Mr. MORLEY moved the second reading of this Bill. He explained that as the law at present stood a very large number of unmarried women and widows held farms and were engaged in trade. While unmarried they might incur debt, and should they marry, their creditors had no power to recover the debt, either from themselves or the husbands whom they might marry. He knew of a case where an unmarried woman obtained a piano, which was to be paid for in eight quarterly instalments. After she had paid four she married, took the piano with her, and the creditor lost the remainder of the money which was his due. Great hardship was inflicted by this state of the law, and what his Bill aimed at was to provide a remedy. Unfortunately, the measure had been made retrospective in its operation; but this point could be amended in committee.——Mr. A. MARTEN moved that the Bill be read on that day six months. The hon. member contended that this Bill would induce a principle which was novel in reference to the relations between husband and wife; it would treat the wife as though she died when her marriage took place and the husband became her executor. He would be liable in certain cases to account for the wife's property which he received, and that at any future time, so that a woman who might be entitled to give £1000 to her godchild could not give a £10 note to her husband without his becoming liable to account for it. The onus also was thrown upon the husband of showing that he had not received property which was liable to the wife's debts, whereas the liability of proving any such receipt should surely rest upon the creditor. There was really no practical hardship in the existing law which called for any such alterations as were proposed in the present measure. In addition to the objections on principle to the substance of this Bill, there were also many objections upon matters of comparative detail, and what he would suggest was that, instead of adopting this Bill, the House should rather proceed by extending the provisions of the Act of 1870. The present Bill was also of a piecemeal description, whereas, if anything was required to be done, it should be by a complete legislative measure, which laid down clearly the principle upon which the courts should proceed.——Sir F. GOLDSMID agreed that the Act of 1870 should be dealt with by a comprehensive measure; and such a Bill was brought forward last session, and would have passed but for the new half-past twelve rule. This measure had not been brought forward this year; and therefore the only question now before them was, whether they should not by the present measure attempt to remedy certain proved instances of injustice.——Mr. S. HILL thought that husband and wife should never be treated in reference to property as entirely separate persons; but still there were certain things in the Act of 1870 which clearly required remedy. In the present Bill there were many points which needed amendment but still upon the whole he should support the second reading, it being a measure which would remedy many existing evils.——The ATTORNEY GENERAL could have wished that this had been a Bill more apt and proper to give effect to the object sought to be attained; but still it hit what was clearly a blot in the existing law. Before the Act of 1870 a man who married a woman who was possessed of property, and who also owed debts, acquired her property, and also became liable to pay her debts. The Act of 1870 made two alterations in that law, one protecting certain property of which a woman became possessed, and giving it to her as her separate property; and the other alteration was made by providing that the husband should not be liable for the wife's debts after he had married her. The consequence of this was, that the husband in many cases acquired all his wife's property, while her creditors got nothing, he not being liable for her debts. The object of the promoters of this Bill was to make the husband liable for the debts of his wife to the extent of the property that by reason of his marriage he had derived from his wife. No doubt some parts of the Bill would require amendment, one objection to the Bill being that it did not go far enough, but these things could be amended in committee, and therefore he should support the second reading of the Bill.——The ATTORNEY-GENERAL for IRELAND, in assenting to the second reading, did so only upon the assumption that certain defects in it would be amended in committee.——Mr. MELDON opposed the Bill, principally upon the ground of its being piecemeal Legislation. At present there were no means of making married women liable, but still there would in many cases be difficulty in enacting that property should be followed so as to make it meet the wife's debts under certain circumstances. It was also necessary that several other alterations should be made in the law as it now stood, but the matter had, in his opinion, better stand over until some more perfect measure could be brought in.——Mr. GREGORY agreed that in some instances there would be great difficulty in following settled property, but still, upon the whole, he should support the Bill, though no doubt it would, in some particulars, require alteration.——Mr. MORLEY, in reply, admitted that there were certain defects in the Bill which he should be glad to remedy; his only object being to enact the principle contained in it.

The Bill was then read a second time.

RETURNING OFFICERS' CHARGES.

Sir H. JAMES obtained leave to bring in a Bill to control the charges of returning officers at parliamentary elections.

The Bill was brought in and read a first time.

PART II.—Registration of Leasehold Estates and Estates in Dower and by the Curtesy.

43.—Leasehold estates may be registered in like manner as freehold lands; also estates in dower, after assignment and entry and by the curtesy.—Leasehold estates, that is to say, land demised for terms of years of which more than twenty-one years are, at the date of registration, still to come and unexpired, or demised for lives or for years determinable with lives, and in which two lives at least are still subsisting, and an estate in dower after assignment and actual entry, and an estate by the curtesy, may be registered in the name of a proprietor thereof, with a title absolute or limited, or as proprietor only, in a similar manner and subject to the same or similar directions and rules of proceeding, as herein provided, or as may be provided by general orders or rules, with respect to registration as to the fee simple.

44. Who to apply for registration.—The application for registration may, as regards leasehold land, be made by persons having such estates and interests therein as, having regard to the difference of tenure, are similar or correspondent to the estates and interests of the persons entitled to apply for a registration as to the fee simple, and, as regards an estate in dower, or by the curtesy, by the tenant in dower, or by the curtesy.

45. Registration not to extend to lessor's title unless investigated by registrar.—As regards leasehold estates, the registration shall not extend to the title of the lessor or grantor unless the registrar has investigated and is satisfied with the same, and makes an entry upon the register to that effect; in which case, the validity of the lease shall not afterwards be impeachable, as against the registered proprietor thereof, or any one claiming under or entitled to the protection of the registered title, on the ground of any want of power in the lessor or grantor to make the same.

46. Estate of the registered proprietor of leaseholds.—Leasehold land shall be vested in and held by the registered proprietor for the remainder of the term for which the land was demised, subject to all the clauses, covenants, conditions, and agreements, as to rent and otherwise, contained in the lease under which the same is held.

49. Leaseholds and estates in dower and by the curtesy to be subject to prior estates.—In the case as well of leaseholds, as of an estate in dower, and by the curtesy, the lease and land and estate shall be subject to all prior estates, rights, interests, underleases, charges, and incumbrances mentioned on the register, and to all other rights and charges affecting the same, which, if the land had been held in fee simple and registered accordingly, would have been expressly preserved by this Act or declared by this Act not to be incumbrances.

50. Provisions as to trusts, &c., to be applicable.—The provisions of this Act as to trusts, and the powers of disposal of the registered proprietor, and legal and equitable estates, and other the provisions of this Act which can be applied to leaseholds and an estate in dower and by the curtesy respectively, shall extend and apply to leasehold estates, and an estate in dower, and by the curtesy, as nearly as the difference between registration of a proprietor in fee and of a proprietor for a term of years or for life will admit of; but the registrar may dispense with such, if any, of the proceedings as he shall think may properly be dispensed with, having regard to any previous proceedings in respect of the same land, and may cause such notices to be given to all or any persons or person entitled to the land or rent, subject to the term of years or estate for life as he may consider proper.

51. How the provision as to compulsory registration is to apply as to leaseholds.—As regards the provision hereinbefore mentioned for compulsory registration of sales after three years from the commencement of this Act, the following rules shall be applicable to leaseholds: a lease or underlease granted out of the fee simple or out of a leasehold estate by an unregistered proprietor, with or without a rent reserved, and with or without a premium, shall not be deemed a sale; but any lease or underlease granted out of the fee simple or out of a leasehold estate by a registered proprietor, with or without a rent reserved, and with or without a premium, shall be deemed a sale; and an assignment upon a sale of any existing lease or underlease, whether granted by an unregistered or a registered proprietor, shall be deemed a sale.

52. Determination of leasehold estates to be entered on the register.—When any lease of which there shall be a registered proprietor shall have been determined by the re-entry of the lessor, or by the surrender of the lessee, or otherwise, the registrar, upon the same being proved to his satisfaction, and after notice given in the manner prescribed by this Act to the person appearing upon the register as proprietor of such lease, unless the registrar shall consider such notice unnecessary, shall enter upon the register where the proprietor of such lease is entered a note of the determination of such lease.

PART. III.—Land Certificate, Securities by Mortgage, by deposit of Land Certificate, and by Charge under this Act.

53. Land certificate.—On the application of the registered proprietor for the time being of land, or a lease, the registrar shall deliver to him a certificate, in this Act called "a land certificate," in the prescribed form, and authenticated in the prescribed manner.

Every land certificate shall be primâ facie evidence of the several matters therein contained.

54. Receipts for certificates.—Before the delivery of any land certificate, a receipt for the same in the handwriting of the proprietor may be required to be signed by him, so as to prevent, as far as may be, personation.

55. Minority to be noted.—If a land certificate is delivered to a person known to the registrar to be a minor, or under any other disability, the registrar shall state on the certificate such disability.

56. Note of delivery of certificate to be entered on register.—Upon the delivery of such certificate the registrar shall enter on the register a note of the delivery thereof.

57. Registrar, at the request of holder, to compare certificate with register.—At the request of the holder of the certificate, the registrar shall at any time compare the certificate with the register, and, if there has been no alteration, shall certify at the foot of such certificate that is contains a true copy of the entries in the register, and shall sign the same, and add the date of such signature. Any alteration or omission which can be conveniently made in a land certificate, or any addition thereto, so as to make the same correspond with any alteration in or addition to the register, may be made and signed by the registrar, if he shall think fit.

58. Loss of land certificate.—If any land certificate is lost or destroyed the registrar may, upon being satisfied of the fact of such loss or destruction, grant a new land certificate in the place of the former one, such new certificate mentioning that is is so granted.

59. Renewal of land certificate.—The registrar may, upon the delivery up to him of any land certificate grant a new certificate in the place of that delivered up.

60. Transferees who are mortgagees to be registered without mentioning their being mortgagees.—When land or a lease of which respectively there shall be a registered proprietor, shall be transferred to a person as mortgagee or as a security, the transferee shall be registered as proprietor without mentioning on the register that the transaction is a mortgage or secutity, and such proprietor and the person becoming proprietor from, through, or under him, shall, as between himself and third persons, be deemed registered proprieter, with all the rights and powers of such proprietor; but as between himself and the mortgagor and persons deriving equitable estates or interests through or under him, such proprietor, and every person becoming proprietor from, through, under him, otherwise than as purchaser in fee simple for valuable consideration, shall be subject to account and redemption as a mortgagee or person having security would, independently of this Act, be liable to account or to be redeemed.

61. Charge by deposit of land certificate.—The deposit by the registered proprietor of the land certificate, with a memorandum endorsed thereon at the time of such deposit, stating the date of the deposit and for what purpose the deposit is made, being stamped as a mortgage, shall, for the purpose of creating a lien on the land or leasehold estate described therein, be equivalent to a charge made under a power for that purpose hereinafter created, and shall take precedence of all statutory charges not previously noted on the certificate. And no charge or lien on any registered land or lease shall be created by any other deposit whatever, and no lien for unpaid purchase-money, in respect whereof a charge under this Act shall not have been given, shall exist on such land in favour of any vendor or transferor of any land or lease or statutory charge.

62. Creation of charges.—The registered proprietor of any land or lease may charge the same with the payment of any principal sum or sums of money (either ascertained or to be ascertained), either with or without interest, or with the balance which may be owing on a current or other account, or with any annual sum, and the registered proprietor for the time being of a charge shall, for all purposes of a title being made to the charge or to the land, lease, or charge affected thereby upon any transfer or of dealing therewith, have absolute power to dispose of or release, or otherwise act in reference to such charge, and to give receipts for the consideration (if any), and no transferee or other person deriving title to any such charge for valuable consideration, shall be bound or affected by any express or constructive notice of any trust, equity of redemption or equitable estate or interest, or any lis pendens relating thereto. The instrument of charge may or may not confer a power of sale, to be exercised after a time or in an event to be stated in the instrument.

63. Registration of charges and delivery of certificate thereof.—The registrar shall, upon the application of the person in whose favour the charge is made as the proprietor of such charge, or his legal personal representative, register such person or representative in like manner as entries in the register are to be made in other cases, and shall also enter on the register the particulars of the charge, and make a note of such charge on the register of the land or lease. The registrar shall, if required, deliver to the proprietor of the charge or his representative, a certificate of charge containing the particulars of the entry made on the registrar, and such certificate shall be prima facie evidence of the entry made on the register in respect of the matters mentioned in such certificate.

64. Implied covenant to pay amount charged.—Where a registered charge is created on any land or lease there shall be an implied (unless the instrument of charge contains words negativing such implication) a covenant on the part of the registered proprietor for the time being of such land or lease, with the proprietor of the charge to pay the money or balance or annual sum charged, and the interest, if any, payable thereon, at the appointed time and rate, or to pay the annual sum at the times and in the manner agreed upon.

65. Proprietor of charge may take possession.—The registered proprietor of a charge for the payment of any money or balance, or annual sum, may, for the purpose of obtaining satisfaction of any money due to him, at any time during the continuance of his charge, enter upon or into the receipts of the rents and profits of the land or lease, or of any part thereof, subject nevertheless to the rights of any persons appearing on the register to be prior incumbrancers, and to such, if any prior charge, as may exist by reason of a deposit of the land certificate, and to such liability to account as is enforced in courts of equity against an incumbrancer in possession.

66. Proprietor of charge with power of sale may sell.—The registered proprietor of a charge for the payment of any money or balance, or annual sum, with or without interest, may, if he shall have a power of sale, exercise such power, and may transfer the land or lease, and give an effectual discharge for the purchase money, as if he were the registered proprietor of the land or lease sold, the sale and transfer to the purchaser being as complete and effectual as if the power was duly exercised, and as if the sale and transfer were made by the registered proprietor, neither the purchaser nor the registrar being concerned to inquire whether the time or event stated in the instrument shall have arrived or happened, or to regard or be affected by notice or knowledge to the contrary. But if the sale shall be subject to any prior incumbrances, the registration of the purchaser as proprietor shall be, and shall be shown on the register to be subject thereto, and liable to be overreached by any sale made in respect thereof, so long as they shall be existing incumbrances.

67. Remedy for principal sum if no such power.—The registered proprietor of a charge for the payment of any money or balance, if he shall not have a power of sale, shall have the same remedies for the recovery, by means of a sale by a court of competent jurisdiction, of any moneys due to him, as he would have in cases not within this Act, for obtaining payment of such money or balance.

68. Remedy for proprietor not having power of sale.—The registered proprietor of a charge for the payment of an annual sum, if he shall not have a power of sale, shall have the same remedies for the recovery of any moneys due to him as he would have in cases not within this Act for obtaining payment of such moneys.

69. On sale prior incumbrances to be paid off.—Upon any sale by a registered proprietor of a charge under a power of sale, or upon any sale by the court, prior incumbrancers shall be obliged to accept payment by the vendor, or out of the purchase moneys, of the moneys secured to them, but only on having such notices (if any) as mortgagees are entitled to.

70. Production of land certificate on registration of charges.—In case there shall have been given by the registrar a land certificate of the land or lease to be charged, no person shall be registered as proprietor of a charge under this Act without production of such certificate to the registrar, unless such reason be assigned for its non-production as may be approved by the registrar; and it shall be the duty of the registrar to note upon the certificate, when produced, notice of any such charge.

71. Priority of registered charges.—Registered charges on the same land or lease shall, as between themselves, rank according to the order in which they are entered on the register, and not according to the order in which they are created, and they shall be so entered in the order in which application for registry shall be made.

72. Discharge.—The registrar shall, on the requisition of the proprietor of any charge, or on due proof of the satisfaction thereof, enter a note of discharge thereof on the register; and, upon such entry being made, the land or lease shall be deemed to be discharged therefrom.

PART IV.—Transfer, Devolution, and Transmission of Lands, Leases, and Charges.

73. Registration of transfer of land.—Upon any registered proprietor of any land, lease, or charge transferring the same, or part thereof (this clause not, however, applying to a disposition by will), and upon any sale by a registered proprietor of a charge under the powers herein in that behalf contained, the registrar shall, upon application made to him, enter as registered proprietor of such land or lease, or the part thereof transferred, the person or persons whom the registrar would, under the provision in that behalf hereinbefore contained, so enter, were the case one of compulsory registration upon sale as aforesaid, and as registered proprietor of such charge, or part thereof, the transferee thereof (such entries respectively being similar as near as may be to the original entries), and until such entry is made the transferor shall be deemed to remain proprietor thereof respectively. If any transfer of land be made subject to any power of re-entry, shifting clause, restriction or condition, notice thereof shall be entered on the register. Before completion of the registry the transferor shall deliver up to the registrar the land certificate or certificate of charge (if any) which shall have been given by the registrar, unless some reason for its non-production satisfactory to the registrar be given.

74. Marriage of female registered proprietor.—The registrar, upon the production of a certificate of register or other sufficient proof of the marriage of a female registered proprietor of any land, or of any female who, if unmarried would be entitled to be entered on the register as registered proprietor of any land, and upon its being proved to his satisfaction that such land has not been settled or agreed to be settled to her separate use, shall enter on the register and also upon the land certificate (if any) of such female, the name and description of her husband; or if such female shall not have been entered on the register, the names and descriptions of such husband and his wife, and the husband of such female shall thereupon be legal proprietor in right of his wife of such land; and on the death of the husband or wife the registry shall be altered, and such entry or entries made thereon as may be proper in reference to the husband being or not being tenant by the curtesy. The husband of any female proprietor of a lease or charge not settled or agreed to be settled to her separate use, shall upon his application be registered in her place.

75. Registration of married women entitled to their separate use.—The registrar, upon the production of a certificate of register or other sufficient proof of the marriage of a female registered proprietor of any land, lease, or charge, and upon its being proved to him that such land, lease, or charge is settled, or agreed to be settled, to her separate use, and in any case, of any land, lease or charge so settled, or agreed to be settled, becoming vested and registered in the name of a married woman, shall enter on the register and also upon the land certificate (if any) that such land, lease, or charge is so settled, with or without power of anticipation, as the case may be, and thereupon she, if not restrained from anticipation, may dispose thereof as a feme sole.

76. Transfers by husband to wife.—The registered proprietor of any land, lease, or charge may transfer the same to his wife for her separate use, in which case such transfer shall be registered accordingly, it being stated therein and in the land certificate (if any) whether or not she is restrained from anticipation, and if not so restrained she may dispose of the same as a feme sole, or it shall be lawful for any such registered proprietor to make such transfer to himself jointly with his wife.

77. Entries on register of claims to dower and curtesy and of dower assigned and curtesy.—Upon application by a person claiming to be entitled to dower or to curtesy, such application being supported by an affidavit as hereafter provided as to caveats, the registrar shall enter on the register of the fee simple a note of such claim, which entry shall be treated and considered as a caveat entered under Part V. of this Act, and upon the registrar being satisfied that such person is entitled to dower after assignment and entry or to curtesy, he shall enter her or him on the register as proprietor for her or his life in the manner prescribed in that behalf in Part II. of this Act.

78. On death of a proprietor a real representative to be registered as proprietor.—On the death of a sole registered proprietor, or the survivor of several registered proprietors in fee simple of any land, such person or persons as such proprietor or surviving proprietor shall by will have expressly appointed as his real representative or representatives of such land shall, upon the application of any person interested beneficially or otherwise, be entered on the register as registered proprietor or proprietors, and in case such proprietor or surviving proprietor shall not by will have expressly named a real representative or representatives. The court shall, upon the application of any person interested beneficially or otherwise, appoint a real representative or representatives, who shall be entered on the register as registered proprietor or proprietors, and the person or persons entered on the register in pursuance of either of these provisions shall be deemed to be, and have all the powers of disposal and other powers of a registered proprietor or proprietors under this Act; but as between himself or themselves, and the person or persons, if any, beneficially interested, subject in equity to the rights and interests of such person or persons. The proprietor or surviving proprietor, or the court may appoint different real representatives for different properties.

79. As to entries on sales by executors or administrators having statutory or other power of sale.—If, after the death of a registered proprietor and before or after any person shall have been registered as proprietor in his place, a sale of the registered land, or of any part thereof, shall have been made under a power of sale expressly or impliedly given by the will of the proprietor, or under a statutory power of sale, the registrar shall, but in the case of a person having been registered as proprietor, not unless the court shall have so directed, enter the purchaser, or such person or persons as he shall direct, upon the register as proprietor or proprietors of the land which shall have been so sold.

80. Registrar may on the death of proprietor or a sale after the death of a proprietor require application to be made, or may himself apply to the court.—The registrar may, upon or after the death of a registered proprietor require that application be made to the court for its direction as to the person or persons to be entered as the proprietor or proprietors, or as to whether the registrar shall make an entry upon the register under the provision in that behalf as to entering upon the register a purchaser under a power of sale, or a person whom such purchaser shall, in that behalf, direct, and may postpone entering any person or persons as proprietor or proprietors pending such application, and the registrar may, if and when he shall think fit, himself apply to the court for its direction.

81. On death of proprietor the court may order registration of purchaser, &c., on sale.—If, after the death of any registered proprietor and before any person has been registered as proprietor in his place, a sale of the registered land, or of any part thereof, shall be made under the order of a court of competent jurisdiction, or specific performance of any contract for the sale thereof, or of any part thereof, shall be directed, the court making such order or so directing, may order the land so sold to be registered in the name of the purchaser as proprietor thereof, or in such other name or names as the court may order in that behalf, and the person or persons so registered shall hold such land free from all rights, titles, estates, and interests whatsoever from which he or they would have been entitled to hold the same free, if the same land had been duly transferred to him or them for valuable consideration by the deceased proprietor.

82. As to the devolution of the legal estate in the interval between death of proprietor and new registration.—In the interval between death of a registered proprietor, and the entry on the register of another proprietor or proprietors, the land shall be legally vested in the person or persons in whom the same shall become and be from time to time vested by descent or devise from or under the deceased proprietor, or by title derived through or under such descent or devise, the deceased proprietor being for the purposes of this provision, considered to have had an estate descendible and devisable in all respects as that of an unregistered proprietor of land, such person or persons as shall for the time being under this provision have the legal estate in such land, holding such land for the estate and interest vested in him, subject to all trusts and equities for the time being existing in or affecting the land.

83. Transmission of lease or charge on death.—On the death of the sole registered proprietor, or of the survivor of several registered proprietors of any lease or charge, the executor or administrator, or executors or administrators of such sole deceased proprietor, or of the survivor of such proprietors, shall be entered on the register as and shall be deemed to be and have all the powers of registered proprietor or proprietors; and if such executor or administrator, or the surviving executor or administrator shall die while registered proprietor, and there shall not have been entered on the register a statement that the executor or administrator, or the executors or administrators, or the survivors or survivor of them, is or are no longer proprietor or proprietors, in his or their character or characters of executor or administrator, or executors or administrators, which entry shall be made on written request of the executor or administrator, or executors or administrators, for the time being the legal personal representative of the said sole registered proprietor or surviving registered proprietor shall be so entered on the register, and shall have the like powers.

84. Transmission of land or charge on bankruptcy.—Upon the bankruptcy of any registered proprietor of any land, lease, or charge, his trustee in bankruptcy shall be entitled to be registered in his place, but the court may order some other person to be registered in the place of such bankrupt, or of the trustee if he shall have been entered on the register. The registrar shall enter upon the register such person (if any) as under the circumstances may be proper, and shall give effect to any order of the court, and such person shall have all the estate, powers, and remedies of the bankrupt proprietor. Until such entry the bankrupt's power of disposal shall be in no way affected.

85. Transmission on sales by sheriff, or court, or by person having a charge.—Whenever any registered land, lease, or charge shall be sold by any sheriff or other officer having authority to sell the same under any writ, or shall be sold under any direction, decree, or order of any competent court, or by the registered owner of any charge with power of sale, any person interested may apply to the court in a summary way for an order to the registrar to register the purchaser under such sale as the proprietor of such land, lease, or charge; and the court, if satisfied that such order ought to be made, may so direct, and the registrar shall make such registration accordingly; and any such purchaser may be registered without such order, if the registrar shall be satisfied that the registration is proper under the circumstances.

86. Transmission by order of court.—Whenever the registered proprietor or one of several registered proprietors of any land, lease, or charge shall, in the opinion of a court of competent jurisdiction, be alone or with another person or persons a trustee thereof, and such court shall make any order that some person or persons named in such order be entered on the register as registered proprietor or proprietors thereof, the registrar, on being served with an office copy of such order, shall enter such person or persons as registered proprietor or proprietors.

PART V.—Caveats after Registration and Inhibitions.

87. Caveat how to be lodged.—Any person interested or claiming to be interested as an execution creditor, or otherwise howsoever, in any land, lease, or charge registered in the name of any other person, may lodge a caveat with the registrar against any dealing with such land, lease, or charge by the registered proprietor until notice shall have been served upon the cautioner. The caveat shall be supported by an affidavit made by the cautioner or his solicitor or agent in the prescribed form, and containing the prescribed particulars.

88. Effect of caveat.—After any such caveat has been lodged in respect of any land, rent, lease, or charge, the registrar shall not register any dealing with such land, lease, or charge until there has been served on the cautioner notice warning him that his caveat will cease to have any effect after the expiration of twenty-one days, or such other number of days as may by general order be prescribed in that behalf next ensuing the date at which such notice is served; and after the expiration of such period the caveat shall cease unless an order to the contrary is made by the court; and upon the caveat so ceasing the land, lease, or charge may be dealt with in the same manner as if no caveat had been lodged.

89. Transfer to be further delayed on bond being given.—If before the expiration of such period, the cautioner, or some other person on his behalf, appears before the registrar, and enters into a bond, with some person approved of by the registrar, with sufficient security, conditioned to indemnify every party interested against any damage that may be sustained by reason of any dealing with the land, lease, or charge being delayed, the court may thereupon, if it thinks fit so to do, make an order on the registrar requiring him to delay registering any dealing with the property for such further period as may be mentioned in the order, or make such other order as the circumstances of the case may require.

90. Compensation for improper lodging of caveat.—If any person lodges a caveat with the registrar without reasonable cause, he shall be liable to pay such costs, and to make to any person who may have sustained damage by the lodging of such caveat, such compensation as the court shall order him to pay.

91. Power of court to inhibit transfers.—The court may at any time, upon the application of any person interested, made in such manner as court directs, issue an order inhibiting for a time, or until the occurrence of an event to be specified in such order, or generally until further order, any dealing by the registered proprietor with any registered land, lease, or charge.

92. How court to act on application for inhibition.—Previously to making any such inhibitory order as aforesaid, the court may make such inquiries as to the circumstances of the land, lease, or charge in respect of which the same is made, and the parties interested therein, and may cause such notice to be given, as it thinks necessary, to enable it to form a judgment as to the expediency of making such order, and shall hear any persons claiming to be interested in such land, lease, or charge, who may apply to be heard.

93. Court may annex conditions to order.—The court may make or refuse any such order, and may annex thereto any terms or conditions which it may think fit, and may discharge such order when granted, with or without costs, and generally may act in the premises in such manner as it may consider the justice of the case requires; and the registrar, without being made a party to the proceedings, upon being served with such order or an official copy thereof, shall obey the same.

PART VI.—As to Notices.

94. Address to be furnished by persons on register.—Every person whose name is entered on the register of title as proprietor of any land, lease, or charge, or as cautioner, or as entitled to receive any notice, or in any other character, shall furnish to the registrar a place of address in the United Kingdom; and any such person may, by notice to the registrar, furnish a new place of address.

95. Mode of giving notice.—Every notice by this Act required to be given to any person shall be served personally, or sent through the post in a registered letter, marked outside "Land Registry Office," and directed to such person at the address furnished to the registrar, and every such notice so sent through the post, unless returned, shall be deemed to have been received by the person addressed when it would be delivered to him in the ordinary course of post, or within such period as may be prescribed by general order.

96. Notices to be returned by post office.—Her Majesty's Postmaster General shall give directions for the immediate return to the registrar of all letters marked as aforesaid, and addressed to any person who cannot be found, and on the return of any letter containing any notice, the registrar shall give such (if any) directions as he may think requisite or proper under the circumstances.

PART VII.—The Register, the Entries thereon, and Priorities, and Appeals from the Registrar.

97. Priorities of transferees.—As between two or more transfers by a registered proprietor of any land, lease, or charge, the first applicant for registration shall be preferred and entered on the register as registered proprietor.

98. If any general orders or any rules be made as to applications, &c., and are not complied with, application, &c., need not be granted by registrar.—If there shall be made any general orders, or any rules regulating the mode of applying for registration and transfer, such orders and rules shall be complied with; and the registrar may refuse to act unless and until they shall have been complied with, and he may, as between two or more applicants for original or subsequent registration, disregard the applications of those who shall not have so complied.

99. Registered leases to be noted on record of fee simple title.—When any rent or leasehold estate is registered, and the title in fee simple to the land is also registered (whether the first registration be of the rent or leasehold title, or of the title in fee simple), the registrar may cause a note of the registration of the rent or leasehold title to be entered in the register of the title in fee simple to the land.

100. Mode of entry on public or other register.—Subject to such general orders as shall be made on that behalf, the mode of making entries on the land register as regards land, leases, and charges, and all other entries thereon, and the manner of describing the parcels in the register by reference to a public or other map, or otherwise, shall be such as the registrar shall consider best adapted to the original and subsequent registering of the title, and the describing the land, lease, or charge, and the entries being conveniently arranged, and the referring to and keeping of the register. And the registrar shall make from time to time such transfers in the land register of a part or parts, or the whole, of the land to a new heading or headings, or otherwise, and such consolidation or subdivision of entries as he shall consider to be required or convenient; and in case of and upon any such transfer, the title of the registered proprietor for the time being of the part transferred shall for all purposes be considered as commencing with the register as shown by the entry of such transfer, subject only to such, if any, reference to the earlier registration as the registrar may consider necessary to make the entry of the transfer.

101. Annexation of franchises to registered land.—Where there is annexed to the ownership of any land proposed for registration any right or franchise to be exercised over some other land, or in some other place, or with respect to some other matter, the registrar may, upon request and upon proof made to his satisfaction of the existence of such right or franchise, enter notice of the same in the register in such manner as he thinks fit.

102. Entry may be made to restrict register and control alienation.—Where the registered proprietor of land, lease, or other charge is desirous for his own sake or at the request of some person beneficially interested in such land, lease, or charge, to place restrictions on his power of transferring, demising, or charging such land, lease, or charge, such proprietor may, upon application to the registrar, direct that no transfer or lease shall be made of or charge created on such land, lease or charge, unless the following things, or such of them, or as he may prescribe, are done; (that is to say):

Unless notice of any application for a transfer or creation of a charge is transmitted by post to such address as he may specify to the registrar:

Unless the consent of some person or persons to be named by such proprietor is given to the transfer or creation of a lease or charge:

Unless some such other matter or thing is done as may be required by the applicant and approved by the registrar.

103. Registrar to note such restrictions.—The registrar shall thereupon make a note of such directions on the register of title of such proprietor or otherwise as he shall think fit, and no transfer shall be made or charge created except in conformity with such directions; and any such directions may at any time be withdrawn or modified at the instance of all the persons for the time being appearing to the registrar to be interested in such directions, and shall also be subject to be set aside or varied by the court.

104. Co-proprietors may sever their equitable estates and call for transfers.—When more than one person is entered on the register as proprietors they shall be co-proprietors. Their equitable interests, if any, may be severed. An equitable owner of an undivided share or shares shall be entitled to call for a transfer to him, or as he may direct, of his share or shares, and upon such transfer there shall be a separate registration thereof.

105. Co-proprietors may have entry made on register restrictive of alienation.—Upon the occasion of the registry of two or more persons as joint proprietors of any land, lease, or charge, an entry may with their consent be made on the register to the effect that when the number of such proprietors is reduced below a certain specified number no registered disposition of such land, lease, or charge shall be made, except by the order of the court.

106. Court may direct transfer on the register.—The court, upon the application of any registered proprietor for the time being, or of any person being, or claiming to be, beneficially interested in any land, lease, or charge, or of the registrar, and that, notwithstanding any previous order, may order any new proprietor or proprietors, solely or jointly with or in the place of any existing proprietor or proprietors, or any one or more of the proprietors, or any person or persons to be entered on the register as proprietor or proprietors, and the proper entry on the register to give effect to such order shall thereupon be made, or the court may make such order in the premises as it thinks just.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

We have received a short report of a meeting of junior members of both branches of the legal profession, which took place at the rooms of the Union Society of London, on Tuesday last. We regret that want of space prevents our publishing this report, but in another column we have furnished our readers with the nature of the subject discussed at the meeting of the Union Society, and the decision arrived at, namely, that greater facilities should be afforded members of the Profession for passing from one branch to the other. As is well known, a barrister-at-law is required (with some exceptions) to be disbarred and then to serve in the office of an attorney at law for three years as an articled clerk before he can be admitted on the roll of attorneys; this is so provided by sect. 3 of 23 & 24 Viet. c. 127, commonly known as the Attorneys' Act 1860. That a member of the higher branch of the legal profession should be called upon to subject himself to such conditions is simply unreasonable, and that such a provision remains on the statute book is only to be accounted for by the fact that the cases are very few and far between in which a barrister is found desirous of becoming a solicitor. It is worthy of observation that a clerk who has been in an attorney's office for ten years is placed, as regards the period of articles, on the same footing with a barrister. This is so provided by sect. 4 of the same Act. Sect. 16 of this Act provides that where, by custom or statutory provision, the qualification of a solicitor for any office is his having been a solicitor for so many years, then that a barrister-at-law having been such for an equal length of time, shall be considered as qualified equally with such a solicitor. If this is not a complete contradiction to the spirit of sect. 3, it is very nearly so, and indeed, to read these sections, three and sixteen, side by side, is to find that the spirit of the one cannot be reconciled to the spirit of the other. We must confess it seems to us that to require a barrister to enter into articles of clerkship before he can become a solicitor is a degrading ceremony, and such a position cannot be defended for a moment, for, supposing after passing an examination he was admitted on the roll of attorneys, he is at once liable in an action of negligence, at the suit of any aggrieved client. This is the protection afforded to the public against incompetent persons, and they ought to have the same protection as regards the Bar. A liberal profession existing for the public must advance with the times, and will advance. The doors by which the public can gain admission to it must be thrown open, and the criterion by which to judge of a man's fitness for membership of such a profession must be a high standard of general education and legal knowledge. We hope that the consideration of these questions by the Union Society will lead to their being debated elsewhere.

On the 25th inst. a special number of the LAW TIMES will be forwarded to every solicitor in the Profession who is not at present a subscriber to the journal. The Editor of this department hopes that his professional brethren will not lose this unusual opportunity of ventilating new ideas and giving a fresh impetus to those not new which is thus offered.

Several subscribers have called our attention to the fact, not however by any means lost sight of by us, that the Land Transfer and Title Bill now before Parliament, provides for the appointment of barristers to the several offices that will be created by this measure, such as registrars, assistant registrars, and examiners of title. That these posts should be reserved exclusively for members of the higher branch seems most unjust. Here we have a measure which will surely sooner or later operate to curtail the accustomed profits of this branch of the Profession, and yet we are to fill none of the offices which are created for the purposes of such curtailments. We hope not only the Council of the Incorporated Law Society will make to the Lord Chancellor the necessary representations on this point, but, also and we may say more especially, that the thirteen or fourteen solicitors in the House of Commons will not so far forget the duty which each owes to his profession as to allow the sections in question to pass unchallenged. It is a question upon which the House ought certainly to be divided, no matter with what result. Solicitors have a right to know what view the Bar, as represented in the House of Commons, takes of the matter. We publish one of several letters received upon the subject.

A country solicitor writes to us that he has not seen any announcement of the appointment of a chief clerk at the Mansion House, and that he has been informed that the Court of Aldermen were surprised and disappointed at there being only three applicants. The reason is obvious, he adds; first-class men will not entertain the illiberal terms which are offered. We are not aware that up to the time of going to press any appointment has been made to this vacant office. The office, however, is not one for which very many candidates are likely to present themselves.

The registrar of a country County Court near London writes to us as follows: "I shall join the Legal Practitioners' Society, in the hope that it may be able to deal with the encroachments on the Profession. I send a set of papers issued by one of our many sets of invaders, and I may say that both in practice and as registrar of the County Court here I see abundant scope for the operation of the society, the establishment of which you very properly seem to have favoured." We are sorry we cannot publish the whole of the documents sent, some of which are similar to those which we have over and over again reproduced. All those before us emanate from "The United Kingdom Mercantile Offices," Holborn, and they threaten executions and imprisonment to an alarming extent. These documents are signed So and So and Co., "accountants."

We understand, and are glad to hear it, that, following the practice adopted at the common law judges' chambers, many of the chief clerks in Chancery are now in the habit of referring to the subordinates in their chambers much of the routine work which the chief formerly disposed of. This step is of great consequence to suitors and the Profession, as it tends to the despatch of business. The subordinates being incompetently dealt with, as they are, in many cases, solicitors, and all possessed of long and thoroughly practical experience. We hope this practice will be universally adopted by the chief clerks in Chancery, who are always most ready to facilitate the despatch of all business that comes before them.

We publish elsewhere a letter from an articled clerk upon the subject of the inducements offered by the Council of the Incorporated Law Society to students to seek, by unusual study and exertion, to obtain distinction at the Final Examination. Although we do not indorse all the views propounded by our correspondent, we are decidedly of opinion that the prizes at the Final Examination ought to be of greater value, and take a different form; in fact the system adopted by the Council of Legal Education, as applied to Bar students, ought to be followed in a more modified form, and the inducements of reward and distinction should also be held out to students who present themselves for preliminary and intermediate examinations. We feel confident that the adoption of such a plan would be productive of much good.

We publish in another column a letter from a "Managing Clerk" upon the subject of the measure now before Parliament, having for its object to amend 17 & 18 Viet. c. 36, and we hope the importance of the subject to which our correspondent directs attention will be brought to the notice of those members of the House of Commons having charge of the Bill in question. We also publish a short letter from "A Solicitor" in reference to this measure, and we are quite sure that if the several suggestions contained in this correspondence are brought prominently before the House of Commons, and are supported there by those members who belong to the Profession, they will certainly be adopted for the better protection of the public against the dishonesty of unscrupulous persons. We understand that the sections as to bills of sale included in the Legal Practitioners' Bill have been brought prominently under the notice of Mr. C. E. Lewis, M.P., who has charge of the Bills of Sale Bill.

In a case of Re Sykes, ex parte Gosnold, heard before the Judge of the Wandsworth County Court on the 31st ult., his Honour, in delivering judgment, observed as follows in reference to a proof in bankruptcy: "The proof is filled up very ignorantly and inaccurately, and ought to have been rejected by the chairman." For this and other reasons, "I think," said the Judge, "that the execution creditor ought to have an opportunity afforded him of amending his proof." We quite agree, and his Honour's decision points to the necessity of checking the encroachments of accountants in reference to bankruptcy business. It is well known that large numbers of proofs in bankruptcy are prepared by accountants and agents, and that they are frequently most inaccurate in their form. The Profession will hail with satisfaction a systematic rejection of all inaccurate proofs by County Court Judges and their registrars, as well as by the chairmen of meetings at which such proofs are presented. As to such chairmen, however, the misfortune is that they are not, as a rule, competent to judge as to whether a proof should be rejected or not; and we are by no means sure that it would not have been a wise provision in the last Bankruptcy Act that the chairmen of such meetings as those in question should be required to submit each proof to a solicitor before receiving the same. It is at all events a matter of notoriety that a very large number of bankruptcy proofs are prepared very inaccurately, and it would be well, therefore, in the interests of the public, not to say the bankrupt's estate, that the preparation of such documents should be secured to properly qualified practitioners.

Referring to the third report of the Judicature Commission, which has just been presented and published, the following portions are of especial interest to solicitors. The paragraph which recommends that the judges should have power to call in assessors in commercial cases, the remuneration to be received by whom to be regarded as costs in the cause. This latter provision we regard with some concern. It is making this and that expense costs in the cause which is continually increasing the amount of our bills, without really any advantage to solicitors themselves. The Profession will consider Mr. Ayrton's objection that a more summary mode of procedure is necessary, which he thinks is to be found in the establishment of tribunals of commerce, as to which he observes that it will be better to have these than to be obliged to wait in order to have every representation to the court filtered and perhaps mystified through a single or even double legal agency. Sir Sydney Waterlow also observes in reference to our present system, that at times it works a denial of justice or inflicts on the suitor a long pending worrying law suit, the solicitors on either side pleading in their client's interests every technical point, and he adds: "if the summary jurisdiction conferred on justices of the peace in criminal cases when exercised by gentlemen who are not lawyers, gives satisfaction, it can scarcely be doubted that a similar jurisdiction in civil cases would be equally acceptable." We offer no opinion on this view beyond saying that we cannot agree with it, and coming as it does, from Sir Sidney Waterlow, we are the more surprised to find such a view propounded.

There seems to be a growing feeling amongst solicitors, that when the several legal measures now in Parliament become law, and are in full working order, there will be a considerable diminution of business, especially in London, where the work of the advocate is undertaken in the main by barristers, while in the country it still remains almost entirely in the hands of solicitors. Our own opinion is, that although the amount of professional work may fluctuate and be at times diminished by legislation, yet, that by reason of the constitution of society, solicitors must always remain in considerable request. No doubt a somewhat alarming number of gentlemen are still admitted every term, and we quite think that parents, whether solicitors or not, will do well to consider twice before they determine to article their sons. The total number of solicitors is now so large as to constitute a considerable community of themselves.

We publish with pleasure, in another column, a letter from "A Certificated Managing Clerk," upon the subject whether solicitors who act as clerks to other attorneys should have a right of audience in County Courts and before justices of the peace, on behalf of clients of their principal. Much diversity of opinion exists, and many different rules obtain in the country upon this not unimportant subject. To our mind the matter is a very simple one. What County Court judges, and magistrates, and registrars, and magistrates' clerks must look to is that none but certified solicitors or, of course, barristers, appear before them. The fact that an advocate (properly qualified) happens to be a managing clerk, instead of a partner of another solicitor, should be no hindrance whatever to the former appearing on behalf of a client of the latter. There is practically no difference between a managing clerk who is a solicitor and a junior partner in a firm, as regards the relations of each with the senior. We must, however, remind our correspondent that many benches of magistrates, and some County Court judges, refuse to hear managing clerks under such circumstances as above stated, although it has always seemed to us unreasonable. A case identical with that here suggested was not long since reported in our columns, in which a bench of borough magistrates so refused.

On the occasion of the committal of a police serjeant for perjury at the Marlborough-street Police Court, the following is reported to have occurred, and as to which it is sufficient to observe that the thanks of the Profession are due to Mr. Knox for his prompt action in the matter. If all "agents to solicitors" (the meaning of which expression we are unable to explain) were similarly treated by County Court Judges and magistrates, complaints on this head would be less numerous than they are, and the number of such agents would decrease instead of multiply, as we fear is the case at present:

Serjeant Brennan was finally examined before Mr. Knox yesterday, at the Marlborough-street Police-court, on a charge of having committed wilful and corrupt perjury in the evidence he gave against Thomas Parrock, formerly a constable of the X division, when charged with stealing a portmanteau, the property of Sir George Jenkinson, M.P., from the roof of a cab.

Mr. Edward Lewis appeared for the prosecution, and Mr. W. Sleigh for the defence.

Mr. W. Sleigh said, in consequence of certain information he had received, he wished to recall Police-constable Young to put some further questions to him.

Mr. Knox, before this was done, would put a few questions to Parrock relative to a statement made to him respecting a person then sitting at the solicitor's table.

Parrock, in reply to Mr. Knox, said the person alluded to was a Mr. Hills, who had called on him on two or three occasions and offered him money not to appear against Brennan. On one occasion a £5 note was offered, but he refused to have anything to do with the proposal.

