JOSEPH STORY LL.D.,

ONE OF THE JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,

AND DANE PROFESSOR OF LAW IN HARVARD UNIVERSITY.

SIR, - In dedicating this work to you, I perform an office both justly due to yourself and delightful to me, - that of adding the evidence of a private and confidential witness to the abundant public testimonials of your worth. For more than thirty years the jurisprudence of our country has been illustrated by your professional and juridical labors; with what success, it is now superfluous to speak. Other Jurists have attained distinction in separate departments of the law; it has been reserved for yourself, with singular felicity, to cultivate and administer them all. Looking back to the unsettled state of the law of our national institutions, at the period of your accession to the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States, and considering the unlimited variety of subjects within the cognizance of the Federal tribunals, I do but express the consenting opinions of your contemporaries, in congratulating our country that your life and vigor have been spared until the fabric of her jurisprudence has been advanced to its present state of lofty eminence, attractive beauty, and enduring strength.

But many will regard the foundation of the present Law School in Harvard University as the crowning benefit, which, through your instrumentality, has been conferred on our profession and country. Of the multitude of young men, who will have drunk at this fountain of jurisprudence, many will administer the law, in every portion of this widespread Republic, in the true spirit of the doctrines here inculcated; and succeeding throngs of ingenuous youth will, I trust, be here imbued with the same spirit, as long as our government shall remain a government of law. Your anxiety to perpetuate the benefits of this Institution, and the variety, extent, and untiring constancy of your labors in this cause, as well as the cheerful patience with which they have been borne, are peculiarly known to myself; while, at the same time, I have witnessed and been instructed by the high moral character, the widely expanded views, and the learned and just expositions of the law, which have alike distinguished your private Lectures and your published Commentaries. With unaffected sincerity I may be permitted to acknowledge, that while my path has been illumined for many years by your personal friendship and animating example, to have been selected as your associate in the arduous and responsible labors of this Institution, I shall ever regard as the peculiar honor and happiness of my professional life. Beate vixisse videar, quia cum Scipione vixerim.

Long may you continue to reap the rich reward of labors so vast, so incessant, and of such surpassing value, in the heartfelt gratitude of our whole country, and in the prosperity of her institutions, which you have done so much to establish and adorn.

I am, with the highest respect, Your obliged friend,

SIMON GREENLEAF.

PREFACE TO THE FIFTEENTH EDITION.

Every branch of the law is constantly receiving additions and limitations from time to time, as the Courts apply its principles to the varying conditions of business and social affairs. Especially is this true of the law of Evidence, which is necessarily discussed and applied in every case where an issue of fact is joined, and which from its very nature is apt to raise doubtful points requiring the decision of the highest courts of law for their ultimate settlement. The great number of cases involving questions of Evidence and reported since the last (14th) edition of Prof. Greenleaf's Treatise, rendered it desirable that a new edition should now be prepared, which should incorporate in the work, the substance of these cases, so far as they add anything new to the principles of this topic of the Law. The editor has, therefore, made additions of new cases amounting to nearly 1,900 in number, and including mainly such cases decided and reported since 1883 as he deemed most important in principle, or instructive, as showing the tendency of the courts in new lines of The subjects which have been affected most materially in the period covered by the new matter of this edition, and which have been treated with more or less fulness herein, are these: Real Evidence; PresumpVIII PREFACE.

tions; the admission of proof of Character or Reputation, especially for the defendant in criminal cases; the admissibility of Statements of pain, suffering, etc.; the meaning of the terms Relevancy and Res Gestæ; the introduction of proof of collateral facts; Shop Books as evidence; Pleadings, how far evidence; the privileges of attorney and client; of doctors and patients; of clergymen and penitents; oral inducements to written contracts; and a very full statement of the statutes and decisions affecting the competency of parties as witnesses; the competency of husband and wife for and against each other, and the competency of persons convicted of crimes, as witnesses; and also the principles affecting the introduction of expert testimony and the comparison of handwritings in evidence.

It is believed that these, and the other additions to the work, represent the development of the law since the last edition.

ADVERTISEMENT TO THE FIRST EDITION.

THE profession being already furnished with the excellent treatises of Mr. Starkie and Mr. Phillips on Evidence, with large bodies of notes, referring to American decisions, perhaps some apology may be deemed necessary for obtruding on their notice another work, on the same subject. But the want of a proper text-book, for the use of the students under my instruction, urged me to prepare something to supply this deficiency; and, having embarked in the undertaking, I was naturally led to the endeavor to render the work acceptable to the profession, as well as useful to the student. I would not herein be thought to disparage the invaluable works just mentioned; which, for their accuracy of learning, elegance, and sound philosophy, are so highly and universally esteemed by the American Bar. But many of the topics they contain were never applicable to this country; some others are now obsolete; and the body of notes has become so large, as almost to overwhelm the text, thus greatly embarrassing the student, increasing the labors of the instructor, and rendering it indispensable that the work should be rewritten, with exclusive reference to our own jurisprudence. I have endeavored to state those doctrines and rules of the Law of Evidence which are common to all the United States; omitting what is purely local law, and citing only such cases as seemed necessary to illustrate and support the text. Doubtless a happier selection of these might be made, and the work might have been much better executed by another hand; for now it is finished, I find it but an approximation towards what was originally desired. But in the hope that it still may be found not useless, as the germ of a better treatise, it is submitted to the candor of a liberal profession.

CAMBRIDGE, Massachusetts, February 23, 1842.

PREFACE TO THE FOURTEENTH EDITION.

In preparing this edition of "Greenleaf on Evidence," the editor has endeavored to follow the plan of the original work, by noticing those general changes in the law of evidence which have been adopted throughout the United States since the last edition of the book which the author himself revised, was published.

Among most obvious changes may be mentioned the admission as witnesses of parties to a suit and those interested in the suit. Besides the direct results of the statutes which accomplish this change, and which are noticed under the Competency of Witnesses, the indirect effects of these statutes are worthy of observation. Thus, the harmonious adjustment of these statutes with the common-law rules regarding the competency of husband and wife as witnesses, has given rise to a number of decisions, which will be found in the notes to the chapters on "Evidence excluded from Public Policy" and "Competency of Witnesses." Again, the questions how far, if at all, a party to a suit who testifies in his own behalf waives his privilege of not criminating himself, particularly in a criminal case, and how far his character for truth is brought in issue by his so testifying, have been fruitful themes of disputation.

Another important change is the gradual decrease in the weight given to presumptions of law, the tendency to consider nearly all such presumptions rebuttable, and to treat many which were formerly called rebuttable presumptions of law as presumptions of fact or inference to be drawn by the jury. This last change results from a disposition, strongly marked in courts of the present day, to enlarge the province of the jury as much as possible, and to leave the jury as free as possible, constituting it the ultimate arbiter of the case, and restraining it only by the general principles of law applicable to the case in issue, and conveyed to the jury in the instruction of the court. A large addition to the province of the jury is the submission to its decision of questions of reasonable and proper care, negligence, reasonable cause, and kindred subjects,—the wisdom of which submission is undoubted, as the decision of these questions depends upon the standard of conduct which an ordinarily prudent man would adopt in such cases; and the jury is, from the manner in which its members are selected and their number, a tribunal eminently fitted to pass upon these topics.

These and other changes in the rules of evidence have furnished the substance of the notes of the editor, which, together with such notes of previous editors as have been retained, are placed in double columns at the foot of the page; for it was thought advisable to separate the text and notes of the author from the editor's notes, so as to leave the text and notes of the author as they stood in the last edition revised by him. The editor has retained many of the notes of the previous editors,—particularly those of Judges Redfield and May, though the matter has been recast into new form and combined with additional notes. In consequence of pursuing this mode of treatment, it was not feasible to distinguish the notes of previous editors, except a few important notes of Judges Redfield and May, which have been cited verbatim in the present edition.

In the large addition to the citation of cases, and in the discussions of points of evidence in the notes, the editor has endeavored to present a view of the decisions of the Courts of the United States generally. To this end, citations of cases have been made from nearly all the State Courts, and from the decisions of the Federal Courts; and the aim has been to have the citations as far as possible leading cases, or cases where the point in question has received thorough discussion. In the discussion of points which have been variously decided in different jurisdictions, a presentation of both sides of the discussion has been given by citation from some of the leading opposing decisions.

The statements of the present English law have been for the most part given by references to or quotations from the "Digest of the Law of Evidence," by Sir James Stephen. The General Index has been thoroughly revised by J. M. Gould, Esq., of the Suffolk bar, and its usefulness largely increased by additional references, both to the author's text and the editor's notes. It is believed that the value of these additions will be fully appreciated by the profession.

This has been the plan of the editor. However imperfect the execution may have been, he offers the results of his labor to the profession, in the hope that it may be of some assistance to them,—serving at least to guide them to the reports of decided cases, which are the fountains of the law.

PART I.

OF THE NATURE AND PRINCIPLES OF EVIDENCE.

vol. 1. — 1

OF THE NATURE AND PRINCIPLES OF EVIDENCE.

PRELIMINARY OBSERVATIONS.

§ 1. Definitions. The word EVIDENCE, in legal acceptation, includes all the means by which any alleged matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to investigation, is established or disproved.1 This term, and the word proof, are often used indifferently, as synonymous with each other; but the latter is applied by the most accurate logicians to the effect of evidence, and not to the medium by which truth is established.2 None but mathematical truth is susceptible of that high degree of evidence, called demonstration, which excludes all possibility of error, and which, therefore, may reasonably be required in support of every mathematical deduction. Matters of fact are proved by moral evidence alone; by which is meant not only that kind of evidence which is employed on subjects connected with moral conduct, but all the evidence which is not obtained either from intuition, or from demonstration. In the ordinary affairs of life, we do not require demonstrative evidence, because it is not consistent with the nature of the subject, and to insist upon it would be unreasonable and absurd. The most that can be affirmed of such things is, that there is no reasonable doubt concerning them.³ The true question, therefore, in trials of fact, is not whether it is possible that the testimony may be false, but whether there is sufficient probability of its truth; that is, whether the facts are shown by competent and satisfactory evidence. Things established by competent and satisfactory evidence are said to be proved.

See Wills on Circumstantial Evid. 2; 1 Stark. Evid. 10; 1 Phil. Evid. 1.
 Whately's Logic, b. 4, ch. 3, § 1.

- § 2. Competent, satisfactory, and cumulative. By competent evidence is meant that which the very nature of the thing to be proved requires, as the fit and appropriate proof in the particular case, such as the production of a writing, where its contents are the subject of inquiry. By satisfactory evidence, which is sometimes called sufficient evidence, is intended that amount of proof, which ordinarily satisfies an unprejudiced mind, beyond reasonable doubt. The circumstances which will amount to this degree of proof can never be previously defined; the only legal test of which they are susceptible is their sufficiency to satisfy the mind and conscience of a common man; and so to convince him, that he would venture to act upon that conviction, in matters of the highest concern and importance to his own interest. Questions respecting the competency and admissibility of evidence are entirely distinct from those which respect its sufficiency or effect; the former being exclusively within the province of the court; the latter belonging exclusively to the jury.2 Cumulative evidence is evidence of the same kind, to the same point. Thus, if a fact is attempted to be proved by the verbal admission of the party, evidence of another verbal admission of the same fact is cumulative; but evidence of other circumstances, tending to establish the fact, is not.3
- § 3. Division of the Subject. This branch of the law may be considered under three general heads, namely: First, The Nature and Principles of Evidence; Secondly, The Object of Evidence, and the Rules which govern in the production of testimony; And Thirdly, The Means of Proof, or the Instruments by which facts are established. This order will be followed in farther treating this subject. But, before we proceed, it will be proper first to consider what things courts will, of themselves, take notice of, without proof.

CHAPTER II.

OF THINGS JUDICIALLY TAKEN NOTICE OF, WITHOUT PROOF.

§ 4. Public functionaries, seals, laws, and acts of state. All civilized nations, being alike members of the great family of sovereignties, may well be supposed to recognize each other's existence, and general public and external relations. The usual and appropriate symbols of nationality and sovereignty are the national flag and seal. Every sovereign, therefore, recognizes, and, of course, the public tribunals and functionaries of every nation take notice of the existence and titles of all the other sovereign powers in the civilized world, their respective flags, and their seals of state. Public acts, decrees, and judgments, exemplified under this seal, are received as true and genuine, it being the highest evidence of their character. (a) If, however, upon a civil war in any country, one part of the nation shall separate itself from the other, and establish for itself an independent government, the newly formed nation cannot without proof be recognized as such, by the judicial tribunals of other nations, until it has been acknowledged by the sovereign power under which those tribunals are constituted; 2 the first act of recognition belonging to the executive function. (b) But though the seal of the new power, prior to such acknowledgment, is not permitted to prove itself, yet it may be proved as a fact by other competent testimony.3 And the existence of such unacknowl-

App. 347. Local customs, however, will not be judicially noticed. Dutch, &c. Co. v. Mooney, 12 Cal. 535; Sullivan v. Hense, 2 Col. Terr. 424; Turner v. Fish, 28 Miss. 306; Volume v. Europe v. My. 306; Youngs v. Ransom, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 49; Lewis v. McClurc, 8 Oreg. 273. Nor customs which do not form part of the law merchant, e. g. the rules of a broker's board. Goldsmith v. Sawyer, 46 Cal. 209.

(b) The following classes of laws are judicially noticed:

1° The treaties of the United States, their dates, and their contents. Montgomery v. Deeley, 3 Wisc. 709; Carson v. Smith, 5 Minn. 78; Dole v. Wilson, 16

v. Smith, 5 Minn. 78; Dole v. Wilson, 16 Minn. 525; United States v. Reynes, 9 How. (U. S.) 127.

2º The public acts of Congress. Morris v. Davidson, 49 Ga. 361; Canal Co. v. R. R. Co., 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 1, 63; Kessel v. Albetis, 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 362; Mims v. Swartz, 37 Tex. 13; Bird v. Com., 21 Gratt. (Va.) 800; Bayly's Adm'r v. Chubb, 16 Id. 284; The Scotia, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 171.

3° The public acts of the legislature of the State where the court is sitting or to which it belongs. A public act is usually an act general in its character and operation, and equally applicable to all parts of the State. Yet there are acts which are considered public acts, but which are local because they apply only to contain localities. Thus statutes prohibe certain localities. Thus statutes prohibiting fishing in certain ponds or within certain limits, although such statutes apply only to those localities, are public statutes, because they are obligatory upon all the citizens of the State. Burnham v. Webster, 5 Mass. 266. So a statute regulating the lumber trade of a certain district is a public act. Pierce v. Kimball,

9 Greenl. 54. Or a statute granting a portion of the public domain, and affecting the rights of navigation and fishing by allowing improvements to be extended into navigable water. Hammond v. Inloes, 4 Md. 139. So is an act regulating the sale of liquors in a particular locality. Levy v. State, 6 Ind. 281; State v. Cooper, 101 N. C. 688. Cf. Inglis v. State, 61 Ind.

It has generally been held that acts incorporating municipal corporations, whether general or granting special charters, are er general or granting special charters, are public acts. Albrittin v. Huntsville, 60 Ala. 486; Perryman v. Greenville, 51 ld. 510; Smart v. Wetumpka, 24 ld. 112; Washington v. Finley, 5 Eng. (Ark.) 423; Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 220; Macey v. Titcombe, 19 Ind. 136; Johnson v. Indianapolis, 16 ld. 227; Stier v. Oskaloosa, 41 Iowa, 353; Prell v. McDonald, 7 Kans. 426. Mass. Pub. Stat. c. 169 & 68. State. 41 Iowa, 353; Prell v. McDonald, 7 Kans. 426; Mass. Pub. Stat. c. 169, § 68; State v. Sherman, 42 Mo. 210; State v. Murfreesboro', 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 217; Gallagher v. State, 10 Tex. App. 469; Briggs v. Whipple, 7 Vt. 15; Terry v. Milwaukee, 15 Wisc. 490; Alexander v. Milwaukee, 16 Id. 247; Swain v. Comstock, 18 Id. 463 463.

The acts of legislature incorporating State banks have also generally been held to be public acts, and have been judicially noticed. Jemison v. Planters', &c. Bank, 17 Ala. 754; Davis v. Fulton Bank, 31 17 Ala. 134, Davis C. Fulton Bank, 31 Ga. 69; Gordon v. Montgomery, 19 Ind. 110; Bank of Newbury v. Greenville R. R. Co., 9 Rich. (S. C.) L. 495; Shaw v. State, 3 Sneed (Tenn.), 86; Buell v. Warner, 33 Vt. 570; Hays v. Northwestern Bank, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 127.

The general laws concerning the income

The general laws concerning the incorporation of railways are public acts which are judicially noticed by the courts. Heaston v. Cincinnati, &c. R. R. Co., 16 Ind. 275. Special charters of incorporation granted to particular railways have been held to be private acts which would not be judicially noticed (Atchison, &c. R. R.

Co. v. Blackshire, 10 Kans. 477; Perry v. New Orleans, &c. R. R. Co., 55 Ala. 413; Ohio, &c. R. R. Co. v. Ridge, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 78); and have also been held to be public acts (Wright v. Hawkins, 28 Tex. 452). The actual location of the railroad under its articles of incorporation must be proved, and will not be judicially noticed by the court. Georgia Pacific R. R. Co. v. Gaines, 88 Ala. 380.

Any act which is declared at the time of its passage by the legislature to be a public act will be judicially noticed by the courts. Cincinnati, Hamil. & Indian. R. R. Co. v. Clifford, 113 Ind. 467; Hamil. mett v. Little Rock, &c. R. R. Co., 20 Ark. 204; Doyle v. Bradford, 90 Ill. 416; Eel River, &c. Co. v. Topp, 16 Ind. 242; Covington Drawbridge Co. v. Shepherd, 26 How. (U. S.) 227; Beaty v. Knowler, 4 Peters (U. S.), 152. And so if by statute the courts are required to notice private Bush (Ky.), 166; Halbert v. Skyles, 1 Marsh. (Ky.) 368; Hart v. Baltimore, &c.
R. R. Co., 6 W. Va. 336.

Private acts are not judicially noticed by courts, but must be proved. Broad Street Hotel Co. v. Weaver's Adm'rs, 57 Ala. 26; Danville, &c. Plank Road Co. v. State, 16 Ind. 456; Perdicaris v. Trenton, &c. Bridge Co., 5 Dutch. (N. J.) 367; Allegheny v. Nelson, 25 Pa. St. 332. If a private statute is anended or repealed by a public statute, the private statute is judicially noticed. Lavalle v. People, 6 lll. App. 157. The amendment of a public statute, or its repeal, is judicially noticed. Belmont v. Morrill, 69 Me. 314; State v. O'Conner, 13 La. An. 486; Parent

v. Walmsly's Adm'rs, 20 Ind. 82.

The questions then arise, when does a legislative resolution become a law of which the courts will take judicial notice, and whether or not the courts will go behind the rolls of the House to ascertain whether the law to which its attention is called is, in fact, the law passed by the legislature.

In the case of Evans v. Brown, 30 Ind. 514, this question was raised and the court decided that it must for itself ascertain what is the public law of the State, and that the court would not look beyond the enrolled act and its authentication to determine the validity of the act. The act under consideration by the court in that case was properly certified and had not been vetoed and became a law without ex-ecutive approval. The decision of the court was that when an act appeared regular upon its face and properly certified by the presiding officers, and was found with the proper custodian, the courts would not look to the journals to determine whether or not, at the time the bill was voted upon and passed, there was a quorum present in each house, and whether all the provisions of the constitution had been complied with in its enactment, that in such a case as was then before the court, the attestation of the presiding officers was conclusive evidence of the regularity of the proceedings, in both Houses of the General Assembly, in the passage of the aet; that the constitution of the State declared the mode by which such bill should be certified, and such certificate was conclusive as to the regularity of its enactment, and should not be eontradicted by the journals. So, in the recent case of State v. Denny, 118 lnd. 450, the same question arose in the case of a bill which was passed over the veto of the governor. The bill was signed by the president of the Senate and the speaker of the House, and attested by the clerk of the House; there was also a certificate of the clerk of the House and secretary of the Senate. The certificate of the clerk of the House set forth the fact that the bill was on the 7th day of March, 1889, returned to the House with the objections of the governor, and that the objections were spread upon the journal, and the bill again passed by a vote of fifty-four ayes and thirty-nine nays, and the certificate of the secretary of the Senate certified that upon the bill having passed the House, notwithstanding the governor's objections thereto, the same was transmitted to the Senate, and it was then ordered that the governor's objections be spread in full upon the journal, which was done and the bill passed, notwithstanding the objections of the governor thereto, by a vote of ayes, twenty-seven, nays, nineteen. It was urged that the act was not properly certified so that the courts would take judicial knowledge of it as a law. It was contended by counsel that to entitle it to the solemnity and force of the law after it was vetoed by the governor and passed by both Houses of the General Assembly, it must be again attested by the presiding officers of the two Houses as required by law on its original passage; that unless it were so attested, courts would not take cognizance of it as a law, but the court held that it would only look to the bill itself and not to the journals of the two Houses of the General Assembly to determine whether or not the bill was passed over the objections of the governor.

The subject of judicial notice of foreign laws was thoroughly discussed in the case of Liverpool Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 129 pool Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 444. In that case it was attempted to rely on the law of Great Britain, but the Circuit Court held that as the law of Great Britain had not been set up in the answer nor proved as a fact, the case must be decided according to the law of the Federal courts as a question of general commercial law. The Supreme Court of the United States on appeal said:

"The law of Great Britain since the

"The law of Great Britain since the Declaration of Independence is the law of a foreign country, and like any other foreign law, is a matter of fact which the courts of this country cannot be presumed to be acquainted with or to have judicial knowledge of, unless it is pleaded and proved.

"The rule that the courts of one country cannot take cognizance of the law of another without plea and proof has been constantly maintained at law and in equity in England and America. Church v. Hubbard, 2 Cranch, 187, 236; Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. 400, 426, 427; Pierce v. Indseth,

In the case last cited, Mr. Justice Willes, delivering judgment in the Exchequer Chamber said: "In order to preclude all misapprehension it may be well to add that a party who relies upon a right or an examination by foreign law is bound to bring such law properly before the court and establish it in proof; otherwise the court, not being entitled to notice such law without judicial proof, must proceed according to the law of England."

law without judicial proof, must proceed according to the law of England."

Although the various States of the United States are so far foreign to each other that the laws of one must be proved in another, yet if two States are formed by the division of one, the laws of the parent State existing before the division will be judicially noticed in either of the new States. Arayo v. Currel, 1 Mill. (La.) 528, 540-541; Malpica v. McKown, Id. 254; Stokes v. Macken, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 145; Henthorn v. Doe, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 157. The Federal courts, however, will take judicial notice of State laws. Story, J., in Owings v. Hall, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 624, states the principle thus: "The circuit courts of the United States are created by Congress, not for the purpose of administering the local law of a single State alone, but to administer the laws of all the States in the Union, in cases to which they respectively apply. The judicial power conferred on the general government by the Constitution, extends to many cases arising under the laws of the different States, and this court is called upon, in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, constantly to take notice of and administer the juris-prudence of all the States. That jurisprudence, then, is in no just sense a foreign jurisprudence, to be proved in the courts of the United States by the ordinary modes of proof by which the laws of a foreign country are to be established, but it is to be judicially taken notice of in the same manner as the laws of the United same manner as the laws of the United States are taken notice of by these courts." Carpenter v. Dexter, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 513; Merrill v. Dawson, 1 Hemp. 563; Miller v. McQuerry, 5 McLean, C. C. 469; Hinde v. Vattier, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 398; United States v. Turner, 11 How. (U. S.) 663; United States v. Philadelphia, Ib. 654; Jones v. Hays, 4 McLean, C. C. 521. In Lamar v. Micou, 112 U. S. 452; S. C. 114 U. S. 218; the rule was again offirmed that U. S. 218, the rule was again affirmed that the Circuit Courts of the United States, and the Supreme Court on appeal from their decisions, take judicial notice of the laws of the several States of the Union as domestic laws. If, however, upon writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States to the highest court of a State, it appears that by the law of that State, their courts do not take judicial notice of the law of another State not proved in their courts, the Supreme Court will not take judicial notice of such law. Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 1; Renaud v. Abbott, 116 U. S. 277, 285. On the principle stated by Story, J., supra, it has been held that on questions arising in a State court under the constitution and laws of the United States, which might be appealed to the United States courts, e. g. on giving full validity to judgments of another State, the State Courts will take judicial notice of such laws of other States as the United States courts would on appeal. State of Ohio v. Hinchman, 27 Pa. St. 479; Jarvis v. Robinson, 21 Wisc. 523; Butcher v. Brownsville, 2 Kans. 70; Paine v. Schenectady, 11 R. I. 411; Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 Mich. 410; Morse v. Hewett, 28 Mich. 481. Cf. Fellows v. Menasha, 11 Wisc. 558; Salter v. Applegate, 3 Zabr. (N. J.) 115. In Tennessee, by statute, the Supreme Court takes judicial notice of the laws and statutes of the other States. Code, § 3801; Hobbs v. Memphis R. R. Co., 9 Heisk. 873. The rule that foreign laws will not be judicially noticed is also well established in the courts of Admiralty. In a recent case in Admiralty, Mr. Justice Bradley said: "If a a collision should occur in British waters, at least between British ships, and the injured party should seek relief in our courts, we would administer justice according to the British law so far as the rights and lia-bilities of the parties were concerned, pro-vided it were shown what that law was. If not shown, we would apply our own law to the case. In the French or Dutch tribunals they would do the same." The Scotland, 105 U.S. 24, 29. And in a recent English case Sir Robert Phillimore said: "I have no doubt whatever that those who rely upon the difference between the foreign law and the law of the forum, in which the case is brought, are bound to estab-lish that difference by competent evi-dence." The Duero, L. R. 2 Ad. & Ec.

City, town, and county ordinances, and local board rules, are not judicially noticed by courts of general jurisdiction. Case v. Mobile, 30 Ala. 538; Indianapolis, &c. R. R. Co. v. But not particular changes of weather at special times. Dixon v. Niccolls, 39 Ill. 372. The court is not bound to take judicial notice of matters of fact brought to its attention, unless such books or other documentary evidence as the court may require to refresh its recol-lection upon the subject in question are produced by the party asking the court to judicially notice such facts. Thus, when a party to a suit asks the court to take judicial notice of the Carlisle and other life tables for the purpose of showing the "expectation" and probable duration of life, the court may require the party to produce the tables, and if they then appear to the court to be genuine and authe to the court to be gentline and authoritative, they will be used by the court to inform itself in the premises and will be judicially noticed. Scheffler v. Minneapolis & St. Louis Ry. Co., 32 Minn. 521. On similar grounds in the Western States, in which the land has been laid out in a series of comprehensive surveys, the courts take judicial notice of the divisions and subdivisions of these surveys. Atwater v. Schenck, 9 Wis. 156. So the court took judicial notice in a recent case in Minnesota that there is and can be but one Township 49, Range 15, in that State. Quinn v. Champagne, 38 Minn. 323. The authorities are also in entire accord upon the point that the court will take judicial notice of the succession of the days of the month and their coincidence with the days of the week, and to refresh its memory it will either sua sponte or on the suggestion of counsel consult the chronicles or almanacs, and it is wholly immaterial whether the court thus ascertains the correspondent dates by books adduced by the counsel as instruments of evidence, or by the court itself on the suggestion of the counsel. "The almanac in such a case is used like statutes, not strictly as evidence but for the purpose of refreshing the memory of the court and jury." State v. Morris, 47 Conn. 179. So, in Reed v. Wilson, 41 N. J. L. 29, there was a declaration on a note dated August 12, at four months, and on demurrer showing inter alia that the declaration showed demand and protest on December 14, one day too soon, the court took judicial notice that December 15 was Sunday, and that the demand was made on the proper day. In Phil., Wil. & B. R. R. Co. v. Lehman, 56 Md. 226, it was held that "it was the duty of the court to notice the days of the week on which particular days of the month fall; and hence we note without other averment that the 28th of July was Sunday." In McIntosh v. Lee, 57 lowa, 358, it was said by the court. "The petition alleges that the defendant entered into a written lease on March 10, 1878. Courts take judicial notice that the 10th day of March, 1878, was Sunday." So, in a recent case in Pennsylvania, the court allowed counsel to refer to the almanac to show in support of his argument against the testimony of the witness that a certain day in 1865 fell upon Sunday. Wilson v. Van Leer, 127 Pa. St. 278.

(f) Hill v. Bacon, 43 Ill. 477. The judicial notice of the meaning of abbreviations cial notice of the meaning of abbreviations must depend very much on the usages of the State where the court sits. It has been held that the court knows judicially that "Adm'r," means administrator (Moseley's Adm'r v. Mastin, 37 Ala. 216); but not that "Mo." means "Missouri" (Ellis v. Park, 8 Tex. 205); nor that "La." means Louisiana. Russell v. Martin, 15 Tex. 238.

The courts will also take notice of the character of the existing circulating medium, and of the will also take notice of the character of the existing circulating medium, and of the popular language in reference to it (Lampton v. (g) When any art, science, or process of manufacture has become a matter of common knowledge, its leading principles and results will be judicially noticed. Thus, the court will take judicial notice that the process of photography produces a correct likeness of any object. Luke v. Calhoun, 52 Ala. 115; Udderzook's Case, 76 Pa. St. 340; Cozzens v. Higgins, 1 Abb. (N. Y.) App. Dec. 451. So, that whiskey is an intoxicating liquor (Schlicht v. State, 56 Ind. 173; Eagan v. State, 53 Id. 162; Klare v. State, 43 Id. 483; Com. v. Peckham, 2 Gray (Mass.), 514); that beer is a malt liquor (Adler v. State, 55 Ala. 16; State v. Goyette, 11 R. I. 592); but not that malt liquors are intoxicating. Shaw v. State, 56 Ind. 188. The power of the court as to taking judicial notice of matters of fact was strongly set forth in a case in Massachusetts (Com. v. Marzynski, 149 Mass. 72), where one was indicted for selling cigars on Sunday, contrary to the statute. The court says: "Ordinarily, whether a substance or article comes within a given de-scription is a question of fact, but some facts are so obvious and familiar that the law takes notice of them and receives them into its domain. If the proof had been that the shop had been kept open for the purpose of selling guns or pistols, it would hardly be contended that the judge might not properly have ruled that the sale of these articles was not a sale of drugs or medicines. The court has judicial knowledge of the meaning of common words and may well rule that guns and pistols are not drugs or medicines, and may exclude the opinions of witnesses who offer to testify that they are." Com. v. Peckham, 2 Gray, 514; Com. v. Crowley, 145 Mass. 430.

"Cigars are manufactured articles familiar to everybody, the materials of which they are composed are carefully prepared and put into form until they lose their original character as mere materials and become articles of commerce known by a new name and adapted to a particular use. We are of the opinion that cigars sold by a tobacconist in the ordinary way, are not drugs or medicines, within the meaning of those words as used in the statute." Com. v. Marzynski, 149 Mass. 72.

CHAPTER III.

OF THE GROUNDS OF BELIEF.

§ 7. Personal experience. We proceed now to a brief consideration of the General Nature and Principles of Evidence. inquiry is here proposed into the origin of human knowledge; it being assumed, on the authority of approved writers, that all that men know is referable, in a philosophical view, to perception and reflection. But, in fact, the knowledge acquired by an individual, through his own perception and reflection, is but a small part of what he possesses; much of what we are content to regard and act upon as knowledge having been acquired through the perception of others. 1 It is not easy to conceive that the Supreme Being, whose wisdom is so conspicuous in all his works, constituted man to believe only upon his own personal experience; since in that case the world could neither be governed nor improved; and society must remain in the state in which it was left by the first generation of men. On the contrary, during the period of childhood, we believe implicitly almost all that is told us, and thus are furnished with information which we could not otherwise obtain, but which is necessary, at the time, for our present protection, or as the means of future improvement. This disposition to believe may be termed instinctive. At an early period, however, we begin to find that, of the things told to us, some are not true, and thus our implicit reliance on the testimony of others is weakened: first, in regard to particular things in which we have been deceived; then in regard to persons whose falsehood we have detected; and, as these instances multiply upon us, we gradually become more and more distrustful of such statements, and learn by experience the necessity of testing them by certain rules. Thus, as our ability to obtain knowledge by other means increases, our instinctive reliance on testimony diminishes, by yielding to a more rational pelief.2

Gambier's Guide, p. 87; McKinnon's Philosophy of Evidence, p. 40. This subject is treated more largely by Dr. Reid in his profound "Inquiry into the Human Mind," ch. 6, § 24 pp. 428-434, in these words: "The wise and beneficent Author of Nature, who intended that we should be social creatures, and that we should receive the greatest and most important part of our knowledge by the information of others, hath, for these purposes, implanted in our natures two principles that tally with each other. The first of these principles is a propensity to speak truth and to use the signs of language, so as to convey our real sentiments. This principle has a powerful operation, even in the greatest liars; for where they lie once they speak truth a hundred times. Truth is always uppermost, and is the natural issue of the mind. It requires no art or training, no inducement or temptation, but only, that we yield to a natural impulse. Lying, on the contrary, is doing violence to our nature; and is never practised, even by the worst men, without some temptation. Speaking truth is like using our natural food, which we would do from appetite, although it answered no end; but lying is like taking physic, which is nauseous to the taste, and which no man takes but for some end which he cannot otherwise attain. If it should be objected, that men may be influenced by moral or political considerations to speak truth, and, therefore, that their doing so is no proof of such an original principle as we have mentioned; I answer first, that moral or political considerations can have no influence until we arrive at years of understanding and reflection; and it is certain, from experience, that children keep to truth invariably, before they are capable of being influenced by such considerations. Secondly, when we are influenced by moral or political considerations, we must be conscious of that influence, and capable of perceiving it upon reflection. Now, when I reflect upon my actions most attentively, I am not conscious that, in speaking truth, I am influenced on ordinary occasions by any portion, moral or political. I find that truth is always at the dear of ordinary occasions. motive, moral or political. I find that truth is always at the door of my lips, and goes forth spontaneously, if not held back. It requires neither good nor bad intention to bring it forth, but only that I be artless and undesigning. There may, indeed, be temptations to falsehood, which would be too strong for the natural principle of veracity, unaided by principles of honor or virtue; but where there is no such temptation, we speak truth by instinct; and this instinct is the principle I have been explaining. By this instinct, a real connection is formed between our words and our thoughts, and thereby the former become fit to be signs of the latter, which they could not otherwise be. And although this connection is broken in every instance of lying and equivocation, yet these instances being comparatively few the authority of human testimony is only weakened by them, but not destroyed. Another original principle, implanted in us by the Supreme Being, is a disposition to confide in the veracity of others, and to believe what they tell us. This is the counterpart to the former; and as that may be called the principle of veracity, we shall for want of a more proper name, call this the principle of credulity. It is unlimited in children, until they meet with instances of deceit and falsehood; and it retains a very considerable degree of strength through life. If nature had left the mind of the speaker in equilibrio, without any inclination to the side of truth more than to that of falsehood, children would lie as often as they speak truth, until reason was so far ripened, as to suggest the imprudence of lying, or conscience, as to suggest its immorality. And if nature had left the mind of the hearer in aquilibrio, without any inclination to the side of belief more than to that of disbelief, we should take no man's word, until we had positive evidence that he spoke truth. His testimony would, in this case, have no more authority than his dreams, which may be true or false; but no man is disposed to believe them, on this account, that they were dreamed. It is evident, that, in the matter of testimony, the balance of human judgment is by nature inclined to the side of belief; and turns to that side of itself, when there is nothing put into the opposite scale. If it was not so, no proposition that is uttered in discourse would be believed, until it was examined and tried by reason; and most men would be unable to find reasons for believing the thousandth part of what is told them. Such distrust and incredulity would deprive us of the greatest bencfits of society, and place us in a worse condition than that of savages. Children, on this supposition, would be absolutely incredulous, and therefore absolutely incapable of instruction; those who had little knowledge of human life and of the manners and characters of men, would be in the next degree incredulous; and the most credulous men would be those of greatest experience and of the deepest penetration; because, in many cases, they would be able to find good reasons for believing testimony, which the weak and the ignorant could not discover. In a word, if credulity were the effect of reasoning and experience, it must grow up and gather strength in the same proportion fluenced by their accordance with facts previously known or believed; and this constitutes what is termed their probability. Statements, thus probable, are received upon evidence much less cogent than we require for the belief of those which do not accord with our previous knowledge. But while these statements are more readily received, and justly relied upon, we should beware of unduly distrusting all others. While unbounded credulity is the attribute of weak minds, which seldom think or reason at all, - "quo magis nesciunt eo magis admirantur," - unlimited scepticism belongs only to those who make their own knowledge and observation the exclusive standard of probability. Thus the king of Siam rejected the testimony of the Dutch ambassador, that, in his country, water was sometimes congealed into a solid mass; for it was utterly contrary to his own experience. Sceptical philosophers, inconsistently enough with their own principles, yet true to the nature of man, continue to receive a large portion of their knowledge upon testimony derived, not from their own experience, but from that of other men; and this, even when it is at variance with much of their own personal observation. Thus, the testimony of the historian is received with confidence, in regard to the occurrences of ancient times; that of the naturalist and the traveller, in regard to the natural history and civil condition of other countries; and that of the astronomer, respecting the heavenly bodies; facts, which, upon the narrow basis of his own "firm and unalterable experience," as reasoning and experience do. But if it is the gift of nature, it will be strongest in childhood, and limited and restrained by experience; and the most superficial view of human life shows that the last is really the case, and not the first. It is the intention of nature, that we should be carried in arms before we are able to walk upon our legs; and it is likewise the intention of nature, that our belief should be guided by the authority and reason of others, before it can be guided by our own reason. The weakness of the infant, and the natural affection of the mother, plainly indicate the former; and the natural credulity of youth and authority of age as plainly indicate the latter. The infant, by proper nursing and care, acquires strength to walk without support. Reason hath likewise her infancy, when she must be carried in arms; then she leans entirely upon anthority, by natural instinct, as if she was conscious of her own weakness; and without this support she becomes vertiginous. When brought to maturity by proper culture, she begins to feel her own strength, and leans less upon the reason of others; she learns to suspect testimony in some cases, and to disbelieve it in others; and sets bounds to that authority to which she was at first entirely subject. But still, to the end of life, she finds a necessity of borrowing light from testimony, where she has none within herself, and of leaning in some degree upon the reason of others, where she is conscious of her own imbecility. And as, in many instances, Reason, even in her maturity, borrows aid from testimony, so in others she mutually gives aid to it and strengthens its authority. For, as we find good reason to reject testimony in some cases, so in others we find good reason to rely upon it with perfect security, in our most important concerns. The character, the number, and the disinterestedness of witnesses, the impossibility of collusion, and the incredibility of their concurring in their testimony without collusion, may give an irresistible strengt upon which Mr. Hume so much relies, he would be bound to reject as wholly unworthy of belief.

§ 8. Experience of others. It is true, that, in receiving the knowledge of facts from the testimony of others, we are much in-

- § 9. Same subject. The uniform habits, therefore, as well as the necessities of mankind, lead us to consider the disposition to believe, upon the evidence of extraneous testimony, as a fundamental principle of our moral nature, constituting the general basis upon which all evidence may be said to rest.¹
- § 10. Same subject. Subordinate to this paramount and original principle, it may, in the second place, be observed that evidence rests upon our faith in human testimony, as sanctioned by experience; that is, upon the general experienced truth of the statements of men of integrity, having capacity and opportunity for observation, and without apparent influence from passion or interest to pervert the truth. This belief is strengthened by our previous knowledge of the narrator's reputation for veracity; by the absence of conflicting testimony; and by the presence of that which is corroborating and cumulative. (a)
- § 11. Relations of facts to each other. A third basis of evidence is the known and experienced connection subsisting between collateral facts or circumstances, satisfactorily proved, and the fact in controversy. This is merely the legal application, in other terms, of a process, familiar in natural philosophy, showing the truth of an hypothesis by its coincidence with existing phenomena. The connections and coincidences to which we

(a) It is upon this ground, namely, the faith in the credibility of human testimony, that the jury in a trial at law are largely obliged to rely; and the question of the degree of credibility of an individual witness, or of all the testimony in the case, is wholly for them to decide. Any instructions from the judge by which such a question is put to the jury as a matter of law is an infringement by the court of the peculiar province of the jury. General observations, however, may be made by the court on the credit of certain classes of witnesses, which may tend to show their relative merits.

For example, the testimony of policemen, constables, private detectives, and others employed in the suppression and detection of crime, when it is given against the prisoner, may be open to comment, because their professional zeal, fed by an habitual intercourse with the vicious and by the frequent contemplation of human nature in its most revolting form, almost necessarily leads them to ascribe actions to the worst motives, and to give a coloring of gnilt to facts and conversations which are perhaps in themselves consistent with perfect rectitude. Taylor, Evid. § 49.

Again, the testimony of experts is notoriously liable to be warped by a favor-

Again, the testimony of experts is notoriously liable to be warped by a favorable disposition towards the side on which they are employed to testify. In the language of Campbell, Ld. Ch., in the Tracy Peerage Case, 10 Cl. & Fin. 191, "skilled witnesses come with such a bias on their minds to support the cause in which they are embarked, that hardly any weight should be given to their evidence." Taylor, Evid. § 50.

So the court may instruct the jury that they are authorized to consider the relationship of witnesses to the parties; their interest in the event of the suit; their temper, feeling, or bias, if any has been shown; their demeanor while testifying; their apparent intelligence and means of information. Taylor, Evid. § 44; Sackett, Instructions to Juries, p. 30; Ammerman v. Tegter, 49 Ill. 400.

refer may be either physical or moral; and the knowledge of them is derived from the known laws of matter and motion, from animal instincts, and from the physical, intellectual, and moral constitution and habits of men. Their force depends on their sufficiency to exclude every other hypothesis but the one under consideration. Thus, the possession of goods recently stolen, accompanied with personal proximity in point of time and place, and inability in the party charged, to show how he came by them, would seem naturally, though not necessarily, to exclude every other hypothesis but that of his guilt. But the possession of the same goods, at a remoter time and place, would warrant no such conclusion, as it would leave room for the hypothesis of their having been lawfully purchased in the course of Similar to this in principle is the rule of noscitur a sociis, according to which the meaning of certain words, in a written instrument, is ascertained by the context.

§ 12. Coincidences. Some writers have mentioned yet another ground of the credibility of evidence, namely, the exercise of our reason upon the effect of coincidences in testimony, which, if collusion be excluded, cannot be accounted for upon any other hypothesis than that it is true. 1 It has been justly remarked, that progress in knowledge is not confined, in its results, to the mere facts which we acquire, but it has also an extensive influence in enlarging the mind for the further reception of truth, and setting it free from many of those prejudices which influence men whose minds are limited by a narrow field of observation.2 It is also true, that, in the actual occurrences of human life, nothing is inconsistent. Every event which actually transpires has its appropriate relation and place in the vast complication of circumstances, of which the affairs of men consist; it owes its origin to those which have preceded it; it is intimately connected with all others which occur at the same time and place, and often with those of remote regions; and, in its turn, it gives birth to a thousand others which succeed.3 In all this, there is perfect harmony; so that it is hardly possible to invent a story which, if closely compared with all the actual contemporaneous occurrences, may not be shown to be false. From these causes, minds, deeply imbued with science, or enlarged by long and matured experience, and close observation of the conduct and affairs of men, may, with a rapidity and certainty approaching to intuition, perceive the elements of truth or falsehood in the face itself of the narrative, without any regard to the narrator. Thus, Archimedes might have believed an account of the invention and wonderful powers of the steam-engine, which his unlearned countrymen would have rejected as incredible; and an experienced judge may instantly discover the falsehood of a witness, whose story an inexperienced jury might be inclined to believe. But though the mind, in these cases, seems to have acquired a new power, it is properly to be referred only to experience and observation.

§ 13. Direct and circumstantial evidence. In trials of fact, it will generally be found that the factum probandum is either directly attested by those who speak from their own actual and personal knowledge of its existence, or it is to be inferred from other facts, satisfactorily proved. In the former case, the truth rests upon the second ground before mentioned, namely, our faith in human veracity, sanctioned by experience. In the latter case, it rests on the same ground, with the addition of the experienced connection between the collateral facts thus proved and the fact which is in controversy; constituting the third basis of evidence The facts proved are, in both cases, directly atbefore stated. tested. In the former case, the proof applies immediately to the factum probandum, without any intervening process, and it is therefore called direct or positive testimony. In the latter case, as the proof applies immediately to collateral facts, supposed to have a connection, near or remote, with the fact in controversy, it is termed circumstantial; and sometimes, but not with entire accuracy, presumptive. Thus, if a witness testifies that he saw A inflict a mortal wound on B, of which he instantly died; this is a case of direct evidence; and, giving to the witness the credit to which men are generally entitled, the crime is satisfactorily proved. If a witness testifies that a deceased person was shot with a pistol and the wadding is found to be part of a letter addressed to the prisoner, the residue of which is discovered in his pocket: here the facts themselves are directly attested; but the evidence they afford is termed circumstantial; and from these facts, if unexplained by the prisoner, the jury may, or may not, deduce, or infer, or presume his guilt, according as they are satisfied, or not, of the natural connection between similar facts, and the guilt of the person thus connected with them. In both cases, the veracity of the witness is presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary; but in the latter case there is an additional presumption or inference, founded on the known usual connection between the facts proved, and the guilt of the party implicated. This operation of the mind, which is more complex and difficult in the latter case, has caused the evidence afforded by circumstances to be termed presumptive evidence; though, in truth, the operation is similar in both cases. (a)

(a) For in every case the jury are required to make one inference, at least, viz., that the proposition which the witness has stated is true. Thus, if the question is, whether A stole a horse and a witness deposes that A was found in possession of it the night after it was missed, the evidence in the case is the statement of the witness, and the jury infers from that statement that the horse was so found. Or if the question is, whether A killed B, and a witness deposes that he saw A give B a violent blow with a clnb, and B fall dead at A's feet, the jury infers from the evidence, viz., the statement of the witness, that the allegations in the indictment which correspond to that statement are true. Stephen, General View of Criminal Law, c. vii. § iii; Com. v. Harman, 4 Pa. St. 269; Appleton, C. J., in Read's Case. Sup. Ct. Me. 1874, 1 Cent. L. J. 219. Circumstantial evidence depends for its admissibility upon two elements:—

1. There must be some fact or facts proved by direct evidence, just as any other facts in the case are proved, upon which the inference is to be based. No inference, therefore, which is itself based upon another inference will be admitted as circumstantial evidence. Thus, when an action for deceit was brought, and the plaintiff alleged that the defendant, an oil-mining company, made certain false representa-tions as to the value of its stock, and the plaintiff, relying on these representations, bought the stock, the evidence showed that the company had made certain false statements in its certificate of organization. The plaintiff's counsel contended that the jury might presume that the plaintiff had seen this certificate, and also presume that he relied on its statements when he bought the stock. The Court, however, held that the inference could not be supported, saying, "Not a word of testimony appears to have been given by the plaintiff to show that he was induced to purchase any stock in the Olive Branch Oil Company by direct representation true or untrue, by any person. This essential is attempted to be supplied with presumptions, one to stand as a postulate and the other as the inference. This is not admissible." McAleer v. McMurray, 58 Pa. St.

126. So, in Wheelton v. Hardisty, 8 El. & Bl. 232, it was held that the fact that an insurance company published a prospectus containing representations that the policies would be voidable only for fraud was not evidence that the plaintiff had seen the prospectus and had relied on it in making his insurance. So, in Douglass v. Mitchell's Executor, 35 Pa. St. 440, it was held, that when fraud is to be inferred from certain facts, those facts must be established by direct evidence, and must not be themselves inferences from other facts. To the same effect are Manning v. John Hancock Insurance Company, 100 U. S. 693; United States v. Ross, 92 U. S. 281; Tanner v. Hughes, 53 Pa. St. 289; Philadelphia, &c. R. R. Co. v. Henrice, 92 Pa. St. 431; Starkie, Evid. p. 80.

The degree of proof, moreover, required for the circumstances on which the inference is based, has been said to be the same as would be required for direct evidence, e. g. in a criminal case such circumstances must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. People v. Ah Chung, 54 Cal. 398. See Cam. 2. Debarty. 137 Mess. 245

People v. Ah Chung, 54 Cal. 398. See Com. v. Doherty, 137 Mass. 245.

2. The inference which is based upon the facts so proved must be a clear and strong logical inference, an open and visible connection between the facts proved and the proposition to be proved. The Court decides whether the inference is of such a character, and upon its decision the admissibility of the facts offered depends. No rule can be laid down on this subject, and the Courts will decide each case on its own circumstances, guided by the principle that the law does not permit a decision to be made on remote inferences, or on such evidence that the verdict of the jury would be a "mere guess." Manning v. Insurance Company, 100 U. S. 693; Donglass v. Mitchell, 35 Pa. St. 444; Simms v. State, 10 Tex. App. 131; Durrett v. State, 62 Ala, 434. Cf. Crusell's Case, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 1; Best, Evid.

As regards the weight of such evidence when admitted, this question is left, with one restriction, entirely to the jury, just as the question of the weight of direct testimony is left to them. The jury are not bound to believe any witness, nor are they

§ 13 a. Degrees of circumstantial evidence. Circumstantial evidence is of two kinds, namely, certain, or that from which the conclusion in question necessarily follows; and uncertain, or that from which the conclusion does not necessarily follow, but is probable only, and is obtained by process of reasoning. Thus, if the body of a person of mature age is found dead, with a recent mortal wound, and the mark of a bloody left hand is upon the left arm, it may well be concluded that the person once lived, and that another person was present at or since the time when the wound was inflicted. So far the conclusion is certain; and bound to be convinced by any given amount of circumstantial evidence. No doubt there are reasons why certain kinds or amounts of circumstantial evidence vary greatly in probative force, but there is no rule of law requiring a jury to convict on the stronger evidence, or to acquit on the weaker. The whole subject is left entirely in their hands. Stephen, General View of Criminal Law, pp. 249, 251; Rea v. State, 8 Lea (Tenn.), 356; State v. Norwood, 74 N. C. 247. Neither is there any rule of law in regard to the weight to be given by the jury to circumstantial evidence when it is opposed to direct evidence. There is no sort of difference in the kind of probative force of the different kinds of evidence, whether the comparison is made between weak cases or strong ones. Stephen, General View of Criminal Law, pp. 273, 274. The jury are at liberty to believe whatever evidence seems to them credible (People v. Morrow, 9 Pac. C. L. J. 99); and the circumstantial evidence may outweigh the direct evidence. Bowie v. Maddox, 29 Ga. 285. Cf. Ridley's Adm'rs v. Ridley, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 323. Even where there is but one witness on each side and there is a conflict between their evidence, one witness testifying to a fact, and the other witness, being of equal means of knowledge and credibility, testifying in direct contradiction thereof, it is not the correct rule for the court to in-struct the jury that there is no prepon-derance of evidence, and that the party upon whom the burden of proof lies must fail for the lack of such preponderance, for the jury are at liberty to take into account and weigh all the facts and circumstances introduced in evidence in connection with the testimony of the two witnesses, and determine whether or not the party having the burden of proof has obtained a preponderance of credibility upon all the testimony in the case. The jury are the sole judges of the weight to be given to all the evidence introduced after consideration, and the instruction of the court should not infringe upon this rule, but leave the jury free and untrammelled to determine for themselves the weight of all the evidence and upon which side of the case the evidence may preponderate. Deland v. Dixon Nat. Bank, 111 Ill. 327. The single restriction put upon the jury by the law in regard to their verdict, is the one which governs also cases of direct testimony, and is that, (1) in civil cases their verdict should not be for the party on whom lies the burden of proof unless the preponderance of the evidence is in his favor; and (2) in criminal cases they must not convict unless they are convinced of the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt. See Infra, § 13 a, note α .

R. 1 App. Cases, 278, per Lord Chancellor. And see the charge of Appleton, C. J., in Read's Case, 1 Cent. Law Journ. 219. The comparative value of circumstantial evidence in general is well enoughly in the following. eral is well summed up in the following paragraph:

"Perhaps strong circumstantial evidence, in cases of crimes committed for the most part in secret, is the most satisfactory of any from which to draw the conclusion of guilt; for men may be seduced to perjury by many base motives, to which the secret nature of the offence may sometimes afford a temptation; but it can scarcely happen that many circumstances, especially if they be such over which the accuser could have no control, forming altogether the links of a transaction, should all unfortunately concur to fix the presumption of guilt on an individual; and yet such a conclusion be erroneous." 1 East, P. C. c. 5, § 9.

the jury would be bound by their oaths to find accordingly. But whether the death was caused by suicide or by murder, and whether the mark of the bloody hand was that of the assassin, or of a friend who attempted, though too late, to afford relief, or to prevent the crime, is a conclusion which does not necessarily follow from the facts proved, but is obtained, from these and other circumstances, by probable deduction. The conclusion, in the latter case, may be more or less satisfactory or stringent, according to the circumstances. In civil cases, where the mischief of an erroneous conclusion is not deemed remediless, it is not necessary that the minds of the jurors be freed from all doubt; it is their duty to decide in favor of the party on whose side the weight of evidence preponderates, and according to the reasonable probability of truth. But in criminal cases, because of the more serious and irreparable nature of the consequences of a wrong decision, the jurors are required to be satisfied, beyond any reasonable doubt, of the guilt of the accused, or it is their duty to acquit him; the charge not being proved by that higher degree of evidence which the law demands. (a) In civil cases, it is sufficient if the evidence, on the whole, agrees with and supports the hypothesis which it is adduced to prove; but in criminal cases it must exclude every other hypothesis but that

(a) The phrase "reasonable doubt," as it is used in criminal cases, and the general charge of the court on this point, has been the subject of much discussion. The general test of the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence is this: "In order to justify the inference of legal guilt from circumstantial evidence, the existence of the inculpatory facts must be absolutely incompatible with the innocence of the accused, and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt." Wills, Circumstantial Evidence, p. 149. But the law does not attempt to tell the juror what amount or kind of evidence ought to produce such a belief in his mind, nor what kind of doubt is reasonable. To do so, to try to give a specific meaning to the word "reasonable" is, in the vivid words of Sir Fitz-James Stephen, "trying to count what is not number, and to measure what is not space." General View of Criminal Law, p. 262; Miles v. United States, 103 U. S. 304, p. 312. The ordinary wording of the instruction is, that the jury should be satisfied of the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Miles v. United States, 103 U. S. 304; Com. v. Costley, 118 Mass. 1; Com. v. Harman, 4 Pa. St.

269, 274; Reg. v. White, 4 F. & F. 383, and note. Proof to a "moral certainty" is an equivalent phrase with proof "beyond a reasonable doubt." Com. v. Costley, supra. In this case, Gray, C. J., says: "Proof 'beyond a reasonable doubt' is not beyond all possible or imaginary doubt, but such proof as precludes every reasonable hypothesis, except that which it tends to support. It is proof to a 'moral certainty,' as distinguished from an absolute certainty. As applied to a judicial trial for crime, the two phrases are synonymous and equivalent, each has been used by eminent judges to explain the other, and each signifies such proof as satisfies the judgment and consciences of the jury, as reasonable men, and applying their reason to the evidence before them, that the crime charged has been committed by the defendant, and so satisfies them as to leave no other reasonable conclusion possible." See post, vol. iii. $29; Territory v. Owings, 3 Montana, 137; Mickle v. State, 27 Ala. 20; Faulk v. State, 52 Ala. 415; Beavers v. State, 58 Ind. 530; State v. Maxwell, 42 Iowa, 208; Algheri v. State, 25 Miss. 584; Browning v. State, 33 Id. 47; James v. State, 45 Id. 572; Black v. State, 1 Tex. App. 368.

of the guilt of the party. (b) In both cases, a verdict may well be founded on circumstances alone; and these often lead to a conclusion far more satisfactory than direct evidence can produce.

(b) There seems to be at the present time no exception in the United States to the two rules, (1) that in criminal cases the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, by the proof, and (2) that in civil cases they may decide upon the mere preponderance of evidence. The rule that when a criminal act is alleged in a civil suit, the proof of the criminal act must satisfy the jury beyond a reasonable doubt, has now been abandoned in most States, and the same rule applied to these as to other civil cases. Ellis v. Buzzell, 60 Me. 209; Weston v. Gravlin, 49 Vt. 507; Munson v. Atwood, 30 Conn. 102; Jones v. Greaves, 26 Ohio St. 2; Robinson v. Randall, 82 Ill. 521; Bissell v. West, 35 Ind. 54; Schmidt v. New York, &c. Ins. Co., 1 Gray (Mass.), 529; Gordon v. Parmelee, 15 Id. 413; Burr v. Willson, 22 Minn. 206.

But the rule requiring proof beyond a reasonable doubt is still held in some cases. Barton v. Thompson, 46 lowa, 30; Mott v. Dawson, Id. 533; Polston v. See, 54 Mo. 291. The cases in which such exceptions have been most strongly urged are pleas of wilful burning in insurance cases (see post, vol. ii. § 408), and in libel cases for accusations of crime, where the pleas assert the truth of such accusation. See post, vol. ii. § 426. In England the rule is, that the jury must be satisfied of the commission of a crime beyond a reasonable doubt, if the fact of the commission is directly in issue, whether the question arises in a civil or a criminal case, and the burden of proving that any person has committed a crime or wrongful act is always on the person who asserts such commission. Stephen, Dig. Evid. art. 94.
The reasons why courts do not require proof of the crime beyond reasonable doubt in civil eases, and the bearing of the presumption of innocence in such cases are well stated in the case of Somerset Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Usaw, 112 Pa. St. 89, in which the court says: "In a civil issue, where the life or liberty of the person whose act is sought to be proved is not involved, proof of the act is only pertinent because it is to sustain or defeat a claim for damages or respecting the right to things. When the act imputes a crime, the inculpatory evidence must be sufficient to overcome the exculpatory evidence and the presumption of innocence, otherwise there is no preponderance to establish the fact. That presumption is due every man in every court, and when it is alleged that he has done a dishonest or criminal act, the presumption weighs in his favor. In the civil issue he is not on trial. The judgment is not evidence that he is guilty of crime. The act affirmed is an incident, a fact, to be proved like other pertinent facts. For instance, in this case, had the insured changed the tenancy or occupancy of the premises, without notice to the assurer, proof of the act would have been competent, and the fact established by preponderance of evidence. If a man, by deceit, fraudulently obtains insurance on a building, by like evidence his act may be established to avoid the policy; if he burns the insured building, the same rule of evidence ought to apply when it is proposed to prove the act for like pur-poses." The position of the court in this ease, that the presumption of innocence is to be considered by the jury in determining the question of preponderance of evidence, is unquestionably correct. The same question was raised and discussed in Mead v. Husted, 52 Conn. 56, which case, while affirming the decision of Munson v. Atwood, 30 Conn. 102, that only a preponderance of evidence was necessary in civil cases even though the result im-putes the charge of a felony, held that in that State it ought to be considered still an open question whether as one factor for determining the preponderance of the evidence the jury might consider the pre-sumption of innocence, the Court saying that the ease before them did not require a decision upon that point, and refusing to decide it. See also People v. Briggs, 114 N. Y. 64, and vol. iii. § 29. It is also to be observed that in determining whether or not a preponderance of evidence is suffi-cient, a suit for a penalty, if the suit is in the nature of an action of tort, is regarded as a civil case, and the jury need not be satisfied of the guilt of the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt, but only to the

REAL EVIDENCE.

Another species of evidence is what has been called "real evidence." This is evidence of the thing or object which is produced in court. When, for instance, the condition or appearance of any thing or object is material to the issue, and the thing or object itself is produced in court for the inspection of the tribunal, with proper testimony as to its identity, and, if necessary, to show that it has existed in this State since the time at which the issue in question arose, this object or thing becomes it-self "real evidence" of its condition or This appearance at the time in question. species of evidence has been denominated "real evidence," and was fully considered in a recent case in New Jersey (Gaunt v. State, 50 N. J. L. 491), where the resemblance of a child to the defendant was material to the issue. In that case the child was in court during the trial, the attention of the jury was directed to it as the offspring of the defendant, and the defendant was a witness in the cause; under these circumstances it was held not error for the court to refuse to charge the jury that they must not consider the question of resemblance at all, and that if they did consider it, it must be from the testimony from the mouths of witnesses, and not from their own view. The court discusses this kind of evidence as follows: "Two kind of evidence as follows: "Two questions are presented, first, is the resemblance between the child and the alleged father a relevant matter; and second, if relevant, should it be determined by inspection, or by the testimony of witnesses.

"In considering the first of these questions, viz., as to the relevancy of resemblance as an element of proof, it is clear that testimony of this character must be treated as a class. Thus viewed, whatever opinion may be held as to the illusory nature of such eyidence in cases like the present, there is no question that, as a class, resemblances are admitted wherever relevant. In cases involving handwriting, for instance, it has always been deemed pertinent to have a comparison of hands. Likewise, in sales by samples, in patent cases, in trade-mark and infringement suits, resemblance is of the essence of the proof. Nor can it be said that the tendency of recent applications of this rule has been toward restriction — rather the reverse.

"In the courts of a sister State, - New York, - operas have been performed in court, and comic songs sung; plagiarized papers have been read, and the so-called materialization of spirits exhibited,—all within the scope of the doctrine of the relevancy of resemblance, while in a case now pending in the courts of Pennsylvania, a board of experts have been ordered to inspect a certain contrivance called the Keeley Motor, with a view to the determination of its resemblance or mechanical equivalency to a motor described in plaintiff's partnership bill. Examples of the application of the same rule to family likenesses are not wanting. In the notorious Douglass case (House of Lords, 1769), Lord Mansfield allowed the resemblance of the appellant and his brother to Sir John Stewart and Lady Jane Douglass to be shown, as well as their dissimilarity to those persons, whose children they were supposed to be. While as late as 1871, Lord Chief-Justice Cockburn, in the Tichborne case, held that the resemblance of the claimant to a family daguerreotype of Roger Tichborne was relevant, and intimated that comparison of features between the claimant and the sisters of Arthur Orton would be permitted.

"The extension of this rule to cases of family likeness in bastardy and other suits of alleged parentage, cannot be questioned seriously on principle, the illusory nature of such resemblances rather imposing a duty on the court in conjunction with the admission of the proof, than militating against the relevancy of the inquiry."

In Garvin v. State, 52 Miss. 207, an indictment rested on the ground that the defendant was a colored man. Of this there was no proof, but as the defendant had been before the jury, the court held that their inspection did away with the necessity of proof, saying, "Juries may use their eyes as well as their ears." In Jones v. Jones, 45 Md. 148, 151, the court permitted the jury to judge as to a personal resemblance, but not to hear testimony on that subject, upon the ground that when the parties are before the jury, whatever resemblance there is will be directly apparent; but to permit third persons to give their opinions would be admitting the testimony of experts as to subjects to which expert testimony does not properly apply.

In Iowa, the courts have held, on the question of resemblance of a bastard to its alleged father, that an infant two years old might be exhibited to the jury. State v. Smith, 54 Iowa, 104; while a babe of three months could not be shown; State v. Danforth, 48 Iowa, 43. This discrimination rested upon a notion that so young an infant could not have sufficiently settled resemblance to afford any reasonable proof.

In Risk v. State, 19 Ind. 152, a child

In Risk v. State, 19 Ind. 152, a child of three months was shown to the jury. The court held that as there had been no objection to the evidence, the jury had a right to consider it.

In North Carolina, in the case of State v. Woodruff, 67 N. C. 89, the charge of the court that the resemblance of a bastard to the defendant was relevant, was held good. In the case of Warlick v. White, 76 N. C. 175, the question was whether a girl was of mixed blood. Plaintiff had subpœnaed the girl for the sole purpose of having her seen by the jury. Upon objection being made, the court overruled the offer. Held, on appeal, that the court erred, — that on a question of mixed blood, the offer to exhibit the girl should have been permitted. In Gilmanton v. Ham, 38 N. H. 108,

In Gilmanton v. Ham, 38 N. H. 108, counsel commented upon the resemblance of the child to the defendant, and, upon appeal, the court affirmed his right to do so upon the ground that the matter was relevant and the parties before the jury.

In Finnegan v. Dugan, 14 Allen, 197, the child was in court, and the judge, against the defendant's objection, charged the jury that they might consider whether there was any resemblance between the child and the defendant. In affirming the judgment, the Supreme Court says: "It is a well-known physiological fact that peculiarities of feature and personal traits are often transmitted from parent to child. Taken by itself, proof of such resemblance would be insufficient to establish paternity; but it would be clearly a circumstance to be considered in connection with other facts tending to prove the issue on which the jury are to pass." The same court in Eddy v. Gray, 4 Allen, 435, sustain a ruling rejecting testimony upon the same subject, upon the ground that it did not come within the rule of expert testimony.

In a recent case in Maine, evidence of a similar nature was introduced, and although it was rejected in that case on the ground that the child was too young to have any decided resemblance, yet the court carefully limits the decision to that point, saying: "The only object for which it is claimed that the child was introduced in evidence and viewed by the jury, was to enable them to judge from a comparison of its appearance, complexion, and features with those of the defendant, whether any inference could legitimately be drawn therefrom as to its paternity.

"In a case like this, where the child was a mere infant, such evidence is too vague, uncertain, and fanciful, and if allowed, would establish not only an unwise, but dangerous and uncertain rule of evidence." Clark v. Bradstreet, 80 Mc. 456.

The court in this case admits that in other States such evidence is received, and that on an issue of bastardy, the courts have allowed the jury to judge of likeness by inspection (Gilmanton v. Ham, 38 N. H. 108; Finnegan v. Dugan, 14 Allen, 197; State v. Arnold, 13 Ired. (N. C.) 184; State v. Woodruff, 67 N. C. 59), and commends these decisions so far as the question is one of race or color, on the ground that there are marked distinctions, physical and external, between the different races of mankind, which may enable men of ordinary intelligence and observation to judge whether they are of one race or another.

The objections to this species of evidence have been two-fold; first, on account of its slight probative force, and second, on the ground that in criminal cases it may compel a defendant to furnish evidence against himself. The first objection seems to be directed rather to the weight of testimony than to its relevancy, and the practice is well established in cases where the questions of identity or similarity are raised to allow the jury to judge of the similarity or identity by inspection of the persons or things in court. Gaunt v. State, 50 N. J. L. 491; Clark v. Bradstreet, 80 Me. 456; Louisville, New Alb., &c. R. R. Co. v. Wood, 113 Ind. 548. The second objection seems also to be overcome by the fact that the defendant who, in a criminal case, takes the witness stand, is held to waive his constitutional right not to be required to furnish evidence against himself, and can be cross-examined upon all the points in the case; and the general tendency of the decisions is to hold such real evidence as the defendant supplies by his appearance when on the witness stand as evidence which may be used against him. Thus, in State v. Ah Chuey, 14 Nev. 70, the defendant was required to bare his arm to show a tattoo mark as affecting the question of his identity; and in numerous cases in the South negroes have been produced in court on the question of their color. Jacob's Case, 5 Jones (N. C.), 259; State v. Arnold, 13 Ired. (N. C.) 184; State v. Woodruff, 67 N. C. 89; Warlick v. White, 76 N. C. 175; Garvin v. State, 52 Miss. 207.

Other cases have frequently occurred in which real evidence has been successfully introduced. Thus, in the case of Louisville, New Alb., &c. R.R. Co. v. Wood, supra, it was held that the plaintiff in an accident case might show the condition of the injured member as a species of real evidence of the nature of the injury. In the case of Osborne v. Detroit, 36 Albany Law Journal, 343, it was held not error in an accident case, in which the plaintiff claimed to be paralyzed, for his surgeon to thrust a pin into him in court to show that the paralysis was real. So, also, in Thurman v. Bertram (reported in 20 Alb. L. J. 151), tried in the Exchequer Division of the High Court of Justice in England, where the plaintiff sued for damages for an accident caused by his horse being frightened by an elephant at a show, and the plaintiff's case alleged that the appearance of the elephant was "unsightly and unusual," the elephant was brought into court as real evidence of his appearance. So, in a recent case in Pennsylvania, Johnson v. Com., 115 Pa. St. 395, the district attorney called upon the prisoner to stand up and repeat certain words, &c., in the presence of a witness so that she might identify the voice. The request was promptly acceded to without any objection either by the prisoner himself or his counsel. The Court of Appeals held that the prisoner thus waived the right of objection, but that even if the prisoner had objected, the court was not prepared to say it would be of any avail to the prisoner. "He was not asked, at least compelled, to give evidence against himself." The sole object of the request was to afford a witness, then on the stand, an opportunity of seeing the prisoner and hearing the sound of his voice, so that she, the witness, might the more intelligently identify the prisoner. Other cases which are to the same general effect are: Schroeder v. Chicago, &c. R. R. Co., 47 Iowa, 375; Mulhado v. Brooklyn, &c. R. R. Co., 30 N. Y. 370 (33 Am. R. 540 and note); State v. Wieners, 66 Mo. 13; Indiana Car Co. v. Parker, 100 Ind. 181; Story v. State, 99 Ind. 413; McDonel v. State, 90 Ind. 320; Short v. State, 63 Ind. 376; Beavers v. State, 58 Ind. 530.

OF PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE.

§ 14. Several kinds of presumptions. The general head of Presumptive Evidence is usually divided into two branches; namely, presumptions of law and presumptions of fact. SUMPTIONS OF LAW consist of those rules which, in certain cases, either forbid or dispense with any ulterior inquiry. They are founded, either upon the first principles of justice; or the laws of nature; or the experienced course of human conduct and affairs, and the connection usually found to exist between certain things. The general doctrines of presumptive evidence are not therefore peculiar to municipal law, but are shared by it in common with other departments of science. Thus, the presumption of a malicious intent to kill, from the deliberate use of a deadly weapon, and the presumption of aquatic habits in an animal found with webbed feet, belong to the same philosophy; differing only in the instance, and not in the principle, of its application. The one fact being proved or ascertained, the other, its uniform concomitant, is universally and safely presumed. It is this uniformly experienced connection which leads to its recognition by the law without other proof; the presumption, however, having more or less force, in proportion to the universality of the experience. And this has led to the distribution of presumptions of law into two classes; namely, conclusive and disputable.

§ 15. Conclusive presumptions. Conclusive, or, as they are elsewhere termed, imperative, or absolute presumptions of law, are rules determining the quantity of evidence requisite for the support of any particular averment, which is not permitted to be overcome by any proof that the fact is otherwise. They consist chiefly of those cases in which the long-experienced connection, before alluded to, has been found so general and uniform as to render it expedient for the common good, that this connection should be taken to be inseparable and universal. They have been adopted by common consent, from motives of public policy, for the sake of greater certainty, and the promotion of peace and quiet in the community; and therefore it is, that all corroborating evidence is dispensed with, and all opposing evidence is forbidden.1

- § 16. By statute. Sometimes this common consent is expressly declared, through the medium of the legislature, in statutes. Thus, by the statutes of limitation, where a debt has been created by simple contract, and has not been distinctly recognized, within six years, as a subsisting obligation, no action can be maintained to recover it; that is, it is conclusively presumed to have been paid. A trespass, after the lapse of the same period, is, in like manner, conclusively presumed to have been satisfied. So the possession of land, for the length of time mentioned in the statutes of limitation, under a claim of absolute title and ownership, constitutes, against all persons but the sovereign, a conclusive presumption of a valid grant.2
- § 17. By the common law. In other cases, the common consent, by which this class of legal presumptions is established, is declared through the medium of the judicial tribunals, it being the common law of the land; both being alike respected, as authoritative declarations of an imperative rule of law, against the operation of which no averment or evidence is received. Thus, the uninterrupted enjoyment of an incorporeal hereditament, for a period beyond the memory of man, is held to furnish a conclusive presumption of a prior grant of that which has been so This is termed a title by prescription. 3 (a)

² This period has been limited differently, at different times; but, for the last fifty years, it has been shortened at succeeding revisions of the law, both in England and the United States. By Stat. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27, all real actions are barred after twenty years from the time when the right of action accrued. And this period is adopted in most of the United States, though in some of the States it is reduced to adopted in most of the United States, though in some of the States it is recorded to seven years, while in others it is prolonged to fifty. See 3 Cruise's Dig. tit. 31, c. 2, the synopsis of Limitations at the end of the chapter (Greenleaf's ed.). See also 4 Kent, Comm. 183, note (a). The same period in regard to the title to real property, or, as some construe it, only to the profits of the land, is adopted in the Hindu Law. See Macnaghten's Elements of Hindu Law, vol. i. p. 201.

3 Cruise's Dig. 430, 431 (Greenleaf's ed.). "Prescriptio est titulus, ex usu et tempore substantiam capiens, ab authoritate legis." Co. Litt. 113 a. What length of time constitutes this period of legal memory has been purch discussed among lawyers.

2 This period has been limited differently, at different times; but for the last fifty enjoyment has been not only uninterrupted, but exclusive and adverse in its character, for the period of twenty years, this also has been held, at common law, as a conclusive presumption of title.2 There is no difference, in principle, whether the subject be a corporcal or an incorporcal hereditament; a grant of land may as well be presumed as a grant of a fishery, or a common, or a way.3 But, in regard to the effect of possession alone for a period of time, unaccompanied by other evidence, as affording a presumption of title, a difference is introduced, by reason of the statute of limitations, between corporeal subjects, such as lands and tenements, and things incorporeal; and it has been held, that a grant of lands, conferring an entire title, cannot be presumed from mere possession alone, for any length of time short of that prescribed by the statute of limitations. reason is, that, with respect to corporeal hereditaments, the statute has made all the provisions which the law deems necessary for quieting possessions; and has thereby taken these eases out of the operation of the common law. The possession of lands, however, for a shorter period, when coupled with other eircumstances indicative of ownership, may justify a jury in finding a grant; but such cases do not fall within this class of presumptions.4

In this country, the courts are inclined to adopt the periods mentioned in the statutes of limitation, in all cases analogous in principle. Coolidge v. Learned, 8 Pick. 504; Melvin v. Whiting, 10 Pick. 295; Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. 110. In England, it is settled by Stat. 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 71, by which the period of legal memory has been limited as follows: In cases of rights of common or other benefits arising out of lands, except tithes, rents, and services, prima facie to thirty years; and conclusively to sixty years, unless proved to have been held by consent, expressed by deed or other writing; in cases of aquatic rights, ways, and other easements, prima facie to twenty years; and conclusively to forty years, unless proved in like manner, by written evidence, to have been enjoyed by consent of the owner; and, in cases of lights, conclusively to twenty years, unless proved in like manner, to have been enjoyed by consent. In the Roman Law, prescriptions were of two kinds,—cxtinctive and aequisitive. The former referred to rights of action, which, for the most part, were barred by the lapse of thirty years. The latter had regard to the mode of acquiring property by long and uninterrupted possession; and this, in the case of immovable or real property, was limited, inter præsentes, to ten years, and, inter absentes, to twenty property by long and uninterrupted possession; and this, in the case of immovable or real property, was limited, inter præsentes, to ten years, and, inter absentes, to twenty years. The student will find this doctrine fully discussed in Mackeldey's Compendium of Modern Civil Law, vol. i. pp. 200–205, 290, et seq. (Amer. ed.) with the learned notes of Dr. Kaufman. - § 18. Natural consequences intended. Thus, also, a sane man it conclusively presumed to contemplate the natural and probable consequences of his own acts; and, therefore, the intent to murder is conclusively inferred from the deliberate use of a deadly weapon. 1(a) So the deliberate publication of calumny,
- 1 Russ. on Crimes, 658-660; Rex v. Dixon, 3 M. & S. 15; 1 Hale, P. C. 440, 441; Britton, 50, § 6. But if death does not ensue till a year and a day (that is, a full year) after the stroke, it is conclusively presumed that the stroke was not the sole cause of the death, and it is not murder. 4 Bl. Comm. 197; Glassford on Evid. 592. The doctrine of presumptive evidence was familiar to the Mosaic Code, even to the letter of the principle stated in the text. Thus, it is laid down in record to the The doctrine of presumptive evidence was familiar to the Mosaic Code, even to the letter of the principle stated in the text. Thus, it is laid down in regard to the manslayer, that "if he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die;" or, "if he smite him with throwing a stone wherewith he may die, and he die;" or, "if he smite him with a hand-weapon of steel wherewith he may die, and he die, he is a murderer." See Numb. xxxv. 16, 17. Here, every instrument of iron is conclusively taken to be a deadly weapon; and the use of any such weapon raises a conclusive presumption of malice. The same presumption arose from lying in ambush, and thence destroying another. Id. v. 20. But, in other cases, the existence of malice was to be proved, as one of the facts in the case; and, in the absence of malice, the offence was reduced to the degree of manslaughter, as at the common law. Id. v. 22, 23. This very reasonable distinction seems to have been unknown to the Gentoo Code, which demands life for life in all cases, except where the culprit is a Brahmin. "If a man deprives another of life, the magistrate shall deprive that person of life." Halhed's Gentoo Laws, book 16, § 1, p. 233. Formerly, if the mother of an illegitimate child, recently born and found dead, concealed the fact of its birth and death, it was conclusively presumed that she murdered it. Stat. 21 Jac. I. c. 37; probably copied from a similar edict of Hen. II. of France, cited by Domat. But this unreasonable and barbarous rule is now rescinded, both in England and America.

 The subject of implied malice, from the unexplained fact of killing with a lethal weapon was fully discussed in Commonwealth v. York, 9 Met. 103, upon a difference of opinion among the learned judges, and the rule there laid down, in favor of the inference, was reaffirmed in Commonwealth v. Webster. 5 Cush. 305. This very reasonable distinction seems to have been unknown to the Gentoo Code, inference, was reaffirmed in Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. 305.

(a) In Com. v. Hawkins, 3 Gray (Mass.), 463, Chief Justice Shaw said that the doctrine of York's Case is that, where the killing is proved to have been committed by the defendant, and nothing further is shown, the presumption of law is that it was malicious, and an act of murder, and that it was inapplicable to a case when the circumstances attending the homicide were fully shown by the evidence; that, in such a case, the homicide being conceded, and no excuse being shown, it was either murder or manslaughter, and that the jury, upon all the circumstances, must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that it was done with malice, before they could find the defendant guilty of murder. This qualification of the rule in York's Case limits the application of the rule very much, for in very few cases will the killing by the defendant be the only thing shown. The circumstances in every case will tend to prove or to disprove malice, which then becomes a question of fact to be decided by the jury. This view of the rule is in accord with Hawthorne v. State, 58 Miss. 778; State v. Patterson, 45 Vt.

308; State v. McDonnell, 32 Id. 491; 308; State v. McDonnell, 32 Id. 491; Brown v. State, 4 Tex. App. 275; Whart. Homicide, §§ 669, 671; State v. Smith, 77 N. C. 488; State v. Knight, 43 Me. 12; Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 164; Thomas v. People, 67 Id. 218. Cf. Com. v. McKie, 1 Gray (Mass.), 61. In Kentucky (Farris v. Com. 14 Bush (Ky.), 362) and Louisiana (State v. Swayze, 30 La. An. Pt. II. 1823; State v. Trivas, 32 La. An. 1086), it is said that there is no such presumption as that stated there is no such presumption as that stated in York's Case. The presumption is in any event rebuttable, however, and it may be that it will be rebutted by the evidence for the prosecution. If so, no evidence need be put in by the defendant on this point. If not, he must introduce evidence to rebut the presumption, or it will become conclusive. State v. Patterson, and cases

On indictments for malicious mischief, wilful injuries, and similar offences, where malice, i. e. a spirit of wanton cruelty or wicked revenge, is a necessary ingredient in the offence, this will have to be proved, unless the unlawful act which constitutes which the publisher knows to be false, or has no reason to believe to be true, raises a conclusive presumption of malice. 2 (b) So the neglect of a party to appear and answer to process, legally commenced in a court of competent jurisdiction, he having been duly served therewith and summoned, is taken conclusively against him as a confession of the matter charged.3

§ 19. Records presumed correct. Conclusive presumptions are also made in favor of judicial proceedings. Thus the records of a court of justice are presumed to have been correctly made; a party to the record is presumed to have been interested in the suit; 2 and after verdict, it will be presumed that those facts. without proof of which the verdict could not have been found, were proved, though they are not expressly and distinctly alleged in the record; provided it contains terms sufficiently general to comprehend them in fair and reasonable intendment. 3 (a) The presumption will also be made, after twenty years, in favor of every judicial tribunal acting within its jurisdiction, that all persons concerned had due notice of its proceedings.⁴ A like presumption is also sometimes drawn from the solemnity of the act done, though not done in court. Thus a bond or other specialty is presumed to have been made upon good consideration, as long as the instrument remains unimpeached.⁵

§ 20. Presumption from lapse of time, and from the act done. To this class of legal presumptions may be referred one of the applications of the rule, "Ex diuturnitate temporis omnia præsumuntur ritè et solenniter esse acta;" namely, that which relates to transactions, which are not of record, the proper evidence of which, after the lapse of a little time, it is often impossible, or extremely difficult to produce. The rule itself is nothing more than the principle of the statutes of limitation, expressed in a different form, and applied to other subjects. Thus, where an authority is given by law to executors, administrators, guardians, or other officers to make sales of lands, upon being duly licensed by the courts, and they are required to advertise the sales in a particular manner, and to observe other formalities in their proceedings; the lapse of sufficient time (which in most cases is fixed at thirty years), 1 raises a conclusive presumption that all the legal formalities of the sale were observed. (a) The been called, on the application of certain persons representing themselves to be proprietors, it was held that there was no legal presumption that the petitioners for the meeting were proprietors, however the rule might be as to ancient transactions, but that proof of some kind to show the fact that they were proprietors must be adduced to sustain the issue. Stevens v. Taft, 3 Gray (Mass.), 487. Where the evidence fails to show affirmatively that an administrator's bond was approved in writing by the judge of probate, and the contrary does not appear, — if the case discloses that all the other necessary steps were taken with strictness and

¹ See Pejepscot Prop'rs v. Ransom, 14 Mass. 145; Blossom v. Cannon, Id. 177; Colman v. Anderson, 10 Mass. 105. In some cases, twenty years has been held sufficient. As, in favor of the acts of sheriffs. Drouet v. Rice, 2 Rob. (La.) 374. So, after partition of lands by an incorporated land company, and a several possession, accordingly, for twenty years, it was presumed that its meetings were duly notified. Society, &c. v. Young, 2 N. H. 310; Williams v. Eyton, 4 H. & N. 357; s. c. 5 Jur. N. s. 770.

⁽a) These presumptions become conclusive only when no proof is offered to oppose them, or a long time has elapsed since the transaction. In any other case they are only rebuttable presumptions. See post, § 38 a. For instances of such presumptions, see King v. Little, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 436; Freeman v. Thayer, 33 Me. 76; Cobleigh v. Young, 15 N. H. 493; Freeholders of Hudson Co. v. State, 4 Zabr. (N. J.) 718; State v. Lewis, 2 Id. 564; Allegheny v. Nelson, 25 Pa. St. 332; Plank-road Co. v. Bruce, 6 Md. 457; Emmons v. Oldham, 12 Tex. 18. Where, nine years before the commencement of the suit, a meeting of a proprietary had license to sell, as well as the official character of the party, being provable by record or judicial registration, must in general be so proved; and the deed is also to be proved in the usual manner; it is only the intermediate proceedings that are presumed. "Probatis extremis, præsumuntur media." The reason of this rule is found in the great probability, that the necessary intermediate proceedings were all regularly had, resulting from the lapse of so long a period of time, and the acquiescence of the parties adversely interested; and in the great uncertainty of titles, as well as the other public mischiefs, which would result, if strict proof were required of facts so transitory in their nature, and the evidence of which is so seldom preserved with care. Hence, it does not extend to records and public documents, which are supposed always to remain in the custody of the officers charged with their preservation, and which, therefore, must be proved, or their loss accounted for, and supplied by secondary evidence.³ Neither does the rule apply to cases of prescription.⁴

§ 21. Ancient instruments presumed to be genuine. The same principle applies to the proof of the execution of ancient deeds and wills. Where these instruments are more than thirty years old, and are unblemished by any alterations, they are said to prove themselves; the bare production thereof is sufficient: the subscribing witnesses being presumed to be dead. This presumption, so far as this rule of evidence is concerned, is not affected by proof that the witnesses are living. 1 (a) But it must appear that the instrument comes from such custody as to afford a reasonable presumption in favor of its genuineness; and that it is otherwise free from just grounds of suspicion; 2 and, in the case of a bond for the payment of money, there must be some indorsement of interest or other mark of genuineness, within the thirty years, to entitle it to be read.3 Whether, if the deed be a conveyance of real estate, the party is bound first to show some acts of possession under it, is a point not perfectly clear upon the authorities; but the weight of opinion seems in the negative, as will hereafter be more fully explained.4 But after an undisturbed possession for thirty years, of any property, real or personal, it is too late to question the authority of the agent, who has undertaken to convey it, unless his authority was by matter of record.

§ 22. Presumption from acts and recitals in deeds. Estoppel. Estoppels may be ranked in this class of presumptions. A man is said to be estopped, when he has done some act which the policy of the law will not permit him to gainsay or deny. The law of estoppel is not so unjust or absurd as it has been too much the custom to represent. (a) Its foundation is laid in the obligation which every man is under to speak and act according to the truth of the case, and in the policy of the law, to prevent the great mischiefs resulting from uncertainty, confusion, and want of confidence in the intercourse of men, if they were permitted to deny that which they have deliberately and solemnly asserted and received as true. If it be a recital of facts in a deed, there is implied a solemn engagement that the facts are so as they are recited. The doctrine of estoppels has, however, been guarded with great strictness; not because the party enforcing it necessarily wishes to exclude the truth,—for it is rather to be supposed that that is true which the opposite party has already solemnly recited,—but because the estoppel may exclude the truth. Hence, estoppels must be certain to every intent; for no one shall be denied setting up the truth, unless

§ 23. Same subject. In regard to recitals in deeds, the general rule is that all parties to a deed are bound by the recitals therein, which operates as an estoppel, working on the interest in the land, if it be a deed of conveyance and binding both parties and privies; privies in blood, privies in estate, and privies in law. Between such parties and privies, the deed or other matter recited needs not at any time be otherwise proved, the recital of it in the subsequent deed being conclusive. It is not offered as secondary, but as primary evidence, which cannot be averred against, and which forms a muniment of title. Thus, the recital of a lease, in a deed of release, is conclusive evidence of the existence of the lease against the parties, and all others claiming under them in privity of estate.2

the release comes in question, there the recital of the lease in such a release is not per se evidence of the existence of the lease. But if the existence and loss of the lease be established by other evidence, there the recital is admissible, as secondary proof, in the absence of more perfect evidence, to establish the contents of the lease; and if the transaction be an ancient one, and the possession has been long held under such release, and is not otherwise to be accounted for, there the recital will of itself, under such circumstances, materially fortify the presumption, from lapse of time and length of possession, of the original existence of the lease. Leases, like other deeds and grants, may be presumed from long possession, which cannot otherwise be explained; and under such circumstances, a recital of the fact of such a lease in an old deed is certainly far stronger presumptive proof in favor of such possession under title, than the naked presumption arising from a mere unexplained possession. Such is the general result of the doctrine to be found in the best elementary writers on the subject of evidence. It may not, however, be unimportant to examine a few of the authorities in support of the doctrine on which we rely. The cases of Marchioness of Annandale v. Harris, 2 P. Wms. 432, and Shelley v. Wright, Willes, 9, are sufficiently direct as to the operation of recitals by way of estoppel between the parties. In Ford v. Grey, 1 Salk. 285, one of the points ruled was 'that a recital of a lease in a deed of release is good evidence of such lease against the releasor, and those who claim under him; but, we have the others, it is not without recital that there were such a deal and it we leater. as to others, it is not, without proving that there was such a deed, and it was lost or destroyed.' The same case is reported in 6 Mod. 44, where it is said that it was ruled, 'that the recital of a lease in a deed of release is good evidence against the releasor, and those that claim under him.' It is then stated, that 'a fine was produced, but no deed declaring the uses; but a deed was offered in evidence, which did recite a deed of limitation of the uses, and the question was, whether that [recital] was evidence; and the court said, that the bare recital was not evidence; but that, if it could be proved that such a deed had been [executed], and [is] lost it would do if it were recited in another.' This was, doubtless, the same point asserted in the latter clause of the report in Salkeld; and, thus explained, it is perfectly consistent with the statement in Salkeld; and must be referred to a case where the recital was offered as evidence against a stranger. In any other point of view, it would be inconsistent with the preceding propositions, as well as with the cases in 2 P. Williams and Willes. In Trevivan v. Lawrance, 1 Salk. 276, the court held, that the parties and all claiming under them were estopped from asserting that a judgment, sued against the party as of Trinity term, was not of that term, but of another term; that very point having arisen and been decided against the party upon a scire fucias on the judgment. But the court there held (what is very material to the present purpose), that, 'if a man of limitation of the uses, and the question was, whether that [recital] was evidence; the court there held (what is very material to the present purpose), that, 'if a man make a lease by indenture of D in which he hath nothing, and afterwards purchases D in fee, and afterwards bargains and sells it to A and his heirs, A shall be bound by this estoppel; and, that where an estoppel works on the interest of the lands, it runs with the land into whose hands soever the land comes; and an ejectment is maintainable upon the mere estoppel. This decision is important in several respects. In the first place, it shows that an estoppel may arise by implication from a grant, that the party hath an estate in the land, which he may convey, and he shall be estopped to deny it. In the next place, it shows that such estoppel binds all persons claiming the same land, not only under the same deed, but under any subsequent conveyance from the same party; that is to say, it binds not merely privies in blood, but privies in estate, as subsequent grantees and aliences. In the next place, it shows that an estoppel, which (as the phrase is) works on the interest of the land, runs with it, into whosesoever hands the land comes. The same doctrine is recognized by Lord Chief Baron Comyns, in his Digest, Estoppel, B & E, 10. In the latter place (E, 10) he puts the case more strongly; for he asserts, that the estoppel binds, even though all the facts are found in a special verdict. 'But,' says he, and he relies on his own authority, 'where an estoppel binds the estate and converts it to an interest, the court will adjudge accordingly. As if A leases land to B for six years, in which he has nothing, and then purchases a lease of the same land for twenty-one years, and afterwards leases to C for tren years, and all this is found by a verdict; the court will adjudge the lease to B good, though it be so only by conclusion.' A doctrine similar in principle was asserted in this court, in Terrett v. Taylor, 9 Cranch, 52. The distinction, then, which was urged at the bar, that an estoppel of this sort binds those claiming under granted. But this rule does not apply to a grantor acting officially, as a public agent or trustee. 1 A covenant of warranty also estops the grantor from setting up an after-acquired title against the grantee, for it is a perpetually operating covenant; 2 (a) but he is not thus estopped by a covenant, that he is seised in fee and has good right to convey; for any seisin in fact, though by wrong, is sufficient to satisfy this covenant, its import being merely this, that he has the seisin in fact, at the time of con-

the same deed, but not those claiming by a subsequent deed under the same party, is not well founded. All privies in estate by a subsequent deed are bound in the same manner as privies in blood; and so, indeed, is the doctrine of Comyns' Digest, Estopmanner as prives in blood; and so, indeed, is the doctrine of Comyns Digest, Estoppel B, and in Co. Lit. 352 a. We may now pass to a short review of some of the American cases on this subject. Denn v. Cornell, 3 Johns. Cas. 174, is strongly in point. There, Lieutenant-governor Colden, in 1775, made his will, and in it recited that he had conveyed to his son David his lands in the township of Flushing, and he then devised his other estate to his sons and daughters, &c. Afterwards, David's estate was confiscated under the act of attainder, and the defendant in ejectment claimed under that confiscation and deduced his title from the State. No deed of the claimed under that confiscation, and deduced his title from the State. No deed of the Flushing estate (the land in controversy) was proved from the father; and the heir at law sought to recover on that ground. But the court held that the recital in the will, that the testator had conveyed the estate to David, was an estoppel of the heir to deny that fact, and bound the estate. In this case, the estoppel was set up by the tenant claiming under the State, as an estoppel running with the land. If the State or its grantee might set up the estoppel in favor of their title, then, as estoppels are reciprograntee might set up the estopped in layor of their title, then, as estopped are reciprocal, and bind both parties, it might have been set up against the State or its grantee. It has been said at the bar, that the estate is not bound by estopped by any recital in a deed. That may be so where the recital is in his own grants or patents, for they are deemed to be made upon suggestion of the grantee. (But see Commonwealth v. Pejepscot Proprietors, 10 Mass. 155.) But where the State claims title under the deed, or other solemn acts of third persons, it takes cum onere, and subject to all the estopped such as a superior with the fittle over extensive in the same ways other priviles in estate. In Penrose v. Griffith, 4 Binn. 231, it was held that recitals in a patent of the Commonwealth were evidence against it, but not against persons claiming by a title paramount from the Commonwealth. The court there said, that the rule of law is that a deed containing a recital of another deed is evidence of the recited deed against the grantor, and all persons claiming by title derived from him subsequently. The reason of the rule is, that the recital amounts to the confession of the party; and that confession is evidence against himself, and those who stand in his place. But such confession can be no evidence against strangers. The same doctrine was acted upon and confirmed by the same court, in Garwood v. Dennis, 4 Binn. 314. In that case, the court further held that a recital in another deed was evidence against strangers, where the deed was ancient and the possession was consistent with the deed. That case also had the peculiarity belonging to the present, that the possession was of a middle nature; that is, it might not have been held solely in consequence of the deed, for the party had another title: but there never was any possession against it. There was a double title, and the question was, to which the possession might be attributable. The court thought that, a suitable foundation of the original existence and loss of the recited deed being laid in the evidence, the recital in the deed was good corroborative evidence, even against strangers. And other authorities certainly warrant this decision."

veyance, and thereby is qualified to transfer the estate to the grantee. 4 (b) Nor is a feme covert estopped, by her deed of conveyance, from claiming the land by a title subsequently acquired; for she cannot bind herself personally by any covenant. 5 (c) Neither is one who has purchased land in his own name, for the benefit of another, which he has afterwards conveyed by deed to his employer, estopped by such deed, from claiming the land by an elder and after-acquired title. 6 Nor is the heir estopped from questioning the validity of his ancestor's deed, as a fraud against an express statute. The grantee, or lessee, in a deed-poll, is not, in general, estopped from gainsaying anything mentioned in the deed; for it is the deed of the grantor or lessor only; yet if such grantee or lessee claims title under the deed, he is thereby estopped to deny the title of the grantor.8

§ 25. Same subject. It was an early rule of feudal policy, that the tenant should not be permitted to deny the title of the lord, from whom he had received investiture, and whose liegeman he had become; but, as long as that relation existed, the title of the lord was conclusively presumed against the tenant, to be perfect and valid. And though the feudal reasons of the rule have long since ceased, yet other reasons of public policy have arisen in their place, thereby preserving the rule in its original vigor. A tenant, therefore, by indenture, is not permitted, at this day, to deny the title of his lessor, while the relation thus created subsists. It is of the essence of the contract under which he claims, that the paramount ownership of the lessor shall be acknowledged during the continuance of the lease, and that possession shall be surrendered at its expiration. He could not controvert this title without breaking the faith which he had pledged. 1 (a) But this doctrine does not apply with the same force, and to the same extent between other parties, such as releasor and releasee, where the latter has not received possession from the former. In such cases, where the party already in possession of land, under a claim of title by deed, purchases peace and quietness of enjoyment, by the mere extinction of a hostile claim by a release, without covenants of title, he is not estopped from denying the validity of the title, which he has thus far extinguished.² Neither is this rule applied in the case of a lease already expired; provided the tenant has either quitted the possession, or has submitted to the title of a new landlord;3 nor is it applied to the case of a tenant, who has been ousted or evicted by a title paramount; or who has been drawn into the contract by the fraud or misrepresentation of the lessor, and has, in fact, derived no benefit from the possession of the land. 4 Nor is a defendant in ejectment estopped from showing that the party. under whom the lessor claims, had no title when he conveyed to the lessor, although the defendant himself claims from the same party, if it be by a subsequent conveyance.5

This rule in regard to the § 26. Restricted to particulars. conclusive effect of recitals in deeds is restricted to the recital of things in particular, as being in existence at the time of the execution of the deed; and does not extend to the mention of things in general terms. Therefore, if one be bound in a bond, conditioned to perform the covenants in a certain indenture, or to pay the money mentioned in a certain recognizance, he shall not be permitted to say that there was no such indenture or recognizance. But if the bond be conditioned, that the obligor shall perform all the agreements set down by A, or carry away all the marl in a certain close, he is not estopped by this general condition from saying, that no agreement was set down by A, or that there was no marl in the close. Neither does this doctrine apply to that which is mere description in the deed, and not an essential averment: such as the quantity of land; its nature, whether arable or meadow; the number of tons in a vessel chartered by the ton; or the like; for these are but incidental and

§ 27. Admissions. In addition to estoppels by deed, there are two classes of admissions which fall under this head of conclusive presumptions of law; namely, solemn admissions, or admissions in judicio, which have been solemnly made in the course of judicial proceedings, either expressly, and as a substitute for proof of the fact, or tacitly, by pleading; and unsolemn admissions, extra judicium, which have been acted upon, or have been made to influence the conduct of others, or to derive some advantage

But the recital is not even prima facie evidence of payment when the deed is attacked as fraudulent by creditors of the grantor, Bolton v. Jacks, 6 Robt. (N. Y.) 166; Whittaker v. Garnett, 3 Bush (Ky.), 402.

See Blanchard v. Ellis, 1 Gray (Mass.), 195. And the grantor's privies in estate are also estopped, though the grantor had no title when he conveyed. White v. Patten, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 324. But such a covenant does not estop the grantor from claiming a way of necessity over the land granted. Brigham v. Smith, 4 Gray (Mass.), 297.

Whether the reital of the payment of the consideration-movey, in a deed of conveyance, falls within the rule, by which the party is estopped to deny it, or belongs to the exceptions, and therefore is open to opposing proof, is a point not clearly agreed. In England, the recital is regarded as conclusive evidence of payment, binding the parties by estoppel. Shelley v. Wright, Willes, 9; Cossens v. Cossens, Id. 25; Rowntree v. Jacob, 2 Taunt. 141; Lampon v. Corke, 5 B. & Ald. 606; Baker v. Dewey, 1 B. & C. 704; Hill v. Mauchester and Salford Water Works, 2 B. & Ad. 544. See also Powell v. Monson, 3 Mason, 347, 351, 356. But the American courts have been disposed to treat the recital of the amount of the money paid, like the mention of the date of the deed, the quantity of land, the amount of tonnage of a vessel, and other recitals of quantity and value, to which the attention of the parties is supposed to have been but slightly directed, and to which, therefore, the principle of estoppels does not apply. Hence, though the party is estopped from denying the conveyance, and that it was for a valuable consideration, yet the weight of American authority is in favor of treating the recital as only prima facie evidence of the amount paid, in an action of covenant by the grantee to recover back the consideration, or, in an action of assumpsit by the grantor, to recover the price which is yet unpaid. The principal cases are, — in Massachusetts, Wilkinson v. Scott, 17 Mass. 249; Clapp v. Tirrell, 20 Pick. 247; Livermore v. Aldrich, 5 Cush. 431: in Maine, Schillinger v. to the party, and which cannot afterwards be denied without a breach of good faith. Of the former class are all agreements of counsel, dispensing with legal proof of facts. 1 So if a material averment, well pleaded, is passed over by the adverse party, without denial, whether it be by confession, or by pleading some other matter, or by demurring in law, it is thereby conclusively admitted.2 So also the payment of money into court, under a rule for that purpose, in satisfaction of so much of the claim as the party admits to be due, is a conclusive admission of the character in which the plaintiff sues, and of his claim to the amount paid.3 The latter class comprehends, not only all those declarations, but also that line of conduct by which the party has induced others to act, or has acquired any advantage to himself.4 Thus, a woman cohabited with, and openly recognized, by a man, as his wife, is conclusively presumed to be such, when he is sued as her husband, for goods furnished to her, or for other civil liabilities growing out of that relation.⁵ So where the sheriff returns anything as fact, done in the course of his duty in the service of a precept, it is conclusively presumed to be true against him.⁶ And if one party refers the other to a third person for information concerning a matter of mutual interest in controversy between them, the answer given is conclusively taken as true, against the party referring. This subject will hereafter be more fully considered, under its appropriate title.8

§ 28. Infants and married women. Conclusive presumptions of law are also made in respect to infants and married women. (by Wheaton), 558; s. c. 1 Sim. & Stu. 153; Rex v. Luffe, 8 East, 193. But if they lived apart, though within such distance as afforded an opportunity for intercourse, the presumption of legitimacy of the issue may be rebutted. Morris v. Davies, 5 C. & Fin. 163. Non-access is not presumed from the fact, that the wife lived in adultery with another; it must be proved aliunde. Regina v. Mansfield, 1 G. & Dav. 7. Post, § 81.

(c) This is now held a rebuttable presumption. It is stated by Mr. Stephen as follows, Digest of Evidence, art. 98: "The fact that any person was born during the continuance of a valid marriage between his mother and any man, or within such a time after the dissolution thereof, and before the celebration of another valid marriage, that his mother's husband could have been his father, is conclusive proof that he is the legitimate child of his mother's husband, unless it can be shown either that his mother and her husband had no access to each other at any time when he could have been begotten, regard being had both to the date of the birth and the physical condition of the husband, or that the circumstances of their access (if any) were such as to render it highly improbable that sexual intercourse took place between them when it occurred." Legge v. Edmonds, 25 L. J. Eq. 125, p. 135; Reg. v. Mansfield, 1 Q. B. 444; Ride-135; Reg. v. Mansfield, 1 Q. B. 444; Ride-out's Trusts, L. R. 10 Eq. 41; Phillips v. Allen, 2 Allen (Mass.), 453; Sullivan v. Kelly, 3 Allen (Mass.), 148; Pittsford v. Chittendon, 58 Vt. 51; State v. Pettaway, 3 Hawks, 623; Com. v. Shepherd, 6 Binn. 283; Tate v. Penne, 7 Mart. (La.) Van Aernam. 2 Bush, 621; Van Aernam v. Van Aernam, 1 Barb. Ch. 375; Herring v. Goodson, 43 Miss. 392; Dean v. State, 29 Ind. 483. In Hawes v. Draeger, L. R. 23 Ch. Div. 173, the case raised the question of legitimacy of a daughter. It was proved that she was born during her father's lifetime, and Kay, J., says: "That fact is prima fucic evidence that she was legitimate. It has been argued that such presumption can only be rebutted by positive evidence of non-access of the husband to the wife during such time as might make him the father of the child. But it must be remembered that the husband and wife are not allowed to give evidence on the question of non-access, and therefore it is impossible to prove that there was no access. All that can be done is to show circumstances, from which non-access may be inferred," and he states the law as established in the Banbury Peerage Case, 1 S. & S. 153, and recognized in Morris v. Davies, 5 Cl. & F. 163, 251, as follows: "That when husband and wife have opportunities of access, the presumption of legitimacy may be rebutted by circumstances inducing a contrary presumption, and that non-access or non-generating ac-cess may be proved by means of such legal evidence as is admissible in every other case in which a legal fact has to be proved." In Pittsford v. Chittendon, 58 Vt. 51, the agreed statement of facts upon which the case was tried, stated that a female pauper was married August 29, 1857, to a man who deserted her, and removed to California in 1860, where he remained so far as known; that in 1864 a child was born to the pauper, who was removed to the town of Chittendon, as a pauper, on an order of removal made in 1872, when said child was about eight years old. The court held that the husband clearly had no opportunity of access to the pauper after his desertion of her in 1860, and could not have been the father of the child born of her in 1864, and that the child was illegitimate. In Rex v. Maidstone, 12 East, 550, it was held that, in a case where the husband was gone beyond the seas for two years next before the birth of a child borne by his wife, she remaining at home, the conclusion was irresistible that the child was a bastard. Also in The Barony of Saye and Sele, 1 H. L. Cas. 507, it was held that the illegitimacy of a child born of a married woman is established by evidence of her husband's residing in another kingdom during the time the child must have been begotten, as access was imposcompany with her husband in the commission of a felony, other than treason or homicide, it is conclusively presumed, that she acted under his coercion, and consequently without any guilty intent. 5 (d)

§ 29. Survivorship. Where the succession to estates is con-

And in Patterson v. Gaines, 6 How. U. S. 550, it was held that the legitimacy of the issue born of a married woman may be impugned by evidence showing it to be impossible for the husband to be the father.

In Gardner v. Gardner, L. R. 2 App. Cas. 723, where, after an open courtship and constant intercourse, a man and woman married, the woman being at the time of the marriage in an advanced and visible state of pregnancy, and a child was born in less than seven weeks after the marriage, Lord Cairns treated it as a presumption of fuct, that the child was the child of the husband. This was, however, a case of Scotch law, and he intimated that by the law of England it would be a presumption of law.

(d) This presumption has been much weakened by the recent decisions. At present the rule as established by the cases seems to be that when it is shown that a crime has been committed by a married woman in the presence of her husband, if it is not shown that she took a willing and active part in the crime, or was the inciter of it, a presumption of law exists that she was under his coercion, but if evidence tending to show willing participation is put in, the question is for the jury upon the whole evidence, whether the woman took such a part in the crime as to show that she was exercising her own free will, and was not acting under compulsion by her husband. Reg. v. John, 13 Cox, Cr. Cas. 100; Reg. v. Torpey, 12 Id. 45; Reg. v. Cohen, 11 Id. 99; Goldstein v. People, 82 v. Cohen, 11 ld. 99; Goldstein v. People, 82 N. Y. 231; United States v. Burk, 11 Gray (Mass.), 437; Com. v. Eagan, 103 Mass. 71; Com. v. Butler, 1 Allen (Mass.), 4; Com. v. Hopkins, 133 Mass. 381; Com. v. Gormley, Id. 580; Com. v. Conrad, 28 Leg. Int. 310; Com. v. Lindsev. 2 Leg. Chron. 232. Lindsey, 2 Leg. Chron. 232.

The presence of the husband may be constructive as well as actual. If the woman is so near him as to be under his immediate influence and control, the presumption arises though he may be in another room. Com. v. Burk, supra; Com. v. Munsey, 112 Mass. 287; Com. v. Flaherty, 140 Mass. 454. The presumption of coercion extends also to torts commitof coercion extends also to torts committed by the wife. The presence of the husband when the tort was committed raises a presumption that it was done by his direction, but this presumption is not conclusive. Franklin's Adminis. Appeal, 115 Pa. St. 538; Cassin v. Delaney, 38 N. Y. 178. This presumption is also of force against the husband, as well as in favor of the wife. For instance, in the case where a man was indicated for in the case where a man was indicted for keeping and maintaining a common nui-sance, to wit, a house of ill-fame, it was held that the evidence of acts done by his wife in his immediate presence were presumed to be done by his direction. Com. v. Hill, 145 Mass. 305. This presumption raises only a prima facie case, and may be met by evidence that the act was done against the will of the husband. For instance, if the act related to his wife's separate property, as in the above case, where the house which was illegally kept was owned by the wife, the husband is pre-sumed to have compelled her to so keep it, but he may introduce evidence to show that he remonstrated with her and forbade her so to use it, and the whole question will then be one of fact for the jury to find whether he did or did not consent to such use. The fact that the property was the wife's would weaken the presumption of coercion, but would not do away with it. Com. v. Hill, supra.

A further presumption has been held to arise under recent statutes providing for the separate ownership of property by married women. In this case property in possession of the husband is presumed to belong to him and not to the wife. This presumption is said to be a violent one, but is adhered to for the purpose of protecting creditors. If the wife sets up a claim to it as against her husband's creditors, she must show that it is hers. The burden of proof is upon her, and the evidence must be clear and satisfactory. Kingsbury v. Davidson, 112 Pa.

cerned, the question, which of two persons is to be presumed the survivor, where both perished in the same calamity, but the circumstances of their deaths are unknown, has been considered in the Roman law, and in several other codes; but in the common law, no rule on the subject has been laid down. By the Roman law, if it were the case of a father and son, perishing together in the same shipwreck or battle, and the son was under the age of puberty, it was presumed that he died first, but if above that age, that he was the survivor; upon the principle, that in the former case the elder is generally the more robust, and, in the latter, the younger. The French code has regard to the ages of fifteen and sixty; presuming that of those under the former age the eldest survived; and that of those above the latter age the voungest survived. If the parties were between those ages, but of different sexes, the male is presumed to have survived; if they were of the same sex, the presumption is in favor of the survivorship of the younger, as opening the succession in the order of nature.² The same rules were in force in the territory of Orleans at the time of its cession to the United States, and have since been incorporated into the code of Louisiana.3

§ 30. Survivorship. This question first arose, in common-law courts, upon a motion for a mandamus, in the case of General Stanwix, who perished, together with his second wife, and his daughter by a former marriage, on the passage from Dublin to England; the vessel in which they sailed having never been heard from. Hereupon his nephew applied for letters of administration, as next of kin; which was resisted by the maternal uncle of the daughter, who claimed the effects upon the presumption of the Roman law, that she was the survivor. point was not decided, the court decreeing for the nephew upon another ground; namely, that the question could properly be raised only upon the statute of distributions, and not upon an application for administration by one clearly entitled to administer by consanguinity. The point was afterwards raised in chancery, where the case was, that the father had bequeathed legacies to such of his children as should be living at the time of his death; and he having perished, together with one of the legatees, by the foundering of a vessel on a voyage from India to England, the question was, whether the legacy was lapsed by the death of the son in the lifetime of the father. The Master of the Rolls refused to decide the question by presumption, and directed an issue, to try the fact by a jury.2 But the Prerogative Court adopts the presumption, that both perished together, and that therefore neither could transmit rights to the other.3 In the absence of all evidence of the particular circumstances of the calamity, probably this rule will be found the safest and most convenient; 4 but if any circumstances of the death of either party can be proved, there can be no inconvenience in submitting the question to a jury, to whose province it peculiarly belongs. (a)

4 lt was so held in Coye v. Leach, 8 Metc. 371. And see Mæhring v. Mitchell, 1 Barb, Ch. 264.

(a) This presumption has been much discussed in several English and American cases. The leading case among the modern cases is Underwood v. Wing, which was heard before the Master of the Rolls in 1854, 19 Beav. 459, and on appeal before the Lord Chancellor, Lord Cranworth, in 1855, 4 De G. M. & G. 633, and another branch of the same case in which the same point arose, Wing v. Angrave.

8 H. L. Cas. 183.

The facts were these: Mr. Underwood made a will, of which the material part in this case was a devise in trust for his wife in fee, and in case she should die in his lifetime, in trust for his three children,

Catherine, Frederick, and Alfred. Mrs. Underwood executed a similar will in favor of her husband and children. About a week after these wills were executed, Mr. and Mrs. Underwood and their three children (being the only children) took passage on board a ship. The ship was lost on the voyage, and they were all drowned; one man alone escaped from the wreck, a seaman, who was examined in the cause, and who testified that, on the morning of October 19, the vessel went upon her starboard beam ends; that whilst the ship was in this position, the sea making a clean breach over her, Mr. and Mrs. Underwood and the two boys were drawn out

In the brief note of Colvin v. H. M. Procurator-Gen., 1 Hagg. Eccl. 92, where the husband, wife, and infant child (if any) perished together, the court seem to have held, that the prima facie presumption of law was that the husband survived. But the point was not much moved. It was also raised, but not disposed of, in Mechring v. Mitchell, 1 Barb. Ch. 264. The subject of presumed survivorship is fully treated by Mr. Burge, in his commentaries on Colonial and Foreign Laws, vol. iv. pp. 11-29. In Chancery it has recently been held, that a presumption of priority of death might be raised from the comparative age, health, and strength of the parties; and, therefore, where two brothers perished by shipwreck, the circumstances being wholly unknown, the elder being the master and the younger the second mate of the ship, it was presumed that the latter died first. Sillick v. Booth, 1 Y. & C. New Cas. 117. C. New Cas. 117.

§ 31. Presumptions to the law of nations. Conclusive presumptions of law are not unknown to the law of nations. Thus, if a

of one of the ports of the ship; that when he last saw them, which was a few minutes afterwards, they were all standing together on the side of the ship, the husband with his wife in his arms, and the two boys chinging to their mother, all clasped together; that whilst in this position a sea swept them off, and he saw them no more, and his belief was that they all went down together, instantly. He also described the manner of the death of the daughter, Catherine, whom he assisted to lash to a spar in hope of saving her life, and it is certain that she survived her father and mother and brothers for some little time, probably about half an hour. There was considerable expert testimony of medical men upon the probabilities of survivorship based upon age, sex, and physical constitution. In the report of the case in 4 De G. M. & G. p. 657, the opinion of Mr. Justice Wightman & Baron Martin on this point is as follows: "The question of survivorship is the subject of evidence to be produced before the tribunal which is to decide upon it, and which is to determine it as any other fact;' proceeds to say that scientific opinion on the probabilities is mere guess-work, and not evidence for a court to act upon. the report of the case in 8 H. L. Cas. 198, Lord Campbell says: "In our jurisprudence, when the question arises which of two individuals who perished by the same calamity survived the other, there is no inference of law from age or sex, and the question is to be decided upon all the circumstances of the case." He then says there was evidence founded upon the age, sex, and state of health of the husband and wife, which might have justified a finding that the husband was the survivor, but it was counterbalanced by the evidence that they perished at the same time, so that there was not such a clear preponderance of evidence in favor of the survivorship of the husband as would justify the reversal of the finding of the lower court.

The rule as now established by the English and American cases is, that where it is proved that two or more persons perished in the same calamity, there is no presumption of law that one survived the others, or that all perished at the same time; the burden of proving that one survived the others, or that all perished simultaneously, is on the person who asserts such to be the fact. If death by the same calamity is all that is proved, the person who asserts the survivorship must fail, but it seems if there is evidence arising from the age, sex, or physical condition of the persons who perished, from which a reasonable inference of survivorship may be drawn, such inferential proof may suffice. In any case if there is evidence arising from the nature of the accident, and the manner of death of the parties, which tends to show that some one did in fact survive the others, the whole question is one of fact, to be decided in each case by the jury before whom the cause is brought. The rule that there is no presumption as to The rule that there is no presumption as to survivorship of those who perish in a common disaster, but that it is incumbent on the party who alleges survivorship as a link in his title to prove such survivorship was followed in the case of the will of Abram Ehle, 73 Wis, 445, the court citing Newell v. Nichols, 75 N. Y. 78, and Fuller v. Linzee, 135 Mass. 468. The court in the case of the will of Abram Ehle goes very minutely into the evidence of the disaster which was the destruction of a dwellinghouse by fire, and arrives at sufficient evidence from the location of the rooms, the location of the bodies when found, the clothing upon them, the noises heard by witnesses during the conflagration, and other facts, to find that one person did, in fact, survive the others, treating the question as a question of fact upon all the evidence, and not as a presumption either of law or fact. The general rule was affirmed in a recent case in Maine, the court holding that in the absence of evidence from which the contrary may be inferred, all may be considered to have perished at the same moment; not because that fact is presumed, but because from failure to prove the contrary by those asserting it, property rights must necessarily be settled on that theory. In that case the father was a man forty years of age, and his minor children under ten. The last known of either was neutral vessel be found carrying despatches of the enemy between different parts of the enemy's dominions, their effect is presumed to be hostile. The spoliation of papers, by the captured party, has been regarded, in all the States of Continental Europe, as conclusive proof of guilt; but, in England and America, it is open to explanation, unless the cause labors under heavy suspicions, or there is a vehement presumption of bad faith or gross prevarication.2

§ 32. Based on expediency. In these cases of conclusive presumption, the rule of law merely attaches itself to the circumstances, when proved; it is not deduced from them. It is not a rule of inference from testimony; but a rule of protection, as expedient, and for the general good. It does not, for example, assume that all landlords have good titles; but that it will be a public and general inconvenience to suffer tenants to dispute them. Neither does it assume, that all averments and recitals in deeds and records are true; but that it will be mischievous, if parties are permitted to deny them. It does not assume that all simple contract debts, of six years' standing, are paid, nor that every man, quietly occupying land twenty years as his own, has a valid title by grant; but it deems it expedient that claims opposed by such evidence as the lapse of those periods affords, should not be countenanced, and that society is more benefited by a refusal to entertain such claims, than by suffering them to be made good by proof. In fine, it does not assume the impossibility of things which are possible; on the contrary, it is founded, not only on the possibility of their existence, but on their occasional occurrence; and it is against the mischiefs of their occurrence that it interposes its protecting prohibition.3

§ 33. Disputable presumptions. The SECOND CLASS of presumptions of law, answering to the presumptiones juris of the Roman law, which may always be overcome by opposing proof,4 consists of those termed disputable presumptions. These, as well as the former, are the result of the general experience of a connection between certain facts, or things, the one being usually found to be the companion or the effect of the other. The connection, however, in this class, is not so intimate, nor so nearly universal, as to render it expedient that it should be absolutely and imperatively presumed to exist in every case, all evidence to the contrary being rejected; but yet it is so general, and so nearly universal, that the law itself, without the aid of a jury, infers the one fact from the proved existence of the other, in the absence of all opposing evidence. In this mode, the law defines the nature and amount of the evidence which it deems sufficient to establish a prima facie case, and to throw the burden of proof on the other party; and, if no opposing evidence is offered, the jury are bound to find in favor of the presumption. A contrary verdict would be liable to be set aside, as being against evidence. (b)

§ 34. Based on expediency. The rules in this class of presumption, as in the former, have been adopted by common consent, from motives of public policy, and for the promotion of the general good; yet not, as in the former class, forbidding all further evidence; but only excusing or dispensing with it, till some proof is given on the other side to rebut the presumption thus raised. Thus, as men do not generally violate the penal code, the law presumes every man innocent; but some men do trangress it, and therefore evidence is received to repel this presumption. (a) This legal presumption of innocence is to be re-

(b) Crane v. Morris, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 598; Com. v. Hogan, 113 Mass. 7; United States v. Wiggins, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 334.
(a) This presumption is rather a general

(a) This presumption is rather a general positive rule of law regulating the introduction of evidence in all cases, i. e., in civil and criminal cases the party who desires any court to give judgment as to any legal right or liability dependent on the existence or non-existence of facts which he asserts or denies to exist, must prove that those facts do or do not exist, Stephen, Dig. Evid. art. 93. Therefore, if the State desires a court to pronounce a person liable to a certain punishment, it must give evidence to prove the facts constituting his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, just as, in a civil case, the party asking a decision must prove his case by a preponderance of the evidence. Compare Wharton, Evid. § 1245. That this is the true form of the rule, and that it is not true that there is always a presumption of innocence, is shown by the fact that in some cases no such presumption exists; e. g. on the trial of an indictment for seducting a woman, her previous chastity, being a fact necessary to complete the guilt of the prisoner, must be proved, and there is no presumption of her innocence. State v. Wells, 48 Iowa, 671; West v. State, 1 Wis. 209; Com. v. Whittaker, 131 Mass. 224; People v. Roderigas, 49 Cal. 9. In accordance with the general form of the rule, it was held that every man is presumed to be innocent, in Edwards v. State, 21 Ark. 512; Case v. Case, 17 Cal. 598; Goggans v. Monroe, 31 Ga. 331; McEwen v. Portland, 1 Oreg. 300; Harrington v. State, 19 Ohio, 264.

Another maxim of the law which is of-

Another maxim of the law which is often called by the courts a conclusive presumption. is that every man is conclusively presumed to know the law, or, in better form, ignorance of the law excuses no one. The latter form of the rule shows it to be not a presumption, but a positive rule of law, based on the inexpediency of admitting in criminal trials the vague excuse of ignorance of the law. Evidence to prove such an excuse, therefore, is inadmissible. United States v. Anthony, 11 Blatchf. C. C. 200; Com. v. Bagley, 7 Pick. (Mass.), 279; Brent v. State, 43 Ala. 297; Rex v. Esop, 7 C. & P. 456; Barronet's Case, 1 E. & B. 1. But the law as it exists is the law which every one must know. Therefore, garded by the jury, in every case, as matter of evidence, to the benefit of which the party is entitled. And where a criminal charge is to be proved by circumstantial evidence, the proof ought to be not only consistent with the prisoner's guilt, but inconsistent with any other rational conclusion. (b) On the other hand, as men seldom do unlawful acts with innocent intentions. the law presumes every act, in itself unlawful, to have been criminally intended, until the contrary appears. (c) Thus, on a charge of murder, malice is presumed from the fact of killing, unaccompanied with circumstances of extenuation; and the burden of disproving the malice is thrown upon the accused.2 The same presumption arises in civil actions, where the act complained of was unlawful.3 So, also, as men generally own the

This point was re-examined and discussed, with great ability and research, in York's Case, 9 Metc. 93, re-examined and discussed, with great ability and research, in York's Case, 9 Metc. 93, in which a majority of the learned judges affirmed the rule as stated in the text. Wilde, J., however, strongly dissented; maintaining with great force of reason, that the rule was founded in a state of society no longer existing; that it was inconsistent with settled principles of criminal law; and that it was not supported by the weight of authority. He was of opinion that the following conclusions were maintained on sound principles of law and manifest justice: 1. That when the facts and circumstances accompanying a homicide are given in evidence, the question whether the crime is murder or manslaughter is to be decided upon the evidence, and not upon any presumption from the mere act of killing. 2. That, if there be any such presumption, it is a presumption of fact; and if the evidence leads to a reasonable doubt whether the presumption be well founded, that doubt will avail in favor of the prisoner. 3. That the burden of proof, in every criminal case, is on the government, to prove all the material burden of proof, in every criminal case, is on the government, to prove all the material allegations in the indictment; and if, on the whole evidence, the jury have a reasonable doubt whether the defendant is guilty of the crime charged, they are bound to ble doubt whether the defendant is guilty of the crime charge, and acquit him.

³ In Bromage v. Prosser, 4 B. & C. 247, 255, 256, which was an action for words spoken of the plaintiffs, in their business and trade of bankers, the law of implied or legal malice, as distinguished from malice in fact, was clearly expounded by Mr. Justice Bayley, in the following terms: "Malice, in the common acceptation, means ill-will against a person, but in its legal sense, it means a wrongful act, done intentionally without just cause or excuse. If I give a perfect stranger a blow likely to produce death, I do it of malice, because I do it intentionally and without just cause or excuse. If I maim cattle, without knowing whose they are, if I poison a fishery, without knowing the owner, I do it of malice, because it is a wrongful act, and done intentionally. If I am arraigned of felony, and wilfully stand mute, I am said to do it of malice, because it is intentional, and without just cause or excuse. Russell on Crimes, 614, n. 1. And if I traduce a man, whether I know him or not, and whether

if one act under a law which is afterwards declared to have been unconstitutional, he declared to have been unconstitutional, he may avail himself of the law to protect him, for it cannot be contended that he was obliged not only to know the law, but to know whether the law was constitutional. Brent v. State, supra. Nor is any one bound to know the law of any State or country except his own. Rex v. Esop, 7 C. & P. 456; Finch v. Mansfield, 97 Mass. 89, 92. (b) See also ante, § 13 a, and post, vol.

(c) Taylor (Ev. § 103) substitutes "wrongfully" instead of "criminally" with great propriety, as every unlawful act is by no means criminal. Where the act itself is of an indifferent nature, then the intent must be proved. But where it is in itself unlawful, the intent is presumed, Rex v. Woodfall, 5 Burr. 2667, the act being of such a nature as to show the intent. Rex v. Harvey, 2 B. & C. 257.

personal property they possess, proof of possession is presumptive proof of ownership. (d) But possession of the fruits of erime recently after its commission, is prima facie evidence of guilty possession; and, if unexplained either by direct evidence, or by the attending circumstances, or by the character and habits of life of the possessor, or otherwise, it is taken as conclusive.4 This rule of presumption is not confined to the case of theft, but is applied to all cases of crime, even the highest and most penal. Thus, upon an indictment for arson, proof that property which

I intend to do him an injury or not, I apprehend the law considers it as done of malice, because it is wrongful and intentional. It equally works an injury, whether I meant to produce an injury or not, and if I had no legal excuse for the slander, why is he not to have a remedy against me for the injury it produces? And I apprehend the law recognizes the distinction between these two descriptions of malice, malice in fact and malice in law, in actions of slander. In an ordinary action for words, it is sufficient to charge that the defendant spoke them falsely; it is not necessary to state that they were spoken maliciously. This is so laid down in Styles, 392, and was adjudged upon error in Mercer v. Sparks, Owen, 51; Noy, 35. The objection there was, that the words were not charged to have been spoken maliciously, but the court answered that the words were themselves malicious and slanderous, and therefore the judgment was affirmed. But in actions for such slander, as is prima facie excusable confidential advice, or communication to persons who ask it, or have a right to expect it, malice in fact must be proved by the plaintiff; and in Edmondson v. Stevenson, Bull. N. P. 8, Lord Mansfield takes the distinction between these and ordinary actions of slander." on account of the cause of speaking or writing it, as in the case of servants' characters,

Rex v. Partridge, 7 C. & P. 551. So as to real property. Matters v. Brown, 1 H. & C. 686. This presumption of ownership from possession arises only when the charplained; when the possession is wholly unex-plained; when the possession and nothing more is shown. If the evidence of pos-session is shown to be equally consistent with an outstanding ownership in a third with an outstanding ownership in a third person, as with a title in the one having the possession, the presumption is rebutted. Rawley v. Brown, 71 N. Y. 85; New York, &c. R. R. Co. v. Haws, 56 N. Y. 175. So, in general, possession by a broker, factor, or agent of property such as he is in the habit of having in his possession in the regular course of his busisession in the regular course of his business, does not raise the presumption of ownership. Succession of Boisbanc, 32 La. Ann. 109.

This presumption is one of slight effect, and may perhaps be ranked as circumstantial evidence of ownership, rather than as a presumption of law. Rawley v. Brown, was in the house at the time it was burnt, was soon afterwards found in the possession of the prisoner, was held to raise a probable presumption that he was present, and concerned in the offence.⁵ The like presumption is raised in the case of murder, accompanied by robbery; ⁶ and in the case of the possession of an unusual quantity of counterfeit money.⁷ (e)

(e) The weight of authority seems to hold that there is no presumption of law, that a person's possession of the fruits of crime, though recent, exclusive, and unexplained, is guilty possession, but that this fact is prima facie evidence of the prisoner's gnilt, which the jury may consider, along with the other facts of the case, in arriving at their verdict. This is, therefore, rather a presumption of fact, or circumstantial evidence, and is governed by the rules of that class of evidence. Com. v. McGorty, 114 Mass. 301; State v. Raymond, 46 Conn. 345; State v. Hodge, 50 N. H. 510; Ingalls v. State, 48 Wis. 647; Stokes v. State, 58 Miss. 677; Reg. v. Hughes, 14 Cox, Cr. Cas. 223; Reg. v. Harris, 8 Id. 333; Reg. v. Langmead, 9 Id. 464; Hernandez v. State, 9 Tex. App. 288; Sahlinger v. People, 102 Ill. 241; State v. Kimble, 14 Rep. 434; State v. Kelly, 11 N. W. Rep. 635; Henderson v. State, 13 Rep. 715; State v. Rights, 82 N. C. 675.

The question whether the possession is of such a kind, and so recent, as to give rise to a plain and strong inference of the guilt of the possessor, in other words, whether the possession as proved is legal prima facie evidence of guilt, is generally held to be one of law for the Court, just as most questions relating to the admissibility of evidence. See cases supra. In New Hampshire, however, that question, as well as the effect of the evidence when admitted, is left to the jury. State v.

Hodge, 50 N. H. 510.

The two points principally noticed by the Courts in deciding on the admissibility are: -

pected, the decisions vary greatly, for the time is only one element in the case. Six months has been held to be too long (Reg. v. Harris, 8 Cox Cr. Cas. 333), but two months, with circumstances of concealment, not too long. State v. Bennet, 2 Const. (S. C.) R. 692. Cf. State v. Rights, 82 N. C. 675; State v. Adams, 1 Hayw. 463.

2. Whether the possession is so exclusive as to raise a strong inference that the prisoner was privy to the fact that such goods were in his possession. So, if the goods are found in an open shed, or barn, or on open ground, it has been held that evidence of such possession is not admissible. Rex v. Hughes, 11 Cox Cr. Cas. 223; M'Queen v. Great Western Ry. Co. L. R. 10 Q. B. 569; People v. Hurley, 8 Pac. C. L. J. 1134; 3 Crim. L. Mag. 440; Gablick v. People, 40 Mich. 292.

Though the prevailing rule in the modern cases is to consider this a presumption of fact, yet in State v. Kelly, 73 Mo. 608, it is said that this is a presumption of law, and not a mere presumption of fact, to be weighed with other evidence in the case. The prisoner in rebutting this prima facie case, need only introduce evidence enough to raise a reasonable doubt of his guilt. Sahlinger v. People, 102 Ill. 241; State v. Richart, 57 Iowa, 245. The same fact of possession may also be given in evidence as a circumstance tending to prove the commission of other offences, e. g. burglary, receiving stolen property, arson, forgery, &c. Stuart v. People, 42 Mich. 255; State v. Bishop, 51 Vt. 287; State v. Suell, 46 Wis. 524; Neubrandt v. State, 9 N. W. Rep. 824; Reg. v. Hughes, 14 Cox Cr. Cas. 223; People v. Mitchell, 55 Cal. 236; Com. v. Talbot, 2 Allen (Mass.), 161. Cf. People v. Ah Sing, 3 Crim. L. Mag. 115.

party alleging the guilt; though the general rule of law devolves the burden of proof on the party holding the affirmative. Thus, where the plaintiff complained that the defendants, who had chartered his ship, had put on board an article highly inflammable and dangerous, without giving notice of its nature to the master, or others in charge of the ship, whereby the vessel was burnt; he was held bound to prove this negative averment. In some cases, the presumption of innocence has been deemed sufficiently strong to overthrow the presumption of life. Thus, where a woman, twelve months after her husband was last heard of, married a second husband, by whom she had children; it was held, that the Sessions, in a question upon their settlement, rightly presumed that the first husband was dead at the time of the second marriage. 2 (a)

§ 36. Innocence. An exception to this rule, respecting the presumption of innocence, is admitted in the case of a libel.

1 William v. E. Ind. Co., 3 East, 192; Bull. N. P. 298. So, of allegations that a party had not taken the sacrament, Rex v. Hawkins, 10 East, 211; had not complied with the act of uniformity, &c., Powell v. Milburn, 3 Wils. 355, 366; that goods were not legally imported, Sissons v. Dixon, 5 B. & C. 758; that a theatre was not duly licensed Rodwell v. Redge, 1 C. & P. 220.

with the act of uniformity, &c., rowell v. Milbolin, 3 wits. 333, 350; that goods were not legally imported, Sissons v. Dixon, 5 B. & C. 758; that a theatre was not duly licensed, Rodwell v. Redge, 1 C. & P. 220.

2 Rex v. Twyning, 2 B. & Ald. 385. But in another case, where, in a question upon the derivative settlement of the second wife, it was proved that a letter had been written from the first wife from Van Diemen's Land, bearing date only twenty-five days prior to the second marriage, it was held, that the Sessions did right in presuming that the first wife was living at the time of the second marriage. Rex v. Harborne, 2 Ad. & El. 540. See also post, § 80.

(a) Quin v. State, 46 Ind. 459. And where the presumption of innocence conflicts with the presumption of the continuance of life, the latter must be proved. Murray v. Murray, 6 Oreg. 17; Spears v. Burton, 31 Miss. 547; Lockhart v. White, 18 Texas, 102; Sharp v. Johnson, 22 Ark. 75; Klein v. Landman, 29 Mo. 259. Legitimacy is to be presumed till the contrary is shown. Dinkins v. Samuel, 10 Rich. (S. C.) 66; Strode v. McGowan, 2 Bush (Ky.), 621; Harrison v. South, 21 Eng. L. & Eq. 343; Ward v. Dulaney, 23 Miss. 410. When the presumptions of life and innocence conflict, it is a question of fact for the jury which must prevail. Reg. v. Willshire, L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 366. This conflict was considered in a recent Massachusetts case. The defendant was indicted for polygamy. His defence was that the first marriage alleged in the indictment was void because at that time he had a wife living. The proof which he gave showed that the first wife was alive a month before the marriage in question, and he asked the court to rule that there was a presumption of law in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that she was alive at the day of the marriage in question, and that a jury would be warranted in so finding. The court refused to so instruct the jury, but instructed them that there was no presumption that she was alive at that day, but that it must be proved as a fact; that if there was any presumption, it was that the marriage was legal. On exception the Supreme Court held this misleading, as being in effect a ruling that the presumption of innocence destroys the presumption of the continuance of life, so that the fact that the first wife was alive a month before the second marriage was not to be considered as evidence that she was living at the time of that marriage, the true rule being that the proof of the existence of a person, within a reasonable time from the date of the act in question, is a fact from which the inference of continued existence to the date in question may be drawn by the jury, in the absence of contradictory proof. Com. v. McGrath, 140 Mass. 296.

For where a libel is sold in a bookseller's shop, by his servant, in the ordinary course of his employment, this is evidence of a guilty publication by the master; though, in general, an authority to commit a breach of the law is not to be presumed. This exception is founded upon public policy, lest irresponsible persons should be put forward, and the principal and real offender should escape. Whether such evidence is conclusive against the master. or not, the books are not perfectly agreed; but it seems conceded, that the want of privity in fact by the master is not sufficient to excuse him; and that the presumption of his guilt is so strong as to fall but little short of conclusive evidence. 3 (c) Proof that the libel was sold in violation of express orders from the master would clearly take the case out of this exception, by showing that it was not sold in the ordinary course of the servant's duty. The same law is applied to the publishers of newspapers.4

§ 37. Innocence. The presumption of innocence may be overthrown, and a presumption of guilt be raised by the misconduct of the party, in suppressing or destroying evidence which he ought to produce, or to which the other party is entitled. Thus, the spoliation of papers, material to show the neutral character of a vessel, furnishes a strong presumption, in odium spoliatoris against the ship's neutrality. (a) A similar presumption is raised against a party who has obtained possession of papers from a witness, after the service of subpæna duces tecum upon the latter for their production, which is withheld. 2 (b) The gen-

But a refusal to produce books and papers under a notice, though it lays a foundation for the introduction of secondary evidence of their contents, has been held to afford no evidence of the fact sought to be proved by them; such, for example, as the existence of a deed of conveyance from one mercantile partner to another. Hanson v. Eustace, 2 Howard, S. C. 653.

(c) This is rather a presumption of authority conferred upon the agent to do the act, than an exception to the rule of presumed innocence. Cooper v. Slade, 6 H. of L. 786; Rex v. Dixon, 3 M. & S. 11; Rex v. Medley, 6 C. & P. 292. As to presumptions from alterations of nego-

eral rule is, omnia præsumuntur contra spoliatorem.3 His conduct is attributed to his supposed knowledge that the truth would have operated against him. Thus, if some of a series of documents of title are suppressed by the party admitting them to be in his possession, this is evidence that the documents withheld afford inferences unfavorable to the title of that party.4 (c) Thus, also, where the finder of a lost jewel would not produce it, it was presumed against him that it was of the highest value of its kind.⁵ But if the defendant has been guilty of no fraud, or improper conduct, and the only evidence against him is of the delivery to him of the plaintiff's goods, of unknown quality, the presumption is that they were goods of the cheapest quality. 6 (d) The fabrication of evidence, however, does not of itself furnish any presumption of law against the innocence of the party, but is a matter to be dealt with by the jury. Innocent persons, under the influence of terror from the danger of their situation, have been sometimes led to the simulation of exculpatory facts; of which several instances are stated in the books. § 38. Course of trade. Other presumptions of this class are founded upon the experience of human conduct in the course of trade; men being usually vigilant in guarding their property, and prompt in asserting their rights, and orderly in conducting their affairs, and diligent in claiming and collecting their dues. (a) Thus, where a bill of exchange, or an order for the payment of money or delivery of goods, is found in the hands of the drawee, or a promissory note is in the possession of the maker, a legal presumption is raised that he has paid the money due upon it, and delivered the goods ordered. A bank-note will be presumed to have been signed before it was issued, though the signature be torn off.² So, if a deed is found in the hands of the grantee, having on its face the evidence of its regular execution, it will

⁸ Cooper v. Gibbons, 3 Campb. 363.

(f) But it has also been held that where, after notice and refusal to produce documents, it is shown that they are in the control of the party notified, and sec-ondary evidence is given of their contents, and such evidence is imperfect, vague, and such evidence is imperfect, vague, and uncertain, every presumption should be made by the jury against the party so refusing to produce the documents. (a) The presumptions based on the usual course of human affairs, while they derive a certain generality of application from the uniformity of business, are still

from the uniformity of business, are still rather in the nature of prima facic evidence, or presumptions of fact, or inferences, than presumptions of law.

Thus it is said that where the name of the grantee of land and that of a prior be be presumed they designate the same, it will be presumed they designate the same person. Brown v. Metz, 33 Ill. 339. So of two grants of land to the same name. Cates v. Loftus, 3 A. K. Mar. (Ky.) 202.

But see Mooers v. Bunker, 29 N. H. 420. And generally identity of name is presumptive of identity of person. Gitt v. Watson, 18 Mo. 274. But any difference in the names destroys the presumption. Bennett v. Libhart. 27 Mieh. 489; Me-Minn v. Whelan, 27 Cal. 300; Ellsworth v. Moore, 5 Iowa, 486; Burford v. McCue, 53 Pa. St. 427. There is also said to be a legal presumption, that the property in the goods sumption, that the property in the goods is in the consignee named in the bill of lading, so that he may sue in his own name to recover damages for non-delivery thereof, &c. Lawrence v. Minturn, 17 How. (U. S.) 100. So, of an unsigned account in the handwriting of the maker, in the hands of the debtor. Nichols v. Alsop, 10 Conn. 263. The possession by a party of a receipt from a common carrier raises the presumption of a proper delivery, and of the possessor's assent to its terms. Boorman v. Am. Exp. Co., 21 Wis. 152.

be presumed to have been delivered by the grantor. 3 (b) So a receipt for the last year's or quarter's rent is prima facie evidence of the payment of all the rent previously accrued. 4 (c) But the mere delivery of money by one to another, or of a bank check, or the transfer of stock, unexplained, is presumptive evidence of the payment of an antecedent debt, and not of a loan. 5 (d) The same presumption arises upon the payment of an order or draft for money; namely, that it was drawn upon funds of the drawer in the hands of the drawee. But in the case of an order for the delivery of goods it is otherwise, they being presumed to have been sold by the drawee to the drawer.6 Thus, also, where the proprietors of adjoining parcels of land agree upon a line of division, it is presumed to be a recognition of the true original line between their lots.7

§ 38 a. Execution of instruments. Regularity of acts. Of a similar character is the presumption in favor of the due execution of solemn instruments. Thus, if the subscribing witnesses to a will are dead, or if, being present, they are forgetful of all the facts, or of any fact material to its due execution, the law will in such cases supply the defeet of proof, by presuming that the requisites of the statute were duly observed.1 The same principle, in effect, seems to have been applied in the case of deeds.2

§ 39. Lapse of time. On the same general principle, where a debt due by specialty has been unclaimed, and without recognition, for twenty years, in the absence of any explanatory evidence, it is presumed to have been paid. The jury may infer the fact of payment from the circumstances of the case, within that period; but the presumption of law does not attach, till the twenty years are expired.1 This rule, with its limitation of twenty years, was first introduced into the courts of law by Sir Matthew Hale, and has since been generally recognized, both in the courts of law and of equity.2 It is applied not only to bonds for the payment of money, but to mortgages, judgments, warrants to confess judgments, decrees, statutes, recognizances, and other matters of record, when not affected by statutes (a); but with respect to all other claims not under seal nor of record, and not otherwise sumed to have read a bill of lading delivered to him by a carrier, there being no fraud. Grace v. Adams, 100 Mass. 505. But not to know the contents of a notice printed on the back of a railroad ticket. Malone v. B. & W. R. R. Co., 12 Gray (Mass.), 388. On the maxim: "Omnia præsumuntur rectè esse acta," that will be presumed to have been done which ought to have been done, as that a bill in Chancery was sworn to (Rex v. Benson, 2 Campb. 508); that a notice printed, posted, and apparently signed by the conmander of a military post, was by his or-der (Bruce v. Nicolopopulo, 11 Ex. 129); that a church, long used, was duly conse-crated (Rugg v. Kingsmill, L. R. 1 Ad. Ec. 343; Reg. v. Mainwaring, 26 L. J. M. C. 10); that a parish certificate, long recognized, was duly executed (Rex v. Upton, Gray, 10 B. & C. 807; Reg. v. Stainforth, 11 Q. B. 66); and generally when an official act has been done, which can only be lawful and valid, by the doing of certain preliminary acts, it will be presumed that those preliminary acts have also been done. Broadhempston, 28 L. J. M. C. 18; Gosset v. Howard, 10 Q. B. 411. So it will be presumed that the designation of a foreign official is true. Saltar v. Applegate, 3 Zabr. (N. J.) 115. But jurisdiction will not be presumed in favor of inferior courts; or those established for special purposes.

