen Hester Colvill, 105.
Last Voyage of the Donna Isabel, The—Randall Law of the Rhythmic Breath, The—Ella Adelia Fletcher, 321.
Lee and His Cause—John R. Deering, D. D., 153.
Leonare Stubbs—L. B. Walford, 398.
Life and Voyages of Joseph Wiggins, F. R. G. S., The—Henry Johnson, 73.
Life of Henry Irving, The—Austin Brereton, 359.
Life of James McNeil Whistler, The—E. R. and J. Pennell, 375.
Life of Thomas Bailey Aldrich, The—Ferris Greenslet, 423.
Lisbon and Cintra—A. C. Inebbold, 377.
Little Flower of St. Francis of Assisi, The—Translated from the Italian by T. W. Arnold, M. A., 398.
Living on a Little—Caroline French Benton, 281.
Parrish, 167.
Leaven of Love, The—Clara Louise Burnham, 265.
Lentala of the South Seas—W. C. Morrow, 281.
Letters of Cortez—Translated and edited by Francis Augustus MacNutt, 169.
Lewis Rand—Mary Johnston, 215.
Life and Public Services of George Luther Stearns, The, 217.
Life of Goethe, The—Albert Bielschowsky, 185.
Lincoln in the Telegraph Office—David Homer Bates, 73.
Literary Criticism in the Renaissance—J. E. Spingarn, 441.
Little Brown Brother, The—Stanley Portal Hyatt, 231.
Little Brown Juge of Kildare, The—Meredith Nicholson, 217.
Long Arm of Mannister, The—E. Phillips Oppenheim, 319.
Long Odds—Harold Bindloss, 249.
Lord of Lands, A—Ramsey Berron, 361.
Lost Goddess, The—Edward Barron, 153.
Lynch's Daughter—Leonard Merrick, 345.
Man of Genius, A—M. P. Wilcock, 73.
Man Who Ended War, The—Hollis Godfrey, 345.
Man Without a Head, The—Tyler de Saix, 318.
Marcia Schuyler—Grace Livingston Hill Lutz, 9.
Master Influence, The—Thomas McKean, 377.
Memoirs of the Countess de Boigne, 7.
Mills of the Gods, The—Elizabeth Robins, 319.
Mind That Found Itself, A—Clifford Whittingham Beers, 120.
Mirabeau and the French Revolution—Fred Morrow Flinn, Ph. D., 247.
Miscellanies, Volume IV—John Morley, 121.
Miss Barker, and Mr. Wycherly—L. Allen Harter, 297.
Mistaken Marriage, A—F. E. Mills Young, 185.
Mr. Horace Platt's Speeches, 234.
Modern Prometheus, A—Martha Gilbert Dickinson Bianchi, 121.
More, a Study of Financial Conditions Now Prevalent—George Otis Parker, 153.
Motor-Ship through France, A—Edith Wharton, 401.
Motoring Abroad—Frank Presbrey, 73.
Musical Memories: My Recollection of Celebrities of the Half-Century 1850-1900—George P. Upton, 440.
My Life and My Lectures—Lamar Fontaine, C. E., Ph. D., 20.
Next Step in Evolution, The—Isaac K. Funk, D. D., LL. D., 137.
New American Type and Other Essays, The—Henry D. Sedgwick, 41.
New Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge—Edited by Samuel Macauley Jackson, D. D., LL. D., 89.
9009—James Lopper and Fred R. Becholdt, 361.
Northwest Passage, The—Roald Amundsen, 104.
Nun, The—From the French of René Bazin, 169.
Old Mr. Davenport's Money—Frances Powell, 9.
Old Spanish Masters—Timothy Cole and Charles H. Caffin, 169.
On the Open Road—Ralph Waldo Trine, 297.
Oriental Tale in England in the Eighteenth Century, The—Martha Pike Conant, Ph. D., 217.
Orthodoxy—Gilbert K. Chesterton, 317.
Over Against Green Peak—Josephine Humphrey, 345.
Over Breremton's—E. V. Lucas, 295.
Palace of Danger, The—Mabel Wagons, 345.
Panther, The—Anne Warner, 441.
Parerga—Canon Sheehan, D. D., 281.
Peacock's Pleasance, The, 233.
Peggy at Spister Farm—Helen M. Winslow, 169.
People and Problems—Fabian Franklin, 153.
Persia: the Awakening East—W. P. Cresson, F. R. G. S., 57.
Personal Recollections of Wagner—Angelo Neumann, 263.
Peter—F. Hopkinson Smith, 377.
Physical Basis of Civilization, The—T. W. Heine- man, 57.
Pinafore Picture Book, The—Sir W. S. Gilbert, 281.
Poem Outlines—Sidney Lanier, 425.
Post Girl, The—Edward C. Booth, 24.

Present Day Problems—William H. Taft, 57.
 Princess Nadine—Christian Reid, 41.
 Principles of Psychic Philosophy—Charles B. Newcomb, 377.
 Principles of Physiology and Hygiene—George Wells Fitz, M. D., 321.
 Principles of Psychic Philosophy—Charles B. Newcomb, 169.
 Prisoner of the Sea, A—Chauncey C. Hotchkiss, 441.
 Privileged Classes, The—Barrett Wendell, 41.
 Purple and Homespun—Samuel M. Gardenhire, 41.
 Quatrains of Christ—George Creel, 322.
 Quickened—Anna Chapin Kay, 105.
 Racial Contrasts—Albert Gehring, 323.
 Religion and Medicine—Elwood Worcester, 41.
 Reminiscences of Lady Randolph Churchill, The, 312.
 Revolt of Anne Royle, The—Helen R. Martin, 398.
 Richard Strauss—Ernest Newman, 233.
 Riverman, The—Stewart Edward White, 233.
 Rohin Aroon—Armistead C. Gordon, 441.
 Roman Catholic and Protestant Bibles Compared, 73.
 Romance of Roman Villas—Elizabeth W. Champney, 297.
 Round the Corner in Gay St.—Grace S. Richmond, 425.
 Salthaven—V. W. Jacobs, 398.
 Science and Immortality—Sir Oliver Lodge, 323.
 Sense of the Infinite, The—Oscar Kuhns, 249.
 Seven Ages of Washington, The—Owen Wister, 40.
 Shakespeareana, 324.
 Short History of Engraving and Etching, A—A. M. Hind, 377.
 Shoulders of Atlas, The—Mary E. Wilkins Freeman, 169.
 Silver Butterfly of Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, The, 319.
 Social Psychology—Edward Alsworth, 9.
 Soldier's Letters to Charming Nellie, A—J. B. Polley, 9.
 Some Christmas Books, 399.
 Sport of Bird Study, The—Herbert K. Job, 89.
 Standard Concert Guide, The—George P. Upton, 201.
 Standard of Usage in English, The—Professor Thomas R. Lounsbury, 25.
 Statue, The—Eden Phillpotts and Arnold Bennett, 201.
 Story of New England Whalers, The—John R. Spears, 265.
 Stuart's Cavalry in the Gettysburg Campaign—John S. Mosby, 25.
 Studies of the Eighteenth Century in Italy—Vernon Lee, 425.
 Study of Nature, The—Samuel Christian Schmucker, 185.
 Sunny Side of the Hill, The—Rosa Nouchette Carey, 425.
 Tables of Stone—Harold Begbie, 265.
 Teacher of Dante, A—Nathan Haskell Dole, 217.
 Technique of the Novel, The—Charles F. Horne, 217.
 Testing of Diana Mallory, The—Mrs. Humphry Ward, 233.
 Thomas Chatterton, the Marvellous Boy—Charles Edward Russell, 72.
 Three Girls, and a Hermit—Dorothea Conyers, 361.
 Thou Fool—J. J. Bell, 318.
 Together—Robert Herrick, 136.
 To the End of the Trail—Richard Hovey, 185.
 Training the Bird Dog—C. B. Whitford, 233.
 Uncle Tom Andy Bill—Charles Major, 398.
 Vera the Medium—Richard Harding Davis, 398.
 Views and Reviews—Henry James, 137.
 Villa Ruben—John Galsworthy, 441.
 Virgin of Judgment, The—Eden Phillpotts, 425.
 Wage-Earners' Budgets—Louise Bolard More, 89.
 War in the Air, The—H. G. Wells, 377.
 Wayfarers, The—Mary Stewart Cutting, 105.
 Weeping Cross—Henry Longan Stuart, 199.
 Well in the Desert, The—Melville Knapp, 185.
 What the White Race May Learn from the Indian—George Wharton James, 185.
 When Men Grew Tall, or the Story of Andrew Jackson—Alfred Henry Lewis, 88.
 Wooing of Calvin Parks, The—Laura E. Richards, 265.
 White Rose of Weary Leaf—Violet Hunt, 201.
 Wilder Life, The—R. Miller, 361.
 Woman Pays, The—Frederic P. Ladd, 121.
 Woman's Way Through Unknown Lahador, A—Mrs. Leonidas Hubbard, 279.
 World I Live In, The—Helen Keller, 323.
 Wolvoth—Agnes and Egerton Castle, 249.
 Wolvoth, the Wanderer—Escott-Inman, 265.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Flaneur—
 Blanche Bates in a New Melodrama, 245.
 Manhattan's Operatic Rivalry, 357.
 Mme. Chaminade at the Piano, 293.
 Salomé in New York Vaudeville, 53.
 Satanic Rivalry in Manhattan, 149.
 The Harvard-Yale Football Game, 373.
 The Late Mrs. William Astor, 309.
 Tony Pastor, 133.
 Two Theatrical Misfits, 181.
 J. G.—
 The Marathon Race, 117.
 Letters to the Editor—
 As Seen from New York—Irvin J. Weil, 420.
 Caspar F. Goodrich, 339.
 Edward S. Thacher, 68.
 History of Street Names—George Davidson, 180.
 House of the Capulets—Saritá D. Henderson, 339.
 Prohibition in Maine—Henry Hatch, 228.
 Protest, A—William D. Andrews, 372.
 Taft a Better Radical Leader Than Bryan—The New Miracle Play—A First Nighter, 68.
 Lorrimer, Charles—
 A Buddhist Pope in Peking, 421.
 A New Animosity, 248.
 Sir Robert Hart's Good-By, 69.
 Piccadilly—
 A Blazing Inquisition, 342.
 A Friendly Invasion, 163.
 A New Gambling System, 229.
 Literary England, 315.
 Mr. Barrie Scores Again, 197.
 Personally Conducted, 261.
 The Ambassador and the Dancer, 437.
 The Festival of "St. George," 101.
 The Joy of the Fox Hunt, 395.
 The Reid-Ward Wedding, 21.
 Winston Churchill's Wedding, 215.
 St. Martin—
 Exit the Diamond Maker, 37.
 Paris in Darkness, 133.
 Parisians Try to Pick the Ponies, 85.
 Race Suicide in France, 8.
 The French Novel, 311.
 The Labor Union and the Singer, 213.

MISCELLANEOUS ARTICLES.

Absurdities of the Fictionists, 282.
 American Chivalry, 447.
 American National Red Cross, 303.
 American Women in London, 55.
 Another California Tradition Shattered, 216.
 Artist and the Public, The, 344.
 Bank of California's New Home, The, 174.
 Baron von Sternburg's Career, 149.
 Barrie's Dramatic Assistant, 235.
 Bellini's Best Opera, 344.
 Bohemian Jinks, The, 183.
 Lyndel Coot Gilman, Educator, 277.
 Campaign Echoes, 308.
 Campaign Topics, 4, 20, 36, 52, 68, 84, 100, 116, 132, 148, 164, 180, 196, 212, 228, 244, 260, 276.
 Charles Eliot Norton, 298.
 Critic's Duty and Difficulty, The, 307.
 Current Topics, 340, 372, 420, 436.
 Daniel Coot Gilman, Educator, 277.
 Dickens's Inclination to Mimicry, 152.
 DeGogorza Appreciation, A—Josephine Hart Phelps, 331.
 De Koven's Successes, 442.
 English Lobby, The, 264.
 European Days, 271.
 Ex-President Dooley's Own Story of His Big Hunt, 76.
 Feminism in Politics, 292.
 Foyer and Box Office Chat 10, 26, 42, 58, 74, 90, 106, 123, 138, 154, 170, 186, 202, 218, 234, 251, 266, 282, 298, 330, 346, 362, 378, 411, 426, 442.
 Gadski Concerts, The, 446.
 Gottschalk and His Gypsying, 299.
 Grand Opera at Covent Garden, 159.
 Grover Cleveland, M. S., 5.
 Hammerstein's Philadelphia Opera House, 431.
 Hart, Jerome A.—Sardou's Successful Struggle, 341.
 History of Literature, A, 73.
 Howells in Youth and Age, 104.
 Individualities, 8, 23, 39, 53, 69, 87, 101, 119, 135, 152, 165, 181, 197, 213, 229, 245, 261, 277, 293, 309, 342, 357, 373, 421, 439.
 Japanese Treatment of Foreigners, 340.
 Jessie Kaufman's Novel, 218.
 Kipling's India Days, 440.
 Literary Notes, Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip, 10, 26, 42, 58, 74, 90, 106, 122, 138, 154, 170, 186, 202, 218, 234, 251, 266, 282, 298, 362, 378, 402, 426, 442.
 London's Theatrical Year, 90.
 Lydia Thompson's Career, 404.
 Massenet's "Jonker," 408.
 M. Coquelin in London, 75.
 Memories of Bishop Potter, 117.
 Miller, Mary A.—William Keith, 392.
 Miss Garden's Opinion, 426.
 "Mr. Dooley" on Happiness, 280.
 Mr. Hansen's Pictures, 344.
 Mr. Kennedy's "The Winterfest," 443.
 Mr. Platt's Addresses, 320.
 Mrs. Casey's Biography, 192.
 Mrs. Casey's Politics, Fruit and Geography, 202.
 Moving Picture Photography in Colors, 168.
 Napoleon III, 207.
 New Publications, 10, 26, 41, 57, 73, 90, 106, 122, 138, 154, 170, 186, 201, 218, 234, 251, 265, 281, 297, 325, 345, 362, 378, 402, 425, 441.
 New York Grand Opera Season, The, 303.
 Overland Route Books, 271.
 Paste Jewelry, 175.
 Personal, Army and Navy, 15, 31, 47, 63, 79, 95, 111, 127, 143, 159, 175, 191, 207, 223, 239, 255, 271, 287, 303, 335, 351, 367, 383, 415, 431, 447.
 Personal, Notes and Gossip, Movements and Whereabouts, 14, 30, 46, 62, 78, 94, 110, 126, 142, 158, 174, 190, 206, 222, 238, 254, 270, 286, 302, 334, 350, 366, 382, 414, 430, 446.
 Phelps, Josephine Hart—A De Gogorza Appreciation, 331.
 Philosopher's Forecast, A, 245.
 Pictures Whose Painters Are Dead, 250.
 Politico-Personal, 5, 21, 37, 53, 341, 356, 437.
 Princely Happiness, 143.
 Prison Commission Benefit, A, 266.
 Recent Wills and Successions, 126.
 Regulations for International Aeronauts, 75.
 Revival of Fresco Painting, 91.
 San Francisco Artist's Abroad—E. C. B. F., 232.
 Sardou's Successful Struggle—Jerome A. Hart, 341.
 Shoals, George L.—By the Friend of Actors, 313.
 Some Political Echoes, 356.
 Strauss's "Elektra," 303.
 Storyettes, 13, 29, 45, 61, 77, 93, 109, 125, 141, 157, 173, 189, 205, 221, 237, 253, 269, 285, 301, 333, 349, 365, 381, 413, 429, 445.
 Sunday Afternoon "Pop" Concerts, The, 442.
 Tan a Dangerous Acquisition, 74.
 Thomas Hill, Artist, 406.
 The Alleged Humorists, 16, 32, 48, 64, 80, 96, 112, 128, 144, 160, 176, 192, 208, 224, 240, 256, 272, 288, 304, 336, 352, 368, 384, 416, 432, 448.
 The Merry Muse, 13, 29, 45, 61, 77, 93, 109, 125, 141, 157, 173, 189, 205, 221, 237, 253, 269, 285, 301, 336, 349, 365, 381, 416, 429, 445.
 "Three Weeks" on the Stage, 120.
 Thunder in Court, The, 104.
 Thunderstorm in Paris, A, 280.
 Tommy's Pretty Manicure, 360.
 Too Much Salomé, 155.
 Utopian Theatre, The, 168.
 Vanity Fair, 12, 28, 44, 60, 76, 92, 108, 124, 140, 156, 172, 188, 204, 220, 236, 252, 268, 284, 300, 332, 348, 364, 380, 412, 428, 444.
 Voice from the South, A, 260.
 Wife's Confession, The, 267.
 William Keith, Artist—Mary A. Miller, 392.
 Winners in the Olympic Games, 85.
 Yuletide Play, A, 430.

DEATH NOTICES.

Hagues, James Duncan, 122.
 Herrin, Mrs. William F., 191.
 Patton, Mrs., 207.
 Upham, Isaac, 143.
 Hill, Thomas, 406.
 American Husband, An—Y. H. Addis, 403.
 Bad Case, —From St. James Gazette, 280.
 Chumming with an Apache—Frank Bailey Millard, 360.
 Courage of José Borges, The—Walter Adolf Roberts, 314.
 Diana's Bandit Guide—Jerome A. Hart, 422.
 Diana's Vaquero Cavaleade—Jerome A. Hart, 6.
 Federal Power Defied, The—Jerome A. Hart, 214.
 Fort Vigilant and Its Men—Jerome A. Hart, 134.

STORIES.

For Yellow Gold—Frank Bailey Millard, 296.
 From Stone-Cutter to Senator—Jerome A. Hart, 102.
 Gentlemen of the Gutter—Harry Davids, 396.
 Hacienda Holds Carnival, The—Jerome A. Hart, 38.
 Higher Law for Land, A—Jerome A. Hart, 86.
 Husband's Mistake, A—Translated from the French by E. C. Wagener, 376.
 Intrepid Press Perplexed, An—Jerome A. Hart, 166.
 Judge in Contempt, A—Jerome A. Hart, 374.
 Justice Versus Vigilante—Jerome A. Hart, 182.
 Justice of Gold Gulch, The—Jerome A. Hart, 438.
 Lady Visitors at Fort Vigilant—Jerome A. Hart, 198.
 Lightly's Great Success—James Knapp Reeve, 424.
 Magistrate's New Winter Coat, The—Translated from the Danish by Hanna Larsen, 200.
 Marooned—Jerome A. Hart, 54.
 Monsieur's Misadventure—Translated from the French by H. Twitchell, 168.
 None to Pray for Them—Anne Walsingham, 264.
 Northern and Southern Chivalry—Jerome A. Hart, 278.
 Old Man's Dream, The—Douglass H. Morse, 216.
 Picket Number Ten—George Shedd, 184.
 Pierre's Roisserie—Jerome A. Hart, 22.
 Short Work—The—Jerome A. Hart, 294.
 Silver Toes of Fatima, The—Edith Hecht, 152.
 Six Hundred and One—Jerome A. Hart, 390.
 Spurious Divorce, A—Jerome A. Hart, 358.
 Text from Menclius, A—Edwin H. Clough, 393.
 Thousand Drinks per Day, A—Jerome A. Hart, 70.
 Trick of the Trigger, The—Jerome A. Hart, 310.
 Two Feuds Berlin to Tangle—Jerome A. Hart, 262.
 Vicomte's Vagary, A—Translated from the French by Léon de Tinsseau, 405.
 Vigilantes Form, The—Jerome A. Hart, 118.
 Vigilantes' Grand Inquest, The—Jerome A. Hart, 230.
 Vigilantes' Vengeance, The—Jerome A. Hart, 150.
 Vigilantes Versus Judge—Jerome A. Hart, 262.
 DRAMA.
 Phelps, Josephine Hart—
 "Barker" Orpheum Bill, 443.
 A De Gogorza Appreciation, 331.
 Another View of Warfield, 235.
 "A Grand Army Man."
 "Aristocracy," 410.
 "A Satanic Drama, 219.
 "The Devil."
 Black and Red Dramas, 299.
 Blanch Arral's Concert, 363.
 "Brother Jerome," Again, 155.
 Dustin Farnum's "Squaw Man," 250.
 Emilio De Gogorza, 347.
 "Fagan's Decision," 219.
 Hampden and Whittlesey, 73.
 "If I Were King."
 Henry Miller at the Van Ness, 27.
 "The Great Divide."
 Henry Miller's Sydney Carton, 107.
 Melodrama—Balad Opera, 203.
 "The Great Ruby," "Maritana."
 Mrs. Fiske at the Alcazar, 11.
 "Rosmersholm."
 Nordica's Concert, 437.
 "Paid in Full," 379.
 Offenbach's Last Opera, 139.
 "Love Takes of Hoffman."
 "One Summer's Day," 171.
 Orpheum, 43.
 Percy Mackaye's "Mater," 91.
 Romantic "Graustark," 267.
 Rose Stabl's "Chorus Lady," 347.
 Some Playhouse Problems, 43.
 "The Great Divide."
 "The Glansman," "A Navajo's Love."
 "The Devil," 235.
 "The Man of the Hour," 139.
 The Orpheum, 267.
 "The Servant in the House," 59.
 "The Toreador," 219.
 "The Toy Maker," 155.
 Undramatic "Peer Gynt," 410.
 Warfield and Belasco, 187.
 "Zira," 427.
 Shoals, George L.—
 "The Idol's Eye," 123.
 The Racing Game in the Play, 283.
 "Checkers," "Playing the Ponies."
 OLD FAVORITES.
 Aldrich, T. B.—The Guerdon, 293.
 Arnold, Sir Edwin—Buddha and the Woman, 261.
 Blanchemain, Prosper—Twixt Sleep and Waking, 229.
 Bourdillon, F. W.—The Closing Year, 395.
 Brennan, John Gerald—The Elopement, 277.
 Browning, Robert—Solomon and Balkis, 309.
 Burton, Richard—If We Had the Time, 437.
 De Parv—The Rose, 229.
 Desbordes-Valmore—
 You Had My Whole Heart, 229.
 The Roses of Saadi, 229.
 Freiligrath, Ferdinand—Sand Songs, 373.
 French, Herbert—I Heard a Soldier, 437.
 Gautier, Théophile—Departure of the Swallows, 373.
 Fleming, Paul—To My Ring, 395.
 Henley, W. E.—Ballad of Dead Actors, 216.
 Herrick, Robert—Primroses, 165.
 Hugo, Victor—The Veil, 85.
 Jefferies, Charles—Jeannette and Jeannot, 342.
 Keats, John—Ode to Autumn, 165.
 Kipling, Rudyard—Jubel and Tubel Cain, 342.
 Knowles, Frederick Lawrence—Love Triumphant, 216.
 Leland, Charles Godfrey—The Two Friends, 53.
 Mackay, Charles—Under the Holly Bough, 437.
 Malone, Walter—Opportunity, 437.
 Morris, William—
 Before Our Lady Came, 244.
 Atalanta Victorious, 244.
 Moulton, Louise Chandler—
 Come, Sleep, 133.
 When We Confront the Vastness of the Night, 133.
 Were But My Spirit Loosed Upon the Air, 133.
 At Rest, 133.
 Muller, Wolfgang—The Yunker of Volmarstein, 85.
 Nason, Emma Huntington—The Tower of Belus, 357.
 Norton, Caroline Elizabeth—Love Not! 165.
 O'Reilly, John Boyle—At Best, 53.
 Patmore, Coventry—In Parting with Friends, 342.
 Probyn, May—"Portrait of a Lady, 17—" 101.
 Read, Thomas Buchanan—The Closing Scene, 149.
 Scott, Sir Walter—The Last Minstrel, 117.
 Spencer, William Robert—Beth Gelet, 181.
 Thomson, Francis—The Mirage, 395.

Weatherly, Frederick Edward—Douglas Gordon, 53.
 Wordsworth, William—The Happy Warrior, 37.

RECENT VERSE.

Allen, Alice E.—In Autumn, 232.
 Bangs, John Kendrick—The Priceless Thought, 282.
 Blackwell, Alice Stone—The Bond, 232.
 Barker, Elsa—To the Apollo Belvedere, 190.
 Braithwaite, William Stanley—Today and Tomorrow, 72.
 Burton, Richard—
 In the Children's Hospital, 120.
 In the Place de la Bastille, 138.
 Byrd, Mounce—A Good Time, 72.
 Cawein, Madison—
 Summer's Close, 282.
 The Old Gate Made of Pickets, 296.
 The Voice of the Ocean, 346.
 Clegborn, Sarah N.—The Brides of May and September, 190.
 Coates, Florence Earle—Beauty's Path, 158.
 Cole, T. C.—Miller, 407.
 Conkling, Grace Hazard—To Stevenson, of Some Critics, 248.
 Coolbrith, Ina—With the Laurel, 90.
 Davis, Harry—Christmas Sorrow, 397.
 Davis, Stearns—The Glad Day, 296.
 Dudley, Helen Hamilton—Men Never Know, 282.
 Dunbar, Adis—The Spur, 158.
 Dunn, Rhoda Hays—The Closing Door, 72.
 Erskine, John—The Dead Doctor, 88.
 Fenollosa, Mary McNeil—Poor Mary, 158.
 Field, Mary K.—Mater Dolorosa, 234.
 Field, Michael—On a Portrait by Tintoret, 120.
 Foley, J. W.—Love and the Aeronaut, 239.
 Galsworthy, John—The Moor Grave, 190.
 Gallagher, F. O'Neill—The Sea Hate, 296.
 Garrison, Theodosia—
 Defiance, 88.
 The Truth, 170.
 The Victor, 176.
 Gilbert, R. W.—Friede Death, 138.
 Gilder, Richard Watson—On a Portrait of Servetus, 407.
 Goose, Edmund—Melancholy in the Garden, 407.
 Gould, Gerald—The Good Moment, 270.
 Henley, William Ernest—When You Are Old, 42.
 Hinkson, Katharine Tynon—The Wind That Shakes the Barley, 58.
 Hooker, Brian—Song, 270.
 Hughes, Rupert—The Weaver and His Dream, 88.
 Kauffman, Reginald Wright—Bondage, 376.
 The Actor, 376.
 Kemple, S. II.—The Defeated, 42.
 Kirk, Purdy Van—Regret, 270.
 Jewett, Sarah Orne—The Gloucester Mother, 248.
 Lanyon, Helen—The Hill of Dreams, 376.
 Lea, Fannie Heaslip—
 Ninon Grows Old, 190.
 The Dead Faith, 120.
 Lucas, St. John—My Dog, 88.
 Lulham, Habberton—In Autumn Colors, 213.
 Mackaye, Percy W.—The Foremost Scholar, 24.
 Marsh, George T.—The Old Canoe, 270.
 McCormack, William F.—Babylon, 104.
 Miller, E. E.—A Summer Love Song, 42.
 Muse, Will D.—The Martin's Song, 129.
 Noyes, Alfred—At Dawn, 72.
 Park, Humphreys—The Outlaw, 190.
 Pinckney, E. C.—A Health, 440.
 Prentiss, Charlotte—Chanson Louis XIII, 232.
 Roche, James Jeffrey—Put Up the Sword, 213.
 Ross, Robert Erskine—The Song of the Miner, 294.
 Runyon, Alfred Damon—A Song of the Service, 440.
 Scollard, Clinton—
 The Caravan, 138.
 The Lost Glamour, 170.
 The Wind Gulleth All, 213.
 Springer, Tom—Christmas Sorrow, 397.
 Sullivan, Archibald—Love's Tapestry, 104.
 Talbot, Ethel—Yggdrasil, 232.
 Teasdale, Sara—Sappho, 88.
 Tenyson, Alfred Browning Stanley—Adeimantus, 104.
 Towne, Charles Hansen—A Broken Friendship, 24.
 Trebor, Armin—The Poet, 213.
 Tylee, Edward Sydney—Three from Sedgemoor, 248.
 Upson, Arthur—When the Song is Done, 190.
 Van Dyke, Henry—A Mile with Me, 424.
 Walsh, Thomas—The Pathfinders, 346.
 Waterman, Nixon—A Little While, 424.
 Welsh, Robert Gilbert—The Sentinel Scot, 170.
 Whitson, Beth Slater—An Autumn Song, 424.
 Wilcox, Ella Wheeler—The Need of the World, 282.
 Winter, William—With a Handful of Roses, 346.
 Woods, William Hervey—In the Passage, 407.

WEDDINGS.

Abbott-Smith, 126.
 Austin-Faxton, 430.
 Baker-Parkins, 366.
 Boeckerzahn, 62.
 Pogue-Payne, 206.
 Bolton-Curry, 254.
 Booth-Davis, 110.
 Breeze-Norwood, 206.
 Broome-Garcia, 430.
 Burnett-Hammond, 414.
 Cameron-D. Young, 334.
 Chinn-Van Wyeck, 206.
 Clem-Bouton, 30.
 Crosby-Buchanan, 222.
 Draper-Foster, 126.
 Duncan-Dixon, 206.
 Dutton-Welch, 302.
 Edwards-Tarpey, 174.
 Elinwood-Sollee, 350.
 Elinwood-Stone, 350.
 Gerber-Whitaker, 190.
 Gill-Drum, 206.
 Girvin-Duncan, 334.
 Grubb-Cox, 94.
 Hennessey-Sheehan, 254.
 Holden-Angus, 126.
 Ireland-Porter, 46.
 Kuhn-Bowman, 286.
 Lacy-Hamlin, 302.
 LaFarge-Thompson, 206.
 Macomb-Walker, 158.
 McDonald-Davis, 382.
 Merrill-Moulton, 190.
 Miller-Bohrmann, 126.
 Nelson-McDougal, 270.
 Noble-Gentry, 40.
 Power-Trent, 446.
 Petherick-Poutney, 270.
 Renison-Foulkes, 366.
 Somers-Judson, 78.
 Tohin-De Young, 302.
 Torney-Wright, 126.
 Wigmore-Moore, 382.
 Wood-Hyde-Smith, 238.

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXIII. No. 1632.

SAN FRANCISCO, JULY 4, 1908.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10 payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breems Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opéra. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at F and Thirteenth Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Denison News Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains.

Published at 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal. Telephone, Kearny 5895.

THIRTY-SECOND YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: An Impending Conflict—Grover Cleveland—The Denver Convention—The Chairmanship—An Incident and Its Moral—Aids to Beauty—President Duniway, and Some Reflections—A New Way with Divorce—Editorial Notes	1-4
CAMPAIGN TOPICS	4
GROVER CLEVELAND: A Few Recollections of the Personal Side of a Great American Statesman	5
POLITICO-PERSONAL	5
DIANA'S VAQUERO CAVALCADE: XX. By Jerome A. Hart	6
THE COUNTESS DE BOIGNE: A Third Volume Closes a Brilliant Survey of Fifty Years of French Life	7
RACE SUICIDE IN FRANCE: "St. Martin" Writes How Dr. Bertillon Warned His Government That the Nation Is Disappearing	8
INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All over the World	8
CURRENT VERSE: "July"; "Spinsterhood"; "Black-Heart Poppy"	8
BOOKS AND AUTHORS. By Sidney G. P. Coryn	9
LITERARY NOTES: Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip—New Publications	10
FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT	10
DRAMA: Mrs. Fiske at the Alcazar. By Josephine Hart Phelps	11
VANITY FAIR	12
STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise	13
THE MERRY MUSE	13
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy	14-15
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day	16

An Impending Conflict.

Whatever else the Denver convention may or may not do, it is a practical assurance that it will take an advanced position with respect to the labor issue. Mr. Gompers will be on hand; indeed, he is already on hand and hard at work. He demands positive expression and—he will get it. Whereas the Republican labor plank is a mere piece of shuffling and evasion, meaning nothing and intending to mean nothing, the Democratic declaration will be positive and sufficiently "advanced" to meet the wishes of the most radical.

We are plainly at the beginning of a violently aggressive political movement on the part of organized labor. The hope of its leaders was to work upon and through both the great political parties by intimidation and bluster. Mr. Gompers stated the case fairly enough. Organized labor demands for itself special favor and consideration with such re-writing of the laws as will exempt it from the penalties of conspiracy. It demands leave by the methods of the boycott, of picketing, of threats—by any and every outrageous means—to get its way. It wants freedom for its "normal activities"; in other words, it wants license to tyrannize and terrorize any community which for its own purposes it may wish to frighten or injure.

The Democratic party, in its desperate need of votes, will surrender in the sense of so wording its platform as to "placate labor." As usual when serious things are to be done, it will fall to the Republican party to meet the issue. The Republican party sooner or later will have to meet the extreme and insolent demands of organized labor face to face as it has met every other insolent demand, from that of the slave driver down the line of wicked and aggressive selfish interests. First or last, the Republican party will have to take this monster of labor conspiracy by its throat, choke it into reason and respect, and put it back inside the lines of legitimacy and decency. Something indeed was gained at Chicago through defeat of a proposal which the President in his fear of results had foolishly and weakly conceded. But how much better it would have been if instead of straddling and seeking to cloud the issue, there had been a straightforward and manly declaration of basic principles guaranteeing freedom in the industries! How infinitely stronger the party would be today and in the future if instead of shying away from this great issue it had met it squarely and boldly without fear and without evasion! It would have been far easier to scotch this snake now than to do it as the Republican party will surely have to do it later on.

Grover Cleveland.

When Grover Cleveland came to the presidency in 1885 at the age of forty-seven he was poorly equipped for the duties of that great office. Almost his whole life had been passed in a provincial city of western New York and his associations had not been of the best. As a lawyer he did not rank high; as a county official he had been closely associated with the classes which make up the forces of local politics; as a bachelor he had lived without the moralizing and refining influences of domesticity. He came from good Presbyterian stock, people of strong character but of small culture, limited social experience, and no taste. He was so little familiar with the amenities of official and social life as to regard a "strong-minded" sister, a woman who cropped her hair like a man and affected masculine subjects of conversation interlarded with pedantic quotations, a proper mistress for the White House. He had no scholarship, little general knowledge of his own country and next to none at all of the world in general. He had never learned to work through others and at the beginning undertook to do himself pretty much the whole labors of the administration.

We recite these facts not to belittle Mr. Cleveland, but rather to do him honor. At forty-seven most men have attained their full mental and moral stature; it is the exceptional man who has in him any real power of growth after that period. Mr. Cleveland was of the last-named sort; his larger education began with his election to the presidency, and from that day to the day of his death he grew and grew steadily to a degree something approaching personal grandeur of character. He rose as few men rise with the rise of fortune, until at his death last week, at the age of seventy-three, he stood easily the most respected figure in American life. Since Jefferson we have not had in the citizenship of the country one other man who has so completely illustrated the character and the proprieties of private station in combination with large dignities and recognized ascendancy.

The record of Mr. Cleveland's service in the presidency from 1885 to 1889 and again from 1893 to 1897 is one too long and too full even for summarization. He came into office both times under circumstances and conditions so exceptional, he encountered responsibilities so unusual, he dealt with problems so large that mere statement will not serve even to characterize his career. Other Presidents in recent times have had the backing and the guidance of party with the counsel of associates skilled in the practical work of government. Cleveland had no help from his party, for it could give him no support and it was as lacking in governmental experience as himself; in truth it clung like a millstone about his neck embarrassing him, hampering him, discrediting him, until he found the courage to push it to one side and to carry forward the government in contempt alike of its theories and its demands. Cleveland's party would have destroyed his administration and it would have wrecked the country; Cleveland himself rose above his party, boldly accepted his responsibilities independently of party, and carried them with such dignity and effectiveness as to give himself a place among the fixed stars of our national history.

Any estimate of the public services of Mr. Cleveland must accord him distinguished honor as a supporter of the Constitution under circumstances of exceptional difficulty, as a developer of the navy, as a reformer of the land laws, as a purifier of the civil service, as a bold combatant of pension abuses, and as a denier of the privilege of party under any circumstances whatsoever to direct the policies of the country regardless of its responsibilities and interests.

Nobody will claim for Mr. Cleveland freedom from faults and mistakes, but history will not deny to him the high tribute paid by President Eliot of Harvard—a man of courage, strength of purpose, and fidelity to duty. It was these qualities which in the crisis of the silver craze which had been espoused by his party that led Mr. Cleveland to cut loose from party influences and hold the finances of the country upon the one possible sound and safe basis. Again it was these qualities, splendidly exercised, which in 1894 suppressed riot and outrage in the great railway strike at Chicago with the national military forces, emphatically asserting the responsibilities of government in connection with labor riots and making a precedent which other Presidents, including Roosevelt (as in the Southern Nevada troubles of recent date), have been compelled to follow. Still again, it was these qualities which led Mr. Cleveland in 1894 in the crisis of a South American dispute—between Great Britain and Venezuela—to give to the Monroe Doctrine an emphatic assertion which, while it startled the world, vastly augmented respect for American purpose and determination.

It came to Mr. Cleveland to suffer the dislike and resentment of his own party without commanding the immediate approval of his political opponents. He found himself for a considerable period, lasting indeed up to his retirement from the presidency, more persistently and bitterly criticised than any man—unless it be Andrew Johnson—who ever held the presidential office. But in the midst of this long period of stress, a period in which Mr. Cleveland, although the President and living in the White House, was nevertheless the most isolated figure in American life, there was no indication of weakness, no loss of courage, no let-down of purpose. Strong and steadfast in the midst of adversities under which a man of lighter nature would have been crushed, Mr. Cleveland so carried himself that those who then were his severest critics have come to be his warmest eulogists.

In nothing else, perhaps, has Mr. Cleveland's public service been greater than in the fine example he has set of a President in retirement. Where others have trafficked upon the basis of reputation, Mr. Cleveland betrayed no weakness. He could not be brought either by cajoleries or promises of reward into those markets where distinctions like his have a money value. He betrayed no social ambition. Above all he gave himself no license to meddle with politics. His opinions were freely given, but such influences as lay at his hand he declined absolutely to employ, even though importuned again and again. In brief, Mr. Cleveland in retirement showed himself a model of dignity and reserve, a very pattern of those virtues of citizenship so essential to the perpetuity of our system and practically so difficult of illustration in a conspicuous character that we must go back more than a full century for another exemplar.

The change in public sentiment towards Mr. Cleveland has been so radical that we now find it difficult to understand how his purposes ever could have been mistrusted. Among the men of thousands to whom his death is a profound personal grief, full half were among his critics in his active years. And this fact ought to bear in upon every thoughtful mind with tremendous emphasis the fallibility of human judgment with its proneness to ill-considered conclusions and its tendency to censoriousness.

The Denver Convention.

Mr. Theodore Bell may well be gratified at his selection for the temporary chairmanship at Denver. In many respects the temporary chairmanship is the most important official assignment connected with a national convention. It is the temporary chairman who has the first chance at an expectant audience and at an expectant country. The speech of the temporary chairman in assuming his duties is given close attention not only in the hall, but the country over, because it is presumed to be a sort of "key-note" utterance, designed to declare the spirit of the party and of the occasion. It is essentially an opportunity for an orator; and it is scarcely less an opportunity for a writer, for the opening convention speech is always spread broadcast over the country to be read and studied by millions.

What use Mr. Bell may make of this opportunity will, of course, rest upon Mr. Bell himself. Hitherto he has had no such test of his powers. His labors in Congress during his one term there were those calling for industry and social tact rather than for largeness of mind and for powers of utterance. His campaign speeches at home have dealt mostly with domestic matters and have been given in partisan spirit. They have afforded no fair opportunity for large powers and have not been remarkable in any way. What Mr. Bell may be able to do with the larger themes of national interest and under the inspiration of a great occasion, nobody knows. Under such circumstances some minds rise to surprising heights of power; others are sunk under the weight of an overwhelming embarrassment. Commonly speaking, occasions which are expected to inspire great things yield disappointment.

For example, the speech of Mr. Burrows, temporary chairman of the recent Chicago convention, expected to be a very notable one, was commonplace and tedious. Mr. Burrows could think of nothing better to say while all the world was listening to him for the only time in his life than that the country had grown beyond precedent or expectation and to supply the proof in the form of a heavy and wearisome array of statistics. It was all very sound and very important and deadly tiresome. It was entirely "respectable" as an address, but it interested nobody in the convention or out of it. If Mr. Burrows had had the instinct or the powers of an orator, he might have made a speech that would have been quoted ten million times during the campaign and which would have established his reputation as one of the great voices of the time. His failure was lamentable because the opportunity was so great. Let us hope that our friend Theodore will do better.

At this writing there seems no question as to what the Denver convention will do with respect to the presidential nomination. Mr. Bryan will be nominated on the first ballot and probably by unanimous vote. A sufficient number of delegates is pledged to him to assure his nomination even under the two-thirds rule which continues to dominate Democratic national gatherings—an outworn relic of the day when the slave power was in the saddle and when it controlled the Democratic party to its own uses.

Nobody yet knows who Bryan's running mate is to be. Governor Johnson of Minnesota is the logical man and he ought, as a good party man, to take the nomination, since he would undoubtedly give strength to the ticket. But it appears in these modern days that the greater figures of politics—even those who are assumed to stand for ideas, ideals, and all that sort of thing—are more ambitious for themselves than for their parties. They will serve party just so far as it suits their pleasure and ambition—and no farther. Governor Johnson has declined the vice-presidential nomination even without its being offered, and his name will probably not be considered at Denver. There are a thousand possible vice-presidential candidates, a not improbable man being Governor George Chamberlain of Oregon. Chamberlain has twice been elected governor of a State largely Republican and he has very recently, under an extraordinary scheme of selection, been chosen by popular vote for a United States senatorship. A man who has thus demonstrated his quality as a vote-getter is not unlikely to be picked up by a party whose prime need is votes.

Inevitably the Denver platform will be dominated by Bryan. But nobody knows what particular group of his many "isms" the genial Nebraskan will choose to put forward. One of our local papers hit off the situation very well a few days back in a cartoon representing Bryan as a "virtuoso" with bow in hand hesitating to choose among half a dozen fiddles, one representing Democracy, another Populism, another Socialism, another Union Labor, another Prohibition—and so on. Bryan in his time has been for so many "causes" that it is impossible to know which he will choose to put to the front this time. The fact that with the convention day almost here, nobody, apparently not even Bryan himself, knows what the "line" will be illustrates an interesting phase of the situation. Only one thing is certain, namely, that the Denver declarations will be more radical than the Chicago platform. In this, as in past struggles, the Democratic mainhold will be that of enmity and opposition to anything and everything bearing the stamp of Republican approval.

The Chairmanship.

The custom which permits the presidential candidate practically to select the campaign head of the national committee is, perhaps, justified, although something might be said on the other side. In the case of Mr. Taft there appears rather overmuch hesitation—a hesitation indeed which indicates internal embarrassments in his immediate political household. The choice appears to lie between Mr. Vorys of Ohio and Mr. Hitchcock of Washington, both of whom were conspicuous as managers of Mr. Taft's personal campaign prior to and during the convention. Of Mr. Vorys's character and capabilities we know little; of Mr. Hitchcock's connections and methods we know far too much. Hitchcock is a smart young chap brought from somewhere out of the ruck of Washington clericalism into the Postoffice Department by Mr. Cortelyou some five years ago. He developed administrative talents as an assistant postmaster-general in charge of the fourth-class postmasterhips all over the country. The little that was needed to be done in the way of drilling the Southern postmasters for Roosevelt in 1904 was done by Hitchcock without friction; and when Cortelyou by Roosevelt's selection was made campaign chairman of the national committee he took Hitchcock with him. At the end of the campaign the young man was put back into the Postoffice Department under better conditions of responsibility and pay than before.

The country is familiar with Mr. Hitchcock's more recent career. At a time when the Taft boom gave indications of practical weakness he was "detached" from the Postoffice Department and sent South to organize the office-holders of that section in the good cause of working up Taft support. He did this work so well that when the time for the convention approached he had under his personal hand enough Southern votes in the national committee, combined with Taft's Northern support, to make an overwhelming majority. It was at this point that the "steam roller," with Mr. Hitchcock at the lever, began its work of determining all contests Taftwise. Whatever delegations were for Taft speedily got a clean bill of health; whatever delegations were for anybody else were promptly put out of business. It was a cold-blooded business, done under an authority worked up through officialism and by the arbitrary methods familiar in departmental procedure.

Mr. Hitchcock is no doubt a very nice fellow according to his lights, and beyond a doubt he has that kind of ability illustrated in the arbitrary exercise of power and by contempt for the rights of others. But Mr. Hitchcock is not a representative Republican; he is not a man of intellectual and moral initiative; he is rather an adroit and capable manipulator of official-political powers. He ought not to be made, even for campaign purposes, the head of the national Republican party. Republicanism in so far as it has any real value is a moral force, and it ought to be represented in its official headship, not by a political manipulator, however capable, but by a man representative of the party ideas and of the national spirit. Mr. Hitchcock might well be employed by the committee to do the things belonging to his expert capability; but he ought not to be made the figurehead of the party. To do this would be mechanically to lower the standards of Republicanism, to reduce the spirit of party respect, and to weaken somewhat that moral force which is the real foundation of the party.

We can no more afford to reduce the standards of party organization than to reduce the standards of the ticket itself. Mr. Taft, who is a man of large sensibilities, no doubt sees this clearly enough. His difficulty, no doubt, is that of reconciling conflicting ambitions and of conciliating mutual dislikes. A good way out of the difficulty, we think, would be to sidetrack both Vorys and Hitchcock, bestowing the chairmanship upon some man of high national reputation whose activities have not been of a sort to suggest questions as to his character. If Vorys or Hitchcock are half the men they are declared to be by their champions, they will readily accept an arrangement which will relieve the campaign of any aspect of personal contention or private ambition.

An Incident and Its Moral.

The best strawberry gardens in the United States lie in the valley of the Hood River amid the Eastern slopes of the Cascade Mountains in Oregon. The Hood River berry has, in addition to its rich appearance and to its exceptional flavor, another quality which adds to its commercial value. It is what is known as a "keeper"—that is, it will remain in good condition even under high and varying temperatures for a long period. Many carloads of Hood River berries are sent to the Atlantic markets each season, reaching there in prime condition and always fetching top prices.

Recently the business has been put upon a large and what has been thought to be a secure basis. The advantages of climate and soil have been supplemented by artificial aids, including an elaborate irrigation system. The strawberry farmers of the Hood River Valley have been preparing for a fine season; every circumstance has been favorable and with the use of irrigation there has seemed to be no point of hazard in the business. But there have been differences on the point of wages between the growers and the pickers, the former having declined to pay the rates of wages demanded by the latter. The outcome of this difference came last week at the beginning of the season in the form of a dynamite explosion so destructive to the flumes carrying irrigation water as to destroy the prospect of a profitable season. It is just a case of deliberate, cold-blooded, and villainous incendiarism. The berry-pickers, not being able to get the rates of wages they demanded, determined there should be no berries to pick, hence the destruction of the irrigating system. Result: no advantage to the pickers; ruinous loss to the farmers. So much for the material aspects of the case; its moral phase needs no exploitation.

This incident precisely illustrates the practical and moral value of the injunction process. It was known at Hood River that the berry-pickers were fighting mad and that there were desperate characters among their leaders. Threats had been made by men whose names were known, foretelling the precise crime that has since been perpetrated. The injunction process, if it could have been brought to bear upon this situation, would have given time for hot blood to cool down and would probably have prevented this crime, so disastrous in its effects upon an important industry, and so completely destructive in its effects upon the character of the perpetrators and their sympathizers.

And yet we are told by Gompers and others of his ilk that to restrain excited and hot-headed men from crimes of this sort is an act of tyranny and an outrage upon the initiative of labor.

Aids to Beauty.

Mrs. Hetty Green, queen of finance—to borrow a reporter's phrase—now in the neighborhood of seventy years of age, has been perking up. She has been getting her clothes from the best dressmakers and has been taking a course of "treatments" in one of the many "beauty" establishments in New York. All of which is thought by certain fresh young men who write for the metropolitan press to be a remarkably fine joke.

Really we are unable to see why Mrs. Green or any other woman who has the price should not make herself as attractive as possible. A profound thinker has said that a woman's first duty is to be charming, and if good clothes, facial massage, or other adventitious aids may contribute to grace of personal style, they seem legitimate enough. If ever there was a time when personally neglectful and careless habits were regarded as meritorious that time is now, thank fortune, well passed. Facial massage for women is still something of a joke, but where is the difference, pray, between supplementing deterioration as to the face and as to the teeth? And surely nobody now regards it as an affectation to visit the dentist.

And who has a better right to the aids which science may supply than those who are growing old? Youth may indeed decline to share with art the triumph of its eyes; but that is no reason for calling art illegitimate or frivolous in those applications where it can be made an effective ally of beauty and charm. A well-groomed old woman or old man is almost as pleasant an object to look upon as lusty youth, and those who would deny to age the help of the manicure, the barber, the dressmaker, the tailor, the dentist, and the masseur, must belong to that puritanically severe class that would put women in caps at thirty and would make every man an old codger at forty-five.

President Duniway—and Some Reflections.

The election of Professor Clyde A. Duniway of Stanford to the presidency of the Montana State University is from several points of view an interesting circumstance. The future President Duniway is a native of Oregon, a son of the pioneer stock of that State. His first graduation was from a printing office, and from there he went to the Oregon State University at Eugene City. He soon found that while the school at Eugene—this was twenty years ago—was in many ways an excellent one, it was, in the nature of things, local and sectional, limited in its facilities and narrow in its outlook. After a few weeks at Eugene, Mr. Duniway betook himself to Cornell, where after a four years' course he graduated with honors, having in the meantime maintained himself and paid all his college expenses by working as a printer and as a tutor. Mr. Duniway's college training was supplemented by an extended period of travel in Europe under some professional engagement and he ultimately settled down in a professor's chair at Stanford, where for a dozen years or more he has been engaged actively as a lecturer and teacher—and, let us add, always as a painstaking student.

These general facts are sufficiently interesting in themselves, but they are chiefly important to the purposes of this writing because they indicate the sources and influences which enter into the personal and professional character of the new Montana president. Mr. Duniway has indeed drawn largely upon the East and upon Europe for his culture, none the less he is essentially a Pacific Coast man—a product of the country, assimilated to it in mind and character, ambitious (if it be proper to use this word) in connection with it. If he speaks of "home" he does not mean some other country, but here. If somewhere he cherishes personal hopes or the pride of approval, again it is here that they are centred. He is son of our soil, bone of our bone, mind and heart belong to us. Therefore we believe that the regents of the Montana University have done a profoundly wise thing in putting at the head of their school not only a young, growing, and cultivated man but a man of the country.

Everybody knows that something is wrong with our colleges. The fault probably is to be found—when it shall be found—not in one thing, but in a multitude of things. But one fatal point, we believe, lies in a certain detachment of sentiment on the part of our administrators and teachers. No man whose heart is in one country will ever attain his highest usefulness in another. No man whose thoughts of "home" are forever carrying him three thousand—or ten thousand—miles away is at his best. No man who serves in one country with the desire for reputation in another is quite all that he ought to be in so far as the interests under his hand are concerned. It so happens that most of our schools are, of necessity perhaps, administered and taught by men whose closest sympathies relate to places and things far away. Our higher teachers are not men of our own soil, imbued with our own spirit, centred in their minds upon home interests, but rather men who are with us as "foreigners," men whose minds are in better tune with conditions elsewhere than with our own.

In the opinion of the Argonaut we shall not get the best results from our higher schools until we shall be able to man them, so to speak, with men of our own production. This is far from meaning that we must have local narrowness and prejudice in our schools. Breadth of view, scholarship, world-wide sympathy, and universal culture—these things are not inconsistent with a certain intensity of domestic affection, a certain respect and consideration for domestic ideals, a certain sympathy with the spirit and the ambition of this country. We would not put the domestic spirit first; we would not discredit anything worth having because it comes from afar. But we would have our schools so organized as to be in harmony with the spirit of the country, and this can best be done, other things being equal, by putting men of the country in the posts of authority and influence.

President Duniway in his new duties in Montana will share with President Campbell of the State University of Oregon an unique responsibility. It will be that of illustrating the efficiency in practical college life of the Pacific Coast of the man of home breeding and home sympathies.

A New Way with Divorce.

What an ecstatic world this would be if we could but be governed by a permanent committee of women's clubs. How rapidly the problems of the day would melt before an embodied wisdom to which we are now so strangely insensible. The great social questions that have taxed a generation of lawgivers would be solved in an afternoon session, while the collective deliberations of a decade of congresses and parliaments would be easily supplanted by a few feminine minds in conclave assembled and while waiting for the afternoon tea.

For example, take the question of divorce, usually supposed to be not without its difficulties and complexities. It is only the male mind with its deplorable limitations that allows itself to be thus bewildered. The average club woman will handle this problem with an easy finality that is simply staggering and will hand out its solution, signed, sealed, and delivered while you wait. The feat was actually done at the General Federation of Women's Clubs that recently met at Boston. For that matter it has been done over and over again and if no two of the proposals are in agreement it is only another evidence of a mental fertility that ought to be recognized. Upon this particular occasion it was Miss Harriette Lake of Iowa to whom some few minutes were allotted for the purpose of laying this matter of divorce forever at rest. It was more than enough. We can well believe that Miss Harriette Lake of Iowa could settle any question from the tariff to the Directoire gown with the twenty words that she devoted to this one. "Let every engaged couple," says Miss Lake, "register their engagement with the county clerk or some other authorized person twelve months before marriage." That the proposal was met with a "burst of laughter" is but further evidence of the frivolity of the human mind. The president of the Federation, a Mrs. Decker, was justified in instant protest against this levity. She believed that this scheme "would be one of the greatest things we could find to remedy the divorce evil," and then with that ripe and far-seeing statecraft for which her sex will one day be celebrated she added, "You don't have to marry him because you register." Of course that settled the matter and it was just as well that it did, because the Federation proceeded at once to disrupt itself in an acrimonious discussion on the appointment of officers.

Now we are not disposed to pass this matter off with the loud laugh that betrays the vacant mind. A proposal put forward by an unmarried lady and supported by a married lady shows what we may call a rotundity of vision that deserves better things. Our first inclination is toward an emphatic approval, and the more we look at it the more numerous are the evident advantages. The system ought to be adopted and it ought to be extended. The county clerk ought not only to keep a record of engagements but of their results. If the results are not as they should be we ought to know it and the reasons ought to be clearly stated. It ought to be in the power of every would-be Benedict to ascertain the previous experience, if any, of his intended and to estimate the depth of the inroads that have already been made upon her tender susceptibilities. These things should no longer be a matter of luck and speculation, but of official record.

Think of the advantages in the case of breach of promise. The register would settle the matter in a moment and leave nothing to the court but the assessment of damages, and these would depend largely upon previous entries. Not only should there be a record of engagements, but also of the approaches to that delightful state. An argus-eyed law ought to take cognizance of much that it now neglects. It ought, for instance, to be illegal to kiss the summer girl without filing a due notice of intention with the county clerk, and as for the love letters that are now so disgracefully unsupervised they ought to be filed in duplicate with the same official. The divorce evil is the result of our haphazard way of doing things and we are grateful to the Federation of Women's Clubs for pointing out to us that we ought to "pass a law" against it.

Of course there are always some captious ones who will cavil at anything, but they must be frowned down.

It will be urged by malevolent spite that very few girls would be married at all if they were kept under observation for a year. No girl could remain on her best behavior for so long. A sine qua non to wedlock is its unpremeditation and the daring that is always essential to a leap in the dark. The marriage that is not performed in haste is rarely performed at leisure and a certain daredevil recklessness is the chief support of the marriage rate. Then again it will be said that life is too short for such deliberate proceedings. Allowing ten years for a total engagement period, there would be opportunity for only ten "affairs" without making any provision for a possible lack of continuity or for periods of decent mourning. All these things will be said by malcontents and it will be just as well for the Federation of Women's Clubs to prepare to answer them—that is to say, if the Federation ever meets again after the unfortunate animosities that disturbed its momentary harmony.

Editorial Notes.

In the midst of this furious warfare over the water question the Argonaut again rises to remark that the true policy for San Francisco stands plain and clear to the eye of common sense. Private investors own a system which may give us for many years to come a fair water supply both as to quality and quantity. In the remote future we shall need a larger and better supply and we ought to prepare for it by arranging for the reservation of one of several possible sources in the Sierra Nevada Mountains. In the meantime, especially in consideration of our financial circumstances due to the disaster of 1906, we ought to be content to use the facilities already at hand, paying for such use a fair return to those private investors who own the system. To this end we should have a judicial determination of the value of the facilities employed in supplying the city, and upon the basis of this valuation should prescribe such rates for water consumers as support of the system requires, including a reasonable percentage of profit upon the investment. This being the common sense of the situation does not appear to be much in favor of either side. Nevertheless, it is what we shall come to in the end because there is no other solution of the problem.

The only incident of the week to remind the public that it is still afflicted with the Spreckels-Heney-Phelan incubus occurred in Judge Cabaniss's court, being no less than a personal clash between the great prosecutor and his erstwhile friend Ruef. Mr. Heney, who, though he much vaunts his personal courage, is really very easily frightened. He labors under the notion that he is being shadowed and pursued day and night. In connection with some pro forma procedure before Judge Cabaniss on Wednesday of last week, he turned to Ruef, remarking: "You have hired assassins to kill me; if any trouble occurs you will be first to get yours." To this Ruef made reply briefly but very much to the point: "You are a damned liar." It was not a nice incident; it didn't accord with the proprieties of court procedure. And yet somehow it has rather pleased the public, which, wearied to death with the vulgarities of the whole business, is delighted with an exhibition of spirit, even though it be bad spirit. Furthermore, there are those well pleased to see Mr. Heney get the sort of rebuke his court methods deserve.

It is reported from Paris that Mrs. C. P. Huntington has bought a mansion in the Rue-de l'Elysée which was for a long time owned and occupied by the Empress Eugenie, and that she will hereafter spend a good part of each year in it. This is the second curious connection architecturally, if we may so speak, between the Huntington family and Louis Napoleon. The Huntington house in this city which was destroyed in the disaster of 1906 was a copy of a house somewhere out of Paris built by Louis Napoleon, not indeed for Eugenie, but for a woman who was less entitled to his favor. The coincidence is perhaps not very remarkable or important, none the less it seems worth recalling.

Miss Mary Greenleaf of Boston, alleged to be a niece of Henry Wardsworth Longfellow, has broken a matrimonial engagement with a young clergyman over Sausalito way for the purpose of "devoting heart and mind to art." Of course the explanation is that at bottom this young woman doesn't care anything about the young man in the case. If she really and truly loved him, or even thought she did, art could go hang. Incidentally let us remark that any young woman who expects to find in "devotion to art" or in any other of the artificial things of life a substitute for the joys of wifehood and motherhood is grievously fooling herself. Now and again we meet a nice girl who fondly imagines that she is going to find in society, in musical studies, in art, or in something else, that which will give to her mind and character a better and truer poise than the normal experiences and interests of life. But when all is said and done, when art and all the other things have yielded their fullest results, there remains inevitably a narrow, selfish, and disappointed woman. Nobody has ever yet found a better way either for man or woman to develop mind and character, with the things that make life worth living, than to follow the beaten path trodden by our unnumbered grandfathers and grandmothers. The natural experiences and responsibilities of life—that's the true line of development and of happiness. The girl who seeks development and happiness through "devotion to art" is simply a very modern sort of blamed fool.

Governor Hughes of New York appears not to be one of those men who gain favor in defeat. His course in the pre-convention presidential campaign instead of building up his support in New York has tended rather to destroy it. Referring to his unwillingness after his own fight was manifestly lost to get out of the game in the interest of Mr. Parsons's candidacy for the vice-presidential nomination, the Evening Post remarks that in addition to being "cold, headstrong, self-centred, and ambitious, Governor Hughes is ungrateful."

The reforming spirit, now active in so many ways, can not possibly find a better subject for its activities than the slot machine. "Playing the machine" is not only gambling, but it is gambling in a most mischievous form. The smallness of the stake, the availability of the game, the pretense of equity involved in it, the very publicity of it—these circumstances all tend to obscure the moral considerations involved, to soothe the promptings of conscience, to throw moral restraint off its guard. And yet there is no form of gambling more demoralizing nor one whose invitation is more general. Incidentally the "machine" vice tends prodigiously to another serious vice not so fully comprehended now as it will be in time, that of tobacco using. Nothing could be less consistent than our pretentious laws against gambling as a thing immoral and ruinous, while at the same time we allow the slot machine to stand on the counter of every cigar store, a conspicuous invitation to every passer-by and a certain demoralizer of every man—or boy—who yields to its enticement.

The latest report about the London Times is that it has been acquired by Lord Northcliffe, otherwise Mr. Alfred Harmsworth, a widely known editor and publisher of the "yellow" variety. This fact ought to interest certain newspapers at the East who have been having a good deal to say upon the text of recent journalistic discussions in these columns. The New York Evening Post, the Fourth Estate, and others may be able to see in this latest development with respect to the Times that the Argonaut's opinions have not been without justification. The trouble with the Times is that it must compete with a group of sensational rivals, which cost less to make and which appeal to a wider range of readers. Advertisers seek not so much the "better classes" as those who have the habit of buying advertised merchandise. The policy which gives the sensational paper multitudes of readers among cheaper grades of people likewise gives them value as advertising media for those seeking to exploit second-grade clothing, bargain-counter merchandise, and patent medicines. As a matter of business and of business alone, responsible and careful journalism can not compete with slap-dash sensationalism. The famous Gresham Law—that a bad coinage inevitably drives out a better—applies in the world of letters as in that of finance. Conservative newspapers will no doubt be maintained here and there by men old-fashioned enough or whimsical enough to prefer to maintain high character in conjunction with relative poverty than to grow wealthy and powerful by reprehensible methods. But where competition is left to do its work unrestrained, bad newspapers will drive out the good ones.

Secretary Cortelyou will probably "set on the lid" this summer during the absence of the President. Mr. Taft, who held it down before, expects to be awfully busy, and Secretary Root says he won't do it—so, at least, says the New York World.

There are 132 department stores in New York, employing over 10,000 people.

CAMPAIGN TOPICS.

The New York World is justified in congratulating the Republican party upon its discipline, although the comparison with the old Scotch lady who admired the devil for his perseverance was uncalled for. Hardly were the results of the nomination known than a perfect chorus of congratulation filled the air. The allies hastened with one accord to salute the man of the day and to assure him of their support. Senator Foraker, who has not always and upon all occasions seen eye to eye with Mr. Taft, telegraphs "heartiest congratulations and best wishes for success in November." Mr. Taft replies "from the bottom of my heart" and reminds the senator "that I owe to you my first substantial start in public life and that it came without solicitation." Senator La Follette's congratulations are offered "most sincerely," but with the added hope "that you are more in accord with the great body of Republican voters than the platform." Governor Hughes, always thorough, says "under your administration the welfare of the country will be assured." Finally comes Speaker Cannon, perhaps the best abused man of them all, who telegraphs:

I heartily congratulate you. You will be elected by the people in November. Illinois will cast her electoral vote for you. Whatever I can do for your success and that of the party will be done.

It may be hoped that there is no foundation for the Washington rumor that Speaker Cannon is to be supplanted because of his hostile attitude to the injunction plank. Mr. Cannon is not an ideal Speaker, but then so few of us are ideal except in our own estimation. It might be possible to find a better Speaker, but to supplant Mr. Cannon because of an incident that is so strikingly to his credit as his injunction protest would be to the discredit of the administration. Indeed, a good many of his errors have been forgotten in admiration of his sturdy championship of an old-fashioned American axiom that all men have equal privileges before the law.

The administration gave way on the injunction plank only when it became evident that the plank itself would break under their feet. If such a strong Roosevelt State as Michigan would have neither part nor lot in a covert attack upon the courts, what prospect could there be of avoiding a fight on the floor of the convention? Even the threat that Taft would withdraw and that some man who "did not need a platform" would be substituted had no effect upon such stalwarts as Crane, Clark, Dalzell, and Payne, who would not budge an inch, and who did not intend to see the present injunction procedure abrogated in favor of flagrant caste and privilege legislation. As a result the plank was so modified as to allow things to stay practically where they are now, and that this arrangement is bitterly denounced by Gompers and the labor men is proof strong as holy writ of its political sanity. When it became evident that the original proposal meant disaster the revision was agreed to in Washington, and it is said that Mr. Taft wrote it with his own hands. There is no doubt that this happy issue was largely due to Mr. Cannon, who expresses his approval of the change in the following words:

I think the committee on resolutions has made a very commendable expression as to the situation of the Republican party on the two points over which there was so much controversy. The court procedure plank expresses in unequivocal language the traditional confidence of the Republican party in the integrity of the courts and insists that their powers to enforce their processes and protect life and property must be preserved inviolate. The resolution further commends the courts by recommending that what has been and is their practice in issuing injunctions shall be expressly declared in the statutes. I approve the plank as adopted.

Of course Mr. Gompers is angry. Indeed, Mr. Gompers is very angry, but this can be endured with equanimity by those who realize that the only thing really worth dreading is Mr. Gompers's approval. Asked as to his opinions, Mr. Gompers says:

We have been thrown down, repudiated and relegated to the discard by the Republican party. What President Roosevelt and the Federation attempted was to have the injunction abolished. Instead of that the Republican party calls for legislation that will legalize what we have been trying to abolish.

That action is contained in these words of the plank: "We believe, however, that the rule of procedure in the Federal courts with respect to the issuance of the writ of injunction should be more accurately defined by the statute."

That means that what the President wanted and what Mr. Taft desired and what we have been fighting for has been not only defeated, but the suggestion has been made to make the conditions which now prevail more binding. The situation will be taken up tomorrow by the Federation and an official statement will be given out.

John Mitchell was not so explicit. He had no views for publication, but he hinted darkly at what the Federation might do in a situation that was "somewhat cerulean." Unless the Federation wishes to prove what is already more than suspected—that it can do nothing at all—its wisest policy will be one of masterly inactivity. So far as Mr. Taft himself is concerned the one uncontradicted fact is that he himself wrote the revised plank that was adopted and that meets with the approval of the convention. The original proposition came from the President, who supported it from a full arsenal of cajoleries and threats and who abandoned it only when he found that it could not be carried. That the weight of his wrath should now fall upon Speaker Cannon is sufficient evidence of the value of the Speaker's protest.

We shall no doubt hear a good deal of the powers of the injunction during the coming campaign. Mr. Gompers will foam at the mouth and talk pretentious nonsense about the labor vote as though it comprised nine-tenths of the population. The net result will be that Republican workmen will vote for the Republican candidate and Democratic workmen will vote for the Democratic candidate, while Mr. Gompers, like his biblical prototype, will curse by the roadside.

Among the great judges who do not propose to hide their light under a bushel is Justice David J. Brewer of the United States Supreme Court, a man who commands the respectful confidence of the whole nation—always excepting Mr. Gompers. Justice Brewer practically reminds us that "the law is a terror to the evil doer" and that attacks upon the law usually come from that class. The powers of the law, says Justice Brewer, should be enlarged and not diminished, strengthened and not weakened:

Again, the effort is disclosed in the clamor for a restriction of the power of injunction. It has become a political question and a topic for heated denunciation. There never was a time in the history of the nation when the full restraining power of the equity court was of so much importance to the nation. As the population becomes more and more dense and activities increase, the restraining power of the equity court is worth vastly more than the punishing power of the criminal court. It is in line with the highest thought of the day.

To restrict the restraining power of the court is a step backward toward barbarism instead of a step forward to higher civilization. Courts make mistakes in the granting of injunctions. So do they in other judicial action. I know that labor organizations are especially energetic and claim that the power of injunction is used mainly against them. Of course, this is not true. Injunctions are granted against all sorts of persons and organizations every day in the year, and they will come to see that there is no thought of restraining them in the exercise of their rights.

Look at the acts of violence and strife which have been checked or prevented by this restraining power. It does not follow that the power ought to be used against capital and corporations and not against labor. Of course one class can not be restrained.

The restraining power of the courts of equity should be enlarged and not diminished, and the judiciary improved until all people will be assured that the power is only used when necessity requires and the restraints imposed only when justice demands. I am opposed to any curtailment in the powers of the Federal judiciary with regard to injunctions.

Other judges follow the same lead. Indeed, it seems to be the general legal opinion that the very attempt—abortive as it has been—to place a narrow and arrogant class above the operations of the ordinary law is a sinister sign of the times.

The Boston Transcript, taking time by the forelock in order to expedite that laggard's footsteps, has been hard at work making a Cabinet for Mr. Taft. The motto of the Transcript is never to put off till tomorrow what can be done today, and as a Cabinet is an essential part of government why not set about its composition at once?

Mr. Taft would, of course, like to retain Mr. Root as Secretary of State, but it is understood that Mr. Root would rather not be retained. Other Cabinet members willing to be relieved, according to the Transcript, are Secretary of the Treasury Cortelyou, Attorney-General Bonaparte, Secretary of the Navy Metcalf, Secretary Straus of the Department of Commerce and Labor, and Secretary Luke E. Wright. Whether James R. Garfield will be retained at the head of the Department of Interior is open to doubt. Postmaster-General Meyer will probably remain in the Cabinet as Secretary of the Treasury:

The following is a slate for the Taft Cabinet that many of the wiser of the seers and prophets believe will go through: Secretary of State, Representative Theodore E. Burton of Ohio; Secretary of the Treasury, George von L. Meyer of Massachusetts; Attorney-General, Frank B. Kellogg of Minnesota; Secretary of War, Charles E. Magoon of Nebraska, or General Clarence R. Edwards, now chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs; Postmaster-General, Frank H. Hitchcock, who has been manager of the Washington headquarters in the Taft campaign; Secretary of the Navy, Truman H. Newberry of Michigan, now Assistant Secretary of the Navy, or Robert Bacon of New York, now Assistant Secretary of State; Secretary of the Interior, Attorney-General Wade H. Ellis of Ohio, or Secretary Garfield; Secretary of Agriculture, James Wilson of Iowa, or Gifford Pinchot, now chief of the Bureau of Forestry; Secretary of Commerce and Labor, William Loch of New York, now private secretary to President Roosevelt.

This is of course entirely conjectural, but there is no reason why the Washington correspondent of the Boston Transcript should not know just as much about the next Cabinet as any other correspondent.

There is some reason to believe that William H. Berry of Philadelphia will be the Democratic nominee for Vice-President. Mr. Bryan wants an Easterner to balance the ticket and Berry is the very man mentally, politically, and geographically. A Philadelphia Democrat, quoted by the Ledger, says that when Bryan goes East, Berry will go West, so that there will be "the largest hearing and the widest publicity." Mr. Berry himself, when questioned, was inclined to adopt an attitude of bashful silence, but "if the lightning should strike this way, it could not be other than gratifying." Then Mr. Berry overcame his bashfulness and spoke enthusiastically:

We shall have a whirlwind speaking campaign in the debatable States of the East. That is Mr. Bryan's plan, and it will be my plan also if I am put on the ticket. This is to be an appeal to the yeomanry of the country, to the bone and sinew, the brains in the workshops of the land, and I have no doubt of the result. It will be a campaign of reason on the fundamentals of government, from which there has been a very marked tendency to drift in these days.

There is a fine diplomatic flavor about that "I have no doubt of the result."

In the meantime Mr. Dooley, writing in the American Magazine, foresees a festive time at Denver. As this truly great philosopher remarks, "It takes all kinds iv men to make up th' Dimmycratic party an' thin there are hardly enough."

They come to th' convintion fr'm ivry corner iv th' earth, fr'm th' pine-clad hills iv Maine, where th' close season fr a Dimmycrat is on'y two months, to th' banks iv th' Rio Grande, where a Republican has to go over to Mexico to vote. They'll all be there.

They'll be ivry diff'rent kind iv a Dimmycrat iver I seen. There'll be Dimmycrats who believe th' protective tariff shud be destroyed, an' those that believe it shud be tickled. Th' Dimmycratic party has niver altered in its opposition to a protective tariff. It recognizes in this system th' soores iv predatory wealth, an' many iv th' ills that our body polytick is subjick to, includin' th' happiness iv th' few. It recognizes thin an' is glad to recognize thin. How d'ye do? How are ye?

But Mr. Dooley does not understand why Governor Johnson should wish to be a candidate. "A man that is a successfull iditor, a successfull Swede, an' a successfull Dimmycrat in Minnesota, can get a good deal more money with a circus."

GROVER CLEVELAND.

A Few Recollections of the Personal Side of a Great American Statesman.

"A good, stout, rough man-of-all-work is Cleveland," once said George A. Townsend in discussing the President's capabilities, "who not only put the establishment of the government in good running order, but is a first-class watch-dog at the gate." And it is the man-of-all-work that was usually to the fore in whatever rôle Mr. Cleveland was called upon to assume, because he never got over his poor man's love for earning his day's wages. One of his favorite jokes on himself turns on his man-of-all-work proclivities and always gave him keen delight in telling. After his retirement to private life the Cleveland family for the summer months took a home in the midst of a quiet, exclusive community, more notable for its culture than its sporting blood. Before long Mrs. Cleveland heard rumors to the effect that the countryside was shocked by the ex-President's easy-going habits of life. A loyal friend came to them and said: "Mr. Cleveland, there is nothing in this but a little narrow-minded gossip. Your friends hereabout consider the source from which the gossip comes and think nothing of it. It is only the Smith family who are saying that you are ready to hobnob with any old loafer in the country who has a good dog and a gun." Here Mr. Cleveland always stopped to watch the effect of his story upon his audience before he added: "And while I appreciated the valiant stand Mr. ——— was making for my reputation, I had to hang my head and admit that the charge was true." His one qualification for good-fellowship in the field of sport being, as he confessed later, that the sportsman be generous with his bait, considerate of the other man's quarry, never draw his flask in secrecy nor light a cigar with no suggestion of another. These qualities in a man, plus a good dog and gun, made him eligible to "the brotherhood." The one thing he could not tolerate was the unsportsmanlike hunter, of whom he says in his little volume, "Fishing and Shooting Sketches": "There ought to be a law which would consign one guilty of this crime (unsportsmanlike killing) to prison for a comfortable term of years. A story is told of a man so stupidly unsportsmanlike that when he was interfered with as he raised his gun apparently to shoot a quail running on the ground, he exclaimed with irritation: 'I did not intend to shoot until it had stopped running.' This may be called innocent stupidity, but there is no place for such a man among sportsmen, and he is certainly out of place among quail."

It was on the occasion of one of his hunting trips when a younger hunter was shamefacedly trailing his empty game-bag Mr. Cleveland gave him this elegiac advice: "Don't shoot too quickly when the birds fly. That is your trouble. Do you chew tobacco? Well, then, when your bird rises stop long enough to spit over your shoulder before you shoot."

This sage advice Mr. Cleveland seems to have taken himself, in matters of state as well as in the sporting sense. Although of resolute character and prompt action, he usually took time to "spit over his shoulder" before he fired. A New York editor not long ago told of an instance of the President's deliberation before firing, coupled with that keen sense of humor that has saved him many an awkward situation and that happened early in the editor's journalistic career. During the campaign of 1884 this youthful correspondent wrote an article charging Cleveland with having framed the "Horizontal Bill." Mr. Cleveland wrote a letter to the New York Sun, in which the article had appeared, denying the charge in strong terms. Fearing he had gotten himself into trouble with both the editor of the Sun and a man for whom he entertained a respect akin to reverence despite his suspicion of his having framed the objectionable bill, the young man hastened to Albany in order to explain his position and to apologize to Mr. Cleveland. Expecting at least a blast of indignation from this man he had charged on so insufficient evidence, he found, as he put it, "a large, cheerful man in a large, cheerful frame of mind, smoking a particularly large cigar." Upon introducing himself and explaining the reason for his visit the large cheerful man shook hands with him, motioned him to a chair, and offered him a counterpart of the cigar he was smoking.

"But isn't it a pretty strong smoke?" the young man demurred.

"Oh, yes, but you can stand it," Mr. Cleveland insisted with a twinkle in his eye. "Your surroundings are propitious, so you will like it. Almost everything depends upon your surroundings, young man, have you noticed that? I used to smoke a certain cigar when I was a young man in Buffalo that seemed to me to be excellent, so I had some sent up to my rooms. But when I smoked them there at my work they seemed pretty poor stuff. I had been used to smoking them in one of the big beer gardens, you see, and when I got them home I missed the crowd, the sand on the floor, and the general atmosphere. See, young man? Be careful to be in the right surroundings when you smoke. Be careful, too, to be in the right company when you ask questions. When you want to know what I think about certain measures, ask me."

In this interview the young journalist learned the same lesson the young sportsman had learned, although in different terms. It seemed to be an especial form of delight to the "large, cheerful man" to wait until the moment was ready before he fired. Then, because he had waited until the right moment, he usually went straight and true to his mark.

Being a man of such colossal capacity for hard work, going to the bottom of things at any expense of personal effort, Cleveland had no sympathy with the shirker and openly professed not to understand the professional hanger-on and office-seeker when such position was a sinecure.

When he saw the office-seeker's sign gathering on the horizon Mr. Cleveland could be distinctly disagreeable. On one occasion when a certain senator approached him upon this subject and complained about his policy concerning appointments, Cleveland turned upon him with, "Well, what do you want me to do?" "Why, Mr. President," the senator answered; "I should like to see you more expeditious in advancing the principles of Democracy." "Aha!" said Cleveland. "You mean that I should appoint two horse-thieves a day instead of one."

But for the very reason that he made his appointments with such deliberation he was usually sure of the men he appointed, at least in the cases of importance that made it possible for him to know the appointee. Many Californians remember the appointment of Mr. Zach Montgomery as Assistant Attorney-General of the Interior under Attorney-General Garland. To a certain member of the Cabinet Mr. Montgomery's appointment was not agreeable because of his ardent Roman Catholic principles; the main issue of his life-work being the encouragement of parochial schools among Catholic families.

"You have no intention of confirming this appointment have you, Mr. President?" the anti-Catholic senator asked. Receiving no answer the senator went on at greater length to descant upon Mr. Montgomery's zeal in his cause, illustrating his point by citing instances of Mr. Montgomery's energy and determination in carrying his point when once his mind was settled, even showing copies of The Family Defender, the organ of Mr. Montgomery's crusade. Seeing the President showed an interest in what he was saying the senator felt confident of winning the day, but at the end of his argument Mr. Cleveland said in the cheerful tones of a man who has heard good news. "All you have said added to what I know personally of Mr. Montgomery's character convinces me that we need just such indomitable stuff in the department." Consequently Mr. Montgomery's appointment was promptly confirmed by the President and there grew up between these two iron-clad natures a close and enduring friendship.

The man is not living who has ever succeeded in dissuading Grover Cleveland from a point once his mind was made up after due consideration. Resolute, self-contained, honest, he stood alone and unshaken if the forces were against him, but the very strength of his position often brought the forces over to his side. It was a long struggle sometimes, but he possessed the poise of character that enabled him to wait, unless, of course, the means lay within his power to hasten results. An instance of this waiting until his iron was hot before striking was shown at the time an effort was being made in the Senate to talk the Sherman Act to death. After it had been before the House a matter of two months one of the supporters of the act came to Cleveland feeling their cause was lost. "I see no way of breaking this deadlock, Mr. President," he said. "Now, there is Senator ———, for instance, who swears this bill shall not pass until hell freezes over." And the senator was supposed to be the bulwark of the opposition. "Then," said Mr. Cleveland, who had made a move in the matter himself, "you may say to that gentleman with my compliments that hell is going to freeze over in exactly twenty-four hours."

In an address made by Mr. Cleveland last year before the Union League Club of Chicago occurs a sentence we may turn upon himself in the same spirit in which he addressed it to others: "Though it is not given to us to see in the magnifying mirage of antiquity the exaggerated forms of American heroes, yet in the bright and normal light shed upon our beginning and growth are seen grand and heroic figures who have won imperishable honor." For while few men have lived longer under the microscope of public interest than Grover Cleveland, it must be conceded that he has earned fairly and squarely the encomium, "He was a great fisherman, a great statesman, a great citizen, and a good neighbor." M. S.

The recent curious boycott of the press in the Berlin Parliament has a precedent in the Mother of Parliaments, the British House of Commons. A writer in Harper's Weekly recalls that the person involved was no less a celebrity than the late Daniel O'Connell. He condemned the inaccuracy of the parliamentary reports, but he forgot to make allowance for acoustic difficulties and the buzz of intervening conversation. He charged the reporters with the malicious suppression of his speeches, and the gallery then refused to report them at all. "Dan" stormed and thundered in vain, even moving that the ringleaders be brought to the bar of the house. Finally he apologized, and all was well. Lord Lyttleton in 1871 fell foul of the press in the same way, and the late Lord Monteaigle had his name omitted from London newspaper reports for two years because he said something the reporters did not like.

A persistent rumor that President and Mrs. Roosevelt will visit England next year is current in American circles abroad. It is said that he will stay six months in London with his family and will study the organization of the navy and the management of the dockyards.

POLITICO-PERSONAL.

The Buffalo Commercial announces that the Republican presidential ticket will be "Taft and Trusts." The Boston Transcript retaliates by suggesting that the Democratic ticket will be "Bryan and Busts."

Wu Ting-Fang, the Chinese minister, in his address at the University of Illinois commencement exercises, said: "My country's whole history in all the modern years has been a story of foreign aggression. But now, thanks to our indissoluble friendship with America, we are given an opportunity to regain our place before the world."

It is said in Washington that Speaker Cannon has so irritated the White House by opposition to measures advocated by the President that he has been marked for relegation to the ranks in the next Congress. The Speaker is said to have gone beyond toleration in his fight at Chicago, by which he threatened the supremacy of the President in the party.

Vice-President Fairbanks will be conveyed to Quebec in the battleship New Hampshire, there to represent the President of the United States in the coming tercentenary. It is suggested in some quarters that the gentlemen who have been so assiduously declining to be candidates for the second office within the gift of the people of the United States shall make a note of this fact.

Ray Stannard Baker in the American Magazine shows how in South Carolina a little over 2600 votes elect a congressman, whereas it requires 14,000 votes to elect a congressman in Pennsylvania, and 16,000 in New York. Under the present system of political control in the South, therefore, one voter in South Carolina is as influential in national legislation as nearly seven voters in Pennsylvania and eight in New York.

Mr. Jerome's defense to the charge that the gambling law was violated when he shook dice for dollars and drinks with Thomas F. Ryan's son is on the novel ground that "citizens of high character, great intelligence, and distinguished position" do such things; that they also play cards for stakes, and that "such people are of such high character that they can not be presumed to be knowingly committing a felony." To this the New York World rejoins that the great reason why Mr. Jerome should be removed is that he regards certain "citizens of high character, great intelligence, and distinguished position" as immune to the Penal Code.

Speaker Cannon has won the enthusiastic admiration of Philippe Millet, who recently interviewed him on behalf of the Paris Figaro. "What strike one most forcibly," says Mr. Millet, "is the look in the Speaker's sparkling, alert, blue eyes, which seem to be those of a man twenty-five years old, not seventy-two." Millet quotes Speaker Cannon as saying of the labor men of the Federation of Labor: "These people lie impudently. They say I am opposed to workingmen's organization; that is abominably false. I am one who thinks the law is above everything. I judge men and things according to my conscience. I receive orders from no one, and against no one, but I do not admit that any citizen, rich or poor, can put himself above the law."

Leslie's Weekly epitomizes the career of Hoke Smith of Georgia in the following words: "Hoke Smith of Georgia, during his term as governor, has antagonized all those Georgians who disapprove of the disenfranchisement of the negro. At the same time he has lost the regard of those who disapprove of violently strict railroad regulation and the abolishment of all free passes. At the same time he has earned the dislike of all classes who are not the strictest sort of prohibitionists; and at the same time he has made an enemy of Tom Watson, who delivered the Populist vote to him two years ago. Hoke Smith wants office again. If we were Hoke Smith we would decide to want something else."

The report that the commodious dwelling-house in Cincinnati occupied by Mr. Taft and his brother when both are at home has no porch, and that therefore the Canton style of campaigning can not be repeated, is misleading and based on an architectural obliquity of vision. The Taft mansion has a pillared space in front of the company door or entrance, with ten steps leading to it from a walk connecting the street gate with the house. The grounds are ample to accommodate visiting delegations. Mr. Taft, standing on the top step and under the pillared roof of the vestibule, could address several hundred people coherently if the street noises did not drown his voice; the steps would lend themselves admirably to group photography.

A story is current in Pittsburg to the effect that there was a pronounced clash between President Roosevelt and Representative John Dalzell of the Pittsburg district. The story is that Dalzell, a member of the committee on resolutions at Chicago, who comes from the Pittsburg manufacturing district, was called to the White House and asked not to be too aggressive at Chicago against the anti-injunction plank. Mr. Dalzell is said by friends to have answered that, while he would like to oblige the President, his first duty was to his constituents, and that he would oppose at Chicago any anti-injunction plank for the platform. According to friends of Dalzell the interview then became painful and personal, Mr. Roosevelt calling attention to the fact that Dalzell had had a hard time getting named as national delegate and expressing doubt as to his reelection.

DIANA'S VAQUERO CAVALCADE.

By Jerome A. Hart.

XX.

Since Alden's arrival at the Hacienda, Diana found that their conversation at times grew embarrassing. The Vigilantes' visit naturally arose often as a topic. From this the conversation continually drifted toward the Vigilante question generally. It was not that Diana feared a renewal of her heated discussions with Arthur. But her knowledge of the bandit's movements, that he had been hidden in the Hacienda, that she was a party to it, that he might even now be lurking in its precincts, that her host was utterly ignorant of the whole affair, and that the fugitive was probably the man who shot Arthur—this secret preyed upon her, and destroyed her peace of mind. Likewise it prevented her from discussing freely the topic which the rest of the household seemed to favor—for Diana was frank and truthful—deceit was intolerable to her—and already she was writhing under the burden of keeping the fugitive's secret.

She was seated in the potio, gazing absently at a book from which her mind was far away. Near her, beside the fountain, was Mrs. Lyndon, diligently counting stitches in some fancy work. Diana's troubled face she did not notice. And under cover of her reading, Diana continued to brood.

She wished—oh, how she wished—that she could talk as freely to Arthur on this topic as when they had first met. It was with a twinge that she reflected how different was her position now. Since she and Alden had first talked together on this subject, he had been shot by outlaws, and his life in danger; the outlaws had been pursued both by the law and by the Vigilantes. He knew that the Vigilantes, whose cause she so earnestly espoused, had in their hot pursuit come within the very gates of the Hacienda. There was a time when she could have triumphantly told him this to prove that he was wrong in his dislike of the Vigilantes—that they were swifter to pursue his assassins than the leaden-footed law. But not now—no, she could not tell him that now. How could she affect to triumph over him for the Vigilantes' alertness when she herself had thwarted them? To conceal her part in their defeat would be a poor, pitiful falsity—almost a lie.

Could she tell Arthur the truth? No—it did not seem so. How could she tell him she had hidden the escaping outlaw from the Vigilantes? What reason could she give for thus defeating the Vigilante vengeance? Perhaps the very man whom she had shielded was the one who had shot Arthur. Perhaps the fugitive was the murderer of the express messenger. She did not know all this, it was true—the only reason she had even to think it might be true was the placard offering a reward for a man who had lost a finger. The fugitive whom she had hidden had lost a finger from his right hand. But that alone did not prove him to be the guilty man. Still, what right had she to hide a man within Plancha Grande's walls, and to keep it a secret from Captain Helmont? Was it not an abuse of his hospitality? Suppose the Vigilantes discovered that the fugitive had been harbored at the Hacienda; suppose they caught him, and he confessed it; suppose they revenged themselves on Captain Helmont? She shuddered as she thought of what might happen as the result of her indiscreet action—for now she saw it was inexcusable, although at the time she believed it was a merciful act. She looked uneasily at the stalwart form of the captain, coming down the arched walk from the other end of the long patio; she reflected with a kind of terror that she was keeping a secret from this honest gentleman, who treated her with devoted friendship, with warm-hearted hospitality—a secret which might gravely affect his peace of mind—perhaps even threaten his life—one could never tell what the Vigilantes might do. And when she saw too the frank face of Arthur Alden, whose boyish eyes spoke only too plainly of their devotion to her, she asked herself with a start if it were true—had she really helped to hide a man who might have been Arthur's murderer?

But they were approaching. With a sigh Diana stifled her emotion, and strove to look as cheerful as if she had no secret weighing on her mind. For the first time she began to have grave doubts of the value of intuition. Like many of her sex, she often acted on impulse, and believed implicitly in intuition. Such believers come to sudden conclusions, and shape out courses of action without premeditation. It is their theory that with them intuition replaces the slower processes of reason and logic relied on by the masculine half of humanity. This combination of intuition and impulse would be an admirable one if it could always be depended on. But often it bitterly disappoints its believers—frequently they find they should have looked before they leaped. For young women to share secrets with men whom they know is often undesirable; secrets shared with strangers they usually have reason to regret. Diana was not the first young woman who, having shared a secret with a stranger, was sorry.

Helmont and his guest were talking animatedly as they slowly drew near, Arthur still on his long chair borne by mosos. They had gone up to the tower top for the view of the valley, but they had returned talking about other matters than scenery, for Arthur was saying:

"If you are so much opposed to the Vigilance Committee, captain, why have you never associated yourself with any of the organized Law-and-Order men?"

"Mainly because I am not a citizen. Others, I know, have no such scruples. But I feel that a foreigner has no business meddling."

Here they were interrupted by Mrs. Lyndon, who had come to dread all discussions of the Vigilantes. "Oh, captain," she said, rising, "I want to show you that agave plant—it's just about to burst into blossom." And the two elders left the others seated by the fountain.

"You heard—we were still talking Vigilante," said Arthur, with a smile. "How unfortunate that such a man as Captain Helmont should refuse to take part in settling these unhappy differences!"

"Yes, it is a pity," assented Diana mechanically.

"Still, I suppose we regret his defection from different sides—you from the Vigilante standpoint, I from the Law-and-Order."

"Am I so unreasonable an advocate of the Vigilantes then?" she asked.

"Oh, really, I beg your pardon," exclaimed Arthur. "I ought not to drag in this vexed Vigilante topic."

"But why not?"

"Because I fear that I annoyed you when we last spoke of it."

Diana's uneasy conscience made her resent this—it seemed as if he dimly suspected she had reasons for not wishing to talk about it.

"Oh, no," she said, affecting to laugh. "I was not annoyed, but I may have been too earnest. We both grew a little heated—more so than was necessary, perhaps, over a question of law."

"Particularly as the law seems to agitate other people here but little," Arthur went on, reassured by her demeanor. "Both the Vigilantes and the Law-and-Order men seem to care little for the law."

"What has led you to doubt the loyalty of your own side?"

"My conversation with Captain Helmont. He is a man of high character, and opposed to the Vigilantes; but he says frankly that he does not rely on the law to protect his land from invasion by the miners, but depends on his own armed forces."

"He certainly puts his words into effect," said Diana. "He makes his soldiers maintain strict discipline, and there are sentries posted at the Hacienda gates night and day."

"So I have observed. I suppose it would be practically impossible for an unauthorized stranger to enter, wouldn't it?"

Diana hesitated—she felt that her face was betraying her discomposure as she replied: "Yes—no—that is, I think so."

Arthur looked at her in some surprise. "It may be," he said at last, smiling, "that our worthy captain over-values his veterans and exaggerates the strictness of his discipline. Perhaps you know of instances where his sentries have been easily passed?"

Diana evaded answering the question. "I would not be apt to know," she said. "The sentries never stop me, so I would not notice any infringement of the rules." And then, feeling uncomfortable at her evasion, she turned the conversation back to where it was. "There are other ways in which the captain is not entirely consistent in his attitude toward the Vigilantes," she said.

"Indeed? What?"

"Although he condemns them for their secret tribunals, he himself has for years held a private court here in his Hacienda."

"Yes, but he has to, on this immense rancho, with these simple natives, who do not speak the language or understand the laws of their conquerors. It was a rule of the Mexican régime. Probably he presides over them as a justice in their disputes and minor offenses."

"Not minor offenses alone—I think he exercises complete control here," replied Diana.

"But surely he would not claim the right to try and sentence offenders coming from outside his rancho. Suppose a murderer were to seek shelter here; suppose the Vigilantes really had traced to Plancha Grande the fugitive whom they mistakenly supposed to be hidden here. Do you think Captain Helmont would claim the right to try such a fugitive's life or liberty?"

Again he thought Diana looked disturbed. Again she hesitated before replying. "No, I don't think he would claim the right to try such a fugitive," she said at length. "But if he is a Law-and-Order man, would he not be justified in saving a fugitive?"

"I don't think I understand you—in what way do you mean?" asked Arthur.

"I mean would it not be his duty to harbor the fugitive and protect him from the Vigilantes?" she replied. "From his attitude and yours toward them, that would seem to be his duty."

Arthur paused and reflected. "To give asylum to the fugitive, and to protect him," he said at last, "yes—I suppose that would be his duty as a citizen, in view of possible danger to the fugitive's life from the Vigilantes, who in the eyes of the law are an illegal body of armed men."

Diana was losing her qualms of conscience in the ardor of debate. "If the Vigilantes persisted in an attempt to seize the fugitive," she went on, with a demure look, "would you consider the captain justified in resisting them?"

Again Arthur hesitated, but he finally gave a reluctant assent.

"Then you believe the Vigilantes would have no right to use their illegal armed force to apprehend a fugitive, but that the captain would have the right to use his illegal armed force to rescue one?" demanded Diana triumphantly.

Arthur could not help looking vexed. Diana's Socratic cross-examination had brought him, a legal logician, to shame—to open shame as it turned out, for the amused faces of Mrs. Lyndon and the captain, who had just returned, showed that they had heard the end of the argument and the triumph of Diana. The lawyer in him might have overborne the lover, and led him to attempt to overturn her ingenious sophistries. But—perhaps fortunately for him—Diana was left with the laurels of victory and the last word, for Mrs. Lyndon here intervened.

"Are your voices still for war?" she said. "Let me offer my good offices, if not too late."

"And if it is too late—what then, madame?" asked Helmont.

"Why then, captain, à la guerre comme à la guerre! But what in the world are you two belligerents discussing? If this illegal armed force should assault the Hacienda I sincerely hope the captain's illegal armed force will be larger than the enemy's!"

"You have only to say the word, and it shall be as you wish, madame," said the captain gallantly. "Evidently you believe in Napoleon's maxim—"

"That Providence is on the side of the largest battalion?" asked Mrs. Lyndon.

"No—Napoleon's phrase was different. He declared that Providence is always on the side of the heaviest artillery. By taste and training Napoleon inclined to cannon. He was an artillery officer, if you remember—he knew that a single cannon is worth many men. When the Section Lepelletier revolted in Paris he placed grape-shotted cannon at the street angles, and swept the intersecting streets clean as though with a bloody broom. In many ways Napoleon was perhaps an unpleasant person, but he was an excellent artilleryman."

"Now you know you're not a Chauvinist, captain—only esprit de corps makes you defend the Little Corporal."

"True," assented Helmont. "As an old artilleryman myself—"

"Cela s'entend," interrupted the lively lady. "As an artilleryman you applaud his good shooting while you condemn his bad faith. But tell me, young people—what is all this talk we hear of fugitives, of asylums, and of avenging Vigilantes?"

"Nothing—nothing at all—purely hypothetical questions," said Arthur hastily.

"Such discussions would necessarily be so, Mrs. Lyndon," said Helmont. "Everybody knows that I don't sympathize overmuch with the Vigilantes, but everybody also knows that I would not give asylum to any fugitive whom they pursued. Once in a while, they may hang an innocent man, but those they go after are guilty nine times in ten, while the tenth man is suspicious. No—no one inside these walls shall ever shelter a fugitive from the Vigilantes."

Diana started guiltily as he spoke. She was so disquieted that it was a relief to her when Mrs. Lyndon, who had not noticed her confusion, addressed her:

"Diana, your maid Luisa is looking for you; she has your riding togs all laid out on the bed, and is intensely interested, although she disapproves of your garb, of your saddle, and of your determination to ride with the vaqueros at the rodeo today."

"Are you going to ride in the rodeo?" asked Arthur. "How I wish I could go!"

"I wish you could," replied Diana, "but as you can not, you must come to the gateway to see me ride away with my caballo—for Captain Helmont has given me an escort of vaqueros almost as imposing as that of a knight of old. Good-bye—or rather hasta luego!" And, accompanied by Mrs. Lyndon, Diana hastened away.

"Diana is safe enough with my men," said Helmont.

"Still I would prefer to have some one else with her too. I wrote asking Eugene Yarrow to come up for the rodeo, but I have not heard from him. He may be absent from the city."

"How often do you hold the rodeos, captain?"

"We have them once a year. Ours is a rodeo for dividing up the stock among the different ranchos of the Hacienda, and after they are divided the young animals are branded."

"Is this a slaughtering rodeo?"

"Oh, no, it is not even a branding day. Branding is not so unpleasant as slaughtering, but it wouldn't be a particularly agreeable diversion for Diana. The odors of singeing hair and burning horseflesh are scarcely sweet-smelling. Today the vaqueros are cutting out the manadas—what the Americans call bunches. The animals have been running wild for a year over the common grazing lands. The old stallions and mares are already branded of course; the increase of the year is not. The vaqueros ride round and round in a circle, thus at last bunching the animals into separate corrals, where the colts will be branded tomorrow."

"And don't you take part in this exciting scene?"

"No—it is an old story to me. Diana, who has no accounts to keep, will delight in the rodeo. I shall go out later and look after the branding—that is more important. Besides, the rodeo begins too early for me—the men were in the saddle at daylight. Diana is a luxurious vaquera—she will not arrive at the rodeo until hours after sunrise."

"Branding settles ownership, I suppose?"

"Absolutely—if a man wants to be sure he owns his colts and calves, he must get his brand on them first. Under the Mexican law his brands had to be registered, and no one was allowed to brand except on days fixed for rodeos by public notice. Of late years a lot of smart rascals have been selling counterfeit branding-irons, and as your free-and-easy American law now allows anybody to brand at any time, all of the large rancheros have lost many cattle."

"Today's rodeo is not for beef cattle?"

"Only for horses; after it is all over, the beef cattle will be brought in, rounded up, and divided. When they are driven in you'll know when they are coming."

"Why?"

"Because of their bellowing—it may be heard for miles. We used to have some thirty thousand beef cattle on this rancho, but as the country settled up the number has diminished. In the old days it was a great spectacle—people came from fifty to sixty miles away, and there was a grand fiesta. We killed many of the fattest cattle for our scores of guests, and the vaqueros would take only the hides and the choicest parts of the beef, leaving the carcasses on the plain. This attracted the wild animals from the hills, and black and cinnamon bear prowled over the valley—sometimes grizzlies. Often they were caught—four or five vaqueras at the same time would lasso a bear, their horses pulling in different directions, until the animal was strangled by the lariat noosed around its neck."

"Surely a single vaquero would not dare to lasso a grizzly!" exclaimed Arthur.

"No—if he tried, the grizzly would seize the rope, and pull a powerful horse toward him, paw over paw, unless the vaquera was quick enough to cast off his lariat from the saddle horn."

"Then it is true that they sometimes caught grizzlies for bear-baiting?"

"Oh, yes—five vaqueros would lasso a grizzly over each leg and over his neck; then all five would pull against him and spread him out flat on the ground, at the same time choking him into submission. Then they would get him safely into a heavy low-wheeled cage, and haul him to the bull-ring."

"What chance would the bull have in a fight against so powerful an animal as the grizzly?"

"The bulls often killed the bears. They are nothing like your bulls on the Atlantic Coast; they are very quick, very vicious, have long sharp horns, and are almost wild. In the ring the bull was more often the victor than the grizzly. But come—let us go to the gateway—it is about time that Diana was starting for the radaa."

With the assistance of some mozos, Arthur's chair was taken to the portal, where they found the major-domo and a group of vaqueros waiting for the captain's guest. The cowboys had with them a handsome buckskin mustang, which as yet had no rider.

"There is Diana's mount," said Helmont.

Alden looked at the animal's accoutrements with some surprise. It bore an elaborately stamped and silver-mounted saddle, around the pommel of which was coiled the long lasso. The bridle was of plaited rawhide, and the silver bit was the cruel Spanish instrument he had already noticed in the mouths of the native horses.

"Does Miss Diana ride a—?" and Arthur hesitated for a word.

"She rides en cavalier," replied Helmont, with a smile. "About the only safe way for a woman to ride at a radaa, I fancy. But the riata, or lasso, at her pommel is probably purely for ornament. Here she comes."

Arthur turned and saw Diana approaching with Mrs. Lyndon. He devoured her with his eyes. The riding garb she had devised was a compromise costume. It was based partly on the riding rig of the Mexican dandies, although she had replaced their calzanera, or riding-breeches, with a divided skirt of doeskin. But this garment, like the calzanera, had a double row of silver buttons down the outside; their botas or leggings she had replaced by high laced boots of soft buckskin garnished with silver spurs. Their short jacket of blue broadcloth, heavily laced with silver, she had retained; likewise their rich waistcoat of silk velvet, and the soft linen shirt with matador tie. Around her waist was bound the conventional crimson sash, while on her head she wore a wide-brimmed sombrero; around its conical crown was wound a filigree golden fillet. In short, she was a feminine replica of the native caballera of the time—very fair to look upon, seemingly not displeasing to the vaqueras, but with equal seeming eyed with horror by their womankind, the paisanas.

Helmont approached her with the gravity of a Spanish grandee of the time of Carlos Quinto; he bowed low, almost sweeping the ground with the ceremonial wave of his sombrero.

"A los pies de usted, señorita," he said. "But I scarcely know whether so cavalier-looking a young person would accept assistance in mounting?" None the less, he extended his hand for her to spring from.

"Gracias, no, señor capitán—no se necesita," she replied with a smile, and placing her own foot in the cumbrous wooden stirrup, she vaulted on her horse. As she sat in the high-pommeled saddle she looked, from the peak of her conical sombrero to the tapadera points trailing from her stirrups to the ground, the personification of equestrian grace. She would not have been a woman if she had not been conscious of how these men admired her, from Arthur Alden to the very vaqueras, and Alden most of all.

"But who is this coming up the hill?" asked Mrs. Lyndon, who was perhaps less susceptible to feminine charms than the others.

"Why, it's Eugene Yarrow!" exclaimed Helmont, waving his hand to the group of horsemen.

Helmont was right—it was Yarrow, just from the embarcadero, accompanied by two or three of the captain's mozos to carry his luggage.

"You're in the nick of time, my boy," said the captain, jovially, while the newcomer was being greeted by all. "Doña Diana is just off for the radaa, and without any escort except these dark-skinned cowboys here. Alden is still on the invalid list, and I am too old and fat."

"I'd be more than delighted to ride with Miss Diana," declared Eugene enthusiastically. "But you must give me a fresh mount."

"It is behind you," replied Helmont. "Dismount, and they will shift the saddle."

In a trice Eugene's saddle was on a fresh animal, and he turned to the dashing vaquera.

"May I have the honor of being your cavalier, Miss Diana?" said Eugene.

"A la disposicion de usted, caballero!" cried Diana, saucily saluting with her quirt. The lash fell, she wheeled her mustang, which pivoted like a teetotum, and like a flash she was dashing down the hill. Her escort of vaqueros—heeding not her new caballera, for they owed allegiance only to her—put spurs to their horses, and raced after her, while Eugene followed somewhat ingloriously in the rear.

Alden and his companions watched them rapidly descending the hill, but in a few minutes they had disappeared in the whirling masses of horses in the vast plain below.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Copyright 1908 by Jerome A. Hart.

THE COUNTESS DE BOIGNE.

A Third Volume Closes a Brilliant Survey of Fifty Years of French Life.

The third volume of the "Memoirs of the Countess de Boigne" covers the period from the year 1820 to the year 1830. The first volume brought us to the year 1814 and the second to the year 1819, so that we have in all a period of about half a century thus illuminated by the diary of a woman who must be placed in the front rank of those marvelous feminine minds produced so lavishly by the France of a hundred years ago. Mme. de Boigne knew all the stars that covered the political firmament of her country. Her position carried her easily into the highest social and government circles of her day, while her brilliant intelligence naturally attracted and was attracted by all that was most worthy in the world of knowledge and of wit. She seems to have held herself with a singular detachment and self-possession during crisis after crisis so well calculated to bias both judgment and criticism. Proximity never destroys her sense of perspective; she is always sane, balanced, judicial. For her the mole-hill never becomes the mountain nor does she allow the mountain to be dwarfed by its proximity. She looks upon the volcano with the same tranquil and curious regard as upon the flower garden. Her poise is never disturbed by the overthrow of kings or the titanic struggles waged within her sight. Hers is the temperament of the philosopher to whom nothing is insignificant and who neither exaggerates nor belittles.

One of the first scenes that she records in her third volume is the assassination of the Duc de Berry. At the moment of the crime she herself was at the house of Mme. de la Briche, but in the midst of "bursts of laughter" the news was brought by de Boisgelin:

The Duc de Berry had just put his wife in her carriage, and the footmen were closing the door. He was going back to the Opera, to see the last scene of the ballet and to receive from a member of the ballet the signal for a visit which he wished to make to her. He was followed by two aides-de-camp, and two sentinels were presenting arms at either side of the door. A man passed through all these people, and pushed so violently against one of the aides-de-camp that he said, "Take care what you are doing, sir." At the same moment he placed a hand upon the shoulder of the prince, and with the other hand drove into his breast below the shoulder an enormous knife, which he left in the wound, and took flight; no one in this numerous escort had time to anticipate his action. The Duc de Berry thought at first that he had received a blow with a fist, and said, "That man struck me"; then clapping his hand to his breast he cried, "Ah, it is a dagger! I am a dead man."

The Duchesse de Berry, seeing the struggle, wished to go to her husband. Mme. de Bethisy, the lady on duty, from whom I have these details, attempted to keep her back. The footmen hesitated to lower the steps, and the princess sprang out of the carriage without waiting for them. Mme. de Bethisy followed her. They found the Duc de Berry seated in a chair in the passage. He had not lost consciousness, and merely said, "Ah, poor Caroline, what a sight for you." She threw herself upon him: "Take care, you are hurting me."

They succeeded in carrying him up to a little drawing-room which communicated with his box. The men who had carried him then went out to fetch help, and he was left alone with the two ladies. The knife, which had been left in his breast, caused him dreadful suffering and he insisted that Mme. de Bethisy should draw it out, after making a vain attempt himself. She was eventually induced to obey. The blood spurted forth abundantly, and her dress and that of the Duchesse de Berry were covered with it. From that moment until the arrival of the physicians with their handgases he merely groaned continually, saying from time to time, "I am stifling, give me air." The poor women opened the door, and the music of the ballet which was in progress and the applause of the pit made a dreadful contrast with the scene before their eyes. The Duchesse de Berry showed a calmness and a strength of character beyond all praise, for her despair was terrible. She thought of everything, prepared everything with her own hands, and the boarding-school girl of the morning became suddenly heroic.

The countess looks upon the Duc de Berry as "a hero and a Christian." Asked as to his want of resolution, she can only say that "men are full of these inexplicable anomalies." Consistency belongs only to the hero of the novelist.

We get a curious light upon the character and conduct of Queen Caroline of England. The countess herself was at Aix and we can only admire the eloquent reticence with which she deals with incidents that must have been the talk of the countryside:

The carriages of Queen Caroline of England were passing through Aix. We were informed that she had been staying in an inn upon the Geneva route, and strange stories reached us from that quarter. Curious to know the truth upon these details, I made inquiries a short time afterwards when I was following the same route. I stopped at an inn at Rumilly. A very respectable looking girl was working in the kitchen, and I asked her a few questions about the queen's stay. She replied with downcast eyes that she knew nothing.

"The queen did not stay here, then?"

"Oh, yes, madame, but I was not here."

The mistress of the inn then came up, and told me that the queen had stayed a week at her house, but that after the first evening she had hastened to send away her daughters to one of their aunts.

"I was ashamed, madame, of what I saw myself, and did not even like sending my servants to wait upon her."

It seems that the courier Bergami had grown too lazy to satisfy the taste of this immoral princess, although she still remained under his influence. Under pretext of a conference with the English minister at Berne to arrange for her journey through Switzerland, she had sent him away, and had spent the week of his absence in a perpetual orgie with her other servants. Indignation reached such a pitch in the little town which her presence had defiled that upon the day of her departure, when a quarrel broke out between one of her servants and a postillion, the queen attempted to secure silence by her royal word, whereupon there was an explosion of popular indignation. The whole populace rose, and threatened to stone her, and she ran some risk of being thus assaulted. Such was the honorable person loudly claimed as sovereign by a large proportion of the English nation, a fact which provides further proof of opposition good faith in every country.

She takes a subsequent opportunity to refer again to a queen who disgraced alike her country and husband. Napoleon was lying dead in St. Helena and the age of his posthumous popularity was not yet begun. Newspaper sellers in the streets of Paris were crying, "The death of Napoleon Bonaparte, two sous; his speech to General Bertrand, two sous; despair of Mme. Bertrand, two sous"; and no more effect was produced "than an advertisement for a lost dog":

If it is possible to form a correct idea of the life in general of Napoleon at St. Helena, his existence seems to have been magnificent in his recollections as attested by the splendid narrative which he dictated, and trivial as regards his actions, which point is again attested by the correspondence with Sir Hudson Lowe. In any case, the emperor was so omnipotent a character that even at the height of his glory, when he was shaking empires to their foundations, he could find time for the close consideration of details which a private individual would have neglected without scruple. Possibly characteristics which our want of sympathy styles pettifoggery are due to superabundant energy.

Lord Castlereagh went into the study of George IV and said to him:

"Sir, I come to tell your majesty that your mortal enemy is dead?"

"What!" he cried, "is it possible? Can she be dead?" Lord Castlereagh was obliged to calm the monarch's joy by explaining to him that he was not talking of the queen, his wife, but of Bonaparte. A few months afterwards the hopes of the king were accomplished, and it must be admitted that if such sentiments can ever be justified, they could be only by the conduct of Queen Caroline. Her death was a relief to everybody, and especially for the party which had undertaken the impossible task of repairing her honor. She died a victim to her excesses.

A final quotation may be given, not in itself of great intrinsic value, but as illustrating the range of interest of this extraordinary memoirist, whose mind was one large interrogation point and for whom nothing was without its interest and importance:

I take this opportunity of noting a remarkable fact which I am obliged to believe, as I saw it for myself. In 1828, or perhaps it was in 1827, a little girl of two years old was brought to me with bright blue eyes which seemed in no way remarkable at first sight. When, however, the eyes were examined more carefully, it was seen that the iris was composed of little filaments forming white letters on a blue background placed around the pupil, and making the words "Napoleon Emperor." The word "Napoleon" was equally distinct in either eye; the first letters of the word "Emperor" were indistinct in one eye and the last letters in the other. The little girl was very pretty, and seemed to enjoy excellent sight.

Her mother, who was a Lorraine peasant, told me very simply what she considered to be the cause of this strange freak of nature. A brother, to whom she was deeply attached, had drawn a bad number in the conscription, and as he went away had given her a newly-struck coin of twenty sous, asking her to keep it in memory of him. A short time afterwards she learned that his regiment was passing three leagues away from her village, and she went to the spot to see him for a moment. As she returned she was exhausted with fatigue and thirst, and stopped at a tavern half way upon her road to drink a glass of beer. When it was necessary to pay, she perceived that she had given her brother all the money she had upon her, and had nothing left but the precious coin of twenty sous, which she always carried upon her person. She asked for credit, but the inn-keeper was pitiless. She therefore sacrificed her poor treasure with regrets, and came home in despair. Her tears flowed incessantly. The next Sunday her husband went in search of the coin, and succeeded in restoring it to her. When she brought it back, her joy was so keen that the child leaped in her womb, and, in her own words, she felt "faint with delight."

The little girl bore in her eyes the inscription upon the coin. I have no intention of writing a physiological treatise to explain the possibility of this fact; I merely affirm that I have seen it, and that any fraud was impossible. The doctor in the neighboring village had proposed to show the child for money, and the mother accompanied him. The government objected to any public performance, advertisements were not permitted, and their stay at Paris was cut short.

Extracts, however carefully selected, are inadequate to convey a fitting impression of these astonishing memoirs, as eloquent alike of the times about which they were written as of the mind that conceived and wrote them. We do not know the extent of our debt to the editor, M. Charles Nicollaud. We can only say that these three volumes are irreproachable, and if his labors have been considerable they have been done without the sound of workmanship or the mark of a tool.

"Memoirs of the Countess de Boigne." Edited from the original MS. by Charles Nicollaud. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York; three volumes; $2.50 each.

RACE SUICIDE IN FRANCE.

Dr. Bertillon Warns His Government That the Nation Is Disappearing.

The statistics of French population, published from time to time, have at length begun to trouble the national conscience. Questions of population make their first appeal from the economic standpoint, while moral considerations take, as usual, a secondary position. Military authorities begin to be uneasy as to the size and stamina of the army. From the country districts come complaints that land is untilled and that the tillers of the soil become more and more sparsely scattered. These have been commonplaces in the French mind for many years past, but now the relentless percussion of statistics has become so familiar and so monotonous that it has reached the recesses where conscience dwells, and public men have begun to question if it is indeed the fact that the law itself is productive of that kind of immorality that lowers the birthrate and starves the country of its rightful heritage of children. Race suicide has become in France a question of national preservation, but no suggestion has yet been made that it is due to luxury, to selfishness, or to apathy. It is a matter of stern necessity and also of a system of law that makes immorality the line of least resistance.

Dr. Bertillon, the anthropometric expert, is the latest to make a public protest. The text of his sermon is a simple one. Last year and throughout the whole of France the number of children born alive was 773,969. The number of deaths during the same year was 793,889. That is to say, the deaths exceeded the births by nearly twenty thousand. The proverbial schoolboy can calculate how long it will be before France as a nation is extinguished—"jusqu'à ce que le pays n'existe plus."

It is no new story, but it is quite new that any one of Dr. Bertillon's authority should ask with insistence and emphasis what the nation proposes to do about it. Here are some more figures presented ruthlessly by the worthy doctor, who explains in parenthesis and with an exculpatory air that the collection of statistics is hereditary in his family. The figures show the number of births during seven years:

1901	857,274
1902	845,378
1903	826,712
1904	818,229
1905	807,291
1906	806,847
1907	773,969

Notice how the totals get smaller and beautifully less, while we may well believe that the Angel of Death maintains his usual or even an accelerated gait. And this has been going on for half a century. France may well ask herself what it means. Dr. Bertillon says it means the exhaustion of the country—"Épuisement du pays."

He is not altogether without his remedy, this eminent statistician of a statistical family. Like a wise physician he feels the pulse, takes the temperature, and then prescribes. Let the government, he says, cease to discuss whether taxes shall be taken from the right-hand pocket or the left, let them stop tormenting the aged priests and for once do something that is worth while. Let them repopulate France or so amend the laws that France may repopulate herself. She is both able and willing.

But there is nothing to be done, say the wiseacres. Virtue is not a matter of legislation.

Now there, replies the doctor, is where you make a mistake. Virtue is a matter of legislation. Cease to regard wedlock as a kind of legal offense. Encourage marriage rather than discourage it. Give your benediction to the young people and not your frowns. Do not chill their lawful ardors by demanding the written permission of all sorts of relatives who should have nothing whatever to do with the matter. Do not subject them to a week's hard labor in the collection of signatures, in the making of entries in official books, in the payment of fees. If these young people are of age, then in heaven's name marry them, how, when, and where they wish. Send them on their way rejoicing with a "bless you, my children," and do not look upon a simple desire to be married as a cause for grave and cautious suspicion. Married people, suggests the doctor with admirable adroitness, will have children, but those who dispense with the ceremony will have none.

You say that people can not be made virtuous by law, explodes the doctor. How then will you account for the fact that in 1907 there were over eight thousand marriages more than in the year previous? The explanation is simple enough. In the year 1907 certain restrictions upon marriage, certain ridiculous coils of red tape, were removed in the case of lovers who were over thirty years of age. As a result eight thousand couples were married and presumably will have children, most of them. But for the amended law the majority of these couples would have still lived together, but they would have taken good care that no children ever cursed them for illegitimacy. You say that people can not be made virtuous by law, reiterates the doctor. Truly the law did not make these eight thousand couples virtuous, but it enabled them to be virtuous. It saved them an overpowering temptation to immorality, at least to irregularity, and it took their children under its protection instead of daring them to be born. Do you call that nothing?

In the course of his tirade Dr. Bertillon says some good things. "It is the duty of every man to contribute to the continuation of his nation quite as much as it is his duty to defend his nation." Children must be encouraged to come into the world. They will come quickly enough if they are welcomed by the State. Do not punish them for being born. Do not punish their parents. Let it be morally obligating to have two children, creditable to have three, and a mark of honor and reward to have four. Otherwise the parents will continue to treat France as the baker treats his bad paying customers—"You want bread? Then pay for it."

PARIS, June 12, 1908. ST. MARTIN.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Paulus, the music-hall singer whose songs made the political fortune of General Boulanger, has just died in comparative poverty. For a time at the height of his success, when he sang "En Revenant de la Revue" and other songs of the same class, Paulus made the salary of several prime ministers and lived like a prince. But with the downfall and death of General Boulanger his own vogue disappeared, and he practically lived on charity the last five years.

The commission which is investigating the finances of the late King Carlos's reign has discovered that Dowager Queen Maria Pia received $40,000 from the state. The Queen Dowager does not deny that she received this money, but says that she was justified in using it on the ground that her allowance of $2400 a year was not sufficient to maintain her in royal state. The government is greatly embarrassed by this discovery, as the major part of these advances was conceded during the previous administrations of Manuel d'Espregueira, who is at present the minister of finance.

Mrs. William H. Taft, while characterized as an "intelligent, progressive woman," has old-fashioned preferences in literature. In a recent interview on music, woman's suffrage, and books, she said "Pride and Prejudice" is my favorite. I don't know how many times I have read it. They used to tease me before I was married about a thumb-worm copy I carried about with me everywhere." And while admitting that "Vanity Fair" was one of her favorites, she applied the test of being stranded on a desert island with but one work of fiction and unhesitatingly declares for Jane Austen's "Pride and Prejudice."

Lieutenant Graetz of the Prussian army, who started on August 10 last to cross Africa from Dar-es-Salaam in a specially built automobile, reached Serenje, Rhodesia, on May 26, after a perilous passage of the wilderness. His route was alternately over rocks and through swamps and torrents, which compelled him to build a track many miles long. He was marooned a month in the desert owing to his petrol becoming exhausted and having to wait while a native guide was sent to Serenje to obtain a supply. Lieutenant Graetz's health, notwithstanding his delays and difficulties, is said to be excellent.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, now almost a nonagenarian, is still moved by living enthusiasm for the cause she has so long supported. To a young Southern writer who was introduced to her in Boston last year Mrs. Howe, after due exchange of conversation, said: "And now, my dear, go home and start a little club for women; any kind of a little club, but make them meet and read and talk. That is what I did. I can't tell you how many little clubs I've started in my day." One can easily realize what a godsend to dull and shut-in lives Mrs. Howe's clubs may have been a half century ago, when the outlets to women's lives were fewer than they are now. Clubs nowadays, however, are accused of drawing women away from more serious and worthy pursuits than they can furnish them.

Rear-Admiral Richardson Clover has been during the greater portion of his career one of the most conspicuous officers in the United States navy. He married Miss Mary Eudora, daughter of the late General John F. Miller, senator from California. Admiral Clover is a member of the Naval Academy graduating class of 1867, and became an ensign in 1868, lieutenant in 1871, lieutenant-commander in 1891, commander in 1897, and captain in 1902. He was at one time hydrographer of the navy, and did notable work in the survey of the coast of Alaska. During the Spanish-American war he commanded the U. S. S. Bancroft. Later he was United States naval attaché at London, and succeeding this detail filled important positions in the Navy Department at Washington.

An accomplishment which is very unusual with women in any walk of life has given to the Crown Princess of Montenegro the distinction of being the champion royal lady wrestler of all Europe. Before her marriage to the future ruler of the little principality, the Princess Danilo was the Duchess Jutta of Mecklenburg, Germany, and she appears to have had a somewhat varied training. She is a woman of a number of dissimilar hobbies and attainments. She is a brilliant pianist, an expert needlewoman, and a caricaturist of no little skill, but her most favorite activity seems to be the masculine sport of wrestling. To this she devotes not less than one evening every week, and takes more pride in her aptness at it than in any other of her capabilities. She understands the Japanese art of jiu-jitsu, and has so thoroughly mastered it that she is almost invariably successful in the bouts in which she engages.

CURRENT VERSE.

July.

Now doth sweet summer dream her sweetest dream;

With full-fringed lids half closed against the sun

And thirsting lips, she nods beside the stream

Within whose silent bed no waters run.

Full wearily she stretcheth oow her limbs;

Anon her breast is stirred with languid sighs;

Lulled by the murmur of slow forest hymns,

She draws the shadows with her drowsing eyes.

And, all above her busy hands have made

A woven covert of green boughs that keep

The semblance of a painted arch whose shade

Falls on the ground like an enchanted sleep.

—Metropolitan Magazine.

Spinsterhood.

I have looked on the King. From out of the North he came;

The world was husy and blind; but my heart

took wing

At the light in his face, and the truth swept out like a flame,

And I said, "'Tis the King!"

The depths of my soul felt the breath of a strange new word,

And an unfledged joy I bore oo my breast

unseen.

All my life dreamed into the voice that my spirit heard,

Singing, "Thou art the Queen."

But the King passed by with never a glance at me;

He was gazing aloft at a star, or down at a stone,

With a brow that pondered and eyes that were keen to see.

And I wait, alone.

—The Atlantic Monthly.

Black-Heart Poppy.

Flowers o' the violet and blossom o' the peach,

Neither and none of them am I.

I'm a yellow poppy flower that grows along the beach,

Spray-sprinkled when the tide is high.

You say that I'm heartless and a traitor and a fiat.

So much the worse it is for you.

You wanted to believe me, and my magic could not trust—

Why ever did you think me true?

Crimson is the peach bloom's heart, the rose's heart is gold—

Look, then, and see it's as I say!

Poppies just have centres which are raven black and cold,

Salt with the savor of the spray.

—Appleton's Magazine.

Brewers and wine-growers in Vienna are complaining of the falling off in the consumption of their beverages, and particularly the brewers.

The best materials form only a part of the cost of the glasses we make. The other part represents expert workmanship, accuracy and years of experience.

HIRSCH & KAISER

218 Post St.

Opticians

JUST A BOOK STORE

Robertson's

1539 Van Ness Ave.

NEAR PINE

"Next to the White House"

We Rent New Typewriters

L. & M. ALEXANDER & CO.

MOVED TO

Phone Douglas 2157

512 Market St.

Coast Dealers

L. C. SMITH (Visible)

1908 Model.

Ball Bearing

TYPEWRITERS

The wonderful new talking machine without a horn

The top closes over the record, shutting out all the noise of operation—the pure music of the record comes from a mahogany sound reflector. Elegantly made of solid mahogany, combined with record cabinet for 150 records. The finest talking machine made. Send for booklet.

Price $200

Sherman, Gray & Co.

Steinway Pianos—Victor Talking Machines

KEARNY AND SUTTER, S. F.

Broadway at 13th Oakland 1635 Van Ness Ave. San Francisco

PALL MALL FAMOUS CIGARETTES

No other cigarette approaches them in popularity among men of cultured tastes

A Shilling in London A Quarter Here

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

By Sidney G. P. Coryn.

The Dial, discoursing on the ignorance of the modern college man, tells a story of a gathering of alumni, old and young, of a famous college. One of the older men spoke, and the burden of his discourse was to the effect that in his student days college men took a serious interest in literature and the humanities in general, an interest which did not seem to be shared with them by the students of the younger generation. He said by way of illustration that it was not uncommon for a group of his fellow-students to go out for an afternoon walk, and spend most of their time in talking about Keats and Shelley. This speaker was followed by a representative of the younger generation—a graduate in engineering or something of the sort—who frankly admitted the truth of what had just been said, and added, for his own part, that he had never heard of "Sheats and Kelley." We can sympathize with the Dial and exhibit a strictly domestic article that is nearly as good. The diplomas just issued to the graduating classes of the San Francisco grammar schools bear the statement that they are issued "in the year Anno Domini 1908." O Tempora, O Mores! To what school shall we send the schoolmaster?

Social Psychology, by Edward Alsworth Ross. Published by the Macmillan Company, New York; $1.50.

Professor Ross has written an ingenious and a fascinating book. If a paradox may be allowed, his "Social Psychology" is novel because it tells us what we all knew before and it is valuably suggestive because it deals with facts in nature toward which science usually turns its blind eye.

That mankind is very largely governed by suggestion and by sub-intelligent force is almost a truism, but Professor Ross has reduced it to catalogue and docket. He opens for us so wide a vista that we wonder at his restraint while we begin to understand the formidable bulwark of mere imitiveness against which intelligence has struggled for so many centuries. He seems to show us that individual human consciousness is not yet supreme over what may be called the horde consciousness of the lower animals and that men are nearly as prone to follow a leader or to obey an uncredentialed impulse as are the sheep that jump an imaginary fence because the first of the flock did so. But we wish the author had gone deeper. What is this collective consciousness and how does it work? Its effects are lamentably evident, but we should like to know more of its real nature.

The author elaborates his subject with a commendable care. His chapters on "The Crowd" and "The Mob," its crazes and its cruelties, are particularly good. Conventionality comes in for extended and valuable attention. "Imitation," "Public Opinion," and "Discussion" are ably handled, and we are allowed to draw the conclusion that it is only the elect of the race, as it were, in whom has been developed an individuality and an intellectual self-possession that act as prophylactics against a pack or flock consciousness that still rules the majority to its detriment.

Professor Ross has written a valuable book and an easy and lucid style is its embellishment.

Marcia Schuyler, by Grace Livingston Hill Lutz. Published by the J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia; $1.50.

We do not know if this book is a "best seller," but if so it may reasonably look down upon some of its comrades. So dainty a novel it has not been our fortune to see for some time.

It is a country story told of the day when the locomotive was still a daring novelty. Kate Schuyler is about to be married to David Spafford, but a few hours before the wedding that graceless lady runs off with a military admirer who promises her more in the way of "life" than can be offered by a young journalist, however high-minded he may be. After the first moment of domestic shame and consternation Kate's father passionately advises the bridegroom to choose some other wife from the village maidens and to allow the ceremony to go forward. Then Marcia, Kate's sister, comes upon the scene. She is little more than a school girl, but the antithesis of the wayward Kate, simple, loyal, and dutiful, knowing nothing of the meaning of love, but eager to retrieve the family disgrace and bewildered at her good fortune in becoming the wife of a man already enthroned as a hero in her childish heart. And so David marries Marcia and we may confess to a little impatience with that young man in his failure to recognize more quickly how kind a cruel fortune has been to him.

The beauty of the story lies in its picture of a married life in which the husband is slowly weaned from an unworthy love into a recognition of a value that is actually within his hands. Judged by the ideas of a later day, David must be condemned for a certain callousness that allows him to marry a girl whom he does not love in order that he may be saved from the mortification of returning alone to his distant home. But autres temps, autres moeurs. He does at least behave to his wife as a gentleman, and perhaps his eyes are opened nearly as quickly as could be expected. The reader, it is true, begins to love Marcia and to dislike Kate at first sight, but young men in real life are notoriously blind to their real advantages, while the reader has both detachment and perspective to aid him. Therefore David may be forgiven in view of the bountiful expiation that comes in the end.

There is plenty of incident in "Marcia Schuyler," but its charm is an indefinable one. It satisfies us because it paints an ideal girlhood and produces a picture that we will not quickly forget.

Diana of Dobson's, by Cecily Hamilton. Published by the Century Company, New York; $1.50.

Here we have a story that is distinctly above the average and with the merits of condensation and ethical purpose. Diana Massingberd, with a memory of better days to give poignancy to her distress, has become a London shop assistant, and to those who know the facts this expresses an acme of personal humiliation. A legacy of three hundred pounds gives her a chance of a few weeks' independence and reckless expenditure. It also gives her a yearned-for opportunity to express her opinion of the superintendent and of her employer:

"Miss Massingberd, the first thing in the morning—the very first thing in the morning—I shall make it my business to inform Mr. Dobson—"

"Damn Mr. Dobson!" said Diana heartily.

Then, while the girls sat stiff and Miss Pringle recoiled, she strode across the room and turned the gas up higher.

"And the same remark," she added, "applies to yourself. Good-night."

Miss Pringle—went.

Diana purchases a wardrobe and goes to Switzerland for a few weeks of perfect carelessness, captivates Captain Bretherton, who believes her to be an heiress, and when that gentleman proposes marriage she paralyzes him by a frank confession and also by some candid opinions as to his own utter worthlessness and incapacity to earn an honest living. Now we are a little in doubt whether the gallant captain is more in love with Diana than with her supposed money, but her taunts open up a new idea to him, and when Diana returns ignominiously and pennilessly to her London drudgery Bretherton follows her and puts his incapacity to earn a living to the test. He finds that the situation is just as Diana had said. Placing his income resolutely upon one side, he enters on a few painful, but salutary weeks of destitution and starvation, and when he eventually meets Diana at night on the Thames embankment and in a similar condition of misery through her failure to get a situation, we find that both these young people have acquired a brand of wisdom so largely identical that to separate again would be an obvious pity. We like the story because it shows the evolution of a real man from a somewhat contemptible society fop. It leads us to hope that there may be quite a few real men in "society" circles, however startling such a theory may be. We also like the story for its directness and general literary merit.

A Soldier's Letters to Charming Nellie, by J. B. Polley. Published by the Neale Publishing Company, New York and Washington; $2.

The author belonged to Hood's Texas Brigade and he explains that the lady to whom these letters were addressed "was no more a myth from 1861 to 1869 than now, when, a gray-haired wife, mother and grandmother, she presides with the grace and dignity of the truest womanhood over the home made for her by the gallant officer of the Tennessee army whom she married. . . . Her letters kept him so advised of all that was occurring in Texas, and were so friendly, entertaining, and altogether 'charming' that, without leave or license, he substituted that adjective for the more conventional 'miss.'"

The letters are certainly good, and fortunate was the lady who received them and whose portrait forms the frontispiece to the volume. They give a succinct and intelligent history of the famous brigade and the part that it played from the beginning to the end of the war.

Old Mr. Davenant's Money, by Frances Powell. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York; $1.50.

The idea of this story is not entirely new, but the subtle skill with which it is worked out is admirable. Early in the book we recognize some undefinable mystery about the character of Paul Davenant, fascinating in its way, but yet so unvirile. We begin to understand why Pauline is so solemnly warned not to fall in love with her cousin, and we awake to the full inwardness of the situation when we learn that Paul is the survivor of twins, a boy and a girl, and that the whole of the fortune enjoyed by Paul would have been diverted from the family had the male infant died instead of the female. We are allowed to use our imagination to the full, but in the face of Mrs. Davenant's repeated assertions that she had seen to it that her surviving child had inherited the whole of Mr. Davenant's money and that if she had to live her life over again she would act exactly as she had done, we feel that the mystery has been very delicately explained.

Just a little on CHEESE is delicious. It adds zest to Welsh Rarebits, Macaroni with Cheese, Cheese Toast, Rice with Cheese and all Chafing Dish Cooking.

LEA & PERRINS SAUCE

THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

More dishes can be perfectly seasoned with Lea & Perrins Sauce than with any other relish. For Seventy Years it has given satisfaction throughout the world.

LEA & PERRINS SIGNATURE ON WRAPPER AND LABEL

John Duncan's Sons, Agents, New York

Tennent's

TRADE MARK

J. & R. Tennent

Ale and Stout

from Wellpark Brewery
Glasgow, Scotland

Forbes Bros., Agents, 1926 Sutter St.

GOODYEAR "HIPPO" HOSE

The best and strongest Garden Hose.
Guaranteed to stand 700 lbs. pressure.

Try it and be convinced.

GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY

R. H. PEASE, President
587, 589, 591 Market St. at Second St.
SAN FRANCISCO

THIS IS TO REMIND users of Labels, Cartons, Lithographing and Color Printing

That our Office and Factory is again located at the old stand

SECOND AND BRYANT STS. SAN FRANCISCO

Schmidt Lithograph Co.

35th YEAR

By Daylight and All Rail to Yosemite Valley via Southern Pacific

By way of Merced in connection with the Yosemite Valley R. R.

Only ten hours' ride to El Portal (the edge of the Valley) and three and one-half hours thence to the Heart of the Valley.

Low side trip rates to Wawona and the Mariposa grove of gigantic sequoias.

Leave San Francisco daily 8:20 a.m.

Ask any of our agents for details.

TICKET OFFICES

884 Market Street
Market Street Ferry Depot
14 Powell Street

LITERARY NOTES.

Two "Prisoner of Zenda" Stories.

The novelistic vein originally discovered by Anthony Hope is still being worked to advantage and the ore is still of a high grade. Most of these stories have a distinct merit. There is nothing morbid in them and they are therefore wholesome. They are full of vigor and action and their heroes and heroines are real warm blooded and valiant men and women.

"The Princess Dehra," by John Reed Scott, is a story of the disputed sovereignty of Lotzenia. The claimants are the Duke of Lotzen, who is a bold, bad man, and Armand, Archduke of Valeria, who is practically an American by education and sentiment. Armand, being a man of sense, intends to marry the Princess Dehra, who becomes regent during the search for the late king's dying testament, and the Princess Dehra, being a woman of sense, intends to marry the Archduke Armand, whether or no.

Plots and counterplots are admirably told. There are duels—even the princess fights a duel—subterranean passages, attempted assassinations, and marvelous escapes, but all these gentle incidents fall into place without jar and the gore is left to the imagination. "Princess Dehra" is a thoroughly good story, amongst the best of its kind. It is published by the J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, and the price is $1.50.

But "Zollenstein," by W. B. M. Ferguson, is just as good. A young soldier of fortune is persuaded to go to Zollenstein—both Zollenstein and Lotzenia are somewhere in the neighborhood of Zenda and easily found on the map—in order to personate the young heir to the throne while that hopeful is being found. It says much for the skill of the author that not until we are well into the story does it dawn upon us that Mortimer, thus accidentally chosen, is in very truth the missing heir, although he is the last to suspect his royal birth and heritage. Indeed, if truth must be told, he seems a little stupid about it. Of course he falls in love with the Princess Zena—and who wouldn't, in spite of that young lady's royal tempter?—and it is only when his own identity finally dawns upon him that he claims a heart that has already been given to him. We should have liked Zena just a little better had she been willing to marry plain Mr. Mortimer as well as to love him, but then princesses have their drawbacks just like other people. "Zollenstein" is published by D. Appleton & Co., New York. Price, $1.50.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

It is not surprising to learn that the Russian authorities do not permit "As The Hague Ordains: Journal of a Russian Prisoner's Wife in Japan," to get into the Czar's dominions. Possibly it is also of some interest to note that the author has received 110 book notices of which he says that but one was distinctly hostile. Although this book was at the time one of Messrs. Henry Holt & Co.'s best selling books, still the announcement of Miss Eliza Ruhamah Scidmore as its author seems to have still further stimulated interest in it and the publishers are already announcing the sixth printing of this vivid, and often witty, book.

Admirers of "plain John Morley" are likely to experience something of a shock when they come on a book bearing on its title page the name "Viscount Morley of Blackburn." The author of the lives of Cobden and Gladstone is to appear in literature under this style for the first time in a book to be published before the end of the month by the Macmillans. It is a volume of collected papers and will appear as Volume IV of the author's "Miscellanies."

General readers, as well as teachers of psychology, will be interested in the new and thoroughly revised edition, from new plates, of Professor J. R. Angell's "Text-Book of General Psychology," which is announced by Messrs. Henry Holt & Co. for early publication. Few writers on the subject combine scholarship with clearness of statement in a higher degree than Professor Angell. The book has had a phenomenal success.

New Publications.

Duffield & Co., New York, have published "The Damsel and the Sage," by Elinor Glyn.

"My Enemy the Motor," by Julian Street, is an amusing sketch of an automobile journey. It is told in "eight honks and one crash" and is published by the John Lane Company, New York.

Those who wish to know how small is the love between Anarchists and Socialists should read "Anarchism and Socialism," by George Plechanoff, translated by Eleanor Marx Aveling and published by Charles H. Kerr & Co., Chicago.

"Tommy Brown, a Bad Boy's Memoirs," by Aitken Murray, has been published by R. F. Fenno & Co., New York. Tommy says "mischief just comes sprouting out of me," and he speaks the plain, unvarnished truth. Price, 75 cents.

In "The Adventures of Charles Edward," by Harrison Rhodes, we have a series of short stories all of them about Charles Edward Austin and Lady Angela. These stories are distinctly clever and original and very far above the average. Published by Little, Brown & Co., Boston; $1.50.

To the Pioneers in Education Series has been added a volume on Michel de Montaigne, by Gabriel Compayré. It will be remembered that the series consists of six volumes—Rousseau, Spencer, Pestalozzi, Herbart, Mann, and Montaigne. They are all by Gabriel Compayré and their efficiency should recommend them to the scholastic world. But how about Froebel and still others? The series is published by Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York. Price, 90 cents per volume.

In "The New Plato," by Thomas L. Masson, the author tries to imagine how the Greek philosopher would talk and catechise if he were to find himself in the New York of today and confronted with some modern problems. The attempt is somewhat audacious, but it has a large measure of success. We are not affronted by fippancy, while a careful and conscientious intention is always evident. The book is published by Moffat, Yard & Co., New York. Price, 75 cents.

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.

To those who have followed with pleased interest the career of the Princess Theatre since it became the home of comic opera, the production of the extravaganza, "It Happened in Nordland," merely confirms the belief that the management of the playhouse is determined to reach the highest excellence, regardless of expense and incessant effort. To those who are newly acquainted with the theatre and its company the offering is as well a surprise and a delight, and to those (if there be any) who have yet to learn of the character of the attractions presented it may be commended as a bright, tuneful piece of fun, given by a long list of capable artists, and much superior in beauty and strength of chorus work, in costuming, stage settings, and light effects, to anything of the sort offered here by a traveling company.

"It Happened in Nordland" was written by Glen MacDonough and Victor Herbert for Lew Field's New York Theatre, and in its transplanting there has been preserved much of the Broadway flavor and spirit. It is doubtful if a more evenly balanced cast was seen in its first production. Among those especially prominent in the music and fun-making at the Princess are Julius Steger, William Burress, May Boley, Christina Nielsen, Zoe Barnett (whose return was enthusiastically welcomed), Sarah Edwards, and Arthur Cunningham. Selli Simonsen, the new conductor, is more than efficient. No brief notice or extended review even can do justice to the show. It should be seen. The theatre has been filled every night, so far, and the run promises to be a long and eminently successful one. G. L. S.

"The Rose of the Rancho" will be revived at the Alcazar next Sunday afternoon for eleven performances, including three matinées. Bessie Barriscale as Juanita, Bertram Lytell as the government agent, Will R. Walling as the land-jumper, Burt Wesner as the padre, Howard Hickman as the Castilian dandy from Monterey, and all the other Alcazar favorites in their former respective rôles will make "The Rose of the Rancho" a welcome attraction.

The programme at the Orpheum next week will have for its chief feature, "A Night on a Houseboat." The other new acts will be the Patty Frank Troupe, seven in number, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Beane, who with the assistance of Master Deering Beane, will present a dramatic sketch, entitled "A Woman's Way," and Bertie Herron, the original Minstrel Miss. Jean Marcel, whose bas reliefs and living statuary have attracted attention, will present a series of new subjects. Next week will be the last of Leipzig, the conjuror, Grant and Hoag, and of Fred Bond and Fremont Benton in their farce, "Handkerchief No. 15." New motion pictures will conclude the performance.

The return to San Francisco of Henry Miller in "The Great Divide" will be welcomed by local playgoers. In his new play Mr. Miller has a rôle absolutely novel to him in its footlight type. He will be seen in the character of a rough Arizona miner, a rugged and a virile type, bordering in its earliest phases almost upon elemental barbarism or lawless violence. The evolution of this man, Stephen Ghent, who has lived "bard and careless" on the top of the Rockies into noble manhood is depicted by Mr. Miller, it is said, with realism and sturdy characterization.

There will be no Sunday performances during the Henry Miller season at the Van Ness Theatre. Matinées will be given on Saturdays only.

There are some well-known names in the list of players to appear at the Actors' Fund benefit next Thursday afternoon at the Van Ness Theatre. Among the more notable are Henry Miller, Margaret Illington, May Robson, Bruce McRae, Hilda Spong, Julius Steger, Camille D'Arville, Arthur Cunningham, May Bowley, Frederick Bond.

Sir Charles Santley in his "Art of Singing" combats the opinion that tobacco is injurious to the voice. He once thought so himself, "but," he says, "I changed my tune when indigestion and domestic bliss began to interfere with my work and temper. I was advised to try the soothing effect of tobacco. I did, and in a short time I could digest ten-penny nails, anything, even slighting remarks made about the weed by feeble-minded scoffers, and I bore the squalling of the baby and smashing of crockery, not to mention other little disturbances, with perfect equanimity."

It is estimated that the number of rats in the United Kingdom is 30,000,000. The annual loss caused by them is $25,000,000 and the cost of repressive measures each year in London is $50,000.

EDUCATIONAL

IRVING INSTITUTE AND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
Boarding and Day School for Girls
2126 California St., San Francisco
Music, languages, art, elocution. Primary, grammar, high school, and advanced grades. Accredited by the universities. Twenty-ninth year. Non-sectarian. New term opens Monday, August 3.
MISS ELLA M. PINKHAM, Principal.

Oakland Conservatory of Music
1170 Madison Street, Oakland, Cal.
The largest, oldest established, and most thoroughly equipped school of genuine musical instruction on the Pacific Coast.
Conducted on the lines of the most noted European and Eastern schools.
Full prospectus on application.
Director, ADOLF GREGORY.

MANZANITA HALL
Palo Alto, Cal.
Prepares boys for the universities or business life. Ample grounds. Three buildings. Illus. catalogue. 16th year. Opens Aug. 24.
J. LEROY DIXON, Principal.

BERKELEY PREPARATORY SCHOOL
Boarding and Day School for Boys
2207 Dwight Way, Berkeley, Cal.
Fall term opens August 24
J. H. WHITE, Principal

SNELL SEMINARY 2721 Channing Way Berkeley
Girls' boarding and day school. Certificate admits to University of California, Stanford, and Eastern colleges. Opens August 10. Superb location. Outdoor life.
MRS. EDNA SNELL POULSON, Principal

FREE KINDERGARTEN NORMAL SCHOOL
Golden Gate Kindergarten Association
(Accredited by State Board of Education)
MISS VIRGINIA FITCH, President
MISS ANNA M. STOVALL, Principal
Address: 1844 Polk Street

Miss Harker's School
Home and Day School for Girls. Certificate admits to College. Excellent departments in Music and Art. New building, thoroughly modern, steam heated. Address, MISS HARKER, Palo Alto, Cal.

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS
Wood Rollers Tin Rollers
Bear the script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label. Get "Improved," no tacks required.

C. A. Murdock & Co.
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS
The Argonaut a sample of our output
68 FREMONT STREET
Phone Kearny 1040

When we decided to publish these three stories we felt confident we had a winning trio

FOR SALE WHEREVER BOOKS ARE SOLD

READ WHAT GREAT PAPERS SAY ABOUT 3 GREAT NOVELS

A. C. McClurg & Co. Publishers Chicago

THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE: "The Silver Blade," without being cheaply sensational, is about the most compelling detective story of recent years. And, despite the fact that the figure of such stories is more or less prescribed, this one has an individuality of its own."

THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW: "Randall Parrish's former stories proved him to be of the stuff of which good novelists are made; but 'Prisoners of Chance' is in every respect a notable advance upon his previous work. 'Prisoners of Chance' is like a breath from the wilderness blowing down a city street."

THE BOSTON HERALD: "'Into the Primitive' carries the reader along a course of human development where the struggle for bare existence brings to the surface animating motives in three souls. This is one of the most exciting adventure stories of the year."

MRS. FISKE AT THE ALCAZAR.

By Josephine Hart Phelps.

As ever and always Mrs. Fiske is a painful pleasure. The New Alcazar Theatre is too large for a player of her peculiarly unique methods. Her technique is like a fine mosaic, full of detail that repays examination with a microscope. But it does not always fully reach the ordinary avenues of perception. Glue our opera glasses to our eyes as we may, strain our ears as we must, still we can not bear and see all that we would.

It was actually felt as a luxury when Rebecca West was absent for a time from the stage, and we recaptured the novel sensation of seeing and bearing perfectly during the long scene between Rosmer and Kroll, in which the fine acting and perfect distinctness of Messrs Forrest and Mellish were gratifyingly mingled.

"Rosmersholm," in stage guise, reveals itself to us as less dramatic than when read as fiction. The political issues which figure as subjects of so many conversations are remote from and uncomprehended by the general public. They are as long-dead questions incapable of revivification. But what was always the real, living question to Ibsen, the right of individual liberty, irrespective of parties, creeds, or conventions, is one of the animating motives of the play. And, strangely enough, the question is left either unsolved, or settled in the negative of Ibsen's convictions, according to the way the beholder chooses to take it. This mingling of uncertainty and negation is one of the points that makes "Rosmersholm" so much less truly dramatic than Ibsen's better-known plays, and which has, no doubt, tended to bar it from a frequent stage representation.

The play tells a dark and dreary story. A suffering, martyred wife, displaced by an interloper of coldly intellectual purpose, a husband who is made by the fascinating schemer to believe in the unsettlement of his wife's reason. The wife, influenced of fixed purpose by the interloper, solves her problems by suicide, and the schemer comes to learn that the love born in her heart for the unconsciously wronged husband constitutes her torment instead of her emancipation.

Of Rebecca West, apostle of free will, and fixed denier of man's right to prohibit her from the things she covets, develops a conscience. She can not marry the man whose wife she has virtually killed, she can not abandon him. So there the two live in guiltless communion at Rosmersholm, where the woman is seen as a ruling but enigmatic presence. There, again, is dramatic ineffectiveness. As in "Lady Inger of Ostrat," Ibsen allows the audience to be too much in the dark. No opportunity is afforded us until the third act to solve the enigma. Except to those who have read the play—and the theory is that every play should come as a surprise—there is no chance to learn whether Rebecca's mission in that household is noble or ignoble.

That it is a very significant fact, and one of dominant influence, is made apparent not only by Rosmer and Kroll's words, but by the suggestion of strong individuality which is carried about by that otherwise dainty little presence.

Mrs. Fiske is as restless as an amateur playing housemaid, and all her nervous tricks are in evidence—her lip-tapping fingers, her side-excursioning tongue, her quick, purposeless movements, her constant interruptions, so that continually her speech runs parallel with that of the player who shares her scene. Yet with that overmastering strength of will which allows her to do with us as she will in the climactic moments of the drama, Mrs. Fiske bends these mannerisms to her immediate purpose, and causes them to appear as manifestations of a sea of perturbed thought under Rebecca West's outward calm. I know of no player on the stage today who can so exasperate an audience by her un-get-at-able-ness. I never felt easy and comfortable in my life while listening to Mrs. Fiske, except in the toy Colonial Theatre.

Listening to her during her memorably-agonizing engagement at the Grand Opera House was slow martyrdom. People gave it all up, and conversed freely during the performance, exchanging sentiments of mutual discomfort. Some of the sufferers have declined ever seeing her again, fearing to repeat the experience. And if they had to sit in or near the critics' row, I would strongly advise them to stick to their determination. "That way madness lies." In fact, there is no use going to see Mrs. Fiske with the purpose of enjoying her acting unless one has a good seat, well near the stage. Yet, when she grips us, how she grips us. Her face is a constantly changing picture, full of fleeting meanings, and rich with latent suggestion. When the moment of wild revolt against the cruel pressure of Kroll's discoveries comes, and later the confession, we had again that rare sensation which she always gives us in her great moments; that thrilling perception of a soul leaping up, like the fires of a conflagration, and showing itself in the heroic glow of a great conflict, and a great resolve.

Yet we had long to wait for the big moment. And when it was past, and the end came, it came with a certain tameness. There should be nothing tame in seeing two human beings full of life and still young and loving, join hands and walk calmly out in the darkness to voluntary death in the mill-race. But it seemed needless, and offered no solution. The true expiation was separation. Rebecca West, by her own act, had barred herself from paradise.

But Ibsen wished to show how this strange, enigmatic being, hitherto firmly planted in an arrogant conviction as to her intellectual and moral liberty, bumbly could put aside a lifetime's conviction and practice, and pass calmly to death, simply as a proof of the might and supremacy of her love.

Yet, as I said, it seemed needless and that because the meanings of the play do not carry well dramatically. I do not doubt that people who are sincerely interested in the more intellectual phases of the drama, but who are not well up in Ibsen, will feel compelled to read the play carefully over to find what Ibsen is getting at. One thing they will discover. And that is, that Ibsen himself was not quite sure. The play seems to reflect a season of doubt and discouragement on the author's part. The absence of concreteness in the vague views held by Rebecca West, the failure of Pastor Rosmer, her convert, to be acceptable to the liberals for purely materialistic reasons, the unworthiness of Mortensgard, spokesman for the Liberals, all these seem to point to the idea of a conflict between ethical and intellectual convictions. But the victory is for neither side, save that won by Rebecca West over her insurgent heart, when self goes down, and a purified love is in the ascendant.

That love, and the woman's capacity for strong emotion, was first made manifest in the third act, when its influence impelled her to confess. Rebecca at last emerges from her stoic calm, the confession of her malevolent influence on Beata coming suddenly, and with it all those reserves of acting power which made the scene stand out from the bazy obscurity suddenly and strongly, like invisible writing made legible through chemical action.

As is her custom, Mrs. Fiske has brought out with her a first-class company. Arthur Forrest, whom we remember as the leading man during Hilda Spong's first engagement here in "Wheels Witbin Wheels" and "Lady Huntworth's Experiment," takes the very different rôle of Pastor Rosmer with that ease and readiness which always characterizes the trained actor's acceptance of the rôle of a cleric. Mr. Forrest reminds me of Otis Skinner in the rôle of the French priest. Like him, he is unable to deal in silent suggestion, but a master in the technique of the more refinedly obvious style and therefore not unlike him in a tendency toward over-emphasis of gesture and facial expression. In the rôle of Pastor Rosmer he has many long and taxing scenes, which he worthily sustained.

Fuller Mellish is a first-class character actor, and gave a striking impersonation of the old pastor who is as strongly rooted in prejudice as in dogma, looking the militant English cleric to the life.

An almost equally striking study was that of Albert Bruning's Brendel, who, however, fails to be comprehensible to an ordinary American audience, and William Norton's Mortensgard was a carefully consistent portrait of the insincere banner-bearer of the Liberal party.

Artistically tasteful and fitting, the settings, with their accessories of carved furniture, stained glass, and family portraits, gave the proper impression of rich, sober dignity appropriate to the home of a wealthy old family.

At the Greek Theatre.

There can be no doubt about the popularity of military band concerts in the Greek Theatre at Berkeley. Last Saturday night there were more than six thousand people in the big auditorium and they gave rousing applause to each number of the Third United States Artillery Band. The night, the first of a series of six, was a big success. Professor Armes struck the right theory when he said that the people wanted good popular music at popular prices.

The audience was a cultured one. Sousa got a dollar a bead for just about the same programme. But Sousa didn't play to as many opera cloaks and fancy dresses as did Bandleader Armand Putz and his regimental aggregation of trained musicians. Miss Helen Colburn Heath, the soloist of the evening, was more than well received. She had to respond to two encores after singing her Michaela song from "Carmen."

The programme for the second concert, which will be given on the night of the Fourth of July, will be mainly of patriotic music. A full military band playing patriotic music in the classic Greek Theatre on the evening of the anniversary of the nation's birth will be something worth hearing, and under the arrangements being made by Professor Armes the sight in the big auditorium that night will be something worth seeing.

The Greek Theatre will no doubt present a pretty sight. An attendance of close to 10,000 is expected. The seating capacity of the chair section will be increased from 1000 to 3000.

L. A. Larsen, the popular Bobemian Club baritone, will be the soloist of the evening. He will sing "My Own United States" to the accompaniment of the band.

In relating his impressions of King Edward, M. Noel Dorville, the black-and-white artist, tells how, while drawing the king's portrait at Buckingham Palace for the Entente Souvenir Album, his majesty criticised his work with great discrimination, remarking: "We have rather artistic tastes in my family. The queen, my mother, drew very well, and I myself wielded the pencil when a boy. Apropos, how do you fix your drawings, monsieur? I used to fix them simply with milk, and remember that during some of my first attempts I drank the milk instead of using it for the drawings."

Germany sold 552 big locomotives and 395 small locomotives during the last year, and about 3600 tons of locomotive parts. The whole brought in nearly $9,000,000. Italy was the largest customer, with France next, and then Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and Chili.

Henry Miller has in rehearsal his new play entitled "Mater," the work of Percy Mackaye which is to follow "The Great Divide" at the Van Ness Theatre. Isabel Irving will play the leading rôle in this production.

A feature of the big benefit to be given next Thursday afternoon at the Van Ness Theatre in aid of the Actors' Fund of America will be the one-act burlesque on the trial scene from "The Merchant of Venice."

AMUSEMENTS

GREEK THEATRE BERKELEY CAMPUS

EVENING OF JULY FOURTH under auspices of Musical and Dramatic Committee of the University of California GRAND PATRIOTIC CONCERT Second in popular series by the famous

THIRD UNITED STATES ARTILLERY BAND

Best and largest band in American army assisted by L. A. LARSEN, the distinguished baritone Admission 25 cents 8 to 10 p. m. 6,000 attended last Saturday

ORPHEUM ELLIS STREET NEAR FILLMORE Absolutely Class A Theatre Building

Week beginning this Sunday afternoon Matinee Every Day

ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE

A NIGHT ON A HOUSEBOAT, the Latest New York Vaudeville Hit; 7—PATTY FRANK TROUPE—7; MR. and MRS. GEORGE A. BEANE; BERTIE HERRON; MARCEL'S BAS RELIEFS and LIVING STATUARY; LEIPZIG; GRANT and HOAG; New Orpheum Motion Pictures; Last Week and Great Comedy Hit of FRED BOND and FREMONT BENTON, in their laughable farce, "Handkerchief No. 15." Evening prices, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box seats, $1. Matinee prices (except Sundays and holidays), 10c, 25c, 50c. Phone, WEST 6000.

PRINCESS THEATRE Ellis Street near Fillmore S. LOVERICH, Manager Phone West 663

Matinee Saturday and Sunday THIS WEEK AND NEXT Lew Field's Musical Extravaganza Success IT HAPPENED IN NORDLAND Special Engagement of JULIUS STEGER MAY BOLEY, WILLIAM BURRESS And all the Princess favorites in the cast Popular prices—Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Mats. (except Sundays and holidays), 25c, 50c.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Tel. West 6036 BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers Corner Sutter and Steiner Sts. Absolute Class "A" bldg.

Sixty-Ninth Week of the Alcazar Stock Co. Commencing SUNDAY AFTERNOON, July 5 For Eight Nights and Three Matinees Revival of the play of early California life THE ROSE OF THE RANCHO By David Belasco and Richard Walton Tully Prices: Evenings, 25c to $1. Matinees, 25c to 50c. Matinee Sunday and Saturday. Monday, July 13—MR. WHITE WHIT-TLESEY and the Alcazar Players in "His Grace Du Grammont," by Clyde Fitch.

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove St. Phone Market 500

BEGINNING MONDAY, JULY 6 Matinee Saturdays Only The Henry Miller Season During the first two weeks will be presented THE GREAT DIVIDE By William Vaughn Moody 500 Nights in New York City Mr. Miller as Stephen Ghent Next play—"Mater."

Peyton Chemical Co. Purchasers and Smelters of COPPER, GOLD AND SILVER ORES, ETC. Rooms 657 and 658 Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal. Smelter and Works at Peyton, Contra Costa Co., Cal.; P. O., Martinez

Mild, Rich and Satisfying

Sanchez y Haya Clear Havana Cigars

Factory No. 1 Tampa, Fla.

Tillmann & Bendel Pacific Slope Distributors

ON THE OUTINGS

of the season's sports, thousands will, under the heat and fatigue, feel the need of cheer and comfort.

HUNTER WHISKEY

THE PURE AND PERFECT STIMULANT

will be first sought for Health and Hospitality, and it gives this hint—"Take a Dainty Hunter Julep" with its fresh and fragrant mint.

CHARLES M. REYNOLDS CO. Agents for California and Nevada, 912-914 Folsom St., San Francisco, Cal.

VANITY FAIR.

The London Tribune says a few things about the status of women's clubs in Paris which score heavily on the side of the Frenchwoman's domesticity. A branch of the popular Lyceum Club of London was recently opened in Paris in the Rue de la Bienfaisance and its reception has been a unique epoch in the history of women's clubs. Women's clubs have long been heard of in Paris, along with extension-soled hoots, corsetless figures, and other such impossibilities that seem corollary to the club. But no Frenchwoman had ever thought of establishing a club, for the reason that she would not have known what to do with it when she had it. It remained, therefore, for the Lyceum to spread its influence in the form of a branch club to its French sisters. The interest evinced by both men and women in this new venture seemed to promise an immediate success for the Lyceum fledgling. Every one was eager to hear about it, its aims, its raison d'être, its constitution and by-laws. "This is going to fill a long-felt need in the life of the Frenchwoman," the commiserating Lyceumines said. "Herein lies the antidote for the Parisienne's apparent hopeless frivolity." But to the amazement of the English women, when the lists were opened for membership after the novelty of the club receptions had worn off, the interest in the Paris branch ceased. Their curiosity satisfied as to what it would be like if they should belong to a woman's club, they let it severely alone. All the eloquence of the English tongue, all the statistics showing the philanthropy dispensed, all the rows of dog-eared Hensens, did not avail to answer the wide-eyed Parisienne's "Pourquoi?" These English women might read and study and do all these things if they chose, to be sure, but "why?" Also they might deliberately make by-laws to exclude the society of the other sex if they liked, but again "why?" And above all, even though this might be their idea of mental improvement and social advancement, why should they want to foist it upon Paris? Why should these women have spacious clubrooms, luxuriously appointed, where tea is served and every facility provided for enjoyment without leaving themselves anything to enjoy? Well-gowned, well-groomed, attractive women they certainly were, discussing politics and remodeling the map of the world over their tea-cups with never a wandering glance toward the door, never an honest yawn over the honneted heads, never a thrill at the approach of a familiar footsteps. What was it all for anyway? the befogged Frenchwoman asked. If some unfortunate chance might make it necessary for these women to settle the affairs of the universe over their five-o'clock tea, why exclude the men? Or if the men must be excluded because of some sort of English prejudice why such grooming and gowning? Mme. La France's eyes grew wider and wider over these paradoxical problems until with her all-conclusive shrug she put the Paris branch of the Lyceum Club quite out of her mind and addressed herself to more important things.

The club bee, however, was not wholly dismissed from the Paris honnet. The Lyceum found its métier on a lower level, for the working women of France needed the club, not to stimulate independent thought, merely as a cooperative eating association. The value of concerted action, suggested by the leaders of the Lyceum, was taken up by the humbler classes, the women employed in offices, or the clerical department of the big shops, with a mere stipend with which to satisfy a healthy appetite for a mid-day meal. To this class of women the club has proved a good and useful thing in the form of an eating-house—the qualification for membership a robust appetite. Several of these clubs exist now in the vicinity of the shopping districts and during the mid-day hours seats at their long tables are at a premium. These women, reduced by necessity to consider the sterner phases of life, can lunch with no regrets in a woman's club, providing the clubbing makes their meals cheaper. There is nothing here, however, that suggests anything like the club atmosphere. The women eat hurriedly, chatting little between bites, and leave for office or shop with never a moment's lounging in the waiting-rooms, and not 3 per cent of the members of these clubs, we are told, make any use of the reading-rooms provided for them. The idea of club life simply does not exist in the Frenchwoman's mind: her day's work finished, she goes to her home, cheerless as it may be, and although light, warmth, and hooks are at her command at the club she never dreams of stopping there for an evening. This rechaud club, successful as long as it offers no reading-rooms or social diversions, marks the point of divergence between the French and English woman's point of view. If a Frenchwoman must work in office or shop her day's routine is merely incidental to the home life her earnings make possible. The end and aim of her training has been all her life that to have a home of her own is the highest reward of her earthly goodness—the greatest blessing that can befall her. Why, then, if she has a home, be it ever so humble, quit it for the imitation? Why, if between her own four walls she may find the society of father, husband, and mother, should she resort to an Adamless

Eden, however well appointed? And why when the summum bonum of her womanhood is the acquiring of a home of her own, should she fly in the face of Providence by seeking the cloister-like seclusion of the woman's club?

A direct derivative of this anti-club instinct on the part of the Frenchwoman may be her love of display. Or vice-verso her love of displaying her grooming and gowning makes a woman's club "stale, flat, and unprofitable" for no other reason than that it is a woman's club. The gay Parisienne, most charming of women, not because she is beautiful but because she knows how to make everything in nature help her to be beautiful, demands the admiration of the masculine eye as her own inalienable right and droops and pines without it. To achieve this admiration, she must, of course, be charming, with or without the blessing of facial beauty. She is therefore chic from the top curl of her coiffure to the toe of her hoot. The business of her life is to cultivate grace of movement, and there is never a visible corner or angle. She must be all curves of beauty and grace. But above all her life of attention to detail has taught her how to wear her clothes and make the best of them, whether they be simple or fine. The Frenchwoman, with a world-old philosophy of color, thinks in harmonious shades. She could never express a jarring note in color effects, because in this point she is horn a true artist, expressing grace in thought as well as pose. With something akin to reverence for color, the putting together of shades or lustres is a thing to be undertaken in a serious frame of mind. The right touch of brilliancy or the dash of black to give character to a combination means more to the Frenchwoman than the woman of any other nationality, because it also expresses its full value to the Frenchman. Fancy, therefore, madame or mademoiselle, the serious business of the toilette accomplished, repairing to the Paris branch of the Lyceum Club, consciously a symphony in shades, a poem in pastels, from which monsieur, by a set of by-laws, is excluded! The Lyceum Club, excellent on English soil, is the gorgeous English poppy transplanted to alien surroundings, where, misunderstood, it withers and falls until its flaunting petals flutter into the meanest high-ways to gladden perhaps the hearts of the poorer classes but misses the proud place to which it believed itself destined.

When Mrs. Taft is called upon to preside over the White House she will find herself more at home, probably, than any President's wife who has ever graced it. Mrs. Taft's acquaintance with the White House began long before Mr. Taft's appointment to the War Secretaryship. As Miss Herron, the daughter of Judge John W. Herron of Cincinnati, who was the law partner of Rutherford B. Hayes, she was a frequent guest at the White House and was much admired in executive circles for her vivacity and wit. Still a young woman, Mrs. Taft preserves the qualities that made her so attractive in her girlhood, to which the passing years have added dignity. During Mr. Taft's Cabinet life Mrs. Taft has been one of the most popular women in Washington's diplomatic circles. While a thoroughly womanly woman, devoted to her family and interested actively in every detail of her household, Mrs. Taft has broad sympathies with the social and political world and has unbounded ambitions for her husband's advancement. It is somewhat due to his wife's influence that Mr. Taft declined Mr. Roosevelt's offer of a seat on the Supreme Court bench a year or two ago. With a firm faith in her husband's chance for the presidential chair, she discouraged the appointment Mr. Taft seemed to regard with favor. "I am not ambitious to be the lady of the White House on my own account," Mrs. Taft has explained to her friends, "for such a position has disadvantages as well as advantages, but of course I shall do all I can to further Mr. Taft's interests." It would be difficult to find a more all-round woman or one better qualified to dispense the hospitalities of the White House than Mrs. Taft. Although never described as beautiful or even pretty, Mrs. Taft has a charming personality, with a broad, well disciplined mind, unflinching tact, and a rarely beautiful disposition. Added to this, Mrs. Taft is a musician of recognized ability. For seven years she was the president of the Symphony Orchestra of Cincinnati and has a number of medals, cups, and decorations that she has won in musical competitions. Helen Taft, the daughter of the house, has inherited much of her mother's charm of manner and musical talent, together with a decided hookish turn, probably from her father. She has recently won the Pennsylvania State scholarship from Baldwin School at Bryn Mawr to Bryn Mawr itself. She is a tall, graceful girl of the demi-blonde type, serious and thoughtful for her age, and although she will be just about eighteen at the time of the election it is quite probable that she will continue her studies until she has completed her college work, even though it means the missing of one or two social seasons. The other members of the Taft family are Robert, a sophomore at Yale, and Charles, the youngest of the family, both bright young fellows wholly unspoiled and with brains and poise enough to keep them so during a term of White House notoriety.

W. & J. SLOANE

SUMMER FURNITURE

Old Hickory,
Willow and
Prairie Grass
Furniture for Verandas and Summer Homes

Van Ness and Sutter

HONEYMOON EXCURSIONS

AND OTHERS

Think of these places, of these rates, of the pleasure of traveling on the California Limited, of the joy of a stay at the Grand Canyon, and decide that the beck of happiness calls you to our office at 673 Market St.

GRAND CANYON AND BACK	- $ 50.00
DENVER AND BACK	- - - - 55.00
<small>On sale September 14 and 15</small>
CHICAGO AND BACK	- - - - 72.50
NEW YORK AND BACK	- - - - 108.50
WASHINGTON AND BACK	- - - - 107.50
BOSTON AND BACK	- - - - 110.50
ST. PAUL AND BACK	- - - - 73.50
ST. LOUIS AND BACK	- - - - 67.50

AND MANY OTHER CITIES

As to the dates—July 6, 7, 8, 28 and 29, also dates in August and September.

Ask us and we will plan your trip.

F. W. PRINCE, 673 Market St.

Phone Kearny 315

S. F. and North Pacific 5%
Market St. 1st Con. 5%
Cal. Central Gas and El. 5%
Sacramento El. Gas and Ry. 5%

And OTHER HIGH GRADE BONDS
SUTRO & CO.
BROKERS
412 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.
We have a Direct Wire to N. Y.

DIVIDEND NOTICES

FRENCH SAVINGS BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO, 108 Sutter Street.—For the half year ending June 30, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum on all deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Wednesday, July 1, 1908; dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from July 1, 1908. CHARLES CARPY, President.

MECHANICS' SAVINGS BANK, 143 Montgomery Street (will occupy our new building, Market and Mason Streets, July 27).—For the half year ending June 30, 1908, a dividend has been declared on all savings deposits, free of taxes, at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum, payable on and after Wednesday, July 1, 1908. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as principal from July 1, 1908. JOHN U. CALKINS, Cashier.

OFFICE OF THE HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY, corner Market, McAllister and Jones Streets, San Francisco, June 26, 1908.—At a meeting of the board of directors of this society, held this day, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum on all deposits for the six months ending June 30, 1908, free from all taxes, and payable on and after July 1, 1908. Dividends not drawn will be added to depositors' accounts and become a part thereof, and will earn dividend from July 1, 1908. Deposits made on or before July 10, 1908, will draw interest from July 1, 1908. R. M. TOBIN, Secretary.

THE GERMAN SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY, 526 California Street.—For the half year ending June 30, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum on all deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Wednesday, July 1, 1908. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from July 1, 1908. GEORGE TOURNY, Secretary.

HUMBOLDT SAVINGS BANK, 785 MARKET Street, near Fourth.—For the half year ending June 30, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum on all savings deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Wednesday, July 1, 1908. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from July 1, 1908. W. E. PALMER, Secretary.

MUTUAL SAVINGS BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO, 706 Market Street, opposite Third.—For the half year ending June 30, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum on all deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Wednesday, July 1, 1908. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from July 1, 1908. Money deposited on or before July 10th will draw interest from July 1, 1908. GEORGE A. STORY, Cashier.

THE SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY, 101 Montgomery Street, corner Sutter Street.—For the half year ending June 30, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rate of 4 per cent per annum on all deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Wednesday, July 1, 1908. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from July 1, 1908. WM. A. BOSTON, Cashier.

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, 42 Montgomery Street, corner Sutter.—For half year ending June 30, 1908, a dividend has been declared on all deposits in the savings department of this bank at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum, payable on and after Wednesday, July 1, 1908; dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from July 1, 1908. B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager.

SAN FRANCISCO SAVINGS UNION, N. W. corner California and Montgomery Streets.—For the half year ending June 30, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rate per annum of four and one-quarter (4 1/4) per cent on term deposits and four (4) per cent on ordinary deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Wednesday, July 1, 1908. Depositors are entitled to draw their dividends at any time during the succeeding half year. A dividend not drawn will be added to the deposit account, become a part thereof and earn dividend from July 1, 1908. LOVELL WHITE, Cashier.

The Continental Building and Loan Association Market and Church Streets

will on July 1, 1908, pay the usual interest of 6 per cent per annum on time deposits or Class C stock, 4 per cent per annum on ordinary or Class D stock. The interest on ordinary deposits, if not withdrawn, will be added to the principal and thereafter draw interest at the same rate.
WASHINGTON DODGE, President.
WILLIAM CORBIN, Secretary.

SECURITY SAVINGS BANK, 316 MONTGOMERY Street.—For the half year ending June 30, 1908, dividends upon all deposits at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum, free of taxes, will be payable on and after July 1, 1908. FRED W. RAY, Secretary.

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

When the late Francois Coppee was elected to the Academy, he told his friend, Theodore de Banville, that he wished he were in, too. Banville declined to canvass. "Suppose your nomination were brought to you one fine morning on a silver salver." "I don't know what I should do with the nomination," said Banville, "but I should certainly keep the salver."

A Mormon's wife, coming downstairs one morning, met the physician who was attending her husband. "Is he very ill?" she asked anxiously. "He is," replied the physician. "I fear that the end is not far off." "Do you think," she asked hesitatingly, "do you think it proper that I should be at his bedside during his last moments?" "Yes. But I advise you to hurry, madam. The best places are already being taken."

A New England clergyman was taking breakfast one Sunday morning in a hotel in a little Western town. A rough old fellow across the table called over to him: "Goin' to the races, stranger?" The clergyman replied: "I don't expect to." "Goin' to the ball game?" "No." "Well, where are you goin'?" "I'm going to church." "Where do you come from?" "New England." "Ob, that explains it! That's where they keep the Sabbath and every other blamed thing they can lay their hands on."

"Long introductions when a man has a speech to make are a bore," said former Senator John C. Spooner. "I have had all kinds, but the most satisfactory one in my career was that of a German mayor of a small town in my State, Wisconsin. I was to make a political address and the opera-house was crowded. When it came time to begin the mayor got up. 'Mine friends,' he said, 'I haf asked been to introduce Senator Spooner, who is to make a speech, yes. Vell, I haf dit so, und he vill now do so.'"

At a dinner given by the prime minister of a little kingdom on the Balkan Peninsula, a distinguished diplomat complained to his host that the minister of justice, who had been sitting on his left, had stolen his watch. "Ah, he shouldn't have done that," said the prime minister in tones of annoyance. "I will get it back for you." Sure enough, toward the end of the evening the watch was returned to its owner. "And what did he say?" asked the diplomat. "Sh-h," cautioned the host, glancing anxiously about him. "He doesn't know that I have got it back."

"Ah, good-morning, Windiddy!" saluted the white man who had just returned from a few weeks' absence. "I understand that you have hurried your wife?" "Who me? 'W'y-uh—howdy, sah!" returned the colored citizen addressed. "No, 'fanky, sah; I isn't hurried my wife—dat is to say, not dis one. Yo' is uh-referencin' to muh third wife, I reggin, sah. I's u-honeymoonin' wid muh fouth' he'pmeet now. Yassah, I buried muh yudder wife, come to think about it, but dat was mighty nigh two weeks ago. Hatter do it, sah, to muh disrepret, uh-kaze de lady was dead."

Lord Palmerston and Sir J. Paget, who told the story, were walking down Bond Street. A man came up and saluted the statesman. "How do you do, Lord Palmerston?" "Ah, how do? Glad to see you. How's the old complaint?" The stranger's face clouded over and he shook his head. "No better." "Dear me; so sorry; glad to have met you. Good-bye." "Who's your friend?" asked Sir James, when the stranger was gone. "No idea." "Why, you asked him about his old complaint." "Pooh, pooh!" replied the other, unconcernedly; "the old fellow's well over sixty; bound to have something the matter with him."

In the late financial stringency a clerk in one of the New York banks was trying to explain to a stolid old Dutchman why the bank could not pay cash to depositors as formerly, and was insisting that he be satisfied with Clearing House checks. But the old German could not grasp the situation, and finally the president of the bank was called upon to enlighten the dissatisfied customer. After a detailed explanation of the financial situation, the president concluded, "Now, my good man, you understand, don't you?" "Yes," dubiously replied the Dutchman, "I thinks I understand. It's just like dis, ven my baby vakes up in der night and cries for milk, I give her a milk-ticket."

A young colored man asked permission of his employer to use the telephone, as he wished to speak to a colored girl employed at another residence. Upon receiving consent, he explained: "You see, it's dis way. I loves dat gal an' wants to ask her to marry me, but, 'fore de Lord! I aint got de grit to ask her 'word out of mouth'; an' so I wants to use de 'phone. I'll jest call her up. Hello! Is dat Dinah?" "No. Will call her." "Hello! Dat you, Dinah?" "Ye-as." "Dinah, you knows I thinks a heap of you." "Ye-as." "An' I bin tryin' to make you think a heap of me." "Ye-as." "I more den thinks a heap of you. I loves you, Dinah." "Ye-as." "Now, Dinah—I—er—wants to ask you if you will marry me?" "Ye-as, indeedy! Who is dis what's talkin' to me?"

Philosophy, says Jerome K. Jerome, is the art of bearing other people's troubles. The truest philosopher he ever heard of was a woman. She was brought into the London Hospital suffering from a poisoned leg. The house surgeon made a hurried examination. He was a man of blunt speech. "It will have to come off," he told her. "What, not all of it?" "The whole of it, I'm sorry to say," growled the house surgeon. "Nothing else for it?" "No other chance for you whatever," explained the house surgeon. "Ah well, thank Gawd it's not my 'ead."

Realism rules the nursery. A certain Philadelphia matron, who had taken pains to inculcate biblical stories as well as ethical truths in her three children, heard, the other day, long-drawn howls of rage and grief filtering down from the playroom. Up two flights she hurried, to find on the floor Jack and Ebel, voices uplifted. Thomas, aged nine, sat perched upon the table, his mouth full and his eyes guilty. "Whatever is the matter?" asked mamma. "Bo-o-o!" came from Ethel; "we were playing Garden of Eden. Bo-o-o!" "But what is there to cry about?" Then Jack, with furious finger pointing at Tom, ejaculated through his tears: "God's eat the apple!"

THE MERRY MUSE.

The Spooners.

Together we sat in a tête-à-tête,
The prettiest girl and I.
The light was out and the hour was late,
For time, you know, will fly! By Jove,
How rapidly time will fly!

Together we sat in the welcome gloom,
Alone, unheard, unseen,
Though her mother was in the other room
With a thin portière between.

I knew that the mother in amhush lay—
As mothers do, it seems—
To carry the prettiest girl away,
Away to the land of dreams. By Jove!
To the wonderful land of dreams.

But the cherry-like lips of the pretty miss,
Alas, were a tempting sight,
And I ventured to beg for a tiny kiss—
Just one, before "Good night."

But the prettiest girl resented that
In a way I'd never dreamed,
For she airily sprang from where we sat
And, what do you think? She screamed! By Jove!
She certainly did—she screamed!

I caught the coquette in my arms—Alack,
For such is the way of men!—
And gruffly demanded of her a smack,
And then—and then—and then—

Her mother came cruelly in with a light
And—what do you think she said?
"Oh, come little lady, kiss daddy good-night,"
And carried her off to bed, by Jove!
And carried the babe to bed!

—The Bohemian Magazine.

The Love Song.

[It is said that the men of today are far less passionate in their love-making than their ancestors.]

I love you, or at least I think
That very possibly I do;
In common honesty I shrink
From statements not precisely true,
But still it's safe to say I'm pretty fond of you.

I can not swear a mighty oath
To worship blindly till I die,
In fact I should be rather loath
To form so very rash a tie,
Unless I knew a most substantial reason why.

I shall not, with a valiant air,
Pour out my life-blood for your good,
Nor even boastfully declare
That if I had the chance I would,
Because, to tell the truth, I hardly think I should.

No knightly deeds have I to do,
And no impassioned words to say;
Still, I should like to marry you,
If you will tell me that I may,
And also kindly name the most convenient day.

I can't explain the thing, you know
(They used to tell us Love was blind),
But since it happens to be so
Forgive my weakness, and be kind,
Or, if you're not that way disposed—well, never mind!

Ezekiel, a Florida dorky, had no stockings, so the night before Christmas he bung his trousers in the chimney of the tumble-down shack that he calls home. Christmas morning a Northern lady, calling at the cabin with some presents for the family, was greeted by Ezekiel's doleful face protruding from a narrow opening in the door. After wishing him a merry Christmas, the lady asked him what presents he had received. "Ah reckon Ah must have got er nigger," said Ezekiel. "Mah pants is gone."

A. Hirschman.

For fine jewelry and silverware. 1641-1643 Van Ness Avenue.

BANKING

Security Savings Bank

316 MONTGOMERY STREET
San Francisco, Cal.
Authorized Capital - $1,000,000.00
Paid-up Capital - 500,000.00
Surplus and Undivided Profits 313,000.00

4% Interest Per Annum

Interest at the Rate of 4 per cent per annum was paid on Deposits for Six Months ending Dec. 31, 1907

DIRECTORS

Wm. Babcock, S. L. Ahlot, O. D. Baldwin, Joseph D. Grant, E. J. McCutchen, L. F. Montegale, R. H. Pease, Warren D. Clark, Jas. L. Flood, Fred W. Ray, J. A. Donohoe, Jacob Stern.

French Savings Bank

The French Savings Bank Building, 108-110 Sutter Street.

THE FRENCH-AMERICAN BANK occupies offices in the same building.

OFFICERS—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, Vice-President; Leon Boqueraz, Vice-President; Alphonse Bouquet, Secretary.

DIRECTORS—J. E. Artigues, O. Bozio, J. A. Bergerot, John Ginty, J. M. Dupas, J. S. Godean, N. C. Bahin, George Belaney, H. de St. Seine.

Safe Deposit Boxes for Rent

The German Savings and Loan Society
526 California St., San Francisco

Guaranteed Capital $1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash, 1,000,000.00
Deposits, June 29, 1907..... 38,156,931.28

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillman, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

The National Bank ROLL OF HONOR

The title "Roll of Honor National Bank" is a distinction of which any financial institution in the United States may be proud. As is well known a "Roll of Honor Bank" is one possessing surplus and profits in excess of capital. A place on the Roll of Honor cannot be bought, it must be earned. This bank has for a long time been known as a "Roll of Honor Bank" among banks and bankers.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF Berkeley

UNITED STATES DEPOSITORY
A. W. NAYLOR, Pres. F. M. WILSON, Vice-Pres.
F. L. NAYLOR, Cashier. F. C. MORTIMER, Asst. Cashier.

THE BERKELEY NATIONAL BANK

United States Depository
Berkeley, Cal.
HOUSEHOLD AND COMMERCIAL ACCOUNTS INVITED
DIRECTORS—George P. Baxter, Pres.; J. W. Richards, Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Bangs, Vice-Pres.; Louis Titus, Dr. Thomas Addison, A. G. Freeman, Duncan McDuffie, Perry T. Tompkins, F. L. Lipman, W. J. Hotchkiss and Whitney Palache. P. H. ATKINSON, Cashier.

Connecticut Fire Insurance Company

Established 1850 OF HARTFORD
Total Assets $5,817,423
Surplus to Policy-Holders..... 2,118,394
BENJAMIN J. SMITH
Manager Pacific Department
518 CALIFORNIA STREET
San Francisco

WESTERN ASSURANCE COMPANY

TORONTO
U. S. Assets..... $2,493,154
" Surplus 483,989
PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT
1004 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE
SAN FRANCISCO
J. J. KENNY, Manager W. L. W. MILLER, Assistant Manager

John F. Forbes
Certified Public Accountant

601 KOHL BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO

Roy C. Ward Jas. W. Dean
Jas. K. Polk Geo. E. Billings

GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.

ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE EFFECTED
312 California Street. Phone Douglas 2283
San Francisco, Cal.

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

San Francisco people who have been East during the winter and spring seem to be hastening home in order to spend the summer months at the delightful resorts among the mountains or along the coast of their own State. Many more country homes have been opened during the past week and all the out-of-town hotels are full of vacationers.

The wedding of Miss Engracia Crichter and Lieutenant Francis B. Freyer was solemnized by Rev. Father Pius Murphy Monday in the Red Room of the Fairmont. The bride was given into the keeping of the groom by Mr. Charles Crocker and the bride's attendants were Miss Mahel Gregory, Miss Helen Wilson, Miss Helen Sullivan, Miss Irene Van Arsdale, Miss Gertrude Russell, and Miss Martha Fee.

Miss Maude Bourne was hostess last week at a dinner at the Fairmont given in honor of Miss Gertrude Josselyn and Mr. Gerald Rathbone.

Mr. and Mrs. H. M. A. Miller entertained a number of friends at a dinner at the Fairmont recently, the guests of honor being Mr. and Mrs. Howard Huntington of Los Angeles.

The engagement is announced of Miss Sara Drum to Mr. John Gill of Redlands.

The banquet held at the St. Francis the other evening to honor the twenty-fourth anniversary of the famous Greecley party brought together a number of very interesting characters, among them being Admirals Schree and Emory, Colonel Brainard, Mr. Maurice Connell, and Mr. Taylor. Admiral Emory commanded the steamer Bear that led the relief expedition, Admiral Schree was executive officer on the Thetis, and Mr. Taylor was quartermaster of the Thetis.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a résumé of movements to and from this city and Coast and of the whereabouts of absent Californians:

The Charles S. Crockers are at their home in Redwood.

Captain and Mrs. Edmund Shortlidge, who have been visiting Mrs. Shortlidge's mother, Mrs. George Fife, have gone to Fort Dupont, Delaware, where Captain Shortlidge is stationed.

Judge and Mrs. Fred Henshaw are in town for a few days before going down to their home in Redwood.

Miss Jennie Crocker is expected to arrive home about the middle of July.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Tubbs have returned from their country home in Colusa County, the Hagar ranch, and will spend the remainder of the summer at Del Monte.

Secretary and Mrs. Victor H. Metcalf are planning their usual outing at Foutes's Springs.

Mrs. L. Gerstle and Miss Gerstle are spending a few weeks in the Tahoe region.

Mrs. G. Page Tallant and the Tallant children are at Castle Crags farm.

Miss Alice Hoffman is the guest of Mrs. Walter Hohart at her cottage at Bolinas.

Mrs. Cesar Bertheau and her daughters, Miss Helen and Miss Anita Bertheau, are at Blithedale for the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Evan J. Pillsbury have opened their home, Montecito, for the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Freeman, with Miss Maud Payne, are motoring through the southern part of the State.

The Mountford Wilsons are taking a leisurely motoring tour through the northern part of the State, their ultimate destination being the Tahoe country.

Miss Genevieve King has returned from a visit to Miss Maud Bourne in Grass Valley.

Mr. and Mrs. Ferderick Kohl are in their Tahoe home, Idlewild, for the summer.

Miss Jennie Blair is expected home from Paris shortly.

General and Mrs. Oscar Fitzalan Long are guests of Mrs. Long's mother, Mrs. I. L. Requa, at Aetna Springs.

Mrs. Edwin C. Long, wife of Captain Long of the Presidio, and her sister, Miss Marjorie Shepherd, are spending the summer in the Sierras.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Crocker are spending the summer at their country home near Cloverdale.

The Misses Marie and Marguerite Butters are planning to spend July with friends at Aetna Springs.

Lieutenant H. H. Royal, U. S. N., and Mrs. Royal are registered at the Fairmont awaiting the departure of the fleet.

Mrs. M. A. Tobin and Miss Agnes Tobin have taken the Clark residence in San Mateo for the summer.

Mrs. C. O. Alexander and her daughter have returned from a visit to Chico, where they have been the guests of Mrs. Bidwell.

Mrs. Charles S. Fee and her two daughters are spending the summer at Tahoe Tavern.

Mr. and Mrs. George T. Mayre spent last week at the Hotel Rafael as guests of Miss Lily O'Connor.

Miss Withrow and Miss Evelyn Withrow, after spending several years in Paris, have returned to San Francisco.

Colonel John Clem, U. S. A., and Mrs. Clem have returned from San Antonio, Texas, and are domiciled at the El Drisco.

Dr. and Mrs. J. S. Oyster and Miss Elizabeth Oyster are in Santa Barbara for a few weeks.

Mrs. Sutherland, wife of Captain Sutherland of the U. S. S. New Jersey, and the Misses Sutherland have returned from a trip to Yosemite.

Lieutenant Mannaring, U. S. M. C., and Mrs. Mannaring are guests at the Alta Loma.

Mrs. A. R. Chaffee and Miss Helen Chaffee have been guests of General and Mrs. Funston at Fort Mason during the week.

Mrs. Mary Huntington and Miss Marian Huntington will sail next week for a European tour which will cover the summer months.

Mrs. A. M. Simpson and Miss Edith Simpson are planning a trip to Tahiti for the month of July.

The cosmopolitanism of the city of San Francisco is never more clearly shown than in a plan to cover the Fairmont register. Nearly every civilized nation of the world has its representatives there. Among foreign visitors at the Fairmont are Mr. and Mrs. Deeeke, Liebreck, Germany; Mr. Otto Horner, Cologne; Dr. Cluss, Vienna; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Applin, Miss Edythe Olive, London; Mrs. Constantin, Rome, Italy; Mr. Sydney Perry, Mr. F. Donnithorne Taylor, Mr. Howard Fry, Mr. and Mrs. Hipperley Cose, London; Mr. L. Ungenach, Strassburg, Alsace.

Mr. L. Van Orden, chief clerk of the St. Francis, is spending his vacation at Tahoe Tavern. Mr. and Mrs. Wyatt H. Allen spent a few days at Del Monte last week as the guests of Mrs. William P. Fuller.

Rear-Admiral W. T. Swinburne and Mrs. Swinburne, Mr. Edgar Mizner, and Mr. and Mrs. Cuyler Lee of San Francisco are registered at Aetna Springs.

Mr. Sidney F. Brock and Mr. Charles R. Wood of Philadelphia are stopping at the Fairmont.

Mr. S. F. Booth and family are spending the week-end at Tahoe Tavern.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Bissell went to Del Monte for the week-end.

Mrs. J. N. Walter, her daughter and niece, are now at Tahoe Tavern.

Among the visitors at Aetna Springs are Mr. and Mrs. George A. Newhall and Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Knight of San Francisco.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles McVay of Sweickley, Pennsylvania, are making a tour of the Coast and are stopping at the Fairmont.

Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Weir are at Tahoe Tavern for a prolonged stay.

Mrs. Thomas Breeze and Miss Louisa Breeze, who are spending the summer at Del Monte, were in town for a few days last week.

Mrs. William L. Elkins, Jr., and her son Felton arrived at the Hotel St. Francis last week, after being the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Kohl at Tahoe.

Mr. Robert M. Eyre is at Del Monte for a fortnight's visit.

Mr. E. C. Roberts of Davenport, Iowa, and Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Frank of Iowa City, Iowa, are at the Fairmont.

Major Christeanson and Miss Christeanson are guests at Tahoe Tavern.

Mrs. Walter S. Martin, who has been at the Hotel St. Francis for some time, has gone to the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. Scott.

Lieutenant S. B. Thomas, U. S. N., is spending his ten days' leave of absence from his ship, the U. S. S. Kearsarge, with his parents, Admiral and Mrs. Thomas, at Del Monte.

Mrs. A. R. Boyd, Jr., and Miss Boyd of St. Louis, Missouri, are at the Fairmont.

Miss Allis Miller of Riverside is spending a few days with her aunt, Mrs. Alice Richardson, at Tahoe Tavern.

Lieutenant T. D. Downey was among the naval men registered at the St. Francis during the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. William Mayo Newhall and family have gone to Yosemite for a few weeks.

Lieutenant N. S. Moffett, U. S. S. Maryland, and Mrs. Moffett are stopping at the Regent until the sailing of the fleet, July 7.

Mr. and Mrs. Elliot McAllister have gone to Del Monte to remain over the Fourth.

Mrs. Sarah S. Winslow and family will leave on the first of July for Lake Tahoe.

Mr. Will Chapin of Sacramento came up to the city last Saturday and took rooms at the St. Francis.

Mr. and Mrs. George C. Boardman have gone to Del Monte for a short visit.

Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Welch and Mr. and Mrs. de Laveaga are to spend the summer at Tahoe Tavern.

Commander A. Bauduin, who holds an important position in the Dutch navy, is at present a guest of the Fairmont.

Dr. and Mrs. B. A. McBurney of Chicago are staying at the St. Francis.

Mr. and Mrs. Clement Bennett are among those who are spending the Fourth at Del Monte.

Among the society folk from the interior of the State now at the Fairmont are Mrs. and Miss Peters, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Simpson, and Mrs. Maud Terrill, all of Stockton; Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Doe, of Nevada City; Mrs. W. K. Wright, of the Presidio of Monterey.

The George H. C. Meyers are guests at Tahoe Tavern, Lake Tahoe.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Wittman, Miss Wittman, and Miss Kerrigan are guests of the St. Francis.

Mrs. Adolf Gartenlauh expects to leave for Tahoe Tavern the latter part of July.

Among the guests of the Fairmont from the southern part of the State are Mr. Orlan Morgan, Mr. E. R. Baldwin, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Middlecoff, Mr. and Mrs. James Kayes, all of Los Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Sterling, of Redlands; Mrs. C. P. Von Gerichten, of San Diego; Mr. Charles P. Austin, of Santa Barbara.

The quality of the dramatic season is indicated by the presence at the Hotel St. Francis just now of Margaret Illington, Mrs. Fiske, Mr. Henry Miller, Mr. Charles Frohman, and Mr. White Whittlesey.

Major C. H. McKinstry, U. S. A., is back at his quarters in the St. Francis.

Mrs. J. W. Bothin expects to spend the summer at Tahoe Tavern.

President J. E. Stubbs of Nevada University is a guest of the Hotel St. Francis.

Mrs. Charles S. Levy and Miss Levy expect to leave for Lake Tahoe the first week in July.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee A. Phillips of Sacramento have been at the St. Francis for some days.

Miss Eugenia B. Maybury will leave for Tahoe Tavern the first week in July.

Mrs. W. A. Clark of Los Angeles is staying at the St. Francis.

Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Armsby are now at Tahoe Tavern, where they will remain for an indefinite period.

Major-General and Mrs. William S. McCoskey are at the Hotel St. Francis, after a trip to Tahiti.

Mrs. R. E. Quenn is spending a few weeks at Tahoe Tavern.

Mr. and Mrs. R. J. McDonald of Butte are visiting friends in this city and are at the Hotel St. Francis.

Mrs. W. Mayo Newhall will spend the month of July at Tahoe Tavern.

Among the more recent arrivals at the Fairmont are Mr. Fred S. Chapman of Portland, Oregon, and Mr. Arthur W. Stone of Seattle, Washington.

Among visiting army and navy officers at the Fairmont are Rear-Admiral and Mrs. Theodore F.

Jewell, Mr. H. O. Hunt, Mr. S. O. Ging, Mr. S. W. McGowan, Mr. B. F. Canaga, Mr. F. S. Wiltse, Mr. N. C. Martin.

Among visitors from the East at the Fairmont during the past week were Mr. and Mrs. N. Cameron, Boston; Dr. and Mrs. H. Huntington, New York; Mrs. William Morris, Philadelphia; Mr. F. B. Breuschen, Washington, D. C.; Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Biddle, Mr. H. E. Wilcox, New York; Mrs. Benjamin Miller, Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. Worthington, Trenton, New Jersey; Mr. G. S. Taylor, Mr. F. M. Gleckler, Mr. R. D. Vroom, New York; Mr. J. H. Adams, Baltimore.

Asked whether it is true that he intended to resign, Chancellor Day of Syracuse University replied, "That was a pipe dream." Our special correspondent informs us that when President Eliot was asked whether he thought Taft would be nominated he announced, "Say, it's a cinch!" and President Butler, in reply to a question as to what he thought of Bryan's chances expected through the window and said, "Nuthin' doin'." See?—Boston Transcript.

Mr. Cornelius Vanderhilt has been so much of a success in various endeavors and positions that recent gossip to the effect that he may enter the diplomatic service excited no surprise. Rumor had it that under certain contingencies he might be appointed ambassador to Rome, or even ambassador to Berlin. Emperor William would doubtless be glad to have Mr. Vanderhilt receive credentials to the latter post, as he and the young American are very good friends.

Among those who were awarded the second-class medal at this year's spring salon of the Société des Artistes Français is Robert MacCameron of Chicago for his picture, "A Group of Friends," which portrays the dark corner of a wine shop, with three human outcasts at a table drinking, which he painted for the Anti-Absinthe League.

The owner of a theatre in New York recently gave out slips to his patrons asking them what had attracted them to his theatre. Over 75 per cent said that they had seen the advertisements in the newspapers and came because of them.

WANTED—A music studio, with piano (grand preferred), for Wednesdays and Saturdays, in the district bounded by California, Pacific Avenue, Buchanan, and Presidio Avenue. Address J. R. W., 2639 Durant Avenue, Berkeley.

New, Neat and Novel CAMPAIGN BUTTONS BADGES and BANNERS

Advertising Novelties and Art Calendars

THE WHITEHEAD & HOAG CO.

San Francisco office
402 MONADNOCK BUILDING
Phone Douglas 1806

When You Leave Town
Store Your Trunks, Piano,
Household Goods, Etc.

With Us

STRINGER
STORAGE COMPANY

Sutter near Fillmore

Tel. West 999

Hotel Rafael

San Rafael, Cal.

Open year around. Headquarters Automobile League. New and commodious garage. Fifty minutes from San Francisco. Complete change of climate. Tiburon or Sausalito Ferry. All modern conveniences.

F. N. Orpin, Proprietor.

IN SAUSALITO

Very desirable furnished house, for small family, to rent for one year. Apply to J. E. G., care of G. W. McNear, 201 Battery Street, San Francisco.

Pears'

The public's choice since 1789.

"Your cheeks are peaches," he cried.

"No, they are Pears'," she replied.

Pears' Soap brings the color of health to the skin.

It is the finest toilet soap in all the world.

FAIRMONT
HOTEL

Superbly situated
Magnificently appointed
Perfectly served

In every respect nearest approaching the IDEAL hotel

Managed by the world famous
Palace Hotel Company

JULY

THE MATCHLESS MONTH

at
Hotel Del Monte

Golf, Motoring, Sailing
Fishing, Bathing, Riding
LOW HOTEL RATES $3.00 to $5.50 per day
American Plan

MAKE YOUR RESERVATIONS NOW
H. R. WARNER, Manager Hotel Del Monte
Or 789 Market St., San Francisco

AETNA
SPRINGS

Idealizing California country life

All roads to Aetna Springs now open to automobiles. Special automobile service from St. Helena to the Springs.

Just the place for the family. Reservations now being made. Rates and literature on application.

AETNA SPRINGS CO.
Aetna Springs, Napa County, Cal.

THE "NIPPON MURA"

Family Resort between Saratoga
and Los Gatos

Has increased its accommodations, main building furnace heated, beautifully furnished rooms with all modern conveniences. Open all the year. Positively exclusive. For information address

THEODORE J. MORRIS, Proprietor,
Los Gatos, Cal.

Hotel Collingwood

35th St., bet. 5th Ave. and Broadway
NEW-YORK CITY

New fireproof hotel, located in the shopping and theatre district, containing every modern device for comfort of guests.

Positively exclusive. Service a la carte.

THE LATEST STYLES IN

Choice Woolens

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

108-110 Sutter St. French Bank Bldg.

Hotel St. Francis

At Union Square,
the Center of the City's life and color.

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF JAMES WOODS

ARMY AND NAVY HEADQUARTERS

GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL

Market, Fell, Polk and Tenth Sts.
European plan. $1 per day and up.
OWEN KENNY, Manager.

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"

Building, concrete, steel and marble.
Located, most fashionable shopping district.
210 rooms, 135 baths.
Library and bound magazines in reading-rooms for guests.
Most refined Hostelry in Seattle.
Absolutely fire proof.
English Grill.

RATES $1.00 UP

SANTA CRUZ

CALIFORNIA

"The World's Most Beautiful Playground"

More features in a few square miles than any other spot. The famous Big Trees, Scenic Mountains. Surf Bathing superb. Largest and most magnificent Casino and Natatorium. Climate without an equal.

"Never a Dull Moment"

Berkeley Apartments

Several sunny suites available for the summer and autumn months at Hotel Cloyne Court, Berkeley. For further particulars address
J. M. PIERCE, Manager.

Hotel del Coronado

Motto: "BEST OF EVERYTHING"
Most Delightful Climate on Earth
American Plan. Summer rates $3.50 per day each and upward, or $21.00 per week each and upward
"Good Music" and "Fine Automobile Road, Los Angeles-Riverside to Coronado."
Golf, Tennis, Polo, and other outdoor sports every day in the year.
New 700-foot ocean pier, for fishing. Boating and Bathing are the very best. Send for booklet to MORGAN ROSS, Manager,
Coronado Beach, Cal.
Or see H. F. NORCROSS, Agent,
334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles.
Tel. A 6789; Main 3917.
22d Street and Broadway

THE GREATEST BARGAIN

ever offered to the American people. We will send you one of our warranted very best Steel Razors, price $2.50, with one of our fine large size patented self-honing Straps, price $1, and one pair of our warranted full nickel-plated eight-inch popular household fine Steel Shears, price $1.25—only one order to a customer. Offer expires July 1, '09. You can examine package before accepting. Just enclose one dollar bill in envelope, we will trust Uncle Sam's hoys to bring safely to us, address Red Cross Dis. Co., No. 1045 2nd Ave. South, Nashville, Tenn.

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy people who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Colonel Marion F. Maus, Twentieth Infantry, in command at the Monterey Presidio, has been appointed by the War Department to take temporary command of the Department of California upon the departure of Brigadier-General Funston.

Colonel Joseph W. Duncan, chief of staff, has returned from Monterey, where he has been to witness the field practice of the School of Musketry.

Lieutenant-Commander I. V. Gillis, U. S. N., detached from duty as naval attaché, Peking, China, is ordered to report to the commander of the Third Squadron, U. S. Pacific Fleet, for such duty as he may assign.

Major H. S. Bishop, Fifth Cavalry, now on duty at the San Francisco Presidio, will proceed to Atascadero ranch to report to the commanding general for duty during the continuance of the camp.

Major William G. Haan, Coast Artillery, who has been in Honolulu on a detail of coast defense, is ordered to Washington to report to the chief of the Artillery Corps.

Captain E. R. Scrieber of the Medical Corps is ordered to report for temporary duty at the medical supply depot, San Francisco Presidio.

Captain W. S. Scott, Quartermaster's Department, has received orders to report for duty at the San Francisco Presidio.

Naval Constructor J. G. Tawresy is detached from duty at the Union Iron Works, San Francisco, and will proceed to the Navy Yard at Portsmouth, New Hampshire.

Captain Robert H. Rolfe, U. S. A., Quartermaster's Department, has been ordered to report for temporary duty and acting commissary on the transport Crook.

Captain Cornelius C. Smith has been granted an extension to his leave of absence.

Captain Edwin R. Stuart, Corps of Engineers, is ordered to proceed to San Francisco, from where he will sail for Manila about August 1 to report in person for duty under the commanding general.

Captain William R. Smedburg, Jr., Fourteenth Cavalry, assisted by Veterinarian Richard B. Corcoran, First Field Artillery, is detailed to inspect horses to be delivered under contract to San Francisco, California; Winnemucca, Nevada; and Madeline and Montague, California.

Leave of absence for two months with permission to apply for the extension of a month is granted Captain George F. Juenemann, Medical Corps, to take effect upon the expiration of the manoeuvres at Atascadero.

Leave of absence for twenty days is granted Captain Lawrence A. Curtis, Twenty-Second Infantry, U. S. A., of the Presidio at Monterey.

Captain Douglas C. McDougal, U. S. M. C., has proceeded from Mare Island to Washington on temporary duty.

Leave for four months, to take effect upon his return to duty, is granted First Lieutenant Chester H. Loop, C. A. C., sick in Army General Hospital, San Francisco Presidio.

Upon being discharged from the Naval Hospital, Mare Island, Lieutenant R. C. Davis's orders to command the Granpus have been revoked and he is granted a three months' leave of absence and ordered to proceed to his home.

First Lieutenant Thomas H. Cunningham, Fourteenth Cavalry, San Francisco Presidio, has been granted a two months' leave of absence, taking effect from June 10.

Lieutenant Hunter Kinzie, Twentieth Infantry, has been granted a month's leave of absence, to take effect after July 1.

Lieutenant Hiram Phillips, U. S. A., is registered at Army Headquarters.

Lieutenant John G. Church, Second Torpedo Flotilla, U. S. N., is stationed temporarily at the Navy Yard, Mare Island.

Lieutenant Frank McComan, Second Torpedo Flotilla, U. S. N., is stationed temporarily at Mare Island.

Lieutenant George E. Turner, Coast Artillery, will be stationed at Ukiah while on duty with the progressive military map of the United States.

Lieutenant Wallace Bertholf has returned from Portland, Oregon, to report for duty on the U. S. S. California.

Second Lieutenant Arthur E. Ahrends, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., Monterey Presidio, is attached to the School of Musketry at that post for duty.

Midshipman A. S. Rees is detached from duty on the Alabama and will continue treatment in the Naval Hospital, Mare Island.

The following officers have been ordered to take a course of instruction in the School of Musketry, Monterey: Lieutenant Claire B. Bennett, Eighth Infantry; Lieutenant John J. Moller, Eighth Infantry; Lieutenant Juhal A. Early, Twentieth Infantry; Lieutenant Robert C. Cotton, Twentieth Infantry.

Pharmacist S. Englander, retired, is detached from duty at the Navy Yard, Mare Island, and will proceed home.

At Out-of-Town Hotels.

Among registrations from San Francisco at Hotel del Coronado during the past week were Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Erickson, Mr. H. A. Speth, Mr. C. G. Meyers, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Lymburg, Miss Grace Baldwin, Mr. Frank A. Brown, Miss Marion D. Cohn, Mr. W. E. Osborne, Mr. Fred C. Parker, Mr. James Wainwright, Miss Bessie Donolly, Miss G. Donolly, Mr. Boh Lloyd.

Among recent arrivals at Hotel Calistoga are Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Dolliver and Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Wright, of San Rafael; Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Nahor, Mrs. C. C. O'Neil, Mr. Gerald O'Neil, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Ruggles, Mrs. Baldwin, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Hamil, Mrs. Wallace T. Sister, and Mrs. D. Leane, of San Francisco; Mr. Robert P. Day and Mr. R. Whitehead, of Oakland.

Among the arrivals at Byron Hot Springs during the past week were the following: From San Francisco—Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Houseworth, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Mickett; from Oakland—Mr. J. B. Baker, Miss Lola Brackett, Miss Nelly Brackett, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Macdonald; from Piedmont—Mr. J. Ghirardelli; from San Rafael—Judge Thomas J. Lennon; from Alameda—Mr. and Mrs. Sam Poorman, Jr.; from Stockton—Mr. and Mrs. La Rue Cross.

The following guests from San Francisco are registered at Etna Springs: Mr. George A. Newhall, Mrs. Eugene A. Bress, Mrs. Frank Norris and child, Mrs. Bush Fennell, Mr. J. Sloss, Mr. Bush Fennell, Mr. and Mrs. T. H. McCarthy, Mr. and Mrs. F. Fredericks, Miss A. Ratye, Mrs. W. E. Osborne, Mrs. M. K. Cole, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Knight, Miss Metha McMahan, Mrs. O. P. Downing, Mr. Louis Sloss, Mr. J. R. Miller, Miss Anna Young, Miss Eleanor A. Joseph, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Welch, Miss M. Ratye, Miss Elsie Osborne, Mr. V. S. Grey.

The following are recent arrivals from San Francisco at Tahoe Tavern, Lake Tahoe: Mr. and Mrs. G. X. Wendling, Miss Wendling, Mr. and Mrs. H. Miller, Mrs. F. B. Wilson, Mrs. E. Mason, Mr. and Mrs. L. Denny, Mr. G. H. Meyers and family, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Freyer, Mr. E. M. Greenway, Mr. S. Rosenbaum, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Dollard, Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Forbes, Mr. William Sheehan, Mr. John Sheehan, Mrs. Bothin and Miss Bothin, Mr. and Mrs. N. K. Perkins, Mr. F. A. Center, Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Merillion, Mr. H. W. John, Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Buckbee, Mrs. E. Simon, Miss Simon, Captain Z. J. Hatch and family.

Among the guests registered from San Francisco at Hotel Rafael during the week were Miss Clayburgh, Miss V. Ackerman, Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Jackson, Mr. L. H. Abenheimer, Mr. Frank P. King, Mr. and Mrs. G. Mayre, Jr., Miss L. O'Connor, Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Lamb, General Funston, Mr. W. O. Cullen, Mr. A. A. Addler, Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Oliphant, Mrs. W. P. Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Holmes, Mr. R. E. Abrahamson, Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Rogers, Mr. A. Roos, Mr. Charles A. Son, Mr. and Mrs. F. Baer, Mr. and Mrs. Levi, Mr. H. Levi, Mrs. L. P. Weil, Mrs. H. M. A. Miller, Miss A. B. Satter, Mr. and Mrs. A. Alper, Miss M. E. Satter, Mr. A. Satter, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Sheridan, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Strauss.