Mr. Hills said he did call on Parrock, and had offered to pay the expenses he had been put to, and undertake to conduct his case as a civil action, and Parrock said he wanted £300 to settle the matter. He never said a word to Parrock about a £5 note.

Parrock asserted that he did. He denied asking for £300. He said he would not take £300 to settle the matter.

In reply to Mr. Knox,

Mr. Hills said he was an agent to a solicitor. He considered his conduct was proper under the circumstances.

Mr. Knox did not, and he must request him at once to leave the solicitors' table.

Mr. W. Sleigh, on behalf of Brennan, repudiated the conduct of Hills.

Mr. E. Lewis would remind the magistrates that Hills on the last occasion said he was acting for the defendant.

Mr. Knox believed that what Hills said was that he was a friend of the Brennan family.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

LIBEL—PARLIAMENTARY ELECTION—AGENTS OF THE RIVAL CANDIDATES.—On the 17th Sept., a few days before a Parliamentary election for the borough of D., the defendant Hare, as agent for B., one of the candidates, came to an arrangement with a Mr. Hall, the agent of F., the other candidate, that the election should be conducted on principles of purity, and that no bribery should be permitted on either side during the election. On the morning of the polling day, the 22nd Sept., the defendant Hare being informed by a man called Fraser, who stated that he was a voter, that the plaintiffs, who were members of F.'s committee, had offered him money if he would vote for F., wrote to Hall telling him that bribery on the part of some members of F.'s committee had been discovered, and at an interview which immediately took place between Hall and Hare, the names of the plaintiffs, as the persons charged with the bribery, were mentioned by Hare to Hall. The election resulted in favour of B., and on the following day, the 23rd Sept., Hare called on Hall, at the latter's request, and it was then arranged between them that if a certificate, affirming the fact of the bribery, and signed by Hare, and the other defendant Hilliard (the chairman of B.'s committee), were sent to Hall, the latter would recommend the plaintiffs to tender an apology to B.'s committee, and to retire from public life for two years, in consideration of which no prosecution against them for bribery should be instituted. Thereupon the following document was, on the following day, the 24th Sept., drawn up by Hare, and was signed by him and the other defendant Hilliard:—"We certify that we have discovered that Mr. D. and Mr. R., two prominent members of Mr. F.'s committee, have been personally guilty of offering £1 10s. to a voter for his vote, and £1 10s. for every vote he could procure for Mr. F. The elector referred to has been personally examined by one of us, and the evidence he will give on oath is clear and distinct." This certificate, together with a form of apology for the plaintiff to sign, was then sent by Hare to Hall, by whom it was handed to the chairman of F.'s committee, who communicated it to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs denied the truth of the charge, refused to sign the apology, and brought these actions respectively against the defendants for the libel contained in the above certificate, and it was Held by the Court of Exchequer (Kelly, C.B., and Pigott and Pollock, BB.) refusing a new trial on the ground of misdirection), that the certificate in question was not a privileged communication; and that there was nothing in the character or position of Hall, or of either of the defendants, which clothed the document with a privilege such as that which existed in the cases of Harrison v. Bush (5 E. & B. 344; 25 L. J. 28, Q. B.); Beatson v. Skene (2 L. T. Rep. N. S. 378; 29 L. J. 430, Ex.; 5 H. & N. 838,; Whiteley v. Adams (9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 483; 5 C. B., N. S., 392; 33 L. J. 89, C. B.), and other cases of that character, and which the law has established for the general benefit of the public. Quære, whether, if a petition had been filed, or contemplated against B.'s return, the twenty-one days during which it might be filed under the Act, not having expired, the libel would have been privileged. Per Pollock, B.—The parties cannot, by their own acts, constitute circumstances which shall give them any right to privilege in a matter of libel which they do not possess according to natural, social, or legal position in which they stand with regard to each other; and the mere fact of a person having an interest in the conduct of people around him, is not of itself alone sufficient to clothe with privilege any communication, with regard to the conduct of such people, which he may make to them or others. At the trial, the following evidence, tendered on the part of the defendants, was rejected by the learned judge as inadmissible, viz.: 1. The evidence of the defendant Hilliard as to what was said to him by his co-defendant Hare on the occasion of the certificate being drawn up by Hare and signed by both the defendants. 2. A letter of the 17th Sept. from Hall to Hare, embodying the terms of the arrangement between them as to the mode of conducting the election. 3. A letter written to the defendant Hare by a third person, who had been in communication with the plaintiffs, in which letter it was suggested, on the part of the defendants, that the writer mentioned that the defendants had admitted the truth of the charge. Held, per totam curiam (refusing a rule for a new trial on the ground of the improper rejection of evidence), that the evidence was inadmissible and irrelevant, and was therefore rightly rejected: (Dickeson v. Hilliard and Hare; Robinson v. The Same, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 197. Ex.)

PRACTICE — PRIVATE HEARING. — The court will direct a case to be heard in private upon an assurance by counsel that in his opinion it is a proper case to be so heard, notwithstanding the objection of other parties: (Anonymous, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 153. V.C. B.)

PRACTICE — TRANSFER OF CAUSE — COSTS.—Where the plaintiff in a suit relating to the same matter, with respect to which a previous suit was existing in another branch of the court, offered (in answer to a notice of motion for a transfer of the second suit to the branch of the court to which the first suit was attached) to consent to the transfer if the costs were made costs in the cause, which offer the plaintiffs in the first suit refused, it was ordered that the costs up to the time of the offer should be costs in the cause, and that the plaintiff in the first suit should pay the subsequent costs of the transfer: (Lyall v. Weldhen, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 146. Chan.)

PRACTICE—INROLMENT OF DECREE—CONS. ORD. 23, RULE 28—ENLARGEMENT OF TIME.—Within a month of five years after his bill had been dismissed, the plaintiff applied for and obtained an order of inrolment. On proceeding to get the order drawn up, he discovered that one of the defendants had died. He then revived the suit against the executors of the deceased defendant, and moved that the decree might be inrolled, notwithstanding the five years had elapsed: Held, that the circumstances of the case were not such as to render it just and expedient to enlarge the time. Motion accordingly refused with costs: (Patch v. Ward, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 152. Chan.)

PARLIAMENTARY POWERS—STREET IMPROVEMENT—COMPULSORY SALE—LANDS CLAUSES CONSOLIDATION ACT 1845.—A corporation were authorised by Parliament to take lands compulsorily, for the purpose of widening and improving a street. They gave notice of their intention to take certain houses which occupied a site larger than that required for the actual width of the proposed improved street, though part only of the houses would necessarily be required. Held, that the owners of the houses could not require the corporation to take that part only of the site of the houses, which would form part of the street: (Quinton v. Mayor and Corporation of Bristol, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 112. V.C. M.)

PRACTICE — SERVICE OUT OF THE JURISDICTION—IRREGULARITY IN ORDER—GEN. ORD. 10, R. 7 — SUBJECT-MATTER OF SUIT SHARES IN ENGLISH JOINT-STOCK COMPANY — JURISDICTION.—Where an order directed service of copy, bill, and interrogatories upon a defendant "in Scotland or elsewhere, out of the jurisdiction," and the defendant was duly served in Scotland, the court refused to discharge the order, but, on account of the irregularity, made no order as to costs. Where the subject-matter of a suit was shares in an English joint-stock company, the court refused to discharge an order directing service of copy, bill, and interrrogatories upon a sole defendant resident out of the jurisdiction: (Phospho Guano Company v. Guild, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 117. V.C. B.)

PRACTICE—PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS—EXTENSION OF TIME—DISCRETION—APPEAL.—The extension of time under an order for the production of documents is a matter within the discretion of the court, and the Court of Appeal will not entertain an appeal from an order of the court below, granting such an extension of time: (The Republic of Peru v. Ruzo, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 190. Chan.)

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS (IRELAND).

(Before the FULL COURT).

ARKINS v. MAGRATH.

Practice—177 & 178 Gen. Ord. 1854—Consent for judgment, with date in blank—Contracting to enable proceedings to be had without regard to the General Orders—Proceedings after a year and a day—Debtors' Act (Ireland) 1872—Substituted debt—New security—Interest after, on debt contracted before the Act—Interest on interest—Discharge from arrest.

It is competent to the parties to an action to contract themselves out of the operation of the 178th Gen. Ord. 1854, so that no rule need be entered before proceeding in the action, though no proceeding be taken for a year and a day after defence and before judgment.

Where, after the passing of the Debtors' Act (Ireland) 1872, an agreement is concluded between a debtor and creditor, by virtue of which a principal debt due before the passing of the Act, and interest computed thereon up to the date of the agreement are constituted one integral debt, and made a new starting point as such in the dealings between the parties, bearing interest on the gross amount, it is not competent to the creditor to arrest the debtor under a ca. sa., on foot of a judgment in respect of the liability so incurred.

APPEAL from an order in Consolidated Chamber, refusing a motion made, on behalf of the defendant, that the judgment in this cause and the writ of ca. sa. issued thereon be set aside, and the defendant discharged from custody.

The facts appearing, so far as necessary for the purposes of this report, were as follows:—The action was brought 29th Oct. 1872, to recover £603 6s. 10d., with accruing interest thereon, on foot of three promissory notes; and for money paid for the defendant's use, and for interest on money due, and on accounts stated. Of two of these notes, dated respectively 24th April 1869, and 28th April 1869, for £200 and £300, payable in three months, O'L. was the maker and Treacy the payee; and they were endorsed by Treacy to the defendant, who endorsed them to the plaintiff. Of the third note, date 2nd May 1871, for £40, payable at one month, Mooney was the maker, and B. the payee, by whom it was endorsed to the defendant, who endorsed it to the plaintiff. the particulars endorsed were as follows:—

1869, July 27—To promissory note this day due	200	0	0
Interest thereon to 29th Oct. 1872	32	11	1
July 31—To promissory note this day due	300	0	0
Interest thereon to 29th Oct. 1872	48	13	9
1871, June 5—To promissory note this day due	£	s.	d.

Interest thereon from 15th June 1871, to 19th Feb. 1872	1	8	2
Interest on £20, balance of said note, from 19th Feb. 1872, to 29th Oct. 1872	0	13	10
	623	6	10
1872, Feb. 19—By cash paid on account	20	0	0
	603	6	10

With accruing interest on said principal sums until paid or judgment.

After a defence and replication filed, negotiations were entered into, which resulted in a compromise, in pursuance of which the following agreement, dated 18th Nov. 1872, was signed by the plaintiff, defendant, and B. (the payee of the third note sued on): "Minutes of agreement. All proceedings in this case to stop on the carrying out of the following: Mr. Magrath to procure for Mr. Arkins Mr. B.'s acceptance at three months for £256 to the draft of Captain D., and endorsed by Mr. R. B., and also by Mr. Magrath; and also to hand to Mr. Arkins Mr. B.'s acceptance to Mr. Magrath's own draft for £325 18s. 8d. at three months. Mr. Arkins to bind himself to all parties signing these bills not to take any proceedings upon them if £25 is paid on them every three months until the amount of the bills, with interest at 6 per cent., is fully paid off. But Mr. Arkins is to be at liberty to proceed for the entire amount remaining due on default, for a week, in any of the quarterly payments. A consent for judgment to be given in this action, Mr. Arkins undertaking not to move, or register, or in anywise act on it until such default occurs. It is also agreed that Mr. Magrath shall pay in cash the sum of £20 principal, and £1 8s. 2d. interest, and £9 14s. 6d. costs, as agreed upon, said sum of £21 8s. 2d. having been deducted from the amount of debt as endorsed on the summons and plaint, and leaving £581 18s. 8d. the amount of the above two sums of £256 and £325 18s. 8d. due." In pursuance of this agreement, the defendant's attorney, on Nov. 20, gave plaintiff's attorney a consent for judgment, "that judgment be forthwith entered for plaintiff for the sum of £581 18s. 8d., and £3 for costs," no date being inserted therein; the plaintiff's attorney, at the same time, giving an undertaking, addressed to the defendant, as follows: "You having this day given me a consent for judgment for the sums of £581 18s. 8d., and £3 for costs, I undertake not to enter any judgment thereon, or otherwise move thereon until default be made in the payments, as provided for in the minutes of the agreement, dated Nov. 18, and I am to be at liberty to date the consent at any time it may be necessary to do so." The defendant on the same day paid plaintiff's attorney pursuant to the agreement, £21 8s. 2d., on account of the debt, with £9 14s. 6d. for costs, leaving £581 18s. 8d. due. Between the 18th and 20th Nov. the defendant procured and handed over the bills mentioned in the agreement, and on the 21st received the first two promissory notes, the third having been previously paid and handed over by the plaintiff. The instalments which fell due 21st Feb. 1873, and 21st May 1873, were duly paid, but, notwithstanding several applications, the third and fourth instalments were not paid, in consequence of which plaintiff's attorney, on 25th Sept., 16th Oct., and 1st Dec. 1873, wrote to the defendant, stating that he would mark judgment, adding in the last letter that he would do so without further notice. Accordingly, on 12th Dec. 1873, without entering any rule, however, under either the 177th or 178th General Orders, the plaintiff marked final judgment upon the consent for judgment, having first, at that time, inserted therein the date thereof as 12th Dec. 1873. The judgment was entered for £567 18s. 6d. debt, and £3 costs. On 13th Dec. 1873, the defendant was arrested under a ca. sa. on foot of the judgment, for £570 18s. 6d.

Subsequently, the defendant moved in Consolidated Chamber that the proceedings be set aside, and that he be discharged from custody. Fitzgerald, J., refused the application, from which order the defendant now appealed.

It now, however, further appeared, as the result of a calculation made on behalf of the plaintiff, that the amount of £570 18s. 6d., for which judgment was marked, was arrived at in this manner — the starting point was the £581 18s. 8d. mentioned in the minutes of agreement, which was composed of the balance of the principal debt and interest included up to November 1872. As against this, credits were given for the subsequent payments on the general account, striking the balances accordingly, but upon such balances (although partly composed of interest upon the original debt) further interest was charged up to 1873. The balance was thus brought out £567 18s. 6d., to which was added the £3 costs given by the consent for judgment, making in all £570 18s. 6d., for which the defendant was arrested.

G. Fitzgibbon, Q.C. (with him Keogh), in support of the motion.—The agreement and undertaking are to be read in connection with 177 & 178 G. O. 1854. Either there was a compromise pending, and, if so, a rule should have been entered under the 177th, or, assuming that the transaction did not amount to a compromise, a rule should have been entered under the 178th. A reduction of the amount of the debt was provided for, but a new security was given for the whole. The plaintiff was not to move upon the consent until a particular event should have occurred; but he should, thereupon, move according to the course of law and the practice of the court. Here after defence and before judgment, no proceeding had been taken for a year and a day by either party. All the proceedings provided for were of a negative character—the plaintiff was not to move, proceed, or act—but there is nothing to show that the General Orders were to be dispensed with. Even if they could be dispensed with, that could only be by express provision. On the contrary, the intention of the parties, as shown by the documents, was not to contract themselves out of the general orders, for the words "or in anywise move," and "or otherwise move," taken in connection with the context, can receive no application unless by reference to the rules. The insertion of the date was a step taken—one without which the judgment could not have been marked, and this should not have been done without a rule entered; and, at all events, the judgment could not have been marked. In the next place, the arrest was contrary to the Debtors' Act 1872. The compromise was entered into after that Act came into operation. The new security (i.e., the consent for judgment, and the agreement, which was signed by a third party, and in pursuance of which the bills were given), merged the original debt, just as if a mortgage or bond had been taken; and the arrest is in respect of default in payment of the instalments on the new security. But the writ itself shows that interest was included after Aug. 1872; the agreement included interest up to Nov. 1872; and the judgment has been marked for interest calculated up to 1873. Even if the debt is not to be considered as created by the agreement, the £3 costs was certainly so, and was not incidental to the original demand. Costs are regarded as a distinct debt, and are provable as such in bankruptcy, and as such will support a petition in bankruptcy. The amount ascertained by the agreement comprises two component parts—principal and interest: the latter would not of itself bear interest. But judgment is marked for interest on both of these component parts; and for a portion of that the defendant could not have been arrested. M'Carthy v. M'Carthy (7 Ir. L. T. Rep. 177), is undistinguishable from this case, but was not cited when the motion was before Fitzgerald, J. Before him the entire of these points were not advanced at all; there was only a brief reference to the Debtors' Act, as preventing the arrest, because the compromise was entered into after its passing, to which it was replied that the Act did not apply, as the notes were made antecedently. The question was not decided by Fitzgerald, J. [Morris, J.—Your argument goes to this, that if any portion, however small, of the amount for which the defendant was arrested was a debt within that Act, the defendant could not be arrested.] Certainly; M'Carthy v. M'Carthy. [Morris, J.—Even if the Act had not passed, how was the plaintiff entitled to charge interest on interest unless by specific agreement?] In that respect, the judgment was clearly overmarked. The plaintiff seems to have treated the agreement as a new starting point, and to have considered himself entitled to deal with the amount ascertained, as if a judgment had then been marked.

Purcell, Q.C. (with him Carton) contra.—The parties were entitled to contract themselves out of the operation of the 178th G. O., and did so. Any doubt as to their intention arising on the agreement is removed by the terms of the undertaking of 20th Nov., and by the fact of the consent having been given without a date, so as to be available at any time. The rules were intended merely for the benefit of suitors; and suitors may settle their differences without reference to them. So, the parties might agree to extend the time for pleading beyond the statutable period. Fitzgerald, J., during the argument in chamber, appeared disposed to hold that the defendant might be arrested for interest on the original debt, and directed that we should confine the argument to the question whether a rule should have been entered under 178th G. O. The interest is calculated, not on the judgment, but on the existing debt arising upon the promissory notes and ascertained by the agreement. M'Carthy v. M'Carthy is distinguishable, as there the judgment was entered after the passing of the Act; the simple contract debt was merged in the judgment; and the interest was charged upon the judgment debt. The original liability is the point to be regarded: (Re O'Connell, 7 Ir. L. T. Rep. 51.) That liability was on foot of the notes, and the interest was an accessory incident attached to that liability by operation of law. The agreement did not create the debt, nor was the agreement carried out. Where bills are taken for a debt, and a default takes place, the creditor may fall back on his original rights. The plaintiff was entitled to deal with the agreement, and to charge interest upon the sum thereby ascertained, as if judgment had then been marked, in consideration of the forbearance granted.

Keogh in reply.

Morris, J.—Previous to 6th Aug. 1872, the date of the passing of the Debtors' Act (Ir.), 1872, the defendant was liable to the plaintiff on three promissory notes, for the aggregate amount of £540. Proceedings were taken against him to recover the amount; and in November 1872, some months after the passing of the Debtors' Act, an agreement was come to between the parties by which, as I read it, the amount due up to that date was ascertained to be £581 18s. 8d. and £3 costs, as due to the plaintiff. A consent for judgment with no date was given to the plaintiff, upon which he was to be at liberty to act at any time he might think proper. The court are of opinion that, if the motion rested alone upon the first ground upon which it has been based—namely, that before marking judgment the plaintiff should have entered a rule under the 178th General Order—it should fail, because the meaning of the arrangement agreed upon was, that the parties had contracted themselves out of the operation of the 178th General Order, the effect of giving the consent for judgment with a power to insert any date being to make the transaction as it were always a new one. Therefore, if the motion depended on this ground alone, the defendant should fail. But upon the far more serious question involved, the determination of which might affect many other cases, we are of opinion that the defendant is entitled substantially to succeed. The liability on foot of which he has been arrested must be treated in either of two points of view. That liability having been ascertained in November 1872, to amount to £581 18s. 8d., either that amount must be regarded as the original debt of £540, with the addition of £41 18s. 8d. for interest, and if so the plaintiff would have no right to charge interest upon interest, and consequently the judgment would be overmarked. Or else, as has been suggested, according to the true meaning of the agreement, the £581 18s. 8d., composed of principal and interest was made a bulk debt and a new starting point—and if so, the plaintiff is put out of court by the Debtors' Act, because the debt was created after the passing of that Act, and on that debt he has calculated interest until the judgment was marked. The plaintiff, therefore, appears to us to be in this dilemma. If he admits that he is only entitled to charge interest on the original notes, and says that the £581 18s. 8d. is the original debt of £540, plus the interest up to the date of the agreement, in such case the judgment is overmarked, as he has calculated interest upon the gross amount subsequent to Nov. 1872, and he had clearly no right to charge interest upon interest. If, on the other hand, he says that the £581 18s. 8d., the sum agreed on by the parties in Nov. 1872, as a bulk debt, was a new debt from that starting point—which, probably, is the opinion we would be disposed to come to—in such case he would have no right to issue execution against the defendant's person. We shall, therefore, order the defendant to be discharged from custody; but as the judgment appears to have been bonâ fide, we shall not set it or the writ aside. He has asked, by his notice, for the costs of the motion, which we will give, putting him on terms to undertake to bring no action.

Order accordingly.

Attorneys' Protection Bill.—With reference to the Attorneys' Protection Bill, could not a stop be put to rent and debt collectors by a clause to the following effect?—"That any person, except a solicitor, in writing, demanding money with threat of legal proceedings from another person, such first person not being entitled thereto in his own interest, should be punishable summarily before a justice of the peace by fine. The production of the letter demanding payment, with proof of authorship, to be sufficient proof, without any evidence that the party so demanding payment did so for reward." A. B.

[We are afraid this is hardly practicable, but some such measure would certainly put a stop to the action of those debt-collecting firms (there are many nests of them in all large towns), who take assignments of real or imaginary debts, and then issue all kinds of alarming circulars, with a view of frightening poor ignorant people into payment.—Ed. Sols. Dept.]

Unqualified Practitioners.—I sent you last week two clauses to be added to the Bill now in Parliament. All your intended legislation will be worthless, unless you can enact that all deeds under hand and seal shall be invalid if drawn by any other person than a duly qualified attorney, solicitor, &c. Such a clause as that which I sent would and must stop all invaders instantly from the passing of the Act. I know an articled clerk myself who has been convicted of larceny and fined £10, who will apply to be admitted. Is this not a scandal to our profession? And, if necessary, I can send a report of the trial in the newspaper. A Solicitor.

[Our correspondent should certainly communicate with the Council of the Incorporated Law Society, upon the subject of the last topic in the above letter.—Ed. Sols. Dept.]

Managing Clerks as Advocates.—Referring to the letter of "A Country Solicitor," in your issue of to-day, I must confess I cannot see the reason of the first clause which he suggests for insertion in the new Act of Parliament. It seems to me altogether absurd to say that because an attorney, properly qualified as I am, with his name in the Law List, instead of setting up in practice for himself, chooses to take a situation with another attorney or firm of attorneys, that he should be debarred from appearing before justices or at a County Court for a client of his firm or principal; and that being the effect of this clause, if inserted in the Act, I must protest most strongly against its insertion. It is a very common thing for admitted and certificated men to conduct the advocacy of firms, when they are only managing clerks to such firms, and in fact they take out their annual certificate for that purpose, and I confess I can see no harm in it, but rather the reverse. I am quite of opinion that none but certificated attorneys should be heard by justices, or in the County Courts, but to exclude a certificated attorney because he is acting as clerk instead of principal, in my opinion cannot quite be reconciled with common sense. What "A Country Solicitor" says about clerks of the peace prosecuting and defending before justices should certainly be enacted, but I much doubt whether any clerk of the peace would be now found to act in that manner, although certain instances have been known.

LIABILITY OF A CORPORATION FOR THE FRAUD OF THEIR AGENT—AUTHORITY OF THE MANAGER OF A BANK.—An action for deceit will lie against a corporation for a fraud committed by their agent, provided the fraudulent act was within the scope of the agent's authority, and the corporation have derived some benefit from it. The cashier of the respondents' bank, who discharged the duties of manager, by sending a fraudulent answer to a telegram, induced the appellants to accept certain bills drawn upon them by one L., and indorsed to the bank: Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), first, that it was within the scope of the cashier's authority to send such a telegram; secondly, that the bank, having obtained the benefit of the bills, were liable in an action for the false representations. MARITIME LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

MARINE INSURANCE—PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—NEGLIGENCE—BROKER'S ALLOWANCE—JURISDICTION.—A marine insurance company, carrying on business in New York, employed C. as their agent in this country, for the purpose of taking risks, and adjusting and paying losses, for which he was to receive a commission of 5 per cent. upon the premiums made in each year. The company also effected insurances in this country through C. On the 8th Dec. 1865, C. received instructions from the company to reinsure fifteen ships upon which their lines were full. C. endeavoured to effect the insurances, but in consequence of news of a disastrous gale he was unable to do so except at exorbitant rates; he therefore wrote the same day to the company, informing them thereof, and stating that he left to the company, if they deemed it necessary, to insure on their side where it could be done at a profit, instead of here, where it would have to be done at a loss. After sending this letter, C. made no further attempt to insure these ships. Before the company received this letter, one of the ships which C. was directed to reinsure was wrecked and thereby a loss was incurred to the company: Held, that C. had not discharged the duty cast upon him as the company's agent to reinsure, by writing the above letter, and that he was liable for the loss which had been sustained in consequence of his neglect to insure as directed, and was not entitled to set-off against such loss the amount of the premiums which, by not insuring as directed, he had saved to the company. Under the "credit" system of conducting marine insurance business, which was the system adopted by C., it is customary for the underwriter to allow a discount of 12 per cent. to the broker upon the balance, if any, owing to the underwriters upon the settlement of accounts with the broker at the end of the year: Held, that C. was not entitled to retain the discount for his own benefit, but must account for the same to the company: (Great Western Insurance Company v. Cunliffe, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 113. V.C. B.)

REAL PROPERTY AND CONVEYANCING.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

WILL—SEPARATE ESTATE—A balance in a banker's hands, belonging to a married woman at the time of her death, and arising from savings effected by her out of her separate estate, will not pass under a gift of "all funds and property . . . . purchased out of" separate estate: (Askew v. Rooth, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 155. V.C. B.)

UNDERLEASE—COVENANT NOT TO ASSIGN.—In an agreement for an underlease of coal mines, it was provided that the underlease should contain "the like provisions, conditions, and stipulations in all respects" as were contained in the original lease. The original lease contained a proviso and covenant against assignment or underletting without the landlord's consent. Held, that in the like covenant in the underlease the name of the original landlord alone was to be inserted as the person whose consent was to be required to any assignment or underletting, and not that of the underlessors: (Williamson v. Williamson, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 154. V.C. B.)

MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT — REVERSIONARY INTEREST—POLICY OF ASSURANCE—MORTGAGE OF POLICY—PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS BY MORTGAGEES — LIEN — INTEREST.— By a marriage settlement a policy of assurance on the life of C. was assigned to trustees for the benefit of the wife, for her separate use, for life, and after her death as she should appoint. The husband covenanted that he would pay the premiums, and in default the trustees were authorised to apply the income for that purpose. Subsequently, the wife appointed the reversion in the policy by way of mortgage to secure sums of money advanced to her, with interest at five per cent. The husband and the trustees refused to pay the premiums, and they were paid by the mortgagees. On the death of C. the mortgagees claimed to be repaid out of the policy moneys the sums they had advanced for keeping the policy on foot, with interest at five per cent. Held that they were entitled to immediate payment of the premiums paid by them, with interest at four per cent., and to a charge for the remaining one per cent. upon the reversion of the policy moneys: (Gill v. Dowing, 30 L. T. Rep. N.S. 157. V.C.H.)

WILL—SPECIFIC AND RESIDUARY DEVISES AND BEQUESTS—PERSONALTY INSUFFICIENT FOR PAYMENT OF DEBTS—ADMINISTRATION—CLAIM DISALLOWED—COSTS—Where the personal estate is insufficient for the payment of debts, real estates comprised in a residuary devise are chargeable with the payment of debts in priority to real estates specifically devised. Hensman v. Fryer (17 L. INJUNCTION—TRESPASS—WASTE.—The defendant to an action of ejectment to recover a piece of woodland, adduced evidence of adverse possession for more than twenty years, and the action was discontinued. Subsequently the plaintiff in the action from time to time walked in the wood, and turned his cattle into it, in order to assert his alleged right, and to bar the Statute of Limitations. At length he cut down a tree in the wood, whereupon the defendant to the action filed his bill for an injunction: Held (affirming the decision of the Master of the Rolls) that as the result of the action of ejectment showed the defendant to that action to be in possession of the wood, he was entitled to the injunction. Lowndes v. Bettle (10 L. WILL—GIFT OVER ON BANKRUPTCY—PERSONAL ENJOYMENT — FORFEITURE OF LIFE ESTATE.—Testator gave specific legacies, and gave all his residuary real and personal estate to S. and C. upon trust for conversion and investment, and to pay thereout an annuity of £250 to S. and also an annuity to E., and subject thereto and to his debts, the remainder of his real and personal estate to be held in trust for C. for life, or until he should become bankrupt or insolvent, or do or suffer anything which but for that provision would deprive him of the personal enjoyment, in which case there was a gift over. S. and C. were appointed executors. Testator died in June 1870 considerably indebted. His personal estate not specifically bequeathed was under £20. C. was adjudicated bankrupt in July 1871. In January 1872, a scheme for arrangement of the bankrupt's affairs by paying 20s. in the pound was made, and the bankruptcy was annulled and an order was made vesting his property in S. In January 1873, the order vesting the bankrupt's property in S. was rescinded. Prior to his bankruptcy C. had received the rents of the testator's real estate, but since then S. had received them. The rents had been applied towards paying the testator's debts, and the annuities so far as they would extend, but S.'s own annuity was in arrear, as the rents were not sufficient to pay it in full. C. had received nothing for his own use. Held that as C. had not been deprived of the personal enjoyment of the residuary estate, there had been no forfeiture of his life interest: (Robins v. Rose, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 152. V.C. B.)

WILL—DEVISE OF ALL LANDS AND HEREDITAMENTS—STRICT SETTLEMENT—LEASEHOLDS—CONTRARY INTENTION.—The 26th section of the Wills Act throws the onus probandi upon those who assert that a devise of "lands" does not include leasehold estates in land, but that onus is satisfied by showing from the whole will sufficient grounds to satisfy a reasonable man that the testator did not intend by the word "lands" to pass leasehold estates. A testator, by his will made in 1861, devised all his messuages, lands, and hereditaments in the county of Middlesex, and all other lands and hereditaments in England belonging to him, to the use of his eldest son for life, with remainder to his eldest son's issue in tail male, with an ultimate remainder to his own right heirs. He also bequeathed all his money, securities for money, goods, chattels, and personal estate to trustees upon trusts corresponding with the trusts of the hereditaments thereinbefore devised in strict settlement, but so that the same should not vest absolutely in any person thereby made tenant in tail by purchase unless such person should attain twenty-one. As to the devised realty, the will contained a power of sale, empowering the trustees to invest the proceeds of any sale in the purchase of freeholds or leaseholds convenient to be held therewith. The will also contained a bequest of certain chattels and heirlooms in strict settlement, so far as the rules of law and equity would permit. The testator, both as to any leaseholds to be purchased under the power, and as to the chattels, repeated the proviso that the same should not vest absolutely in any person thereby made tenant in tail by purchase, unless such person should attain twenty-one. At the time of his death, the testator was possessed of both freehold and leasehold estates in the county of Middlesex: Held (affirming the decision of Malins, V.C.) that the leaseholds did not pass under the devise of lands and hereditaments by virtue of the 26th section of the Wills Act, inasmuch as there was sufficient indication of a contrary intention appearing on the face of the will; but that they passed under the ultimate bequest of personal estate: (Prescott v. Barker, 30 L. T. Rep. N.S. 149. Chan.)

WILL—CONSTRUCTION—BEQUEST OF RESIDUE TO CHARITIES—PURE AND IMPURE PERSONALTY—MARSHALLING—MORTMAIN ACT.—J. M., who died in March 1866, by will, in July 1855, after appointing executors and trustees, and bequeathing legacies specific and pecuniary, and giving certain annuities, said, "as to all the residue and remainder of my personal estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, which I may be possessed of or entitled to at the time of my decease, I give and bequeath the same as follows: namely, one equal third part or share thereof to St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington, aforesaid, one other equal third part or share thereof to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, and the remaining one equal third part or share thereof to the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, and my will is, and I expressly direct, that the three last mentioned legacies or bequests shall respectively be paid and satisfied out of such part of my personal estate as can lawfully be applied to the payment thereof, and which shall be reserved by my trustees or trustee for the time being for that purpose, and that such legacies and shares of residue shall respectively be applied to the purposes of the said hospital and societies respectively, and the receipts of the respective treasurers of the said hospital and societies respectively shall be sufficient discharges for the same respectively." The suit was one for administration, and the question raised was as to the marshalling of debts, legacies, and annuities. Held, that the direction that the charitable bequests were to be satisfied out of such part of the testator's personal estate as could lawfully be applied to the payment thereof, and which should be reserved for that purpose, was a plain direction to marshal the assets, so as to give the charities the fullest benefit they were capable of taking: (Miles v. Harrison, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 152. Chan.).

COUNTY COURTS.

BIRMINGHAM COUNTY COURT.

Wednesday, April 1.

(Before Mr. H. W. COLE, Q.C., Judge.)

HARRISON v. JOHNSON.

Accountant's charges.

THE plaintiff in this case was an accountant, carrying on business in Birmingham, and the defendant a person who, on the 19th Sept. 1871, presented his petition to the Court of Bankruptcy for a liquidation of his estate by arrangement or composition. The action was brought to recover £22 15s. 4d. as the balance of the accounts of the plaintiff's receipts and payments as receiver and trustee in the proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act, which terminated in the defendant's creditors accepting a composition. By an order of the Court, dated Sept. 19th, the plaintiff, who had previously rendered assistance to the defendant in his attempt to arrange his affairs, was appointed receiver. A meeting of the creditors took place on the 5th Oct., who passed resolutions under the Act of 1860 to accept a composition of 5s. in the pound, payable as therein mentioned, and it was resolved that promissory notes for the composition required, and payable as agreed, should be handed to the trustee within seven days of the date of the confirmation. The plaintiff also received his appointment as trustee. The composition had since been paid.

His HONOUR, in delivering judgment, said that under such circumstances, if any of the debtor's estate were now in the hands of the plaintiff, as receiver or trustee, the defendant might call upon him to hand the same over to him; but the defendant could not do so except on the terms of the amount of the plaintiff's charges for which he would have a lien on the estate in his hands, being first ascertained by the Court of Bankruptcy, and paid by the defendant: (Ex parte Lyons, re Lyons, L. Rep. 7 Ch. 494; 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 491.) But in the present case there was no such estate, and the defendant therefore made no demand. On the contrary, however, there was a deficiency of the estate to meet the plaintiff's charges and he had therefore insisted that the defendant was personally liable to pay such deficiency, and he had brought this action to recover it. The charges of the plaintiff as receiver and trustee amounted altogether to £23 19s. 9d. He made other demands, but the property and money received by him had been slightly more than sufficient to satisfy every demand, except his costs and charges as receiver and trustee. This claim of £22 15s. 4d. consisted in part of the unsatisfied portion of the £23 19s. 9d., and the question was whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover the same by this action against the defendant. The resolutions of the creditors, under which the plaintiff was appointed trustee, were silent on the subject of his remuneration, and made no provision as to it. The plaintiff might have refused to become either receiver or trustee, unless he had payment of his charges in some way secured to him; but he accepted such office without any stipulation on the subject, and without taking care to see that the value of the assets which would come to his hands, as receiver or trustee, would cover his costs and expenses. He must either have relied on the expectation that the estate coming to his hands would be sufficient, or, by inadvertence, he forgot the subject altogether. He did not appear to have asserted any claim to a lien on the promissory notes, which were to be delivered to him as trustee for the creditors. He handed over these promissory notes to the creditors, without stipulating that his costs and expenses should be first paid. But now, upon finding that the estate in his hands was deficient, he had brought this action against the defendant for that deficiency. No authority had been cited to him (the judge) which supported the plaintiff's claim, nor had any principle been stated, which appeared to him to apply to the present case, and entitle the plaintiff to maintain the action. There was no express contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, and he was unable to imply one. The plaintiff as receiver was an officer of the Court of Bankruptcy which appointed him. As trustee he was appointed by the creditors, and he was a trustee for them. But neither as receiver nor as trustee was the plaintiff in his opinion entitled to compel the defendant to pay his charges. There must, therefore, be a verdict for the defendant.

In reply to Wilkinson, his Honour said he should be willing to grant a case for the Superior Court.

HUNTINGDON COUNTY COURT.

Wednesday, April 8.

(Before EDMOND BEALES, Esq., M.A., Judge.)

HEARN v. THE GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Carriage of goods—Owner's risk—Loss of market—Delay.

Burton, of Huntingdon, for the plaintiff.

This case was partly heard at the last court, and was of great importance to fishmongers and other tradesmen.

Burton said that the action was brought to recover the sum of £6 17s. 9d., damage sustained by the plaintiff, a fishmonger, by reason of the non-delivery, in reasonable time and in due course, of a quantity of fish consigned to him on the defendants' railway from Yarmouth to Huntingdon. On 10th Oct. last a quantity of fish was sent from Yarmouth, but was not tendered to the plaintiff until a little before 4 p.m. on the following day, when the market was over, and he was then unable to dispose of the fish. The fish should have been delivered in the usual course at 9 a.m. He admitted that the fish were consigned at owner's risk, but that from the very fact of the delay the company had been guilty of wilful negligence.

Moore, for the company, said that the company was not liable, inasmuch as the fish was conveyed at owner's risk, and a special low rate was charged, in consideration of which the plaintiff had agreed to take the risk of delay. By paying an extra rate the plaintiff could have held the company to be liable. It had been decided in several cases in the superior courts, and also by his Honour, that damages for loss of market could not be recovered, in the absence of notice having been given to the company that goods were required for market.

His HONOUR.—I agree with the common law principle that the company are the insurers of the goods they convey, and that they have no right to get rid of their liability by any difference in the rate.

Moore.—The company lose thousands a year by carrying the fish at a lower rate, which all goes into the fish merchants' pockets; and although, by taking advantage of the low rate, they save a vast amount of money in the course of a year, they still, when they have any small loss, require the company to pay their claims. They could not expect to have the advantages of the low rate and also have the claims paid.

Burton characterised the lower rate as a delusion and a snare, and a lasting disgrace to all the railway companies.

His HONOUR said that he thought the law as to this point of owner's risk was in a most unsatisfactory state, and had never been definitely decided.

The plaintiff's case was stopped at an early stage by his inability to produce the receipt for the payment of the fish, which were the subject of the action.

His HONOUR said that he could not sue for loss of market. He should have accepted the fish and sold them for what they were worth and then brought his action to recover the difference. He nonsuited the plaintiff, but would not allow any costs to the company.

Moore I must press upon your Honour the necessity of allowing costs. In all cases where the company have a verdict against them costs are allowed.

HIS HONOUR.—The plaintiff has lost sufficient. If he had not sustained any loss he would have allowed costs.

Moore.—If the plaintiff had not sustained any loss I do not suppose he would have brought an action. I think it a very hard case that I cannot have my costs allowed in cases in which the company obtain a verdict.

Plaintiff nonsuited without costs.

HUDDERSFIELD COUNTY COURT.

Friday, March 27.

(Before Mr Serjeant TINDAL ATKINSON, Judge.)

CLOUGH v. LANCASHIRE AND YORKSHIRE RAILWAY COMPANY.

A railway company notwithstanding a notice in their time bill, that "they will not be accountable for any loss, inconvenience, or injury, which may arise from delays or detention," are not protected from negligence or want of proper care, but where a fog had impeded the traffic and thereby caused delay:

Held that the company are protected by the terms of their notice.

Clough, plaintiff, in person.

John Sykes for defendants.

HIS HONOUR delivered judgment herein as follows: In this case, which was tried before me on 27th Feb., the plaintiff claims damages from the defendants for a breach of contract in not having on the 11th 11th Dec., 1873, conveyed him (the plaintiff) from Huddersfield to Halifax, he having purchased from the defendants a through ticket for that purpose. The train by which the plaintiff was to travel was advertised in the company's time tables to leave Huddersfield at 10 o'clock, arriving at Halifax at 10.33. A fog prevailed during the morning, which seriously impeded the traffic on the railway, and the train which was to take the plaintiff to Halifax was, when it arrived to take up the passengers at Huddersfield, twenty-four minutes late, and did not leave the station until ten minutes after the appointed time, and on arriving at Brighouse, owing to the obstruction caused by the fog, it was forty-five minutes after its time. The passengers for Halifax by this train are obliged to change on their arrival at Brighouse, and are sent on by a train which awaits them there; but no notice of this change is found in the company's time tables. After waiting twenty-seven minutes beyond the usual time the train, which should have taken the plaintiff forward, left Brighouse, and on the plaintiff's arriving he found that there was no other train for Halifax until 12.14. The plaintiff having an important engagement, hired a carriage, and reached Halifax at 12.30, too late to keep his appointment. The company's time tables were put in, and contained the following announcement: "Time bills. The published train bills of this company are only intended to fix the time at which passengers may be certain to obtain their tickets for any journey from the various stations, it being understood that the trains shall not start before the appointed time. Every attention will be paid to insure punctuality as far as it is practicable. But the directors give notice that the company do not undertake that the train shall start or arrive at the time specified in the bills, nor will they be accountable for any loss, inconvenience, or injury which may arise from delays or detention." It is contended by Mr. Sykes, on behalf of the company, that there ought to be a nonsuit on the ground that the notice in the time tables, which have been put in evidence, forms a special contract, the terms of which are binding on the plaintiff, and the defendants are not liable for the delay. Under ordinary circumstances the company are bound to carry out the contract they make with the passenger, and must use such diligence, and bring to bear such appliances as they may have at their disposal to perform the promise contained in their time tables, namely, that the train will leave at a certain time and arrive at the terminus at the time stated; but in this case the delay arose from causes entirely beyond the company's control. In the language of Lord Campbell, in giving judgment in Denton v. The Great Northern Railway Company (25 L. J. 134, Q. B.), "Looking at the nature of the contract there may be certain implied exceptions from perils of the land, as there is in the case of a policy of marine insurance from the perils of the sea, as if a train without any fault of the company, should be prevented from going by an inundation, or by some convulsion of nature. There they might be discharged." Here the delay was caused by a fog, which imposed upon the company's servants the utmost care and caution in the conduct of the traffic, a caution which was necessary for the protection of life and of property, and brings the case within the promise on the part of the company contained in the notice that "every attention will be paid to ensure punctuality as far as is practicable." I am of opinion that the facts proved show that "punctuality" was not "practicable" in this instance, and although I was much pressed with Mr. Clough's contention that the train at Brighouse should have been detained in order to carry onward the Huddersfield passenger traffic, this could only have been done at the cost of delaying the passengers who had booked there, and who had acquired the right to go on without delay. In the case of Prevost v. The Great Eastern Railway Company (13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 20), the facts of which were very similar to the present, it was held by Crompton J. that the contract of the company is that they will use proper care and not be negligent. I cannot find in the facts before me any want of proper care, or any negligence, and there must, therefore, be a nonsuit entered in favour of the defendants, but in this case without costs.

MARYLEBONE COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr. Serjt. WHEELER.)

TURNER v. THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Railway unpunctuality.

MR. C. H. TURNER, of the Chancery Bar, sued the Great Western Railway Company for not conveying him from London to Micheldean, on the 7th Feb., in time to vote at the West Gloucestershire election, and he assessed his damages at £9 19s.

The plaintiff conducted his case in person.

The defendants were represented by Wightman Wood, barrister, of the Home Circuit.