In some cases, the presumption of payment has been made by the court, after eighteen years. Rex v. Stephens, 1 Burr. 434; Clark v. Hopkins, 7 Johns. 556; but these seem to be exceptions to the general rule.

Rex v. All Saints, &c., 7 B. & C. 790; Reg. v. Totness, 11 Q. B. 80. So it will be presumed that lost instruments had all the requisites to make them valid, as that they were stamped (Hart v. Hart, 1 Hare, 1; Rex v. Long Buckby, 7 East, 45); but not if when last seen they were not stamped. Arbon v. Fussell, 9 Jur. N. s. 753. But when it appears that there was opportunity for imposition, undue influence, overreaching, an unconscionable advantage on the part of the party who seeks to establish the instrument, courts of equity at least will require more or less proof according to circumstances. Baker v. Bradley, 25 L. J. Ch. 7; Cooke v. Lamotte, 15 Beav. 234; Gresley v. Mousley, 28 L. J. Ch. 620; Lyon v. Home, 37 L. J. Ch. 674; Dimsdale v. Dimsdale, 25 L. J. Ch. 806; Baker v. Monk, 33 Beav. 419. Courts of equity will presume, especially as between those sustaining fiduciary or confidential relations, voluntary gifts to be invalid, unless satisfied, upon proof, there was no imposition, undue influence, or other wrong. Nottidge v. Prince, 2 Giff. 246; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 308-324. Not, however, if the relation is unlawful, as where a mistress sets up a violation of confidence on the part of her paramour. limited, whether for the payment of money, or the performance of specific duties, the general analogies are followed, as to the application of the lapse of time, which prevail on kindred subjects. 3 (b) But in all these eases, the presumption of payment may be repelled by any evidence of the situation of the parties, or other circumstance tending to satisfy the jury that the debt is still due.4

§ 40. Course of business. Under this head of presumptions from the course of trade, may be ranked the presumptions frequently made from the regular course of business in a public office. Thus postmarks on letters are prima facie evidence, that the letters were in the post-office at the time and place therein specified. If a letter is sent by the post, it is presumed, from the known course in that department of the public service, that it reached its destination at the regular time, and was received by the person to whom it was addressed, if living at the place, and usually receiving letters there. 2(a) So, where a letter was

3 This presumption of the common law is now made absolute in the case of debts ³ This presumption of the common law is now made absolute in the case of debts due by specialty, by Stat. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, § 3. See also Stat. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27, and 7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vic. c. 28. It is also adopted in New York, by Rev. Stat. part 3, c. 4, tit. 2, art. 5, and is repellable only by written acknowledgment, made within twenty years, or proof of part payment within that period. In Maryland, the lapse of twelve years is made a conclusive presumption of payment, in all cases of bonds, judgments, recognizances, and other specialties, by Stat. 1715, c. 23, § 6; 1 Dorsey's Laws of Maryl. p. 11; Carroll v. Waring, 3 Gill & Johns. 491. A like provision exists in Massachusetts, as to judgments and decrees, after the lapse of twenty years. Rev. Stat. c. 120, § 24; Pub. Stat. c. 197, § 23.

(a) A presumption of fact that a letter was duly received arises upon proof that it was deposited in the post-office, properly addressed, with the postage prepaid. This presumption is based on the probability that the officers of the government will do their duty, and that letters will be duly their duty, and that letters will be duly delivered. Briggs v. Hervey, 130 Mass. 187; Folsom v. Cook, 115 Pa. St. 548; Huntley v. Whittier, 105 Mass. 391, and cases there cited: First, &c., Bank v. McManigle, 69 Pa. St. 156: Greenfield Bank v. This presumption or inference of fact of the receipt of a letter duly mailed, is strengthened by the fact that on the envelope was printed a request that the let-ter if not delivered as addressed within a certain time be returned to the writer, accompanied by evidence that the letter has not been returned. Hedden v. Roberts, 134 Mass. 38. The presumption or inference may be met by evidence direct or circumstantial that the letter was not received, and the question then becomes one for the jury. Huntley v. Whittier, put into a box in an attorney's office, and the course of business was that a bellman of the post-office invariably called to take the letters from the box; this was held sufficient to presume that it reached its destination. 3 (b) So, the time of clearance of a vessel. sailing under a license, was presumed to have been indersed upon the license, which was lost, upon its being shown that, without such indorsement, the custom-house would not have permitted the goods to be entered. 4 (c) So, on proof that goods which cannot be exported without license were entered at the custom-house for exportation, it will be presumed that there was a license to export them. 5 The return of a sheriff, also, which is conclusively presumed to be true, between the parties to the process, is taken prima facie as true, even in his own favor; and the burden of proving it false, in an action against him for a false return, is devolved on the plaintiff, notwithstanding it is a negative allegation. 6 In fine, it is presumed until the contrary is proved, that every man obeys the mandates of the law, and performs all his official and social duties. 7(d) The like presumption is also of the law, that the law knows no fraction of a day. There is a conclusive presump-tion that legislative and judicial acts are in force on every part of the day on which they were passed, or on which they are to take effect. Re Wellman, 20 Vt. 653. But when the question concerns the acts of parties; when it becomes necessary to ascertain which of several persons has a priority of right, e. g. where goods are seized on execution the same day the defendant commits an act of bankruptcy, or two writs of attachment or execution are delivered to the sheriff on the same day, then it is proper for the courts to examine into the smallest differences of time. drawn from the usual course of men's private offices and business, where the primary evidence of the fact is wanting.8

§ 41. Continuity. Other presumptions are founded on the experienced continuance or permanency of longer and shorter duration, in human affairs. When, therefore, the existence of a person, a personal relation, or a state of things, is once established by proof, the law presumes that the person, relation, or state of things continues to exist as before, until the contrary is shown, or until a different presumption is raised, from the nature of the subject in question. (a) Thus, where the issue is upon the life or death of a person, once shown to have been living, the burden of proof lies upon the party who asserts the death. 1 (b) But after the lapse of seven years, without intelligence concerning the person, the presumption of life ceases, and the burden of proof is

(b) Our law has not fixed the limit

(c) This rebuttable presumption of law is thus stated in Stephen Dig. Evid. art. 99. "A person shown not to have been heard from for seven years by those, if any, who, if he had been alive, would naturally have heard of him, is presumed to be dead, unless the circumstances of the case are such as to account for his not being heard of without assuming his death; but there is no presumption as to the time when he died, and the burden of proving his death at any particular time is upon the person who asserts it." In accordance with this rule are In re Phene's Trusts, L. R. 5 Ch. 139; In re Lewes's Trusts, L. R. 11 Eq. 236, 6 Ch. 356; In re Corbishley's Trusts, L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 846; Hickman v. Upsall, L. R. 20 Eq. 136.

The same presumption obtains in the United States, with the addition, in most States, of the limitation that the person whose death is thus presumed must be shown to have been away from his home, and perhaps out of the State. Stevens v. McNamara, 36 Me. 176; Stinchfield v. Emerson, 52 Me. 465; Crawford v. Elliott, 1 Houst. (Del.) 465; McDowell v. Simpson, Id. 467; Winship v. Connor, 42 N. H. 341; Whitney v. J.) 229; Newman v. Jenkins, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 515; Hyde Park v. Canton, 130 Mass. 505.

There is a difference in the authorities in the United States on the question whether the person is presumed to be alive till the end of the seven years, or whether there is no presumption as to the date of his death but any one relying on his death having occurred at a certain date must prove that fact. It was held that the presumption of life continues till the end of the seven years, in Montgomery v. Bevans, 1 Sawy. C. C. 653; Packett v. State, 1 Sneed (Tenn.), 355; Clarke's Executors v. Canfield, 2 McCart. (N. J.) 119; Eagle v. Emmett, 4 Bradf. (N. Y.) 117; Smith v. Knowlton, 11 N. H. 191; and see cases supra.

But in accordance with the English authorities and the better rule, it was held that there is no presumption as to the date of his death within the seven years, in Davie v. Briggs, 97 U. S. 628; Johnson v. Merithew, 80 Me. 115; Spencer v. Roper,

13 Ired. (N. C.) 333; State v. Moore, 11
1d. 160; McCartee v. Camel, 1 Barb.
(N. Y.) Ch. 455; Hancock v. American
L. Ins. Co., 62 Mo. 26.

In any case, however, the date of the death within the seven years may be proved as a fact by direct or circumstantial evidence. The most usual form of such evidence is that which shows that the person in question was either in such a bad state of health that it is probable that he is dead at the time specified, or that he has been exposed to some specific danger, such as shipwreck or railroad collision, which renders it probable that he was then destroyed. This and similar evidence will justify the finding of death at a specific date inside of the seven years, by the jury, but mere unexplained absence short of that time will not. Matter of Ackerman, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 521; Hancock v. American L. Ins. Co., 62 Mo. 26; Stouvenal v. Stephens, 2 Daly, (N. Y.) 319; Gibbes v. Vincent, 11 Rich. (S. C.) L. 323; Sprigg v. Moale, 28 Md. 497; Loring v. Steinman, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 204; and cases supra; Main, in re, 1 Sw. & Tr. 11. Thus, in a recent case the facts were that a vessel heavily laden with coal, sailed from Troon, in the south of Scotland, for Havana, a voyage usually accomplished in from twenty-five to forty days, in the track of many sailing vessels and steamers plying between the north of Europe and America, and was not afterward heard of. In case of shipwreck, it was improbable if not impossible that the vessel, if driven ashore, should not have been reported in the United States within six months of her loss. If any on board of her had been rescued by passing vessels, they would have, within that time, sent the intelligence of shipwreck to the home port of the vessel. It was held that the circumstances surrounding the vessel and the voyage that she entered upon authorized the inference of her loss with all on board within the six months following the date of her departure from Scotland, and a jury would be authorized to find the death of her master and his family at the expiration of that period. Johnson v. Merithew, 80 Me. 115.

The presumption of death is rebuttable by any facts showing that the supposed deceased had been heard from within seven years, e. g. if letters had been received from him (Flynn v. Coffee, 12 Allen (Mass.), 133; Smith v. Smith, 49 Ala. great deliberation, in the statute of bigamy,3 and the statute concerning leases for lives,4 and has since been adopted, from analogy, in other cases.⁵ But where the presumption of life conflicts with that of innocence, the latter is generally allowed to prevail.6 Upon an issue of the life or death of a party, as we have seen in the like case of the presumed payment of a debt, the jury may find the fact of death from the lapse of a shorter period than seven years, if other circumstances concur; as, if the party sailed on a voyage which should long since have been accomplished, and the vessel has not been heard from. 7 But the presumption of the common law, independent of the finding of the jury, does not attach to the mere lapse of time, short of seven years,8 unless letters of administration have been granted on his questioned by the Vice-Chancellor of England, who said it was "daily becoming more and more untenable;" in Watson v. England, 14 Sim. 28; and again in Dowley v. Winfield, Id. 277. But the correctness of his remark is doubted in 5 Law Mag. N. s. Winfield, Id. 277. But the correctness of his remark is doubted in 5 Law Mag. N. s. 338, 339; and the rule was subsequently adhered to by the Lord Chancellor in Cuthbert v. Purrier, 2 Phill. 199, in regard to the capital of a fund, the income of which was bequeathed to an absent legatee; though he seems to have somewhat relaxed the rule in regard to the accumulated dividends. See 7 Law Rep. 201. The presumption in such cases is, that the person is dead; but not that he died at the end of the seven years, nor at any other particular time. Doe v. Nepean, 5 B. & Ad. 86; 2 M. & W. 894. The time of the death is to be inferred by the jury from the circumstances. Rust v. Baker, 8 Sim. 443; Smith v. Knowlton, 11 N. H. 191; Doe v. It is not necessary that the party be proved to be absent from the United States; it is sufficient, if it appears that he has been absent for seven years, from the particular State of his residence, without having been heard from. - § 42. Partnership. On the same ground, a partnership, or other similar relation, once shown to exist, is presumed to continue, until it is proved to have been dissolved. 1(a) And a seisin, once proved or admitted, is presumed to continue, until a disseisin is proved.2 The opinions, also, of individuals, once entertained and expressed, and the state of mind, once proved to exist, are presumed to remain unchanged, until the contrary appears. Thus, all the members of a Christian community being presumed to entertain the common faith, no man is supposed to disbelieve the existence and moral government of God, until it is shown from his own declarations. In like manner, every man is presumed to be of sane mind, until the contrary is shown; but, if derangement or imbecility be proved or admitted at any particular period, it is presumed to continue, until disproved, unless the derangement was accidental, being caused by the violence of a disease. $^3(b)$

- § 43. A spirit of comity and a disposition to friendly intercourse are also presumed to exist among nations, as well as among individuals. And, in the absence of any positive rule, affirming, or denying, or restraining the operation of foreign laws, courts of justice presume the adoption of them by their own government, unless they are repugnant to its policy, or prejudicial to its interest. § 44. Presumptions of Fact, usually treated as composing the second general head of presumptive evidence, can hardly be said, with propriety, to belong to this branch of the law. They are, in truth, but mere arguments, of which the major premise is not a rule of law; they belong equally to any and every subjectmatter; and are to be judged by the common and received tests of the truth of propositions and the validity of arguments. They depend upon their own natural force and efficacy in generating belief or conviction in the mind, as derived from those connections, which are shown by experience, irrespective of any legal relations. They differ from presumptions of law in this essential respect, that while those are reduced to fixed rules, and constitute a branch of the particular system of jurisprudence to which they belong, these merely natural presumptions are derived wholly and directly from the circumstances of the particular case, by means of the common experience of mankind, without the aid or control of any rules of law whatever. Such, for example, is the inference of guilt, drawn from the discovery of a broken knife in the pocket of the prisoner, the other part of the blade being found sticking in the window of a house, which, by means of such an instrument, had been burglariously entered. These presumptions remain the same in their nature and operation, under whatever

v. Morrow, 14 Ark. 603; Bundy v. Hart, 46 Mo. 463; Reese v. Harris, 27 Ala. 301. This presumption extends only to the general principles of the common law, and not to statutory enactments, such as the statute making contracts formed on Sunday void (Murphy v. Collins, 121 Mass. 6; contra, Brimhall v. Van Campen, 8 Minn. 13); nor to statutes of usury (Cutler v. Wright, 22 N. Y. 472; Hall v. Augustine, 23 Wis. 383); nor to statutes giving an action for damages resulting from death caused by culpable negligence. McDonald v. Mallory, 77 N. Y. 547;

Leonard v. Columbia, &c. Company, 84 N. Y. 48. Cf. Smith v. Whitaker, 23 Ill. 367. And the presumption also only extends to those states and countries in which the common law is the law of the land, i. e. the United States (except Louisiana and Texas) and England. As to the law of other countries, except perhaps the criminal law, so far as concerns mala in se, no presumption is made. In such cases the Court will use the law of its own State for want of proof of other law. Norrise v. Harris, 15 Cal. 226; Flato v. Mulhall, 72 Mo. 522; Du Val v. Marshall, 30 Ark. 230; Savage v. O'Neil, 44 N. Y. 298. § 45. Accomplices. Admissions. There are, however, some few general propositions in regard to matters of fact, and the weight of testimony by the jury, which are universally taken for granted in the administration of justice, and sanctioned by the usage of the bench, and which, therefore, may with propriety be mentioned under this head. Such, for instance, is the caution, generally given to juries, to place little reliance on the testimony of an accomplice, unless it is confirmed, in some material point, by other evidence. There is no presumption of the common law against the testimony of an accomplice; yet experience has shown, that persons capable of being accomplices in crime are but little worthy of credit; and on this experience the usage is founded.2 A similar caution is to be used in regard to mere verbal admissions of a party; this kind of evidence being subject

(a) It has been claimed in certain liquor cases that a sale by a clerk or barkeeper raises a presumption of fact that the sale is authorized by the principal or master. This point was discussed in Com. v. Briant, 142 Mass. 463, and the Court held that such a sale was prima facie evidence of such authorization, using this language: "Although we should admit that a jury might be warranted in inferring that such a sale was authorized, it would not follow that a Court could rule that there is a presumption of fact that it was so. The proposition that there is evidence so. The proposition that there is evidence for the jury to consider, is not identical with the proposition that the evidence if believed raises a presumption of fact. The proposition that there is evidence to be considered, imports that there may be a presumption of fact. But generally it must be left to the jury to say whether there is one, and in many cases that is the main question they have to decide."

This case is followed in Com. v. Stevenson, 142 Mass. 466, deciding the same point, that instructions to the jury that a sale to a minor by a bartender, in the course of his master's lawful business, raises a presumption of fact that the master authorized the sale, is incorrect. In the later case of Com. v. Hayes, 145 Mass. 289, the same rule was affirmed, and it was held that such a sale is evidence which will warrant the jury in finding that it was authorized; but there is no presumption about it; the whole question is one of fact for the jury.

A rule of law is established by statute in Massachusetts by which the report of an auditor is prima facie evidence of the facts therein found, and the party in whose favor it is, need not adduce other evidence of his case until the report is controlled by the other side. The auditor's tradicted by the other side. The auditor's report, however, does not change the bur-den of proof, which, after the evidence is all in, remains on the person on whom it was in the beginning. Phillips v. Cornell, 133 Mass. 546.

If the auditor reports subordinate facts and evidence as well as his findings of fact, the jury may find differently from him although no other evidence is put in, and the party against whom the auditor finds therefore, has the right in any case to demand that the report be submitted to the jury, and can except, if the court takes the case from the jury. Peaslee v. Ross,

143 Mass. 275.

The auditor is a competent witness to testify to the statements of witnesses before him when it is necessary to contradict their testimony in court, by showing that they had previously made inconsistent statements. Tobin v. Jones, 143 Mass.

to much imperfection and mistake.² Thus, also, though lapse of time does not, of itself, furnish a conclusive legal bar to the title of the sovereign, agreeably to the maxim, "nullum tempus occurrit regi;" yet, if the adverse claim could have had a legal commencement, juries are instructed or advised to presume such commencement, after many years of uninterrupted adverse possession or enjoyment. Accordingly, royal grants have been thus found by the jury, after an indefinitely long-continued peaceable enjoyment, accompanied by the usual acts of ownership.³ So, after less than forty years' possession of a tract of land, and proof of a prior order of council for the survey of the lot, and of an actual survey thereof accordingly, it was held, that the jury were properly instructed to presume that a patent had been duly issued. 4(a) In regard, however, to crown or public grants, a longer lapse of time has generally been deemed necessary, in order to justify this presumption, than is considered sufficient to authorize the like presumption in the case of grants from private persons.

§ 46. Conveyances. Juries are also often instructed or advised. in more or less forcible terms, to presume conveyances between private individuals, in favor of the party who has proved a right to the beneficial enjoyment of the property, and whose possession is consistent with the existence of such conveyance, as is to be presumed; especially if the possession, without such conveyance, would have been unlawful, or cannot be satisfactorily explained.1

(a) This presumption is stated by Mr. Stephen, Dig. Evid. art. 100, without commenting on the question whether it is a presumption of fact or law. The Courts, however, still use the same language, that "the jury will be allowed" or "advised" or "instructed" to presume a grant, showing that the presumption has not yet become obligatory as a presumption of law. Little v. Wingfield, 11 Ir. C. L. 63; Carter v. Tinicum Fishing Co., 77 Pa. St. 310.

Ewelme Hospital, 17 Beav. 366; Mayor of Exeter v. Warren, 5 Q. B. 773, 801. And the same principle has been upheld in the United States in favor of the individual as against the State. State v. Wright, 41 N. J. L. 478. See also Calmady v. Rowe, 6 C. B. 861; Beaufort v. Swan, 3 Ex. 413; Healey v. Thorne, 4 Ir. R. C. L. 495.

This is done in order to prevent an apparently just title from being defeated by matter of mere form. Thus, Lord Mansfield declared that he and some of the other judges had resolved never to suffer a plaintiff in ejectment to be nonsuited by a term, outstanding in his own trustees, nor a satisfied term to be set up by a mortgagor against a mortgagee; but that they would direct the jury to presume it surrendered.2 Lord Kenyon also said, that in all cases where trustees ought to convey to the beneficial owner, he would leave it to the jury to presume, where such presumption could reasonably be made, that they had conveyed accordingly.3 After the lapse of seventy years, the jury have been instructed to presume a grant of a share in a proprietary of lands, from acts done by the supposed grantee in that capacity, as one of the proprietors.4 The same presumption has been advised in regard to the reconveyance of mortgages, conveyances from old to new trustees, mesne assignments of leases, and any other species of documentary evidence, and acts in pais, which is necessary for the support of a title in all other respects evidently just. 5 It is sufficient that the party, who asks for the aid of this presumption, has proved a title to the beneficial ownership, and a long possession not inconsistent therewith; and has made it not un-except where a title has been shown, by the party who calls for the presumption, good in substance, but wanting some collateral matter, necessary to make it complete in point of form. In such case, where the possession is shown to have been consistent with the fact directed to be presumed, and in such cases only, has it ever been allowed." And he cites as examples, Lade v. Hirst, 11 Price, 475. And see 24 Pick. 322. The better opinion seems to be that though the court will not, in such case, presume the existence of a deed as a mere inference of law, yet the fact is open for the jury to find, as in other cases. See Rex v. Long Buckby, 7 East, 45; Trials per Pais, 237; Finch, 400; Valentine v. Piper, 22 Pick. 85, 93, 94.

reasonable to believe that the deed of conveyance, or other act essential to the title, was duly executed. Where these merits are wanting, the jury are not advised to make the presumption. 6 (a)

§ 47. Personalty. The same principle is applied to matters belonging to the personalty. Thus, where one town after being set off from another, had continued for fifty years to contribute annually, to the expense of maintaining a bridge in the parent town, this was held sufficient to justify the presumption of an agreement to that effect. And, in general, it may be said that

Studley, 1d. 291; twenty years, Brattle-Square Church v. Bullard, 2 Met. 363; but the latter period is held sufficient. The rule, however, does not seem to depend so much upon the mere lapse of a definite period of time as upon all the circumstances, taken together; the question being exclusively for the jury. clusively for the jury.

Schauber v. Jackson, 2 Wend. 36, 37.

(a) In the later English cases and in the United States, this presumption has been fully recognized. A presumption of this kind has been made several times in this kind has been made several times in favor of a grant of a right of fishing, where the beneficial enjoyment has been proved. Little v. Wingfield, 11 Ir. C. L. 63; Leconfield v. Lonsdale, L. R. 5 C. P. 657; Carter v. Tinicum Fishing Co., 77 Pa. St. 310. Cf. Mills v. Mayor, L. R. 2 C. P. 476. And in general, the enjoyment of an easement or incorporeal hereditament for a long period of time is evidence for the jury of an original grant of the right, although no statute of limitathe right, although no statute of limitathe right, atthough no statute of immunion applies. Kingston v. Leslie, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 3S3; Rooker v. Perkins, 14 Wis. 79; Edson v. Munsell, 10 Allen (Mass.), 557; Nichols v. Boston, 98 Mass. 39; Briggs v. Prosser, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 227; Munro v. Merchant, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 2282. Attorney Congress v. Proprietors & Congress v. Proprietors v. Proprietors v. Proprietors v. Proprietors & Congress v. Proprietors v. Propr 383; Attorney-General v. Proprietors, &c., 3 Gray (Mass.), 1. pp. 62-65; St. Mary's College v. Attorney-General, 3 Jur. x. s. 675. On the same principle, where several mill privileges were originally owned together, but afterwards, for a long series of years, held in severalty by different persons, and from time to time transferred by these owners in severalty to others, there is a presumption of an ancient partition of the property among the proprietors. Munroe v. Gates, 48 Me. 463. So where each one of several joint owners of land takes into his possession separate parcels of the land, and for many years this separate possession continues, this fact gives rise to a presumption of a deed of partition. Russell v. Marks, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 37. So it was held in Missouri, that when a slave had for many years been treated as free, a deed of manumission would be presumed. Lewis v. Hart, 33 Mo. 535. A grant, however, will not be presumed when the possession is explained by evidence showing that such possession was taken in virtue of some title inconsistent with that virtue of some title inconsistent with that which is sought to be proved by such possession. Colvin v. Warford, 20 Md. 357; or by proof of the contents of the deed under which possession was in fact taken (Nicto v. Carpenter, 21 Cal. 455. Cf. Grimes v. Bastrop, 26 Tex. 310); or proof that the enjoyment of the right claimed was resisted continuously by the person whose interests it infringed. person whose interests it infringed. Field

v. Brown, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 74.

The presumption does not arise, moreover, where the exercise of the right is secret, so that no interruption of the exercise by such person would naturally occur. Thus, when one claims the right to the enjoyment of water percolating or to the enjoyment of water percolating or filtrating through adjoining lands to supply a well in his own lands, no enjoyment of the right gives rise to the presumption. Chasemore v. Richards, 7 H. L. C. 349; Roath v. Driscoll, 20 Conn. 533; Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Pa. St. 523; Frazier v. Brown, 12 Ohio St. 294; Stephen Dig. Evid. art. 100.

Dig. Evid. art. 100.

long acquiescence in any adverse claim of right is good ground, on which a jury may presume that the claim had a legal commencement; since it is contrary to general experience for one man long to continue to pay money to another, or to perform any onerous duty, or to submit to any inconvenient claim, unless in pursuance of some contract, or other legal obligation.

§ 48. Scope of this class of presumptions. In fine, this class of presumptions embraces all the connections and relations between the facts proved and the hypothesis stated and defended, whether they are mechanical and physical, or of a purely moral nature. It is that which prevails in the ordinary affairs of life, namely, the process of ascertaining one fact from the existence of another, without the aid of any rule of law; and, therefore, it falls within the exclusive province of the jury, who are bound to find according to the truth, even in cases where the parties and the court would be precluded by an estoppel, if the matter were so pleaded. They are usually aided in their labors by the advice and instructions of the judge, more or less strongly urged, at his discretion; but the whole matter is free before them, unembarrassed by any considerations of policy or convenience, and unlimited by any boundaries but those of truth, to be decided by themselves, according to the convictions of their own understanding. (a)

(a) The general tendency of the modern decisions on the subject of presumptions is to restrict the number of those which take questions of fact from the consideration of the jury. The division of presumptions into three classes; Conclusive and Rebuttable of Law, and Presumptions of Fact, is still adopted by the courts and text writers. In regard to Conclusive Presumptions, Mr. Wharton goes so far as to say that while the class is still said to exist, no perfect individuals of the class can be found. Wharton, Crim. Evid. 8th ed. § 711. Sir Fitz-James Stephen describes it under the head of conclusive proof, as evidence upon the production of which, or a fact upon the proof of which, the judge is bound by law to regard some fact as proved, and to exclude evidence intended to disprove it. Stephen, Dig. Evid. art. I. There are numerous rules or maxims of law, however, which are occasionally put by the Judges in the form of conclusive presumptions, although in reality they are positive rules of law. For instance, it is often said that every man is conclusively presumed to know the law. Ante, § 34 note. So, the so-called presumptions in regard to the criminal responsibility of infants (ante, § 28) are in reality positive limits to the field of criminal responsibility and should form no part of the law of evidence. So, the various statutes of limitation, although included by Mr. Greenleaf among conclusive presumptions (ante, § 16) are positive rules of law. So title by prescription (ante, § 17) belongs rather to the law of Real Property than of Evidence.

Rebuttable Presumptions. This class has been defined as follows: "A presumption means a rule of law that Courts and Judges shall draw a particular inference from a particular fact or from particular evidence, unless and until the truth of such inference is disproved." Stephen, Digest of Evidence, art. I. The rebuttable presumption of law differs from a presumption of fact or ordinary inference, such as men would naturally draw from facts proved, in the following respects:

1. A presumption of law derives its force from law, while the presumption of fact derives its force from logic. It is true that there is any inherent probability that a person who has been regarded with such suspicion as to cause his arrest, and, after a preliminary examination before a magistrate, his imprisonment, and then his presentment by the grand jury, is innocent of the offence with which he is charged, yet there is a rebuttable presumption of law that he is innocent. Or take the case of the presumption created by statute, that a vessel which leaves New York harbor without having a licensed pilot on board shall be presumed to be unseaworthy. N. Y. Laws 1857, ch. 242; Borland v. Mercantile M. Ins. Co., 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 433. There can hardly be said to be any probability that such a vessel is not seaworthy because she has not a pilot on board. Or a statute that one who carries concealed weapons is to be presumed to carry them with evil intent. No one in these times could affirm any probability in that.

2. A presumption of law applies to a class, a presumption of fact to individual cases. It is hardly necessary to illustrate this. Take the presumption of death from seven years' unexplained absence. Whenever this absence is proved, the presumption of death attaches. But if in any special case, it is desired to prove a death at any precise time, within the seven years, the fact of death must be proved by showing the age, constitution, health, worldly condition, of the person in ques-tion, when he was last heard from and in what eircumstances. Re Phené's Trusts L. R. 5 Ch. 139; In re Lewes's Trusts, L. R. 11 Eq. 236; 6 Ch. 356.

3. It is obligatory on juries to find in favor of the party who is supported by a presumption of law in the absence of opposing evidence, while juries may or may not regard a presumption of fact as of Sufficient weight to base a verdict upon. Com. v. Hayes, 145 Mass. 289; Com. v. Briant, 142 Mass. 463.

4. A presumption of law is drawn by the Court, and presumptions of fact are drawn by the jury only. Best, Evid. ubi supra.

Presumptions of Fact. Presumptions of fact are the class from which almost all the presumptions of law, whether rebut-table or conclusive, have been drawn. A presumption of fact is an inference which a reasonable man would draw from certain facts which have been proved to him. Its basis is in logic, its source is probability; it rests on the observed connection between facts, and it requires no law nor Court to give it force.

These presumptions of fact are in reality the same thing as the inference which renders circumstantial evidence admissible, and the remarks which have been made in regard to circumstantial evidence are equally applicable to presumptions. See ante, Circumstantial Evidence, § 13 a. Although the inference must be plain and strong to render the circumstances admissible, yet the jury are not bound to regard the inference, when the facts are admitted and before them. E. g., in Briggs v. Hervey, 130 Mass. 187, Morton, J., says: "The depositing in the post-office of a letter properly addressed, with the postage prepaid, is prima facic evidence that the person to whom it was addressed received it. The evidence that letters were so deposited was competent, and should have been submitted to the jury to be weighed by them in connection with the other evidence in the case. They alone have the right to decide whether the inference that the letters were received, founded upon the probability that the officers of the government will do their duty, and that letters will be duly delivered, is overcome by the other evidence." Ante § 36.

In short, what is a presumption of fact is well summed up by Lord Hatherley in Gardner v. Gardner, L. R. 2 App. Cas. 723, p. 734. "We are to look upon these socalled presumptions simply as deductions which sensible men make from the facts which are laid before them as evidence, open therefore to rebuttal, by the same class of evidence - that is to say, oral testimony - as that by which the propositions they are supposed to point to are demonstrated and proved.

OF THE RULES WHICH GOVERN THE PRODUCTION OF TESTIMONY.

OF THE RULES WHICH GOVERN THE PRODUCTION OF TESTIMONY.

OF THE RELEVANCY OF EVIDENCE.

§ 49. Functions of judge and jury. In trials of fact, without the aid of a jury, the question of the admissibility of evidence, strictly speaking, can seldom be raised; since, whatever be the ground of objection, the evidence objected to must, of necessity, be read or heard by the judge, in order to determine its character and value. In such cases, the only question, in effect, is upon the sufficiency and weight of the evidence. But in trials by jury, it is the province of the presiding judge to determine all questions on the admissibility of evidence to the jury; as well as to instruct them in the rules of law, by which it is to be weighed. Whether there be any evidence or not is a question for the judge; whether it is sufficient evidence is a question for the jury. (a)

(a) Chandler v. Von Roeder, 24 How. (U. S.) 224; Clough v. State, 7 Neb. 320. Relevancy to the issue is the test of admissibility. With the weight of evidence the judge cannot concern himself, except in certain cases, where the testimony comes from tainted sources, as in the case of accomplices and false witnesses, where he may caution but cannot exclude. Underwood v. McVeigh, 23 Gratt. (Va.) 409; Paulette v. Brown, 40 Mo. 52; Callanan v. Shaw, 24 Iowa, 441; Mead v. McGraw, 19 Ohio St. 55; Blanchard v. Pratt, 37 Ill. 243. And see also post, § 380. In United States v. Anthony, U. S. Dist. Ct. North. N. Y., Mr. Justice Hunt directed the jury, upon the evidence, to return a verdict of guilty, every fact in the case being undisputed, — a direction the propriety of which is by no means conceded. See Alb. L. J. 10, 33, 78; Green's Cr. Law R. vol. ii. p. 226 n. There is in every case triable by jury a preliminary question of law for the court, whether or not there is any evidence from which the fact sought to be proved, may be fairly inferred; if there is, that is sufficient to send the case to the jury, no matter how strong may be the proofs to the contrary. School Furniture Co. v. Warsaw School Dist., 122 Pa. St. 501; and, moreover, although it is the right, and in some cases it becomes the duty of the judge to express his opinion upon the character and weight of the testimony which he must submit to the jury, it should be done in such a manner as to leave them in possession of the question that belongs to them. If, notwithstanding the efforts

mine questions of law, was strongly denied, and their province defined, by Story, J., in the United States v. Battiste, 2 Sumn. 243. "Before I proceed," said he, "to the merits of this case, I wish to say a few words upon a point, suggested by the argument of the learned counsel for the prisoner, upon which I have had a decided opinion during my whole professional life. It is, that in criminal cases, and especially in capital cases, the jury are the judges of the law as well as of the fact. My opinion is, that the jury are no more judges of the law in a capital or other criminal case, upon a plea of not guilty, than they are in every civil case tried upon the general issue. In each of these cases, their verdict, when general, is necessarily compounded of law and of fact, and includes both. In each they must necessarily determine the law, as well as the fact. In each they have the physical power to disregard the law, as laid down to them by the court. But I deny that, in any case, civil or criminal, they have the moral right to decide the law according to their own notions or pleasure. On the contrary, I hold it the most sacred constitutional right of every party accused of a crime, that the jury should respond as to the facts, and the court as to the law. It is the duty of the court to instruct the jury as to the law; and it is the duty of the jury to follow the law, as it is laid down by the court. This is the right of every citizen; and it is his only protection. If the jury were at liberty to settle the law for themselves, the effect would be, not only that the law itself would be most uncertain, from the different views which different juries might take of it; but, in case of error, there would be no remedy or redress by the injured party; for the court would not have any right to review the law, as it had been settled by the jury. Indeed, it would be almost impracticable to ascertain what the law, as settled by the jury, actually was. On the contrary, if the court should err, in laying down the law to the

The same subject was more fully considered in Commonwealth v. Porter, 10 Met. 263, which was an indictment for selling intoxicating liquors without license. At the trial the defendant's counsel, being about to argue the questions of law to the jury, was stopped by the judge, who ruled, and so instructed the jury, that it was their duty to receive the law from the court, and implicitly to follow its direction upon matters of law. Exceptions being taken to this ruling of the judge, the point was elaborately argued in bank, and fully considered by the court, whose judgment, delivered by Shaw, C. J., concluded as follows: "On the whole subject, the views of the court may be summarily expressed in the following propositions: That, in all criminal cases, it is competent for the jury, if they see fit, to decide upon all questions of fact embraced in the issue, and to refer the law arising thereon to the court, in the form of a special verdict. But it is optional with the jury thus to return a special verdict or not, and it is within their legitimate province and power to return a general verdict, if they see fit.

of the judge to guide them, they disregard the evidence and the justice of the cause, he may lay his hands upon their verdict and set it aside, but this is the limit of his power in all cases where there is evidence that carries a question to the jury. A binding instruction to the jury is only proper where the evidence is not conflicting, and presents the facts on which the case depends clearly and distinctly, but if the evidence is contradictory, or if it fails to present the facts fully, so that inferences are to be drawn, or the credibility of witnesses is to be settled, the evidence must go to the jury. The value or legal effect of facts not controverted may be determined by the judge, but the facts themselves if in doubt must be found by the jury. Spear v. Phil. Wil. & Balt. R. R. Co., 119 Pa. St. 69.

for example, or of the execution of a deed, these preliminary questions of fact are, in the first instance, to be tried by the

In thus rendering a general verdict, the jury must necessarily pass upon the whole issue, compounded of the law and of the fact, and they may thus incidentally pass on questions of law. In forming and returning such general verdict, it is within the legitquestions of faw. In forming and retaining such general vertice, it is within the legitimate authority and power of the jury to decide definitely upon all questions of fact involved in the issue, according to their judgment, upon the force and effect of the competent evidence laid before them; and if, in the progress of the trial, or in the summing-up and charge to the jury, the court should express or intimate any opinion upon any such question of fact, it is within the legitimate province of the jury to revise, reconsider, and decide contrary to such opinion, if, in their judgment, it is not correct, and warranted by the evidence. But it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury on all questions of law which appear to arise in the cause, and also upon all questions pertinent to the issue, upon which either party may request the direction of the court upon matters of law. And it is the duty of the jury to receive the law from the court, and conform their judgment and decision to such instructions, as far as they understant them in the court them. derstand them, in applying the law to the facts to be found by them; and it is not within the legitimate province of the jury to revise, reconsider, or decide contrary to such opinion or direction of the court in matter of law. To this duty jurors are bound by a strong social and moral obligation, enforced by the sanction of an oath, to the same extent and in the same manner as they are conscientiously bound to decide all questions of fact according to the evidence. It is no valid objection to this view of the duties of jurors, that they are not amenable to any legal prosecution for a wrong decision in any matter of law; it may arise from an honest mistake of judgment, in their apprehension of the rules and principles of law, as laid down by the court, especially in perplexed and complicated cases, or from a mistake of judgment in applying them honestly to the facts proved. The same reason applies to the decisions of juries upon questions of fact clearly within their legitimate powers; they are not punishable for deciding wrong. The law vests in them the power to judge, and it will presume that they judge honestly, even though there may be reason to apprehend that they judge erroneously; they cannot, therefore, be held responsible for any such decision, unless upon evidence which clearly establishes proof of corruption, or other wilful violation of duty. It is within the legitimate power, and is the duty, of the court to superintend the administration of the trial the decision. of duty. It is within the legitimate power, and is the duty, of the court to superintend the course of the trial; to decide upon the admission and rejection of evidence; to decide upon the use of any books, papers, documents, cases, or works of supposed authority, which may be offered upon either side; to decide upon all collateral and incidental proceedings; and to confine parties and counsel to the matters within the issue. As the jury have a legitimate power to return a general verdict, and in that case must pass upon the whole issue, this court are of opinion that the defendant has a right, by himself or his counsel, to address the jury, under the general superintendence of the court, upon all the material questions involved in the issue, and to this extent, and in court, upon all the material questions involved in the issue, and to this extent, and in this connection, to address the jury upon such questions of law as come within the issue to be tried. Such address to the jury, upon questions of law embraced in the issue, by the defendant or his counsel, is warranted by the long practice of the courts in this company which is a such as the courts in th in this Commonwealth in criminal cases, in which it is within the established authorin this Commonwealth in criminal cases, in which it is within the established authority of a jury, if they see fit, to return a general verdict, embracing the entire issue of law and fact." 10 Metc. 285-287. See also the opinion of Lord Mansfield to the same effect, in Rex v. Dean of St. Asaph, 21 How. St. Tr. 1039, 1040; and of Mr. Hargrave, in his note, 276, to Co. Lit. 155, where the earlier authorities are cited. The whole subject, with particular reference to criminal cases, was reviewed with great learning and ability by Gilchrist, J., and again by Parker, C. J., in Pierce's Case, 13 N. H. 536, where the right of the jury to judge of the law was denied; recently affirmed in a very elaborate opinion by Doe, J., in State v. Hodge, 50 N. H. 510. And see, accordingly, People v. Thus the question of probable cause belongs to the court; but where it is a mixed question of law and fact intimately blended, as, for example, where the party's belief is a material element in the question, it has been held right to leave it to the jury, with proper instructions as to the law. M'Donald v. Rooke, 2 Bing. N. C. 217; Haddrick v. Raine, 12 Q. B. 267. And see Taylor v. Willans, 2 B. & Ad. 845; 6 Bing. 183; (d) post, vol. ii. § 454. The judge has a right to act upon all the uncontradicted facts of the case; but where the credibility of witnesses is in question, or some material fact is in doubt, or some inference is attempted to be drawn from some fact not distinctly sworn to, the judge ought to submit the question to the jury. Mitchell v. Williams, 11 M. & W. 216, 217, per Alderson, B.

In trespass de bonis asportatis, the bona fides of the defendant in taking the goods, and the reasonableness of his belief that he was executing his duty, and of his suspicion of the plaintiff, are questions for the jury. Wedge v. Berkeley, 6 Ad. & El. 663; Hazeldine v. Grove, 3 Q. B. 997; Hughes v. Buckland, 15 M. & W. 346. In a question of pedigree, it is for the judge to decide whether the person whose declarations are offered in evidence was a member of the family, or so related as to be entitled to be heard on such a question. The question, what are usual covenants in a deed, is a question for the jury, and not a matter of construction for the court. Bennett v. Womack, 3 C. & P. 96.

In regard to reasonableness of time, care, skill, and the like, there seems to have been some diversity in the application of the principle; but it is conceded that, "whether there has been, in any particular case, reasonable diligence used, or whether unreasonable delay has occurred, is a mixed question of law and fact, to be decided by the jury, acting under the direction of the judge, upon the particular circumstances of each case." Mellish v. Rawdon, 9 Bing. 416, per Tindal, C. J.; Nelson v. Patrick, 2 Car. & K. 641, per Wilde, C. J. whole matter in issue, the law as well as the fact; and the same rule is established in several other States. The legislature of Massachusetts, in 1855 (Acts 1855, c. 152) enacted "that in all trials for criminal offences it shall be the duty of the jury to try, according to established forms and principles of law, all causes which shall be committed to them, and, after having received the instructions of the court, to decide at their discretion, by a general verdiet, both the fact and law involved in the issue, or to find a special verdict at their election; but it shall be the duty of the court to superintend the course of the trials, to decide upon the admission and rejection of evidence, and upon all questions of law raised during the trials, and upon all collateral and incidental proceedings, and also to charge the jury and to allow bills of exception, and the court may grant a new trial in cases of conviction." This act has been before the Supreme Judicial Court for exposition and construction upon exceptions taken to the ruling of the court below in the trial of an indictment against a defendant for being a common seller of intoxicating liquors, and the court has decided, as appears by a note of their decision in the Monthly Law Reporter for September, 1857 (Commonwealth v. Anthes, 20 L. R. 298, s. c. 5 Gray, 185), as follows: "Upon the question whether this statute purports to change the law as already existing and recognized in Commonwealth v. Porter, 10 Metc. 263, the court were equally divided. But by a majority of the court it was held that, if such change of the law is contemplated by the statute, the same is void." This statute is now repealed. See Gen. Stat. p. 898. See also State v. McDonnell, 32 Vt. 531-533.

Whether by the word "month," in a contract, is meant a calendar or lunar month, is a question of law; but whether parties, in the particular case, intended to use it in the one sense or the other, is a question for the jury, upon the evidence of circumstances in the case. (e) The question of the proper functions of the judge and jury in cases where the liability of the defendant is caused by his negligence has been discussed at great length in numerous modern cases, especially those against railways and other car-The result of the best cases seems to agree with the rule laid down by Mr. Greenleaf above, that the "judge is to inform the jury as to the degree of diligence, or care, or skill which the law demands of the party, and what duty it devolves on him, and the jury are to find whether that duty has been done." In ordinary cases of negligence, however, the definition of this legal duty is in the most general form, and is to the effect that negligence consists in doing some act which a person of ordinary care and skill would not do under the circumstances, or in omitting to do some act which a person of ordinary care and skill would do under the circumstances. The jury then finds the negligence as a question of faet. Bridges v. North London Ry. Co., L. R. 7 H. L. 213; Patriek v. Pote, 117 Mass. 297; Jackson v. Metropolitan Ry. Co., L. R. 2 C. P. And it is held that any instruction by the judge that specific facts do or do not constitute negligence or due care is an infringement by the judge of the province of the jury. Thus, where the action was by a servant to recover for a personal injury caused by the fall of an elevator used in the master's business for hoisting goods, and upon which the plaintiff was ascending at the time of the injury, there was evidence that the defendant had instructed his foreman to warn the men of a rule of the house against going upon the elevator. The judge instructed the jury that, if there was such a rule and the foreman neglected to give notice of it to the men, it was the fault of a fellow-servant, and the plaintiff could not recover. On exception it was held that the questions whether any pre-cautions were required, and whether the instructions given to the foreman were a sufficient precaution, were for the jury. Avilla v. Nash, 117 Mass. 318. So in the leading case of Bridges v. North London Ry. Co., supra, Brett, J., says, p. 234: "But the judge has no legal right, either directly or indirectly, to force upon the jury his view of any fact or inference of fact. Yet he will do so if he states questions of fact as if they were questions of law. So where the judge lays down that, if such and such things were done or omitted to be done, there was or was not a want of ordinary care or skill, he has, in my opinion, laid down a proposition of fact and not of What men of ordinary care and skill would or would not do under certain circumstances is matter of experience, and so of fact, which a jury only ought to determine." To the same effect, Philadelphia, &c. Ry. Co. v. Henrice, 92 Pa. St. 431; Eilert v. Green Bay, &c. R. R. Co., 48 Wis. 606. Although negligence is now held a question of fact, yet the earlier cases speak of the question of reasonable care as first instructed by the judge in the principles and rules of law by which they are to be governed in finding a verdict; and these one of law, except in complicated cases. Fletcher v. Boston & Maine R. R. Co., 1 Allen (Mass.), 9. And even now it is said that where the facts are undisputed, and such that only one conclusion can be drawn from them, the question is one of law. O'Neill v. Chicago, &c. R. R. Co., 1 McCrary, C. C. 505.

The most difficult cases have arisen, however, when the question has been whether the case should be withdrawn by the judge from the consideration of the jury, after the plaintiff has put in his whole case. In other words, when the question is whether, supposing all the facts the plaintiff proves are true, they show negligence; or, in still another form, whether there is any evidence of negligence to go to the jury. On this point, the language of Brett, J., in Bridges v. North London Ry. Co., supra, is again a clear expression of the true rule: "It is the duty of the judge to determine whether there is evidence fit to be left to the jury on each of the propositions which it is necessary that the plaintiff should establish. This, being a duty cast exclusively on the judge, is a question to be decided according to some proposition or rule of law. What is that proposition or rule of law which the judge is bound to apply to the evidence in order to determine this question of law? It cannot be merely, Is there evidence? That has no meaning without a farther proposition defining when it is to be considered, in point of law, that there is evidence. Without a proposition or rule which can be enunciated or predicated, there is no rule of law. A rule of law can always be predicated in terms. The proposition seems to me to be this: are there facts in evidence which, if unanswered, would justify men of ordinary reason and fairness in affirming the question which the plaintiff is bound to maintain? It may be said that this is so indefinite as to amount to no rule; that it leaves the judge, after all, to say whether, in his individual opinion, the facts in evidence would prove the proposition, but I cannot think so. surely possible to admit that reasonable and fair men might come to a conclusion which one's self would not arrive at. And judges may be able reasonably to say frequently, that although they would not, upon the facts, have come to the same conclusion to which the jury has come, yet they or he cannot say but that fair and reasonable men might agree with the conclusion of the jury; or, in other words, that although they would not have arrived at the same conclusion, it is not contrary to reason to have arrived at it.

"The judge must therefore, before directing the jury in the terms set forth above, first determine the following questions: Are there facts in evidence upon which, if unanswered, men of ordinary fairness and reason might fairly say that the plaintiff had been injured by some act of commission or omission by the defendants or their servants? Are there facts in evidence upon which, if unanswered, men of ordinary reason and fairness might fairly say that any such act of commission or omission was such as a person of reasonable skill and care, under the same circumstances, would have done or omitted to do? Are there any facts in evidence upon which, if unanswered, men of ordinary reason and fairness might fairly say that the plaintiff had not, in a manner contributing to the accident, done anything or omitted to do anything which a person of ordinary care and skill, under the same circumstances, would not have done or would have done?

"If the judge, not deciding the final issues according to his own individual view, but determining according to the propositions last laid down, holds that there is no evidence fit to be left to the jury, on some one of the cardinal questions before stated, he must direct the jury, as matter of law, that there is no case in favor of the plaintiff, or he must nonsuit the plaintiff. If he holds that there is evidence on each of the cardinal questions, he must leave the case to the jury, according to the direction in point of law cording to the direction in point of before laid down in this opinion. When the judge has so directed the jury as to the law, he has finished all which it is legal for him exclusively to determine in the case." The correctness of these principles was recognized in the later case of Jackson v. Metropolitan Ry. Co., L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 125, though the judges there differed on the question whether there was, in the case at bar, any evidence of negligence. And in the later case of Pearson v. Cox, Id. 369, the same principles are affirmed, Brett, L. J., alluding to his opinion in Bridges Case, and saying that he continued to hold the same opinion. Cf. Manzoni v. Douglas, L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 145. This may now be regarded as the settled law in England, and the conflicts in the decisions must be laid to the conflicting opinions of the judges as to what a reasonable and fair instructions they are bound to follow.² If the genuineness of a deed is the fact in question, the preliminary proof of its execution, given before the judge, does not relieve the party offering it from the necessity of proving it to the jury. The judge only decides whether there is, prima facie, any reason for sending it at all to the jury. $^{4}(f)$

But where a doubt as to the application of the descriptive portion of a deed to external objects arises from a latent ambiguity, and is therefore to be solved by parol evidence, the question of intention is necessarily to be determined by the jury. man might fairly call evidence of negligence. Jackson v. Metropolitan Ry. Co., supra; Ellis v. Great Western Ry. Co., L. R. 9 C. P. 556. The same principles obtain in Massachusetts. In Hinckley v. Cape Cod Railroad, 120 Mass. 257, the question was whether the plaintiff's intestate had used due care, and although the judges were divided on the question whether there was any evidence of due care to go to the jury, they agreed on the princi-ple that if there was no evidence in the case on which a reasonable man could find due care, the case should be withdrawn from the jury. (f) It is the province of the judge who presides at the trial to decide all questions on the admissibility of evidence. It is also his province to decide any preliminary questions of fact, however intricate, the solution of which may be necessary to enable him to determine the other question of admissibility. And his decision is conclusive, unless he saves the question for revision by the full court, on a report of the evidence, or counsel bring up the question on a bill of exceptions which contains a statement of the cvidence. Gorton v. Hadsell, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 511; State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 399; Bartlett v. Smith, 11 Mees. & Wels. 483. Thus the question whether the application to a justice of the peace under a statute, to call a meeting of the proprietors of a meetinghouse, was signed by five at least of such proprietors, as preliminary to the question of the admissibility of the records of such meeting, is for the judge, and not for the jury. Gorton v. Hadsell, ubi supra. Where the admissibility of evidence depends upon the existence of any preliminary fact or condition, it is for the judge to decide whether the fact or condition exists, as whether the witness is an ex-pert (Com. v. Williams, 105 Mass. 62); or a dying declarant entertained hope of recovery (State v. Tilghman, 11 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 513; Rex v. Hucks, 1 Stark. 523); or whether the writing to be used as a test in comparison of handwritings is sufficiently proved (Com. v. Coe, 115 Mass. 481); or a witness has sufficient mental capacity to be admissible (Coleman v. Com. 25 Gratt. (Va.) 865; and what subjects an expert may testify upon (Jones v. Tucker, 41 N. H. 546); whether certain declarations were so far part of the res gestee as to be admissible (State v. Pike, 51 to be admissible (State v. Pike, 51 N. H. 105); and whether possession of stolen property is sufficiently recent to afford the presumption that it was stolen by the possessor. State v. Hodge, 50 N. H. 510. Other instances: Whether a confession is induced by threats (Rex v. Hucks, 1 Stark. 523); whether a witness is unable to attend as preliminary to the

- § 50. General rules as to relevancy. The production of evidence to the jury is governed by certain principles, which may be treated under four general heads or rules. The first of these is, that the evidence must correspond with the allegations, and be confined to the point in issue. The second is, that it is sufficient, if the substance only of the issue be proved. The third is, that the burden of proving a proposition, or issue, lies on the party holding the affirmative. And the fourth is, that the best evidence of which the case, in its nature, is susceptible, must always be produced. These we shall now consider in their order.
- § 51. First. Allegations. Issue. The pleadings at common? law are composed of the written allegations of the parties, terminating in a single proposition, distinctly affirmed on one side, and denied on the other, called the issue. If it is a proposition of fact, it is to be tried by the jury, upon the evidence adduced. And it is an established rule, which we state as the first rule, governing in the production of evidence, that the evidence offered must correspond with the allegations, and be confined to the point in issue. 1 (a) This rule supposes the allegations to be material and necessary. Surplusage, therefore, need not be proved; and the proof, if offered, is to be rejected. The term surplusage comprehends whatever may be stricken from the record, without destroying the plaintiff's right of action; as if, for example, in suing the defendant for breach of warranty upon the sale of goods, he should set forth, not only that the goods were not such as the defendant warranted them to be, but that the defendant well knew that they were not.2 But it is not every immaterial or unadmission of his deposition (Beaufort v. Crawshay, L. R. 1 C. P. 699); or is absent from collusion (Eagan v. Larkin, 1 Arms. M. & O. 403); or a document has been duly executed or stamped (Bartlett v. Smith, 11 M. & W. 483); or comes from the proper custody (Doe v. Keeling, 11 Q. B. 889); or be the original paper required (Froude v. Hobbs, 1 Fost. & Fin. 612); or sufficient search has been made to warrant the introduction of secondary evidence (Bartlett v. Smith, ubi sup.); and generally all other incidental questions bearing upon the admissibility of the evidence offered. Relevancy and admissibility are for the judge: credibility and weight are for the jury. The construction of a written document, where the meaning is to be gathered from the document itself, is for the court. But where the meaning can only be determined by reference to extrinsic facts, the document and the facts must be submitted to the jury. Gibbs v. Gilead, Eccl. Soc., 38 Conn. 153. The lex fori determines the nature, amount, and mode of proof. Mostyn v. Fabrigas 1 Cowp. 174; Bain v. Whitelaven R. R. Co., 3 H. of L. 1; Yates v. Thomson, 3 C. & F. 577; Brown v. Thornton, 6 Ad. & El. 185; Downer v. Chesebrough, 36 Conn. 38. And see also post, vol. iii. § 23.

(a) The reason for this rule, and the necessity for a strict adherence to it, are well explained and illustrated in Malcomson v. Clayton, 13 Moore, P. C. C. 198.

necessary allegation that is surplusage; for if the party, in stating his title, should state it with unnecessary particularity, he must prove it as alleged. Thus, if, in justifying the taking of cattle damage-feasant, in which case it is sufficient to allege that they were doing damage in his freehold, he should state a seisin in fee, which is traversed, he must prove the seisin in fee; 3 for if this were stricken from the declaration, the plaintiff's entire title would be destroyed. And it appears that in determining the question, whether a particular averment can be rejected, regard is to be had to the nature of the averment itself, and its connection with the substance of the charge, or chain, rather than to its grammatical collocation or structure.4

§ 51 a. Evidence must tend to prove issue. It is not necessary, however, that the evidence should bear directly upon the issue. It is admissible if it tends to prove the issue, or constitutes a link in the chain of proof; although, alone, it might not justify a verdict in accordance with it. 1 (a) Nor is it necessary

Apparently, in the case of this anomalous kind of evidence 359. A species of evidence is generally held admissible which is totally irrelevant to any issue raised by the pleadings, but which bears on the general conduct of the case by one side or the other. For instance, it is held that one side may put in evidence the fact that a material witness for the other side is living and within the jurisdiction of the court, and yet has not been called as a witness in the case; or, again, he may argue upon the fact that the opposing party has not testified in his own behalf. Lothrop v. Adams, 133 Mass. 477; Lynch v. Peabody, 137 Mass. 93. And similarly, it is held that if one case of this anomalous kind of evidence, it is competent for either side to put in evidence the fact that the other side has not called the witness, and in argument to allege that the reason for this is that they dared not do so. It is said in a recent case that it is for the jury to determine whether this inference can be drawn from the failure of a party to provide a witness. Com. v. Haskell, 140 Mass. witness. Com. v. Haskell, 140 Mass. 128. It is, however, the duty of the court, before admitting such evidence, to decide upon its admissibility, and that question would seem to turn upon the question, whether such an inference could that its relevancy should appear at the time when it is offered; it being the usual course to receive, at any proper and convenient stage of the trial, in the discretion of the judge, any evidence which the counsel shows will be rendered material by other evidence which he undertakes to produce. If it is not subsequently thus connected with the issue, it is to be laid out of the case. 2 (b) fairly be drawn by the jury when the evidence was before them. Ante, § 13 a.

Even in a criminal case, the fact that there were other witnesses of the offence or circumstances of the case not called, whose testimony would have helped the defendant, may be considered as affecting his side of the case, although the fact that the defendant in a criminal case does not himself testify cannot be used against him. Com. v. Brownell, 145 Mass. 319. See post, § 329 and notes. And in no case is the circumstance that a particular person, who is equally within the control of both parties, is not called as a witness, potent enough to supply independent evidence of a fact which is wholly unproved by other evidence. Diel v. Mo. Pac. R. R.

Co., 37 Mo. App. 459. In many cases the intention with which parties to the case or others did certain acts, is a material question in the case; and under the rules of evidence by which parties interested in the case and parties to the record were incompetent as witnesses, an unusual species of evidence, employed to settle this question was: inferences drawn from similar acts of the party in question. See § 53, and note b, p. 88. Or a presumption of law was drawn from the commission of the act which was conclusive, and rendered the production of evidence of intention unnecessary. vol. 3, ch. 1. But, since by the statutes enacted in most of the States, parties to the suit are admissible as witnesses, it becomes possible to prove their intention by their own testimony.

Accordingly, in many cases the parties have been put on the stand and allowed to testify to their intent in doing the act in question. This evidence is necessarily subject to grave suspicion, but is admissible for what it is worth. Flowers v. Brumbach, 30 Ill. App. 296; Stearns v. Gosselin, 58 Vt. 38; Jefferds v. Alvard, 151 Mass. 95. Better testimony may be had from their declarations accompanying acts in issue, and characterizing them. Elmer v. Fessenden, 151 Mass. 361.

(b) Harris v. Holmes, 30 Vt. 352; U.S. v. Flowery, 1 Sprague's Dec. 109. And no exception lies to the order in which the judge admits the evidence. Com. v. Dam,

107 Mass. 210.

The relevancy of evidence, that is, its logical force to prove the facts in issue, is decided by the presiding judge. Ques-tions arise as to how far before or after the time of the facts in issue the judge should allow the evidence to extend, and to what collateral facts, if any. This question is largely one to be answered by the discre-tion of the presiding judge, the guiding principle being that, besides the facts in issue, and facts immediately relevant thereto, any facts necessary to explain or introduce a fact in issue or relevant fact, or which support or rebut an infer-ence suggested by a fact in issue or relevant fact, are to be received in evidence. Wallace v. Kennelly, 47 N. J. L. 246. So also, facts which though occurring at different times or places have some logical force to prove the principal facts. Thus, where one was indicted for keeping a house of ill-fame between two dates, and the case showed that the house was kept by his wife, and the question was whether he consented to such keeping, the court admitted evidence that he had for five years previously to the beginning of the time laid in the indictment, ordered, directed, persuaded, and used all reasonable and practicable means in his power to prevent his wife from doing the things charged in the indictment. This evidence was admitted upon the question of his state of mind upon the subject. Com. v. Hill, 145 Mass. 305.

So on trial of a complaint for keeping a gambling place, at a certain day, proof that the place was kept for such purposes through ten days previous may be admissible. Com. v. Ferry, 146 Mass. 203. So when the value of land is in question, evidence of sales of other land in the vicinity may be shown if so near in time and so like in character as, in the opinion of the presiding judge, to form a proper test

§ 52. Collateral facts inadmissible. This rule excludes all evidence of collateral facts, or those which are incapable of affording of the value of the land in question. Roberts v. Boston, 149 Mass. 353; Patch v. Boston, 146 Mass. 52; Chandler v. Jamaica Pond Aqueduet Corp., 122 Mass. 305; Thompson v. Boston, 148 Mass. 388. So evidence of the state of mind of a person may be rejected in the discretion of the judge, if it applies to a period long after the time in issue. Wright v. Wright, 139 Mass. 177.

It is said in a recent case in Massachusts that the objection to the introduction of evidence of collateral facts is purely practical, and it seems to be intimated that such evidence might be admitted whenever the collateral fact has a sufficient tendency to prove a fact in issue, and when it can be proved without unreasonably protracting the trial. Reeve v.

Dennett, 145 Mass. 23.

A well established exception to the rule excluding evidence of collateral facts is the admission of similar facts in certain cases to show probable similar results or actions. Generally speaking, such evidence is inadmissible. Thus, where the question in an action of negligence was whether a wagon was overloaded or not, evidence that at other times the wagon was overloaded, whether frequently or not, was held inadmissible. Whitney v. Gross, 140 Mass. 232. So where the action was based on the negligence of the defendant's foreman, it was held that other specific acts of his negligence before the accident were inadmissible. Hatt v. Nay, 144 Mass. 186. In Cleveland, &c. R. R. Co. v. Wynant (Ind.), 35 Am. & Eng. R. C. 328, where the plaintiff sued for injuries through his horse taking fright at a boxcar standing partially upon the public highway,—testimony that other horses had taken fright at the same car was held inadmissible. In Hudson v. Chicago, &c. R. R. Co., 59 Iowa, 581, which was an action for an injury to a horse by reason of the negligent and defective construction of a railroad crossing, evidence of a former and similar accident which happened to another at the same place was held not competent. In Smith v. Central R. & B. Co. (Ga.), 25 Am. & Eng. R. C. 546, which was an action for an injury received by a passenger stepping off a wall after alighting from a train, evidence that another person had fallen from the same place, was held improperly admitted. In Early v. Lake Shore, &c. R. R. Co. (Mich.), 30 Am. & Eng. R. C. 163, which was an action for an injury received by falling into a turn-table while plaintiff was passing along the street on a dark night, it was held that the exclusion of evidence of other and previous accidents at the same place was not erroneous. Cf. Baxter v. Doe, 142 Mass. 558.

In other cases however such evidence has been held to be admissible on the question of notice, e. g. when certain persons are charged with the duty of keeping highways, bridges, crossings, or other structures in a safe condition, or of keeping only competent persons in their service, or where the question is as to the safety or availability of the machinery or contrivances designed for the particular purpose or for a practical use, such evidence shows whether the machine was suitable for the use for which it was designed in the one case, or that occurrences of a character to make the defect or incompetency notorious had taken place in the other thereby affecting with notice those who were charged with negligence in the matter. Darling v. Westmoreland, 52 N. H. 401; Kent v. Lincoln, 32 Vt. 591; Quinland v. Utica, 74 N. Y. 603; House v. Metealf, 27 Conn. 632; Chicago v. Powers, 42 Ill. 169; Dist. of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U. S. 519; Delphi v. Lowery, 74 Ind. 520; Augusta v. Hafers, 61 Ga. 48; Osborne v. Bell, 62 Mich. 218. In Wooley v. Grand St., &c. R. R. Co., 83 N. Y. 121, which was an action for personal injuries, caused by the plaintiff's sleigh striking against a switch laid down in the city street, it was held not error to receive evidence that there had been other accidents at the same switch. In Morse v. Minneapolis & St. Louis R. R. Co., 30 Minn. 465, which was an action by an engineer employed by the Railroad Co. for an injury caused by a defective track, plaintiff was permitted to show that other engines and cars had missed the track at the same point both before and after the accident complained of. The Supreme Court held that this was proper for the purpose of showing the defective character of the track.

It is a well established rule that one cannot be proved guilty of an offense for which he is on trial, by showing that at another time he committed a similar offense. Sullivan v. O'Leary, 146 Mass. 322; Jordan v. Osgood, 109 Mass. 457; Com. v. Jackson, 132 Mass. 16. Thus, when one was sned for slander, evidence that he had slandered another person two or three years before was held inadmisany reasonable presumption or inference as to the principal fact or matter in dispute; and the reason is, that such evidence tends to draw away the minds of the jurors from the point in issue, and to excite prejudice and mislead them; and moreover the adverse party having had no notice of such a course of evidence, is not prepared to rebut it. 1(a) Thus, where the question between landsible. Sullivan v. O'Leary, supra. This subject is more fully discussed in sections 52 and 53 and notes.

(a) So in Lincoln v. Taunton Copper Manufacturing Company, 9 Allen (Mass.), 181, where the action was for the deterioration of plaintiff's land, caused by the escape of noxious substances from the defendant's factory, which were carried by water to the plaintiff's land, it was held that evidence offered by the plaintiff to show the bad condition of similarly situated meadows upon the same stream, and in the vicinity of the defendant's works, was properly rejected, on the ground that this would result in the multiplication of issues. Cf. Hawks v. Charlemont, 110 Mass, 110.

In like manner it is not allowable for an officer, sued for misconduct, to show that other officers were accustomed to act in the same way. Cutter v. Howe, 122 Mass. 541. Nor a ferry company, sued for the loss of animals which fell off the ferry-boat and were drowned, to show that such a boat had been used for a long time previously and no accident had occurred. Lewis v. Smith, 107 Mass. 334. Cf. Peverly v. Boston, 136 Mass. 366; Denver, &c. R. R. Co. v. Glasscot, 4 Col. 270; Newsom v. Georgia R. R. Co., 62 Ga. 339; Durbrow v. McDonald, 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 130; Wentworth v. Smith, 44 N. H. 419. If, however, the evidence offcred, although not directly applicable to the point in issue, is of such a nature as, in the opinion of the judge, to support the issue indirectly, and does not raise a collateral issue, it is admissible. Thus where, in an action for injuries received on a highway, evidence is offered as to the state of the highway at a short distance from the place of the accident, before or after the accident, if within such a time as renders it probable, under the circumstances, that no change has taken place, it is admissible. Berrenberg v. Boston, 137 Mass. 231; Woodcock v. Worcester, 138 Mass. 231; Woodcock v. Worcester, 138 Mass. 268; Todd v. Rowley, 8 Allen (Mass.), 51; Bailey v. Trumbull, 31 Conn. 581; Walker v. Westfield, 39 Vt. 246; Sherman v. Kortright, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 267. So where several crimes are committed in so short a time that, in order to prove one completely, proof of others must be included, such proof is admissible. Mason v. State, 42 Ala. 532. See also post, § 53, note.

The value of any property may generally be proved by the value of similar property under similar conditions, the relevancy of the evidence for such purpose being always a question for the court. Paine v. Boston, 4 Allen (Mass.), 168; Benham v. Dunbar, 103 Mass. 365; Isbell v. New York, &c. R. R. Co., 25 Conn. 556; Carlton v. Hescox, 107 Mass. 410; Atchison, &c. R. R. Co. v. Harper, 19 Kans. 529; Cross v. Wilkins, 43 N. H. 332; Melvin v. Bullard, 35 Vt. 268.

The question what facts are collateral must necessarily depend largely on the facts of the individual case. Mr. Stephen, Dig. Evid. says: "Facts which, though not in issue, are so connected with a fact in issue as to form a part of the same transaction or subject-matter, are deemed to be relevant to the fact with which they are so connected." Art. 3. The unavoidable generality of such a rule lessons its practical value, as the question, what facts are so connected, is left unanswered. Mr. Taylor, Evidence, § 316, says, after giving the rule in Mr. Greenleaf's words: "The due application of this rule will occasionally tax to the utmost the firmness and discrimination of the judge, so that while he shall reject as too remote every fact which merely furnishes a fanciful analogy or conjectural inference, he may admit as relevant the evidence of all those matters which shed a real, though perhaps indirect and feeble light on the question in issue."

There is a class of cases where similar

There is a class of cases where similar unconnected facts are admitted; i. e. where experts have been permitted to testify to their opinions, and these opinions are based on experiments in which the conditions of the fact in issue which their opinion is given to sustain are reproduced as nearly as possible, the experts may be asked to state their experiments to the jury, so far as they are connected with and jury, so tar as they are connected with and illustrate the opinions which they have given. Eidt v. Cutter, 127 Mass. 522; Williams v. Taunton, 125 Id. 34; Lincoln v. Taunton Copper Company, 9 Allen (Mass.), 181; Com. v. Piper, 120 Mass. 185. And so in general where the question is a matter of science, and where the facts proved, though not directly in issue, tend to illustrate the opinions of scientific tend to illustrate the opinions of scientific witnesses. Thus, where the point in dispute was whether a sea-wall had caused the choking up of a harbor, and engineers were called to give their opinions as to the effect of the wall, proof that other harbors on the same coast, where there were no embankments, had begun to be choked about the same time as the harbor in question, was admitted, as such evidence served to elucidate the reasoning of the skilled witnesses. Folkes v. Chadd, 3 Doug. 157; M'Fadden v. Murdock, I. R. 1 C. L. 211.

Evidence is always admissible which shows that a person had a motive for doing an act, or made preparation for such act, if the act is in issue or tends to prove a fact in issue (Com. v. Hudson, 97 Mass. 565; McKee v. People, 36 N. Y. 113; Kelsoe v. State, 47 Ala. 573; Boyd v. State, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 319; Garber v. State, 4 Cold. (Tenn.) 161, 165; Kolb v. Whiteley, 3 G. & J. 188; Stephen, Dig. Evid. art. 7), or which shows the subsequent conduct of the person to be such as would have been likely if the act had been committed. Furnas v. Durgin, 119 Mass. 500; Butler v. Collins, 12 Cal. 457.

So, also, evidence which explains any fact in issue, or identifies any person or thing, or fixes the time or place of an act, or shows the relation of parties to an act, or shows an opportunity for the occurrence of such act, or shows the relevancy of other facts, is admissible for those purposes. Steven, Dig. Evid., art. 9; Mason v. State, 42 Ala. 532; Rex v. Pearce, Peake, 75; Rex v. Egerton, R. & R. 375; Rex v. Briggs, 2 Moo. & R. 199; Rex v. Rooney, 7 C. & P. 517.

It will generally be found that the circumstances of the parties to the suit, and the position in which they stood when the matter in controversy occurred (Woodward v. Buchanan, L. R. 5 Q. B. 285), are proper subjects of evidence; and indeed the change in the law, making par-ties witnesses for themselves, has rendered this proof of "surrounding circumstances" still more important than formerly. Dowling v. Dowling, 10 Ir. C. Law, 241, where it was held that, in an action for money lent, the poverty of the lender was § 53. Exceptions. In some cases, however, evidence has been received of facts which happened before or after the principal transaction, and which had no direct or apparent connection with it; and therefore their admission might seem, at first view, to constitute an exception to this rule. But those will be found to have been cases in which the knowledge or intent of the party was a material fact, on which the evidence, apparently collateral, and foreign to the main subject, had a direct bearing, and was therefore admitted. Thus, when the question was, whether the defendant, being the acceptor of a bill of exchange, either knew that the name of the payee was fictitious, or else had given a general authority to the drawer to draw bills on him payable to fictitious persons, evidence was admitted to show that he had accepted other bills, drawn in like manner, before it was possible to have transmitted them from the place at which they bore date.1 So, in an indictment for knowingly uttering a forged document, or a counterfeit bank-note, proof of the possession, or of the prior or subsequent utterance of other false documents or notes, though of a different description, is admitted, as material to the question of guilty knowledge or intent.2 So, in actions for defamation, evidence of other language, spoken or written by the defendant at other times, is admissible under the general issue in proof of the spirit and intention of the party in uttering the words or publishing the libel charged; and this, whether the language thus proved be in itself actionable or not.3 (a) Cases of this sort, therefore, instead of being exceptions to the rule, fall strictly within it. § 53 a. Title to lands. In proof of the ownership of lands, by acts of possession, the same latitude is allowed. It is impossible, admissible of similar acts of the prisoner at different times, if such acts tend to prove the existence of such guilty knowledge or felonious intent. Thus, where the prisoner was indicted for an attempt to obtain money from a pawnbroker by false pretences that a ring was a diamond ring, it was held that evidence that he had shortly before offered other false articles of jewelry to other pawnbrokers was admissible to show guilty knowledge. Reg. v. Francis, 12 Cox, C. C. 612. In Com. v. Jackson, 132 Mass. 16, it was held that, where one was indicted for falsely pretending that a certain horse was sound, with knowledge that such assertion was false, it was held that evidence of the circumstances of three other sales of horses made by the same person, with false representations, was inadmissible, on the ground that there was no evidence of any continuing plan running through the whole transaction, nor was any instru-ment used like the base coin or false plate of counterfeiters, which might have been nttered innocently, and of which a guilty knowledge was important to be shown. This case is somewhat opposed to the current of authorities. Ci. Reg. v. Francis, supra; Reg. v. Geering, 18 L. T. N. s. M. C. 215; and Com. v. Coe, 115 Mass. 481. So, also, other receipts of stolen goods from same thief, knowing them to be stolen, are admissible in an indictment for receiving stolen goods, on the question of intent (Copperman v. People, 56 N. Y. 591), though it also proves a violation of another law. Schaser v. State, 36 Wis. 429; Coleman v. People, 58 N. Y. 555; Schriedly v. State, 23 Ohio St. 130. And. as supporting this general principle, see Com. v. Hall, 4 Allen (Mass.), 305; Com. v. McCarthy, 119 Mass. 354; Com. v. Cotton, 138 Mass. 500; Gassenheimer v. State, 52 Ala. 314; Hall v. But the rule was more cautiously laid down in a case in Pennsylvania, where it was said that, to make one criminal act evidence of another, a connection must have existed in the mind of the actor, linking them together for some purpose he intended to accomplish; or it must be necessary to identify the person of the actor by a connection which shows that he who committed one act must have done the other. Schaffner v. Com., 72 Pa. St. 60.

Where it is necessary to prove the crime of adultery, as this is generally done by circumstantial evidence, to prove two points,—the adulterous disposition and the opportunity for adulterous intercourse,—evidence may be given of other adulterous acts, before and after the adultery charged, to show the existence of the adulterous disposition. Thayer v. Thayer, 101 Mass. 111 (overruling Com. v. Thrasher, 11 Gray (Mass.), 450, and Com. v. Horton, 2 ld. 354, contra); Boddy v. Boddy, 30 L. J. Pr. & Mat. 23; Com. v. Curtis, 97 Mass. 574.

Evidence is also admissible whenever there is a question whether an act was accidental or intentional, to show that the act was one of a series of similar occurrences, in each of which the person doing the act was concerned. Stephen, Dig. Evid. art. 12. Thus it has been held that where a prisoner was charged with the murder of her child by poison, and her defence was that the death resulted from the accidental taking of such poison, evidence was admissible to prove that two other children of the prisoner, and a lodger in her house, had died from the same poison. Reg. v. Cotton, 12 Cox, C. C. 400. And to the same effect are Reg. v. Geering, 18 L. J. M. C. 215; Reg. v. Garner, 3 F. & F. 681; Reg. v. Heesom, 14 Cox, C. C. 40. So where the defendant was tried for suffocating her infant in bed, evidence was admitted that the defendant had had four other children who died at early ages by causes not shown. Reg. v. Roden, 12 Cox, C. C. 630, per Leech, J., who followed Reg. v. Cotton, supra, and said that the Lord Chief Justice and he were consulted by Archibald, J., who presided in that case, and who also consulted Pollock, B. And to this effect are Wood v. United States, 16 Peters (U. S.), 342; Faucett v. Nichols, 64 N. Y. 383; Friend v. Hamill, 34 Md. 298; Com. v. Robinson, 146 Mass. 571. So on question of guilty knowledge whether certain bills were forged, it was held that evidence of the defendant's subsequent possession and use of other similar forged bills, knowing them to be false, in a continuous series of transactions, was competent to show that his use of the former was not innocent. Com. v. White, 145 Mass. 392; People v. Everhardt, 104 N. Y. 595. Where a prisoner is tried for a particular crime, it is always competent to show upon the question of his guilt, that he had made or as has been observed, to confine the evidence to the precise spot on which a supposed trespass was committed; evidence may be given of acts done on other parts, provided there is such a common character of locality between those parts and the spot in question, as would raise a reasonable inference in the minds of the jury that the place in dispute belonged to the party, if the other parts did. The evidence of such acts is admissible proprio vigore, as tending to prove that he who did them is the owner of the soil; though if they were done in the absence of all persons interested to dispute them, they are of less weight. 1(a) attempted at some prior time, not too distant, to commit the same offense. People v. O'Sullivan, 104 N. Y. 483; State v. Ward, 61 Vt. 181; Com. v. Jackson, 132 Mass. 16; State v. Knapp, 45 N. H. 148, 156; Sharp v. State, 15 Tex. App. 171; State v. Walters, 45 Iowa, 389; State v. Way, 5 Neb, 287. Upon the trial of a prisoner for nurder it is competent to show that he had made previous threats or attempts to kill his victim. People v. Jones, 99 N. Y. 667. Upon the same principle it is competent to show that one charged with rape had previously declared his intention to commit the offence, or had previously made an unsuccessful attempt to do so, and this evidence is not rendered incompetent because it comes from the complainant herself. It may not be as valuable, or trustworthy, or important, as if it had come from other witnesses. People v. O'Sullivan, supra.

The rule excluding evidence of other crimes does not apply, moreover, when the crime charged in the indictment is so linked with some other crime that, in proving one, the same evidence would prove the other. Thus, where a scheme is formed for the commission of several crimes, and an indictment is brought for the commission of one, evidence of the preparation made to carry out the scheme is admissible, though involving proof of other crimes; for evidence which has a direct bearing upon the crime charged does not become inadmissible because it proves some other crime. Com. v. Scott, 123 Mass. 222; Com. v. Campbell, 7 Allen (Mass.), 541; Com. v. Corkin, 136 Mass. 429. So where one was accused of larceny, evidence which shows his whereabouts at the time of the larceny is admissible, although it proves a distinct larceny. State v. Folwell, 14 Kans. 105; Phillip v. People, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 353; Rex v.

Baker, 2 Moo. & R. 53; and cf. Rex v. Wiley, 1 N. R. 94; Brown v. Com., 73 Pa. St. 321.

In civil cases, where the intent or mental state of a person is a material fact, evidence of similar acts to that which forms the gist of the action may be given in issue if they tend to show the state of mind of such person. This kind of evidence is most frequently given when the question of fraud is raised. In such a case, evidence of other acts of a similar nature, done by the same person, resulting in injury to other people or an unlawful advantage to the person doing them, is admissible to show the fraudulent intent. Blake v. Albion Life Assurance Society, L. R. 4 C. P. Div. 94; Huntingford v. Massey, 1 F. &. F. 690; Jordan v. Osgood, 109 Mass. 457; Castle v. Bullard, 23 How. (U. S.) 172; Butler v. Collins, 12 Cal. 457; French v. White, 5 Duer (N. Y.), 254.

In civil causes, too, evidence of collateral facts is sometimes received for the purpose of confirming the testimony of witnesses. For instance, where a party was sued on a bill of exchange, which had been accepted in his name by another person, and evidence had been given that this person had a general authority from the defendant to accept bills in his name, the court held that an admission by the defendant of his liability on another bill so accepted, was receivable in evidence, in order to confirm the witness who had spoken to the general authority. § 54. General character. To this rule may be referred the admissibility of evidence of the general character of the parties. In civil cases, such evidence is not admitted, unless the nature of the action involves the general character of the party, or goes directly to affect it. 1 (a) Thus, evidence impeaching the previous general character of the wife or daughter, in regard to chastity, is admissible in an action by the husband or father for seduction: and this, again, may be rebutted by counter proof.² But such evidence, referring to a time subsequent to the act complained of, is rejected.3 And, generally, in actions of tort, wherever the defendant is charged with fraud from mere circumstances, evidence of his general good character is admissible to repel it.4

Kellogg, 3 Mass. 189; Foulkes v. Sellway, 3 Esp. 236; Bamfield v. Massey, 1 Campb. 460; Dodd v. Norris, 3 Campb. 519.

⁴ Ruan v. Perry, 3 Caines, 120. See also Walker v. Stephenson, 3 Esp. 284. This case of Ruan v. Perry has sometimes been mentioned with disapprobation; but, when correctly understood, it is conceived to be not opposed to the well-settled rule, that evidence of general character is admissible only in cases where it is involved in the issue. In that case the commander of a national frigate was sued in trespass for seizing and detaining the plaintiff's vessel, and taking her out of her course, by means whereof she was captured by an enemy. The facts were clearly proved; but the question was, whether the defendant acted in honest obedience to his instructions from the navy department, which were in the case, or with a fraudulent intent, and in collusion with the captors, as the plaintiff alleged to the jury, and attempted to sustain by some of the circumstances proved. It was to repel this imputation of fraudulent intent, inferred from slight circumstances, that the defendant was permitted to appeal to his own "fair and good reputation." And in confirming this decision in bank, it was observed that, "it actions of tort and especially charging a defendant with gross depravity and fraud." from slight circumstances, that the defendant was permitted to appeal to his own "fair and good reputation." And in confirming this decision in bank, it was observed that, "in actions of tort, and especially charging a defendant with gross depravity and fraud, upon circumstances merely, evidence of uniform integrity and good character is oftentimes the only testimony which a defendant can oppose to suspicious circumstances." On this ground this case was recognized by the Court as good law, in Fowler v. Etna Fire Ins. Co., 6 Cowen, 675. And five years afterwards, in Townsend v. Graves, 3 Paige, 455, 456, it was again cited with approbation by Chancellor Walworth, who laid it down as a general rule of evidence, "that if a party is charged with a crime, or any other act involving moral turpitude, which is endeavored to be fastened upon him by circumstantial evidence, or by the testimony of witnesses of doubtful credit, he may introduce proof of his former good character for honesty and integrity, to rebut the presumption of guilt arising from such evidence, which it may be impossible for him to contradict or explain." In Gough v. St. John, 16 Wend. 646, the defendant was sued in an action on the case, for a false representation as to the solvency of a third person.

So, also, in criminal prosecutions, the charge of a rape, or of an assault with intent to commit a rape, is considered as involving not only the general character of the prosecutrix for chastity, but the particular fact of her previous criminal connection with the prisoner, though not with other persons. 5 (b) And in all cases, where evidence is admitted touching the general character of the party, it ought manifestly to bear reference to the nature of the charge against him.6

§ 55. Same subject. It is not every allegation of fraud that may be said to put the character in issue; for, if it were so, the defendant's character would be put in issue in the ordinary form of declaring in assumpsit. This expression is technical, and confined to certain actions, from the nature of which, as in the preceding instances, the character of the parties, or some of them, is of particular importance. This kind of evidence is therefore rejected, whenever the general character is involved by the plea

The representation itself was in writing, and verbal testimony was offered, tending to show that the defendant knew it to be false. To rebut this charge, proof that the defendant sustained a good character for honesty and fairness in dealing was offered and admitted. Cowen, J., held, that the fraudulent intent was a necessary inference of law from the falsity of the representation; and that the evidence of character was improperly admitted. He proceeded to cite and condemn the case of Rnan v. Perry, as favoring the general admissibility of evidence of character in civil actions, for injuries to property. But such is manifestly not the doctrine of that case. It only decides, that where intention (not knowledge) is the point in issue, and the proof consists of slight circumstances, evidence of character is admissible. The other judges agreed that the evidence was improperly admitted in that case, but said nothing as to the case of Rnan v. Perry. They denied, however, that fraud was in such cases an inference of law.(c) show that the defendant knew it to be false. To rebut this charge, proof that the ference of law. (c)

The ground on which evidence of good character is admitted in criminal prosecutions is this, that the intent with which the act, charged as a crime, was done, is of the essence of the issue; agreeably to the maxim, "Nemo reus est, nisi mens sit rea;" and the prevailing character of the party's mind, as evinced by the previous habit of his life, is a material element in discovering that intent in the instance in question. Upon the same principle, the same evidence ought to be admitted in all other cases, whatever be the form of proceeding, where the intent is material to be found as a fact involved in the issue.

(a) It seems now settled that when a plaintiff in a suit for malicious prosecution founds his action in part on an injury done to his character by such prosecution, he thereby puts his general character in issue, and that whenever the action is used as a means of reparation for an injury, in whole or in part, to general character, the plaintiff in such procedure must stand in precisely the same attitude that a plaintiff in an action for libel or slander assumes, and that the general bad character of the plaintiff at the time of the alleged grievance is admissible on the part of the defence in mitigation of damages, on the broad ground that it cannot be just that a man of infamous character should, for the same libellous matter, be entitled to equal damages with the man of unblemished reputation. O'Brien v. Frasier, 47 N. J. L. 354; McIntire v. Levering, 148 Mass. 546; Bacon v. Towne, 4 Cush. 217; Fitzgibbon v. Brown, 43 Me. 169. Whether such testimony is proper on the issue of reasonable cause for the conduct of the defendant, is a for the conduct of the declaration, is a question not fully settled. O'Brien v. Frasier, sup., but it was held relevant in McIntire v. Levering, sup.

In Pennsylvania, in civil cases, evidence of general character is not admissible, unless from the nature of the action, character is directly drawn in issue, as in libel or slander and seduction. Putting character in issue, is in that State a technical expression which does not signify merely that personal reputation is incidentally involved in the consequences or results of the action, but that the action in its nature directly involves the question of character. Thus in Nash v. Gilkeson, 5 S. & R. 352, evidence of the defendant's good character was rejected although actual fraud was imputed to him in the evidence of the plaintiff; and in Anderson v. Long, 10 S. & R. 55, the plaintiff was refused permission to show good character, although the defendant set up his fraud by way of defence. In Porter v. Seiler, 23 Pa. St. 424, the action of trespass was brought to recover damages for an injury wilfully inflicted with a knife, and evidence of the defendant's good character, as a peaceable man was excluded when offered for the purpose of rebutting malice. So in Zitzer v. Merkel, 24 Pa. St. 408, it was held that evidence of the defendant's good character was inadmissible in an action on the case for seduction. In Porter v. Seiler, supra, the authorities are carefully collected, and the whole subject elab-

character of the party, in regard to any particular trait, is not in issue, unless it be the trait which is involved in the matter charged against him; and of this it is only evidence of general reputation, which is to be admitted, and not positive evidence of general bad conduct. 8 (c)

Walter, 2 Campb. 251; Williams v. Callender, Hol's Cas. 307; 2 Stark. Evid. 216. In Foot v. Tracy, 1 Johns. 46, the Supreme Court of New York was equally divided upon this question; Kent and Thompson, JJ., being in favor of admitting the evidence, and Livingston and Tompkins, JJ., against it. In England, according to the later authorities, evidence of the general bad character of the plaintiff seems to be regarded as irrelevant, and therefore inadmissible. Phil. & Am. on Evid. 488, 489; Cornwall v. Richardson. Rv. & Mood. 305; Jones v. Stevens. 11 on Evid. 483, 489; Cornwall v. Richardson, Ry. & Mood. 305; Jones v. Stevens, 11 Price, 235. In this last case it is observable, that though the reasoning of the learned judges, and especially of Wood, B., goes against the admission of the evidence, even though it be of the most general nature, in any case, yet the record before the court contained a plea of justification aspersing the professional character of the plaintiff in general averments, without stating any particular acts of bad conduct; and the point was, whether, in support of this plea, as well as in contradiction of the declaration, the defendant should give evidence that the plaintiff was of general bad character and repute, in his practice and business of an attorney. The Court strongly condemned the pleading as reprehensible, and said that it ought to have been demurred to, as due to the Court, and to the judge who tried the cause. See J'Anson v. Stuart, 1 T. R. 748; 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 37. See also Rhodes v. Bunch, 3 McCord, 66. In Williston v. Smith, 3 Kerr, 443, which was an action for slander by charging the defendant with larceny, the defendant, in mitigation of damages, offered evidence of the plaintiff's general bad character; which the judge at Nisi Prius rejected; and the Court held the rejection proper; observing that, had the evidence been to the plaintiff's general character for honesty, it might have been admitted.

In some cases, reputation for a special trait or characteristic becomes relevant to the case. For instance, where the question was, whether a sale was absolute with a credit, or conditional, it was held that the buyer's bad reputation for financial ability was admissible as tending to show that the sale was not a credit. Buswell that the sale was not a credit. B Trimmer Co. v. Case, 144 Mass. 350.

So in an action against one for injuries sustained while in his employment, working on a pile-driver, through the negligence of the defendant's foreman, it was held that evidence was admissible that the foreman's reputation for competency was bad. This evidence was admitted on the ground that it was the duty of the defendant to procure and retain a competent person as foreman in his employ; and the evidence of reputation was admitted as affecting the defendant's knowledge of the foreman's incompetency. Hatt v. Nay, 144 Mass.

So, in a similar case, the offer of the plaintiff to show that a fellow-servant "was generally reputed to be infirm in the senses of sight and hearing, and in physical strength," was made for the purpose of proving that the defendant either knew of these infirmities or by the exercise of reasonable care would have known of them; and it was held that the evidence was competent on the ground that the master is bound to use reasonable care in selecting his servants, and if a person is incompetent for the work he is employed to do, the fact that he was generally reputed in the community to want those qualities which are necessary for the proper per-formance of the work, certainly has some tendency to show that the master would have found out that the servant was incompetent, if proper means had been taken to ascertain the qualifications of the servant. CHAPTER II.

OF THE SUBSTANCE OF THE ISSUE.

§ 56. Sufficiency of evidence. A second rule which governs in the production of evidence is, that it is sufficient, if the substance of the issue be proved. In the application of this rule, a distinction is made between allegations of matter of substance, and allegations of matter of essential description. The former may be substantially proved; but the latter must be proved with a degree of strictness, extending in some cases even to literal precision. No allegation, descriptive of the identity of that which is legally essential to the claim or charge, can ever be rejected. (a) Thus in an action of malicious prosecution, the plaintiff alleges that he was acquitted of the charge on a certain day; here the substance of the allegation is the acquittal, and it is sufficient, if this fact be proved on any day, the time not being material. But if the allegation be, that the defendant drew a bill of exchange of a certain date and tenor, here every allegation, even to the precise day of the date, is descriptive of the bill, and essential to its identity, and must be literally proved.² So also, as we have already seen, in justifying the taking of cattle damage feasant, because it was upon the close of the defendant, the allegation of a general freehold title is sufficient; but if the party states, that he was seised of the close in fee, and it be traversed, the precise estate, which he has set forth, becomes an essentially descriptive allegation, and must be proved as alleged. In this case the essential and non-essential parts of the statement are so connected as to be incapable of separation, and therefore both are alike material.3

Palmer, 3 B. & C. 4, will, on closer examination, result merely in this, that matters of description are the started for the control of the control of</sup> tion are matters of substance, when they go to the identity of anything material to the action. Thus the rule will stand, as originally stated, that the substance, and this alone, must be proved.

§ 57. Matter of description. Whether an allegation is or is not so essentially descriptive, is a point to be determined by the judge in the case before him; and it depends so much on the particular circumstances, that it is difficult to lay down any precise rules by which it can in all cases be determined. It may depend, in the first place, on the nature of the averment itself, and the subject to which it is applied. But secondly, some averments the law pronounces formal which otherwise would, on general principles, be descriptive. And thirdly, the question, whether others are descriptive or not, will often depend on the technical manner in which they are framed.

§ 58. Same subject. In the first place, it may be observed that any allegation which narrows and limits that which is essential is necessarily descriptive. Thus, in contracts, libels in writing, and written instruments in general, every part operates by way of description of the whole. In these cases, therefore, allegations of names, sums, magnitudes, dates, durations, terms, and the like, being essential to the identity of the writing set forth, must, in general, be precisely proved. 1 Nor is it material whether the action be founded in contract or in tort; for in either case, if a contract be set forth, every allegation is descriptive. Thus, in an action on the case for deceit in the sale of lambs by two defendants, jointly, proof of sale and warranty by one only, as his separate property, was held to be a fatal variance.² So also, if the contract described be absolute, but the contract proved be conditional, or in the alternative, it is fatal.³ The consideration is equally descriptive and material, and must be strictly proved as alleged. 4(a) Prescriptions, also, being founded in grants presumed to be lost from lapse of time, must be strictly proved as laid; for every allegation, as it is supposed to set forth that which was originally contained in a deed, is of course descriptive of the instrument, and essential to the identity of the grant. 5(b) allegation of the character in which the plaintiff sues, or of his title to damages, though sometimes superfluous, is generally descriptive in its nature, and requires proof.6

- § 59. Formal averments. Secondly, as to those averments which the law pronounces formal, though, on general principles, they seem to be descriptive and essential, these are rather to be regarded as exceptions to the rule already stated, and are allowed for the sake of convenience. Therefore, though it is the nature of a traverse to deny the allegation in the manner and form in which it is made, and, consequently, to put the party to prove it to be true in the manner and form, as well as in general effect; 1 yet where the issue goes to the point of the action, these words, modo et formâ, are but words of form.2 Thus, in trover, for example, the allegation that the plaintiff lost the goods and that the defendant found them is regarded as purely formal, requiring no proof; for the gist of the action is the conversion. So, in indictments for homicide, though the death is alleged to have been caused by a particular instrument, this averment is but formal; and it is sufficient if the manner of death agree in substance with that which is charged, though the instrument be different; as, if a wound alleged to have been given with a sword be proved to have been inflicted with an axe.³ But, where the traverse is of a collateral point in pleading, there the words modo et formâ, go to the substance of the issue, and are descriptive, and strict proof is required; as, if a feoffment is alleged by deed, which is traversed modo et formâ, evidence of a feoffment without deed will not suffice.4 Yet, if in issues upon a collateral point, where the affirmative is on the defendant, partial and defective proof on his part should show that the plaintiff had no cause of action, as clearly as strict and full proof would do, it is sufficient.5
- Thirdly, as to those aver-§ 60. If descriptive must be proved. ments, whose character, as being descriptive or not, depends on the manner in which they are stated. Every allegation, essential to the issue, must, as we have seen, be proved, in whatever form it be stated; and things immaterial in their nature to the question at issue may be omitted in the proof, though alleged with the utmost explicitness and formality. There is, however, a middle class of circumstances, not essential in their nature, which may become so by being inseparably connected with the essential allegations. These must be proved as laid, unless they are stated under a videlicet; the office of which is to mark, that the party does not undertake to prove the precise circumstances alleged; and in such cases he is ordinarily not holden to prove them, 1 Thus in a declaration upon a bill of exchange, the date is in its nature essential to the identity of the bill, and must be precisely proved, though the form of allegation were, "of a certain date, to wit," such a date. On the other hand, in the case before cited, of an action for maliciously prosecuting the plaintiff for a crime whereof he was acquitted on a certain day, the time of acquittal is not essential to the charge, and need not be proved, though it be directly and expressly alleged.² But where, in an action for breach of warranty upon the sale of personal chattels, the plaintiff set forth the price paid for the goods, without a videlicet, he was held bound to prove the exact sum alleged, it being rendered material by the form of allegation; though, had the averment been that the sale was for a valuable consideration, to wit, for so much, it would have been otherwise. A videlicet will not avoid a variance, or dispense with exact proof, in an allegation of material matter; nor will the omission of it always create the necessity of proving, precisely as stated, matter which would not otherwise require exact proof. But a party may, in certain cases, impose upon himself the necessity of proving precisely what is stated, if not stated under a videlicet. 4 (a)

Wright, 2 Doug. 667, 668. These terms, "immaterial" and "impertinent," though formerly applied to two classes of averments, are now treated as synonymous (3 D. & R. 209); the more accurate distinction being between these, and unaccessary (3 D. & R. 209); the more accurate distinction being between these, and unnecessary allegations. Immaterial or impertinent averments are those which need neither be alleged nor proved if alleged. Unnecessary averments consist of matters which need

§ 61. Time, place, quantity, value, &c. But, in general, the allegations of time, place, quantity, quality, and value, when not descriptive of the identity of the subject of the action, will be found immaterial, and need not be proved strictly as alleged. Thus, in trespass to the person, the material fact is the assault and battery; the time and place not being material, unless made so by the nature of the justification, and the manner of pleading. And, in an action on a policy of insurance, the material allegation is the loss; but whether total or partial is not material; and if the former be alleged, proof of the latter is sufficient. So, in assumpsit, an allegation that a bill of exchange was made on a certain day is not descriptive, and therefore strict proof, according to the precise day laid, is not necessary; though, if it were stated that the bill bore date on that day, it would be otherwise.1 Thus, also, proof of cutting the precise number of trees alleged to have been cut, in trespass; or, of the exact amount of rent alleged to be in arrear in replevin; or the precise value of the goods taken, in trespass or trover, is not necessary.2 Neither is matter of aggravation, namely, that which only tends to increase the damages, and does not concern the right of action itself, of the substance of the issue. But, if the matter, alleged by way of aggravation, is essential to the support of the charge or claim, it must be proved as laid.

§ 62. Place in local actions. But in local actions the allegation of place is material, and must strictly be proved, if put in issue. In real actions, also, the statement of quality, as arable or pasture land, is generally descriptive, if not controlled by some other and more specific designation. And in these actions, as not be alleged; but, being alleged, must be proved. Thus, in an action of assumpsit upon a warranty on the sale of goods, an allegation of deceit on the part of the seller is impertinent, and need not be proved. Williamson v. Allison, 2 East, 446; Panton v. Holland, 17 Johns. 92; Twiss v. Baldwin, 9 Conn. 292. So, where the action was for an injury to the plaintiff's reversionary interest in land, and it was alleged that the close, at the time of the injury, was, and "continually from thence hitherto hath been, and still is," in the possession of one J. V., this latter part of the avenment was held superfluous, and not necessary to be proved. Vowles v. Miller, 3 Taunt. 137. But if, in an action by a lessor against his tenant, for negligently keeping his fire, a demise for seven years be alleged, and the proof be of a lease at will only, it will be a fatal variance; for though it would have sufficed to have alleged the tenancy generally, yet having unnecessarily qualified it, by stating the precise term, it must be proved as laid. Cudlip v. Rundel, Carth. 202. So, in debt against an officer for extorting illegal fees on a fieri facias, though it is sufficient to allege the issuing of the writ of fieri facias, yet if the plaintiff also unnecessarily allege the judgment on which it was founded, he must prove it, having made it descriptive of the principal thing. well as in those for injuries to real property, the abuttals of the close in question must be proved as laid; for if one may be rejected, all may be equally disregarded, and the identity of the subject be lost.⁵ (a)

§ 63. Variance. It being necessary to prove the substance of the issue, it follows that any departure from the substance, in the evidence adduced, must be fatal; constituting what is termed in the law a variance. This may be defined to be a disagreement between the allegation and the proof, in some matter which, in point of law, is essential to the charge or claim. It is the legal, and not the natural, identity which is regarded; consisting of those particulars only, which are in their nature essential to the action, or to the justification, or have become so by being inseparably connected, by the mode of statement, with that which is essential; of which an example has already been given, in the allegation of an estate in fee, when a general averment of freehold would suffice. It is necessary, therefore, in these cases, first to ascertain what are the essential elements of the legal proposition in controversy, taking care to include all which is indispensable to show the right of the plaintiff, or party affirming. The rule is, that whatever cannot be stricken out without getting rid of a part essential to the cause of action, must be retained, and of course must be proved, even though it be described with unnecessary particularity.3 The defendant is entitled to the benefit of this rule, to protect himself by the verdict and judgment, if the same rights should come again in controversy. The rule, as before remarked, does not generally apply to allegations of number, magnitude, quantity, value, time, sums of money, and the like, provided the proof in regard to these is sufficient to constitute the offence charged, or to substantiate the claim set up; except in those cases where they operate by way of limitation, or description of other matters, in themselves essential to the offence or claim. 4 (b)

4 Supra, § 61; Rickets v. Salwey, 2 B. & Ald. 363; May v. Brown, 3 B. & C. 113, 122. It has been said that allegations, which are merely matters of inducement, do not

and note), the questions of variance have, as is stated in the text, post, § 73, ceased to have much practical importance. One point, however, in some States is worthy

§ 64. Variance. A few examples will suffice to illustrate this subject. Thus, in tort, for removing earth from the defendant's land, whereby the foundation of the plaintiff's house was injured, the allegation of bad intent in the defendant is not necessary to be proved, for the cause of action is perfect, independent of the intention. 1 So, in trespass, for driving against the plaintiff's cart, the allegation that he was in the cart need not be proved.2 But, if the allegation contains matter of description, and is not proved as laid, it is a variance, and is fatal. Thus, in an action for malicious prosecution of the plaintiff, upon a charge of felony, before Baron Waterpark of Waterfork, proof of such a prosecution before Baron Waterpark of Waterpark was held to be fatally variant from the declaration.3 So, in an action of tort founded on a contract, every particular of the contract is descriptive, and a variance in the proof is fatal. As, in an action on the case for deceit, in a contract of sale, made by the two defendants, proof of a sale by one of them only, as his separate property, was held insufficient; for the joint contract of sale was the foundation of the joint warranty laid in the declaration, and essential to its legal existence and validity. 4 (a)

§ 65. In criminal cases. In criminal prosecutions, it has been thought that greater strictness of proof was required than in civil cases, and that the defendant might be allowed to take advantage of nicer exceptions.⁵ But whatever indulgence the humanity and require such strict proof as those which are precisely put in issue between the parties. Smith v. Taylor, 1 New Rep. 210, per Chambre, J. But this distinction, as Mr. Starkie justly observes, between that which is the gist of the action and that which is inducement, is not always clear in principle. 1 Stark. Evid. 391, n. (b); 3 Stark. Evid. 1551, n. (x) Metcalf's ed. Certainly that which may be traversed, must be proved, if it is not admitted; and some facts, even though stated in the form of inducement, may it is not admitted; and some facts, even though stated in the form of inducement, may be traversed, because they are material; as, for example, in action for slander, upon a charge for perjury, where the plaintiff alleged, by way of inducement, that he was sworn before the Lord Mayor. Stephen on Pleading, 258. The question whether an allegation must be proved, or not, turns upon its materiality to the case, and not upon the form in which it is stated, or its place in the declaration. In general, every allegation in an inducement, which is material, and not impertinent, and foreign to the case, and which consequently cannot be rejected as surplusage, must be proved as alleged. 1 Chitty on Pl. 262, 320. It is true that those matters which need not be alleged with particularity, need not be proved with particularity, but still, all allegations, if material, must be proved substantially as alleged.

tenderness of judges may have allowed in practice, in favor of life or liberty, the better opinion seems to be that the rules of evidence are in both eases the same. $^{2}(a)$ If the averment is divisible, and enough is proved to constitute the offence charged, it is no variance, though the remaining allegations are not proved. Thus, an indictment for embezzling two bank-notes of equal value is supported by proof of the embezzlement of one only.3 And in an indictment for obtaining money upon several false pretences, it is sufficient to prove any material portion of them. 4 But where a person or thing, necessary to be mentioned in an indictment, is described with unnecessary particularity, all the circumstances of the description must be proved; for they are all made essential to the identity. Thus, in an indictment for stealing a black horse, the animal is necessarily mentioned, but the color need not be stated; yet if it is stated, it is made descriptive of the particular animal stolen, and a variance in the proof of the color is fatal. 5 (b) So, in an indictment for stealing a bank-note, though it would be sufficient to describe it generally as a bank-note of such a denomination or value, yet, if the name of the officer who signed it be also stated, it must be strictly proved. $^{6}(c)$ So, also, in an indictment for murder, malicious shooting, or other offence to the person, or for an offence against the habitation, or goods, the name of the person who was the subject of the crime, and of

So, where the charge in an indictment was of stealing 70 pieces of the current coin called sovereigns, and 140 pieces called half sovereigns, and 500 pieces called crowns; it was held, that it was not supported by evidence of stealing a sum of money consisting of some of the coins mentioned in the indictment, without proof of some one or more of the specific coins charged to have been stolen. But, if a part only are proved, the collective value is insufficient, as those not proved may have constituted the entire value. Com. v. Lavery, 101 Mass, 207. In criminal cases, if the offence is one which may cover many days, such as keeping liquors for sale, and the offence is laid between certain dates, the dates are descriptive and the offence can only be proved between those dates. Com. v. Purdy, 146 Mass. 138. On trial of complaint against a licensed liquor seller for placing a shutter and curtain in a room where liquor was being sold contrary to law, the defendant claimed, that as the license proved included two rooms for the sale of liquor, and the complaint alleged a license to sell in one room, there was a variance, but the Court held not. the owner of the house or goods, are material to be proved as alleged. But where the time, place, person, or other circumstances are not descriptive of the fact or degree of the crime, nor material to the jurisdiction, a discrepancy between the allegation and the proof is not a variance. Such are statements of the house or field where a robbery was committed, the time of the day, the day of the term in which a faise answer in chancery was filed, and the like.8 In an indictment for murder, the substance of the charge is that the prisoner feloniously killed the deceased by means of shooting, poisoning, cutting, blows, or bruises, or the like; it is, therefore, sufficient, if the proof agree with the allegation in its substance and general character without precise conformity in every particular. In other words, an indictment describing a thing by its generic term is supported by proof of a species which is clearly comprehended within such description. Thus, if the charge be of poisoning by a certain drug, and the proof be of poisoning by another drug; or the charge be of felonious assault with a staff, and the proof be of such assault with a stone; or the charge be of a wound with a sword, and the proof be of a wound with an axe; yet the charge is substantially proved, and there is no variance. 9(d) But where the matter, whether introductory or otherwise, is descriptive, it must be proved as laid, or the variance will be fatal. (e) As, in having in his possession, with intent to sell, "one pint of adulterated milk, to which milk water had been added," it was held that the government must prove that water had been added to milk already adulterated, and that proof of the addition of water only to the milk would not support the indictment. ⁽e) So, when an indictment against two alleged the crime of jointly obtaining money under false pretences, evidence that the crime was committed by one was held to be a fatal variance. Com. v. Pierce, 130 Mass. 31. And where the indictment charged the defendant with an indictment for perjury in open court, the term of the court must be truly stated and strictly proved. 10 So, in an indictment for perjury before a select committee of the House of Commons, in a contested election, it was stated that an election was holden by virtue of a precept duly issued to the bailiff of the borough of New Malton, and that A and B were returned to serve as members for the said borough of New Malton; but the writ appeared to be directed to the bailiff of Malton. Lord Ellenborough held this not matter of description; and the precept having been actually issued to the bailiff of the borough of New Malton, it was sufficient. But the return itself was deemed descriptive; and the proof being that the members were in fact returned as members of the borough of Malton, it was adjudged a fatal variance. 11 So, a written contract, when set out in an indictment, must be strictly proved. 12

§ 66. In contracts. Thus, also, in actions upon contract, if any part of the contract proved should vary materially from that which is stated in the pleadings, it will be fatal; for a contract is an entire thing, and indivisible. It will not be necessary to state all the parts of a contract which consists of several distinct and collateral provisions; the gravamen is, that a certain act which the defendant engaged to do has not been done; and the legal proposition to be maintained is, that, for such a consideration, he became bound to do such an act, including the time, manner, and other circumstances of its performance. The entire consideration must be stated, and the entire act to be done, in virtue of such consideration, together with the time, manner, and circumstances; and with all the parts of the proposition, as thus stated, the proof must agree. 1 If the allegation be of an absolute contract, and the proof be of a contract in the alternative, at the option of the defendant; or a promise be stated to deliver merchantable goods, and the proof be of a promise to deliver goods of a second quality; or the contract stated be to pay or perform in a reasonable time, and the proof be to pay or perform on a day certain, or on the happening of a certain event; or the consideration stated be one horse, bought by the plaintiff of the

§ 67. Redundancy of allegation, and of proof. There is, however, a material distinction to be observed between the redundancy in the allegation, and redundancy only in the proof. In the former case, a variance between the allegations and the proof will be fatal, if the redundant allegations are descriptive of that which is essential. But in the latter case, redundancy cannot vitiate, merely because more is proved than is alleged; unless the matter superfluously proved goes to contradict some essential part of the allegation. Thus, if the allegation were that, in consideration of £100, the defendant promised to go to Rome, and also to deliver a certain horse to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff should fail in proving the latter branch of the promise, the variance would be fatal, though he sought to recover for the breach of the former only, and the latter allegation was unnecessary. But, if he had alleged only the former branch of the promise, the proof of the latter along with it would be immaterial. In the first case, he described an undertaking which he has not proved; but in the latter, he has merely alleged one promise, and proved that, and also another.1

Colt v. Miller, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 49, 51. See also Metzner v. Bolton, 24 Eng. Law & Eq. 537; 9 Exch. 518. And where the declaration alleged an authority to one G. W., trading as G. W. & Co., to sell goods as the goods of G.W., and the proof was of an authority to G.W. to sell the goods as the goods of G.W. & Co., the variance was held fatal. Addington v. Magan, 2 Eng. Law & Eq. 327; 10 C. B. 576. A declaration setting out a note payable "without defalcation or discount" is not supported by proof of a note payable "without defalcation." Addis v. Van Buskirk, 4 Zabr. (N. J.) 218. Where a note was described in the declaration as payable "on or before" a certain day, and the proof was that it was payable, "on" the day named, it was held no variance. Morton v. Tenny, 16 Ill. 494. See also Walker v. Welch, 14 Ill. 277. The declaration was on the promise to pay money on tion was on the promise to pay money on demand; the proof was a promise to pay in commodities; and it was held to be a variance. Titus v. Ash, 24 N. H. 319. So a declaration on a note not alleged to be upon interest is not sustained by proof of a note in other respects similar, but drawing interest. Gragg v. Frye, 32 Me. 283. There can be no doubt of the admissibility of a written contract in evidence to prove the contract declared on, though the declaration does not aver that it was in writing. It is generally unnecessary, in declaring on a simple contract in writing, to allege it to be so. This allegation is not required even in declarations. on contracts that are within the statute of frauds. Fiedler v. Smith, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 340; see Irvine v. Stone, 1d. 508.

1 Stark. Evid. 401. Where the agreement, as in this case, contains several distinct.

§ 68. Consideration. But where the subject is entire, as, for example, the consideration of a contract, a variance in the proof, as we have just seen, shows the allegation to be defective, and is, therefore, material. Thus, if it were alleged that the defendant promised to pay £100, in consideration of the plaintiff's going to Rome, and also delivering a horse to the defendant, an omission to prove the whole consideration alleged would be fatal. And if the consideration had been alleged to consist of the going to Rome only, yet if the agreement to deliver the horse were also proved, as forming part of the consideration, it would be equally fatal: the entire thing alleged, and the entire thing proved, not being identical.2 Upon the same principle, if the consideration alleged be a contract of the plaintiff to build a ship, and the proof be of one to finish a ship partly built; 3 or the consideration alleged be the delivery of pine timber, and the proof be of spruce timber; 4 or the consideration alleged be, that the plaintiff would indorse a note, and the proof be of a promise in consideration that he had indorsed a note; the variance is equally fatal. (a) But though no part of a valid consideration may be safely omitted, vet that which is merely frivolous need not be stated; 6 and, if stated, need not be proved; for the court will give the same construction to the declaration as to the contract itself, rejecting that which is nonsensical or repugnant.7

§ 69. Deeds. In the case of deeds, the same general principles are applied. If the deed is declared upon, every part stated in the pleadings, as descriptive of the deed, must be exactly proved, or it will be a variance; and this whether the parts set variance may be avoided by alleging the promise, as made inter alia. And no good reason, in principle, is perceived, why the case mentioned in the following section might not be treated in a similar manner; but the authorities are otherwise. In the example given in the text, the allegation is supposed to import that the undertaking consisted of neither more nor less than is alleged.

out at length were necessary to be stated or not. 1 If a qualified covenant be set out in the declaration as a general covenant, omitting the exception or limitation, the variance between the allegation and the deed will be fatal. If the condition, proviso, or limitation affects the original cause of action itself, it constitutes an essential element in the original proposition to be maintained by the plaintiff; and, therefore, must be stated, and proved as laid; but, if it merely affects the amount of damages to be recovered, or the liability of the defendant as affected by circumstances occurring after the cause of action, it need not be alleged by the plaintiff, but properly comes out in the defence.2 And where the deed is not described according to its tenor, but according to its legal effect, if the deed agrees in legal effect with the allegation, any verbal discrepancy is not a variance. As, in covenant against a tenant for not repairing, the lease being stated to have been made by the plaintiff, and the proof being of a lease by the plaintiff and his wife, she having but a chattel interest; or, if debt be brought by the husband alone, on a bond as given to himself, the bond appearing to have been given to the husband and wife; yet, the evidence is sufficient proof of the allegation.3 But, where the deed is set out, on oyer, the rule is

S., made a deed, is not supported by evidence, that J. S. made a deed by the name of R. S. 1 Stark. Evid. 513, citing Hyckman v. Shotbolt, Dyer, 279, pl. 9. The doctrine of that case is very clearly expounded by Parke, B., in Williams v. Bryant, 5 M. & W. 447. In regard to a discrepancy between the name of the obligor in the body of a deed, and in the signature, a distinction is to be observed between transactions which derive their efficacy wholly from the deed, and those which do not. Thus, in a feoffment at the common law, or a sale of personal property by deed, or the like, livery being made in the one case, and possession delivered in the other, the transfer of title is perfect, notwithstanding any mistake in the name of the grantor; for it takes effect by delivery, and not by the deed. Perk. §§ 38-42. But where the efficacy of the transaction depends on the instrument itself, as in the case of a bond for the payment of money, or any other executory contract by deed, if the name where the efficacy of the transaction depends on the instrument itself, as in the case of a bond for the payment of money, or any other executory contract by deed, if the name of the obligor in the bond is different from the signature, as if it were written John and signed William, it is said to be void at law for uncertainty, nnless helped by proper averments on the record. A mistake in this matter, as in any other, in drawing up the contract, may be reformed by bill in equity. At law, where the obligor has been sued by his true name, signed to the bond, and not by that written in the body of it, and the naked fact of the discrepancy, unexplained, is all which is presented by the record, it has always been held bad. This rule was originally founded in this, that a man cannot have two names of baptism at the same time; for whatever name was imposed at his baptism, whether single or compounded of several names, he being baptized but once, that and that alone was his baptismal name; and by that name he declared himself bound. So it was held in Serchor v. Talbot, 3 Hen. VI. 25, pl. 6, and subsequently in Thornton v. Wikes, 34 Hen. VI. 19, pl. 36; Field v. Winlow, Cro. El. 897; Oliver v. Watkins, Cro. Jac. 558; Maby v. Shepherd, Cro. Jac. 640; Evans otherwise; for to have oyer is, in modern practice, to be furnished with an exact and literal copy of the deed declared on, every word and part of which is thereby made descriptive of the deed to be offered in evidence. In such case, if the plaintiff does not produce in evidence a deed literally corresponding with the copy, the defendant may well say it is not the deed in issue, and it will be rejected.⁴

v. King, Willes, 554; Clerke v. Isted, Nelson's Lutw. 275; Gould v. Barnes, 3 Taunt. 504. "It appears from these cases to be a settled point," said Parke, B., in Williams v. Bryant, "that if a declaration against a defendant by one Christian name, as, for instance, Joseph, state that he executed a bond by the name of Thomas, and there be no averment to explain the difference, such as that he was known by the latter name at the time of the execution, such a declaration would be bad on demurrer, or in arrest of judgment, even after issue joined on a plea of non est fuctum. And the reason appears judgment, even after issue joined on a plea of non est fuctum. And the reason appears to be, that in bonds and deeds, the efficacy of which depends on the instrument itself, and not on matter in pais, there must be a certain designatio personee of the party, which regularly ought to be by the true first name or name of baptism, and surname; of which the first is the most important." "But, on the other hand," he adds, "it is certain, that a person may at this time sue or be sued, not merely by his true name of baptism, but by any first name which he has acquired by usage or reputation." "If a party is called and known by any proper name, by that name he may be sued, and the misnomer could not be pleaded in abatement; and not only is this the established practice, but the doctrine is promulgated in very ancient times. In Bracton, 188, b, it is said, 'Item si quis binominis fuerit, sive in nomine proprio sive in cognomine, illud nomen tenendum crit, quo solet frequentius appellari, quia adeo imposita sunt. In nomen tenendum erit, quo solet frequentius appellari, quia adeo imposita sunt, ut demonstrent voluntatem dicentis, et utimur notis in vocis ministerio.' And if a party may sue or be sued by the proper name by which he is known, it must be a sufficient designation of him, if he enter into a bond by that name. It by no means follows, therefore, that the decision in the case of Gould v. Barnes, and others before referred to in which the question recovery the recovery would have been the case if the recovery of the recovery would be the case of the recovery of the recovery would be the case of the recovery of the recovery would be the case of the recovery of the recovery would be the case of the recovery of the recovery would be the case of the recovery of the recovery would be the case of the recovery of the recovery would be the case of the recovery of the recovery would be the case of the recovery of the recovery would be the recovery of the recov to, in which the question arose on the record, would have been the same, if there had been an averment on the face of the declaration that the party was known by the proper name in which the bond was made at the time of making it. We find no authorities for saying, that the declaration would have been bad with such an averment, even if there had been a total variance of the first names; still less, where a man, having two proper names, or names of baptism, has bound himself by the name of one. And on the plea of 'non est factum,' where the difference of name does not appear on the record, and there is evidence of the party having been known, at the time of the execution, by the name on the instrument, there is no case, that we are aware of, which decides that the instrument is void." The name written in the body of the instrument is that which the party, by the act of execution and delivery, declares to be his own, and by which he acknowledges himself bound. By this name, therefore, he should regularly be sued; and if sued with an alias dietus of his true name, by which the instrument was signed, and an averment in the declaration that at the time of executing the instrutake no advantage of the discrepancy; being estopped by the deed to deny this allegation. Evans v. King, Willes, 555, n. (b); Reeves v. Slater, 7 B. & C. 486, 490; Cro. El. 897, n. (a). See also Regina v. Wooldale, 6 Q. B. 549; Wooster v. Lyons, 5 Blackf. 60. If sued by the name written in the body of the deed, without any explandable. Blackf. 60. If sued by the name written in the body of the deed, without any explanatory averment, and he pleads a misnomer in abatement, the plaintiff, in his replication, may estop him by the deed. Dyer, 279 b, pl. 9, n.; Story's Pleadings, 43; Willes, 555, n. And if he should be sued by his true name, and plead non est factum, wherever this plea, as is now the case in England, since the rule of Hilary Term, 4 Wm. IV. R. 21, "operates as a denial of the deed in point of fact only," all other defences against it being required to be specially pleaded, the difficulty occasioned by the old decisions may now be avoided by proof that the party, at the time of the execution, was known by the name on the face of the deed. In those American States which have abolished special pleading, substituting the general issue in all cases, with a brief statement of the special matter of defence, probably the new course of practice thus introduced would lead to a similar result. duced would lead to a similar result. ⁴ Waugh v. Bussell, 5 Taunt. 707, 709, per Gibbs, C. J.; James v. Walruth, 8

§ 70. Records. Where a record is mentioned in the pleadings, the same distinction is now admitted in the proof, between allegations of matter of substance, and allegations of matter of description; the former require only substantial proof, the latter must be literally proved. Thus, in an action for malicious prosecution, the day of the plaintiff's acquittal is not material. Neither is the term in which the judgment is recovered a material allegation in an action against the sheriff for a false return on the writ of execution. For in both cases, the record is alleged by way of inducement only, and not as the foundation of the action; and therefore literal proof is not required. So, in an indictment for perjury in a case in chancery, where the allegation was, that the bill was addressed to Robert, Lord Henly, and the proof was of a bill addressed to Sir Robert Henly, Kt., it was held no variance; the substance being, that it was addressed to the person holding the great seal.2 But where the record is the foundation of the action, the term in which the judgment was rendered, and the number and names of the parties, are descriptive, and must be strictly proved. 3 (a)

Brown, 19 Johns. 49, where the condition of the bond was "without fraud or other delay," and in the over the word "other" was omitted, the defendant moved to set aside a verdict for the plaintiff, because the bond was admitted in evidence without regard to the variance; but the court refused the motion, partly on the ground that the variance was immaterial, and partly that the over was clearly amendable. (a) And where, in a writ of error brought to reverse the judgment of waiver, the judgment was called a judgment of the judgment was careed a judgment outlawry, the variance upon a plea of nulticl record was held fatal. Burnett v. Phillips, 6 Eng. Law & Eq. 467; 20 L. J. Exch. 337. And though the variance be in regard to facts and circumstances which need not have been stated, it is still fatal. Whitaker v. Bramson, 2 Paine, C. C. 209. In Massachusetts, it is enacted by statute that no variance between any matter in writing or in print produced in evidence in the trial of a criminal case, and the recital or setting forth thereof in the complaint, indictment, or other criminal process whereon trial is had, shall be deemed material, if the identity of the instrument is evident, and the purport thereof is sufficiently described to prevent all prejudice to the defendant.

Mass. Pub. St. c. 214, § 26.
Under this statute it has been held that, when one was indicted for perjury, in false swearing at a trial before a trial justice on a complaint for larceny, and the indictment alleged that the complaint was made on one day, and the record of the trial justice produced in evidence showed that it was made on another, there is no material variance, the other proof sufficiently identifying the complaint as the one named in the indictment.

applied to contracts; a prescription being founded on a grant supposed to be lost by lapse of time. 1(a) If, therefore, a prescriptive right be set forth as the foundation of the action, or be pleaded in bar and put in issue, it must be proved to the full extent to which it is claimed; for every fact alleged is descriptive of the supposed grant. Thus, if in trespass, for breaking and entering a several fishery, the plaintiff, in his replication, prescribes for a sole and exclusive right of fishing in four places, upon which issue is taken, and the proof be of such right in only three of the places, it is a fatal variance. Or, if in trespass the defendant justify under a prescriptive right of common on five hundred acres, and the proof be that his ancestor had released five of them, it is fatal. Or if, in replevin of cattle, the defendant avow the taking damage feasant, and the plaintiff plead in bar a prescriptive right of common for all the cattle, on which issue is taken, and the proof be of such right for only a part of

§ 72. Prescriptions. But a distinction is to be observed between cases where the prescription is the foundation of the claim, and is put in issue, and cases where the action is founded in tort, for a disturbance of the plaintiff in his enjoyment of a prescriptive right. For in the latter cases it is sufficient for the plaintiff to prove a right of the same nature with that alleged, though not to the same extent; the gist of the action being the wrongful act of the defendant, in disturbing the plaintiff in his right, and not Therefore, where the action was for the the extent of that right. disturbance of the plaintiff in his right of common, by opening stone quarries there, the allegation being of common, by reason both of a messuage and of land, whereof the plaintiff was possessed, and the proof, in a trial upon a general issue, being of common by reason of the land only, it was held no variance; the court observing, that the proof was not of a different allegation, but of the same allegation in part, which was sufficient, and that the damages might be given accordingly.1 Yet in the former class of cases, where the prescription is expressly in issue, proof of a more ample right than is claimed will not be a variance; as, if the allegation be of a right of common for sheep, and the proof be of such right, and also of common for cows.2

§ 73. Amendments to remedy variance. But the party may now, in almost every case, avoid the consequences of a variance between the allegation in the pleadings and the state of facts proved, by amendment of the record. This power was given to the courts in England by Lord Tenterden's Act 1 in regard to variances between matters in writing or in print, produced in evidence, and the recital thereof upon the record: and it was afterwards extended 2 to all other matters, in the judgment of the court or judge not material to the merits of the case, upon such terms as to costs and postponement as the court or judge may deem reasonable. The same power, so essential to the administration of substantial justice, has been given by statutes to the courts of most of the several States, as well as of the United States; and in both England and America these statutes have, with great propriety, been liberally expounded, in furtherance of their beneficial design. 3 (a) The judge's discretion, in allowing or refusing amendments, like the exercise of judicial discretion in other cases, cannot, in general, be reviewed by any other tribunal.4 It is only in the cases and in the manner mentioned in the statutes, that the propriety of its exercise can be called in question.

OF THE BURDEN OF PROOF.

§ 74. Upon which party it lies. A third rule which governs in the production of evidence is, that the obligation of proving any fact lies upon the party who substantially asserts the affirmative of the issue. (a) This is a rule of convenience, adopted not because

(a) Stevenson v. Marony, 29 Ill. 532; McClure v. Pursell, 6 Ind. 330. The burden of proof is therefore fixed at the beginning of the trial by the nature of the allegations in the pleadings, and it is settled as a question of law and does not change during the course of the trial. Pickup v. Thames Ins. Co., L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 594; Willett v. Rich, 142 Mass. 356; Nichols v. Munsell, 115 Mass. 567; Simpson v. Davis, 119 Id. 269; Crowninshield v. Crowninshield, 2 Gray (Mass.), 524; Heinemann v. Heard, 62 N. Y. 448.

In civil cases when the plaintiff has introduced sufficient evidence to make out a prima facie case, he may rest on this proof, and it becomes the duty of the defendant to introduce evidence to rebut the case made by the plaintiff. This burden, which thus is shifted, has been called the weight of evidence. Thus, in Central Bridge Corporation v. Butler, 2 Gray (Mass.), 132, the Court says: "The burden of proof and the weight of evidence are two very different things. The former remains on the party affirming a fact in support of his case, and does not change in any aspect of the cause; the latter shifts from side to side in the progress of a trial, according to the nature and strength of the proofs offered in support or denial of the main fact to be established." And in a more recent case, in California, the Court says, "the term 'burden of proof' is used under different senses. Sometimes it is used to signify the burden of making or meeting the pr ma facic case, and sometimes the burden of producing the preponderance of evidence. These burdens are often on the same party. But this is not necessarily always the case, and it is by no means safe to infer that because the party has the burden of meeting the prima facic case, therefore he must have the preponderance of evidence. It may be sufficient for him to produce just enough evidence to counterbalance the evidence adduced against him. This is illustrated by a very common case. Suppose that upon an issue as to the performance of a contract sued upon, the plaintiff should testify to facts showing non-performance. In such case if the defendant produced no evidence, the plaintiff must prevail. This is often expressed by saying that the burden has shifted to the defendant. And so it has in one sense. But suppose the defendant should take the stand and deny the truth of the facts testified to by the plaintiff, oath being opposed against oath, would it be correct to say that the defendant must have a preponderance of evidence? It most certainly would not; and this though the burden of proof had been transferred to him. Nor would it be correct to say that the burden had 'shifted back' to the plaintiff if the burden of producing the preponderance of evidence was meant. For that never was on the defendant. The two burdens are distinct things. One may shift back and forth with the ebb and flow of the testimony. The other remains upon the party upon whom it is cast by the pleadings, that is to say, it is cast by the pleadings, that is to say, with the party who has the affirmative of the issue." Scott v. Wood, 81 Cal. 400. And to the same effect are Burnham v. Allen, 1 Gray (Mass.), 500: Blauchard v. Young, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 345; Spaulding v. Hood, 8 Id. 605; Eaton v. Alger, 47 N. Y. 351; Caldwell v. New Jersey Steam Navigation Co., Ib. 290; Kitner v. Whitlock, 88 Ill. 513. And an instance of this distinction between the burden of proof and the weight of evidence is found in and the weight of evidence is found in Willett v. Rich, 142 Mass. 356, where the Court overruled the case of Cass v. Boston & Lowell R. R. Co., 14 Allen, 448. These cases furnish a good example of the disit is impossible to prove a negative, but because the negative does not admit of the direct and simple proof of which the affirmative tinction between the burden of proof and the burden of evidence. In the later case the action being against a warehouse-man for negligence, it was held that after the plaintiff has proved delivery of the goods to the warehouse-men, and a failure to re-deliver the goods on demand or a delivery in an injured condition, he has established a prima facie case, and the burden of meeting this shifts on the defendant. If, however, the defendant introduce evidence that the goods were destroyed or injured without his negligence, and that he used due care in protecting them, the burden shifts again on the plaintiff to show that the defendant did not use due care. If he puts in evidence to this effect, then when the evidence is all in, the question as to the burden of proof arises again, and the preponderance of evidence must be in favor of the plaintiff, on the issues of the case, in order to justify a verdict in his favor. Willett v. Rich, supra. So, in the case of an action on a promissory note, the burden of proof is on the party suing, but he meets this burden by producing the note and proving the signature, if that is necessary, because there is a presumption that in case of a promissory note, there was a consideration; but if the evidence of the defendant shows a want of consideration, then the burden of proof on the whole case is upon the plaintiff in the matter of consideration as well as upon the other points, and if there is not a preponderance in his favor, he must fail. a preponderance in his layor, he hillst lain. Perley v. Perley, 144 Mass. 104; Burnham v. Allen, 1 Gray, 496; Simpson v. Davis, 119 Mass. 269; Delano v. Bartlett, 6 Cush. 364. On the question of the defence of payment, or failure of consideration, the burden of proof is on the defendant. Perley v. Perley, supra; Jennison v. Stofford 1 Cush 168; Delano v. Bartv. Stafford, 1 Cush. 168; Delano v. Bartlett, 6 Cush. 364. The burden of proof of either party, however, extends only to the allegations upon which he bases his case. Thus if the defendant pleads in confession and avoidance, his burden includes none of the allegations of the plaintiff. Powers v. Silberstein, 108 N. Y. 171. Thus, in Wilder v. Cowles, 100 Mass. 487, it is said that the burden upon the plaintiff is coextensive only with the legal proposition upon which his case. It applies to every fact which is essential or necessarily involved in that proposition. It does not apply to facts relied on in defence to establish an independent proposition, however inconsistent it may be with that upon which the plaintiff's case depends. It is for the defendant to furnish proof of such facts; and when he has done so, the burden is upon the plaintiff, not to disprove these particular facts, nor the proposition which they tend to establish, but to maintain the proposition upon which his own case rests, notwithstanding such controlling testimony and upon the whole evidence in the case. And see post, §§ 80 n., 81 a, 81 b, 81 c. But there are cases where allegations affirmative in form are really only indirect negatives of plaintiff's allegations, and in such cases the burden of proof is on the party holding the real affirmative. Thus, where one sued on a common count on an account annexed, and the defendant justified on the ground of an existing special contract, the Court held that the burden of proof was on the plaintiff throughout, and that if the evidence as to the existence of the special contract was evenly balanced, the plaintiff could not recover, and also, that the burden of proof being on the plaintiff at the outset of the trial be made a prima facie case by the introduction of evidence showing that he performed certain work for the defendants or its value, and that when this proof was in, the burden of evidence shifted upon the defendants; that the defendants met this burden, by evidence of the special contract, and the question then was whether the whole evidence preponderated in favor of the plain-tiff. Phipps v. Mahon, 141 Mass. 471. When the plaintiff and defendant have both put in evidence, the burden of prov-ing his whole case by a preponderance of evidence in civil cases is on the party who had the burden of proof in the beginning of the trial. Powers v. Russell, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 76.

In criminal cases, the weight of evidence or burden of proof never shifts upon the defendant, but is upon the government throughout. If the government throughout. If the government, after making a prima facic case, rests, and the defendant does not put in any evidence, it is still necessary that the jury should be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt by the proof given by the government. It would naturally happen in most cases, that a prima facic case, unrebutted, would thus satisfy the jury, but the question ought to be left to them, and not settled by the judge, and in all cases, before a conviction can be had, the jury must be satisfied, upon all the evidence, be-is capable. 1 (b) It is, therefore, generally deemed sufficient, where the allegation is affirmative, to oppose it with a bare denial, until it is established by evidence. Such is the rule of the Roman law. "Ei incumbit probatio qui dicit, non qui negat." 2 As a consequence of this rule, the party who asserts the affirmative of the issue is entitled to begin and to reply; and having begun, he is not permitted to go into half of his ease, and reserve the remainder; but is generally obliged to develop the whole.3 Regard is had, in this matter, to the substance and effect of the issue, rather than to the form of it; for in many cases the party, by making a slight change in his pleading, may give the issue a negative or an affirmative form, at his pleasure. Therefore in an action of covenant for not repairing, where the breach assigned was that the defendant did not repair, but suffered the premises to be ruinous, and the defendant pleaded that he did repair, and did not suffer the premises to be ruinous, it was held that on this issue the plaintiff should begin.4 If the record contains several issues, and the plaintiff hold the affirmative in any one of them, he is entitled to begin; as, if in an action of slander for charging the plaintiff with a crime, the defendant should plead not guilty, and a justification. For wherever the plaintiff is obliged to produce any proof in order to establish his yond a reasonable doubt, of the affirmative of the issue presented by the government; to wit, that the defendant is guilty in manner and form as charged in the indictment. State v. Wingo, 66 Mo. 181; Black v. State, 1 Tex. App. 368; State v. Patterson, 45 Vt. 308. The opinion of the court, by Bigelow, J. in the case of Commonwealth v. McKie, 1 Gray, 61-65, contains an acceptable and very able exposition of the general rule of law as to the burden of proof in criminal cases.

The true test to determine which party has the right to begin, and of course to determine where is the burden of proof, is to consider which party would be entitled to the verdict, if no evidence were offered on either side; for the burden of proof lies on the party against whom, in such case, the verdict ought to be given. right to recover, he is generally required to go into his whole case, according to the rule above stated, and therefore is entitled to reply. How far he shall proceed in his proof, in anticipation of the defence on that or the other issues, is regulated by the discretion of the judge, according to the circumstances of the case; regard being generally had to the question, whether the whole defence is indicated by the plea, with sufficient particularity to render the plaintiff's evidence intelligible. 5 (d)

§ 75. Damages. Whether the necessity of proving damages, on the part of the plaintiff, is such an affirmative as entitles him to begin and reply, is not perfectly clear by the authorities. Where such evidence forms part of the proof necessary to sustain the action, it may well be supposed to fall within the general rule; as, in an action of slander, for words actionable only in respect of the special damage thereby occasioned; or, in an action on the case, by a master for the beating of his servant per quod servitium amisit. It would seem, however, that where it appears by the record, or by the admission of counsel, that the damages to be recovered are only nominal, or are mere matter of computation, and there is no dispute about them, the formal proof of them will not take away the defendant's right to begin and reply, whatever be the form of the pleadings, provided the residue of the case is affirmatively justified by the defendant. And if the general issue alone is pleaded, and the defendant will at the trial admit the whole of the plaintiff's case, he may still have the advantage of the beginning and reply. So also in trespass

§ 76. Unliquidated damages. The difficulty in determining this point exists chiefly in those cases, where the action is for unliquidated damages, and the defendant has met the whole case with an affirmative plea. In these actions the practice has been various in England; but it has at length been settled by a rule, by the fifteen judges, that the plaintiff shall begin in all actions for personal injuries, libel, and slander, though the general issue may not be pleaded, and the affirmative be on the defendant.1 In actions upon contract, it was, until recently, an open question of practice; having been sometimes treated as a matter of right in the party, and at other times regarded as resting in the discretion of the judge, under all the circumstances of the case.2 But it is now settled, in accordance with the rule adopted in other actions.3 In this country it is generally deemed a matter of discretion, to be ordered by the judge at the trial, as he may think most conducive to the administration of justice; but the Hayward, 11 Cush. Mass. 48); nor from showing that the plaintiff had no title to the note sued on. Spaulding v. Hood, 8 Id. 602. An auditor's report in favor of the plaintiff will not give the defendant the right to open and close. Snow v. Batch-Webster, 68 Me, 449. The rule, however, in Massachusetts, is to allow the plaintiff to open and close in every case, even when the defendant admits the plaintiff's cause of action and files a declaration in set-off, or matter in avoidance.

weight of authority, as well as the analogies of the law, seem to be in favor of giving the opening and closing of the cause to the plaintiff, wherever the damages are in dispute, unliquidated, and to be settled by the jury upon such evidence as may be adduced, and not by computation alone. (a)

Nicholson, 6 Car. & P. 202, which was trespass for taking the plaintiff's goods in his house, and detaining them one hour, which the defendant justified as a distress for parish rates; and

(a) In Page v. Osgood, 2 Gray (Mass.), 260, the question arose, who should have the opening and close to the jury, the defendant admitting the plaintiff's cause of action, and the only issue being on the defendant's declaration in set-off; which demand in set-off the statute provides "shall be tried in like manner as if it had been set forth in an action brought by him," and there being a uniform rule of court giving the right of opening and closing in all cases to the plaintiff. The court held that there was no reason for departing from the rule, which had been found to be of great practical convenience, and overruled the exceptions, thus sustaining the plaintiff's right in such a case to open and close. It seems to have been considered in some of the American States, that in actions like slander, where the defendant admits the speaking of the words, and offers evidence in justification, or even in mitigation of damages, he is entitled to open the case. Ganl v. Fleming, 10 Ind. 253. But that proposition is certainly not maintainable, since the plaintiff is still entitled to give evidence of facts showing special malice, in aggravation of damages, and to open the case generally upon the question of damages. The English form of expression upon this point will go far to indicate the precise inquiry upon which the right should turn. The inquiry there is, which party has the right "to begin"? And that will determine where the right to close rests. The party first required to give proof has the opening and the general close; the other party being required to give all his evidence, both in reply to plaintiff's case and support of his own, at one time, leaving the general reply to the other party.

where, consequently, the onus probandi is not technically presented, the courts adopt the same principles which govern in proceedings at common law. Thus, in the probate of a will, as the real question is, whether there is a valid will or not, the executor is considered as holding the affirmative; and therefore he opens and closes the case, in whatever state or condition it may be, and whether the question of sanity is or is not raised. 1

upon a mode of liquidation. But in England the entire subject has recently undergone a review, and the rule has been established, as applicable to all personal actions, that the plaintiff shall begin, wherever he goes for substantial damages not already ascertained. Mercer v. Whall, 9 Jur. 576; 5 Q. B. 447. In this case Lord Denman, C.J., in delivering the judgment of the court, expressed his opinion as follows: "The natural course would seem to be, that the plaintiff should bring his own cause of complaint before the court and jury, in every case where he has anything to prove either as to the facts necessary for his obtaining a verdict, or as to the amount of damage to which he conceives the proof of such facts may entitle him. The law, however, has by some been supposed to differ from this course, and to require that the defendant, by admitting the cause of action stated on the record, and pleading only some affirmative fact, which, if proved, will defeat the plaintiff's action, may entitle himself to open the proceeding at the trial, anticipating the plaintiff's statement of his injury, disparaging him and his ground of complaint, offering or not offering, at his own option, any proof of his defensive allegation, and, if he offers that proof, adapting it not option, any proof of his defensive allegation, and, if he offers that proof, adapting it not to the plaintiff's case as established, but to that which he chooses to represent that the plaintiff's case will be. It appears expedient that the plaintiff should begin, in order that the judge, the jury, and the defendant himself should know precisely how the claim is shaped. This disclosure may convince the defendant that the defence which he has pleaded cannot be established. On hearing the extent of the demand, the defendant may be induced at once to submit to it rather than persevere. Thus the affair reaches its natural and best conclusion. If this does not occur, the plaintiff, by bringing forward his case, points his attention to the proper object of the trial, and bringing forward his case, points his attention to the proper object of the trial, and enables the defendant to meet it with a full understanding of its nature and character. If it were a presumption of law, or if experience prove that the plaintiff's evidence must always occupy many hours, and that the defendant's could not last more than as many minutes, some advantage would be secured by postponing the plaintiff's case to that of the defendant. But, first, the direct contrary in both instances may be true; and, secondly, the time would only be saved by stopping the cause for the purpose of taking the verdict at the close of the defendant's proofs, if that verdict were in favor of the defendant. This has never been done or two recorded the inverse taking the vertice at the close of the defendant's proofs, it that verdict were in layor of the defendant. This has never been done or proposed; if it were suggested, the jury would be likely to say, on most occasions, that they could not form a satisfactory opinion on the effect of the defendant's proofs till they had heard the grievance on which the plaintiff founds his action. In no other case can any practical advantage be suggested as arising from this method of proceeding. Of the disadvantages that may result from it, one is the strong temptation to a defendant to abuse the privilege. If he well knows that the case can be proved against him, there may be skilful management in confessing it by his plea, and affirming something by way of defence which he knows to be untrue, for the mere purpose of beginning." See 9 Jur. 578; 5 Q. B. 458. Ordinarily speaking, the decision of the judge, at Nisi Prius, on a matter resting in his discretion, is not subject to revision in any other court. But in Huckman v. Fernie, 5 M. & W. tion, is not subject to revision in any other court. But in Huckman v. Fernie, 5 M. & W. 505, the court observed that, though they might not interfere in a very doubtful case, yet if the decision of the judge "were clearly and manifestly wrong," they would interfere to set it right. In a subsequent case, however, it is said that, instead of "were clearly and manifestly wrong," the language actually used by the court was, "did clear and manifest wrong; "meaning that it was not sufficient to show merely that the wrong party had begun, but that some injustice had been done in consequence. See Edwards v. Matthews, 11 Jur. 393. See also Geach v. Ingall, 9 Jur. 691; 14 M. & W. 95.