A few of the recent arrivals at the Tavern of Tamalpais were: From San Francisco—Mrs. Edgar P. Salmon, Mrs. Lucia B. Worrell, Mrs. O. L. Gibson, Mr. M. H. Spencer, Miss F. M. Danforth, Dr. and Mrs. E. Goodman, Mrs. John A. Koster, Mr. G. H. Hamilton, Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Carson, Miss Barrett, Miss M. C. Henry, Miss Lucy Henry, Mr. William J. Henry, Mr. S. B. Morton, Mr. Harry Randolph, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Lillenthal; from Oakland—Mr. William E. Gosling, Mr. M. Hackett, Miss Kathryn Good, Miss Alyce Schwab, Mr. E. F. Good, Mr. F. Ransome, Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Jordan, Mrs. A. Morrison and son; from Berkeley—Mr. Leo Elskamp, Mrs. Nathaniel Bell, Mr. and Mrs. B. Speer, Miss Esther Doane Mayers, Mr. Howard Doane Mayers, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Whithau.

Arrivals at the Hotel Del Monte for the week include Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Gyle, Mr. and Mrs. Ahe Levin, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Levy, Mrs. Sidney Liebes, Miss Fleishman Mr. William Itsell, Miss Belle Mann, Mr. J. F. Maroney, Mr. Harry C. Hunt, Mr. George W. Phelps, Mr. W. A. Hamilton, Mr. J. W. Coffin, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Wolf, Mr. and Mrs. Charles C. Hoag, Mr. C. W. Burkett, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. McArthur, Mr. N. G. Evans, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Mackenzie, Mr. P. G. White, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. McClymonds, Mrs. Robert Fleming, Miss Ruth Fleming, Miss Doris Fleming, Miss Grace McGuire, Mr. E. L. Cutting, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Bissell, Mr. and Mrs. Wyatt I. Allen, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Rosenbaum, Mr. F. E. Booth, Mr. H. H. Sessler, Mr. and Mrs. H. Harris, Mr. and Mrs. James Wood, Mr. Robert M. Eyre, Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Falk, Mrs. Edgar J. Bowen, and Mr. Ernest Schneider, of San Francisco.

Rich, mellow, perfectly aged in wood and very delicately flavored

Old Gilt Edge Whiskey

Rye or Bourbon

PEDIGREE ANGORA CATS
APPLY
DR. ANDERSON, Mill Valley

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER
A Positive Relief For PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all afflictions of the skin.
Removes all odor of perspiration. De-lightful after Shaving. Sold everywhere, or mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample Free.
GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY, Newark, N.J.

OPEN

THE OCULARIUM
Henry Kahn & Co.
- OPTICIANS -
PHOTO SUPPLIES
SCIENTIFIC INSTRUMENTS

644-646 MARKET ST.
OPP. PALACE HOTEL

BRANCH 1309 VAN NESS AVE.
NEXT TO NEWMAN & LEVINSON

Table d'hote Luncheon

served daily at the

Hotel Normandie

is exceptionally good. A few of them are: Unsurpassed cuisine, perfect service and the uniquely beautiful surroundings. It's worth while.

S. E. cor. Sutter and Gough

75 cents

NEW MODERN Hotel Calistoga

H. F. W. Spreen, Proprietor

Calistoga, Napa County, Cal.

Summer and Winter Health Resort for Invalids and Pleasure Seekers.

Only three hours' ride from San Francisco. Three trains each way daily.

General Stage Office. Hot Sulphur Baths in connection with rooms.

Hot Ancient Moorish Mud Baths.

Hot Sulphur Plunge

Containing 50,000 Gallons

Beautiful Scenery Delightful Drives
First-Class Service

"The Peninsula"

SAN MATEO, CAL.

A Twentieth Century Hotel of the Highest Degree of Excellence

NOW OPEN

AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLAN

Thirty minutes by rail from San Francisco. Located in a beautiful park of thirty years' cultivation. All the charm and delight of the country combined with the attractions and conveniences of the metropolis.

For Reservation or Information Address
JAMES H. DOOLITTLE, Mgr.,
San Mateo, Cal.

Byron Hot Springs

The waters cure rheumatism—the environment is perfect—the hotel comfortable and supplied with an unexcelled table. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, ground floor, James Flood Building; Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market St., or address hotel.

MT. TAMALPAIS AND MUIR WOODS
VIA SAUSALITO FERRY
FOOT OF MARKET ST.
LEGAL HOLIDAYS—SUNDAY TIME

Lv. San Francisco		Lv. Muir Woods		Lv. Tamalpais
WEEK DAY	SUN- DAY	WEEK DAY	SUN- DAY	WEEK DAY	SUN- DAY
9:45 A.	17:15 A.	1:40 P.	10:40 A.	7:25 A.	9:28 A.
*8:15 A.	2:40 P.	12:16 P.	1:40 P.	1:40 P.	11:10 A.
1:45 P.	9:15 A.	4:45 P.	1:40 P.	4:14 P.	12:16 P.
SATUR- DAY	9:45 A.	2:45 P.	1:40 P.	SATUR- DAY	1:40 P.
DAY	11:15 A.	4:40 P.	DAY	3:10 P.	DAY
Tamal- pais	12:45 A.	5:45 P.	only	4:40 P.	6:40 P.
only	3:45 P.	5:45 P.	Tamal- pais only	9:50 P.	8:15 P.
14:45 P.	14:45 P.	only	Muir Woods only

TICKET OFFICE AT SAUSALITO FERRY

IT'S not a large place; we'd rather care well for a few people than indifferently for many. The table, the service, and the surroundings are our specialties.

YE TEA CUP INNE

1427 Bush Street, below Van Ness (upstairs)

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

Poet—Have you read my last poem?
Friend—I trust that I have.—Judge.

Briggs—You say business is looking up?
Griggs—That's what it is. It can't look any other way; it's flat on its back.—Ex.

Financier—So you're thinking of painting pictures? If you take my advice, you'll paint like Reynolds. There's money in it.—Punch.

"And what has the colonel done since local option came in?" "Met it valiantly. Claims now to be a good judge of ginger pop."—Ex.

"On my knee I begged her for a kiss."
"And what did she say?" "Told me to get up and be practical."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

"Maude was afraid the girls wouldn't notice her engagement ring." "Did they?" "Did they? Six of them recognized it at once."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Of course you play bridge only for fun?" "Of course," answered Mrs. Spangleton. "But it isn't any fun unless you are playing for money."—Washington Star.

"I heard him behind the door pleading for just one. They must be engaged." "Naw, they're married. It was a dollar he was pleading for."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Physician—From a hasty examination, I am of the opinion that you are suffering from clergyman's sore throat. Patient—The hell you say! Physician (quickly)—But it is quite possible I am wrong—I will look again.—The Bohemian.

"Augusta," said Mr. Wyss when the quarrel was at its height, "you have devised a great variety of ways to call me a fool." "Merely a matter of necessity," replied Mrs. Wyss. "You have devised so many ways of being one."—The Bohemian.

"Of course you could dress my daughter as she is accustomed to be dressed," said the old man, with covert sneer. "Of course I could," responded the younger one, "but I wouldn't. She'll agree to cut out the cart-wheel hat or the deal stops right here."—Philadelphia Ledger.

"In your opinion," asked the member of the investigating committee, "what is the cause of the evident unrest among the Indians?" Comanche Pete, the noted scout, blew a cloud of smoke into the atmosphere. Then he took his pipe out of his mouth. "Fleas," he answered.—Chicago Tribune.

Waiter—We have clams in every style, sir. Diner—Then bring me a dozen in sheath gowns, and Charlotte Corday hats.—Boston Transcript.

Sentimental Young Lady—Ah, professor! what would this old oak say if it could talk? Professor—It would say, "I am an elm."—Fliegende Blätter.

Chappie—Have a cigarette, old man? Sapleigh—No; I don't smoke fool-killers. Chappie—Well, I don't blame you for refusing to take chances.—Chicago Daily News.

Fond Mother (to overgrown Gladys)—That dress, though last year's, must do you, child. Gladys—Yes, mamma. The dress is last year's, but the legs are this year's!—Life.

"If you want plenty of good plums," remarked the practical horticulturist, "you have to graft." "Exactly," agreed the practical politician, "so you do."—Baltimore American.

Tramp—Can you assist me along the road, mum? Lady of the House—Personally I can not; but I will unchain my dog, and I know he will be most pleased to do so!—London Tit-Bits.

Youngboy—Why, Stoutleigh, I thought you were in Paris with the wife, enjoying yourself? Stoutleigh—That's all right—division of labor, doncher see? Wife's in Paris an' I'm enjoying myself.—Judge.

"Well, young man," thundered the head of the house. "S-sir," stammered the youth, "I want to marry your d-d-daughter." "Aw, take her and welcome. I was afraid you were courting the cook."—Ex.

"Waiter," said a traveler in a railroad restaurant, "did you say I had twenty minutes to wait or that it was twenty minutes to eight?" "Nayther. Oi said ye had twinty minutes to ate, an' thot's all ye did have. Yer train's just gone."—Everybody's Magazine.

Shepherd (concluding tale of bereavement)—Sae a gied her some o' that wee hottle that ye left yest're'en, an' she just slippit awa' at fower o'clock the morn. Doctor—Dear, dear! I'm very sorry to hear that. Shepherd (thoughtfully)—Eh, mon doctor, isna it a maircy a didna' tak' any o' the wee hottle mase!—Punch.

WANTED

Unimproved property in the Burnt District

TO EXCHANGE

for

DESIRABLE INCOME PROPERTY

MONEY TO LOAN AT PREVAILING RATES ON FIRST MORTGAGE SAN FRANCISCO REAL ESTATE

GUY T. WAYMAN

232 MONTGOMERY STREET

MILLS BUILDING

MURPHY, GRANT & CO.

Jobbers and Manufacturers

Dry Goods
Furnishing GoodsWhite Goods
Notions, etc.

Temporarily located Corner Market and Sutter Streets, San Francisco, pending completion of our permanent building now in course of construction, Bush and Sansome Streets, San Francisco, Cal.

We sell to Storekeepers only.

Ask your dealer for our Goods

Overalls	Silkolines	Turkish Towels	Docks
Jumpers	Quilts	Linens	House Linings
Blouses	Comforters	Persian Lawns	Colored Denims
Engineers' Coats	Lace Curtains	Organdies	Laces
Khaki Coats and Pants	Prints	Men's Handkerchiefs	Embroideries
Work Shirts	Percales	Women's Handkerchiefs	Silk Gloves
Negligee Shirts	Apron Gingham	Piques	Colored Burlap
Golf Shirts	Fancy Gingham	Men's Hosiery	Men's Gloves
Collars	Flannellettes	Men's Underwear	Tickings
Cuffs	Broad Cloths	Women's Hosiery	Sheets
Blanket Lined Clothing	Table Cloths	Women's Underwear	Pillow Cases
Waterproof	Napkins	Brown Shirts	Sateens
Sweaters	Table Damask	Bleached Shirts	Notions
Sweater Coats	Crash	Wide Bleached Sheetings	Ribbons
Cardigan Jackets	Face Cloths	Wide Brown Sheetings	Kid Gloves
Blankets	Towels

It's the Interior that Counts

No matter how attractive the exterior of your home may be, it's the interior that counts. The counsel and advice of our experts will make mistakes in the decorating of your homes less likely. Let them help you.

Furniture
Carpets
Rugs
Draperies

D. N. & E. WALTER & CO.
Van Ness and Sacramento

Wholesale
Retail
and
Since 1858

Toyo Kisen Kaisha

(ORIENTAL S. S. CO.)

S. S. Tenyo Maru (via Manila).....
S. S. America Maru, Saturday, July 11, 1908
S. S. Nippon Maru, Saturday, August 1, 1908
S. S. Nippon Maru, Saturday, August 29, 1908

Steamers sail from company's piers, Nos. 42-44, near foot of Second Street, 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Hiogo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.

Round-trip tickets at reduced rates.

For freight and passage apply at office, 240 James Flood Building, W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

TOURS

EUROPE
SOUTH AMERICA
JAPAN AND
ROUND THE WORLD

Programmes for the asking.

THOS. COOK & SON
32 Powell St., San Francisco

Romeike's Press Clipping Bureau

Will send you all newspaper clippings which may appear about you, your friends, or any subject on which you want to be "up to date."

A large force in my New York office reads 650 daily papers and over 2000 weeklies and magazines, in fact, every paper of importance published in the United States, for 5000 subscribers and, through the European Bureaus, all the leading papers in the civilized globe.

Clippings found for subscribers and pasted on slips giving name and date of paper, and are mailed day by day.

Write for circular and terms.

HENRY ROMEIKE

110 and 112 W. 26th St., New York.
Branches: London, Paris, Berlin, Sydney.

Bonestell, Richardson & Co.

PAPER

The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us.

CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE
118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna, San Francisco.

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXIII. No. 1633.

SAN FRANCISCO, JULY 11, 1908.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10 payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breems Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opéra. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at F and Thirteenth Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Denison News Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains. Published at 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal. Telephone, Kearny 5895.

THIRTY-SECOND YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: Ruef at Liberty—and Why—The Denver Convention—Third Trial of Abraham Ruef—Plain Speech on the Labor Question—"Our Husband"—Cleveland in Retirement—Editorial Notes	17-20
CAMPAIGN TOPICS	20
THE REID-WARD WEDDING: "Piccadilly" Writes of the Interesting Ceremony in the Ancient Chapel Royal in London	21
OLD FAVORITES: "The Bailiff's Daughter of Islington"; "Dahling in the Dew"	21
POLITICAL-PERSONAL	21
AT PIERRE'S ROTISSERIE: XXI. By Jerome A. Hart...	22
INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All over the World	23
A GREAT NOVEL: A New Writer Takes Front Rank with a First Work	24
CURRENT VERSE: "The Foremost Scholar," by Percy W. Mackaye; "A Broken Friendship," by Charles Hansen Towne	24
BOOKS AND AUTHORS. By Sidney G. P. Coryn.....	25
LITERARY NOTES: Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip—New Publications	26
FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.....	26
DRAMA: Henry Miller at the Van Ness. By Josephine Hart Phelps	27
VANITY FAIR	28
STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise	29
THE MERRY MUSE.....	29
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy.....	30-31
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day.....	32

Ruef at Liberty—and Why.

It is not often these days that we have a chance to commend anything appearing in the Call. It is therefore with especial satisfaction that we call attention to a cartoon which appeared on the editorial page of that paper on Tuesday morning of the current week with reference to the release of Abraham Ruef from the county jail under bail. The drawing depicts the outlet of a sewer, from the depths of which a slimy and unclean cat connected by a frayed rope about its neck to a brick has been lifted by a scavenger's bucket. The cat, along with other marks of loathsome import, bears a distinct likeness to Ruef. "Bailed Out" is the caption of this very striking picture.

The circumstance is, indeed, sufficiently suggestive to inspire an expression instinct with many forms of disgust. It is all the more offensive when it is remembered that the securities put in pledge to secure Ruef's liberty are chiefly the product of his notoriously infamous career. Out of the loot gathered by this unspeakable scoundrel, apparently, he has safely stowed away something more than a round million of dollars. And this money now enables him to buy his release from jail.

Who is to blame for the fact that after two years of pretentious procedure this vile criminal is again at liberty? Not Judge Murasky, for he only followed the law. Not the law, for its provisions are a product of time-tested and time-honored principles essential to the protection of innocence. The responsibility lies rather with those who, seeking private and malicious ends by means outside the law, have so botched and butchered this whole case as in effect to nullify the plainest provisions of the law. If the pretended prosecutors had cut out private malice, if they had not trafficked with Ruef for incriminating evidence against others, if they had not bargained with him for immunity and in fact given him many months' exemption from imprisonment—if they had proceeded against him promptly and vigorously when time and tide served—he would long before now have been behind the bars at San Quentin, and there would have been no discreditable breakdown of justice as evidenced today by the circumstance that Abraham Ruef, with all his crimes on his head, walks the streets of San Francisco a free man. The break-down of the prosecution as related to Ruef, the arch scoundrel in this whole vast scheme of corruption and infamy, is a direct result of that system of pretense, falsehood, and chicanery which has marked this procedure from the beginning.

As they behold Abraham Ruef walking the streets of San Francisco, Messrs. Spreckels, Phelan, and Heney, if they have in them any capacity to see things in their true meaning, will hang their heads in shame, for it is due to them that he is free. It is they who have brought about this outrageous consequence. It was they who, with the fullest possible knowledge of his guilt and with the fullest evidence against him in hand, pledged him immunity from final punishment with assurances that he should not be confined "in any prison" and that he should have leave to retain the loot which now serves to guarantee his freedom. The newspaper organs of this precious trio are making much of Ruef's release under bail as a gross outrage. Gross outrage it is; but is Ruef's release under bail a grosser outrage than that grant of immunity pledged under private contract over the signatures of the prosecution and about which the prosecutors lied and lied and lied in private and in public? Was Ruef less guilty, was he less worthy of clemency, in May, 1907, when the immunity contract was signed and sealed, than today? Is immunity as a private and secret arrangement, contracted for in the spirit of bribery and denied in the spirit of fraud, a more grievous outrage against justice than release under bail by process of law?

Really, this whole wretched business seems less excusable the more it is analyzed. There is no aspect of it at which decency does not heave in rage and revolt.

The Denver Convention.

The Democratic National Convention is getting fairly down to business as the Argonaut goes to press on Wednesday. There has within the past ten days, at Denver and elsewhere, been a world of the kind of activity which commonly precedes a national convention, and it has all gone to emphasize the ascendancy of Mr. Bryan in the national Democratic party. Whatever his merits or defects as a man or as a leader, he is nevertheless in the eye of Democracy her "peerless one." There is, to be sure, in the background the attenuated ghost of Clevelandism, typified timidly by the late-lamented but still-surviving Judge Alton Parker, but it counts for nothing against the ever-vital Bryan, who is the assured nominee for the presidency and who will control practically in every detail the doings and the outgivings of the Denver meet.

Bryan himself is not in attendance at Denver. He sits quietly at home near Lincoln, Nebraska, but none the less his personality fills and dominates the convention hall. In almost painful contrast appears Judge Parker, the nominee of four years ago, who, though present at Denver as a delegate, is absolutely without influence and personally all but unnoted. This contrast is suggestive of the spirit and conditions of the party. Bryanism, which is another name for scatter-brained radicalism, is in the saddle; Clevelandism, typified by the neglected Parker, is a thing of no recognition or standing in the realm of Democracy. Bryanism, beaten in the convention at St. Louis, triumphed, at least within the party, on that November day of 1904 when the St. Louis nominee went down under humiliating defeat. We shall hear no more of the safe and sane brand of Democracy; Democracy now is Bryanism pure and simple.

It is conceded privately at Denver and elsewhere that Governor Johnson of Minnesota would be a stronger nominee than Bryan. He would get every vote that would be given to Bryan, with probably many more that Bryan can not get. There are no antagonisms connected with his name or his career. It would be the part of practical wisdom to make him the nominee, but there is not the slightest chance that it will be done. The Bryan personality, the Bryan action, forbid it. The ticket will be Bryan upon a platform outlined by Bryan, with whomever for the second place Bryan may in the end choose to favor. In the mind of the Denver meeting there is but one Caesar—"one only man."

According to the present look of things—we write, be it remembered, on Wednesday morning before anything has really been done—there will be working accord at least between Bryan and Hearst in the coming campaign. Mr. Hearst's Independence League has made a good deal of noise in these recent weeks, due to the Hearst facilities for noise-making, but it has really not been doing much. Whatever degradations the future may hold for American politics, we have not yet reached a stage where a personally owned, incorporated, and supported political party can have much popular force. The Independence League, Mr. Hearst finds, is a thing without "go," a thing of no credit or repute, serving no other purpose than as a blind for his diplomacies. In the present instance, peace appears to have been made between the lamb of Hearstism and the lion of Bryanism, with the lamb safely inside the lion. The Hearst papers will probably support Mr. Bryan, and in the event of success in November, Mr. Hearst will no doubt get a place in the Cabinet. All this, of course, is a remote contingency, for which God in Heaven be praised. The country could probably endure Bryan in the presidency in consideration of a Republican Senate; but it is not pleasant to contemplate Mr. Hearst as a Cabinet officer.

We have seen no general outline of the coming platform which appears to be authoritative. The platform will, of course, follow Mr. Bryan's ideas, but Mr. Bryan has so many ideas that it is never easy to know beforehand what he will put forward. It is understood that he will not "at this time" insist upon his scheme of public ownership for the railways of the country; nor will he hark back to the sixteen-to-one theory upon which aforesaid he was certain the welfare of the country and of the whole world depended. His cure for our financial troubles will probably be a governmental guarantee of savings bank deposits. From the standpoint of the practical banker, the scheme is ridiculous, but a little matter like this does not trouble Mr. Bryan. He is so accustomed to fathering ridiculous and impossible ideas in statecraft as to be unmoved alike by contempt or ridicule. There will, undoubtedly, be a demand for publicity in the matter of campaign contributions, since upon this point Mr. Bryan is insistent, but, for some unexplained reason, he is said to be opposed to any declaration of positive policy against the trusts. It is not to be understood that Mr. Bryan has changed his opinions, but rather that for some motive of policy he wishes this year to be silent on the trust issue.

The point at which the platform is likely to be the most positive and radical is with respect to the labor question. Even the Big Stick could not force the Chicago convention to accept the Gompers programme and declare for a system of special privilege in behalf of organized labor. To be sure, the convention was programmed and its members in all ordinary ways were biddable enough; but they came to a dead halt when it was proposed to allow Sam Gompers, a foreign agitator representing a private association of citizens which declines to make itself even in the smallest degree responsible, to define the position of the Republican party on the labor issue. With characteristic readiness and shallowness, Mr. Bryan sees an opportunity, and it is believed he will ride it for whatever it may be worth. Almost certainly the Denver convention will put forth a radical labor plank and thereby make an issue—a paramount issue—for the coming campaign.

The Argonaut hopes this will be done. In its judgment the aggressive demands of organized labor make the supreme issue before the country; in its judgment the Democratic party, led by a radical, naturally affiliated with radicalism, eager to catch at any chance straw, will put itself behind the extreme demands of labor. The Republican party, on the other hand, in obedience to its character and traditions and to the necessities of the situation, must take opposing ground. This battle has got to be fought out, probably in a series of hot rounds, covering a term of years; and the sooner it begins, the sooner the parties are brought to their final positions, the better. We welcome the issue; we shall greet with satisfaction such action at Denver as will expedite and force the fighting.

The California delegation did not succeed in getting to Denver without such an exhibition of affectionate by-play as marks the truly vital spirit of political conviction. The trouble arose as the result of a tactful observation on the part of Mr. Bell to the effect that Delegate Thomas Fox of Sacramento was on the payroll of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company as an agent of its politics. Whereupon Mr. Fox, in virtuous indignation, denounced Mr. Bell as "a damned liar." Incidents like this mean nothing among Democrats; and in the immediate case the scrimmage served only to sweeten the process of making-up which came later.

Quite incidentally the dispatches from Denver shed an interesting light on Mr. Bell's method of formulating his political principles and policies. Mr. Bell, it appears, according to a statement made by one of Governor Johnson's managers, was originally an ardent Johnson supporter. He swung from Johnson to Bryan, according to this same authority, because "to oppose Bryan in California" meant to "write oneself down on the side of Southern Pacific Railroad domination." This is not the way strong men formulate their judgments and policies, but it is to be remembered that Mr. Bell is young and that he has yet time to learn that it is neither good politics nor good morals to allow your opponents to define your principles and to regulate your conduct.

It is interesting to note that on the way to Denver, not Mr. Bell's candidate, but Mr. McNab's friend, Nathan Cole, Jr., of Los Angeles, was made chairman of the delegation. It was not exactly a knock-out for Bell, but it will serve to remind him that McNab is still on the map; and it will probably suggest to wiser heads that after all the hubbub and worry of the presidential campaign are done with, and after Mr. Bell and his immediate friends have let off their overplus of steam, the canny McNab will probably be found doing business at the old stand.

Be it remembered in connection with what is above written that we write in advance of the event, just as the convention is settling down to business. Possibly the hindsight of next week may knock the foresight of the moment into smithereens.

Third Trial of Abraham Ruef.

The third trial of Abraham Ruef, scheduled for the 15th inst., is a matter of even greater interest than the trials that have preceded it. In the earlier instances only the fate of Ruef appeared at stake; in the coming trial the fate of the graft prosecution itself is in the balance. If now the prosecution shall fail, its practical inefficiency will be a demonstration in the eyes of all men. It is this fact which gives to the coming procedure a vital and even dramatic interest.

Regarded by itself, as a matter unconnected with previous events and as unaffected by passion, prejudice, or bias of any kind, there would seem every reason to hope that Ruef will be convicted. The case rests upon one of the trolley indictments and has been selected by Mr. Heney out of a hundred or more as the one best suited to his purposes. The testimony against Ruef is direct and overwhelming. Fifteen supervisors will declare that they were paid in hand specific sums by James Gallagher, acting as agent for Ruef. James Gallagher will declare that he got the money from Ruef and paid it out under Ruef's instructions. There will be a world of corroboratory and confirmatory evidence. There will not be lacking one link in the chain of direct and damning demonstration. Viewed therefore without prejudice, there would seem but one possible outcome of this trial; and it is an outcome in consonance with the wishes and the sense of justice of every decent citizen of San Francisco.

But unhappily the situation is one in which this case can not be regarded simply and solely upon its individual merits. It will be shown that the prosecutors themselves at one time condoned Ruef's guilt and pledged him friendship and immunity. It will be shown that they attempted to exact from him, in payment for immunity promised and for favors granted, "testimony," true or false, condemnatory of other persons criminally charged and with respect to whom the prosecutors confessedly hold motives of private resentment and vengeance. It will be shown that, after contracting with Ruef for immunity, the prosecutors publicly denied it—lied about it. It will be shown that the witnesses against Ruef are self-convicted criminals and that they are being paid for their evidence by grants of immunity; further, that they have been permitted to retain the large sums received as bribes not only in the immediate case, but in many others. It will be shown that the prosecutors have held and now hold a club over the head of each witness, therefore that the testimony which each shall give is, in a sense, given under duress.

It will further be demonstrated in the course of the trial that the prosecutors have in this whole matter a selfish and private interest; that they have acted in the grossest bad faith; that they have again and again gone outside of the law and that their purposes from the beginning have been personal and malicious. In matters of this sort much depends upon what for want of a better name must be called atmosphere. The jury which will try this case must be drawn from a community which has come to hold the graft prosecution in distrust and contempt. The jurors, therefore, whatever their pretensions or their self-presumptions, must be more or less infected with the general feeling (1) that Ruef, although grossly guilty, is being prosecuted by men who once pledged him immunity and who falsified their promise; (2) that he is now being punished not so much on the score of his crimes as because he would not commit another crime, that of perjury, by inventing and uttering testimony demanded by the prosecution against others accused; (3) that behind the whole business of prosecution there is selfish interest and private malice; (4) that the scheme of prosecution is a tremendous and continuing injury to San Francisco and that it will get its quietus through defeat in this instance of the plans of the prosecutors. It is hardly necessary to add that with community sentiment what it is today, charged with distrust of the prosecutors and with weariness and disgust for this whole wretched business, the disposition of the jury will be to make an end of the matter.

If, indeed, the prosecuting attorney were a man of judgment and sufficiently master of himself to put the prosecution into unsmirched and unprejudiced hands, there would be reason to hope for a successful issue. The weakness in the case lies not in the case itself, but in the agents of its prosecution. In new, clean, and unprejudiced hands conviction would be an assurance. The weakness of the situation is the weakness of a movement which has become discredited by its own misdoings and by the loss of moral credit on the part of its agents.

Here at the beginning of this new effort to convict Abraham Ruef, a purpose with which the Argonaut is in entire sympathy, we venture to offer a word of counsel to Prosecuting Attorney Langdon: Resume the authorities of your office; thrust out those who under your name have abused and cheapened its powers; put the active work of prosecution into clean, capable, and disinterested hands. If you fail to do this, if you allow these discredited agents to go forward with the case against Ruef, you are almost certain to fail. Under a new deal there is fair prospect of success; under the old deal there is not one chance in a hundred. Let us remind you, Mr. Langdon, that you would have done well at other times to have hearkened to reason. Let us remind you that at every step of this procedure where you have gone stupidly from one blunder and one failure to another, you might have gone straight and true and with success by heeding the counsels of the Argonaut.

Plain Speech on the Labor Question.

At a time when the President of the United States is kowtowing to organized labor for its votes and when the Democratic party is considering the policy of making a labor leader its vice-presidential candidate, likewise for votes, it is particularly gratifying to discover that we still have among us men of sense and courage who see the meaning of laborite demands and who are brave enough to speak out in resistance to them. The latest outspoken voice is that of Admiral Melville of the navy, who sees in Mr. Gompers's proposals evils of the first magnitude. He points out that an iron-clad eight-hour rule applied to governmental work would be a frightful handicap to the country in an emergency which may come upon us any day in connection with foreign war. It would be the supremest folly, he declares, to so involve and limit ourselves by restrictive laws that we could not upon occasion make the fullest possible use of our own resources of labor where they may stand related to national defense. He further points out that the purpose of the eight-hour demand in government work is not for the purpose of reducing the hours of government work itself, but for use as a lever to the end of putting pressure upon other points in the general scheme of labor demands.

Admiral Melville sees plainly the evils which laborite policies are already imposing upon the country. We have here, he points out, the best steel and iron in the world for ship-building purposes. We have the timber which England must import for use in the making of modern ships. At the same time it costs 40 per cent more to build a ship in America than in England or in Germany. The difference is due, Admiral Melville goes on to say, largely to labor unionism, which has so cut down the number of skilled workmen, so reduced the capability of the individual mechanic, and so unreasonably advanced the rates of wages for inferior performance, that we can not compete with other countries. The ranks of American workmen in the ship-building trades have been so reduced, together with the efficiency of those who are available, that we are no longer competent.

Because of the condition above described, Admiral Melville declares that the United States recently lost a fifty-million-dollar contract for ships for the Brazilian navy. This contract, coming at a time of general industrial depression, would have been a God-send not only to the workmen of the country, but to every other interest. It has gone to Europe not more because there was a distinct financial advantage in sending it there than because we have not in the ship-building trades a sufficient equipment of skilled mechanics to do the work. Thus as a nation we are a heavy loser under the policy of unionism which has forbidden the sons of American ship-builders to learn and practice their fathers' trades.

The common idea that the American is a more efficient workman than the Englishman or German Admiral Melville declares to be no longer true. Our mechanics in their so-called "independence" have come to resent the discipline which in foreign workshops, and formerly in our own as well, yields the best results. The effect is seen in a general slackness, a disposition to be careless and dilatory, which tremendously cuts down the efficiency of a body of workmen. An illustration of how this system works was supplied by the Union Iron Works of San Francisco a year or more ago, prior to the strike of last summer. At one time the efficiency of the men in the San Francisco shops ran down something like 40 per cent as compared with the same number of men at the same kind of work in a famous Eastern shop uncorrupted by the vices of a radical unionism.

The present-day conflicts between nations are industrial rather than military. The country which employs its resources of production to the largest account will surely outstrip those countries where working efficiency is on a lower basis. Touching upon this principle, Admiral Melville points out that Germany is now far ahead both of the United States and England in the organization of her labor system and in governmental protection of the principles which make for efficiency. The apprentice laws in Germany, he declares, are devised and strictly enforced in the interest of industry and to the end that German youth may be trained in the arts and crafts essential to the welfare of the country. It will not be long, he declares, until Germany will be better equipped than any other country with skillful mechanics. Admiral Melville's outlook upon the future is not a cheerful one. He says:

I see a future for this country similar to that of Spain and Italy. There the trade guilds in the towns became so strong and domineering that the nobility could not invest its capital. Soon the labor unions will keep the capitalist from investing in railroad, mine, or manufactory. At the bottom of it all is the restriction of the number of apprentices.

Asked what in his judgment the policy of the United States ought to be, Admiral Melville replied:

Every State should pass a law prohibiting the restrictions by trade unions of the number of apprentices and the United States government should admit all skilled workmen. Then we will become the ship-building country of the world, because we have the steel, the timber, the men of brawn, and the men of brains.

"Our Husband."

We are sorry to see that there is domestic trouble in Emporia and we are still more sorry to see that that gifted woman, Mrs. Mary McCreary Parkman, editor of the Emporia Times, should be forced into the columns of her own newspaper in defense of her political rights and the proper subjection of man. But the incident, painful as it may be, is not without alleviation. It will not have occurred in vain if it serve to quiet the cavillings of those who say that the enfranchised woman would be but a pale shadow of husband or lover and that she would take her political opinions as she does her breakfast food—predigested. Mrs. Mary McCreary Parkman is made of sterner stuff than that. Her husband is not without his uses. She will even concede that in common with the rest of the brute creation he has rights, but as for permitting him to dictate to her in the domain of politics, Mrs. Mary McCreary Parkman repudiates the idea with scorn and contumely.

The trouble arose in this way: Mrs. Parkman is a Democrat and has been twice elected as county superintendent of schools. Mr. Parkman, on the other hand, is a Republican who has been county surveyor and now seeks renomination. It seems to be a rule on the Emporia Times, of which Mrs. Parkman is editor, that Republican officials shall be indicated by the office that they hold and not by name, and therefore the long-suffering Parkman always appears in his wife's chaste columns as "the county surveyor." If Parkman himself had no complaint to make, there is no reason why any one else should interfere, but censorious tongues will wag, and so finally this intrepid woman has been forced into an editorial explanation of why she blacklists her husband.

She begins very properly by pointing out that "what we do with our husband is our own business, and it would seem in all fairness that if we put up with this man morning, noon, and night we shouldn't have to be putting him in the paper all the time." Now no one can object to this, and it may be taken for granted that the down-trodden Parkman, if he is still articulate, would deprecate any journalistic additions to the wifely attentions which he now receives "morning, noon, and night." But the lady goes on to explain that even married people have their points of disagreement as well as of agreement. There must be ripples even on the most placid stream, and while there is blissful and ecstatic harmony in the Parkman circle on matters of literature, religion, art, the nebular hypothesis, how to poke the fire, and the facts in the Guinness case, on the one point of politics there is a diversity both wide and hopeless. "We think," says Mrs. Parkman, "that our husband has a good deal of sense—for a mere man—but on politics he doesn't know much. He is a Republican, a mean, black Republican, and as such has no claims on us either as a molder of public opinion, a fellow-citizen, or as a wife." There is a finality about this that we like. There is no false sentiment about Mrs. Parkman. She brings the editorial "we" upon the head of her erring spouse with a thwack that is good to hear and that ought to be profitable to him.

But she knows her duty, does Mrs. Parkman, and she will do it to the bitter end. Worm though he be, Parkman shall never complain that she failed to discriminate between her duties to the flag and to the fireside. She says: "We will cook for our husband; we will mend our husband's clothing; we will darn and brush him, and keep him up—as our husband. But as an office-holder of a vile, venal, and corrupt organization, an emissary of Wall Street, and as an oppressor of the poor, our husband has only our unspeakable contempt. He should thank his lucky stars that we do keep his name out of the Times."

But here, it is regrettable to observe, this magnificent woman deviates from the path of virtuous exhortation into that of innuendo and threat. Let the county surveyor beware. His lofty position shall not shield him from disclosures of an unnamed dreadfulness if he persist in his wild and evil career. Mrs. Parkman has information about him, secret information, and it hangs over his head like a sword of Damocles.

"We know enough of our husband," says this dauntless wife, "to make his vote in this election little more than scattering. But up to the present we have said nothing. We have believed that our duty as a wife had some claims on our duty as an editor. But a word to the wise should be sufficient, and if our husband has learned a lick of sense from past experiences with us, he will take a grand immortal tumble to himself and call off his dogs. This newspaper is a free and untrammeled organ of special privileges to none and equal rights to all, and if our husband thinks he belongs to the privileged classes he is mighty badly fooled."

But in her concluding paragraph Mrs. Parkman relents and allows free play to a fine and tender discrimination. She admits that she thinks a good bit of her husband, first and last and in one way and another, and we can almost hear a suspicious break in the stern editorial voice. But let there be no misunderstanding. A husband is one thing and a Republican county surveyor is quite another. If it were not for his lamentable and misguided sex, a husband might be tolerable and even likeable, but for a Republican county surveyor, as such, there can be no quarter. "He is a bad lot."

Cleveland in Retirement.

The services of Grover Cleveland in the presidential office were undeniably great. It fell to him to do things which are now seen to have been essential to the integrity and dignity of the government and to the welfare of our people. And yet it may well be questioned if Mr. Cleveland's career in the presidency was more important than his career as a private citizen living in retirement after leaving the presidency. The man in public office or the man in active business or professional life, however able or distinguished he may be, is one whose opinions and utterances are subject to an inevitable discount. In other countries, under older systems, there commonly exists a group of men largely influential, standing apart, somewhat at least, from the general activities of life. We have no such class in this country because our men of capability are for the most part either actively or prospectively in the game and subject therefore to the bias of self-interest, or to another bias, that of misinterpretation. There are few indeed who from the vantage ground of universal consideration and respect may give counsel free from any suggestions of interest.

Mr. Cleveland for some twelve years stood in this position. Nobody ever suspected him of any motive save that of the general public welfare; and when he has spoken from time to time his utterances have had a weight decisive in fixing the attitude of multitudes of minds, if not indeed of determining the policies of government. He has not posed as a "sage"; he has been singularly free from any pose; nevertheless he has been a sort of balance wheel, a means of restraining, of correcting, of enforcing sound counsels in emergencies. His connection, for example, with the revival of confidence in insurance investment's contributed vastly to the poise and welfare of the country, if indeed it did not save it from a ruinous panic.

We can think of no department of American life where the deficiency is so marked and so serious as that which Mr. Cleveland has just vacated. We need most grievously men of approved character for judgment and integrity, so placed as to command attention when they rise to give counsel, so free from any personal interest that whatever they may say may have consideration and weight. A thousand citizens of approved wisdom, retired from the activities of business and politics, but vital alike in their intelligence, their interest in affairs, and in their courage, would be worth to the country, in its political and moral life, ten thousand times their number of scheming promoters.

This deficiency is as marked in local communities, especially in our Western communities, as in the country at large. For example, we seriously need leadership in San Francisco. We have among us men of large character, with undisputed capacity for wise counsel. But practically every man of them is so involved, either in politics or in business or in both, as to qualify or nullify any public counsels that he may give. We distinctly lack an element accredited by experience and character and at the same time by assurance of unprejudiced public interest. The greatest need of San Francisco at this moment is not more capital, nor higher ability in her citizenship, nor more enterprise in commerce and business, but that intellectual and moral leadership which is only to be expected from citizens duly accredited and respected and plainly above any suggestion of self-interest. Twenty-five men representative of various departments of life, justified by successful experience, approved by ability and integrity, and at the same time standing apart from the strifes of business and politics—such a group of men at this time would be worth to San Francisco vastly more than their weight in gold.

Editorial Notes.

It is not without significance that those who seek to applaud Mr. Taft give their strongest approval to those points of his character in which he most differs from somebody else not named. Speaking "in an impersonal way" last week, ex-Senator Spooner thanked God that as a lawyer Mr. Taft if elected President "will know how to observe the Constitutional limitations of his office." At a Republican ratification meeting in New York, the whole burden of the addresses was Mr. Taft's "judicial mindedness," whereat the applause was tremendous. Likewise, ex-Secretary Shaw is quoted as telling the story of a school teacher who went "heeled" with a revolver, a rawhide, and a bowie-knife, the moral of the story being in Mr. Shaw's own words that "punishment is not the object of education, nor is criminal prosecution the aim of government." The plain English of all this is that the country is applauding in Mr. Taft those phases and elements of character which most differentiate him from a certain very active gentleman who now sits in the presidential chair. The truth is that the country is tired of the rip-snort method. It is tired of hollerings and bellerings. It wants things done quietly and in order, to the end of more repose and a profounder sense of peace and security.

Every newspaper in the country, so far as we have seen, is engaged in making up the Taft Cabinet. They all give Representative Burton of Ohio the Secretaryship of State and make Mr. Frank H. Hitchcock of Massachusetts Postmaster-General. One curious fact is that each of the forty-six States sees with certain eye a favorite son of its own in the Cabinet. Up in Oregon, for example, they make sure that Senator Fulton will be made Secretary of the Interior, while here in California we are already addressing George Knight as Attorney-General. Curiously enough, nobody outside of Oregon or California appears to see any likelihood of these assignments.

The recount in the New York mayoralty contest has not given much comfort either to Mr. Hearst or to Mr. McClellan. The incident, taken as a whole, exhibits Hearst as an arrant pretender and McClellan as a man willing to hold office under a questionable title. During the past two years Mr. Hearst has unceasingly assailed certain conspicuous persons on the basis of their presumed participation in a fraudulent proceeding. As yet he has not been heard in apology, which may be taken to indicate something of his moral measure.

The discussions of the past week with respect to resolutions of respect for the late President Cleveland to be presented to the Denver convention have not been seemly. In fifty years the Democratic party has elected but one man to the presidency, and that man one of the most capable, distinguished, and universally respected who ever occupied the presidential office. It would seem that the Democratic party ought for once to imitate its more successful rival and "point with pride." And yet it must be admitted that in the character of the Democratic party and the character of Grover Cleveland there was little basis for accord or sympathy. Cleveland's democracy was a very different thing from the democracy of Bryan; Cleveland's democracy was so true a thing that the man was never in accord with his party and in the end was forced to break with it that he might do the work which saved the country in a great crisis and which has given him imperishable fame. The most curious and anomalous thing about Mr. Cleveland is that he should have chosen the Democratic party as the vehicle of his political activities; and it is equally curious and anomalous that the Democratic party should ever have chosen Cleveland as its prophet. No man of our day, holding to any system of opinions or fixed in relationship to any party, has in truth been less of a Democrat as democracy is interpreted and construed by its accepted authorities than Grover Cleveland.

W. J. Bartnett, under sentence of ten years in San Quentin prison for breach of trust, deserves all that has come to him. The evidence in the case showed him up as an unmitigated fraud, one who violated unnumbered principles of private honor as well as every law which crossed his path. And yet we doubt very much if ever for one moment in the course of his crooked career Bartnett regarded himself as a scoundrel. He belongs to that type of man, very common if the truth be confessed, who can see nothing wrong in crooked dealing so long as he does it himself. Bartnett held a certain confidence in himself, a certain faith that everything would come out right in the end, on the basis of a supreme personal conceit. His mind is that of a visionary and, what is more, a visionary of large moral purposes. If instead of losing the game he had won it and come out immensely wealthy, he would no doubt have been found endowing churches, orphan asylums, and old ladies' homes. His impulses are those of a generous and even a religious nature; he was a scoundrel in practice not because he wished to go wrong, but because he followed the leading of his vanities and delusions. He lacked that cold-blooded integrity which looks facts in the face and which takes pains to see that the ground is firm before leaping. He is a man whose course is guided not by a severe and honest judgment, but by impulse. Such men, we have said, are common, and very commonly, indeed, they rank as good men because opportunity does not come to them as it did to Bartnett to go wrong on a scale so large as to involve others in their ruin.

Nobody has ever suspected Mr. William Hoff Cook of exceptional powers, either personal or professional. True, he did a brilliant stunt or two in connection with the search for Mr. Dalzell Robertson some months back, having, as we recall it, discovered that Robertson shaved himself and changed shirts before leaving the city—all of which at the time was duly exploited in these columns, which never deny to conspicuous merit its meed of appreciation. But, be it noted, Mr. Cook has won two convictions in the California Safe Deposit business. He has put Mr. J. Dalzell Brown in stripes and he has not only convicted Mr. W. J. Bartnett, but has gotten him duly under sentence. When this result is contrasted with the achievements of Mr. Heney, Mr. William Hoff Cook appears in decidedly the better light. Whatever Mr. Cook's personal or professional powers may or may not be, he has gone about his work in sincerity and good temper. He has not attempted to try his cases in the newspapers; he has not attempted to do politics; he has not attempted to suborn perjury or to make a hero of himself. He has simply gone about his business with judgment and industry and—the result speaks for itself. Wouldn't it be a good plan for the "great prosecutor" to step aside and let Mr. William Hoff Cook try his hand in the Ruef case?

A few days back one Reilly presented for collection at the Pendleton, Oregon, postoffice two hundred and fifty postal orders for one hundred dollars each. He purchased these orders a year ago, fearing to put his money in any bank, at the same time fearful personally to hide it away. What he wanted was to get his money into such form and so placed that the integrity of the government would stand pledged for its re-payment. Therefore he took a course which cost him $75 in fees, at the same time foregoing the interest which any savings bank would have paid him. The incident is not without its suggestions. Whoever has faith in anything has faith in the government. One who withdraws his money from a savings bank to make sure of it is still willing to entrust it to the government. If the responsibility of the government had been back of our banking system last year, the current finances of the country would not have suffered as they did. Perhaps the solution of our panic problem lies not so much in projects for emergency currency as in a system of postal savings banks in which public confidence will be unshakable.

A terra cotta statuette, about twenty-one inches in height, representing the goddess Venus, has recently been discovered in the Island of Monemvasia, in the prefecture of Lacedaemonia. The statuette is similar in many respects to the Venus of Milo, and the conservator of the National Museum at Athens has expressed the opinion that it is a reproduction by a local sculptor of the statue now in the Louvre. The Venus of Monemvasia holds a mirror in the left hand, while the right supports a garment around the hips.

CAMPAIGN TOPICS.

Republican observers in Ohio seem to think that Taft will not exactly have a "walk-over" in that State. There are three enemies in his path and we are hearing a good deal of advance agent talk as to the mischief that they can do him. These three dangers are:

The labor unions, indignant at the Republican "betrayal." The negro voters, resentful over the Brownsville affair.

The Foraker-Dick contingent, with their old had habit of defection.

Now these look formidable enough in their way, but as is usual with lions in the path they wilt perceptibly at close quarters. The labor unions are a hodge-podge and simple. They may have a certain amount of cohesion in strikes and dinner-pail agitations, but when it comes a question of national politics something very much like a political conscience shows itself and the old historic affiliations assert themselves.

There may, of course, be something in the contention that the negro vote will be influenced by the sullen discontent aroused by the disbanding of the colored troops at Brownsville. The incident is still fresh in the memory, while Foraker has done his best to rub salt into wounds that would otherwise have healed long ago. It may be too much to expect any serious political reflection from colored voters or any careful discrimination between rival claims, but at the same time it is hard to suppose that any considerable number of colored voters will be given to Bryan in preference to Taft. That way lies political stultification for the negro. However great may be Taft's derelictions in negro eyes, it indicated no policy of racial antagonism and it therefore sinks into insignificance when compared with Bryan's attitude as disclosed in his Cooper Union speech, when he actually defended the total disfranchisement of the negro. Political memories may be short, but they are retentive enough of the language used upon that occasion by Bryan, when he said:

The white race in the North and in the South will not permit a few men to take the solid black vote and use it as personal property for the making of money regardless of the welfare of the community, and that was done in the South. The South is giving the black man better law than the black man would give the white man in the South if the black man made the law.

To talk about the alienation of the colored vote because of Brownsville without at the same time estimating the effect of such language as this is surely futility of a crass kind.

In the same way the Foraker-Dick opposition has been magnified out of all recognition. Foraker's congratulations to Taft had all the ring of sincerity, and now we have the assurance that the senator will vote and speak for his former opponent. It is true that the old machine has a somewhat evil reputation to live down, but even machines may experience a change of heart, or of stomach, and we all know that there is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, etc. Hanna used to complain a good deal of the Foraker crowd. He said once:

When my fellows got licked in a convention or a primary, they always whined in and voted for the ticket, regardless of everything else, but when these Foraker fellows are whipped in a preliminary contest they refuse to accept defeat. They knife the ticket.

But this is ancient history. If Foraker gets into the campaign, as he says he will do, it will still further minimize the defections in the negro vote.

There is little reason to doubt that Gompers will get at Denver the success denied him at Chicago. Bryan's Commoner gives us an unmistakable forecast of what we may expect. A current editorial says:

In another column reference is made to the injunction plank. The injunction plank adopted by the Republican convention is a retreat from the position taken by the President and from the position taken by Secretary Taft in his speeches, although neither of them went as far as they ought to have gone in their effort to prevent what is known as government by injunction. Here is the third retreat.

In the meantime Gompers and all his cohorts, horse, foot, and artillery, have moved upon Denver. Here is the anti-injunction pledge that he will present for the consideration of pliant Democrats:

We pledge ourselves to such legislation as will guarantee to workmen those rights necessary to their industrial protection, including the right to strike and to induce or persuade others to do likewise; and to such legislation as will prevent the issuance of restraining orders and injunctions without hearing; and guaranteeing trial by jury to persons accused of contempt of court if such alleged contempt be not committed in the presence of the court, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice.

It is of course the same one that was rejected at Chicago. Gompers refuses to discuss the prospects of success, the means to be adopted, or the assurances of support that he has already received, but we shall know all about it in a few days.

It is curious to note that the injunction becomes reprehensible only when it is used against the labor unions. When the unions themselves are aggrieved then the injunction becomes a very present help in time of trouble. The New York Times says:

It may be assumed that the Detroit Metal Polishers, Buffers, and Platers' Union has no unconquerable aversion to the injunction in labor disputes, for it has just secured an injunction forbidding any one, and especially the police, from interfering with its lawful plans for increasing the membership of the union. Apparently the police had interfered with the union's use of the streets for the "peaceful solicitation" of members of the union, and the police were ordered to stop interfering with the use of the streets in any manner, lawful for all. If Mr. Gompers were suffering from any unlawful limitation of his union's beneficial activities he would find the law as useful to him as to this Detroit union.

Sauce for the goose is not necessarily sauce for the gander. Gompers should disclose his whole hand and ask for what he really wants, which is simply a plank to the effect that whatever is obnoxious to or disapproved of by the labor unions is hereby and henceforth illegal.

Whatever may be the fate of the injunction plank at Denver, we are not likely to get to the end of the agitation for some time to come. We may therefore just as well get at a clear understanding of what the fuss is all about so as not to be misled into the idea that "government by injunction" means anything more than a summary prohibition to refrain from some contemplated and recognized illegality. The injunction forbids a man or a body of men from doing some specific act which is already contrary to law and for which the law provides a penalty. The injunction forbids the performance of an offense; it does not create a new offense; its mandate does not compel the performance of an act, but the non-performance of an act already and admittedly illegal. It enforces inaction and not action.

The Square Deal reminds us that a year ago, when an effort was made to restrict the power of the Federal courts in injunction cases, the judiciary committee of the United States Senate considered carefully the bill brought before it for this purpose. At one of the meetings James M. Beck of New York, a lawyer of ability and standing, read from the record of the courts in every reported injunction case and a summary of this statement shows:

That in seven cases the court had refused to issue restraining orders without a preliminary hearing, not deeming the exigency sufficiently great.

That in every case but one where an injunction was issued without a preliminary hearing the court upon a full hearing sustained the order made.

That in every case but one where the issuance of an injunction was reviewed by an appellate court the injunctive decree was sustained, and even in the one exception the injunction was merely modified.

Such is the actual record, and yet, if we were to judge from the fulminations and frothings of Gompers, we should suppose that the laborer could no longer call his soul his own and was positively unable to draw his pay for fear of an injunction.

Equally apropos comes a word from Mr. Taft himself. Within the last few days a volume entitled "Present-Day Problems," by William H. Taft, has been published by Dodd, Mead & Co. One of the problems therein handled by the Republican nominee is on "The Federal Judiciary," and the fact that the chapter in question is the reprint of a speech delivered in 1895 is an advantage and not a loss. It shows Mr. Taft's views thirteen years ago, and that he includes the speech in the present volume is proof that those views have been consistently preserved and are still his own. For the matter of that the following paragraph might have been written yesterday:

But when the labor unions, as they sometimes do, seek to interfere with interstate commerce and to obstruct its flow, they are prone to carry out their purposes with such a blare of trumpets and such open defiance of law that the proof of their guilt is out of their own mouths. The rhetorical indictment against the Federal courts, that from that which was intended as a shield against corporate wrong they have forged a weapon to attack the wage-earner, is in this way given a specious force which a candid observer will be blind to ignore. Thus are united in a common enemy against the Federal courts the populist and the trade unionist with all those whose political action is likely to be affected by such a combination. And yet their enemy has no other justification than the differing and unavoidable limitations upon the efficacy of judicial action in respect to corporate and labor evils.

As a matter of fact there is nothing in any Federal decision directed against the organization of labor to maintain wages and to secure terms of employment otherwise favorable. The courts, so far as they have expressed themselves upon the subject, recognize the right of men for a lawful purpose to combine to leave their employment at the same time, and to use the inconvenience this may cause to their employer as a legitimate weapon in the frequently recurring controversy as to the amount of wages. It is only when the combination is for an unlawful purpose, and an unlawful injury is thereby sought to be inflicted, that the combination has received the condemnation of the Federal as well as of State courts.

The action of the Federal courts all over the country in the recent American Railway Union strike in issuing injunctions to prevent further unlawful interference by the strikers with the carrying of the mails, and the flow of interstate commerce, followed by the commitment for contempt of the strike leaders who defied the injunction served on them, is what has called out the official protests of the governors of Illinois and Colorado, and the phrase "government by injunction" has been invented to describe the alleged usurpation of power by the Federal tribunals in this crisis.

Mr. Taft hits the nail squarely upon the head when he says that "the real objection to the injunction is the certainty that disobedience will be promptly punished before a court without a jury." The law-breaker has a constitutional aversion to summary proceedings. He prefers to commit the offense and then to take his chance—if indeed it can be called a chance—of bamboozling a jury, playing upon its whims and prejudices, and exhausting the last possibilities of legal chicanery. Most of all he wants to commit the offense.

The cry of "government by injunction" grew out of the Debs case and from the action of the Federal courts and of Grover Cleveland in cutting short the dangerous movement that tried to come to a head in Chicago in 1894. The phrase was invented by Governor Altgeld, who left law and order to look out for themselves and who was indignant when Federal powers were invoked to do the duties that he himself had so grossly neglected. Now it looks as if the old agitation were to become a part of Bryanism.

The Rotherhithe tunnel, lately opened to the public, is the twelfth under the Thames. The first, dug by Brunel, was opened in 1843, and is still in use by the East London Railway Company. It took eighteen years to construct it because of ignorance of the geological formations to be encountered. The Tower subway, now used for gas and water, was built in a year by Barlow, and was opened in 1870. The new tunnel, like the Blackwell tunnel finished in 1896, is a capacious highway; the others are either footways or "tubes" for underground railways.

H. C. Hansbrough, United States senator from North Dakota, was beaten in his fight for renomination at the primaries.

THE REID-WARD WEDDING.

The Ancient Chapel Royal in London Is the Scene of an Interesting Ceremony.

In the language of diplomacy the marriage between Miss Jean Reid and the Hon. John Ward is a fait accompli. Nothing was left undone to give the wedding all the impressiveness of a royal ceremony, while popular enthusiasm was so marked and so spontaneous as to be a tribute as much to the popularity of Mr. Whitelaw Reid as to the graceful charm of his daughter.

At this time of day there is no need to remind any one of the beginnings of a romance that has now reached its consummation. Miss Reid and Mr. Ward met at Biarritz while the latter was in attendance upon the king, and the announcement of the betrothal followed at once upon their return to London. Mr. Ward is a brother of the Earl of Dudley, a special favorite of the king, and standing high in the popular regard. Indeed there is no marriage of late years that has awakened quite so much popular interest or that has been marked by quite so much popular approval.

The royal pew at the Chapel Royal, St. James, was well filled yesterday. The king and queen were present, as well as the Prince and Princess of Wales, Princess Victoria, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, Princess Patricia of Connaught, Prince and Princess Alexander of Teck, and Prince Francis of Teck. The bride, escorted by Mr. Whitelaw Reid, arrived at three o'clock, and of her costume it may be enough to say that it was of satin with bouquets of orange blossoms and her veil was of lace. She was followed into the church by six little boys and girls, the boys in quaint antique garb with nankeen breeches and blue velvet shirts and the girls in muslin with blue bows in their hair. The chief bridesmaid, Miss Crocker, walked alone, dressed also in white muslin and with a blue sash. The children were so very young as to be almost irresponsible, and when one of them asked in a particularly audible and penetrating voice how much longer the ceremony would be the king and queen showed their amusement by broad smiles.

A telegraphic summary of the proceedings will of course have reached California far in advance of this letter, and the main facts will already be public property. But it may not be amiss to say that the British government was officially represented by the Prime Minister and Mrs. Asquith, Sir Edward and Lady Grey, Sir Charles and Lady Hardinge, and Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Harcourt. From the Reid family came Mr. D. O. Mills, Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills, Miss Mills, Mrs. James Low Harriman, Mrs. J. F. D. Lanier, and Miss Bishop. Other Americans present were Mrs. Potter Palmer, Lady Newborough, Mrs. Carolyn, Mrs. and Miss Ronaldo, Mrs. Hay Ritchie, Miss Feridah Taylor, Mrs. Henry Coventry, Mrs. Harold Baring, Mrs. Frank Mackey, and Mrs. Marshall Field. Some of these people were present at the ceremony, while others came only to the subsequent reception. The bride and bridegroom left the house almost unobserved, but Mr. and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid and a few intimate friends were waiting at the entrance hall for the last adieux, and as soon as it was known that the chief actors had actually departed the guests went their respective ways with good wishes that were all heartfelt.

There is no literary art that can make a list of wedding presents look very different from an auctioneer's catalogue. The printed word is fatal to the sentiment that gives to such things their real and abiding value. From the king and queen came a bracelet set with diamonds, but perhaps to be even more cherished is the recollection of the private and intimate talk with the queen and the kiss that concluded it. Perhaps, too, even more precious than gems is the card of congratulation sent by the king to the bride, and the grammatical lapsus will not lessen its value. The card was addressed to "Miss Whitelaw Reid," and this is not the lady's correct designation. Eldest or only daughters are addressed without the intermediate name, but here President Roosevelt was equally at fault, for the card accompanying his present bore the words "Miss Jean Reid." But the king added another error and one still more interesting, for to the phrase "my best wishes" he attached the signature "from Edward R." But the king's error—if indeed the "King's English" can be in error—was one of impulsiveness, and it will not detract from the value of the present. Queen Victoria, it may be remembered, was similarly prone to deviation from strict grammatical rectitude when her emotions were concerned. Another royal gift, from the Prince and Princess of Wales, took the form of a set of silver dinner dishes. Mr. and Mrs. Reid gave a diamond tiara and a collar. Mr. Morgan's present was distinctive of his aesthetic tastes. He sent a fac-simile of an ancient Oriental necklace set with rough and uncut emeralds and sapphires. Mr. and Mrs. Carnegie gave a large diamond, Mrs. Russell Sage a group of tourmalines and diamonds, Mr. and Mrs. Elihu Root a number of gold cups, Mrs. Jennie Crocker a ring of pearls and diamonds, Mr. and Mrs. John Jacob Astor a diamond pin, while another jeweled pin came from Mr. W. W. Astor. Mrs. Hay sent a silver tray and Lord Rosebery a diamond and amethyst drop. There were, of course, numberless other presents, a great many of the donors remembering that both bride and bridegroom are connoisseurs of old silver and eager collectors. The presents of silver alone form a fine collection and many of them have a quite extraordinary interest.

Mr. and Mrs. Reid will spend their honeymoon at Lord Dudley's house in Ireland, although they will spend a preliminary week in England. When the honeymoon is over they will take up their residence in Carlton Gardens.

LONDON, July 24, 1908.

PICCADILLY.

OLD FAVORITES.

The Bailiff's Daughter of Islington.

There was a youth, and a well beloved youth,
And he was an esquire's son;
He loved the bailiff's daughter dear
That lived in Islington.

She was coy, and she would not believe
That he did love her so,
No, nor at any time she would
Any countenance to him show.

But when his friends did understand
His fond and foolish mind,
They sent him up to fair London,
An apprentice for to bind,

And when he had been seven long years,
And his love he had not seen,
"Many a tear have I shed for her sake
When she little thought of me."

All the maids of Islington
Went forth to sport and play,
All but the hailiff's daughter,—
She secretly stole away.

She put off her gown of gray,
And put on her puggish attire.
She's up to fair London gone
Her true love to require.

As she went along the road,
The weather being hot and dry,
There was she aware of her true love,
At length came riding by.

She stepped to him, as red as any rose,
And took him by the bridle ring:
"I pray you, kind sir, give me one penny
To ease my weary limb."

"I prithee, sweet heart, canst thou tell me
Where that thou wast born?"
"At Islington, kind sir," said she,
"Where I have had many a scorn."

"I prithee, sweet heart, canst thou tell me
Whether dost thou know
The hailiff's daughter of Islington?"
"She's dead, sir, long ago."

"Then will I sell my goodly steed,
My saddle and my bow,
I will unto some far cuntry
Where no man doth me know."

"O stay, O stay! thou goodly youth,
She's alive, she is not dead;
Here she standeth by thy side,
And is ready to he thy hide."

"O farewell grief! and welcome joy!
Ten thousand times and more,
For now I have seen my own true love
That I thought I should have seen no more."
—Old Ballads.

Dabbling in the Dew.

Oh, where are you going to, my pretty little dear,
With your red rosey cheeks and your coal-black hair?
I'm going a-milking, kind sir, she answered me:
And it's dahhling in the dew makes the milkmaids fair.

Suppose I were to clothe you, my pretty little dear,
In a green silken gown and the amethyst rare?
O no, sir, O no, sir, kind sir, she answered me,
For it's dahhling in the dew makes the milkmaids fair!

Suppose I were to carry you, my pretty little dear,
In a chariot with horses, a gray gallant pair?
O no, sir, O no, sir, kind sir, she answered me,
For it's dahhling in the dew makes the milkmaids fair!

Suppose I were to feast you, my pretty little dear,
With dainties on silver, the whole of the year?
O no, sir, O no, sir, kind sir, she answered me,
For it's dahhling in the dew makes the milkmaids fair!

O hut London's a city, my pretty little dear,
And all men are gallant and brave that are there—
O no, sir, O no, sir, kind sir, she answered me,
For it's dahhling in the dew makes the milkmaids fair!

O fine clothes and dainties and carriages so rare
Bring gray to the cheeks and silver to the hair;
What's a ring on the finger if rings are round the eye?
But it's dahhling in the dew makes the milkmaids fair.
—From "Folk Songs from Somerset."

The region of Luderitz Bay, where the great diamond find is reported, is in the extreme southwest of Africa, in a section known as Damara Land, or Hereroland. It has a coast line of 460 miles. On the north is Guinea, and the British possessions surround it on the south and east. The country some years ago came into the possession of the Germans. In the mountain region it is fertile, and in spots wheat can be raised. Copper and iron are said to be abundant, but the country has been prospected but little as regards the mineral wealth. Since the Germans have been in possession some attempts have been made to work the country. Windhoek is the principal town in the northern section. The diamond find is many miles from the town, and near the coast, in a section of country not known heretofore to be rich in diamonds. It is hundreds of miles from Kimberley and the other diamond-producing centres of the British South African possessions. The country is sparsely populated excepting with savages.

A New Jersey man recently captured the largest frog ever seen at Cedar Grove Reservoir. The hind legs of the frog weighed nearly three pounds. Cooked at the headquarters of the fire department, the legs served as a tid-bit for four men.

POLITICO-PERSONAL.

Five touring automobiles, conveying Roger Sullivan of Illinois and twenty guests, made the trip from Chicago to Denver, arriving safely before the convention.

Elihu Root, Secretary of State, began at Muldoon's sanitarium at White Plains, New York, last week a course of physical training intended to put him in a physical condition for another year of hard work at his desk in Washington.

David B. Hill has repudiated by cablegram an interview which was published widely as coming from him on the day he sailed for Europe. In this interview Mr. Hill was quoted as referring to Governor Johnson as "the poorhouse candidate," criticising Mr. Bryan, and saying that "there is no Democratic party."

The French ambassador and Mme. Jusserand left Washington a few days ago for their home in France for the summer season. The chargé d'affaires and counselor at the embassy, M. de la Fosse, who returned from Europe several days ago, is now in Newport, where he will establish the embassy for the summer season.

It was remarked of the St. Louis efforts to secure the place of running-mate with Bryan for D. R. Francis that such a combination would recall the late Senator Hoar's characterization of the Hayes and Wheeler ticket at a ratification meeting in Faneuil Hall. He said it reminded him of the Irishman's stone wall, whose breadth was greater than its height, so that if it fell over it would be higher than it was before.

President David Starr Jordan of Stanford University has been appointed United States representative on the international commission which will investigate the fishery laws governing the American-Canadian border waters. Samuel Torel Bastevo has been appointed as the British commissioner. They will report on a code of laws for the preservation of the fisheries. The commission was provided for in a treaty ratified at the last session of the Senate at Washington.

William J. Bryan and William H. Taft will speak in Lincoln on consecutive days during September, and it is possible each will listen to the other. That is the announcement made at Governor Sheldon's office, following correspondence with Mr. Bryan and Mr. Taft by W. R. Neller, secretary of the Nebraska Board of Agriculture. Promises, it was said, had been made by both men to attend the Nebraska State Fair and make addresses, but the exact dates were not announced.

Director S. N. D. North of the Census Bureau is already getting ready for the thirteenth census. It was hoped by Mr. North that the Crumpacker bill to provide for this and subsequent decennial censuses would be passed the last session of Congress, but it failed of enactment along with numerous other measures of importance by reason of the rush at the close of the session and the anxiety of the Congress leaders to hurry the session to an end. It will cost about $14,000,000 to take the census.

President Roosevelt authorized Secretary Loeb to make public a statement regarding the story that young Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., is going to work for the Steel Trust this summer. The President was angry, because he says the story seems to imply that he might be influenced in his attitude toward the trust by his son's going to work for it. Secretary Loeb sets forth that the President has no direct knowledge that the firm by which young Roosevelt is to be employed is controlled by the trust, and that in any event the boy is merely to work as a laborer.

Assistant Attorney-General A. B. Pugh has issued a statement in regard to the land conspiracy case which resulted in the conviction of Frederick A. Hyde and Joost H. Schneider and the acquittal of John A. Benson and Henry P. Dimond. He declares that while the trial cost the government $48,360, the beneficial results to the Land Department in the future administration of the public land laws are beyond calculation. The net result will be the restoration to the government of more than 100,000 acres of public lands, valued at about $1,000,000.

William R. Hearst failed to establish his right to the majority of New York through his contest of Mayor McClellan's election and the recount of the ballots in court. He professes to be content with the outcome, however, and says: "The fight was not to make me mayor, but to secure an honest count of the votes cast by the citizens. In the face of enormous and unnecessary difficulties that count has been secured, and hereafter it will not be possible for election thieves to commit frauds in secrecy and security behind the barrier of the law."

Charles P. Grandfield, who has succeeded First Assistant Postmaster-General Frank H. Hitchcock as the important managing head of the Postoffice Department, has come up through the ranks of the postal service from the lowest ranks. For a number of years the new first assistant to the Postmaster-General was head of the division of salary and allowances, and when Mr. Hitchcock left the department to devote all his time to advancing the presidential aspirations of Secretary Taft he recommended Grandfield for deserved promotion on a purely merit basis. He is considered most capable by his bureau associates in Washington official circles.

AT PIERRE'S ROTISSERIE.

By Jerome A. Hart.

XXI.

When Yarrow held forth to Alden on the merits of the city's foreign restaurants he had not boasted unduly. The foreign element among the gold-seekers left a marked impress on the population. Among these foreign colonies, the largest was the French. The exiled Gauls had two daily newspapers to speak for them; they had a theatre, at which both plays and comic operas were given, and they were leaders in much of the city's pleasure-taking. One of the most important banks, that of Desroches & Bearn, was French; its financial affiliations were direct with Paris rather than with New York. Several minor banks were French in their ownership and connections. The restaurants most affected by the social and political leaders of the time were all French. No city in the United States, save only New Orleans, had what could at that time compare with these restaurants in excellence.

Mercadon's Rotisserie, of all the restaurants, was the one most resorted to by the wealth and fashion of the day. It was an evolution of the cook-shop of Lutetia—the kind of place in which Francois Villon might have had a stolen goose roasted for himself and his Mie Margot. The kitchen was paraded in the front, not hidden in the back, as is the case with most restaurants, or buried in the cellar, as are the kitchens of modern Paris. To reach their seats the guests passed amid the white-capped chefs and the white-clad marmittons; passed by the ranges covered with casserolles containing savory concoctions, and the open roasting fires, before which slowly revolved joints of beef, saddles of lamb, mountain quail, canvas-back; passed between long rows of brightly burnished copper saucepans. There the wise epicure would stop and counsel with the chef concerning the day's delicacies; would waver between a pompano and a mountain-trout; would debate the merits of a domestic turkey fed on chestnuts, or a red-head duck fed on wild celery. Sometimes such an epicure, after outlining an elaborate repast, would catch a whiff from a giant crock wherein had gently simmered for forty-eight hours some tripes à la made de Caen, a dish which the chef prepared but once a week. Often the wise epicure—knowing that even a Gargantua could partake of but a single course if he began with that one—would abandon his artificial menu, and frankly fill himself up with the Normandy delicacy, lost to all shame. Another gastronome would order Baudin Richelieu, and watch the chef removing the white meat of a spitted chicken, making it into a toothsome sauccise, and sautéing it deftly with a delicate saucé mousseline. These culinary processes, under the very eyes of the waiting trenchermen, added enormously to their enjoyment—the sight meant anticipation as well as deglutition and digestion.

Seated at a table by himself was an elderly Frenchman, wearing the moustache and imperial so often seen during the golden days of the Third Napoleon. Standing deferentially by his side was Pierre Mercadon, the proprietor of the restaurant, taking down the dinner order of the great French banker.

"And that will be all," he concluded, "a eup of consommé, a quail aux chaux, some gruyère, and coffee."

"Bien, Monsieur Desroches," replied Pierre, briskly, starting for the front of the restaurant to give the order. As he did so, he stood aside respectfully to let a newcomer pass, bowing low, and saying to a waiter, "Attention—a table for Monsieur le Gouverneur."

"Never mind another table, Peere," said Governor Jackson; "I'll sit here with Mossoo Desroches, if he'll let me."

"Very glad to have you, I'm sure," replied Desroches.

When seated, the governor affably asked Desroches's advice about his dinner. But it soon developed that the meagre menu of the French banker was unsuited to his excellency's appetite, and he ordered a more substantial meal.

"And now, what'll we have to drink?" queried the governor in rotund tones.

Desroches reflected. "Hum!" said he; "suppose we try a bottle of Chateau Margaux—I mean the real Margaux, governor—not the kind that's for sale at every hotel for four dollars a bottle when it sells for more than that at the vineyard. I don't know what that hotel wine is made of—out of almost anything—even grapes at times. Now I have a lot that was sent to me as a present by the Vicomte Aguado, the owner of the Margaux vineyard; it came on the last French ship arriving here from Bordeaux."

"But how does it happen that you have it at this restaurant?" asked the governor in surprise.

"Most of it is up at my house on the hill; but I dine here frequently, and so I have Pierre keep some of it here for me. Why should I not? Money is to spend, wine to drink. There is a French proverb, 'When the wine is poured it is to drink.' So here's to you."

"Good luck," returned the governor, pledging his table companion in the generous vintage.

"How do you like it?" asked the banker. "It's of the famous vintage of the Comet Year."

"It's fine," replied the governor, without enthusiasm. "But if you don't mind, I'll put a little sugar in mine. I don't really care much for these sour elarets. Say, Peere, gimme some sugar."

The countenance of Pierre as he watched the head of the State putting sugar in the Chateau Margaux grand cru was a study.

"And now, Desroches," said the governor, sipping his sangaree, "tell me what you hear about the senatorial fight."

The voices of both men were lowered as they leaned together across the table and continued their talk.

Across the way were seated two other diners who had cordially saluted both the governor and Desroches. These two—also talking in low tones, and also about the senatorial contest—were Colquhoun and DeKay, both Southerners, followers of Wyley, and friends of Tower.

"I hear that Fox has sent that nephew of his, young Alden, over into El Dorado, to run for the legislature," said Colquhoun; "if he's elected, that would ostensibly mean a vote for Fox for senator, but in reality a vote for Burke."

"Yes," replied DeKay, "but haven't you heard what happened to him?"

"No—what was it?"

"Alden was on the stage going from Yubaville to El Dorado, when it was held up by road-agents, and he and the stage-driver got all shot up."

"No!—How did you hear of it?"

"Eugene Yarrow is just down from the valley; he was up at Helmont's ranch, where Alden had been taken to recover from his wounds."

"This may interfere with Alden's election," suggested Colquhoun.

"No, I hardly think so. The people at El Dorado are in a wild excitement, Yarrow tells me. They have threatened to lynch any man who doesn't vote for Alden, so he'll be elected unanimously. The whole town is scouring the mountains for the road-agents. They think it is the Basquez gang."

"Let's see—that gang was supposed to have been started to revenge the lynching of some Mexican woman at Yubaville, wasn't it?"

"So they say, and all the greasers sympathize with them, help them, hide them, and throw dust in the eyes of their pursuers. But then there has always been some greaser gang out on the road."

"Yes," assented Colquhoun, "ever since Joaquin Murieta was caught and killed, there have been so many gangs that most of the Mexicans believe he's still alive."

"He oughtn't to be, considering how many of his heads there are in pickle."

"That's so—there must be a head of Joaquin in alcohol in nearly every first-class saloon in the State."

"Or in mesal," rejoined DeKay, dryly, "that gives it more of a Mexican flavor."

"This fellow Basquez probably took the name of Joaquin to fool the greasers. He's a cool head, though," went on Colquhoun. "Some weeks ago Governor Jackson over there issued a proclamation beginning, 'I John, and so forth, going on to offer three thousand dollars for Basquez's head. Last week there rode up to the stage station at Alder Creek, only a few miles from Sacrosanto, a good-looking greaser, with silver-mounted saddle, bridle, and spurs, riding a buckskin bronco. He stopped at the stage station, read the proclamation on the wall, wrote something under it, and rode away. When the station agent looked to see what the man had written, he found added to the proclamation the words: 'I will raise the reward to ten thousand dollars. Jaquin Basquez.' Rather brash business, wasn't it?"

"Brash! I should say so! But they may get him yet for this shooting of Fox's nephew. If the whole country turns out, so large a gang will find it difficult to hide."

"Fox will keep the people stirred up—he realizes that it keeps him and his nephew in the limelight. He has an itch for office, although he has no chance for the senatorship."

"If he doesn't stop rowing with Tower, he is more apt to fill a hole in the ground than a seat in the Senate."

"Right you are. Fox doesn't know the kind of man he is antagonizing. Tower is the most dangerous man I ever knew. He is absolutely without fear, is of an un governable temper, and as revengeful as an Indian. He has been out on the field only once because everybody's afraid of him. Did you ever hear of his affair with Welton?"

"No—what was it?" inquired DeKay.

"It started in the courtroom. Tower became involved in a quarrel with another attorney named Welton, who challenged him. Tower named as his conditions 'pistols at five paces.' Welton weakened, and had to wear the white feather. When I asked Tower why he made such extraordinary conditions, he replied: 'Welton is a dead shot with the pistol. I am not. But if Welton lacks nerve, he may miss me, even at five paces, but I know I can hit him at five.' The mere idea of five paces scared Welton."

"I don't know as I blame him much—at five paces two men would almost touch the muzzles of each other's pistols. That's fighting, that is. No wonder Fox is shy of Tower."

"Fox will never fight him; he keeps out of Tower's way. There are four men in the State who seem paired off by fate to fight—Wyley against Burke, and Tower against Fox. But Fox seems to try persistently to antagonize his leader Burke against Tower."

"Who really has no quarrel with Burke. While on the other hand, our own revered chieftain," hinted DeKay, "seems by no means eager to rush to the field of honor with the Short Hairs' leader, Burke."

"Still, Wyley has been out a number of times, colonel," said Colquhoun, in a corrective tone.

"Oh, yes, I know that. I am not questioning his courage—only commenting on his discretion. But why should he hunt for a duel? If he simply walks warily Fox will succeed in embroiling Burke in some trouble with Tower."

"With whom he has no quarrel whatever."

"Very true, but if one does not arise naturally a cause will be forced upon them, mark my words," responded DeKay. "But here's Yarrow—How are you, Eugene?—come over here and join us."

But even as he spoke the two diners across the way were also demanding with insistent cordiality that the newcomer should sit at their table. For a moment Yarrow stood irresolute between the two tables; then with a quick glance, noting that there were no political or personal vendettas between the four, he cried jocularly:

"See how popular a man can make himself simply by going away! Boys, let's join forces. You have all dined and so have I. So let's bring the tables together and take a post-prandial. Do I hear any objection? I hear none, and with the governor's permission it is so ordered."

Pierre and his waiters made haste to bring the two tables together, and Yarrow so contrived it that the governor sat at the head.

"Now, boys, what shall it be?" cried Yarrow. "Governor, what will you take? A whisky punch—good. Pierre, a whisky punch for Governor Jackson. Desroches, I know what you will have—une fine, n'est-ce pas? Pierre, a fine champagne for Monsieur Desroches. Colquhoun? Whisky. Pierre, a whisky straight for Mr. Colquhoun. Colonel? The same. Two whiskies. As for me, Pierre, you may make for me one of those individual *pause-café*s of yours—a chasse-café confected by your own hands. And be careful in pouring it, Pierre."

"Bien, monsieur," replied the beaming Pierre, as he gazed around to note the effect produced on other diners by his distinguished guests.

"You have been away, Eugene," said Desroches, looking at the young man with kindly eyes. "Where have you been hiding yourself?"

"I went up to look after some mineral lands my father owns on the edge of the Salsipuedes desert," replied Yarrow. "They're worked out as placer diggings, and are no use now to placer miners or other men without capital. Still, continual watching is required to keep jumpers off. The miners suspect there is some hidden treasure there."

"So do you apparently," replied Desroches, laughing.

"Yes, but the claim-jumpers are sure of it and we are not," replied Yarrow. "We have yet to develop the mine."

"I thought you told me you'd been up to Helmont's ranch," interrupted DeKay.

"Yes, I did stop over there for a flying visit," replied Eugene, carelessly. "But as I was saying about our mineral land, the claim-jumpers hope to hold it adversely to us, and be bought off. The Vigilantes up there are rather a tough lot, and the claim-jumpers all belong to the Vigilantes."

DeKay pointed to a formidable array of bottles which a waiter held on a tray behind Pierre. "Are these all for you, Eugene?" he asked.

"Yes," laughed Yarrow, "each bottle is, but not all of every one. Observe the skill of Master Pierre."

With becoming gravity Pierre took bottle after bottle, and poured a minute quantity from each into a tiny liqueur glass, followed by the eyes of guests and waiters.

"What have you got there, Yarrow?" inquired the governor, "I am fond of mixed beverages, but I never saw so many bottles used to make a single drink."

"It is an individual pause-café," replied Yarrow. "You see, for a sub-stratum Pierre first pours into the bottom of the glass a little old cognac—the same fine champagne that Desroches has there. Then on top of that he pours, successively, little layers of white maraschino, Benedictine, Kirschwasser, Kümmel, anisette, yellow chartreuse, curacao, crème de menthe, Italian vermouth, and green chartreuse. That is the chartreuse he is pouring now—the final layer. Is not the beverage a work of art?"

Beaming with pride, Pierre deftly poured the last brimming drop from the final bottle, which he sweepingly handed to an obsequious waiter. The tiny glass shone and sparkled with color from the various layers of liqueurs. Each liqueur lay superimposed upon the other, its color sharply defined.

"How do you drink it, Yarrow?" inquired the governor; "do you shake it up?"

"Good God! No!" replied Yarrow, with a withering look. "The charm of such a pause-café is that each successive layer shall follow its predecessor on the palate. Were it to be shaken up it would be as vulgar as a—a—a—looking at the governor's empty glass—as a sangaree sipped through a straw."

"Peere!" suddenly cried the governor to the attentive proprietor, "gimme one of those"—pointing to Yarrow's glass—"but make it in a goblet."

"You say in a goblet, monsieur?" inquired the stupefied Pierre.

"Yes—in a big glass like this," replied his excellency, pointing.

Shaking his head in a melancholy manner Pierre began his task of compounding a gigantic pause-café for the chief magistrate, while Desroches and Yarrow looked at one another with amused glances.

"Apropos of mixed drinks, governor," said Yarrow,

"did you ever tackle that Jersey beverage called 'Stone Fence'?"

"Never even heard of it," replied his excellency. "What's it like?"

"It's made of whisky and hard cider—Jersey whisky at that," interrupted DeKay. "I drank one once—just one—and I was stunned for three days. It was awful," he added feelingly.

"Some mixed drinks are apt to have that effect," said Yarrow meaningly, as the goblet of liqueurs was placed before his excellency.

"Speaking of whisky, reminds me that this town has changed greatly in a few years," said Colquhoun, "and the change seems to have come when the price of whisky changed."

"The court is with you," assented DeKay. "It's a very different town from what it was when whisky was four bits a drink."

"You are right, genl'mn," remarked the governor, somewhat thickly, but with much dignity. "I can remember distinctly when I could have bought fifty-vara lots in this town for twelve dollars apiece. Those were good old times. Whisky was four bits a drink then."

"Money was plenty then, too," added Colquhoun, gloomily. "And there were plenty of chances to make it."

"Yes, and men made it so easily that they paid no attention to it," commented DeKay. "You all know Brewer—Colonel Tom Brewer—the silver-tongued orator, you know. Well, one day, in the old times, Brewer found he was busted—clean, flat broke. He borrowed some money to settle his poker debts, and then got ready to go to the mines. On his way he met a banker friend of his—not his banker, but a banker. Friend asked where he was going. 'To the diggings,' says Brewer, 'I'm broke.' 'Nonsense,' says the friend, 'you got over five thousand dollars in my bank.' Brewer wouldn't believe him. 'Come along,' says the banker, 'and we'll see.' Sure enough—there it was. Brewer had deposited it there—clean forgot it. Here, Pierre, take the gentlemen's orders."

"Then there was Judge Higgins," added Colquhoun. "He had to take a hundred-vara lot for a legal fee—client couldn't pay anything else. Sold it two years later for three hundred thousand dollars and went back to the States."

"The case of Leidesdorff, the Danish consul, was the most peculiar," remarked Desroches. "He died heavily in debt, and his estate was supposed to be bankrupt. Before it could be probated and distributed, his beach and water lots increased so much in value that his estate was appraised at over three millions."

"They say Burke has made a large fortune out of his beach and water lots," said Colquhoun. "I've heard him rated at over half a million. That's a great deal of money to make in a few years."

"He'll need it all before the senatorial campaign is through," interjected DeKay. "He's spending money like water, from all I hear."

"S-s-s-s-h!" murmured Yarrow in a low tone. "Here he comes now—and with Sophia Lucretia."

It was indeed the successful political boss. Master of many men, he was now the willing slave of one woman. The dashing Miss Leigh acknowledged smilingly the salutations of the group of men, most of whom she knew, and led the way to a corner table, whence she could command the crowded room. This table had evidently been reserved for Senator Burke and his companion, for the ubiquitous Pierre was already standing beside it as they approached, waiting to turn down the chairs. Pierre presented the bill of fare, and while the new arrivals were scanning it, they were the chief topic for those in the room.

"Miss Leigh is looking very handsome tonight," observed Yarrow.

"Dem fine looking woman," replied DeKay. "Seems like Burke was the favorite now," remarked Colquhoun. "For a time Tower and Burke were neck and neck."

"But now, begad, Burke has taken the pole, and Tower is left at the post," responded DeKay.

"I hear she has quite a fortune in her own right—an orphan, only child, and that sort of thing," remarked Colquhoun.

"So I have heard," agreed DeKay.

Desroches was silent, but the ends of his white moustaches went up, and a subtle smile curled round his lips. Probably the banker knew, better than any one there, who kept Sophia Lucretia's bank account replenished.

"Well, gentlemen," said Colquhoun, looking at his watch, "I'm sorry, but I must be going. Eugene, if you'll punch the governor there, I'll say good-night to him first, according to his rank."

The governor, in effect, had yielded to the too potent goblet of liqueurs. His head had fallen forward on the table, and he was wrapped in profound if audible slumber.

"I think," said Yarrow, mildly shaking the executive shoulder, "it must have been the green chartreuse—it is not well to take it wholesale. Wake up, governor! Wake up!" And Yarrow hummed gaily:

"Green-eyed Chartreuse!
The green, not the yellow!
The taste and the smell—oh,
Who could refuse?"

With a snort, and the exclamation "What's that?" several times repeated, his excellency opened his slightly bleary eyes, and returned to earth.

The party paid their score, and as they were escorted to the door by the bowing Pierre, DeKay said to Colquhoun:

"Just look at that couple, will you! Did you ever see a pair so much wrapped up in each other?"

"Never did, colonel," replied Colquhoun, "it looks to me as if they had everything all fixed. I shouldn't be surprised if their engagement was announced any day. Good-night, governor. You'll see the governor home, will you, Eugene? That's right. Good-night."

And what were the couple saying whose deep interest in one another had excited the comment of the group of men? They were not talking of love—at least not at that moment. Later they did. But both the beginning and the ending of their conversation would have greatly amazed the group that had just gone.

It was Sophia Lucretia who was speaking, and her lowered tone and earnestness showed that she was deeply interested:

"And you really mean to tell me, senator," she was saying, "that old Wyley sent you and offered to make a compromise? Why, who would ever have dreamed of such a thing?"

"Yes," replied Burke. "It was only yesterday that he sent me a note which Colonel Quirk brought, with a request for an answer by private hand. In his note Wyley said that if I would withdraw my opposition to him for the long term, he would permit me to name the next governor of the State. He to permit! He to permit me!" closed Burke with a sneer.

"Yes, indeed! The idea!" echoed Sophia Lucretia indignantly. "And what did you reply?"

"I wrote him," replied Burke slowly, as if relishing the taste of his own words, "I wrote him in this language, namely, as follows: 'Senator Wyley is hereby informed that Senator Burke intends to name the governor without Senator Wyley's permission.'"

"Gracious me! Wasn't that cutting? And what did he say to that?" asked Sophia Lucretia.

"Nothing," replied Burke, laughing harshly. "What could he? There was nothing for him to say."

For some moments the lady was silent, overcome with her own importance. She was, she said to herself, probably the only person in the city, outside of the two concerned, who knew of this fateful message.

"Your confidence is complimentary, but don't you think, senator, that you're unwise in confiding secrets to a woman?" she asked archly. "And particularly state secrets?"

Burke gazed at her with fire in his eyes. "I would confide anything to you," he exclaimed in passionate tones. "Besides," he added with an unintentional but ludicrous anticlimax, "besides, you need not keep this a secret. I have no objection to letting everybody know it."

It was not a tactful speech, and the lady frowned. But Burke was no courtier, and his training as fireman and politician had not made him a polished squire of dames. So Sophia Lucretia unbent her arched eyebrows, and smiled again. The poor man didn't mean to be ungallant when he offered to share with the whole city an exclusive confidence between the two of them. Like many other self-made men she knew, his bluntness and brusqueness were often due to a lacking sense of the fitness of words—and sometimes of the fitness of actions, for she had found some self-made men so lacking in tact as to be almost obtuse at times.

This turned out to be one of the times. Burke sat for some moments gazing at her with gloating eyes. Probably even he would not have deliberately selected a crowded restaurant as the place for what he was about to say. Certainly she would not, even if she had expected it. But how it came about Burke never knew. On the heels of his confidence about the Wyley letter he found himself telling her the deepest secrets of his senatorial fight—telling her of his early struggles—telling her of his high ambitions—pleading passionately for her love—and in a final burst asking, nay, demanding, that she should be his wife.

When Sophia Lucretia at last understood him—for although a slow talker, his words tonight came like a whirlwind—she burst into a peal of laughter. Wounded and angered, he regarded her sternly in silence for a time; at last he saw by her inability to stop and by a rush of tears that she was hysterical. His stern face relaxed, and he mercifully gave her time to recover herself. When she had partly regained her self-control, she sobbed:

"Oh, senator, have you never guessed?"

"Guessed?" he said, in wonder. "Guessed what? What do you mean?"

"Oh, I ought to have told you—I know I ought," she moaned. "Mammy told me to tell you. But I was afraid."

"Tell me what?" he asked, uneasily. "What is it that I ought to have been told?"

"Oh, senator," she stammered, "you must forgive me—but I can't marry you—I'm married already."

"What! Married!" ejaculated Burke, "married already! And to whom, in God's name?"

"To General Salem," whimpered the lady, "we were married only last week, and it's a profound secret." And once more the tears began to flow.

Burke was deprived of his power of speech. Married to Salem! That this beautiful creature, whom he passionately loved, should have wedded that bald-headed old wreck and rone—this to him was as incomprehensible as it was bitter.

Long afterwards he remembered it, as one does a dream—he remembered rising, assisting Sophia Lucretia with her wrap, escorting her to the door, putting her in her carriage, and then walking home through the fog, trying to understand the blow—and failing.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Copyright 1908 by Jerome A. Hart.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Mrs. Roosevelt and Miss Ethel Roosevelt have been decorated by the Sultan of Turkey with the jewels of the order Nichani Shefakat, which has for its motto "pity, mercy, kindness."

John D. Rockefeller is writing a sketch of his life which, as he will state in his introduction to the published work, is designed "to shed light on matters that have been somewhat discussed."

Dr. Osler and Winston Spencer Churchill are competitors for the lord rectorship of Edinburgh University. Dr. Osler will admit that his years are against him. In other respects he seems the more appropriate candidate.

Miss Amy Bernardy, instructor in Italian at Smith College, and for the past three months special investigator for the Italian government, sailed for Naples a few days ago to make a report on the condition of Italian women and children in the North Atlantic division of the United States for the Board of Immigration of the Foreign Office of the Italian government at Rome.

The Dalai Lama, who fled from Lhasa on the approach of the British expedition in 1904, is offered many inducements by the Chinese government to return to his country. The Lama has, so far, preferred to remain in China, and his presence has proved a very serious burden upon the officials of the districts he has visited, as he is followed by an enormous number of retainers and baggage animals, for whom the local magistrates have to find supplies.

Walton Van Loon, a venerable resident of Catskill, New York, publishes a pamphlet undertaking to prove that his ancestor, Piet Van Loon, discovered the Hudson River in 1581, or eleven years before Henry Hudson's voyage in the Holf Moon—Piet Van Loon having entered the continent by way of the St. Lawrence and thence proceeding southward into the Hudson River Valley. It is not probable, however, that the river's name will ever be changed from Hudson to Van Loon.

Mrs. Susa Young Gates of Utah, who was chosen alternate delegate to the Republican National Convention, is the daughter of the late Brigham Young, and is one of the most prominent adherents of the Mormon Church, of which her father was the head. She has made her mark in her own State as an educator, editor, and author. She founded a successful journal and has written numerous biographies of leading Mormons, as well as fiction, etc. She is a member of the National Council of Women and of the National Press Club, and is connected with a number of important organizations in Utah.

Sidney Kidman, the Australian cattle king, is now in London on his first visit. He probably owns more of the British empire than any one other man. At fourteen he was earning $2.50 a week and now he has 49,216 square miles of land standing in his name. He began life as a teamster and gradually worked his way up until he was the largest horse dealer and cattle owner in Australia. He owns 100,000 cattle and 10,000 horses, but is not quite satisfied with his business methods. He says that he is coming to this country to try and get a job on a ranch as a cowboy so that he can find out the inside of the American methods.

William II succeeded to the throne of Prussia and thus became third German emperor twenty years ago last month. His father had only reigned ninety-nine days, while William I had been Kaiser for a little over seventeen years, though of course his reign as King of Prussia had lasted from 1861 to 1888, a period of twenty-seven years. The reign of William II as German Kaiser has now, therefore, been longer than that of his grandfather by nearly three years, and on the whole it has been a very momentous and memorable one. But throughout his reign—which is longer than the average—Germany has never once drawn the sword in Europe itself.

J. Pierpont Morgan had the title doctor of laws conferred upon him recently by Yale. Mr. Morgan comes from a family of eminent scholars, poets, theologians, jurists and statesmen. He is the great-great-grandson of the Rev. James Pierpont, but for whom, perhaps, there might not have been any Yale College to make the great history which is the legitimate boast of that institution. The Yale trustees found ample justification in a present representative of this distinguished family, to which the institution owed so much, to show that they had grateful memories. "The degree is awarded with special reference to Mr. Morgan's public service to the nation in mitigating the panic of last fall."

The story that Germany's leading tenor, Heinrich Knote, visited Jean de Reszke in Paris disguised as a peddler, is, after all, true. Jean and his wife were simply amazed at the beauty of his voice, its volume, its dramatic power, and Jean exclaimed: "Sir, I engage you at once for the Opéra. You have gold in your throat." Knote writes to a friend: "The incident was really most droll, and it cost me a terrific effort to play my rôle to the end without laughing. Jean de Reszke aroused my enthusiasm to such a degree that I have decided to follow the capital advice of Mr. X and go, next winter, to study with him, together with my young wife, who has a beautiful soprano voice. He has most kindly consented to take us, and we look forward to that time eagerly."

A GREAT NOVEL.

A New Writer Takes Front Rank with a First Work.

Where is the literary toper who does not know the thrill with which the new novel, picked at haphazard from the shelf, is recognized as a gem of the first water? How pitifully few are such discoveries in the tawdry monotony of quite modern fiction; with what delight we surrender to the charm of the opening pages and abandon ourselves to the luxury of a feast so unforeseen. To the mind's eye the very covers of that book henceforth have a certain radiance as though exhaling exultation over the good things within. What a pity it is, by the way, that books have no outward and visible sign of such inward and spiritual grace as they may possess, something beyond the tawdry touch of advertiser and critic and that shall be as accurately legible at a glance as a good heart and a clean life. Perhaps indeed they have some such aura had we ourselves had the grace to see it, which unfortunately we have not.

A literary diamond such as the above may suggest—was at least intended to suggest—has just come out of the clay. It is by a new writer, Edward C. Booth, and its name is "The Post Girl." It is a story of infinite grace and tenderness and withal of such humor that we hardly know whether to give the palm to the inimitable portraiture of a Yorkshire village with its aggregated ignorances, meannesses, and nobilities, or to the irresistible characters that are drawn in such number and with such exuberant vitality. Two at least of these characters are distinct creations, hot from the forge of the imagination. There is his reverence, the vicar, and there was never his like before upon the printed page. And there is Pam, the post girl, more bewitching than Barrie's Bahhie, greater as a woman and as a sweetheart more adorable. If Pam is only a post girl, we know that his reverence has it right when he says that her unknown origin is certainly not that of a Yorkshire village. She has "the instincts of the bath. Tuhs herself like an officer of dragoons. Doesn't dress herself first and then put a polish on her face with a piece of soapy flannel, taking care to rub the lather well in. Ha! that's our Ullhrig way. Leave the neck for Sunday, and rub the soap well in."

A visitor comes to Ullhrig in the form of Maurice Wynne, a young musician who wants rest for his great composition. The first time he tries his piano, late at night, he hears a movement in the shrubbery and, jumping through the open window, he is just in time to catch Pam:

"To tell the truth," he said, "I hardly know what to think myself, so it's no use saying I do. I thought perhaps . . . poultry, first of all; but your voice doesn't sound a bit like poultry, and I'm sure you don't look it. And I don't think it was apples, either, though you'd got the right gate for those. Besides, apples don't count . . . that way. I've gathered them myself at this time of night before now, and been hauled back over the wall by a leg. We don't think anything of that."

"It was the piano," she explained, unsteadily, and for a moment the steadfast flames in her eyes flickered under irrelative lids.

"The piano?" the spawper raised his voice in amused interrogation. "Heavens! You weren't going to try to take that away, were you? It took ten of us and a hottle of whisky to get it in, and threepence to Barclay's boy for sitting on the gate and telling us by clockwork, 'Ye'll get stuck wi' her yet before ye're done,' and half a crown to the man that let the truss down upon my toes. Surely you weren't thinking of tackling an enterprise like that single-handed, were you?"

For the first time he drew forth the faint foreglimmering of what the girl should be like in smiles; a sudden illuminated softening of the features, as when warm sunlight melts marble, that spread and passed in a moment.

"I was listening," she said.

The vicar is Pam's staunch champion and friend, and she certainly needs a champion in a censorious village quick to resent a superiority of which Pam's every footstep and every word is eloquent. Here are some of his reverence's functions as drawn by himself:

"The vicar, you see," he explained, as his shoulders dipped into the dusk over the threshold, "is his own servant in addition to being everybody else's. He acts as a chastening object lesson to our Ullhrig pride. We don't go out to service at Ullhrig. We scrub floors, we scour front door steps, we wash clothes, we clean sinks, we empty slops, we peel potatoes—but, thank God, we are not servants. Only his reverence is a servant. Whee anything goes wrong with our nonconformist inwards—run, Mary, and pull his reverence's bell. That's what his reverence is for. Don't trouble the doctor first of all. Let's see what his reverence says. The doctor will go back and enter the visit in a book, and charge you for it. If anything goes worse—run, Mary, again. Never mind your apron—he won't notice. Pull the hell harder this time, and let's have a prayer out of his reverence to make sure—with a little Latin in it. The pain's spreading. For we're all of us reverences in chapel, each more reverend than his neighbor; but in sick-beds we're very humble sinners indeed, who only want to get better so that we may be ready and willing to go when the Lord sees fit to take us. Or if it's a little legal advice you're in need of—why pay six and eightpence to an articulated solicitor? Go and knock up his reverence. He's the man for you—and send him a turnip for his next harvest festival."

Every eligible male and many who are ineligible within a radius of ten miles are in constant prostration at Pam's feet. There is poor Ginger, for instance, who buys a penny stamp and lays it ingratiatingly at her feet as a preliminary to a proposal and is persuaded to take it after all, but forgets to pay for it:

No supplicant that ever supplicated of Pam was too mean or too poor, or too ridiculous or too presuming, in her eyes, ever to be treated with the slightest breath of contumely. When poor Humpty from Ganlon, whose legs were so twisted that he couldn't tell his right from his left for certain without a little time to think, asked a Ganlon lass to have him, she screamed derision at him like a hungry macaw, and ran out at once to spread the news so that it should overtake him (heing but a slow walker, though he walked his hest upon this occasion) before he had time to get home. When he asked Pam to have him, Pam could have cried over him for pity, to think that because God had seen fit to spoil a man in the making like this, human love was to be denied him; and though of course she said "No," she said it so beautifully that Humpty could hardly see his way home for the proud tears of feeling himself a man in spite of all; and if, after that, there had been any particular thing in the whole world that twisted legs could have done for a girl, that thing would have been done for Pam so long as Humpty was alive to do it.

We are not going to tell the story in a sketch intended only to sample a few of its merits. Pam, of course, falls in love with Maurice—bless her heart—but Maurice already has a sort of traditional fiancée to whom his obligations are mainly those of duty. There is a mislaid letter that would have released him and so have saved poor Pam the misery of leaving her home. It would have saved Maurice too from that walk upon the cliff and the fall over the cliff upon the sands that were so soon to be covered by a tumultuous sea. But Pam fleeing from Maurice and Maurice fleeing from Pam were hrought together by that strange and accurate law that, heing too stupid to understand otherwise, we call chance. Maurice is too injured by his fall to move and so Pam descends a cliff of which the re-ascend is impossible:

"I want to ask you" . . . he said. "You know why I was going back. The other letter was . . . from her. She asks me to set her free. If there hadn't been . . . been any other in the case, and I'd asked you . . . to marry me . . . would you have married me?"

And in an instant the girl's arms were about the man's neck, and her lips upon his lips, as though they would have sucked the poor remaining life out of his body into her own, and given it an abiding habitation.

"Oh . . . my love, my love," the girl wept, through the wet lips that clung to him. "What do I care about dying now? I would rather a thousand times die to learn that you had loved me . . . than live and never know it."

And she poured her streams of warm tears over his face, and wrapped him about with her arms, and hound her body upon him. And in the fusion of that mighty love the laboring mills of the man's mind burst free.

"Why did you come down to me?" he cried. "For God's sake, get away while you have the chance. I'm not worth saving now . . . I'm only the fragments of a man . . . But you."

For all answer she bound him in tighter bondage of protection, as though she were trying to steep their souls so deep in the transport of love that they should not know death or its agony.

"If you leave me" . . . he urged upon her, "and get up the cliff . . . there may still be time."

But she clung to him.

"For my sake, then," he implored her. "You are my last hope of safety. For the love of me, try and do it. We must not die like this."

And for his sake, with her old desperate hopes falsely revived, she redoubled kisses of farewell upon his mouth and lips, and threw herself passionately against the relentless wet walls of their prison. Now this side and now that. Now trying to kick out steps with her feet; now trying to tear them with her hands, she wrought at this frantic enterprise, and the man watched her, and knew it to be of no avail. And then, at his urging, she cried out—lifted her own white face to the sullen black face of the cliff, and cried—cried with words, and rent the air with inarticulate screams. But all was one. Like a thick blanket the cliff, so close upon her, muffled her mouth and smothered the voice that issued from her.

"It's no use . . . no use," she said, and came back to the man. . . .

"It will not be long . . . now," she said, very quietly.

Then she went to the man and laced her arms about him—

"Promise me" . . . she said, "you will not let go of me . . . when the time comes."

"I promise you," the man answered, very huskily.

"May I call you . . . Maurice . . . before we die?" she asked, and her voice faltered at this.

"Please" . . . he begged her; and she said "Maurice" a time or two.

"Hold me . . . Maurice," she said. "I may . . . turn toward . . . at the end . . . but hold me. Don't let me go. I want to die with you."

"I will hold you," he answered, and their arms tightened.

And again the sea thundered, and this time something swirled about their feet. Then they asked forgiveness of each other for inasmuch as they had offended, and received the sacrament of each other's pardon.

And there heing nothing else to do, they stood and waited for death.

They did not die. We may at least say that much while refusing to divulge what did happen to them.

Mr. Booth must write more. "The Post Girl" is not a mere fitful flash. It is mature and it is supremely good.

"The Post Girl," by Edward C. Booth. Published by the Century Company, New York; $1.50.

"He draws from real life." "Artist?" "No; dentist."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

CURRENT VERSE.

The Foremost Scholar.

Who is the scholar-leader? What is he
Whose learning shows the unlearned hest to live?

There he, who—finger hard on lip—
Pore lifelong, with laborious glass,
On Nature's enigmatic heart,
Dissecting shrewdly, part by part,
To store her secrets in their scrip,
Heedless of human love and art,
Or how the passionate generations pass.

Others there are who, moved no less
To explore that mute obscure abyss,
Make of their probing minds a prism
Whose many-sided radiance
Illumes with their own hearts the heart of nature,
Touching her darkest feature
With revelation for man's happiness,
And with love's couched lance
Wresting from Science a new Humanism.

Such is the scholar liberal: for him,
Not knowledge which ignores the Whole,
But knowledge grafted in the soul
Is scholarship; to esteem
His calling justly is to see
That culture is proficient sympathy.

For all that issues beautiful
From dim retort and crucible,
And makes our modern day to seem
Arabian night or opiate dream:
Genii, that on the wireless air
Transport within imagined waves
The cosmic Echo from her caves
To work their will, or from the stars
Expound the mysteries of Mars,
Or in earth's rotting shale prepare
The alchemy of radium—
All powers, articulate or dumb,
That scholars probe and sages scan,
Are meaningless except to man—
To urge his peace, to ease his pain,
And from his mind's domain
To exorcise the lurking Caliban.

To exorcise! Not in the Middle Age,
With Faust's redemption, did the devils cease
To lure great doctors to their tutelage,
Whereby to lengthen their protracted lease
Of the lewd rhabble's gaping ignorance:
Still, with unceasing metamorphosis,
The monsters hatch and hiss
And, breeding, grow
To honored stature in the imperiled state,
Where the true scholar still is Prospero,
Making their misshaped natures dance
Attendance on his master vision: So
To humble monsters to the use of men,
The foremost scholar is first citizen.
—Percy H. Mackaye, in "Ode to the Universities."

A Broken Friendship.

If this be friendship—that one broken hour
(O fragile link in all the loving years!)
Can cast our hearts asunder, Time appears
Frightful indeed, since all our vaunted power,
Wherewith we built high hope like some strong tower,
Crumbles to dust, where earthly passion leers.
What of our laughter? Aye, what of our tears
That should have only watered Friendship's flower!

If this be friendship, I can never know
Again the magic faith I boasted of;
One deed of mine has crushed the House of Love,
And every stone to its old place must go,
Shame be to our endurance if we killed
The sinews that can help us to rebuild.
—Charles Hansen Towne, in Harper's Bazar.

President Cleveland was the hero of at least one novel, for it was well understood from whom the late Paul Leicester Ford drew the character of "The Honorable Peter Stirling."

Eye - comfort is often the result of knowing where to get your glasses.

HIRSCH & KAISER

218 Post St.

Opticians

JUST A BOOK STORE

Robertson's

1539 Van Ness Ave.

NEAR PINE

"Next to the White House"

We Rent New Typewriters

L. & M. ALEXANDER & CO.

MOVED TO

Phone Douglas 2157

512 Market St.

Coast Dealers

L. C. SMITH (Visible)

1908 Model.

Ball Bearing

TYPEWRITERS

The wonderful new talking machine without a horn

The top closes over the record, shutting out all the noise of operation—the pure music of the record comes from a mahogany sound reflector. Elegantly made of solid mahogany, combined with record cabinet for 150 records. The finest talking machine made. Send for booklet.

Price $200

Sherman, Clay & Co.

Steinway Pianos—Victor Talking Machines
KEARNY AND SUTTER, S. F.
Broadway at 13th Oakland 1635 Van Ness Ave.
San Francisco

PALL MALL
FAMOUS CIGARETTES

No other cigarette approaches them in popularity among men of cultured tastes

A Shilling in London

A Quarter Here

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

By Sidney G. P. Coryn.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe at the age of eighty-one has seen a vision and dreamed a dream. It will be remembered that many years ago there came to this lovely old woman that strange light that "never was on land or sea," when she wrote:

Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord;
He is trampling out the vintage where the grapes of wrath are stored;
He hath loosed the fearful lightnings of his terrible swift sword;
His truth is marching on.

Now comes the prediction of better things and she says that the other night in a "sudden awakening" she saw a mighty and combined effort to drive out want and misery from the world, and it succeeded:

There seemed to be a new, a wondrous, ever-permeating light, the glory of which I can not attempt to put in human words—the light of the new-born hope and sympathy blazing. The source of this light was born of human endeavor, the immortal purpose of countless thousands of men and women who were equally doing their part in the world-wide battle with evil.

There may be no room in our philosophy for illumination like this, but there is at least room for admiration of the life-long optimism from which such beautiful foreshadowings come.

The Great Amulet, by Maud Diver. Published by the John Lane Company, New York; $1.50.

Those who read "Captain Desmond" will have great expectations of the present story, which is practically a supplement to the first. On the whole they will not be disappointed, although some of the earlier blemishes are intensified. We have another fine picture of life on the Indian frontier with its perpetual struggle against the terrible warriors of the north and the no less terrible cholera. Indeed, there are not more than two or three other writers of Indian army life who are so saturated with their subject or who can present it with such force and attractiveness.

But in character painting we are never allowed to forget that the author is a woman and a woman who is curiously unable to take the man's standpoint except in matters of mere animal courage. Her men have a fatal penchant for an idolatrous brutality toward their wives. Captain Desmond's treatment of his girl wife was abominable, although Captain Desmond was the chevalier sans peur et sans reproche. And now we have another of the same ilk, Captain Lenox, who marries a charming girl of whom he knows little and on the wedding night practically drives her from him because he learns from a careless letter that she was once engaged to another man. Why Quita should ever wish to return to her husband, why she should eventually do so, is only explicable on the ground that she wants not so much a husband as a lord and master. The average man will look upon both Captain Desmond and upon Captain Lenox with a very hearty contempt for their treatment of their wives in spite of their fine courage, their instincts of refinement and of honor, and their unswerving sense of duty.

But in spite of this defect, a defect that keeps the male reader in a simmer of indignation, "The Great Amulet" is a notable novel and one of the very few that leave a deep impression upon the mind. We are well content to form our own opinion of the characters—and it is rarely the author's opinion—and to revel in the intimate descriptions of Indian life and of the garrisons that hold the ever-drawn sword upon the frontier. The author never writes anything that is dull, never anything that is superfluous. She is always enthusiastic and she can always hold the attention from beginning to end.

Federal Usurpation, by Franklin Pierce. Published by D. Appleton & Co., New York; $1.50.

Under the author's trenchant handling, Federal usurpation becomes something more than one of those vague generalities reserved for academic discussion. The whole machinery of modern government in America is relentlessly dissected, and if we are forced to the conclusion that democratic institutions are in a fair way to become no more than pious opinions and ebbing ideals, we may lay the blame upon the facts, because we can find no fault with the logic.

It is indeed in his presentation of facts that the author finds his strength. When he tells us that law-making in the House of Representatives is now as carefully hidden from popular gaze as was the action of the Council of Venice in the Middle Ages, he asks very pertinently if one citizen in a hundred thousand ever heard of Mr. De Armond's bill conferring upon the President of the United States the right to remove from office, without charges and without a hearing, any one or all of the twenty-nine United States Circuit Court judges and the eighty-two judges of the United States District Courts. Dealing with earlier history in his first chapter, he goes on to show how a centralized authority, often a one-man authority, has steadily invaded the domestic life of the people, replacing democracy by autocracy and turning the eyes of the nation toward a central power that begins by fortifying itself "through executive action . . . and through judicial interpretation and construction of law," as President Roosevelt said in 1906, and ends by acting entirely without warrant and despotically. We have chapters on "Executive Usurpation," on "Paternalism and Imperialism," on "Congressional Usurpation," on "Treaty Power and State Rights," all of them rich in concrete illustration, all of them disquieting in their indication of a tendency already mischievous and that must result, if unchecked, in the destruction of State government. We have, in fact, a sketch of a rapidly progressing movement toward the extinction of representative institutions in the United States, and even of the pretense of them, and the substitution of a government by executive autocracy and by the chairmen of standing committees in secret session.

The author has written a book of over four hundred pages, filled with positive and precise detail, lucidly arranged and with an admirable and judicial avoidance of exaggeration or rancor. As a survey of the broad features and tendencies of government at this particular juncture it has no parallel.

The Standard of Usage in English, by Professor Thomas R. Lounsbury. Published by Harper & Brothers, New York; $1.50.

Perhaps this book should hardly be called a protest against the grammarian, but it does at least stimulate a feeling of rebellion against that much overrated citizen, a feeling that may well be fostered by those who deplore the wicked waste of time in our public schools. "As soon," says John Forster, "as grammar is printed in any language it begins to go." Flexibility is destroyed, ease gives way to restraint, while the constant fear of grammatical censure shackles expression and distorts meaning. It is the grammarian who defiles grammar, and he does it all too often under the guidance of his own ignorant predilections and then adds insult to injury by arraigning the supposed lapses of the great masters of language. We are told very truly that if we followed the grammarian wherever he would lead us we should find ourselves tongue tied in the presence of our simplest necessities.

For an indication of the true guide to correct speech in the common and plastic usage of educated men the reader must turn to the book itself. He will find not only a thoughtful and illuminating discussion of standards of speech in general, but a consideration of a large number of examples, a consideration, it need hardly be said, that is along lines of ripe scholarship, uncontaminated by pedantry or formalism. If authority so weighty can do something to check the mania for teaching a perfectly useless grammar to defenseless children and for overloading their minds with rubbish to the exclusion of real learning, Professor Lounsbury's service will be philanthropic as well as grammatical.

Stuart's Cavalry in the Gettysburg Campaign, by John S. Mosby. Published by Moffat, Yard & Co., New York; $2.

There can be no question of the welcome that this book will receive. It has not only the personal interest attaching to a direct story by a redoubtable leader and fighter, but it brings valuable testimony to bear upon disputed passages in the history of the war. In his preface Colonel Mosby points out that the statements in the two reports of the commanding general in regard to his orders and the management of the cavalry in the Gettysburg campaign have been generally accepted without question, and the criticisms of his staff officers and biographers on the conduct of the chief of cavalry have assumed them to be true. The author has now done what the critics have never done. He has compared and analyzed the two reports and finds it impossible to reconcile their differences. He tries to explain how the name of General Lee is signed to papers that do so much injustice "as well to himself as to General Stuart," and he thinks that the time has come to apply the test of reason to the Gettysburg legend, "to discover who is responsible for bringing upon us the Dies irae!—dies illa!"

It is needless to say that the story is well told. We have a sketch of the battle of Chancellorsville and of the cavalry combat which began the Gettysburg campaign. Then follow the movements of both armies preceding the battle with the result that much new light is thrown upon the whole operation. The story is lucidly told and with great attention to detail. As an historical document and as a personal record it can not fail to arouse keen interest.

The Bond, by Neith Boyce. Published by Duffield & Co., New York; $1.50.

This is a story of artist life in New York. Basil and Teresa Ransome, husband and wife, are young artists who alternate between lover-like raptures and chilly misunderstandings for which there is no apparent reason. Teresa, in spite of her neurotic aberrations, is distinctly charming, but Basil is a young man for whose further acquaintance we do not yearn. Marriage is confessedly an experiment. Teresa has kept her bachelor rooms "in case we don't get on," and indeed there seems very little chance of permanent partnership until the baby comes, and even then this strange couple quarrel bewilderingly about nothing and finally make peace from pure exhaustion. The story is well written and it is interesting, but its conception of marriage is just about as low as it can well be.

The Art of Singing, by Sir Charles Santley. Published by the Macmillan Company, New York; $1.25.

It would be hard to imagine a book more valuable to the vocal aspirant. Sir Charles Santley, in this effort to be of use to laudable youthful ambition, is able to draw upon rich experience, and he does it with infinite sympathy and discrimination. Beginning with a chapter of "Advice to Young People Desirous of Joining the Vocal Profession," he goes on to consider the necessary qualifications, the choice of a master, the essentials of successful study, the need of obedience and of discipline, and all those other factors that make a bridge between talent and success. The author has a happy conversational style, an obvious wish to be helpful, and he touches upon just those personal points that are most apt to be overlooked.

"Home Gymnastics, According to the Ling System," by Dr. Anders Wide, has been published by the Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York. Price, 50 cents.

The Cooking School

Best Chefs and Cooks say that the secret of their success is the careful use of

LEA & PERRINS SAUCE

THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

It gives a delightfully appetizing flavor to all Soups, Gravies and Stews, and is the ideal sauce for Steaks, Roast Meats, Fish, Salads and Rarebits.

An Excellent Appetizer.

JOHN DUNCAN'S SONS, Agents, N. Y.

GOODYEAR "HIPPO" HOSE

The best and strongest Garden Hose. Guaranteed to stand 700 lbs. pressure.

Try it and be convinced.

GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY

R. H. PEASE, President
587, 589, 591 Market St. at Second St.
SAN FRANCISCO

C. A. Murdock & Co.

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS

The Argonaut a sample of our output

68 FREMONT STREET

Phone Kearny 1020

By Daylight and
All Rail to Yosemite Valley
via
Southern Pacific

By way of Merced in connection with the Yosemite Valley R. R.
Only ten hours' ride to El Portal (the edge of the Valley) and three and one-half hours thence to the Heart of the Valley.

Low side trip rates to Wawona and the Mariposa grove of gigantic sequoias.
Leave San Francisco daily 8:20 a.m.

Ask any of our agents for details.

TICKET OFFICES
884 Market Street
Market Street Ferry Depot
14 Powell Street

LITERARY NOTES.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

The Macmillan Company announces Mr. Robert Herrick's new novel, "Together," for publication early in July. It is a story of the lives of married people—for Mr. Herrick reverses the old romantic formula, and his book begins instead of ends with a wedding. It is the first novel he has written since "The Memoirs of an American Citizen," published about three years ago.

Commencement week at all the colleges seems to have given a new impetus to the sale of John Corbin's new book, "Which College for the Boy." This book contains a frank and interesting study of the spirit, organization, characteristics, and genius of various typical American colleges.

Professor Vernon L. Kellogg of Stanford University, author of "American Insects," "Darwinism Today," etc., has in press with Henry Holt & Co., to be issued in their American Nature series, a volume entitled "Insect Stories." Although the author calls these "strange, true stories of insect life," their truth is not likely to be questioned even by the Great Denouncer. They are primarily for young folks, but are also open to grown-up nature-lovers.

Messrs. Henry Holt & Co. find themselves called upon to reprint at once six books, all dealing with American economics or history, they being, respectively, the fifth printing of Hall's "Immigration and Its Effects Upon the United States"; third printing of the first volume of Gordy's "A Political History of the United States"; and the second of the second volume, which brings the subject down to 1828; the ninth printing of "An Introduction to Economics," by Professor Henry R. Seager of Columbia, and the fourth printing of both Doyle's "Virginia, Maryland, and the Carolinas," and the two volumes of his "Puritan Colonies."

The Houghton-Mifflin Company have just completed arrangements with Professor James H. Moffatt for the publication of "A Dictionary of the Proper Names in Shakespeare's Works." The book is the result of experience as a teacher and editor of Shakespeare. Mr. Moffatt is a graduate of Princeton, and for the last eight years has been professor of English literature at the Central High School of Philadelphia. The plan of the dictionary is very simple, but thorough. All the proper names in Shakespeare's works, whether dramatis personæ or scenes or names used as illustrations, will be included in alphabetical order. This book will appeal to every student of Shakespeare, for in it can be found the only complete references to all places in which Shakespeare refers to the names directly or indirectly. Mr. Moffatt is now at work on the book in Oxford and London.

New Publications.

"Side-Stepping with Shorty" by Sewell Ford, has much to recommend it in the way of a steady flow of racy fun, not to mention Sadie. It is published by Mitchell Kennerley, New York; $1.50.

Those who like army stories and sketches of fort life should read "The Captain's Wife," by John Lloyd, and published by Mitchell Kennerley, New York. The scene is in Arizona and the period is that of Geronimo's activities.

A pleasing variation from the average school book is a volume of "Japanese Folk Stories and Fairy Tales," by Mary F. Nixon-Roulet, published by the American Book Company, New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago. Price, 40 cents.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston and New York, have published "A Scallop Shell of Quiet," by Caroline Hazard, being forty Lenzen sonnets, an interlude of fifteen poems, and eight full sonnets, forming a cycle of grief over the death of a friend. Price, $1.

"The Life of Alice Freeman Parker," by George Herbert Palmer, is sure of a welcome from those familiar with that distinguished woman's work at Wellesley College and as dean of the woman's department of the University of Chicago. It is published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston. Price, $1.50.

No recommendation is needed for anything written by Lillian Whiting. Her little volume, "Lilies of Eternal Peace," is a study of immortality composed in the vein of delicate spirituality that the author has made so distinctly her own. It is published by Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York. Price, 75 cents and $1.50.

C. M. Weed, author of "Wild Flower Families," published by the J. B. Lippincott Company, New York, explains in his preface that in this book he has attempted to bring into easily available form a discussion of a large proportion of the more widely distributed herbaceous wild flowers so as to make their study both indoors and out of real interest to teacher and pupils. Price, $1.50.

The Rev. Samuel T. Carter has done a service to the cause of religion by his book, "Wanted—A Theology." It is an indictment of the theology of the ordinary conventional spirit of today, the theology that calls itself orthodox and that is "one of the saddest, darkest, cruelest products of the human mind in all the ages." It is refreshing to find such breadth, vigor, and toleration issued in a form that ought to carry it into wide circulation. The book is published by the Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York, and the price is 75 cents.

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.

The musical extravaganza, "It Happened in Nordland," is doing a big business at the Princess Theatre. Principals, orchestra, and chorus vie with each other in their efforts to excel, and the performance from first to last is attended with hearty applause and laughter. Julius Steger, William Burress, May Boley, Arthur Cunningham, Frank Farrington, Sarah Edwards, John Romano, Virginia Foltz, Zoe Barnett, Christina Nielsen, Robert Z. Leonard, Charles E. Couture, and George B. Field constitute a strong cast. The handsome and dashing girl chorus and the orchestra which Sellé Simonson so ably conducts contribute to the success of the entertainment. Although in its second week, "It Happened in Nordland" is packing the house at every performance, and the management has therefore concluded to extend its run throughout next week. Great preparations are being made for the next production, which will be Audran's famous musical play, "The Bridal Trap," in which Evelyn Frances Kellogg, a prima donna of Eastern renown, will make her first appearance at this theatre. The concluding portion of the programme will be the Lambs' Club gambol musical satire on the Hammerstein-Conreid grand opera war, "The Song Birds," which will be revived in compliance with a largely expressed wish with William Burress as Oscar Hammerstein.

The bill at the Orpheum for next week speaks for itself. W. H. Thompson, the distinguished American actor, who will enter vaudeville for a short season, will make his first appearance at this theatre and present a one-act play by Clay M. Greene, entitled "For Love's Sweet Sake," which New York dramatic writers pronounced the most artistic playlet ever given in vaudeville. "For Love's Sweet Sake" tells a story of a father's love for his son with a heart interest and artistic delicacy. Katie Barry, who has been identified with numerous Broadway musical comedies, will make her first appearance in this city. Miss Barry will sing several of her most popular character songs. The La Vine Cimarron Trio will present an act by Frank Gardner, entitled "Imagination." Fred Singer, who will make his San Francisco debut, will introduce himself in a musical novelty called "The Violin Maker of Cremona," in which he impersonates the title rôle. While gazing at his last and greatest work he falls asleep and sees and hears the violin virtuosos of the future—Paganini, Joachim, Sarasate, Remenyi, Kubelik, etc. When he opens his eyes he baptizes his masterpiece with a grand eloquence, passing away with the last chord. Tom Barry and Madge Hughes will introduce a novel act called "A Story of the Street," in which Mr. Barry plays a tough young man with an abnormally swelled head because he has made an unexpected hit in cheap melodrama.

"The Great Divide" will be played for another week by Henry Miller at the Van Ness Theatre. During the Miller season there will be no Sunday night performances. Matinees will be given Saturdays only. For the second of the four productions of his present season at the Van Ness Theatre, Mr. Miller will present Percy Mackaye's comedy, entitled "Mater." This new three-act play will be interesting because of its background of modern American politics and the fact that Mr. Miller will be introduced in a novel character—that of a high-class United States senator, who nevertheless believes in practical politics. The title rôle of the mother, a highly original character, will be originated by Isabel Irving, always a great San Francisco favorite. It will be staged Monday, July 20.

White Whittlesey's popularity in San Francisco is shown by the advance demand for seats next week at the New Alcazar, where he commences a season as stock star, supported by the regular company and with Bessie Barriscale as his leading woman. He has selected "His Grace De Grammont," by Clyde Fitch, for his opening play because of the exceptional opportunities it affords him of displaying those romantically heroic qualities which made him such a favorite when the Alcazar was on O'Farrell Street.

De Grammont was a French political exile at the licentious court of Charles II of England, where his graces of manner and person made him beloved of women, while men were jealous of his popularity and feared his swordsmanship. Of all the fair Englishwomen who sighed for his favor there was but one who captured it—Miss Hamilton—upon whom the king had cast his covetous eye when the gallant Frenchman appeared. The incidents that follows are made up of De Grammont's devices to outwit his majesty in the love race, and culminate in his arrest for drawing his sword against the royal profligate. He is in a fair way of losing his head when the women of the court intercede in his behalf, and he is allowed to depart with his happy sweetheart.

STATEMENT

OF THE

Condition and Value of the Assets and Liabilities

OF

The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society

(A CORPORATION)

and where said assets are situated

DATED JUNE 30, 1908

ASSETS

1—Bonds of the United States, of the District of Columbia, of the State of California and Municipalities thereof, the actual value of which is.....	$ 9,103,633.43
2—Cash in United States Gold and Silver Coin and Checks.....	2,598,899.89
3—Miscellaneous Bonds, the actual value of which is.....	4,348,828.50
They are:
"San Francisco and North Pacific Railway Company 5 per cent Bonds" ($75,000.00), "Southern Pacific Branch Railway Company of California 6 per cent Bonds" ($98,000.00), "Northern California Railway Company 5 per cent Bonds" ($83,000.00), "Los Angeles Pacific Railway Company of California Refunding 5 per cent Bonds" ($400,000.00), "Los Angeles Railway Company of California 5 per cent Bonds" ($86,000.00), "Market Street Cable Railway Company 6 per cent Bonds" ($130,000.00), "Market Street Railway Company First Consolidated Mortgage 5 per cent Bonds" ($753,000.00), "Powell Street Railway Company 6 per cent Bonds" ($185,000.00), "The Omnibus Cable Company 6 per cent Bonds" ($167,000.00), "Sutter Street Railway Company 5 per cent Bonds" ($150,000.00), "Presidio and Ferries Railroad Company 6 per cent Bonds" ($14,000.00), "Ferries and Cliff House Railway Company 6 per cent Bonds" ($6,000.00), "The Merchants' Exchange 7 per cent Bonds" ($1,500,000.00), "San Francisco Gas and Electric Company 4½ per cent Bonds" ($491,000.00).
4—Promissory Notes and the debts thereby secured (including due and uncollected interest, $185,668.65).....	36,429,048.66
The condition of said Promissory Notes and debts is as follows: They are all existing contracts, owned by said Corporation, and are payable to it at its office, which is situated at the corner of Market, McAllister, and Jones Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and the payment thereof is secured by First Mortgages on Real Estate within this State. Said Promissory Notes are kept and held by said Corporation at its said office, which is its principal place of business, and said Notes and debts are there situated.
5—Contingent Fund—Interest accrued on Bonds but not yet payable.....	89,144.13
6—Promissory Notes and the debts thereby secured, the actual value of which is.....	394,529.00
The condition of said Promissory Notes and debts is as follows: They are all existing Contracts, owned by said Corporation, and are payable to it at its office, which is situated as aforesaid, and the payment thereof is secured by pledge and hypothecation of Bonds of Railroad and Quasi-public Corporations and other securities.
7—(a) Real Estate situated in the City and County of San Francisco ($139,986.15), and in the Counties of Santa Clara ($28,443.95), Alameda ($30,131.94), and San Mateo ($2,231.57), this State, the actual value of which is.....	200,793.64
(b)—The Land and Building in which said Corporation keeps its said office, the actual value of which is.....	801,347.90
The condition of said Real Estate is that it belongs to said Corporation, and part of it is productive.
TOTAL ASSETS.....	$53,966,225.15

All the foregoing assets are situated within the State of California.

LIABILITIES

1—Said Corporation owes Deposits amounting to and the actual value of which is.....	$50,379,393.65
The condition of said Deposits is that they are payable only out of said Assets and are fully secured thereby.
2—Accrued Interest—Interest on Bonds accrued and not yet payable.....	89,144.13
3—Reserve Fund, Actual Value.....	3,497,687.37
TOTAL LIABILITIES.....	$53,966,225.15

THE HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY,
By James R. Kelly, President.

THE HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY,
By E. J. Tobin, Acting Secretary.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
City and County of San Francisco, ss.

James R. Kelly and E. J. Tobin, being each duly sworn, each for himself, says: That the said James R. Kelly is President and that said E. J. Tobin is Acting Secretary of The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, the Corporation above mentioned, and that the foregoing statement is true.

James R. Kelly, President.

E. J. Tobin, Acting Secretary.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 2d day of July, 1908.

Chas. T. Stanley, Notary Public
In and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

HENRY MILLER AT THE VAN NESS.

By Josephine Hart Phelps.

Henry Miller, whom we have learned to regard as our personal property here in San Francisco, has returned to us again, and once again, as in the former Henry Miller seasons, is more lavish with time and plays than other Eastern managers.

"The Great Divide" is an excellent choice with which to inaugurate the present season. The free, untrammelled life of the great West is the most picturesque and spectacular feature in the America—or our America, at least—of today. Americans are proud of the fascination it has for aliens, and, indeed, recognize its attraction for themselves, and read avidly all the inspired fiction that is devoted to it.

It is a life that is viewed through different-colored glasses, according to the sex, the point of view, and the experiences of the writer. William Vaughn Moody has recognized the dramatic possibilities that lie in the peril to women in those lonely desert wastes of Arizona when she is delivered helpless to the power of man in his bestial moments.

The theme is not a lovely one, but it is powerfully presented, without coarseness, and, indeed, with a certain Walt Whitman-like effect of poetry, since the rude, primitive manhood in the brute and would-be violator of maidenhood is evolved by the woman's call upon his strength, his protection, and, in effect, his thivalry.

The play begins lightly enough; a mere preparation, as it transpires, for the more serious scenes that are to follow. A group of young people in an Arizonian ranch-house chatter, and flirt a little, or make love, at any rate, and then some exigency arises that compels the heroine, Ruth Jordan, to pass the night alone on guard over the properties at the ranch-house.

We have been kept in something of a state of bewilderment over Henry Miller's leading lady for this season. By turns it has been asserted that it would be Edith Wynne Mathison, Isabel Irving, and Edyth Oliver, with occasional rumors of Margaret Anglin thrown in to muddle us still further. Now we know. It is Edyth Oliver, a figure unknown in our world as yet, but very promising as to future possibilities. Miss Oliver is a young, tall, slight, black-haired woman who radiates neither beauty nor presence. She was not particularly impressive in the introductory scenes of the first act. Lightness and frivolity are not to be her métier. She is an emotional actress, however, of unquestionable ability. Greater power will come later, greater force, greater richness and depth of personality, greater ability to arrest and hold the imagination. But Miss Oliver has made a particularly good start on that pleasant path.

In "The Great Divide"—which is a title with a symbolical meaning—she represents a New England girl with Down East ideals strangely conflicting with the altered standards evolved by her Western experiences. Henry Miller evidently recognized in Miss Oliver's outer woman a type that was particularly suited to the representation of such a character. Her rich black hair struck the discordant note that showed Ruth Jordan, in her exuberant joy in the Western life, as something of an apostate to the New England training and conscience that yet looked out from the eyes of the narrow face, and was expressed in the straight lines of the slender figure. The author makes a very good character contrast between Polly Jordan, who is perfectly represented by Laura Hope Crews as a bright chatterbox, one of those typical American girls who go through life as joyous spectators, always sipping the foam of existence, perpetually throwing off sparkling generalizations, but never taken seriously by anybody, and never really living.

So Polly shakes the dust of the Western life from her dainty shoes, and goes back East, leaving her cousin in her perilous solitude, tasting the joy of the perfect night, and reveling in her fearlessness, unknowing of the experiences that await her, and of the coming of the long and racking conflict that is to rage in her New England soul.

The subsequent scene is what has made "The Great Divide" famous. It is splendidly worked up. The sudden stillness after the chatter and noise of the departure, the unconcern of the slender, black-haired girl going quietly and matter-of-factly about her preparations for the night, and then—the signal. Five minutes later frightful possibilities stare Ruth Jordan in the face, and she has courageously, as it were, seized the hare blade of a threatening sword, and cut into the flesh and bone of her destiny.

It passes quickly and thrillingly, this scene—the great one—of the play. There is no attempt at heroics; the voices are low and tense, the language concise.

The audience were given no opportunity to spoil the scene by a noisy welcome to their favorite, who contrived in the shades of the darkened ranch-room, to evade recognition until the climax was past. Then it came with thunderous acclamation, and Henry Miller, with a couple of stone more to his credit since last we saw him, gasped out an unpremeditated, uncalculated word or two of thanks, and backed into his part again.

The play contains only three acts; short sbrift, one would think, in which to tell such a story. But luckily the author has not made a fool of himself at the last, as authors are prone to do. He has not combed and carried, and pruned and polished the wild western exuberances of his hero. His aim has been to picture, dramatically, the ascendancy, within the human heart, of primitive influences, and at the same time to show how the purity of true womanhood may work its influence on a manly man who has departed from the better standards of civilization.

So in the second act, in place of seeing the hero capering in a drawing-room, we find him in a sort of king-like eminence near the crest of the Cordilleras, receiving royally a stream of gold from a claim that has acquired importance since he has a wife at whose feet he can pour its treasures.

In this act there is comparatively little action, but the beholder experiences vivid pleasure from the series of dramatic pictures it affords. It is staged with fine realism, and yet with poetic beauty—"the rim of the world" I think it was that Polly, re-transplanted to the West, called it—and it seemed a fitting place for the wild story of Ruth and Stephen Ghent to work its way toward a conclusion.

The scene, in the sunset glow, with the mingling of the rich colors, the yellow lights and violet shadows one sees over the pictures of the Mexican mesas, blending into a magic mosaic of colors over the rocky wastes, was a strange mingling of gorgeousness and dreariness. And against this background of strange and vivid beauty the figures of the man and woman stood out strongly, gaining dignity from the unpeopled background.

They were the primitive man and woman, this rude hut their primitive home, and this rough table and stools hewn from the living rock their primitive furniture.

Edyth Oliver was strikingly effective to the eye in this scene. Her costumes all through were thoroughly in keeping with the locale, and, while avoiding theatricalism, bore the note of color, or the local characteristic, that reached the eye and the imagination simultaneously.

Ruth's abjuration of her husband's moneyed support made it necessary that her dress should remain poor and plain, but, even with the russet skirt, and the plain, untrimmed waist, she was a picture, and a picture in harmony with those Mexican Cordilleras when she staggered under the pass, the basket encumbered, black crêpe shawl, with its vivid dashes of embroidery, and her rich dark hair, making a strong contrast against the white of her waist, while the straight lines of her figure and drapery completed the Indian-suggestion afforded by the baskets and the partly woven Navajo blanket.

Mr. Miller's portrait of the desperado of the first act was finely graduated into that of the big-hearted miner of the second, who had come "to the great divide" to repossess himself of the lost treasure of his manliness under the saving influence of a pure woman's appeal.

The actor has carefully heeded the lines laid down by the dramatist, and in the closing act, at the New England home of the Jordans, Stephen Ghent is still the rude, unfinished, unpolished product of the great distances which are his natural home.

In this last act Mrs. Whiffen appears as a gentle New England matron, and in a few scenes charged with emotion demonstrated anew her facility as an actress, and found in the welcome she received how strong a hold she has on the San Francisco public, which loves her particularly for her many portraits of delightful old ladies, and for her vein of sunny humor.

Neither the second nor the third act approach the first, either in intensity of dramatic tension or in action. But the story is both interesting and logically worked out, that interference and long-sustained conflict of Ruth Ghent's conscience being a feature of the play which strikes one as both probable and dramatically effective.

It strikes me, by the way, that Ruth did not quite play fair. They say that women do not pay their gambling debts. Ruth played a bold game to retain her honor, and it certainly took time and a good many duns from her opponent before she paid him. It was, when one comes to think of it, quite an inspiration on Mr. Moody's part to make her play the eminently woman-like part of making the final payment only when she had evidence that the debt was to be forgiven.

Mr. Miller has not departed from his former rule of always bringing a good company with him. Besides the players already mentioned, Messrs. Wyngate and Gotthold appeared to advantage, and the minor rôles were graphically and realistically presented. Miss Crews became an immense favorite with the audience at once, being a sparkling and pretty little actress and very intelligent in her assumption of the character of that light-hearted philosopher, Polly Jordan.

Hammerstein's new Philadelphia opera-house will be opened in November, and the season of twenty weeks seems already an assured success, as subscriptions for seats and boxes are pouring in.

Percy Mackaye, the author of the new comedy, "Mater," to be staged by Henry Miller at the Van Ness Theatre, has arrived here to assist in the presentation of his work.

The Henry Miller Associate Players have started for this city and will be a feature of the Miller season at the Van Ness Theatre in "The Servant in the House."

William Vaughn Moody, the author of "The Great Divide," is writing another play for Henry Miller. It is to be called "The Faith Healer."

AMUSEMENTS

ORPHEUM ELLIS STREET NEAR FILLMORE
Absolutely Class A Theatre Building

Week beginning this Sunday afternoon
Matinee Every Day

ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE

WILLIAM H. THOMPSON and Company, in Clay M. Greene's one-act play, "For Love's Sweet Sake"; KATIE BARRY; LA VINE CIMARON TRIO; FRED SINGER; BARKY and HUGHES; Last Week A NIGHT ON A HOUSEBOAT; PATTY FRANK TROUPE; New Orpheum Motion Pictures; Last Week JEAN MARCEL'S ART STUDIES.

Evening prices, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box seats, $1. Matinee prices (except Sundays and holidays), 10c, 25c, 50c. Phone, WEST 6000.

PRINCESS THEATRE Ellis Street near Fillmore
S. LOVERICH, Manager
Class "A" Theatre Phone West 663

Matinee Saturday and Sunday
THIS WEEK AND NEXT
Low Fields's Musical Extravaganza Success

IT HAPPENED IN NORDLAND
JULIUS STEGER
MAY BOLEY, WILLIAM BURRESS, and all the Princess favorites in the cast.

Next—"THE BRIDAL TRAP," introducing Evelyn Frances Kellogg, and "THE SONG BIRDS," with Wm. Burress as Hammerstein.

Prices—Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Matinees (except Sundays and holidays), 25c and 50c.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Tel. West 6036
BELASCO & HAYER, Owners and Managers
Corner Sutter and Steiner Sts. Absolute Class "A" Bldg.

Seventieth Week of the Alcazar Stock Co. Commencing MONDAY EVENING, JULY 13

MR. WHITE WHITTLESEY
Supported by the Alcazar Players, in Clyde Fitch's Great Costume Drama

HIS GRACE DE GRAMMONT
A Splendid Scenic Production
Prices: Evenings, 25c to $1. Matinees, Saturday and Sunday, 25c to 50c

Monday, July 20—MR. WHITTLESEY in "IF I WERE KING," E. H. Sothern's Great Success.

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove St.
Phone Market 500

MONDAY, JULY 13
Second Week of

The Henry Miller Season
Last Six Nights (Matinee Saturday) of

THE GREAT DIVIDE
By William Vaughn Moody

Monday, July 20—The new comedy, "Mater."

Clubbing List.

By special arrangement with the publishers, and by concessions in price on both sides, we are enabled to make the following offer, open to all subscribers direct to this office. Subscribers in renewing subscriptions to Eastern periodicals will please mention the date of expiration in order to avoid mistakes:

American Magazine and Argonaut.....	$4.25
Argosy and Argonaut.....	4.40
Atlantic Monthly and Argonaut.....	6.70
Blackwood's Magazine and Argonaut...	6.20
Century and Argonaut.....	7.00
Commoner and Argonaut.....	4.10
Cosmopolitan and Argonaut.....	4.35
Current Literature and Argonaut.....	5.75
English Illustrated Magazine and Argonaut	4.70
Forum and Argonaut.....	6.00
Harper's Bazaar and Argonaut.....	4.35
Harper's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.70
Harper's Weekly and Argonaut.....	6.70
House Beautiful and Argonaut.....	4.75
International Magazine and Argonaut...	4.50
Judge and Argonaut.....	7.50
Leslie's Weekly and Argonaut.....	6.70
Life and Argonaut.....	7.75
Lippincott's Magazine and Argonaut....	5.25
Littell's Living Age and Argonaut.....	9.00
Mexican Herald and Argonaut.....	10.50
Munsey's Magazine and Argonaut.....	4.40
Nineteenth Century and Argonaut.....	7.25
North American Review and Argonaut..	8.00
Out West and Argonaut.....	5.25
Overland Monthly and Argonaut.....	4.50
Political Science Quarterly and Argonaut	4.90
Puck and Argonaut.....	7.50
Review of Reviews and Argonaut.....	5.00
Scribner's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.25
Smart Set and Argonaut.....	5.25
St. Nicholas and Argonaut.....	6.00
Sunset and Argonaut.....	4.25
Theatre Magazine and Argonaut.....	5.75
Thrice-a-Week New York World (Democratic) and Argonaut.....	4.25
Weekly New York Tribune (Republican) and Argonaut	4.50
Weekly New York Tribune, Weekly New York World, and Argonaut.....	5.25

GREEK THEATRE BERKELEY CAMPUS

Under the auspices of the Musical and Dramatic Committee of the University of California

SATURDAY EVENING, JULY 11th

the famous

THIRD UNITED STATES ARTILLERY BAND

in third

POPULAR CONCERT

Admission 25 cents 8 to 10 p. m.

BACK EAST

EXCURSIONS

ROUND TRIP RATES

Atchison, Kas.....	$60.00	Kansas City, Mo.....	$60.00	Omaha, Neb.....	$60.00
Baltimore, Md.....	107.50	Leavenworth, Kas..	60.00	Pacific Junction, Ia.	60.00
Boston, Mass.....	110.50	Memphis, Tenn.....	67.50	Philadelphia, Pa.....	108.50
Chicago, Ill.....	72.50	Minneapolis, Minn..	73.50	St. Joseph, Mo.....	60.00
Council Bluffs, Ia..	60.00	New Orleans, La....	67.50	St. Louis, Mo.....	67.50
Duluth, Minn.....	79.50	New York, N. Y.....	108.50	St. Paul, Minn.....	73.50
Houston, Tex.....	60.00			Washington, D. C..	107.50

On Sale July 21-22-23-28-29. August 17-18-24-25. September 15-16.

Colorado Springs, Colo., $55.00; Denver, Colo., $55.00; Pueblo, Colo., $55.00.
On Sale September 14-15.

Montreal, Que., $108.50; Toronto, Canada, $94.40.

On Sale July 21-22-23-28-29, August 17-18-24-25.

Let me make your sleeping-car reservation early and explain details.

F. W. PRINCE, C. T. A., 673 Market Street

J. J. WARNER, 1112 Broadway, Oakland

VANITY FAIR.

The eternal question of the international and aristocratic marriage still vexes the soul of the democratic journalist. That he can not understand it is simply a confession that he can not understand the feminine mind, and no one will be disposed to blame him harshly for that. But why does he not how to the majesty of his own ignorance and keep an easy if an unremunerative silence rather than relieve his mental flatulence by ill-tempered reproaches in which charges of greed and folly occupy an undignified position? For example, Mr. Russell in the current Broadway Magazine—among, it must be conceded, much that is admirable—inflicts upon us once more those tiresome statistics of the amount of money that these marriages have cost the country. He gives no names, but he conveys his information by means of two columns, the first being headed "Title Purchased" and the second "Cash Price Paid." That the part played by American women in the public life of Europe also has its cash value to America does not occur to the writer.

Now this treatment of American women seems to be wantonly offensive. It is a harsh term to use, but the cacoëthes scribendi is responsible for more than offensiveness. By what superhuman power does Mr. Russell know the motives actuating these women? What conceivable right has he to assume that their objects were unwomanly or that they sold themselves in exchange for a title? Is he aware of the forcible and biblical term that is applied to women that harter themselves for money, and does he not hesitate before such an assertion of those of whom he knows nothing? What warrant has he for assuming that the countesses and the duchesses sold themselves for titles unless he will also suggest that American women who have married foreign commoners, in fact all women who marry wealth or position, have been similarly and unworthily actuated? Would he suggest such a thing of Mrs. Chamberlain? Does he believe that Lady Randolph Churchill sold herself for a title? It seems hardly likely that an American woman with intellect enough and character enough to become one of the great forces in British imperial politics should have done so from such a degraded base. Moreover, why did she surrender that title to become Mrs. Cornwallis West? And if Lady Churchill be acquitted, why should the princesses and the others be found guilty? Since when has it been tolerable to hear American women described as hawking themselves in the public market with price tickets around their necks as in an Oriental slave girl market—women of good repute, who have done nothing to deserve more censure than the rest of us, and all without a scintilla of evidence unless it be a mere purient suspicion? Possibly, and indeed probably, there are some American girls, like girls all over the world, who are attracted by a title, by a novelty, by some fresh variety of tinsel, by pageantry and color, but if they are half so responsive to a real title as the average man is to a sham one their case must indeed be parlous.

For these reasons it may be repeated that such strictures are unchivalrous, wantonly offensive, and of a nature to be repudiated not only by those who are jealous of the honor of American women, but also by those who have rudimentary ideas of courtesy and of fair play to all. There is an old adage of a startling philosophic truth and that is never too stale for repetition. It is hani soit qui mal y pense.

That there are two sides to this question never occurs to the modern writer, who forgets to be chivalrous in his efforts to be smart and who ends by being only vulgar and brutal. Very opportunely the New York World points out that "of the 336 cases of American girls who have married foreign noblemen not more than twenty mercenary unions can be reckoned." Now mercenary marriages are always troublous. Titled or untitled, they can never be anything else. If these marriages are happy then they were not mercenary. If they were mercenary then they could not be happy. It is not to the titled marriage list that we must look for wretched partnerships, but to the domestic and untitled list. During the last ten years there have been 16,388 cases of divorce in Chicago alone, 4706 in Philadelphia, 5231 in New York, and 3746 in Boston.

Evidence from the women themselves would of course be tainted and partial, but the temptation to quote the Countess von Waldersee, the wife of the man who led the allied forces in China, is a strong one. The countess was Miss Mary Esther Lee of New York, and she is quoted by the World as saying:

European men understand women better than American men do. They study to please their wives and render them a thousand little attentions that American husbands never dream of paying after marriage.

Count von Waldersee was accustomed before our marriage to spend his Sundays in the usual German way; in entertaining and being entertained and in transacting business affairs. But immediately after our marriage, and without my making the request, he adopted a rule of keeping Sunday in strict observance of church rules, in deference to my wishes. He invariably accompanied me to church in the morning, spent his afternoons walking with me, as we did during our betrothal, and on the evenings would sit in the library reading or writing, if he did not go with me to the little mission service I have held for years on Sunday evenings for young girls of the working class. He was just as much my lover after thirty years of marriage as upon our wedding day.

But why slay the slain? To condemn en bloc several hundred women on the ground that they have married titled husbands is just as intelligent as to censure other women who have married men with red hair or freckles. Suppose we refrain from all kinds of collective mud-throwing and especially at women and still more especially at American women.

With every strawberry season comes a discussion of the way in which that glorious dainty should be eaten. Now just as it is a fact that there is only one true religion, subscribed to by all wise men, so it is the fact that there is only one way to eat strawberries without manifesting gross ingratitude for a fruit said by Dr. Boteler to be the best, not that God could make, but that He did actually make. Let us expound.

Strawberries must upon no account be divorced from sugar on the one side and cream upon the other. Let the sugar be of the finest kind. The finer it is the more of it will adhere, while as for the cream, let us have none of it unless it be of that sturdy consistency that will sustain an upright spoon. The strawberries should be served with the hull, so that there may be no evasiveness or reluctance to be grasped.

Now take a strawberry firmly and unflinchingly by the hull. Whether it should be dipped first in the cream or first in the sugar is a point upon which many great and good men have differed. A larger quantity of cream will subsequently adhere if it go first into the sugar, the smooth surface of the berry showing a lamentable lack of affinity for the equally smooth cream. It is a debatable point and must be left to individual experiment. An admirable plan is first to bite a very small piece from the apex or upper extremity of the strawberry, thus providing a moist surface for the better retention of the dressing. Then again the strawberry, unless it be very small, may be eaten in layers or planes, each freshly exposed surface becoming suitable for fresh immersion in the sugar and the cream. But above all avoid the heresy of mere sprinkling. The rite should be one of immersion or as nearly immersion as the bottoms of the cream and sugar dishes will permit.

It must be remembered that the strawberry has religious associations and should therefore be handled with gravity and deliberation, not lightly nor frivolously. Sydney Smith, writing to Mrs. Baring, asked "What is real piety? What is true attachment to the church?" And he said that the answer was plain: "By sending strawberries to a clergyman." With all due reverence for the cloth, we think that piety requires no such self-sacrifice. The consumption of the strawberry should be a matter for personal attention. It is one of those duties that should not be delegated.

Then again we find that Shakespeare refers to the strawberry as growing in the garden of the Bishop of Ely as though an episcopal soil were its proper place:

My Lord of Ely when I was last in Holborn,
I saw good strawberries in your garden there.

Alas, there are no strawberries in Holborn now, but the ecclesiastical taste is as discriminating as ever it was.

But many and varied are the literary appearances of the strawberry. There is, for example, the old courtship rhyme:

Bonny lass, canny lass, wilt a he mine?
Thou' se neither wash dishes, nor sarrah the swine;
Thou sall sit on a cushion and sew a fine seam,
And thou sall eat strawberries, sugar, and cream.

But why talk any more about it. Let us rather have a dish of strawberries and cream.

American women were the bright and particular stars of the royal enclosure at Ascot last month. Among the first to whom the king spoke was Mrs. Waldorf Astor, whose appearance allows no one to forget that she was one of the "lovely Langhorne girls" of Virginia. Then there was Mrs. George R. Drexel, whose hat was estimated to measure three feet across. Mrs. John Jacob Astor wore a costume that was admired by those who admire that sort of thing. It was of pale pink with two broad bands of gray roses painted across the skirt. Mrs. Porter Palmer wore a directoire costume of white satin and a hat resplendent with ostrich feathers.

The usual Ascot ball was omitted for the simple reason that the king can not afford it, nor does he hesitate to say so. Windsor Castle is said to cost him $5000 a day when he is in residence there, and that he intends to pass a couple of summer months on one of the royal yachts may be explained on the ground that the yachts are maintained by the government, while the residences are not. The financial situation, so far as concerns the king, is quite a serious one, but there will be no alleviation so long as the insatiable maw of the navy is perpetually open for every unprotected sixpence. Royal entertainments are naturally the first to go under the stress of enforced economy, and while this may be very sad for the smart set it will hardly impinge very deeply upon the conscience of the average taxpayer, whose share in the merry-making is confined strictly to paying the piper.

W. & J. SLOANE

SUMMER FURNITURE

Old Hickory,
Willow and
Prairie Grass
Furniture for Verandas and Summer Homes

Van Ness and Sutter

92d

HALF-YEARLY REPORT

OF THE

San Francisco Savings Union

SWORN STATEMENT

OF THE

CONDITION AND VALUE OF ITS

ASSETS AND LIABILITIES

AT THE CLOSE OF BUSINESS

JUNE 30, 1908

ASSETS

Loans secured by first lien on real estate wholly within the State of California.....	$14,334,938.97
Loans secured by pledge and hypothecation of approved bonds and stocks.....	1,212,974.40
Bonds of the municipalities and school districts of the State of California, railroad bonds, and bonds and stocks of local corporations, the value of which is.....	9,458,019.95
Bank Premises.....	150,000.00
Other Real Estate in the State of California.....	581,696.09
Furniture and Fixtures.....	2,000.00
Cash in Vault and in Bank.....	1,769,220.66
Total Assets.....	$27,508,850.07

LIABILITIES

Due Depositors.....	$25,321,986.66
Capital paid up.....	1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Fund.....	1,183,632.43
General Tax Account, Balance Undischursed.....	3,230.98
Total Liabilities.....	$27,508,850.07

SAN FRANCISCO, July 1, 1908.

(Signed) E. B. POND, President.
(Signed) LOVELL WHITE, Cashier.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
City and County of San Francisco. } ss.

We do solemnly swear that we have (and each of us has) a personal knowledge of the matters contained in the foregoing report, and that every allegation, statement, matter, and thing therein contained is true, to the best of our knowledge and belief.

(Signed) E. B. POND,
(Signed) LOVELL WHITE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 1st day of July, 1908.
[SEAL] (Signed) FRANK L. OWEN,
Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

For the half year ending June 30, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rates per annum of four and one-quarter (4¼) per cent on term deposits and four (4) per cent on ordinary deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Wednesday, July 1, 1908. Depositors are entitled to draw their dividends at any time during the succeeding half year. A dividend not drawn will be added to the deposit account, becomes a part thereof, and earns dividend from July 1. Money deposited at any time commences to earn dividend thirty days thereafter.

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

A woman on the train entering Grand Rapids asked the conductor how long the cars stopped at Union station. He replied: "Madam, we stop just four minutes, from two to two to two two." The woman turned to her companion and said: "I wonder if he thinks he's the whistle on the engine."

There is a son of Erin in Newton, Massachusetts, who is quite a character. He has a number of children and was asked one day how long he had been married. "Well," he said, "there's Eugene is forty, and Norah thirty-five, that makes sixty-five, and Lizzie is thirty-two, and how many do that make?"

Douglas Jerrold's genius for repartee is perhaps best shown in his most famous reply to Albert Smith, whom he disliked and frequently abused. Smith grew tired of being made the butt of the other's wit, and one day plaintively remarked: "After all, Jerrold, we row in the same boat." "Yes," came the answer, "but not with the same skulls."

Royal names for hotels are sometimes the cause of peculiar misunderstandings. An aged farmer from the home county decided to make a visit to Toronto. It was the first time he had been at a city station and when a hotel crier hurried to him with the interrogation, "King Edward?" the newcomer simply smiled as he answered: "No, sir—Thomas Cox of Eramosa."

Once Sir Henry Irving while playing "Macheth" in London was somewhat disconcerted by one of the "gallery gods." He had reached the point where Macheth orders Banquo's ghost to leave the banquet board. "Hence, horrible shadow, unreal mockery, hence!" exclaimed Irving in his most tragic tones and with a convulsive shudder sank to the ground, drawing his robe about his face. Just as Banquo withdrew, an agitated cockney voice from high up in the gallery piped out as if to reassure Irving: "It's all right now, 'Enery; 'e's gone!"

An American on a visit to London took 'hys to the city every morning, where he had business to do with an Anglo-American firm. He always sat behind the driver. On the first journey he noticed that on arriving at a certain corner the driver took out his big silver watch, dangled it to and fro a few times, and winked jovially at an individual who stood at the door of a shop. "Why do you do that," the American asked. "Well," said the driver, taking his pipe from his mouth, "that's a little joke we 'as between us, hein' as we are old friends. You see, his father was 'anged."

When Charles Dickens was in Washington he met one morning on the steps of the Capitol a young congressman from Tennessee whom the great novelist had offended by his bluntness. That morning Dickens was in great good humor. "I have," said he, "found an almost exact counterpart of Little Nell." "Little Nell who?" queried the Tennesseean. Dickens looked him over from head to foot and from foot to head before he answered, "My Little Nell." "Oh," said the Tennesseean, "I didn't know you had your daughter with you." "I am speaking of the Little Nell of my story, 'The Old Curiosity Shop,' sir," retorted Dickens, flushing. "Oh!" said the imperturbable Tennesseean, "you write novels, do you? Don't you consider that a rather trifling occupation for a grown-up man?"

A country admirer sent the following letter to Lord Beresford: "My household has been blessed with twins (a boy and girl) this morning. My wife would like to name the girl after the Princess of Wales, and I want to name the boy after you. May we do this? and can you obtain the princess's permission for us to use her names?" The admiral thought that the applicant desired to use the Christian names only, and in due course sent the princess's permission together with his own. He then forgot all about the matter until, one fine morning, he was considerably astonished at receiving another letter from the same man, to this effect: "My Lord—I thought you would like to know that Lord Charles Beresford Brown is thriving, and has cut his first tooth. Princess of Wales Brown had convulsions last week, but is now very much better."

Although woman has not yet won her fight for equal suffrage, her influence in the politics of a club exclusively for men has lately been demonstrated. A contest for the office of President in a New York club was decided by a letter written by a woman. There were two candidates for the place; one a clerk in a New York financial institution, whose young wife had been a working girl, the other a wealthy manufacturer, with a reputation among his neighbors for "closeness." The day before the election each member of the little club received a typewritten letter, signed by a woman whom all knew, which began with these words: "If what I write you is not true, it is lihel." Then she said the club should not honor its "meanest man," and related some amusing incidents to demonstrate that she was not mistaken in her estimate of the man. In closing she wrote, "what do you think of a man who has his barn painted and says to his wife: 'That's your birthday present.' If you can afford to elect that kind of a man for your president, go ahead!" The alleged "meanest man" was defeated.

For once the American had discovered something British that was better than anything they could produce "across the pond." His discovery was a fine collie dog, and he at once tried to induce its owner, an old shepherd, to sell it. "Wad ye he takin' him to America?" inquired the old Scot. "Yes, I guess so," said the Yankee. "I thocht as muckle," said the shepherd. "I couldna' pairt wi' Jock." But while they sat and chatted an English tourist came up, and to him the shepherd sold the collie for much less than the American had offered. "You told me you wouldn't sell him," said the Yankee, when the purchaser had departed. "Na," replied the Scot; "I said I couldna' pairt wi' him. Jock'll be back in a day or so, but he couldna' swim the Atlantic."

Wu Ting-Fang, the Chinese ambassador, said modestly at a dinner in Newport: "I am aware that the honors heaped upon me are due to my exalted office, not to my humhle self. It is my office, it is not I, that gains and merits your consideration. Yet this is a mortifying truth of a kind that all of us—ambassadors or no—are apt to forget. May such a truth never be recalled to our memory with the harsh shock that came to a Rhode Island farmer who won a blue ribbon at a Woonsocket stock show with a fat hog—a 1250-pound hog. 'Get my name right,' he said, excitedly, to the reporters, with their pencils and yellow paper, who crowded round him at awarding time. 'Get my name right, hoys. It's Hiram Y. Doolittle, son of the late General Augustus Anderson Doolittle of St. Joseph, who settled in Rhode Island in the year—' 'Oh, never mind all that,' the oldest reporter interrupted. 'Give us the pedigree of the hog.'"

THE MERRY MUSE.

The Missing Word.
A sporty young man from Mont.
Did the waltz on a peel of Ban,
Said he as he fell
In a mudduple—well,
It didn't quite sound like "Hos."
—Harvard Lampoon.

Freshly Defined.
An epigram is something bright.
What's said in manner nice and light.
"A man who swears aint worth a damn—"
That there's a darn good epigram.
—The Sphinx.

Household Tribulation.
The old home is not what it was long ago,
There's "litterychoor" in each room.
We're all of us talking more careful an' slow
An' wearin' expressions of gloom.
Nobody makes jokes or tell stories or sings,
'Cause laughter aint truly refined
An' we're puttin' our thoughts on superior things
Since Maw is improvin' her mind!

We're talkin' 'bout Shakespeare an' Browning an' Keats.
The biscuits look queer an' taste wrong,
But she says it's no difference what a man eats
If his intellect's healthy an' strong.
An' Paw says a "culture club's" harder to hear
Than the ten plagues of Egypt combined,
And excuses himself to go outdoors an' swear
While Maw is improving her mind.

We're trying to heed the example she sets,
Though the pace she has struck makes us pant.
She says "cawn't" and "shawn't"; but she sometimes forgets
And falls back on plain "can't" and "shan't."
This morning Paw said, as he stood at the door,
He was more than three-quarters inclined
To camp out an' never come home any more
Till Maw quit improvin' her mind!
—Washington Star.

When John Goodnow was consul-general at Shanghai, China, he was an ardent collector of antique brasses, and, having acquired a great many, was inordinately fond of showing them off, particularly a small Buddha, studded with uncut turquoises and garnets. One day he invited a number of Chinese connoisseurs to see his collection and upon their departure, Dr. Barchet, the official interpreter, overheard one of them remark in Chinese: "I heard this man Goodnow had some pretty good brasses—why, he hasn't got a piece that's more than a thousand years old!"

She—If a man loves his wife as much as she loves him, he will stop wasting his money on cigars if she asks him. He—Yes, but if his wife loves him as much as she ought to love a man who loves her enough to stop it if she asks him, she won't ask him.—Puck.

Magistrate—So you acknowledge having stolen the overcoat. Anything more to say? Prisoner—Yes, your honor. I had to have the sleeves relined.—Punch.

A. Hirschman.
For fine jewelry and silverware. 1641-1643 Van Ness Avenue.

BANKING

Security Savings Bank

316 MONTGOMERY STREET
San Francisco, Cal.
Authorized Capital - $1,000,000.00
Paid-up Capital - 500,000.00
Surplus and Undivided Profits 313,000.00

4% Interest Per Annum
Interest at the Rate of 4 per cent per annum was paid on Deposits for Six Months ending June 30, 1908

DIRECTORS
Wm. Babcock, S. L. Ahhot, O. D. Baldwin, Joseph D. Grant, E. J. McCutchen, L. F. Montague, R. H. Pease, Warren D. Clark, Jas. L. Flood, Fred W. Ray, J. A. Donohoe, Jacob Stern.

French Savings Bank

The French Savings Bank Building, 108-110 Sutter Street.
THE FRENCH-AMERICAN BANK occupies offices in the same building.

OFFICERS—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legalle, Vice-President; Leon Bocuqueraz, Vice-President; Alphonse Bouquet, Secretary.
DIRECTORS—J. E. Arigues, O. Bozio, J. A. Bergerot, John Ginty, J. M. Dupas, J. S. Godeau, N. C. Bahin, George Belaney, H. de St. Seine.

Safe Deposit Boxes for Rent

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., San Francisco
Guaranteed Capital $1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash. 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds. 1,453,983.62
Deposits June 30, 1908. 34,474,554.23
Total Assets 37,055,263.31
OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.
BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Laniel Meyer, Emil Rohte, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, E. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse, and W. S. Goodfellow.

The National Bank ROLL OF HONOR

The title "Roll of Honor National Bank" is a distinction of which any financial institution in the United States may be proud. As is well known a "Roll of Honor Bank" is one possessing surplus and profits in excess of capital. A place on the Roll of Honor can not be bought, it must be earned. This bank has for a long time been known as a "Roll of Honor Bank" among banks and bankers.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF BERKELEY UNITED STATES DEPOSITORY

A. W. NAYLOR, Pres. F. M. WILSON, Vice-Pres. F. L. NAYLOR, Cashier. E. C. MORTIMER, Asst. Cashier.

THE BERKELEY NATIONAL BANK United States Depository

Berkeley, Cal.
HOUSEHOLD AND COMMERCIAL ACCOUNTS INVITED.
DIRECTORS—George P. Baxter, Pres.; J. W. Richards, Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Bangs, Vice-Pres.; Louis Titus, Dr. Thomas Addison, A. G. Freeman, Duncan McDuffie, Perry T. Tompkins, F. L. Lipman, W. J. Hotchkiss, and Whitney Palache. P. H. ATKINSON, Cashier.

Connecticut Fire Insurance Company

Established 1850 OF HARTFORD
Total Assets $5,817,423
Surplus to Policy-Holders. 2,118,394
BENJAMIN J. SMITH
Manager Pacific Department
318 CALIFORNIA STREET
San Francisco

WESTERN ASSURANCE COMPANY

TORONTO
U. S. Assets $2,493,154
" Surplus 483,989
PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT
1004 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE
SAN FRANCISCO
J. J. KENNY, Manager W. L. W. MILLER, Assistant Manager

S. F. and North Pacific 5%
Market St. 1st Con. 5%
Cal. Central Gas and El. 5%
Sacramento El. Gas and Ry. 5%

And other HIGH GRADE BONDS

SUTRO & CO. BROKERS
412 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.
We have a Direct Wire to N. Y.

LIQUEUR PÈRES CHARTREUX THE AFTER-DINNER LIQUEUR OF REFINED TASTE

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafés.
Bätjer & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N. Y. Sole Agents for United States.

Roy C. Ward Jas. W. Dean
Jas. K. Polk Geo. E. Billings

GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.
ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE EFFECTED
312 California Street. Phone Douglas 2283
San Francisco, Cal.

John F. Forbes
Certified Public Accountant
601 KOHL BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO

Tennent's
TRADE MARK
T
Ale and Stout
from Wellpark Brewery
Glasgow, Scotland
Forbes Bros., Agents, 1926 Sutter St.

DIVIDEND NOTICES

FRENCH SAVINGS BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO, 108 Sutter Street.—For the half year ending June 30, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum on all deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Wednesday, July 1, 1908; dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from July 1, 1908. CHARLES CARPY, President.

MECHANICS' SAVINGS BANK, 143 Montgomery Street (will occupy our new building, Market and Mason Streets, July 27).—For the half year ending June 30, 1908, a dividend has been declared on all savings deposits, free of taxes, at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum, payable on and after Wednesday, July 1, 1908. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as principal from July 1, 1908. JOHN U. CALKINS, Cashier.

THE SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY, 101 Montgomery Street, corner Sutter Street.—For the half year ending June 30, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rate of 4 per cent per annum on all deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Wednesday, July 1, 1908. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from July 1, 1908. WM. A. BOSTON, Cashier.

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, 42 Montgomery Street, corner Sutter.—For half year ending June 30, 1908, a dividend has been declared on all deposits in the savings department of this bank at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum, payable on and after Wednesday, July 1, 1908; dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from July 1, 1908. B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager.

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

The Fourth of July seems to have been the incentive to an unusual number of house parties and motoring trips arranged for the week-end. Many dinners and dances of an informal nature were given at the country homes that were within sufficiently accessible distance from town, while the motoring parties made the long-distance places the objective point of their tours.

An interesting engagement recently announced is that of Miss Louise Hollister Cooper and Mr. Hewitt Davenport.

An engagement of much interest on both sides the bay is that of Miss Kathleen Thompson, daughter of Mr. James Alden Thompson of Mill Valley, to Mr. Charles Gilmour Norris, a brother of the late Frank Norris.

General and Mrs. Adna R. Chaffee have announced the engagement of their daughter Helen to Lieutenant John Howard, who is now on duty in the Philippines.

The announcement comes from San Diego of the engagement of Miss Marie Carter and Mr. John Geary of this city.

A wedding announcement of much interest is that of Mr. John B. Clem, Jr., of San Antonio, Texas, son of Colonel John B. Clem, U. S. A., and Miss Lilian Bouton.

The wedding of Miss Gertrude Josselyn and Mr. Gerald Rathbone was solemnized Tuesday at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Josselyn, on Webster Street. The ceremony was performed by Bishop William Ford Nichols, assisted by Dr. Parsons. The bridal party consisted of Miss Myra Josselyn as maid of honor, Miss Emily Wilson, Miss Margaret Newhall, Miss Elena Robinson, Miss Maud Bourn, Miss Mary Josselyn, and Miss Marjorie Josselyn as bridesmaids and Mr. Harry Poett as best man. After a short wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Rathbone will take up their residence on Broadway.

Lieutenant Cronin was recently host at a dinner given on board the U. S. S. Connecticut. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Welch, Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Sharon, Mrs. Marguerite Le Breton, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Peixotto, Miss Florence Breckenridge, and Miss Mary Keeney.

Mr. and Mrs. John C. Wilson entertained a number of friends at dinner at the Fairmont and afterward at the theatre the first night of Mrs. Fiske's "Rosmerholm." Among their guests were Mr. and Mrs. Willard Drown, Miss Lucie King, and Miss Edith Simpson.

The Misses Morrison of San Jose are entertaining a house party on the Fourth. Their guests are: Colonel John B. Clem, U. S. A., and Mrs. Clem, Miss Annie Sullivan, Lieutenant Hazzard, U. S. A., and Mrs. Hazzard, Captain T. Z. Ashburn, U. S. A., and Mrs. Ashburn, and Captain James Brady, U. S. A.

One of the most attractive out-of-town house parties given during the week-end was that of Miss Florence Hopkins, who entertained a number of friends from town and the Burlingame Club at her home in Menlo Park.

Miss Maud Bourn entertained a house party at the Bourn country home in Grass Valley over the Fourth of July.

Mrs. J. D. Safford of Springfield, Massachusetts, has announced the engagement of her daughter Leila to Mr. John Naylor Stevens of Ludlow, Massachusetts. Miss Safford is the granddaughter of the late General Ralph W. Kirkham, for many years prominent in the Pacific Fleet.

Mrs. A. D. Sharon entertained at luncheon at the Fairmont recently Mrs. Dixwell Hewitt, Miss Blanding, Miss Lily Lawler, and Miss Florence Breckenridge.

Mr. and Mrs. Clement Tobin entertained a number of friends at a luncheon at the Burlingame Club a few days ago.

Mrs. H. T. Scott entertained a company of friends at luncheon in the Hotel St. Francis Monday afternoon.

A dinner was given at The Peninsula on Sunday night by Mr. and Mrs. Z. W. Reynolds, U. S. navy. The personnel of the party was Mr. and Mrs. H. O'bear, Mr. and Mrs. Eaton, Mrs. Flower, Mrs. Hanford, Mrs. Shirley, Mrs. Cooley, Lieutenant-Commander Hubbard, Mr. Gouldby.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a résumé of movements to and from this city and Coast, and of the whereabouts of absent Californians:

Mr. and Mrs. Fisher Ames sailed last week for Tahiti.

Mr. and Mrs. William Newhall and family are in the Tahoe region for the summer.

Mrs. Walter Hohart and her children are again in their home in San Mateo.

Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Whitney are in town for a few days, the guests of Mrs. Whitney's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Landers.

Mrs. Horace Blanchard Chase, who was in town a few days last week, has returned to "Stag's Leap," the Chase country place.

Mrs. Walter Dean is in Los Angeles, the guest of Mrs. Frank Hicks.

Mrs. W. H. H. Sutherland, wife of Captain Sutherland, and her daughters, the Misses Harriet and Mary Sutherland, sailed a few days ago for Honolulu.

Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Worden have gone to the Tahoe region for a few weeks.

Miss Jessie Wright is the guest of Miss Frances Howard at the Howard home in San Mateo.

Mrs. Edgar Van Bergen has returned from a few days' visit to Palo Alto.

Mrs. Jewell, wife of Rear-Admiral Jewell, has returned from her trip through the Yosemite Valley and is at the Fairmont.

Lieutenant and Mrs. Frank B. Freyer returned to town for a day or two after their visit to Lake Tahoe and are now continuing their trip through Southern California.

Miss Angela Coyle is visiting friends in San Mateo.

Mrs. Charles Allen and Miss Allen, wife and daughter of General Allen, are at the St. Francis for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. Mark Requa have returned from New York and will spend the summer at Berkeley.

Commander Nelson has been the guest of Rear-

Admiral and Mrs. Charles Sperry at the Peninsula during the week.

Miss Agnes Tohin is planning a trip to France in the future to visit her sister, Mrs. Raoul Duval. Mrs. John H. Speck, accompanied by her mother, Mrs. M. J. Lee, have returned from a trip to British Columbia.

Dr. and Mrs. Gates, after several years in Europe, have returned to their home in San Jose.

Mr. and Mrs. Cleman Bennet have returned from a motor trip to Monterey.

Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Whitney have returned to town and reopened their house.

Miss M. A. Williams and Miss Kathleen Williams are at El Cerrito.

Mrs. John Murtagh, wife of Dr. Murtagh, U. S. A., has returned from Fort William McKinley, P. I., and is the guest of her mother, Mrs. de Barth Shorb.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph S. Coryell have returned from Lake County and will open their home at Fair Oaks.

Mr. and Mrs. Sherwood Hopkins are at Boca for the summer.

Mrs. J. Downey Harvey will leave shortly to join a party motoring through the Yosemite Valley.

Baron von Preuschen and Herr von Schubert, attachés of the diplomatic service at Washington, are visiting various points of interest along the Pacific Coast.

Mrs. Coyle and her daughters, Misses Angela and Maisie Coyle, are in San Jose.

Mrs. James Sperry is entertaining her sister, Mrs. Tilghmann of Santa Barbara, at her home in Sausalito.

Mrs. Eugene Bresse is spending a few weeks at Aetna Springs.

Mrs. W. S. Porter and Miss Florence Ives are enjoying a motor trip through the southern part of the State.

Lieutenant F. B. Thomas of the U. S. S. Kearsarge has been at Del Monte during the week.

Lieutenant Leighton Powell, Fifteenth Infantry, U. S. A., stationed at the Presidio at Monterey, has been in town a few days and is stopping at the St. Francis.

Mr. Charles H. Leavell, Mr. C. N. Bassett, Mr. M. C. Edmonds, and Mr. B. A. Neheker compose an automobile party that has just come up from El Paso to this city. They are stopping at the Hotel St. Francis.

Mr. and Mrs. George Almer Newhall and Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Knight spent last week touring through Lake County.

Mr. C. J. Cudaby and Mr. M. F. Cudaby are guest of the St. Francis.

Rear-Admiral and Mrs. W. T. Swinburne, U. S. S. Charleston, have returned from their visit to Aetna Springs.

Mr. T. Dart Walker is registered at the St. Francis.

Miss Genevieve Harvey is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Oscar Cooper.

Mr. John T. McGrew of Honolulu is at the St. Francis on his way home to the islands.

Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Rathburn are making a short stay at Santa Barbara.

Mr. Clarence Pollis is back, after two years in Paris, and has taken rooms at the St. Francis.

Mrs. Uriel Schree, wife of Rear-Admiral Schree, has returned from Denver and will be at the Fairmont a few days.

Judge L. C. McKeely of Los Angeles, his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Bartlett, and Miss Florence Bartlett, are at the St. Francis.

Mrs. Frank B. Freyer, upon the sailing of the fleet, has gone to Georgia, where she will visit Lieutenant Freyer's family.

Colonel William G. Greene of Cananea, Mexico, has left for the Orient, after a brief stay at the Hotel St. Francis. He is accompanied by his daughter, Miss Eva Greene, Miss Helen Langlow, Dr. W. T. Galbraith, and Mr. C. W. Young.

Mr. and Mrs. Homer King are taking several weeks' vacation in the northern part of the State.

Mr. Frederick W. Newell, director of the United States Reclamation Service, is at the Hotel St. Francis, where he is to meet and confer with Secretary of the Interior Garfield. Secretary Garfield has just returned from the Islands on the U. S. S. St. Louis.

Consul and Mrs. Wilbert T. Gracey, from Tsingtan, China, are the guests of Mrs. Gracey's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles G. Yale, in Oakland.

Mr. R. C. Stoddard, attorney-general of Nevada, is registered at the St. Francis with his niece.

Mr. E. M. Greenway was registered at the Plaza, New York, last week.

Mr. Samuel Platt, recently appointed U. S. Attorney-General for the District of Nevada, is at the Hotel St. Francis.

Mrs. Joseph M. Reeves of Annapolis, Maryland, granddaughter of Rear-Admiral Watkins, is the guest of Mrs. James T. Watkins at Fair Oaks.

Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Blossom and Mrs. M. W. Blossom are at the St. Francis in the course of a motor trip through the State.

Mrs. A. N. Towne is to be the guest of Mrs. Isaac Requa at her Piedmont home during the week.

Dr. A. L. Fisher and Mrs. Fisher have taken apartments at The Peninsula, San Mateo, where they will pass the summer months.

Lieutenant A. B. Thomas, Miss Ruth Thomas, and Mrs. H. E. Yarnell and her child, who were with Mrs. Charles M. Thomas at the Hotel St. Francis, have accompanied the widow of the late admiral on her journey to New York.

The Leslie D. Whiteheads have given up their house in San Mateo and will spend several months at The Peninsula.

Prominent among recent arrivals from Hawaii at the St. Francis are Mr. F. R. Harvey and Mr. W. C. McGonagle, delegates to the Democratic National Convention, and the Hon. John C. Lane, who is returning from the Republican National Convention to the Islands.

Lieutenant L. C. Farley, U. S. navy, was an over Sunday guest at The Peninsula, San Mateo.

Mr. N. P. Wheeler and son of Endeavor, Pennsylvania, and Mr. W. Merseman and three sons, from Portville, New York, are at the St. Francis.

Mrs. C. S. Sperry, wife of Admiral Sperry, who has been at The Peninsula for several months, will leave for her home in Washington in a few days.

Major-General and Mrs. William M. McCaskey, who have been visiting Tahoe, have returned to their apartments in the Hotel St. Francis.

The Hotel St. Francis has been the objective point of a great many automobile parties during the past few weeks. At present the St. Francis is entertaining the Blossoms of Pasadena, Mr. G. S. Holmes, who, with Miss Holmes and Miss Sutter, motored up from Salt Lake by way of Los Angeles; Mr. J. B. Banning, who came up from the south in his machine with Mrs. Banning, Miss Katherine Banning, Mr. J. B. Banning, Jr., Mrs. Katherine Ayer, Mr. William Banning, and Mr. Willard Salisbury.

Among recent arrivals at the Hotel Normandie are Mrs. Harris Lanning and daughter, Rev. John D. Maguire, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Henry Taylor, Coronado; Mr. and Mrs. L. S. Sherman, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore A. Bell, Mr. Max A. Mayer and family, St. Louis; Mrs. R. G. Lunt, Mr. F. McD. Lunt, Los Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Scott, Jr., and Mr. C. C. Holland, U. S. navy.

At the Greek Theatre.

John Phillip Sousa played to several hundred less people when he played in the Greek Theatre in Berkeley than crowded that magnificent auditorium last Saturday night to hear the grand patriotic concert given by the Third Artillery Band. More than 7000 auditors noisily manifested their delight through the entire programme, and left the theatre a very much pleased throng. The concert was, if anything, better than the first one of a week previous. While the selections were mostly of a patriotic order, there was just enough of the classical and popular to relieve the otherwise strict military atmosphere of the evening. All in all, the night had the brightest and most novel patriotic tone of any celebration ever given about the bay in honor of the birth of the nation.

L. A. Larsen, the Bohemian Cluh baritone, who sang "My Own United States," was given great applause. He responded to two encores, giving one verse concerning the navy of his own composition. The rendition of the wartime descriptive military fantasia, "In Amhuscade," set the thousands cheering. It was a wonderful sight as that vast crowd entered heartily into the spirit of the stirring number.

This week's programme for Saturday night, July 11, includes a solo by the well-known basso contendo, Signor Joaquin Wanrell, who sang here and abroad with the new grand opera star, Mme. Tetrazzini. He will give selections from grand opera and the engagement is considered a treat for the music lovers who have become patrons of Professor Armes's new venture.

Following is the band programme, including Tschaikowsky's "Slavé," a descriptive piece only played once before by a band on this Coast, and then by Sousa, the only organization that cared to tackle it:

March, "Caesar's Triumphant March," from "Ben Hur," Mitchell; overture, "Orpheus," Offenbach; intermezzo, "In Springtime," Brooks; descriptive, "Slavé," Tschaikowsky; "Band on Strike," Schift; operatic selections by Signor Joaquin S. Wanrell; "Patriotic Airs of Two Continents," Rollinson; "Characteristic Darkey Jubilee," Turner; xylophone solo, performed by Sergeant O'Connor; selection, "The Serenade," Herbert; "Star-Spangled Banner."

In Novello's "History of Cheap Music" it is stated that about the year 1837 it was proposed seriously to introduce the claque at the English opera-houses by way of "educating the public" and in order to teach ignorant amateurs where applause should come in.

"Peter Pan" has caught the fancy of the Parisians, as produced at the Vaudeville Theatre, with Pauline Chase as Peter.

Dustan Farnum is to star in "The Squaw Man" next season.

Hotel Colonial

Stockton above Sutter Street

American and European Plans
Special Rates to Permanents
HOWARD T. BLETHEN, Manager
Telephone, Kearny 4754

When You Leave Town
Store Your Trunks, Piano,
Household Goods, Etc.

With Us
STRINGER
STORAGE COMPANY

Storage near Fillmore

Tel. West 999

THE "NIPPON MURA"

Family Resort between Saratoga
and Los Gatos

Has increased its accommodations, main building furnace heated, beautifully furnished rooms with all modern conveniences. Open all the year. Positively exclusive. For information address

THEODORE J. MORRIS, Proprietor,
Los Gatos, Cal.

Pears'

"A cake of prevention is worth a box of cure."

Don't wait until the mischief's done before using Pears' Soap.

There's no preventive so good as Pears' Soap.

Established in 1789.

FAIRMONT
HOTEL

Superbly situated
Magnificently appointed
Perfectly served

In every respect nearest approaching the IDEAL hotel

Managed by the world famous
Palace Hotel Company

JULY

THE MATCHLESS MONTH

at
Hotel Del Monte

Golf, Motoring, Sailing
Fishing, Bathing, Riding

LOW HOTEL RATES $3.00 to $5.50 per day

American Plan

MAKE YOUR RESERVATIONS NOW

H. R. WARNER, Manager Hotel Del Monte
Or 789 Market St., San Francisco

AETNA
SPRINGS

Idealizing California country life

All roads to Aetna Springs now open to automobiles. Special automobile service from St. Helena to the Springs.

Just the place for the family. Reservations now being made. Rates and literature on application.

AETNA SPRINGS CO.
Aetna Springs, Napa County, Cal.

Hotel Collingwood

35th St., bet. 5th Ave. and Broadway
NEW YORK CITY

New fireproof hotel located in the shopping and theatre district, containing every modern device for comfort of guests.
Positively exclusive. Service à la carte.

Peyton Chemical Co.

Purchasers and Smelters of
COPPER, GOLD AND SILVER ORES, ETC.
Rooms 657 and 658 Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal.

Smelter and Works at Peyton, Contra Costa Co., Cal.; P. O., Martinez.

THE LATEST STYLES IN

Choice Woolens

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchants Tailors

108-110 Sutter St. French Bank Bldg.

Hotel St. Francis

Anticipating every demand of the most exacting nature.

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF JAMES WOODS

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"
Building, concrete, steel and marble. Located, most fashionable shopping district. 210 rooms, 135 baths. Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests. Most refined hostelry in Seattle. Absolutely fireproof. English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

SANTA CRUZ CALIFORNIA

"The World's Most Beautiful Playground"

More features in a few square miles than any other spot. The famous Big Trees, Scenic Mountains. Surf Bathing superb. Largest and most magnificent Casino and Natatorium. Climate without an equal.

"Never a Dull Moment"

Berkeley Apartments

Several sunny suites available for the summer and autumn months at Hotel Cloyne Court, Berkeley. For further particulars address J. M. PIERCE, Manager.

Byron Hot Springs

The waters cure rheumatism—the environment is perfect—the hotel comfortable and supplied with an unexcelled table. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, ground floor, James Flood Building; Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market St., or address hotel.

Hotel del Coronado

Motto: "BEST OF EVERYTHING" Most Delightful Climate on Earth American Plan. Summer rates $3.50 per day each and upward, or $21.00 per week each and upward "Good Music" and "Fine Automobile Road, Los Angeles-Riverside to Coronado." Golf, Tennis, Polo, and other outdoor sports every day in the year. New 700-foot ocean pier, for fishing. Boating and Bathing are the very best. Send for booklet to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado Beach, Cal. Or see H. F. NORCROSS, Agent, 334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles. Tel. A 6789; Main 3917. 22d Street and Broadway

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy people who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Major Hoel S. Bishop, Fifth Cavalry, of the Army War College, will proceed from Washington at the proper time and report for duty at Atascadero Ranch during the continuance of the camp.

Lieutenant-Commander M. E. Reed, when discharged from treatment at the U. S. Naval Hospital, Mare Island, will proceed to his home and be granted sick leave for two months.

Lieutenant-Commander Allan Cooke has been assigned to the submarine Grampus, Mare Island.

Captain Abraham Bickham is relieved from duty on the Philippine Division, to take effect upon the arrival of Captain Nones at Manila, and will then proceed to San Francisco and upon arrival report in person to the commanding officer at the Presidio of San Francisco for duty as quartermaster of that post.

Captain William H. Tobin, One Hundred and Forty-Sixth Coast Artillery, has been appointed acting quartermaster for the Presidio of San Francisco.

Captain George A. Nugent, who has been temporary quartermaster at the Presidio at San Francisco, is soon to be relieved from duty here and will proceed to his new station.

Leave of ten days' absence is granted Captain Robert W. Barnett, Third Infantry, to take effect upon his release from the Army and Navy Hospital, Hot Springs, Arkansas.

Captain James W. McAndrew, Third Infantry, U. S. A., Presidio of Monterey, is detailed as camp quartermaster and assistant to the chief quartermaster at the Manoeuvre Camp, American Lake, Washington.

Captain Albert E. Truby, Medical Corps, Army General Hospital, Presidio of San Francisco, will take command of the one-half of Company B, Hospital Corps, and proceed with it to Murray, Washington, reporting upon arrival to the camp commander.

Captain Ernest G. Bingham, Medical Corps, is relieved from duty at the General Hospital, Presidio of San Francisco, and will proceed to Fort Porter, New York, where he will report in person for duty.

Lieutenant G. W. S. Castle, detached from duty in connection with the Pike, is transferred to the Pacific Station, sailing on or about July 6.

First Lieutenant Morris E. Locke, First Field Artillery, has been granted two months' leave of absence, to take effect upon the completion of any duty to which he may be assigned during the manoeuvres.

Lieutenant Martin E. Metcalf, U. S. N., of the Farragut, Fourth Torpedo Flotilla, is on temporary duty at Mare Island.

First Lieutenant Ronald E. Fisher has been transferred from the Seventh Cavalry to the Fourteenth Cavalry, Presidio of San Francisco, and will be assigned to his troop.

First Lieutenant Philip W. Corbusier, Fourteenth Cavalry, Presidio of San Francisco, has, by his own request, been transferred to the Seventh Cavalry.

First Lieutenant Parker Hitt, Twenty-Second Infantry, Presidio of Monterey, is relieved from duty at his present station and transferred to Fort McDowell to report for duty.

First Lieutenant James Prentice, C. A. C., immediately after his return to Fort Stevens, Oregon, from his present leave, will proceed to Alcatraz Island for duty, relieving First Lieutenant William P. Currier, P. A. C., who will report in person to the C. O. Artillery District of San Francisco for assignment to a company and station.

Lieutenant Ernest Preacreek, U. S. N., of the Hopkins (destroyer), Special Service Squadron, is on temporary duty at Mare Island.

Lieutenant Howard McA. Snyder, Medical Corps, stationed at the General Hospital, will proceed to Fort Rosecranz for temporary duty.

Lieutenant Hiram Phillips, Medical Corps, has reported at the Presidio of San Francisco and will be assigned to duty with Company E, Hospital Corps.

Second Lieutenant John J. Burlleigh, Twenty-Second Infantry, Presidio of Monterey, will, after the departure of his regiment for Alaska, remain on duty at that post until not later than August 15, when he will stand relieved from such duty and join his regiment.

Second Lieutenant Rockwell, Third Infantry, Monterey, will, upon completing his course of instruction in the School of Musketry, proceed to Fort Lawton, Washington.

Second Lieutenant Edmund B. Inglehart, Third Infantry, U. S. A., has received his promotion without being transferred from his regiment, stationed at the Monterey Presidio.

Second Lieutenant James A. Shannon, Seventh Cavalry, upon his arrival in San Francisco will proceed to his regiment at Fort Riley, Kansas.

Ensign N. H. Goss, detached from duty in connection with the Grampus, is transferred to the Pacific Station, sailing from San Francisco on or about July 6.

Contract Surgeon George F. Campell, U. S. A., is relieved from duty in the Philippine Division and will proceed by the first available transport from Manila to San Francisco for further orders.

Contract Surgeon Charles A. Cattermole, now at San Francisco, will proceed to Manhattan, Nevada, for annulment of contract.

The Sixty-Sixth and One Hundred and Fifty-Ninth Companies, Coast Artillery Corps, Presidio of San Francisco, Cal., are relieved from duty at their present station and will proceed to Fort Barry, Cal., for station.

Past Assistant Paymaster J. F. Kutz, when discharged from treatment at the Naval Hospital, Mare Island, will report to the commandant of the Yard for duty.

A board of officers to consist of Major Gustave

W. S. Stevens, C. A. C.; Captain Solomon Avery, Jr., C. A. C., and First Lieutenant Felix W. Motlow, C. A. C., is appointed to meet at the Presidio of San Francisco June 15, 1908, to examine into the qualifications of Sergeant August Meny, One Hundred and Fifty-Eighth Company, C. A. C., for the position of ordnance sergeant.

At Out-of-Town Hotels.

Among the arrivals at Byron Hot Springs during the past week were the following: From San Francisco—Rev. P. R. Lynch, Rev. J. Harnett, Mr. Leon Blum, Mr. J. Hoyt Toler, William Fletcher McNutt, M. D., William Whelan, M. D.; from Oakland—Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Oxnard, Mr. and Mrs. George W. McNear, Miss Elizabeth McNear; from Piedmont—Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Rickard.

The following are among recent arrivals from San Francisco at Tahoe Tavern, Lake Tahoe, California: Mrs. Ed. Fowler and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Pierson, Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Michaels, Miss S. Bradshaw, Mrs. Hickman Nevins and child, Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Earl, Mr. W. W. Haas, Mrs. Charles Fee and the Misses Fee, Mr. Jerome Fee, Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Samuels, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Kirkpatrick, Dr. A. Abraham, Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Chapman, Mrs. B. M. Gunn, the Misses Gunn, Miss Beatrice Hewitt, Mrs. F. McAleer, Mr. Joseph Magnin, Mr. M. M. Loyal, Mrs. H. C. Tabrett, Miss Tahrett, Dr. Morris Herzstein, Mrs. S. I. Winslow, Miss Winslow.

Among recent arrivals at The Peninsula, San Mateo, were Mrs. Maurice J. Pope, Miss Martha Smith, Mrs. Thomas Barry, Miss Ellen Pope, Miss Estelle Schwartz, Miss Madeline O'Neil, Mr. D. C. McCabe, Miss M. A. Donnelly, Mrs. J. Pope, Mr. J. J. Swords, Mr. W. R. Johnson, Mr. Louis Jennings, Mrs. L. Gossner, Mr. Grover Magnin, Mr. J. Magnin, Miss Bernice Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Connelly, Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Koster, Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Peterson, Mr. J. B. McIntyre, Miss Sarah Kingsley, Mr. T. J. Savage, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hanley, Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Robbins, Jr., Dr. and Mrs. L. Porter, Miss H. A. Bachman, Mrs. H. A. Hare, Mr. McKee Sherrard, Miss B. H. Trewitt, Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Turner, Miss Triest, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Lombard, Mr. and Mrs. James L. Lombard, Mrs. F. Bauer, Mr. J. L. Stern, Mr. and Mrs. Stuart Gayness.

A few of the recent arrivals at the Tavern of Tamalpais were: From San Francisco—Mr. F. Winslow, Mr. and Mrs. George J. Lambly, Mr. Daniel E. Hayes, Mr. A. H. Stiegemeier, Mr. Marion F. Wright, Mr. Christine Judal, Miss Ida Goldsmith, Miss Bertha Goldsmith, Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Kroger, Miss Frances M. O'Neill, Miss May Casey, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Talbot, Mr. and Mrs. A. Busse and family, Miss Beatrice Busse, Mr. and Mrs. A. Marks, Mr. D. E. Hayes; from Mill Valley—Mrs. J. B. Stevens; from Berkeley—Mr. V. R. Stout, Mr. R. M. Clarke, Mr. A. E. Britton, Mr. and Mrs. V. W. Lothrop, Mrs. Edwin Fritwell, Miss Ruth Monroe; from Oakland—Mrs. C. Richards, Mrs. E. Putzer, Mrs. N. C. Noblett, Mr. O. Johnson, Mr. Henry Blackman, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Storm.

The following are among the guests who have recently registered at Etna Springs: From San Francisco—Mrs. L. E. Worrell, Miss Adeline D. Worrell, Mr. Vail Bakewell, Mrs. J. H. Bullock, Miss W. M. Curran, Mr. Nat Boas, Mr. H. G. Sheideman, Miss Linda B. Russ, Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Cooper, Mr. Harold J. Cooper, Mr. L. Mack, Mr. M. O. Edwards, Mr. Joseph F. Coffey, Mr. and Mrs. Haig Patigan, Mr. Bush Fennell, Mr. O. L. Towle, Mr. and Mrs. Carl H. Schmidt, Miss Gladys Schmidt, Mr. F. H. Keyes, Mr. Erle J. Osborne, Dr. and Mrs. C. F. Ford, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Crichton, Mr. Maurice Crichton, Mr. Edward T. Houghton, Mrs. A. A. Stoneberger, Miss S. M. Curran, Mr. Ben Boas, Mrs. A. L. Russ, Mr. Inyo A. Russ, Miss Dorothy J. Cooper, Mrs. Wallace Wise, Mr. E. W. Williams, Mr. M. K. Cole, Mr. Bernard Westlake Cole, Mr. L. C. Sheldon, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Fennimore, Miss Mildred Schmidt, Miss Eunice Frengler, Mr. Jaques de la Montanya, Mr. Roy A. Pratt, Dr. C. E. Pratt; from Oakland—Mr. and Mrs. Felton Taylor, Miss Margaret Taylor, Mr. Donald Tucker Macdonald, Miss Alma R. Hoffman, Mr. Cary Howard, Mr. H. W. Sharp, Mrs. Katharine Russell, Miss S. I. Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. Macdonald, Miss Mona Macdonald, Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Cornwall, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Howard, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Morgan, Mr. Edw. Bullis; from Berkeley—Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Crowell.

Isabel Irving, who will play the leading feminine rôle in "Mater" with Henry Miller at the Van Ness Theatre, arrived here last Sunday night from London in response to a cable from the actor-manager.

"The Man of the Hour" will be played here in September by many of the same cast that appeared in it last year.

DR. ROBERT E. O'CONNELL, DR. GEORGE D. O'CONNELL, DENTISTS, Hastings Building, Post Street and Grant Avenue. Tel., Douglas 2733.

Our reputation is back of every bottle we sell
Old Gilt Edge Whiskey
Rye or Bourbon

A place with the quality of Elder's or Vickery's —only that they feed the soul, while we feed the body.
YE TEA CUP INNE
1427 Bush Street, below Van Ness (upstairs)

OPEN

THE OCULARIUM

Henry Kahn & Co.
- OPTICIANS -
PHOTO SUPPLIES
SCIENTIFIC INSTRUMENTS

644-646 MARKET ST.
OPP. PALACE HOTEL
BRANCH 1309 VAN NESS AVE.
NEXT TO NEWMAN & LEVINSON

At the
Hotel Normandie
is served daily a
Table d'hote Luncheon
that meets all the requirements of the critical. In the matter of cuisine, service and refined surroundings this luncheon is unsurpassed.
Price 75 cents—S. E. cor. Sutter and Gough

"The Peninsula"

SAN MATEO, CAL.
A Twentieth Century Hotel of the Highest Degree of Excellence
NOW OPEN
AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLAN
Thirty minutes by rail from San Francisco. Located in a beautiful park of thirty years' cultivation. All the charm and delight of the country combined with the attractions and conveniences of the metropolis.
For Reservation or Information Address
JAMES H. DOOLITTLE, Mgr.,
San Mateo, Cal.

Hotel Rafael

San Rafael, Cal.
Open year around. Headquarters Automobile League. New and commodious garage. Fifty minutes from San Francisco. Complete change of climate. Tiburon or Sausalito Ferry. All modern conveniences.
F. N. Orpin, Proprietor.

EDUCATIONAL

IRVING INSTITUTE AND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
Boarding and Day School for Girls
2126 California St., San Francisco
Music, languages, art, elocution. Primary, grammar, high school, and advanced grades. Accredited by the universities. Twenty-ninth year. Non-sectarian. New term opens Monday, August 3.
MISS ELLA M. PINKHAM, Principal.

Oakland Conservatory of Music

1170 Madison Street, Oakland, Cal.
The largest, oldest established, and most thoroughly equipped school of genuine musical instruction on the Pacific Coast.
Conducted on the lines of the most noted European and Eastern schools.
Full prospectus on application.
Director, ADOLF GREGORY.

MANZANITA HALL

Palo Alto, Cal.
Prepares boys for the universities or business life. Ample grounds. Three buildings. Illus. catalogue. 16th year. Opens Aug. 24.
J. LEROY DIXON, Principal.

BERKELEY PREPARATORY SCHOOL

Boarding and Day School for Boys
2207 Dwight Way, Berkeley, Cal.
Fall term opens August 24
J. H. WHITE, Principal

SNELL SEMINARY

2721 Channing Way Berkeley
Girls' boarding and day school. Certificate admits to University of California, Stanford, and Eastern colleges. Opens August 10. Superb location. Outdoor life.
MRS. EDNA SNELL POULSON, Principal

FREE KINDERGARTEN NORMAL SCHOOL

Golden Gate Kindergarten Association
(Accredited by State Board of Education)
MISS VIRGINIA FITCH, President
MISS ANNA M. STOVALL, Principal
Address: 1844 Polk Street

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

He—I'd go to the end of the world for you. She—You won't have to go that far, I'm here. —The Sphinx.

"Bridget, wasn't that policeman making love to you in the kitchen, last night?" "He thot he was, mum."—Life.

"Papa, what is the person called who brings you in contact with the spirit world?" "A har-tender, son."—Houston Post.

Teacher—If you are kind and polite to your playmates, what will be the result? Scholar—They'll think they can lick me!—Philadelphia Inquirer.

He—That fellow over there cheated me out of a cool million. She—How could he? He—Wouldn't let me marry his daughter.—The Pathfinder.

Old Gentleman—And if you had five hundred dollars and multiplied it by two, what would you get? Boy—Nautmobile!—Harper's Weekly.

"Do you think he can afford to keep an auto?" "He ought to. He's been an amateur photographer for three years and that didn't break him."—Detroit Free Press.

Mother (crossly)—Tommy, haven't I told you you must not talk when I am talking? Tommy—But, mamma, you won't let me stay up after you go to bed!—Sketch.

Mrs. Eastend—You'll not find me difficult to suit. Nora (the new maid)—I'm sure not, ma'am: I saw your husband as I came in, ma'am.—Pittsburg Observer.

Hewitt—My wife is up to date. Jewett—Sheath gown or Merry Widow hat? Hewitt—Neither: she asked me this morning if I had any emergency currency.—Town Topics.

Mistress—Now, remember, Bridget, the Joneses are coming for dinner. Cook—Leave it to me, mum. I'll do me worst! They'll never trouble yez again!—Illustrated Bits.

Medium (impressively)—It's the spirit of your late husband, madam. He wishes to speak with you. Mrs. Peck—It can't be poor Henry; he never had no spirit.—Boston Transcript.

Teacher—What is it, Tom? Tam—Jimmy's swearing! Teacher—What did he say? Tom —Well, marm, if you say over all the cuss words you know, I'll tell you when you come to it.—Kansas City Star.

Stranger—Been a cyclone or an earthquake round here recently? Officer—Naw—this hyer's a college town, an' one of the students had a hirthday party.—Harper's Weekly.

"You say you acted like a perfect lady throughout?" "Sure, yer honor: when he tips his hat to me an' me not knowin' him, I ups with a rock an' caves in his face."—Houston Post.

"Could you bring yourself to live in a flat on twenty dollars a week?" "I could, Harold," answered the pampered yet unspoiled darling. "But I do not know just how it would suit my French maid."—The Tatler.

"Now, what shall we name the baby?" inquired the professor's wife. "Why, this species has been named," answered the professor, in astonishment. "This is a primate mammal, homo sapiens."—Pioneer Press.

"Hubby, the janitor of these flats is unmarried." "What of it?" "I really think he is becoming interested in our oldest daughter." "There you go again with your pipe dreams! Last week it was a duke."—New York Globe.

Mrs. O'Hoolihan—This payper says there do be ser-rmons in s'bones. Phwhat d' yez think av that? O'Hoolihan—Oi dunno about the ser-rmons, but many a good arguement has coom out av a brick. Oi'm thinkin'.—Chicago News.

"I tell you," said Sinnick, "men are getting so deceitful these days that you can't trust your best friends—" "And what's worse," interrupted Burroughs, gloomily, "you can't get your best friends to trust you."—Philadelphia Press.

"So," remarked the boyhood friend, "you are in the swim." "Mother and the girls think I am," answered Mr. Cumrox. "But my personal feelings are those of a man who has fallen overboard and ought to be hollering for help."—Washington Star.

"Just this way, sir," said the courteous clerk in the railroad ticket office. "Let me show you some summer guides entitled 'Where to Go' and 'When to Go.'" The man with the modest income shook his head. "They don't interest me," he sighed. "What I want to know is 'How to Go.'"—Chicago Daily News.

LOANS—

We have placed over $2,000,000 for our clients secured by first mortgage on high class San Francisco real estate. If you have money to loan or if you want to borrow it will pay you to consult us.

BALDWIN & HOWELL
318-324 KEARNY STREET

Mild, Rich
and Satisfying
Sanchez y Haya
Clear Havana
Cigars
Factory No. 1 Tampa, Fla.
Tillmann & Bendel
Pacific Slope Distributors

Toyo Kisen Kaisha

(ORIENTAL S. S. CO.)
S. S. Tenyo Maru (via Manila).....
S. S. America Maru..... Saturday, July 11, 1908
S. S. Nippon Maru..... Saturday, August 1, 1908
Steamers sail from company's piers, Nos. 42-44, near foot of Second Street, 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Hiogo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.
Round-trip tickets at reduced rates.
For freight and passage apply at office, 240 James Flood Building. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

TOURS

EUROPE
SOUTH AMERICA
JAPAN AND
ROUND THE WORLD

Programmes for the asking.
THOS. COOK & SON
32 Powell St., San Francisco

A BEDROOM in Louis XV style as done by our decorative department—perfect in the harmony of its furnishings. We decorate and furnish in all periods. Let our experts submit color schemes and plan with you in the decorating of your homes. Their services cost you nothing.

Furniture
Carpets
Rugs
Draperies

D. N. & E. WALTER & CO.
Van Ness and Sacramento

Since 1858
Wholesale
and Retail

THIS IS TO REMIND users of
Labels, Cartons,
Lithographing
and Color Printing
that our Office and Factory is again located
at the old stand
SECOND AND BRYANT STS.
SAN FRANCISCO
Schmidt Lithograph Co.
35th Year

MT. TAMALPAIS AND MUIR WOODS VIA SAUSALITO FERRY FOOT OF MARKET ST. LEGAL HOLIDAYS—SUNDAY TIME

Lv. San Francisco		Lv. Muir Woods		Lv. Tamalpais
WEEK DAY	SUN. DAY	WEEK DAY	SUN. DAY	WEEK DAY	SUN. DAY
9:45 A.	7:15 A.	1:40 P.	10:40 A.	7:25 A.	9:28 A.
1:45 P.	9:15 A.	4:45 P.	12:16 P.	1:40 P.	11:10 A.
SATUR. DAY	11:15 A.		4:40 P.	SATUR. DAY	3:10 P.
Tamalpais only	1:45 P.	Tamalpais only	5:45 P.	ONLY	4:40 P.
	4:45 P.	Muir Woods only			6:40 P.
					8:15 P.

TICKET OFFICE AT SAUSALITO FERRY

Press Clippings
Are money-makers for Contractors, Supply Houses, Business Men and Corporations.
ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
Kohl Building

Bonestell, Richardson & Co. PAPER
The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us.
CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE
118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna, San Francisco.

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXIII. No. 1634.

SAN FRANCISCO, JULY 18, 1908.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10 payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breems Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opéra. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at F and Thirteenth Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Denison News Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains.

Published at 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal.
Telephone, Kearny 5895.

THIRTY-SECOND YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: Bryanized Democracy—Mr. Bryan—An Issue Postponed—Slowly and Surely Seeing the Truth—Two Conventions—A Venturesome Word or Two—Old Age Pensions—A Social Problem Solved—Editorial Notes...	33-36
CAMPAIGN TOPICS	36
EXIT THE DIAMOND MAKER: "St. Martin" Discusses the Disappearance of Lemoine.....	37
OLD FAVORITES: "The Happy Warrior," by William Wordsworth.....	37
POLITICO-PERSONAL	37
THE HACIENDA HOLDS CARNIVAL: XXII. By Jerome A. Hart.....	38
INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes About Prominent People All Over the World.....	39
IN HONOR OF WASHINGTON: Owen Wister Describes for Us a National Progenitor of Flesh and Blood.....	40
BOOKS AND AUTHORS. By Sidney G. P. Coryn.....	41
LITERARY NOTES: Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.....	42
FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.....	42
CURRENT VERSE: "When You Are Old," by William Ernest Henley; "A Summer Love Song," by E. E. Miller; "The Defeated," by S. H. Kemper; "Sailor's Song".....	42
DRAMA: Some Playhouse Problems. By Josephine Hart Phelps.....	43
VANITY FAIR.....	44
STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.....	43
THE MERRY MUSE.....	45
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy.....	46-47
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day.....	48

Bryanized Democracy.

In the complete triumph of Mr. Bryan at Denver we have the consummation of a movement begun twelve years ago in the National Democratic Convention at Chicago. This movement has been nothing less than the overslaughting of democracy by populism. The spirit of populism achieved a victory in the nomination of Bryan in 1896. Again it achieved a victory in his nomination in 1900, accompanied by a full indorsement of the radical 1896 platform. In 1904 the more conservative forces of democracy dominated the hour, winning over Bryan at the St. Louis convention. But it was the last stand of old democracy; and with the defeat of Parker its last hope of party dominance and of popular success crept into its grave. Since the overwhelming defeat of Parker, conservative democracy has been a thing without a prospect or a hope. Today Bryanism, which is only a synonym for populism and radicalism, is in complete command of the situation. Of the old-time democracy, the democracy of the day of our grandfathers, the democracy of Cleveland, and—to bring the case up to date—the democracy of Judge Garber of California, of Asahel Bush of Oregon, of President Eliot of Massachusetts, there is nothing left but the memory. He who today calls himself a Democrat must confess himself a supporter of the whole scheme of extreme policies once named populism, later characterized as Bryanism, and now fairly entitled, since final triumph yields possession, to the name if not the fame of democracy.

The Democratic party of today is not the Democratic party of another time. It is another thing, founded in different conceptions, prompted by other motives, aiming at other ends. It is in truth nothing better than populism in the stolen garments of historic democracy. And since the Democratic party of today is no longer the Democratic party of tradition and of conservative principle, it affords no place or standing room for Democrats of the old fashion. Your conservative Democrat like those we have named must either accept populism, Bryanism, radicalism, or he must seek new political affiliations. He has no choice—he must change his principles or change his party.

Mr. Bryan.