It appeared from the plaintiff's statement that he left Paddington at 10.15 a.m. on Saturday, the 7th Feb., having previously obtained a first-class express return ticket to Micheldean, which was given to him gratis on his producing a "candidate's order." According to the train bills, the 10.15 train should arrive at Gloucester at 1.37, after stopping at five stations en route; but on this day the train was detained at a great many places not specified in the bills, commencing at West Drayton (where the plaintiff observed indications of a collision having recently occurred), and eventually it arrived at Gloucester at three o'clock. In consequence the plaintiff lost a train timed to leave Gloucester for Micheldean at 1.48, by which he had expected to travel, and was unable to proceed until 3.50. By this train he reached Micheldean at 4.40, but though a carriage was in waiting for him, in which he was driven four and a half miles in twenty-two minutes, he arrived at the poll two minutes too late to record his vote. As there was no train by which he could get home that night, he went to an hotel, and he now sued the company for compensation for his expenses, his useless loss of time, and the "loss of his franchise." The ticket and the train bill were put in as evidence. On the former was printed, "This ticket is issued subject to the conditions on the company's train bills;" and on the latter the following notice appeared on the outer sheet, "The train bills are only intended to fix the time at which passengers may be certain to obtain their tickets for any journey from the various stations (it being understood that the trains shall not start before the appointed time), but the directors give notice that the company do not undertake that the trains shall start or arrive at the time specified in the bills, nor will they be accountable for any loss which may arise from delays or detention, except upon proof that such delay was caused by the wilful misconduct of the company's servants."

Turner contended that the company had contracted to take him to Micheldean by the time mentioned in their bills—2.25 p.m.—and also to take him there in time to vote, or at least within a reasonable time. With regard to the damages he quoted the case of Ashby v. Wright, in the time of Chief Justice Holt, where the plaintiff obtained £200 damages from a returning officer for refusing to receive his vote.

Wood for the defendant, in the first place called upon the judge to nonsuit the plaintiff on the ground that the action should have been brought by "the candidate," who had paid for the ticket, but immediately afterwards he withdrew this objection, saying that his clients had no desire to escape by a side door. The principle involved was of very great importance to railways, as if they were liable to pay compensation in such cases as this, or to prove that the delay was unavoidable, the cost would be incalculable, and the public would be in a far worse position than now, as the companies would have to reduce the usual rate of speed of all their trains, so as to insure punctuality, even under adverse circumstances. There was a notion that the defendants had acquiesced in the decision given against them in Forsyth's case, but that was not so; on the contrary, they were desirous to appeal, but were prevented from doing so by a technical informality. Counsel then argued at considerable length that the plaintiff had not proved the contract he set up; that the true contract was contained in the ticket and the bills, and that it was for the plaintiff to prove "wilful misconduct" on the part of the company, and that as he had given no evidence to that effect, there was nothing for the defendants to answer. He referred to several cases, and especially to Hurst v. The Great Western Railway Company (34 L. J.), and to Taylor v. Great Eastern Railway Company, reported in the LAW TIMES of Feb. 7. In any event, no damages could be recovered for the loss of the vote.

HIS HONOUR said that the point raised as to the liability of the company for delays was no doubt one of great importance, and that he would reserve his judgment until April 14.

WIGAN COUNTY COURT.

Wednesday, April 1.

(Before Mr. J. W. HARDEN, Judge.)

ROWLAND AND ANOTHER v. LONDON AND NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Railway companies agents for one another—Carriage of goods—Property in the goods—Liability for loss.

MESSRS. ROWLAND and Makinson, ironmongers, Market-place, Wigan, sued the London and North-Western Railway Company for two sums of £21 5s. 6d. and £17 10s.

Ellis appeared for the plaintiffs.

Adcock (of the firm of Mayhew and Adcock), appeared for the defendants.

Ellis stated that at the time of the Wigan Exhibition arrangements were made to have a very elegant plate glass case sent from Sheffield to the Exhibition. Mr. Makinson went to the railway and saw Mr. Dixon, the manager, and asked what it would cost to bring the case from Sheffield to Wigan. Mr. Dixon named the rate, which included the insurance and delivery of the parcel at the Wigan Infirmary, whereupon the sender at Sheffield was instructed to forward the case, which, when dispatched, was in a perfectly sound condition. It was in due course delivered in Wigan by the defendants at the infirmary, and it was there kept in a perfectly safe place for about a week, at the expiration of which time it was opened and the glass was found to be smashed so that it was altogether useless for the purpose it was intended for. The plaintiffs complained to one of the railway officials, who suggested that the plaintiffs should get it repaired, and send a claim for the amount to the defendants. The case was repaired at an expense of £21 5s. 6d. About three months afterwards the plaintiffs returned the case to Sheffield, and it was delivered safely to the company, carriage paid, and insured, but when it arrived at Sheffield it was found to have been again broken, and the item of £17 10s. was on account of the loss sustained by the second breakage. Evidence was given by Mr. Ellis in support of these facts.

Adcock then addressed the judge and jury, and raised the following questions of law: First, that as the contract was with the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company, the defendants, the London and North-Western Railway Company, were not liable to pay the loss, as all they did was simply as agents for the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company, who were the contractors in the matter; secondly, the plaintiffs had no property in the goods, inasmuch as they were only borrowed, and when placed upon the railway company's premises it was a constructive delivery to the person from whom they borrowed the goods, and having no property in them, they could not recover them.

In reply to these points, Ellis contended that the contract was not with the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company, but with the London and North-Western Railway Company, and that they were the persons responsible for the loss. As to the second point raised by Mr. Adcock, it was proved by Mr. Makinson that the plaintiffs were responsible to the persons from whom the case was borrowed for any damage that might be occasioned by it. He contended that Mr. Makinson having paid the return freight from Wigan to Sheffield clearly proved that he did not part with possession of the goods until they were delivered at the point where he had paid for them to be delivered at—namely, Sheffield.

HIS HONOUR said that in this case a great deal was to be said on both sides, and that he should submit to the jury the question of the amount to be given on both counts, and that he should order that execution be stayed. The effect of this would be that an application could be made to a superior court of law for a mandamus to compel him to issue execution, and the law of the matter could be ascertained.

The jury gave a verdict for the plaintiffs for £17 15s. 6d. on the first count, and £14 on the second count.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

Proof on Bills—Production of—Practice.—A creditor who seeks to prove upon bills of exchange or promissory notes must, on tendering his proof, exhibit his securities in like manner as under the old law, which in this respect is not altered by the late Act: (Ex parte Jacobs; Re Carter, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 133. Bank.)

Partnership — Bankruptcy — Joint and Separate Estate — Deceased Partners — Rights of Creditors.—By a partnership deed it was stipulated that in case of the death of any partner, the partnership should not be dissolved, but that the surviving partners should carry on the business, and that the share of the deceased partner should be ascertained, and the payment thereof secured to his representatives in manner therein provided. The firm consisted of four partners, two of whom died during the partnership, and first the three and afterwards the two surviving partners continued the business for a few months. The latter then filed a petition for liquidation. At the date of the petition the shares of the deceased partners had not been paid or secured to their representatives. There had been no stock taking, but a great part of the stock-in-trade, consisting of machinery, which was in existence when the partnership was first constituted, still remained in specie; part, however, had been disposed of, and replaced by the three, and other part by the two partners. Held, that the creditors of the four were not entitled as against the creditors of the three and of the two to have the proceeds of such portion of the machinery as could be distinguished as having existed when the partnership was first constituted, and which still remained in specie, applied in satisfaction of their claims in priority to the claims of all the other creditors: (Ex parte Furness; Re Simpson and Co., 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 134. Bank.)

Garnishee Order—Bankruptcy—Creditor holding Security — Bankruptcy Act 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), ss. 12 and 16.—A garnishee order obtained and served by an execution creditor, especially when made absolute before the bankruptcy, constitutes the execution creditor a creditor "holding a security on the property of the bankrupt" within sect. 12 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869. An execution creditor who has obtained, served, and made absolute a garnishee order before the bankruptcy, is also a creditor holding a "charge on the bankrupt's estate, as a security for a debt due to him" within sect. 16, sub-sect. 5, of the Bankruptcy Act 1869. The word "charge," in sect. 16, sub-sect. 5, has a wider meaning than the word "mortgage" or "lien" contained in the same section: (Emanuel v. Bridger; Roberts (garnishee), 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 194. Q. B.)

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

Tuesday, April 14.

(Before Mr. Registrar Pepys.)

Re H. J. Welch.

Proof—Bankruptcy Act 1869, s. 31—Wife's allowance under separation deed—Trustee of deed allowed to prove.

The question in this case, which arose under the 31st section of the Act, was whether the trustee under a deed of separation, executed by the bankrupt and his wife, was entitled to prove against the bankrupt's estate in respect of the estimated value of the allowance agreed to be made to the wife for the support of herself and family.

Bagley appeared for the creditor, who appealed from the rejection of the proof by the trustee.

E. C. Willis for the trustee.

By the deed, which was dated in 1869, the husband and wife agreed to live separate and apart from each other, an allowance of 10s. per week being made to the latter. The trustee under the deed claimed to rank as a creditor for £407, which was sworn to as being the value of the allowance.

His Honour thought the appellant was entitled to prove for the sum claimed. But for the bankruptcy he could have sued the husband for the husband for the arrears of the allowance, and no reason existed why the wife should be deprived of the benefit of the deed. The proof must be admitted.

LEGAL NEWS.

Private Bills in Parliament.—The first of several groups of private Bills will be taken on or about the 21st instant, when it is expected that several committees will, for the purpose, be appointed. It is believed that there will be a great pressure of private Bill work this session, owing to the short time within which the business must be got through. Old parliamentarians anticipate a repetition for a brief period of the session of 1866, when every committee-room was occupied.

Withdrawal of Election Petitions.—Notice has been given to withdraw the election petitions relating to Kidderminster, Stockport, and Isle of Wight.

Style in which an oath was administered by a German justice of the peace in Lincoln, Wis.: "You as awfully swear you will tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, the best what you can."

Cases in the Probate Court.—There are 20 cases in the list for the term before the court itself, and 12 special juries, and only one common jury case, making 33. Last Term there were 9 cases without juries, 20 special juries, and 13 common juries. The case of Tichborne v. Tichborne is still retained in the cause paper.

Trial of Election Petitions.—Three more election petitions have just been appointed for hearing. The Barnstaple petition will be taken before Mr. Justice Mellor on the 27th inst., and the Stroud petition on the same day before Mr. Baron Bramwell. On the 28th inst. Mr. Justice Grove will hear the Dudley petition. The Hackney Petition is disposed of.

Highway Legislation. — Considerable discussion took place at the Devonshire Chamber of Agriculture on legislation affecting highways consequent on the abolition of turnpikes, and resolutions were carried that it was expedient that the expense of the repairs of all roads should be paid by the persons using them, and that the expense could in part be raised by a license tax on all horses and carriages using such roads; that it was expedient that the expense of principal improvements of main roads in highway districts should be defrayed from the common fund; and that the whole of the expense of permanent improving should not be thrown solely on the occupier. We may mention that some of the above suggestions are at the present time adopted in the north of France, and we believe successfully.

Lincoln's-inn.—The new buildings in Lincoln's-inn have now been completed, and most of the chambers are occupied. They form the west side of Old-square, fronting the hall, library, and garden. The block is divided into four sub-divisions, each of which consists of five floors, with five sets of chambers on each. The style is semi-Gothic, with gables at each end. The block is 140ft. in length and 80ft. in height. The internal arrangements have been very carefully attended to, and rooms have been arranged for barristers, pupils, and clerks, with the usual offices and cellars. The external aspect of the building is in strange contrast with its quaint and smoke-begrimed neighbours, the materials used in the construction being Ancaster dressing with red brick facing. The entire cost has been £40,000, and the work has been executed by Messrs. Jackson and Shaw.

A Legal Anomaly.—Without the least reflection either on the magistrate or the clerk—both of whom are gentlemen of considerable experience, and are, indeed, helpless in the matter—it can scarcely be denied that the inquiry at the police court into the manslaughter at Flathouse was a deplorable waste of time. We are fully aware that some of the judges strongly object to trying prisoners on coroners' inquisitions, probably from the fact that it is not every community which has secured the services of so competent and careful a coroner as Portsmouth has, and depositions taken before a magistrate, under the advice of a legally qualified clerk, are generally superior to those taken under less favourable circumstances. But the fact remains that after the fullest inquiry before the coroner, precisely the same ground was traversed by the magistrate, and that, in fact, the depositions sworn to before the latter are almost a literal copy of those taken before the former. This might have been pardonable enough in the last century; but we are accustomed to value time more highly than our great grandfathers were wont to do, and are somewhat impatient under the repetition of a task the necessity for which is not very obvious. So long, however, as the judges adhere to a decision repeatedly expressed, the case is, apparently, beyond remedy.—Hampshire Telegraph.

Mr Beales and Mr. Justice Blackburn.—On Wednesday, at the April sitting of the Cambridge County Court, Mr. Beales, the judge, acknowledged the receipt of an address which had been presented to him in consequence of some remarks made upon him by Blackburn, J. in the Court of Queen's Bench. The address was as follows:—"Dear Sir,—We, the undersigned barristers-at-law or attorneys practising before you in the courts of which you are the judge, have read with much pain and regret a report in the Law Times of the 7th Feb. 1874, of a remark alleged to have been made by Blackburn, J. in reversing a decision given by you in the case of Taylor v. The Great Eastern Railway Company, that if you were in the habit of making such rulings he owned he thought the Lord Chancellor should be made aware of it. Without discussing the particular point before the Court of Queen's Bench in the case alluded to or presuming in any way to question the correctness of the view taken by that eminent judge, we think it due to you to state that we have been perfectly satisfied with your rulings generally, that we consider you bestow more than usual attention and care on all cases coming before you, that your judicial conduct during the whole time you have been the Judge of this circuit has commanded our high respect and esteem, and that we have the fullest confidence in your able and impartial administration of the law in your several courts." This address was signed by four barristers and thirty attorneys practising in the several courts. His Honour returned thanks at some length. He said he had read with great indignation what Mr. Justice Blackburn was reported to have said, but upon reflection he deemed it the best thing to attribute the remarks to some mistake or exaggeration in the report, or to some grave misapprehension as to the real facts of the case. On one point—the conditions under which the company had been allowed to appeal—the court above was wholly unjustified in what it said, as the solicitor of the company himself would admit. So far as he could gather from the report his decision was reversed without the shadow of or an attempt at argument, and in no very courteous terms. He was borne out in his views on the main point in the case by one of the most eminent courts of jurisprudence in the world—the Supreme Court of the United States—in which the very question at issue here had been made the subject of an elaborate and exhaustive argument.

First Day of Term.—Wednesday being the first day of Easter Term, the Lord Chancellor entertained the Judges, Queen's Counsel, Serjeants, &c., at his Lordship's residence, 5, Cromwell Houses. This being the first levée of Lord Cairns since his appointment for the second time as Lord Chancellor, it was very numerously attended. All the Chancery and nearly all the common law judges were present. The only common law judges who were absent were the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas (who was absent on account of the death of his mother), Mr. Justice Lush, and Mr. Justice Quain. The judge of the Court of Admiralty (Sir R. Phillimore) was also absent. The judges who attended were—Lord Justice James, Lord Chief Baron Kelly, Vice-Chancellor Hall, Lord Ardmillan, Baron Pigott, Justice Denman, Vice-Chancellor Bacon, Baron Amphlett, Justice Blackburn, Baron Cleasby, Lord Justice Mellish, Lord Chief Justice Cockburn, Vice Chancellor Malins, the Master of the Rolls, Justice Brett, Justice Archibald, Baron Pollock, Justice Keating, Sir Montague Smith, Justice Grove, Justice Mellor, and Baron Bramwell. Among the Queen's Counsel were the Attorney-General (Sir R. Baggallay), the Lord Advocate, and the Solicitor General of Scotland, James Anderson, F. Roxburgh, John Gray, Holker, A. E. Miller, Montagu Chambers, Serjeant Simon, George Little, W. Huddleston, Inderwick, R. G. Williams, H. Hawkins, Gates, Watkin Williams, Joseph Brown, Eddis, Fry, Higgins, Renshaw, Archer Shee, Dickinson, Lumley, Westlake, H. Cotton, Joseph Kay, W. T. S. Daniell, T. E. Winslow, Locke, Swanston, Prentice, Day, J. Shapter, Philbrick, James Fleming, F. Waller, Dr. Deane, Lopes, E. E. Kay, E. J. M'Intyre, Fitzjames, Stephen, Bristowe, John Pearson, P. H. Edlin, Prideaux, H. M. Jackson, B. S. Follett, Joseph Chitty, N. Lindley, Osborne Morgan, Sir H. James, Bazalgette, Marten, T. Southgate, and J. R. Kenyon (Treasurer of the Middle Temple). The Lord Chancellor, at the conclusion of the "breakfast," proceeded with the other judges to open the courts at Westminster, where they arrived shortly before two. There was a considerable crowd assembled in Westminster Hall and about the neighbourhood to witness the procession, but not nearly so large as is customary when the courts are opened in November. There was moderate cheering as Lord Cairns and the other judges passed up the hall.

Bills of Sale Act 1874.—There is now an opportunity before the second reading of this Bill of inserting a clause to remedy what I believe is generally acknowledged, certainly in text books, and by some of the judges, to be a defect in the Bills of Sale Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 36), sect. 1—I mean the priority of an unregistered bill of sale over a subsequently registered one. At present registration is useless as against an unregistered security. Although a grantee takes the precaution to register his bill of sale, he often finds, when he attempts to enforce it, that he is defeated by some prior bill—perhaps a clandestine one—of which he could possibly know nothing. A prudent man, before advancing money on the security of a bill of sale, searches at the Queen's Bench office for prior bills, and, if he finds none, is generally satisfied; but I have known cases in which necessitous grantors have concealed the fact that there was an unregistered charge already on their goods, and the further duly registered security was worthless. Surely registration ought to give a security preference to one secretly given, and of which the public may know nothing, or what is the value of registration? As the law stands, to give a registered bill priority over a bill of anterior date, but not registered, one of two things must happen—either the grantee must sue his grantor, obtain a judgment, issue execution, and thus rank with ordinary execution creditors; or the goods must be seized by the sheriff under fi. fa., which has the effect of avoiding the first bill entirely, and the second registered bill then takes its true position, although, if there had been no execution, the unregistered bill would have prevailed over the registered one: (See Richards v. James, 15 W. R. 580; Begbie v. Fenwick, 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 62; Nicholson v. Cooper, 3 H. & N. 384.) The latter alternative has occurred within my experience, and I heard it publicly stated from the bench the other day by one of our Vice-Chancellors that he could not see why the Act of 1854 did not go on to make an unregistered bill of sale void as against a subsequently registered one. If such a clause be inserted, it would settle the law on that point, which at present gives rise to a good deal of litigation. Let unregistered bills of sale take precedence to one another according to date, but be void in relation to registered bills of sale.

MANAGING CLERK.

— Will you allow me to suggest that the schedule to the Bills of Sale Amendment Bill should require the name and address of the solicitor who prepared the bill of sale to be stated therein. Small auctioneers often lend money on bills of sale, which they prepare themselves, charging an exorbitant sum for doing so.

A SOLICITOR.

— Upon reading your comment upon the Bills of Sale Act (1854) Amendment Bill, and the substance of the proposed measure in your columns, it has occured to us whether the words in sect. 4 of the Bill, "any mortgage of or security or charge upon any personal chattel," would include a species of security upon personal chattels, commonly known as a "Bad luck deed," or deed of attornment, whereby a debtor is enabled, without the publicity of a bill of sale, to give a valid security upon his chattels, and thus evade the spirit of the Bills of Sale Act. We have found these deeds of attornment of frequent occurrence of late, and we shall be glad to know whether the proposed amendment Bill of Mr. Lopes will meet their case.

S. AND B.

— Seeing by your publication of the 11th inst. that you invite suggestions upon this measure, I beg to offer the following observations upon sect. 3: I apprehend this section is intended amongst other things to remedy the evil which has resulted in consequence of the execution by debtors of secret deeds of attornment. The question which I wish to raise for the consideration of the Profession is whether sect. 3 will really hit the blot, and operate to destroy the effect of these secret deeds. A deed of attornment does not profess "to effect a mortgage for a security or charge on any personal chattel," neither is it "of such a character as that it might have been effected by means of a bill of sale." The scheme of the attornment may be stated as follows: A. is in possession of a shop and premises which he occupies from year to year at rack rent. He desires to give to his creditor B. such a security as that by the exercise of the common law right of distress B. can enter upon his premises even after bankruptcy and distrain upon the goods therein for the payment of a debt amounting, say, to £1000. A deed is prepared between A. of the one part, and B. of the other part, whereby A. demises to B. all his interest in the shop and premises for the residue of his tenancy, save the last few days, subject to redemption upon payment of the £1000. By this means B. has a term in the premises. A. then by the same instrument attorns tenant to B. of the premises, at a weekly or monthly rent of say £1000, payable in advance. There is no assignment of A.'s personal chattels upon the premises, but B., wishing to recover his money, levies a distress for his arrears of rent. The creditor, by virtue of the distress, obtains a security upon the personal chattels, but he does not directly do so by the terms of the deed, and there is nothing to prevent the debtor at any time before distress removing the goods from the premises. A case came under my notice a short time since, where a deed of the above description had been executed. The debtor filed a petition for a liquidation, and afterwards the holder of the attornment deed (a Bristol merchant) distrained upon the premises, for a debt which was pre-existing at the date of the deed. Acting on behalf of the trustee under the liquidation, I gave notice of motion to set aside the deed, but as the estate was a small one, and looking at the decisions in Morton v. Woods and Jolly v. Arbuthnot, and a decision of the learned judge of the Exeter County Court, I consented, although with much reluctance, to compromise the matter by payment out of the estate of a sum equal to about one-half the claim, and the attornment deed was given up. I think in the proposed Act it should be enacted "that where by any deed or other instrument in writing a rent is reserved for the purpose of securing any principal sum of money to the person in whose favour such rent is reserved, or any person or persons in trust for him, so that any personal chattel may be liable to be distrained for payment of such principal sum, then that such deed or instrument in writing shall be null and void unless the requirements of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 25, or of this Act, be complied with." It may be that the 3rd section will have the effect of rendering deeds of the above description void, but as the measure is a most important one I think it desirable the Bill should not pass without its provisions being well considered, and I hope to see in your columns the views of other members of the Profession upon the point I have raised.

JOSEPH GIBBS.

OFFICIALS UNDER THE LAND TRANSFER BILL.—I think our branch of the legal profession has a right to complain of the Land Titles and Transfer Bill, that the appointments proposed to be made of registrar, assistant registrars, and examiners of title, both in the London and district registries, are reserved exclusively for barristers. This reservation it is difficult to justify. It cannot be said that solicitors are excluded on the ground of incompetency; for it requires little acquaintance with the facts to be aware that there are a vastly larger number of competent conveyancers among solicitors than among barristers. I can see no other ground for the exclusion of solicitors than the precedents which have so often made legal appointments a monopoly of the other branch of the Profession. These precedents are not founded on justice, and it cannot be the interest of the public or the aim of the Legislature to perpetuate injustice. The main object of the Bill is to simplify conveyancing by the abolition of the time-honoured abstract of title. It is childish to suppose that when this abolition is effected the profits of solicitors will not be enormously diminished, or that the increase in the number of transactions will be sufficient to compensate for such diminution. No compensation is provided by the Bill, and doubtless none is contemplated by its promoters. The branch of the Profession which it is especially proposed to injure by the Bill has an especial claim to a share in the appointments which are to be created thereby, and it is to be hoped that members of Parliament who are also solicitors will do their best to obtain a modification of the clauses objected to. I cannot see why all the appointments referred to should not be thrown open to barristers and solicitors of ten years' standing indiscriminately. The effect of this would be that the best men could be appointed irrespective of the branch of the Profession to which they belong. Doubtless the superior political influence and compact organisation of the Bar would secure the lion's share of appointments for barristers, and they could not reasonably complain of the excision from the Bill of what is an injustice to, and a slur upon an honourable and learned profession.

GREGORY W. BYRNE.

JUSTICES' CLERKS.—I would suggest that a clause prohibiting clerks to justices of counties, divisions, liberties, or franchises, from being employed in any prosecution at the quarter sessions, in short, a similar clause to that contained in the late Mr. Oke's Justices' Procedure Bill, sect. 16, and Sir David Salomons' Justices' Clerks Bill, s. 13, introduced into Parliament last session, should be incorporated in one of the Bills now before Parliament relating to solicitors, unless there is some certainty of a Bill relating more particularly to justices' clerks being also brought forward.

UNIFORMITY.

THE WORKING OF TRIBUNALS OF COMMERCE.—As the late report of the Judicature Commission has drawn special attention to the subject of tribunals of commerce, it may not be uninteresting to members of the Profession if we say that for some time back we have been concerned in a matter depending before the Tribunal of Commerce of the Department of the Seine. The matters in dispute formed the subject of two cross actions, and of a supplementary action, and were, by orders made in December 1872 and January 1873, referred to an official arbitrator, who made his report in due course in June 1873. This report goes fully into the details of the case, without technicality, and covers eleven sides of foolscap. It is, in point of style and lucidity, a very creditable production. The arbitrator's fees for a complicated reference amounted to only 400 francs. The official arbitrator being "unable to reconcile the parties" transmitted his report to the court "closed and sealed." The matter came before the tribunal on 2nd July 1873, when the report of the arbitrator was opened and the case adjourned. On 13th Aug. 1873 the case was fully heard and argued, and judgment was given in favour of our clients on all points in all the actions. The final order of the tribunal is a most singular document, and is considerably longer than the report of the arbitrator to which, as well as to the orders of our own courts, in point of style, &c., it forms a decided contrast. Our opponent appealed from the decision of the tribunal, and, although the appeal has been appointed and placed on the list for hearing on many occasions, it has invariably been adjourned, and still remains unheard. Our correspondent in Paris, who is a solicitor, and who has the conduct of the case on behalf of our clients, is evidently wearied out with the repeated adjournments and the unsatisfactory nature of the proceedings. In advising us, towards the end of February, of a further adjournment, he writes as follows:—"What one sees of the working of Tribunals of Commerce in this country makes one sincerely hope that they may never be introduced into England." We confine our letter purposely to a simple statement of facts.

BARKER AND SONS.

THE ASSIZES—JUDGES AND SOLICITORS.—A case occurred on the last Norfolk circuit which raises a question of great importance to the Profession. A prisoner was being tried for perjury before Mr. Justice Brett. The counsel retained for the defence was engaged in the Civil Court; he handed his brief to another learned gentleman who was not able to get into the Crown Court until the first witness for the prosecution had been partially examined; he had not opened his brief, and knew nothing of the case. The attorney engaged for the defence made some suggestion to the counsel as to the line of cross-examination, whereupon the judge in a brusque and offensive manner, ordered the attorney to sit down, and said he would not allow any suggestion to be made to counsel. The facts were explained to the judge, but he repeated his determination not to permit any interference by the attorney, and stated if any such attempt were made he should know how to deal with it. For all practical purposes, therefore, the man was undefended. Mr. Justice Brett was the judge, and, whether or no, his decision in the particular case was governed by a sound discretion is not a question on which comment would be useful, but the general rule laid down by his Lordship is one which appears to me to be of great importance. I am old enough to remember most of the great judges, and I have ever been treated with the utmost courtesy and consideration by every judge before whom I have had occasion to appear. It has never been my fortune to appear before Mr. Justice Brett. I have constantly heard judges say that it is the duty of attorneys to be present to assist counsel. I have never before heard any judge attack an attorney for discharging this duty. In the course of thirty years' practice, I have never found any counsel so well up in the facts of the case as to be able to dispense with those suggestions that the attorney acquainted as he ought to be, with all the details, is able to afford him. In the hurry of the assize this is not to be expected. There are in every complicated case incidents arising, the importance of which the most careful and experienced practitioner cannot have foreseen. If it be the duty of attorneys in their instructions to counsel to exhaust every topic, to go into every detail, the costs of litigation would be greatly increased. The mass of papers would be such as to prevent the possibility of counsel mastering their contents; but this must either be done or the attorney must have a discretionary power to communicate with his counsel as the trial goes on. If the rule laid down by Mr. Justice Brett is to be adopted, it should be well known to the Profession; the attorney may then cease to attend the court, sending a clerk to produce papers, and counsel must have to master all the details of the case. Whatever rule may be laid down by the judges as a body will, I am sure, be honestly and faithfully carried out by the Profession. I protest against the chance of an attorney being upbraided by one judge for doing the very thing which other judges say it is his duty to do. None can deprecate more strongly than I the line adopted by some over-anxious practitioners in constantly interfering with counsel in the exercise of their duties—this is as injudicious as it is unbecoming; but counsel surely know how to protect themselves from this. A judge can rarely have the means of knowing whether the interference of the attorney is well timed or otherwise.

AN OLD SOLICITOR.

Distinction at the Final Examination.—Although personally I have not seen any letters or other communication touching upon the subject on which I am about to make a few suggestions, yet I feel almost sure it is a well worn string. It is: Why are the prizes and rewards given to the prize men at the final examination so inadequate; indeed, I may say so paltry (£5 worth of books)? That is the reward of years of hard and difficult work and study. For my part, I think it no stimulus, and when I tell people so, they merely answer "but consider the honour of being a prizeman at all." Quite right, it is an honour, and if that honour fall to the deserving one, I say give that deserving one a substantial recollection of that great praise that is due to him. Why, I ask, do not the Incorporated Law Society at least cancel the stamp by giving £80 in coin, or howsoever otherwise the first prizeman may desire; then to the second man surely £40 is not too much; and let £20 fall to the share of the third man? and even then it is not too much. Are law students in any one point, as a class, inferior to the university students? Some say yes; and for the sake of controversy only I admit that and will apply to them: "Give great honour where honour is due." Merely a glance will suffice to show you the almost numberless scholarships, prizes, &c., of real honour to the obtainer, which at the same time carries with it a very enticing sterling quality in the shape of £ s. d. Admitting, as before, the superiority of university students, I shall not be too presumptuous by applying to the law students: "Give little honour where equal honour is due," and would that slight admitted inferiority sweep away a share of those prizes, &c.? Certainly not. Give, as I say, little honour to the law students and only a suitable ratio of university honours, and then even my classification of rewards would die away to worthless insignificance. E. T. C.

The New Land Transfer Bill.—I am glad to find, from a paragraph in your last issue, that you so thoroughly agree with the statement I made a fortnight ago through your columns, that the excessive stamp duty now charged on conveyances is really one of the most serious obstacles to the free transfer of land, and that you consider a short clause might advantageously be introduced into the new Land Transfer Bill to reduce the duty to the same amount as that charged on mortgages. A perusal of the provisions of the Bill as printed in your last impression leads me to think that such a clause would find a most appropriate place in it, as it seems to me that the necessity of obtaining certificates of title will increase very considerably the expense of conveyancing during the next few years, and it would be some encouragement to purchasers of land to incur the expense of obtaining such certificates if they were relieved from an impost which would swell the expense of the transaction to a very considerable total. There is no doubt that the effect of such a provision, especially under the new Land Transfer Act, would be largely to increase the number of conveyances on which duty would be paid, as at the present time all kinds of expedients are resorted to for the purpose of avoiding the payment of stamp duties in large transactions. The duty on conveyances at present is in many cases almost a prohibitory one, and prevents many dealings with land from being carried out in a legal and business-like manner. Take, for instance, the case of a cotton spinner whose mill is worth £40,000, and is mortgaged for £30,000 (by no means an uncommon circumstance in Lancashire), such a man cannot in any way deal with his equity of redemption in this property (which is only worth to him £10,000), even by taking in a partner, for instance, without the payment of a stamp duty of £200, i.e., 10s. per cent. on the full value of the mill, unless some expedient is resorted to for the purpose of avoiding the stamp duty payable by law on the transaction. It seems to me that on the conveyance of an equity of redemption, stamp duty ought only to be charged on the purchase money actually paid, as in all other cases, because as a rule the heavier the mortgage is, the less is the purchaser able to pay a tax on the full value of the estate. As the result of some practical experience in conveyancing in this part of the country, I am of opinion that if the Government were to introduce into their Land Transfer Bill a clause reducing the stamp duty on conveyances to the same amount as the duty on mortgages, and providing that the duty should be paid in all cases on the actual purchase money only; it would do more to "lessen the expense of conveyancing," and remove a more serious "obstacle to dealings with real property," than any other provision of the measure, and at the same time I do not believe that the revenue would suffer to any appreciable extent from the change. I trust that the president and council of the Legal Practitioners' Society will lose no time in having such a clause introduced into the Bill and I think that this might with advantage be done whilst the Bill is in committee in the Lords.

Bankruptcy Rules.—I think there is an error in Rule 44 made under the Bankruptcy Act 1869. The rule refers to an application by a debtor to dismiss a petition on the ground that upon the trial of the validity of the creditor's debt it has been decided against. The rule states that the registrar shall give notice for the hearing of the application "on the production of a copy of the judgment of the court in which the question was tried, or an office copy thereof." Doubtless the rule was intended to be similar in form to Rule 43, and the words "of a copy," which I have italicised, were inadvertently inserted. H. S.

Articled Clerks.—I am pleased to find from your paper of the 4th inst., that an effort is being made to remove some of the difficulties which recent decisions have placed in the way of articled clerks, who have accepted offices or held employments during the term of their articles. The Bill printed in your columns applies only to clerks who may accept office after the passing of the measure. Permit me to call your attention to the case of many gentlemen who have taken commissions in the militia or volunteers, or have accepted small offices as secretaries to societies, committeemen in public institutions, and other employments. I have had many articled clerks, I have encouraged every one of them to apply for commissions in the volunteers, and have always advised those who have attained twenty-one to serve on committees, and to take part in public business. I believe the knowledge of men, and the business training they thus attain, to be a most important element in their education, a step to their future success in life. The cases decided under the 6 & 7, Vict. c. 73, and that of Re Pepper-corn (L. Rep. 1 C. P. 473) induced me to think that the true question was whether the employment undertaken was of such a nature as to occupy an undue portion of the clerk's time, and so prevent his acquiring a practical knowledge of his profession. The recent cases proceed on an entirely different footing. The decision in Re Peppercorn is questioned. The result is that several clerks have been refused admission, and one gentleman has applied to have his articles vacated, on the ground that he has been advised that his having held a commission in a militia regiment during his articles will prevent his being admitted. If this be good law I know many attorneys who have been improperly admitted; I know many articled clerks who may reasonably anticipate an objection to their admission. The principle recognised in the Bill now before Parliament is, I submit, the true principle. If so, is it not fair that it should be made to apply to the cases of gentlemen who are now serving under articles, and who, with the consent of their employers, have already occupied a portion of their leisure in pursuits not inconsistent with the tenor of their articles?

A Solicitor of Thirty Years' Standing.

The Administration of Oaths.—As the subject of the administration of oaths is attracting attention, I beg leave to renew a suggestion which I made in your columns more than twenty years ago—namely, that every attorney or solicitor should ex officio be authorised to administer oaths and take declarations and acknowledgments of deeds by married women. The power to administer an oath is merely a matter of public convenience. All that is wanted is that the oath shall be administered by someone whose authority can be ascertained, and who can be found, if required, to vouch his signature, or to answer for any irregularity. The notion that a man must be in practice ten years, or that he should be specially appointed a commissioner before he can properly administer an oath is mere chamber nonsense. Judges' clerks, County Court bailiffs, and other subordinate officers are daily administering oaths all over the kingdom. The rule that I propose would save much time and trouble. Even in the City, where we have many commissioners, our clerks have to ramble about from office to office sometimes for the best part of an hour before they can get sworn. In important matters where clients have to be sworn, we generally make a previous appointment with a commissioner so as to avoid having to run about for one when wanted. Then, again, I would abolish the rule which prevents an attorney or solicitor administering an oath to his client. What the foundation of this rule is I cannot tell. No doubt those who made it had some dim notion that it would prevent fraud, but after much experience in the preparation of affidavits, I am unable to perceive that the rule has any such effect. Except in the case of a deponent who cannot read, the commissioner knows nothing whatever of the contents of an affidavit sworn before him, and he in no case vouches for its accuracy. On the other hand a solicitor constantly attests his client's execution of deeds involving matters of the greatest importance. He may prepare a security of £100,000 and attest his client's signature to it, but if he prepares an affidavit of debt for £10 he must take his client to be sworn before a specially appointed commissioner who has no interest in the matter. Can anybody say why this should be? What is the difference between attesting a deed and authenticating an affidavit? Chas. Grundy.

Legal Practitioners' Society. — With reference to the letter of a "Disappointed Member" in your impression of the 28th ult., and that of "X. Y. Z.," published by you on the 4th inst., I should like, with your permission, to say a few words. I am not prepared to acquiesce in your first correspondent's view of the proposed Bill as a "feeble bantling." It seems to me, with "X. Y. Z.," that its shortness is, in fact, a merit which will facilitate its passing into law (perhaps incorporated with another measure), and is no proof of feebleness; but I venture to complain that the society had no opportunity of discussing its merit or demerit before it was introduced into the House of Commons, and of making in their proper place many of the suggestions which have since appeared in your columns. No general meeting of the society has been held since the 7th Jan. last, and two committees were appointed, one for the purpose of framing the rules of the body, and the other to initiate certain legislation. The latter committee met on several occasions, and the result is the draft Bill which you were good enough to publish. I think it was generally understood by the members of the society at the last meeting, that when the rules of the society had been framed, and the draft of the proposed Bill had been prepared, another meeting should be called to approve both, and had this course been followed I cannot but think that the Bill, though still confining itself to its present object, might have been rendered by the collective consideration of the members of the society more complete and effective. It may be urged that time would by this means have been lost, and the Bill would not, in consequence, have been introduced this session into Parliament. As it is, however, it stands but small chance of being passed this session, and would scarcely have been retarded by another meeting and discussion; and I think most members will agree with me that a perfect Bill for next session is better than a prematurely-born measure for this, doomed in all probability to perish in the autumnal massacre of the innocents. Apart from the subject-matter of this Bill, however, I submit that frequent periodical meetings of the society should take place, without which its existence is purely nominal. The motion made by a member of the Incorporated Law Society, as referred to in your paper of the 4th April, would apply with equal force to this society, and I, for one, can see no advantage in occult individual workings in the background.

94. Winding-up.—The members of a small but unsuccessful society, registered with limited liability, under the Industrial and Provident Societies Acts 1862 and 1867, are about to wind-up the concern voluntarily according to resolution passed and signed at a general meeting called for that purpose. The members are all working men and most of them poor. All trade debts and liabilities can be at once paid, and the business closed, but the members will have to lose the amount of their shares, which they are all willing to do, and I beg to inquire (there being no creditors), is a notice in the Gazette of winding-up and dissolution sufficient; or, can the society be wound-up without the intervention of the court to sanction its proceedings, and in what way?

[The intervention of the court is not necessary, simply resolutions, as required, by statute, which must be filed with accounts at the Joint Stock Companies office.—Ed. Sols'. Dept.]

95. Shop Window.—A., a shop keeper, has his shop window made of glass of large size, each plate of the value of £10, in lieu of small panes of glass. B. is engaged on some work in the street, and accidentally breaks one of these large panes of glass. Is B. liable for the full extent of the value of the glass, viz., £10? I have some recollection of a case some time ago in a County Court, but cannot just find it, where the judge decided that the person was not liable beyond the price of an ordinary pane of glass. A. LEGAL EXTRACTS.

THE MORAL SANCTION IN LAW.

IN his preface to the third edition of his valuable work on International Law, Mr. Wheaton, speaking of the rules embodied in the Law of Nations, says: "The duties which are imposed by these rules are enforced by moral sanctions . . ." And Prof. Woolsey, in a recent able article in the January number of the International Review, referring to tribunals of international arbitration, says: "A moral sanction is not enough when such tribunals have announced a decree which is displeasing either to one or to both of the contesting parties." In the domain of international law the "moral sanction" is constantly referred to, and particularly so at the present, when the subject of international codification and arbitration is receiving unwonted attention and discussion. The term "moral sanction," when applied to law, usually has reference to the administration and enforcement of law. It has two significations, the absolute and contingent, the first being applied to rules of imperfect obligation, and the second to rules of perfect obligation. Where a rule of law can be applied or enforced only by moral force, and not by physical force, we have a case of imperfect obligation—a case for the proper application of the absolute moral sanction. It has now come to be understood that all the rules which govern the intercourse of nations are not susceptible of enforcement by physical force, there being no tribunal or power above the nations to apply and enforce those rules. The political independence of nations is such that they consider themselves physically free, and only morally bound in respect to any international rule or decision. The law of nations, as it now exists, and as it will be when codified, must always be applied and enforced with the consent of the national parties, and by the great moral force of international opinion. Whether this moral force will be, at any near period, sufficiently strong and invariable to secure an international agreement to a code and tribunal of arbitration, and a uniform obedience to that code and to the decisions of the tribunal of arbitration, it is not our design to discuss at present.

But there is another view of the moral sanction in law which is apparent of itself, but which, on account of its frequent appearance, remains unnoticed. A little reflection will show that the entire system of jurisprudence, under which civilized nations live, is largely supported by this same moral sanction, both in its absolute and in its contingent sense. It is seldom considered that even the rules of municipal law, which are said to be of perfect obligation, have, in their administration and enforcement, much of the absolute moral element. For instance, in the application of a plain principle in the law of contracts, the judicial mind is actuated by a moral impulse, or force, to determine and apply the principle correctly.

If a judge refuses or neglects to apply a principle or rule of law as he deems correctly, there is no physical force that can compel him to do so. It is the moral sanction that forces the judge to declare and apply the law in accordance with reason and precedent. Again, it is the moral sanction which disposes the judge toward following and adopting those precedent decisions which he finds to be in accordance with reason and usage. The "authority" of the reports, elementary works and decisions, is only a moral sanction; and it is only this kind and quality of authority—this and nothing more—which has built up jural systems everywhere, and rendered law at all symmetrical. Thus, the "authority" of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States is a moral one as to the State courts; and the "authority" of the English decisions on matters of common law interpretation is by no means physical or perfect, but simply moral, as to the courts in this country. Physically speaking, every judge is independent of every other judge's decision, of every rule of interpretation, of every body of laws. It is only in the allegiance which the judge owes to conscience, in the tendency to obey reason and justice, in the influence of a sound and honourable public opinion that the security of society, in respect to the proper interpretation and application of laws, is found.

And the existence of the contingent moral element in the enforcement of law, whether adjudged or unadjudged, is patent. In proof of this, witness how seldom physical force is used in the enforcement of laws in civilised countries. The moral sanction plays the largest part, by far, in securing obedience to law on the part of the people. And this, not only in the department of police regulation, but in the department of adjudicative law. The majority of mankind fulfil their contracts, not because they are compelled to by the executive force of the law, but because of their willingness to obey the law, and their fear (which is in itself a moral force) of the consequences of disobedience or failure. In the execution of the processes of courts, the subpœna, the summons, the injunction, the execution, and even the order of arrest, how little of pure physical force is required, and how much the moral sanction effectuates the desired results! Again, it is apparent how dependent the people are upon the influence of the moral sanction on the executive officers. Should these officers fail to do their duty properly, what physical force could be brought to bear to compel a proper performance? Removal from office, impeachment and disqualification might follow, but that would not execute the decree for the omission to execute which the officer is impeached, removed, or disqualified. Suppose the chief executive officer, a governor, or the president, should refuse to use the military power, in a case of disobedience to law, or should assist, by military force, an insurrection, or a party disobeying a legal process, what physical force would avail in that particular instance?

Indeed, the moral sanction in law is so common, universal and essential, that we fail to appreciate its importance, and are apt to think that the enormous results of judicial decisions, and executive orders, and legislative ordinances are brought about by physical force, whereas the fact is that not a tithe of the influence of the law consists in this kind of force. The moral sanction in law is a notable and magnificent instance of the production of great social, commercial and political results, with only a minimum of physical force.

LAW SOCIETIES.

THE UNION SOCIETY OF LONDON.