§ 78. Negative allegations. To this general rule, that the burden of proof is on the party holding the affirmative, there are some exceptions, in which the proposition, though negative in its terms, must be proved by the party who states it. One class of these exceptions will be found to include those cases in which the plaintiff grounds his right of action upon a negative allegation, and where, of course, the establishment of this negative is an essential element in his case; (a) as, for example, in an action for having prosecuted the plaintiff maliciously and without probable cause. Here, the want of probable cause must be made out by the plaintiff, by some affirmative proof, though the proposition be negative in its terms.² So, in an action by husband and wife, on a promissory note made to the wife after marriage, if the defendant denies that she is the meritorious cause of action, the burden of proving this negative is on him.³ So, in a prosecution for a penalty given by statute, if the statute, in describing the offence, contains negative matter, the count must contain such negative allegation, and it must be supported by prima facie proof. Such is the case in prosecutions for penalties given by statutes, for coursing deer in enclosed grounds, not having the consent of the owner; 4 or for cutting trees on lands not the party's own, or taking other property, not having the consent of the owner; or for selling, as a peddler, goods not of the produce or manufacture of the country; 6 or for neglecting to prove a will, without just excuse made and accepted by the Judge of Probate therefor. In these, and the like cases, it is obvious, that plenary proof on the part of the affirmant can hardly be expected; and, therefore, it is considered sufficient if he offer such evidence as,

(a) Nash v. Hall, 4 Ind. 444. Mr. dia Co., 3 East, 192, and also, as another exception (§ 347), that where the subject-matter of the allegation was peculiarly by a disputable presumption of law, the party supporting the negative must call witnesses, in the first instance, to overcome this presumption. Williams v. E. Iuv. Janson, 13 M. & W. 662.

Stone, 1 East, 639; Rex v. Burdett, 4 B. & Ald. 95, 140; Rex v. Turner, 5 M. & S. 206; Woodbury v. Frink, 14 Ill. 279.

Taylor, Ev. § 339, states as an exception, that where the affirmative is supported in the absence of counter testimony, would afford ground for presuming that the allegation is true. Thus, in an action on an agreement to pay £100, if the plaintiff would not send herrings for one year to the London market, and, in particular, to the house of J. & A. Millar, proof that he sent none to that house was held sufficient to entitle him to recover, in the absence of opposing testimony. 8 (b) And generally, where a party seeks, from extrinsic circumstances, to give effect to an instrument which, on its face, it would not have, it is incumbent on him to prove those circumstances, though involving the proof of a negative; for, in the absence of extrinsic proof, the instrument must have its natural operation, and no other. Therefore, where real estate was devised for life with power of appointment by will, and the devisee made his will, devising all his lands, but without mention of or reference to the power, it was held no execution of the power, unless it should appear that he had no other lands; and that the burden of showing this negative was upon the party claiming under the will as an appointment.9

§ 79. Negative allegations. But where the subject-matter of a negative averment lies peculiarly within the knowledge of the other party, the averment is taken as true, unless disproved by that party. Such is the case in civil or criminal prosecutions for a penalty for doing an act which the statutes do not permit to be done by any persons, except those who are duly licensed therefor; as, for selling liquors, exercising a trade or profession, and the like. Here the party, if licensed, can immediately show it, without the least inconvenience; whereas, if proof of the negative were required, the inconvenience would be very great. (a)

§ 80. Negative allegations. So, where the negative allegation involves a charge of criminal neglect of duty, whether official or otherwise; or fraud; or the wrongful violation of actual lawful possession of property; the party making the allegation must prove it; for in these cases the presumption of law, which is always in favor of innocence and quiet possession, is in favor of the party charged. Dean, 110 Mass. 357; Com. v. Leo, Id. 414. The government may, however, prove that the sale is without license by indirect evidence, e. g., the admissions of the defendant, the situation of the liquors, any circumstances of concealment. Com. v. Locke, 114 Mass. 288; or may show that the license is void. Com. v. Welch, 144 Mass. 356. See also Com. v. Thurlow, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 374, 381, which was an indictment against the defendant for presuming to be a retailer of spirituous liquors without a license therefor. In this case the court did not decide the general question, saying that "cases may be afrise to distinctions applicable to them to be considered as they arise," but held under that indictment that the government must produce prima facic evidence that the defendant was not licensed. See post, vol. iii. § 24 and n. In Com. v. Kimball, 7 Met. (Mass.) 304, the court held, in a similar indictment, that the docket and minutes of the county commissioners, before their records are made up, are competent evidence, and if no license to the defendant appears on such docket or minutes (the county commissioners being the sole authority to grant licenses), it is prima facic evidence that the defendant was not licensed. Where one being indicted for illegally selling liquors on the Lord's Day, justified under a license to sell liquor to guests of his hotel, it was held that the burden of proof was on him to show that the persons to whom he sold were guests of his hotel, and that, there being no evidence on that point, he was properly convicted. Com. v. Towle, 138 Mass. 490.

It has been decided that the provisions of the Massachusetts act of 1844, c. 102, do not apply to indictments under the law of 1855, c. 405, which enacts that all buildings, &c., used for the illegal sale or keeping of intoxicating liquors, shall be deemed common nuisances; an act of the same year (Acts 1855, c. 215), making any sale or keeping for sale, within the State, of intoxicating liquors, unless in the original packages. original packages, &c., without authority, an unlawful and criminal act. This was decided in Com. v. Lahy, 8 Gray (Mass.),

In civil cases it has been held that, to recover the price of liquor sold, the plaintiff must show that he was licensed to sell. Bliss v. Brainard, 41 N. H. 256; Solomon v. Dreschler, 4 Minn. 278; Kane v. Johnston, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 154.

But, in other States, that the burden of proving the sale to be illegal is on the defendant. Wilson v. Melvin, 13 Gray (Mass.), 73; Craig v. Proctor, 6 R. I. 547.

(a) Kline v. Baker, 106 Mass. 61; Phelps v. Cutler, 4 Gray (Mass.), 139. This rule applies in insurance cases, where the insurance company claims to be expected. empt from paying the sum insured be-cause there has been a breach of some condition contained in the policy, or the violation of some obligation or duty imposed upon the insured by the law or contract; the burden then rests upon the company to establish the facts which it thus relies upon as a defence to the claim under the policy, for every presumption of law is against the commission of a crime, and in all forms of action, civil and criminal, every person is presumed to be innocent until his guilt has been established by at least a preponderance of evidence; and this presumption would be violated if the person suing upon a policy insuring his property against fire was bound to assume the burden of showing that he was not guilty of the crime of burning his own property. The defendant making that allegation against him must bear the burden of establishing it. Tidmarsh v. Wash. F. & M. Ins. Co.. 4 Mason, 439; Fiske v. N. E. Mar. Ins. Co., 15 Pick. 310; Murray v. N. Y. L. Ins. Co., 85 N. Y. 236; Heilman v. Lazarus, 90 Id. 672.

Halifax, for refusing to deliver up the rolls of the Auditor of the Exchequer, in violation of his duty, the prosecutor was required to prove the negative. So, where one in office was charged with not having taken the sacrament within a year; and where a seaman was charged with having quitted the ship, without the leave in writing required by statute; and where a shipper was charged with having shipped goods dangerously combustible on board the plaintiff's ship, without giving notice of their nature to any officer on board, whereby the ship was burned and lost; in each of these cases, the party alleging the negative was required to prove it. So, where the defence to an action on a policy of insurance was, that the plaintiff improperly concealed from the underwriter certain facts and information which he then already knew and had received, it was held that the defendant was bound to give some evidence of the non-communication.2 So, where the goods of the plaintiff are seized and taken out of his possession, though for an alleged forfeiture under the revenue laws, the seizure is presumed unlawful until proved otherwise.3

- (a) The rule as to the burden of proof where insanity is alleged has undergone much discussion in the more recent cases, and the cases again have been collated and analyzed in numerous text-books and law magazines. There is an acknowledged conflict in the decisions on this subject, and authorities may be found for both sides of the various rules that have been laid down by various courts. The question arises most frequently in one of three forms.

1. In a criminal trial, where the defence is insanity. 2. On the probate of a will.

3. When the defence of insanity is interposed in an action on a contract. Closely connected with this question is the question, what is the true meaning of the maxim, every man is presumed to be

1. In criminal cases there are two widely adopted views:—

(a) In Massachusetts, it is held that the burden of proof of the prisoner's sanity is upon the government, and that this fact must be made out to the satisfaction of the jury beyond a reasonable doubt before they can convict the prisoner of the crime with which he is charged. Thus, in Com. v. Eddy, 7 Gray (Mass.), 583, which was an indictment against the defendant for the murder of his wife, and in which the insanity of the defendant was pressed to the jury as a defence, the court instructed the jury in substance that the burden of proof was on the government throughout, and did not shift; although, so far as the sanity of the defendant was concerned, the burden was sustained by the legal presumption that all men are sane, which presumption must stand until rebutted by proof to the contrary, satisfactory to the jury. Subsequently in Pomeroy's Case (117 Mass. 143), although it was intimated that Com. v. Eddy was not a binding authority, but only the opinion of three judges, the court held the following lan-guage: "The burden is upon the govern-ment to prove everything essential beyond reasonable doubt; and that burden, so far as the matter of insanity is concerned, is ordinarily satisfactorily sustained by the presumption that every person of sufficient age is of sound mind, and understands the nature of his acts. But when the circumstances are all in, on the one side going to show a want of adequate capacity, on the other side going to show usual intelligence, the burden rests, where it was in the beginning, upon the government to prove the case beyond reasonable doubt." See also Com. v. Heath, 11 Gray (Mass.), 303; State v. Wilner, 40 Wis. 304; State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 399; State v. Jones, 50 N. H. 370. And this perhaps is the prevailing opinion. People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9; State v. Crawford, 11 Kan. 32. But it does not seem to be accepted in New York (Flanagan v. People, 52 N. Y. 467), where it is said to be still an open question what amount of proof is requisite to prove insanity. Cf. People v. Brotherton, 75 N. Y. 160.

(b) In Pennsylvania and other States, it is held that insanity must be proved by the prisoner by a preponderance of evidence, and it is not sufficient for him to raise a doubt. Lynch v. Com., 77 Pa. St. 205; Ortwein v. Com., 76 Pa. St. 414. The cases on this subject are very fully collected and stated in a note to State v. Crawford, Sup. Ct. Kansas, 23 Am. L. Reg. N. s. 21. And see also Wharton, Hom. 666; and for a full citation of the cases and discussion, see post, vol. iii. § 5, notes.

2. When a question arises, on the probate of a will, whether the testator was of sound mind, the burden of proving that fact is, by the better cases, held to rest upon the party propounding the will. Crowninshield v. Crowninshield, 2 Gray (Mass.), 524; Mayo v. Jones, 78 N. C. 402. But in some States it is held that the presumption of the law is in favor of testamentary capacity and those who insist on the contrary have the burden of evidence, i. e., must introduce the first actual evidence to show insanity. This they may do by showing that insanity existed prior to the making of the disputed paper. After such proof, the proponents must show that the execution of the will was during a lucid interval. Elkinton v. Brick, 44

N. J. Eq. 158.3. Where insanity is relied on as a defence to an action on a contract, it is treated as a plea in confession and avoidance, and the burden of proof is said to be on the Brown, 39 Mich. 792. Bnt cf. Myatt v. Walker, 44 Ill. 485; Weed v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 70 N. Y. 561; Anderson v. Cramer, 11 W. Va. 562; Jarrett v. Jarrett, Id. 584; Titlow v. Titlow, 54 Pa. St. 216; Ripley v. Babeock, 13 Wis. 425; Walcott v. Alleyn, Milw. Ec. R. (Ir.) 69; White v. Wilson, 13 Ves. 87; Perkins v. Perkins, 39 N. H. 163. When the question of sanity comes up in a civil case, it arises generally as an affirmative allegation of the insanity of some person, and the burden of proof of such insanity is upon the party to whose case the allegation is material and necessary. Thus, if the guardian of an insane person brings an action to recover the proceeds of a mortgage and note, which was assigned by the insane person while he was insane, the guardian must allege such insanity, and the burden of proof is on him. Wright v. Wright, 139 Mass. 177.

The burden of proof in such cases, remains throughout the trial upon the party making the allegation of insanity. If, however, he proves insanity existing at a time prior to the time of the act in issue, and not arising from the violence of shortlived disease, this proof, aided by the presumption of continuance of a state of things once proved to exist, shifts the burden of evidence upon the party opposing the allegation of insanity, and he must meet this either with proof of a lucid interval at the time of the act in issue, or by evidence rebutting that of the party alleging insanity. In either case, after all the evidence is in, the jury must be satisfied that a preponderance of the evidence favors the allegation of insanity, or the party alleging such insanity fails. Wright v. Wright,

As to the burden of proof when an alibi is set up, in Com. v. Choate, 105 Mass. 452, it was held that a charge to the jury -that when the defendant wished them to take as an affirmative matter of fact proved, that he was at a certain place at a certain time, the burden of proof was upon him, and, if he failed to sustain the burden, they could not consider it as a fact proved; but that the burden was upon the government to show the defendant's presence at the commission of the crime, and on that question they were to consider all his evidence tending to prove an alibi, and if on all the evidence they entertained a reasonable doubt as to his presence they should acquit - was unobjectionable. The tendency in the later cases is to treat an alibi as not demanding specific instructions or at most, that the jury should be charged that if the evidence of the defendant raises a reasonable doubt whether he was present at the commission of the crime, he should be acquitted. State v. Sutton, 70 Iowa, 268; State v. Ward, 61 Vt. 192; State v. Cameron, 40 Vt. 555; State v. Kline, 54 Iowa, 183; State v. Reitz, 83 N. C. 634; People v. Fong Ah Sing, 64 Cal. 253; State v. In actions upon promissory notes or bills of exchange, if it be shown that they were stolen, or otherwise fraudulently put in eirculation, the burden of proof is on the holder to show that he took them in good faith. But where the action is by the holder of a bank-bill, and the defendant proves it to have been stolen, the plaintiff is not bound to show how he came by the bill, to enable him to recover upon it, but the defendant, to defeat the plaintiff's right to recover upon it, must show that he received it under such eireumstances as to prevent the maintenance of this action. Haskins v. Warren, 115 Mass. 514.

OF THE BEST EVIDENCE.

§ 82. Best evidence required. A fourth rule, which governs in the production of evidence is that which requires the best evidence of which the case in its nature is susceptible. This rule does not demand the greatest amount of evidence which can possibly be given of any fact; but its design is to prevent the introduction of any which, from the nature of the case, supposes that better evidence is in the possession of the party. It is adopted for the prevention of fraud; for when it is apparent that better evidence is withheld, it is fair to presume that the party had some sinister motive for not producing it, and that, if offered, his design would be frustrated. The rule thus becomes essential to the pure administration of justice. In requiring the production of the best evidence applicable to each particular fact, it is meant that no evidence shall be received which is merely substitutionary in its nature, so long as the original evidence can be had. The rule excludes only that evidence which itself indicates the existence of more original sources of information. (a) But where there

(a) Putnam v. Goodall, 11 Foster(N. H.), 419; Shoenberger v. Hackman,37 Pa. St. 87.

On this principle press copies of letters or other documents are not primary evidence of the contents of the letters. Marsh v. Hand, 35 Md. 123; King v. Worthington, 73 Ill. 161; Watkins v. Paine, 57 Ga. 50, but are secondary evidence, admissible on proof of the loss or destruction of the original. Goodrich v. Weston, 102 Mass. 362; Smith v. Brown, 151 Mass. 339. A duplicate notarial instrument, made from the copy in the records of the notary, is primary evidence. Geralopulo v. Wieler, 10 C. B. 712. When a broker makes a sale, it seems that either the entry in his books or the bought and sold notes which he issues are primary evidence of the sale. Sievewright v. Archibald, 17 Q. B. 115; Durrell v. Evans, 1 H. & C. 175.

It is now established law that when the accuracy of a photograph as a faithful representation of the actual scene which it is introduced in evidence to prove, is settled by competent testimony, the photograph is admissible evidence as an appropriate aid to the jury in applying the evidence in the same manner as drawings, diagrams, maps, and other methods of bringing before the eye of the jury a representation of the scenes in which the facts they are called to pass upon took place. The value of the representation given by the photograph depends upon its accuracy as testified to by witnesses. The party introducing the photograph must adduce evidence of the person who took the photograph, or some other person who has knowledge of the facts, to the effect that the photograph does represent the objects which it purports to represent. This testimony of these witnesses may, of

is no substitution of evidence, but only a selection of weaker, instead of stronger proofs, or an omission to supply all the proofs capable of being produced, the rule is not infringed. 2(b) Thus, a title by deed must be proved by the production of the deed itself, if it is within the power of the party; for this is the best evidence of which the case is susceptible; and its non-production would raise a presumption that it contained some matter of apparent defeasance. But, being produced, the execution of the deed itself may be proved by only one of the subscribing witnesses, though the other also is at hand. And even the previous examination of a deceased subscribing witness, if admissible on other grounds, may supersede the necessity of calling the survivor.³ So, in proof or disproof of handwriting, it is not necessary to call the supposed writer himself. $^{4}(c)$ And even where it is necessary to prove negatively that an act was done without the consent, or against the will of another, it is not, in general, necessary to call the person whose will or consent is denied.5

course, be attacked by the testimony introduced by the opposite side, to the effect that the photograph does not correctly represent the scenes, which it purports to represent; but the competency of the photograph as evidence depends simply upon sufficient testimony being given in the opinion of the court to show prima the opinion of the court to show prima facive that the picture is a representation of the objects which it is introduced in evidence as representing. Archer v. N. Y. N. H. & Hartford R. R. Co., 106 N. Y. 603; Verran v. Baird, 150 Mass. 142; People v. Buddensieck, 103 N. Y. 500; Cowley v. People, 83 N. Y. 464; Cozzens v. Higgins, 1 Abb. Ct. of App. (N. Y.) Dec. 451; Durst v. Masters, L. R. 10 Prob. Div. 373, 373. On the other hand the photograph, though an accurate hand the photograph, though an accurate representation of the scene, may not be admissible because the scene itself is not shown to be relevant. This must be de-termined by the presiding judge upon all the circumstances, just as when sales of neighboring land are offered as evidence of value, and in many other instances. Verran v. Baird, supra.

(b) Richardson v. Milburn, 17 Md. 67: McCreary v. Turk, 29 Ala. 244. Thus, if the accused in a criminal case does not testify, this fact does not exclude other evidence as to the criminal act. People v. Anderson, 39 Cal. 703. So the home port of a vessel may be proved by the words painted on her stern, although the enrolment and register might also be used to prove this fact. Stearns v. Doe, 12 Gray (Mass.), 482. So it has been several times held in eases where intoxicating liquor has been seized in the act of sale, in tumblers or glasses or bottles, it is not necessary to produce the liquor in court, but the person who seized it may testify as to its character. The rule does not re-quire the presence in court of every movable article which is relevant to the issue of the case, but allows witness to testify thereto except when the evidence offered necessarily shows that other evidence of a higher nature exists, i. e. in the case of written instruments. Com. v. Welch, 142 Mass. 473; Com. v. Blood, 11 Gray, 74; Com. v. Pope, 103 Mass. 440.

for practical purposes in the administration of justice; and must be so applied as to promote the ends for which they were designed. (d) Thus, the rule under consideration is subject to exceptions, where the general convenience requires it. Proof, for example, that an individual has acted notoriously as a public officer, is prima facie evidence of his official character, without producing his commission or appointment.

§ 84. Primary and secondary evidence. This rule naturally leads to the division of evidence into Primary and Secondary. Primary evidence is that which we have just mentioned as the best evidence, or that kind of proof which, under any possible circumstances, affords the greatest certainty of the fact in question: and it is illustrated by the case of a written document; the instrument itself being always regarded as the primary or best possible evidence of its existence and contents. (a) If the execution of an instrument is to be proved, the primary evidence is the testimony of the subscribing witness, if there be one. Until it is shown that the production of the primary evidence is out of the party's power, (b) no other proof of the fact is in general ad-

(d) See infra, § 343.

(a) Cf. Stephen, Dig. Evid. art. 64. When a document is executed in several parts, each part is primary evidence of the document. Gardner v. Eberhart, 82 III. 316; Brown v. its contents, just as in all cases under this rule, and secondary evidence will not be admitted till a foundation is laid for it. McReynolds v. Lougenberger, 57 Pa. St. 13.

(b) The judge is to decide as to the sufficiency of the proof that the original document is lost, or otherwise out of the power of the party offering the secondary evidence. Smith v. Brown, 151 Mass. 339; Walker v. Curtis, 116 Mass. 98; Lindauer v. Meyberg, 27 Mo. App. 185; Stratton r. Hawks, 43 Kans. 541.

This rule of evidence does not require proof of the level of the primary originals.

This rule of evidence does not require proof of the loss of the primary evidence beyond possibility of mistake, but only to a moral certainty. Mr. Justice Campbell in United States v. Satter, 21 How. (U.S.) 170, 175. If by "moral certainty" is meant, as in criminal cases, "beyond reasonable doubt," this case is more strict mitted. All evidence falling short of this in its degree is termed secondary. The question, whether evidence is primary or secondary, has reference to the nature of the case in the abstract, and not to the peculiar circumstances under which the party in the particular cause on trial may be placed. It is a distinction of law, and not of fact: referring only to the quality, and not to the strength of the proof. Evidence which carries on its face no indication that better remains behind is not secondary, but primary. And though all information must be traced to its source, if possible, yet if there are several distinct sources of information of the same fact, it is not ordinarily necessary to show that they have all been exhausted, before secondary evidence can be resorted to.2(c)

Whether the law recognizes any Phil. & Am. on Evid. 440, 441; 1 Phil. Evid. 421. Whether the law recognizes any degrees in the various kinds of secondary evidence, and requires the party offering that which is deemed less certain and satisfactory first to show that nothing better is in his power, is a question which is not yet perfectly settled. On the one hand, the affirmative is urged as an equitable extension of the principle which postpones all secondary evidence, until the absence of the primary is accounted for; and it is said that the same reason which requires the production of a writing, if within the power of a party, also requires that, if the writing is lost, its contents shall be proved by a copy, if in existence, rather than by the memory of a witness who has read it; and that the secondary proof of a lost deed ought to be marshalled into, first, the counterpart; secondly, a copy; thirdly, the abstract, &c.; and, last of all, the memory of a witness. Ludlam, ex dem. Hunt, Lofft, 362. On the other hand, it is said that this argument for the extension of the rule confounds all distinction between the weight of evidence and its legal admissibility; that the rule is founded upon the nature of the evidence offered, legal admissibility; that the rule is founded upon the nature of the evidence offered, and not upon its strength or weakness; and that to carry it to the length of establishing degrees in secondary evidence, as fixed rules of law, would often tend to the subversion of justice, and always be productive of inconvenience. If, for example, proof of the existence of an abstract of a deed will exclude oral evidence of its contents, this proof may be withheld by the adverse party until the moment of trial, and the other side be defeated, or the cause be greatly delayed; and the same mischief may be repeated, through all the different degrees of the evidence. It is therefore insisted, that the rule of exclusion ought to be restricted to such evidence only, as, upon its face, discloses the existence of better proof; and that, where the evidence is not of this nature, it is to be received, notwithstanding it may be shown from other sources that the party might have offered that which was more satisfactory; leaving the weight of the evidence to be judged of by the jury, under all the circumstances of the case. See 4 Monthly Law Mag. 265-279. Among the cases cited in support of the affirmative side of the question, there is no one in which this particular point appears to have been expressly adjudged, though in several of them—as in Sir E. Seymour's Case, 10 Mod. 8; Villiers v. Villiers, 2 Atk. 71; Rowlandson v. Wainwright, 1 Nev. & Per. 8; and others—it has been passingly adverted to as a familiar destring of the law. On the other hand has been passingly adverted to as a familiar doctrine of the law. On the other hand, the existence of any degrees in secondary evidence was doubted by Patterson, J., in

Rowlandson v. Wainwright; tacitly denied by the same judge, in Coyle v. Cole, 6 C. & P. 359, and by Parke, J., in Rex v. Fursey, Id. 81; and by the court, in Rex v. Hunt, 3 B. & Ald. 446; and expressly denied by Parke, J., in Brown v. Woodman, 6 C. & P. 206. See also Hall v. Ball, 3 Scott, N. R. 577. And in the more recent case of Doe d. Gilbert v. Ross, in the Exchequer, where proper notice to produce an original document had been given without success, it was held that the party giving the notice was not afterwards restricted as to the nature of the secondary evidence he would produce of the contents of the document; and, therefore, having offered an attested copy of the deed in that case, which was inadmissible in itself for want of a stamp, it was held that it was competent for him to abandon that mode of proof, and to resort to parol testimony, there being no degrees in secondary evidence; for when once the original is accounted for, any secondary evidence whatever may be resorted to by the party seeking to use the same. See Doe v. Ross, 8 Dowl. 389; s. c. 7 M. & W. 102; Doe v. Jack, 1 Allen, 476, 483. The American doctrine, as deduced from various authorities, seems to be this, — that if, from the nature of the case itself, it is manifest that a more satisfactory kind of secondary evidence exists, the party will be required to produce it; but that, where the nature of the case does not of itself disclose the existence of such better evidence, the objector must not only prove its existence, but also must prove that it was known to the other party in season to have been produced at the trial. (d) Thus, where the record of a conviction was destroyed, oral proof of its existence was rejected, because the law required a transcript to be sent to the Court of Exchequer, which was better evidence. Hits v. Colvin, 14 Johns. 182. So, a grant of letters of administration was presumed after proof, from the records of various courts, of the administrator's recognition there, and his acts in that capacity. Battles v. H

(d) The rule is different in different The Massachusetts rule is stated by Wells, J. in Goodrich v. Weston, 102 Mass. 362, as follows: "When the source of original evidence is exhausted, and resort is properly had to secondary proof, the contents of private writings may be proved like any other fact by indirect evidence. The admissibility of evidence offered for this purpose must depend upon its legitimate tendency to prove the facts sought to be proved, and not upon the comparative weight or value of one or another form of proof. The jury will judge of its weight and may give due consideration to the fact that a more satisfactory one exists and is withheld, or not produced, when it might readily have been obtained. But there are no degrees of legal distinction in this class of evidence. Although there has been much diversity of practice and the decisions are far from uniform, more frequently turning upon special cir-cumstances and facts than upon a general principle, the tendency of authority is, as we think, towards the establishment of the rule here stated." The rule as given by the English courts is held the true one in the following States as well as in Massachusetts, — Indiana: Carpenter v. Dame, 10 Ind. 129; New York: Robertson v. Lynch, 18 Johns. 451; New Jersey: Ketcham v. Brooks, 27 N. J. Eq. 347.

And in the following, the rule given by Mr. Greenleaf, called the American rule, is adopted, — Alabama: Harvey v. Thorpe, 28 Ala. 250; Georgia: Graham v. Campbell, 56 Ga. 258; Williams v. Waters, 36 Id. 454; Illinois: Illinois, &c. Company v. Bonner, 75 Ill. 315; Maine: Nason v. Jordon, 62 Me. 480; Pennsylvania: Stevenson v. Hoy, 43 Pa. St. 191; and in the United States Supreme Court: Cornet v. Williams, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 226. Cf. Winn v. Patterson, 9 Peters, 663.

As to what is secondary evidence, it has been held that the previous talk of the parties as to what they proposed to agree to in the writing to be drawn up is not even secondary evidence of the contents of the paper. Richardson v. Robbins, 124 Mass. 105. Nor is the opinion of a witness as to the effect of the language of the paper, the language not being given. Elwell v. Walker, 52 Iowa, 256. A photograph of a written instrument, identified by the photographer, is good secondary evidence of the contents. Eborn v. Zimpelman, 47 Tex. 503. The introduction of weaker secondary evidence when better might be had may give a rise to unfavorable inferences in the minds of the jury. Goodrich v. Weston, 102 Mass. 362; Bailey v. McMeckle, 9 Cal. 430; Schoenberger v. Hackman, 37 Pa. St. 887.

consideration, are those which relate to the substitution of oral for written evidence; and they may be arranged into three classes: including in the first class those instruments which the law requires should be in writing; in the second, those contracts which the parties have put in writing; and in the third, all other writings, the existence of which is disputed, and which are material to the issue.

§ 86. Where the law requires written evidence. In the first place, oral evidence cannot be substituted for any instrument which the law requires to be in writing; such as records, public documents, official examinations, deeds of conveyance of lands, wills other than nuncupative, promises to pay the debt of another, and other writings mentioned in the Statute of Frauds. In all these cases, the law having required that the evidence of the transaction should be in writing, no other proof can be substituted for that, as long as the writing exists, and is in the power record. Cook v. Wood, 1 McCord, 139; Lyons v. Gregory, 3 Hen. & Munf. 237; Lowry v. Cady, 4 Vermont, 504; Doe v. Greenlee, 3 Hawks, 231. In all these and the like cases, the nature of the fact to be proved plainly discloses the existence of some evidence in writing, of an official character, more satisfactory than mere oral proof; and therefore the production of such evidence is demanded. Such also is the view taken by Cb. B. Gilbert. See Gilb. Evid. by Lofft, p. 5. See also Collins v. Maule, 8 C. & P. 502; Everingham v. Roundell, 2 M. & Rob. 138; Harvey v. Thomas, 10 Watts, 63. But where there is no ground for legal presumption that better secondary evidence exists, any proof is received which is not inadmissible by other rules of law; unless the objecting party can show that better evidence was previously known to the other, and might have been produced; thus subjecting him, by positive proof, to the same imputation of fraud which the law itself presumes when primary evidence is withheld. Thus, where a notarial copy was called for, as the best evidence of the contents of a lost note, the court held, that it was sufficient for the party to prove the note by the best evidence actually in his power; and that to require a notarial copy would be to demand that of the existence of which there was no evidence, and which the law would not presume was in the power of the party, it not being necessary that a promissory note should be protested. Renner v. Bank of Columbia, 9 Wheat. 582, 587; Den v. McAllister, 2 Halst. 46, 53; United States v. Britton, 2 Mason, 464, 468. But where it was proved that a copy existed of a note, he was held bound to prove it by the copy. 2 Mason, 468. But if the party has voluntarily destroyed the instrument, he is not allowed to prove its contents by secondary evidence, until he has repelled every inference of a fraudulent design in its destruction. Even if statutory provisions exist whereby a lost record can be supplied by proceedings in equity, although, doubtless, the better practice would be to have the record restored before the trial where there is opportunity to pursue it, yet this course is not compulsory and, after proof of the loss, its contents may be proved, like any other document, by any secondary evi-dence, where the case does not from its nature disclose the existence of other and Miltimore, supra, Mr. Justice Thompson, delivering the opinion of the court, says: "The existence of the power in the court to supply lost records does not interfere with the rule of evidence which admits proof of contents. The loss may not be discovered until the trial is progressing. There would be no time then to file a bill on the chancery side of the court, to perpetuate the proof necessary for the foundation from which to supby the record; and it might be disastrous to one or other of the parties to delay the cause for such a purpose." § 87. Where parties have agreed in writing. In the second place, oral proof cannot be substituted for the written evidence of any contract which the parties have put in writing. Here, the written instrument may be regarded, in some measure, as the ultimate fact to be proved, especially in the cases of negotiable securities; and, in all cases of written contracts, the writing is tacitly agreed upon, by the parties themselves, as the only repository and the appropriate evidence of their agreement. The written contract is not collateral, but is of the very essence of the transaction. (a) If, for example, an action is brought for use and occupation of real estate, and it appears by the plaintiff's own showing that there was a written contract of tenancy, he must produce it, or account for its absence; though, if he were to make out a prima facie case, without any appearance of a written contract, the burden of producing it, or at least of proving

- 1 The principles on which a writing is deemed part of the essence of any transaction, and consequently the best or primary proof of it, are thus explained by Domat: "The force of written proof consists in this, — men agree to preserve by writing the remembrance of past events, of which they wish to create a memorial, either with a view of laying down a rule for their own guidance, or in order to have, in the instrument, a lasting proof of the truth of what is written. Thus contracts are written, in order to preserve the memorial of what the contracting parties have prescribed for each other to do, and to make for themselves a fixed and immutable law, as to what has been agreed on. So, testaments are written, in order to preserve the remembrance of what the party who has a right to dispose of his property has ordained concerning it, and thereby lay down a rule for the guidance of his heirs and legatees. On the same principle, are reduced into writing all sentences, independs a left to the same principle are reduced into writing all sentences, judgments, edicts, ordinances, and other matters which either confer title or have the force of law. The writing preserves, unchanged, the matters entrusted to it, and expresses the intention of the parties by their own testimony. The truth of written acts is established by the acts themselves; that is, by the inspection of the originals." See Domat's Civil Law, liv. 3, tit. 6, § 2, as translated in 7 Monthly Law Mag. p. 73.

So where a grantee, at the time of receiving a deed of land, agreed by parol that the grantor might continue to exercise a right of way over the land, the evidence was held admissible, not because a right of way can be created by a parol grant, but to show that the grantor's subsequent possession of such easement commenced under a claim of right. If a map or plan is referred to in a contract, in such a way as to make it a part of the contract, the plan is the only primary evidence of its contents. Bryant v. Stilwell, 24 Pa. St. 314. The fast that a written agreement was made may be shown by parol. Shughart v. Moore, 78 Pa. St. 469.

its existence, would be devolved on the defendant.2 But if the fact of the occupation of land is alone in issue without respect to the terms of the tenancy, this fact may be proved by any competent oral testimony, such as payment of rent, or declarations of the tenant, notwithstanding it appears that the occupancy was under an agreement in writing; for here the writing is only collateral to the fact in question. 3 (b) The same rule applies to every other species of written contract. Thus, where, in a suit for the price of labor performed, it appears that the work was commenced under an agreement in writing, the agreement must be produced; and even if the claim be for extra work, the plaintiff must still produce the written agreement; for it may furnish evidence, not only that the work was over and beyond the original contract, but also of the rate at which it was to be paid for. So, in an indictment for feloniously setting fire to a house, to defraud the insurers, the policy itself is the appropriate evidence of the fact of insurance, and must be produced. 4 (c) And the recorded resolution of a charitable society, under which the plaintiff earned the salary sued for, was on the same principle held indispensably necessary to be produced.⁵ The fact that in such cases the writing is in the possession of the adverse party does not change its character: it is still the primary evidence of the contract; and its absence must be accounted for by notice to the other party to produce it, or in some other legal mode, before secondary evidence of its contents can be received. 6 (d)

(c) But in Com. v. Goodwin, 122 Mass. 19, it was held that when an indictment is brought against one for threatening to is brought against one for threatening to accuse A. of having burned a building belonging to A. which was insured, in order to gain the insurance, the fact that the building was insured need not be proved by the policy. The judge rests his decision in this case on the ground that a contract of insurance may be effected without a written policy, and that as no written contract to insure was disclosed in the evidence admitted, there was no violation of the rule, which requires the violation of the rule, which requires the production of the writing or some excuse for its non-production. Cf. Magnay v. Knight, 1 M. & G. 944.

PART II.

(d) If a party to a suit, being notified to produce papers at the trial, fails to do to produce papers at the trial, fails to do so, and the other party puts in secondary evidence of their contents, the party refusing to produce cannot afterwards give the papers in evidence (Doon v. Donaher, 113 Mass. 151), and if it appears that he has wilfully kept back or has destroyed the document, he will not be allowed to give evidence of its contents. Gage v. Campbell, 131 Mass. 566.

§ 88. Where existence of writing is disputed. In the third place, oral evidence cannot be substituted for any writing, the existence of which is disputed, and which is material either to the issue between the parties, or to the credit of witnesses, and is not merely the memorandum of some other fact. For, by applying the rule to such cases, the court acquires a knowledge of the whole contents of the instrument, which may have a different effect from the statement of a part. (a) "I have always," said Lord Tenterden, "acted most strictly on the rule, that what is in writing shall only be proved by the writing itself. My experience has taught me the extreme danger of relying on the recollection of witnesses, however honest, as to the contents of written instruments; they may be so easily mistaken, that I think the purposes of justice require the strict enforcement of the rule."2 Thus, it is not allowed, on cross-examination, in the statement of a question to a witness, to represent the contents of a letter, and to ask the witness whether he wrote a letter to any person with such contents, or contents to the like effect, without having first shown the letter to the witness, and having asked him whether he wrote that letter; because, if it were otherwise, the cross-examining counsel might put the court in possession of only a part of the contents of a paper, when a knowledge of the whole was essential,

Where a telegraphic communication is relied on, the original, when the person to whom it is sent takes the risk of its transmission or is the employer of the telegraph, is the message delivered to the operator, but when the person who sends the message takes the initiative so that the telegraph is to be regarded as his agent, the original is the message delivered at the the original is the message delivered at the end of the line. transcript delivered to the person addressed is for some purposes, as between him and the sender, deemed the original, it never can be so without competent proof that the alleged sender did actually send, or authorize to be sent, the despatches in question. The primary evidence of that fact is the original telegram itself in the handwriting of the sender, or of an agent shown to have been duly authorized. But when it appears that the telegram has been destroyed by the company, secondary evidence of the fact of sending may be given. Oregon Steamship Co. v. Otis, 100 N. Y. 453. A witness may prove orally the substance of telegrams, unless there is some evidence that the telegrams were orally and delivered orally, but the course of business is so generally to transmit only written messages, that slight proof is sufficient to show that the message was written, and to call for the original writing. Terre Haute & Ind. R. R. Co. v. Stockwell, 118 Ind. 102.

to a right judgment in the cause. If the witness acknowledges the writing of the letter, yet he cannot be questioned as to its contents, but the letter itself must be read. (b) And if a witness being examined in a foreign country, upon interrogatories sent out with a commission for that purpose, should in one of his answers state the contents of a letter which is not produced, that part of the deposition will be suppressed, notwithstanding, he being out of the jurisdiction, there may be no means of compelling him to produce the letter. § 89. Collateral writings. In cases, however, where the written communication or agreement between the parties is collateral to the question in issue, it need not be produced; as, where the writing is a mere proposal, which has not been acted upon; 1 or, where a written memorandum was made of the terms of the contract, which was read in the presence of the parties, but never signed, or proposed to be signed; 2 or, where, during an employment under a written contract, a separate verbal order is given; 3 or, where the action is not directly upon the agreement, for nonperformance of it, but is in tort, for the conversion or detention of the document itself; 4 or, where the action is for the plaintiff's share of money had and received by the defendant, under a written security for a debt due to them both. 5 (a)

§ 90. In other cases admissible. But where the writing does not fall within either of the three classes already described, there is no ground for its excluding oral evidence. As, for example, if a written communication be accompanied by a verbal one, to the same effect, the latter may be received as independent evidence, though not to prove the contents of the writing, nor as a substitute for it. (a) Thus, also, the payment of money may be proved by oral testimony, though a receipt be taken; 1(b) in trover, a verbal demand of the goods is admissible, though a demand in writing was made at the same time; 2 the admission of indebtment is provable by oral testimony, though a written promise to pay was simultaneously given, if the paper be inadmissible for want of a stamp. 3 Such, also, is the case of the examination and confession of a prisoner, taken down in writing by the magistrate, but not signed and certified pursuant to the statutes.4 And any writing inadmissible for the want of a stamp, or other irregularity, may still be used by the witness who wrote it, or was present at the time, as a memorandum to refresh his own memory, from which alone he is supposed to testify, independently of the written paper.⁵ In like manner, in prosecutions for political offences, such as treason, conspiracy, and sedition, the inscription on flags and banners paraded in public, (c) and the contents of resolutions read at a public meeting, may be proved as of the nature of

Thus, the contents of any record of a judicial court, and of entries in any other public books or registers, may be proved by an examined copy. This exception extends to all records and entries of a public nature, in books required by law to be kept; and is admitted because of the inconvenience to the public which the removal of such documents might occasion, especially if they were wanted in two places at the same time; and also, because of the public character of the facts they contain, and the consequent facility of detection of any fraud or error in the copy. In regard to the proof of written laws, it has been already stated, ante, § 5, that the courts take judicial notice of the public statutes of their own States. The statutes of other States are not so noticed and must be proved. In Massachusetts it is pro-vided by statute (Pub. Stat. c 169, § 71), that printed copies of the statute laws of any other State and of the Umted States, or of the Territories thereof, if purporting to be published under the authority of their respective governments, or if com-monly admitted and read as evidence in their courts, shall be admitted in this Commonwealth in all courts of law, and on all other occasions as prima facie evidence of such laws. The question whether a party who relies on a deed must prove its contents by the deed itself, or may give in evidence a copy of the record in the registry of deeds, depends on whether the original is pre-sumed to be in his power or not. If the deed was not made to either of the parties deed was not made to either of the parties to the suit, nor was either of them entitled to the custody of it, its contents may be proved by office copies. Draper v. Hatfield, 124 Mass. 53; Stockwell v. Silloway, 105 Id. 517; Samuels v. Borrowscale, 104 Id. 207; Blanchard v. Young, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 345; Palmer v. Stevens, Id. 147; McNichols v. Wilson, 42 Iowa, 385. And such copies are prima facie evidence of the fact that the deed was signed, sealed, and delivered by the authority of

and from the strong presumption arising, from the undisturbed exercise of a public office, that the appointment to it is valid, it is not, in general, necessary to prove the written appointments of public officers. All who are proved to have acted as such are presumed to have been duly appointed to the office, until the contrary appears; $^1(a)$ and it is not material how the question arises, whether in a civil or criminal case, nor whether the officer is or is not a party to the record; $^2(b)$ unless, being plaintiff, he unnecessarily avers his title to the office, or the mode of his appointment; in which case, as has been already shown, the proof must support the entire allegation. These and similar exceptions are also admitted, as not being within the reason of the rule, which calls for primary evidence; namely, the presumption of fraud, arising from its non-production.

§ 93. Voluminous facts. A further relaxation of the rule has been admitted, where the evidence is the result of voluminous facts, or of the inspection of many books and papers, the examination of which could not conveniently take place in court.

Thus, if there be one invariable mode in which bills of exchange have been drawn between particular parties, this may be proved by the testimony of a witness conversant with their habit of business, and speaking generally of the fact, without producing the bills. But if the mode of dealing has not been uniform, the case does not fall within this exception, but is governed by the rule requiring the production of the writings.2 So, also, a witness who has inspected the accounts of the parties, though he may not give evidence of their particular contents, may be allowed to speak to the general balance, without producing the accounts. 3 (a) And where the question is upon the solvency of a party at a particular time, the general result of an examination of his books and securities may be stated in like manner. 4 (b)

§ 94. Inscriptions. Under this head may be mentioned the case of inscriptions on walls and fixed tables, mural monuments, gravestones, surveyors' marks on boundary trees, &c., which, as they cannot conveniently be produced in court, may be proved by secondary evidence. (c)

§ 95. Preliminary inquiries. Another exception is made, in the examination of a witness on the voir dire, and in preliminary inquiries of the same nature. If, upon such examination, the wit-

(b) So when books and documents introduced in evidence at the trial are multifarious and voluminous, and of such a character as to render it difficult for the jury to comprehend material facts, without schedules containing abstracts thereof, it is within the discretion of the presiding judge to admit such schedules, verified by the testimony of the person by whom they were prepared, allowing the adverse party an opportunity to examine them before the case is submitted to the jury. ness discloses the existence of a written instrument affecting his competency, he may also be interrogated as to its contents. To a case of this kind, the general rule requiring the production of the instrument, or notice to produce it, does not apply; for the objecting party may have been ignorant of its existence, until it was disclosed by the witness; nor could he be supposed to know that such a witness would be produced. So, for the like reason, if the witness, on the voir dire, admits any other fact going to render him incompetent, the effect of which has been subsequently removed by a written document, or even a record, he may speak to the contents of such writing, without producing it; the rule being that where the objection arises on the voir dire, it may be removed on the voir dire. 1 If, however, the witness produces the writing, it must be read, being the best evidence.2

§ 96. Admissions. It may be proper, in this place, to consider the question, whether a verbal admission of the contents of a writing, by the party himself, will supersede the necessity of giving notice to produce it; or, in other words, whether such admission, being made against the party's own interest, can be used, as primary evidence of the contents of the writing, against him and those claiming under him. Upon this question, there appears some discrepancy in the authorities at Nisi Prius. 3 (a) But

Magazine, vol. v. p. 175-187, where this point is distinctly treated.

(a) The leading English case on this point is Slatterie v. Pooley, 6 M. & W. 664, accord with Slatterie v. Pooley; Marray where it was held that the admission of a party is always receivable against him, Basingstoke, 14 Q. B. 611. This seems although it relate to the contents of a deed, or other written instrument, and even though its contents be directly in issue in the case. This decision has not been universally accepted as law. The Irish courts dissent from it. Lawless v. Queale, 8 Ir. Law, 382; Lord Gosford v. Robb, 1d. 217; Parsons v. Purcell, 12 1d. 90. And the New York courts adopt a different view. Jenner v. Johffe, 6 Johns. 9; Hasbrouck v. Baker, 10 Id. 248, Welland Canal v.

Basingstoke, 14 Q. B. 611. This seems to be the prevalent opinion in the United States. Loomis v. Wadham, 8 Gray (Mass.), 557; Smith v Palmer, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 513; Blackington v. Rockland, 66 Me. 332; Wolverton v. State, 16 Ohio, 173; Edgar v. Richardson, 33 Ohio St. 581; Edwards v. Tracy, 62 Pa. St. 374; Widdifield v. Widdifield, 2 Binn. where the competency appears from the examination of the witness, and those where it where the competency appears from the examination of the witness, and those where it is already apparent from the record, without his examination; and it has been held, that the latter case falls within the rule, and not within the exception, and that the writing which restores the competency must be produced. it is to be observed, that there is a material difference between proving the execution of an attested instrument, when produced, and proving the party's admission that by a written instrument, which is not produced, a certain act was done. In the former case, the law is well settled, as we shall hereafter show, that when an attested instrument is in court, and its execution is to be proved against a hostile party, an admission on his part, unless made with a view to the trial of that cause, is not sufficient. This rule is founded on reasons peculiar to the class of cases to which it is applied. A distinction is also to be observed between a confessio juris and a confessio facti. If the admission is of the former nature, it falls within the rule already considered, and is not received; 2 for the party may not know the legal effect of the instrument, and his admission of its nature and effect may be exceedingly erroneous. But where the existence, and not the formal execution, of a writing is the subject of inquiry, or where the writing is collateral to the principal facts, and it is on these facts that the claim is founded, the better opinion seems to be that the confession of the party, precisely identified, is admissible as primary evidence of the facts recited in the writing; though it is less satisfactory than the writing itself.³ Very great weight ought not to be attached to evidence of what a party has been supposed to have said; as it frequently happens, not only that the witness has misunderstood what the party said, but that, by unintentionally altering a few of the expressions really used, he gives an effect to the statement completely at variance with what the party actually did say.4 Upon this distinction the adjudged cases seem chiefly to turn. Thus, where, in an action by the assignces of a bankrupt for infringing a patent-right standing in his name, the defendant proposed to prove the oral declaration of the bankrupt that by certain deeds an interest in the patent-right had been conveyed by him to a stranger, the evidence was prop-tion to inquiries, upon cross-examination, in regard to writings, and facts evidenced by writings; and the rule extends to the party who is a witness in support of his own case; and he may be asked, with a view to discredit him, if he did not in a similar suit in an interior court give evidence before the jury in support of his defence, and whether a verdict was not rendered against him, without producing any record in the action. Henman v. Lester, 12 C. B. N. S 776, S. C., 9 Jur. N. S. 601. And see also post, §§ 202, 203.

erly rejected; for it involved an opinion of the party upon the legal effect of the deeds. On the other hand, it has been held that the fact of the tenancy of an estate, or that one person, at a certain time, occupied it as the tenant of a certain other person, may be proved by oral testimony. But if the terms of the contract are in controversy, and they are contained in a writing, the instrument itself must be produced.6

§ 97. Admissions. There is a class of cases, which seem to be exceptions to this rule, and to favor the doctrine that oral declarations of a party to an instrument, as to its contents or effect, may be shown as a substitute for direct proof by the writing itself. But these cases stand on a different principle, namely, that where the admission involves the material fact in pais, as well as a matter of law, the latter shall not operate to exclude evidence of the fact from the jury. It is merely placed in the same predicament with mixed questions of law and fact, which are always left to the jury, under the advice and instructions of the court. 1 Thus, where the plaintiff in ejectment had verbally declared that he had "sold the lease," under which he claimed title, to a stranger, evidence of this declaration was admitted against him.2 It involved the fact of the making of an instrument called an assignment of the lease, and of the delivery of it to the assignce, as well as the legal effect of the writing. So, also, similar proof has been received, that the party was "possessed of a leasehold;" 3 "held a note," 4 "had dissolved a partnership," which was created by deed; 5 and that the indorser of a dishonored bill of exchange admitted, that it had been "duly protested." 6 What the party has stated in his answer in Chancery is admissible on other grounds; namely, that it is a solemn declaration under oath in a judicial proceeding, and that the legal effect of the instrument is stated under the advice of counsel learned in the law. So, also, where both the existence and the legal effect of one deed are recited in another, the solemnity of the act, and the usual aid of counsel, take the case out of the reason of the general rule, and justify the admission of such recital, as satisfactory evidence of the legal effect of the instrument, as well as conclusive proof of its execution.7 There are other cases which may seem, at first view, to constitute exceptions to the present rule, but in which the declarations of the party were admissible, either as contemporaneous with the act done, and expounding its character, thus being part of the res gestæ; or, as establishing a collateral fact, independent of the written instrument. Of this sort was the declaration of a bankrupt, upon his return to his house, that he had been absent in order to avoid a writ issued against him;8 the oral acknowledgment of a debt for which an unstamped note had been given;9 and the oral admission of the party, that he was in fact a member of a society created by deed, and had done certain acts in that capacity. 10

OF HEARSAY.

§ 98. Direct and hearsay evidence. The first degree of moral evidence, and that which is most satisfactory to the mind, is afforded by our own senses; this being direct evidence of the highest nature. Where this cannot be had, as is generally the case in the proof of facts by oral testimony, the law requires the next best evidence; namely, the testimony of those who can speak from their own personal knowledge. It is not requisite that the witness should have personal knowledge of the main fact in controversy, for this may not be provable by direct testimony, but only by inference from other facts shown to exist. But it is requisite that, whatever facts the witness may speak to, he should be confined to those lying in his own knowledge, whether they be things said or done, and should not testify from information given by others, however worthy of credit they may For it is found indispensable, as a test of truth and to the proper administration of justice, that every living witness should, if possible, be subjected to the ordeal of a cross-examination, that it may appear what were his powers of perception, his opportunities for observation, his attentiveness in observing, the strength of his recollection, and his disposition to speak the truth. But testimony from the relation of third persons, even where the informant is known, cannot be subjected to this test; nor is it often possible to ascertain through whom, or how many persons, the narrative has been transmitted from the original witness of the fact. It is this which constitutes that sort of second-hand evidence termed "hearsay."

§ 99. Hearsay. The term hearsay is used with reference to that which is written, as well as to that which is spoken; and, in its legal sense, it denotes that kind of evidence which does not derive its value solely from the credit to be given to the witness himself, but rests also, in part, on the veracity and competency of some other person. (a) Hearsay evidence, as thus described,

⁽a) People v. Cox, 21 Hun (N. Y.), Filley v. Angell, 102 Mass. 67; Hathaway 47; Hunter v. Randall, 69 Me. 183; v. Tinkham, 148 Mass. 87; State v. VOL. I. — 10 is uniformly held incompetent to establish any specific fact, which, in its nature, is susceptible of being proved by witnesses who can speak from their own knowledge. That this species of testimony supposes something better, which might be adduced in the particular case, is not the sole ground of its exclusion. Its extrinsic weakness, its incompetency to satisfy the mind as to the existence of the fact, and the frauds which may be practised under its cover, combine to support the rule that hearsay evidence is totally inadmissible.2

§ 100. Original and hearsay evidence distinguished. Before we proceed any farther in the discussion of this branch of evidence, it will be proper to distinguish more clearly between hearsay evidence and that which is deemed original. For it does not follow, because the writing or words in question are those of a third person, not under oath, that therefore they are to be considered as hearsay. On the contrary, it happens, in many cases, that the very fact in controversy is, whether such things were written or spoken, and not whether they were true; and, in other cases, such language or statements, whether written or spoken, may be the natural or inseparable concomitants of the principal fact in controversy.3 In such cases, it is obvious that the writings or words are not within the meaning of hearsay, but are original and independent facts, admissible in proof of the issue.

§ 101. Reputation, statements as facts. Thus, where the question is, whether the party acted prudently, wisely, or in good faith, the information on which he acted, whether true or false, is original and material evidence. This is often illustrated in actions for malicious prosecution; and also in cases of agency

So, also, letters and conversation addressed to a person, whose sanity is the fact in question, being connected in evidence with some act done by him, are original evidence to show whether he was insane or not.2 The replies given to inquiries made at the residence of an absent witness, or at the dwelling-house of a bankrupt, denying that he was at home, are also original evidence. 3(a) In these and the like cases, it is not necessary to call the persons to whom the inquiries were addressed, since their testimony could add nothing to the credibility of the fact of the denial, which is the only fact that is material. This doctrine applies to all other communications, wherever the fact that such communication was made, and not its truth or falsity, is the point in controversy. 4 Upon the same principle, it is considered that evidence of general reputation, (b)

Whether letters addressed to the person whose samity is in issue are admissible evidence to prove how he was treated by those who knew him, without showing any reply on his part, or any other act connected with the letters or their contents, was a question much discussed in Wright v. Tatham. Their admissibility was strongly urged as evidence of the manner in which the person was in fact treated by those who knew him; but it was replied, that the effect of the letters, alone considered, was only to show what were the opinious of the writers; and that mere opinions, upon a distinct fact, were in general inadmissible; but, whenever admissible, they must be proved, like other facts, by the witness himself under oath. The letters in this case were admitted by Gurney, B., who held the assizes; and upon error in the Exchequer Chamber, four of the learned judges deemed assizes, and admitted, and three thought otherwise; but the point was not decided, a venire de novo being awarded on another ground. See 1 Ad. & El. 3; and 7 Ad. & El. 329. Upon the new trial before the same judge, the letters were again received, and for this cause, on motion, a new trial was granted by Lord Denman, C. J., and Littledale and Coleridge, JJ. The cause was then again tried before Coleridge, J., who trejected the letter, and exceptions being taken, a writ of error was again brought in the Exchequer Chamber; where the six learned judges present, being divided equally upon the question, the judgment of the King's Bench was alfirmed (see 7 Ad. & El. 313, 408), and this judgment was afterwards affirmed in the House of Lords (see 4 Bing. N. C. 489); a large majority of the learned judges concurring in opinion that letters addressed to the party were not admissible in evidence, unless connected, by proof, with some act of his own in regard to the letters themselves, or their contents.

(a) So if the issue is upon the bankrupt having absconded, his declarations as to his intention to return, made at his departure from his place of business, are admissible. United States v. Penn, 13 Bankr. Reg. 464. So if the question is whether one is "avoiding or evading" civil process, answers given at his residence to persons calling there to serve process are admissible. Buswell v. Lincks, S Daly (N. Y.), 518. "When the intention of a person is relevant, that intention may be shown by his declarations at the time of the acts. Such declarations are a part of the res yestæ. They accompany the act, the nature, object, or motive of which is a proper subject of inquiry. They are verbal acts, and as such are legal evidence of the intention." Etna v. Brewer, 78 Me.

(b) On this subject, Lord J., in Walker v. Moors, 122 Mass. 501, says: "The distinction between reputation and hearsay evidence is sometimes difficult as a practical question, and is not always kept clearly in mind in the introduction of testimony upon reputed ownership, public rumor, general notoriety, and the like, though composed of the speech of third persons not under oath, is original evidence, and not hearsay; the subject of inquiry being the concurrence of many voices to the same fact.⁵

§ 102. Expressions of feeling. Wherever the bodily or mental feelings of an individual are material to be proved, the usual expressions of such feelings, made at the time in question, are also original evidence. If they were the natural language of the affection, whether of body or mind, they furnish satisfactory evidence, and often the only proof of its existence. (a) And whether they were real or feigned is for the jury to determine. Thus, in actions for criminal conversation, it being material to ascertain upon what terms the husband and wife lived together before the Evidence of reputed ownership is seldom admissible, except in cases of bankruptcy, by virtue of the statute of 21 Jac. l. c. 19, § 11; Gurr v. Rutton, Holt's N. P. Cas. 327; Oliver v. Bartlett, 1 Brod. & Bing. 269. a trial. General reputation is a fact; the mere declaration of one or many is hearsay. It does not require a multitude of witnesses to prove the fact that there is a general reputation upon a particular subject. The question is a simple one of fact. Is there a general reputation? Has the subject been so much discussed and considered that there is in the public mind a uniform and concurrent sentiment which can be stated as a fact? By the public mind, of course, is not meant the mind of the whole public, but of that portion of the public which is cognizant of and interested in the matter of inquiry.

(c) Evidence of the general reputation of a merchant among his fellow merchants, as to the tact of his solvency seems to be treely admitted. Thus the fact that a debtor was reputed insolvent at the time of an alleged fraudulent preference of a creditor is competent evidence tending to show that his preferred creditor had reasonable cause to believe him insolvent. Lee v. Kilburn, 3 Gray (Mass.), 594. And the fact that he was in good repute as to property, may likewise be proved, to show that such a creditor had not reasonable cause to believe him insolvent. Bartlett v. Decreet, 4 Id. 113; Heywood v. Reed, Id. 574. In both cases the testimony is admissible on the ground that the belief of men as to matters of which they have not personal knowledge is reasonably supposed to be affected by the opinions of others who are about them. See also Carpenter v. Leonard, 3 Allen (Mass.), 32; and Whitcher v. Shattuck, Id. 319.

(a) Exclamations of pain are admissible

(a) Exclamations of pain are admissible to prove the existence of pain. Insurance Co. v. Mosley, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 397; Bacon v. Charlton, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 581; Hatch v. Fuller, 131 Mass. 574; State v. In Grand Rapids, &c. R. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537, it was held that expressions of pain uttered during an examination by physicians, made for the express purpose of enabling them to testify in a suit which was already begun and was based on the injury causing the pain, were inadmissible. It seems that these invalidating facts applied more properly to the credibility of the evidence after it was in, than to its competency. Murphy v. New York, &c. R. R. Co., 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 125.

seduction, their language and deportment towards each other, their correspondence together, and their conversations and correspondence with third persons, are original evidence. But, to guard against the abuse of this rule, it has been held, that, before the letters of the wife can be received, it must be proved that they were written prior to any misconduct on her part, and when there existed no ground for imputing collusion.2 If written after an attempt of the defendant to accomplish the crime, the letters are inadmissible.3 Nor are the dates of the wife's letters to the husband received as sufficient evidence of the time when they were written, in order to rebut a charge of cruelty on his part; because of the danger of collusion. 4 (b) So, also, the representation by a sick person of the nature, symptoms, and effects of the malady under which he is laboring at the time, are received as original evidence. If made to a medical attendant, they are of greater weight as evidence; but, if made to any other person, they are not on that account rejected. 5(c) In prosecutions for

The rule admits, however, only exclamations of present pain or stateonly exclamations of present pain or state-ments of present symptoms. All state-ments made by the sick person relating to past transactions, however closely they may be connected with the present sickness, and even (it is held in most States) though stating the cause of the sickness or injury, should be rejected even if made to a physician for treatment, unless the statements are otherwise admissible, as part of the res gestæ. Roosa v. Boston Loan Co., 132 Mass. 439; Morrisey v. Ingham, 111 Id. 63, Ashland v. Marlborough, 99 Id. 47; Dundas v. It is, however, an obiter dictum in that case, and the general current of authority is contrary. There are, however, States in which a different rule exists in regard to the admissi-bility of relations of past medical facts relating to the injury and symptoms of the patient, and even as to the cause of the injury, when the relations are made to a medical expert with a view to getting treatment for the injury or disease, or to having the nature of the injury or disease ascer-

tained. In those States, such relations of past sufferings, feelings, or symptoms, are then admissible. Thus it has been held that a physician may testify to a statement or nariative given by a patient in relation to his condition, symptoms, sensations, and feelings, both past and present, and even the cause of the injury or disease, when such statements were received during treatment, and were necessary to an examination with a view to treatment, or when they are necessary to enable him to give his opinion as an expert witness. The existence of the rule admitting any exclamations of pain, etc., is based upon the necessity of such evidence from the latent nature of the facts proved by it. The rule allowing parties to testify in their own behalf has therefore had a great effect upon the rule now under discussion. In New York, this point has recently been thoroughly gone into and the rule much limited by various cases, the rule as now existing in that State admitting only such involuntary expressions of pain as screaming and the like. A very suggestive discussion of this species of evidence is given in the opinion of the court in Hagenlocher v. Coney Isl. & B. R. R. Co., 99 N. Y. 137. "Screaming or some similar exclamation is the natural language of pain in all men, and in all animals as well. It usually, and almost invariably, accompanies intense pain; and hence, such exclamations have always been received as competent evidence, tending to show suffering. And it is said to be original evidence. While the is said to be original evidence. necessity for such evidence is not so great since parties have been permitted to be witnesses in their own behalf as it was before, yet, the rule allowing such evidence has not been abrogated, and it must still have operation. The person injured may be dead, or, for some reason, unable to testify; and in such cases, certainly, the necessity for the reception of such evidence exists now as formerly. Although the injured person is a witness and testifies at the trial, the exclamations of pain made by such person may be proved and used to corroborate other evidence, and to give a more particular and vivid description of his or her condition. If evidence of the exclamations which are the natural concomitants and signs of pain and suffering were excluded, in many cases the party testifying, as a witness in his own behalf, would be deprived of that corroboration of his evidence to which he is justly entitled. Evidence may be given that a person appeared to be in great agony; was emaciated, looked haggard and feeble, and why not that he screamed from pain? Whether such exclamations were real or feigned, is always to be determined by the jury; and hence, this is a very safe species of evidence to be received. So, too, the absence of such exclamations with other appearances, may be proved as a circumstance bearing upon the question of suffering." Following the indications of this case, the New York Court of Appeals in a later case has gone still farther and excluded complaints of present pain made some days after the injury. Roche v. Brooklyn City & Newtown R. R. Co., 105 N. Y. 296. In this case the testimony of a third party was introduced, subject to exception, that the plaintiff, some days after the happening of the accident which caused ber mjury, complained that she was suffering pain in her injured arm. The witness did not testify that on these occasious the plaintiff screamed or grouned or gave other manifestations of a seemingly involuntary nature and indicative of bodily suffering, but he proved simple statements or declarations made by plaintiff, that she was, at the time of making them, suffering pain in her arm. The plaintiff was herself sworn, and proved the injury and the pain. The condition of the arm the night of the accident was also proved, that it was very much swollen and black all around it, and subsequently red and inflamed, and continued swollen more or less for a long time. The court discussed the admissibility of the complaint of pain as follows. "Prior to the time when parties were allowed to be witnesses, the rule in this class of cases permitted evidence of this nature. Cald-well v Murphy, 11 N. Y. 416; Werely v. Persons, 28 N. Y. 344. These cases show that the evidence was not confined to the time of the injury or to the mere exclama-tions of pain. The admissibility of the evidence was put in an opinion of Judge Denio, in 11 N. Y. supra, upon the necessity of the case as being the only means by which the condition of the sufferer, as to enduring pain, could in many instances be proved. . . . After the adoption of the amendment to the Code permitting parties to be witnesses, the question under discussion was somewhat mooted in Reed v. N. Y. C. R. R. Co. (45 N. Y. 574), by recent. Proof of such complaint, therefore, is original evidence;

Allen, J., in the course of his opinion, although the precise point was not before the court. The question there under discussion was as to the correctness of permitting the plaintiff to prove his declarations made at the time when he was doing some work, to a third person, as to the state of his health. That is not exactly like the case of complaints made, not as to a state of health, but as to a then present existing pain at the very spot alleged to have sustained injury, and proved so by other evidence; still, the remarks of Judge Allen on this kind of evidence in general, bear strictly upon the matter herein discussed. He reviewed in his opinion some of the above cases and others, and claimed that the courts had admitted the evidence from the necessity of the case as being the only method by which the condition of the party could be shown fully and completely, not only as to appearances but also as to suffering. But there was no agreement by the court upon that branch of the case, the judgment going upon another ground. The case of Hagenlocher v. Coney J. & B. R. R. Co. (99 N. Y. 136), decides that even since the Code, evidence of exclamations indicative of pain made by the party injured is admissible. The case does not confine proof of these exclamations to the time of the injury. Having thus admitted evidence of this kind since the adoption of the Code amendment, permitting parties to be witnesses, the question is, whether there is such a clear distinction between it and evidence of simple declarations of a party that he was then suffering pain, but giving no other indications thereof, as to call for the adoption of a different rule. It seems to us that there is. Evidence of exclama-tions, groans, and screams, is now per-mitted more upon the ground that it is a better and clearer and more vigorous description of the then existing physical condition of the party by an eye-witness, than could be given in any other way characterizes and explains such condition. Thus in the very last case cited, it was shown that the foot was very much swollen and so sore that the sheet could not touch it. How was the condition of soreness to be shown better than by the statement that when so light an article as a sheet touched the foot the patient screamed with pain? It was an involuntary and natural exhibition and proof of the existence of intense soreness and pain therefrom. True, it might be simulated, but this possibility is not strong enough to outweigh the propriety of permitting such evidence as fair, natural, and original, and corroborative evidence of the plaintiil, as to his then physical condition. Its weight and propriety are not therefore now sustained upon the old idea of the necessity of the case. But evidence of simple declarations of a party made some time after the injury, and not to a physician for the purpose of being attended to professionally, and simply making the statement that he or she is then suffering pain, is evidence of a totally different nature, is easily stated, liable to gross exaggeration, and of a most dangerous tendency, while the former necessity for its admission has wholly ceased." "As is said by Judge Allen, in Reed v. N. Y. C. R. C. Co. (supra), the necessity for giving such declarations in evidence where the party is living and can be sworn, no longer existing, and that being the reason for its admission, the reason of the rule ceasing, the rule itself, adopted with reluctance and followed cautiously, should also cease. With the rule as herein announced, there can be no fear of a dearth of evidence as to the extent of the injury and the suffering caused thereby. The party can himself be a witness if living; and if dead, the suffering is of no moment as it cannot be compensated for in an action by the personal representative under the statute, and the exclamations of pain, the groans, the sighs, the screams, can still be admitted. But we are quite clear that the bald statement made long after the injury by the party, that he suffers from pain, ought not to be admitted as in any degree corroborative of his testimony as to the extent of his pain." This last case was criticised in a recent case in Indiana, and the reasoning and decision not agreed to. Han-cock County v. Leggett, 115 Ind. 546. The Indiana court says as follows:

"We have given careful study to the case of Roche v. Brooklyn, &c. R. R. Co., 105 N. Y. 294, but we cannot assent either to the reasoning or the conclusion of the court in that case. It is conceded by the court that the rule was that such declarations were competent until the enactment of the statute permitting parties to be witnesses; but it is asserted that the rule was abrogated by that statute. It seems to us that if the law once was that such declarations were admissible, it was not in the power of the court to annul it. That could only be done by legislation. Where a statute is enacted changing the common-law rule, it is to be strictly interpreted, and is not to be extended by construction. It is but the statement of details and circumstances is excluded, it being no legal proof of their truth. 6 (d)

§ 103. Relationship. To this head may be referred much of the evidence sometimes termed "hearsay," which is admitted in cases of pedigree. The principal question, (a) in these cases, is that of the parentage or descent of the individual; and, in order to ascertain this fact, it is material to know how he was acknowl-an ancient and well-known rule that statutes in derogation of the common law must be strictly construed. It would be a plain violation of this rule to hold that a statute changing the one rule of law changed another and independent one. The change in the rule does not dissipate the reason. for latent injuries can only be known by declarations made at the time the injured person is suffering. But, however this may be, the rule is an established one, and as courts cannot legislate, they have no right to abrogate it. Judicial legislation is an evil to be avoided. The change in the law worked by the statute does not deprive a party of any competent evidence. The statute adds to his rights: it subtracts nothing from them. Although the statute makes the party a competent witness, it does not abridge his rights by taking from him evidence competent under the rules of the common law. We cannot agree, we say, in leaving this point, that a party is to be deprived of legitimate evidence because the statute permits him to testily.'

(d) Reg. v. Megson, 9 C. & P. 421. Mr. Stephen (Dig. Evid. art. 8) states this Stephen (Dig. Evid. art. 8) states this principle generally as applicable to all crimes. Rex v. Wink, 6 C. & P. 397. But see Haynes v. Com., Sup. Ct. Va. 1877, 3 L. & Eq. Rep. 699: People v. McClea, 32 Cal. 98; and a very able discussion of the subject in Amer. Law Review, vol. 14, p. 817; vol. 15, pp. 1, 71. The question cannot yet be said to be settled whether the practiculars of the comtled whether the particulars of the complaint can be given in evidence. That they may when they can be fairly considered part of the res gestæ is certain. Reg. v. Evre, 2 F. & F. 579. Cf. Reg. v. Wood, 14 Cox, Cr. Cas. 46. When they are not admirable constants. admissible as part of the res gester, the practice is usual to reject them, but the opinions of several learned judges are against the propriety of this course. Parke, B., in Reg v. Walker, 2 Moo. & R. 212; Stephen, Dig. of Evid. note V. In Connecticut, the particulars of the complaint are admitted. State v. De Wolf, 8 Conn. 93; State v. Byrne, 47 Conn. 465. (In New York, the particulars are not admitted, but only the fact of complaint. Baccio v. People, 41 N. Y. 265; People v. O'Sullivan, 104 N. Y. 490. As to how recent the complaint must be, there is no settled rule. The Court decides whether, under the circumstances of the case, the complaint was made upon the first opportunity, and if that is so, the fact of complaint is admissible; but the jury may also consider the time clapsing before the complaint is made, as bearing upon the probability of its truth. Baccio v. People, supra; People v. O'Sullivan, supra; Higgins v. People, 58 N. Y. 377.

(a) Stephen (Dig. Evid. art. 31) says that such declarations are admissible only in cases in which the pedigree to which they relate is in issue, and not to those in which it is only relevant to the issue. Whit-tnck v. Walters, 4 C. & P. 375. This is undoubtedly the safer rule, but is not uni-versally adopted. e. g. in Massachusetts. Thus, in North Brookfield v. Warren, 16 Gray, 174, the Court said: "Some of the authorities seem to limit the competency of this species of proof to cases where the main subject of inquiry relates to pedigree, and where the incidents of birth, marriage, and death, and the times when these events happened are put directly in issue; but upon principle we can see no reason for such a limitation. If this evidence is admissi-ble to prove such facts at all, it is equally so in all cases whenever they become legitimate subjects of judicial inquiry and investigation." Cf. Hathaway v. Evans, 113 Mass. 267.

edged and treated by those who were interested in him, or sustained towards him any relations of blood or affinity. It was long unsettled, whether any and what kind of relation must have subsisted between the person speaking and the person whose pedigree was in question; and there are reported eases in which the declarations of servants, and even of neighbors and friends, have been admitted. But it is now settled, that the law resorts to hearsay evidence in cases of pedigree, upon the ground of the interest of the declarants in the person from whom the descent is made out, and their consequent interest in knowing the connections of the family. The rule of admission is, therefore, restricted to the declarations of deceased persons who were related by blood or marriage to the person, and, therefore, interested in the succession in question. (b) And general repute in the family,

1 Vowles v. Young, 13 Ves. 140, 147; Goodright v. Moss, Cowp. 591, 594, as expounded by Lord Eldon, in Whitelocke v. Baker, 13 Ves. 514; Johnson v. Lawson, 2 Bing. 86; Monkton v. (b) The English rule is said to be that "the declarations must be made by a declarant shown to be legitimately related by blood to the person to whom they relate, or by the husband or wife of such person." Stephen, Dig. Evid. art. 31; Shrewsbury Peerage Case, 7 H. L. C. 26; Breadalbane Case, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 182; Hitchins v. Eardley, L. R. 2 P. & M. 248; Smith v. Tebbitt, L. R. 1 P. & M. 354. This statement is more stringent than that of Mr. Greenleaf, whose rule admits persons "related by blood or marriage" to the declarant. But even this more relaxed statement is probably not the law in some States. In Carter v. Montgomery, 2 Tenn. Ch. 223, the Court say this rule is not the law in Tennessee, and that while the English rule may be the most consonant to sound principle, and may answer the ends of justice in a dense population and settled community, yet it scarcely suffices in a sparsely inhabited community with a migratory and rapidly changing population. Accordingly evidence of declarations of persons not so related were admitted. To the same effect, are Banert v. Day, 3 Wash. C. C. 243; Boudereau v. Montgomery, 4 Id. 186; Jackson v. Cooley, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 128; Pegram v. Isabell, 2 Hen. & M. 193;

Walkup v. Pratt, 5 Harr. & J. 51. But in Blackburn v. Crawfords, 3 Wall. 185, where C died leaving land which was claimed by children of B, who had been C's mistress, declarations of B's sister, since dead, to prove B's marriage with C, were rejected. Cf. Murray v. Milner, L. R. 12 Ch. Div. 845; Cuddy v. Brown, 78 lll. 415; Jones v. Jones, 36 Md. 447. Also Mooers v. Bunker, 29 N. II. 42; Emerson v. White, ld. 452, Kelley v. McGuire, 15 Ark. 555. And probably the tendency of Courts at the present day would be to restrict the declarations to those of members of the family near or remote. Boone v. Miller, 73 Tex. 564. The declarations must have been made ante litem motam. Hodges v. Hodges, 106 N. C. 374. The relationship must be established by evidence dechors the declarations (Thompson v. Wolf, 8 Oreg. 454); and declarant must be dead. Greenleaf v. Dubuque, &c. R. R. Co., 30 Iowa, 301; Northrop v. IIale, 76 Me. 309. In this last case, the declarations were offered in a question of the validity of a claim of succession to property, the declarant being an aunt of the claimant, but her declarations being that he was an illegitimate son.

proved by the testimony of a surviving member of it, has been considered as falling within the rule. 2 (c)

$ 104. Birth, death, marriage. The term pedigree, however, embraces not only descent and relationship, but also the facts of birth, marriage, and death, and the times when these events happened. These facts, therefore, may be proved in the manner above mentioned, in all cases where they occur incidentally, and in relation to pedigree. Thus, an entry, by a deceased parent or other relative, made in a Bible, family missal, or any other book, or in any document or paper, stating the fact and date of the birth, marriage, or death of a child, or other relative, is regarded as a declaration of such parent or relative in a matter of pedigree. 1(a) So, also, the correspondence of deceased members of

² Doe v. Griffin, 15 East, 293. There is no valid objection to such evidence, because it is hearsay upon hearsay, provided all the declarations are within the family. Thus, the declarations of a deceased lady, as to what had been stated to her by her husband in his lifetime, were admitted. Doe v. Randall, 2 M. & P. 20; Monkton v. Attorney-General, 2 Russ. & My. 165; Bull. N. P. 295; Elliott v. Piersoll, 1 Peters, 328, 337. It is for the judge to decide, whether the declarants were "nembers of the family so as to render their evidence admissible;" and for the jury to settle the fact to which their declarations relate. Doe v. Davies, 11 Jur. 607; 10 Q. B. 314. In regard to the value and weight to be given to this kind of evidence, the following observations of Lord Langdale, M. R., are entitled to great consideration. "In cases," said he, where the whole evidence is traditionary, when it consists entirely of family reputation, or of statements of declarations made by persons who died long ago, it must be taken with such allowances, and also with such suspicions, as ought reasonably to be attached to it. When family reputation, or declarations of kindred made in a family, are the subject of evidence, and the reputation is of long standing, or the declarations are of old date, the memory as to the source of the reputation, or as to the persons who made the declarations, can rarely be characterized by perfect accuracy. What is true may become blended with, and scarcely distinguishable from, something that is erroneous; the detection of error in any part of the statement necessarily throws doubt upon the whole statement, and yet all that is material to the cause may be perfectly true; and if the whole be rejected as false, because error in some part is proved, the greatest injustice may be done. All testimony is subject to such errors, and testimony of this kind is more particularly so; and however difficult it may be to discover the truth, in cases where there can be no demonstration, and where every conclusion which may be drawn is subject to some doubt or uncertainty, or to some opposing probabilities, the courts are bound to adopt the conclusion which appears to rest on the most solid foun-

It has been held that the declarations of a deceased parent as to the place of birth of a child are inadmissible. R. v. Erith, 8 East, 539; Wilmington v. Burlington, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 174; Brooks v. Clay, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 545; Tyler v. Flan-ders, 57 N. H. 618. Probably the true ground of refusing such evidence is that given by the court in Union v. Plainfield, 39 Conn. 563; i. e. that the evidence is admissible only in cases of pedigree, which was the original and proper limit of the rule. It is also held that the date of a person's birth may be testified to by the person himself, although of course he must have been told this fact and his evidence is therefore hearsay. The evidence is admitted from the necessity of the case, and because it is based on family tradition and a person's knowledge of himself. Com. v. Stevenson, 142 Mass. 466. § 105. Inscriptions. Inscriptions on tombstones, and other funeral monuments, engravings on rings, inscriptions on family portraits, charts, or pedigree, and the like, are also admissible, as original evidence of the same facts. Those which are proved to have been made by or under the direction of a deceased relative are admitted as his declarations But if they have been publicly exhibited and were well known to the family, the publicity of them supplies the defect of proof, in not showing that they were declarations of deceased members of the family; and they are admitted on the ground of tacit and common assent. presumed, that the relatives of the family would not permit an inscription without foundation to remain; and that a person would not wear a ring with an error on it. 1(a) Mural and other funeral inscriptions are provable by copies, or other secondary evidence, as has been already shown.2 Their value, as evidence, depends much on the authority under which they were set up, and the distance of time between their erection and the events they commemorate.3

§ 106. Family conduct. Under this head may be mentioned family conduct, such as the tacit recognition of relationship, and the disposition and devolution of property, as admissible evidence, from which the opinion and belief of the family may be inferred, resting ultimately on the same basis as evidence of family tradition. Thus, it was remarked by Mansfield, C. J., in the Berkeley Peerage Case,4 that "if the father is proved to have brought up the party as his legitimate son, this amounts to a daily assertion that the son is legitimate." And Mr. Justice Ashhurst, in another case, remarked that the circumstance of the son's taking the name of the person with whom his mother,

An ancient pedigree, purporting to have been collected from history, as well as from other sources, was held admissible, at least to show the relationship of persons described by the framer as living, and therefore to be presumed as known to him. § 107. Marriage. It is frequently said, that general reputation is admissible to prove the fact of the marriage of the parties alluded to, even in ordinary cases, where pedigree is not in question. In one case, indeed, such evidence was, after verdiet, held sufficient, prima facie, to warrant the jury in finding the fact of marriage, the adverse party not having cross-examined the witness, nor controverted the fact by proof. 1 But the evidence produced in the other cases cited in support of this position cannot properly be called hearsay evidence, but was strictly and truly original evidence of facts from which the marriage might well be inferred; such as evidence of the parties being received into society as man and wife, and being visited by respectable families in the neighborhood, and of their attending church and public places together as such, and otherwise demeaning themselves in public, and addressing each other as persons actually married.2 (b)

§ 108. Res gestæ. There are other declarations which are admitted as original evidence, being distinguished from hearsay by their connection with the principal fact under investigation. The affairs of men consist of a complication of circumstances so intimately interwoven as to be hardly separable from each other. Each owes its birth to some preceding circumstance, and, in its turn, becomes the prolific parent of others; and each, during its existence, has its inseparable attributes, and its kindred facts, materially affecting its character, and essential to be known in order to a right understanding of its nature. These surrounding circumstances, constituting parts of the res gestæ, may always be

And the declarations of the defendant concerning his property and business transactions, made to third persons, in the absence of the plaintilf or his agents, are inadmissible to rebut such evidence. Boston & W. R. R. Corp. v. Dana, 1 Gray, 83, 101, 103. See also Commonwealth v. Montgomery, 11 Mct. 534.

Thus, in the trial of Lord George Gordon for treason, the cry of the mob who accompanied the prisoner on his enterprise was poraneous a declaration must be with the act it characterizes has been the subject of much discussion, especially in criminal cases. In the recent case of Reg. v. Bedingfield, 14 Cox, Cr. Cas. 341, the exclamation of a woman, coming out of a house with her throat cut, giving the name of a person as having cut her throat, was rejected on the ground that it was a statement of a past transaction, though the injury had been inflicted on her only a moment before, and she was then running for assistance. This decision, given in 1879, provoked much comment. See a very able discussion of the rule of res gestæ and criticism of Bedingfield's Case in American Law Review, vols. 14 and 15. Although this decision seems to hold to the rule that the declarations must be strictly contemporaneous with the act in order to be admissible, yet the current of decisions, in the United States at least, is to admit such declarations if they are so connected with a fact in issue as to qualify, or characterize, or explain it, although not strictly contemporaneous with it. In the leading case of Insurance Co. v. Mosley, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 397, the declarations were uttered some minutes after the fact which they characterized had occurred. In Com. v. McPike, 3 Cush. (Mass) 181, subsequent declarations were also admitted. And in accord with these decisions are And in accord with these decisions are Harriman v. Stowe, 57 Mo. 93; Crookham v. State, 5 W. Va. 510; Com. v. Hackett, 2 Allen (Mass.), 136; State v. Thomas, 30 La. An. Pt. 1, 600; Boothe v. State, 4 Tex. App. 202; Newton v. Mut. Ben. Life Ins. Co., 2 Dill. C. C. 154; Beaver v. S) 219; Brownell v. Pacific R. R. Co., 47 Mo. 239; Fifield v. Richardson, 34 Vt. 410. On the same principle it has been held that on the trial of a prisoner for murder, a statement made by him a few minutes after the homicide, near the place and in the hearing and presence of cye-witnesses of the homicide, who were not called by the Commonwealth, is admissible for the prisoner as a part of the res yestæ. Little's Case, 25 Gratt. (Va.) 921. In Jordan's Case, Id. 943, the description of the robber, as given by the wife of the person robbed, to the officer a "few moments" (how many does not appear) after the erime was committed, was admitted as part of the res gestæ. And see ante, § 102, n. So, the declaration of a party assaulted, made immediately after the assault, showing the character of the impression made at the time on his mind in legard to the nature of the attack, are admissible. Monday v. State, 32 Ga. 672. So, the declarations of a delendant, as to the circumstances under which he killled a runaway slave, made immediately after the fact, are admissible in an action of trespass for killing the slave. Hart v.

Powell, 18 Ga. 635.

These decisions are certainly opposed to the decision in Bedingfield's Case, and, indeed, in a pamphlet which Cockburn, C. J., published, defending his decision in that case, he says the American cases on this point have gone too far. Taylor on Evidence, 7th ed. vol. i. § 588, says: "It was at one time thought necessary that they (the declarations) should be contemporaneous with it (the main fact), but this doctrine of late years has been rejected, and it seems now to be decided that although concurrence of time must always be considered as material evidence to show the connection, it is by no means essential." Rouch v. Great Western Ry. Co., 1 Q. B. 51, p. 60, Ridley v. Gyde, 9 Bing. 349; Rawson v. Haigh, 2 Bing.

But there are also States where the stricter and more accurate doctrine is still held. Thus in State v. Seymour, 1 Houst. C. C. (Del.) 508, where one after firing a pistol at another, for which felonious wounding the indictment was brought, ran away for a short distance, about 200 yards, and then told one whom he met and who had not witnessed the affray, that the shooting was accidental, this declaration was rejected. And in Connecticut, the case of Enos v. Tuttle, cited by Mr. Greenleaf, note 1, has been consistently followed. Comstock v. Hadlyme, 8 Conn. 263; Ford v. Haskell, 32 Conn. 492; Rockwell v. Taylor, 41 Conn. 56. And compare Patterson v. South Carolina R. R. Co., 4 S. C. 153; East Tennessee R. R. Co. v. Duggan, 51 Ga. 212; and the able dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Clifford in Insurance Company v. Mosley, ubi supra. See also State v. Davidson, 30 Vt. 377; Com. v. Harwood, 4 Gray (Mass.), 41; Com. v. James, 99 Mass. 438; Beardstown v. Virginia, Com. v. Virgin ginia, 81 III. 541; Jackson v. State, 52 Ala. 305. In a recent case in Pennsylvania, the question of how far declarations nearly contemporaneous with the act in evidence in a case are admissible as being part of the res $gest \alpha$, was raised. The facts in this case were, that the plaintiff was a passenger on a railroad train, and in alighting from the car at the station, he fell upon the platform of the station and was in-jured. His claim was that the train did not stop long enough for him to get off the car safely. It appeared that the train was moving when the plaintiff attempted to leave it, and that he either fell, or voluntarily jumped from the train as it was thus moving away from the station. Immediately after the train had passed he said to one of the bystanders that he was badly hurt, that he got no chance to get off and that his foot was caught against the steps. These statements were held to be admissible as part of the res gestæ. The ground on which this evidence was admissible probably is: that the character of the action by which he left the train was a material point in the case, and that it was important that it should be known whether he voluntarily jumped from the train or fell. In view of this, his statements made almost immediately after his fall, to the effect that he caught his foot, or that his foot was caught against the steps, and that he got no chance to get off. would have the tendency to characterize his act of leaving the train, and would therefore be admissible under the decisions Penn. R. R. v. Lyons, 129 Pa. St. 114. So, where one was fatally injured while coupling cars, the court admitted in evidence in an action for the injury by his administrator, declarations of the decedent, which were made immediately after he was injured and substantially while he was being extricated from under the wheels of the car which had passed over him. These declarations were made within, not to exceed, two minutes of the accident, and, while the declarant remained in the presence of the train, and the alleged defective machinery, which was instrumental in producing his hurt, and before he had been removed from the spot where he received his fatal injury. Louisville, New Alb. & Chic. R. R. Co v. Buck, 116 Ind. 575. On the other hand, in a very similar case, such declarations were deemed inadmissible as narrations of past events. Chacage, West Div. R. R. Co. v Becker, 128 III. 548. One point seems clear that mere narrations of past transactions, whether long after the transactions narrated or immediately following them, is to be excluded; the reason being that they are untrustworthy in the extreme;

they are not made under oath; they can-not be discussed by cross-examination; nor are they likely to open to explanation, generally being fragmentary and incom-plete, and liable, therefore, to be misunder-stood and misreported. Estell v. State, 51 N. J. L. 183. But the word "narrative" is important in this connection as describing the kind of statements as to past facts which are inadmissible, i. e. a recital with some particularity of the circumstances in question and with presumably sufficient calmness to render the danger of falsification great. The mere fact that the declarations in question relate to past facts does not necessarily give them this character of "narrative." For instance, if spoken by one fatally injured, while suffering from the first shock of the injury, although the fact of the injury is past, his statements relating to it may be admissible. Louisville, New Alb. & Chic. R. R. Co. v. Buck, supra. Again, the time when the declarations are made is of almost controlling importance, though even in regard to this the circumstances may so connect a declaration made some time after the act it characterizes as to render the declaration admissible. Com. v. Hackett, 2 Allen, 139. The whole question received a very thorough discussion in a recent case in Rhode Island: State v. Murphy, 16 R. I. 529. In this case, upon the trial of an indictment for murder, two statements of the deceased were admitted in evidence, to the effect that he had been assaulted and robbed by two men whom he described. One of these statements was made immediately after the assault, and the other from ten to fifteen minutes later. These statements were admitted against the defendant's objection, as a part of the res gestæ. The court says, "The principle upon which the admission of such evidence rests is that declarations after an act may, nevertheless, spring so naturally and involuntarily from the thing done as to reveal its character, and thus belong to it and be a part of it... The rule deducible from the cases is well expressed by Bigelow, C. J., in Com. v. Hackett, 2 Allen, 136, 139: "The true test of the competency of the evidence is not, as was argued by the counsel for the delendant, that it was made after the act was done and in the absence of the defendant. These are important circumstances, entitled to great weight, and, if they stood alone, quite decisive. But they are outweighed by the other facts in proof, from which it appears ing the character of the principal fact.³ So, also, where a person enters into land in order to take advantage of a forfeiture, to foreclose a mortgage, to defeat a disseisin, 4 or the like; or changes his actual residence, or domicile, or is upon a journey, or leaves his home, or returns thither, or remains abroad, or secretes himself; or, in fine, does any other act, material to be understood; his declarations, made at the time of the transaction, and expressive of its character, motive, or object, are regarded as "verbal acts, indicating a present purpose and intention," and are therefore admitted in proof like any other material facts. 5 (c) So, that they were uttered after the lapse of so brief an interval, and in such connection with the principal transaction, as to form a legitimate part of it, and to receive credit and support as one of the circumstances which accompany and illustrate the main fact, which was the subject of inquiry before the jury."

It follows that if there is no act with which the declarations can be connected, they are not admissible. Thus in Lund v. Tyngsborough, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 36, which was an action for injuries received through a defect in the highway, the statements of a doctor, since deceased, made while examining the injured party, a long time after the injury, as to the nature of the injury, were held inadmissible. In that case the fact of the examination was irrelevant to the plaintiff's case. Cf. People v. Williams, 3 Abb. (N. Y.) App. 596; Richardson v. Moore, 19 Atlant. Rep. 390.

(c) State v. Winner, 17 Kan. 298. When the ascertainment of the motive with which an act is done becomes material the declarations of the actor, made at the time the act was done, and expressive of its character or object, are regarded as verbal acts expressing a present purpose and intention and are admissible in evidence. Williams v. State, 4 Tex. App. 5; State v. Lewis, 45 Iowa, 20; Stephen v. McCloy, 36 Iowa, 659; Duling v. Johnson, 32 Ind. 155. The rule has been stated as follows: That whenever the existence of a purpose, or state of mind, is the subject of inquiry, explanatory conduct and accompanying expressions of the party himself, or of other persons to him or in his presence, may be shown by proof. Schlenmer v. State, 51 N. J. L. 29. Thus, in the case of Hunter v. State, 11 Vroom, 495, it was held that the declara-tions of a third party explanatory of an act that was part of the res gestæ were not act that was part of the res gestæ were not hearsay, but were legitimate evidence. In the case of People v. Dowling, 84 N. Y. 478, which was a prosecution for receiving stolen goods, after the State had proved the receipt of the goods, the defendant, in order to rebut the inference of guilty knowledge on his part, offered to show what statement the thief had made to him at the time he purchased the property, with respect to the source from which he had got it; and such statements were held competent evidence by the were held competent evidence by the Court of Appeals. So again where the question was whether one who made deposits in a savings bank in another's name, and kept the books, meant to make a gift of the deposit, it was held that evidence of her declarations, while so holding the books, was competent on the question whether she intended to make a question whether she intended to make a gift. Scott v. Berkshire County Savings Bank, 140 Mass. 157. So when a receipt and a bill of sale are delivered as parts of a transaction, they may be admissible to show the intention of the parties to the transaction, so far as the intention expressed in the papers tend to qualify or characteristic the control of the papers. characterize the acts done. So the preambles of the vote of a corporation duly entered upon the records, reciting the purpose of a vote or resolution of the corporation, are competent evidence characterizing the purpose or intention of the act of the corporation. Wiley v. Athol, 150 Mass. 430. So, on a question of domicile, declarations of intent accompanying the act of moving, The Venus, 8 Cranch (U. S.), 278; Richmond v. Thomaston, 38 Me. 232; Cornville v. Brighton, 39 Id. 333. In such cases involving questions of domicile, this species of evidence is frequently admitted because the act of changing residence must be qualified by an intent to change domicile, and this intent may be shown by declarations contemporaneous with the change of residence. Such evidence, however, is strictly confined to contemporaneous declarations qualifying the act with respect to the intention. The narrative of past acts is inadmissible, and since the admission of parties as wit-nesses this evidence has still less ground for admission. Pickering v. Cambridge, 144 Mass. 244. So, in election cases, the declarations of a voter, made at or near the time of casting his vote, are ad-missible as evidence characterizing the vote, or explaining an ambiguous ballot, or showing the intention of the voter. These declarations are admissible as part of the res gesta when the act of voting is a material fact in the case, but are not admissible if made after the vote is cast. Boyer v. Teague, 106 N. C. 576. So when the execution of a lease by one of the defendants was in issue, and it was proved that he took the lease while it was unsigned, and read it, it was held that evidence of what he said when he read the lease, was admissible as tending to show whether or not he accepted the lease. Stevens v. Miles, 142 Mass. 571. So in an indictment for mur-der by shooting where it became import-ant to ascertain what the circumstances of the shooting were; why the shot was fired; in what condition of mind the respondent was at the time he discharged his pistol; whether the act was done with deliberation, or under sudden excitement of fear, passion, or provocation, as would reduce the offence of killing from murder to manslaughter; and the motive with which the act of killing was done was necessarily an important factor in deciding the case, it was held that the declarations of the defendant accompanying the act of shooting were admissible in evidence. State v. Walker, 77 Me. 490.

(e) It is only when the act is equivocal, and it is necessary to render its meaning clear, and expressive of a motive or object, that it is competent to prove declarations accompanying it, as falling within the class of res yestæ. By Bigelow, J., in Nutting v. Page, 4 Gray, 584. The conduct and exclamations of passengers on a railroad at the time of an accident, though not in the presence of the party receiving an injury, are admissible as part of the res gestæ, to justify the conduct of the party injured. Galena, &c. R. R. Co. v. Fay, 16 lll. 558. It has been held in England that it is competent for the plaintiff, but the arms of foreign and where a redistriction. for the purpose of proving upon whose credit the goods sued for were sold, to put in evidence a letter written by himself, at the time the bargain was made, to his agent, desiring him to inquire as to the credit of the defendant, of a person to whom the person receiving the goods had referred him for that purpose, and stating therein that the defendant was the buyer. And it was further considered that the jury might look at the whole letter, and although, in itself, it was not evidence of the truth of the facts affirmed, it might be considered as corroborative of the plaintiff's version of the transaction. Milne v. Leisler, 7 H. & N. 786; s. c. 8 Jur. N. s. 121; Eastman v. Bennett, 6 Wis. 232, where the same principle is maintained.

it is now well settled, that declarations in disparagement of the title of the declarant are admissible as original evidence. Possession is prima facie evidence of seisin in fee-simple; and the declaration of the possessor, that he is tenant to another, it is said, makes most strongly against his own interest, and therefore is admissible. (a) But no reason is perceived why every declaration accompanying the act of possession, whether in disparagement of the claimant's title, or otherwise qualifying his possession, if made in good faith, should not be received as part of the res gestæ; leaving its effect to be governed by other rules of evidence. (h) Such declarations are now generally admitted, but the practice is diverse in the various States. The rule in Massachusetts is that such declarations of declarated persons made while in possession of land owned by them, pointing out its boundaries, are admissible, if no interest to misrepresent appears. In Long v. Colton, 116 Mass. 414, the statement of the law on this point is made by Colt, J., as follows: "The declarations of deceased persons respecting boundaries are receival as evidence as an exception to the rule which rejects hearsay testimony. In most of the decided cases, it is held that the declaration should appear to have been made in disparagement of title or against the interest of the party making it, but in Daggett v. Shaw, 5 Metc. (Mass.), 223, it is said that the rule as practised in this Commonwealth is not so restricted, and that declarations of ancient persons, made while in possession of land owned by them, pointing out their boundaries on the land itself, are admissible as evidence when nothing appears to show that they are interested to § 110. Must be concomitant. It is to be observed, that, where declarations offered in evidence are merely narrative of a past occurrence, they cannot be received as proof of the existence of such occurrence. They must be concomitant with the principal act, and so connected with it as to be regarded as the mere result and consequence of the co-existing motives, in order to form a proper criterion for directing the judgment which is to be formed upon the whole conduct. On this ground, it has been holden

Gyde, 9 Bing. 349, where the point was to establish an act of bankruptcy, a conversation of the bankrupt on the 20th of November, being a resumption and continuation of one which had been begun, but broken off on the 25th of October preceding, was admitted in evidence. misrepresent, and it need not appear affirmatively that the declaration was made in restriction of or against their own rights, and in Bartlett v. Emerson, 7 Gray, 174, it is held that, to be admissible, such declarations must have been made by persons now deceased, while in possession of land owned by them, and in the act of pointing out their boundaries, with respect to such boundaries, boundaries, with respect to such boundaries, and where nothing appears to show an interest to deceive or misrepresent. Ware v. Brookhouse, 7 Gray, 454; Flagg v. Mason, 8 Gray, 556." Cf. Morrill v. Titcomb, 8 Allen (Mass.), 100; Adams v. Swausea, 116 Mass. 591; Fellows v. Smith, 130 Id. 378. In a somewhat recent case in Massachusetts, it was said that these delarations are rether to be admitted clarations are rather to be admitted simply as necessary exceptions to the general rule excluding hearsay, and that the principle should not be carried fur-ther than it has been already settled by authority. In this case the question was whether an easement was attached to an estate. The easement was a spring and watercourse reserved in a deed executed by one of the plaintiff's predecessors in title. The action was for interfering with the right of the plaintiff to use the spring. Evidence was admitted of declaration by the plaintiff's immediate grantor, since then deceased of his intention to divert the stream and identifying it as the one reserved in the deed. The declarations were made on the premises at the time of the grant to the plaintiff, and were held to be admissible. Peck v. Clark, 142 Mass. 436.

The declarations must be made before the declarant has parted with the title to the property, or they are not admissible

because they do not qualify a present act. Chase v. Horton, 143 Mass. 118; Roberts v. Medbery, 132 Mass. 100; Winchester v. Charter, 97 Mass. 140. A similar rule also obtains in Pennsylvania. Bender v. Pitzer, 27 Pa. St. 333. And New Hampshire, and Maine, and New York. Wood v. Fiske, 62 N. H. 173; Royal v. Chandler, 81 Me. 119. And in New Jersey and Indiana, such declarations are admissible if the act of voslarations are admissible if the act of possession which they accompany is provable in the case. Curtis v. Aaronson, 49 N. J. L. 75; Brown v. Kenyon, 108 Ind. 284. It will be noticed that, according to this rule, the admissibility of the declaration depends partly upon the fact that the declaration is made by an owner, or one in possession. But a broader rule is stated by Mr. Justice Strong, in Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 333, p. 364, to be the general American rule, i. e. if the declarant is shown to have knowledge of the facts which he stated, and made the declaration while on the land or in possession of it, and has since deceased, his declarations are admissible. This rule includes surveyors, chain carriers, &c., as well as owners (Hill v. Proctor, 10 W. Va. 59), who would be excluded by the other rule. This rule in its broader shape will be discussed, § 145, note (a). Cf. also § 189. In New York, it seems that the declarant need not be deceased at the time of the trial, nor need the declarations be in disparagement of his title, nor need they be made on the land itself, if the party making them is in possession of the land. Aberl v. Van Gelder, 36 N. Y. 513; Swettenham r. Leary, 18 Hun (N. Y.), 284. See post, §§ 145, 189. that letters written during absence from home are admissible as original evidence, explanatory of the motive of departure and absence, the departure and absence being regarded as one continuing act.²

§ 111. Declarations of conspirators. The same principles apply to the acts and declarations of one of a company of conspirators, in regard to the common design as affecting his fellows. Here a foundation must first be laid by proof sufficient in the opinion of the judge to establish prima facie the fact of conspiracy between the parties, or proper to be laid before the jury as tending to establish such fact. (a) The connection of the individuals in the unlawful enterprise being thus shown, every act and declaration of each member of the confederacy, in pursuance of the original concerted plan, and with reference to the common object, is, in contemplation of law, the act and declaration of them all; and is therefore original evidence against each of them. It makes no difference at what time any one entered into the conspiracy. Every one who does enter into a common purpose or design is generally deemed, in law, a party to every act which had before been done by the others and a party to every act which may afterwards be done by any of the others in furtherance of such common design. 1 (b) Sometimes, for the sake of convenience, the acts or declarations of one are admitted in evidence before sufficient proof is given of the conspiracy; the prosecutor undertaking to furnish such proof in a subsequent stage of the cause. (c) But this rests in the discretion of the judge, and is not permitted, except under particular and urgent circumstances; lest the jury should be misled to infer the fact itself of the conspiracy from the declarations of strangers. And here, also, care must be taken that the acts and declarations, thus admitted, be those only which were made and done during the pendency of the criminal enterprise, and in furtherance of its objects. If they

§ 112. Declarations of partners. This doctrine extends to all cases of partnership. Wherever any number of persons associate themselves in the joint prosecution of a common enterprise or design, conferring on the collective body the attribute of individuality by mutual compact, as in commercial partnerships and similar cases, the act or declaration of each member, in furtherance of the common object of the association, is the act of all. A foundation must first be laid by sufficient proof apart from the declarations offered, to establish prima facie (to the satisfaction of the judge) the fact of the existence of a partnership, and state-ments, declarations, or entries in books, which are admissible only on the assumption that there is such a partnership, are tion that there is such a partnership, are inadmissible to prove the partnership. M'Neile, 4 Dowl. & Ry. 7. Whether the acknowledgment of a debt by a partner, after dissolution of the partnership, will be sufficient to take the case out of the partner, after dissolution of the partnership, will be sufficient to take the case out of the partner, after dissolution of the partnership, will be sufficient to take the case out of the statute of limitations, and revive the remedy against the others, has been very much controverted in this country; and the authorities to the point are conflicting. In England, it is now settled by Lord Tenterder's Act (9 Geo. IV. c. 14), that such acknowledgment, or new promise, independent of the fact of part payment, shall not have such effect, except against the party making it. This provision has been adopted in the laws of some of the United States. See Massachusetts, Rev. Sts. c. 120, §§ 14-17; Vermont, Rev. St. c. 53, §§ 23, 27. And it has since been holden in England, where a debt was originally contracted with a partnership, and more than six years afterwards, but within six years before action brought, the partnership having been dissolved, one partner made a partial payment in respect of the debt,—that this barred the operation of the statute of limitations; although the jury found that he made the payment by concert with the plaintiffs, in the jaws of bankruptcy, and in frand of his late partners. Goddard v. Ingram, 3 Q. B. 839. The American cases seem to have turned mainly on the question, whether the admission of the existing indebtment amounted to the making of a new contract, or not. The courts which have viewed it as virtually to the making of a new contract, or not. The courts which have viewed it as virtually a new contract have held, that the acknowledgment of the debt by one partner, after the dissolution of partnership, was not admissible against his copartner. This side of the question was argued by Mr. Justice Story, with his accustomed ability, in delivering the judgment of the court in Bell v. Morrison, 1 Peters, 367 et seq.; where, after stating the point, he proceeded as follows: "In the case of Bland v. Haselrig, 2 Vent. 151, where the action was against four upon a joint promise, and the plea of the statute of limitations was put in, and the jury found that one of the defendants did promise within six years, and that the others did not; three judges against Ventris, J., held that the plaintiff could not have judgment against the defendant, who had made the promise. This case has been explained upon the ground, that the verdict did not conform to the pleadings, and establish a joint promise. It is very doubtful, upon a critical examination of the report, whether the opinion of the court, or of any of the judges, proceeded solely upon such ground. In Whitcomb v. Whiting, 2 Dong. 652, decided in 1781, in an action on a joint and several note brought against one of the makers, it was 1781, in an action on a joint and several note brought against one of the makers, it was held, that proof of payment, by one of the others, of interest on the note and part of the principal, within six years, took the case out of the statute, as against the defendant who was sied. Lord Mansfield said, 'payment by one is payment for all, the one acting virtually for all the rest; and in the same manner, an admission by one is an admission by all, and the law raises the promise to pay, when the debt is admitted to be due.

§ 113. Agents. A kindred principle governs in regard to the declarations of agents. The principal constitutes the agent his

This is the whole reasoning reported in the case, and is certainly not very satisfactory. It assumes that one party, who has anthority to discharge, has necessarily, also, authority to charge the others; that a virtual agency exists in each joint debtor to pay for the whole, and that a virtual agency exists by analogy to charge the whole. Now, this very position constitutes the matter in controversy. It is true, that a payment by one does enure for the benefit of the whole; but this arises not so much from any virtual agency for the whole, as by operation of law; for the payment extinguishes the debt; if such payment were made after a positive refusal or prohibition of the other identifications the state of the other identifications are resulted in the other identifications. joint debtors, it would still operate as an extinguishment of the debt, and the creditor could no longer sue them. In truth, he who pays a joint debt, pays to discharge himself; and so far from binding the others conclusively by his act, as virtually thems also, he cannot recover over against them, in contribution, without such payment has been rightfully made, and ought to charge them. When the statute has run against a joint debt, the reasonable presumption is that it is no longer a subsisting debt; and, therefore, there is no ground on which to raise a virtual agency to pay that which is not admitted to exist. But if this were not so, still there is a great difference between creating a virtual agency which is for the benefit of all, and one which is onerous and prejudicial to all. The one is not a natural or necessary consequence from the other. A person may well authorize the payment of a debt for which he is now liable, and yet refuse to authorize a charge, where there at present exists no legal liability to pay. if the principle of Lord Mansfield be correct, the acknowledgment of one joint debtor will bind all the rest, even though they should have utterly denied the debt at the time when such acknowledgment was made. The doctrine of Whitcomb v. Whiting, has been followed in England in subsequent cases, and was resorted to in a strong manner, in Jackson v. Fairbank, 2 H. Bl. 340, where the admission of a creditor to prove a debt, on a joint and several note under bankruptcy, and to receive a dividend, was held sufficient to charge a solvent joint debtor, in a several action against him, in which he pleaded the statute, as an acknowledgment of a subsisting debt. It has not, however, been received without hesitation. In Clarke v Bradshaw, 3 Esp. 155, Lord Kenyon, at Nisi Prius, expressed some doubts upon it; and the same cause went off on another ground. And in Brandram v. Wharton, I Barn. & Ald. 463, the case was very another ground. And in Brandram v. whatever, i barness and that occasion used language, much shaken, if not overturned. Lord Ellenborough, upon that occasion used language, "This doctrine,' said he, 'of rebutting the statute of limitations, by an acknowledgment other than that of the party himself, began with the case of Whitcomb v. Whiting. By that decision, where, however, there was an express acknowledgment, by an actual payment of a part of the debt by one of the parties, I am bound. But that case was full of hard-ships, for this inconvenience may follow from it. Suppose a person liable jointly with thirty or forty others, to a debt; he may have actually paid it, he may have had in his possession the document by which that payment was proved, but may have lost his receipt. Then, though this was one of the very cases which this statute was passed to protect, he may still be bound, and his liability be renewed, by a random acknowledgement rade by some one of the thirty or forth others, when yet he considers of the constant. edgment made by some one of the thirty or forty others, who may be careless of what mischief he is doing, and who may even not know of the payment which has been made. Beyond that case, therefore, I am not prepared to go, so as to deprive a party of the advantage given him by the statute, by means of an implied acknowledgment.' In the American courts, so far as our researches have extended, few cases have been litigated upon this question. In Smith v. Ludlow, 6 Johns. 268, the suit was brought against both partners, and one of them pleaded the statute. Upon the dissolution of the partnership, public notice was given that the other partner was authorized to adjust all accounts; and an account signed by him, after such advertisement, and within six years, was introduced. It was also proved, that the plaintiff called on the partner, who pleaded the statute, before the commencement of the suit, and requested a settlement, and that he then admitted an account, dated in 1797, to have been made out by him; that he thought the account had been settled by the other defendant, in whose hands the books of partnership were; and that he would see the other defendant on the subject, and communicate the result to the plaintiff. The court held that this was sufficient to take the case out of the statute; and said that, without any express authority, the confession of one partner, after the dissolution, will take a debt out of the statute. The acknowledgment will not, of itself, be evidence of an original debt; for that would enable one party to bind the other in new contracts. But the original debt being proved or admitted, the confession of one will bind the other, so as to prevent him from availing himself of the statute. This is evident, from the cases of Whiteomb v. Whiting, and Jackson v. Fairbank; and it results necessarily from the power given to adjust accounts. The court also thought the acknowledgment of the partner, setting up the statute, was sufficient of itself to sustain the action. This case has the peculiarity of an acknowledgment made by both partners, and a formal acknowledgment by the partner who was authorized to adjust the accounts after the dissolution of the partnership. There was not, therefore, a virtual, but an express and notorious agency, devolved on him, to settle the account. The correctness of the decision cannot, Johns. Ch. 266, 291, Mr. Chancellor Kent admitted the authority of Whitcomb v. Whiting, but denied that of Jackson v. Fairbanks, for reasons which appear to us solid and satisfactory. (c) Upon some other cases in New York, we shall have occasion hereafter to comment. In Hunt v. Bridgham, 2 Pick. 581, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, upon the authority of the cases in Douglas, H. Blackstone, and Johnston, held, that a partial payment by the principal debtor on a note, took the case out of the statute of limitations, as against a surety. The court do not proceed to any reasoning to establish the principle, considering it as the result of the authorities. Shelton v. Cocke, 3 Munford, 191, is to the same effect; and contains a mere annunciation of the rule, without any discussion of its principle. Simpson v. Morrison, 2 Bay, 533, proceeded upon a broader ground, and assumes the doctrine of the case in 1 Taunt. 104, hereinafter noticed to be correct. Whatever may be the just influence of such recognitions of the principles of the English cases, in other States, as the doctrine is not so settled in Kentucky, we must resort to such recognition only as furnishing illustrations to assist our reasoning, and decide the case now as if it had never been decided before. By the general law of partnership, the act of each partner, during the continuance of the partnership, and within the scope of its objects, binds all the others. It is considered the act of each, and of all, resulting from a general and mutual delegation of authority. Each partner may, therefore, bind the partnership by his contracts in the partnership business; but he cannot bind it by any contracts beyond those limits. A dissolution, however, puts an end to the authority. By the force of its terms, it operates as a revocation of all power to create new contracts; and the right of partners, as such, can extend no further than to settle the partnership concerns already existing, and to distribute the remaining funds. Even this right may be qualified, and restrained, by the express delegation of the whole authority to one of the partners. The question is not, however, as to the authority of a partner after the dissolution to adjust an admitted and subsisting debt; we mean, admitted by the whole partnership or unbarred by the statute; but whether he can, by his sole act, after the action is heared by large of time regime to the can. barred by lapse of time, revive it against all the partners, without any new authority communicated to him for this purpose. We think the proper resolution of this point depends upon another; that is, whether the acknowledgment or promise is to be deemed a mere continuation of the original promise, or a new contract, springing out of, and supported by, the original consideration. We think it is the latter, both upon principle and authority; and if so, as after the dissolution no one partner can create a new contract, binding upon the others, his acknowledgment is inoperative and void, as to them. There is some confusion in the language of the books, resulting from a want of strict attention to the distinction here indicated. It is often said, that an acknowledgment revives the promise, when it is meant, that it revives the debt or cause of action. The revival of a debt supposes that it has once been extinct and gone; that there has been a period in which it had lost its legal use and validity. The act which revives it is what essentially constitutes its new being, and is inseparable from it. It stands not by its original force, but by the new promise, which imparts vitality to it. Proof of the latter is indispensable, to raise the assumpsit, on which an action can be maintained. It was this view of the matter which first created a doubt, son v. Fairbank, are not now regarded with much consideration in the English courts

(c) Whiteomb v. Whiting, and Jack- 2 Russ. 153); and they are regarded with still less in the courts of this country. Van Keuren v. Parmelee, 2 Comst. (N. Y.) 523. (Davies v. Edwards, 6 Eng. L. & Eq. 520; See also Angell on Limitations, 6th ed. $260.

ness, is the act of the principal whom he represents. And, "where the acts of the agent will bind the principal, there his whether it was not necessary that a new consideration should be proved to support the whether it was not necessary that a new consideration should be proved to support the promise since the old consideration was gone. That doubt has been overcome; and it is now held, that the original consideration is sufficient, if recognized, to uphold the new promise, although the statute cuts it off, as a support for the old. What, indeed, would seem to be decisive on this subject is, that the new promise, if qualified or conditional, restrains the rights of the party to its own terms; and if he cannot recover by those terms, he cannot recover at all. If a person promise to pay, upon condition that the other do an act, performance must be shown, before any title accrues. If the declaration lays a promise by or to an intestate, proof of the acknowledgment of the debt by or to his personal representative will not maintain the writ. Why not, since it establishes the continued existence of the debt. The plain reason is, that the promise is a new one, by or to the administrator himself, upon the original consideration; and not a revival of the original promise. So, if a man promises to pay a pre-existing debt, barred by the statute, when he is able, or at a future day, his ability must be shown, or the time must be passed before the action can be maintained. Why? Because it rests on the new promise, and its terms must be complied with. We do not here speak of the form of alleging the promise in the declaration; upon which, perhaps, there has been a diversity of opinion and judgment; but of the fact itself, whether the promise ought to be laid in one way or another, as an absolute, or as a conditional, promise; which may depend on the rules of pleading. This very point came before the twelve judges, in the case of Hyleing v. Hastings, 1 Ld. Raym. 389, 421, in the time of Lord Holt. There, one of the points was, 'whether the acknowledgment of a debt within six years, would amount to a new promise, to bring it out of the statute; and they were all of the opinion that it would not, but that it was evidence of a promise. Here, then, the judges manifestly contemplated the acknowledgment, not as a continuation of the old promise, but as evidence of a new promise; and that it is the new promise which takes the case out of the statute. Now, what is a new promise but a new contract; a contract to pay, upon a pre-existing consideration, which does not of itself bind the party to pay independently of the contract? So, in Boydell v. Drummond, 2 Campb. 157, Lord Ellenborough, with his characteristic precision, said, 'If a man acknowledges the existence of a debt, barred by the statute, the law has been supposed to raise a new promise to pay it, and thus the remedy is revived.' And it may be affirmed, that the general ral current of the English as well as the American authorities conforms to this view of the operation of an acknowledgment. In Jones v. Moore, 5 Binney, 573, Mr. Chief Justice Tilghman went into an elaborate examination of this very point; and came to the conclusion, from a review of all the cases, that an acknowledgment of the debt can only be considered as evidence of a new promise; and he added, 'I cannot comprehend the meaning of reviving the old debt in any other manner, than by a new promise.' There is a class of cases, not yet adverted to, which materially illustrates the right and powers of partners, after the dissolution of the partnership, and bears directly on the point under consideration. In Hackley v. Patrick, 3 Johns. 536, it was said by the court, that 'after a dissolution of the partnership, the power of one party to bind the others wholly ceases. There is no reason why this acknowledgment of an account should bind his copartners, any more than his giving a promissory note in the name of the firm, or any other act.' And it was therefore held, that the plaintiff must produce further evidence of the existence of an antecedent debt, before he could recover; even though the acknowledgment was by a partner authorized to settle all the accounts of the firm. This doctrine was again recognized by the same court, in Walden v. Sherburne, 15 Johns. 409, 424, although it was admitted that in Wood v. Braddick, 1 Taunt. 104, a different decision had been had in England. If this doctrine be well founded, as we think it is, it furnishes a strong ground to question the efficacy of an acknowledgment to bind the partnership for any purpose. If it does not establish the existence of a debt against the partnership, why should it be evidence against it at all? If evidence, aliunde, of facts within the reach of the statute, as the existence of a debt, be necessary before the acknowledgment binds, is not this letting in all the mischiefs against which the statute intended to guard the parties: viz., the introduction of stale and dormant demands of long standing and of uncertain proof? If the acknowledgment, per se, does not bind the other partners, where is the propriety of admitting proof of an ante-cedent debt extinguished by the statute as to them, to be revived without their consent? It seems difficult to find a satisfactory reason why an acknowledgment should representations, declarations, and admissions, respecting the subject-matter, will also bind him, if made at the same time, and constituting part of the res gestæ." They are of the nature raise a new promise, when the consideration upon which alone it rests, as a legal obligation, is not coupled with it in such a shape as to bind the parties; that the parties are not bound by the admission of the debt as a debt, but are bound by the acknowledgment of the debt, as a promise, upon extrinsic proof. The doctrine in 1 Taunt. 104, stands of the debt, as a profiles, upon extrusic proof. The doctrine in I radic 10-3, stands upon a clear, if it be a legal ground; that as to the things past, the partnership continues, and always must continue, notwithstanding the dissolution. That, however, is a matter which we are not prepared to admit, and constitutes the very ground now in controversy. The light in which we are disposed to consider this question is, that after a dissolution of a partnership, no partner can create a cause of action against the other partners, except by a new authority communicated to him for that purpose. It is wholly immaterial what is the consideration which is to raise such cause of action, - whether it be a supposed pre-existing debt of the partnership, or any auxiliary consideration which might prove beneficial to them. Unless adopted by them, they are not bound by it. When the statute of limitations has once run against a debt, the cause of action against the partnership is gone. The acknowledgment, if it is to operate at all, is to create a new cause of action; to revive a debt which is extinct; and thus to give an action which has its life from the new promise implied by law from such an acknowledgment, and operating and limited by its purport. It is, then, in its essence, the creation of a new right, and not the enforcement of an old one. We think, that the power to create such a right does not exist after a dissolution of the partnership in any partner."

It is to be observed, that in this opinion the court were not unanimous; and that the learned judge declares that the majority were "principally, though not exclusively, influenced by the course of decisions in Kentucky," where the action arose. A similar view of the question has been taken by the courts of Pennsylvania, both before and since the decision of Bell v. Morrison; Levy v. Cadet, 17 Serg. & Raw. 127; Searight v. Craighead, 1 Pa. 135; and it has been followed by the Courts of Indiana. Yandes v. Lefavour, 2 Blackf. 371. Other judges have viewed such admissions not as going to create a new contract, but as mere acknowledgments of the continued existence of a create a new contract, but as mere acknowledgments of the continued existence of a debt previously created, thereby repelling the presumption of payment, resulting from lapse of time, and thus taking the case out of the operation of the statute of limitations. To this effect are White v. Hale, 3 Pick. 291; Martin v. Root, 17 Mass. 222, 227; Cady v. Shepherd, 11 Pick. 400; Vinal v. Burrill, 16 Pick. 401; Bridge v. Gray, 14 Pick. 61; Patterson v. Choate, 7 Wend. 441; Hopkins v. Banks, 7 Cowen, 650; Austin v. Bostwick, 9 Conn. 496; Greenleaf v. Quincy, 3 Fairf. 11; McIntire v. Oliver, 2 Hawks, 209; Ward v. Howell, 5 Har. & Johns. 60; Fisher v. Tucker, 1 McCord, Ch. 175; Wheelock v. Doolittle, 18 Vt. 440. In some of the cases a distinction is strongly taken between admissions which go to establish the original existence of the debt, and those which only show that it has never been paid, but still remains in its original those which only show that it has never been paid, but still remains in its original force: and it is held, that before the admission of a partner, made after the dissolution, & Johns. 134, 144; Smith v. Ludlow, 6 Johns. 267; Patterson v. Choate, 7 Wend. 441, 445; Ward v. Howell, Fisher v. Tucker, Hopkins v. Banks, Vinal v. Burrill, ubi svpra; Shelton v. Cocke, 3 Munf. 197. In Austin v. Bostwick, the partner making the admission had become insolvent; but this was held to make no difference, as to the admission had become insolvent; missibility of his declaration. A distinction has always been taken between admissions by a partner after the dissolution, but before the statute of limitations has attached to by a partner after the dissolution, but before the statute of limitations has attached to the debt, and those made afterwards; the former being held receivable, and the latter not. Fisher v. Tucker, 1 McCord, Ch. 175. And see Scales v. Jacob, 3 Bing. 638; Gardner v. M'Mahon, 3 Q. B. 566. See further on the general doctrine, post, § 174, n. See also Chardon v. Oliphant, 2 Const. 685; cited in Collyer on Partn. 236, n. (2d Am. ed.). It may not be useless to observe, that Bell v. Morrison was cited and distinguished, partly as founded on the local law of Kentucky, in Parker v. Merrill, 6 Greenl. 47, 48; and in Greenleaf v. Quiney, 3 Fairf. 11; and that it was not cited in the cases of Patterson v. Choate, Austin v. Bostwick, Cady v. Shepherd. Vinal v. Burrill, and Yandes v. of original evidence, and not of hearsay; the representation or statement of the agent, in such cases, being the ultimate fact to be proved, and not an admission of some other fact.² But, it must be remembered, that the admission of the agent cannot always be assimilated to the admission of the principal. The party's own admission, whenever made, may be given in evidence against him; but the admission or declaration of his agent binds him only when it is made during the continuance of the agency in regard to a transaction then depending et dum fervet opus. It is because it is a verbal act, and part of the res gestæ, that it is admissible at all; and, therefore, it is not necessary to call the agent himself to prove it; 3 but, wherever what he did is admissible in evidence, there it is competent to prove what he said about the act while he was doing it; 4 and it follows, that, where his right to act in the particular matter in question has ceased the principal can no longer be affected by his declarations, they, being mere hearsay. 5 (a)

§ 114. Declarations of agents. It is to be observed, that the rule admitting the declarations of the agent is founded upon the legal identity of the agent and the principal; and therefore they bind only so far as there is authority to make them. (a) Where this authority is derived by implication from authority to do a

by an agent, one or more of the following facts must exist: It must appear that the agent was specially authorized to make them; or his powers must have been such as to constitute him the general repre-sentative of the principal, having the management of the entire business; or the admissions must have formed part of the construction of the contract; or, if they are non-contractual they must have been a part of the res gestæ. It is imperative in cases of alleged tortious conduct, such as negligence, unless the act is specially authorized, that the admissions of the agent must be part of the res gestæ, and contemporaneous with the act of agency, otherwise they are hearsay. Oil agency, otherwise they are hearsay. On City Fuel Supply Co. v. Boundy, 122 Pa. St. 460; Erie & W. V. R. R. Co. v. Smith, 125 Pa. St. 264; Durkee v. Cent. Pac. R. R. Co., 69 Cal. 534. The declarations of the driver of a cow (Luby v. Hudson River R. R. Co., 17 N. Y. 131), of the conductor (Griffin v. Montgomery R. R. Co., 7 Gray (Mass.), 92) of a railway train, as to the mode in which an accident occurred, made after the occurrence, are inadmissible as hearsay; but the admissions of a like nature by the general agent or president of a company (Charleston R. R. Co. v. Blake, 12 Rich. (S.C.) Law, 634), or of a baggage-master in answer to inquiries for lost baggage, admissible, as within the scope of their general duties. Morse v. Conn. River R. R. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.), 450. See also Ins. Co. v. Woodruff, 2 Dutch. (N. J.) 541, where the admissions of an insurance agent, made after a loss, authorized to receive premiums and deliver policies, as to the delivery of a policy, were held admissible. And see post, § 114, n. And the general principle is that the admissions must be made while the agent is performing some act which is in the scope of his authority, and with reference to that act which is being done. Decker, 82 Pa.

(a) Or in other words, the rule is that the declarations of the agent are admissible in evidence against his principal when the principal is a party to the transaction the agent is engaged in for his principal at the time. Hawk v. Applegate, 37 Mo. App. 39; Rouse v. Mohr, 29 III. App. 324; Updyke v. Wheeler, 37 Mo. App. 686. Thus where it was a material fact whether or not the plaintiff was employed by the agent of the defendant, and the plaintiff offered as evidence of such employment, declarations of an agent of the defendant, who had authority to hire employees, in conversation with a third person, it was held that these declarations of the agent were not a part of his business of employing people for the defendant, and that his declarations were therefore inadmissible. Bensley v. Brockway, 27 Ill. App. 412; Curran v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 27 Ill. App. 572. This exclusion is based upon the doctrine applicable to principal and agent which excludes from consideration as against the former, the acts and declarations of the latter, when not engaged in the execution of his agency, and not relating to the subject of its purpose in which he is at the time engaged. It should be noted, however, that while that rule rests upon sound and well settled principles, it may not be applicable when the question is one of fraud of the agent in abuse of his trust and confidence with the person towards whom he holds such relation. Then the field of inquiry is open to prove the fact upon which such charge is founded. Jones v. Jones, 120 N. Y. 601. The common rule of agency is also applicable to such declarations, i. e. that the agency must be proved before the acts or declarations of the agent will affect the principal. Cent. Penn. Teleph. Co. v. Thompson, 112 Pa. St. 131; Francis v. Edwards, 77 N. C. 271; Galbreath v. Cole, 61 Ala. 139; Central Branch U. P. R. R. Co. v. Butman, 22 Kan. 639. The declarations of a son while employed in performing a contract for his services, made by him as agent for his father, are not admissible in evidence to prove the terms of the contract. Corbin v. certain act, the declarations of the agent, to be admissible, must be part of the res $gest \alpha$. (b) An authority to make an admission is not necessarily to be implied from an authority previously given in respect to the thing to which the admission relates. Thus it has been held,² that the declarations of the bailee of a bond, entrusted to him by the defendant, were not admissible in proof of the execution of the bond by the bailor, nor of any other agreements between the plaintiff and defendant respecting the subject. The res gestæ consisted in the fact of the bailment, and its nature; and on these points only were the declarations of the agent identified with those of the principal. As to any other facts in the knowledge of the agent, he must be called to testify, like any other witness.3

§ 115. Entries by third persons. It is upon the same ground that certain entries, made by third persons, are treated as original evidence. Entries by third persons are divisible into two classes: first, those which are made in the discharge of official duty, and in the course of professional employment; and, secondly, mere private entries. Of these latter we shall hereafter speak. In regard to the former class, the entry, to be admissible, must be one which it was the person's duty to make, or which belonged to the transaction as part thereof, or which was its usual and proper concomitant.4 It must speak only to that which it was his duty or business to do, and not to extraneous and foreign eircumstances. The party making it must also have had competent knowledge of the fact, or it must have been part of his duty to have known it; there must have been no particular motive to enter that transaction falsely, more than any other; and the entry must have been made at or about the time of the transac tion recorded. In such cases, the entry itself is admitted as original evidence, being part of the res gestæ. The general interest of the party, in making the entry, to show that he has done his official duty, has nothing to do with the question of its admissibility; nor is it material whether he was or was not competent to testify personally in the case.4 If he is living, and competent to testify, it is deemed necessary to produce him. 5 (a) But, if he is called as a witness to the fact, the entry of it is not thereby excluded. It is still an independent and original circumstance, to be weighed with others, whether it goes to corroborate or to impeach the testimony of the witness who made it. On Stephen, Digest of Evidence, art. 27. On the same principle, the books of a corporation, proved to have been kept by its treasurer in the business of the corporation, and to be in his handwriting, are admissi-ble to prove the facts entered in them, on proof of the death of the treasurer, but not without such proof. It is not enough to prove that the books appear to be the books of the corporation, or in the handwriting of the former treasurer, or were writing of the former treasurer, of worker received by the present treasurer as the books of the corporation. Chenango Bridge Corporation v. Lewis, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 111.

In Connecticut, it is held, that if the person who made the entry has been in person who made the entry has been in parts unknown for a long time and out of the State, and cannot be procured as a witness, it is as if he were dead. New Haven, &c. Company v. Goodwin, 42 Conn. 230. But if the entry was not in the course of the duty of the person, and yet against his interest it is not receively. not against his interest, it is not receivable. Webster v. Webster, 1 F. & F. 401.

the entry, unimpeached, is considered sufficient, as original evidence, and not hearsay, to establish the fact in question.6

§ 116. Entries by third persons. One of the earliest reported cases, illustrative of this subject, was an action of assumpsit, for beer sold and delivered, the plaintiff being a brewer. The evidence given to charge the defendant was, that, in the usual course of the plaintiff's business, the draymen came every night to the clerk of the brewhouse, and gave him an account of the beer delivered during the day, which he entered in a book kept for that purpose, to which the draymen set their hands; and this entry, with proof of the drayman's handwriting and of his death, was held sufficient to maintain the action. 1(a) In another case, 2 before Lord Kenyon, which was an action of trover for a watch, where the question was, whether the defendant had delivered it to a third person, as the plaintiff had directed; an entry of the fact by the defendant himself in his shop-book, kept for that purpose, with proof that such was the usual mode, was held admissible in evidence. One of the shopmen had sworn to the delivery,

But upon a question of the infancy of a Jew, where the time of his circumcision, which by custom is on the eighth day after his birth, was proposed to be shown by an entry of the fact made by a deceased rabbi, whose duty it was to perform the office and to make the entry; the entry was held not receivable. Davis v. Lloyd, 1 Car. & Kir. 275. Perhaps because it was not made against the pecuniary interest of the rabbi. (b)

Increiore, where the coals sold at a mine were reported daily by one of the workmen to the foreman, who, not being able to write, employed another person to enter the sales in a book; it was held, the foreman and the workman who reported the sale both being dead, that the book was not admissible in evidence in an action for the price of the coals. Brain v. Preece, 11 M. & W. 773.

(b) But it is difficult to reconcile this case with sound principle or with previous decisions. It has been held in this country that the entry of a baptism contempora-neously made by a Roman Catholic priest, in the discharge of his duty, is competent evidence, after his death, of the date of the baptism, the book being produced from the proper custody, although he was not a sworn officer, and the record was not by law required to be kept. Kennedy v. Doyle, 10 Allen (Mass.), 161. This case was approved in the later case of Whiteher was approved in the later case of the later v. McLaughlin, 115 Mass. 167, where it is held that the date of baptism may be proved by such an entry. The date of baptism is of course alone not competent to prove the age of a defendant, but it may be made so by other testimony, showing how old the person was when he was baptized. In the case of Shutesbury v. Hadtized. In the case of Shutesbury v. Hadley, 133 Mass. 242, it was held that a record of a town clerk of the facts concerning a marriage required by law to be recorded by him, is evidence of the fact so recorded, e. g. of the residence of the parties, independently of the statute by which such record is made prima facie evidence of such facts. and his entry was offered to corroborate his testimony; but it was admitted as competent original evidence in the cause. So, in another case, where the question was upon the precise day of a person's birth, the account-book of the surgeon who attended his mother on that occasion, and in which his professional services and fees were charged, was held admissible, in proof of the day of the birth.3 So where the question was, whether a notice to quit had been served upon the tenant, the indorsement of service upon a copy of the notice by the attorney who served it, it being shown to be the course of business in his office to preserve copies of such notices, and to indorse the service thereon, was held admissible in proof of the fact of service. 4 (b) Upon the same ground of the contemporaneous character of an entry made in the ordinary course of business, the books of the messenger of a bank, and of a notary-public, to prove a demand of payment from the maker, and notice to the indorser of a promissory note, have also been held admissible.⁵ The letter-book of a merchant, party in the cause, is also admitted as prima facie evidence of the contents of a letter addressed by him to the other party, after notice to such party to produce the original; it being the habit of merchants to keep such a book. And, generally, contemporaneous entries made by third persons in their own books, in the ordinary course of business, the matter being within the peculiar knowledge of the party making the entry, and there being no apparent

(b) Where such an indorsement of service had been admitted to prove the fact of service of notice, the person who made the service and the indorsement being dead, parol declarations of his, contradict-ing the indorsement, were held inadmissible. Stapylton v. Clough, 22 Eng. Law & Eq. 275; 2 El. & Bl. 933.

It will be seen, in that case, that the fact of the surgeon's performance of the service charged was abundantly proved by other testimony in the cause; and that nothing remained but to prove the precise time of performance; a fact in which the surgeon had no sort of interest. But, if it were not so, it is not perceived what difference it could have made, the principle of admissibility being the

and particular motive to pervert the fact, are received as original evidence; though the person who made the entry has no recollection of the fact at the time of testifying; provided he swears that he should not have made it, if it were not true. 8 (d) The same principle has also been applied to receipts and other acts contemporaneous with the payment, or fact attested.9

§ 117. Shop-books. The admission of the party's own shopbooks, in proof of the delivery of goods therein charged, the entries having been made by his clerk, stands upon the same principle which we are now considering. The books must have been kept for the purpose; and the entries must have been made contemporaneous with the delivery of the goods, and by the person whose duty it was, for the time being, to make them. In such cases the books are held admissible, as evidence of the delivery of the goods therein charged, where the nature of the subject is such as not to render better evidence attainable. (a)

Such entries are not written contracts, but the private memoranda of the party, becoming, with the aid of his suppletory oath, under an exception to the general rules, competent evidence of sale and delivery. Although competent and strong evidence as affecting the party offering them, yet they are not conclusive, but may § 118. Party's own entries. In the United States, this principle has been carried farther, and extended to entries made by the party himself in his own shop-books. (a) Though this evidence

See also Tait on Evid. p. 176. An interval of one day, between the transaction and the entry of it in the book, has been deemed a valid objection to the admissibility of the book in evidence. Walter v. Bollman, 8 Watts, 544. But the law fixes no precise rule as to the moment when the entry ought to be made. It is enough if it be made "at or near the time of the transaction." Curren v. Crawford, 4 S. & R. 3, 5. Therefore, where the goods were delivered by a servant during the day, and the entries were made by the master at night, or on the following morning, from the memorandums made by the servant, it was held sufficient. be explained, and, as it would seem, may be shown to have been erroneous. Thus, in an action for goods sold and delivered, if the plaintiff, to prove his case, produces his books of account, in which the goods are charged to a third person, he may then be permitted to show by parol that the goods were not sold to such third person, but were sold to the defendant, and were charged to such person at the defendant's request. James v. Spaulding, 4 Gray, 451. (a) In addition to the States mentioned in note 1 as having expressly permitted or recognized and regulated by statute, the admission of the party's shop-books, and the entries therein, to prove the sale or delivery of goods, the following States have enacted similar statutes. Colorado Gen. Laws, Par. 2953, sec. 3, provides that when in a civil action a claim or defence is founded on a book account, any party may testify, as to the account-book and items, that the book is a book of original entries, and that the entries therein were made by himself, and are true and just, or were made by a deceased or disqualified person, made in the usual course of trade; and thereupon the book and entries are evidence in the case. In Illinois (Rev. St. ch. 51, sec. 3), a sim-has sometimes been said to be admitted contrary to the rules of the common law, yet in general its admission will be found in namely, Vermont, 1 Tolman's Dig. 185; Connecticut, Rev. Code, 1849, tit. 1, § 216; Delaware, St. 25 Geo. II., Rev. Code, 1829, p. 89; Maryland, as to sums under ten

In Michigan a ilar statute is enacted. similar statute has been enacted. How-ell's Statutes, sec. 7526, Laws of 1885, No. 106. The statute in Minnesota makes books of original entries evidence of moneys paid, goods delivered, etc. Stat. of Minn., p. 803, sec. 78. In Maine, the statute provides that when books and memoranda of a deceased person are put in evidence in an action by or against the representatives of the deceased by either side, the other party may testify in relation thereto. Mc. Rev. Sts., chap. 82, sec. 96, cl. 4. In Ohio, the statutes provide that provide that in a claim or defence founded upon a book account the party may testify that the book is his account-book, and that it is a book of original entries, that the entries therein were made by himself, or by a person since deceased, or a disinterested person non-resident in the county, whereupon the book shall be evidence. Ohio Rev. Sts., sec. 5242, par. 6. In every instance, it is necessary that the book should be a book of original entries kept in the regular course of business, and that the entries were made at or near the time of the transactions which they record. Watrous v. Cunningham, 71 Cal. 32; Alling v. Wenzell, 27 Ill. App. 516; Rumsey v. N. Y. & N. J. Teleph. Co., 49 N. J. L. 323; Woolsey v. Bohn, 41 Minn. 237; Roche v. Ware, 71 Cal. 375. In Connecticut, such entries are limited to those of a deceased person. Setchel v. Keigwin, 57 Conn. 478. In Vermont, such evidence is admissible in actions for or against the estates of deceased persons by statute. Greene v. Mill, 60 Vt. 442. In Maryland, it is held that if the books are books of original entries, made contemporaneously with the transactions recorded, and made by the witness himself, and he knows that they were accurately and truly recorded at the time, the books are evidence for the jury, not conclusive, but as a circumstance tending to prove the ease supported by the witness. Blumhardt v. Rohr, 70 Md. 339. In Pennsylvania, the rule is much restricted, such entries being only admissible in cases where the articles delivered are such as are usually sold by the person offering the books in the course of his business. Thus, in the recent case of Stuckslager v. Neel, 123 Pa. St. 60, evidence of an entry in books of a sale of land was offered to support a charge of fraud in the sale. The only argument presented in support of the offer was that the books of original entry are admissible to prove sales of merchandise. But the Court held that the entry was not competent for that reason, because it was not a sale of merchandise at all, but a special transaction, a sale of fifteen river flats, the seller not being engaged in that kind of business. The rule is stated in the case of Shoemaker v. Kellog, 11 Pa. St. 310, that books of original entry are not evidence of the casual sale of an article not in the course of a party's business, and of which it is usual to take other proof or evidence of sale. In that case the transaction was the sale of a mare regularly entered upon a tradesman's books, but excluded by the trial court below, and the exclusion sustained on appeal. Bell, J., said: "It is almost too trite to repeat that books of original entry are evidence only from necessity, and ought never to be received where the transaction from its nature admits of more satisfactory proof. They are receivable to show goods sold and put down in the course of the ordinary basiness or pursuit of the party offering them. . . . But it would be dangerous to open the door of admission wider than In New York, in the recent case of New York City v. Second Ave. R. R. Co., 102 N. Y. 579, the court considers the question of admission of a time-book to prove the number of days labor per-formed in making certain repairs. In this case the time-book was not admis-sible as a memorandum of facts known to the person making the entries and verified by him, for the bookkeeper did not see the men at work except casually, and he had no personal knowledge of the amount of labor performed. His knowledge, from personal observation, was incomplete, and the time-book was made up, mainly, from the reports of the gaug-foremen. The time-book was held not admissible upon the testimony either of the gang-foremen or of the bookkeeper separately considered, for the gang-foremen knew the facts they reported to the bookkeeper to be true, but they did not see the entries made, and could not verify their correctness, while the bookkeeper did not make the entries upon his own knowledge of the facts, but from the reports of the perfect harmony with those rules, the entry being admitted only where it was evidently contemporaneous with the fact, and part

gang-foremen, and standing upon his testimony alone the entries were mere hear-say. The court says: "The question arises, must a material, ultimate fact be proved by the evidence of a witness who knew the fact and can recall it, or who, having no personal recollection of the fact at the time of his examination as a witness, testifies that he made, or saw made an entry of the fact at the time, or recently thereafter, which, on being produced, he can verify as the entry he made or saw, and that he knew the entry to be true when made, or may such ultimate fact be proved by showing by a witness that he knew the facts in relation to the matter which is the subject of investigation, and communicated them to another at the time, but had forgotten them, and supplementing this testimony by that of the person receiving the communication to the effect that he entered at the time, the facts communicated, and by the production of the book or memorandum in which the entries were made. The admissibility of memoranda of the first class is well settled. They are admitted in connection with, and as auxiliary to the oral evidence of the witness, and this whether the witness, on seeing the entries, recalls the facts, or can only verify the entries as a true record made or seen by him at, or soon after, the transaction to which it relates. (Halsey v. Sinsebaugh, 15 N. Y. 485; Guy v. Mead, 22 ld. 462.) The other branch of the inquiry has not been very distinctly adjudicated in this State, although the admissibility of entries made under circumstances like those in this case was apparently approved in Payne v. Hodge (71 N. Y. 598). We are of opinion that the rule as to the admissibility of memoranda may properly be extended so as to embrace the case before us. The case is of an account kept in the ordinary course of business, of laborers employed in the prosecution of work, based upon daily reports of foremen who had charge of the men, and who, in accordance with their duty, reported the time to another subordinate of the same common master, but of a higher grade, who, in time, also in accordance with his duty, entered the time as reported. We think entries so made, with the evidence of the foremen that they made true reports, and of the person who made the entries that he correctly entered them, are admissible. It is substantially by this method of accounts that business transactions in numerous cases are anthenticated, and business could not be carried on and accounts kept in many cases, without great inconvenience, unless this method of keeping and proving accounts is sanctioned. In a business where many laborers are employed, all accounts must, in most cases, of necessity, be kept by a person not personally cognizant of the facts, and from reports made by others. The person in charge of the laborers knows the facts, but he may not have the skill, or for other reasons, it may be inconvenient that he should keep the account. It may be assumed that a system of accounts based upon substantially the same methods as the accounts in this case, is in accordance with the usages of business. In admitting an account verified, as was the account here, there is little danger of mistake, and the admission of such an account as legal evidence is often necessary to prevent a failure of justice. We are of opinion, however, that it is a proper qualification of the rule admitting such evidence, that the account must have been made in the ordinary course of business, and that it should not be extended so as to admit a mere private memorandum, not made in pursuance of any duty owing by the person making it, or when made upon information derived from another who made the communication casually and voluntarily, and not under the sanction of duty or other obligation. The case before us is within the qualification suggested." See, also, Nat. Ulster Co. Bank v. Madden. 114 N. Y. 283, to the effect that such entries are only admissible when the witness has no recollection of the facts stated in the entries.