William Jennings Bryan in the year of grace 1908 is a different man from the fire-eyed young disputant who twelve years ago shook the cobwebs out of the rafters of a convention hall at Chicago by a glittering if not brilliant speech. Mr. Bryan was then thirty-six years of age; today he is forty-eight. Then he was an impecunious country politician of second-rate standing at home and no standing at all abroad. His vision was limited practically by local interests and prejudices, for a single term in Congress, where he had no distinction and therefore no opportunity, had not served to lift him mentally or otherwise out of his purely local character. He was the rawest possible sort of a Western spellbinder—the sort of man who in long-tailed coat, tan shoes, velvet waistcoat, and white string tie, with love-locks brushed back, goes from county to county speechifying "under the auspices of the State committee." Of the gift of gab he had enough and too much; of assurance he had all that his questionable trade required; of real economic, political, or social knowledge he had none. He was merely a professional speech-maker with such smatter of uncorroborated information as enabled him to tickle a country audience by pandering to whatever whim or prejudice might rule the hour. He was honest in the sense that he was not dishonest; he was not honest in the sense of having that cold-blooded integrity which does not venture to be positive about any question without having probed it to its bottom.

The Bryan of today, when compared with the Bryan of twelve years ago, is a larger and finer figure. He has lived in the broad world under conditions exceptionally calculated to widen his horizon. He has sustained extraordinary responsibilities of leadership, and this has tended to sober him and somewhat to steady his judgment. The mind of the man, like his clothes, has become conventionalized to a degree. Let it be said to his credit that prosperity with his extraordinary distinctions has not spoiled him. On the personal side he is as high-minded as in his earlier days, cherishing the same admirable standards of domestic and social decency, the same habits of clean living and of straightforward dealing with the world.

None the less, the temper of the man is precisely what it has always been. There is about him the atmosphere of sounding brass and tinkling cymbal. It was as a speech-maker that he came to the notice of the world; today he is nothing better than a speech-maker, more polished, better equipped, more adroit, but none the less a speech-maker. For all his pretensions as an economic authority, he is neither a scholar nor a thinker. He lacks the capacity for steady-going processes of mind; he lacks the kind of mental integrity which holds opinion in strict subordination to fact and reason. He has, indeed, a species of courage; he has the kind of moral earnestness to lead a forlorn hope, as, for example, at the St. Louis convention four years ago; but with it all he has not that severe spirit of self-criticism which makes him dead sure to be right before he goes ahead. While he has it in him to die for a cause, he is just as likely to die for a false cause as for a sound one. He has the melodramatic temperament; he is essentially a man of emotional rather than of mental processes.

There is much in the character and career of Mr. Bryan to challenge admiration if not approval. His is a truly gallant nature and the figure he has made in the world is one to charm the imagination, even though it may not inspire confidence. His poise, his courtesy, his uncalculating courage—these are winning qualities, and they have won for Mr. Bryan a world-wide good will. There are none to deny his charm and his real powers as a champion, although he is far more likely to win approval for himself than to command acceptance for his cause. But there are few even in his own party who feel that he has any real capacity for sober, steady, and severe responsibility.

Mr. Bryan's position before the country has so long been that of a critic or a champion, he has so long been a man of words rather than of deeds, that it is not easy to conceive him as one in responsible authority. His name has long been associated with the presidency and yet it is not easy to think of him as President. And even among those who have a real admiration and affection for him there are many who would regret to see him in office. "He lacks," remarked a personal friend of Mr. Bryan the other day to the editor of the Argonaut, "the qualities of insight and judgment essential to success in the presidency." This, the personal estimate of one who knows him well, is in precise line with the instinct of the people of the United States. As the inspiring leader of a party out of authority and in opposition, Mr. Bryan is in his precise element, and that is why he has been so long successful as the foremost figure of the Democratic party in the United States. The qualities which have carried him so brilliantly through the past dozen years are by no means those essential to administrative responsibility.

The election of Mr. Bryan is not likely. The situation is not more favorable than in 1896, when he had but 176 votes to 271 for McKinley. Nor is it more favorable than in 1900, when he had 155 electoral votes against 292 for McKinley. If there be any State which he failed to carry before that he is likely to carry now—leaving the new and relatively unimportant State of Oklahoma out of the question—we fail to see where it is. As before, Mr. Bryan is pretty sure to be beaten, and so far as his own historical repute is concerned, it will be just as well for him. Even if he should be elected, it is difficult to see any chance for promoting his favorite ideas. In the presidency his hands would be tied, since the Senate is overwhelmingly Republican and in the nature of things must remain Republican during the coming four years. Whatever measures or ideas may be presented by the President, whoever he may be, during the next four years, must either fail in the borning or else square themselves with the judgment and the sentiments of a Republican Senate.

An Issue Postponed.

As did the Republicans at Chicago, so did the Democrats at Denver—they balked when it came to the demands of Mr. Gompers for a definite and comprehensive scheme of special privilege for organized labor. At the same time the Democrats went further than the Republicans, pledging to organized labor a definite remodeling of the law of injunction in the line of nullifying its immediate and therefore its most important powers. While the Denver declaration is sufficient to indicate the tendencies of the Democratic party, it hardly goes far enough to emphasize the issue and therefore to put it to the front in this campaign, as at one time seemed probable. In effect the course of the two conventions, suggestive though it be as to the future, postpones the issue. Organized labor in its extreme demands has been neither approved nor denied; it has been told to wait.

On the whole we are sorry for this postponement.

The question must be met first or last, for organized labor under arbitrary leadership has got its mind made up to it. Again the demand will be made and the parties will have to show their hands with respect to it. As usual when radical proposals press upon the country, this issue will find its support in the Democratic party; and as usual (and inevitable) the Republican party will have the task of defending the country against improper and ruinous proposals. We should have been glad to have the fight come on this year. Where things are inevitable there is only worry and demoralization in delay. Pushed to one side in 1908, the demands of organized labor will only be urged with the greater vehemence and confidence in 1912. It will surely come and we may just as well prepare for it.

Organized labor aims at nothing else than political control of the country. It seeks to have the determinations of its "councils" and "amalgamations" made the law of the land. It seeks to have the laws as they exist nullified in so far as they interfere with any purposes within the scheme of organized labor. Since it is impossible and perhaps undesirable even from the labor union standpoint to abrogate the laws against murder, arson, and conspiracy, it is proposed to have them nullified in so far as organized labor may be concerned, to the end that strikes and labor disturbances may be enforced by whatever means may seem good to the strikers and disturbers. In the words of Mr. Gompers, organized labor wants leave, undisturbed by criminal or police regulations, to exercise its "normal activities." In other words, the demand is for license to maim, to murder, to destroy, whenever it may suit the mood of organized labor.

It hardly needs to be said that to grant the demands of organized labor as defined by this insolent foreign agitator would in effect be to abandon the foundation principles of the republic. It would be to surrender practically the government of the country into the hands of a private and sinister association of citizens which persistently declines by formal incorporation to make itself responsible under the law. It would mean to suspend all ordinary legal processes where the interests of organized labor are concerned. It would turn over not merely the governing powers of the country to organized labor with leave to pluck property to its ruin, but it would deliver unorganized labor (declared by General Harrison Gray Otis to be more than nine-tenths of all the labor in the country) bound hand and foot to be punished for its temerity and "disloyalty."

It is hardly necessary to say where the Republican party must stand when this demand comes to be comprehended in its full significance and in its full enormity. Even today, with the issue masked by a hundred artful disguises, a programmed convention has declined to obey the command of a President who had weakly yielded. Even a Democratic convention, likewise programmed and bossed, declined to go to the lengths demanded by Gompers and urged by Bryan. The issue lies so deep, it is so blended with sentiment, interest, tradition, and fixed respect for justice and the integrity of law, that subserviency itself came to a halt and would go no further. But let nobody be deceived; the serpent is only scotched, not destroyed. It will come again—as slavery came again and again and as the cheap money delusion came again and again. And, men and brethren, the Republican party will have to fight it out precisely as it has fought out every other assault upon the integrity of free institutions since it came into existence half a century ago.

Two Conventions.

The events of the year do not tend to respect for the convention system as we have it in American politics. In theory the party convention is an assemblage of delegates for the purpose of comparing principles and formulating policies and of promoting their enforcement through coöperative action. For a long period this theory has worked out fairly well in practice. But we seem now to have attained a stage in political development under which the theory of the party convention is measurably if not completely nullified.

For example, take the recent conventions at Chicago and Denver, representing the two great bodies of organized political opinion in the United States. How, let us ask, did the proceedings of these conventions match the theories or accord with the purposes involved in them? Both conventions were all but completely dominated—perhaps bossed is a better word. For months previous to the meeting at Chicago President Roosevelt employed not only his personal prestige, but the powers of the presidential office to work up a convention amenable to his authority. We have had a good deal of boss politics in this country, a good deal of trading and bargaining with official patronage as a means of political influence, but nothing quite so thoroughgoing as the work of Mr. Roosevelt. He chose the officers of the convention; he dictated the platform excepting in respect to the labor clause, where even a programmed convention would not follow him; he selected the nominees. So complete was his management of the convention even in details that it has been found necessary in common decency to explain that while he did "read over" the advance transcript of the platform, he modestly did not read those eloquent paragraphs bearing testimony to the virtuosity of his own character and career.

With a different setting and under other circumstances, this record was duplicated at Denver. It was Mr. Bryan's convention as positively and completely as if he had owned it body and breeches. Even our own Theodore Bell, a young man whose political virtue is so great that ordinarily he can accept no advice from any source, had to make the long journey to Lincoln, Nebraska, for instruction as to what he should say and how to say it in assuming the temporary chairmanship. Like the Republican convention at Chicago, the Democratic convention at Denver was a programmed affair, bossed in every detail. It had no freedom, no power of initiative; it was selected to receive and to register the will of William J. Bryan, and it did its work as it was expected to do it.

It will be interesting to see how long an institution which has forgotten its original purposes, and which unless there shall be a revival of older practice must soon cease to have any real dignity or justification, will survive. Under present conditions and in present forms, we think not long. Americans are a practical people and they will not permanently or for any extended period fondle a rag baby. Either the party convention must regain something of its old powers, it must be a thing of real authority and practical account, or it will be cast aside as a thing outworn and useless, to be superseded by something in sounder accord with the requirements of political action.

Old Age Pensions.

Socialism, opportunism, and feminism have at last pushed the old age pension scheme in England to the point of practical consideration by Parliament. Definite proposals have been put forward by the government, and although the bill will of course be amended and modified in committee, the plan in its substantial features will become law.

It has at least the virtue of simplicity. Any one over the age of seventy years and whose income is less than ten shillings a week may present himself, or herself, at the nearest postoffice, show the necessary certificate, and draw the weekly sum of five shillings. The documents will be furnished by local committees, who will interrogate each applicant and verify each claim. When the certificate has once been issued it will remain in force for life unless, or until, it is forfeited by misconduct. As the squire and the parson will certainly figure largely on the local committees, we may assume that poaching and failure to attend the Episcopal Church will now be followed by new penalties, direct or indirect, that are not exactly contemplated by the law. The squire and the parson in unholy combination and with their infinite capacity for petty tyranny are still the masters of Merry England.

From the point of view of the political opportunist the old age pension project is a matter of sheer necessity and to be defended upon no other ground. That it must discourage thrift, habituate the community to pauperism, and produce a vast amount of trickery and perjury is too obvious to be denied. That it will prove an irresistible temptation to competing political parties to buy the votes of its beneficiaries by promising an increase of the weekly pension is clearly foreseen and boldly admitted. Indeed, the initial proposal is itself in the nature of a bribe and to be classed with the surrender to the shrieks of the suffragettes. But the government is between the devil and the deep sea. Confronted with an overwhelming tide of pauperism, it must either grapple with the causes of that pauperism by waging war upon special fiscal privilege or it must drug and narcotize it by gifts and doles. Special privilege is the warp and the woof of the English system, and although there are many members of the present government who know the iniquity for what it is and who would like to equalize the burdens of the people and so to make an independent old age a possibility to the poor, it is the people themselves who shrink from interference with the traditions of taxation sanctified by a hundred generations. Old age pauperism—and youthful pauperism too, for that matter—is the direct result of a system that compels the whole nation to pay tribute to a narrow and exclusive caste, but the government that proposed to do justice from the roots upward would be displaced just as quickly as the voters could register their wishes. In England a governing caste keeps its place by the will of the people and will continue to do so as long as the people love to have it so.

The aged indigent must therefore have their pension, not because a pension is due them, but because a pension is better than a dangerous discontent that might possibly make a real reform inevitable. The plea that a man is entitled to a pension merely because he is old, that he can thus accept a public dole without loss of self-respect or dignity simply from his physical incapacity to make a return, is not even plausible, but it is now being urged in England with unctuous vigor. That a great many of the aged poor who will be benefited by this measure are individually blameless may be true, and no one would wish to add the stigma of public alms to unavoidable dependence. But when we are invited to regard such wholesale dependence as the fitting and proper lot of old age, when we are asked to accept it as belonging to the rightful order of things and to the legitimate machinery of government, then indeed we marvel at the statecraft that originates such an idea. The social system that makes it hopelessly impossible for the honest and industrious farm laborer, for example, to make any provision whatever for old age, stands condemned as a reproach to civilization, as one of the marks of the failure of civilization, and to attempt to meet such a condition by government pittance of five shillings a week is precisely on a par with the medical science that devoted itself exclusively to the external symptoms of the disease to the neglect of its real nature, its origin, and its cause.

That an old age pension scheme has worked well in Germany for these many years is true, but in Germany the system is in the nature of an endowment insurance and it is worked on a strict actuarial basis. A regular premium is paid during the working years of the beneficiary. He himself pays a third of this premium from his weekly wage, the employer pays a third, and the government pays a third. This is a very different thing from the proposed system in England under which the workman will pay nothing, and will moreover be dissuaded from such thrift as he may be inclined to practice by the knowledge that a benevolent and vote-catching government will look after him and that five shillings a week is waiting for him "at the nearest postoffice."

A Venturesome Word or Two.

It might be going too far to declare that American politics is strictly a man's game. There have been women in considerable numbers with propensity and talent for politics, and feminine opinion and influence have always been things more or less to be reckoned with. But we have never had in this country anything in our politics approaching the part taken in politics by English women. The fact has been creditable alike to our politics and to our women; and there are some of us so old-fashioned in our ways of thinking, and in our respect for womankind, as to wish to see the old rule strictly maintained.

But we see indications suggestive of another intention and probably of another practice. For example, the wife of Mr. Taft has already given forth an "interview" in which she has declared her opinions with respect to a lot of things material and immaterial as related to the campaign. Evidently Mr. Taft has a wife who is not willing to sit in the shadow of her husband's greatness, but who proposes to ply an active oar when opportunity serves. In times past we have had exhibitions of much the same spirit on the part of Mr. Bryan's wife. This estimable lady has that fine aggressiveness born of the Western educational system in which her relationship to Mr. Bryan had its beginning. She was a "co-ed" when he met and loved her, and something of the spirit of the co-ed has endured in her social and domestic attitude. She plays on the typewriter at her husband's dictation and is presumed to have something more than a mechanical part in those public utterances which go forth from Fairview in written form. She has carried the spirit of Western collegianism somewhat aggressively not only into the Bryan domestic circle, but into the broader sphere opened up by Mr. Bryan's public activities.

We have another distinctly over-aggressive feminine figure in the wife of Congressman Nicholas Longworth, whose petulance under observation is only equalled by her persistence in getting into positions where she may be seen. It could be wished that this young woman's propensities for the limelight were less pronounced, and that the example of public and social manners which she presents were more in conformity with fixed convention and with the standards cherished by people of old-fashioned ideas.

Looking over the field of what we may style political femininity, it is a constant gratification to observe the discretion and taste exhibited at all times and under all conditions by the wife of the President, Mrs. Roosevelt. Whatever criticism of White House manners may be justified, there is nothing to be said that is not to the credit of the Lady of the White House. Mrs. Roosevelt is never on exhibition; she has no public poses; she never by any chance intrudes upon any situation. She brought to the White House an atmosphere of breeding, a certain knowledge of the world in its better phases, which that historical mansion has not always been accustomed to. And she has manifested the fine quality of her mind and character not by any kind of demonstration, but rather by its absence. Mrs. Roosevelt is not in evidence photographically or otherwise; she is never in the newspapers. And yet there is an unmistakable sense of her restraining and refining influence in all the purely social conditions connected with the domestic and social side of administrative life.

The Argonaut would be very glad if Mrs. Taft and Mrs. Bryan, likewise the President's daughter and the several types of widowhood of Mr. Bryan's connection, would imitate the fine example set by Mrs. Roosevelt. The wives and daughters of our public men never appear in a light so admirable as when, like Mrs. Roosevelt, they leave politics and all that goes with it to the menfolks of their connection.

Slowly but Surely Seeing the Truth.

It has not been easy for persons and newspapers at a distance to comprehend the true meaning of events in San Francisco during the past two years, particularly in connection with the so-called graft prosecution. What has been going on here has been so industriously represented as a "moral movement," so exploited in those phases calculated to command approval by their very names, so artfully dramatized and staged in ten thousand ways, as to suggest and even enforce false and misleading interpretations. There has been a situation in which one who, like the Argonaut, having no private interest at stake and wishing in good conscience to serve only the cause of truth, justice, and common sense, has found it extremely difficult to be faithful to his own standards and character without flying in the face of misconception and distrust. But with progress of time, the inside truth of our situation is beginning to dawn upon a multitude of minds from which hitherto it has been shut out. Many are coming to see that behind the masks of moral pretense, nobility of purpose, heroic self-sacrifice, guilelessness, and moral enthusiasm there lie a multitude of gross, vulgar, and fraudulent purposes. If even yet the bed-rock motive in the whole wretched business has not been uncovered to the popular view, it is coming to be understood that such a motive exists and that it has been sought to be worked out even though in a bungling way. President Roosevelt's amazingly ill-informed, foolish, and impertinent letter to Rudolph Spreckels, which was "secured" as a means of bolstering up a discredited and failing cause, has met away from home something of the amused contempt which greeted its publication here. For example, the following comment appears in the New York Times under the heading, "The Tie That Binds":

President Roosevelt's letter to Rudolph Spreckels, exhorting him to keep up the fight and flinch not, will be read in San Francisco with much irreverent mirth. And when laughter has exhausted itself over Mr. Roosevelt's credulous acceptance of the Spreckels fight as a disinterested crusade against men of sin and corruption, it will break out afresh over his words of brotherly welcome to Mr. Spreckels as a fellow-soldier in the war of righteousness and his identification of the San Francisco fight as an integral part of the great battle in which he himself is engaged against wrongdoing.

The San Francisco situation is rather more complex than the President supposes. It has been publicly charged, and the charge has never been satisfactorily answered, that the war upon the Ring and upon the traction chiefs was not quite so pure and lofty in motive as the leaders in the fight ask the public to believe. They belabored the Ring mightily, and that was a public service, but it has been pretty broadly intimated, plainly asserted, indeed, that there were private interests of some magnitude to be served, and this exposure of a worldly motive has inclined San Francisco to listen with grins to the high professions of the Ring smashers.

None of these doubts troubles the President. You and I, he says to Mr. Spreckels, are engaged in a noble work, and it is of small consequence "whether men think well or ill of us personally." "In their essence, down at the foundation of things, the ties that are all-important are those that knit honest men, brave men, square-dealing men, together." Before tying himself up so unreservedly to Mr. Spreckels Mr. Roosevelt would have done well to examine with closer scrutiny the gentleman at the other end of the tie. Still, there is much in common, there is much of likeness, there are points of striking resemblance. There has been a prodigious amount of noise in both cases, quite out of proportion to the result achieved. The men of the Ring have not been punished as wickedness deserves in San Francisco, and the President's crusade has put no malefactor in jail.

In both cases there has been a great deal of fooling of the people. The South and the West quite lost their heads over Mr. Roosevelt, just as, in the beginning, San Francisco did the same thing over Mr. Spreckels. The inconvenient aspersions upon Mr. Spreckels's motive will probably not visibly diminish the enthusiasm of those who still believe in him. So, too, admirers of Mr. Roosevelt, who have observed without any moral disturbance how he made the Chicago convention the personal instrument of his iron will, interfering and dictating at every turn, forcing upon it his candidate and his platform, are simply annoyed when they are reminded that Mr. Roosevelt is the man who used to protest that "the people are quite capable of managing their own affairs without interference and dictation" from their administrative servants.

To those who remind him of his former views and point out how little his present acts accord with them, Mr. Roosevelt replies with a certificate of election to the Ananias Club, or with allusions to the detestable malice of persons of indigent wealth. He exhorts Mr. Spreckels to do the same thing. The square-dealing men must stand together, he says, and treat detractors as the common enemy. The fun of the situation is missed only by those who accept with unquestioning approval everything done in the name of square dealing.

In the same spirit of doubt and questioning the New York Evening Post deals with this same letter:

President Roosevelt's injunction to Rudolph Spreckels not to falter in his effort to purify San Francisco politics will, no doubt, hearten the reformers who have been so sadly disappointed in their efforts to place behind the bars Schmitz, Ruef, and other criminals, large and small. The way the boss and his hase creatures have slipped through the meshes of the law is enough to discourage anybody.

The President is particular, too, to say that the "slander and wicked falsehood" with which Mr. Spreckels and his associates have had to contend are merely the lot of all reformers. He himself has suffered; hence it is with genuine personal sympathy that he calls on Mr. Spreckels "to do the work without flinching, and without losing our good humor and common sense, without becoming angered or losing our heads." The President himself never having berated anybody or lost his temper, or he-adjectived any reactionary, the advice is particularly valuable.

It is only fair to say, however, that many of the men and the newspapers that have criticised Mr. Spreckels and his associates have done so from the best of motives, and not because of a desire to retard justice or shield the wrongdoers. Unless our observation has misled us, there is a growing feeling in the West that some of the methods of Messrs. Spreckels and Heney were as high-handed as any of those of the grafters they have run to cover. In San Francisco, many are laughing at the credulous Roosevelt.

It would be interesting to know what Schmitz would say to this latest letter of the man who entertained him in the White House when he was already under indictment.

The Philadelphia Ledger in somewhat milder spirit, as becomes the atmosphere of the community of brotherly love, deals with the President's letter as follows:

Friends of President Roosevelt will hesitate to commend the impetuosity that inspired a letter of fraternal commendation and cheer to Rudolph Spreckels of San Francisco. The letter serves to call attention to an awkward state of facts. It will hardly have the effect of quickening the ardor or upholding the hands of the Spreckels personally conducted prosecution, for this has been doing its utmost, albeit the utmost has been little. The single good result has been the retirement from office of a thieving administration. Such retirement was inevitable after the first exposure.

At one time the people of San Francisco were fired with zeal not only to turn the rascals out of office, but to turn them into jail. Spreckels became the head and front of the movement. As he furnished the money, he directed its expenditure. The animus soon became plain. The prosecution was aimed not toward the vulgar scoundrels whose guilt was open, but against the victims whom these had hied. The status of all enterprise had been fixed. The man with the legitimate enterprise in which he was ready to invest money had to purchase the most ordinary rights or find himself crippled. That he yielded to the situation; that he did not have the hardihood to stand out against the demands was an error, a manifest weakness, and a crime. Yet, for the sake of putting this man in stripes, the prosecution was ready to promise immunity to any malefactor cowardly enough to betray his accomplices. It even promised immunity to Ruef, arch rogue of the whole decadent business, and neglected to keep the promise.

Ruef and Schmitz were convicted, and the higher courts had prepared a favorable response to their appeal before the appeal had been made. Meanwhile the people, observing that the whole strength of the prosecution was being used against men whose standing, socially and commercially, had been at least as high as that of Spreckels; observing also that these men had been successful rivals of Spreckels, and that the pursuit of them was marked by more venom than properly belonged to mere instruments of the law, lost confidence, and then lost patience. They grew to regard the whole performance as persecution. If they did not do this they at least lost faith in the courts, and viewed the continued struggle as a waste of energy and money. They wanted the thing to end. That is their feeling today. Their admiration for Spreckels vanished first, and then their belief in him.

Thus has arrived the time when there is no reason to think any of the grafters will be punished. Even were they to be convicted, there is, with or without basis, a theory that the courts would let them go. The President may easily counsel Mr. Spreckels not to heed detractors, but reformers, heralding their high and holy purpose in a community made up of detractors, are under serious disadvantage.

There does not appear to the observer from without any adequate explanation of the stupidity and ineptitude that have made possible the present muddle. The crimes were known. The criminals could be called by name. The prosecution, with everything in its favor, failed lamentably. It refused to grasp the small fry of corruption, and had not the ability to reach the class of offenders upon whom it had set its ambitions. Still, Mr. Spreckels may find comfort in the presidential misadventure. And if there is anything he particularly needs it is comfort.

A Social Problem Solved.

Now at last is the axe laid to the root of the tree of marital unrest. A bill introduced in the assembly of Georgia strikes a mighty blow at the underlying cause of divorce. This heretofore insoluble social problem undermining the safety of our country is about to be settled by the Georgia legislature and the whole superstructure of statutory cause sent toppling from its base.

A Daniel from Georgia has come to judgment with the discovery that back of the drink habit, directly responsible for desertion, more insidious than incompatibility of temper, incentive to suicide, lies the art of "make-up." That men have taken to drink after marriage we all know, have even committed suicide or deserted their wives before the honeymoon is over, we are bound to admit, and for the want of a deeper insight into their domestic tragedies these are the men who are branded "brute" by their wives' relatives. The most optimistic of us can not but bear witness to the fact that as many apparently auspicious marriages turn out as disastrously as the mad-cap matches. The columns of our press give daily proof of the failure of marriages contracted under the most promising circumstances, and the court calendar proves the further fact that high and low, rich and poor, wise and otherwise, are ground through the divorce mill in about equal proportions, showing there is no protection through enlightenment or the possession of money to insure against the grind of drudgery.

Right here the Georgian mind, instead of the usual shrug and "You never can tell," has set to work to probe the heart of the marital-unrest evil, and the result is a bill introduced into the legislature. In plain terms this bill, while recognizing the value of artifice as a bait to the unwary man—the sticky-sweetness of the tanglefoot—provides for the drawing of the line of illusion at the psychological moment when attention becomes intention. There must, it is argued, with that logical faculty that induces the framing of the bill, be a sub-cause underlying the direct cause for the revulsion of feeling that induces drink, suicide, and desertion during what ought to be the halcyon days of the honeymoon; and the mighty blow dealt at the root of the matter discloses the rottenness of deception. Therefore whatever artificial aids a woman may employ to add to her seductive charm before marriage she shall cease to use on the hither side of the altar rail. The measure provides furthermore that if a woman should snare a man with the aid of "cosmetics, artificial teeth, puffs, rats, paddings, drop-stitch hose, peek-a-boo waists, corsets, V-shaped lingerie, or other artifice, the marriage shall be null and void." This bill, we are glad to learn, has been referred by the speaker of the house to the committee on ways and means and is assured a careful consideration.

And while this sacred subject rests in the bands of the committee on ways and means, and while we are waiting with bated breath for the result, we may lessen the tension of suspense by trying to grasp something of what the outcome may be if this bill becomes a law. Obtaining anything under false pretenses, whether a husband or a railroad, we admit to be reprehensible. "Cosmetics, paddings, puffs, V-shaped lingerie," and other kindred artifices, we agree with the gentleman from Georgia, are a delusion and a snare. "Little dabs of powder, little daubs of paint," we are prepared to admit, "make a girl's complexion look like what it aint," and in defense of the guileless man, along with dumb animals and birds of plumage, there must be a protecting law. We have laws providing for pure foods, original packages, et cetera, making for sincerity in trade, of vastly less importance not only to the individual, but the human race, than a law viding for an anti-artificial brand of beauty. But in the hands of the Georgia legislature we feel safe, for the bill not only inveighs against all known artificial aids to beauty, "paddings, rats, cosmetics, V-shaped lingerie," et cetera, but draws a hard and fast line in defense of the unwary by adding "all other devices," thus covering the whole realm of nutton tallow to soften the hands, milk-weed juice to take off tan, early morning dew to freshen the complexion, and every other device, innocent or nefarious, that shall hereafter be invented for the undoing of unsuspecting man.

It may have been this same gentleman from Georgia, since internal evidence points to his probable authorship, who lifted up his heart and sang:

"He loved her for her lovely hair,
So beautiful and rich,
But when he found that, unaware,
She had mislaid it on a chair,
His train of thought was, then and there,
Wrecked by a misplaced switch."

And it is further possible that the introduction of this bill is the outgrowth of his own bitter experience. But while we welcome progress in every department of our national life and join in hearty sympathy with our brother from Georgia, we distrust the successful operation of this law—if law it is to become—until the marriage ceremony has been revised. That a man who thinks he has married a blooming lass of twenty and finds his dear Product of the Paint Pot thirty at the least, truly has cause for suicide, drink, or desertion, we admit. But until the words "for better, for worse," be stricken from the marriage ceremony, "cosmetics, false teeth, puffs, rats, paddings, drop-stitch hose, peek-a-boo waists, corsets, V-shaped lingerie, and other artifices" seem to stand on impregnable ground.

Editorial Notes.

It is announced that the Equitable Life Assurance Association of New York is to put up a building in that city sixty-two stories in height and overtopping every other structure now in existence or likely to be built. This is to be done not because it will be a profitable investment, but as an advertisement, to the end that the Equitable Company may be kept in the public mind. It is to be recalled that only three or four years ago the Equitable Company was the subject of a national scandal, a scandal so serious that the late ex-President Cleveland felt impelled to withdraw from his retirement and lend his name to an effort to restore confidence. Confidence above all things is what the Equitable and all other associations of its kind most seriously needs. Will a sixty-two-story building, put up in disregard of business considerations as a mere advertisement, contribute to public confidence in behalf of the Equitable Association? We think not. We think the effect will be rather to create an impression unfavorable to the conservatism and stability of the Equitable management. A freak building will be to many investors, policy holders, and men of plain common sense an indication that folly rather than wisdom is at the helm of the Equitable.

The Democratic convention at Denver completed its ticket by naming as its candidate for Vice-President one Kerns of Indiana, a man less known but otherwise about on a par with the Republican nominee. Governor Johnson of Minnesota or Judge Gray of Delaware ought to have been nominated, but the first named flatly refused and the last was not sufficiently urged. Kerns was Bryan's choice. Like the leading lady in a popular drama, he didn't want anybody else on the stage likely to detract from that concentration of interest upon himself which he so dearly loves. Mr. Kerns is described as a respectable man, half politician, half lawyer, whose chief distinction is a close association with Tom Taggart, the Democratic boss of Indiana. The main personal fact about Mr. Kerns thus far developed is the interesting one that he wears a flowing chin whisker and already the caricaturists and paragraphers have hit upon this appendage as affording in the situation as thus far developed a sadly needed element of humor. Mr. Kerns's beard and the size of Mr. Taft's waistband give promise of being much worked in the cause of the gaiety of nations during the coming months.

Mr. Heney continues to enliven our criminal court procedures by a pleasant play of spirit, largely temperamental, no doubt, but perhaps even more largely developed by his career in Arizona, where almost anything goes in court or out of it. His latest contribution to the gaiety of nations is a threat uttered in court to slap the face of the opposing counsel when they should get out of court. Curiously enough, neither this nor any of the other of Mr. Heney's fierce threats ever come to anything. Being a very busy man, he doubtless forgets his engagements to punch, to shoot, and to slap. Come to think of it, Mr. Heney is in the habit of promising a good deal more than he performs. It is easily recalled that not only once but many times he publicly gave his pledge to put Abe Ruef in San Quentin, all the while Ruef having in his pocket Mr. Heney's secret immunity contract. Possibly these threatenings to shoot and to slap are merely intended to entertain the public, all the same as the threats against Ruef. It is coming to be seen that Mr. Heney is a good deal of a poser and a bluffer.

The Sacramento Union, nominally in the spirit of enthusiasm for valor and self-sacrifice, actually in the desire to promote itself in the public esteem, promises each Memorial Day hereafter to bestow a "medal of honor" upon the resident of Sacramento or vicinity who, during the preceding year, has performed the most heroic deed reported in the paper. The trouble about "the most heroic deed" in relation to this reward is that it will not get into the paper. The truest heroism is not that which turns double somersaults in public or which exploits itself in the public prints. The Union's medal will probably go to somebody who shall have done a spectacular stunt, calling for a mere temperamental courage. This sort of courage is a vastly different and a lesser thing than the kind of courage which operates in private and which seeks no medals.

Judging by the attitude of the Hearst newspapers ten days or two weeks ago, there seemed reason to believe that Mr. Hearst's Independence League would support the regular Democratic ticket in the coming national campaign. Later indications are hardly so favorable to democracy. The interest, however, is only a minor one, since the Hearst influence has become a much less serious matter than formerly. Mr. Hearst's several personal defeats, combined with his open jugglery in politics has not, to say the least, tended to augment his political prestige.

CAMPAIGN TOPICS.

Mr. Hearst's repudiation of Mr. Bryan is a little hard to understand except on the ground that it is not in Mr. Hearst's nature to ally himself with any one or to any one. That Mr. Bryan should have brought this rebuff upon himself is a piece of distinctly bad diplomacy. He could have ascertained Mr. Hearst's sentiment by some underground channel, and this would have been far better than openly asking for his support—and not in a very dignified way—and having it openly refused. But as a piece of political ingratitude Mr. Hearst's contemptuous denunciations almost establish a record. When he was fighting for the governorship of New York Mr. Bryan went out of his way to hestow his benedictions and called down upon himself a public censure for so doing. Now that Mr. Hearst has an opportunity to return the compliment he has nothing but a jeer and a sneer to offer.

Mr. Bryan has of course nothing much to fear from a Hearstian opposition. It is Mr. Hearst's friendship that is to be feared and not his enmity. In the field of politics Mr. Hearst never backed a winning horse in his life, and slim as Mr. Bryan's chances are, he may congratulate himself that the New York editor has not overlooked him with the evil eye of his approval.

Mr. Hearst's supporters were few enough and far enough between before the result of the New York recount was made known. His prestige must have dwindled still further since his wearisome campaign of sound and fury has been shown to be baseless. He gained 863 votes only, a truly pitiful showing, after his preposterous claim of election, and a showing by no means calculated to arouse either enthusiasm for the past or confidence for the future.

The negro vote is occasioning some apprehensions in Ohio, although a good many well-informed Republicans believe that the negroes will vote their usual ticket in spite of the disaffection that undoubtedly exists. With the possible exception of Indiana, the negro votes in Ohio exercise more influence as a political factor than in any other State of the Union.

The correspondent of the New York Evening Post furnishes some figures showing that the balance of power is very truly with the colored vote:

Whether the negroes will use the balance of power in the districts where they hold it is a question that is sorely perplexing Republican leaders in this State. It is one of the reasons that make many of them so anxious to have Foraker openly and warmly espouse Mr. Taft's cause on the stump. If Foraker stays out of the campaign, the present fear is that many of the negroes will take it as a sign that they are to vote against the Republican nominee.

In six congressional districts in Ohio the success of the Republican candidate depends largely upon the negro vote. In five more districts in the State the negro vote is a potent factor for success or failure. This is exclusive of the First District, represented by Nicholas Longworth, which has a larger percentage of black voters than any other district in the State. In the Third District, represented by John E. Harding, there are 1946 negro voters. Mr. Harding's plurality at the last election was 1730. In the Seventh, or Springfield, District, represented by General J. Warren Keifer, 2923 votes were cast by negroes at the last election, and General Keifer's majority was only 227.

The district of Representative Alvert Douglass of Chillicothe, the Eleventh, contains 1758 negro voters, and Mr. Douglass's majority at the last election was only 320. Representative Grant E. Mauser's district, the Thirteenth, has 419 black votes, and gave its Congressman a plurality of 273. Beman G. Dawes of Marietta represents the Fifteenth District, which is made up of five counties. His plurality at the last election was 1419, and 960 colored voters were enlisted for his success. There are 796 black voters in the Eighteenth District, now represented by James Kennedy of Youngstown, whose plurality at the last election was 1844.

It will be readily seen from these figures that in all of the districts enumerated the success of the Republican nominee depends largely upon the colored vote.

It rests with Senator Foraker to say the "word in season" that will reassure the colored voter, and there need not be much doubt that he will say it.

It is to be hoped that we shall see no domestic discord in the ranks of the Socialist party. Here at least there should be that ecstatic harmony that will be a foretaste of a Socialist future for civilization. But so far the evidences of harmony are not encouraging. Already there are two candidates in the field, and they are both equipped with the necessary credentials in the shape of a prison record. But Mr. Dehs incurred the penalty of jail for the unimportant offense of contempt of court, whereas Mr. De Leon, who looks down upon Mr. Dehs as an aristocrat, has actually killed his man during a recent strike. It is true that Mr. De Leon is under the constitutional age and that his present term of imprisonment is for twenty-five years, but these are matters of small importance compared with the assertion of a great principle. The favor of the Socialists naturally goes toward Mr. De Leon, and Mr. Dehs's humble claims can hardly be said to be in serious competition with those of a real man-killer in the cause of human brotherhood.

Hobson's anti-Japanese speech at Denver was remarkable for the single fact that he ventured to quote—or to profess to quote—a direct statement by President Roosevelt. Hobson has made many speeches of this kind, some of them even more inflammatory, but this is the first time that the chief executive has been dragged into the fray. Hobson accused the Japanese of coveting the Pacific slope and described the San Francisco school incident as one of the most humiliating experiences of the Anglo-Saxon people. War, he said, was only averted because President Roosevelt was noble enough "to lie down and eat dirt" when it became necessary to do so to avert a disaster.

The New York Times, describing the incident, goes on to say:

But more than this announcement the authoritative revelation of special information an incident of the morning session of the convention lends weight to what Hobson had to say. It came toward the close of the speech of Theodore Bell, the temporary chairman, who had conferred with William J. Bryan on the speech which is to be the keynote of Bryan's campaign.

"On the homestead of the Pacific will be enacted the mighty commercial struggles of the future," said Mr. Bell, "and the interests of American commerce will demand that an adequate naval strength be maintained in the waters of the Pacific to protect our expanding commerce. This magnificent Western country of ours has not only proved attractive to our own people and the other white nations of the earth, but it has also proved alluring to the brown and yellow races of the East."

Thus far Mr. Bell was following literally the text of his speech as he had prepared it before consultation with Bryan at Lincoln. But now he went further, and interjected a sentence referring to the passage of the Chinese exclusion act, declaring that there should be also enacted a law for the exclusion of other Asiatics.

It was a direct reference to the demand of organized labor for a Japanese exclusion act, and it was met immediately by cheers from the crowd.

That, of course, is exactly what it was. It was not only a direct reference to the demand of organized labor, but a direct bid for it. That President Roosevelt sometimes says things of amazing and impulsive indiscretion to even casual visitors is one of the commonplaces of the White House, but that he should give to such a frivolous chatterbox as Hobson the chance to repeat a confidence is almost past credence.

The Democrats are early in the field with their campaign literature. The first tract of some 386 pages has been issued. It is bound in green cloth, typical no doubt of the state of mind of those who expect a Democratic success. The tract includes Mr. Bryan's speech "Thou Shalt Not Steal," Judge Parker's vindication from the New York Sun, a section specially devoted to labor, and another one full of convincing reasons why the Federal judges should be restrained. Then there is a chapter on the election of United States senators, seventy-eight pages devoted to the tariff and the trusts, and a bulky section on financial conditions. Commenting on this publication, the New York Evening Post says:

To appeal to the discontented was ever Mr. Bryan's best play, and the Commoner, in its every issue, shows a grave and fitting concern for the empty dinner-pail. Republican extravagance, too, is to be one of the important points to be assaulted. It is the very first subject touched upon in the book, which is not without some skill in arrangement. But if there were a dozen such volumes, in all the colors of the rainbow, it would still be plain that this campaign is once more to turn largely upon personalities rather than principles.

It is noteworthy that Mr. Bryan's newspaper, the Commoner, is already arranging for its post-mortem condition in case its demise should be necessitated by Mr. Bryan's election. It has been arranged that in this event the Commoner will suspend publication and the business manager is now putting aside a fund to be used in reimbursing subscribers for unexpired subscriptions. A suspension under such circumstances would be unique in American journalism, but the danger is not a pressing one.

New York contains 8000 lawyers, 5000 actors, 3000 actresses, 6000 artists, 10,000 musicians, 15,000 stenographers, 6900 salesmen and saleswomen, 1900 farmers, 1600 undertakers, and 852 female barbers.

A new paper called Chinese Public Opinion, written in English and managed by Chinese, has just appeared in Peking.

EXIT THE DIAMOND MAKER.

Lemoine Disappears, to the Regret of the Magistrate and the Rage of His Wife.

So Lemoine, the diamond maker, has vanished and without leaving even a single gem as a pledge of his affections. That is the bare fact, and as there is no tax upon conclusions, we may draw them freely to any extent that we wish.

There was never an alchemist of the Middle Ages who produced half such a sensation as Lemoine. Those who owned diamonds were afraid of him because he said that he would make their sparkling stones as cheap as pebbles upon the beach. Those who had no diamonds looked upon Lemoine with a credulous curiosity. In fact, it is safe to say that most people believed in him more or less, because most people were unaware that he had already been in prison and that his reputation was not a savory one. And why should not people believe in him? The artificial diamond is a fact in science. No miracle was involved. Scientists were disposed to look upon the claim with benevolence, while no less an authority than Lord Armstrong was confident that Lemoine had made diamonds in his presence. The vein of superstition that runs more or less strongly in 90 per cent of the human race gave to Lemoine a place in the popular credulity. Perhaps he would have found nearly the same place had he professed to have discovered the philosopher's stone or the elixir of life. We believe in all these things just as fervently as ever we did, but it is no longer fashionable to confess it. Voilà tout.

It will be remembered that Lemoine met his Waterloo in the person of Sir Julius Wernher, who is practically the owner of the De Beers diamond fields in South Africa. Now there was a time when Sir Julius Wernher himself believed in Lemoine, for did he not offer him a price for his secret and even pay a portion of it in advance? It was only when the South African magnate discovered that Lemoine had been in prison that his eyes were opened, although there is no logical connection between a prison record and an inability to make diamonds. But, however that may be, Sir Julius Wernher prosecuted Lemoine for fraud and that interesting adventurer found himself once more amid the familiar surroundings of a prison.

Now it was obvious even to a judge that Lemoine's ability or inability to make diamonds was the one point at issue. If he could really make diamonds, then he had a genuine secret that he had a right to sell. If he could not make diamonds, then he was selling a secret that he did not possess and that still remained the exclusive property of nature. But it was not so evident to the judicial mind that so long as Lemoine was in durance vile it was quite out of his power to prove anything at all, and so there were long interrogations in court, all tending may be to prove that Lemoine was not exactly entitled to wear the white flower of a blameless life, but leaving his diamond-making capacities exactly where they were before.

Lemoine saw his opportunity and played up to it. He asserted and reiterated with every appearance of conscious and injured rectitude that he could indeed make diamonds, but not, alas, in a prison cell nor from such ingredients as prison fare. "Release me under supervision," he said in effect. "Give me the use of a laboratory and an electric furnace and I will soon show you what I can do. In a prison cell I can do nothing." Evidently Lemoine was no true magician. Cagliostro under similar durance vile in the Castle of St. Angelo and without any appliances whatever made a steel stiletto from a rusty nail.

The plea was so far successful that Lemoine was actually released, in spite of the frantic protests of Sir Julius Wernher. He was not only released, but a laboratory and a furnace were placed at his disposition and a date set for the further hearing, a hearing that should have been enlivened by the production of diamonds, hot, as it were, from the cow. That date was June 17, but Lemoine himself was the only missing feature from the landscape. The magistrate was there, Sir Julius Wernher was there, but Lemoine was represented by an explanatory letter to the judge which may as well be given in extenso:

PARIS, June 16, 1908.

I shall not present myself before you on June 17. I have not obtained in the laboratory at Saint Denis the results that I expected, and, thanks to the manoeuvres of the other side, Mme. Clarke will no longer allow me to use her laboratory. I must therefore go elsewhere to continue my studies. If I succeed I shall bring to you a diamond as the result of my researches. I take this resolution to go in view of the rumor that I am about to be arrested.

In view of the fact that the bird had flown, the only thing to be done was to open the sealed envelope containing the great secret, the envelope that had been guarded by the bank with such jealous care. But by this time the hope of a great revelation had dwindled sadly. If Lemoine himself was unable to obtain from his formula the expected results, what chance remained for any one else? But the envelope nevertheless was solemnly opened and its contents given to the world. Henceforth we can all make diamonds at home so long as the supply of sugar holds out and we have an electric furnace to heat it in. It may be that even the electric furnace is a superfluity and that the common or garden cooking oven would do just as well. But here is the formula itself. Heaven forbid that it should be kept from a waiting world:

The undersigned, Henri Lemoine, declares that the following is the procedure for making the diamond:

- (1) Procure an electric oven.
- (2) Take some pulverized carbon of sugar.

- (3) Place the carbon of sugar in a crucible.
- (4) Place the crucible in the oven and beat it with a current of from 1500 to 1800 amperes under a tension of 110 volts.
- (5) When this temperature is reached apply pressure to the cover of the crucible.
- (6) The diamonds are made. It is only necessary to take them out.

What could be more simple? But simplicity is always derided by the ignorant, and when the formula was read aloud the report says that there was laughter—on rit.

The aftermath of this curious affair is not quite so laughable. First of all, the examining magistrate finds himself in serious trouble for the laxity in supervision that has allowed an apparent criminal to escape. Secondly, Mme. Lemoine professes to be unaware of her husband's whereabouts and has even brought an action against him for divorce. Common rumor has it that before his departure Lemoine demanded money from his wife and used violence in order to extort it. That may, of course, be an invention of the enemy, but Mme. Lemoine is certainly in earnest and has entrusted her affairs to a well-known attorney.

And so the curtain descends upon the last of the alchemists. Rather, let me say, the most recent, for as long as human credulity remains at its present undiminished volume, so long will such claimants as Lemoine receive respectful hearing and continue to grow and wax fat upon human folly.

PARIS, June 21, 1908.

ST. MARTIN.

OLD FAVORITES.

The Happy Warrior.

[The most beautiful eulogy written by William Wordsworth was read at the funeral of Grover Cleveland. It was a remarkable coincidence or concurrence in the minds of the three persons nearest to Mr. Cleveland that the poem should be chosen separately and individually by the three as the one human expression most fitting to portray the life and character of the dead. Without any suggestion that a poem should be read at the funeral, the Wordsworth poem was selected by Mrs. Cleveland, the widow; by Rose Elizabeth Cleveland, the sister of the dead President, and by Dr. Henry van Dyke, who was closer to Mr. Cleveland than any other friend in the last few weeks of the fatal illness.]

Who is the happy warrior? Who is he
That every man in arms should wish to be?—
It is the generous spirit who, when brought
Among the tasks of real life, hath wrought
Upon the plan that pleased his childish thought;
Whose high endeavors are an inward light,
That makes the path before him always bright;
Who, with a natural instinct to discern
What knowledge can perform, is diligent to learn;
Abides by this resolve, and stops not there,
But makes his moral being his prime care:
Who, doomed to go in company with Pain
And Fear, and Bloodshed, miserable train!
Turns his necessity to glorious gain;
In face of these doth exercise a power
Which is our human nature's highest dower;
Controls them, and subdues, transmutes, bereaves
Of their bad influence, and their good receives;
By objects which might force the soul to abate
Her feeling rendered more compassionate;
Is placable, because occasions rise
So often that demand such sacrifice;
More skillful in self-knowledge, even more pure,
As tempted more; more able to endure,
As more exposed to suffering and distress;
Thence, also, more alive to tenderness.—
'Tis he whose law is reason; who depends
Upon that law as on the best of friends;
Whence, in a state where men are tempted still
To evil for a guard against worse ill,
And what in quality or act is best
Doth seldom on a right foundation rest,
He fixes good on good alone, and owes
To virtue every triumph that he knows:—
Who, if he rise to station of command,
Rises by open means, and there will stand
On honorable terms, or else retire,
And in himself possess his own desire:
Who comprehends his trust, and to the same
Keeps faithful with a singleness of aim,
And therefore does not stoop, nor lie in wait
For wealth, or honors, or for worldly state;
Whom they must follow; on whose head must fall,
Like showers of manna, if they come at all:
Whose powers shed round him in the common strife,
Or mild concerns of ordinary life,
A constant influence, a peculiar grace;
But who, if he be called upon to face
Some awful moment to which Heaven has joined Great issues, good or bad for human-kind,
Is happy as a lover, and attired
With sudden brightness, like a man inspired;
And, through the heat of conflict, keeps the law
In calmness made, and sees what he foresaw;
Or, if an unexpected call succeed,
Come when it will, is equal to the need:—
He who, though thus endued, as with a sense
And faculty for storm and turbulence,
Is yet a soul whose master-bias leans
To homely pleasures and to gentle scenes;
Sweet images! which, whereso'er he be,
Are at his heart; and such fidelity
It is his darling passion to approve;
More brave for this, that he hath much to love.—
'Tis, finally, the man who, lifted high,
Conspicuous object in a nation's eye,
Or left unthought-of in obscurity.—
Who, with a toward or untoward lot,
Prosperous or adverse, to his wish or not,—
Plays, in the many games of life, that one
Where what he most doth value must he won:
Whom neither shape of danger can dismay,
Nor thought of tender happiness betray;
Who, not content that former worth stand fast,
Looks forward, persevering to the last,
From well to better, daily self-surpassed;
Who, whether praise of him must walk the earth
Forever, and to noble deeds give birth,
Or he must go to dust without his fame,
And leave a dead, unprofitable name,—
Finds comfort in himself and in his cause:
And, while the mortal mist is gathering, draws
His breath in confidence of Heaven's applause:—
This is the happy warrior; this is he Whom every man in arms should wish to be.
—William Wordsworth.

Coney Island is sometimes visited by 500,000 people a day.

POLITICO-PERSONAL.

The municipal elections in Panama, preliminary to the selection of a president of the republic, resulted in a victory for Domingo de Obaldia, the Independent candidate.

It is remarked that Judge Parker showed considerable courage in going to Denver and facing such gibes as that of the Western wit who recalled that, in 1904, Parker was "defeated by acclamation."

Of the members of the two Cleveland Cabinets, ten survive their chief. These are Richard Olney, John G. Carlisle, Charles S. Fairchild, Judson Harmon, W. T. Vilas, Don M. Dickinson, Norman J. Coleman, Hilary A. Herbert, David R. Francis, and Hoke Smith.

It is generally agreed that the salute of forty-six guns, which the President has given the District of Columbia Democrats permission to fire in celebration of Mr. Bryan's nomination from the Washington Monument grounds, will just about express Mr. Roosevelt's personal satisfaction with the choice of the Democratic convention.

Senator Foraker of Ohio delivered an address before the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati and thrilled his audience with the earnestness and eloquence of his tribute to the personality of Mr. Taft. He pronounced the Republican nominee for President "a man who, in character, is all that could be desired." He concluded, however, with this mystifying statement: "But unfortunately there is one fatal weakness in the candidate in that he favors a continuance of the so-called Roosevelt policies, of which we have already had far too much."

The twenty-three delegates to the national convention in New York City of the Socialist Labor Party nominated as its candidate for President of the United States Martin R. Preston of Nevada, who is serving a sentence of twenty-five years in the Nevada State Prison for having shot and killed a restaurant keeper, Anton Silva, a little more than a year ago. The nomination was unanimous and was made regardless of the fact that a convict has no civil rights. The convict, however, with a fine disregard for additional notoriety, has declined the nomination.

One of the victims of the President's order to army officers to ride fifteen miles or retire was Colonel William L. Marshall of the Corps of Engineers, who has done much good work for a long time past in the improvement of New York's harbor. When it was known that he was slated for retirement because of Mr. Roosevelt's order, much pressure was brought to bear, and an exception was made in his behalf. Now the President selects Colonel Marshall to be the new chief of engineers to fill the place caused by the retirement of General Mackenzie.

A Washington newspaper, the Herald, has found great consolation and much encouragement in the fact that the hospital ship Relief, commanded by Surgeon Stokes, has got along very well since it joined the fleet, has received and treated many patients, and has fallen into no trouble of any kind. All of which is accepted by the Herald as triumphantly disposing of the gloomy apprehensions of the line officers, Admiral Brownson in particular, and as justifying the course of President Roosevelt, who overruled Brownson and ushered in Surgeon-General Rixey's experiment.

The presence recently in Bath, Maine, of Chief Justice Melville W. Fuller of the United States Supreme Court, who attended the Bowdoin commencement, recalled that the first meeting of the Maine Press Association was held there fifty years ago. Chief Justice Fuller was then a reporter on the New Age, at Augusta, and James G. Blaine was on the staff of the Kennebec Journal. Both of these men were present at the meeting and were prominent in the organization of the typographical society, as it was generally styled at that time. The old organization is still in existence.

Murat Halstead, for nearly sixty years a well-known and forceful journalist, died in Cincinnati July 2, aged seventy-nine. Mr. Halstead's father was a North Carolinian and a Democrat, but Murat, born and reared in the Miami Valley of Ohio, early became a Republican, with which party he was always prominently identified, though for the most part of his career a thorn in its flesh. A farmer's son, graduated from a small college near Cincinnati, he drifted into newspaper work, and in 1854 became part owner of the Cincinnati Commercial and eventually its ruling spirit. He first attracted national attention by his brilliant and graphic word pictures of the national conventions of 1856, when Buchanan and Fremont were made the standard-bearers of their parties. In 1872 he opposed a second term for Grant, on whom his attacks during the war were reprinted in the Cincinnati Enquirer under the headline: "Letters of a Dastardly Scoundrel!" He was only thirty-four years old when in 1863 he wrote articles and letters attacking Lincoln, Sherman, Grant, and other leaders and soldiers, and these opinions of his more youthful days he is said to have largely recanted in his later years. The Commercial was consolidated in the eighties with the Gazette, and for many years the Commercial-Gazette, under Mr. Halstead, was one of the leading party papers of the country. Mr. Halstead was nominated for Minister to Germany by President Harrison in 1889, but because of his attack on his party's leaders in the Senate he failed of confirmation and his aspirations for a diplomatic post failed.

THE HACIENDA HOLDS CARNIVAL.

By Jerome A. Hart.

XXII.

The mild winter of the favored coast region was drawing to an end. Alden could scarcely believe that such a season was really winter. There had been no snow, no frost, no hail. There had been many days of sunshine, punctuated with frequent days of rain—not the harsh, biting northern storms of less favored latitudes, but soft, slow-dropping showers borne on mild breezes from the south. The great plain, which a few weeks before was sere and brown, was now richly carpeted with green, while the foothills were of a paler green as they melted into the distant mountains; these were still brown, but purpled by distance as they climbed up from the foothills until at last their soaring peaks were crowned with snow. But there was no snow in the valley.

Arthur remarked to Helmont on the oddity of a winter without ice and snow. "Is this a typical season?" he inquired.

"It is our valley winter. Every ten or twelve years a sprinkle of snow falls in the valley, but it melts when it touches the ground. The rains are never cold—they come on warm winds from the South Seas—from the tropical latitudes of the Pacific."

"And are not your north winds cold?" asked Arthur. "They are chilling winds—peculiar, but not precisely cold. They seem to blow from the Arctic, but in crossing certain desert regions they lose their humidity and thus are less cold. They are dry, desiccating, and electrical."

"This is a highly favored land. We are nearing the end of February, yet you seem to have had no winter. Is March as much dreaded as it is elsewhere?"

"No, it is practically the first month of the spring time. In your Northern States the spring is hoped for in May, but often does not come till June. Here it begins in March."

"I am told that the southern Italians use the word 'April' as we use 'May,'" remarked Arthur, "to typify the springtime of life. Here, by the calendar, spring must be made a month earlier."

"Yes, and apropos of the calendar, the day after tomorrow is the first day of Lent; it is also the 23d of February, the eve of a Mexican independence celebration; and today is the 22d of February, anniversary of the birth of your great patriot, General Washington. I am going to combine these three great days, and celebrate them all in one. We shall have a grand carnival celebration, beginning with a banquet in the potio, at which will be served all manner of delicacies strange to your Atlantic palate."

"And my maid tells me that you are going to follow the banquet with a ball!" cried Diana, who had heard his last words as she approached. "Oh, I hope it is true!"

"It is entirely true," said Helmont, smiling at her eagerness, "and what is more, I have secured the famous band of Indian boys who were trained by the padres of Santa Ysabel to play the guitar, the violin, and the trumpet. These 'boys' are no longer very youthful—most of them are over fifty now—but they play excellently, and they know the music of all the Spanish and Mexican dances."

"And only to think that I shall not be able to dance!" cried Diana, "for I don't know the dances. Oh, how I wish I knew them!"

"Your maid Luisa will teach you the ordinary ones in an hour or two, such as the contradanza, the joto, and the like, which everybody dances. Of course the more elaborate ones, such as the jarabe, can only be danced by practiced performers."

"And you really believe I can learn the dances so easily?" inquired Diana, with delight.

"Beyond doubt; the contradanza and similar ones are very simple—no more difficult than the quadrilles you Americans dance. But a more serious matter is your costume. Come now, you wouldn't think of going through Spanish dances in anything but a Spanish dress!"

Diana's face fell. "I am afraid I shall have to," she said at last, after a pause, "or else not dance at all."

"But surely you would not really attempt the Jota Aragonesa, say, that beautiful Spanish dance, in a prosaic every-day American costume?"

Again Diana was silent. Arthur looked at her with concern and at Helmont with indignation. Arthur was too little experienced in women's ways to know what profound importance even the wisest of them attach to a question of dress. Hence his concern over Diana's distress was only equaled by his indignation over the captain's enjoyment of it.

"There, there!" cried the mocking Helmont; "don't look so woeful, Doña Diana. Cheer up! I have a surprise for you. What would you say if I were to give you a locked chest—a mysterious chest—a cedar chest full of finery made for a carnival dress just like this one, which took place some score of years ago?"

"Oh, you dear good captain!" cried Diana, clapping her hands. "I knew you could not be so cruel as you seemed. Whose was it?"

"The chest belonged to Doña Elena de Kostrominof, wife of the commander of the Russian fortress on the coast."

"And you say it was never worn? Why did she never wear it?"

"When the Russians withdrew suddenly from the coast the chest was accidentally left behind in one of the buildings inside the Russian fort. I was an intimate friend of the baron and Doña Elena—they gave me all this quaint Russian furniture you see about the Hacienda. The baron also conveyed to me all the land and buildings, hoping that the title might vest in me when the questions between the Russian and Mexican governments should be settled. My servants found the chest when I took possession. I endeavored to send the chest after Doña Elena, but I learned that my friends did not reach their Russian home. The ship on which they sailed was never heard of again."

"And you did not know who were her heirs?"

"No—besides, the chest contained such purely personal belongings of the poor dead lady that I thought it no great harm to leave them here. And here for all these years the chest has remained."

"And where is it now?" cried Diana, her eyes sparkling with excitement.

"I have ordered it sent to your room, and here is the key."

Seizing the quaint bronze key, Diana gave him an impetuous hug, and darted away.

"It was a very happy chance that you kept the chest," observed Arthur; "just see how much more pleasure it will give now to Miss Diana than to some unappreciative Russian relatives."

"And to us as well, for merely to observe her delight in this ancient finery will give us pleasure too."

"And the carnival, the banquet, and the dance, according to your arbitrary calendar, are to begin when?"

"Tonight, now. As my Mexicans and Indians all believe that Lent should begin with gorging, prepare yourself for a very long bill of fare."

It was long, indeed, the menu which the majordomo had prepared. It lay before the guests of honor. At the places of the pañonos it was not laid, nor was it missed. They could not have read it had it been there, and would not have read it had they been able. To their simple minds, the food was there to be eaten—all of it, and all of every dish; to select from such a mass of good things would have seemed to them merely a waste of time.

The table for the captain and his guests was laid on a raised dais across the head of the potio, while at right angles to it ran the long tables at which sat scores of hacienda servants. Their dark-skinned faces were lit up with expectation, and the decorous silence which prevailed among them as they filed in was only broken when the captain gave the signal for all to seat themselves. At the side of the potio was another dais, on which were stationed the musical Indian boys from Santa Ysabel. As is the way among more civilized circles, the guests only waited for the music to begin to attempt to drown it with their talk. The most democratic freedom prevailed between the waiters and the guests whom they served—that is, at the tables below the dais. The guests of honor were waited on by older and more dignified servitors who were under the severe eye of the majordomo.

"There are two kinds of soup offered me, captain," said Mrs. Lyndon, in perplexity, "which would you recommend?"

"You had better take this—this sopa de tortillas. It is very much like the French consommé aux crêpes, except that the chopped-up pancakes are replaced by maize tortillos."

"What is the other soup?" inquired Arthur.

"It is very good, but a trifle too hearty to begin dinner with. It is called here puchero, although it is very similar to what in Spain is called olla podrida."

"It looks much like the French bouilli," commented Mrs. Lyndon.

"Yes; it is about the same—the meat and vegetables of the pot-au-feu."

"Doesn't this look nice!" cried Diana, helping herself to a dish proffered by the majordomo; "it looks like jelly roll!"

"Be careful!" warned Helmont. But he was too late—poor Diana had already taken a mouthful, and was forced to cool her burning mouth with water.

"Those are enchilados," he explained, "tortillas or pancakes with chile peppers rolled inside and cooked in milk. They look enticing, and they have a bland first taste which is seductive, but they are too fiery for any but Spanish tastes."

"Exactly what is a tortilla, captain?" inquired Arthur.

"You speak as if it were identical with a pancake."

"Similar, but not identical; the tortilla is a cake of unleavened dough, usually made by beating a ball of dough out thin between the hands. It is a substitute for bread, fork, and spoon; the natives use it as a utensil to dip up meat and gravy, and then eat the utensil."

"So I see," said Mrs. Lyndon, "but why are these tortillos of different colors?"

"Those are made of maize, these of wheat flour. The latter, the tortillas de horina, are a luxury, which only the well-to-do can afford. Yet, if you will notice, the natives are eating the maize tortillas because they are used to them."

"Can it be possible, captain, that this profusion of good things all comes from your rancho?" asked Arthur.

"Nearly everything, although when the dessert and the sweets come on you will see figs and dates from old Mexico. Then there are pomegranates from San Gabriel, and the oranges and lemons come from San Dieguito. We grow oranges and lemons here, but they are not so good as those from the south."

"And you have these tropical fruits, as well as those we grow in the Atlantic States. It is marvelous!"

"Yes, we have, in their season, peaches, pears, cherries, plums, apricots, quinces, and apples—although the apples grown further north are better than ours."

"And the staples of the banquet—after what you told me about the number of cattle on your thousand hills, I suppose there is no lack of beef?"

"Oddly enough, our beef is not good. It is tough and stringy. The cattle are really raised for their hides and tallow. Although this country has lived for years by cattle-raising, beef and milk are the poorest of its products. You had better confine yourself to the fowls—wild and tame. The ducks, partridge, and quail are good, as you know, having often eaten of those which my chef prepares. So with chickens and turkeys."

"That turkey the majordomo is about to carve is a perfect symphony in brown," cried Mrs. Lyndon.

"It looks as if it would melt in one's mouth," assented Diana.

"But it won't—very much to the contrary. You must be on your guard today. My chef is a Frenchman, and ordinarily sends to our table dishes intended for delicate palates. But today he is cooking not a la francesco but a la mejicano. The turkeys are probably stuffed with green peppers and garlic, the chickens with garlic and red peppers, while those corn-husk things, called tomoles, contain chopped-up chicken, so peppery that only a poisono could eat one without weeping. Beware!"

"What am I going to eat then?" queried Diana somewhat discontentedly. "I can't eat any more peppery things, for my mouth still burns from the last enchilado."

"You will have to wait for los postres, or the dessert. But were you not used to the Spanish cookery where you lived in Texas?"

"No; our house servants were all negroes, and the cookery was that of the South."

"I would like to try some of these dishes, captain," said Arthur, "but after your warning I hardly dare. What is this?"

"That you may take safely; it is colabazitos con queso, or pumpkin cooked with cheese."

"But this is pumpkin or squash too," said Diana, "for the majordomo calls it colabaza en tocha, yet it looks like a sweet."

"So it is—it is made of pumpkin which has been boiled all day in sugar. The Mexicans have a sweet tooth."

"What do I see?" asked Arthur, glaring at a mound of oleaginous-looking brown comestibles, "do I gaze upon the doughnut dear to my childhood?"

Helmont smiled. "You are not mistaken," he said, "they are called buñuelos, but they are sweet dough-cakes cooked in hot lard, and just the same as the New England doughnut."

"New England can not claim the deadly doughnut," interrupted Mrs. Lyndon, "it came either from the Dutch of New Amsterdam or the Dutch of Pennsylvania."

"But don't forget that New England gave us pumpkin pie," said Diana to Mrs. Lyndon, but looking maliciously at Arthur. "I don't know what Mr. Alden will take for dessert—the pumpkin has been cooked with cheese, and there is no mince pie. Besides there were no beans."

"Oh, yes there were," interrupted Helmont, "there could never be a Mexican banquet without beans."

"True—I had forgotten the frijoles," assented Diana, "but of what avail are beans to a Boston man without their kindred pork? Frijoles, frijoles, all around, and not a piece of pork!"

"Alden had better not attack the buñuelos for his dessert," remarked Helmont. "It is an ancient jest, handed down from a remote past, to put wool or cotton in them at carnival time. The elders of course are warned by sad experience not to eat them then; but the rising generation is always caught by the snare."

"That is odd!" cried Arthur, "we have the same joke in New England—it is called the cotton-batting doughnut."

"Then you are already warned! But you'll find a plenty of other things among the sweets. These azucarillas, for example, are sugar biscuits—you melt them in cold water. And there is almost every kind of dulce that can be made out of sugar."

"Hark! What is that?" cried Diana, as a song rose on the air. It was a man's voice:

"Tengo yo un pajarillo
Que el día pasa
Cantando entre las flores
De mi ventana."

"That is the song with which they open el jarabe, the national dance of Mexico. See—there are the couple selected to dance it, on the dais in front of the musicians. It is a long and complicated dance, with many steps; every now and again the music changes, and between these movements the dancers sing verses—little love-songs, like that you just heard."

The majordomo had temporarily left the head of the table, now that the repast was served, and had taken his position in front of the musicians, holding a long wand. With this from time to time he indicated a couple, who obediently rose, and took their places on the dais for the dance.

"The majordomo has taken on new functions," said Diana.

"Yes," assented Mrs. Lyndon, "he is now the floor manager."

"His title is now el Bostanera," explained Helmont, "from the baston or wand he carries. He is the master of ceremonies of the tertulia, or ball."

"And when does the ball begin?" queried Diana, "for I am dying to dance, and to show off my Spanish finery, to which nobody has paid the least attention."

"There will be three or four more dances by couples—the zorrito, the borrego, and probably the fondongo. After that, the general dancing will begin with the jota, which you tell me you have learned?"

"Luisa says I am perfect in it," rejoined Diana triumphantly.

"In that case you may dawn upon us in the dual rôle of the best dancer and the most handsomely dressed lady of the ball. I know of no one who could equal you either in magnificence or in dignity unless it be the majordomo—I beg his pardon, the bastonero. I shall go and ask him to lay aside his wand long enough to dance the jota with Doña Diana. Will you accept my arm, Mrs. Lyndon, and honor the host by taking with him a paseo ceremonioso, or formal promenade, amid his guests?"

Together they left the table of honor and walked slowly down the patio, to where the majordomo was posted, in front of the musicians' stand.

"How very unusual this music all sounds," said Arthur; "it is simple, yet most distinctive. I never heard anything exactly like it before."

"Nearly all their music that I have heard has that peculiarity. It is said to come from the Moorish music of old Spain."

"And what are the words they are singing between the movements of the music?"

"Nearly all love-songs—as the captain said," Diana explained, without amplifying.

"But that song the tail voquero was just singing to his partner with such intensity that the people began laughing—what was that? I heard you humming the melody—you seem to know the song."

"Yes, it is a familiar Spanish love-song," replied Diana, dreamily, "it runs:

"Por una mirada, el mundo;
Por una sonrisa, el cielo;
Por un beso! Yo no sé
Que te diera por un beso."

"And that, translated, means—"

"The musical Spanish verse is very striking, but it does not sound so well in bald English prose," she replied, half reluctantly.

"But what is it literally?" he insisted.

"It might be translated thus: 'For a glance I would give thee the world. For a smile I would give thee the heavens. For a kiss! Ah, what would I not give thee for a kiss!'"

"Upon my word!" cried Mrs. Lyndon, who had just approached, "it is high time I returned, Miss Diana! Explain these terrible words, and relieve the mind of a perhaps careless but still conscientious chaperon!"

Diana blushed and laughed. "I was only translating for Mr. Alden the words of some of these Spanish songs—at his request," she explained.

"From the few words I heard they seem to be too intense for the frigid Anglo-Saxon. But here is your partner for the dance, Diana." And turning, Mrs. Lyndon led forward the majordomo, who was fairly beaming, partly over his official position and partly over the honor of leading out in the dance his master's beautiful young guest.

Diana rose, courtesied in acknowledgment of the majordomo's deep bow, and gave him the tips of her fingers, as he, with leg bent and foot poised on toe like Malvolio, made as if to dart forward, leading her to the centre of the scene.

But Diana made him pause. "Captain," she cried, "you have not noticed my costume. What do you think of it? Am I correct, or am I totally out of drawing?"

Helmont ran his eyes over her critically. "Hum!" said he. "A yellow satin gown cut décolleté; a black ace bolero jacket, or at least the effect, if not the acket; the hair done high with a tortoise-shell comb; he hands in silk mittens, and the feet in high-heeled black kid slippers. All very well, Doña Diana, except he head and the feet."

"What is wrong with them?"

"Only married women wore the high comb, and the lippers for dancing were always heelless and never of eather, but always of satin."

"There were no shoes or slippers in the chest that I ould wear," protested Diana, "so I had to wear my own."

"The cleverest girl in the world can do no more than he can do, captain," concurred Mrs. Lyndon.

Diana signaled to her partner, and the majordomo roudly led her down the floor, while the joleo sounded n either hand.

Arthur gazed admiringly at the beautiful girl, whose uaint dress he had been secretly admiring all the vening. That Helmont should be able to review it oint by point, so coolly and so critically, made im regard that genial gentleman with a species of onder.

But to follow the movements of his satin-clad idol rough the contradanza now took his thoughts away rom the unconscious captain. The Spanish dance, he oted, involved the forming of the couples in two lines ke the Virginia reel, but here all resemblance ceased. he music was waltz time, and each of the graceful gures ended with waltzing.

When the majordomo returned leading his pretty artner back to the table of honor, he bowed profoundly, and then, to Arthur's amazement, he leaned rward, and broke an egg on Diana's head. But from there descended only bits of colored paper. Helmont anded her a basket of similar eggs from the table ehind him, and Diana laughingly returned the majoromo's compliment. All around the potio similar eggs ere being broken in every direction.

"What does that mean?" inquired Arthur of the cap- tain, "is it some sort of religious observance?"

"They call them coscorones; the eggshells are emp- tied, and filled—sometimes with these colored papers or confetti, and sometimes with scented waters. It is a carnival custom you find among all the Latin races, differing only in detail."

The jota followed the controdonza, and after that came dance after dance, some of them set dances in which many joined, others for single couples, such as the bomba, the borrego, and the cobollo. These were accompanied by much singing and rattling of the casta- nets. Thus the night wore on.

It was long past midnight when the sudden arrival of a messenger at the lower end of the potio showed that some news of importance was at hand. Even before he reached the dais where Helmont sat, the messenger's news preceded him. Although Arthur knew little Spanish he could hear the words "el río! el río!" passing from mouth to mouth, and knew that whatever had happened the trouble had to do with the river. The music died away—the dancing stopped. When the messenger had at last made his way through the crowd to where Helmont was, he saluted and briefly delivered his message.

"I feared as much!" cried Helmont, his face cloud- ing.

"What is the matter, captain?" asked Mrs. Lyndon, "has anything serious happened?"

"Word has come from the embarcadera that the river, which for two days has been extremely high, has sud- denly begun to rise about a foot an hour."

"Is there any danger?" she asked.

"Pardon me a moment," Helmont replied, and call- ing the majordomo, gave him some hurried directions; the man nodded, and began shouting in a loud voice, and as he spoke the crowd in the patio started hur- riedly toward the portal.

"I have just ordered all hands to go at once to the river and endeavor to mend the broken levee. Every worker will be useful, whether man or woman. A few minutes of good hard work now may save hours or even days of doubtful labor later on. You ask about danger, Mrs. Lyndon; here at the Hacienda, we are on high ground, and perfectly safe. But with the low- lying valley lands, it is not so; if my people do not succeed in building up the levees sufficiently to check the rising waters the low lands will be inundated. It is not probable that any lives will be lost—all the people in the valley will have time enough to flee to the hills. There may be some cattle lost—there usually are at flood times. But there will be great damage done to the crops, the gardens, the orchards, in the rich valley lands. If the river rises to flood level the water will cover them for days."

"Is it not strange that the river should rise so rapidly?" asked Arthur. "It has been a number of days now since any rain has fallen."

"The swollen waters come from the heavy snow on the high mountains. As I told you, the unseasonably warm weather is melting the snow so rapidly that the choked up river-bed can not carry it away."

"Look!" cried Diana, "the patio is deserted. We are the only ones left."

"Yes, they have all gone to the riverside, and by now are working hard at the levees. It will be a very ani- mated scene. Mrs. Lyndon, you and Diana had better accompany me there, probably you would not sleep much if you were to go to bed. I am sorry you can't go, Alden, but after midnight bed is the place for a convalescent. Besides, you would be of no use as a flood-fighter, being on the sick-list."

Arthur rather ruefully admitted the truth of Hel- mont's remark, and bade farewell to the ladies, as they prepared for their trip to the levee.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Copyright 1908 by Jerome A. Hart.

Kingsville, Texas, claims to have as a resident the largest female landholder in the United States. Her name is Mrs. King, and she is a widow. Her possessions aggregate the enormous total of 1,470,000 acres and she lives in a palatial ranch home in Kingsville. But recently she added 190,000 acres to her holdings with as little fuss as the average persons buys a small tract. Most of her land is valued at from $15 to $20 an acre, and her total wealth, including cattle and other propertv. is estimated at $30,000,000. Her estate is managed by her son-in-law, but Mrs. King is consulted about every important matter. Agricultural operations are carried on on an extensive scale, and live stock is raised in great numbers on the vast ranch. Mrs. King inherited a large part of her property from her late husband, but she has been a shrewd investor and has more than doubled her inheritance. During the early days she was one of the settlers who experienced great hardships, the country then being infested with Mexican bandits and all other classes of criminals. There is another Texas woman who owns over 1,500,000 acres of land in the famous Panhandle district, and she also keeps a fine home in London. She is a royal entertainer and always brings with her from Europe mem- bers of the nobility as her guests.

Some of the leading shoe dealers in Chicago predict that many women in that city will wear sandals this summer. Some of the dealers have already laid in big supplies to meet the demand which they expect.

In New York a child is born every four minutes, and a death occurs every seven minutes.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Dr. Sigismund Tarrasch and Dr. Emanuel Lasker will meet to contest the chess championship of the world next month.

Mme. Helena Modjeska has finished writing her "Memories and Impressions" and they will be brought out in two volumes.

The Kaiser advocates a tax on bachelors and thus joins President Roosevelt in a movement primarily intended to encourage matrimony and family homes.

Tommaso Salvini, the Italian tragedian, will soon reach the eightieth anniversary of his birth, and his countrymen are preparing for a celebration in his honor.

Mrs. Carrie Nation is credited with having made (one could hardly say earned) about $200,000 going about the country smashing bars and costly saloon fittings with her little hatchet.

John Ericsson, the city engineer of Chicago, has been invited to return to Sweden to become the director of public works at Stockholm. The position pays a salary of $7000 a year and a house.

Miss Mary E. Miller, a Chicago attorney and coun- selor, has just received a fee of $30,000 for gaining a suit for the grandchildren of William Bross, for the distribution of his $3,000,000 estate.

Princess Philippe of Wurtemberg, who was an arch- duchess of Austria, makes rubber stockings and other aids for the wounded, and she receives royalties from several of the war ministers of Europe.

May Murray, a successful actress in New York, has forsaken the theatrical field to control the coat-room privilege in a big hotel, paying $8000 a year for the business. She expects to receive at least $10,000 a year in fees and tips.

Lord Wolseley, who has just passed his seventy-fifth birthday, has probably had more narrow escapes from death than any other living British officer. In his younger days his lordship was so daring that he earned from the Ashantis the title of "The General Who Never Stops."

Miss Flora Wilson, daughter of the Secretary of Agriculture, recently made her appearance as a singer at a concert in Paris. Miss Wilson is a pupil of Jean de Reszke. A fine audience greeted her and her success was pronounced. She will make her début in opera next year.

Professor E. D. Campbell, director of the chemical laboratories in the University of Michigan, lost his sight eighteen years ago through an accident. In spite of his affliction he has taken a high place in education and has made original researches of much value, especially in the chemistry of iron and cement.

Dr. James Augustus Henry Murray, one of the great scholars of England and famous as editor of the Oxford New English Dictionary, has been made a knight by King Edward. Mr. Percy William Bunting, editor of the Contemporary Review, who has reached the age of seventy-two, was also made a knight on the king's recent birthday anniversary.

President G. Stanley Hall of Clark University announces with solemnity that college professors must organize for self-protection and boycott all news gather- ers as enemies to academic dignity and weight. He says: "College professors must do something to keep themselves from being made ridiculous. The time has come when a college professor can not act his mouth without being made to look, speak, and open like a fool."

Mrs. Constance Faunt LeRoy Runcie of St. Joseph, Missouri, one of the honorary vice-presidents of the Federation of Woman's Clubs, was the founder of the first woman's club in the United States—the Minerva Club, organized under its written constitution at New Harmony, Indiana, in 1859. Mrs. Runcie is the grand- daughter of the celebrated philanthropist, Robert Owen of New Lanark, Scotland. A woman's club had not been heard of when the Minerva sprang into existence, it preceding Sorosis of New York by nine years.

Thomas Hill, well known as a painter of Yosemite views, died July 1 at Raymond, near the famous valley which he did so much to bring to the world's attention. Although seventy-nine years old, he kept his studio at Wawona, in the Tuolumne big tree grove, and worked there regularly on his paintings. Hill's first work to attract attention was a view of the Yosemite which hangs in the Crocker Art Gallery at Sacramento. He painted the Yosemite in all the seasons, and he also made striking canvases of the Yellowstone, Muir Glacier, in Alaska, and other Pacific Coast scenes. He made a fortune, but lost it in the collapse of Bonanza mining stock.

Selig Brodsky, a Russian Jew, whose father was hunted from Odessa and found refuge for himself and family in the East End of London and who keeps an old clothes store at Mile End, has won the place of "senior wrangler" at Cambridge University, the highest honor in the mathematical tripos. The first to congratulate him was Lord Rothschild. It is a coveted honor at the present time, for next year will see the last "senior wrangler," as the tripos mathematical Cambridge will be brought in harmony with that of Oxford. The distinction has existed ever since the year 1735, and some of the most eminent men of the times have been "wranglers."

IN HONOR OF WASHINGTON.

Owen Wister Describes for Us a National Progenitor of Flesh and Blood.

In his preface to a very choice little volume Mr. Owen Wister explains that his full length portrait of Washington was intended to be within the compass of an evening's reading. That such brevity was beyond his power is a matter for congratulation. His subject would have been marred by too much compression. As it is, we may well wish that his sketch were longer and that he had availed himself even more fully of a bappy vein of inspiration that may have been worked before, but not with such a bountiful yield.

Mr. Wister had no intention to write a life of Washington, but only to reanimate that great figure with the human attributes of which a century of hero worship has robbed it. Irving attempted something of the kind, but he did it with "inferential deprecations." Now the time has come for a further "unfreezing of Washington" and for a better revelation of a man who has been held up to our admiration "rigid with congealed virtue, ungenial, unreal," and for whom our regard has been "without interest, sympathy, heart—or, indeed, belief."

How far the real and human Washington has suffered by that same idolatry against which the Congress of his own day so fanatically protested is made clear enough by Mr. Wister. Even his letters have been tampered with in the effort to remove from them whatever might seem incompatible with the superhuman. When Washington wrote "our rascally privateersmen go on at the old rate" the word "rascally" was edited out of the printing as indecorous. Where Washington says of a contemplated appropriation "one hundred thousand dollars will be but a flea bite" his words are changed to "one hundred thousand dollars will be totally inadequate." And so on, and so on. Mr. Wister says truly that it thrills a true American to the marrow to learn that George Washington, the ideal, was "a man also with a hearty laugh, with a love of the theatre, with a white hot temper," and one moreover who could use iron-clad language upon occasion, as when he said of Edmund Randolph "a damner scoundrel God Almighty never permitted to disgrace humanity."

And so it is to this process of rehumanization that Mr. Wister addresses himself. For his purpose he divides his subject into seven epochs—"Ancestry," "The Boy," "The Young Man," "The Married Man," "The Commander," "The President," and "Immortality."

The curriculum through which the boy Washington had to pass was quite of a nature to develop grace of heart if not of head. His schoolmaster taught civility as a branch of education, just as he taught arithmetic and spelling. Civility is no longer a branch of education and we are tempted sometimes to wonder if arithmetic and spelling are still included. Here are some extracts from Washington's copy-book:

"Be not immodest in urging your friends to discover a secret."

"Wear not your Cloths foul, unript, or dusty."

"Sleep not when others Speak, Sit not when others stand, Speak not when you should hold your Peace, Walk not when others Stop."

"Superfluous Compliments and all Affectation of Ceremony are to be avoided, yet where due they are not to be Neglected."

"Read no Letters, Books or Papers in Company, but when there is a Necessity for the doing of it you must ask leave: come not near the Books or Writings of Another so as to read them unless desired . . . look not nigh when another is writing a Letter."

"Speak not of doleful things in a time of mirth."

"Talk not with meat in your mouth."

"Labour to keep alive in your breast that little Spark of Celestial fire called Conscience."

These are all good and sound rules, although some of them are today more honored in the breach than in the observance.

Of Washington's humor there are many instances in Mr. Wister's book. We are told that his laughter may be likened to a big bell that needs a good, strong hand to make it sound, and then rings out far over the open fields. Of his sense of the ludicrous we have an example in the life of Jeremiah Smith, who was a visitor at Mount Vernon in 1797:

Judge Marshall and Judge Washington (the general's nephew Bushrod) were on their way to Mount Vernon, attended by a servant who had the charge of a large portmanteau containing their clothes. At their last stopping place there happened to be a Scotch pedler, with a pack of goods which resembled their portmanteau. The roads were very dusty, and a little before reaching the general's, they, thinking it hardly respectful to present themselves as they were, stopped in a neighboring wood to change their clothes. The colored man got down his portmanteau, and just as they had prepared themselves for the new garments, out flew some fancy soap and various other articles belonging to the pedler, whose goods had been brought on instead of their own. They were so struck by the consternation of their servant, and the ludicrousness of their own position, being there naked, that they burst into loud and repeated shouts of laughter. Washington, who happened to be out upon his grounds near by, heard the noise, and came to see what might be the occasion of it, when, finding his friends in that strange plight, he was so overcome with laughter, that he actually rolled upon the ground.

Rolled upon the ground! And yet Judge Marshall, who saw this feat, was still able to testify that he was "never free from restraint in Washington's presence—never felt quite at ease, such was Washington's stateliness and dignity." Mr. Smith says the same thing. "He was always dignified, and one stood a little in awe of him":

"A little in awe"; again that touch, given above by Judge Marshall, and by so many others—in fact, unanimously given. That Judge Marshall, himself a considerable man, should have seen Washington roll on the ground with laughter, yet after that still never feel quite at ease in his presence is wonderfully significant of the majestic figure that Washington must have become after bearing our young country on his shoulders through so many years of its weakness and need. The truth is, a great man can not do great things without in a way growing apart from his fellows, little as he may desire such a result. For somewhat the same reason the sight of a huge flood, or a deep chasm, or a high mountain, inclines all save stunted spirits to silence, and personal greatness distils inevitable constraint, and draws around itself unknowingly a circle of isolation that is not without its sadness. In Washington's very last years, we read that during a dance of young people at Mount Vernon, he came out of his study to take pleasure in looking on, when a quiet spread over the gaiety of the party. It was explained that his presence caused it, and then they saw that tall, weather-beaten figure go back to his solitude from the lights and the laughter whose brightness he was unwilling to dim.

But there were depths of burmorous possibilities in Washington and that sometimes they broke out refreshingly upon the surface is evident enough. Perhaps if the records were fuller it would be still more evident:

It is likely that Washington's familiar talk with his friends (in those rare moments when they were not all obliged to be debating the gravest possible matters) was not infrequently relieved by touches of that sedately expressed fun which occur now and then in his letters, such as the passage about General Braddock and the potted woodcocks. Indeed, we know that he could be jocular in the very heart of a crisis. On that memorable night of Trenton, in the midst of the icy, dangerous Delaware, he turned to Henry Knox with a rough joke that still lives upon the lips of men. But to men's lips it must be confined; a printed page is not the place for it, any more than a china-shop is the place for a bull, who is an object as excellent in the fields as Washington's speech was excellent on the Delaware, in the presence only of Knox and the hostman. His enjoyment of hunt-dinners, and of those songs and jests which come after them is well known, and his fondness for theatrical shows, and shows in general, was life-long, as was his pleasure in dancing. He danced during war, as well as in peace, and up to within three years of his death—that is to say, when he was sixty-four years old.

There is another picture that Mr. Wister truly says is worth selecting from among those that have survived. A visitor at Mount Vernon who was suffering from a heavy cold lay coughing on his bed, unable to sleep, when he became aware of the looming, night-clad form of Washington approaching his bedside. Washington was bringing him a bowl of tea which he had got out of his bed to make himself for his guest's relief.

Of Washington's invariable kindness to those dependent upon him there are very many examples, mainly taken from his letters to Mount Vernon. Thus upon one occasion he writes:

"You will be particularly attentive to my negroes in their sickness; and to order every overseer positively to be so likewise; for I am sorry to observe that the generality of them view these poor creatures in scarcely any other light than they do a draught horse or ox . . . instead of comforting and nursing them when they lie on a sick bed. . . ."

"Doll at the Ferry must be taught to knit, and made to do a sufficient day's work of it. . . . Lame Peter, if nobody else will, must teach her. . . . Tell house Frank I expect he will lay up a more plentiful store of the black common walnut."

But withal he is not to be readily imposed upon. Upon another occasion he writes under the strong and probably well-grounded suspicion that malingering was not an unknown vice among his bands:

"I find by the reports that Sam is, in a manner, always returned sick; Doll at the Ferry, and several of the spinners very frequently so, for a week at a stretch; and ditcher Charles often laid up with a lameness. I never wish my people to work when they are really sick . . . but if you do not examine into their complaints, they will lay by when no more ails them than all those who stick to their business. . . . My people . . . will lay up a month, at the end of which no visible change in their countenance nor the loss of an ounce of flesh is discoverable; and their allowance of provision is going on as if nothing ailed them. . . . What sort of lameness is Dick's? . . . and what kind of sickness is Betty Davis's? . . . a more lazy, deceitful, and impudent huzzy is not to be found in the United States. . . . I am as unwilling to have any person, in my service, forced to work when they are unable as I am to have them skulk from it when they are fit for it."

Perhaps even oblivion would have been better for Betty Davis than to be handed down to posterity by the father of her country as the most lazy, deceitful, and impudent huzzy to be found in the United States. It is to be feared that Betty Davis had a numerous progeny.

Mr. Wister has confined himself to some two hundred and fifty pages of large type, but his good things are so numerous that an expansion to twice the size would have been well justified. That he succeeds in his object no one can question. Under his adroit touch the vastness of Washington becomes more impressive. It is only the man of infinite genius who can direct his mind with the same energy and precision toward the small things of life, its details, its humors, and its quaintnesses as toward the great world movements that it directs and sustains. It is magnitude and not elevation that awes us, that "leaves us silent with wonder."

"The Seven Ages of Washington," by Owen Wister. Published by the Macmillan Company, New York; $2.

Art patrons may profit by a French exposure of an ingenious trick. A dealer ordered a Dutch inn scene. The picture was excellent, and the artist had painted the signature "Jan Steen, 1672," on it, as he had been instructed, after a fac-simile contained in a museum catalogue. But the dealer said: "The picture is so beautiful that you ought to put your own name to it." The signature "Jan Steen" was covered accordingly with the signature of the artist. As his work, the painting was shipped to a well-posted New York dealer. At the same time the New York customs office received an anonymous letter conveying the information that upon a certain steamer a Jan Steen, worth 200,000 francs, was to be expected, but that a false name had been painted over the signature in order to avoid the duty. The customs officer examined the painting and detected the signature Jan Steen under the covering. The picture thus became authentic, its authenticity being certified by the customs papers. The New York art dealer had to pay 20 per cent duty and 50 per cent fine, together with 140,000 francs. And three days later he sold the Jan Steen for 250,000 francs.

Jonas Lauritz Edemil Lie, the Norwegian poet and novelist, died at Christiania July 5. He was born in 1833. As a boy Lie showed a fondness for the sea and his parents feared for a time that he might turn to the sailor's life. At eighteen he entered the University of Christiania, and after receiving his law degree he started practice in Kongvinger, a small town in the south of Norway. Few writers have described a sailor's life as well as Lie. The first collection of his poems appeared in 1864. His most widely known novel, "Lodsen Og Hans Hustru" (The Pilot and His Wife), was published in 1874.

George M. Cohan, the young playwright, composer, and vaudeville star, should add another to his many titles, for he is certainly one of the princes of publicity. He was the leading spirit in the committee of arrangements for a monster benefit performance to be given July 17 at the New York Polo Grounds for the Home of Destitute Crippled Children, and his programme included among other drawing features the presence of Secretary Taft, a song-writing contest in public, and Lillian Russell as the umpire of a baseball game between prima donnas and sourettes.

Joel Chandler Harris, editor of Uncle Remus Magazine, died at his home in Atlanta, Georgia, July 3, after a short illness. Mr. Harris was sixty years of age. He had quit many years of toil as an editorial writer for the Atlanta Constitution and had settled down in his West End home to follow his own peculiar literary fancies.

It has been our constant endeavor for more than twenty years to establish and sustain a reputation for making the best glasses.

HIRSCH & KAISER

218 Post St.

Opticians

JUST A BOOK STORE

Robertson's

1539 Van Ness Ave.

NEAR PINE

"Next to the White House"

We Rent New Typewriters

L. & M. ALEXANDER & CO.

MOVED TO

Phone Douglas 2157

512 Market St.

Coast Dealers

L. C. SMITH (Visible)

1908 Model,

Ball Bearing

TYPEWRITERS

The wonderful new talking machine without a horn

The top closes over the record, shutting out all the noise of operation—the pure music of the record comes from a mahogany sound reflector. Elegantly made of solid mahogany, combined with record cabinet for 150 records. The finest talking machine made. Send for booklet.

Price $200

Sherman, Clay & Co.

Steinway Pianos—Victor Talking Machines

KEARNY AND SUTTER, S. F.

Broadway at 13th Oakland | 1635 Van Ness Ave. San Francisco

PALL MALL
FAMOUS CIGARETTES

No other cigarette approaches them in popularity among men of cultured tastes

A Shilling in London
A Quarter Here

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

By Sidney G. P. Coryn.

Agnes Repplier, writing in the Atlantic Monthly on "Our Great-Grandmother's Novel," reminds us of how rapid has been our progress since the day when the male characters in fiction had limbs but not legs, and when the female characters moved in some way unknown and even unguessed at in polite society. Perhaps the morals of our great-grandmother's novels were no better than in the fiction of today. They were certainly no better than they should be, but then they were wrapped in such chaste circumlocution of language, so very much was left to the imagination, that they could be read without offense and without calling a blush to the cheek of modesty.

We have certainly changed all that, and if the cycles of time should ever bring a return of the hashfulness of a century ago we may well wonder what our great-grandchildren will think of us when they read some of the fiction that finds a place among the best sellers. Certainly there is very little left to the imagination, nor do we waste time by covering up our meaning under clouds of words. As Mr. Marsh says in the Bookman, much water has flowed into New York Bay since the days of our great-grandmothers. We have learned the ways of the tripe of Maryacane and "we are not so easily shocked as we once were."

Religion and Medicine, by Elwood Worcester, D. D., Ph. D., Samuel McComb, M. A., D. D., and Isador H. Coriat, M. D. Published by Moffat, Yard & Co., New York; $1.50.

We are told that the object of this hook is to describe the work in behalf of nervous sufferers which has been undertaken in Emmanuel Church, Boston. That is all well and good. If the Christian churches believe that they can alleviate bodily pain they have the best possible warrant for trying. Most of our diseases arise from errors of conduct, which in turn spring from errors in thought, and the connection between religion and thought habits is too evident to need indication.

But to the further statements that the work of Emmanuel Church "bears no relation to Christian Science, either by way of protest or imitation, but it would be what it is had the latter never existed" it is necessary to enter a protest. Indeed, such a claim appears to be hardly honest. The authorities of Christian Science and Emmanuel Church both agree in seeking to alter bodily conditions by changing the polarity of thought, by rendering it automatic in a new direction. In essentials they are nearly identical. They differ in non-essentials and in the particular form of the incantations to be used. To apply an ancient simile, Emmanuel Church seems to have caught the Christian Scientists in bathing and to have run off with their clothes.

Nevertheless the hook is a good one and a valuable elucidation of what may be done by the aid of the finer forces of nature. Such terms as "auto-suggestion" and "subconscious self" are, of course, used as glibly as usual and not always with recognition that they are terms for the almost wholly unknown. Theories are formed and sustained by the simple expedient of ignoring all phenomena that do not square with them, but that is a common failing of the modern psychology. But the fact remains, and it is a fact indisputable, that the forces employed seem to have vast remedial efficacy and the more we know of them from reputable and sincere investigators the better it will be for us. The authors of this book are doing a useful work of which the future value will depend upon their own mental freedom from theological and scientific prejudices and preconceptions.

Purple and Homespun, by Samuel M. Gardenhire. Published by Harper & Brothers, New York; $1.50.

This story is a somewhat clever blending of the extremes of social life. We oscillate between the east side of New York and the British embassy at Washington, and that the author is able to weld such diverse elements into a unit speaks much for his ingenuity.

"Purple and Homespun" belongs distinctly to the higher grades of fiction. It introduces us not only to definite types of individual character, but also to the varieties of class consciousness that constitute the real problem of the statesman. In Jacob Roth and in Rose Letcher of the East Side we see the spirit of aggressive Socialism and of a Socialism that we can not afford to ignore, because it is energized by intense conviction and inflamed by supposed injustices. The picture of the Socialist meeting and of Rose Letcher's eloquence is not soon to be forgotten.

At the other end of the scale we have Lord Wemyss, the British Ambassador, and his daughter Victoria. Senator Marshall Treemon, who has acquired rank and fortune by a remarkable combination of personal qualities, may be regarded as the link between East and West. He is man enough to recognize and acknowledge the claims of his own lowly origin as soon as he discovers that he himself was an East Side child, and he is also man enough to recognize that worth is a matter of individual attainment alone. If he wishes to marry Lady Victoria—personally we should make some other choice—he is entitled to try and we are unfeignedly glad when he succeeds.

Upon a canvas so large some inartistic spots are almost inevitable. We are a little sorry to see the rapid waning of Rose Letcher's interest in her public work as soon as she is discovered by her wealthy relatives, and we are still more sorry when she marries that very rapid young man, Captain Travers, who originally led her astray when she was a girl in England. The ugly and unnecessary fate that befalls Maggie Beechy, whose winsome kindness compensates for her lack of brains, is also a deplorable feature. The author is, indeed, stronger with his men than with his women, but he has none the less given us a striking story, one that was worth writing and that shows conscientious labor as well as imaginative ability.

The New American Type and Other Essays, by Henry D. Sedgwick. Published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston and New York; $1.50.

All these essays are suggestive and delicately written. That on "The New American Type" was suggested by an exhibition of American portraits new and old and a study of the gradual change of type that has been wrought during a hundred years. Very felicitous is the essay on "The Moh Spirit in Literature" and the mental contagion that produces the phenomenal circulation of the "best sellers." The initial cause of the contagion that sweeps over the "reading mob" is obscure. It is not so much a case of merit as of a "condition of receptivity" and of an insistent eagerness that spreads from mind to mind, gathering force as it goes. It is an instance of the collective consciousness that moves by suggestion and that is irrational.

Other valuable critical essays are on "Mrs. Wharton," "Charles Russell Lowell," and "Mark Twain," the latter being of a marked and discriminating insight. The concluding extravaganza on "The Coup d'Etat of 1961," and describing the "circumstances under which the present imperial dynasty mounted the throne of the Americas" might perhaps have been omitted, but it does at least enable us to close the hook with a smile. The volume contains twelve essays and their nearly uniform merit is unquestionable.

Princess Nadine, by Christian Reid. Published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York; $1.50.

The Princess Nadine is half Russian and half American. She is engaged to Prince Maximilian, who hopes, by the grace of Russia, to be King of Serabia. But the cousin of the princess, Count Alexis, has compromised himself with the revolutionary movement, and when the princess undertakes to guard his treasonable documents she is threatened by Russia with the loss of her fiancé and of her throne. As it happens she has no use for either, having now fallen in love with Mr. Leighton, an immensely rich South American politician, who rescues her from her perplexities and helps her to defy her enemies.

The story has undeniably good points, but the princess is not so fascinating as she is intended to be, while the assumption that the French government—the scene is laid in France—would arrest or molest Russian conspirators is incorrect. A Russian revolutionist is as safe in France as in Colorado, and always has been.

The Gentlest Art, edited by E. V. Lucas. Published by the Macmillan Company, New York; $1.50.

Perhaps letter-writing will once more become a cultivated grace when time has other than a money value. It is well described as the "gentlest" of all arts, the art that is the truest reflection of mind and heart, the best mirror of friendship and of sentiment.

The author has made his selections with admirable care. We do not miss a single old favorite. He has given us all that is best in letter-writing and the classification under such heads as "Children and Grandfathers," "The Familiar Manner," "The Grand Style," "Humorists and Oddities," is everything that can be desired. Altogether he has given us about one hundred and fifty letters that deserve a high place in literature and that may well be studied by those who wish to acquire a graceful but a well-nigh forgotten art.

The Iliad of the East, by Frederika Macdonald. Published by the John Lane Company, New York.

The Western mind has shown itself of late years to be singularly receptive to Oriental thought, and this fine hook should do much to show that a search into Indian literature will not go unrewarded. "The Iliad of the East" is a selection of legends drawn from Valmiki's Sanskrit poem, "The Ramayana," and the selections are not only judicious, but they are rendered in fitting language. There is perhaps no better corrective for the littleness of modern life than a glance at the grand imageries of Oriental literature, and whoever makes these generally available is doing a public service. The illustrations, being by J. Lockwood Kipling, are of unusual artistic merit.

New Publications.

Duffield & Co., New York, have published "The Reflections of Ambrosine" and "Beyond the Rocks," by Elinor Glynn. Price, $1.50 each.

A little hook of some suggestive value is "The Heavenly Life," by James Allen. Published by R. F. Fenno & Co., New York. Price, 15 cents, paper covers, and 50 cents, cloth binding.

"My High School Days" is a blank hook intended presumably for diary purposes and therefore for the use of girls. Each page is prettily decorated. It is published by the H. M. Caldwell Company, New York and Boston.

Harper & Brothers, New York, have published "Adventures of Pirates and Sea Rovers," by Howard Pyle, Rear-Admiral Upshur, Paul Hull, and others. The tales are culled from history, but with all the attractive dressing of fiction, while the illustrations are good. Price, 60 cents.

"The Lady in the Car," by William Le Queux, is the story of a series of thieving adventures by a band of plausible scoundrels under the leadership of "Prince Albert of Hesse-Holstein," who relies for his success upon the influence of a title and a resplendent motor car. The book is published by the J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, and the price is $1.50.

"The Gourmet's Guide to Europe," by Lieutenant-Colonel Newnham-Davis, is written for the purpose of giving "information to traveling Anglo-Saxons, of both sexes, who take an interest in the cookery and food of the countries they pass through, and are not content to dine and breakfast every day at the hotel in which they may happen to stay." It is published by Brentano's, New York.

From the Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York, comes a volume of "Sermons Which Have Won Souls," by the Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D. D. The title is a little unfortunate and suggests a crude orthodoxy, but we are pleasantly surprised to find a series of intensely sincere appeals for the right life rather than for creeds, appeals that can hardly have failed in results of the best kind. The price of the hook is $1.40.

"I Never Dine Without It."

Chafing Dish Cooking
Many dainty dishes can be prepared in a chafing dish.

LEA & PERRINS SAUCE
THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE
adds a piquant flavor indispensable to good Chafing Dish Cooking

Fish, Shrimps, Oysters, Clams and Lobsters; Frogs' Legs and Welsh Rarebit are given an appetizing and delicate relish by its use.

Imitated but Never equalled. JOHN DUNCAN'S SONS, AGENTS, N. Y.

By Daylight and All Rail to Yosemite Valley
via
Southern Pacific

By way of Merced in connection with the Yosemite Valley R. R.
Only ten hours' ride to El Portal (the edge of the Valley) and three and one-half hours thence to the Heart of the Valley.

Low side trip rates to Wawona and the Mariposa grove of gigantic sequoias.
Leave San Francisco daily 8:20 a.m.

Ask any of our agents for details.
TICKET OFFICES
884 Market Street
Market Street Ferry Depot
14 Powell Street

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.

"If I Were King," Justin Huntly McCarthy's dramatization of his own novel of the same name, will be the Alcazar's offering next week, commencing Monday evening, with White Whittlesey in the rôle of François Villon, which was created by E. H. Sothern. In the cast are forty-five speaking people and many silent auxiliaries, and each of the four acts demands a most elaborate setting.

The story of the play, briefly told, is an incident in the turbulent career of François Villon, the vagabond rhymester who amused France when Louis XI was king. The scene opens in a Paris wine shop, where Villon recites a poem recounting what he would do to enhance the glory of his country if he were on the throne, and among the motley throng that applaud his sentiments is Louis himself, in disguise. His majesty promptly takes the poet at his word and appoints him king for one week, warning him that unless he wins the love of Katherine de Faudelles, who had flouted the monarch, he will be guillotined. The remainder of the play is taken up by Villon's endeavors to prove himself a model ruler, but at the end of the week he has seemingly failed to touch the heart of the prudish Katherine, and he is about to be consigned to execution when she discloses her affection for him and saves his life by offering to take his place on the scaffold.

Mr. Whittlesey will be seen as Villon, Miss Barriscale as Katherine, and the remainder of the Alcazar players and many extra people will have well-fitting rôles.

The hill at the Orpheum for the week beginning this Sunday matinee will have for its chief attraction the Four Fords, who are unequalled in this country as dancers. The two sisters, Deborah and Mahel, give an exhibition of energetic dancing that is really a revelation. The Tom Davies Trio from the London Coliseum and New York Hippodrome will make their first appearance in this city and introduce their cycling novelty, "motoring in midair." Tom Davies is the world's champion cyclist and the sensation which he and his female assistants perform is simply astounding. They have a saucer-like structure of strapped lathes and encircling it with dizzy rapidity they pass and repass each other until their red, white, and blue costumes suggest the prismatic changes of a revolving top. Martinette and Sylvester, who style themselves "the boys with the chairs," are also new to us. They are exceptionally clever tumblers and amusing comedians. With this programme Katie Barry, La Vine Cimaron Trio, Fred Singer, Barry and Hughes, and that splendid actor, William H. Thompson, and his company will close their season here. A new series of motion pictures will terminate the performance.

The attractions at the Princess next week will be a double bill consisting of the two-act musical mélange, "The Bridal Trap," and the travesty on the Conried-Hammerstein grand opera war, "The Song Birds." "The Bridal Trap" is the musical composition of Edmond Audran and the text is the work of Sydney Rosenfeld. Its action takes place during the period of the regency in France at a picturesque village near Orleans. It tells a pretty story set to sparkling music of a lord of high degree who loved a lowly peasant girl and sought to wed her despite the opposition of friends and relatives and who successfully baffled their schemes and won the maiden of his choice. The cast will be an excellent one and will introduce to the audiences of this theatre Evelyn Frances Kellogg, a prima donna of great Eastern renown, who will appear as the heroine, Rosette, the village helle. Zoe Barnett will be cast as another rustic beauty, while Sarah Edwards will have impressive and dignified opportunity as the Marquise de la Haute. Arthur Cunningham will be in his element as Andre, Count de Flagnac, and the remaining characters will be allotted as follows: Gavandan, Frank Farrington; Martial, Oscar C. Apfel; Bel-Agur, captain of the patrol, Robert Z. Leonard; Lancelot, Mayhelle Baker; Marcelin, Grizella Kingsland; Theodule, Gertrude Alzora; Arnold, Edna Carpenter. In "The Song Birds" William Burress will repeat a great triumph as Oscar Hammershine, while Miss Kellogg will appear as Mme. Tappalezini, and Monsieur La Vigne as Alessandro Bouncey. Oliver La Noir will be Eddie de Rest Cure, Charles E. Couture, Robinson Caruso; Arthur Cunningham, Peter Pantson, and Sarah Edwards as Emma Screams. The remaining rôles will be suitably cast. The run of "The Bridal Trap" and "The Song Birds" will be limited to one week. "It Happened in Nordland" will be played for the last time this Sunday night.

The Henry Miller Associate Players, who have come across the continent direct from the Savoy Theatre, New York, to present "The Servant in the House," arrived Thursday. They include Tyrone Power, Walter Hampden, Galvy Herberth, Edmund Kennedy, Arthur Lewis, Gladys Wynne, and Edith Wynne Matthison, of "Everyman" fame. The author, Charles Mann Kennedy, will accompany these players. The seat sale will begin at the Van Ness Theatre this morning and there is every indication that this curious attraction will prove to be one of the great sensations of the year in this city. Its Eastern hit has been nothing short of phenomenal, and that Mr. Miller, in his special feeling for San Francisco audiences, should have decided to bring this piece from coast to coast while its New York run was still at its zenith adds redoubled interest to the event. A new company will in a few weeks take up the interrupted New York run, while this original cast will go to Chicago to begin its engagement there. Matinees will be given at the Van Ness on Wednesdays and Saturdays.

"The Great Divide" will be presented for the last time this Saturday night at the Van Ness Theatre by Henry Miller and his company.

During the remainder of the Henry Miller season at the Van Ness Theatre matinees are to be given on Wednesdays and Saturdays in order to meet the inquiry for afternoon performances from people out of town who wish to take advantage of the Miller offerings.

Isabel Irving will have a really fine rôle in the Percy Mackaye comedy, "Mater," which Henry Miller will stage at the Van Ness Theatre two weeks hence.

LITERARY NOTES.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

Two very attractive anthologies are "Poems for Travelers" and "The Poetic Old World," which Messrs. Henry Holt & Co. will issue on the 18th. The former is compiled by Mary R. J. Dubois, and covers the Continent in some three hundred poems. The latter, compiled by Miss Lucy H. Humphrey, covers Europe, including Spain and the British Isles, in some two hundred poems, some thirty of which, not originally written in English, are given both in the original and in translation. The volumes are in the same general style as the popular "The Open Road" and "The Friendly Town" compiled by E. V. Lucas.

For the first time an authoritative and complete description of the Bohemian Club Midsummer Jinks is to appear in print. With the permission of the club, Mr. Porter Garnett has written and will shortly publish an exhaustive treatise on the forest plays presented by the Bohemians in their redwood grove on the Russian River. The volume deals with the setting, history, and development, origin and analogies—the relation of the plays to other forms of stage art, particularly the Elizabethan masque—and synopses of seven grove plays, including that of 1908, which is to be given August 8. There are to be twenty-four full-page illustrations, depicting every phase of the Bohemian encampment, and an appendix consisting of a chronological list of all jinks since 1872, with their titles and the names of their sires and musical directors.

Of interest to booksellers and bookbuyers alike is the announcement by the publishers of Louisa M. Alcott's works of a special edition, limited to 100,000 copies, of her most beloved story, "Little Women," at a popular price. During the life of the author, Frank T. Merrill, one of the best known of book illustrators, made over two hundred drawings for the book. These illustrations appeared, together with a picture of the home of "Little Women," in a handsome edition originally published at $5, and it is this edition which Little, Brown & Co. will reissue early in July, with an attractive new cover design, at a low price.

Although Mr. Gillette's delicious impersonation of "The Private Secretary" has been absent from the American stage for some years, the German version of the comedy, Von Moser's "Der Bibliothekar," is read annually by American students in hundreds of colleges and schools. Its popularity, in fact, seems to be growing, and to meet the demand for a good edition for class use, Professor H. A. Farr of Yale University has prepared a vocabulary edition which will soon be published by Messrs. Henry Holt & Co.

Mrs. Emily E. Woodley, who was said to be the only woman ever regularly commissioned as an officer in the United States army, died the other day in Philadelphia at the age of seventy-three. She was the last of the thirty-five young women from Philadelphia who enlisted as nurses in the Civil War. She was a widow of twenty-six when she offered her services as a nurse in 1861, and for her bravery and good work President Lincoln conferred on her a commission as captain in the army. She was later decorated with a gold medal by Secretary of War Stanton. For a number of years she was president of the National Association of Army Nurses of the Civil War, which she organized, and was the only woman member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

At last the sheath gown has a defender, by inference, at least. Mrs. Daniel Knefler, president of the St. Louis branch of the Women's Trade Union League, denounces the rustle of the silk petticoat as a menace to feminine morals. The latest fashion, wherever adopted, compels the discarding of swishy lingerie that has so long delighted the heart of woman and tantalized the ear of the sterner sex. Now there is a prospect that the much-discussed director costume may win moral approval.

CURRENT VERSE.

Sailor's Song.

When the good ship plows through the crested wave,
And the salt breeze follows fast,
When the straining cordage creaks and groans
In the van of the bellowing blast,
Then up! my boys, and all on deck!
No land upon our lee!
While beneath we feel our quivering keel,
We'll burrah for the life at sea, Yo Ho!
For the sailor's life at sea.

Oh, what can the landsman know
Of the life on the roaring main,
When the stiff nor'easters blow
O'er the miles of our watery plain?
For him is the hazing heath,
And his child upon his knee;
But the sailor's home
Is the ocean foam,
And the salt and the swell of the sea, Yo Ho!
For the salt and the swell of the sea.

Oh, the sea is the sailor's love.
For her the storms we brave;
And who would a coward prove
When the winds and the waters rave?
Then up! my lads, and all on deck!
No land upon our lee!
While beneath we feel our quivering keel,
We'll burrah for the life at sea, Yo Ho!
For the sailor's life at sea.

—The Tufonian.

When You Are Old.

When you are old, and I am passed away—
Passed, and your face, your golden face, is gray—
I think, what'er the end, this dream of mine,
Comforting you, a friendly star will shine
Down the dim slope where still you stumble and stray.
So may it be; that no dead yesterday,
No sad-eyed ghost, but generous and gay,
May serve you memories like almighty wine,
When you are old.

Dear heart, it shall be so. Under the sway
Of death the past's enormous disarray
Lies hushed and dark. Yet though there come no sign,
Live on well pleased; immortal and divine,
Love shall still tend you, as God's angels may,
When you are old.

—William Ernest Henley.

A Summer Love Song.

Dews of the morning and stars of the night,
Sunsets of gold and noon's dazzling bright,
Billowy clouds against heavens of blue,
Sunlight and starlight and gladness and you.

Waters that ripple and forests a-swing,
Star-gleaming insects and birds on the wing,
Soft breezes blow from horizons of blue,
Wind-song and brook-song and bird-song and you.

Roses of crimson and lilies of white,
Bloom-burdened gardens all fragrant and bright,
Bees that go buzzing the scented beds through,
Beauty and brightness and sweetness and you.

Thoughts full of gladness and hopes that aspire,
Thoughts that cling round you with eager desire,
Love that is ardent and changeless and true,
Turning to, longing for, pleading with you.

—E. E. Miller, in the Bohemian Magazine.

The Defeated.

Because it was good to be fighting, to put forth
my strength,
To endeavor myself to the utmost, the failure at length

Is never less bitter and hard, or lighter to bear
Because all the glorious memories of battle I share

With the victors who pass me on horseback (good fellows who won!)

With stern, ardent faces fixed forward and fronting the sun.

No, failure is comfortless, arid. When battle again

Is joined I shall fight all the harder—at last not in vain!

Though my courage was solid and speckless, my arm good before,

This pure hitherness strengthens and betters me;
no failure more!

At last I shall win, and that victory pure shall redeem

All the mighty lost effort and hope, all the disapproved dream.

And out of the depths of my knowledge of bitter defeat

I shall know to the utmost that minute how triumph is sweet.

—S. H. Kemper, in Metropolitan Magazine.

King Edward has recently shown that he takes interest in every phase of his people's life by the announcement that he has approved a special order of merit for cricketers who achieve the highest ambition of all cricketers—selection to represent England against other countries. The "hodge to be worn on a dark blue cap" will in the future hall-mark the international cricketer, and it will be made the object of strenuous endeavor.

The cigarette did not reach England until after the Crimean War, in which the English officers adopted it from the Turks and Russians. Many people give Pellegrini, the "Ape" of "Vanity Fair," the credit of introducing the cigarette into England, and, at any rate, his example did much to popularize it.

England has just been mobilizing her warships in home waters, contriving to muster a total of 301 ships with an aggregate complement of 68,000 officers and men. In the face of these figures the parade of our Atlantic Fleet does not appear quite so imposing.

Hosiery Sale
Standard 50c values
Now on sale 3 pr. for $1.00
Silk — Lises — Cottons — Split Foots — Macos — all weights.

GANTNER & MATTERN CO.

Cor. Van Ness and Calif. St. Hosiery Specialists

EDUCATIONAL

THE HAMLIN SCHOOL

A Boarding and Day School for Girls
Miss Hamlin announces the reopening of the school August 10. It is accredited by the California Universities and by Eastern colleges. Advanced courses of study are offered to High School graduates and to those who have left school, with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to a school diploma.

Classes in Instrumental and Vocal Music and in Drawing and Painting are formed and facilities are given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basket Ball, etc. For particulars address
MISS HAMLIN,
2230 Pacific Ave., San Francisco.

IRVING INSTITUTE AND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

Boarding and Day School for Girls
2126 California St., San Francisco
Music, languages, art, elocution. Primary, grammar, high school, and advanced grades. Accredited by the universities. Twenty-ninth year. Non-sectarian. New term opens Monday, August 3.
MISS ELLA M. PINKHAM, Principal.

Oakland Conservatory of Music

1170 Madison Street, Oakland, Cal.
The largest, oldest established, and most thoroughly equipped school of genuine musical instruction on the Pacific Coast.
Conducted on the lines of the most noted European and Eastern schools.
Full prospectus on application.
Director, ADOLF GREGORY.

MANZANITA HALL

Palo Alto, Cal.
Prepares boys for the universities or business life. Ample grounds. Three buildings. Illus. catalogue. 16th year. Opens Aug. 24.
J. LEROY DIXON, Principal.

BERKELEY PREPARATORY SCHOOL

Boarding and Day School for Boys
2207 Dwight Way, Berkeley, Cal.
Fall term opens August 24
J. H. WHITE, Principal

SNELL SEMINARY 2721 Channing Way

Berkeley
Girls' boarding and day school. Certificate admits to University of California, Stanford, and Eastern colleges. Opens August 10. Superb location. Outdoor life.
MRS. EDNA SNELL POULSON, Principal

MILLS COLLEGE FOR YOUNG WOMEN

Only Woman's College on Pacific Coast. Offers same advantages as best Eastern institutions. Full Collegiate course. Degrees conferred. For three years only, the three upper classes of the Seminary Department, offering preparation for Mills College, the Universities and Eastern Colleges, will be continued. (Accredited.) Special opportunities in Domestic Science, Music and Art. Earnest Christian influences; non-sectarian; all forms of healthful outdoor amusements. Ideal location in beautiful Oakland hills. Fall term begins August 12, 1908. For Catalog and Brochure of views address,
Mrs. C. T. MILLS, President, Mills College P. O., California

Miss Harker's School

Home and Day School for Girls. Certificate admits to College. Excellent Departments in Music and Art. New building, thoroughly modern, steam heated. Address,
MISS HARKER, Palo Alto, Cal.

OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES

Twenty minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. The late Mr. Jay Cooke's fine property. MISS SYLVIA J. EASTMAN, MISS ABBY A. SUTHERLAND, Principals.

MORRISTOWN SCHOOL, Morristown, N. J.

College Preparatory Boarding School for Boys
Small classes. Individual attention. Gymnasium, quarter-mile track, athletic fields and tennis courts. Especially healthful location, an hour from New York.
F. C. WOODMAN, Headmaster.

CASTILLEJA SCHOOL

Palo Alto, Cal.
Home and day school for girls. University preparatory. Outdoor physical training a special feature. Opens August 24. Illustrated catalogue.
MISS MARY I. LOCKEY, A. B., Principal.

FREE KINDERGARTEN NORMAL SCHOOL

Golden Gate Kindergarten Association
(Accredited by State Board of Education)
MISS VIRGINIA FITCH, President
MISS ANNA M. STOVALL, Principal
Address: 1844 Folk Street

GOODYEAR "HIPPO" HOSE

The best and strongest Garden Hose.
Guaranteed to stand 700 lbs. pressure.
Try it and be convinced.
GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY
R. H. PEASE, President
887, 889, 891 Market St. at Second St.
SAN FRANCISCO

SOME PLAYHOUSE PROBLEMS.

By Josephine Hart Phelps.

What dire punishments often fall upon... What dire punishments often fall upon for pardonably committing the mistakes...

So Ruth Jordan was proof against the pure and manly love of the poor doctor, who, if she had accepted him, would never have left her...

But in such a case the play would never have been written, and we would never have been thrilled to the marrow of our bones by the tremendous scene in the second act, which was furnished the subject for so many discussions during the past two weeks.

I have often, when occupying any of the seats under over-hanging balconies, noticed how we are obliged actually to grope our way into adequate comprehension of a play which, being cast in one's own language, is, presumably, perfectly comprehensible.

As we all know, cause important consequences to hinge on such apparently trifling happenings as a dropped handkerchief, a misplaced letter, or a door left ajar.

Mr. Moody has shown the greatest skill in the technical manipulation of his great scene, which is full of just such carefully considered minutiae, when it is all over, and the curtain has fallen, I fear that he would suffer acute chagrin if he could hear the ensuing conversation from the hopeless spectators under, and, indeed, sometimes over, the sound-muffling balcony.

Says A to B, or C to D, or E to F, as the case may be, after the first outbreak of excited comment over the scene of the act: 'Didn't you understand that Stephen Ghent ought off the two Mexicans?'

B—Mexicans? Were they Mexicans? Why, I thought they were all three Americans. They seemed to be.

A (doubtfully)—Let's see the programme. Here it is. These two chaps must be the ones—Dutch and Pedro. I didn't hear the names, but Dutch is probably the tall fellow. He must be a Dutchman, and not a Mexican. Well, the point is, since Ghent bought them off, what was the row about outside?

B—Why, I didn't catch all that was said. In fact, I lost a good deal. I didn't know why they got out their shooting-irons outside, after their financial settlement inside, and lots of other things got me off the track. For instance, why did Ghent say to Pedro, 'Leave everything on the table as it is?'

A—That stumped me, too. (Meditates.) I'll tell you. They fixed it up, you know, bent and the girl, that their fitting was to seem like an elopement, and he wanted everything in the room to look just as usual—to show no signs of a scrimmage.

B—No, that won't do. That deal came afterwards. Don't you remember that they had been throwing dice? Ghent cheated, you know, so as to get the girl.

A—Cheated? Why, I didn't take that in? B (confidently)—Yes, he produced one from his sleeve, and doctored the deal. It might have had something to do with the dice-throwing, but what he meant about the things the table gets me.

A—That reminds me that I didn't twig when Ghent tackled the lock of the door with hammer! What was he up to?

B (thoughtlessly)—He was smashing it, of course.

A—No you don't! They smashed it when they broke in. [They fall into an animated argument from which they emerge with the hardly-won theory that the lock of the door was being repaired in order to lend color to the idea of an elopement. Calmed by this conjecture, they abandon this subject to go to the more congenial subject of Polly Jordan's charms.]

A—Me for Polly! What's the matter with Sawbones that he chose the other one?

B—Why, you wild man of the woods, who do you suppose Polly is?

A (flippantly)—Old man Jordan's darter, aint she? Name of Jordan?

B—That's just what she aint. (Crushingly, in a tone of superior knowledge.) She is Mrs. Philip Jordan.

A—And who the dickens is Phil—(looking at his programme). Oh! The deuce you say! (disapprovingly). You don't mean to tell me that that jolly little girl is the wife of old grumpy?

B—That's just what! But she got sick of the whole outfit, and was heading for Yankee-land.

A—Well, well. I thought she was the frivolous sister, or the visiting cousin, or something on that order. I really wonder at her taste.

B—You see she had the sense to light out. By the way, was Ghent inviting the girl to kill him, or herself, when he left his pistol so handy?

A—It was a case of you pays your money and you takes your choice.

B—Great scene, wasn't it? A—Great.

[Curtain goes up. At the end of the second act, A and B turn to each other, charged to the muzzle with questions.]

A—You're right, old man. Pretty Polly is Grumpy's bride. But if you hadn't told me, I'd have thought she had been school-teaching there in Arizona, and had nabbed Jordan in the interim. Lots of things are hard to understand in a play, though. Now where the deuce did that same string of nuggets turn up from?

B—That's just what I was going to ask you. Seems to me that players swallow half their words, nowadays, with their gosh-durned realism.

A—The realism's all right. But I'll take it in the third row, thank you. And the next time you get seats back here, you can have mine for your seventeenth best girl. About that nugget-necklace, Ruthie mumbled something concerning a Mexican on the trail who seemed to be mixed up with it.

B (animately)—That so? I didn't catch that, but I heard something about her buying something with the proceeds of something that she made.

A—After that, I think we'd better go out and have one more something.

[Exeunt. Curtain rises as both reappear pocketing their handkerchiefs and looking refreshed. In the third act there is too much talk and too little action to suit men, and both relax their ear-strain, especially as the players suddenly become quite intelligible.]

A (listening disapprovingly to Stephen's colloquy with his mother-in-law)—What a lot of gah. Now that I don't care so much, I can hear every word.

B—What a bum bow Steve is making to the old lady! What's the matter with Henery?

A—Why, you duffer, that's a fine point in acting. Awkward frontiersman, etc.

B (unconvinced)—Well, I don't like it any better than I like his fit of weeps at the end of the second act. He's piled it on too thick. [Both remain silent until affairs are wound up.]

A (as curtain falls)—Of course she gives in. Girls always do. But I don't envy him. I'd just as soon be married to an ice-pick. Come along and get some of the fellows to settle all those first-act conundrums.

[Exeunt, surrounded by murmurs of "Wasn't it grand!" "Great!" "I don't like her." "She's fine." "He's splendid!" "Never did care for Miller." "What a queer play." "Did you hear such and such?" "Can you tell me what so and so said when—" etc. "I lost half of it." "Why I heard everything."]

"Isn't she pretty?" "Isn't she plain?" "Isn't he fat?" "I don't see that he's gained such an awful lot." "Miller looks as young as ever." "Miller looks ten years older."

Since I've seen the play I have had an opportunity to test the realism of part of the first act, having talked with an Arizona ranch-woman, young, comely, of unusually bright and well cultivated mind, and therefore, presumably, of inconveniently susceptible imagination, who has many a time and oft spent a solitary night at her ranch on the lonely plain, five miles distant from neighbors, when imperative circumstances compelled her husband to be away.

The first occasion came finding her entirely unprepared. Her two women servants, sisters, were called away by sickness in the family. She found herself unexpectedly alone. She at once turned with a sort of relief to caring for her horse—she had just returned to the ranch after a lengthy absence—and did other tasks while resolutely chasing away thoughts of the imminent solitude of night. Remembering how, in the dark, the desert levels swallow up the outlines of a house, she dispatched her evening meal before the necessity for using betraying lights arose. When bedtime came, and she lay down with the night before her, she said to herself, "I must drive away all thought of fear, or I will lie awake." Her next coherent thought was a sudden recognition of the morning sunshine. The night had gone like a breath, "the warm precincts of the cheerful day" had come, and her experience was peacefully repeated for forty odd nights before her husband, learning by pure chance of his plucky wife's solitude, returned from carrying out an important business venture elsewhere to break it.

Reverting to the matter of unintelligibility of players, I was this week struck, as with the force of contrast, by the cheerful loudness of the voices of actors in the vaudeville playlets at the Orpheum, of which there were two on the programme. "A Night on a Houseboat" I do not suppose can be regarded, even in the tolerant world of vaudeville, as a play. It is what is usually described as a melange, a kind of vacuous mixture of chatter and tunes, the sort of thing that makes one fold one's tent like the Arab, and quietly but firmly steal away, which is perhaps why they place it last on the bill.

When I last saw Mr. Fred Bond it was in the Daly company. On that occasion he perpetrated a tee-hee-ish sort of a kind of an idiotic giggle that took with the audience, and started echoes. I heard him give that self-same vocal giggle at the Orpheum, the other day, which shows how mannerisms stick, even with the passage of years.

Mr. Bond's playlet is as silly as the giggle, but it, too, took. It has its merits—from the vaudeville point of view—and the unashamed gusto with which the big, blonde, babyish-looking actor plunges into the ocean of mother-in-lawed retribution which engulfs the chicken-hearted stage son-in-law eventually wins hearty laughter and toleration even from those who sit in the seat of the scornful.

The Beane family's playlet is really an exposition, from a humorous point of view, of the various symptoms and stages of delirium tremens. The authors of vaudeville playlets, as you perceive, do not go far afield in the search of ideas. Delirium tremens as the subject of humorous drama is not any more startlingly novel than a mother-in-law. But as Mr. Beane is as lively and clever a player as his placid matrimonial partner is the reverse, the play wins high favor, especially as Baby Beane—I couldn't help wondering if the Beanes, prompted by the press agent, were fooling us, and their parenthood was authentic—was a most entrancing urchin in his night-pajamas and tiny Roneos.

AMUSEMENTS GREEK THEATRE BERKELEY CAMPUS Under the auspices of the Musical and Dramatic Committee of the University of California SATURDAY EVENING, JULY 18th the famous THIRD UNITED STATES ARTILLERY BAND in fourth POPULAR CONCERT Admission 25 cents 8 to 10 p. m.

ORPHEUM ELLIS STREET NEAR FILLMORE Absolutely Class A Theatre Building Week beginning this Sunday afternoon Matinee Every Day ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE 4—FORDS—4, World's Greatest Dancing Quartette; TOM DAVIES TRIO, in their astounding act, "Whirling the Whirl"; MARY TINETTE and SYLVESTER; KATIE BARRY; LA VINE CIMARON TRIO; FRED SINGER; BARRY and HUGHES; New Orpheum Motion Pictures; Last Week W.M. H. THOMPSON and Company, in "For Love's Sweet Sake."

PRINCESS THEATRE Ellis Street near Fillmore S. LOVERICH, Manager Class "A" Theatre Phone West 663 Last Two Nights "It Happened in Nordland" Beginning Next Monday Night—One Week Only—Grand Double Bill—The Musical Melange THE BRIDAL TRAP And the travesty on the Conried-Hammerstein grand opera war THE SONG BIRDS WILLIAM BURRESS as Oscar Hammershine First Appearance EVELYN FRANCES KELLOGG, Arthur Cunningham and all the Princess favorites in the cast. Next—"THE CHAPERONES."

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Tel. West 6036 BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers Corner Sutter and Steiner Sts. Absolute Class "A" bldg. Seventy-First Week of the Alcazar Stock Co. COMMENCING MONDAY EVE, JULY 20 MR. WHITE WHITTLESEY Supported by the Alcazar Players, in Justin Huntley McCarthy's romantic comedy-drama IF I WERE KING A Great Scenic Production Prices: Evenings, 25c to $1. Matinees (Saturday and Sunday), 25c to 50c Monday, July 27—MR. WHITTLESEY in "RAFFLES."

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove St. Phone Market 500 Weeks of July 20th and 27th. Nightly except Sundays Matinees Wednesdays and Saturdays Direct from the Savoy Theatre, New York The Henry Miller Associate Players Edith Wynne Matthison, Walter Hampden, Tyrone Power, Gladys Wynne, Edmund Kennedy, Galwey Herbert, Arthur Lewis, in the unique play THE SERVANT IN THE HOUSE By Charles Rann Kennedy

John F. Forbes Certified Public Accountant 601 KOHL BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Roy C. Ward Jas. W. Dean Jas. K. Polk Geo. E. Billings GEO. E. BILLINGS CO. ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE EFFECTED 312 California Street. Phone Douglas 2283 San Francisco, Cal.

C. A. Murdock & Co. PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS The Argonaut a sample of our output 68 FREMONT STREET Phone Kearny 1040

Bonestell, Richardson & Co. PAPER The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us. CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE 118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna, San Francisco.

Out of the Multitude that enjoy the Sports on land and water thousands fatigue and weary and need the delight of cheer or the comfort of strength.

HUNTER WHISKEY

IS THE FAMOUS, FAULTLESS STIMULANT for such needs.

CHARLES M. REYNOLDS CO. Agents for California and Nevada, 912-914 Folsom St., San Francisco, Cal.

VANITY FAIR.

London always sees a rush of fashionable weddings between the end of Lent and the beginning of May. It is a little hard to understand why we must not be married in Lent and it is still harder to understand why May should be unlucky. In a manner of speaking, all months are unlucky so far as weddings are concerned, on the same general principle that made a certain man avoid rice for the rest of his life on the ground that it was indissolubly associated with the one tragic and overshadowing incident of his career. But it is no use asking fashionable people for whys and wherefores. Lent and the month of May must be avoided, and as a result the intervening ten days are so overcrowded with events that even the society scribe has to curtail his raptures in order to get them within the stern limits of the newspaper column.

What do these weddings cost? Not, it seems, a very great deal, if we exclude such elastic items as trousseau and presents. There is naturally no limit to the amounts that can be expended in finery, jewels, and testimonials of affection and good will, but the actual cost of the ceremony is not a large one. A full choral service at a fashionable London church, with choir, organist, anthem, and a boy soloist, can be arranged for about $50. Then there are the church arrangements, including police, carpets, awning, verger's fees, etc., which will cost about $30 more. The clergyman will be quite satisfied with a fee of $50, and if we estimate about $100 for floral decorations and a small sum for sundries we shall still be well within $250.

Of course there are other expenses, while the attendance of high church dignitaries would mean a corresponding increase of fees. Then, again, if the bride should be florally inclined she may want to spend a lot more than $100. On the other hand, and in view of the more substantial and permanent nature of the blessings at last within her grasp, she may be satisfied with less.

The main items of expense seem to be attached to the subsequent reception. The London Daily Mail has been into the matter with some care and has prepared a schedule of cost which may serve as a warning to those who are contemplating a fashionable wedding in London. The best of all advice is "Don't," but then this, as Punch once pointed out, is applicable to all weddings, fashionable or otherwise. Here is the estimate as prepared by the Daily Mail, but it can, of course, be modified almost indefinitely:

Wedding cake	$150
Caterer's charge for cutting and dispatching the cake, afterwards to the guests...	50
Refreshments for 150 guests at 5s. per head	185
Marquee, floored, carpeted, lighted, heated, with alcove for musicians.....	150
Band to play during the reception.....	50
Champagne for 150 guests (5 doz. bottles)	110
Taking charge of presents.....	10
Arranging and repacking presents.....	50
Flowers for house decoration.....	75
Bride's bouquet	25
Bridesmaids' bouquets	25

In spite of financial depressions and boogies of this kind, it is a little strange that wedding presents have been more expensive than usual this year. A prominent London jeweler says that people have been buying the once more fashionable bull tortoise shell "blotters" at $50, vanishing liqueur tables at $100, fitted dressing bags at $500, tiny watches set in jewels on rings for wearing outside a glove at $100, and watches suspended as pendants from pearl set neck chains at $375. Evidently the financial stress has not been allowed to interfere with these sentimental tokens, if, indeed, sentiment has still something to do with the giving of presents to people for whom we may have very little real feeling.

There will be no startling innovations when Mrs. Taft becomes the mistress of the White House. There will be no fads to be exploited, no reforms to be inflicted under the guise of hospitality, no sensational departures from domestic precedent. Mrs. Taft is not one of those women who like to be talked about, and her virtues are none the less conspicuous because they seek the shade rather than the sunlight.

Hospitality with the Taft family has always been a matter of spontaneity rather than of acquired art. It is of that rare and informal kind that sends the visitor away with the sense of having given pleasure by his visit. For example, Mrs. Taft makes a practice of accompanying informal visitors to the front door, so that their parting impression may be that of the hostess herself. Perhaps it is a small thing, but then courtesy is made up of small things. Those who are most charmed by Mrs. Taft as a hostess might find it a little hard to say wherein the charm lies, but its explanation is in fact very simple. Mrs. Taft is more interested in her guests than she is in herself, she would rather hear them talk than talk herself, and she has the happy faculty that comes only from innate courtesy of finding out the mental tendencies of others and trying to gratify them. That Mrs. Taft is popular with young people is a sure proof of her grace of heart. She can talk baseball with the boys and evening parties with the girls, and from their own level.

Mrs. Taft is not entirely a stranger at the White House. Her father was the law partner of President Hayes, and she spent the greater part of each year at the White House, although she was of course only a child at the time.

The Philadelphia Ledger uses the Platt divorce case as a text upon which to preach a sermon on the international marriage. The case in question is not one to be handled without gloves, nor, it may be said, without vomiting, and perhaps the Ledger does well to summarize the proceedings in terms that are brief but not unpointed. The Ledger says:

At the age of seventy-five he is defendant in a suit which, even as it ended, is plainly disgraceful. The senator presents a painful spectacle of hesitation, of evasion, of tottering senility, with glimmerings of a sly and crafty imbecility. His nurse attends him and hands him about like a baby, and on the brink of the grave he stands a disgrace to manhood and to the American public.

For the purpose of comparison the Ledger cites the case of the Duc de Chaulnes, who married one of America's rich young women. Now the rule de mortuis is a good and kindly one, but we need not, upon that account, keep silent as to the Duc de Chaulnes. He was young and not without his full share of the follies of his years, but there was every reason to believe that his future would have made amends for a not well-spent past. At least his father-in-law, one of the hardest headed business men of America, had confidence in him. Now when the marriage was celebrated we were treated to the usual cacklings and brayings from the Pharisees of the press, with the customary inferences that because the Duc de Chaulnes was a Frenchman therefore France was evidently a dying nation, there being no instances of foolish young men to be found elsewhere. There was no recognition of the fact that the duke did not represent the French nation, that he and all his kind were repudiated by that nation, that they were outcasts, hangers-on, and incompetents, mere cumberers of the ground, despised and rejected by their own people. It was enough that the duke was a Frenchman and that he had fallen somewhat short of those rigid and puritanic virtues, that whole-souled devotion to public interests and private holinesses that invariably distinguish our own gilded youth. France had produced the Duc de Chaulnes and therefore France was decadent, effete, and dying. And now comes the moral as drawn by the Ledger:

In our own case the situation is exactly reversed. France never elected De Chaulnes to office, but we free Americans, in the great, rich, intelligent State of New York, under the guidance of a new republic, at almost the outset of our glorious career, with no evil traditions holding us back, with no residuum of the poison of a wrong system in the blood, deliberately choose and elect to a position of power and responsibility T. C. Platt. Which nation suffers by the comparison?

The population of New York is over seven millions or nearly one-tenth of the population of the United States. To foreign eyes, to French eyes, New York City and New York State stand as representative of the American nation. Probably three-fourths of our foreign visitors never see anything else of America. And when these seven millions of people are called upon to elect a statesman to occupy the highest position of legislative power and influence within their gift, when they are invited to choose their wisest and their best in the full light of day and with complete knowledge of antecedents and records, their choice falls upon—Thomas Collier Platt. France never did anything like this. No country has ever done anything like it unless we go back to Judea of old when the crowd, with one accord, demanded the release unto them of Barabbas.

It is no longer within the power of the King of England to order his adversaries to instant execution. Temple Bar is no longer decorated with the heads of those who have been so unfortunate as to incur the royal displeasure, while the headsman's axe has retired to an honorable, or dishonorable, desuetude in the Tower of London. But it need not be imagined that his majesty is thereby deprived of all power of offense and defense or that he can no longer inflict agony of the most excruciating kind upon those who have fallen beneath his frown. He can refuse to invite them to the Royal Garden Party.

That is exactly the fate that has befallen four unlucky wights of the House of Commons. There are over six hundred members of the house and they were all invited except four. The precise reasons for the exclusion are wrapped in mystery, but no great skill is needed to guess at them. First of all there was Keir Hardie, the Socialist and Labor member. The king has certainly no objection to Socialists, because there are a great many of them in the house, and with this exception they were all invited and they duly wore the garb of every-day life and the red tie of their political faith. Mr. Asquith, by the way, often wears a red tie, and so indeed does the king himself. But Keir Hardie has made himself peculiarly offensive. During his recent visit to India he talked to the natives of a frenzied democracy that is one of the commonplaces of London, but that very nearly plunged India into the unthinkable horrors of rebellion. Keir Hardie's offense in India was not against royalty or against government, but against humanity.

Another of the excluded four was Arthur Ponsonby, and Arthur Ponsonby is just as much of an aristocrat as Keir Hardie is a democrat. Ponsonby was private secretary to the late Campbell-Bannerman and the son of Sir Henry Ponsonby, who was secretary to Queen Victoria. The wise ones say that he was excluded because he protested against the visit of the king to the Czar. But for the protest that was made in the House of Commons this ill-starred visit might have passed almost unnoticed by the country, which is well used to the king's diplomatic wanderings and takes little notice of them. Now the king is extraordinarily sensitive to public opinion. He hates to be censured, and in this case the censure was emphatic. The king was practically told and in unmistakable words that any recognition of the Czar, any show of friendliness for this despicable ruler, was an abomination and an affront to the people, and although the visit was duly made, the king was deeply wounded and probably deeply incensed at the immediate cause of his discomfort. If this is not the true reason for Mr. Ponsonby's rebuff, there is at least no other in sight.

W. & J. SLOANE

SUMMER FURNITURE

Old Hickory,
Willow and
Prairie Grass
Furniture for Verandas and
Summer Homes

Van Ness and Sutter

Kitchen Specials

To introduce our new Kitchenware Department on the gallery, we will offer some extraordinary values in genuine Agateware. We now have the largest Kitchenware Department in the City, filled with a great variety of labor-saving devices.

NATHAN DOHRMANN COMPANY

1520-1550 VAN NESS AVE.

BACK EAST

EXCURSIONS

ROUND TRIP RATES

Atchison, Kas.....	$60.00	Kansas City, Mo.....	$60.00	Omaha, Neb.....	$60.00
Baltimore, Md.....	107.50	Leavenworth, Kas..	60.00	Pacific Junction, Ia.	60.00
Boston, Mass.....	110.50	Memphis, Tenn....	67.50	Philadelphia, Pa....	108.50
Chicago, Ill.....	72.50	Mineola, Tex.....	60.00	Sioux City, Ia.....	63.90
Council Bluffs, Ia..	60.00	Minneapolis, Minn..	73.50	St. Joseph, Mo.....	60.00
Duluth, Minn.....	79.50	New Orleans, La....	67.50	St. Louis, Mo.....	67.50
Houston, Tex.....	60.00	New York, N. Y....	108.50	St. Paul, Minn.....	73.50
				Washington, D. C..	107.50

On Sale July 21-22-23-28-29. August 17-18-24-25. September 15-16.

Colorado Springs, Colo., $55.00; Denver, Colo., $55.00; Pueblo, Colo., $55.00.
On Sale September 14-15.

Montreal, Que., $108.50; Toronto, Canada, $94.40.
On Sale July 21-22-23-28-29, August 17-18-24-25.

Let me make your sleeping-car reservation early and explain details.

F. W. PRINCE, C. T. A., 673 Market Street

J. J. WARNER, 1112 Broadway, Oakland

It appeals to particular people because it is particularly good

Old Gilt Edge Whiskey

Rye or Bourbon

MENNE'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

A Positive Relief for PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all afflictions of the skin.

Removes all odor of perspiration. Delightful after Shaving. Sold everywhere, on mail order receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample Free.

GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY, Newark, N.J.

DIVIDEND NOTICES

FRENCH SAVINGS BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO, 108 Sutter Street.—For the half year ending June 30, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum on all deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Wednesday, July 1, 1908; dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from July 1, 1908. CHARLES CARPY, President.

THE SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY, 101 Montgomery Street, corner Sutter Street.—For the half year ending June 30, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rate of 4 per cent per annum on all deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Wednesday, July 1, 1908. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from July 1, 1908. WM. A. BOSTON, Cashier.

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, 42 Montgomery Street, corner Sutter.—For half year ending June 30, 1908, a dividend has been declared on all deposits in the savings department of this bank at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum, payable on and after Wednesday, July 1, 1908; dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from July 1, 1908. B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager.

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS

Bear the script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label. Get "Improved," no tacks required.

Wood Rollers Tin Rollers

Clubbing List.

By special arrangement with the publishers, and by concessions in price on both sides, we are enabled to make the following offer, open to all subscribers direct to this office. Subscribers in renewing subscriptions to Eastern periodicals will please mention the date of expiration in order to avoid mistakes:

American Magazine and Argonaut.....	$4.25
Argosy and Argonaut.....	4.40
Atlantic Monthly and Argonaut.....	6.70
Blackwood's Magazine and Argonaut...	6.20
Century and Argonaut.....	7.00
Commoner and Argonaut.....	4.10
Cosmopolitan and Argonaut.....	4.35
Current Literature and Argonaut.....	5.75
English Illustrated Magazine and Argonaut.....	4.70
Farum and Argonaut.....	6.00
Harper's Bazaar and Argonaut.....	4.35
Harper's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.70
Harper's Weekly and Argonaut.....	6.70
House Beautiful and Argonaut.....	4.75
International Magazine and Argonaut...	4.50
Judge and Argonaut.....	7.50
Leslie's Weekly and Argonaut.....	6.70
Life and Argonaut.....	7.75
Lippincott's Magazine and Argonaut.....	5.25
Littell's Living Age and Argonaut.....	9.00
Mexican Herald and Argonaut.....	10.50
Munsey's Magazine and Argonaut.....	4.40
Nineteenth Century and Argonaut.....	7.25
North American Review and Argonaut...	8.00
Out West and Argonaut.....	5.25
Overland Monthly and Argonaut.....	4.50
Political Science Quarterly and Argonaut.....	4.90
Puck and Argonaut.....	7.50
Review of Reviews and Argonaut.....	5.00
Scribner's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.25
Smart Set and Argonaut.....	5.25
St. Nicholas and Argonaut.....	6.00
Sunset and Argonaut.....	4.25
Theatre Magazine and Argonaut.....	5.75
Thrice-a-Week New York World (Democratic) and Argonaut.....	4.25
Weekly New York Tribune (Republican) and Argonaut.....	4.50
Weekly New York Tribune, Weekly New York World, and Argonaut.....	5.25

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

The prodigal son wrote the old man as follows: "I got religion at camp meeting the other day. Send me $10." But the old man replied: "Religion is free. You got the wrong kind."

The twins were being congratulated upon the arrival of a small brother when the neighbor inquired, "Well, how did you boys like the boy?" "Oh," answered Howard, nonchalantly, "we thought it was all right; but mamma would rather have had an automobile."

A Billville jury, slow in arriving at a decision, and feeling the keen demands of appetite, sent the following note to the judge: "If you don't send us somethin' to eat quick, we'll have to find the defendant guilty; but if you'll send us three meals a day we'll stay here till he's innocent."

An Italian went to the civil service commissioners' rooms to be examined for a laborer's position. He answered most of the questions correctly. Finally they asked him if he had ever been naturalized. He seemed a bit puzzled, but at last his face lighted up. "Ah, I know whata you mean. Scratcha de arm. Yes, lasta week."

The lawyer was drawing up Enpeck's will. "I hereby bequeath all my property to my wife," dictated Enpeck. "Got that down?" "Yes," answered the attorney. "On condition," continued Enpeck, "that she marries within a year." "But why that condition?" asked the man of law. "Because," answered the meek and lowly testator, "I want somebody to be sorry that I died."

Mrs. Maloney was before the judge, charged with assault on Policeman Casey. She had been unusually attentive throughout the proceedings, and now the judge was summing up the evidence. "The evidence shows, Mrs. Maloney," he began, "that you threw a stone at Policeman Casey." "It shows more than that, yer honor," interrupted Mrs. Maloney; "it shows that Oi hit him!"

A young man had been calling now and then on a young lady, when one night, as he sat in the parlor waiting for her to come down, her mother entered the room instead and asked him in a very grave, stern way what his intentions were. He turned very red and was about to stammer some incoherent reply when suddenly the young lady called down from the head of the stairs: "Mamma, mamma, that is not the one."

The cragged hachelor and the aged spinster sat suffering in the concert hall. The selections were apparently entirely unfamiliar to the gentleman; but when the "Wedding March" of Mendelssohn was begun, he pricked up his ears. "That sounds familiar," he exclaimed. "I'm not strong on these classical pieces, but that's a good 'un. What is it?" The spinster cast down her eyes. "That," she told him demurely, "is the 'Maiden's Prayer.'"

One evening last summer on the farm, a little slum child, a country weeker, was enjoying his first glimpse of pastoral life. The setting sun gilded the grass and flowers of the old-fashioned garden, and on a little stool he sat, under a tree, hent with its load of ripe peaches, beside the cook, who was plucking a chicken. He watched that plucking operation gravely for some time. Then he said: "Do ye take off their clothes every night, loidy?"

Richard Carle, the brilliant actor-playwright, discussed polar expeditions at a dinner party in New York with a charming young matron—Mrs. Asterisk. "As for me," said Mrs. Asterisk, "I can not understand why so many cultured men are willing to abandon civilization and its blessings, and spend a lifetime pole-hunting amid the bleak terrors of the Cold White North!" Mr. Carle shook his blonde head and smiled. "Ah, madam, but you must remember," said he, "that all men are not hessed with such wives as Mr. Asterisk."

The attendant was showing the lunatic asylum to the visitor, and opened the door to the first cell. Inside was a man sitting on a stool and gazing vacantly at the wall. "Sad story," said the attendant; "he was in love with a girl, but she married another man, and he lost his reason in grief." They stole out softly, closing the door behind them, and proceeded to the next inmate. This cell was thickly padded, and the man within was stark, staring mad. "Who is this?" inquired the visitor. "This," repeated the attendant, "this is the other man."

A lawyer once asked a man who had at various times sat on several juries, "Who influenced you most—the lawyers, the witnesses, or the judge?" He expected to get some useful and interesting information from so inexperienced a jurymen. This was the man's reply: "I tell yer, sir, 'ow I makes up my mind. I'm a plain man, and a reasonin' man, and I aint influenced by anything the lawyers say, nor hy what the witnesses say, no, nor hy what the judge says. I just looks at the man in the docks and I says, 'If he aint done nothing, why's he there?' And I brings 'em all in guilty."

An Indianapolis man, wintering in Spain, lunched at the monastery of the Benedictines. After lunch he took out his cigar case. "I don't suppose you object to smoking here?" he said to the white-clad monk attendant. "Yes, sir, we do," the monk answered. "There is a law against smoking in the refectory." "Then where do all the cigar and cigarette stubs come from that I see about me?" "From gentlemen who didn't ask about the law," the monk replied, mildly.

Just before the adjournment of Congress, Senator Julius Caesar Burrows of Michigan and William J. Bryan met in the marble room of the Senate at the capitol. "Let me see, senator," said the man from Nebraska, with a grin, "I believe that you are in favor of the election of senators by the direct vote of the people?" "Yes," said the statesman from the Wolverine State. "I have been in favor of it for a number of years." "Well, senator," said Mr. Bryan, "it is not often that I find myself in accord with a Republican, but I certainly agree with you on that proposition." "Your approval, Mr. Bryan," said Mr. Burrows, quickly, "almost makes me doubt the wisdom of my course. I guess I'll have to look into the matter further!"

THE MERRY MUSE.

Sad Words.

Of all sad words
These are the worst:
"Back to the bench!
You're out on first!"
—Washington Star.

A Passing Flame.

There was an old Miss of Antrim,
Who looked for the leak with a glim.
Alack and alas!
The cause was the gas.
We will now sing the fifty-fourth hymn.
—Ralph A. Lyon.

The Chill that Don't Come Off of Us.

Full many a man, both young and old,
Has gone to his sarcophagus
By pouring water, icy cold,
Adown his hot esophagus.
—Dr. H. W. Wiley.

A Chanson.

"Tell me a story, pa, tell me a story,
Tell me of knights and of kings and their glory;
Tell me of princes out of the fairy-book.
How does the queen appear? How does the princess look?"
"The queen is as fair as the golden sun,
The princess is even fairer.
The prince is a gay young son-of-a-gun,
And the king—is a holy terror."
—The Sphinx.

The Man with the Spade.

"What are the chickens laughin' for?" said Suburbs with a spade.
"To see you dig, to see you dig," the City Cynic said.
"What makes 'em wait, what makes 'em wait?" said Suburbs with a spade.
"They're waitin' for the seed you plant," the City Cynic said.
For they love a country garden, with room to scratch and play;
They hope you'll keep on diggin' and a-rakin' clouds away,
An' when you start to plantin' vegetables they'll be gay,
For they're ready to start scratchin' in the mornin'!

"What are the roosters crowin' for?" said Suburbs with a spade.
"And hear the hens a-cacklin'!" "Oh, yes!" the Cynic said;
"They're glad to see those packages of seed you brought from town,
An' so they're sendin' tidings of the good times up and down!"
For they know you'll never see 'em when another sun shall rise,
Although it's growin' weather and the summer's in the skies;
It's buyin' feed for chickens every seed a fellow buys,
For they're ready to start scratchin' in the mornin'!
—Benttown Bard.

The incumbent of an old church in Wales asked a party of Americans to visit his parochial school. After a recitation he invited them to question the scholars, and one of the party accepted the invitation. "Little boy," said he to a rosy-faced lad, "can you tell me who George Washington was?" "Iss, surr," was the smiling reply. "'E was a 'Merican gen'ral." "Quite right. And can you tell me what George Washington was remarkable for?" "Iss, sur. 'E was remarkable 'cos 'e was a 'Merican an' told the trewth."

"Poor man! Have you always been blind?" "No, mum," answered Tired Tiffins unthinkingly. "Last week I wuz lame, but dere wuzn't enuff in it."—New York Globe.

A. Hirschman.

For fine jewelry and silverware. 1641-1643 Van Ness Avenue.

BANKING

Security Savings Bank

316 MONTGOMERY STREET
San Francisco, Cal.

Authorized Capital - $1,000,000.00
Paid-up Capital - 500,000.00
Surplus and Undivided Profits 313,000.00

4% Interest Per Annum

Interest at the Rate of 4 per cent. per annum was paid on Deposits for Six Months ending June 30, 1908

DIRECTORS

Wm. Babcock, S. L. Abbot, O. D. Baldwin, Joseph D. Grant, E. J. McCutchen, L. F. Montague, R. H. Pease, Warren D. Clark, Jas. L. Flood, Fred W. Ray, J. A. Donohoe, Jacob Stern.

French Savings Bank

The French Savings Bank Building, 108-110 Sutter Street.

THE FRENCH-AMERICAN BANK occupies offices in the same building.

OFFICERS—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, Vice-President; Leon Boqueraz, Vice-President; Alphonse Bousquet, Secretary.

DIRECTORS—J. E. Artigues, O. Bozio, J. A. Bergerot, John Ginty, J. M. Dupas, J. S. Godcau, N. C. Babin, George Belaney, H. de St. Seine.

Safe Deposit Boxes for Rent

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., San Francisco

Guaranteed Capital $1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash. 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds. 1,453,983.62
Deposits June 30, 1908. 34,474,534.23
Total Assets 37,055,263.31

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse, and W. S. Goodfellow.

The National Bank ROLL OF HONOR

The title "Roll of Honor National Bank" is a distinction of which any financial institution in the United States may be proud. As is well known a "Roll of Honor Bank" is one possessing surplus and profits in excess of capital. A place on the Roll of Honor can not be bought, it must be earned. This bank has for a long time been known as a "Roll of Honor Bank" among banks and bankers.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF Berkeley
UNITED STATES DEPOSITORY
A. W. NAYLOR, Pres. F. M. WILSON, Vice-Pres.
F. L. NAYLOR, Cashier. F. C. MORTIMER, Asst. Cashier.

THE BERKELEY NATIONAL BANK
United States Depository
Berkeley, Cal.
HOUSEHOLD AND COMMERCIAL ACCOUNTS INVITED.
DIRECTORS—George P. Baxter, Pres.; J. W. Richards, Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Bangs, Vice-Pres.; Louis Titus, Dr. Thomas Addison, A. G. Freeman, Duane McDuffie, Perry T. Tompkins, F. L. Lipman, W. J. Hotchkiss, and Whitney Palache. P. H. ATKINSON, Cashier.

Connecticut Fire Insurance Company

Established 1850 OF HARTFORD

Total Assets $5,817,423
Surplus to Policy-Holders..... 2,118,394
BENJAMIN J. SMITH
Manager Pacific Department
518 CALIFORNIA STREET
San Francisco

WESTERN ASSURANCE COMPANY

TORONTO

U. S. Assets.....$2,493,154
Surplus 483,989
PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT
1004 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE
SAN FRANCISCO
J. J. KENNY, Manager W. L. W. MILLER, Assistant Manager

S. F. and North Pacific 5%
Market St. 1st Con. 5%
Cal. Central Gas and El. 5%
Sacramento El. Gas and Ry. 5%

And OTHER HIGH GRADE BONDS

SUTRO & CO. BROKERS

412 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.
We have a Direct Wire to N. Y.

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

With the departure of the fleet from Pacific waters has closed a notable epoch in our social history. Dinners and receptions on board the hattleships were a new form of entertainment that brought with them the zest of over-seas and put the keen edge of novelty on even simple phases of naval hospitality. Now, however, brass buttons and epaulets must fade into sweet memories, while the every-day tennis flannels and golf sweaters resume their old places of importance. Many of the well-known San Francisco families who have remained in town or at near-by resorts in order to dispense the hospitality of their homes to officer friends and their families are now closing their houses and preparing for the remainder of the summer in the country.

Mrs. George Halsey Meigs has announced the engagement of her daughter, Miss Lucille Meigs, to Lieutenant-Commander L. C. Bertolletti, executive officer of the U. S. S. Vermont.

Mr. and Mrs. George Almer Newhall entertained a number of friends at dinner at the Burlingame Country Club last week. Their guests were Mr. and Mrs. Mountford Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Irving Scott, Mr. and Mrs. Norris Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. Scott, Mrs. Joseph B. Crockett, Mrs. Walter S. Martin, Miss Emily Carolan, Mr. Samuel Knight, Mr. Gordon Armshy, and Mr. Raymond Armshy.

Last Sunday Lieutenant D. A. Weaver entertained a number of friends at a luncheon on board the U. S. S. flagship Connecticut, his guests being Rear-Admiral and Mrs. C. S. Sperry, Miss Helen Sullivan, Mrs. F. J. Amweg, Lieutenant-Commander R. McLean, and Lieutenant-Commander S. F. Fullinwider.

Mrs. Andrew Welch was hostess at a luncheon at the Burlingame Club given in honor of Miss Sara Drum, whose engagement to Mr. John Gill of Redlands has recently been announced.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Pringle entertained at dinner recently. Among their guests were Mr. and Mrs. George Almer Newhall, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Irving Scott, and Mr. Sidney Pringle.

Captain and Mrs. William H. Tobin gave a theatre party and supper last week in honor of Mr. John Ruckman, son of Major Ruckman, entertaining Miss Marie Lundeen, Miss Marjorie Ruckman, Miss Virginia Tobin, Miss Dickenson, and Mr. Howard Tobin.

Mrs. Eleanor Martin gave a luncheon at the Fairmont last week in honor of Mrs. Marguerite Le Breton and Miss Le Breton, who are soon to sail for Honolulu. Among the other guests were Mrs. Isaac L. Requa, Mrs. A. N. Towne, Miss Florence Breckenridge, and Mrs. Fred Sharon.

Lieutenant W. F. Bevan, United States Marine Corps, was host at a charming dinner on board the U. S. S. New Jersey last Sunday evening. Mrs. Amweg chaperoned the party, consisting of Miss Clarisse Lyons, Miss Ethel Pippy, Miss Ethel Amweg, and others.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Breeze gave an informal dinner at their home in Menlo Park recently, their guests being Mr. and Mrs. Harry Poett, Mr. and Mrs. Norris Davis, and Mr. Frank Owen.

The officers and ladies of the Presidio are planning another of their delightful informal bops for the 18th of July, to be given at the Officers' Club.

Lieutenant-Commander Thompkins and other of the officers of the U. S. S. West Virginia gave a launch party Friday to a number of their friends from Mare Island and this side of the bay.

Captain and Mrs. E. F. Qualtrough were the guests of honor at a dinner given at the Fairmont before the sailing of the fleet. Mr. and Mrs. George T. Mayre, Jr., who recently arrived from Washington, D. C., were their hosts.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a résumé of movements to and from this city and Coast and of the whereabouts of absent Californians:

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Weatherhose are planning a month's outing in the Tahoe region.

Rear-Admiral and Mrs. Richardson Clover and their daughters are planning to spend the summer at their country place in the Napa Valley.

Mr. and Mrs. James Carolan have taken the Francis Carolan house at Burlingame for the summer.

Rev. and Mrs. Bradford Leavitt and Miss Helen Leavitt are in the Tahoe region for the summer.

Miss Patricia Cosgrave is visiting Mrs. Henry Winship at Ross Valley.

Mrs. Oscar Fitzallan Long has returned to her home in Piedmont.

Mrs. Albert Gerherding and her little daughter Beatrice have returned home, after several years' residence in England.

Mrs. Walter Dean is visiting friends in Los Angeles.

Mr. and Mrs. William Denman are at their country place in Napa County.

Miss Cora Smedberg is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Melvor, at the Presidio of Monterey.

Miss Constance Barrows is the guest of Mrs. Gaston Ashe at her country home, Tres Pinos.

Mrs. Russel Wilson and Miss Emily Wilson have gone to New York, from whence they will sail for Europe.

Mrs. Charles Fee and her daughters are at Tahoe.

Miss Lucy Gwin Coleman has returned to town, after her visit to Miss Elisabeth Livermore.

Mrs. W. E. Norwood and Miss Evelyn Norwood are spending the summer at Los Gatos.

Mrs. George C. Perkins has sailed for a visit to Honolulu.

Rear-Admiral and Mrs. Swinhurne were the guests last week of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Blanchard Chase at their country place, Stag's Leap.

Mr. and Mrs. George T. Mayre, Jr., have returned to town, after their visit to San Rafael.

Miss Jennie Blair, after her extended absence, has returned to her home and is planning a trip to Bartlett Springs.

Mr. and Mrs. Hall McAllister have returned to their home, after their stay at Del Monte.

Miss Linda Cadwalader is the guest of Mrs. Henry T. Scott at Burlingame.

Mrs. Emma Shafter Howard has opened her cottage at Inverness for the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. William B. Bourn and Miss Maud Bourn expect to sail in a few weeks for a European tour.

Mrs. George McNear, Jr., is a guest at the Miramar, Santa Barbara.

Mr. and Mrs. George Lent are entertaining Miss Charlotte Lund of New York.

Miss Marian and Miss Elisabeth Newhall have been guests during the past week of Miss Florence Hopkins at her home in Menlo Park.

Miss Carrie Gwin is one of the summer guests at San Rafael.

Mrs. Edwin C. Long has returned from a visit to Los Angeles, where she has been the guest of her grand-parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. Crissman.

Miss Julia Langhorne is the guest of Mrs. William Irwin in Paris.

Mrs. Coyle and her daughters, Misses Maisie and Angela Coyle are planning a visit to Monterey.

Mrs. A. J. Le Breton and Miss Marguerite Le Breton are guests of Dr. and Mrs. J. D. Whitney at the Hotel Vendome in San Jose.

Miss Merritt Reed is the guest of Mrs. Covington Pringle at Menlo Park.

Miss Grace Baldwin is visiting friends at Los Angeles.

Mrs. George Howard and Miss Frances Howard have returned to their home, after their visit at Del Monte.

Mrs. H. P. Young is expected soon on a transport from the Philippines and will be the guest of her mother, Mrs. Voorhies.

Mrs. Kenneth Castleman has sailed for Honolulu to join her husband during the stay of the fleet.

General R. C. Taylor sailed on the transport Thomas for Honolulu.

Miss Maud and Miss Celia O'Connor have returned from Europe and are at the Fairmont.

Miss Augusta Foute is planning a visit to Miss Florence Breckenridge at her home in Menlo Park.

Mr. and Mrs. Willard Drown have returned to town from their visit in Menlo Park.

Mr. George Cameron has sailed for a trip to Europe.

Miss Alice Owen has been spending several weeks in Mill Valley.

Mr. and Mrs. George Boyd, after their trip to Bolinas Bay, have returned to their home in San Rafael.

Miss Mary Josselyn has been the guest of Mrs. Frederick McNear.

Mrs. J. E. Lewis, wife of Commander Lewis, was a passenger on the out-going transport en route for the Orient, where she will meet the fleet.

Mrs. Kossuth Niles, wife of Captain Niles of the Louisiana, is visiting friends in Napa County.

Mr. Clarence Follis has returned from New York and is at San Rafael for a few weeks.

Miss Margaret Casserly has returned from her trip through the southern part of the State.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bishop are at Castle Crag.

Mr. and Mrs. Lansing Kellogg were guests last week of the Horace Blanchard Chases at their country seat, Stag's Leap.

Baroness von Schroeder and her daughter, Miss Janet von Schroeder, have opened the Von Schroeder country place, Eagle Ranch, where they will spend the remainder of the summer.

Mrs. Frank Norris is spending a few weeks in the Tahoe region.

Mrs. Bullock of New York is spending the summer with her family at the Vendome in San Jose.

The Misses Rodgers have been visiting Miss Ida Bourn at her St. Helena home.

Mrs. Russel Wilson is planning an early departure for Europe.

Miss Harriet Alexander is the guest of Mrs. Frank Brigham at Los Gatos.

Mr. Douglas Alexander is the guest of his aunt, Mrs. Mountford Wilson, at Burlingame.

Miss Edith Pillsbury, who for the past few years has been in Europe, is expected to return to her home in this city within a few months.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Foster Dutton are in London and will proceed from there on their motor trip through the Continent.

Mrs. John M. Orchard, wife of Commander Orchard, sailed recently on the transport Thomas to follow the fleet to the Orient.

Miss Newell Drown was recently the guest of Miss Elisabeth Livermore at her home in Napa County.

The Misses Hayes, who have been the guests of Colonel and Mrs. J. W. Bennet, are soon to return to their Eastern home.

Mrs. Henry L. Dodge has taken the Sidney-Smith home in San Rafael during the absence of the Misses Sidney-Smith in Europe.

Captain and Mrs. William H. Tobin are spending the month of July in the Yosemite Valley.

Rear-Admiral and Mrs. Theo F. Jewell have gone to Del Monte, where they will remain indefinitely.

Mr. and Mrs. John E. Stearns and Miss Kathleen Stearns of Los Angeles, who have been in the East for the past year and one-half, are now at the Fairmont, en route to their home in the south.

Mrs. James Louderman, Miss Bertha Rice, and Miss Antonia Marin came up from Santa Barbara for a few days' visit in town this week. They stopped at the St. Francis.

Mrs. George H. Howard, who has been visiting her mother, Mrs. Henry Schmiedell, at Hotel Del Monte for the past month, has returned to her home at San Mateo.

Mr. F. J. Stanton and family, who left the Fairmont for a few days' outing in the Yosemite, are again in their apartments.

Mr. and Mrs. Parker Whitney of Rocklin have taken a house in Pacific Grove for the summer. Mr. Whitney's sister, Mrs. T. H. Graydon, is visiting Mr. and Mrs. J. Parker Whitney at Del Monte.

Mr. C. W. Dorsey of the Bureau of Soils of the Department of Agriculture will be in California for some time and is making the Fairmont his headquarters while in the city.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred S. Tuhhs went to Del Monte last Wednesday, where they will spend the balance of the summer.

President and Mrs. Benjamin Ide Wheeler are at Del Monte for a fortnight's stay.

Captain N. H. Hall, U. S. M. C., and Mrs. Hall have been guests of the St. Francis for the past ten days.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Kidder of Cambridge, Massachusetts, who have been visiting Mrs. Phebe A. Hearsat at her home at Pleasanton, have gone to Del Monte, where they will spend several weeks.

Among the guests now at the Fairmont is Miss Lataillarde of Santa Barbara.

Mr. Joseph Eastland came up to the city a day or so ago and took rooms at the St. Francis.

Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Oyster and their daughter, Miss Elizabeth Oyster, will go to Del Monte the first of August to remain for some time.

Mr. and Mrs. Luther J. Holton have taken apartments at the Fairmont.

Colorado as well as California is famed for its climate and resorts, yet a glance over the Fairmont register will usually show some visitors from the Rocky Mountain State there. Among those at present are Mrs. W. N. W. Blayne, Mr. R. S. Sumner, Mr. George A. Blaisdell, all of Denver.

Mr. Gaspar G. Bacon of Westbury, Long Island, N. Y., has been a guest of the Fairmont for the past ten days.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank G. Noyes and party of Napa motored to Aetna Springs for a few days' stay.

Mrs. C. D. Jameson, Mr. W. M. Jameson, Dr. Roland Pope, and Mr. Parke W. Pope compose a party of Colorado Springs society people who are stopping at the St. Francis.

Dr. and Mrs. Ira P. Trevitt of Buffalo, New York, are at the Fairmont during their stay in San Francisco.

Mr. W. J. Pierce of Los Angeles was a guest at the St. Francis during the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Chapin of Sacramento are at the Fairmont for a week or two.

Mr. and Mrs. William Lynham Shiels and Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Dimond of San Francisco are guests at Aetna Springs.

Mr. and Mrs. Selah Chamberlain of Hanford are at the Fairmont.

Among the visitors to San Francisco now at the Fairmont are the following from Los Angeles: Mrs. A. M. Gindenger, Mr. and Mrs. Guy B. Barham, Mrs. Enoch Knight.

Among those who are registered at Aetna Springs are Mr. and Mrs. Clarence M. Reed and Mr. and Mrs. Churchill Taylor of Oakland, and Mrs. Charles J. Okell and Mrs. Louis James of Alameda.

Among recent arrivals at Hotel Normandie are Mr. H. G. Sonnenberg, Los Angeles; Mr. J. H. Schwabacher, San Rafael; Miss M. Jacks, Monterey; Mr. H. Rodgers, Berkeley; Miss E. McFarland, Los Angeles; Mrs. E. Closset, Mrs. Brohel, Portland.

Among the navy men at the St. Francis this week were Mr. D. Beecher, Dr. E. V. Reed, Mr. A. K. Shoup, Mr. H. E. Collins, Mr. L. C. Farley, Mr. N. L. Cuthbertson, Mr. C. F. Cooper, Mr. S. R. Nicholson, Mr. J. F. McCallin, Mr. H. R. Keller, Mr. E. A. Aheny, Mr. M. C. Shirley, Mr. Cassius B. Barnes, Mr. B. H. Dorsey, Mr. E. F. Buck, and Mr. William A. Merritt.

Pears'

"A shining countenance" is produced by ordinary soaps.

The use of Pears' reflects beauty and refinement. Pears' leaves the skin soft, white and natural.

Matchless for the complexion.

FAIRMONT HOTEL

A good place to entertain or to be entertained—in either simple or elaborate fashion.

Palace Hotel Company

FIVE GLORIOUS DAYS

at matchless

DEL MONTE

need only cost you

$24.75

You can pay more if you wish. But this amount will cover your entire railroad fare, room and board for five days at the

FINEST RESORT IN THE WORLD

Write today for reservations

H. R. WARNER, Manager Del Monte

When You Leave Town

Store Your Trunks, Piano, Household Goods, Etc.

With Us

STRINGER STORAGE COMPANY

Sutter near Fillmore

Tel. West 999

AETNA SPRINGS

Idealizing California country life

All roads to Aetna Springs now open to automobiles. Special automobile service from St. Helena to the Springs.

Just the place for the family. Reservations now being made. Rates and literature on application.

AETNA SPRINGS CO.

Aetna Springs, Napa County, Cal.

Hotel St. Francis

A study of individual requirements.

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF JAMES WOODS

The Majestic—a Homelike Hotel

Refined surroundings—The very best cuisine—Perfect service—Moderate prices—Ideal location—Rates on application.

N. W. corner Sutter and Gough

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"

Building, concrete, steel and marble. Located, most fashionable shopping district.

210 rooms, 135 baths. Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests.

Most refined hostelry in Seattle. Absolutely fireproof. English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

SANTA CRUZ

CALIFORNIA

"The World's Most Beautiful Playground"

More features in a few square miles than any other spot. The famous Big Trees, Scenic Mountains. Surf Bathing superb. Largest and most magnificent Casino and Natatorium. Climate without an equal.

"Never a Dull Moment"

Byron Hot Springs

The waters cure rheumatism—the environment is perfect—the hotel comfortable and supplied with an unexcelled table. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, ground floor, James Flood Building; Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market St., or address hotel.

Hotel del Coronado

Motto: "BEST OF EVERYTHING" Most Delightful Climate on Earth American Plan. Summer rates $3.50 per day each and upward, or $21.00 per week each and upward "Good Music" and "Fine Automobile Road, Los Angeles-Riverside to Coronado." Golf, Tennis, Polo, and other outdoor sports every day in the year. New 700-foot ocean pier, for fishing. Boating and Bathing are the very best. Send for booklet to

MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado Beach, Cal. Or see H. F. NORCROSS, Agent, 334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles. Tel. A 6789; Main 3917. 22d Street and Broadway

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy officers who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Commander F. E. Beatty, U. S. N., is detached from the U. S. S. Charleston and assigned to the Wisconsin.

Commander E. Lloyd, Jr., is detached from duty as inspector of the Fifth Lighthouse District, Baltimore, Maryland, and ordered to the Pacific Fleet, sailing from San Francisco about July 25.

Colonel Duncan, Colonel John Bellinger, and Lieutenant O. P. M. Hazzard are detailed on a tour of inspection of the grounds at Atascadero Ranch.

Leave of absence is granted Colonel George B. Smith, chief paymaster of this department.

Major John W. Ruckman, Captain Daniel Ketchum, and Lieutenant William T. Carpenter of the Presidio of San Francisco are appointed a local board of examiners to report on qualification for promotion.

Major Guy L. Edie, U. S. A. Medical Corps, is ordered to report to Washington, D. C., for promotion.

Major William Stephenson, U. S. A., is ordered to report to Washington for promotion.

Leave of absence for two months with permission to apply for an extension is granted Major Parker West, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., Presidio of San Francisco.

Captain Beverly Reed, Sixth Cavalry, U. S. A., sailed from Manila on the transport Sheridan for San Francisco June 15.

Captain W. Bjornstad, Twenty-Eighth Infantry, U. S. A., is ordered to report to Fort Snelling, Minnesota, for temporary duty.

Captain Theodore Schultz, Ninth Cavalry, U. S. A., is assigned to temporary duty at the local army headquarters.

Leave of absence has been granted Captain James F. Brady, Coast Artillery Corps, to take effect on or about August 31.

Extension of fifteen days' leave of absence has been granted Captain George H. Estes, U. S. A.

Captain Harold Hammond, assistant paymaster, sailed on the transport Thomas for Manila.

Captain William H. Tobin, Coast Artillery Corps, has been appointed acting quartermaster at the Presidio of San Francisco, pending the arrival of Captain A. S. Bickham.

Captain Edward R. Schreiner, M. C., Captain Charles L. Foster, M. C., and Captain William A. Duncan, M. C., are appointed a board of medical officers to meet at the Presidio of San Francisco for the physical examination of such candidates as may be authorized to appear before it to determine their fitness for appointment as second lieutenants.

Contract Surgeon Charles A. Cattermole will proceed to Manhattan, Nevada, to report to the surgeon-general for annulment of his contract.

Contract Surgeon George B. Jones, U. S. A., having reported his arrival at San Francisco in compliance with orders heretofore issued, will proceed to Fort George Wright, Washington, and report in person to the commanding officer of that post for duty.

Leave of absence for one month and fifteen days has been granted Lieutenant Norton E. Woods, Field Artillery, to take effect on or about July 31.

Lieutenant Thomas W. Brown, Twenty-Seventh Infantry, Presidio of Monterey, is ordered to proceed to the arsenal at Benicia to report to the chief ordnance officer for duty.

Lieutenant Earle, U. S. N., is detached from duty on the U. S. S. Maine and assigned to duty at the Naval Station at Cavite.

Lieutenant Robert H. Fletcher, Eighth Infantry, U. S. A., is ordered to report to the commanding officer of the School of Musketry at the Presidio of Monterey.

Leave of absence for fifteen days is granted Lieutenant Guilielmus V. Heidt, Eighth Infantry.

Leave of absence for two months and fifteen days to terminate not later than September 15 is granted Lieutenant Truman W. Carrithers, Twentieth Infantry, Presidio of Monterey.

Lieutenant W. T. Conn, Jr., U. S. N., and Ensign W. H. Lassing, U. S. N., when discharged from treatment at the U. S. Naval Hospital at Mare Island, will proceed to the U. S. Naval Medical School Hospital, Washington, D. C., for treatment.

Second Lieutenant William C. Russell, Eighth Infantry, Presidio of Monterey, now on leave of absence, is detailed for duty at the national match for 1908, and at the proper time will proceed to Camp Perry, Ohio, to report in person for duty accordingly.

Second Lieutenant Adna R. Chaffee, Jr., Fifteenth Cavalry, is detailed for duty in connection with the camp of instruction to be held at Fort Riley, Kansas.

At Out-of-Town Hotels.

The following are among the registrations from San Francisco at Hotel del Coronado: Mr. James H. Fannin, Mr. Walter S. Gray, Mr. F. W. McDonald, Mr. T. K. Stateler, Dr. Barkan, Mrs. Barkan, Miss Barkan, Mr. E. G. Coldevey.

Among the arrivals at Byron Hot Springs during the past week were the following: From San Francisco—Mr. and Mrs. Frank H. Buck, Mr. Frank H. Buck, Jr., Mr. Leonard W. Buck, Dr. George W. Terrill, Mrs. C. L. Shainwald, Mr. J. S. Benedict, Mr. Henry Leap, Sir Henry Heyman, Mrs. C. F. D. Hastings, Miss Ethel Hastings, Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Murphy, Dr. and Mrs. Howard Morrow.

The following guests from San Francisco are registered at Aetna Springs: Mr. and Mrs. William Lynham Shiels, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Dimond, Mrs. H. E. Monroe, Mr. M. Hart, Mr. W. H. Crim, Mrs. C. H. Woodruff, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Wayland, Mr. R. E. Houghton, Mr. J. W. Orr, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Dixon, Mr. W. H. Burt, Mr. Charles Stallman, Mr. F. J. Cooper, Miss Mildred L. Woodruff, Mr. S. H. Woodruff, Mr. Murray Innes.

A few of the recent arrivals at the Tavern of Tamalpais were: From San Francisco—Mrs. H. A. Jones, Mr. Frank Winslow, Mr. Robert Thompson, Miss Mary Morte, Mrs. Kirk Harris, Mrs. P. J. Ward, Miss Agnes Dillon, Miss Maria Dillon, Miss Anna Anderson, Mr. Lamhart Levy, Mr. E. H. Stock, Mr. Henry Jacob, Mr. Daniel E. Hayes, Mr. Emil Lowenberg, Mr. Robert B. Rothchilds; from Oakland—Mrs. E. Baldwin, Miss Jessie Moore, Miss Eva May Fossing; from Berkeley—Miss Grace Partridge, Miss Gladys Partridge, Mrs. J. N. Odell, Mrs. A. M. Carr, Miss Clara L. Carr, Mr. H. Morse Stephens, Miss Lillian Abbott Smith.

The following are among the guests from San Francisco registered at Hotel Rafael: Dr. Francis F. Knorp, Miss E. Meyerfeld, Mr. and Mrs. A. Repsold, Mr. and Mrs. Howsworth, Mr. and Mrs. George Volkman, Miss E. Schilling, Mrs. A. Simon and children, Mrs. A. Franklin, Mr. H. Leslie Comyn, Mrs. A. L. Billing, Mr. and Mrs. I. Greenebaum, Miss A. Greenebaum, Mr. A. C. Stannard, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Downs, Mrs. E. J. Manlove, Mr. Alfred Weil, Mr. A. C. Blumenthal, Mrs. Schloss, Miss Maud O'Connor, Miss Cecelia O'Connor, Mr. C. Gardiner, Mr. M. E. McLoughlin, Mr. S. R. Marvin, Mrs. C. H. Woodruff, Mr. Samuel Rosenheim, Mrs. S. Rosenheim, Miss Golda Meyer, Mr. L. Schwabacher, Mr. George Reid, Mr. E. J. Vogel, Mrs. Spencer Ashlin, Mrs. I. Hertz, Mr. W. D. Keystone, Dr. K. J. Billing, Mrs. J. R. Sheehan, Miss Sheehan, Mr. M. H. Long.

DR. ROBERT E. O'CONNELL, DR. GEORGE D. O'CONNELL, DENTISTS, Hastings Building, Post Street and Grant Avenue. Tel. Douglas 2733.

For Vacation
Bathing Suits
Sweater—Coats
For every member of your family.

GANTNER & MATTERN CO.
Cor. Van Ness and Calif. St. Headquarters

Hotel Collingwood

35th St., bet. 5th Ave. and Broadway
NEW YORK CITY

New fireproof hotel located in the shopping and theatre district, containing every modern device for comfort of guests.
Positively exclusive. Service à la carte.

Peyton Chemical Co.

Purchasers and Smelters of
COPPER, GOLD AND SILVER ORES, ETC.
Rooms 657 and 658 Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal.
Smelter and Works at Peyton, Contra Costa Co., Cal.; P. O., Martinez.

Choice Woolens

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.
Merchant Tailors
108-110 Sutter St. French Bank Bldg.

A QUIET place for people of refined tastes. Dainty accessories—prompt, courteous service—irreproachable cooking—cool rooms—moderate prices.

YE TEA CUP INNE
1427 Bush Street, below Van Ness (upstairs)

OPEN

THE OCULARIUM
Henry Kahn & Co.
- OPTICIANS -
PHOTO SUPPLIES
SCIENTIFIC INSTRUMENTS

644-646 MARKET ST.
OPP. PALACE HOTEL

BRANCH 1309 VANNESS AVE.
NEXT TO NEWMAN & LEVINSON

Hotel Normandie

At the
is served daily a
Table d'Hote Luncheon
at 75 cents, and a
Table d'Hote Dinner
at $1.00, unsurpassed for elegance of surroundings, cuisine and service.

S. E. cor. Sutter and Gough—Sunday Dinner $1.50 (Music)

Hotel Colonial

Stockton above Sutter Street
American and European Plans
Special Rates to Permanents
HOWARD T. BLETHEN, Manager
Telephone, Kearny 4754

THE "NIPPON MURA"

Family Resort between Saratoga and Los Gatos
Has increased its accommodations, main building furnace heated, beautifully furnished rooms with all modern conveniences. Open all the year. Positively exclusive. For information address
THEODORE J. MORRIS, Proprietor, Los Gatos, Cal.

Berkeley Apartments

Several sunny suites available for the summer and autumn months at Hotel Cloyne Court, Berkeley. For further particulars address
J. M. PIERCE, Manager.

"The Peninsula"

SAN MATEO, CAL.
A Twentieth Century Hotel of the Highest Degree of Excellence

NOW OPEN

AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLAN
Thirty minutes by rail from San Francisco. Located in a beautiful park of thirty years' cultivation. All the charm and delight of the country combined with the attractions and conveniences of the metropolis.

For Reservation or Information Address
JAMES H. DOOLITTLE, Mgr., San Mateo, Cal.

Hotel Rafael

San Rafael, Cal.
Open year around. Headquarters Automobile League. New and commodious garage. Fifty minutes from San Francisco. Complete change of climate. Tiburon or Sausalito Ferry. All modern conveniences.
F. N. Orpin, Proprietor.

Tennent's

Ale and Stout

from Wellpark Brewery
Glasgow, Scotland
Forbes Bros., Agents, 1926 Sutter St.

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

"So you were successful in your first case, doctor?" "Er—yes, yes; the—er—widow paid the bill."—The Tatler.

Church—Did you ever work for a railroad company? Gotham—Well, yes; I've tried to open the car windows.—Yonkers Statesman.

Little Wife—Granddad, what makes a man always give a woman a diamond engagement ring? Grandfather—The woman.—Philadelphia Enquirer.

Wife—I've invited one of my old beaux to dinner. Do you mind? Husband—Mind! Heavens, no! I always love to associate with lucky people.—Life.

"What would you do, dear, if I were to die?" asked Mrs. Darley, fondly. "I don't know," replied Darley thoughtfully. "Which is your choice—burial or cremation?"—Tit-Bits.

Elsa—The paper says that the bride was unattended. Stella—That notice was written up in advance of the wedding, but it was a good guess; the bridegroom failed to show up.—Puck.

"Do you want employment?" "Lady," answered Plodding Pete, "you means well, but you can't make work sound any more invitin' by usin' words of three syllables."—Washington Star.

"Hubby, won't you go shopping with me today?" "Nix, nixey, and again nix." "There is going to be a demonstration of this new sheath skirt, and—" "Sure, I'll go."—The Mirror.

"My wife," said the first clubman, "always mixes me a cocktail when I go home feeling frazzled." "You're in luck," declared the second clubman. "The best I get is a chin fizz."—Pioneer Press.

"Did you write to papa, George?" "Asking for your hand?" "Of course." "Yes, I wrote." "That's strange. I supposed papa would be terribly angry. You know he doesn't like you." "Yes, I know. But I fixed it all right. I—I didn't sign the letter."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Hiram—Who is that little runt that kem up in buggy wagon to see Miss Flip, the new boarder? Silas—He's what them city folks calls her "fiasco." Hiram—Her fiasco—oh, you mean her fiancée.—Boston Transcript.

"Pop! What is a pantomime?" "A pantomime is a piece in which no one speaks." "I shouldn't think a piece with no women in it would be interesting!"—Yonkers Statesman.

First Deacon—Our new pastor must be a vegetarian. Second Deacon—Why do you think so? First Deacon—There doesn't seem to be any meat in his sermons.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Mrs. Hix—I don't take any stock in these faith cures brought about by the laying on of hands. Mrs. Dix—Well, I do; I cured my little boy of the cigarette habit that way.—New York Globe.

"You call this a summer resort, I believe," said the sarcastic visitor. "I am unaware of any place to which summer resorts more regularly," returned the Philadelphian stiffly.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

"But," protested the wayward son, "you should make allowance for the follies of youth." "Huh!" growled the old man. "If it wasn't for the allowance you get there would be less folly."—Chicago Daily News.

The congressman was leaving Washington for his own town. "Well, good-bye," said a friend. "I suppose the citizens will be out in force to meet you?" "I—I'm afraid they will," replied the congressman.—Times-Democrat.

"This will be a memorable trial," declared the New York lawyer. "I certainly have gotten together a competent cast." "Good!" "All that remains is to see the district attorney and submit our dialogue and scenario."—Sketch.

"Louder! Louder!" shrieked the delegates. "Gentlemen," protested the presiding officer, "I can assure you that the disappointment of those who can't hear isn't a marker to the disappointment of those who can."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

"Why can't I have eggs for supper?" "You can't have eggs for supper," answered the landlord of the Plunkville House, "because an affinity gentleman is going to lecture on affinities at the town hall tonight. You have some public spirit, I persoom?" He had.—Washington Herald.

WANTED

Unimproved property in the Burnt District

TO EXCHANGE

for

DESIRABLE INCOME PROPERTY

MONEY TO LOAN AT PREVAILING RATES ON FIRST MORTGAGE SAN FRANCISCO REAL ESTATE

GUY T. WAYMAN

232 MONTGOMERY STREET

MILLS BUILDING

Mild, Rich
and Satisfying
Sanchez y Haya
Clear Havana
Cigars

Factory No. 1 Tampa, Fla.

Tillmann & Bendel
Pacific Slope Distributers

Toyo Kisen Kaisha

(ORIENTAL S. S. CO.)

S. S. America Maru., Saturday, August 1, 1908
S. S. Nippon Maru., Saturday, August 29, 1908
S. S. Tenyo Maru., Friday, September 25, 1908

Steamers sail from company's piers, Nos. 42-44, near foot of Second Street, 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Hiogo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.

Round-trip tickets at reduced rates.

For freight and passage apply at office, 240 James Flood Building. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

TOURS

EUROPE
SOUTH AMERICA
JAPAN AND
ROUND THE WORLD

Programmes for the asking.

THOS. COOK & SON
32 Powell St., San Francisco

Helpful Advice

New, correct and artistic furnishings do not mean great expense. They are no more costly than the incorrect and inartistic. Their selection, however, needs experience and proper counsel. The advice of our experts is always at your service. It costs nothing.

Furniture
Carpets
Rugs
Draperies

D. N. & E. WALTER & CO.
Van Ness and Sacramento

Since 1858
Wholesale
and Retail

THIS IS TO REMIND
users of
Labels, Cartons,
Lithographing
and Color Printing
that our Office and Factory is again located
at the old stand
SECOND AND BRYANT STS.
SAN FRANCISCO
Schmidt Lithograph Co.
35th YEAR

MT. TAMALPAIS
AND MUIR WOODS
VIA SAUSALITO FERRY
FOOT OF MARKET ST.
LEGAL HOLIDAYS—SUNDAY TIME

Lv. San Francisco		Lv. Muir Woods		Lv. Tamalpais
WEEK DAY	SUN- DAY	WEEK DAY	SUN- DAY	WEEK DAY	SUN- DAY
9:45 A.	7:15 A.	1:40 P.	10:40 A.	7:25 A.	9:28 A.
11:45 P.	8:15 A.	2:40 P.	12:16 P.	1:40 P.	11:10 A.
	9:45 A.	4:45 P.	1:40 P.	4:14 P.	12:16 P.
SATUR. DAY	11:15 A.		2:45 P.	SATUR. DAY	1:40 P.
Tamalpais only	12:45 A.		4:40 P.	ONLY	3:10 P.
	1:45 P.		5:45 P.	ONLY	4:40 P.
	3:45 P.		Tamalpais only	9:50 P.	6:40 P.
	14:45 P.		Muir Woods only		8:15 P.

TICKET OFFICE AT SAUSALITO FERRY

Romeike's Press Clipping Bureau
Will send you all newspaper clippings which may appear about you, your friends, or any subject on which you want to be "up to date." A large force in my New York office reads 650 daily papers and over 2000 weeklies and magazines, in fact, every paper of importance published in the United States, for 5000 subscribers and, through the European Bureaus all the leading papers in the civilized globe. Clippings found for subscribers and pasted on slips giving name and date of paper, and are mailed day by day.
Write for circular and terms.
HENRY ROMEIKE
110 and 112 W. 26th St., New York.
Branches: London, Paris, Berlin, Sydney.

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXIII. No. 1635.

SAN FRANCISCO, JULY 25, 1908.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10 payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breams Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opéra. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at F and Thirteenth Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Denison News Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains.

Published at 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal.
Telephone, Kearny 5895.

THIRTY-SECOND YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: The Sorrows of a Queen—The Line of Battle—Mr Heney and the Bear's Tail—His Name Is Dennis—Editorial Notes	49-52
CAMPAIGN TOPICS	52
POLITICO-PERSONAL	52
SALOME IN NEW YORK VAUDEVILLE: "Flaneur" Describes Gertrude Hoffmann's Imitation of Maud Allan's Semi-Nude Dance	53
OLD FAVORITES: "At Best," by John Boyle O'Reilly; "Douglas Gordon," by Frederic Edward Weatherly; "The Two Friends," by Charles Godfrey Leland	53
INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All over the World	53
MAROONED: XXIII. By Jerome A. Hart	54
AMERICAN WOMEN IN LONDON: Leaders in English Society Who Have Won Their Position by Tact and Grace	55
SALONS OF ROYAL FRANCE: Frank Hamel Writes a Fine Account of Great Frenchwomen	56
BOOKS AND AUTHORS. By Sidney G. P. Coryn	57
FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT	58
LITERARY NOTES: Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip	58
CURRENT VERSE: "The Wind That Shakes the Barley," by Katharine Tynan Hinkson; "At Dawn," by Alfred Noyes; "Today and Tomorrow," by William Stanley Braithwaite	58
DRAMA: "The Servant in the House," By Josephine Hart Phelps	59
VANITY FAIR	60
STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise	61
THE MERRY MUSE	61
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy	62-63
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day	64

The Sorrows of a Queen.

The invincible repugnance of the young Queen of Spain to the Spanish national sport of bull-fighting is likely to result seriously in the sense of destroying her popularity. She is thoroughly an English woman, bred to the standards of English sensibility and of English manners, and although she has tried to overcome an instinctive aversion to scenes of cruelty in which the Spanish delight, she has not been able to do it. Urged by the king and by the palace officials, she has again and again lent her presence to the bull-ring; but every such appearance has been an agonizing ordeal, ending in illness and depression. Upon a recent occasion marked by uncommon ferocity, with pitiful carnage of men, horses, and bulls, she almost lost control of herself and finally retired from her box. From the English and American standpoint this is entirely to her credit, but it grievously offends the Spanish people, whose delight in bull-fighting increases with the horrors of the sport, and who have no sympathy or understanding of a squeamishness foreign to their own sensibilities. To the Spanish mind Victoria's detestation of the bull-ring is an exhibition of timidity, marking her as one without the hardihood which becomes a queen and the mother of a line of Spanish kings.

The marriage of Alfonso to an English princess was never a popular one in Spain, but the youth and spirits of the young queen soon won over the populace, and when a year after her marriage a prince was born, she became for the moment a universal favorite. But the English temperament is not the Spanish temperament, and as time goes on and as it becomes manifest that the queen is still an English woman in her ideas and sympathies, the affection of the people turns away from her. The bull-fight is not the only point at which her tastes run counter to Spanish ideas. She detests and resents the limitations upon her freedom of action imposed by tradition, which sends her to bed at ten o'clock every night, which keeps her so surrounded by ladies and lords in waiting that she may never do the smallest thing for herself, and that never leaves her an untrammelled or private moment. Again, although as a matter of form she accepts the national religion of Spain, she is at heart a Protestant, and she has not been able to conceal her weariness with ceremonies which mean nothing to her and her hostility to the persistent counsels of church functionaries.

On the score of these multiplied incompatibilities, trouble has long been brewing, and it has at last broken out into open discontent. Among other irritations, the queen's mother, Princess Battenburg, who was Beatrice of England, and who has her own mother's taste for domestic administration, has most unwisely sought to make things better for her daughter by insisting upon English ideas in relation to palace affairs. In consequence Alfonso and his mother-in-law have quarreled and the latter some time ago packed her trunks and went home with threats never again to return. Instead of offending the Spanish people, this rather pleases them; and while the queen has discreetly taken her husband's part in the family quarrel, it has not tended to make her position a pleasanter one. In the sphere of royalty, troubles like these are not adjusted summarily. There is no formal breaking of ties, although not uncommonly there is a tremendous bending of the conventions. Probably the next stage in the Spanish domestic troubles will be a complete estrangement of husband and wife at the point of sympathy, with the usual scandalous accompaniments. Alfonso's father was hardly a social or domestic model, and prior to his marriage Alfonso himself was a grievously spoiled boy. It is not in his blood to be consistent or faithful; therefore it is not difficult to guess what is likely to follow.

The Line of Battle.

There always comes a period of reaction after the noise and fury of the convention season. It takes time for the delegates to get home, sober up, and report just how it all happened. It takes time for the public to brush up its memory of former political seasons and to make the comparisons essential to a settled feeling with regard to the immediate situation. Then the candidates must have time to get their bearings and prepare the addresses which mark their formal acceptances. The campaign managers, too, must be chosen, and, having been chosen, must have time to select their assistants, confer with party leaders in the several States, and formulate their plans. It is usually a full month after the conventions adjourn before all adjustments are duly made and the campaign actively launched.

We are now in the midst of this season of conference and preparation, which will probably last until the first or possibly the second week in August. It is a quiet time, but its calm is by no means that of inaction. Under the surface momentous issues of organization, policy, and tactics are being determined; and those who will take pains to observe closely can hardly fail to discern the tendencies which are to dominate the campaign and of which no indication is presumed to reach the public until the candidates shall declare themselves in formal utterances.

On the Republican side things are more forward than on the Democratic side, due to the fact that the convention was held earlier and that the machinery had been put in fair running order before the nominations were made. Mr. Hitchcock, late of the Postoffice Department, is to be Mr. Taft's campaign manager for the country at large, Mr. Vorys having been sidetracked in the management of affairs in Ohio. Just how Mr. Taft contrived to solve this delicate problem, nobody has been able to find out; but the fact that he has solved it and that his rival managers, so recently hating each other cordially, are now working pleasantly together, is suggestive of diplomatic power. The problems of nations and of States are as nothing compared with those which develop on the basis of personal vanities when two men with equal claims to favor insistently demand the same thing.

The Argonaut is not overmuch pleased with Mr. Taft's choice. We think the selection of a mere tactician for the headship of the Republican party rather tends to cheapen the party character. Republicanism is or ought to be a political faith; the head of the party ought therefore to be a man who stands for ideas, likewise a man of representative character. Mr. Hitchcock hardly fills the requirements. He stands for nothing excepting skill in the political game. He stands for politics as a trade rather than for politics as a system of moral or political ideas. The dignities of the situation, we think, would have been better sustained if the chairmanship had been bestowed upon some national figure like ex-Senator Spooner or Governor Herrick, with Mr. Hitchcock in the relatively subordinate post of active campaign manager. It may be argued that this is making much of a trifle, but we maintain that the matter is not a trifling one. Everybody knows that it matters much to a professional firm, to a newspaper, or to a business house what manner of man stands at its head. Likewise it matters much to a party that in its organization there shall be some positive suggestion of its character and tone. With a managing politician at the head of the Republican organization, it will not be surprising if there are those to assume that the Republican party has come to be more regardful of the game than of the principles lying back of it. This criticism could not be made if the dignities of the chairmanship had been reserved for established dignity of character. Of course the real head of the party is its candidate for the presidency, and in estimating the tendencies of Republicanism the eye of judgment will rest upon Mr. Taft rather than upon the very capable young hustler who now assumes the nominal headship of the party organization.

The Democratic campaign manager has not been chosen as we write on Wednesday; but from the strength of the hand played at Denver by Tom Taggart of Indiana it is not out of bounds to guess that he will retain the chairmanship and organize the work. Mr. Bryan is the head of his party even more definitely and peculiarly than Mr. Taft, for behind Bryan there is no dominant personality corresponding to Theodore Roosevelt. Whoever may be chosen as the nominal campaign manager of the Democratic party, Mr. Bryan will be the real manager; and no matter where nominal headquarters may be established, the real headquarters will be under Mr. Bryan's hat. In former years Mr. Bryan has gone actively upon the stump pleading his cause with the people. This year, it is said, he will stay at home and receive delegations at his Fairview farm. But this is conjectural. The breath of Mr. Bryan's political life is his talking power, and somehow, whether at home or abroad, he will find a way to do a world of talking. Mr. Taft is also a very effective talker, and it is not to be doubted that from Brother Charlie's home in Cincinnati, where he ected to spend the campaign season, he will be heard from daily.

Already it is manifest that the Denver convention made a serious mistake in its treatment of the conservative element in the party. We do not so much refer to the complete overriding of conservative opinion in the making of the platform, or to the failure to nominate Judge Gray or some other man of his type for the vice-presidency, as to the scant respect accorded to the conservative delegates personally and as well to the name and fame of Grover Cleveland. The conservatives expected to be overridden in the making of the platform, and they did not seriously want the sop of a vice-presidential nomination, but they did expect a gentlemanlike consideration, and they were profoundly shocked at the open disrespect shown in the convention and out of it to the name of Mr. Cleveland. That there will be anything like an organized defection from the party on the part of the conservatives is not likely; none the less nothing is more certain than that many hundreds and thousands of old-fashioned Democrats will quietly abandon the party. The Eastern party papers are practically all disaffected. The Brooklyn Eagle, a leading organ of conservative Democracy, has positively repudiated the party candidate. He has, the Eagle declares, no qualifications for the presidency, besides he stands upon a platform which no true Democrat can approve. "The Eagle," it declares, "prefers Mr. Taft and will oppose Mr. Bryan." Another exponent of conservative Democracy, the New York Evening Post, remarks that "it is necessary for all who regard as we do the election of Mr. Bryan as highly undesirable to look the facts in the face." The New York Times, likewise a conservative Democrat, declares "we know that public policies will be executed by Mr. Taft reasonably, with calmness, with sanity, and we know nothing of the kind about Mr. Bryan. We do know that his mind is unsteady, his principles unsafe." The Hearst papers are, of course, not to be classed as organs of serious opinion with the journals above quoted, much less are they to be accredited as attached in any way to conservative principles or ideas; at the same time they are chiefly circulated among Democrats and their disaffection is a fact by no means to be left out of the estimate. It means something when these papers declare "we have lost confidence in the Democratic party. We have lost confidence also in William J. Bryan. A platform made by the Democratic party and indorsed by Mr. Bryan is not worth the paper it is written on." These excerpts, selected from among many, sufficiently illustrate the attitude of the Democratic press in the East towards the Bryanized Democracy. These papers would not hold the tone they do if the sentiment among those who read and support them were not widely unfavorable not only to Democracy as revolutionized and recast to suit Mr. Bryan, but to Mr. Bryan personally. The truth is that Bryanized Democracy, regarded as a system of political ideas, is a thing wholly foreign to the opinions, standards, and instincts of the old-fashioned type of Democrat, of the type of man who found himself in close sympathy with the late Mr. Cleveland. There is positively no place in the new Democracy for men of this stamp; and while they are not likely to be wholly satisfied with Republicanism, they are likely to come nearer to supporting their ideas in voting for Taft than for Bryan.

Those shallow critics who have been declaring that there has ceased to be any serious line of difference between the great traditional parties have not been able to offer convincing arguments; in fact, they have only succeeded in making themselves ridiculous. For the very moment we cease comparing the temporary aims of politics as declared in party platforms and turn to the principles and the history of politics, we see that the two parties are as wide apart as ever they were. And the main line of division is the same as that which has marked and separated political groups from the beginnings of the republic. Fundamentally Republicanism is the successor of Federalism in its adhesion to the theory of a strong central government. Democracy, harking back to Jefferson, is founded in those theories which limit the national powers and therefore weaken the hand of central authority. The tendencies of the two parties unfailingly follow the wide-reaching logic of their opposing theories. The platforms put forth at Chicago and Denver are in many respects similar; both deal with expedients in the spirit of diplomacy; both aim by the process of coddling to catch votes. None the less, every citizen of intelligence understands that in voting for Taft he will vote for a government which in emergencies will exhibit a strong hand, and that in voting for Bryan he will vote for a government which, to say the least, would be uncertain of its powers and slow to exercise them in the forms of positive and definite action. Let riot break forth anywhere as it has done again and again during the past quarter-century and you will find Mr. Taft as President reaching over the head of State government to subdue and quell it precisely as Cleveland did at Chicago twenty years ago. But with Mr. Bryan in the presidency, we should, beyond question, have timidity and hesitation, with quibbling over the rights and dignities of the States, with no action at all or with action so qualified and delayed as practically to be of no effect.

In spite of mere superficial resemblances due to the mere diplomacies of an immediate situation, there is no more real likeness between the two great parties today than in former times. The fundamental differences are precisely what they were in the day of Hamilton and Jefferson: the resemblances which to a certain order of mind appear so absolute are temporary, accidental, trivial.

No close observer of social and political conditions has failed to note the tendency, in the Central and Western States especially, of the past few years towards radicalism. It has been vastly promoted by Roosevelt, and even before the day of Roosevelt it had found powerful champions in men of the Bryan, La Follette, Pingree, and Tom Johnson type. The political effectiveness of this new radicalism is illustrated in unnumbered instances of which the political condition of Wisconsin may be noted as especially suggestive. It may be seen in Oregon, where it has dissolved the party system and turned the State over to a stupidly irresponsible system little better than chaos. It may be traced even more definitely in the organization of the new State of Oklahoma and in the political manners which have been produced by it. Even here in California we see positive evidences of it in the proposal to substitute something like the Oregon system for the orderly and practically efficient even though not ideal system under which we have been working; and further in a noisy effort to tear down everything that has been worth respect in State politics without substituting anything of known efficiency or even of possible efficiency for it.

What we may style the Western radical movement has been vastly stimulated by an irresponsible and sensational journalism, including the cheap muck-raking magazines, which has systematically sought its own profit through the cultivation of popular distrust in anybody or anything. Continual prating in the tones of prejudice and crimination, done with studied effort to unsettle the public mind, has undoubtedly had its effect.

Whatever real hope there may be in the Bryan candidacy must rest upon this widespread movement towards radicalism in political opinion and aim. We can see no evidences that the movement is deep and broad enough to alter the political attitude of any State, nationally speaking. In other words, we do not think of any State which has habitually voted for Republican presidential candidates that is likely now to give its voice for Bryan. But this is only an individual opinion; the movement towards radicalism may possibly have gone further than superficial appearances would indicate. It must be confessed that there are suggestions to this effect in the recent Oregon election, wherein, in a State nominally and strongly Republican, the popular voice was given in support of the senatorial candidacy of a well-known Democrat. And it is further to be confessed that in more strictly local elections throughout the West during the past three years there have been many indications of disaffection from established habits of political action.

It is, we repeat, in connection with this wave of radicalism that the candidacy of Mr. Bryan finds its best hope. And a candidate better fitted by nature and by individual accomplishments to make the most of a radical foment could not be imagined. He is personally magnetic and winning. He makes the impression of absolute sincerity and honesty. His mind, at once shallow and shifty, automatically adjusts itself to the mood of the hour. His convictions are never deep enough or permanent enough to afford resistance to whatever forms of policy the moment may require. And when to these qualifications there is added an imposing presence, a charming personality, and a glittering and showy declamation, we have a figure precisely calculated to gather up and turn to voting account the loose sentiments and the vagabond delusions of the time. Nevertheless, let us say again that we see no reason to believe that any State which voted for Roosevelt in 1904, excepting Missouri, will vote for Bryan in 1908, but frankly we are not so sure about it as we should like to be.

Another uncertain element in the situation is the labor vote, if, indeed, there be any such definite quantity in our politics. We have heard a good deal of the labor vote in times past, but nobody has ever been able to trace it as an organic force in national or State politics. The Argonaut seriously questions the existence of any such political element, in the sense of an organized and biddable force. There are laborers who are voters by the million, but there is no more reason to believe that they think as a class or that they will vote as a unit than in the case of so many merchants or bankers or farmers. Certain noisy agitators, men of the Gompers and McCarthy type, are forever talking about "the vengeance of labor," but experience has proved that their talking is done mostly through their hats. The practice of these agitators is to point to the statistics of organized labor and then to assume insolently that the votes of these men are subject to their control. No grosser lie was ever uttered. It may be, indeed, that the ulterior purpose of the Gomperses and McCarthys who style themselves the field marshals of labor is political; but the purposes of the rank and file of organized labor are quite another sort. It is possible that a time may come when great numbers of citizens, working men or others, acting in concert, may surrender their political initiative to a trafficking and bargaining dictator. But that time is not yet, and it will never be so long as there remains in the general citizenship of the country, including the labor element, which is as independent and as worthy as any other, a spark of traditional American spirit.

Mr. Gompers, while failing to get what he demanded from the Democrats at Denver, nevertheless declares himself satisfied. Pretending individually to be a Republican, he will nevertheless "direct" the forces of organized labor to support Bryan. And in the effort to enforce this policy, he will go from city to city to personally commend Bryan to whomsoever will listen to him. He will do this because he has the cunning to see that with Bryan in the presidency and with Democratic traditions and theories back of him, there will be less resistance to his own aggressive demands than if the government shall remain in Republican hands. It is in the stars that in the great conflict for industrial freedom which plainly lies before us the Democratic party is the surest hope of agitators like Gompers. The limitations upon definite authority and upon promptitude of action involved in its States rights theories, with its dependence upon the less positive and resolute elements in our citizenship, and its necessities at the point of conciliating votes—these considerations combine to make Democracy the natural ally or instrument of politico-laborism. Gompers, who though a good deal of a knave is no fool, sees this plainly. He sees further that Republicanism is the natural and inevitable dependence of those fixed principles which deny absolutely to him and his kind the special privileges which they demand. When the Republican convention at Chicago, subservient as it was in other respects to the will of Mr. Roosevelt, balked at his proposed concessions to organized labor, declining to yield even under the swish of the Big Stick, then and there it was borne in upon Gompers that he need not look further to Republicanism to aid him or his cause, but that on the other hand he must permanently find in it a resistant force to be reckoned with.