AT a meeting of the Union Society of London, at 1, Adam-street, Adelphi, held on Tuesday evening the 14th inst., the following subject was, on the motion of Mr. C. Ford, submitted to discussion, and carried: "That in the opinion of this House the present consolidated regulations of the four Inns of Court as affecting solicitors desirous of becoming barristers-at-law require modification, and that greater facilities should be afforded to barristers-at-law desirous of becoming solicitors."

HUDDERSFIELD LAW STUDENTS' DEBATING SOCIETY.

AT a meeting of this society held at the County Court, on Monday evening last, presided over by Mr. M. J. Burn, the subject under discussion was "Has a pecuniary legatee a right to call upon a residuary devisee to contribute to the payment of debts? (Hensman v. Fryer, 37 L. J. 97, Ch.; Dugdale v. Dugdale, 41 L. J. 565, Ch.; and cases therein cited.)" Messrs. G. F. Johnson and B. Crook, supported the affirmative, and Messrs. J. Yeoman, and A. H. J. Fletcher, the negative side of the question, which was ultimately decided in favour of the negative by a considerable majority.

LAW STUDENTS' DEBATING SOCIETY.

THE Society met on Tuesday evening last at the Law Institution, Mr. Nicholls in the chair. The following question was discussed, being No. 537 legal:—Was the case of Stuart v. Cockerell (L. Rep. 8 Eq. 607) rightly decided, and carried in the affirmative. Mr. G. S. Gibb was elected a member of the committee.

ARTICLED CLERKS' SOCIETY.

A MEETING of this society was held at Clement's-inn Hall, on Wednesday, the 15th April, Mr. F. J. Baker in the chair. Mr. Wingfield opened the subject for the evening's debate, viz.: "That the unlimited power of disposing of property by will ought to be limited in favour of persons having a moral claim upon the testator." The motion was lost by a majority of four.

F. C. SANDES, ESQ.

THE late Falkiner Chute Sandes, Esq., solicitor, who died on the 8th inst., in London, was the youngest son of the late Thomas William Sandes, Esq., of Sallow Glen, in the county of Kerry, by Margaret, daughter of Francis Chute, Esq., of Chute Hall, county Kerry. He was born about the year 1815, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated B.A. in 1837, and proceeded to take his M.A. degree in due course in 1865. Mr. Sandes acted for many years as the solicitor of the government of India on their Bengal establishment; and at the time of his decease was a magistrate for the county of Kerry. He married, in 1860, Amelia, third daughter of the late Sir John Lister Kaye, Bart., of Derby Grange, Yorkshire, but became a widower in the following year.

W. T. THORNTON, ESQ.

THE late William Thomas Thornton, Esq., formerly Receiver-General of Inland Revenue, Somerset House, who died in London on the 10th ult., in the seventy-fifth year of his age, was the youngest son of the late Edmund Thornton, Esq., of Skerton, Caton, and Whittington, in the county of Lancaster, by Jane, daughter of the Ven. Thomas Butler, rector of Bentham and Whittington, Lancashire, archdeacon in the diocese of Chester, and domestic chaplain to the Duke of Devonshire. He was born at Whittington Hall, in the year 1799, and was educated at Rugby. He was appointed in 1846 Receiver-General of Inland Revenue at Somerset House, but resigned that office in 1851, having previously been the head of the Security Department of the Excise Office in London from the year 1824. Mr. Thornton married in 1824, Hannah Isabella Cornelia, eldest daughter of Colonel John Cornelius Craigie-Halkett, of Lahill and Dumbarnie, in the county of Fife, by whom he has left a son, Major Charles Edmund Thornton, of Kirkland Hall and Beaumont Cote, in the county of Lancaster, and formerly of the Royal Fusiliers. The remains of the deceased gentleman were interred at All Souls' cemetery, Kensal Green.

The Law and the Lawyers.

WE recently had occasion to notice that the courts in Ireland had not adopted the rule laid down by our Court of Queen's Bench in Raeburn v. Andrews, that persons resident in Scotland or Ireland suing in English Courts need not give security for costs. The hesitation to follow this decision has now happily disappeared. In a case of White v. Carrol before the CHIEF JUSTICE, Mr. Justice O'BRIEN and Mr. Justice FITZGERALD on the 16th inst., the efficacy of the Judgments Extension Act was acknowledged. The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE said: "The three kingdoms were united, he hoped indisolubly, and the practice of compelling a person living in one part of the same United Kingdom to give security for costs on suing a person living in another part was anomalous, and ought to be discontinued." And Mr. Justice FITZGERALD said that he rejoiced that they had now disposed once and for all of a practice which since the three kingdoms had become a united kingdom was a disgrace to our land.

A QUESTION of some importance in bankruptcy proceedings has been decided by the Judge of the Yarmouth County Court, namely, that an execution creditor who has seized and sold, is not entitled to his costs of action out of the proceeds when a bankruptcy petition has been presented within fourteen days. The words "costs and expenses" were contained in the Act of 1849; the word "expenses" only appears in the Act of 1869, and the learned Judge considered that this was an intentional omission on the part of the Legislature. This is an additional penalty on a creditor for being diligent in the prosecution of his legal remedies.

MR. HARRINGTON, Judge of County Courts (Circuit 22), suggests that the true remedy for the evils of the small credit system is an abridgment of the period of limitation. To abolish imprisonment of persons "who fraudulently or contumaciously disobey" the orders of the courts for the payment of money, would, he says, "be practically to prohibit the recovery of small debts at all." He thinks, however, that a statute of limitations graduated on a scale varying with the amount of debt contracted in any one transaction, and applying equally to judgments which the plaintiff takes no steps to enforce, as to debts for which the creditor neglects to sue, would have the effect of checking undue credit and the speculative purchase of doubtful debts, while it would not drive into our workhouses those whose means of existence consist in discounting their future earnings. This is a sensible suggestion; but that, if adopted, it would have all the beneficial results predicted, is very doubtful.

IT may be of interest to our readers, although not a matter of vast importance, to be informed that an equity of redemption can be called an estate only by a figure of speech. This has been decided by Vice-Chancellor BACON, in Paget v. Eds (30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 228. The question in that suit was whether as between Englishmen there could be foreclosure of a mortgage of an estate out of the jurisdiction. The leading case is known as the Sark case (Toller v. Carteret, 2 Vern. 494), the mortgaged property being situated in the island of that name in the channel. Vice-Chancellor BACON has now granted a decree for foreclosure of an estate situated in Nevis, an island in the West Indies. The jurisdiction is important, and we are glad to see it sustained, the Vice-Chancellor, indeed, having no doubt on the point. Recurring again to the right known as an equity of redemption to be called an estate, we may add his Honour's remarks: "It may be," he said, "in some instances that a husband may have a title by curtesy, and that gavelkind and borough English may apply to it. All these are necessary consequences of the law which recognises the interest of a mortgagor in his equity of redemption, but they do not alter the nature of the interest; they do not create an estate; and, in my opinion, it is a misapplication of words to call an equity of redemption an 'estate' in the proper technical legal sense."

THE phraseology of many of the numerous rules which appear in the Schedule to the Ballot Act, was elaborately reviewed by Mr. Justice GROVE in his judgment in the case of Stowe v. Joliffe, an interlocutory application in the Petersfield Election Petition, decided on Saturday last. The application was for an order to inspect the marked register of voters, the rejected ballot papers, and the counterfoils of the ballot papers: (See Rules 29, 35, 36, 37, 40, 41, 42.) The object of the application was deposed to be to save the needless trouble and expense that might be incurred in getting up evidence against the votes of versons who might turn out after all not to have voted. A majority of the Court of Common Pleas (GROVE and DENMAN, JJ.) has now held that the counterfoils and the rejected ballot papers cannot be inspected, unless a very strong case be made out. BRETT, J., however, was of opinion that inspection ought to be granted, upon just the same principles that inspection is granted in cases of ordinary litigation—the principle of assisting litigants in obtaining all that they desire for the reasonable conduct of their case; and he threw out a suggestion that the backs only of the ballot papers should be allowed to be seen, so that "nothing but the exercise of a most perverse ingenuity" could frustrate the purpose of the Ballot Act. But the majority of the court has pronounced for drawing the line tight, and all that the petitioner has taken by his motion is a permission to inspect the marked register of voters, without which we imagine it would be next to impossible to conduct his case with anything like accuracy, and which is among the documents which, by Rule 42, are "open to public inspection," although, from a misconstruction of Rule 29, it had been sealed up in the same packet with the counterfoils. Notwithstanding the elaborate judgments pronounced, we venture to say that Rules 29, 35, 36, 37, 40, 41, and 42, will give still further trouble to the Court of Common Pleas; and, although it is with much diffidence that we give any opinion upon a question so new and complex, we must say that the view of Mr. Justice BRETT is that which commends itself most to our judgment. And it is a view which has at any rate this to recommend it, that the principle which it enunciates is one which is very easy of application. The point of the case was hit, we think, by Mr. Justice DENMAN, but wrongly decided. "Required," in Rule 40, is, we cannot help thinking, only Act of Parliament language for "asked for," and what the court, under Rule 40, was intended to be "satisfied" of, is not whether the petitioner wishes for information, little or much, but whether his real object is to infringe the secrecy of the Ballot Act or not.

A NOTICE of motion appeared on Monday last, for a Parliamentary return of "the number of cases which have been brought before the Railway Commission, specifying the number on which any adjudication has taken place." The Dover case having been withdrawn, what may be called decided cases are, we believe, reduced to two—Goddard's case, and the Buckfastleigh Railway case. It is curious that in both cases the defendant railway company claimed a certain independence of the statutory maximum. A fourth case is pending, that of the East and West Junction Railway Company v. Great Western Railway Company, and raises a perfectly novel question under the new Act as to "through routes." But it is not so much the litigated cases which will show the working of the Railway Commission as those in which its powers have been successfully exercised under sect. 7 of the Act, whereby the Commissioners "may, before requiring any formal proceedings to be taken," communicate a complaint to the company complained of, "so as to afford them an opportunity of making such observations thereon as they may think fit." Generally speaking, it must be remembered it is for the complainant to make out a primâ facie case of inequality, but that being made, the onus is cast upon the company to justify the charge: (Per Willes, J., in Nicholson v. Great Western Railway Company, 5 C. B., N. S., 431.)

MR. LOPES has received only the credit which is properly due to him for bringing in his measure for the reform of our jury system. We have so recently expressed our views on the subject, that it would be mere reiteration to repeat them whenever discussions take place in the House of Commons. Mr. LOPES' Bill has this advantage over that introduced by Sir JOHN COLERIDGE, it is less ambitious, and devotes more attention to practical details. Mr. LOPES proposes to increase what he calls "the area of jury force," by making lodgers liable to serve both on common and special juries, and by raising the age of absolute exemption from sixty to seventy. The new rating qualification for special jurors is maintained, although Mr. LOPES intimated his own belief that it had led to the deterioration of special juries. This is a belief not only generally shared in as a matter of opinion, but provable to demonstration. In civil cases the Bill proposes to reduce the number of jurymen to seven, though either party will have the right to ask for a jury of twelve, and an unanimous verdict will still be required. The remuneration of common jurymen is raised to 5s. for each case tried. Power is given to continue trials, notwithstanding the illness or death of a juryman, and to empanel special juries in criminal cases; and there are many other minor points, such as the payment of overseers out of the Consolidated Fund for making up the lists, the transmission of summonses by post, &c. There seems to be every prospect that a very useful enactment may be made out of this Bill.

THE 23rd section of the Bankruptcy Act 1869 is one which has given rise to considerable practical difficulties. It will be remembered that it relates to the disclaimer of onerous contracts by the trustee, and it provided that the property disclaimed, if a lease, shall be deemed to have been surrendered on the date of the disclaimer. It was apprehended that difficulties might arise under this section affecting the rights of third parties, and accordingly in lieu of fresh legislation the 28th rule of 1871 was framed, which says that, "Where any property of a bankrupt acquired by a trustee under 'The Bankruptcy Act 1869,' shall consist of a leasehold interest, the trustee shall not execute a disclaimer of the same without the leave of the court being first obtained for that purpose; and upon any application to the court for such leave, notice of the desire of the trustee to disclaim such interest shall be given to such person or persons as the court shall direct, and such order shall be made thereon as the court shall think fit." A somewhat peculiar case under this rule was before Mr. Registrar MURRAY on Tuesday. A bankrupt was monthly tenant of a dwelling house and premises under an agreement, and by an agreement of even date he contracted for the purchase of the residue of his landlord's lease. He remained in possession at the time of the bankruptcy, and the question was whether the trustee was right in applying to the court for leave to disclaim. The learned registrar considered that, having regard to sect. 23 of the Act and the 28th rule the court should grant the leave to the trustee, but he did not arrive at this conclusion without some hesitation.

INFERIOR COURTS AND THE PROFESSION.

HAVING this week a constituency embracing the entire Profession, we think it more desirable to direct attention to subjects of general importance than to dry matters of law. One of the most engrossing questions affects the future of County Courts, and their relation to our judicial system, as amended by the Judicature Act. The labours of the Judicature Commission have thrown considerable light upon the working, not only of the County Courts proper, but upon all similar courts of inferior jurisdiction. It is somewhat singular that local courts, other than County Courts, should have continued to exist and indeed to flourish in the midst of an active County Court jurisdiction. There are not wanting those who say that such courts are kept alive by the attorneys, who there obtain better remuneration than in the County Court; and we do not know that we need deny that to a considerable extent this is the truth. But no reflection is thereby cast upon the Profession, inasmuch as it could hardly be expected that a solicitor would advise his client to go into a court which in cases under a certain amount gives no fees to advocates, and above that amount gives or refuses costs at its discretion. Partly, therefore, for their own interest, and largely in the interests of their clients, solicitors have patronised and kept alive such courts as the Lord Mayor's Court in London, and the Passage Court at Liverpool.

These courts, as we have said, flourish, and have done so for a length of time; but it seems extremely doubtful whether they will continue to exist very much longer. In a somewhat remarkable compilation by Mr. FALCONER, a Judge of Welsh County Courts, which we have recently received—"On County Courts, Local Courts of Record, and the changes proposed to be made in such Courts in the Second Report of the Judicature Commissioners"—we have all the information which can enable us to judge what the future of local jurisdiction will be. It is beyond dispute that of late years the County Courts have done their work remarkably well; the simple fact being that the members of the Bar who have been selected for the Judgships have been almost uniformly men of acknowledged learning and ability. Moreover, the prejudice which crippled the courts at the outset has been gradually disappearing, and the more the jurisdiction has been extended, the more reliance has the public seemed disposed to place on their capacity to deal with important questions. The jurisdiction in bankruptcy is perhaps as important as any branch of administrative business transacted in any court in the kingdom. We have repeatedly reported cases involving nice questions of law and the distribution of large sums of money, where no attempt has been made to appeal against the decision. So again in Admiralty. A competent London solicitor, who has the great bulk of the work in the City of London Court, bears high testimony to the Judge's knowledge of shipping, and to the ability with which he disposes of Admiralty suits. Whilst we can speak thus favourably of the courts generally, there undoubtedly have been and are exceptions—cases in which business is positively driven from the court. We do not dwell much upon this, because it is almost impossible to avoid defects in a system so extensive.

The opinion of County Courts being favourable—and that favourable opinion is likely to grow rather than to diminish—the first question arising is, Should any other local courts be retained? The Judicature Commissioners, in their report of July 1872, recommended the abolition of all local and borough courts of record. In that year twenty-six made returns of business transacted in them. Omitting the Salford Court and the Liverpool Court of Passage returns, there were only 443 cases above £20 entered in the twenty-four other named courts, and of these 444 cases judgments were obtained in 183. Local courts of record ought, therefore, to be considered doomed, and when they go, what is to justify the maintenance of the Lord Mayor's Court? Some score attorneys who practise almost exclusively in that court, and a Bar which whilst being very small is by no means conspicuously able, must look with alarm on a proposed abolition. We do not urge its abolition: it has transacted a vast amount of business, and given much satisfaction; but it has glaring defects, which if it is to continue to exist must be remedied. The pleading in the court is absurd, objections to the jurisdiction are almost impracticable, the fiction by which jurisdiction is obtained is in many cases scarcely creditable, and the costs are very considerable. It is really difficult to understand how it has continued its work by the side of the City of London Court, which has a simple and inexpensive but thoroughly effective procedure.

We are now, however, most concerned with the County Courts themselves. The Mayor's Court may go; all the local courts of record may go, but the County Courts will remain. Whether to continue a separate system, or to be incorporated in our united judicature, matters little—they will remain, and probably grow in importance. There are questions to be considered with reference to them which consequently become of great moment. To recommend them to the legal Profession, it is essential that the remuneration of advocates should be placed upon a proper footing. This is a primarily essential. In the next place, it should be in the discretion of the Judge to employ shorthand writers in cases of sufficient importance, in order to secure that cases should be satisfactorily stated on appeal. We regard this question of appeal as one of the first importance, and there ought to be some official record of proceedings which may be consulted by parties independently of the Judge's notes. Cases have occurred in our experience in which a Judge has wholly failed to inform the Court above of the true state of things; and when it becomes necessary to remit a case to be re-stated it is too apt to amount to a denial of justice. We do not believe that cases of any importance would be tried in County Courts were there not an easy mode of appeal, and it is essential that cases should come up stating the facts with absolute accuracy, and giving the court precise information as to the point decided. It is too late now to talk of the advisability of having some formal pleadings in the County Courts. Mr. FALCONER regards it as a happy circumstance that none exist. Undoubtedly they are in many cases unnecessary to raise the question in dispute, and we must consider that when the old forms are abolished, and cases are brought before the courts on statement and answer, a similar procedure might be usefully employed in the County Courts in cases above £5. This would very much simplify the process by way of appeal.

Another question which is pressing forward has reference to the concentration of courts. Many Judges feel it a hardship to be made itinerant: they would, as a rule, prefer heavier judicial work and less time spent on the railway. Such evidence as that of Mr. CAILLARD, which Mr. FALCONER cites in his work, should not be overlooked. That learned Judge says: "As Judge, I travel, I believe, not less than 3500 miles a year. I have twelve Courts, seven monthly and five bi-monthly, in my Circuit. Of the 'monthly' Courts, Bath requires my attendance 30 days in the year at least, and will probably require more, even if the jurisdiction is not increased. In considering the work of the provincial Judges the travelling should not be forgotten. True it is that the sittings are occasionally short, and at some of the smaller Courts are even generally so; but (taking the Circuit throughout) the sittings are not unfrequently very long and fatiguing, and if the time taken up in travelling be added to the time occupied in Court it will be very generally found that the Judge's duties have extended over many hours on each Court day. I do not in the least complain of the travelling, notwithstanding its serious 'wear and tear,' because it is a great saving of expense and time to the suitors that, so far as fairly practicable, the one individual, the Judge, and not the many, the suitors, witnesses, and others, should travel. It need scarcely be added that the work of the Judge is not confined to his Court days."

This is a view which is entitled to great respect, as being unselfish, but we think that Judges and the Profession should not be altogether sacrificed to the convenience of suitors. We believe it is contemplated to attempt concentration, and, if it can be done without causing loss to the general body of suitors, it would be a desirable reform.

The service of process and the payment of fees are two matters requiring consideration. Should the process be served by the plaintiff or his agent? Should it be personal on the defendant? To both of these questions Mr. FALCONER gives a most emphatic reply in the negative. Personal service was a proposal sanctioned by the Judicature Commissioners. "Personal service as a rule," says Mr. FALCONER, "would require a great increase in the staff of bailiffs, its necessity would delay the hearing of many hundreds of causes, and the expense of service would be greatly increased. If in any case there has been a mistake or any error, or the wrong person has been served, or execution without any service of the original summons, or insufficient service under the present Rules, there is ample opportunity offered to defendants to obtain assistance in the Registrar's office, in order to apply to the court and correctly to ascertain the facts and to remedy any evil. The Judge of a County Court can always be applied to without expense or professional interference when any complaint of official irregularity is suggested, and no Judge would so injure his own authority or do so unjust an act as to suppress it. That this is so is among the advantages of a domestic tribunal."

This opinion he supports by a formidable array of judicial dicta, and several experienced practitioners take the view that personal service is impracticable. The payment of fees is a matter of detail upon which much might be said, but we have already gone to considerable length. This subject, and the question of the jurisdiction of registrars, and whether it should be increased, will have to be discussed fully hereafter, and we must return to these matters on a future occasion.

One word in conclusion for the present. It is at this moment of great consequence to solicitors that they should realise their position. The County Court will ultimately dispose of the great bulk of common law and bankruptcy business. To regulate fees, hearings, costs, and procedure generally, concerns almost every country solicitor personally: and with this observation we quit the subject.

THE LAND TITLES AND TRANSFER BILL.

IN our last number we glanced at the general scope of the Bill, and we now propose to point out what additions or alterations we consider should be made in it to make it a workable measure. Before doing so, however, we cannot refrain from expressing our regret that the Lord Chancellor has not been able to see his way to making the registry one of land and not, as it appears to us to be, one of owners only. When a measure of such importance, and one which will make such a great change in the system of conveyancing is being carried out, it seems to us a pity that what appears to us the most perfect plan should not be adopted. The primary object of a land register is to tell at sight, and without fear of mistake, who is the person capable of transferring a specified piece of land. The purchaser cannot mistake the piece of land which he requires, and in our opinion the best and least expensive system in the end would be to have a large and complete plan or set of plans, showing all the property in the district, upon which each different property would be distinguished by a different number, a reference to which in the register book would show at a glance the name of the owner and the prior charged if any.

We are now publishing in these columns a full copy of the Bill, the first part of which our readers will remember appeared in our issue of the 11th inst., and, having the copy of the Bill thus before them, we shall only refer to the different clauses by their unmbers.

Clause 2. Copyholds and all estates and interests therein are excluded from the operation of the Act. In mining districts it is not uncommon for a copyholder of inheritance, to whom the lord has granted a licence to work the mines, to grant leases of such mines for longer terms than twenty-one years. The court rolls of the manor show the dealings with the surface and the licence to work the mines, but do not show the lease. This clause should, we think, be altered by including such leases.

Clause 4. The definition of "land" is not so definite as it might be made. It would, we think, in view of the coming operation of the Judicature Act, be as well to define the meaning of "legal estate" and "equitable estate."

Clause 5. By sub-sect. 2, any person entitled in equity to an estate tail, or to a base fee, or to an estate in fee simple in land, whether subject or not to any prior estate for life or for years, or to any incumbrance, may apply for registration, the result of which would be in effect to vest in such person the legal estate with absolute powers. It seems to us that the person in whom the legal estate is vested should know something of the application, as he probably may have some charges against the land. Provision should be made for giving him an opportunity of recouping himself either by making him a necessary party to the application, or by giving him notice prior to actual registration. If the latter course be adopted, a few words to that effect at the end of clause 18 will be necessary.

Clause 13. At the end of this clause we would suggest an addition of the words "unless and until the title to such adjoining land has been registered, and the description of such boundaries shall be found by the registrar to have been correct, in which case he shall state such fact upon the register of the title of both lands."

Clause 16. There appears to be a verbal inaccuracy in this clause, which provides that the registrar shall not require a title to commence "earlier than at least forty years previously," &c. The words "at least" should be omitted.

Clause 18. It does not seem clear whether or no the notice is to contain the statements of the interested persons and existing powers, and of the mortgages, charges, and incumbrances affecting the land, required to be furnished by sect. 7. It cannot be necessary to make such matters public, and the clause should be made clear upon the point. Further, it cannot be necessary for the persons whose interests or charges are admitted to be put to the trouble and expense of making a claim which, under sect. 19, would have to be brought before the registrar. We would suggest, as an addition to the clause, that with the notice required to be served by the last paragraph, a statement should be sent to such persons showing the estate, interest, or charge, which it is admitted they have, with an intimation that if it be correct they need take no further steps.

Clauses 11, 14, and 21. A doubt occurs to us whether the registrar or examiner of titles is or is not to examine the abstract with the documents of title. It would, perhaps, be better to clear up the doubt by providing that the solicitor or certificated conveyancer, should indorse and sign upon the abstract a certificate of its correctness, and that the abstract should show what stamps, if any, the documents bear, and by what parties they are executed, and, where necessary, how attested.

Clause 23. In view of the formation of the district registries, contemplated by part 10 of the Bill, it would appear desirable that all registrations should not be entered in the same book, but should be made in a series of books, which, upon the formation of the district registries, could be properly distributed between the different district registries. A division into counties is hardly suitable, but we cannot at present say that we can suggest any better.

Clause 28. The object of this clause is expressed in its side note: "Compulsory registration on sales after three years from commencement of Act." Until some person is registered as proprietor the instrument of conveyance is to "operate in equity only, and not be effectual at law to pass the legal estate in the land." In view of sub-sect. 11 of sect. 25 of the Judicature Act, it would seem doubtful what meaning the courts would give to the words in inverted commas, or similar words in other clauses of the Bill, hence the desirability of a definition of "legal estate" and "equitable estate." As compulsory registration is the sole object of the clause, it should provide that until registration the conveyance should have no effect at all. If any effect be given to conveyances under which no proprietor is registered, purchasers of most of the smaller classes of property will not go to the expense of registration, but will be satisfied with the equitable estate vested in them by the conveyance.

Clause 29. This clause convinces us of the advantages of the system of registration advocated at the commencement of this article. Under such a system the registrar could mark the book of reference or endorse the notice with the name of the parish and number of the land the registration of which is objected to. As the bill is framed, the registrar may have some trouble in framing a complete list of caveats so that he can tell to what land they relate, and unless the cautioner be obliged to furnish a very complete description, with perhaps a plan, the registrar may be unable to ascertain to what property the caveat applies.

Clause 32. The times within which the cautioner is allowed to oppose registration after personal service, or posting of the notice to him, appear too short. In these travelling days many people, particularly in vacation times, do not get their letters for more than ten days after they are posted. The service of the notice should be made so soon as the application is made, and the cautioner should have at least three weeks or a month, and perhaps more, in which to oppose it. The fact of a caveat being lodged should not cause a stay of the proceedings, except, of course, actual registration, unless the registrar considers from the affidavit which the cautioner has to file that the latter can effectually stop the registration.

COMPANIES AND THEIR SHAREHOLDERS.

THE right of shareholders of companies to take action on their own behalf independently of the company is one which has been questioned on more than one occasion, and it is important to understand when such right exists at all. The most recent case on the point is that of Menier v. Hooper's Telegraph Works (30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 209), where a demurrer to a bill by one of a minority of shareholders in a company on behalf of himself and the other shareholders to enforce the rights of the minority was overruled. The plaintiff held 2000 shares in the European and South American Telegraph Company, now in voluntary liquidation. Hooper's Telegraph Works (Limited) held 3000 shares in the company, and the other shareholders were thirteen persons, who held twenty-one shares each. Disputes arose between the European Company and Hooper's Works as to certain concessions for the construction of telegraphs, and a suit was instituted by Hooper's Works to restrain the working of concessions obtained by the European Company. It was refused by Vice-Chancellor Malins, and Hooper's Works appealed; but before the appeal came on the matter was compromised by the European abandoning the concessions. The present plaintiff, believing that Hooper's Works had obtained this compromise by means of their influence as shareholders in the European, filed his bill against them, praying for a decree that they were not solely entitled to the benefits received by them under the compromise, but that they were trustees of such benefits for the plaintiff and all the other shareholders of the European. "The only question which this suit brings forward is," said Vice-Chancellor Bacon, "whether he has a right to be relieved against such dealing with the property in which he and Hooper's Company were jointly interested." The only question with which we are concerned is the technical right of the plaintiff to sue on behalf of himself and the shareholders.

It is admitted that according to Gray v. Lewis (29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 12), and Foss v. Harbottle (2 Hare 261) a suit for the benefit of shareholders ought to be instituted by the company, and not by a shareholder on behalf of himself and the other shareholders who take a similar view with himself. Is there then any exception to that rule? Vice-Chancellor Bacon suggests two: (1) where the company cannot sue; and (2) where it will not sue. He thought the difficulty in the latter case might be got over by application to the court for leave to use the name of the company.

In the case of Atwool v. Merryweather, which was before Vice-Chancellor Page Wood, and is reported in a note to Clinch v. Financial Corporation (L. Rep. 5 Eq. 464), the bill was filed by a shareholder on behalf of himself and the other shareholders, and the Vice-Chancellor said: "With regard to the frame of the suit a question of some nicety arises how far such relief can be given at the suit of a shareholder on behalf of himself and other shareholders on the ground that the transaction might be confirmed by the whole body if they thought fit, and that the case would fall within Foss v. Harbottle, according to which the suit must be by the whole company." Then he added "If I were to hold that no bill could be filed by shareholders to get rid of the transaction on the ground of the doctrine of Foss v. Harbottle, it would be simply impossible to set aside a fraud committed by a director under such circumstances"—the director there being very much in the position of Hooper's Company towards the European Company—"as the director obtaining so many shares by fraud would always be able to outvote everybody else." Referring to the form of suit Lord Justice James on the appeal said that it seemed to him the case afforded precisely the exception to the general rule which was pointed out by Vice-Chancellor Page Wood—a case in which the minority were the plaintiffs and the majority were the defendants—the wrongdoers who were alleged to have put the minority's property into their pockets."

This case therefore establishes a principle which was previously doubtful, to say the least, and gives an important right to shareholders of a company, the majority in which may be disposed, for private or secret considerations, to enter into compromises injurious to the general body of shareholders.

THE CHARITY COMMISSIONERS' REPORT AND THE CHARITY TRUSTEES' INCORPORATION ACT 1872.

IN the report of the Charity Commissioners, just presented to Parliament, for the year 1873, there are some remarks on the Charitable Trustees' Incorporation Act of 1872, which may tend to discourage applications under that Act, and thus to obstruct the operation of a very useful statute.

The passing of the Act was hailed with much satisfaction by large numbers of public bodies and institutions, as calculated to relieve them from difficulties which were constantly experienced in protecting their property, enforcing their rights, and formalising their proceedings. Trustees had died, removed no one knew where, or had become from various causes incapable of acting. Frequently it was doubtful whether some of the trustees were living or dead. Leases of the charity property could not be granted, or ejectments brought, or other remedies enforced against tenants because it could not be proved in whom the legal estate was, for the time being, vested. Other legal proceedings frequently could not be adopted from inability to ascertain who were the proper parties to sue or be sued.

Whenever new trustees were appointed it was requisite to incur considerable legal expenses for deeds of transfer of the trust property, and in many instances, under the circumstances before adverted to, it was not easy to complete such transfers, while it was constantly necessary to travel or send in all directions in order to procure the signatures to various documents of indivual trustees who were scattered about the country, and sometimes resident abroad. Now, the remedy for all these disadvantages was simple. It was to make the trustees a corporate body.

Lord ROMILLY, in a previous session, had desired to effect the same object by constituting the institution itself a corporation, but his Bill for that purpose met with sufficient opposition to defeat it, and thereupon Mr. HINDE-PALMER brought in a measure in a different form, which, under Lord ROMILLY'S charge in the House of Lords, became the Act of 1872. Incorporation by Charter or Act of Parliament was too expensive a process for any but large and wealthy institutions to resort to, and in order to bring it within reach of the multitude of small associations, by the Act of 1872 they are enabled to obtain a corporate character from the Charity Commissioners at a trifling cost. The Commissioners truly state that it was part of the arrangement come to with them during the progress of the Act that "a very large discretion should be reserved to them to approve or disapprove its application to each particular foundation;" but it certainly was never contemplated that they should thereby practically defeat the beneficial intentions of the Legislature. They, however, at the same time admit that there may be numerous cases in which the machinery of the Act may be usefully brought into operation.

Let us proceed to consider the objections now raised by the Commissioners as to the general operation of the Act. Although expressed in different language, they mainly resolve themselves into an idea and apprehension that the individual and personal responsibility of the trustees will be lost or destroyed by the fact of their becoming a corporate body. In other words that they will commit breaches of trust and mismanage the trust proterpy and affairs with impunity under the "veil" of the Common Seal.

If there were any real foundation for this objection it would equally apply to the thousands of corporate bodies, eleemosynary, commercial, and others, which have long existed, and have continued to discharge their duties with all the convenience and facility arising from their corporate character, and without any of those covert misdeeds which seem to alarm the imagination of the Commissioners. Moreover, whenever such malpractices do occur a sufficient remedy is afforded by the general law of the land, as is shown by Lord COTTENHAM'S decision in the case of Attorney-General v. Wilson (1 Craig & Phil. 1).

But the possibility of any such loss or diminution of individual responsibility resulting from incorporation is expressly guarded against by the 5th section of the Act, which keeps alive all individual liability, and clearly provides that all trustees shall be answerable and accountable for the due administration of the charity in the same manner and to the same extent as if no such incorporation had been effected.

It is obvious, therefore, that no "veil" of the common seal could ever screen any individual trustees from the consequences of an abuse of their fiduciary position.

The Commissioners then say that there is great difficulty in securing regular renewals of the corporate bodies. This must mean in filling up the number of the trustees by new appointments in place of those who die, or become disqualified, or incapable of acting. Now, this is an evil which has always prevailed under the system of unincorporated trustees, and there has hitherto been no statutory provision to prevent it. But under the 4th section of the Act of 1872, there is, so far as respects the incorporated trustees, a constant statutory obligation created to fill up vacancies, and the Commissioners themselves are invested with the power of enforcing this regular renewal of the corporate bodies.

It is then objected that incorporation will prevent a union of different charities, which in some localities is often advantageous. This is rather an erroneous view, because a union might be more completely effected by the very process of incorporation than by any other means, It may be true that if several charities were, in the first instance, made into separate corporate bodies, there would be a difficulty in afterwards combining them in one entire corporation; but this may be readily obviated to a great extent. No such union could usefully take place unless the several charities were in the same locality, and established for similar objects and purposes. Whenever an application is made to the Commissioners for incorporation it would be easy to inquire whether there existed any and what other institutions of a similar description in the same neighbourhood which it would be desirable to unite. Indeed such a question might well form one of the series which are required by the printed forms of the Commissioners to be answered when an incorporation is asked for.

The Commissioners refer to the Municipal Corporation Act of 1835, to show that a preference was given by the Legislature to individual over corporate trustees. But that Act is no evidence whatever of such a preference. Those corporations were not charitable institutions. They existed for various municipal purposes, and charitable trusts had become incidentally mixed up with them, and were consequently in many cases greatly abused. It was a wise part, therefore, of the great scheme of Municipal Corporation reform to separate the charity property and management from the general corporation property and government. It was not done as any disparagement of the corporate character, which was in fact perpetuated with powers of administration over local affairs quite as much liable to abuse under the veil of a common seal as any belonging to charitable institutions.

It has been thought advisable to make these remarks upon the report of the Charity Commissioners because it is calculated to mislead those numerous bodies, especially amongst Nonconformists, who have been looking to the Act in quesiton as a boon to them. It will be greatly regretted if obstacles are raised instead of facilities being afforded for the general application of the Act as the suggested resort to the official trustees of charities leaves most of the evils of the system of ordinary trusteeships entirely untouched.

THE PROSPECTS OF SOLICITORS.

BY A SOLICITOR.

IT must, we think, be admitted that the prospects of solicitors are not promising. They are treated differently from every other class of professional men, they are taxed, and not allowed to charge for their labour on a higher scale than was considered a proper remuneration many years ago, when law proceedings and documents of all kinds, which were paid for according to length, were much longer than they now are, and when the expenses of living were much lighter. Why should solicitors pay a yearly tax to be allowed to practise when barristers, clergymen, and doctors are untaxed? It is useless to say the reason is because solicitors are empowered to recover their charges, and that barristers and physicians are not. We should like to see the solicitor who could persuade a leading counsel to take up a case where "nil" was written on the brief. Barristers and physicians obtain much larger incomes than solicitors, and yet it is not thought proper that they should be taxed; why then should solicitors? As a class, solicitors are more careful of the interests of their own clients than of their own; they possess greater power than any other class of men. The certificate duty, however, is only seriously felt by young solicitors and by those of small practice, and the greater portion of the power lies in the hands of men of large business, to whom it is better worth while to pay the duty than to give up the necessary time to agitate for its remission. If, however, the younger and also the less prosperous members of the Profession will take the matter up in an earnest manner, we doubt not but that they will obtain the cordial support of their more powerful and fortunate brethren, and perhaps of the Incorporated Law Society.

Again, Acts of Parliament are continually being passed by which although the labours are increased the profits are diminished. Probably the Judicature Act will considerably affect the solicitors' profits, and the Land Transfer Bill would have had the effect of practically closing many country offices. The large London offices will not seriously feel the effect of a Land Act. They get comparatively few conveyances, their work principally consists of superintending the affairs and properties of men of rank and property, and no Act will affect the work they have to do. Their clients' estates in their land, are of a limited character only, which will be dealt with in the old manner. The only difference such an Act would make to them would be to necessitate the transfer of the legal estate in the land at the Registry office, when new trustees of the settlements were appointed. What will be the result of the Land Act to a county solicitor? Settlements of land except by will are practically unknown, and the only conveyancing work which a country solicitor has is that connected with ordinary sales and mortgages from one man to another. Until the time when the proposed Act comes into operation things will go on as they do now, but when that time arrives a change will occur in the practice and profits of conveyancing. In ordinary sales the country solicitor has to be contented with a fee on a much smaller scale than that suggested by the Law Society, and in ordinary purchases, when the title has to be registered, the purchaser's solicitor will get very little remuneration for his trouble, on account of the quantity of work to be done, and the fees which have to be paid for the registration. Purchasers will not pay heavy solicitors' bills, and, as the expenses are heavy or light, the profit of the solicitor is proportionately less or more. In purchases under £300 or £400, which includes a very large number in country places, the expenses will be so heavy if the solicitor be properly paid, that small sales will altogether cease. When land has been once placed upon the register, except where the owner has been registered as proprietor without a title, which will not happen except where a future dealing is not contemplated, the solicitor's business and consequent profit seems nearly to have vanished. Conditions of sale will be unnecessary; abstracts of title will be things of the past; there will be no preparing or perusing of draft conveyances; all will be done by the aid of documents nearly as short as transfers of stock. With such an easy mode of transfer, the services of solicitors will either be dispensed with, or will be paid for upon a very limited scale, as it is not likely, when the greater part of the present work has been rendered unnecessary, that vendors, purchasers, and mortgagees will pay as much as they now do. In addition to the taking away of their work, the new Bill does not even purpose to give them an opportunity of getting any appointment worth having in offices which will be established to carry out the scheme, the registrars, assistant registrars, and examiners of title will be selected from the Bar, an indispensable qualification for the holder of each office being that he is a barrister of ten years' standing. Surely out of the solicitors who for years, without the aid of counsel, have transacted the conveyancing of a certain district, there must be some quite as competent to fill either of the offices as any barristers, and it would be only fair to give to such men at least an opportunity of holding the offices if they were fortunate enough to get nominations. We again repeat that country solicitors will be the principal sufferers, and no suggestion has been made that any compensation is to be made to them. When the monopoly of the proctors in the Probate Courts was taken away from them, or, to take a more recent case, when the Church of Ireland was disestablished and disendowed, the proctors and clergymen respectively were considered as having vested interests, which were respected. Have not solicitors a vested interest in conveyancing? They only are privileged to do such work, and intruders render themselves liable to punishment. The solicitors have acquired that vested interest by the most legal mode known, viz., by paying for the privilege. It is simply a question of contract. The public, through the Government, say, if you will pay certain moneys towards the expenses of the country to which we should otherwise be liable, and will also undergo a number of years of unremunerative service and study, and then satisfy our nominees that you are proficient in the knowledge of law, we will give you the sole privilege of preparing all documents relating to land, for which you shall be entitled to be paid according to a certain scale. The solicitors accepted the offer, and have performed by far the greater portion of their part of the contract. The public having derived advantage from the payments made by the solicitors, now wish to break the contract, and to do away with the work altogether, so that virtually they accepted payment for no corresponding advantage. The public are not justified in thus breaking faith with solicitors, and if they find the contract too onerous, they should ask to be relieved upon the only terms upon which an ordinary individual would be let off under similar circumstances, viz., by payment in the same way as was done in favour of the proctors and Irish clergymen (a). The solicitors are a persecuted race, and although they have immense power, yet they will not concur in making that power felt. They do not want to keep up the present lumbering and expensive mode of dealing with land, and would willingly do what they can to provide and work out a more simple and less expensive method; but having devoted themselves for many years to the study of conveyancing, and having spent much money in acquiring a thorough knowledge of it, they cannot be expected to make the rod with which to whip themselves for the benefit of the public, unless the latter are disposed to provide some sweets, in the enjoyment of which the pain would be forgotten.

We have week after week published letters and papers which clearly show that unqualified persons are infringing upon the solicitor's domain. The solicitors as a body, however heed them not. They seem to care not that others do work for the monopoly of doing which they have dearly paid. We hear sometimes that there is no remedy against these intruders, or, if there be a remedy, no one has power to set it in motion. If so, why do not the solicitors, through one of their societies, obtain sufficient powers? It is evident that, when a monopoly is sold, the purchasers must be protected against interlopers, and an application has only to be made to Parliament to get the matter rectified. The question to be then asked is very simple, "Will you complete the sale of the monopoly or buy us out?"

(a) We consider this argument fallacious. If every interest which suffered by necessary legislation were to be compensated, a surplus would be a thing unknown.—ED. L. T.

LEGISLATION AND JURISPRUDENCE.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, April 20.

THE IRISH GRAND JURY SYSTEM.

In answer to Mr. ERRINGTON, Sir M. BEACH said it was not his intention to bring forward any measure this Session for the purpose of reforming the Irish Grand Jury System, but he was quite aware of the importance of the question, and of the desire very widely felt for an amenement of the present law, and he hoped to be able to give such consideration to the subject during the recess as would enable him to introduce a Bill on it next session.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

Mr. BASS asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he was prepared, on a convenient opportunity, to introduce a measure to remedy the admitted defects of the law of imprisonment for debt.—Mr. CROSS replied that after the difference of opinion which had been expressed he could not adopt the phrase "admitted defects of the law;" but if the hon. member would suggest a remedy that was not on the lines on which his Bill was drawn, he would give the subject due consideration.

Tuesday, April 21.

THE JUDICATURE ACT.

Mr. WATKIN WILLIAMS asked the Attorney-General whether it was the intention of Her Majesty's Government to bring in a Bill to postpone the coming into operation of the Judicature Act beyond the time fixed—namely, November next; and, if not, whether he could state how soon the Code of Rules providing the new practice and machinery necessary for the working of the Act will be laid before the profession and the public.——The ATTORNEY-GENERAL.—The Government have not at present any reason to anticipate that it will be necessary to postpone the coming into operation of the Judicature Act beyond the time fixed by the Act—namely, the 2nd of November in the present year. The first division of the Rules of Court directed by the Act to be prepared for the purposes mentioned in the Act is already printed and in the hands of a Committee of Judges for their consideration and advice. The second divion of the Rules is in the press, and will shortly be in the hands of the committee of Judges and of such other persons and bodies as it may be judged right to consult upon the subject, and there is every reason to believe that the remaining rules, with the exception possibly of a few of a more formal character, will be in print and in the hands of the parties referred to before the 1st day of June.

Wednesday, April 22.

PUBLIC PROSECUTORS.

In reply to Sir E. WILMOT, Mr. CROSS said it was not the intention of Her Majesty's Government to introduce a Bill this session for the appointment of public prosecutors. The subject had been under the consideration of the Judicature Commission, and it would be some weeks yet before their report on it was received. When that report was presented it would obtain the most careful consideration at the hands of the Government.

TRIBUNALS OF COMMERCE.