Such entries are admissible only as evidence to prove a sale and delivery, not to whose credit the sale was made. (Richards v. Burronghs, 62 Mich. 121; Keith v. Kibbe, 10 Cush. 35; Field v. Thompson, 119 Mass. 151; Kaiser v. Alexander, 144 Mass. 71); and in New Hampshire, they are said not to be evidence of a sale, but only of a delivery. Pinkham v. Benton, 62 N. H. 690. In Missouri, this rule is not recognized at all, and the account-books of the party are held not admissible in evidence for any purpose. Hissrick v. Mc-Pherson, 20 Mo. 310; Anchor Milling Co.

v. Walsh, 37 Mo. App. 570; Nipper v. Jones, 27 Mo. App. 538; Robertson v. Reed, 38 Mo. App. 36; Hensgen v. Mulally, 23 Mo. App. 614. In Massachusetts, the question of what is an original book of entries was discussed in several cases, and particularly in a recent case in which the facts were that the plaintiff delivered loads of sand to the defendant, for the price of which he sued. To prove the delivery, he testified that whenever he delivered a load he put a straight mark in a small accountbook, that he employed other men to deliver loads, who kept a tally on their carts through the day, and at night reported to him the number, and he put a corresponding number of marks on his book. This evidence was corroborated by all the men whom he employed. The court held that the book was admissible. Miller v. Shay, 145 Mass. 162. The book in such cases need not be a complete statement of the charge. As in the above case, it may merely contain marks. Miller v. Shay, supra; or marks under a man's name, Mathes v. Robinson, 8 Met. 269; and even marks on a shingle, or a notched stick, have been admitted. Kendall v. Field, 14 Me. 30. So the entry may not have any memorandum of the weight, quantity, or measure of the goods delivered. Pratt v. White, 132 Mass. 477; but these gaps must be supplied by other evidence so as to make the whole intelligible. Miller v. Shay, supra. As to the entries being original, it will be noticed that some of the entries in Miller v. Shay, supra, were transferred from the cart to the book, and were held admissible. This is in accord with the cases which hold that if the transfer of the charge from a temporary minute to a permanent record, is made on the day of the transaction, in the regular course of business, it is an original charge. Thus, when the transfer was from a slate to a book on the day of the transaction, it was held that the book was the original entry. Faxon v. Hollis, 13 Mass. 428; Barker v. Haskell, 9 Cush. 218; so from chalk-marks on a cart, Smith v. Sanford, 12 Pick. 139; Miller v. Shay, supra. If several persons make the entries, or are concerned in the delivery of the goods, it is proper that all should testify as to the facts. Harwood v. Mulry, 8 Gray, 250; Miller v. Shay, supra. And the person who makes the entry need not necessarily be the person who delivered the goods. Littlefield v. Rice, 10 Met. 287; Harwood v. Mulry, supra. But in such a case the person who delivers the goods must testify in support of the charges, either to prove the actual delivery, or his custom to report the delivery to the person making the charges. Kent v. Garvin, 1 Gray, 148. See New York City v. Second Ave. R. R. Co., 102 N. Y. 579.

The rule also extends to cases where the party who made the entries is dead, and the suit is brought by or against his executor or administrator. In such a case, the books of account of the deceased are admissible in evidence to prove items of work done or goods delivered, when they are supported by the oath of the executor or administrator, that they came to his hands as the genuine and only books of account of the deceased, that to the best of his knowledge and belief the entries are original and contemporaneous with the fact, and the debt is unpaid, and that the entries are in the handwriting of the deceased. Croswell, Exec., sec. 749; Pratt v. White, 132 Mass. 478; McLellan v. Crofton, 6 Greenl. 307; Prince v. Smith, 4 Mass. 455; Odell v. Culbert, 9 W. & S. 66. But the books must appear, on all the evidence, to have been the regular account-books, kept in the usual course of business, and the entries made at or near the time of the transactions to be proved. Davis v. Sanford, 9 Allen, 216. The same rule also applies as to the account-books of the other party to the suit. They may be given in evidence supported by his oath; and, as will be seen later, infra, sec. 329 et seq., they are generally held to be competent even where the statutes provide that if one party to a transaction is dead, and the suit is by or against his executor or administrator, the surviving party is disqualified from testifying in the cause as to that transaction with the deceased. Dexter v. Booth, 2 Allen, 561.

It should also be noted that when the fact of an entry being made in accounthooks is a substantive fact in issue, the books of account are admissible to show such entry without any further proof than that they are the books of account of the party in question. Thus where A. contracted with B. to give him a credit on his account-books for a certain sun, in return for which B. was to cancel certain obligations of A., it was held that the books of account of A. were admissible to show that the entry had been made. People v. Gor-

ceived with greater caution; but still it may be seen and weighed by the jury.2

In Louisiana and in Maryland (except as above), entries made by the party himself are not admitted. Civil Code of Louisiana, arts. 2244, 2245; Johnston v. Breedlove, are not admitted. Civil Code of Louisiana, arts. 2244, 2245; Johnston v. Breedlove, 2 Martin, N. s. 508; Herring v. Levy, 4 Martin, N. s. 383; Cavelier v. Collins, 3 Martin, 188; Martinstein v. Creditors, 8 Rob. 6; Owings v. Henderson, 5 Gill & Johns. 134, 142. In all the other States, they are admitted at common law, under various degrees of restriction. See Coggswell v. Dolliver, 2 Mass. 217; Poultney v. Ross, 1 Dall. 239; Lynch v. MeHugo, 1 Bay, 33; Foster v. Sinkler, Id. 40; Slade v. Teasdale, 2 Bay, 173; Lamb v. Hart, Id. 362; Thomas v. Dyott, 1 Nott & McC. 186; Burnham v. Adams, 5 Vt. 313; Story on Confl. of Laws, 526, 527.

2 The rules of the several States in regard to the admission of this evidence are not perfectly uniform; but, in what is about to be stated, it is believed that they concur. Before the books of the party can be admitted in evidence, they are to be submitted to the inspection of the court, and if they do not appear to be a register of the daily busi-

the inspection of the court, and if they do not appear to be a register of the daily business of the party, and to have been honestly and fairly kept, they are excluded. If they appear manifestly erased and altered, in a material part, they will not be admitted until the alteration is explained. Churchman v. Smith, 6 Whart. 146. The form of keeping them, whether it be that of a journal or ledger, does not affect their admissibility, however it may go to their credit to the jury. Coggswell v. Dolliver, 2 Mass. 217; Prince v. Smith, 4 Mass. 455, 457; Faxon v. Hollis, 13 Mass. 427; Rodman v. Hoops, 1 Dall. 85; Lynch v. Mellugo, 1 Bay, 33; Foster v. Sinkler, Id. 40; Slade v. Teasdale, 2 Bay, 173; Thomas v. (b) If the books appear free from fraudulent practices, and proper to be laid before the jury, the party himself is then required to make oath, in open court, that they are the books in which the the inspection of the court, and if they do not appear to be a register of the daily busiis then required to make oath, in open court, that they are the books in which the accounts of his ordinary business transactions are usually kept, Frye v. (d) An affidavit to an account, or bill of particulars, is not admissible, Wagoner v. Richolond, Wright, 173; unless made so by statute. Whether, if the party is abroad, or is unable to attend, the court will take his oath Whether, if the party is abroad, or is unable to attend, the court will take his oath under a commission, is not perfectly clear. The opinion of Parker, C. J., in 2 Pick. 67, was against it; and so is Nicholson v. Withers, 2 McCord, 428; but in Spence v. Sanders, 1 Bay, 119, even his affidavit was deemed sufficient, upon a writ of inquiry, the defendant having suffered judgment by default. See also Douglass v. Hart, 4 McCord, 257; Furman v. Peay, 2 Bail. 394. He must also swear that the articles therein charged were actually delivered, and the labor and services actually performed; that the article were nade at or about the time of the transaction and the satisfactors. that the entries were made at or about the time of the transactions, and are the original entries thereof; and that the sums charged and claimed have not been paid. 3 Dane's Abr. c. 81, art. 4, §§ 1, 2; Coggswell v. Dolliver, 2 Mass. 217; Ives v. Niles, 5 Watts, 324. If the party is dead, his books, though rendered of much less weight as evidence, may still be offered by the executor or administrator, he making oath that they came to his hands as the genuine and only books of account of the deceased; that, to the best of his knowledge and belief, the entries are original and contemporaneous with the fact, and the debt unpaid; with proof of the party's handwriting. Bentley v. Hollenback, Wright, 169; McLellan v. Crofton, 6 Greenl. 307; Prince v. Smith, 4 Mass. 455; Odell v. Culbert, 9 W. & S. 66. If the party has since become insane, the book may still be admitted in evidence, on proof of the fact, and that the entries are in his handwriting, with the suppletory oath of his guardian. And whether the degree of insanity, in the particular case, is such as to justify the admission of the book, is to

Beecher, 9 Conn. 344, 348, 349; and the entry must have been made for the purpose of charging the debtor with the debt; a mere memorandum, for any other purpose, not being sufficient. Thus, an invoice-book, and the memorandums in the margin of a blank check-book, showing the date and tenor of the checks drawn and cut from the book have been rejected. Conner a Mayrell 4 Vates 241. Wilson a cut from the book, have been rejected. Cooper v. Morrell, 4 Yates, 341; Wilson v. Goodin, Wright, 219. But the time-book of a day laborer, though kept in a tabular form, is admissible; the entries being made for the apparent purpose of charging the person for whom the work was done. Mathes v. Robinson, 8 Met. 269. (e) If the book contains marks, or there be other evidence showing that the items have been transferred to a journal or ledger, these books also must be produced. Prince v. Swett, 2 Mass. 569. The entries, also, must be made contemporaneously with the fact entered, as has been already stated in regard to entries made by a clerk. Supra, § 117, and n. (1) Entries thus made are not, however, received in all cases as satisfactory proof of the charges; but only as proof of things which, from their nature, are not generally susceptible of better evidence. (c) In an action by a laborer against his employer, the time-book of the employer, kept in a tabular form, in which the days the plaintiff worked are set down, is not admissible in evidence with the defendant's suppletory oath, to show that the plaintiff did not work on certain days; it being a book of credits and not of charges, and it not being competent to show that the plaintiff did not work on certain days by the defendant's omission to give credit for work on those days. tions mentioned below, were not in accordance with the principles of the common law, yet it is in conformity with those of other systems of jurisprudence. (a) In the administration of the Roman law, the production of a merchant's or tradesman's book of accounts, regularly and fairly kept in the usual manner, has been deemed presumptive evidence (semiplena probatio 1) of the justice of his claim; and, in such cases, the suppletory oath of the party (juramentum suppletivum) was admitted to make up the plena probatio necessary to a decree in his favor.² By the

But after the order to deliver goods to a third person is proved by competent evidence aliunde, the delivery itself may be proved by the books and suppletory oath of the plaintiff, in any case where such delivery to the defendant in person might be so proved. Mitchell v. Belkmap. 10 goods to a third person is proved by competent evidence aliunae, the delivery itself may be proved by the books and suppletory oath of the plaintiff, in any case where such delivery to the defendant in person might be so proved, Mitchell v. Belknap, 10 Shepl. 475. The charges, moreover, must be specific and particular; a general charge for professional services, or for work and labor by a mechanic, without any specification but that of time, cannot be supported by this kind of evidence. Lynch v. Petric, 1 Nott & McC. 130; Hughes v. Hampton, 2 Const. 745. And regularly the prices ought to be specified; in which case the entry is prima facie evidence of the value. Hagaman v. Case, 1 South, 370; Ducoign v. Schreppel, 1 Yeates, 347. But whatever be the nature of the subject, the transaction, to be susceptible of this kind of proof, must have been directly between the original debtor and the creditor; the book not being admissible to establish a collateral fact. Mifflin v. Bingham, 1 Dall. 276, per McKean, C. J.; Kerr v. Love, 1 Wash. 172; Deas v. Darby, 1 Nott & McC. 436; Poultney v. Ross, 1 Dall. 238. Though books, such as have been described, are admitted to be given in evidence, with the suppletory oath of the party, yet his testimony is still to be weighed by the jury, like that of any other witness in the cause, and his reputation for truth is equally open to be questioned. Kitchen v. Tyson, 3 Murph. 314; Elder v. Warfield, 7 Har. & Johns. 391. In some States, the books thus admitted are only those of shopkeepers, mechanics, and tradesmen; those of other persons, such as planters, scriveners, schoolmasters, &c., being rejected. Geter v. Martin, 2 Bay, 173; Pelzer v. Cranston, 2 McCord, 328; Boyd v. Ladson, 4 McCord, 76. The subject of the admission of the party's own entries, with his suppletory oath, in the several American States, is very elaborately and fully treated in Mr. Wallace's note to American edition of Smith's Leading Cases, vol. i. p. 142.

1 This degree of proof is thus defined by Mascardus: "Non

tionem semiplenam eam esse, per quam rei gestæ fides aliqua fit judici: non tamen tanta ut jure debeat in pronuncianda sententia eam sequi." De Prob. vol. i. Quest. 11 n. 1, 4.

2 "Juramentum (suppletivum) defertur ubicunque actor habet pro se—aliquas conjecturas, per quas judex inducatur ad suspicionem vel ad opinandum pro parte actoris."

Mascardus, de Prob. vol. 3, Concl. 1230, n. 17. The civilians, however they may differ as to the degree of credit to be given to books of account, concur in opinion that they are entitled to consideration at the discretion of the judge. They furnish, at least, the conjecturæ mentioned by Mascardus; and their admission in evidence, with the suppletory oath of the party, is thus defended by Paul Voet, De Statutis, § 5, c. 2, n. 9. "An ut credatur libris rationem, seu registris uti loquuntur, mercatorum et artificum, licet probationibus testium non juventur? Respondeo, quamvis exemplo pernitiosum law of France, too, the books of merchants and tradesmen, regularly kept and written from day to day, without any blank, when the tradesman has the reputation of probity, constitute a semiproof, and with his suppletory oath are received as full proof to establish his demand.3 The same doctrine is familiar in the law of Scotland, by which the books of merchants and others, kept with a certain reasonable degree of regularity, satisfactory to the court, may be received in evidence, the party being allowed to give his own oath "in supplement" of such imperfect proof. It seems, however, that a course of dealing, or other "pregnant circumstances," must in general be first shown by evidence aliunde, before the proof can be regarded as amounting to the degree of semiplena probatio, to be rendered complete by the oath of the party.4

§ 120. Entries by third persons. Returning now to the admission of entries made by clerks and third persons, it may be remarked that in most of, if not all, the reported cases, the clerk or person who made the entries was dead; and the entries were received upon proof of his handwriting. But it is conceived that the fact of his death is not material to the admissibility of this kind of evidence. There are two classes of admissible entries, between which there is a clear distinction, in regard to the principle on which they are received in evidence. The one class consists of entries made against the interest of the party making them; and these derive their admissibility from this circumstance alone. It is, therefore, not material when they were made. The testimony of the party who made them would be the best evidence of the fact; but, if he is dead, the entry of the fact made by him in the ordinary course of his business, and against his interest, is received as secondary evidence in a controversy between third persons. The other class of entries consists of those which constitute parts of a chain or combination of transactions between the parties, the proof of one raising a presumption that another has taken place. Here, the value of the entry, as evidence, lies in this, that it was contemporaneous with the principal fact done, forming a link in the chain of events, and being part of the res gestæ. It is not merely the declaration of the party, but it is a verbal contemporaneous act, belonging, not necessarily indeed, but ordinarily and naturally, to the principal thing. It is on this ground, that this latter class of entries is admitted; and therefore it can make no difference, as to their admissibility, whether the party who made them be living or dead, nor whether he was, or was not, interested in making them, his interest going only to affect the credibility or weight of the evidence when received. (a)

§ 121. Indorsements of payment. The evidence of indebtment, afforded by the indorsement of the payment of interest, or a partial payment of the principal, on the back of a bond or other security, seems to fall within the principle we are now considering, more naturally than any other; though it is generally classed with entries made against the interest of the party. The main fact to be proved in the cases, where this evidence has been admitted, was the continued existence of the debt, notwithstanding the lapse of time since its creation was such as either to raise the presumption of payment, or to bring the case within the operation of the statute of limitations. This fact was sought to be proved by the acknowledgment of the debt by the debtor himself; and this acknowledgment was proved by his having actually paid part of the money due. It is the usual, ordinary, and wellknown course of business, that partial payments are forthwith indorsed on the back of the security, the indorsement thus becoming part of the res gestæ. Wherever, therefore, an indorsement is shown to have been made at the time it bears date (which will be inferred from its face, in the absence of opposing circumstances), the presumption naturally arising is, that the money mentioned in it was paid at that time. If the date is at a period after the demand became stale, or affected by the statute of limitations, the interest of the creditor to fabricate it would be so strong as to countervail the presumption of payment, and require the aid of some other proof; and the case would be the same if the indorsement bore a date within that period, the instrument itself being otherwise subject to the bar arising from lapse of time.²(a) Hence the inquiry which is usually made in such cases, namely, whether the indorsement, when made, was against the interest of the party making it, that is, of the creditor; which, in other language, is only inquiring whether it was made while his remedy was not yet impaired by lapse of time. The time when the indorsement was made is a fact to be settled by the jury; and to this end the writing must be laid before them. If there is no evidence to the contrary, the presumption is that the indorse-

The same point has been raised in suits on book accounts which are barred by the statute of limitations, unless the plain-tiff's book of account be considered evi-dence of remittances on account of the debt. In a recent case of this kind the book was proved as a book of original entries, and was offered to prove the ac-count and the credits, but it was rejected at the trial as evidence for the latter purpose, and this decision was upheld in the Supreme Court, the court holding that a party's books of account are legitimate prima facie evidence to show the sale and delivery, in the usual course of business, of personal property and its price, and of work and labor performed and the sums work and labor performed and the sums due for such services, but not of a payment received by the party offering them. Oberg v. Breen, 50 N. J. L. 145. The same decision was given in Maine. Libby v. Brown, 78 Me. 493. In this case the action was by a surviving partner on an account stated. The action was admittedly barred by the statute of limitations, unless the bar was removed by partial payments. The plaintiff offered as evidence of the payments the entries of them as credits on the partnership books of the plaintiff's firm in the handwriting of the deceased partner. It was held that such entries of credits were not admissible to prove a partial payment by defendant for the purpose of removing the statute bar. Such entries were also offered and excluded in Hancock v. Cook, 18 Pick. 30.

In Maine, it was formerly held, prior to any statute upon the subject, that an indorsement made by the holder of a note of a payment thereon, such indorsement being made before the debt was barred, was some evidence of such payment at the date of the indorsement. Coffin v. Bucknam, 12 Me. 471. The doctrine of that case was soon after overthrown by statute R. S. 1841, ch. 146, sec. 23, now R. S. 1883, ch. 81, sec. 100, which declared that such indorsement shall not be sufficient evidence. The rule of that case was never extended beyond indorsements on the written evidence of debt. Libby v. Brown, 78 Me. 493. ment was made at the time it purports to bear date; and the burden of proving the date to be false lies on the other party.3 If the indorsement does not purport to be made contemporaneously with the receipt of the money, it is inadmissible as part of the res gestæ.

§ 122. Same subject. This doctrine has been very much considered in the discussions which have repeatedly been had upon the ease of Searle v. Barrington. In that ease the bond was given in 1697, and was not sued until after the death of the obligee, upon whose estate administration was granted in 1723. The obligor died in 1710; the obligee probably survived him, but it did not appear how long. To repel the presumption of payment, arising from the lapse of time, the plaintiff offered in evidence two indorsements, made upon the bond by the obligee himself, bearing date in 1699 and in 1707, and purporting that the interest due at those respective dates had been then paid by the obligor. And it appears that other evidence was also offered, showing the time when the indorsements were actually made.² The indorsements, thus proved to have been made at the times when they purported to have been made, were, upon solemn argument, held admissible evidence, both by the judges in the Exchequer Chamber, and by the House of Lords. The grounds of these decisions are not stated in any of the reports: but it may be presumed that the reasoning on the side of the prevailing another action was brought, which was tried before Lord Raymond, C. J., who admitted the evidence of the indorsement; but to which the defendant filed a bill of exceptions. This judgment was affirmed on error in the Exchequer Chamber, and again in the House of Lords. See 2 Stra. 827; 3 Bro. P. C. 593. The first case is mostly fully reported in 8 Mod. 278.

2 This fact was stated by Bayley, B., as the result of his own research. See 1 Cr. & M. 421. So it was understood to be, and so stated, by Lord Hardwicke, in 2 Ves. 43. It may have constituted the "other circumstantial evidence," mentioned in Mr. Brown's report, 3 Bro. P. C. 594; which he literally transcribed from the case, as drawn up by Messrs. Lutwyche and Fazakerley, of counsel for the original plaintiff, for argument in the House of Lords. See a folio volume of original printed briefs, marked "Cases in Parliament, 1728 to 1731," p. 529, in the Law Library of Harvard University, in which this case is stated more at large than in any book of Reports. By Stat. 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, it is enacted, that no indorsement of partial payment, made by or on behalf of the creditor, shall be deemed sufficient proof to take the case out of the statute of limitations. The same enactment is found in the laws of some of the United States. States.

¹ There were two successive actions on the same bond between these parties. The first is reported in 8 Stra. 826, 2 Mod. 278, and 2 Ld. Raym. 1370; and was tried before Pratt, C. J., who refused to admit the indorsement, and nonsuited the plaintiff; but one processing acids the three eights the processing acids the three eights. betto the reaction of set the nonsuit aside, the three other judges were of opinion that the evidence ought to have been left to the jury, the indorsement in such cases being according to the usual course of business, and perhaps in this case made with the privity of the obligor; but on another ground the motion was denied. Afterwards another action was brought, which was tried before Lord Raymond, C. J., who admitted another action was brought, which was tried before Lord Raymond, C. J., who admitted party was approved, namely, that the indorsement being made at the time it purported to bear date, and being according to the usual and ordinary course of business in such cases, and which it was not for the interest of the obligee at that time to make, was entitled to be considered by the jury; and that from it, in the absence of opposing proof, the fact of actual payment of the interest might be inferred. This doctrine has been recognized and confirmed by subsequent decisions.3 (a)

§ 123. Summary. Thus, we have seen that there are four classes of declarations, which, though usually treated under the head of hearsay, are in truth original evidence; the first class consisting of cases where the fact that the declaration was made, and not its truth or falsity, is the point in question; the second, including expressions of bodily or mental feelings, where the existence or nature of such feelings is the subject of inquiry; the third, consisting of cases of pedigree, and including the declaration of those nearly related to the party whose pedigree is in question; and the fourth, embracing all other cases where the declaration offered in evidence may be regarded as part of the res gestæ. All these classes are involved in the principle of the last; and have been separately treated, merely for the sake of greater distinctness.

§ 124. Principle of the rule of exclusion of hearsay evidence. Subject to these qualifications and seeming exceptions, the general rule of law rejects all hearsay reports of transactions, whether verbal or written, given by persons not produced as witnesses.1 The principle of this rule is, that such evidence requires credit to be given to a statement made by a person who is not subjected to the ordinary tests enjoined by the law for ascertaining the correctness and completeness of his testimony; namely, that oral testimony should be delivered in the presence of the court or a magistrate, under the moral and legal sanctions of an oath, and where the moral and intellectual character, the motives and deportment of the witness can be examined, and his capacity and opportunities for observation, and his memory, can be tested by a cross-examination. Such evidence, moreover, as to oral declarations, is very liable to be fallacious, and its value is, therefore, greatly lessened by the probability that the declaration was imperfectly heard, or was misunderstood, or is not accurately remembered, or has been perverted. It is also to be observed, that the persons communicating such evidence are not exposed to the danger of a prosecution for perjury, in which something more than the testimony of one witness is necessary, in order to a conviction; for where the declaration or statement is sworn to have been made when no third person was present, or by a person who is since dead, it is hardly possible to punish the witness, even if his testimony is an entire fabrication.2 To these reasons may be added considerations of public interest and convenience for rejecting hearsay evidence. The greatly increased expense and the vexation which the adverse party must incur in order to rebut or explain it, the vast consumption of public time thereby occasioned, the multiplication of collateral issues for decision by the jury, and the danger of losing sight of the main question and of the justice of the case if this sort of proof were admitted, are considerations of too grave a character to be overlooked by the court or the legislature, in determining the question of changing the rule.3

§ 125. Declarations under oath. The rule applies, though the declaration offered in evidence was made upon oath, and in the course of a judicial proceeding, if the litigating parties are not the same. Thus, the deposition of a pauper, as to the place of his settlement, taken ex parte before a magistrate, was rejected, though the pauper himself had since absconded, and was not to be found.1 The rule also applies, notwithstanding no better evidence is to be found, and though it is certain, that, if the declaration offered is rejected, no other evidence can possibly be obtained; as, for example, if it purports to be the declaration of the only eye-witness of the transaction, and he is since dead.2

§ 126. Exception. An exception to this rule has been contended for in the admission of the declarations of a deceased attesting witness to a deed or will, in disparagement of the evidence afforded by his signature. This exception has been asserted, on two grounds: first, that as the party offering the deed used the declaration of the witness, evidenced by his signature, to prove the execution, the other party might well be permitted to use any other declaration of the same witness to disprove it; and, secondly, that such declaration was in the nature of a substitute for the loss of the benefit of a cross-examination of the attesting witness; by which, either the fact confessed would have been proved, or the witness might have been contradicted, and his credit impeached. Both these grounds were fully considered in a case in the exchequer, and were overruled by the court: the first, because the evidence of the handwriting, in the attestation, is not used as a declaration by the witness, but is offered merely to show the fact that he put his name there, in the manner in which attestations are usually placed to genuine signatures; and the second, chiefly because of the mischiefs which would ensue, if the general rule excluding hearsay were thus broken in upon. For the security of solemn instruments would thereby become much impaired, and the rights of parties under them would be liable to be affected at remote periods, by loose declarations of the attesting witnesses, which could neither be explained nor contradicted by the testimony of the witnesses themselves. In admitting such declarations, too, there would be no reciprocity; for, though the party impeaching the instrument would thereby have an equivalent for the loss of his power of cross-examination of the living witness, the other party would have none for the loss of his power of re-examination. (a)

since dead, and would, if living, have been a competent witness. And if the relation has been handed down to the witness at second-hand, and through several successive relators, each only stating what he received from an intermediate relator, it is still admissible, if the original and intermediate relators are all dead, and would have been competent witnesses if living. Tait on Evid. pp. 430, 431. But the reason for receiving hearsay evidence, in cases where, as is generally the case in Scotland, the judges determine upon the facts in dispute, as well as upon the law, is stated and vindicated by Sir James Mansfield, in the Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Campb. 415.

1 Stobart v. Dryden, 1 M. & W. 615.

(a) But the doctrine of Stobart v. Dryden has been denicd, and it has been held that, on the production of a certified copy of a will and of the affidavit of the subscribing witnesses made at the time of probate, it is permissible to impeach the affidavit of one of the witnesses by showing contradictory statements made at other times, with a view to show that the will was never duly executed. Otterson v. Hofford, 36 N. J. 129; Reformed Dutch Church v. Ten Eyck, 1 Dutch. (N. J.) 40. So the bad character of the subscribing witness may be shown for the same purpose. Losee v. Losee, 2 Hill (N. Y.), 609.

CHAPTER VI.

OF MATTERS OF PUBLIC AND GENERAL INTEREST.

§ 127. When hearsay admissible. Having thus illustrated the nature of hearsay evidence, and shown the reasons on which it is generally excluded, we are now to consider the cases in which this rule has been relaxed, and hearsay admitted. The exceptions, thus allowed, will be found to embrace most of the points of inconvenience, resulting from a stern and universal application of the rule, and to remove the principal objections which have been urged against it. These exceptions may be conveniently divided into four classes: first, those relating to matters of public and general interest; secondly, those relating to ancient possessions; thirdly, declarations against interest; fourthly, dying declarations, and some others of a miscellaneous nature; and in this order it is proposed to consider them. It is, however, to be observed, that these exceptions are allowed only on the ground of the absence of better evidence, and from the nature and necessity of the case.

public and general interest. The terms public and general are sometimes used as synonymous, meaning merely that which concerns a multitude of persons. 1 But, in regard to the admissibility of hearsay testimony, a distinction has been taken between them; the term public being strictly applied to that which concerns all the citizens, and every member of the State; and the term general being referred to a lesser, though still a large, portion of the community. In matters of public interest, all persons must be presumed conversant, on the principle that individuals are presumed to be conversant in their own affairs; and, as common rights are naturally talked of in the community, what is thus dropped in conversation may be presumed to be true. 2 It is the

be privy, and to contribute his share. Evidence of common reputation is, therefore, received in regard to public facts (a claim of highway, or a right of ferry, for example), on ground somewhat similar to that on which public documents, not judicial, are admitted; namely, the interest which all have in their truth, and the consequent probability that they are true.3 In these matters, in which all are concerned, reputation from any one appears to be receivable; but of course it is almost worthless, unless it comes from persons who are shown to have some means of knowledge; such as, in the case of a highway, by living in the neighborhood: but the want of such proof of their connection with the subject in question affects the value only, and not the admissibility, of the evidence. On the contrary, where the fact in controversy is one in which all the members of the community have not an interest, but those only who live in a particular district, or adventure in a particular enterprise, or the like, hearsay from persons wholly unconnected with the place or business would not only be of no value, but altogether inadmissible. 4 (a)

§ 129. Rights in common. Thus, in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, where the defendant pleaded in bar a prescriptive right of common in the locus in quo, and the plaintiff replied, prescribing the right of his messuage to use the same ground for tillage with corn until the harvest was ended, traversing the defendant's prescription; it appearing that many persons beside the defendant had a right of common there, evidence of reputation, as to the plaintiff's right, was held admissible, provided it were derived from persons conversant with the neighborhood. (b) But where the question was, whether the city of Ches-

ter anciently formed part of the county palatine, an ancient document, purporting to be a decree of certain law officers and dignitaries of the crown, not having authority as a court, was held inadmissible evidence on the ground of reputation, they having, from their situations, no peculiar knowledge of the fact.2 And, on the other hand, where the question was, whether Nottingham Castle was within the hundred of Broxtowe, certain ancient orders, made by the justices at the quarter-sessions for the county, in which the castle was described as being within that hundred, were held admissible evidence of reputation; the justices, though not proved to be residents within the county or hundred, being presumed, from the nature and character of their offices alone, to have sufficient acquaintance with the subject to which their declarations related.3 Thus it appears that competent knowledge in the declarant is, in all cases, an essential prerequisite to the admission of his testimony; and that though all the citizens are presumed to have that knowledge, in some degree, where the matter is of public concernment, yet, in other matters, of interest to many persons, some particular evidence of such knowledge is required. (b)

§ 130. Rights must be ancient and declarants dead. It is to be observed, that the exception we are now considering is admitted only in the case of ancient rights, and in respect to the declarations of persons supposed to be dead.1 It is required by the nature of the rights in question; their origin being generally antecedent to the time of legal memory, and incapable of direct proof by living witnesses, both from this fact, and also from the undefined generality of their nature. It has been held, that, where the nature of the case admits it, a foundation for the reception of hearsay evidence, in matters of public and general interest, should first be laid by proving acts of enjoyment within the period of living memory.² But this doctrine has since been

overruled; and it is now held, that such proof is not an essential condition of the reception of evidence of reputation, but is only material as it affects its value when received.3 Where the nature of the subject does not admit of proof of acts of enjoyment, it is obvious that proof of reputation alone is sufficient. where a right or custom is established by documentary evidence, no proof is necessary of any particular instance of its exercise; for, if it were otherwise, and no instance were to happen within the memory of man, the right or custom would be totally destroyed.4 In the case of a private right, however, where proof of particular instances of its exercise has first been given, evidence of reputation has sometimes been admitted in confirmation of the actual enjoyment; but it is never allowed against it.5 (a)

§ 131. Declarations must be ante litem motam. Another important qualification of the exception we have been considering, by which evidence of reputation or common fame is admitted, is, that the declaration so received must have been made before any controversy arose touching the matter to which it relates; or, as it is usually expressed, ante litem motam. The ground on which such evidence is admitted at all is, that the declarations "are the natural effusions of a party who must know the truth, and who speaks upon an occasion when his mind stands in an even position, without any temptation to exceed or fall short of the truth." 1 But no man is presumed to be thus indifferent in regard to matters in actual controversy: for, when the contest has begun, people generally take part on the one side or the other; their minds are in a ferment; and, if they are disposed to speak

Bassett, 10 B. & C. 662, 663, per Littledale, J. A doctrine nearly similar is held by the civilians, in cases of ancient private rights. Thus Mascardus, after stating, upon the authority of many jurists, that "Dominium in antiquis probari per famam, traditum est, — veluti si fama sit, hanc domum fuisse Dantis Poetæ, vel alterius, qui decessit, jam sunt centum anni, et nemo vidit qui viderit, quem refert," &c., subsequently qualifies this general proposition in these words: "Primo limita prin-&c., subsequently qualifies this general proposition in these words: "Primo limita principalem conclusionem, ut non procedat, nisi cum fama concurrant alia adminicula, saltem præsentis possessionis," &c. the truth, facts are seen by them through a false medium. avoid, therefore, the mischiefs which would otherwise result, all ex parte declarations, even though made upon oath, referring to a date subsequent to the beginning of the controversy, are rejected.2 This rule of evidence was familiar in the Roman law; but the term lis mota was there applied strictly to the commence ment of the action, and was not referred to an earlier period of the controversy.³ But in our law the term lis is taken in the classical and larger sense of controversy; and by lis mota is understood the commencement of the controversy, and not the commencement of the suit. 4 (a) The commencement of the controversy has been further defined by Mr. Baron Alderson, in a case of pedigree, to be "the arising of that state of facts on which the claim is founded, without anything more." 5 (b).

§ 132. Lis mota defined. The lis mota, in the sense of our law, carries with it the further idea of a controversy upon the same particular subject in issue. For, if the matter under discussion at the time of trial was not in controversy at the time to which the declarations offered in evidence relate, they are admissible, notwithstanding a controversy did then exist upon some other branch of the same general subject. The value of general reputation, as evidence of the true state of facts, depends upon its being the concurrent belief of minds unbiassed, and in a situation favorable to a knowledge of the truth, and referring to a period when this fountain of evidence was not rendered turbid by agitation. But the discussion of other topics, however pute, but a lis mota or suit, or controversy preparatory to a suit actually commenced. And upon the subject-matter in litigation, Davies v. Lowndes, 7 Scott, N. R. 214. And in the late case of Butler v. Mountgarret, 7 H. L. Cas. 633, it was held that a controversy in a family, though not at that moment the subject of a suit, constitutes sufficiently a "lis mota, to render inadmissible a letter written on that subject by one member of the family and addressed to another.

similar in their general nature, at the time referred to, does not necessarily lead to the inference that the particular point in issue was also controverted, and, therefore, is not deemed sufficient to exclude the sort of proof we are now considering. Thus, where, in a suit between a copyholder and the lord of the manor, the point in controversy was, whether the customary fine, payable upon the renewal of a life-lease, was to be assessed by the jury of the lord's court, or by the reasonable discretion of the lord himself; depositions taken for the plaintiff, in an ancient suit by a copyholder against a former lord of the manor, where the controversy was upon the copyholder's right to be admitted at all, and not upon the terms of admission, in which depositions the customary fine was mentioned as to be assessed by the lord or his steward, were held admissible evidence of what was then understood to be the undisputed custom. In this case, it was observed by one of the learned judges that "the distinction had been correctly taken, that, where the lis mota was on the very point, the declarations of persons would not be evidence; because you cannot be sure, that in admitting the depositions of witnesses. selected and brought forward on a particular side of the question, who embark, to a certain degree, with the feelings and prejudices belonging to that particular side, you are drawing evidence from perfectly unpolluted sources. But where the point in controversy is foreign to that which was before controverted, there never has been a lis mota, and consequently the objection does not apply."

§ 133. Declarations post litem motam. Declarations made after the controversy has originated are excluded, even though proof is offered that the existence of the controversy was not known to the declarant. The question of his ignorance or knowledge of this fact is one which the courts will not try: partly because of the danger of an erroneous decision of the principal fact by the jury, from the raising of too many collateral issues, thereby introducing great confusion into the cause; and partly from the fruitlessness of the inquiry, it being from its very nature impossible, in most cases, to prove that the existence of the controversy was not known. The declarant, in these cases, is always absent, and generally dead. The light afforded by his declarations is at best extremely feeble, and far from being certain; and if introduced, with the proof on both sides, in regard to his knowledge of the controversy, it would induce darkness and confusion, perilling the decision without the probability of any compensating good to the parties. It is therefore excluded, as more likely to prove injurious than beneficial. (a)

 1 Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Campb. 417, per Mausfield, C. J. ; $supra, \S~124.$ This distinction, and the reasons of it, were recognized in the Roman law; but there the rule was to admit the declarations, though made post litem motam, if they were made at a place so very far remote from the scene of the controversy, as to remove all suspicion that the declarant had heard of its existence. Thus it is stated by Mascardus: "Istud autem quod diximus, debere testes deponere ante litem motam, sic est accipiendum, ut verum sit, si ibidem, ubi res agitur, audierit; at si alibi, in loco qui longissime distaret, sic intellexerit, etiam post litem motam testes de auditu admittuntur. Longinquitas enim loci in causa est, ut omnis suspicio abesse videatur quæ quidem suspicio adesse potest, quando testis de auditu post litem motam, ibidem, ubi res agi-Mascard. De Probat. vol. 1, p. 401 [429], Concl. 410, n. 5, 6. tur, deponit."

(a) It follows from the above explanation of lis mota, first, that declarations will not be rejected, in consequence of their having been made with the express view of preventing disputes; secondly, that they are admissible if no dispute has arisen, though made in direct support of the title of the declarant; and, thirdly, that the mere fact of the declarant having stood, or having believed that he stood, in pari jure with the party relying on the declaration, will not render his statement inadmissible. In support of the first proposition, the Berkeley Peerage Case may be referred to, where the judges unanimously held, in conformity with an earlier opinion expressed by Lord Mansfield (Goodright v. Moss, 2 Cowp. 591), that an entry made by a father in any book, for the express purpose of establishing the legitimacy of his son at the time of his birth, in case the same should be called in question, will be receivable in evidence, notwithstanding the professed view with which it was made. 4 Campb. 418. This doctrine has since been sanctioned by Lords Brougham, (Monkton v. Attorney-General, 2 Russ. & Myl. 147, 160, 161, 164) and Cottenham in England (Slaney v. Wade, 1 Myl. & Cr. 338), and by Lord St. Leonards in Ireland (Reilly v. Fitzgerald, 6 Ir. Eq. 335, 344-349), and may now be considered as established law in both countries; but a declaration made in a prior cause is inadmissible if the same point was in issue in that cause, as in the cause in which the deelaration is offered. Jenkins v. Davies, 10 Q. B. 314. One of the latest decisions in support of the second proposition is Doe v. Davies, 10 Q. B. 314, 325, where the court observed that although a feeling of interest will often east suspicion on declarations, it has never been held to render them inadmissible. The third propsition is equally clear law; for although one peerage case appears at first sight to throw some doubt upon the subject (Zouch Peer., Pr. Min. 297), yet it is highly probable that the pedigree was there rejected, not as having been made by a party while standing in the same situation as the claimant, but as having been concocted by such person in direct contemplation of himself lay-

But even if the case be not susceptible of this explanation, a single isolated decision can scarcely controvert a rule of law which has been sanctioned and acted upon by numerous judges, Moseley v. Davies, 11 Price, 162, 179, per Graham, B.; Harwood v. Sims, Wightw. 112; Deacle v. Hancock, 13 Price, 236, 237; Monkton v. Attorney-General, 2 Russ. & Myl. 159, 160, per Ld. Brougham; Freeman v. Phillipps, 4 M. & S. 486, 491, per Ld. Ellenborough, cited with approbation by Ld. Lyndhurst, C. B., in Davies v. Morgan, 1 C. & J. 593, 594; Nicholls v. Parker, 14 East, 331, n.; Doe v. Tarver, Ry. & M. 141, 142, per Abbott, C. J., and which is so founded on reason, that a contrary doctrine would go far towards excluding all evidence of reputation. For instance, in cases of public and general interest, the rejection of such evidence would be wholly inconsistent with the rule which requires the statement to have been made by some person having competent knowledge of the subject, post, § 136; and in cases of pedigrees, though the result of excluding declarations of persons in pari jure would not be equally mischievous, it would frequently have the effect of drying up sources of information which would be highly valuable in the investiga-tion of truth. In any one of the three classes of declarations just mentioned, it is very possible that the declarant may have had some secret wish or bias which may have induced him to make a statement either partially or totally false; but the same observation might apply to all evidence of this nature, and its weight in each particular case must be determined by the jury. Tay. Ev. §§ 565, 566.

§ 134. Exception of declarations as to pedigree. It has sometimes been laid down, as an exception to the rule excluding declarations made post litem motam, that declarations concerning pedigree will not be invalidated by the circumstance that they were made during family discussions, and for the purpose of preventing future controversy; and the instance given, by way of illustration, is that of a solemn act of parents, under their hands, declaring the legitimacy of a child. But it is conceived that evidence of this sort is admissible, not by way of exception to any rule, but because it is, in its own nature, original evidence; constituting part of the fact of the recognition of existing relations of consanguinity or affinity; and falling naturally under the head of the expression of existing sentiments and affections, or of declarations against the interest, and peculiarly within the knowledge of the party making them, or of verbal acts, part of the res gestæ.3

§ 135. Witness need not specify from whom he heard. Where evidence of reputation is admitted, in cases of public or general interest, it is not necessary that the witness should be able to specify from whom he heard the declarations. For that, in much the greater number of cases, would be impossible; as the names of persons long since dead, by whom declarations upon topics of common repute have at some time or other been made, are mostly forgotten. 1 And, if the declarant is known, and appears to have stood in pari casu with the party offering his declarations in evidence, so that he could not, if living, have been personally examined as a witness to the fact of which he speaks, this is no valid objection to the admissibility of his declarations. reason is, the absence of opportunity and motive to consult his interest, at the time of speaking. Whatever secret wish or bias he may have had in the matter, there was, at that time, no excited interest called forth in his breast, or, at least, no means were afforded of promoting, nor danger incurred of injuring, any interest of his own; nor could any such be the necessary result of his declarations. Whereas, on a trial, in itself and of necessity directly affecting his interest, there is a double objection to admitting his evidence, in the concurrence both of the temptation of interest and the excitement of the lis mota.2

§ 136. Must have knowledge. Indeed the rejection of the evidence of reputation, in cases of public or general interest, because it may have come from persons in pari casu with the party offering it, would be inconsistent with the qualification of the rule which has already been mentioned; namely, that the statement thus admitted must appear to have been made by persons having competent knowledge of the subject. Without such knowledge, the testimony is worthless. In matters of public right, all persons are presumed to possess that degree of knowledge which serves to give some weight to their declarations respecting them, because all have a common interest. But in subjects interesting to a comparatively small portion of the community, as a city or parish, a foundation for admitting evidence of reputation, or the declarations of ancient and deceased persons, must first be laid, by showing that, from their situation, they probably were conversant with the matter of which they were speaking. $^{2}(a)$

§ 137. Matters of private interest. The probable want of competent knowledge in the declarant is the reason generally assigned for rejecting evidence of reputation or common fame, in matters

Broxtowe, 4 B. & Ad. 273. Rogers v. Wood, 2 B. & Ad. 245. The Roman law, as stated by Mascardus, agrees with the doctrine in the text. "Confines probantur, per testes. Verum scias velim, testes in hac materia, qui vicini, et circum ibi habitant esse magis idoneos quam alios. Si testes non sentiant commodum vel incommodum immediatum, possint pro sua communitate deponere. Licet hujusmodi testes sint de universitate, et deponant super confinibus suæ universitatis, prahant dummodum pracipulum insi commodum non sentiant licent inferant tatis, probant, dummodum præcipuum ipsi commodum non sentiant, licent inferant commodum in universum." Mascard. De Probat. vol. iv. pp. 389, 390, Concl. 395, n. 1, 2, 9, 19.
- (a) So in Hammond v. Bradstreet, 10 Ex. 390, when an ancient map made by Joshua and William Kirby was offered in evidence to prove the boundaries of two counties, Coleridge, J., while rejecting the evidence says, "but assuming it to be what the inscription on it declared it to be, a map prepared in 1766, in part from an older map in 1736, by Joshua and William Kirby, sons of John Kirby, who made a survey in 1736, at the utmost this was only a declaration by Joshua and William that they believed the boundaries to be as described by them, or that they were as described by them. What circumstances were given in evidence to render such declaration admissible? The relation of Joshua and William to John Kirby would not have that effect. They do not appear to have been deputed to make the map by any persons interested in the question, nor to have any knowledge of their own on the subject, nor to have been in any way connected with the district, so as to make it probable that they had such knowledge." To the same effect is Beaufort v. Smith, 4 Ex. 450.

of mere private right. "Evidence of reputation, upon general points, is receivable," said Lord Kenyon, "because, all mankind being interested therein, it is natural to suppose that they may be conversant with the subjects, and that they should discourse together about them, having all the same means of information. But how can this apply to private titles, either with regard to particular customs, or private prescriptions? How is it possible for strangers to know anything of what concerns only private titles?"1 The case of prescriptive rights has sometimes been mentioned as an exception; but it is believed, that, where evidence of reputation has been admitted in such cases, it will be found that the right was one in which many persons were equally interested. The weight of authority, as well as the reason of the rule, seems alike to forbid the admission of this kind of evidence, except in eases of a public or quasi public nature.2

§ 138. Particular facts. This principle may serve to explain and reconcile what is said in the books respecting the admissibility of reputation, in regard to particular facts. Upon general points, as we have seen, such evidence is receivable, because of the general interest which the community have in them; but particular facts of a private nature, not being notorious, may be misrepresented or misunderstood, and may have been connected with other facts, by which, if known, their effect might be limited or explained. Reputation as to the existence of such particular facts is, therefore, rejected. (a) But, if the particular fact ticular facts is, therefore, rejected. (a) But, if the particular fact

2 Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Peters, 412; Richards v. Bassett, 10 B. & C. 657, 662, 663, per Littledale, J.; supra, § 130. The following are cases of a quasi public nature; though they are usually, but, on the foregoing principles, erroneously, cited in favor of the admissibility of evidence of reputation in cases of mere private right. Bishop of Meath v. Lord Belfield, Bull. N. P. 295, where the question was, who presented the former incumbent of a parish, —a fact interesting to all the parishioners; Price v. Littlewood, 3 Campb. 288, where an old entry in the vestry-book, by the churchwardens, showing by what persons certain parts of the church were repaired, in consideration of their occupancy of pews, was admitted, to show title to a pew in one under whom the plaintiff claimed, Barnes v. Mawson, 1 M. & S. 77, which was a question of boundary between two large districts of a manor called the Old and New Lands; Anscomb v. Shore, 1 Taunt. 261, where the right of common prescribed for was claimed by all the inhabitants of Hampton; Blackett v. Lowes, 2 M. & S. 494, 500, where the question was as to the general usage of all the tenants of manor, the defendant being one, to cut certain woods; Brett v. Beales, 1 Mood. & Malk, 416, which was a claim of ancient tolls belonging to the corporation of Cambridge; White v. Lisle, 4 Madd. Ch. 214, 224, 225, where evidence of reputation, in regard to a parochial modus, was held admissible, because "a class or district of persons who concerned;" but denied in regard to a farm modus, because none but the occupant of the farm was concerned. In Davies v. Lewis, 2 Chitty, 535, the declarations offered in evidence were clearly admissible, as being those of tenants in possession, stating under whom the See supra, § 108.

is proved aliunde, evidence of general reputation may be received to qualify and explain it. Thus, in a suit for tithes where a parochial modus of sixpence per acre was set up, it was conceded that evidence of reputation of the payment of that sum for one piece of land would not be admissible; but it was held, that such evidence would be admissible to the fact that it had always been eustomary to pay that sum for all the lands in the parish. And where the question on the record was whether a turnpike was within the limits of a certain town, evidence of general reputation was admitted to show that the bounds of the town extended as far as a certain close, but not that formerly there were houses, where none then stood; the latter being a particular fact, in which the public had no interest. 2(b) So, where, upon an information against the sheriff of the county of Chester, for not executing a death-warrant, the question was whether the sheriff of the county or the sheriffs of the city were to execute sentence of death, traditionary evidence that the sheriffs of the county had always been exempted from the performance of that duty was rejected, it being a private question between two individuals; the public having an interest only that execution be done, and not in the person by whom it was performed.3 The question of the admissibility of this sort of evidence seems, therefore, to turn upon the nature of the reputed fact, whether it was interesting to one party only or to many. If it were of a public or general nature, it falls within the exception we are now considering, by which hearsay evidence, under the restrictions already mentioned, is admitted. But if it had no connection with the exercise of any public right, nor the discharge of any public duty, nor with any other matter of general interest, it falls within the general rule by which hearsay evidence is excluded.4

The principle, however, upon which these are admitted applies to documentary and all other kinds of proof denominated hearsay. If the matter in controversy is ancient, and not susceptible of better evidence, any proof in the nature of traditionary declarations is receivable, whether it be oral or written; subject to the qualifications we have stated. Thus, deeds, leases, and other private documents, have been admitted as declaratory of the public matters recited in them. 1 Maps, also, showing the boundaries of towns and parishes, are admissible, if it appear that they have been made by persons having adequate knowledge. 2 (a) Verdicts, also, are receivable evidence of reputation, in questions of public or general interest.3 Thus, for example, where a public right of way was in question, the plaintiff was allowed to show a verdict rendered in his own favor, against a defendant in another suit, in

(b) So in Drury v. Midland R. R. Co., 127 Mass. 571, where the boundary to be proved was shown to be the dividing line between two counties; its location was allowed to be proved by ancient plans of the adjacent lands. And in Morris v. Callanan, 105 Mass. 129, it was held that where the boundary of private lands was coincident with the division line of two commons, an ancient deed was admissible to prove the location of the line. The language of the Court, in Sparhawk v. Bullard, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 95, is broad enough to extend this principle to cases of private boundaries. Wilde, J., says: "Recitals in ancient deeds are always competent evidence, and are presumed to be true unless the contrary can be made to appear. But the statement is probably too broad. See Wilberforce v. Hearfield, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 709; Phillipps v. Hudson, L. R. 2 Ch. 243. which the same right of way was in issue; but Lord Kenyon observed, that such evidence was, perhaps, not entitled to much weight, and certainly was not conclusive. The circumstance, that the verdict was post litem motam, does not affect its admissibility.4(c)

§ 140. Against a public right. It is further to be observed, that reputation is evidence as well against a public right as in its favor. Accordingly, where the question was, whether a landing-place was public or private property, reputation, from the declaration of ancient deceased persons, that it was the private landingplace of the party and his ancestors, was held admissible; the learned judge remarking, that there was no distinction between the evidence of reputation to establish and to disparage a public right.1(a)

CHAPTER VII.

OF ANCIENT POSSESSIONS.

§ 141. Ancient possessions and documents. A second exception to the rule, rejecting hearsay evidence, is allowed in cases of ancient possession, and in favor of the admission of ancient documents in support of it. In matters of private right, not affecting any public or general interest, hearsay is generally inadmissible. But the admission of ancient documents, purporting to constitute part of the transactions themselves, to which, as acts of ownership, or of the exercise of right, the party against whom they are produced is not privy, stands on a different principle. It is true, on the one hand, that the documents in question consist of evidence which is not proved to be part of any res gestæ, because the only proof of the transaction consists in the documents themselves; and these may have been fabricated, or, if genuine, may never have been acted upon. And their effect, if admitted in evidence, is to benefit persons connected in interest with the original parties to the documents, and from whose custody they have been produced. But, on the other hand, such documents always accompany and form a part of every legal transfer of title and possession by act of the parties; and there is, also, some presumption against their fabrication, where they refer to coexisting subjects by which their truth might be examined. (a) On this ground, therefore, as well as because such is generally the only attainable evidence of ancient possession, this proof is admitted, under the qualifications which will be stated. (b)

§ 142. Documents must come from proper custody. As the value of these documents depends mainly on their having been contemporaneous, at least, with the act of transfer, if not part of it, care is first taken to ascertain their genuineness; and this may be shown prima facie, by proof that the document comes from the proper custody, or by otherwise accounting for it. Documents found in a place in which, and under the care of persons with whom, such papers might naturally and reasonably be expected to be found, or in the possession of persons having an interest in them, are in precisely the custody which gives authenticity to documents found within it. 1(a) "For it is not necessary," observed Tindal, C. J., "that they should be found in the best and most proper place of deposit. If documents continue in such custody, there never would be any question as to their authenticity: but it is when documents are found in other than their proper place of deposit, that the investigation commences, whether it is reasonable and natural, under the circumstances in the particular case, to expect that they should have been in the place where they are actually found; for it is obvious, that, while there can be only one place of deposit strictly and absolutely proper, there may be many and various that are reasonable and probable, though differing in degree; some being more so, some less; and, in those cases, the proposition to be determined is, whether the actual custody is so reasonably and probably accounted for, that it impresses the mind with the conviction that the instrument found in such custody must be genuine. It is further requisite, where the nature of the case will admit it, that proof be given of some act done in reference to the documents offered in evidence, as a further assurance of their genuineness, and of the claiming of title under them. If the document bears date post litem motam, however ancient, some evidence of correspondent acting is always scrupulously required, even in cases where traditionary evidence is receivable. 1 (a) But in other cases, where the transaction is very ancient, so that proof of contemporaneous acting, such as possession, or the like, is not probably to be obtained, its production is not required. 2(b) But where unexceptionable evidence of enjoyment, referable to the document, may reasonably be expected to be found, it must be produced.3 If such evidence, referable to the document, is not to be expected, still it is requisite to prove some acts of modern enjoyment, with reference to similar documents, or that modern possession or user should be shown, corroborative of the ancient documents.4

- of Bristow v. Cormican, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 641, where Blackburn, J., giving his opinion says: "Inasmuch as, after a long time, all the witnesses who could prove such possession are dead, the law permits ancient documents, either with or without evidence of ancient payment of rent, to be given as evidence, from which the jury may properly draw an inference that there was such possession. For, in the ordinary course of things, men do not make leases unless they act on them, and lessees do not in general pay rent unless they are in possession, so that the ancient payment of rent adds weight to the ancient inden-ture." Cf. Gardner v. Granniss, 57 Ga. 539; Thursby v. Myers, Id. 155.

the general rule; yet they seem rather to be parts of the res gestæ, and therefore admissible as original evidence, on the principle already discussed. (a) An ancient deed, by which is meant one more than thirty years old, having nothing suspicious about it, is presumed to be genuine without express proof, the witnesses being presumed dead; and, if it is found in the proper custody, and is corroborated by evidence of ancient or modern corresponding enjoyment, 1 or by other equivalent or explanatory proof, it is to be presumed that the deed constituted part of the actual transfer of property therein mentioned; because this is the usual and ordinary course of such transactions among men. The residue of the transaction may be as unerringly inferred from the existence of genuine ancient documents, as the remainder of a statue may be made out from an existing torso, or a perfect skeleton from the fossil remains of a part.

1 It has been made a question, whether the document may be read in evidence, before the proof of possession or other equivalent corroborative proof is offered; but it is now stated that the document, if otherwise apparently genuine, may be first read; for the question, whether there has been a corresponding possession, can hardly be raised till the court is made acquainted with the tenor of the instrument. Doe v. Passingham, 2 C. & P. 440. If the deed appears, on its face, to have been executed under an authority which is matter of record, it is not admissible, however ancient it may be, as 2 C. & P. 440. If the deed appears, on its face, to have been executed under an authority which is matter of record, it is not admissible, however ancient it may be, as evidence of title to land, without proof of the authority under which it was executed. Tolman v. Emerson, 4 Pick. 160. A graver question has been, whether the proof of possession is indispensable; or whether its absence may be supplied by other satisfactory corroborative evidence. In Jackson d. Lewis v. Laroway, 3 Johns. Cas. 283, it was held by Kent, J., against the opinion of the other judges, that it was indispensable, on the authority of Fleta, lib. 6, c. 34; Co. Lit. 6 b; Isack v. Clarke, 1 Roll. 132; James v. Trollop, Skin. 239; 2 Mod. 322; Forbes v. Wale, 1 W. Bl. 532; and the same doctrine was again asserted by him, in delivering the judgment of the court, in Jackson d. Burhans v. Blanshan, 3 Johns. 292, 298. See also Thompson v. Bullock, 1 Bay, 364; Middleton v. Mass, 2 Nott & McC. 55; Carroll v. Norwood, 1 Har. & J. 174, 175; Shaller v. Brand, 6 Binn. 439; Doe v. Phelps, 9 Johns. 169, 171. But the weight of authority at present seems clearly the other way; and it is now agreed, that, where proof of possession cannot be had, the deed may be read, if its genuineness is satisfactorily established by other circumstances. See Ld. Rancliffe v. Parkins, 6 Dow, 202, per Ld. Eldon; McKenire v. Fraser, 9 Ves. 5; Doe v. Passingham, 2 C. & P. 440; Barr v. Gratz, 4 Wheat. 213, 221; Jackson d. Lewis v. Laroway, 3 Johns. Where an ancient document, purporting to be an exemplification, is produced from the proper place of deposit, having the usual slip of parchment to which the great seal is appended, but no appearance that any seal was ever affixed, it is still to be presumed that the seal was once there and has been accidentally removed, and it may be read in evidence as an exe v. (a) The question how far a book of assessment of taxes, made and kept by the assessors in the performance of their official duty, in accordance with the requirements of statute is evidence of the facts stated in it, in other cases than those relating to the assessment or collection of the tax, is discussed by Gray, J., in Com.

v. Heffron, 102 Mass. 161, and the conclusion arrived at that unless the book is admissible under the ancient document rule, it is not admissible at all. Kenerson v. Henry, 101 Mass. 152; Edson v. Munsell, 10 Allen (Mass.), 557; Doe v. Arkwright, 5 C. & P. 575, 2 Ad. & El. 182. § 145. Ancient boundaries. Under this head may be mentioned the case of ancient boundaries; in proof of which, it has sometimes been said that traditionary evidence is admissible from the nature and necessity of the case. But, if the principles already discussed in regard to the admission of hearsay are sound, it will be difficult to sustain an exception in favor of such evidence merely as applying to boundary, where the fact is particular, and not of public or general, interest. Accordingly, though evidence of reputation is received, in regard to the boundaries of parishes, manors, and the like, which are of public interest, and generally of remote antiquity, yet, by the weight of authority and upon better reason, such evidence is held to be inadmissible for the purpose of proving the boundary of a private estate, when such boundary is not identical with another of a public or quasi public nature. Where the question is of such general nature, whether

In the passage thus cited, the learned author limits the admissibility of this kind of evidence to questions of a public or general nature; including a right of common by custom; which he observes, "is, strictly speaking, a private right; but it is a general right, and therefore, so far as regards the admissibility of this species of evidence, has been considered as public, because it affects a large number of occupiers within a district." Supra, §§ 123, 138; Gresley on Evid. 220, 221. And more recently, in England, it has been decided, 138; Gresley on Evid. 220, 221. And more recently, in England, it has been decided, upon full consideration, that traditionary evidence, respecting rights not of a public nature, is inadmissible. Dunraven v. Llewellyn, 15 Q. B. 791. The admission of traditionary evidence, in cases of boundary, occurs more frequently in the United States than in England. By far the greatest portion of our territory was originally surveyed in large masses or tracts, owned either by the State, or by the United States, or by one, In large masses or tracts, owned either by the State, or by the United States, or by one, or a company of proprietors; under whose authority these tracts were again surveyed and divided into lots suitable for single farms, by lines crossing the whole tract, and serving as the common boundary of very many farm-lots lying on each side of it. So that it is hardly possible, in such cases, to prove the original boundaries of one farm, without affecting the common boundary of many; and thus in trials of this sort, the question is similar, in principle, to that of the boundaries of a manor, and therefore traditionary evidence is freely admitted. Such was the case of Boardman v. Reed, 6 Peters, 328, where the premises in question, being a tract of eight thousand acres, were part of a large connection of surveys made together, and containing between fifty and one hundred thousand acres of land: and it is to such tracts, interesting to very and one hundred thousand acres of land; and it is to such tracts, interesting to very many persons, that the remarks of Mr. Justice M'Lean, in that case (p. 341), are to be applied. In Conn v. Penn, 1 Pet. C. C. 496, the tract whose boundaries were in controversy was called the manor of Springetsbury, and contained seventy thousand acres, in which a great number of individuals had severally become interested. In Doe d. Taylor v. Roe, 4 Hawks, 116, traditionary evidence was admitted in regard to Earl Granville's line, which was of many miles in extent, and afterwards constituted the boundary between counties, as well as private estates. In Ralston v. Miller, 3 Randolph, 44, the question was upon the boundaries of a street in the city of Richmond; concerning which kind of boundaries it was said, that ancient reputation and possession were entitled to infinitely more respect, in deciding upon the boundaries of the lots, than any experimental surveys. In several American cases, which have sometimes been cited in favor of the admissibility of traditionary evidence of boundary, even though it

consisted of particular facts, and in cases of merely private concern, the evidence was clearly admissible on other grounds, either as part of the original res gestee, or as the declaration of a party in possession, explanatory of the nature and extent of his claim. In this class may be ranked the cases of Caufman v. Congregation of Cedar Spring, 6 Binn. 59; Sturgeon v. Wangh, 2 Yeates, 476; Jackson d. McDonald v. McCall, 10 Johns. 377; Hamilton v. Menor, 2 S. & R. 70; Higley v. Bidwell, 9 Conn. 477; Hall v. Giddings, 2 Harr. & Johns. 112; Redding v. McCubbin, 1 Har. & McHen. 368. In Wooster v. Butler, 13 Conn. 309, it was said by Church, J., that traditionary evidence was receivable in Connecticnt, to prove the boundaries of land between individual proprietors. But this dictum was not called for in the case; for the question was, whether there had anciently been a highway over a certain tract of upland; which being a subject of common and general interest, was clearly within the rule. It has, however, subsequently been settled as a point of local law in that State, that such evidence is admissible to prove private boundaries. Kinney v. Farnsworth, 17 Conn. 355, 363. In Pennsylvania, reputation and hearsay are held entitled to respect, in a question of boundary, where from lapse of time there is great difficulty in proving the existence of the original landmarks. Nieman v. Ward, 1 Watts & Serg. 68. In Den d. Tate v. Southard, 1 Hawks, 45, the question was, whether the lines of the surrounding tracts of land, if made for those tracts alone, and not for the tract in dispute, might be shown by reputation to be the "known and visible boundaries" of the latter tract, within the fair meaning of those words in the statute of North Carolina, of 1791, c. 15. It was objected that the boundaries mentioned in the act were those only which had been expressly recognized as the bounds of the particular tract in questions of private boundary, have been broken in upon. "We have," he remarks, "in questions of private boundary, h

(a) The admissibility of such evidence rests either upon the fact that it expresses the general reputation as to the boundary in question, or that it is the declaration of a person possessing competent knowledge of the facts. The practice of the various States in regard to the admission of such evidence varies considerably. The strictest rule is that which obtains in Massachusetts, where it is held that the exceptions to the general rule excluding hearsay evidence, which permit the introduction of reputation or tradition, or of the declarations of persons deceased, as to matters of public or general interest or questions of pedigree, do not extend to a question of private boundary in which no considerable number of persons have a legal interest. Boston Water Power Co. v. Hanlon, 132 Mass. 483; Hall v. Mayo, 97 Id. 416; Green v. Chelsea, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 80. Still, an analogous rule which covers a portion of the same kind of declarations exists; i. e. that declarations are admissible if made by persons deceased, while in possession of land owned by them, and in the act of pointing out the boundaries, and nothing appears to show an interest to misrepresent. Bartlett v. Emerson, 7 Gray (Mass.), 174; Long v. Colton, 116 Mass. 414. This rule, however, is rather a modified form of the rule as to declarations qualifying possession, which Mr. Greenleaf suggests as the true rule in § 109.

In a recent case in New Jersey (Curtis v. Aaronson, 49 N. J. L. 75), the strict rule limiting evidence of general reputation to cases involving public boundaries, was supported. The Court says: "The admission of such evidence of common reputation, to prove ancient facts of a public or quasi public nature, is a recognized exception to the rule excluding hearsay evidence. In England, on questions of ancient public boundary, this source of evidence was commonly resorted to.

A similar course has been adopted in Tennessee. Beard v. Talbot, 1 Cooke, 142. In South Carolina, the declarations of a deceased surveyor, who originally surveyed the land, are admissible, on a question as to its location. Speer v. Coate, 3 McCord, 227; Blythe v. Sutherland, 1d. 258. In Kentucky, the latter practice seems similar to that in North Carolina. Smith v. Nowells, 2 Littell, 159; Smith v. Prewit, 2 A. K. Marsh. 155, 158. In New Hampshire, the like evidence has in one case been held admissible, upon the alleged authority of the rule of the common law, in 1 Phil. Evid. 182; but in the citation of the passage by the learned chief justice, it is plain, from the omission of part of the text, that the restriction of the rule to subjects of public or general interest was not under his consideration. Shepherd v. Thompson, 4 N. H. 213, 214. More recently, however, it has been decided in that State, "that the declarations of deceased persons, who, from their situation, appear to have had the means of knowledge respecting private boundaries, and who had no interest to misrepresent, may well be admitted in evidence." Great Falls Co. v. Worster, 15 N. H. 412, 437; Smith v. Powers, Id. 546, 564. Subject to these exceptions, the general practice in this country, in the admission of traditionary evidence as to boundaries, seems to agree with the doctrine of the common law as stated in the text. In Weems v. Disney, 4 Har. & McHen. 156, the depositions admitted were annexed to a return of commissioners, appointed under a statute of Maryland, "for marking and bounding lands," and would seem, therefore, to have been admissible as part of the return, which expressly referred to them; but no final decision was had upon the point, the suit having been compromised. In Buchanan v. Moore, 10 S. & R. 275, the point was whether traditionary evidence was admissible while the declarant was living. By the Roman law, traditionary evidence of common fame seems to have been deemed admissible, even in matters of private boundary. Masca

Knowledge of such public matters was supposed to rest in the possession of the public, because they are interested therein and in any litigation touching such subject, the parties to it had a common resort for ascertaining the truth. And there it has not been infrequent, where private lines in dispute were coincident with public or quasi public boundaries, to admit evidence of reputation in determining the private right. The rule, to the same extent, has general prevalence in the States of this country. 1 Greenl. Ev. 145. No such exception to the general rule has ever been recognized in England, in respect to the determination of mere private boun-daries, for the reason that such private in-terests could not be matter of knowledge with the public, or of any public interest or concern. It has, therefore, been the course of the courts there to entirely exclude traditional evidence in suits concerning private lines and monuments. Outram v. Morewood, 5 T. R. 121; Didsbury v. Thomas, 14 East, 323, and eases cited in note; Clothier v. Chapman, 14 East, 331; Dunraven v. Llewellyn, 15 Q. B. 791."

The general American rule on this point is stated in Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 333, as follows: "In questions of private boundaries, declarations of particular facts as distinguished from reputation, made by deceased persons, are not admissible unless they were made by persons who, it is shown, had knowledge of that whereof they spoke, and who were on the land or in possession of it when the declarations were made, and these declarations, to be evidence, must have been made while the declarant was pointing out or marking the boundaries, or discharging some duties relating thereto." This rule does not limit the declarations to those of persons having an interest in the land, in relation to which the statement is made, in which case the statement would be either an admission against the interest of the declarant, or a part of the res gestæ, being connected with the act of ownership, and therefore admissible whenever that act is relevant; but the statement derives its force from the supposed knowledge of the declarant, who is since deceased, though he may have had no interest in the land itself. The rule also admits declarations of particular facts, as distinguished from reputation. This rule seems to be that which is followed in Texas. Hurt v. Evans, 49 Tex. 311; Smith v. Russell, 37 Tex. 247. In Wood v. Willard, 37 Vt. 386 (in which a thorough discussion of the question is given by the Court), the rule is held to be that the declarations of deceased persons, who had actual knowledge as to the location of such boundaries, or who from their connection with the property itself, or their situation and ex-perience in regard to such boundaries and be persons free from particular and direct interest at the time, and are since deceased.2

§ 146. Perambulations. In this connection may be mentioned the subject of perambulations. The writ de perambulatione facienda lies at common law, when two lords are in doubt as to the limits of their lordships, villas, &e., and by consent appear in chancery, and agree that a perambulation be made between them. Their consent being enrolled in chancery, a writ is directed to the sheriff to make the perambulation, by the oaths of a jury of twelve knights, and to set up the bounds and limits, in certainty, between the parties. 1(a) These proceedings and the return are evidence against the parties and all others in privity with them, on grounds hereafter to be considered. But the perambulation consists not only of this higher written evidence, but also of the acts of the persons making it, and their assistants, such as marking boundaries, setting up monuments, and the like, including their declarations respecting such acts, made during the trans-Evidence of what these persons were heard to say upon such occasions is always received; not, however, as hearsay, and under any supposed exception in favor of questions of ancient the surveys thereof, had peculiar means of knowledge, so that it may be fairly in-ferred that they had actual knowledge of the same made at a time when they had no interest to misrepresent, and made when upon or in the immediate vicinity of the boundary referred to, and pointing it out, are admissible. But in a later case, Child v. Kingsbury, 46 Vt. 47, the rule is said to admit the declarations of those deceased persons shown to have had sufficient knowledge and not interested to w. Rich, 48 Vt. 217; Hadley v. Howe, 46 Vt. 142. The same rule continues to prevail in Pennsylvania. McCausland v. Fleming, 63 Pa. St. 36. Cf. Kennedy v. Labold, 88 Pa. St. 246.

The writ de perambulatione facienda is not known to have been adopted in practice in the United States; but in several of the States, remedies somewhat similar in principle have been provided by statutes. In some of the States, provision is only made for a periodical perambulation of the boundaries of towns by the selectmen. LL. Maine Rev. 1840, c. 5; LL. N. H. 1842, c. 37; Mass. Rev. Stats. c. 15; LL. Conn. Rev. 1849, tit. 3, c. 7; or, for a definite settlement of controversies respecting them, by the public surveyor, as in New York, Rev. Code, pt. i. c. 8, tit. 6. In others the remedy is extended to the boundaries of private estates. See Elmer's Digest, pp. 98, 99, 315, 316; New Jersey Rev. St. 1846, tit. 22, c. 12; Virginia, Rev. Code, 1819, vol. i. pp. 358, 359. A very complete summary remedy, in all cases of disputed boundary, is provided in the statutes of Delaware, Revision of 1829, pp. 80, 81, tit. Boundaries, III. To perambulations made under any of these statutes, the principles stated in the text, it is conceived, will apply.

OF DECLARATIONS AGAINST INTEREST,

§ 147. Declarations against interest. A third exception to the rule, rejecting hearsav evidence, is allowed in the case of declarations and entries made by persons since deceased, and against the interest of the persons making them, at the time when they were made. We have already seen, that declarations of third persons, admitted in evidence, are of two classes: one of which consists of written entries, made in the course of official duty or of professional employment; where the entry is one of a number of facts which are ordinarily and usually connected with each other. so that the proof of one affords a presumption that the others have taken place; and, therefore, a fair and regular entry, such as usually accompanies facts similar to those of which it speaks, and apparently contemporaneous with them, is received as original presumptive evidence of those facts. And, the entry itself being original evidence, it is of no importance, as regards its admissibility, whether the person making it be yet living or dead. But declarations of the other class, of which we are now to speak, are secondary evidence, and are received only in consequence of the death of the person making them. This class embraces not only entries in books, but all other declarations or statements of facts, whether verbal or in writing, and whether they were made at the time of the fact declared or at a subsequent day.² But, to render them admissible, it must appear that the declarant is deceased; that he possessed competent knowledge of the facts, or that it was his duty to know them; and that the declarations were at variance with his interest. 3(a) When these circumstances concur, the evidence is received, leaving its weight and value to be determined by other considerations.

§ 148. Ground of their admissibility. The ground upon which this evidence is received, is the extreme improbability of its falsehood. The regard which men usually pay to their own interest is deemed a sufficient security, both that the declarations were not made under any mistake of fact, or want of information on the part of the declarant, if he had the requisite means of knowledge, and that the matter declared is true. The apprehension of fraud in the statement is rendered still more improbable from the circumstance, that it is not receivable in evidence until after the death of the declarant; and that it is always competent for the party against whom such declarations are adduced to point out any sinister motive for making them. It is true, that the ordinary and highest tests of the fidelity, accuracy, and completeness of judicial evidence are here wanting: but their place is, in some measure, supplied by the circumstances of the declarant; and the inconveniences resulting from the exclusion of evidence, having such guarantees for its accuracy in fact, and for its freedom from fraud, are deemed much greater, in general, than any which would probably be experienced from its admission. (a)

§ 149. Must be against interest. In some cases, the courts seem to have admitted this evidence, without requiring proof of

Cas. 193, n., and cases there cited; Spargo v. Brown, 9 B. & C. 935. The interest with which the declarations were at variance must be of a pecuniary nature. Davis v. Lloyd, 1 C. & K. 276. The apprehension of possible danger of a prosecution is not sufficient. The Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Clark & Fin. 85. In Holladay v. Littlepage, 2 Munf. 316, the joint declarations of a deceased shipmaster and the living owner, that the defendant's passage money had been paid by the plaintiff, were held admissible, as parts of the res gestæ, being contemporaneous with the time of sailing. This case, therefore, is not opposed to the others cited. Neither is Sherman v. Crosby, 11 Johns. 70, where a receipt of payment of a judgment recovered by a third person against the defendant was held admissible in an action for the money so paid, by the party paying it, he having had authority to adjust the demand, and the receipt being a documentary fact in the adjustment; though the attorney who signed the receipt was not produced, nor proved to be dead. In auditing the accounts of guardians, administrators, &c., the course is, to admit receipts, as prima fictic sufficient vouchers. Shearman v. Akins, 4 Pick. 283; Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. 326; Welsh v. Barrett, 15 Mass. 380; Wilbur v. Selden, 6 Cowen, 162; Farmers' Bank v. Whitehill, 16 S. & R. 89, 90; Stokes v. Stokes, 6 Martin, N. S. 351.

adverse interest in the declarant; while in others stress is laid on the fact, that such interest had already appeared, aliunde, in the course of the trial. In one case it was argued, upon the authorities cited, that it was not material that the declarant ever had any actual interest, contrary to his declaration; but this position was not sustained by the court. In many other cases, where the evidence consisted of entries in books of account and the like, they seem to have been clearly admissible as entries made in the ordinary course of business or duty, or parts of the res gestæ, and therefore as original and not secondary evidence; though the fact that they were made against the interest of the person making them was also adverted to.2 But in regard to declarations in general, not being entries or acts of the last-mentioned character, and which are admissible only on the ground of having been made contrary to the interest of the declarant, the weight of authority, as well as the principle of the exception we are considering, seem plainly to require that such adverse interest should appear, either in the nature of the case or from extraneous proof.3 And it seems not to be sufficient, that, in one or more points of view, a declaration may be against interest, if it appears, upon the whole, that the interest of the declarant would be rather promoted than impaired by the declaration.4

§ 150. Entries in books of account. Though the exception we are now considering is, as we have just seen, extended to declarations of any kind, yet it is much more frequently exemplified in documentary evidence, and particularly in entries in books of account. Where these are books of collectors of taxes, stewards, bailiffs, or receivers, subject to the inspection of others, and in the case was disposed of in another manner.

² It has been questioned, whether there is any difference in the principle of admissi-

² It has been questioned, whether there is any difference in the principle of admissibility between a written entry and an oral declaration of an agent concerning his having received money for his principal. See supra, § 113, n.; Fursdon v. Clogg, 10 M. & W. 572; infra, § 152, n.

which the first entry is generally of money received, charging the party making it, they are, doubtless, within the principle of the exception. (a) But it has been extended still farther, to include entries in private books also, though retained within the custody of their owners: their liability to be produced on notice, in trials, being deemed sufficient security against fraud; and the entry not being admissible, unless it charges the party making it with the receipt of money on account of a third person, or acknowledges the payment of money due to himself; in either of which cases it would be evidence against him, and therefore is considered as sufficiently against his interest to bring it within this exception.² The entry of a mere memorandum of an agreement is not sufficient. Thus, where the settlement of a pauper was attempted to be proved by showing a contract of hiring and service, the books of his deceased master, containing minutes of his contracts with his servants, entered at the time of contracting with them, and of subsequent payments of their wages, were held inadmissible; for the entries were not made against the writer's interest, for he would not be liable unless the service were performed, nor were they made in the course of his duty or employment.3

§ 151. Admissible, though the entry itself is the only evidence of the charge. Where the entry is itself the only evidence of the charge, of which it shows the subsequent liquidation, its admission has been strongly opposed, on the ground, that, taken together, it is no longer a declaration of the party against his interest, and may be a declaration ultimately in his own favor. This point was raised in the cases of Higham v. Ridgway, where an entry was simply marked as paid in the margin; and of Rowe v. Brenton, which was a debtor and creditor account, in a toller's books, of the money received for tolls, and paid over. But in neither of these cases was the objection sustained. In the former, indeed, there was evidence aliunde, that the service charged had been performed; but Lord Ellenborough, though he afterwards adverted to this fact, as a corroborating circumstance, first laid down the general doctrine that "the evidence was properly admitted, upon the broad principle on which receivers' books have been admitted." But in the latter case there was no such proof: and Lord Tenterden observed, that almost all the accounts which were produced were accounts on both sides, and that the objection would go to the very root of that sort of evidence. Upon these authorities, the admissibility of such entries may perhaps be considered as established. And it is observable, in corroboration of their admissibility, that in most, if not all, of the eases, they appear to have been made in the ordinary course of business or of duty, and therefore were parts of the res gestæ. 2(a)

§ 152. Matters not against interest. It has also been questioned, whether the entry is to be received in evidence of matters

Wittcomb, 15 Jur. 778;

Jur. 778;

² In Doe v. Vowles, 1 Moo. & R. 261, the evidence offered was merely a tradesman's bill, receipted in full; which was properly rejected by Littledale, J., as it had not the merit of an original entry: for, though the receipt of payment was against the party's interest, yet the main fact to be established was the performance of the services charged in the bill, the appearance of which denoted that better evidence existed, in the original entry in the tradesman's book. The same objection, indeed, was taken here, by the learned counsel for the defendant, as in the cases of Higham v. Ridgway, and of Rowe v. Brenton; namely, that the proof, as to interest, was on both sides, and neutralized itself: but the objection was not particularly noticed by Littledale, J., before whom it was tried; though the same learned judge afterward intimated his opinion, by observing, in reply to an objection similar in principle, in Rowe v. Brenton, that "a man is not likely to charge himself, for the purpose of getting a discharge."

(a) The rule seems now settled that a declaration may be against the pecuniary interest of the person who makes it, if part of it charges him with a liability, though other parts of the book or document in which it occurs may discharge him from such liability in whole or in part, and though there may be no proof other than the statement itself either of such liability or of its discharge in whole or in part.

Reg. v. Heyford, note to Higham v. Ridgway, 2 Smith's L. C. 333, 7th ed. Stephen, Digest of Evidence, art 28. In Doe v. Burton, 9 C. & P. 254, Mr. Baron Gurney seems to have followed Doe v. which, though forming part of the declaration, were not in themselves against the interest of the declarant. This objection goes not only to collateral and independent facts, but to the class of entries mentioned in the preceding section; and would seem to be overruled by those decisions. But the point was solemnly argued in a later case, where it was adjudged that though, if the point were now for the first time to be decided, it would seem more reasonable to hold that the memorandum of a receipt of payment was admissible only to the extent of proving that a payment had been made, and the account on which it had been made, giving it the effect only of verbal proof of the same payment; yet, that the authorities had gone beyond that limit, and the entry of a payment against the interest of the party making it had been held to have the effect of proving the truth of other statements contained in the same entry, and connected with it. (a) Accordingly, in that case, where three persons made a joint and several promissory note, and a partial payment was made by one which was indorsed upon the note in these terms, "Received of W. D. the sum of £280, on account of the within note, the £300" (which was the amount of the note) "having been originally advanced to E. H.," for which payment an action was brought by the party paying, as surety, against E. H., as the principal debtor; it was held, upon the authority of Higham v. Ridgway, and of Doe v. Robson, that the indorsement, the creditor being dead, was admissible in evidence of the whole statement contained in it; and, consequently, that it was prima facie proof, not only of the payment of the money, but of the person who was the principal debtor, for whose account it was paid; leaving its effect to be determined by the jury. 1

⁽a) But statements not referred to in or made at the same time or recorded in the necessary to explain such declarations, are same place. Livingston v. Arnoux, 56 N. not admissible merely because they were Y. 507.

§ 153. Competency of declarant. In order to render declarations against interest admissible, it is not necessary that the declarant should have been competent, if living, to testify to the facts contained in the declaration; the evidence being admitted on the broad ground, that the declaration was against the interest of the party making it, in the nature of a confession, and, on that account, so probably true as to justify its reception. For the same reason, it does not seem necessary that the fact should have been stated on the personal knowledge of the declarant.² Neither is it material whether the same fact is or is not provable by other witnesses who are still living.3 Whether their testimony, if produced, might be more satisfactory, or its non-production, if attainable, might go to diminish the weight of the declarations, are considerations for the jury, and do not affect the rule of law.

§ 154. Entries by agents, stewards, &c. But where the evidence consists of entries made by persons acting for others, in the capacity of agents, stewards, or receivers, some proof of such agency is generally required previous to their admission. The handwriting, after thirty years, need not be proved. (a) In regard to the proof of official character, a distinction has been taken between public and private offices, to the effect that, where the office is public and must exist, it may always be presumed that a person who acts in it has been regularly appointed; but that, where it is merely private, some preliminary evidence must be adduced of the existence of the office, and of the appointment of the agent or incumbent.2 Where the entry, by an agent, charges himself in the first instance, that fact has been deemed sufficient proof of his agency; 3 but where it was made by one styling himself clerk to a steward, that alone was considered not rative, is no proof of those circumstances." See also Thompson v. Stevens, 2 Nott & McC. 493; Sherman v. Crosby, 11 Johns. 70. Whether a verbal declaration of a deceased agent or officer, made while he was paying over money to his principal or superior, and designating the person from whom he received a particular sum entered by him in his books, is admissible in evidence against that person, quare; and see Fursdon v. Clogg, 10 M. & W. 572. The true distinction, more recently taken, is this, — that where the entry is admitted as being against the interest of the party making it, the whole statement; but that where it was made variety in the that where the entry is admitted as being against the interest of the party making it, it carries with it the whole statement; but that, where it was made merely in the course of a man's duty, it does not go beyond the matters which it was his duty to enter. sufficient to prove the receipt, by either of them, of the money therein mentioned.4 Yet, where ancient books contain strong internal evidence of their actually being receivers' or agents' books, they may, on that ground alone, be submitted to the jury.5 Upon the general question, how far mere antiquity in the entry will avail as preliminary proof of the character of the declarant or party making the entry, and how far the circumstances which are necessary to make a document evidence must be proved aliunde, and cannot be gathered from the document itself, the law does not seem perfectly settled.6 But where the transaction is ancient, and the document charging the party with the receipt of money is apparently genuine and fair, and comes from the proper repository, it seems admissible, upon the general principles already discussed in treating of this exception. 7(b)

There is another class of § 155. Books of deceased rector. entries admissible in evidence which sometimes has been regarded as anomalous, and at others has been deemed to fall within the principle of the present exception to the general rule; namely, the private books of a deceased rector or vicar, or of an ecclesiastical corporation aggregate, containing entries of the receipt of ecclesiastical dues, when admitted in favor of their successors, or of parties claiming the same under the interest as the maker of the entries. Sir Thomas Plumer, in a case before him, 1 said: "It is admitted, that the entries of a rector or vicar are evidence for or against his successors. It is too late to argue upon that rule, or upon what gave rise to it; whether it was the cursus Scaccarii, the protection of the clergy, or the peculiar nature of property in tithes. It is now the settled law of the land. It is not to be presumed that a person, having a temporary interest only, will insert a falsehood in his book from which he can derive no advantage. Lord Kenvon has said, that the rule is an exception; and it is so: for no other proprietor can make evidence for those who claim under him, or for those who claim in the same right and stand in the same predicament. But it has been the settled law, as to tithes, as far back as our research can We must, therefore, set out from this as a datum; and we must not make comparisons between this and other corporations. No corporation sole, except a rector or vicar, can make evidence for his successor." But the strong presumption that a person, having a temporary interest only, will not insert in his books a falschood, from which he can derive no advantage, which evidently and justly had so much weight in the mind of that learned judge, would seem to bring these books within the principle on which entries made, either in the course of duty or against interest, are admitted. And it has been accordingly remarked, by a writer of the first authority in this branch of the law, that after it has been determined that evidence may be admitted of receipts of payment, entered in private books by persons who are neither obliged to keep such books nor to account to others for the money received, it does not seem any infringement of principle to admit these books of rectors and vicars. For the entries cannot be used by those who made them; and there is no legal privity between them and their successors. strong leaning, on their part, in favor of the church, is nothing more, in legal consideration, than the leaning of every declarant in favor of his own interest, affecting the weight of the evidence, but not its admissibility. General observations have occasionally been made respecting these books, which may seem to authorize the admission of any kind of statement contained in them. But such books are not admissible, except where the entries contain receipts of money or ecclesiastical dues, or are otherwise apparently prejudicial to the interests of the makers, in the manner in which entries are so considered in analogous cases.2 And proof will be required, as in other cases, that the writer had authority to receive the money stated, and is actually dead; and that the document came out of the proper custody.3

OF DYING DECLARATIONS.

§ 156. Dying declarations. A fourth exception to the rule, reiecting hearsay evidence, is allowed in the case of dying declara-The general principle on which this species of evidence is admitted, was stated by Lord Chief Baron Eyre to be this, that they are declarations made in extremity, when the party is at the point of death, and when every hope of this world is gone; when every motive to falsehood is silenced, and the mind is induced, by the most powerful considerations, to speak the truth. A situation so solemn and so awful is considered by the law as creating an obligation equal to that which is imposed by a positive oath in a court of justice. It was at one time held, by respectable authorities, that this general principle warranted the admission of dying declarations in all cases, civil and criminal; but it is now well settled that they are admissible, as such, only in cases of homicide, "where the death of the deceased is the subject of the charge, (a) and the circumstances of the death are

¹ Rex v. Woodcock, 2 Leach's Cr. Cas. 256, 567; Drummond's Case, 1 Leach's Cr. Cas. 378. The rule of the Roman civil law was the same. "Morti proximum, sive moribundum, non præsumendum est mentiri, nec esse immemorem salutis æternæ; licet non præsumatur semper dicere verum." Mascard. De Probat. Concl. 1080. In the earliest reported case on this subject, the evidence was admitted without objection, and apparently on this general ground. Rex v. Reason, 6 State Tr. 195, 201. The rule of the common law, under which this evidence is admitted, is held not to be repealed by, nor inconsistent with, those express provisions of constitutional law, which secure to the person accused of a crime the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him. Anthony v. State, 1 Meigs, 265; Woodsides v. State, 2 How. (Miss.) 655. (b)

(a) Crookham v. State, 5 W. Va. 510. But where by statute certain crimes are expressly declared to be murder or manslaughter if they result fatally, for instance, procuring an abortion which kills the mother, the declaration is admissible at the trial of an indictment for such a crime. State v. Dickinson, 41 Wis. 299. In a recent case in Pennsylvania (Railing v. Com., 110 Pa. St. 103), the question whether such evidence is admissible in that State in prosecutions for abortion which result in the death of the person operated upon, was thoroughly discussed. It was argued by connsel for the State, that the death of the woman, when it occurs, is a necessary ingredient of the offence, under the statute of Pennsylvania, and therefore would bring the case within the rule; and that the death is in part, at least, the subject of the charge. The court, however, held that the death was the subject of the dying declarations." 2(c) The reasons for thus

no part of the facts which went to make up or constitute the crime, but affected only the amount of the punishment. court further said that if the statute had declared that when death resulted the offence should be manslaughter or any other grade of homicide, the case would be entirely different. Then the death would be an essential ingredient of the ofrence, and would be the subject of the charge, and the rule as to dying declarations would apply. In the case of People v. Davis, 56 N. Y. 95, where the statute is quite similar to the Pennsylvania statute, the penalty being increased when the woman dies in consequence of the unlaw-ful acts, it was held that the dying decla-rations of the woman were incompetent on the general ground that the death was not the subject of the charge. In the case of State v. Harper, 35 Ohio St. 78, the same doctrine was held under a statute almost identical with the Pennsylvania statute. The Chief Justice said: "This was an indictment for unlawfully using an instrument with the intent of producing abortion, and not an indictment for homicide. State v. Barker, 28 Ohio St. 583; People v. Davis, 56 N. Y. 96. The death was not the subject of the charge, and was alleged only as a consequence of the illegal act charged, which latter was the only subject of investigation." On the other hand, the Supreme Court of Indiana has held that such declarations were admissible in an indictment under a similar statute. Montgomery v. State, 80 Ind. 338. This case in Indiana appears to be the only one in a court of last resort in which the declarations have been held admissible.

In other criminal cases such declarations are not admitted (Reg. v. Hind, 8 Cox, C. C. 300; State v. Harper, 35 Ohio St. 78; Johnson v. State, 50 Ala. 456; People v. Davis, 56 N. Y. 95; State v. Bohan, 15 Kan. 407); nor in civil cases.

(c) People v. Knapp, 26 Mich. 113; West v. State, 7 Tex. App. 150; Lister v. State, 1 Tex. App. 739; Walker v. State, 52 Ala. 192; State v. Shelton, 2 Jones (N. C.), Law, 360. Declarations as to previous relations of enmity between the deceased and his assailant were held not admissible in Hackett v. People, 54 Barb. 370, but in Wright v. State, 41 Tex. 246, they were admitted upon the question of malice. So, too, if the expressions used are too vague and indefinite to be legal evidence, they are inadmissible, as "it is hard to die by the hand of another and leave one's family." Crookham v. State, 5 W. Va. 510; post, § 159.

(d) The case of Rex v. Baker, which is stated in note (1), is called by Mr. Stephen - "a curious case" (Steph. Dig. Evid. note XVII.), and it has been the subject of much comment in later cases. The ground on which the declarations were admitted by Coltman, J., was that the two deaths by the same poisoning were all one transaction. It has been followed in State v. Terrell, 12 Rich. (S. C.) 321, a case where the facts singularly resembled those in Rex v. Baker, and in which Rex v. Baker is cited with approval by the court, and also in State v. Wilson. 23 La. An. 559, in which case, two persons were killed by the same bullet, and the declarations of one admitted on a trial for the death of the other. Rex v. Baker was cited here also with approval. In Brown v. Com. 73 Penn. St. 321, how-ever, Rex v. Baker and State v. Terrell were criticised by the court, though they considered them different from the case at bar. The facts in that case were that A., for whose murder the prisoner was indicted, was found dead some 300 yards from his house, in which his wife was found at the restricting it may be, that the credit is not in all cases due to the declarations of a dying person: for his body may have survived the powers of his mind; or his recollection, if his senses are not impaired, may not be perfect; or, for the sake of ease, and to be rid of the importunity and annoyance of those around him, he may say, or seem to say whatever they may choose to suggest.³ These, or the like considerations, have been regarded as counterbalancing the force of the general principle above stated; leaving this exception to stand only upon the ground of the public necessity of preserving the lives of the community by bringing manslayers to justice. (e) For it often happens, that there is no third person present to be an eye-witness to the fact; and the usual witness in other cases of felony, namely, the party injured, is himself destroyed.4 But, in thus restricting the evidence of dying declarations to cases of trial for homicide of the declarant, it should be observed that this applies only to declarations offered on the sole ground that they were made in extremis; for where they constitute part of the res gestæ, or come within the exception of declarations against interest, or the like, they

same time unconscious and badly beaten. She recovered sufficiently to make certain declarations relative to the death of her husband, implicating the prisoner. These were offered at the trial and admitted, but on appeal the full court reversed the judgment.

The fact that the declarant and the person for whose death the prisoner is on trial, were both killed at the same time, or in the same brawl, has been held several times, insufficient to admit such declarations. State v. Westfall, 49 lowa, 328; Krebs v. State, 3 Tex. App. 348; State v. Bohan, 15 Kan. 407 (disapproving State v. Terrell, and State v. Wilson). Probably if the two deaths are identical in time and place, and are caused by the same weapon or missile or means, the declarations of either victim would be held admissible on a trial for the death of the other.

(e) It is not received, says Judge Redfield, upon any other ground than that of necessity, in order to prevent murder going unpunished. What is said in the books about the situation of the declarant, he being virtually under the most solemn sanction to speak the truth, is far from presenting the true ground of the admission; for, if that were all that is requisite to render the declarations evidence, the apprehension of death should have the same effect, since it would place the declarant under the same restraint as if the apprehension were founded in fact. But both must concur, both the fact and the apprehension of being in extremis. And although it is not indispensable that there should be no other evidence of the same facts, the rule is no doubt based upon the presumption that in the majority of cases there will be no other equally satisfactory proof of the same facts. This presumption, and the consequent probability of the crime going unpunished, is unquestionably the chief ground of this exception in the law of evidence. And the great reason why it could not be received generally, as evidence in all cases where the facts involved should thereafter come in question, seems to be that it wants one of the most important and indispensable elements of testimony, that of an opportunity for cross-examination by the party against whom it is offered. See also Railing v. Com., 110 Pa. St. 103, where the objections to this evidence are well set forth.

are admissible as in other cases, irrespective of the fact that the declarant was under apprehension of death. 5 (f)

§ 157. Grounds of admission. The persons whose declarations are thus admitted are considered as standing in the same situation as if they were sworn; the danger of impending death being equivalent to the sanction of an oath. It follows, therefore, that where the declarant, if living, would have been incompetent to testify, by reason of infamy, or the like, his dying declarations are inadmissible.1 And, as an oath derives the value of its sanction from the religious sense of the party's accountability to his Maker, and the deep impression that he is soon to render to Him the final account, wherever it appears that the declarant was incapable of this religious sense of accountability, whether from infidelity, imbecility of mind, or tender age, the declarations are alike inadmissible. 2(a) On the other hand, as the testimony of an accomplice is admissible against his fellows, the dying declarations of a particeps criminis in an act which resulted in his own death are admissible against one indicted for the same murder. $^{3}(b)$

It was once thought that the dying declarations of the sub-188; and some others. It was once thought that the dying declaritions of the subscribing witness to a forged instrument were admissible to impeach it; but such evidence is now rejected, for the reasons already stated. Supra, § 126. See Stobart v. Dryden, 1 M. & W. 615, 627. In Regina v. Megson et al., 9 C. & P. 418, 420, the prisoners were tried on two indictments, — one for the murder of Ann Stewart, and the other for a rape upon her. In the former case, her declarations were rejected, because not made in extremis; and in the latter so much of them as showed that a dreadful outrage had been perpetrated upon her was received as part of the outrage itself, being, the perpetrated upon her was received as part of the outrage itself, being, in contemplation of law, contemporaneous; but so much as related to the identity of the perpetrators was rejected. (a) The learned author's statement of the rule of law, on this point want he

the rule of law on this point must be modified by the fact that the law of the competency of witnesses has been largely changed. The common-law rules excluding witnesses for infamy or infidelity are no longer in force in the majority of the Now by statute in most of them these are made objections to the credibility of the witness, before the jury, and not to his competency, and therefore, as the declarations in question are received where the declarant might have testified himself, the objection that he was infamous or an infidel is no longer a bar to re-ceiving his dying declarations, if other-wise admissible, but it may still be urged wise admissible, but it may still be lirged to the jury as affecting his credibility. People v. Chin Mook Sow, 51 Cal. 597; People v. Sanford, 43 Cal. 29; State v. Elliott, 45 Iowa, 486; State v. Ah Lee, 8 Oreg. 214; Goodall v. State, 1 Oreg. 333. But it is still a question how much religious helicity a progressive to rounder the religious belief is necessary to render the witness sufficiently aware of the nature of an oath to make it binding on him, and therefore to make his testimony legal. Pos', § 368, notes.

(b) State v. Thomason, 1 Jones (N. C.),

Law, 274; post, § 469.

§ 158. Must be made under a sense of impending death. It is essential to the admissibility of these declarations, and is a preliminary fact, to be proved by the party offering them in evidence, that they were made under a sense of impending death; but it is not necessary that they should be stated, at the time, to be so made. It is enough, if it satisfactorily appears, in any mode, that they were made under that sanction; whether it be directly proved by the express language of the declarant, or be inferred from his evident danger, or the opinions of the medical or other attendants, stated to him, or from his conduct, or other circumstances of the case, all of which are resorted to, in order to ascertain the state of the declarant's mind. The length of time which elapsed between the declaration and the death of the declarant furnishes no rule for the admission or rejection of the evidence; though, in the absence of better testimony, it may serve as one of the exponents of the deceased's belief, that his dissolution was or was not impending. It is the impression of almost immediate dissolution, and not the rapid succession of death, in point of fact, that renders the testimony admissible. 2 (a) Therefore, where it speedy death, the declaration has been admitted. Thus in Swisher's Case, 26 Gratt. 963, ten days, and in Com. v. Haney, 127 Mass. 455, four days, and in Kehoe v. Com., 85 Pa. St. 127, two days elapsed, and the declaration was admitted, while in Exparte Nettles, 58 Ala. 268, death ensued only six days after, but the declarant had not given up all hope, and the declarant was rejected. The language of the declarant must be incompatible with the existence of hope of recovery. So when he said, "Yes, who knows but I may get well" (Jackson v. Com., 19 Gratt. 656), or, "If I die, I hope to meet you in heaven; good-by" (State v. Medlicott, 9 Kan. 257), or even, "I have no hope at present" (R. v. Jenkins, L. R. 1 Cr. Cas. R. 187), the declaration was rejected. The words which show such lack of hope may be uttered after the declaration, if they are such as to show that at the time of the declaration hope was gone. State v. Spencer, 30 La. An. Pt. I. 362; State v. Peace, 1 Jones (N. C.), Law, 251. So his declaration is admissible if made while hope lingers, but it is afterwards ratified by him when hope is gone (Reg. v. Steele, 12 Cox, C. C. 168), or if made when the declarant is without hope, but afterwards state v. Tilghman, 11 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 513; Swisher v. Com., 26 Gratt. (Va.) 963. If the wounded man is encouraged by the doctor not to think his case is hopeless, and gives no indication that he dissents from this opinion, there is not sufficient evidence that he has given up hope, to admit his declarations. People v. Robinson, 2 Park. C. R. 235; Ex parte Nettles, 58 Ala. 268.

(b) Peak v. State, 50 N. J. L. 222; Digby v. People, 113 Ill. 125. The burden is on the State to show that the declarant had no hope or expectation of recovery. Peak v. State, supra. The fact that the declarant, having the opportunity had made no spiritual or temporal preparation for leaving this world may indicate an existing hope, but the matter is for the Court on all the circumstances. Digby v.

People, supra.
(a) Therefore, any statements which would have been objectionable as res inter alios, or hearsay, if the declarant had been on the stand, are inadmissible. So, where C, being poisoned, declared that the cup was handed to her by B, who said, when handing it to her, it was given her by A, the declaration was held inadmissible at the trial of A for poisoning C. Johnson v. State, 17 Ala. 618.

Opinions are, as stated in the text, in-admissible. Where A was shot at night through an opening in his house, and said, "B shot me, though I did not see him," this was held to be a statement of an opinthis was held to be a statement of an opinion of A's, and was rejected. State v. Williams, 67 N. C. 12. But it is not opinion to state that the killing was done "without provocation" (Wroe v. State, 20 Ohio St. 460); or, "for nothing" (Roberts v. State, 5 Tex. Ap. 141), and it is therefore admissible. And whenever an opinion would be admissible if given by the declarant on the stand, it is admissible in declaration as in regard to identity. So declaration, as in regard to identity. So declaration, as in regard to identity. So where A said at first he did not recognize his assailant, but did "as soon as he commenced his pranks," this was admitted. Brotherton v. People, 75 N. Y. 159. It is held that a dying declaration of the deceased, wherein he states that the attack on him was "without reason," or "without cause," or was "intentional," is a statement of fact and not of opinion, and is thorgen admissible. Bayle v. State is therefore admissible. Boyle v. State, evidence is not restricted to the side of the prosecutor; they are equally admissible in favor of the party charged with the death.1 It is not necessary, however, that the examination of the deceased should be conducted after the manner of interrogating a witness in the cause; though any departure from this mode may affect the validity and credibility of the declarations. Therefore, it is no objection to their admissibility that they were made in answer to leading questions, or obtained by pressing and earnest solicitation.² But whatever the statement may be, it must be complete in itself; for, if the declarations appear to have been intended by the dying man to be connected with and qualified by other statements, which he is prevented by any cause from making, they will not be received.3

It may be made in answer to questions reduced to writing, subscribed and sworn to by the declarant. Com. v. Haney, 127 Mass. 455; State v. Martin, 30 Wis. 216. The oath, however, gives it no additional force. Com. v. Haney, supra; State v. Frazier, 1 Houst. (Del.) C. Ca. 176. (a) In the majority of the United States, the rule in the text is adopted. It is considered good practice to have the witnesses examined by the Court out of hearing of the jury, thus avoiding any bias which might be produced in their minds by the statements, and which might be difficult to remove. This was done in Swisher v. Com. 26 Gratt. (Va.) 963. Cf. Bull's Case, 14 Id. 613. In Johnson v. State, 47 Ala. 9, the evidence was heard by the judge in the the evidence was neard by the judge in the presence of the jury, who were cautioned not to regard it in forming their verdict. So in People v. Smith, 104 N. Y. 498, it was held that the necessary preliminary examination might, in the discretion of the court, be conducted in the presence of the jury. During the trial of that preliminary issue the jury are merely in the of the jury. During the trial of that pre-liminary issue the jury are merely in the attitude of spectators. They have no con-cern with it, and should be so instructed by the court. The admissibility of the evidence, is generally conceded to be for the Court. Kehoe v. Com., 85 Pa. St. 127; State v. Frazier, 1 Houst. (Del.) C. Cas. 176. In Georgia, however, the ques-tion whether the statement was made untion whether the statement was made unwhole subject seems to have been left to the jury, under the direction of the court, as a mixed question of law and fact; but subsequently it has always been held a question exclusively for the consideration of the court, being placed on the same ground with the preliminary proof of documents, and of the competency of witnesses, which is always addressed to the court. 1 But, after the evidence is admitted, its credibility is entirely within the province of the jury, who, of course, are at liberty to weigh all the circumstances under which the declarations were made, including those already proved to the judge, and to give the testimony only such credit as, upon the whole, they may think it deserves.2

§ 161. Declarations in writing. If the statement of the deceased was committed to writing and signed by him, at the time it was made, it has been held essential that the writing should be produced, if existing; and that neither a copy, nor parol evidence of the declarations, could be admitted to supply the omission.³ (a) der fear of death is left to the jury on the whole evidence. Jackson v. State, 56 Ga. 235; Dumas v. State, 62 Ga. 58. Whether the judge will hear evidence in rebuttal is not clear. It has been held in Delaware that he would not; that the evidence was admissible when the State has made a prima facie case. State v. Cornish, 5 Harr. (Del.) 502; State v. Frazier, 1 Houst. (Del.) Cr. Cas. 176. When it is before the jury, however, no direction by the judge as to its force is allowed. State v. McCanon, 51 Mo. 160.

(a) This rule does not seem universally adopted. In State v. Patterson, 45 Vt. 308, the Court say the loss of the writing makes no difference in the admissibility of the evidence, and it is only a case of comparative reliability of statements in writing and oral ones from memory. In Com. v. Haney, 127 Mass. 455, the Court says: "They (i. e. the words of the declaration) may be testified to by any witness who heard and remembers them; the written to the court was a contemporary property. statement was a contemporary memorandum of what was said, and the witness had a right to refer to it for the purpose of refreshing his memory." But in State v. Frannberg, 40 Iowa, 555, the declaration was taken down by a justice of the peace in the form of a deposition. The declara-tion was not read over to the declarant,

But where the declarations had been repeated at different times, at one of which they were made under oath, and informally reduced to writing by a witness, and at the others they were not. it was held that the latter might be proved by parol, if the other could not be produced.2 If the deposition of the deceased has been taken under any of the statutes on that subject, and is inadmissible, as such, for want of compliance with some of the legal formalities, it seems it may still be treated as a dying declaration, if made in extremis.3

§ 161 a. Substance only required. It has been held that the substance of the declarations may be given in evidence, if the witness is not able to state the precise language used. And we have already seen that it is no objection to their admissibility, that they were obtained in answer to questions asked by the by-standers, nor that the questions themselves were leading questions; and that, if it appear that the declarations were intended by the dying person to be connected with and qualified by other statements, material to the completeness of the narrative, and that this was prevented by interruption or death, so that the narrative was left incomplete and partial, the evidence is inadmissible.2

§ 161 b. Declarations by signs. The testimony here spoken of may be given as well by signs as by words. Thus, where one, being at the point of death and conscious of her situation, but unable to articulate by reason of the wounds she had received, was asked to say whether the prisoner was the person who had inflicted the wounds, and, if so, to squeeze the hand of the interrogator, and she thereupon squeezed his hand, it was held that this evidence was admissible and proper for the consideration of the jury. 3 (a) nor signed by him, and was held in-admissible. In State v. Sullivan, 51 lowa, 142, it is said that if a writing is signed by the declarant or read to and assented to by him, it must be produced, but if it is a mere memorandum, made by witness, it need not be. (a) In his opinion Shaw, C. J., thus states the grounds of its admissibility:

"In regard to the matter before the court, and the admissibility of the signs by Mrs. Taylor, in reply to the questions put to her, it is to be observed that all words are signs; some are made by the mouth, and others by the hands. There was a civil

 $\S 162$. Appreciation of the weight of such declarations as evidence. Though these declarations, when deliberately made, under a solemn and religious sense of impending dissolution, and concerning circumstances, in respect of which the deceased was not likely to have been mistaken, are entitled to great weight, if precisely identified, yet it is always to be recollected that the accused has not the power of cross-examination, - a power quite as essential to the eliciting of all the truth, as the obligation of an oath can be; and that where the witness has not a deep and strong sense of accountability to his Maker, and an enlightened conscience, the passion of anger and feelings of revenge may, as they have not unfrequently been found to do, affect the truth and accuracy of his statements, especially as the salutary and restraining fear of punishment for perjury is in such cases withdrawn. And it is further to be considered, that the particulars of the violence to which the deceased has spoken were in general likely to have occurred under circumstances of confusion and surprise, calculated to prevent their being accurately observed, and leading both to mistakes as to the identity of persons, and to the omission of facts essentially important to the completeness and truth of the narrative.1

was brought against a railroad company, and the question was, whether a female who was run over survived the accident for any length of time. She was unable to speak, but was asked, if she had consciousness, to press their hands, and the testimony was admitted. case tried in Berkshire county, where a suit in such a manner as to render it probable that she understood, and was at the same time conscious that she could not recover, then it is admissible evidence. It is, therefore, the opinion of the court, that the circumstances under which the responses were given by Mrs. Taylor to the questions which were put her warrant that the evidence shall be admitted, but it is for the jury to judge of its credibility, and of the effect which shall be given to it."

CHAPTER X.

OF THE TESTIMONY OF WITNESSES SUBSEQUENTLY DEAD, ABSENT, OR DISQUALIFIED.

§ 163. Testimony of deceased witnesses. In the fifth class of exceptions to the rule rejecting hearsay evidence may be included the testimony of deceased witnesses, given in a former action, between the same parties; though this might, perhaps, with equal propriety, be considered under the rule itself. This testimony may have been given either orally in court, or in written depositions taken out of court. The latter will be more particularly considered hereafter, among the instruments of evidence. But at present we shall state some principles applicable to the testimony, however given. The chief reasons for the exclusion of hearsay evidence are the want of the sanction of an oath, and of any opportunity to cross-examine the witness. But where the testimony was given under oath, in a judicial proceeding, (a) in which the adverse litigant was a party (b) and where he had the power to cross-examine, and was legally called upon so to do, the great and ordinary test of truth being no longer wanting, the testimony so given is admitted, after the decease of the witness, in any subsequent suit between the same parties. 1 (c) It is also received, if the witness, though not dead, is out of the jurisdiction, or cannot be found after diligent search, or is insane, or sick, and unable to testify, or has been summoned, but appears

1 Bull. N. P. 239, 242; Mayor of Doncaster v. Day, 3 Taunt. 262; Glass v. Beach, 5 Vt. 172; Lightner v. Wike, 4 S. & R. 203.

(a) The proceedings must be before a Court which properly has jurisdiction of the case; but mere informalities in the proceedings, as a mistake in impanelling the jury, will not render the evidence in-admissible in a subsequent suit. State v. Johnson, 12 Nev. 121.

(b) Marshall v. Hancock, 80 Cal. 85. In many of the States where by statute, parties to a suit are permitted to testify in their own behalf, an exception is inserted in the statute which provides that when one party is dead, or otherwise unable to give his testimony, the testimony of the other is not admissible. In such cases, if the evidence given in a former trial, by the party who is deceased, is offered in the subsequent trial, the other party must also be allowed to testify. Strickland v. Hudson, 55 Miss. 235; McDonald v. Allen, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 446. See post, §§ 329, 330, et seq., and notes.

(c) Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 155; Ruch v. Rock Island, 97 U. S. 693; Costigan v. Lunt, 127 Mass. 355; Yale v. Comstock, 112 Id. 267; O'Brian v. Com., 6 Bush (Ky.), 563; Sullivan v. State, 6 Tex. App. 319. the party who is deceased, is offered in to have been kept away by the adverse party. 2(d) But testimony

² Bull. N. P. 239, 243; 1 Stark. Evid. 264; 12 Vin. Abr. 107, A. b. 31; Godb. 325; Rex v. Eriswell, 3 T. R. 707, 721, per Ld. Kenyon. As to the effect of interest subsequently acquired, see infra, § 167. Upon the question whether this kind of evidence is admissible in any other contingency except the death of the witness, there is some discrepancy among the American authorities. It has been refused where the witness had subsequently become interested, but was living and within reach (Chess v. Chess, 17 S. & R. 409; Irwin v. Reed, 4 Yeates, 512); where he was not to be found within the jurisdiction, but was reported to have gone to an adjoining State (Wilbur v. Selden, 6 Cowen, 162); where, since the former trial, he had become incompetent by being convicted of an infamous crime (LeBaron v. Crombie, 14 Mass. 234); where, though present, he had forgotten the facts to which he had formerly testified (Drayton v. Wells, 1 Nott & McCord, 409); and where he was proved to have left the State, after v. Wells, 1 Nott & McCord, 409); and where he was proved to have left the State, after being summoned to attend at the trial. Finn's Case, 5 Rand. 701. In this last case it was held, that this sort of testimony was not admissible in any criminal case whatever. In the cases of Le Baron v. Crombic, Wilbur v. Selden, and also in Crary v. Sprague, 12 Wend. 41, it was said that such testimony was not admissible in any case, except where the witness was shown to be dead; but this point was not in either of those cases directly in judgment; and in some of them it does not appear to have been fully considered. On the other hand, in Drayton v. Wells, it was held by Cheves, J., to be admissible in four cases: 1st, where the witness is dead; 2d, insane; 3d, beyond the seas; and 4th, where he has been kept away by contrivance of the other party. See also Moore v. Pearson, 6 Watts & Serg. 51. In Magill v. Kauffman, 4 S. & R. 317, and in Carpenter v. Groff, 5 S. & R. 162, it was admitted on proof that the witness had removed from Pennsylvania to Obio; it was also admitted, where the witness was unable to testify, by reason of sickness, in Miller v. Russell, 7 Martin, N. s. 266; and even where he, being a sheriff, was absent on official duty. Noble v. Martin, 7 Martin N. s., 282. But if it appears that the witness was not fully examined at the former trial, his testimony cannot be given in evidence. Noble v. McClintock, 6 Watts & Serg. 58. If the witness is gone, no one knows whither, and his place of abode cannot be ascertained by diligent inquiry, the case can hardly be distinguished in principle from that of his death; and it would seem that his former testimony ought to be admitted. If he is merely out of the jurisdiction, but the place is known, and his testimony can be taken under a commission, it is a proper case for the judge to decide, in his discretion, and upon all the circumstances, whether the purposes of justice will be best served by issuing such commission, or by admitting the proof of what he formerly testified.

(d) Hudson v. Roos, 76 Mich. 180; Howard v. Patrick, 38 Mich. 795; Whitaker v. Marsh, 62 N. H. 478; Young v. Dearborn, 22 N. H. 372; Rothrock v. Gallaher, 91 Pa. St. 108; Marler v. State, 67 Ala. 55. In England, such testimony is admissible only in civil cases, when the witness is out of the jurisdiction. Stephen, Dig. Evid. art. 32. In the United States the rule varies. In Sullivan v. State, 6 Tex. App. 319, it was said that if the witness could not be found, after diligent inquiry, such testimony was admissible, but the bare fact that he was out of the State was not enough. In Slusser v. Burlington, 47 lowa, 300, the same ruling was in effect made. In Shackelford v. State, 33 Ark. 539, where it was proved that such diligent inquiry had been made, the evidence was admitted. Cf. Hurley v. State, 29 Id. 17. In California, the mere fact that the witness is out of the State, admits such evidence. People v. Devine, 46 Cal.; Meyer v. Roth, 51 Id. 552. So in Pennsylvania (Magill v. Kauffman, 4 S.

& R. 319); and Ohio (Summons v. State, 5 Ohio St. 325); and Michigan. Howard v. Patrick, 38 Mich. 795. But not so in Kentucky (Collins v. Com., 12 Bush, 271); nor Nevada, even in a civil suit (Gerhauser v. North British, &c. Ins. Co., 7 Nev. 175); nor Virginia. Brogy v. Com., 10 Gratt. 722.

It is also law, in most if not all of the United States, that the testimony of a witness given at a former trial is admissible if he is kept away by the other party. A recent case (Reynolds v. United States) was tried first in the Territorial Court of Utah, and it was there ruled that if the witness is concealed by the defendant in order to avoid the service of a subpœna, it was competent for the Court to allow evidence of her testimony in a former trial of the same case to go to the jury; 1 Utah Terr. 319. The case was carried up to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the ruling there affirmed. Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 155. To the same effect is Cook v. Stout, 47 Ill. 530.

thus offered is open to all the objections which might be taken if the witness were personally present.³ And if the witness gave a written deposition in the cause, but afterwards testified orally in court, parol evidence may be given of what he testified viva voce, notwithstanding the existence of the deposition. 4 (e)

§ 164. Restrictions. The admissibility of this evidence seems to turn rather on the right to cross-examine than upon the precise nominal identity of all the parties. Therefore, where the witness testified in a suit, in which A and several others were plaintiffs, against B alone, his testimony was held admissible, after his death, in a subsequent suit, relating to the same matter, brought by B against A alone. 1 (a) And, though the two trials were not between the parties, yet if the second trial is between those who represent the parties to the first, by privity in blood, in law, or in estate, the evidence is admissible. (b) And if, in a dispute respecting lands, any fact comes directly in issue, the testimony given to that fact is admissible to prove the same point or fact in another action between the same parties or their privies. though the last suit be for other lands.² The principle on which, chiefly, this evidence is admitted, namely, the right of cross-examination, requires that its admission be carefully restricted to the extent of that right; and that where the witness

As to illness or insanity, if it is of such a nature as to lead to a belief that the witness will soon be able to testify, the judge may in his discretion postpone the trial.

incidentally stated matter, as to which the party was not permitted by the law of trials to cross-examine him, his statement as to that matter ought not afterwards to be received in evidence against such party. Where, therefore, the point in issue in both actions was not the same, the issue in the former action having been upon a common or free fishery, and, in the latter, it being upon a several fishery, evidence of what a witness, since deceased, swore upon the former trial, was held inadmissible. 3(c)

Under the statutes making parties to a suit competent witnesses, it is believed that the evidence given by a party who has since died would be admissible under the same rules as that of an ordinary witness in cases where the suit comes to a Miss. 235. Where the complainant in an equity suit, after being examined as witness, died before the hearing, and the suit was revived by his executors, it was held that his deposition might be read at the hearing. McDonald v. Alden, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 446.

(a) The rule is now well established in Massachusetts, as the author states it in note 2. Corey v. Janes, 15 Gray, 543; Woods v. Keyes, 14 Allen, 236. In the recent case of Costigan v. Lunt, 127 Mass. 354, where a witness, produced to prove the testimony of a deceased witness at a former trial of the case, having taken notes of such parts of the testimony as he considered material, said that, on refreshing his memory by his notes, he could give the substance of the words of the testimony, though he could not give the testimony word for word, the court held that this was admissible. With the exception of Massachusetts, the rule, as stated by the author in the text, obtains generally, and the witness may state the substance and the witness may state the substance of what was sworn at the former trial. Ruch v. Rock Island, 97 U. S. 693; United States v. Macomb, 5 McLean, C. C. 286 (which contains a very good discussion of the subject); Martin v. Cope, 3 Abb. (N. Y.) App. Dec. 182; Van Buren v. Cockburn, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 118; Brown v. Com., 73 Pa. St. 321; Jones v. Wood, 16 Pa. St. 25; Johnson v. Powers, 40 Vt. 611: Williams v. Willard. 23 Vt. 369: 16 Pa. St. 25; Johnson v. Stevens, 13 Kan. 447; Wade v. State, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 80.

But this strictness is not now insisted upon, in proof of the crime

Ephraims v. Murdoch, 7 Blackf. 10. The same rule is applied to the proof of dying declarations. Montgomery v. Ohio, 11 Ohio, 421. In New Jersey, it has been held. that if a witness testifies that he has a distinct recollection, independent of his notes, of the fact that the deceased was sworn as a witness at the former trial, of what he was produced to prove, and of the substance of what he then stated, he may rely on his notes for the language, if he believes them to be correct. Sloan v. Somers, 1 Spencer, 66. In Massachusetts, in Commonwealth v. Richard, 18 Pick. 434, the witnesses did not state the precise words used by the deceased witness, but only the substance of them, from recollection, aided by notes taken at the time; and one of the witnesses testified that he was confident that he stated substantives and verbs correctly, but was not certain as to the prepositions and conjunctions. Yet the court held this insufficient, and required that the testimony of the deceased witness be stated in his own language, ipsissimis verbis. The point was afterwards raised in Warren v. Nichols, 6 Met. 261; where the witness stated that he could give the substance of the testimony of the deceased witness, but not the precise language; and the court held it insufficient; Hubbard, J., dissentiente. The rule, however, as laid down by the court in the latter case, seems to recognize a distinction between giving the substance of the deceased witness's testimony, and the substance of the language; and to require only that his language be stated substantially, and in all material particulars, and not ipsissimis verbis. The learned chief justice stated the doctrine as follows: "The rule upon which evidence may be given on what a deceased witness testified on a former trial between the same parties, in a case where the same question was in issue, seems now well established in this commonwealth by authorities. It was fully considered in the case of Commonwealth v. Richards, 18 Pick. 434. The principle on which this rule rests was accurately stated, the cases in support of it were referred to, and with the decision of which we see no cause to be dissatisfied. The general rule is, that one person cannot be heard to testify as to what another person has declared, in relation to a fact within his knowledge, and bearing upon the issue. It is the familiar rule which excludes hearsay. The reasons are obvious, and they are two: first, because the averment of fact does not come to the jury sanctioned by the oath of the party on whose knowledge it is supposed to rest; and secondly, because the party upon whose interests it is brought to bear has no opportunity to cross-examine him on whose supposed knowledge and veracity the truth of the fact depends. Now the rule, which admits evidence of what another said on a former trial, must effectually exclude both of these reasons. It must have been testimony; that is, the affirmation of some matter of fact under oath; it must have been in a suit between the same parties in interest, so as to make it sure that the party, against whom it is now offered, had an opportunity to cross-examine; and it must have been upon the same subject-matter, to show that his attention was drawn to points now deemed important. It must be the same testimony which the former witness gave, because it comes to the jury under the sanction of his oath, and the jury are to weigh the testimony and judge of it, as he gave it. The witness, therefore, must be able to state the language in which the testimony was given, substantially and in all material particulars, because that is the vehicle by which the testimony of the witness is transmitted, of which the jury are to judge. If it were otherwise, the statement of the witness, which is offered, would not be of the testimony of the former witness; that is, of the ideas conveyed by the former witness, in the language in which he embodied them; but it would be a statement of the present witness's understanding and comprehension of those ideas, expressed in language of his own. Those ideas may have been misunderstood, modified, perverted, or colored, by passing through the mind of the witness, by his knowledge or ignorance of the subject, or the language in which the testimony was given, or by his own prejudices, predilections, or habits of thought or reasoning. To illustrate this distinction, as we understand it to be fixed by the cases: if a witness, remarkable for his knowledge of law, and his intelligence on all other subjects, of great quickness of apprestance and power of discrimination, should declare that he could give the substance and effect of a former witness's testimony, but could not recollect his language, we suppose he would be excluded by the rule. But if one of those remarkable men should happen to have been present, of great stolidity of mind upon most subjects, but of cortracedium teachings to have been present, of great stolidity of mind upon most subjects, but of extraordinary tenacity of memory for language, and who would say that he recollected and could repeat all the words uttered by the witness; although it should be very manifest that he himself did not understand them, yet his testimony of perjury; ² and it has been well remarked, that to insist upon it in other eases goes in effect to exclude this sort of evidence altogether, or to admit it only where, in most cases, the particularity and minuteness of the witness's narrative, and the exactness with which he undertakes to repeat every word of the deceased's testimony, ought to excite just doubts of his own honesty, and of the truth of his evidence. It seems, therefore, to be generally considered sufficient, if the witness is able to state the substance of what was sworn on the former trial.³ But he must state, in substance, the whole of what was said on the particular subject which he is called to prove. If he can state only what was said on that subject by the deceased, on his examination in chief, without also giving the substance of what he said upon it in his cross-examination, it is inadmissible.⁴ (b)

§ 166. Mode of proof. What the deceased witness testified may be proved by any person who will swear from his own memory; (a) or by notes taken by any person who will swear to their

would be admissible. The witness called to prove former testimony must be able to satisfy one other condition; namely, that he is able to state all that the witness testified on the former trial, as well upon the direct as the cross-examination. The reason is obvious. One part of his statement may be qualified, softened, or colored by another. And it would be of no avail to the party against whom the witness is called to state the testimony of the former witness, that he has had the right and opportunity to cross-examine that former witness, with a view of diminishing the weight or impairing the force of that testimony against him, if the whole and entire result of that cross-examination does not accompany the testimony. It may, perhaps, be said, that, with these restrictions, the rule is of little value. It is no doubt true, that, in most cases of complicated and extended testimony, the loss of evidence, by the decease of a witness, cannot be avoided. But the same result follows, in most cases, from the decease of a witness whose testimony has not been preserved in some of the modes provided by law. But there are some cases in which the rule can be usefully applied, as in case of testimony embraced in a few words, — such as proof of demand or notice, on notes or bills, — cases in which large amounts are often involved. If it can be used in a few cases, consistently with the true and sound principles of the law of evidence, there is no reason for rejecting it altogether. At the same time, care should be taken so to apply and restrain it, that it may not, under a plea of necessity, and in order to avoid hard cases, be so used as to violate those principles. It is to be recollected, that it is an exception to the general rule of evidence, supposed to be extremely important and necessary; and unless a case is brought fully within the reasons of such exceptions, the general rule must prevail. See 6 Met. 264-266. See also Marsh v. Jones, 21 Vt. 378.

accuracy; 1 (h) or, perhaps, from the necessity of the case, by the judge's own notes, where both actions are tried before the same judge; for, in such case, it seems the judge, from his position, as well as from other considerations, cannot be a witness.² But, except in this case of necessity, if it be admitted as such, the better opinion is, that the judge's notes are not legal evidence of what a witness testified before him; for they are no part of the record, nor is it his official duty to take them, nor have they the sanction of his oath to their accuracy or completeness. 3 (c)

Where a party, on a new trial being granted, procured, at great expense, copies of a short-hand writer's notes of the evidence given at the former trial, for the amount of which he claimed allowance in the final taxation of costs; the claim was disallowed, except for so much as would have been the expense of waiting on the judge, or his clerk, for a copy of his notes; on the ground that the latter would have sufficed. or his clerk, for a copy of his notes; on the ground that the latter would have sufficed. Crease v. Barrett, 1 Tyrw. & Grang. 112. But this decision is not conceived to affect the question, whether the judge's notes would have been admissible before another judge, if objected to. In Regina v. Bird, 5 Cox, C. C. 11, 2 Eng. Law & Eq. 444, the notes of the judge, before whom a former indictment had been tried, were admitted without objection, for the purpose of showing what beatings were proved at that trial, in order to support the plea of autrefois acquit. In New Brunswick, a judge's notes have been held admissible, though objected to, on the ground that they were taken under the sanction of an oath, and that such has been the practice. Doe v. Murray, I Allen, N. B. 216. But in a recent case in England, on a trial for perjury, the notes of the judge, before whom the false evidence was given, being offered in proof of that part of the case, Talfourd, J., refused to admit them; observing, that "a judge's notes stood in no other position than anybody else's notes. They could only be used to refresh the memory of the party taking them. It was no doubt unusual to produce the judge as a witness, and would be highly inconvenient to do so; but that did not make his notes evidence." Regina v. Child, 5 Cox, C. C. 197, 203.

in chancery, when a new trial is ordered of an issue sent out of chancery to a court of common law, and it is suggested that some of the witnesses in the former trial are of advanced age, an order may be made, that, in the event of their death or inability to attend, their testimony may be read from the judge's notes.4

§ 167. When interest is subsequently acquired. The effect of an interest subsequently acquired (a) by the witness, as laying a foundation for the admission of proof of his former testimony, remains to be considered. It is in general true, that if a person who has knowledge of any fact, but is under no obligation to become a witness to testify to it, should afterwards become interested in the subject-matter in which that fact is involved, and his interest should be on the side of the party calling him, he would not be a competent witness until the interest is removed. If it is releasable by the party, he must release it. If not, the objection remains: for neither is the witness nor a third person compellable to give a release; though the witness may be compelled to receive one. And the rule is the same in regard to a subscribing witness, if his interest was created by the act of the party calling Thus, if the charterer of a ship should afterwards communicate to the subscribing witness of the charter-party an interest in the adventure, he cannot call the witness to prove the execution of the charter-party: nor will proof of his handwriting be received; for it was the party's own act to destroy the evidence. It is, however, laid down, that a witness cannot, by the subsequent voluntary creation of an interest, without the concurrence or assent of the party, deprive him of the benefit of his testimony.² But this rule admits of a qualification, turning upon the manner in which the interest was acquired. If it were acquired wantonly, as by a wager, or fraudulently, for the purpose of taking off his testimony, of which the participation of the adverse party would generally be proof, it would not disqualify him.

⁽a) Under the statutes which exist now It is unnecessary, therefore, to consider the in most of the United States, the fact that rules here laid down. See post, § 386,

But "the pendency of a suit cannot prevent third persons from transacting business, bona fide, with one of the parties; and, if an interest in the event of the suit is thereby acquired, the common consequence of law must follow,—that the person so interested cannot be examined as a witness for that party, from whose success he will necessarily derive an advantage." 3 Therefore, where, in an action against one of several underwriters on a policy of insurance, it appeared that a subsequent underwriter had paid, upon the plaintiff's promise to refund the money, if the defendant in the suit should prevail; it was held, that he was not a competent witness for the defendant to prove a fraudulent concealment of facts by the plaintiff, it being merely a payment, by anticipation, of his own debt, in good faith, upon a reasonable condition of repayment.4 And as the interest which one party acquires in the testimony of another is liable to the contingency of being defeated by a subsequent interest of the witness in the subject-matter, created bona fide, in the usual and lawful course of business, the same principle would seem to apply to an interest arising by operation of law, upon the happening of an uncertain event, such as the death of an ancestor, or the like. But though the interest which a party thus acquires in the testimony of another is liable to be affected by the ordinary course of human affairs, and of natural events, the witness being under no obligation, on that account, either to change the course of his business, or to abstain from any ordinary and lawful act or employment; yet it is a right of which neither the witness nor any other person can by voluntary act and design deprive him. Wherever, therefore, the subsequent interest of the witness has been created either wantonly, or in bad faith, it does not exclude him; and doubtless the participation of the adverse party in the

with bad faith, on the part of the assured, who objected to his admission. The distinction taken by Lord Ellenborough was before the Supreme Court of the United States in Winship v. Bank of the United States, 5 Peters, 529, 541, 542, 545, 546, 552, but no decision was had upon the question, the court being equally divided. But the same doctrine was afterwards discussed and recognized, as "founded on the plainest reasons," in Eastman v. Winship, 14 Pick. 44; 10 Wend. 162, 164, acc.

⁴ Forrester v. Pigou, 3 Campb. 380; s. c. 1 M. & S. 9; Phelps v. Riley, 3 Conn. 266. In Burgess v. Lane, 3 Greenl. 165, the witness had voluntarily entered into an agreement with the defendant, against whom he had an action pending in another court, that that action should abide the event of the other, in which he was now called as a witness for the plaintiff; and the court held, that it did not lie with the defendant, who was party to that agreement, to object to his admissibility. But it is observable, that was party to that agreement, to object to his admissibility. But it is observable, that that agreement was not made in discharge of any real or supposed obligation, as in Forrester v. Pigou; but was on a new subject, was uncalled for, and purely voluntary; and therefore subjected the adverse party to the imputation of bad faith in making it.

creation of such interest would, if not explained by other circumstances, be very strong prima facie evidence of bad faith; as an act of the witness, uncalled for, and out of the ordinary course of business would be regarded as wanton.⁵

§ 168. Previous deposition. If, in cases of disqualifying interest, the witness has previously given a deposition in the cause, the deposition may be read in chancery, as if he were since deceased, or insane, or otherwise incapacitated. It may also be read in the trial, at law, of an issue out of chancery. In other trials at law, no express authority has been found for reading the deposition; and it has been said, that the course of practice is otherwise; but no reason is given, and the analogies of the law are altogether in favor of admitting the evidence. And, as it is hardly possible to conceive a reason for the admission of prior testimony given in one form which does not apply to the same testimony given in any other form, it would seem clearly to result that where the witness is subsequently rendered incompetent by interest, lawfully acquired, in good faith, evidence may be given of what he formerly testified orally, in the same manner as if he were dead; and the same principle will lead us farther to conclude, that in all eases where the party has, without his own fault or concurrence, irrecoverably lost the power of producing the witness again, whether from physical or legal causes, he may offer the secondary evidence of what he testified in the former trial. If the lips of the witness are sealed, it can make no difference in principle, whether it be by the finger of death, or the finger of the law. The interest of the witness, however, is no excuse for not producing him in court; for perhaps the adverse party will waive any objection on that account. It is only when the objection is taken and allowed, that a case is made for the introduction of secondary evidence.

OF ADMISSIONS.

§ 169. Admissions and confessions. Under the head of exception to the rule rejecting hearsay evidence, it has been usual to treat of admissions and confessions by the party, considering them as declarations against his interest, and therefore probably true. But in regard to many admissions, and especially those implied from conduct and assumed character, it cannot be supposed that the party, at the time of the principal declaration or act done, believed himself to be speaking or acting against his own interest; but often the contrary. (a) Such evidence seems, therefore, more properly admissible as a substitute for the ordinary and legal proof, either in virtue of the direct consent and waiver of the party, as in the case of explicit and solemn admissions; or on grounds of public policy and convenience, as in the case of those implied from assumed character, acquiescence, or conduct.1 It is in this light that confessions and admissions are regarded by the Roman law, as is stated by Mascardus. "Illud igitur in primis, ut hine potissimum exordiar, non est ignorandum, quod etsi confessioni inter probationum species locum in præsentia tribuerimus; cuncti tamen fere Dd. unanimes sunt arbitrati, ipsam potius esse ab onere probandi relevationem quam proprie probationem."2 Many admissions, however, being made by third

² Mascard. De Probat. vol. i. Quæst, 7, n. 1, 10, 11; Menochius, De Præsump. lib. 1, Quæs. 62, n. 6; Alciatus, De Præsump. pars 2, n. 4. The Roman law distinguishes, with great clearness and precision, between confessions extra judicium, and confessions in judicio; treating the former as of very little and often of no weight unless corroborated, and the latter as generally, if not always, conclusive, even to the overthrow of the præsumptio juris et de jurc; thus constituting an exception to the conclusiveness of this class of presumptions. But to give a confession this effect, certain things are essential, which Mascardus eites out of Tancred:—

"Major, spontè, sciens, contra se, ubi jus fit: Nec natura, favor, lis jusve repugnet, et hostis."

Mascard. ubi sup., n. 15. Vid. Dig. lib. 42, tit. 2, de Confessis; Cod. lib. 7, tit. 59; Van Leeuwen's Comm., book v. c. 21.

(a) The question whether the admission is against the interest of the party must be decided by the Court, as all other preliminary questions of the admissibility of evidence, and their decision must depend upon the evidence in each case. Thus, an admission of a marriage, if it is made under circumstances showing it to be against interest, is evidence of the marriage against the person making it. Greenawalt v. McEnelley, 85 Pa. St. 352; Forney v. Hallacher, 8 S. & R. 159.

persons, are receivable on mixed grounds; partly as belonging to the res yestæ, partly as made against the interest of the person making them, and partly because of some privity with him against whom they are offered in evidence. The whole subject, therefore, properly falls under consideration in this connection.

- § 170. Distinguished. In our law, the term admission is usually applied to civil transactions, and to those matters of fact, in criminal cases, which do not involve criminal intent; the term confession being generally restricted to acknowledgments of guilt. shall therefore treat them separately, beginning with admissions. The rules of evidence are in both cases the same. in the trial of Lord Melville, charged, among other things, with criminal misapplication of moneys, received from the exchequer, the admission of his agent and authorized receiver was held sufficient proof of the fact of his receiving the public money; but not admissible to establish the charge of any criminal misapplication of it. The law was thus stated by Lord Chancellor Erskine: "This first step in the proof" (namely, the receipt of the money) "must advance by evidence applicable alike to civil as to criminal cases; for a fact must be established by the same evidence, whether it is to be followed by a criminal or civil consequence; but it is a totally different question, in the consideration of criminal as distinguished from civil justice, how the noble person now on trial may be affected by the fact when so established. The receipt by the paymaster would in itself involve him civilly, but could by no possibility convict him of a crime." 3
- § 171. Parties to the record and privies. We shall first consider the person whose admissions may be received. And here the general doctrine is, that the declarations of a party to the record, or of one identified in interest with him, are, as against such party, admissible in evidence. (a) If they proceed from a stran-

If the pleadings are signed and filed by the attorney, without apparently being brought to the party's attention, it is generally held that such pleadings are not evidence in another case against the party. the parties, which are not put in issue by the pleadings, and which there was not, therefore, any opportunity of explaining or disproving. Copland v. Toulmin, 7 Clark & Fin. 350, 373; Austin v. Chamber, 6 Clark & Fin. 1; Attwood v. Small, Id. 234. But in the United States this rule has not been adopted; and it is deemed sufficient if the proposition to be established is stated in the bill, without stating the particular kind of evidence by which it is to be proved. See Smith v. Burnham, 2 Smm. 612; Brandon v. Cabiness, 10 Ala. 156; Story, Equity Plead. 265 a, and n. (1), where this subject is fully discussed. And in England, the rule has recently been qualified, so far as to admit a written admission by the defendant of his liability to the plaintiff, in the matter of the pending suit. Malcolm v. Scott, 3 Hare, 63; McMahon v. Burchell, 1 Coop. Cas. temp. Cottenham, 475; 7 Law Rev. 209. See the cases collected by Mr. Cooper in his note appended to that case. It seems, that pleadings, whether in equity or at common law, are not to be treated as positive allegations of the truth of the facts therein stated, for all purposes; but only as statements of the case of the party, to be admitted or denied by the opposite side, and, if denied, to be proved, and ultimately to be submitted to judicial decision. Boileau v. Rutlin, 2 Exch. 665.

nature, not containing specific allegations of fact, and which are signed by the attorney and are not shown to have been specially brought to the attention of the party in whose behalf they were made, are not receivable in other cases as admissions of the party for whom they are filed (Delaware County v. Diebold Safe Co., 133 U. S. 487; Combs v. Hodge, 21 How. 397; Pope v. Allis, 115 U. S. 363; Dennie v. Williams, supra); the presumption being that the pleading is not known to the party in whose behalf it was filed; but if the pleadings are shown to have been drawn by the express direction of the party in whose behalf they are filed, and any statements of fact therein contained to have been inserted by his direction or with his assent, the pleadings are admissions of the facts therein contained as against such a party in subsequent cases. Wilkins v. Stidger, 22 Cal. 239; Nichols v. Jones, 32 Mo. App. 664; Murphy v. St. Louis Type Foundry, 29 Mo. App. 545; and see cases supra. There are dicta in several States that a pleading, even though signed by the attorney, is presumed to be known to the party in whose behalf it is made, and is to be regarded as an admission of the facts therein stated. Coward v. Clauton, 79 Cal. 29; Rich v. Minneapolis, 40 Minn. 84; Vogel v. Osborne, 32 Minn. 167; Murphy v. St. Louis Type Foundry, supra; Bailey v. O'Bannon, 28 Mo. App. 46. But this is not the better rule. The true rule is that formal allega-tions are presumed to be made by the attorney on general instructions and without the personal knowledge of the client, but particular and specific allegations of matters of action or defence, which cannot be presumed to have been made under the general authority of the attorney, but under specific instructions to him from the client, are competent evidence against the client. Dennie v. Williams, supra; Johnson v. Russell, 144 Mass. 409. If the pleadings in question were sworn to by the party in whose behalf they were filed, this fact is evidence that they were drawn with his knowledge of the facts therein stated and consequently admissible against him in other cases. Cook v. Barr, 44 N. Y. 156; Murphy v. St. Louis Type Foundry, supra. Similarly, an answer of the trustee in a trustee suit may be admissible against the trustee filing it in a subsequent suit. Eaton v. Teleg. Co., 68 Me. 63. So, answers of a party to interrogatories filed in the ordinary mode of practice are competent evidence against practice are competent evidence against the party making the answers in a subsequent suit. Williams v. Cheney, 3 Gray (Mass.), 215; Judd v. Gibbs, 3 Gray (Mass.), 539. See, also, Church v. Shelton, 2 Curtis C. C. 271; State v. Littlefield, 3 R. I. 124. The fact that the pleadings offered in evidence were made in a suit in another State does not affant in a suit in another State does not affect their admissibility. Buzard v. McAnulty, 77 Tex. 445. Admissions of fact made in a law brief for the purposes of arguing the case before the law court, are not under ordinary circumstances admissions of those facts which bind the attorney or party making them, though if the statements therein appear to be made from directions of the client and from his personal knowledge they may have the effect of admissions. Wood v. Graves, 144 Mass. 365.

A similar question arises as to whether pleadings are evidence in the suit in which they are filed. Generally they are not. This is sometimes enacted by statute and sometimes is arrived at by decisions of court, pleadings being regarded, so far as the suits in which they are filed are concerned, as mere formulas for the sible, unless upon some of the other grounds already considered.2 Thus, the admissions of a payee of a negotiable promissory note, not overdue when negotiated, cannot be received in an action by the indorsee against the maker, to impeach the consideration, there being no identity of interest between him and the plaintiff.³

§ 172. Parties jointly interested. This general rule, admitting the declarations of a party to the record in evidence, applies to all cases where the party has any interest in the suit, whether others are joint parties on the same side with him or not, and howsoever the interest may appear, and whatever may be its relative amount. 1 But where the party sues alone, and has no interest in the matter, his name being used, of necessity, by one to whom he has assigned all his interest in the subject of the suit, though it is agreed that he cannot be permitted, by his acts or admissions, to disparage the title of his innocent assignee or vendee, yet the books are not so clearly agreed in the mode of restraining him. That chancery will always protect the assignee, either by injunction or otherwise, is very certain; and formerly this was the course uniformly pursued; the admissions of a party to the record, at common law, being received against him in all solution of the case, and to limit and make definite the issues to be tried by the jury. Thus, in Massachusetts, they are not evidence in the suit in which they are filed, but allegations whereby the party making them is bound. Mass. Pub. St. c. 167, § 75. Any attempt, therefore, to comment upon them in argument, as for instance, to compare an original declaration, or answer, with an amended form of the same, so as to draw an inference to the discredit of the party filing them, is the discretic of the party lining them, is inadmissible. Phillips v. Smith, 110 Mass. 61; Taft v. Fiske, 140 Mass. 250. In Missouri, however, the rule is that pleadings are evidence against the party making them in the suit in which they are filed as well as in other suits. Ander- case. White v. Merrill, 82 Cal. 14.