The Argonaut knows personally a great many labor unionists. Since the Chicago convention, and with direct reference to its action on the so-called labor issue, it has questioned scores of unionists as to their political attitude; and it has not found one man so craven of spirit as to think for one moment of surrendering his initiative as a citizen and a voter to the judgment or the authority of Mr. Samuel Gompers. Therefore we say that the boast of Mr. Gompers of his power to control the "labor vote" is mere buncombe. Working men, like other men of the country, will come to their own determinations and regulate their political action without respect to the trafficking or the blustering of the self-elected and loud-talking "leader of labor." We do not believe that the support of Bryan by Mr. Gompers will serve to affect the voting decisively or even notably in a single State. We do not believe that the labor issue, so called, will cut an important figure in the coming campaign. The future may, indeed, tell another story, but it is the present with which we have to deal.

In relation to the coming campaign there are some curious correspondences between the position of the two parties and that of the two candidates which may be depended upon to cancel each other. For example, both conventions were ignominiously subject to a personal authority; in plain words, both were shamelessly bossed. On this score neither may venture to reproach the other; neither may appeal to the favor of citizens who condemn and resent the whole rotten system of illegitimate personalism in politics. Again, both candidates have declared themselves for the fullest publicity in the matter of campaign contributions and expenditures. Here again the policy of one matches the policy of the other.

In the final analysis the judgment of those who are not dependent upon party authority as a guide in political action will rest upon the traditions and the history of the two parties and upon the character and the record of the two candidates. There are more than a hundred days to come in which thoughtful men may ponder these considerations. And upon this view of the situation there appears to the Argonaut but one possible outcome.

Mr. Heney and the Bear's Tail.

The Argonaut frankly confesses itself unable to analyze or define the precise status of the Ruef case. It is now nearly two months since the last fiasco, and although date after date has been fixed for proceeding under some other of the seventy-or-eighty-and-odd indictments against the culprit, action is regularly and as it would appear automatically postponed. Ruef, knowing full well that time works steadily against his prosecutors, is always for delay. And the prosecutors seem willing enough to meet his wishes. At the same time certain minor branches of procedure continue to occupy the attention of one of the police courts without developing anything of real importance.

In the meantime, Mr. Heney is lending his services to the so-called Lincoln-Roosevelt League, traveling with amazing diligence from one one-night stand to another, dealing out that sort of rhetorical thunder which comes easily from one trained in the school of Arizona politics. He has much to say about the great crusade, but he does not explain how it is that while he has time enough for peripatetic political agitation, he can not find time to try the unnumbered criminal indictments which he has been instrumental in bringing in this State and in Oregon, much less to proceed legally against those whom he has sought to smirch with a foul-dealing tongue. Time was when Mr. Heney delivered himself in these questionable respects before collegiate and "civic" audiences; time was when he was invited upon the basis of his moral pretensions to speak in churches and before groups of morally inspired enthusiasts. But times and conditions are altered; he now hunts up his audiences, makes no disguise of his political motives, attempting no embarrassing explanations.

At San Diego, on the 14th instant, in the course of a general round of the southern counties, Mr. Heney spoke in Germania Hall in special condemnation of what he termed "railroad politics," the assumption being that the Republicanism of California is so poor a thing as to be completely subservient to a concentrated and masterful dictation. He championed especially that system of political action whose beauties have been so signally illustrated in the breakdown of organized and orderly politics in our neighboring State of Oregon. In the course of this address he finally got around to his experiences as a prosecutor in San Francisco, and in this connection he disclaimed any intention of extending the sphere of his operations. On the contrary, he said—we quote the full and apparently accurate report of the San Diego Union of the 15th instant—"I liken myself to a man with a hold on a bear's tail; if any one will help me let go, I will never take hold of it again." From this remark it seems fair to judge that Mr. Heney is getting tired of his job and would like to find a way to give it up. Really, when we consider the amazing complications into which his false purpose, his illegal grants of immunity to confessed criminals, his gross bargaining for "evidence," his shameless falsehoods, his legal blundering, and his repeated failures have led him—when all this is considered, there appears reason enough why he should wish for surcease of his troubles.

It is not alone in connection with his San Francisco activities that Mr. Heney is in the depths of discomfort. At Portland last week a jury in the United States court returned a verdict of not guilty against J. H. Booth, one of the famous Heney cases—and this in face of the fact that the defense offered no evidence whatever. The only serious witness against Booth was Frederick A. Kribs, a notorious timber shark and a self-confessed briber, who has become attached to Heney under his notorious policy of immunity to grosser criminals for the sake of getting "testimony" against persons of business or social recognition. Booth's attorney simply stated that he did not think it necessary to combat the testimony of a known scoundrel who appeared upon the stand as a witness under an immunity bribe.

Commenting on this decision, the Portland Spectator attributes it to lack of confidence in Mr. Heney and his associates in the prosecution. We quote:

What has caused this change in sentiment toward the land fraud cases? The people are as honest today as they were last year; they abhor crime and hate criminals now as they did then. They know that government can not long exist in which men are either too insignificant or too powerful to be punished for their offenses. To change the views of the people toward crimes committed against themselves, some strange influence must have worked. The methods of the prosecution wrought the change. The prosecution threw out its dragnet, and indicted indiscriminately; when it did not indict, it issued statements. It tried men on the street corners, at lanquets, in hotel corridors, and in newspapers; and in those fine, free courts of justice it found its victims guilty, and beggared and disgraced them, drove them from the profits of their private undertakings, or forced them out of public life. It made fish of one and flesh of another and fowl of a third; it gave the briber immunity, that it might "get" the bribed, whose pull or personality displeased. It gave the crime-producer and the criminal-maker pardon, that it might "reach" some one against whom it had a grudge.

The Oregonian, commenting on the outcome in this same case, spoke as follows:

The acquittal of James H. Booth is not surprising. It was, indeed, expected. The testimony failed to sustain the gravamen of the indictment. Moreover, the verdict of the jury is one more proof that public sentiment does not sustain the method of the prosecution, which puts men under indictment, and then holds the charge over them for years before bringing them to trial—giving out meantime every kind of insinuation against them and against others, too, who are constantly threatened and maligned, but never even indicted. This sort of thing not only has become wearisome, but kindles indignation and resentment. It does not please the people of Oregon that these trials have been delayed for years, for pursuance of spectacular objects elsewhere, which, however, also has failed. Binger Hermann has been under indictment here for years, yet never has been brought to trial and never will be. All sorts of charges have been thrown out against Charles W. Fulton, yet there has been nothing but gas and wind on which to base them. No wonder the public patience is exhausted.

Really, it is not surprising that Mr. Heney should cry aloud for somebody to help him let go of the bear's tail.

His Name Is Dennis.

Hats off when, at sunset gun, the regimental band plays "The Star-Spangled Banner!"

To this order no one has ever given a more ready response than one Second Lieutenant Gordon A. Dennis, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A. But while serving out the sentence pronounced upon him by court-martial, young Dennis is spending his time revising the line:

"O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave."

Because he knew himself to be a brave man, and thought himself a free man endowed with certain inalienable rights, among which are the pursuit of happiness, Second Lieutenant Dennis proceeded to act upon his convictions. It was May in Monterey. The dashing lieutenant, impelled by the lusty blood of youth, sauntered beyond the pickets of the Presidio, exhilarated to the extent that makes for the extreme of the poetic and romantic mood. Given a jaunty young lieutenant, the month of May, one of Monterey's glorious days of blue and gold, and you have your idyl of the spring ready made—lacking only "that not impossible she." Young Dennis, a king by the divine right of the grape-leaves in his hair, seeing his idyl so nearly complete, paused to listen for the frou-frou of petticoats. Scouting the parade, Second Lieutenant Dennis made straight for Ordway's, a drug store, where we doubt not ice-cream soda is dispensed.

The "perfect music unto noble words" appeared promptly around the corner spic and span in a peek-a-boo waist and a white parasol—Tableau! For once the world was his, and the lieutenant, having been trained in his country's service to prompt action, seized the psychological moment.

"All the world is full of spring, Full of swallows on the wing,"

the soul of young Dennis sang, and such a trifling discrepancy as the lack of an introduction did not for an instant disturb his serenity. To show there was no hard feeling between them so far as he was concerned, the gay lieutenant beamed confidently upon the treble note in his pastorale, and, although the charge does not specify it, gave the damsel a glance which plainly meant "two straws with but a single glass." But despite the merry month of May, the blueness of the skies, the dashing second lieutenant's large-minded generosity, it was not to be. Unmoved by the poetic setting of the situation, unmelted by the glory of the Monterey sunshine, this climax of his hopes ruffled her feathers, so to speak, and summoned a policeman. His dream of fair women proved to be a nightmare, from which the lieutenant awoke in the guardhouse. Before a general court-martial which convened at the Presidio of Monterey, pursuant to paragraph 4, Special Orders No. 125, current series, these headquarters, was arraigned and tried Second Lieutenant Gordon A. Dennis, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., for "making eyes." Measuring a flight of the poetic temperament by the sordid standards of the articles of war, the lieutenant was charged with "conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline in violation of the sixty-second article of war," with the specification: In that Second Lieutenant Gordon A. Dennis, Twentieth Infantry, did appear while dressed in the uniform of his grade, in broad daylight, on a public street of Monterey, California, in the presence of enlisted men of his command and make goo-goo eyes at the ladies. The court-martial with the power vested in it by the United States government pronounced sentence on Lieutenant Dennis, "To forfeit fifty dollars of his pay and to be confined to the limits of his post for one month."

Ergo for one month the maids of Monterey are free to order at Ordway's what they may choose without further interruption from Second Lieutenant Dennis. And while a nation drunk with power and a soulless War Department concur in the decision that "making eyes" is in violation of army regulations, an officer of the United States regular army, deprived of his liberty, ponders the meanings of the words "free" and "brave."

But, while Lieutenant Dennis languishes a prisoner within his post and the example of his punishment enforces the order "Eyes front" for all the other gallants of the Presidio, the spirits of feminine Monterey are at half-mast. Second-best peek-a-boos are good enough now, white parasols are left at home. Who cares for freckles or tan, and who needs protection against goo-goo eyes? Nobody takes the trouble to go to Ordway's any more. What's the use?

"But the sea, so they tell us, is grand,
And the sky is magnificent too,
And they rave their devotion
To sky and to ocean
In political hullabaloo.
But what do we care for the sea,
And why should we care for the shore?
With no man by the ocean
Expressing devotion
The whole horrid thing is a bore!"

Thus say actions that speak louder than words at lonely and gloomy Monterey.

Editorial Notes.

The latest suggestion for a national mark of honor for the name and memory of Abraham Lincoln is for a broad highway to be called the "Lincoln Road" connecting the national capital with the Gettysburg battlefield. This reminds us of an incident at Portland a few years back in connection with the erection of a monument to some twenty or more Oregon youths killed in the Philippines. A considerable fund had been raised for a memorial and suggestions as to the form it should take were many and diverse. To an enthusiastic lover of animals came the happy thought of turning this fund to merciful and beneficent account not inconsistent, according to his own ideas, with the general purpose in view. His proposal was nothing less than the setting up in the heart of Portland of a magnificent horse-trough with the names of the heroic dead whose deeds it was sought to commemorate deeply carved in its granite sides.

Before we estimate too severely the cruelties of the Spanish bull-ring, we would do well to take stock of the growing taste in our own country for those "thrilling" spectacles and sports which appeal to the public on the score of the dangers involved in them—and which do not appeal in vain. The automobile loop-the-loop, for example, is about as demoralizing, thing as can well be imagined. In every instance the man—or more commonly the woman—who consents to be strapped to a machine while it turns a somersault in the air, runs a frightful hazard, and almost unfaillingly every such "performer" comes to a tragic end. The most serious part of the business, however, lies in its nervous and moral effects upon those who turn to such "sport" for amusement. If the bull-ring has been an evil influence in Spain, sports of the loop-the-loop type are bound to be mischievous here. It is inevitable that those who have become accustomed to amusements whose interest lies in the hazard assumed by the performer will lose all taste for natural and wholesome entertainment. They are certain to develop a kind of abnormal craving which is not to be satisfied with normal things. We have not much faith in law as a means of regulating popular conduct, much less popular taste. But if there be any way by which the youth of the country may be saved from the demoralizations which accompany intense and unnatural sports, it ought speedily to be found. Grownups, perhaps, have a right, stupid and foolish though they may be, to amuse themselves with nerve-racking spectacles; but surely it is a public duty to safeguard children against such abominations.

The death of Charles Webb Howard, which occurred at San Rafael on Friday of last week, removes from the life of San Francisco not only a man of large affairs and high character, but a singularly charming and lovable figure. Mr. Howard at the time of his death was in his seventy-eighth year, but up to the period of his fatal illness he never seemed to grow old. His interest in life was perennially fresh, and despite the vicissitudes from which none can ever be exempt, he got out of life very much. He gave freely of sympathy and affection and as freely were sympathy and affection returned to him. Few who pass out of the world under the full measure of years granted to Charles Webb Howard are so grievously missed as he will be. Mr. Howard was a native of Vermont and was born January 23, 1831. He came to California as a very young man early in the '50s, and practically his whole life was spent here. His business activities were many, including the development of the great Shafter-Howard land properties in Marin County, the administration of the Spring Valley Water Company, of which he was the president for approximately thirty years, the development of the Natoma vineyards in Sacramento County, with a multitude of other projects. He belonged by natural propensity and the circumstances of his life to the upbuilders of the commonwealth, and in the history of pioneer California his name will stand associated with those of Ralston, Sharon, Babcock, Allen, Parrott, and others of their day. It was Mr. Howard's fortune to live far beyond the period of his immediate generation and thus to associate himself with two eras in the life and development of California.

It is indeed curious that those who ostentatiously undertake a reformation of politics usually fall into practices worse than those against which nominally they contend. The exposures of the week in connection with the activities of the Spreckels-Burns-Heney outfit, now masquerading in the name of Lincoln-Roosevelt League, sufficiently illustrate the case. Here we see, done in the sacred name of reform, a series of attempts at bribery with political employments, more gross—more "raw" in the terms of the game—than the things ever dreamed of by political professionalism. The public has the right to expect that those who enter the political arena with loudly acclaimed purpose to cleanse and purify it will proceed by means in the spirit of their professed intentions. In other words, it is reasonable to expect and it is not unreasonable to demand that the reforming politician shall be a better man, proceeding by better courses, than those whom he seeks to push aside in the name of morality. The trouble, we fear, in the political end of the Spreckels game is precisely that which has destroyed the legal phase of the Spreckels movement. There is opportunity in plenty for reform in California; but whoever proposes to establish better conditions owes it to good faith and to common honesty to proceed by proper methods. A "reform" which at bottom is nothing more than a scheme to transfer the leadership in politics from the established organization to Mr. Rudolph Spreckels, a man of no politics, to Mr. Francis J. Herby, a Democrat, and to Mr. William Burns, a professional criminal hunter from nowhere, is no reform at all. It is not worthy of respect, because it is instinct with fraud and humbug. There is, we repeat, abundant opportunity for reform; but if reform is to be respected and effective it must give assurance of honest purposes and of a decent working capability. Furthermore, reform in the Republican party, when it comes, must come through Republicans and through persons who have a reasonable stake in the State. The mere name of reform will not serve to carry an illiterate and scheming money-bag with his staff of political non-descripts and paid servants into public confidence and into political authority.

The state of the money market and the status of the credit of Los Angeles are both duly exploited in a contract under which twenty-and-odd millions of Owens River water bonds have just been marketed through the bond houses of Kountze Brothers and A. B. Leach & Co. of New York. The terms of the contract were arranged upon the basis of a compromise, the syndicate finally paying more than was at first offered. The purchasers agree to take $2,204,000 of an issue bearing interest at 4½ per cent at 100¼. Full payment for this issue is to be made by October 15. Another issue of similar amount and upon similar terms is to be taken in February next and payment completed by June. The syndicate also takes options on the balance of the bonds, which, in effect, it agrees to take at the rate of $816,000 every sixty days, but not more than $5,000,000 in any one year, except the last, when it will take the $6,000,000 remaining. The first two years the premium is to be one-fourth of one per cent, the third year one-half of one per cent, and the last year one per cent.

The Argonaut has not been able to convince itself that there is anything more worthy of consideration than a yellow sensation in the Claudianes "exposures" which have gorged so many newspaper columns during the past week. Possibly the Claudianes boys, under the direction of Felix Pauduveris, all Greeks of a low and criminal type, had something or everything to do with the explosions which wrecked the Gallagher houses. Apparently and probably, Pauduveris has been associated with Abe Ruef in the latter's political activities, and therefore in such sympathy with Ruef as to be subject to his influence, or at least to be willing to do him a service. That Ruef actually inspired the explosion is possible, but not probable; for, while he is all kinds of a scoundrel, it is not easy to believe him a reckless and cold-blooded assassin. He is no fool, and even if he were disposed to the most desperate of villainies, he would not be likely to do a thing which could not in any possible way be of use to him. Possibly Pauduveris, under a general retainer of coöperation and friendship with Ruef, caused these crimes to be committed upon a crank theory that they would help Ruef out of his difficulties. Of course, the story of John Claudianes must be taken with large doses of salt. One "confession" might possibly be taken seriously even from one who is manifestly capable of any deception, but many confessions, inconsistent with each other, tend to suspicion. That the man is a reckless liar is the plainest demonstration of his maudlin chattering. The freedom with which he incriminates anybody and everybody at enmity with whomever he happens to be talking indicates a looseness of mind and an ease of conscience against which safeguards of wholesome doubt may well be maintained. Through the detention of Claudianes, and of those with whom he has been associated, we may ultimately have the truth of this dastardly business. But that we have it in any definite or dependable form through John Claudianes's "confessions" the Argonaut has no faith.

CAMPAIGN TOPICS.

There seems to be little opportunity to write of President Roosevelt's disappointment over the results of the Chicago convention. This is his letter on the subject:

MY DEAR SENATOR HOPKINS:—Let me thank and congratulate you as chairman of the committee on resolutions for the excellent platform presented to the convention. It seems to me that from every standpoint we have reason to be gratified with the work of the convention.

Again thanking you for your part in connection with it, believe me,

Very sincerely yours,
THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Too sweeping a renunciation of possible future honors will not aid Mr. Bryan, if the summing up by the Springfield Republican is accepted as a clear view of the Democratic candidate's dilemma:

Mr. Bryan perhaps should seriously consider the suggestion that he pledge himself not to be a candidate for the presidency again not only if he should be elected, but if he should be defeated. There are conservative Democrats who might be won to him in this campaign if he would make such a declaration, but, on the other hand, there are conservatives who would as surely turn in and pile up defeat for him in the exultant expectation that that would finish him. As a question in tactics, Mr. Bryan's procedure in this matter may have its difficulties.

POLITICO-PERSONAL.

Justice David J. Brewer of the United States Supreme Court, though seventy years old, by his speeches throughout the country did much to thwart the third-term movement for Roosevelt.

The first and only ballot at the Denver convention for nominees for the presidency gave Bryan the commanding and decisive total of 892½ votes, or 221 more than enough to nominate. Gray had 59½ votes and Johnson 46.

It is said that the work of driving mail-order swindlers out of the metropolis has been committed to Inspector James G. Cortelyou, brother of Secretary Cortelyou, who is an acknowledged expert in that field of inspection.

Ex-Speaker John G. Carlisle attended the funeral of ex-President Cleveland and later, at Washington, was asked if he would support the Denver ticket. He refused to say and as positively declined to be interviewed on the subject.

Algernon Sartoris, the grandson of President Grant, has entered the diplomatic service through appointment by President Roosevelt to be secretary of the legation at Guatemala in place of William P. Sands, who was transferred to Mexico City.

Secretary of the Interior Garfield has decided to decimate the ranks of the regiment of women in the departments at Washington. At least in the Department of the Interior the higher class of women clerks must give way to men, it is said.

Mayor Tom L. Johnson of Cleveland was defeated for membership on the National Democratic Committee at the formal caucus of the Ohio delegation. It was already slated that H. C. Garber of Columbus was to succeed Mr. Johnson, but the Cleveland mayor put up a hard fight.

Thomas E. Watson, in a speech at Atlanta, Georgia, accepting the Populist nomination for President, classed many millionaires, whom he mentioned by name, as criminals, and denounced corporations and trusts as the merciless enemies of the people, which had caused the financial distress of last fall.

Constantin Brun, the Danish minister to the United States, will be transferred from Washington to London in the autumn to succeed F. E. de Bille, who retires from the diplomatic service. Count Carl von Moltke, the Danish minister to Italy, whose wife was Cornelia Van Rensselaer Thayer, daughter of Nathaniel Thayer of Boston, will succeed Mr. Brun at Washington.

Henry Clay was three times an unsuccessful candidate for President. Three times Andrew Jackson was a candidate for President and twice he was elected. In 1824 the election went into the National House of Representatives, and John Quincy Adams was chosen. Grover Cleveland's record equaled Jackson's. James G. Blaine was an aspirant for the nomination for President at the hands of the Republicans three times, but won the prize only once.

John D. Archbold, vice-president of the Standard Oil Company, recently called at Sagamore Hill accompanied by his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. A. Sanderson. Mr. and Mrs. Sanderson, who have recently returned from a hunting trip in the wildest portions of Africa, told Mr. Roosevelt of their experiences with lions, elephants, and gorillas. A great portfolio containing photographs taken in Africa of the haunts of big game was examined.

The San Jacinto Valley in California will hereafter be known as the Cleveland National Forest. It has been so renamed by President Roosevelt in honor of the late President, under whose administration the first national forests were created. In 1897, in honor of Washington's 165th birthday anniversary, and upon the recommendation of the National Academy of Sciences, President Cleveland created thirteen national forests, containing about 23,000,000 acres. The San Jacinto forest was one of the original thirteen so created.

Although he worked unceasingly for the renomination of President Roosevelt, Senator Jonathan Bourne, Jr., of Oregon, does not hesitate to criticize the methods employed to encompass the nomination of Mr. Taft. "Anxious for the perpetuation of his policies," said Senator Bourne, "President Roosevelt has introduced an element of danger into our political life. As a result of the methods employed to nominate Secretary Taft, the residuary legateeship in the White House is more imminent, having this precedent, than perpetuity of dynasty in a monarchy where natural causes operate to extinguish families."

In its comments on Mr. Sherman, the Republican nominee for the vice-presidency, the Louisville Courier-Journal found nothing more serious to allege than a lack of confidence in the candidate's facial adornment. This is the paragraph: "There is no appeal to the common people in the personality of the side-whiskered politician. He is foredoomed to failure from the beginning. In business, we respect the side-whiskered man for the money he has made. As the head of a financial institution his mutton chops sort with the ruffles or plaits of his shirt and the starch in his collar. In the pulpit he may command attention and win affection. There is nothing to be said against the mutton chop per se. There is no hope for it at the present time in politics."

SALOME IN NEW YORK VAUDEVILLE.

Gertrude Hoffmann Imitates Maud Allan's Semi-Nude Dance for Hammerstein's Patrons.

Vaudeville has not only reached for the inspiration of Oscar Wilde and Richard Strauss, but has actually taken it, and the perverted art that made the scriptural incident of John the Baptist's decapitation the basis of an operatic movement is now serving to satisfy the sensation-craving habitués of the roof-gardens. William Hammerstein is the enterprising manager, Gertrude Hoffmann is the daring poseur, and the Victoria Theatre and Roof Garden are the birthplace of the spectacle. It is not an original act, and Manager Hammerstein frankly gives credit to the real originator. He saw Maud Allan's performance at the Palace Theatre in London some time ago and tried to engage the dancer for appearances in New York, but without success. On his return he planned to have Gertrude Hoffman cross the Atlantic, observe Miss Allan's dance carefully, and produce a studied and exact imitation of the London sensation here. His project has been well carried out, and, so far as one may judge from reports, the imitation is not unworthy of its original.

As in London, the act is entitled "A Vision of Salomé." At the Roof Garden it is the fifth number on a vaudeville programme, but it easily wins first place in the regard of the spectators. A big but not unusual audience assembled Monday night, though it must be admitted that opera-glasses were more in evidence than on ordinary occasions. It had been freely announced that brevity of costume would be one of the distinguishing features of the "vision," and most of those present appeared with the determination to gather ocular evidence rather than to depend upon general descriptions. There was unanimous disapproval—by the courteous sex—of some towering samples of millinery that resisted the desperate attentions of the ushers, and in time they were lowered and hundreds of eyes took their first view of the stage. In the orchestra Max Hoffman, the husband of the dancer, stood at the leader's desk, and in response to his baton the brasses drowned the strings in the burst of aggressive music that preceded the dance measures.

Purple velour curtains parted revealing Salomé posed upon a terrace in the courtyard of Herod's palace. The scene painter, stage manager, and electrician had done their parts well, for the settings and blue and red lights were harmonious and attractive. But the feminine figure was dominant in the effect. The dancer stood with her hands raised above her head for a moment, then came slowly down the steps and began the sinuous movements of the dance. Her costume was certainly not elaborate. Above the waist, two jeweled plates and several ropes of gems; then, abbreviated white trunks and a spangled skirt of transparent black gauze. No swathing of veils, seven or less, but an ideal toilet for comfort on a summer evening. It is said to be a faithful copy of Maud Allan's raiment in the original, and though perhaps a little unconventional, it is æsthetic and artistic. The most squeamish will commend it as preferable to the fleshings and half-length stockings with rolled tops affected by the ladies of burlesque. Naked as the feet, limbs, and torso are, the idea of exposure is not insistent or accented.

So far as the dance itself is concerned, there is little to say. It is Oriental, and, aside from the accessory of the severed head, neither especially alluring nor repellent. At the end of the first part of the dance Miss Hoffman caught up the charger on which lay the head draped with netting, and gloated over it. Then she set it on the ground and casting herself down before it performed symbolic convolutions and spasmodic writhings. Again she took up the imitation head, kissed it, flung it into the well, and then fainted. The curtains dropped and met and the scene was ended. It may be such an exhibition as stirred the blood of King Herod, but the monarch of scriptural history was not a sophisticated youth or sated old man of Manhattan. This imitation Salomé appears before more critical judges. She must win, if at all, by her beauty, her grace, or her personal magnetism, for her dance has little of the real dancer's art in its poses or serpentine undulations. There are attitudes and turnings in it that are reminiscent of Loie Fuller, but of Mlle. Genee's thistle-down lightness, bird-like flights, and sprightly advances and retreats there is not the slightest suggestion.

At the One Hundred and Twenty-Fifth Street Theatre there is another Salomé dance, and that, too, is drawing crowds. The dancer is La Sylphe, and she wears fleshings and slippers, but is still a sensation. As a dancer, La Sylphe is entitled to serious consideration. She has studied and practiced long and assiduously. When a mere child she began dancing at a New York theatre, but the S. P. C. G., that super-serviceable organization which has assumed the guardianship of public morals and youthful industry, objected and little Miss Lambdelle was driven away. She was taken to France by her mother and in Paris took lessons in the classical dance. Her natural aptitude was demonstrated, for in time she became the premier dancer at the Folies Bergeres. It was there that she first did the Salomé dance, with the wax counterfeit head, long before Maud Allan achieved a triumph with the same sort of performance in London. La Sylphe, as she is known now, came back to America and danced through a long engagement over the Orpheum circuit without winning more than passable success. Last week at Keith & Proctor's she gave her Salomé dance and at once wormed herself into popularity.

Hammerstein's production is the more ambitious, so far as artistic investiture, subdued lights, and appropriate music are concerned, but neither of the two exhibitions has enduring vitality. It is doubtful if either would score in any but a metropolitan playhouse. With the accompaniments of grand opera, and an artist like Mary Garden in the Salomé rôle, it is easy to imagine a real and sustained interest. But the atmosphere of these vaudeville productions is not one that conduces to admiration of the near artistic or heavily audacious.

FLANEUR.

NEW YORK, July 14, 1908.

OLD FAVORITES.

At Best.

The faithful helm commands the keel,
From port to port fair breezes blow;
But the ship must sail the convex sea,
Nor may she straighter go.

So, man to man; in fair accord,
On thought and will the winds may wait;
But the world will bend the passing word,
Though its shortest course be straight.

From soul to soul the shortest line
At best will bended be;
The ship that holds the straightest course
Still sails the convex sea.

—John Boyle O'Reilly.

Douglas Gordon.

"Row me o'er the strait, Douglas Gordon,
Row me o'er the strait, my love," said she.
"Where we greeted in the summer, Douglas Gordon, Beyond the little kirk by the old, old trysting tree."
Never a word spoke Douglas Gordon,
But he looked into her eyes so tenderly.
And he set her at his side,
And away across the tide
They floated to the little kirk,
And the old, old trysting tree.

"Give me a word of love, Douglas Gordon,
Just a word of pity, O my love," said she,
"For the bells will ring tomorrow, Douglas Gordon,
My wedding bells, my love, but not for you and me.
They told me you were false, Douglas Gordon,
And you never came to comfort me!"
And she saw the great tears rise,
In her lover's silent eyes,
As they drifted to the little kirk,
And the old, old trysting tree.

"And it's never, never, Douglas Gordon,
Never in this world that you may come to me,
But tell me that you love me, Douglas Gordon,
And kiss me for the love of all that used to be!"
Then he flung away his sail, his oars and rudder,
And he took her in his arms so tenderly,
And they drifted on amain,
And the bells may call in vain,
For she and Douglas Gordon
Are drowned in the sea.

—Frederic Edward Weatherly.

The Two Friends.

I have two friends—two glorious friends—two hetter could not be,
And every night when midnight tolls they meet to laugh with me.

The first was shot by Carlisle thieves ten years ago in Spain.
The second drowned near Alicante—while I alive remain.

I love to see their dim white forms come floating through the night,
And grieve to see them fade away in early morning light.

The first with gnomes in the Under Land is leading a lordly life,
The second has married a mermaid—a beautiful water wife.

And since I have friends in the Earth and Sea—with a few,
I trust, on high—
'Tis a matter of small account to me the way that I may die.

For whether I sink in the foaming flood, or swing on the triple tree,
Or die in my bed, as a Christian should, is all the same to me.

—Charles Godfrey Leland.

The British House of Lords has passed the second reading of the old-age pension bill, thus insuring its becoming a law. In the course of the debate of the pension bill Lord Rosebery and Lord Cromer both attacked the measure on the ground of its socialistic tendencies, both predicting that it would eventually involve the country in a policy of protection. Lord Rosebery described the measure as the most important bill submitted to Parliament in forty years, and cited the pension system in the United States as an example of what such a bill might lead to. He declared that it was the first duty of the country to prepare for the European conflict which probably would be forced upon Great Britain before many years. He thought that the bill, by entailing a protective policy, would tend to widen the breach between Great Britain and foreign nations and thus increase the danger of war.

While the grading of Main Street, Manassas, Virginia, was in progress recently the workmen discovered that their picks went to a depth that indicated a subterranean cavity. Upon investigation it was discovered that a trench to the depth of three feet had been dug, and a number of barrels of flour put therein and concealed from the enemy on the evacuation of Manassas by the Confederate troops. A large quantity of barrel staves and a white substance resembling decayed flour were exhumed.

In 1885 New York had only twenty-eight millionaires; now it has over 2000.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Miss Ellen Tompkins has just won the Curins prize for oratory at the State Presbyterian College, Hastings, Nebraska.

Mrs. E. E. Teape and her daughter, Mrs. Mackelvie, recently accomplished the feat of a 4000-mile trip in an automobile from Portland, Maine, to Portland, Oregon, without the presence or assistance of men.

Count Sergius Witte is not only no longer at the helm of the Russian government, but stands almost alone even in the council of the empire. Nevertheless a strong feeling prevails that Count Witte's day is not done, that he will be recalled in the first emergency.

Charles A. Keath, who holds one of the American Rhodes scholarships, recently returned to Philadelphia to join the St. Louis baseball team of the American League. He has put in one year at Oxford and has two more ahead of him. Keath said the only practice he could get at Oxford had been with other American Rhodes men.

Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, New York, who is to give a series of lectures at the universities of Copenhagen, Stockholm, and Christiania, was received with honor on his arrival in Paris. He visited the Palais Bourbon as the guest of Baron D'Estournelles de Constant and met a cordial reception from the French parliamentary arbitration group which went to the United States last year.

Miss Ethel Roosevelt will celebrate her seventeenth birthday next month by a small house party of girl friends. The President and Mrs. Roosevelt have decided to present her to society at an unusually youthful age for a débutante in order that she may be a White House bud. It is expected that she will make her bow to society at a ball in the East Room, like her elder sister, Mrs. Longworth, who was also presented at an early age.

Dr. William J. Holland, the director of the Carnegie Museum at Pittsburg, has returned from a trip to Germany and France on behalf of Andrew Carnegie to present life-size plaster casts of the diplococus, the mammoth skeleton found in Wyoming. In recognition of his services to science, the German emperor conferred upon Dr. Holland the Order of the Crown, while President Fallières bestowed upon him the Cross of the Legion of Honor.

Signora Rina Monti has just been appointed professor of zoölogy and comparative anatomy at the University of Sassari, Italy. After the death of Professor Maggi of the University of Pavia, she taught comparative anatomy in that institution, and then for two years at Siena, but it is only recently that she has had a university professorship conferred on her. Although the wife of Signor Augusto Stella and the devoted mother of a handsome boy, she keeps her maiden name in her scientific work.

The birth recently of a son and heir to the Duke of Norfolk was treated in England as an event of almost national importance. The Duke of Norfolk is a man of mark in many ways. He is the most important lay member of the Roman Church in Great Britain, and acts to all intents and purposes, when occasion arises, as British ambassador to the Vatican. He is also the premier peer of Great Britain, and the birth of a son insures the continuance in the direct male line of the ancient family of Howard, which stands next to the blood royal at the head of the English peerage and traces its descent back to Saxon times.

The study of the stars has appealed to many women, yet among astronomers of her sex Maria Mitchell, for many years professor at Vassar, has remained without a peer. She was born in Nantucket in 1819, and the people of the town have dedicated a memorial observatory in her honor. The telescope which was presented to Miss Mitchell by the women of America has been mounted there, also the Alvan Clark instrument which was presented to her by a number of women in Massachusetts. Her valuable library has been given over to the association that bears her name, and has also been located in the building. Miss Mitchell shares with Margaret Fuller the honor of being the only woman whose names are inscribed on the tablets in the Boston Public Library. Her most famous discovery was that of the comet of 1847.

At the recent celebration of its seventy-fifth anniversary Oberlin, the first college in the United States to admit women, conferred on the Rev. Antoinette Brown Blackwell the honorary degree of D. D. Sixty-odd years ago when Antoinette Brown applied for admission into the theological school of Oberlin the faculty was astonished, but because the charter of the college expressly provided that women should be admitted to all departments she could not be kept out. Lucy Stone, who was a student in the academic department of the college at the time, became a great friend of the one girl divinity student and is reported to have told her repeatedly that she did not believe public opinion would ever permit women to be ministers. On the Sunday of the recent commencement Mrs. Blackwell walked in the academic procession among all manner of dignitaries in cap and gown. Later she had a prominent seat on the platform in the chapel among delegates from thirty-six colleges, including Harvard, and was solemnly invested with the degree of doctor of divinity. The Rev. Dr. Blackwell is now in her eighty-fourth year and is a Unitarian.

MAROONED.

By Jerome A. Hart.

XXIII.

Early the next morning Arthur received a message from Diana's maid, saying that after breakfast her mistress would be waiting to drive him to the river. From this he guessed that the flood was not so bad as had been feared. Dressing rapidly, and taking the cup of thick Mexican chocolate which was the simple breakfast at Plancha Grande, he hobbled to the porial. There he found Diana awaiting him with a light trap in which she had several times driven him over the valley since his improvement. It was a skeleton buckboard, drawn by a pair of American harness horses, for the native mustangs were poor draught animals.

"Oh, Mr. Alden," called out Diana, "would you not like to drive down to the embarcadero and see the people working at the levees? They are like so many ants! It is well worth seeing."

"I shall be delighted to go, but I hope you have not been there all night. If so, I shall have to scold you."

"Tis the voice of the sluggard, I hear him complain," cried Diana gayly. "You, who have spent the night comfortably in bed, have no right to criticise us honest people who have been working at the river."

"No, but seriously—tell me—you have not really been up all night!"

"No—Mrs. Lyndon and I stayed an hour or so, until it was evident that man had prevailed over the elements, and then we came away, and went to bed. It was a weird sight, that great crowd working by moonlight. Even now it will be interesting. And I was so sorry you had to stay behind last night that I determined to take you down there early this morning if you care to go."

If he cared to go! Arthur thought of saying that if he did not care to go, with her to take him, he ought to be condemned for life to mop back mighty Amazons with penny brooms. But on reflection he feared this might sound absurd, so he merely murmured "It's awfully good of you," which, on further reflection, seemed to him trivial.

But Diana had already taken the reins from the mozo, and Arthur slowly climbed into the buckboard. Toward the river they went at a spanking trot, and in a few minutes they were at the embarcadero. The scene was indeed curious. Up and down the river bank, for a long distance above and below the embarcadero, some hundreds of men and women toiled away, fighting against the inrush of the water. Most of the women were engaged in filling bags with sand. A dozen or so among them at open fires near the river bank were cooking breakfast for the toilers. Scores of men were chopping down willows and alders, of whose branches they were building cribs, while other laborers were carrying sand-bags to the levees as fast as the women filled them. Among the workers was Helmont, who was the centre of the busy scene.

"How goes the battle, captain?" asked Arthur, as they approached him.

"We are beginning to prevail at last, I hope, but it has been a hard struggle. I never saw such a flood in all the years that I've been here. If you'll look across to the other bank of the river you may see what this side would have looked like if we hadn't fought the flood in time."

"But I don't see any opposite bank," said Diana.

In truth, looking to the westward nothing was to be seen but a vast sheet of water.

"You can detect the other bank by the fringe of willows, now partly covered by the flood. The water has run over the river bank into the low land beyond it, for there is no levee there. I have a levee to protect my own land, but it will not help the owner on the other side of the stream."

"But your levees will protect the owners below you, and their levees will prevent the water from backing up to your land," remarked Alden.

"Where they have levees—yes," said Helmont dryly.

"We are going to take a drive along the river," added Diana, "and we'll report how things look up the stream."

"Be careful you don't get cut off anywhere," warned Helmont. "You can't imagine the rapidity with which the water pours in on the low valley lands through an unexpected break in the levees."

"We'll be careful," said Diana. "I don't think the flood waters could move rapidly enough to overtake these fast trotters of yours, captain;" and with a smile and a nod she and Arthur left the busy scene, and drove up the valley.

For some miles they kept to the road which paralleled the river bank. It was with a strange sensation that they found themselves looking up over the leveed banks to the brimming river. A great river running through low lands has a curious effect when it is high. When a river has built up its bed and the riverine owners have built up its banks the floor of the valley looks as if it were lower than the bed of the stream. Thus, near the Delta of the Mississippi, one apparently walks up to the level of the river, and one looks up to the boats and barges on the surface of the stream. So it seemed to Diana and Arthur as their horses trotted briskly along—the vastness of the volume of water, restrained only by the frail dike, almost appalled them. Its seeming volume was added to by the absence of any levee on the opposite bank, which was indicated only by the ripples curling around the trees, rushes, and wild vines there. It seemed to them as if they were at the edge of a great lake, or rather reservoir, whose mighty waters were held in check by a frail and inadequate dam.

"O-o-o-o!" cried Diana, "I am going to turn off to the right. The sight of that silent, resistless mass of water makes me feel creepy!"

"It is a trifle uncomfortable to look at. Besides we have gone far enough to report to the captain that his levees are sound."

"I had intended to drive to where the Rio Nacional joins the great river. But I think we have gone far enough on our investigating tour. Let us go eastward toward the hills." And so saying, she swung her horses around into a well-beaten trail which was almost a road.

"Do I imagine it, or do these horses seem relieved, now that you have left the river?"

"It is not your fancy merely," she replied, "you are right—they were restless and nervous all the way up; now they are going much more quietly."

"What could have alarmed them, do you think?"

"I scarcely know," she replied, thoughtfully; "it may be that they were once terrified by a flood breaking suddenly through a leaking levee like that we have just left. Or it may be that they never saw so much water before."

Arthur laughed. "You are not in earnest, are you?" he said quizzically.

"Indeed I am. You must not forget that in this country many animals on the range see no water from year's end to year's end except the little spring or water-hole at which they drink. Much of Texas is waterless, and colts born there and taken elsewhere frequently show alarm at the sight of running water. They will often make a high leap to get over a little rivulet across a road."

"Such animals would not be very useful for fording streams," went on Arthur, in the same quizzical tone.

"They have to be trained to the sight, sound, and feel of running water, just as to any other unfamiliar thing," replied Diana, in a matter-of-fact tone.

"But how about the floods?"

"Captain Helmont says it is six years since the last flood, and these colts are four-year-olds. But here we are approaching a little higher ground—the valley seems to lie in terraces, as the foothills are approached. Shall we go back?"

"It is very pleasant to go on," said Arthur, reluctantly assenting, "but the day is advancing, and perhaps we had better turn. It seems a little selfish for us to be driving purely for pleasure when our generous host and all his people are so much concerned."

"But you must not forget," corrected Diana laughingly, "that this is only secondarily a drive for pleasure. We are on duty, which is to inspect the river banks and report all breaks in the levees. Whoa, there! What's the matter, girl?"

One of her team, a spirited filly, had suddenly begun to snort, and to dance uneasily.

"I wonder what is the matter with her!" speculated Diana, "she acts as if she had heard a rattlesnake. Do you see anything to frighten her?"

Arthur looked ahead and around. "No," he replied, "nothing unless it is that little runnel of dust-covered water there—it wriggles almost like a snake. You say that running water sometimes frightens them."

"Water!" cried Diana, in a startled voice, "there should be no water here. Why, so there is—the South Fork levee must have given way!" And she checked her horses and looked fixedly at the little trickle of water which was making its way bravely, almost lost in the thick dust.

"Surely such an insignificant stream can mean no great damage to the levee!"

Diana shook her head. "We are a long distance from either river," she replied, "this is merely the forerunner of what I fear may be a big break." And she urged on her horses toward the west, where lay the main stream and the road which they had quitted an hour or two before. But scarcely had they gone a quarter of a mile when they found that the road, which before had been distinct, like a grayish ribbon running through the green, was no longer visible—the valley was slowly disappearing beneath the yellow water.

Diana paused irresolute.

"Surely, there is no danger!" cried Arthur. "The water is very shallow—it is only a few inches deep. You can easily drive your horses back the way we came, even if the ground is covered with water."

Diana shook her head. "I am afraid the water will rise more rapidly than we imagine," she replied, "but even if it did not, and even if we were to attempt to drive back by the road, the horses will not go. See!" And she urged them toward the shallow, creeping flood. But the terrified animals plunged and reared so wildly that there was danger of their breaking the pole.

"Perhaps we can skirt to the eastward, and by driving rapidly keep to the head of the advancing water," suggested Arthur, after a pause.

"We can at least try it," she assented, "and perhaps the horses may get used to the sight of the water, and at last be willing to try a short cut and ford the flood."

Along the floor of the valley they drove. There was here no road, not even a trail. Although the valley seemed level, it was not so, for they found it very rough riding. And time and again as the head of the advancing flood seemed to dwindle they would try to cut across its pathway. But like the mountain-climber, who as he ascends sees ever a higher peak, so the advancing flood seemed to have no head. And at last Diana, finding that they were being gradually forced further and further to the eastward, said:

"I am afraid there is more than one break—another stream from the backwater down the river has poured into a low basin in the valley here, and has met the stream from above."

"Then we are cut off from the Hacienda," exclaimed Arthur.

"I fear so," replied Diana. As she spoke a patch of the yellow water swirled around the wheels and under her horses' feet. With a rear and a bound the frightened animals recoiled.

Diana let them have their heads. They would not even try to ford the shallow flood—she could not force them to it—possibly they were wiser than she. Instinctively the horses made for higher ground. They were ascending one of the slight terraces with which the valley rises toward the hills. In effect, not far away was one of the curious isolated "buttes" or peaks, of which there were a number in the valley. Toward this the horses made their way, and Diana let them go.

It was perhaps well she did so. For a number of minutes their faces were turned away from the westward, whence came the resistless but silent flood; when at last, on fairly high ground, Diana turned her horses' heads, and they gazed out over the valley, both she and Arthur started, so sudden was the change. The ground over which they had been traveling, only a few minutes before, was now a great lake; the dike along the river's rim they could no longer see, but a fringe of willows, of cottonwoods, of sycamores, marked where it had been. On little elevations here and there were groups of horses, cattle, sheep, and mules, huddled forlornly together. And far off in the distance they could see the mighty mound on which lay the Hacienda, with its many buildings, safe and high above the flood, like an island in an inland sea.

Long they sat there in silence, gazing at the land slowly changing into a lake. At last Arthur spoke:

"We, too, seem to be on a kind of mound like that on which the Hacienda lies, although a much smaller one."

"Yes, and our island is so high that it is quite safe—the water can never rise to its top."

"There is a hut up there," said Arthur pointing.

"Evidently some one lives here."

"It must be some of Captain Helmont's people, for we are still on his land. Let's drive up and see."

But when they reached and hailed the hut, Arthur in English, and then Diana in Spanish, there was no reply. Diana gave the reins to Arthur, alighted, and entered. In a moment she came out.

"It is evidently a herder's hut," said she, "and it is occupied, for there is a partly prepared meal on the table. But there is no one here."

"They must have hastened to the river bank to assist in mending the levees."

"There is no one here," repeated Diana, as if she had not heard him.

Her tone was so peculiar that Arthur grew surprised. "But we are in no danger!" he exclaimed. "You say there is food in the hut, and the water can never rise to the top of this hill."

Diana looked at him. Could it be possible that he was thinking only of the bald, material conditions?—of the distant danger from starvation?—of the remote possibility of the flood rising over the hill on which they were? Did he not realize that she was alone with him, and fated to remain alone with him for how long they could not tell?

Diana's brow contracted as she looked at him. "Food! Danger!" she cried scornfully. "I said nothing of hunger or of danger!"

"Then if we are in no danger of drowning and do not lack food we shall only have the inconvenience of waiting," said Arthur philosophically, "by tomorrow we shall be safe at the Hacienda."

"Why do you say tomorrow?" flamed out Diana.

"Why can they not find us by tonight?"

"But they will find it as difficult to come from the Hacienda here as for us to go from here to the Hacienda," he demurred.

"Not at all," retorted Diana, with such heat that Arthur looked at her in wonder. "They will have no difficulty in coming here—there are plenty of boats at the embarcadero."

"It may be," assented Arthur doubtfully, "but how will they know where we are?"

Diana did not reply. Again she looked at him, and then averted her eyes. His failure to see how trying was her situation seemed to her incomprehensible. They were in a country around which still clung the Spanish traditions of the woman being ever guarded from the man; a country where the lover was never allowed to meet his sweetheart alone save at her window with an iron grill between them; a land where the natives looked on the innocent freedom with which American maidens walked or rode with men as food for toothsome scandal. And here, in such a calumnious land, she was forced by fate to spend a day and perhaps a night on an islet in this waste of waters alone with him.

She tingled from head to foot as she thought of it. She dug her nails into the palm of her strong hands, as she strove to devise some way of ending their imprisonment. But there was no way—none. There was nothing to do except to wait. And he—the man so calmly looking over the yellow flood would suffer not at all; he could not even understand her unendurable position; he could think of nothing save food and "inconvenience."

When Diana made no reply, Arthur felt dimly that his remark was displeasing to her, and said no more.

She busied herself with taking out the horses, curtly rejecting his offers of assistance, which, truth to tell, were largely conventional, for his movements were so slow that he could have helped her little. She noddled the horses, and turned them out to graze. Then she seated herself on the ground, and gazed wistfully out over the waste of yellow water. When Arthur slowly came over and seated himself by her side, she alleged a desire to look after her horses, and left him. He gazed after her in perplexity, but she did not return for a long time. When she did come back, she went into the hut without speaking to him, and busied herself with preparing a meal. It was necessarily a simple one, for the herders lived apparently on jerked beef and beans. When she had prepared a savory stew of this, Diana brought it to Arthur, who proposed to join her at the table in the hut.

"Thank you, no," she replied coldly, "I have already eaten my supper." And with no further words, she left him again.

As the evening wore into night, there was no further speech between them. Diana brought out a roll of blankets to Arthur, which she laid on the ground at some distance from the hut—a mute intimation that he was to lodge under the stars—no hardship, by the way, in that climate, when the night was fair. The hut she evidently considered as her castle. But Arthur, who slept but little, was concerned to see that she also took but little rest, for far into the night he saw her continually appearing at the door of the hut, and gazing across the water, in the direction of the Hacienda. More than once he thought he heard her weeping. Poor girl! All through the long night she was hoping to hear shouts, to hear the sound of oars, to hear voices calling across the water, to hear anything that would reveal the presence of a searching party from the Hacienda. She did not realize how difficult was such a search—how impossible it was for a rescuing party to guess in what direction they had gone. And in truth it was daylight when she first heard the welcome sound of oars and of shouts resounding across the water.

In not many minutes a boat had grounded on the shore of their temporary island, and Diana and Arthur were soon on their way back to the Hacienda. There was no one in the boat save Spanish-speaking servants; he explained to Diana that Captain Helmont's party had gone further to the north, and that there were two other parties out in search of the missing ones.

As they sat in the stern-sheets the oarsmen gazed at them with the inquisitive Indian stare; occasionally they made grinning remarks to each other in their native tongue, but sprinkled with Spanish words. When they did so, Arthur noticed that Diana would vince. He strove to engage her in talk, but she replied in monosyllables; he tried to catch her eye, but she avoided his. He cudgeled his brains to divine how he could have offended her, but he could think of nothing he had done. And even when they were at the Hacienda again, being hailed with greetings, Diana did not unbend toward him. When she withdrew with Mrs. Lyndon, her icy farewell struck him almost like a blow.

The next day Helmont met him with the salutation: "More bad news."

"Not an increase in the flood I hope?"

"No—the river is falling. But our guests have gone."

"Gone?" echoed Arthur. "Where? Why?"

"Down to the capital city, Mrs. Lyndon told me, at Judge Tower's request. As the senatorial fight is about to begin there, he would like to have her prepared to reside over his establishment, for the judge will probably do much entertaining. The Wyley forces will keep open house. Tower is a warm advocate of the reelection of Senator Wyley, I suppose you know."

"Yes, so I have heard," assented Arthur.

Only a day before, he had felt no interest in the senatorial fight, and considered himself still unfitted for legislative duty. But now he felt that his convalescence must end speedily, and he experienced a violent desire to exchange the hospitality of Helmont's Hacienda for the uncertain mercies of the Sacrosanto hotels.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Copyright 1908 by Jerome A. Hart.

Professor Roy, the French Esperantist, is urging the establishment of an independent Esperanto State in Europe. The site he has selected for his experiment is in a neutral strip of territory which lies on the frontier between Germany, Belgium, and Holland, five miles from Aix-la-Chapelle. This territory is known as Ioresnet, is situated in a pleasant valley, and has a population of 3000 inhabitants. Esperanto is to be the official language of the place. The expenses of the State are to be borne by the subscriptions of Esperantists all the world over. The scheme includes an Esperanto theatre, a daily official Esperanto gazette, and a sort of Esperanto parliament, which will meet periodically to discuss the affairs of the little State.

Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, was the guest of honor at a banquet given in Toronto on June 16. In the course of his speech Sir Thomas referred to the fact that just twenty-six years have passed since his arrival from the United States to assist in the management of Canada's new transcontinental railway. The influence of that line on the development of Canada is beyond estimate. England has recognized the service rendered to Canada by this Milwaukee-born American railroad man, and it would be hard to say how much has been done for the United States by Sir Thomas Shaughnessy and by that other American-born railway builder, Sir William Van Horne.

AMERICAN WOMEN IN LONDON.

Leaders in English Society Who Have Won Their Position by Tact and Grace.

Two reasons can be found for a change in the attitude of English society toward American women. The first, of course, is that ever since King Edward came to the throne he has manifested his approval and admiration of them. Time and again he has pointedly demonstrated his desire that they should be included in all court functions and smart society affairs. At house parties where he has been the guest, when the list of those invited has been submitted to him for his approval he has suggested the addition of some American names. Naturally society has adopted the king's policy, till now the American woman is a recognized factor in English social life. The other reason is the benefit which the clever American has been to English society. The majority are ready to admit that the invasion of the American woman has brightened and animated it with the leaven of vivacity and gayety. It is this American leaven (declares the London correspondent of the New York Sun) which has made the present season one of the most brilliant London has ever known, a wonderful series of festivities marked by magnificence without excess.

The greatest favorite among American hostesses is Consuelo, Duchess of Manchester, widow of the late duke and daughter of Antonio Yznaga. She is generally acknowledged to be the most brilliant conversationalist America has sent to England. She is also a gifted musician and speaks French, Italian, Spanish, and German fluently, so when foreign royalties are visiting here she is always included among those presented to them. Both the king and queen feel the deepest friendship for her and the king is often her guest at informal bridge parties and little dinners. Lady Lister Kaye, her sister, is also a popular and brilliant hostess whose entertainments are much appreciated.

The wife of the present Duke of Manchester was Miss Zimmerman of Cincinnati. She and her husband are not much in London, but this season they have stayed in town longer than usual. Mr. Zimmerman purchased Kylemore Castle in Connemara a short time ago and presented it to his daughter, so the young duke and duchess spend most of the time on that estate with their two sons and baby daughter.

Next to Consuelo, Duchess of Manchester, in popularity is the Duchess of Marlborough. She is always interested in all charitable organizations and gives her time and money unsparingly to relieving distress and poverty whenever she is called upon. Always exquisitely dressed and a gracious hostess, she is greatly in demand, but of late years has largely devoted herself to her children and her charities. Her two sons, the Marquis of Blandford and Lord Ivor Churchill, who are eleven and ten years of age, are much like her and are her inseparable companions.

Sunderland House, which Mr. Vanderbilt built for her in London as a town home, is a barrack-like affair outside, but magnificent in its interior decorations and furnishings. This season the Duchess of Marlborough has only given some dinners and small receptions for her Vanderbilt relatives who are in town, and rumors of the ball at Sunderland House have not yet materialized.

The Duchess of Roxburghe was Miss Goelet; she is a very brilliant woman, a great reader, and is also much interested in riding and driving. She has no children, but is very much loved by the younger set in society, and her invitations are eagerly sought. She is one of the royal hostesses, as they are called, which means that she sometimes entertains the king and queen.

There are two American marchionesses, Mary, Marchioness of Anglesey, who is a widow and not much in London, and the Marchioness of Dufferin and Ava, who was Miss Davis of New York. Lady Dufferin entertains largely, and just now is greatly interested in the new Anglo-American Club, of which she is one of the founders and promoters.

Among the American countesses are Lady Tankerville, Lady Essex, and Lady Suffolk, all of whom have entertained lavishly this season; the Countess of Orford, whose charitable work has made her famous throughout England; the Countess of Craven, who with her mother, Mrs. Bradley Martin, has given many smart dinners this spring, and Cora, Lady Strafford, who is one of the most beautiful of the American women here. Her daughter, Miss Colgate, is handsome also, and they have both been in great demand this year.

Helen, Lady Abinger, is well known for her house parties at Inverloch Castle in the Highlands and her other country place, Redford House, in Surrey. Her town residence is only used for a few weeks at the height of the season, as she is one of the American women who prefer country life in England. She is the daughter of Commander G. A. Magruder of the United States navy and the widow of Lord Abinger.

Lady Barrymore is the daughter of General James Wadsworth and was first married to Arthur Post of the United States army. She is a great favorite in society here and is very clever and witty. Her daughter, Nellie Post, is an exceedingly pretty girl and is one of the great friends of the Princess Patricia of Connaught. The princess, with Nellie Post, Jean Reid, and Anne Breese, before these last two were married, formed a quartet of girlish beauty and charm that made London bow before them. They went everywhere together.

Mrs. Harry Higgins with her two daughters, Lady Willoughby D'Esresby and Lady Alastair Innes Kerr, formerly Eloise and Anna Breese, are at the height of social favor and have given successful dinners and dances within the last few weeks.

Lady Bache Cunard was Miss Maude Burke of California. She and her husband travel a great deal, but they manage to have at least a part of the season in London, where Lady Cunard is always to be noticed for her extremely beautiful costumes.

Among the wives of statesmen and diplomatists are many Americans. Mrs. Joseph Chamberlain, who was Miss Endicott of Salem, Massachusetts, has always been very popular, and her devotion to her husband during his present long and trying illness has endeared her to her English friends, though it has kept her from any part in society for many months.

Lady Newborough and her sister, Mrs. Chauncey, are two handsome Americans who know every one and go everywhere. They are daughters of the late Colonel Henry Carr. They spend much time in Paris.

Princess Hatzfeldt, formerly Miss Huntington of California, makes her home now in England, and is a member of the hunting colony at Melton Mowbray, as well as an ardent motorist. This season she has given several beautiful dinners.

Lady Paget and Mrs. Cornwallis West were social pioneers over here and are looked upon as English. Lady Paget is a great favorite with the king and queen, and this season she has been able to entertain again, having fully recovered from the effects of her accident.

The Hon. Mrs. Robert Grosvenor was a Miss Padelford, daughter of Mrs. Ernest Cunard. She is one of the brides of the season. Mrs. Frederick Guest, Mrs. Napier Lawrence, Mrs. Arthur Glasgow, Mrs. George Montagu, Mrs. Henry, Mrs. Adair, Mrs. Ridgeley Carter, and Mrs. Drexel are all American hostesses who are now adding their quota to the festivities of the London season.

Mrs. Ronalds's musical Sunday afternoons, Mrs. Almeric Paget's bridge parties, Mrs. Potter Palmer's dinners, Mrs. John and Mrs. Frank Mackay's balls have made these hostesses famous, while the entertainments of Mrs. William Waldorf Astor at Cliveden on the Thames are magnificent.

Mrs. Whitelaw Reid has probably entertained more lavishly than any other hostess in England this season. Dorchester House is the scene of constant dinner parties, dances, informal teas, and formal receptions. A great ball preceded the wedding of Miss Jean Reid, and the reception following the marriage was on a scale which royalty itself would find it hard to excel. At first there was criticism of this magnificence and display on the part of America's ambassador, but royal approval once more turned the tide of feeling, and there are no more popular women in London today than Mrs. Reid and her daughter, now Mrs. John Ward. Mrs. Reid has presented many American girls at court and to English society. This year she has had a debutante niece in Miss Jennie Crocker of California.

Besides all these notable Americans, there has been the usual influx of those temporary hostesses and guests who intersperse the summer gayeties of Newport and the autumn ones of Tuxedo with a few weeks of the London season.

Of the progress of negroes in this country Ray Stannard Baker says, in the American Magazine: "It is not short of astonishing, indeed, to discover how far the negro has been able to develop in the forty-odd years since slavery a distinct race spirit and position. It is pretty well known that he has been going into business, that he is acquiring much land, that he has many professional men, that he worships in his own churches and has many schools which he conducts—but in other lines of activity he is also getting a foothold. Just as an illustration: I was surprised at finding so many negro theatres in the country—theatres not only owned or operated by negroes, but presenting plays written and acted by negroes. I saw a fine new negro theatre in New Orleans; I visited a smaller colored theatre in Jackson, Mississippi, and in Chicago the Pekin theatre is an enterprise wholly conducted by negroes. Williams and Walker, negro comedians, have long amused large audiences, both white and colored. Their latest production, 'Bandanna Land,' written and produced wholly by negroes, is not only funny, but clean. Many other illustrations could be given to show how the negro is developing in one way or another—but especially along racial lines. The extensive organization of negro lodges of Elks and Masons and other secret orders, many of them with clubhouses, might be mentioned. Attention might be called to the almost innumerable insurance societies and companies maintained by negroes, the largest of which, the True Reformers, of Richmond, has over 50,000 members, and to the growth of negro newspapers and magazines (there are now over 200 in the country), but enough has been said, perhaps, to make the point that there has been a real development of a negro spirit and self-consciousness."

William Redmond, the Irish leader in the British House of Commons, recently in a genial mood and in playful allusion to the birthday honors list asked whether "as a matter of general convenience and in order that honorable members might know how to address their colleagues with becoming respect it could be arranged that honorable gentlemen who had joined the titled classes should wear rosettes for at least one month after the conferment of the title." No minister was bold enough to answer.

SALONS OF ROYAL FRANCE.

Frank Hamel Writes a Fine Account of Great Frenchwomen.

Still another hook on the French salon. Such a revival of interest "in the most renowned social gatherings that the world has ever known" is not without its significance at a time when the dominance of women is likely to become quite as real if not quite as salutary.

But in the handling of an engrossing topic Mr. Hamel has developed a line of his own. He finds that the French salons were capable of division into groups each with its own characteristics, and with the distinctive tint given to it by its most representative woman leader. There is the Hôtel de Rambouillet, the Salon of Manners; La Grande Mademoiselle, the Salon of the Court; Madame de Sévigné, the Salon of Friendship; Ninon de Lenclos, the Salon of Gallantry; Madame de Maintenon, the Salon of Satire; Madame du Deffand, the Salon of Wit; Mademoiselle de Lespinasse, the Salon of Philosophy; Madame de Staël, the Salon of Politics; and Madame de Récamier, the Salon of Literature. The classification is justified. Although we may find a continual overlapping and a frequent inclusion of sheep in the wrong fold, there was a natural tendency for like to seek like and for each group to take on the complexion of the distinguished woman at its head.

The author's treatment leaves nothing to be desired. He is evidently saturated with his subject and he never fails in felicitous discrimination or in vivacious narrative. His book contains some three hundred and fifty pages, but it might have been longer without risk of wearying his reader, and although his ground has already been well worked, he finds plenty of material for novel and vigorous presentation.

A good example of his anecdotal style is to be found in the chapter on "The Hôtel de Rambouillet." The proceedings at the famous salon were usually literary and decorous. Authors brought their manuscripts to be read and literary games were much in vogue. But sometimes there was a fall from grace:

Romping and practical jokes were not entirely eliminated, and some of the latter, though harmless enough, were not particularly refined. The Comte de Guiche, later Maréchal de Grammont, was an excellent butt for a certain style of humor dear to the précieuse. One day at dinner dish after dish was served to him of viands which were his special aversion. Now the Comte de Guiche was a gourmand, and when he saw that he was likely to get nothing at all to eat his face fell and he looked somewhat reproachfully at his hostess. The latter burst into laughter and said jeocularly to her attendant: "M. de Guiche is not getting what he likes. Serve something else." The affair had been arranged beforehand, and when the joke had gone far enough, a menu of entirely different courses was offered him. Another time he indulged rather freely in mushrooms. During the night his clothes were stolen and the seams sewn up so that he had great difficulty in getting into them when dressing next morning. "How bloated you are," said M. de Caudebonne on seeing him, and others made similar remarks, expressing themselves in different degrees of horror. The poor Comte de Guiche hastened to a mirror and on seeing his figure cried out, "Ah, it is a fact! I must have been poisoned by the mushrooms." There was a general stampede in search of remedies, but at length M. de Caudebonne brought a written formula which he declared he had seen used with unfailing success. He handed it to the victim, and the latter, unfolding the paper, read, "Recipe: get a good pair of scissors and slit up your coat." The Comte de Guiche laughed as heartily as any one. He was completely cured.

A sort of natural depravity causes us to turn with interest to the section on Ninon de Lenclos, that strange heauty whose fascination must have rested upon more than physical charms:

Pleasure was openly the aim of all at Ninon's house: learning, discussion, criticism, were vetoed, and gay conversation, sparkling wit, filled the quickly passing hours. At last the frivolity of her receptions caused a scandal and her name became a by-word in society. As Scarron wrote of Ninon in his "Adieux au Marais":

"Tant est vrai que fille trop belle N'engendre jamais que querelle."

The outcry reached the ears of the queen regent, who desired the offender to retire into a convent. No mention was made of any particular house, however. Appreciating the fact that she was allowed to choose her own retreat and expressing her willingness to accede to the request of her royal mistress, Ninon sent a pert reply, naming the Monastery of the Grand Cordeliers. Fortunately when this answer reached Anne of Austria's ears, the Dues de Candale and de Montemart were present and joined Condé in pleading Ninon's cause, and assuring the angry queen that the delinquent was but jesting; and the matter was allowed to drop. The affair might have injured her reputation still more irretrievably had not Condé just at this time showed her a particular mark of admiration and respect. Whilst driving in the Cours, the fashionable promenade where the fine world displayed its toilettes and its equipages, he stopped his carriage, stepped out, and deliberately went to greet her before an astonished crowd. This act of courtesy silenced a rumor spread by her enemies that she was to be sent to the Filles Républices.

"That would have been very unjust," declared the Comte de Baurru, when he heard of it: "elle n'est ni fille, ni repentie!"

But Ninon de Lenclos had her virtues. In the "Saint Simon" says that "apart from her indiscretions" she was virtuous, and that she was disinterested, faithful, secret, safe to the last degree, and remarkably honest. Hospitality was a fine art with Ninon and her success as a hostess was due as much to her kindness as to her beauty:

The Abbé Gédéon also bore testimony to her charm as a hostess and to the value from the social point of view of her receptions. "The house of Mlle. de Lenclos (the celebrated Ninon)," wrote the Abbé d'Olivet in the preface to Gédéon's "Oeuvres Diverses," "was the meeting-place of all the polished and esteemed intellects of court and city. Women of the highest virtue encouraged their sons, on their entry into the great world, to visit Ninon on account of the social advantages accruing to any one admitted into such amiable society, regarded as it was as the very centre of good company. Abbé Gédéon had but to appear to be appreciated, and there he formed friendships which were the means of greatly advancing his reputation and his good fortune."

Perhaps the Marquis de la Fare was the most eulogistic of all writers when describing her salon. "I never saw her at her best," he wrote in his Mémoires, "but I can assure you that at the age of fifty and until she was seventy she had lovers who were most devoted, and the highest in the land were among her friends. Moreover, until she was eighty-seven years of age she was still sought after by the best society of the time. She died in full possession of her faculties, and even with the charms and attractions of her wit, which was superior to that of any other woman I have known." Dangeau, too, historian and courtier, who visited Ninon's hôtel frequently, made an entry in his journal at her death which reads, "Mlle. de Lenclos has died in Paris. Although she was very old she preserved so much wit and charm that the best company in Paris was to be found daily at her house."

A woman who could retain her lovers at the age of seventy years must indeed have had the secret of perpetual youth. Unfortunately we are left without indication of its nature, unless we seek it in an unfailing geniality and in a disposition that we must believe to have been unselfish to a fault.

Mme. du Deffand ranks high among the women of the salons, although there have been some who thought that she was eclipsed by her protégé, Julie de Lespinasse. But Mme. du Deffand was unquestionably the greater figure of the two, greater in mind, keener in wit, and more robust in all those qualities that meet and conquer the world. The relations between Mme. du Deffand and Mlle. de Lespinasse, at first warm to the point of effusiveness, became gradually strained until in 1763 it was clear that their friendship was on the point of breaking:

Undoubtedly the climax of this disagreement was brought about through the actions of Mlle. de Lespinasse, who, usurping the intellectual sovereignty which Mme. du Deffand guarded with the utmost jealousy, profited by the old lady's habit of sleeping through the day and late into the evening to establish a small reception of her own, an hour or so before the large one, in her private room. D'Alembert was the first to encourage this "petit salon de contrahande." Evidently he saw nothing in it unfair to Mme. du Deffand, or if such a doubt existed in his mind he preferred to ignore it. He was in full sympathy with Mlle. de Lespinasse, drawn closely to her by like accidents of birth and fortune. His example was followed by Turgot, D'Usse, Chastellux, Marmontel, and others; and they undoubtedly culled by the aid of Mlle. de Lespinasse the most sweet-scented and the freshest blossoms from Mme. du Deffand's own bouquet of news and wit. Such artifice—it must be held to be more than a trifling art—could not remain forever undetected. Growing suspicious of something that was taking place behind her back, Mme. du Deffand made an early opportunity of discovering for herself what was going on. She entered her soi-disant companion's room to find there an animated assembly of her own guests; a usurpation so insolent, an ingratitude so perfidious, a rivalry so menacing, was laid bare to her at one glance. "It was nothing less to her mind than treachery," said Marmontel; "she uttered loud outcries, accusing the poor girl of stealing her friends, and declaring she would no longer warm that serpent in her bosom."

Thus the arrangement which had lasted for ten years ended instantaneously, for, struck by a blow to her righteous pride, to her egotistical demands, her habits, and her affections, Mme. du Deffand conducted herself with inexorable severity and implacable dignity, and hunted down the woman who had abused her credulity and confidence. By the line of action she chose, she was enabled to regain an authority which had been severely endangered and which pardon would certainly have compromised forever.

Who can doubt that Mme. du Deffand was in the right? Julie owed to her everything that one woman could owe to another, and she repaid it by an act of domestic treachery that is not to be excused because it sprung from an overmastering mental conceit.

The chapter on Mme. de Staël adds little to our knowledge, but it is none the less fascinating for that. Her connection with Benjamin Constant is delicately but unmistakably told:

This autumn, too, she was fated to make the acquaintance of Benjamin Constant, who of all men influenced her life the most. She was then twenty-nine years of age, Constant being twenty-seven. Barras in his Mémoires gives an account of him as a young man, "a tall, affected, and foolish-looking youth. Fiery fair hair which malicious people would have called reddish-brown, small eyes which one would have believed to be of the same color, had not the spectacles sheltering them prevented their being seen, a delicate, ironical mouth, seeming to make game of everything, even its owner, and which would have liked to be still more mocking were it possible"—not a very taking picture, but Barras was prejudiced because Mme. de Staël begged him for favors on account of Constant, whom she introduced, dragging him by the hand like an unwilling child. "The virility of her form, face, and carriage," declared Barras of Mme. de Staël, "her manner of wearing her clothes, the strength of her intellectual conceptions, her exuberant vigor and energy, all, in short, would have led me to believe that she belonged rather to our sex than to the other." A liaison between Constant and Mme. de Staël was quickly established. A few weeks after he had made her acquaintance he wrote to Colombar, "It is the second time that I have met a woman who could replace the whole world to me." The progress of their connection is told in his Journal Intime. It was a rule that he should leave her house by midnight, but one evening he pulled out his watch to prove to her that the hour of parting had not yet arrived. In disgust at the flight of time he smashed the unoffending watch upon the floor, but wrote next day exultingly: "I have not bought another watch. I have no longer any need of one." If he imagined that conquest lay all on his side, his cousin Rosalie was gifted with clearer vision, and discerned Mme. de Staël's love of adoration. "She would die," she wrote, "if she had not a crowd around her. In the absence of cats she would hold a court of rats, and even a court of insects would be preferable to none at all," and then she drew a spiteful picture of Mme. de Staël, upon whom she called when M. de Tracy, Adrien de Meun, and Constant were in her drawing-room. "I found her surrounded by the fox, the little cat and the other," she said; "she was resting one of her elbows against the chest of the first, and toying with the head of the second, while the third stroked her neck and called her his 'dear little kitten.'"

Excerpts from this charming hook might be multiplied at length. It is engrossing all the way through, and whatever pictures we may have formed of the women of the French salons must be enriched by the artistic shading of this fine work. There are twenty illustrations of unusual merit.

"Famous French Salons," by Frank Hamel. Published by Brentano's, New York.

An Indian or a Persian shawl used to be considered one of the finest feminine possessions in the world, and they were handed down from mother to daughter as prized heirlooms. But now if you gave a young woman even a very elegant shawl, costing possibly hundreds of dollars, as many did, she would turn up her beautiful nose at it and if she used it at all would make a point of giving it for her cosy corner. She would never think of wearing it, even if it were the only thing she had.

Edwin Stevens, the character actor and comic-opera comedian, lately here at the Princess Theatre, was engaged by Henry W. Savage to create the part of the Devil in an adaptation of a German play, "Der Teufel," written by Franz Molner, which was first produced in Hartford, Connecticut, recently. It has been arranged to try three different endings of the play, to discover which is best suited to American taste.

Mme. Tetrizzini achieved a triumph in Rossini's "Barber of Seville" at Covent Garden a few days ago. Adelina Patti was present and applauded the singer. Sig. Bonci was the tenor. It was the first time the opera had been given at Covent Garden since 1833, when Patti was the Rosina.

A giant blue crab of Japan measures twelve feet across the nippers.

You do not really know what eye-relief is until you have tried eye glasses with our improved guard.

HIRSCH & KAISER

218 Post St.

Opticians

JUST A BOOK STORE

Robertson's

1539 Van Ness Ave.

NEAR PINE

"Next to the White House"

We Rent New Typewriters

L. & M. ALEXANDER & CO.

MOVED TO

Phone Douglas 2157

512 Market St.

Coast Dealers

L. C. SMITH (Visible)

1908 Model

Ball Bearing

TYPEWRITERS

The wonderful new talking machine without a horn

The top closes over the record, shutting out all the noise of operation—the pure music of the record comes from a mahogany sound reflector. Elegantly made of solid mahogany, combined with record cabinet for 150 records. The finest talking machine made. Send for booklet.

Price $200

Sherman, Clay & Co.

Steinway Pianos—Victor Talking Machines
KEARNY AND SUTTER, S. F.
Broadway at 13th Oakland 1635 Van Ness Ave.
San Francisco

PALL MALL
FAMOUS CIGARETTES

No other cigarette approaches them in popularity among men of cultured tastes

A Shilling in London
A Quarter Here

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

By Sidney G. P. Coryn.

Halfway House, by Maurice Hewlett. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York; $1.50.

Whether Mary Middleham was really and truly a nice girl must be left to the judgment of the discriminating reader. Perhaps comparisons with Becky Sharp will rise unbidden to the mind, and perhaps we shall look upon the fascinating Mary as wholly the victim of circumstances.

Certainly her lot was a hard one. We find her in the position of a governess in an English village subject to the admiring patronage of the curate and the lofty and insolent condescension of the vicar's wife and the local gentry. When the vicar's wealthy brother, Mr. Germain, looks approvingly upon her in spite of his advanced years and wishes to make her the mistress of his estate, it is perhaps small wonder that the fascinated Mary should hasten to discard her small army of lovers, honorable and otherwise, and seize such an opportunity to become a rich man's wife—if only in name.

The results have hoary precedents behind them. Mary tries to do her whole duty and her husband is an honorable and high-minded man, but nature, having ineffectively forbidden the bans, still asserts herself in her usual way. Mr. and Mrs. Germain are resisting the irresistible, and when some of the discarded but still hopeful lovers appear once more on the horizon it is no more than was to be expected. Perhaps it is just as well that Mr. Germain dies so opportunely. Otherwise—quien sabe?

Mary's character is a strong one, and if there is a certain nebulosity in her virtue, it is not inartistic. But we are really grateful for the picture of Senhouse, gentleman, artist, and tramp, with his wise and delicate philosophy, his honor, and his chivalry. We are not sure that Senhouse did wisely at the end, but having seen one marriage that was not "happy ever after," we are disposed to believe that years of ineffable bliss follow close upon the last page.

Mr. Hewlett has chosen a background of unpleasant people and of a type almost unknown in America. We might have wished for some kind of Homeric justice to fall upon them other than oblivion, but such justice is rare and the ugly type is truly drawn. If the book has its failings, it still remains one of the masterly productions of the year.

Persia: The Awakening East, by W. P. Cresson, F. R. G. S. Published by the J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia; $3.50.

This book comes opportunely at a time when democratic institutions in Persia are being weighed in the balances. It certainly helps us to understand the wave of reaction that seems for the moment to have set the hands back upon the dial and in a great measure to have restored the autocracy of the Shah.

Some time ago the author journeyed to Persia by way of Southern Russia. From Teheran he traveled by caravan along the old Bagdad trail, passing across Western Persia and Mesopotamia to the shores of the Persian Gulf. He thus had abundant opportunity to observe and to study, and that he used the opportunity to good effect is proved by this fine book.

The author has given us something better than a presentation of political conditions and the greedy ambitions of the great powers. He has studied the people themselves, their habits of mind, and their superstitions. What he tells us, for instance, of the mendicant priests is peculiarly useful, inasmuch as these gentry supply much of the reactionary force upon which the Shah has depended for his coup d'état. It is, after all, in national character that we must look for the prime causes of national movements. Tradition, prejudice, and religion are the forces that change and modify the conditions of a people, and only by some intimate knowledge of the man in the street can we forecast the immediate future or predict the results either of internal development or of external aggression. This is precisely the information that Mr. Cresson gives to us, and it is impossible to read his book without appreciation of the light that it throws upon current events. Forty-seven illustrations from photographs are a valuable feature of a valuable book.

Present-Day Problems, by William H. Taft. Published by Dodd, Mead & Co., New York; $1.50.

It is evidence of no small amount of candor that such a book, covering as it does nearly the whole field of national affairs, should be published at this particular political juncture. The fifteen addresses of which the volume is composed were delivered in the course of a long term of years and to audiences widely differing in mental development, in political complexion, and even in nationality. They are now given to us without material revision, without any of the caution which a lesser man would allow to interfere with the free expression of opinion, without any reluctance to go upon positive record on the great disputed questions of the day. Mr. Taft's views on labor and capital, for example, or on criticisms directed against the Federal judiciary, are broadly the same as they were years ago, as unmodified by personal aspirations as their expression is unaffected by the petty diplomacies and prudences that would be all powerful with a man of smaller calibre.

The fifteen addresses are as follows: "Inaugural Address as Civil Governor of the Philippines," "The Inauguration of the Philippine Assembly," "China and Her Relations with the United States," "Japan and Her Relations with the United States," "An Appreciation of General Grant," "The Army of the United States," "The Panama Canal," "A Republican Congress and Administration and Their Work from 1904 to 1906," "The Legislative Policies of the Present Administration," "The Panic of 1907," "Southern Democracy and Republican Principles," "Labor and Capital," "The Achievements of the Republican Party," "Recent Criticism of the Federal Judiciary," "Administration of Criminal Law."

Mr. Taft always gives the impression—undoubtedly a true one—of a thorough mastery of his subject, of firm intention and deep conviction, and of a warm human sympathy in his relation to the movements of the day. Nowhere is there a trace of prejudice or of a failure to preserve the judicial temperament. His speech on the Panamal Canal is a masterly array of facts selected for their direct bearing on the problem and without reference to particular policies or their defense. The addresses on "Labor and Capital" and on "The Federal Judiciary" are the utterances of a strong man who looks courageously at the inevitable developments of modern tendencies and who is not afraid to warn us against the effects of caste and class discrimination. As a survey of modern problems and of the solution offered by conservative statecraft of a high order, Mr. Taft's book is opportune and unique.

The Physical Basis of Civilization, by T. W. Heineman. Published by Forbes & Co., Chicago; $1.25.

The contention elaborated by the author with ingenious argument and illustration may be briefly epitomized as follows:

Civilization, with the superior intelligence that accompanied it, is due to the erect attitude assumed by man as distinct from the non-erect brute kingdoms.

The erect attitude followed upon a variation in the entocuneiform bones of the posterior extremities and a shifting of the occipital foramen magnum to a position a little back of the centre of the base of the skull.

Superior intelligence then became necessary in order to compensate for the physical disadvantages attending the erect posture and for the largely increased vulnerability that followed upon the new attitude.

The anatomical variations producing this momentous change were so small in their nature that it is almost thinkable that they might have occurred in the transmission from one generation to another, producing immediately the aforesaid disabilities, perils, and infirmities. Our earliest brute ancestors must therefore have been similar to ourselves physically, while mentally they were like the brutes related to the quadrumana. The development of a compensating intelligence then became essential to their preservation from the dangers to which they were exposed by the erect attitude.

A theory so remarkable can hardly be criticized except at considerable length and after serious study. That it commends itself to many eminent scientists is, however, its protection against neglect or a too summary judgment, as also is its able presentation by the author.

Charles the Bold, by Ruth Putnam. Published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York; $1.50.

The appearance of this book is a reminder of a series of high historical value. The "Heroes of the Nations" series now contains forty-three volumes and there are nine more in preparation, all of them presenting the lives and work of representative historical characters who have, in the majority of instances, been accepted as types of the several national ideals. These books are popularly written and the illustrations are good.

So far, only one woman, Jeanne d'Arc, finds a place in the list, and there are no others in sight. But is not Queen Louisa of Prussia, for example, more worthy of this pantheon than Molke, and Queen Elizabeth of England than Marlborough?

Literary Criticism in the Renaissance, by J. E. Spongarn. Published by the Macmillan Company, New York; $1.50.

This valuable treatise was first published in 1899 and was translated into Italian in 1905. It is a study of the history of literary criticism in the Renaissance, of the reawakening of literary doctrine after its paralysis by religious influences. The development came first in Italy, passing thence into France, England, Spain, Germany, Portugal, Holland, and Scandinavia, each country furnishing its own cast, although that of France ultimately triumphed. The author traces the steps of the movement with great care and sufficiently establishes the debt of the modern literary world to Italy.

New Publications.

The American Book Company, New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago, has published "Chinese Fables and Folk Stories," by Mary Hayes Davis and Chow Leung, in the popular series of Eclectic Readings. Price, 40 cents.

"Santa Lucia," by Mary Austin, is a story of college life in California from the professorial standpoint. It is earnestly written, but the characters are singularly drah and uninteresting. It is published by Harper & Brothers, New York; $1.50.

A very pleasingly written book of travel is "Quicksteps Through Scandinavia, with a Retreat from Moscow," by S. G. Bayne, that has been published by Harper & Brothers, New York. The numerous full-page illustrations in tint are well selected and well reproduced.

From the Neale Publishing Company comes a volume of peculiar interest to the sportsman. It is by Alexander Hunter and it is entitled "The Huntsman in the South." Consisting entirely of personal narrative, the book has all the interest of a novel and too much can hardly be said in praise of its vivacity and the practical information that it embodies. The price is $1.50.

The American Book Company, New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago, has published a volume of "Selections from Schiller's Ballads and Lyrics," edited with notes and vocabulary by Lewis Addison Rhoades, Ph. D., with questions by Berthold Auerbach Eisenlohr, A. M. Price, 60 cents.

Those who are anxious to shine as short story writers should read "Stories New and Old," selected with introductions by Hamilton Wright Mahie and published by the Macmillan Company, New York. The selections are by William Austin, Charles Dickens, John Brown, Nathaniel Hawthorne, Edgar Allan Poe, Robert Louis Stevenson, J. Henry Short-house, Thomas Bailey Aldrich, James Lane Allen, and Owen Wister. The critical introductions are valuable and there can be little doubt that such a course of study as is indicated by this book would enable some at least of the great army of short-story writers to leave the worn-out rails of dullness and banality.

"I Never Dine Without It."

I find it gives an appetizing relish to an otherwise insipid dish. I like it on Soups, Stews and Hashes. It greatly improves Steaks, Roast Meats and Chops.

LEA & PERRINS

SAUCE

THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

Just a little on Cheese is a necessary finishing touch. Without it no Rarebit is complete. It is a good digestive.

Beware of Imitations.

John Duncan's Sons, Agents, New York.

By Daylight and All Rail to

Yosemite Valley

via

Southern Pacific

By way of Merced in connection with the Yosemite Valley R. R.

Only ten hours' ride to El Portal (the edge of the Valley) and three and one-half hours thence to the Heart of the Valley.

Low side trip rates to Wawona and the Mariposa grove of gigantic sequoias.

Leave San Francisco daily 8:20 a.m.

Ask any of our agents for details.

TICKET OFFICES
884 Market Street
Market Street Ferry Depot
14 Powell Street

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.

Princess Theatre habitués, and they are to be numbered by hundreds, were glad this week to see and hear Arthur Cunningham and Sarah Edwards in singing rôles once more. "The Bridal Trap," which is an abbreviated English version of one of Audran's lightest efforts, served that good purpose and some others. It introduced a new prima donna, Evelyn Frances Kellogg, who is plump and pleasing in appearance and who sings with pianissimo charm. It gave Zoe Barnett the opportunity that even the slightest part seems to offer her, to prove that her study is always sympathetic and sincere, her expression invariably distinct, her voice never failing in its appeal. It also furnished Frank Farrington with a comedy rôle that is not beyond his budding ability.

The revival of "The Song Birds" again gave prominence to the finished art of William Burruss. In the impersonation of Hammershine, the manager, he is far removed from the joyously incapable long-lost brother of "It Happened in Nordland," though the dialect of the two parts is the same. His method is quiet but always forceful, and there is an infinity of detail in each delineation. Oscar Apfel is hardly less happy in his rôle of Herr Con the Conried. The chorus is, as ever, powerful in pulchritude and harmony.

Beginning next Monday night, the New York musical comedy hit, "The Chaperons," will be brought out with the care and lavish appropriation that marks all Princess Theatre productions. William Burruss will appear as Algernon O'Shaughnessy, studying rapid transit in Paris, and May Boley will have a congenial rôle as Amaranthe Dedincourt. Evelyn Frances Kellogg will be Violet Smilax, and Oscar C. Apfel will personate Adam Hogg. Arthur Cunningham will have lyric opportunity as Signor Ricardo Bassini, proprietor of the Parisian Opera Company, and the remaining characters will be distributed as follows: Phrosia, Zoe Barnett; Jacqueline, a prima donna soprano in Bassini's company, Christina Nielsen; Hortense, contralto in Bassini's company, Sarah Edwards; Augustus, Walter de Leon; Schnitzel, Walter Catlett; Tom Schuyler, Charles E. Couture.

At the Van Ness Theatre "The Servant in the House" (reviewed at length in another column) will continue all next week.

White Whittlesey has proved a very popular star in the two costume plays presented during his engagement at the New Alcazar Theatre, and next week he will appear in modern costume, as "Raffles" is to be given. The play is in some respects even more striking and impressive than those in Mr. Whittlesey's repertoire that have preceded it, and it will undoubtedly try the seating capacity of the theatre. The star will appear in the rôle of the philosopher who steals for the love of the sport as much as for love of the spoils. Bessie Barriscale, Will R. Walling, Louise Brownell, Howard Hickman, John B. Maher, in brief, all the Alcazar favorites will be suitably cast, and the play will be given a fine treatment throughout.

The bill at the Orpheum next week contains several of the best acts in vaudeville. Ben Welch, the favorite comedian, will be the chief new feature. He introduces to his audiences the rough low caste but extremely witty and interesting Hebrew who belongs to the lower east side of New York, but is recognized in every locality, and the Italian laborer who is beheld working in the streets every day. Both impersonations are amusing, with a touch of the pathetic to add color and contrast. The Basque Quartet will also assist in the success of the coming programme. Their repertoire consists of songs from popular French and Italian operas. Wilbur Mack and Nella Walker will appear in a musical skit, entitled "The Girl and the Pearl." Miss Walker is an attractive actress and Mr. Mack is a versatile comedian who sings with expression several songs of his own composition. Fentelle and Carr will introduce an original act, Sadie Sherman will return for one week only with her skit, "Fun at the Photographers." Next week will be the last of the Tom Davies Trio in their act, "Motoring in Mid-Air," Martinette and Sylvester, and of the dancers, the Four Fords.

For the fifth week of his season at the Van Ness Theatre Henry Miller will make his appearance in the new comedy entitled "Mater." It is from the pen of Percy Mackaye and will receive its first production here. Isabel Irving has been specially engaged to play the leading feminine rôle.

Paul Bleyden, an American tenor, whose professional career has been spent in Europe, recently joined Savage's "Merry Widow" company in New York. Mr. Bleyden sang the rôle of Danilo in one of the companies presenting the operetta in Vienna, and has recently been the leading tenor at the Stadt Theatre, Berne, Switzerland. He sent from Europe to Mr. Savage a phonographic record of his rendition of a solo from "Faust," and on the strength of this record he was engaged to come back to his native country.

The scene of "Mrs. Tantalus," the light comedy which Phoebe Davies bought for her own use while abroad, is Constantinople; but the characters, save two or three incidental servants, are all either English or American. The title rôle is that of a well-born English woman, married to a prodigal young American, the volatile and reckless son of a two-fisted, hard-headed Western ranch owner. What is called in diplomatic cant an "international complication" is precipitated by the young husband's irreverent attitude toward Moslem customs.

LITERARY NOTES.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

Forty-eight of the artistic photographs taken by Arnold Genthe before the fire are reproduced to make up the illustrations for "Old Chinatown," a volume to be brought out soon by Moffat, Yard & Co. The descriptive text is by Will Irwin.

A volume of Caruso's clever sketches and caricatures of well-known people of the musical world has been brought out by La Follia di New York, a prominent Italian weekly paper.

It is suggested that President Roosevelt's story of his hunting adventures in the jungle will, of course, give him the 1910 Nobel literary prize.

The chapters of "The Reminiscences of Lady Randolph Churchill" published in the midsummer holiday number of the Century Magazine will deal entertainingly with the experiences and observations of a visit to Japan in 1894, during the war with China. The visit to Japan was part of a trip around the world, by way of New York, Vancouver, San Francisco, and Victoria.

T. P. O'Connor, the Irish parliamentary leader, has made an engagement to deliver a course of lectures in America during the coming season.

The preliminary fall announcement of the Macmillan Company promises a posthumous novel by "Ouida."

Alice Stopford Green is receiving high praise for her recently published history, "The Making of Ireland and Its Undoing: 1200-1600." Mrs. J. R. Green is to be thanked for her studies and their result. She writes with the same eye for living and picturesque detail that makes her husband's great work the most popular of all histories of the English people. Her industry is amazing, as the footnotes referring to the abundance of material she has sifted and assimilated show.

Tolstoy has completed a new novel, "After the Ball," the fundamental idea of which is the regeneration of love. The work is not to be published till after the writer's death.

On the recent occasion of the eighty-ninth birthday celebration of Julia Ward Howe the only one of her children who was unable to be present was Maud Howe Elliott. After spending two years in Spain with her artist husband, John Elliott, Mrs. Elliott is at present in Rome, where she is completing a book on Spain, which Little, Brown & Co. announce for fall publication.

Mr. and Mrs. John Vance Cheney have sailed for Europe, where they expect to spend a vacation of three months. In October Thomas B. Mosher expects to bring out a volume of love songs by Mr. Cheney, entitled "In the Time of Roses."

The house in which the late Thomas Bailey Aldrich lived during his boyhood, in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, has been opened as a memorial museum under the auspices of the Aldrich Memorial Association, restored to its former condition. This is the old "Nutter House," the scene of the poet's famous book, "The Story of a Bad Boy." The house looks now exactly as it did at the time of Mr. Aldrich's earliest associations with it, even to the most minute arrangement of the queer, old-fashioned furniture, which the book describes. In addition to this restoration, a fireproof building has been erected, in which have been placed the poet's collection of relics, autographs, and first editions.

Fifth Concert at the Greek Theatre.

The fifth of the series of popular concerts in the Greek Theatre at Berkeley will be given Saturday evening of this week, with the Third United States Artillery Band again playing the programme. Professor William Dallam Armes, chairman of the musical and dramatic committee of the University of California, under whose personal direction the concerts were arranged and have been given, has been warmly congratulated for having provided this ideal summer season of music at popular prices. The response of the public has shown that his idea was timely.

The programme for the concert this week is one of especial merit. Among other numbers it will contain the "Oberon" overture by Weber, a selection from "La Traviata," the prelude to "The Deluge," and Paderewski's famous minuet. The classical selections will be alternated with popular numbers, and during the evening another stirring descriptive piece, entitled "The Indian War Dance," will be played. Bandmaster Armand Putz will again lead the concert. The advance demand for seats indicates a large audience.

The Wind that Shakes the Barley.

There's music in my heart all day,
I hear it late and early,
It comes from fields so far away,
The wind that shakes the barley.
Ochone!

Above the uplands drenched with dew
The sky bangs soft and pearly,
An emerald world is listening to
The wind that shakes the barley.
Ochone!

Above the bluest mountain crest
The lark is singing rarely,
It rocks the singer into rest,
The wind that shakes the barley.
Ochone!

Oh, still through summers and through springs
It calls me late and early.
Come home, come home, come home, it sings,
The wind that shakes the barley.
Ochone!

—Katharine Tynan Hinkson.

The Cabinet, an informal organization of prominent public men that was one of the features of old San Francisco, has been revived, and now holds its jolly meetings at a round table in the café of the Hotel St. Francis every day at luncheon. Prominent among the members are James H. O'Brien, Samuel Shortridge, Charles Shortridge, Postmaster Arthur Fisk, Theodore F. Bonnet, Garrett McEnerney, Louis Rosenthal, John J. Barrett, John Drumm, Frank Drew, Jeremiah Burke, Charles Heggerty, Edward H. Hamilton, and ex-Governor James H. Budd.

On Friday evening, June 24, there will be given a musicale at Hotel Del Monte, and among those now on the programme are Mr. Charles Trowbridge, tenor, who sings in the Trinity Church choir of San Francisco; Miss Agatha Grey Cummings, contralto; Mrs. Emeretta Sybrant, lyric soprano; Mr. Harry Lawrence, bass; Mrs. Mary Weaver McCauley, soprano; Miss Adele Davis, accompanist. This with the regular weekly dance on Saturday night is sure to prove enjoyable to those from the city who go down for weekend vacations.

A Paris journalist has devoted his energies toward perfecting statistics to show where the theatre is most popular. His figures show that—which is no surprise—the land of unbounded possibilities comes first. In New York, the American metropolis, the theatres have a seating capacity of 123,795. Then comes London, with 120,950, and Paris takes third place, with 83,331.

J. F. TWIST, DENTIST, 1476 Eddy Street, near Fillmore. Phone West 304.

NOW AT
15 KEARNY STREET
PHONE DOUGLAS 2219

Eugene Korn
THE HATTER
ESTABLISHED TWENTY YEARS

UPTOWN STORE
926 VAN NESS AVENUE

Byron
Hot Springs

The waters cure rheumatism—the environment is perfect—the hotel comfortable and supplied with an unexcelled table. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, ground floor, James Flood Building; Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market St., or address hotel.

John F. Forbes
Certified Public Accountant
601 KOHL BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO

Bonestell, Richardson & Co.
PAPER
The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us.
CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE
118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna, San Francisco.

Hotel Collingwood
35th St., bet. 5th Ave. and Broadway
NEW YORK CITY
New fireproof hotel located in the shopping and theatre district, containing every modern device for comfort of guests.
Positively exclusive. Service à la carte.

EDUCATIONAL

IRVING INSTITUTE Boarding and Day School for Girls
2126 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

Music, languages, art, elocution. Kindergarten, primary, grammar, high school, and advanced grades. Accredited by the universities. Twenty-ninth year. Non-sectarian. Pupils admitted at any time. New term opens Monday, August 3.

MISS ELIA M. PINKHAM, Principal.
CALIFORNIA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
Irving Institute Building
Full corps of teachers in every department. Send for catalogue.
HERMANN GENSS, President.

THE HAMLIN SCHOOL

A Boarding and Day School for Girls
Miss Hamlin announces the reopening of the school August 10. It is accredited by the California Universities and by Eastern colleges. Advanced courses of study are offered to High School graduates and to those who have left school, with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to a school diploma.
Classes in Instrumental and Vocal Music and in Drawing and Painting are formed and facilities are given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basket Ball, etc. For particulars address
MISS HAMLIN,
2230 Pacific Ave., San Francisco.

Oakland Conservatory of Music

1170 Madison Street, Oakland, Cal.
The largest, oldest established, and most thoroughly equipped school of genuine musical instruction on the Pacific Coast.
Conducted on the lines of the most noted European and Eastern schools.
Full prospectus on application.
Director, ADOLF GREGORY.

MANZANITA HALL

Palo Alto, Cal.
Prepares boys for the universities or business life. Ample grounds. Three buildings. Illus. catalogue. 16th year. Opens Aug. 24.
J. LEROY DIXON, Principal.

BERKELEY PREPARATORY SCHOOL

Boarding and Day School for Boys
2207 Dwight Way, Berkeley, Cal.
Fall term opens August 24
J. H. WHITE, Principal

SNELL SEMINARY 2721 Channing Way Berkeley

Girls' boarding and day school. Certificate admits to University of California, Stanford, and Eastern colleges. Opens August 10. Superb location. Outdoor life.
MRS. EDNA SNELL POULSON, Principal

MILLS COLLEGE FOR YOUNG WOMEN

Only Woman's College on Pacific Coast. Offers same advantages as best Eastern institutions. Full Collegiate course. Degrees conferred. For three years only, the three upper classes of the Seminary Department, offering preparation for Mills College, the Universities and Eastern Colleges, will be continued. (Accredited.) Special opportunities in Domestic Science, Music and Art. Earnest Christian influences; non-sectarian; all forms of healthful outdoor amusements. Ideal location in beautiful Oakland hills. Fall term begins August 12, 1908. For Catalog and Brochure of views address,
MRS. C. T. MILLS, President, Mills College P. O., California

OGONTS SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES

Twenty minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. The late Mr. Jay Cooke's fine property. Miss SYLVIA J. EASTMAN, Miss ABBY A. SUTHERLAND, Principals.

CASTILLEJA SCHOOL

Palo Alto, California
Home and day school for girls. University preparatory. Outdoor physical training a special feature. Opens August 24. Illustrated catalogue.
MISS MARY I. LOCKEY, A. B., Principal.

FREE KINDERGARTEN NORMAL SCHOOL

Golden Gate Kindergarten Association
(Accredited by State Board of Education)
MISS VIRGINIA FITCH, President
MISS ANNA M. STOVALL, Principal
Address: 1844 Polk Street

Mild, Rich
and Satisfying

Sanchez y Haya

Clear Havana
Cigars

Factory No. 1 Tampa, Fla.

Tillmann & Bendel
Pacific Slope Distributors

"THE SERVANT IN THE HOUSE."

By Josephine Hart Phelps.

The green curtain was down. I knew it would be. I felt it in my bones. And for why? Because some people had heard those fearful words, religion, righteousness, spirituality. And people in the mass prefer skirt dances, the topical song, and the jest evoking that particular kind of loud laugh that speaks the vacant mind.

Society was absent. The helles and the beaux whose names appear in the columns of fashionable gossip did not turn out in their gala fuss and feathers. And again, for why? Because there is something in "The Servant in the House" about the brotherhood of man. And society doesn't care a fillip of its little finger for the brotherhood of man. As a general thing, nobody does, save the brother that is down in the dust of defeat.

But this is cynicism, cheap cynicism, and one should not be cynical after seeing "The Servant in the House." It is a play that would make excellent reading, but it is really a marvel that it ever won its way on the stage before the irreverent, jest-loving American public.

Well, it is quite evident, in spite of all our laughter, our jests, our frivolities, that we love moral cleanliness, and the Christ-like spirituality and purity that does not turn an averted face sternly away from the struggles of the muck, "the drain-men" who must do the world's menial work.

"The Servant in the House" is not a sermon, but it is an allegory cast in dramatic form that amounts to one. Then there are no exhortations in it, but "Manson"—you perceive the inference to be drawn from the name—when he is moved by the spirit of righteous wrath toward hypocrisy and time-serving, draws for the deaf ears and purblind eyes of the grasping Bishop Makeshite a word-picture that is truly eloquent of the great church to be builded for all humanity, whose music is the heart-throbs of the people. For this play, that won its way in the East, and captured typical audiences accustomed only to the rapid and the sentimental style of drama, exalts the lowly, and shames those placed on high. It advocates brotherhood, true brotherhood, the kind that makes comrades of the menial and the master, when their souls are in harmony.

It sounds heavy and solemn, and rather alarming. "Everyman," I remember, which is also an allegory of spiritual meaning, was very impressive, but scarcely calculated to convey the idea of cheerful entertainment. The audience, weighed down and oppressed by a consideration of the conventions which usually prevail in a religious house, would not permit themselves to applaud. But in "The Servant in the House" there is many a hearty laugh possible. The author has handled with a superior comedy sense and a splendid insight into the hearts of the toiling half of humanity the scenes between the reverend but ill-revered hishop and the surly drainman, who offers, as his excuse for the perversion of his naturally good instincts. "You can't be very sweet and perlitte on eighteen hoh a week."

Yes, the laughter may have his laugh; a sound, wholesome one, that does his heart good. And a hearty ringing one, that springs from a sense of amusement so deep as even to spill over into the succeeding scenes. There are even oaths in "The Servant in the House," good, resounding ones. Indeed, I think that quite the funniest swear I ever heard swore was when Smith impetuously seized the hishop's ear-trumpet, disrespectfully blew through its sacred channel in travesty of its owner's pompous fussiness, and said "Did you ever 'ear of 'ell? H, E, double L, 'ell? Then go there!" and abruptly left the episcopal presence.

But the dominating motive of the play is that of a sacred presence, come to help struggling souls, by clearing away hypocrisy, lies, and the arrogant prejudices that obscure the way to true brotherhood. The whole idea is allegorically presented, but the dramatic form in which it is cast is so superior, the scenes so well cast, and the story so moving and so appreciative of the needs of humanity, that no one need dread churchly severity or religious solemnity.

The idea of the waning brotherhood of man is conveyed by the separation and division of interests that have arisen between three brothers of obscure origin. One, the Bishop of Benares, comes as "the servant in the house" to the home of his brother, the vicar. Dressed in the Indian costume, with flowing robes and sleeves, his hair curling freely around his head, and his thin, bearded face full of wan shadows, there was more than a suggestion of a resemblance to the pictures of Christ. Those who saw James O'Neill in the "Passion Play" during its brief and law-interrupted run of a week a-many years ago used to say that the actor played his part with a sense of deep reverence.

Walter Hampden, too, I fancy, feels a sense of reverence for the sacredly symbolical character he portrays. Actors are deeply susceptible, sensitive, and impressionable, else bow, indeed, could they act? Mr. Hampden has also an unusually fine, musical voice, and the kind of articulation that can make itself perfectly distinct even when the speaker's back is turned. His impersonation was most praiseworthy, and there were times when he rose above his usual level, as when he raised his hand in sorrowful blessing above the head of the woman who repents of her worldliness.

Still, while one can but commend work that is so highly commendable, I do not think that Mr. Hampden is sufficiently inspiring for the rôle. He is a thought too measured, the cadences of his fine voice are too consciously employed. In comparing him to Tyrone Power as the laborer, I find that the latter seemed more the true man than Mr. Hampden seemed the true priest—or, to speak more exactly, the human representative of a divine authority. But, truly, his work at all times is so excellent that criticism seems like hypercriticism. Perhaps if the shape of his head, the outline of his chin, better satisfied one's æsthetic standards by conforming more to classical ideals, if the real physiognomy, under the stage make-up, would not at times bring its reminder of mere mortality, thus blurring the picture, criticism might be muzzled, so easily is it diverted by mere beauty. Nevertheless, physically and spiritually, the actor gave a striking, consistent, and what will prove popularly satisfying conception of a beautiful rôle. What was the best thing in his portrayal was his ability to win the audience to a completeness of acceptance of the Benares hishop as that of a sacred, or semi-sacred, character. Toward this result the author, Charles Rann Kennedy—who, by the way, was present and made a brief speech of thanks—also assisted by the excellence of the lines that belong to the Indian hishop. There is always perceptible the spirit of brotherhood, the righteous wrath toward hypocrisy, worldliness, and greed, and the absence of cant and pretense.

The two other leading male characterizations, those of Tyrone Power and Arthur Lewis, were absolutely perfect. With his splendid height and hrawn, his thick, tumbled hair and strong features, Mr. Power seemed the epitome of the rude, unlettered strength of the toilers. He omitted not a detail of the outward appearance and manner of the laborer: his uncouth attitudes, his explosive earnestness, his roughened voice, his illiterate speech.

In wonderful contrast was Mr. Lewis's Lancashire hishop, the unctuous, money-grasping hypocrite, blind and deaf to all the noble possibilities in the hearts of his sorrowful brothers. A remarkable characterization it was, so remarkable that, as occasionally happens, the actor was able, for a time, to make us forget that the dignitary before us was not, in truth, the most reverend, the Lord Bishop of Lancashire.

A most delightfully acted scene was that in which the lord hishop sat affably down to breakfast with Smith the drain man, in his purblind folly mistaking the latter for his brother the vicar. With these two consum-mate actors working the scene out, the blind hishop with his ear-trumpet turning every utterance to suit his natural conception of things, the workman blowing out rumblings and snorts of defiance and insult, the effect was so fundamentally and richly humorous that even across the calm, ascetic countenance of the Benares hishop a wan, fleeting smile could be seen.

For the author has won his way to hearts by just such hits of realism as that. He does not put the inferred divinity of his main character upon a high shrine and approach it kneeling, but makes it a part of the daily life and daily service represented.

The Benares hishop, entering the house of his brother as a servant, gives perfect service. He gives food, counsel, and a brother's encouraging hand-clasp to his unrecognized brother. He smiles, sadly, it is true, but with human appreciation, at the spectacle of the humors that must and will arise in every human happening. He catches the page-hoy stealing jam, and administers a rebuke to that bewildered youth, who, cleverly acted by Galwey Herbert, typifies the smug, self-satisfied portion of humanity which, being well fed and sheltered, is satisfied with its conventions, and outraged when they are disturbed.

Edmund Rann Kennedy, presumably a brother of the author, acted, well at times, and too stably at others, the vicar whose soul is struggling toward the light.

The only two female characters were beautifully acted by Edith Wynne Matthison and Gladys Wynne. From the resemblance of voice it is evident that these two charming actresses are related. Edith Wynne Matthison won her first American spurs as Everyman. The acclaiming East then held her, and she did not come out this way with the Ben Greet players. The voice and elocution so often and so highly praised deserve it well. Miss Matthison is also a sympathetic actress, of excellent presence, and gifted with unusual grace of attitude and gesture. Her sister—I suppose—has also a beautiful voice of clear silver, and her delivery of her lines is as if every syllable were cut in crystal. It isn't her Englishness, because—well, look at Edith Oliver. I wish a few of the New York favorites would take pattern from the delightful speech of these two gifted women, who so beautifully contribute to the success of "The Servant in the House." Miss Wynne, as Mary, was like a fragrant flower of childhood. No doubt she is a grown woman, but she is so simple, so girl-like, so uninsistent of personal charm, that she was able to make us forget it.

The last scene forms a fitting climax to the spirit of such a play, and brings the healing dew of wholesome sympathy to the eyes. The poor workman, who has hartered away "the immediate jewel of his soul," has it again pressed to his heart. Brothers are clasping the hands of brothers, worldliness has doffed its vesture of scorn, and with tear-shining eyes looks on with sympathy at the helpful union of the lofty and the lowly.

If you looked aloft you might have seen here and there that there were young workmen in the audience who wept. They, too, perhaps, like Robert Smith, had known the bitterness of working at foul drains, and in unclean places and had found it hard to be "sweet and perlitte on eighteen hoh a week." Their tears were an indication of how deeply the audience were moved—so deeply, in fact, that they lingered in their seats to relieve their hearts by a demonstration which was unusual, not only from its being made at all at such a time, but from its extreme heartiness.

AMUSEMENTS

GREEK THEATRE BERKELEY CAMPUS

Under the auspices of the Musical and Dramatic Committee of the University of California

SATURDAY EVENING, JULY 25th the famous

THIRD UNITED STATES ARTILLERY BAND

in fifth POPULAR CONCERT

Admission 25 cents 8 to 10 p. m.

ORPHEUM ELLIS STREET NEAR FILLMORE Absolutely Class A Theatre Building

Week beginning this Sunday afternoon

Matinee Every Day

ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE

BEN WELCH; BASQUE GRAND OPERA QUARTETTE; WILBUR MACK, assisted by NELLA WALKER; FENTELE AND CARR; SADIE SHERMAN; TOM DAVIES TRIO; MARTINETTE AND SYLVESTER; NEW ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES. Last week of the FOUR FORDS.

Evening prices, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box seats, $1. Matinee prices (except Sundays and Holidays), 10c, 25c, 50c. Phone WEST 6000.

PRINCESS THEATRE Ellis Street near Fillmore

S. LOVERICH, Manager Class "A" Theatre Phone West 663

Matinee Saturday and Sunday

Last Two Nights

THE BRIDAL TRAP and THE SONG BIRDS

BEGINNING NEXT MONDAY NIGHT The New York Musical Comedy Hit

THE CHAPERONS

WILLIAM BURRESS, MAY BOLEY ARTHUR CUNNINGHAM, and All the Princess Favorites in the Cast

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Tel. West 6036

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers Corner Sutter and Steiner Sts. Absolute Class "A" bldg.

Seventy-Second Week of the Alcazar Stock Co.

Commencing Monday, July 27

MR. WHITE WHITTLESEY

Supported by the Alcazar Players in Eugene W. Presbrey's Dramatization of E. W. Hornung's Stories

Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman

Prices—Evenings, 25c to $1. Matinees, Saturday and Sunday, 25c to 50c.

Monday, August 3, MR. WHITTLESEY in "THE PRISONER OF ZENDA."

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove St.

Phone Market 500

Monday, July 27—Last Six Nights

Matinees Wednesday and Saturday

The Henry Miller Associate Players

In the Greatest Play of the Age

THE SERVANT IN THE HOUSE

Last Time Next Saturday Night

August 3—HENRY MILLER in the new comedy, "MATER."

Vacation Questions Quickly Settled

Call or write to Dept. Ad. 948 Flood Building for literature and beautifully illustrated booklets on California Resorts and Outing Places.

ROWING—BATHING—FISHING—CAMPING—EXCELLENT HOTELS

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

TICKET OFFICES

884 Market St., 14 Powell St., Ferry Depot

VANITY FAIR.

How deliciously direct are some of the methods employed by effete Europe of disposing of its surplus stock of marriageable maidens. Of this commodity there is a surplus stock everywhere. In the great cities it is partly absorbed by business and in the various avocations that women are making their own, but at what a cost in maternal yearnings and in the starvation of more seemingly and more natural aspirations.

In some of the villages of Belgium the young women are still so unspoiled by the conventions of civilization that when they want to be married they are not ashamed to say so. At Ecaussines-Lalaing, for example, they hold an annual fair, a sort of reception, at which the marriageable young women are the hosts and the would-be Benedicts of the country are the guests. A great many men who have no intention to be married come also, actuated no doubt by the possibilities of fun, but they are like poor, foolish flies who flutter around the light just to see what it feels like. They little know the charms of the maidens of Ecaussines-Lalaing or the compelling power of imitation or contagion. All too many of them come to scoff, but alas they remain to pray or rather to return to their homes accompanied by substantial samples of the finest produce of the little Belgian village.

At least twenty thousand people attended the fête that has just been held. Five thousand of them were bachelors, said to be impressionable, and while the final trade returns are not yet to hand, it is said that the catch was a record one. At least, there was "more enthusiasm" than ever before.

We do not see how there could be anything else than enthusiasm. Fancy being met at the train by a bevy of young girls, all of them open to eligible offers, all of them clothed in village modesty and their best behavior, eager to show the sights of the town, with special emphasis on the town-hall, where so many maidens have been married as a reward of enterprise, without doubt to live happily ever afterwards, or at least to suppress all evidences to the contrary. And if the pilgrimage of sight-seeing under such auspices is not enough, if there should still be reluctance, then there is the feast of truly Arcadian simplicity that should surely loosen the avowal that must be already trembling on the lips. After the luncheon there was a speech by the eighteen-year-old president of the Spinsters' Society, a speech extolling matrimony in such glowing phrases that he who would resist its charm must surely have a heart of adamant. That the fair orator had no practical knowledge of her subject mattered not at all. She was good to look upon, and when she finished she was overwhelmed with flowers—and it may be hoped—proposals. And then there was the evening ball, and that must have completed the rout of the male heart. It must have been a case of abject surrender, and so indeed it was in very many cases, for the fortunate maidens were in no way backward in making known their success, but not, let us hope, with any malice for those who had drawn blanks and for whom we may wish a "better luck next time."

The present Duke of Wellington, whose financial embarrassments have been reported from London, is in the unfortunate position of having inherited a title—indeed, many titles—without the wherewithal to sustain them. When the first Duke of Wellington overthrew Napoleon he did a very good thing for himself as well as for his country. He was awarded the sum of $2,000,000 by the nation or rather by the government of the day, and he was also presented with the estate of Strathfieldsaye and a pension of $25,000 a year. The soldiers, who were not without their share in that "famous victory," were rewarded on a less liberal scale, if, indeed, they were rewarded at all.

But the pension was not granted in perpetuity. It was limited to three generations, and that the present duke happens to be the fourth generation is a sufficient explanation of his present impecuniosity. The title also should have been limited to three generations, and the latest holder of the title could then have sunk back into the ranks of the "great unwashed" and we should not have been distressed by the spectacle of a real live duke in distress for lack of money. It is true those of lesser estate are often in the same predicament, but a great title is usually associated with wealth, and it is distressing to see them thus divorced. But, after all, it was not the present duke who overthrew Napoleon nor does it seem that he has done anything else especially to endear him to his nation.

But he is by no means an insignificant figure. Quiet, modest, and unassuming, the Duke of Wellington is a scientist of no mean order. His love of chemistry drew him into intimate association with Lord Salisbury, who was himself a practical chemist of high attainments. The Duke of Wellington has never done anything to lessen the prestige of the name that he bears, and if he has now fallen upon evil days he will meet with a hearty sympathy from those who know him best.

There is a curious obligation laid upon the Duke of Strathfieldsaye. With each anniversary of the battle of Waterloo he must present to the king a French flag such as was carried by Napoleon to that disastrous field, and the ceremony has never been neglected from that day to this. Curiously enough, the tenure of Blenheim, the seat of the Duke of Marlborough, who married Consuelo Vanderbilt, is subject to a like condition. A flag must be presented to the king upon every anniversary of the great fight.

Another remarkable ceremony attaching to the hereditary Duke of Wellington is the right to remain covered in the presence of the King of Spain. This right was recently exercised by the present duke, although it is very certain that the first of that title never availed himself of the privilege, or indeed any other privilege that involved participation in rites and ceremonies—if he could possibly keep out of them.

The fact that the Prince of Wales has lately been the guest of the Duke of Northumberland has attracted some attention to the story of a great, aristocratic house popularly supposed to contain the bluest of all the blue blood to be found in England. If there is anything more exclusive, more typical, of the "old nobility" than the family of Percy, we have yet to hear of it.

But a little examination of the archives brings with it a sad disillusionment. The house of Percy is indeed an ancient one, but where now are we to find the house of Percy? When Josceline, eleventh Earl of Northumberland, died in Turin, in 1670, he left no male heir, and by all right and reason the line became extinct.

But the earldom of Northumberland was too good a thing to be lost in that way. Charles II, by those truly royal favors dispensed by him with such a lavish hand, had many children who were horn without those rigid formalities demanded by the Puritanism of earlier and later days. Among them were the three sons of the beautiful Duchess of Cleveland, and as some provision had to be made for royal, if tainted, blood, the third of these three sons became the Duke of Northumberland. He had not, of course, a single drop of the original Percy blood. He was an illegitimate parvenu and one of the many outward and visible signs of the lowest point ever reached by an English royal family.

But the line again became extinct in 1716, and, to make a long story short, it was again revived in 1749. By this time, it will be seen, we are getting down to very recent years and the "old nobility" has suffered sadly in the process. In the year 1749 the title was given to Sir Hugh Smithson, a Yorkshire baronet, and as the worthy Smithson knew a good thing when he saw it, he promptly changed his name to Percy and became Duke of Northumberland, Lord Lovaine, and Baron of Alnwick. He was by no means a had sort of man, but that is not the point. The point is that he had no more hereditary right to the name of Percy or to the dukedom of Northumberland than the present writer.

George III knew the exact value of the title in his day, and he made no secret of his knowledge. When the so-called duke asked the king for the Order of the Garter his majesty demurred, and was reminded by the petulant claimant that it was the first occasion that the Garter had been refused to a Percy. "True," replied the king, "and it is the first time that a Smithson has asked for it."

The hereditary privileges of the Dukes of Northumberland are not confined entirely to this life. They have also the right to be buried in Westminster Abbey, and if we could but see their innermost convictions we should probably find among them a certainty that a specially reserved seat in immediate proximity to the Throne of Grace is also among their privileges.

It seems that the present year is the centennial of waltzing, and as such it is to be duly honored by a grand celebration at the Paris Opera House. Just a hundred years ago the soldiers of Napoleon found the peasants of Thuringia dancing a dance quite strange to the capitals of Europe, but that commended itself to those gallant warriors because of the close contact between the partners. The Frenchmen had never seen such a thing as that before and it did not take them long to learn the new movement. When they returned to Paris the waltz came with them and its introduction to Europe was an accomplished fact.

But it would seem from inquiries made by the New Orleans Times-Democrat that the waltz has an older European history than that and that its arrival in Paris a hundred years ago was its second appearance. So at least says Charles Malherbe, the archivist of the Paris Grand Opera, who avows that the waltz is entirely French and of an unmeasured antiquity:

"In the twelfth century," says Malherbe, "the waltz was known in Provence—and called the volta. Then, it was not only danced, but sung while dancing. The song was the ballada; and we must admit it to have been pompous and slow, with as much of the minuet as of the waltz as we know it."

"Under Louis XII (year 1500) the waltz-volta was brought up to Paris, where it remained in vogue at the court all through the sixteenth century. Would we recognize it as the waltz? I think so. Certainly its music was in waltz time."

At the beginning of the article in the Times-Democrat we find a reference, the elucidation of which is reserved for the conclusion. We are told that the French patriots are no more willing to admit that the waltz originated in Germany than are those of Boston to admit that "The Boston" had its rise in San Diego, California.

Does such an honor really belong to the southernmost city of the State? It would seem so, and certainly San Diego is beautiful enough to be the mother of all beautiful things, including beautiful dances. Here is the story as given by the Times-Democrat:

It may be put down for certain that the waltz-story is to have a very American ending—whose beginning is to be in San Diego, California, because no one connected with either the Paris Grand Opera or high Parisian society is ignorant of the high works of our own Washington Lopp! Some thirteen years ago the late Henri Plucque, then régisseur of the Grand Opera ballet, wrote to his confrère of the Metropolitan, New York, for some one to teach his coryphées step-dances in view of "La Kerrigane," whose wooden-shoe dance lasts twenty minutes.

In reply from New York there arrived Mr. Lopp, . . . who taught the lovely creatures clogs, jigs, hornpipes, and sand-dances in variety through a whole year.

By the time his Grand Opera ballet lessons were over, the young American had caught the Paris fever. At first his private pupils were mostly professionals, like Otero, Cléo de Mérode, Muria, and Guerrero. Then came half a dozen Paris dancing masters and mistresses to learn to teach the Newport, the waltz-lancers, the Washington—and, above all, the Boston, danced and talked of continually by the Americans of the colony.

Then came the children of Americans and English; and when they brought word back to their parents that this nice young Mr. Lopp was the inventor of the Boston, both the colonies and high Parisian society began to pile in on the classes, until today all the swell youth of the gay capital has passed through them, from the children of the Baronne Alphonse de Rothschild to those of the late Casimir-Périer, from those of the young Duchesse d'Uzès to the Princesse Colonna's, the Duchesse de Grammont's, the Princesse de Wagram's, and the kids of the British embassy.

Mr. Lopp is today proprietor of the million-dollar Washington Palace, just off the Champs Elysées, where come off nightly some of the swellest functions of the capital. Rich French, Americans, and English rent it, complete, for a hall, with its vast dancing floor, its many salons, dressing-rooms, supper-rooms, and ultra-modern kitchens; and while it would not be seemly for such a private enterprise to get advertisement from the Grand Opera's Waltz-Centennial, M. Messager swears that he will put in the Boston dip and the historic San Diego incident, as all Parisian society believes it.

"The Boston as danced in Parisian society," says Mr. Lopp, in a recent interview, "is not the Boston dip, of course, you know. When quite a young fellow, I ran off and joined a minstrel company. At San Diego, where it stranded, I set up a dancing class—and there we, I and my pupils, evolved the Boston as I have taught it in Paris."

Here, then, is fame for San Diego, California, if, indeed, San Diego needs any more fame than its own matchless natural graces have given to it.

A physician makes the following suggestions for the benefit of ladies afflicted with the summer sale complaint:

- (1) Eat a moderate but substantial breakfast, and take your time over it.
- (2) Ride, if you can, to your first destination. Start the fray fresh.
- (3) Don't try to visit thirteen shops in a single day. Leave one or two for another week.
- (4) Remember lunch.
- (5) Take a hot bath on your return home, slip on a dressing-gown and eat only a light supper.
- (6) Don't talk "sales" to your husband for more than an hour.
- (7) Be philosophic, be patient, and be kind. Remember there are other pebbles on the beach.

"The learned counsel for the defense," said the plaintiff's attorney, "appears to be afraid of losing his case. Otherwise, why isn't he ready to go on?" "I've got a good excuse," replied counsel for the defense. "Nonsense! Ignorance of the law excuses no one."—Philadelphia Press.

"Have you ever been arrested for speeding?" "No," answered the chauffeur. "But I think it's because the police in the town where I worked had a grudge against me and wanted to keep me from ever getting a job running a swell car for a real sport."—Louisville Herald.

W. & J. SLOANE

SUMMER FURNITURE

Old Hickory,
Willow and
Prairie Grass
Furniture for Verandas and
Summer Homes

Van Ness and Sutter

BACK EAST

EXCURSIONS

ROUND TRIP RATES

Atchison, Kas. $60.00	Kansas City, Mo. . . $60.00	Omaha, Neb. $60.00
Baltimore, Md. 107.50	Leavenworth, Kas. . . 60.00	Pacific Junction, Ia. . 60.00
Boston, Mass. 110.50	Memphis, Tenn. 67.50	Philadelphia, Pa. . . . 108.50
Chicago, Ill. 72.50	Mincola, Tex. 60.00	Sioux City, Ia. 63.90
Council Bluffs, Ia. . . 60.00	Minneapolis, Minn. . 73.50	St. Joseph, Mo. 60.00
Duluth, Minn. 79.50	New Orleans, La. . . . 67.50	St. Louis, Mo. 67.50
Houston, Tex. 60.00	New York, N. Y. . . . 108.50	St. Paul, Minn. 73.50
		Washington, D. C. . . 107.50

On Sale July 28-29. August 17-18-24-25. September 15-16.

Colorado Springs, Colo., $55.00; Denver, Colo., $55.00; Pueblo, Colo., $55.00.
On Sale September 14-15.

Montreal, Que., $108.50; Toronto, Canada, $94.40.
On Sale July 28-29, August 17-18-24-25.

Let me make your sleeping-car reservation early and explain details.

F. W. PRINCE, C. T. A., 673 Market Street

J. J. WARNER, 1112 Broadway, Oakland

ITS QUALITY UNEQUALED EXCELLENCE UNSURPASSED

ITS QUALITY UNEQUALED EXCELLENCE UNSURPASSED

LIQUEUR Pères Chartreux
—GREEN AND YELLOW—

This famous cordial, now made at Tarragona, Spain, was for centuries distilled by the Carthusian Monks (Pères Chartreux) at the Monastery of La Grande Chartreuse, France, and known throughout the world as Chartreuse. The above cut represents the bottle and label employed in the putting up of the article since the Monks' expulsion from France, and it is now known as Liqueur Pères Chartreux (the Monks, however, still retain the right to use the old bottle and label as well) distilled by the same order of Monks, who have securely guarded the secret of its manufacture for hundreds of years, taking it with them at the time they left the Monastery of La Grande Chartreuse, and who, therefore, alone possess a knowledge of the elements of this delicious nectar. No Liqueur associated with the name of the Carthusian Monks (Pères Chartreux) and made since their expulsion from France is genuine except that made by them at Tarragona, Spain.

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafés, Bätjer & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N. Y. Sole Agents for United States.

S. F. and North Pacific 5%
Market St. 1st Con. 5%
Cal. Central Gas and El. 5%
Sacramento El. Gas and Ry. 5%

And OTHER HIGH GRADE BONDS

SUTRO & CO. BROKERS

412 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.

We have a Direct Wire to N. Y.

THIS IS TO REMIND
users of Labels, Cartons, Lithographing and Color Printing
that our Office and Factory is again located at the old stand
SECOND AND BRYANT STS. SAN FRANCISCO
Schmidt Lithograph Co.
35th YEAR

Connecticut Fire Insurance Company
Established 1850 OF HARTFORD

Total Assets$5,817,423
Surplus to Policy-Holders..... 2,118,394

BENJAMIN J. SMITH
Manager Pacific Department
518 CALIFORNIA STREET
San Francisco

GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.

ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE EFFECTED

312 California Street. Phone Douglas 2283
San Francisco, Cal.

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

Chopin hated playing at social festivities. To a lady who, after the dinner, asked him to play he melancholically answered: "Is it really necessary? I only ate so little."

Few possess the quickness of thought and action characteristic of the costermonger's wife who exclaimed: "She said I wasn't a lady, she did, and the next minute I 'ad 'er 'ead in the gutter."

The automobile halted before the general store of the village. The owner-chauffeur alighted and accosted a drowsy clerk. "I want a linen duster," he said. "I am very sorry," said the clerk, "but we are just out of linen dusters. I can let you have a nice feather duster!"

Once that genial comedian, the late Peter Dailey, consulted an oculist about his eyes. His nose was small and he couldn't keep on the glasses with which the oculist was trying to fit him. "You are not used to glasses, Mr. Dailey," said the oculist. "Oh, yes I am," replied Mr. Dailey, "but not so high up."

A Scotch laboring man, who had married a rich widow, exceptional for her plainness, was accosted by his employer: "Well, Thomas," he said, "I hear you are married. What sort of a wife have you got?" "Well, sir," was the response, "she's the Creator's handiwork, but I canna' say she's His masterpiece."

A man once asked Thackeray to lend him five shillings, which he would convert into £20,000. Asked how, he explained that he knew a young woman with £20,000 who he knew would marry him if he asked her, but he had pawned his teeth, and wanted five shillings to redeem them, in order to propose effectively.

Some navvies in a railway carriage were once in loud conversation, swearing hoisterously the while. One of them was especially fluent. "My friend," said another passenger in shocked tones, "where did you learn to use such language?" "Learn!" cried the navy. "You can't learn it, guv'nor. It's a gift, that's wot it is."

A splenetic Englishman, trying to hadger a Scotchman who was something of a wag, declared that no man of taste would think of remaining any time in such a country as Scotland. "Tastes differ," replied the Scot, suavely. "I'll take ye to a place in Scotland not far frae Stirling whaur thretty thousand of your countrymen ha' been for five hundred years, an' they've nae thocht o' leavin' yet."

A meek-looking little man with a large pasteboard box climbed on the car. As he did so he humped slightly into a sleepy, corpulent passenger with a self-satisfied look and two little dabs of sidewiskers. As the car rounded a curve the box rubbed against him again and he growled: "This is no freight car, is it?" "Nope," returned the meek little chap with the box, "and when you come right down to it, it aint any cattle car either, is it?"

Governor Oglesby once visited the State penitentiary at Joliet to hear complaints of prisoners and inspect the premises. The governor stopped before a cell containing an unusually ugly man. "My man," said Governor Oglesby, pleasantly, "how did you get here?" "For abducting a girl," growled the man. Governor Oglesby looked him over critically and then said: "Well, I'll pardon you as soon as I get back to Springfield. You could not get a girl in any other way!"

There was a suburban lady whose house, one summer, was quite overrun with moths. A tramp told her that, in return for a square meal, he would give her an infallible moth cure. She set a square meal before the tramp, he devoured it, then he said: "All ye need to do, ma'am, is to hang yer moth-filled clothes and carpets and things on a line and heat 'em with a stick. Good-by to yer moths then." "Will that kill them?" asked the lady. "Yes, if ye hit 'em," said the tramp.

Mrs. Carrie Nation, arrested in Pittsburg, said that she had been arrested thirty-three times. "I try to do good," she told a reporter. "In trying to do good I take life hard. Some folks, most folks, in fact, take it easy—as easy as the new hired girl wanted to take her new place. 'Everything goes by clockwork here,' the mistress said to this girl. 'By clockwork, mind you. You get up at 6, you dine at 12, and you go to bed at 10.' 'Well, if that's all,' said the girl, with a smile, 'I think I can manage it.'"

He was a collector for an installment house, new at the business and sensitive about performing an unpleasant duty. He was particularly embarrassed because the lady upon whom he had called to perform this unpleasant duty was so exceedingly polite. Still, the van was at the door, the lady was in arrears in her payments, and he remembered his duty. "Good morning," said the lady. "It's a beautiful day, isn't it?" "Beautiful," he agreed. "Won't you take a chair?" she said. "Er—no, thank you, not this morning," he stammered. "I've come to take the piano!"

This is the rebuff of a housekeeper who had rather a small stock of patience and went into her kitchen one day to direct the preparation of dinner. She found George, her Japanese cook, poring over a book. "What are you reading?" she asked. "Schopenhauer," George replied. "Do you think you can understand such philosophy?" the mistress inquired. "Yes, honorable madam. I understand it; I apply it. When you come to tell me how to cook, it is good to remember what the white man says about women. I read here, then I not mind what you say."

The manager of a touring baseball team records this incident of a Southern trip: "We hit Palm Beach one spring to play a couple of exhibition games and the hotel was packed. It was so crowded that they doubled us all up in one room and before night the management had to fix hunks in the church connected with the hotel and send a lot of men to sleep there. Along about five o'clock the next morning the church bell began to ring furiously and finally the clerk chased one of the bellhops over to see what the matter was. 'What's the trouble?' asked the clerk, when the coon came back. 'Gennulman in pew 17 says he wants a cocktail, suh.'"

THE MERRY MUSE.

Cherful Mary.

Mary sat upon a pin,
But showed no perturbation;
For part of her was genuine,
But most was imitation.

—The Sphinx.

Spring Shopping.

It was the busy hour of four
When from a city hardware store
Emerged a gentleman who bore
6 screens, 50 feet of garden
bosc, 1 rake, 1 wheelbarrow.

This gentleman with air distraught
A big department shop then sought
And there invested in, or bought,
40 yards mosquito netting,
1 hammock, 1 croquet set.

His business next our hero leads Unto a place which retails seeds.
It takes to satisfy his needs
24 packages assorted annuals,
10 rose bushes, 1 peck mixed bulbs.

The sun was low behind a hill
When he got to Lonelyville.
And then his wife in accents shrill
Pointed out that he'd forgotten the sprinkling can, the pruning shears and the lawnmower!

—Louisville Courier-Journal.

When She Comes.

My love may come when roses bow
Or when the leaves are sere;
My love may come with cheeks aglow
Or filled with sudden fear;
My love may come with golden hair
Or tresses dark as night;
No matter when, no matter where,
The day will be divinely fair,
The world superbly bright.

My love may come when I am old
Or ere youth's fancies flee;
Before this day's last hour is told
My love may come to me;
It may be on some mountain high
Or on some placid shore;
No matter when or where or why,
I'll know her when she comes, as I
So often have before.

—Chicago Record-Herald.

From the Sad Sea Waves.

In autumn, when the days are cool once more,
And you fit out to luncheon from the store,
You note the blonde who hollers "Pie and milk,"
And murmur, where have I seen her before?

Your brain harks back; you sit beside the sea;
The chair, veranda, and the vagrant sbe
All come to mind, and then you recollect
The whisp'ring widow, your beach affinity.

—Boston Traveler.

Grover Cleveland once declared that he was an optimist, but not "an if-ist." "An if-ist," said Mr. Cleveland, "is a person who is a slave to the little word if, whereas an optimist hopes for the best in a sane manner. The if-ist is never quite sanc. I once knew an if-ist who was lost in the Maine woods with a companion on a hunting expedition. As night came on they made camp, hut, although they were hungry, they had shot no game, and had nothing to eat. With a perfectly serious face this fellow looked at his companion and said: 'If we only had some ham, we'd have ham and eggs, if we only had some eggs!'"

A. Hirschman.

For fine jewelry and silverware. 1641-1643
Van Ness Avenue.

BANKING

Security Savings Bank

316 MONTGOMERY STREET
San Francisco, Cal.

Authorized Capital - $1,000,000.00
Paid-up Capital - 500,000.00
Surplus and Undivided Profits 313,000.00

4% Interest Per Annum

Interest at the Rate of 4 per cent. per annum was paid on Deposits for Six Months ending June 30, 1908

DIRECTORS

Wm. Babeock, S. L. Abbot, O. D. Baldwin,
Joseph D. Grant, E. J. McCutchen, L. F. Mont-teagle, R. H. Pease, Warren D. Clark, Jas. L.
Flood, Fred W. Ray, J. A. Donohoe, Jacob
Stern.

The Anglo-Californian Bank, Ltd.

Established 1873

Head Office—London

Main Office—Pine and Sansome Streets, San Francisco

Branches—1020 Van Ness Avenue, Mission and Sixteenth Streets, San Francisco

Managers: I. Steinhart, P. N. Lillenthal

Capital paid in.....$1,500,000
Surplus and undivided profits..... 1,449,721

A General Banking Business Conducted.
Accounts of Corporations, Firms, and Individuals Solicited. Correspondence invited.

Safe Deposit Vaults at Van Ness Avenue and Mission Branches.

French Savings Bank

The French Savings Bank Building, 108-110 Sutter Street.

THE FRENCH-AMERICAN BANK occupies offices in the same building.

OFFICERS—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, Vice President; Leon Boqueraz, Vice President; Alphonse Bousquet, Secretary.
DIRECTORS—J. E. Artigues, O. Bozio, J. A. Bergerot, John Ginty, J. M. Dupas, J. S. Godeau, N. C. Babin, George Belaney, H. de St. Seine.

Safe Deposit Boxes for Rent

The German Savings and Loan Society
526 California St., San Francisco

Guaranteed Capital$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash. 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds.. 1,453,983.62
Deposits June 30, 1908..... 34,474,554.23
Total Assets 37,055,263.31

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse, and W. S. Goodfellow.

LONDON PARIS NATIONAL BANK

N. W. cor. Sutter and Sansome

CAPITAL - - - $2,500,000
SURPLUS - - - 620,000

Sig Greenebaum, H. Fleishhacker,
President, Vice-President and Mgr.
R. Altschul, Cashier

The National Bank ROLL OF HONOR

The title "Roll of Honor National Bank" is a distinction of which any financial institution in the United States may be proud. As it is well known a "Roll of Honor Bank" is one possessing surplus and profits in excess of capital. A place on the Roll of Honor can not be bought, it must be earned. This bank has for a long time been known as a "Roll of Honor Bank" among banks and bankers.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF Berkeley

UNITED STATES DEPOSITORY
A. W. NAYLOR, Pres. F. M. WILSON, Vice-Pres.
F. L. NAYLOR, Cashier. F. C. MORTIMER, Asst. Cashier.

THE BERKELEY NATIONAL BANK
United States Depository
Berkeley, Cal.

HOUSEHOLD AND COMMERCIAL ACCOUNTS INVITED
DIRECTORS—George P. Baxter, Pres.; J. W. Richards, Vice Pres.; Benjamin Bangs, Vice Pres.; Louis Titus, Dr. Thomas Addison, A. G. Freeman, Duncan McDuffie, Perry T. Tompkins, F. L. Lipman, W. J. Hotchkiss, and Whitney Palache. P. H. ATKINSON, Cashier.

WESTERN ASSURANCE COMPANY

TORONTO
U. S. Assets.....$2,493,154
" Surplus..... 483,989

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT
1004 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE
SAN FRANCISCO

J. J. KENNY, W. L. W. MILLER,
Manager, Assistant Manr.

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

Word comes from all the out-of-town resorts of golf and tennis, automobiling, and boating with which the summer months are flying. But even these exciting out-door sports have not successfully rivaled the winter's fondness for bridge. Many card tables in shady veranda nooks attest the survival of the vogue of this popular game, and some elaborate card parties are being given at the hotels and country houses.

Another attractive feature of the near-by places is the week-end dinner dances that enable the men who must be in town all week to run down into the country and enjoy a round of gayety between business hours.

Mrs. C. G. Noble announces the engagement of her daughter, Miss Cara Pickens Noble, to Mr. Victor Kohnk of Hamburg, Germany.

Mr. George H. Strong has announced the engagement of his daughter, Miss Georgia Strong to Mr. Charles Parker Hubbard.

The engagement is announced of Miss Maude Payne, daughter of Mrs. J. Eugene Freeman, to Mr. Russell Bogue.

Mrs. Lucy H. Quimby has announced the engagement of her daughter, Miss Helen Quimby, to Captain Henry Minett, U. S. N., retired. Miss Quimby is the daughter of the late Captain and Brevet Major William M. Quimby, U. S. A.

The marriage of Miss Claire Chabot and Mr. Leou Boqueraz will be celebrated Tuesday, July 28, at Mrs. Chabot's country place, Villarémi, Napa County, in the presence of the family only.

A wedding of much interest on both sides of the Bay will be that of Miss Constance Dixon, youngest daughter of Mrs. H. St. John Dixon of Sausalito, and Mr. Charles Duncan of Seattle. The date of the wedding is set for the first week in August.

Mrs. Llewellyn Jones has issued invitations for the marriage of her daughter, Miss Grace Llewellyn, to Mr. Robert Gibson, Jr., to take place Saturday, the 15th of August, at Trinity Church. Mr. and Mrs. Gibson will be at home after the first of November in their New York house.

The marriage of Miss Anna Foster and Dr. Lawrence Draper will be an event of the late summer. The ceremony is to be solemnized at "Fairhills," the Foster home in San Rafael, early in August.

A marriage planned for the early autumn is that of Miss Grace Baldwin and Mr. Russell Selfridge. An extended tour of the Eastern cities will follow the wedding, after which they will return to this city to reside.

The wedding of Miss Louise Hollister Cooper and Mr. Hewitt Davenport took place Monday of last week. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Henry Morgan and was witnessed by only the closest relatives and friends of the families. Mr. and Mrs. Davenport expect to make their home in Spirit Lake, Idaho.

The marriage of Miss Emily Wilson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Russell Wilson, and Mr. Orville C. Pratt was solemnized last week.

Colonel and Mrs. Marion P. Maus of the Presidio of Monterey gave a dinner at the St. Francis last Monday in honor of Colonel J. W. Duncan.

Misses Evelyn and Anna Van Winkle have been entertaining a bouse party at their home at Brookdale the past week. Among their guests are Miss Lurline Matson, Miss Grace Gibson, Miss Marie Landers, and Miss Frances Pierce.

Miss Florence Breckenridge was hostess a few days ago at an informal luncheon at the Fairmont. Her guests of honor were Miss Augusta Foute and Miss Mary Keeney.

Misses Marian and Jeannette Wright were hostesses last week at their Scott-Street home of an informal card party given in honor of Miss Betty Angus, whose engagement to Mr. St. George Holden has recently been announced. Their guests were Dr. and Mrs. Converse, Mr. and Mrs. Herrick, Miss Ethel Hartson, Miss Holden, Miss Thompson, Miss Christine Judah, Mr. Roussi, Mr. Woods, Mr. Clerk, Mr. Torney, and Mr. Moulder.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. Scott recently entertained a number of friends at a dinner at the Burlingame Club in honor of Mr. Thomas Sherwin, who is soon to take his departure for Boston.

The officers and ladies of the Presidio gave one of their popular dances Friday evening in the Officers' Club, which was largely attended by many of the younger set from this city and Mare Island.

Miss Elisabeth Mills gave an informal tea last week at her home on Pacific Avenue in honor of Miss Maude Payne, whose engagement to Mr. Russell Bogue has recently been announced.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a résumé of movements to and from this city and Coast and of the whereabouts of absent Californians:

Mr. and Mrs. Laurence Irving Scott are enjoying a motor trip through the Tahoe region.

Miss Jennie Crocker has returned from London, where she was the guest of the family of Minister Whitelaw Reid, and is at Burlingame.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Sharon are at their home at Menlo Park.

Commander Charles A. Gove and Mrs. Gove have returned to town, after a visit in Burlingame.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Crocker are en route to New York, whence they will sail later for Europe.

Mrs. Adrian von Behrens intends to return to Washington in a few weeks, where she will join her husband.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Martin are at The Peninsula, San Mateo, for the remainder of July.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene de Sabla are at Paso Robles for a few weeks.

Vicomte and Vicomtesse de Tristan and Miss Marie Christian de Guigne have returned to Paris.

Miss Bessie Scott of Baltimore, who has been the guest of her uncle's family, the Henry T. Scotts, has returned to her Eastern home.

Mrs. C. B. Alexander and her daughters have recently arrived from New York and are at the Fairmont.

Miss Marjorie Josselyn is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Kohl at their country seat, Idlewild.

Miss Katherine Martin of Santa Cruz is the guest of Dr. and Mrs. Philip King Brown.

Miss Ardella Mills is planning to go to New York within a few weeks, whence she will sail later for an extended European tour.

Miss Janet Coleman, who has been the guest of her sister, Mrs. Jennings, at Washington, D. C., has returned to her home in this city.

Mr. and Mrs. Timothy Hopkins have been entertaining Mrs. Rosenstock during the week.

Mr. and Mrs. Atherton Macondray are at their Menlo Park home for the remainder of the summer.

Miss Evelyn Norwood, who has been in Los Gatos during the summer, is planning to return to town the first of the month.

Miss Madeline Clay is motoring with a party of friends through the southern part of the State.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dean are expected to return within a few days from their travels abroad.

Brigadier-General and Mrs. Henry E. Noyes have returned to town, after several weeks' stay at Santa Barbara.

Miss Maud O'Connor has returned from a visit in San Rafael, where she has been the guest of Mrs. Frank S. Johnson.

Mrs. O. P. Jackson has sailed for Honolulu, where she will make a short visit before sailing to Japan to join the fleet.

Mrs. George Howard has returned to her home in San Mateo, after a visit at Del Monte.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace Pillsbury are spending a few weeks in Napa County.

Mr. George Cameron expects to leave in a few days for Paris.

Miss Ethel Hartson of St. Helena is the guest of Miss Betty Angus.

Miss Sara Drum is the guest of Mrs. Hitchcock at her home in Burlingame.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Tobin are spending the summer in the Napa Valley.

Mrs. William P. Morgan has been entertaining Mrs. Porter at her home in San Rafael.

Miss Frances Martin of Ross Valley is entertaining Miss Dolly McGavin.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Stanley Dollar are spending a few weeks at The Peninsula, San Mateo.

Miss Frances McKinstry is spending several weeks in the Tahoe country.

Mrs. Uriel Sebree, wife of Admiral Sebree, has returned from her trip to the southern part of the State and has gone to Seattle.

Mr. and Mrs. George McNear and Miss Elisabeth McNear are at Byron Springs.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Driscoll have returned to Burlingame, after several weeks in the mountains.

Miss Madeline Bohrmann is the guest of Mrs. Evan Pillsbury.

Mrs. A. B. Cook was a passenger on the last out-bound steamer for Honolulu. After a visit at Honolulu Mrs. Cook will join her husband in Japan upon the arrival of the fleet.

Mrs. Walter Dean has returned from Los Angeles, where she has been the guest of Mrs. Frank Hicks.

Mrs. Richard Bayne has returned from her trip to Yosemite.

Mr. Charles Bull has been the guest during the past week of Dr. Walter Chidester at San Mateo.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Beaver are at their cottage at Inverness.

Mr. and Mrs. William Bull Pringle are at Agua Caliente for the summer.

Miss Minnie Houghton has been the guest for a few days of Mrs. Robert Nuttall.

Mrs. James P. Langhorne has recently been the guest of Mrs. William Bourne at St. Helena.

Mr. and Mrs. Parker Whitney are at Pacific Grove for the summer.

Mrs. William H. Howard is at Paso Robles for a few weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Willar have leased their Sausalito home and are in town for the remainder of the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Dougherty have been entertaining Lieutenant-Commander Yates Stirling, Jr., at their country home near Pleasanton.

Mrs. Charles Foster and the Misses Foster are planning to spend the month of August among the Italian lakes.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Gallois and Miss Gallois are at Lake Tahoe for several weeks.

Miss Jean Lawlor is the guest of Mrs. William Crocker at Burlingame.

Judge Van Fleet and Mrs. Van Fleet are at their cottage at Inverness.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Martin are at El Cerrito for the summer.

Mrs. Charles Sperry, wife of Rear-Admiral Sperry, has returned to her home in Washington, D. C.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dean have returned from their Eastern trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Metcalf have returned to their Berkeley home, after a visit in Pasadena.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Dimond are guests at Aetna Springs.

Captain G. A. Pond, U. S. A., and Mrs. Pond are in town and are registered at the St. Francis.

Mrs. Worthington Ames is expected to return from a European tour early next month.

Miss Mary Carrigan was a passenger on the incoming transport Sheridan last week.

Miss Carrigan has been the guest of her brother on his hemp plantation in Negros.

Mr. Lyman Grimes and Mr. Thornton Grimes are visiting friend at Brookdale.

Miss Mabel Toye has returned to town, after a visit in the southern part of the State.

Judge and Mrs. Henshaw are among the summer guests at Tahoe.

Mrs. Christian Reis of San Mateo is entertaining Miss Brice, daughter of Captain Brice, U. S. N.

Miss M. E. Williams returned from the East last week and is in Burlingame.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Van Winkle and the Misses Van Winkle are at their home at Brookdale for the summer.

Miss Gibbons has returned home, after a visit to Captain and Mrs. Edward Shinkle at the Benicia Arsenal.

Miss Isabel Brewer of Mill Valley is entertaining Miss Margaret Doyle.

Mrs. H. P. Young, wife of Captain Young, has arrived from Manila on a visit to her mother, Mrs. A. H. Voorhies.

Mrs. John S. Rodgers has gone to the Bremerton Navy Yard, where she will join her husband, Rear-Admiral Rodgers.

Mrs. Dudley Wright Knox, who has been visiting friends in this city and San Rafael, expects to leave shortly for the Orient, where she will join her husband, Lieutenant Knox of the U. S. S. Nebraska.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Cooper are guests at Vichy Springs.

Mr. and Mrs. Homer King are motoring with Mr. and Mrs. Ira Bronlon in the National Park of Washington at the base of Mt. Rainier.

Mrs. James Sydney Peck, who has been at the St. Francis since her arrival in San Francisco, will visit her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Hubbard, at Bremerton, before returning to her home in the East.

Pears'

There's a unique adaptability about Pears' Soap. It makes the child enjoy its bath, helps the mother preserve her complexion, and the man of the house finds nothing quite so good for shaving.

Have you used Pears' Soap?

Pears' the soap for the whole family

FAIRMONT HOTEL

The highest attainment in modern hotel building and hotel keeping
Single rooms $2.50 and upwards
Every room with bath

Under management of
Palace Hotel Company

MATCHLESS DEL MONTE

for week-end trips or longer vacations
Summer Rates $3.00 to $5.50 per day
AMERICAN PLAN

Del Monte Express with through parlor car leaves Third and Townsend daily at 3, arriving in time for dinner.

Reduced railroad rates for week-ends
Write for reservations today
H. R. WARNER, Manager

Hotel Rafael

San Rafael, Cal.

Open year around. Headquarters Automobile League. New and commodious garage. Fifty minutes from San Francisco. Complete change of climate. Tiburon or Sausalito Ferry. All modern conveniences.

F. N. Orpin, Proprietor.

THE LATEST STYLES IN

Choice Woolens

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchandise Tailors

108-110 Sutter St. French Bank Bldg.

MT. TAMALPAIS

AND

MUIR WOODS

VIA SAUSALITO FERRY

FOOT OF MARKET ST.

LEGAL HOLIDAYS-SUNDAY TIME

Lv. San Francisco		Lv. Muir Woods		Lv. Tamalpais
WEEK DAY	SUN- DAY	WEEK DAY	SUN- DAY	WEEK DAY	SUN- DAY
9:45 A.	7:15 A.	1:40 P.	10:40 A.	7:25 A.	9:28 A.
8:15 A.	8:15 A.	2:40 P.	12:16 P.	1:40 P.	11:10 A.
1:45 P.	9:45 A.	4:45 P.	1:40 P.	4:14 P.	12:16 P.
SATUR- DAY	11:15 A.		2:45 P.	SATUR- DAY	3:10 P.
Tamal.	12:45 A.		4:40 P.	ONLY	4:40 P.
pais	1:45 P.		5:45 P.	ONLY	6:40 P.
only	3:45 P.			ONLY	8:15 P.
14:45 P.	14:45 P.

TICKET OFFICE AT SAUSALITO FERRY

When You Leave Town
Store Your Trunks, Piano,
Household Goods, Etc.

With Us
STRINGER STORAGE COMPANY

Sutter near Fillmore

Tel. West 999

C. A. Murdock & Co.
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS
The Argonaut a sample of our output
68 FREMONT STREET
Phone Kearny 1040

AN unusual lunch place—and an unusually good place for lunch or afternoon tea. More like a room in your own home, plus a dainty meal and efficient service.

YE TEA CUP INNE
1427 Bush Street, below Van Ness (upstairs)

Hotel St. Francis

The comfort of the present is built upon the complaints of the past.

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF JAMES WOODS

Why Not Make Your Home At The Hotel Jefferson

Turk and Gough Streets Facing Jefferson Square

A superior class hotel with every modern convenience and comfort. Operated on the American and European plans. Special rates to permanent guests. Special attention paid to the table—we invite comparisons. Management Noah H. Gray, formerly manager Alexander Young Hotel, Honolulu, and Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

You Can Live At The Hotel Jefferson Better And For Less Than At Home

The Majestic—a Homelike Hotel

Refined surroundings — The very best cuisine—Perfect service —Moderate prices—Ideal location—Rates on application.

N. W. corner Sutter and Gough

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"

Building, concrete, steel and marble. Located, most fashionable shopping district. 210 rooms, 135 baths. Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests. Most refined hostelry in Seattle. Absolutely fireproof. English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

Gaining in popularity every day because it deserves it

Old Gilt Edge Whiskey

Rye or Bourbon

Hotel del Coronado

Motto: "BEST OF EVERYTHING" Most Delightful Climate on Earth American Plan. Summer rates $3.50 per day each and upward, or $21.00 per week each and upward "Good Music" and "Fine Automobile Road, Los Angeles-Riverside to Coronado." Golf, Tennis, Polo, and other outdoor sports every day in the year. New 700-foot ocean pier, for fishing. Boating and Bathing are the very best. Send for booklet to

MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado Beach, Cal. Or see H. F. NORCROSS, Agent, 334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles. Tel. A 6789; Main 3917. 22d Street and Broadway

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy officers who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Rear-Admiral W. T. Swinburne, U. S. N., is ordered to duty as commander-in-chief of the Pacific fleet on board the U. S. S. West Virginia.

Colonel George L. Anderson, U. S. A., inspector-general of the Department of California, is officially relieved from duty, but will be retained indefinitely on temporary duty.

Colonel J. W. Duncan, U. S. A., is to be relieved from duty at Army Headquarters, San Francisco, August 1, and will report to the chief of staff at Washington, D. C.

Major E. Evelyn Winslow, U. S. A., office of the chief of engineers, Washington Barracks, will proceed to San Francisco and assume command of the First Battalion of Engineers, whence he will proceed with Company A and the headquarters of that battalion to Honolulu.

Captain George D. Moore, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., recently graduated from the Army School of the Line, is detailed for instruction in the Army Staff College.

Leave of absence for two months is granted Captain Oren B. Meyer, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., to take effect upon his relief from recruiting duty.

Captain Clark W. Dudley, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., Lieutenant James H. Burns, First Field Artillery, U. S. A., and Lieutenant Paul W. Beck, Signal Corps, U. S. A., are detailed as members of the general court-martial appointed at the Presidio of San Francisco.

Captain James F. Brady, U. S. A., is appointed to assume the duties of post commissary during the absence of Captain Ferguson from the Presidio of San Francisco.

Captain Charles D. Rhodes, Sixth Cavalry, U. S. A., and Second Lieutenant Harry T. Hodges, First Cavalry, U. S. A., are detailed for duty at Atascadero Ranch.

Contract Surgeon Thomas S. Lowe, U. S. A., is ordered to proceed to Vancouver Barracks to report in person for duty.

Assistant Surgeon M. E. Higgins is detached from duty on the U. S. S. Illinois and ordered to report to the commander of the Third Squadron, Pacific Fleet, for duty.

Leave of absence for one month and ten days, to take effect August 1, is granted Lieutenant Ralph T. Ward, Engineer Corps, U. S. A., Fort Mason.

First Lieutenant Stephen O. Fuqua, Twenty-Third Infantry, U. S. A., is detailed for duty at Atascadero Ranch September 25. Lieutenant Zerah W. Torrey, U. S. A., has received his promotion and is ordered to appear in person to the commanding general of the Philippines for assignment to duty.

First Lieutenant Rowland B. Ellis, squadron adjutant, U. S. A., is detailed as acting regimental adjutant during the absence on detached service of Captain J. McL. Carter, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A.

Lieutenant Charles S. Kerrick, U. S. N., is stationed temporarily at Mare Island with the Truxton (destroyer).

Lieutenant-Colonel John Biddle, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A., San Francisco, in addition to his present duties is temporarily appointed division engineer of the Northern Pacific Division.

Lieutenant Kirby Crittenden, U. S. N., of the submarine Pike is stationed at Mare Island temporarily.

Company C, First Infantry, is to be relieved from duty at Vancouver Barracks and will proceed to the Presidio of San Francisco for duty at the School of Musketry.

Leave of absence for two months is granted Second Lieutenant Arthur Hickson, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A.

Assistant Naval Constructor E. C. Hammer is detached from the Second Torpedo Flotilla and assigned to the Navy Yard, Mare Island.

At the Hotels.

Among recent arrivals at Byron Hot Springs were Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Young, Mr. C. Wilfort, Mr. A. J. Garrett, Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Ireland, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Richardson, of San Francisco.

Recent arrivals at Hotel del Coronado include Mr. I. V. Armstrong, Mr. M. H. Avery, Mr. Edward Mallory, Mr. Porter de Arce, Mr. J. Galahor and family, Miss Blanche Silverberg, Mrs. A. G. Bristol, Miss M. K. Bristol, Mrs. Clarence Duncan, Mr. H. W. Lohb, Mr. J. F. Sullivan, Mrs. M. E. McCartney, Miss Henrietta Olson, Mrs. A. Lezynsky, of San Francisco.

Among recent arrivals at Hotel Rafael were Mr. Charles W. Haas, Mr. William L. McGuire, Mr. and Mrs. Hacker, Mr. L. Ryone, Mr. A. A. Brown, Mr. William Adams, Miss E. Johnson, Miss J. Volkman, Mr. H. A. Schmidt, Mr. W. G. Volkman, Mr. D. G. Volkman, Mr. and Mrs. V. E. Bogue, Mr. Malcolm Bogue, Dr. Hirschfelder and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Mandel, Mr. and Mrs. Phillip, of San Francisco.

Among recent arrivals at Hotel Normandie are Mrs. C. Baum, Miss H. H. Baum, Miss A. B. Browning, Mrs. J. E. Sackrater, Colusa; Mr. and Mrs. Julius Wolf, Mr. R. F. Armstrong, New York; Mr. H. G. Howard, Reno; NeV.; Mr. C. H. Dunton, Placerville; Miss L. M. Williams, San Mateo; Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Redding, Menlo; Mrs. H. S. Deming, Miss D. Deming, Santa Cruz; Mr. and Mrs. A. Enke, Miss H. Mayer, Los Angeles.

Recent arrivals at Aetna Springs include Mrs. Margaret Deane, Miss Deane and maid, Mr. I. C. Emmons, Mr. and Mrs. Scott Seaton, child, and maid, Mr. W. J. Tahor, Mr. F. J. Cooper, Mr. and Mrs. Basford, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Buck, Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Crim, Mr. Carl H. Schmidt, Mr. and Mrs. Paul M. Nippert, Miss Nippert, Mr. M. M. Rohmett, Mr. Charles W. Sutro, Mr. J. Baumgarten, Mrs. M. E. Eaton, Mr. J. W. Harhour, Mrs. M. Starr, Mr. and Mrs. C. K. Ward, of San Francisco.

Recent arrivals at the Tavern of Tamalpais include Mr. A. M. Keating, Mrs. A. M. Kaiser, Mr. Daniel McHenry, Mrs. M. A. Butler, Mrs. F. A. Landy, Miss M. K. Landy, Miss D. S. Boucher, Miss M. Gleason, Miss Anita Gleason, Miss A. F. McDonnell, Mr. J. Zederman, Mr. E. V. Sanders, Mrs. L. N. Randolph, Mr. E. Rankin, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Sands, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Wilburn, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Regg, Mr. and Mrs. William R. Jost and family, Miss J. Rich, Miss B. Kramer, Mr. A. Schmitenhaus, Mr. Herman Loest, Mr. J. C. Frank and family, Mr. Charles S. Aiken, of San Francisco.

A party composed of Mr. and Mrs. John D. Foster and Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Lombard of Los Angeles have been spending the past few days at the Fairmont. Among other guests registered from the City of Angels were Mr. John H. Hoffman, Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Neefus, Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Neefus, Mr. E. R. Baldwin, Mrs. J. E. Ferrall, Mrs. Fred Dorr and Miss Dorr, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Stanton with their two daughters and son, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Stearns. Guests from Sacramento include Mr. and Mrs. Alden Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Terry, General J. B. Lauck, and Mr. A. W. Bradbury.

Among recent arrivals at Hotel Del Monte were Mr. and Mrs. Edwin F. Schneider, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Charles Levy, Mr. Edwin Utley, Mr. Edward G. Schmiedell, Mr. and Mrs. George Hewlett, Mrs. Ellon, Mrs. Z. Foregner, Mr. Palmer B. Hewlett, Mrs. Arthur Bachman, Mrs. J. Broughton, Mr. E. Greenbaum, Mr. Will Sparks, Miss Dora Winn, Mr. A. D. Shepard, Mrs. David Samson, Mr. R. O. Hakelief, Mr. and Mrs. S. F. Badt, Mr. E. G. Wheeler, Mr. Alfred L. Weil, Mr. Walter R. Heyneman, Mr. F. J. Rodgers, Mr. Charles F. Hoey, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Lande, Mr. George C. Boardman, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Martin S. Meyer, Mr. and Mrs. H. Hollman, Mr. and Mrs. George Lawrence Kayes, Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Luening, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred S. Tuhs, Mrs. A. L. Tuhs, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Heyneman, Mrs. L. S. Greenebaum, Mr. Max L. Rosenfeld, Mr. A. L. Holt, and Mr. Pierre C. Moore, of San Francisco.

Among recent arrivals at The Peninsula, San Mateo, were: Mrs. J. C. Phillips, Butte, Mont.; Mr. H. M. Hyde, San Jose; Mrs. G. W. Gibbs, Burlingame; Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Hodges, Waterloo, Ohio; Mr. Oscar Grauh, Paris, France; Mr. and Mrs. E. O. Munger, Washington; Miss Foster, Portsmouth, N. H.; Mr. J. M. Thompson, Sacramento; Mr. and Mrs. McHoey, San Diego; Mr. G. G. Thompson, Oakland; Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Kramer, Miss O. Kramer, Eureka; Mr. G. W. Davis, Boston; Mr. and Mrs. L. Honigshberger, Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien, Mr. F. W. Sumner, Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Ottenheimer, Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Newbauer, Mr. R. E. Mulcahy, Mr. F. J. Maroney, Mrs. E. B. Thomas, Mr. and Mrs. L. I. Cohn, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Shea, Miss Janet Jacobi, Mr. H. D. Bradley, Mr. J. A. Sanhorn, Mr. and Mrs. Peter D. Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph L. King, Dr. and Mrs. U. G. Bartlett, Mr. and Mrs. George Smith, San Francisco.

DR. ROBERT E. O'CONNELL, DR. GEORGE D. O'CONNELL, DENTISTS, Hastings Building, Post Street and Grant Avenue. Tel. Douglas 2733.

OPEN

THE OCULARIUM

Henry Kahua & Co.
- OPTICIANS -
PHOTO SUPPLIES
SCIENTIFIC INSTRUMENTS

644-646 MARKET ST.
OPP. PALACE HOTEL
BRANCH 1309 VAN NESS AVE.
NEXT TO NEWMAN & LEVINSON

The Hotel Normandie

(S. E. cor. Sutter and Gough)

Table d'Hote Luncheon

75 cents, and the

Table d'Hote Dinner

$1.00

are unsurpassed for cuisine, refinement of surroundings and service. They appeal to the discriminating.

Hotel Colonial

Stockton above Sutter Street

American and European Plans
Special Rates to Permanents
HOWARD T. BLETHEN, Manager
Telephone, Kear

THE "NIPPON"

Family Resort between and Los Gatos

Has increased its accommodating furnace heated, beautiful rooms with all modern conveniences. Open all the year. Positively exclusive. For information address THEODORE J. MORRIS, Proprietor, Los Gatos, Cal.

Berkeley Apartments

Several sunny suites available for the summer and autumn months at Hotel Cloyne Court, Berkeley. For further particulars address

J. M. PIERCE, Manager.

"The Peninsula"

SAN MATEO, CAL.

A Twentieth Century Hotel of the Highest Degree of Excellence

NOW OPEN

AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLAN

Thirty minutes by rail from San Francisco. Located in a beautiful park of thirty years' cultivation. All the charm and delight of the country combined with the attractions and conveniences of the metropolis.

For Reservation or Information Address

JAMES H. DOOLITTLE, Mgr., San Mateo, Cal.

FOR SALE

A BARGAIN

Beautiful Artistic Residence

12 rooms and 3 baths; hardwood inlaid floors throughout.

UNOBSTRUCTED MARINE VIEW

The mantels and fixtures in this house are the most attractive ever installed in this city. House just completed, has never been occupied.

EXTRA LARGE CORNER LOT

75 x 102 ft. with "L"

For full particulars see

Shainwald, Buckbee & Co.

No. 27 Montgomery St.

Interior of magnificent living room.

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

"What part of the chicken will you have, Mr. Hall-room?" "Some of the meat, please."—Life.

Patience—That Miss Bellow is going to sing. Patrice—Oh, is she? What shall we talk about?—The Tatler.

Knicker—Did she cultivate her voice? Bocker—Yes, and now the neighbors are trying to move the crop.—New York Sun.

Prospective Country Boarder—Is the water you have here healthy? Landlady—Yes, sir. We use only well water.—Boston Transcript.

Junkeeper—That man over there who hegan with venison has just ordered some roast mutton. Now we are in for it.—Fliegende Blätter.

Mrs. Henpeck—You were talking in your sleep last night, Henry. Mr. Henpeck—I beg your pardon, my dear, for having interrupted you.—Stray Stories.

He (at the end of fishing story)—My word, it was a monster. 'Pon my soul, I never saw such a fish in my life! She—No. I don't believe you ever did!—Punch.

Sillicus—What do you consider is the proper time for a man to marry? Cynicus—Oh, I suppose when he hasn't anything else to worry him.—Philadelphia Record.

Departing Guest—We've had a simply delightful time! Hostess—I'm so glad. At the same time I regret that the storm kept all our best people away.—Brooklyn Life.

"One star differeth from another star in glory," he quoted poetically. "Of course," she assented; "but look at the hum methods of some press agents."—Philadelphia Ledger.

"We can live on bread and cheese and kisses." "That seems economical enough." "And if the cheese be Limburger, we can even dispense with the kisses."—Pioneer Press.

Mrs. Bacon—This paper says that a man's hair turns gray about five years earlier than a woman's. Mr. Bacon—That is because a man wears his hair all the time.—Yonkers Statesman.

Elderly Uncle—Spent your entire patrimony, have you, Archibald? Gone through everything? Scapegrace Nephew—Yes, uncle; everything but the bankruptcy court.—Chicago Tribune.

Faddist Visitor—Are you allowed in this prison any exercise beneficial for your health? Convict—Oh, yes, ma'am. By advice of my counsel I have been skipping the rope.—Baltimore American.

"If I were you," said the old bachelor to the benedict, "I'd either rule or know why." "Well," was the reply, "as I already know why, I suppose that's half the battle!"—Atlanta Constitution.

Dawson—The facial features plainly indicate character and disposition. In selecting your wife were you governed by her chin? Spenslow—No; but I have been ever since we were married.—Boston Globe.

"Have you," asked the judge of a recently convicted man, "anything to offer the court before sentence is passed?" "No, your honor," replied the prisoner, "my lawyer took my last cent."—The Reporter.

Niece—Uncle, they say that there are more marriages of blondes than of brunettes. Why is it, I wonder? Uncle Singleton (a confirmed bachelor)—H'm! Naturally, the light-headed ones go first.—The Mirror.

Country Editor (out West)—This has been a lucky day for me. Faithful Wife—Has some one been in to pay a subscription? Editor—Well, n-o, it wasn't as lucky as that; but I was shot at and missed.—New York Week.

"And how do you like newspaper men?" he asked the little maid in a most condescending tone of voice. "I don't know," she replied, artlessly; "the only one I know is the one who brings our paper every morning."—Lippincott's Magazine.

Farmer Barker—I want to get a present to take back to my wife on the farm. Elegant Clerk—How would she like a pie knife? Farmer Barker—Good land, young man! Aint you never been told you musn't eat pie with no knife?—New York Times.

Grubb—I hear your last novel has already appeared in its sixth edition. How did you manage to become so phenomenally popular? Scrubb—Very simple. I put a "personal" in the papers saying that I was looking for a wife who is something like the heroine of my novel. Within two days the first edition was sold out.—Tit-Bits.

Judge—Have you been arrested before? Prisoner—No, sir. Judge—Have you been in this court before? Prisoner—No, sir. Judge—Are you certain? Prisoner—I am, sir. Judge—Your face looks decidedly familiar. Where have I seen it before? Prisoner—I'm the bartender in the saloon across the way, sir.—Harper's Weekly.

LOANS—

We have placed over $2,000,000 for our clients secured by first mortgage on high class San Francisco real estate. If you have money to loan or if you want to borrow it will pay you to consult us.

BALDWIN & HOWELL
318-324 KEARNY STREET

Tennent's

Ale and Stout

from Wellpark Brewery
Glasgow, Scotland

Forbes Bros., Agents, 1026 Sutter St.

GOODYEAR "HIPPO" HOSE

The best and strongest Garden Hose.
Guaranteed to stand 700 lbs. pressure.

Try it and be convinced.

GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY

R. H. PEASE, President
587, 589, 591 Market St. at Second St.
SAN FRANCISCO

Peyton Chemical Co.

Purchasers and Smelters of
COPPER, GOLD AND SILVER ORES, ETC.
Rooms 657 and 658 Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal.

Smelter and Works at Peyton, Contra Costa Co., Cal.; P. O., Martinez.

Toyo Kisen Kaisha

(ORIENTAL S. S. CO.)

S. S. America Maru..Saturday, August 1, 1908
S. S. Nippon Maru..Saturday, August 29, 1908
S. S. Tenyo Maru..Friday, September 25, 1908

Steamers sail from company's piers, Nos. 42-44, near foot of Second Street, 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Hiogo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.

Round-trip tickets at reduced rates.

For freight and passage apply at office, 240 James Flood Building, W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

TOURS

EUROPE
SOUTH AMERICA
JAPAN AND
ROUND THE WORLD

Programmes for the asking.

THOS. COOK & SON
32 Powell St., San Francisco

Press Clippings

Are money-makers for Contractors, Supply Houses, Business Men and Corporations.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
Kohl Building

Clubbing List.

By special arrangement with the publishers, and by concessions in price on both sides, we are enabled to make the following offer, open to all subscribers direct to this office. Subscribers in renewing subscriptions to Eastern periodicals will please mention the date of expiration in order to avoid mistakes:

American Magazine and Argonaut.....	$4.25
Argosy and Argonaut.....	4.40
Atlantic Monthly and Argonaut.....	6.70
Blackwood's Magazine and Argonaut...	6.20
Century and Argonaut.....	7.00
Commoner and Argonaut.....	4.10
Cosmopolitan and Argonaut.....	4.35
Current Literature and Argonaut.....	5.75
English Illustrated Magazine and Argonaut	4.70
Forum and Argonaut.....	6.00
Harper's Bazar and Argonaut.....	4.35
Harper's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.70
Harper's Weekly and Argonaut.....	6.70
House Beautiful and Argonaut.....	4.75
International Magazine and Argonaut...	4.50
Judge and Argonaut.....	7.50
Leslie's Weekly and Argonaut.....	6.70
Life and Argonaut.....	7.75
Lippincott's Magazine and Argonaut....	5.25
Littell's Living Age and Argonaut.....	9.00
Mexican Herald and Argonaut.....	10.50
Munsey's Magazine and Argonaut.....	4.40
Nineteenth Century and Argonaut.....	7.25
North American Review and Argonaut...	8.00
Out West and Argonaut.....	5.25
Overland Monthly and Argonaut.....	4.50
Political Science Quarterly and Argonaut	4.00
Puck and Argonaut.....	7.50
Review of Reviews and Argonaut.....	5.00
Scribner's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.25
Smart Set and Argonaut.....	5.25
St. Nicholas and Argonaut.....	6.00
Sunset and Argonaut.....	4.25
Theatre Magazine and Argonaut.....	5.75
Thrice-a-Week New York World (Democratic) and Argonaut.....	4.25
Weekly New York Tribune (Republican) and Argonaut	4.50
Weekly New York Tribune, Weekly New York World, and Argonaut.....	5.25

YOUR home can be made comfortable as well as artistic. The combination is always possible. If you don't know how to get both, the advice of our experts will help you. It costs you nothing and saves time and worry.

Furniture
Carpets
Rugs
Draperies

D. N. & E. WALTER & CO.

Van Ness and Sacramento

Wholesale
Retail
and
Since 1858

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXIII. No. 1636.

SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 1, 1908.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10 payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers.

Address all communications to The Argonaut, 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breems Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opéra. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at F and Thirteenth Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Denison News Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains. Published at 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal. Telephone, Kearny 5895.

THIRTY-SECOND YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: Mr. Taft's Speech of Acceptance—Sounding Brass and a Tinkling Cymbal—The Standard Oil Case—The Campaign—Mr. Hearst's Convention—"The Examiner" and Mr. Heney—Feminine Sensibility and Masculine Ease—Editorial Notes.....	65-68
CAMPAIGN TOPICS	68
LETTERS TO THE EDITOR: The New Miracle Play—Mr. Taft a Better Radical Leader Than Mr. Bryan.....	68
SIR ROBERT HART'S GOOD-BYE: Charles Lorrimer Describes the Impression Left in Peking by His Unique Personality and Quiet, Effective Methods.....	69
INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All over the World	69
A THOUSAND DRINKS PER DAY: XXIV. By Jerome A. Hart	70
THE MARVELOUS BOY: Charles Edward Russell Throws New Light upon Thomas Chatterton.....	72
CURRENT VERSE: "The Closing Door," by Rhoda Hero Dunn; "Today and Tomorrow," by William Stanley Braithwaite; "At Dawn," by Alfred Noyes; "A Good Time," by Mounce Byrd.....	72
BOOKS AND AUTHORS. By Sidney G. P. Coryn.....	73
FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.....	74
LITERARY NOTES: Personal and Miscellaneous, Gossip.....	74
DRAMA: Hampden and Whittlesey. By Josephine Hart Phelps	75
VANITY FAIR	76
STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise	77
THE MERRY MUSE.....	77
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy.....	78-79
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day.....	80

Mr. Taft's Speech of Acceptance.

Mr. Taft's formal speech of acceptance may fairly be characterized as a sound and strong discussion of public issues; and it may as fairly be criticised as too voluminous and as lacking in personality. It is a case where the candidate has failed to overcome the judge. A man of keener popular sense, of better instinct for effect, would have said more about his own views, and less about Roosevelt's, taking care at the same time to interlard his matter with phrases of vivid color and high carrying power. Mr. Taft, we think, has to some extent misconceived the function of the formal address of acceptance. A lighter and more personal view of its obligations would have enabled him to make a more effective speech, and at the same time to have reserved for other occasions a wide range of subjects.

The address, none the less, easily bears scrutiny. It commits Mr. Taft in definite terms to the administration policies, and yet it makes it plain that he sees the line of justice and that he is conscientiously disposed to preserve intact the rights of all, and at the same time to maintain conditions favorable to production and business. On the labor question the address is particularly straightforward and admirable. Nobody has ever laid down the principles underlying the whole labor question better than Mr. Taft has done in this address. His positive statement of principle, and his judicially fair arguments, are timely and important. They are in precise line with Republican tradition, and will tend further to hold the party in that conservative attitude towards the labor question which, in the nature of things, it is bound to maintain.

On the whole, while we think Mr. Taft might have made a more effective address, it would hardly have been possible for him to have made one sounder in its matter, or tending more to commend him to thoughtful men who regard politics not as a game, but as serious business in which serious responsibilities are embodied.

Sounding Brass and a Tinkling Cymbal.

Mr. William Jennings Bryan is said to have begun his public career at the early age of twelve years. His father, being a candidate for a local office, addressed a public meeting and when he was done the lad who sat at his side was called upon to make his bow and say a word or two, which he did with such stunning effect that he was thereafter in demand as a "boy wonder" on all public occasions. This precocious gift of gab was still further cultivated during his career as a college student; and still later in every political campaign, great or small, until the "cross-of-gold" speech at Chicago won Mr. Bryan his first presidential nomination. Since that time he has been continuously a speech-maker in season and out of season. It is his trade, for he speaks not so much in the promotion of causes as to charm and entertain people and so get money. His habit is to go about the country not as a statesman and leader instructing and persuading the people, but as a lecturer at so much per head. The story is told that when in California some two or three years ago Mr. Bryan was invited to address the students at one of our universities. He consented to do it upon condition that announcement of his college address should not be made until after he had had the opportunity of first delivering a pay lecture in the same town. Thrifty soul that he is, he wanted a "whack" at those who might be willing to pay before letting it be known that he might be heard gratis. What would be thought of President Roosevelt or Mr. Taft or the late Mr. Cleveland or of any other man with pretensions to personal dignity and to statesmanship who should take such a position before the public? Mr. Bryan's attitude as a peripatetic lecturer, inconsistent as it is with his pretensions as a statesman and his claims to political apostleship, is perhaps justified by the fact that speechmaking, public agitation, is his trade.

It is Mr. Bryan's instinct as a public entertainer and agitator that leads him unvaryingly to take up with any novelty calculated to please or amuse his patrons, the radical public, and which as unvaryingly leads him to drop any issue or cause the moment it ceases to engage his public interest and attention. As an entertainer and agitator—as one whose most serious study is to engage and please the public—he deals only with those things with which the public is immediately interested—with "hot stuff," so to speak. He has no sense of obligation to any principle or cause which prompts him as a matter of conviction and conscience to stay with it through times good and times bad, to preach it in season and out of season because it is a thing of faith. On the contrary, he turns deftly away from the advocacy of any principle the very moment it ceases to bring dollars into the box-office and takes up with something else in which the public is for the moment more interested and which, therefore, is better calculated to jigger dollars from their pockets.

Mr. Bryan first came into national notice in connection with the financial issue. He was for the double standard of coinage under a fixed ratio and he preached the doctrine of sixteen-to-one with extraordinary emphasis and even fervor. After his defeat he traveled broadly over the country, lecturing on the double standard, sustaining it to his own satisfaction—and to that of his box-office manager—by economic, social, and moral arguments. But when the financial issue ceased to interest the public, when sixteen-to-one with echoings from the cross-of-gold address ceased to charm dollars into the box-office, Mr. Bryan, without conscience and without shame, dropped the money issue and cast about for something newer and fresher. It was at a time when the Philippine policy of the government was gravely questioned in certain quarters; here was "hot stuff" for the professional critic and agitator and Mr. Bryan made the most of it. He went up and down the country with something of the fury of a raging lion, waving the banner of anti-imperialism, calling upon high heaven to blast the wicked hands that would enslave the Filipino race and turn the government at Washington into an agency of tyranny and oppression. But when it became necessary for the government either to fish or cut bait, then did this same ranting agitator go to the national capital and give his personal influence to acceptance of a treaty with Spain confirming American authority over Philippine territory. So slight a thing, indeed, was that "conviction" which had inspired his public tirades with respect to Philippine policy that he put it all aside the very moment when there came a call for national action. Then, as if to illustrate the elasticity of his mental and moral make-up, he promptly flopped back upon his anti-imperialist platform and proceeded to harangue the public from ocean to ocean as long as there were those to pay fifty cents per head to listen to him.

Mr. Bryan's most recent attempt to develop a new issue to sustain his general career as lecturer and agitator was immediately following his return from his famous trip around the world. In tones religiously solemn he declared at New York before an audience that had come to welcome him home his fixed conviction that public ownership of the railways of the country was essential to the economic and moral adjustment of things. Before this deliverance he was urged to revise his views or at least to restrain their utterance. But he would have none of it; it was a matter of conviction, he said, and being a matter of conviction it became a point of moral principle, and so he formulated and presented the doctrine which, beyond a doubt, he expected to become a basis for national discussion, with W. J. B. as chief discussor at fifty cents per. But it was a case where the result did not match the calculation. The public was not even interested; it did not care to listen, much less was it willing to pay. Did our fire-eyed prophet proceed at his own cost to enlighten and persuade the country, to bring it to his own sacred "convictions"? Not he. On the other hand, he dropped the whole matter, and, in default of hotter stuff for his lecturing tours, patched up his theories about miracles and other remote, obsolete, and abstract themes not calculated to offend any political element, and proceeded to mark time, so to speak, on the lecture platform during the off season—as usual at fifty cents per head.

Now we find Mr. Bryan again a candidate for the presidency on a platform which takes no stock in any one of the great "principles" which at one time or another he has so lustily championed. He has dropped sixteen-to-one, he has dropped anti-imperialism, he has dropped public ownership of railroads—not only these, but every other of the "issues" which from time to time he has employed to the end of maintaining his position as an agitator, admission fifty cents per head. The plain truth about Mr. Bryan is that he is sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. He is by trade an agitator. He sets up an "issue" precisely as lecturers on woman's suffrage contrive always to have a constitutional amendment somewhere in process, to the end that there may be a basis for agitation. We will not say that Mr. Bryan is not sincere; sincere he doubtless is in a certain temperamental and shallow way.

His sincerity now is precisely what it was when at twelve years of age he stood up and pleaded for his father's election to a county office. He wanted the woodchuck. He wants it still.

In this connection we can but recall a story told of Mr. Bryan twelve years ago, when he was everywhere styled the "boy orator of the Platte." He was so called, so the story ran, because the Platte is a thousand miles long, a mile wide, and six inches deep.

The Standard Oil Case.

Some justification of the confusion manifest in the public mind with respect to the famous Standard Oil fine is afforded by the circumstance that we must characterize the reversal of this judgment as the most important development of a busy week. Legally regarded, the point at issue in the Standard Oil case is not whether or not the great Standard Oil monopoly shall on general principles, so to speak, be punished for its sins, but whether or not judgment in a certain narrow and specific case shall accord with reason, justice, and common sense.

The original case before Judge Landis of Chicago was a charge against the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, a minor corporation affiliated with the larger organization commonly known as the Standard Oil Company, of accepting a concession in a specific railroad rate and thereby violating a law which prohibits alike the granting and the acceptance of discriminating rates in transportation.

The points at issue relate not only to the interests of the Standard Oil Company and its subsidiary companies, but to that of every shipper of any and every product the country over. Determination of the points at issue, therefore, has an interest and importance entirely apart from, however it may affect, the Standard Oil Company. Judicial determinations are or ought to be made abstractly—that is, with reference to the legal principles involved rather than with respect to how such determinations may affect special or particular interests connected with any immediate case. The decision just made by the United States Court at Chicago, reversing the judgment in Judge Landis's court, is made under this principle. It does not pretend to go into the merits of the case; it does nothing more or less than to review the Landis judgment and to determine three points of law in which that judgment is held to be an error. This reversal leaves the case open for retrial upon its merits—leaves it, in fact, precisely where it stood at the beginning, and with no reflection of prejudice either one way or the other.

The first point at which the Landis judgment is held by the appellate court to be an error relates to information concerning established transportation rates. The law requires that schedules of rates shall be published by posting in railroad stations, such schedules, of course, being subject to changes which the Interstate Commerce Commission, commonly sitting at Washington, may make at any time. The Landis judgment assumes that a shipper is bound to be informed as to the legally established rate, albeit such rate may be involved in schedules and classifications so elaborate as to be difficult of comprehension to anybody not a technical expert. Under the Landis judgment one who ships a box of eggs or a crate of grapes from Ashland, Oregon, to Sacramento would be liable to heavy penalties if he accepted the rate quoted to him by the station agent, provided such rate happened to be lower than the legally established rate. Every shipper, therefore, great and small, to save himself against possible violation of the law with the penalties attached thereto, would have personally to possess expert knowledge not only of the schedules of rates posted on the station walls, but of any changes which might possibly have been made between date of issue of such posted sheet and the date of shipment. No shipper would be safe in merely asking the agent how much there was to pay, and letting it go at that. No passenger, likewise, would be safe in buying his ticket from a point in one State to a point in another without first acquiring definite knowledge of the printed rates and of any possible subsequent changes therein by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The decision of the appellate court knocks the nonsense out of this phase of the judgment by exposing the impracticability of shippers having such technical information and the injustice of adjudging guilty one who may accept less than the published rate but who has no intent to violate the law. Inferentially it is held that a shipper is justified in accepting as the legal rate that rate which a station agent may quote to him.

The second point in the judgment of reversal is based upon the fact that Judge Landis's court construed each carload shipment in the specific case—there being something more than fourteen hundred carloads all told—a separate offense subject to the full penalty attached to the violation of the law. There is no established legal rule in the premises; and the measure adopted by Judge Landis's court is characterized as arbitrary and without any legal basis.

The third point in the judgment of reversal relates to the magnitude of the fine imposed by Judge Landis. There is nothing in the record, says the appellate court, to show that the defendant corporation before or after conviction had ever been guilty of an offense of this character; and yet, although its entire assets are not shown to be in excess of one million dollars, there was imposed a fine of $29,240,000. In the view of the appellate court, the amount of the fine is out of proportion and out of reason. Significantly this question is asked: "Would a cab-driver, convicted of violating the city law against excessive cab fares, be sentenced to pay a fine that would take his horse and cab, then leave him bankrupt many times over, unable to pay anything but the least proportion of his debts to his other creditors?" And with equal significance it is added: "It may be safely assumed that but for the relation of the defendant before the court [the Standard Oil Company of Indiana] to another corporation not before the court [the general Standard Oil Company] the court would not have measured out punishment on the basis of the facts just stated."

The mind of common sense and of common honesty will follow this reasoning with absolute approval. Possibly the general Standard Oil Company—the Oil Trust, in other words—is guilty of ten thousand offenses against equity and morals; but in this specific instance the Oil Trust was not on trial. Judge Landis's court evidently labored under a certain confusion of mind in relation to the defendant, failing to discriminate between the case in hand and the case as it would like to have had it. Judge Landis apparently was of the same mental temper as was made manifest by the overwhelming magnitude of his fine. Something of Judge Landis's spirit we have recently seen in San Francisco in the case of Judge Dunne, whose gross partisanship and manifest malice, combined with ignorance of the law, have tended most viciously to the miscarriage of justice.

The government is now very properly to take up the case against the Standard Oil Company of Indiana for retrial. And it is profoundly to be hoped that in this second effort there will be less passion, less confusion of mind and of law, with a truer sense of proportion and with care to get such a judgment as may be sustained by the courts of ultimate authority. There appears to be no question about the guilt of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana; and this being so, there ought to be no serious difficulty in getting a conviction and in defining a punishment adequate to the crime.

Mr. Hearst's Convention.

As we write on Wednesday the so-called Independence party, which is so far from being independent as to belong body, soul, and breeches to Mr. William Randolph Hearst, the yellow newspaper proprietor, is holding what it calls a national convention at Chicago. It is almost needless to say that this convention is a convention only in name and that it is national only in its pretensions. It is not in an honest sense representative of all the States or, indeed, of any of them. It is nothing more nor less than a gathering of political non-descripts, ne'er-do-weels, and nobodies, who under one influence or another, prompted by Hearst or his agents, have come together.

It hardly needs to be said that there is, in truth, no such thing as the Independence party. The little group at Chicago has been gathered together by Mr. Hearst to provide a pretext for his peculiar system of political discussion, and as a possible means of his ultimate political promotion. Ridiculous as it appears, Hearst seriously aspires to the presidency. His chances are on a par with those of Eugene Debs, James B. Weaver, and the Rev. Anna Shaw; none the less he aspires and continues to aspire. And, having under his hand a string of newspapers of wide circulation, and having prodigious wealth to draw upon, he has established a "party" all his own. Of course, no such political movement ever has succeeded or ever can succeed. The thing is futile and absurd from start to finish.

That Mr. Hearst's "party" will seriously affect either the Republican or the Democratic party in the coming campaign is unthinkable. Possibly it may present an "electoral ticket" in three or four States, but surely not in a greater number. Mr. Hearst is lavish up to a certain point, but he knows when to quit. He will finance his political movement to the point where it will serve his purpose, but no further. Nobody, therefore, need seriously regard a movement which has no logical or moral basis and which has no popular acceptance. As a political factor it looms lighter today than it will at any future time in the campaign; indeed, it would not loom at all if Mr. Hearst had not in his string of yellow newspapers the means of his own exploitation.

The Campaign.

The period of uncertainty which in presidential years always precedes active campaign operations seems more protracted than usual. It is now full five weeks since the nomination of Mr. Taft and not even yet are the lines of campaign discussion definitely laid down; nor is the plan of operations on either side sufficiently developed to make clear the general character of the coming fight. Only two things are assured, first that it is to be an economical campaign, for both sides are committed to a financial policy bound to restrict contributions for campaign uses; second, the concentration of effort will be in the West. Bryan practically abandoned the East when he consented to the nomination of Kern, discreetly choosing to make his contest in those States where individually he has least to combat and where his ideas meet the largest degree of hospitality. It will be no new thing for Democracy to enter a campaign shy of funds, since that has been its chronic condition time out of mind. Nobody knows better how to make a little money go a long way than Mr. Bryan. He may be said to be an expert in the work of forced marching under short rations, his most brilliant exploits having been in precisely this kind of campaign warfare. In recent years the Republican campaign chest has always been a full one, and it remains to be seen if the party tactics may effectively be modified to meet the new conditions.

It is, of course, not to be assumed that the Republican campaign will be wholly resourceless, since brother Charles Taft is several times a millionaire, and since, furthermore, his hopes and vanities are profoundly involved in Brother Bill's candidacy. It is said that he will finance the campaign at all points where it is proper and becoming that the brother of a candidate should assume that responsibility. In this connection, however, it is recalled that there was some grumbling when the bills came in on Taft headquarters account at Chicago, and that Brother Charles then and there declared that nobody—nobody—was authorized to hire automobiles, set up two-bit cigars, or open champagne on his account. This circumstance would seem to indicate that while the Taft family proposes "to see Brother Bill through," there is no disposition to lavish about it.

An economical campaign means less brass-banding less fireworks, fewer private trains. It means probably more effort on the part of the candidate themselves, something after the fashion set by Bryan in his former campaigns. We shall have both candidates practically on the stump during the next three months, each pleading his own cause. In this sort of warfare Bryan will be strictly at home, for above all else he is a speechmaker. Mr. Taft, while a ready and straightforward talker, is by no means an orator. His long experience on the bench, combine with his natural propensities, have given him what may be termed the judicial method as a speaker. His style is deliberate, thoughtful, compact; he wins respect and approval, but he does not, like Bryan, charm the multitude. As a campaigner, Mr. Taft wins favor by his directness and graciousness of manner, by a certain assurance of bigness of mind and temper as well as of body. In truth, he is rather a hand-shaker than a speaker, although he always speaks with respectable effect and unflinchingly says something worth remembering—at this point differing from Bryan, whose frolic outgivings are more profitably forgotten than cherished.

Mr. Bryan has found it exceedingly difficult to organize his campaign staff, and in truth the problem has not been a light one. It has seemed impossible to select for the chairmanship of the national committee a man who is willing to serve and whose name would not give offense in one quarter or another. The job was offered to William L. Douglas of Massachusetts, Ollie James of Kentucky, John E. Lamb of Indiana, James E. Campbell and Tom Johnson of Ohio, M. Wade of Iowa, and nobody knows how many others without an acceptance. The final choice of Norm E. Mack of Buffalo, a man of no special standing nationally or otherwise, was made not because Bryan really wanted Mack or because Mack really wanted the place, but because he was the only man not at odds with the ruling political forces of the West on the one hand or with "Fingy" Connors and Tim Murphy of Tammany Hall on the other. The spectacle of the Democratic candidate for the presidency submitting name after name to the Tammany leaders only to be turned down again and again has certainly not been an edifying one.

On the Republican side Chairman Hitchcock makes no secret of his purpose to concentrate the campaign effort in the West; and in addition to a campaign headquarters in Chicago, where he will spend much of his own time during the summer, he will establish offices at Denver and Salt Lake for the distribution of literature and for the direction of general campaign forces. Mr. Hitchcock is above all things a hustler, and he proposes by the middle of August "to have things going" actively in the whole region between the Mississippi River and the Sierra Nevada Mountains. With his assistants, he is now engaged in getting campaign literature into shape and enlisting speakers. His activities are very similar to those of the manager of a circus, and something of the circus spirit, including its promptitude, will no doubt mark his conduct of the campaign. Mr. Mack is as yet too new in his responsibilities to have formulated working plans; but there can be no question as to his general policy. It will be the same indicated in so many ways by Mr. Bryan. It will disregard the East to the extent of dealing with that section of the country only in a perfunctory way, and concentrate its efforts upon the West, where, according to Mr. Bryan's theory, the radical sentiment is strong enough to break down the traditional Republican majorities.

Political figurers are busily at work, but their tabulations have absolutely no value excepting as they indicate the expectations of those who formulate them. The record of former elections is, of course, overwhelmingly favorable to Republican hopes. Democratic hope rests solely upon the theory that the wave of radicalism which has been sweeping over the country has revolutionized political sentiment and will turn majorities, everywhere in the West at least, away from Republicanism to Democracy. There is, of course, no possible way to test this theory. It is wholly a matter of opinion. Speaking for itself, the Argonaut, while recognizing that the spirit of radicalism is abroad in the land, can discover no evidences of its political effectiveness to the extent of threatening political revolution. In California, for example, there is unquestionably a considerable body of radical sentiment, but it is unorganized, practically without voice or leadership, and there is not one chance in ten thousand that it will carry the State away from its traditional support of Republican policies and candidates. In our neighboring State of Oregon radicalism has gone a step further than in any other State, excepting possibly Oklahoma; but nobody familiar with conditions there and intelligent with respect to the mental attitude of the people has the slightest expectation that the electoral vote of Oregon will be given to Mr. Bryan. Looking over the field broadly, we can see no indications of revolutionary political sentiment, no reason to believe that there will be a sufficient defection from Republicanism in any State hitherto definitely Republican in its allegiance to turn its vote to Mr. Bryan. Our own observation accords with that of General Warren Keifer, veteran congressman and ex-Speaker of the House of Representatives, that nothing short of a miracle can carry Mr. Bryan into the White House. This may account for the fact that in the course of a recent talk before a church audience at Lawrence, Kansas, Mr. Bryan dwelt at length upon the subject of "Miracles."

Feminine Sensibility and Masculine Ease.

One day last week when the thermometer stood at 96 degrees on the north porch at Sagamore Hill President Roosevelt took off his coat, hung it over the back of a chair, and settled down to an afternoon of solid comfort with his books. There is no record that the women of his family bombarded him with sneers and reproaches, but there is every reason to suspect that their approval was not given to this free-and-easy hot-weather adjustment. It has not been discovered that a woman who on a summer's day will make herself comfortable from morn to dewy eve in a shirt waist can ever see rhyme, reason, or decency in a man's coming down to shirt sleeves. She will tolerate it in a college boy, but in a husband and father—never! It may be that when one gets to be President of the United States he may be a law unto himself as to the clothes he may wear or not wear on his own back porch, but we doubt it. From what we have observed of the domestic female in her administrative relations to the domestic male, she respects nothing and will concede nothing and will not be deterred from having her say about it, not though the heavens fall. Not even the example so bravely set forth by President Roosevelt is likely to save the average man from those whips and scorns of feminine contempt which invariably hail the easy arrangements by which he instinctively adjusts himself to high temperatures.

Mr. Roosevelt is by no means the first President to exemplify the convenience and comfort of shirt sleeves. Mr. Lincoln used frequently in the White House and elsewhere to go coatless; and among the most charming memories of one still living is the simple unconsciousness with which Lincoln, walking in the outskirts of Washington on a hot day, removed his coat and carried it on his arm. President Grant was fond of shirt-sleeves, and not even the frowns of a devoted wife somewhat given to public correction of his social manners could restrain him now and again from taking off his coat and making himself comfortable. Mr. Cleveland likewise gave himself license in this respect, and it is of record that once at least he received an official visitor sitting at his desk coatless and in full enjoyment of that unbuttoned ease which Emerson has so happily exploited.

But despite these illustrious instances, we are apprehensive that the weight of feminine disapproval will still interfere with the perfect freedom of man; and we must admit that however highly recommended the shirt-sleeves habit may be, there clings about it a certain suggestiveness—enough to mark the point in that best of all Chicago stories: Young Mr. Packer, visiting a cousin at Boston and being asked about the summer weather, remarked, "Well, now, Cousin Minerva, not mor'n half of all this talk about it's bein' so blamed hot out our way is so. Here it is the end of August, and durin' this whole season I don't remember havin' set down to dinner mor'n two or three times without my coat on."

"The Examiner" and Mr. Heney.

For more than a year there has been floating about a story connecting Mr. Francis J. Heney with a questionable financial transaction in conjunction with the Contra Costa Water Company. More than once this story has been brought to the Argonaut by some overzealous friend with the idea that this newspaper would be glad to "get something" that would personally discredit Mr. Heney. But the Argonaut is no scandal-monger; it has never had any wish and it has no wish now to make an issue of the character of any mere hired servant of Mr. Rudolph Spreckels or of anybody else. Whether Mr. Heney is drunk or sober, whether he killed one man or ten in Arizona, has not interested the Argonaut. It has preferred to consider Mr. Heney solely in his character of prosecutor and only in those phases of his conduct directly related to his public responsibilities and duties. But the story above referred to—or part of it—has been given to the public through the Examiner, and has, therefore, become a factor in a general contention now before the public and one which can not be ignored, however much we may wish to avoid handling an unclean thing.

The Examiner story is nothing more nor less than an exposition of a fact, attested by a formal receipt which it publishes in facsimile, that in the year 1905 Mr. Heney gave his personal receipt to the Contra Costa Water Company for the sum of $30,000 on account of "legal services." It is developed further that closely thereabout Mr. Heney received other sums in checks from the Contra Costa Water Company aggregating $12,500. Thus, on the face of things, Mr. Heney received within a brief time the sum of $42,500. The significance of these figures is large, when it is shown that the principal lawyer in the case, Judge John Garber, a man of much higher professional standing and repute, and who, as the record discloses, did the larger part of the legal work involved, received only $2500. The Examiner points out that there is a tremendous discrepancy between these payments and it has asked Mr. Heney to explain. His answer to this request, not unreasonable under the circumstances, was an outburst of rage and a violent assault upon the reporter who in the line of his work had called to interview him.

The contention of the Examiner is that a man who assumes to act as a public prosecutor in connection with a movement of high moral pretensions should come to his work with clean hands. It therefore has asked Mr. Heney to explain (1) how it came about that so large a sum was paid to him, (2) that $30,000 of it was not (as it appears) paid in the usual form of checks, and (3) what he did with the money. Let it be granted that inquiries of this kind addressed to a purely private person about his purely private affairs would smack of impertinence. But Mr. Heney is not a private person and so large a transaction with a public service corporation can not be fairly characterized as a private matter. It is no more a private matter than Mr. Calhoun's dealings with Abe Ruef or Mr. Halsey's dealings with the boodling supervisors. It belongs, in truth, to the same category of transactions; and is properly subject to inquiry under the prosecutor's own theories. Mr. Heney ought to explain; and if the transaction were one which he could explain creditably to himself, he would undoubtedly do it. With all his temperamental vices, he still knows how to be bland and candid when it suits his purpose. That he flares up in anger and talks about fighting when this transaction is brought to his attention comes pretty near being a confession that there is some rottenness back of the Examiner's facsimile receipt.

Now, the Argonaut has no intention of joining the Examiner in this muck-raking stunt. In its dealings with Mr. Heney it leaves his personal character out of the account, excepting in so far as his habits of boasting and lying, his insufferable dilatoriness, his courtroom vulgarities, and his professional blundering limit the operations of justice. But since the point has been raised, we will say that we think Mr. Heney ought, if he can do it, to show that his hands are clean. Let us say frankly that we do not believe his hands are clean. We do not believe that Mr. Heney in fact ever received on personal account the $30,000 for which he receipted. We do not believe that he can show that he received this money legitimately and used it legitimately. We suspect that the money was used either by Mr. Heney or somebody else in some disreputable way in promotion of a selfish interest. We suspect that Mr. Heney coöperated in some corrupt transaction, at least to the extent of giving his personal receipt for fictitious services as a voucher to cover an expenditure which as a matter of bookkeeping could be justified in no other way. We suspect that Mr. Heney's services in this whole matter were "legal" only under a very generous interpretation. All the circumstances indicate that his relations to the matter in question were not so much those of a lawyer as of a handy man willing to sell his name, if not in direct furtherance of corrupt practices, in concealment thereof. This is how the case looks on its surface. If Mr. Heney can make a better showing for himself he ought to do it.

Editorial Notes.

The Fresno Republican reads a lecture at once timely and sound to those who at Stockton are petitioning on some technicality for resubmission of the "wet or dry" issue to popular vote. Stockton voted for a "dry" Sunday and it ought to accept the result and try out the principle involved in it. Too frequent elections, the Republican points out, make a serious political evil. The defeated minority must submit, for "unless this is done it is not popular government." "If," the Republican goes on to say, "there is to be an election every few months the town will be in a constant turmoil. The people should understand that an election means something—that its results are not lightly to be set aside." This is good advice and it ought to be heeded. A community which submits its differences to the ballot must in good faith submit to the determinations of the ballot. Any other course is childish and silly.

Official inspectors whose business it is to take stock of the public health report that out of every hundred Chicago babies under twelve months of age nineteen died during the first twenty-two days of July. This is truly a frightful record and it may well prompt the city physician to the discussion of causes, which he has just given to the public. It was expected, he says, that in Gault Court, an Italian district, deplorably unsanitary in every rational respect, the showing would be a desperate one. But the record proves directly the reverse. Crowds are there and dirt is there, but, strange to say, the babies of the district are unaccountably healthy and strong. "Almost all of them were found feeding on breast milk—in marked contrast to where cow's milk and canned milk are the uni-diet of infants." Nature knows her business, and when nature is denied she punishes with a certainty and a swiftness which tends mightily to increase the mortality rate. It is with man precisely as with beasts of the field—those who live by the plainly written laws of nature survive and flourish in health, while those who live by artifice, die the death. Cattle highly bred, richly nourished, and carefully groomed are everywhere infected with various forms of tuberculosis, whereas these diseases are absolutely unknown on the ranges, where there are no attempts to assist nature, where the suns of summer and the blasts of winter know no mitigation. In California and throughout the United States where horses are scrupulously cared for, blanketed, and housed, splint, spavin, ringbone, and kidney distempers are universal. On the range, where nature is the sole caretaker, likewise the unassisted guardian of equine health, these disorders are all but unknown. Nature, we repeat, knows her business.

Without being especially significant, it is none the less an interesting fact that Mr. Taft's daily mail brings him a grist of letters from Democrats in various parts of the South pledging friendship and support. From Georgia, Maryland, Kentucky, Tennessee, and North Carolina there come letters from men of character and judgment maintaining that there are unquestionable prospects of Republican success in these States. In estimating the value of these letters some allowance must be made for the sanguine Southern temperament. Undoubtedly there are those in the South who are coming to see the folly of a political practice founded in obsolete issues. The Solid South will break up in time, but the time, we think, is not yet. While Bryan is in rank disfavor in many parts of the South, he may, nevertheless, safely count on every electoral vote beyond Mason and Dixon's line.

If Georgia were not so absolutely rock-ribbed in its social as well as its political foundations there would be some reason to hope for its defection from the too-long solid phalanx of a united South. Georgia is the seat of a very considerable manufacturing industry and therefore in sympathy with general Republican policies. Furthermore, Georgia contains the foremost commercial city in the South. There is intense feeling throughout the State against the radical policies fathered and enforced by Hoke Smith and which have resulted in a general paralysis of industry and business, with the natural accompaniment of universal distress. Bryanism and Hoke Smithism are duly recognized by the more intelligent elements as one and the same thing, but it is hardly possible that this knowledge is sufficiently general or the sentiments engendered by it sufficiently intense to overcome a political habit ingrained in the people of Georgia. Georgia may be likened to a man looking for work and all the while praying God that he may not find it. Georgia will vote for Bryan, but will throw up its hat when Taft is elected.

A letter from Olympia, Washington, states that the feeling grows against the direct primary. At first it was approved by the public and opposed by the politicians; but as time goes on and as the demerits of the system are demonstrated in practice, the feeling of disapproval and opposition is spreading to that large body of citizens whose interest in politics is that of getting good men in office. It is found that under the direct primary system first-class men are disinclined to enter the political field, abandoning it wholly to tricksters, traders, and self-seekers. Among other objections, the expenses of an individual campaign are enormous; and the public has learned that no public services are so costly as those provided by officials who have paid dearly for their whistles.

The personal and political attitude of Governor Hughes of New York affords an interesting contrast to that of Mr. Bryan. Governor Hughes has not wished for reelection; when he took office he abandoned absolutely his professional practice, dismissing his clients and closing his offices. The sacrifice was great, for he is relatively a poor man; furthermore his taste is for private and professional rather than for public and official life. Some months ago Governor Hughes announced that he would not be a candidate for reelection; and this statement was repeated with emphasis when he consented to allow his friends to put forward his name in connection with the presidency. But a condition has arisen in which his name is identified with the political championship of a great moral cause. For this reason, in the face of propensity and inclination, at serious sacrifice of comfort and at very considerable financial sacrifice, he now consents to renomination for the governorship. He makes his position very plain. He does not want the office for any personal reason; he would be far better off and much happier without it. But for the sake of a cause with which his name stands identified and in obedience to what is presented to him as an imperative duty, he will continue to bear the burden of public responsibilities if the people will have it so. At the same time he will not cheapen his office or cheapen himself by entering into any sort of intrigue or scramble for the nomination or for an election. It would be a mighty good thing if we had more political figures of this type in the United States, with fewer self-seekers, tricksters, and demagogues.

It is only a little while back that that particular type of jackass who throws rice in people's faces at weddings was soundly and properly horsewhipped in an Oregon town by one whose dignities had been offended. Now there is reported from the same State another and similar instance of righteous punishment for an unbearable offense. At a resort called "The Oaks," near Portland, a few nights ago, a smart youth in pursuit of what he doubtless thought a good time thrust a handful of confetti in the face of a well-behaved woman who was minding her own business, whereupon her attendant thrust forth a stiff right arm and smashed the confetti-throwing jackass full in the face. The incident has amazingly pleased every person of social decency in Oregon and is destined to wider approval. The principle involved in this case might be applied profitably in other spheres. Possibly the college youth who fires pistols and yells unceasingly in public places on football day and his feminine counterpart who blows a horn in your face are less entitled to punishment than the confetti-throwing fool, but something is coming to them.

CAMPAIGN TOPICS.

That Populism, once a live organization, is now merely a reminiscence is the view of the Philadelphia Public Ledger:

What Mr. Watson represents in the present campaign is obscure to the wisest political soothsayer. The rates of decline between 1892 and 1904 would point to a vote of insignificance in 1908. In any view it is safe to predict that the Georgia historian and statesman will not seriously affect the balance of power between the Republican and Democratic parties. His speech accepting the Populist nomination for President did not disclose a partiality of bitterness as between the two, though the Republican party, having had charge of national affairs for twelve years, presented more objects of Populist dislike and Watsonian rebuke. To the extent of his influence in the campaign Mr. Watson will help Bryan, though it may be that the discontented vote may take from Bryan most of the strength it gives to Watson. The election figures of November will place Watson little higher than he stood in 1904, and will show him at the head of a party that is hopeless and helpless.

It was inevitable that the Hobson incident at the Denver convention should receive attention in Japan. A correspondent of the New York Sun summarizes general comment in the empire concerning the topic:

The Japanese press comments guardedly upon the exclusion plank in the platform of the Democratic party at the Denver convention. The plank is generally construed as directed against the Japanese, although the wording, as received here, is somewhat general, referring to "Asiatic labor."

That there is not a more general manifestation of violent displeasure at the introduction of the plank may be attributed to the general belief here that the Democratic party in the United States is not particularly sincere in this pronouncement and that the clause was thrust into the platform mainly for the purpose of satisfying the clamorings of the labor party.

The Nippon Shimbu in an editorial says that it regrets that Bryan's repeated defeats have turned him into a mere ranting agitator. The Tokio Asahi, whose position is typical of that of the leading journals, says: "We refrain from commenting at length upon the exclusion plank adopted by the American Democratic party owing to the fact that what we might say would probably result in fanning the popular ill feeling against the United States. We wish, however, to emphasize this one fact—that the attitude of the clause amounts to a denial of Japan's sincerity in the various statements and protestations which she has made to the American government relative to the emigration of her subjects to the American States."

Too much may easily be made of the Oyster Bay influence in the coming campaign, but it seems certain to have frequent mention. This is from the New York Evening Post on the subject:

Loyalty to one's superior, to one's political creator, is ever an engaging trait. Mr. Taft has it to a notable degree. He has publicly declared that he loves Theodore Roosevelt from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet. He is also under no illusions as to whom he owes his nomination. Hence, it is but natural that he should journey to Oyster Bay to receive the presidential sanction for the views he is to express on being notified of his nomination. That way may be gratitude, but there lies also the certainty of offending many voters who will go to the polls to ballot for Taft with mingled feelings of discouragement and disgust. These are not trust magnates nor Wall-Street gamblers, as the President and the press of the West are so fond of insinuating, but thoughtful American citizens who have been repelled and alarmed by the centralizing tendencies, and the high-handed methods of the Roosevelt administration. Their votes would have made probable the success of any candidate like Johnson or Gray. They will vote reluctantly for the ex-Secretary of War, in the hope that he will stand on his own feet and be his own master. In all friendliness to Mr. Taft, he should be made to understand that it will take only a visit or two to Oyster Bay to make him a dose a trifle too strong for these men to swallow.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Taft a Better Radical Leader than Bryan.