Mr. WHITWELL moved that the order for the second reading of the Tribunals of Commerce Bill, which had been set down for this day, be postponed till June 12. He took this step because an important report of the Judicature Commission, referring to the subject of tribunals of commerce, had only yesterday been published. Moreover, an appendix to the same report had not yet been printed. He trusted that Government, after giving the matter full consideration, would feel warranted in carrying out the reform which the proposals of the commission foreshadowed.——Mr. CROSS explained that the appendix alluded to was not at present in such a state that it could be presented to the House. It would, however, be published the moment it was ready. Meanwhile, it had been thought desirable to print the report separately in order that no time might be lost in placing the House in possession of it. He would take care that it received that consideration which the opinions of so important a commission deserved. The motion was agreed to.

JURIES BILL.

Mr. LOPES, in moving the second reading of this Bill, said it was founded on the Bill which Sir John Coleridge introduced last session to carry into effect the resolution which he (Mr. Lopes) submitted to the House of Commons in 1872, as to the necessity of a comprehensive reform of the law relating to juries. In introducing the present Bill he was not seeking to abolish or discountenance trial by jury, but merely to improve the details of the existing system, and to secure a just and uniform incidence of jury service for all persons qualified to serve. In the first place, it was proposed to increase the area from which jurors were taken by creating some new qualifications. For instance, lodgers would be qualified to serve both on common and special juries, and on the latter class of juries the managers of certain companies would also be liable to serve. At present persons above the age of sixty were absolutely exempt, whereas this Bill provided that no one should be absolutely exempt until he had attained the age of 70, although any person might, if he thought fit, claim exemption at the age of 65. Of course, however, there was a provision that persons suffering from sickness or infirmity might be excused at any time. In the Government Bill of last session it was proposed to increase the qualification of common jurors, but he proposed to retain the old qualification, which was prescribed by the Act of George IV. However, he intended to increase the rating for the qualification of special jurors. Formerly the only qualification was a social one, as no one could serve on a special jury who was not a merchant, banker, esquire, or person of higher degree. A rating qualification was substituted for this by the Act of 1870. If it were possible, he should like to go back to the old qualification, but it would be very difficult to do so, though he might state that since the introduction of the rating qualification the character of special juries had very much changed. He had always contended that the imperfect and inaccurate compilation of the jury lists lay at the root of the unfair incidence of jury service. In support of this view, the hon. member cited the evidence given by several witnesses before the Select Committee of 1867-8, and he proceeded to say he proposed by his Bill that the overseers should be properly paid for the duty they had to discharge. This expense would not, however, be cast upon the rates, and he mentioned that the late Government had admitted the payment ought to be made out of national funds. Again, the present mode of summoning jurors was far from satisfactory, and accordingly the Bill provided that all jury summonses should pass through the post, so that, as the summoning officer and the jurymen would no longer be brought in contact with each other, corrupt practices would henceforth become impossible. Another proposal embodied in the Bill was that in civil cases the number of jurymen might under certain circumstances be reduced to seven. The late Government in their Bill of last year proposed compulsorily to reduce the number of jurors from twelve to seven in all cases except trials for murder. His proposal was that there should be twelve jurymen, as heretofore, in all criminal cases, and he did not compulsorily reduce the mystical number in civil cases. Primâ facie, every civil case would be tried by a jury of seven, but either party would be able, on giving formal notice, to have it tried by a jury of twelve. It was proposed that the verdict should be unanimous, and, indeed, the fact that the number of jurymen might be reduced enhanced the necessity of unanimity. The Bill likewise dealt with the question of payment. At present a special juryman was entitled to a guinea for every case he heard, and even the jurors in the great Tichborne case were legally entitled to only one guinea each for their services during that long protracted trial. A common juryman was entitled to 8d. for each case, and this was certainly a very inadequate amount. Under this Bill it was proposed that special jurymen should continue to be paid one guinea, and that common jurors should receive 5s. for each case. Another alteration consisted in the assimilation of the qualification for jurors in boroughs and cities of counties with the qualification now required in the counties by which they were surrounded. A minor provision in the Bill was to the effect that trials were to be continued in the event of the number of jurors being reduced by illness or death. If in the Tichborne case a juror had happened to die, the whole of the proceedings must have been commenced de novo, and this would have been neither more nor less than a national misfortune. (Hear, hear.) His proposal was that the judge should have the power in case of death or illness to order a case to go on with a reduced number of jurymen, provided the reduction did not go beyond a certain extent. It was proposed that a jury of twelve should not be reduced below nine, nor a jury of seven below five. By leave of the judge a special jury might be summoned to try criminal cases; and the judge would also be empowered by the Bill to release jurors in criminal trials during the adjournments instead of having them locked up during the whole of the night. One merit of his measure, he ventured to think, was that it embodied a complete digest of the law on the subject of juries. The Government, he had reason to believe, were not opposed to the Bill, and he hoped that at a subsequent stage in its career they would not be disinclined to proceed with it as a Government measure. (Hear, hear.) The hon. and learned gentleman concluded by moving the second reading of the Bill.——Mr. YOUNG, referring to his own experience in New South Wales, said the system of trying civil causes with four jurors had worked very successfully; as had also the plan of allowing three-fourths of the jury to give a verdict after all the members of the jury had deliberated together for a certain number of hours. As for unanimity there was practically no such thing. For instance, during the Tichborne trial, every one must know that in a company consisting of twelve persons or more some one was found who was eccentric enough to imagine that the claimant might possibly be the real man. (Hear, hear.)——Mr. GREGORY admitted there was no magic in the number twelve, but it was a considerable alteration to propose that the number should be reduced to seven, and it would be hardly wise to carry the reduction further. With regard to the question of unanimity, it was a very anomalous thing that one juryman should be able to force terms on the rest, and, as it were, to compel them to split the difference, and, therefore, if in committee the hon. member for Helston would propose some modification of the present system, he would be inclined not only to consider but to entertain it, especially if directed to the prevention of one individual juryman enforcing terms on the rest. His principal reason, however, for addressing the House was to urge the Government either to take up the Bill or to afford facilities for its discussion.——Mr. WATKIN WILLIAMS approved the Bill as a whole, but, after full consideration and hearing all that was to be said in favour of the proposal, he thought it would be a great mistake to reduce the number of jurymen from twelve to seven. Trial by jury in this country had been a most successful institution, and when that was the case it would be very dangerous to meddle with it, for we could not ascertain to what particular circumstances its success had been owing. Besides, if you had twelve men in a jury box, the chances were that some two or three of them would have a special knowledge of the subject, and, if they were men of sense, would be able to guide the remainder of the jury to a right conclusion. If you reduced the number, there would be no security that you would have any men with special knowledge on the jury. He was glad his hon. and learned friend adhered to the principle of unanimity, which a large majority of the most experienced Judges were in favour of maintaining. There was one defect, however, in our present system which he should wish to see dealt with in the Bill, and that was the failure of justice which might arise, especially in the case of a protracted trial such as had recently been held, from the death or serious illness of one of the jurymen. (Hear, hear.) He would also suggest that some accommodation should be provided for persons summoned as jurymen. At present nothing whatever was done for their accommodation, and no remedy was proposed in the Bill.——Sir H. JAMES concurred in what had been said as to the debt of the House to the hon. and learned member for introducing the Bill, and said that, though it could scarcely have fallen into abler hands, he would have some difficulty in passing it unless the Government took it up. The necessity of the Bill no one could doubt. The practical experience of those who came into contact with juries showed that some alteration, particularly in the qualification of special juries, was absolutely necessary. It was advisable that a Bill should be passed as speedily as possible, and therefore he urged the Attorney-General to take charge of this Bill. The provisions of the Bill had been framed after a careful consideration of facts by a select committee, and a Bill like this very nearly passed in the last Parliament, and this was therefore a legacy which the present Government might very well accept. Reserving the subject of qualification for committee, he remarked that the managing directors of companies were selected by the Bill of 1873 as the representatives of 1500 companies having offices in the city, which otherwise evaded the liability of occupancy; but to embrace all directors of the companies would bring in, perhaps, 15,000 gentlemen, many of them living at great distances in the country, and discharging their public duties as residents. One change in the Bill raised a question as between local and Imperial taxation. The Bill of last year was stranded upon what appeared to be a very small rock, the payment of overseers out of the local rates; an adverse opinion was expressed against the continuance of that burden, and the Bill had to be withdrawn. Now that it was proposed to transfer the charge to Imperial taxation the Chancellor of the Exchequer might have something to say. He would adhere to the number of twelve, and would still require unanimity As to the objection that we could not get unanimity, the practical answer was, we did get it; we got it in the Tichborne case, and the number of cases in which juries were discharged because they could not agree was far below 1 per cent In some cases it was very well they should be dis charged, because the evidence was not sufficient to justify them in giving a verdict one way or another. It would be wrong in principle to leave it to the parties to a cause to select the number of a jury; if it were right to have seven or twelve, Parliament ought to say so. Whether the Bill were in the hands of the Government or those of his hon. and learned friend, he would do all he could to assist in the passing of it.——The ATTORNEY-GENERAL said the Bill had been framed upon the recommendations of the Select Committee, and the conclusions at which the House arrived last session, and therefore it now came before the House with much to recommend it. He would give his cordial support to the second reading, and he thanked the hon and learned member for offering to place it in the hands of the Government. He felt very much disposed to accept the offer, seeing the approval which the Bill had received from both sides of the House; and, though he could not do so at once, he would communicate his decision to the hon. and learned member before the day fixed for committee. Whether he could take charge of it or not, he would do all in his power to further it and make it efficient; and he thanked his hon. and learned friend for the care and attention he had bestowed upon the subject.——Mr. GOLDNEY approved the suggestion that the Bill should be taken up by the Government, and said that the late Attorney-General, now Lord Coleridge, last year assented to the principle of charging the jury list on the Consolidated Fund.——Mr. FORSYTH thought it a mistake to insist upon unanimity in civil causes.——Mr. RUSSELL GURNEY said the reason for accepting the verdict of a majority in a civil cause after a jury had been three or four hours in consultation was that a new trial could be granted, and the dissidence of a minority would be an additional reason for granting it. Again and again he had been asked to release juries that could not agree, and when half an hour afterwards a verdict was given it was impossible to suppose that the dissenting jurymen had been convinced. Certainly, twelve jurymen had not the same opportunity for discussion as a lesser number, but the reduction of the number would increase the sense of individual responsibility. He was afraid that special qualifications would bring with them special prejudices. To insist on keeping up the maximum was to increase the burden, and he was afraid that would lead to growing dissatisfaction with the system. He wished by reducing the burden to improve the working of the system. He was glad that it was proposed to disqualify uncertificated bankrupts.——Mr. HUDDLESTON pleaded for better accommodation for jurymen and waiting jurymen, and the isolation of the latter, so as to prevent parties interested in the causes that were coming on communicating with them. With respect to the payment of common jurors, he thought, although 5s. might be ample in London, it certainly would not be sufficient in the country. There was another subject to which he must advert—the deterioration of special jurors. They were no longer of the same class they were some years ago. It was said the deterioration had arisen from the number of gentlemen claiming exemption as commissioners of Income Tax; but he was rather disposed to account for it by the abolition of the old distinction of merchants and bankers, and the reduction of the qualification to a mere money standard. On the part of the Profession he must thank his hon. and learned friend for the introduction of this Bill.——Mr. CROSS would also thank his hon. and learned friend for the great trouble and pains he had bestowed upon this subject, and the care with which he had drawn the Bill. He must also endorse what had fallen from his hon. and learned friend the Attorney-General, that the Government hoped to see a Bill on this subject—either this Bill or this Bill altered in certain particulars—passed before the end of the session. The matter had been under discussion now several years, both in committee upstairs and in the House; and it was ripe for legislation. He need hardly say, however, that matters had been introduced into the discussion to-day on which some difference of opinion prevailed. He would undertake on the part of the Government that these points should have careful consideration before the Bill was set down for committee; and if the Government could not see their way to adopt this Bill they would at all events do their best that some Bill should pass this session.——The Bill was then read a second time.

CONJUGAL RIGHTS (SCOTLAND) ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

Mr. ANDERSON moved the second reading of this Bill, which proposed to amend the Act of 1861, dealing with divorce and other conjugal rights, particularly as affecting the earnings and property of married women deserted by their husbands. The Act had been comparatively a dead letter because the class of women deserted by their husbands were for the most part too poor to go to Edinburgh to apply to the Court of Session for redress. The Act was to them nothing more than a tantalizing mockery. This Bill would remedy the evil by extending the jurisdiction of the Sheriff Courts so as to enable them to deal with all such cases. —— The LORD ADVOCATE certainly thought the principle of this Bill was a right one. The Act, as originally introduced, was a tentative measure, and it was left to the Supreme Courts to decide in these cases. But he was quite sensible of this—that the Sheriff Courts were the proper tribunals before which questions which so much interested the labouring classes should be brought, and he had himself intended, in a measure for the regulation of the Sheriffs Courts of Scotland, to have made provision to that effect. But as the principle was right he assented to it at once. At the same time he would suggest to the hon. gentleman that the 16th clause should be omitted. The Bill was read a second time.

JURY SYSTEM (IRELAND).

On the motion of Mr. BRUEN, it was ordered that the Select Committee on the Jury System (Ireland) do consist of seventeen members, and the O'Conor Don and Sir A. Guinness were added to the committee.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

WE desire to call the attention of solicitors to a statutory interference with their privileges, which should be repealed forthwith—the rule which prohibits one attorney from appearing as the advocate of a client of another attorney in the County Courts. It is true that in practice the judge is sometimes deceived, and the rule evaded; but it is not to evasion and deceit that we ought to look for the protection of our professional rights. In these days "the amending hand" that old Plowden blessed, is being laid on all institutions; attorneys-at-law have raised at least themselves (whatever may be the case with the "higher branch"), by an active system of training and examination, from the status of the common attorney of the seventeenth century to the rank of a truly learned profession; and such men in such times, and under such circumstances, may well venture to know their rights, and, knowing, to maintain them. What then, is the present rule on the above subject? Under the County Courts Act 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 54), a party to a suit in those courts may be represented by (1) An attorney acting generally in the suit for such party, but not an attorney retained as an advocate by such first-mentioned attorney. (2) A barrister retained by or on behalf of the party. (3) Any other person sanctioned by the judge. Our readers will note the difference between this and the original County Courts Act, under which there might appear (1) Any attorney, (2) A barrister instructed by an attorney, (3) Any other person sanctioned by the judge. In other words, in 1846, an attorney might appear either as the direct representative of the party, or as instructed by that representative; whilst a barrister, as Bar etiquette still requires, could appear only upon an attorney's instructions. But in 1852 the scene changes; a cry is raised of "The Bar in danger!" Lord Brougham comes to the rescue, and not only does the barrister free himself from the obligation—the ancient and accustomed obligation of his order — to take his instructions from attorneys only, but, not content with this, he imposes a new and needless restriction upon these unfortunate attorneys themselves. Henceforward the barrister may appear, whether 'instructed' or 'uninstructed' by a member of the lower branch; but 'instructed' the attorney must never be by an attorney! Whatever grounds there might be for revolutionizing the traditions of the Bar and allowing them to come into direct contact with suitors, there assuredly were none whatever for limiting the freedom of the attorney-at-law. As Lord Robert Grosvenor urged in the House of Commons (118 Hansard, 786): "no case was brought forward in which the advocate-attorneys had abused the trust reposed in them; and having himself witnessed how well and inexpensively justice was administered under the present method of proceeding, he should be sorry to alter it." The original aim, indeed, no doubt, was to exclude the advocacy of attorneys in any form; but so glaring an attempt at monopoly failed, and this humbler measure was devised instead. But "Give us a monopoly of pure advocacy," was still the demand; and when one hears of a monopoly, one knows pretty well that something is rotten in the state of Denmark. What is the practical effect of the enactment of 1852? Just this, to make it difficult for an attorney who wishes his conduct to be straightforward and aboveboard, to devote himself wholly to the practice of simple advocacy. Yet it is certain that instead of this being rendered difficult, it is the very thing which should be made easy, both for the sake of the public especially and for the sake of the Profession. For the sake of the public, because the advocate who is an attorney acts under a sense of the contingency of an action for negligence, whilst the barrister's fee brings with it no such responsibility. For the sake of the Profession, for two reasons: first, because the more singly a man devotes himself to one field of labour, the more effectually and promptly will his work be done; as Chief Justice Cockburn puts it, "Division of labour, which has done such wonders in art and manufactures, will work equally well in the administration of justice. It is impossible that a man whose time is devoted to getting up the details of cases and preparing documents, should be as competent an advocate as one who has greater leisure on his hands." Secondly, for a reason on which the Bar themselves most strongly insist whenever their monopoly of the Superior Courts is in any way threatened. They urge against the attorney—and they urge most truly—that (to again adopt Chief Justice Cockburn) "It is of the utmost importance to preserve the rule that an advocate should never communicate with the party or the witnesses; and to make it the essential duty of a third party to examine the witnesses, to find out what they know, and to ascertain how far the evidence will establish the points of the case." In other words, an advocate who speaks from written instructions will take a calmer and a fairer course than one who has come into contact with the interested or angry parties, and has perhaps caught something of their heat, or even been solicited by coarser temptations from them. But true as this is, it seems rather strange that it should be insisted on only when the object is to keep the attorney from intruding on the Bar, and wholly laid aside when the Bar begin to intrude on the attorneys. If an advocate should always be instructed by a second professional man, why did the Bar demand a statutory right to appear in the County Courts uninstructed, and (a yet more glaring contradiction of the rule) with what face can they absolutely enact its opposite, and claim a statutory prohibition against an attorney's ever being so instructed? Surely if a breakwater is absolutely necessary between even the respectable suitors of the Superior Courts and their advocates, it cannot be less so, it must be trebly so, between the attorney of the County Courts and the suitors there. Let it be remembered that there is many a provincial County Court near which no barrister resides, and many a suit in which the £1 3s. 6d., or £3 5s. 6d., seems an unwarranted addition to the costs. Let this division of labour amongst us take place openly, and a great boon will be won for solicitors. The attorney who is an advocate can then give himself to his work uninterruptedly, and do new credit to our branch of the Profession. A solicitor who is not an advocate will no longer be compelled either to go into courts where he cannot appear with justice to himself, or to send away intimate clients to the office of another member of the Profession; but will have a new, a useful, and a definite sphere of action marked out for him. The following clause has already obtained the sanction of the House of Commons (15th July 1851), and was superseded by the clause of 1852, only through the influence of the Upper House. Probably no better clause could be devised for our purpose; it restores our old rights of 1845, and does not interfere with the new right claimed in 1852 by the Bar for themselves. "In all proceedings in any county court it shall be lawful for any person who is a party to the suit on either side, or for a duly certificated attorney or solicitor, retained by, or on behalf of such party, or for a barrister-at-law retained by or on behalf of such party, or by leave of the judge for any other person allowed by the judge to appear instead of such party, to appear and to address the court, without any right of pre-audience or exclusive audience, but under such regulations for the orderly transaction of the business of the court as the judge may from time to time prescribe."

EVERY profession—save that of a solicitor—has high distinctions bestowed upon it, the barrister-at-law has reward for mental labour and indefatigable working in the discharge of his duties be they what they may, he finds his way into the House of Lords, or he is encouraged and stimulated to unusual exertions in view of the Woolsack, or the attorney, or solicitor-generalship, or a judgeship, or some one or other of the many offices which are held out to him as a tempting bait, which, if no other, is sometimes, as a dernier resort, some office, which solicitors, in the idle vigil which they keep over their own professional interests, are apt to think should be bestowed upon one of their own body. The medical profession has in its ranks many who have received the just rewards which their distinguished services have merited; so with the clerical profession, and so may we not say with men in almost all occupations of life. It is left for the solicitor to look to his profession and find amongst its members many who should have received distinction, either politically or professionally, or in connection with municipal work, but who are always overlooked. If these men, from motives of meritorious ambition, desire to pass to the other branch of the legal profession, the answer is practically "No," for the rules of the Inns of Court confront such. Lord Chancellor after Lord Chancellor whenever obliged to speak of our profession is able conscientiously to extol our good deeds to the skies and to tell the public that there is no higher avocation than that of solicitor family solicitor say, trusted with every secret, th keeper of the clients' very consciences; or again the active and zealous political agent is often a solicitor. The head and chief for years of some large municipality expending much time and money in discharge of important public duties is frequently a solicitor. What would not the astonishment of solicitors be if some morning the daily papers announced that Mr. So-and-So, attorney-at-law, in consequence of the services rendered here or there, or in this or that direction, had been appointed to a judicial office of distinction, or say that the President of the Council of the Incorporated Law Society had, at the instigation of the Prime Minister or the Lord Chancellor, been appointed to this post or that office in recognition of his services to his profession and in recognition of the large share of public service undertaken by solicitors throughout the country. Whatever the exertions or standing of a solicitor in his profession, it is unusual to recognise such in any way. It is therefore with the utmost gratification that we learn that a Conservative Prime Minister again steps out of the beaten track. Mr. Philip Rose (formerly of the firm of Messrs. Baxter, Rose, Norton, and Co.) has had conferred upon him the honour of a baronetcy. Sir Joseph Heron, a solicitor, is town clerk of Manchester, and Sir W. B. Drake, a solicitor, is a member of the firm of Messrs. Bircham Dalrymple, Drake and Co. The distinction in the cases of the first and last named gentlemen was for political services, and that of Sir J. Heron we believe for professional services in relation to municipal work. We trust that higher distinction is in store for solicitors, and that they are yet to be entrusted with the duties of new offices connected with their profession, for which they are so often especially qualified.

THE jurisdiction of the Lord Mayor's Court is, rightly or wrongly, practically undergoing considerable extension, so that not only do country solicitors find their clients, defendants in such actions, but solicitors in the West-end of London are constantly similarly situated; and complaint reaches us, that contrary to the practice which obtains at the common law judge's chambers, by which orders are drawn up directly they are made on a summons, it is often necessary for clerks to make a double journey to the registrar's office of the Mayor's Court in consequence of the great delay which often takes place in drawing up orders made in reference to the business of this court. It is very important that no time should be lost in filling up the vacant office of registrar, which has now been long vacant, and which may partly account for the delay in question.

WE should have been pleased to see the action of the solicitors of Southampton in reference to the Lord Chief Justice in connection with the Orton case, and which we publish elsewhere, followed by other solicitors. No judge on the Bench is held in higher respect and esteem by our branch of the Profession than Sir Alexander Cockburn, for whilst he is ever ready to expose and denounce unprofessional conduct, he is at all times equally willing to recognise the position of trust and confidence which devolves upon us in relation to the public generally.

SOLICITORS have certainly reason to complain of the conduct of Mr. Justice Brett towards members of our body. At the trial of Jean Luie, which lately took place at the Central Criminal Court before this learned Judge, that which we produce below was reported to have taken place between him and the solicitor of the accused. Again, we published in our last issue a very just complaint from a solicitor upon the subject of the action of the same learned Judge towards a solicitor in a case which came before him on circuit at Norfolk, to which we again call attention. In both cases the attorneys were exercising their accustomed functions, and his Lordship went the length of ordering the solicitors in question to sit down, or be quiet, a species of phraseology usually adopted by Judges towards ignorant and offensive witnesses, or, at all events, not generally applied by them to members of their own profession. Surely Mr. Justice Brett must forget the functions of an attorney-at-law, otherwise we cannot explain his improper treatment of solicitors whose misfortune it is to appear before him. The following is that which we refer to above as having occurred on the trial of Jean Luie.

As the learned Judge entered the court, Mr. Edward Lewis stood up in front of the dock, and was about to speak to the prisoner, when

Mr. Justice Brett said: It is not right that anybody should interfere with the proceedings in a court of justice unless they are engaged in the case being inquired into.

Mr. Edward Lewis.—I am the solicitor of this man, and I have applied for permission to see him.

Mr. Justice Brett.—You are his solicitor, and that is enough.

Mr. Lewis.—Will your lordship allow me to have a few words?——

Mr. Justice Brett.—Certainly not.

Mr. Lewis.—My lord——

Mr. Justice Brett.—I say certainly not. I will listen to no one but counsel.

Mr. Lewis here exchanged a few words with the prisoner in the dock from the gangway below the attorneys' seat.

Prisoner.—Can I have the witness Janes, my lord? May I be permitted to call him?

Mr. Justice Brett.—If you wish it.

The witness Janes was called by the usher, but he did not answer to his name.

Inspector Clark.—I have searched everywhere about the court for Janes, but I cannot find him here.

Prisoner.—Then call Captain Brown.

Mr. Justice Brett (to prisoner).—Just let me advise you. I see people suggesting things to you. Just beware of what they are doing. They are pretended friends. Now, exercise your own judgment. You are quick and intelligent enough; then don't be made the tool of other people. Now, do you wish of your own accord that Capt. Brown should be called? If you do, he shall be summoned—if you think he would do you any good.

Prisoner.—I think he can do me some good.

Mr. Justice Brett.—You think he can? Then let him be called. Let the man Brown, who is in prison here, be called. Is there any other "Captain" Brown?

[After further conversation, Mr. Lewis went up to the dock, and handed a slip of paper to the prisoner.]

Mr. Justice Brett.—You be quiet, sir.

Mr. Lewis.—My lord, I submit I have a right to advise this man.

Mr. Justice Brett.—You be quiet, and do nothing without my leave.

It occurs to us that there may have been a momentary delusion in the mind of the learned Judge as to which was the Attorney and which the prisoner in the case. This is rather borne out by applying the language used to one to the other, and vice versâ.

THE action of the House of Commons, in rejecting the second reading of Mr. Bass's Bill, which had for its object to abolish the power of County Court judges to commit to prison, will be approved by the great body of solicitors throughout the country, simply because if the Bill had become law small creditors would have been practically deprived of their only means of enforcing payment of debts from unscrupulous and dishonest debtors, and the working classes would have obtained no credit. It is most unfortunate that the judges of the Superior Courts do not more freely exercise that power as to commitment which the Daily Telegraph erroneously thinks is used excessively, and it is not surprising that at a recent meeting of the Chambers of Commerce it should have been resolved that imprisonment for debt should be revived, for the losses to traders are now annually serious, in consequence of its abolition.

A SOLICITOR has been appointed to the office of chief clerk to the Lord Mayor of London. Mr. J. H. Gresham, who was admitted in Michaelmas Term 1855, and who was clerk to the borough magistrates at Hull. Our branch of the Profession will be glad to find that the city magistracy recognise the claims of solicitors to such offices as that in question. Mr. Gresham has had a long experience in similar duties to those of his new office, which we have no doubt he will discharge with satisfaction to the Bench and the public.

WE publish in another column a letter from a member of the junior Bar, upon the subject of the observations in our last issue as to the laws which regulate the means by which a barrister can be admitted on the roll of attorneys. We quite agree with our correspondent, and we should be glad to see the matter dealt with by a short clause to be introduced into one or other of the measures now before Parliament affecting the Profession. We may add that a case has come to our knowledge in which a barrister-at-law lately passed the general examination necessary before call, and who passed some time in the chambers of a special pleader as well as in those of a barrister. The gentleman in question having determined to become a solicitor, had to procure himself to be disbarred and to be articled to an attorney, and will be required to pass not only the final but actually the intermediate examination. Can anything be more indefensible or, in fact, unjust?

A CORRESPONDENT, whose letter we publish, calls attention to the great disadvantage under which country solicitors labour when called upon suddenly, it may be, to advise clients on legal points or subjects as to which there has been a multiplicity of legislation. Often they have no well stocked private or public professional library at hand, containing the Statutes of the Realm; and we quite agree that the present system of including in this or that Act a section or sections dealing with some important question often not suggested either by the title of the Act, or its preamble, is most objectionable; and it would be a decided improvement, and indeed, one of actual service to country solicitors, if some such plan as that marked out by our correspondent was adopted by the Legislature. At present it is often almost as difficult to learn what are the actual statutory provisions relating to certain matters as to find a needle in a truss of straw.

OUR municipal law sadly needs amendment in reference to the two following subjects, one as regards the requirement which at present exists for all borough aldermen to reside within seven miles of the borough of which they are aldermen. This was strongly illustrated by the recent case of a solicitor who, while having his office and a large practice, in the borough, had—after having been a member of the council for many years—removed his residence to a distance exceeding seven miles from the precincts of the borough, the result being that his qualification ceased. The other point is that which requires an alderman or town councillor seeking to fill an office under the corporation, or connected with it, to resign the office of alderman, &c.. before becoming a candidate for such office. We know a case in which two solicitors, who were both aldermen of long standing, resigned their offices on becoming candidates for the office of clerk to the borough justices, and who, not being elected, were afterwards returned to the council, but not as yet to the aldermanic bench.

WE understand that early in the present year considerable correspondence took place between certain justices' clerks in Suffolk, and the Secretary of State for the Home Department, upon the subject of the Returns which they are constantly called upon to make, and for which they get no remuneration. It is probable that the subject will be shortly brought before the House of Commons, and we hope on a future occasion to publish the substance of the correspondence in question. There was a meeting yesterday at the Law Institution of the Justices' Clerks Society, when, we believe, this question was mentioned.

THE following lectures and classes are appointed for the ensuing week at the hall of the Incorporated Law Society, Chancery-lane, for the instruction of students seeking admission on the roll of attorneys and solicitors: Monday, class, 4.30 to 6 o'clock, Equity; Tuesday, class, 4.30 to 6 o'clock, Equity; Wednesday, class, 4.30 to 6 o'clock, Equity; Friday, lecture, 6 to 7 o'clock, Equity. To prevent interruption at the lectures, subscribers are not admitted to the hall after a lecture has commenced.

THE dignity of our branch of the Profession is at all times best guarded by extreme punctiliousness in avoiding anything approaching to a service of two masters. A letter we publish to-day, from a solicitor, relating to a practice which obtains in Parliamentary elections of a town clerk advising the mayor as to his duties, &c., on the one hand, and acting as political agent of a candidate on the other hand. The observations of the late Mr. Stone (solicitor and town clerk of Leicester) upon this subject are most acceptable. They are contained in the letter in question.

WE publish a letter received from a solicitor upon the subject of the proposed legislation affecting articled clerks. It is not without importance as reflecting new light on the matter, and, although we cannot entirely adopt the view of our correspondent, we feel that something more than that proposed by the Attorneys and Solicitors' Bill is necessary. The dignity of the Profession it is more than ever necessary to uphold in these days, and the measure in its present form allows too great a latitude. An affidavit should be required from the articled clerk and his principal, also from the person or persons in connection with whom the proposed employment is to be undertaken. It is to be observed that while gentlemen are studying for the Bar, they can follow any other usual occupation except that of attorney, solicitor, &c., as provided for by the consolidated general regulations of the Inns of Court.

A special General Meeting of the Incorporated Law Society is appointed to be held in the society's hall, Chancery-lane, on the 8th of May next, at 1.30 p.m., to take into consideration the proposed union of this society with the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association; also to consider the expediency of offering to the younger members of our branch of the Profession some further encouragement to join the society. The former will be adopted as a matter of course; the latter subject offers a considerable field for argument as to the details of the proposal, while the necessity for offering the further encouragement suggested in the circular we print elsewhere is altogether beyond question.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

PARTNERSHIP—CONTRACT FOR WORKS—DEATH OF CO-CONTRACTOR—RIGHTS OF REPRESENTATIVES OF DECEASED CO-CONTRACTOR.—Five persons entered into a contract with a foreign government for the construction of certain works. Before the works had been begun one of the contractors died, having appointed his brother and his two sons executors and trustees of his will. An agreement was subsequently drawn up between the four surviving contractors and the executors and trustees of the will of the deceased contractor, by which it was provided that the contract with the foreign government should be carried out on the joint account of the co-contractors, and in the best interests of all concerned in the contract, and that the executors and trustees of the will of the deceased contractor should be sleeping partners, the surviving contractors being the acting partners. This agreement was signed by the surviving contractors before the will of the deceased contractor had been proved, the names of the executors and trustees being left in blank in the agreement. Subsequently the brother of the deceased contractor renounced probate and disclaimed, and his sons proved the will and signed the agreement. The surviving contractors alleged that they had entered into the agreement on the faith of having the brother of the deceased contractor responsible under it and filed a bill to set aside the agreement, and praying for a declaration that the partnership in the contract was dissolved by the death of the deceased contractor, so far as his estate was concerned, and that it might be wound-up: Held (reversing the decision of Bacon, V.C.) that independently of the agreement, the legal personal representatives of the deceased contractor were entitled to share in the profits, and were liable to contribute to the losses under the contract, and that they were entitled to have such profits or losses ascertained by having the contract completed. Held, also that the agreement was intended to be between the surviving contractors and the persons who should prove the will of the deceased contractors, as was proved by the names of the latter being left in blank, and that the agreement was binding on all parties: (M'Clean v. Kennard, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 186. Chan.)

CREDITOR AND DEBTOR—AGREEMENT TO TAKE LESS THAN ORIGINAL DEBT.—A. obtained a judgment against B. for a sum of £563 12s. 10d., but agreed to take £200 in discharge, B. giving three acceptances for that sum, and depositing some waggons as security. If none of the bills were paid at maturity the judgment to be enforceable against B. The last of the bills would mature in March 1871. B. subsequently made payments on account of the bills, and another settlement of account took place in March 1871, when A. claimed £118 11s. 5d., as the balance due on B.'s three acceptances, and it was agreed that B. should give his acceptance for that sum in full of all demands under the three acceptances or otherwise, and deposit certain title deeds as security. B. did not pay the bill for £118 11s. 5d. at maturity, but tendered the money four days after it had been presented to his bankers, which A. refused, declining also to give up the waggons and title deeds. Held, that as B. had not performed the terms of the first agreement, A. was remitted to his original right as existing at that time, and was at liberty to enforce the judgment: (Barton v. Hobson, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 230. V.C. B.)

LAW OF LOWER CANADA—CIVIL CODE, ART. 1190—WILL—ALIMENTARY ALLOWANCE—"COMPENSATION"—EXECUTOR.—By the law of Lower Canada, as laid down in the Civil Code Article 1190, a debt arising in respect of an alimentary allowance is generally incapable of being the subject of "compensation." Therefore in a case in which a testator bequeathed "the revenue of my estate to my wife and children and the lawful issue of the latter as an alimentary pension or allowance until the accomplishment of the majority of my youngest grandchild," with a proviso against incumbrances and anticipation; and one of his sons, who was also an executor and trustee of the will, was heavily indebted to the estate. Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that he was not bound (1) to suffer "compensation," i.e., to have the instalments of income due to him under the will set off against his debt, either in satisfaction of the interest or diminution of the principal; or (2) to make a "rapport" to the estate, i.e., to bring his debt or the interest thereon into the common fund, even though the will contained a direction to the trustees "to reduce the residue into possession without delay." The law of Lower Canada does not recognise the distinction between law and equity, and the functions and powers of an executor are by no means the same as in England; and, therefore, Semble, that the English doctrines (1) that a debt due from an executor is assets in his hands, and (2) that a trustee or executor cannot take anything out of the estate while he remains indebted to it, do not obtain there: (Muir and others v. Muir, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 205. Priv. Co.)

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH (IRELAND).

Thursday, April 16.

(Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, O'BRIEN, and FITZGERALD, JJ.)

WHITE AND HART v. CARROLL.

English suitors in Ireland—Security for costs—Judgment Extension Act.

Jordan, on behalf the defendant, moved that the plaintiffs should be compelled to give security for costs, as they were resident in England, and, therefore, beyond the jurisdiction of the court. There was the usual affidavit that the defendant had a good and valid defence. The plaintiffs are merchants in Great Tower-street, London; the defendant is a trader in Roscommon, and the action is brought to recover £23, for goods sold and delivered.

The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE said that a defendant in Ireland, wrongly sued by a plaintiff in England or Scotland, need suffer no inability to recover his costs against the plaintiff. Under the Judgment Extension Act, passed in 1868, a judgment obtained here might be registered against a party in England or Scotland, as a judgment obtained there might be registered against a party in Ireland. Moreover, the Act provided that the costs of the registration of the judgment should be added to the amount of the judgment. The English courts had lately decided that a person resident in any part of the United Kingdom need not give security for costs on suing a person resident in a different part. The three kingdoms were united, he hoped indissolubly, and the practice of compelling a person living in one part of the same United Kingdom to give security for costs on suing a person living in another part was anomalous, and ought to be discontinued.

O'BRIEN, J. concurred.

FITZGERALD, J. rejoiced that this court now dealt once and for all with motions for security for costs in cases brought before it, in which the plaintiffs resided in England or Scotland. The practice of compelling security for costs in such cases was not founded on any statute, although it was not unreasonable at a time when the three kingdoms were more or less independent of each other. The provisions of the Judgment Extension Act were brought before Parliament in 1855, yet such was the force of the prejudice that it was not passed till 1868, fears being entertained that its effect would be to render the courts here merely auxiliary to those in England. He rejoiced that they had now disposed, once and for all, of a practice which, since the three kingdoms had been a United Kingdom, was a disgrace to our law.

The court made no rule on the motion.

MANSION-HOUSE POLICE COURT.

MR. JOHN PATMORE WALLS, a solicitor in Walbrook, was charged before Alderman Sir Sydney Waterlow, M.P., with misappropriating securities entrusted to him as an attorney, with a direction in writing, contrary to the Act 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, and with incurring a liability of £114, by means of fraud, in contravention of the Debtors' Act 1869.

Wontner, solicitor, conducted the prosecution.

The prisoner defended himself.

The complainant, Mr. William Henry Warre Smith, a merchant, in business at 117, Leadenhall-street, deposed that in Dec. 1872 he employed the prisoner, Mr. Walls, to prove the will of his late sister, Miss Mary Jane Smith. On the 5th Dec. the prisoner called upon him at his office, and handing him a paper, stated that the amounts set out in it were those of the duties payable on the legacies under the will. With the paper before him, and in Mr. Wall's presence, witness drew a cheque for £138 10s., and handed it to him with instructions to pay the duties. Some time afterwards he saw the prisoner, and understood that everything had been done. About the beginning of this year witness applied to him for the probate and receipts, and he sent witness a parcel containing the probate and other papers. Witness did not then examine closely the contents of the parcel. On the 17th March he received a notice from the Legacy Department at Somerset-house, in consequence of which he went there, and from inquiries he made, found that the duty had been paid only on Miss Rosa Emma Smith's legacy of £150, viz., £4 10s.; on Emma Bassett Andrew's legacy of £100, £5; on Jane Bayford's legacy of £100, £10; and on Jemima Powell's legacy of £50, £5. Witness thereupon applied to Mr. Walls, who, in reply, said he would search for and find the other receipts, and send them to him; but he had since failed to do so, although witness had repeatedly written and sent to him. Witness had satisfied himself that the prisoner had never paid the other duties. He gave him no authority to apply the money otherwise than in payment of the duty.

The prisoner, in reply to the charge, said he certainly drew a cheque for the payment of the duties, and he thought the money had been paid.

Sir SYDNEY WATERLOW adjourned the case for a short time to enable the prisoner, by the production of his cheque book, or otherwise, to substantiate that statement; but he failed to do so to the satisfaction of the Alderman, who thereupon remanded him, admitting him to bail in the meantime, himself in £100, and one surety in £100.

THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

SOLICITORS, AND WHAT CONCERNS THEM AS SUCH.

(By CHARLES FORD, Solicitor.)

Introduction.

A PAMPHLET (a) lately issued, containing remarks upon the Jurisdiction of the Inns of Court, commences thus: "All institutions are on their trial." The present writer hopes and believes that this is strictly so—especially in reference to the constitution and rules of the Inns of Court—and in addition that the professional relationship of solicitors to the other branch of the Profession is, ere long, to undergo considerable change, and which would assuredly follow from a thorough organisation amongst solicitors throughout the country, and from a knowledge to be ingrafted upon the public mind of the actual condition of things. The prime object, however, of the writer in addressing himself through the medium of a pamphlet to his brothers in the Profession is to direct their attention to the serious, and in fact unjustifiable encroachments upon their rights which have taken place at the instigation of members of the other branch of the Profession, which encroachments have had for their object (in part already realised) the advancement of the interests of barristers-at-law to the immediate detriment of solicitors. The writer also proposes to direct attention to statutory provisions affecting solicitors which should be repealed, and to matters affecting solicitors which require to be dealt with by legislation. The title above will, no doubt, be considered by some too ambitious, in view of the subject matter which it contains and the object which the writer has in view. A matter which will always be of interest to those of us who feel any pride or take any interest in our profession, is that of the origin of Attorneys-at-law, as to which the most valuable contribution of late probably is a work entitled "The Legal Profession" (b), viewed in the light of its past history, its present state, and projected law reforms. Another contribution upon this subject, of rather earlier date, is "A Sketch of the Early History of Legal Practitioners, and of the Inns of Court and Chancery." (c) The authors of these deal more or less exhaustively with the earlier literature contributed by members of the Profession upon this question. The author of the present pamphlet while conscious, from a perusal of the works referred to, and other independent research into the matter, that the question has not been satisfactorily settled, or at all events, that in his mind considerable doubt still exists as to when, and the precise circumstances under which, the profession of attorney-at-law first existed, is content, for the present, to leave the subject as he finds it, feeling satisfied that the evil which he aims at exposing, is still increasing, and in fact now assumes such serious proportions that it needs to be dealt with without delay, and that all liberal-minded men will join in denouncing it, and assist in a work of reform which, if accomplished, must prove not only of great advantage to the public, but will tend to establish the legal profession generally upon a more solid basis suited to the requirements of the times and modern ideas.

(a) By Fredk. Calvert, Esq., Q.C.
(b) By W. T. Charley, Esq., D.C.L., M.P.
(c) By Thomas Marshall, M.A., Attorney-at-Law.

As to many of the encroachments of the Bar upon the privileges of solicitors, some of a direct and others of an indirect kind, the author has been unable to discover, or at all events satisfactorily to settle, their origin; yet sufficient is known of them to justify the belief that they have come from the deliberate action of the Government from time to time under the influence of the Bar, or else at the instigation of the Bar direct. Amongst these must be included the offices of Attorneys and Solicitors-General, posts now filled as well in the colonies and our foreign dominions as at home, by members of the Bar. Although as to our colonies there is now no distinction between members of the Profession, each exercising every function of a lawyer, yet the monopoly of the English Bar is greatly felt and much complained of there, the practice being to pass over all competent colonial lawyers for the purpose of supplying to English barristers having influence a responsible post such as judge, which, it may be, his want of capability rendered him unfit for at home. Compared with the origin of the office or profession of attorney-at-law, the designation of Attorney-General is of somewhat recent date, and was adopted, as also that of Solicitor-General about the same time, by members of the Bar, possibly for the purpose of misleading the ignorant public of those times as to the duties of these public officers; adopted, too, at a time when the "common attorney" was utterly helpless to resist what some will call nominal encroachments, and when the expression "solicitor" was only in use to a limited extent, in relation to the business of those tribunals now known as the Courts of Chancery.

It will be complained that the writer does not furnish some precise data as to the origin of the names Attorney and Solicitor-General, which would entail a large amount of research from sources not altogether dependable; hence the author is content to leave these names or designations to speak for themselves.