² Supra, §§ 128, 141, 147, 156. There must be some evidence of the identity of the person whose admissions are offered in evidence with the party in question. Thus, where the witness asked for the defendant by name, at his lodgings, and a person came to the door professing to be the one asked for; the witness being unacquainted with the defendant's person then and since; this was held sufficient to admit the conversation which then was had between the witness and this person, as being, prima facie, the language of the defendant. to the goods, occasioned by his negligence; and without supposing some interest to remain in the consignor, the action could not be maintained. It was on this ground that Lawrence, J., placed the decision. See also Norden v. Williamson, 1 Taunt. 378; Mandeville v. Welch, 5 Wheat. 283, 236; Dan et al. v. Brown, 4 Cowen, 483, 492.

son v. McPike, 86 Mo. 301; Murphy v. St. Louis Type Foundry, supra. See also post, § 186, notes.

A verdict in a case may become an admission of the facts upon which the case was founded, and admissible against the party against whom the verdict was rendered in another case, by the subsequent declarations of the party in favor of the justice of the verdict. Thus, where on a second trial of a case, the plaintiff offered evidence that on the morning after the verdict in the first trial, one of the defendants admitted to witness that the verdict was a just and righteous one; this admission was held to be evidence on the second trial of the justice of the plaintiff's cases. But, in later times, the interests of an assignee, suing in the name of his assignor, have also, to a considerable extent, been protected, in the courts of common law, against the effect of any acts or admissions of the latter to his prejudice. A familiar example of this sort is that of a receipt in full, given by the assignor, being nominal plaintiff, to the debtor, after the assignment; which the assignee is permitted to impeach and avoid, in

§ 173. Nominal and real parties. But a distinction has been taken between such admissions as these which are given in evidence to the jury under the general issue, and are therefore open to explanation and controlling proof, and those in more solemn form, such as releases which are specially pleaded and operate by way of estoppel; in which latter cases it has been held, that, if the release of the nominal plaintiff is pleaded in bar, the courts of law, sitting in bank, will administer equitable relief, by setting aside the plea, on motion; but that, if issue is taken on the matter pleaded, such act or admission of the nominal plaintiff must be allowed its effect at law to the same extent as if he were the real plaintiff in the suit.1 The American courts, however, do not recognize this distinction; but, where a release from the nominal plaintiff is pleaded in bar, a prior assignment of the cause of action, with notice thereof to the defendant, and an averment that the suit is prosecuted by the assignee for his own benefit, is held a good replication.2 Nor is the nominal plaintiff permitted by the entry of a retraxit, or in any other manner, injuriously to affect the rights of his assignee in a suit at law.3

§ 174. Parties jointly interested. Though the admissions of a party to the record are generally receivable in evidence against him, yet, where there are several parties on the same side, the admissions of one are not admitted to affect the others, who may happen to be joined with him, unless there is some joint interest of privity in design between them; 1(a) although the admissions may, in proper cases, be received against the person who made them. Thus, in an action against joint makers of a note, if one suffers judgment by default, his signature must still be proved against the other.² And even where there is a joint interest, a release, executed by one of several plaintiffs, will, in a clear case of fraud, be set aside in a court of law.3 But in the absence of fraud, if the parties have a joint interest in the matter in suit. whether as plaintiffs or defendants, an admission made by one is, in general, evidence against all. 4(b) They stand to each other, the debt, and invalidated a payment to any other person than the assignee, or a release from any other person than him. Id. 110, 554; Code Napoléon, liv. 3, tit. 6; De la Vente, c. 8, § 1690. The court of chancery, imitating, in its usual spirit, the civil law in this particular, disregarded the rigid strictness of the common law, and protected the rights of the assignee of choses in action. This liberality was at last adopted by the courts of common law, who now consider an assignment of a chose in action as substantially valid, only preserving, in certain cases, the form of an action commenced in the name of the assignor, the beneficial interest and control of the suit being, however, conname of the assignor, the benencial interest and control of the suit being, however, considered as completely vested in the assignee, as procurator in rem summ. But where the nominal plaintiff was constituted, by the party in interest, his agent for negotiating the contract, and it is expressly made with him alone, he is treated in an action more such contract in all represents as a party to the server, and est, his agent for negotiating the contract, and it is expressly made with him alone, he is treated, in an action upon such contract, in all respects as a party to the cause; and any defence against him is a defence, in that action, against the cestui que trust, suing in his name. Therefore, where a broker, in whose name a policy of insurance under seal was effected, brought an action of covenant thereon, to which payment was pleaded; it was held that payment of the amount of loss to the broker, by allowing him credit in account for that sum, against a balance for premiums due from him to the defendants, was a good payment, as between the plaintiff on the record and the defendants, and, therefore, an answer to the action. Gibson v. Winter et al., 5 B. & Ad. 96. This case; however, may, with equal and perhaps greater propriety, be referred to the law of agency. See Richardson v. Anderson, 1 Campb. 43, n.; Story on Agency, §§ 413, 429-434.

Lawson, 1 B. & Ad. 396; and by a party originally liable, Atkins v. Tredgold, 2 B. & C. 23. This effect of the admission of indebtment, by one of several joint promisors, as to cases barred by the statute of limitations, when it is merely a verbal admission, without part payment, is now restricted in England, to the party making the admission, by Stat. 9 George IV. c. 14 (Lord Tenterden's Act). So in Massachusetts, by Gen. Stat. c. 155, §§ 14, 16; and in Vermont, Rev. Stat. c. 58, §§ 23, 27. The application of this doctrine to partners, after the dissolution of the partnership, has already been considered. Supra, § 112, n. (d) Whether a written acknowledgment, made by one of several partners, stands upon different ground from that of a similar admission by one of several joint contractors, is an open question. Clark v. But it must be distinctly shown to be a payment on account of the particular debt. Holme v. Green, 1 Stark. 488.

(c) But more recent cases, both in this country and in England, have denied that, from the mere fact of part payment, the jury are authorized to infer a promise to pay the rest. Davies v. Edwards, 6 Eng. L. & Eq. 550; s. c. 15 Jur. 1014, where Jackson v. Fairbank, and Brandram v. Wharton, are said not to have been well considered. So now by Stat. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97; Jackson v. (d) The admissions of a partner, with respect to a transaction within the scope respect to a transaction within the scope of the partnership business, are competent evidence against the personal representatives of the deceased partner. Clark's Ex'rs v. Van Reimsdyk, 9 Cranch, 153; McElroy v. Ludlum, 32 N. J. Eq. 828; but not to establish the fact of the partnership. Cowan v. Kinney, 33 Ohio St. 422. § 175. Corporators. In settlement cases, it has long been held that declarations by rated parishioners are evidence against the parish; for they are parties to the cause, though the nominal parties to the appeal be church-wardens and overseers of the poor of the parish.1 The same principle is now applied in England to all other prosecutions against towns and parishes, in respect to the declarations of ratable inhabitants, they being substantially parties to the record.2 Nor is it necessary first to call the inhabitant, and show that he refuses to be examined, in order to admit his declarations.3 And the same principle would seem to apply to the inhabitants of towns, counties, or other territorial political divisions of this country, who sue and are prosecuted as inhabitants, eo nomine, and are termed quasi corporations. ing parties personally liable, their declarations are admissible, though the value of the evidence may, from circumstances, be exceedingly light. $^{4}(a)$

(e) The rule here stated is said by the court, in Milton v. Hunter, 13 Bush (Ky.), 163, not to be the law in Pennsylvania and Alabama; but it is held in the case before the court, that admissions of co-legatees are evidence, entitled to the effect not of an admission by all the co-legatees, but of the simple circumstance that a party interested admitted what he probably would not have done, had he not believed it to be true. And this fact, though not entitled to the effect of an admission, by all concerned in a common interest under the will, may nevertheless tend to a presumption against all of them (in a degree corresponding with all the circumstances), that the thing admitted may be true. The distinction here stated seems to be that between the conclusive effect of some admissions and the non-conclusive effect of others. See post, §§ 204-212. So the admissions of a party named as an executor and legatee of a will, as to the unsoundness of the mind of the testator, are admissible, upon a probate of the will. Robinson v. Hutchinson, 31 Vt. 443.

The better rule now seems to be that such admissions are not admissible except against the devisee who makes them, unproved. Hayes v. Burkam, 51 Ind. 130; Forney v. Ferrell, 4 W. Va. 730; La Bau v. Vanderbilt, 3 Redf. 384; Clark v. Morrison, 25 Pa. St. 453; Shailer v. Bumstead,

Therefore the admissions of one executor are not received, to take a case out of the statute of limitations as against his coexecutor. 1 Nor is an acknowledgment of indebtment by one executor admissible against his coexecutor, to establish the original demand.2 The admission of the receipt of money, by one of several trustees, is not received to charge the other trustees.3 Nor is there such joint interest between a surviving promisor, and the executor of his copromisor, as to make the act or admission of the one sufficient to bind the other.4 Neither will the admission of one who was joint promisor with a feme sole be received to charge her husband, after the marriage, in an action against them all, upon a plea of the statute of limitations.⁵ For the same reason, namely, the absence of a joint interest, the admissions of one tenant in common are not receiv-

tion itself. And it seems to us, that upon principle they are clearly inadmissible. There is no rule of law better settled than that the admission of a shareholder will not bind the corporation. Nor will the admission of a director or agent of a private corporation bind the company, except as a part of the res gestæ. And it will make no difference that the action is in the corporate name of the president and directors; that does not make them parties in person. And we see no more reason why the admission of the inhabitants of a town or parish should bind the municipality, because the action happens to be in form in the name of such inhabitants, than that all the admissions or declarations of the people at large should be evidence against the public prosecutor in criminal proceedings, when they are instituted in the name of The People, which we believe would be regarded as an absurdity by every one. We conclude, therefore, that in no such case can the admission or declaration of a corporator be fairly regarded as evidence against the corporation. Watertown v. Cowen, 4 Paige, 510; Burlington v. Calais, 1 Vt. 385; Low v. Perkins, 10 Vt. 532.

able against his cotenant, though both are parties on the same side in the suit. 6 Nor are the admissions of one of several devisees or legatees admissible to impeach the validity of the will where they may affect others not in privity with him.7 Neither are the admissions of one defendant evidence against the other. in an action on the case for the mere negligence of both.8

§ 177. Interest must be real. It is obvious that an apparent joint interest is not sufficient to render the admissions of one party receivable against his companions where the reality of that interest is the point in controversy. A foundation must first be laid, by showing, prima facie, that a joint interest exists. Therefore, in an action against several joint makers of a promissory note, the execution of which was the point in issue, the admission of his signature only by one defendant was held not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover against him and the others, though theirs had been proved; the point to be proved against all being a joint promise by all. And where it is sought to charge several as partners, an admission of the fact of partnership by one is not receivable in evidence against any of the others, to prove the partnership. It is only after the partnership is shown to exist. by proof satisfactory to the judge, that the admission of one of the parties is received, in order to affect the others. 2(a) If they sue upon a promise to them as partners, the admission of one is evidence against all, even though it goes to a denial of the joint right of action, the partnership being conclusively admitted by the form of action.3

defendant in chancery cannot be read in evidence against his codefendant; the reason being, that, as there is no issue between them, there can have been no opportunity for cross-examination. (a) But this rule does not apply to cases where the other defendant claims through him whose answer is offered in evidence; nor to eases where they have a joint interest, either as partners or otherwise, in the transaction.2 Wherever the confession of any party would be good evidence against another, in such ease his answer, a fortiori, may be read against the latter.3

§ 179. Guardians, executors, &c. The admissions which are thus receivable in evidence must, as we have seen, be those of a person having at the time some interest in the matter afterwards in controversy in the suit to which he is a party. The admissions, therefore, of a guardian, or of an executor or administrator, made before he was completely clothed with that trust, or of a prochein amy, made before the commencement of the suit, cannot be received, either against the ward or infant in the one case, or against himself, as the representative of heirs, devisees, and creditors, in the other; 4 though it may bind the person himself, when he is afterwards a party, suo jure, in another action. A solemn admission, however, made in good faith, in a pending suit, for the purpose of that trial only, is governed by other considerations. Thus, the plea of nolo contendere, in a criminal case, is an admission for that trial only. One object of it is to prevent the proceedings being used in any other place; and therefore it is held inadmissible in a civil action against the same party.2 So, the answer of the guardian of an infant defendant in chancery can never be read against the infant in another suit; for its office was only to bring the infant into court and make him a party.3 But it may be used against the guardian, when he afterwards is a party in his private capacity; for it is his own admission upon oath.4 Neither can the admission of a married woman, answering jointly with her husband, be afterwards read against her, it being considered as the answer of the husband alone.⁵

§ 180. Admissions of parties not of record. We are next to consider the admissions of persons who are not parties to the record, but yet are interested in the subject-matter of the suit. The law, in regard to this source of evidence, looks chiefly to the real parties in interest, and gives to their admissions the same weight as though they were parties to the record. Thus the admissions of the cestui que trust of a bond; 1 those of the persons interested in a policy effected in another's name, for their benefit; 2 those of the ship-owners, in an action by the master for freight; 3 those of the indemnifying creditor, in an action against the sheriff;4 those of the deputy-sheriff, in an action against the high-sheriff for the misconduct of the deputy; 5 are all receivable against the party making them. And, in general, the admissions of any party represented by another are receivable in evidence against his representatives. 6 (a) But here, also, it is to be observed, that the declarations or admissions must have been made while the party making them had some interest in the matter; and they are receivable in evidence only so far as his own interests are concerned. Thus, the declaration of a bankrupt, made before his bankruptey, is good evidence to charge his estate with a debt; but not so if it was made afterwards. (b) While the declarant is the only party in interest, no harm can possibly result from giving full effect to his admissions. He may be supposed best to know the extent of his own rights, and to be least of all disposed to concede away any that actually belonged to him. But an admission, made after other persons have acquired separate rights in the same subject-matter, cannot be received to disparage their title, however it may affect that of the declarant himself. This most just and equitable doctrine will be found to apply not only to admissions made by bankrupts and insolvents, but to the case of vendor and vendee, payee and indorsee, grantor and grantee, and, generally, to be the pervading doctrine in all cases of rights acquired in good faith, previous to the time of making the admissions in question. 8 (c)

acts might be given in evidence to charge him; and then, rather as acts than as declarations, the declarations being considered as part of the res gestæ. Wheeler v. Hambright, 9 Serg. & R. 396, 397. See Scott v. Marshall, 2 Cr. & Jer. 238; Jacobs v. Humphrey, 2 Cr. & M. 413; s. c. 4 Tyrw. 272. But whenever a person is bound by the record, he is, for all purposes of evidence, the party in interest, and, as such, his admissions are receivable against him, both of the facts it recites, and of the amount of damages, in all cases where, being liable over to the nominal defendant, he has been notified of the suit, and required to defend it. (b) Infra, § 190.
(c) Infra, § 190.

§ 181. Admissions of strangers. In some cases, the admissions of third persons, strangers to the suit, are receivable. This arises when the issue is substantially upon the mutual rights of such persons at a particular time; in which case the practice is to let in such evidence in general, as would be legally admissible in an action between the parties themselves. (b) Thus, in an action against the sheriff for an escape, the debtor's acknowledgment of the debt, being sufficient to charge him in the original action, is sufficient, as against the sheriff, to support the averment in the declaration that the party escaping was so indebted.1 So, an admission of joint liability by a third person has been held sufficient evidence, on the part of the defendant, to support a plea in abatement for the non-joinder of such person as defendant in the suit; it being admissible in an action against him for the same cause.² And the admissions of a bankrupt, made before the act of bankruptcy, are receivable in proof of the petitioning creditor's debt. His declarations, made after the act of bankruptcy, though admissible against himself, form an exception to this rule, because of the intervening rights of creditors, and the danger of fraud.3

The admissions of a third person are also § 182. Referees. receivable in evidence, against the party who has expressly referred another to him for information, in regard to an uncertain or disputed matter. In such cases, the party is bound by the declarations of the persons referred to, in the same manner, and to the same extent, as if they were made by himself. (a) Thus, upon a plea of plene administravit, where the executors wrote to the plaintiff, that, if she wished for further information in regard to the assets, she should apply to a certain merchant in the city, they were held bound by the replies of the merchant to her inquiries upon that subject. 1 So, in assumpsit for goods sold, where the fact of the delivery of them by the carman was disputed, and the defendant said: "If he will say that he did deliver the goods, I will pay for them," he was held bound by the affirmative reply of the carman. $^{2}(c)$

§ 183. Interpreter. This principle extends to the case of an interpreter whose statements of what the party says are treated as identical with those of the party himself; and therefore may be proved by any person who heard them, without calling the interpreter.3 (a)

§ 184. Not conclusive. Whether the answer of a person thus referred to is conclusive against the party does not seem to have been settled. Where the plaintiff had offered to rest his claim upon the defendant's affidavit, which was accordingly taken, Lord Kenyon held, that he was conclusively bound, even though the affidavit had been false; and he added, that to make such a proposition and afterwards to recede from it was mala fides; but that, besides that, it might be turned to very improper purposes, such as to entrap the witness, or to find out how far the party's evidence would go in support of his case. 4 But in a later case, where the question was upon the identity of a horse, in the defendant's possession, with one lost by the plaintiff, and the plaintiff had said, that, if the defendant would take his oath that the horse was his, he should keep him, and he made oath accordingly, Lord

3 Fabrigas v. Mostyn, 11 St. Tr. 171. The cases of the reference of a disputed liability to the opinion of legal counsel, and of a disputed fact regarding a mine to a miner's jury have been treated as falling under this head; the decisions being held binding as to the answers of persons referred to. How far the circumstance, that if treated as awards, being in writing, they would have been void for want of a stamp, may have led the learned judges to consider them in another light, does not appear. Sybray v. White, 1 M. & W. 435.(b) But in this country, where no stamp is required, they would more naturally be regarded as awards upon parol submissions, and therefore conclusive, unless impeached for causes recognized in the law of awards.

Obs. 69; 11 Ad. & El. 1028, as to the admissibility of an award as an admission of the party; infra, § 537, n. (1).

(c) But if a third person is referred to simply to furnish information as to certain facts, his statements as to other facts or his opinions are inadmissible. Lambert v. People, 6 Abb. (N. Y.) N. Cas. 181. And as this rule introduces evidence as an exception to the rule against hearsay, the party offering such evidence must bring himself strictly within its provisions. Allen v. Killinger, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 480.

(a) But this rule does not apply to the cases of an interpreter of a witness in court. He is not the agent of the party calling him, but rather an officer of court, and his declarations are admissible only under the conditions stated in § 163. Schearer v. Harber, 36 Ind. 536.

Tenterden observed, that, considering the loose manner in which the evidence had been given, he would not receive it as conclusive: but that it was a circumstance on which he should not fail to remark to the jury.2 And certainly the opinion of Lord Tenterden, indicated by what fell from him in this case, more perfeetly harmonizes with other parts of the law, especially as it is opposed to any further extension of the doctrine of estoppels, which sometimes precludes the investigation of truth. The purposes of justice and policy are sufficiently answered, by throwing the burden of proof on the opposing party, as in a case of an award, and holding him bound, unless he impeaches the test referred to by clear proof of fraud or mistake.3

§ 185. Admissions of wife. The admissions of the wife will bind the husband, only where she has authority to make them. 1 (a) This authority does not result, by mere operation of law, from the relation of husband and wife; but is a question of fact, to be found by the jury, as in other cases of agency; for though this relation is peculiar in its circumstances, from its close intimacy and its very nature, yet it is not peculiar in its principles. (b) As the wife is seldom expressly constituted the agent of the husband, the cases on this subject are almost universally those of implied authority, turning upon the degree in which the husband permitted the wife to participate, either in the transaction of his affairs in general, or in the particular matter in question. Where he sues for her wages, the fact that she earned them does not authorize her to bind him by her admissions of payment; 2 nor can her declarations affect him, where he sues with her in her right; for in these, and similar cases, the right is his own, though acquired through her instrumentality.3 But in regard to the inwhich it formed a part.

2 Hall v. Hill, 2 Str. 1094. An authority to the wife to conduct the ordinary business of the shop in her husband's absence does not authorize her to bind him by an admission, in regard to the tenancy or the rent of the shop. Meredith v. Footference of her agency from circumstances, the question has been left to the jury with great latitude, both as to the fact of agency and the time of the admissions. Thus, it has been held competent for them to infer authority in her to accept a notice and direction, in regard to a particular transaction in her husband's trade, from the circumstance of her being seen twice in his counting-room, appearing to conduct his business relating to that transaction, and once giving orders to the foreman.4 And in an action against the husband, for goods furnished to the wife, while in the country, where she was occasionally visited by him, her letter to the plaintiff, admitting the debt, and apologizing for the non-payment, though written several years after the transaction, was held by Lord Ellenborough sufficient to take the case out of the statute of limitations. $^{5}(c)$

§ 186. Attorneys of record. The admissions of attorneys of record bind their clients, in all matters relating to the progress and trial of the cause. But, to this end, they must be distinct and formal, or such as are termed solemn admissions, made for the express purpose of alleviating the stringency of some rule of practice, or of dispensing with the formal proof of some fact at the trial. In such cases, they are in general conclusive; and may be given in evidence, even upon a new trial. (a) But other admissions, which are mere matters of conversation with an attorney, though they relate to the facts in controversy, cannot be received in evidence against his client. (b) The reason of the

Bergman v. Roberts, 61 Pa. St. 497. In all cases there must be some evidence of the agency for the jury, besides evidence of the agency for the jury, besides evidence of the relationship, either by authority or a pressumed ratification. Hunt v. Strew, 33 Mich. 85; Butler v. Price, 115 Mass. 578; Deck v. Johnson, 1 Abb. (N. Y.) App. Dec. 497.

The converse of the rule as stated above and in the text, supra, is also true, and it is held that the mere existence of the relationship is not proof of the husband being the agent of the wife for any purpose, but the party relying on this fact must prove it. Deck v. Johnson, 1 Abb. (N. Y.) App. Dec. 497.

(a) But an oral admission of a fact by the attorney during the progress of the the attorney during the progress of the trial, is not conclusive upon a second trial, especially if notice of withdrawal of the admission be given, though it is evidence. § 187. Principal as against surety. We are next to consider the admissions of a principal, as evidence in an action against the surety, upon his collateral undertaking. In the cases on this subject the main inquiry has been, whether the declarations of the principal were made during the transaction of the business for which the surety was bound, so as to become part of the res gestæ. If so, they have been held admissible; otherwise not. The surety is considered as bound only for the actual conduct of the party, and not for whatever he might say he had done; and therefore is entitled to proof of his conduct by original evidence, where it can be had; excluding all declarations of the principal, made subsequent to the act to which they relate, and out of the course of his official duty. (a) Thus, where one guaranteed the payment for such goods as the plaintiffs should send to another, in the way of their trade, it was held, that the admissions of the principal debtor, that he had received goods, made after the time of their supposed delivery, were not receivable in evidence against the surety. 1 So, if one becomes surety in a bond, conditioned for the faithful conduct of another as clerk, or collector, it is held, that, in an action on the bond against the surety, confessions of embezzlement made by the principal after his dismissal, are not admissible, in evidence; 2 though, with regard to entries made in the course of his duty, it is otherwise.3 A judgment, also, rendered against the principal, may be admitted as evidence, of that fact, in an action against the surety.4 On the other hand, upon the same general ground, it has been held, that, where the surety confides to the principal the power of making a contract, he confides to him the power of furnishing evidence of the contract; and that, if the contract is made by parol, subsequent declarations of the principal are admissible in evidence, though not conclusive. Thus, where a husband and wife agreed, by articles, to live separate, and C, as trustee and surety for the wife, covenanted to pay the husband a sum of money, upon his delivering to the wife a carriage and horses for her separate use, it was held, in an action by the husband for the money, that the wife's admissions of the receipt by her of the carriage and horses, were admissible.⁵ So, where A guaranteed the performance of any contract that B might make with C, the admissions and declarations of B were held admissible against A, to prove the contract.6

§ 188. Same subject. But where the surety, being sued for the default of the principal, gives him notice of the pendency of the suit, and requests him to defend it; if judgment goes against the surety, the record is conclusive evidence for him, in a subsequent action against the principal for indemnity; for the principal has thus virtually become party to it. It would seem, therefore, that in such case the declarations of the principal, as we have heretofore seen, become admissible, even though they operate against the surety.1

term privity denotes mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property; and privies are distributed into several classes, according to the manner of this relationship. Thus, there are privies in estate, as donor and donee, lessor and lessee, and jointtenants; privies in blood, as heir and ancestor, and coparceners; privies in representation, as executors and testator, administrators and intestate; privies in law, where the law, without privity of blood or estate, casts the land upon another, as by escheat. All these are more generally classed into privies in estate, privies in blood, and privies in law. The ground upon which admissions bind those in privity with the party making them is, that they are identified in interest; and, of course, the rule extends no farther than this identity. The cases of coparceners and joint-tenants are assimilated to those of joint-promisors, partners and others having a joint interest, which have already been considered.² In other cases, where the party, by his admissions, has qualified his own right, and another claims to succeed him as heir, executor, or the like, he succeeds only to the right, as thus qualified, at the time when his title commenced; (a) and

Thus, the declarations of the ancestor, that he held the land as the tenant of a third person, are admissible to show the seisin of that person, in an action brought by him against the heir for the land. 3(b) Thus, also, where the defendant in a real action relied on a long possession, he has been permitted, in proof of the adverse character of the possession, to give in evidence the declarations of one under whom the plaintiff claimed, that he had sold the land to the person under whom the defendant claimed.4 And the declarations of an intestate are admissible against his administrator, or any other claiming in his right. 5 (c) The declarations, also, of the former occupant of a messuage, in respect of which the present occupant claimed a right of common. because of vicinage, are admissible evidence in disparagement of the right, they being made during his occupancy; and on the same principle, other contemporaneous declarations of occupiers have been admitted, as evidence of the nature and extent of their title. against those claiming in privity of estate. 6(d) Any admission by a landlord in a prior lease, which is relative to the matter in issue, and concerns the estate, has also been held admissible in evidence against a lessee who claims by a subsequent title.

§ 190. Assignors as against assignee. The same principle holds in regard to admissions made by the assignor of a personal contract or chattel, previous to the assignment, while he remained the sole proprietor, and where the assignee must recover through the title of the assignor, and succeeds only to that title as it stood at the time of its transfer. (a) In such case, he is bound by the previous admissions of the assignor, in disparagement of his own apparent title. But this is true only where there is an identity of interest between the assignor and assignee; and such identity is deemed to exist not only where the latter is expressly the mere agent and representative of the former, but also where the assignee has acquired a title with actual notice of the true state of that of the assignor, as qualified by the admissions in question, or where he has purchased a demand already stale, or otherwise infected with circumstances of suspicion.1 Thus, the declarations of a former holder of a promissory note, negotiated before it was overdue, showing that it was given without consideration, though made while he held the note, are not admissible against the indorsee; for, as was subsequently observed by Parke, J., "the right of a person, holding by a good title, is not to be cut down by the acknowledgment of a former holder that he had no title."2 But, in an action by the indorsee of a bill or note dis-

Soule, 14 Vt. 99, and referring to the cases of Hayward Rubber Co. v. Duncklee, 30 Vt. 29, and Miller v. Bingham, 29 Vt. 82, as the leading cases on this subject in that State. In these cases, as was said supra, § 189, in reference to the admissions of a grantor, it was held that the admission must be made held that the admission must be made while the person making the admission has the interest under which his assignee claims. So declarations of the seller of personal property, made after the sale and after he has parted with possession, are inadmissible against the buyer. Downs v. Belden. 46 Vt. 674; Keystone Manufacturing Co. v. Johnson, 50 Iowa, 142; Benson v. Lundy, 52 lowa, 265; Many v. Jagger, 1 Blatchf. C. C. 372, 376; Campbell v. Coon, 51 Ind. 76; Magee v. honored before it was negotiated, the declarations of the indorser, made while the interest was in him, are admissible in evidence for the defendant. 3 (b)

§ 191. Mode of proof. These admissions by third persons, as they derive their value and legal force from the relation of the party making them to the property in question, and are taken as parts of the res gestæ, may be proved by any competent witness who heard them, without calling the party by whom they were made. (a) The question is, whether he made the admission, and not merely whether the fact is as he admitted it to be. Its truth, where the admission is not conclusive (and it seldom is so), may be controverted by other testimony: even by calling the party himself, when competent; but it is not necessary to produce him, his

(b) In a suit against the maker of a promissory note by one who took it when overdue, the declarations of a prior holder, made while he held the note, after it was due, are admissible in evidence to show payment to such prior holder, or any right of set-off which the maker had against him. But such declarations, made by such holder before he took the note, are inadmissible. So such declarations, made by such holder after assigning the note to one from whom the plaintiff since took it, are inadmissible, unless such assignment was conditioned to be void upon the payment to the assignor of a less sum than the amount due on the note, in which case such declarations are admissible in evidence for the defendant to the extent of the interest remaining in such prior holder. the interest remaining in such prior holder.

The practice in the different States, in regard to admitting the declarations of the gard to admitting the declarations of the owner of a chose in action, while holding the same, it not being negotiable, or, if so, being at the time overdue, to the effect that the same had been paid, or is otherwise invalid, and this as against a subsequent bona fide owner, is not uniform.

See Miller v. Bingham, 29 Vt. 82, where such declarations were held admissible. The cases cited above from New York show that such declarations are not there admissible. The English rule seems in favor of receiving such declarations, as to Vallance, 1 Bing. 45; Shaw v. Broom, 4
Dow. & Rv. 730; Pocock v. Billing, 2
Bing. 269. But see Carpenter v. Hollister, 13 Vt. 552, where the question as to real estate is fully discussed. Where goods are claimed by virtue of a pledge, declarations in disparagement of his title made by the pledgor, before he made the pledge, are admissible without calling him as a witness. Alger v. But when admissions in disparagement of a title are admitted, it is not allowable for the other party to detract from the force of this evidence by proving later and contra-dictory statements made by the same person under other circumstances in favor of his title. Royal v. Chandler, 79 Me. 265. In the case of Baxter v. Knowles, 12 Allen, 114, it is said: "The declarations of the defendant's testator, from whom he claimed title, were not made admissible in his favor by the fact that his declarations at other times were given in evidence by the plaintiff as admissions." declarations, when admissible at all, being admissible as original evidence, and not as hearsay.3 (b)

§ 192. Time and circumstance. We are next to consider the time and circumstances of the admission. And here it is to be observed that confidential overtures of pacification, and any other offers or propositions between litigating parties, expressly stated to be made without prejudice, are excluded on grounds of public policy. (a) For, without this protective rule, it would often be difficult to take any step towards an amicable compromise or adjustment. A distinction is taken between the admission of particular facts and an offer of a sum of money to buy peace. For, as Lord Mansfield observed, it must be permitted to men to buy their peace without prejudice to them, if the offer should not succeed; and such offers are made to stop litigation, without regard to the question whether anything is due or not. If, therefore, the defendant, being sued for £100, should offer the plaintiff £20, this is not admissible in evidence, for it is irrelevant to the issue; it neither admits nor ascertains any debt; and is no more than saying, he would give £20 to be rid of the action.² (b)

 (a) In Jones v. Foxall, 13 Eng. Law & Eq. 140, 145, 15 Beav. 338, Sir John
- Romilly, Master of the Rolls, said: "I shall, as far as I am able, in all cases, endeavor to suppress a practice which, when I was first acquainted with the profession, was rarely, if ever, ventured upon, but which, according to my experience, has been common of late; namely, that of attempting to convert offers of compromise into admissions and acts prejudicial to the parties making them. If this were permitted, the effect would be that no attempt to compromise a suit would ever be made. If no reservation of the parties who make an offer of compromise could prevent that offer and the letters from being afterwards given in evidence, and made use of against them, it is obvious that no such letters would be written or offers made. In my opinion, such letters and offers are admissible for one purpose only, i. e., to show that an attempt has been made to compromise the suit, which may be sometimes necessary; as, for instance, in order to account for lapse of time, but never to fix the persons making them with admissions contained in such letters; and I shall do all I can to discourage this, which I consider to be a very injurious practice." But, in order to exclude distinct admissions of facts, it must appear either that they were expressly made without prejudice, or, at least, that they were made under the faith of a pending treaty, and into which the party might have been led by the confidence of a compromise taking place. (c) But, if the admission be of a collateral or indifferent fact, such as the handwriting of the party, capable of easy proof by other means, and not connected with the merits of the cause, it is receivable, though made under a pending treaty.3 It is the condition, tacit, or express, that no advantage shall be taken of the admission, it being made with a view to, and in furtherance of, an amicable adjustment, that operates to exclude it. But, if it is an independent admission of a fact, merely because it is a fact, it will be received; (d) and even an offer of a sum, by way of compromise of a claim tacitly admitted, is receivable, unless accompanied with a caution that the offer is confidential.4 (e)

- § 193. Constraint. In regard to admissions made under circumstances of constraint, a distinction is taken between civil and criminal cases; and it has been considered, that, on the trial of civil actions, admissions are receivable in evidence, provided the compulsion under which they are given is legal, and the party was not imposed upon, or under duress. (a) Thus, in the trial of Collett v. Lord Keith, for taking the plaintiff's ship, the testimony of the defendant, given as a witness in an action between other parties, in which he admitted the taking of the ship, was allowed to be proved against him; though it appeared that, in giving his evidence, when he was proceeding to state his reasons for taking the ship, Lord Kenyon had stopped him by saying it was unnecessary for him to vindicate his conduct.1 The rule extends also to answers voluntarily given to questions improperly asked, and to which the witness might successfully have objected. So, the voluntary answers of a bankrupt before the commissioners are evidence in a subsequent action against the party himself, though he might have demurred to the questions; or the whole examination was irregular, unless it was obtained by imposition or duress.3
- § 194. Direct and incidental. There is no difference, in regard to the admissibility of this sort of evidence, between direct ad-

nature as that the court can see it would not have been made except for the purpose of forwarding the objects of the negotiation, and under such circumstances that an agreement could fairly be implied therefrom, that it was not to be used afterwards to the prejudice of the party making it, the court will exclude the evidence. The rule is said to be founded upon public policy, and with a view of encouraging and facilitating the settlement of legal controversies by compromise, which object is supposed to be obstructed by the fear entertained by litigants that such a negotiation may be converted into a trap to inveigle the unwary into hazardous admissions. The law, therefore, excludes such admissions as appear to have been made tentatively or hypothetically, but admits those only which concede the existence of a fact. White v. missions and those which are incidental or made in some other connection, or involved in the admission of some other fact. Thus, where, in an action against the acceptor of a bill, his attorney gave notice to the plaintiff to produce at the trial all papers, &c., which had been received by him relating to a certain bill of exchange (describing it), which "was accepted by the said defendant;" this was held prima facie evidence, by admission that he accepted the bill. So, in an action by the assignees of a bankrupt, against an auctioneer, to recover the proceeds of sales of a bankrupt's goods, the defendant's advertisement of the sale, in which he described the goods as "the property of D., a bankrupt," was held a conclusive admission of the fact of bankruptcy, and that the defendant was acting under his assignees.2 So, also, an undertaking by an attorney, "to appear for T. and R., joint owners of the sloop 'Arundel,'" was held sufficient prima facie evidence of ownership.3

§ 195. Assumed character. Other admissions are implied from assumed character, language, and conduct, which, though heretofore adverted to, 1 (a) may deserve further consideration in this place. Where the existence of any domestic, social, or official relation is in issue, it is quite clear that any recognition, in fact, of that relation, is prima facie evidence against the person making such recognition, that the relation exists.2 This general rule is more frequently applied against a person who has thus recognized the character or office of another; but it is conceived to embrace, in its principle, any representations or language in regard to himself. Thus, where one has assumed to act in an official character, this is an admission of his appointment or title to the office. so far as to render him liable, even criminally, for misconduct or neglect in such office.3 So, where one has recognized the official character of another, by treating with him in such character, or otherwise, this is at least prima facie evidence of his title, against the party thus recognizing it.4 So, the allegations in the declaration or pleadings in a suit at law have been held receivable in evidence against the party, in a subsequent suit between him and a stranger, as his solemn admission of the truth of the facts recited, or of his understanding of the meaning of an instrument; though the judgment could not be made available as an estoppel, unless between the same parties, or others in privity with them. 5(b)

§ 196. Conduct. Admissions implied from the conduct of the party are governed by the same principles. Thus, the suppression of documents is an admission that their contents are deemed unfavorable to the party suppressing them. 1(a) The entry of a charge to a particular person, in a tradesman's book, or the making out of a bill of parcels in his name, is an admission that they were furnished on his credit.² The omission of a claim by an insolvent, in a schedule of the debts due to him, is an admission that it is not due.3 Payment of money is an admission against the payer that the receiver is the proper person to receive it, but

Taylor, 1 New R. 196, in which the learned judges were equally divided upon a point somewhat similar, in the case of a physician; but, in the former case, the roll of attorneys was expressly mentioned, while in the latter, the plaintiff was merely spoken of as "Doctor S.," and the defendant had been employed as his apothecary. not against the receiver that the payer was the person who was bound to pay it; for the party receiving payment of a just demand may well assume, without inquiry, that the person tendering the money was the person legally bound to pay it.4 Acting as a bankrupt, under a commission of bankruptcy, is an admission that it was duly issued.⁵ Asking time for the payment of a note or bill is an admission of the holder's title, and of the signature of the party requesting the favor; and the indorsement or acceptance of a note or bill is an admission of the truth of all the facts which are recited in it. 6 (b)

§ 197. Silence and acquiescence. Admissions may also be implied from the acquiescence of the party. But acquiescence, to have the effect of an admission, must exhibit some act of the mind, and amount to voluntary demeanor or conduct of the party. 1 And whether it is acquiescence in the conduct or in the language of others, it must plainly appear that such conduct was fully known, or the language fully understood by the party, before any inference can be drawn from his passiveness or silence. (a) The circumstances, too, must be not only such as afforded him an opportunity to act or to speak, but such also as would properly and naturally call for some action or reply, from men similarly situated. (c) The former rule of evidence, that one's silence shall be construed as a virtual assent to all that is said in his presence, is susceptible of great abuse, and calls for a course of conduct which prudent and quiet men do not generally adopt. If that rule be sound to the full extent, as laid down in some of the early cases, it would be in the power of any evil-disposed person to always ruin his adversary's case, by drawing him into a compulsory altercation in the presence of chosen listeners, who would be sure to misrepresent what he said. Nothing could be more unjust or unreasonable. Hence, in more recent cases, the rule, in some States, has undergone very important qualifications. The mere silence of one, when facts are asserted in his presence, is no ground of presuming his acquiescence, unless the conversation were addressed to him under such circumstances as to call for a reply. The person

§ 198. Acquiescence. The possession of documents, also, or the fact of constant access to them, sometimes affords ground for affecting parties with an implied admission of the statements contained in them. Thus, the rules of a club, contained in a book kept by the proper officer, and accessible to the members;1 charges against a club, entered by the servants of the house, in a book kept for that purpose, open in the club-room; 2 the possession of letters,3 and the like,—are circumstances from which must be in a position to require the information, and he must ask it in good faith, and in a manner fairly entitling him to expect it, in order to justify any inference from the mere silence of the party addressed. If the occasion, or the nature of this demand, or the manner of making it, will reasonably justify silence, in a discreet and prudent man, no unfavorable inference therefrom should on that account be made against the party. And whether the silence be any ground of presumption against the party will al-ways be a question of law, unless there is conflict in the proof of the attending circumstances. Mattocks v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 113; Vail v. Strong, 10 Id. 457; Gale v. Lincoln, 11 Vt. 152; post, § 199. Where a person is inquired of as to a matter which he proved that the present is the proportion of the strong that the present is the present in the strong that the present is the strong that the stro may affect his pecuniary interests, he has the right to know whether the party making the inquiry is entitled to make it as affecting any interest which he represents, and for the protection of which he requires the information sought. And unless he is fairly informed upon these points, he is not bound to give information, and will not be affected in his pecuniary interests in consequence of refusal. Hackett v. Callender, 32 Vt. 97. The same rule obtains as to letters addressed to the party. Com. v. Jeffries, 7 Allen, 548; Com. v. Eastman, 1 Cush. 189. But if the party consent to give any explanation, it becomes evidence, although drawn from him by a false suggestion. Higgins v. Dellinger, 22 Mo. 397. And even a plea of "guilty," in a criminal proceeding against the party for assault and battery, will be evidence against him in a civil action for the same. Birchard v. Booth, 4 Wis. 67. But, as a general rule, admissions in the pleadings in one suit will not be evidence against the party in another suit, unless signed by him personally, in which case there is no reason why they should not be so regarded, to the same extent as any other admissions. Marianski v. Cairns, 1 Macq. Ho. Lds. Cas. 212. The plaintiff admitted the infancy of one defendant upon the record, and discontinued as to that derecord, and discontinued as to that defendant. Held, that he could not recover against the other, since his admission showed conclusively that there was no joint promise. Boyle v. Webster, 17 Q. B. 950. The American practice, however, is different upon this point. It is here held that the plaintiff may discontinue as to the infant, and proceed against the other joint contractors to judgment.

It has been held in at least one case that if the original letter contains state. ments which, if untrue, would naturally be denied, the omission to deny them might be considered an admission. Fenno v. Weston, 31 Vt. 345. But the better rule certainly is that stated in a case in New York, showing the distinction between the effect to be given to oral declarations made by one party to another, which are in answer to or contradictory of some statement made by the other party, and a written statement in a letter written by such party to another, for while it may well be that under most circumstances a man ought to contradict or explain in some measure what is said to his face, conveying the idea of an obligation upon his part to the person addressing him, or on whose behalf the statement is made; yet a failure to answer a letter is entirely different, and there is no rule of law which requires a person to enter into a correspondence with another in reference to a matter in dispute between them, or which holds that silence should be regarded as an admission against the party to whom the letter is addressed. Such a rule would enable one party to obtain advantage over another and has no sanction in the law. Learned v. Tillotson, 97 N. Y. 8. The same question was the subject of consideration in another decision in New York. Talcott v. Harris, 93 N. Y. 567, 571. In that case the action was against a person who case the action was against a person who had been discharged in bankruptcy, and it was claimed that the discharge was invalid on the ground that there was fraud in the contract by the bankrupt. An order of arrest had been issued upon affi-davits averring fraud in contracting the debt, and upon the trial the plaintiff introduced in evidence, against the objection and exception of the defendant, the papers upon which said order was granted, including the affidavits. The court held that the evidence was erroneously received, and reversed the judgment. It was laid down in the opinion that "if the affidavits in question were competent evidence, it must be upon the ground that they were statements made by or on be-half of the plaintiff, showing the fraud of the defendant, which were uncontradicted by the defendant, and that he acquiesced in the propriety of the order and in the truth of the statements. . . . While a party may be called upon in many cases to speak where a charge is made against him, and in failing to do so may be considered as acquiescing in its correctness, his omission to answer a written allega-tion, whether by affidavits or otherwise, cannot be regarded as an admission of the correctness thereof, and that it is true in all respects."

§ 199. Caution. But, in regard to admissions inferred from acquiescence in the verbal statements of others, the maxim, Qui tacet consentire videtur, is to be applied with careful discrimination. "Nothing," it is said, "can be more dangerous than this kind of evidence. It should always be received with caution; and never ought to be received at all, unless the evidence is of direct declarations of that kind which naturally calls for contradiction; some assertion made to the party with respect to his right, which, by his silence, he acquiesces in." 1(a) A distinction has

(a) Com. v. Kenney, 12 Met. 235, 237; supra, § 197. It was held in New York (Kelly v. People, 55 N. Y. 565) that the silence of a party under arrest, when he heard statements tending to show his guilt, was evidence against him, citing as authorities, Com. v. Cuffee, 108 Mass. 285, and Com. v. Crocker, Id. 464, neither of which cases supports the principle. They were both questions of accordingly been taken between declarations made by a party interested and a stranger; and it has been held, that, while what one party declares to the other, without contradiction, is admissible evidence, what is said by a third person may not be so. (b) It may be impertinent, and best rebuked by silence; but if it receives a reply, the reply is evidence. Therefore, what the magistrate, before whom the assault and battery was investigated, said to the parties, was held inadmissible, in a subsequent civil action for the same assault.² If the declarations are those of third persons, the circumstances must be such as called on the party to interfere, or at least such as would not render it impertinent in him to do so. Therefore, where, in a real action upon a view of the premises by a jury, one of the chain-bearers was the owner of a neighboring close, respecting the bounds of which the litigating parties had much altercation, their declarations in his presence were held not to be admissible against him, in a subsequent action respecting his own close. 3 (c) But the silence of the party, even where the declarations are addressed to himself, is worth very little as evidence, where he has no means of knowing the truth or falsehood of the statement.4

§ 200. Same subject. With respect to all verbal admissions, it may be observed that they ought to be received with great caution. The evidence, consisting as it does in the mere repetition of oral statements, is subject to much imperfection and mistake; the

On the contrary, it has been expressly held in that State, as also elsewhere, that silence under such circumstances is not evidence from which any adverse inference can be drawn. Com. v. party himself either being misinformed, or not having clearly expressed his own meaning, or the witness having misunderstood him. It frequently happens, also, that the witness, by unintentionally altering a few of the expressions really used, gives an effect to the statement completely at variance with what the party actually did say. But where the admission is deliberately made and precisely identified, the evidence it affords is often of the most satisfactory nature. (a)

§ 201. Effect of admissions. We are next to consider the effect of admissions, when proved. And here it is first to be observed, that the whole admission is to be taken together; for though some part of it may contain matter favorable to the party, and the object is only to ascertain that which he has conceded against himself, for it is to this only that the reason for admitting his own declarations applies, namely, the great probability that they are true; yet, unless the whole is received and considered, the true

(a) Saveland v. Green, 40 Wis. 431; Mauro v. Platt, 62 Ill. 450. See also post, § 214. "In a somewhat extended experience of jury trials, we have been compelled to the conclusion that the most unreliable of all evidence is that of the oral admissions of the party, and especially where they purport to have been made during the pendency of the action, or after the parties were in a state of controversy. It is not uncommon for different witnesses of the same conversation to give precisely opposite accounts of it; and in some instances it will appear, that the witness deposes to the statements of one party as coming from the other, and it is not very uncommon to find witnesses of the best intentions repeating the declarations of the party in his own favor as the fullest admissions of the utter falsity of his claim.

When we reflect upon the inaccuracy of many witnesses, in their original comprehension of a conversation, their extreme liability to mingle subsequent facts and occurrences with the original transactions, and the impossibility of recollecting the precise terms used by the party, or of translating them by exact equivalents, we must conclude there is no substantial reliance upon this class of testimony. The fact, too, that in the final trial of open questions of fact, both sides are largely supported by evidence of this character, in the majority of instances, must lead all cautious triers of fact greatly to distrust its reliability." Judge Redfield's addendum to this section in the twelfth edition. But the value of the confession is wholly a matter for the jury. Com. v. Galligan, 113 Mass. 202.

meaning and import of the part, which is good evidence against him, cannot be ascertained. But though the whole of what he said at the same time, and relating to the same subject, must be given in evidence, yet it does not follow that all the parts of the statement are to be regarded as equally worthy of credit; but it is for the jury to consider, under all the circumstances, how much of the whole statement they deem worthy of belief, including as well the facts asserted by the party in his own favor, as those making against him. \(^1(a)\)

§ 202. Admissions containing hearsay. Where the admission, whether oral or in writing, contains matters stated as mere hearsay, it has been made a question whether such matters of hearsay are to be received in evidence. Mr. Justice Chambre, in the case of an answer in chancery, read against the party in a subsequent suit at law, thought that portion of it not admissible; "for," he added, "it appears to me, that, where one party reads a part of the

Where letters in correspondence between the plaintiff and defendant were offered in evidence by the former, it was held that the latter might read his answer to the plaintiff's last letter, dated the day previous. Roe v. Day, 7 C. & P. 705. And where one party produces the letter of another, purporting to be in reply to a previous letter from himself, he is bound to call for and put in the letter to which it was an answer, as part of his own evidenne. Watson v. Moore, 1 C. & Kir. 626.

(a) Enders v. Sternbergh, 2 Abb. (N. Y.) App. Dec. 31. So, if one puts in evidence an admission of the other party, he renders admissible all that was said at that time on the subject to which the admission relates, so far as it is necessary in order to understand the admission, although it may be favorable to the party against whom the admission was offered. Moore v. Wright, 90 Ill. 470. A party, by reading from an answer in the case to prove the admission of having indorsed a promissory note, renders all that portion of the answer evidence, although embracing obligations of defence. Gildersleeve v. Mahoney, 5 Duer, 383. And it has been said that the party against whom an answer in chancery is produced may claim to have the whole bill as well as the answer read as part of his adversary's case, upon the same ground, that, where one proves answers in conversation against a party, he may insist upon having the questions to which he made the replies put in evidence. Pennell v. Meyer, 2 M. & Rob. 98, by Tindal, C. J.; s. c. 8 C. & P. 470. But the rule in equity does not extend to putting in evidence matters wholly distinct from those read by the adversary, although found in the same answer and pleadings; and the rule is practically the same at law, as, when the adversary reads one entry in a book, it will not justify reading the entire book, unless in some way connected with the entry read. Abbott, C. J., in Catt v. Howard, 3 Stark. N. P. C. 3. Nor can the party read distinct and disconnected paragraphs in a newspaper, because one has been read by his adversary (Darby v. Onseley, 1 H. & N. 1); or a series of copies of letters inserted in a copy-book, because one has been read. Sturge v. Buchanan, 2 M. & Rob. 90.

answer of the other party in evidence, he makes the whole admissible only so far as to waive any objection to the competency of the testimony of the party making the answer, and that he does not thereby admit as evidence all the facts, which may happen to have been stated by way of hearsay only, in the course of the answer to a bill filed for a discovery." 4(a) But where the answer is offered as the admission of the party against whom it is read, it seems reasonable that the whole admission should be read to the jury, for the purpose of showing under what impressions that admission was made, though some parts of it be only stated from hearsay and belief. And what may or may not be read, as the context of the admission, depends not upon the grammatical structure, but upon the sense and connection in fact. But whether the party, against whom the answer is read, is entitled to have such parts of it as are not expressly sworn to left to the jury as evidence, however slight, of any fact, does not yet appear to have been expressly decided.⁵

§ 203. Parol admissions in pais, when competent. It is further to be observed on this head, that the parol admission of a party, made en pais, is competent evidence only of those facts which may lawfully be established by parol evidence; it cannot be received either to contradict documentary proof, or to supply the place of existing evidence by matter of record. Thus, a written receipt of money from one as the agent of a corporation, or even an express admission of indebtment to the corporation itself, is not competent proof of the legal authority and capacity of the corporation to act as such. 1 Nor is a parol admission of having been discharged under an insolvent act sufficient proof of that fact, without the production of the record.2 The reasons on which this rule is founded having been already stated, it is unnecessary to consider them further in this place.3 The rule, however, does

Co., 26 Wis. 295), that if an admission contains matter which is stated as a fact, such statement of the fact is evidence of the fact against the person who makes the statement, although it is evident that the statement is made upon information. The Court draws a distinction between what is stated as a fact and not go to the utter exclusion of parol admissions of this nature, but only to their effect; for in general, as was observed by Mr. Justice Parke, 4 what a party says is evidence against himself, whether it relate to the contents of a written instrument, or anything else. Therefore, in replevin of goods distrained, the admissions of the plaintiff have been received, to show the terms upon which he held the premises, though he held under an agreement in writing, which was not produced.⁵ Nor does the rule affect the admissibility of such evidence as secondary proof, after showing the loss of the instrument in question.

§ 204. How far conclusive. With regard, then, to the conclusiveness of admissions, it is first to be considered, that the genius and policy of the law favor the investigation of truth by all expedient and convenient methods; and that the doctrine of estoppels, by which further investigation is precluded, being an exception to the general rule, founded on convenience, and for the prevention of fraud, is not to be extended beyond the reasons on which it is founded. It is also to be observed that estoppels bind only parties and privies, and not strangers. Hence it follows, that though a stranger may often show matters in evidence, which parties or privies might have specially pleaded by way of estoppel, yet, in his case, it is only matter of evidence to be considered by the jury.2 It is, however, in such cases, material to

2 This subject was very clearly illustrated by Mr. Justice Bayley, in delivering the judgment of the court, in Heane v. Rogers, 9 B. & C. 577, 586. It was an action of trover, brought by a person against whom a commission of bankruptcy had issued, the property the related to the property of goods, which as assignees, they had sold; of trover, brought by a person against whom a commission of bankruptcy had issued, against his assignees, to recover the value of goods, which, as assignees, they had sold; and it appeared that he had assisted the assignees, by giving directions as to the sale of the goods; and that, after the issuing of the commission, he gave notice to the lessors of a farm which he held that he had become bankrupt, and was willing to give up the lease, which the lessors thereupon accepted, and took possession of the premises. And the question was, whether he was precluded, by this surrender, from disputing the commission in the present suit. On this point the language of the learned judge was as follows: "There is no doubt but that the express admissions of a party to the suit, or admissions implied from his conduct, are evidence, and strong evidence, against him; but we think that he is at liberty to prove that such admissions were mistaken, or were untrue, and is not estopped or concluded by them, unless another person has been induced by them to alter his condition; in such a case, the party is estopped from disputing their truth with respect to that person (and those claiming under him), and that transaction; but as to third persons, he is not bound. It is a well-established rule of law, that estoppels bind parties and privies, not strangers. (Co. Lit. 352 a; Com. Dig. Estoppel, C.) The offer of surrender made in this case was to a stranger to this suit; and though the bankrupt may have been bound by his representation that he was a bankrupt, and his acting as such, as between him and that stranger, to whom the was a bankrupt, and his acting as such, as between him and that stranger, to whom that representation was made, and who acted upon it, he is not bound as between him and the defendant, who did not act on the faith of that representation at all. The bankrupt would, probably, not have been permitted, as against his landlords, — whom consider, whether the admission is made independently, and because it is true, or is merely conventional, entered into between the parties from other causes than a conviction of its truth and only as a convenient assumption for the particular purpose in hand. For in the latter case, it may be doubtful whether a stranger can give it in evidence at all.3 Verbal admissions, as such, do not seem capable, in general, of being pleaded as estoppels, even between parties or privies; but if, being unexplained or avoided in evidence, the jury should wholly disregard them, the remedy would be by setting aside the verdict. And when they are held conclusive, they are rendered effectually so by not permitting the party to give any evidence against them. Parol or verbal admissions, which have been held conclusive against the party, seem for the most part to be those on the faith of which a court of justice has been led to adopt a particular course of proceeding, or on which another person has been induced to alter his condition. 4(a) To these may be added a few cases of fraud and he had induced to accept the lease, without a formal surrender in writing, and to take possession, upon the supposition that he was a bankrupt, and entitled under 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, § 75, to give it up, — to say afterwards that he was not a bankrupt, and bring an action of trover for the lease, or an ejectment for the estate. To that extent he an action of trover for the lease, or an ejectment for the estate. To that extent he would have been bound, probably no further, and certainly not as to any other persons than those landlords. This appears to us to be the rule of law, and we are of opinion that the bankrupt was not by law, by his notice and offer to surrender, estopped; and indeed it would be a great hardship if he were precluded by such an act. It is admitted, that his surrender to his commissioners is no estoppel, because it would be very perilule, to a bankrupt to dispute it and truits radictive by refusing to describe the surface of the surfac mutted, that his surrender to his commissioners is no estopped, because it would be very perilous to a bankrupt to dispute it, and try its validity by refusing to do so. (See Flower v. Herbert, 2 Ves. 326.) A similar observation, though not to the same extent, applies to this act; for whilst his commission disables him from carrying on his business, and deprives him, for the present, of the means of occupying his farm with advantage, it would be a great loss to the bankrupt to continue to do so; paying a rent and remaining liable to the covenants of the lease, and deriving no adequate benefit; and it counts be expected that he should incur such a loss in order to be applied to and it cannot be expected that he should incur such a loss, in order to be enabled to dispute his commission with effect. It is reasonable that he should do the best for himself in the unfortunate situation in which he is placed. It is not necessary to refer particularly to the cases in which a bankrupt has been precluded from disputing his commission, and which were cited in argument. The earlier cases fall within the principle above laid down. In Clarke v. Clarke, 6 Esp. 61, the bankrupt was not permitted to call that sale a conversion, which he himself had procured and sanctioned; in Like v. Howe, 6 Esp. 20, he was precluded from contesting the title of persons to be assignees, whom he by his conduct had procured to become so; and the last case on this subject, Watson v. Wace, 5 B. & C. 153, is distinguishable from the present, because Wace, one of the defendants, was the person from whose suit the plaintiff had been dis-Wace, one of the defendants, was the person from whose suit the plaintiff had been discharged, and therefore, perhaps, he might be estopped with respect to that person by his conduct towards him. See also Welland Canal Co. v. Hathaway, 8 Wend. 483; Jennings v. Whittaker, 4 Monroe, 50; Grant v. Jackson, Peake's Cas. 203; Ashmore v. Hardy, 7 C. & P. 501; Carter v. Bennett, 4 Fla. 343.

Clarke, 1 Russ. 601, 604, the recitals in certain deeds were held inadmissible, in favor of strangers, as evidence of pedigree. But it is to be noted that the parties to those deeds were strangers to the persons whose pedigree they undertook § 205. Judicial admissions. Judicial admissions, or those made in court by the party's attorney, generally appear either of record, as in pleading, or in the solemn admission of the attorney, made for the purpose of being used as a substitute for the regular legal evidence of the fact at the trial, or in a case stated for the opinion of the court. Both these have been already considered in the preceding pages.1 There is still another class of judicial admissions, made by the payment of money into court, upon a rule granted for that purpose. Here, it is obvious, the defendant conclusively admits that he owes the amount thus tendered in payment; 2 that it is due for the cause mentioned in the declaration; 3 that the plaintiff is entitled to claim it in the character in which he sues; 4 that the court has jurisdiction of the matter; 5 that the contract described is rightly set forth, and was duly executed;6 that it has been broken in the manner and to the extent declared;7 and if it was a case of goods sold by sample, that they agreed with the sample.8 In other words, the payment of money into court admits conclusively every fact which the plaintiff would be obliged to prove in order to recover that money. 9(a) But it admits noth-

is thus stated by Lord Denman: "Where one by his words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe the existence of a certain state of things, and induces him to act on that belief, so as to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the same time." Pickard v. Sears, 6 Ad. & El. 469, 474. The whole doctrine is ably discussed by Mr. Smith, and by Messrs. Hare and Wallace in their notes to the case of Trevivan v. Lawrence, and by Messis. (a) Bacon v. Charlton, 7 Cush. 581, 583. And where the declaration contains more than one count, and a part only of the sum demanded is paid into court, with-out specification to which of the counts it is to be applied, such payment is an ad-mission only that the defendant owes the plaintiff the sum so paid on some one or several of the counts, but it is not an ad-mission of any indebtedness under any one

ing beyond that. If, therefore, the contract is illegal, or invalid, the payment of money into court gives it no validity; and if the payment is general, and there are several counts, or contracts, some of which are legal and others not, the court will apply it to the former. 10 So, if there are two inconsistent counts, on the latter of which the money is paid into court, which is taken out by the plaintiff, the defendant is not entitled to show this to the jury, in order to negative any allegation in the first count. 11 The service of a summons to show cause why the party should not be permitted to pay a certain sum into court, and a fortiori, the entry of a rule or order for that purpose, is also an admission that so much is due. 12

§ 206. Admissions by mistake. It is only necessary here to add, that where judicial admissions have been made improvidently, and by mistake, the court will, in its discretion, relieve the party from the consequences of his error, by ordering a repleader, or by discharging the case stated, or the rule, or agreement, if made in court. 1 Agreements made out of court, between attorneys, concerning the course of proceedings in court, are equally under its control, in effect, by means of its coercive power over the attorney in all matters relating to professional character and conduct. But, in all these admissions, unless a clear case of mistake is made out, entitling the party to relief, he is held to the admission; which the court will proceed to act upon, not as truth in the abstract, but as a formula for the solution of the particular problem before it, namely, the case in judgment, without injury to the general administration of justice.2

The principle on which a party is relieved against judicial admissions made improvidently and by mistake, is equally applicable to admissions en pais. Accordingly, where dently and by mistake, is equally applicable to admissions en pais. Accordingly, where a legal liability was thus admitted, it was held, that the jury were at liberty to consider all the circumstances, and the mistaken view under which it was made; that the party might show that the admission made by him arose from a mistake as to the law; and that he was not estopped by such admission, unless the other party had been induced by it to alter his condition. § 207. Admissions acted upon conclusive. Admissions, whether of law or of fact, which have been atted upon by others, are conclusive against the party making them, in all cases, between him and the person whose conduct he has thus influenced. 1(a) It is of no importance whether they were made in express language to the person himself, or implied from the open and general conduct of the party. For, in the latter case, the implied declaration may be considered as addressed to every one in particular, who may have occasion to act upon it. In such cases the party is estopped, on grounds of public policy and good faith, from repudiating his own representations.2 This rule is familiarly illustrated by the case of a man cohabiting with a woman, and treating her in the face of the world as his wife, to whom in fact he is not married. Here, though he thereby acquires no rights against others, yet they may against him; and, therefore, if she is supplied with goods during such cohabitation, and the reputed husband is sued for them, he will not be permitted to disprove or deny the marriage. 3 So, if the lands of such woman are taken in execution for the reputed husband's debt, as his own freehold in her right, he is estopped, by the relation de facto of husband and wife, from saying that he held them as her servant.4 So, if a party has taken advantage of, or voluntarily acted under, the bankrupt or insolvent laws, he shall not be permitted, as against persons, parties to the same proceedings, to deny their regularity. 5 So, also, where one knowingly permits his name to be used as one of the parties in a trading firm, under such circumstances of publicity as to satisfy a jury that a stranger knew it, and believed him to be a partner, he is liable to such stranger in all transactions in which the latter engaged, and gave credit upon the faith of his being such partner.9 On the same principle it is, that, where one has assumed to act in an official or professional character, it is conclusive evidence against him that he possesses that character, even to the rendering him subject to the penalties attached to it. 10 So, also, a tenant who has paid rent, and acted as such, is not permitted to set up a superior title of a third person against his lessor, in bar of an ejectment brought by him; for he derived the possession from him as his tenant, and shall not be received to repudiate that relation. 11 But this rule does not preclude the tenant, who did not receive the possession from the adverse party, but has only attorned or paid rent to him, from showing that this was done by mistake. 12 This doctrine is also applied to the relation of bailor and bailee, the cases being in principle the same; 13 and also to that of principal and agent. 14 Thus, where goods in the possession of a debtor were attached as his goods, whereas they were the goods of another person, who received them of the sheriff, in bailment for safe custody, as the goods of the debtor,

But where the bailor was but a trustee, and is no longer liable over to the cestui que trust, a delivery to the latter is a good defence for the bailee against the bailor. This principle is familiarly applied to the case of goods attached by the sheriff, and delivered for safe keeping to a person who delivers them over to the debtor. After the lien of the sheriff is dissolved, he can have no action against his bailee. Whittier v. Smith, 11 Mass. 211; Cooper v. Mowry, 16 Mass. 8; Jenney v. Rodman, Id. 464. So, if the goods did not belong to the debtor, and the bailee has delivered them to the true owner. Learned v. Bryant, 13 Mass. 224; Fisher v. Bartleft, 8 Greenl. 122. Ogle v. Atkinson, 5 Taunt. 759, which seems to contradict the text, has been overruled, as to this point, by Gosling v. Birnie, supra. See also Story on Agency, § 217, n. on Agency, § 217, n.

¹⁴ Story on Agency, § 217, and cases there cited. The agent, however, is not estopped to set up the jus tertii in any case where the title of the principal was acquired by fraud; and the same principle seems to apply to other cases of bailment. Hardman v. Willcock, 9 Bing. 382, n.

without giving any notice of his own title, the debtor then possessing other goods, which might have been attached, it was held, that the bailee was estopped to set up his own title in bar of an action by the sheriff for the goods. 15 The acceptance of a bill of exchange is also deemed a conclusive admission, against the acceptor, of the genuineness of the signature of the drawer, though not of the indorsers, and of the authority of the agent, where it was drawn by procuration, as well as of the legal capacity of the preceding parties to make the contract. The indorsement, also, of a bill of exchange, or promissory note, is a conclusive admission of the genuineness of the preceding signatures, as well as of the authority of the agent, in cases of procuration, and of the capacity of the parties. So, the assignment of a replevin bond by the sheriff is an admission of its due execution and validity as a bond. 16 So, where land has been dedicated to public use, and enjoyed as such, and private rights have been acquired with reference to it, the original owner is precluded from revoking it.17 And these admissions may be pleaded by way of estoppel en pais. 18

§ 208. Truth or falsehood of admission immaterial, when. It makes no difference in the operation of this rule, whether the thing admitted was true or false: it being the fact that it has been acted upon that renders it conclusive. Thus, where two brokers, instructed to effect insurance, wrote in reply that they had got two policies effected, which was false: in an action of trover against them by the assured for the two policies, Lord Mansfield held them estopped to deny the existence of the policies, and said he should consider them as the actual insurers.1 This principle has also been applied to the ease of a sheriff, who falsely returned that he had taken bail.2

If it is a case of innocent mistake, still, if it has been acted upon by another, it is conclusive in his favor. 2 Simmons v. Bradford, 15 Mass. 82; Eaton v. Ogier, 2 Greenl. 46.

§ 209. Not acted upon not conclusive. On the other hand, verbal admissions which have not been acted upon, and which the party may controvert, without any breach of good faith or evasion of public justice, though admissible in evidence, are not held conclusive against him. Of this sort is the admission that his trade was a nuisance, by one indicted for setting it up in another place; 1 the admission by the defendant, in an action for criminal conversation, that the female in question was the wife of the plaintiff; 2 the omission by an insolvent, in his schedule of debts, of a particular claim, which he afterwards sought to enforce by suit.3 In these, and the like cases, no wrong is done to the other party by receiving any legal evidence showing that the admission was erroneous, and leaving the whole evidence, including the admission, to be weighed by the jury. (a)

§ 210. Public policy. In some other cases, connected with the administration of public justice and of government, the admission is held conclusive, on grounds of public policy. Thus, in an action on the statute against bribery, it was held that a man who had given money to another for his vote should not be admitted to say that such other person had no right to vote.4 So, one who has officiously intermeddled with the goods of another, recently deceased, is, in favor of creditors, estopped to deny that he is executor.⁵ Thus, also, where a ship-owner, whose ship had been seized as forfeited for breach of the revenue laws, applied to the Secretary of the Treasury for a remission of forfeiture, on the ground that it was incurred by the master ignorantly, and without fraud, and, upon making oath to the application, in the usual course, the ship was given up, he was not permitted afterwards to gainsay it, and prove the misconduct of the master, in an action by the latter against the owner, for his wages, on the same voyage, even by showing that the fraud had subsequently come to his knowledge.3 The mere fact that an admission was made under oath does not seem alone to render it conclusive against the party, but it adds vastly to the weight of the testimony, throwing upon him the burden of showing that it was a case of clear and innocent mistake. Thus, in a prosecution under the game laws, proof of the defendant's oath, taken under the income act, that the yearly value of his estates was less than £100, was held not quite conclusive against him, though very strong evidence of the fact.4 And even the defendant's belief of a fact, sworn to in an answer in chancery, is admissible at law, as evidence against him of the fact, though not conclusive.5

§ 211. Admissions in deeds. Admissions in deeds have already been considered, in regard to parties and privies,1 between whom they are generally confusive; (a) and when not technically so, they are entitled to great weight from the solemnity of their nature. But when offered in evidence by a stranger, or, as it seems, even by a party against a stranger, the adverse party is not estopped, but may repel their effect in the same manner as though they were only parol admissions.2(b)

3 Freeman v. Walker, 6 Greenl. 68. But a sworn entry at the custom-house of certain premises, as being rented by A, B, and C, as partners, for the sale of beer, though conclusive in favor of the crown, is not conclusive evidence of the partnership, in a civil suit, in favor of a stranger. Ellis v. Watson, 2 Stark. 453. The difference between this case and that in the text may be, that in the latter the party gained an advantage to himself, which was not the case in the entry of partnership: it being only incidental to the principal object; namely, the designation of a place where an excisable commodity was sold. ble commodity was sold.

& Grang. 110, the party had sworn positively to matter of fact in his own knowledge; but it was held not conclusive in law against him, though deserving of much weight with the jury. And see Carter v. Bennett, 4 Fla. 343.

5 Doe v. Steel, 3 Campb. 115. Answers in chancery are always admissible at law against the party, but do not seem to be held strictly conclusive, merely because they are sworn to. See Bull. N. P. 236, 237; 1 Stark. Evid. 284; Cameron v. Lightfoot, 2 W. Bl. 1190; Grant v. Jackson, Peake's Cas. 203; Studdy v. Sanders, 2 D. & R. 347; De Whelpdale v. Milburn, 5 Price, 485.

(a) It is scarcely necessary to say that all estoppels in deed must be mutual; i. e., must bind both parties. Hence, recitals in a deed may bind a party in one relation or capacity, and not in another. 2 Smith's Lead. Cas. 442. And writers of authority affirm that "it is now clearly settled, that a party is not estopped from avoiding his deed by proving that it was entered into from a frequency of the settled. entered into from a fraudulent, illegal, or immoral purpose." Ibid. There is an estoppel raised between landlord and ten-

(a) It is scarcely necessary to say that ant, by the lease, so that the tenant cannot take advantage of any defect in the landlord's title, which appears in the course of the trial in a suit for use and occupation. Dolby v. Iles, 11 Ad. & El.

> (b) When a deed has not been delivered, and therefore is not in effect as a deed, the recitals in it are not conclusive upon the party making them, but may be explained or rebutted. Bulley v. Bulley, L. R. 9 Ch. 739.

§ 212. Receipts, accounts, &c. Other admissions, though in writing, not having been acted upon by another to his prejudice, nor falling within the reasons before mentioned for estopping the party to gainsay them, are not conclusive against him, but are left at large, to be weighed with other evidence by the jury. Of this sort are receipts, or mere acknowledgments, given for goods or money, whether on separate papers, or indorsed on deeds or on negotiable securities; 1(a) adjustment of a loss, on a policy of insurance, made without full knowledge of all the circumstances, or under a mistake of fact, or under any other invalidating circumstances; 2 and accounts rendered, such as an attorney's bill,3 and the like. So, of a bill in chancery, which is evidence against the plaintiff of the admissions it contains, though very feeble evidence, so far as it may be taken as the suggestion of counsel.4 (b)

The receipt of the mortgagee, it has been held, is not evidence, of a payment by the mortgagor, at the date of the receipt, as against the assignee of the mortgage whose title dates subsequent to the date of the receipt. Foster v. Beals, 21 N. Y. Ct. of App. 247 (three judges dissenting). And it has been held in Pennsylvania that the statement to a stranger by the debtor whose debt has been barred by statute of limitations, that he had told his creditor he would pay him, is not proof of a promise made direct by debtor to creditor. Baker v. Singer Mfg. Co., 122 Pa.

(b) A bill in equity, signed and sworn to, is competent evidence against the party signing it and swearing to it. And a bill by several co-plaintiffs, signed by one of them by his counsel, is evidence against that plaintiff, if it is proved that he authorized his counsel to sign it. Brown v. Jewett, 120 Mass. 215.

CHAPTER XII.

OF CONFESSIONS.

§ 213. Confessions. The only remaining topic, under the general head of admissions, is that of confessions of guilt in criminal prosecutions, which we now propose to consider. It has already been observed that the rules of evidence, in regard to the voluntary admissions of the party, are the same in criminal as in civil cases. But, as this applies only to admissions brought home to the party, it is obvious that the whole subject of admissions made by agents and third persons, together with a portion of that of implied admissions, can of course have very little direct application to confessions of crime or of guilty intention. In treating this subject, however, we shall follow the convenient course pursued by other writers, distributing this branch of evidence into two classes; namely, first, the direct confessions of guilt; and, secondly, the indirect confessions, or those which, in civil cases, are usually termed "implied admissions." (a)

§ 214. To be received with caution. But here, also, as we have before remarked in regard to admissions, the evidence of verbal confessions of guilt is to be received with great caution. For, besides the danger of mistake, from the misapprehension of witnesses, the misuse of words, the failure of the party to express his own meaning, and the infirmity of memory, it should be recollected that the mind of the prisoner himself is oppressed by the calamity of his situation, and that he is often influenced by motives of hope or fear to make an untrue confession. (b) The zeal,

Of this character was the remarkable case of the two Boorns, convicted in the Supreme Court of Vermont, in Bennington County, in September term, 1819, of the murder of Russell Colvin, May 10, 1812. It appeared that Colvin, who was the brother-in-law of the prisoners, was a person of a weak and not perfectly sound mind; that he was considered burdensome to the family of the prison-too, which so generally prevails, to detect offenders, especially in cases of aggravated guilt, and the strong disposition, in the persons engaged in pursuit of evidence, to rely on slight grounds of suspicion, which are exaggerated into sufficient proof, together with the character of the persons necessarily called as witnesses, in cases of secret and atrocious crime, all tend to impair the ers, who were obliged to support him; that on the day of his disappearance, being in a distant field, where the prisoners were at work, a violent quarrel broke out between them; and that one of them struck him a severe blow on the back of the head with a club, which felled him to the ground. Some suspicions arose at that time that he was murdered; which were increased by the finding of his hat in the same field a few months afterwards. These suspicions in process of time subsided; but in 1819, one of the neighbors having repeatedly dreamed of the murder, with great minuteness of circumstance, both in regard to his death and the concealment of his remains, the prisoners were vehemently accused, and generally believed guilty of the murder. Under strict search, the pocket-knife of Colvin, and a button of his clothes, were found in an old open cellar in the same field, and in a hollow stump, not many rods from it, were discovered two nails and a number of bones, believed to be those of a man. Upon this evidence, together with their deliberate confession of the fact of the murder and concealment of the body in those places, they were convicted and sentenced to die. On the same day they applied to the legislature for a commutation of the sentence of death to that of perpetual imprisonment; which, as to one of them only, was granted. The confession being now withdrawn and contradicted, and a reward offered for the discovery of the missing man, he was found in New Jersey, and returned home in time to prevent the execution. He had fled for fear that they would kill him. The bones were those of some animal. They had been advised by some misjudging friends, that, as they would certainly be convicted, upon the circumstances proved, their only chance for life was by commutation of punishment, and that this depended on their making a penitential confession, and thereupon obtaining a recommendation to mercy. This pentiential confession, and thereupon obtaining a recommendation to hiercy. This case, of which there is a report in the Law Library of Harvard University, is critically examined in a learned and elaborate article in the North American Review, vol. x. pp. 418-429. For other cases of false confessions, see Wills on Circumstantial Evidence, p. 88; Phil. & Am. on Evid. 419; 1 Phil. Evid. 397, n.; Warickshall's Case, 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 299, n. Such a use of these anomalies, which should be regarded as mere exceptions, and which should speak only in the voice of warning, is no less unprofessional than impolitic; and should be regarded as offensive to the intelligence both of the court and jury." "Confessions and circumstantial evidence are entitled to a known and fixed standing in the law; and while it behooves students and lawyers to examine and carefully weigh their just force, and, as far as practicable, to define their proper limits, the advocate should never be induced, by profe sional zeal or a less worthy motive, to argue against their existence, be they respectively invoked, either in favor of or against the accused." value of this kind of evidence, and sometimes lead to its rejection, where, in civil actions, it would have been received.3 The weighty observation of Mr. Justice Foster is also to be kept in mind, that "this evidence is not, in the ordinary course of things, to be disproved by that sort of negative evidence, by which the proof of plain facts may be, and often is, confronted."

§ 215. If deliberate, of great weight. Subject to these cautions in receiving and weighing them, it is generally agreed that deliberate confessions of guilt are among the most effectual proofs in the law. 1(a) Their value depends on the supposition that they are deliberate and voluntary, and on the presumption that a rational being will not make admissions prejudicial to his interest and safety, unless when urged by the promptings of truth and conscience. Such confessions, so made by a prisoner, to any person, at any moment of time, and at any place, subsequent to the perpetration of the crime, and previous to his examination before the magistrate, are at common law received in evidence as among proofs of guilt.2 Confessions, too, like admissions, may be inferred from the conduct of the prisoner, and from his silent acquiescence in the statements of others, respecting himself, and made in his presence; provided they were not made under circumstances which prevented him from replying to them. 3 (b) The degree of credit due to them is to be estimated by the jury under the circumstances of each case. 4(c) Confessions made before the examining magistrate, or during imprisonment, are affected by additional considerations.

§ 216. Classified. Confessions are divided into two classes. namely, judicial and extrajudicial. Judicial confessions are those which are made before the magistrate, or in court, in the due course of legal proceedings; and it is essential that they be made of the free will of the party, and with full and perfect knowledge of the nature and consequences of the confession. Of this kind are the preliminary examinations, taken in writing by the magistrate, pursuant to statutes; and the plea of "guilty" made in open court to an indictment. Either of these is sufficient to found a conviction, even if to be followed by sentence of death, they being deliberately made, under the deepest solemnities, with the advice of counsel, and the protecting caution and oversight of the judge. Such was the rule of the Roman law: "Confessos in jure, pro judicatis haberi placet;" and it may be deemed a rule of universal jurisprudence. 3 (a) Extrajudicial confessions are those which are made by the party elsewhere than before a magistrate, or in court; this term embracing not only explicit and express confessions of crime, but all those admissions of the accused from which guilt may be implied. All confessions of this kind are receivable in evidence, being proved like other facts, to be weighed by the jury.

§ 217. Extrajudicial confessions uncorroborated. Whether extrajudicial confessions uncorroborated by any other proof of the corpus delicti are of themselves sufficient to found a conviction of the prisoner, has been gravely doubted. In the Roman law, such naked confessions amounted only to a semiplena probatio, upon which alone no judgment could be founded; and at most the party could only in proper cases be put to the torture. But if voluntarily made, in the presence of the injured party, or if reiterated at different times in his absence, and persisted in, they were received as plenary proof. In each of the English cases usually cited in favor of the sufficiency of this evidence, there was some corroborating circumstance.2 In the United States,

² Wheeling's Case, 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 349, n., seems to be an exception; but it is too briefly reported to be relied on. It is in these words: "Bnt in the case of John the prisoner's confession, when the corpus delicti is not otherwise proved, has been held insufficient for his conviction; and this opinion certainly best accords with the humanity of the criminal code, and with the great degree of caution applied in receiving and weighing the evidence of confessions in other cases, and it seems countenanced by approved writers on this branch of the law.3 (a)

 $\S~218$. Confession must be taken as a whole. In the proof of confessions, as in the case of admissions in civil cases, the whole of what the prisoner said on the subject, at the time of making the confession, should be taken together. (b) This rule is the dic-

Wheeling, tried before Lord Kenyon, at the Summer Assizes at Salisbury, 1789, it was determined that a prisoner may be convicted on his own confession, when proved by legal testimony, though it is totally uncorroborated by any other evidence." But in Eldridge's Case, Russ. & Ry. 440, who was indicted for larceny of a horse, the beast was found in his possession, and he had sold it for £12, after asking £35, which last was its fair value. In the case of Falkner and Bond, Id. 481, the person robbed was called upon his recognizance, and it was proved that one of the prisoners had endeavored to send a message to him to keep him from appearing. In White's Case, Id. 508, there was strong circumstantial evidence, both of the larceny of the oats from the prosecutor's stable, and of the prisoner's guilt; part of which evidence was also given in Tippet's Case, Id. 509, who was indicted for the same larceny; and there was the additional control of the same larceny. tional proof, that he was an under-hostler in the same stable. And in all these cases, except that of Falkner and Bond, the confessions were solemnly made before the examining magistrate, and taken down in due form of law. In the case of Falkner and Bond, the confessions were repeated, once to the officer who apprehended them, and afterwards on hearing the depositions read over, which contained the charge. In Stone's Case, Dyer, 215, pl. 50, which is a brief note, it does not appear that the corpus delicti was not otherwise proved; on the contrary, the natural inference from the report is, that it was. In Francia's Case, 6 State Tr. 58, there was much corroborative evidence; but the prisoner was acquitted; and the opinion of the judges went only to the sufficiency of a confession solemnly made, upon the arraignment of the party for high treason, and this only upon the particular language of the statutes of Edw. VI. See Foster, Disc. pp. 240-242.

But the witness who proves it must be able to remember all that was said at the confession (Berry v. tate of reason, as well as of humanity. The prisoner is supposed to have stated a proposition respecting his own connection with the crime; but it is not reasonable to assume that the entire proposition, with all its limitations, was contained in one sentence, or in any particular number of sentences, excluding all other parts of the conversation. As in other cases the meaning and intent of the parties are collected from the whole writing taken together, and all the instruments, executed at one time by the parties, and relating to the same matter, are equally resorted to for that purpose; so here, if one part of a conversation is relied on, as proof of a confession of the crime, the prisoner has a right to lay before the court the whole of what was said in that conversation; not being confined to so much only as is explanatory of the part already proved against him, but being permitted to give evidence of all that was said upon that occasion, relative to the subject-matter in issue.2 (b) For, as has been already observed respecting admissions, unless the whole is received and considered, the true meaning and import of the part which is good evidence against him cannot be ascertained. But if, after the whole statement of the prisoner is given in evidence, the prosecutor can contradict any part of it, he is at liberty to do so; and then the whole testimony is left to the jury for their consideration, precisely as in other cases, where one part of the evidence is contradictory to another.⁴ For it is not to be supposed that all the parts of a confession are entitled to equal credit. may believe that part which charges the prisoner, and reject that which is in his favor, if they see sufficient grounds for so doing. 5 (c) If what he said in his own favor is not contradicted by evidence offered by the prosecutor, nor improbable in itself, it will naturally be believed by the jury; but they are not bound to give weight to it on that account, but are at liberty to judge of it like other evidence, by all the circumstances of the case. confession implicates other persons by name, yet it must be proved as it was made, not omitting the names; but the judge will instruct the jury, that it is not evidence against any but the prisoner who made it.6

§ 219. Must be voluntary. Before any confession can be received in evidence in a criminal case, it must be shown that it was voluntary. The course of practice is, to inquire of the witness whether the prisoner had been told that it would be better for him to confess, or worse for him if he did not confess, or whether language to that effect had been addressed to him. 1 "A free and voluntary confession," said Eyre, C. B.,2 "is deserving of the highest credit, because it is presumed to flow from the strongest sense of guilt, and therefore it is admitted as proof of the crime to which it refers; but a confession forced from the mind by the flattery of hope, or by the torture of fear, comes in so questionable a shape, when it is to be considered as the evidence of guilt, that no credit ought to be given to it; and therefore it is rejected." The material inquiry, therefore, is, whether the confession has been obtained by the influence of hope or fear, applied by a third person to the prisoner's mind. The evidence to this point, being in its nature preliminary, is addressed to the judge, who admits the proof of the confession to the jury, or rejects it, as he may or may not find it to have been drawn from the prisoner, by the application of those motives. 4 (a) This matter rest-

It may be added, that the credit to be given to the confession may depend much on the probability that the persons named were likely to engage in such a transaction. See also Rex v. Fletcher, Id. 250. The point was decided in the same way in Rex v. Walkley, 6 C. & P. 175, by Gurney, B., who said it had been much considered by the judges. Mr. Justice Parke thought otherwise. ³ In Scotland, this distinction between voluntary confessions and those which have been extorted by fear or elicited by promises is not recognized, but all confessions, obtained in either mode, are admissible at the discretion of the judge. In strong cases of undue influence, the course is to reject them; otherwise, the credibility of the evidence is left to the jury. See Alison's Criminal Law of Scotland, pp. 581, 582.

⁽a) Brown v. State, 91 Ill. 506; John- 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 80. In Massachusetts son v. State, 59 Ala. 37; Wade v. State, the rule has varied. In the earlier cases ing wholly in the discretion of the judge, upon all the circumstances of the case, it is difficult to lay down particular rules a priori, for the government of that discretion. The rule of law, applicable to all cases, only demands that the confession shall have been made voluntarily, without the appliances of hope or fear by any other person; and whether it was so made or not is for him to determine, upon consideration of the age, situation, and character of the prisoner, and the circumstances under which it was made. Language addressed by others, and sufficient to overcome the mind of one, may have no effect upon that of another; a consideration which may serve to reconcile some contradictory decisions, where the principal facts appear similar in the reports, but the lesser circumstances, though often very ma-

it was considered a question for the judge. Chabbock's Case, 1 Mass. 144; Com. v. Taylor, 5 Cush. 606; Com. v. Morey, 1 Gray, 461. Then in several cases where the question of inducement was a complicated one, the whole evidence was submitted to the jury, with instructions that, if they were satisfied that there were such inducements, they should disregard and reject the confession. Com. v. Piper, 120 Mass. 185; Com. v. Smith, 119 Mass. 305; Com. v. Cullen, 111 Mass. 436; Com. v. Cullen, 111 Mass. 436; Com. v. Culfee, 108 Mass. 285. But in a later case (Com. v. Culver, 126 Mass. 464), the court has brought the practice back to the original rule, leaving the question of the admissibility of the evidence entirely to the court, and its weight to the jury. In a still later case, the court in Massachusetts say: "When a confession is offered in evidence, the question whether it is voluntary is to be decided primarily by the presiding justice. If he is satisfied that it is voluntary, it is admissible; otherwise it should be excluded. When there is conflicting testimony, the humaue practice in this Commonwealth is for the judge, if he decides that it is admissible, to instruct the jury that they may consider all the evidence, and that they should exclude the confession if, upon the whole evidence in the case, they are satisfied that it was not the voluntary act of the defendant." Com. v. Preece, 140 Mass. 276.

the present time in some States to leave the question whether the confession was voluntary or not to the jury; and in those States, in cases where there is conflicting evidence as to the fact of the voluntariness of the confession, the rule seems to be that the jury are not required to find the preliminary fact that confessions are voluntary, beyond a reasonable doubt; but if they are satisfied by the preponderance of evidence, that the confessions are voluntary, they become admissible evidence. Soto, 49 Cal. 69; Rufer v. State, 25 Ohio St. 464. It is incumbent on the prosecution, if there is any question as to the voluntariness of the confession, to show that the confession was voluntary, and if this is not shown, the confession should be excluded. § 220. Illustrations of this rule. The rule under consideration has been illustrated in a variety of cases. Thus, where the prosecutor said to the prisoner, "Unless you give me a more satisfactory account, I will take you before a magistrate," evidence of the confession thereupon made was rejected. It was also rejected, where the language used by the prosecutor was, "If you will tell me where my goods are, I will be favorable to you;"2 where the constable who arrested the prisoner said, "It is of no use for you to deny it, for there are the man and boy who will swear they saw you do it;" 3 where the prosecutor said, "He only wanted his money, and if the prisoner gave him that he might go to the devil, if he pleased;" 4 and where he said he should be obliged to the prisoner, if he would tell all he knew about it, adding, "If you will not, of course we can do nothing," meaning nothing for the prisoner.⁵ So where the prisoner's superior officer in the police said to him, "Now be cautious in the answers you give me to the questions I am going to put to you about this watch;" the

^{6 (}The cases on this subject have recently been very fully reviewed in Reg. v. Baldry, 16 Jur. 599 [decided in the Court of Criminal Appeal, April 24, 1852, 12 Eng. Law & Eq. 590]. In that case, the constable who apprehended the prisoner, having told him the nature of the charge, said: "He need not say anything to criminate himself; what he did say would be taken down, and used as evidence against him;" and the prisoner thereupon having made a confession, the court held the confession admissible. Parke, B., said: "By the law of England, in order to render a confession admissible in evidence, it must be perfectly voluntary; and there is no doubt that any inducement, in the nature of a promise or of a threat, held out by a person in authority, vitiates a confession. The decisions to that effect have gone a long way. Whether it would not have been better to have left the whole to go to the jury, it is now too late to inquire; but I think there has been too much tenderness towards prisoners in this matter. I confess that I cannot look at the decisions without some shame, when I consider what objections have prevailed to prevent the reception of confessions in evidence; and I agree with the observation, that the rule has been extended quite too far, and that justice and common sense have too frequently been sacrificed at the shrine of mercy." Lord Campbell, C. J., stated the rule to be, that "if there be any worldly advantage held out, or any harm threatened, the confession must be excluded;" in which the other judge concurred.) confession was held inadmissible. There is more difficulty in ascertaining what is such a threat, as will exclude a confession: though the principle is equally clear, that a confession induced by threats is not voluntary, and therefore cannot be received. 7 (a)

⁶ Reg. v. Fleming, 1 Armst. Macartn. & Ogle, 330. But where the examining magistrate said to the prisoner, "Be sure you say nothing but the truth, or it will be taken against you, and may be given in evidence against you at your trial," the statement thereupon made was held admissible. 7 Thornton's Case, 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 27; Long's Case, 6 C. & P. 179; Roscoe's Crim. Evid. 34; Dillon's Case, 4 Dall. 116. Where the prisoner's superior in the post-office said to the prisoner's wife, while her husband was in custody for opening and detaining a letter, "Do not be frightened; 'I hope nothing will happen to your husband beyond the loss of his situation;" the prisoner's subsequent confession was rejected, it appearing that the wife might have communicated this to the prisoner. Reg. v. Harding, 1 Armst. Macartn. & Ogle, 340. Where a girl, thirteen years old, was charged with administering poison to her mistress, with intent to murder; and the surgeon in attendance had told her, "it would be better for her to speak the truth;" it was held that her confession, thereupon made, was not admissible. Reg. v. Garner, it was held that her confession, thereupon made, was not admissible. Reg. v. Garner, 12 Jur. 944; 1 Denison's Cr. Cas. 329.

(a) It seems settled that the phrase "you had better confess," or its equivalent, used by one in authority towards the prisoner, is prima facie an undue exertion of influence over him, and if unexplained is enough to exclude a subsequent confession. Thus, in Rex v. Kingston, 4 C. & P. 387, "you had better tell all you know," and in Reg. v. Bate, 11 Cox, C. Ca. 686, where a policeman said to the prisoner, "It might be better for you to tell the truth and not a lie," it was held to exclude subsequent confessions. Kelly, C. B., in Reg. v. Jarvis, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 96, says "the words 'you had better,' seem to have acquired a sort of technical meaning, that they hold out an inducement or a threat within the rule that excludes confessions." People v. Phillips, 42 N. Y. 200; People v. Barrie, 49 Cal. 342; Reg. v. Cheverton, 2 F. & F. 833.

In a late English case, the prisoner, previous to being charged before a magistrate, was taken into a room with the presenter and the police inspector. The prosecutor and the police inspector. The prosecutor then said to the prisoner, "He (i. e. the police inspector) tells me you are making house-breaking implements; if that is so, you had better tell the truth, it may be better for you," and this was held enough to exclude his confession. Reg. v. Fennell, L. R. 7 Q. B. Div.

It is also held now, that if the words amount to no more than a caution or advice, they will not exclude the confession. Thus, in Reg. v. Reeve, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 362, the words, "you had better" confess, with the addition, "as good boys," said by the mother of one of the prisoners to him, were held not to exclude the confession, and Reg. v. Jarvis was cited with approval. The case of Reg. v. Baldry, 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 430, indicates a reaction from the former extreme cases. While admitting the exclusionary force of "you had better," the court holds that the true test is whether it is left a matter of indifference to the indifference to the prisoner, whether he should open his mouth, and that from a constable these words "You need not say anything to criminate yourself, but what you do say will be taken down and used as evidence against you," did not amount to an inducement. So, in Com. v. Sego, 125 Mass. 210, where the employer, in a prosecution against his clerk for larceny, said, "I am satisfied there are other receivers whom we have not yet discovered. ceivers whom we have not yet discovered. I should like to have you make a clean breast of this matter, as Williams (an accomplice) has done," the confession was admitted. Cf. Reg. v. Reason, 12 Cox. Cr. Cas. 228; Reg. v. Jones, Id. 241; Com. v. Mitchell, 117 Mass. 431; Fonts v. State, 8 Ohio St. 98.

A question has sometimes arisen whether a confession in reply to a question which assumes the guilt of a prisoner is admissible. If the question, under the circumstances, amounts to an unfair advantage so as to entrap a prisoner, the confession so obtained may be little better as a confession than one obtained by any other undue influence. McClain v. Com.,

110 Pa. St. 269.

A promise to use the prisoner as State's witness will exclude the confession (State v. Johnson, 30 La. An. Pt. 11. 881. Cf. Young v. Com., 8 Bush (Ky.), 366); or to § 220. (a) Same subject. It is extremely difficult to reconcile these and similar cases with the spirit of the rule, as expounded by Chief Baron Eyre, whose language is quoted in a preceding section. The difference is between confessions made voluntarily, and those "forced from the mind by the flattery of hope, or by the torture of fear." If the party has made his own calculation of the advantages to be derived from confessing, and thereupon has confessed the crime, there is no reason to say that it is not a voluntary confession. It seems that, in order to exclude a confession, the motive of hope or fear must be directly applied by a third person, and must be sufficient, in the judgment of the court, so far to overcome the mind of the prisoner as to render the confession unworthy of credit.²

§ 221. Same subject. But though promises or threats have been used, yet if it appears to the satisfaction of the judge that their influence was totally done away before the confession was made, the evidence will be received. Thus, where a magistrate, who was also a clergyman, told the prisoner that if he was not the man who struck the fatal blow, and would disclose all he knew respecting the murder, he would use all his endeavors and influence to prevent any ill consequences from falling on him; and he accordingly wrote to the Secretary of State, and received an answer, that mercy could not be extended to the prisoner; which answer he communicated to the prisoner, who afterwards made a confession to the coroner; it was held that the confession was clearly voluntary, and as such it was admitted. So, where the prisoner had been induced, by promises of favor, to make a confession, which was for that cause excluded, but about five months Threatening conduct of the arresting officer, if sufficient to elicit a false confession, will exclude the confession made. (Self v. State, 6 Baxt. Drake, 82 N. C. 592. Cf. Wilson v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 232. But in each case the circumstances must determine the admissibility of the confession. See Com. v. Cuffee, 108 Mass.

The mere fact that the prisoner is under arrest is not of itself enough to exclude his confession. Com. v. Smith, 119 Mass. 305; Com. v. Cuffee, 108 Mass. 285; Cox v. People, 19 Hun (N. afterwards, and after having been solemnly warned by two magistrates that he must expect death and prepare to meet it, he again made a full confession, this latter confession was admitted in evidence.² In this case, upon much consideration, the rule was stated to be, that, although an original confession may have been obtained by improper means, yet subsequent confessions of the same or of like facts may be admitted, if the court believes, from the length of time intervening, or from proper warning of the consequences of confession, or from other circumstances, that the delusive hopes or fears, under the influence of which the original confession was obtained, were entirely dispelled.³ In the absence of any such circumstances, the influence of the motives proved to have been offered will be presumed to continue, and to have produced the confession, unless the contrary is shown by clear evidence; and the confession will therefore be rejected. 4 (a) Accordingly, where an inducement has been held out by an officer, or a prosecutor, but the prisoner is subsequently warned by the magistrate, that what he may say will be evidence against himself, or that a confession will be of no benefit to him, or he is simply cautioned by the magistrate not to say anything against himself, his confession, afterwards made, will be received as a voluntary confession.5

(a) As the presumption is based on the existence of such inducements as vitiated the first confession, it was held that if these inducements failed to elicit a confession when they were first applied by one person, a subsequent confession to another person will not be excluded by them. McAdory v. State, 62 Ala. 154. It has been held that, under the circumstances, a confession was not excluded by the fact that another, made two days previously, that another, made two days previously, was made under duress. State v. Frazier, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 539. Cf. State v. Chambers, 39 Iowa, 179. The proof that the effect of the former inducements has been done away must be clear. Reg. v. Bate, 11 Cox, C. C. 686; Walker v. State, 7 Tex. App. 245. Parton a State 55. Also 65. States 245; Porter v. State, 55 Ala. 95; State v. Jones, 54 Mo. 478; Beery v. U. S., 2 Col. Terr. 186; People v. to decide whether the proof is sufficient. Porter v. State, ante.

In Reg. v. Bate, ante, it was held that in England, reading the statutory caution which is required to be read to the suspected person before the examination, is enough to rebut the presumption that a prior inducement still is in force. If the confession of an accomplice is introduced with proof that it was obtained by promises of reward, in order to weaken the credit of his confession of the crime in open court on the trial of his accomplice, it is competent for the State to introduce rebutting evidence that the first confession was voluntary, since the evidence that the first confession was procured by promises affects the credibility of the witness and may therefore be met by the counter-testimony referred to. Com. v. Ackert, 133 Mass. 402.

§ 222. Inducements. Authority. In regard to the person by whom the inducements were offered, it is very clear, that if they were offered by the prosecutor, or by his wife, the prisoner being his servant,2 or by an officer having the prisoner in custody,3 or by a magistrate,4 or, indeed, by any one having authority over him, or over the prosecution itself,5 or by a private person in the presence of one in authority,6—the confession will not be deemed voluntary, and will be rejected. (a) The authority, known to be

If the inducement was held out by a person of superior authority, and the confession was afterwards made to one of inferior authority, as a turnkey, it seems inadmissible, unless the prisoner was first cautioned by the latter. Rex v. Cooper, 5 C. & P. 535. In United States v. Chapman, 4 Am. Law Jour. N. s. 440, the prisoner had made a confession to the high constable who had him under arrest, upon express promises of favor by the officer. After being detained fortyfour hours in the watch-house, he was brought before the mayor, in the same apartment where he had made the confession, and his examination was taken in presence of the same high constable. The mayor knew nothing of the previous confession; and gave the prisoner no more than the usual caution not to answer any questions unless he pleased, and telling him that he was not bound to criminate himself. In this examination, the same confession was repeated; but the judge rejected it as inadmissible, being of opinion that, being made in the same room where it was first made, and under the eye of the same police officer to whom it was made, there was "strong reason to infer that the last examination was but intended to put in due form of law the first confession, and that the promise of favor continued as first made." The legal presumption, he said, was, that the influence, which induced the confession to the officer, continued when it was made to the mayor; and this presumption it was the duty of the prosecutor to repel.

son, 84 Cal. 598. In Reg. v. Parker, Leigh & Cave, 42, it upon his statement that it would be better was held that where one of three brothers, for the defendant to confess, has been all charged with stealing, said in the pres-possessed by those persons, may well be supposed both to animate the prisoner's hopes of favor, on the one hand, and on the other to inspire him with awe, and in some degree to overcome the powers of his mind. It has been argued, that a confession made upon the promises or threats of a person, erroneously believed by the prisoner to possess such authority, the person assuming to act in the capacity of an officer or magistrate, ought, upon the same principle, to be excluded. The principle itself would seem to require such exclusion; but the point is not known to have received any judicial consideration.

§ 223. Same subject. But whether a confession, made to a person who has no authority, upon an inducement held out by that person, is receivable, is a question upon which learned judges are known to entertain opposite opinions. In one case, it was laid down as a settled rule, that any person telling a prisoner that it would be better for him to confess, will always exclude any confession made to that person.2 And this rule has been applied in a variety of cases, both early and more recent.3 On the other hand, it has been held, that a promise made by an indifferent person, who interfered officiously, without any kind of authority, and promised, without the means of performance, can scarcely be deemed sufficient to produce any effect even on the weakest mind, as an inducement to confess; and, accordingly, confessions made under such circumstances have been admitted in evidence.4 The difficulty experienced in this matter seems to have arisen from the endeavor to define and settle, as a rule of law, the facts and circumstances which shall be deemed, in all cases, ence of the prosecutor and a policeman, to his brother, "Well, John, you had better tell Mr. Walker (the prosecutor) the truth," the confession was admissible. Cf. Reg. v. Luckhurst, 6 Cox, C. C. 243. And where a female prisoner was temporarily placed under the charge of another woman, who said, while not in the presence of the officer, "How came you to do it?" the confession was admitted. to have influenced the mind of the prisoner, in making the confession. In regard to persons in authority, there is not much room to doubt. Public policy, also, requires the exclusion of confessions, obtained by means of inducements held out by such persons. Yet even here the age, experience, intelligence, and constitution, both physical and mental, of prisoners, are so various, and the power of performance so different, in the different persons promising, and under different circumstances of the prosecution, that the rule will necessarily sometimes fail of meeting the truth of the case. But as it is thought to succeed in a large majority of instances, it is wisely adopted as a rule of law applicable to them all. Promises and threats by private persons, however, not being found so uniform in their operation, perhaps may, with more propriety, be treated as mixed questions of law and fact; the principle of law, that the confession must be voluntary, being strictly adhered to, and the question, whether the promises or threats of the private individuals who employed them, were sufficient to overcome the mind of the prisoner, being left to the discretion of the judge, under all the circumstances of the case. 5(a)

In a recent case, in England, the rule stated in the text is admitted to be the best rule, though the learned judges felt themselves restricted from adopting it by reason of previous decisions. It was a prosecution against a female servant for concealing the death of her bastard child; and the question was upon the admissibility of a confession made to her mistress, who told her "she had better speak the truth." The judgment of the court was delivered by Parke, B., as follows: "The cases on this subject have gone quite far enough, and onght not to be extended: It is admitted that the

(a) This method of treating the question was adopted in Beggarly v. State, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 520, and McAdory v. State, 62 Ala. 154. In Young v. Com., 8 Bush (Ky.), 366, it is said that con-8 Bush (Ky.), 366, it is said that confessions made to persons not in authority are generally admissible, and that seems to be the rule in several of the United States, unless the circumstances show a plain case of gross intimidation. Code, § 3793; Johnson v. State, 61 Ga.

In Com. v. Morey, 1 Gray (Mass.), 461, p. 463, Shaw, C. J., says: "Of course such inducement must be held out to the accused by some one who has, or who is supposed by the accused to have, some power or authority to assure to him some power of authority to assure to film the promised good, or cause or influence the threatened injury." Cf. Com. v. Taylor, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 606.

Stephen (Dig. Evid. art. 22) states the English rule to be, without exception, that the inducement, threat, or promise must proceed from a person in authority.

§ 224. Examinations. The same rule, that the confession must be voluntary, is applied in cases where the prisoner has been examined before a magistrate, in the course of which examination the confession is made. The practice of examining the accused was familiar in the Roman jurisprudence, and is still continued in Continental Europe; 1 but the maxim of the common law was, Nemo tenetur prodere seipsum; and therefore no examination of the prisoner himself was permitted in England, until the passage of the statutes of Philip and Mary. 2(a) By these statutes, the confessions ought to be excluded, unless voluntary, and the judge, not the jury, ought to determine whether they are so. One element in the consideration of the question as to determine whether they are so. One element in the consideration of the question as to their being voluntary is, whether the threat or inducement was such as to be likely to influence the prisoner. Perhaps it would have been better to have held (when it was determined that the judge was to decide whether the confession was voluntary) that in all cases he was to decide that point upon his own view of all the circumstances, including the nature of the threat or inducement, and the character of the person holding it out, together; not necessarily excluding the confession on account of the character of the person holding out the inducement or threat. But a rule has been laid down in different precedents by which we are bound, and that is, if the threat or inducement is held out, actually or constructively, by a person in authority, it cannot be received, however slight the threat or inducement; and the prosecutor, magistrate, or constable is such a person; and so the master son m aumoruly, it cannot be received, however sight the threat or inducement; and the prosecutor, magistrate, or constable is such a person; and so the master or mistress may be. If not held out by one in authority, they are clearly admissible. The authorities are collected in Mr. Joy's very able treatise on Confessions and Challenges, p. 23. But, in referring to the cases where the master and mistress have been held to be persons in authority, it is only when the offence concerns the master or mistress that their holding out the threat or promise renders the confession inadmissible. In Rex v. Upchurch (1 M. Cr. C. 465), the offence was arson of the dwelling house, in the management of which the mistress took a mort. Bear or Taylor (8 Car. & P. 733) is to the like effect. So, lex v. Carrington (ld. 109) and Rex v. Howell (Id. 534). So, where the threat was used by the master of a ship to one of the crew, and the offence committed on board the ship by one of the crew towards another; and in that case also the master of the ship threatened to apprehend him; and the and in that case also the master of the ship threatened to apprehend him; and the offence being a felony, and a felony actually committed, would have a power to do so, on reasonable suspicion that the prisoner was guilty. In Rex v. Warringham, tried before me at the Surrey Spring Assizes, 1851, the confession was in consequence of what was said by the mistress of the prisoner, she being in the habit of managing the shop, and the offence being larceny from the shop. This appears from my note. In the present case, the offence of the prisoner in killing her child, or concealing its dead body, was in no way an offence against the mistress of the house. She was not the prosecutivity then, and there was no probability of herself or the husband being the prosecutor of an indictment for that offence. In practice, the prosecution is always the result of a coroner's inquest. Therefore we are clearly of opinion that her confession was properly received." See Reg. v. Moore, 16 Jur. 622; 12 Eng. L. & Eq. 583.

In South Carolina, it has been held, that where the prisoner, after due warning of all the consequences, and the allowance of sufficient time for reflection, confesses his guilt to a private person, who has no control over his person or the prosecution, the confession is admissible in evidence, although the person may have influence and ability to aid him. State v. Kirby, 1 Strob. 155.

The signature of the prisoner, when not specially required by statute, is not necessary; though it is expedient, and therefore is usually obtained.4 The certificate of the magistrate, as will be hereafter shown in its proper place, 5 is conclusive evidence of the manner in which the examination was conducted; and, therefore where he had certified that the prisoner was examined under oath, parol evidence to show that in fact no oath had been administered to the prisoner was held inadmissible. But the examination cannot be given in evidence until its identity is proved.⁷ If the prisoner has signed it with his name, this implies that he put to a prisoner in his preliminary examination, and which is as follows:

"Having heard the evidence, do you wish to say anything in answer to the charge? You are not obliged to say anything unless you desire to do so, but whatever you say will be taken down in writing, and may be given in evidence against you upon your trial."

The answer given to this question would be admissible. If any other question should he put by the magistrate, the answer would be excluded, because influenced by the sit-uation of the prisoner. Reg. v. Pettit, 4 Cox, C. C. 164; Reg. v. Berriman, 6 ld. 388. Cf. Stephen, Dig. Evid. note 16. As to the admissibility of confessions made by the accused while in the custody of a policeman, see Reg. v. Johnston, 15 Ir. C. L. 69.

can read, and it is admitted on proof of his signature; but if he has signed it with his mark only, or has not signed it at all, the magistrate or his clerk must be called to identify the writing, and prove that it was truly read to the prisoner, who assented to its correctness.8

§ 225. Same subject. The manner of examination is, therefore, particularly regarded; and if it appears that the prisoner had not been left wholly free, and did not consider himself to be so, in what he was called upon to say, or did not feel himself at liberty wholly to decline any explanation or declaration whatever, the examination is not held to have been voluntary.1 In such cases, not only is the written evidence rejected, but oral evidence will not be received of what the prisoner said on that occasion.2 The prisoner, therefore, must not be sworn.3 (a) But where, being mistaken for a witness, he was sworn, and afterwards, the mistake being discovered, the deposition was destroyed; and the prisoner, after having been cautioned by the magistrate, subsequently made a statement; this latter statement was held admissible.4 It may, at first view, appear unreasonable to refuse evidence of confession, merely because it was made under oath, thus having in favor of its truth one of the highest sanctions known in the law. But it is to be observed, that none but voluntary confessions are admissible; and that if to the perplexities inate himself will be used as evidence against him on his trial. After that admonition, it ought to be left entirely to himself whether he will make any statement or not; but he ought not to be dissuaded from making a perfectly voluntary confession, because that is shutting one of the sources of justice." The same course, in substance, was recommended by Lord Denman, in Reg. v. Arnold, 8 C. & P. 622. The omission of this course, however, will not alone render the confession inadmissible.

⁸ Rex v. Chappel, 1 M. & Rob. 395.

2 Rex v. Rivers, 7 C. & P. 177; Rex v. Smith, 1 Stark. 242; Harman's Case, 6 Pa. Law Journ. 120. But an examination, by way of question and answer, is now held good, if it appears free from any other objection. Rex v. Ellis, Ry. & M. 432; 2 Stark. Evid. 29, n. (g); though formerly it was held otherwise, in Wilson's Case, Holt, 597. See acc. Jones's Case, 2 Russ, 658, n.; Roscoc's Crim. Evid. 44. So, if the questions were put by a police-officer (Rex v. Thornton, 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 27), or by a fellow-prisoner (Rex v. Shaw, 6 C. & P. 372), they are not, on that account, objectionable. See also Rex v. Wild, 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 452; infra, § 229.

and embarrassments of the prisoner's situation are added the danger of perjury, and the dread of additional penalties, the confession can scarcely be regarded as voluntary; but, on the contrary, it seems to be made under the very influences which the law is particularly solicitous to avoid. But where the prisoner, having been examined as a witness, in a prosecution against another person, answered questions to which he might have demurred, as tending to criminate himself, and which, therefore, he was not bound to answer, his answers are deemed voluntary, and, as such, may be subsequently used against himself, for all purposes; though where his answers are compulsory, and under the peril of punishment for contempt, they are not received. State v.

Broughton, 7 Ired. 96.

(b) It has been held that where suspicion pointed strongly towards a man as guilty of a crime, and he, knowing himself to be so suspected, and to be in immediate danger of arrest, went with the officers before a magistrate, and there was put on oath and turned informer, and testified so as to implicate others, his answers to the questions of the magistrate were inadmissible against him. Reg. v. Gillis, 11 Cox, C. C. 69. In such a case, the person is substantially in the position of one accused of a crime, and should be entitled to the same protection. The rule in the United States, however, seems to be that if the person testifying is not under arrest, though he may be under great suspicion at the time, and may be arrested after the examination, yet his testimony given under oath is admissible; but if he is actually under arrest, though it may be without a warrant, his testimony is inadmissible. Teachout v. People, 41 N. Y. 8; Hendrickson v. People, 10 N. Y. 13; People v. McMahon, 15 N. Y. 384. The rulings in these cases were discussed in a later case in New York, People v. Mondon, 103 N. Y. 214. In this case, the question arose upon the admissibility in evidence, upon the trial of the prisoner, of statements alleged to have been made by him on his examination under oath at the coroner's inquest, held upon the body of the deceased after it had been found, which was a considerable time subsequent to the killing. After the finding of the body of the deceased, the defendant was arrested without warrant, as the suspected murderer. While he was thus in custody, the coroner impanelled a jury and held an inquest, and the prisoner was examined by the district attorney and by the coroner. The prisoner was an igno-rant Italian laborer, unfamiliar with the English language. He was unattended by counsel, and was not in any manner informed of his rights, or that he was not bound to answer questions tending to criminate him. He was twice examined; on the first occasion the examination was taken by questions put either by the district atby questions put either by the district at-torney or by the coroner, and the result written down by the coroner, who then read the evidence over to him, line by line, and asked him if he understood it, and if it was the truth, and he said it was, and the coroner then re-swore him to the deposition. At the trial of the indictment, the coroner was asked by the State various questions as to what the defendant had stated at the coroner's inquest, as to his having been on the ground where the body of the deceased was found, as to where he had last seen the deceased alive, as to where deceased was then going, whether he was alone, as to the whereabouts of the defendant on the day the deceased disappeared, § 226. Same subject. Thus, also, where several persons, among whom was the prisoner, were summoned before a committing magistrate upon an investigation touching a felony, there being at that time no specific charge against any person; and the prisoner, being sworn with the others, made a statement, and at the

as to threats made by deceased to have the defendant arrested for marrying the daughter of deceased while having another wife living, and other questions tending to establish the theory of the prosecution as to the motive of the defendant, in committing the murder. Some of the statements of the prisoner on his examination, as testified to by the coroner, confirmed the theory of the prosecution as to the hostile feeling between the prisoner and the de-ceased, and the quarrels which had taken place between them, but the others were denials of implicating circumstances. The deposition taken by the coroner, as before stated, was not offered in evidence, but the coroner in giving his testimony, referred to it to refresh his recollection with respect to the testimony given by the defendant on the inquest. The court held that the evidence of the prisoner's confession was inadmissible, and discussed the case as fol-lows: "It thus appears that when the prisoner was called upon to make his statements on oath before the coroner, he stood in the attitude of an accused person, and was required to answer for himself, as a party, and not as a mere witness to aid the coroner in investigating the cause of the death of the deceased. The cause of the death was evident. The body had been examined, with the marks of violence plainly apparent; the bruised head, the fractured skull, and broken club lying near it with hair still adhering to it."... "The prisoner occupied the position of a person accused of crime, and his situation was similar to that of such a person before examining magistrate, and although the tribunal might be different, yet, upon principle, his rights would be the same in both cases." . . . "There has been no case overruling the McMahon Case." The court then proceeded to show the difference between the case at bar and the case of People v. McGloin, 91 N. Y. 241, and then continues, "The three cases which have been cited,—the Hendrickson Case, the McMahon Case, and the Teachout Case, draw the line sharply, and define clearly in what cases the testimony of a witness examined before a coroner's inquest can be used on his subsequent trial, and in what cases it cannot. When a coroner's inquest is held before it has been ascertained that a crime has been committed, or before any person has been arrested charged with the crime, and a witness is called and sworn before the coroner's jury, the testimony of that witness, should be afterwards be charged with the crime, may be used against him on his trial, and the mere fact that at the time of his examination, he was aware that a crime was suspected, and that he was suspected of being the criminal, will not prevent his being regarded as a mere witness, whose testimony may be afterwards given in evidence against himself. If he desires to protect himself, he must claim his privilege. But if, at the time of his examination, it appears that a crime has been committed, and that he is in custody as the supposed criminal, he is not regarded merely as a witness, but as a party accused, called before a tribunal vested with power to investigate preliminarily the question of his guilt, and he is to be treated in the same manner as if brought before a committing magistrate, and an examination not taken in conformity with the statute, cannot be used against him on his trial for the offence.

The rule is laid down as follows in State v. Garvey, 25 La. An. 191: "A clear and well-marked distinction is made between the effects of statements made by a party under oath as a witness in a criminal proceeding and the statements under oath by an accused party. In the first case, whatever the witness may state tending to criminate himself in regard to the accusation about which he testifies may be introduced as evidence against him in a subsequent prosecution of himself for the same offence. But it seems well settled that the declarations of an accused party under oath are not to be held voluntary, and consequently are not admissible in evidence." People v. Gibbons, 43 Cal. 557. Where, however, by statute, a prisoner may testify on his own behalf in all criminal proceedings if he desires, his testimony taken under oath at the preliminary examination, if it appears to have been freely given, without compulsion or promise, is admissible as a confession. People v. Kelley, 47 Cal. 125. The examination is never admissible in favor of the prisoner. State v. Vandergraff, 23 La. An. 96.

conclusion of the examination he was committed for trial; it was held, that the statement so made was not admissible in evidence against the prisoner.4 This case may seem, at the first view, to be at variance with what has been just stated as the general principle, in regard to testimony given in another case; but the difference lies in the different natures of the two proceedings. In the former case, the mind of the witness is not disturbed by a criminal charge, and, moreover, he is generally aided and protected by the presence of the counsel in the cause; but in the latter case, being a prisoner, subjected to an inquisitorial examination, and himself at least in danger of an accusation, his mind is brought under the full influence of those disturbing forces against which it is the policy of the law to protect him. 5

§ 227. Examination conclusive. As the statutes require that the magistrate shall reduce to writing the whole examination, or so much thereof as shall be material, the law conclusively presumes, that, if anything was taken down in writing, the magistrate performed all his duty by taking down all that was material. In such case, no parol evidence of what the prisoner may have said on that occasion can be received.2 But if it is shown that the examination was not reduced to writing; or if the written examination is wholly inadmissible, by reason of irregularity; parol evidence is admissible to prove what he voluntarily disclosed. 3 (a)

Mr. Joy, in his Treatise on Confessions, &c., pp. 89-92, 237, dissents from this proposition, so far as regards the conclusive character of the presumption; which, he thinks, is neither "supported by the authorities," nor "reconcilable with the object with which examinations are taken." It has been thought, on the authority of Britton's Case, 1 M. & Rob. 297, that the balance-sheet of a bankrupt, rendered in his examination under the commission, was not admissible in evidence against him on a subsequent criminal charge because it was rendered upon compulsion. But the ground of this decision was afterwards declared by the learned judge who pronounced it, to be only this, that there was no previous evidence of the issuing of the commission; and, therefore, no foundation had been laid for introducing the balance-sheet at all. See Wheater's Case, 2 Mood. Cr.

And if it remains uncertain whether it was reduced to writing by the magistrate or not, it will not be presumed that he did his duty, and oral evidence will be rejected.4 A written examination, however, will not exclude parol evidence of a confession previously and extrajudicially made; 5 nor of something incidentally said by the prisoner during his examination, but not taken down by the magistrate, provided it formed no part of the judicial inquiry, so as to make it the duty of the magistrate to take it down. So where the prisoner was charged with several larcenies, and the magistrate took his confession in regard to the property of A, but omitted to write down what he confessed as to the goods of B, not remembering to have heard anything said respecting them, it was held that parol evidence of the latter confession, being precise and distinct, was properly admitted.7

§ 228. Prisoner's signature not necessary. It has already been stated, that the signature of the prisoner is not necessary to the admissibility of his examination, though it is usually obtained. But where it has been requested agreeably to the usage, and is absolutely refused by the prisoner, the examination has been held inadmissible, on the ground that it was to be considered as incomplete, and not a deliberate and distinct confession.1 Yet where, in a similar ease, the prisoner, on being required to sign the document, said, "it is all true enough; but he would rather decline signing it," the examination was held complete, and was accordingly admitted.² And in the former case, which, however, is not easily reconcilable with those statutes, which require nothing more than the act of the magistrate, though the examination is excluded, yet parol evidence of what the prisoner voluntarily said is admissible. For though, as we have previously observed,³ in certain cases where the examination is rejected, parol evidence of what was said on the same occasion is not received, yet the reason is, that in those cases the confession was not voluntary; whereas, in the case now stated, the confession is deemed voluntary, but the examination only is incomplete.4 And wherever the examination is rejected as documentary evidence, for informality, it may still be used as a writing, to refresh the memory of the witness who wrote it, when testifying to what the prisoner voluntarily confessed upon that occasion.⁵

§ 229. What inducements do not vitiate. Though it is necessary to the admissibility of a confession that it should have been voluntarily made, that is, that it should have been made, as before shown, without the appliances of hope or fear from persons having authority, yet it is not necessary that it should have been the prisoner's own spontaneous act. It will be received, though it were induced by spiritual exhortations, whether of a clergyman, 1 or of any other person; by a solemn promise of secrecy, (a) even confirmed by an oath; or by reason of the prisoner's having been made drunken; 4 or by a promise of some collateral benefit or boon, no hope or favor being held out in respect to the criminal charge against him; 5 (b) or by any deception practised on the prisoner, or false representation made to him for that purpose, provided there is no reason to suppose that the inducement held out was calculated to produce any untrue confession, which is the main point to be considered. 6 (c) So, a confession is admissible, though it is elicited by questions, whether put to the prisoner by a magistrate, officer, or private person; and the form of the question is immaterial to the admissibility, even though it assumes the prisoner's guilt.7 (d) In all these cases the evidence may be laid before the jury, however little it may weigh, under the circumstances, and however reprehensible may be the mode in which, in some of them, it was obtained. All persons, except counsellors and attorneys, are compellable at common law to reveal what they may have heard; and counsellors and attorneys are excepted only because it is absolutely necessary, for the sake of their clients, and of remedial justice, that communications to them should be protected.⁸ Neither is it necessary to the admissibility of any confession, to whomsoever it may have been made, that it should appear that the prisoner was warned that what he said would be used against him. On the contrary, if the confession was voluntary, it is sufficient, though it should appear that he was not so warned.9

§ 231. Information obtained from the prisoner. The object of all the care which, as we have now seen, is taken to exclude confessions which were not voluntary, is to exclude testimony not probably true. But where, in consequence of the information obtained from the prisoner, the property stolen, or the instrument of the crime, or the bloody clothes of the person murdered, or any other material fact, is discovered, it is competent to show that such discovery was made conformably to the information given by the prisoner. The statement as to his knowledge of the place where the property or other evidence was to be found, being thus confirmed by the fact, is proved to be true, and not to have been fabricated in consequence of any inducement. It is competent, therefore, to inquire whether the prisoner stated that the thing would be found by searching a particular place, and to prove that it was accordingly so found; but it would not be competent to inquire whether he confessed that he had concealed it there. (a) This limitation of the rule was distinctly laid down by Lord Eldon, who said that where the knowledge of any fact was obtained from a prisoner, under such a promise as excluded the confession itself from being given in evidence, he should direct an acquittal, unless the fact itself proved would have been sufficient to warrant a conviction without any confession leading to it.2

§ 232. Acts of the prisoner. If the prisoner himself produces the goods stolen, and delivers them up to the prosecutor, notwithstanding it may appear that this was done upon inducements to confess, held out by the latter, there seems no reason to reject the declarations of the prisoner, contemporaneous with the act of delivery, and explanatory of its character and design, though they may amount to a confession of guilt;3 but whatever he may have said at the same time, not qualifying or explaining the act which is itself inadmissible because it was obtained by inducements, the fact that the property has been found and the circumstances of the finding, and so much of the confession as relates to the finding, may be given in evidence. Davis v. State, 8 Tex. App. 510; Strait v. State, 43 Tex.

This principle of the common law has been embodied in the statute of Texas, in regard to confessions, and it is accordingly held there, that when stolen property is found by means of a confession of delivery, is to be rejected. And if, in consequence of the confession of the prisoner, thus improperly induced, and of the information by him given, the search for the property or person in question proves wholly ineffectual, no proof of either will be received. The confession is excluded, because, being made under the influence of a promise, it cannot be relied upon; and the acts and information of the prisoner, under the same influence, not being confirmed by the finding of the property or person, are open to the same objection. The influence which may produce a groundless confession may also produce groundless conduct.2

§ 233. Confessions of others. As to the prisoner's liability to be affected by the confessions of others, it may be remarked, in general, that the principle of the law in civil and criminal cases is the same. In civil cases, as we have already seen, 1 when once the fact of agency or partnership is established, every act and declaration of one, in furtherance of the common business, and until its completion, is deemed the act of all. And so, in cases of conspiracy, riot, or other crime, perpetrated by several persons, when once the conspiracy or combination is established, the act or declaration of one conspirator or accomplice, in the prosecution of the enterprise, is considered the act of all, and is evidence against all.2 Each is deemed to assent to, or command, what is done by any other, in furtherance of the common object.3 Thus, in an indictment against the owner of a ship, for violation of the statutes against the slave-trade, testimony of the declarations of the master, being part of the res gestæ, connected with acts in furtherance of the voyage, and within the scope of his authority, as an agent of the owner, in the conduct of the guilty enterprise, is admissible against the owner.4 But after the common enterprise is at an end, whether by accomplishment or abandonment is not material, no one is permitted, by any subsequent act or declaration of his own, to affect the others. His confession, therefore, subsequently made, even though by the plea of guilty,

So is the Roman law. "Confessio unius non probat in præjudicium alterius; quia alias esset in manu confitentis dicere quod vellet, et sie jus alteri quæsitum anferre, quando omnino jure prohibent; — etiamsi talis confitens esset omni exceptione major. is not admissible in evidence, as such, against any but himself. 5(a) If it were made in the presence of another, and addressed to him, it might, in certain circumstances, be receivable, on the ground of assent or implied admission. (b) In fine, the declarations of a conspirator or accomplice are receivable against his fellows only when they are either in themselves acts, or accompany and explain acts, for which the others are responsible; but not when they are in the nature of narratives, descriptions, or subsequent confessions. $^{6}(c)$

§ 234. Agency. The same principle prevails in cases of agency. In general, no person is answerable criminally for the acts of his servants or agents, whether he be the prosecutor or the accused, unless a criminal design is brought home to him. The act of the agent or servant may be shown in evidence as proof that such an act was so done; for a fact must be established by the same evidence, whether it is to be followed by a criminal or civil consequence; but it is a totally different question, in the consideration of criminal as distinguished from civil justice, how the principal may be affected by the fact, when so established. Where it was proposed to show that an agent of the prosecutor, not called as a witness, offered a bribe to a witness, who also was not called, the evidence was held inadmissible; though the general doctrine, as above stated, was recognized.2

It was formerly doubted whether the confession of the prisoner, indicted for high treason, could be received in evidence, unless it were made upon his arraignment, in open court, and in answer to the indictment; the statutes on this subject requiring the testimony of two witnesses to some overt act of treason. 1 But it was afterwards settled, and it is now agreed, that though, by those statutes, no confession could operate conclusively, and without other proof, to convict the party of treason, unless it were judicially made in open court upon the arraignment, yet that, in all cases, the confession of a criminal might be given in evidence against him; and that in cases of treason, if such confession be proved by two witnesses, it is proper evidence to be left to a jury.2 And, in regard to collateral facts which do not conduce to the proof of any overt acts of treason, they may be proved as at common law by any evidence competent in other criminal cases.3

OF EVIDENCE EXCLUDED FROM PUBLIC POLICY.

§ 236. Kinds excluded. There are some kinds of evidence which the law excludes, or dispenses with, on grounds of public policy, because greater mischiefs would probably result from requiring or permitting its admission, than from wholly rejecting it. The principle of this rule of the law has respect, in some cases, to the person testifying, and in others to the matters concerning which he is interrogated, thus including the case of the party himself, and that of the husband or wife of the party on the one hand, and, on the other, the subject of professional communications, awards, secrets of State, and some others. The two former of these belong more properly to the head of the Competency of Witnesses, under which they will accordingly be hereafter treated. The latter we shall now proceed briefly to consider.

§ 237. Professional communications. And, in the first place, in regard to professional communications, the reason of public policy, which excludes them, applies solely, as we shall presently show, to those between a client and his legal adviser; and the rule is clear and well settled, that the confidential counsellor, solicitor, or attorney of the party cannot be compelled (a) to disclose papers delivered, or communications made to him, or letters or entries made by him, in that capacity. (b) "This protection," said Lord

(b) This rule applies only to attorneys at law, not in fact. McLaughlin v. Gilmore, 1 Ill. App. 563; Holman v. Kimball, 22 Vt. 555. Moreover, the client as well as the lawyer is protected from disclosing such communications. Hughes v. Biddulph, 4 Russ. 190; Holmes v. Baddeley,

If, touching matters that come within the ordinary scope of professional employment, they receive a communication in their professional capacity, either from a client, or on his account and for his benefit, in the transaction of his business, or, which amounts to the same thing, if they commit to paper in the course of their employment on his behalf matters which they know only through their professional relation to the client, they are not only justified in withholding such matters, but bound to withhold them, and will not be compelled to disclose the information, or produce the papers, in any court of law or equity, either as party or as witness." 2

§ 238. Reason of the rule. "The foundation of this rule," he adds, "is not on account of any particular importance which the law attributes to the business of legal professors, or any particular disposition to afford them protection. But it is out of regard to the interests of justice, which cannot be upholden, and to the administration of justice, which cannot go on, without the aid of men skilled in jurisprudence, in the practice of the courts, and in those matters affecting rights and obligations, which form the subject of all judicial proceedings." (a) "It is to be remembered, whenever a question of this kind arises, that communications to attorneys and counsel are not protected from disclosure in court for the reason that they are made confidentially; for no such protection is given to confidential communications made to members of other professions. 'The principle of the rule which applies to attorneys and connsel,' says Chief Justice Shaw, in Hatton v. Robinson, 14 Pick. 422, 'is that so numerically the same of the rule which applies to attorneys and connsel.' rous and complex are the laws by which the rights and duties of citizens are governed, so important is it they should be permitted to avail themselves of the superior skill and learning of those who are sanctioned by the law as its ministers and expounders, were not protected, no man, as the same learned judge remarked in another case, would dare to consult a professional adviser, with a view to his defence, or to the enforcement of his rights; and no man could safely come into a court, either to obtain redress, or to defend himself. 2 (b)

§ 239. Communications to legal adviser only protected. gard to the persons to whom the communications must have been made in order to be thus protected, they must have been made to the counsel, attorney, or solicitor, acting, for the time being, in the character of legal adviser.1 For the reason of the rule, having respect solely to the free and unembarrassed administration of justice, and to security in the enjoyment of civil rights, does not extend to things confidentially communicated to other persons, nor even to those which come to the knowledge of counsel,

² Bolton v. Corporation of Liverpool, 1 My. & K. 94, 95. "This rule seems to be correlative with that which governs the summary jurisdiction of the courts over attorneys. In Ex parte Aitkin (4 B. & Ald. 49; see also Ex parte Yeatman, 4 Dowl. P. C. 309), that rule is laid down thus: 'Where an attorney is employed in a matter wholly unconnected with his professional character, the court will not interfere in a summary way to compel him to execute faithfully the trust reposed in him. But where the employment is so connected with his professional character as to afford a presumption that his character formed the ground of his employment by the client, there the court will exercise this jurisdiction.' So, where the communication made relates to a circumstance so connected with the employment as an attorney, that the character formed the ground of the communication, it is privileged from disclosure." Per Alderson, J.; in Turquand v. Knight; 2 M. & W. 101. The Roman law rejected the evidence of the procurator and the advocate, in nearly the same cases in which the common law holds them incompetent to testify; but not for the same reasons; the latter regarding the general interest of the community, as stated in the text, while the former seems to consider them as not credible, because of the identity of their interest, opinions, and prejudices, with those of their clients. Mascard. de Probat. vol. i. Concl. 66, vol. iii. Concl. 1239; P. Farinacii Opera, tom. 2, tit. 6, Quest. 60, Illat. 5, 6.

both in ascertaining their rights in the country, and maintaining them most safely in courts, without publishing those facts which they have a right to keep secret, but which must be disclosed to a legal adviser and advocate to enable him successfully to perform the duties of his office, that the law has considered it the wisest policy to encourage and sustain this confidence, by requiring that on such facts the mouth of the attorney shall be forever sealed.'" By Metealf, J., in Barnes v. Harris, 7 Cushing, 576, 578.

(b) The fact that the client, being a party to the suit, testifies in his own behalf, is generally held not to be such a waiver of this privilege as to compel him to disclose such communications. Hemenway v. Smith, 28 Vt. 701; Barker v. Kuhn, 38 Iowa, 395; State v. White, 19 Kan. 445; Duttenhofer v. State, 34 Ohio St. 91; Bigler v. Reyher, 43 Ind. 112. But in Massachusetts it has been held that the party, if he takes the stand, waives the party, it he takes the stand, warves the privilege so far as concerns himself, and must testify (Woburn v. Henshaw, 101 Mass. 193); but he may object to having his counsel testify to such matters, even though he puts him on the stand himburghing. self. Montgomery v. Pickering, 116 Mass.

when not standing in that relation to the party. Whether he be called as a witness, or be made defendant, and a discovery sought from him, as such, by bill in chancery, whatever he has learned, as counsel, solicitor, or attorney, he is not obliged nor permitted to disclose.2 And this protection extends also to all the necessary organs of communication between the attorney and his elient; an interpreter 3 and an agent 4 being considered as standing in precisely the same situation as the attorney himself, and under the same obligation of secrecy. It extends also to a case submitted to counsel in a foreign country, and his opinion thereon. 5 It was formerly thought that an attorney's or a barrister's clerk was not within the reason and exigency of the rule; but it is now considered otherwise, from the necessity they are under to employ clerks, being unable to transact all their business in person; and accordingly clerks are not compellable to disclose facts, coming to their knowledge in the course of their employment in that capacity, to which the attorney or barrister himself could not be interrogated. 6 (a) And as the privilege is not personal to the at-

(a) Sibley v. Waffle, 16 N. Y. App. 180; Hawes v. State, 88 Ala. 68; Landsberger v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 450. How far this protection is extended to persons who are not attorneys, but who are communicated with on the subject of litigations, is a matter of some difficulty. Blackburn, J., in Fenner v. London & S. E. Ry. Co., L. R. 7 Q. B. 767, says: "There is no doubt that on grounds of public policy the communications between a person and his solicitors and counsel with a view to obtain legal assistance and advice are privileged, and so far as the communications made with a person not himself a solicitor can be considered as made with him as deputy to the solicitor, they are also privileged, and this, I apprehend, is a positive right of the client which the Court cannot de-prive him of. But when the communications are made to a person not in any way connected with the legal advisers of the person, the question is one of much more difficulty," and he lays down the rule in regard to documents, that where it appears the documents are substantially rough notes for the case, to be laid before the legal adviser or to supply the proof to be in erted in the brief, the discretion of the Court should as a general rule be to refuse inspection. It has been held in Illinois inspection. It has been held in Hillions that one who, not being called to the bar, conducts a case before a justice of the peace, is not within the protection of this rule. McLaughlin v. Gilmore, 1 Ill. App. 563. To the same effect is Holman v. Kimball, 22 Vt. 555. It has also been beld that communications made while seek. held that communications made while seeking legal advice in a consultation with a student at law in an attorney's office, he not being the agent or clerk of the attorney for any purpose, are not protected. torney, but is a rule of law, for the protection of the elient, the executor of the attorney seems to be within the rule, in regard to papers coming to his hands, as the personal representative of the attorney. 7(b)

§ 240. Extent of the protection. This protection extends to every communication which the client makes to his legal adviser, for the purpose of professional advice or aid, upon the subject of his rights and liabilities. (a) Nor is it necessary that any judi-

1 This general rule is limited to communications having a lawful object; for, if the purpose contemplated be a violation of law, it has been deemed not to be within the rule of privileged communications; because it is not a solicitor's duty to contrive fraud, or to advise his client as to the means of evading the law. Russell v. Jackson, 15 Jur. 1117; Bank of Utica v. Mersereau, 3 Barb. Ch. 528.

(b) The decisions upon this point are very numerous in the American States. It seems indispensable to the existence of the privilege, that the relation of counsel or attorney and client should exist, and that the communication be made in faith of the relation. And then the privilege of secrecy only extends to the parties to the relation and their necessary agents and assistants. Hence the privilege does not attach, if one is accidentally present (Goddard v. Gardner, 28 Conn. 172); or casually overhears the conversation (Hoy v. Morris, 13 Gray (Mass.), 519); or if the person be not a member of the profession, although supposed to be so by the client (Sample v. Frost, 10 Iowa, 266); or if he was acting as a mere scrivener, although of the legal profession. De Wolf v. Strader, 26 Ill. 225; Borum v. Fouts, 15 Ind. 50; Coon v. Swan, 30 Vt. 6. And the privilege against disclosure extends to the client as much and to the same extent as to his professional adviser. Hemenway v. Smith, 28 Vt. 701. Hence counsel may be compelled to produce any paper which the client might be required to do. Andrews v. Ohio & Miss. R. R. Co., 14 Ind. 169; Durkee v. Leland, 4 Vt. 612. And facts coming to the knowledge of counsel, without communication from their clients, by being present merely when a legal document is executed (Patten v. Moor, 29 N. So, also, H. 163), are not privileged. that the testator was too imbecile to make communications to counsel, when they met, is not a privileged fact. Daniel v. Daniel, 39 Pa. St. 191. So communications made by the trustee to counsel in regard to the trust, are not privileged from being proved by the counsel, in a suit be-tween the cestui que trust and the trustee affecting the trust (Shean v. Philips, 1 F.

& F. 449); or when made by a nominal party, to a professional person, but not made professionally (Allen v. Harrison, 30 Vt. 219; Marsh v. Howe, 36 Barb. 649). But it is not indispensable the communication should be made after the actual retainer, provided it be made in confidence of the professional character, and with a bond fide purpose of obtaining professional aid and direction. Sargent v. Hampden, 38 Me. 581. But a communication made to counsel by two defendants is not privileged from disclosure in a subsequent suit between the two. Rice v. Rice, 14 B. Mon. 417.