NORDHOFF, CAL., July 26, 1908.

EDITOR ARGONAUT:—I note with interest your contention that the two great parties have preserved intact their fundamental distinctions. But the argument seems to consist in a mere pointing back to the well-known traditions, with the assumption that nothing could really disturb the line of inheritance. I confess to a feeble reverence for political continuity, and I am shallow and ridiculous enough to believe that the old party fences are hopelessly out of repair.

There are few thoughtful men in either party today who do not understand the importance of a due balance between the central powers of government and the reserve functions of the States; few who do not know that Jefferson and Hamilton were joint contributors to the national structure. And the most thoughtful, irrespective of party alignment, understand also that the strongest independence of State action in State affairs does not "weaken" but greatly strengthens "the hand of central authority."

It is notable that the old Democratic hero, Jackson, was the most famous defender of central authority against the mutiny of States, and you rightly designate Cleveland, in his energetic dealing with local rioting, as the model whom Taft is likely to follow in a like contingency. That Roosevelt has sometimes seemed to forget his constitutional limitations is due to the idiosyncracies of a powerfully hristling temperament rather than to any doctrine that centralization is Republicanism.

The hope of a Taft victory does not rest in a stiff resistance to radicalism. It rests rather in the persuasion of the voters that Taft is a better radical leader than Bryan; that he accepts their general belief that it is possible to change things fundamentally and for the people's advantage, and that he will move sanely and effectively to that end, while Bryan would waste opportunity by lack of intellectual power.

It is my hope that the election may show that a great part of those who have called themselves Democrats have perceived the shallowness of Bryan's endowment. There is more sense among the people than is shown at the party conventions. And Mr. Bryan has been on exhibition a long, long time.

Republican—Democrat, the terms mean much, historically, and also, doubtless, to you who have fought consistently and prominently under one of these standards. But many of us are thinking more about things that need doing, now and hereafter, and are somewhat careless of nomenclature.

Yours very truly,

EDWARD S. THACHER.

The New Miracle Play.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 25, 1908.

EDITOR ARGONAUT:—I would like through the medium of your paper to ask why the public has fallen prone and with uplifted hands has acclaimed "The Servant in the House" as the miracle play of modern times. Miracle—Why? Modern? Yes! The author has given us a familiar bit from the drama of life, in which ordinary characters live their lives in the ordinary way and one day awoken to the fact that their way is not Christ's way. In orthodox parlance these characters undergo a "change of heart." All this is very clear, logically led up to, and quits in keeping with our modern thought and habits.

But it would seem that Mr. Kennedy so far insults our intelligence as to think we require the Bishop of Benares disguised as the Christ to those who can see, the butler to those who can not, ready at hand to stand at the elbow of each character so that we may understand that his or her conscience has been awakened, that God has entered his or her soul.

And thus a thoroughly modern play, conveying in conventional, modern garb a perfectly clear moral lesson, is all at once clothed with mysticism, because the author has chosen to borrow an inspiration from allegorical dramatic entertainments of past centuries, and has introduced the Christ, or the symbol of Christ, or whatever else the Manson may be called, solely, we are led to think, that the world may rise up and say: "Behold the miracle play!"

I fail to see any other reason, as, through the introduction of the Christ, the moral of the play is made no clearer. I would like to add, if "The Servant in the House" is a miracle play, it is one shorn of all the poetry, the simplicity, and deep feeling which characterized the religious dramas of old. The moral of those plays was pointed through the medium of symbols; the moral of Mr. Kennedy's play requires no such medium. It reaches us through our knowledge of the ethics of the day.

Why then the Christ! However, Mr. Kennedy has succeeded. The world clamors for the unusual; he has given it to them. This is merely a protest. Very sincerely,

A FIRST-NIGHTER.

With the spirited bidding for President Roosevelt's future writings comes the suggestion that he may turn his popularity as an author to even greater remunerative account. The Boston Transcript follows out this line of speculation: "What fitter field for the activities of a man of President Roosevelt's varied capabilities and naturally editorial mind than the headship of a periodical devoted to subjects with which he is conversant and upon which he delights to write, such as, for instance, politics, domestic science, finance, hygiene, morality, sanitation, the divorce question, travel, race suicide, big game hunting, taming the horse, the habits of the cow puncher, observing the Sabbath, ornithology, the glacial period, the United States Senate, indoor athletics, the rich malefactor, the army and navy, architecture, forestry, motherhood, camping out, and one hundred others. There is, in fact, almost no subject save the tariff upon which President Roosevelt is not ready to speak or write entertainingly at a moment's notice."

Congressman Burton will be a candidate before the next session of the Ohio legislature to succeed J. B. Foraker in the United States Senate. Mr. Burton has as yet issued no formal statement as to his attitude, but he has indicated to his friends that he would make a strong bid for the honor. Myron T. Herrick, former governor, it is understood will not be a candidate at this time.

SIR ROBERT HART'S GOOD-BYE.

Impression Left in Peking by His Unique Personality and Quiet, Effective Methods.

No non-political event for years has so affected China in general and Peking in particular as the departure for Europe of Sir Robert Hart, the veteran Inspector-General of the Chinese Imperial Maritime Customs. A familiar landmark is missing now that he is gone; a niche is emptied of its unique personality.

Of his reputation the world knows a great deal, of his work perhaps less, still something, but of the man himself nothing at all. He was always so mysterious, this slight old man with his bright eyes, his grizzled hair, and his pointed beard, who sat at his desk for nearly half a century with unremitting industry—always at the same desk, for he hated change. I know he took a whimsical pride in pointing out to me once two dates, "1854-1908," written in his fantastic hand in the wood and underneath a verse of which he was particularly fond:

If thou hast yesterday thy duty done,
And thereby cleared firm footing for today,
Whatever clouds may dark tomorrow's sun,
Thou shalt not miss thy solitary way.

An infinite capacity for taking pains was certainly the particular form of genius which he possessed, and this very talent was probably one of the reasons why he was so mysterious to the world in general. He had no time, even had he had the wish, to advertise himself. Besides, the whole lesson of Chinese life and society—and he certainly was greatly influenced by his surroundings—is towards self-effacement, not self-glorification in personal matters. A man's reputation should not be made by the newspapers—but strangely enough by the talk of his servants. It speaks well for his moderation, his lack of chi or excitability, and his good temper, that, after being in his household for nearly thirty years, all his domestics gave the inspector-general an excellent "character." "We have found you a very satisfactory master," said they—which sounds strange in our ears, but is the Celestial way of doing things.

He had the most simple tastes of any man I ever knew. He ate less than even Horace Fletcher, and drank nothing but one claret glass of whisky and soda in a day. Waste was always abhorrent to him, and if a guest at his table left a glass of wine untouched or a course uneaten in his plate, the I.-G.—as he was familiarly called—was annoyed. Not that he was in the least miserly—far from it. He gave away a fortune during his long life in China, but his generous spirit disliked to see useful things go unused.

The one extravagance he permitted himself was a private band of Chinese musicians, who, under the able leadership of a Portuguese bandmaster, played Wagner and rag-time with equal understanding and spirit. This band, founded in the late '80s, was the mother of half the bands in North China. Yuan Shih Kai's military band, and I do not know how many more besides, were organized by musicians lent by Sir Robert Hart. The Boxer outbreak in 1900, however, scattered his men temporarily. Of one, the chief cornet-player, a very pretty story, as true as dramatic, is told. During those terrible weeks after the siege was over troops poured daily into the Chinese capital. Soldiers of all nationalities, come to renew the little garrison of diplomats, remained to plunder the prostrate city. A party in search of loot one day broke into a big dwelling-house. These plunderers were none too gentle in their methods, and as soon as the gates were burst in the Chinese women fled to throw themselves down the wells and the men retreated as fast as they could. Suddenly, in the midst of the panic and confusion, a bugle call rang loud and clear on the air. The European soldiers, recognizing the "retreat," which they thought meant a superior force descending upon them, left the place in haste. It was, however, only the I.-G.'s cornet player, whose presence of mind had saved the situation.

Peking society rather irreverently called Sir Robert Hart's musicians "the Cotton Wool Band," because they were never allowed to play later than twelve o'clock at night. However good a time dancers might be having, they found themselves without music at midnight, and no amount of persuasion would bring an "extra." This hard and fast rule was really due to Sir Robert's consideration for others. He had such a horror of asking too much from those he employed that he was far too lenient with them. I myself have overheard his servants say to one another, "What shall we do when master goes? We have had too easy a time ever to take another place." The old huter, a Cantonese, who had been with the I.-G. for almost fifty years, who had visited Chinese Gordon with him, who had waited on Li Hung Chang, and gone home to the Paris Exhibition of 1878, would remark proudly when asked what his duties were: "Morning time my brush master's clothes; evening time my bring him his whisky and water." Ah Fong was nearly as much of a curio as his famous master, and Sir Robert used to remark with a sigh when a letter of introduction was handed him, "Here's another globe-trotter to see the Peking curios."

These letters of introduction were sometimes a tax on a busy man, and especially on a man who worked in a regular routine and could not bear to be put out of it. People who live in the stress and hurry and bustle of a big American or European city can scarcely realize what a hold habit takes on a man who lives in the Far East. Sir Robert, particularly, was the slave of habit.

His daily walks in his fine garden—the one green spot in dusty Peking—his early hours, his uninterrupted work, meant a great deal to him. Even his tea could only be drunk from one particular cup. Globe-trotters consequently he sent with one of his juniors to see the sights he himself had never seen. "I have always meant to go about Peking," he would say, "but I have never had time." The beautiful Temple of Heaven, which travelers cross an ocean to look at, he would not enter. "The foreigners forced an entrance there after 1900," he often remarked; "the Chinese never wanted us to go in and defile the most sacred place in the empire—and I for one do not care to go where I am not wanted." He always strongly disapproved of polo being played in the park there, but his protest was overruled by those less careful of the sensibilities of others.

What he did for the Chinese can not be over-estimated, and it is pleasant to write that they were grateful. The empress-dowager herself said to him when she received him in audience after the siege: "But for you we would not be here today." Her words were literally true. It was he who, seeing the danger of inaction, induced Prince Ching to return in 1900 and treat with the foreign ministers. It was he again who never rested until the emperor and the empress-dowager returned to their empty thrones. "Urge the court to come back," was the substance of his advice from the first. "The people at this crisis need their sovereign." Also—though this is little known—it was he who arranged that food be sent into the palace for the wives of the three emperors who had been left behind in Peking and who were threatened with starvation because the allied generals were afraid to enter the palace, largely because of their jealousy of one another.

His personal wishes he was accustomed to sacrifice to his idea of duty. Thus for thirty years he never felt free to return to Europe, and for more than a quarter of a century he did not see his wife and children. Finally, insomnia forced him to lay down the burden of affairs. Like Gladstone, who suffered in the same way, he had overtaxed his brain.

I shall never forget, nor will any one else who was present, the day he left Peking. It was a beautiful bright morning with a typical north China sky, cloudless and of dazzling blue. The railway station was a blaze of color. Every nationality had sent a guard of honor—a compliment almost unprecedented in the case of a private individual and a civilian. There were his own nationals in the central position—a company of splendid Highlanders with pipers, and stretching away down the platform there were American marines, Italian sailors, Dutch marines, and Japanese. And of course there were Chinese, three detachments of them looking very well in their new khaki uniforms. Two of the detachments brought their bands, and Sir Robert's own band had come of their own accord to play "Auld Lang Syne." Besides there were a score of high Chinese officials, and every diplomat in Peking, as well as the inevitable correspondents and camera fiends. At the head of the platform his sedan chair was put down and he stepped out looking so small and pale and thin and ill. The ordeal before him required moral courage, and those who stood watching him feared that the strain might be too great for him. Think what it meant—a break with a lifetime's work and habits, a good-bye with all the finality that seventy-four years inevitably puts into a parting. One moment he stood beside the chair with a puzzled, half-frightened look on his face, then he turned to the commanding officer, and, saying "I am ready," walked steadily down the line of saluting troops while the bands played "Home Sweet Home." Just as quietly he said good-bye to the Chinese officials with whom he had been associated for years; then turned to the Europeans whom he had known, to all of whom he had done many kindnesses and few of whom could say "bon voyage" dry-eyed. At last he stepped on to the train and slowly drew away from the crowd, bowing again and again in his modest way, while those left behind felt it a privilege to have known a man who could at the same time be great and simple. CHARLES LORRIMER.

PEKING, June, 1908.

General Felix Agnus, publisher of the Baltimore American, has recently received credit for a friendly service, accomplished at the expense of much trouble and money, which had been a secret for years. At the time of the Sampson-Schley controversy, General Agnus took a deep interest in the affairs of his friend Schley, and hearing that President McKinley was about to take official action recognizing superior merit in the commander who was absent and merely constructively a participant in the battle off Santiago, he entered the lists to prevent any slight to the man who stayed and fought. He sent out a force of special writers to gather all the information possible about Sampson and Schley, had their articles put in type, and printed a single copy of the matter as an issue of the American. The sample issue he carried to the President and it was Mr. McKinley's consideration of this presentation that resulted in justice to Admiral Schley. There was only one copy printed of the special edition.

The German Ministry of Marine has begun preparations for the complete fortification of Heligoland, for which £1,500,000 has been granted by the Reichstag.

The transient hotel population of New York is figured at 250,000 people a day. The hotel properties are valued at over $80,000,000.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Generals Stoessel and Nebogatoff are now confined in the fortress of St. Peter and Paul, together with the naval commanders Grigorief and Lischin.

Ettore Ferrari of Rome, the foremost sculptor of Italy, whose greatest work is the equestrian statue of Victor Emanuel, has completed a statue of Verdi, which will stand in Fairmont Park, Philadelphia, the gift of Italian residents of that city.

Henry L. Palmer, president of a Milwaukee life insurance company for thirty-four years, has resigned his position at the rare old age of eighty-nine, and in such full possession of his faculties that it is proposed to give him an advisory position as chairman of the board of trustees.

Miss Evelyn Longman of New York, who made the great Winged Victory that surmounted the dome of Festival Hall at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, has won the $14,000 prize for the design for the bronze doors of the Annapolis Naval Academy chapel. Thirty-three men were competitors.

Commander Robert S. Peary sailed July 17 from Sydney, N. S., on the steamer Roosevelt on another attempt to reach the North Pole. His last remark was that he expected to accomplish his purpose. The Roosevelt steamed away to the north with the pennant of the New York Yacht Club at her foremast and the United States ensign at her stern.

Prince Sidkyong Tulku, heir-apparent of the Maharajah of Sikkim, a principality of Tibet, recently arrived in New York on a tour around the world. He will some day succeed his father as ruler of Sikkim, which is a small but powerful country between Nepal and Bhutan. It is the chief entrance to Tibet, and therefore of value to the English. The prince is a student of Pembroke College, Oxford, and his friends call him "Sikkim."

Two of Tolstoy's grandchildren, Count Loulou Tolstoy, a black-eyed, charming little boy of five, and his sister, Sonia, aged perhaps seven, are at present staying in England. Their mother has lived in England for some time, and the children speak English and Russian equally well. It is an odd fact that none of Tolstoy's children seem to have any marked literary gift, although all of them have wayward strains of genius, manifesting itself mostly in a talent for music.

Isaac Charles Johnson, the inventor of Portland cement, is still living in Gravesend, England, and active, at the age of ninety-eight. He was born in the year 1810, when George III was king and Jefferson was President, and when Napoleon was at the zenith of his power. Mr. Johnson won an education under many difficulties, as his parents were poor. In early manhood he became an architect, and a house which he built in the Elizabethan style is still standing at Swanscourt in Kent. It was at this time that he first invented Portland cement, which was first introduced into this country by Levi P. Morton.

Dr. Bernard Moses, professor of political science in the University of California, has been appointed by Secretary of State Root one of the commission representing the United States at the Scientific Congress at Santiago, Chile, which meets next December. Professor Moses will also be the representative of the University of California at the Pan-American Congress, with Dr. Heber D. Curtis, astronomer at the Lick Observatory. Professor Moses has been abroad since May and is now in Paris. He is one of the most widely known professors of the university and is a recognized authority on the governments of South America.

Two princesses, representatives of the only real American royalty, descendants of that Massasoit whose word was law to thirty villages and 30,000 red men, are living in poverty on the shores of Lake Assawampsett, Massachusetts. They are Teweelma and Wootonekanuske. An effort is being made to secure for these last of the royal blood of the Wampanoags a material recognition of their rights and of the services which their ancestor, the mighty sachem Massasoit, performed for the pioneers of New England. For without Massasoit's friendship and protection the struggling colonists would have been swept from the land.

Menelek, "King of Kings of Ethiopia, Conquering Lion of the Tribe of Judah," has chosen as his successor his young grandson, Lig Eyassu or Yasu, the son of his younger daughter, a lad now about twelve years old. His father is Ras Michael, a powerful prince and governor of the Provinces of Wollo, Barona, and Aussa. Youths mature early in Abyssinia, and Lig (more properly Lij, a title equivalent to esquire) Yasu has apparently shown such qualities as justify his selection as the future ruler of the turbulent Abyssinians. Menelek is now sixty-four; he has been ruler of Abyssinia nineteen years; he has greatly consolidated his power, and doubtless felt that the time had come when the uncertainty as to his successor should be put at rest. His only son has been dead several years. Since 1841 no sovereign of the old royal line has occupied the throne. Theodore, John, and Menelek himself all won the throne by the sword. Unlike Theodore and John, Menelek, however, is of royal lineage. His ancestors have been kings of Shoa since that country was conquered by the Moslems at the close of the seventeenth century. Moreover, he claims kinship with the old emperor, traditionally descended from the son of Solomon and the Queen of Sheba.

A THOUSAND DRINKS PER DAY.

By Jerome A. Hart.

XXIV.

For two years, ever since Daniel Burke had taken the legislature by the throat and choked it into submission, the State political pot had been in constant agitation. William Wyley, being the only senator representing the State in the national capital, had retained absolute control of the Federal patronage. It was his to parcel out the political loaves and fishes. It was his to make or mar each petty great man in each rural bailiwick. And now the stubborn Burke—who if not elected had at least defeated all of his other rivals two years before—was prepared to measure swords with Wyley. It was to be a battle of giants.

For days before the official opening of the legislature, the lieutenants of the two chieftains were on hand at the capital.

"Headquarters" were prepared, where open decanters, open boxes of cigars, and open-handed hospitality were the rule. In fact, the legislature had scarcely been more than two or three days in the capital when an observant newspaper statistician computed its alcoholic consumption at one thousand drinks per day. It was therefore at once dubbed by the people the "Legislature of a Thousand Drinks."

It was fitting that so mellow a legislature should be convened by a governor who was neither a Puritan nor a purist. The governor was reported to have a leaning toward the convivial glass, while his weird grammar was also believed to have advanced his political fortunes. He had a passion for proclamations; he was inordinately fond of making speeches; when the legislature sat he had a daily flux of messages. As he always began his many proclamations with the phrase "I, John Jackson, Governor of the State," he was universally known as "I John."

The governor was a bachelor—no lady had as yet conferred her hand upon his excellency, nor had him confer upon her the title of "Mrs. I. John." Thus, lacking a lady executive, the governor had enlisted the wife of his colleague, the lieutenant-governor, to assist him in receiving at festive times.

The small official group, headed by the governor and Mrs. Lieutenant-Governor, received the guests with that curious mixture of cordiality and gloom characteristic of our official-social affairs. At times the governor would recognize a crony, and, forgetting himself, would cry "Hello, Jim!" But suddenly bethinking himself of possible impairment of his dignity, he would grow solemn, and shake the confused crony's hand stiffly and formally.

There were many among the guests who continued to arrive and present their respects to his excellency, the women subsequently seating themselves unaccompanied by the men, who made haste to flee from the fair ones and to group themselves in the doorways. A decorous hush pervaded the assemblage; all conversation was conducted in a low tone, as if the gathering momentarily expected the arrival of the remains. It was not until the first notes of the "Grand gubernatorial March" were heard, and the men began making their way to claim partners for the first dance, that a certain timid gayety began to develop on the ball-room floor. The phrase "on the floor" is used advisedly; certain of the gentlemen present—mainly married—had paid their rapid respects, briskly dumped their wives, and made haste to the smoking-rooms, where with unlimited punch, wine, and cigars, they felt they could defy the boredom even of a ball. Here gayety was unconfined; here mirth and jollity, poker and politics reigned from the earliest to the latest hour.

When the strains of the "Governor's March" had died away the dancers hastened to take their places for the "State Quadrille." In the set adjoining this collection of notables was Eugene Yarrow, who had solicited the honor of Sophia Lucretia's hand for the first dance. He did not tell the lady so, but he had only asked her when he observed that Diana Wayne, for whose arrival he anxiously looked, had not yet come. Also, he had noted with some surprise that Burke, on entering, did not hasten to Miss Leigh's side, as was his custom, but had bowed to her formally, then made his way to the smoking-room.

"Senator Burke looks somewhat preoccupied this evening," said Eugene, gazing after him.

"Indeed?" replied Sophia Lucretia, interrogatively, "I had not noticed."

But she had. Eugene had observed her watching Burke as he passed. He changed the subject.

"When we reach the figure cavalier seul, I want you to look at the governor," he said. "The moment he hears 'gentlemen forward' he becomes a different being. He is transformed. Ah, here it is!" And as he himself advanced and saluted toward his vis-à-vis, Eugene regarded the governor with amused eyes.

The chief magistrate thrust his right hand into his pouter-pigeon bosom; with inconceivable rapidity for a fat man, he nimbly skipped to right, and then to left; beneath the heavy overhang of his globular white waistcoat his black-clad legs flashed back and forth like those of the muse of the many twinkling feet; pausing in the centre of the set, he bowed profoundly, and returned to his place in a similar series of zigzag skips. The whole was performed with a stern dignity, ponderous gravity, an unsmiling face.

As Sophia Lucretia returned to her place after "making a cheese" in an elaborate courtesy to her vis-à-vis, she whispered to Yarrow:

"I never dreamed the governor was so nimble. He clings to the old pigeon-wings, which are going out so fast."

"Don't they seem ridiculous now?" cried Eugene, salaaming again to his vis-à-vis.

"Very; but so many of the old ball-room dances seem ridiculous, now that they are going out, don't they?"

"Yes; I greatly prefer the simple programmes of today to the elaborate and ceremonial dances which were the rule when I was a boy," said Eugene—"long before your time," he added, gallantly.

The "simple programmes" of which he spoke would have stricken terror to a débutante of today. The repertoire of a ball-room belle when Yarrow spoke necessitated a familiarity with many dances—the waltz, the polka, the schottische, the mazourka, the redowa, the polka mazourka, the varsoviennne, the galop, and other round dances; and the reel, the contradance, the plain quadrille, the waltz quadrille, the basket quadrille, the Horse Guards Quadrille, and the lancers quadrille, among square dances; also "The German," as the cotillion was called. There were other dances, but these few and simple dances were absolutely essential.

When the last strains of the "state quadrille" were heard, and the couples in each set had formally saluted each other before breaking up, Eugene escorted Sophia Lucretia back to her place. That lively lady was loath to lose him, until she should have assembled her usual little court, and made haste to engage him in conversation before he could escape. And as it was a political ball, the talk that night was more political than social.

"Tell me, Mr. Yarrow," asked Sophia Lucretia, "what is the latest news about the senatorial fight?"

"I am not the right man to ask; your friend, Senator Burke, could answer you better than I. Shall I go and bring him here?" And he watched her face change slightly as she replied.

"Oh, no," she cried, with seeming carelessness, "tell me what you hear."

"But I am of the North, you know, and my political gossip may seem tainted to your Southern ears," replied Eugene, smiling.

"Come, come, Mr. Yarrow! You need not pretend you don't hear the inside news. You are welcome in both camps, and a partisan of neither."

"Your own circle of slaves is not without followers from both camps," said Eugene, pointedly.

The beauty bridled slightly. The obvious allusion to Burke and Tower was not displeasing to her.

"Now, don't say disagreeable things, Mr. Yarrow. Tell me, there's a good fellow. You meet everybody and you know everything. Tell me who is going to be elected!"

"I must violate a vow if I do so. Will you promise not to betray my confidence if I tell you?"

"I promise," she cried, eagerly.

"Then I will tell you," said Eugene, with an air of burlesque mystery. "It is Senator Burke."

"Pshaw!" cried the spoiled beauty, "I don't mean for the long term. Everybody knows that Senator Burke has that secure. I mean who is to be elected for the short term?"

"I think that it needs a more experienced politician than I to answer that. Here is Colonel Quirk—probably he can tell you."

"It is my belief, ma'am," said Colonel Quirk, oracularly, "that at first there will be a deadlock. This will be followed by a compromise, which will result in the election of Senator Burke and the reelection of Senator Wyley to succeed himself."

"But will it not be rather humiliating for Senator Wyley to be reelected for only four years instead of six?"

"Perhaps it will be, ma'am," replied Colonel Quirk, "perhaps it will. But it is a dinged sight better to be elected for four years than not to be elected at all."

Under cover of Colonel Quirk's loud laughter over his own sally, Eugene seized the opportunity to make his way to the point where the chief magistrate and his lady-lieutenant were still receiving. He had noted the arrival of Mrs. Lyndon and Diana, and hastened to greet them. At first Tower was with them, but when Yarrow came the judge joined the group around Sophia Lucretia. Diana, it seemed, had already become engaged for a dance, and her partner took her away.

Eugene was wont punctiliously to prefer to Mrs. Lyndon a request for a dance, while Mrs. Lyndon with equal punctilio always professed that her dancing days were over. When this little point of punctilio, like the fencers' salute, was settled between these two friends, they either engaged blades or fell to amicable discussion. Tonight Mrs. Lyndon asked Eugene for news of the senatorial fight.

"The number of contestants is increasing," he replied, "there are now six. First, of course, comes Senator Wyley, hoping to succeed himself. As you know, he not only represents the Southern wing of the Democratic party, but is in favor of making this a slave State. His rival, Senator Burke, is chieftain of the Northern Democrats."

"I know about those two candidates, but who are the others?"

"The most prominent are Governor Milton and Congressman Keller. Judge Fox, who is Arthur Alden's uncle, is a candidate, and has a handful of votes; but he is generally believed to be ready to retire and throw his votes to Burke. Colonel Quirk is also nominally a candidate, but he is believed to occupy the same accommodating position to Wyley that Fox does to Burke."

"But there are two senatorial seats to fill, are there not?"

"Yes. Two years ago Burke tried to make the legislature elect a Federal senator three years in advance of a vacancy. He failed. But he did succeed in forcing the legislature to adjourn without electing any one. Hence there has been a vacant seat in the Senate for two years."

"That would leave Senator Wyley without a colleague until now. He has been in entire control, has he not?"

"Yes. He certainly ought to be grateful to Burke for that, but I have never heard him say so," said Yarrow, without a smile.

"But why should there be such bitter rivalry between the two men, when there are two seats waiting?—that is, a place for each of them."

"First, because each of them wants the coming six-year term, instead of the old term shortened to four years by the deadlock of two years ago. And then, both are unwilling to have a rival seated even on the steps of the throne."

"You mean that each would rather have a weak colleague, I suppose?"

"More than that—each wants a henchman of his own for a colleague—some pliant, docile creature, who would not oppose him, and who would carry out his wishes in all things."

"And what will be the result?" she inquired.

"Very probably a compromise, by which these two strong men will both be elected. Then the truce will be of short duration. Two weak men could get along as colleagues; so could a weak man and a strong one; but not two imperious men like these."

Here they were interrupted by the return of Diana, whose partner was bringing her back to Mrs. Lyndon's side, and Yarrow speedily claimed her for a dance and took her away. As he did so, Judge Tower returned to Mrs. Lyndon.

Sophia Lucretia, who was very fond of dancing, had deserted her grim admirer without hesitation the moment the music began, and whirled away on the arm of a youth whom the judge with a scowl of astonishment remarked to himself could not be more than nineteen.

From the judge's manner Mrs. Lyndon divined that he had something particular to say to her.

"I see that young Alden is here tonight," he began. "I very much wish that you would influence Diana to avoid him."

Mrs. Lyndon looked at him in surprise. "Why? What has he done?" she asked.

"If he had done nothing else except to be born," replied the judge, acidly, "that in itself would be an offense. He is a Yankee."

"But so is Eugene Yarrow a Yankee," protested Mrs. Lyndon, "yet he is dancing with Diana now, and you said nothing as he led her away."

"But Alden is a Massachusetts Yankee," demurred the judge.

"And so is Mr. Yarrow," maintained Mrs. Lyndon, "he was born in Boston, he says. Do you object to him for that?"

There was an awkward pause. After a moment's hesitation the judge went on: "No, I confess I do not. I like Yarrow. He is a fine fellow, even if he is a Yankee. But he has none of those absurd and bitter prejudices against the South and against our Southern institutions which the bigoted Yankees have."

"Then you consider Mr. Alden a bigoted Yankee?" replied Mrs. Lyndon, reflectively. "You may be right—I have never heard him talk on these topics."

"Yes, I am sure he is," replied the judge, decidedly. "I know him very little, but he is a kinsman of that fellow, Fox, whom I believe to be a black Republican and an abolitionist, even if he does masquerade as a Democrat. I don't like their breed. Besides these two men—one in the legislature, the other on the outside—are working hard to defeat the candidate whom I am bound in honor to support. I do not wish to seem harsh or unreasonable, but you would please me greatly if you would influence Diana to discourage the attentions of young Alden."

Any further talk on such tender topics as Diana's choice in young men was cut short by the return of the young lady herself, flushed and smiling from a vigorous polka with Yarrow. When the two men had gone, Mrs. Lyndon began:

"Diana, I see young Alden is here tonight."

Diana colored and was silent, but Mrs. Lyndon thought that her face grew hard.

"Has the judge ever said anything to you about him?" Mrs. Lyndon went on.

"Yes," admitted Diana, reluctantly, "he did—once."

"What did he say?"

"Well, he said that Mr. Alden's attentions to me were distasteful to him," acknowledged Diana.

"And what did you say?"

"I told him that if he thought Mr. Alden was particularly attentive to me, it was a mistake."

"If it is a mistake there are others who share the mistaken impression with the judge—perhaps Mr. Alden among the number. But what did you reply?"

"I told him that we were merely acquaintances, and had met but rarely. Still, he seemed to think we are more, and he told me that Mr. Alden is a Yankee and an abolitionist and that Mr. Alden's uncle is his political enemy."

"And what did you say to that?"

"I told him that Mr. Yarrow is a Yankee, too," said Diana, hesitantly.

"I don't see what that has to do with Mr. Alden."

"Well," Diana struggled on, "if uncle likes Mr. Yarrow, who is a Yankee, I don't see why he should hate Mr. Alden, who is a Yankee, too. Do you?"

"It is probably a case of Dr. Fell. Still, it seems to me unnecessary to complicate an already complex situation by bringing Mr. Yarrow into it. Do you think, Diana, you are acting quite right by these two young men?"

"I'm sure I don't know what you mean," returned Diana, after a pause, her face downcast and her lip beginning to tremble.

"Oh, yes, you do, Diana. You know they are warm friends, and you also know they are both in love with you. You can not accept them both. From what you have just told me of the judge's mood it would seem as if there were one of them whom you may not keep, even as an acquaintance. Don't you think you run the risk of causing a quarrel between these two fine young men—and a needless quarrel?"

"I don't know what I can do—several times I have told him—" and here she stopped in confusion.

"But I know—or rather I can guess. You have told Mr. Yarrow several times that you can only be a friend to him. But I am afraid you haven't told him in such good, set terms as to make him lose hope. Now I know you want to keep him as a friend, and a good friend he is, and a dear fellow besides. But believe me, Diana dear, one of the most hopeless tasks that we women ever put our hands to is to fashion a friendship out of the shipwreck of a passion."

Diana's color deepened, but she bent her head lower and did not reply.

"I shall say no more," said Mrs. Lyndon, kindly. "These perplexities—nay, trials—come to many girls, but no one can settle them except the girl herself. But be careful, Diana—you have two men's happiness at stake, as well as your own."

Diana looked up, impatiently. "I'm sure I don't know how I can please you and the judge both," she said, somewhat defiantly. "I can't help it if—that is, I am not to blame if they—oh, dear! I don't know what to do!"

"Do what you think is right, Diana," said Mrs. Lyndon, gravely, "but be sure you do nothing without reflection."

"If you and the judge think I would marry Mr. Alden if he—if he asked me, why I just wouldn't, so there!" cried Diana, with a ring in her voice which betokened both defiance and anger.

"Hush, Diana! Here he comes now!" said Mrs. Lyndon in a soothing tone.

Gazing after the unconscious Arthur as he led Diana away, he beaming, she still chafing with resentment, Mrs. Lyndon could not help thinking that his arrival was extremely ill-timed.

"This Yankee lover is a maladroït," she mused. "If ever a girl flew danger-signals, it was Diana then. I verily believe she is going to sit out a dance with him for the express purpose of refusing him. She has it in her look."

As Mrs. Lyndon noticed Eugene Yarrow crossing the ball-room floor, evidently making his way toward her, her mind wove him into the warp of her musings: "Has Eugene anything to do with Diana's sudden determination, I wonder? For she has that in her eye which bodes ill for young Alden. Or if it is not Eugene, what can have made her so suddenly grow cool toward Alden? Can it be the judge's rebuke? But why should she allow herself to be so profoundly impressed by the disapproval of an elderly guardian? When I was a girl the most effectual aid to a lover was parental disapproval. Well, it is not my affair, but if she refuses Alden I shan't be sorry. Perhaps then she may take pity on Eugene. He is a dear fellow, even if he does drink too much champagne. I can see by his color that he has been drinking too much now." And as Eugene joined her, she said significantly, "You are just from the smoking-room—did you see anything of Judge Tower there? It is getting late, and I must be taking Diana home."

Eugene looked at her in surprise. "I come from the smoking-room, but how you divined it I do not know. Ah, yes—by the smell of tobacco which clings around me. The judge? Let me see—yes, I saw him in a card-room, seated in a circle of grave and reverend signors, of whom Senator Wyley was one, evidently discussing matters of grave import to the State."

Of a truth, Yarrow had guessed aright. Judge Tower also had scented a council. When he entered the smoking-room he saw a group seated apart at a poker table. But his practiced eye told him that they were there not so much for poker as for talk.

"Good-evening, judge," said the chieftain of "The Chivalry"—for it was Senator Wyley—"have you any news?"

It was, indeed, well for Wyley that his henchmen had not heard the boastings of Burke over the governorship. He had received with open scorn Wyley's secret offer to let Burke "name the governor" if Burke withdrew his opposition to Wyley as senator. Burke had even repeated to Sophia Lucretia his scornful message, with a half intimation that she was at liberty to repeat it "to Wyley's friends"—meaning Judge Tower. That lively lady at first thought of doing so; but fearing that it would cause some sort of an explosion, she abandoned the idea. She knew that her two saturnine admirers possessed demoniac tempers, which she had no particular desire to rouse. Hence she had prudently kept her counsel, and said nothing to Tower of Burke's message.

It was well that she had refrained. For as the new arrival looked around the room where Wyley, the inscrutable, sat at a card-table surrounded by his lieutenants, Tower saw among them two avowed candidates for the governorship; he knew of several others among Wyley's followers who also looked for that honor at his hands. Had these loyal lieutenants suspected that, to save his own political skin, Wyley was willing to barter off their coveted reward, there would have been defection and revolt. But the wise Wyley did not tell them everything.

"Good-evening, gentlemen," responded Tower. "You ask if there is any news. The most important item, and one betokening a marked change in the situation, is the gain of a ballot to a leading candidate."

His remarks were accorded a keen attention, for the vote was already closed, and a single ballot might change it. He was plied with questions by three or four at once.

"What candidate is it?" "Who has changed his vote?" "What delegation is it?"

"Fox is the candidate, and his gain is due to the arrival of his nephew, young Alden, representative from El Dorado." Thus the laconic Tower.

A laugh went up, but Wyley did not join. "A vote for Fox is a vote for Burke," he said, sententiously, "for Fox is merely a Burke stool-pigeon. When the proper time arrives Fox will throw his vote to his master."

"What does he expect to get for the sale of his six votes?" asked Colquhoun.

"He hopes to get a Federal judgeship," replied Wyley; "his application is already filed, and is supported by two congressmen. He expects that, thus endorsed, his appointment will immediately follow on Burke's favorable recommendation of him to the President of the United States."

Again the group broke into laughter.

"Even if Burke is elected," said Quirk, "it does not follow that he will have the President's ear."

"It certainly does not," agreed Wyley, speaking with emphasis. "The President already has loyal advisers, in whose judgment and in whose motives he has confidence. Why, then, should he take into his inner councils this mudsill mechanic, spawned in the New York gutters?"

A murmur of approval ran around the circle.

"Another item of news," resumed Tower, "is that a pronounced squatter movement has begun in Sacramento."

"Is there any connection between the squatter movement here and the Vigilantes down at the Bay?" asked Colquhoun.

"No direct connection, I should think," replied Tower, "except that one encourages the other. Both are based on defiance of law and order. The movement there is leveled at life and liberty; here at property."

"Then do you think, senator," said Colquhoun, addressing Wyley, "that it is well for us to oppose the squatters here openly, or to oppose them secretly, or to remain neutral?"

"I think," said Wyley, judicially, "that it would be advisable to go further—a little mild encouragement of the squatters here would be well, politically speaking. Down at the Bay, where the land-owners are mostly Americans and voters, I would talk the other way—oppose the squatters, and shout for the sacredness of land titles."

"You consider that course inadvisable here?" asked Quirk.

"I do not see that it could gain us any support here," returned Wyley. "Nearly all the land around here is claimed by Helmont. He is not a citizen, has no vote, and has in his employ some hundreds of greasers who have no votes, either. The squatters all have votes. If they take his land away from him I don't see how it hurts us, and our mild encouragement of the movement will make us solid with the squatters."

There was an appreciative pause. It was evident that every man in the circle was deeply impressed by this admirable bit of practical politics. At last Colquhoun spoke:

"But shall we keep this dark down at the Bay?"

"More than that," replied their chieftain; "not only conceal our course up here, but down there we must talk and act the other way."

"That will not mean upholding the Vigilantes at the Bay, will it?" demanded Tower.

"Not at all," replied Colquhoun, suavely, thus relieving Wyley of the necessity for replying. "There is no affiliation between the two bodies—absolutely none. In fact, the leaders of the old Vigilante Committee down at the Bay have often threatened to call their men together and take steps against the squatters there."

"What sort of men are the leaders?" inquired Quirk.

"Principally commercial men," replied Wyley. "Yes," said Tower, gruffly, "they are a set of d—d pork merchants, and like the swine in the Scriptures they ought to be driven down their own hills into the sea."

"Is it your desire, senator," asked Quirk, deferentially, of Wyley, "that your supporters should make no attempt to oppose the Vigilante movement down there?"

"For the present I think it well to leave it unchecked," replied Wyley. "True, I am opposed to the movement, as are practically all of our party. But the lines on which the Vigilantes there are at present working all converge in one direction—they point to Burke and his followers. The Vigilantes are threatening to arrest and banish certain ballot-box stuffers, among whom are the notorious Mike Clancy, who is a devoted follower of Burke. I have even heard it rumored that they will attack the election returns of the Bay City delegates, which delegation Burke now carries in his breeches' pocket."

"But with what practical result?" asked Tower.

"With this result," replied Wyley, "while it is not proved that any State court could or would go behind the returns of a city election for legislators, still a showing of fraud in such an election might impel the United States Senate, properly advised, to refuse a seat to one claiming to be a senator whose election was attended with such a fraud."

A deep hush fell upon the gathering—a hush of admiration. The possibilities of thus killing off a political foe at the end of a long battle, up to that point successfully waged by him—of destroying him just as he was about to taste the sweets of victory—this appealed so strongly to these grizzled veterans of politics that their eyes glistened as they gazed respectfully and admiringly at their leader.

The silence was broken by Quirk. "Then you think, senator," he exclaimed, "that we can beat Burke even if he is elected?"

"I think," assented Wyley, "that even if Burke be elected he may find his election a barren one. This for two reasons; first, the Senate may not seat him; second, even if it does, the President may not advise with him."

A chorus of delighted exclamations arose from around the circle, and Colquhoun cried: "Then you think that you will not have to divide the Federal patronage with this Tammany tough?"

"It is my belief," replied Wyley, oracularly, "that if we both are elected there will be no change in the pleasant and cordial relations now existing between the President and myself. I believe that the President will continue to honor me by seeking my counsel in naming gentlemen to positions of dignity and profit in this State. And you, gentlemen, you who are my devoted adherents, need have no apprehension as to what my counsel shall be. But it is getting late. I must present my respects to his excellency the governor and take my departure. Good-night, gentlemen," and the great leader stalked in dignity back to the ball-room, the little group of adherents following his departing form with grateful and expectant eyes.

Tower, like his chieftain, concluded that the hour was growing late, and that he would gather up his women-kind and depart. He set forth, therefore, to find Mrs. Lyndon and her charge. But on his way he encountered Diana, and much to his displeasure, he saw that she was accompanied by Arthur Alden. He paused before them, and they stopped. His stiff greeting did not seem to attract the attention of the young man. The judge thought that Alden seemed agitated, and rather wondered at the brief and formal nature of his farewell.

When Alden had gone, the judge gave Diana his arm and they walked on in silence in search of Mrs. Lyndon. At last the judge spoke:

"Diana," said he, gravely, "I am much hurt—more, I am much displeased. After my expression to you of an earnest wish, it seems to me most inconsiderate that you should, almost within the hour, run counter to my wishes, and again accept the attentions of this young man."

It was so long before she replied that the judge at last looked at her inquiringly. He saw that although her face was pale, her eyes were burning.

"You need have no fear, sir," she replied, slowly. "I will heed your wishes. You will never again have occasion to complain of my being in company with Mr. Arthur Alden."

The judge was somewhat struck by the intensity of her tone, and surmised that something had happened which he was destined not to know. But he was in some things a wise man, and therefore thought that if the end which he desired had been accomplished, it mattered little how. Furthermore, he was one of those who believe that this is a man's world, and that the things which happen to women, except birth and death, are really matters of but little moment, after all.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Copyright 1908 by Jerome A. Hart.

The mobilization of all British warships in home waters, available for immediate service, was completed June 30 for the annual naval manœuvres, and Admiral Lord Charles Beresford found himself in supreme command of a total of not less than 301 ships, with an aggregate complement of 68,000 officers and men. The newspapers, while they proclaim that the array of such a force in the North Sea is in no manner connected with Germany, do not fail incidentally to compare this, the greatest fleet ever assembled in the history of the world, with the fleet of sixty-two vessels with which Germany recently carried out her North Sea manœuvres.

Captain A. G. Olsen, the other officers of the ship, and twelve passengers, join in a sworn statement that on June 24, while the steamship Livingstone was in the Gulf of Mexico, out from Galveston, a sea serpent 200 feet long was seen resting on the water not more than sixty feet from the vessel. It was dark-brown in color, as large around as a flour-barrel, and had a head six feet long and three feet wide. Most terrifying of all the particulars is the description of the rattles with which the serpent's tale was adorned, and which made a noise like the discharge of a Gatling gun when the sea wonder finally swam away.

Parsee merchants have a monopoly of the manufacture of camphor oil at Foochow, China, controlling seventeen distilleries, and export most of the product to India.

THE MARVELOUS BOY.

Charles Edward Russell Throws New Light Upon Thomas Chatterton.

It is strange that a century and a quarter should elapse between the death of Thomas Chatterton and this first argued and elaborate effort to defend "the memory of one of the greatest minds and sweetest souls that ever dwelt upon earth." But it is still more strange that Thomas Chatterton should need a defense. Out of what depths of self-righteousness and shameless Phariseism came these savage aspersions upon the deeds of a child who did no more than hide his shining genius under an anonymity or a subterfuge that alone would give it the recognition that it deserved. Chatterton today is better known for his fault than for his virtue and many of those who prate the most glibly of his "forgery" and of his suicide would be unable to recite from memory, or even to identify, two consecutive lines of his verse, as exquisite as any of his day and generation.

Mr. Russell has given us an impressive hook of nearly three hundred pages. It is indeed "the story of a strange life," a story that makes us wonder by what fateful mishap, by what tragic miscalculation of the gods, so glorious a young career was driven to hopeless wreck and ruin. But it is also a story of which the shame still hangs darkly upon a civilization that has made but scant amends for the outrage that it inflicted upon this divine child, for the neglect and the contumely and the blows that it showered upon him while alive, and for the opprobrium that is the monument to his memory. Mr. Russell could not have chosen a more worthy work than to hang this wreath upon the shrine of Chatterton, nor could it have been better done.

Almost the first example of Chatterton's work given to us in the book is "A Hymn for Christmas Day," written when the boy was about ten years old. The first two stanzas will show us how truly the metal rings:

Almight Framer of the Skies!
O let our pure devotion rise,
Like incense in Thy sight!
Wrapt in impenetrable shade
The texture of our souls was made
Till Thy command gave light.

The sun of glory gleamed, the ray
Defined the darkness into day,
And hid the vapors fly;
Impelled by His eternal love,
He left His palaces above
To cheer our gloomy sky.

Chatterton was about fifteen years of age when he produced those astonishing documents that have earned him the name of "forger." The extent of his responsibility, the extent of the connivance of Barrett, are points examined by the author at considerable length. What became of documents that, if authentic, must have had an extraordinary value? Copies have remained to us, but where are the originals? Barrett himself was an antiquarian. No one better than he was able to judge of their worth, and that they have utterly disappeared must be taken as evidence of Barrett's guilty complicity and perhaps even of his instigation:

And this is but a small part of the cloud of doubt that enfolds all this melancholy matter. It is chiefly because of the fabricated documents he gave to Barrett that the name "forger" has been fastened upon Thomas Chatterton. Most of his other experiments in the antique never saw the light until after his death, and even injustice so gross as has been his portion could hardly charge him with posthumous forgery. But are we so sure that he was the responsible forger in the case of the Barrett documents? Everybody has accepted the story, no one has investigated it. Certainly if that drama were to be re-enacted now we should hesitate to condemn any fifteen-year-old boy on such evidence and in such circumstances. For instance, Barrett was Chatterton's most frequent companion; we know that the boy looked upon the man with more respect and confidence than he felt for any other person in Bristol. At one time he desired to study medicine and to be articulated to the surgeon; he was almost daily in the surgeon's house. Admitting it to be quite possible that the boy should be willing to deceive and impose upon the man by giving him false documents, it was extremely improbable that the man should be deceived in any such way. Why? Because there was no other person in Bristol, if in England, so well informed as to the difference between genuine old documents and fabricated old documents.

Moreover, the forged documents were supposed to have come from the Muniment Room in Bristol and from the old record chest known as Canynge's Coffin. But no one was more familiar with Canynge's Coffin than was Barrett himself. He was, indeed, about the last man in England who could have been so deceived:

He never tells us what became of them, but this at least is clear and certain, that before Chatterton came into Barrett's life Barrett was expert in the nature of the genuine old documents from Canynge's Coffin. He had handled, examined, purchased, and copied hundreds of them, and being by all accounts a thrifty soul, there was no one less likely to be deceived about them. How could he fail to detect Chatterton's imitations? Of such of these as have come to light few are in the least likely to deceive any one that has eyes good enough to see a church by daylight. And here was Barrett, the shrewd bargainer, the canny purveyor of other things of this nature, taken in by that has never taken in anybody else. To be sure any of the documents were genuine, that is true enough, but as to the rest, either Barrett did not look at them with the least attention or he knew quite well that they were manufactured and was willing to profit in his way by their making. This is the inevitable conclusion. On the whole, perhaps, we are all wrong in our zeal to denounce this boy. Perhaps some of the odium that for more than a century has hung about his name belongs elsewhere. William Barrett was then a mature man; he was dealing with a boy fourteen, fifteen years old, a boy without training or experience. Suppose we cease to castigate the boy "literary forger" and pay some attention to the man that had at the very least abundant reason to know of the forgeries and never made the slightest effort to discourage them. This man was then engaged in writing a work in which the authenticity of his statements was not likely to be questioned. If there be any kind of a history that is wholly apt to escape too curious comment, it is one designed for local consumption and flattering to the local vanity. How could he suspect that this boy would ever be the means of throwing a white light upon his book? His heart was set upon acquiring parchments, there is reason to think he was not disposed to be over-scrupulous about them, and when we discover, as we shall further on, that in one of the fabrications Chatterton had Barrett's active assistance, and that in the one deception that has done the boy the most harm he had Barrett's cooperation and advice, we may well suspect that from the beginning the world has been on the track of the wrong offender.

When we come to Walpole's share of this discreditable business the author, metaphorically speaking, takes his gloves off and gives to that pretentious knave some of the castigation that he merits. Chatterton sent some of his documents to Walpole, who received them kindly, but when he found that the boy was of lowly estate he wrote him an insulting letter, made no use of the manuscripts, and ignored all application for their return. Then Chatterton wrote him an indignant letter of reproof:

Walpole said afterward that on the receipt of this revolutionary and insulting communication he took his pen in hand and began a letter of admonition and expostulation, but probably concluding that the young rufian was beyond hope and incorrigible, he flung the letter he had begun into the fire, and snapping up Chatterton's manuscripts and letters he returned them without a word. In later years, when he came to deny that he had ever received certain of these letters, the fact that he did not save them was of use to him. In the minds of some persons it helped to relieve the figure he cut, which was really one of the sorriest in literary history. The boy was perfectly right in his conclusion that if Walpole had not known of the condition of his correspondent he would not have dared to use him so. Whatever might have been the verdict of Gray and Mason, there could be no excuse for returning the manuscripts without an acknowledgment, and no possible palliation for retaining them so long. Even Coleridge, when he had fallen from grace and turned reactionary, gaged at this. But, on the whole, the Earl of Oxford has escaped lightly; on the whole, the abundant literature of denunciation that the Chatterton story has called forth seems to have been unevenly distributed, and one would be pleased to record that a part of the wrath that fell upon the memory of the young apprentice had been reserved for the knavish nobleman.

For a time the boy poet did well in London, well at least for one who was little used to receive aught but blows and insults. Then, from certain political causes, his fortunes waned and we find him reduced to the extremities of want. For sixteen songs purchased by the Town and Country Magazine he received ten shillings and sixpence, and a like amount for the "Consulid." His entire earnings during his best month at that period were less than five pounds. In June they were less than four pounds, but yet his diary shows that he lent trifling sums to those whose necessities were still more pressing.

Then comes the final act of the tragedy, pitiful beyond all words:

This was on August 24, 1770, when he was seventeen years and nine months old. Some time before he had obtained a little arsenic, some persons have supposed of Cross, on the plea that he wished to poison the rats in his chamber. On this evening he retired as usual to his room. They heard him walking about there a little, but so he did often. Through what solemn agony he passed in those hours is only to be surmised. He opened his little trunk and took from it manuscript after manuscript and tore each into minute fragments, the fruits of his labor, the dear children of his thoughts that he had reared in his loneliness and pain, the hurt father turning upon and rending all. And that done, he mixed his arsenic with water and drank it, and, throwing himself upon his little bed, he died.

In the morning they broke open his door and found him there, dead in the ruins of so much hope. The world of London roared on and never knew how great a soul it had trampled under its careless heel. Of him lying dead in his attic chamber a scant half-dozen strangers took heed. The coroner came and held a perfunctory inquest, making no notes and in haste to be gone: Mrs. Angell, her husband, and a neighbor testified, the verdict of suicide was reached, the permit issued, the coroner went about his business. The men from the parish workhouse came with a rude coffin and bore off the poor little body, and that night it went to the potter's field of the Shoe Lane workhouse. Nobody took note of the event; the newspapers printed no word of it, Wilkes on the continent, Fell and Edmunds in prison, heard nothing about it; and on the registry of St. Andrew, Holborn, in which parish lay Brooke street and Shoe Lane, the rare melodist thus made mute was entered as "William Chatterton."

Yet at that moment Dr. Fry, of Oxford, the one man in all England that had perceived the surpassing wonder of the Rowley poems, whether true or false, was preparing a journey to Bristol to find this marvelous young man and assist him if he should need help. And yet at that moment the miserly Hamilton owed him several pounds for work he had accepted and that he continued to publish for more than a year.

And so the story ends. A concluding chapter shows us some little of what the world owes to Chatterton and of a public appreciation that came all too late. It may be said that it was Chatterton's misfortune to come into the world too soon and that we should today welcome a genius that was despised and rejected a century ago. But should we, in very truth?

"Thomas Chatterton, the Marvellous Boy," by Charles Edward Russell. Illustrated. Published by Moffat, Yard & Co., New York; $2.50.

CURRENT VERSE.

The Closing Door.

Why will you lock the garden door
That long swung wide for me?
I seek to enter in no more,
But do not turn the key.

I only ask to stand outside
And through the doorway see
That roses, as of old, abide
Where once you walked with me;

To see the happy lilies grow—
Ah! happy once were we!
And watch the joyous hawthorne blow
Upon our trysting-tree.

So do not lock the door that is
The gate of heaven to me;
But leave a little space for bliss,
And throw away the key.

—Rhoda Hero Dunn, in Smart Set.

Today and Tomorrow.

Today and tomorrow and the days that come after,
Springtime and summer and two seasons more;
The night full of tears and the day full of laughter

And dreams that come in and go out of the door.

O Time that is fleeing too fast for our capture,
While the heart of our dreams beholds it pass by—

The yearning and hurning, the desire and the rapture

Till we home to the earth and we home to the sky.

O harvest of dreams! when the sowing is over
And fulfillment of growth gives over all plying,
Ah, down the long sunset of life the heart-rover Turns twilight to weeping and darkness to sighing.

We gather the harvest of dreams and we store them
Deep down in our hearts for the hunger that craves.

When springtime and summer, the laughter that bore them,
Sail away like a ship that we watch on the waves.

—William Stanley Braithwaite.

At Dawn.

How many years, how many generations,
Have heard that sign in the dawn,
When the dark earth yearns to the unforgotten nations

And the old loves withdrawn,
Old loves, old lovers, wonderful and unnumbered
As waves on the wine-dark sea,
'Neath the tall white towers of Troy and the temples that slumbered
In Thessaly?

When the mists divide with the dawn o'er those glittering waters,
Do they gaze over unroared seas—
Naiad and nymph and the woodland's rose-crowned daughters

And the Oceanides?
Do they sing together, perchance, in that diamond splendor,

That world of dawn and dew,
With eyelids twitching to tears and with eyes grown tender,

The sweet old songs they knew,
The songs of Greece? Ah, with harp-strings mute do they falter

As the earth like a small star pales?
When the heroes launch their ship by the smoking altar

Does a memory lure their sails?
Far, far away do their hearts resume the story
That never on earth was told.

When all those urgent oars on the waste of glory
Cast up its gold?
—Alfred Noyes, in "The Golden Hynde and Other Poems."

A Good Time.

I've had a good time.
Life came with rosy cheeks and tender song
Across the morning fields to play with me.
And, oh, how glad we were, and romped along
And laughed, and kissed each other by the sea.

I've had a good time.
Love came and met me half-way down the road:
Love went away, but there remained with me
A little dream to help me bear my load,
A something more to watch for by the sea.

I've had a good time.
Death came and took a rosebud from my yard;
But after that, I think there walked with me,
To prove me how the thing was not so hard,
An angel here of evenings by the sea.

I've had a good time.
A good, good time.
Nobody knows how good a time but me,
With nights and days of revel and of rhyme,
And tears and love and longing by the sea.

—Mounee Byrd, in Harper's Magazine.

It is announced by a Christiania paper that Dr. Koht and Dr. Elias, who were selected by Henrik Ibsen's relatives to edit the works of the famous dramatist, have discovered a hitherto unknown manuscript, a novel entitled
"The Prisoner of Akershus." It is intended to publish the book at once.

We would win you for a customer if you knew how well qualified we are to fit you with glasses.

HIRSCH & KAISER

218 Post St.

Opticians

EDUCATIONAL

IRVING INSTITUTE Boarding and Day School for Girls

2126 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

Music, languages, art, elocution. Kindergarten, primary, grammar, high school, and advanced grades. Accredited by the universities. Twenty-ninth year. Non-sectarian. Pupils admitted at any time. New term opens Monday, August 3.

MISS ELLA M. PINKHAM, Principal.

CALIFORNIA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

Irving Institute Building
Full corps of teachers in every department.
Send for catalogue.
HERMANN GENSS, President.

THE HAMLIN SCHOOL

A Boarding and Day School for Girls

Miss Hamlin announces the reopening of the school August 10. It is accredited by the California Universities and by Eastern colleges. Advanced courses of study are offered to High School graduates and to those who have left school, with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to a school diploma.

Classes in Instrumental and Vocal Music and in Drawing and Painting are formed and facilities are given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basket Ball, etc. For particulars address

MISS HAMLIN,
2230 Pacific Ave., San Francisco.

Oakland Conservatory of Music

1170 Madison Street, Oakland, Cal.

The largest, oldest established, and most thoroughly equipped school of genuine musical instruction on the Pacific Coast.

Conducted on the lines of the most noted European and Eastern schools.
Full prospectus on application.
Director, ADOLF GREGORY.

MANZANITA HALL

Palo Alto, Cal.

Prepares boys for the universities or business life. Ample grounds. Three buildings. Illus. catalogue. 16th year. Opens Aug. 24.
J. LEROY DIXON, Principal.

BERKELEY PREPARATORY SCHOOL

Boarding and Day School for Boys

2207 Dwight Way, Berkeley, Cal.

Fall term opens August 24
J. H. WHITE, Principal

SNELL SEMINARY 2721 Channing Way

Berkeley

Girls' boarding and day school. Certificate admits to University of California, Stanford, and Eastern colleges. Opens August 10. Superior location. Outdoor life.
MRS. EDNA SNELL POULSON, Principal

MILLS COLLEGE FOR YOUNG WOMEN

Only Woman's College on Pacific Coast. Offers same advantages as best Eastern institutions. Full Collegiate course. Degrees conferred. For three years only, the three upper classes of the Seminary Department, offering preparation for Mills College, the Universities and Eastern Colleges, will be continued. (Accredited.) Special opportunities in Domestic Science, Music and Art. Earnest Christian influences; non-sectarian; all forms of healthful outdoor amusements. Ideal location in beautiful Oakland hills. Fall term begins August 12, 1908. For Catalog and Brochure of views address,
MRS. C. T. MILLS, President, Mills College P. O., California

MORRISTOWN SCHOOL, Morristown, N. J.

College Preparatory Boarding School for Boys

Small classes. Individual attention. Gymnasium, quarter-mile track, athletic fields and tennis courts. Especially healthful location, an hour from New York.
F. C. WOODMAN, Headmaster.

Miss Harker's School

Home and Day School for Girls. Certificate admits to College. Excellent Departments in Music and Art. New building, thoroughly modern, steam heated. Address,
MISS HARKER, Palo Alto, Cal.

PENNSYLVANIA, Ogontz School P. O.

OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES

Twenty minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. The late Mr. Jay Cooke's fine property. MISS SYLVIA J. EASTMAN, MISS ABBY A. SUTHERLAND, Principals.

CASTILLEJA SCHOOL

Palo Alto, California

Home and day school for girls. University preparatory. Outdoor physical training a special feature. Opens August 24. Illustrated catalogue.
MISS MARY I. LOCKEY, A. B., Principal.

FREE KINDERGARTEN NORMAL SCHOOL

Golden Gate Kindergarten Association

(Accredited by State Board of Education)
MISS VIRGINIA FITCH, President
MISS ANNA M. STOVALL, Principal
Address: 1844 Polk Street

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

By Sidney G. P. Coryn.

A Man of Genius, by M. P. Willcocks. Published by the John Lane Company, New York; $1.50.

This successful story is not only strong in incident, but as a picture of Devonshire life it has very few equals. The author knows the folk talk and the homely, outspoken humor of the west country to perfection, and he knows how to touch his story with the primitive mysticism that is on the border line of superstition.

The man of genius is Ambrose Velly, a farmer's son who would be an architect, but who sees himself sentenced to a life term at the plough. The woman in the case is Thyrsa, who is a sort of domestic help to Mrs. Velly, but when Thyrsa is sent away for fear of sentimental complications with the only son the mischief has already been done. Thyrsa is a remarkable girl, beautiful, uneducated, and with a hunger for maternity that is almost the only expression of a not unbecoming inner nature. Out of love for Ambrose she hides her plight and would probably have gone down the much-trodden path to ruin but for the interference of Damaris Westaway, who is herself in love with Ambrose, but who sacrifices herself to save her rival.

The story is rich in strong characters, but that of Thyrsa, animal and angel, is one to be remembered. The picture of Ambrose honestly loving two women at the same time is true to nature, but few novelists have had the courage to say so. But Ambrose does his whole duty as soon as he sees it, and Thyrsa need not fear that as his wife she will discredit him among the new friends that his architectural successes must bring him. Damaris is less convincingly drawn, and although she too has beauty, and education to boot, she is less winsome than Thyrsa, perhaps because she has not the "come hither" in her eye that we are assured by one of the characters is the strongest weapon in a woman's armory.

The Life and Voyages of Joseph Wiggins, F. R. G. S., by Henry Johnson. Published by E. P. Dutton & Co., New York; $5.

The record of a man of whom it has been fairly said that he was "worthy to be placed beside Hawkins and Froberisher" ought not to go unappreciated, even at a time when physical courage and endurance are denied some of their rightful recognition. Captain Wiggins was one of the most daring navigators and explorers of the age, the discoverer of the Kara Sea route to Siberia, the explorer of the Yenesei and of the whole of that little known territory from Archangel eastward that he did so much to chart and to open. When he began his work practically nothing was known of trans-Ural Russia, and Siberia was no more than a land of exile and horror. There was no trade with Siberia, and the fact that several million dollars are now invested in the resources of that country is due to the dauntless resolution of Captain Wiggins.

But the supreme interest of the book is not so much in the tangible results that it records as in the picture of the man himself and of an indomitable character that defied failure and wrested success from conditions that seemed hopeless. Captain Wiggins was a fine sailor, a man who compelled admiration and obedience by the force of an almost blameless disposition.

The book, copiously illustrated, is a model of what a biography should be. Captain Wiggins could desire no better monument to his life's work than this straightforward account of what he tried to do and of what he did. There is no hook of its kind that gives a more clear-cut portrait of a brave and a good man.

Motoring Abroad, by Frank Presbrey. Published by the Outing Publishing Company, New York; $2.

The prevalence of automobilio foreignensis is the excuse offered by the author for his book. Having himself experienced the innumerable doubts, perplexities, and conjectures naturally attendant upon an automobile trip in foreign parts, and having solved them practically and experimentally, he undertakes like a good citizen to share his acquirements with others and to make easy the road for those who would follow after him.

The trip undertaken by the author and his wife was through Normandy, Brittany, the chateau country of Touraine, England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales. It was certainly well chosen and the account of it now before us is not only admirably written, but it can hardly fail to be effective guide, philosopher, and friend to the automobilist who may be fired by ambition to go and do likewise. As a guide-book it would be valuable to those who travel more prosaically by train, but to those who aspire to the added delights of the road and, it may be confessed, its added difficulties, it must appeal as a very present help in time of trouble.

Lincoln in the Telegraph Office, by David Homer Bates. Published by the Century Company, New York; $2.

This fascinating book is a valuable contribution to Lincoln personalia. The author was operator, cipher-operator, and manager of the War Department telegraph office from 1861 to 1866. Throughout the whole of that stressful period Lincoln was a daily, sometimes an hourly, visitor at the office in search of the latest news.

Mr. Bates has done his work exceedingly well and to the complete suppression of his own personality. The point of view from which he observed the President was an unique one, including as it did the times of the utmost stress and when the need for self-restraint was at its least. Indeed, his relations with Lincoln may be almost described as domestic. Practically the whole drama of the struggle was performed under the author's eye in its confidential as well as in its public aspects, and too much praise can hardly be given to the discrimination and the strong human sympathy with which it is written.

Roman Catholic and Protestant Bibles Compared, edited by Melancthon Williams Jacobus, D. D. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York; $1.25.

This volume is composed of the Gould prize essays, revised and supplemented with appendices and a complete bibliography.

The net result of these scholarly essays is "to bring into bold relief the great difference between, and the otherwise practical unity of, the Roman Catholic and the Protestant Bibles."

This verdict, otherwise a little dubious, is elucidated by the further statement that the "great difference" is the presence in the Roman Catholic Bible of the Apocrypha, and we are reminded that the American Revised Version does not even allude to the existence of these writings. The conclusion is a useful one. Apart from the large body of research contained in this volume and now available in convenient form, the Gould essays will do a useful work in emphasizing the value of the Apocryphal writings and the strange and culpable indifference toward them that is shown by Protestant theology, an indifference that seems to depend not upon reason, but upon prejudice.

The Grey Knight, by Mrs. Henry De La Pasture. Published by E. P. Dutton & Co., New York; $1.50.

This story has pleasing features, but it is some way behind other works by Mrs. De La Pasture, and notably "Deborah of Tod's." Louise Owen has been married as a girl to a confirmed invalid, and when she is ultimately released by the death of her husband she is still young and handsome and has acquired all the virtues of devotion and self-denial. Undertaking the work of nursing, for which she is so well qualified, she is summoned to the sick bed of Sir Harry Gwyn, and of course the usual romance follows. It is all very well and easily told, and if it possesses no distinct or insistent features, it is eminently readable.

A History of Literature.

"The Cambridge History of English Literature," now in course of manufacture by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York, will easily become the standard work of its kind, so far as may be judged from the first two volumes that are now ready for delivery. The books themselves are of fine appearance, the type is bold and legible, and there is every evidence of careful literary excellence and of erudite and exhaustive research.

The scope of this monumental work is sufficiently indicated by the advance list of volumes, of which there will be fourteen. Volume I, now ready, deals with the "Beginnings to the Cycles of Romance." Then we have "From Chaucer to the Renaissance," also ready, and this will be followed by "Early Elizabethan Literature," "The Elizabethan and the Jacobean Drama," in two volumes, and "Jacobean Poetry and Prose," "The Caroline Age," and "The Age of Dryden, of Swift, and of Pope," have a volume each, and then will come "The Rise of the Novel," "The French Revolution and Georgian Era," "The Romantic Revival," and "The Victorian Age," in two volumes.

The object of the editors has been to give a connected account of the successive movements of English literature so handled as to insure adequate treatment of secondary writers, instead of their being overshadowed by a few great names. Note was to be taken of the influence of foreign literatures, and of English upon foreign literatures, and each chapter was to be furnished with a sufficient bibliography.

The plan as outlined has been faithfully followed in the published volumes. In the first volume, for example, we have twenty chapters, the first by A. R. Waller, M. A., on "The Beginnings," followed by others, all by the best men, on such topics as "Runes and Manuscripts," "Alfred and the Old English Prose," "The Franciscans of Oxford," "The Arthurian Legend," "Metrical Romances," and "Transition English." Professor Gollancz contributes a chapter on "Pearl," "Cleanness," "Patience," and "Sir Gawayne," and Professor George Saintsbury on "The Prosody of Old and Middle English." That no pains have been spared to secure the aid of the best men and the ripest scholarship is evident enough, and we may congratulate ourselves on a work that will certainly hold the field for many years to come. Price, per volume, $2.50 net.

New Publications.

Harper & Brothers, New York, have published "The Vicissitudes of Evangeline," by Elinor Glyn. Price, $1.50.

"The Vivians," by Edwin Barrett. Published by the Neale Publishing Company, New York and Washington; $1.50.

From Charles G. D. Roberts comes another fascinating animal book, entitled "The House in the Water." But the characters are not all of the water kind. There are bears and moose, as well as beaver, and they are none the less delightful because they are drawn with accurate hand and without strain upon the credulity. The book is published by L. C. Page & Co., Boston. Price, $1.50.

Those who covet the delight of a country home, even though business must still be attended to in the town, should read "The Small Country Place," by Samuel T. Maynard, published by the J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. The book is written for those who have no intention to become farmers, but who want the intelligent delights of a country home as the background to city occupations. The book contains all sorts of information on house and garden, all of it of the common-sense and practical kind, while the profuse illustrations are a valuable feature.

The American Book Company, New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago, has published an edition of Swift's "Gulliver's Travels," "retold" for children. The retelling is well done, but we can only deplore the mutilation of a classic that in the majority of cases must prevent it from ever being read in its original form. Books that are unsuited for the use of children had better be left untouched for later years. The price of the book is 35 cents.

John Jay Chapman has written "Four Plays for Children" in blank verse, of a quality and general literary excellence far above the pabulum usually supposed to be suitable for young minds. The plays are entitled "The Lost Prince," "The Hermits," "King Ithuriel," and "Christmas in Leipsig." The simplicity of the stage settings and the merit of the compositions should commend them widely. The volume is published by Moffat, Yard & Co., New York. Price, $1.

SOUPS

Stews and Hashes are given just that "finishing touch" which makes a dish perfect, by using

LEA & PERRINS SAUCE

THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

It is a delicate seasoning for all kinds of Fish, Meats, Game, Salads, Cheese and Chafing Dish Cooking. It gives appetizing relish to an otherwise insipid dish. For over Seventy Years it has been the favorite sauce.

See that Lea & Perrins signature is on wrapper and label Beware of inferior sauces put up in similar bottles

John Duncan's Sons, Agents, New York

BACK EAST

EXCURSIONS

ROUND TRIP RATES

Atchison, Kas.....$60.00	Kansas City, Mo...$60.00	Omaha, Neb.....$60.00
Baltimore, Md.....107.50	Leavenworth, Kas.. 60.00	Pacific Junction, Ia. 60.00
Boston, Mass.....110.50	Memphis, Tenn.... 67.50	Philadelphia, Pa...108.50
Chicago, Ill..... 72.50	Mincola, Tex..... 60.00	Sioux City, Ia..... 63.90
Council Bluffs, Ia. 60.00	Minneapolis, Minn. 73.50	St. Joseph, Mo.... 60.00
Duluth, Minn..... 79.50	New Orleans, La... 67.50	St. Louis, Mo..... 67.50
Houston, Tex..... 60.00	New York, N. Y...108.50	St. Paul, Minn.... 73.50
		Washington, D. C..107.50

On Sale August 17-18-24-25. September 15-16.

Colorado Springs, Colo., $55.00; Denver, Colo., $55.00; Pueblo, Colo., $55.00. On Sale September 14-15.

Montreal, Que., $108.50; Toronto, Canada, $94.40. On Sale August 17-18-24-25.

Let me make your sleeping-car reservation early and explain details.

F. W. PRINCE, C. T. A., 673 Market Street

J. J. WARNER, 1112 Broadway, Oakland

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.

The show at the Princess Theatre may be recommended as a striking example of theatrical skill in the transference of vitality. Certain it is that the author of "The Chaperons" did not put into his work anything that could pass inspection as a vital element. When he had finished with it a careful observer of effervescent descriptive power would have confined himself to the statement that it was in two acts. Then the composer framed up some tunes that could be hung on or slipped in anywhere; and the music is not bad, especially the reminiscences of "The Pirates of Penzance" and "La Fille de Mme. Angot."

But it is indeed a desperate situation even in mock musical comedy that can not be saved by such artists as William Burress, May Boley, Arthur Cunningham, and Oscar Apfel, aided and abetted by the liberal policy of the Princess management, the intelligent and painstaking efforts of Stage Manager Lask, and the ability of Musical Director Simonson. Comedian Burress in the play is an artistic adventurer with a brogue and little opportunity to use it. May Boley carries her scenes by perfect poise and personal charm. Cunningham is happy in his make-up and his songs. Apfel is a capable but cautious sight-seer and spender. Zoe Barnett has an idiotic rôle, perhaps the worst in the list, but, strange to say of her, she adds emphasis to its vociferous vacancy. Evelyn Frances Kellogg, Christina Nielsen, and Sarah Edwards are all that can be desired in appearance. The chorus was never in greater force or more elaborately and charmingly costumed.

"The Chaperons" will run all next week and then give place to "The Girl from Paris."

Henry Miller has faith in the discriminating judgment of San Francisco playgoers. In presenting Percy MacKaye's new comedy, "Mater," at the Van Ness Theatre next week, for the first time on any stage, he relies upon knowledge and sentiment that he has tested in the same way more than once, and on each occasion with gratifying results.

The play is a new departure for Mr. MacKaye, who found inspiration for his earlier works in poetical themes and the gloom of tragedy, for it is a drama of modern life, amusing in its tangle of identities and purposes, and of timely interest since it deals with political plots and counter-plots. Its title, "Mater," comes from the efforts of a clever mother to win success for her son in an exciting campaign.

Mr. Miller will play the part of Congressman Cullen, a modern statesman and practical politician, a rôle in striking contrast with that of Stephen Ghent in "The Great Divide." That his characterization will be clear-cut and strong, a moving personality, none will doubt who hold in memory, as so many do, the vivid conceptions he has presented during the years he has honored San Francisco with his art and his appreciation.

Isabel Irving will be the Mater, a woman of wit and delicate perception, but with a firm grasp of important questions, having been specially engaged to create the part. Frederick Lewis will originate the rôle of Michael, the idealistic and aspiring son. Hazel MacKaye, sister of the author and daughter of Steele MacKaye, the dramatist whose name was familiar to every play-goer thirty years ago, will have a prominent part.

In the old days, as now, it was the policy of the Alcazar Theatre management to present a new attraction every week, but occasionally public favor was shown with such overpowering insistence for a peculiarly popular play that the regular one-week run was extended. When "The Prisoner of Zenda" was last produced at the O'Farrell-Street Alcazar of happy memory, it made that kind of a record, for, although it was not new to San Francisco, it was given with such an excellently balanced cast and with so perfect an atmosphere that it held the stage for five weeks. White Whittlesey was the Rudolf Rassendyl on that occasion and he will take the same rôle in the revival of the play next week at the New Alcazar Theatre.

Mr. Whittlesey is particularly suited to the romantic situations in which the hero of "The Prisoner of Zenda" is involved, and has made the characterization all his own. His support will be good throughout. Bessie Barriscale is assigned to portray the Princess Flavia, and Stage Director Fred J. Butler will again be seen as Sapt. All the Alcazar favorites are well bestowed. The management will sustain the reputation of the playhouse in their attention to the details of the production.

The bill at the Orpheum for the week beginning with the Sunday matinée will be an attractive one. Will M. Cressy and Blanche Dayne, who have just returned from a pleasure tour of the Hawaiian Islands, have been prevailed upon to play a brief engagement. They will appear in Mr. Cressy's best effort, "The Village Lawyer," which presents certain types of New England character that are reproductions of village folk he knew in his boyish days in Bradford, New Hampshire. A particularly good feature of the coming programme will be Jesse L. Lasky's musical production, "The Military Octet," and "The Girl with the Baton," which is one of the most pretentious novelties in vaudeville. Besides a mechanical staff of five is required the services of eleven trained musicians, and their tuneful numbers are introduced in appropriate settings. A unique musical act will be introduced by Ines and Taki, Italian musicians, vocalists as well as instrumental soloists. The Dancing Mitchells, the Creole, Black Prince, and the Octoroon, will provide a quarter of an hour of excellent divertissement with effective and even gorgeous changes of costume. Next week will be the last of the Basque Grand Opera Quartet, Wilbur Mack and Nella Walker, who will present a new sketch, Fentelle and Carr, and of that fine character comedian, Ben Welch, in his Hebrew and Italian imitations.

The final performances of "The Servant in the House" will be given on Saturday afternoon and Saturday night at the Van Ness Theatre. The company leaves for the East on Sunday and Henry Miller and other players will take the stage on Monday with "Mater."

The first important musical attraction to come from the East will be "The Girl Question," which made a record for itself in Chicago and which will receive its New York premiere next Monday night.

Tan a Dangerous Acquisition.

Baring one's head, neck, shoulders, and arms to the sun during the summer outing is regarded as a harmless fad, if, indeed, not greatly beneficial, but it is pointed out that the custom is dangerous. The enthusiasts would not run some particular risks if they guarded their heads as do the wiser inhabitants of all the other hot lands.

The process of acquiring "tan" is often a significantly painful one, and even if only the face is exposed to the sun a real fever involving the whole body is a familiar result. When the exposure is complete, as many a boy who went in swimming for several hours on a bright day has discovered, the consequences may be serious peril to life, though there may be no question of the wholly different phenomenon known as sunstroke. "Tan" as a protective covering is a useful acquisition, but there is no sense in sneering at "complexion." Its preservation is not worth the sacrifices sometimes made for it in other days, but neither is it to be recklessly lost, especially by women of the lighter races, for whom delicacy of color and texture of skin lend a charm that is entirely compatible with robust health. It is better to be ugly and well than beautiful and ill, but to be beautiful and well is also possible.

In certain maladies intense light has undoubted therapeutic value. That, however, is no argument for its habitual and inexpert use, any more than it is for the similar use of any other potent remedy when it is not needed.

It is easy to see that even the new boot-black machines have employed a press agent. The health authorities of Toledo have recently placed a ban on two brands of shoe blacking. The sudden death of a young man, who had been apparently in the best of health, was the cause of the investigation which resulted in the discovery. It was found that he had stained his canvas shoes with a certain kind of polish, and after analysis of the preparation which he had used it was determined that the nitro-benzole in it had killed him. The city chemist of Toledo explains that "when nitro-benzole is absorbed into the flesh through cracks in shoes or from being placed on cloth tops or canvas shoes, it destroys all the oxygen in the blood, and death claims the victim before he is aware anything is the matter."

Paper slippers and rose petals are taking the place of rice at fashionable weddings in Europe. The silver slippers—to replace the old shoes—are about half an inch long, and are made of silver paper cut in the shape of dainty slippers. The rose petals—to replace the rice—are the real thing—thousands of petals stripped by hand from pink roses. The slippers and rose petals are heaped in great bowls in the hall. When the bride and bridegroom emerge, instead of being cannonaded with coarse rice and old shoes, a pink and silver cloud of rose petals and little shining slippers envelops them.

Beggars are never suppressed in Turkey. The story is told (and they say it is true) about an American woman who by mistake gave a beggar of Constantinople a gold piece. The man had left his post when she returned, but one of his colleagues told her where he "resided." It was a fine house and at the door was a servant who politely informed the woman that "my master is dressing. He will be down soon." And then the well-groomed beggar, dressed for dinner, appeared and gladly returned the gold piece, exclaiming in the meanwhile that such mistakes were highly embarrassing.

In the Blue Mountains, three hours from Sydney, are many beautiful country houses, mostly hungalows with wide verandas all round, where Sydney people fly in February and March to get away from the heat of the city by the harbor.

LITERARY NOTES.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

James Whitcomb Riley, "the Hoosier poet," enjoys from his books, which are devoted exclusively to verse, an annual income varying from $25,000 to $30,000. Few, if any, poets have been so prolific as Mr. Riley, who appears in his publisher's catalogue with something like thirty volumes, to which six volumes more will be added this season.

The J. B. Lippincott Company has completed arrangements for the issue by a prominent London publisher of an English edition of Miss Edith Macvane's novel, "The Duchess of Dreams." The author is a daughter of Professor Silas M. Macvane of the history department of Harvard University.

A proposal of the town council of Rochester, England, to set up a statue of Dickens in their gardens has fallen through on account of the objection of the novelist's son, Mr. H. F. Dickens, who sent to the council this extract from his father's will: "I conjure my friends on no account to make me the subject of any monument, memorial, or testimonial whatever. I rest my claims to the remembrance of my countrymen upon my published works, and to the remembrance of my friends upon their experience of me in addition thereto."

Readers in every part of the country have written to the publishers asking them to resume the old cover of Harper's Magazine, which had been used for the June number to mark the fifty-eighth anniversary of the first issue of that periodical. The letters, expressing the old homelike feeling of attachment and loyalty to the magazine, have quickened a responsive sentiment.

The first Baedeker was published at Coblenz, on the Rhine, in 1839. Baedeker was born at Essen in 1801, and was by occupation a bookseller. There had been tourist guides before him, but he wanted to make the ciceroni, Lohnbediente, or commissionaires, as the professional guides were known in the various countries, useless. He was a modest man, and probably never thought that in seventy years his name would be so well known in all parts of the globe.

By a vote of three to two, the justices of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of New York have upheld the decision that the publishers of copyright books have a legal right to control the sale and price of such books, but that the same rights do not apply to the sale of books that are not protected by copyright.

It has been announced that Charles Scribner's Sons will publish a book by Theodore Roosevelt on hunting in Africa, after the author's return from the trip he has planned for next year. That the publishing will be on a royalty basis is admitted, and the recent rumors about a flat rate of $1 a word are therefore discredited.

An appreciation of Lorado Taft, "the most prominent of our Western sculptors," by Henry B. Fuller, with reproductions of his group, "The Blind," and details therefrom, is a feature of the Midsummer Holiday Number of the Century Magazine.

David Belasco and David Warfield's drama, "The Grand Army Man," has been put in novel form by Harvey J. O'Higgins.

In his "Memories of the Tennysons," Canon H. D. Rawnsley gives many vivid pictures of Tennyson as he talked in easy mood. While walking on the downs near Farringford they spoke of other poets—of Wordsworth, whom he called "very great when he is great, but there are long barrennesses in him"; of Browning, of whom he said, "He can conceive of grand dramatic situations but where's the music"; of Burns, of whom he said glowingly, "Yes, if ever man was inspired, Burns was," and at once he broke into one of Burns's songs, and enjoyed himself vastly.

JUST A BOOK STORE

Robertson's

1539 Van Ness Ave.

NEAR PINE

"Next to the White House"

NOW AT

15 KEARNY STREET

PHONE DOUGLAS 2219

Eugene Korn

THE HATTER

ESTABLISHED TWENTY YEARS

UPTOWN STORE

926 VAN NESS AVENUE

We Rent New Typewriters

L. & M. ALEXANDER & CO.

MOVED TO

Phone Douglas 2157

512 Market St.

Coast Dealers

L. C. SMITH (Visible)

1908 Model,

Ball Bearing

TYPEWRITERS

The wonderful new talking machine without a horn

The top closes over the record, shutting out all the noise of operation—the pure music of the record comes from a mahogany sound reflector. Elegantly made of solid mahogany, combined with record cabinet for 150 records. The finest talking machine made. Send for booklet.

Price $200

Sherman Clay & Co.

Steinway Pianos—Victor Talking Machines
KEARNY AND SUTTER, S. F.
Broadway at 13th Oakland 1635 Van Ness Ave. San Francisco

TWIRL THE ICE.

Do you know that a

HIGH BALL

made of

HUNTER
WHISKEY

is as smooth to the taste as the finest ice cream, and just as cool and refreshing, while at the same time strengthening.

Sold at all first-class cafés and by jobbers.
WM. LANAHAN & SON, Baltimore, Md.

HAMPDEN AND WHITTLESEY.

By Josephine Hart Phelps.

The opinions of others concerning such matters as have held our own attention, whether favorable or otherwise, are bound to be of interest, and I always like to hear verdicts on books or plays that I have read or seen.

I have extracted with some difficulty opinions on Walter Hampden's Manson, except for a general note of commendation. In response to "How did you like him?" people respond "I think he's very good," with that unprintable inflection which tacitly adds "considering."

Mr. Hampden gives a very interesting representation, endeavoring to banish from his features any reminder of the cheerful maternalism which looks out from the average human countenance.

Some people, it seems, have taken exception to the idea of the reincarnation as presented in "The Servant in the House," and have either remained away or, going, have professed themselves shocked by such a blasphemous mingling of sacred and mundane things.

The man who is wedded to orthodoxy will no doubt squirm, and conceive that in holding up the Bishop of Lincashire to our reprobation the church is discredited.

It was spring; the spring of the year, and the springtime of life. My bosom friend and I were in the schoolyard bolting our noonday refection with schoolgirl speed.

Said my companion—an exquisitely pretty girl, who had breathed an atmosphere of admiration and adulation ever since she was old enough to know that she had an ego.

Then a cooling second thought came, and I said practically, "But you wouldn't have a bit of fun out of it all after you were dead."

I have come to the conclusion, after seeing "If I Were King" a second time, that it is a piece aimed at the standards and the sympathies of just such romantic young addle-heads.

Of course "If I Were King" is founded upon certain fragmentary events, and the characters upon some all-but mythical personages that came into existence during the reign of Louis XI.

So, at the matinee of "If I Were King" every tier of the New Alcazar Theatre was solid with people having a perfectly gorgeous time over the congenial blending of White Whittlesey with the romantic drama.

That famous poem of François Villon's "If I Were King" has been Justin Huntly McCarthy's inspiration. What wonderful things would we not all do if we were king—until we are.

But such a reprehensible afterthought has no part nor parcel in Mr. McCarthy's play. In it the famed licentiousness of the poet is all of the lips.

White Whittlesey speaks his little piece, or rather pieces, for he recites several of Villon's best-known poems, in a manner to delight his worshippers in front.

A handsome gallant of the Middle Ages should never be compelled to hide his stalwart limbs under the robes of an old man; but this was what Louis's brand-new grand constable was compelled to do.

Bessie Barriscale was of course the great lady whose perilous beauty all but cost the poet his head. In spite of the possibilities in "The Rose of the Rancho," I had not taken in the pleasing fact that this young actress is very pretty.

Justin Huntly McCarthy, by the way, has a talent of his own for turning a pretty phrase, by which one recognizes the potency of the charm that Villon's jeweled verse could not fail to exercise upon him.

There are several scenes crowded with humanity in which good stage management was necessary, and they were quite effective to the eye.

For a moment I glowed with sympathy. That one tired of it all and sighed for a little breath of genuine art.

that one tired of it all and sighed for a little breath of genuine art.

M. Coquelin in London.

During a recent visit to London the great French comedian, M. Coquelin, gave a Sardou play new to the British metropolis and the London Daily Mail spoke of the performance briefly but with illumination:

"L'Affaire des Poisons," the historical drama, in a prologue and five acts, by Victorien Sardou, played for the first time in England by M. Coquelin at Mis Majesty's Theatre last night, is a very Sardouesque play.

The play is, of course, dramatic, and, equally of course, its technique is wonderfully deft. M. Sardou knows the business of the dramatist absolutely. His curtains are always effective. The construction is perfect.

M. Coquelin plays Griffard, round whom naturally all the intrigue of the play revolves and all the characters, with infinite skill and immense humor.

Regulations for International Aeronauts.

Three German balloons have been blown across the French eastern frontier during the first three weeks of June. Each of them carried officers of the Germany army and each passed somewhere near a frontier fort.

But the feeling is growing in France that the time has come for establishing international regulations for the navigation of the air. It would be easy enough to draw up a code of laws treating balloons as a cross between ships and automobiles.

The Greek Theatre Concerts.

The last concert of the series of Saturday night affairs at the Greek Theatre is to be given on Saturday evening August 1.

The San Francisco Elks have arranged a big party for the night and in a body they will journey across the bay to hear the programme to be rendered by the Third United States Artillery Band, led by Armand Putz, a brother Elk.

Miss Anna Miller Wood of Berkeley, who has just returned from Boston, where she has been devoting her time to the study of voice culture, will be the soloist.

Band-leader Putz is arranging a special programme that will be appropriate.

Miss Anna Miller Wood, who is to be the soloist at the last concert of the series given by the Third United States Artillery Band at the Greek Theatre this (Saturday) evening, is as well known in the East as she is on the Pacific Coast.

Mrs. Beatrice Priest-Fine, formerly of Oakland, and now engaged in concert and church work in New York, and Miss Anna Miller Wood of Boston have been engaged to sing at the First Unitarian Church in San Francisco during their stay on the Coast.

It is estimated that London theatre managers have lost during the season now ending no less than $400,000 in the production of plays that have been unsuccessful, and much of this amount on dramatic enterprises imported from the United States.

AMUSEMENTS

GREEK THEATRE BERKELEY CAMPUS. Under the auspices of the Musical and Dramatic Committee of the University of California. LAST CONCERT OF SERIES. SATURDAY EVENING, AUGUST 1st. THE FAMOUS THIRD UNITED STATES ARTILLERY BAND. Miss Anna Miller Wood (Contralto), Soloist. Admission 25 cents 8 to 10 p. m. 'San Francisco Elks will be there

ORPHEUM ELLIS STREET NEAR FILLMORE. Absolutely Class A Theatre Building. Week beginning this Sunday afternoon. Matinee Every Day. ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE. WILL M. CRESSY and BLANCHE DAYNE, in "The Village Lawyer"; JESSIE LASKY'S MILITARY OCTETTE and "THE GIRL WITH THE BATOM"; INES and TAKI; DANCING MITCHELLS; BASOUE GRAND OPERA QUARTETTE; WILBUR MACK and NELLA WALKER, in "The Bachelor and the Maid"; FENTELE and CARR; New Orpheum Motion Pictures; Last Week of the favorite comedian, BEN WELCH. Evening Prices—10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box seats, $1. Matinee prices (except Sundays and holidays), 10c, 25c, 50c. Phone, WEST 6000.

PRINCESS THEATRE Ellis Street near Fillmore. S. LOVERICH, Manager. Class "A" Theatre. Phone West 6663. Matinee Saturday and Sunday. THIS AND NEXT WEEK ONLY. The Great Musical Comedy Hit. THE CHAPERONS. MAY BOLEY, WILLIAM BURRESS, EVELYN FRANCES KELLOGG, ARTHUR CUNNINGHAM and all the Princess favorites in the cast. Popular Prices—Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Mats. (except Sundays and holidays), 25c, 50c.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Tel. West 6036. BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers. Corner Sutter and Steiner Sts. Absolute Class "A" bldg. Seventy-Third Week of the Alcazar Stock Co. COMMENCING MONDAY, AUGUST 3. MR. WHITE WHITTLESEY, Supported by the Alcazar Players, in Anthony Hope's Great Modern Romantic Drama. THE PRISONER OF ZENDA. Splendidly Acted. Superbly Staged. Prices: Evenings, 25c to $1. Matinees (Saturday and Sunday), 25c to 50c. Monday, August 10—MR. WHITTLESEY in "MONSIEUR BEUCAIRE."

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove St. Phone Market 500. Beginning MONDAY, AUGUST 3. Matinees Wednesday and Saturday. HENRY MILLER. Assisted by Isabel Irving, Hazel MacKaye, Frederick Lewis, Charles Gotthold and others in the first production of a new comedy. MATER. By Percy MacKaye. Mr. Miller as the Hon. Arthur Cullen. Next offering—Mr. Miller as Sydney Carton in "The Only Way."

THE LATEST STYLES IN Choice Woolens. H. S. BRIDGE & CO. Merchant Tailors. 108-110 Sutter St. French Bank Bldg.

John F. Forbes Certified Public Accountant. 601 KOHL BUILDING. SAN FRANCISCO.

MT. TAMALPAIS AND MUIR WOODS VIA SAUSALITO FERRY FOOT OF MARKET ST. LEGAL HOLIDAYS—SUNDAY TIME. Table with columns for Week Day, Sun Day, Week Day, Sun Day, Week Day, Sun Day. Ticket Office at Sausalito Ferry.

VANITY FAIR.

Mrs. C. P. Huntington will shortly move into the historic mansion which she has bought in the Rue de l'Elysée in Paris, and which has been undergoing certain structural alterations in addition to its being entirely redecorated. The house runs parallel to the gardens of the Elysée palace, which is on the other side of the street, and its frontage extends not only along a large part of the Rue de l'Elysée, but also commands, on the side of the Avenue Gabriel, a fine view of the Champs Elysées. Its neighbor on the latter side is the British embassy, the beautiful gardens of which are also bounded by the Avenue Gabriel. Thus it is embowered in the foliage of century-old trees and surrounded by gardens and velvety lawns in the very heart of Paris.

For a quarter of a century this ideal residence has been known as the Hotel de Hirsch, but it has other and more romantic memories (writes a correspondent of the Boston Herald). The original mansion appears to have been built by Marquis Pierre de Beurnonville, a general at the time of the revolution, and afterward marshal of France under the restoration of the monarchy. In 1861 it was in the possession of Emile Pereire (whose son is the president of the board of directors of the Comagnie Transatlantique), who sold it to Empress Eugenie.

Her majesty's idea was that her mother should live there and that she herself might from time to time find it a haven of rest and privacy amid the whirl and gayety of the most brilliant court in Europe. The house was rebuilt and may almost be said to have been the favorite residence of the empress. Then came the Franco-Prussian war and the events of 1870, with the flight of the empress from Paris.

In 1873 the mansion became the property of the famous millionaire banker and Zionist, Baron de Hirsch, and again underwent a complete transformation. One room was respectfully left untouched, Empress Eugenie's boudoir.

London society is being victimized by a new scheme of imposition. The fine weather all this season has led to a greater number of outdoor dances and fetes, as well as garden parties, than ever before. Following the lead of Mrs. Asquith, the wife of the premier, many society women have used their gardens frequently for entertainments. The hostesses are complaining bitterly, however, of the number of uninvited guests who appear at these parties.

The device of having detectives present at large affairs has proved useless; uninvited guests are not criminals, only smart young men who do it for a lark. Seeing an awning stretched across the pavement of some large house they merely enter as guests, and owing to the number of men brought by various women guests the hostess can not tell if they are friends of her friends or outsiders.

It is dangerous to risk offending some one's escort by asking if he really was invited. One of the American countesses tried that a short time ago. The man bowed and left the house. The countess found that she had mortally offended the husband of one of her best friends, whom she had not met before.

Things have come to such a pass that any well dressed man can walk into a large house and have a good supper and plenty of cigars and champagne, all without personally knowing the host or hostess.

Mme. Juliette Adam has resumed her receptions, which are held each Sunday during June and July at her charming estate at Gif, in the picturesque valley of the Chevreuse (says a correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette). These gatherings are the last of the literary salons of Paris. Nowadays they are shorn of their old brilliance, but they are still quite interesting. You meet half a dozen young poets, the latest successful novelist, a fierce pamphleteer, who can not find adjectives strong enough for the government, a mild-mannered magistrate who is anxious to make hay in the sunshine of Republican favor, a general or two—one, probably, who has figured in the affaire—and finally a sprinkling of political colts, literary hangers-on, and a bevy of fair women. The Adam salon was at its height in Gambetta's day. The great statesman was intimate with the charming hostess, then famous for her great beauty. Today she bears traces of the old-time attractiveness in a distinction of face and carriage and in a peculiar charm of manner. These garden parties no longer receive the official smiles of the party in power. Mme. Adam has broken with republicanism in its latter-day development, and until recently, when advancing age compelled her to lay aside her pen, she wrote with a good deal of bitter vehemence against the present rulers of France.

It being a holiday the blundering man made calls with his wife. The first place they went the hostess said: "Julia is engaged."

"Is she, indeed?" said the man's wife radiantly. "Which one did she finally accept?" The next place they were informed that Margaret was engaged, and again the man's wife beamed sympathetically and murmured: "Is she, indeed? Which one did she accept?"

At the third place it was the news of Jessie's engagement that was broken to them. As before, the man's wife put the question: "Which one did she finally take?" On their way home the man said: "Why did you ask 'which one' every time a new engagement was sprung on us? Are those girls so attractive that men were falling over each other in the scramble to get them for their wives?" "Not at all," said his wife. "I don't suppose either of them ever had but one offer, and it is a wonder she got that. I shouldn't be surprised if the men hack out even now before the wedding day. But you see, dear, I had to be diplomatic. Those people can do me many favors. The surest way to make myself solid with them is to pretend to think their girls so popular that every man in town was crazy to marry them." "With my opportunities downtown," groaned the man, "if I had your genius we'd be millionaires inside of six months."

Mlle. Fallières, the daughter of the President of the French Republic, is engaged to be married, and this illustrates a remarkable difference between the social life of the American and the French peoples. When Mrs. Longworth became engaged the event was one of national interest, and we need not recall the almost painful amount of attention that the event received. But the engagement of Mlle. Fallières has excited not the least notice with the exception of a five-line paragraph of small type in the newspapers. The London Daily Express, commenting upon the fact, says:

The engagement has had a five-line notice in the newspapers, and the excitement has ended there. President Fallières occupies a very different position in French minds from that of the President of the United States in the minds of Americans. He is regarded as a politician (which by his office he is not allowed to be). He is esteemed as a man, but as a social factor he is practically nil, and nobody in France takes the slightest interest in what his wife and daughter wear or in what Mme. Fallières pays her cook.

With the exception of some unavoidable changes necessitated by official life, the domestic ménage of the Fallières family remains what it has always been—parochial and bourgeois. Indeed, when M. Fallières went to the Elysée as President of the Republic one of the first things his wife did was to dismiss the official cook and to appoint in his place an old woman, a family retainer, who knew all the President's culinary whims and fancies. Mme. Fallières has never changed her way of dressing. She attires herself now just as she did when her husband was the mayor of a provincial town, and as for the worthy man himself, he would probably have refused the highest honor in the power of the people to give him had he supposed that it would imply a change of costume or any deviation from the comfortable, if unfashionable, garb in which he delights. Certainly there could be no more graceful picture of democratic simplicity than that furnished by the presidential family of France.

The Tailor and Cutter, a weekly trade journal, whose criticisms of the sartorial habits of celebrities have created frequent amusement, has been studying the Americans in London. The reception at Dorchester House, Ambassador Reid's residence, on July 4, was the scene of this grave journal's investigations. They are summarized as follows:

The most striking feature, not only from the tailoring point of view, but otherwise, was the evident anglicizing of the Americans present, and it would have been as difficult to distinguish a citizen of the great republic across the streak by his accent as by the cut of his clothes. Frock coats and silk hats were as much in evidence as at a church parade in Hyde Park, smartly cut morning coats, mostly flat braided, being seen in about the same proportion as at any similar English fashionable function.

The ambassador himself wore a frock coat with rather narrow lapels, which suited his tall, slender figure admirably, and a white vest and dark trousers, with white spats, making a harmony and contrast such as we generally associate with the attire of our always well-dressed king.

Though there were some excellent examples of sewing in obviously American-made garments, th-cut, style, hang, and general finish of those of London make were in many respects vastly superior. This was not so noticeable in the few lounges seen, but the more dressy frock and morning coats showed the unmistakable superiority of English tailoring.

In conclusion the Tailor and Cutter pays a high compliment to the garb of the American clergymen, saying that the English parson make a poor show in comparison.

W. & J. SLOANE

SUMMER FURNITURE

Old Hickory,
Willow and
Prairie Grass
Furniture for Verandas and
Summer Homes

Van Ness and Sutter

MURPHY, GRANT & CO.

134 to 146 Bush Street

Jobbers and Manufacturers

Dry Goods

White Goods

Furnishing Goods

Notions, etc.

We sell to Storekeepers only.

Ask your dealer for our Goods

Overalls
Jumpers
Blouses
Engineers' Coats
Khaki Coats and Pants
Work Shirts
Negligee Shirts
Golf Shirts
Collars
Cuffs Blanket Lined Clothing
Waterproof
Sweaters
Sweater Coats
Cardigan Jackets
Blankets

Silkolines
Quilts
Comforters
Lace Curtains
Prints
Percales
Apron Gingham
Fancy Gingham
Flannellettes
Broad Cloths
Table Cloths
Napkins
Table Damask
Crash
Face Cloths
Towels

Turkish Towels
Linen
Persian Lawns
Organdies
Men's Handkerchiefs
Women's Handkerchiefs
Piques
Men's Hosiery
Men's Underwear
Women's Hosiery
Women's Underwear
Brown Shirtings
Bleached Shirtings
Wide Bleached Sheeting
Wide Brown Sheatings

Ducks
House Linings
Colored Denims
Laces
Embroideries
Silk Gloves
Colored Burlap
Men's Gloves
Tickings
Sheets
Pillow Cases
Sateens
Notions
Ribbons
Kid Gloves

Vacation Questions Quickly Settled

Call or write to Dept. Ad. 948 Flood Building for literature and beautifully illustrated booklets on California Resorts and Outing Places.

ROWING—BATHING—FISHING—CAMPING—EXCELLENT HOTELS

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

TICKET OFFICES

884 Market St., 14 Powell St., Ferry Depot

MARKET ST. 1st Con. 5%
Due 1924. Coupons March and September
BAY COUNTIES POWER CO. 1st 5%
Due 1930. Coupons March and September
WESTERN PACIFIC 1st 5%
Due 1933. Coupons March and September

SUTRO & CO.
BROKERS
412 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.
We have a Direct Wire to N. Y.

HARTSHORN
SHADE ROLLERS
Bears the script name of
Stewart Hartshorn on label.
Get "Improved," no tacks required.

Wood Rollers Tin Rollers

After using this brand you will not bother with any other

Old Gilt Edge
Whiskey
Rye or Bourbon

THIS IS TO REMIND
users of Labels, Cartons,
Lithographing
and Color Printing
that our Office and Factory is again located
at the old stand

Schmidt Lithograph Co.
SECOND AND BRYANT STS.
SAN FRANCISCO
35th YEAR

Roy C. Ward Jas. W. Dean
Jas. K. Polk Geo. E. Billings

GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.
ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE
EFFECTED
312 California Street. Phone Douglas 2283
San Francisco, Cal.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER
A Positive Relief For PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all afflictions of the skin.
Removes all odor of perspiration. De-lightful after Shaving. Sold everywhere, or mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample Free.
GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY, Newark, N.J.

Mild, Rich
and Satisfying

Sanchez y Haya

Clear Havana
Cigars

Factory No. 1 Tampa, Fla.

Tillmann & Bendel
Pacific Slope Distributors

STORYETTES.
Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

A deaf man was walking on the railroad track with a friend when an engine rounded a curve behind them and opened its whistle full blast. The deaf man smiled and turning to his friend said, "Listen; that's the first robin I've heard this spring."

An advertisement of a nursing bottle printed in a Canadian newspaper concluded with the following: "When the baby is done drinking it must be unscrewed and laid in a cool place under a tap. If the baby does not thrive on fresh milk, it should be boiled."

After a long and tearful interview with his better half, the unfeeling husband wrote and sent to the daily papers the following advertisement: "Lost—A mangy lapdog, with one eye and no tail. Too fat to walk. Answers to the name of Fido. If returned stuffed, large reward."

When the forest-haunting hermit Thoreau lay on his death-bed, a Calvinistic friend called to make inquiry regarding his soul. "Henry," he said, anxiously, "have you made your peace with God?" "John," replied the dying naturalist, in a whisper, "I didn't know that God and myself had quarreled!"

Like most minister's families, they were not extensively blessed with this world's goods. She, however, was the youngest of ten children until her father explained to her of the baby sister who had come in the night. "Well," she said, after due thought, "I 'pose it's all right, papa, but there's many a thing we needed worse."

When Mme. de Staël published her celebrated novel, "Delphine," she was supposed to have painted herself in the person of the heroine, and M. Talleyrand in that of an elderly lady, who is one of the principal characters. "They tell me," said he, the first time he met her, "that we are both of us in your novel, in the disguise of women."

They were on their honeymoon and were climbing the Schnufelgappenspitzen peak, and she stood above him some twenty feet. "What ho!" he gasped. "What do you see?" "Far, far below," she cried, "I see a long white streak, stretching like a paper ribbon back almost to our hotel!" "Ha, ha!" he ejaculated. "I'll bet it's that blessed hotel bill overtaking us!"

An expert golfer had the misfortune to play a particularly vigorous stroke at the moment that a seedy wayfarer wandered across the edge of the course. The ball struck the trespasser and rendered him briefly insensible. When he recovered a five-dollar bill was pressed into his hand by the golfer. "Tanky, sir," said the injured man after a glance at the money. "An' when will you be playin' again, sir?"

The English spoken by the "Pennsylvania Dutch," as the inhabitants of certain districts in the eastern part of the State are popularly known, affords some rare specimens of expression. A man who was passing a small house on the outskirts of "Sous Besselle"—that is the nearest possible spelling of the local pronunciation—heard the daughter of the family calling her brother in to supper. "George," she said, "you come right in, now. Pa's on the table, and ma's half et!"

Dr. McNamara, a member of the British Parliament, tells of a school-teacher who was endeavoring to convey the idea of pity to the members of his class. He illustrated it. "Now, supposing," he said, "a man working on the river bank suddenly fell in. He could not swim and would be in danger of drowning. Picture the scene, boys and girls. The man's sudden fall, the cry for help. His wife, knowing his peril and hearing his screams, rushed immediately to the bank. Why does she rush to the bank?" After a pause a small voice piped forth: "Please, sir, to draw his insurance money."

Baseball is a chronic complaint of Senator Crane. When he was governor of Massachusetts he took his entire staff out for a drive, and surprised them by having the rigs pull up at an open field and announcing there was to be a baseball game. Two nines were chosen and the game began. Pretty soon somebody came along the road. "What teams are they?" he asked of one of the drivers. "Why, that man pitching is the governor of Massachusetts," the driver replied. "The one catching is the lieutenant-governor. The first baseman is a congressman, the second baseman is the judge-advocate-general." "Say," interrupted the passer-by, "perhaps you would like to know who I am. I'm Napoleon Bonaparte."

The colored boy was up in the children's court for the fifth time on charges of chicken-stealing. This time the magistrate decided to appeal to the boy's father. "Now, see here, Ahe," said he to the old darky, "this boy of yours has been up in court so many times for stealing chickens that I'm sick of seeing him here!" "Ah don' blame you, sah," returned the father; "ah's sick ob seein' 'm hyah, too." "Then why don't you teach him how to act? Show him the right way and he won't be coming here!" "Ah has showed 'im de right way, sah," declared the old man earnestly; "ah has suttently showed 'im de right way, but he somehow keep gittin' caught comin' 'way wid dose chickens!"

General Dabney H. Maury tells in his "Recollections of a Virginian" of an old lady in Fredericksburg who was reduced to taking in boarders in order to make both ends meet. On one occasion of peculiar stress, the larder was so empty that the good lady took to her bed and summoned her servant. "Nancy," she said, "there's nothing in the house for my boarders to eat except mush. But give them that. If they are Christians, they will accept it in resignation and thankfulness. And if they are not Christians, it is a deal too good for them."

THE MERRY MUSE.
Not the Heavenly Maid.
"And have you music at the church?"
I asked the rural squire.
"Wall, no," said he; "can't say we hev;
"Jest singin' by the choir."
—The News.

On the Beach.
When Miss Gaygrid strode to the surf
She focused every eye,
And yet she was not overbold—
In fact was rather shy.
—Town Topics.

Love Is Blind but Not Deaf.
She smiles—my darling smiles and all
The world is filled with light.
She laughs—'tis like the bird's sweet call
In meadows fair and bright.
She weeps—the world is cold and gray,
Rain clouds shut out the view.
She sings—I softly steal away
And wait till she gets through.
—Boston Transcript.

Another Round.
"Waltz me around again, Willie,
Around, around, around.
Don't be hesitating, don't keep me waiting
And don't let my feet touch the ground.
It's true I was fickle some four years ago,
But now I've come back to my Willie, you know
So waltz me around again, Willie,
Around, around, around.

Four years ago when I bad for my beau
Mr. Parker from dear old New York,
Who was, I remember, along in November,
Afraid to go home in the dark,
He said he'd ne'er shake me and told me he'd take me
To live in the White House so grand.
Pardon my sigh, at the church there stood I,
But, believe me, he wasn't on hand."
—New York Sun.

That Old Question.
There was a man in our town, and he was quite a case.
He jumped into a bramble bush and badly
scratched his face;
Forthwith he sought a barber shop. The haughty barber said,
The while his razor he did strop, "You shave yourself sometimes, don't you?"
—Washington Herald.

A Daily Humorist's Apology.
If you've really missed the column and are feeling sort of sore
At its absence, but are glad to see it in its place once more,
We are glad—for nothing's quite so grateful to a humorist
As the thought that if he quits a day his jokelets will be missed,
We were ill—are yet, in fact; and we are writing
this in bed,
Hot water bottles at our feet, and ice-bags at our head;
A red-haired nurse is by us, and she dopes us now and then
With hitter stuff, and takes our pulse, and fills our fountain pen,
Then reads the stuff we write, jumps up, and spills the ink
And cries, "O, doctor, hurry! He's delirious, I think!"
—Cleveland Leader.

Gathering Roses.
I've gathered roses and the like, in many glad and golden June; but now, as down the world
I hike, my weary hands are filled with prunes.
I've gathered roses o'er and o'er, and some were white, and some were red; but when I took them to the store, the grocer wanted eggs instead. I gathered roses long ago, in other days, in other scenes, and people said: "You ought to go, and dig the weeds out of your beans." A million roses bloomed and died, a million more will die today;
that man is wise who lets them slide, and gathers up the bales of hay.—Emporia Gazette.

"I think it only proper to remark, Mr. Seet," said the haughty girl, who thought she detected "signs," "that I would not marry the best man living." "Don't be alarmed," replied Mr. Con Seet, "he isn't going to propose.
My interest in you is merely platonic."
—Philadelphia Press.

A. Hirschman.
For fine jewelry and silverware. 1641-1643
Van Ness Avenue.

BANKING

The Anglo-Californian Bank, Ltd.
Established 1873
Head Office—London
Main Office—Pine and Sansome Streets, San Francisco
Branches—1020 Van Ness Avenue, Mission and Sixteenth Streets, San Francisco
Managers: I. Steinhart, P. N. Lilienthal
Capital paid in.....$1,500,000
Surplus and undivided profits.....1,449,721

A General Banking Business Conducted. Accounts of Corporations, Firms, and Individuals Solicited. Correspondence invited.
Safe Deposit Vaults at Van Ness Avenue and Mission Branches.

French Savings Bank
The French Savings Bank Building, 108-110 Sutter Street.
THE FRENCH-AMERICAN BANK occupies offices in the same building.
OFFICERS—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, Vice-President; Leon Bocqueraz, Vice-President; Alphonse Bousquet, Secretary.
DIRECTORS—J. E. Artigues, O. Bozio, J. A. Bergerot, John Ginty, J. M. Dupas, J. S. Godeau, N. C. Bahin, George Belaney, H. de St. Seine.

Safe Deposit Boxes for Rent

The German Savings and Loan Society
526 California St., San Francisco
Guaranteed Capital.....$1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash. 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds. 1,453,983.62
Deposits June 30, 1908.....34,474,524.23
Total Assets.....37,055,263.31
OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tournay; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.
BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Laniel Meyer, Emil Rohte, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse, and W. S. Goodfellow.

LONDON PARIS NATIONAL BANK
N. W. cor. Sutter and Sansome
CAPITAL - - - $2,500,000
SURPLUS - - - 620,000
Sig Greenebaum, President H. Fleishhacker, Vice-President and Mgr.
R. Altschul, Cashier

The National ROLL OF HONOR
The title "Roll of Honor National Bank" is a distinction of which any financial institution in the United States may be proud. As is well known a "Roll of Honor Bank" is one possessing surplus and profits in excess of capital. A place on the Roll of Honor can not be bought, it must be earned.
This bank has for a long time been known as a "Roll of Honor Bank" among banks and bankers.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK of Berkeley
UNITED STATES DEPOSITORY
A. W. NAVLOR, Pres. F. M. WILSON, Vice-Pres.
F. L. NAVLOR, Cashier. F. C. MORTIMER, Asst. Cashier.

THE BERKELEY NATIONAL BANK
United States Depository
Berkeley, Cal.
HOUSEHOLD AND COMMERCIAL ACCOUNTS INVITED.
DIRECTORS—George P. Baxter, Pres.; J. W. Richards, Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Bangs, Vice-Pres.; Louis Titus, Dr. Thomas Addison, A. G. Freeman, Duncan MacDuffie, Perry T. Tompkins, F. L. Lipman, W. J. Hotelkiss, and Whitney Palache. P. H. ATKINSON, Cashier.

WESTERN ASSURANCE COMPANY
TORONTO
U. S. Assets.....$2,493,154
" Surplus.....483,989
PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT
1004 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE
SAN FRANCISCO
J. J. KENNY, Manager W. L. W. MILLER, Assistant Manager

Connecticut Fire Insurance Company
Established 1850 OF HARTFORD
Total Assets.....$5,817,423
Surplus to Policy-Holders.....2,118,394
BENJAMIN J. SMITH
Manager Pacific Department
518 CALIFORNIA STREET
San Francisco

Roemeike's Press Clipping Bureau
Will send you all newspaper clippings which may appear about you, your friends, or any subject on which you want to be "up to date."
A large force in my New York office reads 650 daily papers and over 2000 weeklies and magazines, in fact, every paper of importance published in the United States, for 5000 subscribers and, through the European Bureaus, all the leading papers in the civilized globe.
Clippings found for subscribers and pasted on slips giving name and date of paper, and are mailed day by day.
Write for circular and terms.
HENRY ROMEIKE
110 and 112 W. 26th St., New York.
Branches: London, Paris, Berlin, Sydney.

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

The past week of the warmest weather of the season at all points across the bay and in the interior valleys of the State has given pause to the usual gaieties among the summer hotels and cottages. Cool verandas and shaded nooks where hammocks swing have been in order, while the more strenuous pleasures of tennis, golf, and swimming are in abeyance until the mercury drops. The warm weather, however, seems to add zest to the joys of motoring, for innumerable motor parties are touring the State from the high Sierras to the beach at Coronado.

The engagement is announced of Miss Marie Fechet, daughter of Major and Mrs. Eugene Fechet, U. S. A., to Captain Lincoln Kilbourne, Twenty-Sixth Infantry, U. S. A. The wedding is set for the second of September at the home of Colonel and Mrs. J. Walker Benet, at the Benicia Arsenal.

Mrs. Nathaniel Talbot James has announced the engagement of her daughter, Margaret Evans James, to Mr. Hartwell Cragin MacCartney of Washington, D. C. Mr. MacCartney is the son of the late Captain C. A. MacCartney, U. S. N.

Captain and Mrs. McKittrick of Santa Barbara have announced the engagement of their niece, Miss Carrie Redmond, and Mr. Arturo Orena. The wedding will take place some time in the early autumn.

The wedding of Miss Pearl Judson and Mr. Frank Alton Somers will be solemnized very quietly this week at the Judson home on Clay Street. After a short trip through the southern part of the State Mr. and Mrs. Somers will return to make their home in this city.

Mrs. Walter Martin entertained a number of friends last week at a luncheon at the St. Francis to meet Miss Jennie Crocker.

Mr. Templeton Crocker was host recently at a dinner given at the St. Francis at which he entertained Mrs. Walter Martin, Miss Jolliffe, Miss Jennie Crocker, Mr. R. P. Schwerin, and Mr. D. Hopkins.

Miss Gwin gave one of the most attractive card parties of the summer last week when she entertained her friends at several tables of bridge at the riotal Rafael.

Mrs. William Mintzer has been entertaining a house party of young people during the week at her out-of-town home at San Pablo.

Miss Lily O'Connor gave a luncheon at Pastor's a few days ago, when she entertained Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, Mrs. Walter Dean, Mrs. William Hinckley Taylor, Mrs. George Marye, Jr., Mrs. Charles A. Gore, Mrs. Frank Johnson, and Miss O'Connor.

A very jolly affair is being planned by Mrs. Richard Girvin and Mrs. Edward L. Eyre in the nature of a dance at the Eyre country seat, Fair Oaks, for a number of young folks who are students at Eastern colleges spending the vacation months at home.

The officers and ladies of the navy yard at Mare Island gave one of their popular dances in the sail loft last Friday evening. Many of the girls and men of the younger set from town were guests for the night at the Mare Island homes.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a résumé of movements to and from this city and Coast and of the whereabouts of absent Californians:

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Josselyn have opened their country home at Woodside, where they will spend the remainder of the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene de Sahla and their daughters have returned from Paso Robles and are at their San Mateo home for the remainder of the summer.

Mrs. Robert Louis Stevenson, Mrs. Isobel Strong, and Mr. Lloyd Osbourne motored up from Santa Barbara last week to their country place near Gilroy.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Wheeler, who, with their family, are traveling through Europe in their touring car, are in London for an extended visit.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Hohart are at Tahoe for a few weeks.

Miss Newell Drown is the guest of Miss Natalie Coffin at her home in Ross.

Dr. Henry Stephen Kierstedt, U. S. A., and Mrs. Kierstedt have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Coleman at Burlingame.

Mr. and Mrs. George Whittell and their son, George Whittell, Jr., have recently arrived in Paris.

Mr. and Mrs. Latham McMullin are guests of the Will Taylors at the Hopkins home, near Boca.

Mr. Timothy Hopkins is spending the remainder of the summer in the Sierra region.

Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Rathbone are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Josselyn at their country home for a few weeks.

Miss Genevieve King, in company with Mr. and Mrs. Houghton Sawyer, is visiting the Yosemite Valley.

Miss Florence Hopkins has been entertaining Miss Mary Keeney in her Menlo Park home.

Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Worden have returned from a stay of several weeks at Lake Tahoe.

Miss Anna Miller Wood of Boston is visiting her mother at Cloyne Court, Berkeley. Miss Wood expects to remain in California until the late autumn.

Miss Lucie King is visiting Mrs. Remi P. Schwerin at El Cerrito.

Mrs. William Booth of Chicago is the guest of Judge and Mrs. William Carey Van Fleet at their home at Inverness.

Mrs. Russell J. Wilson and Mrs. Orville C. Pratt have arrived in London, where Mr. Pratt expects to join them later.

Mr. and Mrs. John Drum have returned from a visit with the William Hitchcocks at San Mateo.

Mrs. William Irwin and her daughter, Miss Helene, have gone from Paris to Carlsbad, where they will remain until some time in August.

Miss Alice Hoffman of San Rafael has been entertaining Mrs. Dudley Wright Knox, wife of Lieutenant Knox of the U. S. S. Nebraska.

Mr. Mountford S. Wilson is spending the week-end at Tahoe with his family.

Mrs. Edward Barron and her daughters, Miss Marguerite Barron and Miss Eva Barron, are planning to leave in the early autumn for an extended stay in Europe.

Mrs. C. F. Runyon and her daughter, Miss Helen, are in Los Angeles, having gone to meet Mr. Runyon's sister, Mrs. E. M. Colie and daughter, Miss Margaret, of Orange, New Jersey, who will spend a month at the Runyon residence, "Fragaria," in Mill Valley.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Coryell have returned from their motor tour of several weeks' duration.

Mrs. Franklin Howard has been entertaining Miss Juliet Borden of Los Angeles.

Mrs. Charles West Clark and her sister, Mrs. Raoul Duval of Paris, were when last heard from in London.

Miss Edna Bowman of San Jose has been the guest during the week of Miss Minnie Houghton in this city.

Mrs. Frank B. Freyer, who has been the guest of her mother, Mrs. Crichton, will leave shortly for Marietta, Georgia, where she will visit the home of her husband, Lieutenant Freyer, U. S. N.

Mr. and Mrs. Duncan Hayne have closed their home in San Mateo and are planning a visit to Europe.

Mrs. Sidney M. Van Wyck and Miss Nannie Van Wyck, who have spent the past year in Virginia, are now in Seattle and expect to return home next week.

Miss Helen Cheesborough has been the guest of Mrs. Robert J. Wood at her cottage in Monterey.

Mr. and Mrs. George H. Lent and their guests, Miss Charlotte Land and Miss Hooker, spent last week motoring through the Tahoe region.

Miss Leslie Page is the guest of the family of Mr. John Hays Hammond on their yacht in Atlantic waters.

Miss Laura Hamilton and Miss Alexandra Hamilton when last heard from were visiting relatives in Scotland.

Miss Juliet Borden of Los Angeles is the guest of Miss Grace Llewellyn Jones.

Miss Julia Langhorne, in company with her sister and brother-in-law, the Richard Hammonds, is in Switzerland.

Miss Dolly MacGavin has returned from a visit to friends at Aptos.

Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Carey are at the Fairmont en route from New York.

Mrs. Harold Cloke, wife of Captain Cloke, U. S. A., is the guest of her mother, Mrs. Thomas Findley, at Sausalito.

Mrs. A. L. Tuhhs is at Del Monte for several weeks with Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Tuhhs.

Mrs. Henry A. Butters and the Misses Marie and Marguerite Butters are at Etna Springs for the remainder of the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hayes Smith left recently for New York, from where they expect to sail for Europe.

Before she left for Cowes with the king the other day, Queen Alexandra caused it to be made known that the sheath gown will not be tolerated at her court this winter. The intimation, recorded at some length in those London organs of fashion and the aristocracy which circulate so widely among the middle classes, occasioned no surprise in circles in which her majesty's conservatism is well known. The Queen of England notes with positive horror, according to the London Throne, an impression in certain ill-informed quarters that the court of England in this reign has grown "lax."

One of the most fashionable cliques in Berlin has in its supper room a curtain made of champagne corks. Four thousand corks with their silver or gilt covering have been threaded on thin rods decorated with colored ribbons and embellished with small copper balls. It gives a very decorative effect at a distance and has the appearance of a Japanese panel. Each cork is from a bottle of champagne costing about a sovereign, so that the curtain represents an expenditure of something like $20,000.

The City of London Militia, the Sixth Royal Fusiliers, dates back to the old trainbands and has a continuous record from the accession of Queen Elizabeth.

At the Hotels.

Among recent arrivals at Byron Hot Springs were Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Tarpey, Mr. W. H. Scott, Mr. Milton Pray, Mr. and Mrs. F. T. Volkman, Mr. I. W. Hamm, of San Francisco; Mrs. C. D. Bates, Sr., Miss Ada Bates, Mr. A. E. Johnson, of Oakland.

Among recent arrivals at the Tavern of Tamalpais were Mrs. J. H. Helms, Mrs. M. Morgan, Mrs. Roger Forrest, Mrs. Jerome L. Gardner, Miss Helen L. Gardner, Mrs. W. D. Fennimore, Mrs. F. W. Griffith, Miss Augusta S. Gillespie, Mr. John H. Helms, Mr. Henry Nelson, Miss Madeline Evans, Mrs. A. Haskell, Miss Sinclair, Mrs. J. F. Murry, Mr. A. R. Bettinger, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Barnes, of San Francisco.

Recent arrivals at the Normandie include Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Duhell, San Bernardino; Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Mullen, Yreka; Mrs. Ann Smith, Cloverdale; Mr. and Mrs. I. J. Hollomard, Fredrick, Okla.; Mr. F. W. Crosby, Vernon, Nev.; Miss Katharine O'Neill, Rochester, N. Y.; Mrs. and Miss Megary, Mrs. Mary E. Walton, Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Newcomer, Eldorado, Iowa; Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Foster, Pacific Grove; Mrs. G. W. Nicol, Sonora; Mr. J. B. Keating, Mr. J. W. Schoonover, Redding.

Among recent arrivals at Hotel St. Francis were Mr. John S. Whalen, secretary of State for New York; Mr. Lincoln B. Smith, of Washington, D. C.; Mr. and Mrs. Gay Lombard and Dr. and Mrs. G. E. Marshall, of Portland; Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Elder, Dr. C. F. Palmer, Mr. Thomas P. Kennedy, and Mr. J. C. Kennedy, of Chambersburg, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. A. Hornby, Miss I. M. Hornby, Mr. F. C. Hornby, Mr. R. Hornby, of Redlands; Mr. and Mrs. Will Cressy, en route from Honolulu; Paymaster H. E. Collins, U. S. N., and Dr. E. N. Reed, U. S. N.

Among recent arrivals at Hotel Rafael were Mr. W. H. Sheehan, Mr. C. H. Hacker, Mr. R. W. Hill, Mrs. E. N. Short, Mr. Frank H. Fries, Mr. and Mrs. James McElory, Mr. W. P. Clarke, Mr. Louis James, Mr. and Mrs. R. Swayne, Mrs. Bowen, Mr. M. L. Cohn, Mr. George Cohn, Mr. Joseph Triest, Mr. J. H. Dockweiler, Mrs. A. E. Turner, Mrs. Frank D. Bates, Mr. and Mrs. L. Comyn, Mr. A. L. Straus, Dr. Francis Knorp and party, Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Lloyd, Mr. B. Bienenfeld, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Roos, Mr. W. J. Somers, Mr. and Mrs. A. Adams, Mr. G. F. Belden, Mr. J. H. Belden, of San Francisco.

Recent arrivals at the Fairmont include Mr. and Mrs. Guy P. Barham, Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Murphy, Miss Sue Sinsinott, Mr. G. Holterhoff, Mr. W. H. O. Bryan, Dr. Landone, Mr. C. R. Woodhouse, Mr. P. J. McGary, Miss Anna McGary, Mr. D. M. Lee, Mr. J. Lovick Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Belt, Dr. and Mrs. Alfred Downs, Miss Madeline Barnes, Mrs. E. R. Baldwin, of Los Angeles; Mrs. O. A. Hale and Miss Clarise Hale, of San Jose; Rev. Anson Atterbury and Mrs. Atterbury, Mr. A. H. Brawman, Dr. and Mrs. J. B. Knapp, of New York City; Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Lawson, Washington, D. C.; Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Wheeler and the Misses Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. Edward S. Stevens, Mr. W. W. Hootz, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Marlow, Mr. W. W. Burroughs, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Enery, of Chicago; Mr. Sydney F. T. Brock, Dr. and Mrs. G. W. Lincoln, Mr. Eldridge R. Johnson, Mr. B. G. Reyal, of Philadelphia; Mr. Z. S. Spaldini, Hawaii; Mr. G. Koder, Kohe; Dr. Hans Mark, Vienna; Mr. Ing Wilhelm, Berlin; Mr. Robert Brunner, Shanghai.

Recent arrivals at Hotel Del Monte from San Francisco include Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Wilson, Mr. Alexander Heyneman, Mr. Edwin S. Utey, Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Reid, Mrs. L. F. Gunner, Mrs. C. J. Church, Mr. H. B. Rector, Mr. Charles J. Cox, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Erskine, Mr. Alexander E. Beyfuss, Mr. Ross B. Main, Mr. H. F. Yost, Mr. and Mrs. Robert S. Hooker, Mrs. Charles G. Hooker, Miss Jennie Hooker, Mr. W. J. Shearer, Mr. J. F. Jewell, Miss Myrtle Green, Mr. Max Rosenfeld, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin C. Hallmer, Mr. Nathan Tihhuts, Mr. Pierre Moore, Mr. Clarence English, Mr. Harold English, Mr. L. Sawyer, Jr., Mrs. W. R. Jones, Mrs. James H. Norton, Mr. D. J. Sinclair, Mr. C. V. Bennett, Mr. Frank E. Carroll, Mr. John H. S. Shuber, Mr. C. S. Howard, Mr. A. V. West, Mr. L. A. Washburne, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Barnett, Mr. C. M. Wiel, Mr. A. J. Rankin, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Gottloh, Mrs. T. W. Huntington, Mr. T. W. Huntington, Jr., Mr. Alfred Holman, Mr. H. R. Simpkins, Miss Estelle L. Jacob, Mr. Nat Jacob, Miss Elsie A. Henne, Mrs. George W. Giths, Mrs. C. F. Gronona, Mrs. M. Aratar, Mr. Herman Heyneman, Mrs. Louis Eaton, Miss Dorothy Eaton, Mr. Clarence Gifford, Mrs. J. T. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney P. Robertson, Mr. Christopher Buckley, Jr., Miss M. G. Murray, Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred B. Chapman, Miss Dorothy Chapman, Miss Gertrude Perry, Mr. W. A. Hamilton, and Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Fairweather.

Pears'

Pears' is essentially a toilet soap. A soap good for clothes won't benefit face and hands. Don't use laundry soap for toilet or bath. That is, if you value clear skin.

Pears' is pure soap and matchless for the complexion.

Sold in town and village

FAIRMONT HOTEL

The highest attainment in modern hotel building and hotel keeping

Single rooms $2.50 and upwards

Every room with bath

Under management of
Palace Hotel Company

MATCHLESS DEL MONTE

for week-end trips or longer vacations

Summer Rates $3.00 to $5.50 per day
AMERICAN PLAN

Del Monte Express with through parlor car leaves Third and Townsend daily at 3, arriving in time for dinner.

Reduced railroad rates for week-ends

Write for reservations today

H. R. WARNER, Manager

"The Peninsula" SAN MATEO, CAL.

A Twentieth Century Hotel of the Highest Degree of Excellence

NOW OPEN

AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLAN

Thirty minutes by rail from San Francisco. Located in a beautiful park of thirty years' cultivation. All the charm and delight of the country combined with the attractions and conveniences of the metropolis.

For Reservation or Information Address

JAMES H. DOOLITTLE, Mgr.,
San Mateo, Cal.

Hotel Rafael

San Rafael, Cal.

Open year around. Headquarters Automobile League. New and commodious garage. Fifty minutes from San Francisco. Complete change of climate. Tiburon or Sausalito Ferry. All modern conveniences.

F. N. Orpin, Proprietor.

Hotel Collingwood

35th St., bet. 5th Ave. and Broadway
NEW YORK CITY

New fireproof hotel located in the shopping and theatre district, containing every modern device for comfort of guests.

Positively exclusive. Service à la carte.

HERE, the much-abused expression "home-cooking" is correctly exemplified. We cook as if for ourselves, adding prompt, deft and polite service.

YE TEA CUP INNE

1427 Bush Street, below Van Ness (upstairs)

Hotel St. Francis

The spirit of good service and the facilities that produce it.

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF JAMES WOODS

Why Not Make Your Home At The Hotel Jefferson

Turk and Gough Streets Facing Jefferson Square

A superior class hotel with every modern convenience and comfort. Operated on the American and European plans. Special rates to permanent guests. Special attention paid to the table—we invite comparisons. Management, Noah H. Gray, formerly manager Alexander Young Hotel, Honolulu, and Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

You Can Live At The Hotel Jefferson Better And For Less Than At Home

Hotel Majestic

(Sutter and Gough)

A homelike hotel for refined people. Very best cuisine. Moderate prices. Rates on application.

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"

Building, concrete, steel and marble. Located, most fashionable shopping district.

210 rooms, 135 baths. Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests.

Most refined hostelry in Seattle.

Absolutely fireproof. English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

Byron Hot Springs

The waters cure rheumatism—the environment is perfect—the hotel comfortable and supplied with an unexcelled table. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, ground floor, James Flood Building; Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market St., or address hotel.

Hotel del Coronado

Motto: "BEST OF EVERYTHING" Most Delightful Climate on Earth American Plan. Summer rates $3.50 per day each and upward, or $21.00 per week each and upward "Good Music" and "Fine Automobile Road, Los Angeles-Riverside to Coronado." Golf, Tennis, Polo, and other outdoor sports every day in the year. New 700-foot ocean pier, for fishing. Boating and Bathing are the very best. Send for booklet to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado Beach, Cal. Or see H. F. NORCROSS, Agent, 334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles. Tel. A 6789; Main 3917. 22d Street and Broadway

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy people who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Rear-Admiral William T. Swinhurne, U. S. N., now commanding the Second Squadron of the Pacific Fleet, will on July 31 succeed Commander-in-Chief James H. Dayton and transfer his flag from the Charleston to the West Virginia.

Colonel Joseph W. Duncan, U. S. A., who has been ordered to Washington to assume the duties of chief of infantry, will have his stay in this city extended to the fifth of August.

Lieutenant-Colonel George B. Davis, deputy commissary-general, U. S. A., is detailed as chief commissary of the camp of instruction to be held at American Lake.

Major William S. Martin, Eighteenth Infantry, U. S. A., upon his arrival at San Francisco, is ordered to report in person to the commanding general, Department of California, for temporary duty.

Major E. Eveleth Winslow, U. S. A., who has been attached to the office of chief engineers at the school at Washington Barracks, will assume command of the First Battalion of Engineers at Fort Mason.

Leave of absence for two months has been granted Major Eugene O. Fecher, U. S. A., to take effect upon his arrival in San Francisco.

Major Richmond P. Davis, U. S. A., is granted leave of absence for one month and fifteen days, to take effect when his services can be spared.

The following army officers have been ordered to report to Colonel George H. Torney, M. C., president of the examining board at the General Hospital at the Presidio of San Francisco for examination for promotion: Captain Edward B. Vedder, U. S. A., Captain Theodore Lamson, U. S. A., Captain Chester J. Stadman, U. S. A., Captain Arthur M. Whaley, U. S. A., Captain Stanford H. Wadhams, U. S. A., and Captain M. A. W. Shockey, U. S. A.

Captain William Kelly, Jr., Ninth Cavalry, U. S. A., is expected to arrive in San Francisco on the transport Buford.

Captain Frederick L. Knudsen, Eighth Infantry, U. S. A., is detailed for duty at the camp of instruction to be held at American Lake, Washington, and also for duty at the camp of instruction to be held at Atascadero Ranch, California.

Captain A. B. Foster, Nineteenth Infantry, U. S. A., sailed July 15 from Manila on the transport Buford en route for San Francisco.

Contract Surgeon George W. Daywalt, Depot of Recruits and Casuals, Angel Island, California, will report to the commanding officer, Fort McDowell, for temporary duty during the absence of Contract Surgeon Leonard S. Hughes while undergoing examination at the Army General Hospital, Presidio of San Francisco, commencing August 3.

Contract Surgeon Thomas S. Lowe, now at the Presidio of San Francisco, is ordered to proceed to Vancouver Barracks to report in person to the commanding general for assignment to station and duty in that department.

First Lieutenant Edgar King, Medical Corps, U. S. A., is relieved from duty in the Philippine division and assigned to duty in the army transport service at San Francisco.

Lieutenant Frederick G. Turner, Sixth Cavalry, U. S. A., is relieved from duty at Fort Meade and is ordered to report to the commanding general of the Department of California for temporary duty, pending the sailing of the transport for Manila.

Lieutenant Herbert C. Gibner, U. S. A., has been appointed adjutant of the General Hospital of the Presidio of San Francisco, filling the vacancy caused by the departure of Captain Ernest C. Bingham.

Lieutenant Eugene B. Walker, Coast Artillery, U. S. A., is ordered to proceed on August 15 to the Presidio of San Francisco to report for assignment.

Lieutenant F. H. Poteet, U. S. N., and Lieutenant E. T. Constein, U. S. N., are detailed aides to Rear-Admiral Swinhurne after July 31.

First Lieutenant Ronald E. Fisher, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., Presidio of San Francisco, is detailed for duty at Fort Riley, Kansas.

Leave for two months is granted Lieutenant Henry T. Burgin, Coast Artillery, U. S. A., to take effect on or about August 1.

Leave of fourteen days, to take effect after the completion of the artillery service practice of his company, is granted First Lieutenant William T. Carpenter, C. A. C., Presidio of San Francisco.

First Lieutenant Joseph A. Worthington, U. S. A., Medical Corps, Company B, has been ordered to the General Hospital, Presidio of San Francisco, for temporary duty.

Second Lieutenant Eugene B. Walker, U. S. A., will proceed August 15 to the Presidio of San Francisco to report for assignment to station and duty.

Second Lieutenant Anton Zurich, Jr., Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., Camp Yosemite, accompanied by a sergeant of the Hospital Corps, is ordered to proceed to the Presidio of San Francisco.

May Buckley is to appear in "The Right of Way" again next season.

A Beneficent Enterprise.

The San Francisco Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, a society founded on the lines of similar societies in Eastern cities, notably in Philadelphia, New York, and Chicago, has been organized here and has opened an office in the Hastings Building.

The society is composed of medical and lay members and is intended to be thoroughly general in membership and practical in its ends and in the means to obtain them. Much important knowledge of this, the most fatal disease of modern times, is unknown to the general public, and this the society intends to correct by the distribution of literature which will tell the well how to avoid contracting the disease, will tell the sick how to avoid giving the disease, and also how to get well or to prolong life. In addition, a series of lectures and addresses will be given before clubs and societies and groups of people gotten together for the purpose, which will be illustrated by lantern slides and other graphic means.

The society also intends opening dispensaries where the tuberculosis without means can be cared for, and in connection with the dispensaries will be established a house care department. For the adequate carrying out of these enterprises, a registration of all tuberculous individuals in the city will be necessary, so that the distribution of the disease may be mapped out and known. It is intended, eventually, to establish a hospital in the city, and later a sanitarium in the country for the reception of curable cases.

The officers are: President, Thomas E. Hayden, Esq.; vice-presidents, Mrs. John F. Merrill, Herbert C. Moffitt, M. D.; secretary, William C. Voorsanger, M. D.; treasurer, Crocker National Bank. The affairs of the association are under the direct control of the executive committee of the board of directors, and it consists of Mr. Thomas E. Hayden, Mrs. John F. Merrill, Mrs. William H. Crocker, Dr. George H. Evans, Dr. William C. Voorsanger, Mr. Walter McArthur, and Dr. Harry W. Sherman. The society wishes every one in the city to be enrolled as a member, and the dues are but $1 per annum.

A scientific study of the effects of motor-ing has failed to show A. Mouneyrat, a French physiologist, that it causes serious nervous disturbance and other troubles, as has been alleged, but he finds, on the other hand, that it is a powerful stimulant to circulation, nervous system and respiration, giving just the action that recommends it as a remedy for such complaints as anemia, sleeplessness, loss of appetite, etc. In some disorders high-speed travel tends to cure when other treatment is entirely without effect. The investigator himself made a number of automobile tours, at all seasons of the year, and on these trips, averaging over eight days each, he covered from sixty to one hundred and twenty-five miles per day, at an average speed of twenty-five miles an hour. A striking and invariable effect is the increase in the red corpuscles of the blood, which in an anemic individual was more than 30 per cent on an eight days' tour. The general influence is that of a stay in the mountains at a height of 4000 to 6000 feet, and both normal and anemic persons are affected, though in different degree sleep and appetite are increased in all.

A number of Tibetan traders who visited Calcutta in March, 1908, brought with them, among other articles, a large quantity of musk, which is held in high esteem by the high-caste Indians. The little deer from which the musk is obtained ranges in the Himalayas and Tibetan mountains, 9000 feet above sea level. The male deer yields the finest and greatest quantity of musk. The deer are shy and alert, and difficult to capture.

DR. ROBERT E. O'CONNELL, DR. GEORGE D. O'CONNELL, DENTISTS, Hastings Building, Post Street and Grant Avenue. Tel. Douglas 2733.

THE OCULARIUM
Henry Kahn Co.
OPTICIANS
KODAKS & SUPPLIES
SCIENTIFIC INSTRUMENTS
Catalogues Free
644 MARKET ST.
OPP. PALACE HOTEL
BRANCH 1309 VAN NESS AVE.

Hotel Normandie

At the
is served daily a
Table d'Hote Luncheon

that meets all the requirements of the critical. In the matter of cuisine, service and refined surroundings this luncheon is unsurpassed.

Price 75 cents—S. E. cor. Sutter and Gough

Hotel Colonial

Stockton above Sutter Street
American and European Plans
Special Rates to Permanents
HOWARD T. BLETHEN, Manager
Telephone, Kearny 4754

THE "NIPPON MURA"

Family Resort between Saratoga and Los Gatos
Has increased its accommodations, main building furnace heated, beautifully furnished rooms with all modern conveniences. Open all the year. Positively exclusive. For information address
THEODORE J. MORRIS, Proprietor, Los Gatos, Cal.

Berkeley Apartments

Several sunny suites available for the summer and autumn months at Hotel Cloyne Court, Berkeley. For further particulars address
J. M. PIERCE, Manager.

Furnished House Wanted

Advertiser wants, by September 15 or October 1, nicely furnished modern residence with eight bedrooms. Must be between California and Broadway and west of Van Ness. Family consists of adults only. Willing to take extended lease. Address, giving particulars and rent,
F. M., Room 515, Shreve Building

Peyton Chemical Co.

Purchasers and Smelters of COPPER, GOLD AND SILVER ORES, ETC. Rooms 657 and 658 Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal.
Smelter and Works at Peyton, Contra Costa Co., Cal.; P. O., Martinez.

Interior of magnificent living room.

FOR SALE A BARGAIN Beautiful Artistic Residence

12 rooms and 3 baths; hardwood inlaid floors throughout.

UNOBSTRUCTED MARINE VIEW

The mantels and fixtures in this house are the most attractive ever installed in this city. House just completed, has never been occupied.

EXTRA LARGE CORNER LOT

75 x 102 ft. with "L"

For full particulars see

Shainwald, Buckbee & Co.

No. 27 Montgomery St.

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

"She has a small waist, hasn't she?" "Too small. Why the pleasure of getting around it only lasts about a second."—Life.

She—Why are artists always so careful to sign their paintings? He—To indicate which is the top and which is the bottom of the picture.—The Sphinx.

Stella—I suppose you have had many hairbreadth escapes? Knicker—Yes; a woman's coiffure was all that kept me from seeing a play once.—Harper's Bazar.

"Poor Tom, it cost him a terrible lot to give up his sweetheart." "Then why did he?" "Because it would have cost him a great deal more if he hadn't."—The Tatler.

"Do you consider your nerve is sufficiently steady to fit you for an airship navigator?" "Well, I've been out in a canoe with a nervous fat girl."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Is this section prosperous?" "You bet it is," answered the Kansas farmer. "I kin spread a net any time and snake a grand piano out of a cyclone."—Pittsburg Post.

Magistrote (sternly)—Didn't I tell you the last time you were here I never wanted you to come before me again? Prisoner—Yes, sir; hut I couldn't make the police believe it.—Tit-Bits.

Sopleigh—A hwick fell from a building two yeas ago and knocked me senseless. Miss Caustique—Indeed! And does your physician think you will ever get over it?—Chicago Daily News.

"On your trip abroad, did you see any wonderful old ruins?" he asked. "Yes," she replied, archly, "and guess what?" "Well?" "One of them wanted to marry me."—Harper's Weekly.

"Should a man go to college after fifty?" "Well, he might pass muster at tennis," answered the expert. "But a man can't expect to do much in basehall or football at that age."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

"I've got a washing-machine here," began the inventor. The capitalist looked at him in the cold, calculating manner common to capitalists and answered: "Well, if I were you, I'd run straight home and use it." That night the anarchist circle received another application for membership.—The Outlook.

"I fell out of the window of my flat yesterday." "And you are on the fourth floor. That was terrible." "Yes; I don't know how to face the janitor. I'm sure I've violated some clause in my lease."—Washington Herald.

"I suppose you know why you are here?" asked the judge severely. "Yes, sir," answered the prisoner. "I wuz drug here."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

"Every man is the architect of his own fortune," quoted the Wise Guy. "Yes, but he wants to keep solid with the building inspectors," added the Simple Mug.—Philadelphia Record.

Wife—What luck? Husband—None whatever. Wife—Were there no servants at the intelligence office? Husband—Yes, lots of them, but they had all worked for us before.—Saturday Sunset.

"Stop the auto." "But, sir—" "I think I saw some red ferns." "Better lemme keep on, hoss," advised the chauffeur, earnestly. "Them red ferns is the local constable's whiskers."—Washington Herald.

"Have you ever been cross-examined before?" inquired a barrister of a witness who was occupying his attention. "Have I!" exclaimed the man. "Didn't I just tell you I am married?"—Stray Stories.

An old offender was recently introduced to a new county justice as John Timmins, alias Jones, alias Smith. "I'll try the two women first," said the justice. "Bring in Alice Jones."—Uncle Remus Magazine.

"Yes," said the serious man, "this race problem certainly is a serious matter." "That's right," replied the sporty one; "no matter what system o' hettin' you follow you can't heat 'em."—Philadelphia Press.

"Your husband says he works like a dog," said one woman. "Yes, it's very similar," answered the other. "He comes in with muddy feet, makes himself comfortable by the fire, and waits to be fed."—Washington Star.

"I guess pa must have passed a lot of time at the dentist's when he was in New York," said Johnny Green. "Why do you think so?" queried his ma. "'Cause I heard him tell a man today that it cost him nearly $300 to get his eye-tooth cut," replied Johnny.—Chicago News.

Masqueroder (explaining who he is supposed to represent)—I'm that fellow who fought the battle of what do you call it, you know. What's his name says all about him in his great book; you remember, every one took him for the other chap until they found he couldn't he; then they knew he wasn't. Think I look the part?—Sketch.

WANTED

Unimproved property in the Burnt District

TO EXCHANGE

for

DESIRABLE INCOME PROPERTY

MONEY TO LOAN AT PREVAILING RATES ON FIRST MORTGAGE SAN FRANCISCO REAL ESTATE

GUY T. WAYMAN

232 MONTGOMERY STREET

MILLS BUILDING

Tennent's

TRADE MARK

J. R. Tennent

Ale and Stout

from Wellpark Brewery
Glasgow, Scotland

Forbes Bros., Agents, 1926 Sutter St.

GOODYEAR "HIPPO" HOSE

The best and strongest Garden Hose.
Guaranteed to stand 700 lbs. pressure.

Try it and be convinced.

GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY

R. H. PEASE, President

587, 589, 591 Market St. at Second St.
SAN FRANCISCO

Mr. Publisher:

Does it interest you to know that ALL the mechanical work on THE ARGONAUT is done by us? Fact.

WILLIAMS PRINTING CO.,

Phone, Douglas 2905. 406 Sutter Street

Toyo Kisen Kaisha

(ORIENTAL S. S. CO.)

S. S. America Maru..Saturday, August 1, 1908
S. S. Nippon Maru..Saturday, August 29, 1908
S. S. Tenyo Maru..Friday, September 25, 1908

Steamers sail from company's piers, Nos. 42-44, near foot of Second Street, 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Hiogo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.

Round-trip tickets at reduced rates.

For freight and passage apply at office, 240 James Flood Building. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

TOURS

EUROPE
SOUTH AMERICA
JAPAN AND
ROUND THE WORLD

Programmes for the asking.

THOS. COOK & SON
32 Powell St., San Francisco

Bonestell, Richardson & Co.

PAPER.

The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us.

CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE
118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna,
San Francisco.

Clubbing List.

By special arrangement with the publishers, and by concessions in price on both sides, we are enabled to make the following offer, open to all subscribers direct to this office. Subscribers in renewing subscriptions to Eastern periodicals will please mention the date of expiration in order to avoid mistakes:

American Magazine and Argonaut.....	$4.25
Argosy and Argonaut.....	4.40
Atlantic Monthly and Argonaut.....	6.70
Blackwood's Magazine and Argonaut... ..	6.20
Century and Argonaut.....	7.00
Commoner and Argonaut.....	4.10
Cosmopolitan and Argonaut.....	4.35
Current Literature and Argonaut.....	5.75
English Illustrated Magazine and Argonaut	4.70
Forum and Argonaut.....	6.00
Harper's Bazar and Argonaut.....	4.35
Harper's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.70
Horner's Weekly and Argonaut.....	6.70
House Beautiful and Argonaut.....	4.75
International Magazine and Argonaut... ..	4.50
Judge and Argonaut.....	7.50
Leslie's Weekly and Argonaut.....	6.70
Life and Argonaut.....	7.75
Lippincott's Magazine and Argonaut....	5.25
Littell's Living Age and Argonaut.....	9.00
Mexican Herald and Argonaut.....	10.50
Munsey's Magazine and Argonaut.....	4.40
Nineteenth Century and Argonaut.....	7.25
North American Review and Argonaut... ..	8.00
Out West and Argonaut.....	5.25
Overland Monthly and Argonaut.....	4.50
Political Science Quarterly and Argonaut	4.90
Puck and Argonaut.....	7.50
Review of Reviews and Argonaut.....	5.00
Scribner's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.25
Smart Set and Argonaut.....	5.25
St. Nicholas and Argonaut.....	6.00
Sunset and Argonaut.....	4.25
Theatre Magazine and Argonaut.....	5.75
Thrice-a-Week New York World (Democratic) and Argonaut.....	4.25
Weekly New York Tribune (Republican) and Argonaut	4.50
Weekly New York Tribune, Weekly New York World, and Argonaut.....	5.25

YOUR furnishings and your decorations taken separately may be faultless. Together they may fail to create the proper effect. This is one of the mistakes that we can help you avoid. We arrange for you in our show-rooms interiors just as they will appear in your homes.

Furniture
Carpets
Rugs
Draperies

D. N. & E. WALTER & CO.

Van Ness and Sacramento

Wholesale
Retail
and
Since 1858

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXIII. No. 1637.

SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 8, 1908.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10 payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company." Entered at the San Francisco postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breems Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opera. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at F and Thirteenth Streets. The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Denison News Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains. Published at 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal. Telephone, Kearny 5895.

THIRTY-SECOND YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: California in Presidential Elections—Mr. Hearst's Party—Gompers can Not Drive the Labor Vote to Bryan—Bryan and the Philippines—The Harriman-Gould Deal—Twenty-Six Pleas in Extenuation—A Naval Quarrel—Editorial Notes	81-84
CAMPAIGN TOPICS	84
FRISIANS TRY TO PICK THE PONIES: Playing the Races a Bourgeois Infatuation Encouraged by Government Protection, Declares "St. Martin"	85
OLD FAVORITES: "The Veil," by Victor Hugo; "The Younger of Volmarstein," by Wolfgang Muller	85
WINNERS IN THE OLYMPIC GAMES: Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals, Trophies, and Diplomas Distributed	85
A HIGHER LAW FOR LAND: XXV. By Jerome A. Hart	86
INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All over the World	87
ANDREW JACKSON, THE FIGHTER: The Latest Story of the Warrior's Exploits, Written in Modern Phrase	88
CURRENT VERSE: "The Dead Master," by John Erskine; "My Dog," by St. John Lucas; "Defiance," by Theodosia Garrison; "Sappho," by Sara Teasdale; "The Weaver and His Dream," by Rupert Hughes	88
BOOKS AND AUTHORS. By Sidney G. P. Coryn	89
LITERARY NOTES—Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip	90
DRAYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT	90
DRAMA: Percy MacKaye's "Mater." By Josephine Hart Phelps	91
ANITY FAIR	92
STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise	93
THE MERRY MUSE	93
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy	94-95
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day	96

California in Presidential Elections.

It is not without reason that in campaign discussions California is frequently referred to as a close State, albeit her vote in presidential years has commonly been given to the Republican candidate. The electoral vote of the State was solidly Republican in 1860, 1864, 1868, 1872, and 1876. In 1880 five of the six votes of the State were given to the Democratic presidential candidate and one to the Republican. This result was due directly to popular dislike of one of the Democratic electoral candidates, Judge Terry, who in a duel many years before had killed Senator Broderick. In 1884 and in 1888 the vote of the State went to Republican candidates. In 1892 eight Democratic electors and one Republican were chosen. And in 1896 the vote was reversed, the State choosing eight Republicans and one Democrat. In 1900 the full vote of the State was given to the Republican candidate, and again in 1904. In no other State has the presidential voting been closer in successive elections. In 1872 the Republican vote was 54,044; Democratic, 40,749, a clear Republican majority of 13,295. In 1876 the Republican vote was 79,264; Democratic, 76,464; a Republican majority of 2,800. In 1880 the Republican vote was 80,370; Democratic, 80,472; Greenback, 3404. The Democratic plurality was a narrow one of 102. In 1884 the Republican vote was 102,416; Democratic, 89,288; Prohibition, 2920; Greenback, 2017. The Republican plurality was 13,128. In 1888 the Republican vote was 124,816; Democratic, 117,729; American, 1591; Prohibition, 5761. The Republican plurality this year was 7087. In 1892 the Republican vote was 118,149; Democratic, 118,293; Populist, 25,352; Prohibition, 8129. This year the Democratic plurality was 144, although as already noted the Republicans chose one elector. In 1896 the Republican vote was 146,170; Democratic, 143,373; National Democracy (Palmer and Buckner), 2006; Prohibition, 2573. The Republican plurality this, the first Bryan year, was 2797, although, as the result of purely personal considerations, the Democrats managed to choose one elector. In 1890, the second McKinley year, the Republican vote was 164,755; Democratic, 124,985; Socialistic, 7554; Prohibition, 5124. The Republican plurality this year ran to the comfortable figure of 39,770. In 1904, the Roosevelt year, the Republican vote was 205,226; Democratic, 89,294; Socialist, 29,535; Prohibition, 7380. In this, the last presidential election, the Republican majority was 115,932.

A curious circumstance in our State politics is the wide discrepancy between State majorities and national majorities. For example, in the presidential election of 1884 the Republican plurality was 13,128; whereas in the next State election a Democrat was chosen to the governorship by a plurality of 652. Eight years later a Democratic governor was elected by 1206 majority, while a Republican secretary of state was chosen by a majority of 40,098. In 1900 the Republican presidential majority was 39,770; whereas two years later the Republican candidate for governor (Pardee) pulled through with a bare 1550 majority. In 1904 the Republican presidential majority reached the high-water mark of 115,932, but in 1906, two years later, the Republican candidate for governor (Gillett) was elected by the relatively narrow majority of 8299.

Mr. Hearst's "Party."

A gift of prophecy would be necessary to determine the exact status of Mr. Hearst's Independence League movement in the political hurly-burly. It is safe to class it as a "factor" in the event, but it would be absurd to dignify it with the name of a "party." The result of the election will inform Mr. Hearst and the rest of us whether it is possible to organize the elements of radical discontent upon a substantial political basis. The mere circumstance that the owner of this new national political faction is also the owner of a string of fantastic newspapers, each of them supported by a constituency of citizens amenable to the fantastic ideas enunciated and promulgated by Mr. Hearst's superficially philosophical editors, is not sufficient to induce the belief in the minds of sane and conservative citizens that the Hearst "movement" is in any sense dangerous to the integrity of the existing dominant parties. Neither can it be inferred that the personal wealth and financial resources of Mr. Hearst himself will be able to sustain his organization as a distinct and permanent thing to be reckoned with in the future politics of the country.

It may be conceded, and it is probably conceded even by Democrats, reluctantly, of course, that the main strength of the Independence League movement will be drawn from the Democratic party. The appeal of Mr. Hearst is to the hopelessly dissatisfied, and these are almost wholly identified with the Democratic party. It is from that source that all the other "movements" demanding immediate and radical changes in the government of the republic have been drawn. The Populists and the Socialists are, by birth, breeding, and inclination, Democrats. But their Democracy is of the Jacobin type and insists that the existing order is not only wrong, but definitely and invincibly wrong; that the entire structure should be razed and an entirely new one erected in its place; some of them go so far as to demand that the foundation itself should be removed and excavation made for another better fitted to bear the weight of the temple wherein shall be formulated uncodified laws for the betterment of all conditions and the ultimate salvation of mankind. The question, therefore, resolves itself into an inquiry as to the sapping energy of Mr. Hearst's league upon Mr. Bryan's following of Democrats. It is not likely that the Populists and Socialists will be materially affected by Mr. Hearst's innovation. He has followed too closely the general trend of all reform in the established parties. His "platform," in fact, is not as radical as Mr. Bryan's pronouncements, editorial and oratorical, and the Populists and Socialists who read Mr. Hearst's newspapers have long since repudiated Mr. Bryan's adulterated breakfast food for political thought on the hypothesis that it lacks protein and is therefore unfit for consumption by "advanced thinkers." It was expected that Mr. Hearst would provide a better article of diet; but he has not done so; he has simply worked over the old ingredients and put another label on the can.

If the Hearst platform is a disappointment to the extreme radical element of the Democratic party and its Populistic and Socialistic offshoots, Mr. Hearst's candidates are calculated to inspire a certain confidence among that section of the Democracy who insist on the wholesale and indiscriminate regulation of the trusts and their extirpation even if they refuse to be regulated. Thomas L. Hisgen, the long-time candidate for the presidency, is in the business of selling oil to the citizens of Massachusetts and other parts of New England. He is an "independent" oil dealer, in that he is trying to build up an oil trust in opposition to the Standard Oil Company. He has persistently, and thus far successfully, refused to be absorbed by the Standard Oil combination. He ran for governor of Massachusetts in 1907 on the Independence League ticket and polled 75,489 votes, which was 4649 more votes than were cast for Whitney by the regular Democrats of that State. There is no reason to doubt that Mr. Hearst's candidate will again split the Democratic vote of Massachusetts, and there is a possibility that he will get the 13,000 votes of the Democratic party apportioned in 1907 to factions of that party disgruntled by the action of the leaders and dissatisfied with some of the convention candidates. Mr. Hisgen's chief merit in the eyes of Mr. Hearst however, is his "availability" as an anti-Rockefeller candidate. We are destined to hear a lot about Mr. Hisgen's "splendid battle against the Standard Oil octopus" in this campaign if we acquire the habit of reading Mr. Hearst's newspapers.

Mr. Hearst's main reliance, it may be said without fear of denial from the owner of the Independence League, is John Temple Graves, the vice-presidential nominee of the Hearst party. Mr. Graves is a fierce and uncompromising Southerner of the Toombs type. His hot blood is constantly boiling over into the editorial columns of Mr. Hearst's newspapers. Before he came to New York to help Mr. Hearst in his propaganda he was an editor of great renown in Georgia and Florida, where he did not hesitate to say that the negro was not and could not be the equal of a white man, and that lynching in any form, upon any suspicion involving a negro, was not only justifiable but obligatory under the recognized "unwritten law" of the South. Mr. Graves has since vaguely but discernibly expounded the same law for those of the arrogant plutocracy whom Mr. Hearst has condemned and ordered to future execution. Mr. Graves is more radical on every question than is Mr. Hisgen; he is even more radical than Mr. Hearst, which probably accounts for Mr. Hearst's preference for him over other capable and intelligent editors in his employ. If Mr. Graves had been nominated by Mr. Hearst for first place on the Independence League ticket, there is no telling what might have happened to the Populists and Socialists in spite of the inherent and palpable weakness of the league platform.

Mr. Graves ought to poll a very heavy vote

Georgia, notwithstanding the personal popularity of Tom Watson in that State. Watson's vote in 1904 in Georgia was 22,635, as against 83,472 for Parker, the Democratic candidate for the presidency. Bryan, in 1900, polled 81,700. As a Georgian Mr. Graves might hope to do as well as Mr. Bryan did in Massachusetts, which would give him the electoral vote of the State.

Further than this it would be folly to speculate concerning the probabilities of Mr. Hearst's latest excursion into the field of politics. His "electoral ticket" will be presented in more States than was at first thought likely, owing to the circumstance that Mr. Hearst has decided to spend more money in financing his venture than he originally intended. Whether his party will poll more votes than the Populists or Socialists is a question that would appeal to gamblers as a very fair betting proposition; but Mr. Hearst would not have to offer heavy odds to find takers for a bet that the Independence League will poll more votes than the Populists and Socialists combined.

Gompers Can Not Drive the Labor Vote to Bryan.

The attempt on the part of Samuel Gompers to deliver the labor vote to Bryan has already had several interesting sequences. According to Gompers's own statement, it promises to cost him his place as the head of organized labor in this country. The rank and file of labor unionists have resented with indignation a proposal to traffic wholesale in their votes. The purposes which have led labor to fraternize are political only in an incidental way, and nobody in joining a union has ever consented to abandon his rights and privileges as a citizen or his private initiative in political matters; and this is being made very plain by the unionists the country over. Thirty-one labor unions in New York City have joined in an open revolt and all over the country this action has been imitated in a quieter fashion. It was for the purpose of meeting and conciliating this movement that Gompers issued a statement last week denying most ridiculously in the face of indisputable facts that he was making any effort to bring labor to the support of Bryan.

Another interesting development in this connection is the attitude of Republican leaders and newspapers the country over. If Gompers had made no attempt to drive the forces of organized labor to Bryan, the campaign would probably have been gotten through with without much in the way of positive discussion of the labor issue. Everywhere the politicians and the newspapers were afraid of it and would have been only too glad to leave it alone. But Gompers's threats, combined with his efforts to swing labor into line, have roused the fighting spirit all over the country and therefore have led Republican leaders and the Republican press to declare themselves in terms plainer than anything we have heard from that source on the labor question for many a day. Even the timid ones and the temporizers have been brought into line, and today the Republican party stands committed with a definiteness unprecedented to the policy of absolute equality before the law, with no special privileges or favors to organized labor. There can be no doubt about the cause of it all. It was Gompers who did it. His attempt to drive the forces of labor to Bryan has simply recoiled upon his own theories and plans.

In his notification address at Cincinnati last week Mr. Taft dealt with the labor issue in a singularly broad and candid spirit. He dealt with it not as a matter of controversy, but as a matter of principle, and in a tone which showed him to be the master of that soundest of all kinds of diplomacy, the diplomacy of frankness and reason. Without assuming to answer Mr. Gompers's claims, he took up the labor question and considered it in the light of equity and of the law, and in so doing he left no leg of justification for Gompers to stand on. His statement of the general considerations involved was as plain as any that has ever been made by anybody. And, as usual when an honest man speaks his honest mind, he created no irritation among the unionists of the country. Nobody has risen to combat his arguments. Even Gompers, usually so ready to assume the aggressive, has been cowed into silence—a pose far more becoming, let it be remarked incidentally, than any he has assumed these many moons past.

We may judge of the views of the rank and file of organized labor by the fact that since Mr. Taft's utterance a local union of shovelers in his own State associated with the iron trade has elected him to honorary membership, basing its action upon the fact that he is engaged in the promotion of policies essential to the welfare of labor. It is at this point—the welfare of labor—that the unionists as well as everybody else in the country may well pause and consider. Whose policies as directly related to labor, let us ask, are more likely to be promotive of the general welfare? Mr. Bryan is an anti-protectionist standing upon an anti-protection platform. He would have our whole system revised in accordance with tariff-for-revenue theories, which is another way of spelling free trade. These theories have been tried in this country, and not so long ago that the results are wholly forgotten. Who does not recall the distressful period of the Wilson tariff law under the second Cleveland administration? And who does not recall the splendid and immediate return of universal employment and abounding prosperity when the Wilson law gave place to the tariff law under which we are still working? Beyond question there are faults in the existing schedules; it is indeed time for revision. But it is not a time to exchange a principle which has been tried and approved by results for another which has been tried and condemned by results. The labor unionists of the country know as well as anybody that the welfare of the country, especially of labor, rests not upon the theories of Bryan, but rather upon those principles represented by Taft. Labor made up of free men in a free country is not easy to drive, as Mr. Gompers has discovered; and especially it is not easy to drive when there is an attempt to make it fly in the face of reason and experience. Organized labor, employed as it is largely in industries nourished and sustained by Republican policy, will not be "delivered" wholesale or in any other way to Mr. Bryan.

Bryan and the Philippines.

The platform upon which Mr. Bryan stands, drawn up with that vagueness characteristic of a mind without real conviction and calculated merely to give a semblance of consistency to an erratic political course, declares for cutting adrift the Philippine Islands as soon as their inhabitants shall have demonstrated the capacity for self-government. In the United States this promise, which is impossible of fulfillment in the near future, is harmless because it means nothing. But it is very far from being harmless as it will be repeated and interpreted in our trans-Pacific territories. It can not but have an evil effect upon ignorant islanders, easily stirred to discontent and eager to grasp at anything calculated to stimulate a smouldering spirit of unrest.

A large percentage of Tagals, the dominating element in the hodge-podge of races inhabiting the Philippine archipelago, maintain that they are already more capable of self-government than some Caucasian peoples. In their intense Oriental conceit they see themselves in a light absolutely and ridiculously false. Those who know the islands well need not be told how impossible it is that they should be permitted within any time worth considering to assume the responsibilities of political organization and administration. The true status of these peoples is made manifest by the fact that in the neighboring island of Java, an allied race, after being under civilized (Dutch) influences for three centuries, is still indulging its barbarian instincts in a career of violence and assassination. In a large part of the Southern Philippines it is today unsafe for anybody other than a native to stray beyond the limits of the walled cities.

Under our present policy the Filipinos are making phenomenal progress, and if this policy be upheld, say for twenty-five years, an autonomous English-speaking nation will have arisen in the Orient. The Filipinos will not only be bound by the firm hand of a common language not only to us, but to each other. Already indications of that which is to come, if there shall be no break in American policy, are at hand. The leaven implanted by American "Imperialists" in the form of thousands of schoolhouses throughout the islands is already leavening the mass. In the remote barrios the new generation, Tagalog, Igorrote, Macabebe, Moro, or other, is learning the English tongue. The traveler on the line of the Dagupan and Manila Railroad, which passes through the habitat of a dozen different tribes, is greeted at every stopping place by a well-spoken "Good morning, sir," on the lips of bright-faced urchins. This much has been accomplished in the space of ten years; and what it implies needs no exploitation to those who understand the value of a common language in the transmutation of heterogeneous peoples occupying contiguous territories.

During the period that Republican policy under McKinley and Roosevelt has been steadily working at the problem of civilizing and carrying forward the Filipino people, the Democratic party has been resoluting and otherwise objecting. All that has been accomplished has been done in defiance of the opinions and the protests of the Democratic party under the inspiration and guidance of William J. Bryan. And so much has been accomplished that the stinging predictions of failure on the part of critics, foreign and domestic, which at one time resounded through the world are heard no more.

It is unthinkable that the policy, which has been so successful and which promises so much for the future, should be reversed or nullified. And that it would be reversed or nullified is a practical assurance if Mr. Bryan should be elected. And this is why the trans-Pacific American, by which name we may designate those who have lived in the Philippines or who are intimately familiar with island affairs, realize that only in Republican supremacy is there any assurance of a continuous and logical plan of Philippine administration.

The Harriman-Gould Deal.

The deal between Mr. Harriman and Mr. Gould, whose details, actual or supposititious, have so filled the daily papers of late, appears to be something thiswise: By a combination of miscalculated enterprise with bad judgment and bad administration, the Gould railroad properties had gotten into financial deep water even before the general depression which came on last year. With decrease in earnings, due to decline of business, certain of the Gould companies were passed over to receiverships, while other receiverships were in prospect. There came a situation in which eight millions of dollars were needed to save the system or part of it from something very like bankruptcy. Mr. Gould searched the money market, but could find nobody willing to advance the sum needed upon any security which he had to offer, although these securities in fact aggregate a colossal sum. The difficulty lay in the fact that the great holders and dealers in money had and have no confidence in Mr. Gould's methods of administration. They had no money to lend to a railroad administrator who, in the best times the country has ever seen, and with a vast aggregation of first-class properties under his hand, was unable to manage them in such a way as to maintain their solvency.

Finally, as a means of saving a desperate situation, Mr. Gould applied to Mr. Harriman, and the latter in cooperation with his financial connections put up the money. Of course a deal like this is not carried through on an accommodation basis. The bankers who supplied the money were willing to back Mr. Harriman, but not Mr. Gould. Mr. Harriman therefore assumes a certain authority in relation to the Gould properties. It is surmised that he will enter the directorates, but whether he does this or not he will have a say—and probably a dominating one—in the making of the Gould policies. The methods which he has applied to that vast network of railroads called the Harriman system will now to a greater or less degree be applied to the Gould properties, which include the Missouri Pacific and Iron Mountain (6771 miles), the Denver and Rio Grande (2750 miles), the Wabash (2517 miles), the Texas and Pacific (1885 miles), the Cotton Belt (1378 miles), the International and Great Northern (1159 miles), the Western Pacific (partly constructed, 910 miles), the Western Maryland (535 miles), the Wheeling and Lake Erie (473 miles). This system aggregates 19,378 miles, and in connection with the Harriman system, with which presumably it will work in general harmony, it forms the greatest association of transportation forces that the country, or the world for that matter, has ever seen. How close this association is to be, nobody knows; for while Mr. Harriman has become interested in the Gould properties, he has by no means taken them over. But it is probable that his relationship to these properties will be sufficiently close to make them sharers in the general policy which hitherto has dominated the Harriman roads.

Mr. Harriman appears to have entered into this deal as a matter of necessity. He is quoted as saying that he did not go into it from choice, but because he had to do it, and this appears to be the fact. To have permitted the Gould properties to default in their obligations would have been a serious blow to the railroad business of the country, and incidentally to every other kind of business. Mr. Harriman, perhaps, was the only man in the world of railroad affairs—unless it be Mr. James J. Hill—sufficiently accredited in the money market for judgment and success to raise the sum needed at a time when bankers are exceeding shy of making advances to public-service companies. The incident speaks for itself, since in Wall Street no man is trusted on sentiment. Mr. Harriman's position in the world of transportation has been won by a record of practical successes. He knows how to make capital effective. Beginning with the Union Pacific, he has taken one questionable property after another, lifted it from the financial dumps, and made it stable and profitable. Whatever anybody may say about his policies and methods, it is certainly true that he stands today a great constructive factor in transportation, and it is because of this fact that he has been able at a single stroke to extend vastly the area of his influence.

California has not only a general but a local and immediate interest in the Harriman-Gould deal, since both systems—one actually and the other prospectively—extend to this State. Whatever extension of his influence Mr. Harriman may make is important here, since San Francisco is one of the great termini of his system. Presumably the central route across the continent will share in some degree at least in any advantages which Mr. Harriman may have won in this latest of his transactions. As to the Western Pacific, it is not likely to suffer any ill effects under the new adjustment. It is too far advanced to be either abandoned or neglected. It will no doubt be built precisely upon the lines laid down. And when completed it ought to serve the country as well in friendly relations with the Harriman system as under any other. The two transcontinental roads across our northern tier of States belong alike to the Hill system, and we hear no criticism of this circumstance as related to the general transportation interests of the northern cities. The Southern Pacific and the Santa Fé at the south are likewise affiliated with the Harriman system with no disadvantage, so far as anybody knows, in relation to the interests of Los Angeles. No harm is likely to come to San Francisco through the extension of Mr. Harriman's authority or influence over the Western Pacific, since the support and development of this city is and has been one of his prime objects since he came into control of the Union and Southern Pacific properties. Two lines of railroad across the continent at its narrowest point—between San Francisco Bay and the Missouri River—are not too many for the traffic already developed, not to mention that in immediate prospect in connection with the growth of the country.

Probably the deal with Harriman marks the decline of the Gould name in connection with the transportation of the country. The original Gould interest was built up by a hard-headed man of no conscience and of destructive methods. Jay Gould was not so much a developer of railroads as a railroad wrecker. In his own day his courses were widely condemned; in this day they would not be tolerated. George Gould, in many respects a better man than his father, has lacked some of the elements which made the former's career a successful one. He has been a hard and persistent worker, but he has made many and costly mistakes. On the top of all he has had to deal with a brood of ne'er-do-well co-heirs, including his madcap brother Howard and his fool sister Anna. The extravagances of his brothers and of this one sister have dissipated in prodigality money more than enough to have supplied the need which appears to have virtually lost to Mr. Gould the control of the family properties. Mr. Gould has been the one conspicuous instance of a great railroad magnate who came to his position by inheritance. All the others—Huntington, Hill, Scott, Dillon, Harriman, et al.—won their own way. It is significant now and absolutely in line with American tradition that an inheritor of an extraordinary measure of wealth and power should yield to one who has traveled the road of experience with things small as well as with things great.

Twenty-Six Pleas in Extenuation.

The lamentable case of Richard W. Nye of Oakland is a reminder that civilization, and especially modern civilization, is peculiarly severe upon crimes against property while relatively lenient toward offenses against the person. The unfortunate Nye is the father of twenty-six children, and if anything could condone a forgetfulness of the Ten Commandments it is surely such extensive parenthood as this. Impelled by the needs of his outrageous family, Nye attempted to steal property left in his care, and for this offense he now finds himself in State prison for three years. In vain did he plead the twenty-six children in extenuation. Justice, proverbially blind, takes little heed of consequences, and so society must presumably look after Nye's progeny while Nye himself languishes in durance vile for attempting to do his duty but in a criminal way. Nye's real offense was not so much the attempted theft as the possession of twenty-six children, and if the production of such an outrageous family is not a legal offense it ought to be made so.

Yet one who has given twenty-six hostages to misfortune certainly has that many separate and distinct claims upon the clemency of his judges, so far as the theft is concerned. It doesn't seem to square with the eternal fitness of things that the father of twenty-six children should be sent to jail for inability to support that number honestly. There is written and oral evidence to substantiate the assertion that if President Roosevelt had been the arbiter in this case Richard W. Nye of Oakland would not be where he now is. The father of twenty-six children is one after the Roosevelt heart, and one that, in the Roosevelt categories of quantity, relation, and habit would be worthy of honors and medals and rubric inscription on the scroll of famous fatherhood. The law of probation should be invoked for the enlargement of Richard W. Nye and a petition to that effect should be signed by every father in California whose fatherhood is not subjected to such multitudinous temptation. Fathers blessed with more than a dozen may sign a petition for a pardon without conditions.

A Naval Quarrel.

At a time when the naval affairs of the world are attracting an unusual share of public attention, the dissensions—we may even say the squabbles—among British admirals can hardly fail to excite general interest. From whatever causes they may arise, and they are probably as trifling as such causes usually are, their results are evidently grave, if we may judge from the series of questions with which the prime minister has been bombarded in the House of Commons and from the incidents reported by the press. Dirty linen should, of course, be washed in private, but it is hard to avoid the full light of day when the officials concerned are so highly placed as Sir John Fisher, the first sea lord of the admiralty; Sir Percy Scott, who achieved distinction by bringing the big naval guns to Ladysmith during the Boer war, and Lord Charles Beresford, who is one of the best known seamen now living.

The strained situation, to use a polite phrase, was first made evident to the public during the naval manœuvres some few months back in the English Channel. Admiral Beresford was in command, while Sir Percy Scott was in charge of the cruisers. Admiral Beresford ordered the whole force to return to port for the purpose of painting the ships, and at the same time Sir Percy Scott signaled to his cruisers that they must cease gunnery practice in order to make themselves look pretty, as paint was more important than marksmanship—or words to that effect. Sir Percy Scott's signal following closely upon that of Lord Beresford naturally seemed to be a free-hand and distinctly pert rendering of the order of the admiral-in-chief, and was promptly resented as such. Sir Percy Scott was sharply reprimanded, but he effectively defended himself by showing that his signal to the cruisers was independent of that of the commander-in-chief, that he knew nothing of the original signal, and that however flippant or ill-judged his own order may have been, it implied no reflection upon his superior officer. The two signals were coincident in point of time, but they were otherwise unrelated. This was not only asserted by Sir Percy Scott, but it was proved, and had the little outbreak been spontaneous the incident would have been closed.

But it had evidently arisen from some deeper current of ill-feeling. Other incidents followed, and it soon became evident that something like a feud existed in the service and that officers of high rank were being attracted to one side or the other. It was understood, for instance, that Sir John Fisher, the commander-in-chief of the whole British navy, was in full sympathy with Lord Beresford, while the pros and cons of the quarrel were freely debated in the press and then commented upon in Parliament, although no one seemed to know what the trouble was all about. An insidious and intangible professional jealousy is never very far from the ignition point in navy and army circles, and probably the disputants themselves would find it hard to express their grievances in concrete form.

And now comes the latest incident to date. It is reported from the cruiser squadron attached to the Channel Fleet, Lord Beresford being in chief command and Sir Percy Scott in charge of the Good Hope. The Argyll and the Good Hope were abreast of each other and 1200 yards apart when they received an order from the flagship to turn inwards toward one another. Now, as the turning circle of each ship is about 800 yards, it is evident that obedience to the order would have meant inevitable collision. As a matter of fact the Argyll obeyed the signal and went 16 points to starboard, while the Good Hope, to avert a collision, disobeyed, and went to starboard instead of to port, both ships turning in the same direction instead of toward each other. The mistake on the part of the flagship seems to be almost identical with the fatal error that sent the Comperdown and the Victoria into collision some years ago. Upon that occasion Admiral Markham obeyed the order and was exonerated on the ground that it would be fatal to discipline to blame him for carrying out directions unmistakably received from the commander-in-chief, who was present in person. Sir Percy Scott disobeyed an order received in the same way, and by so doing saved his own ship and probably the Argyll also. It seems from cable dispatches that he too has been exonerated, from which it would seem that both obedience and disobedience may alike be virtues.

That this grisly incident has been connected in the public mind with the ill-feeling known to exist between Beresford and Scott is sufficient evidence of the extent to which that ill-feeling has gone. It is wholly incredible that Lord Beresford deliberately forced upon Sir Percy Scott the alternative of collision or disobedience, but this is distinctly suggested by critics both among the public and in Parliament. It may be inevitable that jealousies and rancors should exist. They have probably existed in all services and at all times, and so long as they are kept within bounds they may even have their salutary aspect. But in this instance it seems absurd to use platitudes about a unity for the common good while something like a positive and personal hatred so clearly exists between officers who in the event of war would be forced into close relationship, and upon whose hearty and sincere coöperation the main essentials of success must rest. Even the finest fighter becomes a source of weakness to his country if his private resentments become ungovernable, and if Fisher and Beresford and Scott can not agree to hate each other in an amiable way, perhaps their country might be better served by men of less eminence and more common sense.

Editorial Notes.

Mr. Heney continues to junket about the country towns in the interest of the Lincoln-Roosevelt League—while the Ruef case drags along in a fashion so slow that it would take a lawyer to say whether Ruef is really on trial or not. There are those, and the Argonaut is among them, who think that Mr. Heney ought either to fish or cut bait—that is, he ought to stay at home and attend to his business or give it up altogether. It will interest the payers of taxes to know that while Mr. Heney is thus engaged in political junketing and while the business of prosecution thus lags arid waits, the pay of the private detective bureau now billeted upon the public goes steadily on.

Any kind of constitution is probably to be preferred on broad social and moral grounds to the arbitrary rule traditionally maintained by the Sultans of the Turkish empire. Nevertheless it is hardly to be expected that anything worth serious approval has come from the Yildiz Kiosk. And, indeed, it would be interesting to see any scheme of constitutional government which the subjects of the Sultan would be capable of working successfully. The most enlightened and virtuous subjects of Turkish rule, we are told, are the Armenians, of whom we find interesting specimens in the Oriental rug business in this country. If these truly be the best and most honest men in the empire, then the Argonaut is unblushingly on the side of the Sultan in any repressive measures which he may choose to enforce, however extreme or cruel.

A dispatch from Walla Walla, State of Washington, reports that the river system of transportation which since pioneer days has operated on Snake River between a point near its junction with the Columbia and Lewiston, Idaho, ceased to exist on the 3d inst. A line of railroad having been built practically parallel with the river, nothing has been left for the steamboats to do. This is a bit of history which has been duplicated in every part of the country. When rail and boat meet in competition, the rail surely takes the traffic. The Columbia River, once a very paradise for steamboat men, has all but been abandoned. The Hudson, in many respects the noblest of American rivers, carries little traffic other than that of ferries and excursion boats. None the less it is highly important that the navigable streams of the country should be maintained in condition fit for navigation. The existence in a given territory of a navigable stream, even though may never be used, is of tremendous importance in its effect upon transportation charges. Wherever transportation by water is practicable it will be found unvaryingly that rail rates are adjusted to that fact. A navigable stream, therefore, is to the country which possesses it an assurance of generous policies on the part of the railroads.

Those who, like the Argonaut, have long observed the ways of politics, are rather more amused than edified by the airs which Mr. Theodore Bell and his associates in the new-fledged Democratic leadership are giving themselves. We can but remember that this is a campaign year and that the campaign to be waged this year is surely an onerous one and a losing one. We can but wonder if the canny McNab is not merely allowing Mr. Bell and his friends leave to blow off the surplus steam which is always generated in ardent and inexperienced minds. We can but wonder if when the campaign is past and lost and the surplus steam aforesaid duly emitted, Mr. McNab may not again take up the reins of authority with an ease surprising to the youths who are so happy over having "downed" him. Stranger things have happened in politics; and Mr. McNab is not the first man to choose a favorable time for a vacation.

Among those who are receiving invitations signed "Rudolph Spreckels" to contribute ten dollars in support of the so-called Lincoln-Roosevelt League there are some who remember the earnest assurances given personally by this same Rudolph Spreckels that never—no, never—would he or anybody associated with the graft prosecution have anything to do with politics. And there are others to reflect that if Mr. Spreckels wishes to finance a personal political movement he ought to be able to do it himself. Having worked his private police organization off on the tax-payers, it is perhaps in keeping that Mr. Spreckels should seek to get the support of his political rivals. In other words, Mr. Spreckels has boasted—on the lips of his friends, have he asked unbidden in his presence—that he would like to quit. This remark may be interpreted too broadly, for it is manifest that Mr. Spreckels knows how to quit paying.

It is reported from Pendleton, Oregon, that as fast as the Indians of the Umatilla reservation are given final and individual patents to their lands, they dispose of them to white men. This is the outcome of a system adopted many years ago looking to the establishment of the Umatillas upon lands in severalty. The system works precisely as every man of common sense knew it would. It gets the land into the hands of white men and turns the helpless Indians adrift literally to root hog or die. The incident further illustrates how difficult or impossible it is by any paternal system to protect a social element which can not or will not protect itself. Nobody has yet devised a way in which a weak race and a strong one may live together without repeating the old fable of the lamb and the lion. Somehow or other the lamb always gets inside the lion.

In an attempt to domesticate public-service corporations and make them subject in all respects to State laws, the constitution makers of Oklahoma decreed that the right of eminent domain shall not be exercised except by companies taking out State license. A branch of the Standard Oil Company, desiring to evade this provision of law, has purchased a strip of land across the State and established its own pipe lines thereon. The attorney-general sought to bring an injunction suit, but the governor objects, insisting that when a corporation buys the land for its line it is not exercising the right of eminent domain. The constitutional provision was evidently intended to apply to all public-service corporations; but it doesn't, provided they buy their right of way instead of condemning it.

Mr. James J. Hill announces that his companies, the Northern Pacific and Great Northern railroads, which have maintained transpacific steamers at a heavy loss for several years past, will retire from the business, leaving it to the Japanese who are able to buy steamers at less cost and to operate them at less expense. Manifestly the day will soon be here when the American flag will be found nowhere on the sea excepting in the coasting trade. The fault is with fool laws which require that our flag shall fly only over American-built ships and that such ships shall be manned in a certain fixed ratio by American citizens. The effect of this regulation of the shipping business is that Americans may not buy vessels in the cheaper markets where their competitors may find outfits, nor may they employ the cheaper labor available to their competitors. An American shipping master is required, therefore, to have a heavier investment and to pay more for operation than his foreign rival. Of course, under this sort of regulation, American shipping in the wider seas must cease to exist. Nobody can do business under conditions of positive and persistent disadvantage. Some day our law-makers will find sense enough to allow Americans to enter into the competitive shipping business upon even terms with foreigners.

CAMPAIGN TOPICS.

The New York Press, Republican, sounds a timely word of warning to the Republican forces against a spirit of over-confidence that is among the most fatal of human frailties. Confidence, the Press points out, is a good thing for any man who goes into a fight with the determination to win, but over-confidence puts a premium on the carelessness and stupidity that throw away victories that might be won with zeal and courage. The mere easy assertion that only a miracle could land William J. Bryan in the White House is no doubt soothing to a certain order of mind, but it is prolific in that sort of neglect of political duties from which come political tragedies. Elections are won by votes and by hard and persistent work, and they are lost by the boastfulness which is too often allowed to take their place. The Press continues:

The truth about Bryan's chances is that the most trustworthy political opinion confesses they are far better than they were in 1896 and 1900. There are few close observers of actual conditions who do not place the entire South, with the new State of Oklahoma, in the Bryan column. They concede that until the Republican party can prove to the contrary at the polls Bryan ought to be credited with West Virginia, Maryland, and Delaware, as well as the habitually Democratic States of the solid South. This would mean 176 votes in the electoral college, with 242 necessary to a choice.

Then everybody who knows anything at all about the country beyond the Mississippi River knows that the Far West is radical to a degree that may be called rabid. Mr. Bryan represents, and will represent in the minds of the voters of that territory, the next best exponent of the radicalism up to which President Roosevelt has educated them. These voters believe thoroughly in everything which Mr. Roosevelt has done, and they wanted him for a third term because they believed that he would do more along radical lines. They will incline to the candidate who looks to them like the man to go on to hotter radicalism.

Now this is the soundest of sound common sense. The coming struggle will be fought upon new issues, and the precedents and methods of calculation upon which we have been wont to rely have lost most of their efficacy. The new radicalism is an unknown quantity, and while there is, of course, no reason to fear that Mr. Taft will show any lack of tenacity in the cause of righteous reform, it is the opinion upon this point of the great masses of the electors, well informed and ill informed alike, that must be gauged. There may well be an unexpected number who need to be shown and to be convinced that reform without friction and progress without panic may be expected only from the Republican nominee, and to allow an unreasoning confidence to hinder the preaching of the political gospel would be one of those mistakes that may well be irretrievable.

Chief Justice Brewer is one of the few jurists of today who can handle political problems without departing from the judicial temperament. For his opinions on the blacklist and the boycott and the extent to which combinations are allowed to violate the fundamental principles of government no circulation can be too wide, especially at a time when one of the great historic parties has been beguiled into declarations that if carried into effect would be subversive of a rational or tolerable national existence.

Judge Brewer, in an address delivered a few days ago in Milwaukee, addressed himself to this matter of combinations, whether of capital or labor, and he certainly found no difficulty in showing the portentous size to which they have grown, nor the extent to which they are usurping the functions of government and, indeed, defying the government by going far beyond the limits to which any government can safely go. He denounced alike the combinations of capital that coerce the business man in joining them by threats of ruining his business and the labor organization which resorts to the boycott to force into its ranks those who have no desire to become members. All these things he denounced as "damnable" and he warned his hearers that they have become a danger to our institutions:

"There are certain individual rights—the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness—and they are rights which belong to every individual in this broad land. There is no crowned head in this country who can say 'I am the state.' The only thing we have to fear is that majorities will get together and for business or commercial or industrial reasons will crush out the independence of the individual. Nothing appeals to me more strongly as calling for the combined action of all true Americans than to preserve these inalienable rights."

It is to be feared that Judge Brewer's voice will be as that of one crying in the wilderness, and that such matters as the preservation of national institutions will become as mere airy nothings in comparison with the sublimer duties of vote catching. Mr. Gompers's support may not be worth much, but it would have to be worth far less than it is before national considerations and the preservation of liberty would be allowed to outweigh it.

The Grand Rapids Press (Ind.) presents a moderate view of the truth when it says:

At the present writing Mr. Gompers's active support of Mr. Bryan seems likely to cut both ways. He is an extreme radical and his vigorous campaigning for Mr. Bryan will tend to alienate the conservative elements—the farmers, the middle-class citizens, and the small business man, as well as the employers. Labor itself is not all included in the labor organizations. There are a great many laboring men whom Gompers classes as "scabs," and how many of these will follow him into the Bryan fold and how many will be repelled is an undecided question. The answer depends very largely on Mr. Gompers himself, and the tone of the speeches he makes on the stump.

It is something of a truism to say that "labor itself is not all included in the labor organizations," and that there are "a great many laboring men whom Gompers classes as scabs." The proportions of organized and unorganized laboring men are fairly accurately known, and when it comes to the counting of heads the former cut a miserable figure. But then the unionists make up by noise what they lack in other ways, and of course it does sometimes happen that the tail wags the dog.

Harper's Weekly points out that the most serious and important work of the next President will be the virtual reorganization of the Supreme Court. Four justices will have passed the retiring age when Taft or Bryan goes to the White House—Chief Justice Fuller, 75; Justice Harlan, 75; Justice Brewer, 71; and Justice Peckham, 70 in November. It is pretty well understood why the chief justice and Justice Harlan have not availed themselves of their privilege to retire; they have regarded it as a duty to remain on the bench so long as the country had a president more than likely to name as their successors men in sympathy with new and revolutionary methods of "interpreting" the Constitution and the laws. Quite likely Justice Brewer, perhaps the strictest constructionist, as he is probably our ablest jurist, has been influenced by the same consideration.

But it is too much to expect or ask that these patriotic men remain at the post of duty for another four years; so it is altogether probable that the next President will have the naming of four or even five, an actual majority of our Supreme Court. What kind of men would Bryan appoint? His record and his words leave no room for doubt.

It is evident that Mr. Taft will take no hand in the Ohio fight. He has declared that he has no candidate to succeed Foraker, and the New York Evening Post says that "if Oyster Bay will but stand pat on the same platform there is an excellent outlook for Republican harmony in Ohio." Continuing, the Post remarks:

Republicans everywhere have unequalled ability in burying the hatchet prior to elections and presenting a united front to the enemy. To oppose Mr. Foraker would be exceptionally bad politics, not only because he is a dangerous fighter with what is left of a very harmonious and powerful machine behind him, but because his courageous attitude in the Senate has won him friends where he never had them before. Any attempt to defeat him now would be regarded merely as an attempt to punish him for exercising a senator's inherent privilege of thinking for himself and voting not according to party orders, but in obedience to the dictates of conscience. This is so rare and so valuable a line of conduct that it must be acclaimed, whether in a Foraker, a La Follette, or a Hale, and any effort to prevent it must ever be opposed by the public-spirited of all parties.

Collier's Weekly admits that its sympathies are slightly more Democratic than Republican, but in the present situation it looks upon Mr. Taft with more confidence than upon Mr. Bryan. Its process of argument is a curious one. While holding that no legislative danger could come from Mr. Bryan's election, as no "snap-shot financial cure-alls could pass the Republican Senate," it points out that the immediate result of Mr. Bryan's election would be a halt in the so-called Roosevelt policies due to the division of party power at Washington. This may be commended to those weak-kneed Republicans who suppose that the cause of reform may be in some danger at the hands of Mr. Taft and that Mr. Bryan may be the best representative of the forward movement. On the contrary, Mr. Bryan's election would mean that the forward movement must become a backward movement, because a Republican Senate would naturally assume an attitude of consistent hostility toward him and toward his measures.

To quote once more from Collier's Weekly, we are told that while the first campaign against Bryan was the most expensive of this and probably of any other country, the present campaign promises to be on both sides the cheapest that America has known in a generation:

Formerly the parties bid against each other for subsidies. Now they are bidding for the crown of honest poverty.

The Perkins testimony in the New York insurance investigation started the disturbance. The ensuing moral awakening led to the passage last year of a national law forbidding political contributions from corporations wherever Congress could reach them, and similar laws in the State field were passed in New York and elsewhere. President Roosevelt's appeal for enforced publicity for campaign contributions in general was ignored by Congress and rejected by the Chicago convention. But Mr. Bryan and Mr. Taft were both committed to the policy, and the Denver convention heartily indorsed it. Thereupon Mr. Sheldon, the new treasurer of the Republican National Committee, announced that all contributions to the Republican campaign fund would be made public after the election. In seeming ignorance of the laws he added that contributions from corporations would be accepted. Mr. Bryan promptly caused the Democratic National Committee to announce that it would publish all its contributions of less than $100 before election, that it would accept no money from corporations, and that it would take no more than $10,000 from any one person. Thereupon Mr. Taft barred the corporations too, calling attention to the laws which Mr. Sheldon seemingly had forgotten.

Mr. Bryan is now appealing to the people for small contributions. He thinks that with six million voters to draw upon, the Democratic newspapers of the country should be able to raise enough for all legitimate purposes.

We shall have a chance now to see how the American people will vote when they are free from financial pressure. It is desirable, of course, for the party managers to have some small funds for legitimate expenses, but we could elect a President if they had no money at all. The voters are registered and the ballots are printed and counted at public expense. A campaign without money would be slow, but the government would not come to a standstill.

Herbert S. Hadley, the present attorney-general of Missouri, will be the Republican candidate for governor and hopes to hold the State in the Republican column. He would have a better chance if it were not a presidential year. He has not been nominated yet, but there is no opposition to his candidacy.

PARISIANS TRY TO PICK THE PONIES.

Playing the Races a Bourgeois Infatuation Encouraged by Government Protection.

One can see the Grand Prix on the Longchamps course for two francs (40 cents), or, if one disdains the democratic pelouse entrance, the pesage price, twenty francs, admits to the more aristocratic division. That the races are most attractive to those who have more regard for the admission fee than the distinction of place is shown by the fact that the cheap entrances took in 1,450,000 francs on the day of the great social event, while the pesage, at ten times the separate cost, received only 1,040,000. Thus the certainty that it is the attendance of the artisan, the business man, and the retired bourgeois that makes horse-racing profitable in France.

Yet it is not the attendance that presents the most attractive feature to the government under which racing is fostered at Longchamps, Chantilly, St. Cloud, Auteuil, Vincennes, St. Ouen, Enghien, Maisons-Lafitte, and le Tremblay. Benign and bountiful as the government is in its care of the people, it is not altogether amiably concerned in furnishing amusement—it finds a recompense in accompanying interests. It is not exaggeration to say that the Parisians are infatuated with racing, and because it furnishes an unrestricted field for gambling, under the authority of the state, and, so far as may be, gambling in which there is little necessity for distrust of the methods in which the game is conducted. From this infatuation the government reaps a perennially valuable harvest. Its profits are 8 per cent of the total amount invested by bettors on the several race-tracks. That is, its reservation or take-off from the entire receipts of all the pari-mutuels—294,432,770 francs last year—is 8 per cent, though of that commission or tax one-half is given to the race company that owns the track. Charity gets 2 per cent of the amount realized, 1 per cent goes to the department of hygiene, and 1 per cent is distributed in prizes to horse-breeders. Nearly $5,000,000 was thus secured last year from the gambling public—a heavy tax for merely recording the bets and holding the money for a few minutes.

Every facility is afforded those who desire to hazard their capital, either earnings or savings, in the game of choosing prospective winners. At the numerous booths adjacent to the race-course there are pads of consecutively numbered tickets hanging on the wall. Each ticket sold, if it bears the name of a winning horse, shares in the return of all the money paid in for tickets, less the government take-off. Tickets are sold at five, ten, fifty, and one hundred francs, and even in the method of display and sale there is a propitiatory if not an actually fascinating setting forth of the possible value of each printed token. Plainly to be observed is the serial number of each ticket, showing just how many have been sold for each choice. Totals may vary in degree at different booths, but a fair average is usually to be had at each place, as the betting public is moved by well-calculated impulse. Numerous publications assume to give reliable information in advance, and each of the daily papers has a special service by a race-track expert. And in spite of all this care and indicated certainty the losers outnumber the winners.

More than twenty years ago M. Joseph Oller invented the pari-mutuels. He had booths showing conspicuously large dials that registered each bet made, and those betting on the winning horses shared in the pool, less 10 per cent, the ingenious promoter's commission. Wonderfully successful from the first, the rage for race-track gambling that M. Oller's cunningly devised scheme induced was the cause of its downfall. Public sentiment was aroused against betting by the favor and resulting publicity it had earned, and in 1887 the government closed up M. Oller's business. Then the sport of racing languished, and once more, with the arrangements modified in minor details, the betting system was made accessible to the public. In 1891 the government took over M. Oller's plan, systematized it for all the race-tracks, and the game has flourished since that time. The inventor of the pari-mutuels now prints the tickets used, but has no other direct revenue from the great income-producing scheme which developed in his active brain.

In spite of the government management of the game, there are occasional difficulties. One Sunday in October, 1906, the bettors in attendance at the races at Longchamps suddenly became inspired with the suspicion that there was collusion between the managers and the judges in declaring a false start, and a riot ensued. The mob overturned, demolished, and burned many of the booths, and this in the teeth of the police called to quell the disturbance. Other unfriendly demonstrations have been silenced in their incipency, and it is probable that there is rarely any real cause for charges of misconduct against the managers. The game is too profitable to be jeopardized by swindling methods.

To protect itself, however, the government employs many secret-service agents in tracking down and apprehending clandestine bookmakers, who emulate authorized methods and pay the pari-mutuel prices. There are many of these, who bring their avarice-breeding offers to busy ones unable to visit the race-course, and thus carry on a secret but prosperous vocation. They do not have to pay 4 per cent of their commissions to charity, health, and the breeding of race-horses, and the investors lose no more than in the legalized pools. But the government frowns upon this traffic, and visits with severe penalties those discovered engaged in its allurement. It is not for the public good to have gambling untaxed.

Beyond question, it is not altogether good for the public to have authorized, open gambling. There is even in Paris a formidable sentiment in opposition to this state enterprise, but it is not likely soon to accomplish any sweeping reform. The Grand Prix will continue to be the great social event of the last Sunday in June for a long time yet, and to mark, as it has for many years, the actual close of the ceremonial season. PARIS, July 11, 1908. ST. MARTIN.

OLD FAVORITES.

The Veil.

Have you prayed tonight, Desdemona?

THE SISTER—

What ails, what ails you so, my brothers,
That thus you bend your brows in care?
Like lamps funeral darkness smothers,
The glances from your eyelids glare,
Your belts hang all unloosed around you,
Already thrice have leapt in play
The falchion blades wherewith you've hound you,
Half glancing from their sheaths away.

THE ELDEST BROTHER—

Have you not lifted up that veil of yours today?

THE SISTER—

Returning from the bath, my brothers,
My lords, returning from the bath,
Hidden from the gaze of Giaours and others—
The rough Albanians—in my path,
Just as I passed the mosque, I mind me,
In mine uncovered palanquin,
I loosed the waiting folds that bind me,
And let warm airs of noonday in.

THE SECOND BROTHER—

A man passed then?—a man in caftan dyed with green?

THE SISTER—

'Tis very like; but all his boldness
Has never seen my features bare. . . .
But look, you speak with tones of coldness,
With coldness you are muttering there.
Must you have blood? I swear that no man
Could see—yes, by your souls I'm right.
Pardon! my brothers, shield a woman
Who stands so helpless in your sight!

THE THIRD BROTHER—

Methinks the sun was red at sunseting tonight.

THE SISTER—

Pardon! what have I done? Oh, pardon!
God! there are four wounds in my side!
Nay! by your knees I fall thus hard on. . . .
My veil, my veil so white and wide!
Fly not! My hands this blood is staining;
Brothers, assist my faltering breath;
Across mine eyes whose glance is waning
Extends itself the pall of death.

THE FOURTH BROTHER—

A veil at least is that no hand upgathereth.
—Victor Hugo.

The Younker of Volmarstein.

Forth, for adventure, rode riders twain;
Through heath and coppice they clanged amain;
"In a fierce fray now I would like to dash;
I would fain draw sword, and cut and slash!"
So says to his tall groom, bold and rash,
The Younker of Volmarstein.

Then entered a thick fir-wood the two;
"Here," sneers he, "of late a man I slew;
'Twas not for gold, 'twas not through greed.
Out of rage and malice I did the deed."
For of death and blood had craving need
The Younker of Volmarstein.

The groom he shudders. A man stands there
O' the sudden beside them—with threat or with prayer
He silently stretches his lean hand out
"De'il take you, begone further on, you lout!"
So cries, while his eyes flash flame about,
The Younker of Volmarstein.

"Yet alms can a knight give richly—hold!"
And down he throws him a piece of gold
The groom through his cap the coin can see Gleam bright. "Sir knight, 'tis a ghost!" says he;
But laughs and jeers full hardily
The Younker of Volmarstein.

Anon, to a heath they bend their way;
"Must beggary, then, flourish here for aye?"
There, near at hand, stands the shape—the same.
The groom feels an ague shake his frame;
But steadily swings his whip—oh, shame!
The Younker of Volmarstein.

He strikes at the peasant with might and main;
He hits, but to fell him he strives in vain.
The groom perceives how each stroke falls
Through the body as air. He laments and bawls;
But a cowardly loon him roughly calls
The Younker of Volmarstein.

Now into a forest of oak they went,
Where horror the heart of the groom nigh rent;
For lo! the same man stands there who stood
Before in the heath, in thick fir-wood;
Now feels he, too, as if curdled his blood,
The Younker of Volmarstein.

Nathless, for a blow, he his sword lifts straight:
"I'll hit you now, vagabond, sure as fate!"
Through the empty air descends the blow;
Gigantic the beggar looms, fading slow;
Aghast, both stirrup and rein lets go
The Younker of Volmarstein.

Upreads the steed and on wildly leaps;
Unchecked in his furious flight he sweeps;
The dusk of the forest conceals him quite:
"O Lord, on the youth let doom not light!"
So prays the groom. "He's a woeful wight,
The Younker of Volmarstein!"

They sought him at night through the woods around.
At morn, in an oak, his corpse they found;
A forked branch had caught his head;
The steed from under him fast had fled.
Atoning thus for his crimes was sped
The Younker of Volmarstein.

—Wolfgang Muller.

On the authority of a magazine writer it is stated that every third man you meet in Argentina is a millionaire. It must be the Pittsburg of South America.

WINNERS IN THE OLYMPIC GAMES.

Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals, Trophies and Diplomas Distributed.

With the concluding hurdle and relay races and the presentation ceremonies, the Olympic Games of 1908 in the London Stadium came to an end on Saturday, July 25. Queen Alexandra presented the gold medals and trophies to the successful competitors, and the dowager Duchess of Westminster, the Duchess of Westminster, the Duchess of Rutland, and Lady Desborough handed the silver and bronze medals, the diplomas, and the commemorative medals to those entitled to them. A big crowd attended the function and cheered the athletes as they came up.

As the prizes were being distributed the band played national folk songs. The Americans were the only athletes to wear their track uniforms. They naturally were in a large majority, having carried off most of the prizes. George V. Bonhag of the Irish-American Athletic Club received a great cheer when he came up and was handed four medals and four diplomas. Commemorative medals were given to everybody who took part in the games. Prizes were distributed not only for games at the stadium, but also for the events held previously elsewhere. The American riflemen who were victorious at Bisley appeared in natty khaki uniforms with American shields on their breasts.

The ceremony was carried out quickly and well, but in order to keep the audience amused exhibitions of high diving and water polo were given at the same time. Walker of South Africa, the winner of the 100-metre dash, was the first man to receive a gold medal at the hands of the queen. He was followed by Kerr of Canada, the winner of the 200-metre event, and Halswelle of the United Kingdom, the victor in the 400-metre race. Then came Melvin W. Sheppard of the Irish-American Athletic Club for the medals won in the 800 and 1500 metres events, and C. J. Bacon of the Irish-American Athletic Club, the winner of the 400-metre hurdle race, and Russell of the United Kingdom, the winner of the 3200-metre steeplechase. Then came the winners of the walking races, with John J. Hayes of the Irish-American Athletic Club, who won the Marathon race, just behind. Hayes received great applause. Next was Ray C. Ewry of the New York Athletic Club, who got medals for the standing broad and the high jumps. F. C. Irons of the Chicago Athletic Association got his medal for the running broad jump. Ahearne of the United Kingdom came in here for his medal. He was the only man to interrupt the Americans, who continued the procession with John J. Flanagan of the Irish-American Athletic Club and Ralph Rose of the Olympic Club of San Francisco, who won the gold medals for throwing the hammer and putting the weight, respectively. The British winners in the tug-of-war, the three-mile team race, and the 3500-metre walk again broke the steady procession of American victors, but the line was at once taken up again by Martin J. Sheridan of the Irish-American Athletic Club, who claimed the gold medals for the discus throwing, free and Greek styles. Lemming of Sweden was then given his medals for the javelin throwing. Mathew Halpin, the manager of the American team, then appeared to take the medal for the American winners in the 1600-metre relay race.

Among the events of the morning were two races in which America came out victorious. The final in the 110-metre (120.2 yards) hurdle race was won by F. C. Smithson of the Multnomah (Oregon) Athletic Club. J. C. Garrels of the Chicago Athletic Association was second and A. B. Shaw of Dartmouth third. Smithson's time was 15 seconds, which is the world's record. He came in two yards in front of Garrels. The final in the 1500-metre swim was won by Taylor of the United Kingdom. Battersby of the United Kingdom was second and Beaurepaire of Australia was third. The final in the 1600-metre relay race was won easily by the American team. The German team was second and the Hungarian third in this event. The winner's time was 3 minutes 29.2-5 seconds. The Americans at no time were pressed. This was the last event of the Olympic sports, and the Stars and Stripes was the last flag to be officially unfurled announcing a victory.

In all of the events concluded since the Olympic Games began early in the year, including such games as water polo and other sports in which England alone competed, the present standing of the countries, counting wins only, is as follows: United Kingdom, 38; America, 22; Sweden, 7; France, 4; Hungary, 3; Norway, Germany, Canada, and Italy, 2 each; Belgium, South Africa, and Finland, 1 each. In the field and track events in which the points are counted, five for first, three for second, and one for third, the standing is: America, 114½; United Kingdom, 66½; Sweden, 12½; Canada, 11; South Africa and Greece, 8 each; Norway, 5; Germany, 4; Italy, 3; Hungary, 2½; France, 2½; Australia and Finland, 1 each. America's score in the field and track events is made up of fifteen firsts, ten seconds, and eight thirds, in addition to a tie for second and third in the standing high jump and a tie for third in the pole-vault.

The attendance at the games was seldom what had been expected by enthusiasts. Ten thousand is a generous estimate of the number of the public who were tempted to the opening ceremony, at which the king was present, and that number was not often reached afterward. The price of the cheapest seats was reduced from two shillings to sixpence, without appreciable results. Mr. James E. Sullivan, American commissioner of the games, regards the spirit exhibited with a glow in his air.

A HIGHER LAW FOR LAND.

By Jerome A. Hart.

XXV.

The senatorial battle at the capital had brought thither not only a horde of politicians and office seekers, but another and more ominous crowd. It was made up of unsuccessful gold-seekers, of prospectors who had failed to find claims, of weaklings who shrunk from the exhausting labor of the mines. These luckless ones had come down from the placers as far as Sacrosanto, where most of them remained, "dead broke," unable to fare further on their journey toward the Bay. The prosperity they observed on every hand made these malcontents even more jealous than they already were. Sleek and prosperous politicians who held fat offices confronted them everywhere, and affronted them by lavish displays of fine linen and broadcloth, and by ostentatious indulgence in imported wines and Havana cigars. The thriving tradesmen on the river front—the shop-keepers who toiled from dawn till midnight while gold-dust poured across their counters from the successful miners—the boomers who were staking out town lots in the suburbs of the thriving young city and erecting their cabins there—all these signs of prosperity among other men, these evidences of the accumulation of wealth by others, irritated the disappointed gold-seekers. They could not get the offices, for there were already three job-seekers for every political job. They could not get the shop-keepers' business, for they lacked the brains and the industry. They could not buy the town lots, for they lacked the money. What could they do?