An encroachment of a far more substantial kind is that which led to the exclusion of attorneys-at-law from the right of audience in the higher tribunals of the country. This is exhaustively dealt with in the works of Mr. Charley and Mr. Marshall before referred to, and needs no further comment here, as it is admitted on all hands to be the fact, or at all events, such only can be inferred from the Statute of Carlisle, which, read by the light of the procedure of the time, says Mr. Marshall, points to the conclusion that in the 14th century attorneys enjoyed a right of audience in the Superior Courts at Westminster. It is certain that in those times attorneys could and did conduct the entire suit of the client, which Sir Sidney Waterlow and Mr Ayrton would again welcome—at least, so the writer gathers from the last published report of the Judicature Commissioners. The opinion of Mr. Ayrton in favour of allowing the public to have the opportunity—if they choose—of instructing one lawyer, and one only, to carry on a suit to its termination, is evident from his observations on the establishment of Tribunals of Commerce, in which he complains of the delay necessary "in order to have every representation to the court, it may be said, filtered, and perhaps mystified, through a single, or even double, legal agency." Sir Sydney Waterlow on the same subject expresses himself in favour of Tribunals of Commerce, because "suitors should be able to obtain a decision more promptly and much less expensively than in the Superior Courts, as now constituted and regulated. The present system, too," he adds, "frequently inflicts on the suitor a long pending, worrying law suit, the solicitors on either side pleading in their client's interests every technical point," and so on. These are the opinions of laymen, which, though not correctly describing the actual working of the present system, point to a feeling in the public mind that the present modus operandi of conducting an action at law or a suit in Chancery is not suited to modern ideas upon the subject. It should perhaps be observed in passing that Sir Sydney sails wide of the mark when he complains of "solicitors pleading every technical point," &c. It is the expensive and now obsolete system of pleading, which, with counsel's fees and other disbursements, so much increases a bill of costs, that solicitors complain of. If important cases can be dealt with in County Courts without pleadings, why not so in the Superior Courts? It is to be hoped that the Judicature Act will give to this practice the necessary quietus which the terms of the Act promise.

The writer has stepped aside to consider for a moment the latest expressed views of laymen on the subject of the "double legal agency" question, not so much because he himself may incline to the opinion that solicitors should have restored to them their former right of audience in the Superior Courts, as because there is an undoubted feeling on the part of the public that to pay one lawyer in one matter is quite enough; and there is a close relation between this subject and that to which the writer is directing attention. The best guarantee for the reform which is wanted would be found in the public press taking up the question in the interests of the public; but unfortunately for the public, the editorship of lay as well as legal journals is largely in the hands of members of the higher branch of the Profession, who, while they, and many others filling all kinds of offices, cannot be designated lawyers, yet very properly stick to their cloth and the so-called "dignity, honour, and independence of the Bar," which let no one impugn, but as to which let all admit that members of other professions can be and are possessed of equal virtues.

Let us pass from the subject of the exclusion of attorneys from a right of audience in the Superior Courts, a question more for the public than solicitors, although essentially an encroachment upon our rights, to a consideration of the so-called offices of "Solicitor to the Treasury," and similar positions filled by members of the Bar in the other public departments of the State.

PATENT LAW.

(By C. HIGGINS, Esq., M.A., F.C.S., Barrister-at-Law.)

INFRINGEMENT.

De la Rue v. Dickenson. 1857.—In an action for the infringement of a patent, the question of infringement is for the jury and not for the judge, although there be no question with respect to whether the defendant has or has not used the particular machine or process which is alleged to be an infringement. Campbell, C.J., in delivering the judgment of the court, said: "There may well be a case where the judge may and ought to take upon himself to say that the plaintiff had offered no evidence to be left to the jury to prove infringement, as if there were a patent for a chemical composition, and the evidence was that the defendant had constructed and used a machine for combing wool. But, if the evidence has a tendency to show that the defendant has used substantially the same means, to obtain the same result as specified by the plaintiff, and scientific witnesses have sworn that the defendant actually has used such means, the question becomes one of fact, or of fact mixed with law, which the judge is bound to submit to the jury." (7 Ell. & Bl. 738; 3 Jur. N. S. 841.)

Bovill v. Keyworth. 1857.—A patent obtained for a new combination of a blast and an exhaust in connection with a mill, in which only the lower stone rotates, is infringed by the use of the same combination in connection with a mill in which the upper stone rotates. Campbell, C.J., in delivering the judgment of the court, said: "Supposing the patent to be for a combination, consisting of several parts, for one process, we are of opinion that the defendants are liable in this action for having used a material part of the process, which was new, for the same purpose as that mentioned in the specification, although they did not at the same time use all the parts of the process as specified." (7 Ell. & B. 725.)

The Patent Bottle Envelope Company v. Seymour. 1858.—The plaintiff obtained a patent for "improvements in the manufacture of cases or envelopes for covering bottles," and in the specification the invention was stated to consist "in an arrangement of apparatus by which lengths of rush, straw, or other suitable material, may be readily tied together, so as to form cases or covers to protect bottles from breakage when packed." It then proceeded: "For this purpose I take equal lengths of rush, straw, or other suitable material, and confine them at one end within a ring or cap, which I then place over the neck end of a mould or mandril, corresponding in form to the bottle for which the case or cover is intended. The mould is fixed to a frame," &c. The defendant made bottle envelopes out of similar materials somewhat differently applied, placing them upon a model of a bottle, or mandril, and fastening the material in a manner somewhat like the plaintiff's method. Held, that the use of the mandril, which was admitted to have been long commonly used for producing given forms of pliable materials, and the application of which to work previously untried materials or to produce new forms, was held not to be the subject of a patent, was not an infringement of the plaintiff's patent. Willes, J., in delivering the judgment of the court, said: "The infringement of any part of a patent process is actionable, if that part is of itself new and useful, so as that it might be the subject matter of a patent, and is used by the infringer to effect the object, or part of the object, proposed by the patentee." (5 C. B., N. S., 164; 5 Jur. N. S. 174.)

Higgs v. Godwin. 1858.—The invention for which the patent was granted was "treating chemically the collected contents of sewers and drains in cities, towns, and villages, so that the same may be applicable to agricultural and other useful purposes." In the specification the patentee said: "for the purpose of precipitating the animal and vegetable matter contained in the sewage water, I prefer to employ hydrate of lime, commonly termed 'slacked lime.'" The patentee claimed "the precipitation of animal and vegetable matter from sewage water by means of the chemical agent hereinbefore described." Held, that the defendant, by using the patented process, not with the object of making a saleable mercantile article, but merely to purify the water, did not infringe the plaintiff's patent. (27 L. J., N. S., Q. B., 421; 5 Jur. N. S. 97.)

Lister v. Leather. 1858.—A valid patent for an entire combination for a process gives protection to each part thereof that is new and material for that process, without any express claim of particular parts, and notwithstanding that parts of the combination are old. Affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber. Williams, J., in delivering the judgment of that court, said: "It was argued before us, on behalf of the appellants, that, if a patent be taken out for a combination of a, b, and c, it could not be infringed by using a combination of b and c only. We are of opinion that the answer to this inquiry turns altogether upon what a, b, and c are, how they contribute to the object of the invention, and what relation they bear to each other. Cases may possibly be suggested where the use of b and c might not be an infringment of the patent. But more easily cases may be put where the use of b and c would be an infringement of the patent. Whether in this case it was so or not would depend upon the facts of the case, and may be more a question of fact for the jury than of law for a court of appeal. But the facts are not before us; and we think the court below was right in deciding that the use of a subordinate part of a combination might be an infringement of the patent if the part so used was new (by which we understand new in itself, or in its effects, not merely in its application) and material." (8 Ell. & B. 1004.)

Thomas v. Foxwell. 1859.—Evidence may be admitted of an infringement by an imitation of a material part of a general combination, notwithstanding the disclaimer of the mechanical parts separately, of which the combination consists, and although there be no separate and specific claim in respect of the part imitated, while there are separate and distinct claims in respect of other subordinate combinations. (5 Jur. N.S. 39.)

Walton v. Lavater. 1860.—The importation and sale of a patented article is evidence of an infringement. Erle, C.J., in delivering his judgment, said: "The next point contended for is, that there has been no infringement by the defendant, because he had only sold the articles, the sale, moreover, being only a sale of articles imported from abroad. I have heard the arguments of the learned counsel on both sides, derived from the original statute, which uses the words 'working and making,' and from the form of the expression in the letters patent prohibiting the making, using, or putting in practice the invention, and the words granting to the patentee the privilege to 'make, use, exercise, and vend.' All these words are capable of some of the constructions which have been contended for; but it appears to me that the main purpose of the patent is to give the profit to the patentee, and that the main mode of defeating that purpose would be by selling the patented article; and it seems to me that without proof of the making of the article by the infringer, evidence that he sold the patented article for profit would be good evidence upon which a jury might find that he had infringed the patent. With respect to the defendant not being liable, because the articles were imported from abroad, I should say that, even if it was a simple case of importation, without any proof of knowledge of the article being patented, or of the infringement, it would be sufficient evidence of infringement that the defendant had imported and sold." Keating, J.—"What we have to see is, whether there has been such a use of the article as would constitute an infringement within the meaning of the statute. And it seems to me that the selling an article and converting it into money is about the most effectual use that can well be made of it." (29 L. J., N. S., C. P., 275; 8 C. B., N. S., 162; 6 Jur. N. S., 1251; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 272.)

Hills v. The Liverpool United Gaslight Company. 1863.—A patent was granted for an invention for the purification of gas by means of precipitated or hydrated oxides of iron. The specification was held to include such precipitated or hydrated oxides only as were obtained by artificial means. The use of a natural substance, such as bog ochre, containing precipitated oxide of iron, so long as it was used in its native condition, was held not to be an infringement of the patent; but upon this substance being re-oxidized or renovated in the manner described in the specification, or in any other manner, it was brought into the condition of being one of the plaintiff's patented purifying materials, that is, a hydrated or precipitated oxide artificially obtained, and an injunction to restrain the use of the substance as renovated was granted. (32 L. J., N.S., Ch., 28.)

Lister v. Eastwood. 1864.—Where a patent is for a combination, a person who takes a new and material part of the combination, but does not apply it to a similar or analogous purpose to that to which it was applied in the patent, does not infringe the patent. (9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 766.)

Thomas v. Hunt. 1864.—A licence to A. to manufacture a patent article is an authority to his vendees to vend it without the consent of the patentee. (17 C. B., N. S., 183).

THE Maidstone Journal announces the death of Major C. W. Bannister, who has for more than thirteen years held the post of Governor of the County Prison, Maidstone. Previously to entering upon the governorship of the Maidstone gaol, Major Bannister had acted as deputy-governor at the convict prison, Dartmouth, and had seen service in India as captain of the 2nd Light Infantry (Bombay).

ELECTION LAW.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Saturday, April 18.

(Before BRETT, GROVE, and DENMAN, JJ.)

STOWE v. JOLIFFE.

Parliamentary Election—Ballot papers and register—Inspection.

THIS was an application arising out of the Petersfield election petition, which was moved as a rule for a mandamus to the clerk of the Crown, but which on the argument took the form of a rule nisi, calling on the respondent to show cause why the marked register of voters, the counterfoils of the ballot papers, and the backs of the rejected ballot papers should not be shown to the petitioners.

W. G. Harrison (with him Couch) showed cause against the rule.—The marked register would give approximately all the information required by the petitioners, and they would have been entitled to see it had it not been inclosed in the same sealed packet with the counterfoils, which should not be shown. The required order, if made, would interfere with the secrecy of the ballot, and, even if the court had power to grant it, should not be made without strong grounds shown on affidavit.

J. O. Griffits (with him Lumley Smith) supported the rule.—The court had clearly power to make the order, and inspection of the marked register should be granted as a matter of right. It would, however, only show who received ballot papers, and in order to discover who actually voted, it would be necessary to have the desired inspection of the rejected ballot papers with the sequence number upon them and the counterfoils corresponding with them. This would not show how anyone had voted, but would merely disclose the fact that certain electors had given votes, which could then be attacked on the scrutiny. If the inspection were refused, a great number of useless witnesses would have to be in attendance on speculation, and unnecessary expense would be incurred. The majority at the election was only nine.

The court differed in opinion.

BRETT, J. thought the petitioners were entitled to the limited inspection asked for. In ordinary cases both parties were entitled to see any document in which they had such an interest as to make it useful in the case litigated. In petitions, therefore, were it not for the Ballot Act, parties would be entitled to inspection of any document at the earliest possible time. The Ballot Act however, was passed for the purpose of maintaining the most complete secrecy as to how any man voted, and had incidentally thrown difficulties in the way of petitioners. It was, however, for the public advantage that all facilities for inspection consistent with the spirit of the Act should be given, as the public, as well as parties and constituencies, were highly interested in the prevention of bribery and in seeing that no avoidable difficulties were thrown in the way of bonâ fide litigation. Acting on that principle, he thought that all reasonable facilities for inspection should be given consistent with the secrecy of the ballot. He did not think under the Act that the marked register and the counterfoils should have been sealed in one packet, but as they were he thought the packet should be opened and inspection given of the marked register. As to the rest of the order, he thought the packet of rejected ballot papers should also be opened and the backs of them shown to the petitioners to show the sequence number. This alone, however, without the counterfoils would not show whose vote had been rejected, therefore the counterfoils corresponding to the rejected ballot papers should also be inspected. Such an inspection would not show how any one had voted, but would facilitate the case and diminish expense. Unless the most perverse ingenuity was displayed it would give no one the opportunity of discovering how anyone had voted. He thought that justice required that the information should be given.

GROVE, J., agreed that inspection of the marked register should be given, but with some doubt, as it would necessitate opening the packet containing the counterfoils as well. He thought such an order could be made by the court, but could not have been made by a judge at chambers. With reference to the two other branches of inspection asked, he differed from Brett, J., and thought no case had been made out for inspection of the rejected ballot papers and counterfoils. The question was, whether the court should make such an order as a matter of course in cases of scrutiny, and such a provision could have been made in two lines instead of the guarded sections which the Act contained. The Act did not intend even the Clerk of the Crown and his assistants to see these papers without strong grounds. The order required should not be made without strong grounds shown on oath, though he did not deny the power of the court to make it. The hardship of the case was very slight, as the marked register would give approximately all the required information.

DENMAN, J., agreed that the marked register should be produced, but also thought that inspection of the rejected ballot papers and counterfoils should not be allowed in the present case. The word "required" meant not only wanted, but reasonably necessary, and the court should be satisfied by affidavit on that point before granting inspection. The court had the power to make the order asked for, but this was not a case in which it should be exercised.

HURDLE AND ANOTHER v. WARING.

Election petition—Return of writ—Time.

THIS case came on upon cause being shown against a rule to have the petition taken off the file, upon the ground that it had not been presented in time. The Poole election took place on 3rd Feb. last, and some time before noon on the following day the returning officer endorsed upon the writ that Mr. Charles Waring was duly elected, and he also delivered the document to the Postmaster, addressed to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. The duty imposed by statute was that the returning officer should forthwith transmit the writ and return through the Post-office to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. The writ was in a registered letter, and it arrived at the office of the Clerk of the Crown soon after eight in the evening, with five other registered letters, which referred to other elections. The ordinary office hours were from ten to two. The person who received the letters was Kate Phipps, a woman who was in the employ of Mrs. T. Lovegrove, the housekeeper. Mrs. Lovegrove herself was appointed by the Lord Great Chamberlain, and was not a servant of the Clerk of the Crown. Kate Phipps gave the ordinary receipt for these letters, but the Poole return did not reach the hand of any clerk in the office until the 5th. The entry in the office book was first that the return was received on the 4th; but this date was afterwards struck through and the 5th inserted, and the 5th was the date transmitted to the House of Commons. The Corrupt Practices at Elections Act said that any petition against a return must be presented within twenty-one days after the return, and if the return now in question was to be taken as having been made on the 4th the petition was too late, whilst if the return was on the 5th the then petition was in time.

Giffard, Q.C. (with him Harrison), contended that Kate Phipps was only an animated letter-box, whose duty was simply to receive the letter and place it on the table, and that the return was not made until the writ had reached the hands of the Clerk of the Crown himself, or the hands of one of his clerks.

McIntyre, Q.C. (with him Chandos Leigh and C. Bowen), in support of the rule, referred to affidavits which stated that office hours were by no means strictly kept during the general election, that the person who received the letter and gave a receipt had authority to do so, and that in the ordinary course a writ received in the evening would be returned as of that day. It was argued that the return was really made when the returning officer posted with the endorsed copy to some person who was authorised to receive it.

Lord COLERIDGE said that the statute required that a petition should be presented "within twenty-one days after the return has been made to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery," and it seemed to him that the true meaning of this was that the return was to be made in such a sense that the Clerk of the Crown could act upon it, and that the return was not completed until it had reached the authority who was capable of acting upon it. Whilst arriving at this conclusion, however, he must admit that the question was one which was by no means free from difficulty.

Rule discharged.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

DEMURRER—PUBLIC SCHOOLS ACT 1868, s. 13—GOVERNING BODY—POWER TO DISMISS HEAD MASTER.—The Public Schools Act 1868, which applies to (amongst other schools) Rugby School, by sect. 13 enacts that "the head master of every school to which this Act applies, shall be appointed by and hold his office at the pleasure of the new governing body." The plaintiff was appointed head master of the school in Nov. 1869, by the then existing governing body. In Dec. 1873, the new governing body (which had been duly constituted in Dec. 1871, under the powers of the Act of 1868) passed a resolution that "upon a review of the administration of the school" from the time when they came into office to the then present time, they were of opinion that the plaintiff was not "a fit and proper person to be head master, and dismissed him accordingly:" Held (on demurrer to a bill by the plaintiff praying for a declaration that, under the circumstances in the bill stated, the above resolution was invalid), that, under the above section, the new governing body had power to dismiss the plaintiff without notice, and without assigning any reason; and that, as they had exercised their power of dismissal fairly and honestly, not corruptly, nor for the purpose of effecting some collateral object, their decision was not liable to be controlled by the court: (Hayman v. The Governing Body of Rugby School, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 217. V.C. M.)

MARITIME LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

NAVIGABLE RIVER—OBSTRUCTION. — Where the owner of a wharf abutting on a navigable river drove piles into the bed of the river, and thus caused an obstruction which diminished by three feet the navigable breadth of the river in the front of the wharf, such navigable breadth having been sixty feet prior to the erection of the obstruction: Held (affirming the decision of the Master of the Rolls) that this was a substantial interference with the free navigation of the river, and that it ought to be restrained by injunction: (Attorney-General v. Terry, 30 L.T. Rep. N. S. 215. L.C. & L. JJ.)

CHARTER-PARTY—DEMURRAGE — EXCEPTION—CIVIL COMMOTION.—Where a charterer by his charter-party undertakes to load a ship within certain given lay days, "accidents or causes occurring beyond the control of the shippers or affreighters, which may prevent or delay her loading or discharging, including civil commotion, strikes, riots, stoppage of trains, &c., always excepted," or to pay demurrage, he cannot excuse default in loading within the lay days by giving evidence of general disturbance and cessation of work in the district about the time; but to exempt himself from liability must show a disturbing cause, actually preventing the loading of the particular ship: (The Village Belle, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 232. Adm.)

COLLISION—COUNTY COURT APPEAL—SHORTHAND WRITERS' NOTES — CORRECTIONS BY COUNTY COURT JUDGE—RIVER NAVIGATION—EFFECT OF RIVER BYELAWS—DUTY IN FOG.—In an appeal to the High Court of Admiralty from a County Court where there is a conflict between the transcript of the notes of evidence and judgment taken by a shorthand writer in the County Court under the County Court Rules No. 32, and the County Court judge's own notes, the version given by the County Court judge must be accepted as binding, and if the County Court judge alters the shorthand writer's notes so as to correspond with his own version, the Court of Admiralty will order the alterations so made to be carried into effect in the printed copies of the appendix. Byelaws made by a local authority governing the navigation of a river are to be taken as evidence of what it is the duty of vessels to do in the circumstances named therein, and although the mere breach of one or any of them will not be sufficient reason for holding a ship to blame for a collision, yet if that breach occasions or contributes to the collision, the existence of the byelaw will afford the best reason for holding the ship violating the byelaw to be guilty of a breach of duty, and, consequently to blame for the collision. Where a byelaw regulating the navigation of a river prescribes the side of the river upon which a ship is to navigate going up or down the river, the observance of this byelaw is doubly necessary during a fog, when vessels can only be made out at short distances; and the breach of the byelaw cannot be excused by the plea that it was usual during foggy weather to navigate on the wrong side of the river in order to insure greater safety for the vessel so doing: (The Faithwaite Hall, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 233. Adm.)

SPECIMENS OF A CODE OF MARINE INSURANCE LAW.

By F. O. CRUMP, Barrister-at-Law.)

AGENTS (OF UNDERWRITERS).

Appointment.

THE appointment of agents to subscribe policies should be formal.

NOTE.—The ordinary principle applies that a contract made without authority may bind one who by his act or neglect has led third persons to believe that an agent acting for him was duly authorised.

In the absence of a formal appointment it is a question of evidence whether surrounding circumstances prove agency.

Neal v. Ewing, 1 Esp. 61; Courteen v. Touse, 1 Camp. 43; Brocklebank v. Sugrue, 5 Car. & P. 21; 1 M. & Rob. 102; 1 B. & Ad. 81; 2 Duer. 341 n. a.

Extent and Execution of Powers.

The purpose of the agency is to solicit applications for insurance, make surveys or examinations of the subjects proposed to be insured, subscribe or deliver policies, receive notice of other insurances or of compliances with stipulations on the part of the assured, receive premiums, adjust losses, and return of premium, and make payments.

Phillips, sect. 1878.

The authority must not be exceeded:

Baines v. Ewing, L. Rep. 1 Ex. 320.

Authority to subscribe policies does not necessarily authorise the agent to settle and pay losses.

NOTE.—It must depend wholly upon the custom of the place and the relation of the principal and agent to each other in business and correspondence: (Phillips, s. 1873.)

It is, however, one circumstance tending to show such authority.

Such authority is revoked by the bankruptcy of the underwriter.

Parker v. Smith, 16 East, 382.

An agent in a foreign port to communicate information to insurers respecting marine risks, and advise them generally of matters affecting their interests, is not authorised to receive notice of abandonment so as to bind them:

Phillips, sect. 1875.

In general the agent of the underwriters for receiving applications is such for receiving notice of other insurances, incumbrances, &c., and as such his knowledge will affect them, and his acts will bind them:

Phillips, sect. 1876.

NOTE.—Under what circumstances the assured is affected by the mistakes of the agent of the underwriters, see 2 Phillips, p. 527.

Lloyd's agents are bound by their printed instructions, and cannot make up or sign an adjustment of a loss, or accept abandonment as the representatives of the underwriters:

Arn, 4th edit., 177.

AGENTS—LIEN AND SET-OFF.

LIEN.

Who entitled to.

A lien on a policy may be acquired by:—

(a) Insurance agents and brokers.

(b) General agents.

(c) Sub-agents.

For what.

By (a) for commissions or premiums which they have paid, or are responsible for, and their general balance of insurance account against the principal.

By (b) for commissions and premiums and general balance of account against the principal when the insurance is effected in the course of the mercantile agency.

By (c) for commissions and premiums, and for their general balance of account as against the agents who, as principals, instruct them if without notice that they are agents.

NOTE.—The latter clause of this last proposition has been objected to as giving an agent power to pledge the goods of his principal, and Mr. Phillips seems to think it unsound: (See sect. 1916, Arn. 4th edit. 196 et seq.

Observations.

Usage or agreement, or the previous course of business between the parties, may give a right of set-off, where it otherwise would not exist:

Green v. Farmer, 4 Burr. 2214.

NOTE.—Mr. Phillips says: "It is adjudged or implied in some cases, that an insurance broker has, by virtue of the general usage of the place, especially in London, a right to retain any policy he may effect for the principal, on account of his demands against him for previous advances and charges, in case of the principal having notice, or being bound to take notice of the usage:" (Sect. 1912, par. 2.)

See James v. Rodgers, 15 M. & W. 375; Oliver v. Smith, 5 Taunt. 56.

A general agent with whom a policy is left has no lien upon it for money advanced independently of the policy:

Muir v. Fleming, Dowl. & Ry. N.C. 29.

An agent effecting a policy on goods to be shipped by a correspondent has a lien on the proceeds after a loss for his general balance against the shipper, although the goods are consigned to him on condition of his agreeing to pay over the proceeds of the shipment to a third party:

Man v. Shiffner, 2 East, 523.

A broker employing an agent to insure who pays premiums and delivers over the policies has no lien for the premiums on the policies so delivered:

Snook v. Davidson, 2 Camp. 218.

A sub-agent being ordered by an agent whom he knows to be such, and not owner, to effect a policy on goods, has no lien on the policy for his general balance against the agent:

Man v. Shiffner, 2 East, 523.

A broker of an underwriter who pays losses on policies for his principal, retaining the policies, has a lien upon the salvages for his general balance against the underwriters:

Ph., sect. 1923; Moody v. Webster, 3 Pick. Mass. 424 (amounts allowed by a foreign state for captures of her subjects insured by the policies).

Loss and Revival.

Lien is lost—

By parting with possession of the policy.

By holder pledging the policy as his own.

NOTE.—An assignment of a policy to keep for the transferor, subject to his lien, is not a pledge forfeiting the lien.

McCombie v. Davies, 7 East, 52; Urquhart v. McIver, 4 Johns, N. Y. 103.

By taking a security payable in the future.

Hewison v. Guthrie, 2 Bing. N. C. 755; Cowell v. Simpson, 16 Ves. 276.

The lien is revived:

On the policy again coming to the hands of the agent while his immediate employer is interested.

Whitehead v. Vaughan, Cooke's B. L. 579.

NOTE.—Assignees having in the meantime become interested, the lien for a general balance does not revive.

Spring v. South Carolina Insurance Company, 8 Wheat. 268; see also Levi v. Barnard, 8 Taunt. 143; 2 J. B. Moore, 34; Sweeting v. Pearce, 9 C. B., N. S., 534.

SET-OFF.

All premiums returned and all losses accruing on the policy may be retained and set-off until a lien is satisfied.

Phillips, sect. 1909.

The debts which can be set-off as between an agent and an underwriter must be mutual.

Wilson v. Creighton, 3 Doug. 132; Houston v. Robertson, 4 Camp. 342; 6 Taunt. 648; Shee v. Clarkson, 12 East, 507.

Therefore, losses which are due by the underwriter to the assured cannot be set-off by the broker against a claim for premiums payable to the underwriter.

NOTE.—A broker, however, having a lien on the policy, may insist on an underwriter paying the loss on the latter demanding the premiums.

Parker v. Beasley, 2 M. & S. 423; Davies v. Wilkinson, 4 Bing. 573; Shee v. Clarkson, 12 East, 507; Wienholt v. Roberts, 2 Camp. 586.

A broker acting del credere does not acquire any additional right of set-off.

Goldschmidt v. Lyon, 4 Taunt. 534; Houston v. Bordenave, 6 Id. 451; Baker v. Langhorn, 4 Camp. 396; Peele v. Northcote, 7 Taunt. 478; Marnett v. Forrester, 4 Taunt. 541.

The right of the agent to retain and set-off sums received from underwriters on account of any liability he may have assumed for the future for the principal, will depend on his having a lien on his policy for his commissions, or his having made advances upon the credit of the policy.

Godin v. London Assurance Company, 1 Burr. 489; Kinloch v. Craig, 3 Term 783; Hammond v. Barclay, 2 East, 227; Castling v. Aubert, 2 East, 325.

Bankruptcy of the Underwriter.

In case of a broker being agent of both parties to a policy, the underwriter on which becomes bankrupt, the underwriter is discharged from the claims of the assured for losses and returns of premiums, and the broker, being debtor for premiums, is discharged therefor, so far as they have been passed and settled by the broker and underwriter in account, previously to the act of bankruptcy of the latter.

So far as the premiums and losses have not been so settled, they are not set-off, whether the policies on which they accrue had been subscribed or the losses known before the bankruptcy or not:

Phillips, s. 1927.

Recovering back Money paid.

In case of payment by the underwriter to the agent of the assured through mistake, or for loss on a policy that is illegal as between the parties to it where the agent is not a party to the illegality, the money may be recovered back, if demanded in time:

Phillips, s. 1927; Jameson v. Swainstone, 2 Camp. 546, n.; Edgar v. Fowler, 3 East, 222; Buller v. Harrison, Cowp. 565.

A policy being void by misrepresentation without fraud, the underwriter cannot recover back from the agent of the assured money which he had paid over to his principal in ignorance of the misrepresentation:

Holland v. Russell, 1 B. & S. 424.

Miscellaneous Duties.

The agent must keep his principal advised of the business of the agency;

Must keep and duly render accounts of the business of the agency;

And select brokers and other sub-agents with proper vigilance and discretion;

And give them proper instructions to collect and preserve the evidence, if his agency is for making an abandonment or adjusting or prosecuting for a claim:

Phillips, s. 1901.

Discharging the Underwriter.

The underwriter is not discharged from the claim of the assured, except by actual payment to the agent:

Russell v. Bangley, 4 B. & Ald. 395; Todd v. Reid, 4 B. & Ald. 210; Scott v. Irving, 1 B. & A. 605; Bartlett v. Pentland, 10 B. & C. 760; Ovington v. Bell, 3 Camp. 237; Jell v. Pratt, 2 Stark. 67.

Under authority to an agent of the assured to receive payment of a loss, or a return of premium, he is not authorised to discharge the underwriter by merely crediting the loss or including such a credit in the settlement of his account with the underwriter:

Phillips, sect. 1883.

The fact of the name of the underwriter having been struck off the policy may discharge him if it be shown to have been done with the consent of the assured:

COMPANY LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

CONTRIBUTORY—TRANSFER OF SHARES—UNPAID CALLS—ACQUIESCENCE.—The 16th section of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, which provides that "no shareholder shall be entitled to transfer any shares, after any call shall have been made in respect thereof, until he shall have paid such call, nor until he shall have paid all calls for the time being due on every share held by him," is intended for the protection of companies and not of their creditors; and if the directors of a company assent to a transfer of shares on which calls are due, the property in the shares passes to the transferee, and the transferor cannot be placed on the list of contributories in respect of the shares so transferred, though he may be sued at law for the amount of the calls due at the date of the transfer. Decision of Malins, V.C., affirmed: (Littledale's case, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 213. L.JJ.).

BILL BY ONE SHAREHOLDER ON BEHALF OF ALL—RIGHT OF MINORITY.—The majority of the shareholders in a company have no right to use their votes in such a way as to compromise a suit instituted for the benefit of the company, and to retain the benefits obtained by the compromise for themselves as to the exclusion of the minority. Where an attempt is made to do so by the majority of the shareholders, a bill filed by one shareholder on behalf of himself and the other shareholders to enforce the rights of the minority will be entertained. Demurrer for want of equity to such a bill overruled. Decision of Bacon, V.C. confirmed: (Menier v. Hooper's Telegraph Works 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 209. L.JJ.)

SHERIFFS COURT.

KITE v. METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS.

THIS was a compensation claim, tried before a jury, at Red Lion-square, on the 15th inst., in respect of a short leasehold house in High-street, Shoreditch, required for the new street now forming from Oxford-street to Shoreditch.

The Board of Works were represented by Hawkins, Q.C., and Philbrick, Q.C. and the claimant by Huddleston, Q.C.; Mr. George Fuller, of Fuller and Fuller, acted as surveyor for Mr. Kite, instructed by Whitwell.

The jury, after viewing the premises, returned a verdict by consent for £1200, for the leasehold and trade.

TRAILL AND SON v. METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS.

THIS was another compensation claim, tried at Red Lion-square, on the 17th and 18th. The claimants are ship chandlers and sail makers, carrying on business at 43 and 44, High-street, Wapping, of which premises they were lessees of the one moiety, and freeholders of the other. The property was required for the widening of High-street, Wapping.

Hawkins, Q.C., and Philbrick, Q.C., appeared for the Board of Works; and the Hon. A. Thesiger, Q.C., and Robins, on behalf of the claimants, under instructions from Lowless, Nelson, Jones and Co.

Mr. G. Fuller, of the firm of Fuller and Fuller, surveyors, gave evidence in support of the claim, as did also Mr. Murrell, Mr. Farmer, and two architects; the Board's witnesses being Mr. Clifton, Mr. Horsey, and Mr. Trist.

After the jury had heard the evidence on both sides

Hawkins put the case before them as one in which they should give £2519 for the property, £500 the amount agreed upon for the fixtures, and £1500 as the outside for any supposed loss to trade—in all £4519.

The Hon. Mr. Thesiger followed on the other side.

The jury, in the end, returned a verdict for £3500 for the premises under notice to treat, £500 for the fixtures, and £3000 for compulsory removal, making a total of £7000.

COUNTY COURTS.

MACCLESFIELD COUNTY COURT.

Thursday, April 9.

(Before J. St. J. YATES, Esq., Judge.)

COOPER v. LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Railway company—Liability for want of punctuality in arrival of trains—Damages.

A. took a return ticket from B. to C. by one line, and then another from C. to D. by the defendants' line. On returning from D. in the evening the train by which he travelled was fifty minutes late in arriving at D., having lost that time in going from D. to the terminus E. (whence the same train returned towards C. calling at D.)—a distance usually travelled in fourteen minutes. In consequence of this delay A. lost the return train from C. to B., and had to put up for the night, getting home to B. next morning:

Held that the defendants were liable for negligence in not providing sufficient engine power or allowing the steam to get too low no satisfactory explanation of the delay having been offered by them.

THE facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

His HONOUR said: In this case the plaintiff, Cooper, took a return ticket between Congleton and Macclesfield by the North Staffordshire Railway, and thence a return ticket by the defendants' lines between Macclesfield and Chapel-en-le-Frith. Passengers from Macclesfield to Chapel-en-le-Frith and Buxton change trains at Stockport, whence they are forwarded by the Manchester and Buxton line, which is worked by or belongs to the defendants. The return journey is performed in the same manner. The plaintiff arrived at Chapel-en-le-Frith in due course, and having spent the day, went to the railway station in proper time to travel by the train advertised in the defendants' time bills to leave Chapel-en-le-Frith at 5.47 p.m. for Stockport, where it should arrive at 6.25 p.m. in time for him to catch the train leaving Stockport at 7.2 p.m., due in Macclesfield at 7.45, being the last train by which he could arrive in Congleton that night. This was shown on the defendant's time bills. The train was fifty minutes late in leaving Chapel-en-le-Frith. This delay arose as follows: The traffic between Manchester and Buxton is worked by one engine and one set of carriages, which perform the journey backwards and forwards. At the Buxton end there is no spare engine. Chapel-en-le-Frith is an intermediate station between Manchester and Buxton, about five miles from the latter. The trains from Manchester go on from Chapel-en-le-Frith to Buxton, where, in this instance, twenty minutes were allowed for unloading and reloading the train, which then starts back to Manchester. The journey from Chapel-en-le-Frith to Buxton usually occupies fourteen minutes, but on the occasion now under consideration the down train lost ten minutes between Whaley Bridge and Chapel-en-le-Frith (four miles), and forty minutes between Chapel-en-le-Frith and Buxton. The result was that it was fifty minutes late on arriving at Buxton, and fifty minutes late on leaving on the return journey. It further appears that in consequence of this delay, the plaintiff, on arriving at Stockport, found that the last train to Congleton had left. After waiting three hours at Stockport he caught a train which took him as far as Macclesfield, where he arrived at 10.48 p.m. and was compelled to remain all night, going on to Congleton next morning, and he now sues the company for damages for his detention and also for the expenses he was put to in stopping at the hotel in Macclesfield, and the cost of his journey the next morning to Congleton. The defendants relied on the general regulation set forth in their time tables, which is as follows:—"Time Bills.—The published train bills of this company are only intended to fix the time at which passengers may be certain to obtain their tickets for any journey from the various stations, it being understood that the trains shall not start before the appointed time. Every attention will be paid to ensure punctuality, as far as it is practicable; but the directors give notice that the company do not undertake that the trains shall start or arrive at the time specified in the bills; nor will they be accountable for any loss, inconvenience, or injury, which may arise from delays or detention. The right to stop the trains at any station on the line, although not marked as a stopping station, is reserved."—which their advocate contended was incorporated with and formed part of their contract with the plaintiff—and so far I agree with him. But they do not and cannot by any such regulation divest themselves of their responsibility for negligence or want of due diligence in the discharge of their duties towards those with whom they have entered into the contract. The question is, therefore, whether the defendants acted so negligently, or with such want of diligence in the matter, as to entitle the plaintiff to recover. I am of opinion that they did. The only explanation of the delay which was attempted was that the rails were slippery and the gradient heavy. It was, however, admitted that the train was not above the usual weight, and that the engine was one which was habitually used for this journey. But this is by no means a satisfactory explanation of a delay of forty minutes in a journey which usually occupies fourteen—that is to say, fifty-four minutes were necessary for a distance usually traversed in fourteen; an excess not to be accounted for by mere greasiness of the rails, and, as there was no accident to the machinery, either the engine was in itself of insufficient power, except when the rails were perfectly dry (which is not always the case in that country), or the driver had allowed his steam to get too low. The latter appears to me the probable reason, as the return journey being all downhill less steam would be required, and there would be twenty minutes at Buxton to get it up to proper pressure. But whichever be the case the defendants are, in my opinion, responsible to the plaintiff for the damages which he has sustained by the delay, and I assess them at 15s., being the expense of staying all night at Macclesfield, and a fresh ticket to Congleton in the morning.

The defendants asked for leave to appeal upon the ground that the expense of staying all night in Macclesfield was not recoverable. Leave was granted on that point.

MR. JUSTICE BLACKBURN AND THE JUDGE OF THE CAMBRIDGE COUNTY COURT.

WE extract from the Cambridge Independent Press of 18th April the following full report of Judge Beales' reply to the remarks of Mr. Justice Blackburn, reported in this journal on Feb. 7:

His HONOUR, addressing the senior barrister present, said: Mr. Cockerell,—I should be very ungrateful, as well as uncourteous, if I were to allow the day to pass without publicly acknowledging the address you were kind enough to forward to me a few days ago, signed by thirty-three gentlemen, besides yourself, practising either as barristers-at-law or attorneys and solicitors in courts on my circuit, an address expressing pain and regret at a remark reported in the Law Times of the 7th of February last, to have been made by Mr. Justice Blackburn in the Court of Queen's Bench, as to my ruling in the case of Taylor v. The Great Eastern Railway Company, which came before that court on appeal from the Haverhill County Court, and expressing also the perfect satisfaction of the gentlemen signing the address with my rulings generally which were involved in the same ungracious remarks; and expressing further their high respect and esteem for my judicial conduct during the whole time I have been the judge of this circuit, and their full confidence in my "able and impartial administration" of the law. It is impossible that anything could have occurred more gratifying to my feelings, or to which, under the circumstances, I could attach greater value, than this warm and spontaneous expression of sympathy, esteem, and confidence by so many of the gentlemen practising before me, an expression I may regard as almost unanimous from my courts, as several gentlemen whose names are not attached to the address in consequence of the delay which would necessarily have arisen from sending it round to all the sixteen courts, or from their absence at the time of its being sent to their court, or other accidental circumstances, have personally expressed to me their regret at their not having had the opportunity of signing it, and their entire concurrence with every word it contains. I profoundly and from my inmost heart thank all for it. The address, with considerate delicacy, refrains from any discussion of the case reported on appeal in the Law Times; but I consider it my duty, both to myself and to those who have presented and concurred in this highly complimentary address, to make some remarks on that report. The address expresses pain and regret at the particular remark which is quoted as alleged in the report to have been made by Mr Justice Blackburn in reversing my decision. I am deeply sensible of this very kindly feeling on my behalf, but I cannot but add, and perhaps many will anticipate what I am about to say, that I read that remark, and the other unseemly remarks alleged to have been made by the learned judge, with such great surprise and indignation that I might, if I had acted on the impulse of the moment, have been disposed to express as strongly as I felt it; but upon reflection I deem it more befitting what is due to and from me in the position which I have the honour to hold, to attribute these remarks either to some mistake or exaggeration in the report, or to some grave misapprehension of the real facts of the case and of the grounds of my decision. That there was great misunderstanding as to one of the points on which it was thought proper to subject me to animadversion is most certain, for on the faith of a statement that I allowed the company to appeal only on condition that they paid the costs of the appeal, the learned judge thought proper to intimate that I had exceeded my jurisdiction. Now, without discussing the question whether I should have exceeded my jurisdiction if I had imposed such a condition, the case being, by reason of the small amount of damages claimed, one in which the company could not have appealed without my permission, the fact is I imposed no such condition. The solicitor of the company himself stated openly at the last Haverhill Court, and in very frank and manly terms, that he was as much surprised as I could be at any such statement having been made in the court above, as no such condition had been made by me. On this point, therefore, the offensive remarks in the court above were wholly unjustified by anything that took place in my court; and hence I am the more inclined to suppose that there was in other respects some such misapprehension of the real facts of the case, and of the grounds of my decision. These facts and grounds briefly were that furniture of which the company had undertaken the carriage was completely smashed in the transit, and nothing but the fragments were delivered to Mr Taylor, the consignee and plaintiff, and I held the company liable for the damage on the old common law principle that they were insurers of the goods for their safe and secure delivery, notwithstanding a special contract entered into by them with the consignee, exempting them in consideration of their carrying the goods at a lower rate from all risk and responsibility, except from any wilful act or default if proved. I considered that such a contract was null and void under the seventh section of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, by which it was enacted, as it appeared to me in confirmation of the old common law principle that companies should be liable for loss of or injury to animals or goods occasioned by the neglect or default of the company or its servants, notwithstanding any notice, condition, or declaration made and given by such company contrary thereto, or in anywise limiting such liability; and every such notice, condition, or declaration was declared to be null and void, a proviso being added, that nothing therein should be construed to prevent companies from making such conditions as should be adjudged by the court or judge, before whom any question relating thereto should be tried, to be just and reasonable. It seemed to me, having regard to the interests and welfare of the public, that railway companies had gone too far in availing themselves of this proviso, that they had availed themselves of it to an extent which with the additional contrivance of charging a lower carriage-rate, purported to exempt them altogether from that liability for loss or injury occasioned by the neglect or default of themselves or their servants, to which the Act expressly declared and intended they should be liable, and to which they were liable at common law as insurers there being nothing in the Act limiting their liability any more than at common law to negligence or default proved to be wilful, and it being besides, in almost all cases, quite out of the power of the customer to obtain or give proof of such wilfulness. The case of Taylor v. The Great Eastern Company appeared to me a peculiarly proper one for having this, as it seemed to me, important question decided by a Superior Court, as negligence was not denied, and the defence was, that negligence of any degree, or to any extent, was immaterial, unless it could be proved to be wilful; a defence which appeared to me to be not admissible, within either the spirit or letter of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act. Had my decision on this point, to which everything else in the decision was merely subordinate, been reversed after full discussion and argument, I should have bowed with the utmost respect to the judgment of the Superior Court; but, so far as I can gather from the report, my decision was reversed, and in no very courteous terms, without the shadow of an argument, or the least attempt of an argument controverting the grounds of my decision, as here referred to, and relied on by me in the court below, and without any reason whatever being given for adjudging those grounds to be erroneous. However much I may regret this result of the appeal which I allowed to be made, and however indignant I may feel at the language reported to have been used towards myself, I have the large consolation of being countenanced in my views, as regards the main point in this case, by one of the most eminent courts of jurisprudence in the whole world—the Supreme Court of the United States—in which this very question as to whether a common carrier can, by entering into a special contract with a party for carrying his goods or person on modified terms, stipulate for immunity for the negligence of himself and his servants, has been made the subject of a most elaborate and exhaustive judgment in the negative. By that judgment, after a full review of the law of carriers, and after a special reference to our Railway and Canal Traffic Act, as substantially a return to the rules of the common law, and after commenting on the necessity of standing firmly to those principles of law by which the public interests are protected, now that the carrier and his customer do not stand on a footing of equality, the business being mostly concentrated in a few powerful corporations, whose position enables them to impose such conditions on travel and transport as they think fit, the customers being completely in their power, the decision of the court was pronounced to be "that it is not just and reasonable in the eye of the law for a common carrier to stipulate for exemption from responsibility for the negligence of himself or his servants." I could not have desired a more complete vindication of the views I had previously formed on this subject, and in accordance with which I decided the case of Taylor v. the Great Eastern Railway Company. I have only further to add, gentlemen, for your satisfaction as to my rulings in general, otherwise I should not have condescended to allude to the matter, that only one appeal from my decisions had succeeded up to the time of this late extraordinary affair in the Court of Queen's Bench. In all other cases my rulings had been affirmed. With regard to the one exception, being that of an appeal from a judgment of mine in this court, I have been quite unable to ascertain upon what grounds or to what extent the Superior Court dissented, if it did dissent, from that judgment, and I much regret being thus unable to obtain this information, as the case involved a question of some nicety and novelty in the law of real property, in which I had had large practical experience when at the bar, having been for several years conveyancing counsel to one of the largest of our railway companies, and having advised on the title to great part of the property over which their lines now run. I cannot conclude these remarks without again deeply thanking you, Mr. Cockerell, and all who have signed or concurred in this address, for the exceeding great gratification I have derived from it. It will be ever treasured by me with warm feelings of both pride and pleasure, and with a constant and grateful remembrance of so ample a testimony of confidence, respect, and sympathy under somewhat trying circumstances, and I can but hope that no conduct on my part in future, any more than in the past, will tend to diminish that respect and confidence, or cause less agreeable relations to exist between us.