(a) Gartside v. Outram, 26 L. J. Ch. 115; Charlton v. Coombes, 32 L. J. Ch. 284. Counsel are not privileged from disclosing facts tending to establish a fraudulent combination between himself and his client, in order to prevent the court from compelling the production of important papers (People v. Sheriff of New York, 29 Barb. 622), since neither counsel nor client have any legal right to resort to any but legal means for obtaining a decision in their favor. The Queen v. Cox, L. R. 14 Q. B. D. 153, is an important case on this branch of the privileged communication rule. The defendants were indicted for conspiring to defraud a judgment creditor by executing a bill of sale. They were partners, and one of them had been sued for libel, and judgment had been recorded against him. He therefore executed a fraudulent bill of sale to his partner, and fraudulently put an end to the restreash. fraudulently put an end to the partnership by a notice specified in the partnership articles, but antedated so as to precede the time of the judgment. Previous to doing this the defendants consulted a solicitor as to means of escaping execution, and he informed them in reply to this question, cial proceedings in particular should have been commenced or contemplated; it is enough if the matter in hand, like every other human transaction, may, by possibility, become the subject of judicial inquiry. "If," said Lord Chancellor Brougham, "the privilege were confined to communications connected with suits begun, or intended, or expected, or apprehended, no one could safely adopt such precautions, as might eventually render any proceedings successful, or all proceedings superfluous." 2 Whether the party himself can be compelled, by a bill in chancery, to produce a case which he has laid before counsel, with the opinion given thereon, is not perfectly clear. At one time it was held by the House of Lords, that he might be compelled to produce the case which he had sent, but not the opinion which he had re-This decision, however, was not satisfactory; and though it was silently followed in one case,4 and reluctantly submitted to in another, 5 yet its principle has since been ably that a bond fide sale was the only way; that a sale from a partner to another would not do; and that no one that he was aware of, except himself and his clerks, knew of the partnership. The solicitor was produced by the prosecution and the defendants claimed that the communica-tion was privileged. The evidence was admitted and the defendants convicted, but the case was reserved on this point. On account of its importance the case was argued before a full bench of ten judges, and after consideration Mr. Justice Stephen delivered the opinion of the court. After stating the facts the judge said: "The question therefore is whether, if a client applies to a legal adviser for advice intending to facilitate or to guide the client in the commission of a crime or fraud, the legal adviser being ignorant of the purpose for which his advice is wanted, the communication between the two is privileged." And it was held that no such privilege exists. The authorities are examined with great care. Greenough v. Gaskell, 1 My. & K. 98, is said to be the leading authority, decided by Lord Brougham. The cases which hold that fraud prevents the privilege from operating are Follett v. Jeffereyes, 1 Sim. N. s. 3; Gartside v. Outram, 26 L. J. Ch. 113. The case of Queen v. Cox was intended by the judges to settle this question, and in addition to establishing the rule that there is no privilege in such cases, they say that in each particular case the court must determine upon the facts actually given in evidence or proposed to be given in evidence, whether it seems probable that the accused person may have consulted his legal adviser, not after his commission of the crime, for the legitimate purpose of being defended, but before the committing of the crime for the purpose of being aided or helped in committing it.

controverted and refuted. (b) The great object of the rule seems

⁶ In Bolton r. Corp. of Liverpool, 1 My. & K. 88, per Lord Chancellor Brougham; and in Pearse v. Pearse, 11 Jur. 52, by Knight Bruce, V. C. In the following observations of this learned judge we have the view at present taken of this vexed question in England. "That cases laid before counsel, on behalf of a client, stand upon the same footing as other professional communications from the client to the counsel and same rooting as other professional communications from the eight to the connect and solicitor, or to either of them, may, I suppose, be assumed; and that, as far as any discovery by the solicitor or counsel is concerned, the question of the existence or non-existence of any suit, claim, or dispute, is immaterial, — the law providing for the client's protection in each state of circumstances, and in each equally, is, I suppose, not a disputable point. I suppose Cromaek v. Heathcote (2 Brod. & Bing. 4) to be now universally acceded to, and the doctrine of this court to have been correctly stated now universally acceded to, and the doctrine of this court to have been correctly stated by Lord Lyndhurst, in Herring v. Clobery (1 Phil. 91), when he said, 'I lay down this rule with reference to this cause, that, where an attorney is employed by a client professionally to transact professional business, all the communications that pass between the client and the attorney, in the course and for the purpose of that business, are privileged communications, and that the privilege is the privilege of the client, and not of the attorney.' This I take to be not a peculiar but a general rule of jurisprudence. The civil law, indeed, considered the advocate and client so identified or bound together that the advocate was I believe generally not allowed to be a witness bound together, that the advocate was, I believe, generally not allowed to be a witness for the client. 'Ne patroni in causa, cui patrocinium præstiterunt, testimonium dicant,' says the Digest (Dig. lib. 22, tit. 5, l. 25). An old jurist, indeed, appears to have thought, that, by putting an advocate to the torture, he might have made a good witness for his client; but this seems not to have met with general approbation. Professors of the law, probably, were not disposed to encourage the dogma practically. Voet puts the communications between a client and an advocate on the footing of those between a penitent and his priest. He says: 'Non etiam advocatus aut procurator in ea causa cui patrocinium præstitit aut procurationem, idoneus testis est, sive pro cliente sive contra eum producatur; saltem non ad id, ut pandere cogeretur ea, quæ non aliunde quam ex revelatione clientis, comperta habet; eo modo, quo, et sacerdoti, revelare ea quæ ex aurienlari didicit confessione, nefas est.' Now, whether laying or not laying stress on the observations made by the late Lord Chief Baron, in Knight v. Lord Waterford (2 Y. & C. 40, 41), — observations, I need not say, well worthy of attention, — I confess myself at a loss to perceive any substantial difference, in point of reason or principle or convenience, between the liability of the client and that of his counsel or solicitor, to disclose the client's communications made in confidence professionally to either. True, the client is, or may be compellable, to disclose all that, before he consulted the counsel or solicitor, he knew, believed, or had seen or heard; but the question is not, I apprehend, one as to the greater or less probability of more or less damage. The question is, I suppose, one of principle, — one that ought to be decided according to certain rules of jurisprudence; nor is the exemption of the solicitor or counsel from compulsory discovery confined to advice given or opinions stated. It extends to facts communicated by the client. Lord Eldon has said (19 Ves. 267): 'The case might easily be put, that a most honest man, so changing his situation, might communicate a fact, appearing to him to have no connection with the case, and yet the whole title of his former client might depend on it. Though Sir John Strange's opinion was, that an attorney might, if he pleased, give evidence of his client's secrets, I take it to be clear, that no court would permit him to give such evidence, or would have any difficulty, if a solicitor, voluntarily changing his situation, was, in his new character, proceeding to communicate a material fact. A short way of preventing him would be, by striking him off the roll.' But as to a damage: a man, having laid a case before counsel, may die, leaving all the rest of mankind ignorant of a blot on his title stated in the case, and not discoverable by any other means. The whole fortunes of his family may turn on the question, whether the case shall be discovered, and may be subverted by its discovery. Again, the client is certainly exempted from liability to discover communications between himself and his counsel or solicitor after litigation

(b) The leading ease among the later ones on this point in England is Minet v. Morgan, L. R. 8 Ch. 361, which affirms the broad principle that no one can be compelled to disclose to the Court any communication between himself and his legal adviser, which his legal adviser could not disclose without his permission, although it may have been made before any dispute arose as to the matter referred to.

commenced, or after the commencement of a dispute ending in litigation; at least, if they relate to the dispute, or matter in dispute. Upon this I need scarcely refer to a class of authorities, to which Hughes v. Biddulph (4 Russ. 190), Nias v. Northern and Eastern Railway Company (3 Myl. & Cr. 355), before the present Lord Chancellor, in his former chancellorship, and Holmes v. Baddeley (1 Phil. 476), decided by Lord Lyndhurst, belong. But what, for the purpose of discovery, is the distinction in point of reason, or principle, or justice, or convenience, between such communications and those which differ from them only in this, that they precede, instead of following, the actual arising, not of a cause for dispute, but of a dispute, I have never hitherto been able to perceive. A man is in possession of an estate as owner; he is not under any fiduciary obligation; he finds a flaw, or a supposed flaw, in his title, which it is not, in point of law or equity, his duty to disclose to any person; he believes that the flaw or supposed defect is not known to the only person, who, if it is a defect, is entitled to take advantage of it, but that this person may probably or possibly soon hear of it, and then institute a suit, or make a claim. Under this apprehension he consults a solicitor, and, through the solicitor, lays a case before the counsel on the subject, and receives his opinion. Some time afterwards the apprehended adversary becomes an actual adversary, for, coming to the knowledge of the defect or supposed flaw in the title, he makes a claim, and, after a preliminary correspondence, commences a suit in equity to enforce it; but between the commencement of the correspondence and the actual institution of the suit, the man in possession again consults a solicitor, and through him again lays a case before counsel. According to the respondent's argument before me on this occasion, the defendant, in the instance that I have supposed, is as clearly bound to disclose the first consultation and the first case, as he is clearly exempted from discovering the second consultation and the second case. I have, I repeat, yet to learn that such a distinction has any foundation in reason or convenience. The discovery and vindication and establishment of truth are main purposes, certainly, of the existence of courts of justice; still, for the obtaining of these objects, which, however valuable and important, cannot be usefully pursued without moderation, cannot be either usefully or creditably pursued unfairly, or gained by unfair means, — not every channel is or ought to be open to them. The practical inefficacy of torture is not, I suppose, the most weighty objection to that mode of examination; nor, probably, would the purpose of the mere disclosure of truth have been otherwise than advanced by a refusal on the part of the Lord Chancellor, in 1815, to act against the or proposed to act in the manner which Lord Cholmondeley and Lord Clinton, had acted or proposed to act in the manner which Lord Eldon thought it right to prohibit. Truth, like all other good things, may be loved unwisely, may be pursued too keenly, may cost too much. And surely the meanness and the mischief of prying into a man's confidential consultations with his legal adviser, the general evil of infusing reserve and dissimulation, uneasiness and suspicion and fear, into those communications which must take place, and which, unless in a condition of perfect security, must take place uselessly or worse, are too great a prize to pay for truth itself." See 11 Jur. pp. 54, 55; 1 De Gex & Smale, 25-29.(c) See also Gresley on Evid. 32, 33; Bishop of Meath v. Marquis of Winchester, 10 Bing. 330, 375, 454, 455; Nias v. Northern, &c. Lord Langdale has held, that the privilege of a client, as to discovery was not coextensive with that of his that the privilege of a client, as to discovery, was not coextensive with that of his solicitor; and therefore he compelled the son and heir to discover a case, which had been submitted to counsel by his father, and had come, with the estate, to his hands. § 240 a. Opinion of counsel protected. In regard to the obligation of the party to discover and produce the opinion of counsel, various distinctions have been attempted to be set up, in favor of a discovery of communications made before litigation, though in contemplation of, and with reference to, such litigation, which afterwards took place; and again, in respect to communications which, though in fact made after the dispute between the parties, which was followed by litigation, were yet made neither in contemplation of, nor with reference to, such litigation; and again, in regard to communications of cases or statements of fact, made on behalf of a party by or for his solicitor or legal adviser, on the subject-matter in question, after litigation commenced, or in contemplation of litigation on the same subject with other persons, with the view of asserting the same right; but all these distinctions have been overruled, and the communications held to be within the privilege. 1 And where a cestui que trust filed a bill against his trustee, to set aside a purchase by the latter of the trust property, made thirty years back; and the trustee filed his cross-hill, alleging that the cestui que trust had long known his situation in respect to the property, and had acquiesced in the purchase, and in proof thereof that he had, fifteen years before, taken the opinion of counsel thereon, of which he prayed a discovery and production,—it was held that the opinion, as it was taken after the dispute had arisen which was the subject of the original and cross-bill and for the guidance of one of the parties in respect of that very dispute, was privileged at the time it was taken; and as the same dispute was still the subject of the litigation, the communication still retained its privilege.2 where a bill for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of an estate was brought by the assignees of a bankrupt who has sold it under their commission, and a cross-bill was filed against them for discovery, in aid of the defence it was held that the privilege of protection did not extend to professional and confi-

§ 241. Muniments of title protected. Upon the foregoing principles it has been held, that the attorney is not bound to produce title-deeds, or other documents, left with him by his client for professional advice; though he may be examined to the fact of their existence, in order to let in secondary evidence of their contents, which must be from some other source than himself. (a) But whether the object of leaving the documents with the attorney was for professional advice or for another purpose, may be determined by the judge.2 If he was consulted merely as a conveyancer, to draw deeds of conveyance, the communications made to him in that capacity are within the rule of protection, 3 (b) even though he was employed as the mutual adviser and counsel of both parties; for it would be most mischievous, said the learned judges in the Common Pleas, if it could be doubted, whether or not an attorney, consulted upon a man's title to an estate, were at liberty to divulge a flaw. 4 (c) Neither does the rule require

§ 242. Except when the attorney is also a party. This rule is limited to eases where the witness, or the defendant in a bill in chancery treated as such, and so called to discover, learned the matter in question only as counsel, solicitor, or attorney, and in no other way. If, therefore, he were a party to the transaction, and especially if he were party to the fraud (as, for example, if he turned informer, after being engaged in a conspiracy), or, in other words, if he were acting for himself, though he might also be employed for another, he would not be protected from disclosing; for in such a case his knowledge would not be acquired solely by his being employed professionally. $^{1}(a)$

§ 243. Protection perpetual. The protection given by the law to such communications does not cease with the termination of the suit, or other litigation or business, in which they were made; nor is it affected by the party's ceasing to employ the attorney and retaining another; nor by any other change of relations between them; nor by the death of the client. (a) The seal

(a) There is authority to the effect that, upon the decease of the client, in cases where a strict adherence to this rule would render it inconsistent with its object, the privilege may be waived by the representative of the deceased client. Morris v. Morris, 119 Ind. 343; Layman's Will, 40 Minn. 372; Russell v. Jackson, 15 Jur. 1117; Blackburn v. Crawfords, 3 Wall. 175. But in New York, this point has been thoroughly discussed in connection with the privile cussed in connection with the privilege there created by statute, and given to a patient as to his disclosures to his physician, and the courts have arrived at the rule that after the death of a elient the privilege cannot be waived by any person, but is perpetual Loder v. Whelpley, 111 N. Y. 245; Westover v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 99 N. Y. 56. But although the privilege cannot be waived after the death of the client or patient, yet the admission of the evidence of the attorney is subject to the same rules as other evidence; and, although incompetent, yet if it is not objected to at the right time, the party who should have objected to its incompetency, if he wished to avail himself thereof, cannot afterwards impeach the competency of the testimony. Hoyt v. Hoyt, 112 N. Y. 513. This latter case cites the case of Westover v. Ætna Life Ins. Co., supra, in which case the court says: "The purpose of the laws would be thwarted and the policy intended to be promoted thereby would be defeated, if death removed the seal of secrecy from communications and disclosures which a patient should make to his physician, or a client to his attorney, or a penitent to his priest. Whenever the evidence to his priest. Whenever the evidence comes within the purview of the statute it is absolutely prohibited and may be objected to by any one unless it be waived by the person for whose benefit and protection the statutes were enacted. After one has gone to his grave, the living are not permitted to impair his fame and dis-grace his memory by dragging to the light communications and disclosures made under the seal of the statutes. An executor or administrator does not represent the deceased for the purpose of making such a waiver. He represents him simply in reference to rights of property, but not in reference to those rights which pertain to the person or character of the testator. If one, reprethe seat of the statute because he represents the property, then the right to make the waiver would exist as well before death as after, and the general assignee of a patient for the purpose of protecting the assigned estate, could make the waiver; yet it has been held that an assignee in bankruptcy is not empowered to consent that the professional com-munications of his assignor shall be disclosed. Bowman v. Norton, 5 C. & P. 177." The court in Westover v. lusurance Co., supra, then proceeds to discuss the case of Edington v. Mutual Life Insurance Co., 67 N. Y. 185, and show that that case did not decide that a personal representative could waive the protection of the statute, but that the personal representative or assignee of the patient could make the objection to the evidence forbidden by the statute; and continues further that that case might have gone further, and held that any party to an action could make the objection, as the evidence in itself is objectionable, unless the objection be waived by the person for whose protection the statutes were enacted. It is further held in New York, that the statute does not apply to criminal cases where its prohibition is invoked solely for the protection of the criminal, and not at all for the benefit or protection of the patient who was dead, a waiver of the prohibition therefore becoming impossible. Pierson v. People, 79 N. Y. 424. The privilege of this rule is also waived if the party entitled to it has in a previous trial put the doctor or lawyer on the witness-stand to testify as to the facts contained in such communications. The ban of secrecy having been once removed by the patient or client, and the information having been lawfully made public, the court holds that the right to object further thereto is gone. McKinney v. Grand St. etc., R. R. Co., 104 N. Y. 355.

of the law, once fixed upon them, remains forever; unless removed by the party himself, in whose favor it was there placed. (b) It is not removed without the client's consent, even though the interests of criminal justice may seem to require the production of the evidence. (c)

§ 244. When the attorney must disclose. This rule is further illustrated by reference to the cases, in which the attorney may be examined, and which are therefore sometimes mentioned as exceptions to the rule. These apparent exceptions are, where the communication was made before the attorney was employed as such, or after his employment had ceased; or where, though consulted by a friend, because he was an attorney, yet he refused to act as such, and was therefore only applied to as a friend; or where there could not be said, in any correctness of speech, to be a communication at all, as where, for instance, a fact, something that was done, became known to him, from his having been brought to a certain place by the circumstance of his being the attorney, but of which fact any other man, if there, would have been equally conusant (and even this has been held privileged in some of the cases); or where the matter commnicated was not in its nature private, and could in no sense be termed the subject of a confidential disclosure; or where the thing had no reference to the

And the client does not waive this privilege merely by calling the attorney as a witness, unless he also himself examines him in chief to the matter privileged. Vaillant v. Dodemead, 2 Atk. 524; Waldron v. Ward, Sty. 449. See also Shore v. Bedford, 5 Man. & Grang. 271.

(b) See ante, § 237, note. A rule has grown up in several States, and is sometimes enacted by statute, as will be seen by reference to the statutes, cited in note to section 237, that when one who is accused of a crime or is a party or witness to a civil suit, goes upon the stand as a witness and testifies as to the facts contained in his communications to his attorney, he has, by going upon the stand and testifying, waived his privilege, as the reason of the privilege has been removed by his own act. People v. Gallagher, 75 Mich. 515; State v. Tall, 43 Minn. 276.

(c) And if the attorney cannot say whether the communication came to him

(c) And if the attorney cannot say whether the communication came to him while acting as counsel, or was made by the client while under examination as a witness, the client, being on trial on an indictment, is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. People v. Atkinson, 40 Cal. 284.

professional employment, though disclosed while the relation of attorney and client subsisted; or where the attorney, having made himself a subscribing witness, and thereby assumed another character for the occasion, adopted the duties which it imposes, and became bound to give evidence of all that a subscribing witness can be required to prove. (a) In all such cases, it is plain that the attorney is not called upon to disclose matters which he can be said to have learned by communication with his client, or on his client's behalf, matters which were so committed to him, in his capacity of attorney, and matters which in that capacity alone he had come to know.3

(a) This point was thoroughly discussed in a recent case in New York, Will of William Coleman, 111 N. Y. 226. The evidence in that case showed that the witnesses in question were a firm of lawyers, and were employed by the testator in their professional capacity to draw his will, and that the conversations offered in evidence were had with them for the purpose of enabling them to execute the instructions of the testator. These interinstructions of the testator. These interviews were clearly within the protection of the statute, and were inadmissible as evidence, unless by requesting his lawyers to subscribe his will the rule had been expressly waived by the client. The court held that the request to attest a will implies not only information in the testator as to the processity of such signs. testator as to the necessity of such signa-tures to the validity of the instrument executed, but also knowledge of the obligations which the witnesses assume in respect to the proof thereof after his death, and that the testator must have been aware that his object in making a will might prove to be ineffectual unless these witnesses could be called to testify to the circumstances attending its execution, including the condition of his mental faculties at that time. The condition of the testator's mind, as evidenced by his actions, conduct, and conversation at the time of making the will, is a part of the res gestæ of the transaction, and witnesses thereto are competent to speak thereof, and give opinions in relation thereto, without any other knowledge thereof except that derived from his conduct on such occasions; and the testator being presumed to know this, is held to have meant to release his attorneys from their professional privilege, by asking them to subscribe his will, as much as if he had put them on the witness-stand. McKinney v. Grand St. &c. R. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 352.

an instrument was put into his hands, but not its condition and appearance at that time, as, whether it was stamped or indorsed, or not; 3 the fact of his paying over to his client moneys colrelected for him; the execution of a deed by his client, which he attested; 4(a) a statement made by him to the adverse party. 5 He may also be called to prove the identity of his client; 6 the fact of his having sworn to his answer in chancery, if he were then present; usury in a loan made by him as broker, as well as attorney to the lender; 8 the fact that he or his client is in possession of a certain document of his client's for the purpose of letting in secondary evidence of its contents; 9 and his client's handwriting. 10 But in all cases of this sort, the privilege of secreey is carefully extended to all the matters professionally diselosed, and which he would not have known but from his being consulted professionally by his client.

Where an attorney is called upon, whether by subpæna duces tecum, or otherwise, to produce deeds or papers belonging to his client, who is not a party to the suit, the court will inspect the documents, and pronounce upon their admissibility, according as their production may appear to be prejudicial or not to the client; in like manner as where a

(a) The mere fact of having retained counsel is not a privileged communication (Forshaw v. Lewis, 1 Jur. N. s. 263); nor the fact that he drew a deed for his client and the date when he did so (Rundle v. Foster, 3 Tenn. Ch. 658); or the fact that he has been entrusted with money by his client, and where he deposited it (Jeanes v. Fridenburgh, 3 Pa. L. J. R. 199; Williams v. Young. 46 lowa, 140); or the manner in which he obtained a paper which is part of his client's case (Allen v. Root, 39 Tex. 589). And it is upon the same ground that counsel have been held not privileged from disclosing the fact of a payment made to the client, and com-municated by him to the attorney, for the purpose of having the application made, the client having deceased, since this is not in any sense a professional confidence. Clark v. Richards, 17 N. Y. 89.

witness objects to the production of his own title-deeds. (a) And the same discretion will be exercised by the courts, where the documents called for are in the hands of solicitors for the assignces of bankrupts; 2(b) though it was at one time thought that their production was a matter of public duty.3 So, if the documents called for are in the hands of the agent or steward of a third person, or even in the hands of the owner himself, their production will not be required where, in the judgment of the court, it may injuriously affect his title.4 This extension of the rule, which will be more fully treated hereafter, is founded on a consideration of the great inconvenience and mischief which may result to individuals from a compulsory disclosure and collateral discussion of their titles, in cases where, not being themselves parties, the whole merits cannot be tried.

⁽a) In Volant v. Soyer, 13 C. B. 231, it was held that an attorney had no right to produce or to answer any questions concerning the nature or contents of a deed or other document entrusted to him professionally by his client; nor can the judge look at the instrument, with a view to determine whether the objection to giving testimony in regard to it be well founded.

⁽b) Where a witness declined answering, on the ground that "his knowledge inquired after had been acquired by virtue of his employment as the solicitor of the defendant in relation to such matters, and from no other source," the court held, Kindersley, V. C., that, to be privileged, it must be "a confidential communication between him and his client in the character of his professional relation of solicitor and client. It is not necessary to show that it was secret, but it must pass in that relation; and it must arise from communications by the client to the solicitor, or solicitor to the elient." v. Keith, 6 Jur. N. s. 1182.

ground of confidence and the general good, namely, that of a clerguman; and this chiefly, if not wholly, in reference to criminal conduct and proceedings; that the guilty conscience may with safety disburden itself by penitential confessions, and by spiritual advice, instruction, and discipline, seek pardon and relief. The law of Papal Rome has adopted this principle in its fullest extent; not only excepting such confessions from the general rules of evidence, as we have already intimated, 1 but punishing the priest who reveals them. It even has gone farther; for Mascardus, after observing that, in general, persons coming to the knowledge of facts, under an oath of secrecy, are compellable to disclose them as witnesses, proceeds to state the case of confessions to a priest as not within the operation of the rule, on the ground that the confession is made not so much to the priest as to the Deity, whom he represents; and that therefore the priest, when appearing as a witness in his private character, may lawfully swear that he knows nothing of the subject. "Hoc tamen restringe, non posse procedere in sacerdote producto in testem contra reum criminis, quando in -confessione sacramentali fuit aliquid sibi dictum, quia potest dicere, se nihil seire ex eo; quod illud, quod seit, seit ut Deus, et ut Deus non producitur in testem, sed ut homo, et tanquam homo ignorat illud super quo producitur."2 In Scotland, where a prisoner in custody and preparing for his trial has confessed his crimes to a clergyman, in order to obtain spiritual advice and comfort, the clergyman is not required to give evidence of such confession. But even in criminal cases this exception is not carried so far as to include communications made confidentially to clergymen in the ordinary course of their duty.3 Though the law of England encourages the penitent to confess his sins, "for the unburthening of his conscience, and to receive spiritual con-

But from the constitutions of King Ethelred, which provide for the punishment of priests guilty of perjury, — "Si presbyter, alicabi inveniatur in falso testimonio, vel in perjurio,"—It would seem that the English law of that day did not recognize any distinction between them and the laity, in regard to the obligation to testify as witnesses. solation and ease of mind," yet the minister to whom the confession is made is merely excused from presenting the offender to the civil magistracy, and enjoined not to reveal the matter confessed, "under pain of irregularity." 4 In all other respects, he is left to the full operation of the rules of the common law, by which he is bound to testify in such cases as any other person when duly summoned. In the common law of evidence there is no distinction between clergymen and laymen; but all confessions, and other matters not confided to legal counsel, must be disclosed when required for the purposes of justice. Neither penitential confessions, made to the minister or to members of the party's own Church, nor secrets confided to a Roman Catholic priest in the course of confession, are regarded as privileged communications.5

(a) The statements of the text in this section to the effect that the protection of the rule of privilege is not extended to medical persons in regard to information which they have acquired confidentially privileged communications, was undoubt-

by attending in their professional characters, as well as the statement in the preceding section that confessions made to clergymen or priests are not regarded as changes] in regard to information which they have acquired con-

edly the rule at the time the author wrote, and is still the rule at common law; but in a large number of States the rule has been changed by statutory enactments, so that protection is given by statute to a patient in regard to information which his physician has acquired from him confidentially in the course of the treatment of his illness, and to confessions which may have been made to a clergyman or priest in his professional character. Thus, in California (Civil Code, § 1881, cl. 4), a licensed physician or surgeon cannot, without the consent of the patient, be examined in a civil action as to any information acquired in attending the patient, which was neces-sary to enable him to prescribe or act for the patient. And clause 3 provides that a clergyman or priest cannot, without the consent of the party making the confession, be examined as to any confession made to him in his professional character in the course of discipline enjoined by the Church to which he belongs. And a similar enactment exists in Colorado (Acts of 1883, p. 289). In Indiana (Rev. Sts. § 497, cl. 4), it is enacted that physicians are incompetent witnesses as to matter communicated to them as such by patients, in the course of their professional business, or advice given in such cases; and clause 5 enacts that clergymen are incompetent witnesses as to confessions or admissions made to them in the course of discipline enjoined by their respective Churches. Gillooley v. State, 58 Ind. 182. See, also, Iowa (Rev. Code, § 3643). So in Kansas (Gen. Sts. § 4418, cl. 5), it is enacted that a clergyman or priest is incompetent to testify concerning any confession made to him in his professional character in the course of discipline enjoined by the Church to which he belongs, without the consent of the person making the confession; and clause 6 enacts that a physician or surgeon is incompetent to testify concerning any communication made to him by his patient with reference to any physical or supposed physical disease, or any knowledge obtained by a personal examination of any such patient: Provided, That if the patient offer himself as a witness, that is to be deemed a consent to the examination. Similarly, in Michigan (Howell's Annot. Stat. § 7515), it is enacted that no minister of the gospel, or priest of any denomination what-soever, shall be allowed to disclose any confession made to him in his professional character in the course of the discipline enjoined by the rules or practice of such denomination; and, in the succeeding section (7516), it is enacted that no person duly authorized to practice physic or surgery shall be allowed to disclose any information which he may have acquired in attending any patient in his professional character, and which information was necessary for him to prescribe for such patient as a physician, or to do any act for him as a surgeon. In Minnesota (Statutes of 1891, § 5094, cl. 3), it is enacted that a clergyman or priest cannot, without the consent of the person making the confession, be examined as to a confession made to him in his professional character in the course of discipline enjoined by the Church to which he belongs; and fourth, that a regular physician or surgeon cannot, without the consent of his patient, be examined in a civil action as to any information acquired by attending the patient, which was necessary to enable him to prescribe or act for the patient. In Missouri (Rev. Sts. § 8925, cl. 4), it is enacted that a minister of the gospel, or priest of any denomination, is incompetent to testify concerning a confession made to him in his professional character in the course of discipline enjoined by the rules or practice of such denomination; and fifth, that a surgeon or physician is incompetent to testify concerning any information which he may have acquired from any patient while attending him in a professional character, and which information was necessary to enable him to prescribe for such patient as a physician, or to do any act for him as a surgeon. In Nebraska (Code, p. 672, § 328, cl. 5), it is enacted that a clergyman or priest is incompetent to testify concerning any information made to him in his professional character in the course of discipline enjoined by the Church to which he belongs, without the consent of the person making the confession; and § 333 enacts that no practising attorney, counsellor, physician or surgeon, minister of the gospel, or priest of any denomination, shall be allowed, in giving testimony to disclose any confidential communication properly entrusted to him to enable him to discharge the functions of his office according to the usual course of practice or discipline. Similarly, in New York (N. Y. Code Civ. Proced. § 833-836), it is enacted that a clergyman, or other minister of any denomination, shall not be allowed to disclose a confession made to him in his professional character in the course of discipline enjoined by the rules or practice of the religious body to which fidentially, by attending in their professional characters; nor to he belongs; and that a person duly authorized to practice physic or surgery shall not be allowed to disclose any information which he acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity, and which was necessary to enable him to act in that capacity; but § 836 gives the right of waiver to the patient or person confessing. See also People v. Stout, 3

Park. Cr. R. 670; Edington v. Mut. Life
Ins. Co., 67 N. Y. 185; Staunton v.
Parker, 19 Hun, 55. In Ohio (Rev. Sts., § 52 41, cl. 1), it is enacted that a physician shall not testify concerning a communication made to him by his patient, in that relation, or his advice to his patient; but the physician may testify by the express consent of the patient; and if the patient voluntarily testify, the physician may be compelled to testify on the same subject; and clause 2 enacts that a clergyman or priest shall not testify concerning a confession made to him in his professional character in the course of discipline enjoined by the Church to which he belongs. In Wisconsin (Annot. Sts., § 4074) enacts that a clergyman or priest of any denomination shall not be allowed to disclose a confession made to him in his professional character in the course of discipline enjoined by the rules or practice of the religious body to which he belongs, without the consent thereto of the party confessing; and § 4075 enacts that no person duly authorized to practice physic or surgery shall be compelled to disclose any information which he may have acquired in attending any patient in a professional character, and which information was necessary to enable him to prescribe for such patient as a physician, or to do any act for him as a surgeon.

The principal point which these statutes have brought before the courts has been the question whether the evidence of doctors shall be excluded or not, in cases where the patient is since deceased. These questions arise most frequently in cases where it is sought to introduce the evidence of doctors in probate proceedings as to the mental capacity of the late patient, or in proceedings on policies of insurance, or in the proceedings to recover for the killing of the deceased. The question has been thoroughly discussed in New York State in several cases. In the case of Edington v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 67 N. Y. 185, the defendant company attempted to introduce evidence of the physician of the deceased against the objection of the personal representative of the deceased; and the court held that the evidence came under the statute and was protected, and that this protection could be claimed by the personal representative of the deceased. In a later case (Westover v. Etna Ins. Co., 99 N. Y. 57), the action was on the life insurance policy issued to the plaintiff's testator. It was provided in the policy that it should be void if the insured should commit suicide or die by his own hand. The insured hung himself. In the course of the trial the plaintiff called a physician who had known the insured for a long time, and who had attended him professionally a short time before his death; and the physician was asked how he found the testator when he visited him. This question was objected to by the counsel for the defendant, on the ground that the evidence was incompetent under § 834 of the Code. The court held in this case that the privilege could not be waived by the personal representative of the de-"The purpose of the laws would be thwarted, and the policy intended to be promoted thereby would be defeated, if death removed the seal of secrecy from the communications and disclosures which a patient should make to his physician, or a client to his attorney, or a penitent to his priest. Whenever the evidence comes within the purview of the statute, it is absolutely prohibited, and may be objected to by any one unless it be waived by the person for whose benefit and pro-tection the statutes were enacted." See also ante, § 243, note.

In a later case (Renihan v. Dennin, 103 N. Y. 577), the same point arose on an appeal from the decree of the surrogate, probating the will of James Dennin, deceased. The attending physician of the testator requested another physician to be present at the testator's house shortly before his death, for consultation relative to treating the testator. The consulting physician was put on the witness-stand by the contestants of the will, and asked several questions relating to the condition of the testator as to understanding and capacity for making the will at the time when the consulting physician saw him. These questions were objected to, and the evidence excluded. On appeal to the Court of Appeals, the decision was sustained, and the court held that, the consulting physician being a duly authorized physician, whatever information he acquired while attending the testator, in reference to his treatment, was privileged. court in this case says: "It is true that the testator did not call him or procure his attendance. But he did not thrust himself into his presence, or intrude there. He was called by the attending physician and went in his professional capacity to see the patient, and that was enough to bring the case within the statute. It is quite common for physicians to be summoned by the friends of the patient, or even by strangers about him, and the statute would be robbed of much of its virtue if a physician thus called were to be excluded from its provisions, because, as contended by the learned counsel for the appellant, he was not employed by the patient, nor a contract relation created between him and the patient. To bring the case within the statute, it is sufficient that the person attended as a physician upon a patient, and obtained his information in that capacity." The claim was made in this case that the statute in question should not apply to testamentary cases on account of the inconveniences which would undoubtedly be caused by such a construction; but the court refused to entertain this view, and held that the statute applied to testamentary cases as well as all others; and this view was supported in the later case of Loder v. Whelpley, 111 N. Y. 245. In the case of Renihan v. Dennin, supra, a claim was also made that the statute could only apply to disclosures of a confidential nature; but the court overruled this claim, and held that the statute should be given the broad effect which its plain language demanded. The court adverts, in its opinion, to the inconvenience in applying the statute in testamentary cases, and says: "It is probably true that the statute, as we feel obliged to construe it, will work considerable mischief. In testamentary cases, where the contest relates to the competency of the testator, it will exclude evidence of physicians which is generally the most important and decisive. In actions upon policies of life insurance, where the inquiry relates to the health and physical condition of the insured, it will exclude the most reliable and vital evidence which is absolutely needed for the ends of justice." But these inconveniences seem to be somewhat mitigated by the decision of the court in Hoyt v. Hoyt, 112 N. Y. 513, to the effect that, although the privilege may not be waived, yet the evidence must be seasonably objected to by any person who wishes to have it excluded. In the later case of McKinney v. Grand St., &c., R. R. Co., 104 N. Y. 355, the defendant called as a witness a physician who had made a personal examination of the plaintiff while visiting her as a patient, and proceeded to prove by him the nature of the injuries suffered by the plaintiff. Upon a previous trial of the same action the same doctor had been called by the plaintiff, and had testified fully in her behalf as to all the facts bearing upon her physical condition as learned by him in his attendance upon her. The court held that the doctor having so testified at the request of the plaintiff, the privilege had been waived by her and could not afterwards be asserted. In the case of Loder v. Whelpley, 111 N. Y. 245, the proponents of a will offered the testimony of three physicians who had attended the testatrix, as to her health while under their observation. The contestants then called another physician who had attended her subsequently, and asked him similar questions. The court said that the objection to such evidence might be made by any party, but the case was decided on other grounds. In the case of Coleman's Will, 111 N. Y. 225, the contestants offered evidence, in the testimony of two attending physicians of the testator, to prove his lack of testamentary capacity. The evidence was admitted by the surrogate, but, on appeal, the court held the evidence inadmissible. In the case of Hoyt v. Hoyt, 112 N. Y. 513, the proponents of a will introduced the testimony of three attending physicians of the testa-tor. The court in this case again stated the principle that, although the privilege could not be waived after the death of the patient, yet that a failure to object to the evidence upon its offer in court would bind the party failing to make such objection, and that he could not afterwards insist upon the incompetency of the testi-mony. The courts say: "The contestant could not sit by during the examination of the physicians, and after their evidence had been elicited by examination and

cross-examination, upon finding it in-jurious to her case, claim as a legal right to have it stricken out. There are bounds to the enforcement of the statutory provisions which will not be disregarded at the instance of a party who, being entitled to their benefit, has waived or omitted to avail himself of them. It is perfectly true that public policy has dictated the enact-ment of the Code provisions by which the communications of patient and client are privileged from disclosure; but the privi-lege must be claimed, and the proposed evidence must be seasonably objected to. The rule of evidence, which excludes the communications between physician and patient, must be invoked by an objection at the time the evidence of the witness is given. It is too late, after the examina-tion has been insisted upon and the evidence has been received without objection, to raise the question of competency by a motion to strike it out." In the later case of Feeney v. Long Island R. R. Co., 116 N. Y. 380, the question discussed was what proof is necessary of the existence of the relation of doctor and patient before the evidence can be excluded. The facts in that case were these: A witness sworn for the defendant testified that he was a practicing physician, and that on the day after the accident the plaintiff called upon and consulted him. He was then asked by defendant's counsel if he conversed with her about her injuries, and if he made an examination of her. The court sustained the objection made in behalf of the plaintiff that these questions called for a privileged communication. It was urged that the objection was premature, because it did not appear that the information called for was such as was necessary to enable the witness to act in a professional capacity. The court says:
"The language of the court in Edington v. Mutual Life Insurance Co. (67 N. Y. 185, 194), may be repeated in answer to this position. The point made that there was no evidence that the information asked for was essential to enable the physician to prescribe is not well taken, as it must be assumed from the relationship existing, that the information would not have been imparted except for the purpose of aiding the physician in prescribing for the patient. Aside, however, from this, the statute in question being remedial should receive a liberal interpretation, and not be restricted by any technical rule." And in Grattan v. Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. (80 N. Y. 281, 297), the court said: "Nor was it necessary for the plaintiff to show, in the first instance, by formal proof that the information was necessary to enable the witness to prescribe. Such, under the circumstances of this case, is the inevitable inference." The fact that the plaintiff consulted the physician on the occasion to which the inquiries related, when considered in connection with the nature of the questions themselves, is sufficient in the absence of other proof to bring them with in the prohibition of the statute. Code Civ. Pro., § 834; Renihan v. Dennin, 103 N. Y. 573.

In a recent case in Indiana (Heuston v. Simpson, 115 Ind. 62), the question of the admission of a physician's testimony in testamentary cases was discussed, and it was held in accordance with decisions in New York, which were fully quoted, that the statute covered such testimony, and upon proper objection by the party who wished to exclude it, it must be excluded; but in a later case (Morris v. Morris, 119 Ind. 343), the court held that the legal representative of the patient might waive the privilege; this decision being directly contrary to the New York decisions. A further limitation to this rule exists in New York, where it is held that the privilege does not extend to information as to the patient's condition, either mental or physical, gained by a doctor who is sent to make an examination of a prisoner's mental or physical condition in jail, provided the testimony does not include conversations with the prisoner, or transactions in the jail. If the doctor simply testifies as to his opinion of a person's mental or physical condi-tion as he saw him in his cell or in the court-room, the evidence is unobjectionable. People v. Kemmler, 119 N. Y. 585. The privilege of the statute is generally interpreted broadly by the courts so as to cover all information gained by a doctor while attending his patient, whether it relates to the condition of the patient or how his condition was brought about, or facts observed by the doctor in attending on the patient. Kling v. Kansas City, 27 Mo. App. 231; Streeter v. Breckenridge, 23 Mo. App. 244; Grattan v. Metropolitan Ins. Co., 80 N. Y. 297. The prohibition also extends to the partner of the doctor, who occupies the same office and consults with the patients in the absence of the other, if the patient, under such circumstances, informs the partner in relation to his injuries. close, such as his title-deeds and private papers, in a case in which he is not a party. (b)

§ 249. Judges and arbitrators. The case of judges and arbitrators may be mentioned, as the second class of privileged communications. In regard to judges of courts of record, it is considered dangerous to allow them to be called upon to state what occurred before them in court; and on this ground, the grand jury were advised not to examine the chairman of the Quarter Sessions as to what a person testified in a trial in that court. The case of arbitrators is governed by the same general policy; and neither the courts of law nor of equity will disturb decisions deliberately made by arbitrators, by requiring them to disclose the grounds of their award, unless under very cogent circumstances, such as

Co. v. Deming, 123 Ind. 384. As previously stated, it should be remembered that the objection to the competency of this evidence may be raised by any party to the action in which it is offered, and if it is not so objected to by him he will thereafter be prevented from attacking its competency.

In Michigan, several cases have been argued upon the question whether, if the patient states, for a fact, that a certain physician attended him, the physician can be put on to contradict the witness as to this fact. In the case of Brown v. Metro-politan Life Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 306, the patient testified that a Dr. H. had treated her for typhoid fever, and it was held that the doctor could be allowed to testify that he had not so treated her. In the case of Campau v. North, 39 Mich. 606, the plaintiff testified in her own behalf in an action against the defendant for injuries received by her through the negligence of the defendant. On cross-examination the plaintiff denied that she ever admitted to her attending physician that she had received serious injuries before the injury for which she sought to recover damages from the defendant. The physician was thereupon called by the defendant to contradict her on this point. The court admitted the physician, but not on the ground that the plaintiff by her testimony had waived the provisions of the statute, but that it did not appear that the admissions. but that it did not appear that the admission in question was made as information necessary to enable the doctor to prescribe for her as a physician, or to do any act for her as a surgeon. See, also, Grand Rapids, &c., R. R. Co. v. Martin, 41 Mich. 667. If a party claims to exclude evidence as coming under this prohibition, he must show the relation of physician to patient to have existed (People v. Schuyler, 106 N. Y. 303), and the rule does not apply in criminal cases. Pierson v. People, 18 Hun,

(b) The protection of this rule has sometimes been claimed for telegraphic despatches, but the courts have not yielded to the claim. The analogy of a telegraphic message to a letter passing through the mails has been urged, but the exemption of such letters depends on a special act of Congress, and until such an act is applied to telegraphic messages, it is the rule of law that the message is not protected, and the operator may be called to prove it. § 250. State secrets. We now proceed to the third class of cases, in which evidence is excluded from motives of public policy, namely, secrets of state, or things, the disclosure of which would be prejudicial to the public interest. These matters are either those which concern the administration of penal justice, or those which concern the administration of government; but the principle of public safety is in both cases the same, and the rule of exclusion is applied no further than the attainment of that object requires. (a) Thus, in criminal trials, the names of persons employed in the discovery of the crime are not permitted to be disclosed, any farther than is essential to a fair trial of the question of the prisoner's innocence or guilt.1 "It is perfectly right," said Lord Chief Justice Eyre,2 "that all opportunities should be given to discuss the truth of the evidence given against a prisoner; but there is a rule which has universally obtained. on account of its importance to the public for the detection of crimes, that those persons who are the channel by means of

(a) Gray, J., in Worthington v. Scribner, 109 Mass. 487, says: "Courts of justice, therefore, will not compel or allow the discovery of such information either by the subordinate officer to whom it is given, by the informer himself, or by any other person, without the permission of the government." This case contains a full review of the leading authorities on this subject, and criticises the case of Regina v. Richardson, 3 F. & F. 693, where a policeman was compelled to answer, on cross-examination, from whom he had received information in consequence of which defendant. Gray, J., says, this case, if maintained at all, must be upon the ground that the witness had already been examined by the government as to part of the conversation between him and the informer, and might therefore, for the protection of the defendant against any unjust inference which might be drawn from the result of such examination, be required to state the whole of that conversation. Mr. Stephen (Digest of Evid. art. 113) explains the effect of that case to be only that the judge, in ordinary criminal prosecutions, will decide whether the permission of any such question would or would not, under the circumstances of the particular case, be injurious to the administration of justice. Cf. on this point, Oliver v. Pate, 43 Ind. 132. The principle stated by the author in this section has been in some States enacted as a statute. Thus, in California (Civ. Code, § 1881, cl. 5), it is enacted that a public officer cannot be examined as to communications made to him in official confidence when the public interests would suffer by the disclosure. And the same rule is enacted in Colorado (Acts of 1883, p. 289, § 3, cl. 5), and Minnesota. Stats. § 5094, and Nebraska, Code, § 335.

which that detection is made should not be unnecessarily disclosed." Accordingly, where a witness, possessed of such knowledge, testified that he related it to a friend, not in office, who advised him to communicate it to another quarter, a majority of the learned judges held that the witness was not to be asked the name of that friend; and they all were of opinion that all those questions which tend to the discovery of the channels by which the disclosure was made to the officers of justice, were, upon the general principle of the convenience of public justice, to be suppressed; that all persons in that situation were protected from the discovery; and that, if it was objected to, it was no more competent for the defendant to ask the witness who the person was that advised him to make a disclosure, than to ask who the person was to whom he made the disclosure in consequence of that advice, or to ask any other question respecting the channel of communication, or all that was done under it.3 Hence it appears that a witness, who has been employed to collect information for the use of government, or for the purposes of the police, will not be permitted to disclose the name of his employer, or the nature of the connection between them, or the name of any person who was the channel of communication with the government or its officers, nor whether the information has actually reached the government. But he may be asked whether the person to whom the information was communicated was a magistrate or between such governor and a military officer under his authority;2 the report of a military commission of inquiry made to the commander-in-chief; 3 and the correspondence between an agent of the government and a Secretary of State, 4 — are confidential and privileged matters, which the interests of the State will not permit to be disclosed. The President of the United States, and the governors of the several States, are not bound to produce papers or disclose information communicated to them, when, in their own judgment, the disclosure would, on public considerations, be inexpedient.⁵ And where the law is restrained by public policy from enforcing the production of papers, the like necessity restrains it from doing what would be the same thing in effect; namely, receiving secondary evidence of their contents.6 But communications, though made to official persons, are not privileged where they are not made in the discharge of any public duty; such, for example, as a letter by a private individual to the chief secretary of the post-master-general, complaining of the conduct of the guard of the mail towards a passenger.7

§ 252. Proceedings of grand jurors. For the same reason of public policy, in the furtherance of justice, the proceedings of grand jurors are regarded as privileged communications. It is the policy of the law, that the preliminary inquiry, as to the guilt or innocence of a party accused, should be secretly conducted; and in furtherance of this object every grand juror is sworn to secreey. One reason may be, to prevent the escape of the party should he know that proceedings were in train against him; another may be, to secure freedom of deliberation and opinion among the grand jurors, which would be impaired if the part taken by each might be made known to the accused. Scott, 5 Har. & J. 438, it seems to have been held, that a senator of the United States may be examined, as to what transpired in a secret executive session, if the Senate has refused, on the party's application, to remove the injunction of secrecy. Scd quære, for if so, the object of the rule, in the preservation of State secrets, may generally be defeated. And see Plunkett v. Cobbett, 29 Howell's St. Tr. 71, 72; s. c. 5 Esp. 136, where Lord Ellenborough held, that though one member of Parliament may be asked as to the fact that another member took part in a debate, yet he was not bound to relate anything which had been delivered by such a speaker as a member of Parliament. But it is to be observed, that this was placed by Lord Ellenborough on the ground of personal privilege in the member; whereas the transactions of a session, after strangers are excluded, are placed member; whereas the transactions of a session, after strangers are excluded, are placed under an injunction of secrecy for reasons of State. ⁷ Blake v. third reason may be, to prevent the testimony produced before them from being contradicted at the trial of the indictment, by subornation of perjury on the part of the accused. The rule includes not only the grand jurors themselves, but their clerk,1 if they have one, and the prosecuting officer, if he is present at their deliberations; 2 all these being equally concerned in the administration of the same portion of penal law. They are not permitted to disclose who agreed to find the bill of indictment, or who did not agree; nor to detail the evidence on which the accusation was founded. 3 (a) But they may be compelled to state whether a particular person testified as a witness before the grand jury; 4 though it seems they cannot be asked if his testimony there agreed with what he testified upon the trial of the indictment.⁵ Grand jurors may also be asked, whether twelve of their

§ 252 a. Proceedings of traverse jurors. On similar grounds of public policy, and for the protection of parties against fraud, the law excludes the testimony of traverse jurors, when offered to prove misbehavior in the jury in regard to the verdiet. Formerly, indeed, the affidavits of jurors have been admitted in support of motions to set aside verdicts by reason of misconduct; but that practice was broken in upon by Lord Mansfield, and the settled course now is to reject them, because of the mischiefs which may result if the verdict is thus placed in the power of a single juryman. $^{1}(a)$

By the Revised Statutes of New York, vol. ii. p. 724, § 31, the question may be asked even in civil cases.

(a) Woodward v. Leavitt, 107 Mass. 453. Perhaps the best statement of the Me. 563, that the testimony of a juror is admissible to facts touching his own conduct or acts when separated from his fellows, or the acts or declarations of other persons with or to him, but inadmissible to what transpired in the deliberations of to what transpired in the deliberations of the jury acting as an organized body pre-sided over by their foreman and perform-ing their official duty. Cf. Tucker v. Sonth Kingston, 5 R. I. 558; Bridge-water v. Plymouth, 97 Mass. 382; Boston, &c. R. R. Corp. v. Dana, 1 Gray, 83, 105; Folsom v. Mauchester, 11 Cush. 334, 337. The testimony of jurors seems to be admitted even on the subject of the proceedings in the jury-room, in New York. Dana v. Tucker, 4 Johns. 487; and in New Hampshire. Tenney v. Evans, 13 N. H. 462; State v. Ayer, 23 N. H. 301. Mr. Chief Justice Shaw speaks of this rule as follows: "We think the judge was right. follows: "We think the judge was right in rejecting evidence of the alleged par-tiality and misconduct of a juror in the jury-room, by the testimony of the juror himself, or of the other jurors. It is a rule founded upon obvious considerations of public policy, and it is important that it should be adhered to and not broken in upon to afford relief in supposed hard cases." Cook v. Castner, 9 Cush. 278. Mr. Justice Gray expresses these views: "The proper evidence of the decision of the jury is the verdict returned by them upon oath, and affirmed in open court; it is essential to the freedom and independence of their deliberations that their discussions in the jury-room should be kept secret and inviolable, and to admit the testimony of jurors to what took place there would create distrust, embarrassments, and uncertainty. Questions of the competency of such evidence have usually arisen upon its being offered with a view to overturn the verdict; for the party in whose favor the verdict has been rendered, has ordinarily no need of further proof; but the decisive reasons for excluding the testi-mony of jurors to the motives and influ-ences which affected their deliberations are equally strong whether the evidence is offered to impeach or support the verdict." Woodward v. Leavitt, 107 Mass. 453; Rowe v. Canney, 139 Mass. 41. The English and American cases are thoroughly reviewed in this case, and the decision made that evidence of a juror as to what took place in the jury-room, was inadmissible. The same rule applies to conversawhile they are on their way to or from the court-house. Com. v. White, 147 Mass.

§ 253. Communications offensive to public morals. There is a fourth species of evidence which is excluded, namely, that which is indecent, or offensive to public morals, or injurious to the feelings or interests of third persons, the parties themselves having no interest in the matter, except what they have impertinently and voluntarily created. The mere indecency of disclosures does not, in general, suffice to exclude them where the evidence is necessary for the purposes of civil or criminal justice; as, in an indictment for a rape; or in a question upon the sex of one claiming an estate entailed, as heir male or female; or upon the legitimacy of one claiming as lawful heir; or in an action by the husband for criminal conversation with the wife. In these and similar cases the evidence is necessary, either for the proof and punishment of crime or for the vindication of rights existing before, or independent of, the fact sought to be disclosed. But where the parties have voluntarily and impertinently interested themselves in a question tending to violate the peace of society by exhibiting an innocent third person to the world in a ridiculous or contemptible light, or to disturb his own peace and comfort, or to offend public decency by the disclosures which its decision may require, the evidence will not be received. Of this sort are wagers or contracts respecting the sex of a third person, 1 or upon the question whether an unmarried woman has had a child.2 In this place may also be mentioned the declarations of the husband or wife that they have had no connection, though living together and that therefore the offspring is spurious; which, on the same general ground of decency, morality, and policy, are uniformly excluded.3

§ 254. Communications between husband and wife. Communications between husband and wife belong also to the class of privileged communications, and are therefore protected independently of the ground of interest and identity, which precludes the par-ceed at all in the trial. Brown v. Leeson, 2 H. Bl. 43; Henkin v. Gerss, 2 Campb. 408.

^{76;} Rowe v. Canney, 139 Mass. 41. This rule has been also extended so as to exclude the testimony of one juror as to the misconduct of another juror outside the juryroom, during the pendency of the case. Rowe v. Canney, 139 Mass. 41. As the direct testimony of a juror as to what took place in the jury-room, is inadmissible, à fortiori, his declarations, testified to by another witness, as to such matters, are inadmissible. Warren v. Spencer Water Co., 143 Mass. 155.

ties from testifying for or against each other. (a) The happiness of the married state requires that there should be the most unlimited confidence between husband and wife; and this confidence the law secures by providing that it shall be kept forever inviolable; that nothing shall be extracted from the bosom of the wife which was confided there by the husband. Therefore, after the parties are separated, whether it be by divorce or by the death

(a) The exclusion of such communications as are described in the text is based partially upon the policy of the law to exclude such communications and partly upon the interest of the witness in the case. These two grounds for this exclusion have given rise to statutory enactments on this point in most of the States, but these stat-utes have generally been framed rather with regard to the interest of the witness than to the reasons of public policy excluding the testimony. Consequently, the statutes may more properly be considered in connection with the sections relating to the competency of witnesses, where they will be found set forth at length, and the subject discussed in all its aspects, including the reasons of public policy which are set forth in this section by the author, but which are so combined in the statutes with the grounds of incompetency arising from the interest of the witness, that a separate dis-cussion of them would involve much repetition, and is therefore avoided. See post, § 334, notes.

A few points, however, may be noticed here. The English statute provides that no husband or wife shall be compellable to disclose any communication made to him or her by the other, during marriage. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83, § 3. The New York statute is similar. Statute of 1867, c. 887, § 3. A voluntary statement is, therefore, receivable under such statutes. Southwick v. Southwick, 2 Sweeny, 234. In most States, however, husband and wife are incompetent to testify as to such communications. See § 341, note (a); Baldwin v. Parker, 99 Mass. 79; Jacobs v. Hesler, 113 Id. 157; Brown v. Wood, 121 Id.

137. As the privilege attaches to the communication, it is held that if it has been repeated by either husband or wife to a third person, it cannot be proved by putting that person on the stand to testify to it. Brown v. Wood, 121 Mass. 137. Yet if a third person has overheard the conversation while it is going on, he may testify to it. Com. v. Griffin, 110 Mass. 181; State v. Carter, 35 Vt. 378. And also, that the communication, if it is in writing, is not privileged, if the writing gets into the hands of third parties. State v. Buffington, 20 Kan. 599.

The statutes of some States include only private conversations in the privilege. This term naturally means conversations between the husband and wife when alone, but it has been held to include the conversation between husband and wife when in the presence of their young children, who took no part in nor paid any attention to the conversation (Jacobs v. Hesler, ubi supra); but not when a third person is present. Fay v. Guynon, 131 Mass. 31. The conversation need not be confidential in its nature. Dexter v. Booth, 2 Allen (Mass.), 559; Raynes v. Bennett, 114 Mass. 425. Com. v. Hayes, 145 Mass. 293. And exclamations of pain uttered by the husband in the presence of the wife may be testified to by her. Com. v. Jardine, 143 Mass. 567.

In other States, the statute only protects confidential communications. v. Chetwood, 27 N. J. Eq. 311.

The statute of other States covers all communications made by either husband or wife to the other during the marriage. This is the English statute, 16 & 17 Viet. c. 83, § 3. And so in Rhode Island, Gen. 8. 83, § 3. Alla so in Milote Island, Stat. e. 203, § 36; California C. C. P. § 1881; Kansas Civil Code, § 323; Ohio: 67 Ohio L. 113; Illinois, Sess. Laws, 1867, 184, § 5. And for more extended reference, see post, § 334 and notes. Under such a statute, communications between husband and wife are privileged, though they are made in the presence of third persons. Campbell v. Chace, 12 R. I. 333; Estate of Low, Myrick's Probate, 143; Bird v. Hueston, 10 Ohio St. 418; Westerman v. Westerman, 25 Ohio St. 500.

But communications made by the husband or wife to a third person in the presence of the other, are not so privileged. Hig-bee v. McMillen, 18 Kan. 133; Griffin v.

Smith, Adm'r, 45 Ind. 366.

In some States no statute at all exists on this subject, and the common-law rule then governs. White v. Perry, 14 W. of the husband, the wife is still precluded from disclosing any conversations with him, though she may be admitted to testify to facts which came to her knowledge by means equally accessible to any person not standing in that relation. 1 (b) Their general incompetency to testify for or against each other will be considered hereafter in its more appropriate place.

§ 254 a. Evidence admissible, though illegally obtained. It may be mentioned in this place, that though papers and other subjects of evidence may have been illegally taken from the possession of the party against whom they are offered, or otherwise unlawfully obtained, this is no valid objection to their admissibility if they are pertinent to the issue. The court will not take notice how they were obtained, whether lawfully or unlawfully, nor will it form an issue to determine that question.2

CHAPTER XIV.

OF THE NUMBER OF WITNESSES, AND THE NATURE AND QUANTITY OF PROOF REQUIRED IN PARTICULAR CASES.

§ 255. Number of witnesses in treason. Under this head it is not proposed to go into an extended consideration of the statutes of treason, or of frauds, but only to mention briefly some instances in which those statutes, and some other rules of law, have regulated particular cases, taking them out of the operation of the general principles by which they would otherwise be governed. Thus, in regard to treasons, though by the common law the crime was sufficiently proved by one credible witness, 1 yet, considering the great weight of the oath or duty of allegiance against the probability of the fact of treason,2 it has been deemed expedient to provide 3 that no person shall be indicted or convicted of high treason but upon the oaths and testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or to separate overt acts of the same treason, unless upon his voluntary confession in open court. We have already seen that a voluntary confession out of court, if proved by two witnesses, is sufficient to warrant a conviction; and that in England the crime is well proved if there be one witness

² This is conceived to be the true foundation on which the rule has, in modern times, been enacted. The manner of its first introduction into the statutes was thus stated by the Lord Chancellor, in Lord Stafford's Case, T. Raym. 408: "Upon this occasion, my Lord Chancellor, in the Lords House, was pleased to communicate a notion concerning the reason of two witnesses in treason, which he said was not very familiar, he believed; and it was this: anciently all or most of the judges were churchmen and ecclesiastical persons, and by the canon law now, and then, in use all over the Christian world, none can be condemned of heresy but by two lawful and credible witnesses; and bare words may make a heretic, but not a traitor, and anciently heresy was treason; and from thence the Parliament thought fit to appoint that two witnesses ought to be for proof of high treason."

for proof of high treason."

This was done by Stat. 7 W. III. c. 3, § 2. Two witnesses were required by the earlier statutes of 1 Ed. VI. c. 12, and 5 & 6 Ed. VI. c. 11; in the construction of which statutes, the rule afterwards declared in Stat. 7 W. III. was adopted. See Rex v. Lord Stafford, T. Raym. 407. The Constitution of the United States provides that "No person shall be convicted of treason, unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court." Art. 3, § 3, LL. U. S. vol. ii. c. 36, § 1. This provision has been adopted, in terms, in many of the State constitutions. But as in many other States, there is no express law requiring that the testimony of both witnesses should be to the same overt act, the rule stated in the text is conceived to be that which would govern in trials for treason against those States; though in trials in the other States, and for treason against the United States, the constitutional provision would confine the evidence to the same overt act.

to one overt act, and another witness to another overt act, of the same species of treason.4 It is also settled that when the prisoner's confession is offered, as corroborative of the testimony of such witnesses, it is admissible, though it be proved by only one witness; the law not having excluded confessions, proved in that manner, from the consideration of the jury, but only provided that they alone shall not be sufficient to convict the prisoner.⁵ And as to all matters merely collateral, and not conducing to the proof of the overt acts, it may be safely laid down as a general rule, that whatever was evidence at common law is still good evidence under the express constitutional and statutory provision above mentioned.6

§ 256. No overt act not laid in the indictment provable. be proper in this place to observe that in treason the rule is that no evidence can be given of any overt act which is not expressly laid in the indictment. But the meaning of the rule is, not that the whole detail of facts should be set forth, but that no overt act, amounting to a distinct independent charge, though falling under the same head of treason, shall be given in evidence unless it be expressly laid in the indictment. If, however, it will conduce to the proof of any of the overt acts which are laid, it may be admitted as evidence of such overt acts. This rule is not peculiar to prosecutions for treason; though, in consequence of the oppressive character of some former State prosecutions for that crime, it has been deemed expedient expressly to enact it in the later statutes of treason. It is nothing more than a particular application of a fundamental doctrine of the law of remedy and of evidence; namely, that the proof must correspond with the allegations, and be confined to the point in issue.2 This issue, in treason, is whether the prisoner committed that crime by doing the treasonable act stated in the indictment; as, in slander, the question is, whether the defendant injured the plaintiff by maliciously uttering the falsehoods laid in the declaration; and evidence of collateral facts is admitted or rejected on the like principle in either case, accordingly as it does or does not tend to establish the specific charge. Therefore the declarations of the prisoner, and seditious language used by him, are admissible in evidence as explanatory of his conduct, and of the nature and object of the conspiracy in which he was engaged. 3 (a) And after proof of the overt act of treason, in the county mentioned in the indictment, other acts of treason tending to prove the overt acts laid, though done in a foreign country, may be given in evidence. $^{4}(b)$

§ 257. In perjury. In proof of the crime of perjury, also, it was formerly held that two witnesses were necessary, because otherwise there would be nothing more than the oath of one man against another, upon which the jury could not safely convict.1 But this strictness has long since been relaxed; the true principle of the rule being merely this, that the evidence must be something more than sufficient to counterbalance the oath of the prisoner, and the legal presumption of his innocence.2 The oath of the opposing witness, therefore, will not avail, unless it be corroborated by other independent circumstances. But it is not precisely accurate to say, that these additional circumstances must be tantamount to another witness. The same effect being given to the oath of the prisoner, as though it were the oath of a credible witness, the scale of evidence is exactly balanced, and the equilibrium must be destroyed, by material and independent circumstances, before the party can be convicted. The additional evidence needs not be such as, standing by itself, would justify a conviction in a case where the testimony of a single witness would suffice for that purpose. But it must be at least strongly corroborative of the testimony of the accusing witness;³ or, in the quaint but energetic language of Parker, C. J., "a strong and clear evidence, and more numerous than the evidence given for the defendant." 4 (a)

² The history of this relaxation of the sternness of the old rule is thus stated by Mr. Justice Wayne, in delivering the opinion of the court in United States v. Wood, 14 Peters, 440, 441: "At first, two witnesses were required to convict in a case of perjury; both swearing directly adversely from the defendant's oath. Contemporaneously with this requisition, the larger number of witnesses on one side or the other prevailed. with this requisition, the larger number of witnesses on one side or the other prevailed. Then a single witness, corroborated by other witnesses, swearing to circumstances bearing directly upon the imputed corpus delicti of a defendant, was deemed sufficient. Next, as in the case of Rex v. Knill, 5 B. & Ald. 929, n., with a long interval between it and the preceding, a witness who gave proof only of the contradictory oaths of the defendant on two occasions, one being an examination before the House of Lords, and the other an examination before the Honse of Commons, was held to be sufficient; though this principle had been acted on as early as 1764, by Justice Yates, as may be seen in the note to the case of The King v. Harris, 5 B. & Ald. 937, and was acquiesced in by Lord Mansfield, and Justices Wilmont and Aston. We are aware that, in a note to Rex v. Mayhew, 6 C. & P. 315, a doubt is implied concerning the case decided by Justice Yates: but it has the stamp of authenticity, from its having been referred to in a case happening ten years afterwards before Justice Chambre, as will appear by by Justice Yates: but it has the stamp of authenticity, from its having been referred to in a case happening ten years afterwards before Justice Chambre, as will appear by the note in 5 B. & Ald. 937. Afterwards, a single witness, with the defendant's bill of costs (not sworn to) in lieu of a second witness, delivered by the defendant to the prosecutor, was held sufficient to contradict his oath; and in that case Lord Denman says, 'A letter written by the defendant, contradicting his statement on oath, would be sufficient to make it unnecessary to have a second witness.' 6 C. & P. 315. We thus see that this rule, in its proper application, has been expanded beyond its literal terms, as cases have occurred in which proofs have been offered equivalent to the end intended to be accomplished by the rule."

§ 257 a. In case of several assignments. When there are several assignments of perjury in the same indictment, it does not seem to be clearly settled, whether, in addition to the testimony of a single witness, there must be corroborative proof with respect to each; but the better opinion is, that such proof is necessary; and that, too, although all the perjuries assigned were committed at one time and place. (b) For instance, if a person, on putting

More recently, corroborative evidence, in cases where more then one witness is required by law, has been defined by Dr. Lushington to be not merely evidence showing that the account is probable, but evidence proving facts ejusdem generis, and tending to produce the same results. Simmons v. S mons v. Simmons, 11 Jur. 830. See further to this point, Reg. v. Parker, C. & Marsh. 646; Reg. v. Champney, 2 Lewin, 258; Reg. v. Gardiner, 8 C. & P. 737; Reg. v. And one witness is sufficient to prove the fact that the defendant swore as alleged in the indictment. Com. v. Pollard, 12 Met. (Mass.) 225. In Venable's Case, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 639, after a confession upon inducement, and after a warning from the court, and the prisoner's counsel, a confession to a third person was held inadmissible. What degree of corrobo-rative evidence is necessary must be a matter for the opinion of the presiding judge, who must see that it deserves the title of corroborative evidence. Any attempt to define the degree of corroboration necessary would be illusory. Reg. v.

Shaw, 10 Cox, C. C. 66.
(b) Williams v. Com., 91 Pa. St. 493. And in England the rule is settled in this way by Reg. v. Parker, Stamf. Sum. Ass. 1842, eited in Russ. on Crimes, vol. iii. 5th ed. p. 80. But where the assignment is of a continuous nature, as where a witness swore that he did not "treat" a certain person to drinks during a certain day, proof of one distinct act of such "treating," proved by one witness, is corrobo-rated sufficiently by proof of another in-stance of "treating" proved by another single witness; for both such instances of treat go to prove the falsity of the statement which the defendant swore to. Reg. v. Hare, 13 Cox, C. C. 174.

in his schedule in the insolvent debtor's court, or on other the like occasion, has sworn that he has paid certain creditors, and is then indicted for perjury on several assignments, each specifying a particular creditor who has not been paid, a single witness with respect to each debt will not, it seems, suffice, though it may be very difficult to obtain any fuller evidence.2

§ 258. Corroborating circumstances. The principle that one witness with corroborating circumstances is sufficient to establish the charge of perjury, leads to the conclusion that circumstances, without any witness, when they exist in documentary or written testimony, may combine, to the same effect; as they may combine altogether unaided by oral proof, except the evidence of their authenticity, to prove any other fact, connected with the declarations of persons or the business of human life. The principle is, that circumstances necessarily make a part of the proofs of human transactions; that such as have been reduced to writing, in unequivocal terms, when the writing has been proved to be authentic, cannot be made more certain by evidence aliunde; and that such as have not been reduced to writing, whether they relate to the declarations or conduct of men, can only be proved by oral testimony. Accordingly, it is now held that a living witness of the corpus delicti may be dispensed with, and documentary or written evidence be relied upon to convict of perjury, — first, where the falsehood of the matter sworn by the prisoner is directly proved by documentary or written evidence springing from himself, with circumstances showing the corrupt intent; secondly, in cases where the matter so sworn is contradicted by a public record, proved to have been well known by the prisoner when he took the oath, the oath only being proved to have been taken; and, thirdly, in cases where the party is charged with taking an oath, contrary to what he must necessarily have known to be true; the falsehood being shown by his own letters relating to the fact sworn to, or by any other written testimony existing and being found in his possession, and which has been treated by him as containing the evidence of the fact recited in it.1

² Reg. v. Parker, C. & Marsh. 639, 645-647, per Tindal, C. J. In Rex v. Mudic, M. & Rob. 128, 129, Lord Tenterden, under similar circumstances, refused to stop

1 United States v. Wood, 14 Peters, 440, 441. In this case, under the latter head of the rule here stated, it was held, that, if the jury were satisfied of the corrupt intent, the prisoner might well be convicted of perjury, in taking, at the custom-house in New York, the "owner's oath in cases where goods, wares, or merchandise, have been actually purchased," upon the evidence of the invoice-book of his father, John Wood, of Saddleworth, England, and of thirty-five letters from the prisoner to his

§ 259. Contradictory oaths. If the evidence adduced in proof of the crime of perjury consists of two opposing statements of the prisoner, and nothing more, he cannot be convicted. For if one only was delivered under oath, it must be presumed, from the solemnity of the sanction, that that declaration was the truth, and the other an error or a falsehood; though the latter, being inconsistent with what he has sworn, may form important evidence, with other circumstances, against him. And if both the contradictory statements were delivered under oath, there is still nothing to show which of them is false, where no other evidence of the falsity is given. 1 If, indeed, it can be shown that, before giving the testimony on which perjury is assigned, the accused had been tampered with,2 or if there be other circumstances in the case, tending to prove that the statement offered in evidence against the accused was in fact true, a legal conviction may be obtained.3 And "although the jury may believe that on the one or the other occasion the prisoner swore to what was not true, yet it is not a necessary consequence that he committed perjury. For there are cases in which a person might very honestly and conscientiously swear to a particular fact, from the best of his recollection and belief, and from other circumstances subsequently be convinced that he was wrong, and swear to the reverse, without meaning to swear falsely either time."4

4 Per Holroyd, J., in Jackson's Case, 1 Lewin's Cr. Cas. 270. This very reasonable doctrine is in perfect accordance with the rule of the Criminal Law of Scotland, as laid down by Mr. Alison in his lucid and elegant treatise on that subject in the follow. laid down by Mr. Alison in his lucid and elegant treatise on that subject, in the following terms: "When contradictory and inconsistent oaths have been emitted, the mere contradiction is not decisive evidence of the existence of perjury in one or other of them; but the prosecutor must establish which was the true one, and libel on the other as containing the falsehood. Where depositions contradictory to each other have been as containing the falsehood. Where depositions contradictory to each other have been emitted by the same person on the same matter, it may with certainty be concluded that one or other of them is false. But it is not relevant to infer perjury in so loose a manner; but the prosecutor must go a step farther, and specify distinctly which of the two contains the falsehood, and peril his case upon the means he possesses of proving perjury in that deposition. To admit the opposite course, and allow the prosecutor to libel on both depositions, and make out his charge by comparing them together, without distinguishing which contains the truth and which the falsehood, would be directly contrary to the precision justly required in criminal proceedings. In the older practice this distinction does not seem to have been distinctly recognized; but it is now justly considered indispensable, that the perjury should be specified existing in one, and the other deposition referred to in modum probationis, to make out, along with other circumstances, where the truth really lay." See Alison's Crim. Law of Scotland, p. 475. of an answer in chancery. Formerly, when a material fact was directly put in issue by the answer, the courts of equity followed the maxim of the Roman law, responsio unius non omnino audiatur, and required the evidence of two witnesses, as the foundation of a decree. But of late years the rule has been referred more strictly to the equitable principle on which it is founded; namely, the right to credit which the defendant may claim, equal to that of any other witness in all cases where his answer is "positively, clearly, and precisely" responsive to any matter stated in the bill. For the plaintiff, by calling on the defendant to answer an allegation which he makes, thereby admits the answer to be evidence.1 In such case, if the defendant in express terms negatives the allegations in the bill, and the bill is supported by the evidence of only a single witness, affirming what has been so denied, the court will neither make a decree, nor send the case to be tried at law; but will simply dismiss the bill.2 But the corroborating testimony of an additional witness, or of circumstances, may give a turn either way to the balance. And even the evidence arising from circumstances alone, may be stronger than the testimony of any single witness.3 (a)

§ 260 a. Usage of trade. It has also been held, that the testimony of one witness alone is not sufficient to establish any usage of trade, of which all dealers in that particular line are bound to take notice, and are presumed to be informed. 4 (b)

made in some recent instances to introduce into ecclesiastical councils in the United States the old and absurd rules of the canon law of England, foreign as they are to the nature and genius of American institutions, the following statement of the light in which those rules are at present regarded in England will not be unacceptable to the reader. It is taken from the (London) Law Review, &c., for May, 1846, pp. 132-135. "In the ecclesiastical courts, the rule requiring a plurality of witnesses is carried far beyond the verge of common sense; and although no recent decision of those courts has, we believe, been pronounced, expressly determining that five, seven, or more witnesses are essential to constitute full proof, yet the authority of Dr. Ayliffe, who states that, according to the canon law, this amount of evidence is required in some matters, has been very lately cited, with apparent assent, if not approbation, by the learned Sir Herbert Jenner Fust. (b) The case in support of which the above high authority was quoted was a suit for divorce. (c) In a previous action for criminal conversation, a special jury had given £500 damages to the husband, who, with a female servant, (d) had found his wife and the adulterer together in bed. This last fact was deposed to by the servant; but as she was the only witness called to prove it, and as her testimony was uncorroborated, the learned judge did not feel himself at liberty to grant the promoter's prayer. orated, the learned judge did not leel nimself at liberty to grant the promoter's prayer. This doctrine, that the testimony of a single witness, though omni exceptione major, is insufficient to support a decree in the ecclesiastical courts, when such testimony stands unsupported by adminicular circumstances, has been frequently propounded by Lord Stowell, both in suits for divorce, (c) for defamation, (f) and for brawling; (g) and before the new Will Act was passed, (h) Sir John Nicholl disregarded similar evidence, as not amounting to legal proof of a testamentary act. (i) In the case, too, of Mackenzie v. Yeo, (j) when a codicil was propounded, purporting to have been duly executed, and was deposed to by one attesting witness only, the other having married the legater and was deposed to by one attesting witness only, the other having married the legatee, Sir Herbert Jenner Fust refused to grant probate, though he admitted the witness was unexceptionable, on the ground that his testimony was not confirmed by adminicular circumstances, and that the probabilities of the case inclined against the factum of such an instrument. (k) In another case, however, the same learned judge admitted a paper to probate on the testimony of one attesting witness, who had been examined a few days after the death of the testator, though the other witness, whose deposition had not been taken till two years and a half afterwards, declared that the will was not signed in

(b) Evans v. Evans, 1 Roberts, Ecc. 171. The passage cited from Ayliffe, Par. 444, is as follows: "Full proof is made by two or three witnesses at the least. For there are some matters which, according to the canon law, do require five, seven, or more witnesses, to make full proof." The same learned commentator, a little farther on, after explaining that "liquid proof is that which appears to the judge from the act of court, since that cannot be properly said to be manifest or notorious," adds, "By the canon law, a Jew is not admitted to give evidence against a Christian, especially if he be a clergyman, for by that law the proofs against a clergyman ought to be much clearer than against a layman." Par. 448. Dr. Ayliffe does not mention what matters require this superabundant proof, but we have already said (vol. i. p. 380, n.), that in the case of a cardinal charged with incontinence, the probatio, in order to be plena, must be established by no less than seven eye-witnesses; so improbable does it appear to the Church that one of her highest dignitaries should be guilty of such an offence, and so anxious is she to avoid all possibility of judicial scandal. This is adopting with a vengeance the principles of David Hume with respect to miracles.

(c) Evans v. Evans, 1 Roberts, Ecc. 165.

(d) The fact that the witness was a woman does not seem to have formed an element in the judgment of the court, though Dr. Ayliffe assures his readers, with becoming gravity, that, "by the canon law, more credit is given to male than to female witnesses." Par. 545.

his presence. In this case there was a formal attestation clause, and that fact was regarded by the court as favoring the supposition of a due execution. Though the cases cited above certainly establish beyond dispute, that, by the canon law as recognized in cur spiritual courts, one uncorroborated witness is insufficient, they as certainly decide, that, in ordinary cases at least, two or more witnesses need not depose to the principal fact; but that it will suffice, if one be called to swear to such fact, and the other or others speak merely to confirmatory circumstances. Nay, it would seem from some expressions used, that, as in cases of perjury, documentary or written testimony, or the statements or conduct of the party libelled, may supply the place of a second witness. (1) If, indeed, proceedings be instituted under the provisions of some statute, which expressly enacts that the offence shall be proved by two lawful witnesses, as, for instance, the Act of 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 4, which relates to brawling in a church or churchyard, the court might feel some delicacy about presuming that such an enactment would be satisfied by calling one witness to the fact, and one to the circumstances. (m) It seems that this rule of the canonists depends less on the authority of the civilians than on the Mosaic code, which enacts that one witness shall not rise up against a man for any iniquity; but at the mouth of two or three witnesses shall the matter be established. (n) Indeed, the decretal of Pope Gregory the Ninth, which enforces the observance of this doctrine, (o) expressly cites St. Paul as an authority, where he tells the Corinthians that 'in ore duorum vel trium testium stat omne verbum.' (p) Now, however well suited this rule might have been to the peculiar circumstances of the Jew-

St. Paul makes merely a passing allusion to it in reference to the third time of his coming to the Corinthians, not as an existing rule of their law, and much less with any view of imposing on them the nunicipal regulations of Moses. The Mosaic law, except those portions which are purely moral and universal in their nature, such as the ten commandments, was never to be enforced on any converts from heathenism. See Acts, c. 15; Galatians, c. 2, v. 11-14. Of course, it is not binding on us. Our Saviour, in Matt. c. 18, v. 16, 17, directs that, in a case of private difference between Christian brethren, the injured party shall go to the offender, taking with him "one or two more," who are, in the first instance, to act as arbitrators and peacemakers; not as witnesses; for they are not necessarily supposed to have any previous knowledge of the case. Afterwards these may be called as witnesses before the Church, to testify what took place on that occasion; and their number will satisfy any rule, even of the Jewish Church, respecting the number of witnesses. But if this passage is to be taken as an indication of the number of witnesses, or quantity of oral proof to be required, it cannot be extended beyond the case for which it is prescribed; namely, the case of a private and personal wrong, prosecuted before the Church, in the way of ecclesiastical discipline, and this only where the already existing rule requires more than one witness. Whether this documentary evidence is required by the law of nations or not, is not perfectly settled; but the weight of opinion is clearly on the side of its necessity, and that without this, and the other usual documents, no national character is attached to the vessel.3

§ 262. Statute of frauds. Written evidence is also required of the several transactions mentioned in the Statute of Frauds, passed in the reign of Charles II., the provisions of which have been enacted, generally in the same words, in nearly all of the United States. The rules of evidence contained in this celebrated statute are calculated for the exclusion of perjury, by requiring, in the cases therein mentioned, some more satisfactory and convincing testimony than mere oral evidence affords. The statute dispenses with no proof of consideration which was previously required, and gives no efficacy to written contracts which they did not previously possess.2 Its policy is to impose such requisites upon private transfers of property as, without being hinderances to fair transactions, may be either totally inconsistent with dishonest projects, or tend to multiply the chances of detection.3 The object of the present work will not admit of an extended consideration of the provisions of this statute, but will necessarily restrict us to a brief notice of the rules of evidence which it has introduced.

tective regulations, of the same nature, may be found in the early codes of most of the northern nations, as well as in the laws of the Anglo-Saxon princes; the prevention of frauds and perjuries being sought, agreeably to the simplicity of those unlettered times, by requiring a certain number of witnesses to a valid sale, and sometimes by restricting such sales to particular places. In the Anglo-Saxon laws, such regulations were quite familiar; and the Statute of Frauds was merely the revival of obsolete provisions, demanded by the circumstances of the times, and adapted, in a new mode of proof, to the improved condition and habits of the trading community. By the laws of Lotharius and Edric, Kings of Kent, § 16, if a Kentish man purchased anything in London, it must be done in the presence of two or three good citizens or of the mayor of the city. (Canciani, Leges Barbarorum Antiquæ, vol. iv. p. 231.) The laws of King Edward the Elder (De jure et lite, § 1) required the testimony of the mayor, or some other credible person, to every sale, and prohibited all sales out of the city. Cancian. ub. sup. p. 256. King Athelstan prohibited sales in the country, above the value of twenty pence; and, for those in the city, he required the same formalities as in the laws of Edward. and, for those in the city, he required the same formalities as in the laws of Edward. (Id. pp. 261, 262, LL. Athelstani, § 12.) By the laws of King Ethelred, every freeman was required to have his surety (fidejussor), without whom, as well as other evidence, there could be no valid sale or barter. "Nullus homo faciat alterutrum, nee emat, nec permutet, nisi fidejussorem habeat, et testimonium." (Id. p. 287, LL. Ethelredi, §§ 1, 4.) In the Concilium Seculare of Canute, § 22, it was provided, that there should be no sale, above the value of four pence, whether in the city or country, without the presence of four witnesses. (Id. p. 305.) The same rule in nearly the same words, was enacted by William the Conqueror. (Id. p. 357, LL. Guil. Conq. § 43.) Afterwards, in the charter of the Conqueror (§ 60), no cattle ("nulla viva pecunia," scil. animalia) could be legally sold, unless in the cities, and in the presence of three witnesses. (Cancian ub. sup. p. 360. Leges Anglo-Saxonicz, p. 198 (ol.) three witnesses. (Cancian ub. sup. p. 360. Leges Anglo-Saxonicæ, p. 198 (o).) Among the ancient Sueones and Goths, no sale was originally permitted but in the presence of witnesses, and (per mediatores) through the medium of brokers. The witnesses were required in order to preserve the evidence of the sale; and the brokers, or mediators (at pretium moderarentur), to prevent extortion, and see to the title. But these formalities were afterwards dispensed with, except in the sale of articles of value (res pretiose,) or of great amount. (Cancian. ub. sup. p. 231, n. 4.) Alienations of lands were made only (publicis literis) by documents legally authenticated. By the Danish law, lands in the city or country might be exchanged without judicial appraisement (per tabulas manu signoque permutantis affixas,) by deed, under the hand and seal of the party. (Id. p. 261, n. 4.) The Roman law required written evidence in a great variety of cases, embracing, among many others, all those mentioned in the Statute of Frauds; which are enumerated by N. De Lescut, De Exam. Testium, Cap. 26 (Farinac. Oper. Tom. ii. App. 243). See also Brederodii Repertorium Juris, col. 28 (Farmac. Oper. Ion. It App. 210). See also Dicterious Reperious Assertion 18, 210 and 1 tracts whatever, above the value of three hundred livres Artois, were required to be in writing. And in France, by the Ordonnance de Moulins (A. D. 1566) confirmed by that of 1667, parol or verbal evidence was excluded in all cases, where the subjectmatter exceeded the value of one hundred livres. See Danty de la Preuve, &c., passim; 7 Poth. Œuvres, &c., 4to, p. 56; Traité de la Procéd. Civ. c. 3, art. 4, Règle 3me; 1 Poth. on Obl. part 4, c. 2, arts. 1, 2, 3, 5; Commercial Code of France, art. 109. The dates of these regulations, and of the Statute of Frands, and the countries in which dates of these regulations, and of the statute of frames, and the commiss in which they were adopted, are strikingly indicative of the revival and progress of commerce. Among the Jews, lands were conveyed by deed only, from a very early period, as is evident from the transaction mentioned in Jer. xxxii. 10-12, where the principal document was "sealed according to the law and custom," in the presence of witnesses; and another writing, or "open evidence," was also taken, probably, as Sir John Chardin thought, for common use, as is the manner in the East at this day.

necessity of some writing is universally required, upon all conveyances of lands, or interest in lands, for more than three years: all interests, whether of freehold or less than freehold, certain or uncertain, created by parol without writing, being allowed only the force and effect of estates at will; except leases, not exceeding the term of three years from the making thereof, whereon the rent reserved shall amount to two-thirds of the improved value. The term of three years, for which a parol lease may be good, must be only three years from the making of it; but if it is to commence in futuro, yet if the term is not for more than three years, it will be good. And if a parol lease is made to held from year to year, during the pleasure of the parties, this is adjudged to be a lease only for one year certain, and that every year after it is a new springing interest, arising upon the first contract, and parcel of it; so that if the tenant should occupy ten years, still it is prospectively but a lease for a year certain, and therefore good, within the exception of the statute; though as to the time past it is considered as one entire and valid lease for so many years as the tenant has enjoyed it. 3 (a) But though a parol lease for a longer period than the statute permits is void for the excess, and may have only the effect of a lease for a year, yet it may still have an operation, so far as its terms apply to a tenancy for a year. If, therefore, there be a parol lease for seven years for a specified rent, and to commence and end on certain days expressly named; though this is void as to duration of the lease, yet it must regulate all the other terms of the tenancy.² (b)

§ 264. Leases. By the same statute, no leases, estates, or interests, either of freehold, or terms of years, or an uncertain interest, other than copyhold or customary interests in lands, tenements, or hereditaments, can be assigned, granted, or surrendered, unless by deed or writing, signed by the party, or his agent authorized by writing,1 or by operation of law. At common law, surrenders of estates for life or years in things corporeal were good, if made by parol; but things incorporeal, lying in grant, could neither be created nor surrendered but by deed.² The effect of this statute is not to dispense with any evidence required by the common law, but to add to its provisions somewhat of security, by requiring a new and more permanent species of testimony. Wherever, therefore, at common law, a deed was necessary, the same solemnity is still requisite; but with respect to lands and tenements in possession, which before the statute might have been surrendered by parol, that is, by words only, some note in writing is now made essential to a valid surrender. 3 (a)

§ 265. Cancellation of deeds. As to the effect of the cancellation of a deed to devest the estate, operating in the nature of a surrender, a distinction is taken between things lying in livery, and those which lie only in grant. In the latter ease, the subject being incorporeal, and owing its very existence to the deed, it appears that at common law the destruction of the deed by the party, with intent to defeat the interest taken under it, will have Without such intent, it will be merely a case of that effect. casual spoliation. But where the thing lies in livery and manual occupation, the deed being, at common law, only the authentication of the transfer, and not the operative act of conveying the property, the cancellation of the instrument will not involve the destruction of the interest conveyed. 1 It has been thought, that, since writing is now by the statute made essential to certain leases of hereditaments lying in livery, the destruction of the lease would necessarily draw after it the loss of the interest itself.2 But the better opinion seems to be, that it will not; because the intent of the statute is to take away the mode of transferring interests in lands by symbols and words alone, as formerly used, and therefore a surrender by cancellation, which is but a sign, is also taken away at law; though a symbolical surrender may still be recognized in chancery as the basis of relief.3 The sur-

§ 266. Declarations of trust. This statute further requires that the declaration or creation of trusts of lands (a) shall be manifested and proved only by some writing, signed by the party creating the trust; and all grants and assignments of any such trust or confidence are also to be in writing, and signed in the same manner. It is to be observed, that the same statute does not require that the trust itself be created by writing, but only that it be manifested and proved by writing; plainly meaning that there should be evidence in writing, proving that there was a trust, and what the trust was. A letter acknowledging the trust, and, a fortiori, an admission, in an answer in chancery, has therefore been deemed sufficient to satisfy the statute. 1 Resulting trusts, or those which arise by implication of law, are specially excepted from the operation of the statute. (b) Trusts of this sort are said by Lord Hardwicke to arise in three cases: first, where the estate is purchased in the name of one person, but the money paid for it is the property of another; secondly, where a conveyance is made in trust, declared only as to part, and the residue remains undisposed of, nothing being declared respecting it; and, thirdly, in certain cases of fraud.2 Other divisions have been suggested; 3 but they all seem to be reducible to these three heads. In all these cases, it seems now to be generally con-

effect of a surrender, or reconveyance of the estate, the first grantee and those claiming under him not being permitted to give parol evidence of the contents of the deed, thus ceded that parol evidence, though received with great caution, is admissible to establish the collateral facts (not contradictory to the deed, unless in the cause of fraud) (c) from which a trust may legally result; and that it makes no difference as to its admissibility whether the supposed purchaser be living or dead.4

§ 267. Executors and administrators. Written evidence, signed by the party to be charged therewith, or by his agent, is by the same statute required in every case of contract by an executor or administrator, to answer damages out of his own estate; every promise of one person to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another; every agreement made in consideration of marriage, or which is not to be performed within a year from the time of making it; and every contract for the sale of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest in or concerning them. The like evidence is also required in every case of contract for the sale of goods, for the price of £10 sterling or upwards 1 unless the buyer shall receive part of the goods at time of sale, or give something in earnest, to bind the bargain, or in part payment.2

§ 268. Evidence may be collected from several writings. It is not necessary that the written evidence required by the Statute of Frauds should be comprised in a single document, nor that it should be drawn up in any particular form. It is sufficient, if the contract can be plainly made out, in all its terms, from any writings of the party, or even from his correspondence. But it must all be collected from the writings; verbal testimony not being admissible to supply any defects or omissions in the written evidence.1 For the policy of the law is to prevent fraud and perjury, by taking all the enumerated transactions entirely out of the reach of any verbal testimony whatever. Nor is the place of signature material. It is sufficient if the vendor's name be printed, in a bill of parcels, provided the vendee's name and the rest of the bill are written by the vendor. Even his signature, as a witness to a deed, which contained a recital of the agreement, has been held sufficient, if it appears that in fact he knew of the recital.3 Neither is it necessary that the agreement or memorandum be signed by both parties, or that both be legally bound to the performance; for the statute only requires that it be signed "by the party to be charged therewith," that is, by the defendant against whom the performance or damages are demanded. $^{4}(a)$

Whether the Statute of Frauds, in requiring that, in certain cases, the "agreement" be proved by writing, requires that the "consideration" should be expressed in the writing, as part of the agreement, is a point which has been much discussed, and upon which the English and some American cases are in direct opposition. The English courts hold the affirmative. See Wain v. Warlters, 5 East, 10, reviewed and confirmed in Saunders v. Wakefield, 4 B. & Ald. 595; and their construction has been followed in New York, Sears v. Brink, 3 Johns. 210; Leonard v. Vredenburg, 8 Johns. 29. In New Hampshire, in Neelson v. Sanborne, 2 N. H. 413, the same construction seems to be recognized and approved. But in Massachusetts, it was rejected by the whole court, upon great consideration, in Packard v. Richardson, 17 Mass. 122. § 269. Writings executed by attorney. Where the act is done by procuration, it is not necessary that the agent's authority should be in writing; except in those cases where, as in the first section of the statute of 29 Car. II. e. 3, it is so expressly required. These excepted cases are understood to be those of an actual conveyance, not of a contract to convey; and it is accordingly held, that though the agent to make a deed must be authorized by deed, yet the agent to enter into an agreement to convey is sufficiently authorized by parol only. 1(a) An auctioneer is regarded as the agent of both parties, whether the subject of the sale be lands or goods; and if the whole contract can be made out from the memorandum and entries signed by him, it is sufficient to bind them both. 2 (b)

§ 270. Meaning of the word "lands." The word lands, in this statute, has been expounded to include every claim of a permanent right to hold the lands of another, for a particular purpose, and to enter upon them at all times, without his consent. It has accordingly been held, that a right to enter upon the lands of another, for the purpose of creeting and keeping in repair a milldam embankment, and canal, to raise water for working a mill, is an interest in land, and cannot pass but by deed or writing. 1(a) But where the interest is vested in a corporation, and not in the individual corporators, the shares of the latter in the stock of the sale of fruits of the earth, ripe, but not yet gathered, is not a contract for any interest in lands and so not within the Statute of Frauds, though the vendee is to enter and gather them. 1 And subsequently it has been held, that a contract for the sale of a crop of potatoes was essentially the same, whether they were covered with earth in a field, or were stored in a box; in either case, the subject-matter of the sale, namely, potatoes, being but a personal chattel, and so not within the Statute of Frauds.² The latter eases confirm the doctrine involved in this decision, namely, that the transaction takes its character of realty or personalty from the principal subject-matter of the contract, and the intent of the parties; and that, therefore, a sale of any growing produce of the earth, reared by labor and expense, in actual existence at the time of the contract, whether it be in a state of maturity or not, is not to be considered a sale of an interest in or concerning land. $^{3}(a)$ In regard to things produced annually by the labor of man, the question is sometimes solved by reference to the law of emblements; on the ground, that whatever will go to the executor, the tenant being dead, cannot be considered as an interest in land.4 But the case seems also to be covered by a broader principle of distinction, namely, between contracts conferring an exclusive right to the land for a time, for the purpose of making a profit of the growing surface, and contracts for things annexed to the freehold, in prospect of their immediate separation; from which it seems to result, that where timber, or other produce of the land, or any other thing annexed to the freehold, is specifically sold, whether it is to be severed from the soil by the vendor, or to be taken by the vendee, under a special license to enter for that purpose, it is still, in the contemplation of the parties, evidently and substantially a sale of goods only, and so is not within the statute,5

Phillips, 9 M. & W. 501, where it was held, that an agreement for the sale of growing pears was an agreement for the sale of an interest in land, on the principle, that the fruit would not pass to the executor, but would descend to the heir. The learned Chief Baron distinguished this case from Smith v. Surman, 9 B. & C. 561, the letter being the search of a relative timber by the foot, and so treated by the the latter being the case of a sale of growing timber by the foot, and so treated by the parties as if it had been actually felled, —a distinction which confirms the view subsequently taken in the text.

Crary, 1 Burb. 542. On this subject neither the English nor the American decisions are quite uniform; but the weight of authority is believed to be as stated in the text, though it is true of the former, as Ld. Abinger remarked in Rodwell v. Phillips, 9 M. & W. 505, that "no general rule is laid down in any one of them, that is not contradicted by some others." See also Poulter v. Killingbeck, 1 B. & P. 398; Parker v. Staniland, 11 East, 362, distinguishing and qualifying Crosby v. Wadsworth, 6 East, 611; Smith v. Surman, 9 B. & C. 561; Watts v. Friend, 10 B. & C. 446. The distinction taken in Bostwick v. Leach, 3 Day, 476, 484, is this, that when there is a sale of property, which would pass by a deed of land, as such, without any other description, if it can be separated from the freehold, and by the contract is to be separated, such contract is not within the statute. See, accordingly, Whipple v. Foot, 2 Johns, 418, 422; Frenr v. Hardenbergh, 5 Johns, 276; Stewart v. Doughty, 9 Johns. aten, such contract is not within the statute. See, accordingly, whippie v. Foot, 2 Johns. 418, 422; Frear v. Hardenbergh, 5 Johns. 276; Stewart v. Doughty, 9 Johns. 108, 112; Austin v. Sawyer, 9 Cowen, 39; Erskine v. Plummer, 7 Greenl. 447; Bishop v. Doty, 1 Vt. 38; Miller v. Baker, 1 Met. 27; Whitmarsh v. Walker, Id. 313; Claffin v. Carpenter, 4 Met. 580. Mr. Rand, who has treated this subject, as well as all others on which he has written, with great learning and acumen, would reconcile the English authorities, by distinguishing between those cases in which the subject of the inheritance is to be severed and delivered by the year. the contract, being part of the inheritance, is to be severed and delivered by the vendor, as a chattel, and those in which a right of entry by the vendee to cut and take it is bargained for. "The authorities," says he, "all agree in this, that a bargain for trees, grass, crops, or any such like thing, when severed from the soil, which are growing, at the time of the contract, upon the soil, but to be severed and delivered by the vendor, as chattels, separate from any interest in the soil, is a contract for the sale of goods, wares, or merchandise, within the meaning of the seventeenth section of the Statute of Frauds. (Smith v. Surman, 9 B. & C. 561; Evans v. Roberts, 5 B. & C. 836; Watts v. Friend, 10 B. & C. 446; Parker v. Staniland, 11 East, 362; Warwick v. Bruce, 2 M. & S. 205). So, where the subject-matter of the bargain is fructus industriales, such as corn, garden-roots, and such like things, which are emblements, and which have already grown to maturity, and are to be taken immediately, and no right of entry forms absolutely part of the contract, but a mere liceuse is given to the vendee to enter and take them, it will fall within the operation of the same section of the statute. (Warwick v. Bruce, 2 M. & S. 205; Parker v. Staniland, 11 East, 362; Parke, B., Carrington v. Roots, 2 M. & W. 256; Bayley, B., Shelton v. Livius, 2 Tyrw. 427, 429; Bayley, J., Evans v. Roberts, 5 B. & C. 831; Scorell v. Boxall, 1 Y. & J. 398; Mayfield v. Wadsley, 3 B. & C. 357). But where the subject-matter of the contract contributes a contribute of the contract of tract constitutes a part of the inheritance, and is not to be severed and delivered by the tract constitutes a part of the inheritance, and is not to be severed and delivered by the vendor as a chattel, but a right of entry to cut and take it is bargained for, or where it is emblements growing, and a right in the soil to grow and bring them to maturity, and to enter and take them, that makes part of the bargain, the case will fall within the fourth section of the Statute of Frauds. (Carrington v. Roots, 2 M. & W. 257; Shelton v. Livius, 2 Tyrw. 429; Scorell v. Boxall, 1 Y. & J. 398; Earl of Falmouth v. Thomas, 1 Cr. & M. 89; Teal v. Auty, 2 B. & Bing. 99; Emmerson v. Heelis, 2 Taunt. 38; Waddington v. Bristow, 2 B. & P. 452; Crosby v. Wadsworth, 6 East, 602.)" See Long on Sales (by Rand), pp. 80, 81. But the later English and the American authorities do not seem to recognize such distinction.

(a) When, by the t rms of the statute, a "writing" is required to make a valid will, it has been held that a will written in peneil is a good will. Myers v. Vanderbelt, 84 Pa. St. 510; Re Fuguet's Will, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 75; Dickenson v. Dickenson, 2 Phill. Eccl. 173; Re Dyer, 1 Hagg. Eccl. 219. But that a will written on a slate is not such a "writing" was held in

Reed v. Woodward, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 541, on the ground that the statute requiring a writing meant a writing with the instruments and on the materials commonly used for such purposes. But a will may be in the form of a letter if it sufficiently shows a final testamentary intent, and is properly executed. Cowley v. Knapp, 42 N. J. L. 297.

devises were merely required to be in writing. The Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, required the attestation of "three or four credible witnesses;" but the statute 1 Viet. c. 26, has reduced the number of witnesses to two. The provisions of the Statute of Frauds on this subject have been adopted in most of the United States. 1 It requires that the witnesses should attest and subscribe the will in the testator's presence. The attestation of marksmen is sufficient; and, if they are dead, the attestation may be proved by evidence, that they lived near the testator, that no others of the same name resided in the neighborhood, and that they were illiterate persons.² One object of this provision is, to prevent the substitution of another instrument for the genuine will. It is therefore held, that to be present, within the meaning of the statute, though the testator need not be in the same room, yet he must be near enough to see and identify the instrument, if he is so disposed, though in truth he does not attempt to do so; and that he must have mental knowledge and consciousness of the fact.3 If he be in a state of insensibility at the moment of attestation, it is void.4(b) Being in the same room is held prima facie evidence of an attestation in his presence, as an attestation, not made in the same room, is prima facie not an attestation in his presence.⁵ It is not necessary, under the Statute

(b) And declarations of the testator, made subsequent to the execution of the instrument offered as his will, showing that he still supposed a previous will to be in operation and valid, and proposing alterations in it, and in general treating it as still in full force, are admissible to show that the testator did not knowingly sign the instrument offered as a will. The weight of these declarations and their power to prove this fact are of course for the jury. Canada's Appeal, 47 Conn. 450.

¹ In New Hampshire alone the will is required to be sealed. Three witnesses are necessary to a valid will in Vermont, New Hampshire, Maine, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Maryland, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, and Mississippi. Two witnesses only are requisite in New York, Delaware, Virginia, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Tennessee, North Carolina, Michigan, Wisconsin, Arkansas, and Kentucky. In some of the States, the provision as to attestation is more special. In Pennsylvania, a devise is good, if properly signed, though it is not subscribed by any attesting witness, provided it can be proved by two or more competent witnesses; and if it be attested by witnesses, it may still be proved by others. 4 Kent, Comm. 514. of Frauds, that the witnesses should attest in the presence of each other, nor that they should all attest at the same time; 6 nor is it requisite that they should actually have seen the testator sign, or known what the paper was, provided they subscribed the instrument in his presence and at his request. (c) Neither has it been considered necessary, under this statute, that the testator should subscribe the instrument, it being deemed sufficient that it be signed by him in any part, with his own name or mark, provided it appear to have been done animo perficiendi, and to have been regarded by him as completely executed.8 Thus, where the will was signed in the margin only, or where, being written by the testator himself, his name was written only in the beginning of the will, I, A. B., &c., this was held a sufficient signing.9 But where it appeared that the testator intended to sign each several sheet of the will, but signed only two of them, being unable,

In these cases, the court certainly seem to regard the knowledge of the witnesses, that the these cases, the court certainly seem to regard the knowledge of the witnesses, that the instrument was a will, as a matter of no importance; since in the first two cases only one of the witnesses knew what the paper was. But it deserves to be considered whether, in such case, the attention of the witness would probably be drawn to the state of the testator's mind, in regard to his sanity; for if not, one object of the statute would be defeated. See Rutherford v. Rutherford, 1 Den. 33; Brinkerhoof v. Remsen, 8 Paige, 488; 26 Wend. 325; Chaffee v. Baptist Miss. 9 Lemayne v. Stanley, 3 Lev. 1; Morison v. Turnour, 18 Ves. 183. But this also is now changed by the statute 1 Vict. c. 26, § 9, by which no will is valid unless it be signed at the foot or end thereof, by the testator, or by some other person, in his presence and by his direction; as well as attested by two witnesses, subscribing their names in his presence. See In the Goods of Carver, 3 Curt. 29.

§ 273. Revocation of wills. By the Statute of Frauds, the revocation of a will, by the direct act of the testator, must be proved by some subsequent will or codicil, inconsistent with the former, or by some other writing, declaring the same, and signed in the presence of three witnesses, or by burning, tearing, cancelling, or obliterating the same by the testator, or in his presence, and by his direction and consent. 1(a) It is observable that this part of the statute only requires that the instrument of revocation, if not a will or codicil, be signed by the testator in presence of the witnesses, but it does not, as in the execution of a will, require that the witnesses should sign in his presence. In regard to the other acts of revocation here mentioned, they operate by one common principle; namely, the intent of the testa-Revocation is an act of the mind, demonstrated by some outward and visible sign or symbol of revocation; 2 and the words of the statute are satisfied by any act of spoliation, reprobation,

The sea; any further notice of which would be foreign from the plan of this treatise. The latter exceptions still exist in England; but nuncupative wills seem to be abolished there, by the general terms of the statute of 1 Vict. c. 26, § 9, before cited. The common law, which allows a bequest of personal estate by parol, without writing, has been altered by statute in most, if not all, of the United States; the course of legislation having tended strongly to the abolition of all distinctions between the requisites for the testamentary disposition of real and of personal property. or destruction, deliberately done upon the instrument, animo revocandi.3 The declarations of the testator, accompanying the act, are of course admissible in evidence as explanatory of his intention.4 Accordingly, where the testator rumpled up his will and threw it into the fire with intent to destroy it, though it was saved entire without his knowledge, this was held to be a revocation. 5 So, where he tore off a superfluous seal. 6 But where, being angry with the devisee, he began to tear his will, but being afterwards pacified, he fitted the pieces carefully together, saying he was glad it was no worse, this was held to be no revocation.7

§ 274. Apprenticeship. Documentary evidence is also required in proof of the contract of apprenticeship; there being no legal binding, to give the master coercive power over the person of the apprentice, unless it be by indentures, duly executed in the forms prescribed by the various statutes on this subject. The general features of the English statutes of apprenticeship, so far as the mode of binding is concerned, will be found in those of most of the United States. There are various other cases, in which a deed, or other documentary evidence, is required by statutes, a particular enumeration of which would be foreign from the plan of this treatise.1

CHAPTER XV.

OF THE ADMISSIBILITY OF PAROL OR VERBAL EVIDENCE TO AFFECT THAT WHICH IS WRITTEN. X

§ 275. Written evidence. By written evidence, in this place, is meant not everything which is in writing, but that only which is of a documentary and more solemn nature, containing the terms of a contract between the parties, and designed to be the repository and evidence of their final intentions. "Fiunt enim de his [contractibus] scripturæ, ut, quod actum est, per eas facilius probari poterit." When parties have deliberately put their engagements into writing, in such terms as import a legal obligation, without any uncertainty as to the object or extent of such engagement, it is conclusively presumed that the whole engagement of the parties, and the extent and manner of their undertaking, was reduced to writing; and all oral testimony of a previous colloquium between the parties, or of conversation or declarations at the time when it was completed, or afterwards, as it would tend in many instances to substitute a new and different contract for the one which was really agreed upon, to the prejudice, possibly, of one of the parties, is rejected.2 In other words, as the rule is now more briefly expressed, "parol contemporaneous evidence is inadmissible to contradict or vary the terms of a valid written instrument." 3(a)

§ 276. Origin of the rule. This rule "was introduced in early times, when the most frequent mode of ascertaining a party to a contract was by his seal affixed to the instrument; and it has been continued in force, since the vast multiplication of written contracts, in consequence of the increased business and commerce of the world. It is not because a seal is put to the contract, that it shall not be explained away, varied, or rendered ineffectual; but because the contract itself is plainly and intelligibly stated, in the language of the parties, and is the best possible evidence of the intent and meaning of those who are bound by the contract, and of those who are to receive the benefit of it." "The rule of excluding oral testimony has heretofore been applied generally, if not universally, to simple contracts in writing, to the same extent and with the same exceptions as to specialties or contracts under seal." 1

§ 277. Applicable to language only. It is to be observed, that the rule is directed only against the admission of any other evidence of the language employed by the parties in making the contract, than that which is furnished by the writing itself. The writing, it is true, may be read by the light of surrounding circumstances, in order more perfectly to understand the intent and meaning of the parties; but, as they have constituted the writing to be the only outward and visible expression of their meaning,

Thus the entry in a court of record into which a recognizance is returnable, that the principal made default, cannot be contradicted by parol evidence, on scire facins against the bail. Com. v. Slocum, 14 Gray (Mass.), 395. Nor can an official entry on a tecord, void for uncertainty, be explained by extrinsic evidence. Porter v. Byrne, 10 Ind. 146. Cf. McMicken v. Com., 58 Pa. no other words are to be added to it, or substituted in its stead. The duty of the court in such cases is to ascertain, not what the parties may have secretly intended, as contradistinguished from what their words express, but what is the meaning of words they have used. It is merely a duty of interpretation; that is, to find out the true sense of the written words, as the parties used them; and of construction, that is, when the true sense is ascertained, to subject the instrument, in its operation, to the established rules of law.² And where the language of an instrument has a settled legal construction, parol evidence is not admissible to contradict that construction. Thus, where no time is expressly limited for the payment of the money mentioned in a special contract in writing, the legal construction is, that it is payable presently; and parol evidence of a contemporaneous verbal agreement, for the payment at a future day, is not admissible.3

§ 278. Words generally taken in their ordinary sense. The terms of every written instrument are to be understood in their plain, ordinary, and popular sense, unless they have generally, in respect to the subject-matter, as by the known usage of trade, or the like, acquired a peculiar sense, distinct from the popular sense of the same words; or unless the context evidently points out that, in the particular instance, and in order to effectuate the immediate intention of the parties, it should be understood in some other and peculiar sense. (a) But where the instrument consists partly of a printed formula, and partly of written words,

(a) Holt v. Collyer, L. R. 16 Ch. Div. 718. Thus where parties entered into an agreement by which a patent was conveyed, and it was stipulated in the agreement that the patent was "in full force and effect," the court held that evidence was not admissible to show that the parties meant only to stipulate that the patent had not lapsed for non-payment of fees. Chemical Electric Light, &c., Co. v. Howard, 150 Mass. 496.

if there is any reasonable doubt of the meaning of the whole, the written words are entitled to have greater effect in the interpretation than those which are printed; they being the immediate language and terms selected by the parties themselves for the expression of their meaning, while the printed formula is more general in its nature, applying equally to their case and to that of all other contracting parties, on similar subjects and occasions. $^{1}(b)$

§ 279. Rule applies only to parties to controversy. under consideration is applied only (in suits) between the parties to the instrument; as they alone are to blame if the writing contains what was not intended, or omits that which it should have contained. It cannot affect third persons, who, if it were otherwise, might be prejudiced by things recited in the writings, contrary to the truth, through the ignorance, carelessness, or fraud of the parties; and who, therefore, ought not to be precluded from proving the truth, however contradictory to the written statements of others. $^{2}(a)$

§ 280. Testimony of experts to aid. It is almost superfluous to add, that the rule does not exclude the testimony of experts, to aid the court in reading the instrument. If the characters are difficult to be deciphered, or the language, whether technical, or local and provincial, or altogether foreign, is not understood by the court, the evidence of persons skilled in deciphering writings, or who understood the language in which the instrument is writ-

(b) So, when a contract refers to a plan to explain the contract, and the plan is inconsistent with some clause in the contract, the contract will govern. Smith v. Flanders, 129 Mass. 322. When a contract refers to a verbal contract as incorporating it, evidence may always be given of the statements of the verbal contract. Thus, where a letter, which formed the written contract between the parties, began "confirming our verbal contract," it was held that evidence might be given of the terms of the verbal contract, although they were contradictory to those contained in the letter. Smith v. Wilson, 3 B. & Ad. 728. The doctrine of the text was more fully expounded by Shaw, C. J., in Brown v. Brown, 8 Met. 576, 577, as follows: "The meaning of words, and the grammatical construction of the English language, so far as they are established by the rules and used as of the language, arrive, forie, matter. they are established by the rules and usages of the language, are, prima facie, matter of law, to be construed and passed upon by the court. But language may be ambiguous, and used in different senses; or general words, in particular trades and branches of business, — as among merchants, for instance, — may be used in a new, peculiar, or technical sense; and, therefore, in a few instances, evidence may be received, from those who are conversant with such branches of business, and such technical or peculiar use of language, to explain and illustrate it. One of the strongest of these, perhaps, among the recent cases, is the case of Smith v. Wilson, 3 B. & Ad. 728. where it was among the recent cases, is the case of Smith v. Wilson, 3 B. & Ad. 728. where it was held, that, in an action on a lease of an estate including a rabbit-warren, evidence of usage was admissible to show that the words, 'thousand of rabbits,' were understood to mean one hundred dozen, that is, twelve hundred. But the decision was placed on the ground that the words 'hundred,' 'thousand,' and the like, were not understood, when applied to particular subjects, to mean that number of units; that the definition was not fixed by law, and therefore was open to such proof of usage. Though it is exceedingly difficult to draw the precise line of distinction, yet it is manifest that such evidence can be admitted only in a few cases like the above. Were it otherwise, written instruments, instead of importing certainty and verity, as being the sole repository of the will, intent, and purposes of the parties, to be construed by the rules of law might be made to speak a very different language by the aid of parol evidence."

obscurity of the writing itself, it is determined by the court alone; 9 but questions of custom, usage, and actual intention and meaning derived therefrom, are for the jury. 10 But where the words have a known legal meaning, such, for example, as measures of quantity fixed by statute, parol evidence, that the parties intended to use them in a sense different from the legal meaning, though it were still the customary and popular sense, is not admissible. 11 (c)

§ 281. Illustrations. The reason and policy of the rule will be further seen, by adverting to some of the cases in which parol evidence has been rejected. Thus, where a policy of insurance was effected on goods, "in ship or ships from Surinam to London," parol evidence was held inadmissible to show that a particular ship in the fleet, which was lost, was verbally excepted at the time of the contract. 1 So, where a policy described the two termini of the voyage, parol evidence was held inadmissible to prove that the risk was not to commence until the vessel reached an intermediate place. 2(a) So, where the instrument purported

Wilson, 2 B. & P. 116, where seamen's wages were claimed in addition to the sum named in the shipping articles. The English statutes not only require such contracts to be in writing, but declare that the articles shall be conclusive upon the parties. The statute of the United States is equally imperative as to the writing, but omits the latter provision as to its conclusiveness. But the decisions in both the cases just cited rest upon the general rule stated in the text, which is a doctrine of general jurisprudence, and not upon the mere positive enactments of the statutes. See 2 Rob. Adm. 243; Bogert v. Cauman, Anthon, 97. The American courts adopt the same doctrine, both ou general principles and as agreeable to the intent of the act of Congress regulating the merchant service. See Abbott on Shipping (by Story), p. 434, n.; Bartlett v. Wyman, 14 Johns. 260; Johnson v. Dalton, 1 Cowen, 543. The same rule is applied in regard to the Statute of Frauds. See 11 Mass. 31. - (b) See Allen v. Furbish, 4 Gray, 504, 506, in which some of the Massachusetts cases, showing that parol evidence is inadmissible to annex a condition to an absolute promise in writing in the form of lute promise in writing in the form of a promissory note, promising to pay a certain sum of money on a certain day named, are reviewed by Dewey, J., and the principle reaffirmed. (c) So an oral promise to discharge an incumbrance not created by himself, made by a grantor to a grantee, cannot be shown to have been made at the same time and for the same consideration as a deed containing covenants of special warranty only. Howe v. Walker, 4 Gray (Mass.), 318; Goodrich v. Longley, Id. 379, 383. Nor can a limited warranty in a deed be extended to a general warranty by proof of a parol agreement to that effect, made at the time of the delivery of the deed. Raymond v. Raymond, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 134, 141; Dutton v. Gerrish, 9 ld. 89. Where a lease, under seal, of coal lands, said nothing as to the quantity to be mined, but established the price per bushel ship was particularly described, it was held that parol evidence of a further descriptive representation, made prior to the time of sale, was not admissible to charge the vendor, without proof of actual fraud; all previous conversation being merged in the written contract. 8 So, where a contract was for the sale and delivery of "Ware potatoes," of which there were several kinds or qualities, parol evidence was held not admissible to show that the contract was in fact for the best of those kinds.9 Where one signed a premium note in his own name, parol evidence was held inadmissible to show that he signed it as the agent of the defendant, on whose property he had caused insurance to be effected by the plaintiff, at the defendant's request, and who was sued as the promisor in the note, made by his agent. $^{10}(d)$ So, where an agent let a ship on hire, describing himself in the charter-party as "owner," it was held, in an action upon the charter-party, brought by the true owner, that parol evidence was not admissible to show that the plaintiff, and not the agent, was the real owner of the ship. 11 Even the subsequent confession of the party, as to the true intent and construction of the title-deed, under which he claims, will be rejected. The books abound in cases of the application of this rule; but these are deemed sufficient to illustrate its spirit and meaning, which is the extent of our present design.

§ 282. Other language only excluded. From the examples given in the two preceding sections, it is thus apparent that the rule excludes only parol evidence of the language of the parties, contradicting, varying, or adding to that which is contained in the written instrument; and this because they have themselves committed to writing all which they deemed necessary to give full expression to their meaning, and because of the mischiefs which would result, if verbal testimony were in such cases received. But where the agreement in writing is expressed in short and incomplete terms, parol evidence is admissible to explain that which is per se unintelligible, such explanation not being inconsistent with the written terms. 1 (a) It is also to be kept in mind, that though the first question in all cases of contract is one of interpretation and intention, yet the question, as we have already remarked, is not what the parties may have secretly and in fact intended, but what meaning did they intend to convey, by the words they employed in the written instrument. To ascertain the meaning of these words, it is obvious that parol evidence of extraneous facts and circumstances may in some cases be admitted to a very great extent, without in any wise infringing the spirit of the rule under consideration. These cases, which in truth are not exceptions to the rule, but on the contrary are out of the range of its operation, we shall now proceed to consider.

§ 283. Several writings. It is in the first place to be observed, that the rule does not restrict the court to the perusal of a single instrument or paper; for, while the controversy is between the original parties, or their representatives, all their contemporaneous writings, relating to the same subject-matter, are admissible in evidence. $^{1}(b)$

§ 284. May be shown to be void. It is in the next place to be noted, that the rule is not infringed by the admission of parol evidence, showing that the instrument is altogether void, or that it never had any legal existence or binding force; either by reason of fraud, or for want of due execution and delivery, or for the illegality of the subject-matter. (a) This qualification applies to all contracts, whether under seal or not. The want of considera-

(b) Where the question turns upon the existence of the written contract, or which of the two writings was adopted by the parties as the binding contract, evidence of extrinsic facts is admissible. Kalamazoo Nov. Man. Co. v. McAlister, 40 Mich. 84; Hill v. Miller, 76 N. Y. 32. So evidence of language used by the parties during the negotiation, explanatory, and not contradictory, of the language used in the contract, is admissible. Thorington v. Smith, 8 Wall. (U. Beers, 22 Mich. 42; Martin v. Clarke, 8 R. I. 389; Grierson v. Mason, 60 N. Y. 394. Thus, it has always been held to be competent to introduce evidence showing that although a written paper, which is in form a complete contract, has been duly delivered, yet it was not intended by the parties to become a binding contract until the performance of some condition precedent, which is shown by the oral evidence. Thus where the correspondence of the parties showed that a contract for the purchase and sale of lumber on credit was entered into upon a contemporaneous oral understanding that the contract of purchase was contingent upon a satisfactory report to the seller from a commercial agency as to the pecuniary responsibility of the buyer, it was held that oral evidence of this preliminary oral understanding, was admissible to show that the written contract never became a binding one. Reynolds v. Robinson, 110 N. Y. 654; and to the same effect, Wilson v. Powers, 131 Mass. 539, and Com. v. Welch, 144 Mass. 356. In the case of Adams v. Morgan, 150 Mean 146. 150 Mass. 148, it was said by the court that it is also competent to show by oral evidence whether an instrument was de-livered or not, and if its terms are equally consistent with both, it is competent to show either an absolute or a qualified delivery. In the same way it has been held that where a license to sell liquors has been issued dated back a month prior to the time of its actual issuing, and the conditions precedent to the validity of the license were not performed until the time when it was actually issued, evidence of this fact is admissible on trial of the complaint for illegally selling liquor after the date of the license, but before its actual issuing. Com. v. Welch, 144 Mass. 356. In Pennsylvania, the rule as to evidence of an oral agreement inducing the written contract, has been worked out in considerable detail, and the statement that may be collected from the cases, is as follows: That parol evidence is admissible to establish a contemporaneous oral agreement which induced the execution of the written contract, though such oral agreement may vary, change, or reform the instru-ment, but the evidence showing such oral agreement must be clear, precise, and in-dubitable; that is, that it shall be found that the witnesses are credible - that they distinctly remember the facts to tion may also be proved to show that the agreement is not binding; (b) unless it is either under seal, which is conclusive evidence of a sufficient consideration, or is a negotiable instrument in the hands of an innocent indorsee.² Fraud, practised by the party seeking the remedy, upon him against whom it is sought, and in that which is the subject-matter of the action or claim, is universally held fatal to his title. "The covin," says Lord Coke, "doth suffocate the right." The foundation of the claim, whether it be a record, or a deed, or a writing without seal, is of no importance; they being alike void, if obtained by fraud. (c) Parol which they testify — and that they narrate the details exactly — and that their statements are true, although of course absolute ments are true, although of course absolute certainty is out of the question. Thomas v. Loose, 114 Pa. St. 45; Cullmans v. Lindsay, 114 Pa. St. 170; Cake v. Pottsville Bank, 116 Pa. St. 270; Greenawalt v. Kohne, 85 Pa. St. 369; Barclay v. Wainwright, 86 Pa. St. 191. Thus, in the case of Cullmans v. Lindsay, supra, the plaintiffs introduced evidence to show that their agent was induced to sign the contract by a parol promise of the defendants' agent, on the ground that it would be a frand in the defendants after having procured the contract by such parol promise to take an unfair advantage subsequently, and deny the oral qualification upon which the contract was made. The question whether the testimony as to the oral promise or inducement, is sufficiently clear, precise, and indubitable, is a question for the court. Spencer v. Colt, 89 Pa. St. 314. But the fact whether or not the parol promise was the inducing cause of the execution of the written contract, especially when the mental purpose is not at the time expressed, is an inference to be drawn from the facts by the jury. The parties to the contract may testify what their intention was in this regard so far as the same was expressed in words at the time, but cannot testify to an undisclosed purpose of their mind, or a mental reservation to nullify the express words of their contract. Or, as it was said in Spencer v. Colt, supra: "The unexpressed intent, motive, or belief existing in one party's mind at the time of the execution of the contract, cannot aid the jury in ascertaining whether the language or conduct of the other party has been such as to create that intent, motive, or belief; the parties may often have different impressions as to its effect upon their respective interests, and, therefore, the thought of one cannot be proved to bind the other." It has been held that when one party to a contract is unable to read, and the other party, knowing the fact, allows him to sign the contract and then seeks to enforce it, this is such a fraud as will give the party who thus signed the contract in ignorance of its contents, a right to show that the paper does not express all the terms of the agreement which they made. Trambly v. Ricard, 130 Mass. 259. Cf. Foye v. Patch, 132 Mass. 106.

(b) Meyer v. Casey, 57 Miss. 615. It has been held that even in a deed, the recital of the consideration is not conclusive evidence as between the grantor and grantee of the consideration actually passing be-tween the parties; and it may be shown by oral testimony to be different from that recited in the deed. Howell v. Moores, 127 Ill. 86; Illinois Land & Loan Co. v. Bonner, 91 Ill. 120; Bruce v. Slemp, 82 Va. 357. And in a recent case in Wisconsin, Green v. Batson, 71 Wis. 57, the same principle was affirmed, and the court stated that parol evidence is admissible to show the true consideration of the deed. See, however, Simanovich v. Wood, 145 Mass.

(c) Allen v. Furbish, 4 Gray (Mass.), evidence may also be offered to show that the contract was made for the furtherance of objects forbidden by law, 4 whether it be by statute or by an express rule of the common law, or by the general policy of the law; or that the writing was obtained by felony,5 or by duress; 6 or that the party was incapable of binding himself, either by reason of some legal impediment, such as infancy or coverture,7 or from actual imbecility or want of reason,8 whether it be by means of permanent idiocy or insanity, or from a temporary cause, such as drunkenness; 9 or that the instrument came into the hands of the plaintiff without any absolute and final delivery, 10 by the obligor or party charged. It is also held that oral evidence may be given in a court of equity to show that an instrument of conveyance, absolute upon its face, was in reality intended as a mortgage or security only. This evidence is admitted upon the ground that the mere conduct of the mortgagee in trying to treat a mortgage as an absolute conveyance, or in requiring an absolute deed when the transaction is in reality a loan, is a fraud against which equity will relieve. Campbell v. Dearborn, 109 Mass. 130; Brick v. Brick, 98 U. S. 514; Matthews v. Sheehan, 69 N. Y. 585; Odenbaugh v. Bradford, 67 Pa. St. 96; Plumer v. Guthrie, 76 Pa. St. 441; Lindauer v. Cummings, 57 Ill. 195. But if the facts of the case show that the mortgagor voluntarily adopted that mode of conveyance for purposes of his own, e. g. to defraud his creditors, equity will not admit such evidence. Hassam v. Barrett, 115 Mass. 256. Nor if the transaction is a conditional sale, not a mortgage. Bonham v. Craig, 80 N. C. 224.

And in accordance with the principle stated in the text evidence is admissible at any time to show that a written contract was by oral agreement of the parties not to take effect unless it should be pronounced lawful by counsel who were to be consulted, or upon some other condition. in cases where the original contract was verbal and entire, and a part only of it was reduced to writing. (a) Thus, where, upon an adjustment of accounts, the debtor conveyed certain real estate to the creditor at an assumed value, which was greater than the amount due, and took the creditor's promissory note for the balance; it being verbally agreed that the real estate should be sold, and the proceeds accounted for by the grantee, and that the deficiency, if any, below the estimated value, should be made good by the grantor; which agreement the grantor afterwards acknowledged in writing, - it was held, in an action brought by the latter to recover the contents of the note, that the whole agreement was admissible in evidence on the part of the defendant; and that, upon the proof that the sale of the land produced less than the estimated value, the deficiency should be deducted from the amount due upon the note. So where the contract is part by parol and part by telegram, the part by parol may part by telegram, the part by parol and be shown to control and modify that by telegram. Beach v. Rar. & Del. R. R. Co., 37 N. Y. 457. The exception to the general rule, admitting evidence when it is shown that only part of the contract was reduced to writing the second of the contract was reduced to writing, was commented on in the case of Eighmie v. Taylor, 98 N. Y. 294. In this case the court referred to Chapin v. Dobson, 78 N. Y. 74, as confirming the rule that oral evidence is admissible when the original contract was verbal and entire, and a part only was re-duced to writing; and that oral evidence is not excluded if it refers not to the subject-matter of the writing but to collateral undertakings. The court say that this first exception, i.e. as to cases where part only of the contract is reduced to writing, is capable, if too broadly and loosely interpreted, of working utter destruction of the general rule excluding oral evidence; for if it is possible to go outside the instrument to prove that there was a stipulation not contained in it, so that only part of the contract was put in writing, and, therefore, because of that fact, enforce the oral stipulation, there is little force left in the rule itself. At the same time the court affirms the exception that if upon inspection and study of the writing, read in the light of surrounding circumstances, it is apparent that the writing does not contain the whole contract and undertaking of the parties, oral evidence is admissible of that portion of it which has been omitted in the writing. Eighmie v. Taylor, 98 N. Y. 294. If the oral contract is entirely distinct in its subject-matter from the written contract, although it may affect the same property, the existence of the written contract does not affect the admissibility of the oral contract in evidence; or, in other words, if the two contracts are distinct contracts, and one is not the mere embodi-

§ 285. To explain recitals of fact. Neither is this rule infringed by the introduction of parol evidence, contradicting or explaining the instrument in some of its recitals of facts, where such recitals do not, on other principles, estop the party to deny them; and accordingly in some cases such evidence is received. (a) Thus, in a settlement case, where the value of an estate, upon which the settlement was gained, was in question, evidence of a greater sum paid than was recited in the deed was held admissible.² So, to show that the lands described in the deed as in one parish, were in fact situated in another.3 So, to show that at the time of entering into a contract of service in a particular employment, there was a further agreement to pay a sum of money as a premium, for teaching the party the trade, whereby an apprenticeship was intended; and that the whole was therefore void for want of a stamp, and so no settlement was gained.4 So, to contradict the recital of the date of a deed; as, for example, by proving that a charter-party, dated February 6th, conditioned to sail on or before February 12th, was not executed till after the latter day, and that therefore the condition was dispensed with.⁵ So, to show that the reference in a codicil to a will of 1833 was a mistake, that will being supposed to be destroyed; and that the will of 1837 was intended. 6 And, on the other hand, where a written guaranty was expressed to be "in consideration of your having discounted V.'s note," and it was objected that it was for a past consideration, and therefore void, explanatory parol evidence was held ment of the other, the fact that one is in writing does not affect the introduction of the other by parol evidence. Snow v. Alley, 151 Mass. 15. If the subsequent writ-ten agreement embodies only part of the contract, and the other parts not so embodied are distinct and separable, an action may be maintained on them if they are tounded on a valuable consideration, and if there is nothing in the written contract which relates to, or is inconsistent with their oral stipulations, or if it appears that the written contract was not intended to contain all the provisions of the contract and to be a complete statement of it, Graffam v. Pierce, 143 Mass. 386; Page v. Monks, 5 Gray, 492. If a written acknowledgment of a debt is relied upon to avoid the statute of limitations, it is not necessary that the writing should contain an exact statement of the debt and of the circumstances; and oral evidence is admissible to supplement the writing by identifying the debt and the amount, or by fixing the date of the written acknowledgment when the writing itself does not contain these circumstances, or to explain ambignities in the written acknowledgment. Manchester v. Braedner, 107 N. Y.

admissible, to show that the discount was contemporaneous with the guaranty. 7 So, where the guaranty was "in consideration of your having this day advanced to V. D.," similar evidence was held admissible.⁸ It is also admissible to show when a written promise, without date, was in fact made. Evidence may also be given of a consideration, not mentioned in a deed, provided it be not inconsistent with the consideration expressed in it. 10 (b)

§ 286. To show nature of the subject-matter. As it is a leading rule, in regard to written instruments, that they are to be interpreted according to their subject-matter, it is obvious that parol or verbal testimony must be resorted to, in order to ascertain the nature and qualities of the subject, 1(a) to which the instru-

(b) But not if it contradicts any part of the deed. Thus, where one gave a deed with a covenant against incumbrances, and there was an unpaid mortgage on the land which the purchaser, as part of the consideration, promised orally to pay but did not, and sued the grantor on the covenant, it was held that the grantor could not put in evidence of this oral promise because it contradicted the covenant. Simanovich v. Wood, 145 Mass. 180. If a variance exists between the mortgage and the note, as to the debt, neither is conclusive. mortgage is prima facie evidence of the debt, but the notes are so also, and other evidence may be offered to identify the debt. Payson v. Lamson, 134 Mass. 593. So, if a mortgage described a note as of a certain date, and evidence shows that the note has been renewed, this fact may be shown by parol, and the renewed note identified as the one to which the evidence applies. Barrows v. Turner, 50 Me. 127; Bigelow v. Capen, 145 Mass. 273.

(a) Thus, it is competent to introduce evidence showing the surrounding circumstances, the situation of the parties, their relation to each other and to the subjectmatter of the agreement, and object and purpose of both parties in entering into the agreement, as avowed at the time it is prepared and executed. Such evidence furnishes light by which the court is enabled to discern the true meaning of the terms of the contract as the parties used them. Oral evidence to this extent is always admissible in the construction of written instruments where ambiguity exists. West v. Smith, 101 U. S. Rep. 263; Knick v. Knick, 75 Va. 19; Watson v. Baker, 71 Tex. 739; Bulkley v. Devine, 127 Ill. 407; Brown v. Fales, 139 Mass. 21. Parol testimony is also admissible to identify the parties to a suit. Parsons v. Thornton, 82 Ala. 308. And so, when a specific number of articles of a certain number, kind, and description are sold, parol testimony is admissible to identify the goods offered for delivery as being the identical articles which were sold. Habenicht v. Lissak, 77 Cal. 139. In an action on a promissory note given in part pay-ment for the standing timber on a tract of land described in the written contract of sale as "all pinc timber twelve inches heart and up," parol testimony is admissible to show the meaning of the italicized words. McKenzie v. Wimberly, 86 Ala. 195. See also Moffitt v. Maness, 102 N. C. 457. But it is not enough to render parol evidence competent, that circumstances were known to one of the parties, but unknown to the other, which might have influenced such party in making a contract, but to create an ambiguity that opens such a contract to parol explanation it must be established by proof of circumstances known to all of the parties to the agreement, and avail-ment refers. Evidence which is calculated to explain the subject of an instrument is essentially different in its character from evidence of verbal communications respecting it. therefore, indicates the nature of the subject, is a just medium of interpretation of the language and meaning of the parties in relation to it, and is also a just foundation for giving the instrument an interpretation, when considered relatively, different from that which it would receive if considered in the abstract. (b) Thus, where certain premises were leased, including a yard, described by metes and bounds, and the question was, whether a cellar under the yard was or was not included in the lease; verbal evidence was held admissible to show that, at the time of the lease, the cellar was in the occupancy of another tenant, and, therefore, that it could not have been intended by the parties that it should pass by the lease.² (c) So, where, a house, or a mill, or a factory is conveyed, eo nomine, and the question is as to what was part and parcel thereof, and so passed by the deed, parol evidence to this point is admitted. $^{3}(d)$

(c) Infra, §§ 401, 402, and notes. Chadwick v. Burnley, 12 W. R. 1077. So, when the deed described the land conveyed both by courses and distances, and by monuments of a transitory character, e. g. heaps of stones and trees, and the evidence applying it to the subject-matter showed that if the existing monuments were considered the true ones, the courses and distances were incorrect, while if other earlier monuments were taken, the courses were reconciled, it was held that evidence of the existence of the earlier monuments was admissible. Flagg v. Mason, 141 Mass. 64. So, when the description was of a boundary line as running along a certain lane, and evidence applying the description to the subject-matter showed there were two lanes, neither of which exactly suited the description, it was held that the evidence should go to the jury to decide which lane was the line of the land conveyed. Thornell v. Brockton, 141 Mass. 151. If the deed contains an accurate description by permanent boundaries, capable of being ascertained, a general reference in addition to the premises as being in the possession of the grantor, will not pass title to land outside the description given. Thayer v. Finton, 108 N. Y. 397.

(d) So, when a contract was made for an article called "horn chains," parol evidence was admitted to show that the article known to the trade as "horn chains" were made partly of horns and partly of hoofs, and to show that the parties, from their situation, probably intended such articles. no material difference of principle in the rules of interpretation between wills and contracts, except what naturally arises from the different circumstances of the parties. The object, in both cases, is the same, namely, to discover the intention. And, to do this, the court may, in either case, put themselves in the place of the party, and then see how the terms of the instrument affect the property or subject-matter. (a) With this view, evidence must

Doe v. Martin, 1 N. & M. 524; s. c. 4 B. & Ad. 771, 785, per Park, J.; Holsten v. Jumpson, 4 Esp. 189; Brown v. Thorndike, 15 Pick. 400; Phil. & Am. on Evid. 736; 2 Phil. Evid. 277. The rules of interpretation of wills, in Vice-Chancellor Wigram's admirable treatise on that subject, may be safely applied, mutato nomine, to Wigram's admirable treatise on that subject, may be salely applied, mutato nomine, to all other private instruments. They are contained in seven propositions, as the result both of principle and authority, and are thus expressed: "I. A testator is always presumed to use the words, in which he expresses himself, according to their strict and primary acceptation, unless, from the context of the will, it appears that he has used them in a different sense; in which case, the sense in which he thus appears to have used them will be the sense in which they are to be construed. II. Where there is nothing in the context of a will, from which it is apparent that a testator has used the words, in which he has expressed himself, in any other than their strict and primary sense, and where his words so interpreted are sensible with reference to extrinsic circumstances, it is an inflexible rule of construction, that the words of the will shall be cumstances, it is an inflexible rule of construction, that the words of the will shall be interpreted in their strict and primary sense, and in no other, although they may be capable of some popular or secondary interpretation, and although the most conclusive evidence of intention to use them in such popular or secondary sense be tendered. III. Where there is nothing in the context of a will, from which it is apparent that a testator has used the words in which he has expressed himself in any other than their strict and primary sense, but his words so interpreted are insensible with reference to extrinsic circumstances, a court of law may look into the extrinsic circumstances of the case, to see whether the meaning of the words be sensible in any popular or secondary sense, of which, with reference to these circumstances, they are capable. IV. Where the characters, in which a will is written, are difficult to be deciphered, or the language of the will is not understood by the court, the evidence of persons skilled in deciphering writing, or who understand the language in which the will is written, is admissible ing writing, or who understand the language in which the will is written, is admissible to declare what the characters are, or to inform the court of the proper meaning of the words. V: For the purpose of determining the object of a testator's bounty, or the subject of disposition, or the quantity of interest intended to be given by his will, a court may inquire into every material fact relating to the person who claims to be interested under the will, and to the property which is claimed as the subject of disposition, and to the circumstances of the testator and of his family and affairs; for the purpose of enabling the court to identify the person or thing intended by the testator. purpose of enabling the court to identify the person or thing intended by the testator, or to determine the quantity of interest he has given by his will. The same (it is conceived) is true of every other disputed point, respecting which it can be shown, that a knowledge of extrinsic facts can in any way be made ancillary to the right interpretation of a testator's words. VI. Where the words of a will, aided by evidence of the mation of a testator's words. VI. Where the words of a will, aided by evidence of the material facts of the case, are insufficient to determine the testator's meaning, no evidence will be admissible to prove what the testator intended, and the will (except in certain special cases—see Proposition VII.) will be void for uncertainty. VII. Notwithstanding the rule of law, which makes a will void for uncertainty, where the words, aided by evidence of the material facts of the case, are insufficient to determine the testator's meaning, courts of law, in certain special cases, admit extrinsic evidence of intention, to make certain the person or thing intended, where the description in the will is insufficient for the purpose. These cases may be thus defined: Where the object of a testator's bounty, or the subject of disposition (i. e. person or thing intended), is described in terms which are applicable indifferently to more than one

be admissible of all the circumstances surrounding the author of the instrument. 2(b) In the simplest case that can be put, namely, that of an instrument appearing on the face of it to be perfectly intelligible, inquiry must be made for a subject-matter to satisfy the description. § 288. Illustrations. It is only in this mode that parol evidence is admissible (as is sometimes, but not very accurately, said) to explain written instruments; namely, by showing the situation of the party in all his relations to persons and things around him, or, as elsewhere expressed, by proof of the surrounding circumstances. Thus, if the language of the instrument is applicable to several persons, to several parcels of land, to several species of goods, to several monuments or boundaries, to several writings; (a) or the terms be vague and general, or have divers meanings, as "household furniture," "stock," "freight," "factory prices," and the like; or in a will, the words "child," "children," "grandchildren," "son," "family," or "nearest relations," are employed; 3(b) in all these and the like cases, parol evidence is admissible of any extrinsic circumstances, tending to show what person or persons, or what things, were intended by the party, or to ascertain his meaning in any other respect; 4 and § 289. Wills. In regard to wills, much greater latitude was formerly allowed, in the admission of evidence of intention, than is warranted by the later cases. The modern doctrine on this subject is nearly or quite identical with that which governs in the interpretation of other instruments; and is best stated in the language of Lord Abinger's own lucid exposition, in a case in the Exchequer.1 "The object," he remarked, "in all cases, is to discover the intention of the testator. The first and most obvious mode of doing this is to read his will as he has written it, and collect his intention from his words. But as his words refer to facts and circumstances, respecting his property and his family, and others whom he names or describes in his will, it is evident that the meaning and application of his words cannot be ascertained, without evidence of all those facts and circumstances.2 To understand the meaning of any writer, we must first be apprised of the persons and circumstances that are the subjects of his allusions or statements; and if these are not fully disclosed in his work, we must look for illustration to the history of the times in which he wrote, and to the works of contemporaneous

1 Hiscocks v. Hiscocks, 5 M. & W. 363, 367. This was an action of ejectment, brought on the demise of Simon Hiscocks against John Hiscocks. The question turned on the words of a devise in the will of Simon Hiscocks, the grandfather of the lessor of the plaintiff and of the defendant. By his will Simon Hiscocks, after devising estates to his son Simon for life, and from and after his death, to his grandson, Henry Hiscocks, in tail male, and making, as to certain other estates an exactly similar provision in favor of his son John for life; then, after his death, the testator devised those estates to "my grandson, John Hiscocks, eldest son of the said John Hiscocks." It was on this devise that the question wholly turned. In fact, John Hiscocks, the father, had been twice married; by his first wife he had Simon, the lessor of the plaintiff his cladet says the added to so of the said summer, the believe that the plaintiff his cladet says the added to so of the said summer than the plaintiff his cladet says the added to so of the said summer than the plaintiff his cladet says the added to so of the said summer than the plaintiff his cladet says the added to so of the said summer than the plaintiff his cladet says the added to so of the said summer than the plaintiff his cladet says the said summer than the plaintiff his cladet says the said summer than the tiff, his eldest son; the eldest son of the second marriage was John Hiscocks, the defendant. The devise, therefore, did not, both by name and description, apply to either the lessor of the plaintiff, who was the eldest son, but whose name was Simon, nor to the defendant, who, though his name was John, was not the eldest son.

So, also, where a note had on it the following indorsements: "Greenwood & Nichols — without recourse — Asa Perley," the first indorsers were As a Fericy, the first indorsers were allowed to prove that the words "without recourse" were written by them when they indorsed the note. authors. All the facts and circumstances, therefore, respecting persons or property, to which the will relates, are undoubtedly legitimate, and often necessary evidence, to enable us to understand the meaning and application of his words. Again, the testator may have habitually called certain persons or things by peculiar names, by which they were not commonly known. If these names should occur in his will, they could only be explained and construed by the aid of evidence, to show the sense in which he used them, in like manner as if his will were written in cipher, or in a foreign language. The habits of the testator, in these particulars, must be receivable as evidence, to explain the meaning of his will. (a) But there is another mode of obtaining the intention of the testator, which is by evidence of his declarations, of the instructions given for his will, and other circumstances of the like nature, which are not adduced for explaining the words or meaning of the will, but either to supply some deficiency, or remove some obscurity, or to give some effect to expressions that are unmeaning or ambiguous. Now, there is but one case in which it appears to us that this sort of evidence of intention can properly be admitted, and that is, where the meaning of the testator's words is neither ambiguous nor obscure, and where the devise is, on the face of it, perfect and intelligible, but from some of the circumstances admitted in proof. an ambiguity arises as to which of the two or more things, or which of the two or more persons (each answering the words in the will), the testator intended to express. Thus, if a testator devise his manor of S. to A. B., and has two manors of North S. and South S., it being clear he means to devise one only, whereas both are equally denoted by the words he has used, in that case there is what Lord Bacon calls 'an equivocation,' that is, the words equally apply to either manor, and evidence of previous intention may be received to solve this latent ambiguity, for the intention shows what he meant to do; and when you know that, you immediately perceive that he has done it, by the general words he has used, which, in their ordinary sense, may properly bear that construction. It appears to us that, in all other cases, parol evidence of what was the testator's intention ought to be excluded, upon this plain ground, that his will ought to be made estate called Cleeve Court" it was held that evidence of his treatment of the property and what he called Cleeve Court was admissible. Castle v. Fox, L. R. 11 Eq. 542.