Leaders soon sprang up among them, and ere many days orators were holding forth on the street corners to the army of discontent. Their theme was invariably the same—"land monopoly." Sacrosanto was situated on a vast Mexican grant of some eleven leagues of land, which long before had been acquired by Belmont, the "Trail Cutter." For many years Belmont had utilized this principality mainly for pastoral purposes, devoting some portions of it to agriculture. Still, although he had persistently refused to join the gold-hunters, he could not very well decline to entertain offers for the purchase of land on which to build a city. He had many leagues of land—much more than he could use. Therefore he had entrusted to agents the sale of that portion of his land which lay at the confluence of the two rivers. This was a natural site for a city, and the land was sold at good prices. Already some of the earlier purchasers had made modest fortunes by the sudden increase in their land values as the infant city pushed its borders further away from the river bank. It was on these lucky speculators that the disgruntled gold-seekers looked with the bitterest envy. But as the source from which they drew their fortunes was the original owner of the land, they also did not scruple to bracket Belmont with his purchasers, and to denounce him as a "land monopolist."

The squatter orators soon led their cohorts to organize under the corporate title of the "Sacrosanto Settlers' Association." Titles, like charity, cover a multitude of sins, and there is many an act committed by a "syndicate" or an "association" which the individuals composing it would hesitate to perform. Not that the individual squatters of the Settlers' Association were over-squeamish. But operating as a mass or mob they acquired more momentum, and a color of standing, which merely as an equal number of individuals they would have lacked. And one among them, who was a veritable squatter genius, devised an imposing plan, which was that the Settlers' Association should issue to its members certificates of title to the lands on which they had squatted—that is to say, as if A should give to B, in consideration of love and affection, a deed for C's land.

These curious documents gave great satisfaction to the squatters and their assigns, and correspondingly irritated the men who had paid for the land, and held it under legal title.

When parts of a body politic become inflamed, the fever is apt to spread. The long fight in the legislature over the senatorial seats had grown more bitter day by day; the two factions, Northern and Southern, of the Democratic party had become absolutely venomous in their hatred; the attempts of the Vigilante sympathizers to attack the ballot-box methods of Burke's followers more than once threatened to result in a physical contest. So the warring factions in the legislative chamber were disposed to "play politics" with the squatter element in the capital city, and used it as a source of sympathy if not of strength.

The evenly matched forces of the various factions had forced a deadlock in the senatorial contest. The monotonous balloting had been pursued for days without result; at last a contest of physical endurance set in, which resulted in the holding of night sessions. The orators on the street corners had also begun holding night sessions. At one of these gatherings the speaker's stand had been improvised of large packing-cases piled up in front of the Gem Saloon. After various minor orators had denounced the iniquities of land monopoly, a tall form was seen on the outskirts of the crowd and the cry arose:

"Brewer! Brewer! Speech! Speech!"

With gracious salutations the newcomer strode through the crowd, which made way for him, and closed up again as he climbed upon the rostrum. A sort of applause greeted him, which he allowed to sound sweetly in his ears for half a minute. Then, after this decent interval, he stilled the tumult by stretching toward the people his compelling hand.

"Men of Sacrosanto," he began, "why are we here tonight? Is it to share in the heated contest which has brought so many to the capital city? Is it to take sides in the election of a senator? No. Then why are we here? It is to denounce land monopoly that we are here, that monopoly of land which was purchased by the blood and treasure of the whole nation, and which therefore belongs to all of us. When our forefathers conquered from the tyranny of Great Britain the original thirteen States, their descendants made haste to go out into the wilderness—far to the westward—into the Western Reserve Territory belonging to such States as Connecticut and Massachusetts. And when they had established themselves there, far out in the forest, surrounded by hostile savages, were they forced to buy the land which they then reclaimed? Not so. The Federal government, with that far-sighted wisdom which has done much to build up the West, gave to these pioneer settlers freely of this virgin territory, of this primeval forest soil.

"We stand today on territory which also is a part of the American citizen's domain. While the Western Reserve was won from a wilderness, this land was won from a foreign foe. Yet here we find that land grants larger than European principalities—grants frequently obtained by fraud, corruption, and perjury—are permitted to stand between American citizens and their birth-right. Is this right? Not so. This land on which we stand today belongs to us. It belongs to American freemen. Fellow-citizens, I ask you who colonized the original thirteen States?"

"Settlers!" shouted the crowd.

"Who colonized the great West?"

"Settlers!"

"Who carried the Stars and Stripes across the Mississippi and over the Rocky Mountains?"

"Settlers!"

"And who will plant and maintain the Stars and Stripes here, and who will own the soil here, on the far off Pacific Shore?"

"Settlers!" shouted the crowd.

"You are right, fellow-citizens," went on the orator, "this land is ours. It is the appanage of American freemen, and it is one of the attributes of freedom that the citizens shall own the soil. Freedom, O my fellow-countrymen, is our dearest, most cherished trust."

Again there arose from the crowd a hoarse roar of applause. At its close shouts came:

"Let's go before the legislature!"

"Yes! Yes! We'll go to the capitol!"

"Yes! Yes! Let's demand our rights!"

"Make the legislature throw open this land to preemption!"

"Settlers' rights! Settlers' rights! Let's go to the legislature, and make them give us our rights!"

For a moment the orator seemed somewhat perturbed at this volcanic outburst, however flattering to his eloquence. Speedily regaining his self-possession, however, he shouted:

"Fellow-citizens! Before entering the capitol—where senate and house are now in joint session balloting for United States senator—I advise you to nominate a committee with full powers to act. In that way you will be received with due courtesy and attention by your legislators. For this entire body to enter the legislative chamber would be physically impossible."

A babble of voices broke out. The crowd hotly discussed the matter for a time. At last Colonel Brewer was unanimously elected chairman of their executive committee with power to appoint the remaining committeemen. This done, the executive committee headed the body of settlers, now numbering many hundreds, and took up its line of march for the capitol.

Soon the steps of the capitol and the lobbies of the assembly chamber were invaded by crowds of confident petitioners. The plight of statesmen invaded by their constituents seems humorous to outsiders, but statesmen themselves in such a crisis are invariably much embarrassed. The People's friends greatly prefer to legislate for their constituents from a reasonable distance off. Even the fiery Republicans of the first days of the French Revolution, fresh from the bosom of the People, found the invasions of that very People in their legislative chamber at times an embarrassment and at times a menace. Delegations coming with "mandates from the People" grew so frequent as to afflict. The People acquired the habit of visiting the legislative chambers in squads, always armed and frequently intoxicated. Thereupon it became the task of the agitated legislators to soothe the People, to brace up the People on its tottering legs, and to escort the People as rapidly as might be into the outer air.

Since the days of the French Revolution there have often been invasions of legislative chambers in many lands, even in our own. In all of them the procedure seems to be distasteful to the legislators. And so was it in this instance, in the great republic of the new world, and in the newest State of the great republic.

None the less, the legislators, who were in joint assembly, lacked the courage to refuse to receive the settlers' committee. It was formally resolved that the committee be received upon the floor, and a message was sent without to that effect. In a few minutes the committee, consisting of some score of consequential settlers headed by Colonel Brewer, marched into the space before the Speaker's stand.

With the fluency of a practiced speaker, Colonel Brewer thus began:

"Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, Gentlemen of the Senate and Assembly: We stand before you here tonight representing a large body of your constituents, several thousand, in fact, who in mass meeting assembled have determined to exercise the sacred right of petition. No right more sacred has been handed down to us from the days of Magna Charta. That right is an integral part of the Constitution of the United States. At the portals of this legislative temple there stand some thousands of your fellow-citizens, unjustly deprived, by an iniquitous construction of the laws, of the right to occupy lands belonging to them as citizens of this great republic, which owns these lands in trust for them. We only ask that we shall have the same privileges as were enjoyed by the citizens of Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, and other Western communities. We demand that we be permitted to go freely upon these lands, and to occupy them under the higher law, and as a natural and God-given right of freemen."

Here Colonel Brewer was interrupted by the president of the senate, who happened to be one of his personal and political enemies.

"Pardon me, sir, for interrupting you," remarked the president, "but permit me to remark that a few weeks ago, while arguing in court against an invasion of settlers in the Pueblo Addition down at the Bay, you denounced certain men who had occupied the lands of your client, saying that they were outlaws and law-breakers. Do you mean to say that here in this part of the State you advocate occupying lands extralegally, when down at the Bay you opposed such extralegal occupation and denounced it as outlawry?"

For a moment Colonel Brewer seemed a trifle disconcerted, but it was only for a moment.

"Mr. President," he said, smoothly and unctuously, "it is true that, in the practice of my profession, I have taken all sorts of cases at the bar. I have defended many criminals and I have argued for clients whose purely abstract rights may have been called in question. It is possible that my clients, in the cases you refer to, may have been in the wrong; it is possible that they were upholding the unjust land monopolies against which I and this committee have come to protest before you here tonight. But admitting that it were so, what of it? Is it not my solemn duty as an advocate to take the case of the citizen in distress who seeks my aid? Is not that my duty whether life, or land, or liberty is in peril? Is it not my highest duty as a lawyer? If I ever deny that sacred duty of my profession, may God strike me dumb forever!"

He ceased, and the echoes of his ringing voice died away in the dome above. So sincere, so truthful was its ring that the members of the settlers' committee broke forth into loud applause, despite their presence in the august legislative chamber. Many of the legislators joined them.

The Speaker of the lower house rose, and bowed obsequiously to the settlers' committee. He apparently addressed the president, while in reality turning away from the chair to face Colonel Brewer.

"Mr. President, and you, my fellow-citizens of the Settlers' Committee," said the Speaker, "after the eloquent words which we have just heard, few among us will venture to deny that there is much merit in the petition advanced so ably by Colonel Brewer for the large body of our constituents assembled tonight outside. But no one knows better than that eloquent advocate that legislation must precede law, and law must precede action. The conflicting laws over these vexatious land matters are as yet by no means settled; but the Federal government has sent a land commission here which is now conferring with our State officials, and we may confidently hope that these vexatious matters are to be adjusted to the satisfaction of our constituents in a very brief period. May we then ask Colonel Brewer and his committee to go forth and carry to that body of our fellow-citizens whom they represent the welcome news that we can assure them that we will willingly give to the matters which they have laid before us our speedy and earnest consideration?"

The Speaker's words bore an appearance of depth and meaning on the surface which a close examination might have shown to be deceptive. Hence Colonel Brewer quickly determined to deport his cohorts before comprehension should set in. Without waiting, therefore, for the president to reply, Brewer quickly cut in:

"Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen: Far be it from me to ask more at your hands than that which you have agreed to do, in the graceful, earnest, and eloquent words of the gentleman who has just sat down. After such sincere assurances of the desire of this honorable body to meet our requests, this committee can do no more than to report back to the body which it represents, and for us to merge ourselves again in the bosom of the people. Gentlemen, we thank you." Waving his hand with a dramatic air, the colonel and his committee solemnly marched down the aisle and withdrew.

But the Speaker's fine words buttered no parsnips. If the legislators had hoped to dismember the squatter movement by illusive speeches and specious promises they were in error. The happenings in the legislative chamber, as reported by Brewer and corroborated by his committee, only encouraged the squatters. So mettlesome were they made by the quasi encouragement of the legislature that on the next day they abandoned words for action. Organized in a compact body, they began marching through the streets bearing banners with the legend, "Settlers' Rights." Emboldened by lack of opposition, some of the more daring soon began occupying vacant lots in the heart of the town. The land-holders, who had paid Belmont for their land, became alarmed. They too organized, and it was not uncommon to see rival mass-meetings in progress in the streets at the same time; one under the banner, "Settlers' Rights," and the other a band of land-owners under the banner "Law and Order." This rallying cry of the land-owners caused the squatters to claim that they were supported by the Bay City Vigilantes. "Down at the Bay" the opponents of the Vigilantes called themselves "Law-and-Order men."

Another day passed. The first few overt acts of the squatters had met with no opposition. The municipal authorities had taken no action. The legislature was silent. On the succeeding day the squatters grew bolder; they were not content with "jumping" vacant lots—they began taking possession of land on which cabins were constructed. The bolder squatters indulged in more lucrative law-breaking—such as seizing an unoccupied cabin, hauling it with ropes to an adjacent lot, and then selling both stolen cabin and stolen lot to an innocent purchaser. This proved to be the last straw. The land-owners began organizing to defend themselves. There were among them individuals who took measures of defense outside of their organization. One irritated lot-owner who found a couple of squatters occupying his cabin gave them three minutes to leave his premises. When the squatters refused to comply, the owner touched off a long fuse communicating with a keg of gunpowder which he had concealed in the rear. An explosion followed, which blew both the building and the squatters into the air.

More peaceful land-owners, recoiling at such summary measures, got writs of ejectment. But these writs were resisted by the squatters; appearing in force, heavily armed, they marched through the streets defying the service of writs whenever an appeal came from a squatter.

The land-owners at last grew as bold in defense of their land as the squatters were to steal it. From shop to shipping-office, from bank to mill, from market to forge, they hastened until they had assembled a large force of armed men. In order to be within the law, they got the legal authorities to organize them into a posse. Summons was sent to the squatters to disperse at four o'clock, or the municipal officers would disperse them by force. The message was received with jeers.

Such was the feverish condition of the city only a few days after the senatorial fight began. On the afternoon set by the municipal officers for the squatters to disperse, a number of men and women stood on the balcony of the Golden Star Hotel, gazing down on the marching crowds below. They were guests of the hotel, looking curiously at the scene with that certain sense of detachment which strangers have when present at a municipal tumult whether it be a riot or a revolution.

Among the guests who met on the balcony were Sophia Lucretia Leigh and Eugene Yarrow. So frivolous was the woman's nature that the spectacle only amused her. Still, even among the other guests few seemed to realize how determined were the stern-looking men they saw in the street below.

"They march like an awkward squad, don't they?" cried Sophia Lucretia, pointing to a file of men who had just appeared from a side street.

"Perhaps they do," observed Yarrow, "but I observe that they all have Winchester rifles."

"What do you think will be the upshot, Mr. Yarrow?"

"I very much fear there will be bloodshed. We have had these squatter troubles at the Bay, and they have caused much shooting. My father owns lands in the Pueblo Addition which he has been obliged for months to have guarded by armed men. Several times the guards have fired on the squatters, and the squatters have fired in return. There would be quite a battle before they were driven off."

"Why don't they find out who owns the land, and not have all this marching and threats of bloodshed?"

"Some of the land belongs to Captain Belmont, some of it to people who have purchased from him. The point at issue now is whether the owners are to be allowed to possess their land peaceably and whether Belmont can transmit his title to those who purchase from him, or whether the squatters can take the land away from him and them without paying for it."

Sophia Lucretia looked at him in surprise. "Why, what warrant have they for such high-handed and illegal acts?" she asked.

"None at all, except contempt for the law, which seems to be growing in this State. They claim to have the sympathy of the Bay City Vigilantes."

As Yarrow spoke a new body of riflemen appeared coming up the street. At the head of the column rode their leader. Truth to tell, he was not an heroic figure. He had a commonplace face, and was extremely fat. Over his portly body, haldric-wise, there ran a tricolor scarf in which was slung a sword, and pistols were in his saddle holsters. He rode a horse which was by no means an Arabian barb, but a sober animal, hairy fetlocked, stockily built, and well calculated to carry a heavy weight.

"Look! Who is that?" inquired Sophia Lucretia with a shrill laugh. "Isn't he funny?"

"It is the mayor of the city," replied Yarrow, with a slightly annoyed air.

"He does not look much like a warrior. Is he a squatter or a Law-and-Order man?"

"Law and Order," responded Yarrow laconically.

"He looks eminently civic," giggled the lady.

"He may not look heroic, but he represents the Law."

"What is he going to do? Lead his forces into battle?"

"I imagine that he is about to treat the squatters as rioters, and order them to disperse. That is a civilian posse accompanying him."

"And if the rioters do not disperse, what then?"

Yarrow looked at her a moment before replying. "What then?" he echoed. "Why, then somebody may get hurt."

When the mayor and his posse had passed, the street was emptied as if by magic. All of the loungers who had been on the sidewalk followed the little pageant. The men on the balcony made preparations to descend, and Yarrow said to Sophia Lucretia:

"Perhaps you had better go inside for a time—you will be safer. I will return soon, and report to you what news there may be."

It was not many minutes after he had left when Sophia Lucretia heard the sound of gunshots not far away. She ran out on the balcony followed by a number of the other women guests. The shots continued. They were not in volleys, but scattering shots, and by their sound they seemed to come from different kinds of weapons. The women grew much agitated—they could get no news—the few men on the street below were hurrying to the scene of combat, and paid no heed to their calls. But it was not long before the empty street again became filled with a returning wave of men.

Soon she saw Yarrow amid the crowd, which was following a knot of armed men escorting a group of prisoners, some of them wearing blood-stained bandages. Harsh cries arose from the crowd, as they strove to press in through the guards. Some shouted "To the prison brig!" Others cried: "Lynch them! String them up! Bring a rope!"

Hearing her call to him, Yarrow reluctantly abandoned his pursuit of the crowd, and joined Sophia Lucretia on the balcony. To her excited queries he replied:

"When I got there the squatters had rigged a long rope around the house of a man named Robinson, who had purchased the land from Belmont. A squatter named Tuttle claimed the land, and the other squatters sided with him. They were lining up along the rope, and were just about to pull the house down when the mayor and his party arrived."

"And what happened then?" asked Sophia Lucretia breathlessly.

"The mayor ordered them to desist and disperse. They fell back as if to comply, but a body of armed squatters suddenly leaped out from behind the house, and began shooting. The mayor fell from his horse at the first fire."

"Was he killed?"

"I don't know. Everything took place so rapidly that there was scarcely time to notice. I saw the squatter leader fall dead, shot through the head by a ball from the rifle of the city recorder, Frank Jefferson. At the same time, the city assessor, Page, pitched forward on his face, shot through the heart, so I was told. Then the squatters broke and ran. There were six dead bodies lying on the ground, and there were probably forty wounded."

While they were talking the street had emptied again, as the crowd followed the guarded squatters to the prison brig at the embarcadero. But pointing in the other direction, that from which sounds of firing had come, Sophia Lucretia cried:

"Look! there is another crowd coming. What are they carrying?"

As it neared them, they saw that it was the advance of the "Law-and-Order" column which had set forth not long before. At its head, as before, came the stout mayor. He had not looked heroic then, and some of the crowd jeered at him as he rode by. Perhaps he did not look heroic even now. His big body, bullet-riddled, was borne along on a door carried by six men. But on the waxen face and in the dead eyes which looked upward toward the sky there was the peaceful look which often goes with death from gunshot wounds. Who can tell?—perhaps it was the look of a man who has laid down his life for his duty. And as the bearers plodded onward with the bullet-gashed body of him who typified the Law, his blood dripped down on the soil of the city over which he so lately was the mayor.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Copyright 1908 by Jerome A. Hart.

Holland is not a poor country; as a matter of fact it is the third richest, proportionately, of all Europe. Its wealth is forcibly spread over its tiny surface, for law-making has prevented undue accumulation and quashed the small capitalist. When the father or mother dies, the farm, business, whatever the little property may happen to be, is at once cut up, smashed to pieces, flung on the market at any price; the proceeds are compulsorily divided among the children. Therefore the country contains many an idle household, with just enough to live upon, unwilling to earn more. It contains, however, a far greater number with a little, insufficient capital of their own.

Professor Edgar J. Banks of the University of Chicago contributes to the Open Court, an article on "The Origin of the Crescent and the Star." Professor Banks shows how these two symbols were used in combination more than 6000 years ago in Babylonia when primitive man was first learning to write by scratching crude pictures upon clay and stone. An illustration shows the development of the crescent and star from the original picture writing to the later Babylonian wedge-shaped or cuneiform writing.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Cardinal Gibbons of Baltimore, head of the Roman Catholic Church in America, who is now on his way to Rome to confer with the Pope, is seventy-four years old.

Joseph Chamberlain passed his seventy-second birthday last week. Though from time to time optimistic paragraphs as to his health are published, his friends know well that his retirement from active politics is final. There is no hope that he may recover sufficiently once more to speak on a public platform or to enter the House of Commons.

Miss Cornelia Sorabji, a Parsee, who was educated and took her degree at Oxford, has just published a book. She is legal adviser to the government of India in cases in which the zenana and the rights of women are concerned, and most of the material for her book was collected in this way. She calls the book "Between the Twilights: Studies of Indian Women."

Miss Clara Martin of Toronto has just announced herself as a candidate for the Provincial Legislature at the coming election in East Toronto. Besides being Canada's first woman lawyer, Miss Martin is the first woman member of the board of education of Toronto, and she hopes to make her record still more unusual by being the first Canadian woman member of Parliament.

The title of the oldest college student in the world appears now to belong to Miss Sarah P. Morrison, who not long ago matriculated at the State University of Indiana. Miss Morrison, who is now seventy-five years of age, was the first woman to graduate from the university, being a member of the class of '59. She has returned to the institution for the purpose of taking a course in Greek during the summer term.

Sir Henry Pitman, until recently the active registrar of the Royal College of Physicians in London, has completed a century. He is a little deaf, and his vision is not so keen as it was once, but in all other respects his faculties are still unimpaired. His birthday fell on the first of July, and he received visits from many friends and distinguished pupils. The king did not forget to send him a hearty congratulatory message.

James S. Sherman of Utica, Republican candidate for the vice-presidency, has accepted the invitation of the Richfield Springs (N. Y.) Eisteddfod to be present at the singing festival to be held there September 2 and 3. Mr. Sherman will preside at the opening session. There are already entered in the competition about one thousand singers from New York, Vermont, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Canada, and $2000 will be awarded in prizes.

Prince Max of Saxony, brother of the king, is about to visit England in connection with the forthcoming International Eucharistic Congress, at which he will be one of the principal speakers. The prince, who during his former stay in London attracted large crowds by the force of his pulpit eloquence, recently gained considerable reputation also in Paris, where his discourses at St. Denys-la-Chapelle were attended by the rank and fashion of the French capital. To the unique distinction of being the only priest who is a prince of the blood-royal, Prince Max adds the advantage of a handsome presence and a peculiarly fascinating manner which captivates his listeners. He is a domestic prelate of the Vatican.

General Roger A. Pryor of New York, former supreme court justice, has just completed his eightieth year. He is in excellent physical condition, his eyes bright, his face not old looking, and his hair, which falls to his shoulders, is only slightly tinged with gray. Mrs. Pryor is still living, and is known as an author. They were married at Charlottesville, Virginia, sixty years ago in November, when he was twenty and she eighteen. Before the war General Pryor had been an editor in Richmond, and after the fighting was over he went to New York City. The late Benjamin Wood made him an editorial writer on the News, but this was done secretly. Meanwhile Mrs. Pryor taught music and her husband studied law. Governor Hill, at the request of General Daniel E. Sickles, made General Pryor judge of the New York court of common pleas. He was elected to that bench when his term expired, and when the courts were consolidated Judge Pryor became a supreme court justice, which place he held for many years.

Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, a fifty-year-old widow, is the inspiring leader of that English suffragette faction which has just captured the movement and made it defiantly bellicose. In her suite of thirteen offices at Clement's Inn she directs the labors of a score of young women typewriters, all working without pay, and organizes those window-smashing riots, those raids on the Houses of Parliament and those monster processions through London streets which impart such fresh piquancy to the Gilbertian generalization that the policeman's lot is not a happy one. Mrs. Pankhurst, it has been disparagingly hinted, would never have emerged triumphant from the bitter feud within the ranks of the suffragettes but for the irresistible seductiveness of her daughter Christobel, who to the learning of Hypatia adds many of Marie Antoinette's graces and all the eloquence of Mme. Roland. Sylvia, the other daughter, is somewhat deficient in the family fire, but has more sweetness than her sister. All the ladies have been arrested frequently.

ANDREW JACKSON, THE FIGHTER.

The Latest Story of the Warrior's Exploits, Written in Modern Prose.

Alfred Henry Lewis, journalist, novelist, biographer, and artist in the terse, vivid expression of unconventional Americans, has made an entertaining story of the career of "Old Hickory." From the first chapter to the last his narrative is suited to its subject. Picturesque, stirring, impressive, it will wake new interest in one of the great figures of our history.

This is Mr. Lewis's presentation of the youthful Jackson, whose character was to be read in his appearance:

The face is a boy's face. It is likewise of the sort called "horse"; with hollow cheeks and lantern jaws. The forehead is high and narrow. The yellow hair is long, and tied in a cue with an eelskin—for eelskins are according to the latest fashionable command sent up from Charleston. The redeeming feature to the horse face is the eyes. These are big and blue and deep, and tell of a mighty power for either love or hate. They are Scotch-Irish eyes, loyal eyes, steadfast eyes, and of that inveterate breed which if aroused can outstare, outdemeaner Satan.

As adding to the horse face a look of command, which sets well with those blue eyes—so capable of tenderness and ferocity—is a high predatory nose. The mouth, thin-lipped and wide, is replete of what folk call character, but does nothing to soften a general expression which is nothing if not iron. And yet the last word is applicable all at times. The horse face never turns iron-hard unless danger presses, or perilous deeds are to be done. In easier, relaxed hours one finds no sternness there, but gayety and lightness and love of pleasure.

In dress the horse-faced boy is rather the fop, with a bottle-green surcoat of latest cut, high-collared, long-tailed, open to display a flowered waistcoat of as many hues as May, from which struggles a ruffie stiff with starch. The horse-faced boy has his predatory nose buried in a law book.

It was a day of strong figures, and one just preceding that of many more, all to be joined with the story Mr. Lewis tells:

As Andy the horse-faced rides away that October afternoon Henry Clay is a fatherless boy of nine, living with his mother at the Virginia Slashes; Daniel Webster, a sickly child of six, is toddling about his father's New Hampshire farm; John C. Calhoun is a baby four years old in a South Carolina farmhouse; John Quincy Adams, nineteen and just home from a polishing trip to France, is a Harvard student; Martin Van Buren aged four, is playing about the tap room of his Dutch father's tavern at Kinderhook; while Aaron Burr, fortunate, foremost, and full of promise, has already won high station at the New York bar. None of these has ever heard of Andy the horse-faced, nor he of them; yet one and all they are fated to grow well acquainted with one another in the years to come, and before the curtain is rung finally down on that tragedy-comedy-farce which, played to benches ever full and ever empty, men call Existence.

Early in his career the Scotch-Irish youth had quarrels thrust upon him in every-day life. He won in these, as he won in more dignified contests later on:

Having established himself in the confidence of common men, it still remains with our horse-faced hero to conquer the esteem of the bar. The opportunity is not a day behind his collision with that violent one of equine-alligator genesis. In good sooth, it is an offshot thereof.

The bruised Irad's case is up for trial. His counsel, Colonel Waightstill Avery, hails from a hamlet, called Morganton, on the thither side of the Blue Ridge. Colonel Waightstill is of middle age, pompous and high, and the youth of Andy—slim, lean, eager, horse face as hairless as an egg—offends him.

"Your honor," cried Colonel Waightstill, addressing the bench, "who, pray, is the opposing counsel?" The boyish Andy stands up. "Must I, your honor," continues the outraged Colonel Waightstill, "must I cross forensic blades with a child? Have I journeyed all the long mountain miles from Morganton to try cases with babes and sucklings? Or perhaps, your honor—here Colonel Waightstill waxes sarcastic—"I have mistaken the place. Possibly this is not a court, but a nursery."

Colonel Waightstill sits down, and the horse-faced Andy, on the leaf of a law book, indites the following:

"August 12, 1788.

"SIR: When a man's feelings and character are injured he ought to seek speedy redress. My character you have injured; and further you have insulted me in the presence of a court and a large audience. I therefore call upon you as a gentleman to give me satisfaction for the same; I further call upon you to give me an answer immediately without Equivocation and I hope you can do without dinner until the business is done; for it is consistent with the character of a gentleman when he injures a man to make speedy reparation; therefore I hope you will not fail in meeting me this day.

From yr. Hbl. st.

"ANOW JACKSON."

This is the story of his first encounter with firearms, following the scene in court:

As Mr. Overton gives the horse-faced Andy his weapon, he asks:

"What can you do at this distance?"

"Snuff a candle."

"Good! Let me offer a word of advice: Don't kill; don't even wound. The casus belli does not justify it, and you can establish your credit without it. Should your adversary require a second shot, it will then be the other way. His failure to apologize, coupled with a demand for another shot, should mean his death warrant."

The horse-faced Andy approves this counsel. And yet, if he must not wound, he may warn, and to that admonitory end sends his ounce of lead so fast to all but brush the ear of Colonel Waightstill. The gentleman's bullet flies safely wild. After the exchange of shots, the seconds hold a consultation. Mr. Overton says that his principal must receive an apology, or the duel shall proceed.

Colonel Waightstill's second talks with that gentleman, and finds him much softened as to mood. The flying lead, brushing his ear like the wing of a death angel, has set him thinking. He now distrusts that similitude of "babes and sucklings," and is even ready to concede the intimation that the horse-faced Andy is a child to be far-fetched. Indeed, he has conceived a vast respect, almost an affection, for his youthful adversary, and will not only apologize, but declares that, for purposes of litigation, he shall hereafter regard the horse-faced Andy as being of mature years.

Of the doughty duelist's capitulation in the court of love, much has been written, but Mr. Lewis brings out some little-known details in his account of the second wedding and its cause:

The slow story of the blooming Rachel's release reaches our two in Natchez. Thereupon Andrew leads Rachel the blooming before a priest; and the priest blesses them, and names them man and wife. That autumn they are again at the Widow Donelson's; but the blooming Rachel, once Mrs. Rohards, is now Mrs. Jackson.

Slander is never the vice of a region that goes armed to the teeth. Thus it befalls that now, when the two are back on the Cumberland, those sophisticated ones forget to wink. There comes not so much as the arching of a brow; for no one is so careless of life as all that. The whole settlement can see that the dangerous Andrew is watching with those steel-blue eyes. At the first suggestion that his Rachel has been guilty of wrong, he will be at the throat of her maligner like a panther.

Time flows on, and a horrible thing occurs. There comes a new word that no divorce was granted by that legislature; and this new word is indisputable. There is a divorce, one granted by a court; but, as an act of separation between Rachel the blooming and the drunken Rohards, that decree of divorce is long months younger than the empowering act of the Richmond legislature, which mistaken folk regarded as a divorce. The good priest's words, when he names our troubled two as man and wife, were ignorantly spoken. During months upon months thereafter, through all of which she was hailed as "Mrs. Jackson," the blooming Rachel was still the wife of the drunken Rohards.

The blow strikes Andrew gray; but he says never a word. He blames himself for this shipwreck; where his Rachel was involved, he should have made all sure and invited no chances.

The injury is done, however; he must now go about its repair. There is a second marriage, at which the silent Overton and the Widow Donelson are the only witnesses, and for the second time a priest congratulates our storm-tossed ones as man and wife. This time there is no mistake.

The young husband sends to Charleston; and presently there came to him over the Blue Ridge the finest pair of dueling pistols which the Cumberland had ever beheld. They are Galway saw-handles, rifle-barreled; a breath discharges them, and they are sighted to the splitting of a hair.

"What are they for?" asks Overton the tactician, balancing one in each experienced hand.

In the eyes of Andrew gathers that steel-blue look of doom. "They are to kill the first villain who speaks ill of my wife," says he.

In time Jackson had become a commanding officer in the army, and this is the story of one of his early battles against the Creeks:

The general's triumph at the Horseshoe puts the last paragraph to the last chapter of the Creek wars. Also, it disappoints certain English prospects, and defeats for all time those savage hopes of a general race battle against the paleface, the fires of which the dead Tecumseh so long supported by his eloquence and fed with deeds of valor. By way of a finishing touch, from which the hue of romance is not wanting, the terrible Weathersford rides in, on his famous gray war horse, and gives himself up to the general.

"You may kill me," says Weathersford. "I am ready to die, for I have beheld the destruction of my people. No one will hereafter fear the Creeks, who are broken and gone. I come now to save the women and little children starving in the forest."

"The man who would kill a prisoner," he cries, "is a dog and the son of a dog. To him who touches Weathersford I promise a noose and the nearest tree."

The general leads his hunting-shirt men by easy marches back to that impatient plenty which awaits their coming on the Cumberland. The public welcomes him with shout and toss of hat, while the blooming Rachel gives her hero measureless love and tenderness. The general's one hundred and fifty slaves, agog with joy and fire-water, make merry for two round days. They would have enlarged that festival to three days, but the stern overseer intervenes to recall them to the laborious realities of life.

As the general begins to have the better of his fatigue and sickness—albeit that Benton-wounded left arm is still in a sling—a note is put in his hands. The note is from the War Department in Washington, and reads: "Andrew Jackson of Tennessee is appointed major-general in the army of the United States, vice William Henry Harrison, resigned."

After the successful battle of New Orleans the rejoicing citizens wish to give a hall to celebrate the victory, but martial law forbids the use of lights after nine o'clock. Appeal is made in vain to General Jackson:

The general refuses to be moved; but continues to hold the city in his unrelenting clutch—maintaining the while a wary eye for sly returning English, with an occasional glance at the local treason which is simmering about him.

The public murmur grows louder and deeper. A rumor of the peace comes ashore, no one knows how. The general refutes the rumor, fearing an English ruse to throw him off his guard. At the peace whisper, the popular discontent increases. The general, in the teeth of it, remains unchanged.

Citizen Hollander expresses himself with more heat than prudence. The general locks up the vituperative Citizen Hollander. M. Toussand, consul for France, considers such action high-handed, and says so. The general marches Consul Toussand out of town, with a brace of bayonets at the consular back. Legislator Louissillier protests against the casting out of Consul Toussand. The general consigns the protesting Legislator Louissillier to a cell in the calaboose. Jurist Hall of the district court issues a writ of habeas corpus for the relief and release of the captive Louissillier. The general responds by arresting Jurist Hall, who is given a cell between captives Louissillier and Hollander, where by raising his voice he may console with them through the intervening stone walls.

Thus are affairs arranged when official notice of the peace reaches the general from Washington. Instantly he withdraws his grip from the city, restores the civil rule, and releases from captivity Jurist Hall, Citizen Hollander, and Legislator Louissillier.

Upon the disappearance of martial law, Papa Plauche, with his immortal "Fathers of Families," gives that hall of victory, the exiled Consul Toussand creeps back into town, while Jurist Hall signals his restoration to the woosack by finding the general one thousand dollars for contempt of court—which he pays.

The legislature, guards withdrawn from its treasorable doors, expands into lawmaking. Its earliest action is a resolution of thanks for their brave defense of the city to Officers Coffee, Carroll, Hinds, Adair, and Patterson. The legislature pointedly does not thank the general, who grins dryly.

One more impressive scene. It is after the great struggle over the Biddle Philadelphia bank, and nullification is the watchword of a powerful coterie of statesmen who hope to catch President Jackson in some sort of an entanglement. He has declined to attend a banquet:

Chairman Lee rises to his feet. He pays Statesman Calhoun many flowery compliments.

"The distinguished statesman from South Carolina," says Chairman Lee in conclusion, "begs to propose this sentiment." He reads from the slip: "The Federal Union! Next to our liberty, the most dear! May we all remember that it can only be preserved by respecting the rights of the States, and distributing equally the burdens and the benefits of that Union!"

The stillness of death continues—marked and profound; for, as Chairman Lee resumes his seat, Wizard Lewis rises. All know his relations with the general; every eye is on him with a look of interrogation. Now when the Calhoun toast has been read, they scan the face of Wizard Lewis, representative of the absent general, to note the effect of the shot. Wizard Lewis is admirable, and notably steady.

"The President," says Wizard Lewis, "when he sent his regrets, sent also a sentiment."

Wizard Lewis passes a folded paper to Chairman Lee, who opens it and reads:

"The Federal Union! It must be preserved!"

The words fall clear as a bell—for some, perhaps, a bell of warning. Statesman Calhoun's face is high and insolent. But only for a moment. Then his glance falls; his brow becomes pallid, and breaks into a pin-point sprinkle of sweat. He seems to shrink and sear and wither as though given some fleeting picture of the future, and the gallews prophecy thereof. In the end he sits as though in a kind of blackness of despair. The general is not there, but his words are there, and Statesman Calhoun is not wanting of an impression of the terrible meaning, personal to himself, which underlies them.

It is a moment ominous and mighty—a moment when a plot to stampede history is foiled by a sentiment, and Treason's heart and Treason's hand are palsied by a toast of seven words. And while Statesman Calhoun, white and frightened and broken, is helpless in the midst of his followers, the general sits alone and thoughtful with his quiet White House pipe.

Enough has been given to show the quality of the biographer's work, enough to demonstrate that this is to be accepted as one of the most graphic of life histories.

"When Men Grew Tall, or the Story of Andrew Jackson," by Alfred Henry Lewis. Published by D. Appleton & Co., New York; price, $2 net.

The naming of a disease after the doctor who described and prescribed for it, as was done with Bright's disease, is no new thing, as the saint celebrated today can prove. The chapel near Ulm, which was dedicated to St. Vitus, was the object of an annual pilgrimage of people afflicted with the nervous affection which from this fact acquired the name of St. Vitus's dance. Except for this accident the name of Vitus would probably have passed into oblivion, for we know little of him beyond the fact that he was a Sicilian who suffered martyrdom under Diocletian.

These are busy days at the Mont de Piété, as the French government pawnbroking establishment is called. Its coffers are crowded with jewelry, silver plate, and all sorts of valuables. This is not due to a wave of impecuniosity, but merely to the fact that Parisians are leaving for the seaside or the mountains, and they have found that it costs less to leave their valuables under the protection of the state pawnbroker in return for a small loan than to place them in a safety deposit vault.

Nothing could be more simply told and still be as interesting as these sentences from a recently published chapter of Ellen Terry's memoirs: "Henry Irving did not treat me badly, I did not treat him badly. He revived 'Faust' and produced 'Dante.' I would have liked to stay with him to the end of the chapter, but I could not act in either of these plays. But we never quarreled. Our long partnership dissolved naturally. It was all very sad, but it could not be helped."

A new gem mineral—henitoite—has been added to the list of known precious stones. This is a titanosilicate of hafnium, having a blue color and a high refractive index. It is found in San Benito County, California.

CURRENT VERSE.

The Dead Master.

No singing chord of youth was dumb,
No star of youth was dim;
It seemed so long ere age should come,
I kept light watch for him,—
Light watch o'er heart, and nerve and eye,
His entrance evermore,—
And, lo! the shadow, stealing by,
Found an unguarded door!

I dreamt of far-off fields well-fought,
Fierce battle, victory bright;
"I shall have praise from him," I thought,
"Who taught me first to fight."
Then I remembered! as a breath
Blows the dry rose apart:
For, lo! the sudden touch of death
Had aged me to the heart!

—John Erskine, in Century Magazine.

My Dog.

The curate thinks you have no soul;
I know that he has none. But you
Dear friend! whose solemn self-control
In our four-square, familiar pew,

Was pattern to my youth—whose bark
Called me in summer dawns to rove—
Have you gone down into the dark
Where none is welcome, none may love?

I will not think those good brown eyes
Have spent their light of truth so soon;
But in some canine Paradise
Your wraith, I know, rebukes the moon,

And quarters every plain and hill,
Seeking its master. . . . As for me,
This prayer at least the gods fulfill:
That when I pass the flood, and see

Old Charon by the Stygian coast
Take toll of all the shades who land,
Your little, faithful, harking ghost
May leap to lick my phantom hand.

—St. John Lucas, in the Outlook.

Defiance.

You have hounded me well, my Lady Life,
You have beaten and bruised and bent,
But ever I stayed me amid the strife
To turn you a compliment.

You may cozen me there and trick me here—
Your way with a soul long since—
But I'll mock before I'll plead, my dear,
And I'll boast before I wince.

Why, think you to make me a captive, cowed?
That day that you slay, I swear
I will kiss my finger-tips to the crowd
And jest with the headsman there.

—Theodosia Garrison, in Ainslee's Magazine.

Sappho.

Impassioned singer of the happy time
When all the world was waking into morn,
And dew still glistened on the tangled thorn,
And lingered on the branches of the lime—
Oh, peerless singer of the golden rhyme,
Happy wert thou to live ere doubt was born—
Before the joy of life was half out-worn,
And nymphs and satyrs vanished from your clime.

Then maidens bearing parsley in their hands
Wound thro' the groves to where the goddess stands,
And mariners might sail for unknown lands
Past sea-cleaved islands veiled in mystery—
And Venus still was shining from the sea,
And Ceres had not lost Persephone.

—Sara Teasdale.

The Weaver and His Dream.

The night I saw St. Will's fantastic play—
Where Queen Titania loves the lo-pared ass—
The people laughed to see the hoodwinked fay
Wasting her grace upon a lout so crass.
But I felt sad for him in duped desire,
A clown with a dream in his arms, his heavy skull
Aglow like a blazing brazier filled with fire
That soon must turn to ashes chill and dull.

So dwell we all with queens our fancies feign,
And, dream exalted, royal sweethearts take;
Then dropt from clouds to clods, are elowns
again—
Always, alas! always we must awake!

—Rupert Hughes, in Broadway Magazine.

Robert Bacon, Assistant Secretary of State at Washington, has recently made a ruling that this country has no treaties with foreign nations under which diplomats are exempted from the payment of automobile taxes and licenses imposed by the State authority. It has long been the contention of members of the foreign diplomatic corps that they are by treaty exempted from automobile license requirements. In a case at Lee, Massachusetts, two years ago a diplomat attempted to establish that he was exempted as well from a penalty for the violation of automobile law, but this ruling from Washington seems effectually to dispose of the contention.

Victor Herthert will have five new works on the stage next season. Two of these are completed, two others are practically so, while the fifth is in reservation as to its character and ownership. Those completed and those nearly ready are "Algeria," hook by Glen MacDonough, announced as the opening attraction at the Broadway Theatre, in New York; "Victoria," book by George Hobart, will have an early production by Joseph Brooks; "The Prima Donna," hook by Henry Blossom, for Fritz Scheff's use, and "Little Nemo," hook by Harry B. Smith, will be a gorgeous musical spectacle.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

By Sidney G. P. Coryn.

Proposals are now in order for the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Edgar Allan Poe. Several propositions are already in the field, some of them good and some of them not so good. The Woman's Auxiliary of the Scenic and Historic Preservation Society suggests that Poe's cottage in Fordham be purchased, removed to Poe Park, and used as a memorial museum. Another proposition is the revival of the Southern Literary Messenger, to be edited in Richmond. There are still other suggestions for the offering of a prize for the best commemorative poem and for the creation of a Poe fund to be given as prizes to authors whose work is distinguished by literary subtlety. The anniversary is not until January 15, so that there is still time for other ideas to come forward. It is at least satisfactory that the memory of the greatest American poet is to emerge from the cloud thrown over it by self-righteousness and a sentiment that is suspiciously like hypocrisy.

Big Game Shooting on the Equator, by Captain F. A. Dickinson, F. R. G. S., with an introduction by Sir Charles Norton Eliot, K. C. M. G. Published by John Lane Company, New York; $4.

The attention now being given to Africa by our mighty hunters is a reminder that the world is after all a small place and that the big game is being driven into the dark corners. He who would now tax his hunting prowess to the utmost must indeed go far afield, and even in Africa and India we find the existence of game laws to save the great brutes from utter extinction.

Captain Dickinson writes with knowledge and con amore. He knows East Africa from end to end, and from the hunter's point of view he says that it is a paradise. There was a time when he listened to the tales of the traveler and said "All men are liars," but now he has seen for himself, and like a true sportsman he wants others to do the same.

No better book of its kind has been written. To merely catalogue the animals of East Africa with their peculiarities is easy, but we have here far more than a catalogue or a work on natural history. Captain Dickinson's book is a veritable vade mecum, replete with practical advice, friendly suggestions, and intimate counsel. To read it understandingly is to be equipped against all the ordinary perplexities of the country and to be prepared in advance for the peculiarities of the native guide, the dangers of the climate, and the vagaries of the game. Nor is the book less interesting to those who hunt only in imagination and who pursue the big game only through the wilds of their fancy. Captain Dickinson has a singularly felicitous style, due perhaps to his enthusiasm. His book has all the charm of romance, but with the unmistakable stamp of accuracy. It gains an added vividness from seventy-seven admirable illustrations from original photographs.

The Sport of Bird Study, by Herbert K. Job. Published by the Outing Publishing Company, New York; $2.

This book is intended primarily for boys, but its fascination for their elders should be just as great. It shows how bird study with or without the camera may be undertaken in any ordinary country town, and its narrative form makes it especially vivid. There can certainly be no occupation more essentially congenial to the boy nature or one that makes more vigorous demands upon energy, courage, and patience. The book itself is written with a contagious enthusiasm, while the one hundred and twenty-four half-tone illustrations are evidence of the capital work that can be done in an important branch of knowledge that needs little for its acquisition beyond adroitness and endurance.

Wage-Earners' Budgets, by Louise Bolard More. Published by Henry Holt & Co., New York; $2.50.

This book is of some importance to the student of social conditions, although it applies to New York only, and is therefore subject to the modifications imposed by other conditions and localities. Two hundred families were selected by Mrs. More on behalf of the Greenwich House Committee on Social Investigations, and the present analysis of their economic status with the elaborate and well-classified budget of receipts and expenditures are not only instructive from the scientific standpoint, but replete with human interest.

The information in this useful book is so condensed and necessarily so statistical that general conclusions may well be left for the selection of the student. It may, however, be said that a well-nourished family of five in a New York City neighborhood require $6 a week for food, a fact that inspires some admiration for a housewife who can extract so much nourishment from so little coin. Another conservative conclusion is that a fair living wage for a workingman's family of average size in New York City should be at least $14 a week, or $728 a year, although if provision for the future is to be made the wage must be somewhat larger. The "fair living wage" is necessarily a somewhat elastic term, depending partly upon the attitude toward life of each family. The Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics puts it at $724 a year for a family of five; the New York Bureau of Labor estimates it at $520; John Mitchell asks for $600, which is the same figure advanced by Dr. Devine of the Charity Organization Society of New York. But these figures were all based upon lower prices than those now prevailing.

Mrs. More is to be congratulated upon a valuable piece of research as well as upon the lucidity with which its results are set forth.

The New Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, edited by Samuel Macauley Jackson, D. D., LL. D. Published by the Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York.

This important work will be complete in twelve volumes. The first has appeared, and its wide field and scholarly tone show conclusively how valuable a contribution has been made to biblical literature.

The Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia embraces "Biblical, Historical, Doctrinal, and Practical Theology, and Biblical, Theological, and Ecclesiastical Biography from the Earliest Times to the Present Day." More than six hundred scholars and specialists have aided in its preparation, with the assistance of Associate Editors Charles Colebrook Sherman and George William Gilmore, M. A. Among its department editors are Dr. John Thomas Creagh and Dr. James Francis Driscoll, who take the department of liturgies and religious orders; Dr. Henry Sylvester Nash, who is responsible for the department of the New Testament; Dr. Albert Henry Newman in the department of church history; and Frank Horace Vizetelly in the department of pronunciation and typography.

The history of this fine encyclopedia is, of course, well known to every theologian. That it has been so skillfully adapted to the needs of American scholarship will be a matter for congratulation to those who have learned to consult its unerring pages for the finest collection of theological lore that has ever been given to the world.

The Destroyers, by John F. Carter, Jr. Published by the Neale Publishing Company, New York and Washington; $1.50.

The struggle of individual manhood against the enslaving power of organized labor has not yet found its due place in fiction, perhaps because resistance is still too much the exception, or because the principle of terrorism has invaded literary as well as industrial fields.

Mr. Carter has told a good story along modern lines and with much fidelity to fact. His hero is Thomas Steele, who searches for some means "whereby a lot of ignorant miners, led by a bunch of money-grabbing grafters, can be forced to keep their contracts or be fired bodily out of the mines or shops." Steele's problem is becoming a national one, nor can the defense of ignorance be always urged where leaders and led alike are animated by the same cunning and unscrupulous greed.

As a study of modern industrial conditions Mr. Carter's work deserves attention, but as a romance also it has much to recommend it. There are two women involved, both of them attracted by Steele, and the love interest with its peculiar diplomacies is well sustained. Altogether the author has produced a creditable work and one that was written with the gloves off.

A History of the United States Navy, by John R. Spears. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York; $1.50.

The author explains his object in his preface. It is to tell in one convenient volume the whole story of the American navy, to describe all the important naval battles, and to show how the nation has been affected at certain times by the work of its naval ships, and at other times by the want of such a force. His book occupies over three hundred pages. The story is told with directness and there are twenty-two admirable illustrations. Of its kind and within its compass there is nothing better.

The Irresistible Current, by Mrs. I. Lowenberg. Published by the Broadway Publishing Company, New York; $1.25.

An obvious sincerity of worthy purpose never fails to give to a novel a value and an interest independent of its technical excellence. Mrs. Lowenberg's book is saturated with an object that is expressed with every evidence of conviction and with no small literary skill. That differences in creed should be an enemy to love, that Jew and Gentile should be separated by religion, is unfortunately no new thing, but Mrs. Lowenberg helps us to appreciate its folly, its pathos, and its needless tragedy.

The opening scene is in New York, where we are introduced to two Jewish families from Germany. The next scene is twenty years later in Montana. The second generation is growing up in the new Western world, but not without the religious disabilities and creed prejudices that should belong exclusively to a past day in human history. The story is a long one and the plot is intricate, but it is vividly colored by splashes of genuine passion and of real tragedy. The "irresistible current" is the tendency toward a better philosophy of life, an agreement upon the essentials of human conduct that shall take the place of creeds, and a reliance upon a human love and brotherhood that is, after all, the highest expression of the best religion. We have certainly cause to be grateful to Mrs. Lowenberg for her novel.

Captain Love, by Theodore Roberts. Published by L. C. Page & Co., Boston; $1.50.

Two gentlemen riding toward London some time in the last century are assailed by highwaymen. One of them is killed and his companion so seriously injured that when he recovers his health his memory is gone. He assumes the name of Captain Love, plunges into the fashionable life of London, and undergoes a series of adventures with lovely ladies, highwaymen, duellists, and all the reckless and delightful elements of an irresponsible day. Eventually he recovers his identity and his sweetheart of other days, and everything ends as it should. The story is thoroughly wholesome and skilfully told.

Abraham Lincoln, by Henry Bryan Binns. Published by E. P. Dutton & Co., New York; $1.50.

This volume appears in the Temple Biographies, its predecessors being Mazzini, G. F. Watts, Browning, and Major-General Harrison. It is interesting not only for its inherent merits, but for the fact that it is the first serious attempt made by an Englishman to portray on any full-sized canvas the greatest American figure of the last century. Mr. Binns's work shows a careful research, a keen eye for essentials, while it is marked by a sympathetic literary grace.

The American Book Company, New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago, has published a "Laboratory Manual of Zoology," by Margareta Burnet. Price, 50 cents.

FISH

Is an important course in any well regulated dinner. It is rendered far more agreeable and appetizing by the addition of

LEA & PERRINS SAUCE

THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

It is the best relish for all kinds of Soups, hot and cold Meats, Game, Stews and Salads. For over Seventy Years Lea & Perrins have held the secret which makes their Original Worcestershire Sauce unequalled. It is a delicacy that should be on every table.

Beware of Imitations

John Duncan's Sons, Agents, New York

BACK EAST EXCURSIONS

ROUND TRIP RATES

Atchison, Kas.....$60.00	Kansas City, Mo...$60.00	Omaha, Neb.....$60.00
Baltimore, Md.....107.50	Leavenworth, Kas.. 60.00	Pacific Junction, Ia. 60.00
Boston, Mass.....110.50	Memphis, Tenn.... 67.50	Philadelphia, Pa...108.50
Chicago, Ill..... 72.50	Minneapolis, Minn. 73.50	St. Joseph, Mo..... 60.00
Council Bluffs, Ia.. 60.00	New Orleans, La... 67.50	St. Louis, Mo..... 67.50
Duluth, Minn..... 79.50	New York, N. Y....108.50	St. Paul, Minn.... 73.50
Houston, Tex..... 60.00		Washington, D. C..107.50

On Sale August 17-18-24-25. September 15-16.

Colorado Springs, Colo., $55.00; Denver, Colo., $55.00; Pueblo, Colo., $55.00. On Sale September 14-15.

Montreal, Que., $108.50; Toronto, Canada, $94.40. On Sale August 17-18-24-25.

Let me make your sleeping-car reservation early and explain details.

F. W. PRINCE, C. T. A., 673 Market Street

J. J. WARNER, 1112 Broadway, Oakland

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.

The Van Ness Theatre management has made no more welcome announcement this season than that which heralds the appearance next week of Henry Miller and his company in a revival of "The Only Way." Mr. Miller has had for years the gratification of knowing that his presentation of the rôle of Sydney Carton in this dramatization of Charles Dickens's great story of the French Revolution, "A Tale of Two Cities," is one that theatre-goers will long preserve in their memories. Those who know well its convincing strength and graceful naturalness in contrasting situations, coldly cynical and tenderly sympathetic, despairing and heroic, will gladly seize the opportunity to experience its power once more, and those who know of it only by report will hardly miss this chance to make acquaintance with a dramatic conception that will always rank with the masterpieces. The support of the star, as always, will be thoroughly capable, and all the details of the production will be of the high standard demanded and achieved by the actor-manager.

At the New Alcazar Theatre next week White Whittlesey will be the central figure in Richard Harding Davis's dramatic tale of adventure, "Soldiers of Fortune." It was decided to give this attractive piece instead of "Monsieur Beaucaire," and the change will be more than acceptable. Mr. Whittlesey used "Soldiers of Fortune" on a starring tour with great success, and in the rôle of Robert Clay, the young American engineer and mining manager, won the applause of those even who had been most laudatory of his appearance and bearing in costume plays. The support will be thoroughly pleasing with Bessie Barriscale, Louise Brownell, Howard Hickman, Fred J. Butler, John B. Maher, Ernest Glendinning, Herbert Farjeon, and Anita Murray in parts well suited to their inclinations. Particular care has been taken to secure taking effects with the tropical scene settings which will adorn the stage throughout.

"The Girl from Paris" will be the new production at the Princess Theatre beginning Monday evening next. May Boley, who has become a prime favorite, will have the rôle of Ruth, and add another to the successful characterizations that have marked her engagement at the theatre. Evelyn Frances Kellogg will be "The Girl from Paris," Mile. Julie Bonbon, and have an excellent opportunity. Sarah Edwards will be Mrs. Emeline Honeycomb, and Zoe Barnett as Norah will have a pleasing change from the ungracious rôle which has engaged her ability for the past two weeks. William Burrell, as the hotel proprietor, Hans, will be in his element, and may be relied upon to give a legitimately amusing conception of the character which was made a great success by Louis Mann in the New York production of the piece. Arthur Cunningham will appear as Major Fosdyke, and will have musical and dramatic opportunities. Wallace Brownlow, the baritone, of Tivoli memory, will make his first appearance at the Princess in the rôle of Tom Everleigh. Reginald Travers, who was in the cast of "It Happened in Nordland," will reappear and play the part of Mr. Ebenezer Honeycomb. Charles E. Couture and others of the company will be appropriately placed in the long list of characters, and the chorus will be in special evidence with handsome costumes.

"The Chaperons" will be seen for the last times at the Saturday and Sunday matinees and evening performances.

The Orpheum announces for the week beginning with the Sunday matinee a programme of novelty and variety. Franklyn Underwood, a dramatic favorite, will make his first vaudeville appearance and present a clever one-act comedy, entitled "Dobbs's Dilemma." He will be supported by Frances Slosson and George Bloomquest, who are remembered here. Mike Bernard and Blossom Seely will make their first appearance. Mr. Bernard is a rag-time pianist and Miss Seely is a diverting singing and dancing comedienne. The Tennis Trio, consisting of Will Campbell and May and Alma Stock, will give an original juggling act in which it is said they eclipse all their predecessors. Fay Carranza, who has been specially engaged for one week only, is a gifted young soprano. The great success which she lately achieved in concert at the Greek Theatre, Berkeley, is well known. Next week will be the last of Jesse L. Lasky's production, "The Military Octette" and "The Girl with the Baton"; Ines and Taki, and the Dancing Mitchell. Will M. Cressy and Blanche Dayne will also conclude their engagement with Mr. Cressy's funniest one-act play, "Bill Biffins's Baby." New motion pictures will conclude the performance.

One of the coming musical comedy attractions is "The Time, the Place, and the Girl," by the company which has won success for two seasons in the East.

Dustin Farnum will appear in this city soon in "The Squaw Man," the play which won success in London as "The White Man." It is not new here, but will be welcomed on its return.

There is a winning probability that Henry Miller and his company will give "The Great Divide" again before the close of their engagement at the Van Ness Theatre.

Emilio de Gorgoza, the Spanish baritone, will be heard here soon in song recitals under the management of Will L. Greenbaum.

Arthur Hartmann, the Bohemian violinist, will play here in December.

With the Laurel.

To Edmund Clarence Stedman on his seventieth birthday, October 8, 1903.

Who wears this crown—greater than kings may wear—

Is monarch of a kingdom, once possessed,
Nor foe nor fate from him may ever wrest!
Illimitable as space is, and as fair
As its illumined depths, he gathers there
All things, obedient to his high behest.
His is the sea, the valley's verdant breast,
And his the mountain-summit, lost in air.

Thought's infinite range to him no harrier hars;
His soul no boundary knows of time or place;
Bird, beast, flower, tree, to him in love belong;
Child of the earth yet kindred to the stars,
He walks in dreams with angels, face to face,
And God Himself speaks in his voice of song.
—Ina Coolbrith, in the Atlantic Monthly.

London's Theatrical Year.

In summing up the achievements of the dramatic season just closed in London, the Daily Mail gives a column of facts and figures, some of which are of more than passing interest. On the whole, the season is declared to have been a successful one. It has produced several interesting plays, in which may be included Mr. Laurence Binyon's "Attila," Mr. Anthony P. Wharton's "Irene Wycherley," Mr. H. H. Davies's "The Mollusc," Mr. W. Somerset Maugham's "Lady Frederick," Miss Cicely Hamilton's "Diana of Dobson's," Mr. A. W. Pinero's "The Thunderbolt," Mr. John Masefield's "Nan," Mr. Bernard Shaw's "Getting Married," and Major Drury and Mr. Leo Trevor's "The Flag Lieutenant." It has—as has been seen—established the reputations of several young dramatists, and it has made far more money for the successful managers than was lost by those who failed.

"When Knights Were Bold" heads the season's list of successes with a year's steady run to crowded houses and the fair prospect of another year's continuance. "The Merry Widow" is a close second to this record and so is "Lady Frederick," while "The Thief," "The Mollusc," "Jack Straw," "Mrs. Dot," and "Diana of Dobson's" have also had long runs with big money-making records.

Ten of the new plays were adaptations from the French—namely, "Miquette," "The Thief," "Fido," "Angela," "Dear Old Charlie," "Her Father," "The Late Ralph Johnson," "The Shadow of the Purpice," "A Fearful Joy," and "Pro Tem." Two of these were successes.

Five were American plays—namely, "A White Man," "The College Widow," "Way Down East," "The Three of Us," and "Matt of Merrymount." The first named was the only long-distance runner in the batch.

There are thirty theatres in London that produce plays, and the total seating capacity of those houses is about thirty-four thousand people. If managers could find a sufficient number of plays that in their judgment seemed likely to recompense them for the cost of producing, all those theatres would nearly always be open; but with an apparent scarcity of plays, London is oversupplied with playhouses, and, curiously enough, the more recently erected theatres have not had the better of the struggle with the older establishments.

Bronson Howard, dramatist and author, died August 4 of heart failure at Avon by the Sea, N. J., after an illness of about a year. He was sixty-eight years of age. Bronson Howard began his journalistic career in 1885. He was connected at various times with several of the New York papers. As a dramatist he was best known by reason of the successes of "Saratoga," "The Banker's Daughter," "Old Love Letters," "Young Mrs. Winthrop," "The Henrietta," "Shenandoah," and "Aristocracy." In 1890 Howard married Miss Wyndham, a sister of Charles Wyndham, the English comedian.

"Our Pleasant Sins" is the name of a comedy of modern cosmopolitan life, acquired for William A. Brady by Frank Worthing during his stay in London. Mr. Worthing took part in the formal copyright performance of the play, on July 11, in the Shaftesbury Theatre. The author's pen name, "A. Crichton," is said by Mr. Worthing to conceal the identity of a "well-known London journalist whose speciality is international politics."

In the coming revival of "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern" in London for the benefit of a hospital fund, Mr. Gilbert will play the king. He is not altogether inexperienced as an actor. More than once he has appeared in "Trial by Jury" and once, years ago, he played Prince Florian in "Broken Hearts," when Mr. Kyrle Bellew, who had the part, was taken ill suddenly.

GERMAN CONVERSATION, COURSES IN GERMAN literature, readings, etc. 3115 California St.

LITERARY NOTES.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

Richard Watson Gilder, editor of the Century Magazine, has been appointed a chevalier of the Legion of Honor of France.

The popularity of Bliss Carman's new volume of essays, "The Making of Personality," has aroused renewed interest in his earlier prose works.

Henry Holt's letters of Western travel are features of Putnam's and the Reader. In the July number of the magazine the veteran publisher gave some notes of San Francisco buildings, including one or two amusing errors, and in the August number he describes his trip to the Yosemite Valley and Mt. Shasta.

"Toby, M. P.," otherwise Henry W. Lucy, is writing another series of reminiscences. The new installment, to be called "Sixty Years in the Wilderness: Some Passages by the Way," will soon be published in London. Mr. Lucy is one of the few members of the press gallery in the House of Commons who has received a public tribute from an examiner. In 1899 Lord Rosebery, in a speech at Epsom, said: "On anything relating to Parliament, Mr. Lucy is an expert. There is perhaps no man living who has had so constant and so close observation of parliamentary life in its many aspects." These new reminiscences promise to deal with the private affairs of the many eminent politicians Mr. Lucy has encountered.

Mrs. Mannington Caffyn, whose first book, "A Yellow Aster," was the sensation of a long-time past literary season, has written another story, not at all related in style to her earlier work, and it will be published this fall.

Dr. William Mathews, the author, whose work was better known twenty-five years ago than now, recently celebrated the ninetieth anniversary of his birthday at his home near Boston. He was born at Waterville, Maine, July 28, 1818, and was graduated from Waterville College, now Colby, in the class of 1835. After graduating he studied law for four years in Boston offices and in the Harvard law school. In 1838 he was admitted to the bar of Kennebec County, Maine, but soon afterward started a newspaper, the Water-villonian, which became the Yankee Blade, and in 1856 was united with the Portfolio. From 1862 to 1875 he was professor of English literature in the University of Chicago. Since 1875 he has lived in Boston and has given his whole time to writing. He has been thrice married. His long list of helpful books, some of which have enjoyed a very wide popularity, includes "Getting On in the World," "Oratory and Orators," "Words—Their Use and Abuse," "Hours with Men and Books," "Men, Places, and Things," "Wit and Humor," and "Conquering Success."

New Publications.

Elmer Willis Serl has written a number of poetically fanciful nature sketches under the title of "Swaying Tree Tops." The volume comes from the Neale Publishing Company and its price is $1.

William T. Shaw, B. Agr., N. S., writes an interesting description of the China or Dewey pheasant in Oregon, with notes on the native grouse of the Pacific Northwest. The volume is enriched by a number of particularly fine full-page illustrations. It is published by J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. Price, $1.50.

Once, more the reporter-detective figures largely in fiction. "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," by Gaston Leroux, is an account of the extraordinary adventures of Joseph Rouletabille, whose efficiency as a reporter is only equalled by his dexterity as a detective. The book is published by Brentano's, New York. Price, $1.50.

"The Girl in Question," by L. C. Violet Houk, is a story of Washington life and of the beautiful Donna Carima Astrades, who comes to the national capital on a diplomatic mission and who seems to use Voodoo practices for its accomplishment. In spite of her uncanny practices, however, she is still a woman and the sentimental interest is well maintained. The book is published by the John Lane Company, New York. Price, $1.50.

We Rent New Typewriters

L. & M. ALEXANDER & CO.

MOVED TO

Phone Douglas 2157 512 Market St.

Coast Dealers

L. C. SMITH (Visible)

1908 Model,

Ball Bearing

TYPEWRITERS

Every test that is of value in ascertaining what glasses are needed is applied here. There is no such word as "trouble" while we are testing.

HIRSCH & KAISER

218 Post St.

Opticians

JUST A BOOK STORE

Robertson's

1539 Van Ness Ave.

NEAR PINE

"Next to the White House"

EDUCATIONAL

IRVING INSTITUTE Boarding and Day School for Girls
2126 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

Music, languages, art, elocution. Kindergarten, primary, grammar, high school, and advanced grades. Accredited by the universities. Twenty-ninth year. Non-sectarian. Pupils admitted at any time. New term opens Monday, August 3.

MISS ELLA M. PINKHAM, Principal.

CALIFORNIA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

Irving Institute Building

Full corps of teachers in every department. Send for catalogue.

HERMANN GENSS, President.

THE HAMLIN SCHOOL

A Boarding and Day School for Girls
Miss Hamlin announces the reopening of the school August 10. It is accredited by the California Universities and by Eastern colleges. Advanced courses of study are offered to High School graduates and to those who have left school, with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to a school diploma.

Classes in Instrumental and Vocal Music and in Drawing and Painting are formed and facilities are given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basket Ball, etc. For particulars address
MISS HAMLIN,
2230 Pacific Ave., San Francisco.

Oakland Conservatory of Music

1170 Madison Street, Oakland, Cal.

The largest, oldest established, and most thoroughly equipped school of genuine musical instruction on the Pacific Coast.
Conducted on the lines of the most noted European and Eastern schools.
Full prospectus on application.

Director, ADOLF GREGORY.

MANZANITA HALL

Palo Alto, Cal.

Prepares boys for the universities or business life. Ample grounds. Three buildings. Illus. catalogue. 16th year. Opens Aug. 24.

J. LEROY DIXON, Principal.

BERKELEY PREPARATORY SCHOOL

Boarding and Day School for Boys

2207 Dwight Way, Berkeley, Cal.

Fall term opens August 24

J. H. WHITE, Principal

SNELL SEMINARY 2721 Channing Way

Berkeley
Girls' boarding and day school. Certificate admits to University of California, Stanford, and Eastern colleges. Opens August 10. Superb location. Outdoor life.
MRS. EDNA SNELL POULSON, Principal

MILLS COLLEGE FOR YOUNG WOMEN

Only Woman's College on Pacific Coast. Offer same advantages as best Eastern institutions. Full Collegiate course. Degrees conferred. For three years only, the three upper classes of the Seminar Department, offering preparation for Mills College, the Universities and Eastern Colleges, will be continued. (Accredited.) Special opportunities in Domestic Science, Music and Art. Earnest Christian influences; non-sectarian; all forms of healthful outdoor amusements. Ideal location in beautiful Oakland hills. Fall term begins August 12, 1908. For Catalog and Brochure of views address
Mrs. C. I. MILLS, President, Mills College P. O., California.

PENNSYLVANIA, Ogontz School P. O.

OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES
Twenty minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. The late Mr. Jay Cooke's fine property. Miss SYLVIA J. EASTMAN, Miss ABBY A. SUTHERLAND, Principals.

CASTILLEJA SCHOOL

Palo Alto, California

Home and day school for girls. University preparatory. Outdoor physical training a special feature. Opens August 24. Illustrated catalogue.

MISS MARY I. LOCKEY, A. B., Principal.

FREE KINDERGARTEN NORMAL SCHOOL

Golden Gate Kindergarten Association
(Accredited by State Board of Education)
MISS VIRGINIA FITCH, President
MISS ANNA M. STOVALL, Principal
Address: 1844 Polk Street

PERCY MACKAYE'S "MATER."

By Josephine Hart Phelps.

San Francisco, having been graciously... the second time this season there were, an opening night, cries of "Author!" Percy MacKaye, the author of "Mater," in response such cries, revealed himself quite as young one would expect the writer of so fanciful play to be. No man who could truly say,

"But age, with his stealing steps, Hath clawed me in his clutch," could have been able to write "Mater," for several reasons.

For one thing, Mr. MacKaye, with all his radiant optimism and love of things wholesome and genuine, does not sound quite the same note. A youthful love of elaboration, a tendency to be led astray by sophomoric and ineloquence of phrase, by fantasies of morbid that horrid, and, in fact, step over the edge, of the realms of unreality, gives the play a quality of fun and wit an effect of being spontaneous and artificial. But the author shows originality, discernment of character, and a fluency and flexibility in the composition of dialogue, which, united to the fresh, sane, and lively sentiment, have all combined to spell success.

There were long passages in the play that, on reading, I should have thought would have been disastrous to its success. But they were followed by sudden changes of mind, by quick reversions from gravity to gaiety that lulled and diverted the spectators. There were bubbles of oratory that shone with motonous, rainbow-hued glory, only to be dissolved into nothingness by the homely touch of prose.

In regard to these, I think that Mr. MacKaye took great risks with the character of Michael, the archangel of the hearthstone, the unselfish politician who was a sort of hoy, liable to go off at any time like a cake of ignited freerackers, which decline to cease their noise until the last explosion is given itself vent. Brother Michael would certainly be a painful affliction as an abiding essence at one's hearthstone. A man who periments with his eloquence on his luckless friends and relatives is a creature to be avoided. And it must not be forgotten that, in the audience, had to submit to the affliction, for Michael orated at us. Fortunately, he really had some eloquence, but if the author would be a little ruthless with Michael, and call "Time!" a few minutes sooner, his intent would be just as completely and more effectively taken.

Fortunately, again, the part of Michael was tremely well acted. Mr. Frederick Lewis gave him a Bryan-like contour of head and stature, a settled solemnity of expression, and an oratorical sonority of voice that placed him well within the frame of the author's carefully drawn portrait.

Mr. MacKaye, in fact, has been very lucky in having his play so satisfactorily presented. Miss Hazel MacKaye and Mr. Charles Gottlieb played the two minor roles, a pair of morose lovers, with intelligent appreciation the traits they were called upon to express, and Henry Miller showed fairly luminous judgment in selecting Isahel Irving for the role of Mater, the youthful looking and merry other of the "two black swans" over whose ironic inaccessibility to fun she is a prey to morose despair.

Miss Irving made the hit of the evening. The role of Mater has its difficulties, too. There are dangerous places in which Mater almost as prolix as her oratorical son. There are long flights of fancy that could sily tire a wearied listener, serious mental illusions resulting from incongruities of mood and temperament between Mater and her unwilling brood that almost jar, and there are the private jokes here and there between Mater and her own merry soul that are in danger of eluding the understanding of the tensers. But Mater—and Isahel Irving as she—all triumphs over them all. The audience took warmly to the captivating advocate of light, and if they did not follow her closely through all her merry fancies they only enjoyed her irreverence toward her boy actor and her Pardiggian daughter, her teasing, provocative coquetries, and the adroitness with which she unhorsed her adversary in the title of wits.

The rôle of Mater's middle-aged admirer falls to Henry Miller, who, with increased light and a make-up in character, was so clearly recognizable that he had a kind of progressive reception as he gradually projected his familiar personality into the consciousness of his cordial audience.

Mr. Miller plays the part of a politician who is conveniently devoid of scruples, and who wins liberal-minded Mater's toleration and liking because of their mutual sense of humor. Clever Mr. MacKaye has tricked us here. I will not say how, but he actually left us uncertain as to the state of things between Mater and Mr. Cullen, having, by some skillful means or other, muzzled the press so that his plot and its outcome was not previously given away.

There were some very neat and taking scenes between Mater and her deluded wooer, upon whose features played the accustomed smile of the successful materialist. Not the least part of Mr. Miller's success in his rôle was this look and expression of well-fed, well-oiled, well-moneyed content—the content of a cheerful, conscienceless man who graits habitually, feeds well, and loves his fellows when they do his bidding.

I think one of the best qualities in Mr. MacKaye's play is its freedom from sentimental traditions. Managers are apt to think the public will sustain a painful shock injurious to managerial profit if traditions are not adhered to. But it is good feeling, the sentiment that is right, that they do not want to see trifled with.

I will confess that I was sufficiently rooted to established traditions to experience a slight sense of blankness, almost a shocked surprise, when Mater said what she said at the window—never mind what—to the departing form of the Honorable Arthur and the portiere at the back was not pushed aside by a returning figure. It was really puzzling, mystifying, quite out of the common.

And then it came to one that Mater had merrily tricked the doing of a good deed out of a sinner, while keeping her dainty hands free from the devil's smut.

Perhaps one reason why we were so surprised on account of the sudden burst of earnestness from Mater's wooer, when his smile vanished, and he revealed the existence of unaccustomed heartbeats to the captivating lady of his affections. Dramatists are not wont to let emotions of that kind go to waste. So I do not doubt that the romanticists were quite chap-fallen, more particularly as Henry Miller gave that sudden burst of earnestness with such fervor that we wanted the lover to win.

This idea of mature heroines grows apace. It results, perhaps, from the growing durability of feminine charms. Beauty doctors come in at the door, and gray hairs, wrinkles, and billows of matronly flesh fly out of the window. Besides, the women eat less and exercise more. There is no doubt that, in the long run, women are getting ahead of ruthless nature, who designed them for hurden-hearers and propagators of the race. Nature meant woman to flower into early and beautiful maturity, bear a brood of sons and daughters, and sink into sudden blight and decay. The twentieth-century woman, middle-aged or otherwise, is long-headed. So she gets ahead of nature, and even in middle age now figures frequently as the admired heroine of plays and novels.

Isahel Irving was a particularly apt selection for the rôle of such a heroine, as her long experience ranks her as almost a veteran, in spite of her pretty, girlish blondness. She has a charming figure, and her dainty hands and arms had need to be gracefully in evidence during all the to-do about the thimble. As for her sunny hair and lily skin, there is an allusion which shows that Mater is meant to be a golden-haired blonde, in characteristic contrast to her more somire-tinted progeny.

Miss Irving has not at all times the lightest touch in the world as a comedienne, but the mingled artificiality and genuineness in the handling of the character seemed to work out well under her treatment. There is a curious effect given in the play of a sort of duality of character in the creator of it, who, if I mistake not, has in his own soul a mingling of the elements that go to the making of both Mater and her son.

Revival of Fresco Painting.

When next you visit the Pantheon you will observe an innovation more remarkable than Zola's tomb. You will observe a fresco. Whereas all the other mural decorations in the French Westminster Abbey have been painted on canvas, which has later been glued to the walls, the building's newest adornment has been painted on wet plaster in the manner of the sixteenth century. A lapsed but not a lost art is thus revived, thanks to the artist Hector d'Espouy, whose brush has embellished the space above the entrance. Surveying his masterpiece, one is moved to ask why so splendid an art ever passed out of vogue, remarks a writer in the Boston Transcript. The answer is easy: Because of candle smoke. The old-time painters learned that a very few centuries would leave their work dimmed if not almost obliterated. When oil succeeded wax and gas succeeded oil there still remained a danger that the beautiful pictures would lose their brightness. Electrical illumination is what accounts for the renewed production of mural paintings. Notwithstanding the ancient craft of fresco-making, our artists began, as was natural, by merely applying to the walls the painted canvas with which they were familiar. How long will that canvas last? Perhaps as long as the buildings in which it is placed. Perhaps several centuries less long. In any case, the method will wait half a dozen years at least before fully justifying itself. As for pure fresco, on the contrary, we know its durability; only fire or earthquake can destroy it, and we have now a means of lighting that in no wise imperils its brilliancy.

Illustrated Lectures on Foreign Travel.

Manager Will L. Greenham announces a series of illustrated lectures—travel talks—by Mr. Lloyd Scott. Mr. Scott is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, and a lawyer by profession, but is more widely known as a traveler, as he has visited most of the scenic attractions of the world and has accumulated a large and valuable collection of photographic views which he uses in his lectures. The subjects of the coming series of talks will be Egypt, India, Russia, Japan, and Ireland.

A silver tube holding a message from Mayor McClellan of New York to Mayor Busse of Chicago was carried the 1000 miles by 1400 boys, members of the Y. M. C. A., taking up the run in half-mile and mile relays, in 119 hours and 22 minutes. The long run ended at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of July 21, twelve miles ahead of the schedule time, a record having been made over hills, valleys, lakes, hogs, and streams of an average speed of ten miles an hour, in the longest relay race of history.

Natives of India have held for centuries that the waters of the River Ganges are blessed and healing to those who bathe therein. A scientist says: "I have discovered that the water of the Ganges is hostile to the growth of the cholera microbe, not only owing to the absence of food materials, but also owing to the actual presence of an antiseptic that has the power of destroying this microbe."

Stella—What is the rule of three? Bella—That one ought to go home.—Evening Sun.

15 KEARNY STREET

PHONE DOUGLAS 2219

Eugene Korn THE HATTER

AGENCIES

- "MILLER, N. Y.," Silks and Operas
"JAMESON, LONDON," Derbys
"JOHN B. STETSON," Philadelphia
KNAPP De Luxe and Felts

The wonderful new talking machine without a horn

The top closes over the record, shutting out all the noise of operation—the pure music of the record comes from a mahogany sound reflector. Elegantly made of solid mahogany, combined with record cabinet for 150 records. The finest talking machine made. Send for booklet.

Price $200

Sherman, Clay & Co.

Steinway Pianos—Victor Talking Machines KEARNY AND SUTTER, S. F. Broadway at 13th Oakland 1635 Van Ness Ave. San Francisco

AMUSEMENTS

ORPHEUM ELLIS STREET NEAR FILLMORE Absolutely Class A Theatre Building

Week beginning this Sunday afternoon

Matinee Every Day

ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE

FRANKLIN UNDERWOOD, supported by Frances Slosson and George Bloomquist, in "Dobbs's Dilemma"; BERNARD & SEELEY; TENNIS TRIO; FAY CARRANZA (one week only); MILITARY OCTETTE and "The Girl with the Baton"; INES & TAKI; DANCING MITCHELLS; New Orpheum Motion Pictures. Last week WILL M. CRESSY and BLANCHE DAYNE, presenting for the first time "BILL BIFFINS'S BABY."

Evening Prices—10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box seats, $1. Matinee prices (except Sundays and holidays), 10c, 25c, 50c. Phone, WEST 6000.

PRINCESS THEATRE Ellis Street near Fillmore S. LOVERICH, Manager Class "A" Theatre Phone West 663

Matinee Saturday and Sunday.

LAST 2 NIGHTS OF "THE CHAPERONS."

One Week Only, BEGINNING NEXT MONDAY NIGHT, The Dainty and Diverting Musical Comedy,

THE GIRL FROM PARIS

MAY BOLEY, WILLIAM BURRESS, Arthur Cunningham, Wallace Brownlow, Evelyn Frances Kellogg—all the Princess favorites in the cast.

Popular Prices—Evenings 25c, 50c, 75c; Mats., (except Sundays and holidays), 25c and 50c.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Tel. West 6036 BELASCO & MATYER, Owners and Managers Corner Sutter and Steiner Sts. Absolute Class "A" bldg.

Seventy-Fourth Week of the Alcazar Stock Co.

COMMENCING MONDAY AUG. 10,

Mr. WHITE WHITTLESEY, supported by the Alcazar Players in Augustus Thomas's stage version of Richard Harding Davis's Thrilling Romance,

SOLDIERS OF FORTUNE

An Elaborate Production.

Prices: Eve. 25c to $1; Mats. Sat. Sun. 25-50c. Aug. 17—Mr. Whittlesey in HEARTSEASE.

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove St. Phone Market 500

Beginning Monday, August 10,

MATS. WEDNESDAY AND SATURDAY

HENRY MILLER

As Sydney Carton in an elaborate revival of

THE ONLY WAY

Coming—THE MAN OF THE HOUR.

Special Sale Announcement

We offer AT COST the entire stock of HOSIERY purchased from WOLFE & HAWLEY. This line consists of only high-grade importations. You can not afford to overlook the opportunity of this SALE.

LADIES' HOSE—Hand-embroidered LISLE. Only choice designs. Black and colors—also plain black SILK LISLES. Regular dependable standard values at 50c—sale price 3 pairs.....95c

LADIES' HOSE—Hand-embroidered LISLE—black and colors—dainty and exclusive designs. Very fine value at 75c a pair.....55c Sale price, per pair.....$1.50 or three pairs for.....$1.50

ALSO CHOICE LISLE FRENCH DESIGNS—Very attractive. Regular $1.25, at.....85c

MEN'S HOSE Black and tan embroidered fancy Lisle; 50c regular; 3 pairs $1.00 Fancy Lisles; latest novelties; 75c regular; per pair.....85c Our own importations. Silk Lisles; Parisian effects; $1.00, $1.25; $1.50.....85c

Bathing Suits

For Men, Women and Children— from 50c to $10 per suit, One-third off

Cor. California St. and Van Ness Ave.

THE LATEST STYLES IN

Choice Woolens

H. S. BRIDGE & CO. Merchant Tailors

108-110 Sutter St. French Bank Bldg.

VANITY FAIR.

To a Caterpillar.

Say, plush-clad pilgrim of that motley band
Who gaily flaunt their furs through summer's sheen,

Hast fled from some far ice-bound fairyland,
To escape the hunters of some Elin Queen,
Who coveted the pelt upon thy back
To fashion for herself a near-seal cap?

Friendless thou journeyest through an alien land,
With none to cheer, or pat thee on the head,
Thou yearn'st for sympathy, and yet no hand
Protects thine innocence, or smooths thy bed.
Thy shy advances o'er My Lady's neck
Meet rude repulses and remorseless check.

I watch the wandering way thou dost pursue
O'er leaf and flower, all aimless and forlorn,
Now poised on some red rose peak in the dew,
Braving the tortuous barriers of thorn.
Seek'st thou a far-off home of long ago,
Where thou didst dwell, a Bugland Eskimo?
—Lippincott's Magazine.

The Tennis Cabinet, as such, is doomed. It will dissolve into its constituent elements and fade away from the scene of Washington activities, social, political, and sporting, after March 4 next, regretfully announces a correspondent of the New York Evening Post. Whether Mr. Taft or Mr. Bryan is elected, the tennis court in the rear of the executive offices seems certain to become once more a flower bed for the display of geometrical figures of early blooming crocuses, or a playground for children. Next summer neither the Assistant Secretary of State, the French ambassador, the Secretary of the Interior, the assistant to the Attorney-General, nor the chief of the Bureau of Corporations will be summoned hastily by telephone from their respective desks and duties to slam tennis balls over a net, thus enabling the chief magistrate to keep down his girth line.

If Mr. Taft is elected, the existing apprehension will be greatly relieved. He will be expected to keep in office or to supplant with equally presentable and charming young persons such present office-holders as Alford W. Cooley, Robert Bacon, James Rudolph Garfield, William Phillips, Gifford Pinchot, Beekman Winthrop, Huntington Wilson, Herbert Knox Smith, Clarence Edwards, Truman H. Newberry, and half a score of others, whose names are on every dinner list of any importance in Washington.

Outside of Washington the young men who have been drafted by Mr. Roosevelt into the public service have not been given full and popular credit for the share they have thus taken in making harmonious our relations with foreign governments. According to the best circles in Washington, our squabs, our terrapin, our planked shad, and our discernment in importing champagnes have contributed as much to our standing as a world power as have our battleships and the "spear that knows no brother."

Under these circumstances it is any wonder that there should be apprehension lest the coming in of Mr. Bryan should upset present pleasant social arrangements and conditions? Think of the new dinner lists that will have to be made up, the new visiting lists, the new people who will have to be sounded and surveyed to determine whether they are socially "possible"! It is a possibility to appal the stoutest heart.

Paris recently discovered how much it costs to provide sartorial adornment for a Russian princess when Vincent Florio, one of the most noted of Italian millionaires, was called before a civil court by a well-known dressmaker in the Place Vendome and presented with a bill for $87,000 for clothes the princess had worn during three seasons. Florio admitted that he owed the dressmaker money, but declined to pay such an exorbitant bill, the details of which were made public in the courtroom.

There were several hall gowns, the cheapest of which was down for $400, the prices of the others ranging as high as $1000. Stockings were set down at $50 a pair, a parasol at $100, and even some buttons of the time of Marie Antoinette were charged at $400.

The princess during three years was given carte blanche to buy as she chose at this shop, but Florio confessed himself amazed at the size of the bill when it was sent to him. The judge decided that the claim of the dressmaker was exorbitant and knocked off one-fifth of the bill, or $18,000.

The bungalow is hounding into favor. From Southern California it has been working northward until it is asserting itself even in the cities of Oregon and Washington, not for summer use simply, but for permanent residence. In its true character it is built all on one floor, with a central hall and an encircling veranda to qualify the heat. It combines the advantages of the flat with those of the house, but no bungalow enthusiast—and the number is rapidly growing—would be content with the restricted accommodations with which the flat dweller has to put up.

The bungalow, even in its lowest terms, means spaciousness, roomy fireplaces and window seats, and it must also have a good mapping of lawn, else only half its purpose is attained. It lends itself to architectural design according to the taste and means of the builder. In fact, more than the cottage it stimulates the constructive and decorative forces of the occupant's mind and in proportion to their number hungalows are particularly rich in artistic conception and suggestion.

It makes housekeeping easier and more economical. It is pleasanter for the host and pleasanter for the guests. It lends itself to the simple life or to more ambitious designs. It can be built of logs or of freestone, and in its easily arranged setting neither looks cheap, tawdry, nor forbidding. Perhaps for the largest demands, a "cottage" of eighty rooms for instance, the plan would not gracefully lend itself, but the great majority are content with a fifth of that accommodation, and that is artistically attainable in a hungalow.

Every one will sympathize with Lattard, the famous Delmonico chef, and now manager of the grill-room at the Plaza Hotel in New York, over the loss of what he calls in his piteous advertisement "a reference book of inestimable value to the owner." And such must be a manuscript record of twenty-seven years, crowded full of special recipes interspersed with thoughtful notes of the gastronomic tastes of more than 500 New Yorkers, including, he tearfully says, everybody of distinction from Ulysses S. Grant to Mary Garden and Elinor Glyn, whose favorite is a paprika concoction. Lattard won fame, indeed, by his mysterious knowledge of what would hit his patrons' taste; this record explains his success and goes to show once more that genius is an infinite capacity for taking pains.

That Londoners, led by the king, have absolutely discarded the silk hat for every-day wear in favor of the panama, round straw hat, the alpine, and the golf cap has been settled beyond a doubt. The hatters have hoped that this was only a passing phase and in their desire to reinstate the sacred "topper" as headgear they recently planned a procession to show what a smart and serviceable hat it is. Five hundred men paraded solemnly around the exhibition grounds, all wearing very shiny new silk hats, and thousands of men stood about in caps and straw hats and looked at the procession quite unimpressed by this effort to make them see the folly of their ways. Unfortunately for the hatters, it rained, and every Franco-Britisher congratulated himself that he did not wear a "topper" any more when he saw the charge of the five hundred into the various tea shops. The procession was most imposing, but it was received with amusement, and the only high hats in the place were on the heads of those who marched.

Time was when to show your position in London you had to appear at your office every day in your high hat, but that is quite done away with now and the silk hat is relegated to frock-coat afternoons or dress-suit evenings.

The summer hotel hostess has come to be a regularly established feature of the largest and most enterprising of mountain and shore resorts. To many women under the necessity of earning their own living, this constitutes one method of bridging over the dull summer months, and of securing an outing in a manner most comfortable and inexpensive.

Return in actual money is seldom very great, but the hostess is given a good room and is at absolutely no expense for laundry, service, carriages, boat hire, and the countless odds and ends of hotel expenditure. In addition, she has a small monthly salary bringing her in anywhere from one to two hundred dollars a season. As an illustration of the actual return there is the case of a widow, with one little daughter, who for several summers has occupied this position at the same hotel. She has no fixed salary, but has two rooms for herself and her baby and maid, with every detail paid for, including railroad fare.

To the guests of this particular hotel Mrs. Blank is merely a very charming woman, with a talent for organizing all sorts of gayeties, and with so many accomplishments. To announce her as a paid hostess would be to weaken the campaign for which she has been engaged. The returning patrons are always delighted to find her already established on their arrival, in the same rooms which, she assures them, she retains from one season to next. And she is not thrust into the outer or rather inner darkness of back stairs or attic chambers. She must apparently have means enough to be near the rooms of the most profitable patrons. People are delighted to find some one ready to plan for a picnic, or a dance, or a ride to a place of interest, or a golf tournament. But announce to them that such plans are not entirely spontaneous, but cut and dried, from motives not entirely disinterested, and they resent what then seems like an intrusion upon their privacy.

Of New York's nearest, most common, and most popular beach resort, Coney Island, this impressionistic Sunday view is given in a current magazine:

Eating booths, hot frankfurters on the grill, beef dripping on the spit, wash-boilers of green coals steaming in the centre of hungry groups who gnawed the ears as if playing harmonicas; photographic galleries, the sitters ghastrly in the barnhouse glare of the Cooper-Hewitt light; open-faced moving picture shows with shades dropped so that passers-by could not steal a glimpse without stooping down, which ignoble attitude never failed to invite effrontery from the jocose crowd chop-suey joints, fez-topped palmists, strength tests; dance halls and continuous song-and-dar entertainments, the girls in white, according to the regulation that obliges them to lay off their tights and spangles out of respect for the S. bath. Bands, orchestras, pianos, at war with gramophones, hand-organs, calliopes; overhead, roar of wheels in deathlock with shrieks and screams; whistles, gongs, rifles, all busy; the smell of candy, popcorn, meats, beer, tobacco, blended with the odor of the crowd redolent now a then of patchouli; a streaming river of people arched over by electric signs.

All this illuminated by an eye-blistering glare of artificial lights. The tame delight of looking on at wild-beast shows, or riding on camel paled beside such livelier attractions as the T to the Moon, the Kansas Cyclone, the Mini Maze, Dip the Drop, Loop the Loop, the Hum Toboggan, the Arctic Regions, the Bottom of the Sea, and the Tickler. And dominating all this discord of contending noises may be heard prolonged, lifting cry, a cry not of fear, not joy, not of pain, a cry peculiar, even uncanny, the Coney Island cry."

Who would care for solitude on the shore or in the woods when such delights as these are within close reach of the jaded, nerve-racked denizens of the metropolis? But of thing more is asked by the greater New Yorkers—a five-cent fare to this scene of benighted revelry.

W. & J. SLOANE

FURNITURE

Exclusive lines for Parlor, Library, Living Room, Dining-Room, Bedroom, Hall, Summer Homes and Offices.

CARPETS

Special weaves and colorings in the greatest variety. Domestic Wiltons and Whole Piece Axminsters. We show all grades.

RUGS

Both Oriental and Domestic. This is by far the largest and choicest stock of Rugs on the Coast. Our Orientals are selected as individual pieces.

Upholstery—Interior Decoration

Our long experience and unequalled facilities enable us to admirably execute special orders.

Van Ness and Sutter

Rich, mellow, perfectly aged in wood and very delicately flavored

Old Gilt Edge Whiskey

Rye or Bourbon

Bonestell, Richardson & Co.

PAPER

The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us.

CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE
118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna, San Francisco.

Vacation Questions Quickly Settled

Call or write to Dept. Ad. 948 Flood Building for literature and beautifully illustrated booklets on California Resorts and Outing Places.

ROWING—BATHING—FISHING—CAMPING—EXCELLENT HOTELS

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

TICKET OFFICES
884 Market St., 14 Powell St., Ferry Depot

NECTAR OF THE GODS

Liqueur Pères Chartreux GREEN AND YELLOW

FOR CENTURIES THE GRAND FINALE TO THE WORLD'S BEST DINNERS

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafés, B's-er & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N. Y. Sole Agents for United States.

Byron Hot Springs

he waters cure rheumatism—the environment perfect—the hotel comfortable and supplied with an unexcelled table. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, ground floor, James Flood building; Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market St., or address hotel.

Tennent's

TRADE MARK

Jr. Tennent

Ale and Stout

from Wellpark Brewery Glasgow, Scotland

Forbes Bros., Agents, 1926 Sutter St.

Mr. Publisher:

Does it interest you to know that ALL the mechanical work on THE ARGONAUT is done by us? Fact.

WILLIAMS PRINTING CO., Phone, Douglas 2905. 406 Sutter Street

Mild, Rich and Satisfying

Sanchez y Haya

Clear Havana Cigars

Factory No. 1 Tampa, Fla.

Tillmann & Bendel Pacific Slope Distributors

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

Applying for a divorce, an old Georgia negro said to the judge: "Hit only cost me a string er fish ter git married, jedge, hut, please God, I'd give a whale ter git rid er her."

Two men were discussing the trouble in India, and each had a deal to say about his notion of Hindu character. "They're such a bellicose set of people," said one. "Indeed!" exclaimed the other, in surprise. "I was always under the impression that they were very spare men."

Sir Richard Bethell, afterward Lord Westbury, with a suave voice and a stately manner, nevertheless had a way of bearing down the foe with almost savage wit. Once, in court, he had to follow a barrister who had delivered his remarks in very loud tones. "Now that the noise in court has subsided," murmured Bethell, "I will tell your honor in two sentences the gist of the case."

A Denver reporter credits Langdon Smith, the Washington newspaper man, with a brilliant bit of description. "I remember," he said, "my first visit to Washington. Smith, big and handsome and vivacious, showed me about. From an eminence a great pale dome rose up against the blue sky, the dome of the capitol. 'What is that?' said I. 'That?' said Smith. 'Oh, that's the national gas works.'"

Every employee of the Bank of England is required to sign his name in a book on his arrival in the morning, and, if late, must give the reason therefor. The chief cause of tardiness is usually fog, and the first man to arrive writes "fog" opposite his name, and those who follow write "ditto." The other day, however, the first late man gave as the reason, "wife had twins," and twenty other late men mechanically signed "ditto" underneath.

Once "Fingy" Connors presented his newspaper pass to the conductor of an Erie train. This person did not look to the conductor like "William J. Connors, proprietor Buffalo Courier," and he said so. Connors, heated, roared at him. At the next station the conductor wired to the proper authorities: "Man representing himself as William J. Connors presents Connors's pass. Think he is a fake. Looks like a prize-fighter and talks like a tough." Back came the answer: "That's him."

Mrs. Rorer of cook-book fame tells of seeing a maid drop and break a beautiful platter at a dinner recently. The host did not permit a trifle like this to ruffle him in the least. "These little accidents happen 'most every day," he said apologetically. "You see, she isn't a trained waitress. She was a dairy-maid originally, but she had to abandon that occupation on account of her inability to handle the cows without breaking their horns."

Mr. Pilkington had his wife's portrait painted by that eminent impressionist, McLimmer, and, the work of art finished, Mary, the faithful retainer, was invited into the study to see it. "Do you know who that is meant for, Mary?" proudly inquired her master, while the artist modestly waited for the usual tribute of praise. "Oh, it's lovely! Of course I do, sir," replied Mary, who was unaccustomed to the study of impressionist work. "It's either you or missus."

Labiche was once asked to support as a candidate for the Academy a certain literary mendicant, but hesitated for a long time and yielded only when he was told that if the ambitious author should fail to be elected he would die of it. Failure nevertheless did come, and the following year, when a second vacancy occurred, Labiche's vote was once more solicited in the man's behalf. "No," shouted Labiche in vehement indignation, "I will not vote for a man who does not keep his word. He did not die."

That Lord Brougham was fully capable of a quick retort is shown by the following: "You, my lord," said Wellington, angry with him, "will be remembered, not for having been a great lawyer nor for having written profound philosophical essays, but for having given your name to a peculiar style of carriage." "And your grace," answered Brougham, "will be remembered, not for having gained the battles of Vittoria and Waterloo, but for having given your name to a fashionable kind of boots!" "Oh!" said Wellington, "damn the boots, I forgot 'em."

The "colored lady" who entered service as cook gave her name as Juletta Price, but constantly referred to her husband as George Ledbetter. "How does it happen, Juletta," she was asked one day, "that you go by the name of Price, while your husband's name is Ledbetter?" "Well, you see, Mrs. Lawrence," she replied cheerfully, "it's this-a-way. I had n' heen acquainted with George but fo' days when I married him, an' I did n' know how I was gonter lak him nor how he was gonter lak me. Now these divorcements betwix' married folks is a heap er trouble an' heap er expense, too; an' I 'lowed the safest way fer us to do wus fer George to keep his maiden name an' to keep mine tell we see how our new experiment was gonter turn out."

A boy in the State School for Dependent Children wrote his father thus: "Dear Papa: We children are having a good time here now. Mr. Sager broke his leg and can't work. We went on a picnic and it rained and we all got wet. Many children here are sick with mumps. Mr. Higgins fell off the wagon and broke his rib, but he can work a little. The man that is digging the deep well whipped us boys with a buggy whip because we threw sand in his machine, and made black and blue marks on us. Ernest cut his finger badly. We are all very happy."

THE MERRY MUSE.

Let Others Drive.

A chap may have a touring car Of sixty-horse or so, And scorn to hire a French chauffeur To make the critter go. Yet, though it be a boundless joy To chauffeur your own machine, Me for a quiet seat with her, Right back in the limousine. —Pick-Me-Up.

Waist-Line Woes.

When you would put your dexter fin Around a girl, it is a sin, A crying shame, To get, I claim, All lacerated by a pin. —The Gossip.

At the Cafe.

Strange sauce that's mingled with the meat, Strange meat that's mingled with the sauce—in vain; I eat, and wond'ring what and why I eat, Long for the porridge of my youth again. —William Watson.

Post-Vacation.

Back, hack, hack, to another long tiff with the boss; And my poor brain turns backward with infinite care, to the shade of her hair and its gloss. Back, hack, back, to "balances"—"customers"—"greed." But I can't drag away from the salt and the spray, and I guess that I'm off of my feed. Two weeks that were revels of flirting, Two happy-go-lucky old weeks And I dream of the "peach" that I met at the heath With an anguish that bites and is hurting. —New York Globe.

The Cowboy's Lament.

The school is empty now, 'cause she has went Back East, vacationing, and seems to me The plains look darker since that day that she Got in the stage that's druv by Loco Kent; My heart aint ever had so deep a dent, And nothin' that I eat seems to agree; And cow talk hores me to death—O Gee! I hate the low-browed gang in that mess tent. But it is lonely out upon the range, And I jest dread the joh of huntin' strays, 'Cause all the old familiar ways look strange, And long and doleful are the brightest days. O, solitude, you make life to mere man As empty as a used tomato can! —Denver Republican.

Jungle Eyes.

The gruesome jungle depths lay dark one dire and stormy eve, The naughty tiger slunk in fear and left his lair to grieve, For he had heard that to these parts a hunter bold had come, Whose reputation, rifle-made, was MORE than "Going some," And from the thickets he looked out with thumping heart amidst, And Nature Fakers give report his eyes they looked like this:— (O) (O) (O) (O) (O) (O)

When Teddy hit the Jungle Trail, his rifle in his clutch, He plucked the tiger from his haunts, which pleased him over-much. Bang—bang, another spiteful shot rang on the evening air; "Click—click," his bold typewriter gave repeated echo there, And as the night eyes glared at him his soul was filled with bliss, And as he jotted down the facts the optics looked like this:— ($) ($) ($) ($) ($) ($) —Commercial Advertiser.

Some young idlers had been enjoying the fun of hailing passing shop-girls with rather doubtful compliments, and from some of the answers returned it was evident that not all of those addressed were taking things kindly. Presently one of the older boys, seeing it was going too far, spoke up. "Look a' here now, fellers," he added, "youse might think youse is wise guys an' all that, but just keep on and the wrong lady'll come along an' she'll break yer face, see?"

A. Hirschman.

For fine jewelry and silverware. 1641-1643 Van Ness Avenue.

J. F. TWIST, DENTIST, 1476 Eddy Street, near Fillmore. Phone West 304.

BANKING

The Anglo-Californian Bank, Ltd.

Established 1873

Head Office—London

Main Office—Pine and Sansome Streets, San Francisco

Branches—1020 Van Ness Avenue, Mission and Sixteenth Streets, San Francisco

Managers: I. Steinhart, P. N. Lillenthal

Capital paid in.....$1,500,000 Surplus and undivided profits.....1,449,721

A General Banking Business Conducted. Accounts of Corporations, Firms, and Individuals Solicited. Correspondence invited. Safe Deposit Vaults at Van Ness Avenue and Mission Branches.

French Savings Bank

The French Savings Bank Building, 108-110 Sutter Street.

THE FRENCH-AMERICAN BANK occupies offices in the same building.

OFFICERS—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, Vice-President; Leon Boqueraz, Vice-President; Alphonse Bousquet, Secretary. DIRECTORS—J. E. Artiques, O. Bozio, J. A. Bergerot, John Ginty, J. M. Dupas, J. S. Godeau, N. C. Babin, George Delaney, H. de St. Seine.

Safe Deposit Boxes for Rent

The German Savings and Loan Society 526 California St., San Francisco

Guaranteed Capital.....$1,200,000.00 Capital actually paid up in cash. 1,000,000.00 Reserve and Contingent Funds.. 1,453,983.62 Deposits June 30, 1908..... 34,474,554.23 Total Assets..... 37,055,263.31

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohrer; Cashier, A. H. K. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Ellis, General Attorneys. BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohrer, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse, and W. S. Goodfellow.

LONDON PARIS NATIONAL BANK

N. W. Cor. Sutter and Sansome

CAPITAL - - - $2,500,000 SURPLUS - - - 620,000

Sig Greenbaum, H. Fleishacker, President, Vice-President and Mgr. R. Altschul, Cashier

The National Bank ROLL OF HONOR

The title "Roll of Honor National Bank" is a distinction of which any financial institution in the United States may be proud. As is well known a "Roll of Honor Bank" is one possessing surplus and profits in excess of capital. A place on the Roll of Honor can not be bought, it must be earned. This bank has for a long time been known as a "Roll of Honor Bank" among banks and bankers.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF Berkeley UNITED STATES DEPOSITORY

A. W. NAYLOR, Pres. F. M. WILSON, Vice-Pres. F. L. NAYLOR, Cashier. F. C. MORTIMER Asst. Cashier.

THE BERKELEY NATIONAL BANK United States Depository Berkeley, Cal.

HOUSEHOLD AND COMMERCIAL ACCOUNTS INVITED. DIRECTORS—George P. Baxter, Pres.; J. W. Richards, Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Bangs, Vice-Pres.; Louis Titus, Jr., Thomas Addison, A. G. Freeman, Duncan McDuffie, Perry T. Tompkins, F. L. Lipman, W. J. Hotchkiss, and Whitney Palace. P. H. ATKINSON, Cashier.

WESTERN ASSURANCE COMPANY TORONTO

U. S. Assets.....$2,493,154 " Surplus..... 483,989 PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT 1004 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE SAN FRANCISCO J. J. KENNY, Manager W. L. W. MILLER, Assistant Manager

Connecticut Fire Insurance Company Established 1850 OF HARTFORD

Total Assets.....$5,817,423 Surplus to Policy-Holders.....2,118,394

BENJAMIN J. SMITH Manager Pacific Department 518 CALIFORNIA STREET San Francisco

MARKET ST. 1st Con. 5% Due 1924. Coupons March and September BAY COUNTIES POWER CO. 1st 5% Due 1930. Coupons March and September WESTERN PACIFIC 1st 5% Due 1933. Coupons March and September

SUTRO & CO. BROKERS

412 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F. We have a Direct Wire to N. Y.

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

Already a few of the people who fled the city early in the summer are beginning to return to town. Well-known names and faces are beginning to appear on the streets and in the playhouses, while the ruddy color and rich coatings of tan mark the latest arrivals from mountains and seashore. A number of country houses have been closed during the past few days and each week will see a larger quota of people returning to their homes.

So many interesting autumn events in the nature of weddings and engagement announcements are looked forward to that the interested ones are hastening back to town in order to plunge into the necessary preparations.

The engagement is announced of Miss Edna Bowman, daughter of Mrs. Bowman and the late Mr. George Bowman of San Jose, to Mr. Charles J. Kuhn.

Word comes from England of the marriage of Miss Frances Cox to Captain Alexander Watkins Grubb of the British War Office at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Deatken of Hollingbourne Manor. Miss Cox, although much of her life has been spent abroad, will be well remembered in this city and San Jose. Captain Alexander Grubb is the son of Lieutenant-Colonel Alexander Grubb of the British army and is an officer in the Royal Engineers.

Mrs. W. W. Van Arsdale gave a luncheon at the Fairmont recently at which she announced the engagement of her daughter, Miss Irene Van Arsdale, to Lieutenant Thomas Richardson Kurtz, U. S. N. The guests were Mrs. Frank B. Freyer, Miss Florence Booth, Miss Helen Wilson, Miss Marian Lally, Miss Mahel Gregory, Miss Lorena Scott, Miss Helen Sullivan, Miss Gertrude Russell, Miss Fannie Pray, and Miss Katherine Metcalf.

Admiral Joseph Trilley was host at a stag dinner recently at his home in Pacific Grove in honor of Admiral Fahrenholt. The other guests were: Admiral T. F. Jewell, U. S. N., Major Wright, U. S. A., Captain Edward Lewis, U. S. A., Major McIvor, U. S. A., Lieutenant Bowen, U. S. A., and John F. Fryor.

The home of Dr. Frank Anderson, U. S. N., and Mrs. Anderson at Mare Island was the scene of a very pretty dancing party Monday evening, when they entertained the friends of their daughter, Miss Elinor Anderson.

Mr. Cyril Tohin was host at a stag dinner given at the Fairmont at which he entertained Mr. Joseph Tohin, Mr. Clarence Follis, Mr. Charles de Young, and others.

Misses Dorothy and Elsa Draper entertained a house party over the week end at their country home at San Rafael last week.

The captain and officers of the U. S. S. California were hosts at a reception given on board the steamer last Sunday from 3 to 6 o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. William Crocker were hosts at a dinner last Tuesday in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene de Sahla, who, with their daughters, Misses Leontine and Vera de Sahla, are leaving shortly for a year's stay in Europe.

Mrs. John Drum has sent out invitations for a hridge party at her home in Ross Valley.

A supper was given by Mr. Henry Miller in the red room of the Hotel St. Francis last Friday to the players who have been appearing in the series of performances under his management at the Van Ness. Present at the table were Mr. C. Rann Kennedy, author of "The Servant in the House," and Mrs. Kennedy; Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Gottlob; Mr. Percy MacKaye, author of "Mater"; Miss Hazel MacKaye, Miss Isabel Irving, Mrs. Thomas Whiffen, Miss Laura Hope Crews, Miss Gladys Wynne, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Lewis, Mr. Bertram Harrison, Mr. Walter Hampden, Mr. Tyrone Power, Mr. Galwey Herbert, Mr. Edward Rann Kennedy.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a résumé of movements to and from this city and Coast and the whereabouts of absent Californians:

Mr. and Mrs. Perry Eyre are enjoying a motor trip through the south of France.

Mr. Joseph D. Grant has just returned from his trip to England.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace Hill are at Atlantic City, where they will probably spend the remainder of the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert S. Hooker and family are at the Rancho Del Monte.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Freeman are at Aetna Springs.

Miss Elena Robinson has recently returned from a visit to friends in San Jose.

Mr. Clarence McKinstry has spent the past week motoring with a party of friends through Napa County.

Mrs. Thomas B. Bishop is settled for the winter at her St. Xavier apartments.

Mrs. M. A. Simpson and Miss Edith Simpson have returned from their trip to Tahiti.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Parker Whitney have returned to Del Monte after a few days' stay in town.

Mrs. H. P. Schwerin has returned to her home in San Mateo after a visit to Mare Island, where she has been the guest of Mrs. V. L. Cottman, wife of Captain Cottman of the U. S. S. California.

Mr. and Mrs. George H. Lent and their guest, Miss Charlotte Land of New York, made a motor trip to Del Monte and back last week.

Mrs. Ernest Folger has returned from her recent trip to Santa Barbara.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Oxnard are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Blanchard Chase at their country seat, "Stag's Leap," in Napa County.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Bancroft have returned after their trip to San Diego and other points in the southern part of the State.

Mr. and Mrs. William Bourn and Miss Maud Bourn have returned to town from their country home at Grass Valley.

Mrs. William H. Mills, Miss Mills, and Miss Elizabeth Mills are in Los Angeles.

Mrs. Alexander McCracken and Miss Isabel McCracken, who have spent the summer in Mill Valley, expect to return to town next week.

Mrs. Frederick Van Sicklen and Miss Dorothy Van Sicklen have returned from their trip through the East.

Mr. and Mrs. William Hinchley Taylor are at Tahoe for several weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Clement Tobin are planning a trip to the Atlantic coast within the next few weeks.

Mrs. Peter McG. McBean, who is in Dresden, is entertaining as her guest Miss Enid Gregg.

Mrs. A. N. Towne is at Tahoe with Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Worden.

Miss Lucie King is the guest of Mrs. Horace Blanchard Chase at the Chases' country seat, "Stag's Leap," near Napa.

Miss Christine Pomeroy is visiting Miss Susan Persons at Mare Island.

Miss Edith Pillsbury is expected to return to her home in this city within a month or two after her long residence in Paris.

Miss Kate Dillon is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. Athearn Folger at their home in Redwood.

Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Rathbone have returned from their visit with Mr. and Mrs. Charles Josselyn at Woodside and are in their new home on Broadway.

Mr. and Mrs. Van Arsdale and Miss Irene Van Arsdale have returned to town after having spent the greater part of the summer at their ranch.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Cooper have returned from Lake Tahoe and are now at Del Monte. Miss Frances McKinstry has returned from a visit to Lake Tahoe.

Mrs. Walter L. Dean has returned from Aetna Springs, where she has spent several weeks.

Mrs. Bowman H. McCalla has entertained Miss Katherine Ball at her home in Santa Cruz during the past week.

Mrs. W. T. Swinburne, wife of Admiral Swinburne, during a few days' stay in town, has been the guest of Mrs. Cuyler Lee.

Mr. and Mrs. John Parrott are now at Vevey, France, and have no definite time set for their return to California.

Mrs. Frank Barrows Frayer, after her visit in Georgia, is planning a Mediterranean cruise on her way to join Lieutenant Freyer.

Mrs. George Ashton and Miss Helen and Miss Elizabeth Ashton are now in Switzerland and are planning to spend the winter in Vienna.

Mrs. J. Downey Harvey and Miss Harvey are at Del Monte for the remaining weeks of summer.

Mrs. Tomlinson of New York is the guest of her parents in this city, Dr. and Mrs. Charles Keeney.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. Scott have returned from Aetna Springs, where they have been the guests of Mrs. Henry Bothin.

Mr. Edward Greenway has returned to town after a month's stay at Lake Tahoe.

Admiral and Mrs. Joseph Trilley have been entertaining Mrs. Vincent Cottman at their home in Pacific Grove.

Commander C. I. Carr and Mrs. Carr of Mare Island have been spending a few days in town and are at the Fairmont.

Mrs. Samuel Knight is at Del Monte for a few weeks.

Miss Newell Drown has returned to town after her visit to Miss Elisabeth Livermore at her country home near Calistoga.

Mr. and Mrs. John I. Harmes are at the Fairmont after a month spent at Tahoe Tavern.

Mrs. Mary H. Smyth, Mr. and Mrs. I. R. D. Grubb, Mr. D. Hanson Grubb, and Mr. E. Hunn Hanson have returned to San Francisco after a trip in the high Sierras.

Hope Booth has gone into vaudeville. During her engagement in San Francisco next month Miss Booth expects to produce two new sketches, one by Willis Steele, author of "The Fifth Commandment," entitled "Faro Nell," and the other by the author of "The Three of Us."

Lew Field, the best of all German dialect comedians, will visit San Francisco during the coming season in "The Girl Behind the Counter."

DR. ROBERT E. O'CONNELL, DR. GEORGE D. O'CONNELL, DENTISTS, Hastings Building, Post Street and Grant Avenue. Tel. Douglas 2733.

At Out-of-Town Hotels.

Mr. and Mrs. George H. Lent, accompanied by Miss Charlotte Land, motored to Del Monte last week and spent a few days with Mrs. Lent's mother and sister, Mrs. Charles G. Hooker and Miss Jennie Hooker, who are spending the summer there.

Miss Lucie King has been spending a week at Del Monte as the guest of Mrs. William P. Fuller.

Mrs. Samuel Knight was at Del Monte for a few days last week.

Mrs. J. D. Peters and Miss Anna Peters have gone to Del Monte to spend the month of August.

Mr. and Mrs. James King Steele and Mrs. J. Campbell Shorh went down to Del Monte on Saturday and spent the week-end.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace D. Pillsbury have gone to Del Monte to spend the remainder of the summer.

Mrs. Homer King, who is spending some time in the Yosemite Valley, will go to Del Monte shortly to spend several weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Coleman, with Mr. and Mrs. George Almer Newhall as their guests, motored to Del Monte from Burlingame on Saturday and spent a couple of days at the hotel.

Among the arrivals from San Francisco at Byron Hot Springs during the past week were the following: Mr. Geo. D. Shadhurne, Mr. Geo. D. Shadhurne, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Dunne and family, Dr. W. A. Whelan, Mrs. Ernest L. McCormick, Mrs. M. J. McCahe, Miss McCahe, Miss Estelle Carpenter, Miss Edith Carpenter.

The following are among the registrations from San Francisco at Hotel del Coronado: Mr. Jay M. Adams, Mr. and Mrs. Beständig, Mrs. C. W. Waller and family, Mr. H. E. Platt, Mr. James Hogg, Miss Mahle Hogg, Miss Phelan, Miss Mullen, Mr. L. W. Rainey, Mrs. M. Rainey, Mrs. E. D. Sears, Mr. Charles Watson, Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Coleman, Capt. Alex. Swanson, Mr. A. B. Harris.

Recent arrivals at Hotel Del Monte include Miss Earl, Mr. F. E. Booth, Mr. W. F. Garby, Mrs. G. E. Ford, Mr. W. M. Odell, Mr. H. M. Gracey, Mrs. C. E. Godfrey, Miss Cora T. Godfrey, Miss Josephine A. Godfrey, Mr. J. T. Clarke, Miss Colwell, Mrs. R. R. l'Hommedieu, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Beadle, Mr. and Mrs. C. Adams, Mr. J. Lally, Mr. and Mrs. Byron Mauzy, Miss Marjorie Mauzy, Mrs. S. Frank, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Kline, Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Haven, Mrs. Suire V. Mooney, Mrs. W. P. Hammon, Mr. Glenn Hammon, Mrs. H. A. Hohart, Mr. George F. Lyon, Mr. E. L. Hoag, Mr. C. F. Hunt, Mrs. J. L. King, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Roonman, Mr. and Mrs. William Ede, Mrs. Catherine Ede, Mr. J. S. Potter, Dr. H. A. Rowell, Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Bartlett, Miss Ada B. Honeyman, Mrs. Arthur W. Smith, Mr. Leon I. Liehes, Mr. Frank H. Fries, Mr. Frank B. King, Mr. Samuel C. Weil, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Madin, Mr. George W. Phelps, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Hinch, Mr. F. W. Castella, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Spear, Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Hill, Mr. J. H. Taber, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Broderick, Mr. and Mrs. M. S. Grinbaum, and Mr. Leo Morgan.

Harry Corson Clarke and Sam Sidman, two comedians well known here, are in the cast of funmakers of "The Mimic World," the summer burlesque at the Casino, New York.

OPENING OF THE SCHOOL OF DESIGN

SAN FRANCISCO INSTITUTE OF ART (formerly Mark Hopkins Institute) Affiliated with the State University

PAINTING DRAWING MODELING

Decorative Designing Illustrating Teachers' Course

Daily, Night and Saturday Classes. Opens August 10. Circulars mailed on application to the San Francisco Institute of Art, California and Mason Streets, San Francisco.

Dr. W. A. Whelan

DENTIST

406 Sutter St., corner of Stockton Phone Kearny 174

GOODYEAR "HIPPO" HOSE

The best and strongest Garden Hose. Guaranteed to stand 700 lbs. pressure.

Try it and be convinced.

GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY

R. H. PEASE, President 587, 589, 591 Market St. at Second St. SAN FRANCISCO

Pears'

The ingredients in many soaps, require free alkali to saponify them.

The rich, cool lather of Pears' does not result from free alkali, fats or rosin.

Pears' and purity are synonymous.

Matchless for the complexion.

FAIRMONT HOTEL

Satisfying every wish of the most fastidious travelers

Management of Palace Hotel Company

A MONTH OF SPORTS

at matchless

DEL MONTE

DEL MONTE DOG SHOW August 26th-27th-28th DEL MONTE GOLF TOURNAMENT August 31st-September 5th DEL MONTE TENNIS TOURNAMENT September 7th-19th

Reduced railroad fare from all California points. Hand-some prizes. Splendid sport under ideal conditions. Make your reservations now for this time. Address

H. R. WARNER, Manager

"The Peninsula"

SAN MATEO, CAL.

A Twentieth Century Hotel of the Highest Degree of Excellence

NOW OPEN

AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLAN

Thirty minutes by rail from San Francisco. Located in a beautiful park of thirty years' cultivation. All the charm and delight of the country combined with the attractions and conveniences of the metropolis.

For Reservation or Information Address

JAMES H. DOOLITTLE, Mgr., San Mateo, Cal.

MT. TAMALPAIS

AND MUIR WOODS

VIA SAUSALITO FERRY

FOOT OF MARKET ST.

LEGAL HOLIDAYS-SUNDAY TIME

Lv. San Francisco		Lv. Muir Woods		Lv. Tamalpais
WEEK-DAY	SUN-DAY	WEEK-DAY	SUN-DAY	WEEK-DAY	SUN-DAY
9:45 A.	7:15 A.	1:40 P.	10:40 A.	7:25 A.	9:25 A.
8:15 A.	2:40 P.	12:16 P.	1:40 P.	1:40 P.	11:10 A.
1:45 P.	9:15 A.	4:45 P.	1:40 P.	4:14 P.	12:16 P.
SATUR-DAY	9:45 A.		2:45 P.	SATUR-DAY	1:40 P.
DAY	11:15 A.		4:40 P.	DAY	3:10 P.
Tamalpais	12:45 A.		5:45 P.	ONLY	4:40 P.
only	1:45 P.		5:45 P.	only	6:40 P.
only	3:45 P.		7:45 P.	only	8:15 P.
only	7:45 P.

TICKET OFFICE AT SAUSALITO FERRY

IN the multitude of noisy, hustling, eat-and-run restaurants there seemed room for a place combining dainty and efficient service with quiet, leisurely surroundings, hence

YE TEA CUP INNE

1427 Bush Street, below Van Ness (upstairs)

Hotel St. Francis

The spirit of good service and the facilities that produce it.

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF JAMES WOODS

Why Not Make Your Home At The Hotel Jefferson

Turk and Gough Streets
Facing Jefferson Square

A superior class hotel with every modern convenience and comfort. Operated on the American and European plans. Special rates to permanent guests. Special attention paid to the table—we invite comparisons. Management Noah W. Gray, formerly manager Alexander Young Hotel, Honolulu, and Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

You Can Live At The Hotel Jefferson Better And For Less Than At Home

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"

Building, concrete, steel and marble. Located, most fashionable shopping district. 210 rooms, 135 baths. Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests. Most refined hostelry in Seattle. Absolutely fireproof. English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

Hotel Rafael

San Rafael, Cal.

Open year around. Headquarters Automobile League. New and commodious garage. Fifty minutes from San Francisco. Complete change of climate. Tiburon or Sausalito Ferry. All modern conveniences.

F. N. Orpin, Proprietor.

Hotel del Coronado

Motto: "BEST OF EVERYTHING"
Most Delightful Climate on Earth
American Plan. Summer rates $3.50 per day each and upward, or $21.00 per week each and upward
"Good Music" and "Fine Automobile." Road, Los Angeles-Riverside to Coronado.
Golf, Tennis, Polo, and other outdoor sports every day in the year.
New 700-foot ocean pier, for fishing. Boating and Bathing are the very best. Send for booklet to

MORGAN ROSS, Manager,

Coronado Beach, Cal.

Or see H. F. NORCROSS, Agent,

334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles.

Tel. A 6789; Main 3917.

22d Street and Broadway

John F. Forbes

Certified Public Accountant

601 KOHL BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO

Roy C. Ward Jas. W. Dean
Jas. K. Polk Geo. E. Billings

GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.

ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE EFFECTED

312 California Street. Phone Douglas 2283
San Francisco, Cal.

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy people who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Commander J. H. Oliver, U. S. N., detached from duty at the Naval War College, Newport, Rhode Island, is assigned to duty on board the West Virginia as chief of staff of the Pacific Fleet.

Colonel Marion P. Maus, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., Presidio of Monterey, and Lieutenant-Colonel John B. Bellinger, U. S. A., deputy quartermaster-general and chief quartermaster, Maneuver Camp, Atascadero Ranch, will proceed to Atascadero Ranch in connection with maneuvers to be held at that place in October. Upon completion of this duty the officers will return to their respective stations.

Colonel John L. Clem, A. Q. M. G., is relieved from duty as chief quartermaster, Department of California, to take effect upon the conclusion of the maneuver camp at Leon Springs, Texas, about August 15.

Lieutenant-Colonel Robert H. Stevens, D. Q. M. G., San Antonio, Texas, upon being relieved from duty, will report to the commanding general, Department of California, for duty as chief quartermaster of that department.

Major W. C. Dawson, U. S. N., assistant paymaster U. S. Marine Corps, is appointed senior member of the board of survey, depot quartermaster's office, San Francisco, California.

Commander William A. Gill, U. S. N., Pacific Torpedo Fleet, is stationed temporarily at Mare Island.

Major William F. Martin, U. S. A., having been assigned to duty in the Eighteenth Infantry, will proceed to join his regiment in the Philippine Islands. Upon his arrival in San Francisco he will report in person to the commanding general, Department of California, for duty pending the sailing of the transport upon which he may secure accommodation.

The following board of medical officers is appointed to meet at the general hospital, Presidio of San Francisco, for the purpose of conducting the preliminary examination of applicants for appointment in the medical corps of the army: Major John W. Kennedy, U. S. A., Captain Albert E. Truby, U. S. A., and Charles E. Foster, U. S. A.

Captain Sterling P. Adams, U. S. A., commanding Company H, Fourteenth Cavalry, Presidio of San Francisco, has returned with his troop from a three days' march.

Captain William R. Davis, U. S. A., Medical Corps, and First Lieutenant Herbert C. Gihner, U. S. A., Medical Corps, are appointed to meet at the army general hospital, Presidio of San Francisco, at such times as may be necessary to examine officers ordered before it.

Captain Frank B. Edwards, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., will proceed to Fort Sheridan, Illinois, so as to arrive there not later than August 11, to enter the army pistol competition at that place.

First Lieutenant Otis R. Cole, Twenty-Fifth Infantry, U. S. A., having received his transfer, will report to the commanding general, Department of California, for duty pending the departure or the transport for the Philippines.

First Lieutenant A. E. Brunzell, U. S. N., detached from the marine barracks, navy yard, Mare Island, on August 3, will proceed to the Philippine Islands with a draft of a hundred men.

Lieutenant-Commander C. N. Offley, U. S. N., is assigned to duty as fleet engineer, Pacific Fleet, on the West Virginia.

Leave of absence from August 1 to August 27 is granted First Lieutenant Arthur H. Bryant, U. S. A., Coast Artillery Corps, Fort Baker, California.

Leave of absence on account of sickness is granted First Lieutenant Thomas D. Thorpe, U. S. A., Coast Artillery Corps, army general hospital, Presidio of San Francisco.

Leave of absence for twenty days, to take effect upon completion of the army rifle competition at Fort Sheridan, Illinois, is granted Second Lieutenant Arthur E. Ahrends, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., Presidio of Monterey.

First Lieutenant Edward T. Baker, Eighth Infantry, U. S. A., Presidio of Monterey, will proceed to Fort Sheridan so as to arrive not later than August 11, to enter the army rifle competition at that place.

First Lieutenant Clifton R. Norton, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., Presidio of San Francisco, is detailed for duty at the camp of instruction to be held at Fort Riley, Kansas.

First Lieutenant Graham Parker, U. S. A., Coast Artillery Corps, is relieved from duty at the Pacific Branch of the United States Military Prison. He is assigned to the Ninety-Second Company, Coast Artillery Corps, and will proceed to join that company.

Lieutenant John C. Pegram, First Cavalry, U. S. A., while en route to join his regiment in the Philippine Islands, will report to the commanding general, Department of California, for duty pending the sailing of his transport.

Marie Wainwright has been engaged by Charles Frohman for a principal part in "Samson," the latest play by Henri Bernstein, author of "The Thief," and the starring vehicle for William Gillette this fall.

At the Hotels.

Baron T. A. Klingspor of the Royal Swedish Guard, late of the Swedish legation at Peking, has arrived at the Hotel St. Francis from the Siberia.

Mr. Robert S. Woodward, president of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, is visiting the West on a tour of scientific investigation and is at present stopping at the Hotel St. Francis.

Mr. E. M. Statler of Buffalo has arrived at the Hotel St. Francis with his family.

Mrs. C. B. Alexander entertained a number of friends at dinner in the Hotel St. Francis Tuesday evening.

Major and Mrs. C. M. McKinstry have returned to their apartments in the Hotel St. Francis.

Lieutenant F. W. Fonda, U. S. A., of New York, is a guest at the Hotel St. Francis.

Mr. and Mrs. Will M. Cressy of New Hampshire are registered at the Hotel St. Francis. Mr. and Mrs. Cressy are appearing at the Orpheum in "The Village Lawyer," a New England character sketch.

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Scott, Jr., are at the Hotel St. Francis for a few days.

Dr. and Mrs. K. K. Macomber of Pasadena are at the Hotel St. Francis.

Herman Ridder, the German editor who, it is reported, will speak and write in the interest of W. J. Bryan for President, has taken apartments at the Fairmont during his stay in San Francisco. Mr. Ridder is accompanied by Mrs. Ridder and two sons, Victor and Joseph E. Ridder. Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Amends and Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Amends also accompany the party.

Mrs. Phebe Hearst has come down from Pleasanton for a few days and is in her rooms at the Fairmont. Mr. William R. Hearst and wife, who are now at the Pleasanton home, are expected later in the month.

Mr. and Mrs. W. I. Waller, with the Misses Waller and maids, are now at the Fairmont, registering from New York.

There are, as usual, a number of visitors at the Fairmont from the southern part of the State. The list includes Mrs. Guy Cochran, Los Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Chamberlain, San Diego; Mrs. Chas. Bell, Mr. Frank Naylor, Mr. J. H. Shainkland, Mr. W. T. Withers, Mr. John W. Mitchell, all of Los Angeles; Dr. W. A. Wood and Mr. Archie Hoxton, Pasadena.

Dr. Otto N. Graf, Austro-Hungarian consul at Chicago, stopped at the Fairmont during his visit to San Francisco.

Mr. W. E. Jacobs, U. S. Reclamation Service, is at the Fairmont.

Mr. John J. Byrne, assistant passenger traffic manager of the Santa Fe, was at the Fairmont for a few days last week. Mr. Byrne was accompanied by Miss Constance Byrne.

Among the guests at the Fairmont from abroad during the past few days were Mrs. R. W. Hamlin, London; Mr. Y. Shriyo and Mr. S. Furusha of Tokyo; Max Grundfelt, Berlin; Mr. E. T. Gutschow, Berlin; Mr. H. Andrus, Berlin.

Mrs. R. R. Donnelly, accompanied by Miss J. Donnelly, are at the Fairmont. They are registered from Chicago, as are also Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Towner.

Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Smallman, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. J. Schroeder and Misses Schroeder, Mr. and Mrs. John Anderson Leach, Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Martin, all of New York City, are the guests of the Fairmont.

Mrs. S. P. Pfingst arrived at the Fairmont from her country home near Pajaro.

Mr. H. A. Fox, Boston; Mr. J. B. Taylor, Boston; Mr. K. B. Cary, Gardner, Mass; Mrs. W. S. Richardson and Miss K. Richardson of Rhode Island, are among the guests at the Fairmont from New England.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Gilbert, Seattle, with Mrs. C. E. Williams of the same city, are staying at the Fairmont.

Mrs. W. F. L. Hartigan, Manila, P. I., is at the Fairmont.

THE OCULARIUM
Henry Kahnt Co.
OPTICIANS
KODAKS & SUPPLIES
SCIENTIFIC INSTRUMENTS
Catalogues Free
644 MARKET ST.
OPP. PALACE HOTEL
BRANCH 1309 VAN NESS AVE.

To dine or lunch amid surroundings thoroughly refined, to enjoy the satisfaction that goes with perfect cuisine and service, is the unbroken, daily experience of the guests of the
Hotel Normandie
Lunch 75c—Dinner $1.00—Sunday Dinner $1.25

Hotel Majestic
(Sutter and Gough)
A homelike hotel for refined people. Very best cuisine. Moderate prices. Rates on application.

Hotel Colonial
THE SELECT HOTEL OF SAN FRANCISCO
Stockton above Sutter Street
American and European Plans
Special Rates to Permanents
HOWARD T. BLETHEN, Manager
Telephone, Kearny 4754

THE "NIPPON MURA"
Family Resort between Saratoga and Los Gatos
Has increased its accommodations, main building furnace heated, beautifully furnished rooms with all modern conveniences. Open all the year. Positively exclusive. For information address
THEODORE J. MORRIS, Proprietor,
Los Gatos, Cal.

Hotel Collingwood
35th St., bet. 5th Ave. and Broadway
NEW YORK CITY
New fireproof hotel located in the shopping and theatre district, containing every modern device for comfort of guests.
Positively exclusive. Service à la carte.

Peyton Chemical Co.
Purchasers and Smelters of
COPPER, GOLD AND SILVER ORES, ETC.
Rooms 657 and 658 Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal.
Smelter and Works at Peyton, Contra Costa Co., Cal.; P. O., Martinez.

Interior of magnificent living room.

FOR SALE
A BARGAIN
Beautiful Artistic Residence
12 rooms and 3 baths; hardwood inlaid floors throughout.
UNOBSTRUCTED MARINE VIEW
The mantels and fixtures in this house are the most attractive ever installed in this city. House just completed, has never been occupied.
EXTRA LARGE CORNER LOT
75 x 102 ft. with "L"
For full particulars see
Shainwald, Buckbee & Co.
No. 27 Montgomery St.

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

"The crazy chauffeur must go," says the Chicago Record-Herald. He does.—Rochester Post-Express.

"A long distance call? Who is it from, Loch?" "Africa wants you, Mr. President."—Birmingham Age Herald.

"Seems to me you look younger than ever." "Why not? As I grow older, I become more and more expert in avoiding trouble."—Life.

Gabbleby—After all, a woman's scream is her greatest weapon of defense. Gertrude—Undoubtedly; how did you find it out?—Puck.

Nell—Maude has lost a good friend in Jack. Belle—Why, have they quarreled? Nell—No; they are married.—Philadelphia Record.

"Why, my hoy! did you fall in that open coal hole?" "No; course not. I wuz in here, an' they huilt a pavement over me."—Illustrated Bits.

The Boy (seriously)—You are the first and only girl I ever loved, Ethel. She—Ah, what lots of fun you have ahead of you, Freddy!—London Opinion.

Golfer—Will you come round again tomorrow? Second Euthusiast—Dunno. I'd arranged to get married tomorrow. Perhaps I can postpone it.—Tatler.

"You never saw a man who understood women." "Well, I knew a man once who claimed that he did." "And did he?" "Well, he never married one."—Houston Post.

"Yes; I am going ahead." "And how are you going to arrange your itinerary?" "Oh, ponpadour. I think that will be most suitable for traveling."—Washington Herald.

The Boss—What's that? Office Boy—I says, you hetter send out and git a half dozen hoy's to do my woik today; I'm goin' to be sick about three o'clock!—Harper's Bazar.

Sambo—De doctor tells me dat ter eat six watermillions at one time would sho' kill me. Rambo—An' what you gwine do' 'hout it? Sambo—I gwine ter die game!—New York Tribune.

"I suppose," said the facetious stranger, watching a workman spread a carpet from the church door to the curb, "that's the high road to heaven you're fixing there?" "No," replied the man, "this is merely a bridal path."—Philadelphia Press.

Ethel—Sometimes I really think seriously of remaining unmarried. Maud—Think only? Why, I imagined you worried about it.—Town Topics.

"Who's your ideal of havery?" queried the old hachelor. "Is it General Kuroki?" "No," answered the spinster desperately. "It's a Mormon."—The Tatler.

Tonsorial Expert (cutting colored man's hair)—Rastus, your hair is just like wool. Rastus—Well, yoh didn't spect to cut silk fo' fifteen cents, did yoh?—Harper's Weekly.

Jim (regarding damage done to church by fire)—Good joh it wasn't a factory, Bill. Bill—You're right, mate. Only one man put out of work, and he draws his money.—Punch.

"You don't seem to have as much call for hammocks as you used to," said the regular hoarder. "No," answered Farmer Cornstossel. "I guess times have been too hard for silk stockings this summer."—Washington Star.

Simkins—You say that little man was formerly the lightweight champion? Timkins—Yes. Simkins—How did he lose the title? Timkins—Oh, he didn't lose it. He merely sold his grocery and retired.—Chicago Daily News.

Customer (pointing to the hieroglyphics on his check)—Is that my name in Chinese? Go Long (Chinese laundryman)—No; 'sclicktion. Means "li'l ole man; cross-eyed; no teet." Customer—Er—thank you.—New York Globe.

Professor Stone—To the geologist a thousand years or so are not counted as any time at all.—Man in the Audience—Great Scott! And to think I made a temporary loan of ten dollars to a man who holds such views!—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Mrs. Exe—Good-by. I'm sorry my husband isn't in. I wish I knew some way of keeping him at home a little more. Mrs. Wye—Let him buy a motor car. Mrs. Exe—Why, he'd be out more than ever then. Mrs. Wye—Oh, dear, no! Mrs. Dasher tells me her husband hought a motor a few days ago, and the doctor says he won't be out for six weeks.—Illustrated Bits.

PRESIDIO TERRACE

"The Peerless One"

The only residence park in San Francisco and the only property which affords absolute protection in home life. Flats, apartment houses, stores, and the construction of any building used for business purposes prohibited. Telephone and electric wires in underground conduits, streets bituminized, stone sidewalks, flowers, grass plots, trees and shrubs—a combination of town and country. Lots 50 feet front, full depth, only $7000. Terms to suit.

BALDWIN & HOWELL
318-324 Kearny Street

Toyo Kisen Kaisha
(ORIENTAL S. S. CO.)

S. S. Nippon Maru..Saturday, August 29, 1910
S. S. Tenyo Maru..Friday, September 25, 1910
S. S. America Maru (via Manila).....
.....Tuesday, October 20, 1910

Steamers sail from company's piers, No. 42-44, near foot of Second Street, 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Hiogo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board day of sailing. Round-trip tickets at reduced rates. For freight and passage apply at office, 2, James Flood Building, W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

ROUND THE WORLD

TOURS DE LUXE

Leaving in August, September and October. Membership limited to twelve. Programmes for the asking.

THOS. COOK & SON
32 Powell Street, San Francisco

Press Clippings

Are money-makers for Contractors, Suppliers, Houses, Business Men and Corporations. ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU Phone, Kearny 392. 88 First Street

Clubbing List.

By special arrangement with the publishers and by concessions in price on both sides, are enabled to make the following offer, open to all subscribers direct to this office. Subscribers in renewing subscriptions to East periodicals will please mention the date of expiration in order to avoid mistakes:

- American Magazine and Argonaut.....$
Argosy and Argonaut.....
Atlantic Monthly and Argonaut.....
Blackwood's Magazine and Argonaut...
Century and Argonaut.....
Commoner and Argonaut.....
Cosmopolitan and Argonaut.....
Current Literature and Argonaut.....
English Illustrated Magazine and Argonaut
Farum and Argonaut.....
Harper's Bazar and Argonaut.....
Harper's Magazine and Argonaut.....
Harper's Weekly and Argonaut.....
House Beautiful and Argonaut.....
International Magazine and Argonaut...
Judge and Argonaut.....
Leslie's Weekly and Argonaut.....
Life and Argonaut.....
Lippincott's Magazine and Argonaut...
Littell's Living Age and Argonaut.....
Mexican Herald and Argonaut.....
Munsey's Magazine and Argonaut.....
Nineteenth Century and Argonaut.....
North American Review and Argonaut...
Out West and Argonaut.....
Overland Monthly and Argonaut.....
Political Science Quarterly and Argonaut
Puck and Argonaut.....
Review of Reviews and Argonaut.....
Scribner's Magazine and Argonaut.....
Smart Set and Argonaut.....
St. Nicholas and Argonaut.....
Sunset and Argonaut.....
Theatre Magazine and Argonaut.....
Thrice-a-Week New York World (Democratic) and Argonaut.....
Weekly New York Tribune (Republican) and Argonaut
Weekly New York Tribune, Weekly New York World, and Argonaut.....

STAGE setting and furniture used by Mr. Henry Miller in his new play, "Mater," at the Van Ness Theatre—conceived, planned, and executed in its entirety by our decorative department. Will be taken East and used without change in the Broadway production of the play.

Wholesale
Retail
and
Since 1858

D. N. & E. WALTER & CO.

Van Ness and Sacramento

Furniture
Carpets
Rugs
Draperies

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXIII. No. 1638.

SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 15, 1908.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10 payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco postoffice as second-class matter.

The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breams Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opéra. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at F and Thirteenth Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Denison News Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains.

Published at 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal. Telephone, Kearny 5895.

probably foreshadows the reelection of United States Senator Perkins.

For the second time within four months the Lincoln-Roosevelt League has been beaten upon ground of its own choosing. The explanation involves a brief recital of political history. Before the State convention at Santa Cruz two years ago Dr. Pardee, then governor, was a candidate for renomination. He had been a fairly good official, but had not succeeded in winning effective political friendships throughout the State. This fact taken in connection with the narrowness of the vote by which he was elected in 1902—bare fifteen hundred majority—made his renomination in the judgment of political experts a hazardous thing. The party organization was not unfriendly to Pardee, but it became fixed in the idea that to make him the party candidate would be to lose the election. Pardee vainly sought to win the organization favor by persuasions and, failing in this, he undertook to secure the nomination by an independent contest. He even went so far as to hold conferences with Abraham Ruef, then an important factor in San Francisco politics, and his chief political manager, acting in his name, offered to turn over certain large elements of State patronage to Ruef in return for the support of his delegates. We give this bit of nasty history because it is necessary to an exposition of the motives back of the Lincoln-Roosevelt League movement.

but misguided men like Mr. Chester Rowell before the public as its sponsors and prophets. Likewise it will not do to ally a movement calling itself by the name of reform with a group of quacks, pretenders, and self-seekers like Mr. Rudolph Spreckels and his servants. Furthermore, reform proposals with leadership of reform movements, to command support within a party, must be developed through the membership of that party. Republicans are not edified and their support is not won by appeals for party reorganization made by men, even though eminently respectable and personally worthy as Mayor Taylor, who stand outside of the party membership and whose affiliations are with the enemies of the party.

Finally a reform movement to command respect must have (1) a basis in public grievance involving misuse and waste of public funds; (2) a grievance in the form of official scandal or of legislative wrongdoing; and (3) it must have inspiring leadership. The Lincoln-Roosevelt League movement was without any one of these essential factors of success. There has been no extravagance worth speaking of in State administration; there has been no scandal, legislative or other; there has been in the movement no man large enough or sufficiently respected and trusted to command a following. The movement has failed because it lacked honesty of motive, because it lacked a basis in public or party grievance, and because it had no real leadership. This is the whole explanation of why the combination of Pardeeism and Spreckelsism has been brushed aside by the Republicans of California.

The Democratic primary election, although for obvious reasons less important than that of the dominant party, is not without interest. The contest was a personal one; the issue was involved in the ambition of Mr. Gavin McNab on the one hand and of Mr. Theodore Bell on the other to stand in the lead of party affairs. In San Francisco McNab has been successful in eleven districts with 153 delegates as against seven districts with 27 delegates for Bell. Outside reports are slow in coming, but the indications are that McNab will be able to take the Democratic State organization away from Bell.

Pageantry in Quebec.

The great historical pageant at Quebec emphasizes the reproach that we have never had anything of the sort in the United States. When these magnificent displays were first elaborated in Europe they seemed to belong appropriately to countries having behind them many centuries of historical incident and change, and we were content to admire without imitation. But if Quebec, whose history is no longer than our own, nor so stirring, can find material enough in that history to furnish so imposing a show as the one that has just been presented on the Plains of Abraham it is surely time for us to bestir ourselves and to show that our historical sentiment and pride are strong enough to step outside the covers of our school books. An historical pageant would be a welcome relief to the tiresome series of "expositions," it would probably be a financial success, while as a stimulant to national and patriotic pride it would have a value not easily overrated.

The object of the Quebec pageant was to illustrate the early history of Canada and to reenact it upon something like its original scale. There was the arrival of Jacques Cartier on the spot where it actually occurred, with the watchful and suspicious Indians hidden in the bush, and the first religious service by the crew of the Petite Hermine. Then the scene shifts to Fontainebleau and the court of Henry IV of France, by whom Champlain is commissioned to seek out the new world. Then comes the arrival of Champlain at Quebec and of Mother Marie and her nuns, the massacre by Indians of Dollard des Ormeaux at Long Sault, the arrival of the first governor-general, and his

THIRTY-SECOND YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: The Primary Election—Pageantry at Quebec—Japan's Assimilative Genius—Possibilities of the Airship—The Late Senator Allison—A Seeming Inconsistency—Jack London, Plutoocrat—Gratifying..... 97-100

CAMPAIGN TOPICS 100

THE FESTIVAL OF ST. GROUSE: "Piecadilly" Describes the Annual Preparations for the Observance by English Sportsmen of an Old-Established Festival..... 101

OLD FAVORITES: "An Old Miniature"; "Portrait of a Lady, 17—," by May Probyn..... 101

INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All over the World..... 101

FROM STONE-CUTTER TO SENATOR: XXVI. By Jerome A. Hart..... 102

THE NORTHWEST PASSAGE: Captain Amundsen Tells the Story of a Wonderful and Adventurous Voyage... 104

CURRENT VERSE: "Adeimantus," by Alfred Browning Stanley Tennyson; "Love's Tapestry," by Archibald Sullivan; "Babylon," by William F. McCormack..... 104

BOOKS AND AUTHORS. By Sidney G. P. Coryn..... 105

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT..... 106

LITERARY NOTES: Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip—New Publications..... 106

DRAMA: Henry Miller's Sydney Carton. By Josephine Hart Phelps..... 107

VANITY FAIR..... 108

STORYTTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise..... 109

THE MERRY MUSE..... 109

PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy..... 110-111

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day..... 112

The Primary Election.

Tuesday's primary election resulted in something very like a walkover for the "regular" Republican organization as against the so-called Lincoln-Roosevelt League. In the city of San Francisco the organization ticket was successful in thirteen out of eighteen districts, including all those carried by the organization forces last May, with five districts which gave their votes at the May election to the League candidates. The meaning of this is that the regular organization will have 108 votes out of 173 in the coming city convention, and will therefore control the action of that body. In the State the general result was likewise favorable to the regular organization, although the voting was less decisive. Regular tickets were successful in Los Angeles, Santa Clara, Sacramento, San Diego, and Sonoma counties. Alameda was won by the Leaguers, who have 135 delegates against 90 for the organization. As we write on Wednesday morning returns have not been received from many interior points, but enough is known to make it plain that the regular party organization will dominate all but a few catering counties, controlling general nominations, including those of legislative candidates. This result reception by Laval, while the last two pageants were devoted to the cession of the territory from France to England, the artist Lascelles tactfully bridging a difficult point by representing a march past of the two armies, the French placing a wreath upon the monument of Wolfe and the English paying a like honor to the memorial of Montcalm. Nothing could have been better devised to give realism to history or to identify the prosaic present with the romantic past.

It was a part of the fitness of things that the United States should be represented with the dignity communicated by Vice-President Fairbanks. A great deal of the history of Quebec belongs as much to us as to the Canadians of today. The people of New England were intimately concerned with the struggle between Great Britain and France. The French designed a great chain of forts to connect the Mississippi with the St. Lawrence and in order to resist the encroachments of the English, and although for a long time the mother country allowed the colonists to fight their own battles against the French unaided, she was forced at last to interfere, and then George Washington was commissioned to take a hand in the last stage of the seven years' war. Of the men who played a part in the final drama ending with the fall of Quebec, no less than 5000 Pennsylvanians and Virginians were with Forbes when he marched to Fort Duquesne, while the men who took Fort Frontenac were mainly from New England and New York. England's main reliance was, in fact, upon what are now the eastern United States, and our participation in these imposing pageants was therefore fully justified by something more than sentiment or good will. Their significance was as great to the Americans as to the Canadians.

Already there has been a suggestion that Boston follow this laudable example. She has material and to spare in her history. So also has New York. So, indeed, have most of the older settled parts of the country. Why, indeed, should not something of the kind be attempted on the Pacific Coast, where also there is a past full to the brim with romantic event. We could draw the attention of the world by a reënactment of some of the scenes of our early history. Our story is richer in the elements of romance even than that of the East, and we could easily strike a new note at a time when we are all a little tired of the conventional modern display, which is useful enough in its way, but which lacks sentiment and the aroma of ancient days. The idea is at least worth thinking about.

Japan's Assimilative Genius.

A doubtful dispatch purporting to be from Tairen, Manchuria, contains the information that Japan is rapidly taking to herself the trade in railroad equipment and material not only in the home empire, but in Korea, Manchuria, and northeastern Asia. Hitherto American manufacturers have enjoyed a virtual monopoly in this trade, but according to the latest news from Manchuria the Japanese are dissatisfied with the poor quality of the material furnished and the inferior workmanship upon the American product. Consequently the Japanese have undertaken to duplicate the American rolling stock at American prices, guaranteeing to deliver a better article. The moral sought to be conveyed is in the warning that unless American manufacturers exert themselves they will lose this trade.

The dispatch invites suspicion by supplementing its pessimistic deductions with the fact that on May 25 of this year the Japanese installed on their Korean and Manchurian roads 121 American locomotives, 1403 American freight cars, and ninety-five American passenger coaches. If any of this equipment, which is amply sufficient to stock the South Manchuria trunk lines, had been inferior in workmanship or below standard in quality, it would have been promptly returned. The Japanese are a canny folk, and although the railroads are wholly under the control of the government, the Western science of graft has not yet been acquired by those whom the government employs to contract for its supplies. Expert observation of the railroad equipment of Japan and Manchuria confirms the opinion that Japan got just what she ordered, and the circumstance that she is using the material on her trunk lines is the best proof that the Japanese government is satisfied with the consignment.

In all probability, however, there is a glimmer of truth in the statement that the Japanese are contemplating the advisability of building their own locomotives and manufacturing their own rolling stock; and it is also probable that the correspondent who sent this dispatch to the American newspapers sent others of similar import to English and German newspapers with the intention of stimulating the manufacturers of those countries to renewed effort to hold this trade and to prevent the Japanese from absorbing it. It is even possible that the English and German manufacturers were warned that unless they awakened to the necessity of exerting themselves in this direction the Americans would continue to monopolize the trade in railroad material until the Japanese were in a position to compete for it, or until the Japanese government was ready to finance its own manufactories.

Eventually, without question, the Japanese will build their own locomotives, manufacture their own rolling stock and furnish their own equipment for all railroads under Japanese control. At present they are entirely dependent upon foreign manufacturers for the best railroad material. Their own output is experimental and palpably inferior in quality and workmanship. But, as in the building of steamships and ships of war, the Japanese are capable of adapting for their own use all foreign ideas, devices, and methods. The Japanese are not in themselves inventive, but they are peculiarly skillful in the adaptation of the inventions of other peoples. Their art is Chinese and Korean; their language is a polyglot; their written character is Chinese; their literature is borrowed; their religions are imported; their commercial codes are based on the tricks of all trades; their finance is sustained by an enormous debt to foreign nations; their constitution is modeled on that of Germany and England; their army is an imitation of the German military system; their police are called "gens d'armes"; their philosophy is a rehash of Herbert Spencer; their science was derived from the German school; and the weapons which they used with such deadly effect in their war with Russia are a conglomerate of the best product of all the arsenals, foundries, laboratories, and factories in the world. The Japanese are not inventive; they are assimilative; and in their adaptation of the ideas and methods of other nations to their own uses they are surpassingly adept. In some of the output of their ateliers and factories the Japanese have produced by combination and adjustment better results than were attained by the inventors and makers of the original article. There is no reason, therefore, to dispute the prediction that eventually the Japanese will build and equip their railroads from their own material. It would not surprise those who know the Japanese facility of adaptation to hear at any time that they had vastly "improved" upon the American locomotive or the American railroad system itself by combination of all the best features of all locomotives and every system. In that day Japan will control a monopoly in the gigantic railway business destined to gridiron Asia from the Ganges to the Amur. But in the meantime the American will continue to furnish Japan with the locomotives and rolling stock for her trunk lines and feeders.

Possibilities of the Airship.

At Avignon, in November, 1782, Stephen Montgolfier succeeded in causing a silken bag containing about fifty feet of hot air to rise to the roof of a room. From his moorings on Lake Constance, in Switzerland, on July 1, 1908, Count Zeppelin sailed 400 miles in a "rigid-frame dirigible balloon," remaining aloft twelve hours, attaining an altitude of 2500 feet, averaging a speed of thirty-four miles throughout the flight, and directing the course of his airship with the confident precision that guides an ocean liner from port to port.

Almost coincidentally with the Zeppelin demonstration Henri Farman, in his aeroplane, remained in the air twenty minutes and covered a distance of eleven miles. Thus two diverse principles of aerostatics have been successfully applied simultaneously—the principle with which Montgolfier experimented more than a century ago and the principle described as the "heavier-than-air" problem based on processes similar to those that sustain the largest birds in their flights.

From Montgolfier to Zeppelin and Farman the weary years have been filled with hopes deferred, bitter disappointment, and cruel disaster. Inventors of every degree and capacity have wasted their lives in the effort to solve the problem of the air; millions of money have been expended to accomplish this ultimate conquest over an element that seemed to mock the human intellect by the very simplicity of the means seemingly required to overcome the obvious difficulties interposed by natural law; enthusiasm as blind, unreasoning, and irrepressible as that which animated the search for the elixir of life, the philosophers' stone, and perpetual motion has been concentrated upon this problem of aerial flight. Romance and tragedy are closely interwoven with the sordid details of the story, as they are with all human effort to cross the barriers erected by nature, ever jealous of her secrets and stubborn in defense of them.

There is good logic in the supposition that if Count Zeppelin can sail his airship 400 miles he can traverse 4000 miles in the same manner and with equal precision. Therein lies the cogency of the inference that the great problem has been at last definitely solved. And if Henri Farman can sail eleven miles in his aeroplane "heavier than air," it is safe to assume that machines built upon that principle will eventually fill the air as numerous as automobiles now crowd our mundane thoroughfares. The success of Zeppelin and Farman and Baldwin and the Wright brothers and others of lesser fame in this department of inventive and mechanical genius has already stimulated the lagging energy of other experimenters hitherto discouraged by failure, and it has drawn to this field of effort a vast attention that will speedily develop practical remedies for every defect that may arise to interfere with the complete and universal success of the flying machine. Thirty years elapsed between the time when the steam-engine had been applied efficiently by Watt as power for all ordinary mechanical purposes and the date of Fulton's first voyage in a steamboat. The ardent hopes of a long century of discouragement in the present of what seemed a mechanical impossibility are now, apparently, triumphantly realized.

Naturally the first thought of the practical man is, what are we going to do with it? The first answer comes in the announcement that a company has been organized in Berlin with a preliminary capital of $125,000 to establish a line of passenger airships between that city, London, Paris, Vienna, St. Petersburg, Copenhagen, and Stockholm. Another dispatch, this one from Boston, informs us of the incorporation of "the Aerial Navigation Company, to do a freight and passenger business by express between Boston, New York, and other points." Thus we learn that commerce has already taken cognizance of the airship and is preparing to utilize it in competition with railroads and steamships, trusting, no doubt, to future improvements for safety and economy in this new method of transportation.

But commerce will not monopolize the flying machine. The war lords demand that it shall be used as a weapon of offense and defense in the arbitrament of their quarrels; the nations are already planning fleets (or flocks) of airships with which to protect their coasts or to invade the territories of their neighbors; and the poet-prophet's "vision of the world" seems likely to be fulfilled, in which he Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies of magic sails,

Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly hales;
Heard the heavens fill with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew

From the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue.

Neither in commerce nor in war, however, will the perfected airship confer immediate supremacy upon any nation or group of organized capitalists. There is no secret in the fundamental application of the principles involved. The tests thus far have been open to the inspection of all concerned. If the Kaiser persists in his published intention of building a squadron of aerial warships, Great Britain will do the same; and no doubt the flying qualities of the one will be, theoretically at least, equal to those of the other. What would happen in the event of a death-grapple in "the central blue" is a matter of speculation. It is the custom of governments to guard the new ideas of their naval constructors very closely, and the same policy would unquestionably be adopted in the construction of their air cruisers and battleships. A constant effort would be made to render the home ships invulnerable to the assault of the enemy and at the same time as destructive as possible in attack, as in the present method of naval construction for war purposes. These improvements will, of course, be state secrets, to be divulged only in the dire emergency of actual combat. As for future improvements in the construction of commercial air-liners, the patent laws and the international treaties will probably provide ample protection for inventors in this direction as at present in other departments of industrial activity.

If the flying-machine is now to be regarded as an accomplished fact, it will not be long before the revenue collectors will be compelled to look up and take notice. The customs authorities of every country are harassed to the verge of chronic nervous prostration as it is by the unremitting industry of smugglers, who regard it as the most venial of crimes to sneak dutiable merchandise from one country to another to avoid payment of the government tax upon foreign goods. The flying-machine will certainly greatly augment the troubles and responsibilities of those who sit in the seat of customs. Every nation will have to maintain a covey of aerial revenue cutters, and the flight of all airships will have to be watched with an official solicitude surpassing the vigilance of the customs inspectors on mail docks and national frontiers. Count Zeppelin's airship demonstrated a lifting and carrying capacity of more than 18,000 pounds aside from the weight of fourteen passengers. A machine built for smuggling would not need to be so ponderous; in truth, the lighter the ship the more likely that it would outtail an ordinary revenue cutter, everything in the matter of speed depending on the power of the engines; and a very small airship could carry a very valuable cargo of contraband. Silks, laces, and opium are compact assignments and the difference of value in the country of production and the country where they may be sold is very great. Add the profit of an evaded duty and it is easy to calculate how many tons of this kind of merchandise would repay the expense of smuggling it and how much would be required to make any ordinary smuggler's dreams of avarice come true.

So it is plain that the airship is not to be an unmixed blessing nor an altogether impeccable contrivance for the moral uplift of humanity. But, as may be said of all other products of human invention, the fault will lie in the abuse of the instrument and not in its use; not in the machine or the idea from which it sprang, but in the purpose of those who thereafter manipulate it.

The Late Senator Allison.

The career of the late Senator Allison of Iowa affords an instructive illustration of the value of industry and of continuous service in public life. Mr. Allison was as far as possible from being a great man in an intellectual sense. He was neither an original thinker, a brilliant speaker, nor an attractive writer. The tone of the man, mentally and otherwise, was moderate verging upon the commonplace. And yet for more than twenty-five years he has been perhaps the most effective man in the legislative life of the country. He came to this position by sheer industry, in combination with advantages which accrued to him through long continued senatorial service.

Mr. Allison's first congressional service was in the House of Representatives, where he served from 1863 until 1871, declining to be again a candidate because he had presented himself as a candidate for the Senate. He was duly elected and took his seat March, 1873, and he was successively reelected five times, six elections in all, involving actual and active senatorial service for thirty-five years and four months. No other man has ever served so long in the Senate; furthermore, Mr. Allison, although in extreme age—he was seventy-nine last March—had just won a preliminary campaign which would have assured him election to a seventh senatorial term if he had lived until the legislative session of next January. At the time of his death, Mr. Allison was not only the oldest senator in point of service, but he was the oldest member of the senatorial body in point of years.

The secret of Mr. Allison's extraordinary prestige in recent years has in truth been no secret at all. Length of service had given him highly effective committee connections, and had established him in relationships in and out of the Senate unequaled by those of any other man in public life. Wherever he wanted coöperation he was able to get it, because he had something to give in return. At one time or another during every congressional session, every member of the Senate, every member of the House of Representatives, every Cabinet officer, and even the President, found himself under the necessity of consulting Senator Allison, and of asking some favor at his hands. This grew out of his relationship to pending legislation through committee connections; and perhaps not less through his unflinching courtesy and his willingness to assist anybody and everybody who sought his help. He took his duties as a senator seriously, regarding himself bound to public service in whatever form it might present itself and without respect to any labor which it might put upon him. First, last, and all the time, he was a worker—a persistent and untiring worker—and there came to him because of this as a worker opportunities of service impossible and undreamed of by those less willing to give themselves pains.

The unwillingness of the average senator to work is one of the serious problems of our legislation. Where one man goes to the Senate like Senator Allison, with the will and the purpose to work, there are ten—or let us say twenty—who seek to avoid work. They come to the Senate not through the school of legislative experience or inspired by propensity for a legislative career, but for other reasons and through other motives. The average senator wins his election as a sort of reward for achievement in other spheres, and he takes the senatorship as a crown, so to speak, of a personal career. He goes to Washington that he may mingle on pleasant terms with the famous and the great, that his womankind may enjoy the brilliant social life of the capital, or that his name may figure in the rolls of personal distinction. He goes commonly at a time of life when it is not easy to learn new things or to acquire new habits and when one is more inclined to self-indulgence than to strenuousness of life. The average senator therefore drones through his official life, heedless of its opportunities for service, more disposed to push to one side the routine of senatorial duty than to take it up energetically and seriously. Senator Depew of New York, for example, gives himself no pains to attend committee meetings and caucuses. He is ready enough to make a showy speech when occasion offers. But work, hard work, essential in the formulation, reorganization, and promotion of routine measures, is not for him. He will have none of it; others may do it or it may go undone.

Thus it is that men of the working type, men like Allison, Aldrich, and our own Senator Perkins, who make no great pretensions as original or showy statesmen, but who are always ready to meet and carry every task which offers, come unfailingly to relationships of high potentiality and responsibility. One such man, especially after long service has established his personal connections and given him a certain priority of authority, is worth a dozen men of the showy type, men who shine at social festivities and whose resounding rhetoric spreads itself widely over the Congressional Record.

Senator Allison was curiously endowed with what we may call the coöperative mind. He had a gift of working with and through others; and he carried the habit of coöperation into his Iowa politics as well as into his strictly senatorial life. Wherever anything was to be accomplished for the interest of Iowa or for an Iowa man he was unfailingly ready and effective. To him it is largely due that Iowa has had so large a part in the legislative and administrative life of the country in recent years. It is only a little while ago that Iowa had two citizens in the President's Cabinet—Secretary Shaw in the Treasury and Secretary Wilson in the Department of Agriculture—while at the same time another citizen of Iowa was the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and still another, Mr. Hepburn, the most potent figure on the floor of that body. A man of less wisdom, of less kindness, of greater selfishness, would have sought to kill off his political equals and possible rivals precisely as certain actors of distinction seek by surrounding themselves with inferiors to engross attention. There was none of this vice in Mr. Allison. Man after man among his fellow-citizens of Iowa owed to him recognition, support, with such enlargement of opportunity as a commanding friend and patron may give.

It is significant and most interesting that after nearly fifty years of public service, most of that time in relationships of large financial opportunity, Mr. Allison died relatively a poor man. His whole estate, so it is reported, amounts to less than $100,000. When it is remembered that now for more than a quarter of a century Mr. Allison has been in possession of practically all the secrets of government, that he has known in advance every great legislative movement calculated to affect values of large classes of property, his relative poverty stands immensely to his personal credit. With him public office was strictly a public trust.

A Seeming Inconsistency

The "woman question," so far at least as some of its English aspects are concerned, is presenting some curious anomalies just now, and these are well represented by some of the news items that find themselves in juxtaposition in the newspapers. Take, for example, the well-meaning but misguided attempts of the London County Council to provide special street-cars for women during the "rush" hours of the day. There is no evidence that these cars were particularly popular with women—a little knowledge of human nature would have shown that they could not be popular, for women dislike nothing so much as female traveling companions—but they were decidedly popular with the so-called sterner sex, who claimed that a public conveyance was for the benefit of the public, sex unspecified, and that the only legal qualification to ride in it was the payment of the humble and unassuming penny and the possession of a passably clean face. And now the commissioner of police has decided that the men have right as well as might upon their side, and that they may ride in any street-car they please without fear or favor. And so the women's cars have been abolished and another grievance has been added to a list that stimulates the oratory of the suffragettes and helps to make modern political life hideous. The commissioner of police is evidently an unmarried man or one who has exceptional and reckless courage.

The next item in the same column is along similar general lines, but of a different hue. It explains a system of canvass by caravan now being followed by the suffragettes, who thus vary the tedium of breaking the windows of Cabinet ministers, ringing their doorbells continuously until removed by the police, marching in unpicturesque phalanx upon the houses of Parliament, and breaking up political meetings by the clang of dinner gongs and the screams of hysterical voices. These gentle ladies who can not endure the contact with base man in a street-car are spending the summer in traveling by caravan from place to place addressing meetings, wheedling the farmers, and adding to the hilarity of nations. They sleep en masse in the caravan and probably button each other up behind in the early morning and exchange more or less important confidences at night. Propaganda is carried on during the day and doubtless the rural population and its wife are duly impressed. It will not be the fault of these energetic ladies if the right to vote, to be elected to Parliament, to sit upon coroners' juries, and other proud privileges of the kind is much longer denied to them.

At the same time the two items seem inconsistent. The separate street-cars and the political vote with all that it implies—coroners' juries and the like—are well within the right of women to demand, but they can not have them both. They can not at the same time remain superior to men and sink to an equality with men. They can do which they please and at the moment when, for the first time in human history, they reach some common agreement and learn the mysteries of combination. But they can not do them both.

Jack London—Plutocrat.

Others beside Jack London will deplore the "inconceivable and monstrous" cost of the Snark. Mr. London assures us that the craft in which he is voyaging in the South Seas preliminary to other voyaging in other seas cost $30,000. As he is still "somewhere east of Suez," and, as we have it on the authority of Rudyard Kipling that in those latitudes "there aren't no Ten Commandments," we are at liberty to receive Mr. London's statement at any worth we please, or to reject his estimate wholly. It is not the cost of the Snark in itself that will be regarded by the socialists and anarchists of Mr. London's intimate acquaintance as "inconceivable and monstrous"; many yachts in which hated plutocrats and despised millionaires sail the seas cost even more than Mr. London tells us he paid for his boat; the inconceivability and monstrosity of the statement is in the circumstance that Jack London, the self-confessed hobo, the avowed and implacable enemy of the rich and prosperous, the wealth-despising, money-flouting, poverty-boasting Jack London, should openly, unashamedly and unblushingly declare that he could afford to pay $30,000 for something that, owned by John D. Rockefeller, Pierpont Morgan, or E. H. Harriman, would confirm Mr. London's fellow anarchists in the opinion that they had been robbed on the highway by those eminent captains of industry and finance.

Mr. London's description of the Snark and her fittings and appurtenances is enough to turn the stomach of the hardiest of his ancient comrades in Coxey's army; his proud announcement that among other elegant accessories of the yacht there was a bathroom which was "a beautiful dream of schemes and devices, pumps, and levers, and sea-valves," will certainly procure his immediate and ignominious expulsion from every chapter and conclave of the Order of the Sons of Rest. A bathroom! A place where Jack London could enjoy the "beautiful dream" of making himself clean! What self-respecting tramp could forgive such sybaritic luxury in one who had written volumes in praise of the never washed? To be sure, Mr. London says nothing of soap as an adjunct of his palatial bathroom; but soap is always an inference when bathrooms are mentioned, and the damnable suspicion that the was soap in the bathroom of the Suark persists in spite of all that Mr. London has written or spoken in derogation of those who bathe frequently and use soap as a necessary complement of that sacred rite.

The former friends and intimates of Jack London might condone the offense of temporary possession of money, but they will never stand for the ostentation of its use and the shameless parade of the wealth. London himself has never denounced the rich for their riches; his grievance has always been that the possessors of great wealth, instead of giving it to the poor, spent it upon their own comfort and luxury—squandering it on yachts and superfluously fixtured bathrooms. He has always contended that the selfishness of the rich was the gravamen of the poor man's indictment against them. As a Socialist, Jack London has preached that the first use of wealth is to enrich the poor and to reduce the hours of necessary labor to a negligible minimum. As an anarchist, he has advocated the abolition of wealth. In return for the promulgation of these doctrines he has received enough money to fit out a yacht, including a bathroom which he says was a beautiful dream of schemes and devices, pumps and levers and sea-valves, for which he paid $30,000, a cost which he tells us was "inconceivable and monstrous." Now Mr. London is making more capital out of the shame of his treason. He has "syndicated" his base treachery to the Order of the Sons of Rest, and he is trafficking in plutocratic doctrines and ideas. He acquired his wealth by denouncing the rich and he is acquiring more wealth by denouncing those to whom he has been compelled to pay his original wealth in compensation for a pleasure yacht fitted with a bathroom that was "a beautiful dream." If there is anything that Jack London hates more than he hates a plutocrat, it is a creditor with a bill against Jack London.

In a phrase with which Jack London is quite familiar it would seem that this eminent anarchist and pseudo-socialist has given his old companions and former admirers the "double cross."

Gratifying.

Now that the election is over, possibly Mr. Francis J. Heney, recently chief bugle blower for the Pardee-Spreckels-Phelan reform combination, may find time to attend to some little part of the business he has undertaken and which has been suffering from delay, to the vast cost of the taxpayers of San Francisco. It is pleasant to know that while Mr. Heney has been traveling about the country in the Lincoln-Roosevelt cause neither Burns (at seven hundred and fifty-odd per month) nor his many assistants (likewise liberally paid) have been suffering. They have been duly marking time and their salaries have gone on—at the cost of the people whom they so dearly love and whom they are so dearly serving.

Sir Thomas Lipton's new racing yacht Shamrock has been successfully launched and is now being fitted out in the Solent for the season's competitions. She is longer than last year's champion, White Heather, and is a good deal fuller in the midship section class. More striking still, however, is the manner in which the lines of the yacht are stretched out. Instead of the comparatively short rounded ends of White Heather—a development which was probably caused by the operation of the new rule of rating—Shamrock is drawn out in long graceful overhangs. The modeling of the counter is particularly handsome. The beam is carried aft well into the counter, and, as this is balanced with good and fairly full shoulders, it is apparent that this vessel will have at least one of the elements which helped Reliance to success—i. e., a long sailing side when hard driven, although it goes practically untaxed in the measurement. The freeboard looks more than was expected, but the unfamiliar appearance of the green top sides with the white boot-top under may make this something of an optical delusion. At all events, there is no bulwark to increase the height of topside, the only foothold for the crew being a light rail set well in on the deck. From the outward appearance, the yacht is in all respects a racer of the thoroughbred type, and should give a good account of herself when pitted against the other vessels in the big class.

Some years ago the Maine legislature changed an "or" to an "and" in the prohibitory law and made it mandatory upon judges to send rum-sellers to jail as well as fine them. Chief Justice Peters declared in an interview that he should use his own discretion in spite of the law, and he called Neal Dow "a hypocritical old grandmother." The rest of the judges did as they liked about construing the new law, and it was changed back by the next legislature.

The Duchess of Abercorn is conducting a model creamery. She sells cream to the London hotels and to several of the ocean liners.

CAMPAIGN TOPICS.

The Philadelphia Public Ledger says that there is a widespread apprehension of a coming struggle between capital and labor and that Mr. Van Cleave's utterances are deplored as tending to that end. It will be remembered that Mr. Van Cleave, stirred by Democratic surrender to Mr. Gompers, expressed himself in vigorous and ironclad language, calling upon voters all over the country to "take the hide off Bryan" for his curseys and genuflections to the labor leader. Mr. Van Cleave spoke, it may be hoped, in a Pickwickian and political sense, but his fearless denunciation contrasts favorably with the timidity of those who have not yet learned the difficulties of running with the hare and hunting with the hounds. Mr. Van Cleave is not alone in holding that a conflict is inevitable and that it may be a mark of good generalship to recognize it and to hasten it. That Mr. Van Cleave's pronouncement should follow so closely upon what the Ledger very properly calls "the pledge of fealty" made by Mr. Gompers to Mr. Bryan is "considered most unfortunate." It would be interesting to know by whom it is so considered. Certainly not by far-seeing politicians, who know that nothing but disadvantage comes from postponement and from conciliatory diplomacies that deceive no one and ameliorate nothing. The Ledger continues:

If Van Cleave and Gompers can be discredited in their own camps, at least politically, their power for future harm will be gone. The relations and the differences of capital and labor will be removed from the theatre of politics.

The idea that labor can be "removed from the theatre of politics" by any power whatsoever directed against two individuals should be patented.

The New York Times has made an effort to discover the extent to which Mr. Gompers will be obeyed by members of labor unions. Fifteen delegates of the Central Federated Union were interrogated, and although the results are of course in no way conclusive, they are at least interesting and indicative. Only one of the fifteen declared himself for Taft; five said they would vote for Bryan, one of them declaring himself to be a Republican but bound by his allegiance to Gompers; five announced that their support would be given to Debs and the Socialist ticket; two were for the Independence party, while two were not yet prepared to state what they would do.

This does not exactly look as though Gompers's influence were supreme, but that so many are prepared to support either Debs or Hearst is suggestive and disquieting. The number questioned is altogether too small to be used as a basis for argument, but it is at least one of the straws useful in political meteorology.

The Brooklyn Eagle publishes a remarkable article which is not inappropriately headed "Radicalism Triumphant." Its object is to show that there is no conservative presidential candidate now before the country and that conservatism as a principle in politics is now unrepresented in the national election. But let the Brooklyn Eagle speak for itself:

There are seven candidates for the presidency in the field; Debs, Socialist; Watson, Populist; Chafin, Prohibitionist; Preston, Social Labor; Hisgen, Independence Party; Bryan, Democrat; Taft, Republican.

Not one of them is a conservative. In fact, the conservatives in this country are much in the same position that Daniel Webster was when the Whig party took the stand which, in his judgment, foreshadowed the death of that party. Then he said there was nothing for him to do but to take to the woods.

There is no candidate representing the conservative view of economic, social, political, or administrative government for whom a conservative may vote with satisfaction. Let us analyze: Debs is a Socialist with anarchical adornments. Watson is a radical individualist decrying anarchy. Chafin advocates the destruction of personal liberty by law, and would make people good by enactment. Preston, languishing in jail under conviction of murder, presents the elevation of the proletariat to supreme power. Hisgen would seize all utilities for ownership by government. Bryan, with Socialistic trimmings, would destroy the last resort of safety, the power of the courts. Taft has planted himself unequivocally on the platform of the Roosevelt policies, denounced by conservatives as wholly radical, though he does temper corporation assassination with obedience to the legal power of the courts. All radicals.

There is no choice between conservatism and radicalism. As it is wholly a question of degrees in radicalism, the choice must be one of degrees. On the top rung of the radical ladder stands Debs. On the bottom rung stands Taft. The most extreme of these is Debs. The least of these is Taft. The privilege of the voter is to choose the degree he favors. To the conservatives it is a choice of evils.

These are conclusions from which there is no escape. Whether the Eagle or any conservative likes the situation or not, will not count. It is not the point. It is either one of these degrees or the woods of Daniel Webster.

The final conclusion is that before the voters are lined up in front of the ballot-boxes of the nation, the battle between radicalism and conservatism has been fought out, and radicalism has triumphed. No matter who wins, a radical wins. So for the next four years in the nation, radicalism, in the degree chosen, will dominate.

So that the coming election is "wholly a question of degrees in radicalism," and it would be hard to find fault with such a judgment. Then, too, political labels are largely a matter of diplomacy and convenience. Mr. Bryan would not like to be called a Socialist, but his dislike would be a matter of sentiment and expediency rather than of fact. Mr. Hisgen would deny being a Socialist not because he disapproves of Socialism, but because such a label would "hurt business." Mr. Bryan advocates the state ownership of railways, Mr. Hisgen favors the state ownership of all utilities, Mr. Debs and Mr. Preston argue for the state ownership of everything, although the views of Mr. Preston are not easily ascertainable, as that gentleman happens to be in prison on a conviction for murder. Once more, then, it is a question of degree and not of kind. Socialism does not lend itself to accurate definitions, but if public ownership of railways does not come under that definition, what does? It is very certain that Mr. Bryan's declaration in Madison Square on his return from his walks abroad was hailed with satisfaction by Socialists as a distinct step in their direction. Mr. Bryan's divergence from the broad Socialist path is therefore one of quantity and not of direction. The same may be said of Mr. Hisgen, whose Socialism is more robust. But why not call it Socialism?

There is no love lost between Mr. Watson and Mr. Hearst, if we may judge from the frank criticism of Mr. Hearst that has been published by Mr. Watson:

In my judgment a political party owned and controlled by one man, no matter how rich and good and great, can never amount to much in American politics. The so-called "Independence Party" is a copyrighted affair, financed and steered by Mr. Hearst. Its so-called leaders are his editors and employees. Almost without exception those who are prominent in the movement are upon the Hearst pay-roll.

In a country like ours, where the sense of individual freedom is so strong, the people will never consent to compromise their own liberty of action by becoming members of a personally conducted and privately owned political organization.

Mr. Watson is quite willing to descend into the domain of details. The Democratic party, says Mr. Watson, changes its creed every four years, but the Independence party starts afresh every six months. But on the subject of the injunction Mr. Watson speaks the words of truth and soberness:

The labor plank, in so far as it demands that no injunction should be issued until after trial upon the merits, that such trial should be had before a jury and that in no case of alleged contempt should any person be deprived of liberty without a trial by jury, is revolutionary. English jurisprudence has always recognized the inherent right of a court to protect itself and to maintain its dignity by punishing for contempt those who in its presence or within its jurisdiction defy its authority. To say that the courts should be deprived of this inherent and necessary power is preposterous.

To say that no injunction shall issue until after a trial upon the merits of the case is too ludicrous for serious consideration. Were that the law no man could protect himself from those who mean to do him irreparable injury. As a lawyer as well as a candidate, I take the position that wherever a prima facie case is made before the judge by allegations in the bill, supported by affidavits that an irreparable injury is about to be committed upon the petitioner, a restraining order should issue to maintain the status quo until both sides can be heard.

Who would have expected such political wisdom from a Populist?

President Roosevelt's denunciation of the circuit court for its reversal of Judge Landis in the matter of Standard Oil has excited a very widespread feeling of disapproval. Its expressions come from all parts of the country and from many shades of political opinion. The Rochester Post Express says that the President is "the only executive who has ventured upon interference with the courts," and that "his latest offense is a very flagrant one." The Florida Times Union draws a comparison between Jefferson and Roosevelt and says "we are not to forget that a corporation is not responsible for the crimes of its officers, nor that President Roosevelt is responsible for the change from imprisonment to a fine." The Philadelphia Ledger points out that "as the case now stands a certain proportion of the public will, unfortunately, distrust the courts." The Washington Post fears that some of our judges are dangerously close to the "Undesirable Citizens' Association." Harper's Weekly asks, "Would anybody but Roosevelt who had the power to order the trial have coupled with his order the declaration that the defendants were guilty and would have been punished had they been less strong?" The Providence Journal thinks that Mr. Roosevelt "is nearly two centuries too late for the rôle of benevolent despot." The Dubuque Daily News reminds the President of what he said in 1896—"Savages do not like an independent and upright judiciary. They want the judge to decide their way, and if he does not they want to behead him." The New York Commercial points out that "no monarch . . . has pretended to have the right to punish except after due trial under all forms of law." The St. Louis Republic compares the President's action with that of a Missouri editor who was recently punished for contempt of court, adding that "his offense was in no respect different from that of President Roosevelt in the extraordinary attack on the United States circuit court of appeals," while the Albany Argus becomes positively plaintive. The Argus asks:

If you were the editor of an administrative organ, owned by a Roosevelt Federal officeholder, and

If you had predicted that Mr. Bryan would break loose with some incendiary remarks concerning the Standard Oil case reversal by the circuit court of appeals, and "will undoubtedly make use of the decision of the higher court overruling Judge Landis, to arouse prejudice and passion, and from now on this decision will be treated from a political point of view all over the country, although the decision itself has no bearing whatsoever upon any phase of political life";

If before Mr. Bryan had said a word, there came from Oyster Bay (not Lincoln) a peculiarly long and loud and strenuous ear-splitting blast, and

If you had intimated that any such utterance calculated to play politics, and to bring a court decision into politics, would be a most unseemly and untoward happening;

We put it to you, we ask you in all candor, if this had happened to you, and if your Federal position necessitated you to look upon Mr. Roosevelt as almost a divinely inspired source of all wisdom, light and guidance—

Wouldn't it jar you?

Perhaps it would.

The Prohibition candidate for President has devised a novel scheme for raising a campaign fund; everybody who attends a Prohibition rally will be charged 25 cents for the privilege of listening to the speakers. This may prove a profitable plan in some parts of the country, but in New England it has been found extremely difficult to secure a large attendance at Prohibition rallies where no entrance fee was demanded. Perhaps Mr. Chafin argues that the public will better appreciate what it is required to pay for, but even so it is hard to believe that the cold-water barrel will benefit largely from this latest proposition.

About twice the height of the Washington monument and seventy-four feet higher than the Eiffel Tower will be the altitude of the ball on the flagpole of a proposed new insurance building in New York—the building itself to be 909 feet, or more than four times the height of Bunker Hill monument.

THE FESTIVAL OF "ST. GROUSE."

English Sportsmen Prepare to Do Honor to an Old-Established Festival.

By the time that these lines reach San Francisco, August 12 will be at hand, and when the sun rises on that morning here, the Festival of "St. Grouse" will be ushered in with much booming of guns, and before twilight fades and puts a period to the sport, many and many a thousand rounds of cartridges will have been expended.

To be precise, "The Twelfth" is one of the great time marks in the lives of the leisured classes of this country and their guests. Ever since the Christmas holidays came to a close in the old country houses, folks have been flocking to London for "the season," and the past season has been the gayest that London has ever seen. The houses of Parliament have been in constant session ever since February, and this necessitated the presence in town of the peeresses and the ladies of the families of the members of the House of Commons. The court, too, has been en residence the while at Buckingham Palace, and King Edward and his consort have revived much of the attractive ceremonial and state pageantry that was in vogue before the widowhood of the late Queen Victoria.

To those in London society the months from February to the end of July are arduous and trying; and it is a case of going, and keeping going, almost day and night, if one is to keep pace with one's engagements. Besides one's private entertainments, there are many public functions, such as "The Derby," Ascot, Henley, the Eton and Harrow cricket match at Lords, and a hundred and one other fashionable events, at which one must be seen if one wishes to be considered anybody.

Towards the end of July the whirl begins to slacken; hostesses have lunched and dined and given their garden parties almost en surfeit; and the fervid rays of the July sun begin to warn the legislators of the nation that it is time to cease from their labors for a season and seek relaxation.

Hence the popular "Feast of St. Grouse," to the coming of which all eyes are now turned.

Nature has provided on the upland moorlands of the north of England and Wales, but more especially on the highland moors of Scotland, the heather—a plant that seems to have been designed solely for the purpose of providing food and cover for the little brown bird, the grouse. And the laws of England, long years ago, elevated the grouse into the list of "game" birds, and decreed, under heavy penalties, that, under no circumstances, should gun be leveled at him until the sun rose on the morning of August 12 in each year.

Now, after the trials and bustle of the London season, it is essential that those who took part therein should seek, if not rest, at least a change from the smoke of the town to the pure and bracing air of the countryside. In the pre-railway days, in the days of the regency, when old King George III had sunk into a dotage and the prerogative of the crown was vested in the person of his son the prince regent, afterwards George IV, Brighton-by-the-Sea, Bath, the old inland "cure" station of the Romans, and Leamington Spa in Shakespeare's country, were the chief centres of this relaxation (not to forget Tunbridge Wells) by the pure accident of the fact that the Romans had made military roads to these places, and they were fairly accessible. Then when roads and railways began to spread all over the land, bringing the grouse moors within easy reach of London, grouse shooting became a fashionable sport, and, hey presto, the "Feast of St. Grouse" a firmly established festival in the realm of society and wealth.

It is a remarkable sight to be present at when the height of the exodus to the north is reached at one of the great London termini, say Euston, the terminus of the London and Northwestern Railway. The movement north begins to be heavy about the third week in July. The day trains, eke with the night trains, are crowded with prospective grouse shooters, their families, their servants, their gamekeepers, and often their dogs—pointers and setters. Tons upon tons of personal "luggage" are rushed to the station and have to be handled in right smart time by the perspiring and lust-begrimed porters; whilst from the vast number of gun cases en evidence—often three or four, or even more, the property of one individual—the uninitiated might be pardoned for fancying that the brave defenders of the country were on their way to repel an invader somewhere on the north or west coast.

But this is really only the beginning. Take the last few days. There be those, and always will be those, who leave all to the last moment; there are also others whom affairs of state or vast business interests have detained in town much against their wills. The crowd's beyond comprehension; the railway men, however, are equal to the occasion. The 10 a. m. train for Perth, or instance, right in the heart of the grouse country, is filled and sent on its way; then a second, a third, a fourth, and a fifth if required, is backed up to the platform, filled and sent off at intervals of a quarter of an hour, until all the vast assemblage has melted, as it were, into the summer atmosphere.

Next morning the daily papers will gravely state that "London is empty"; but, to the mere man in the street, here does not appear to be any appreciable diminution in the ordinary traffic. Go, however, to Mayfair, or visit Belgrave, where are the town seats of the high and mighty, and one will soon find that this is literally true of the West End of the town. Doors that erstwhile yawned a hearty welcome and promised hospitable treatment inside are now fast shut and barred; windows are closed in with heavy blinds, and an odd peep into interiors here and there reveals the fact that the furniture fittings are all swathed up in winding sheets of canvas to sleep the sleep of oblivion until society shall return to its own again next February, when the king and queen go forth in state to reopen the business of the country at the houses of Parliament. LONDON, July 30, 1908. PICCADILLY.

OLD FAVORITES.

An Old Miniature.

"You showed me, Roh, the other day,
A miniature so full of grace
That it hath stol'n my heart away—
I long again to see that face.

"Find it for me before I go;
The eyes had caught the heavenly hue;
The proud lips give you Cupid's how;
The brow was steadfast, strong, and true.

"A regal robe she seemed to wear,
In newest fashion of our day;
And on her neck, so nobly fair,
Splendid old-fashioned laces lay."

"I'll look, my boy. Was it this one?
(Her eye is blue as china-ware);
Or this? (Her face is like the sun.)
Stay! Here's the likeness, I dare swear."

"No; none of those, Rob; none of those.
That's Lizzie Courtenay, this is Jane;
I know her well—and little Rose;
Good creatures, though they're rather vain.

"'Twas none of these did steal my heart;
For them I never breathed a sigh;
Or, sleeping, wakened with a start
From thrilling dreams that they were nigh.

"Oh, seek once more the portrait rare;
In yonder cabinet it lay;
Then breathe my lady's name and where
Her knight may follow her today."

"Your fond impatience urges me
To seek the fair enchantress's face—
Yet here lies all my gallery;
Not one is absent from its place;

"Or only one an artist friend
Begged as a loan from me last night;
It lies apart, half-packed to send—
Glance at it ere we lose the light.

"What! That is she? O strange, weird fate!
My boy, your stricken heart lies low
Before the lovely Countess Kate,
Who died a hundred years ago!"—Anon.

"Portrait of a Lady, 17—"

Catalogue.

He has come, do you say? only waits to begin?
Quick, Betty, the patches, no minute's delay!
Now, a small one just here, at the side of the chin,
That may draw people's eye to the dimple at play.
Oh, Betty, this ruffe—'tis drooping awry!
And, Betty, my hair—is it piled up too high?
What think you? the rose, and a string of the pearls
Just carelessly twining about in the curls?—
And, Betty—you think I am looking my best?
You are sure you have done all your utmost endeavor?
That I lack nothing more to be modishly dressed?
As you see me today folk will see me forever.

Who knocks? what, my lord? (how the gloves get mislaid!)
Go say that I'll wait on him, girl, in a minute.
Did I well to make choice of the rosebud brocade?
(See this ruffe again—I protest you must pin it!)
For you know 'twas a rose-patterned sacque that I wore
With the necklace of pearls at the duchess's rout,
With the shoes that stood five inches high from the floor,
When I danced a gavotte, and my lord led me out?
And then, you remember, I wore it again
To that syllabub party at Strawberry Hill,
When he willed me away down a rose-trellised lane,
To the groto that stood by the side of a rill
With a nymph and an urn—I can see the place still.
And the rose—it was just such another as this!
That I stuck in my hair, and he snatched with a kiss.
He'd a peach-colored coat, and a sword-knot of gold,
And his hair was unpowdered, all curling and yellow—
And I thought—I was foolish and not very old—
That I never had met with a prettier fellow.

Do you think he has wit enough left to discover
That I'm looking today as I looked when we met?
He's a husband, alas! and no longer a lover,
But still—he is vastly content with me yet!
And, Betty, perchance when we both have grown old,
When his hair is no longer all yellow with gold,
He will look at the picture and sigh, and remember
How delightful was June till it turned to December—
Will remember, though dimple and blush could not last,
And the time of brocades and holero is past,
Though the shoes are danced through and the roses are dead,
That I was a beauty when first we were wed.

To think 'twill all vanish—alas! and alas!
I am ready, you say?—one more look in the glass,
And, quick, Betty, find me my big yellow fan,
And let me descend—I have lingered too long—
My lord will lose patience, I'm sadly afraid,
And fidget, and fume, and begin to upbraid,
And to chide me—'tis ever the way with a man!
And the painter will chafe, and the picture go wrong—
My gloves!—but no matter—there's one of them missing—
Throw open the door—Why, he's waiting, I vow.
My lord, at your service! Nay, fie on such kissing!
By and bye, if you will—'tis no time for it now!
—May Probyn.

Congressman Eugene W. Leake of Jersey City, the young Democratic representative of the Ninth New Jersey District, has repudiated the nomination of Mr. Bryan and declared for Taft. He said: "The developments of the last few months in the life of the Democratic party have changed that organization from an aggregation of men held together by a belief in certain fundamental principles of government to an organization composed of enthusiastic personal followers of William Jennings Bryan. Subsidiary to Bryanism is now the test of Democracy."

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Alone among all the royal heads of Europe, Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria makes no use of automobiles.

Mr. John Bigelow, the American Minister to France in 1861-1867, who is nearly ninety years old, is in Paris on his annual visit.

John W. Gates is about to carry out some ambitious plans at Port Arthur, Texas, on Sabine Lake, near the Gulf of Mexico, where he has projected golf links to cost $965,000.

Queen Alexandra is a great lover of music and a brilliant pianist. During the present season of grand opera at Covent Garden the queen has attended twenty performances, witnessing the presentation of "Die Meistersinger" twice.

"General" Jacob S. Coxey, who led his army of the unemployed to Washington fourteen years ago, appeared in Chicago to join the Independence League party. He is described as "a short, sunburned man, who squints through strong glasses."

Lord Desborough, the chairman of the committee which organized the Olympic games, is a representative sportsman, with enviable records as a runner, swimmer, and oarsman. One of his exploits was swimming the Niagara River above the falls. He has also been a mountain-climber in the Alps.

Professor Paul Radon, ethnologist of Columbia University, New York, who has been among the Indians on Winnebago Reservation, near Sioux City, Iowa, since April collecting Indian stories and recording Indian songs on a graphophone, has finished his work and returned to New York. He made 105 song records.

Ernesto Nathan, the syndic of Rome, recently had erected at his own expense a marble shaft in the Potter's Field of the Roman cemetery. The inscription states that the city, mindful of its own obligation to the industry of the lowly, remembers those whose toil being over have fallen into nameless graves.

The University of Strasbourg announces that Prince August-Wilhelm, the fourth son of Emperor William, has passed his examination for the degree of doctor in the science of government with the indorsement "very good" on his papers, and that the title of doctor has been conferred on him. This is the first time that a Hohenzollern has taken the degree of doctor.

Mrs. Wyllia Hulett of Beardstown, Illinois, has obtained a license for piloting steamers on the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers. The license was issued by the United States inspector after Mrs. Hulett had taken an examination. Her husband, George Hulett, who is a steamboat engineer, made application for a pilot's license, but he failed to pass on account of color blindness.

Miss Dorothea Klumpke, who was the first woman to gain the degree of doctor of mathematics in France, has lately utilized the balloon in her astronomical work. She has a special building of her own in the great observatory garden of Paris. One of her duties is to photograph the stars of the heavens known as the Paris belt, and it is for this purpose that she takes aerial flights.

Miss Sarah C. Murray of Newton, Massachusetts, carried off high honors this year at Munich. She secured the Ph. D. degree and her name was placed on the honor roll of the university. Miss Murray is a Radcliffe college graduate. For the last four years she has been studying at Munich, making a specialty of classical philology and archaeology. She has just passed her twenty-third birthday, and intends to become a teacher.

The veteran composer, Carl Reinecke, who celebrated the eighty-fourth anniversary of his birth recently, is specially well known by his modest and charming music for young people. A musician of fine training and much natural gift, he has spent his life among great men without seeking to emulate them. He appeared as a pianist sixty-five years ago, and from 1860 to 1895 he was conductor of the Gewandhaus concerts in Leipzig. He was a friend of Mendelssohn and of Schumann.

Mr. Mort Payne, veteran of the Shinnecock golf course, is in charge of the work on the National Golf Links of America, at Shinnecock Hills, Long Island. Fifty of America's millionaire golf cranks have contributed $1000 each for the construction of this standard course, which will have all the important characteristics of the famous golf links of Great Britain. The National Golf Links is practically a straightaway course, about 1000 yards wide, the return course paralleling the first eight links back to the 16 tee of the Shinnecock Hills course.

Miss Philippa Garrett Fawcett eighteen years ago achieved the honor of senior wrangler at Cambridge University; in fact, she surpassed the highest honor man—and yet she could receive no recognition of her achievement because she was a woman. She is the only child of the blind postmaster-general of Great Britain, Henry Fawcett, and his wife, Millicent Garrett Fawcett, one of the most notable women in England. Since that time no woman has approached her distinction until this year Miss Marjorie Long is fourth wrangler in the mathematical tripos.

FROM STONE-CUTTER TO SENATOR.

By Jerome A. Hart.

XXVI.

The tragic end of the squatter riots put an end to the squatter movement in Sacrosanto. The leaders lay in their noisome quarters aboard the prison brig, awaiting the tardy action of the law; the rank and file fled from the lands they had illegally seized. The legislators who had temporized with the squatters when they were strong, condemned them strenuously now that they were weak. And soon the squatter riots were half forgotten, and the citizens of the little city were in a fever over the senatorial fight.

So with the legislators. As the partisans of both Burke and Wyley belonged to the Law-and-Order faction in the Bay City, both claimed the credit of having given "moral support" to the Law-and-Order element in Sacrosanto. But both factions realized that there were more important matters on foot than the death of a few men in a dispute over land. Hence the legislators speedily gave their undivided attention to the interests of live men rather than the wrongs of dead ones.

It was the high privilege of the "Legislature of a Thousand Drinks" to elect two senators—one for four years to succeed Senator Milton, and one for six years to succeed Senator Wyley.

The name of Senator Wyley naturally led the list of candidates. He already occupied a seat in the Senate. He had been the first man to be elected from the new State to a seat in the historic chamber. The Federal patronage made him apparently invincible. Naturally the President harkened to the voice of Wyley, for although he was a new senator from a new State he was a scion of an old family from an old State—Virginia, Mother of Presidents. Thus the Virginian became practically the dictator of the Democratic party. And as his was the dominant party of the State, he became politically the dictator of the State.

During the first half of his senatorial term Wyley found himself supreme—he was without opposition or rivalry. But as the end of his term drew near, he saw that his position was menaced by the machinations of Burke, the leader of the Northern Democrats. Wyley had gradually come to believe that Burke was an antagonist to be feared. His Tammany experience as a ward leader in New York had given Burke a profound knowledge of "practical politics." Furthermore, he was a born leader of men.

So far, Burke had made his campaign purely one of patronage. He relied largely on the general greed for Federal offices. To many of his devoted followers he had solemnly promised Federal positions. In his promises they reposed implicit faith. But he had gone too far, for in more than one case he had promised the same office to more than one man.

But his promises of place became so numerous that Burke at last grew alarmed. What would he do if Wyley were elected and became his colleague? Wyley would naturally claim much of the Federal patronage, yet Burke was sure that he himself would need it all.

Reflecting deeply on these matters, he determined to ask the advice of Fox. That long-headed jurist he had always found a wise counselor. In his imperious way he sent for Fox, who hastened to seek the dictator at his hotel.

"Judge," began Burke abruptly, "I have been thinking over this Federal patronage business. I have got old Wyley badly scared already. He sees that I am mighty close to controlling the legislature. He knows that I forced a two-year vacancy in the Senate at the last session. Even if I could do no more, he knows I could do that again. And by this time he feels in his bones that I can force my election for the long term first, next defeat him for the short term, and then elect any man I choose. Is that not true?"

"I think, senator, that all you say is within the bounds of probability."

"Admitting, then, that I've got Wyley licked, why shouldn't I have him for a colleague?"

Fox stared at him.

"Oh, I'm not going crazy," Burke went on irritably, "I know what I'm talking about. If I throw my strength for Milton or for Keller, I shall have to help settle their old political debts. Now suppose I make a bargain with Wyley; suppose I agree to withdraw my opposition to his election; suppose he agrees to hand out no Federal patronage during his term."

"You had better have the agreement in writing," said Fox, meaningly.

"You're right—we'll put it in writing. It's always better with those F. F. V.'s," sneered Burke. "But wouldn't such a deal with Wyley be better than endless wrangling with a greedy colleague who wanted all the Federal pap?"

Fox reflected a moment. "It would seem so," he said at last. "But do you think Wyley will accept?"

"I think he will. He hasn't the ghost of a chance otherwise. He would rather be senator without any patronage than not be senator at all."

"True," said Fox, musingly, "very true. But how about your bargain with Keller?"

"Oh, I'll have to rely on you to fix that. You will have to stand Keller off."

"You have had an agreement with Keller that each should get all the votes he could from the other candidates, but should leave each other's delegates alone. Still, you also agreed to make no alliance with any other candidate. If you strike hands now with Wyley, how will you fix that up with the Keller crowd?"

"Easiest thing in the world; you go ahead and promise Keller that if his men support me in the first election, my men will support him in the second."

"And then throw him over for Wyley when the second election comes," remarked Fox calmly. "I see."

"That's it," growled Burke. "After the first ballot is polled Keller will never know what hit him."

"Senator, if I arrange this deal now with the Keller men, I shall have to tell them after the election that you threw me over too. There is absolutely no other way out of it. It would seem insane for me either to make or to go back on such an arrangement without your authority, for I would have nothing to gain by it. Even if I had, the Keller crowd would know that I could not control your delegates."

"That's all right. I don't want to put the responsibility on any other man. It will mean Keller knives out for me after the election, but I don't care if I get to the Senate. Besides, this term is a long one—six years. Some of us will be dead before six years have passed."

"Yes, senator, many a man among us will be laid away long before that. Hum—let me see—there is also some sort of an—er—understanding between you and Milton, is there not?"

"Merely a tentative one. We'll kill off Milton by publishing that story about his placing a government revenue cutter at the disposal of the former Vigilante Committee when he was collector of the port."

"Very good—that will fix him," agreed Fox with an approving smile.

"When that story gets out, Milton will have no following, and therefore have no votes to swap. Now, what I want you to do, Fox, is to fix up these matters. Both the Wyley and Keller deals require a master hand, and you are the man for them. I think you had better begin by seeing old Wyley. Don't let your visit get out."

"Trust me for that. I'll see him as soon as I can do so without being observed, and shall return here and report the result immediately."

After Fox had gone, Burke sat wrapped in meditation over the projects they had just discussed.

Concerning his understanding with Keller, Burke reflected long. He had a hard and fast compact with Keller which had lasted ever since the fight began. By this each agreed not to attempt to seduce delegates from the other's camp. It was neither an offensive nor a defensive alliance, but rather a modus vivendi. It had been further agreed between Burke and Keller that neither should make an alliance with any other candidate.

Only two days before, however, Burke had conferred personally with Keller, and proposed to him that their alliance should be made an offensive one. Burke suggested that they secretly join forces, and then the two of them could "kill off Wyley." The two allies then entered into this covenant: each was to prey upon the Wyley forces; Keller was to preserve his apparent independence during the first election, but was to herd Wyley men into the Burke camp, in consideration of offices to be given them; and when the second election came on Burke would throw votes to Keller, and thus insure his election. Again clasping hands firmly, the two new allies parted, and made haste to carry out their pledges—Burke by sending Fox to Wyley with a proposed alliance which would "do up Keller," and Keller by striking hands with Milton to "do up Burke."

His alliance with Keller, his message to Wyley—these things did not so completely absorb Burke as to cause him to forget Milton. He sent for his trusty follower, Billy Williams, and bade him hasten forth and wreck the Milton boom by setting afloat the story already discussed between him and Fox. This was that during the Vigilante troubles a year or so before, Milton, then collector of the port, had loaned the Vigilantes a revenue cutter on which to hide certain prisoners whom they were waiting to deport on steamers sailing for the south.

When these little matters were attended to Burke sat back in his chair with the comfortable thought that matters were now running smoothly for him in these two opposing political camps. There remained only to hear from Wyley. By this time it was long past midnight, yet Fox had not returned. But even while he was wondering at the delay, there was a rap at his door and Fox entered.

"I have him out here in a bedroom," said Fox briefly.

"Who?" inquired Burke.

"The senator. I brought him in through the alley and by the back door of the hotel. Nobody has seen him. Are you ready for your interview?"

"Quite ready. If the interview is only to be nominally private—that is, between Wyley and myself alone—you can get in this back room here, Fox, by going around the corner of the hall after you have said good-night."

For a moment Fox seemed disconcerted; then, with a somewhat forced laugh, he replied:

"Oh, I think perhaps you two gentlemen had better be allowed to settle the affair really—that is, entirely—in private. So I will bid you good-night, senator, and will see you early in the morning."

As he walked down the passage-way toward the stairs, Fox said to himself: "What incredible duplicity! I wonder whether the fellow will keep faith with me about that Federal judgeship? I am beginning to doubt it. Fortunately, I have the influence of the two congressmen promised, and I may secure it without him."

Burke, meanwhile, was wondering whether Fox really intended to conceal himself in the back room or not, leaving him as well as Wyley in ignorance that they had an eavesdropper. "He is quite capable of it, the two-faced Pharisee!" he muttered.

While he was thus musing over his departed friend, a knock sounded, and as the door opened there appeared the imposing presence of Burke's rival, the Hon. William Wyley, senator of the United States. The talk which followed was not over-cordial, but it was at least polite. There was a certain brutality about Burke's way of stating things that jarred on the stately courtesy of the Virginian, but he was obliged to accept the position. At last, as a result of their deliberations, it was agreed by Burke that at a stipulated time he would throw votes enough to Wyley to insure the Virginian's election for the short term; correspondingly it was agreed by Wyley that he would when elected refrain absolutely from any attempt to control the Federal patronage, but would leave it all to Burke.

When these verbal arrangements had been duly concluded, Burke requested Wyley to put his promise into written form. This the Virginian was extremely loath to do. But Burke was firm—he insisted that the promise be reduced to writing, or that he would break off all negotiations. Reluctantly, therefore, Wyley yielded, and seating himself at the little table, wrote and signed this document:

"HON. DANIEL BURKE:

"Dear Sir—I am likely to be the victim of the unparalleled treachery of those who have been placed in power by me. The Federal patronage is in the hands of those who should be my supporters, yet it is being used for my destruction. My distribution of this patronage has been the source of numberless slanders upon me. If I am elected, I will not while in the Senate recommend a single individual for office in this State; you shall have the exclusive control of this patronage, so far as I am concerned; and in its distribution I only ask that it may be used with magnanimity, and not for the advantage of those who have been our mutual enemies. As I have been betrayed by those who should have been my friends, I am in a measure powerless myself, and depend upon your magnanimity.

Very respectfully yours,

"WILLIAM WYLEY."

This document was written by the senator's own hand. Perhaps he may have had some dim presentiment that it was destined to be a fateful document, for he copied it, and left the signed draft on Burke's table. It was far advanced in the night when he parted from his quondam rival and present ally, and he left the hotel by the back alley through which he had come.

The next morning, when Senator Wyley counseled with Judge Tower concerning his action, and showed him the letter which he had felt himself forced to sign, Tower strongly disapproved.

"I fear, senator," he said, "that your action in signing this document will mean trouble."

"In what way do you think it can cause me trouble?"

"In this way—by its eventual disclosure, it will be made apparent to your supporters that you have conducted your campaign purely with a desire to bring about your own success. However devoted your legislative friends may seem, you and I know that the hope of Federal office is what actuates most of them. I already hold a high State office, and do not desire a Federal position. But with others it is not so. The disclosure of this document will cause such anger that it will result in accusations of bad faith against you. And its disclosure is inevitable."

"My dear judge," replied Wyley, smiling, "in this world what we promise to do and what we are able to do are very different things. Let me point out to you the way in which matters will probably shape themselves. In this contest Burke is relying on senatorial patronage to reward his followers. He has extorted from me under duress, so to speak, a promise in writing not to attempt to control any Federal patronage. I have reluctantly yielded. But what will be the result when Burke goes to Washington?"

Tower gazed meditatively at Wyley. "You mean, I suppose," he said, "that the President may not receive Burke with open arms?"

"Exactly. The President is a stately gentleman of the old school. Burke is an ignorant, Northern boor and he will irritate the President in every possible way. The President's association with Southern gentlemen has confirmed him in the practice of those amenities and courtesies which should prevail in social and political intercourse. Furthermore, he is in favor of our plan of extending slavery to the Territories. Burke is hotly opposing this indispensable economic institution of the South and Southwest, and is shouting loudly with those black abolitionists of the North for free soil in all the Territories."

"What you say is quite true, senator. But how will that release you from your obligation to Burke?"

"I am not the man who gives out the patronage appointments the Federal officials—it is the President. I any event, I could merely advise him. If I refrain from asking for offices, shall I not thus keep the letter and spirit of my promise?"

"Unquestionably."

"But if the President were to urge me—let us even say, order me—to give him my advice and counsel concerning candidates for Federal offices on this Coast could I, either as senator or citizen, refuse?"

"It would be unpatriotic for you to do so," assented Tower, with something like a twinkle in his usual sombre eyes. "But if the President gives Burke the go-by, it will ruin him politically. He is mortgaged to his eyes with promises of Federal patronage."

"All the more reason why the President should ignore him," replied Wyley, contemptuously. "If Burke were consulted, he would embroil the President in all sorts of complications. He has promised the office of port collector to three separate and distinct candidates. I have the positive assurance that this is true. I am also told on good authority that Burke intends to submit all three of these names to the President, and then request him to appoint one of the three. He has solemnly promised each of the three men that he will urge his appointment. He hopes to evade his pledged word by this flimsy expedient. But I know the President well, and my experience tells me that he will demand that Burke recommend but one man and that he recommend his candidate in writing."

"In writing, eh? That will prove rather embarrassing for a senator with three promises for the post."

"It will prove more than embarrassing; it will prove fatal to his hopes of being the party dictator. He will be forced to refuse the President's very reasonable request, for fear of exposing his broken promises. You know he is always bragging about his 'loyalty to his followers' and the 'sacredness of his pledged word.' When the President insists on his thus stultifying himself in writing, Burke's violent temper will break out, and there will be an open rupture. What will be the result?"

"There can be but one," said Tower laconically. "But one—you are right. The result will be that the President will fill all the Federal offices in this State on the recommendation of a single person; and that is—myself."

As they clasped hands and parted, Tower turned away imbued with a keen admiration for his sagacious and long-headed leader. But as the recollection of the pregnant letter to Burke rose up in his mind, he shook his head uneasily. "I don't like it," he mused, "I don't like it at all. If Fox is balked of his Federal judgeship, and Burke fails of his Federal patronage, they will hatch some devil's plot with that letter yet."

Fox and Burke were busy enough with plots, although not yet with Wyley's letter. Their various new alliances, false and true, made necessary a rearrangement of their voting forces. Fox had requested his nephew Alden to vote for Keller and not for himself, telling him that in certain contingencies he would probably ask Alden to change his vote from Keller to Fox. In explanation of this, he assured Alden that it was part of the prearranged plan to maintain the Burke-Keller alliance.

Now, however, he came to Alden with the request that instead of changing from Keller to Fox he should change from Keller to Wyley.

"But I do not want to vote for Wyley," demurred Arthur. "I have expressed myself freely against him. He is a Southern man; I am a Northern man. He is in favor of slavery; I am opposed to slavery. He is for slave soil; I am for free soil. In every way I should stultify myself were I to vote for him. I can not consent to do so."