The following is the text of the address referred to:

"To Edmond Beales, Esq., Judge of the County Courts of Circuit No. 35.

"Dear Sir,—We, the undersigned, barristers-at-law or attorneys practising before you in the courts of which you are the judge, have read with much pain and regret a report in the Law Times of 17th Feb. 1874, of a remark alleged to have been made by Mr Justice Blackburn in reversing a decision given by you in the case of Taylor v. The Great Eastern Railway, that if you were in the habit of making such rulings he (Mr Justice Blackburn) owned he thought the Lord Chancellor should be made aware of it.

"Without discussing the particular point before the Court of Queen's Bench in the case alluded to, or presuming in any way to question the correctness of the views taken by that eminent judge, we think it due to you to state that we have been perfectly satisfied with your ruling generally; that we consider you bestow more than usual attention and care on all cases coming before you; that your judicial conduct during the whole time you have been the judge of this circuit has commanded our high respect and esteem; and that we have the fullest confidence in your able and impartial administration of the law in your several courts."

[Signed by four barristers and thirty attorneys practising in the several courts.]

THE Liberal party in Preston have decided not to oppose the return of Mr. Holker.

IN charging the Grand Jury at the Salford Hundred Quarter Sessions, on Monday, the Deputy Chairman remarked that out of the sixty-six prisoners for trial twenty-three could neither read nor write, twenty-one could only read and write imperfectly, and only two could read and write well.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

KINGSTON-ON-THAMES COUNTY COURT.

Friday, April 17.

Re THREADKELL; Ex parte SHRUBSOLE.

THE KINGSTON BURIAL BOARD, GARNISHEES.

Liquidation by arrangement—Absolute garnishee order a "charge" on debt attached within the 12th and 16th sections of the Bankruptcy Act 1869.

IN this case the liquidating debtor had entered into a contract, dated 24th Nov. 1873, with the Kingston Burial Board for the execution of certain works. On the 9th Jan. 1874, a garnishee summons was issued against the board by Messrs. Shrubsole, the judgment creditors of the liquidating debtor; and on the 16th Jan. an absolute order was made thereon for £44 10s. 3d., debt and costs. On the 19th Jan. a certificate was signed by the surveyor of the completion of the works in the contract, and of a balance of £76 4s. 4d. being due to the liquidating debtor. On the 20th Jan. the petition for liquidation was filed, and on the 5th Feb. resolutions were duly passed and a trustee appointed. The trustee now applies for an order upon the burial board to pay to him the balance of £76 4s. 4d., certified to be due as above. Messrs. Shrubsole oppose this application and apply for an order that the sum of £44 10s. 3d., for which they have obtained a garnishee order against the burial board as above, may be paid to them on the ground that under such last mentioned order they are creditors holding a "charge," and therefore a security on property of the bankrupt, under the 12th and 16th sections of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. According to the recent case of Emmanuel v. Bridger, Roberts Garnishee (Q. B. Weekly Notes, Feb. 21st, 1874.) That case, as reported, indeed goes much farther than the present, for it decides that an absolute garnishee order is a charge not only on the debt due from the garnishee, but on goods belonging to the garnishee of which his creditor had taken possession by his agent under a bill of sale, and on which the agent had a lien for an advance of £50 made by him without notice of any attachment. I confess that I have some difficulty in following the latter part of this decision, and have some doubt as to the correctness of the report; but I think that it is quite clear that an absolute garnishee order constitutes a charge upon the debt due from the garnishee within the meanings of the above sections of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and therefore that Messrs. Shrubsole are entitled under the order obtained by them to a charge for £44 10s. 3d. on the balance of £76 4s. 4d., found due from the burial board as above, and to the receipt of the same from the burial board, and likewise to receive their costs of this application from the estate.

Ex parte MARSH; Ex parte BAYLEY.

Written orders to debtor—"Charges" under the 12th and 16th sections of the B. A. 1869.

THESE two claimants obtained written orders from the liquidating debtor, dated respectively the 3rd and 16th Jan., for the respective sums of £17 11s. 9d. and £10, addressed to the burial board, and directing them to pay the above amounts out of any moneys due from them under the above contract to the debtor, and which orders were therefore given previously to the surveyor's certificate, and also to the filing of the petition for liquidation above stated. I think that such orders are clearly equitable charges, and amount to assignments in equity of so much of the debt. Row v. Dawson (1 Ves. 331), and Bell v. The London and North-Western Railway Company (15 Beav. 548), and are also charges within the meaning of the 12th and 16th sections of the Bankruptcy Act 1869. The claimants are therefore entitled to receive the above sums of £17 11s. 9d. and £10 respectively from the burial board, which together with the sum of £44 10s. 3d., payable to Messrs. Shrubsole, make the sum of £72 2s. 0d., leaving the sum of £4 2s. 2d. only payable to the trustee. The claimants, Marsh and Bayley, are of course also entitled to their costs from the estate. With regard to these two charges, I have assumed that they were given for present value, and not for previous debts, in which case they would be fraudulent preferences, and void under the 92nd section. The burial board must also have their costs from the estate.

MANCHESTER COUNTY COURT.

Friday, April 17.

(Before J. A. RUSSELL, Q.C., Judge.)

Re C. L. CLARKE.

Bankruptcy—Partnership—Admission of proof of official liquidator of creditor company without proof of appointment—Admission of proof of debt of a partner of the debtor.

B., official liquidator of a company of which bankrupt was a debtor, applied to prove the debt, offering no evidence of his appointment as official liquidator beyond making his affidavit, and stating that the debt was due to him in that capacity. The registrar refused to admit the proof, but admitted it as a claim.

Held, that he ought to have admitted the proof.

W. applied to prove against the estate for money advanced to the bankrupt on condition that he should share in the profits of the bankrupt's business. The registrar admitted the proof, allowing W. to vote, but postponing his right to a dividend till the other creditors were satisfied.

Held, that the proof ought to have been rejected, and that as a matter of course the resolution passed at the first meeting must be set aside, and a fresh meeting held.

Smyly, barrister, instructed by Messrs. Sal and Co., in support of the appeal from the registrar's decision.

Jordan, barrister, instructed by Partington and Allen, for the trustees appointed at the first meeting.

This was a motion on behalf of Alfred Audrey Broad, of 35, Walbrook, London, public accountant, the official liquidator of the Imperial Rubber Company, Limited, in liquidation, for an order that the decision of the registrar, at the first meeting of creditors on the 26th March last, whereby he refused to admit the proof of Mr. Broad as official liquidator for the sum of £141 8s. 6d. as a proof, but admitted the same as a claim only, and refused to allow him to vote at the meeting, should be reversed and set aside, and the proof admitted on the estate. 2. That the decision of the registrar, whereby he admitted the proof of Richard Wood, of John-street Mill, Heywood, Manufacturer, for the sum of £417 13s. 9d., and allowed Mr. Wood to vote at the meeting in respect thereof, should also be reversed and set aside. 3. That the resolutions alleged to have been passed at the first meeting should be set aside, and a fresh meeting called to appoint a trustee, and for such other purposes as it is competent for a first meeting of creditors to transact.

The bankrupt carried on business as an iron merchant at 5, Todd-street, Manchester. It appeared from an affidavit of Mr. Paterson, who attended as the proxy of Mr. Broad at the first meeting, that at that meeting he presented a proof on behalf of Mr. Broad, the official liquidator, for £141 8s. 6d., at the foot of which he was appointed proxy of Mr. Broad. On his presenting the proof it was objected to by the solicitor for the petitioning creditor, on the ground that no evidence of the appointment of Mr. Broad as official liquidator was given, beyond the statement in the affidavit of debt that he was official liquidator, and the registrar allowed the objection and admitted the proof as a claim only, and refused to allow Mr. Paterson, as Mr. Broad's proxy, to vote in the proceedings of the meeting. At the same meeting a proof was presented by Mr. Wood for the sum of £417 13s. 9d. in respect of money lent and advanced. That proof was objected to by one of the creditors present, and Mr. Wood was thereupon examined upon oath before the registrar, when he admitted that the money for which he sought to prove against the estate had been lent under the stipulation that he should share in the profits of the business. He alleged that the loan was made under a written contract pursuant to the Partnership Amendment Act, whereby, although he was to participate in the profits, he was still not to be constituted a partner. That objection was overruled by the registrar, and the proof admitted, and Mr. Wood allowed to vote at the meeting. Thereupon resolutions appointing Mr. Wood and another creditor trustees in the matter, without security, and without a committee of inspection, were declared by the registrar to have been passed; hence the present application to reverse this decision, and to order a fresh meeting to be called.

Upon the first point Smyly submitted that for the purpose of mere proof of debt, inasmuch as the debt itself was not disputed, the statement of Mr. Broad that he was official liquidator was sufficient to have the proof admitted, although Mr. Broad had not as a separate allegation stated that he was official liquidator. Still having described himself as such, if such statement were false he was liable to be prosecuted for perjury; and he quoted the case of Ex parte Lowenthal (22 Weekly Reporter, p. 459), in support thereof. Upon the second question, as to the admission of Mr. Wood's proof, he submitted that Mr. Wood under the circumstances could not prove at all upon the estate. It might be contended that, although by the operation of the Partnership Amendment Act he was debarred from receiving a dividend until all the other creditors had been paid 20s. in the pound, he was still entitled to prove on the estate, subject to that disability; but the case of Ex parte Mills (L. Rep. 8 Ch. Ap. 569; 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 606) covered the whole question. He also referred to sect. 16, sub-sect. 2, and to sect. 32 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, by the latter of which it is provided that, with the exception of certain preferential claims, which are paid in full, "all debts provable under the bankruptcy shall be paid pari passu;" and as this was a case in which it was clear that Mr. Wood would not be entitled to be paid pari passu with the other creditors, then his was not a debt provable, at least until all the other creditors had been paid 20s. in the pound.

Jordan, in reply, argued that it was incumbent upon Mr. Broad to give the fullest proof to the court that he was official liquidator as represented by him in his affidavit; in fact, such proof as would satisfy a court of common law of that fact; and, inasmuch as there was nothing beyond the mere statement in his affidavit, and Mr. Broad did not attend in person, then the registrar was right in admitting his proof as a claim only, and refusing the right to vote in respect thereof. Upon the second point he stated that, after the judgment of Mellish, L.J., in the case of Ex parte Mills, he could scarcely argue the case further, but he submitted that Mr. Wood had a clear right to prove on the estate, although his right to receive dividend would be kept in abeyance until all the other creditors had been satisfied.

His HONOUR said that independently altogether of the case quoted by Mr. Smyly on the first point, he should have been of opinion that the fact that Mr. Broad was the official liquidator was sufficiently averred in his affidavit. There could not certainly, in order to admit a proof upon the file, be more required than that the person making the proof should primâ facie be entitled to prove. In the affidavit in this case there were three distinct affirmations—first, that he was Mr. A. A. Broad; secondly, that he was a public accountant; and, thirdly, that he was the official liquidator of the Imperial Rubber Company. Mr. Jordan had argued that that was not a sufficiently distinct affirmation, but he (his Honour) held, upon the authority of Lord Cairns, in Re Lowenthal, that there was sufficient upon the face of the affidavit to entitle Mr. Broad to put his proof upon the file in the character in which he described himself. With regard to the second point, namely, whether or not the debt in this case, having arisen out of a transaction which was within the statute of 1865—the Partnership Law Amendment Act—was capable of being proved under the bankruptcy, Ex parte Mills was quite a distinct authority. The Lords Justices had decided in that case that a lender in such a case as this was not entitled to appear as a creditor at all until the other creditors were satisfied. That being the case, he (his Honour) must disagree with the opinion formed by the chairman of the meeting, and hold, in the first place, that the proof of Mr. Broad had been improperly rejected, and in the next that the proof of Mr. Wood must be expunged. Mr. Smyly's third application, namely, that another meeting of creditors should be called for the appointment of a fresh trustee, would follow. Costs of both sides to come out of the estate.

Re STUBBS, ROBERTON AND CO.

Bill of sale—Assignment of partnership property by one partner.

Addleshaw (Addleshaw and Warburton), on behalf of the trustee, applied for an order declaring two agreements and a bill of sale, dated respectively 10th Oct. 1871, 10th April 1872, and 17th May 1872, and given by the bankrupts to a gentleman named Winpenny, to be void as against the trustee. He said the bankrupts, on the 10th Oct. 1871, borrowed from Mr. Wimpenny a sum of £250, and signed an agreement of that date, by which they agreed when requested to execute a bill of sale. The debtors should have repaid that amount on the 10th April 1872, but they were unable to do so, and a second agreement was entered into to the like effect. It recited a then present advance which appeared to have been an error, as it was clear from the evidence of the debtors as well as the examinations of Wimpenny that no amount was advanced at that time. In the following month, May 1872, Mr. Leigh applied to the debtors to pay the amount due to Mr. Wimpenny or to execute a bill of sale which he had prepared. Roberton executed it, but Stubbs declined to do so, and wrote Mr. Leigh to that effect. On the 17th May possession was taken by Mr. Wimpenny, and on the 21st May 1872, Stubbs filed a petition for liquidation, and Roberton also filed a petition on the 2nd July following. They were both adjudicated bankrupts on the 11th July, and Mr. Milne was appointed trustee under the bankruptcy. He (Addleshaw) contended that the bill of sale was void against the trustee, as it purported to assign partnership property, and was signed by one partner only. He cited the case of Harrison v. Jackson (7 T. R. 207) in support of his contention that partners could not bind each other by deed unless the authority to do so was under seal. In this case Stubbs expressly repudiated Roberton's authority. He then contended that the agreements were also void. He said cases had no doubt been decided where it had been held that an agreement to give a bill of sale need not be registered, but the law was now clearly laid down by the Court of Appeal in Ex parte Mackay (28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 828) and Ex parte Brown (28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 828); re Jevons (8 L. Rep. Ch. Ap.), where it was decided that an agreement for a bill of sale, if relied on as an equitable assignment of property, must be registered. He argued that the property at the date of the bankruptcy was in the order and disposition of the bankrupts with the consent of the true owner, formal possession only having been taken, and would pass to the trustee; and, further, that the property was also in the apparent possession of the debtors, and therefore the securities were void against the trustee under the Bills of Sale Act. He cited Ex parte Lewis; re Henderson. The property seized under the bill of sale had realised £685, which he claimed on behalf of the trustee, less the usual costs of sale.

Leigh contended that possession having been taken by Mr. Wimpenny before any act of bankruptcy had been committed, he had a good title against the trustee. Mr. Wimpenny had done more than take formal possession, and the property had been taken out of the order and dispositions of the bankrupts.

The REGISTRAR said he was against Mr. Leigh on this point, and he should make the order asked for by the trustee.

YARMOUTH COUNTY COURT.

Wednesday, March 25.

(Before J. WORLLEDGE, Esq., Judge.)

Ex parte THE TRUSTEE; Re BRYANT (a liquidating debtor.)

Seizure by sheriff under execution—Bankruptcy of debtor within fourteen days—Sheriff not entitled to retain for the creditor his costs of action.

His HONOUR.—In this case a question has arisen between the trustee, Mr. Etheridge, and the sheriff of Suffolk, as to the proper construction of the 87th section of the Bankruptcy Act 1869 as compared with the corresponding section, the 73rd of the Bankruptcy Act 1861, and which has been brought before me in the form of a special case without argument. The facts upon which the question has arisen are as follows:—The sheriff of Suffolk, under an execution at the suit of Messrs. Kent, ironmongers, Beccles, seized and sold goods of the debtor to the amount of £71 17s. 9d. From which he made the following deductions:—

	£	s.	d.
Expenses of the levy	2	16	6
Sheriffs' poundage	3	11	9
Auctioneers' expenses of sale, &c.	7	4	0
One years rent due to the landlord	7	0	0
Costs of the execution-creditor in obtaining judgment paid to his solicitor, Mr. Angell	5	6	0
				£25 18s. 3d.
				£45 19s. 6d.

And the sheriff paid the balance £45 19s. 6d. to the trustee. The trustee admits that the sheriff had a right to deduct all the items except the last, the £5 6s. paid by the sheriff to the plaintiff's solicitor, which the trustee now claims from the sheriff. There is no authority at all bearing on the point in dispute, and the question depends solely on the construction of the 87th section of the Act of 1869. And the words of the section material to the decision of this case are as follows: "The sheriff shall retain the proceeds of such sale in his hands for a period of fourteen days, and upon notice being served upon him within that period of a bankruptcy petition having been presented against such trader shall hold the proceeds of such sale, after deducting expenses, on trust to pay the same to the trustee," and the section further enacts that if there be no notice of the presentation of a bankruptcy petition within fourteen days, or no adjudication of bankruptcy within that period, the sheriff shall deal with the proceeds of the sale as if he had received no notice of a bankruptcy petition. In the present case it is clear the debtor is a trader, and the section applies as well to cases of liquidation as of bankruptcy. And the question is, are the costs of the writ and obtaining judgment included in the word "expenses." Now, the words "after deducting expenses," immediately following the words "the proceeds of such sale," would naturally, I think, mean (as contended by the trustee in the special case) the expenses of the sale, or at all events no more than the sheriff's expenses. But there is another consideration which appears to me almost conclusive in the trustee's favour. Had it been intended that the execution creditor should have his costs of action and obtaining judgment deducted before payment over to the trustee, I should have expected to find the words "costs of suit and obtaining judgment," or some such words, after and coupled with the word "expenses;" and further, the words, "and as to such costs on trust to pay the same "to the execution creditor," but the section declares no trust in favour of the execution creditor. It therefore appears to me impossible to hold that after notice of the presentation of a bankruptcy petition, the sheriff holds any part of the proceeds of the sale on trust, to pay the same to the execution creditor, should the debtor be adjudged bankrupt within the fourteen days, and consequently in that event the sheriff is under no obligation and has no right to pay over any part of the proceeds of the sale to the execution creditor, and this conclusion is confirmed by a reference to the 73rd section of the Act of 1861, which concludes with this proviso, "provided also that in case of bankruptcy the costs and expenses of such action and execution (i.e. reddendo singula singulis, the costs of such action, and the expenses of the execution) shall be retained and paid out of the proceeds of the sale and the balance only after such payment be paid to the assignees." Now there is no such proviso to the 87th section of the Act of 1869, and that section omits entirely the words "costs" and "such action," and the only conclusion I can draw from such omission is that under the Act now in force, the execution creditor is not entitled to the costs in question. The order of the court therefore is, that the Sheriff of Suffolk do within fourteen days pay over to the trustee the sum of £5 6s., and also pay his own costs, and that the trustee be allowed his costs out of the estate.

LEGAL NEWS.

THE CHAIRMANSHIP OF THE NOTTS QUARTER SESSIONS.—At the Notts Quarter Sessions on Tuesday, a letter was read from Lord Belper resigning the chairmanship. His Lordship has held the position for a lengthened period. On being appointed lord lieutenant of the county, nine years ago, he was desirous of resigning the chairmanship, but was induced by the magistrates to retain it. Now, however, advancing years have compelled his Lordship to send in a positive resignation. It was accepted, and Mr. T. B. T. Hildyard was appointed to the position.

JUSTICE IN THE MOFUSSIL.—The relations between the Bench and the Bar in India are not universally of the most amicable description, if a case reported in the Indian papers as having just occurred at Mysore may be taken as representing the ordinary state of affairs. The Bench figures in the person of Major Logan, and the Bar is that of Mr. Hayes, barrister-at-law. It may not unnaturally be asked how it happens that a gentleman bearing a title usually confined to persons of the military profession comes to administer justice in the Mofussil. This is explained by the fact that Major Logan belongs to the Bench on the strength of being a member of the Mysore Commission, "the officers of which," we are told, "used to conduct their business in a free and easy manner." The introduction of the Bar in the provinces in 1867 necessitated a system and a regularity of procedure from which these officials were averse, and to which they have not yet reconciled themselves. Major Logan, at all events, has never quite got over the interference of professional advocates in the administration of justice, and lately took an opportunity of showing his sentiments. Mr. Hayes had refused to sign an entry brought him as he was going home by the Nazir of the court, on the grounds that it was incorrect. On his next appearance before the Major a scene occurred such as we are accustomed to associate only with courts of justice in the back States of America. "Look here, Sir," cried the Major, "your conduct has been in the highest degree improper, and almost impertinent." Mr. Hayes, interrupting, solemnly protested against such language being addressed to him; but the Major would not listen, and, according to the Times of India, continued in these words:—"Do you think I am going to allow a fellow styling himself a barrister-at-law—and barrister he may be for all I know and care—to flout my officers to the face as you have done? You do not understand your duties as a professional man should, and as a barrister should. I will turn you out of my court. I mean what I say—I will turn you out of my court. I will report you to my superiors and have it done." Mr. Hayes then asked Major Logan in what capacity he was addressing him. He said: "The court is not particularly engaged just now. I have knocked off work. I am addressing you extra-judicially. Now I will hear you." The result was that the Nazir, being called on for for his version of the affair, the judge expressed himself as "thoroughly satisfied" with the explanation. Whether this little episode will have the effect of modifying the Major's horror of a barrister appearing before him we are not informed. It ought, at all events, to make him more cautious for the future how he expresses himself on the subject.—Globe.

A PETITION has been lodged in the Hanaper Office, Dublin, against the return of Mr. George O'Donnell, M.P. for Galway borough, on the grounds of intimidation and undue influence.

IN a letter to the members of the legal profession at Southampton, with which town he was formerly connected, Lord Chief Justice Cockburn has expressed his deep sense of their kindness in sending him an address warmly approving his conduct in the recent trial of the pretended Roger Tichborne.

MUNICIPAL AND PARLIAMENTARY REGISTERS.—A communication has been received by the Kidderminster town council from the Home Secretary, asking whether the corporation considered it desirable that there should be one register only for municipal and parliamentary voters. With a view of getting over the difficulty of female voters being on the municipal and not on the parliamentary list, it is proposed that there should be but one list, and that the list should contain two columns, one for the parliamentary and one for the municipal franchise. The council were unanimously of opinion that there should be only one register for both.

COURT OF ALDERMEN.—A meeting of the magistrates of the City was held at Guildhall on Tuesday, the Lord Mayor presiding. The court proceeded to elect a chief clerk to the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House Justice-room. The three selected candidates who were considered by the committee most eligible for the appointment were Mr. James Harebooth Gresham, Mr. Charles J. B. Hertslet, and Mr. Walter Charles Metcalfe. On a show of hands the court reduced the number to two—Mr. Metcalfe retiring. On the final poll Mr. Gresham had a majority of fourteen votes over Mr. Hertslet. The election was thereupon declared to have fallen on Mr. Gresham, and he thereupon received the congratulations of the Lord Mayor. The salary of the office is 800*l.* a year.

POSTMAN AND TUBMAN.—These are offices in the Court of Exchequer which are now merely honorary appointments, but they date from a very remote period, being almost coeval with the constitution of the court itself. In ancient times they conferred great privileges upon their holders. Amongst others the holders enjoyed a precedence of even the law officers of the Crown in making motions and in bringing other matters under the cognisance of the Bench. The Hon. A. Thesiger, Q.C., and Mr. A. Cohen, Q.C., who recently held these offices, having vacated them by reason of their acceptances of silk gowns, the Lord Chief Baron on Tuesday morning called upon Mr. R. E. Webster and Mr. Anstey, as senior members of the outer Bar, to take their seats respectively as postman and tubman. The learned gentlemen took their seats accordingly.

THE NEW BARONET.—Mr. Philip Rose, of Rayners, near Wycombe, Buckinghamshire, who is about to be raised to a baronetcy in recognition of his services to the Conservative party in reference to elections and the last Reform Bill, is a son of the late Mr. William Rose, of High Wycombe, by Charlotte, daughter of Mr. William Baly. He was born in the year 1816, and was admitted a solicitor in 1836. He practised for many years in Westminster as a partner in the well-known firm of Baxter, Rose, Norton, and Co., and was appointed a Treasurer of the County Courts during the tenure of office by the Conservative Party in 1858. He is a magistrate for Buckinghamshire, and also a Commissioner of Lieutenancy for Middlesex. He married in 1840, Margaret, daughter of Mr. Robert Ranking, by whom he has with other issue a son, Philip Frederick, who was born in 1842, and who married in 1866 Rose Anne, daughter of the late Rev. William Wollaston Pym, formerly Rector of Willian, Hertfordshire.

NOTE.—This Department of the LAW TIMES being open to free discussion on all professional topics, the Editor is not responsible for any opinions or statements contained in it.

COUNTY COURT COMMITTALS.—As the failure of Mr. Bass's Bill gives a new lease, so to speak, to this power, your observations as to the "strict proof in each case that the original summons had reached defendant" are most important. Allow me to suggest an easy way of carrying out the suggestion where defendants have not been personally served with the first summons, by granting a new [illegible] at once on the sworn statement of the defendant appearing on the judgment summons that he had not personally contracted plaintiff's debt and then the doubted law in Jolly v. Rees should be applied, and the cases referred to in Parliament of debts contracted with tallymen by labourers' wives and daughters would cease. I do not quite follow your remarks as to Mr. Commissioner Kerr. Certainly that judge has had very large experience, and he gave evidence before the late committee against imprisonment for debt. While some 8000 annually go to prison, more than half for sums below 48s., it is clear the majority must do so from sheer inability, at any rate when arrested, and I still venture to deny the policy of so imprisoning them, almost entirely at the expense of the rates and taxes, and should like to see a return to the original system of the County Court Act 1846, by which the creditor directing the arrest paid for the conveyance of his debtor to the prison, if it be too much to seek the adoption of the Scotch system under which creditors have to support their debtor while in prison. If strict legal proof of means was always required, imprisonment as a punishment for obstinacy would be more defensible; but we all know that proof "to the satisfaction of the judge" is most variable.

CLERKS TO ATTORNEYS.—I would call the attention of "A Certificated Managing Clerk," whose letter appears in your issue of to-day, to the case of Bookham v. Potter, Ex parte Rogers (an Attorney) (18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 479), in which the late Lord Chief Justice Bovill says: "There is nothing to prevent an attorney who is employed as clerk to another attorney from practising in a County Court; he must, however, satisfy the provision of the statute requiring him to be engaged generally as attorney in the cause.

JOHN F. HAYNES.

STATUTORY LEGISLATION.—At any time it is not a very easy matter to be posted up in the different branches of the law, especially in Acts of Parliament. One Act is passed; an amendment follows, certain sections of the former Act are repealed, others remain in force; another amendment follows, and this makes it exceedingly confusing to discover what is really enacted. Instead of attempting to engraft one Act upon another, would it not be sinpler and much more intelligible to incorporate the provisions of the first Act in the second, and thus entirely erase the former from the statute book. Instead of having several statutes to refer to, practitioners would find the whole of the law on one particular subject contained in one enactment. The only objection which there can be will be a little extra expense in printing. This suggestion occurred to me when perusing the 9th section of the Real Property Limitations Bill.

MINO.

READING FOR THE FINAL EXAMINATION.—As an articled clerk I wish to ask, through the medium of the LAW TIMES, if some one of your correspondents will kindly furnish a list of books that may be advantageously read for the final examination. I have twelve months' time in which to prepare, and have no intention of reading for honours. I should like a useful course, such as was contributed by Mr. Wilkinson, of Liverpool, through your columns some five years ago; perhaps that gentleman may do the like again. I have read thoroughly the intermediate text books. It will, no doubt, be a favour to others besides myself who read the LAW TIMES. VINGT-SEPT.

THE ATTORNEYS' AND SOLICITORS' BILL.—It is well that the subject recently discussed by the Union Society of London, namely, that greater facilities should be afforded by barristers desirous of becoming solicitors, has now found its place in your columns. For I venture to doubt whether the cases in which barristers are so desirous are now-a-days quite so "few and far between" as some seem to imagine. All who consider the subject will surely agree in the justice of your observations in your last week's issue, when, after reminding your readers that a barrister is required to be disbarred, and then to serve in the office of an attorney-at-law for three years as an articled clerk before he can be admitted on the roll of attorneys (22 & 23 Vict. c. 127, s. 3), you express your opinion that "to require a barrister to enter into articles of clerkship before he can become a solicitor is a degrading ceremony, and such a position cannot be defended for a moment. It is not to be overlooked that the law as it at present stands further obliges the barrister to go through both the "intermediate" and the "final" examinations: and my object in now troubling you is to suggest the desirability of seizing the opportunity offered by the present Attorneys and Solicitors' Bill to relieve barristers who have passed the general examination of the Inns of Court, from the useless annoyance of being required to pass the intermediate examination. It is well known that the general examination of the Inns of Court is, to say the least, of a severe nature; and it is surely absurd to require anyone who, by passing it, has fulfilled what is now an essential qualification for a call to the bar to pass the intermediate in the event of his wishing to become a solicitor.

X.

— The alterations in the law as to the service of articled clerks proposed by the above Bill may be shortly stated as follows. After reciting the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, s. 10, which prohibits articled clerks from holding any office or engaging in any employment other than as clerk to the attorney or solicitor to whom they are articled, the Bill proposes to abolish such restriction in cases where the clerk, prior to entering upon the office, or engaging in the employment, shall obtain (1) the written consent of his master, and (2) the sanction of a judge of one of the Superior Courts or the Master of the Rolls, &c. With very much deference to the noble lord who presented the Bill, and such of my professional brethren who approve of it, I venture to think that the proposed change will be detrimental to the best interests of the profession. The Bill is doubtless introduced in consequence of the recent case Ex parte Greville, in which the Court of Common Pleas held that the service of an articled clerk was insufficient because during the period of service he had, with the consent of his master, held the office of vestry clerk at a remuneration of about £100 per annum. This case appears to have been attended with a certain amount of hardship, inasmuch as the applicant's father, who had held the office, died, leaving a widow and children, whose support mainly depended upon the applicant. But "hard cases make bad law." Notwithstanding the conditions mentioned in the new Bill, I am of opinion that the proposed alteration will have an injurious tendency. The periods for which articled clerks according to circumstances, are bound to serve is certainly not too long to enable them to qualify themselves to pass their intermediate and final examinations, and, what is of more practical importance, to fit them to practise their profession. An articled clerk has to study both the theory and practice of the various branches of the law, and must make himself acquainted with book-keeping, in addition to which it is desirable he should practise elocution, attend law lectures, and, if possible, a law debating society. Surely the period now appropriated to these matters is not more than sufficient, especially when we know that in many cases study is frequently deferred until the last year or two of the term. In addition to these considerations, I think that the proposed Bill will open the door to abuses, and is derogatory to the dignity of our Profession. I have discussed the matter with a considerable number of my legal friends, and their coincidence with my views induces me to address you this letter.

T. C.

TOWN CLERKS AS POLITICAL AGENTS.—Will you allow me to refer to a question which was in several instances raised during the last Parliamentary election, viz., the propriety of town clerks in municipal boroughs where the mayor is the returning officer, acting as the legal agents of either candidate at such election. The town clerk of this town, a solicitor of the most undoubted respectability, strongly maintains his right to act, and did so, preparing the candidate's nomination paper, and afterwards advising the returning officer (the mayor) that such nomination had been legally made. On the other hand the late Mr. Stone, in his Town Councillors' Manual says it is the town clerk's duty "To act as adviser to the Mayor at Parliamentary elections," and in his reply to a letter from me in Feb. 1873, states, "I should never have thought of taking a retainer for any candidate, and considering the many points which require attention under the Ballot Act, the employment of the town clerk, or his partner, would, I think, be inconsistent with their duty as advisers of the mayor in his capacity of returning officer. It would not have been tolerated in Leicester; and so careful was I to hold the scales evenly that I did not even vote." Which is right? Surely in a matter of this kind there should be some general understanding.

LAW SOCIETIES.

ARTICLED CLERKS' SOCIETY.

Our readers should be aware of the existence of this society, which hold its meetings in the immediate vicinity of the law offices. The subscription is nominal, the advantages to be gained by persevering membership are beyond question. The questions are not of a merely technical character, but are sufficiently elastic and comprehensive to afford to speakers an opportunity to display their oratorical powers, and exhibit their acquaintance with matters interesting to the Profession. Members entering the society between the 2nd of April and the 2nd Nov. pay for the first year a subscription of 5s. All communications as to membership or otherwise are to be addressed to F. J. Baker, Hon. Sec. Rugby Chambers, Great James-street, Bedford-row, W.C.

The Legal Correspondence Department of the above Society (an excellent medium for learning and discussing moot points of law), is open to all law-students without election or other preliminary. Annual subscription 2s. 6d. Full information may be obtained on application to J. S. Rubinstein, Hon. Sec., 5, Raymond-buildings, Gray's-inn, W.C. Articled clerks should support all societies of this kind.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

The following circular has been issued by the council of the Incorporated Law Society:

PROPOSED UNION OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY WITH THE METROPOLITAN AND PROVINCIAL LAW ASSOCIATION.

More than a year ago, the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association mooted the question of the advisability of its dissolution, with a view to its merging in the Incorporated Law Society, which it was considered would, under its new constitution, adequately represent the whole body of attorneys and solicitors, including the country section, whose interests the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association had been supposed to take more especially under their charge.

A resolution was passed at the annual general meeting of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association in June 1872, to the effect that the managing committee should report at or before the next general meeting whether it would be for the advantage of the association that it should be amalgamated with the Incorporated Law Society, and if so, upon what terms, and that if necessary the managing committee should confer in the meantime with the council of the Incorporated Law Society on the subject.

The Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association having ascertained, by means of a circular, that a very widely spread feeling existed that it would be advantageous to the Profession that the two societies should be united, entered upon a correspondence with the council of this society with reference to the terms upon which, on the dissolution of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, the council would be prepared to recommend the admission to this society of such members of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association as were not already members of it.

A committee of the council had several meetings with a sub-committee of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, at which the terms and conditions of such admission were fully discussed. Some stipulations, made by the latter, were considered inadmissible, but the council, in December last, took upon themselves to inform the committee of management of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association that they were willing to recommend the proposed union to the members of this society upon the understanding that this society should hold, in the autumn of each year, a provincial meeting similar, as nearly as might be, to the autumnal provincial meetings which have been hitherto held by the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, and also that those members of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, who were not members of the Incorparated Law Society, should be admitted into membership, without entrance fee or ballot, on payment of the same annual subscription as that paid by the other members of this society.

These terms were ultimately accepted by the committee of management of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, and, by a resolution of that association, passed at a general meeting of its members held on the 11th March last, it was resolved that the report of the committee of management be received and adopted, and that the association be dissolved accordingly as from the first day of Easter Term then next.

In connection with this subject, the expediency of offering to the younger members of the Profession some further encouragement to join the society has been discussed. An impression exists that the necessity for payment of the entrance fee may have deterred many persons who have been recently admitted on the roll from becoming members of the society, and the council recommend that the entrance fee of solicitors who may be proposed as members within five years from their first admission shall be reduced to the following amounts, viz.—

Solicitors taking out Town certificates... ... £2
" " Country " £1

A special general meeting of the Incorporated Law Society will be held in their Hall in Chancery-lane, London, on Friday, the 8th day of May next, at half-past one o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of taking into consideration the above-mentioned recommendations, and, if approved, of obtaining its sanction to them.

THE SOLICITORS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

The thirty-second half-yearly general meeting of the members and friends of the Solicitors' Benevolent Association was held last Wednesday, at the hall of the Incorporated Law Society, Chancery-lane, for the purpose of receiving the half-yearly report and statement of accounts from the directors, and to transact other business.

The chair was taken by Mr. Park Nelson; and amongst those present were Messrs. Williams, Rendfoot, Brook, Williamson, Styan, Girand, Young, Smith, Redpath and Janson.

The secretary, Mr. T. Eiffe, read the notice convening the meeting and also the minutes of the last general meeting, which were confirmed.

The report stated that since October last 64 additional members had been admitted, increasing the aggregate number of members to 2301, of whom 807 were life, and 1494 annual. Twenty-two life members were also contributors to the Association. The receipt of the half-year (exclusive of the balance of £266 9s. 5d., from the previous account) had been £1361 18s. 4d. A further sum of £800 had been invested in purchases of India four per cent. stock, increasing the funded capital of the association to £28,806 2s. 3d. stock: the annual dividends produced by which amounted to £1148, a balance of £154 19s. 10d. remained at the Union Bank of London to the credit of the association, and a sum of £15 was in the hands of the secretary. The directors had very much regret to have to record the decease, since their last report, of an esteemed colleague, Mr. W. H. Moss, of Hull, in whose place they had elected as a director Mr. G. C. Roberts, town clerk of Hull. It afforded the board great pleasure to announce that Lord Selborne has kindly consented to preside at the ensuing anniversary festival of the association, which would take place at Willis's Rooms on the 17th June next. The directors trusted that their professional brethren would cordially support his lordship by their numerous attendance on the occasion, in doing which they would be also assisting to promote the interests of the association, and seventy-two gentlemen had already given their names as stewards.

The Chairman, in moving that the report and statement of the accounts be adopted and printed and circulated, congratulated the meeting on the satisfactory condition of the association. Within the last few days they had received from the Gloucestershire Law Society a cheque for 10 guineas towards the fund, this being the eighth donation from the same source; and to-day they had received from Miss Capes, daughter of Mr. George Capes, a deceased director, her fourth annual donation of £5. (Applause.)

The motion having been seconded and carried,

Mr. Girand moved "That the thanks of this meeting be and are hereby presented to the directors and auditors for their services during the past half year."

This resolution was seconded by Mr. Rendford, and carried.

Mr. Redpath moved, Mr. Styan seconded, and it was also carried, "That the thanks of this meeting be and are hereby presented to the council of the Incorporated Law Society for permitting the use of their hall for the meeting of this association."

Some conversation then ensued regarding the publishing of the "obituary of members" in the book which is circulated amongst the members; and it was fully decided to continue its publication, it being urged that such obituary had its advantages, and was a convenient thing to refer to.

Mr. Williams moved, and Mr. Brook seconded, a cordial vote of thanks to the chairman for presiding on the occasion, and the proceedings then terminated.

THE LEGAL PRACTITIONERS' SOCIETY.

THIS SOCIETY has for its object the reform of the existing unsatisfactory state of the Legal Profession. The want of such a Society has long been felt, and the demand for it has been rendered all the more imperative by the recent and the impending legislative changes in our judicial system.

Societies for promoting these changes, as well as Societies for the amendment of the law itself, already exist. This Society is of a less ambitious character, and will confine its operations to the reform of abuses in connection with the Profession only.

Although its basis is thus restricted, it will have no lack of work to perform. Among the many subjects which are likely to engage its attention may be mentioned the following:

1. To adjust the relations of the two branches of the Legal Profession inter se, as well as in reference to the Public.

2. To protect the Legal Profession against the encroachments of unqualified persons.

Members of the Legal Profession of every degree, whether Barristers or Attorneys-at-Law, Solicitors, Special Pleaders, Conveyancers, Proctors, Articled Clerks, or Students of the Inns of Court, are eligible for Membership. Members' Annual Subscription, FIVE SHILLINGS. The expenses are not likely to be great, and the Subscription has been fixed at an almost nominal amount, to secure the adhesion of as many Members of the Legal Profession as possible. Moral influence is much more needed than material aid. Any movement for the reform of the existing state of the Legal Profession, to be permanently successful, must necessarily proceed from within, and secure the hearty co-operation and support of both branches of the Profession.

Members of Parliament, and other laymen of distinction, are eligible for the office of Vice-President. The Annual Subscription of Vice-Presidents is ONE GUINEA. Donors of FIVE GUINEAS are eligible as Life Vice-Presidents.

Any further information may be obtained from the Hon. Secretary, CHARLES FORD, Esq., at the Office of the Law Times, 10, Wellington-street, Strand, London, W.C., to whom all Communications should be addressed by Members of the Legal Profession desirous of joining the Society. Subscriptions may be paid to the Treasurer, W. T. CHARLEY, Esq., D.C.L., M.P., 5, Crown Office-row, Temple, London, E.C.; or to the Society's Bankers, Union Bank (Chancery-lane Branch).

N.B.—A Preliminary Meeting was held on Thursday, the 20th of November last, at the Rooms of the Social Science Association, at which a Resolution was unanimously adopted to establish the Society. The Meeting adjourned to Wednesday, the 7th January next, at eight o'clock, on which day the attendance of the Profession generally is earnestly invited. The adjourned meeting will be held at the Rooms of the Social Science Association, No. 1, Adam-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

Letters approving of and supporting the formation of the Society have already been received from numerous Members of the Profession, not only in London, but the Provinces, including Liverpool, Birmingham, Manchester, Leeds, Portsmouth, Newcastle, and other large towns.

ROUND THE TABLE; or, Notes on Cookery and Plain Recipes, with a Selection of Bills of Fare. By "The G C."

This work is an attempt to popularise the leading principles of Continental Cookery, and to show how, in an economically-conducted household, a succession of agreeable Bills of Fare can be provided. All its recipes have been tested by experience, and are so given as to be intelligible of themselves, the object being not so much to provide a volume of reference for a professed cook as to explain how, with ordinary resources, an artistic dinner can be produced. Published in one vol., post 8vo., pp. 300, price 6s., free by post 6s. 5d.

"A little vol. of 300 pages does not profess to be exhaustive Nor is 'Round the Table' a cookery book in the ordinary sense of the word; it is rather a book for the mistress of the household to read and ponder. Apart from the recipes, many of which are new and original—all of which are so carefully explained, that nothing but deliberate perversity can make the cook go wrong, and each one of which has been used in 'The G. C.'s' own kitchen—the value of the work is in its 'wrinkles.' . . . . And there are also a hundred little bits of advice of which the British cook is in sore need, and which, trivial as they may appear, are yet very valuable."—Observer, 22nd Sept 1872.

"'The G. C.' makes a tour of the dining table, and dwells artistically on all the methods by which food is made pleasing to the senses and conducive to social entertainment. . . 'The G. C.' presents us with one of the best treatises on the art of dining that we have met with. . . . 'The G. C.' supplies a full, intelligible, and vivacious exposition of the various steps in cookery; of how to make broths, for instance, for the healthy and for the invalid; of the mysteries of boiling, frying, and roasting; of the proper treatment of vegetables. . . . ."—Lancet, July 20, 1872.

"This book is a serviceable contribution to the literature of the kitchen, presenting the reader with many very valuable suggestions with regard to the art of cookery, all of which seem to be the result of practical experience. . . The duties of host and hostess, the method of managing ervants on special occasions, the way to manage a dinner party, and all the other et-ceteras of custom which polite dinner-giving and dinner-taking society are expected to conform to, are laid down with as much precision as the rules of Hoyle's games."—Bradford Observer.