⁽a) Thus the habit of the testator to designate certain lots of land by certain names may be proved, so as to show what parcels of land pass under the devise. Benham v. Hendrickson, 32 N. J. Eq. 441. So when one devised his "mansion and in writing; and if his intention eannot be made to appear by the writing, explained by circumstances, there is no will." 3

3 The learned Chief Baron's subsequent commentary on the opposing decisions seems, in a great measure, to have exhausted this topic." "It must be owned, however," said he, "that there are decided cases which are not to be reconciled with this distinction, in a manner altogether satisfactory. Some of them, indeed, exhibit but an apparent inconsistency. Thus for example, in the case of Doe v. Huthwaite, and Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, the only thing decided was, that, in a case like the present, some parol evidence was admissible. There, however, it was not decided that evidence of the testator's intention ought to be received. The decisions, when duly considered, amount to no more than this, that where the words of the devise, in their primary sense, when applied to the circumstances of the family and the property, make the devise insensible, collateral facts may be resorted to in order to show that, in some secondary sense of the words, — and one in which the testator meant to use them, — the devise may have a full effect. Thus again, in Cheyney's Case, and in Counden v. Clarke, 'the averment is taken,' in order to show which of two persons, both equally described within averment is taken, in order to show which of two persons, both equally described within the words of the will, was intended by the testator to take the estate; and the late cases of Doe d. Morgan v. Morgan, and Doe d. Gord v. Needs, both in this court, are to the same effect. So, in the case of Jones v. Newman, according to the view the court took of the facts, the case may be referred to the same principles as the former. The court seems to have thought the proof equivalent only to proof of there being two J. C.'s, strangers to each other, and then the decision was right, it being a mere case of what Lord Bacon calls equivocation. The cases of Price v. Page, Still v. Hoste, and Careless v. Careless, do not materially vary in principle from those last cited. They differ, indeed, in this, that the equivalent description is not entirely accurate, but they agree in its being (although inaccurate) equally applicable to each claimant; and they all concur in this, that the inaccurate part of the description is either, as in Price v. Page, a mere blank, or, as in the other two cases, applicable to no person at all. These, therefore, may fairly be classed also as cases of equivocation; and in that case, evidence of the intention of the testator seems to be receivable. But there are other cases not so easily explained and which seem at variance with the true principles of evidence. In Selwood v. Mildmay, evidence of instructions for the will was received. That case was doubted in Miller v. Travers; but, perhaps, having been put by the Master of the Rolls as one analogous to that of the devise of all a testator's freehold houses in a given place, where the testator had only leasehold houses, it may, as suggested by Lord Chief Justice Tindal, in Miller v. Travers, be considered as being only a wrong application to the facts of a correct principle of law. Again, in Hampshire v. Pierce, Sir John Strange admitted declarations of the intentions of the testatrix to be given in evidence, to show that by the words, 'the four children of my niece Bamfield,' she meant the four children of my niece Bamfield,' she meant the four children of my niece Bamfield, 'she meant the four children of my niece Bamfield,' she meant the four children of my niece Bamfield, 'she meant the four children of my niece Bamfield,' she meant the four children of my niece Bamfield, 'she meant the four children of my niece Bamfield,' she meant the four children of my niece Bamfield, 'she meant the four children of my dren by the second marriage. It may well be doubted whether this was right, but the decision on the whole case was undoubtedly correct; for the circumstances of the family, and their ages, which no doubt were admissible, were quite sufficient to have sustained the judgment, without the questionable evidence. And it may be further observed, that the principle with which Sir J. Strange is said to have commenced his judgment is stated in terms much too large, and is so far inconsistent with later author-Beaumont v. Fell, though somewhat doubtful, can be reconciled with true principles upon this ground, that there was no such person as Catherine Earnley, and that the testator was accustomed to address Gertrude Yardley by the name of Gatty. This, and other circumstances of the like nature, which were clearly admissible, may perhaps be considered to warrant that decision; but there the evidence of the testator's declarations, as to his intention of providing for Gertrude Yardley, was also received; and the same evidence was received at Nisi Prius, in Thomas v. Thomas, and approved on a motion for a new trial, by the dicta of Lord Kenyon and Mr. Justice Lawrence. But these cases seem to us at variance with the decision in Miller v. Travers, which is a decision entitled to great weight. If evidence of intention could be allowed for the purpose of showing, that by Catherine Earnley and Mary Thomas, the respective testators meant Gertrude Yardley and Elinor Evans, it might surely equally be adduced to prove, that by the county of Limerick a testator meant the county of Clare. Yet this was rejected, and we think rightly. We are prepared on this point (the point in judgment in the case of Miller v. Travers) to adhere to the authority of that case. Upon the whole, then, we are of opinion that, in this case, there must be a new trial. Where the description is partly true as to both claimants, and no case of equivocation

§ 290. Same subject. From the above case, and two other leading modern decisions, it has been collected, (1) that where the description in the will, of the person or thing intended, is applicable with legal certainty to each of several subjects, extrinsic evidence is admissible to prove which of such subjects was intended by the testator. But (2) if the description of the person or thing be wholly inapplicable to the subject intended, or said to be intended by it, evidence is not admissible to prove whom or what the testator really intended to describe. (a) His declarations of arises, what is to be done is to determine whether the description means the lessor of the plaintiff or the defendant. The description, in fact, applies partially to each, and it is not easy to see how the difficulty can be solved. If it were res integra, we should be much disposed to hold the devise void for uncertainty; but the cases of Doe v. Huthwaite, Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, and others, are authorities against this conclusion. If, therefore, by looking at the surrounding facts to be found by the jury, the court can clearly see, with the knowledge which arises from those facts alone, that the testator meant either the lessor of the plaintiff or the defendant, it may so decide, and direct the jury accordingly; but we think that, for the defendant, it may so decide, and direct the jury accordingly; but we think that, for this purpose, they cannot receive declarations of the testator of what he intended to do in making his will. If the evidence does not enable the court to give such a direction to the jury, the defendant will indeed for the present succeed; but the claim of the heir-at-law will probably prevail ultimately, on the ground that the devise is void for uncertainty."

¹ Miller v. Travers, 8 Bing. 244, and Doe d. Gord v. Needs, 2 M. & W. 129. The rule on this subject was thus stated by Tindal, C. J.: "In all cases, where a difficulty arises in applying the words of a will or deed to the subject-matter of a devise or grant, the difficulty or ambiguity, which is introduced by the admission of extrinsic evidence, may be rebutted or removed by the production of further evidence upon the same subject, calculated to explain what was the estate or subject-matter really intended to be granted or devised." Miller v. Travers, supra, expressly recognized and approved in Atkinson v. Cummins, 9 How. S. C. 479. The same rule is applied to the monuments in a deed, in Clough v. Bowman, 15 N. H. 504.

2 By Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in his Treatise on the Interpretation of Wills, pl.

184, 188. See also Gresley on Evid. 203.

(a) It need hardly be added that if the description applies with substantial accuracy to only one person or thing, evidence to show that the description was intended to apply to some other, will not be admitted. Thus if one devise property to his "nephews and nieces," and it is proved that he has no nephews or nieces of his own, but there are nieces and nephews of his wife, evidence will not be admitted to show that he was on bad terms with his wife's nephews and nieces, and there-fore probably did not intend the gift to them. Sherratt v. Mountford, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 928. So evidence is inadmissible to prove that the grantee named in the deed is not the one intended by the grantor. Whitmore v. Learned, 70 Me. grantor. The following cases support the rule as stated in the text, supra: That when the description of any person or thing mentioned in the document is plain and unambiguous, but there exist two or more things or persons to whom such description applies with substantial accuracy, then evidence of declarations of intent by the testator or grantor will be received to show which he intended, as well as evidence of facts from which such intent may be inferred. intention, whether made before or after the making of the will, are alike inadmissible.3 Those made at the time of making the will, when admitted at all, are admitted under the general rules of evidence applicable alike to all written instruments.

§ 291. Declarations in aid of interpretation. But declarations of the testator, proving or tending to prove a material fact collateral to the question of intention, where such fact would go in aid of the interpretation of the testator's words, are, on the principles already stated, admissible. These cases, however, will be found to be those only in which the description in the will is unambiguous in its application to any one of several subjects. (a)

¹ Wigram on Wills, pl. 104, 194, 195. This learned writer's General Conclusions, as the result of the whole matter, which he has so ably discussed in the treatise just cited, are " (1.) That the evidence of material facts is, in all cases, admissible in aid cited, are "(1.) That the evidence of material facts is, in all cases, admissible in aid of the exposition of a will. (2.) That the legitimate purposes to which — in succession—such evidence is applicable, are two; namely, first, to determine whether the words of the will, with reference to the facts, admit of being construed in their primary sense; and, secondly, if the facts of the case exclude the primary meaning of the words, to determine whether the intention of the testator is certain in any other sense of which the words, with reference to the facts, are capable. And, (3.) That intention cannot be averred in support of a will, except in the special cases, which are stated under the Seventh Proposition" (see supra, § 237, n.); namely, cases "where the object of a testator's bounty, or the subject of disposition (i. e. the person or thing intended), is described in terms which are applicable indifferently to more than one tended), is described in terms which are applicable indifferently to more than one person or thing." Id. pl. 211-214. And he insists, "(1.) That the judgment of a court, in expounding a will, should be simply declaratory of what is in the instrument; and, (2.) That every claimant under a will has a right to require that a court of con-

This case proceeded upon the principle that the father having contracted for the land and paid the price, the intent of the grantor was immaterial, as the deed would pass the land to the father, and if it enured to the benefit of the son, it must be by the intent of the father, not the grantor. It is submitted, however, that the intent of the grantor was the precise point in issue. If he intended the deed to be to the father, the land passed to the father; if he intended the deed to be to the son, then the land passed to the son, subject, it may be, if the father paid the price, to a trust in favor of the father. To decide this point the grantor's declarations would seem to be admissible. Cf. Simpson v. Dix, 131 Mass. 179. When, however, the description applies with only partial accuracy to any of the persons or property to which it is contended that it does apply, then, although the court may draw any inferences as to the intent of the testator, and may receive parol evidence of circumstances from which it may draw such inferences, yet it cannot receive direct evidence of his declarations in regard to such persons or property. Wales, 4 Allen (Mass.),

(a) In Kurtz v. Hibner, 55 Ill. 514, it was held that where a testator in unambiguous language devised a lot in section 32 of the town of Joliet, parol evidence was inadmissible to show that he meant a lot in section 31. The correctness of the decision is disputed with a good deal of vigor in a note to the case (19 A. L. R. 94), by Judge Redfield (see also note to same case, 8 Am. Rep. 669), and defended with equal vigor by Judge Caton, in same volume, p. 353, and followed in the case of Fitzpatrick v. Fitzpatrick, 36 Iowa, 674, a case which seems to have been carefully considered, and is worthy of perusal.

Thus, where lands were devised to John Cluer of Calcot, and there were father and son of that name, parol evidence of the testator's declarations, that he intended to leave them to the son, was held admissible.2 So, where a legacy was given to "the four children of A." who had six children, two by a first, and four by a second, marriage, parol evidence of declarations by the testatrix, that she meant the latter four, was held admissible.3 So, where the devise was, "to my granddaughter, Mary Thomas of Llechloyd in Merthyr parish," and the testator had a granddaughter named Elinor Evans in that parish, and a great-granddaughter Mary Thomas, in the parish of Llangain; parol evidence of the testator's declarations at the time of making the will was received to show which was intended.⁴ So, where a legacy was given to Catherine Earnley, and there was no person of that name, but the legacy was claimed by Gertrude Yardley; parol proof was received, that the testator's voice, when the serivener wrote the will, was very low, that he usually called the legatee Gatty, and had declared that he would do well by her in his will; and thereupon the legacy was awarded to her. 5 So, also, where a devise was

Williams, 2 Russ. & M. 689, where parol evidence of the testator's property and situation was held admissible to determine whether a bequest of stock was intended as a specific or a pecuniary legacy. These rules apply with equal force to the interpretation of every other private instrument.

3 Hampshire v. Pierce, 2 Ves. 216.
4 Thomas v. Thomas, 6 T. R. 671.
5 Beaumont v. Fell, 2 P. Wms. 141. The propriety of receiving evidence of the testator's declarations, in either of the two last-cited cases, was, as we have just seen (supra, § 239, n.), strongly questioned by Lord Abinger (in Hiscocks v. Hiscocks, 5 M. & W. 371), who thought them at variance, in this particular, with the decision in Miller v. Travers, 8 Bing. 244, which, he observed, was a decision entitled to great weight. But upon the case of Beaumont v. Fell, it has been correctly remarked, that "the evidence, which is confessedly admissible, would, in conjunction with the will itself, show that there was a devise to Catherine Earnley, and that no such person existed, but that there was a claimant named Gertrude Yardley, whom the testator usually called Gatty. In this state of the case, the question would be, whether, upon the principle of falsa demonstratio non nocet, the surname of Earnley being rejected, the Christian name, if correct, would itself be a sufficient indication of the devisee; and if so, whether Gatty satisfied that indication. Both these questions leave untouched the general question of the admissibility of evidence, to show the process by which Gatty passed into Katty, and from Katty to Catherine." See Phil. & Am. on Evid. p. 729, n. (2). It is not easy, however, to perceive why extrinsic evidence of the testator's declared intentions of beneficence towards an individual is not as admissible, to "the second son of Charles Weld, of Lulworth, Esq.," and there was no person of that name, but the testator had two relatives there, bearing the names of Joseph Weld, and Edward-Joseph Weld, it was held, upon the context of the will, and upon extrinsic evidence, that the second son of Joseph Weld was the person intended. So, where a bequest was to John Newbolt, second son of William-Strangways Newbolt, Vicar of Somerton; and it appeared aliunde that the name of the vicar was William-Robert Newbolt, that his second son was Henry-Robert, and that his third son was John-Pryce; it was held that John-Pryce was entitled to the legacy. 6 So, where the testatrix gave legacies to Mrs. and Miss B. of H., widow and daughter of the Rev. Mr. B.; upon the legacies being claimed by Mrs. and Miss. W., widow and daughter of the late Rev. Mr. W. of H., it was held, that they were entitled; it appearing aliunde that there were no persons literally answering the description in the will, at its date; but that the claimants were a daughter and granddaughter of the late Rev. Mr. B., with all of whom the testatrix had been intimately acquainted, and that she was accustomed to call the claimant by the maiden name of Mrs. W.7 The general principle in all these cases is this, that if there be a mistake in the name of the devisee, but a right description of him, the court may act upon such right description; 8 and that if two persons equally answer the same name or description, the court may determine, from the rest of the will and the surrounding circumstances, to which of them the will applies.9

§ 292. Usage. It is further to be observed, that the rule under consideration, which forbids the admission of parol evidence to contradict or vary a written contract, is not infringed by any evi-

as evidence is, that he used to speak of him or address him as his son, or godson, or adopted child; when the object in both cases is to ascertain which of several demonstrations is to be retained as true, and which rejected as false. Now the evidence of such declarations, in Beaumont v. Fell, went to show that "Earnley" was to be rejected as falsa demonstratio; and the other evidence went to designate the individual intended by the word "Catherine;" not by adding words to the will, but by showing what the word used meant. See infra, § 300; Wigram on the Interpretation of Wills, pp. 128, 129, pl. 166. See also Baylis v. Attorney-General, 2 Atk. 239; Abbot v. Massie, 3 Ves. 148; Doe d. Oxenden v. 8 On the other hand, if the name is right, but the description is wrong, the name will be regarded as the best evidence of the testator's intention. Thus, where the testator had married two wives, Mary and Caroline, successively, both of whom survived him, and he devised an estate to his "dear wife Caroline," the latter was held entitled to take, though she was not the true wife. dence of known and established usage respecting the subject to which the contract relates. To such usage, as well as to the lex loci, the parties may be supposed to refer, just as they are presumed to employ words in their usual and ordinary signification; and accordingly the rule is in both cases the same. Proof of usage is admitted, either to interpret the meaning of the language of the contract, or to ascertain the nature and extent of the contract, in the absence of express stipulations, and where the meaning is equivocal and obscure. (a) Thus, upon a contract for a year's service, as it does not in terms bind the party for every day in the year, parol evidence is admissible to show a usage for servants to have certain holidays for themselves.2 So, where the contract was for performance as an actor in a theatre, for three years, at a certain sum per week, parol evidence was held admissible to show that, according to uniform theatrical usage, the actor was to be paid only during the theatrical season; namely, during the time while the theatre was open for performance, in

The usage must be general in the whole city or place, or among all persons in the trade, and not the usage of a particular class only, or the course of practice in a particular office or bank, to whom or which the party is a stranger. Gabay v. Lloyd, 3 B. & C. 793.

² Reg. v. Stoke upon Trent, 5 Q. B. 303.

(a) Thus it has been held that when the contract is signed by one as broker, it is allowable to give evidence of a custom in that particular trade by which a broker who does not disclose the name of his principal is liable as principal. Fleet v. Murton, L. R. 7 Q. B. 126. So where the contract is signed by a firm "as agents to merchants," evidence is admissible of a custom of the trade by which an agent who does not disclose the name of his principal within a certain time shall be liable as principal. Hutchinson v. Tatham, L. R. 8 C. P. 482.

So, to explain the meaning of the terms

So, to explain the meaning of the terms "spoiled lumber," or "horn chains," evidence of the general usage of these terms among the trade is admissible. Harris v. Rathbun, 2 Abb. (N. Y.) App. Dec. 326; Swett v. Shumway, 102 Mass. 365. So, when the contract is for the delivery of a number of bushels of wheat, not stating whether the delivery is to be in sacks or in bulk, evidence is admissible of a usage of the trade to deliver in sacks, as this only supplies a doubtful term of the contract.

Robinson v. United States, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 363. The principle is that a usage, when it is reasonably uniform and well settled, not in opposition to fixed rules of law, and not in contradiction of the express terms of the contract, is deemed to form a part of the contract and to enter into the intention of the parties, if it is well established and known to the parties, for in such a case it must be supposed that their contract was made in reference to it. Newhall v. Appleton, 114 N. Y. 143; Walls v. Bailey, 49 N. Y. 464, 469. When the contract is made in a foreign state, the custom must be one which exists or is known in the place where the contract is made. Byrne v. Massasoit Packing Co., 137 Mass. 313. The usage must be known to the persons sought to be charged by it, but that this knowledge is presumed from the existence of the widespread and established custom in the place where the parties are or do business. Mooney v. Howard Ins. Co., 138 Mass. 375.

So, where a ship is warranted "to depart each of those years.3 with convoy," parol evidence is admissible to show at what place convoy for such a voyage is usually taken; and to that place the parties are presumed to refer.4 So, where one of the subjects of a charter-party was "cotton in bales," parol evidence of the mercantile use and meaning of this term was held admissible. 5 (b) So, where a promissory note or bill is payable with grace, parol evidence of the known and established usage of the bank at which it is payable is admissible to show on what day the grace expired.6 But though usage may be admissible to explain what is doubtful, it is not admissible to contradict what is plain. 7 (e) Thus, where

(b) Gorrissen v. Perrin, 27 L. J. C. P. 29. Where part of a memorandum of sale was as follows, "Bought 150 tons madder, 12\frac{1}{2}, 6ms.," it may be shown that, among dealers in madder, in such a contract 12\frac{1}{2} means 12\frac{1}{2} cents per pound, and expressed the price of the madder. Dana p. Fiedler, 2. Kernan, 40 Brown, "Brown," expressed the price of the madder. Dana v. Fiedler, 2 Kernan, 40; Brown v. Brooks, 25 Pa. St. 210; Allan v. Comstock, 17 Ga. 554; Brown v. N. s. 185; Whitmore v. The South Boston Iron Co., 2 Allen (Mass.), 52. In a recent case, in the United States Supreme Court, it is said that the principle is that, while parol evidence of custom or usage is sometimes admissible to explain such terms in the contract as are doubtful, it is not admissible to contradict what is plain, or to add new terms. DeWitt v. Berry, 134 U. S. 312. And to the same effect is Bigelow v. Legg, 102 N. Y. 654, where the defendant's counsel offered to show that a sales

cording to the custom of brokers and dealers in wool, amounted to a proposition which might be accepted or rejected by either side, and which, until rejected or accepted by both, was left open. This showing was objected to, the objection sustained, and an exception taken by the defendant, but on appeal not sustained, the court saying that the terms of the note, however comprehensive, are of no importance, unless the persons signing it were in fact the brokers or agents of the party for whom they professed to act, nor unless the contract expressed by those terms was one which they were authorized to make, and if so, no usage could control the rule of law applicable to its construction. So, where an insurance company insured on a form of policy which provided that no risk was to be binding until accepted by the company and endorsed on the policy, and the plaintiff proved an oral contract of insurance, which was to last until the contract of insurance was put in formal shape by endorsement on an open policy, the defendant was not allowed to show a usage to make all applications in writing, for such usage, if it merely showed what most people did, was immaterial, and if it was intended to report that an early unlike the control of the con prove that an oral application was illegal, prove that an oral application was integal, was contrary to the law, and therefore inadmissible. Emery v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 138 Mass. 398. Where, in an action against warehousemen for the non-delivery of property bailed to them, the defence was, that the property had been fraudulently taken from their custody, without any pedigence on their part, and without any negligence on their part, and a policy was made in the usual form, upon the ship, her tackle, apparel, boats, &c., evidence of usage, that the underwriters never pay for the loss of boats slung upon the quarter, outside of the ship, was held inadmissible. 8 So, also, in a libel in rem upon a bill of lading, containing the usual clause "the dangers of the seas only excepted," where it was articulated in the answer. that there was an established usage, in the trade in question, that the ship-owners should see the merchandise properly secured and stowed, and that this being done, they should not be liable for any damages not occasioned by their own neglect; it was held, that this article was incompetent, in point of law, to be admitted to proof.9

8 Blackett v. The Royal Exch. Assurance Co., 2 Cr. & J. 244. So, where the written contract was for "prime singed bacon," and evidence was offered to prove that by the usage of the trade, a certain latitude of deterioration, called average taint, was allowed to subsist, before the bacon ceases to answer the description of prime bacon, it lowed to subsist, before the bacon ceases to answer the description of prime bacon, it was held inadmissible. Yates v. Pym, 6 Taunt. 446. So, also, parol evidence has been held inadmissible to prove, that by the words "glass ware in casks," in the memorandum of excepted articles in a fire policy, according to the common understanding and unsage of insurers and insured, were meant such ware in open casks only. Bend v. The Georgia Ins. Co., Sup. Ct. New York, 1842, 1 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 12. But see Gray v.

9 The schooner "Reeside," 2 Summ. 567. In this case, the doctrine on this subject was thus briefly but energetically expounded and limited by Mr. Justice Story: "I own myself," said he, "no friend to the almost indiscriminate habit, of late years, of setting up particular usages or customs, in almost all kinds of business and trade, to control, vary, or annul the general liabilities of parties under the common law, as well as under the commercial law. It has long appeared to me, that there is no small danger in admitting such loose and inconclusive usages and customs, often unknown to particular parties, and always liable to great misunderstandings and misinterpretations and abuses, to outweigh the well-known and well-settled principles of law. And I rejoice to find, that, of late years, the courts of law, both in England and in America, have been disposed to narrow the limits of the operation of such usages and customs, and to discountenance any further extension of them. The true and appropriate office of a usage or custom is, to interpret the otherwise indeterminate intentions of parties, and to ascertain the nature and extent of their contracts, arising, not from express stipulations, but from mere implications and presumptions, and acts of a doubtful or equivo-cal character. It may also be admitted to ascertain the true meaning of a particular word, or of particular words, in a given instrument, when the word or words have various senses, some common, some qualified, and some technical, according to the subject-matter to which they are applied. But I apprehend that it never can be proper to resort to any usage or custom to control or vary the positive stipulations in a written resort to any usage or custom to control or vary the positive stipulations in a written contract, and, a fortiori, not in order to contradict them. An express contract of the parties is always admissible to supersede, or vary, or control a usage or custom; for the latter may always be waived at the will of the parties. But a written and express contract cannot be controlled, or varied, or contradicted by a usage or custom; for that would not only be to admit parol evidence to control, vary, or contradict written contracts, but it would be to allow mere presumptions and implications, properly arising in the absence of any positive expressions of intention, to control your contradict the the absence of any positive expressions of intention, to control, vary, or contradict the most formal and deliberate written declarations of the parties." See also Taylor v.

the plaintiff did not claim that the property had in fact been delivered to any person, evidence of the usage of other warehonsemen of taking receipts from persons to whom property was delivered is inadmissible. Lichtenhein v. Boston &

P. R. R. Co., 11 Cush. (Mass.) 70, 72. Had there been an actual delivery to a third person by the warehouseman, quære how far such evidence of general usage might not be admissible to show negligence. Ib.

§ 293. Usage in cases of statutes, charters, and deeds. The reasons which warrant the admission of evidence of usage in any case, apply equally, whether it be required to aid the interpretation of a statute, a public charter, or a private deed; and whether the usage be still existing or not, if it were contemporaneous with the instrument. And where the language of a deed is doubtful in the description of the land conveyed, parol evidence of the practical interpretation, by the acts of the parties, is admissible to remove the doubt.² So, evidence of former transactions between the same parties has been held admissible to explain the meaning of terms in a written contract respecting subsequent transactions of the same character.3

§ 294. To annex incidents. Upon the same principle, parol evidence of usage or custom is admissible "to annex incidents," as it is termed; that is, to show what things are customarily treated as incidental and accessorial to the principal thing, which is the subject of the contract, or to which the instrument relates. Thus, it may be shown by parol that a heriot is due by custom, on the death of a tenant for life, though it is not expressed in the lease.⁴ So, a lessee by a deed may show that, by the custom of the country, he is entitled to an away-going crop, though no such right is reserved in the deed. (a) So, in an action for the price of tobacco

the latter, evidence was admissible of a certain custom among foundrymen to allow for delays in changing patterns, this evidence meeting the defence that the non-delivery of the castings according to contract was caused by the delay occasioned by alterations in the patterns provided. Florence Machine Co. v. Daggett, sold, evidence was held admissible to show that, by the usage of the trade, all sales were by sample, though not so expressed in the bought and sold notes.3 This evidence is admitted on the principle, that the parties did not intend to express in writing the whole of the contract by which they were to be bound, but only to make their contract with reference to the known and established usages and customs relating to the subject-matter. But, in all cases of this sort, the rule for admitting the evidence of usage or custom must be taken with this qualification, that the evidence be not repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the contract; for otherwise it would not go to interpret and explain, but to contradict, that which is written.4 This rule does not add new terms to the contract, which, as has already been shown, 5 cannot be done; but it shows the full extent and meaning of those which are contained in the instrument.

§ 295. Usage to explain particular words. But, in resorting to usage for the meaning of particular words in a contract, a distinction is to be observed between local and technical words, and other words, (a) In regard to words which are purely technical, or local, that is, words which are not of universal use, but are familiarly known and employed, either in a particular district, or in a particular science or trade, parol evidence is always receivable, to define and explain their meaning among those who use them. And the principle and practice are the same in regard to words which have two meanings, the one common and universal, and the other technical, peculiar, or local; parol evidence being admissible of facts tending to show that the words were used in the latter sense, and to ascertain their technical or local meaning. The same principle is also applied in regard to words and phrases used in a peculiar sense by members of a particular religious sect. 1 But beyond this the principle does not extend.

1 The doctrine on this subject has recently been very fully reviewed, in the case of Lady Hewley's charities. This lady, who was a Nonconformist, in the year 1704, con-include old rubber and old nails and rags, and all articles used in the manufacture of paper. Mooney v. Howard Ins. Co., 138 Mass. 375. So it has been held that ⁽a) So it has been held that evidence evidence was admissible of the meaning is admissible of the usage by which the junk trade understands "old metals" to scription-book business whereby parties scription-book business whereby parties subscribing for books, contract to purchase them under certain terms and stipula-tions. therefore a contract is made in ordinary and popular language, to which no local or technical and peculiar meaning is attached, veyed certain estates by deeds, in trust, for the benefit of "poor and godly preachers of Christ's Holy Gospel," and their widows, and "for the encouraging and promoting of the preaching of Christ's Holy Gospel," &c.; with the usual provision for preserving a perpetual succession of trustees. Afterwards, in 1707, by other deeds to the same trustees, she made provision for the erection and support of a hospital or almshouse, for certain descriptions of poor persons, ordaining rules for the government of the house, and appointing the trustees as the visitors, &c.; and disposing of the surplus funds as in the deeds of 1704. The rules permitted the admission of none but such as were poor and piously disposed, and of the Protestant religion, and were able to repeat the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, and the Ten Commandments, and Mr. Edward Bowles's Catechism. It was alleged that Lady Hewley, and all the trustees, whose religious opinions could be ascertained, believed in the doctrine of the Trinity, the Atonement, and Original Sin. In the course of time, however, the estates became vested in trustees, the majority of whom, though calling themselves Presbyterians, professed Unitarian opinious, and the funds had for some years been applied, to a considerable extent, for the support of a seminary, and for the benefit of poor preachers of that denomination. When the charity was founded, the Stat. 9 & 10 W. 111. c. 32, against blasphemy, was in force, by which those persons who by preaching denied the doctrine of the Trinity were liable to severe penalties. The object of the suit was, in effect, to take this trust out of the hands of the Unitarians, and to obtain a declaration, that it should be managed and applied by and for none but Orthodox Dissenters; and the controversy turned chiefly on the question, whether certain evidence was admissible, which was offered to show what sort of persons were intended, in the deed of 1704, by "godly preachers of Christ's Holy Gospel," &c. This evidence, in addition to the deed of 1707, consisted principally of the will of Lady Hewley, the sermon of Dr. Coulton, one of the trustees, which was preached at her funeral, and the will of Sir John Hewley, her husband; all containing passages showing that she and the trustees were Presbyterians, believing in the Trinity, the Atonement, and Original Sin; together with the depositions of persons conversant with the history and language of the times when the deeds were executed, defining the meaning then commonly attached to the words in question, by persons of the donor's faith; and it was argued that the persons whom she intended to designate as beneficiaries could have been only those of her own faith. The Vice-Chancellor admitted this evidence, and decreed that preachers of the Unitarian doctrine and their widows were not entitled to the benefit of this charity, and he ordered that the existing trustees should be removed and others appointed, and that the charity should in future be applied accordingly. This decree Lord Ch. Lyndhurst, assisted by Patteson, J., and Alderson, B., afterwards affirmed. An appeal being taken from the judgment of Lord Lyndhurst to the House of Lords, the House, after taking the opinions of the commonlaw judges, upon certain questions proposed to them, dismissed the appeal. The first and principal of these questions was, whether the extrinsic evidence adduced, or what part of it, was admissible for the purpose of determining who were entitled under the terms "godly preachers of Christ's Holy Gospel," "godly persons," and the other descriptions contained in the deeds of 1704 and 1707, to the benefit of Lady Hewley's bounty. The other questions, which were five in number, were framed to ascertain, if such evidence should be deemed admissible, what descriptions of persons were, and what were not, the proper objects of the trusts. Of the seven learned judges who answered those questions, six were of opinion, but on various grounds, that Unitarians were excluded. Maule, J., was of opinion, that none of the evidence offered was admissible; and that the religious opinions of the founder of a charity, even if certainly known, could have no legal effect in the interpretation of an instrument in which no reference is made to his own religious opinions or belief. Erskine, J., was also of opinion that none of the evidence was admissible for the purpose for which it was offered; but that the sense of the words in question might be ascertained from contemporaneous writings, and the history of that day; and that from these sources, already open to the House, it was easy to collect, that the words were applicable to none but Trinitarian Dissenters. Coleridgo, J., and Gurney, B., were of opinion, that the evidence was admissible to show the opinions of those with whom the founder lived in most confidence, and to what sect she in fact belonged; and that the phraseology of that party might be ascertained from other sources. Williams, J., thought that the words employed were so indefinite and ambiguous, that she must be presumed to have used them parol evidence, it seems, is not admissible to show that, in that in a limited sense; and that this sense might be ascertained from her opinions; for which purpose the evidence was admissible. Parke, B., and Tindal, C. J., were of opinion, that, though it might well be shown, by competent evidence, that the words employed had a peculiar meaning at the time they were used, and what was that meaning; and that the deeds were to be read by substituting the equivalent expressions, thus ascertained, instead of those written in the deeds; yet, that evidence of her own religious opinions was not admissible to limit or control the meaning of the words. Upon this occasion, the general doctrine of the law was stated by Mr. Baron Parke, in the following terms: "I apprehend that there are two descriptions of evidence, which are clearly admissible, in every case, for the purpose of enabling a court to construe any written instrument, and to apply it practically. In the first place, there is no doubt, that not only where the language of the instrument is such as the court does not understand, it is competent to receive evidence of the proper meaning of that language, as when it is written in a foreign tongue; but it is also competent where technical words or peculiar terms, or, indeed, any expressions, are used, which, at the time the instrument was written, had acquired any appropriate meaning, either generally or by local usage, or amongst particular classes. This description of evidence is admissible in order to enable the court to understand the meaning of the words contained in the instrument itself, by themselves, and without reference to the extrinsic facts on which the instrument is intended to operate. For the purpose of applying the instrument to the facts, and determining what passes by it, and who take an interest under it, a second description of evidence is admissible, namely, every material fact that will enable the court to identify the person or thing mentioned in the instrument, and to place the court, whose province it is to declare the meaning of the words of the instrument, as near as may be, in the situation of the parties to it. From the context of the instrument, and from these two descriptions of evidence, with such circumstances as by law the court, without evidence, may of itself notice, it is its duty to construe and apply the words of that instrument; and no extrinsic evidence of the intention of the party to the deed, from his declarations, whether at the time of his executing the instrument, or before or after that time, is admissible; the duty of the court being to declare the meaning of what is written in the instrument, not of what was intended to have been written." Lord Ch. J. Tindal expounded the same doctrine as follows: "The general rule I take to be, that where the words of any written instrument are free from ambiguity in themselves, and where external circumstances do not create any doubt or difficulty as to the proper application of those words to claimants under the instrument, or the subject-matter to which the instrument relates, such instrument is always to be construed according to the strict, plain, common meaning of the words themselves; and that, in such case, evidence dehars the instrument, for the purpose of explaining it according to the surmised or alleged intention of the parties to the instrument, is utterly inadmissible. If it were otherwise, no lawyer would be safe in advising upon the construction of a written instrument, nor any party in taking under it; for the ablest advice might be controlled, and the clearest title undermined, if, at some future period, parol evidence of the particular meaning which the party affixed to his words, or of his secret intention in making the instrument, or of the objects he meant to take benefit under it, might be set up to contradict or vary the plain language of the instrument itself. The true interpretation, however, of every instrument being manifestly that which will make the instrument speak the intention of the party at the time it was made, it has always been considered as an exception, or, perhaps, to speak more precisely, not so much an exception from, as a corollary to, the general rule above stated, that, where any doubt arises upon the true sense and meaning of the words themselves, or any difficulty as to their application under the surrounding circumstances, the sense and meaning of the language may be investigated and ascertained by evidence dehors the instrument itself; for both reason and common sense agree, that by no other means can the language of the instrument be made to speak the real mind of the party. Such investigation does, of necessity, take place in the interpretation of instruments written in a foreign language; in the case of ancient instruments where, by the lapse of time and change of manners, the words have acquired, in the present age, a different meaning from that which they bore when originally employed; in cases where terms of art or science occur; in mercantile contracts, which, in many instances, use a peculiar language, employed by those only who are conversant in trade and commerce; and in other instances in which the words, besides their general common meaning, have acquired, by custom or otherwise, a wellparticular case, the words were used in any other than their ordinary and popular sense.²

known peculiar, idiomatic meaning, in the particular country in which the party using them was dwelling, or in the particular society of which he formed a member, and in which he passed his life. In all these cases, evidence is admitted to expound the real meaning of the language used in the instrument, in order to enable the court, or judge, to construe the instrument, and to carry such real meaning into effect. But, whilst evidence is admissible, in these instances, for the purpose of making the written instrument speak for itself, which, without such evidence, would be either a dead letter, or would use a doubtful tongue, or convey a false impression of the meaning of the party, I conceive the exception to be strictly limited to cases of the description above given, and to evidence of the nature above detailed; and that in no case whatever is it permitted to explain the language of a deed by evidence of the private views, the secret intentions, or the known principles of the party to the instrument, whether religious, political, or otherwise, any more than by express parol declarations made by the party himself, which are universally excluded; for the admitting of such evidence would let in all the uncertainty before adverted to; it would be evidence which, in most instances, could not be met or countervailed by any of an opposite bearing or tendency, and would, in effect, cause the secret undeclared intention of the party to control and predominate over the open intention expressed in the deed." See Attorney-General v. Shore, 11 Sim. 592, 616–627, 631, 632. Though, in this celebrated case, the general learning on this subject has been thus ably opened and illustrated, yet the precise question, whether the religious criminals of the first party of the control of the con tion, whether the religious opinions of the founder of a charity can be received as legal exponents of his intention, in an instrument otherwise intelligible in its terms, and in which no reference is made to his own opinions or belief, can hardly be considered as definitely settled; especially as a majority of the learned judges, in coming to the conclusion in which they concurred, proceeded on grounds which rendered the consideration of that point wholly unnecessary. The previous judgment of Lord Ch. Lyndhurst in the same case, is reported in 7 Sim. 309, n., 312-317. See Attorney-General v. Pearson et al., 3 Meriv. 353, 409-411, 415; and afterwards in 7 Sim. 290, 307, 308, where such evidence was held admissible. But how far this decision is to be considered as shaken by what fell from the learned judges, in the subsequent case of the Attorney-General v. Shore, above stated, remains to be seen. The acts of the founder of such a charity may be shown, in aid of the construction of the deed, where the language is doubtful; and contemporaneous treatises, documents, and statutes may be read, to show the sense in which any words or phrases were commonly used in that day, and thereby to show the sense in which the founder used them, in the deed of donation; but his opinions are inadnissible. Attorney-General v. Drummond, 1 Drury & Warren, 353, per Sugden, C.; affirmed in Dom. Proc. on Appeal, 2 Eng. Law & Eq. 15; 14 Jur. 137. See Attorney-General v. Glasgow College, 10 Jurist, 676. [Ed. In a case in Massachusetts, a testator provided that the residue of his property be given equally to the authorized agents of the Home and Foreign Missionary Societies, to aid in propagating the Holy Religion of Jesus Christ. It was a question whether the legatees could be identified, and with the view to this, evidence was offered of the testator's religious opinions for the purpose either of identifying the societies which were meant to be legates, or to show what was meant by the Holy Religion of Jesus Christ. No society existed which exactly corresponded to the description; but there were two which claimed the bequests, — the American Board of Missionaries for Foreign Missions, and the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society. The court held that while the private religious opinions of the testator were not admissible in evidence, evidence of his public religious acts and association with a particular church, were admissible as well as the names he used to call the missionary societies, or by which they were usually called and known in the religious society with which he worshipped. And, furthermore, it was competent to show the interest taken by him in any particular missionary contributions that he made for missionary purposes. In this case, the case of Lady Hewley's Charities was considered by the court, and it was stated to have decided that the religious opinions of Lady Hewley were admissible to show her connection with the religious denomination, the members of which used the words in question in the will in a restricted sense. § 295 a. Principle of admission. It is thus apparent, as was remarked at the outset, that in all the cases in which parol evidence has been admitted in exposition of that which is written, the principle of admission is, that the court may be placed, in regard to the surrounding circumstances, as nearly as possible in the situation of the party whose written language is to be interpreted; the question being, What did the person, thus circumstanced, mean by the language he has employed? (a)

§ 296. Parol evidence to rebut an equity. There is another class of cases, in which parol evidence is allowed by courts of equity to affect the operation of a writing, though the writing on its face is free from ambiguity, which is yet considered as no infringement of the general rule; namely, where the evidence is offered to rebut an equity. The meaning of this is, that where a certain presumption would, in general, be deduced from the nature of an act, such presumption may be repelled by extrinsic evidence, showing the intention to be otherwise. 1 (b) The simplest instance of this occurs, when two legacies, of which the sums and the expressed motives exactly coincide, are presumed not to have been intended as cumulative. In such case, to rebut the presumption which makes one of these legacies inoperative,

(a) Mr. Taylor (Ev. § 1109) states the rules gived by Mr. Greenleaf in § 290, in the following modified form: First, where, in a written instrument, the description of the person or thing intended is applicable with legal certainty to each of several subjects, extrinsic evidence, including proof of jects, extrinsic evidence, including proof of declarations of intention, is admissible to establish which of such subjects was intended by the author. Wigram on Wills, 160. Secondly, if the description of the person or thing be partly applicable and partly inapplicable to each of several subjects, though extrinsic evidence of the surrounding circumstances may be received for the purpose of ascertaining to which of for the purpose of ascertaining to which of for the purpose of ascertaining to which of such subjects the language applies, yet evidence of the author's declarations of intention will be inadmissible. Doe v. Hiscocks, 5 M. & W. 363. [See antc, § 290, notes.] Thirdly, if the description be partly correct and partly incorrect, and the correct part be sufficient of itself to enable the court to identify the subject intended, while the incorrect part is inapplicable to any subject, parol evidence will be admissible to the same extent as in the last case, and the instrument will be rendered operative by rejecting the erroneous statement. Wigram on Wills, 67-70. Fourthly, if the description be wholly inapplicable to the subject intended, or said to be intended by it, evidence cannot be received to prove whom or what the author really intended to describe. Id. 163. Fifthly, if the language of a written instrument, when interpreted according to its primary meaning, be in-sensible with reference to extrinsic circumstances, collateral facts may be resorted to, in order to show that in some secondary sense of the words, and in one in which the author meant to use them, the instrument may have a full effect. Doe v. Hiscocks, 5 M. & W. 363.

(b) King v. Ruckman, 21 N. J. Eq.

parol evidence will be received; its effect being not to show that the testator did not mean what he said, but, on the contrary, to prove that he did mean what he had expressed.2 In like manner, parol evidence is received to repel the presumption against an executor's title to the residue, from the fact that a legacy has been given to him. So, also, to repel the presumption, that a portion is satisfied by a legacy; 3 and in some cases, that the portionment of a legatee was intended as an ademption of the legacy.4

§ 296 a. To correct mistake. Courts of equity also admit parol evidence to contradict or vary a writing, where it is founded in a mistake of material facts, and it would be unconscientious or unjust to enforce it against either party, according to its expressed terms. Thus, if the plaintiff seeks a specific performance of the agreement, the defendant may show that such a decree would be against equity and justice, by parol evidence of the circumstances, even though they contradict the writing. if the agreement speaks, by mistake, a different language from what the parties intended, this may be shown in a bill to reform the writing and correct the mistake. In short, wherever the active agency of a court of equity is invoked, specifically to enforce an agreement, it admits parol evidence to show that the claim is unjust, although such evidence contradicts that which is written. (a) Whether courts of equity will sustain a claim to reform a writing, or to establish a mistake in it, by parol evidence, and for specific performance of it when corrected, in one and the same bill, is still an open question. The English authorities are against it; but in America their soundness is strongly questioned. 1 So, also, if a grantee fraudulently attempts to convert into an absolute sale that which was originally meant to be a security for a loan, the original design of the conveyance, though contrary to the terms of the writing, may be shown by parol. 2(b)

§ 297. Ambiguities, latent and patent. Having thus explained the nature of the rule under consideration, and shown that it only excludes evidence of the language of the party, and not of the circumstances in which he was placed, or of collateral facts, it may be proper to consider the case of ambiguities, both latent and patent. The leading rule on this subject is thus given by Lord Bacon: "Ambiguitas verborum latens verificatione suppletur; nam quod ex facto oritur ambiguum, verificatione facti tollitur." 1(a) Upon which he remarks, that, "there be two sorts of ambiguities of words; the one is ambiguitas patens and the other latens. Patens is that which appears to be ambiguous upon the deed or instrument; latens is that which seemeth certain and without ambiguity, for anything that appeareth upon the

(b) See also McClane v. White, 5 Minn. 178; Tillson v. Moulton, 23 Ill. 648, People v. Irwin, 14 Cal. 428. And see ante, § 284, notes. This rule, that oral evidence is admissible to show that an instrument assigning or conveying real or personal preparate in advantage of the convergence of the con or personal property in absolute terms may be shown to have been intended as security only, is now well established. It originated in the equity courts from the efforts of the equity judges to prevent forfeitures, to relieve against frauds, and to enforce the equitable maxim "once a mortgage always a mortgage." This rule is an evident exception to the general rule of evidence forbidding the contradiction or explanation of written instruments by parol evidence; but having been established in chancery, it was finally applied in courts of law as well. Marsh v. McNair, 99 N. Y. 178; Newton v. Fay, 10 Allen, 505; Brick v. Brick, 98 U. S. 514; Butman v. Howell, 144 Mass. 66; Reeve v. Dennett, 137 Mass. 315. But while this expectation amplies to convey nees it this exception applies to conveyances it does not apply so far as the document in question is in the nature of an executory contract between the parties. Marsh v. McNair, 99 N. Y. 178. It is moreover, held in some States that this equitable exception cannot be enforced in courts of law, and that where an action is brought in a court which has no equity jurisdiction, the written contract of sale or assignment, if absolute in terms, is conclusive, and evidence is not admissible to show that it was intended as security only. Grant v.

Frost, 80 Me. 204; Philbrook v. Eaton, 134 Mass. 400; Pennock v. McCormick, 120 Mass. 275. But if the document in question is not a bill of sale or conveyance of property, but merely a bill of parcels, [i. e. a document specifying the price, the articles, the names of buyer and seller, and receipt of payment] this is in the nature of a receipt and is open to explanation by parol evidence like all other receipts, as will be hereafter shown. See post, § 305, notes; Grant v. Frost, 80 Me. 204. In cases where courts have both law and equity jurisdiction, and oral evidence is offered which is so distinct, precise, and strong, that it would justify a court of equity in reforming the written instrument, the court has held that it will not enforce a separate proceeding for the re-formation of the instrument, but having itself jurisdiction in the matter will consider the reformation to have been had and the written instrument varied, altered, or added to by the oral evidence. Mussey v. Curtis, 60 Vt. 272; Davis v. The Liberty & Camden Gravel Road Co., 84 Ind. 39. When the contract is one which by the statute of frauds must be in writing, this rule is more strictly construed and parol evidence will not be admitted. Lazear v. Natl. Union Bank of Md., 52 Md. 119.

deed or instrument; but there is some collateral matter out of the deed that breedeth the ambiguity. Ambiguitas patens is never holpen by averment; and the reason is, because the law will not couple and mingle matter of specialty, which is of the higher account, with matter of averment, which is of inferior account in law; for that were to make all deeds hollow and subject to averments, and so, in effect, that to pass without deed which the law appointeth shall not pass but by deed. Therefore, if a man give land to J. D. and J. S. et haredibus, and do not limit to whether of their heirs, it shall not be supplied by averment to whether of them the intention was (that) the inheritance should be limited." "But if it be ambiguitas latens, then otherwise it is; as if I grant my manor of S. to J. F. and his heirs, here appeareth no ambiguity at all. But if the truth be, that I have the manors both of South S. and North S., this ambiguity is matter in fact; and therefore it shall be holpen by averment, whether of them it was that the party intended should pass." 2(b)

§ 298. Ambiguity defined. But here it is to be observed, that words cannot be said to be ambiguous because they are unintelligible to a man who cannot read; nor is a written instrument

(b) Lathrop v. Blake, 3 Foster, 46. In Sargent v. Adams, 3 Gray, 72, 77, the question arose how far an agreement in writing to let for a term of years "the 'Adams House,' so called, situate on Washington Street, in Boston, and numbered 371 on said Washington Street," could be explained by parol. The defendant had fitted up an old tavern as a hotel, under the name of the "Adams House," on Washington Street. The entrance to the liotel was from said street, and was numbered 371. The rest of the ground-floor of the building was fitted up for stores, which were numbered from 1 to 5, Adams House, and were, at the time of making the agreement, severally occupied by different tenants. The defendant tendered, in pursuance of the above agreement, a lease duly executed, of the hotel known as the Adams House, but not including the stores, which the plaintiff refused to accept, and subsequently brought this action to recover a sum of money previously paid by him to the defendant, in part performance of the agreement. The defendant, to show that he had complied with his obligations under the agreement, by tendering a proper lease, offered to prove by parol, that the original agreement was that the lease should include only the hotel proper and not the stores; and he was permitted so to do. The opinion of the court, by Shaw, C. J., places the case among latent ambiguities, upon the ground, that the very general terms used in the contract apply with sufficient legal certainty to the entire building, including the stores, and to the portion of it fitted up for a public house, and consequently it was competent to show, by parol, in which sense the parties used the terms. See also to the same effect, Bainbridge v. Wade, 20 L. J. N. s. Q. B. 7; Blossom v. Griffin, 13 N. Y. 569; Griffiths v. Hardenbergh, 41 N. Y. 468; Bradley v. Wash. &c. Co., 13 Pet. (U. S.) 89.

Where a bill was drawn expressing £200 in the body in words, but £245 in figures in the margin, it was held that the words in the body must be taken to be the true amount to be paid; and that the ambiguity created by the figures in the margin was patent, and could not be explained by parol. Saunderson v. Piper, 5 Bing. N. C. 425.

ambiguous or uncertain merely because an ignorant or uninformed person may be unable to interpret it. It is ambiguous only, when found to be of uncertain meaning by persons of competent skill and information. Neither is a judge at liberty to declare an instrument ambiguous, because he is ignorant of a particular fact, art, or science, which was familiar to the person who used the words, and a knowledge of which is therefore necessary to a right understanding of the words he has used. If this were not so, then the question, whether a will or other instrument were ambiguous or uncertain, might depend not upon the propriety of the language the party has used, but upon the degree of knowledge, general or local, which a particular judge might happen to possess; nay, the technical accuracy and precision of a scientific man might occasion his intestacy, or defeat his contract. follows that no judge is at liberty to pronounce an instrument ambiguous or uncertain, until he has brought to his aid, in its interpretation, all the lights afforded by the collateral facts and circumstances, which, as we have shown, may be proved by

§ 299. Ambiguity and inaccuracy. A distinction is further to be observed, between the ambiguity of language and its inaccu-"Language," Vice-Chancellor Wigram remarks, "may be inaccurate without being ambiguous, and it may be ambiguous although perfectly accurate. If, for instance, a testator, having one leasehold house in a given place and no other house, were to devise his freehold house there to A. B., the description, though inaccurate, would occasion no ambiguity. If, however, a testator were to devise an estate to John Baker, of Dale, the son of Thomas, and there were two persons to whom the entire description accurately applied, this description, though accurate, would be ambiguous. It is obvious, therefore, that the whole of that class of cases in which an accurate description is found to be sufficient merely by the rejection of words of surplusage are cases in which no ambiguity really exists. The meaning is certain, notwithstanding the inaccuracy of the testator's language. A judge, in such cases, may hesitate long before he comes to a conclusion; but if he is able to come to a conclusion at last, with no other assistance than the light derived from a knowledge of those circumstances, to which the words of the will expressly or tacitly refer, he does in effect declare that the words have legal certainty, - a declaration which, of course, excludes the existence of any ambiguity. The language may be inaccurate; but if the court can determine the meaning of this inaccurate language, without any other guide than a knowledge of the simple facts, upon which — from the very nature of language in general — its meaning depends, the language, though inaccurate, cannot be ambiguous. The circumstance, that the inaccuracy is apparent on the face of the instrument, cannot, in principle, alter the case."1 Thus, in the will of Nollekens, the sculptor, it was provided, that, upon his decease, "all the marble in the yard, the tools in the shop, bankers, mod, tools for carving," &c., should be the property of Alex. Goblet. The controversy was upon the word "mod," which was a case of patent inaccuracy; but the court, with no guide to the testator's intention but his words, and the knowledge common to every working sculptor, decided that the word in question sufficiently described the testator's models; thus negativing the existence of any ambiguity whatever.2

§ 300. Patent ambiguities. The patent ambiguity, therefore, of which Lord Bacon speaks, must be understood to be that which remains uncertain to the court, after all the evidence of surrounding circumstances and collateral facts, which is admissible under the rules already stated, is exhausted. His illustrations of this part of the rule are not cases of misdescription, either of the person or of the thing to which the instrument relates; but are cases in which the persons and things being sufficiently described, the intention of the party in relation to them is ambiguously expressed.³ Where this is the case, no parol evidence of expressed intention can be admitted. In other words, and more generally speaking, if the court, placing itself in the situation in which the testator or contracting party stood at the time of executing the instrument, and with full understanding of the force and import of the words, cannot ascertain his meaning and intention from the language of the instrument thus illustrated, it is a case of incurable and hopeless uncertainty, and the instrument, therefore, is so far inoperative and void.4

Patent ambiguities are to be dealt with by the court alone. But where the meaning

§ 301. False description. There is another class of eases, so nearly allied to these as to require mention in this place; namely, those in which, upon applying the instrument to its subject-matter, it appears that in relation to the subject, whether person or thing, the description in it is true in part, but not true in every particular. The rule, in such eases, is derived from the maxim, "Falsa demonstratio non nocet, cum de corpore constat." Here so much of the description as is false is rejected; and the instrument will take effect, if a sufficient description remains to ascertain its application. It is essential, that enough remains to show plainly the intent.² "The rule," said Mr. Justice Parke,³ "is clearly settled, that when there is a sufficient description set forth of premises, by giving the particular name of a close, or otherwise, we may reject a false demonstration; but that, if the premises be described in general terms, and a particular description be added, the latter controls the former." It is not, however, because one part of the description is placed first and the other last in the sentence; but because, taking the whole together, that intention is manifest. For, indeed, "it is vain to imagine one part before another; for though words can neither be spoken nor written at once, yet the mind of the author comprehends them at once, which gives vitam et modum to the sentence." 4 Therefore, under a lease of "all that part of Blenheim Park, situate in the county of Oxford, now in the occupation of one S., lying" within certain specified abuttals, "with all the houses thereto belonging, which are in the occupation of said S.," it was held, that a house lying within the abuttals, though not in the occupation of S., would pass.⁵ So, by a devise of "the farm called Trogue's Farm, now in the occupation of C.," it was held, that the whole farm passed, though it was not all in C.'s occupation. 6 Thus, also, where one devised all his freehold and real estate "in the county of Limerick and in the city of Limerick;" and the testator had no real estates in the county of Limerick, of an instrument becomes ambiguous, by reason of extrinsic evidence, it is for the jury to determine it. Smith v. Thompson, 18 Law J. C. P. 314; Doe v. Beviss, Id. 128.

but his real estates consisted of estates in the county of Clare, which was not mentioned in the will, and a small estate in the city of Limerick, inadequate to meet the charges in the will; it was held, that the devisee could not be allowed to show, by parol evidence, that the estates in the county of Clare were inserted in the devise to him, in the first draft of the will, which was sent to a conveyancer, to make certain alterations, not affecting those estates; that, by mistake, he erased the words "county of Clare;" and that the testator, after keeping the will by him for some time, executed it, without adverting to the alteration as to that county.

 Miller v. Travers, 8 Bing. 244; Doe v. Chichester, 4 Dow, 65; Doe v. Lyford, 4
 M. & S. 550. The opinion of the court in Miller v. Travers, by Tindal, C. J., contains so masterly a discussion of the doctrine in question, that no apology seems necessary for its insertion entire. After stating the case with some preliminary remarks, the learned Chief Justice proceeded as follows: "It may be admitted that, in all cases in which a difficulty arises in applying the words of a will to the thing which is the subject-matter of the devise, or to the person of the devisee, the difficulty or ambiguity, which is introduced by the admission of extrinsic evidence, may be rebutted and removed by the production of further evidence upon the same subject calculated to explain what was the estate or subject-matter really intended to be devised, or who was the person really intended to take under the will; and this appears to us to be the extent of the maxim, 'Ambiguitas verborum latens, verificatione suppletur.' But the eases to which this construction applies will be found to range themselves into two separate classes, distinguishable from each other, and to neither of which can the present case be referred. The first class is, where the description of the thing devised, or of the devisee, is clear upon the face of the will; but, upon the death of the testator, it is found that there are more than one estate or subject-matter of devise, or more than one person, whose description follows out and fills the words used in the will. As, where the testator devises his manor of Dale, and at his death it is found that he has two manors of that name, South Dale and North Dale; or, where a man devises to his son John, and he has two sons of that name. In each of these cases respectively, parol evidence is admissible to show which manor was intended to pass, and which son was intended to take. (Bac. Max. 23; Hob. 32; Edward Altham's Case, 8 Co. Rep. 155.) The other class of cases is that in which the description contained in the will of the thing intended to be devised, or of the person who is intended to take, is true in part, but not true in every particular. As, where an estate is devised called A, and is described as in the occupation of B, and it is found, that though there is an estate called A, yet the whole is not in B's occupation; or, where an estate is devised to a person, whose surname or Christian name is mistaken; or whose description is imperfect or inaccurate: in which latter class of cases parol evidence is admissible to show what estate was intended to pass, and who was the devisee intended to take, provided there is sufficient indication of intention appearing on the face of the will to justify the application of the evidence. But the case now before the court does not appear to fall within either of these distinctions. There are no words in the will which contain an imperfect, or, indeed, any description whatever of the estates in Clare. The present case is rather one in which the plaintiff does not endeavor to apply the description contained in the will to the estates in Clare; but, in order to make out such intention, contained in the will to the estates in Clare; but, in order to make out such intention, is compelled to introduce new words and a new description into the body of the will itself. The testator devises all his estates in the county of Limerick, and the city of Limerick. There is nothing ambignous in this devise on the face of the will. It is found, upon inquiry, that he has property in the city of Limerick, which answers to the description in the will, but no property in the county. This extrinsic evidence produces no ambiguity, no difficulty in the application of the words of his will to the state of the property, as it really exists. The natural and necessary construction of the will is, that it passes the estate which he has in the city of Limerick, but passes no estate in the county of Limerick, where the testator had no estate to answer that description. The plaintiff, however, contends, that he has a right to prove that the testator intended to pass, not only the estate in the city of Limerick, but an estate in And so, where land was described in a patent as lying in the county of M., and further described by reference to natural monu-

a county not named in the will, namely, the county of Clare; and that the will is to be read and construed as if the word 'Clare' stood in the place of, or in addition to, that of Limerick. But this, it is manifest, is not merely calling in the aid of extrinsic evidence to apply the intention of the testator, as it is to be collected from the will itself, to the existing state of his property: it is calling in extrinsic evidence to introduce into the will an intention not apparent upon the face of the will. It is not simply removing a difficulty arising from a defective or mistaken description: it is making the will speak upon a subject on which it is altogether silent, and is the same in effect as the filling up a blank, which the testator might have left in his will. It amounts, in short, by the admission of parol evidence, to the making of a new devise for the testator, which he is supposed to have omitted. Now, the first objection to the introduction of such evidence is, that it is inconsistent with the rule, which reason and sense lay down, and which has been universally established for the construction of wills; namely, that the testator's intention is to be collected from the words used in the will, and that words which he has not used cannot be added. Den v. Page, 3 T. R. 87. But it is an objection no less strong, that the only mode of proving the alleged intention of the testator is by setting up the draft of the will against the executed will itself. As, however, the copy of the will which omitted the name of the county of Clare was for some time in the custody of the testator, and therefore open for his inspection, which copy was afterwards executed by him, with all the formalities required by the Statute of Frauds, the presumption is, that he must have seen and approved of the alteration, rather than that he overlooked it by mistake. It is unnecessary to advert to the danger of allowing the draft of the will to be set up, as of greater authority to evince the intention of the testator than the will itself, after the will has been solemnly executed, and after the death of the testator. If such evidence is admissible to introduce a new subject-matter of devise, why not also to introduce the name of a devisee, altogether omitted in the will? If it is admissible to introduce new matter of devise, or a new devisee, why not to strike out such as are contained in the executed will? The effect of such evidence in either case would be, that the will, though made in form by the testator in his lifetime, would really be made by the attorney after his death; that all the guards intended to be introduced by the Statute of Frauds would be entirely destroyed, and the statute itself virtually repealed. And upon examination of the decided cases, on which the plaintiff has relied in argument, no one will be found to go the length of supporting the proposition which he contends for. On the contrary, they will all be found consistent with the distinction above adverted to, that an uncertainty which arises from applying the description contained in the will, either to the thing devised or to the person of the devisee, may be helped by parol evidence; but that a new subject-matter of devise, or a new devisee, where the will is entirely silent upon either, cannot be imported by parol evidence into the will itself. Thus, in the case of Lowe v. Lord Huntingtower, 4 Russ. 581, n., in which it was held, that evidence of collateral circumstances was admissible, as of the several ages of the devisees named in the will, of the fact of their being married or unmarried, and the like, for the purpose of ascertaining the true construction of the will; such evidence, it is to be observed, is not admitted to introduce new words into the will itself, but merely to give a construction to the words used in the will, consistent with the real state of his property and family; the evidence is produced to prove facts, which, according to the language of Lord Coke, in 8 Co. Rep. 155, 'stand well with the words of the will.' The case of Standen v. Standen, 2 Ves. 589, decides no more than that a devise of all the residue of the testator's real estate, where he has no real estate at all, but has a power of appointment over real estate, shall pass such estate over which he has the power, though the power is not referred to. But this proceeds upon the principle, that the will would be altogether inoperative, unless it is taken that, by the words used in the will, the testator meant to refer to the power of appointment. The case of Mosley v. Massey and others, 8 East, 149, does not appear to bear upon the question now under consideration. After the parol evidence had established that the local description of the two estates mentioned in the will had been transposed by mistake, the county of Radnor having been applied to the estate in Monmouth, and vice versa, the court held, that it was sufficiently to be collected from the words of the will itself, which estate the testator meant to give to the one devisee, and which to the other, independent of their local description; all, therefore, that was done, was to reject the

local description, as unnecessary, and not to import any new description into the will. In the case of Selwood v. Mildmay, 3 Ves. 306, the testator devised to his wife part of his stock in the four per cent annuities of the Bank of England; and it was shown by parol evidence, that, at the time he made his will, he had no stock in the four per cent annuities, but that he had some which he had sold out and had invested the produce in long annuities. And in this case it was held, that the bequest was in substance a bequest of stock, using the words as a denomination, not as the identical corpus of the stock; and as none could be found to answer the description but the long annuities, it was held, that such stock should pass, rather than the will be altogether inoperative. This case is certainly a very strong one; but the decision appears to us to range itself under the head, that 'falsa demonstratio non nocet,' where enough appears upon the will itself to show the intention, after the false description is rejected. The case of Goodtitle v. Southern, 1 M. & S. 299, falls more closely within the principle last referred to. A devise of all that my farm called Trogue's Farm, now in the occupation of A. C.' Upon looking out for the farm devised, it is found that part of the lands which constituted Trogue's Farm, are in the occupation of another person. It was held, that the thing devised was sufficiently ascertained by the devise of 'Trogue's Farm,' and that the inaccurate part of the devise might be rejected as surplusage. The case of Day v. Trig, 1 P. W. 286, ranges itself precisely in the same class. A devise of all 'the testator's freehold houses in Aldersgate Street,' when in fact he had no freehold, but had leasehold, honses there. The devise was held in substance and effect to be a devise of his houses there; and that as there were no freehold houses there to satisfy the description, the word 'freehold' should rather be rejected, than the will be totally void. But neither of these cases affords any authority in favor of the plaintiff; they decide only that, where there is a sufficient description in the will to ascertain the thing devised, a part of the description, which is inaccurate, may be rejected, not that anything may be added to the will; thus following the rule laid down by Anderson, C. J., in Godb. 131, - 'An averment to take away surplusage is good, but not to increase that which is defective in the will of the testator.' On the contrary, the cases against the plaintiff's construction appear to bear more closely on the point. In the first place, it is well established, that, where a complete blank is left for the name of the legatee or devisee, no parol evidence, however strong, will be allowed to fill it up, as intended by the testator. Hunt v. Hort, 3 Bro. C. C. 311, and in many other cases. Now the principle must be precisely the same, whether it is the person of the devisee, or the estate or thing devised, which is left altogether in blank. And it requires a very nice discrimination to distinguish between the case of a will, where the description of the estate is left altogether in blank, and the present case, where there is a total omission of the estates in Clare. In the case of Doe d. Oxenden v. Chichester, 4 Dow, P. C. 65, it was held by the House of Lords, in affirmance of the judgment below, that in the case of a devise of 'my estate of Ashton,' no parol evidence was admissible to show, that the testator intended to pass not only his lands in Ashton, but in the adjoining parishes, which he had been accustomed to call by the general name of his Ashton estate. The Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, in giving the judgment of all the judges, says, 'If a testator should devise his lands of or in Devonshire or Somersetshire, it would be impossible to say, that you ought to receive evidence, that his intention was to devise lands out of those counties.' Lord Eldon, then Lord Chancellor, in page 90 of the Report, had stated in substance the same opinion. The case so put by Lord Eldon and the Chief Justice, is the very case now under discussion. But the case of Newburgh v. Newburgh, decided in the House of Lords on the 16th of June, 1825, appears to be in point with the present. In that case the appellant contended, that the omission of the word 'Gloucester,' in the will of the late Lord Newburgh, proceeded upon a mere mistake, and was contrary to the intention of the testator, at the time of making his will, and insisted that she ought to be allowed to prove, as well from the context of the will itself, as from other extrinsic evidence, that the testator intended to devise to her an estate for life as well in the estates in Gloucester, which was not inserted in the will, as in the county of Sussex, which was mentioned therein. The question, 'whether parol evidence was admissible to prove such mistake, for the purpose of correcting the will and entitling the appellant to the Gloucester estate, as if the word "Gloucester" had been inserted in the will, was submitted to the judges, and Lord Chief Justice Abbott declared it to be the unanimous opinion of those who description which related to the county was rejected. The entire description in the patent, said the learned judge, who delivered the opinion of the court, must be taken, and the identity of the land ascertained by a reasonable construction of the language used. If there be a repugnant call, which, by the other calls in the patent, clearly appears to have been made through mistake, that does not make void the patent. But if the land granted be so inaccurately described as to render its identity wholly uncertain, it is admitted that the grant is void. So, if lands are described by the number or name of the lot or parcel, and also by metes and bounds, and the grantor owns lands answering to the one description and not to the other, the description of the lands which he owned will be taken to be the true one, and the other rejected as falsa demonstratio.

had heard the argument that it could not. As well, therefore, upon the authority of the cases, and more particularly of that which is last referred to, as upon reason and principle, we think the evidence offered by the plaintiff would be inadmissible upon the trial of the issue."

So, where one devised "all that freehold farm called the Wick Farm, containing two hundred acres or thereabouts, occupied by W. E. as tenant to me, with the appurtenances," to uses applicable to freehold property alone; and at the date of the will, and at the death of the testator, W. E. held, under a lease from him, two hundred and two acres of land, which were described in the lease as the Wick Farm, but of which treelve acres were not freehold, but were lease-hold only; it was held that these twelve acres did not pass by the devise. Hall v. Fisher, 1 Collyer, 47. The object in cases of this kind is, to interpret the instrument, that is, to ascertain the intent of the parties. The rule to find the intent is, to give most effect to those things about which men are least liable to mistake. Davis v. Rainsford, 17 Mass. 210; Mclver v. Walker, 9 Cranch, 178. On this principle, the things usually called for in a grant, that is, the things by which the land granted is described, have been thus marshalled: First. The highest regard is had to natural boundaries. Secondly. To lines actually run, and corners actually marked, at the time of the grant. Thirdly. If the lines and courses of an adjoining tract are called for, the lines will be extended to them, if they are sufficiently established, and no other departure from the deed is thereby required; marked lines prevailing over those which are not marked. Fourthly. To courses and distances; giving preference to the one or the other, according to circumstances. See Cherry v. Slade, 3 Murphy, 82; Dogan v. If the agreement be by deed, it cannot, in general, be dissolved by any executory agreement of an inferior nature; but any obligation by writing not under seal may be totally dissolved, before breach, by an oral agreement. 1(a) And there seems little room to doubt, that this rule will apply, even to those cases where a writing is by the Statute of Frauds made necessary to the validity of the agreement.² But where there is an entire agreement in writing, consisting of divers particulars, partly requisite to be in writing by the Statute of Frauds, and partly not within the statute, it is not competent to prove an agreed variation of the latter

§ 303. Or a new additional or substituted agreement. Neither is the rule infringed by the admission of oral evidence to prove a new and distinct agreement, upon a new consideration, whether it be as a substitute for the old, or in addition to and beyond it. And if subsequent, and involving the same subject-matter, it is immaterial whether the new agreement be entirely oral, or whether it refers to and partially or totally adopts the provisions of the former contract in writing, provided the old agreement be rescinded and abandoned. 1(a) Thus, where one by an instrument under seal agreed to erect a building for a fixed price, which was not an adequate compensation, and, having performed part of the work, refused to proceed, and the obligee thereupon promised that, if he would proceed, he should be paid for his labor and materials, and should not suffer, and he did so; it was held that he might recover in assumpsit upon this verbal agreement.2 So. where the abandonment of the old contract was expressly mutual.3 So, where a ship was hired by a charter-party under seal, for eight months, commencing from the day of her sailing from Gravesend, and to be loaded at any British port in the English Channel; and it was afterwards agreed by parol that she should be laden in the Thames, and that the freight should commence from her entry outwards at the custom-house; it was held, that an action would lie upon the latter agreement.4

settled that, in a case of a simple contract in writing, oral evidence is admissible to show that, by a subsequent agreement, the time of performance was enlarged, or the place of performance changed, the contract having been performed according to the enlarged time, or at the substituted place, or the performance having been prevented by the act of the other party; or that the damages for non-performance were waived and remitted; 1 or that it was founded upon an insufficient or an unlawful consideration, or was without consideration; 2 or that the agreement itself was waived and abandoned.³ So, it has been held competent to prove an additional and suppletory agreement, by parol; as, for example, where a contract for the hire of a horse was in writing, and it was further agreed by parol that accidents, occasioned by his shying, should be at the risk of the hirer. 4(a) A further consideration

When the written agreement is silent as to how long the same was intended to continue, oral evidence is admissible to show that the parties did not intend to bind themselves by the written agreement for any definite period of time, but purposely left that to be settled either by contemporaneous or subsequent agreement. Real Estate Title, &c., Co.'s Appeal, 125 Pa. St. 560; Thomas v. Loose, 114 Pa. St. 35. So, in a recent case in New York (Dodge v. Zimmer, 110 N. Y. 49), it was held that an independent collateral agreement, although by pearly was admissible as although by parol, was admissible as a stipulation which assumed the agreement precisely as indicated by the writing, but dealt with a possible contingency in the future, as to which a separate or supplemay also be proved by parol, if it is not of a different nature from that which is expressed in the deed. 5 (b) And if the deed appears to be a voluntary conveyance, a valuable consideration may be proved by parol.6

§ 305. Receipts. In regard to receipts, it is to be noted that they may be either mere acknowledgments of payment or delivery, or they may also contain a contract to do something in relation to the thing delivered. In the former case, and so far as the receipt goes only to acknowledge payment or delivery, it is merely prima facie evidence of the fact, and not conclusive; and therefore the fact which it recites may be contradicted by oral testimony. (a) But in so far as it is evidence of a contract between the parties, it stands on the footing of all other contracts in writing, and cannot be contradicted or varied by parol. (b) Thus, for example, a bill of lading, which partakes of both these characters, may be contradicted and explained in its recital, that the goods were in good order and well conditioned, by showing that their internal order and condition was bad; and, in like manner in any other fact which it erroneously recites; but in other respects it is to be treated like other written contracts.2 (c)

tory agreement was made; that is, that assuming the contract of purchase and sale to stand and remain unchanged in all its terms, it looked forward to a possible contingency in the action of a third person which might put in peril the terms as they stood, and, by such suppletory parol agreement, sought to avert the danger and case, it was held, that the recital in the bill of lading, as to the good order and condition of the goods, was applicable only to their external and apparent order and condition; but that it did not extend to the quality of the material in which they were enveloped, nor to secret defects in the goods themselves; and that, as to defects of the two latter descriptions, parol evidence was admissible. And the fact of the execution of the written instrument when no attempt is made to prove its contents, but the fact of execution comes in collaterally or incidentally to the case, may be shown by oral evidence. Roberts v. Burgess, 85 Ala. 192. And so when the purpose is to prove the existence of a written contract collaterally, oral agreements tending to show such existence may be proved. Brewster v. Reel, 74 Iowa, 506. Where the payee of a promissory note, not negotiable, for $120, delivered it to a third person, and took back the following writing: "Received of A a note (describing it), for which I am to collect and account to the said A the sum of $110, when the above note is collected, or return said note back to said A if I choose;" it was decided that parol evidence, which was offered to show that the note was held on other and different terms, was rightly excluded. Kettell, 1 Sprague's Decisions, 309. The rule that parol evidence is not admissible to vary or control a written contract is not applicable to mere bills of parcels made in the usual form, in which nothing appears but the names of the ven-dor and vendee, the articles purchased, with the prices affixed, and a receipt of payment by the vendor. These form an exception to the general rule of evidence, being informal documents, intended only to specify prices, quantities, and a receipt of payment, and not used or designed to embody and set out the terms and conditions of a contract of bargain and sale. They are in the nature of receipts, and are al-ways open to evidence, which proves the real terms upon which the agreement of sale was made between the parties. 1 Cowen & Hill's note to Phil. on Evid. H. 544. See Linsley v. Lovely, 26 Vt. 123. In some States a due-bill is held to be a promissory note, in others it is held to be if it sory note, in others it is held to be if it contains words denoting a promise to pay or an intent that it shall be negotiable. But the better authority, as well as the most consistent with principle, is that a mere acknowledgment of indebtedness is not of itself a contract. It is rather an admission of fact, and like all mere admissions written or oral, it might be contradicted or explained by parol. Alexander v. Thompson, 42 Minu. 499.

OF THE INSTRUMENTS OF EVIDENCE.

OF WITNESSES, AND THE MEANS OF PROCURING THEIR ATTENDANCE.

§ 306. Instruments of evidence. Having thus considered the general nature and principles of evidence, and the rules which govern in the production of evidence, we come now, in the third place, to speak of the instruments of evidence, or the means by which the truth in fact is established. In treating this subject, we shall consider how such instruments are obtained and used, and their admissibility and effect.

§ 307. Written and unwritten. The instruments of evidence are divided into two general classes; namely, unwritten and written. The former is more naturally to be first considered, because oral testimony is often the first step in proceeding by documentary evidence, it being frequently necessary first to establish, in that mode, the genuineness of the documents to be adduced.

§ 308. Unwritten. By unwritten or oral evidence is meant the testimony given by witnesses, viva voce, either in open court or before a magistrate acting under its commission or the authority of law. Under this head it is proposed briefly to consider (1) The method, in general, of procuring the attendance and testimony of witnesses; (2) The competency of witnesses; (3) The course and practice in the examination of witnesses; and herein of the impeachment and the corroboration of their testimony.

§ 309. Attendance of witnesses. And, first, in regard to the method of procuring the attendance of witnesses, it is to be ob-

1 This additional clause is to the following effect: "And also, that you do diligently and carefully search for, examine, and inquire after, and bring with you and produce, at the time and place aforesaid, a bill of exchange, dated," &c. (here describing with precision the papers and documents to be produced), "together with all copies, drafts, and vouchers, relating to the said documents, and all other documents, letters, and paper writings whatsoever, that can or may afford any information or evidence in said cause; then and there to testify and show all and singular those things which you (or either of you) know, or the said documents, letters, or instruments in writing do import of and converging the said cause now depending. And this you (or any of you) import, of and concerning the said cause now depending. And this you (or any of you) shall in no wise omit," &c. 3 Chitty's Gen. Practice, 830, n.; Amey v. Long, 9 East,

(a) The power of legislative bodies to punish a witness for contempt in not appearing before them has been the subject of several decisions. In Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 168, the plaintiff sued the defendant, the sergeant-at-arms of the House of Representatives, for false imprisonment. The defendant set up in his plea that he acted by direction of a committee of the House of Representatives. The decision in this case was that the committee was appointed to investigate a subject not within the power of the House to investigate, and the action of the committee was therefore ultra vires and The language of the Court no defence. seems to admit that in some cases, the House might commit a witness for contempt, and the case of Anderson v. Dunn, 6 Wheat. 204, supports this view. A State legislature has the power to compel witnesses to attend and testify before the House or one of its committees; and the refusal of a witness to appear is a contempt for which the House may cause him to be arrested and brought before the House; and for a refusal to testify he may be imprisoned. Burnham v. Morrissey, 14

(b) If a writ of subpæna duces does not contain the words "to testify" as well as to appear and bring the document, it is an invalid summons, as the power of the Court to compel the witness to attend is based on the fact that the testimony of the witv. Elston, 23 N. J. Eq. 212. The degree of particularity in the description of the papers is thus stated by Dillon, J., in United States v. Babcock, 3 Dill. (U. S.) 568: "The papers are required to be stated or specified only with that degree of certainty which is practicable considering all the circumstances of the case, so that the witness may be able to know what is wanted of him and to have the papers at the trial so that they can be used if the Court shall then determine them to be competent and relevant evidence." To require a solicitor to produce all his books, papers, &c., relating to all dealings between him and a party to the suit during a term of thirty-three years is too vague. Lee v. Angas, L. R. 2 Eq. 59.

different States of the Union are not perfectly similar, any further pursuit of this part of the subject would not comport with the design of this work.4 And the same observation may be applied, once for all, to all points of practice in matters of evidence which are regulated by local law.

§ 310. In civil cases. In order to secure the attendance of a witness in civil cases, it is requisite, by Stat. 5, Eliz. c. 9, that he "have tendered to him, according to his countenance or calling, his reasonable charges." Under this statute it is held necessary, in England, that his reasonable expenses, for going to and returning from the trial, and for his reasonable stay at the place, be tendered to him at the time of serving the subpæna; and, if he appears, he is not bound to give evidence until such charges are actually paid or tendered, (a) unless he resides, and is summoned to testify, within the weekly bills of mortality; in which case it is usual to leave a shilling with him upon the delivery of the subpana ticket. These expenses of a witness are allowed pursuant to a seale, graduated according to his situation in life.2(b) But in this country these reasonable expenses are settled by statutes, at a fixed sum for each day's actual attendance, and for each mile's travel, from the residence of the witness 3 (c)

2 Phil. Evid. pp. 375, 376; 2 Tidd's Pr. (9th ed.) p. 806. An additional compensation, for loss of time, was formerly allowed to medical men and attorneys; but that rule is now exploded. But a reasonable compensation paid to a foreign witness, who refused to come without it, and whose attendance was essential in the cause, will in general be allowed and taxed against the losing party. See Lonergan v. Royal Exchange Assurance, 7 Bing. 725; s. c. Id. 729; Collins v. Godefroy, 1 B. & Ad. 950. There is also a distinction between a witness to facts, and a witness selected by a party to give his opinion on a subject with which he is peculiarly conversant from his employment in life. The former is bound, as a matter of public duty, to testify to facts within his knowledge. The latter is under no such obligation; and the party who selects him must pay him for his time, before he will be compelled to testify. Webb v. Page, 1 C. & K. 23. 1 C. & K. 23.

8 It has been held that for witnesses brought from another State, no fees can be

⁽a) Atwood v. Scott, 99 Mass. 177. When it is the practice for the party who summons a witness to produce him for cross-examination if he is notified that the other side wishes to cross-examine (otherwise the witness not appearing again), the fees for this second appearance of the witness must be paid by the party who originally summoned him, not the party cross-examining him. Richards v. Goddard, L. R. 17 Eq. 238.

When, by statute, a party may be summoned as a witness by another party to the suit, he is entitled to witness fees. Penny v. Brink, 75 N. C. 68.

(b) The amount of the witness fees are generally regulated by statute. On this subject see Re Corwin, 6 Abb. N. Cas. 437. Lagrosse v. Curran, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 140.

⁽c) See also Gunnison v. Gunnison, 41 N. H. 121. No travel fee for a witness in a Federal court can be taxed for more than to the place of trial and back, without regard to the employment of the witness, or his rank in life. The sums paid are not alike in all the States, but the principle is believed to be everywhere the same. (d) In some States, it is sufficient to tender to the witness his fees for travel, from his home to the place of trial, and one day's attendance, in order to compel him to appear upon the summons; but in others, the tender must include his fees for travel in returning.4 Neither is the practice uniform in this country, as to the question whether the witness, having appeared, is bound to attend from day to day, until the trial is closed, without the payment of his daily fees; but the better opinion seems to be, that without payment of his fees, he is not bound to submit to an examination. 5 (e) taxed for travel, beyond the line of the State in which the cause is tried. Howland v. Lenox, 4 Johns. 311; Newman v. Atlas Ins. Co., Phillip's Digest, 113; Melvin v. Whiting, 13 Pick. 190; White v. Judd, 1 Met. 293. But the reasons for these decisions are not stated, nor are they very easily perceived. In England, the early practice was to allow all the expenses of bringing over foreign witnesses, incurred in good faith; but a large sum being claimed in one case, an order was made in the Common Pleas that Hagedorn v. Allnut, 3 Taunt. 379. This order was soon afterwards rescinded, and the old practice restored. Cotton v. Witt, 4 Taunt. 55. Since which the uniform course, both in that court and in B. R., has been to allow all the actual expenses of procuring the attendance of the witness, and of his return. Tremain v. Barrett, 6 Taunt. 88; 2 Tidd's Pr. 814; 2 Phil. Evid. 376 (9th ed.). And see Hutchins v. State, 8 Mo.

⁴ The latter is the rule in the courts of the United States. See Conkling's Practice, pp. 265, 266; I.L. U. S. 1799, c. 125 [19] § 6, vol. i. p. 571 (Story's ed.) [1 U. S. Stat. at Large (L. & B.'s ed.), p. 626].

one hundred miles from the place of trial, unless the whole distance is within the district where the case is brought, since the limit of the court's power to summon witnesses ends at that distance. Anonymous, 5 Blatchf. C. C. 134; The Leo, 5 Bened. 486. So when suit is brought in a State court, no mileage fees can be charged beyond the line of the State, for a similar reason. Kingfield v. Pullen, 54 Me. 398; Crawford v. Abraham, 2 Oreg. 163. Contra, Dutcher v. Justices, 38 Ga. 214.

(d) The fees of experts are considerably larger than those of ordinary witnesses. It has been held that the expert may refuse to testify as to his opinion on matters of science or skill till these fees have been paid (Buchman v. State, 59 Ind. 1; Dills v. State, Id. 15), and may refuse to testify as to his opinion at all. Ex parte Roelker, 1 Sprag. 276. In Ex parte Dement, 53 Ala. 389, however, such conduct was held a contempt of court. Re, Working Men's

Mut. Soc., L. R. 21 Ch. D. 831, decides that an auctioneer as a professional witness is entitled to refuse to testify until his fees are paid, including expenses and compensation for time, even after he is sworn. To the same effect, Clark v. Gill, 1 K. & J. 19.

(e) In New Hampshire (Bliss v. Brainard, 42 N. H. 255), it is said the witness, at the end of each day, has the right to return home, if his fees for the next day are not paid upon application to the party summoning him or to his attorney. When witnesses attend in several cases, which are tried together, the taxation of their fees in each of the cases depends upon the good faith of the party procuring their attendance, and the reasonableness of his conduct. It is not impossible that the witness may have both travel and attendance allowed in each case, but in Barker v. Parsons, 145 Mass. 203, it was held that, as all the cases were tried at the same time, the witnesses should be allowed

§ 311. In criminal cases. In criminal cases, no tender of fees is in general necessary, on the part of the government, in order to compel its witnesses to attend; it being the duty of every citizen to obey a call of that description, and it being also a case, in which he is himself, in some sense, a party. But his fees will in general be finally paid from the public treasury. In all such cases, the accused is entitled to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor.2 The payment or tender of fees, however, is not necessary in any case, in order to secure the attendance of the witness, if he has waived it; the provision being solely for his benefit.3 But it is necessary in all civil cases, that the witness be summoned, in order to compel him to testify; for, otherwise, he is not obliged to answer the call, though he be present in court; but in criminal cases, a person present in court, though he have not been summoned, is bound to answer. 4 (a) And where, in criminal cases, the witnesses for the prosecution are bound to attend upon the summons, without the payment or tender of fees, if, from poverty, the witness cannot obey the summons, he will not, as it seems, be guilty of a contempt. 5 (b)

§ 312. When witness is in custody. If a witness is in custody, or is in the military or naval service, and therefore is not at liberty to attend without leave of his superior officer, which he cannot obtain, he may be brought into court to testify by a writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum. This writ is grantable at discretion, on motion in open court, or by any judge, at chambers, who has general authority to issue a writ of habeas corpus.

¹ In New York, witnesses are bound to attend for the State, in all criminal prosecutions, and for the defendant, in any indictment, without any tender or payment of cutions, and for the defendant, in any indictment, without any tender or payment of fees. 2 Rev. In Massachusetts, in capital cases, the prisoner may have process to bring in his witnesses at the expense of the Commonwealth. William's Case, 13 Mass. 501. In England, the court has power to order the payment of fees to witnesses for the crown, in all cases of felony; and, in some cases to allow further compensation. Stat. 18 Geo. application, in civil cases, is made upon affidavit, stating the nature of the suit, and the materiality of the testimony, as the party is advised by his counsel and verily believes, together with the fact and general circumstances of restraint, which call for the issuing of the writ; and if he is not actually a prisoner, it should state his willingness to attend. (a) In criminal cases, no affidavit is deemed necessary on the part of the prosecuting attorney. The writ is left with the sheriff, if the witness is in custody; but if he is in the military or naval service, it is left with the officer in immediate command; to be served, obeyed, and returned, like any other writ of habeas corpus.2 If the witness is a prisoner of war, he cannot be brought up but by an order from the Secretary of State; but a rule may be granted on the adverse party, to show cause why he should not consent either to admit the fact, or that the prisoner should be examined upon interrogatories.3

§ 313. Recognizance. There is another method by which the attendance of witnesses for the government, in criminal cases, is enforced, namely, by recognizance. This is the usual course upon all examinations, where the party accused is committed, or is bound over for trial. And any witness, whom the magistrate may order to recognize for his own appearance at the trial, if he refuses so to do, may be committed. (b) Sureties are not usually demanded, though they may be required, at the magistrate's discretion; but if they cannot be obtained by the witness, when required, his own recognizance must be taken.4

§ 314. Time of service of subpæna. The service of a subpæna upon a witness ought always to be made in a reasonable time before trial, to enable him to put his affairs in such order, that his attendance upon the court may be as little detrimental as possible to his interest. 5 On this principle, a summons in the morning to attend in the afternoon of the same day has been held insufficient. though the witness lived in the same town, and very near to the place of trial. In the United States, the reasonableness of the time is generally fixed by statute, requiring an allowance of one day for every certain number of miles distance from the witness's residence to the place of trial; and this is usually twenty miles. But at least one day's notice is deemed necessary, however inconsiderable the distance may be. $^{6}(a)$

§ 315. Manner of service. As to the manner of service, in order to compel the attendance of the witness, it should be personal, since, otherwise, he cannot be chargeable with a contempt in not appearing upon the summons. The subpæna is plainly of no force beyond the jurisdictional limits of the court in which the action is pending, and from which it issued; but the courts of the United States, sitting in any district, are empowered by statute, $^{2}(b)$ to send subpænas for witnesses into any other district, provided that, in civil causes, the witness do not live at a greater distance than one hundred miles from the place of trial.3

(b) This applies to proceedings in bank-

Lors Pr. 497.

In some of the United States, as well as in England, a subpœna ticket, which is a copy of the writ, or more properly a statement of its substance, duly certified, is delivered to the witness, at the same time that the writ is shown to him. 1 Paine & Duer's Pr. 496; 1 Tidd's Pr. 806; 1 Stark. Ev. 77; Phil. & Am. on Evid. 781, 782; 2 Phil. Evid. 373. But the general practice is believed to be, either to show the subpæna to the witness, or to serve him with an attested copy. The writ, being directed to the witness himself, may be shown or delivered to him by a private person, and the service proved by affidavit; or it may be served by the sheriff's officer, and proved by by sofficial veture. his official return.

8 In most of the States, there are provisions by statute for taking the depositions of witnesses who live more than a specified number of miles from the place of trial. But these regulations are made for the convenience of the parties, and do not absolve the witness from the obligation of personal attendance at the court, at whatever distance it be holden, if he resides within its jurisdiction, and is duly summoned. In Georgia, the depositions of females may be taken in all civil cases. Rev. St. 1815 (by Hotchkiss), p. 586.

is not necessary to protection, if the witness have consented to go without one; nor is a writ of protection essential for this purpose; its principal use being to prevent the trouble of an arrest and an application for discharge, by showing it to the arresting officer; and sometimes, especially where a writ of protection is shown, to subject the officer to punishment, for contempt. 2 (a) Preventing, or using means to prevent, a witness from attending court, who has been duly summoned, is also punishable as a contempt of court.3 On the same principle, it is deemed as a contempt to serve process upon a witness, even by summons, if it be done in the immediate or constructive presence of the court upon which he is attending; 4 though any service elsewhere without personal restraint, it seems, is good. But this freedom from arrest is a personal privilege, which the party may waive; and if he willingly submits himself to the custody of the officer, he cannot afterwards object to the imprisonment, as unlawful.⁵ The privilege of exemption from arrest does not extend through the whole sitting or term of the court at which the witness is summoned to attend; but it continues during the space of time necessarily and reasonably employed in going to the place of trial, staving there until the trial is ended, and returning home again. In making this allowance of time, the courts are disposed to be liberal; but unreasonable loitering and deviation from the way will not be permitted. (b) But a witness is not privileged

(b) Seaver v. Robinson, 3 Duer (N. Y.), 622. The reason for this rule regarding witnesses, as generally given, is that, as they cannot be compelled to leave their own State, they should, as far as possible, be encouraged to voluntarily come into the State where the action is pending, and give their testimony in open court. And this protection extends as well to parties as to witnesses, and therefore a party to a suit, who lives in another State and comes suit, who lives in another State and comes to defend his case and to testify therein as a witness in his own behalf, is protected from arrest, and from the service of civil process. Wilson v. Donaldson, 117 Ind. 356; Dungan v. Miller, 37 N. J. L. 182. And further, the weight of authority in this country is that a resident of another State or country, who has in good faith come into this State as a witness to give evidence in a cause here, is exempt from service with process for the commencement of a civil action against him. This privilege protects him in coming, staying, and in returning, provided he acts bona fide, in returning, provided he acts bona full, and without unreasonable delay. Sherman v. Gundlach, 37 Minn. 118; Person v. Grier, 66 N. Y. 124; Matthews v. Tufts, 87 N. Y. 568; In re Healey, 53 Vt. 694; Mitchell v. Judge, 53 Mich. 541; s. c. sub. nom., Mitchell v. Wixon, 19 N. W. J. L. 182. The reasons for exempting a non-resident witness from arrest also apply in favor of exempting him from the service of a summons in a civil action. Walpole v. Alexander, 3 Doug. 45. In some States this rule has

§ 319. Neglect of witness to attend contempt. Where a witness has been duly summoned, and his fees paid or tendered, or the payment or the tender waived, if he wilfully neglects to appear, he is guilty of a contempt of the process of court, and may be proceeded against by an attachment. (a) It has sometimes been held necessary that the cause should be called on for trial, the jury sworn, and the witness called to testify; but the better opinion is, that the witness is to be deemed guilty of contempt, whenever it is distinctly shown that he is absent from court with intent to disobey the writ of subpæna; and that the calling of him in court is of no other use than to obtain clear evidence of his having neglected to appear; but that is not necessary, if it can be clearly shown by other means that he has disobeyed the order of court. 3(b) An attachment for contempt proceeds not upon the ground of any damage sustained by an individual, but is instituted to vindicate the dignity of the court; 4 and it is said, that it must be a perfectly clear case to call for the exercise of this extraordinary jurisdiction.⁵ The motion for an attachment should therefore be brought forward as soon as possible, and the party applying must show, by affidavits or otherwise, that the subpæna was seasonably and personally served on the witness, that his fees were paid or tendered, or the tender expressly waived, been extended to include a witness who has merely come from another county in the same State. Christian v. Williams, 35 Mo. App. 303. Thus in New York, the practice has been, where the party claiming the privilege was a resident of the State, to discharge him from arrest on filing common bail, and where he was a non-resident of the State to set exide the non-resident of the State, to set aside the service of the process absolutely. Norris v. Beach, 2 Johns. (N. Y.), 294. But in Person v. Grier, 66 N. Y. 124, this distinction was not approved, and in other States the protection of the rule extended to persons resident in the State who are served with civil process while attending a judicial proceeding as a party or as a witness in a jurisdiction other than that in which they are ordinarily suable. Mitchell v. Judge, 53 Mich. 541; Andrews v. Lembeck, 46 Ohio St. 38; Palmer v. Rowen, 21 Neb. 452. In Massey v. Colville, 45 N. J. L. 119, the privilege was secured to the defendant by changing the venue to the county of his residence.

(a) Green v. State, 17 Fla. 669.
(b) The sheriff's return on a writ of subpæna, that the witness wilfully refused to permit the writ to be served on him, and refused, with knowledge of its nature, to obey it, is sufficient proof to justify the attachment for contempt. Wilson v. State, 57 Ind. 71.

and that everything has been done which was necessary to call for his attendance. But if it appears that the testimony of the witness could not have been material, the rule for an attachment will not be granted. (c) If a case of palpable contempt is shown, such as an express and positive refusal to attend, the court will grant an attachment in the first instance; otherwise, the usual course is to grant a rule to show cause.8 It is hardly necessary to add, that if a witness, being present in court, refuses to be sworn or to testify, he is guilty of contempt. In all cases of contempt the punishment is by fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court. 9 (d)

§ 320. Depositions. If the witness resides abroad, out of the jurisdiction, and refuses to attend, or is sick and unable to attend, his testimony can be obtained only by taking his deposition before a magistrate, or before a commissioner duly authorized by an order of the court where the cause is pending; and if the commissioner is not a judge or magistrate, it is usual to require that he be first sworn. This method of obtaining testimony from witnesses, in a foreign country, has always been familiar in the courts of admiralty; but it is also deemed to be within the inherent powers of all courts of justice. For, by the law of nations, courts of justice, of different countries, are bound mutually to aid and assist each other, for the furtherance of justice; and able to attend to some other matter before he goes to court. Jackson v. Seager, 2 D. & L. 13. If, however, it appears that the witness intentionally defied the process of the court, the fact that his evidence would have been immaterial will not release him from the liability to attachment. Chapman v. Davis, 3 M. & G. 609; Scholes v. Hilton, 10 M. & W. 16; apparently overruling Tinley v. Porter, 5 Dowl. 744, and Taylor v. Willans, 4 M. & P. 59.

Cummins, 1 Yeates, 1; Conkling's Pr. 265; 1 Paine & Duer's Pr. 500; 2 Tidd's Pr. 807, 808. The party injured by the non-attendance of a witness has also his remedy, by action on the case for damages, at common law; and a further remedy, by action of debt, is given by Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 9; but these are deemed foreign to the object of this work.

Corbett v. Gibson, 16 Blatchf. C. C. 334. If the witness has reasonable ground to believe that he will not be wanted at the trial (Reg. v. Sloman, 1 Dowl. 618); or has been excused by the attorney of the party who summoned him (Farrah v. Keat, 6 Dowl. 470); or is too poor (2 Ph. Ev. 383), — no attachment will lie. But a witness who is duly summoned takes the witness who is duly summoned takes the risk if he does not attend so early as he might under the summons, thinking to be hence, when the testimony of a foreign witness is necessary, the court before which the action is pending may send to the court within whose jurisdiction the witness resides, a writ, either patent or close, usually termed a letter rogatory, or a commission sub mutuæ vicissitudinis obtentu ac in juris subsidium, from those words contained in it. By this instrument, the court abroad is informed of the pendency of the cause, and the names of the foreign witnesses, and is requested to cause their depositions to be taken in due course of law, for the furtherance of justice; with an offer, on the part of the tribunal making the request, to do the like for the other, in a similar case. (a) The writ or commission is usually accompanied by interrogatories, filed by the parties on each side, to which the answers of the witnesses The commission is executed by the judge, who receives it, either by calling the witness before himself, or by the intervention of a commissioner for that purpose; and the original answers, duly signed and sworn to by the deponent, and properly authenticated, are returned with the commission to the court from which it issued.² The court of chancery has always freely exercised this power, by a commission, either directed to foreign it to letters rogatory to the foreign court. (a) When the statutory commission to examine a witness in a foreign country Froude v. Froude, 3 Thomp. & C. 79. appears to be sufficient, the courts prefer magistrates, by their official designation, or more usually, to individuals by name; which latter course, the peculiar nature of its jurisdiction and proceedings enables it to induce the parties to adopt, by consent, where any doubt exists as to its inherent authority. The courts of common law in England seem not to have asserted this power in a direct manner, and of their own authority; but have been in the habit of using indirect means, to coerce the adverse party into a consent to the examination of witnesses, who were absent in foreign countries, under a commission for that purpose. These means of coercion were various; such as putting off the trial, or refusing to enter judgment, as in case of nonsuit, if the defendant was the recusant party; or by a stay of proceedings, till the party applying for the commission could have recourse to a court of equity, by instituting a new suit there, auxiliary to the suit at law.3 But, subsequently, the learned judges appear not to have been satisfied that it was proper for them to compel a party, by indirect means, to do that which they had no authority to compel him to do directly; and they accordingly refused to put off a trial for that purpose.4 This inconvenience was therefore remedied by statutes 5 which provide that, in all cases of the absence of witnesses, whether by sickness, or travelling out of the jurisdiction, or residence abroad, the courts, in their discretion, for the due administration of justice, may cause the witnesses to be examined under a commission issued for that purpose. (b) In general, the examination is

27 W. R. 225. In Castelli v. Groom, 12 Eng. Law & Eq. 426 (16 Jur. 888), it was held that the court would not exercise its discretion to grant the commission to examine parties to the action under 1 W. IV. c. 22, unless it is shown, by the party applying therefor, that it is necessary to the due administration of justice; and that it is not enough to show that the plaintiff or defendant lives out of the jurisdiction of the court; Lord Campbell, C. J., saying, "it would lead to most vexatious consequences, if constant recourse could be had to this power; and it would be so, in all cases where the parties wished to avoid the process of examination here." § 321. Same subject. In the United States, provisions have existed in the statutes of the several States, from a very early period, for the taking of depositions to be used in civil actions in the courts of law, in all cases where the personal attendance of the witness could not be had, by reason of siekness or other inability to attend; and also in cases where the witness is about to sail on a foreign voyage, or to take a journey out of the jurisdiction, and not to return before the time of trial. (a) Similar provisions have also been made in many of the United States for taking the depositions of witnesses in perpetuam rei memoriam, without the aid of a court of equity, in eases where no action is pending. In these latter cases there is some diversity in the statutory provisions, in regard to the magistrates before whom the depositions may be taken, and in regard to some of the modes of proceeding, the details of which are not within the scope of this treatise. It may suffice to state that, generally, notice must be previously given to all persons known to be interested in the sub-

In regard, also, to the other class of depositions, namely, those taken in civil causes, under the statutes alluded to, there are similar diversities in the forms of pro-In some of the States, the judges of the courts of law are empowered to issue commissions, at chambers, in their discretion, for the examination of witnesses unable or not compellable to attend, from any cause whatever. In others, though with the like diversities in form, the party himself may, on application to any magistrate, cause the deposition of any witness to be taken, who is situated as described in the acts. In their essential features these statutes are nearly alike; and these features may be collected from that part of the judiciary Act of the United States, and its supplements, which regulate this subject. 1 By that act, when the testimony of a person is necessary in any civil cause, pending in a court of the United States, and the person lives more than a hundred miles 2 from the place of trial, or is bound on a voyage to sea, or is about to go out of the United States, or out of the district, and more than that distance from the place of trial, or is ancient, or very infirm, his deposition may be taken de bene esse, before any judge of any court of the United States, or before any chancellor or judge of any superior court of a State, or any judge of a county court, or court of common pleas, or any mayor or chief magistrate of any city 3 in the United States, not being of counsel, nor interested in the suit; provided that a notification from the magistrate before whom the deposition is to be taken, to the adverse party, to be present at the taking, and put interrogatories, if he think fit, be first served on him or his attorney, as either may be nearest, if either is within a hundred miles of the place of caption; allowing time, after the service of the notification, not less than at the rate of one day, Sundays

(a) The witness is to be carefully examined and cautioned, and sworn or affirmed to testify the whole truth, 5 and must subscribe the testimony by him given, after it has been reduced to writing by the magistrate, or by the deponent in his presence. The deposition so taken must be retained by the magistrate, until he shall deliver it with his own hand into the court for which it is taken; or it must, together with a certificate of the causes or reasons for taking it, as above specified, and of the notice, if any, given to the adverse party, be by the magistrate sealed up, directed to the court, and remain under his seal until it is opened in court.6 And such

Carrington v. Stimson, 1 Curtis, Ct. Ct. 437. The magistrate in his return need not state the distance of the place of residence of the party or his attorney from the place where the deposition was taken. Voce v. Lawrence, 4 McLean, 203. To ascertain the proper notice in point of time to be given to the adverse party, the distance must be reckoned from the party's residence to the place of caption. Porter v. Pillsbury, 36 Me. 278. Where the certificate states simply that the adverse party was not personally present, a copy of the notice, and of the return of service thereof, should be annexed; and if it is not annexed, and it does not distinctly appear that the adverse party was present either in person or by counsel, the deposition will be rejected. Carlton v. Patterson, 9 Foster, 580; see also Bowman v. Sanborn, 5 ld. 87.

5 Where the State statute requires that the deponent shall be sworn to testify to the truth, the whole truth, &c., "relating to the cause for which the deposition is to be taken," the omission of the magistrate in his certificate to state that the witness was so sworn, makes the deposition inadmissible; and the defect is not cured by the addition that "after giving the deposition he was duly sworn thereto according to law." (a) It is held that notice to take depositions, while the other party is taking depositions in the same case in another depositions in the same case in another place is insufficient, as he cannot be in both places at once (Collins v. Richart, 14 Bush (Ky.), 621); but if he attends at both places by counsel it waives this defect. He should attend at one, and object to the depositions taken at the other (Latham v. Latham, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 307), and then the denositions of such witnesses and then the depositions of such witnesses as he was unable to cross-examine will be suppressed by the court. Cole v. Hall, 131

(b) A certificate by the magistrate that the witness was "duly sworn" is sufficient (Gulf City Insurance Co. v. Stephens, 51 Ala. 121); so if the caption states that the witness was affirmed by him according to law, for this implies an objection by the witness to swearing (Horne v. Haverhill, 113 Mass. 344); but if the caption hill, 113 Mass. 344); but it the caption omits the words "severally make oath and say," or "make oath," or "before me," the deposition is inadmissible. are taken and written on several different sheets of paper, and these are then fastened together by the magistrate and signed by him in due form, it seems that these several papers form one continuous whole, and the signature of the magistrate at the end is sufficient for them all. Reg. v. Parker, L. R. 1 C. C. Res. 225; 39 L. J. M. C.

(d) Under a commission issued legally for taking testimony of witnesses in a for-eign country or in a different State, the magistrate to whom the commission is directed, and who executes it, may compel the attendance of the witness, and enforce it by commitment for contempt of court if the witness refuses to answer, —provided the magistrate has such powers vested in him by the laws of the State in which he acts. State v. Ingerson, 62 N. H. 438; Burnham v. Stevens, 33 N. H. 247; State v. Towle, 42 H. H. 540. The magistrate may also adjourn the hearing for necessary cause, i. e. the sickness of the witness, to another time or place than that named in the commission, even though the other party is not present at the place notified in the caption of the deposition, and therefore does not receive notice of the adjournment. Lowd v. Bowers, 64 N. H. 1.

(e) But where, in a criminal trial, it was proved that though the prisoner was present when the deposition was taken, he did not have an opportunity to fully crossexamine the deponent, the deposition was excluded. Reg. v. Peacock, 12 Cox, Cr. Ca. 21. Judge Shaw, in Fuller v. Rice, 4 Gray (Mass.), 343, says, "No general rule can be laid down in respect to unfinished testimony. If substantially complete, and the witness is prevented by sickness or death from finishing his testimony, whether viva voce or by deposition, it ought not to be rejected, but submitted to the jury with such observations as the particular circumstances may require. But if not substantially complete it must be rejected.

(f) Gardner v. Bennett, 38 N. Y. Superior Ct. 197. The question in each instance whether the witness is so disabled from travelling, is a question for the Court. It has been held that pregnancy may be such an illness, that, if it disabled the woman from travelling, her deposition might be read (Reg. v. Wellings, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 426; Reg. v. Heesom, 14 Cox, Cr. Ca. 40); but mere weakness resulting from old age and nervousness, if it does not amount to actual physical disability to testify, is not such illness. Reg. v. Farrell, L. R. 2 Cr. Ca. Res. 116; 43 L. J. M. C. 94; 12 Cox, Cr. Ca. 605; Reg. v. Thompson, 13 Cox, Cr. Ca. 181. The evidence of seamen taken by deposition is admissible when it is proved that the vessel they are on is at sea. Reg. v. Stewart, 13 Cox, Cr. Ca. 296. A subpena, signed by a justice of peace for the county, directed to the witness, and summoning him to appear to testify, with a return thereon signed by a constable of the town where the witness lived, certifying that he had made diligent inquiries and search for witness and could not find him, is sufficient proof of his absence. Kinney v. Berran, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 394.

The provisions of this act being in derogation of the common law, it has been held that they must be strictly complied with. (a) But if it appears on the face of the deposition, or the certificate which accompanies it, that the magistrate before whom it was taken was duly authorized, within the statute, it is sufficient, in the first instance, without any other proof of his authority; 2(b) and his certificate will be good evidence of all the facts therein

1 Bell v. Morrison, 1 Peters, 355; The "Thomas & Henry" v. United States, 1 Brockenbrough, 367; Nelson v. United States, 1 Peters, C. C. 235. The use of exparte depositions, taken without notice, under this statute, is not countenanced by the courts, where or independent of a proposal interest of the courts. the courts, where evidence of a more satisfactory character can be obtained. The views of the learned judges on this subject have been thus expressed by Mr. Justice Grier: "While we are on this subject, it will not be improper to remark, that when the act of Congress of 1789 was passed, permitting ex parte depositions, without notice, to be taken where the witness resides more than a hundred miles from the place of trial, such a provision may have been necessary. It then required nearly as much time, labor, and expense to travel one hundred miles as it does now to travel one thousand. Now testimony may be taken and returned from California, or any part of Europe, Mountains in two or three months, and in any of the States east of the Rocky Mountains in two or three weeks. There is now seldom any necessity for having recourse to this mode of taking testimony. Besides, it is contrary to the course of the common law; and, except in cases of mere formal proof (such as the signature or execution of an instrument of uniform proof and of an instrument of writing), or of some isolated fact (such as demand of a bill, or notice to an indorser), testimony thus taken is liable to great abuse. At best, it is calculated to elicit only such a partial statement of the truth as may have the effect of entire falsehood. The person who prepares the witness, and examines him, can generally have so much or so little of the truth, or such a version of it, as will suit his case. In closely contested cases of fact, testimony thus obtained must always be unsatisfactory and liable to suspicion, especially if the party has had time and opportunity to take it in the regular way. This provision of the Act of Congress should never be resorted to unless in circumstances of absolute necessity, or in the excepted cases we have just mentioned." See Walsh v. Rogers, 13 How. S. C. 286, 287.

Morris, 5 McLean, 4. See also Wilkinson v. Yale, 6 McLean, 16. Where it is made the duty of the magistrate taking a deposition to certify the reason for taking it, his certificate of the cause of taking is prima facie proof of the fact, and renders the deposition admissible unless it is controlled by other evidence. West Boylston v. Sterling, 17 Pick. 126; Littlehale v. Dix, 11 Cush. 365. Nor is it necessary that it should appear by the deposition or the certificate in what manner, or by what evidence the magistrate was satisfied of the existence of the cause of the taking. It is enough if he certifies to the fact upon his official responsibility. Thus, where the magistrate duly certified that the deponent lived more than thirty miles from the place of trial, no evidence being offered to control the certificate, and the court not being bound to take judicial notice of the distance of one place from another, it was held that the deposition was rightly admitted. Littlehale v. Dix, ubi supra. Where the magistrate certifies that the "cause assigned by the plaintiff," who was the party taking the deposition, for taking the same, was the deponent's being about to leave the Commonwealth, and not to return in time for the trial, it is proper that such party should show that the cause existed at the time of the trial. Curtis v. Central Railroad, 6 McLean, 401. A few cases are added, illustrating the rules of law and the practice of the courts, in regard to admitting or rejecting depositions. Depositions of several witnesses, taken under one commission on one set of interrogatories, a part of which only are to be propounded to each witness, can be used in evidence. Fowler v. Merrill, 11 How. (U. S.) 375. If the words "before me," preceding the name of the magistrate before whom the deposition was taken and sworn, be omitted in the caption, the deposition is not admissible. Powers v. Shepard, 21 N. H. 60. Where one party takes a deposition on interrogatories, or portions of a deposition, for the purpose of meeting the testimony of a witness who has deposed, or testimony which he may expect the other party will produce, but does not intend to use the answers thereto, unless the other testimony is introduced, he must accompany the interrogatories with a distinct notice in writing that his purpose is merely to meet the testimony of his adversary's witness or witnesses; and if this is not done, the answers must be read to the jury if required by the other party. This is the most eligible rule in such cases, and will save to each party all his just rights, and prevent all unfairness and surprise. By Metcalf, J., in Linfield, v. Old Colony R. R. Corp., 10 Cych. 570. See McKelyna De Welfer. 10 Cush. 570. See McKelvy v. De Wolfe, 20 Pa. St. 374. A deposition taken under a commission duly issued on "inter-rogatories to be put to M. H. B., of Janesville, Wisconsin, laborer," but which purports by its caption to be the deposition of M. H. B., of Sandusky, Ohio, and in which the deponent states his occupation to be that of pedler, is admissible in evidence, notwithstanding the variance, if it appears that the deponent is the same person to whom the interrogatories are addressed. Smith v. Castles, 1 Gray, 108. The questions appended to a commission sent to Bremen were in English; the conmissioners returned the answers in German, annexed to a German translation of the questions; the commission was objected to on the ground that the return should have been in English, or accompanied by an English translation; but the objection was overruled; and a sworn interpreter was permitted to translate the answers viva voce to the jury. Kuhtman v. Brown, 4 Rich. 479. Where a deposition is taken by a magistrate in another State, under a written agreement that it may be so taken upon the interrogatories and cross-interrogatories annexed to the agreement, such agreement operates only as a substitute for a commission to the magistrate named therein, and a waiver of objections to the interrogatories in point of form, and does not deprive either party of the right to object, at the trial, to the interrogatories and answers, as proving facts by incompetent evidence. Atlantic Mutual Ins. Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 2 Gray, 279; Lord v. Moore, 37 Me. 208. And to exclude the deposition on the ground of the interest of the deponent, it is not necessary that the objection should be taken before the magistrate. Whitney v. Heywood, 6 Cush. 82; infra, § 421, n. Where the witness was interested at the time his deposition was taken, and a release to him was afterwards executed, the deposition was not admitted. Reed v. Rice, 25 Vt. 171; Ellis v. Smith, 10 Ga. 253. If the deponent is disqualified by reason of interest at the time of giving his deposition, and at the time of the trial the disqualification has been removed by statute, the deposition can be used in evidence. Haynes v. Rowe, 40 Mc. 181. Where, after the deposition is taken, he becomes interested in the event of the suit, by no act of his own, or of the party who offers his testimony, the deposition is admissible. Sabine v. Strong, 6 Met. 270. As to the time when objections to the admission of depositions should be made, it is held that any objection based on a defect or irregularity in the manner of taking the deposition, and which might be remedied by retaking the deposition, should be made as soon as the party objecting finds out the defect, and this will the authority of an act of Congress, the deposition of a witness is taken de bene esse, the party producing the deposition must show affirmatively that his inability to procure the personal attendance of the witness still continues; or, in other words, that the cause of taking the deposition remains in force. But this rule is not applied to cases where the witness resides more than a hundred miles from the place of trial, he being beyond the reach of compulsory process. If he resided beyond that distance when the deposition was taken, it is presumed that he continues so to do, until the party opposing its admission shows that he has removed within the reach of a $subp \alpha na.$ ⁴

§ 324. Depositions in perpetuam. By the act of Congress already cited, the power of the courts of the United States, as courts of common law, to grant a dedimus potestatem to take depositions, whenever it may be necessary, in order to prevent a failure or delay of justice, is expressly recognized; and the circuit courts, when sitting as courts of equity, are empowered to direct depositions to be taken in perpetuam rei memoriam, according to the usages in chancery, where the matters to which they relate are cognizable in those courts. A later statute has facilitated the taking of depositions in the former of these cases, by providing that when a commission shall be issued by a court of the United States, for taking the testimony of a witness, at any place within the United States, or the territories thereof, the clerk of any court of the United States, for the district or territory where the place may be, may issue a subpæna for the attendance of the wit-

Barnum, 42 Md. 251; Vilmar v. Schall, 61 N. Y. 564. If a party, knowing of such defect, wait till the trial before objecting to the deposition, he will be held to have waived the objection. His proper course is to move to suppress the deposition. See cases supra. It is held that if the party taking a deposition does not introduce it in evidence, this fact is admissible in evidence and may be argued upon by the other counsel as tending to show that the evidence in the deposition is not favorable to the party who took it. On the other hand, the party who took it cannot give evidence that the deponent testified differently in the deposition from statements he had previously made to the party who took his deposition, since the truthfulness of the deponent is not in issue in the case, his deposition not being in evidence. ness before the commissioner, provided the place be in the county where the witness resides, and not more than forty miles from his dwelling. And if the witness, being duly summoned, shall neglect or refuse to appear, or shall refuse to testify, any judge of the same court, upon proof of such contempt, may enforce obedience, or punish the disobedience, in the same manner as the courts of the United States may do, in case of disobedience to their own process of subpana ad testificandum. Some of the States have made provision by law for the taking of depositions, to be used in suits pending in other States, by bringing the deponent within the operation of their own statutes against perjury; and national comity plainly requires the enactment of similar provisions in all civilized countries. But as yet they are far from being universal; and whether, in the absence of such provision, false swearing in such case is punishable as perjury, has been gravely doubted.3 Where the production of papers is required, in the case of examinations under commissions issued from courts of the United States, any judge of a court of the United States may, by the same statute, order the clerk to issue a subpæna duces tecum requiring the witness to produce such papers to the commissioner, upon the affidavit of the applicant to his belief that the witness possesses the papers, and that they are material to his case; and may enforce the obedience and punish the disobedience of the witness, in the manner above stated.

§ 325. Same subject. But independently of statutory provisions, chancery has power to sustain bills, filed for the purpose of preserving the evidence of witnesses in perpetuam rei memoriam, touching any matter which cannot be immediately investigated in a court of law, or where the evidence of a material witness is likely to be lost, by his death, or departure from the jurisdiction, or by any other cause, before the facts can be judicially investigated. The defendant, in such cases, is compelled to appear and answer, and the cause is brought to issue, and a commission for the examination of the witnesses is made out, executed, and returned in the same manner as in other cases; but no relief being prayed, the suit is never brought to a hearing; nor will the court ordinarily permit the publication of the depositions, except in support of a suit or action; nor then, unless the witnesses are dead, or otherwise incapable of attending to be examined.1

OF THE COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES.

§ 326. Competency of evidence. Although, in the ordinary affairs of life, temptations to practise deceit and falsehood may be comparatively few, and therefore men may ordinarily be disposed to believe the statements of each other; yet, in judicial investigations, the motives to pervert the truth and to perpetrate falsehood and fraud are so greatly multiplied, that if statements were received with the same undiscriminating freedom as in private life, the ends of justice could with far less certainty be attained. In private life, too, men can inquire and determine for themselves whom they will deal with, and in whom they will confide; but the situation of judges and jurors renders it difficult, if not impossible, in the narrow compass of a trial, to investigate the character of witnesses; and from the very nature of judicial proceedings, and the necessity of preventing the multiplication of issues to be tried, it often may happen that the testimony of a witness, unworthy of credit, may receive as much consideration as that of one worthy of the fullest confidence. no means were employed totally to exclude any contaminating influences from the fountains of justice, this evil would constantly occur. But the danger has always been felt, and always guarded against, in all civilized countries. And while all evidence is open to the objection of the adverse party, before it is admitted, it has been found necessary to the ends of justice, that certain kinds of evidence should be uniformly excluded.1

§ 327. Same subject. In determining what evidence shall be admitted and weighed by the jury, and what shall not be received at all, or, in other words in distinguishing between competent and incompetent witnesses, a principle seems to have been applied similar to that which distinguishes between conclusive and disputable presumptions of law, 2 namely, the experienced connection between the situation of the witness, and the truth or falsity of his testimony. Thus, the law excludes as incompetent, those persons whose evidence, in general, is found more likely than otherwise to mislead juries; receiving and weighing the testimony of others, and giving to it that degree of credit which it is found on examination to deserve. It is obviously impossible that any test of credibility can be infallible. All that can be done is to approximate to such a degree of certainty as will ordinarily meet the justice of the case. The question is not, whether any rule of exclusion may not sometimes shut out credible testimony; but whether it is expedient that there should be any rule of exclusion at all. If the purposes of justice require that the decision of causes should not be embarrassed by statements generally found to be deceptive, or totally false, there must be some rule designating the class of evidence to be excluded; and in this case, as in determining the ages of discretion, and of majority, and in deciding as to the liability of the wife, for crimes committed in company with the husband, and in numerous other instances, the common law has merely followed the common experience of mankind. It rejects the testimony (1) of parties; (2) of persons deficient in undertanding; (3) of persons insensible to the obligations of an oath; and (4) of persons whose pecuniary interest is directly involved in the matter in issue; not because they may not sometimes state the truth, but because it would ordinarily be unsafe to rely on their testimony.² Other causes concur, in some of these cases, to render the persons incompetent, which will be mentioned in their proper places. We shall now proceed to consider, in their order, each of these classes of persons, held incompetent to testify; adding some observations on certain descriptions of persons, held incompetent in particular cases. [Ed. Since the author wrote the text of this treatise, a wide-spread change has taken place in the rules as to the competency of witnesses.

^{2 &}quot;If it be objected, that interest in the matter in dispute might, from the bias it creates, be an exception to the credit, but that it ought not to be absolutely so to the competency, any more than the friendship or enmity of a party, whose evidence is offered, towards either of the parties in the cause, or many other considerations hereafter to be intimated; the general answer may be this, that in point of authority no distinction is more absolutely settled; and in point of theory, the existence of a direct interest is capable of being precisely proved; but its influence on the mind is of a nature not to discover itself to the jury; whence it hath been held expedient to adopt a general exception, by which witnesses so circumstanced are free from temptation, and the cause not exposed to the hazard of the very doubtful estimate, what quantity of interest in the question, in proportion to the character of the witness, in any instance, leaves his testimony entitled to belief. Some, indeed, are incapable of being biassed even latently by the greatest interest; many would betray the most solemn obligation and public confidence for an interest very inconsiderable. An universal exclusion, where no line short of this could have been drawn, preserves infirmity from a snare, and integrity from suspicion: and keeps the current of evidence, thus far at least, clear and uninfected." 1 Gilb. Evid. by Lofft, pp. 223, 224.

Statutes have been passed in nearly all the United States admitting as competent witnesses, persons disqualified at common law, in most eases the disqualifying characteristic being by the same statute made admissible to affect the credibility of the witness. These enabling statutes relate generally to the persons included in classes (1) and (4) of the author's preceding paragraph, to wit, parties to the suit and persons whose pecuniary interest is directly involved in the matter in issue, but a class which the author includes in his class (3), namely, persons rendered incompetent at common law by conviction of infamous crimes have also been rendered competent by statute in many States, this conviction now going to the credibility of the witness and not to his competeney. Still further, in several States, those who formerly were incompetent from lack of sufficient religious belief, are now rendered competent. Further discussion of these changes will be had in the succeeding sections as the topics occur seriatim in §§ 329, 334, 372, and vol. iii. § 39 a.]

§ 328. Evidence must have the sanction of an oath. But here it is proper to observe, that one of the main provisions of the law, for securing the purity and truth of oral evidence, is, that it be delivered under the sanction of an oath. Men in general are sensible of the motives and restraints of religion, and acknowledge their accountability to that Being, from whom no secrets are hid. In a Christian country, it is presumed that all the members of the community entertain the common faith, and are sensible to its influences; and the law founds itself on this presumption, while, in seeking for the best attainable evidence of every fact, in controversy, it lays hold on the conscience of the witness by this act of religion; namely, a public and solemn appeal to the Supreme Being for the truth of what he may utter. "The administration of an oath supposes that a moral and religious accountability is felt to a Supreme Being, and this is the sanction which the law requires upon the conscience, before it admits him to testify."1 An oath is ordinarily defined to be a solemn invocation of the vengeance of the Deity upon the witness, if he do not declare the whole truth as far as he knows it; 2 or, a religious asseveration

2 1 Stark. Evid. 22. The force and utility of this sanction were familiar to the Romans from the earliest times. The solemn oath was anciently taken by this formula, the witness holding a flint-stone in his right hand: "Si sciens fallo, tum me Diespiter, salva urbe arceque, bonis ejiciat, ut ego hane lapidem." Adam's Ant. 247; Cic. Fam. Ep. vii. 1, 12; 12 Law Mag. (Lond.) 272. The early Christians refused to utter any impresation whatever. by which a person renounces the mercy and imprecates the vengeance of Heaven, if he do not speak the truth.3 But the correctness of this view of the nature of an oath has been justly questioned by a late writer,4 on the ground that the imprecatory clause is not essential to the true idea of an oath, nor to the attainment of the object of the law in requiring this solemnity. The design of the oath is not to call the attention of God to man; but the attention of man to God; — not to call on Him to punish the wrong-doer; but on man to remember that He will. this is all which the law requires is evident from the statutes in regard to Quakers, Moravians, and other classes of persons, conscientiously scrupulous of testifying under any other sanction, and of whom, therefore, no other declaration is required. Accordingly, an oath has been well defined, by the same writer, to be "an outward pledge, given by the juror" (or person taking it,) "that his attestation or promise is made under an immediate sense of his responsibility to God." 5 A security to this extent, for the truth of testimony, is all that the law seems to have deemed necessary; and with less security than this, it is believed that the purposes of justice cannot be accomplished.

§ 329. Parties to the record. And, first, in regard to parties, the general rule of the common law is, that a party to the record, in a civil suit, cannot be a witness either for himself, or for a cosuitor in the cause. 1(a) [Ed. This rule, as was above stated,

(a) The general rule now is that parties intention, show wide differences in the the record of a suit are competent wit-main features of the legislation. to the record of a suit are competent witnesses in the suit, the fact of their being parties affecting only their credibility. The fact that a person offered as a witness is interested in the result of the suit (see infra, §§ 386-430) is also now made by statute an objection to his credibility, not to his competency. Both of these changes in the common law are generally combined in one statute, and therefore will be considered together in this note. The statutes, while being similar in their general

An outline of the principal differences in these statutes is as follows: In a few States, parties and persons interested in the suit are made competent witnesses without any exceptions. In many States, an important exception is made, i. e. when one of the parties to a transaction or conversation has, before the trial of the case, become insane or died, since it then becomes plainly impossible to procure his testimony to the transaction or conversa-

tion, it has been thought advisable to prevent the other party from testifying as to that transaction; c. g. in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 858, it is provided that in actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians in which judgment may be given for or against them, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by the testator, intestate, or ward, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party, or required to testify thereto by the court. This form of the rule makes a party incompetent only for certain purposes. The more general form of the same rule makes the party or person interested in the result of the suit incompetent generally. Thus, in Illinois (Rev. Stat. 1880, c. 51), it is enacted that no party to a civil suit, or person directly interested in the event, shall be allowed to testify voluntarily in his own behalf when any adverse party sues or defends as the trustee or conservator of any idiot, habitual drunkard, lunatic, or distracted person, or as executor, administrator, heir, legatee, or devisee of any deceased person, or as guardian or trustee of such heir, legatee, or devisee. This form of the rule, however, is narrowed generally either by special exceptions admitting a party to testify as to other facts than those known only to him and the deceased or insane person, or by decisions of court to the same effect, thus making this form almost the equivalent of the former. See Besson v. Cox, 35 N. J. Eq. 87. Thus, when one party is an executor, the other is not prevented from testifying to transactions or conversations had with an agent of the deceased. Pratt v. Elkins, 80 N. Y. 198. If, however, the agent signs a contract in his own name, and discloses no principal, the statute prevents the other party from testifying. Standford v. Horwitz, 49 Ind. 525.

So, conversations of the deceased with third parties, at which the other party to the snit was present and which he heard, do not come within the reason of the rule, as, the third parties being alive may be called to contradict the testimony of the surviving party. Hughey v. Eichelberger, 11 S. C. 36.

Another marked difference in these statutes lies in the fact that some exclude one party only when the other is dead; others exclude the party or persons interested in the suit. In the former case, persons interested in the result of the suit, may testify, although one of the parties is dead. Potter v. National Bank, 102 U.S. 163; Rawson v. Knight, 73 Me. 340.

In most States, also, it is the law, either by special statutory provision or by the decisions of the courts, that if, in cases where one party is incompetent to testify to certain transactions, the other party, being an executor or suing in some other representative capacity, voluntarily testi-fies to such transactions, the other party is competent to testify also, and the incompetency is held to be waived by the act of the other party. Potts v. Mayer, 86 N. Y. 302; Clawson v. Riley, 34 N. J. Eq. 348; Williamson v. State, 59 Miss. 235. And see the statutes below, generally. As a consequence of admitting parties to an action to testify in the case, the fact of the existence of a mental state, intent, knowledge, motive, or belief in the party at any given time, if it is a material point in the case, may be proved by the direct testimony of the party himself. Formerly it could only be proved indirectly by his words and acts, and these now form a valuable test of the truthfulness of his testimony on that point. Hale v. Taylor, testmony on that point. Hale v. Taylor, 45 N. H. 405; Wheeldon v. Wilson, 44 Me. 11; Snow v. Paine, 114 Mass. 520; Perry v. Porter, 121 Id. 522; Berkey v. Judd, 22 Minn. 287; Kerrains v. People, 60 N. Y. 221; Greer v. Alabama (Code, 1886, sec. 2765). Parties or persons interested in a suit are competent witnesses, but neither party can testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by any deceased person whose estate is interested in the result of the suit, or when the deceased person, at the time of such transaction or statements, acted in any representative or fiduciary relation to the party against whom such testimony is sought to be introduced, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party.

It is held that the transferrer of a chose in action is not a competent witness for his transferee, in a suit by the latter against the personal representatives, of a de-ceased party to the chose in action, any statement or transaction occurring between himself, or between other persons and such decedent. California (Civil Code, sec. 1880, cl. 3). Parties or assignors of parties to an action, or persons in whose behalf an action is prosecuted against an executor or administrator upon a claim against the estate of a deceased person, cannot testify as to any matter of fact occurring before the death of such deceased person. This clause applies not only to parties who have an adverse interest to the estate, but to all nominal parties to the action (Blood v. Fairbanks, 50 Cal. 420); but not to a party claiming a family allowance (Estate of McCausland, 52 Cal. 568). The clause does not prohibit a person, against whom an action is prosecuted by an executor on a claim in favor of the estate, from being a witness in his own behalf (Sedgwick v. Sedgwick, 52 Cal. 336; McGregor v. Donnelly, 61 Cal. 149), nor is it to be construed to prevent an executor or administrator from ealling a party to the action to testify in behalf of the estate. Chase v. Evoy, 51 Cal. 618. The statute does not exclude the accountbooks of the adverse party when they are otherwise admissible in the actions. Roche v. Ware, 71 Cal. 375.

Colorado (Gen. Laws, secs. 3641, 3647). No party to any civil action, or person directly interested in the event, can testify of his own motion or in his own behalf when any adverse party sues or defends as the trustee or conservator of any idiot, lunatic, or distracted person, or as the executor, administrator, heir, legatee, or devisee of any deceased person, or the guardian or trustee of any such heir, legatee, or devisee, unless when called as a witness by such adverse party so suing or defending; but even in those cases a party or interested person may testify to facts occurring after the death of the deceased person; and when in such action an agent of the deceased person testifies in behalf of any person or persons suing or being sued, in either of the capacities above named, to any conversation or transaction between such agent and the opposite party or parties in interest, such party or parties in interest may testify concerning the same conversation or transaction; and also when in any such action, any such party suing or defending as aforesaid, or any person having a direct interest in the event of such action, shall testify in behalf of such party so suing or defending to any conversation or transaction with the opposite party or parties in interest, then such opposite party in interest can also testify as to the same conversa-tion or transaction; and when in any such action, any witness not a party to the record, or not a party in interest, nor an agent for such deceased person, shall, in behalf of any party to such action, testify to any conversation or admission by any adverse party or parties in interest, occurring before the death and in the absence of such deceased person, such udverse party or parties in interest may also testify as to the same admission or conversation; and when in any such action the deposition of such deceased person shall be read in evidence at the trial, any adverse party or parties in interest may testify as to all matters and things testified to in such deposition by such deceased person and not excluded for irrelevancy or incompetency (sec. 3643). In any action by or against any surviving partner or partners, joint contractor or contractors, no adverse party or person adversely interested in the event thereof, is a competent witness to testify to any admission or conversation by any deceased person or joint contractor, unless some one or more of the surviving partners or joint contractors were also present at the time of such admission or conversation (sec. 3644). No person who would, if a party to the suit, be incompetent to testify therein by reason of interest, shall become competent by reason of any assignment or release of his claim made for the purpose of allowing such person to testify.

Georgia (Laws, 1889, ch. 486, p. 85, sec. 1). (a) Where any suit is instituted or defended by a person insane at the time of trial, or by the personal representative of a deceased person, the opposite party cannot testify in his own favor against said insane or deceased person. (b) Where any suit is instituted or defended by partners or persons jointly liable or interested, the opposite party cannot testify in his own favor as to transactions or communications solely with the insane or deceased partner, or person jointly liable or interested, and not also with a survivor thereof. (c) Where any suit is instituted or defended by a corporation, the opposite party cannot testify in his own behalf to transactions or communications solely with the deceased or insane officer, or agent of the corporation, and not also with surviving and sane persons, officers, or agents of said corporation. (d) Where a person not a party, but a person interested in the result of the suit, is offered as a witness he cannot testify if, as a party to the cause, he would for any cause be incompetent. (e) No agent or attorney-at-law of either party at the time of the transaction testified about can testify in favor of a surviving or sane party under circumstances where the principal, a party to the cause, could not testify; nor can a surviving party or agent testify in his own favor or in favor of a surviving or sane party as to transactions or communications with the deceased or insane agent under circumstances where such a witness would be incompetent if the deceased agent had been principal. (f) In all cases where the personal representative of the deceased or insane party has introduced a witness interested in the event of the suit, who has testified as to transactions on the part of the surviving party or his agent, surviving party or agent may be examined in reference to such facts testified to by said witness. (g) No per-son who was the agent or mutual friend of both parties, or who acted as attorney or counsel of both parties in any transaction, can be a witness for the living party touching such transactions.

Illinois (Rev. Stat. ch. 51, sec. 1). No person is disqualified as a witness in any civil action, except as hereinafter stated, by reason of his or her interest in the event thereof, as a party or otherwise, but such interest may be shown for the purpose of affecting the credibility of such witness. This statute does not render any witness incompetent, if he would have been competent before its enactment. Bradshaw v. Combs, 102 Ill. 428. It is further to be noticed that the effect of the interest of a witness in the suit, or its issue, is entirely for the jury, and they are to say whether or not it diminishes the credibility of the witness. Douglass v. Fullerton, 7 Ill. App. 102. The competency of the witness under the statute, however, is for the court, and the jury cannot reject his testimony when it is once admitted by the court. Wickliffe v. Lynch, 36 Ill. 209. If a party is admitted as a witness under this statute, his testimony is still subject to the usual rules as to hearsay and other rules of evidence applicable to other witnesses in similar causes. Chicago v. O'Brennan, 65 Ill. 160; Strong v. Lord, 8 lll. App. 539. It is held that this statute does not remove the disqualification of husband and wife to testify for or against each other. Mitchison v. Cross, 58 Ill. 366. The right of the party to testify is a personal privilege, and it is not subject of remark to the jury if he does not choose to exercise this privilege by going on the stand and testifying in his own hehalf. Moore v. Wright, 90 III. 470. (Sec. 2.) No party to any civil action, or person directly interested in the event thereof, can testify therein of his own motion, or in his own behalf by virtue of the fovegoing section, when any adverse party sues or defends as the trustee or conservator of any idiot, habitual drunkard, lunatic, or distracted person, or as the executor or administrator, heir, legatee, devisee, unless when called as a witness by such adverse party so suing or defending, and also except in the cases set out in certain subsections hereafter quoted.

Under this paragraph of the statute it is held that even a nominal party of record, having no interest in the issue being tried, cannot testify against the administrator. Lowman v. Aubery, 72 Ill. 619. So, a party cannot prove an agreement of the deceased in an action against his heirs. Marshall v. Peck, 91 Ill. 187. It has been held that the effect of the statute is so broad that when the witness is by reason of it incompetent to testify to facts, his acts and declarations tending to prove such facts cannot be proven by another witness who is himself competent. Bragg v. Geddes, 93 Ill. 39. In the following cases the general principle of this section was considered and sustained. Lyon v. Lyon, 3 lll. App. 434; Treadway v. Treadway, 5 lll. App. 478; Redden v. Inman, 6 lll. App. 55. Interest in the suit also disqualifies the witness as well as being a party. Richardson v. Hadsall, 106 ill. 476; Boester v. Byrne, 72 Ill. 466; Hurlbut v. Meeker, 104 lll. 542; McCann v. Atherton, 106 lll. 31. This statute prevents an interested witness from testifying to any facts which occurred in the lifetime of the deceased person as against such deceased person's heir. Ferbrache v. Ferbrache, 110 Ill. 210. It is to be observed that it is only in cases where some party to the record is such in his representative capacity, and this fact appears on the record, that the other party to the record is disqualified as a witness. Robbins v. Moore, 129 Ill. 57. If an administrator presents a personal claim against the estate he represents, and another administrator is appointed to defend that special claim, it is held that an heir is not incompetent, since the action is not by the administrator in his personal capacity, but personally (Douglass v. Fullerton, 7 Ill. 104); but it might be queried whether the special administrator who defends the action is not such an administrator as is within the scope of the statute. The wife of a party interested in the suit is not competent under this statute. Warrick v. Hull, 102 Ill. 280; Stevens v. Hay, 61 Ill. 299; Crane v. Crane, 81 Ill. 166.

The phrase "shall not be allowed to testify in his own motion or on his own behalf" does not allow one party, plaintiff or defendant, to call a co-plaintiff or co-defendant, but allows only a call from the opposing party representing the deceased. Whitmer v. Rucker, 71 Ill. 410.

The exceptions to the general principle set forth in § 2 are stated in clauses 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of that section, and are in effect as follows: (1) The exclusion does not apply to fucts occurring after the death of the deceased person, or after the fiduciary capacity has terminated. See Straubher v. Mohler, 80 Ill. 21; Branger v. Lucy, 82 Ill. 91; In re Steele, 65 Ill. 322; Stewart v. Kirk, 69 Ill. 509. (2) That if any agent of a deceased person testifies in behalf of any of the persons above named, to any conversation between himself and the opposite party, the latter may testify as to the same conversation or transaction.

Marshall v. Karl, 60 III. 208; Donlevy v. Montgomery, 66 III. 227. (3) If any party suing or defending in the above fiduciary capacities testifies in his own behalf, or if any person directly interested in the suit testifies for him as to any conversation or transaction with an opposite party, the latter can also testify to the same transaction. Penn v. Oglesby, 89 III. 110. (4) If any witness, not a party to the record or in interest, nor an agent of the deceased person, testifies in behalf of any party as to any conversation or admission of the deceased person, the adverse party may also testify to the same facts. Stonecipher v. Hall, 64 III. 121; Richerson v. Sternburg, 65 III. 272. (5) If the deposition of a deceased person is put in evidence, any adverse party or interested person may testify as to all the competent facts included in the deposition. Sec. 4. A further enactment in this State

Sec. 4. A further enactment in this State is that in any action by or against a surviving partner or partners, joint contractor or contractors, no adverse purty, either to the record or in interest, can testify as to admissions or conversations of the deceased partner or joint contractor, unless some of the surviving partners or joint contractors were present at the time of the admission or conversation; and further, that any party to a suit or contract nucle with an agent of the deceased party cannot testify, if the agent has since died, as to any conversation or transaction between himself and the agent, unless, under sections two and three, above quoted, he would have been permitted to testify if the deceased person had been a party and not an agent.

Sec. 7. In this State, also, no assignment or release of the witness's claim will make him competent to testify.

Indiana (Rev. Stats., 1888, sec. 498). In suits to which an executor or administrator is a party, and in which a judgment or decree may be rendered for or against the estate, any necessary party to the issue or record, adversely interested to the estate, cannot testify as to matters which occurred during the lifetime of the decedent but if the deposition of the decedent has been taken, or he has previously testified, and his deposition or testimony can be used as evidence for the executor or administrator, then the adverse party may testify as to any matters included in the deposition or testimony.

Sec. 500. If any agent of the decedent testifies for the executor, administrator, or heirs as to any transaction by him as such agent with a party to the suit, or the assignor or grantor of such party in the absence of the decedent, or if any witness testifies for the executor, administrator, or heirs as to any conversation or admission of the party to the suit, his assignor or grantor, in the absence of the decedent, then the party against whom such evidence is given and his assignor or grantor can testify to the same matters. An agent cannot testify in behalf of his principal as to matters concerning the making of a contract with one now deceased, as against the heirs or legal representatives of the deceased person, unless he is called by them, and then only as to such matters as he may be inquired of by them. In any case where a person charged with unlawfully taking and detaining personal property, or damaging the same, and pleads a right as executor, administrator, quardian, or heir, no person can testify against him who would not be competent if the person defending were the complainant; but if the complainant cannot testify for this reason, then the defendant is also excluded.

Sec. 502. In any case in which an executor, administrator, heir, or devisee is a party, and one of the parties is incompetent to testify against them, then the assignor or grantor of the party making the assignment or grant voluntarily shall be deemed the adverse party, and in all cases under sections 498, 499, and 500, any party to such a suit can call the opposite party and examine him as a hostile witness, and in general the court can order any witness to testify.

Sec. 503. In all actions by an executor or administrator on a contract assigned to the deceased, if the assignor is alive and competent, the executor or administrator, and the defendant or defendants are com-petent witnesses as to all matters occurring between the assignor and the defendant prior to notice of such assignment.

The term "party" means that the person must be substantially interested in the result of the suit, and does not include a nominal party to the record. Scherer v. Ingerman, 110 Ind. 442; Spencer v. Robbins, 106 Ind. 580; Martin v. Martin, 118 Ind. 233; Starret v. Burkhalter, 86 Ind. 439. The contract or matter involved must be one in which the deceased had some interest, and not one transacted entirely between third parties. Taylor v. Duesterberg, 109 Ind. 170. The provision in this State relating to the testi-mony of an agent applies when an agent has acted for his principal in the making of a contract; but whether it can be applied in any case where the parties to the contract are all present when it is entered into, has not yet been decided in this State. Piper v. Fosher, 121 Ind. 412. Generally speaking, under the statute of this State, three things must concur in order to exclude the testimony of the surviving adverse interested party: (I) The transaction or subject-matter thereof must be in some way directly involved in the action or proceeding, and it must appear that one of the parties to the transaction about to be proved is dead. (2) The right of the deceased party must have passed by his own act, or that of the law, to another who represents him in the action, or proceeding, in the character of executor, administrator, or in some other manner in which he is authorized by law to bind the estate. (3) It must appear that the allowance to be made, or the judgment to be rendered, may either directly or indirectly affect the estate of the decedent. Durham v. Shannon, 116 Ind. 405. This statute has also been construed in the recent case of Taylor v. Duesterberg, 109 Ind. 165, as giving a test of competency which depends not so much upon the specific fact to which the adverse party is called upon to testify as upon the subject-matter involved in the issue in the case. When the subject-matter involved in a suit or proceeding is such that one of the parties to the contract or transaction included in the issue is dead, the policy of the statute is to close the lips of the other in respect to such matter. When, however, the transaction in question is something in which the decedent in his lifetime never had any interest or concern, it cannot be so involved in a suit by his per-sonal representative as to preclude the parties interested in the transaction, although it may come collaterally in question, from confirming it by their own testimony. The true spirit of the statute, as stated in the above case, is held to be that, when a party to the subject-matter or contract in question is dead, and his rights in the thing or contract have passed to another who represents him in the action or proceeding which involves such contract or subject-matter to which the deceased was a party, the surviving party to that subject-matter or transaction shall not testify to matters occurring during the lifetime of the decedent. Taylor v. Duesterberg, supra. This statute does not cover matters which come to the witness's knowledge after the death of the opposite party, consequently the widow of an intestate was permitted to testify in a case brought by his administrator as to matters with which she became acquainted subsequent to her husband's death; or as to matters which were open to the knowledge of all persons who knew the parties. Louisville, New Alb. & Chic. Ry. Co. v. Thompson, 107 Ind. 444; Lamb v. Lamb, 105 Ind. 456.

Iowa (Rev. Code, 1886, sec. 3639). No party to any action, nor any person from, through, or under whom any such party or interested person derives any interest or title by assignment or otherwise, and no husband or wife of any said party or person, can testify in regard to any personal trans-action or communication between such witness and a person at the commencement of such examination deceased, insane, or lunatic, against the executor, administrator, heir-atlaw, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee, or survivor of such deceased person, or the as-signee or quardian of such insune person or lunatic. But this prohibition does not extend to any transaction or communication as to which any of the above-mentioned representatives is examined on his own behalf, or as to which the testimony of such deceased or insane person or lunatic shall be given in evidence. Under this statute it is held that in a proceeding to interpose a claim against an estate, the administrator is a competent witness to prove on behalf of the estate that the claim had been settled prior to the death of the decedent. Stiles v. Botkin, 30 Iowa, 60. So, in an action against an administrator on a promissory note by an assignee thereof, the payee is a competent witness for the plaintiff. Burroughs v. McLain, 37 Iowa, 189. Where the party's testimony does not relate to personal transactions or communications between himself and the deceased, he is not disqualified under this section of the statute. Sypher v. Savery, 39 Iowa, 258. The interest which will disqualify a witness must be such an interest as would disqualify him at common law; if he is interested equally on both sides, he is competent. Goddard v. Leffingwell, 40 Iowa, 249.

Kansas (Gen. Stats. 1889, sec. 4417). This section provides that no party can testify in his own behalf as to transactions or communications had personally by him with a deceased person when the adverse party is an executor or administrator, heir-at-law, next of kin, surviving partner or assignee of the deceased, if they acquired title in the cause of action immediately from the deceased, nor can the assignor of the cause of action testify in behalf of such party as to any such transaction or communication with the deceased purtner or joint contractor, in the absence of the surviving partner or joint contractor, if the surviving partner or joint contractor, if the surviving partner or joint contractor is an adverse party. The statute also contains the usual provision that introducing the testimony of the deceased party does away with the exclusion of the statute.