"My dear Arthur," said Fox blandly, "if you wish to make your way in the world and in your profession you must study your interests. Circumstances have now made it absolutely indispensable for you to vote for Wyley. I can not tell you the exact programme, as I am bound in honor not to do so."

But Alden firmly declined. "I will willingly consent to change from Keller to you," he replied, "leaving you to explain to Keller why I changed. I do not know him, and as he did not ask me to vote for him and as you did, the explanation will naturally come from you. But I must decline to vote for Wyley."

Fox pleaded long and earnestly, but Alden remained adamant and refused to consent.

Somewhat cast down by his failure with his nephew, Fox went to Don Pablo Bernal; he and his friend, Don Teofilo Guerrero, were two of the little band of native legislators who represented the original owners of the oil. Both of them prided themselves greatly on being descended from Castilians, and of pure blood rather than of Mexican lineage alloyed with Indian—Castillos viejas, as they would have expressed it. Both of these old gentlemen had a high sense of Castilian honor, both were warm friends and admirers of Judge Fox, and both had reluctantly consented at his request to vote for Keller, although they greatly preferred to vote for Fox.

As in the case of his nephew, Fox had assured them that at a certain point in the proceedings he might ask them to change their votes—they had of course supposed the change would be to Fox.

"It is now that I come to you, señores," he said, "to lay at your hands the favor that you promised to accord me—that of changing your votes."

"Par cierta! It is a pleasure to be permitted to oblige our good friend Señor Fox," remarked Don Pablo.

"Pues que sí! Yes!" echoed Don Teofilo. "Is it then that we are to vote hereafter for you, our honored friend, instead of for the Congressman Keller?"

"No, señores. I have to ask you now that you will list your votes at the next ballot for Senator Wyley." The two old Castilians looked at each other doubtfully.

"Wyley? No—nunca!" said Don Pablo.

"No! Wyley? Nunca jamas!" chorused Don Teofilo. Noticing that Fox's countenance fell, Don Pablo added:

"Wyley is not a man of honor. He was one of the inspirators in the appointment of the infamous Land Commission that is trying to steal our lands. Sirviré usted con mis pasibles. But Wyley? No. Wyley is a rascal. For Wyley we will not vote. Nunca! Never!"

"Never—no!" assented Don Teofilo.

Fox was somewhat discomfited by his failure in his own family and with his friends, the two Castilians. However he succeeded in finding more tractable material and making the changes necessary for Burke's revised programme. Burke had the votes of the Fox followers, and of several doubtful Keller and Milton men to be obtained in various ways; he had also a small band of trusted adherents discreetly coached and loaned to him by Wyley. With these he would suddenly break the deadlock by electing himself to the long term. Then, when the Keller men were thrown into confusion by this crushing blow, he would judiciously rearrange his joint forces, and elect Wyley to the short term.

This change in the plans of Burke and Fox was of course known only to them, and partially to Wyley. Still, there was evident a certain change in the workings of the legislative machinery, and all sorts of rumors began to circulate. Loyal adherents of the various candidates began to find their loyalty put to the test.

Colonel Coney of Oro Fino, for example, a Burke man, was suspected by his associates of coquetting with the Keller camp. On the Sunday after the inception of Burke's scheme, Colonel Coney was invited to drive down the river by Charlie Costa. Coney was much flattered, for Costa not only ran a square fero bank "down to the Bay," but he drove the finest horses in the State. Costa had come to Sacrosanto as the devoted friend of Burke, and was engaged in looking out for the loyalty of the Burke legislators. The unsuspecting Coney accepted the invitation, and Costa took him out behind his spanking team along the planked road known as the Riverside Drive. According to the subsequent narrative of the confused Colonel Coney, it seemed that Costa suddenly developed an extraordinary fit of drunkenness. He urged his horses into a wild run, yelling to Coney at the top of his voice "Jump! Jump!" This the dazed statesman did. Fortunately he described a parabola, landing on the levee in a sand-bank and not on the hard boards of the planked way.

According to Colonel Coney, Costa disappeared in the distance, miraculously recovering control of his horses, as he afterwards related. But Colonel Coney was obliged to foot his way back to Sacrosanto, where he faithfully reported the occurrence at the Burke headquarters. This frankness saved him from further doubts about his virtue, but it was decided that he was a weak sister and needed guardianship. He was therefore taken from his small hall bedroom, placed in the "bridal chamber" of the Orleans Hotel, and regaled with fine wines and cigars, while alert guards stood at his door to keep away the Keller prowlers.

Although Costa was known to be a devoted Burke adherent, this occurrence caused deep resentment among many of the Burke men. They did not attempt to palliate Coney's toying with the temptations of the Keller camp, but they considered Costa's attempted punishment too severe. Attempting to lay a man by the heels in bed for weeks, merely for thinking of selling his vote—this to them seemed monstrous. In fact, so strong grew the feeling that Burke was forced to take cognizance of it. He hinted privately to Costa that his absence would be desirable, and therefore that too-zealous henchman took himself and his horses "down to the Bay" again.

With trivial incidents like these, with others where weapons were drawn and bloodshed barely averted, with bitter caucuses prolonged often until dawn, the long fight drew to an end. At last Burke had his plans perfected, his genuine alliances cemented, his treacherous ones ready to cast off. He had expended nearly two hundred thousand dollars, and was in debt to many men, but he did not care for money. The ambition of his life was about to be accomplished.

When the last Burke caucus was held, the word was given that on the morrow the thirty-ninth ballot would mean victory. And so it was. The first move was the introduction of a resolution postponing the short-term election until after the long-term vacancy was filled. To the amazement of the Keller men it was carried. They whispered together as the roll-call showed the changing votes. Next the assembly proceeded to the election of a senator for the long term. The Keller forces found that there were traitors among them. Further, they saw evidences of a plot between Burke and Wyley, for enough Wyley men voted for the Northern Democrat to insure him exactly two votes more than a majority. Scarcely had the voice of the clerk recorded the vote which made Burke's election certain than a shout of applause went up from his adherents on the floor and in the galleries.

But there was no time to be lost in adjournments and recesses, with openings for possible plots and counterplots. That the hand of a master controlled the legislature was evident to all. That body obediently began to prepare for the second election. Rage and despair were painted on the faces of the Keller and Milton men; they saw that the legislature was "fixed"; that a caucus programme was being carried out with the smoothness and precision of well-oiled machinery.

As the first ballot began Wyley showed surprising strength; when three Fox men went to him in a body, some prudent legislators began changing their votes; and finally when a solid block of Burke men from the Bay City cast their entire vote for him, the suspense was over. Wyley was elected senator for the four-year term.

In a committee room in the capitol building sat

Burke, conferring with Fox, and waiting for the reports brought to him every few minutes from the scene of the senatorial battle. When the news finally came that he had not only been elected, but had carried everything before him, and had named as his colleague the man who was in his power politically, Burke's dark face glowed with pride. At last he had reached the summit of his ambition. For two years he had kept vacant a seat in the Senate of the United States; he had defeated one rival, and forced the other to accept the short term; he had compelled his new colleague to bend to his will, or to be defeated; he had elected himself senator, with undisputed control over the Federal patronage; and he was now beyond question absolute dictator of his own State. Yet to this State he had come, but a few years before, poor, unknown, a stone-cutter's son. No wonder his face showed his pride. No wonder this hour of victory was sweet to him, as his friends and followers crowded around him eager to take the great man by the hand.

"Extra! Extra!"

The sound of boyish voices calling in the street below came through the windows.

"Fox, do you know what the newsboys are calling?" inquired Burke.

"It must be an extra with the news of your election," replied Fox.

"Hardly time for them to get it on the press yet," commented Burke.

Here Colonel Coney intervened. "No, senator, it's news from the Bay," he explained. "I just bought one, but haven't had time to read it yet." And he laid the sheet down on the desk before them.

Fox leaned over, and spread the paper out, so that all might read its staring head-lines. And this is what they read:

"Extra! Fitzwilliams, editor Evening Tribune, killed by Michael Clancy. The editor accused Clancy of stuffing ballot-boxes to elect delegates pledged to Daniel Burke for senator. Clancy shot him down. The Vigilance Committee is organizing. Clancy in great danger. The Vigilantes have summoned Senator Burke to appear before them!"

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Copyright 1908 by Jerome A. Hart.

No other American had more intimate relations with the great men of music in his day than William Mason. His death, in his eightieth year, severs one of the few strands that have connected this day with one of the golden eras in music. Dr. Mason had made the acquaintance of Schumann, Liszt, Brahms, Wagner, Rubinstein, Raff, Joachim, and a large number of other musicians of the middle of the last century. His life covered also a period of great expansion in musical appreciation in America and contributed largely to it. His father, Dr. Lowell Mason, whose name is known today chiefly because of the enduring hymn tunes he composed, was one of the musical pioneers of the country. When twenty years old young Mason went abroad. Of the five years during which he studied, mainly in Germany, the last he spent as a member of the famous circle which surrounded Liszt at Weimar. Since then, for over fifty years, he has been one of the influential musical forces in America. His reputation as a pianist is exceeded by his reputation as a teacher. He has been more than a teacher of the piano; he has been an apostle of the musical art. He was virtually, if not literally, the first to give piano recitals (unembellished with vocal "attractions") in the United States. With Theodore Thomas, as the first violin of a string quartet, he helped to introduce Brahms to American audiences as early as 1855. He did perhaps more than any one else to make Schumann known here.

Major Hodder is a very inquisitive Englishman, who has been wondering why the Barbados, alone of the Antilles, are free from malaria. He thinks it must be because the Barbados, alone of the Antilles, are free from gnats. But why no gnats? Because of the wild and beneficent profusion of fish called "millions." The millions eat the gnats while they're still larvae. Acting on Major Hodder's theory, the Jamaicans, the people of Colon, and the colonists of British Guiana have imported millions, and lo! the gnats vanish. In Africa, where rage the most deadly swamp fevers, millions are employed with immense success. The same means has been adopted by the Italian government to rid the Roman Campagna of its insect foes.

The list of waifs who have become famous is a long one. It includes Sir Henry Stanley, Queen Catherine the Good, Alexander Hamilton, Rose Bonheur, Edgar Allan Poe, Rachel, Leonardo da Vinci, and dates back as far as Moses. All these were homeless children—children who if left to their fate would undoubtedly have drifted into evil ways. Instead they have lived to add glory to their names and have contributed to the knowledge of the world at large through the fruits of their genius.

An Italian scientist proposes to supply a safety valve for Vesuvius by boring a tunnel in the base of the mountain and letting the lava escape into the sea. His idea is to bore the tunnel while the crater is in a state of coma, and he believes that when the volcano becomes active such a channel would be sufficient to carry away the lava. His whole proposal, however, is not to let the lava escape altogether, but to run it into molds and make it into blocks for use in the streets and quays of Naples.

THE NORTHWEST PASSAGE.

Captain Amundsen Tells the Story of a Wonderful and Adventurous Voyage.

The news that Captain Roald Amundsen had reached the goal of a century's effort, that he had located the magnetic North Pole and navigated the Northwest Passage, was received without the full sensation that it would have created a few years ago. It may be that commercialism has hunted the edge of romance. It may be that we are a little satiated with daring achievement and adventure. It may be that a thoughtless cui bono has dulled our interest in Arctic exploration. In scientific circles there was no abatement of curiosity and enthusiasm. The intelligence of the world was everywhere thrilled just as it would have been a generation ago, but it is certain that the triumph of Captain Amundsen failed to lay hold of the imagination of the populace as it would once have done and as it ought to have done now. Perhaps the time perspective is needed, and certainly Captain Amundsen's fame will not lessen with the flying years.

The two fine volumes now before us show us clearly what has been accomplished and the colossal difficulties that were overcome. To say that this intrepid navigator writes modestly is hardly necessary. Such courage and resolution as his are always accompanied with diffidence and self-effacement. Of his companions, only six in number, Captain Amundsen can not say too much. Of himself he can not say too little. It is they who are ever in the foreground and he who is ever in the background. If we want to realize his full contribution of leadership and inspiration we must read between the lines, and over this intangible record Captain Amundsen has, fortunately, no control.

The story of the voyage is clearly and concisely told and with an eye to the popular rather than to the scientific interest. The journey began in 1903 and it ended in 1907, a trip full long and arduous for such a little craft as the Gjoa, of only forty-seven tons register and intended by her builders for the prosaic herring trade. A thirteen-horse-power motor was fitted, and in the spring of 1903 the little vessel took on her stores in Christiania, not far from the former herth of the Fram, and by May she was ready for departure.

Naturally enough a very large part of these volumes consists in descriptions of the Eskimo, who seem to have made a profound impression upon the mind of the author. He contributes indeed so much that is new about these strange people as to constitute a valuable feature of his work. His first meeting with the Eskimo is amusingly told. The advancing party were at first mistaken for reindeer. Hansen was asked if he had no mind to shoot reindeer that day, but he replied, "Ah, yes, but not that kind of reindeer over there—they walk on two legs":

All the information we had gathered concerning these Arctic barbarians rushed back into our memories. We knew from old books of travel in these regions that the North American Eskimo were not always amicably disposed. But we had learned from Ross and Klutschak that the Eskimo word "Teima" was the best greeting with which to approach them. It meant something like a right hearty "good-day," and we had rehearsed this word "Teima" in the most varied styles of pronunciation. However, we did not dream of being so foolish as to put our whole trust in one feeble word. The only right course was to consider the newcomers in the light of enemies, and our plan of campaign was laid. I was going with two men to meet the enemy; Hansen and Lund volunteered. The rifles were carefully examined and loaded to the utmost capacity of the magazine. Down on the ice I drew up my troops and inspected them, and even the most critical general could not have found fault with their appearance and hearing. I myself threw out my chest as well as I could, drew myself up, made a regulation right-about turn, and gave the command "Forward—march!" With my brave men close behind me I advanced, casting a sidelong glance up to the deck where the lieutenant and the cook stood side by side. It seemed to me that their expression, at the sight of our little host, was not exactly one of admiration, not even of seriousness. Well, I thought, it is easy enough to be gay when standing well sheltered on board, while we were going forth to meet the uncertain, possibly death, here on the open field.

The Eskimo were now at a distance of 500 yards and were coming down the hillside towards our vessel. I advanced in my best martial style, and behind me I heard the tramp of my men in well-timed cadence. When within about 200 yards distance the Eskimo halted. Several strategic possibilities presented themselves to my mind, offensive, defensive, etc., but I thought it safest to command a halt. My men bore themselves splendidly, in faultless alignment, with their feet set at an angle of 45 degrees, and with a mien betokening courage and confidence in their leader. I thereupon reconnoitred the opposing host. They appeared to be talking excitedly, pointing with their hands, laughing and gesticulating, without any noticeable indication of hostility. But suddenly they deployed in skirmishing order and advanced. Well, I thought, rather death with honor than saving our lives by craven flight. "Forward—march!" And on we marched, expecting every moment to see the enemy take their bows from their backs and level an arrow at us. Pat no! Evidently they are of a different mind. Is this a ruse?

Suddenly, there flashed through my mind, leavened with the excitement of warfare, the word "Teima!" and "Teima!" I shout with all the power of my lusty lungs. The Eskimo stop short. But now our excitement can no longer be restrained, we must bring matters to a crisis, and we must forward ready for action. Then I hear the call: "Manik-tu-mi! Manik-tu-mi!" And this has quite a familiar sound—I well remember it from McClintock—it is the Eskimo's friendliest greeting. In a moment we fling away our rifles and basten towards our friends, and with the universal shout of "Manik-tu-mi! Manik-tu-mi!" we embrace and pat each other, and it would be hard to say on which side the joy is greater.

They were jovial fellows, these Eskimo, helpful, generous, and unselfish. But for them the difficulties of Arctic travel would be intensified tenfold.

The dogs, too, constituted an incessant problem.

Before Christmas seven of the best animals were dead and Amundsen came to the conclusion that a lack of fatty matter in their food was the cause of the mortality. Here is a curious incident, almost unprecedented, it may be imagined, in dog history:

Ah! those dogs! They have splendid appetites, as I know to my sorrow. They are always on the lookout for some extra, wherewith to supplement their rations. The other day they helped themselves to an extra meal in a fashion as unexpected as it was unpleasant. Silla, who was in a highly interesting condition, had been shut up in the passage outside the Magnet to await her confinement. One fine morning, however, she managed to steal out, and proceeded straightway towards the vessel. Midway she was met by all her attendant cavaliers, wildly excited at seeing the lady again. They surrounded her and escorted her on her way. But it so happened that poor Silla was suddenly seized with labour, and her progeny had to content themselves with a snow-drift for a cradle. At a signal, given, of course, by Lurven, all the other dogs rushed at the pups, each snatching up one and consuming it on the spot. When Silla became aware that her pups had vanished, she raised herself and walked on. Again she was seized, and gave birth to her last puppy. Then, lest the other dogs should appropriate this one also, she hastily consumed it herself. This almost incredible scene is vouched for by eye-witnesses.

But to return to the Eskimo. We have an interesting account of the building of the snow huts. Amundsen was to be the guest in the hut under construction and describes the moving in of the Eskimo belongings, the water bucket, cooking pot, hlubber lamp, provisions, etc., and lastly the women's personal belongings, "which I dare not specify more fully." Then comes the man, Atikleura:

When Atikleura has removed his wet foot-gear, he puts on a pair of dry "kamiks" and a pair of low seal-skin shoes—"hamileitkun"—corresponding to our slippers. In winter these are used inside the hut only, but during the transition period between winter and spring they are worn outside. As far as the care of the outer man is concerned, Atikleura is now ready, and is therefore at liberty to think of the needs of the inner man. And these are not trivial, after the trying day's work. A fine salmon is served up, and all the members of the family partake freely. Frozen though it is, it seems to be highly relished, and very shortly there is nothing left but the clean-stripped skeleton. The saucepan, now full of fresh clean water—a few hundreds of reindeer hairs, of course, are not looked upon as impurities—is emptied, and refilled with snow and suspended again over the fire. Water is the only drink the Nechilli Eskimo know; no "half-and-half" of any kind is to be had there. They now announce that there is no more room in their stomachs for either salmon or water, and the meal is finished. It is time to turn in. Nalungia prepares the bed for the night, arranging the beautiful soft skins; Atikleura closes up the entrance securely with a block of snow, slips in under the large family bed rug, and there disrobes. Unlike the Greenland Eskimo, these people, of either sex, never disrobe in the presence of strangers, except in the greatest emergency. The guest of the family is assigned a place at one side of the hut—little Anni and Errera have turned in long ago—and the berth nearest the fireplace is reserved for Nalungia. She extinguishes the light and arranges her toilet in the dark. The large skin bed-rugs are their only covering at night. Vigorous snoring soon announces that they are asleep.

The scene outside is very different from the one which we pictured in the summer. The tents have all disappeared, and, in the peaceful moonlight, the low cupolas of the snow huts are almost merged in the snow-covered field. A stranger passing by would hardly suspect that quite a little world is slumbering there, and, least of all, a world of glad and happy people, happier, perhaps, beneath their lowly snow roofs than many a rich and mighty one under a roof crowned with turrets and battlements. Rancour and envy, calumny and malice, are banished from the world of this ice desert; the peace of the night is unbroken, and the moonlit atmosphere is pure around the abodes of these men.

Captain Amundsen is not alone in deploring the corrupting advent of civilization to these primitive people, whose native virtues so easily give way to acquired vice. Fortunately for them, there is but little in their desolate frozen country to tempt the white man:

As regards the religious ideas of the Eskimo I will not venture to give any account. The statements I could obtain on this subject were exceedingly imperfect and vague, and left most things to one's imagination. If these people had any belief in a higher being they at any rate concealed it very jealously. They imagine a life after death; at any rate good men are assigned an abode in the moon, the bad in the earth; the stars are destined for those who had something of both in their nature. Natural phenomena, such as the aurora borealis, shooting stars, thunder and lightning, rain, etc., they regarded with complete indifference. Evidently they loved life, but on the other hand they had not the slightest fear of death. If they were sick or in misery they bade farewell to life with a tranquil mind and strangled themselves. Two such cases occurred during our sojourn among them. During the voyage of the Gjoa we came into contact with ten different Eskimo tribes in all, and we had good opportunities of observing the influence of civilization on them, as we were able to compare those Eskimo who had come into contact with civilization with those who had not. And I must state it as my firm conviction that the latter, the Eskimo living absolutely isolated from civilization of any kind, are undoubtedly the happiest, healthiest, most honorable, and most contented among them. It must, therefore, be the bounden duty of civilized nations who come into contact with the Eskimo to safeguard them against contaminating influences, and by laws and stringent regulations protect them against the many perils and evils of so-called civilization. Until this is done, they will inevitably be ruined. All honor is due to the Royal Danish Training Company for the manner in which it has treated its Greenland colony. It is to be hoped that other nations will follow the Danish example in this respect, and will be fully alive to their responsibility in regard to these splendid and doughty children of nature up at the Pole.

My sincerest wish for our friends the Nechilli Eskimo is that civilization may never reach them.

Connection with civilization was resumed on August 26, 1906, when the American ship Charles Hansen was sighted:

The Charles Hansen, of San Francisco, did not seem to be rigged out in a very luxurious manner. A ladder, by-the-by, was superfluous, as the ship was deep in the water. We took hold of the chain-wales and crawled on board. Our first impression was most peculiar. Every available space on deck was occupied to such an extent that it was nearly impossible to get along. Eskimo women in red dresses, and negroes in the most variegated costumes were mingling together, just as in a land of fable.

An elderly man with a white beard advanced towards me on the quarter-deck. He was newly shaven, and nicely dressed, evidently the master of the ship. "Are you Captain Amundsen?" was his first remark. I was quite surprised to hear that we were known so far away and answered in the affirmative, owning that I was the man. "Is this the first vessel you have met?" the old man asked. And when I admitted it was so, his countenance brightened up. We shook hands long and heartily. "I am exceedingly pleased to be the first one to welcome you on getting through the Northwest Passage." We were then most courteously invited down below to his cabin. There was not much room, though slightly more than on board our own vessel, the Gjoa.

There was much hard work still to be done, but the imperishable glory of the Northwest Passage had been won. The reception at Nome "defies my powers of description." The author can not quite say how he got ashore, "but a jubilant roar of welcome issued from a thousand throats, and through the darkness of the night a sound burst forth that thrilled me through and through, bringing tears to my eyes; it was the strains of our national air:

Ja vi elsker dette landet.
(Yea, we cherish this our country.)"

"The Northwest Passage," by Roald Amundsen. Published by E. P. Dutton & Co., New York; two volumes; $8 net.

The Thunderer in Court.

With a perfectly serious show of mystery and popular ignorance, London papers publish such items as the following in their reports of court proceedings:

The partnership action of Sibley and Walter, which was commenced in December, 1905, came before his lordship, Justice Parker, for further consideration. The business engaged in is that of publishing certain papers. Mr. Clauson, before stating the nature of the proceedings, said: "It will not be necessary for the purposes of this hearing for me or any of my friends to mention the names of the papers which this partnership publishes, and if any person in court conjectures the names in public through the press or otherwise it will be entirely at his own risk." . . . Counsel then read affidavits by Mr. Bell and Mr. Soames stating what had been done; and, all the parties interested being represented, his lordship sanctioned the minutes as agreed.

As the names of the defendant, Walter, and counsel, Soames, are almost as well known as that of the paper—the Times—the item is fully informing to all readers, in spite of its cryptic method.

Howells in Youth and Age.

W. D. Howells has just returned from a tour of Europe. During his stay abroad he wrote a series of descriptive letters for the New York Sun, and of these entertaining epistles the Sun remarks, editorially:

There shall he in this place no setting off of date against date; no appraisal of earlier or later methods; still less, any sentimental reflection suggested by an obvious interval of years. Let those, however, who are curious in the matter of the endurance of special gifts of preeminent quality turn back to the press reviews which hailed and welcomed young Howells as a fine observer and an artist and humorist of unique distinction, and note how precisely the adjectives then employed fit the aftermath.

The fasting Succi of Nanterre has taken up the challenge of the fasting Succi of Turin, according to a news dispatch from Paris. The question of which is the real fasting Succi is to be proved by ordeal. The Succi of Nanterre will fast against the Succi of Turin whenever and wherever he pleases for thirty days, fifty-one days, or sixty days. The fast is to be conducted in a coffin for each man, and watched over by any number of doctors.

Julian Harris, son of Joel Chandler Harris, and the "little boy" of the folk stories, succeeds his father as editor of Uncle Remus's Magazine, retaining also his original position as general manager.

CURRENT VERSE.

Adeimantus.

The dream of Adeimantus,
Who carved for a Grecian prince
Statues of perfect marble
Fairer than all things since,
Wonderful, white and gracious,
Like lotus flowers on a mere—
Or phantoms born of the moonbeam—
Beyond all praise but a tear.
The dream of Adeimantus,
As he lay upon his bed,
Wonderful white and gracious,
And this was the word it said:
"Arise, oh Adeimantus,
The breath of the dawns blows chill,
The stars begin to fade
"Ere the first ray strikes the sill.
Arise, oh Adeimantus,
For here is work to your hand,
If the fingers fashion the dream
As the soul can understand."
He rose from his troubled bed
"Ere the dream had faded away,
And he said "I will fashion the dream
As the potter fashions the clay."
He said in his great heart's vanity,
"I will fashion a wondrous thing
To stand in a palace of onyx
And hind the eyes of a king."
He said in the pride of his soul
As the birds began to sing,
"I will surely take no rest
Till I fashion this wondrous thing.
I will swear an oath to eschew
The white wine and the red,
To eat no delicate meats
Nor break the fair white bread.
I will not walk in the city,
But labor here alone
In the dew and the dusk and the flush
Till the vision smiles from the stone."
Six days he wrought at the marble,
But cunning had left at his hand,
And his fingers would not fashion
What his soul could understand.
Six days he fasted and travailed,
Hard was the watch to keep,
Till the chisel fell from his fingers
And he sank with a sob to sleep.
Then a vision came to his slumber,
Beautiful as before,
Floating in with the moonbeam
Gliding over the floor.
It floated in with the moonbeam
And stood beside his bed,
Wonderful white and gracious,
And this was the word it said:
"Courage, oh Adeimantus,
I am the perfect thing
To stand in a shrine of jasper
And hind the eyes of a king.
I am the strange desire,
The glory beyond the dream,
The passion above the song,
The spirit-light of the gleam.
I come to my best beloved
Not actual, from afar,
Fairer than hope or thought
More beautiful than a star.
Courage, oh Adeimantus,
Lay strength and strength to your soul,
You shall fashion me in part,
And know the perfect whole."
—Alfred Browning Stanley Tennison, in Contemporary Review.

Love's Tapestry.

Said she, "Go fetch from the palest stars
That blossom in the summer skies,
The amber tissue of the sun,
A flight of opal butterflies.
"A skein of silver from the moon,
And trembling green from off the trees;
The rainbow that but yesterday
Was wonderful against the breeze.
"The whitest rose that ever blew,
The dewy emerald of the lawn;
And all the apple-buds that laid
Their pearls lips against the dawu.
"And fetch the nights I watched for him,
And find the veil of tears I cried;
And bring the little sob that broke
My heart upon the night he died.
"Then in the twilight I shall sit,
And never hear the years that flee,
But weave a beauteous tapestry
Of dreams about my love and me."
—Archibald Sullivan, in Smart Set.

Babylon.

Like magic architects the winds have made
Of radiant clouds a city in the air,
Temples and citadels and gardens fair,
With all the show of pompous art displayed;
Burnished and dyed with every fleeting shade
Of sunset—gold and rose and emerald rare—
Until a phantom Babylon is there,
A crown of blooming stars upon her head.
The tangled constellations wane and die,
The witchery of waking dawn entwines
A wreath of primrose glory in the sky
And all the orient incarnadines—
Lo, Babylon has vanished with the night
And whither have the builders taken flight!
—William F. McCormack, in New York Sun.

Lord Clive, that hero of strong passions strong temptations, and brilliant achievements has never until now been rightly honored by his countrymen. He was refused a peerage and was rebuked and praised by his fellow members of the House of Commons in on breath. He was, in short, finally driven to self-destruction at the age of forty-nine Nearly a century and a half later the first statues are to be erected in his memory. Lor Curzon announces that the sum of $25,000 has been collected for two statues of Clive
One, in bronze, is to be set up in Westminster at the end of the broadened roadway
Charles Street, Whitehall, facing St. James Park.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

By Sidney G. P. Coryn.

By the death of the Canadian poet, Louis Fréchet, we are reminded that old Canada is still French to the backbone in sentiment and tradition. When Fréchet went last year from Quebec to Paris to be crowned by the Academy of France he was received as a Frenchman and as one who found no conflict between his political loyalty to England and the devotion of his heart, which was poured out as a poetic libation to France. Fréchet's first poems, "Fleurs boreales," were published in 1881 and received the honors of the Prix Montyou. "Poésies Canadiennes" came later, with many another work of poetry and prose referred to by Camille Doucet when, speaking of the French Academy, he said, "We know him only by his verse, but Canada knows him by prose as well as poetry, and Montreal has received with enthusiasm the great drama written by him. It is in French, gentlemen, that they speak and think in that land once French—the land we love, the land that loves us."

Louis Fréchet was not for long to enjoy his honors. He went home only to die, and by his death France loses one of her most brilliant children, whose loyalty was not lessened by a flag not her own.

Quickened, by Anna Chapin Ray. Published by Little, Brown & Co., Boston; $1.50.

Thorne Alstrom, under grave financial embarrassment and fearing criminal exposure, leaves New York and secretly makes his way to Quebec. There he begins life anew, calling on the reserves of his character to make amends for the past, but with the perpetual dread of shame and detection. Entering into the social life of the place, he meets Denise Allard and her family, falls in love with Denise, is forbidden to marry her because of the difference in religion, and eventually wins his way by joining the Roman Catholic Church. Discovering eventually that he stands in no danger of criminal proceedings and that his father, who was his chief victim, freely forgives him, he returns to New York and the shadow is removed from his life. But he confesses his past to his friends in Quebec and resolves to face all possible penalties before he knows that he has been forgiven, and so gives proof of a real repentance and of a character of unusual fortitude. The story is powerfully told, while the description of French-Canadian life is from an intimate knowledge and sympathetic insight.

But as an argument for the Catholic faith—and for this it is undoubtedly intended—the book leaves us in some perplexity. It never occurred to Alstrom to join the church until he found that he could marry Denise in no other way, and while he is at first refused admission on the ground that his conversion is self-interested, he would certainly never have joined at all if he could have won his wife in any other way. The human mind is fearfully and wonderfully made, with a penchant for self-deception, and however great Alstrom's sincerity may seem, his change of religion can never escape the suspicion of self-interest. For the same reason he would have become a fire-worshiper or a Shintoist, and would have auto-suggested himself into the same sincerity. Putting the winsome Denise upon one side, the book contains no religious appeal whatever, unless we except the usual platitudes of sentiment about the grandeur, the antiquity, and the mystery of the church, with such occasional and perplexing assurances as that it is nearly as old as the Laurentian Hills. From the religious point of view, "Quickened" will be read with satisfaction by those already persuaded, but it will leave the others wholly untouched. None the less there will be full agreement that as a romance the story deserves a high place, that it is written with conscientious care, and that it is rich in pathos and accurate delineation.

The Wayfarers, by Mary Stewart Cutting. Published by the McClure Company, New York; $1.50.

The story is laid in New York, but it might have been laid anywhere else, while six houses out of ten throughout the country contain just such people as the characters in "The Wayfarers." Not one of them rises above the commonplace, not one of them has an idea, an ideal, nor an ambition above the ordinary. Theodosia Linden, who comes from her Southern home to live with Justin Alexander and his wife in New York, is the ordinary type of pretty girl, clean-minded, enthusiastic, and a little neurotic. We watch her various love affairs with an indulgent interest, having seen the same sort of thing next door or around the corner a dozen times. Her earlier infatuation is naturally for a handsome scamp, although we know all the time that she will eventually meet and marry the interesting stranger who saved her from the railway wreck. Justin Alexander is a man of unusual force and intelligence, who might even be lovable if he sometimes allowed his soul to escape from his business. This, however, he never does, and when he finally becomes temporarily insane we can hardly impeach the justice of nature.

But all this is by no means a censure of "The Wayfarers." To be able to give a fascination to the commonplace, to create an interest in such people as the Alexanders and their familiar set, is no small achievement. The author can make "bricks without straw and they are good bricks. No one will lay down her book half read, and if we pause sometimes to ask why we are so charmed we shall leave the question unanswered, content with things in their unexplained state and eager to finish the story.

Canon and the Text of the New Testament, by Caspar René Gregory. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York; $2.50.

This scholarly work will be received with satisfaction by theologians throughout the world, although it may disturb some unreasoned convictions and open the road to unwelcome but salutary doubts. The author has the courage to face the various related problems of the scriptural canon in their due and logical order. Complaining of an established method of pre-supposing the existence of a canon and of entering upon its history as upon that of something concrete, indisputable and undeniable, he reverses the procedure, asking first of all whether there is indeed a canon, whether or not there existed at an early period in the history of the Christian church a positively official and authorized collection of books that was acknowledged by the whole of Christendom, that was everywhere and in precisely the same manner constituted and certain, and that corresponded exactly to the New Testament now generally in use in Western Europe and in America. The question has of course been asked before, but the answer has usually been given from the standpoint of unreasoning antagonism or from an equally unreasoning theological bias. Now we have a profound and critical analysis as comprehensive as it is judicial.

The scope leaves nothing to be desired. Beginning with a study of the apostolic and post-apostolic ages, we have weighty chapters on "Irenæus," "Origin," "Eusebius," and "Theodore." Passing from the canon itself to the text, we have chapters on the "Papyrus," "Parchment," "Large and Small Letter Greek Manuscripts," "Lesson Books," "Translations," "Church Writers," "Printed Editions," "Externals of the Text and the Early History of the Text." A profound erudition holds sway throughout five hundred pages, nor is there anywhere a departure from the atmosphere of sound intellectual judgment untainted by special pleading or prejudice.

In the Land of Mosques and Minarets, by Francis Miltown and Blanche McManus. Published by L. C. Page & Co., Boston; $3.

The appearance of this delightful book has the single drawback that it will tend to popularize a part of the world that popularity will spoil. There are, it is true, no virgin lands awaiting discovery, no part of the habitable world wholly untainted by the tourist, but Algeria and Tunisia and other parts of Mediterranean Africa have preserved their individuality in face of a limited invasion that it would be dangerous to increase. Perhaps it is the Mohammedan religion that gives to them a salutary conservatism.

The book is indeed an exceptional one. It contains no trace of the superiority usually adopted by the white man when writing of the colored races. The Arab is always a man and a brother, whose ways are not ours, but who demands from us the good-fellowship of respect and sincerity. The authors' knowledge of their subject is evidently not confined to the surface of things. It is not of the vagrant order, but goes deeply into realities and always with a kindly and admiring sympathy. They have produced a notable book about a region from which great events may yet spring, a book vividly written and full of illustrations, colored and monochrome, of a high order.

Lady Julia's Emerald, by Helen Hester Colvill. Published by the John Lane Company, New York; $1.50.

The author has created one striking character and surrounded her with nonentity and vice. Lesley Duncan, with her narrow Puritan education, is a winsome figure, and that she preserves her integrity when liberty, popularity, and the artistic life come to her is a tribute to her strength of character. But why does she fall in love with Victor Penruddocke, whose original intention toward her was of the earth earthy and who never rises far above the commonplace? Indeed, the book needs a good man to give it ballast, and there is not one. Victor's mother, Lady Julia, is a cleverly drawn character, but her séances, her trances, her ridiculous mysticism and clairvoyance are overdone and she is too grotesquely selfish to be tolerable. Lesley's roué father, artist, gambler, and blackleg, has none of the sentiment that sometimes makes such rascals bearable, while Sir Francis Miller, to whom this precious scoundrel tries to sell his daughter, has a dormant chivalry that hardly helps to redeem him. Much as we admire Lesley and wish her well after her many vicissitudes, we wish that we could leave her in the hands of a real man rather than in those of Victor Penruddocke, whose good intentions and generosity are unstained by the moral fibre that alone gives virility.

Roast Meats

Hot or cold, are given just that "finishing touch" which makes so many different dishes a delight when flavored with

LEA & PERRINS SAUCE

(THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE)

Soups, Fish, Chops, Stews, Game, Gravies, Salads, Cheese and nearly all the courses in a dinner are very greatly improved by its proper use. It is a good digestive. Leading chefs declare that Lea & Perrins Sauce is the Secret of Their Success as famous cooks.

See that Lea & Perrins signature is on wrapper and label.

John Duncan's Sons, Agents, New York

Vacation Questions Quickly Settled

Call or write to Dept. Ad. 948 Flood Building for literature and beautifully illustrated booklets on California Resorts and Outing Places.

ROWING—BATHING—FISHING—CAMPING—EXCELLENT HOTELS

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

TICKET OFFICES

884 Market St., 14 Powell St., Ferry Depot

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.

Henry Miller and his company begin next Monday evening the last week of their engagement at the Van Ness Theatre, and will repeat "The Great Divide." This eminently successful American play was enjoying remarkable public favor when it was withdrawn to make room for the pre-arranged coming of "The Servant in the House" company, and its return will be welcomed. Mr. Miller's Stephen Ghent, in this drama of Western life, will undoubtedly be remembered as one of his most vivid conceptions. Few recent productions have been more written about, and no heroic figure of modern type has been more seriously discussed and warmly commended. William Vaughn Moody, the author of "The Great Divide," brought to his work the enthusiasm of a poet and the terse expression of a leader in action. Strengthening the dramatic situations in which his characters are presented, faultless stage management has made every picture perfect in its suggestion, yet always subordinate to the story of living interests. Those who did not see the play during its first run should not miss this opportunity, and those who saw it before will hardly be able to resist the temptation to see it again and fix in mind the details of what must be treasured as a notable memory of theatrical art.

At the Princess Theatre this week there is more than a feast of fun. Whatever the design of "The Girl from Paris"—and nobody will give that issue a thought after the curtain has been up a quarter of an hour—that "it is to laugh" in this presentation may not be denied. May Boley, who is swiftly but surely winning the right to consideration as one of the half-dozen American comediennes, is a living picture of humor as Ruth, and finds her only difficulty in confining her ability to delight the audience to the limits of a single performance. William Burriss has only a few lines, and those in the second act, but the stage and all in sight are his while his scenes continue. Arthur Cunningham easily assumes a new and pleasing disguise, and sings a rattling song, as Major Fossdyke of the Butterfly Shooters. Evelyn Frances Kellogg, in the name-part, is very attractive to the eye. Zoe Barnett wins a renewal of former regard as Norah, and sings "Sweetheart Days" charmingly. Sarah Edwards, whose real ability and notable voice have won continued and increasing favor, would be more impressive and even more pleasing in moderated efforts with the commanding exigencies of her part. Walter Catlett, with a good grasp of comedy possibilities, is another who works too vigorously, too incessantly, and too obviously. In Wallace Brownlow, who makes his first appearance in this performance, the company has gained a fine haritone voice and an actor of sympathy and intelligence. Among the many distinctive features of the production the dance by Grisella Kingsland deserves mention as a graceful interpolation worthy of its place. This week ends the run of "The Girl from Paris."

Next week Ferris Hartman, the comic-opera and burlesque comedian whose fame is almost co-extensive with that of the old Tivoli Opera House, makes his first appearance at the Princess Theatre. It is four years since he has been seen on a San Francisco stage, and his welcome will be a warm one. "The Idol's Eye" has been chosen as the medium for his revival of old-time favor, and in it he will display the eccentric comedy possibilities of Ahel Conn, the American magician. Arthur Cunningham will be Don Pahló Tobiasco, as in former years; Zoe Barnett will have the rôle of the Nautch girl Damayanti; Evelyn Frances Kellogg will be the Maraquita, and Wallace Brownlow the Ned Winner. Sarah Edwards, Walter Catlett, Walter de Leon, and the other favorites of the company will have favorable opportunities.

White Whittlesey as Eric Temple in "Heartsease," supported by Bessie Barriscale and the New Alcazar Theatre company, will be the winning attraction at the Sutter-Street playhouse next week. It is a play of sentiment with several moving situations, and will be presented with the careful attention to every detail that distinguishes the management of the theatre. The vocal music which is a feature of "Heartsease" will be given by a selected octet of singers of which Homer Henley and Mrs. Millie Flynn Gish are the principals. Mr. Henley consented to come from Sacramento to arrange the music and conduct the rehearsals, and this motive in the drama will be in keeping with artistic requirements. Mr. Whittlesey has made a success of the leading rôle of "Heartsease" on former occasions, and will repeat his triumphs at this engagement it is certain.

The Orpheum, as usual, will offer a new programme beginning with the matinee Sunday, and in it are several features of special importance. As headliners will be presented the Four Rianos, comedy acrobats, who have a sketch, "In Africa," prepared to display to good advantage their skill and originality. A farce entitled "Fix in a Fix" will be offered by Charles H. Bradshaw, comedian, and it is said to be witty and winning. Something out of the ordinary in singing is promised by the Big City Quartet. A study of animal comics and agilities will be displayed by Raffins's Simian Performers, a collection of monkeys and hahoons that includes a number of astonishingly versatile and intelligent four-handed acrobats. In consequence of the enthusiastic recognition which has been accorded to the young lyric soprano, Miss Fay Carranza, her engagement has been extended for another week. Bernard and Sealey, the Tennis Trio, and Franklyn Underwood and company will conclude their engagement with this programme. Mr. Underwood, with the assistance of Frances Slosson and George Bloomquist, will present an entirely new sketch, entitled "Mr. Stung's Mistake."

The American Theatre has secured an attraction of much more than ordinary notability for an engagement beginning Sunday evening, August 23, in "The Love Tales of Hoffmann," to be given by the company which presented the opera with great success in Oakland last month. This work, which was first produced after its composer, Offenbach, had passed away, is considered the most important of his works. It was given by Hammerstein's grand opera company at the Manhattan Opera House last season and was at once accepted as a valuable addition to the list of operas which could justly claim the serious attention of great singers.

Particularly pleasing in connection with this announcement is the information that the company that will present the opera at the American Theatre is headed by Edith Mason and Thomas H. Perse, two artists who are well and favorably known to San Francisco playgoers. Many have retained pleasing remembrances of their triumphs in the old days, when they were introduced here by the Southwell Opera Company at the old Grand Opera House. Miss Mason won a favor that will not soon be lost, and Mr. Perse, the tenor, is associated with all her successes. Bernice Holmes and Arthur Mesmer are two more who will receive the greetings of old friends. Ann Tasker and Charles Swickard are also members of the company.

"The Man of the Hour," George Broadhurst's play of politics, comes back to the Van Ness Theatre on Monday night, August 24. A feature will be the engagement of Cyril Scott for the rôle of the Mayor. Mr. Scott has been for the last three years the star of "The Prince Chap," and will again, following this special engagement, go out as a star, under the management of Brady & Grismer, in a play being written for him by Mr. Broadhurst. Miss Mary ("Polly") Stockwell, daughter of that old San Francisco favorite, L. R. Stockwell, comes as leading woman of the company, in the rôle of Dallas Wainwright, the ward of the unscrupulous politico-financier. Miss Ethel Brandon, another favorite here and the mother of Miss Stockwell, returns in her rôle of the Mayor's mother, and two other successful players of last year's cast, Louis Hendricks and Felix Haney, come back in their creations of the Big Boss and Alderman Jim Phelan, respectively.

David Warfield will return to the city of his nativity next month as one of the most brilliant stars in the dramatic galaxy, and his first appearance will be in "The Music Master," that powerfully pathetic play by Charles Klein which has been played for four consecutive seasons in New York City. Of course Mr. Warfield will be seen at the New Alcazar Theatre, under the Belasco management, and during his engagement there the newer play, "A Grand Army Man," in which David Belasco has signally displayed his gifts as collaborator and artist in stage effects, will also be produced.

Henry Miller has decided upon "The Great Divide" as the play in which he will make his London appearance during the coming season.

The Van Ness Theatre management has hooked eight of the most prominent stars on the English-speaking stage in their new productions for the coming season.

From Rome comes the report that Gloria Nevada, the young daughter of Mme. Emma Nevada, who won such success at her début at the Costanzi Theatre last winter, in "The Barber of Seville," has been re-engaged by the same theatre for next winter to sing "Ophelia." At the same time negotiations are going on with Mme. Nevada that she also sing, either alone or with her daughter.

Franz Molnar was a struggling and unknown Hungarian newspaper writer in Budapest until his play of "The Devil" took Vienna by storm. The piece is now scheduled for separate productions in twenty-four European cities for the coming season and managers are hiding in as many different tongues for the rights to his next effort.

George Ade, playwright and humorist, has delivered to Cohan and Harris the completed manuscript of "The City Chap," the new play that Jack Norworth will be seen in late this season.

GERMAN CONVERSATION COURSES IN GERMAN literature, readings, etc. 3115 California St.

LITERARY NOTES.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

Mr. Richard Watson Gilder has conferred upon him by France the Order of Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. This is a well-deserved compliment, for Mr. Gilder has combined practical service in civic reform with the writing of verse that goes to the heart of city misrule and evil. The first complete edition of his poems will be published by the Houghton-Mifflin Company in October.

The volume of "Recollections" which David Christie Murray left will be published at once. Christie Murray's career differed in many respects from the usually placid life of the novelist. He was a soldier, then a journalist, and thirdly a war correspondent. In the course of his varied life he visited nearly every part of the globe, and met all sorts of notable personages. The book contains letters from some of these, including Robert Louis Stevenson.

"Seven Splendid Sinners" is the title of a book by W. R. H. Trowbridge, soon to be published in London. One of the "sinners" was Catherine of Russia, another the Comtesse de Lamotte, who stripped the last rag of respect from the throne of France, a third, the Duchesse de Polignac. Then there were Mme. de Châteauroux, the Pompadour, the Georgian Duchess of Kendal, and Lola Montez—a notorious and brilliant gallery, it will be seen.

It is perhaps not known to most of the many American admirers of "The Golden Age" that its author, Kenneth Grahame, holds the responsible position of secretary of the Bank of England. His retirement for ill-health is announced, but it is to be hoped that he will still be able to give some time to writing—he has a really charming gift.

New Publications.

"That Man from Wall Street," by Ruth Everett, is a story of the New York studios and of a woman who loved two men at the same time. The novel has much to recommend it in the way of incident and character delineation, but we are not inclined to fall in love with any of the dramatis personae. It is published by George Thiell Long, New York. Price, $1.50.

"British Highways and Byways from a Motor Car," by Thomas D. Murphy, comes easily among the best hooks of its kind not only for its charm of style and completeness, but because it is so broadly written as to be equally useful to the traveler by rail as by road. The author has made himself intelligently acquainted with the country, historically as well as pictorially, while his illustrations, colored and plain, are unusually fine. The book is published by L. C. Page & Co., Boston.

Special Privileges to Teachers and Students.

Manager Will L. Greenbaum has succeeded in making arrangements with several prominent European and Eastern managers to give special rates for concert tickets to active music students and their teachers as well as to teachers in public and private schools. All teachers desirous of securing these special privileges for their pupils should address Mr. Greenbaum at Lyric Hall, San Francisco. This will bring them full information, programmes, etc. This is of particular value, as one of the principal advantages of European music study is the opportunities for hearing of great artists.

The wonderful new talking machine without a horn

The top closes over the record, shutting out all the noise of operation—the pure music of the record comes from a mahogany sound reflector. Elegantly made of solid mahogany, combined with record cabinet for 150 records. The finest talking machine made. Send for booklet.

Price $200

Sherman, Clay & Co.

Steinway Pianos—Victor Talking Machines
KEARNY AND SUTTER, S. F.
Broadway at 13th 1635 Van Ness Ave.
Oakland San Francisco

Our interest does not cease with a sale. We request our patrons to come in at any time and have their glasses re-adjusted.

HIRSCH & KAISER

218 Post St.

Opticians

JUST A BOOK STORE

Robertson's

1539 Van Ness Ave.

NEAR PINE

"Next to the White House"

EDUCATIONAL

IRVING INSTITUTE Boarding and Day School for Girls
2126 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

Music, languages, art, elocution. Kindergarten, primary, grammar, high school, and advanced grades. Accredited by the universities. Twenty-ninth year. Non-sectarian. Pupils admitted at any time. New term opens Monday, August 3.

MISS ELLA M. PINKHAM, Principal.

CALIFORNIA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

Irving Institute Building
Full corps of teachers in every department.
Send for catalogue.
HERMANN GENSS, President.

THE HAMLIN SCHOOL

A Boarding and Day School for Girls
Miss Hamlin announces the reopening of the school August 10. It is accredited by the California Universities and by Eastern colleges. Advanced courses of study are offered to High School graduates and to those who have left school, with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to a school diploma.

Classes in Instrumental and Vocal Music and in Drawing and Painting are formed and facilities are given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basket Ball, etc. For particulars address

MISS HAMLIN,
2230 Pacific Ave., San Francisco.

Oakland Conservatory of Music

1170 Madison Street, Oakland, Cal.

The largest, oldest established, and most thoroughly equipped school of genuine musical instruction on the Pacific Coast.

Conducted on the lines of the most noted European and Eastern schools.
Full prospectus on application.
Director, ADOLF GREGORY.

MORRISTOWN SCHOOL, Morristown, N. J.

College Preparatory Boarding School for Boys
Small classes. Individual attention. Gymnasium, quarter-mile track, athletic fields and tennis courts. Especially healthful location, an hour from New York.

F. C. WOODMAN, Headmaster.

Miss Harker's School

Home and Day School for Girls. Certificate admits to College. Excellent Departments in Music and Art. New building, thoroughly modern, steam heated. Address,
MISS HARKER, Palo Alto, Cal.

BERKELEY PREPARATORY SCHOOL

Boarding and Day School for Boys
2207 Dwight Way, Berkeley, Cal.
Fall term opens August 24
J. H. WHITE, Principal

SNELL SEMINARY 2721 Channing Way Berkeley

Girls' boarding and day school. Certificate admits to University of California, Stanford, and Eastern colleges. Opens August 10. Superior location. Outdoor life.
MRS. EDNA SNELL POULSON, Principal

PENNSYLVANIA, Ogontz School P. O.

OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES
Twenty minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. The late Mr. Jay Cooke's fine property. Miss SYLVIA J. EASTMAN, Miss ABBY A. SUTHERLAND, Principals.

CASTILLEJA SCHOOL

Palo Alto, California
Home and day school for girls. University preparatory. Outdoor physical training a special feature. Opens August 24. Illustrated catalogue.
MISS MARY I. LOCKEY, A. B., Principal.

THE GRAPE CURE—AETNA SPRINGS

This pleasant and effective cure, so successful in Germany and the Austrian Tyrol, is now established at Aetna Springs, a delightful resort; famous for its mineral water, pure air, homelike surroundings and excellent cuisine. Write for information.

AETNA SPRINGS, NAPA COUNTY, CALIFORNIA

HENRY MILLER'S SYDNEY CARTON.

By Josephine Hart Phelps.

A curious change has come over Henry Miller's Sydney Carton, which is difficult to explain, because it is not a falling off in acting power. If it were, one might brand it as the indication of indifference resulting from routine, or the lethargy that sometimes falls like a cloud over a veteran actor, dulling and obscuring the brilliancy that had marked his work in the past, and might still mark it in the future.

Even Booth, during the later years of his career, was subject to such sudden, unexpected, unescapable drops from the high excitement of mood by which the player by instinct is held captive during the hour of achievement.

But no such blight has fallen upon Henry Miller. He carries the rôle of Sydney Carton with lessened nobility, but with lessened romantic charm. It is said that nothing can be really well done without a sense of pleasure in the doing of it. Henry Miller, after long years of stage youthfulness, and of some considerable supremacy in romantic rôles, has suddenly entered upon a new phase. The character of his face is completely altered, and with the coming of that comfortable clinging off of form and feature there has come, too, a fortunate recognition on his part of his ability to represent characters of a worldier, more materialistic type.

For that reason his politician in "Mater" was a particularly logical and consistent characterization.

His Sydney Carton of the present has lost the romance of atmosphere in which he was formerly enveloped. Women could look upon his earlier Sydney Carton with that reflection of sympathetic longing to help, to reform, to redeem, which in real life has so often been the despair of their relatives. Girls, seeing in the slender, picturesque sinner a warm reflection of his earlier graces of nature and of heart, could elevate him to a hero's pedestal and dream of him as a chevalier sans peur et sans reproche.

But a drunkard with increased girth, diminished eyes, and a double chin—no! The romance has in great part evaporated. And yet that first act of the realism of the part was somehow intensified. It was as if we saw Sydney Carton at a later stage in his downward career, his features coarsened, his will weakened, and his innate nobility of nature temporarily dwarfed by the graceless shadow of his self-indulgence.

It is the scene of scenes in the play, the one, in spite of the thronging shapes of terror which the Manettes and Darnay must face in the later acts, which leaves the deepest impression upon the mind; for it gives the keynote to Sydney Carton's dual nature.

Henry Miller plays the act through in masterly style, but he recognizes clearly that the era of romanticism for him is drawing to a close, and not in aspect alone, but in the spirit of his acting, does he show it.

The play is intensely romantic, but almost a deathblow is dealt to this already weakened element in it by the unfitness of Mary Hall for the rôle of Lucie Manette. Lucie is a thoroughly characteristic portrait of womanhood as conceived by Dickens. His women, for the most of them, take turns in being rabs, drunkards, devils, or angels, and Lucie Manette is one of the angels. Like the Princess Flavia, she is animated only by the sweetest amiability, the deepest nobility, the most unexceptionable sentiments. We do not get at Lucie Manette's heart, for she is all surface—the surface of the lay figure that had done duty in so many novels preceding Dickens's time. She is own sister to his Agnes, his Dame Durden, his Florence Dombey, his Little Nell, and all his galaxy of saintly stars.

So, after all, it would not be such a crushing misfortune to have an unsatisfactory Lucie if she were only superficially suited to the rôle. But Mary Hall is the reverse. Her physiognomy is absolutely the opposite of what Lucie's should be, and her amiability is honeyed as to be cloying. In fact, I can not conceive of any pair of lovers being more profoundly uninteresting than Lucie Manette and Darnay, for they miscast Charles Goddold, who is not in the least romantic in style, as Darnay.

One of the most striking figures in this later representation is that of Defarge. This character was so unhappily cast before as to have had no adequate representation, but Frederick Lewis, the young actor who made so successful a Michael in "Mater," lent a sinister vitality to what had hitherto seemed a perfunctory stage villain. His make-up was striking, and so were the furtive look and pose, the sudden predatory, feline gestures he bestowed upon the vindictive avenger of his family's wrongs.

It was he that gave us the first thrill. It was in the scene before the republican tribunal, when, while the fate of Darnay is wavering in the balance, Defarge takes the floor and by the eloquence wrought to a white heat through his passionate sense of wrongs to be avenged, he turns the fluctuating sentiment of the mercurial mob once more to thoughts of vengeance. In this scene, while the blood-reddened, howling mob by turns dances the Carmagnole, fraternizes with the accused, or shrieks for vengeance, he would be cold indeed who could not once more surrender his imagination to wild pictures of the terrible events that have lighted like a flaming torch the encrimsoned pages of French history.

One of the most noticeable and picturesquely appropriate figure in the present performance is that of Dr. Manette, as played by George Oshourne. The worn, venerable figure bears the look of having met shipwreck and been shattered in some terrible wind of destiny, and falls in entirely with one's mental conception of the portrait that Dickens drew.

The character of Mimi is a concession, a sort of sop to the sentimental Cerberus who would find Dickens's brief but pathetic and moving picture of the little seamstress who was caught up in the eddies of the Terror as entirely lacking in significance if she did not bear her part in some romance of her own. Mimi is not an essential character of the play, and her figure lacks vitality. Nevertheless, Laura Hope Crews, with her natural vivacity entirely eliminated, played the part with some effect of pathos. A certain tendency to the lachrymose could not be entirely banished, even by Margaret Anglin, who was utterly thrown away in the part, on the occasion of Henry Miller's first production of the piece here.

"The Only Way," like all dramatizations of famous novels, is bound to disappoint some people from its unlikeness to the original. That brilliant exotic among Dickens's many tales of a soberer people, "A Tale of Two Cities," has so startled and thrilled generations of readers that it would be a wonderful play indeed that could rise to equal heights. The thing, in fact, can not be done. But all the same "The Only Way" is a very skillful piece of dramatic concentration of a story that in the original covers a great extent of time, taking in many characters, and including a tremendous national tragedy the like of which the civilized world has never seen.

That the play in its working out gives so graphic an idea of this tragedy and its effect upon individuals is enough to prove its construction to be no small feat in the realm of dramatic literature. True, we have lost the quietly terrible Mme. Defarge. But on the stage male villains are more convincing than female ones, and Defarge, with his fateful look, and the touch of republican crimson in costume, is a better selection for the rôle of the family avenger.

The play calls for many rôles, and they were carefully assigned to competent players, but for some reason, perhaps because of a loss of inspiration in the main character, it goes with less vividness, with greater tameness, than before, and I think it doubtful if Mr. Miller will find it a good drawing card for the remainder of his engagement.

Henry Miller has grown fat, and "Heartsease" is to be laid aside forevermore. "So spake in sorrow and in tears" the gently chiding matinee maiden, for "Heartsease," as a matinee attraction, is it. But cheer up, girly girls, for who do you think—oh, my goodness, gracious me, who do you think—is going to play "Heartsease"? Who but White Whittlesey. And with this knowledge a great calm falls upon the composite soul of the matinee maids and matrons, and they say in their hearts "All is well," for they will once again see the Whittlesonian calves becomingly outlined under silk stockings; once more the Whittlesonian hands will be snowily defined beneath the fall of lace ruffles, and yet again the Whittlesonian form, in all its conquering grace, the Whittlesonian voice with all its caressing cadences, will work havoc in the ranks of those who openly revel in the sentimental drama. Those who make up the ranks of the sentimentalists have, however, had no reason to complain. "Raffles" was a distinct drop into melodrama, but "If I Were King" and "The Prisoner of Zenda" have been sufficiently soothing sustenance to keep them appeased.

Not that one is at all justified in classing "The Prisoner of Zenda" with "Heartsease." The latter is squash, pure and simple, while "The Prisoner of Zenda" is not only extremely clever melodrama, but has in it a distinct vein of irresistible comedy. As for the sentimentality of it, it would be—in fact—romance, and very charming romance at that, if the Princess Flavia were only less of a lay figure, and had more clearly defined characteristics, so that she might not seem

A creature not too bright and good For human nature's daily food.

Bessie Barriscale makes of her a charmingly young and very pretty sentimental coquette, who makes great eyes at her handsome kinsman with a certain precalculation of aim and intention that detracts somewhat from the delicate spontaneity of Flavia's surrender to this hitherto unfeared attraction of the young king. It is a pretty point in the romance of the play, and one that prettily repays delicate treatment.

We do not ever see James Hackett on these Western shores, but I distinctly remember his Rudolph. Hackett has not a correct instinct in comedy, or at least when we saw him he had not learned to employ it with delicacy. He was, I remember, a little exaggerated, and gave a slightly farcical touch to Rudolph's perplexities and mistakes at the coronation. But he carried himself, both in the prologue and later acts, with a princeliness of manner and bearing that lingers pleasantly in the recollection.

White Whittlesey's height and good looks stood him in good stead in the rôle, but he, too, gave the comedy scenes so broadly that the frivolity of the piece rather drowned out the sentiment.

Maher's little bit, when Rassendyll's artist friend had an unexpected audience with "Mr. King," was neatly and very humorously given, but the long list of characters seemed, on the whole, to have received a more perfunctory rendering than is generally the case at the New Alcazar, even when the piece given, as in the present case, is a revival of a well exploited play.

The Del Monte Dog Show

Deep interest is being taken in the annual dog show which is to take place at Del Monte on the 28th and 29th of August. A great many entries have already been received by W. E. Chute, who is in charge of the entries here in the city. The trophies, which are handsome cups, were made by Shreve & Co., and are on exhibition in their windows on Van Ness Avenue.

Last year the dog show was one of the most successful ever held on the Coast and this season's event from present indications promises a greater entry list and a larger attendance than before.

The annual golf tournament on the famous Del Monte course is set for the week of August 31 to September 5, and it will certainly attract all prominent Coast players.

15 KEARNY STREET

PHONE DOUGLAS 2219

Eugene Korn THE HATTER

AGENCIES

- "MILLER, N. Y.," Silks and Operas
"JAMESON, LONDON," Derbys
"JOHN B. STETSON," Philadelphia
KNAPP De Luxe and Felts

AMUSEMENTS

ORPHEUM ELLIS STREET NEAR FILLMORE

Absolutely Class A Theatre Building

Week beginning this Sunday afternoon Matinee Every Day

ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE

FOUR RIANOS, in their acrobatic comedy sketch, "In Africa"; CHARLES H. BRADSHAW and Company, in "Fix in a Fix"; BIG CITY QUARTET; RAFFINS' SIMIAN PERFORMERS; BERNARD and SEELEY; FAY CARRANZA; TENNIS' TRIO; New Orpheum Motion Pictures; Last Week FRANKLYN UNDERWOOD and Company, presenting "Mr. Stung's Mistake."

Evening prices, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box seats, $1. Matinee prices (except Sundays and holidays), 10c, 25c, 50c. Phone, WEST 6000.

PRINCESS THEATRE Ellis Street near Fillmore

S. LOVERICH, Manager Class "A" Theatre Phone West 663

Last 2 Nights of "THE GIRL FROM PARIS"

Beginning Next Monday Night Brief Engagement of FERRIS HARTMAN

Magnificent production of Harry B. Smith and Victor Herbert's musical comedy THE IDOL'S EYE All the Princess Favorites in the Cast Aug. 17—FERRIS HARTMAN in "THE TOY-MAKER." Popular prices—Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Mats. (except Sundays and holidays), 25c, 50c.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Tel. West 6036

BELASCO & MATER, Owners and Managers

Corner Sotter and Steiner Sts. Absolute Class "A" bldg.

Seventy-Fifth Week of the New Alcazar Stock Co.

WEEK COMMENCING AUGUST 17

MR. WHITE WHITTLESEY Supported by the Alcazar Stock Company in an Elaborate Dramatic and Musical Production of

HEARTSEASE

By J. I. C. Clarke and Charles Klein

Prices: Evenings, 25c to $1. Matinees (Saturday and Sunday), 25c to 50c.

Monday, August 24—MR. WHITTLESEY in "BROTHER OFFICERS."

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove St.

Phone Market 500

Matinees Wednesday and Saturday

Last Week of

HENRY MILLER

SIX NIGHTS—TWO MATINEES

Of William Vaughn Moody's drama

THE GREAT DIVIDE

Henry Miller as Stephen Ghent

August 24—"THE MAN OF THE HOUR."

AMERICAN THEATRE Phone Market 381

Market Street, near Seventh

The playhouse of comfort and safety

"The Musical Treat of the Season"

Commencing SUNDAY EVENING, August 23

THE LOVE TALES OF HOFFMANN

A Beautiful Story Set to Music

A company of sixty, including Miss Edith Mason, Miss Bernice Holmes, Miss Ann Tasker, Mr. Thomas Persse, Mr. Chas. Swickard, Mr. Jos. Fogarty. An augmented orchestra of twenty-four pieces under the direction of

MR. PAUL SEINDORF

Note—This opera ran for an entire season at Hammerstein's Manhattan Opera House, N. Y.

Prices—Evenings: Orchestra, 50c, 75c, $1; balcony, 25c, 50c, 75c. Sunday matinee: Orchestra, 50c and 75c; balcony, 25c and 50c. Saturday matinee, 25c and 50c. No higher.

Advertisement for HUNTER RYE featuring the text 'IN THE FRET AND SWELTER OF SUMMER HEAT' and 'HUNTER RYE THE FAMOUS, FAULTLESS, FAVORITE WHISKEY'. Includes images of bottles and a logo with a horse and rider.

Advertisement for Byron Hot Springs featuring the text 'Byron Hot Springs' and 'The waters cure rheumatism—the environment is perfect—the hotel comfortable and supplied with an unexcelled table. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, ground floor, James Flood Building; Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market St., or address hotel.'

VANITY FAIR.

Should a girl dance at a private house with a man to whom she has not been introduced? This is one of the questions now agitating French society, and if it hardly rises to the level of a social problem in America, it is because the American girl settles such questions for herself, dances with whom she wishes, and recognizes les convenances only to the extent of ignoring them at her own sweet will. But the French girl is still subject to direction and allows such questions to be settled for her by social and domestic authority.

But even the French girl is tentatively taking the bit between her teeth just by way of experiment and to find out how far she can go in braving the mysterious dangers supposed to await the unchaperoned and the un-introduced. Mme. Juliette Adam laments that men are now so scarce at private parties that the old-time rules must be relaxed if there is to be any intercourse at all. There was a time when anxious mothers could pick and choose and when the absence of an introduction was an impassable barrier between the man and the maiden. Mais nous avons changé tout cela. There is no longer a crowd of men to be separated by the maternal eye into eligibles and ineligibles. Men are few and far between at the dancing parties and they have therefore acquired a value which outweighs all considerations as to their being detrimental or otherwise. Mme. Adam says plaintively that "even to know how to dance at all is 'open sesame' for a man, and a hostess can not afford to pick and choose." Mme. Adam regrets the good old days when mammas "played the wallflower behind their girls" and arranged with them a code of signals by which the dear young things might know where their smiles and their encouragements might more safely be bestowed.

Times have indeed changed, and the change is not wholly with the men nor even with the girls, who actually dare to "go off and talk in corners alone with their partners." The mothers have changed, too, perhaps because they find that their vigilance is unseconded and their signals unobserved. The dear girl is learning to take care of herself. She has her own ideas of eligibility, and if they are a little vague and unworlthy, her ideas of having a good time are clear-cut and precise. And so mamma, her occupation gone, seeks relaxation at the bridge table in another room and amuses herself irresponsibly, perhaps losing more money than she can afford and setting an example to her daughter that the said daughter would be better without.

In this one respect of introductions the French girl is rather better off than her English sister. In England the rule is inflexible, and the introduction is as much a sine qua non in the ballroom as in the street. Of course the introduction has ceased to mean anything. It is given indiscriminately and the names are usually unheard. It is merely the skeleton of a social rite that once had flesh and blood enough to be an essential reality, but none the less it is religiously followed, and it may be hoped that the young British maiden profits from even so perfunctory an observance of the proprieties.

The common-sense plan seems to be to waive introductions altogether. The fact that two people have accepted an invitation to the same private house upon the same occasion is in itself an introduction. Such an acceptance carries with it an implication that the other people present will be congenial, and all other formalities may quite well be waived.

M. Marcel is not among those who were born to honor. He belongs in the more distinguished ranks of those who have achieved it. M. Marcel is the author of the "wave" to which his own immortal name has been given. The Marcel wave, with its natural undulations following the outlines of the head, is known all over civilization, and what therefore can be more proper than the reception accorded to this truly great man by the English hairdressers on the occasion of his recent visit to London. A banquet at the Holborn restaurant and the presentation of an illuminated address in a casket were some of the marks of esteem and admiration bestowed upon merit and upon world-wide benefaction.

Any future study of hero-worship should surely give to this incident its proper place. A long procession of distinguished people has recently passed through London. There have been crowned heads galore, not to speak of the amiable and capable head of the French republic. But the English hairdressers remained unmoved. If they felt enthusiasm they failed to show it, at least in their corporate capacity. They have their own honorable ideals, these hairdressers. They rise superior to popular acclamation, and when the crowds in the streets, the mere vulgar and inartistic people, shout their enthusiasm and their applause the hairdressers remain contemptuously aloof. How can they admire the man who is bald, who is threatened with baldness, or who shows no sign of special or skilled attention to his hair? Genius always has its external signs, and true greatness never fails to leave its outward mark for the guidance of the initiated. The hairdresser knows where to look for it, and if he fail to find it he hardens his heart against the contagion of unthinking cheers and waits for true greatness to disclose itself. It has just done so in the person of M. Marcel, and the "Grande Fête Marcel" is proof that the hairdresser has a heart as well as a scalp and that he too can prostrate himself before genius.

What are we coming to? To what extent has a Jacobin radicalism invaded the sacred domain of aristocratic privilege when tradesmen, mere tradesmen, grocers, butchers, and the like, refuse to furnish their commodities to the representatives of "high life" unless such commodities are paid for? Surely such canaille ought to be grateful for a patronage that is their one point of contact with celestial social spheres that they can never hope to enter, without tarnishing the relationship by sordid demands for money which every one knows it is beyond the power of "society" to furnish. Truly the gods are overthrown and the rabble have taken the bit between their teeth.

It is a Newport grocer who has thus lighted the torch of incipient rebellion and red revolution, and he rushes into print with his riotous fulminations. "Hereafter," says the traitor, "we have made up our minds to give credit to no one beyond ninety days. We no longer can take cognizance of hard-luck stories from multi-millionaires." To this plebeian soul the mere honor of supplying dainties for monkey dinners appeals not at all. He is not to be paid by condescensions nor compensated by recognition. He must have cash, hard cash, and he must have it in ninety days.

Although King Edward is the most democratic of monarchs, his majesty always insists that his ministers must have the necessary court dress before they are allowed into his presence. It will be remembered that when the Right Honorable John Burns was given a seat in the Cabinet two years ago he petitioned the king to dispense with court dress in his case. His majesty, however, was obdurate, and, in spite of his high position, the president of the local government board had to conform to court regulations before he had an audience with the sovereign. The late John Bright, however, had better luck in his effort to dispense with court dress. Mr. Bright's objection was not a democratic but a religious one. Belonging to the Society of Quakers, he was unwilling to wear the sword which is a part of the ceremonial dress, and the difficulty being brought to the attention of Queen Victoria, her majesty gave special permission for the omission of the weapon. Mr. Burns's objection to court costume is presumably a democratic one, but then he should have thought of this before accepting an office that necessitates an occasional display of frippery, gold lace, and knee breeches.

All Cabinet ministers and other high state officials are expected to possess at least two court uniforms. A complete court dress will cost anything from $900 to $1050. The coat is made entirely from royal blue cloth of the choicest and costliest order, richly embroidered with gold thread, about 800 yards of this thread being used, and it is this item that makes the garment so expensive. The waistcoat is of the same material and splendidly embroidered.

To make the outfit perfect there are breeches of the finest silk, with cream silk hose and footgear of the choicest porpoise hide, adorned with rich silver buckles. These, with a cocked hat and a sword worn by the side, complete the orthodox court suit.

More than 5000 yards of the costliest gold thread are lavished upon the official uniform of the earl marshal. This is probably the most luxurious suit for court wear, and costs the earl marshal $1150.

The complete court dress of a lord chancellor costs that high dignitary $1050. Compared with some of the other court dresses it is rather unpretentious in appearance, but it is made of the finest silk, exclusively woven for this purpose, and that is what makes it a rather costly garment. The correct color for the coat collar of a Cabinet minister is Damascus scarlet, while the collars of some other garments vary in color according to the rank of the wearer, some of the foreign ambassadors wearing white and others royal blue. On these, as on other court garments, there is always bestowed plenty of gold thread, and they range in price from $800 to $1050.

In order to put an end to perplexities on the subject of court dress a book is about to be published by the lord chamberlain stating precisely what may and may not be worn. Hitherto there has been a good deal of latitude allowed and this has resulted in a gradual departure from established rule. An official of the lord chamberlain's department interviewed on the subject says: "It has happened sometimes that a gentleman ordering a suit for court wear has suggested a little more embroidery down the front, a little more cording or a few more buttons on the cuffs. The tailor has adopted the suggestion, and if the result was pleasing others followed the example."

In future no such discretion will be allowed. The king's watermen, the king's swan-keepers, the royal bodyguard, and all the other old and quaint liveries and uniforms will henceforth be absolutely correct. The king himself suggested the book, as the inaccuracies in court dress at levees have frequently annoyed him. The king, as is well known, is a great stickler for absolute correctness in matters of this kind, and his knowledge of them is as great as his consideration. The text-book is therefore to be published by his own booksellers and printers. One result of the publication of this book will be to throw open the market for the supply of court dress. This has hitherto been a very close preserve, and those tailors who had any information on the subject of particular costumes or uniforms guarded the secret very jealously and are now none too pleased at the appearance of a guide giving complete information to every wielder of the shears.

We don't know very much about Finland. It is off the beaten track of the tourist and is usually associated in his mind with aborigines and fish. But as a matter of fact the civilization of Finland is among the finest of the world, her people among the most attractive and intelligent, and her institutions, political and educational, among the most advanced. Last, but not least, the women of Finland have achieved a political equality with men, and as pioneers in so radical a change the experiences of Finland deserve to be noticed. At the present time the Baroness Alexandra Gripenberg, member of the Finnish Diet, is on a lecture tour through Europe in order to make her continental sisters better acquainted with what has been done in her own country. She says that the Finnish women have not been unsexed by their political successes. They continue to love their husbands, to bear them children, to cook, and sew, and care for the house, just as if they had not the right to vote. "Politicians thought we are," the baroness says, "we Finnish women recognize that a wife's first and main duty is to make a happy home for husband and children, to be the husband's loving mate the children's true and careful guardian."

The female deputies in the recently dissolved Diet did not come up to the expected standard of intelligence. That was freely admitted by the baroness, but much had been learned from initial experience and a greater care would now be used in the selection of candidates. There were nineteen female deputies, among them seven teachers, one student, one farmer's wife, one laundress, one servant girl, and one policeman's wife. The women deputies succeeded in passing the following bills: Providing better education for girls and fixing the marriageable age at seven teen years, instead of fifteen. "Encouragement of morality and temperance have been the motto of Finnish suffragettes from the start," concluded the lecturer, "and our great triumph is that we helped to down alcohol."

W. & J. SLOANE

FURNITURE

Exclusive lines for Parlor, Library, Living Room, Dining-Room, Bedroom, Hall, Summer Homes and Offices.

CARPETS

Special weaves and colorings in the greatest variety. Domestic Wiltons and Whole Piece Axminsters. We show all grades.

RUGS

Both Oriental and Domestic. This is by far the largest and choicest stock of Rugs on the Coast. Our Orientals are selected as individual pieces.

Upholstery—Interior Decoration

Our long experience and unequalled facilities enable us to admirably execute special orders.

Van Ness and Sutter

Our reputation is back of every bottle we sell

Old Gilt Edge
Whiskey
Rye or Bourbon

Peyton Chemical Co.

Purchasers and Smelters of
COPPER, GOLD AND SILVER ORES, ETC.
Rooms 657 and 658 Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal.

Smelter and Works at Peyton, Contra Costa Co., Cal.; P. O., Martinez.

Bonestell, Richardson & Co.

PAPER

The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us.
CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE
118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna, San Francisco.

John F. Forbes

Certified Public Accountant

601 KOHL BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO

The Irresistible Current

By Mrs. I. Lowenberg

Price $1.50

Is saturated with an object that is expressed with every evidence of conviction and with no small literary skill. That differences in creed should be an enemy to love, that Jew and Gentile should be separated by religion, is unfortunately no new thing, but Mrs. Lowenberg helps us to appreciate its folly, its pathos, and its needless tragedy.

The opening scene is in New York, where we are introduced to two Jewish families from Germany. The next scene is twenty years later in Missouri. The second generation is growing up in the new Western world, but not without the religious disabilities and creed prejudices that should belong exclusively to a past day in human history. The story is a long one and the plot is intricate, but it is vividly colored by splashes of genuine passion and of real tragedy. The "irresistible current" is the tendency toward a better philosophy of life, an agreement upon the essentials of human conduct that shall take the place of creeds, and a reliance upon a human love and brotherhood that is, after all, the highest expression of the best religion.—The Argonaut.

FOR SALE AT ALL BOOKSTORES

Published by Broadway Publishing Company, New York

Tennent's

Ale and Stout

from Wellpark Brewery Glasgow, Scotland

Forbes Bros., Agents, 1926 Sutter St.

Connecticut Fire Insurance Company
Established 1850 OF HARTFORD
Total Assets $5,817,423
Surplus to Policy-Holders 2,118,394
BENJAMIN J. SMITH
Manager Pacific Department
518 CALIFORNIA STREET
San Francisco

ROUND THE WORLD TOURS DE LUXE

Leaving in August, September and October. Membership limited to twelve. Programmes for the asking.

THOS. COOK & SON
32 Powell Street, San Francisco

MENNER'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER
A Positive Relief For PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN.
Removes all odor of perspiration. Do not wash after shaving. Sold everywhere, or mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample Free.
GERHARD MENNER COMPANY, Newark, N.J.

We Rent New Typewriters

L. & M. ALEXANDER & CO.
MOVED TO
Phone Douglas 2157 512 Market St.
Coast Dealers
L. C. SMITH (Visible)
1908 Model, Ball Bearing

TYPEWRITERS

Mild, Rich and Satisfying Sanchez y Haya Clear Havana Cigars
Factory No. 1 Tampa, Fla.

Tillmann & Bendel Pacific Slope Distributors
THE LATEST STYLES IN Choice Woolens
H. S. BRIDGE & CO.
Merchant Tailors
103-110 Sutter St. French Bank Bldg.

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

Being asked once whether he had read any of the books of a popular novelist, Thackeray rejoined: "Well, no. You see, I am like a pastry cook. I bake tarts and I sell 'em; but I eat bread and butter."

Lord Houghton's sister was often annoyed at her brother's indiscriminate hospitality. "Do you remember, my dear," he asked her at dinner one day, "whether that famous scoundrel X was hanged or acquitted?" "He must have been hanged, or you would have had him to dinner long ago," replied the lady.

Recently two or three politicians called to see Mr. Kern at his office. One of them jocularly asked Mr. Kern why he wore "those whiskers." Mr. Kern stroked them thoughtfully and lovingly a few seconds and then remarked: "Well, boys, I don't know, but I think I wear them chiefly because they belong to me."

Judge Robertson of Chandler stopped a little newsboy at the Brown Palace at the Denver convention and asked for an Oklahoma paper. "Where is Oklahoma?" asked another newsboy who stood by. "I don't know where the h— it is, but it's where all this convention came from," answered the first hopeful.

The late Dr. W. B. Robertson of Irvine was once addressing a hoys' meeting, and having delighted them with some of his racy anecdotes, he began to draw to a close by saying: "Now I'm going to point out the moral of all this." "Never mind the moral," shouted a little fellow from the middle of the hall; "gie's anither story."

A physician in a small town was distinguished by his inability to remember names and people. One day, while making out a patient's receipt, his visitor's name escaped him. Not wishing to appear so forgetful, and thinking to get a clue, he asked her whether she spelled her name with an e or i. The lady smilingly replied, "Why, doctor, my name is Hill."

They were discussing the relative position of various countries as musical centres. Germany seemed to have the most votaries, much to the evident displeasure of one excitable Italian, who wished his own country to carry off the palm. "Italy is turning out the most musicians, and has always turned out the most," he cried. "Ach Gott!" exclaimed a German present, "can you plame dem?"

A king's coachman is a personage of no small importance. Certainly the coachman to her late majesty, Queen Victoria, had a hefting sense of the dignity and responsibility of his position. On the occasion of the jubilee of 1887 he was asked if he was driving any of the royal and imperial guests at that time quartered in Buckingham Palace. "No, sir," was his reply. "I am the queen's coachman; I don't drive the riffraff."

Two stories are told of the time when the Athenæum Club, while its club-house was undergoing renovation, were hospitably taken in by the United Service Club. One was of a distinguished officer who, after a vain hunt for his umbrella, was heard to mutter: "That comes of letting those hishops into the club!" The counterblast is to the effect that when an Athenæum man, while his club was still the guest of the other, asked for the librarian, the answer was: "Please, sir, he is in the dining-room, carving the roast heef!"

The Rev. Thomas Alexander, a Presbyterian minister, long resident in Chelsea, and well known as a hrother Scot, was most anxious to know Carlyle, but had no opportunity of getting an introduction to him. One day, in the King's Road, he saw Carlyle coming in his direction, and took advantage of the opportunity by going up to the sage and saying: "Thomas Carlyle, I believe?" Carlyle's reply was: "Tom Alexander, I know!" They became good friends, and later Mr. Alexander wrote to Carlyle for a subscription toward a school building fund, and Carlyle wrote back a refusal in doggerel, whereupon Mr. Alexander replied that if he did not send him five pounds, he would sell his poetry to a collector or publish it. The five pounds were at once forthcoming.

Minister Ransom, when he was in the Senate, was one day going down the capitol steps when he saw approaching a very dull, long-winded man. Ransom was in no mental or physical shape to hear the droning of a full-fledged bore just at that moment. As the dull one drew near, Ransom greeted him with sour shortness, and hurried by. The other had paused; but at this brief dismissal turned away. Ransom, smitten of conscience at his own rudeness, turned pleasantly when some ten steps separated him from the bore, and called out: "Good-by, Simpkins! I've been thinking a mighty heap about you lately, Simpkins!" At this, Simpkins began to he-tray symptoms of returning. "But don't come back, Simpkins," remonstrated Ransom, wildly motioning with both hands; "I've been thinking a mighty heap about you lately, Simpkins; but don't come back; don't come back!"

On one of the week-end cruises the Hartford ran into Castine, Maine, where crowds of visitors hoarded the ship. One old, grizzled farmer fell into the hands of a youngster from Montana. For the time being ventilators became torpedo tubes, those "sticks" up in the air were to hold up fog nets, the ropes were clothes lines, the engines ran by radium, and the Hartford was the fastest ship afloat. The old hoy seemed deeply interested, especially in the chute for getting overboard the legs and arms that might be adrift in action, and the valve for letting out whatever water might run into the ship. When he finally went over the side he was profuse in his thanks. Turning to his escort he drew out his card, on which was engraved: "Rear-Admiral, U. S. N., Retired," and said: "The old ship has changed since I commanded her!"

THE MERRY MUSE.

Milk and Sugar.

The milkman and the grocer:
Were walking on the strand.
"I dearly love the water!"
The former chuckled. And
The grocer with a wink averred
He just adored the sand!
—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The Faithful Prune.

The shortcake halts a moment on its way,
The watermelon hath a henceward trend,
The cantaloupe drops in, but not to stay—
The prune alone is faithful to the end.
—Cleveland News.

The Olympiad "Foreigners."

The hammer throw had been announced, the huggles had been blown;
The heavy hammers flew and bounced, by mighty giants thrown.
"Who wins it?" cried the eager throng. "Who captures this event?"
And the Irish entries came along, retiring on their tent.

"A foreigner has beaten us,"
They answered with a groan;
"A foreigner—United States—
A fellow named Malone."

A dozen men were crouched to start, and the starter fired the gun;
And as a how projects a dart, the men were off to run.

"Who wins it?" cried the eager crowd. "Who captures this event?"
And the German sprinters, sad and howed, retired upon their tent.

"A foreigner has conquered us,"
They said, and winced a bit;
"A foreigner—United States—
His name is Otto Schmidt."

The hurdle race was duly called, and the starter fired the shot;
And some there were were overhauled, and some there were were not.

"Who wins it?" cried the multitude. "Who wins this last event?"
And the Frenchmen, beaten and subdued, retired upon their tent.

"A foreigner outthurdled us,"
They said with little heart;
"A foreigner—United States—
A man named Bonaparte."

The running jump was on the card, and men went high aloft;
And some men hit the island hard, and others hit it soft.

"Who wins it?" cried the eager mass. "Who captures this event?"
And the Swedish jumpers sadly passed, retiring on their tent.

"A foreigner has won," they said,
"Some fellow from Wisconsin—
He yump like sixty, and his name,
His name han Yonny Yonson."
—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Remedial Partisanship.

Park Wells's hay trotter, Queen Thoroughbred Bess,
Got hit on th' track by th' Lightnin' Express,
An' they heat Park in court, 'cause th' railroads is rich.
So he's down on th' courts an' th' railroads an' sich;
He voted for Teddy last time, but he said
He's afraid Taft aint no such huster as Ted.
So it's Bryan for him.

Jay Gibbons aint got no job any more
An' they shut off his credit at Jenkins's store;
So Jay is ripoarin' an' makin' 'em jump,
Th' hankers an' shylocks, from out on th' stump.
He's read all th' platforms, behind an' before,
An' says that th' Bryan one promises more.
So it's Bryan for him.
—New York Sun.

There was a good deal of sound human nature in the unexpected reply of the dying old woman to her minister's leading question: "Here at the end of a long life, which of the Lord's mercies are you most thankful for?" Her eyes brightened as she answered: "My victuals."

A. Hirschman.

For fine jewelry and silverware. 1641-1643 Van Ness Avenue.

BANKING
The Anglo-Californian Bank, Ltd.
Established 1873
Head Office—London
Main Office—Pine and Sansome Streets, San Francisco
Branches—1020 Van Ness Avenue, Mission and Sixteenth Streets, San Francisco
Managers: I. Steinhart, P. N. Lilienthal
Capital paid in $1,500,000
Surplus and undivided profits $1,449,721
A General Banking Business Conducted. Accounts of Corporations, Firms, and Individuals Solicited. Correspondence invited.
Safe Deposit Vaults at Van Ness Avenue and Mission Branches.

French Savings Bank
108 Sutter Street, near Montgomery
Paid up Capital $600,000
Total Assets 4,270,800
Strictly a Savings Bank. Open Saturday Evening from 7 to 8:30
OFFICERS—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, 1st Vice-President; Leon Bocqueraz, 2d Vice-President; A. Bousquet, Secretary; P. A. Bergerot, Attorney.
DIRECTORS—N. C. Bahin, J. A. Bergerot, Charles Carpy, Arthur Legallet, G. Belcney, H. de St. Seine, J. M. Dupas, Leon Bocqueraz, J. E. Artigues, J. S. Godcau, John Ginty.
SAFE DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT
The French-American Bank occupies offices in the same building.

The German Savings and Loan Society
526 California St., San Francisco
Guaranteed Capital $1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds 1,453,983.62
Deposits June 30, 1908 34,474,584.23
Total Assets 37,055,263.31
OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohde; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.
BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohde, Ign. Steinhart, J. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse, and W. S. Goodfellow.

LONDON PARIS NATIONAL BANK
N. W. cor. Sutter and Sansome
CAPITAL $2,500,000
SURPLUS 620,000
Sig Greenebaum, President
H. Fleishacker, Vice-President and Mgr.
R. Altschul, Cashier

The National Bank ROLL OF HONOR
The title "Roll of Honor National Bank" is a distinction of which any financial institution in the United States may be proud. As is well known a "Roll of Honor Bank" is one possessing surplus and profits in excess of capital. A place on the Roll of Honor can not be bought, it must be earned.
This bank has for a long time been known as a "Roll of Honor Bank" among banks and bankers.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK of Berkeley
UNITED STATES DEPOSITORY
A. W. NAYLOR, Pres. F. M. WILSON, Vice-Pres.
F. L. NAYLOR, Cashier. F. C. MORTIMER, Asst. Cashier.

THE BERKELEY NATIONAL BANK
United States Depository
Berkeley, Cal.
HOUSEHOLD AND COMMERCIAL ACCOUNTS INVITED
DIRECTORS—George P. Baxter, Pres.; J. W. Richards, Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Bangs, Vice-Pres.; Louis Titus, Dr. Thomas Addison, A. G. Freeman, Duncan McDuffie, Perry E. Tompkins, F. L. Lipman, W. J. Hotchkiss, and Whitney Palache. P. H. ATKINSON, Cashier.

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS
Bearing the script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label.
Get "Improved," no tacks required.
Wood Rollers Tin Rollers

WESTERN ASSURANCE COMPANY
TORONTO
U. S. Assets $2,493,154
Surplus 483,989
PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT
1004 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE
SAN FRANCISCO
J. J. KENNY, Manager W. L. W. MILLER, Assistant Manager

Romeike's Press Clipping Bureau
Will send you all newspaper clippings which may appear about you, your friends, or any subject on which you want to be "up to date."
A large force in my New York office reads 650 daily papers and over 2000 weeklies and magazines, in fact, every paper of importance published in the United States, for 5000 subscribers and, through the European Bureaus, all the leading papers in the civilized globe.
Clippings found for subscribers and pasted on slips giving name and date of paper, and are mailed day by day.
Write for circular and terms.
HENRY ROMEIKE
110 and 112 W. 26th St., New York.
Branches: London, Paris, Berlin, Sydney.

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

These weeks of late summer and early autumn have plunged the world of holiday-makers into the limbo of between-seasons. Returning from country to town, everybody is unsettled and everything is waiting to be settled. Nothing definite can be expected of the weather, because it is the turn of the season, the summer styles and fabrics are passé and the autumn ones are not yet established, and by the same token nobody knows where to locate anybody, for those who were in the country yesterday may be in town tomorrow and vice versa.

The engagement is announced of Miss Madeline Bohrmann of Sausalito and Mr. Henry Clay Miller. No date has as yet been decided on for the wedding.

Mrs. Valentine Goldsmith Hush announces the engagement of her daughter, Florence Beale Hush, to Mr. Charles Harvey Bentley.

The marriage of Miss Grace Davis and Mr. Frank E. Booth was solemnized Saturday by Rev. Bradford Leavitt at the Davis home in Baker Street.

A dinner in honor of Miss Irene Van Arsdale and Lieutenant Kurtz, U. S. N., was given Saturday on board the U. S. S. Intrepid by the officers of the ship.

Mrs. J. Parker Currier was hostess at a bridge party at the Hotel Rafael a few days ago. Mrs. Currier's guests were: Mrs. Henry L. Dodge, Mrs. Walter Dean, Mrs. William P. Morgan, Mrs. William Thomas, Mrs. M. P. Jones, Mrs. Sharpe, Mrs. Gale, Mrs. Walter Quick, Mrs. Howard Holmes, Mrs. George Tay, Mrs. Webster Jones, Mrs. Somers, and Miss Gwin.

The Misses Morrison of San Jose entertained a house party over the week-end. Their guests were: Colonel John L. Clem, U. S. A., and Mrs. Clem, Dr. Field, U. S. N., and Mrs. Field, Colonel Brainard, U. S. A., Colonel Lockwood, U. S. A., Captain Johnson, U. S. A., and Mr. Whitney.

Mrs. Louis Hobart entertained a number of friends recently in honor of Mrs. Charles B. Alexander at her home in El Cerrito.

Miss Maude Payne was the guest of honor at a luncheon given by Miss Janet Coleman at her home on California Street. Miss Coleman's guests were: Miss Maud Payne, the Misses Calhoun, Mrs. Leonard Hammond, Miss Marguerite Barron, Mrs. Roy Somers, Miss Helen Baker, Miss Anita Davis, Miss Ysabel Brewer, and Miss Viola Meyers.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be a found a résumé of movements to and from this city and Coast and the whereabouts of absent Californians:

Mr. and Mrs. Francis Carolan are still in Paris and are planning to return to California in the autumn.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Dimond are spending a fortnight in the Tahoe region.

Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Worden are at Tahoe, where they will spend a week or two before returning to town.

Mrs. Charles Fee and her daughters, Martha and Elizabeth, have returned from Lake Tahoe, where they have been all summer.

Baroness von Schroeder and her two daughters, Jeannette and Edith von Schroeder, came up from the Von Schroeder ranch last week and spent a few days in San Rafael.

Lieutenant J. C. Burnett, U. S. A., has been the guest of his sister, Mrs. Llewellyn Jones.

Mrs. Charles B. Alexander and the Misses Alexander of New York are making a tour of the southern part of the State.

Dr. and Mrs. Beverly McConagle and their son Douglas are motoring through Lake County.

Mr. and Mrs. Willard Drown have returned from their visit to Boca.

Misses Frances and Mary Jolliffe are in Ireland, guests of their cousin, Mrs. Cryan.

Miss Polhemus and Miss Mills expect to return next month to San Jose, after an extended residence in Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. Elliott McAllister are at Lake Tahoe for several weeks.

Mrs. James Potter Langhorne, who has been visiting friends in the southern part of the State, is expected to return to her home in this city within a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. Mayo Newhall are in Santa Barbara.

Mrs. Evan Pillsbury has been entertaining Miss Madeline Bohrmann during the past few weeks at her home in Montecito.

Mrs. Porter Ashe has returned to her home, after her visit to relatives near Philadelphia.

Mr. Hubert Mee and her son, Hubert Mee, have returned from Lake Tahoe to their home in San Rafael.

Mr. and Mrs. Covington Pringle have taken a house in town and are planning to close their home in Menlo Park.

Rev. Edward Morgan, rector of St. Luke's Church, is spending his vacation at Tahoe.

Mr. Spencer Grant has returned to town, after several weeks spent in Yosemite Valley.

Rear-Admiral James H. Dayton is spending the week at Lake Tahoe.

Miss Vera de Sahla has returned to her home in San Mateo, after a visit to Miss Maude Wilson in Sausalito.

Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Hammond when last heard from had joined their son and his wife, the Richard Hammonds, in Switzerland.

Mr. and Mrs. George Boardman, who have spent the summer at Del Monte, have returned to their home.

Mrs. William Mayo Newhall and the Misses Newhall have returned from Tahoe to their home in this city.

Mr. and Mrs. Leon Bocqueraz have sailed for Europe, where they will spend their honeymoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Welch are at Santa Barbara, the guests of friends.

Mrs. George Lent, Mrs. Samuel Knight, Miss Hooker, and Miss Charlotte Land of New York are at Aetna Springs.

Mrs. A. M. Easton of San Mateo is taking an extended motor trip through the State.

Miss Cora Smedburg is the guest of Mrs. Joseph S. Tobin at San Mateo.

Mrs. L. L. Lawson sailed on the out-going transport Sheridan to join her husband, Captain Lawson, U. S. A., in the Philippines.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Payot, who have spent the summer across the bay, are at home again on Ellis Street.

Miss Minnie Moughton is at Lake Tahoe for a fortnight.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Payne, who have been in Paris, are now making a tour through Italy.

Mrs. Eleanor Martin was a guest at The Peninsula, San Mateo, last week, visiting Mr. and Mrs. Peter Martin.

Colonel L. H. Clement, U. S. A., and Mrs. Clement and their daughter, Miss Ethel Clement, are at the Hotel California for the winter.

Mrs. A. W. Bjornstad, wife of Captain Bjornstad, U. S. A., has arrived from Cuba and is at the Fairmont.

Commander Edward Darrell, U. S. N., of the U. S. S. West Virginia, and Mrs. Darrell are visiting Mr. Thomas C. Grant at his country place in Napa County.

Mr. William H. Keith is visiting his mother at her home in this city prior to his departure for New York and Paris.

Miss Gertrude Hyde-Smith has been the guest of Mrs. William Wood at Lake Tahoe during the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. Laurance Scott are motoring through the Tahoe region.

Mr. and Mrs. Homer S. King and Miss Hazel King are at Lake Louise, Canada.

Mrs. A. D. Sharon and Miss Florence Breckenridge are entertaining Miss Mary Keeney at their home in Menlo Park.

Mr. and Mrs. Willard Wayman have returned from their trip abroad and are at their country place at Ross for the remainder of the summer.

Mrs. A. N. Towne is one of the recent arrivals at Tahoe.

Miss Lucie King has returned to town from a series of visits in the country.

At the Hotels.

Admiral Swinburne has been at the St. Francis for the past few days. Mrs. Swinburne, who has been a guest of the Cuyler Lees and a recent visitor at Del Monte, has joined her husband, and when the admiral goes to Honolulu in command of the Pacific Squadron intends to go over to the island accompanied by Mrs. Emile Brugiere.

Colonel Marion P. Maus of Monterey, who succeeds General Funston, arrived with Mrs. Maus last Sunday at the Hotel St. Francis.

Judge Alton B. Parker has arrived at the St. Francis with Mr. Delancy Nicoll of New York.

Mr. John J. Akin, general manager of the Los Angeles street railway system, is at the St. Francis with Mrs. Akin.

The Maharajah of Sikkim is at the St. Francis with Major O'Conner of the British army.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Morgan Hill of Washington, D. C., are guests of the Hotel St. Francis.

Mr. Charles Strauss of New York is at the St. Francis with Mrs. Strauss and their children, Edith and Eugene.

The latest accessions to the theatrical colony at the St. Francis are the principals who are to appear in the cast of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Y. Rice were also guests prior to their sailing on the Siberia. Mrs. Rice is the authoress of the famous novel from which the play was dramatized.

The following have engaged suites for the fall and winter at the Hotel Jefferson: Mr. and Mrs. C. Mason Kinnie, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Washburn, Mrs. W. W. Young and Miss Ella Young, Mrs. N. A. Whitaker and Miss Gertrude Whitaker, Mr. and Mrs. John W. Butler, Mrs. Norman Rideout of Marysville, Mr. and Mrs. J. Carter and Miss Mary Carter of Honolulu, Mrs. J. A. Hopper and Miss Margaret and Miss Katherine Hopper of Honolulu.

Mr. and Mrs. William R. Hearst, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Shearn, all of New York, motored down from Pleasanton, where they have been spending a short time at Mrs. Phebe Hearst's home, and were the guests of the Fairmont while in San Francisco.

Mrs. L. L. Armsby of Washington, D. C., arrived from the Orient on the Siberia and left for the north on the steamer President.

During her stay in this city Mrs. Armsby was the guest of the Fairmont.

Mrs. Marion Lambert and Mrs. Nichols of St. Louis, Missouri, are now at the Fairmont.

Rear-Admiral Theo F. Jewell, U. S. N., retired, accompanied by Mrs. Jewell, has taken apartments at the Fairmont.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Avery McCarthy of Los Angeles are in the city and are registered at the Fairmont.

Mr. M. J. Connell of Los Angeles was a guest of the Fairmont for a short while this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Towle of St. Paul are making an extensive trip on the Coast and are at the Fairmont for the present.

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Fox, U. S. N., and Mr. F. P. Williams, U. S. N., are among the latest additions to the navy colony at the Fairmont.

Mr. Z. A. Spalding of Hawaii is one of the visitors now residing at the Fairmont.

Dr. and Mrs. L. Duncan Bulkley of New York are at the Fairmont for a short visit, as are Mr. and Mrs. I. C. Coffin of the same city.

Major Burnham, soldier, hunter, and traveler, is at the Fairmont. Major Burnham makes his home in Pasadena.

Among visitors from the South at the Fairmont are Mrs. M. E. Cantherm of Lampasas, Texas, and Miss Nan Wilson of Atlanta, Georgia.

Mr. A. Besack, a merchant of St. Petersburg, Russia, is stopping at the Fairmont.

Miss Adele Schroeder, Miss Ellen M. Fiske, and Mr. Edward P. Cormins, all of Boston, are among the guests at the Fairmont.

Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Aubrey and Surgeon S. J. Call of the United States Reclamation Service are at the Fairmont. They are registered from El Paso.

Mrs. S. W. Haynes of Piedmont has taken apartments at the St. Francis.

Dr. Henry Steven Kierstedt, U. S. A., and Mrs. Kierstedt came up from Del Monte Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Harriman in their private car and engaged rooms at the St. Francis.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sutro, who have been spending the summer out of town, have returned to pass the winter at the St. Francis.

Mr. Charles Rann Kennedy will be at the St. Francis for a few days with his wife (Miss Mathison) before her departure for the East with the Henry Miller players.

Mr. A. H. Branner of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Hobart of New York, Mrs. F. M. Taylor and Miss Taylor of New York, are among the recent arrivals at the Fairmont.

Mr. E. H. Harriman was the guest of the Fairmont during his stay in San Francisco. Mrs. E. H. Harriman, who with her daughters went to Del Monte from Sacramento, have arrived in this city and are at the Fairmont.

Mrs. Harriman is accompanied by Miss Harriman and Miss Carol Harriman, while the two boys are with their father.

Among recent arrivals at Hotel Normandie are Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Dubbell, San Bernardino; Mrs. F. Birdsall, Sacramento; Mrs. C. E. Darling, Nome; Mrs. Emil Steinmann, Miss Alice Steinmann, Miss B. Graham, Sacramento; Mrs. T. C. McGirr, Denver; Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Harrison, Menlo Park; Miss C. M. Hotopp, Washington, D. C.; Mr. Stewart M. Last, Mrs. C. F. Last, Miss S. Menzies, Los Angeles.

The German law does not forbid the granting of a commission to a Jew either with the colors or in the reserve; but there is not one single Hebrew officer in the active army, and but few in the reserve. The law is with them, but race prejudice wholly against them, and even the Kaiser seems powerless to break this down, although he is making new efforts.

Four little Angora goats, drawing a small conveyance and their master, are making a trip across the American continent from San Diego, California, to New York. The goats travel on an average fifteen miles a day.

DR. ROBERT E. O'CONNELL, DR. GEORGE D. O'CONNELL, DENTISTS, Hastings Building, Post Street and Grant Avenue. Tel. Douglas 2733.

PAINTING Decorative Designing

DRAWING Illustrating

MODELING Teachers' Course

Daily, Night and Saturday Classes. Opens August 10. Circulars mailed on application to the San Francisco Institute of Art, California and Mason Streets, San Francisco.

OPENING of the SCHOOL OF DESIGN SAN FRANCISCO INSTITUTE OF ART (formerly Mark Hopkins Institute) Affiliated with the State University

PAINTING Decorative Designing

DRAWING Illustrating

MODELING Teachers' Course

Daily, Night and Saturday Classes. Opens August 10. Circulars mailed on application to the San Francisco Institute of Art, California and Mason Streets, San Francisco.

PAINTING Decorative Designing

DRAWING Illustrating

MODELING Teachers' Course

Daily, Night and Saturday Classes. Opens August 10. Circulars mailed on application to the San Francisco Institute of Art, California and Mason Streets, San Francisco.

PAINTING Decorative Designing

DRAWING Illustrating

MODELING Teachers' Course

Daily, Night and Saturday Classes. Opens August 10. Circulars mailed on application to the San Francisco Institute of Art, California and Mason Streets, San Francisco.

Pears'

Most soaps clog the skin pores by the fats and free alkali in their composition.

Pears' is quickly rinsed off, leaves the pores open and the skin soft and cool.

Established in 1789.

FAIRMONT HOTEL

REASONABLE IN RATES

Splendid single rooms, with attached bath, $2.50, $3.00, $3.50, $4.00, $5.00, $6.00, $7.50. Beautiful suites with bath $10.00 upward.

Palace Hotel Company

A MONTH OF SPORTS

at matchless

DEL MONTE

DEL MONTE DOG SHOW August 26th-27th-28th DEL MONTE GOLF TOURNAMENT August 31st-September 5th DEL MONTE TENNIS TOURNAMENT September 7th-19th

Reduced railroad fare from all California points. Hand-some prizes. Splendid sport under ideal conditions. Make your reservations now for this time. Address

H. R. WARNER, Manager

"The Peninsula"

SAN MATEO, CAL.

A Twentieth Century Hotel of the Highest Degree of Excellence

NOW OPEN

AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLAN

Thirty minutes by rail from San Francisco. Located in a beautiful park of thirty years' cultivation. All the charm and delight of the country combined with the attractions and conveniences of the metropolis.

For Reservation or Information Address

JAMES H. DOOLITTLE, Mgr., San Mateo, Cal.

MT. TAMALPAIS AND MUIR WOODS VIA SAUSALITO FERRY FOOT OF MARKET ST. LEGAL HOLIDAYS-SUNDAY TIME

Table with 6 columns: Lv. San Francisco, Sun-Day, Week-Day, Lv. Muir Woods, Week-Day, Lv. Tamalpais, Week-Day. Includes departure times for various days and a note about ticket office at Sausalito Ferry.

WHEN you are hot and tired after shopping, come up and have some delicious tea (unusually good here) with toasted muffins. Equally good coffee, if you prefer it.

YE TEA CUP INNE 1427 Bush Street, below Van Ness (upstairs)

Hotel St. Francis

The spirit of good service and the facilities that produce it.

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF JAMES WOODS

Why Not Make Your Home At The Hotel Jefferson

Turk and Gough Streets
Facing Jefferson Square

A superior class hotel with every modern convenience and comfort. Operated on the American and European plans. Special rates to permanent guests. Special attention paid to the table—we invite comparisons. Management Noah W. Gray, formerly manager Alexander Young Hotel, Honolulu, and Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

You Can Live At The Hotel Jefferson Better And For Less Than At Home

THE "NIPPON MURA"

Family Resort between Saratoga and Los Gatos

Has increased its accommodations, main building furnace heated, beautifully furnished rooms with all modern conveniences. Open all the year. Positively exclusive. For information address THEODORE J. MORRIS, Proprietor, Los Gatos, Cal.

Hotel del Coronado

Motto: "BEST OF EVERYTHING"
Most Delightful Climate on Earth
American Plan. Summer rates $3.50 per day each and upward, or $21.00 per week each and upward
"Good Music" and "Fine Automobile Road, Los Angeles-Riverside to Coronado."
Golf, Tennis, Polo, and other outdoor sports every day in the year.
New 700-foot ocean pier, for fishing. Boating and Bathing are the very best. Send for booklet to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado Beach, Cal.
Or see H. F. NORCROSS, Agent, 334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles.
Tel. A 6789; Main 3917.
22d Street and Broadway

The VOORHIES BUILDING now has an entrance from Van Ness Avenue, and a specialist is desired to occupy the furnished offices of the late Dr. Voorhies. Apply to

GRANTLAND VOORHIES
1334 Van Ness Avenue

Dr. W. A. Whelan

DENTIST

406 Sutter St., corner of Stockton
Phone Kearny 174

GOODYEAR "HIPPO" HOSE

The best and strongest Garden Hose. Guaranteed to stand 700 lbs. pressure.

Try it and be convinced.

GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY
R. H. PEASE, President
587, 589, 591 Market St. at Second St.
SAN FRANCISCO

Roy C. Ward Jas. W. Dean
Jas. K. Polk Geo. E. Billings

GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.

ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE EFFECTED

312 California Street. Phone Douglas 2283
San Francisco, Cal.

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy people who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

The officers who participated in the walking contest were Colonel John C. Clem, U. S. A., Colonel G. H. Torney, U. S. A., Colonel Adam Slaker, U. S. A., Colonel J. Walter Bennet, U. S. A., Colonel G. L. Anderson, U. S. A., Major W. A. Bethel, U. S. A., and Major J. M. Kennedy, U. S. A.

Lieutenant-Colonel John C. Gresham, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., chief umpire of manoeuvres to be held at camp of instruction at Murray, Washington, will proceed from Boise Barracks to that camp for duty.

Leave of absence to and including October 31 is granted Major Daniel E. Devore, Eleventh Infantry, U. S. A., to take effect upon the completion of his duties in connection with the camp of instruction to be held at American Lake, Washington.

A board of survey consisting of Major H. C. Dawson, A. Q. M., and First Lieutenant A. B. Owens, U. S. A., is ordered to convene at the office of the depot quartermaster, U. S. M. A., San Francisco, California.

Paymaster George P. Dyer, U. S. N., who has spent two months in San Francisco engaged in fitting out the supply ships of the battleship fleet, has returned to Washington, D. C.

Assistant Naval Constructor E. C. Manner is detached from duty with the Second Torpedo Flotilla and assigned to duty at the Navy Yard, Mare Island.

Passed Assistant Paymaster B. A. McMillan, U. S. N., is to be detached from duty at the Navy Yard, Mare Island, and assigned to duty as general storekeeper and pay officer at the Naval Training Station, San Francisco, August 15.

Captain Albert E. Truby, U. S. A., is relieved from duty as a member of the Board of Medical Officers appointed to meet at the General Hospital, Presidio of San Francisco, for the purpose of conducting the preliminary examinations of applicants for appointment in the Medical Corps of the army.

Captain Morton J. Henry is relieved from duty in the Philippine Division, to take effect on or about October 6, and will then proceed to San Francisco, California, and upon arrival report by telegraph to the adjutant-general of the army for further orders.

Leave of absence for three months on surgeon's certificate of disability is granted Captain Joseph Matson, Coast Artillery Corps U. S. A.

Captain Leroy T. Hillman, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., is transferred from the Forty-Fifth Company to the One Hundred and Twelfth Company and will join the latter company.

Captain William H. Tobin, U. S. A., will occupy the office of quartermaster at the Presidio of San Francisco until the arrival of Captain Abraham S. Bickham, U. S. A., from Manila.

Captain A. J. Matthews is detailed as judge advocate of general court-martial at the Navy Yard at Mare Island.

Lieutenant Edwin W. Dodd, U. S. N., of the Granpus (submarine) is stationed for temporary duty at Mare Island.

First Lieutenant Charles H. Knight, U. S. A., is relieved from duty with the First Battalion, Corps of Engineers, at Fort Mason, and will proceed to St. Louis for duty.

First Lieutenant Frank O. Whitlock, U. S. A., unassigned, Fourteenth Cavalry, has been assigned to Troop M, Presidio of San Francisco.

First Lieutenant Hiram A. Phillips, U. S. A., is relieved from duty with Company B, Hospital Corps, General Hospital, at the Presidio of San Francisco, to take effect at such time as will enable him to comply with this order, and will proceed on the transport to sail from San Francisco on or about September 5 for the Philippine Islands, and upon arrival at Manila will report in person to the commanding general of the Philippine Division for assignment to duty.

First Lieutenant Otis R. Cole, U. S. A., upon his arrival in San Francisco en route to the Philippines will report in person to the commanding general of the Department of California for duty pending the departure of the transport on which he may secure accommodation.

Leave of absence for two months upon completion of his duties at the Pacific Rifle and Pistol Competition, Presidio of Monterey, is granted First Lieutenant Austin M. Pardee, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A.

First Lieutenant Charles T. Leeds, U. S. A., Corps of Engineers, is relieved from his station at Los Angeles and will proceed to Pasadena and take station.

Lieutenant George E. Turner, U. S. A., will be stationed at Gilroy while on duty with the progressive military map of the United States.

Arrangements are going forward to install a postoffice on every ship in the United States navy, authorization having been made at the last session of Congress. Enlisted men on each ship will be appointed postmaster and assistant postmaster, their regular pay to be increased by $500 and $300 a year respectively.

At Out-of-Town Hotels.

Miss Genevieve King and her brother, Mr. Frank B. King, went to Del Monte last week and spent the week-end.

Mrs. T. W. Morgan Draper and Miss Dorothy Draper are at Del Monte, where they will spend a few weeks.

Mrs. E. H. Harriman, Miss Harriman, and Miss Carol Harriman arrived at Del Monte in their private car last Thursday, and after a couple of days' stay departed for San Mateo, where they will be the guests of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Crocker for a few days before joining Mr. Harriman at his hunting lodge on the shores of Upper Klamath Lake.

A party composed of Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Horace D. Pillsbury, Miss Jennie Crocker, Mr. Harry H. Scott, and Mr. S. E. Sherwin spent the week-end at Del Monte.

Dr. and Mrs. Beverly MacMonagle and their son, Douglas, arrived at Del Monte on Sunday for a short visit.

Eight army officers under command of Colonel A. Lundeen, post commander of the Presidio, who are on the ninety-mile endurance ride in accordance with President Roosevelt's order, spent Monday and Tuesday at The Peninsula, San Mateo. The party consisted of Colonel J. A. Lundeen, Major Stevens, Major Williamson, Major Pickett, Colonel Marsh, Major Wright, Major Schreiner, Major Ruckman.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Martin, who are living at The Peninsula, San Mateo, gave a dinner last week at which were present Mr. James D. Phelan, Mr. Enrico Grau, Miss Alice Hager, and Mr. and Mrs. Walter Martin.

Mr. and Mrs. Sol Wangerheim have taken apartments at The Peninsula for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. H. L. E. Meyer, Jr., spent Sunday at The Peninsula.

Mrs. Columbus Waterhouse and Mrs. S. W. Waterhouse were among the automobilists at The Peninsula Sunday.

Miss Elise Clark of San Francisco is a guest of the A. P. Reddings at The Peninsula.

Miss Black, daughter of General Manager Black of the United Railroads, is a guest at The Peninsula for several weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Scott were over-Sunday visitors at The Peninsula, San Mateo.

Miss Hooker of San Francisco, Mrs. Samuel Knight of Burlingame, and Miss Land of New York are guests of Mrs. George Lent of San Francisco at Etna Springs.

Mr. and Mrs. Seth Mann of San Francisco and Mr. and Mrs. Bush Fimmel of San Francisco are guests at Etna Springs.

Among the arrivals from San Francisco at Byron Hot Springs during the past week were the following: Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Hilmer, Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Levy, Mr. and Mrs. John T. Gilmartin, Mr. Harry Leap, Dr. Louis Stern, Mrs. Henry Williams.

Recent arrivals at Hotel Del Monte include Mr. and Mrs. William Fries, Miss Dorothy K. Fries, Mrs. W. C. Morrow, Miss Ynez Pischel, Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Hanford, Mr. and Mrs. Armsby, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. O'Brien, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Kidwell, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Clark, Judge Jeremiah V. Coffey, Mr. J. V. Coffey, Mrs. S. D. Freshman, Mr. J. O. Tobin, Mr. J. H. Noyes.

The following guests from San Francisco are registered at Etna Springs: Mrs. George Lent, Miss Hooker, Mr. and Mrs. Bush Fimmel, Miss Brown, Mr. Thomas F. Boyle, Mr. Solomon Davis, Mr. Robert A. Roos, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Hanna, Mr. F. H. Coon, Mr. H. E. Monroe, Mrs. T. F. Boyle, Mr. Eugene Unger, Mr. Sol Arenson, Mr. George A. Cohn.

Among the arrivals from San Francisco at Hotel Del Coronado for the week ending August 9 were Mr. John S. Howell, Dr. and Mrs. George K. Frink, children and maid, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Newmark, Mr. and Mrs. E. O. Lindblom and son, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Lowenstein, Mr. A. L. LeCompt, Mr. M. R. Pratt, Mr. Ward A. Dwight, Mr. Burton Haines, Mr. A. Glass, Mr. Louis E. Pels, Mr. F. J. Berf, Mr. J. C. Feige, Mr. and Mrs. C. N. Stewart.

THE OCULARIUM
Henry Kahn Co.
OPTICIANS
KODAKS & SUPPLIES
SCIENTIFIC INSTRUMENTS
Catalogues Free
644 MARKET ST.
OPP. PALACE HOTEL
BRANCH 1309 VAN NESS AVE.

To dine or lunch amid surroundings thoroughly refined, to enjoy the satisfaction that goes with perfect cuisine and service, is the unbroken, daily experience of the guests of the
Hotel Normandie
Lunch 75c—Dinner $1.00—Sunday Dinner $1.25

Hotel Majestic
(Sutter and Gough)
A homelike hotel for refined people. Very best cuisine. Moderate prices. Rates on application.

Hotel Colonial
THE SELECT HOTEL OF SAN FRANCISCO
Stockton above Sutter Street
American and European Plans
Special Rates to Permanent
HOWARD T. BLETHEN, Manager
Telephone, Kearny 4734

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel
"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"
Building, concrete, steel and marble.
Located, most fashionable shopping district.
210 rooms, 135 baths.
Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests.
Most refined hostelry in Seattle.
Absolutely fireproof.
English Grill.
Rates, $1.00 up

Hotel Rafael
San Rafael, Cal.
Open year around. Headquarters Automobile League. New and commodious garage. Fifty minutes from San Francisco. Complete change of climate. Tihuron or Sausalito Ferry. All modern conveniences.
F. N. Orpin, Proprietor.

Interior of magnificent living room.

FOR SALE

A BARGAIN
Beautiful Artistic Residence

12 rooms and 3 baths; hardwood inlaid floors throughout.
UNOBSTRUCTED MARINE VIEW
The mantels and fixtures in this house are the most attractive ever installed in this city. House just completed has never been occupied.

EXTRA LARGE CORNER LOT
75 x 102 ft. with "L"
For full particulars see
Shainwald, Buckbee & Co.
No. 27 Montgomery St.

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

The Questioner—I hear his wife is a brunette, but I thought he married a blonde. The Joker—He did, but she dyed.—Houston Post.

Mistress—Bridget, it always seems to me that the crankiest mistresses get the best cooks. Cook—Ah, go on wid yer blarney!—Town Topics.

Nurse (announcing the expected)—Professor, it's a little boy. Professor (absent-mindedly)—Well, ask him what he wants.—Boston Transcript.

Passenger (on tram car)—Don't you always shiver when you pass this cemetery? Conductor—Not me; I'm going to be cremated.—The Mirror.

"Now, did the missus shay 'ave only two whiskies and get 'ome by twelve; or (hic) 'ave twelve whiskies (hic) and get 'ome by two?"—Sydney Bulletin.

Hix—I always have Dr. Emdee. When my mother-in-law was at death's door he pulled her through. Dir—Which way did he pull her?—St. Louis Republic.

Nell—I don't suppose Mr. Sillicus has any vices. Belle—Vices? Why, he belongs to a glee club, an amateur theatrical society, and writes poetry.—Philadelphia Record.

"Suppose women should vote. What would be the result?" "Oh, I don't know," answered Mr. Sirius Barker, petulantly. "Perhaps we'd have hand-painted ballots."—Washington Star.

Patience—Those two girls dislike one another, and yet they always kiss when they meet. Patrice—Yes, I suppose each hopes the other will get the microches.—Yonkers Statesman.

Grimsey—What is the psychological moment? Cholly—It is when you get a tip on a dead sure thing and do not happen to have the money to hack it up.—New Orleans World.

He—Did you hear me singing under your window last night? I hope your father didn't hear it? She—Yes, he did; but you needn't worry, he thought it was the cats!—Stray Stories.

"Yes," said Mr. Tamho, "I passed around the hat today." "And why," inquired Mr. Bones, "did you pass around the hat?" "I had to. It was a merry widow."—Washington Herald.

Merchant—I'll give you a position as clerk to start with, and pay you what you are worth. Is that satisfactory? Applicant—Oh, perfectly; but—er—do you think the firm can afford it?—Illustrated Bits.

Critique—Ah! Wagner and Strauss give us the music of the future. Causitive—Well, after hearing some of it one has a curiosity to know what the noise of the future is going to be like.—Boston Traveler.

"And do you have to be called in the morning?" asked the lady who was about to engage a new girl. "I don't have to be, mum," replied the applicant, "unless you happens to want me!"—Boston Globe.

Lady (after tendering a shilling for fare)—And here are two huns you may have, my man. Cabby—Thank you kindly, lady. I suppose you don't 'appen to 'ave a wisp of 'ay for the 'orse?—Cassell's Saturday Journal.

"That was a nice trick you played to run away from me with your umbrella and hold it over a pretty servant girl carrying a pitcher of beer." "Sorry, but I had to do it; it was our servant and my beer."—Fliegende Blätter.

His Daughter's Beau—I—er—er—want to ask you, sir, for your—er—daughter's hand, sir. Her Father—I'm not disposing of her in sections, but I'm willing to listen to any proposition involving all of her, sir.—Cleveland News.

Mistress—I don't want you to have so much company. You have more callers in a day than I have in a week. Domestic—Well, mum, perhaps if you'd try to be a little more agreeable, you'd have as many friends as I have.—Boston Traveler.

Mally—I should think Mrs. Roosevelt would be afraid to let her husband go out after lions. Coddle—Pooh! Molly—Why do you say that? Coddle—Because she knows very well there isn't a lion living that could bite him first.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

"I once spurned a bribe of $100,000," said the orator, naturally evoking a round of applause. "Nay, friends, do not cheer," he continued. "It is the duty of all to be honest. Besides, the services demanded by the brazen scoundrel were worth double the money."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Willie—And so you quarreled? Charlie—Yes; she sent back all my presents. And what do you suppose I did? Willie—Can't guess. Charlie—I sent her a half dozen boxes of face powder, with a note explaining that I'd taken about that much home on my coat since I'd known her.—The Gossip.

Mrs. Newlywed—Fred, dear, I have done you a great injustice. Mr. Newlywed—In what way? Mrs. Newlywed—Well, I suspected you without reason. I asked several of your friends that you go to the club with if you knew how to play poker, and every one of them thought a minute and said you didn't.—Chicago Daily News.

Mrs. De Style—So your hahy girl is three weeks old; my, how time flies. Mrs. Gunbusta—Yes; just think, in thirty years from now she will be twenty-one years old.—The Sphinx.

Mother—What did Mrs. Meanly give you for cutting her grass? Willie—Nothing. Mother—Why, she promised you 10 cents, didn't she? Willie—Yes, but I used her sickle to do it with and she charged me 10 cents for the use of it.—Pioneer Press.

Old Lady—My little hoy, have you no better way to spend this beautiful afternoon than by standing about idling away your time? Boy—I aint idling away my time! There's Mr. Hankinson inside making love to my sister, and he is paying me sixpence an hour to watch for pa.—Chips.

Policeman (to tenant of flat)—And you say the rug was stolen from your hall. Can you give me any particulars of it? Tenant (nervously)—Oh, yes. It was a fancy reversible rug—red on one side and green on the other. Policeman (impressively)—Ah—and which was the green side?—Punch.

"Has that girl next door to you still got her parlor melodeon?" "No, she exchanged it for a cornet, I'm glad to say." "But, gracious, if she plays the cornet that's worse, isn't it?" "Not at all. It's only half as bad. She can't sing while she's playing the cornet."—Philadelphia Press.

"How true that old saying is about a child asking questions that a man can not answer," remarked Popleigh. "What's the trouble now," queried his friend Singleton. "This morning," replied Popleigh, "my little hoy asked me why men were sent to Congress and I couldn't tell him."—Chicago Daily News.

WANTED UNIMPROVED PROPERTY IN THE BURNT DISTRICT
To Exchange for Desirable Income Property

MONEY TO LOAN AT PREVAILING RATES ON FIRST MORTGAGE SAN FRANCISCO REAL ESTATE

COZY MARINE VIEW RESIDENCE
8 rooms, attic and basement. North side of Green St., near Buchanan
$6,800. CAN ARRANGE MORTGAGE

GUY T. WAYMAN
232 MONTGOMERY STREET MILLS BUILDING

MARKET ST. 1st Con. 5%
Due 1924. Coupons March and September
BAY COUNTIES POWER CO. 1st 5%
Due 1930. Coupons March and September
WESTERN PACIFIC 1st 5%
Due 1933. Coupons March and September

SUTRO & CO.
BROKERS
412 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.
We have a Direct Wire to N. Y.

Mr. Publisher:
Does it interest you to know that ALL the mechanical work on THE ARGONAUT is done by us? Fact.
WILLIAMS PRINTING CO.,
Phone, Douglas 2905. 406 Sutter Street

Toyo Kisen Kaisha
(ORIENTAL S. S. CO.)

S. S. Hongkong Maru... Saturday, Aug 29, 1908
S. S. Tenyo Maru... Friday, Sept. 25, 1908
S. S. Nippon Maru (via Manila)...
..... Tuesday, Oct. 20, 1908
Steamers sail from company's piers, Nos. 42-44, near foot of Second Street, 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Hiogo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.
Round-trip tickets at reduced rates.
For freight and passage apply at office, 240 James Flood Building. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

FURNISHING a home doesn't mean merely the selection of furniture and carpets. Complete, the home should be the expression of your own individuality. This is the aim of our decorative department, to help you give exact expression to your own ideas—and at a less cost to you than without such assistance.

Furniture Carpets Rugs Draperies
D. N. & E. WALTER & CO. Since 1858 Wholesale and Retail
Van Ness and Sacramento

THIS IS TO REMIND
users of Labels, Cartons, Lithographing and Color Printing
that our Office and Factory is again located at the old stand
SECOND AND BRYANT STS. SAN FRANCISCO
Schmidt Lithograph Co.
35th YEAR

Clubbing List.

By special arrangement with the publishers and by concessions in price on both sides, we are enabled to make the following offer, open to all subscribers direct to this office. Subscribers in renewing subscriptions to Eastern periodicals will please mention the date of expiration in order to avoid mistakes:

American Magazine and Argonaut$4.25
Argosy and Argonaut 4.40
Atlantic Monthly and Argonaut 6.75
Blackwood's Magazine and Argonaut 6.25
Century and Argonaut 7.00
Commoner and Argonaut 4.10
Cosmopolitan and Argonaut 4.35
Current Literature and Argonaut 5.75
English Illustrated Magazine and Argonaut 4.75
Forum and Argonaut 6.00
Harper's Bazar and Argonaut 4.35
Harper's Magazine and Argonaut 6.75
Harper's Weekly and Argonaut 6.75
House Beautiful and Argonaut 4.75
International Magazine and Argonaut 4.50
Judge and Argonaut 7.50
Leslie's Weekly and Argonaut 6.75
Life and Argonaut 7.75
Lippincott's Magazine and Argonaut 5.25
Littell's Living Age and Argonaut 9.00
Mexican Herald and Argonaut 10.50
Munsey's Magazine and Argonaut 4.40
Nineteenth Century and Argonaut 7.25
North American Review and Argonaut 8.00
Out West and Argonaut 5.25
Overland Monthly and Argonaut 4.50
Political Science Quarterly and Argonaut 4.90
Puck and Argonaut 7.50
Review of Reviews and Argonaut 5.00
Scribner's Magazine and Argonaut 6.25
Smart Set and Argonaut 5.25
St. Nicholas and Argonaut 6.00
Sunset and Argonaut 4.25
Theatre Magazine and Argonaut 5.75
Thrice-a-Week New York World (Democratic) and Argonaut 4.25
Weekly New York Tribune (Republican) and Argonaut 4.50
Weekly New York Tribune, Weekly New York World, and Argonaut 5.25

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXIII. No. 1639.

SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 22, 1908.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10 payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breems Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opéra. In New York, at Brenano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at F and Thirteenth Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Denison News Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains.

Published at 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal.
Telephone, Kearny 5895.

man. Nor have we heard of anybody else who knows such a man. Those who are opposing the reelection of Senator Perkins do so upon purely negative and personal grounds. They don't like Perkins for some reason or for no reason; and, therefore, they object to him. They wish to substitute for him not so much a superior man as some other man. The weakness of their position is instantly manifest when they are asked to name somebody in Mr. Perkins's place. Pardee, a weak creature of essentially feminine mind; Spreckels, an ignoramus known alike for his stupidity and his arrogance and commended only by his money; Metcalf, an excellent man with no qualifications superior to those of Mr. Perkins—these are the names we most commonly hear. What could possibly be gained for California by the substitution of any one of these for our present senior senator? From any rational standpoint, Pardee and Spreckels are unthinkable. The election of either, if it were possible—which, praise be to God, it is not—would simply be to put vanity, insufficiency, and inexperience in the place of expert and proved working capacity. Mr. Metcalf, a man of distinctly better type, likewise a man of wide acquaintance at Washington, would come to senatorial duties as a new man with inside senatorial relations to be established. It would take him ten years at least to get himself so adjusted as to equal the position in which Mr. Perkins stands by virtue of long service and thorough acquaintance in combination with industry and excellent working abilities. In sending Mr. Metcalf to the Senate we would not get the supreme gifts above referred to; we would not give to the Pacific Coast or to California a stronger personality or a larger voice than she has today. We would simply be substituting one excellent and highly respectable man for another. It would be a change without reason or justification in high motives or in any motive excepting those which rest upon mere personality. And, speaking for itself, the Argonaut has no respect at all for merely personal motives in relation to public affairs.

Mr. Perkins, as we have said before, makes no pretensions as a profound, original statesman. He is essentially a practical man and his work in the Senate is, above all else, on practical lines. At the same time he is a very intelligent man, a man of wide experience in affairs and familiar with the general obligations and operations of government. He is a man of cooperative mind and of genial manners, and therefore commands respect and friendship in the Senate and out of it. He is an untiring worker, sparing himself at no point where the interests of the State or the country at large are concerned. He stands among the little group of senators—only eight or ten all told—who enjoy a special prestige and influence through long service. His committee assignments are the best and have been especially chosen with respect to legislation affecting Californian interests. In brief, Mr. Perkins, while not a great statesman and while making no pretensions to that character, is a highly practical and useful man in the Senate. He stands well not only with this administration, but with that which is to come, and his capacity for the accomplishment of general legislative purposes is large.

We are about to enter upon a new administrative deal at Washington. Among other things, the tariff is to be revised. The material interests of California are largely bound up in the tariff scheme. Would it be wise from any point of view in such a crisis to turn out an experienced and faithful man thoroughly acquainted with his work and so placed as to be of vast service to the State, and to substitute for him a new man without senatorial experience, and therefore without special prestige or influence in relation to senatorial duties? The Argonaut thinks not. It thinks we would make a tremendous practical mistake at this time to retire Mr. Perkins and to send in his place another man who could not possibly hope for years to come to command the position now held by Mr. Perkins. It is, of course, possible that there are men among us whose talents are great enough to offset Mr. Perkins's many and manifest advantages. But there is nobody of this type in sight.

A Democracy or a Republic.

Mr. Bryan's demagoguery is more pronounced in his latest utterances than it has been at any time during his long career as a Democratic candidate for the presidency. The facility with which he abandons tentative policies, and the rapidity with which he veers to the gusts of popular opinion surpass all previous performances of this inimitable political acrobat. His third address of acceptance fairly reeks with appeal to the prejudices and animosities of the mob. The constructive quality is entirely lacking in Mr. Bryan's letter; it is destructive throughout, not only in its assault upon "predatory wealth," which he declares is responsible for all the ills to which this nation has fallen heir, but also in its demand for complete and absolute "rule" by the people. His obvious target is the Republican party and the Republican administration, but his real motive is the subversion of the Constitution itself. He would change the basic structure of the nation by removing the foundation of the republic and substituting the unstable and chaotic conditions prevalent in an absolute democracy. There is no middle ground for Mr. Bryan. The wisdom of the fathers is obsolete and the only hope of the commonwealth is in direct government by the people, whose best guide, philosopher, friend, and prophet is William Jennings Bryan.

"Shall the people rule?" asks Mr. Bryan. The inference of the question is plain. The people do not rule. The people are in nowise responsible for the conditions which Mr. Bryan insists are so deplorable. The Republican party, for example, is not sustained and perpetuated by the people; it is wholly in the grasp of an oligarchy of "predatory wealth"; the people have been defrauded of their birthright; they have been reduced to a condition of abject serfdom; the people no longer have a voice in the administration of the laws of the country they once owned. This is Bryanism in its simplest terms—the blatant outcry of an arrant demagogue striving for his own aggrandizement.

So much for the impotence of the people, manifest, of course, in their inability to elect Mr. Bryan to the presidency of the republic. But if the answer to Mr. Bryan's question shall be in the affirmative; if it shall also include the election of Mr. Bryan; the proposition will wear quite another aspect. He "recognizes" in his last letter of acceptance that he is indebted for his nomination to "the rank and file of our party," and he is free to confess that his election must come, "if it comes at all," from the "unpurchased and unpurchasable suffrages of the American people." He promises, therefore, that if intrusted with the responsibilities of this high office, he will "consecrate" whatever ability he has "to the one purpose of making this, in fact, a government which will do justice to all," and much more in like strain. This is Mr. Bryan's latest if not his final remedy for the "hideous wrongs" with which this nation is afflicted.

There are, therefore, according to the Bryan estimate, two kinds of people in this country—the kind that elect and sustain wicked representatives, but who are not responsible for the evil they thus create and maintain; and the kind that will vote for Mr. Bryan and by that beneficent action will participate in the great good that Mr. Bryan promises to accomplish if it shall happen that the Bryan kind is more numerous than the other kind.

Mr. Bryan is probably aware that the fathers of the Constitution distinguished between a democracy and a republic and that this distinction was based on a literal definition of the two words. A democracy meant, as these statesmen believed, a polity in which the people legislated and governed directly and in their own per-

THIRTY-SECOND YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: The Senatorship—A Democracy or a Republic—A Mystery and a Guess—Aguinaldo's New Ambition—The Springfield Mob—Depopulating France—Literary Value of Two Statesmen—The Hair and the Hat—Editorial Notes	113-115
CAMPAIGN TOPICS	115
THE MARATHON RACE: An Occasional Correspondent Describes the Finish from the Spectacular Standpoint	117
OLD FAVORITES: "The Last Minstrel," by Sir Walter Scott	117
MEMORIES OF BISHOP POTTER: His Wit and Outspoken Independence and the Work That Conquered New York	117
THE VIGILANTES FORM: XXVII. By Jerome A. Hart	118
INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All over the World	119
A STORY OF INSANITY: Clifford Wittingham Beers Writes a Unique Book about a Rare Experience	120
CURRENT VERSE: "The Dead Faith," by Fanny Heaslip Lea; "On a Portrait by Tintoret," by Michael Field; "In the Children's Hospital," by Richard Burton; "The Martin's Song," by Will D. Muse	120
BOOKS AND AUTHORS. By Sidney G. P. Coryn	121
LITERARY NOTES: Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip—New Publications	122
FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT	123
WANTY FAIR	124
STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise	125
THE MERRY MUSE	125
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy	126-127
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day	128

The Senatorship.

The Argonaut would like to see the Pacific States represented in the Senate of the United States by men of the very highest and broadest capability. It would like to see a group of Websters, Clays, and Blaines commanding by their talent the admiration and approval of the country and in reasonable and worthy ways dominating legislation. Particularly, the Argonaut would like to see California magnificently represented in the Senate; we would like it if we had in the Senate a supreme man capable of declaring the voice of the Pacific West not only with respect to our immediate affairs, but in relation to those vast interests which are arising in the new world of the Pacific Ocean. If anybody can point to an available man, competent by his character and his talents, by the possession of public confidence and by the eagerness of his individual force, to meet these requirements, the Argonaut will gladly give him such support as it may, without respect to the color of his hair or to its own private likes or dislikes. Name the man big enough and we will venture so far as to pledge him very active and earnest support.

Very frankly let us say that we know of no such sons as they did at Athens, Rome, and Florence. A republic was more restricted, being a form of government in which the people legislated through elected representatives. It was the belief of the fathers that a democracy, pure and simple, would be subject constantly and unrestrainedly to the clamor of the rabble because a direct vote would elevate time-serving demagogues to the high offices; whereas, it was argued, a republic in the sense applied by the wise men that framed the organic law of this nation, would be subject to the rule of those who are fit to rule—men of character, approved integrity, ability, experience, and unswerving patriotism.

It is probably also within the purview of Mr. Bryan's knowledge that the senatorial function, the operation of which he so roundly denounces, was the bulwark erected by the Constitution makers to oppose and check the rising tide of radical democracy. The framers of the Constitution were profoundly conversant with the consequences of unlimited popular liberty, and they sought to temper the rash impulses of the mob by interposing a conservative body of legislators not directly responsible to the passion-swayed mass of the people. Since it was essential that their democracy should include every white male citizen who had attained or passed the age of twenty-one years, without even the qualification of education or property interests, it was but wise and eminently politic that there should be established a sovereignty within the sovereignty with power sufficient to modify and ameliorate the oftentimes tyrannical and frequently insensate demands of the people expressed through their immediate agents in the House of Representatives. It was clearly recognized by the framers of the Constitution that a Senate not immediately appointed by the people, and for the term of six years, might gradually acquire a dangerous preeminence in the government, and finally transform itself into a dominating and domineering aristocracy. This possibility was actually debated in the convention and was met by the proponents of the existing clauses defining senatorial jurisdiction with the answer that liberty may be endangered by the abuses of liberty, as well as by the abuses of power; that there are numerous instances of the former as well as of the latter; and that the former, rather than the latter, is apparently most to be apprehended by the United States. It was fear of the people and a demagogue-driven democracy that created the Senate of the United States and vested it with powers and functions which Mr. Bryan would now abolish by making it as subservient to the votes of a heterogeneous populace as is the House of Representatives.

Mr. Bryan's statesmanship, however, does not admit the cogency of the argument upon which the constitutional scope of the Senate rests. This argument premised that before the Senate could strike down the legitimate liberties of the people it must in the first place corrupt itself; it must next corrupt the State legislatures; must then corrupt the House of Representatives; and must finally corrupt the people at large. It is evident, the framers of the Constitution contended, that the Senate must be first corrupted before it can attempt an establishment of tyranny. Without corrupting the State legislatures, it can not prosecute the attempt, because the periodical change of members would otherwise regenerate the whole body. Without exerting the means of corruption with equal success on the House of Representatives, the opposition of that co-equal branch of the government would inevitably defeat the attempt; and without corrupting the people themselves, a succession of new representatives would speedily restore all things to their pristine order. It was not deemed possible by any means within the compass of human address that the proposed Senate could arrive at the object of a lawless ambition through all these obstructions.

Therefore, Mr. Bryan is at variance with the statesmen who made the Senate a part of the government of the United States when he advocates the popularization of that legislature, for he tacitly accuses not only the Senate, the State legislatures, and the House of Representatives with corruption, but he charges that the people themselves are so corrupt that they are no longer fit to elect the representatives whom they intrust with the sacred duty of appointing supreme arbiters to balance and conserve the ill-considered and ill-digested policies demanded by the parties and factions of a seething, turbulent, clamor-directed democracy. On this "issue" Mr. Bryan narrows the question to one involving the alternative of an absolute democracy or a republic—a communism whose laws are dictated by "the voice of the people," or a nation governed by intelligent statesmanship and wisdom acquired and accumulated from the experience of the ages.

A Mystery and a Guess.

The so-called confession of Peter Claudianes has this grievous defect, namely, it gets nowhere. That one miserable wretch, incited by another miserable wretch, touched match to powder means little unless it can also be told who inspired and planned the deed. So far the only person who acknowledges that he knows all about it is Mr. Heney, who is cock-sure that it was the work of certain "higher-ups." The trouble with Mr. Heney's information is that it comes from a fount too well filled. We have always a disposition to question the out-givings of one who knows all about everything.

The Argonaut does not believe for one moment that the Gallagher explosions were inspired by anybody who may be regarded as a leading figure in the graft cases, either on one side or the other. We do not believe, in spite of Mr. Heney's assurances, that the "higher-ups" did it, nor do we believe with certain theorists that it was prompted by Detective Burns as a means of turning the tide of public sympathy. Claudianes probably did the deed, and he probably was employed, as he says, by Felix Pauduveris. This man Pauduveris appears to have been a factor in the Ruef machine and for this reason there are some who argue, and not without a certain plausibility, that Ruef will be found at the bottom of the plot.

Now the Argonaut hardly needs to say that it believes Abe Ruef to be a gross scoundrel; at the same time it is not easy to conceive of him as a cold-blooded assassin, planning wholesale murder without any kind of rational motive. Whatever else he may be, Ruef is no fool; it has not been his way to do things without any reason for doing them. If he had sought to kill Jim Gallagher, who no doubt he would gladly see in sheol or anywhere else out of the way, he would not have gone about it in an ineffective fashion and through such agents as Pauduveris and Claudianes. The fact that the job was stupidly conceived, stupidly executed, and came to nothing in the end, is suggestive to the mind of the Argonaut that Ruef had no part in it. Pauduveris is an ignorant Greek of the lowest type. He probably conceived the idea that if he should get Gallagher out of the way by any means, he would do his friend and patron Ruef a service and win his everlasting friendship and favor. Probably the job was his own, under such inspiration as there was in a criminal friendship with Ruef.

This, of course, is merely a guess; but the situation is one in which one guess may be as worthy of credit as another. In the end the truth will come out. Those who conceive and commit deeds of this kind are always moral cowards, and when the pressure of events puts them upon the grill they almost invariably expose themselves. Claudianes has already told his story, which in its leading lines is probably a true one. Pauduveris is in hiding, but time will almost certainly bring him into the clutches of the law and work the truth of this whole business out of him. In the meantime nobody but that strangely reserved and silent man, the all-knowing Francis J. Heney, late of Arizona, is in possession of the true dope.

It hardly needs to be added that this crime is one beyond the bounds of palliation or mitigation. Men may do many wrong things and yet something may be said for them. Even the murderer who strikes in the heat of passion may plead moral weakness and the insensibility which comes with insane rage. But the cold-blooded, plotting assassin—for him no excuses may be offered, no mercy can be justified. As we have already said, the truth in relation to the Gallagher explosions will come out; and when it does the guilty person or persons—whoever they may be—must be made to suffer the full penalty of this awful crime.

Aguinaldo's New Ambition.

Fame is a fickle jade. It seems but yesterday that the name of Emilio Aguinaldo was ringing round the world to the accompaniment of battle, murder, and sudden death in the paddy-fields and jungle fastnesses of the Philippines; only a little while ago the great newspapers were spending thousands of dollars in cable tolls for news of the movements of Aguinaldo and the campaign vigorously operating for his suppression. For a brief time Aguinaldo was a menace to American supremacy in the archipelago that Dewey had wrested from the Spanish empire. Then came Funston, and Aguinaldo ceased to trouble and the wearry army of occupation was at rest. After that we heard little of Aguinaldo; and finally he was forgotten entirely in this country. Even the anti-imperialists of Boston abandoned him. Aguinaldo, the erstwhile patriot of Luzon, was as one dead and buried without a monument to mark his last resting place or an epitaph to lie about his pre-mortem virtues.

So completely had Emilio Aguinaldo passed from the limelight that beats upon a dictatorship that many of us were surprised to learn from casual gossip of passengers arriving on the transport Buford that he is still striving for power and place. The announcement was not deemed sufficiently important to warrant its transmission in a cable dispatch from Manila, and only brief space was allotted in the newspapers for the statement that the once famous Aguinaldo is seeking the office of municipal trustee of Manila, a position equivalent to that of a San Francisco supervisor. The office is not important, but the fact that Aguinaldo is after it may be significant. It may be but an entering wedge for a higher ambition. As an American citizen of the Philippines Aguinaldo may aspire to the highest office in the gift of the Filipinos, and this humble office may be a stepping-stone to anything under a commissionship. If Aguinaldo possesses a genius for politics, there is no telling where he will stop. As a political boss the former leader of the revolutionary forces of Luzon would exert a commanding influence on his countrymen, and notwithstanding the limitations and restrictions under which he would be compelled to operate, he might prove a more troublesome factor in the affairs of the islands as a politician than he was when he bore arms against the invading American.

The Springfield Mob.

Close by the tomb of Abraham Lincoln, the author and promulgator of the proclamation of emancipation for negroes held in slavery in this country, in the city of Springfield, capital of the sovereign State of Illinois, a riot incited by hatred of the race that Lincoln freed has culminated in the death of seven persons, black and white. The immediate incentive to this fatal violence and the only excuse offered by the leaders of the mob for thus flagrantly defying the laws of the commonwealth is in the allegation that a black man assaulted a white woman. South of Mason and Dixon's line, where caste distinction between the whites and the blacks is a hereditary canon and a social tenet indelibly impressed upon the educational fabric of every community, the inalienable right of white citizens to deny to black citizens the justice guaranteed by the laws and the Constitution is scarcely questioned. Lynch law for negroes whenever, in the opinion of their white fellow citizens, any valid accusation against the "inferior race" is made, is regarded as a matter of course and a logical sequence of the accusation. The bullet, the rope, or the stake are the implements of popular vengeance, as the varying sense of humanity in the several sections of the South may elect.

It is seldom, however, that the negro is denied the right in the Northern States to defend himself before a regularly constituted court of law. Persons accused of atrocious crimes are frequently hanged by mobs in the Northern States, but these lynchings are inflicted without regard for the race, color, or previous condition of servitude of the victim. They are ebullitions of the barbarity common to all communities, requiring, oftentimes, only the slightest provocation to convert the apparently peaceable and law-abiding citizen into a raging, murderous savage. The mobs of the Northern States do not, as a matter of principle, prefer to hang or shoot an accused criminal because he happens to be a black man. In this section it is the crime rather than the man that is visited with the community vengeance.

This is why the riot in Springfield commands closer attention than would attach to a similar episode in Texas. It is not the custom to lynch negroes in Illinois in preference to other persons accused of crime. That custom does prevail in the Southern States. The Illinois riot and lynching, therefore, seem more flagrant than a Georgia or a Mississippi lynching and riot. Both are evidences of the barbarity of those actively participating; it is trite and commonplace to reiterate this self-evident deduction from the circumstance. Both are inexcusable and indefensible defiance of the law of the land; it is unnecessary to insist upon this phase of these lawless acts. But the Springfield riot is at least one degree more inexcusable and indefensible than a similar defiance of the law in the South because heretofore public sentiment in Springfield has insisted that all persons accused shall be fairly tried and legally convicted before being subjected to the punishment prescribed by the statutes. In the State of Illinois it has been the habit of its citizens to respect the law and to abide by the decisions of the courts. Occasionally, as in other habitually law-abiding communities, mobs have arisen to wreak vengeance on the objects of their wrath, but as a rule no provocation, however irritating or aggravating, has been sufficient to arouse the barbaric instincts of the citizens to the wholesale-murder pitch.

There is but one way to deal with a mob. Brute force must be opposed to brute force. The proper retort of the law upon those who defy it is organized violence. The issue is law or anarchy. Rebellion is never justifiable except when it is successful. Then it rises to the dignity of revolution, and again the law becomes supreme. Might does not make right, but it enforces its definition of right. Aside from every other consideration, the Springfield rioters are subject to the condemnation of right-thinking men because of the arrant cowardice they have displayed throughout; their cowardice in killing helpless persons, some of whom were not even accused of any crime; and their cowardice in the presence of an opposing force whom they outnumbered and whose only advantage lay in their military organization. Mobs are proverbially cowardly, and the mob of Springfield was no exception. This mob trait can be utilized in the future enforcement of the law in Springfield. If the punishments meted to the rioters and other criminals after conviction are as drastic as the law permits, the probabilities of repetition of this kind of lawlessness in that community will be reduced to a minimum. The opinion of rogues who feel the halter draw is always tempered by fear of the law that draws it, and other rogues are thereby deterred from rascally emulation.

Depopulating France.

Race suicide in France has reached such proportions and has been so long in progress that the hideous fact excites little comment among the people of that country. Not steadily, but in a ratio more perceptible than the process of decimation, the population of France is decreasing at its natural source. Recent statistics show that while marriages have steadily increased for a number of years the birth rate has declined to such an extent that in the total balance for 1907 the deaths exceeded the births nearly 20,000. The figures show, however, that in France the age of marriage is later than in any other country, which is obviously one factor in the record of the comparatively small birth rate. The figures also show that the number of divorces in France has increased from a little more than three and one-half among 10,000 inhabitants in 1900 to five and one-half in 1907; but divorce in France would have little effect on the birth rate in any event and is many times counterbalanced by the steady increase in marriages, especially since the gradual removal of legal restrictions hitherto imposed which made lawful marriage exceedingly difficult.

There were 42,000 more deaths and 62,000 fewer births than the average in 1890; the death rate in 1891-2 was unusually heavy; in 1895 there were 24,000 fewer births than usual; and in 1900 there were 53,000 more deaths than usual. The rate for 1907, however, emphasizes the terrible truth that the apparent trend towards depopulation indicated by the figures cited was not temporary or exceptional. In 1907 there were 45,000 more marriages than in 1890 and 46,000 fewer births than should have been recorded regularly; with an increase of 13,693 deaths.

Quoting from the comparative statistics published by the French ministry of labor and social prevoyance, the record shows that in 1906 the German empire had 910,275 more births than deaths for only one-third more population than France. Austria-Hungary had a similar excess of 466,241; England and Wales, 403,800; Italy, 354,178; and there were 69,994 more births than deaths in Belgium, with only one-sixth of France's population. Until 1905 the population of France still had an average annual increase of eighteen for every 10,000 inhabitants; this figure fell to seven in 1906; and in 1907 there was a decrease of five in every 10,000 inhabitants.

The cause assigned for these conditions is the same that is pleaded in other countries where the race suicide tendency, however slight, is observable. It is urged in France, as in those other countries that as nations and peoples become civilized the desire to enjoy the comfort of that civilization is more insistent. The rearing of large families is not deemed compatible with the full enjoyment of the manifold blessings conferred by modern civilization. Among the well-to-do it is chiefly the care and attention necessarily involved in the responsibility of a family of children that deters parents from exercise of the duty that they owe to the State and humanity. However limited this responsibility may be by reason of the pecuniary ability to shift the burden upon others, there is still a certain loss of time and an expenditure of energy that those who are compelled to bestow them begrudge as wasted from opportunity for fuller enjoyment of the comforts and pleasures that can be purchased with money. Among the poorer classes of a highly civilized community the same desire is prevalent coupled with the fear that "more mouths to feed" will bring the wolf closer to the door and render the struggle to keep him out of the house more strenuous.

The civilization of France is very ripe. Luxury and high living are more alluring, more necessary, perhaps, in that country than in any other, because this condition has become habitual. The desire to get all the enjoyment possible out of life is the dominant idea of the populace, rich and poor, and there is not wealth enough in the nation to enjoy French civilization to the limit and at the same time sustain the expense of rearing large families. Ease and independence are the sine qua non of super-civilized nations; and France has reached that condition. Fortunately for other civilized nations, France is the first to pay the penalty of her crime against the natural law. She may serve as a salutary example for the other nations.

Literary Value of Two Statesmen.

Carping critics and censorious journalists have taken President Roosevelt to task because it is rumored that he will receive a dollar a word for his articles descriptive of his proposed hunting trip in Africa. These same fault-finding, meddlesome busybodies have also ridiculed and lampooned Mr. Bryan for making loads of marketable hay while the limelight shines. Such envious comment and objection is not only ill-timed and discourteous, but it is puerile. President Roosevelt is a mighty hunter before the nation; none is mightier; Mr. Bryan is also a mighty hunter, renowned throughout the world for his persistent quest for the American presidency. Why should there be objection to the bestowal of substantial reward upon these famous Americans for any achievement they may undertake? Is a dollar a word an excessive rate for something that will please every American citizen? Is the profit accruing from a million subscribers to the Commoner or the golden usufruct of Chautauqua an extravagant compensation for that which provokes and promotes the gayety of the nation? The answer is clearly and unmistakably in the negative—a prolonged and clamorous dissent from the primeval forests of the Penobscot to the wave-washed piers of San Diego.

Like bread cast upon the waters, the dollar a word which it is said is to be paid to President Roosevelt will return to the publishers in a few days and each dollar will be accompanied by its double. Every dollar contributed to the accumulating wealth of Mr. Bryan will add that much to the wealth of the nation, for eventually it must find its way back into the channels of trade. Mr. Bryan can not consistently hoard all that wealth. He must manage to get rid of it somehow or he will be debarred from further participation in presidential campaigns that derive their vitality from principles absolutely destructive of personal wealth in any form.

In either instance it can not be charged that the money paid to President Roosevelt and the money paid to Mr. Bryan is unearned increment. President Roosevelt has earned his reward by success; Mr. Bryan has earned his tribute by failure; and both laborers are indubitably worthy of their hire.

The Hair and the Hat.

They do some things better in France, but then the French people are accustomed to paternal legislation and the regulation of domestic and sumptuary details that are left elsewhere to good taste. For example, a law has just been passed requiring ladies to remove their hats in the theatre if they are requested to do so. Who shall say that France is a decadent nation with such a proof of robust courage before us? An actual legislative interference with women's hats is worthy of the traditions of Austerlitz and Wagram.

But for some mysterious reason the law does not go into effect until September 1, and in the meantime the hats are growing larger while male patience is dwindling. At some of the theatres there are nightly protests against the hat that obscures the stage as effectively as a barn wall. As a rule the obstruction is removed with that suave feminine acquiescence that scorches and scarifies, but sometimes there is opposition. A few nights ago two ladies repulsed their assailants with heavy loss on the plea that "it is really impossible for us to remove our hats, as our hair is fastened to them."

Now what does that mean? We had supposed that the hat is always fastened to the hair, and indeed we have often admired the intrepid way with which a ten-inch pin is plunged through the fabric of the hat and apparently into the brain of the wearer. These hat-pins have a stern reality about them, as was proved by a well-known public man in London recently who received about four inches of steel in his dorsal vertebrae from a pin that was being used by a lady behind him to fasten her hat to the back of the seat. Of course he remonstrated audibly and with that intolerance of trifles that distinguishes the uninteresting sex. But we are still in doubt as to why these ladies in the Paris theatre were unable to remove their hats.

Are we to infer that the hair itself was removable and in a sort of inseparable juxtaposition to the hat? If so, we can understand at once why the law does not come into immediate operation. There must, of course, be time to rearrange the architecture of the feminine head and to devise some plan by which the hat may be put on and off without a process of general disintegration that would be distinctly humiliating outside the privacy of the bedroom. There are, of course, adjuncts to female loveliness that are built into the fabric of the dress, and there are articles of apparel that were once separate and distinct and that have now entered into combination, but we did not know that there was such an alliance between the hair and the hat or that they hunted, as it were, in couples. With every desire to be helpful in the matter, we do not see anything for these ladies except to confer an entirely separate autonomy upon hair and hat, or to stay away from the theatre after September 1.

Editorial Notes.

Now it is said that the Lincoln-Roosevelt League—or is it the Roosevelt-Lincoln League?—will concentrate its energies upon the judicial ticket in San Francisco this fall. It will undertake a combination between politicalized labor unionism, marshaled by that eminent citizen, Mr. Michael Casey, and Spreckelsism in support of judicial nominees of the Judge Dunne type, dependable partisans and tools of the so-called graft prosecutors. The Argonaut makes no pretensions to prophecy and it is not always a good guesser; still we suspect that the people of San Francisco will prefer to elect judges of approved character and pledged to nobody. However, we warn the machines of both parties to be careful in the matter of nominations. It would indeed be a hard choice to decide between one set of nominees programmed in the Spreckels interest and another set programmed for the "higher-ups."

The Democratic party has always been shy at the point of newspaper championship—so much so as to give a very sharp point to the old gibe that one of the essentials of a steadfast Democrat is that he shall not be able to read. The Southern newspapers are, as a matter of course, Democratic, but their Democracy is based on the race question and they do not as a rule contribute anything worth repeating at the North in respect to the general issues. Southern journalism, like Southern oratory, is mostly sound and fury, and it is so intensely local as to be useless anywhere away from home. The Hearst papers now for some years have formed the main journalistic strength of Democracy in the North. True, what we may call the Mugwump press, the New York Evening Post, the Springfield Republican, and others of that type, are more nearly Democratic than Republican, but they fall very far short of being dependable as party organs. The diversion of the Hearst papers from support of the Democratic ticket to support of the so-called Independence party has practically left Democracy without a newspaper champion in the North, since all the great independent papers—the Brooklyn Eagle, the Evening Post, the Springfield Republican, and others—have declared for Taft. Here in California there is not one newspaper, if we except a few local weeklies, which supports Bryan. All of which from the standpoint of party hope is discouraging. But to Mr. Bryan his there is a silver or possibly we had better say a golden lining to the cloud, due to the fact that those anxious for the real Democratic dope are turning by the hundreds of thousands to that true-blue champion of Democracy, the Commoner.

It is not very long ago that Messrs. Spreckels and Heney were justifying their miserable bargain for immunity with Abe Ruef on the ground that the "low-downs" ought to be let go as a means of getting the "higher-ups." Now, when there are some developments tending to connect this same Abe Ruef with the black-hand assault upon friend Gallagher we note a disposition to reinterpret the character of Mr. Ruef and to classify him as a "higher-up." The logic is a trifle lame, but what is a little matter of logic and consistency among men of infallible moral instinct?

Admiral Evans formally retired from the active list of the American navy on Tuesday of this week, having reached the age limit of sixty-two. His health, so long a matter of solicitude to his fellow-citizens, is described in his own phrase, "fit as a fiddle." There was a time not very far back when Admiral Evans's condition was very different. And let it not be forgotten that it was the soothing and healing waters of a California spring that literally put him on his feet again.

CAMPAIGN TOPICS.

There was a time when Colonel Watterson looked askance upon Mr. Bryan, when he even said unkind things about him and groaned in travail of spirit at the thought that the party of the unafraid were once more doomed to travel the broad path that leadeth to destruction. But those times have passed. Colonel Watterson has all the enthusiasm of a man who has suddenly seen a great light and all the zeal of the newly converted. He and Mr. Bryan have eaten salt together, and now whatever Mr. Bryan does not like to say for himself this new Sancho Panza is prepared to say for him.

For example, there are some people of a malignancy so extraordinary as to suggest that Mr. Bryan has made so much money as to alter the pulsations of his Democratic heart. He has lectured to many thousands of people who were privileged, like visitors to Artemus Ward's immortal show of "wax figgers," to pay without going in, but who could upon no account go in without paying. He has made money in many other ways, honest ways, of course, but none the less remunerative. No one ventured to blame Mr. Bryan for thus gathering honey from every opening flower, but there was none the less an uneasy suspicion that political profit was to be found rather in poverty and in unremunerated toil than in the fat things of life, and that the service of God and the service of Mammon were just as far apart as ever they were.

So Colonel Watterson steps into the breach with all the positive knowledge of a tax assessor. He talks as one having authority and not as the Scribes, and no doubt he gets his information from the highest sources. He speaks of Mr. Bryan as "suddenly elevated to party leadership, a young man and as poor as a church mouse." He had to live somehow, says Colonel Watterson, and with a perverse irrelevancy we are reminded that when Napoleon received a similar plea that truly great man replied that he saw no such necessity. So Mr. Bryan started the Commoner:

It has been reasonably successful. He could have revelled in wealth had he prostituted its columns. He went upon the platform. He worked like a slave and commanded audiences, which, happily, stayed with him. But there was money to give away as well as to earn; gratuitous service of many kinds to render; and, we speak what we know to be the truth when we say that his entire accretions since 1898, when his bark was fairly launched upon its new career, do not exceed $150,000, and have never reached $400,000 a year; a sum which the average speculator of the stock market would regard with disdain, and which, if Mr. Bryan should die tomorrow, would leave his family a bare competency.

Who would have thought that the ownership of the Commoner could enable its proprietor to revel in illicit wealth. We live and learn, and Colonel Watterson, a newspaper man himself, knows well of the unflinching rectitude that tramples temptation under foot and defies the Greeks bearing gifts who besiege his office doors.

But there is a moral to this text. If Mr. Bryan is a poor man—his accretions "have never reached $40,000 a year"—there is so much the more need for Democratic liberality. Therefore the smallest contributions will be thankfully received. Even 50 cents, offered in the right spirit, will not be despised:

And so, fellow-Democrats and fellow-countrymen, if we are to fire a gun, or even to burst a cap, you are the boys that will have to furnish the wherewithal. Whitney died years ago. There are no Thomas Fortune Ryans or August Belmonts to put up in this campaign. They are against us now. Bryan would make no sign—the simpleton!—he might at least have winked his eye!—only he didn't!—and—! Well, that is all there is to it! Nor can we wait for the singing of the doxology before we pass the plate! This is your fight—nobody's else. If you want to win it, send a letter containing what you are able to give and address to "The National Democratic Campaign Fund, care of the Courier-Journal, Louisville, Kentucky," and the amount, big or little—$10, $5, $1, or 50 cents—shall be carefully compiled and duly forwarded to Governor Haskell, the treasurer of the National Democratic Committee.

The hint should be enough. It is just as well, as Colonel Watterson says, to pass the hat before singing the doxology. Who knows? We may never reach the doxology at all.

Mr. Hearst's party has suffered a bereavement. The loss of Supreme Court Justice Samuel Seahury of New York nearly cuts it into halves. Justice Seahury is said to have been the strongest single figure in Mr. Hearst's political movements, and now the flags of the Independence party are at half mast and Justice Seahury has resigned.

The learned justice, interviewed by the New York World, had no objection whatever to stating his reasons, six in number. He had them arranged, tabulated, summarized with all the precision of the legal mind. Perhaps he knew that some inquisitive person would come round with a note-book. Here are the six reasons:

First—That there never has been a national convention which was so completely dominated by one man as the Independence party's recent convention at Chicago.

Second—That regularly elected delegates were denied admission to the convention and other delegates were prevented by threats of physical violence from expressing their views in the convention.

Third—That a delegate who attempted to present William J. Bryan's name in the convention was grossly insulted and forcibly ejected from the hall.

Fourth—That Mr. Hearst has come to regard the vote polled by the Independence League in 1905 and 1906 as a purely personal asset to use for the promotion of his own ambitions or to gratify desires for personal revenge.

Fifth—That William J. Bryan's failure to support Mr. Hearst's candidacy for the presidential nomination in the Democratic convention at St. Louis in 1904 does not justify Mr. Hearst in using the organization of which he is the leader to injure Mr. Bryan.

Sixth—That the purpose of Mr. Hearst's Independence party in nominating a ticket is to divide the opposition to Mr. Taft.

Now these are very good reasons, but Justice Seahury neglects to explain his own guileless innocence in supposing that any other conditions would be likely to prevail in the Independence party. He has been connected with the Hearstian programme for some time, amply long enough to show him what he had to expect. Did he ever yet get a glimpse of an intelligible conviction behind that programme? Did he ever see a sign of tolerance for free opinions, or of a diplomacy that openly disclosed its objects? But let us not be censorious of Justice Seahury. There is more joy over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety and nine just men made perfect.

Echoes of the Brownsville fray are still borne upon the political wind. That Mr. Taft should be pictured as an enemy of the colored voter is one of those political amenities against which it is useless to protest. That Mr. Taft was at the war office at a time when executive authority made itself felt by the dismissal of the negro troops is sufficient for those who want only an excuse for their attack and a peg upon which to hang their slanders. But now comes Lieutenant-General Henry C. Corbin with an assurance that Mr. Taft had nothing to do with the disciplinary edict and in fact that he urged the President to reconsider the order discharging the men. He has silently borne the imputation of his own responsibility. General Corbin says:

It is to his everlasting credit that he has never, even to his most intimate friends, hinted that the responsibility, blame, or credit rested anywhere but in the War Department, although the facts are that the order was the President's very own, made and executed by his own immediate and special direction, and for which he always stood.

As a matter of fact Mr. Taft was not in Washington when the order of discharge was made. He was absent upon duty from October 27 to November 17. The Brownsville order was issued on November 9, eight days before his return and while General Oliver was acting as Secretary of War. Upon his return the order was brought to his attention. That the President might have an opportunity to reconsider the matter, Mr. Taft suspended the order. General Corbin explains that he does not happen to have a copy of Mr. Taft's cablegram to the President, who was then in the West Indies, but here is what the President sent back in reply:

Cablegram received. Discharge is not to be suspended unless there are new facts of such importance as to warrant your calling me. I care nothing whatever for the yelling either of the politicians or the sentimentalists. The offense was heinous, and the punishment I inflicted I imposed after due deliberation. All I shall pay heed to is the presentation of facts showing the official report to be in whole or in part untrue, exculpating some individual man. If any such facts shall later appear I can act as may be deemed desirable, but nothing has been brought before me to warrant the suspension of the order. I direct that it be executed.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

This corresponds generally with the contemporary impression, but it is unfortunate that General Corbin did not better equip himself before going into print. No one except the prejudiced will dispute either his facts or his conclusions, agreeing as they do with the general belief. But it is unfortunate that he did not supply himself with Mr. Taft's cable to the President. That he interceded for delay and reconsideration can not be doubted, but his message to the President to that effect is really the pièce de résistance, and that the general's communication should lack its clinching effect is to be regretted.

The New York Sun in a message from Hot Springs, Virginia, says that Mr. Taft's forthcoming speech at that place will be addressed to the Southern people generally and will mark the beginning of an effort on the part of the Republican national organization to break into the solid South.

Reports from all quarters in the South have encouraged Mr. Taft and the Republican Congress campaign managers in the belief that they have a better chance this year to carry one or two of the Southern States than at any time in the last quarter of a century. Letters have come from Georgia, North Carolina, Virginia, and Tennessee urging him to impress upon the national committee the exceptional opportunity offered this year.

The letters from Georgia have been particularly encouraging, especially since the nomination of John Temple Graves for Vice-President on the Independence League ticket. The general tone of all the letters from Democrats in the South is that they can't stand Bryan a third time.

The Philadelphia Ledger thinks that this is a tactical mistake:

Chairman Hitchcock ought to understand the South. A few months ago he proved his ability to deal with Republican politicians in that section. While dealing with them he should have kept his eyes open for the ways of the controlling elements of the South. If he were alive to their sentiments he would never "invade the South." If the Republican party outwardly ignores the South—leave it to its own people—the Democratic candidate may meet a few losses. Indifference to Bryan and Kern, with a marked tendency in many quarters to be pleased with the doctrines of Watson and the Independents, might easily reduce the Southern Democratic vote to unprecedentedly small dimensions. If anything would arouse Democratic enthusiasm and bring out the vote it would be a clashing of shields, a haring of trumpets, and a waving of banners by the Republican National Committee. Mr. Hitchcock needs only to be as astute in politics as he is forceful to decide upon saying little about what he is going to do in the South. He would let the conservatism of the South, strengthened by a great crop output and a business revival, take care of its own politics. The Southern Democratic vote will drop lowest if the Republican organization is most completely out of sight.

There may be something in this. Mr. Bryan, "who is as dextrous as an Athenian sophist in catching a point for momentary advantage in debate," will use Mr. Van Cleave, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, for his opening assault. His cue is to inflame labor as much as possible, and he will use Mr. Van Cleave to emphasize the Democratic claim that the Republicans favor employers against labor.

Eugene W. Chafin, the Prohibition candidate, has had a long interview with Mr. Bryan at Lincoln, Nebraska. The interview was private, and a palpitating world may never know the nature of the weighty matters that were discussed or the new schemes for the regulation of the solar system that were broached. Mr. Bryan himself said that the conversation turned mainly upon the philosophy of Tolstoy. Perhaps the binomial theorem was also touched upon, and the Precession of the Equinoxes. Who can tell? Under the benign influences of lemonade the tongues of these eminent statesmen may have been injudiciously loosened, and it is perhaps just as well that a veil of privacy hangs over their deliberations.

The New York Globe says that by his announcement that under no circumstances will he take part in the political campaign John Mitchell emphasizes the difference between his kind of labor leadership and that of Samuel Gompers. Gompers, of foreign birth, stands for what may be called the European idea that labor unions should take part, as such, in partisan politics. Mitchell, of American birth, stands for the American idea that labor unions should as rigidly keep out of politics as do the churches:

Mr. Mitchell, an American, may be assumed to be better acquainted with the spirit of American workingmen than Mr. Gompers, originally an alien. The one knows better than the other what can be done. Mitchell perceives that even were such a result desirable it is not feasible to prevent members of labor unions, educated in the same schools, belonging to the same churches, and subject to the same influences as other citizens, revealing the same difference of opinion concerning politics as other citizens. As there can not be unanimity or anything approaching it, he would rigidly exclude the factor that would make for unending discord. In scattered instances labor unions have gone tentatively into politics, and in practically every case the effect has been vastly weakening. This is the record known of every intelligent union man, and hence the protest that cool heads like that of John Mitchell file against following the imported Gompers policy.

Mr. Debs seems to take somewhat the same view. He asks what is to be the effect of Mr. Gompers's pronouncement?

First and foremost it will tend to the political solidarity of the working class. It can not be expected that the vote of organized labor will be delivered solidly to the Democratic party simply because Mr. Gompers favors that party and publicly announces his preference. Indeed, it may well be doubted that his attitude will have any appreciable effect on the general result. Nevertheless it marks an epoch in the labor movement.

Mr. Debs is not great in prophecy, but he says what is practically certain is that a large number of labor votes will be cast for the Independence party and a surprisingly large number will be cast for the Socialist party.

It was a saying of that interesting member of Parliament, The O'Gorman Mahon, that there were only three individuals entitled to the prefix "the." They were himself, the Pope, and the —, well, the gentleman who is rarely mentioned in polite society. He forgot, however, The MacGillycuddy of the Reeks, whose fifty-sixth birthday occurred recently. He is, if ever there was one, an Irish chieftain and descendant of Irish kings. He owns no longer that fine chain of Kerry Mountains known as the Reeks, although he retains the title and also a residence of the same name. The surname MacGillycuddy dates from ancient Roman Catholic times, and means the son of the servant (or devotee) of St. Cuthbert, whose name "Cuddy" is an affectionate diminutive. The wives of The MacGillycuddys, as of other feudal Irish chiefs, are always distinguished by the title of "madam."

A few days prior to the Marathon race in the London stadium an advocate of fruit diet, chiefly bananas, aged forty-three, offered to run a race with a flesh-eater around the island of Zealand. Since the banana man has earned a good many triumphs as a runner in the sporting world of Denmark the beef-eaters did not show any burning zeal to accept the challenge till the well-known paper, Politiken, offered a prize of 100 kroner to the winner. A grocer's assistant, aged twenty-one, was selected as the upholder of beef eating and for two days and a half the runners kept abreast of one another. Then the banana man flagged, and when after nearly five days the young grocer arrived at Copenhagen, having duly finished his course, his opponent had vanished. The butchers of Zealand have presented a silver bowl to the victor.

THE MARATHON RACE.

An Occasional Correspondent Describes the Finish From the Spectacular Standpoint.

The Olympic races will belong to ancient history and the "has-beens" long before this letter can reach San Francisco. The results will be known and canvassed all over the English-speaking world, and it may be hoped that even some of the acerbities will be laid to rest before the mail can supplement the news carried by the overburdened telegraph. But, after all, a letter has virtues to which the cable message can never aspire. It carries with it a touch of individuality that excuses its belated appearance, and from all this it will be seen that I am anxious to write a letter to the Argonaut and am simply casting about for the necessary excuses. In the way of fact I can add nothing to what is already a part of the world's news. Still less would I offer myself as a witness in the overheated discussions that have centred around the great race. These must be settled by men who are better qualified than myself and whose feelings prompt them to utterance. I was present in the stadium and I saw the finish of the Marathon, but I shall abundantly satisfy my own enthusiasm by a few words of personal and cursory description and shall be well content to leave contentious matter to those whose inclinations lie in that direction.

My visit to the grounds was indeed a matter of sudden impulse and was free from premeditation. The summer sun and the general air of festival tempted me from the overheated city streets, and with a sudden reckless abandon I consigned business cares to the limbo of temporarily forgotten things and hurried away to the Tube station. The long queues standing outside showed a considerable number of the like-minded and proved the extraordinary attraction exercised by the great games over the London populace. It seemed as though half the metropolis were wending its way westward, and if qualms of conscience were at all disposed to trouble me they were dissipated by finding that I was sinning with the majority. The crowd was indeed almost embarrassing, but patience and elbows were as effective as ever, and a perspiring multitude eventually emerged from the station to charge the ticket office recklessly.

They were repulsed with still more reckless charges. I was fortunate enough to reach the "cheap" counter, where they salved my economical conscience by assuring me that all the cheap seats were sold out, but as a special favor I was allowed to have one for a guinea.

The sight on entering almost takes one's breath away. You have heard of massed bands, but here were massed theatres. It seemed as though the auditoriums of every place of amusement in London had been placed by some freak side by side with endless tiers of seats banked up from the ground. I regret that I can not give you the cost of erection, which perhaps shows that I have not the true reportorial instinct, but it is said that the first American reporter was stricken with paralysis while trying to obtain the figures.

Comfortably ensconced amid a crowd of Americans, I took stock of the events. Here in one place was a wrestling match on an elevated stand, there in another a swimming competition, pole-jumping elsewhere, three events in continuous progress at the same time, and all the heats succeeding each other with such lightning rapidity as to make one regret that he was not Argus-eyed. A roar from the Swedish section, a yell conducted by the root leaders from the American boys, and a cheer that only the British lion can emit rent the air time after time as one champion after another asserted his supremacy. But there was a nameless, restless excitement and distraction of attention behind all this.

Anxious glances at the relentless sun, lists of candidates unfolded and their nationality considered, all showed that the thoughts of the people were divided, and throughout the afternoon it was as plain to discern as the leit motiv that dominates a Wagnerian opera that the hearts and souls of those present were centred in the great Marathon race. At 2:30 the attendants announced by megaphone that the start had been made from Windsor, and almost every half hour hereafter messenger boys arrived and the progress of the contestants was announced to the royal box and the stadium with the never-failing cheers that put every other event into the shade. The fact that the representatives of England were announced as leading contributed not a little to the heartiness of the applause.

Fed upon such morsels, our appetite was whetted to starvation when the heralds finally announced "Clear the course for the running competition," and we maintained a state of what can only be described as suspended animation for the next ten minutes.

The interval seemed endless, the tension of this strange stillness of over a hundred thousand human beings being something indescribable.

Suddenly the unmistakable sound of cheers in the distance drew nearer, there was a movement at the entrance and all eyes were turned to acclaim the proud entry of the victor. There was a roar expressing the first syllable of hurrah which froze on every one's lips as they caught sight of the dazed white figure in red slips swaying unsteadily, trying to recover its balance and falling prone to the accompaniment of sobs from every quarter of the stadium. It was the most dramatic entry I ever wish to witness.

It struggled on, fell again, and, half held up, half pushed by too eager sympathizers, managed to get within twenty yards of the queen's box.

Fourteen seconds later a second figure crossed the entrance to the stadium, dusty and footsore, but still keeping some semblance of a run, and on catching sight of the Stars and Stripes the crowd gave vent to their unstrung emotions in a shout that raised the roof. This penetrated to the Italian's numbed senses. With a final effort he rose to his feet and, unaided, forced his muscles to respond to his will, making a pathetic run that just carried him beyond the royal box and mercifully into swoonland for a long spell.

So ended the first and last Marathon race I ever wish to witness. Human endurance is always a magnificent spectacle, and that it has lost none of its fascination was proved by these tense throngs moved beyond the power of speech. But there was something pitiful, something that almost smacked of vivisection, in the appearance of these racked runners, strained to the point of collapse and in a visible agony that imparted itself by sympathy to the spectators. There was somehow an unpleasant reminder of the old gladiatorial days, and, as I have said, I for one do not wish to see it again.

LONDON, July 30, 1908.

OLD FAVORITES.

The Last Minstrel.

[Prelude to the "Lay of the Last Minstrel."]

The way was long, the wind was cold,
The Minstrel was infirm and old;
His withered cheek, and tresses gray,
Seemed to have known a better day;
The harp, his sole remaining joy,
Was carried by an orphan boy,
The last of all the Bards was he,
Who sung of horder chivalry:
Far, welladay! their date was fled,
His tuneful brethren all were dead;
And he, neglected and oppressed,
Wished to be with them, and at rest.
No more, on prancing palfrey horse,
He carolled light as lark at morn;
No longer, courted and caressed,
High placed in hall, a welcome guest,
He poured, to lord and lady gay,
The unpremeditated lay;
Old times were changed, old manners gone;
A stranger filled the Stuarts' throne;
The hignets of the iron time
Had called his harmless art a crime.
A wandering Harper, scorned and poor,
He begged his bread from door to door;
And tuned, to please a peasant's ear,
The harp a king had loved to hear.

He passed where Newark's stately tower
Looks out from Yarrow's hirschen hower:
The Minstrel gazed with wishful eye—
No humbler resting-place was nigh.
With hesitating step, at last,
The embattled portal arch he passed.
Whose ponderous grate and massy har
Had oft rolled back the tide of war,
But never closed the iron door
Against the desolate and poor.
The duchess marked his weary pace,
His timid mien, and reverend face,
And made her page the menials tell,
That they should tend the old man well:
For she had known adversity,
Though horn in such a high degree;
In pride of power, in beauty's bloom,
Had wept o'er Monmouth's bloody tomb!

When kindness had his wants supplied,
And the old man was gratified,
Began to rise his minstrel pride:
And he began to talk anon
Of good Earl Francis, dead and gone;
And of Earl Walter—rest him, God!
A braver ne'er to hattle rode:
And how full many a tale he knew
Of the old warriors of Buccleuch:
And would the noble duchess deign
To listen to an old man's strain,
Though stiff his hands, his voice though weak,
He thought even yet, the sooth to speak,
That if she loved the harp to hear,
He could make music to her ear.

The humble hoon was soon obtained:
The aged Minstrel audience rained.
But when he reached the room of state
Where she, with all her ladies, sate,
Perchance he wished his hoon denied:
For when to tune his harp he tried,
His trembling hand had lost the ease
Which marks security to please;
And scenes long past, of joy and pain,
Came wildering o'er his aged brain—
He tried to tune his harp in vain!
The pitying duchess praised its chime,
And gave him heart, and gave him time,
Till every string's according gle
Was blended into harmony.
And then he said, he would full fain
He could recall an ancient strain,
He never thought to sing again.
It was not framed for village churls,
But for high dames and mighty earls;
He had played it to King Charles the Good,
When he kept court in Holyrood;
And much he wished, yet feared, to try
The long-forgotten melody.

Amid the strings his fingers strayed,
And an uncertain warbling made.
And oft he shook his hoary head:
But when he caught the measure wild,
The old man raised his face, and smiled;
And lighted up his faded eye,
With all a poet's ecstasy!
In varying cadence, soft or strong,
He swept the sounding chords along;
The present scene, the future lot,
His toils, his wants, were all forgot;
Cold diffidence, and age's frost,
In the full tide of song were lost;
Each blank in faithless memory void.
The poet's glowing thought supplied;
And while his harp responsive rung,
'Twas thus the Latest Minstrel sung.

—Sir Walter Scott.

MEMORIES OF BISHOP POTTER.

His Wit and Outspoken Independence, and the Work That Conquered New York.

America lost its most prominent churchman last month in the death of the Right Reverend Henry Codman Potter, Bishop of New York. Bishop Potter was born in Schenectady, New York, in 1834, and came of a family of churchmen, being the son of Bishop Alonzo Potter, of Pennsylvania, and nephew of Bishop Horatio Potter of New York. After an education in the Theological Seminary of Virginia he was ordained deacon of St. Luke's Church, Philadelphia, in 1857. He remained there two years, was for a period minister of St. John's Church, Troy, and in 1866 moved to Boston to become assistant rector of Trinity Church. In 1868 he was appointed rector of Grace Church, New York, in which capacity he began his close connection with institutional and, subsequently, political work.

Declining the proffered bishopric of Iowa, the rector continued his work at Grace Church for seventeen years, till January, 1884, when, having been raised to the episcopate as assistant bishop of New York three months previously, he resigned to devote all his energies to the assistance of his uncle, Bishop Horatio Potter. By his uncle's death, in 1887, he succeeded to the bishopric.

Bishop Potter had a dry wit which sometimes flavored his sermons, but was perhaps more interesting in his private conversation. He was never ritualistic. He refused for a short time to visit the most advanced of the ritualistic churches, but his refusal arose less from his objection to the services than from the disobedience of some of the clergy in persisting in practicing against his authority. He frequently attended the most elaborately ritualistic services wearing only his lawn sleeves and black silk gown, however ornate the vestments of the others might be. It was after such a service that he met one of his old friends, a woman active in the work of the diocese, but rather prejudiced against the ritualistic practices:

"And you mean to say that you were at that church, hishop?" she said to him one day. "Don't you know they call that man 'Father'! Don't you think that is outrageous?"
"Oh, I can't say that I do, Mrs. Smith," was the deliberate reply of the hishop. "He certainly has a right to be called father. Everybody tells me that he has five very attractive children. If five don't give a man the right to that title I'd like to know how many it takes."

This is an account of one of his sermons, which at the time created something like a sensation:

The occasion was the centenary of President Washington's first inauguration, and President Harrison sat in the pew that Washington had occupied before him, expecting an exultant and complimentary address. Instead, the hishop mournfully contrasted with the simplicity of Washington's time "the growth of wealth, the prevalence of luxury, the massing of large material forces, which by their very existence are a standing menace to the freedom and integrity of the individual, the infinite swagger of our American speech and manners, taking higness for greatness and sadly confounding gain and godliness." And then he denounced "the conception of the national government as a huge machine existing mainly for the purpose of rewarding partisan service," and asked what Washington would have done if any one had dared to approach him on the basis of "practical politics."

A case in which he opposed a large body of public opinion was his assistance in establishing the Subway Tavern, the aim of which was to supply food and non-intoxicating drinks as well as liquors under decent conditions—an enterprise which failed through the notoriety that it evoked. He also came into conflict with the Women's Christian Temperance Union by advocating the reestablishment of the canteen in military posts.

Eight years ago the great popular movement which overthrew the Tammany régime and installed Seth Low as Mayor was inaugurated by Bishop Potter's letter to Mayor Van Wyck, in which he scathingly denounced police protection of vice on the East Side of New York City. He followed this up by a noon-time address in St. Paul's Chapel entitled "God and the City," in which he pleaded for the organization of a body to combat civic corruption. The result was the formation of the Committee of Fifteen, and the victory of the reform element at the polls.

It was after the marriage of Bishop Potter and Mrs. Clark that the story of his stepsons was told among his friends:

The second Mrs. Potter had several sons who were grown up at the time of the wedding, but much younger than was their stepfather. Bishop Potter also had several daughters. "Do you know, I think I'll ask your daughters," Mrs. Potter said one day to her husband, "to call me Elizabeth, by my first name."

The hishop was contemplative for a second. "Perhaps you had better not after all," he answered with his invariable calmness. "If you did maybe your sons would want to call me Henry."

The suggestion, made as it was in a spirit of humor, appealed to the wife, and his daughters were not requested to call her Elizabeth.

One of the stories that Bishop Potter always loved to tell about himself dated back to a visit to Tuxedo, where he went to confirm a class of candidates:

He stopped as usual at the house of a member of the church he was visiting. He passed a comfortable night and the next day returned to New York for other duties. Several days elapsed before he received a letter from his hostess. In it she vaguely but with evident concern referred to the silver toilet set that had been spread out on the dressing table. She even ventured to wonder if the hishop had by mistake packed it up with his own things when he went away. It was then he remembered what had happened to the pieces. So he sent a telegram to quiet the apprehensions of the nervous hostess. It read: "Not guilty. Look in the top bureau drawer." The magnificence of the silver outlay had been too much for him, and on his arrival he had put it into the drawer and his own articles.

THE VIGILANTES FORM.

By Jerome A. Hart.

XXVII.

In "practical politics" Burke's right-hand man was Michael Clancy. Burke wanted him anchored hard and fast in the city, so he had given him a position on the board of aldermen. In this there were rich pickings for the thrifty Clancy, while his post as chairman of the election committee enabled him to look out carefully for the political interests of his chief. This he had done so well as to incur some harsh criticism. The reformers of the period objected to Mr. Clancy's methods, and called him a "ballot-box stuffer." At these strictures for a long time Clancy laughed. But at last there came a newspaper reformer whose attacks stung the callous Clancy. This was Prince Fitzwilliams, editor of the Evening Tribune, a man of unquestioned physical courage, and one wielding a bitter pen. During the long senatorial fight at Sacrosanto, Fitzwilliams had not ceased to attack the corrupt sources of Burke's power—the fraudulent election returns by which his delegation had been sent to the capital. And he daily held up to public scorn the leader of Burke's ballot-box stuffers, Michael Clancy.

When Fitzwilliams began his crusade against Burke's ballot-box stuffers he probably did not realize the vigor and the venom of the forces opposed to him. He thought that exposing one or two of the most flagrant offenders would result in terrifying the lesser fry. But he did not know how bold a band were Burke's henchmen. So from day to day his attacks, as he saw that they were apparently fruitless, became more and more bitter.

Fitzwilliams learned that Michael Clancy had come from New York State with some dark pages in his past. Fitzwilliams hinted at revealing them. Clancy sent him word that such a revelation would mean the editor's death.

But Fitzwilliams did not hesitate. He may have lacked judgment, but he did not lack courage, and on the very day after receiving this significant warning of his danger, he printed these lines:

The delegation at the capital which purports to represent the electors of this city, and which is pledged to elect Daniel Burke senator of the United States, represents nothing but fraud. It was fraudulently seated by Michael Clancy through ballot-box stuffing.

The fact that Michael Clancy has been an inmate of Sing Sing prison in New York is no offense against the laws of this State, it is true. But that this ex-convict should believe he has the right to stuff the ballot-boxes in this city in the interests of Daniel Burke, and thus to thwart the will of the honest electors, is not only an offense, but a crime. And if it is not stopped he will richly deserve to have his neck stretched for such a fraud on the people.

This article appeared in Fitzwilliams's paper about three o'clock. An hour later, as Fitzwilliams was leaving his office for his residence, a man lurking behind a carriage sprang out, tossed back his short cape cloak disclosing a cocked pistol, held ready in his hand. Leveling it at the editor, he fired. An inarticulate cry, "I am shot!" came from Fitzwilliams; he staggered a few steps, and fell into the door of a shop near at hand. He was lifted up on a counter and a surgeon sent for. But the examination showed that his wound was mortal—he had only a few hours to live.

In the neighborhood Clancy had several convenient friends, who escorted him to the police station at the jail. This apparent readiness to submit to arrest was very generally ascribed to the fear of a popular uprising and a well-grounded belief that the city prison was the safest place that he could find.

The day after the assassination incessant rumors ran around that the "Vigilantes were forming." So persistent became this rumor that at last the municipal officers took alarm. They telegraphed to the capital for the governor, who hurriedly left for the Bay.

Early in the afternoon of the day following the attack, Fitzwilliams died. The news was communicated to the waiting city by the tolling of the engine-house bell on the plaza. But the mournful sound seemed to be a signal for telling something more than the passing of a life. In the heart of the city there speedily began to gather knots of determined-looking men. These groups conferred quietly in undertones, gradually coming together, until finally a body of several hundred men had collected in front of a vacant building, the Pacific warehouse. The owner sent for his agent and secured the keys, and in a few moments the crowd filed in. When the doors were closed, Thomas Fitzwilliams, brother of the murdered man, leaped on a packing-case.

"Citizens!" he cried, "do you intend to pass over in silence this cool, premeditated, and cowardly murder? It is a plot arranged by the Burke gang of ballot-box stuffers, backed up by the gamblers and criminals of this city. Citizens, if we do not besiege that jail and take that convict he will never be executed. We must revive the Vigilantes. Clancy is a cold-blooded murderer. If he is to be hanged, we must hang him ourselves."

His speech was received with applause, and Fitzwilliams produced a notebook and began taking down the names of those around him, in order, he said, to enroll them in a Vigilance Committee. But this had a curious result—many of those accosted refused to give their names; some of those whose names were known refused to allow their addresses to be registered. It was apparent that many of the men present distrusted the loyalty of others. There were whispers that traitors lurked in the gathering, and it soon began to break up.

But the word was passed around, among those men who knew and trusted each other, that a meeting would take place that evening.

"Come to the old Know Nothing Lodge Room," ran the whispered word. "There you may be certain there will be no traitors. William Carleton will head the movement, and no man will be admitted unless he can be vouched for. The roster of the old Vigilance Committee is in the possession of Carleton and Bascom, the former secretary. That committee never disbanded."

When the evening came, sentries stood at the door of the old Know Nothing Lodge room, while within were Carleton, Bascom, Carwell, Truax, Lupkins, and others who had been prominent in previous Vigilance Committees. Every man, when he had passed the sentries, was carefully scrutinized through the wicket.

Soon some two hundred men were gathered in the lodge-room who were known to be loyal to each other and to the movement. Carleton arose and called the meeting to order.

"Vigilantes," said he, "you are familiar with the lawless conditions in this city. You know the cowardly crime which has just been committed. You know that the man who has been assassinated laid down his life trying to uphold the purity of the ballot. You know that the man who killed him is a professional gambler, a corrupt vote-manipulator, and a ballot-box stuffer. You also know that the murderer is a leader in the gang which has been looting this city for so long. The condition of the courts is such that we can not look to them for relief. The time has come when we must revive the old Vigilance Committee. It has never formally disbanded. Those here present we of the old committee personally know to be honest and loyal men. We intend to form a new and larger Vigilance Committee, whose task will be to see that the law is carried out; then if it be not done by the officers of the law, we shall carry out the law ourselves."

"Mr. President," interrupted Bascom, "I move that a roster be at once made of all here present; that each man's name be numbered, and that hereafter each member of this Committee of Vigilance be known by his number and not by his name."

It was so ordered, and the President appointed Bascom as secretary. The roll was already prepared; it was headed by an oath, under which every signer pledged his loyalty to the Committee, swore to maintain absolute secrecy concerning the Committee's actions, and bound himself to implicit obedience to the Executive Committee. All signing this oath affirmed that they were prepared to back it up with their property and their lives.

Carleton, the president, was the first to take the oath and sign the roll. He was put down as Number One. Bascom, the secretary, rapidly enrolled name after name succeeding to Carleton's.

"Come, Bascom," said one man grinning, as he signed, "how about yourself? I don't see your name—are you going to take no chances?"

"Right you are," replied Bascom with some chagrin. "I was so busy getting the roll signed that I neglected to sign it myself. Just think—I might have been Number Two! Now sixty-five men have signed. Well, better late than never, so here goes!" And in a firm hand he set down "66—Isaac Bascom."

Among the records of that stormy time no words or figures ever carried with them such power over life and death as the strange signature, "Sixty-Six, Secretary."

When all present had been enrolled, the new Vigilantes were ordered to report in future at the permanent headquarters on Washington Street, in the heart of the business district. A stout three-story brick building, which was temporarily vacant, stood there. Each Vigilante was urged to secure new recruits among men for whom he could vouch, and the members were significantly given to understand that each Vigilante was responsible for his recruits.

The next day the Committee was installed at its permanent quarters on Washington Street, and the work of registering recruits began. All that day and for several days thereafter, from morning until night, lines of applicants stretched up the street and around the corner waiting for admission.

In addition to the work of recruiting, the executive committee devoted itself to the task of fortifying its headquarters, securing arms and ammunition, and drilling its men.

Several days had elapsed, with the Vigilantes arming and drilling, and the regular authorities taking no steps against them, further than to notify the governor of the State. Such was still the disturbed condition of affairs in the Bay City when Governor Jackson arrived there from the capital. From the International Hotel he at once sent out two messengers. One summoned Judge Fox, the other General Herman.

In the dying days of the late legislature Fox had succeeded in securing his coveted honors—on a certain influential recommendation the President had appointed him to the Federal bench. Therefore Fox represented, in a way, the Federal government; Herman, who was an ex-army man, would speak from the standpoint of the military arm. The governor hoped for moral and perhaps material support from both.

They did not keep him waiting—in an hour both were in his rooms. To the governor's demand for news, General Herman replied:

"The news is bad, governor. This organized mob calling itself the Vigilance Committee seems to be growing more arrogant every day."

"Are the regular authorities taking no steps to assert the law, judge?"

"None, whatever, so far as I can learn, governor. But as the questions involved are purely municipal, and not Federal, they have not been brought before me."

"They are more than municipal, judge, for I am told that the Vigilantes are now threatening to resist the power of the State as well. Have you not heard rumors to that effect, general?"

"I have heard threats that your constitutional authority would not be heeded. I have rebuked all making such threats in my presence."

"Then, general, I may count on you in case of need?"

"Absolutely. I have as yet taken no part in this civic brawl. Were I to join any extra-legal body to combat the Vigilantes, it would be merely one mob against another. But when the highest officer of the State calls out its citizens, they thus become empowered as a posse, and their status is legal."

"I thank you heartily for your offer, general. It is what I expected of you. Yes, I need your assistance and I think your military knowledge will be extremely valuable. I shall appoint you as general commanding the militia forces of the State, and your commission will be made out at once."

"I wish, governor, that I could be as useful to you as General Herman," here interrupted Fox, "but I fear I can do nothing but offer you my good wishes. This crisis is purely a State and municipal affair, and as a Federal judge I must have nothing to do with it."

"I thank you too, judge. I am aware of the complex Federal and State conditions of which you speak, and know that you are at present debarred from acting. In the meantime, however, I shall be very glad to have your aid and counsel. Can you give me any late news of the situation?"

Fox hesitated. "I presume that the matter will remain confidential?" he ventured. Both the others assented, and he went on: "I have a trusted man in my employ," he said, "who is now—ahem!—acting as an enthusiastic member of the so-called Vigilance Committee. He reports to me daily. I heard from him only an hour ago. He tells me that the Vigilantes are still actively engaged in recruiting, and that during the first twenty-four hours over fifteen hundred names were registered."

"Who is the ostensible head?" inquired the governor. "William Carleton has been elected president. Isaac Bascom is secretary, and they have elected an executive committee of forty members and a Vigilante police force of twenty-six men."

"Are they attempting military organization?" inquired Herman.

"Yes. The foreigners bothered them at first. My agent tells me that Carleton had to call for interpreters. Finally the French and Germans were formed into a Foreign Legion and the other foreigners to'd to classify themselves as ordered by officers elected by themselves."

The governor and Herman looked at each other in amazement.

"Why, governor," cried the general, "this is more than an insurrection—it is a rebellion! We shall require a large force—perhaps even the military forces of the United States to suppress this."

The governor shook his head apprehensively. "It looks bad, general," said he. "But let us first see if we can not suppress it with the State's own forces. I give you full powers. As commanding general of the State's National Guard you can enlist recruits in any number and in any way you choose. As for money, the emergency fund in the State treasury is large; draw on it freely. As for equipment, there are arms in the armories of the State militia in this city and elsewhere."

"I am afraid, governor, that there are no longer any arms in the city armories," interrupted Fox. "My agent informs me that the Vigilantes seized them all last night, and that they are now safely hidden at their headquarters on Washington Street, which, by the way, they call Fort Vigilant."

"Fort Vigilant!" shouted Herman. "Damn the fellows! What astounding impudence! But this rumor about the arms is grave. If all the arms in the State armories have been seized, governor, we must look elsewhere."

"We can do so, general. There are armories in other cities and towns."

"It would take too much time, I fear, to go hunting round the State. There are plenty of arms in the United States arsenal on Yedras Island here in the Bay. Suppose you make a requisition on General Ruhl. I think he might let us have arms."

"Wouldn't that be a little irregular, general?" asked the governor, doubtfully.

"Regular or not," said Herman, briskly, "let's get the arms first and discuss the legal phase afterwards."

"Judge, is it merely bombast, calling their place Fort Vigilant, or are they really fortifying it?"

"My agent tells me it is fortified. He says they have piled up sand-bags in front and by the side of the building, which is on a corner, to a height of about eight feet. They have mounted cannon behind this breastwork, and they also have placed several six pounders on the roof of the building."

"How many pieces of artillery have they, do you know, judge?" inquired Herman.

"My man has counted twenty-five. Most of them ar-ship's howitzers mounted on the fore-wheels of wagons with the guns lashed to the axles."

"Have you any knowledge of the number of small arms?" asked the general.

"He tells me that they have over five thousand muskets, two hundred and fifty rifles, and a large number of miscellaneous weapons, such as revolvers, cutlasses, and so on. He saw a sort of portable framework on wheels intended to serve as a scaling ladder, and he observed much miscellaneous material, including litters and mattresses."

"Litters?" cried the governor. "Why, have they a hospital force?"

"Yes; they have two or three ambulances in the yard, and several rooms are fitted up as a hospital, with surgeons in attendance."

"Are the president and other officers located in this building?"

"Yes, there are offices for them on the floor above the drill-room, among them the offices of the grand marshal, the major-general, the brigadier-general, the quartermaster, the sergeant-at-arms, the police chief, the armorer, and the chief surgeon. In the armorer's shop I am told there are benches and tools for eight or ten workmen. In the hospital there are some twenty cots. On the roof they have erected a heavy framework of planks, in which they are now hanging a large bell. By set signals this is to summon to Fort Vigilant the members of the executive committee not permanently on duty there—the grand council or the entire body of Vigilantes may also be summoned by general alarm."

"Do they observe military discipline and precautions?" inquired Herman.

"Yes, there are sentries on duty night and day. The police live in the building, as do the hospital corps and some other attendants. There is constantly on duty a certain number of infantry men—one company, I believe, at a time; also there are always saddled in the yard a dozen horses, for there is a patrol of a dozen cavalymen on duty night and day. A small sutler's stand is in the fort so that the men on duty there can get food without leaving the premises."

"This is astounding!" cried Herman. "It is rank rebellion! Governor, you must crush it while it is yet time."

The governor's face had gradually grown graver.

"I agree with you, general," he said. "But you are a soldier, I am a civilian. Let us first see if we can not take some steps which will cause these misguided men to pause before they are brought into actual collision with the military forces of the State—perhaps even of the United States. Let us go at once to this so-called Fort Vigilant. I am the governor of this State, and you are the general commanding its military forces. If the leaders of this movement are honest men, there is no reason why they should refuse to receive us. Come, general, let us go."

As they hurriedly departed, Fox laughed sneeringly. "And a fine job they will make of it. A precious pair truly to suppress such a rising, this weakling of a governor, assisted by this retired military martinet."

When Fox had reached his chambers, he was told that a gentleman was waiting to see him. He was surprised to see that the visitor was Burke.

"Why, senator, I supposed you were still in Sacramento," he cried. "I don't know but that you would be wiser to stay away. The men who are on top in this mix-up are no friends of yours."

"That's why I've come to see you. By reason of your Federal position, you are debarred from taking sides. Both parties must be inclined to treat you with less distrust than one of the opposition. So you must know the inside doings of these Vigilantes. Now, I may as well tell you frankly that I have been summoned to appear before the Vigilantes—merely as a witness, I believe. What do you think of it?"

Fox paused, and reflected for some time. At last he spoke: "Well, of course you heard of the shooting of Fitzwilliams?"

"Yes, of course."

"And of how the Vigilantes came to organize?"

"Yes, but I don't know who are behind them."

"The same old crowd, senator—practically the same men who led the last Vigilance Committee. Carleton is at the head, and Bascom is secretary."

"But the old Committee confined themselves to attacking criminals of the lesser order. Do you think, judge, that this present gang would dare to go for—well, for men prominent politically and socially?"

"So they threaten, and it seems to be the belief of the community that they will. For example, as you know, Clancy has many friends. You yourself are spoken of everywhere as his patron and protector. Yet it is common rumor that the Vigilantes intend to take Clancy out of the jail and hang him."

"Indeed," said Burke frowning. "If there were any way of rescuing Clancy now—"

"I fear there is no way. The Law-and-Order party in this community is merely a corporal's guard. The militia are disbanding—whole companies of them have one over bodily to the Vigilantes, and have been mustered in as part of that organization. General Herman has been commissioned by the governor as commander-in-chief of the militia. But he has no militia to command. Even if he had the troops, he has nothing to arm them with—the muskets have been taken from the armories by the Vigilantes, and are now at Fort Vigilant. The governor and Herman were here less than half an hour ago, and they are now trying to secure weapons from the United States arsenal."

"Do you think they will succeed?"

Fox laughed sardonically. "Being a Federal official myself," he said, "and tolerably conversant with my fellow officials, and acquainted with General Ruhl, who commands the military post and arsenal, I doubt their success. The governor and Herman will ask Ruhl if they may have weapons. Ruhl in an ambiguous fashion will say that they may. Both of them, being impulsive and non-accurate persons, will be satisfied with this reply. In due time they will send their requisition to Ruhl; he will inform them that he promised to deliver the weapons only on certain conditions; those conditions will be so numerous and so ambiguous that no one can understand them, not even Ruhl. As a result the governor and the general will find themselves without the State militia, without the State's weapons, without Ruhl's promised assistance, and without any troops or weapons at all."

"If that is your opinion, judge, it is my opinion that the state of my health indicates that the Bay climate at this particular season is not suited for me."

"I am not a physician, my dear senator, but as a layman I have no hesitation in agreeing with you. The climate here is contra-indicated. It would be wise for you to go to the springs, or to the capital."

"And pay no attention to the Vigilante subpoena?"

"As a lawyer, I may remark that the body of men calling themselves Vigilantes can not issue subpoenas."

"That settles it," cried Burke suddenly, "to hell with the Vigilante summons!"

"Of course you understand that this is extra-judicial—an obiter dictum, as it were. And now let me ask you for news of the capital city. I hear that Tower is bitterly opposing the Vigilantes. What is his motive?"

"All of the Chivalry crowd seem to be opposed to the Vigilantes. It is odd, but it is so. Where they come from, in the sunny Southland, Judge Lynch has held permanent court for many years, and there is scarcely a man among them who hasn't helped hang a nigger now and then. But they form part of the political party on top here, and as every man-jack of them holds a political job, has held one, or expects to hold one, they are on the side of law and order."

"But that is the general feeling among them. Tower seems to have some special and rancorous feeling against the Vigilantes. Why is it?"

Burke paused and reflected for a moment. "I don't know what his motive may be," he said at last, "unless it is that he is on the bench and therefore opposed to those who defy the law. I am told he has been especially irritated by a threat on the part of the Vigilantes to defy his writ of habeas corpus. In that event, he declares that he will leave the capital and come here personally to see that it is served, and that the body of the Vigilantes' prisoner is brought before him."

"Will he though?" cried Fox with keen interest. "Now I believe in letting sleeping dogs lie. I am not looking for any writs to be brought before me leveled at the Vigilantes. So Tower threatens to come here to enforce service of his writs, does he? Well, he will get into trouble if he does."

"Yes, I think he will. But Tower is a man of indomitable courage. I do not think he fears the Vigilantes. As soon as there is a prisoner in Fort Vigilant, Tower will come."

A knock sounded at the door. A man entered, who, after glancing at Burke, whispered a few words in Fox's ear. When he went out Fox turned to Burke and said:

"Then Tower will soon be here. I have just learned that the Vigilance Committee has held a prolonged executive session, at which they decided that tomorrow morning they will attack the jail."

"And does your information go so far as to tell you what they will do at the jail?"

"Yes. They will seize Michael Clancy, Charles Costa, and Reuben Milligan, and take them to Fort Vigilant."

"And then?"

"And then," said Fox, "Clancy and Costa are to be hanged."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Copyright 1908 by Jerome A. Hart.

Queen Victoria's complaint against the terrible summer heat and the equally trying winter cold of the Spanish capital precipitates the question of the advisability of moving the government to Barcelona. Latest indications are that the matter may be compromised; that Madrid may remain the fall and spring capital, while Barcelona may become the summer and winter capital. The reasons for keeping the government at Madrid appear to be largely sentimental and economic; it is the old capital of the long line of Spanish rulers extending back for centuries, and the opposition to moving the government is deep rooted in national pride. The cost of moving the seat of the kingdom would be enormous and the finances of the nation are none too prosperous. Madrid is situated unfavorably from almost any standpoint. The surrounding plateau is treeless, exposing the city to the scorching south winds in summer and to the frigid breezes that descend from the snow-covered Sierra Guadarrama in winter. In contrast with this uncomfortable situation Barcelona's equable climate, due in large part to her position on the Mediterranean, appeals strongly to the Spanish love of ease. Barcelona has long been the commercial centre of Spain.

The most enduring memorial of Bishop Potter is the great, unfinished cathedral of St. John the Divine on Morningside Heights, which will have cost, it is estimated, over $20,000,000 when it is completed, well on in the present century. This was his own conception, and it was his influence alone that secured the financial backing which made its commencement possible.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Senator Robert M. La Follette of Wisconsin is about to establish a newspaper in Milwaukee of which he will be the editor.

Sergeant Walsh, U. S. A., recently finished at New York City a walk across the continent from San Francisco in sixty-four days. He is fifty-two years old.

King William and Queen Charlotte of Wurttemberg recently made a balloon ascension with Count von Zeppelin, an experience said to be unique among members of royal families.

Richard Harding Davis has been sworn in as deputy sheriff at White Plains, New York, at his own request, so as to police his property in North Castle, where there have been some daring hold-ups.

Thomas A. Edison, at sixty-one years of age, and said to be worth $25,000,000, is ready to relinquish his long-sustained and strenuous work in the line of inventions, and to do only scientific work that has special interest for him.

Carl Goldmark, the veteran composer, at the age of seventy-eight has brought out a new opera, "A Winter's Tale," with text from Shakespeare, which is spoken of as a new departure, and has been meeting with much success in Europe.

Kingdon Gould, son of George J. Gould, is working in the mines of Guanajuato as a common miner under the instruction and supervision of Professor Kemp, instructor of geology of Columbia University, where young Gould has been studying mining engineering.

Sir Walter Hilyer has been appointed expert adviser to the Chinese government. Sir Walter was born in China of English parents and is a learned sinologue. Li Hung Chang once said that he spoke and wrote Chinese as well as the most highly educated mandarin.

Professor Guglielmo Ferrero, a noted Italian student of Roman history, will come to America in the fall of this year, and will deliver a series of lectures on Roman history before the Lowers Institute of Boston, the Harvard University, Columbia University, and the University of Chicago.

Waldorf Astor, son of William Waldorf Astor, is a candidate for a seat in the House of Commons, to represent the ancient city of Plymouth, from which came the founders of New England. The young man is a Conservative, or, as members of the party are known by its opponents, a Tory.

David Jayne Hill, the American ambassador, delivered the inaugural lecture at the International Historical Congress in Berlin a few days ago in the presence of a remarkable assembly of scholars from all countries. His subject was the ethical functions of the historian. His paper was delivered in German.

Miss Isabelle Hagner, private secretary to Mrs. Roosevelt, is the human "who's who" of Washington. To be on the good books of Miss Hagner is social preferment enough in itself. Potentates, diplomats, and strugglers for recognition bow before this Southern girl, who wields so potent an influence on social destinies. Hostesses clamor to have Miss Hagner assist them at their teas.

Señor Canella, rector of the Asturian University of Spain, has sent invitations to university professors and officials throughout the world to attend the tercentenary of that institution next month. The Asturian University was inaugurated at Oviedo in 1608 by the munificence of Fernando Valdes, on a foundation dating much farther back. Of late years it has shown great intellectual activity and has exerted an important influence in modern Spanish culture.

Miss Charlotte Warren of Newport has been awarded the title as the most daring huntswoman at the meets of the Monmouth County hounds, of which Peter Collier is master. Miss Warren takes any old wall or fence the hounds rush over or under and Newport has never seen her equal as a daring rider. There was a time when Mrs. Thomas Pierce was thought to be the queen of the high jumpers, both at the hunts and at the Newport horse shows, but Miss Warren has eclipsed her best records.

William Voight, the celebrated "Captain Koepenick," has been released from the royal prison at Tegel, near Berlin, where he had been confined for twenty months for his exploit in arresting the municipal authorities at Koepenick and robbing them of several thousand dollars. He still had twenty-eight months to serve, but was pardoned by the Kaiser. Voight left the prison penniless. He will soon marry and open some business, his admirers having collected enough capital for him to make a start with. Frau Wertheim, a wealthy Jewish woman, has settled an annuity of $300 on him.