THE DIAMOND DIGGINGS OF SOUTH AFRICA: a Personal and Practical Account. By CHARLES A PAYTON, "SARCELLE" of The Field. With a Brief Notice of THE NEW GOLD FIELDS. With Map, large post 8vo., price 6s.

Part I.—General Account of the Diamond Fields.
Part II.—Routes to the Fields.
Part III.—Sketches of Life and Character on the Fields.
Part IV.—My Diary at the Dry Diggings.
Part V.—The Gold Fields.

THE wonderful discoveries of the year 1871, far surpassing in richness everything that had gone before, and proving the South African Diggings to be no risky speculation, no exaggerated humbug, but a source of great profit—nay, often of immense wealth, to industrious and persevering diggers—have naturally caused (not only in the Cape Colony, but in Europe, Australia, and America) an all-pervading interest in these Fields, and a constantly increasing demand for reliable information.

The "Lady" who Rides in Petticoats.

The title of this volume is so eccentric that the reader will be the more readily induced to peruse its pages, when he will find in them that which will fully justify it, and prove that the advice should be given with or without consent. To lady equestrians, or gentlemen in the habit of keeping studs, large or small, the instructions contained therein will be found very advantageous to adopt. There are hundreds of ladies who ride to perfection, but there are some to whom such hints as are here given, might be the means of improvement. A lady's seat upon horseback is so purely an artificial and acquired position, that unless by a fortunate 'fluke,' no lady can teach herself, and, as in everything else, bad habits can be acquired—to get rid of which is a totally different matter. Hence the reason why so much attention is devoted to 'The Lady's Horse.' The author also deals extensively with the different classes o horses—from the Arab, the acknowledged ancestor, founder, in fact, of race horses, to the animal who carries the harness. 'Stable Reforms,' 'The Seasons of the Year,' &c., serve to render 'Unasked Advice' an oracle which ought to be very liberally consulted. There are numerous engravings of horses and their riders, which give additional interest to the work."—The Western Daily Mercury, Dec. 30th, 1872.

"Here are practical hints in abundance, written in a gossiping style, upon a large number of subjects connected with riding, both for ladies and gentlemen, extending from the most minute particulars of position in riding and the proper management of a horse in the 'Row' or the hunting field, up to suggestions for its training and stable treatment. Eleven engravings give additional force to the remarks of the writer by illustrating his arguments and pointing out defects which it is desirable to avoid.—Western Hampshire Independent, Dec. 28th 1872.

THE NEW SYSTEM OF BUYING A HOUSE WITHOUT MONEY.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY,

29 AND 30, SOUTHAMPTON-BUILDINGS, CHANCERY-LANE, LONDON.

MOST PERSONS ARE FAMILIAR with what is known as the "THREE YEARS' SYSTEM" of the Pianoforte Makers, by which anyone who Hires an Instrument and pays the Hire for that period, becomes the ABSOLUTE OWNER OF THE PIANOFORTE. Previously to the introduction of this plan it was almost as difficult for those of limited income to buy a good Pianoforte as to BUY A HOUSE; and persons went on year after year, paying for the Hire of an Instrument, and expended as much money as would have bought the Pianoforte several times over.

What will hold good for Pianofortes will hold good for HOUSES; and there are many who would no doubt AVAIL THEMSELVES OF THE OPPORTUNITY, if it was afforded them, of becoming in the same way as they have already become the owner of their pianoforte.

THE DIRECTORS
OF THE
BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY
HAVE DETERMINED TO AFFORD
THE SAME FACILITIES FOR PURCHASING HOUSES
As now exist for Buying Pianofortes.

A HOUSE being, however, a more expensive article to Purchase than a Pianoforte, the "Three Years' System" will not apply, excepting in a very few cases; so that a MORE LENGTHENED PERIOD IS NECESSARY over which the Time of Hiring must extend.

In pursuance of this resolution

THE DIRECTORS HAVE MADE ARRANGEMENTS WITH THE OWNERS OF HOUSES

In various parts of London, and its Suburbs, by which they are enabled to afford to the

Members of the Birkbeck Building Society
AND OTHERS

A very wide CHOICE in the SELECTION both of HOUSES and the locality in which they are situated. The Plan upon which the Directors propose to proceed is

TO LET THESE HOUSES FOR A PERIOD OF TWELVE-AND-A-HALF YEARS,

At the end of which time, if the Rent be regularly Paid,

THE HOUSE
Will become the absolute Property of the Tenant
WITHOUT FURTHER PAYMENT OF ANY KIND.
IN ALL CASES
POSSESSION OF THE HOUSE
WILL BE GIVEN
WITHOUT ANY IMMEDIATE OUTLAY IN MONEY.

Excepting Payment of the Law Charges for the Title Deeds, which in all cases will be restricted to Five Guineas

BEYOND THIS SMALL SUM
NO PAYMENT OF ANY KIND
IS REQUIRED BY THE SOCIETY
BEYOND THE STIPULATED RENT, WHICH MAY BE PAID EITHER MONTHLY OR QUARTERLY.
THE RENT PAYABLE BY THE TENANT
Includes Ground Rent and Insurance for the Whole Term.

Although the Number of years for payment of Rent is fixed at Twelve and-a-Half,

A SHORTER PERIOD MAY BE CHOSEN AT AN INCREASED RENTAL, OR A LONGER PERIOD AT A LOWER RENTAL,

The Terms of which may be ascertained on application to the Manager.

THE ADVANTAGES OF THIS
New System of Purchasing a House,
MAY BE SUMMED UP AS FOLLOWS:

1. Persons of Limited Income, Clerks, Shopmen, and others, may, by becoming Tenants of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY, be placed at once in a position of independence as regards their Landlord.

2. Their RENT CANNOT BE RAISED.

3. They CANNOT BE TURNED OUT OF POSSESSION so long as they pay their Rent.

4. NO FEES or FINES of any kind are chargeable.

5. They can leave the House at any time without notice, rent being payable only to the time of giving up possession.

6. If circumstances compel them to leave the House before the completion of their Twelve-and-a-Half Years' Tenancy, they can Sub-let the House for the remainder of the Term, or they can Transfer their right to another Tenant.

7. Finally, NO LIABILITY or RESPONSIBILITY of any kind is incurred, beyond the Payment of Rent by those who acquire Houses by this New System.

The BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY have on their List several HOUSES, which they are prepared to LET on the TWELVE-AND-A-HALF YEARS' SYSTEM, and in many cases Immediate Possession may be obtained.

The Terms on which Houses can be placed on this Register may be obtained on application to

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THE LEGAL PRACTITIONERS' SOCIETY.

THIS SOCIETY has for its object the reform of the existing unsatisfactory state of the Legal Profession. The want of such a Society has long been felt, and the demand for it has been rendered all the more imperative by the recent and the impending legislative changes in our judicial system.

Societies for promoting these changes, as well as Societies for the amendment of the law itself, already exist. This Society is of a less ambitious character, and will confine its operations to the reform of abuses in connection with the Profession only.

Although its basis is thus restricted, it will have no lack of work to perform. Among the many subjects which are likely to engage its attention may be mentioned the following:

1. To adjust the relations of the two branches of the Legal Profession inter se, as well as in reference to the Public.

2. To protect the Legal Profession against the encroachments of unqualified persons.

Members of the Legal Profession of every degree, whether Barristers or Attorneys-at-Law, Solicitors, Special Pleaders, Conveyancers, Proctors, Articled Clerks, or Students of the Inns of Court, are eligible for Membership. Members' Annual Subscription, FIVE SHILLINGS. The expenses are not likely to be great, and the Subscription has been fixed at an almost nominal amount, to secure the adhesion of as many Members of the Legal Profession as possible. Moral influence is much more needed than material aid. Any movement for the reform of the existing state of the Legal Profession, to be permanently successful, must necessarily proceed from within, and secure the hearty co-operation and support of both branches of the Profession.

Members of Parliament, and other laymen of distinction, are eligible for the office of Vice-President. The Annual Subscription of Vice-Presidents is ONE GUINEA. Donors of FIVE GUINEAS are eligible as Life Vice-Presidents.

Any further information may be obtained from the Hon. Secretary, CHARLES FORD, Esq., at the Office of the Law Times, 10, Wellington-street, Strand, London, W.C., to whom all Communications should be addressed by Members of the Legal Profession desirous of joining the Society. Subscriptions may be paid to the Treasurer, W. T. CHARLEY, Esq., D.C.L., M.P., 5, Crown Office-row, Temple, London, E.C.; or to the Society's Bankers, Union Bank (Chancery-lane Branch).

The Preliminary Meeting was adjourned to Wednesday, the 7th January next, at eight o'clock, to be held at the Rooms of the Social Science Association, No. 1, Adam-street, Adelphi, London, W.C., on which day the attendance of the Profession generally is earnestly invited.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—CHEST PRESERVATIVES.—At all seasons of the year the rate of mortality from diseases of the lung is very great. Holloway's Ointment well rubbed upon the chest, aided by his Pills, arrests all mischief. These cleansing medicaments exercise the most salutary and restorative influence over the entire contents of the pectoral cavity. Air tubes, nerves, blood vessels, and all other tissues feel their wholesomely potent power, more particularly in their thoroughly purifying both venous and arterial blood, by promoting the free circulation of air through the lungs. Neither Ointment nor Pills contain any noxious ingredient whatever, but their balsamic nature nourishes rather than irritates the system, and kindly subdues untoward symptoms till all is well once more.

"I send you a large box of clothes. I am quite satisfied that you give the full value, as I sent the last you had of me to some other person first, and your price was much above their valuation. CROCKFORD'S CLERICAL DIRECTORY FOR 1874.

Being a Statistical Book of Reference for Facts relating to the Clergy and the Church.

"During the years which have passed since its first issue, this Directory has established a reputation for remarkable accuracy and completeness. As a statistical book of reference for facts relating to the clergy and the Church, it is, we believe, quite unequalled. There is first a list of the Archbishops and Bishops of England and Wales, from the first appointment since the commencement of the present century, and this is followed by the fullest information as to the personnel of Cathedral, Diocesan, Capitular, and Collegiate Establishments. The Directory proper occupies nearly a thousand pages, and is a marvellous compilation of useful details upon the appointments and principal writings of clergymen in the Church of England or Scotch Episcopal Church. The last feature of the work is a full list of the Benefices and Curacies in England and Wales, with references to the page and paragraph where full particulars are given."—Nottinghamshire Guardian.

ISSUE OF

£1,000,000 FIVE PER CENT. STERLING SINKING FUND BONDS

OF THE

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY

OF £200 EACH.

PAYABLE 1st APRIL 1903, IF NOT PREVIOUSLY REDEEMED BY THE ACTION OF THE SINKING FUND.

Interest and Principal payable in London. Interest payable 1st April and 1st October, in each year, at the Counting-house of Messrs. Morton, Rose, and Co. The first Coupon payable Oct. 1, 1874.

Redeemable in London, by a Sinking Fund of at least 2 per Cent. per Annum—viz., 1 per Cent. by Drawings at Par, and 1 per Cent. by Purchases by Tender in London, at not exceeding Par. The first Drawing will take place in August next, and the Bonds drawn will be paid at Par in London on the 1st October following; the first purchase will be in March, 1875.

PRICE OF ISSUE 84 PER CENT., OR £168 PER £200 BOND.

Payable	10 per Cent.	or £20	per Bond	on Allotment.
Payable	40 „	£80	„	16th March.
Payable	34 „	£68	„	15th April.
	84 per Cent.	or £163	per Bond.

Rebate on anticipated payment of Instalments will be allowed at the rate of 4 per cent. per Annum.

Messrs. MORTON, ROSE, and CO. are prepared to receive SUBSCRIPTIONS for the above £100,000,000 BONDS, which are issued under the provisions of an Act of the Legislature of the State of Illinois, dated Feb. 12, 1855, entitled "An Act to entitle Railroad Companies to enter into Operative Contracts and to Borrow Money."

The Loan is raised for the purchase of an equal amount of New Orleans, Jackson, and Great Northern Railroad, and Mississippi Central Railroad Seven per Cent. Bonds, by which means the Illinois Company will gain 2 per cent. annually, thereby providing a Sinking Fund sufficient to redeem the whole of this issue in about 26 years. The Bonds of the above railroad so purchased are to held by the Illinois Company as security for the payment of this Loan.

The Illinois Company covenant to apply the whole of the interest received from the Southern Bonds, after providing for the interest on the present issue, to the Sinking Fund, thus making it accumulative. The surplus beyond the sum required for the interest and the Sinking Fund above provided will be applied to purchases or drawings at the option of the Company, the numbers of the Bonds so purchased or drawn will be advertised, and the Bonds cancelled.

The arrangements with the above-named Companies afford the Illinois Company direct through communication between Chicago and New Orleans, which, it is expected, will add largely to its traffic. Through trains are now running over a distance of 1650 miles.

The net receipts from the local traffic only of the Southern lines, according to the returns for 1871 and 1872 (before the connection was made), showed even then more than sufficient to pay the interest on their Bonds.

The Illinois Company covenants that this Issue shall be included in any future mortgage which hereafter may be created, and that such mortgage shall be made to secure no more than 15,000,000 dols., which sum shall include all prior liens on the mortgaged property, and without preference.

The following is an extract from the last published report of the Illinois Company, for the year 1872, showing its position:—

"During this period" (last ten years) "dividends have regularly been paid, amounting in the aggregate to 22,582,407.07 dols., and the debt has been reduced to the amount of 8,390,500 dols. Of the debt outstanding, 3,390,500 dols. of the Construction Bonds, and 2,500,000 dols. of the Redemption Bonds, will become payable 1st April 1875. You have set apart a Trust or Sinking Fund of 2,761,500 dols., which, with its interest, will nearly provide for the Construction Bonds, leaving 2,500,000 dols. Redemption Bonds to be provided for. The residue of the debt will then consist of 2,500,000 dols. of Bonds, payable in 1890." "The entire cost of the property has been 34,061,196.56 dols. It is now represented by a Share Capital of 25,500,000 dols., and a debt, which, after deducting the existing Sinking Fund, leaves 5,629,000 dols., making the aggregate 2,932,196.56 dols. less than the actual cost of the whole. "JOHN NEWELL, President.

"20th March, 1873."

Since the above report new Shares were authorised to be created to the extent of 5,100,000 dols. The net earnings for 1873 are stated to be 2,530,891 dols. The revenue from other sources is stated at 329,851 dols., making the total income for the year 2,860,742 dols.

Scrip certificates to bearer will be issued against allotment Letters, and will be exchanged for definitive Bonds as soon as possible after all payments are completed. In cases where no answer to applications is returned it will be understood that it has not been practicable to make an allotment.

Default of payment of any instalment when due will render all previous payments liable to forfeiture.

Copies of the Acts of the Legislature, and other documents, may be inspected at the office of Messrs. Bischoff, Bompas, and Bischoff, solicitors, Great Winchester-street-buildings, London, E.C.

Applications, which must be made on the annexed form, will be received at the Counting-house of Messrs. Morton, Rose, and Co., on Thursday, the 12th inst.; and the Subscription List will be Closed on or before Four p.m. on Monday, the 16th inst.

THE LEGAL PRACTITIONERS' SOCIETY.

THIS SOCIETY has for its object the reform of the unsatisfactory state of the Legal Profession. The want of such a Society has long been felt, and the demand for it has been rendered all the more imperative by the recent and the impending legislative changes in our judicial system.

Societies for promoting these changes, as well as Societies for the amendment of the law itself, already exist. This Society, of a less ambitious character, does not seek to supersede any of the existing organisations, confining its operations to the reform of proved abuses in connection with the Profession only.

Although its basis is thus restricted, it will have no lack of work to perform. Among the many subjects which engage its attention may be mentioned the following:—

1. To adjust the relations of the two branches of the Legal Profession, as well inter se as in reference to the Public.

2. To protect the Legal Profession against the encroachments of unqualified persons.

Members of the Legal Profession of every degree, whether Barristers-at-Law, Attorneys-at-Law, Solicitors, Special Pleaders, Conveyancers, or Proctors, and Articled Clerks, or Students of the Inns of Court, are eligible for Membership. The Annual Subscription of Ordinary Members is fixed at the almost nominal amount of FIVE SHILLINGS, to secure the adhesion of as many Members of the Legal Profession as possible. Any movement for the reform of the existing state of the Profession, to be permanently successful, must necessarily proceed from within, and secure the hearty co-operation and support of both its branches.

The Annual Subscription of Vice-Presidents is ONE GUINEA. Donors of FIVE GUINEAS are eligible as Life Vice-Presidents.

Any further information may be obtained from the Honorary Secretary, CHARLES FORD, Esq., at the Office of the Law Times, 10, Wellington-street, Strand, London, W.C., to whom all Communications should be addressed by Members of the Legal Profession desirous of joining the Society. Subscriptions for the current year are now payable to the Honorary Treasurer, W. T. CHARLEY, Esq., D.C.L., M.P., 5, Crown Office-row, Temple, London, E.C.; or at the Society's Bankers, Union Bank (Chancery-lane Branch).

THE LEGAL PRACTITIONERS' SOCIETY.

THIS SOCIETY has for its object the reform of the unsatisfactory state of the Legal Profession. The want of such a Society has long been felt, and the demand for it has been rendered all the more imperative by the recent and the impending legislative changes in our judicial system.

Societies for promoting these changes, as well as Societies for the amendment of the law itself, already exist. This Society, of a less ambitious character, does not seek to supersede any of the existing organisations, confining its operations to the reform of proved abuses in connection with the Profession only.

Although its basis is thus restricted, it will have no lack of work to perform. Among the many subjects which engage its attention may be mentioned the following:—

1. To adjust the relations of the two branches of the Legal Profession, as well inter se as in reference to the Public.

2. To protect the Legal Profession against the encroachments of unqualified persons.

Members of the Legal Profession of every degree, whether Barristers-at-Law, Attorneys-at-Law, Solicitors, Special Pleaders, Conveyancers, or Proctors, and Articled Clerks, or Students of the Inns of Court, are eligible for Membership. The Annual Subscription of Ordinary Members is fixed at the almost nominal amount of FIVE SHILLINGS, to secure the adhesion of as many Members of the Legal Profession as possible. Any movement for the reform of the existing state of the Profession, to be permanently successful, must necessarily proceed from within, and secure the hearty co-operation and support of both its branches.

The Annual Subscription of Vice-Presidents is ONE GUINEA. Donors of FIVE GUINEAS are eligible as Life Vice-Presidents.

Any further information may be obtained from the Honorary Secretary, CHARLES FORD, Esq., at the Office of the Law Times, 10, Wellington-street, Strand, London, W.C., to whom all Communications should be addressed by Members of the Legal Profession desirous of joining the Society. Subscriptions for the current year are now payable to the Honorary Treasurer, W. T. CHARLEY, Esq., D.C.L., M.P., 5, Crown Office-row, Temple, London, E.C.; or at the Society's Bankers, Union Bank (Chancery-lane Branch).

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY.

SICKNESS AND ASSURANCE ACCOUNT

The increase in this Fhnd amounts to £19 12s. 8d. No claim by death has arisen, and the sickness experience has been light.

INDUSTRIAL BRANCH.

The operations in this Branch have again been unusually successful. There were 646,377 new Policies issued, representing a new Annual Premium Income of £233,345 0s. 4d.

The Claims amount to £127,968 0s. 10d.

The Annual Premium Income at the close of the year is £471,296 16s., showing an increase of £106,349 19s. 4d. over the Income of the previous year.

GENERAL RESULTS.

The total Premium Income is £537,711 1s. 11d., showing the very remarkable increase of £109,968 10s., and being the largest accession of Income during any year of the Company's operations.

The total amount of Claims is £168,388 17s. 8d., raising the whole sum to £1,103,402 8s. 6d. These have, as usual, been paid with undeviating regularity.

The Assurance Fund at the close of 1873 was £482,933, showing an increase of £73,799 4s. 4d. for the year.

In addition to the Assurance Fund there are:—

Shareholder's Capital	£10,052
Contingency Fund	16,096
Guarantee Fund	15,000
Total	£41,148

Which, together with the Assurance Fund of £482,933, make a total Fund of £524,081 for the protection and security of the constituents of the Company.

The foregoing facts are so remarkable that the Directors consider it unnecessary to do more than call attention to them.

The Agreement of the 27th February 1873, under which Mr. Harben will retire on the 24th June next from the office of Secretary, has been in operation since the last Annual Meeting. The official changes consequent thereon have worked very satisfactorily, the business of the company having been conducted during that term with undiminished success.

That agreement was conditional. The directors are glad to state that they and Mr. Harben remain satisfied with its provisions; and it will, in the absence of proper notice for its rescission, become binding on all parties after the 25th March next.

The retiring Directors are Messrs. Reid, Gibbins, and Fraser, who, being eligible, offer themselves for re-election. The Auditors—Messrs. Allanson and Clark—also retire, and submit themselves for re-election.

16th February, 1874. J. GILLMAN, Chairman.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS. —Colds, Coughs, Shortness of Breath.—These corrective remedies are invaluable for pectoral complaints, which, neglected, often end in asthma, bronchitis or consumption. The ointment well rubbed upon the chest and back, penetrating the skin, is carried directly to the lungs, whence it expels all impurities. All the blood in the body constantly passes through the lungs, and there all noxious particles tending to produce disease, can be quickly, thoroughly, and permanently neutralised, rendered harmless, or ejected from the system. Holloway's Ointment and Pills perfectly accomplish this purification; and through the blood, thus cleansed, the influence of these wonderful medicaments reaches the remotest parts of the human body, and thus cures all diseased action, whether internal or external.

THE

LEGAL PRACTITIONERS' SOCIETY.

THIS SOCIETY has for its object the reform of the unsatisfactory state of the Legal Profession. The want of such a Society has long been felt, and the demand for it has been rendered all the more imperative by the recent and the impending legislative changes in our judicial system.

Societies for promoting these changes, as well as Societies for the amendment of the law itself, already exist. This Society, of a less ambitious character, does not seek to supersede any of the existing organisations, confining its operations to the reform of proved abuses in connection with the Profession only.

Although its basis is thus restricted, it will have no lack of work to perform. Among the many subjects which engage its attention may be mentioned the following:—

1. To adjust the relations of the two branches of the Legal Profession, as well inter se as in reference to the Public.

2. To protect the Legal Profession against the encroachments of unqualified persons.

Members of the Legal Profession of every degree, whether Barristers-at-Law, Attorneys-at-Law, Solicitors, Special Pleaders, Conveyancers, or Proctors, and Articled Clerks, or Students of the Inns of Court, are eligible for Membership. The Annual Subscription of Ordinary Members is fixed at the almost nominal amount of FIVE SHILLINGS, to secure the adhesion of as many Members of the Legal Profession as possible. Any movement for the reform of the existing state of the Profession, to be permanently successful, must necessarily proceed from within, and secure the hearty co-operation and support of both its branches.

The Annual Subscription of Vice-Presidents is ONE GUINEA. Donors of FIVE GUINEAS are eligible as Life Vice-Presidents.

Any further information may be obtained from the Honorary Secretary, CHARLES FORD, Esq., at the Office of the Law Times, 10, Wellington-street, Strand, London, W.C., to whom all Communications should be addressed by Members of the Legal Profession desirous of joining the Society. Subscriptions for the current year are now payable to the Honorary Treasurer, W. T. CHARLEY, Esq., D.C.L., M.P., 5, Crown Office-row, Temple, London, E.C.; or at the Society's Bankers, Union Bank (Chancery-lane Branch).

SEVENTH EDITION
OF THE
LAW RELATING TO PUBLIC HEALTH, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, AND
URBAN AND RURAL SANITARY AUTHORITIES,
Including the Law as to the Removal of Nuisances Injurious to Health, and the Prevention of Diseases, with
STATUTES AND CASES.
BY
W. CUNNINGHAM GLEN, Barrister-at-Law,
and
ALEXANDER GLEN, B.A., LL.B., Barrister-at-Law.

The very extensive changes in the Sanitary Laws which were effected by the Public Health Act 1872 necessitated the entire revision of the work, but the arrangement of the work has been preserved; and the branches of it applicable respectively to urban and rural sanitary authorities have been clearly indicated.

The work is in Six Parts: the First Part treats of the division of England into sanitary districts, the powers and duties of the authorities of these districts, and other matters under the Act of 1872, and of the formation and constitution of local boards; the Second Part treats of the powers of urban sanitary authorities; the Third Part, of rating, raising money on mortgage of the rates, purchase of lands, audit of accounts, contracts, arbitration, legal proceedings, bye-laws, and other miscellaneous subjects; the Fourth Part, of the removal of nuisances; the Fifth Part, of sewage utilisation; and the Sixth Part, of the law relating to the prevention of diseases.

The plan of the work places before the reader the whole of the law upon each particular subject embraced in it, and it is practically a consolidation of the Statute Law as expounded by the courts.

Not only during the interval of each edition of this work have additions been made by the Legislature to the Sanitary Laws, but very numerous decisions have been pronounced by the courts of law. The whole of the decisions will be found incorporated with the text. Those which bear upon the pollution of rivers by sewage are of peculiar importance, as the subject demands the serious attention of all sanitary authorities.

A distinguishing feature of the present edition is that it contains a series of model bye-laws, framed upon bye-laws which have received the sanction of the Local Government Board. The orders of the Board have been included in the appendix.

MR. MARSH'S REGISTER of LANDED ESTATES, Town and Country Residences, and property of every description, is published monthly, and may be obtained at the offices of Mr. A. M. YETTS (late Mr. Marsh), Auctioneer, Land, and Estate Agent, 54, Cannon-street, E.C., or will be forwarded by post on application.

Surrey.—A valuable Freehold Residential Property, eligibly situate in a favourite and select locality, possessing every facility for railway communication, being within half an hour's ride by rail, and a distance of twelve miles by road, from the metropolis. The situation of the property is extremely picturesque, and the neighbourhood in which it is placed is surrounded by the best society. It comprises a superior residence of handsome elevation, erected within the last ten years at considerable expense for the occupation of the owner, and contains eleven bed chambers, dressing rooms, three reception rooms, billiard room, conservatory, and well-arranged domestic offices. The grounds are laid out with great taste, and embrace an area of 18 acres. The property is adapted for the residence of a nobleman, banker, merchant, or private gentleman.

MR. MARSH is favoured with instructions to SELL by AUCTION, at the Guildhall Coffee-house, Gresham-street, at Twelve for One o'clock, on THURSDAY, MAY 21, the above desirable RESIDENTIAL PROPERTY, situate and known as River-hill, Worcester-park, near Ewell and Kingston, and within easy reach of Epsom.

Particulars and plans may shortly be obtained of Mr. A. M. YETTS (late Mr. Marsh), No. 54, Cannon-street, E.C.

MESSRS. DEBENHAM, TEWSON, and FARMER'S LIST of ESTATES and HOUSES to be SOLD or LET, including Landed Estates, Town and Country Residences, Hunting and Shooting Quarters, Farms, Ground Rents, Rentcharges, House Property, and Investments generally, is PUBLISHED on the first day of each month, and may be obtained, free of charge, at their Offices, 80, Cheapside, E.C., or will be sent by post in return for two stamps. Particulars for insertion should be received not later than four days previous to the end of the preceding month.

City Freeholds.—Mincing-lane and Great Tower-street.—Highly important Properties, occupying large areas and well-known sites within the circle of the Colonial and other Markets, part let for 47 years unexpired at ground-rents of £320 per annum, and the remainder for eight years unexpired, at rentals of £550 per annum, which are considerably inadequate to the present actual value of the premises.—By order of the Trustees under the Will of the late Major Vincent Joseph Biscoe.

MESSRS. DEBENHAM, TEWSON, and FARMER will SELL, at the MART, on TUESDAY, APRIL 28, at Two, in Three Lots, the following very valuable FREEHOLD PROPERTIES, viz.:—

Lot 1.—The portion of the extensive Building, No. 21, Mincing-lane, formerly known as Nos. 1 and 2, Hammond's-court, comprising numerous suites of first-class offices arranged on five floors (including basement), with rooms for housekeeper above; also the substantial modern premises, 20, Mincing-lane, comprising five floors (including basement), let by two leases for sixty years from Lady-day, 1861, at ground rents amounting to £520 per annum.

Lot 2.—The prominent corner premises, known as 19, Mincing-lane, and 82, Great Tower-street, comprising four capitally lighted floors, with cellar under part; let on lease for twenty-one years, from Lady-day 1861, at the very low rent of £200 per annum.

Lot 3.—The spacious premises adjoining, known as 80 and 81, Great Tower-street, comprising five floors, with cellar under part; let on lease for twenty-one years, from Lady-day 1861, at the moderate rent of £350 per annum. Upon the expiration of the leases affecting lot 1, the purchaser will be entitled to the full rack rentals, and as to lots 2 and 3, at the end of the terms, largely increased rents will readily be obtained for the existing premises, but this part of the property would probably be still more valuable as a vacant site for the erection of one handsome block of modern offices.

Particulars, with plans, may be had in due course of T. W. DENBY, Esq., Solicitor, 8, Frederick's-place, Old Jewry:

and of the AUCTIONEERS, 80, Cheapside.

Kensington.—To Trustees, Capitalists, and Others.—Valuable Freehold Ground-rents, producing £1320 per annum and Three Freehold Shops, producing £250 per annum formerly part of Lady Holland's Estate.

MESSRS. HORNE, EVERSFIELD and Co., have received instructions from the Trustees of the late Henry John Bartley, Esq., to SELL by AUCTION, at the AUCTION MART, Tokenhouse-yard, London, at the latter end of MAY next, the above valuable FREEHOLD PROPERTY, situate in Holland-road, Russell-road, Elsham-road, Russell-gardens, Russell-mews, and Hansard-mews, Kensington. Further particulars will shortly appear.

Applications may, in the meantime, be addressed to Messrs. BARTLEY, SAXTON, and MORGAN, Solicitors, 30, Somerset-street, Portman-square, W.; and to HORNE, EVERSFIELD, and Co., 17, Great George-street, S.W., and 80, Fore-street, E.C.

Lightfoot, the eminent brewers, the houses and shops Nos 10, 11, and 12, Oxford-street, and Nos. 29, 31, 33, 35, and 37, Hanway-street, the whole occupying an area of about one-third of an acre, and presenting investments of a most valuable character, with important reversions attached. Present rental, £514 per annum, virtually equivalent to ground rents. Let on leases expiring in 1874, 1876, and 1897 respectively.

MR. ROBINS (of 5, Waterloo-place, Pall Mall), is directed to SELL the above FREEHOLD ESTATE by AUCTION at the MART, in Tokenhouse-yard, Lothbury, E.C., on WEDNESDAY, APRIL 15th, at Two precisely, in three lots.

Particulars and Plans are now ready, and may be had of Messrs. BOOTYS and BAYLIFFS, Solicitors, 1, Raymond-buildings, Gray's-inn, W.C.;

SEVENTH EDITION
OF THE
LAW RELATING TO PUBLIC HEALTH, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, AND
URBAN AND RURAL SANITARY AUTHORITIES,
Including the Law as to the Removal of Nuisances Injurious to Health, and the Prevention of Diseases, with
STATUTES AND CASES.
BY
W. CUNNINGHAM GLEN, Barrister-at-Law,
and
ALEXANDER GLEN, B.A., LL.B., Barrister-at-Law.
The very extensive changes in the Sanitary Laws which were effected by the Public Health Act 1872 necessitated the entire revision of the work, but the arrangement of the work has been preserved; and the branches of it applicable respectively to urban and rural sanitary authorities have been clearly indicated.
The work is in Six Parts: the First Part treats of the division of England into sanitary districts, the powers and duties of the authorities of these districts, and other matters under the Act of 1872, and of the formation and constitution of local boards; the Second Part treats of the powers of urban sanitary authorities; the Third Part, of rating, raising money on mortgage of the rates, purchase of lands, audit of accounts, contracts, arbitration, legal proceedings, bye-laws, and other miscellaneous subjects; the Fourth Part, of the removal of nuisances; the Fifth Part, of sewage utilisation; and the Sixth Part, of the law relating to the prevention of diseases.
The plan of the work places before the reader the whole of the law upon each particular subject embraced in it, and it is practically a consolidation of the Statute Law as expounded by the courts.
Not only during the interval of each edition of this work have additions been made by the Legislature to the Sanitary Laws, but very numerous decisions have been pronounced by the courts of law. The whole of the decisions will be found incorporated with the text. Those which bear upon the pollution of rivers by sewage are of peculiar importance, as the subject demands the serious attention of all sanitary authorities.
A distinguishing feature of the present edition is that it contains a series of model bye-laws, framed upon bye-laws which have received the sanction of the Local Government Board. The orders of the Board have been included in the appendix.

ADDRESS.

RECENT LEGISLATION HAS MADE GREAT CHANGES in the Practice of the Law, and many other changes of almost equal importance are imminent.

The LAW TIMES, as the Journal of the Law and the Lawyers, has for Twenty-eight years striven, as we venture to hope not unsuccessfully, to keep its Readers fully acquainted with the many Law Reforms that have been effected during its long career, and strenuously to maintain the interests of the Profession.

The reform of the Judicature, and the consequent revolution in the Practice of the Law, which will come into operation in the course of the present year, will not merely require the Lawyers to learn their Profession anew, but will impose upon them the still more difficult task of unlearning. They will now need more than ever an assistant that, from week to week, shall not only instruct them what the new law is, and to what extent it modifies the old law, but keep them well informed of the decisions of the Courts upon the new Rules of Practice and upon the many lesser changes that must for a long time follow the greater changes already accomplished.

To this duty the LAW TIMES will devote itself. Arrangements are being made for the supply of complete information upon all that affects the Practitioner, so that he may be as well instructed by perusing these pages at home as if he had been present in all the Courts.

The REPORTS of the LAW TIMES are too well known to need description. It is necessary only to add, that special attention will be paid to giving the earliest and fullest reports of all the many new points of Practice that must be raised and decided in the new Courts under the new rules.

THE LEGAL PRACTITIONERS' SOCIETY

THIS SOCIETY has for its object the reform of the unsatisfactory state of the Legal Profession. The want of such a Society has long been felt, and the demand for it has been rendered all the more imperative by the recent and the impending legislative changes in our judicial system.

Societies for promoting these changes, as well as Societies for the amendment of the law itself, already exist. This Society, of a less ambitious character, does not seek to supersede any of the existing organisations, confining its operations to the reform of proved abuses in connection with the Profession only.

Although its basis is thus restricted, it will have no lack of work to perform. Among the many subjects which engage its attention may be mentioned the following:—

1. To adjust the relations of the two branches of the Legal Profession, as well inter se as in reference to th Public.

2. To protect the Legal Profession against the encroachments of unqualified persons.

3. To exercise a vigilant supervision over all proposed legislation affecting the Profession, and to initiate the same when found to be necessary or advantageous.

Members of the Legal Profession of every degree, whether Barristers-at-Law, Attorneys-at-Law, Solicitors, Special Pleaders, Conveyancers, or Proctors, and Articled Clerks, or Students of the Inns of Court, are eligible for Membership. The Annual Subscription of Ordinary Members is fixed at the almost nominal amount of FIVE SHILLINGS, to secure the adhesion of as many Members of the Legal Profession as possible. Any movement for the reform of the existing state of the Profession, to be permanently successful, must necessarily proceed from within and secure the hearty co-operation and support of both its branches.

The Annual Subscription of Vice-Presidents and Law Societies is ONE GUINEA. Donors of FIVE GUINEA are eligible as Life Vice-Presidents.

Any further information may be obtained from the Honorary Secretary, CHARLES FORD, Esq., at the Office of the Law Times, 10, Wellington-street, Strand, London, W.C., to whom all Communications should be addressed by Members of the Legal Profession desirous of joining the Society. Subscriptions for the current year are now payable to and donations will be received by the Honorary Treasurer, W. T. CHARLEY, Esq., D.C.L., M.P., 5, Crown Office-row, Temple, London, E.C.; or at the Society's Bankers, Union Bank (Chancery-lane Branch).

City Freeholds.—Mincing-lane and Great Tower-street.—Highly important Properties, occupying large areas and well-known sites within the circle of the Colonial and other Markets, part let for 47 years unexpired at ground-rents of £520 per annum, and the remainder for eight years unexpired, at rentals of £350 per annum, which are considerably inadequate to the present actual value of the premises.—By order of the Trustees under the Will of the late Major Vincent Joseph Biscoe.

Lot 2.—The prominent corner premises, known as 19, Mincing-lane, and 82, Great Tower-street, comprising four capitally lighted floors, with cellar under part; let on lease for twenty-one years, from Lady-day 1861, at the very low rent of £200 per annum.

Upon the expiration of the leases affecting lot 1, the purchaser will be entitled to the full rack rentals, and as to lots 2 and 3, at the end of the terms, largely increased rents will readily be obtained for the existing premises, but this part of the property would probably be still more valuable as a vacant site for the erection of one handsome block of modern offices.

Mount Lee, Surrey, upon Egham-hill, one mile from Egham station, and only nineteen miles by road from London.—This well-known and nearly matchless Freehold Estate of about 95 acres for sale with possession. It occupies a grand position, and as a site for a first-class mansion is certainly not to be surpassed, if it can be equalled by any similar property near London. It has a rich combination of self-contained and surrounding charms and advantages, of which the following is a brief epitome:—As the curtilage of an ancient mansion (now removed) it is rich in old timber; as some of the highest ground in the locality it commands fine views over a district renowned for exquisite landscape scenery; its own configuration of surface, its heights and graceful slopes, prettily secluded dells, with miniature waters fed by flowing springs, the whole deftly adorned by thousands of conifers, evergreens, and flowering shrubs, form as beautiful an entirety as it is possible to imagine. It has the advantage of a dry, gravel soil, in which are veins of sharp sand, an abundance of pure water, long frontages to the main road as well as to a rural lane, both frontages being belted by trees, so that complete privacy is insured. It is within half a mile of an entrance to Windsor Great Park, a short distance only from Virginia-water; indeed, it may be said the whole country teems with objects of interest, the popularity of which is established by the erection in old and present times of the many stately mansions which are within a few miles' radius. In combination with the great facility of access from London are most of the attractions of country life, fine bracing air, good sporting with stag and fox hounds and harriers, fishing (the Thames being within easy reach), excellent society, and, so far as can be foreseen, there is no probability of any interference with these enjoyments, for most of the surrounding land is the property of the Crown or of residential proprietors, who jealously exclude the mere speculative builder. It is, however, obvious that while Mount Lee may be considered unique for one mansion it is also well circumstanced for division into lots, for it is a fact that its peculiar formation admits of the erection of several houses, each of which would be within private grounds and scarcely seen by its proximate neighbour.

MESSRS DEBENHAM, TEWSON, and FARMER are instructed by the Owner, to SELL, at the Mart, on Tuesday, June 30, at Two, in one lot (unless an acceptable offer be previously made), the above-named singularly beautiful FREEHOLD ESTATE. LUCAS, Esq., Solicitor, No. 7, Staple-inn, Holborn; and of Messrs DEBENHAM, TEWSON, and FARMER, Auctioneers and Land Agents, 80, Cheapside, from whom only cards can be obtained, and who have full power to treat for the sale.

Shooter's-hill, Kent.—Preliminary Advertisement.—The charming and well-known Residential Property, Mayfield, situate on dry gravel soil, on the summit of the hill, within a pleasant drive of 8½ miles from London, overlooking the Eltham-valley, the Elmstead woods and heights, near Chislehurst, and having a more distant view in the direction of the Surrey hills and Knockholt. MESSRS. DEBENHAM, TEWSON, and FARMER have received instructions from the Right Hon. Lord Penzance (who has no further occasion for a residence near London), to SELL by AUCTION, at the Mart, on Tuesday, June 30, the above important PROPERTY, which is situate one and a half mile and two miles respectively from two stations on the North Kent and South-Eastern lines. The mansion was built from the designs and under the supervision of one of the leading architects, especially for the occupation of the present proprietor. It is in the old English style of architecture, and no expense has been spared to make it in every respect a complete and comfortable abode. It contains four large principal bed chambers with dressing rooms to three of same, six secondary bed chambers and three servants' bed rooms, a handsome drawing room or library, about 45ft. by 18ft. or 19ft., besides bay 8ft. deep, second drawing room about 22ft. by 18ft., dining room about 26ft. by 18ft., study, a large square hall nearly the whole height of the house, servants' hall, housekeeper's room, butler's pantry, kitchen, scullery, dairy, and all suitable premises. The walls and ceilings of the principal rooms are panelled, and the general fittings and arrangements are in character with the style of architecture of the building. Stabling for five horses, double coach-house, two coachman's rooms over turret, with turret clock striking the quarters, cow house, and sheds; a convenient lodge entrance, now occupied by the gardener, and four glass houses. The house has south and west aspects, and the principal windows open upon a series of grass slopes and ornamental gardens, in the latter is a fountain; kitchen and fruit gardens, melon grounds, and ornamental woodland, containing some fine old oak timber, underwood, and ferns. The grounds have been laid out under skilled superintendence, and although exceedingly picturesque and attractive, they are inexpensive to maintain; numerous glades and ornamental walks have been formed through various parts of the woods, and the whole is a choice purchase for any nobleman or gentleman of fortune, or London merchant. Gas laid on to the house and stables. A private reservoir, containing 120,000 or 130,000 gallons, is placed on the property, at such an elevation as to supply water to all parts of the house, and pipes are laid down for the purpose of irrigating the gardens and for the supply of additional fountains. The buildings and a great portion of the property are held from the Crown for the residue of a term of ninety-nine years from 1863, at a moderate ground rent; the residue is held from some trustees for a long term.

Printed particulars, with plans and views, are in course of preparation, and can shortly be had of Messrs WILDE, BERGER, MOORE, and WILDE, Solicitors, No. 21, College-hill, E.C.; and of the AUCTIONEERS, 80, Cheapside.

Her Majesty's Theatre.

CHINNOCK, GALSWORTHY, and CHINNOCK have received instructions from the Trustees of H. E. Holloway, Esq., to SELL by AUCTION, at the AUCTION MART, City, on WEDNESDAY, the 20th MAY, at Two o'clock, this important and truly-distinguished PROPERTY, producing a present net improved ground-rent of £1171 14s., until Michaelmas, 1891, when the lease now held by Earl Dudley, as assignee of Mr. Benjamin Lumley, expires, and the purchaser will be entitled to possession for the remainder of a term expiring in 1912, when the estate falls to the Crown. An idea of the importance and value of this theatre may be realised from the fact of an offer having been made by unexceptionable parties to furnish and refit the theatre at a large outlay, and pay a rent of £5000 per annum, although there are a large number of property boxes and stalls, all the rights of which expire with the present lease in 1891, when the theatre is estimated to produce upwards of £8000 per annum. Most persons interested in such matters have seen and well remember the old house, and but few have ever had the opportunity of seeing the present beautiful building; it will, however, bear advantage us comparison, not only with the old house, but with Covent Garden and the best of the Continental Theatres. The structure, in consequence of the fire in 1867, has been entirely rebuilt from the foundations, by the eminent architect, Charles Lee, Esq., the original horse-shoe form so much admired and adapted to acoustics, has been to a great extent retained, and supplemented by all the advantages modern art and ingenuity could devise, the capacity for audience being much the same, the stage arrangements greatly improved, and all the well-known accesses of salles-d'attente maintained in the original positions, as they have ever been pronounced for such a building perfect. With the property will be sold the right, at the expiration of the lease in 1891, to a substantial Bonus in Consols, arising from the special insurance fund now accumulating, and estimated to produce many thousands of pounds. Also, a Box, No. 125, in one of the best positions, giving the purchaser the entrée during the lease. Also, the substantial corner house and business premises, No. 1, Pall-mall, let to Earl Dudley at the very low rent of £230 per annum.