Count von Zeppelin, the aeronaut, was born in 1838 and devoted what air for most men the best years of life to military service. Retiring in 1880 with the rank of general, he turned with a boyish enthusiasm to pursuit of his hobby, aerial navigation. To the solution of the problem which had baffled the investigators of two centuries he sacrificed his fortune, with little apparent progress toward the goal. Poverty spurred him to greater exertion. In 1892 he made a successful balloon journey from Berne to Lucerne, but his work was lightly esteemed until 1900, when the surprising success of the first dirigible caused a genuine sensation. Since that time his progress has been easier.

A STORY OF INSANITY.

Clifford Wittingham Beers Writes a Unique Book About a Rare Experience.

Perhaps the author of "A Mind That Found Itself" is wise in his day and generation in prefacing a story "so strange as to challenge belief" by a letter from Professor William James of Harvard University. Mr. Beers, the author in question, submitted his manuscript to Professor James, who hastened to express his admiration and his hope for its publication. Professor James goes on to say that "it is fit to remain in literature as a classic account 'from within' of an insane person's psychology." Foreseeing the challenge of incredulity, the professor adds that the story "reads like fiction, but it is not fiction; and this I state emphatically, knowing how prone the uninitiated are to doubt the truthfulness of descriptions of abnormal mental processes."

Mr. Beers's book—a volume of some three hundred and sixty pages—is the story of two years of insanity. Others, similarly afflicted, have related their experiences to the best of their ability, but never before has such a story been told in so much detail, with so clear and detached a view of a past mental condition, or with such unusual literary power. Mr. Beers looks back upon his abnormal condition with the same clear vision that he would use toward a discarded political opinion. He dissects and analyzes his malady with the precision of personal knowledge and with all the judicial impartiality of entire detachment.

No adequate idea of so remarkable a book can be acquired without a perusal in its entirety. The alienist will wish to be fully informed as to the first warnings of mental disease and its gradual advance from suspicion to certainty. The humanitarian will be attracted to descriptions of asylum management and to the accusations of occasional cruelty and incompetence that find a place in Mr. Beers's book. But a few extracts will at least serve to show how convincing and vivid a document the author has given to us and the value of the light that it throws upon a distressing problem.

Mr. Beers was twenty-four years of age at the time of his great trouble. His brother had been stricken with epilepsy and as a result "I thought of epilepsy, I dreamed of epilepsy until . . . my overwrought imagination seemed to drag me to the very verge of an attack." Then came an accident to intensify the mental disturbance of which the real nature was still unsuspected:

Soon my disordered brain was busy with schemes for death. I distinctly remember one which included a row on Lake Whitney, near New Haven. This row I intended to take in the most treacherous boat obtainable. Such a craft could be easily upset, and I should so bequeath to relatives and friends a sufficient number of reasonable doubts to rob my death of the usual stigma. I also remember searching for some deadly drug which I hoped to find about the house. But the quantity and quality of what I found was not such as I dared trust. I then thought of severing my jugular vein, even going so far as to test against my throat the edge of a razor which, after the deadly impulse first asserted itself, I had secreted in a convenient place. I really wished to die, but so uncertain and bloody a method did not appeal to me. Nevertheless, had I felt sure that in my tremulous frenzy I could accomplish the act with skillful dispatch, I should at once have ended my troubles.

Many of the symptoms recalled by the author with extraordinary accuracy are familiar features in the history of insanity, but never before have they been recounted from the regained haven of sanity:

Handwriting on the wall has ever struck terror to the hearts of sane men. I remember as one of my most unpleasant experiences that I began to see handwriting on the sheets of my bed staring me in the face, and not me alone, but also the spurious relatives who often stood or sat near me. On each fresh sheet placed over me I would soon begin to see words, sentences, and signatures, all in my own handwriting. Yet I could not decipher any of the words, and this fact dismayed me, for I firmly believed that those who stood about could read them all and found them to be incriminating evidence.

I imagined that these vision-like effects, with few exceptions, were produced by a magic-lantern, controlled by some of my myriad persecutors. The lantern was rather a cinematographic contrivance. Moving pictures, often brilliantly colored, were thrown on the ceiling of my room and sometimes on the sheets of my bed. Human bodies, dismembered and gory, were one of the most common of these. All this may have been due to the fact that, as a boy, I had fed my imagination on the sensation news of the day as presented in the public press. These papers I had been accustomed to read thoroughly, reading first the worst news and ending with the best—if I had time. Despite the heavy penalty which I now paid for thus loading my mind, I believe this unwise indulgence gave a breadth and variety to my peculiar psychological experience which it otherwise would have lacked. For with an insane ingenuity I managed to connect myself with almost every crime of importance of which I had ever read.

This furnishes a somewhat grim commentary on the mischief wrought by the sensational press. It was the mental disease that enabled these pictures of crime to assume a torturing dominance, but that they must in every case persist in conscious or subconscious form waiting for abnormal conditions to assert themselves is evident. How great may still be their pernicious effects, even when confined to sub-conscious regions, remains a matter for determination.

Here, too, is another symptom of a retributive nature:

For a month or two, "false voices" continued to annoy me. And if there is a hell conducted on the principles of my temporary hell, gossipers will one day wish they had attended strictly to their own business. This is not a confession. I am no gossip, though I can not deny that I have occasionally gossiped—a little. And this was my punishment: persons in an adjoining room seemed to be repeating with reference to me the very same things which I had said of others on these communicative occasions. I supposed that those whom I had talked about had in some way found me out, and intended now to take their revenge. If all makers of idle talk could be put through such a corrective course, idle talkers would be abolished from the earth.

My sense of smell, too, became normal; but my sense of taste was slow in recovering. At each meal, poison was still the pièce de résistance, and it was not surprising that I sometimes dined one, two, or three hours over a meal, and often ended by not eating it at all.

There was, however, another reason for my frequent refusal to take food, in my belief that the detectives had resorted to a more subtle method of detection. They now intended by each article of food to suggest a certain idea, and I was expected to recognize the idea thus suggested. Conviction or acquittal depended upon my correct interpretation of their symbols, and my interpretation was to be signified by my eating, or not eating, the several kinds of food placed before me. To have eaten a burnt crust of bread would have been a confession of arson. Why? Simply because the charred crust suggested fire; and, as bread is the staff of life, would it not be an inevitable deduction that life had been destroyed—destroyed by fire—and that I was the destroyer? On one day to eat a given article of food meant confession. The next day, or the next meal, a refusal to eat it meant confession. This complication of logic made it doubly difficult for me to keep from incriminating myself and others.

The sense of humor is evidently consistent with insanity, as witness the following incident:

It became again highly expedient to the family purse, upon which my illness was so serious a drain, that every possible saving be made. Therefore I was transferred from the main building, where I had a private room and a special attendant, to a ward where I was to mingle, under an aggregate sort of supervision, with fifteen or twenty other patients. Here I had no special attendant by day, though one slept in my room at night.

Of this ward I had heard alarming reports—and these from the lips of several attendants. I was therefore greatly disturbed at the proposed change. But, the transfer once accomplished, after a few days I really liked my new quarters better than the old. During the entire time I remained at the sanatorium I was more alert mentally than I gave evidence of being. But not until after my removal to this ward, where I was left alone for hours every day, did I dare to give evidence of my alertness. Here I even went so far on one occasion as to joke with my new attendant. He had been trying to persuade me to take a bath. I refused, mainly because I did not like the looks of the bathroom, which, with its cement floor and central drain, resembled the washing-room of an improved stable. After all else had failed the attendant tried the rôle of sympathizer.

"Now I know just how you feel," said he, "I can put myself in your place."

"Well, if you can, do it and take the bath yourself," said I.

The author combats the general idea that the insane can not reason logically. Their premises may be delusional, but the superstructure of argument raised upon them may be rational. He says that his mental processes were those of the ordinarily well-ordered mind:

Having now no special attendant I spent many hours in my room, alone, but not absolutely alone, for somewhere the eye of a detective was ever more upon me. I soon fancied that my case had been transferred from the State to the Federal authorities, and the fear of an all-powerful Secret Service did not tend to ease my laboring imagination. Comparative solitude, however, gave me courage and soon I began to read, regardless of consequences. During the entire period of my depression, every publication seemed to have been written and printed for me, and me alone. Books, magazines, and newspapers seemed to be special editions. The fact that I well knew how inordinate would be the cost of such a procedure in no way shook my faith in it. Indeed, that I was costing my persecutors fabulous sums of money was a source of secret satisfaction—a psychological phenomenon, perhaps associated with delusions of grandeur which long afterwards asserted themselves. During the earliest stages of my illness I had lost count of time, and the calendar did not right itself until the day when I largely regained my reason. Meanwhile, the date on each newspaper was, according to my reckoning, two weeks out of the way. This confirmed my belief in the special editions as a part of the "Third Degree."

Most sane people think that no insane person can reason logically. But this is not so. Upon unreasonable premises I made most reasonable deductions, and that at the time when my mind was in its most disturbed condition. Had the papers which I read on the day which I supposed to be February 1 bore a January date, I might not then for so long a time have believed in a special edition. Probably I should have inferred that the regular editions had been held back. But the papers I had were dated about two weeks ahead. Now if a sane person on February 1 received a newspaper dated February 14, he will be fully justified in thinking something wrong, either with the paper or with himself. But the shifted calendar which had planted itself in my mind meant as much to me as the true calendar does to any sane business man. During the seven hundred and ninety-eight days of depression I drew countless incorrect deductions. But such as they were they were deductions, and the mental process was not other than that which takes place in a well-ordered mind.

The paragraph in which Mr. Beers describes the sensation of returning sanity is so suggestive that it may well be quoted:

I have already described the peculiar sensation which assailed me when, in June, 1900, I lost my reason. At that time my brain felt as though pricked by a million needles at white heat. On this August 30, 1902, shortly after regaining my reason, I had another most distinct sensation in the brain. It started under my brow and gradually spread until the entire surface was affected. The throes of a dying reason had been torture. The sensations felt as my dead reason was reborn were delightful. It seemed as though the refreshing breath of some kind Goddess of Wisdom were being gently blown against the surface of my brain. It was a sensation not unlike that produced by a menthol pencil rubbed ever so gently over a fevered brow. So delicate, so crisp and exhilarating was it that words fail me in my attempt to describe it. Doctors have it, in theory at least, that my depressed condition had been caused by a defective circulation of blood in the brain. The clated phase of my illness, which immediately followed, was, on the other hand, due to an over-stimulation of the brain-cells, caused by an intoxicating supply of blood vouchsafed by an abnormally joyous heart. Few, if any, experiences can be more delightful than that which followed. If the exaltation produced by some drugs is anything like it, I can easily understand how and why certain pernicious habits enslave those who contract them. For me, however, this experience was liberation, not enslavement.

The author's comments upon asylum management must be allowed to speak for themselves. The appendices to the volume show that they have been received with the attention that they deserve. They can not be dismissed as phantoms of a once disordered mind. The book itself, with its array of marshaled facts, its clear and connected narrative, its forceful and logical coherence, compels the attention of the thoughtful; its pathos and its tragedy must appeal to a benevolent humanitarianism that seeks to allay the sufferings of the insane and that has already substituted a kindly common sense for the rigors that were once thought to be remedial. "A Mind That Found Itself," by Clifford Wittingham Beers. Published by Longmans, Green & Co., New York; $1.50.

"Three Weeks" on the Stage.

In the half-column description by the London Express of the private performance at the Adelphi Theatre in London, July 23, of "Three Weeks," with the author in the leading feminine part, there is no criticism of the play or of any of the actors who assisted Mrs. Glyn. Much attention is paid, however, to the character of "those present," as the following paragraphs will show. Strange to say, the Mail and the Chronicle did not notice the performance:

Prince Francis of Teck was in Lord and Lady Lonsborough's box, and the Grand Duke Michael was in the box above that. Mrs. Keppel and Mrs. Willie James shared a box with Mrs. Hall Walker, to whose beautiful house in Regent's Park the king paid a visit on the previous day.

In the next box, in deep mourning, sat Lady Paget, who had taken a direct personal interest in the production of the play.

The Duchess of Rutland, Lord Curzon, Lord Lamington, Lord Redesdale, the Austrian and German ambassadors, and Mrs. George West were in the stalls, as were also a group of famous actors and actresses, including Sir C. Wyndham, Miss Mary Moore, and Miss Alexandra Carlisle. There was no distinction between pit and stalls, the barriers having been thrown open, and all the seats on the ground floor and the dress circle were occupied by persons of social distinction.

The actual production of the play was by Mr. Hawtrey, who took the final "call" with Mrs. Glyn. The piece was staged in a most lavish manner, the total cost to Mrs. Glyn being about £700. The authoress herself took the part of the queen, or, as she was described throughout the play, "The Lady." Her dresses were charming; they were by "Lucile," her sister, who is in private life Lady Duff-Gordon.

Mrs. Glyn's voice was too delicate to carry far over the footlights, but her performance showed signs of considerable study of technique.

A few departures from the novel were noticeable in the play. The chief point of difference from the story was in the final interview of the young Englishman with the queen, just before the latter is murdered by her husband.

A prologue has also been added, and this was considered by many of the audience as unnecessary.

Another unusual incident in a theatre was the serving of afternoon tea at intervals by stately servants in knee-breeches and silk stockings. They came, as a matter of fact, from the house of one of the best-known hostesses.

The part of the queen was very emotional, and involved great strain on Mrs. Glyn, who showed some signs of distress at the close.

When Meredith Nicholson comes downtown in Indianapolis these days he waves off all his friends and cries "Unclean, unclean." He sometimes takes the middle of the road. Those who have heard about him whip up as he passes, and he himself admits that chauffeurs turn on their hill-climbers to get away from him, while the night-blooming dogs contemplate him with meanest mien. It is the whooping cough! "My children are now whooping in the hills north of New York somewhere," he says, "and they gave it to me as I was leaving them so that I could not fail to remember them in absence. As a memento, a slight souvenir, so to speak, the whooping cough has any other form of memorabilia whipped off the reservation. The seismographs at Washington, Greenwich, and that most sensitive one on the Isle of Wight all record me now."

CURRENT VERSE.

On a Portrait by Tintoret.

An old man sitting in the evening light
Touching a spinnet; there is stormy blow
In the red heavens; but he does not know
How fast the clouds are faring to the night;
He hears the sunset as he thrums some slight
Soft tune that clears the track of long ago,
And as his musings wander to and fro,
Where the years passed along, a sage delight
Is creeping in his eyes. His soul is old,
The sky is old, the sunset browns to gray;
But he, to some dear country of his youth
By those few notes of music borne away,
Is listening to a story that is told,
And listens, smiling at the story's truth.
—"Michael Field," in "Wild Honey from Various Thyme."

The Dead Faith.

She made a little shadow-hidden grave
The day Faith died;
Therein she laid it, heard the clod's sick fall,
And smiled aside—
"If less I ask," tear-blind, she mocked, "I may Be less denied."

She set a rose to blossom in her hair,
The day Faith died—
"Now glad," she said, "and free at last, I go,
And life is wide."
But through long nights she stared into the dark,
And knew she lied.
—Fanny Heaslip Lea, in Gunter's Magazine.

In the Children's Hospital.

May be it was her littleness, may be
Because she looked so dumb and so forlorn,
But when, in that sad place, they showed to me
The shy, small stranger, and I knew the morn

Must pass to noon, and noon give place to night,
Bringing no promise of a better day;
And she, so meek, so grateful for the sight
Of ought to drive her misery away:

Then with a sacred pity my heart bled,
And seemed rebuked for all its easy years;
Down on that pillow we I bowed my head
And cherished her; her tears became my tears.
—Richard Burton, in Harper's Magazine.

The Martin's Song.

Dear Heart, today, somewhere I heard a mating martin sing,
In his wild flight above my head upon a tireless wing.
And with the note so new and sweet, so plaintive,
strange, and low,
There seemed to flood within my soul love songs of long ago.

He did not linger in his flight to rest nor yet to sing,
I only caught a fleeting glimpse of polished breast and wing;
But with it came the fragrant scent of climbing
roses red,
And with it came the memory of Summer days long dead.

Sweet Summer days and glorious nights, when hearts beat fast and true;
When down the primrose path of life I wandered,
Love, with you;
But now the days of youth are dead—the path of life is long;
And only memories of all come with the martin's song.
—Will D. Muse, in Uncle Remus's Magazine.

Miss Katherine Prescott Wormeley, who died recently at her home in Jackson, New Hampshire, is best known as the biographer and translator of Honoré de Balzac. She was a master of style—Balzac's own and her translations are fairly rivals in expression; and she will remain an influence in thought and letters thereby. Few have thought of her, as her work has been so continuous and so able, as having reached the great age of seventy-eight. She was born at Ipswich, England, January 14, 1830, daughter of Rear-Admiral Ralph Randolph Wormeley of the English navy, and his wife, Caroline Preble, who was a niece of Commodore Edward Preble, one of the founders of the United States navy. Miss Wormeley came to this country when she was a girl of sixteen, and her home then and for the greater part of her life was Newport, Rhode Island. In the course of the Civil War she early volunteered as nurse in field and hospital with the Union army. Besides her Balzac, in forty volumes, she translated Molière's works, in six volumes; the memoirs of Saint Simon; Versailles historical memoirs, in twenty-nine volumes; Daudet's "Tartarin of Tarascon" and "Kings in Exile."

In connection with the Quebec tricentennial celebration it is worth while to remember that Thoreau's "A Yankee in Canada" gives an interesting account of Quebec and the St. Lawrence country. This title is no longer to be found on the cover of any of Thoreau's books, but the story itself forms a large section of the volume entitled "Excursions." Thoreau quotes two explanations of the origin of the word "Quebec." One is that Jacques Cartier's pilot exclaimed in Normar French at first sight of its lofty headland "Que bec!" (what a peak!) The other was given by a St. Francis Indian, Tahmunt by name, whom Thoreau came across in the Maine woods in 1853. He said, "When the English ships came up the river they could not go any further, it was so narrow there they must go back—go back—that's Quebec" which, as Thoreau intimates, is more than doubtful etymology.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

By Sidney G. P. Coryn.

An illustration of President Cleveland's modesty is worth recalling at a time when this particular virtue is not exactly aggressive. In compiling "The World's Famous Orations" the Funk & Wagnalls Company wished to include two of Mr. Cleveland's speeches, but upon asking for Mr. Cleveland's permission they were met by an emphatic refusal on the ground that in his opinion he had never delivered a speech worthy of so high a place and that none of his orations were worthy of a position in such a collection. Mr. Halsey, the associate editor of the book, finally undertook a journey of remonstrance to Princeton and he returned successful, but only after he had given his assurance that the speeches were chosen for publication not because of their oratorical excellence, but because of their connection with important historical events. Mr. Cleveland's modesty was not, of course, confined to his literary or oratorical achievements, and the incident illustrates a characteristic noticeable from other points of view.

Miscellanies, Volume IV, by John Morley. Published by the Macmillan Company, New York; $1.50.

The reading of Lord Morley's essays always suggests a regret that their distinguished author should have been tempted from the contemplative paths of literature into the partisanships of practical politics. He is peculiarly fitted by nature to regard men and events from the outside with the detachment of the non-combatant, although it must be admitted that his hand has lost none of its cunning nor become calloused by contact with the rough mechanisms of political administration.

The present volume contains seven essays, all marked by grave earnestness and ripe scholarship. To say that "Democracy and Reaction" is the best is perhaps a mere personal preference, although it would be hard to find a better illustration of the author's power of judicial survey. The essay on "Machiavelli" contains much that is new to the average reader, although it was delivered as a Romanes lecture in 1897. "A New Calendar of Great Men" is a deserved word of critical appreciation of the labors of Conte and of his followers, while other essays are on "Guicciardini," "John Stuart Mill," "Lecky on Democracy," and "A Historical Romance." Lord Morley is one of those men, all too few upon the public stage, who are not afraid to tell both masses and directing classes what they judge to be the truth without fear or favor, and this, as he well says, is "what the salvation of democracy depends upon."

A Modern Prometheus, by Martha Gilbert Dickinson Bianchi. Published by Duffield & Co., New York; $1.50.

A woman's heroine is always an interesting study and we have such a study here in elaborate and comprehensive detail. Clare, Countess Variani, soon after her marriage to an Italian husband finds that his graces, however fascinating, are external only, and that inwardly he is a brute and a débauché. A separation follows and we are told that Clare, like the child in the poem, might have cried out:

Lost or strayed from Paradise,
A little girl with woman's eyes!
Who will take her by the hand
And lead her back to Fairyland?

Clare is indeed one of those women who need to be taken by the hand, and in spite of the suspicion that we are expected to admire her we are forced to regard her as spineless, neurotic, hysterical, and a bore.

She remains in Italy with her mother in a condition of mental and dreamy hypochondria seeking distraction in religious antiquities, her memory full of spectres of disillusion, dreading alike the visions of the past and the prospects of an unguided and undirected future. Then comes the Jesuit Bernardino with instructions from his order to win over this weak soul from Protestantism to his own faith, to reunite her with her husband for the ultimate good of the church, or to persuade her into a convent for the same end. The larger part of the book is occupied with the wiles of the priest and the mesmerized flutterings of the woman whose education and intelligence are alike powerless against the credulity and dependence of her abnormally exaggerated sex and the trained will and shallow sophistry of the priest. It is a pitiful story and almost a disgusting one. Why the manly young American, Lloyd, should wish to marry her is a little strange, but if this story had been told by a man Lloyd would have made short work of Bernardino and of the web of sickly religion that he throws around Clare. That she ultimately breaks loose is due not to a healthy reaction in favor of Lloyd, but because she finds that Bernardino has deceived her as to the details of her husband's murder. Even then she parts from him with his assurance "you will come back, my daughter; you can not stay away," and to this she replies, "Who knows, my father, who knows." Whether she ultimately marries Lloyd we do not know. We can only hope that some one takes care of her and tells her what she may believe and what she may do. She certainly can not take care of herself.

But none the less the story has unusual merit. It persuades us that there are such women as Clare, whose culture is wholly inadequate to the evolution of any scheme of brave and independent life and who are as autumn leaves before the wind of disappointment. As a study of Italian life and land the book must take a high place. The author is evidently saturated with Italian religious lore, and although she does not present us with a single character except Lloyd who can command more than a tolerant contempt, her hook remains not only an interesting, but an important one.

The Woman Pays, by Frederic P. Ladd. Published by Mitchell Kennerley, New York; $1.50.

We can hardly suppose that this repulsive story represents any considerable phase of life in New York or elsewhere. We seem to know all about the Rev. Harry Arthur Leslie from the description of his praying abilities with which the book opens. Why any woman should be fascinated by such a tinkling cymal is one of the mysteries, but we are not surprised when we find him a frequent visitor upon the charming wife of Winthrop Kent, and we can only wonder that Kent does not kick him downstairs when he finds him there at midnight in a state bordering upon intoxication. The inevitable follows quickly in the shape of clandestine meetings, the ruin of a woman, and the destruction of a home. It would have been so easy not to write this ugly story.

Italica, by William Roscoe Thayer. Published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston and New York; $1.50.

These essays are well selected and with an eye to the public demand. Although some of them were published as much as ten years ago, they represent thought that is living and they appeal to a general interest that is as keen today as ever it was. The sketch of Fogazzaro, although too short, is particularly good. So, too, is "Mazzini's Centenary" and "Dante in America." Other essays are "The Election of a Pope," "Cardinal Hohenlohe," "Italy in 1907," and "Giosue Carducci." There are fourteen essays in all and they are marked by an evident comprehension of the Italian spirit and a fine recognition of worthy sentiment and literary achievement.

Drama and Life, by A. B. Walkley. Published by Brentano's, New York.

This hook comes opportunely at a time when the drama is asking for a place among the scholarly arts and when the dramatic conscience is uneasily stirring under a sense of neglected possibilities. Mr. Walkley's voice is not entirely alone upon its lofty plane of praise and censure, but there is certainly no criticism more searching and no more righteous intolerance of unworthiness or inefficiency. No one, for instance, has more unerringly pointed out that Mr. Shaw can never be a dramatist until he learns his responsibilities to his material, until he ceases from speechmaking, until he learns to observe the great realities of life rather than its oddities and inconsistencies. Mr. Shaw is a very small pebble upon Mr. Walkley's beach, and where, by the way, is Ibsen? Ibsenism "soon passed away."

There are twenty-three essays in this volume, and they are general and particular. Among the former is a comparison between the English and the French drama, a consideration of the processes of thought in playmaking which is indeed all too short, but yet long enough to show us that "there is no orthodox method of play invention," a treatise on the art of acting, and another one on the elements of curiosity and horror in the theatre. Horror, it seems, is still a compelling force and thus the inner primeval man yet holds sway, lust for strong emotion is greater than art, and once more we face the commonplace that our civilization is only skin deep.

Among the subjects for particular essays are Euripides, Shakespeare, Irving, Pinero, Barrie, Shaw, Duse, Bernhardt, and Rejane. Principal plays are considered critically and historically and we are reminded of a thousand and one things that start into obviousness for the first time. Mr. Walkley draws from an extraordinary fund of knowledge. The drama has evidently been his life study and he approaches it with an enthusiasm, a capacity, and an abandon beyond all praise.

The Happy Moralist, by Huhert Bland. Published by Mitchell Kennerley, New York; $1.25.

These pleasing essays may be safely commended to the man of the world who wishes to have his easy philosophies confirmed and to be beguiled into thought on men and manners. In a style that reminds us of Anthony Hope and the "Dolly Dialogues," Mr. Bland charms us with light and amusing discourse—we may even say cultured chatter—on love, literature, art, religion, and kindred diversions. It is all very readable, very clever, and sufficiently unencumbered by tiresome thought to be read at any hour of the day or night, week days and Sundays alike.

"I Never Dine Without It."

I find it gives an appetizing relish to an otherwise insipid dish. I like it on Soups, Stews and Hashes. It greatly improves Steaks, Roast Meats and Chops.

LEA & PERRINS

SAUCE

THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

Just a little on Cheese is a necessary finishing touch. Without it no Rarebit is complete. It is a good digestive.

Beware of Imitations.

John Duncan's Sons, Agents, New York.

Yosemite Valley
WHERE COOL SEA BREEZES BLOW
BIG TREES CALIFORNIA
LAKE TAHOE
CALIFORNIA THE CAMPER'S PARADISE

Vacation Questions Quickly Settled
Call or write to Dept. Ad. 948 Flood Building for literature and beautifully illustrated booklets on California Resorts and Outing Places.

ROWING—BATHING—FISHING—CAMPING—EXCELLENT HOTELS
SOUTHERN PACIFIC TICKET OFFICES
884 Market St., 14 Powell St., Ferry Depot

LITERARY NOTES.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

It is being told of Renan in Paris that his contemporary Boissier came to him beamingly to hoast that one of his autographs had been sold at an auction for a dollar, while Renan's had brought only 60 cents. "Well," said Renan, "now let me tell you the reason." And he produced the identical dollar autograph from his desk. There were three mistakes in spelling and it had been bought in at a fancy price to keep the public from learning that an academician could not spell.

Mr. William Heinemann, the well-known London publisher, is a man of varied talents. It is known that he has successfully appeared in London in a number of copyright performances of modern standard plays, and now he has been displaying his skill as a photographer in a number of striking snapshots that he has taken of Mr. William DeMorgan, author of "Somehow Good," and "Joseph Vance," in Florence. Although it is known that Mr. DeMorgan is considerably over forty, he does not look a day over it in these pictures, all of which show him in the best of humor. Most of them were taken in the beautiful Cachine Park, one of them at the spot where Shelley wrote "The Ode to the West Wind." Still another shows Mr. DeMorgan on the Lung Arno near where Dante met Beatrice.

An English publisher recently stated that the authors of the cheap novelettes published in London receive $15 for a work of 30,000 words. An enthusiastic, hard-working fictionist is able to turn out one of these productions in a week, if necessity compels.

Frederic S. Isham, author of "The Lady of the Mount" and other novels, has been traveling in Russia and Siberia for purposes literary and otherwise. "Two pictures seen in this big realm linger in the memory," writes Mr. Isham, shortly after leaving Vladivostok, to his publishers. "One impression is bright, beautiful, shining; that of Peterhof, the summer palace of the Czar. They were 'house cleaning' in anticipation of his coming, and the statuary of the wonderful fountain, or series of fountains, recalling Versailles, were being gilded: the palace, favorite abode of Catherine, dazzled the gaze with its splendor. Paint; gilt; marble; flowers! Before it the sea, where Peter the Great was wont to stand, not to dream, but to plan great accomplishments. What is Nicholas thinking of today as, like the monarchs of old, he walks in these gardens enchanted? Of the second picture? He has never seen it."

Miss Irene Osgood, an English novelist, has offered three prizes, amounting to twenty pounds, for the three best criticisms of her new novel, "Servitude." Miss Osgood declares that she wishes to get at the opinions and advice of the reading public.

Miss Anna McClure Sholl, whose third novel, "The Greater Love," has just been published, is a niece of the distinguished Browning scholar and friend of Browning, Dr. Hiram Corson, who for over thirty years filled the chair of English literature in Cornell University. Miss Sholl resides in New York City, but was born in Philadelphia, and comes on her mother's side of a Quaker family of French-Huguenot origin. She is an essayist as well as a novelist, and contributed many biographical essays to Charles Dudley Warner's "Library of the World's Best Literature."

Anatole France may yet receive a fuller share of American recognition than has yet fallen to his lot. The John Lane Company are about to issue a complete edition of his works, and the first volume, "The Mother of Pearl," is now ready for delivery. This will be followed by "The Red Lily," "The Garden of Epicurus," and other well-known novels, essays, and biographies until the complete works have been issued.

New Publications.

The Elite Music Company, San Francisco, have published "Seven Heart Songs," with music composed by Leila France. Price, $1.

Harper & Brothers, New York, have published "The Land of Make-Believe and Other Christmas Poems," by Wilbur Nesbit. Price, $1.40.

"The Marquis and Pamela," by Edward H. Cooper, is a story of aristocratic life in England as found in racing circles. The characters are titled betting men, roués, gamblers, sharps, thieves, mistresses, and nasty women. Published by Duffield & Co., New York; $1.50.

B. W. Huebsch, New York, has published a little volume of wise and homely philosophy by Colonel Thomas Wentworth Higginson, who is now in his eighty-fourth year. The book is entitled "Things Worth While." It appears in The Art of Life Series and its price is 50 cents.

Miss Bennett has written a useful book under the title of "The Vegetable Garden." Besides dealing fully with various vegetables that form the staple of the small garden, the book has excellent chapters on fertilizers, insecticides, and cookery. It tells us all that we need to know, from the planting of the seed to the appearance of the vegetables upon the dining-table. It is published by the McClure Company, New York. Price, $1.50.

The American Book Company has published "Cuentos Modernos," edited with notes and vocabulary by Albert Bushnell. In this little volume are grouped nineteen short stories by fifteen of the leading modern Spanish authors. Price, 60 cents.

A poetic work by Alice Maude Ewell has been issued by the Neale Publishing Company, New York and Washington. It is entitled "The Heart of Old Virginia," and it is enriched by twenty-one full-page drawings by Sue Berkeley Alrich. Both poetry and drawings are delicate and pleasing. Price, $1.

The Baker & Taylor Co., New York, have published "A Child's Guide to Pictures," by Charles H. Caffin, a volume of original critical judgment of the qualities required in all good pictures. The book is illustrated by many examples and several diagrams. Price, $1.25.

Brentano's, New York, have published a volume to be treasured by school girls. It is called "School Days, A Memory Book," and its scope is from the first day in school to graduation day. The arrangement and the pictures upon every page are by Josephine Bruce and space is left for diary purposes.

"Country constables who make a living arresting speeding automobilists wouldn't have half so much trouble stopping the scorchers if they used a little ingenuity," says one of the offenders. "Chains across the road and moving vans hocking the highway are all right to accomplish the purpose, but they're cumbersome. A better idea for causing a prompt slow-up is to scatter a lot of grain in a road and turn a lot of hens loose. They would block the road all right, and if there's one thing that will make a chauffeur slow up it's a hen. Dogs are bad enough, but a hen always runs the wrong way, and if the machine is going at any speed usually ends up under the wheels. Hitting a hen will sometimes throw the front wheels out of line and cause the car to swerve so drivers almost invariably slow up and give poultry a chance to get out of the way. A hen speed trap is a great idea, to my way of thinking, and of course if one of the birds were killed the cost could easily be added to the driver's fine."

Joseph O'Mara, who has been singing for some time abroad in opera, and who will be remembered as the Irish tenor who made a hit in "The Highwayman" and some other operettas, has been engaged by Brooks and Dingwall, and will sing in "Peggy Machree," the Irish musical comedy by Mrs. Denis O'Sullivan.

George M. Cohan has just given a new twist to his versatility by writing a minstrel afterpiece for the burned-cork company headed by George Evans, which recently began with clat its career.

James Duncan Hague.

James Duncan Hague, a consulting mining engineer, president of several mining companies, and a member of many New York clubs, died August 4 at Stockbridge, Massachusetts. He had a summer home there, but spent a large part of his time at his town house, in New York City.

Born in Boston on February 24, 1836, Mr. Hague was educated in private schools and at the Lawrence Scientific School, Harvard University. Then he went to the Georgia Augusta University, Göttingen, Germany, and to the Royal School of Mines, at Freiberg, Saxony, where he remained from 1836 to 1858. He married Miss Mary Ward Foote at Guilford, Connecticut, in 1872.

Before that, however, he made a long trip of exploration to the South Seas, in 1859-1861, and in 1862-1863 he had a period of service in the United States navy. For three years, until 1866, he was a manager of copper mines in the Lake Superior region. While there he participated in the development of the Calumet property. Next he was an assistant geologist on the United States Geological Survey, and from 1871 to 1878 he was a consulting mining engineer in California. He was commissioner to the Paris Exposition of 1878.

During Mr. Hague's residence in San Francisco he made many warm friends. He was a member of the Pacific Union Club, and all who met him were impressed by his dignified courtesy and unvarying geniality. He returned to New York in 1879, and was a member of many literary, scientific, and fellowship societies. He was an author of several books, and often contributed articles to the monthly magazines.

Mr. Peter Curran, a member of Parliament, speaking recently at Tottenham, said that being in the House of Commons did not tend towards a man's moral or intellectual improvement, and he questioned whether he was equal intellectually to what he was years ago. He was doubtful whether he had ever been in such bad company as that which he had been compelled to associate with in his experience as member of Parliament.

That is an unkind blow which Sir Charles Wyndham aims at America, and must go far to offset the praise bestowed upon our speech by the German Dr. Brandl. "It must be remembered," said Sir Charles, "that Americans are always talking. They imbibe fluency with their mothers' milk. I do not consider, however, that there is anything like the same proportion of really good public speakers in America as in England."

May and Flora Hengler, two dainty dancers, well known on the vaudeville stage, will go out next season as twin stars in a musical comedy.

The report that M. Coquelin was to make a farewell tour in this country is denied.

ROBERT HERRICK'S
NEW NOVEL OF MARRIAGE
Sixth Edition Now Ready. Cloth, $1.50
TOGETHER

There are two sides to every marriage—the man's and the woman's; and the reviewers are taking sides over even this novel of marriage. Reviews are often quoted unfairly; uncomplimentary passages are overlooked. But of so hotly discussed a book as this it seems fair to give both points of view.

"A sentimentalization of sin quite unworthy of the author's reputation."
—The Congregationalist.

"'Together' is quite frankly and ingeniously a 'preachment.'"
—Plain Dealer.

"The puppets play their parts with the rigidity of automata and are so palpably classified and labeled for exhibition purposes as to make little impression on the mind."
—Baltimore Sun.

"Respectable people in their daily association do not talk about the things that are so freely written about in the book. . . . It contains absolutely nothing that will have the tendency to make society cleaner and better."
—News and Courier.

"There is a fine constructive philosophy in it, a healthful, wholesome, uplifting wisdom."
—The Interior.

"'Together' is not a treatise. It is a story all the time."
—New York World.

"Why, it's just like real life . . . sometimes I wonder whether the man that wrote it didn't know all the people in it. . . . But I just can't wait till I get back to it every time I lay it down."
—Pittsburg Gazette-Times.

"The whole spirit of the book is too earnest, too wise, too healthy in its recognition of the splendid realities of life ever to offend the thinking man or woman."
—The Forum.

"What really is of importance is THAT IN

TOGETHER

WE HAVE A BOOK OF FIRST MAGNITUDE THAT HANDLES A MOMENTOUS THEME BOLDLY, WISELY, SYMPATHETICALLY, AND WITH AN INSIGHT INTO RACIAL TRAITS THAT MAKES IT IN THE BEST SENSE A REPRESENTATIVE AMERICAN NOVEL.—Dr. Fred Tabor Cooper in The Forum.

For Sale Everywhere
That Books Are Sold

The Macmillan Company

Publishers,
Cloth, $1.50

Wrong glasses are worse, sometimes, than none.
Don't neglect nature's warning. If your eyes tire they call for help.

HIRSCH & KAISER
218 Post St. Opticians

JUST A BOOK STORE
Robertson's
1539 Van Ness Ave.
NEAR PINE
"Next to the White House"

Sherman, Clay & Co., occupying this entire building at Kearny and Sutter Streets, S. F., are headquarters for every kind of musical instruments from Steinway pianos down. You have no need to go elsewhere for any article pertaining to the music business.

Sherman, Clay & Co.

Steinway and Other Pianos—
Victor Talking Machines
KEARNEY AND SUTTER, S. F.
1635 Van Ness Ave. Broadway at 13th
San Francisco Oakland

EDUCATIONAL

IRVING INSTITUTE Boarding and Day School for Girls
2126 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Music, languages, art, elocution, Kindergarten, primary, grammar, high school, and advanced grades. Accredited by the universities. Twenty-ninth year. Non-sectarian. Pupils admitted at any time. New term opens Monday, August 3.
MISS ELLA M. PINKHAM, Principal.

CALIFORNIA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
Irving Institute Building
Full corps of teachers in every department. Send for catalogue.
HERMANN GENSS, President.

THE HAMLIN SCHOOL
A Boarding and Day School for Girls
Miss Hamlin announces the reopening of the school August 10. It is accredited by the California Universities and by Eastern colleges. Advanced courses of study are offered to High School graduates and to those who have left school, with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to a school diploma.
Classes in Instrumental and Vocal Music and in Drawing and Painting are formed and facilities are given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basket Ball, etc. For particulars address
MISS HAMLIN,
2230 Pacific Ave., San Francisco.

Oakland Conservatory of Music
1170 Madison Street, Oakland, Cal.
The largest, oldest established, and most thoroughly equipped school of genuine musical instruction on the Pacific Coast.
Conducted on the lines of the most noted European and Eastern schools.
Full prospectus on application.
Director, ADOLF GREGORY.

BERKELEY PREPARATORY SCHOOL
Boarding and Day School for Boys
2207 Dwight Way, Berkeley, Cal.
Fall term opens August 24
J. H. WHITE, Principal

SNELL SEMINARY 2721 Channing Way Berkeley
Girls' boarding and day school. Certificate admits to University of California, Stanford, and Eastern colleges. Opens August 10. Superior location. Outdoor life.
MRS. EDNA SNELL POULSON, Principal

PENNSYLVANIA, Ogontz School P. O.
OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES
Twenty minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. The late Mr. Jay Cooke's fine property. Miss SYLVIA J. EASTMAN, Miss ABBY A. SUTHERLAND, Principals.

CASTILLEJA SCHOOL
Palo Alto, California
Home and day school for girls. University preparatory. Outdoor physical training a special feature. Opens August 24. Illustrated catalogue.
MISS MARY I. LOCKEY, A. B., Principal.

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.

There is never room for doubt concerning the loyalty of San Francisco theatre-goers to a player who has once won their favor. Age does not stale and even custom-made musical force does not wither the variety of their devotion. Yet of all stage favorites it is probable that the comic-opera comedian retains his popularity by the most precarious hold. His box of tricks is sparsely furnished because of the limited demands of the materials with which he works, and very soon his admirers have an intimate acquaintance with all his baggage. The turn of his eyebrows, the up-curving and down-drawings of his mouth, the inflections of his voice, the heaving of his shoulders, the waving of his hands, the antic versatility of his nether limbs, all these become as familiar as the rise and fall of the curtain. Withal, the comic-opera comedian persists, and the public rallies enthusiastically to his support.

Ferris Hartman, long-time funmaker in chief at the old Tivoli Opera House, faced a San Francisco audience Monday evening at the Princess Theatre for the first time in four years, and the plaudits that filled the crackling atmosphere from the orchestra rail to the congested lobby were a meaty, satisfying tribute to his continued popularity. And he still the Ferris Hartman of those other days, the buffoon of fifty burlesques, from "Ship Ahoy"; the comedian of a more comic opera, from "Madame Favart" to "Pinafore"—intimately genial, unassuming, unmusical, yet humorously winning. His welcome must have recalled to him an even more enthusiastic greeting of former years, when he returned to the Tivoli from a long absence in the East.

"The Idol's Eye," written for Frank Daniels, and never an overwhelming success with that compact and grotesque mummer, was the offering chosen for the opening of Hartman's engagement, and it is serving fairly well the requirements of a week's run. As was planned, the comedian is the central figure in each of the three acts, but in the progress of years other rôles have taken on something more than minor importance. When the piece was originally produced, Alf Wheelan forced a Scotch humoresque from the fourth position up near the front, and his success in the part did much to lessen Daniels's regard for the work which had been constructed to order for him. At the Princess Theatre this week Walter Catlett does excellent work in the Wheelan part, though his make-up is needlessly repellent.

As Damayanti, the Nautch girl, Zoe Barnett comes into her own, and is all that the rôle requires in beauty and grace. She reads her lines with entire seriousness, and the "warm Oriental nature" insisted upon by the librettist makes her still "too fond for idle scolding." Sarah Edwards is Priestess of the temple with a single song, which is well done; a single scene of dramatic purpose, which is fairly well carried off; a single shout of command, which wakes the echoes of the scene loft. Evelyn Frances Kellogg is a pretty picture as Maraquita.

Arthur Cunningham is a truly torrid Tosasco, with a hybrid Cuban-Italian-Hibernian dialect, and Wallace Brownlow a tuneful but inconsequential American lover—the inconsequentiality altogether the fault of the book. Mayhelle Baker is not only a dashing lieutenant, but a figure of such lissom shapeliness that even the prima donna can not win from her the limelight of masculine admiration.

Even Frank Daniels, with complete realization of the value of thronging and impersonal auxiliary attractions, never crowded his stage with such a chorus as is provided at the Ellis-Street opera house. Its numbers increase steadily, but the standard of comeliness and rhythmical movement is never allowed to droop. Stage Manager George Lask well deserved the share in the applause which Comedian Hartman with craft attempted to divert to him on the opening night.

Next Monday night "The Toymaker" will be put on. Hartman is very happy and more genuinely a comedian in this musical conceit. His Johannes Guggenheimer is a distinct conception, and is done without rubbing of the outlines. All the principal members of the Princess company are mentioned in the cast.

"Brother Officers," the play which will be put on at the New Alcazar Theatre next Monday, with White Whittlesey in the rôle of Lieutenant John Hinds, is one that has a special interest here, as it had its first production in this city. Henry Miller brought it out at the old Columbia Theatre eight years ago, and the approval given to it here was indorsed later in New York. The drama tells a story of human interest, and the difficulties and sorrows that beset the military officer who rises from the ranks are skillfully pictured. Mr. Whittlesey has found the part to be congenial in most particulars, and wins a success in it that bears comparison with that attending his more romantic efforts. It gives him opportunity for genuine comedy touches, as well as for true manly sentiment. His support in the play will be of the capable sort never failing at this playhouse.

At the American Theatre Sunday evening an opera of unfamiliar interest, but of real artistic worth, will be presented. "The Love Tales of Hoffmann," last of Offenbach's works, and never produced during his lifetime, is perhaps the most ambitious of all his compositions. His genius reached its greatest height in this opera, and it will continue fresh and inspiring even after those other inimitable productions of his earlier years have been forgotten. The company that will appear in the opera has for principals a number of popular favorites who have not been seen here for several seasons, and they will undoubtedly be warmly welcomed. Edith Mason, the charming prima donna, will certainly renew her former success, and Thomas Persse, no less favorably remembered, may confidently anticipate a particularly friendly greeting. Bernice Holmes, Arthur Mesmer, and Joseph Fogarty are also prominent in the cast, and their names come with pleasing recollections. Paul Steindorf, the musical director, long ago earned the regard of music lovers here, and his return will be auspicious, as he will lead a large and well-balanced orchestra. It would appear that attention has been given to every detail of the production, and an engagement of much more than ordinary interest should result. Everywhere the production of the opera has been attended with notable success, and all indications are favorable for a continuation of its gratifying record.

The De Haven Sextet, an interesting feature of which is Sydney C. Gibson, will be the headline attraction for the week beginning with the Sunday matinee at the Orpheum. They will appear in the terpsichorean operetta, "The Understudy," and Mr. Gibson, Miriam F. Carson, the Barrett Sisters, Florence Williams, and Elsie Krebs introduce in it a variety of songs and dances and many changes of costume. The Four Baltus, Olympic gymnasts, who recently concluded a triumphant engagement at the New York Hippodrome, will be seen for the first time in this city. They are exceptional athletes, whose skill entitles them to rank in a class by themselves. Eugene and Willie Howard will present their singing and dancing skit, "The Hebrew Messenger Boy and the Thespian." Dolesch and Zillbauer, the original Viennese street singers, who were the first to depict the itinerant minstrel on the stage, will have a pleasing musical number. Next week will be the last of the Big City Quartet, Charles H. Bradshaw and company, Raffin's Simian Performers, and the Four Rianos.

Next week at the Van Ness Theatre that striking play of American political life, "The Man of the Hour," returns for a short stay. Notable in this connection is the appearance of Cyril Scott, last seen here as the star of "The Prince Chap." In "The Man of the Hour" Mr. Scott will assume the rôle of Mayor Bennett, the central figure of the drama, and offer a contrast to his more romantic part in the earlier success. It is said that the author, George Broadhurst, had Mr. Scott in mind when he fashioned the leading character in his play of politics; however that may be, the actor fits the part. With Mr. Scott a number of well-known people of the stage will claim recognition, among them Miss Ethel Brandon in her former rôle—that of the mayor's mother. Ruby Bridges, Felix Haney, and Louis Hendricks are still playing their original parts in the play.

Henry Miller and company are in the last nights of their engagement, and the farewell performance of "The Great Divide" will be given Saturday night.

"Heartsease" is drawing well this week at the New Alcazar Theatre, the romantic hero, Eric Temple, being presented to the life by White Whittlesey. The introduced music by Mrs. Millie Flynn Gish and others, under direction of Homer Henley, is a distinct addition to the allurements of the play.

"The Girl Question," a musical comedy with a successful record, follows "The Man of the Hour" at the Van Ness Theatre.

Blanche Bates is rehearsing the new play, "The Fighting Hope," by William J. Hurlburt, and it will be produced September 7 at the Belasco Theatre in Washington, going to the Stuyvesant Theatre, New York, two weeks later.

While it is not generally exploited, it is known that twenty-three of the soloists singing in the leading parts in grand opera in Germany today are Americans. The force at Covent Garden in London this summer also largely depended upon its American singers.

Bronson Howard's Plays.

Many columns of eulogy have been written of Bronson Howard, the American playwright, whose death occurred August 4, at his home in Avon, New Jersey. Mr. Howard had been writing plays for nearly forty years, and he averaged about one play for each two years. He was president of the American Dramatists' Club and was a member of the Players, the Authors, and the Lotos clubs of New York, of the Savage and the Greenroom clubs of London and of the Prismatic Club of Detroit.

Detroit was the place of his birth, on October 7, 1842. His father was Charles Howard. He was educated at Russell's Institute at New Haven, Connecticut, and in October, 1880, he married Alice Wyndham, a sister of Sir Charles Wyndham, in London, England.

His principal plays were all produced originally in New York. Among the long list of comedies and other dramas are "The Henrietta," "Shenandoah," "Saratoga," "The Banker's Daughter," "Diamonds," "Old Love Letters," "Hurricanes," "Moorcroft," "Wives" (from Molière), "Aristocracy," "Young Mrs. Winthrop," "Peter Stuyvesant" (in which Brander Matthews collaborated), "One of Our Girls," and "Met by Chance." Several of his plays have been produced in London and Berlin.

Mr. Howard was a newspaper man in early life and worked successfully on the Evening Gazette, the Mail, and the Tribune. He turned his attention to the stage during those years and wrote several plays which were not accepted. Success came with the production of "Saratoga," in 1870, by Augustin Daly. In 1887 he wrote his merriest play, "The Henrietta," for Stuart Robson and William H. Crane, and Bertie, the Lamb, will be known on the stage long after the best character in "Shenandoah" is forgotten. The latter was played created a sensation and was the most successful of the Howard dramas, from a financial standpoint at least. In 1892 he set New York talking with "Aristocracy," a very brilliant comedy, which was the last thing of dramatic moment he wrote.

Maud Allan's "Salome" dance is by no means the one feature of her performances at the Palace Theatre in London. A few days ago the dancer presented a number of novelties, adding four new illustrations of her art to numbers chosen from Tschaiakowsky's Casse Noisette suite, which was originally written for a ballet based on Hoffmann's fairy story of "The Nutcracker." Of the four the last, "Valse des Fleurs," gained the most applause. In it Miss Allan, garlanded and girdled with roses, was in the merriest mood. In nothing hitherto, not even in the "Spring Song," has she shown so supreme a joyousness and abandon, so perfect an accompaniment of physical motion to sprightly melody. Yet it was in the Arabian dance, with its weirdly fascinating droning music, that Miss Allan perhaps gave an even finer example of her powers of interpretation, and her mastery of the whole art of dancing.

The play which Clara Morris has written around the character of Mrs. Siddons deals with the great actress in her youth. It will show how she protected the daughter of an old sweetheart, how she was hissed from the stage, how she encountered a highwayman, and how she conducted herself in the moment of final triumph. A considerable amount of romance seems to be mixed up with the reality.

"Humph! Him? He'd run before he'd fight me!" "I guess he'd have to."—Houston Post.

WESTERN ASSURANCE COMPANY

TORONTO
U. S. Assets.....$2,493,154
" Surplus 483,989
PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT
1004 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE
SAN FRANCISCO
J. J. KENNY, Manager W. L. W. MILLER, Assistant Manager

ROUND THE WORLD

TOURS DE LUXE

Leaving in August, September and October. Membership limited to twelve. Programmes for the asking.

THOS. COOK & SON

32 Powell Street, San Francisco

15 KEARNY STREET

PHONE DOUGLAS 2219

Eugene Korn THE HATTER

AGENCIES

"MILLER, N. Y.," Silks and Operas
"JAMESON, LONDON," Derbys
"JOHN B. STETSON," Philadelphia
KNAPP De Luxe and Felts

AMUSEMENTS

ORPHEUM ELLIS STREET NEAR FILLMORE

Absolutely Class A Theatre Building
Week beginning this Sunday afternoon
Matinee Every Day

ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE

DE HAVEN SEXTETTE, with Sidney C. Gibson; THE FOUR BALTUS; HOWARD and HOWARD; DOLESCH and ZILLBAUER; BIG CITY QUARTETTE; CHAS. H. BRADSHAW and Company; RAFFIN'S SIMIAN PERFORMERS; New Orpheum Motion Pictures; Last Week of the Great Pan-tomimic Sensation, THE FOUR RIANOS.

Evening prices, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box seats, $1. Matinee prices (except Sundays and holidays), 10c, 25c, 50c. Phone, WEST 6000.

PRINCESS THEATRE Ellis Street near Fillmore

S. LOVERICH, Manager
Class "A" Theatre Phone West 663

Matinee Saturday and Sunday
Last Two Nights FERRIS HARTMAN in "THE IDOL'S EYE"
Beginning Next Monday Night

FERRIS HARTMAN
In a Superb Production of the Fascinating Musical Conceit

THE TOY MAKER
Arthur Cunningham and all the Princess favorites in the cast

Popular prices—Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Mats. (except Sundays and holidays), 25c, 50c.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Tel. West 6036

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers
Corner Sutter and Steiner Sts. Absolute Class "A" bldg.

Seventy-Sixth Week the New Alcazar Stock Co. Week Commencing MONDAY, AUGUST 24
MR. WHITE WHITTLESEY, Supported by the Alcazar Stock Players in a play of British army and social life

BROTHER OFFICERS

Prices: Evenings, 25c to $1. Matinees (Saturday and Sunday), 25c to 50c.

Monday, August 31—Farwell week of MR. WHITTLESEY in "ONE SUMMER'S DAY."

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove St.

Phone Market 500

Beginning MONDAY, AUGUST 24
Matinee Saturday Only

Return of Last Season's Big Success
W. A. Brady and Jos. R. Grismer's production.

The Man of the Hour

A story of present-day conditions by George Broadhurst

AMERICAN THEATRE Phone Market 381

Market Street, near Seventh
The playhouse of comfort and safety

Commencing Sunday Evening, August 23

The Musical Treat of the Season

Offenbach's comic-opera success

The Love Tales of Hoffmann

A beautiful story set to music

Prices—Evenings: Orchestra, 50c, 75c, $1; balcony, 25c and 50c. Matinees, 25c and 50c. No higher.

THE LATEST STYLES IN

Choice Woolens

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.
Merchant Tailors

108-110 Sutter St. French Bank Bldg.

THE GRAPE CURE—AETNA SPRINGS

This pleasant and effective cure, so successful in Germany and the Austrian Tyrol, is now established at Aetna Springs, a delightful resort, famous for its mineral water, pure air, homelike surroundings and excellent cuisine. Write for information.

AETNA SPRINGS, NAPA COUNTY, CALIFORNIA

VANITY FAIR.

We don't know very much about Lady Meath in this country, but we may assume that she is some one of importance from the attention given to her remarks on the over-dressing of Englishwomen. Lady Meath writes a letter to the Daily Mail in which she voices her discontent with an extravagance in female attire that she feels to be on the increase. It has come to her knowledge "as a matter of astonishment" that some women spend as much as $40 and even $60 upon a single hat, and while it is true that the hats have nearly doubled in size, this seems no sufficient reason why they should also double in price.

But surely Lady Meath has not yet learned the full extent of our folly. Some one must have been breaking this thing to her gently and the worst is yet to come. Even allowing for the far cheaper prices that prevail in England, we think nothing nowadays of such figures where a hat is concerned, and a new headgear once a week is by no means unusual. Lady Meath is behind the times and she does not seem to realize that the object in paying a high price for a hat is not to have some particular kind of a hat, but rather a hat of a particular price.

Lady Meath's indictment of the over-dressed woman has called forth a good deal of comment. Modistes and milliners agree that it costs about twice as much to dress a woman today as it did a few years ago, but they say that this is due to a finer appreciation of the artistic values of dress. That, of course, is exactly what the modistes and milliners would say. "The woman of today is not content with an Empire gown," said a court modiste, "but her lingerie must show traces of the same influence. Hosiery must be Empire, so must the wrap; even the jewelry must harmonize. The same applies to the Directoire modes. It may mean heavy expenditure, but not ostentation or bad taste."

They have plenty to say for themselves, have these satellites of the sun of fashion. There is a new demand for real lace, for hand embroideries, and hand-woven fabrics, as well as for an elaboration of details. The various ingredients of the costume must now be en suite, and hat, sunshade, hosiery, and jewelry must match each other. A change in one means a change in all. Then, again, ostrich feathers have come back into favor and higher prices are the result. The cost of furs has increased, sable having nearly doubled, as well as chinchilla and ermine, while boot-makers are doing a roaring business because of the fashions in colored footwear. All these things are urged in extenuation, but it is hard to see where the extenuation comes in. The defense simply amounts to this: that fashionable women are not really more foolish, fickle, and extravagant than they used to be; they are simply more extravagant, fickle, and foolish. A distinction without a difference, mesdames.

Sir James Crichton-Browne has come to the relief of the gourmet, and, by the way, it is a little strange that the excesses of wealth can always find a scientific apologist. But, to be fair, Sir James has no excuses for those who eat too much. His defense is of the quality and not of the quantity of the food consumed. Over-eating, says Sir James in effect, is the most widespread and the most deadly malady of the day. The stomach, too much distended, interferes with the working of the heart, and there you are. It is only necessary to label the result with a high-sounding name and compose a suitable epitaph for the dear departed.

Lieutenant-Colonel Newnham Davis, writing to the Daily Mail, says that "the gourmet, the man or woman with a delicate taste in food and drink, generally eats because he or she prefers very much what the family doctor would tell them to eat because it is good for their health." The gallant soldier then asks us to look with him for a moment at such a dinner as is eaten by the ordinary person of refinement during the summer, and say whether or not any self-respecting doctor could find fault with it. Here it is:

The little feast will be sure to begin with a slice of cantaloupe melon well iced. This is expensive, certainly, but it is very probably the first course of the first dinner that Adam and Eve ate in the Garden of Eden, and it is beautifully simple.

A cup of iced consommé, the concentrated essence of beef or poultry, will come next, or one of those Russian soups which combine all that is best in meat and vegetables.

Probably the fish most in favor with gourmets at this time of the year is a trout taken from some clear stream, and it will be at its best either grilled or "au bleu."

A tiny piece of meat, a "noisette d'agneau," perhaps, a vegetable dish, a quail and salad, if he who dines is very hungry, and either some cheese straws or a macédoine of fruits, according to the sex of the diner—and there you have a typical summer dinner of the luxurious classes, at which, I am sure, no doctor would frown. If I were ordering this dinner for myself I should omit the "noisette" and keep the quail in the menu.

Personally we should have no objection whatever to this dinner, and if our medical adviser should see fit to enter a caveat he might be governed by his own advice, for certainly we should not. The only criticism we should feel disposed to make would be directed against the assumption that persons of refinement usually indulge in such a choice little spread as this. Take, for instance, newspaper men, who are almost invariably of an unsurpassed refinement and of a lofty morality, but who sometimes go for two or more days together—through pressure of work—without such a repast as this.

We were under the impression that the English suffragettes had some real grievances and that they were ground under the iron heel of a despotic and effete monarchy. But not so. It seems that there are no less than fourteen ladies who have a legal right to sit in the House of Lords and legislate for the nation. But they refuse to do so, and we must attribute their refusal to pure cussedness. Fancy having the power to pass laws and neglecting it. The average woman reformer confidently believes that nothing stands between us and the millennium but a carefully chosen selection of laws, and yet here are these peeresses who have the power to regulate the solar system and to compel all sorts of people to do all sorts of things that they don't want to do and to refrain from doing all sorts of things that they want to do, and yet they fail to live up to their responsibilities. Something ought to be done. The women's clubs ought to take it up. One of these privileged women is Lady Kinloss, eldest daughter of the late Duke of Buckingham and Chandos. Chandos house, the London residence of the family, was sold some years ago to that American girl who became Countess of Strafford, and keeps royal state there. Lady de Ros, wife of Andrew Dawson, the youngest brother of the Earl of Dawtrey, is said to hold the premier barony of England. It harks back to 1264 and the title has been held by five women. The present baroness is a great-granddaughter of the Duchess of Richmond, who gave the famous ball on the eve of the battle of Waterloo. She is the twenty-fifth holder of the title. Baroness Wentworth, who before succeeding to the title was known as Lady Mary Milbanke, derives the peerage from her father, the Earl of Lovelace, and inherited the barony of Wentworth from his mother, the daughter, Ada, of Lord Byron. The baroness is said to possess literary ability and is an accomplished musician. There are two very young peeresses in the group of those who have the right to sit among the peers in the House of Lords, Baroness Beaumont, born in 1894, and Baroness Clifton, born in 1900. Lady Beaumont was but seven when King Edward was crowned, but walked in the great procession in her robes of state, which must have sadly weighed down her child's shoulders. She owns a splendid country seat in Yorkshire called Carlton Towers, which will become her absolute property when she comes of age. Until that time she remains in the guardianship of her mother.

It is frankly admitted that the closing of the De Beers mines is for the purpose of restricting the output of diamonds and so enhancing their value. An official of the company says: "The important point to be considered is that the production of diamonds never takes place from the mines direct, but from the reserve blue ground, which has been accumulated and kept on the floors on the top of the mines. If all the mines of the Consolidated Company were shut down, there is sufficient blue-ground reserve—ten million loads of 1600 pounds each—to supply the normal diamond demand for two years. The Diamond Syndicate, which sells the output of the De Beers Company, has an accumulated stock of from £1,500,000 to £2,000,000 worth of rough, uncut stones."

The highest price for diamonds was reached in 1907. Since then there has been a steady fall and the present value is only about half what it was then. There was a time when the purchase of a diamond was considered to be a very satisfactory way of hoarding money, but that time has passed away. The diamond gets much of its value from the manipulations of a monopoly, and the remainder of its value depends upon the whim of women. The De Beers Company hopes that a comparative scarcity of diamonds will enhance their price, and if the stones were a necessity of life their expectations would be well grounded. But the stones are not a necessity. Their sale drops to zero with the first breath of hard times, and of this we have had evidence enough during the last year or so.

A well-known daily newspaper, not to be otherwise specified, prints the following news item:

A handsomely dressed woman sat in a big red machine down the street. By her side in the seat reclined a fat, repulsive-looking young hullo.

Another fashionably dressed woman passed that way. She came out of a department store, where she had been worrying the life out of a few harmless shop girls for two or three hours, and her lofty gaze fell full upon the little dog in the automobile. She stepped to the curb, patted the little ugly beast on the head, and said: "Ou tweet! little sing; let me tuss um!"

And she did! She stooped over the prostrate, helpless form of the innocent brute—fit subject for the dog pound—and printed her painted lips on the dog's chaste nose.

The asthmatic beast snuffed a little and the grand lady passed on.

The ostensible object of the publication was, of course, to reprobate the inanity of the "fashionably dressed woman." The real object was to gratify the natural and God-given inanity of the average reader, who loves to hear about such incidents as this, while at the same time swelling up his bosom with a hypocritical indignation. On the whole, the newspaper in question occupies a somewhat less enviable position than the woman. Her idiotic action would have passed within the space of a minute into the limbo of ridiculous and forgotten things. Thanks to a free and enlightened press which gives it nearly three inches of space—probably more than it would give to an affair of serious national importance—it is placed upon record for the delectation of fools. But the dog seems to be blameless in the matter.

Mrs. William B. Leeds must pay duty upon her pearl necklace and the treasury of the United States will be thereby enriched to the tune of over $200,000. Mrs. Leeds bought her necklace in Paris and gave $340,000 for it, which is a good deal of money when one comes to think of it. Strange as it may seem, there are some people who do not earn so much money in a year—so, at least, it is said. After the necklace was bought the pearls were separated and brought into the United States as separate gems in the hope that they would be admitted under that head upon the payment of 10 per cent duty instead of the 60 per cent duty imposed upon necklaces. But the collector of the port was made of sterner stuff than that. He ruled that the pearls were originally a necklace and would again be a necklace, that their detached form was a transitional and not a permanent state, and that 60 per cent was the correct assessment. In this conclusion Judge Lacombe agrees and the owner thus has an opportunity to contribute substantially to the depleted treasury of her own, her native land. Her necklace will thus cost her considerably more than half a million dollars and we can only express the charitable hope that she will try and live up to it.

Mrs. Augustina Rylands, who died recently leaving an estate of some $17,500,000, is supposed to have been the richest woman in England. According to a London dispatch to the New York Times, the death and legacy duties levied upon it by the British government amount to more than $2,750,000, or about 16 per cent.

"That will do," said Mrs. Hiram Offen, sternly, "you will leave on Saturday, and you needn't bother me about a recommendation." "Faix," replied Bridget, "O! hov no intintion o' givin' ye a ricommindation. O! I'll tell the truth about ye to ivery girl thot axes me."—Philadelphia Press.

W. & J. SLOANE

FURNITURE

Exclusive lines for Parlor, Library, Living Room, Dining-Room, Bedroom, Hall, Summer Homes and Offices.

CARPETS

Special weaves and colorings in the greatest variety. Domestic Wiltons and Whole Piece Axminsters. We show all grades.

RUGS

Both Oriental and Domestic. This is by far the largest and choicest stock of Rugs on the Coast. Our Orientals are selected as individual pieces.

Upholstery—Interior Decoration

Our long experience and unequalled facilities enable us to admirably execute special orders.

Van Ness and Sutter

It appeals to particular people because it is particularly good

Old Gilt Edge
Whiskey
Rye or Bourbon

Roy C. Ward
Jas. K. Polk

Jas. W. Dean
Geo. E. Billings

GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.

ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE
EFFECTED

312 California Street. Phone Douglas 2283
San Francisco, Cal.

Bonestell, Richardson & Co.

PAPER

The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us.
CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE
118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna,
San Francisco.

John F. Forbes

Certified Public Accountant

601 KOHL BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO

The Irresistible Current

By Mrs. I. Lowenberg

Price $1.50

Is saturated with an object that is expressed with every evidence of conviction and with no small literary skill. That differences in creed should be an enemy to love, that Jew and Gentile should be separated by religion, is unfortunately no new thing, but Mrs. Lowenberg helps us to appreciate its folly, its pathos, and its needless tragedy.

The opening scene is in New York, where we are introduced to two Jewish families from Germany. The next scene is twenty years later in Missouri. The second generation is growing up in the new Western world, but not without the religious disabilities and creed prejudices that should belong exclusively to a past day in human history. The story is a long one and the plot is intricate, but it is vividly colored by splashes of genuine passion and of real tragedy. The "irresistible current" is the tendency toward a better philosophy of life, an agreement upon the essentials of human conduct that shall take the place of creeds, and a reliance upon a human love and brotherhood that is, after all, the highest expression of the best religion.—The Argonaut.

FOR SALE AT ALL BOOKSTORES

Published by Broadway Publishing Company, New York

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

A Western congressman is quoted as saying that when he first entered Congress he wondered how he ever got there, but later on he wondered how any of them ever got there.

Gioacchino Rossini, who was a great jester, was once seen embracing a Spaniard with great effusion. Asked the reason, he replied: "Because without Spain we would be the last nation."

Some one asked Max Nordau to define the difference between genius and insanity. "Well," said the author of "Degeneration," "the lunatic is, at least, sure of his hoard and clothes."

On one occasion an actress grew tempestuous with Perin, the Parisian manager, and gave him a stormy quarter of an hour. "And what did you do, my dear Perrin?" asked Fehvre. "I said nothing—and watched her grow old."

Father Healy's wit seldom had a sting to it. On one occasion, however, some vulgar people asked how he got on so well in fine houses. "Faith," said Father Healy, "it must be from my mother I got it, for papa was as common as any of you."

When Sir Robert Walpole retired into private life, time hung heavy on his hands, and Horace exerted himself to amuse his father. One day he offered to read to him. "What will you read, child?" asked Sir Robert, wearily. Horace suggested history. "No, no," replied the veteran statesman; "not history, Horace; that can't be true."

Sir Gavan Duffy, formerly Speaker of the legislative assembly of Victoria, was once returned to his seat by a single vote majority. On visiting his constituents subsequently, he was received with a special warmth by an Irish fellow-countryman. "And so," said Sir Gavan Duffy to his friend, "you were one of my supporters." "No, sir," was the reply, "I was two of them."

Early one morning, many years ago, a hurglar was running at the top of his speed along a London thoroughfare, pursued by a lady who vociferated "Stop thief!" A milkman intercepted the fugitive, who promptly exclaimed, "For Heaven's sake, let me go. It's my wife, and she'll just about kill me." The milkman was a married man himself, and he allowed the malefactor to escape.

Professor Jowett's comments on the young men of Balliol often took the form of crushing sarcasms. "The college, Mr. X, thinks highly of you," he once said; "perhaps too highly; but not half so highly, I am sure, as you think of yourself." After a lengthy survey of one's person, as if one was some rare animal, he has been known to ask of the instructor: "Mr. A is an intelligent young man, is he not, Mr. Y?"

A lady in a town lying under the Rockies was much distressed at hearing a small clique in her town refer to themselves as the "smart set." She appealed to an ex-United States senator and asked him what he understood by the term "the smart set." He replied: "I think I can give you an inkling. In the eastern part of Colorado and in the western part of Nebraska there is a large tract of land known as the 'rain belt.' It never rains there."

A Chicago whist enthusiast, who thinks that he is a great player, wrote and published a hook on the game, and sent one copy to a famous Milwaukee player for his opinion of it. In about a week the hook was returned to him, with the following letter: "My Dear Sir—Your favor of the 10th instant, accompanied by your hook, was duly received. I have read it very carefully. It seems to be a very good game, but I don't think it is as good a game as whist."

The Rev. Samuel Pearson, of Portland, Maine, was a witness in a divorce case. "Mr. Pearson," asked the judge, "were you on this bench in my place and acquainted with all the circumstances of this case, would you grant this divorce?" "Most certainly, your honor," replied the minister. "But how do you reconcile this statement with the injunction, 'What God hath joined together let no man put asunder'?" "Your honor, I am satisfied that the Lord never joined this couple," replied the clergyman.

The story is told of an English militia regiment whose reputation was none of the best, that on one occasion a detective from Scotland asked he be allowed to inspect the regiment to discover if possible if a certain malefactor were in the ranks. Permission being given, the detective, accompanied by the adjutant of the regiment, made the tour of the various companies, front rank and rear rank. When the official had got to the last man of the rear rank of the rear company, he stopped suddenly and gazed earnestly at the rather embarrassed warrior. "Why, you surely have made a mistake," exclaimed the adjutant indignantly; "why, you have pitched on the best man in the battalion. He has been with us for more than twenty years, and he is our pattern soldier. His arms are a mass of good-conduct badges, and he is the example of all that is best in the life of a soldier. You surely do not know him?" "No," replied the detective, "I do not—but I know all the others."

A Western judge, sitting in chambers, seeing from the piles of papers in the lawyers' hands that the first case was likely to be hotly contested, asked: "What is the amount in question?" "Two dollars," said the plaintiff's counsel. "I'll pay it," said the judge, handing over the money; "call the next case." He had not the patience of Sir William Grant, who, after listening for two days to the arguments of counsel as to the construction of a certain act, quietly observed when they had done, "That act has been repealed."

At a card-party in the West not long ago a cross-eyed man was giving his positive opinions on every subject in a loud voice, and otherwise making himself a general nuisance. A Boston girl was particularly annoyed at the lordly air he assumed and made up her mind to howl him over if she got a chance. A few minutes later she was the partner of the cross-eyed man, who immediately proceeded to give elaborate instructions as to how certain cards should be played to insure them the game. He finished by saying, "Now, go ahead, Miss Back Bay, and remember I have my eye on you." She never looked up, but, in the most innocent way imaginable, said: "Which eye, Mr. Jones?"

THE MERRY MUSE.

The Team.

The nine lovely Muses
Can never enthral
Like nine lowbrow heroes
Who really play ball.
—New York Sun.

La Merveilleuse.

Leshia's skirt is like a sheath.
How the deuce did she get in it?
Sharp and thin the knees beneath,
They might cut it any minute.
Bolder grow the styles you chose;
If you're plump, madame, a winner
You will be as "merveilleuse";
But avoid it, sisters thinner.
—New York Times.

The Carriage Waits "Without."

"The carriage waits without, my lord."
"Without what, gentle sir?"
"Without the left-hand running board,
Without the French chauffeur,
Without a drop of gasoline,
Six nuts, and the can of oil,
Four pinions, and the limousine,
The spark-plug, and the coil,
Without the brake, the horn, the clutch,
Without the running-gear.
One cylinder—it heats the Dutch
How much there isn't here!
The car has been repaired, in fact,
And you should be right glad
To find that this much is intact
Of what your lordship had.
The garage sent it back, my lord,
In perfect shape throughout;
So you will understand, my lord,
Your carriage waits without."
—Harvard Lampoon.

Omar Revised.

A Book of "Auto Rules" underneath the hough,
A Stalled Machine, a Busted Tire, and Thou
Beside me lying in a Slushy Ditch—
Ah, Slushy Ditch were Paradise now!
—Lippincott's Magazine.

November's "Absent-Minded Beggar."

He bragged about his loyalty to party and to cause,
He made his neighbors tired with his tongue;
He held himself responsible for right and proper laws,
And praises of his candidate he sung.
He told us that the safety of the nation was at stake,
There were mighty issues hanging on a vote;
He urged us on election day to be alert, awake—
And columns to the magazines he wrote.

He ranted of the hallot as the sceptre of mankind
With which to guide the destinies of state;
Our duty as true citizens he faithfully defined,
And warned us we were keepers of our fate.
In fact he talked so freely that he hadn't time to think
(A consequence considered worthy note);
He quite forgot to register, and through this missing link
Our man of many missions lost his vote.
—New York Sun.

"You want to marry my daughter, eh? May I ask you what chance you have for getting on in the world?" "I have an automobile, a yacht, and an airship." "Well, you seem to have every means for getting on. She's yours, my boy."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A. Hirschman.

DR. ROBERT E. O'CONNELL, DR. GEORGE D. O'CONNELL, DENTISTS, Hastings Building, Post J. F. TWIST, DENTIST, 1476 Eddy Street, near Fillmore. Phone West 304.

BANKING

The Anglo-Californian Bank, Ltd.

Established 1873
Head Office—London
Main Office—Pine and Sansome Streets, San Francisco
Branches—1020 Van Ness Avenue, Mission and Sixteenth Streets, San Francisco
Managers: I. Steinhart, P. N. Lilienthal
Capital paid in.....$1,500,000
Surplus and undivided profits..... 1,449,721
A General Banking Business Conducted. Accounts of Corporations, Firms, and Individuals Solicited. Correspondence invited.
Safe Deposit Vaults at Van Ness Avenue and Mission Branches.

French Savings Bank

108 Sutter Street, near Montgomery
Paid-up Capital
Total Assets
Strictly a Savings Bank. Open Monday Evening from 7 to 8:30
OFFICERS—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, 1st Vice-President; Leon Boqueraz, 2d Vice-President; A. Bousquet, Secretary; P. A. Bergerot, Attorney.
DIRECTORS—N. C. Bahin, J. A. Bergerot, Charles Carpy, Arthur Legallet, G. Beleney, H. de St. Seine, J. M. Dupas, Leon Boqueraz, J. E. Artigues, J. S. Godeau, John Ginty.
SAFE DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT
The French-American Bank occupies offices in the same building.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., San Francisco
Guaranteed Capital$1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash.. 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds.. 1,453,983.62
Deposits June 30, 1908..... 34,474,534.23
Total Assets 37,055,263.31
OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohde; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.
BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohde, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse, and W. S. Goodfellow.

LONDON PARIS NATIONAL BANK

N. W. cor. Sutter and Sansome
CAPITAL - - - $250,000
SURPLUS - - - 620,000
Sig Greenbaum, H. Fleishacker,
President Vice-President and Mgr.
R. Altschul, Cashier

The National Bank ROLL OF HONOR

The title "Roll of Honor National Bank" is a distinction of which any financial institution in the United States may be proud. As is well known a "Roll of Honor Bank" is one possessing surplus and profits in excess of capital. A place on the Roll of Honor can not be bought, it must be earned. This bank has for a long time been known as a "Roll of Honor Bank" among banks and bankers.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK of Berkeley

UNITED STATES DEPOSITORY
A. W. NAYLOR, Pres. F. M. WILSON, Vice-Pres.
F. L. NAYLOR, Cashier. F. C. MORTIMER, Asst. Cashier.

THE BERKELEY NATIONAL BANK

United States Depository
Berkeley, Cal.
HOUSEHOLD AND COMMERCIAL ACCOUNTS INVITED
Directors—George P. Baxter, Pres.; J. W. Richards, Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Bangs, Vice-Pres.; Louis Tius, Dr. Thomas Addison, A. C. Freeman, Duncan McDuffie, Perry T. Tompkins, F. L. Lipman, W. J. Hotchkiss, and Whitney Palache. P. H. ATKINSON, Cashier.

Connecticut Fire Insurance Company

Established 1850 OF HARTFORD
Total Assets$5,817,423
Surplus to Policy-Holders..... 2,118,394
BENJAMIN J. SMITH
Manager Pacific Department
518 CALIFORNIA STREET
San Francisco

Byron Hot Springs

The waters cure rheumatism—the environment is perfect—the hotel comfortable and supplied with an unexcelled table. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, ground floor, James Flood Building; Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market St., or address hotel.

Press Clippings

Are money-makers for Contractors, Supply Houses, Business Men and Corporations.
ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
Phone, Kearny 392. 88 First Street

Liqueur Pères Chartreux

GREEN AND YELLOW

THE FAVORITE LIQUEUR OF GOOD SOCIETY

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafés, Bâijer & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N. Y. Sole Agents for United States.

Mild, Rich and Satisfying

Sanchez y Haya Clear Havana Cigars

Factory No. 1 Tampa, Fla.

Tillmann & Bendel Pacific Slope Distributors

36TH YEAR PHONE 00UGLAS 200

SCHMIDT LITHOGRAPH CO. LABELS CARTONS ETC.

SECOND AND BRYANT STS. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. SAN FRANCISCO, LOS ANGELES, PORTLAND, SEATTLE.

MARKET ST. 1st Con. 5% Due 1924. Coupons March and September
AY COUNTIES POWER CO. 1st 5% Due 1930. Coupons March and September
EASTERN PACIFIC 1st 5% Due 1933. Coupons March and September

SUTRO & CO. BROKERS

412 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F. We have a Direct Wire to N. Y.

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

The oncoming gayeties of the approaching autumn are being suggested by small events which tell that summer delights are nearly waned. Though many will remain some weeks for the halminess of country air, yet the jaunts to town are increasing as wedding events succeed one another in now rapid succession. These are the principal occurrences in the life of the smart set at present, but will in a few weeks give way to the more exciting pleasures of teas, dinners, and dances. To the latter attraction the list of debutantes is eagerly looking forward, especially as the dates for the Greenway cotillions are established and this betokens the definiteness of winter's society functions.

The engagement is announced of Miss Mary Eldred Hamlin and Lieutenant Hensley Lacy of the United States ship New Hampshire. Miss Hamlin is a niece of Mrs. Parker Syms of Warren, New Hampshire.

The engagement is announced of Lieutenant Ernest Friedrich, commander of the torpedo boat Hopkins, and Miss Mabel Claire Southard, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Southard of Baldwin, Long Island, New York.

The wedding of Miss Caroline Louise Smith and Lieutenant James E. Abbott, Engineer Corps, United States Army, took place on Monday, August 10, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Smith, in Washington, D. C. Miss Esther Smith acted as maid of honor, and Lieutenant Abbott was attended by Captain Sanderson of the United States Marine Corps. Lieutenant Abbott and Mrs. Abbott will make their home at Fort Mason, after a wedding journey through the East.

The wedding of Miss Anna Foster and Dr. Lawrence Draper will be an event of today, taking place at the Foster home at San Rafael.

The wedding of Miss Jeannette Wright and Mr. Edward Torney took place at 8:30 o'clock on Wednesday evening, August 12. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Kirkham Wright, in Scott Street, by the Rev. Charles Ramm. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Marian Wright, and the groom by his brother, Mr. Frank Torney. The groom is the son of Lieutenant-Colonel George H. Torney, chief surgeon of the Department of California.

The marriage of Miss Madeleine Bohrmann and Mr. H. Clay Miller has been arranged to take place on August 29, somewhat sooner than originally planned. The ceremony will be performed at noon at the home of Mr. Charles Foster in Ross Valley.

The marriage of Miss Betsy Angus and Mr. St. George Holden will take place on September 2 at the home of the bride's parents on Union Street.

Mrs. John A. Lundeen entertained at a luncheon a few days ago at her home in the Presidio. The affair was given in honor of the Misses Morrison of San Jose.

Mr. Edward M. Greenway entertained at a luncheon last Saturday at the Fairmont in honor of Miss Jessie Tyson of Baltimore. Mrs. R. P. Scherwin and Mr. and Mrs. George T. Marye, Jr., were among the guests.

Mrs. C. C. Clay was hostess at a luncheon on Tuesday week in her home in Fruitvale. The affair was given in honor of the Misses MacCorkle of Philadelphia.

Miss Christine Pomeroy entertained at a luncheon on Thursday in honor of Miss Anna Foster.

Medical Inspector and Mrs. Frank Anderson of Mare Island were entertained at the Officers' Club on Thursday evening of last week, prior to their departure for Washington, D. C. Dr. and Mrs. Anderson, with their daughter, Miss Eleanor, will leave September 1.

Colonel and Mrs. John L. Clem and Miss Annie Sullivan were guests of honor at a dinner given by Major and Mrs. Albert E. Truby in the Presidio on Wednesday evening.

Mrs. Adrian Spivaco entertained at a dinner last week in her home on Jackson Street in honor of her father, Captain W. E. Mighell.

Mrs. John W. White of Highland Park, Oakland, announces the engagement of her daughter, Ione Virginia, to Captain Ross L. Bush, Tenth Infantry, U. S. A. Captain Bush is now on special duty at Alcatraz Island.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a résumé of movements to and from this city and Coast and the whereabouts of absent Californians:

Mrs. Swinburne, wife of Admiral Swinburne, will sail on a liner for Honolulu next week, where she will meet her husband, with the Pacific fleet.

Captain George A. Nugent, United States Coast Artillery, left on Saturday for his new station at Fort Monroe, Virginia. Mrs. Nugent, who left a fortnight ago, will meet the captain in New York.

Dr. Arnold Genthe, who is touring through some of the unexplored portions of Japan, expects to return to San Francisco next month. He has spent some time among the Ainos, where much scope is given for photographic beauty, which Dr. Genthe will reproduce.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Van Arsdale and Miss Irene Van Arsdale are expected in town next week from their country home in Mendocino County.

Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Van Ness, who have been touring abroad, are registered at the Seville in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. William Fries and family have taken permanent quarters at the Hotel Fairmont for the winter.

Mrs. Helen Hecht has taken up her residence at Hotel Fairmont over the winter.

Mrs. Margaret Irvine and her son, Mr. J. W. Byrne, are at the Hoffman, New York.

Miss Dollie McGavin has returned to town, after a few days' outing with friends in Marin County.

Mrs. Worthington Ames has gone from Carlsbad to Paris and will spend several weeks in the latter city.

Miss Juliet Borden of Los Angeles, who came to San Francisco to attend the wedding of her cousin, Miss Grace Llewellyn Jones, will return to the south this week.

Mrs. Vincent Whitney will leave soon for Los Angeles for a visit of several weeks.

Mrs. Eleanor Martin has returned from a week-end visit to Mr. and Mrs. Walter Martin at Burlingame.

Captain Edwin C. Long, U. S. A., and Mrs. Long will be the guests of Mr. A. D. Sheppard at Castle Crag for a portion of the summer.

Miss Genevieve Harvey has been in town for several days, the guest of Mrs. Oscar Cooper.

Commander Charles A. Gove, U. S. N., and Mrs. Gove have spent part of the week at Del Monte.

Mrs. Dudley Wright Knox (formerly McCalla) will sail for the Orient this month to join Lieutenant Knox.

Miss Jennie Crocker and Mr. Templeton Crocker are at McCloud, where they arrived a few days ago in their private car, for an outing.

Judge Alton B. Parker and Mr. Delancey Nicoll of New York have been visitors at Del Monte and Paso Robles during the past week. Miss Maud Bourn will sail this week for Europe, having left San Francisco several days ago.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Crocker of Burlingame are entertaining Miss Jeannetta Alexander.

Mr. George W. McNear and Miss Elizabeth McNear are at Tahoe Tavern.

Miss Mayhelle Toy has been the guest of Miss Helen Dean at the Hotel Rafael during the past week.

Mrs. Charles West Clark will return within a fortnight from Paris, where she has been the guest of her sister, Mrs. Raoul Duval. Her brother, Mr. Richard Tohin, will accompany Mrs. Clark.

Mrs. Philip Andrews sailed on the Siberia last Tuesday for Honolulu. She will be the guest of her parents for several months, before going to Hampton Roads, where she will meet Lieutenant Andrews.

Mrs. Gertrude Jolliffe is among the home-comers, having arrived from Lake Tahoe, where she has been the guest of Dr. and Mrs. Herbert C. Moffitt.

Miss Maud Payne was the guest of honor at a luncheon on Monday given by Miss Ysabel and Miss Marie Brewer.

Mrs. Thomas Waln-Morgan Draper and her daughter, Miss Dorothy Draper, have been at Del Monte during the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. Seth Mann, Mr. and Mrs. Bush Fennell, all of San Francisco, with Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Tubbs of Burlingame, are at Aetna Springs.

Mrs. Samuel Knight is the guest of Mrs. George Lent at Aetna Springs.

Mr. and Mrs. Lendal M. Gray will return home on Sunday from their trip abroad and will spend the remainder of the summer at their country place in Fair Oaks.

Among San Francisco visitors registered at Aetna Springs are Mr. and Mrs. William L. Gerstle, Dr. John C. Spencer, Dr. E. K. Hopkins, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Patrick, Mrs. B. G. Lillenthal, Dr. and Mrs. Howard Morrow, Miss Margaret M. Gleason, Mr. L. Van Laak, and Mrs. L. Hertzell.

The twenty-four grand-tier boxes in the new Hammerstein Opera House are not to be sold by auction, but allotted to the elite by a committee of five women of ancient Philadelphia ancestry. "We want opera in Philadelphia," said one of the committee, "but we do not want the best seats in the house to go to every one who applies just because he has money enough to buy them. We want the seats in the grand tier to go to the representative Philadelphia families who have a right to them."

Recent Wills and Successions.

As a result of the conclusion of the two contests brought by members of the Schander family, uncles of the decedent, the will of the late Bertha Dolbeer will be carried out in all its provisions. Miss Etta Warren will receive $750,000, other bequests will reach the sum of about $200,000 and a sum estimated at $129,000 will be paid out in inheritance taxes and legal fees. The inheritance tax will amount to $51,000, of which Miss Warren will pay $43,000. William Mugan, the executor, will receive $14,000 and E. S. Pillsbury a like amount. It is estimated that the fee of Garret McEnerney will amount to $50,000.

The legacies, outside of that to Miss Warren, are as follows: To Ellen M. Hall of Epsom, New Hampshire, a cousin of Miss Dolbeer, $25,000; Elizabeth C. Phillips of San Francisco, $10,000; Ralph Chase of Berkeley, a cousin, $10,000; Ethel F. Roche of San Francisco, $20,000; Percy J. Brown of Eureka, $10,000; Peter Kyne of San Francisco, $5,000; Helen L. Wagner, now Mrs. Thomas Eastland, of San Francisco, $5,000; Elsie I. Chase of Holyoke, Massachusetts, $10,000; William Carsen Tyson of Alameda, $5,000; Margaret H. Warren of San Francisco, $25,000; Boys' and Girls' Aid Society of San Francisco, $2,000; California Woman's Hospital of San Francisco, $2,000; Children's Hospital, $2,000; Florence Crittenden Home, $2,000; Protestant Orphan Asylum, $2,000. In addition the sum of $50,000 was left for a family mausoleum at Cypress Lawn Cemetery.

Friendly suits have been brought by the Suro heirs to accomplish the partition of the vast estate. The petition asks that all the property be cut up among the legatees, with the exception of that affected by the trust. The part which the heirs seek to have divided includes the big forest, a large area of beach land and a long stretch extending about Fort Miley and including the ocean bluffs and the site of the old Cliff House. The famous Suro Heights are not included in the holdings which the heirs desire to divide at this time.

The trust covers several hundred acres, extending from the rear of the Almshouse tract over to the Corbett road and along the vegetable gardens toward the ocean, as well as the beautiful park known as Suro Heights. The legality of the trust clause of the will is to be passed upon soon by the Supreme Court.

The value of the holdings which the heirs now desire to divide reaches into the millions.

Two suits were filed, covering different portions of the property. The first was brought by Mrs. Kate Nusbaum, Moritz Nusbaum (her husband), Rosa Morbio, Pio Albert Morbio (her husband), Clara Angelina English, William English (her husband), Edgar Emanuel Suro, Charles S. Wheeler and Garret McEnerney, as plaintiffs, against Emma L. Merritt (administratrix), George W. Merritt (her husband), Charles Suro, Henrietta Suro and John C. Brickell. McEnerney, Wheeler, and Brickell appear in the case as mortgagees of certain portions of the estate.

The interests of the various parties in the property named in this suit are set forth as follows: Kate Nusbaum, Rosa Morbio, Clara English, 1360-9600 each; Edgar Suro, 1054-9600; Charles S. Wheeler and Garret McEnerney, 480-9600 each; Emma Merritt, 1600-9600; Charles Suro, 1600-9600, and Henrietta Suro, 406-9600.

The parties named in the second suit are the same as those in the first, except that McEnerney and Wheeler do not appear as plaintiffs. The interests of the legatees in the property named in the second suit are as follows: Kate Nusbaum, Rosa Morbio, Clara English, Emma Merritt, and Charles Suro, one-sixth each, and Henrietta Suro, 9-240.

Ethel Barrymore is in Paris, where a niece, to be named after her youthful but illustrious aunt, recently came as a daughter to Mr. and Mrs. Lionel Barrymore.

YOUR HAND

is the only one that can unlock your box in our Safe Deposit Vaults. Your valuables in one of our steel boxes can not be lost by theft or fire. For this protection $4.00 per year and up.

CROCKER SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS

CROCKER BUILDING Junction Post and Market, S. F.

Pears'

My grandmother used Pears' Soap; perhaps yours did, too. We owe them gratitude for that.

Use Pears' for the children; they soon acquire the habit.

Established in 1789.

FAIRMONT HOTEL

REASONABLE IN RATES

Splendid single rooms, with attached bath, $2.50, $3.00, $3.50, $4.00, $5.00, $6.00, $7.50. Beautiful suites with bath $10.00 upward.

Palace Hotel Company

Special Week-End Attractions AUGUST 28th-29th-30

DEL MONTE DOG SHOW

REDUCED RAILROAD RATES $4 Round Trip from San Francisco

REDUCED HOTEL RATES $3 to $5.50 per day

Make your reservations now. Address H. R. WARNER, Manager

The Peninsula SAN MATEO, CAL.

A home in the country practically within San Francisco's gates. Only thirty minutes away. Frequent trolley and train service. See S. P. time-tables. Located in the heart of one of the most beautiful gardens in the State. No winds, no fogs. All the accommodations that culture and refinement demand. Progressive in every detail.

Well-equipped club house, and commodious garage.

Winter Rates in force September 1, 1908

JAS. H. DOOLITTLE, Manager.

Hotel Rafael

San Rafael, Cal.

Open year around. Headquarters Automobile League. New and commodious garage. Fifteen minutes from San Francisco. Complete change of climate. Tiburon or Sausalito Ferry. All modern conveniences.

F. N. Orpin, Proprietor.

MT. TAMALPAIS AND MUIR WOODS

VIA SAUSALITO FERRY

FOOT OF MARKET ST.

LEGAL HOLIDAYS-SUNDAY TIME

Lv. San Francisco		Lv. Muir Woods		Lv. Tamalpais
WEEK-DAY	SUN-DAY	WEEK-DAY	SUN-DAY	WEEK-DAY	SUN-DAY
9:45 A.	7:15 A.	1:40 P.	10:40 A.	7:25 A.	9:28 P.
11:35 P.	8:15 A.	2:40 P.	12:16 P.	1:40 P.	11:10 A.
SATUR-DAY	9:45 A.	4:45 P.	1:40 P.	4:14 P.	12:16 P.
DAY	11:15 A.		2:45 P.	SATUR-DAY	1:40 P.
Tamalpais	12:45 A.		4:40 P.	DAY	3:10 P.
			5:45 P.	ONLY	4:40 P.
	1:45 P.			Tamalpais only	9:50 P.
	3:45 P.			Muir Woods only	6:40 P.
	4:45 P.				8:15 P.

TICKET OFFICE AT SAUSALITO FERRY

LUNCHEON- or tea-parties given special and intelligent attention. Our rooms are particularly adapted for these functions, the ordinary restaurant atmosphere being absent.

YE TEA CUP INNE

1427 Bush Street, below Van Ness (upstairs)

Hotel St. Francis

The spirit of good service and the facilities that produce it.

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF JAMES WOODS

Why Not Make Your Home At The Hotel Jefferson

Turk and Gough Streets Facing Jefferson Square

A superior class hotel with every modern convenience and comfort. Operated on the American and European plans. Special rates to permanent guests. Special attention paid to the table—we invite comparisons. Management Noah W. Gray, formerly manager Alexander Young Hotel, Honolulu, and Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

You Can Live At The Hotel Jefferson Better And For Less Than At Home

THE "NIPPON MURA"

Family Resort between Saratoga and Los Gatos

Has increased its accommodations, main building furnace heated, beautifully furnished rooms with all modern conveniences. Open all the year. Positively exclusive. For information address THEODORE J. MORRIS, Proprietor, Los Gatos, Cal.

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"

Building, concrete, steel and marble. Located, most fashionable shopping district. 210 rooms, 135 baths. Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests. Most refined hostelry in Seattle. Absolutely fireproof. English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

FOR SALE

One of the most magnificent homes in Alameda: 15 rooms and baths; finished basement. All modern conveniences; furnace, electricity, instantaneous heater, latest plumbing, etc. Situated in heart of best neighborhood two blocks from either local. Grounds, corner lot, 150 by 148, are excelled by none; garage with quarters for man. The property will be sold for half its value.

LEWIS & SHAW, Agents
1504 PARK ST., ALAMEDA

Dr. W. A. Whelan
DENTIST

406 Sutter St., corner of Stockton
Phone Kearny 174

GOODYEAR "HIPPO" HOSE

The best and strongest Garden Hose. Guaranteed to stand 700 lbs. pressure.

Try it and be convinced.

GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY
R. H. PEASE, President
587, 589, 591 Market St. at Second St.
SAN FRANCISCO

Automobile for Sale

Must sacrifice for cash, a new high-grade touring car. Send for particulars or call at Valencia Garage, 611 Valencia Street, San Francisco.

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy people who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Brigadier-General Frederick Funston relinquished command of the Department of California on August 10, leaving for Fort Leavenworth, where he is to be in command of the three service schools of cavalry, artillery, and infantry. These will open on September 1.

Passed Assistant Paymaster J. A. Bull is ordered to the Pacific Station and will sail from this port September 5.

Assistant Surgeon G. W. Shepard is detached from the Naval Hospital at Mare Island, to go into effect on September 1, and will go to the Medical School at Washington on October 1.

Assistant Surgeon I. F. Colin is ordered to the Naval Hospital at Mare Island.

Brigadier-General Charles F. Robe, U. S. A., retired, has been in town during the past week from San Diego. En route he visited the Yosemite.

Colonel Marion P. Maus, formerly commanding the Presidio of Monterey, assumed command of the Department of California upon the departure of Brigadier-General Frederick Funston on August 10. He will be in San Francisco until the arrival of a permanent department commander, whom the War Department has not yet named.

Colonel William A. Simpson, adjutant-general of the Department of California, has, in addition to his other duties, taken charge of the office of inspector of small arms, vice Lieutenant Hornsby Evans, Nineteenth Infantry, aide-de-camp to General Funston.

Colonel Marion P. Maus, Colonel John B. Bellinger, and Lieutenant-Colonel George H. Torney left last week for Atascadero in connection with affairs pertaining to the maneuvers.

Commander W. R. Rusch, U. S. N., is detached from the Wilmington to the Ranger.

Lieutenant-Commander G. G. Mitchell is detached from the Mohican to the Ranger.

Major Walter A. Bethel, judge advocate of the Department of California, is ordered to proceed to Seattle to attend the annual meeting of the American Bar Association on August 25.

Major George W. Vandeusen, Second Field Artillery, U. S. A., is ordered to report to the commanding general of the Department of California after the close of the camp of instruction at Fort D. A. Russell. He will be on temporary duty here until the departure of a transport for Manila, when Major Vandeusen will report there for duty.

Lieutenant D. S. Mahoney, U. S. N., is detached from the Navy Yard at Mare Island to the Washington as senior engineer officer.

Lieutenant H. N. Jensen, U. S. N., is ordered to additional duty as fleet ordnance officer with the Pacific fleet.

First Lieutenant of Engineers J. B. Coyle has been ordered to inspect construction work on the vessel for immigration service at San Francisco.

Lieutenant S. J. Major is detached from the Rainbow to the Naval Station at Olongapo.

Ensign C. W. Nimitz is detached from the Denver to the Ranger.

Ensign G. C. Carter is detached from the Wilmington to the Ranger.

Ensign J. S. Wadsworth, Jr., is detached from the Mohican to the Ranger.

Ensign E. L. McSheehy is detached from the Galveston to the Naval Hospital at Yokohama for treatment.

Ensign J. H. Newton, Jr., is detached from the Concord to the Ranger.

Captain Edward M. Shinkle, Ordnance Department, U. S. A., will arrive on this Coast within a short time. He was stationed recently at the Presidio, at which time his marriage to Miss Marjorie Gibbons took place.

Captain Daniel W. Hand, First Field Artillery, is ordered to a vacancy in the Quartermaster's Department, vice Captain Henry B. Farrar, who will proceed to the First Field Artillery at Fort Sill, Oklahoma.

Lieutenant Oliver P. M. Hazzard, Quartermaster's Department, U. S. A., returned last Sunday evening from Washington, D. C. He left San Francisco a fortnight ago in connection with testimony referring to his brother. Lieutenant Russell T. Hazzard, who was ordered to appear before a retiring board.

Lieutenant Clarence H. Knight, Engineer Corps, U. S. A., is relieved from duty with the First Battalion of Engineers at Fort Mason and will proceed to St. Louis. He will relieve Captain Gustave R. Lukesh of his duties and report to the president of the Mississippi River Commission for duty as secretary and disbursing officer of the commission.

Lieutenant R. L. Moseley, Philippine Scouts, is in the city on a leave of absence.

Lieutenant Graham Parker is granted a month's leave of absence.

First Lieutenant E. E. Mean has been designated to supervise the examinations for cadet and cadet engineer in the revenue cutter service at San Francisco.

The Albany and the Yorktown have been detached from the Pacific fleet and placed on special service.

The three military schools at Fort Leavenworth are to open September 1. The student officers reported there last Saturday, when the assignment of houses was made.

The cruisers California and South Dakota left Vallejo last Sunday afternoon for California City to coal. The West Virginia and the Maryland left on Monday afternoon and all will return to Vallejo within a week or so.

The Charleston will leave San Francisco about October 1 for the Asiatic Station for duty as the flagship of the Third Squadron of the Pacific fleet.

The army transport Crook will sail from this port on a special trip to Manila on September 10. She will relieve the Warren in the Philippine interisland service, being a larger and better boat than the Warren, with much greater capacity for passengers and freight. The Warren will be placed out of commission on arriving at San Francisco.

At the Hotels.

Among the guests now at the Hotel Jefferson are General and Mrs. J. C. Muhlenberg, Major and Mrs. R. H. Rolfe and family, Colonel and Mrs. L. C. Allen, Mr. Levin C. Allen, Major and Mrs. George Williamson, Mrs. H. E. Creary and Miss K. C. Creary, Admiral and Mrs. H. M. Manney and children.

Among the guests at the Hotel St. Francis are the following: Mrs. W. C. Greene and Mrs. F. M. King, of Cananea, Mexico; Rear-Admiral and Mrs. Swinburne; Mrs. W. O. Edmonds and Master W. H. Edmonds, of Upper Lake; Miss Isabel Irving; Mr. Paul Shoup, of San Mateo; Dr. Scbittman, of Dusseldorf; Dr. W. Greif, of Baden; Herr von Meyer, of Knoonow; Mr. Ben Wile, Mrs. Wile, and Miss Wile, of Owensboro, Kentucky, and Mr. B. W. Adams, of Dubuque, Iowa.

The following are among the guests registered at the Fairmont: Mrs. J. A. Gilman, Miss Cordelia Gilman, Miss Marjorie Gilman, Mrs. W. G. Fay, and Captain and Mrs. Wadhams, of Honolulu; Dr. and Mrs. Spaulding and the Comte de Montcalm, of Paris; Mr. Charles R. Wood and Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Sharples, of Philadelphia; Mrs. H. J. Eabin, of Brooklyn; Miss J. C. Provost, of Oyster Bay; Mr. G. W. Trenwith and Miss Trenwith, of Santa Barbara; Mr. and Mrs. John W. Drew, of Boston; Mrs. W. E. Gerber and Miss Irma Gerber, of Sacramento; Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Fish, of Omaha, Nebraska; Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Sheets, of Salt Lake.

At Out-of-Town Hotels.

Among those registered at the Etna Springs Hotel are Mrs. I. L. Requa and maid, Miss Amy Long, and Miss Sallie Long, of Piedmont; Dr. and Mrs. Howard Morrow and Dr. E. K. Hopkins, of San Francisco.

Among San Francisco visitors to Hotel Rafael are Miss M. Toy, Mr. L. M. Dempster, Mr. Martin Brandenstein, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Rankin, Mrs. J. Steinberger, Miss N. Leibermann, Mr. and Mrs. Fischel, Mr. and Mrs. Unmack, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Campbell, Miss Campbell, Mr. C. B. Russell, Miss Hyde Smith, Mrs. L. L. Baker, Miss Dorothy Baker, Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. George T. Marye, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Strauss, Mr. and Mrs. G. Allen.

Recent arrivals at Hotel Del Monte from San Francisco include Captain and Mrs. H. L. F. Meyer, Miss Viola Meyer, Mrs. G. W. Stevens, Mrs. L. Schwabacker, Miss M. C. Taylor, Mr. D. W. Earle, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Beachboard, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Pbelps, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Cox, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Lowenstein, Miss M. G. Donovan, Judge and Mrs. W. C. Van Fleet, Miss Julia Van Fleet, Mrs. Joseph Ehrman, Mrs. J. B. Wright, Mrs. J. S. Oyster, Miss Elizabeth Oyster, Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Ferguson, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Sinsheimer.

DR. ROBERT E. O'CONNELL, DR. GEORGE D. O'CONNELL, DENTISTS, Hastings Building, Post Street and Grant Avenue. Tel. Douglas 2733.

THE OCULARIUM
Henry Kahnt Co.
OPTICIANS
KODAKS & SUPPLIES
SCIENTIFIC INSTRUMENTS
Catalogues Free
644 MARKET ST.
OPP. PALACE HOTEL
BRANCH 1309 VAN NESS AVE.

At the
Hotel Normandie
S. E. cor. Sutter and Gough
Table-d'Hote Luncheon
75 cents—and a
Table-d'Hote Dinner
$1.00—Sundays $1.25.
Unsurpassed cuisine, perfect service, refined surroundings.

Hotel Colonial
THE SELECT HOTEL OF SAN FRANCISCO
Stockton above Sutter Street
American and European Plans
Special Rates to Permanents
HOWARD T. BLETHEN, Manager
Telephone, Kearny 4754

Hotel del Coronado
Motto: "BEST OF EVERYTHING"
Most Delightful Climate on Earth
American Plan. Summer rates $3.50 per day each and upward, or $21.00 per week each and upward
"Good Music" and "Fine Automobile Road, Los Angeles-Riverside to Coronado."
Golf, Tennis, Polo, and other outdoor sports every day in the year.
New 700-foot ocean pier, for fishing. Boating and Bathing are the very best. Send for booklet to MORGAN ROSS, Manager,
Coronado Beach, Cal.
Or see H. F. NORCROSS, Agent,
334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles.
Tel. A 6789; Main 3917.
22d Street and Broadway

Tennent's
TRADE MARK
J. R. Tennent
Ale and Stout
from Wellpark Brewery
Glasgow, Scotland
Forbes Bros., Agents, 1926 Sutter St.

Interior of magnificent living room.

FOR SALE
A BARGAIN
Beautiful Artistic Residence
12 rooms and 3 baths; hardwood inlaid floors throughout.
UNOBSTRUCTED MARINE VIEW
The mantels and fixtures in this house are the most attractive ever installed in this city. House just completed, has never been occupied.
EXTRA LARGE CORNER LOT
75 x 102 ft. with "L"
For full particulars see
Shainwald, Buckbee & Co.
No. 27 Montgomery St.

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

Missionary—What is that six-foot hox? Cannibal—That's my lunch hox.—The Bohemian.

Soid She—It is said that married men are hraver than single men. Said He—Yes; they have to be.—Chicago Daily News.

"Would you give up your seat to a woman in a car?" "How do I know? Never had a seat yet myself."—Philadelphia Ledger.

"So your son is now a soldier, hey, Uncle Ben?" "Yes, sah; he's done jined de malicious corpse, sah."—Baltimore American.

Maud—But do you helieve in vaccination? Bessie—Rather. It kept my sister from playing the piano for nearly a week.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"What do you want with this automobile catalogue?" "I propose to write some dialogue for it, and then it will be a motor novel."—Washington Herald.

Dowager—So you are commencing a practice here. You're rather young, aren't you? Young Medico—Oh—er—well—I only expect to start on children first, you know.—Punch.

"Are you related to the bride or groom elect?" asked the husy usher. "No." "Then what interest have you in the ceremony?" "I'm the defeated candidate."—Christian Register.

"Yes," remarked Farmer Hodge, "my hoy Joe gets a good deal o' fun out of motor cars." "But he doesn't own a machine." "Of course not. He's one o' the constables."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Officer (to new recruit doing "sentry go" for the first time)—Now, mind you, let no one go by without challenging them. Recruit—That's all right, gov'nor. Don't you worry. The slightest noise wakes me up!—Punch.

"And you say you almost starved to death in your last position?" said the kind housewife. "What position was it?" "I was treasurer of a poets' union, mum," replied the dusty wayfarer with a deep sigh.—Chicago Daily News.

Mrs. Shopper (after inspecting everything in the store)—I don't see anything here that suits me. I suppose I may as well go down to Stacy's and see what they have. They usually have a good assortment. Salesman—Here's a card of one of their salesmen; won't you kindly ask for him? Mrs. Shopper—Ah!

A friend of yours, I presume? Salesman—No, madam; he has owed me $10 for the last three years.—Puck.

"Bill Peake is the orator of the day. He has a splendid delivery." "But has he anything to deliver?"—Life.

Marks—Say, old man, did I ever tell you about the awful fright I got on my wedding-day? Parks—S-s-h-h! No man should speak that way about your wife!—Clover.

"So you refuse me admittance," complained the newly arrived spirit to St. Peter; "you turn me off into the cold." "No," replied the old saint, "into the hot."—Boston Transcript.

"I trust we shall make you feel quite at home," remarked the hotel proprietor. "Don't you try it," expostulated the married man. "I'm away for a good time."—Philadelphia Record.

Restaurant Keeper—What, you can't pay your check? Out you go, then. Guest at the Next Table—Here, landlord, while you are about it, throw me out, too.—Fliegende Blätter.

"Sometimes," said the press humorist, "I think my jokes are rotten. I s'pose that's my modesty." "No," explained a friend, "that's your common sense."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

"What's all that clamor?" asked the traveler approaching Manhattan. "That, suh," replied the porter, "is the people of New York braggin' that they have abated useless noises, suh."—Philadelphia Ledger.

"When I was your age," said the stern parent, "I was accumulating money of my own." "Yes," answered the graceless youth, "hut don't you think the public was easier then than it is now?"—Washington Star.

"What sort of a table do they set at your boarding-house?" asked the young man who was contemplating a change. "A table of waits and measures," replied his friend. "The first long and the latter short."—Tit-Bits.

"But," exclaimed the man of delicate sensibilities, "will your conscience permit you to do as you suggest?" "Look here, friend," answered the New York politician, "I am accustomed to be hoss, even of my own conscience."—Washington Star.

"It's such a small chunk of ice you give me for fifty pounds," complained the housewife. "But notice, ma'am, the firm and excellent quality of it," said the iceman. "In huying ice your motto should be 'Not how much, hut how good.'"—Chicago Tribune.

An Ideal Home Site

That's what lots in Presidio Terrace (at Washington and First Avenue) are.

It's the only residence park in San Francisco and absolutely the only portion of San Francisco where you can build your home and feel assured that your sun and light won't be taken away from you and you won't have the value of your residence impaired by the construction of unsightly flats or other buildings adjacent to your home.

The restrictions in Presidio Terrace are not onerous. A minimum limit of $7000 is what your home must cost—that's about all.

Bituminized streets, artificial stone sidewalks, telephone and electric wires, gas and water pipes, all constructed, mean a big saving for you in trouble and expense.

None of the lots in Presidio Terrace are less than 45 feet front, by reason of which ample space is provided for light and lawns.

Prices are extremely reasonable and the terms are to suit the purchaser.

We can tell you more about Presidio Terrace if you will call, or, if you prefer, we will send you illustrated folder.

BALDWIN & HOWELL 318-324 Kearny Street

Mr. Publisher:

Does it interest you to know that ALL the mechanical work on THE ARGONAUT is done by us? Fact.

WILLIAMS PRINTING CO., Phone, Douglas 2905. 406 Sutter Street

Toyo Kisen Kaisha (ORIENTAL S. S. CO.)

S. S. Hongkong Maru. Saturday, Aug 29, 1908 S. S. Tenyo Maru. Friday, Sept. 25, 1908 S. S. Nippon Maru (via Manila). Tuesday, Oct. 20, 1908

Steamers sail from company's piers, Nos. 42-44, near foot of Second Street, 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Hiogo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.

Round-trip tickets at reduced rates. For freight and passage apply at office, 240 James Flood Building. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

We Rent New Typewriters

L. & M. ALEXANDER & CO.

MOVED TO

Phone Douglas 2157 512 Market St.

Coast Dealers

L. C. SMITH (Visible)

1908 Model

Ball Bearing

TYPEWRITERS

Clubbing List.

By special arrangement with the publishers, and by concessions in price on both sides, we are enabled to make the following offer, open to all subscribers direct to this office. Subscribers in renewing subscriptions to Eastern periodicals will please mention the date of expiration in order to avoid mistakes:

- American Magazine and Argonaut.....$4.25
Argosy and Argonaut..... 4.40
Atlantic Monthly and Argonaut..... 6.70
Blackwood's Magazine and Argonaut... 6.20
Century and Argonaut..... 7.00
Commoner and Argonaut..... 4.70
Cosmopolitan and Argonaut..... 4.32
Current Literature and Argonaut..... 5.72
English Illustrated Magazine and Argonaut..... 4.70
Forum and Argonaut..... 6.00
Harper's Bazar and Argonaut..... 4.32
Harper's Magazine and Argonaut..... 6.70
Harper's Weekly and Argonaut..... 6.70
House Beautiful and Argonaut..... 4.72
International Magazine and Argonaut... 4.50
Judge and Argonaut..... 7.50
Leslie's Weekly and Argonaut..... 6.70
Life and Argonaut..... 7.72
Lippincott's Magazine and Argonaut... 5.22
Littell's Living Age and Argonaut..... 9.00
Mexican Herald and Argonaut..... 10.50
Munsey's Magazine and Argonaut..... 4.40
Nineteenth Century and Argonaut..... 7.22
North American Review and Argonaut... 8.00
Out West and Argonaut..... 5.22
Overland Monthly and Argonaut..... 4.50
Political Science Quarterly and Argonaut..... 4.90
Puck and Argonaut..... 7.50
Review of Reviews and Argonaut..... 5.00
Scribner's Magazine and Argonaut..... 6.22
Smart Set and Argonaut..... 5.22
St. Nicholas and Argonaut..... 6.00
Sunset and Argonaut..... 4.22
Theatre Magazine and Argonaut..... 5.72
Thrice-a-Week New York World (Democratic) and Argonaut..... 4.22
Weekly New York Tribune (Republican) and Argonaut..... 4.50
Weekly New York Tribune, Weekly New York World, and Argonaut..... 5.22

HARMONIOUS furnishings and decorations are as desirable in the bedroom as in the living-room. We show you in advance just how your bedroom will look when furnished and decorated. This costs you nothing. In fact, it will save you money by helping you avoid possible mistakes and disappointments.

Furniture
Carpets
Rugs
Draperies

D. N. & E. WALTER & CO. Van Ness and Sacramento

Wholesale
Retail
and
Since 1858

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXIII. No. 1640.

SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 29, 1908.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10 payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, 436 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breems Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opera. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at F and Thirteenth Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Denison News Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains.

Published at 406 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal.
Telephone, Kearny 5895.

THIRTY-SECOND YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: The Presumption of Innocence—Judge Hanford on Unionism—The Saving Grace of the Bull Whip—Why Women Should Vote—Phonographic Candidates—Senatorial Service—Conscription in England—Editorial Notes	129-132
CAMPAIGN NOTES	132
PARIS IN DARKNESS—The Electricians, to Show Their Power, Cut Off All Light from the Capital	133
OLD FAVORITES: "Come, Sleep," "Were but My Spirit Loosed Upon the Air," "At Rest," by Louise Chandler Moulton	133
TONY PASTOR, FATHER OF VAUDEVILLE: Career and Influence of the Veteran Singer, Comedian, and Manager	133
FORT VIGILANT AND ITS MEN: XXVIII. By Jerome A. Hart	134-135
INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All Over the World	135
A SOCIETY NOVEL: Mr. Herriek Handles Some of the Problems of the Day in Unconventional Terms	136
BOOKS AND AUTHORS. By Sidney G. P. Coryn	137
CURRENT VERSE: "The Caravan," by Clinton Scollard; "In the Place de la Bastille," by Richard Burton; "Friend Death," by R. W. Gilbert	138
LITERARY NOTES: Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip—New Publications	138
FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT	138
OFFENBACH'S LAST OPERA. By Josephine Hart Phelps	139
VANITY FAIR	140
STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise	141
THE MERRY MUSE	141
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy	142-143
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day	144

The Presumption of Innocence.

In an argument to the court recently Mr. Francis J. Heney railed against the legal presumption that a man accused of crime shall be held to be innocent until the prosecution proves him to be guilty. Mr. Heney denounced this as perversive of justice, and an invention of the lawyers. We know not how poor an opinion Mr. Heney may have of the profession to which he belongs, nor how far that opinion is reciprocated, but it seems certain that he is ignorant of the history of the growth of the law. In the beginning an accused person was presumed to be guilty and had the burden of proof that he was innocent. In the ruder ages he could prove his innocence by walking unshod on hot plowshares. If his feet were not burned he was innocent; if they were he was guilty. It was a swift and simple process, and there is no record of a acquittal. It was also the custom, in the prosecution of old women accused of witchcraft, to bind them and throw them into deep water. If they drowned, they were held to be innocent; if not, they were guilty. The principle which justified these tests was carried to the body of the law, where it persisted for a time, to be supplanted by the more merciful and just principle that the burden of proof should be upon the accuser. This prevails now wherever there is a pretense of even rudimentary jurisprudence, except in Turkey, where the accusation is accepted as proof of guilt, and the accused, as a good subject of the Padishah, is expected to submit quietly to the bastinado or bowstring. The blood of the innocent cries out from many lands against the presumption of guilt, but in Mr. Heney's case it falls upon deaf ears. Naturally, the organ of Mr. Heney and his employers supports his remarkable demand that the legal presumption be changed. Perhaps it will in due time appear amongst the reforms which are godmothered by the Lincoln-Roosevelt League.

Mr. Heney argues that indictment by a grand jury shall be taken as presumption of guilt, and the person indicted shall be compelled to prove his innocence. The value of such presumption is seen in the admission, by the Oliver grand jury, that several persons were wrongly indicted by it. We believe that some of these indictments still stand, but how are the victims to prove their innocence? The case made against them by the indictment and the testimony upon which it rests can not be disclosed. The law definitely recognizes the right of a person accused of crime to be confronted by his accuser. The Constitution of the United States says that he "shall enjoy the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him," which obviously means, and is held by the courts to mean, that he shall know the evidence upon which he is held, in all its sufficiency or lack thereof, and that the burden of proof rests upon his acuser. The presumption of innocence, therefore, is not an invention of the lawyers, but is rooted in the Constitution itself. The history of jurisprudence discloses cases in which the proof of innocence was impossible, though the accused was innocent of the crime charged, and his only hope of escape lay in the failure of the prosecution to prove him guilty.

Putting the burden of proof on the accused was always the instrument of tyranny and oppression, and for that reason has been abolished in every country where the rights of man are respected and the vice of tyranny has been curbed.

Judge Hanford on Unionism.

In the United States District Court at Seattle on the 6th instant Judge C. H. Hanford issued a temporary injunction restraining certain striking longshoremen from interfering with the loading or unloading of vessels at that port. The case was one of some aggravation. Striking longshoremen had not only threatened to do violence to non-union workmen who had taken the places abandoned by themselves, but had systematically shadowed the non-union men out of working hours and had in several instances assaulted and beaten them. In rendering judgment upon the application for a restraining order, Judge Hanford took occasion to discuss the matter before him not only in its legal points, but in its broader aspects. The strikers, he said, violated section IV of the Sherman anti-trust law by acts of violence, by making threats and by doing things which in the contemplation of the law constitute restraint of trade and interference with commerce.

Proceeding, Judge Hanford declared that in the practice of advanced labor unionism a strike order means not simply that the members of the striking union must not work, but that they must by violence or other means prevent other men from working. Unionism, he said, assumes not only to control the acts of its members, but as well the acts of persons in no way related to unionism. This system of unionism, said the judge, is incompatible with the Declaration of Independence; it is in violation of the constitutional right of a citizen to peacefully follow a lawful occupation and earn an honest living. To no one citizen or combination of citizens, Judge Hanford further said, is there granted the right to say that another citizen or other citizens shall not work at any lawful calling. The unionism founded in another theory, he declared, is lawless and essentially despotic; it has been borrowed from that aggressive and belligerent unionism of England which has driven over two hundred thousand persons into the London almshouses. This kind of unionism Judge Hanford declared to be incompatible with law or the common justice and common sense upon which law is based.

We have had nothing more direct and positive than this since the famous Taft decisions of ten years ago. Judges who have to win their elections from time to time, even though they commonly find the resolution and courage to sustain the law, are likely to be timid and paltering in discussing questions where the interests of organized labor are concerned. It is only now and again, and commonly at the hands of men like Judge Hanford, who stand above the temptations of demagoguery, that we have such plain and wholesome assertion of fundamental principle.

It is indeed curious that a principle so absolutely above and beyond question should be assailed. Nevertheless organized labor through its leaders and managers does deny it and resist it; not indeed in words, but by acts more potent than words. Mr. Gompers, for example, insists that organized labor shall have license to exercise its "normal activities"—and by normal activities he means the boycott, picketing, threat, assault, and all the rest of the ruthless and lawless acts which not only San Francisco but every other American city knows all about from cruel experience. Organized labor claims not only the right to work at its pleasure and to quit work at its pleasure, but to "protect itself in its rights" in employments which itself has abandoned. It goes so far as to seek to nullify the laws which protect property against violence and which support the non-union or other citizen from working at his own pleasure and upon his own contract in any lawful occupation of his choice; and it has so far succeeded through the eagerness of politicians for votes as to command the indorsement of the President of the United States in its demand for discriminating and partial laws, with the further indorsement of a candidate for the presidency, Mr. Bryan.

Judge Hanford is profoundly right in the position that the demand of organized labor for special privilege in contempt of the rights of other citizens is inconsistent with the Declaration of Independence; and he might go further to declare that this demand is inconsistent with the integrity of American institutions. What becomes of equality and liberty if one group or class of men may say to another, you shall not work at a lawful occupation of your choice excepting by our consent? What becomes of the very foundation stone of our system if we consent that one group or class of citizens shall stand above the law and enjoy special rights through the privilege of intimidating and enforcing others? These questions answer themselves. An "equality" or a "liberty" under these terms would be no equality, no liberty at all.

American patriotism has no higher responsibility and no more immediate duty than the assertion and maintenance of the principle which Judge Hanford has so emphatically declared. Politics has made cowards of many who ought to be at the front of the fight for equality and liberty. Self-interest has made cravens of other multitudes who ought to be active in the fight for the same principles. But not all are in politics, not all are "business men," not all are forgetful of the lessons taught us by our fathers and of the principles essential to the integrity of free government. The whole world—even Sam Gompers himself, if he were capable of the truth—recognizes the vitality of this principle and the necessity for sustaining it. And there are, praise God, enough of us who are neither time-servers nor cowards—neither craven nor afraid—to give it the support essential in its enforcement, ultimately if not immediately. Even though

President Roosevelt may counsel concession and though Candidate Bryan may roar, we shall stand by our guns, we shall fight this fight out until nowhere under the flag of our fathers shall there breathe a man with the temerity to demand for organized labor "rights" or privileges denied to other men.

The demands made in the name of organized labor must be answered by the American people precisely in the spirit of Judge Hanford's answer to the Seattle Longshoremen's Union. There has been timidity and paltering enough and too much. It is a time for speaking out—not only for speaking out, but for meeting this latest assault upon the integrity of American institutions in a spirit as bold as its own. The natural political agent for this work is the Republican party. The Democratic party dominated by Bryan or Bryanism, casting about for something to keep its head above water, has espoused and seconded the demands of unionism. The only force in politics capable of defending the principle of equality and liberty is the Republican party. It will come to a right stand on this question precisely as it came to a right stand on the slavery issue and on the money issue. There are those within the party who would postpone the day; but they can not do it much longer. Another four years and we will surely find the Republican party squarely and positively in line defending the right of every man to follow unmolested any lawful occupation of his choice.

The Saving Grace of the Bull-Whip.

The bull-whip has once more demonstrated its efficiency as a factor in the processes of the white man's civilization. It was used recently in dispersing a barbarian bunch of Piutes who had intruded upon a social function in progress on the beach of Lake Tahoe, where guests of Mr. and Mrs. William S. Tevis had gathered about a camp-fire to while the evening hours with song and story and pleasant converse. The savages came out of the forest stealthily, as is the habit of savages, and when they had surrounded the group of society folk they uttered blood-curdling warwhoops and danced their uncouth war-dance. It may have been only a barbaric jest, a rude comedy conceived by some aboriginal practical joker; but those upon whom it was perpetrated were much alarmed, and it is related that while the red men were whooping and dancing the women of the party clung frightened and trembling to their "natural protectors," who in turn nerved themselves for the worst that could happen. Finally young Gordon Tevis slipped through the cordon of savages and sought the cottage of O. W. Dickey, superintendent of the Tevis place, to whom he related his tale of terror. Dickey was equal to the emergency. Snatching up a bull-whip he rushed to the scene of noise and fury and with a few swishes of the lash scattered the Piutes as the leaves of their native forests are scattered by the autumn wind. Two of the warriors were inclined to resist the castigatory admonition of the whip, but these were speedily reduced to sullen acquiescence by strenuous application of the leaded butt of the weapon. The social amenities were once more regnant in the wilderness and the savage denizens of Tahoe covered snarling and groaning with pain in their lairs, digesting the lesson of the bull-whip and gradually acquiring respect for the drastic methods by which the paleface enforces the tenets of his civilized creed. In the hands of men entirely civilized the bull-whip is mightier than the morality of the Sermon on the Mount.

As an indirect force in the advancement of civilization the bull-whip has exerted an important influence. It was the bull-whip that drove the oxen of the pioneers across the plains to California, there to found a great commonwealth and to build cities wherein all that makes life worth living should be gathered, assimilated, and fostered. It was the bull-whip, or its congener, the blacksnake, that aggravated and emphasized the odium of slavery in the United States of America, rousing the moral sense of a majority of the American people to a pitch of resistance that finally abolished this relic of barbarism. It can not be denied that there is much virtue in a bull-whip when properly applied and that even indirectly when used as a weapon of oppression and cruel despotism it may still serve to accomplish great results in the betterment of the conditions under which it is employed.

Why, then, when other means fail, when civilization itself is obstructed and retarded by rebellious elements within its own economy, would it not be an effective plan to apply the bull-whip to the backs of those who are primarily responsible for the evil that men suffer by reason of wilful and deliberate lapses from the obligations, moral and otherwise, established and formulated in the interests of the highest civilization? There are many men who are apparently impervious to all ordinary admonition and counsel. Why not teach these case-hardened delinquents proper respect for the common decencies of life by corporal reminder that they are transgressing the rules of the game? Why not lash defiance of public opinion into courteous subjection to the code that prescribes a square deal under the laws of every civilized community? And what better instrument for this purpose than the bull-whip, already sufficiently tested as an effective civilizing force?

San Francisco might be redeemed and rehabilitated morally and politically by judicious resort to the bull-whip method of compelling order out of disorder and creating lovely form and honest substance out of chaos. Look about you; single out those whose actions are inviting the bull-whip as a final rebuke for persistent and perennial assault upon the patience of a long-suffering and hitherto all-enduring community. What other resource can be suggested as competent to still the clamorous outcry of Francis J. Heney? And how appropriate the proposed remedy! Poetic justice would certainly be fully achieved in the conjunction of Heney and the bull-whip. Is there anything that bellows louder or roars more insistently for that which calms and subdues the bellowing tribes and the roaring herds? The pillory has long been occupied by Heney, and the populace have joyously pelted him with sarcasms, objurgations, good advice, and ribald jests. But Mr. Heney has fronted the anger and scorn of his fellow-citizens with brazen hardihood, retorting upon them with incoherent and impudent rejoinder, seeking to justify his ineptitude, his inadequacy, and his utter uselessness, by defamation, false accusation, clamorous abuse, and denunciation of those whom he praises by calling them enemies of himself and the graft prosecution. There seems, indeed, nothing left for this howling Heney except the bull-whip.

Then there is Mr. Spreckels. It is doubtful if even the bull-whip would serve its ordinary purpose in the disciplining of Mr. Spreckels. His hide is very thick and he was born with it. It has never been calloused by the thwacks that have been inflicted in the vain effort to direct Mr. Spreckels in the way his neighbors thought he ought to go. Mr. Spreckels is not only thick-skinned, but he is stubborn; he would not go right even if he knew it was his best policy. Mr. Spreckels may be regarded as incorrigible to all ordinary methods of correction, and it is possible that even the bull-whip would not leave a scar upon his hide or his conscience.

Another difficulty confronts us when we propose the bull-whip as a remedy for Mr. Langdon. We are in doubt as to the precise extent of Mr. Langdon's culpability, because it is not yet determined that he is mentally and morally responsible, and we are not prepared to advise a cruel and unusual punishment in his case until evidence sufficient to remove our doubt is furnished. Mr. Langdon has himself accused others, and it is possible that some of the accusation against Mr. Langdon is as groundless as most of the accusations that Mr. Langdon has hurled at those others. We would not advise the bull-whip for Mr. Langdon unless further investigation shall show conclusively that he is personally responsible, for his acts are amenable to penalties in his capacity as a principal rather than as an agent. We would advise in the case of Mr. Langdon that the bull-whip be reserved.

Abe Ruef apparently deserves a full dose of the bull-whip; but on maturer consideration perhaps it would be just as well to sprinkle Abe with ashes mixed with chloride of lime and in lieu of a bull-whip dispose of him finally at the extremity of a dung-fork.

The bull-whip might reform bad manners of William J. Burns. Stranger results have followed similar reformatory measures. Mr. Burns is probably more sensitive to all kinds of censure than any of his confederates in the Spreckels-Heney-Phelan vendetta, and this probability is corroborated by the frantic rushes he makes into print every time his "motives are impugned" or his purposes suspected, which is almost daily. The bull-whip is therefore suggested without reservation in the case of William J. Burns. Its application to his tender hide might not make a better man of Mr. Burns, but it would almost certainly convert him from an actively pernicious influence in the community into what the mathematicians call "a negligible quantity."

It is a far cry from the shores of Lake Tahoe and Superintendent Dickey's bull-whip to the leading protagonists of the graft vendetta and the remedy for their blighting influence upon the welfare and prosperity of the city; but it is a logical utterance from the crack of the whip that drove the savages of the Sierra back into their forest gloom to the crack of another whip that may yet drive the savages of the graft prosecution back into the gloom of the obscurity from which they emerged in response to the golden invitation of Mr. Spreckels. The bull-whip is not a subject for more than passing comment in the politest society (as it was in the Tahoe episode), but it serves to point a very good moral even if it does not adorn a very readable tale.

Why Should Women Vote?

Feminine politicians are abroad in numbers striving with the masculine prejudices of partisan conventions and central committees in an effort to secure "recognition" of woman's right to vote. The male politicians thus besieged are in serious doubt as to the validity of the arguments presented by the leaders of the equal-suffrage movement. Most of them have observed no strenuous indorsement of the movement among their own immediate feminine relationship; they have heard no loud outcry in their own families against the injustice and oppression of existing conditions, and they have naturally arrived at the conclusion that the demand is confined solely to the strong-minded, aggressive advance guard who are accustomed to assail political conventions and legislatures. They believe that if the mass of women wanted the ballot the fact would be obvious—so obvious, in truth, that no legislator would dare to go home and tell his wife that he had voted against an act proposing to place the electoral franchise in the hands of the women.

Aside from the extreme objection that universal suffrage would inject a further hysterical element into the already sufficiently hysterical trend of politics, there is evidence based on the statistics of the voting population that convinces every thinking citizen that the elective franchise is overloaded with voters utterly unprepared to exercise the privilege; and this condition, bad as it is in the concrete and dangerous as it is in the abstract, would be vastly aggravated if the woman contingent of these undesirable citizens were added. For many years illiteracy, brutality, anarchy, abject and consequently venal poverty, outcast citizenship, and riff-raff humanity have been pouring into this country from southeastern Europe and the slums of the old-world cities. Out of the male portion of this unclean immigration we have been making American citizens, and now it is proposed to give this same citizenship with the same unlimited privileges to the women of this foreign horde. It may be urged that the intelligent, patriotic womanhood of America would more than offset the vote of the Black Hand, the Mafia, and the anarchists who celebrate the anniversary of the Haymarket slaughter; but this contention is not a sufficient argument in favor of doubling or tripling the power at the ballot-box of these un-American organizations and thereby increasing by so much the menace of a demagogue-controlled radicalism that threatens at every election to subvert every cherished institution of the American republic.

The effect of woman's influence upon the politics and legislation of the country is manifest in the result of her successful petition to Congress in the matter of the abolition of the post canteen in the army. It is the verdict of the officers and of the police of every city where the soldiers are quartered that the "reform" is most pernicious; that vice has largely increased in the army, and that the only interest that has been subserved by the well-meant but ill-directed intention of the women who procured the enactment is the increased profit of the lowest doggeries that cluster about barracks and army posts. The example is not as flagrant as many that might be cited in the politics of men, but it is sufficient to show that women are as prone as men to mischief-making in politics and as provocative of evil even when they are most assured of the integrity and morality of their purposes.

Woman's influence for good in politics is more than doubtful. Women are more easily swayed in their passions and prejudices than are men. They would be even more intensely moved by the clamorous oratory of unscrupulous demagogues and more easily beguiled by the sophistries of political trickster than are their fathers, their husbands, and their brothers. It is the boast of many otherwise intelligent women that their "intuitions" are better ground to accurate conclusions than are the logic and reasoning powers of men. In practical politics "intuitions" are exceedingly dangerous and usually pervert th understanding of the voter who relies upon them. The emotional voter is numerous enough already, and there is no need to increase the multitude by placing the ballot in the hands of an entire sex whose most characteristic quality is a tendency to emotionalism.

Woman, in civilized countries, has long been "emancipated." She has gained everything for which she asked. There has been protest from the men whom she has disturbed by her insistent demand for "equal privileges," but there has been no absolute denial. Woman today may enter any field of endeavor. The daughter may compete with the father in the labor market or she may force her brother from his place in the commercial world by offering her service at a lower wage. It is no longer demanded that the work shall be done in a thoroughly workmanlike manner in all departments of industrial activity. The first desideratum is the cheapness of the labor; after that the inquiry is merely whether the laborer can manage to accomplish the task imposed. Woman is largely responsible for this cheapening of labor in certain industries which they have virtually monopolized, in each instance ousting a male breadwinner upon whom was dependent a family, perhaps. Marriage, it is true, is the goal of these women, and most of them ultimately reach it; but the places of the dear departed are immediately filled with others of the same sex, animated by the same ambition, and willing to work for the same wages; and the scope of "woman's sphere" is constantly widening—the number of women and girls who insist that they shall be permitted to enter vocations hitherto occupied exclusively by men, whose duty it is to support women and girls, is rapidly increasing. Now the ballot is demanded by women who are not satisfied with "equal privileges" in the marts of industry, but insist that all women shall "have a share in making the laws of the nations and in naming the authorities by whom they shall be governed." In this demand, however, there is no tangible or convincing proof that the laws would be better than they are now or that they would be more justly or more honestly administered.

It is not the purpose of the Argonaut to offer objection to woman's demand for the ballot if woman earnestly and sincerely desires to vote. We do not believe, however, that the majority of the women of California or of the United States are as eager for the franchise as the leaders of the movement have always contended. And we see no necessity for thrusting the ballot into indifferent or unwilling hands. No doubt a mother, a wife, or a sister would be just as lovable as she is if she voted, as most of the mothers, wives, and sisters would vote, on the advice or in the party of their sons, husbands, and brothers. But what good would be thereby attained? Wherein would the moral uplift of the nation be achieved more surely or the cause of good government advanced more expeditiously by the feminine vote than it has been by the vote of men whom women have reared, educated, and directed for good or ill from the cradle to old age? Surely the influence of woman in affairs political may be as potent, if she chooses to exercise it, in the home and upon the men with whom she associates, as it would be if she were armed with a ballot and granted the privilege of casting it as these men directed. Women may invade the industrial field, where her inferior capability commands an inferior remuneration; but she will commit an egregious error if she attempt to exercise a similarly inadequate talent in the eminently masculine province of politics.

Senatorial Service.

It is easy to understand the value of continuous service in the United States Senate when it is recalled that out of ninety persons who were members of the senatorial body in 1902, only thirty-seven will still be members in March next. Retirements by death or failure of reflection are so many that there is not at any time more than a handful of men whose service has covered an extended period. Since committee assignments go by seniority, these few men long in senatorial service have the best places. Senator Perkins, for example, is now at the head of the Naval Committee and in the way of soon being at the head of the Committee on Appropriations. This means that every member of the Senate, every member of the House of Representatives, every department official, and even the President at one time or another during every congressional session, is in the way of coming to Mr. Perkins for some favor. So placed, a senator is in a position of tremendous influence. This is why it is that States, even though of no great importance otherwise, which do not frequently change their representation, come to have a dominating influence in the Senate. Maine, for example, must be reckoned among the great forces in the Senate, due solely to the fact that her two senators hold high committee positions and therefore stand in a relationship of large influence and authority. The relatively unimportant State of Wyoming, by persistently keeping the same men in the Senate, has come to a position of authority which is of the greatest advantage to her general interests in legislation. On the other hand, the State of Oregon is notoriously weak in the Senate, due to her fixed habit of change. That State, by the way, holds the record in this respect, having accredited seven men as members of the Senate within the last six years. Of course, a State pursuing this erratic course can not possibly hope to hold anything like a commanding position in the Senate, for no sooner do those who represent her learn their way about Washington and fairly get their seats warm than they are turned out to make room for strangers.

The Phonograph in Statecraft.

When Edison invented the phonograph the first universal commentary was to the effect that posterity would erect monuments in token of its gratitude to the inventor for a device that could perpetuate the dead voices of the past even unto the wondering ears of ultimate generations of men. Babes unborn would hear the accents of their most distant ancestors; the children of the fortieth century would be able to compare the oratory of the twentieth century with that of their own age and period; the words of our wisdom now in the making would be transmitted for the edification and comparison, odious or otherwise, of a race of descendants who would probably need a glossary to elucidate the meaning of our obsolete words and quaint terminology. Since we have ceased to wonder at the possibilities of the phonograph we have somewhat modified our opinion of posterity's comment on Edisonian "wizardry." Familiarity with the "talking machine" has bred a certain contempt in our own minds for what some irreverent cynic has called "canned eloquence," and we begin to think that the "generations unborn" will not erect as many monuments as we had originally designed for Mr. Edison.

All of which is apropos of the announcement that Mr. Bryan and Mr. Taft have embalmed choice fragments of their speeches upon the records of the phonograph. When we heard that Mr. Bryan had uttered his thought and opinion into the receiver of the phonograph we laughed. When we were told that Mr. Taft had also perpetuated his voice and politics upon a waxen disk we laughed again; but the laughter evoked by Taft was different from that provoked by Bryan. We laughed at Bryan because it seemed so appropriate that Bryan should speak to the clapperclawing groundlings through a tin horn; we laughed at Taft because it seemed so absurd that a probable President of a great nation should pose in the presence of vacancy to win the silent approval or the mute dissent of the multitude. Bryan and the phonograph seemed made for each other; Taft and the talking machine seemed an anachronism and an incongruity. Our laughter in either instance was the product of a genuine humor, albeit a humor sourced in quite different geneses of the phenomena.

We may regret, without derogation of the solemn dignity of the occasion, that Mark Antony did not speak his funeral oration over Cæsar into a phonograph, to the end that we might compare the real thing with Shakespeare's admirable report of that celebrated speech; but we could not tolerate a phonographic travesty of General Washington's farewell address to the army, or a similarly undignified "perpetuation" of his last inaugural. With what diverse emotion would we listen to the metallic wheezing of Catalina's defiance of the Roman Senate and the halting, jerky, muffled mockery of a "record" from John Adams! We can imagine a Sheridan or a Garrick rehearsing a speech in front of a wooden box and a brass horn; but a Burke, a Jefferson, or a Lincoln in similar situation is unthinkable.

We are living in a material age; an age of rank irreverence; a sordid, prosaic, machine-made age. We take it as a matter of course that William Jennings Bryan should roar his fustian rhetoric into a tin horn and we laugh at William H. Taft because he follows Mr. Bryan's suit. We see nothing sacrilegious in the use of the phonograph as a vehicle for campaign oratory, even though that oratory conveys the political propaganda of candidates for the highest office in the gift of the greatest nation on the face of the earth. We treat it as a huge joke—one of the humorous phases of the campaign. "Come over to the town hall tonight and hear Bryan discuss the tariff." "What! Is Bill Bryan in town?" "No, but his voice is. Joe Smithers will wind 'em up." Or it may be in this wise: "Say, have you heard Bill Taft on injunctions down at Kelly's café?" "No; how much is he saying?" "Oh, he covers the issue all right; it's a twelve-inch record and a supplement." How's that for the dignity of modern American politics! How many self-respecting boys of the rising generation will exert themselves to fulfill the promise that ancient Americans love to utter for the inspiration and emulation of American youth—how many of these coming citizens of the republic will aspire to be President of the nation? As many, perhaps, as may desire to achieve fame in the leading rôle of a comic opera!

Conscription in England.

Predictions of military conscription in England are by no means new, but they seem now to have a better foundation than usual. For the past ten years or more the military experts of the old school have shaken their heads despondingly at the quantity as well as the quality of the raw material presented to them for training and have declared that the country is going to the dogs for the lack of good soldiers. Lord Roberts and Lord Wolseley have made guarded demands for compulsory military service, while Lord Kitchener is popularly supposed to believe that any man who is not a soldier is therefore outside the general scheme of things. The nation at large has not responded to these overtures with any great enthusiasm, thinking no doubt that shop-keeping is a healthier avocation than soldiering and reflecting on the comfortable fact that England has got along fairly well with a volunteer army hitherto and will no doubt "muddle through" the difficulties of the future in the same way.

The Boer war was the first proof positive that times have changed. Not only was the regular army insufficient to overcome a handful of untrained men who could shoot, and ride without baggage, but the additional men who were scraped together in England were so undersized, so physically and morally deficient, that their presence was a danger to the army. It became evident then that the regular army, already below standard, was the only force available from England in an emergency. The call to arms no longer met a response from the sturdy yeomen who had helped to overthrow Napoleon or who defiantly watched his camp-fires across the channel. It may be that these same yeomen were not greatly attracted by a war waged in the interest of a few millionaire gold miners with un-English names, but the fact remains that most of the men who enlisted were not men at all, but boys who were more familiar with pocket-picking than honest labor. Then came a period of reflection and recrimination, the war office learned a few salutary truths of the estimation in which it was held, there was a frenzied demand for army reform and—nothing was done. The conscription advocates went on advocating, but inasmuch as the war was over and no other war in sight the people settled back comfortably into stolidity. Then, too, the war minister had a brand new scheme by which the home army could be raised to its strength of 300,000 men, and as everybody wanted to believe it everybody did believe it and became correspondingly somnolent.

But now it seems that the war minister can do nothing of the kind. In spite of the extraordinary blandishments of the recruiting sergeant, in spite of the efforts of titled people all over the country who show their patriotism by persuading other people to fight, the enlistments returns are disappointing both in quality and quantity. The scheme is a rank failure, and so the conscriptionists are talking louder than ever and there is an uneasy feeling generally that something must be done. Men who can fight and won't fight must be made to fight, always provided, of course, that British institutions remain untouched and that privilege remains as privileged as ever.

That is exactly where the fault comes in, and every one knows it. It is privilege that stands between the English army and efficiency. It is the rooted conviction that Providence intended some men to lead and other men to be led, in the army as elsewhere, and that Providence indicated the officer by giving him a family and a rent-roll and pointed out the private by giving him nothing at all except a body to be shot at. Count von Moltke said that the British army in South Africa was composed of "lions, led by asses," and the hope is for recruit may be excused if he objects to such leadership and if he has his own opinion about a system that allows the war office to be "run" by fine court ladies and perhaps by some even higher still. The British army officer, especially when he comes from a military school, is sometimes incompetent, he is more than suspected of despising his profession, he is occasionally vain and rapid, he makes hardly an effort to live upon his pay, and, while he is personally as brave as any one, mere bravery is not a qualification for the leadership of soldiers. All these things were made undeniably clear during the protest that followed the Boer war. The storm soon spent itself, and not one real abuse has been remedied. If England were to go into a great war tomorrow there would be the same bravery on the part of the soldiers, while from incompetent and luxurious officers would come the same monotonous telegrams with the stereotyped formula, "I regret to report."

CAMPAIGN TOPICS.

The English are notorious for an almost superhuman skill in finding a way not to reform something. In civil affairs they pass an old-age pension bill as a welcome alternative to equalizing the burden of taxation and reforming the land laws. It is so much easier to be generous than to be just. In military matters they seem about to rush down a steep place into the sea of conscription rather than to declare that the war office shall no longer be a stamping ground for aristocrats or a means whereby court ladies can reward their favorites. The Englishman is pretty much what he has always been. There are no high wages in England to act as a counter attraction to the army. Assure the private of competent and comradely leadership, make him believe that grand pianos and champagne will no longer be found in the van of marching columns, persuade him that he will be officered by intelligence and skill, and he will go soldiering as readily as ever he did. There is an old saying that one volunteer is worth two pressed men, and it would be well to remember it just now.

Editorial Notes.

The latest government reservation relates neither to timber nor to water nor to minerals, but to wild bird life. The President has forbidden the shooting of birds on the lower Klamath, Harney, and Malheur Lakes in Southern Oregon, the purpose being to establish a reserve within which birds of all kinds may have their nests secure from molestation. In the few tracts abutting on these lakes which have passed out of the possession of the government and into private ownership the President's order is without effect. But these instances are rare and the order will in the main put an end to the killing of birds on the Southern Oregon lakes. An interesting effect of this order will be, through the maintenance of reserves all about it, to make wild game mighty plentiful on the Pelican Bay "ranch" of the President's special friend Harriman. There is not, we think, any serious danger that the President will be suspected of having made this order in Mr. Harriman's interest.

A Sacramento labor council has come out boldly with an official declaration that in politics, as in other things, it will "stand by its friends." Evidently the Sacramento council is not in sympathy with the prediction recently made by Secretary Pritchard of the New York Pavers' and Ramblers' Union that disruption will surely be the fate of the American Federation of Labor if it shall elect to go actively into politics. Behind Mr. Pritchard's prophecy there is some very significant and suggestive history. The Knights of Labor was a vastly important organization until it entered the political field. Its great leader, Mr. Powderly, was a man of high potentiality until he allowed himself to accept a political office. The Federation's ventures in politics, including the fights made two years ago upon Speaker Cannon in Illinois and Congressman Littlefield in Maine, have not resulted to its advantage. And today—since he has ventured into the political arena—Mr. Gompers is much less of a figure than he has been at any time this five years past. The record would seem to bear out the theory that the most expeditious and certain way to put a labor organization out of business is to induce it to antagonize the sentiments and destroy the allegiance of its members by getting itself into active politics.

The Hedjag Railroad, which will ultimately reach Decca, has now been built as far as Medina. A new mosque is to be opened near the railroad station with great ceremony on September 1.

Governor Hughes of New York is not among those who sink in their tents because his hour has not yet struck and it may be confessed that his prompt activity in favor of Mr. Taft compares favorably with the action, or rather inaction, of some others who also have their personal reasons for disappointment. Governor Hughes's Republican vigor is still more noteworthy from the fact that he is being vigorously assailed by the machine in his own State upon the ground that he is not a good Republican. Knowing what we do of the men who attack him, we need not take their complaint too seriously. Governor Hughes is not a good Republican because he has no rewards for display in the open market, but he seems to be a good enough Republican for Mr. Taft, who is readily accepting his campaign services in Ohio. No doubt Speaker Cannon and Vice-President Fairbanks and Senator Foraker will do their duty so far as their political consciences show them what that duty is, but their activities thus far are not so obvious as to make a dent upon the public mind, and we are reminded of the old saying that he who gives quickly gives twice. Emphasizing the point, the New York Evening Post says:

Only last week, at the meeting of the Republican State committee, several of the leaders were heard expressing the opinion: "We want a Republican for governor"; or, "Hughes is no Republican." Of course, what they really meant was: "We want a man who will give us something."

But that isn't the definition of Republican as it is understood by the mass of voters in this State or any State. Now when the bosses plead with the voters to help them nominate some one else, because "Hughes isn't a Republican," the voter can point to the man who is stumping the Middle West for the ticket, and reply: "He seems to be a good enough Republican for Taft. I guess he's good enough for me."

The sound and fury of Mr. Bryan's attack is leading that estimable gentleman into the quagmire of inconsistency, but what is a small matter of inconsistency among Democrats? He has already avowed that Mr. Roosevelt's popularity and success are due to his adoption of sound Democratic policies, but he now goes on to suggest that the financial panic is due to these same policies. We used to be taught that things that are equal to the same thing are equal to one another, so that if Mr. Roosevelt's policies are Democratic and if at the same time they caused the panic, then the panic was caused by Democratic policies, which we are invited to adopt formally in the person of Mr. Bryan. Speaking of the Republican party, he says "they are accustomed to say that they can guarantee prosperity and that panic always follows Democratic success and yet . . . the panic last fall came more than ten years after the Republicans secured absolute control of all three branches of the Federal government." As it will be clearly remembered that Mr. Bryan claimed full credit as the author of these very policies which he now suggests were the cause of the panic, we owe him our thanks for clearing up a difficult problem and one that has worried our financiers not a little. Mr. Bryan himself says that his policies were the cause of the panic, and we need go no further nor be backward in expressing our thanks for the timely danger signal.

The New York World thinks that Mr. Bryan has a chance to influence the great masses of the independent vote throughout the country, but it is a chance dependent upon so complete a rebirth that it can not carry much consolation to the Democratic mind. The World demands of Mr. Bryan so complete a reversal of character, so entire a right-about-face of habit and inclination that we are reminded of the man who said he did not believe that Shakespeare wrote the plays attributed to him, but that they were the work of some other man of the same name. Mr. Bryan, as the World would have him, would not be Mr. Bryan at all, but "some other man of the same name." The World promises to treat Mr. Bryan with fairness and justice. Mr. Bryan will reflect with some dolefulness upon this, as justice is not exactly the thing for which he has most reason to hunger. The conviction of the World is "stronger than ever" that Governor Johnson or Judge Gray would have been the real Simon Pure and that they could have polled tens of thousands of votes that Mr. Bryan can not get. "But"—and now comes the plea for a change of heart and an almost tearful reminder that even the vilest sinner may return:

If Mr. Bryan should adhere to his admirable speech of acceptance and the gratifying pledges to bury the past, and should prove during the campaign that he has profited by defeat and unlearned his past follies in the school of experience; if he should resolutely keep his back turned upon the delusive issues which he has hitherto advocated; if he should refrain from attacks upon the courts; if he should avoid all appeals to class prejudice; if he should prove that he is not the old Bryan, but a new Bryan courageously leading the popular protest against the excesses of Rooseveltism, he can then appeal with fair prospects of success to the great independent vote—in some States the deciding vote—that will be governed not by clamor, but by reason, not by clap-trap, but by conscience, not by noise, but by facts and truth, not by appeals to class hatred and ignorance, but by appeals to public intelligence—public intelligence.

When Mark Twain was being boosted up the side of the Great Pyramid of Egypt by a swarm of malodorous and perspiring Arab guides he found some consolation in the reflection that his persecutors would be eternally damned unless they repented and that as Arabs never repent their inevitable retribution was in higher hands than his. There seems to be some such gentle and resigned anticipation in the exordium of the World. Mr. Bryan would stand some chance of success if only he would cease to be Mr. Bryan. If the Ethiopian would but change his skin and the leopard his spots, what an ideal world it would be. But then they never do.

The New York Times, on the other hand, says that Mr. Bryan has changed and belabors him for it. But then perhaps it is only his artfulness. Like the vaudeville performer, he alters his costume with lightning rapidity, but it is the same man all the time. The Times warns us that the quickness of the hand deceives the eye and that the fickle and illusory Mr. Bryan will maintain his character of gay deceiver to the end. At the present moment he rails against trusts and predatory corporations. These alone are the obstacles that lie between us and the promised land. But twelve years ago it was the gold standard. Four years later it was imperialism. Now we hear nothing about these things. They are no longer the lions in the path, but something else has taken their place:

The people will naturally inquire whether, if Mr. Bryan is a candidate in 1912, he will forget all about predatory wealth and ruthless corporations, whether he may not then, obedient to some wave of reaction, preach the gospel of vested rights and defend property against its Populist assailants.

Surely he gives no guarantee of continuance as to corporations that he did not give about free silver in 1896. No skill in oratory, no dexterity in the choice of his topics, no prudent reticence about policies here and there unacceptable, will keep out of people's minds the question whether, after all, Mr. Bryan has any established convictions, any permanent principles. If they ask that question, his own public career and professions during the last twelve years supply the answer. Mr. Bryan, we fear, could appeal successfully only to an unthinking people. The American people do think.

The Times points out that constructive statesmanship holds no place in Mr. Bryan's programme. That would be dangerous ground, because it would invite attack. He is rich in vague generalities, such as that "the people should rule," but he does not say how this can be done more effectually than by giving every man a vote. He is eloquent in describing public wrongs and in inciting hatred against those who are supposed to inflict them, but we look in vain for any reasoned effort at a remedy, for any sign of constructive statesmanship, for any evidence of precise measures that he would advocate:

The great statesmen of our country have always treated the people with higher respect. All the early Presidents, from Washington down, addressed the people as though they were addressing an audience capable of understanding, weighing, judging, and judging correctly everything they said. Mr. Lincoln never attempted to fool the people—he pointed out in memorable words the futility of attempting to fool them. Mr. Cleveland spoke to the people as he would have spoken to his Cabinet advisers, treating them as equals, not as children to be wheedled and deluded. Mr. Bryan, among those who have aspired to the presidency, is almost alone in his assumption that devices of deception will conceal emptiness.

The recent editorial in the Cincinnati Enquirer in which John R. McLean gives up the fight for Bryan in the Middle West has naturally attracted a good deal of attention in New York and elsewhere. Mr. McLean is the most conspicuous Democrat in Ohio. He has been a leader for years and was once the candidate of his party for governor. His editorial says:

News from the West, from all the country west of the Ohio River, gives ample evidence that in every State of that vast region the Republican party has divorced itself from the element in its ranks that opposed or failed to heartily approve of the policies of President Roosevelt. The bold utterances, the loud criticisms, the abuse and revilings by politicians and representatives of business interests have suddenly ceased as against those policies, backed as they now are by the party's candidate, the party indorsement, popular approval, magnificent crops, and a renewal of prosperity.

It is difficult for an onlooker to see how the Democrats can gain Republican votes in the West under these conditions. Their chance was there three months ago, but the Republican new alliance surely is now a barrier. Mr. Bryan can offer no greater inducements than are now offered upon the bargain counter of the Republican party in the West. Not an important radical Republican leader has bolted his party. Why should he under such favorable conditions to radical ideas? Not an important conservative Republican can leave, for all other doors are closed to him.

It does not look so favorable to the Democrats in the West as it did one month ago, a fortnight ago, or a week ago.

Mr. Taft, asked what he had to say about this, maintained an attitude of masterly silence, but Mr. Vorys was more communicative. Mr. Vorys said that the news was gratifying, but not surprising, and that it confirmed the reports already received. Mr. Bryan also refused to say anything, presumably for the reason that he had nothing to say.

The Brooklyn Eagle points out some interesting statistics to show that Mr. Bryan's chances are hopeless unless he can win New York. The total number of votes in the Electoral College is 483. To be elected Mr. Bryan must receive 242 and these he can not get without New York. The Eagle thus classifies the electoral vote:

Eastern States—Connecticut, 7; Delaware, 3; Maine, 6; Maryland, 8; Massachusetts, 16; New Hampshire, 4; New Jersey, 12; New York, 39; Ohio, 23; Pennsylvania, 34; Rhode Island, 4; Vermont, 4. Total, 160.

Southern States—Alabama, 11; Arkansas, 9; Florida, 5; Georgia, 13; Kentucky, 13; Louisiana, 9; Mississippi, 10; North Carolina, 12; South Carolina, 9; Tennessee, 12; Texas, 18; Virginia, 12; West Virginia, 7. Total, 140.

Western States—Colorado, 5; Idaho, 3; Illinois, 27; Indiana, 15; Iowa, 13; Kansas, 10; Michigan, 14; Minnesota, 11; Missouri, 18; Montana, 3; Nebraska, 8; Nevada, 3; North Dakota, 4; South Dakota, 4; Utah, 3; Wisconsin, 13; Wyoming, 3; Oklahoma, 7. Total, 164.

Pacific Coast States—California, 10; Oregon, 4; Washington, 5. Total, 19. Grand total, 483.

Conceding every Southern State to Mr. Bryan, he starts with 140 votes and must get 102 more. The Western States have 164:

In 1896 Mr. Bryan carried five Western States—Missouri, Nebraska, South Dakota, Utah, and Wyoming—with a total of 36 votes. If, in 1908, he were to do as well he yet would be 66 short of a majority. But in 1900 all of these States, except Missouri, slipped away from him. There are divisions in the Republican party of Iowa and Wisconsin, from which large Democratic hopes are extracted. Well, if Mr. Bryan were to be successful in those two States he would receive 26 more votes, which would leave him yet 40 votes short of election. Even if the vote of Washington, which is a Pacific Coast State, 5, were added, he would yet be 35 short of an election. If he were fortunate enough to carry Indiana, he would have 15 more electoral votes; but would yet be 20 short of the requisite 242. And if he were to carry California, 10, and Oregon, 4, he would yet be 3 short of election.

Illinois, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, and North Dakota are, concededly, beyond his reach. Yet without one of them, the West, even aided by the Pacific Coast States, can not give him the requisite 242 in the Electoral College. Therefore, he must have one of the Eastern States. Were he to secure New York he could afford to lose some of the Western States now counted for him—a loss with which he is quite likely to meet. Indeed, New York is the only Eastern State which he has even a ghost of a chance of carrying.

And even for a ghost it is distinctly emaciated.

PARIS IN DARKNESS.

The Electricians, to Show Their Power, Cut Off all Light from the Capital.

The universal strike threatened by the Paris labor unions did not come off, but those who find much satisfaction from that fact are capable of a great deal of gratitude for very small mercies. In the general situation there is no improvement whatever. The comparative failure of the movement was not due to a lessened tension, but to a series of misunderstandings. The tension is as great as ever it was. The union men are as determined as ever to prove that they are masters of the industrial situation, while the government is in its usual state of perplexity as it is drawn in one way by its electoral professions and in the other by its belated sense of the general welfare.

Take, for example, the strike of the electricians. It was a strike not for an amelioration of a condition, but of spiteful revenge. As plainly as acts can speak it said, "Now we will show you our power and you shall understand what we can do if we will." Its immediate cause was the refusal of the Prefect of the Seine to receive a deputation that suddenly presented itself before him. There was no discussion, no attempt at conciliation, nor even the chance of mediation. The deputation immediately withdrew and the electricians plunged the city into darkness by cutting the main wires. This outrage occurred at a quarter to eight in the evening and it was the work of men who a few days earlier had flatly refused to join the general strike. What reason is there, then, to draw any favorable auguries from the supposed "moderation" of the groups of workmen who had their own selfish reasons for holding aloof from the General Federation of Labor?

We are so accustomed to the conveniences of civilization that we hardly realize the slender thread by which they are sustained. The electric light is so much a part of the night life of Paris that its sudden discontinuance produced an effect so weird as to be hardly imaginable. The restaurants were crowded, as they always are at that hour, and the effect of the darkness was first to produce a few moments of silence, then a few moments more of amusement, and then indignation and anger. Even a disagreeable novelty is momentarily welcome, so long as it be a real novelty. But the interest soon gave way to anger. Customers began to shout for light under the belief that the interruption was local. Others hammered on the table and on the plates with knives and forks, while the bewildered waiters ran here and there, as ignorant as every one else of the true cause, but doing their best to pacify their patrons. At one of the great clubs there were candles placed upon every step, strongly suggestive of a funeral, while the great Hotel Ritz was dimly illuminated by candles stuck into wine bottles and upon every point of vantage that would hold them. The Hotel Continental was about the only one that was entirely unaffected. The Hotel Continental has its own dynamo and does not depend at all upon the city supply. The theatres—most of them—had to discontinue their performances, and it is fortunate that there was no panic, while newspapers dependent upon electric power had to cease work altogether.

The strike only lasted two hours. The Prefect of the Seine did not surrender his position and the situation remained the same after the strike as it was before. As I have said, the strike was a wanton threat, a grim reminder of what the Paris workman can do if his will should be thwarted in any way. The Prefect of the Seine—one individual—had annoyed the Electricians' Union. Therefore the whole of Paris, rich and poor, young and old, laborer and aristocrat, must feel the whip of revenge. No matter how great the mischief done, no matter how great the injury to the innocent, all alike must suffer because a handful of workmen had been wounded in their pride. And the electricians' union is one of a hundred who thus have their fingers upon the throat of the city and would willingly strangle it for an absinthe-created whim.

The situation is very bad, as bad as it can well be. The American tourist sees the light and the splendor, the theatre, the hotel, and the dancing hall. He does not know that Paris is the centre of the insurrectionary forces of Europe. He does not know that there are probably more criminals to the square yard in Paris than in any other city of the world. He does not know that Communism is still a living and a burning force in these people and that Communism has never ceased to foster discontent and rebellion in the hope that its time will come again and that there will be revenge for the manner of its former suppression. The great Confédération Générale du Travail has nearly, but not quite, reached the point of moving all the labor unions in France like one man. The general strike will surely take place before long and it will be waged with the same spirit that plunged Paris into darkness and placed her at the mercy of the lawless elements that would speedily have been at her throat.

The incident was by no means an isolated one. It came only a few days after the riot at Villeneuve-St. Georges, where three men were killed and twenty were wounded. This was at a meeting specially called by the Confédération Générale du Travail. There were, of course, soldiers in attendance, but they made no hostile move whatever upon the crowd until they were themselves attacked by the strikers. Even then there was no reprisal until the crowd had been ordered to disperse twenty times nor until the first volley had been fired harmlessly in the air. Then, and not till then, did the soldiers fire effectively. Now the government has ordered a judicial inquiry, which is a very good substitute for doing something. The government knows perfectly well that the federated unions are ready to attack any one or to defy any authority that is daring enough to interpose between them and entire social supremacy. The labor unions today are the masters of Paris.

PARIS, August 12, 1908. ST. MARTIN.

OLD FAVORITES.

Come, Sleep!

Come, Sleep, and kiss my eyelids down—
Let me forget
Hope's treachery, and Fortune's frown,
And Life's vain fret.

And would you hold me fast, dear Sleep,
I need not wake,
Since they are dead who used to weep
For my poor sake.
—Louise Chandler Moulton.

When We Confront the Vastness of the Night.
When we confront the vastness of the Night,
And meet the gaze of her eternal eyes,
How trivial seem the garnered gains we prize;
The laurel wreath we flaunt to envious sight;
The flower of Love we pluck for our delight;
The mad sweet music of the heart that cries
An instant on the listening air, then dies—
How short the day of all things dear and bright!

The Everlasting mocks our transient strife;
The pageant of the Universe whirls by—
This little sphere with petty turmoil rife—
Swift as a dream, and fleeting as a sigh—
This brief delusion that we call our life,
Where all we can accomplish is to die.
—Louise Chandler Moulton.

Were but My Spirit Loosed upon the Air.

Were but my spirit loosed upon the air—
By some High Power that could Life's chain unbind
Set free to seek what most it longs to find—
To no proud court of kings would I repair;
I would but climb once more a narrow stair
When day was wearing late, and dusk was kind,
And one should greet me to my failings blind,
Content so I but shared his twilight there.

Nay, well I know he waits not as of old—
I could not find him in the old-time place—
I must pursue him, made by sorrow hold,
Through worlds unknown, in far celestial race,
Whose mystic round no traveler has told—
From star to star—until I see his face.
—Louise Chandler Moulton.

At Rest.

Shall I lie down to sleep, and see no more
The splendid affluence of earth and sky—
The proud procession of the stars go by—
The white moon sway the sea, and woo the shore—
The morning lark to the far Heaven soar—
The nightingale with the soft dusk draw nigh—
The summer roses hued and bloom and die—
Will Life and Life's delight for me be o'er?

Nay! I shall be, in my low, silent home,
Of all Earth's gracious ministries aware—
Glad with the gladness of the risen day,
Or gently sad with sadness of the gloam,
Yet done with striving, and foreclosed of care—
"At Rest, at Rest!"—what better thing to say?
—Louise Chandler Moulton.

"Yankee ingenuity!" is the ejaculation of the bystander as he watches the working of a machine called the Simplex Pile Driver. A heavy steel tube forty-one feet long and sixteen inches in diameter, with an iron cap, slightly pointed, fastened to its lower end, is driven into the ground by an ordinary pile driver. When the tube has reached the desired depth buckets of concrete are hauled up to the mouth of the tube and dumped in. When the tube is filled to the surface of the ground it is pulled out, leaving a perfect concrete pier, with an iron base. A pile can be made in half an hour. The weight of the bucketful of concrete, 500 pounds, falling forty-one feet, packs itself solid, but the piles can be made even stronger by tamping them with an attachment to the pile driver. By pulling the tube part way out of the ground the concrete can be tamped into the interstices of the surrounding earth strata, and thus the frictional hold on the ground can be increased almost infinitely, so that the heaviest skyscrapers could be supported.

The islands in and around the Caribbean Sea, including Cuba, Hayti, Santo Domingo, Porto Rico, Jamaica, and others of British possession, and the French, Dutch, and Danish possessions, have a total population of about 7,000,000, most of whom are supposed to be exceedingly lazy. Their commerce does not support this supposition. Its total is not far from 90 per cent of that of Japan, with a population of nearly 50,000,000. Moreover, while the people of Japan must devote themselves more and more to manufacturing imported materials into commodities for export or live in a state of awful poverty, the natural resources of the West Indies are sufficient for the comfortable maintenance of many times the present population.

Mundji Bey, the new chargé d'affaires pending the appointment of a new minister from Turkey, succeeding Mehmed Ali Bey, has been received in Washington. He was formerly a newspaper man and is frank in saying that journalism has more attractions for him than diplomacy. Colonel Mundji, as he prefers to be called here, is said to be a Turk, though most of his predecessors have been Syrian, Armenian, or Greek subjects of the Sultan. Turks rarely are willing to leave their country.

TONY PASTOR, FATHER OF VAUDEVILLE.

Career and Influence of the Veteran Singer, Comedian, and Manager.

Tony Pastor is seriously ill at his home in Elmhurst, Long Island, and the amusement-loving public of Manhattan suddenly realizes its interest in this old theatrical caterer. It is to be doubted if any member of his profession has earned a regard more sincere, and it is certain that any history of the theatre, merely metropolitan or broadly American, must give wide space and appreciative consideration to his efforts and influence. The present generation has seen his fame eclipsed even in his chosen field of vaudeville, but the syndicates and circuits of today are builded on foundations laid with good judgment and courage by Tony Pastor, and in scores of playhouses the audiences every night applaud the work of stars first discovered by him and owing to his instruction and methods much of their brilliancy and enduring fame.

At Tony Pastor's Theatre, 585 Broadway, opened by him in 1875, many of the prominent theatrical people of the present season, as well as of earlier times, made their first appearances in public. Any list made from memory would be far from complete, but a number of names well known wherever the English language is spoken are easily recalled. Nat C. Goodwin began there in February, 1876. Lillian Russell first sang upon its stage, as did May Irwin. Francis Wilson was a song-and-dance artist there in those early days. Denman Thompson appeared there in the sketch of rural life which was afterward expanded into "The Old Homestead." William J. Scanlan, the Irish comedian whose brilliant career was cut short by death, gave there his first evidence of a natural gift for melody and mirth. Harrigan and Hart, John and Harry Kernell, William ("Old Hoss") and James Hoey, Charles Evans, Pat Rooney, Gus Williams, and Dan Daly were "presented" to the public at Pastor's. Jennie Yeaman, Florence Bindley, Minnie and Helen French, Helen Dauvray, Vesta Tilley, and Bessie Bonehill gained their first fame there.

There is much more, however, than reflected radiance in Tony Pastor's career. He was the first to give character to what were known as "variety shows" in the years preceding his reign as a manager on Broadway. Those variety shows did not tolerate the presence of women in the audience, and even the best of them were offensive in many particulars. Tony Pastor inaugurated the change which has completely revolutionized this important division of the theatrical world. He put a ban on the coarser features, which had been considered necessary if not the most important parts of the variety bill of fare. He catered to mixed audiences, and he recognized and rewarded genuine ability in singing, dancing, and character-comedy. He demonstrated the fact that clean, bright, tuneful entertainment was demanded and would be well repaid.

Nothing in the early experiences of the pioneer vaudeville manager could have enforced the lesson which he taught his followers. Tony, named Antonio by his parents, was born in Greenwich in 1835, the son of a small dealer in perfumery, and at eight years of age was engaged by P. T. Barnum as an infant prodigy singer and appeared at Barnum's Museum. Four years later he went on the road with Raymond and Waring's circus, doing a tumbling act and appearing in the after-concert as a black-face singer. The next season he was a bareback rider in J. J. Nathan's circus and began the character work which displayed his talent for comedy, though it was shown in the "Pete Jenkins" act which was once an indispensable as it was an enthusiastically popular feature of all ring shows.

When the Civil War began, Pastor was a singer in a variety show at 444 Broadway, and one of the well-remembered incidents of the excitement following the reception of the news of the firing on Fort Sumter was his singing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" in that dingy playhouse, and the wild enthusiasm that followed his appearance waving the flag. In the succeeding years he was with variety companies on tour, making popular many comic songs which he had procured from England. "Sarah's Young Man," "They All Have a Mate but Me," and "Jim, the Carter's Lad," are memories of those days. "Down in a Coal Mine," "The Dark Girl Dressed in Blue," and "Pull Down the Blind," were no less successful ditties, mainly through his introduction. He had an inimitable manner in singing, and without the aid of grotesque costume or extravagant effort was always able to touch the mirthful appreciation of his audiences.

His first theatre was at 201 Bowery, the site of the present People's Theatre, and was called Tony Pastor's Opera House. He moved to 585 Broadway, as has been said, in 1875, and continued there till 1881, when he secured his present playhouse on Fourteenth Street, in the west end of Tammany Hall. There are few New Yorkers who do not cherish pleasing memories of one or both of these theatres.

With the theatrical folk there are few who have won a greater personal popularity than Tony Pastor. He is not merely admired and praised, he possesses the affection of all who have known him. The last few years have not been prosperous with the veteran comedian and manager. It is said that he has declined to renew his lease for the theatre, and that he has actually lost a fortune. He will never lose his friends, and at seventy-one may safely rest on a record won with more unselfishness and charity than are often manifested in careers of notable success.

FLANAGAN.
New York, August 13, 1908.

FORT VIGILANT AND ITS MEN.

By Jerome A. Hart.

XXVIII.

Within the guarded walls of Fort Vigilant there was incessant activity. Men were at work there night and day. In the great drill-room on the ground floor the new recruits were being drilled in companies and battalions; in every unoccupied corner awkward squads were being put through the manual of arms by the sergeants. In the room above, the executive committee held continuous sessions of many hours.

In a few days the Vigilante forces had grown to some six thousand men. Their leaders, the executive committee, were men of more wisdom than the mass of members. But, however much they might strive to temper zeal with discretion, they found themselves obliged to listen to the thousands behind them. The more hot-headed among the mass demanded all sorts of rash proceedings, such as seizing the arms in the United States arsenal, capturing the artillery at the Presidio fort, and various other acts calculated to embroil the Vigilantes with the Federal government. The executive committee realized that it had all it could do to cope with the municipality and the State. The Vigilante leaders were thoroughly informed of the movements of the governor; they already knew that he had commissioned General Herman as commander of the militia, and that he had left the capital in order to attend personally to the disturbed conditions at the Bay.

The question which now engrossed the attention of the executive committee, and which had been forced upon it by the demands of the mass of the Vigilantes, was the method of hanging condemned men. The executive committee was in favor of hanging men out of the windows of Fort Vigilant. This, in the committee's opinion, was safer and more dignified. But the Vigilantes as a body were dissatisfied with this. They insisted that a scaffolding should be erected in front of the fort, guarded by cannon placed at the intersections of the streets, with the Vigilante troops formed in a hollow square about the scaffold. Preposterous as it may seem, these were the questions over which the executive committee had sat in discussion for many hours. As yet there were no prisoners in Fort Vigilant, and therefore of course no men to hang. But so idle is the temper of a mob, even of a disciplined one, that the mass of the Vigilantes thought more about how to hang their prisoners when caught than how to catch them.

While this discussion raged a medley of noises came from the assembly hall below—the steady tramp of men, the ring of musket-butts on the floor, the clash of fixing and unfixing bayonets, and the cries of the officers giving orders. To these presently was added another sound—the rapping of hammers.

The Vigilante president, Carleton, presided over the executive committee as chairman. When this new sound fell on his ear, he interrupted the discussion with the remark: "From the hammering we now hear I am inclined to think that the members are engaged in preparing the timbers for a scaffold—without any authority from us. In order to avoid discrediting our authority, I suggest that we pass a resolution in favor of erecting a scaffold in the street and executing thereon such prisoners as may be condemned to death."

Such a resolution was put, and hurriedly passed. "I would suggest, Mr. Chairman," said Judge Truax, "that this resolution be at once put on the bulletin board in the drill-room below."

It was done, and in a few moments the gratified executive committee heard roars of applause from below.

A messenger entered with a note, which he presented to the chairman.

"Gentlemen," said Carleton, after reading it, "I have here a brief message from the governor of the State and General Herman. They have been admitted to Fort Vigilant, and are waiting to see me in the ante-room. On my return I will report to you the result of the interview."

When Chairman Carleton entered the ante-room he found there Governor Jackson and General Herman. The party saluted formally, and the governor without further preamble said:

"Carleton, what is all this devil's business about?"

"It is indeed a devil's business, governor," replied Carleton. "This cowardly shooting on our streets has got to stop."

"I agree with you about that, Carleton. The only difference in opinion between us is as to the method. But it must be stopped by law. This Vigilante business is all wrong. The State has passed the period when such mob manifestations can be tolerated."

"But this is no mob, governor," protested Carleton. "The best men in the city are enrolled in the ranks of this committee. Nearly all of the leading merchants, many of the bankers, the professional men, and other private citizens of standing are to be found in our ranks. In fact," he added, pointedly looking at Herman, "from the difficulty which you and the general have experienced in endeavoring to organize the militia, you must know that the good men are on our side."

"Come, come, Carleton," said the governor, "let us no, discuss these academic questions. If you and your committee will disband your illegal organization and promise to support the law, I will undertake that Clancy shall be indicted at once and a jury drawn that will give him a square trial. If there is any indication of jury-fixing or other corruption in the matter, I will see that the panel is canceled at once, and proceedings begun de novo. And it shall all be done as rapidly as decency will permit. But your Committee must disband."

"Even if we did disband," said Carleton evasively, "neither the Committee nor the community would have any confidence in the sheriff. He is allied with the Clancy gang, which is headed by Burke. We know and everybody knows that if Clancy is indicted by a grand jury or tried by a petty jury with which the present sheriff has anything to do, the proceedings will be a mere farce."

"Look here, Carleton," exclaimed the governor, vehemently, "I give you my word of honor that the proceedings shall be speedy and square. Furthermore, if you will promise me that Clancy shall not be taken out of the custody of the law, I will promise you that he shall be on hand for trial at a time to be agreed on. What is more, I will personally see that his trial is free from any attempts to tamper with justice."

Carleton wavered for a moment, but professed his inability to make terms. "I shall lay the matter before the executive committee, and see what can be done," he said. "It is not for me to decide."

After he had gone, Herman's trained ear dissected the sounds coming from the drill-room.

"Some of those men are used to marching," he exclaimed. "I can tell it by the sound of their footsteps. They march like trained men, two steps to the second. Hark!—listen to the bang of those hammers in the firing drill. That company is used to volley firing."

"So you think there are veterans among them?" inquired the governor in surprise.

"Without question. Hark! What's that? Listen to that! That shows it!"

Evidently the men had been at "rest," for the command was sounding sharply: "Tention, company!" "Attention!" in French, "Achtun!" in German.

"What does that mean?" asked the governor.

"Foreigners," said the general briefly. "I heard they had a foreign legion, but I doubted it. I see now it is true, for they are giving orders in French and German. Those foreigners have served in their own armies at home."

As he spoke Carleton entered the room, accompanied by four other Vigilante officials. The governor again urged them to disband, promising that Clancy would be executed if found guilty. They refused to disband, but made a verbal promise that Clancy should not be taken out of the custody of the law.

The governor and the general withdrew, not utterly cast down, but still with a feeling that the interview had been barren.

"They mean mischief!" exclaimed Carleton, when the two representatives of the State had withdrawn. "If we are going to act, we had better act quickly. Let us take the necessary steps at once for getting hold of Clancy. Let us lay our plans and take the man out of jail tomorrow morning."

"How about our promise to leave him in the hands of the law officers?" asked Truax, doubtfully.

"Our promise? Bah!" sneered Carleton. "Promises are molasses to catch flies!"

"I agree with the chairman," said Secretary Bascom. "So let's get to work with a map of the city and draw up our plan of action. But first let us draft from our entire force sixty picked men—cool men, men of tried courage, men who know they are chosen for a post of danger. Let this body-guard have the right of the line and the head of the column. Let them be the men to bring the prisoners out of the jail, and let them guard the carriages on their way back from the jail to Fort Vigilant."

"You speak of the prisoners," said Carleton. "Do you think it advisable to take more than one?"

"Yes," replied Bascom, "while we're getting Clancy we'd better take out Charley Costa and try him too."

"Why not take Reuben Mulligan at the same time?" cried Carwell. "He's in the jail."

Carleton reflected for a moment. "Mulligan is a cheap rascal, and not in the same class with the other two," he said. "Still it might be well to take him along for the moral effect, and keep him here in close confinement until we banish him."

The Vigilante officials then seated themselves around a table in the marshal's room on which lay maps of the city and plans of the jail. They discussed at length the arrangement of their forces. The jail was situated near the base of a steep hill. On the flank of this hill a bluff rose sharply; here they decided to place a squad of expert riflemen, thus from the bluff commanding the roof of the jail. One hundred picked men with pistols were to be distributed in the proximity of the jail. These men, with no external evidence of being connected with the Vigilantes, were to act as detectives.

The body-guard of sixty, the riflemen, and the hundred detectives being provided for, there remained only the disposition of the great body of the Vigilantes, who now numbered some six thousand. The leaders decided that Fort Vigilant and the entire block in which it stood should be surrounded by a guard of two thousand men; that the remainder of the Vigilante troops would all be under arms, and receive their orders in the morning; that the commanding officer of each division should have his men ready to start from Fort Vigilant at a certain time; that each division should take position at a specified point at a set hour. It was also agreed that at daylight on the following morning twelve companies should take their places around the block in which the jail stood. Later on, the other divisions, which would be forming near Fort Vigilant, would take up their line of march, and one after another the various bodies of troops would converge on the jail, approaching it by different routes. The body-guard of sixty men were to act as executive escort at the head of the column, and also to escort the prisoners on the return from the jail.

For hours the Committee labored on their plan. As fast as their orders were prepared, the clatter of hoofs might be heard on the pavement, as messengers set forth seeking the commanding officers of the various divisions.

Far into the night they sat there, and soon the tramp of men, the ring of musket-butts, and the murmur of voices was heard from without. It was not yet daylight, but already the Vigilante guard was forming around Fort Vigilant. And half a mile away the Vigilante guard was also forming around the jail where slumbered Clancy, Costa, and Mulligan, under the protection of the law.

* * * * *

It was a brilliant morning. The usual veil of fog had been blown away on the breath of a warm wind from the south. The hills across the water stood out distinctly in the clear air; the islands in the bay were sharply outlined on the background of deep blue water flashing under a pale blue, cloudless sky. The peninsula was flooded with sunshine. The Bay City is a gray city—her tints are neutral, her sea fogs perennial, her trade winds cold. But when the sun crosses the celestial equator, the trade winds die down, the south winds blow, the fogs disappear, and the infrequent sun shines on her ardently as on other cities in low latitudes.

So beautiful was the morning that it seemed almost unfitting to be chosen for such violent deeds. This thought occurred to all three in one group of the many spectators who stood on the roof of the International Hotel, a building not far from the jail, earnestly watching the curious spectacle before them. For Eugene Yarrow, knowing of the threatened jail-break, had hastened to urge Mrs. Lyndon and Diana, who were at this hotel during a brief visit from Sacrosanto, to accompany him to the roof. All around the block in which the jail stood they saw large bodies of troops. The men were not uniformed, it is true, although they wore dark garments, white gloves, and black glazed caps. But all of them bore muskets with glistening bayonets, and many of them carried themselves with the erect port which betokens military training. In the rear of this wall of bayonets, but keeping at a respectful distance from the lines of soldiery, was a solid mass of people. On the hill which rose up behind the jail were scattering houses for a short distance, back of which was vacant land. On this elliptical hill, which looked down like an amphitheatre on the scene below, were many thousands packed together in serried ranks, while even the tops of the houses in the foreground were black with people. At the corners of the streets around the jail were pieces of artillery, their limbers detached and the artillerymen standing ready for action. All of the streets approaching the jail were thus commanded by artillery. In front of the building stood a piece of cannon pointing directly at the jail door.

It was nearly nine o'clock. For half an hour there had been no accessions to the ranks of the military. The infantrymen were standing at "place rest"; the cannoniers had loaded their pieces and then stood in place. The great crowd was restless and shivery with curiosity; but there was none of the audible restlessness, none of the slangy exclamations, the trivial cries usually coming from an impatient street crowd. The people stirred uneasily; the individuals talked in low murmurs; but the crowd, as a crowd, was dumb.

"Do you know who those two gentlemen are, Mr. Yarrow?" inquired Diana.

She pointed toward two men who from the roof followed the scene below with curious eagerness. One was tall and lean, and seemingly very excitable; the other was stouter, and more phlegmatic.

"Yes—the stouter one is Governor Jackson, the governor of the State."

"Are not the Vigilantes afraid that he will interfere?" asked Diana.

"They have prevented that by winning over the State militia and seizing the State's arms. The lean man with him is William Herman, the banker, formerly a United States army officer. Governor Jackson has appointed Herman commander of the State militia, but his army seems reduced to the governor and himself."

"It must be galling to them to witness such a sight—the State and city defied by thousands of armed men," said Mrs. Lyndon.

"Still, so far, everything has been done in the most orderly manner," said Diana, "a stranger would not know the movement was in defiance of the law. In fact, it is so quiet it is unexciting. What do you think they are waiting for, Mr. Yarrow?"

"I imagine that the chiefs of the Vigilantes are yet to come, and until they do, there will be no move made either by the Vigilante forces or by the defenders of the jail."

"Do you think it is possible that the sheriff and his men will attempt any defense of the jail against such an overpowering force as this?" asked Mrs. Lyndon in surprise.

"It would seem madness to do so, but the sheriff will probably make at least a show of resistance in order to square himself with the Law-and-Order party."

"Do you belong to the Law-and-Order party, Mr. Yarrow," inquired Diana.

Yarrow smiled. "Theoretically I do, Miss Diana," he replied, "but this is not a good day for a Law-and-Order man. I confess I don't believe in jail-breaks by extra-legal means. However, I hope that these disturbed conditions as well as the Vigilantes will both disappear, and that we shall have law and order again."

"But," cried Diana eagerly, "if the law is so slow and inefficient that criminals rule this city while honest men are robbed and murdered with impunity—what then, Mr. Yarrow?"

Yarrow shrugged his shoulders. "It seems to me, Miss Diana," he replied, "that there must be more honest men here than criminals. If so, why don't the honest men organize in aid of the law instead of against it? If they do their duty as judges, jurors, and witnesses, there would be no need of Judge Lynch. But look! Here comes another squad of Vigilantes."

They looked and saw the hollow square of troops opening to receive some new-comers. At the head rode two mounted officers, wearing red, white, and blue sashes. Then came several carriages occupied by men whose faces were known to the crowd, for their names speedily ran around from lip to lip. Last came three empty carriages. The picked guard of sixty men surrounded the little procession, which entered the hollow square of troops and took up its position before the jail.

"Who are the men in the leading carriages, Mr. Yarrow?" inquired Mrs. Lyndon.

"I don't know them all. The one in the first carriage on the left side of the rear seat is William Carleton; he is the president of the Vigilantes and a prominent merchant. The man on his right is Carwell, another merchant. The two men opposite I know by sight, but not their names. In the next carriage that man with the dark mustache is Bascom. He is the one who always signs the orders of the Vigilantes as 'Sixty-Six, Secretary.' Beside him is Judge Truax, a prominent lawyer. The others I don't know."

"Look!" cried Mrs. Lyndon. "That man is going up to the door of the jail. Who is he?"

"That is the grand marshal of the Vigilantes."

The marshal rode up to the door of the prison and rapped on it loudly with the butt of his riding whip. The wicket in the door was opened, and a face appeared. The marshal passed in a piece of paper; the wicket was closed and the marshal withdrew. In a few moments the wicket was opened, and again the face appeared. The marshal shook his head, and after some minutes' parley the jail door opened. Then four of the Vigilante leaders descended from their carriages, and, accompanied by a squad of ten riflemen, entered the jail.

There was a long wait, during which increased restlessness pervaded the masses of people on the house-tops and on the hill. The ranks of the Vigilantes stood unmoved.

"Isn't it exciting now?" cried Diana. "I wonder what they're doing?"

"I can't imagine. What do you think is going on within the walls of that gloomy-looking building?" asked Mrs. Lyndon.

"Probably the Vigilantes have demanded that the sheriff should turn over to them Clancy, the murderer. The sheriff will refuse, and the Vigilantes will threaten to open fire on the jail."

"And what will the sheriff do then?" inquired Diana.

"If he is as sensible a man as I believe him to be, he will immediately give up Clancy to the Vigilantes."

Even as he spoke the doors of the jail were thrown open with a clang, and the Vigilante leaders again appeared. They were followed by three pallid men.

For the first time the great crowd spoke as a crowd. A sound like "A-h-h-h-h!" came from thousands of throats. It was not a groan or a hoot. It was not condemnatory. It was impersonal. It was expressive of the crowd's curiosity—its interest in at last seeing the three men whom the Vigilantes had come to take. There was no chance for error. No one had to ask which were the prisoners. A child could have told. As the three men walked out from the dark jail, blinking in the garish sunlight, and gazed on the long lines of men with fixed bayonets, the cannon, the thousands of people gazing at them gravely from hill-tops and house-tops, they knew that they were going to their death.

Each prisoner marched between two armed Vigilantes. The little procession filed out into the street, where stood the cannon still pointing toward the jail door. Each of the three prisoners was placed in a carriage with three guards. The Vigilante leaders reentered their carriages; the marshal took his position at the head of the column; the body-guard surrounded the carriages; the hollow square opened; the procession filed down the hill. As the chiefs of the Vigilantes with their prisoners marched away, the square slowly disintegrated; from company to company ran the sharp cries of the company commanders and the platoon chiefs.

"Right by platoons! Right platoon—forward! Left platoon—right oblique! Left platoon—mark time! Right platoon—double time! Column—guide left—march!" Presently there was a long column of men tramping after the carriages. Marching thus by platoons in full front, the Vigilantes filled the street from curb to curb.

As the head of the massive column passed the building on whose roof they stood, Mrs. Lyndon exclaimed: "This is absolutely uncanny!"

"Isn't it?" assented Diana. "It affects one's nerves."

"Why?" asked Yarrow. "What phase of it do you mean?"

"The silent soldiery—that's what affects my nerves," replied Mrs. Lyndon. "Never before have I seen a large body of men marching this way in silence. Every body of troops that I have seen has had either a band of music or a fife or drum corps. But with this army the dull tramp of feet is the only sound I hear. I call it uncanny."

"So do I," joined in Diana. "But if it affects us so, how must it awe those unhappy men. Look at their pale faces! Who are they, Mr. Yarrow? Can you identify them?"

Yarrow looked down. The carriages containing the prisoners were just passing. Their ashen faces were drawn and set with apprehension. They knew that these thousands of marching men were bent upon their punishment—that they were already doomed. As Mrs. Lyndon said, the silence of the marching column seemed funereal. There was no squeak of fife or beat of drum—nothing but the metallic clash of iron-shod hoofs on the slippery cobble stones, and the dull "tramp tramp."

Yarrow gazed scrutinizingly at the prisoners through his field glass. "The prisoner in the first carriage is Michael Clancy, the man who shot Fitzwilliams," he said. "He is a noted ballot-box stuffer, and poses as a follower of Senator Burke."

"Are the other men murderers, too?" inquired Mrs. Lyndon. "I thought you said the Vigilantes intended to take only Clancy from the jail."

"So the rumor ran. But the Vigilantes were afraid of warning the friends of the other men, and thus giving them a chance to be removed from the jail before the Vigilantes got there."

"Who is that dark man in the second carriage?" asked Diana.

"That is Charles Costa—he shot Marshal Robertson some time ago. Costa is a gambler and a man of loose life, but more popular than Clancy. The other prisoner is Reuben Mulligan—the same stripe as Clancy, although a lesser scoundrel."

The massive Vigilante column was gradually drawing toward its end. As the last of the infantry fell in from the vanishing square, the battery of artillery wheeled into line. The last of the rifle battalion had descended from the jail roof and the house-tops, and took position with the rear-guard. A part of this battalion had gone in advance, acting as flankers; these riflemen carefully scanned the houses on either side of the street and the people on the roofs. Several times, when threatening demonstrations came from a roof, squads of riflemen would quickly enter, climb the stairs, and search for the persons who had made threats. Behind the battery of artillery came the ambulances, and several scaling ladders mounted on trucks. And last of all, as the heavy column rolled past them, Yarrow pointed out how thoroughly organized were the Vigilantes, for a troop of cavalry and the rifle battalion made up an imposing rear guard.

As the cavalry troop clattered down the street, the vast crowd poured down from the hills and debouched into the thoroughfare. Forming a serried mass, from wall to wall, the crowd followed the Vigilantes at a respectful distance. Thus in the heart of the populace, in the bosom of the citizenry, with an armed mob in front of and around them, an unarmed mob behind them, the white-faced prisoners fared onward toward Fort Vigilant from the violated jail.

Just as they were about to descend from the roof of the hotel, Diana paused and exclaimed:

"There is another procession coming over the hill. What do you suppose that is, Mr. Yarrow?"

Yarrow leveled his field glass toward the point indicated, and after a moment's scrutiny replied:

"It is a funeral procession; probably it is—yes, it must be—the funeral of Fitzwilliams."

"The man whom Clancy shot?" inquired Mrs. Lyndon.

"Yes. The line is very long—it must be the funeral of Clancy's victim. I wonder if it is by chance or by design that the Vigilantes selected this day for their jail-break."

"Look! Look!" cried Diana. "The two processions are going to intersect. They are meeting now at the foot of the hill."

It was so. As the two processions met, the grand marshal gave a signal and the head of the column stopped. All along the solid column of Vigilantes, repeated from company to company, there ran the command "Platoons—HALT!" Then came the ring of musket butts on the pavement as the men ordered arms. The column of avengers halted, while in front of the pallid wretches at its head there passed the funeral procession of Fitzwilliams going to his long home.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Copyright 1908 by Jerome A. Hart.

Modern brick buildings of ten and twelve stories are being taken down and replaced by steel frame structures of greater height on Broadway, New York. While the foundations of the original skyscrapers are strong enough to sustain additions above, there is enough saving of space in the new plan of thinner walls to make the change profitable.

The Anti-Imperialist League of Boston recently awoke from a long sleep and celebrated the event by sending out an appeal to its friends to bolt Taft in favor of Bryan.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Senator Gervais wrote an article a few weeks ago in a French newspaper protesting against the increasing practice of ridiculing President Fallières on the music hall stage.

Miss Anna Pritchett of Louisville, Kentucky, has just been appointed to the chair of economics at Wellesley College. She has just passed her twenty-fifth birthday and is the youngest member of the Wellesley faculty.

Miss Italia Garibaldi, a granddaughter of General Garibaldi, has just been appointed to take charge of the Methodist Girls' Home School in Rome. This school stands on the street named for General Garibaldi and almost in the shadow of his statue.

George Samler Davis, who was recently made president of the Normal College for the free training of teachers for its schools, at a salary of $8250 per annum, together with an official residence connected with the institution, is the highest paid instructor in the public schools of New York City.

Paul Mauser, the aged inventor of the rifle bearing his name, at his home in Germany has invented a new military rifle, the principal feature of which is a twenty-five-shot automatic cartridge feeder. The new arm weighs but a few ounces more than the rifle now used in the German service.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe has sent a letter to the London Times in answer to Mrs. Humphry Ward's recent attack upon the woman suffrage cause in America. Mrs. Howe has lived in America for nearly ninety years and thinks that she knows conditions here better than a transient English tourist.

Sir Charles Harding, the permanent under-secretary of the British Foreign Office, accompanied King Edward on his recent journey and conferences with the Kaiser at Kronberg and Emperor Francis Joseph at Ischl. The same confidential service was performed by this official on the visits to the emperors a year ago.

Mrs. Edith Wharton, the novelist, outdistanced all her rivals for honors in growing flowers in old-fashioned gardens when, in the annual exhibition by the Lenox Horticultural Society, she was awarded the great bulk of prizes. Mrs. Wharton had been importuned to exhibit her flowers, and this year, before starting on a motor trip to Manchester-by-the-Sea and the Massachusetts coast resorts, she consented to allow her gardener to make an exhibit in her name.

General Daniel H. Rucker, U. S. A., retired, now ninety-six years old, is a reminder that the profession of arms is not always unfavorable to longevity. He was born before the war of 1812 began, and his name has been on the army list since October 31, 1837, when he accepted appointment as second lieutenant of dragoons. As our army dates from Washington's taking command in 1775, General Rucker is more than two-thirds as old as the service with which he has been so long connected.

David Lloyd-George, the British chancellor of the exchequer, has announced a visit to Berlin which is causing much speculation even in upper official circles, where the purpose of the British minister heretofore was believed to be only to study the German administration's old-age pension system. It is said that Mr. Lloyd-George will probably discuss the naval situation with the view of reaching an arrangement between the two countries in the future for a reduction in the outlay for armaments.

Mrs. William Jennings Bryan was the only child of John Baird, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, a man of fine literary tastes and devout religious temperament. On the maternal side Mrs. Bryan comes of English stock. Her mother's father was Colonel Darius Dexter of Jamestown, New York. Mother of three children and grandmother of two at the age of forty-seven, Mrs. Bryan is still the confidant and helper of her husband, though no longer the girlish figure that accompanied her husband everywhere on his whirlwind campaign of 1896.

Ainsworth Rand Spofford, for many years Librarian of Congress, died at his old home in Holderness, New Hampshire, a few days ago, aged eighty-three. Mr. Spofford's life in Washington dated from 1861, when he was appointed first assistant in the Library of Congress. His exceptional fitness for the work soon marked him for promotion, and in 1864 he was made librarian-in-chief, which position he held until 1897. When he took charge of the library it contained only 70,000 volumes. In thirty years it increased tenfold, and had far outgrown the space allotted to it in the capitol, which afforded shelf room for only 300,000 of the 725,000 books. The alcoves and floors were piled with volumes and documents, while the 250,000 pamphlets and other miscellaneous copyrighted matter found asylum in the crypt. Mr. Spofford's phenomenal memory enabled him to make available any desired book or pamphlet in the mass. He himself was for years the congressional library, at least to all intents and purposes, and the number of congressional and senatorial speeches he influenced would run into the thousands. When the new library was completed, Mr. Spofford's services were retained, despite a lack of business instinct which had occasioned some confusion in the records. Herbert Putnam succeeded him as acting librarian, but Mr. Spofford was his chief assistant to the end.

A SOCIETY NOVEL.

Mr. Herrick Handles Some of the Problems of the Day in Unconventional Terms.

Readers of Mr. Herrick's new novel, "Together," would do well to take preliminary stock of their reserves of optimism, because they will be taxed to the utmost. Also they may as well lay aside the conventions of propriety that usually dictate what may and may not be discussed in popular literature, for Mr. Herrick cares nothing for them. It may be said, moreover, that he leaves nothing to the imagination, that he is a stranger to the delicate art of suggestion, and that he paints his pictures by sheer strength rather than by art.

Indeed, Mr. Herrick's intention—perhaps he would call it a mission—overmasters his literary skill. His object is to show us a diseased social condition, and as he would be hampered by the rules of an exact literary stagecraft he discards them and adopts methods of his own. His characters are not grouped according to the accepted canons of the art. They are jerked on and off the stage in couples and the monotony is only relieved when marital infidelities necessitate a re-assortment of the pairs. And it need not be said that with some few exceptions his characters are not nice. In point of fact, the smell of them arises to heaven and it is hard to say whether the men or the women are the more dreary and repulsive. Men and women alike are void of religion, of ideals, of aspirations, of any sense of right or wrong, of any kind of mental or moral foundation upon which to build the details of daily life. The women, it is true, have yearnings and a hazy sense of unsatisfied æsthetic longings, but they deviate into illicit passion and they culminate in adultery. The men are mere machines of ossified and mercenary intellect to whom a poem or a picture would have as much meaning as to a stone tiger and whose whole philosophy of life is a divided allegiance to money and to women. The amount of soul in the whole cast is hardly worth dividing.

John Lane and Isabelle, his wife, are leading man and woman, this seeming a better term than hero and heroine. They are married in the first chapter, and indeed all the couples are married with the exception of a few single men introduced as material for the subsequent haissons. That the author is fairly free from conventional restraints may be judged from his sketch of the conclusion of Mr. and Mrs. Lane's first day of married life:

Alone with him thus beside their little fire her heart was full of dream and content, of peace and love. The two seemed to have come up out of the world to some higher level of life. After the joyous day this solitude of the deep forest was perfect. When the fire had died down to the embers, he circled her with his arms and kissed her. Although her body yielded to his strong embrace her lips were cold, hard, and her eyes answered his passion with a strange, aloof look, as if her soul waited in fear. She knew what marriage was to be, although she had never listened to the allusions whispered among married women and more experienced girls. Something in the sex side of the relations between men and women had always made her shrink. She was not so much pure in body and soul as without sex, unhorn. She knew the fact of nature, the eternal law of life repeating itself through desire and passion; but she realized it remotely, only in her mind, as some necessary physiological mechanism of living, like perspiration, fatigue, hunger. But it had not spoken in her body, in her soul; she did not feel that it ever could speak to her as it was speaking in the man's lighted eyes, in his lips. So now as always she was cold, tranquil beneath her lover's kisses.

And later on their bed of houghs, with her husband's arms about her, his heart throbbing against her breast, his warm breath covering her neck, she lay still, very still—aloof, fearful of this mystery to be revealed, a little weary, wishing that she were back once more in the car or in her own room at the farm, for this night, to return on the morrow to her comrade for another joyous, free day.

But there are other couples, several of them, and we turn with relief to Mr. and Mrs. Darnell. Not that they are at all nice people, but Darnell at least has ideas which naturally isolate him in such a company and perhaps conduce to his early suicide. Here is Darnell at a fashionable, and financial, dinner party "discovered" in the act of throwing conversational bombs:

Darnell threw up his head, his lips curving disdainfully. He had emptied his champagne glass frequently, and there was a reckless light in his dark eyes. Isabelle trembled for the next remark:

"You are wrong, sir, if you will allow me to say so. The legislation that we need is not against poor, feeble-minded rats like that murderer. We have prisons and asylums enough for them. What the country needs is legislation against its honored thieves, the real anarchists among us. We don't get 'em from Europe, senator; we breed 'em right here—in Wall Street."

If some one had discharged asafetida over the table, there could not have been a more unpleasant sensation.

"You don't mean quite that, Darnell," Lane began; but the Kentuckian brushed him to one side.

"Just that; and some day you will see what Americans will do with their anarchists. I tell you this land is full of discontent—men hating dishonesty, privilege, corruption, injustice; men ready to fight their oppressors for freedom!"

Then there is Roh Falkner and Bessie, his wife. We quite like Bessie for a time, until her social ideals become inflamed by her husband's success. Social ideals usually run faster than income, and Falkner, who would not be at all a had fellow if he had a conscience and some kind of property sense regarding other men's wives, finds it necessary to call a halt:

"As I have told you so often, Bessie, we are running behind all the time. It has got to a point where it must stop."

"What do you suggest?"
"You say that three servants are necessary?"
"You can see for yourself that they are busy all the time. There's work for four persons in this house, and there ought to be a governess besides. I don't at all like the influence of that school on Mildred—"

"Ought!" he exclaimed.
"If people live in a certain kind of house, in a certain neighborhood, they must live up to it—that is all. If you wish to live as the Johnstons live, why that is another matter altogether."

Her logic was imperturbable. There was an unexpressed axiom: "If you want a dowdy for your wife who can't dress or talk and whom nobody cares to know—why you should have married some one else." Bessie awaited his reply in unassailable attractiveness.

"Very well," Falkner said slowly. "That being so, I have made up my mind what to do."

"Well, what is it?" Bessie demanded in the other tone.
"I have a purchaser for the house at fair terms."

"Please remember that it is my house."
"Wait! Whatever remains after paying off the mortgage and our debts, not more than six thousand dollars, I suppose, will be placed to your credit in the trust company."

"Why should I pay all our debts?"
Her husband looked at her, and she continued hastily:

"What do you mean to do then? We can't live on the street."

"We can hire a smaller house somewhere else, or live in a flat."

Bessie waved her hand in despair; they had been over this so many times and she had proved so conclusively the impossibility of their squeezing into a flat. Men never stay convinced.

"Or board."
"Never!" she said firmly.
"You will have to choose."

So Bessie and Roh separate and the little woman goes home to her mother. Falkner reappears later as the suddenly discovered affiancee of a married woman, who seems really to suppose that she is fulfilling the highest duty of womanhood by her surrender. It is strange, by the way, how easily adultery takes place among the sublime obligations of life with these amazing women. They appear to regard it as the crown and the fruition of their lean and famished lives.

Of course there is the fashionable physician. These curious women go to Dr. Potts, whose intelligence is that of the pit. Here is a glimpse of Dr. Potts, and a little of Dr. Potts goes a long way:

The great Potts had the unfortunate habit of gossiping about his patients with one another. He had said to Conny: "Your friend Isabelle interests me. I should say that she had a ease of festering conscience." He crossed his legs and gazed wisely up at the ceiling. "A rudimentary organ left over from her hard-working ancestors. She is inhibited, tied, thinks she can't do this and that. What she needs"—Potts had found the answer to his riddle and brought his eyes from the ceiling—"is a lover! Can't you find her one?"

"Women usually prefer to select that for themselves."

"Oh, no—one is as good as another. What she needs is a counter-irritant. That husband of hers, what is he like?"

"Just husband, very successful, good-natured, gives her what she wants—I should say they pull well together."

"That's it! He's one of the smooth, get-everything-the-dear-woman-wants kind, eh? And then huses himself about his old railroad? Well, it is the worst sort for her. She needs a man who will heat her."

"Is that what the lover would do?"
"Bless you, no! He would make her stop thinking she had an ache." When Conny went, the doctor came to the door with her and as he held her hand cried breezily: "Remember what I said about your friend. Look up some nice young man, who will hang around and make her think she's got a soul." He pressed Conny's hand and smiled.

But there is another doctor, Renault by name, and of a different calihre to the unspeakable Potts. Renault casually mentions the soul to Isabelle, who naturally asks what he means. Really Renault ought to talk intelligently and with an eye to his audience. Here is some of the conversation:

"Will you tell me what you mean by the soul?"
"Can you answer the question? . . . Well, since we are both in doubt, let us drop the term for a while and get back to the body."

"Only we must not end with it, as Potts does!"

"No, we must not end with the body."

"First, what causes it—hysterics, nerves, no-goodness—the whole thing?"

"Improper food, bad education, steam heat, variable climate, inbreeding, lack of children—shall I stop?"

"No! I can't find a reasonable cause yet."

"I haven't really begun. . . . The brain is a delicate instrument. It can do a good deal of work in its own way, if you don't abuse it—"

"Overwork it?" suggested Isabelle.

"I never knew an American woman who overworked her brain," he retorted impatiently. "I mean abuse it. It's grossly abused."

"Wrong ideas?"
"No ideas at all, in the proper sense—it's stuffed with all sorts of things—sensations, emotions."

Perhaps we can stand a little more of Renault by way of anti-emetic. Renault is a good man and somewhat given to social diagnosis. He succeeds in attracting Isabelle after she has resisted the temptation to elope with a young unmarried man, not of course upon moral grounds, but because he happens to have shot her brother. Renault speaks to Isabelle of the discipline of life, and Isabelle naturally resents an expression that seems incompatible with wealth:

"The discipline of life" he had said. The phrase was hateful to her. It stirred within her all the antagonism of her generation to the creed of her people, to the Puritan ideal, cold, narrow, repressive. And yet Renault was far from being a Puritan. But he, too, believed in the "discipline of life." And again when she had confessed her ambitions for "a broad life," "for experience," he had said: "Egotism is the pestilence of our day—the sort of base intellectual egotism that seeks to taste for the sake of tasting. Egotism is rampant. And worst of all it has corrupted the women, in whom should lie nature's great conservative element. So our body social is rotten with intellectual egotism. Yes, I mean just what you have prided yourself on—culture, education, individuality, cleverness—'leading your own lives,' refinement, experience, development, call it what you will—it is the same, the inturning of the spirit to cherish self. Not one of all you women has a tenth of the experience my mother had, who, after bringing up her family of eight, at fifty-seven went to the town school to learn Latin, because before she had not had the time." . . . To some defense of her ideal by Isabelle, he retorted with fine scorn:

"Oh, I know the pretty impression our American women make in the eyes of visiting foreigners—so 'clever,' so 'fascinating,' so 'original,' so 'independent,' and such 'charm'! Those are the words, aren't they? While their dull husbands are 'money-getters.' They at least are doers, not talkers! . . ."

"Do you know what you are, women like you, who have money and freedom to 'live your own lives'? You are sexless; you haven't nature's great apology for the animal—desire. Such women sin, when they sin, with their minds. Great God! I had rather those broad-hipped Italian peasant women of Calabria, with solid red-brown flesh, bred hasters for the country than have these thin, anemic, nervous, sexless creatures, with their 'souls' and their 'charm,' marry and become mothers! What have you done to the race? The race of blond giants from the forests of the north! Watch the avenue in New York!"

Again—"So what have you made of marriage, 'leading your own lives'? You make marriage a sort of intelligent and intellectual prostitution—and you defend divorce. The best among you—those who will not marry unless man can arouse their 'best selves'—will not bear children even then. And you think you have the right to choose again when your so-called souls have played you false the first time. . . . And man, what of him? You leave him to his two gross temptations—power and lust. Man is given you to protect, and you drive him into the market-place, where he fights for your ease, and then relaxes in the refined sensualities you offer him as the reward of his toil. With the fall of man into the beast's trough must come the degradation of women. They can not travel apart; they must pull together. What have you done for your husband?" He turned sharply on Isabelle. "Where is he now? Where has he been all these years? What is he doing this hour? Have you nursed his spirit, sharpened his sword? . . . I am not speaking of the dumb ones far down in the mass, nor of the humdrum philistines that still make homes, have traces of the nest-instinct left; but of you, you—the developed intelligences who flatter yourselves that you lead because you are free to do as you like. By your minds you are betrayed!"

But let us stop here and ask ourselves the good of it all. Are these people really worth six hundred pages? Do they represent a nation or even an entire caste? Is there any tangible social division against which our aroused scorn can be directed? Do these characters represent any but themselves and is the mere fact of their wealth and its attendant and incidental power a sufficient differentiation between them and the more humble figures who crowd the divorce and the police courts? Mr. Herrick has written a powerful hook about sordid and shameful and degraded lives, but will his hook have any reforming value, can it have any of the literary vitality that comes only from the ideals that never know either youth or age? Will it stimulate to right action, induce wholesome thought, encourage clean living? These, after all, are the attributes of real literature. Perhaps it will do these things. Such at least was the unquestionable intention, an intention so strong as to hlink to the danger of an aroused class consciousness and of an evil disposition to thank God that we are not as other men.