Maine (Rev. Stats. 1833, ch. 82, sec. 98). Parties and those interested in the event of the suit are excluded in this State from testifying, if at the time of the trial any party to the suit is an executor or administrator, or is a party as heir of a deceased party. This exclusion, however, is subject to the following exceptions: First, - introducing the testimony of a deceased party at a former trial, or his deposition, waives the exclusion; second, - if the executor, administrator, or other representative of a deceased person is a party and testifies, this also waives the exclusion; third, - the exclusion does not apply to facts happening after the death of the deceased; fourth, - if the representative party is nominal only, both parties may testify; if the adverse party is nominal only, or has parted with his interest during the lifetime of the decedent, he may be called by either party; and in actions against a personal representative, if the plaintiff is nominal only or disposed of his interest in the lifetime of the decedent, neither party is excluded; fifth,—the usual exception as to account-books of the decedent exists, and their introduction authorizes the other party to testify in regard to them; sixth,—if the personal representative of a decedent is one party and an heir is the other party, the heir may testify if any other heir testifies for the personal representative.

Under this statute the rule is that the executor or administrator may offer to testify himself, and if he does so, he makes the other party competent to testify. Kelton v. Hill, 59 Me. 259; Brooks v. Goss, 61 Me. 307; Haskell v. Hervey, 74 Me. 197. The rule includes the executors of one who is in prison under sentence of death, who is considered in that State as dead, and his estate is administered as such. Knight v. Brown, 47 Me. 468. There is also in that State, as noted above, an exception to this general incompetency, when the executor or administrator is a nominal party; but he is not such a nominal party when he brings suit in his own name on a note payable to the deceased. Wing v. Andrews, 59 Me. 505. If the question in suit is whether certain articles belonged to the estate or not, both parties are competent witnesses, the case not coming under the rule. Beach v. Pennell, 50 Me. 587. If the surviving party to a transaction puts in evidence a memorandum in writing by the deceased, he must leave it to speak for itself, or else explain it by disinterested witnesses. He cannot testify as to its meaning himself (Berry v. Stevens, 69 Me. 290), but if such memoranda, for example, accountbooks, are introduced by the executor or administrator, the other party may testify as to them. Hubbard v. Johnson, 77 Me. 139. The rule does not cover persons merely interested in the suit, but only parties to the record. Rawson v. Knight, 73 Me. 340; Alden v. Goddard, 73 Me. 346; Haskell v. Hervey, 74 Me. 197. It prevents an executor or administrator from testifying in his own behalf to support a private claim of his own against the estate. Preble v. Preble, 73 Me. 362. The rule, also, does not cover facts occurring after the death of the deceased. Swasey v. Ames, 79 Me. 483.

If one of two defendants in a suit is discontinued, he thereby becomes a competent witness in the case; for the statute only applies to persons who are parties, and those who are not parties to the suit, although they may be directly interested in the result, are competent witnesses. Segar v. Lufkin, 77 Me. 143; Haskell v. Hervey, 74 Me. 192. In reference to this statute, it has been decided in a recent case in Maine (Hall v. Otis, 77 Me. 125), that the statute as it now stands confines the adverse party who is admitted to tes-tify by the testimony of the administrator to such facts as the administrator testifies to, and cannot testify to the whole transaction to which such facts are pertinent. A previous statute on this subject used the words "matters" instead of "facts," which the court comments upon in giving its opinion. The same point, as showing an intent of the legislature to change the scope of the statute, was ruled in Hubbard v. Johnson, 77 Me. 142. If in a bill in equity defendants are made parties. "as heirs of the deceased party," the complainant in the case cannot testify. Hinckley v. Hinckley, 79 Me. 322; Higgins v. Butler, 78 Me. 520. But the person who elaims in her own right property which she inherited from her mother, is not a party to the suit in the capacity of "heir of a deceased party." Johnson v. Merithew, 80 Me. 113.

Maryland (Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 35, Maryland (1405. Oen. Laws, are ver, sec. 1, 2, and 5). In this State, neither parties nor interested persons, nor their husbands nor wives are excluded by reason of their interest in the case, except under the following circumstances: if the original party to a contract or cause of action is dead or insane, or if an executor or administrator is a party to the suit, neither party can testify on his own offer or by request of his co-parties, unless he is merely a nominal party; except that if the deceased person or lunatic has testified already; except, also, if the personal repre-sentative or guardian testifies to any con-versation with the other party, either may be examined as a witness thereto; moreover, the statute provides that no party who has been examined as a witness can corroborate his testimony when impeached, by proof of his own declarations or statements outside of the trial, and not in the presence of the opposite party.

And the statute also provides that if the contract or cause of action was made or contracted with an agent, the death or insanity of the principal does not prevent any party to the suit from being a witness if the agent is alive and competent to testify; and the statute further provides that the interest of any witness may always be shown to affect his credibility.

Under these statutes it is held that a prochein ami is not a party to the suit. Trahern v. Colburn, 63 Md. 104. The statute excludes the executor or administrator from testifying on his own offer as well as the surviving party; but if the executor takes the stand and testifies, and the other party objects to some of his testimony and not to other parts of it, the parts not excepted to will stand as evidence in the cause, the objection having been waived pro tanto (Dilley v. Love, 61 Md. 607); but cross-examining before the auditor in an equity proceeding does not prevent taking the objection at the hearing in the equity court. Dodge r. Stan-hope, 55 Md. 121. The design of the statute in admitting parties to suits to testify at their own instance has been said in this State to be to provide that they should do so on terms of perfect equality as to knowledge, or means of knowledge, of the subject-matter in controversy about which they were to speak, and not to allow one living to testify to his version of a transaction, when he could not be confronted by the other or adverse party with whom the actual transaction took place, in consequence of the deth or insanity of the latter (Johnson v. Heuld, 33 Md. 352, 368); and the general provisions removing the incompetency of parties should not be further restricted than this reason for the exception requires. When, therefore, a contract is made with a partnership composed of a great number of persons, some of whom are active in the business and others not, or some of them reside abroad and have no personal knowledge of the transaction of the firm, —in such case it would neither comport with the design of the legislature, nor the reason of the thing, to exclude the parties to the actual transaction merely because one of the non-active or non-resident technical co-contractors should happen to die after the contract was made. Hardy v. Chesapeake Bank, 51 Md. 596.

In proceedings for probate, before the will has been probated, the executor nominated in the will is not under the statute, but may testify in his own behalf (Schull v. Murray, 32 Md. 9); but in a proceeding by an executor or administrator against a third person for concealing part of the intestate's property, the defendant is under the statute and incompetent. Cannon v. Crook, 32 Md. 482. So in a controversy between an alleged wife and the administrator of her alleged deceased husband, in regard to her right to a distributive share of the estate, she is incompetent to testify as to the marriage (Denison v. Denison, 35 Md. 361; see Redgrave v. Redgrave, 38 Md. 93); but in a contest between the wife and nephews and nieces as to the distribution of the estate, they are competent witnesses to testify as to their legitimacy. Jones v. Jones, 36 Md. 447. In an action on a joint note, one of the makers being dead, it is not competent for the payee and plaintiff, in order to remove the statute of limitations, to testify to a payment made by the deceased maker, and endorsed on the note in his own handwriting. Miller v. Motter, 35 Md. 428.

The question of what effect the death of an agent who makes a contract for a corporation has upon the testimony of the other party to the contract, if he brings suit thereon, was considered in the case of South Baltimore Co. v. Muhlbach, 69 Md. 401. In this case one Harrison, a director in the defendant company and an agent thereof, made a contract with the plaintiff. The court held that he was not an original party to the contract in any legal or technical sense; that the parties to the contract were the defendant corporation and the plaintiff; that the death of the agent did not affect in any way the plaintiff's testimony as a witness for himself, citing for this point the cases of City Bank of Baltimore v. Bateman, 7 Harrison & Johnson, 84; Spencer v. Trafford, 42 Md. 17. The court further say that if such a rule obtained, it would have to be mutual in its operation; it would exclude as witnesses many persons who had been competent before the passage of the Evidence Act, a result which would contravene both the spirit and letter of the Acts which are intended to extend and not to restrict the number of persons competent to testify.

Massachusetts (Pub. Stat. ch. 169, sec. 18). In this State, all persons are competent, but their interest may be shown to affect their credibility.

Michigan (Howell's Annot. Stat. sec. 7545). In this State, when an heir, assignee, devisee, legatee, or personal representative of a deceased person is a party, the other party cannot testify as to matters equally within the knowledge of the deceased person; moreover, if a surviving partner is a party, the other party cannot testify as to matters which were within the knowledge of the deceased partner and not within the knowledge of the surviving partner. If a corporation is a party, the other party cannot testify to matters which must have been equally within the knowledge of a deceased officer or agent of the corporation, and not within the knowledge of any surviving officer or agent. If the action is by persons representing a deceased person against a corporation, no officer or agent of the corporation can testify to matters which must have been equally within the knowledge of the deceased person. The words "oppo-site party" are defined to include the assign-ors or assignees of the claim in suit, or any part thereof. See Supp. 1890.

This statute only applies in cases where the estate is in some way one of the parties, and the heirs, assigns, devisees, or legatees, are the others. It does not apply when a will is presented for probate and the probate is contested. In such a case the proponent of the will may testify as to an agreement between himself and the testator, by which the latter agreed to leave him all the property in the manner in which the will disposed of it (Brown v. Bell, 58 Mich. 58); or a legatee may testify as to conversations with the deceased about the will. Schofield v. Walker, 58 Mich. 98. It covers only parties to the record; and as to them only matters shown to be within the knowledge of the deceased.

generally by the course of proceedings in equity, one party may

Bassett v. Shepardson, 52 Mich. 3. If the representative of the deceased puts into the case the admissions of the other party as to facts under the statute, he so far waives the rule, and the surviving party may explain these admissions. Smith's App. 52 Mich. 415. A mere colorable assignment of a party's interest in the suit will not render him competent to testify in the case. Buck v. Haynes, 75 Mich. 399.

Minnesota (Stats. (Kelley) 1891, sec. 5093). No party to an action or interested in the event thereof can give evidence therein of, or concerning any conversation with, or admission of a deceased or insane party or person relative to any matter at issue between the parties.

Under this statute it has been held that if a party offering evidence, which primatace would include conversations or admissions of a deceased person, intends to limit it so as to avoid such conversations, he must show such limitation in his offer, and cannot rely upon proving in the Appellate Court that the testimony which he offered did not include objectionable testimony. Rhodes v. Pray, 36 Minn. 395. The phrase "interest in the event of the action" under this statute means such interest as would disqualify the witness at common law. Beard v. First Nat. Bank of Minneapolis, 39 Minn. 547.

Sec. 5095. Neither parties nor other persons who have an interest in the event of an action are excluded, although in every case the credibility of the witness may be drawn in question.

Mississippi (Rev. Code, 1880, sec. 1602). In this State, no person can testify to establish his own claim against the estate of a deceased person, which originated during the lifetime of the decedent, or any claim he has transferred since the death of the decedent; but such person, so interested, may give evidence in support of the demand against the estate which originated after the death of the deceased person in the course of administering the estate.

Missouri (Rev. Stat. 1889, sec. 8918). In this State, interested persons can testify, their interest going only to their credibility, except that if one of the parties to the contract or cause of action in issue or on trial, is dead or insane, the other party to the contract or cause of action cannot testify in his own furor or in favor of any party to the action claiming under him; and no party to the contract who claims from one excluded by the foregoing disqualification can himself testify in his own furor; moreover, if an executor or administrator is a party the other party cannot testify in his own favor unless the contract was originally made with a person alive and competent to testify, except as to acts and contracts done and made since the probate of the will, or the appointment of the executor.

This statute has been construed by the courts to be enacted for the purpose of rendering competent persons who would otherwise have been incompetent witnesses, and should be so construed, and not as a disabling statute (Bates v. Forcht, 89 Mo. 121), except so far as is therein stated in regard to actions where one of the original parties to the cause of action or contract ris dead or insane. Allen v. Carter, 8 Mo. App. 585; Dolan v. Kehr, 9 Mo. App. 351; Carter v. Prior, 78 Mo. 222; Fyke v. Lewis, 15 Mo. App. 588; Pritchett v. Reynolds, 21 Mo. App. 674. And where at common law one party to a suit is a competent witness he will still be competent under this statute, although the other party to the contract or cause of action is dead or insane. Angell v. Hester, 64 Mo. 142. If the contract in issue was made on one side by two persons, one of whom has since died, the adverse party is not rendered in-competent thereby, since there still exists one party living who can testify as to the facts which occurred in forming the contract in question (Fulkerson v. Thornton, 68 Mo. 468; Wallace v. Jecko, 25 Mo. App. 313); but if the contract is made with a partnership, and one of the partners dies, then, the other partner, not having personal knowledge of the transaction in question, the adverse party to the contract, is hereby rendered incompetent under the statute. Williams v. Perkins, 83 Mo. 379; Wiley v. Morse, 30 Mo. App. 266

Montana (Compiled Stat. Code, Civ. Proc. Sec. 647). Neither parties nor other persons who have an interest in the event of the action or proceeding are excluded, although in every case the credibility of the witness may be drawn in question.

Sec. 648. No person shall be allowed to testify, under provision of the last section, where the adverse party, or the party for whose immediate benefit the action or proceeding is prosecuted or defended, is the representative of a deceased person, when the facts to be proved transpired before the death of such deceased person; and nothing in said section shall affect the laws in relation to attestation of any instrument required to be attested.

Nebraska (Code, p. 672, sec. 329). In this State, no person having a direct legal interest in the result of a civil action can, if the appeal to the conscience of the other, by calling him to answer adverse party represents a deceased person, testify as to any transaction or conversation had between the deceased person and the witness, unless the evidence of the deceased person is put in evidence by the adverse party, or un-less the representative of the deceased person puts in testimony as to the transaction or conversation in question, in either of which cases

Nevada (Gen. Stat. 1885, sec. 3399 (s. 377) and sec. 3401 (s. 379)). In this State, no person interested in the suit can testify when the other party to the transaction is dead, or when either the opposite party to the transaction, or the person immediately interested in the action, represents a deceased person, that is, as to facts occurring before the death of the deceased person; but if the deceased person acted in the transaction through an agent who is living and who testifies in favor of the representative of the de-ceased person, then the other party to the transaction may also testify as to it.

New Hampshire (Pub. Stat. 1891 (Comm's Rep.), ch. 223, secs. 13, 16, 17, and 18). These statutes provide that if one party is an executor or administrator, or a guardian of an insane person, neither party can testify as to facts occurring in the lifetime of the deceased, or prior to the ward's insanity, unless the representative party testifies thereto, or unless the court considers the testimony necessary; but if either party to the record is a nominal party, and the party whose interest he represents is an executor, administrator, or insane, the other party cannot testify unless the representative party testifies himself, or offers the testimony of the other party of record.

These sections apply to a common-law action for an account as well as in other English v. Porter, 63 N. H. 213. The administrator or executor is the only one who can object to the other party tes-tifying, and if he does not, or if he consents, such testimony is competent. Marcy v. Amazeen, 61 N. H. 133; Burns v. Madigan, 60 N. H. 197. The rule does not cover parties in interest, but only par-ties to the record, except as to the administrator or executor (Wilson v. Russell, 61 N. H. 355); nor does it cover suits against the executor or administrator personally, as when it is brought for a tort committed by him (Harrington v. Tremblay, 61 N. H. 413); nor where the executor or administrator is only a nominal control of the control of inal party. Drew v. McDaniel, 60 N. H. 482. But in this State the court has a discretion to allow the party to testify when it clearly appears that injustice may be done without his testimony (Cochran v. Langmaid, 60 N. H. 571); but when the facts to be testified to were wholly within the knowledge of the deceased and the offered witness, it is a proper exercise of that discretion to refuse to let the witness testify, as that would give him, being a party, an unfair advantage (Page v. Whidden, 59 N. H. 511); and this discretion should in any case be exercised with caution. Hoit v. Russell, 56 N. H. with caution. Hoit v. Russell, 56 N. H. 563. And the facts showing that injustice will be done by not allowing the other party to testify, must appear upon the evidence in the case, and cannot be proved by affidavit of the party offering himself as a witness. Harvey v. Hilliard, 47 N. H. 553. The rule does not prevent the offering of books of account with the party's suppletory oath, as was allowed at common law (Snell v. Parsons, 59 N. H. 521); nor does it prevent the wife of the party from testifying as to such matters as she may be otherwise competent to testify to, she not being a party to the case. Clements v. Marston, 52 N. H. 36. The election of the executor or administrator to testify himself, allows the other party to testify; but when the executor or administrator is summoned by the other side and compelled to testify, this is not such an election as allows the party summoning him to testify. Harvey v. Hilliard, supra. The rule applies to proceedings in the probate court as well as to suits at common law. Thus, where an administration account was being settled, it was held that

4, and 9; Supp. Rev. p. 287, sec. 1). In this State, the provision on the subject in question is that no party can be sworn if the opposite party is prohibited by a legal disability from testifying, or if either party is party in a representative capacity, so far as relates to any transaction with or statement by any testator or intestate represented in an action; but if the representative is taken as a witness at his own request, the other party may also testify.

The testimony excluded by these sections will not be rendered admissible by the subsequent offer and admission of disqualified witnesses. Yetman v. Dey, 33 N. J. L. 32. When a defendant in a suit in equity dies, and his executor is substituted, the complainant cannot be a witness in his own behalf, unless the sworn answer of the defendant has already been filed, interrogatories upon oath. But this act of the adversary may be in which case he is admitted by statute to disprove the parts of the answer responsive to the bill. Sweet v. Parker, 22 N. J. Eq. 455; Lanning v. Lanning, 17 N. J. Eq. 228. If the answer, though sworn to, is 228. If the answer, though sworn to, is not evidence, as if it does not state facts in the knowledge of the defendant, or if it is not sworn to, or if the bill asks an answer not sworn to, then the complainant is not competent. Sweet v. Parker, supra. The rule applies only to parties who are materially interested in the suit, and not to one who is wrongfully made a party, having no interest in the case. Harrison v. Johnson, 18 N. J. Eq. 420. If one party discrete the children in the case. party dies after the other has been examined, the testimony so given remains competent because competent when taken. Marlatt v. Warwick, 18 N. J. Eq. 108. If a defendant is ordered to attend court and be examined concerning an account, and the complainant dies after the order passed and before the defendant is examined, the examination is not competent, since the order is affected by the incompetency of the witness arising after it was passed. Halsted v. Tyng, 29 N. J. Eq. 86. The rule applies to proceedings in the orphan's court on an executor's account, when the executor offers to testify to transactions with the testator (Smith v. Burnet, 34 N. J. Eq. 219; Ellicott v. Chamberlin, 37 N. J. Eq. 473; Cuming v. Robins, 39 N. J. Eq. 48); but does not apply to transactions with a deceased executor in regard to the estate he represented. Palmateer v. Tilton, 40 N. J. Eq. 554. If there are more than two persons on one side of a case, the fact that any of them is a representative of a deceased person is sufficient to exclude the testimony of the other party. Force v. Dutcher, 18 N. J. Eq. 401; Sweet v. Parker, 22 N. J. Eq. 453. Testimony of the surviving party to personal statements or transactions with the deceased is not testimony of such kind that, if it is admitted without objection by the party entitled to object to it, the court will, of its own motion, strike out the evidence; there is a necessity for some objection by the party entitled to object. Rowland v. Rowland, 40 N. J. Eq. 281. See, contra, Sherman v. Lanier, 39 N. J. Eq. 253, in Probate Proceedings. In suits where the administrator is in fact sued, or sues, in his own title and not on the title of his testator or intestate, the act in question does not apply, and the other party is a competent witness in the case. Hodge v. Corriell, 44 N. J. L. 456. cases where neither party in the action represents a deceased party, the surviving party is competent as a witness as to what was said and done by the deceased party in the transaction out of which the suit grows. Lehigh Coal and Navigation Co. v. Central Railroad Co., 41 N.J. Eq. 167; Palmateer v. Tilton, supra. The supplementary section, above quoted, has been construed by the courts in McCartin v. McCartin, 45 N. J. E.₁. 265, and the construction given in that case was that it rendered either party competent in the case except as to transactions with or statements by any testator or intestate represented in the action; therefore, the executor may testify in the case as to facts which are not "transactions with or state-ments by" the deceased party, without rendering the surviving party competent to testify as to such transactions or statements; and similarly, the surviving party is competent witness to testify in the case, except as to such "transactions with or statements by" the deceased party. McCartin v. McCartin, supra; see also McCartin v. Traphagen, 43 N. J. Eq. 327. Under this recent statute the courts have given a limited construction to the word "representative," holding that it is only when one of the parties to the record appears upon the record to be a party in a representative capacity, that the other party is excluded from testifying as to statements by or transactions with the deceased party. It is not enough that one of the parties to the record derives his title from, and in that way represents, the deceased person. Crimmins v. Crimmins, 43 N. J. Eq. 87; Hodge v. Corriell, supra; Palmateer v. Tilton, supra.

New Mexico (Compiled Laws, 1884, secs. 2076, 2078, and 2082). These sections provide that parties and persons in whose behalf proceedings are carried on, are competent as well as their husbands and wives; but in a suit to which an heir or executor, administrator or assigns of a deceased person are parties, the opposite or interested party to the suit cannot testify in his own behalf as to any matter occurring before the death of the deceased person, unless his evidence is corroborated by some other material evidence.

New York (Civ. Code Proc. secs. 828, 829). In this State, the statutes provide that a person is a competent witness notwith standing his or her interest in the event of an action, either as a party or husband or wife of a party thereto, or person in whose behalf the proceeding is carried on; and further that a party or person interested in the event of an action, or any person from whom such

party or interested person derives their interest cannot testify in his own behalf or in behalf of the party claiming under him, as against the executor, administrator, or survivor, or a committee of the linatic or any person claiming under the deceased or lunatic by assignment or otherwise, as to any personal transaction or communication between the deceased person or lunatic, inless the executor, administrator, survivor, committee, or person so deriving title or interest, testifies as to the same transaction or communication.

Under this statute the interest which will disqualify a person not a party, must be an interest in the event of the particular action pending, and such that the witness will either gain or lose by it, or the judgment will be legal evidence for or against him in some other action; for example, a surety on a probate bond, who is bound by the surrogate's decree upon the accounting. Nearpass v. Gilman, 104 N.Y. 510; Miller v. Montgomery, 78 N. Y. 282; Church v. Howard, 79 N. Y. 420. If the testimony of the deceased is put in evidence as to any transactions, the testimony of the party surviving may be given to contradict it. Thus, when one of two defendants in an action on a promissory note, testified as to its consideration, and died before a second trial, in which trial the plaintiff put in evidence the testimony of the deceased defendant, both direct and cross, it was held competent for the surviving defendant to contradict the testimony, so put in, by his own testimony, as to the transactions referred to. Potts v. Mayer, 86 N. Y. 302. A surviving party may testify as to the fact that he had a conversation with the deceased, if that fact is immaterial and has no effect (Hier v. Grant, 47 N. Y. 278); but he cannot testify what the conversation was, nor can he testify as to the fact of there having been a conversation, if that is a material fact in the case. Maverick v. Marvel, 90 N. Y. 656. If he was only a listener at a conversation between the deceased and some other person, he may testify as to that conversation. Badger v. Badger, 88 N. Y. 559; Cary v. White, 59 N. Y. 336; Hildebrant v. Crawford, 65 N. Y. 107. In this State, also, it is held that the rule does not extend to transactions with clerks or agents of the deceased, and that evidence as to such transactions is admissible. Pratt v. Elkius, 80 N. Y. 198. The rule does not extend so far as to prevent the surviving party from testifying to facts which inferentially show that such transaction did or did not take place.

Thus, where a witness for one party testified that such conversation did take place between the deceased and the other party, at which he was present, and what the conversation was, it was held that facts inferentially showing that the witness testified falsely might be testified to by the surviving party, although they tended to prove that the conversation did not take place. Such, for instance, would be the testimony that the parties to the alleged conversation were at the time in different places. Pinney v. Orth, 88 N. Y. 447. In a case where the action was on a loan, which was alleged to have been made by check given by plaintiff to defendant's intestate, the defence being that the check concerned the affairs of a corporation of which the plaintiff was treasurer and the defendant's intestate president, it was held that it was incompetent for the plaintiff to testify whether the check had any reference to the affairs of the company, since the answer to such question involved the nature of the transaction with the de-ceased when the check was given. Koehler v. Adler, 91 N. Y. 657. The language of the rule, as stated in the existing code, covers all grantors in the title, and not only the immediate grantor of the party. Pope v. Allen, 90 N. Y. 298. As was said above, an interest in a suit which will render a person incompetent to testify therein must be not merely interest in the question involved, but in the particular action, so that the witness will either gain or lose by the direct legal effect of the judgment, or that the record will be legal evidence for or against him in some other action. Thus, where an action was brought on a check and notes claimed to have been executed by the defendant through his agent, and objection was made to the tes-timony of the agent because, if the notes were sustained, the agent might be liable to the principal for misappropriation of funds or negligence in the payee of the notes to pay them, it was held that this was sufficient interest to disqualify the agent. Nearpass v. Gilman, 104 N. Y. 509. This section was under discussion in the case of Witthaus v. Schack, 105 N. Y. 335, and the nature of the interest of a wife in her husband's real estate as affecting this rule was discussed. In the case of Redfield v. Redfield, 110 N. Y. 674, the witness offered was the husband of the plaintiff. The defendant held stock which she claimed was hers, also claiming that he held it as trustee for her, and had wrongfully transferred it to his father who party is worthy of credit, and that his known integrity is a suffi-

knew of the existence of the trust. The husband was offered by the defendant as a witness, and the plaintiff objected to his testimony as being interested in the result of the action. The court held that this liability to his wife for the stock which he had thus disposed of depended upon the prosecution of the pending suit, because if that was sustained and the value of the stock and dividends recovered from the father's estate, the husband would be relieved to that extent from re-sponsibility; and his testimony for that reason was excluded. In the case of Nay v. Curley, 113 N. Y. 578, the court affirms an important limitation to the effect of this section (829) by holding that this section does not abrogate the ordinary principle of evidence, that where a party calls a witness and examines him as to a particular part of communications and transactions, the other party may call out the whole of the communication or transaction bearing upon or tending to explain or qualify the particular part to which the examination of the other party was directed. So, that if one party to a suit who has a right to object to the testimony of the other party examines him as to transactions or communications with the deceased person, he thereby renders it competent for the party so examined to offer himself as witness in his own behalf to prove the whole of the communication or transaction as to which he had been examined by the other party. This rule is further limited in the case of Lewis v. Merritt, 113 N. Y. 388; where it was held that not only does the examination of an executor, or other representative party, directly as to the communication or transaction in question let in evidence of the surviving party as to such transaction, but that if the executor, or other repre-sentative, is examined as to facts which inferentially affirm or negative the existence of any such transaction or communication, or any part or incident thereof, this allows the surviving party not only to testify to facts which inferentially contradict the testimony of the executor or representative person, but to testify directly in affirmance or denial of the personal transaction or communication affirmed or denied, as the case may be, inferentially by the testimony of the executor or other representative person. For instance, in that case the question was whether the surviving party became legally in possession of certain promissory notes which had been stored in the trunk of a deceased person. The action was brought and defended upon the conceded facts that the notes were in the possession of the defendant at the time the action was brought, and that they belonged to the deceased before her death. The question was whether the defendant had rightfully or wrongfully obtained possession of the notes. The executor testified that a few hours before the death of the deceased, and when she was in an unconscious state (and she never improved), he saw these notes in her tin trunk, and just after her death he looked again and they were gone, and the defendant was in the house that night and had an opportunity to take them. The direct inference from this proof was that the defendant had wrongfully taken the notes without the knowledge and consent of the owner; the court held that it was competent for the defen-dant to take the stand and testify and be asked the question, whether he took the notes from any person without their consent, and to reply thereto. In the case of Corning v. Walker, 100 N. Y. 550, the court affirms the principle that the testimony of the executor or representative party, in order to justify opposing testimony from the surviving party, must have been voluntarily offered by the executor, and not drawn from him by cross-examination of the surviving party, who then proceeds to offer evidence on his own behalf rebutting it.

³ In several of the United States, any party, in a suit at law, may compel the adverse party to appear and testify as a witness. In Connecticut, this may be done in all cases. Rev. In Michigan, the applicant must first make affidavit that material facts in his case are known to the adverse party, and that he has no other proof of them, in which case he may be examined as to those facts. Rev. Stat. 1846, c. 102, § 100. In New York, the adverse party may be called as a witness; and, if so, he may testify in his own behalf, to the same matters to which he is examined in chief; and if he testifies to new matter, the party calling him may also testify to such new matters. Rev. Stat. vol. iii. p. 769 (3d ed.). The law is the same in Wisconsin. Rev. Stat. 1849, c. 98, §$ 57, 60, and in New Jersey, Nixon's Digest (1855), p. 187. The person who is incompetent under this statute may nevertheless be called by the executor or administrator, and compelled to testify as to facts which he would be incompetent to testify to on his own motion. Roberts v. Briscoe, 44 Oh. St. 600. In actions in which a surviving partner is a party, admissions by or transactions with the deceased are competent if made in the presence of the surviving partner. Harrison v. Neely, 41 Oh. St. 334. The death of an agent has no effect upon the competency of parties or testimony in a case in which he is not a party. First Nat. Bank v. Cornell, 41 Oh. St. 401; Cochran v. Almack, 39 Oh. St. 314. The administrator or executor is competent to testify in his own behalf as to facts occurring before the death of his intestate or testator. And if he testifies as to transactions and conversations between the deceased and the adverse party, the adverse party thereby gains the right to testify to the same transactions or conversations. Rankin v. Hannan, 38 Oh. St. 438. As stated above, it is held that the omission of agents as a class of persons whose death affects the competency of others as witnesses is intentional and, consequently, agents are excluded from the statute. First Nat. Bank v. Cornell, 41 Oh. St. 402; Cochrau v. Almack, 39 Oh. St. 114.

Pennsylvania (Laws, 1887, ch. 89, sec. 4, as amended by Laws, 1891, No. 218, sec. 1). By these statutes, in any civil proceeding although a party to the thing or contract in action is dead or insane, and his right therein is passed to a party on record who represents his interest in the subject in controversy, nevertheless, any surviving or remaining party to such thing or contract, or any other person whose interest is adverse to the right of the deceased or insane person, can testify to any relevant matter, although it may have occurred before the death of said party, or his adjudication, or insanity, if, and only if, such relevant matter occurred between himself (the offered witness) and another person who is living at the time of the trial and competent to testify, and who does testify against the surviving or remaining party, or against the person whose interest is thus adverse; or if such relevant matter occurred in the presence or hearing of such other living or competent person. In other respects interest in the action on trial or any other interest or policy of law does not exclude a person as a witness.

Sec. 6. If a person, incompetent by reason of interest, is called by the other party to testify against his own interest, he thereby becomes fully competent for either party, and a release or extinguishment of the interest also makes him a competent witness.

The fact that the testimony as to facts party would volunteer his own oath, or a co-suitor, identified in

occurring after the decease of the testator or intestate tends to prove inferentially facts existing or occurring before such decease is no objection to such testimony. Porter v. Nelson, 121 Pa. St. 640; Rothrock v. Gallaher, 91 Pa. St. 108; Stephens v. Cotterell, 99 Pa. St. 188. Thus, it was held that a witness might be asked whether a package when opened was in the same condition that it had been from and immediately after her husband's death, as this testimony only referred by implica-tion to the state of the package before such death. Rothrock v. Gallaher, supra. So, a witness was allowed to testify that on searching among the deceased's papers about thirty days after his death, a certain bond was found among them, although this evidence tended inferentially to prove that the bond was among his papers before his death. Porter v. Nelson, supra. So, it has been held competent to prove in whose possession and where, the administrators found the property of the deceased when they took possession of it, although the tendency of such testimony may be to negative the contention that some one else had taken possession of the property before the death of the de-ceased (Stephens v. Cotterell, supra); but it has been held that it was not competent for a witness in a case covered by the statute, to testify that a signature of indorsement on a note in a suit was in pencil, because that testimony necessarily related to a fact occurring or existing in the lifetime of the owner (Foster v. Collner, 107 Pa. St. 310); and so, it is not competent to prove a relationship existing at the time of trial, but founded on a marriage, birth, or death, or other acts establishing the relation before the death of the deceased. Adams v. Edwards, 115 Pa. St. 211.

Rhode Island (Pub. Stat. ch. 214, sec. 33). No person is disqualified by reason of being interested in the suit, or party thereto, in this State, except that when an original party to a contract or cause of action is dead or insane, or when an executor or administrator is a party to the suit, the other party connot testify on his own behalf and offer, or upon the call of his co-plaintiff or co-defendant, except as allowed by law, unless he is a nominal party merely, or unless the contract or thing in issue was originally made with a person living and competent to testify; but this exclusion does not apply to acts and contracts done since the decease of the decedent.

The statute in this State has been the subject of discussion in only a few cases. In one it was decided that this statute did not apply to proceedings upon the probate of a will either original or appellate, for the executor is not executor until the final affirmance of his appointment. The court also say that the statute is intended to apply only when the executor is a party as executor representing the estate. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 10 R. I. 540. It has also been held that the statute covers transactions occurring between the executor or administrator before his appointment and the other party to the suit, although such transactions occurred after the death of the testator or intestate. Brown v. Lewis, 9 R. I. 498. In Hopkins v. Manchester, 16 R. I. 664, the female defendant offered herself as a witness to testify to declarations made by the testator in regard to the note. The testimony was objected to and ruled out, the defendants excepting to the ruling. The defendants contended that the testimony should have been admitted because the action was for a conversion committed, not in the lifetime of the testator, but after his decease. The ruling was, however, sustained, the court holding that the statute enabling parties to testify on their own offer does not extend to cases where an executor or administrator is on one side and the party offering to testify is on the other, except where the cause of action is a contract originally made with a person still living and competent to testify, or where the testimony offered relates to matters occurring after the death of the testator or intestate.

South Carolina (Code Civ. Proc. secs. 399, 400). In this State, no person is excluded by reason of interest in the event of the action, and a party can testify in his own behalf, except that no party or person interested, or person who has previously had an interest which is not vested in a party to the action, nor any assignor of anything in controversy in action, can be examined as to any transaction or communication between him and a person at the time of such examination deceased or insane, as against a person party to the action as executor, administrator, heiral-law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee or survivor of the deceased person or as committee of the insane person, if the examination or judgment in the proceeding can affect the witness's interest or the interest previously owned or represented by him. If the executor, administrator, heiral-law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee, or survivor, above named, is examined on his own behalf, or the testimony of the deceased or insane person is put into the case in behalf of the executor, ad-

interest with him, would offer it, this reason for the admission ministrator, heir-at-law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee, survivor, or committee, then all other persons are thereby so far rendered competent witnesses.

Temessee (Code, 1884, secs. 4560, 4563, 4564, and 4565). In civil actions, parties and persons interested are competent witnesses, but no party can testify as to any transaction or conversation with or statement by any opposite party in interest, if such opposite party is incompetent or disqualified by insantly, unless called by the opposite party, and then only in the discretion of the court; and further, in actions to which executors, administrators, or guardians are parties, and in which the judgment may affect them, neither party can testify as to any transaction with or statement by the testator, intestate, or ward unless called by the opposite party.

Texas (Rev. Stat. art. 2246, 2248). These statutes allow parties and persons interested in the suit to testify, except that in actions to which executors, administrators, or guardians are parties, and in which the judgment may affect them, neither party can testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by a testator, intestate, or ward, unless called by the opposite party; and this exclusion extends to all actions by or against heirs or legal representatives of the decedent arising out of any transaction with such decedent.

Utah (Compiled Laws, 1888, vol. 2, tit. 10, ch. 2, secs. 3876, 3877). Parties and interested persons are competent though their credibility may be questioned, the jury being exclusive judges thereof. And further, parties or assignors of parties, or persons in whose behalf the action is prosecuted, against the executor or administrator, upon a claim or demand against the estate of the deceased person, are incompetent to testify as to any matter of fact occurring before the death of the decased person and equally within the knowledge of both witness and the deceased person.

Vermont (Rev. Law, 1880, secs. 1001, 1002, 1003). Parties and interested persons are competent in this State, their credibility being affected by the interest; but if one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action is dead or insane, the other party cannot testify in his own favor, except to meet or explain the testimony of living witnesses produced against him as to facts taking place after the death or insanity of the other party, or when the testimony of the deceased or insane person has been put in evidence against him; and further, in cases wherean executor or administrator is a party, the other party cannot testify in his own favor, unless the contract in issue was originally made with a person alive and competent, except as to acts since the probate of the will or the appointment of the administrator, or to meet testimony of living witnesses as to facts after the death of the other party.

The intention of the statute is to preserve equality between the parties, and it is held that the words, "contract in issue" mean the same as contract in dispute, or in question, and relate to the substantial issues made by the evidence as well as to the formal issues made by the pleadings (Barnes v. Dow, 59 Vt. 545; Richardson v. Wright, 58 Vt. 370; Willey v. Hunter, 57 Vt. 489); and that the term "the other party," means the other party to the contract in issue, and not the other party to the record. Barnes v. Dow, 59 Vt. 545, The rule does not prohibit the wife of a deceased person from testifying as to facts which she is otherwise competent to testify to, the contract in issue not being between herself and her husband. Stowe v. Bishop, 58 Vt. 500. Nor does it apply to agents by whom the contract was made. Kittell v. Railroad Co., 56 Vt. 106; Lytle v. Bond, 40 Vt. 618; Poquet v. North Hero, 44 Vt. 91; Hollister v. Young, 42 Vt. 403; Pember v. Congdon, 55 Vt. 59. In that State, if a party to the case testifies and dies, it is by statute provided that if his testimony is produced in another trial by stenography or in typewriting, the other party may testify in opposition to it; but it is held that this statutory provision does not extend to cases where the testimony is produced by witnesses from recollection only, and that in such case the other party cannot testify in opposition to the testimony so produced. Blair v. Ellsworth, 55 Vt. 417. The statute does not exclude persons interested in the suit, unless they are parties to the cause of action in issue and on trial. Lytle v. Bond, 40 Vt. 618. Nor does it exclude the offer of account-books with the suppletory oath of the party producing them. Thrall v. Seward, 37 Vt. 573; Johnson v. Dexter, 37 Vt. 641; Hunter v. Kittredge, 41 Vt. 359; Woodbury v. Woodbury, 48 Vt. 94. The expression, "contract or cause of action in issue or on trial," excludes all contracts or issues which are collateral to

The expression, "contract or cause of action in issue or on trial," excludes all contracts or issues which are collateral to the contract or cause of action being enforced. If the parties to the main contract are alive, they may both testify as to it. Cole v. Shurtleff, 41 Vt. 311; Morse v. Low, 44 Vt. 561. If the administrator puts in evidence a memorandum in writing of the deceased, the other party is held not to be competent to testify to explain the writing of the evidence totally fails; 4 "and it is not to be presumed that

4 "For where a man, who is interested in the matter in question, would also prove it, it rather is a ground for distrust, than any just cause of belief; for men are generally so short-sighted, as to look to their own private benefit, which is near them, rather than to the good of the world, 'which though on the sum of things really best for the individual,' is more remote; therefore from the nature of human passions and actions, there is more reason to distrust such a biassed testimony than to believe it. It is also easy for persons, who are prejudiced and prepossessed, to put false and unequal glosses upon what they give in evidence; and therefore the law removes them from testimony, to prevent their sliding into perjury; and it can be no injury to truth to remove those from the jury, whose testimony may hurt themselves, and can never induce any rational belief." 1 Gilb. Evid. by Lofft, p. 223.

or to state what was said or done on the occasion of giving it. Woodbury v. Woodbury, 48 Vt. 94. The surviving party cannot make himself competent as a witness by putting in evidence of the deceased in another case, upon the cause of action on trial. Walker v. Taylor, 43 Vt. 612. The statute in this State continues the disability as to all acts down to the appointment of the administrator, or the probate of the will. Ford v. Cheney, 40 Vt. 153; Roberts v. Lund, 45 Vt. 82. The rule does not extend to contracts or causes of actions having three or more parties; for if the action is against one of two surviving parties to the contract, the other party is competent to testify, even as to transactions between him and the deceased party alone. Read v. Sturtevant, 40 Vt. 521; Dawson v. Wait, 41 Vt. 626.

Sec. 1004. In this State, when accountbooks are put in, the party living may testify in whose handwriting the charges are and when made, but no further except to meet testimony of living witnesses as to facts occurring after the death of the other party. Jewett v. Winship, 42 Vt. 204; Hunter v. Kittredge, 41 Vt. 359.

Virginia (Code, 1887, secs. 3345, 3346, 3347, 3348, 3349). Parties and persons interested are competent, but if one party to the contract or transaction in issue is disqualified by death, insanity, infancy, or other legal cause, the other party cannot testify for himself or any other person whose interest is adverse to the disqualified party, unless called by the latter, or unless some person deriving an interest in or under the contract or transaction testifies thereto, or unless the contract or transaction was made with an agent now alive and competent. The usual exception to joint contractors and partners exists in this State, and it is also provided that if the contract or transaction was made with an agent of one of the parties, since deceased, the other party cannot testify to the transaction unless called by the principal, or unless the agent's testimony previously taken is given in behalf of his principal, or unless the principal himself testifies. The usual provision is also stated, if the testimony of a person subsequently disqualified has been taken pre-viously and is introduced in the trial, it authorizes the other party to testify to the same

Washington (Hill's Code, vol. 2, sec. 1646). Parties and persons interested are competent, except that if one party is executor, administrator, or legal representative of, or claiming under, a deceased person, or is a guardian or conservator of an insane person or minor under fourteen years of age, then neither party in interest or to the record can testify as to any transactions or statements with the deceased or insane person, or the minor, but this exclusion does not apply to parties of record who are merely representative or fiduciaries, and have no further interest in the action.

W. Virginia (Code, ch. 130, sec. 23). Parties and persons interested are competent, except that no party or person interested, or person from whom any party or interested person gets his title, can testify as to personal transoctions between himself and a person then deceased or insane, against the executor, administrator, heir-at-law, next of kin, as-signee, legatee, devisee, or survivor of the deceased person, or the assignee or committee of the insane person; but if the executor, administrator, heir-at-law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee, survivor, or committee, is examined in his own behalf, or the testimony of the deceased person or lunatic, is read in evidence, this renders the other party competent as to such points.

Wisconsin (Rev. Stat. 1878, sec. 4068, 4069). Persons or parties interested in an action are competent, this point affecting only their credibility; but no party and no person from whom a party derives title can testify as to any transaction or communication by him with a deceased person or person then insane, if the opposite party derives his title or de-fends his liability from or under such deceased or insane person; or if the insune person is a party to the suit by his guardian; unless such opposite party was first examined personally, or puts in testimony as to such transaction or communication, or unless the testia man, who complains without cause, or defends without justice, should have honesty enough to confess it." 5

mony of the deceased or insane person is given in evidence by the opposite party, and then only as to the transactions to which such testimony relates.

In this State, it is held that in an action for board and lodging furnished to the deceased, it is competent for the plaintiff to show how long the defendant's intestate boarded with the plaintiff, and the kind of board furnished by the plaintiff, since these are not transactions with the deceased, but independent facts. Pritchard v. Pritchard, 69 Wis. 373. And, in general, the fact of furnishing supplies or goods to the deceased, from which the law implies a promise to pay, is not held to be covered by the rule in this State. Belden v. Scott, 65 Wis. 426. And it has been held that a letter is not within this exclusion, because a personal transaction means a face to face transaction. Daniels v. Foster, 26 Wis. 686. And that such evidence is admissible when it is an admission against his interest, as of a payment of money due to him. Crowe v. Colbeth, 63 Wis. 643. If evidence barred by the rule is put in without objection, and then evidence to rebut it is introduced, the objection to it is waived. Phillips v. McGrath, 62 Wis. 124. If a third person is present at such a conversation, he or she may testify to it, although it may be the wife of the deceased person, without rendering competent the testimony of the surviving party. Burnham v. Mitchell, 34 Wis. 117. The payee of a note may testify with what kind of ink he signed it, whether he struck ont any printed words, and other facts bearing on the question of alteration. Page v. Danaher, 43 Wis. 221. And if a question is put which does not appear to require an answer which is objectionable under the rule, it is error to exclude the question. Adams v. Allen, 44 Wis. 93. A defendant who is not interested in the suit, but is a party, cannot testify under this rule. Knox v. Bigelow, 15 Wis. 455. A partner, while acting in the affairs of the partnership, is so far an agent of the other partners as to come under the section of this statute applying to agents. Rogers v. Brightman, 10 Wis. 55; Whitney v. Traynor, 74 Wis. 293.
Sec. 4070. It is further provided in this

State that no party or person from whom a person claims title, can testify as to any transaction with an agent of the adverse party, or the person from whom the adverse party claims title if the agent is dead or insane, or otherwise disquatified, unless the opposite party either testifies himself or puts in evidence as to the transaction, or unless the testimony of the agent is put in evidence by the opposite party and then only as to the points which such testimony touches.

In England, an attempt has been made to urge upon the courts a rule that if one of the parties to a transaction is dead, the testimony of the other cannot fix a claim growing out of the transaction upon the estate of the deceased without corroboration, but the courts have explicitly refused to sanction such a rule, saying that while such testimony should be received with caution, and even suspicion, yet if it stands the test, it is legal evidence to support the claim. Gandy v. Macanlay, L. R. 31 Ch. D. 1; Beckett v. Ramsdale, L. R. 31 Ch. D. 177.

In many of the States, moreover, any person who is accused in a criminal proceeding may, if he wishes, testify in his own behalf; but in all cases where this provision exists, the right of the accused not to offer himself as a witness is carefully recognized, and, in many instances, an express provision of statute enacts that no presumption shall be drawn, unfavorable to him, from his refusal to testify. § 330. Same subject. The rule of the common law goes still further in regard to parties to the record in not compelling them, in trials by jury, to give evidence for the opposite party, against themselves, either in civil or in criminal cases. Whatever may be said by theorists, as to the policy of the maxim, Nemo tenetur seipsum prodere, no inconvenience has been felt in its practical application. On the contrary, after centuries of experience, it is still applauded by judges, as, "a rule founded in good sense and sound policy;" and it certainly preserves the party from temptation to perjury. This rule extends to all the actual and real parties to the suit, whether they are named on the record as such or not.2

§ 331. Corporators. Whether corporators are parties within the meaning of this rule is a point not perfectly clear. Corporations, it is to be observed, are classed into public or municipal, and private, corporations. The former are composed of all the inhabitants of any of the local or territorial portions into which the country is divided in its political organization. Such are counties, towns, boroughs, local parishes, and the like. In these cases, the attribute of individuality is conferred on the entire mass of inhabitants, and again is modified, or taken away, at the mere will of the legislature, according to its own views of public convenience, and without any necessity for the consent of the inhabitants, though not ordinarily against it. They are termed quasi corporations; and are dependent on the public will, the

For the statutes at large, and decisions affecting this point, see post, vol. iii. see. 39 a. It may be doubted whether any statutory provision would be able to prevent the jury from taking a bias against a defendant who should refuse to explain the suspicious facts against him by going on the stand. Cf. Com. v. Moran, 130 Mass. 281; People v. Jones, 24 Mich. 215. Whether, where the statute does not pro-hibit any adverse inference, from the fact that the prisoner does not take the stand, the failure raises a presumption against him, see State, v. Lawrence, 57 Me. 574, pro.; People v. Tyler, 36 Cal. 522; Crandall v. People, 2 Lausing (N.Y.), 309, contra. And see also State v. Cameron, 40 Vt. 555; Ruloff v. People, 45 N. Y. 213; Calkins v. State, 18 Ohio St. 366.

It is, however, held that if the defendant in a criminal case, or either party to a civil suit, goes on the stand as a witness in his own behalf, he waives all the rights which an ordinary witness would have, as well as his right to refuse to testify in the case, and must answer questions which tend to criminate him, or which relate to confidential communications with his atcondential communications with his atterney, if the questions relate to matters material to the cause in hand (Com. v. Mullen, 97 Mass. 545; Com. v. Morgan, 107 Id. 199; Woburn v. Henshaw, 101 Mass. 193; McGarry v. People, 2 Lans. (N. Y.) 227), and may be impeached like an ordinary witness. Com. v. inhabitants not, in general, deriving any private and personal rights under the act of incorporation; its office and object being not to grant private rights, but to regulate the manner of performing public duties. 1(a) These corporations sue and are sued by the name of "the Inhabitants of "such a place; each inhabitant is directly liable in his person to arrest, and in his goods to seizure and sale, on the execution, which may issue against the collective body, by that name; and of course each one is a party to the suit; and his admissions, it seems, are receivable in evidence, though their value, as we have seen, may be exceedingly light.² Being parties, it would seem naturally to follow, that these inhabitants were neither admissible as witnesses for themselves, nor compellable to testify against themselves; but considering the public nature of the suits, in which they are parties, and of the interest generally involved in them, the minuteness of the private and personal interest concerned, its contingent character, and the almost certain failure of justice, if the rule were carried out to such extent in its application, these inhabitants are admitted as competent witnesses in all cases, in which the rights and liabilities of the corporation only are in controversy. But where the inhabitants are individually and personally interested, it is otherwise. 3(b) Whether this exception to the general rule

Whether a municipal corporation can in every case be dissolved by an act of the legislature, and to what extent such act of dissolution may constitutionally operate, are questions which it is not necessary here to discuss. ⁸ Swift's Evid. 57; Rex v. Mayor of London, 2 Lev. 231. Thus an inhabitant is not competent to prove a way by prescription for all the inhabitants, Odiorne v. Wade, 8 Pick. 518; nor a right in all the inhabitants to take shell-fish, Lufkin v. Haskell, 3 Pick. 556; for in such cases, by the common law, the record would be evidence of the custom, in favor of the witness. This ground of objection, however, is now removed in England, by Stat. 3 & 4 W. IV. c. 42. The same principle is applied to any private, joint, or common interest. Parker v. Mitchell, 11 Ad. & El. 788. See also Prewit v. Tilly, 1 C. & P. 140; Ang. & Ames on Corp. 390-394; Connecticut v. Bradish, 14 Mass. 296; Gould v. James, 6 Cowen, 369; Jacobson v. In the English courts, a distinction is taken between rated and ratable inhabitants, the former being held inadmissible as witnesses, and the latter being held competent; and this distinction has been recognized in some of our own courts; though, upon the grounds stated in the text, it does not seem applicable to our institutions, and is now generally disregarded. See Commonwealth v. Baird, 4 S. & R. 141; Falls v. Belknap, 1 Johns. 486, 491; Corwein v. Hames, 11 Johns. 76; Bloodgood v. Jamaica, 12 Johns. 285; supra § 175, n., and the cases above cited. But in England, rated inhabitants are now by statutes made competent witnesses on indictments for non-repair of bridges was solely created by the statutes, which have been passed on this subject, or previously existed at common law, of which the statutes are declaratory, is not perfectly agreed. In either case, the general reason and necessity, on which the exception is founded, seem to require, that where inhabitants are admissible as witnesses for the corporation, they should also be compellable to testify against it. But the point is still a vexed question.⁵

§ 332. Same subject. Private corporations, in regard to our present inquiry, may be divided into two classes; namely, pecuniary or moneyed institutions, such as banks, insurance, and manufacturing companies, and the like, and institutions or societies for religious and charitable purposes. In the former, membership is obtained by the purchase of stock or shares, without the act or assent of the corporation, except prospectively and generally, as provided in its charter and by-laws; and the interest thus acquired is private, pecuniary, and vested, like ownership of any other property. In the latter, membership is conferred by special election; but the member has no private interest in the funds, the whole property being a trust for the benefit of others. But all these are equally corporations proper; and it is the corporation, and not the individual member, that is party to the record in all suits by or against it.1 Hence it follows, that the

In the Province of New Brunswick, rated inhabitants are now made competent witnesses in all cases where the town or parish may in any manner be affected, or where it may be all cases where the town or parish may in any manner be affected, or where it may be interested in a pecuniary penalty, or where its officers, acting in its behalf, are parties. Stat. 9 Vict. c. 4, March 7, 1846. In several of the United States, also, the inhabitants of counties and other municipal, territorial, or quasi corporations are expressly declared by statutes to be competent witnesses, in all suits in which the corporation is a party. See Maine, Rev. Stat. 1840, c. 115, § 75; Massachusetts, Rev. Stat. c. 94, § 54; Vermont, Rev. Stat. 1839, c. 31, § 18; New York, Rev. Stat. vol. i, pp. 408, 439 (3d ed.); Pennsylvania, Dunl. Paltz, 16 Johns. 305.

§ 333. Corporators excluded from interest. But the members or stockholders, in institutions created for private emolument, though not parties to the record, are not therefore admissible as witnesses; for, in matters in which the corporation is concerned, they of course have a direct, certain, and vested interest which necessarily excludes them.¹ Yet the members of charitable and religious societies, having no personal and private interest in the property holden by the corporation, are competent witnesses in any suit in which the corporation is a party. On this ground, a mere trustee of a savings bank, not being a stockholder or a depositor,² and a trustee of a society for the instruction of seamen,³ and trustees of many other eleemosynary institutions, have been held admissible witnesses in such suits. But where a member of a private corporation is inadmissible as a witness generally, he may still be called upon to produce the corporate documents, in an action against the corporation; for he is a mere depositary, and the party objecting to his competency is still entitled to inquire of him concerning the custody of the documents.4 And if the trustee, or other member of an eleemosynary corporation, is liable to costs, this is an interest which renders him incompetent, even though he may have an ultimate remedy over. 5

§ 334. Husband and wife. The rule by which parties are excluded from being witnesses for themselves applies to the case of husband and wife; neither of them being admissible as a witness in a cause, civil or criminal, in which the other is a party. 1 This exclusion is founded partly on the identity of their legal rights and interests, and partly on principles of public policy, which lie at the basis of civil society. For it is essential to the happiness of social life that the confidence subsisting between husband and wife should be sacredly protected and cherished in its most unlimited extent; and to break down or impair the great principles which protect the sanctities of that relation would be to destroy the best solace of human existence. 2(a) [Ed. (a) Many States have enacted statutes regulating the admissibility of husband and wife as witnesses. There are, as the author says, two grounds for excluding their testimony. First, a general incom-petency of husband and wife to testify on account of their identity of interest when the other is a party to the suit or interested in the event; second, the disadvantages arising from allowing either to testify as to communications made in the confidence of the marital relation, which are hereinafter referred to as "confidential communications." In the latter case the fact that neither husband nor wife is a party to the suit is immaterial. It has been thought best to collect the statutes and decisions at this place, since the majority of them apply to the incompetency arising from interest in the suit. See also, however, for some decisions, ante, § 254. In Alabama, it is held that the husband of a party can only testify in her favor as to transactions in which he acted as her agent; and the wife is not competent as a witness for the husband. Woods v. State, 76 Ala. 35; Hussey v. State, 87 Ala. 135. In Ar-kansas (Code, sec. 2859, cl. 4), husband and wife are incompetent to testify for or against each other, or as to confidential comsubject has been regulated in many States by statutes which are given in the notes below.]

munications made during the marriage; but either can testify for the other as to any business transacted by the one for the other as agent. See Collins v. Mack, 31 Ark. 684; Phipps v. Martin, 33 Ark. 207; Watkins v. Turner, 34 Ark. 663. In California (Civ. Code, sec. 1881, cl. 1), neither can be examined for or against the other without the other's consent; nor can either at any time testify without the consent of the other to any confidential communications; but this exclusion does not apply to a civil action or proceeding, by one against the other, nor to a criminal proceeding for a crime committed by one against the other. In criminal cases in the same State (Crim. Code, sec. 1322), except with the consent of both, or in cases of criminal violence upon one by the other, neither husband nor wife is a competent witness for or against the other in a criminal proceeding in which one or both are parties. Under this section it has been held that proof of reputation in a community, and long cohabitation and mingling in society is sufficient prima facie evidence of marriage between the parties. People v. Anderson, 26 Cal. 130. But there must be some proof of the marriage, otherwise the person is a competent witness. People v. Alviso, 55 Cal. 230. The rule has been extended so as to exclude declarations out of court made by the wife to a third person, who introduces them in evidence. People v. Simonds, 19 Cal. 276. But in another case evidence of her acts and exclamations at the time of a killing, for which her husband was afterwards indicted, made in his presence and hearing, was admitted. People v. Murphy, 45 Cal. 143. In Colorado, the statutory enactments in this regard are almost precisely similar to those in California (Gen. Laws, sec. 3649). Connecticut (Gen. Sts. sec. 1097), a wife is by statute a competent witness against her husband in any action brought against him for necessaries furnished her while living apart from him. In this State (Sec. 1623), in criminal trials the husband or wife of the accused is a competent witness, but may elect or refuse to testify for or against the accused, except that the wife, when she has received personal violence from her husband, may upon his trial therefor, be compelled to testify in the same manner as any other witness. In this State, it is held at common law that the rule of cvidence that the wife shall not testify against her husband is founded upon principles of public policy, and is not applicable in actions where the husband and wife have conflicting interests and are opposing parties, such as in suits for divorce, or suits by the wife seeking protection against the husband, or in suits between them in equity relating to the wife's separate estate. Accordingly, it was held that the wife's testimony was admissible, in an action by her against her husband in insolvency, to reclaim a portion of her estate. Spitz's App. 56 Conn. 185. In Florida (Laws, ch. 101, sec. 23, and Acts of 1891, sec. 4029), in civil actions neither husband nor wife is excluded as a witness in cases wherein either said husband or wife is an interested party. In Georgia (Code, sec. 3854, cl. 4), no husband is competent or compellable to give evidence for or against his wife in any criminal proceeding, nor is a wife in any criminal proceeding competent or compellable to give evidence for or against her husband, but the wife is competent, but not compellable, to testify against her husband upon his trial for any criminal offence committed or attempted to have been committed upon her. In Illinois (Rev. Stat. ch. 51, sec. 5), neither husband nor wife can at any time testify for or against the other as to any transaction or conversation occurring during the marriage, except in cases where the wife would, if unmarried, be plaintiff or defendant, or where the action is for a personal wrong or injury done by one to the other, or is for the neglect of the husband to support the wife, and except in cases where the litigation is not concerning the separate property of the wife, and suits for divorce, and except, also, in actions upon policies of insurance on property as to the amount or value of the property injured, or in actions against carriers as to the loss of property and the amount and value thereof, or in all transactions where the married woman acted as the agent of her husband, in all of which cases the husband and wife may testify for or against the other just as other parties may; but this act does not permit either husband or wife to testify to admissions or conversations of the other, even if made to third parties, except in suits between the husband and wife. This statute does not apply to criminal cases. People, 58 Ill. 59. The exclusion continues after divorce (Crose v. Rutledge, 81 Ill. 266), but only applies when the husband or wife is a party to the record, even though he or she may be interested in the event. Lincoln Avenue &c. Road Co. v. Madaus, 102 Ill. 417. When neither husband nor wife are parties to the suit, the wife may testify to conversations occurring during the existence of the marriage relation. Galbraith v. McLain,

§ 335. Extent of the rule. The principle of this rule requires

84 Ill. 379. Under this statute it is held that since the competency of husband and wife is made to depend upon the same rules as "other parties," the provisions of the statutes excluding'the evidence of parties when the opposite party represents a deceased person, applies equally to husband and wife. Treleaven v. Dixon, 119 Ill. 551; Harriman v. Sampson, 23 Ill. App. 161; Shaw v. Schoonover, 130 Ill. 448. In Indiana (Rev. Sts. sec. 501), if a husband or wife is a party and decease the results of the second of t not a competent witness in his or her own behalf, the other is also excluded, except that the husband is a competent witness in a suit for seduction of the wife, but she is not com-petent. In this State, it is held that testimony as to negotiations between the husband and wife as to a conveyance of land from one to the other are not such communications as to come under the protection of the statute. Beitman v. Hopkins, 109 Ind. 178. In Iowa (Code, sec. 3641), neither husband nor wife can in any case be a witness against the other, except in a criminal prosecution for a crime committed by one against the other, or in a civil action of one against the other; but they may in all civil and criminal cases be witnesses for each other. It is held that when a wife testifies in behalf of her husband the credibility of her evidence is to be subject to the same tests as are applied to other witnesses. State v. Guyer, 6 Iowa, 263. And it is error for the court to instruct the jury that her testimony should be examined with particular care. State v. Bernard, 45 Iowa, 234; State v. Collins, 20 Iowa, 85. On the trial of an indictment for bigamy the legal husband or wife of the defendant is a competent witness in behalf of the prosecution. State v. Sloan, 55 Iowa, 217. In an indictment against both husband and wife for keeping a house where intoxicating liquors have been unlawfully sold, the trial of both taking place together, the wife is a competent witness for her husband, but her testimony cannot be considered in her own behalf. State v. Donovan, 41 Iowa, 587. In this State, there is a further provision (Code, sec. 3642) that neither husband nor wife can be examined in any case as to any communication made by one to the other while married, nor shall they after the marriage relation ceases, be permitted to reveal in testimony any such communication made while the marriage subsisted. This section does not render the wife incompetent, after the death of her husband, to testify as to matters which she knew of her own knowledge.

Romans v. Hay, 12 Iowa, 270. In Kansas (Gen. Sts. sec. 5280), the husband or wife of the accused in criminal cases is competent but shall not be required to testify except on behalf of the accused, and the neglect or refusal of the wife to testify for her husband shall not raise any presumption of guilt, nor be referred to by any attorney prosecuting the case; in civil actions (sec. 4418), husband or wife are incompetent to testify for or against each other concerning transactions in which one acted as the agent of the other, or when they are joint parties or have a joint interest in the action; and neither can at any time testify as to any confidential communi-cations. Under the section referring to competency in criminal cases, it is held that the wife of the accused in a criminal case is a competent witness for the State. The court cannot require her to testify, but may permit her to do so voluntarily. State v. McCord, 8 Kans. 161. In Maine (Rev. Sts. ch. 134, sec. 19, and ch. 82, sec. 93), the husband or wife of the accused in a criminal case is a competent witness; and the husband or wife of either party in a civil case may be a witness. Under this statute it is held that if the action is against the representatives of a deceased person, the husband or wife of the opposite party is not competent, the competency in such case being governed by the rules as to parties. Berry v. Stevens, 69 Me. 290; Jones v. Simpson, 59 Me. 180. The design of this statute is to do away with the incompetency of husband and wife as witnesses at common law, and not to render them competent where by law their testimony would be excluded on a different ground. Drew v. Roberts, 48 Me. 35. In Maryland (Gen. Laws, art. 35, sec. 1), the wife or husband of a party to a suit or one on whose behalf it is brought, is competent and compellable to testify; and (sec. 3) in criminal proceedings the husband or wife of the accused party is competent, but in no case, civil or criminal, shall any husband or wife be competent to disclose any confidential communication made by the one to the other during the marriage. In Massachusetts (Pub. Sts. ch. 169, sec. 18), neither husband nor wife can testify as to private conversations with the other, and neither is compellable to be a witness on any criminal proceeding against the other. As to what are private conversations, see ante, sec. 254, note. In Michigan (Howell's Annot. Stat. sec. 7543), marital relationship does not exclude any party to the proceeding, but may be shown to affect his credibility; and also (sec. 7546, as amended in Michigan Sup-

its application to all cases in which the interests of the other plement, vol. 3) neither husband nor wife can be examined for or against the other without the other's consent, except in cases where the cause of action is for a personal wrong done by one to the other, or is for the refusal or neglect to support the wife or children; and except in cases where either is a party to the record in a proceeding where the title to the separate property of the one offered as a witness is the subject-matter in controversy, in opposition to the claim or interest of the other who is a party to the record in such proceeding; and in all such cases the husband or wife who makes such claim or title, or under or from whom such title is derived, is as competent to testify in relation to the separate property and the title thereto, without the consent of the other, who is a party to the record, as though the marriage relation did not exist; neither can, at any time, without the consent of both, be examined as to any confidential communications; but in any action by either, in consequence of adultery, the husband and wife shall not be competent to testify. Previous to the enactment of this statute the courts of equity had assumed the power to call the parties as witnesses when in their opinion it was necessary to get at the facts of the case, and this statute does not take away the power from the court. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 37 Mich. 605. Under the statute, as above recited, it is held that when the litigation is between husband and wife and relating to title to their separate property, they can testify without the consent of the other, even as to communications made confidentially during the existence of the marriage relation. Hunt v. Eaton, 55 Mich. 362. But except in such litigation neither death nor divorce can render either of them competent to testify as to such confidential communications. Hitchcock v. Moore, 70 Mich. 112; Maynard v. Vinton, 59 Mich. 139. In actions for criminal conversation, the husband cannot testify, nor can the wife testify for him. Gleason v. Knapp, 56 Mich. 291; Mathews v. Yerex, 48 Mich. 361; Cross v. Cross, 55 Mich. 280. See also, on this section, Perry v. Lovejoy, 49 Mich. 529; Hubbell v. Grant, 39 Mich. 641; White v. Ross, 47 Mich. 172. In Minnesota (Statutes, sec. 5094), a statute similar to the statute of California, shove quoted, is enacted. State v. Armstrong, 4 Minn. 251. Under this statute it is held that any communication between husband and wife is excluded by the statute. The court discusses the question as to whether the communication must be of a confidential nature, and holds that this limitation is not only excluded by the phraseology of the statute, but would be extremely difficult of application, introducing a separate additional issue in each case; and that to enable the court to judge as to its character, the communication would have to be disclosed, and so the very mischief committed which was designed to be prevented. Leppla v. Minnesota Tribune Co., 35 Minn. 311. In the case of Wolford v. Farnham, 44 Minn. 159, the court construed the statute as holding that an ordinary civil action, whatever might be its purpose, could not be construed to be a proceeding "supplementary to execution," even though it came after the execution and was in aid

In Mississippi (Rev. Code, sec. 1601), either husband or wife is a competent witness in all cases civil or criminal; and (Laws of 1886, ch. 60, p. 142, sec. 1) either husband or wife is competent to testify in his or her own behalf as against the other in a controversy between them involving the property of either, or their marital relations, or the custody of their children, or the chil-dren of either of them, or the property of the children of either of them. In Missouri (Rev. Sts. sec. 8922), married women are made competent in any civil suit by or against their husbands, whether joined or not as a party, in the following cases, to wit: First, in actions upon policies of insurance of property so far as relates to the amount and value of the property alleged to be injured or destroyed; second, in actions against carriers, so fur as relates to the loss of property and the amount and value thereof; third, in all business transactions conducted by the manifest and the second constants. ducted by the married woman as the agent of her husband; and a married man is sim-ilarly competent when he acts as agent of his wife; but no married woman can, while the relation exists, or subsequently, testify to any admissions or conversations of her husband, whether made to herself or to third parties. Under this statute it is held that the wife is a competent witness when joined with her husband as a party to a suit, except as to communications between the two. Buck v. Ashbrook, 51 Mo. 539; Tingley v. Cowgill, 48 Mo. 291. And also, where either of them is a nominal party to the suit. Haerle v. Kreihn, 65 Mo. 202; Steffen v. Bauer, 70 Mo. 399; Fisher v. New Orleans Anchor Line, 15 Mo. App. 577. When the husband and wife are opposite parties in a suit, neither can testify as to communications made by one to the other. Moore v. Moore, 51 party are involved. And, therefore, the wife is not a competent

Mo. 118. The marriage of a woman plaintiff pending her suit, will not render her incompetent to testify. Charles v. St. L. & I. M. R. R. Co., 58 Mo. 458. In a recent case in Missouri, it was held that where the wife sues for her distributive share of her husband's estate after his death, and after the creditors have been paid, she is not rendered incompetent by section 4010 of the Revised Statutes, relating to deceased parties. Hoyt v. Davis, 30 Mo. App. 313. If the wife be an incompetent witness, the husband should properly be excluded from testifying. Harrington v. Sedalia, 98 Mo. 589. In this State (section 4218), in criminal cases the husband or wife of the accused is competent, but the relationship may be shown for the purpose of affecting the credibility of the witness; neither the husband nor wife of the accused can be required to testify, but either may, at the option of the defendant, testify in his behalf, or on behalf of a co-defendant, and is then liable to cross-examination, and may be contradicted and impeached as any other witness in the case; confidential communications between them are incompetent in criminal cases, and further (sec. 4219), if the accused shall not avail himself or herself of the testimony of the wife or husband, on the trial, it shall not be construed to affect the innocence or guilt of the accused, nor to raise any presumption of guilt, nor be referred to by any attorney in the case, nor be considered by the court or jury before whom the trial takes place. In Montana (Code of Civ. Proc. sec. 649), are provisions similar to those of California. In Nebraska (Civ. Code Proc. sec. 328, cl. 3), communications made by the one to the other during the marriage are excluded at all times; and (sec. 331) neither can in any case be a witness against the other, except in a criminal proceeding for a crime committed by one against the other; but they may in all criminal prosecutions be witnesses for each other. Further (sec. 332), neither husband nor wife can be examined in any case as to any communication made by the one to the other while married, nor shall they, after the marriage relation cease, be permitted to reveal, in testimony, any such communication made while the marriage subsisted. In Nevada (Gen. Stat. sec. 3403), neither can be a witness for or against the other without the other's consent; and neither can, without the consent of the other, be examined at any time as to communications made by one to the other during the marriage. But this exception does not apply to an action or proceeding by one against the other. In New Hampshire (Pub. Stat. ch. 223, sec. 20), husband and wife are competent witnesses for or against each other in all cases civil or criminal, except that neither shall be allowed to testify as to any statement or conversation, letter or other communication made to the other or to another person, or as to any matter which in the opinion of the court would be thought to be a violation of marital confidence. Under this statute it is held that the policy of the statutes of New Hampshire on this point is to make the husband and wife competent witnesses for or against each other, just as though they were strangers, except in the single case where the court can see it would lead to the violation of marital confidence. They are to be allowed, but not compelled, to testify for or against each other in all cases, just like persons in no way related to each other, with this single exception; and this marital confidence must be something confided by one to the other simply and specially as husband and wife, and not what would be communicated to any other person in the same circumstances. Jersey (Rev. vol. 1, p. 378, sec. 5), the husband or wife of parties, or of any person interested in the suit, is a competent and compellable witness on behalf of any party to the proceeding; but no husband or wife is competent or compellable for or against the other in any criminal proceeding, or in any proceeding for divorce on account of adultery, except to prove the fact of marriage; and, another section (p. 1313, sec. 1) gives the right to either in a criminal action to prove the fact of marriage. Later enactments also provide (Supp. Rev. p. 287, title Evidence) that the above recited statutes shall be construed to authorize husband or wife in any criminal action against either, to give evidence to prove the fact of mar-riage; and still further, that upon trial for murder or manslaughter, the husband or wife of the prisoner shall be admitted to testify as a witness upon such trial, if he or she volunteers on behalf of the prisoner; and that upon any criminal trial the wife or husband of the person indicted or accused shall be admitted to testify in behalf of the prisoner, if produced as a witness by the person accused. In this State, it is also enacted (Supp. Rev. title Evid. 6) that any husband or wife may give evidence on their own behalf, or for or against each other in any proceeding for divorce on account of adultery.

Under these statutes previous to the changes introduced by the supplementary statutes, above stated, it was held that in equity this statute did not protect the wife from making a discovery relating witness against any co-defendant tried with her husband, if the

solely to her own conduct and affecting only her own interests. Metler v. Metler, 18 N. J. Eq. 270. It was also held that the wife in a suit between others may not testify to any matter for which her husband might be indicted. Stewart v. Johnson, 18 N. J. L. 88. Nor can a husband, in a collateral proceeding, testify directly as to his wife being guilty of an indictable offence. State v. Wilson, 31 N. J. L. 77. But if the matter is not indictable, the husband or wife being witnesses in a case to which any other is a party, may be asked questions tending to cast discredit upon the testimony of the other who has already testified in the same case. Ware v. State, 35 N. J. I., 553. Prior to the passage of section six of the supplementary acts, above stated, neither husband nor wife in a suit for divorce for adultery was a competent witness to prove or disprove the charge. Marsh v. Marsh, 29 N. J. Eq. 296; Donghty v. Donghty, 32 N. J. Eq. 32; Franz v. Franz, 32 N. J. Eq. 483. Under the statute it was held that the wife is incompetent to testify to a gift to her from her husband. Schick v. Grote, 42 N. J. Eq. 356. Upon the question of the testimony of the wife in a suit against the heirs-at-law of the deceased N. J. Eq. 86. In New York (Rev. Stat. Code Civ. Proc. sec. 828), the husband or wife of a party is a competent witness; but (sec. 831) a husband or wife is not competent to testify against the other upon the trial of any proceeding founded upon an allega-tion of adultery, except to prove the mar-riage or disprove the allegation of adultery, and husband and wife shall not be compelled, without the consent of the other, if living, to disclose a confidential communica-tion made by one to the other during marriage. In an action for criminal conversa-tion, the plaintiff's wife is not a competent witness for the plaintiff, but she is a competent witness for the defendant as to any matter in controversy, except that she cannot, without the plaintiff's consent, disclose any confidential communication had or made between herself and the plaintiff. And, further (sec. 715), the husband or wife of a person indicted or accused of a crime, is in all cases a competent witness on the examination or trial of such person, but neither the husband nor wife can be compelled to disclose a confidential communication made by one to the other during marriage. Under this section of the Code, the husband or wife is competent in his or her own behalf, in an action where they are co-plaintiffs or codefendants. Bingham v. Disbrow, 5 Trans.

App. 198. See also De Meli v. De Meli, 120 N. Y. 492; Wilke v. People, 53 N. Y. 525. In North Carolina (Code, sec. 588), the husband or wife of any party, or of any person in whose behalf such proceeding is brought or defended, are competent and compellable, but neither husband or wife is competent or compellable to give evidence for or against the other in any criminal action or proceeding except to prove the fact of marriage in case of bigamy, or in any action or proceeding in consequence of adultery, or in any action or proceeding for divorce on account of adultery, except to prove the act of marriage, or in any action or proceeding for or on account of criminal conversation. husband or wife shall be compelled to disclose any confidential communication made by one to the other during their marriage; and (sec. 1353) the husband or wife of the defendant in criminal cases are competent; but the failure of such witness to be examined shall not be used to the prejudice of the defence. And every such person examined as a witness shall be subject to be cross-examined as other witnesses. The statute of North Carolina does not permit husband or wife to testify as to private conversations. Norris v. Stewart, 105 N. C. 455. In Ohio (Rev. Stat. sec. 5241, el. 3), communications made by one to the other, or acts done by either in the presence of the other during coverture, are excluded, unless the communication was made, or act done, in the known presence or hearing of a third person competent to be a witness, and the rule is the same if the marital relation has ceased to exist. And (sec. 7284) further, husband and wife are in criminal proceedings competent witnesses to testify in behalf of each other; but neither husband nor wife can testify concerning acts or communications as above set forth, except in cases of personal injury by either the husband or the wife to the other. Under this statute, as in most similar instances, a divorce is held not to render competent the testimony of the wife as to matters occurring during the continuance of the marriage relation. Cook v. Grange, 18 Ohio, 526. Neither is the rule affected by the fact that neither husband nor wife is interested in the result of the suit, whether the husband or wife be a party to the action, or only interested in the event of the same, the policy of the rule applies. Bird v. Hueston, 10 Oh. St. 418. The evidence that a third person was present at the time of the communications, should be offered to the court and not to the jury, as it affects the competency of the evidence. On error it will be presumed to have been satisfactorily proved to the court. Westerman v. Westerman, 25 Oh. St. 500; Howard v. Brower, 37 Oh. St. 402. Outside of the limitations set forth in the statute, a married woman is competent to testify to all matters within her knowledge. Bean v. Green, 33 Oh. St. 444. A wife was not a competent witness for her husband in a criminal prosecution until the passage of the recent statute, but they have always been competent as against each other in criminal actions for personal injuries inflicted by one upon the other. Whipp v. State, 34 Oh. St. 87. See Steen v. State, 20 Oh. St. 333. As to the presence of third persons, either the husband or wife can be called to testify as to the known presence, hearing, or knowledge of a third McCague v. Miller, 36 Oh. St. 595. The competency of the third person, whose presence renders the testimony admissible, means competent at the time of the act done, or time of the communication made, and not at the time of the trial of the case. Neither will the death of the third person subsequently render the evidence incompetent. Sieving v. Seidelmeyer, 4 Bull. 213. In Pennsylvania (Laws of 1887, ch. 89, sec. 2, cl. b), neither husband nor wife is competent or permitted to testify against each other, or in support of a criminal charge of adultery alleged to have been committed by or with the other, except that in proceedings for desertion and maintenance, and in any criminal proceeding against either for bodily injury or violence attempted, done, or threatened on the other, each is a competent witness against the other; but (cl. c) neither husband nor wife are competent or permitted to testify to confidential communications made by one to the other, unless this privilege be waived upon trial; and further (sec. 5, cl. c), neither husband nor wife ore competent or permitted to testify against the other in civil proceedings, except in proceedings for divorce in which personal service of the subpæna, or of a rule to take de-positions, has been made upon an opposite party, or in which the opposite party appears and defends, in which case either may fully testify against the other. These sections guard the interests of the husband or wife as well when they are not a party to the suit in question as when they are. Thus, in the case of Pleasanton v. Nutt, 115 Pa. St. 269, the wife, who was plaintiff, was called as a witness, and under objection and exception testified in substance that her husband, Alexander W. Nutt, purchased the furniture for which the suit was brought, and gave it to her. The court held that she was incompetent to thus prove title in herself, because in so doing she was testifying against the interest of her husband. While he was not a party to the record, he was, nevertheless, interested in the result, in that his wife's testimony, to the effect that the furniture was not his but hers, at the time he sold it to the defendant below. tended to make him liable for breach of his implied warranty of title in the sale of the furniture as his own. And it was further held in Burrell Township v. Uncapher, 117 Pa. St. 362, where the action was brought in the names of the husband and wife, but in the right of the wife, and for the recovery of damages for an injury sustained by her, that the husband was merely joined in his capacity as husband, and to conform to the rules of pleading; and in such circumstances, when called to testify against his wife, he could not be regarded merely as a party to the record in order to make him competent as a party called for cross-examination, but is incompetent to deliver testimony adverse to his wife; and the same is true as to declarations made by him. Martin v. Rutt, 127 Pa. St. 383. The case of Brock v. Brock, 116 Pa. St. 113, holds that the wife, even after divorce, is not competent to testify to a matter of a confidential nature which occurred between herself and her husband during the existence of their marriage relation. In Rhode Island (Pub. Stat. ch. 214, sec. 36), in civil causes, except a petition for divorce, the husband or wife of either party is a competent witness, provided that neither shall be permitted to give any testimony tending to criminate the other, or to disclose any communication made to him or her by the other during their marriage; and (sec. 40) the husband or wife of any respondent in any criminal prosecution offering himself or herself as a witness, cannot be excluded from testifying therein because he or she is the husband or wife of such respondent. In South Carolina (Code Civ. Proc. sec. 400), the husband or wife of any party to a proceeding, nominal or real, is com-petent and compellable to give evidence the same as any other witness on behalf of any party; but no husband or wife can be com-pelled to disclose any confidential communication made by one to the other during their marriage. In Tennessee (Code, sec. 4563), neither husband nor wife are competent to testify as to any matter that occurred between them, by virtue of or in consequence of the marital relation.

In Texas (Rev. Stat. art. 2247), the husband or wife of a party to a suit or proceeding, or who has an interest in the issue to be tried, is not incompetent to testify therein, ex against him. 1 Nor is she a witness for a co-defendant, if her testimony, as in the case of a conspiracy, would tend directly to her husband's acquittal; nor where, as in the case of an assault,3 the interests of all the defendants are inseparable; nor in any suit

cept as to confidential communications between such husband and wife; and (Crim. Code, art. 734) in criminal cases neither husband nor wife can in any case testify as to any communications made by one to the other while married, nor can they after the marriage re-lation ceases, be made witnesses as to such communications made while the marriage relation subsisted, except in the case where one or the other is prosecuted for an offence, and the declaration or communication made by the wife to the husband, or by the husband to the wife, goes to extenuate or justify the offence for which either is on trial; further (art. 735), the husband or wife may in all criminal actions be witnesses for each other, but they shall in no case testify against each other, except in a criminal prosecution for an offence committed by one against the other, Overton v. State, 43 Tex. 616. In Vermont (Rev. Laws, sec. 1005), no married woman is dis-Laws, sec. 1005), no married woman is disqualified as a witness in a civil suit or proceeding at law, or in equity prosecuted in the name of or against her husband, whether joined or not with her husband as a party in these cases; in actions upon policies of insurance of property, so fur as relates to the amount and value of the property alleged to be injured or destroyed; in actions against carriers, so fur as relates to the loss of property and the amount and value thereof and erty and the amount and value thereof, and to personal injury alleged to have been sustained by the wife in consequence of the wrongful act or neglect of such carriers; in matters of business transactions where the transaction was had and conducted by such married woman as the agent of her husband; in actions where both husband and wife are properly joined, either as plaintiffs or defendants. But this section does not authorize or permit a married woman to testify to admissions or conversations of her husband made to herself or to third persons. Further (sec. 1006), the libellant and libellec shall be competent witnesses in trials on libels for divorce, where the cause alleged in the libel is intolerable severity or wilful desertion. And (sec. 3578) in actions in court against a Savings Institution by a husband to recover for moneys de-posited by his wife in her name, or as her money, the wife may be a witness as if she were an unmarried woman. The statute does not apply to cases where the wife acts does not apply to class other the different appears merely as agent of the husband. Martin v. Hurlburt, 60 Vt. 367. And further (Laws, 1886, No. 46, p. 38), in a suit for goods, board, or anything else furnished to a wife for her maintenance brought against her husband, the wife may be a witness. In Virginia (Voorhees Rev. Civ. Code, sec. 2281), the husband cannot be a witness for or against his wife, nor the wife for or against her husband; but in any case where the husband or wife may be joined as plaintiffs or defendants, and have a separate interest, they are competent witnesses for or against their sepa-rate interest therein. In Frank v. Lilienfeld, 33 Gratt. 377, the wife deposed neither for nor against her husband, but wholly in her own behalf, in a suit in which the husband, it is true, was a party, but in which the sole object was to reach property conceded to be her separate estate, and it was held that her testimony was admissible; and a similar decision was made in Farley v. Tillar, 81 Va. 275. In West Virginia (Code, ch. 130, sec. 22), the husband or wife of any party, nominal or real, in a civil case is competent to give evidence the same as other wife. nesses, except that no husband or wife shall disclose any confidential communication made by one to the other during their marriage; and (ch. 152, sec. 19) in criminal cuses the wife or husband of the accused has the right, at the request of the accused, but not otherwise, to testify on the accused's trial. In Wisconsin (Annot. Stat. sec. 7072), a husband or wife is not allowed to disclose a confidential communication made by one to the other during their marriage, without the consent of the other; in an action for criminal conversation, plaintiff's wife is a competent witness for defendant, as to any matter in controversy, except as aforesaid.

in which the rights of her husband, though not a party, would be concluded by any verdict therein; nor may she, in a suit between others, testify to any matter for which, if true, her husband may be indicted.4 Yet where the grounds of defence are several and distinct, and in no manner dependent on each other, no reason is perceived why the wife of one defendant should not be admitted as a witness for another. 5

§ 336. Immaterial when the relation began. It makes no difference at what time the relation of husband and wife commenced; the principle of exclusion being applied in its full extent wherever the interests of either of them are directly concerned. Thus, where the defendant married one of the plaintiff's witnesses, after she was actually summoned to testify in the suit, she was held incompetent to give evidence. 1 Nor is there any difference in principle between the admissibility of the husband and that of the wife, where the other is a party.2 And when, in any case, they are admissible against each other, they are also admissible for each other.3

§ 337. Or terminated. Neither is it material that this relation no longer exists. The great object of the rule is to secure domestic happiness by placing the protecting seal of the law upon all confidential communications between husband and wife; and whatever has come to the knowledge of either by means of the hallowed confidence which that relation inspires, cannot be afterwards divulged in testimony, even though the other party be no longer living.4 (a) And even where a wife, who had been divorced by act of Parliament, and had married another person, was offered as a witness by the plaintiff, to prove a contract against her former husband, Lord Alvanley held her clearly incompetent; adding, with his characteristic energy, "it never shall be endured that the confidence, which the law has created while the parties remained in the most intimate of all relations, shall be broken whenever, by the misconduct of one party, the relation has been

§ 338. Exception. This rule, in its spirit and extent, is analogous to that which excludes confidential communications made by a client to his attorney, and which has been already considered. 5 Accordingly, the wife, after the death of the husband, has been held competent to prove facts coming to her knowledge from other sources, and not by means of her situation as a wife. notwithstanding they related to the transactions of her husband.6

§ 339. Marriage must be lawful. This rule of protection is extended only to lawful marriages, or at least to such as are innocent in the eye of the law. If the cohabitation is clearly of an immoral character, as, for example, in the case of a kept mistress, the parties are competent witnesses for and against each other.1 On the other hand, upon a trial for polygamy, the first marriage being proved and not controverted, the woman, with whom the second marriage was had, is a competent witness; for the second marriage is void.2 But if the proof of the first marriage were doubtful, and the fact were controverted, it is conceived that she would not be admitted.3 It seems, however, that a reputed or supposed wife may be examined, on the voir dire, to

³ If the fact of the second marriage is in controversy, the same principle, it seems, will exclude the second wife also. See 2 Stark. Evid. 400; Grigg's Case, T. Raym. 1. But it seems, that the wife, though inadmissible as a witness, may be produced in court for the purpose of being identified, although the proof thus furnished may affix a criminal charge upon the husband; as, for example, to show that she was the person to whom he was first married; or, who passed a note, which he is charged with having stellar. stolen. facts showing the invalidity of the marriage. 4 Whether a woman is admissible in favor of a man with whom she has cohabited for a long time as his wife, whom he has constantly represented and acknowledged as such, and by whom he has had children, has been declared to be at least doubtful.⁵ Lord Kenyon rejected such a witness, when offered by the prisoner, in a capital case tried before him; 6 and in a later ease, in which his decisions were mentioned as entitled to be held in respect and reverence, an arbitrator rejected a witness similarly situated; and the court, abstaining from any opinion as to her competency, confirmed the award, on the ground that the law and fact had both been submitted to the arbitrator. The would doubtless be incompetent for another person to offer the testimony of an acknowledged wife, on the ground that the parties were never legally married, if that relation were always recognized and believed to be lawful by the parties. But where the parties had lived together as man and wife, believing themselves lawfully married, but had separated on discovering that a prior husband, supposed to be dead, was still living, the woman was held a competent witness against the second husband, even as to facts communicated to her by him during their cohabitation.8

§ 340. Whether, upon consent of husband, wife may testify. Whether the rule may be relaxed, so as to admit the wife to testify against the husband, by his consent, the authorities are not agreed. Lord Hardwicke was of opinion that she was not admissible, even with the husband's consent; 1 and this opinion has been followed in this country; 2 apparently upon the ground, that the interest of the husband in preserving the confidence reposed in her is not the sole foundation of the rule, the public

 \S 341. Where not parties to record, but directly interested. Where the husband or wife is not a party to the record, but yet has an interest directly involved in the suit, and is therefore incompetent to testify, the other also is incompetent. (a) Thus, the wife of a bankrupt cannot be called to prove the fact of his bankruptcy. 1 And the husband cannot be a witness for or against his wife, in a question touching her separate estate, even though there are other parties in respect of whom he would be competent.2 So, also, where the one party, though a competent witness in the cause, is not bound to answer a particular question, because the answer would directly and certainly expose him or her to a criminal prosecution and conviction, the other, it seems, is not obliged to answer the same question.3 The declarations of husband and wife are subject to the same rules of exclusion which govern their testimony as witnesses.

Whether where the husband and wife are jointly indicted for a joint offence, or are otherwise joint parties, their declarations are mutually receivable against each other, is still questioned; the general rule, as to persons jointly concerned, being in favor of their admissibility, and the policy of the law of husband and wife being against it. § 342. May testify in collateral proceedings. But though the husband and wife are not admissible as witnesses against each other, where either is directly interested in the event of the proceeding, whether civil or criminal; yet, in collateral proceedings, not immediately affecting their mutual interests, their evidence is receivable, notwithstanding it may tend to criminate, or may contradict the other, or may subject the other to a legal demand. 1 (a) Thus, where, in a question upon a female pauper's settlement, a man testified that he was married to the pauper upon a certain day, and another woman, being called to prove her own marriage with the same man on a previous day, was objected to as incompetent, she was held clearly admissible for that purpose; for though, if the testimony of both was true, the husband was chargeable with the crime of bigamy, yet neither the evidence, nor the record in the present case, could be received in evidence against him upon that charge, it being res inter alios acta, and neither the husband nor the wife having any interest in the decision.² So,

J., said: "They establish this principle, that the wife may be a witness to excuse a party sued for a supposed liability, although the effect of her testimony is to charge her husband upon the same debt, in an action afterwards to be brought against him. And the reason is, that the verdict in the action, in which she testifies, cannot be used in the action against her husband; so that, although her testimony goes to show that he is chargeable, yet he cannot be prejudiced by it. And it may be observed, that, in these very cases, the husband himself would be a competent witness, if he were willing to testify, for his evidence would be a confession against himself." wife was in every case incompetent to give evidence, even tending to criminate her husband, was considered and restricted; Lord Ellenborough remarking, that the rule was there laid down "somewhat too largely." In Rex v. Bathwick, it was held to be "undoubtedly true in the case of a direct charge and proceeding against him for any offence," but was denied in its application to collateral matters. But on the trial of a man for the crime of adultery, the husband of the woman with whom the crime was alleged to have been committed has been held not to be admissible as a witness for the alleged to have been committed has been held not to be admissible as a witness for the prosecution, as his testimony would go directly to charge the crime upon his wife. where the action was by the indorsee of a bill of exchange against the acceptor, and the defence was, that it had been fraudulently altered by the drawer, after the acceptance; the wife of the drawer was held a competent witness to prove the alteration.3

§ 343. Exceptions to the rule of exclusion. To this general rule, excluding the husband and wife as witnesses, there are some exceptions; which are allowed from the necessity of the case, partly for the protection of the wife in her life and liberty, and partly for the sake of public justice. But the necessity which calls for this exception for the wife's security is described to mean, "not a general necessity, as where no other witness can be had, but a particular necessity, as where, for instance, the wife would otherwise be exposed, without remedy, to personal injury."1 Thus, a woman is a competent witness against a man indicted for forcible abduction and marriage, if the force were continuing upon her until the marriage; of which fact she is also a competent witness; and this, by the weight of the authorities, notwithstanding her subsequent assent and voluntary cohabitation; for otherwise, the offender would take advantage of his wrong.² So, she is a competent witness against him on an indictment for a rape, committed on her own person;3 or, for an assault and battery upon her; 4 or, for maliciously shooting her. 5 She may also exhibit articles of the peace against him; in which case her affidavit shall not be allowed to be controlled and overthrown by his own. 6 Indeed, Mr. East considered it to be settled, that "in all cases of personal injuries committed by the husband or wife against each other, the injured party is an admissible witness against the other." But Mr. Justice Holroyd thought that the wife could only be admitted to prove facts, which could not be proved by any other witness. $^{8}(a)$

§ 344. Secret facts. The wife has also, on the same ground of necessity, been sometimes admitted as a witness to testify to secret facts which no one but herself could know. Thus, upon an appeal against an order of filiation, in the case of a married woman, she was held a competent witness to prove her criminal connection with the defendant, though her husband was interested in the event; but for reasons of public decency and morality, she cannot be allowed to say, after marriage, that she had no connection with her husband, and that therefore her offspring is spurious. 10

§ 345. High treason. In cases of high treason, the question whether the wife is admissible as a witness against her husband has been much discussed, and opinions of great weight have been given on both sides. The affirmative of the question is maintained, on the ground of the extreme necessity of the case, and the nature of the offence, tending as it does to the destruction of many lives, the supervision of government, and the sacrifice of social happiness. For the same reasons, also, it is said that, if the wife should commit this crime, no plea of coverture shall excuse her; no presumption of the husband's coercion shall extenuate her guilt.² But, on the other hand, it is argued, that, as she is not bound to discover her husband's treason, by parity of reason she is not compellable to testify against him.4 The latter is deemed, by the later text-writers, to be the better opinion.⁵

- § 347. Disqualifying interest. The rule, excluding parties from being witnesses, applies to all cases where the party has any interest at stake in the suit, although it be only a liability to costs. Such is the case of a prochein ami, a guardian, an executor or administrator, and so also of trustees and the officers of corporations, whether public or private, wherever they are liable in the first instance for the costs, though they may have a remedy for reimbursement out of the public or trust funds.4
- § 348. Parties may testify in certain cases. But to the general rule, in regard to parties, there are some exceptions in which the party's own oath may be received as competent testimony. One class of these exceptions, namely, that in which the oath in litem is received, has long been familiar in courts administering remedial justice, according to the course of the Roman law, though in the common-law tribunals its use has been less frequent and more restricted. The oath in litem is admitted in two classes of cases: first, where it has been already proved that the party against whom it is offered has been guilty of some fraud or other tortious and unwarrantable act of intermeddling with the complainant's goods, and no other evidence can be had of the amount of damages; and, secondly, where, on general grounds of public policy,

In Massachusetts, by force of the statutes respecting costs, a prochein ami is not liable to costs, Crandall v. Slaid, 11 Met. 288; and would therefore seem to be a competent witness. it is deemed essential to the purposes of justice. An example of the former class is given in the case of the bailiffs, who, in the service of an execution, having discovered a sum of money secretly hidden in a wall, took it away and embezzled it, and did great spoil to the debtor's goods: for which they were holden not only to refund the money, but to make good such other damage as the plaintiff would swear he had sustained.² So, where a man ran away with a casket of jewels, he was ordered to answer in equity, and the injured party's oath was allowed as evidence, in odium spoliatoris.3 The rule is the same at law. Thus, where a shipmaster received on board his vessel a trunk of goods, to be carried to another port, but on the passage he broke open the trunk and rifled it of its contents, in an action by the owner of the goods against the shipmaster, the plaintiff, proving aliunde the delivery of the trunk and its violation, was held competent as a witness, on the ground of necessity, to testify to the particular contents of the trunk.4 And, on the same principle, the bailor,

The case of Herman v. Drinkwater was cited and tacitly reaffirmed by the court in Gilmore v. Bowden, 3 Fairl. 412; the admissibility of the party as a witness being placed on the ground of necessity. But it is to be observed that, in Herman v. Drinkwater, the defendant was guilty of gross fraud, at least, if not of larceny. It was on this ground of gross fraud and misconduct that the rule in this case was agreed to in Snow v. Eastern Railroad Co., 12 Met. 44; the court denying its application in cases of necessity alone, and in the absence of fraud. Therefore, where an action on the case was brought by a passenger against a railway company, for the loss of his trunk by their negligence, there being no allegation or proof fraud or tortions act, the court held, that the plaintiff was not admissible as a witness, to testify to the contents of his trunk. Ibid. As this decision, which has been reported since the last edition of this work, is at variance with that of Clark v. Spence, cited in the next note, the following observations of the court should be read by the student in this connection: "The law of evidence is not of a fleeting character; and though new cases are occurring, calling for its application, yet the law itself rests on though new cases are occurring, calling for its application, yet the law itself rests on the foundation of the ancient common law, one of the fundamental rules of which is, that no person shall be a witness in his own case. This rule has existed for ages, with very little modification, and has yielded only where, from the nature of the case, other evidence was not to be obtained, and there would be a failure of justice without the oath of the party. These are exceptions to the rule, and form a rule of themselves. In some cases, the admission of the party's oath is in aid of the trial; and in others, it bears directly on the subject in controversy. Thus the oath of the party is admitted in respect to a lost deed, or other paper, preparatory to the offering of secondary evidence to prove its contents; and also for the purpose of procuring a continuance of a suit, in order to obtain testinony; and for other reasons. So the oath of a party is admitted to prove the truth of entries in his book, of goods delivered in small amounts, or of daily labor performed, when the parties, from their situation, have no evidence but their accounts, and from the nature of the traffic or service, cannot have, as a general thing. So, in complaints under the bastardy act, where the offence is secret, but yet there is full proof of the fact, the oath of the woman is admitted to charge the though new cases are occurring, calling for its application, yet the law itself rests on individual. In cases, also, where robberies or larcenies have been committed, and where no other evidence exists but that of the party robbed or plundered, he has been admitted as a witness to prove his loss; as it is said the law so abhors the act that the party injured shall have an extraordinary remedy in odium spoliatoris. Upon this principle, in an action against the hundred, under the statute of Winton, the person robbed was admitted as a witness, to prove his loss and the amount of it. Bull. N. P. 187; Esp. on Penal Stats. 211; 1 Phil. Ev. c. 5, § 2; 2 Stark. Evid. 681; Porter v. Hundred of Regland, Peake's Add. Cas. 203. So in equity, where a man ran away with a casket of jewels, the party injured was admitted as a witness. East India Co. v. Evans, 1 Vern. 308. A case has also been decided in Maine, Herman v. Drinkwater, 1 Greenl. 27, where the plaintiff was admitted to testify. In that case, a shipmaster received a trunk of goods in London, belonging to the plaintiff, to be carried in his ship to New York, and on board which the plaintiff had engaged his passage. The master sailed, designedly leaving the plaintiff, and proceeded to Portland instead of New York. He there broke open and plundered the trunk. These facts were found aliande, and the plaintiff was allowed to testify as to the contents of the trunk. These cases proceed upon the criminal character of the act, and are limited in their nature. The present case does not fall within the principle. Here was no robbery, no tortious taking away by the defendants, no frand committed. It is simply a case of negligence on the part of carriers. The case is not brought within any exception to the common rule, and is a case of defective proof on the part of the plaintiff, not arising from necessity, but from want of caution. To admit the plaintiff's oath, in cases of this nature, would lead, we think, to much greater mischiefs, in the temptation to frauds and perjuries, than can arise from excluding it. If the party about to travel places valuable articles

⁵ Clark v. Spence, 10 Watts, 335; Story on Bailm. § 454, n. (3d ed.). In this case, the doctrine in the text was more fully expounded by Rogers, J., in the following terms: "A party is not competent to testify in his own cause; but, like every other general rule, this has its exceptions. Necessity, either physical or moral, dispenses with the ordinary rules of evidence. In 12 Vin. 24, pl. 32, it is laid down, that on a trial at Bodnyr, coram Montague, B., against a common carrier, a question arose about the things in a box, and he declared that this was one of those cases where the party himself might be a witness ex necessitate rei. For every one did not show what he put in his box. The same principle is recognized in decisions which have been had on the statute of Hue-and-Cry m England, where the party robbed is admitted as a witness ex necessitate. Bull. N. P. 181. So, in Herman v. Drinkwater, 1 Greenl. 27, a shipmaster having received a trunk of goods on board his vessel, to be carried to another port, which, on the passage, he broke open and rifled of its contents; the owner of the goods, proving the delivery of the trunk and its violation, was admitted as a witness in an action for the goods, against the shipmaster, to testify to the particular contents of the trunk, there being no other evidence of the fact to be obtained. That a party them can be admitted, under certain circumstances, to prove the contents of a box or trunk, must be admitted. But while we acknowledge the exception, we must be careful not to extend it beyond its legitimate limits. It is admitted from necessity, and perhaps on a principle of convenience, because, as is said in Vesey, every one does not show what he puts in a box. This applies with great force to wearing apparel, and to every article which is necessary or convenient to the traveller, which, in most cases, are packed by the party himself, or his wife, and which, therefore, would admit of no other proof. A lady's jewelry would come in this class; and it is easier to concei

Such evidence is admitted not solely on the ground of the just odium entertained, both in equity and at law, against spoliation, but also because, from the necessity of the ease and the nature of the subject, no proof can otherwise be expected; it not being usual even for the most prudent persons, in such cases, to exhibit the contents of their trunks to strangers, or to provide other evidence of their value. For, where the law can have no force but by the evidence of the person in interest, there the rules of the common law, respecting evidence in general, are presumed to be laid aside; or rather, the subordinate are silenced by the most transcendent and universal rule, that in all cases that evidence is good, than which the nature of the subject presumes none better to be attainable.

§ 349. Same subject. Upon the same necessity, the party is admitted in divers other cases to prove the facts, which, from their nature, none but a party could be likely to know. But in such cases, a foundation must first be laid for the party's oath, by proving the other facts of the case down to the period to which the party is to speak. As, for example, if a deed or other material instrument of evidence is lost, it must first be proved, as we shall hereafter show, that such a document existed; after which the party's own oath may be received to the fact and circumstances of its loss, provided it was lost out of his own custody.

will be the judges of the credit to be attached to the witness, and be able, in most cases, to prevent any injury to the defendant. It would seem to me to be of no consequence, whether the article was sent by a carrier, or accompanied the traveller. The case of Herman v. Drinkwater, I would remark, was decided under very aggravated circumstances, and was rightly ruled. But it must be understood, that such proof cannot be admitted, merely because no other evidence of the fact can be obtained. For, if a merchant, sending goods to his correspondent, chooses to pack them himself, his neglect to furnish himself with the ordinary proof is no reason for dispensing with the rule of evidence, which requires disinterested testimony. It is not of the usual course of business; and there must be something peculiar and extraordinary in the circumstances of the case, which would justify the court in admitting the oath of the party." Wolcott, 4 Day, 388. But this decision has since been overruled; and it is now held, that a party to the suit is an admissible witness, to prove to the court that an instrument, which it is necessary to produce at the trial, is destroyed or lost, so as to let in secondary evidence; that there is no distinction, in this respect, between cases where the action is upon the instrument, and those where the question arises indirectly; and that it is of no importance, in the order of exhibiting the evidence, which fact is first

To this head of necessity may be referred the admission of the party robbed, as a witness for himself, in an action against the hundred, upon the statute of Winton. So, also, in questions which do not involve the matter in controversy, but matter which is auxiliary to the trial, and which in their nature are preliminary to the principal subject of controversy, and are addressed to the court, the oath of the party is received. Of this nature his affidavit of the materiality of a witness; of diligent search made for a witness, or for a paper; of his inability to attend; of the death of a subscribing witness; and so of other matters, of which the books of practice abound in examples.

§ 350. Same subject. The second class of cases, in which the oath in litem is admitted, consists of those in which public necessity or expediency has required it. Some cases of this class have their foundation in the edict of the Roman Prætor; "Nautæ, caupones, stabularii, quod cujusque salvum fore receperint, nisi restituent, in eos judicium dabo."1 Though the terms of the edict comprehended only shipmasters, innkeepers, and stablekeepers, yet its principle has been held to extend to other bailees, against whom, when guilty of a breach of the trust confided to them, damages were awarded upon the oath of the party injured, per modum pænæ to the defendant, and from the necessity of the case.2 But the common law has not admitted the oath of the party upon the ground of the Prætor's edict; but has confined its admission strictly to those cases where, from their nature, no other evidence was attainable.3 Thus, in cases of necessity, where a statute can receive no execution, unless the party inter-proved, whether the fact of the existence and contents of the instrument, or the fact of proved, whether the fact of the existence and contents of the instrument, or the fact of its destruction or loss. Fitch v. Bogue, 19 Conn. 285. ested be a witness, there he must be allowed to testify; for the statute must not be rendered ineffectual by the impossibility of proof.4

§ 351. Answer in equity. Another exception is allowed in equity, by which the answer of the defendant, so far as it is strictly responsive to the bill, is admitted as evidence in his favor as well as against him. The reason is, that the plaintiff, by appealing to the conscience of the defendant, admits that his answer is worthy of credit, as to the matter of the inquiry. It is not conclusive evidence; but is treated like the testimony of any other witness, and is decisive of the question only where it is not outweighed by other evidence.5

§ 352. Oath diverso intuitu. So also the oath of the party, taken diverso intuitu, may sometimes be admitted at law in his Thus, in considering the question of the originality of an invention, the letters-patent being in the case, the oath of the inventor, made prior to the issuing of the letters-patent, that he was the true and first inventor, may be opposed to the oath of a witness, whose testimony is offered to show that the invention was not original. 1 So, upon the trial of an action for malicious prosecution, in causing the plaintiff to be indicted, proof of the evidence given by the defendant on the trial of the indictment is said to be admissible in proof of probable cause.² And, generally, the certificate of an officer, when by law it is the evidence for others, is competent evidence for himself, if, at the time of making it, he was authorized to do the act therein certified.3

examined, that he is admissible in any case; nor then, unless under the circumstances presently to be mentioned. If he is only a nominal party, the consent of the real party in interest must be obtained before he can be examined.2 Nor can one who is substantially a party to the record be compelled to testify, though he be not nominally a party.3

§ 354. Co-plaintiffs inadmissible without consent of the others. It has been said, that where one of several co-plaintiff's voluntarily comes forward as a witness for the adverse party, he is admissible, without or even against the consent of his fellows; upon the ground, that he is testifying against his own interest, that the privilege of exemption is personal and several, and not mutual and joint, and that his declarations out of court being admissible, a fortiori, they ought to be received, when made in court under oath. 1 But the better opinion is, and so it has been resolved, 2 that such a rule would hold out to parties a strong temptation to perjury; that it is not supported by principle or authority, and that therefore the party is not admissible, without the consent of all parties to the record, for that the privilege is mutual and joint, and not several. It may also be observed, that the declarations of one of several parties are not always admissible against his fellows, and that, when admitted, they are often susceptible

Jones, 7 Bing. 395. But in the first of these cases, no objection appears to have been made on behalf of the other co-plaintiff, that his consent was necessary; but the decision is expressly placed on the ground, that neither party objected at the time. In Fenn v. Granger, Ld. Ellenborough would have rejected the witness, but the objection was waived. In Worrall v. Jones, the naked question was, whether a defendant who has suffered judgment by default, and has no interest in the event of the snit, is admissible as a witness for the plantiff, by his own consent, where "the only objection to his admissibility is this, that he is party to the record." of explanation or contradiction, where testimony under oath could not be resisted.

§ 355. Effect of default, nolle prosequi, and verdict. Hitherto, in treating of the admissibility of parties to the record as witnesses, they have been considered as still retaining their original situation, assumed at the commencement of the suit. situation of some of the defendants, where there are several in the same suit, may be essentially changed in the course of its progress, by default, or nolle prosequi, and sometimes by verdict, their case deserves a distinct consideration. This question has arisen in cases where the testimony of a defendant, thus situated, is material to the defence of his fellows. And here the general doctrine is, that where the suit is ended as to one of several defendants, and he has no direct interest in its event as to the others, he is a competent witness for them, his own fate being at all events certain.4

§ 356. In actions of contract. In actions on contracts, the operation of this rule was formerly excluded; for the contract being laid jointly, the judgment by default against one of several defendants, it was thought, would operate against him, only in the event of a verdict against the others; and accordingly he has been held inadmissible in such actions, as a witness in their favor. (a) On a similar principle, a defendant thus situated has been held not a competent witness for the plaintiff; on the ground that, by suffering judgment by default, he admitted that he was liable to the plaintiff's demand, and was therefore directly interested in throwing part of that burden on another person.² But in another case, where the action was upon a bond, and the principal suffered judgment by default, he was admitted as a witness for the plaintiff, against one of the other defendants, his surety; though here the point submitted to the court was narrowed to the mere abstract question, whether a party to the record was, on that account alone, precluded from being a witness, he having no interest in the event.8 But the whole subject has more recently been reviewed in England, and the rule established, that where one of two joint defendants in an action on contract has suffered judgment by default, he may, if not otherwise interested in procuring a verdict for the plaintiff, be called by him as a witness against the other defendant. 4 (b) So, if the defence, in an action ex contractu against several, goes merely to the personal discharge of the party pleading it, and not to that of the others, and the plaintiff thereupon enters a nolle prosequi as to him, which in such cases he may well do, such defendant is no longer a party upon the record, and is therefore competent as a witness, if not otherwise disqualified. Thus, where the plea by one of several defendants is bankruptcy, 5 or, that he was never executor, or, as it seems by the latter and better opinions, infancy or coverture,6 the plaintiff may enter a nolle prosequi as to such party, who, being thus disengaged from the record, may be called as a witness, the suit still proceeding against the others.7 The mere pleading of the bankruptcy, or other matter of personal discharge, is not

§ 357. In actions of tort. In actions on torts, these being in their nature and legal consequences several, as well as ordinarily joint, and there being no contribution among wrong-doers, it has not been deemed necessary to exclude a material witness for the defendants, merely because the plaintiff has joined him with them in the suit, if the suit, as to him, is already determined, and he has no longer any legal interest in the event.1 Accordingly, a defendant in an action for a tort, who has suffered judgment to go by default, has uniformly been held admissible as a witness for his co-defendants.2 Whether, being admitted as a witness, he is competent to testify to the amount of damages, which are generally assessed entire against all who are found guilty,3 may well be doubted. 4 (a) And indeed the rule, admitting a defendant

Haydon, and Chapman v. Graves, he thought it best to receive the witness, giving leave to the opposing party to move for a new trial. But the point was not moved; and the report does not show which way was the verdict. It has, however, more recently been held in England, that a defendant in trespass, who has suffered judgment by default, is not a competent witness for his co-defendant, where the jury are summoned as well to try the issue against the one, as to assess damages

(c) Shaw, C. J., in Gerrish v. Cummings, 4 Cush. 391, distinguishes Vinal v. Burrill from Bradlee v. Neal.

(a) Where one of two defendants in an action of trover is defaulted, he is not a competent witness on the trial for the other, on the ground of interest, even though called to testify to matters not connected with the question of damages; because, if admissible at all, he is liable to be examined upon all matters pertinent to the issue on trial. Gerrish v. Cummings, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 391; Chase v. Lovering, 27 N. H. 295.

⁸ Raven v. Dunning, 3 Esp. 25; Emmet v. Butler, 7 Taunt. 599; s. c. 1 Moore, 322; Schermerhorn v. Schermerhorn, 1 Wend. 119. But in a later case, since the 49 G. III. c. 121, Park, J., permitted a verdict to be returned upon the plea, in order to admit the witness. Bate v. Russell, 1 Mood. & M. 332. Where, by statute, the plaintiff, in an action on a parol contract against several, may have judgment against one or more of the defendants, according to his proof, there it has been held, that a defendant who has been defaulted is, with his consent, a competent witness in favor of his co-defendants. Bradlee v. Neal, 16 Pick. 501. But this has since been questioned, on the ground that his interest is to reduce the demand of the plaintiff against the others to nominal damages, in order that no greater damages may be assessed against him upon his default. Vinal v. Burrill, 18 Pick. 29. (c) as witness for his fellows in any case, must, as it should seem, be limited strictly to the case where his testimony cannot directly make for himself; for if the plea set up by the other defendants is of such a nature as to show that the plaintiff has no cause of action against any of the defendants in the suit, the one who suffers judgment by default will be entitled to the benefit of the defence, if established, and therefore is as directly interested as if the action were upon a joint contract. It is, therefore, only where the plea operates solely in discharge of the party pleading it, that another defendant, who has suffered judgment to go by default, is admissible as a witness.5.

§ 358. Misjoinder of parties. If the person who is a material witness for the defendants has been improperly joined with them in the suit, for the purpose of excluding his testimony, the jury will be directed to find a separate verdict in his favor; in which case, the cause being at an end with respect to him, he may be admitted a witness for the other defendants. But this can be allowed only where there is no evidence whatever against him, for then only does it appear that he was improperly joined through the artifice and fraud of the plaintiff. But if there be any evidence against him, though, in the judge's opinion, not enough for his conviction, he cannot be admitted as a witness for his fellows, because his guilt or innocence must wait the event of the verdict, the jury being the sole judges of the fact. In what stage of the cause the party, thus improperly joined, may be acquitted, and whether before the close of the case on the part of the other defendants, was formerly uncertain; but it is now settled, that the application to a judge, in the course of a cause, to direct a verdict for one or more of several defendants in trespass. is strictly to his discretion; and that discretion is to be regulated, not merely by the fact that, at the close of the plaintiff's case, no evidence appears to affect them, but by the probabilities whether any such will arise before the whole evidence in the cause closes.² The ordinary course, therefore, is to let the cause go on to the end of the evidence.3 But if, at the close of the plaintiff's case, there is one defendant against whom no evidence has been given, and none is anticipated with any probability, he instantly will be acquitted. 4 (a) The mere fact of mentioning the party in the simul cum, in the declaration, does not render him incompetent as a witness; but, if the plaintiff can prove the person so named to be guilty of the trespass, and party to the suit, which must be by producing the original process against him, and proving an ineffectual endeavor to arrest him, or that the process was lost, the defendant shall not have the benefit of his testimony.5

§ 359. Witness made party by mistake. If the plaintiff, in trespass, has by mistake made one of his own intended witnesses a defendant, the court will, on motion, give leave to omit him, and have his name stricken from the record, even after issue joined.1 In criminal informations the same object is attained by

"These cases appear to have proceeded upon the ground, that a co-trespasser, who had originally been made a party to the suit upon sufficient grounds, ought not to come forward as a witness to defeat the plaintiff, after he had prevented the plaintiff from proceeding effectually against him, by his own wrongful act in eluding the process." Phil. & Am. on Ev. p. 60, n. (2). But see Stockham v. Jones, 10 Johns. 21, contra. See also 1 Stark. Evid. 132. In Wakely v. Hart, 6 Bin. 316, all the defendants, in trespass, were arrested, but the plaintiff went to issue with some of them only, and did not rule the others to plead, nor take judgment against them by default; and they were held competent witnesses for the other defendants. The learned Chief Justice placed the decision partly upon the general ground, that they were not interested in the event of the suit; citing and approving the case of that they were not interested in the event of the suit; citing and approving the case of Stockham v. Jones, supra. But he also laid equal stress upon the fact that the plaintiff might have conducted his cause so as to have excluded the witnesses, by laying them under a rule to plead, and taking judgment by default. In Purviance v. Dryden, 3 S. & R. 402, and Gibbs v. Bryant, 1 Pick. 118, both of which were actions upon contract, where the process was not served as to one of the persons named as defendant with the where the process was not served as to one of the persons named as defendant with the other, it was held that he was not a party to the record, not being served with process, and so was not incompetent as a witness ou that account. Neither of these cases, therefore, except that of Stockham v. Jones, touches the ground of public policy for the prevention of fraud in cases of tort, on which the rule in the text seems to have been founded. Ideo Quare. See also Curtis v. § 360. Same subject. If a material witness for a defendant in ejectment be also made a defendant, he may let judgment go by default, and be admitted as a witness for the other defendant. But if he plead, thereby admitting himself tenant in possession, the court will not afterwards, upon motion, strike out his name.5 But where he is in possession of only a part of the premises, and consents to the return of a verdict against him for as much as he is proved to have in possession, Mr. Justice Buller said, he could see no reason why he should not be a witness for another defendant. $^{6}(a)$

examined by a plaintiff without the consent of the defendant. The course in the latter of such cases is, to strike out his name as plaintiff, and make him a defendant; and, in the former, to file a cross-bill.4

§ 362. Rule in civil and criminal cases the same. The principles which govern in the admission or exclusion of parties as witnesses in civil cases are in general applicable, with the like force. to criminal prosecutions, except so far as they are affected by particular legislation, or by considerations of public policy. In these cases, the State is the party prosecuting, though the process is usually, and in some cases always, set in motion by a private individual, commonly styled the prosecutor. In general, this individual has no direct and certain interest in the event of the prosecution; and therefore he is an admissible witness. Formerly, indeed, it was supposed that he was incompetent, by reason of an indirect interest arising from the use of the record of conviction as evidence in his favor in a civil suit; and this opinion was retained down to a late period as applicable to cases of forgery, and especially to indictments for perjury. But it is now well settled, as will hereafter more particularly be shown, that the record in a criminal prosecution cannot be used as evidence in a civil suit, either at law or in equity, except to prove the mere fact of the adjudication, or a judicial confession of guilt by the party indicated.2 The prosecutor, therefore, is not incompetent on the ground that he is a party to the record; but whether any ties in equity reciprocal, without the intervention of a cross-bill. See 1 Smith's Ch. Pr. 459, n. (1); Report on Chancery Practice, App. p. 153, Q. 49. The exception which had grown up in the case of forgery was admitted to be an anomaly in the law, in 4 East, 582, per Lord Ellenborough, and in 4 B. & Ald. 210, per Abbott, C. J.; and was finally removed by the declaratory act, for such in effect it certainly is, of 9 Geo. IV. c. 32, § 2. In this country, with the exception of a few early cases, the party to the forged instrument has been held admissible as a witness, on the general principles of the criminal ment has been held admissible as a witness, on the general principles of the criminal law. See Commonwealth v. Snell, 3 Mass. 82; People v. Dean, 6 Cowen. 27; Furber v. Hilliard, 2 N. H. 480; Respublica v. Ross, 2 Dall. 239; State v. Foster. 3 McCord, 442.

interest which he may have in the conviction of the offender is sufficient to render him incompetent to testify will be considered more appropriately under the head of incompetency from interest.3

§ 363. Defendants in criminal cases. In regard to defendants in criminal cases, if the State would call one of them as a witness against others in the same indictment, this can be done only by discharging him from the record; as, by the entry of a nolle prosequi¹ or, by an order for his dismissal and discharge, where he has pleaded in abatement as to his own person, and the plea is not answered; 2 or, by a verdict of acquittal, where no evidence, or not sufficient evidence, has been adduced against him. In the former case, where there is no proof, he is entitled to the verdiet; and it may also be rendered at the request of the other defendants, who may then call him as a witness for themselves, as in civil cases. In the latter, where there is some evidence against him, but it is deemed insufficient, a separate verdict of acquittal may be entered, at the instance of the prosecuting officer, who may then call him as a witness against the others.³ On the same principle, where two were indicted for assault, and one submitted and was fined, and paid the fine, and the other pleaded "not guilty," the former was admitted as a competent witness for the latter, because as to the witness the matter was at an end.⁴ But the matter is not considered as at an end, so as to render one defendant a competent witness for another, by anything short of a final judgment or a plea of guilty. 5 (a) Therefore, where two were jointly indicted for uttering a forged note, and the trial of one of them was postponed, it was held, that he could not be called as a witness for the other. 6 So, where two, being jointly indicted for an assault, pleaded separately "not guilty," and elected to be tried separately, it was held, that the one tried first could not call the other as a witness for him.7

§ 364. Functions of judge and witness incompatible. Before we dismiss the subject of parties, it may be proper to take notice of the case where the facts are personally known by the judge before whom the cause is tried. And whatever difference of opinion may once have existed on this point, it seems now to be agreed that the same person cannot be both witness and judge in a cause which is on trial before him. If he is the sole judge, he cannot be sworn; and, if he sits with others, he still can hardly be deemed capable of impartially deciding on the admissibility of his own testimony, or of weighing it against that of another.1 Whether his knowledge of common notoriety is admissible proof of that fact is not so clearly agreed.2 On grounds of public interest and convenience, a judge cannot be called as a witness to testify to what took place before him in the trial of another cause,3 though he may testify to foreign and collateral matters which happened in his presence while the trial was pending or after it was ended.4 In regard to attorneys, it has in England been held a very objectionable proceeding on the part of an attorney to give evidence when acting as advocate in the cause; and a sufficient ground for a new trial.⁵ But in the United States no case has been found to proceed to that extent; and the fact is hardly ever known to occur.

§ 365. Mental deficiencies. We proceed now to consider the SECOND CLASS of persons incompetent to testify as witnesses;

that the offence of one was the offence of all. But no authority was cited in the case, and the decision is at variance with the general doctrine in cases of tort. The reason that the offence of one was the offence of all. But no authority was cited in the case, and the decision is at variance with the general doctrine in cases of tort. The reason given, moreover, assumes the very point in dispute, namely, whether there was any guilt at all. The indictment was for a misdemeanor, in obstructing a revenue officer in the execution of his duty. See 1 Phil. Evid. 68. But where two were jointly indicted for an assault and battery, and one of them, on motion, was tried first, the wife of the other was held a competent witness in his favor. Moffit v. namely, that of Persons deficient in understanding. We have already seen, that one of the main securities, which the law has provided for the purity and truth of oral evidence, is, that it be delivered under the sanction of an oath; and that this is none other than a solemn invocation of the Supreme Being, as the Omniscient Judge. The purpose of the law being to lay hold on the conscience of the witness by this religious solemnity, it is obvious, that persons incapable of comprehending the nature and obligation of an oath ought not to be admitted as witnesses. The repetition of the words of an oath would, in their case, be but an unmeaning formality. It makes no difference from what cause this defect of understanding may have arisen; nor whether it be temporary and curable, or permanent; whether the party be hopelessly an idiot, or maniac, or only occasionally insane, as a lunatic: or be intoxicated; or whether the defect arises from mere immaturity of intellect, as in the case of children. (a) While the deficiency of understanding exists, be the cause of what nature soever, the person is not admissible to be sworn as a witness. the cause be temporary, and a lucid interval should occur, or a cure be effected, the competency also is restored. 2(b)

Mr. Roscoe deems it the safest rule to exclude their testimony. Rosc. Crim. Evid. p. 123. Mr. Best considers this "hard measure." Best, Princ. Evid. p. 168. In a recent case before the Privy Council, where a will was contested on the ground of incapacity in the mind of the testator, it was held, that if the mind is unsound on one subject, and this unsoundness is at all times existing upon that subject, it is erroneous to suppose the mind of such a person really sound on other subjects; and that therefore the will of such a person, though apparently ever so rational and proper, was void. Waring v. Waring, 12 Jur. 947, Priv. C. Here, the power of perceiving facts is sound, but the faculty of comparing and of judging is impaired. But where, in a trial for manslaughter, a lunatic patient was admitted as a witness, who had been confined in a lunatic asylum, and who labored under the delusion, both at the time of the transaction and of the trial, that he was possessed by twenty thousand spirits, but whom the medical witness believed to be capable of giving an account of any transaction that happened before his eyes, and who appeared to understand the obligation of an oath, and to believe in future rewards and punishments, —it was held, that his testimony was properly received. And that where a person, under an insane

§ 366. Deaf and dumb persons. In regard to persons deaf and dumb from their birth, it has been said that, in presumption of law, they are idiots. And though this presumption has not now the same degree of force which was formerly given to it, that unfortunate class of persons being found by the light of modern science to be much more intelligent in general, and susceptible of far higher culture, than was once supposed; yet still the presumption is so far operative, as to devolve the burden of proof on the party adducing the witness, to show that he is a person of sufficient understanding. This being done, a deaf mute may be sworn and give evidence, by means of an interpreter. If he is able to communicate his ideas perfectly by writing, he will be required to adopt that, as the more satisfactory, and therefore the better method; 2 but if his knowledge of that method is imperfect, he will be permitted to testify by means of signs.³

§ 367. Children. But in respect to children, there is no precise age within which they are absolutely excluded, on the presumption that they have not sufficient understanding. At the age of fourteen, every person is presumed to have common discretion and understanding, until the contrary appears; but under that age it is not so presumed; and therefore inquiry is made as to the degree of understanding, which the child offered as a witness may possess; and if he appears to have sufficient natural intelligence, and to have been so instructed as to comprehend the nature and effect of an oath, he is admitted to testify, whatever his age may be. 1(a) This examination of the child, in order to ascer-

detusion, is offered as a witness, it is for the judge at the time to decide upon his competency as a witness, and for the jury to judge of the credibility of his evidence. Reg. v. Hill, 15 Jur. 470; 5 Eng. Law & Eq. 547; 5 Cox, C. C. 259.(c)

case where the trial was on an indictment for incest, the person upon whom the crime was committed, was thirteen years of age. When she was offered by the prosecution as a witness the defendant objected that she was ignorant of the nature and obligation of an oath. In reply to the presiding judge, she said she knew the oath was to tain his capacity to be sworn, is made by the judge at his discretion; and though, as has been just said, no age has been precisely fixed, within which a child shall be conclusively presumed incapable, yet in one case a learned judge promptly rejected the dying declarations of a child of four years of age, observing, that it was quite impossible that she, however precocious her mind, could have had that idea of a future state which is necessary to make such declarations admissible.2 On the other hand, it is not unusual to receive the testimony of children under nine, and sometimes even under seven years of age, if they appear to be of sufficient understanding; 3 and it has been admitted even at the age of five years.4 If the child, being a principal witness, appears not yet sufficiently instructed in the nature of an oath, the court will, in its discretion, put off the trial, that this may be done.5

But in a late case, before Mr. Justice Patteson, the learned judge said, that he must be satisfied that the child felt the binding obligation of an oath, from the general course of her religious education; and that the effect of the oath upon the conscience should arise from religious feelings of a permanent nature, and not merely from instructions, confined to the nature of an oath, recently communicated, for the purpose of the particular trial. And therefore, the witness having been visited but twice by a clergyman, who had given her some instructions as to the nature of an oath, but still she had but an imperfect understanding on the subject, her evidence was rejected. still she had but an imperfect understanding on the subject, her evidence was rejected. Rex v. Williams, 7 C. & P. 320. In a more recent case, where the principal witness for the prosecution was a female child of six years old, wholly ignorant of the nature of an oath, a postponement of the trial was moved for, that she might be instructed on that subject; but Pollock, C. B., refused the motion as tending to endanger the safety of public justice; observing that more probably would be lost in memory, than would be gained in point of religious education; adding, however, that in cases where the inteltell the truth and that she would be punished if she did not tell the truth after taking it, but she did not know by whom or how. The prosecution did not then offer her as a witness, and the judge postponed decision as to her competency, that she might be further instructed. The next day she was offered as a witness and found competent, having been instructed, as appeared by her examination, by a Christian minister since the adjournment of the court. The defendant argued before the Supreme Court that the witness should know about the nature of the oath independent of the court. pendently of the necessities of the trial and could not be especially instructed for that purpose. The court reviewed the practice as stated above, and stated that the presiding judge had authority in his discretion to allow the witness to be instructed, in accordance with the prevailing practice, if her age and mental capacity were sufficient to receive such instruction intelligently. The court, however, based its opinion upon the point that the question of the competency of the witness really arose when she was actually offered as a witness, and that the presiding judge, determined this preliminary question upon the facts in evidence relating to her understanding of the oath, and that the question as to the competency of the witness, being a preliminary question of fact as to the admissibility of evidence, would not be reviewed by the Supreme Court. § 368. Moral deficiencies. The THIRD CLASS of persons incompetent to testify as witnesses consists of those who are insensible TO THE OBLIGATIONS OF AN OATH, from defect of religious sentiment and belief. The very nature of an oath, it being a religious and most solemn appeal to God, as the Judge of all men, presupposes that the witness believes in the existence of an omniscient Supreme Being, who is "the rewarder of truth and avenger of falsehood;" 1 and that, by such a formal appeal, the conscience of the witness is affected. Without this belief, the person cannot be subject to that sanction, which the law deems an indispensable test of truth.2 It is not sufficient, that a witness believes himself bound to speak the truth from a regard to character, or to the common interests of society, or from fear of the punishment which the law inflicts upon persons guilty of perjury. motives have indeed their influence, but they are not considered as affording a sufficient safeguard for the strict observance of truth. Our law, in common with the law of most civilized countries, requires the additional security afforded by the religious sanction implied in an oath; and, as a necessary consequence, rejects all witnesses, who are incapable of giving this security.3 Atheists, therefore, and all infidels, that is, those who profess no religion that can bind their consciences to speak truth, are rejected as incompetent to testify as witnesses. 4 (a)

2 1 Stark. Evid. 22. "The law is wise in requiring the highest attainable sanction for the truth of testimony given; and is consistent in rejecting all witnesses incapable of feeling this sanction, or of receiving this test; whether this incapacity arises from the imbecility of their understanding, or from its perversity. It does not impute guilt or blame to either. If the witness is evidently intoxicated, he is not allowed to be sworn; because, for the time being, he is evidently incapable of feeling the force and obligation of an oath. The non compos, and the infant of tender age, are rejected for the same reason, but without blame. The atheist is also rejected, because he, too, is incapable of realizing the obligation of an oath, in consequence of his unbelief. The law looks only to the fact of incapacity, not to the cause, or the manner of avowal. Whether it be calmly insimuated with the elegance of Gibbon, or roared forth in the disgusting blasphemies of Paine, still it is atheism; and to require the mere formality of an oath, from one who avowedly despises, or is incapable of feeling, its peculiar sanction, would be but a mockery of justice." 1 Law Reporter, pp. 346, 347.

(a) In addition to these States menished incompetency from lack of religious tioned in note 2, the following have abolbelief:— Arizona: Comp. Laws, 1877, p.

§ 369. Nature of religious faith required. As to the nature and degree of religious faith required in a witness, the rule of law, as at present understood, seems to be this, that the person is competent to testify, if he believes in the being of God, and a future state of rewards and punishments; that is, that Divine punishment will be the certain consequence of perjury. It may be considered as now generally settled, in this country, that it is not material, whether the witness believes that the punishment will be inflicted in this world, or in the next. It is enough if he has the religious sense of accountability to the Omniscient Being, who is invoked by an oath.1

§ 370. Moral competency presumed. It should here be observed that defect of religious faith is never presumed. On the contrary, the law presumes that every man brought up in a Christian land, where God is generally acknowledged, does believe in him, and fear him. The charity of its judgment is extended alike to all. The burden of proof is not on the party adducing the witness, to prove that he is a believer; but it is on the objecting party, to prove that he is not. Neither does the law presume that any man is a hypocrite. On the contrary, it presumes him to be what he professes himself to be, whether atheist or Christian; and the state of a man's opinions, as well as the sanity of his mind, being

The objection of incompetency, from the want of belief in the existence of God, is abolished, as it seems, in Michigan, by force of the statute which enacts that no person shall be deemed incompetent as a witness "on account of his opinions on the subject of religion." Rev. Stat. 1846, c. 102, § 96. So in Maine, Rev. Stat. c. 82, Rev. Stat. 1871, § 81. And in Wisconsin, Const. art. 1, § 18. And in Missouri, Rev. Stat. 1845, c. 186, § 21. And in Mass. Gen. Stat. c. 131, § 12, Pub. Stat. 1882, c. 169, § 18. In some other States, it is made sufficient, by statute, if the witness believes in the cxistence of a Supreme Being. Connecticut, Rev. Stat. 1849, tt. 1, § 140, Gen. Stat. 1875, p. 440; New Hampshire, Rev. Stat. 1842, c. 188, § 9, Gen. Laws, 1878, c. 223, § 12. In others, it is requisite that the witness should believe in the existence of a Supreme Being, who will punish fielse swearing. New York, Rev. Stat. vol. ii. p. 505 (3d ed.); Missouri, Rev. Stat. 1835, p. 419.

1 The proper test of the competency of a witness on the score of a religious belief was settled, upon great consideration, in the case of Omichund v. Barker, Willes, 545, s. c. 1 Atk. 21, to be the belief of a God, and that he will reward and punish us according to our deserts. This rule was recognized in Butts v. Swartwood, 2 Cowen, 431; People v. Matteson, 2 Cowen, 433, 473, n.; and by Story, J., in Wakefield v. Ross, 5 Mason, 18; s. p. 9 Dane's Abr. 317; and see Brock v. Milligan, 10 Ohio, 125; Arnold v. Arnold, 13 Vt. 362. Whether any belief in a future state of existence is necessary, provided accountability to God in this life is acknowledged, is not perfectly clear. In once proved, is, as we have already seen, presumed to continue unchanged, until the contrary is shown. The state of his religious belief at the time he is offered as a witness is a fact to be ascertained; and this is presumed to be the common faith of the country, unless the objector can prove that it is not. The ordinary mode of showing this is by evidence of his declarations, previously made to others; the person himself not being interrogated; for the object of interrogating a witness, in these cases, before he is sworn, is not to obtain the knowledge of other facts, but to ascertain from his answers the extent of his capacity, and whether he has sufficient understanding to be sworn. $^{2}(a)$

Commonwealth v. Bachelor, 4 Am. Jurist, 81, Thacher, J., seemed to think it was. But in Hunscom v. Hunscom, 15 Mass. 184, the court held, that mere disbelief in a future existence went only to the credibility. This degree of disbelief is not inconsistent with the faith required in Omichand v. Barker. The only case clearly to the contrary, is Atwood v. Welton, 7 Conn. 66. In Curtiss v. Strong, 4 Day, 51, the witness did not believe in the obligation of an oath; and in Jackson v. Gridley, 18 Johns. 98, he was a mere atheist without any sense of religion whatever. All that was said, in these two cases, beyond the point in judgment, was extra-judicial. In Maine, a belief in the existence of the Supreme Being was rendered sufficient by Stat. 1833, c. 58, without any reference to rewards or punishments. Smith v. Coffin, 6 Shepl. 157; but even this seems to be no longer required. See supra, § 368, n. See further, People v. McGarren, 17 Wend. 460; Cubbison v. McCreary, 2 Watts & Serg. 262; Brock v. 2 Swift's Evid. 48; Smith v. Coffin, 6 Shepl. 157. It has been questioned, whether the evidence of his declarations ought not to be confined to a period shortly anterior to the time of proving them, so that no change of opinion might be presumed. Brock v. Milligan, 10 Ohio, 126, per Wood, J.

"The witness himself is never questioned in modern practice, as to his religious belief, though formerly it was otherwise (1 Swift's Dig. 739; 5 Mason, 19; American Jurist, vol. iv. p. 79, n.). It is not allowed, even after he has been sworn (The Queen's Case, Commonwealth v. Bachelor, 4 Am. Jurist, 81, Thacher, J., seemed to think it was. But

vol. iv. p. 79, n.). It is not allowed, even after he has been sworn (The Queen's Case, 2 Brod. & Bing. 284). Not because it is a question tending to disgrace him, but because it would be a personal scrutiny into the state of his faith and conscience, foreign to the spirit of our institutions. No man is obliged to avow his belief, but if he voluntarily does avow it, there is no reason why the avowal should not be proved, like any other fact. The trnth and sincerity of the avowal, and the continuance of the belief thus avowed, are presumed, and very justly too, till they are disproved. If his opinions have been subsequently changed, this change will generally, if not always, be provable in the same mode (Atwood v. Welton, 7 Conn. 66; Curtis v. Strong, 4 Day, 51; Swift's Evid.

(a) It seems to be held that the witness may not be interrogated as to his belief. Shaw, C. J., in Com. v. Smith, 2 Gray, 516, says: "The want of such religious belief must be established by other means than the examination of the witness upon the stand. He is not to be questioned as to his religious belief, nor required to divulge his opinion upon that subject in answer to questions put to him while under examination. If he is to be set aside for want of such religious belief, the fact is to be shown by other witnesses, and by evidence of his previously ex-pressed opinions voluntarily made known to others;" and this point was expressly decided in Odell v. Koppee, 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 88. In Arnd v. Amling, 53 Md. 192, examination of the witness as to his religious belief was had by the judge before he offered the objecting party an opportunity to give evidence on the sub-ject. The Court of Appeals held that this was irregular, yet as no substantial injury was done, the judgment was affirmed.

The question whether a witness is, or is not, an atheist, and so an incompetent witness, is a question of fact for the presiding judge alone, and his decision is not open to exception. Com. v. Hills, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 530, 532.

§ 371. Witnesses, how sworn. It may be added, in this place, that all witnesses are to be sworn according to the peculiar ceremonies of their own religion, or in such manner as they may deem binding on their own consciences. If the witness is not of the Christian religion, the court will inquire as to the form in which an oath is administered in his own country, or among those of his own faith, and will impose it in that form. And if, being a Christian, he has conscientious scruples against taking an oath in the usual form, he will be allowed to make a solemn religious asseveration, involving a like appeal to God for the truth of his testimony, in any mode which he shall declare to be binding on his conscience. The court, in ascertaining whether the form in which the oath is administered is binding on the conscience of the witness, may inquire of the witness himself; and the proper time for making this inquiry is before he is sworn.2 But if the witness, without making any objection, takes the oath in the usual form, he may be afterwards asked, whether he thinks the oath binding on his conscience; but it is unnecessary and irrelevant to ask him, if he considers any form of oath more binding, and therefore such question cannot be asked.³ If a witness, without objecting, is sworn in the usual mode, but, being of a different faith, the oath was not in a form affecting his conscience, as if, being a Jew, he was sworn on the Gospels, he is still punishable for perjury, if he swears falsely.4

48-50; Scott v. Hooper, 14 Vt. 535; Mr. Christian's note to 3 Bl. Comm. 369; 1 Phil. Evid. 18; Commonwealth v. Bachelor, 4 Am. Jur. 79, n.). If the change of opinion is very recent, this furnishes no good ground to admit the witness himself to declare it; because of the greater inconvenience which would result from thus opening a door to fraud, than from adhering to the rule requiring other evidence of this fact. The old cases, in which the witness himself was questioned as to his belief, have on this point been overruled. See Christian's note to 3 Bl. Comm. [369] n. (30). The law, therefore, is not reduced to any absurdity in this matter. It exercises no inquisitorial power; neither does it resort to secondary or hearsay evidence. If the witness is objected to, it asks third persons to testify, whether he has declared his belief in God, and in a future state of rewards and punishments, &c. Of this fact, they are as good witnesses as he could be, and the testimony is primary and direct. It should further be noticed, that the question, whether a person, about to be sworn, is an atheist or not, can never be raised by any one but an adverse party. No stranger or a volunteer has a right to object. There must, in every instance, be a suit between two or more parties, one of whom offers the person in question as a competent witness. The presumption of law, that every citizen is a believer in the common religion of the country, holds good until it is disproved; and it would be contrary to all rule to allow any one, not party to the suit, to thrust in his objections to the course pursued by the litigants. This rule and suit, to thrust in his objections to the course pursued by the litigants. This rule and uniform course of proceeding shows how much of the morbid sympathy expressed for the atheist is wasted. For there is nothing to prevent him from taking any oath of office; nor from swearing to a complaint before a magistrate; nor from making oath to his answer in chancery. In this last case, indeed, he could not be objected to, for another reason; namely, that the plaintiff, in his bill, requests the court to require him to answer upon his oath. In all these, and many other similar cases, there is no person authorized to raise an objection. Neither is the question permitted to be raised against the atheist, where he himself is the adverse party, and offers his own oath, in the ordinary course of proceeding. If he would make affidavit, in his own cause, to the absence of a witness, or to hold to bail, or to the truth of a plea in abatement, or to the loss of a paper, or to the genuineness of his books of account, or to his fears of bodily harm from one against whom he requests surety of the peace, or would take the poor harm from one against whom he requests surety of the peace, or would take the poor debtor's oath; in these and the like cases the uniform course is to receive his oath like any other person's. The law, in such cases, does not know that he is an atheist; that is, it never allows the objection of infidelity to be made against any man seeking his own rights in a court of justice; and it conclusively and absolutely presumes that, so far as religious belief is concerned, all persons are capable of an oath, of whom it requires one, as the condition of its protection, or its aid; probably deeming it a less evil, that the solemnity of an oath should, in few instances, be mocked by those who feel not its force and meaning, than that a citizen should, in any case, be deprived of the benefit and protection of the law, on the ground of his religious belief. The state of his faith is not inquired into, where his own rights are concerned. He is only prevented from being made the instrument of taking away those of others." Reporter, pp. 347, 348.

§ 372. Infamous persons. Under this general head of exclusion, because of insensibility to the obligation of an oath, may be ranked the case of persons infamous; that is, persons who, whatever may be their professed belief, have been guilty of those heinous crimes which men generally are not found to commit, unless when so depraved as to be unworthy of credit for truth. The basis of the rule seems to be, that such a person is morally too corrupt to be trusted to testify; so reckless of the distinction between truth and falsehood and insensible to the restraining force of an oath, as to render it extremely improbable that he will speak the truth at all. Of such a person Chief Baron Gilbert remarks, that the credit of his oath is overbalanced by the stain of his iniquity. The party, however, must have been legally ad-

(a) In most of the United States, this ground of incompetency has been affected more or less by statutes which generally render such a witness competent, but provide that if the opposing party wishes to impeach the credit of the witness, he can introduce evidence that the witness has been convicted of crime, using therefor the record of the conviction. In many States, however, this ground of incompetency is not wholly done away with, but conviction of certain crimes, of which the principal care presents and other crimes with pal are perjury and other crimes which have a direct relation to lack of veracity in a witness, is still a ground of exclusion of the testimony of the witness entirely. The statutes of the various States are as follows. Alabama (Code, 1886, sec. 2766). In this State, only conviction of perjury or subornation of perjury will exclude a witness; if he has been convicted of other infamous crimes the objection goes to his credibility. Arkansas (Code, sec. 2859). In this State, persons convicted of a capital offence, or of perjury, subornation of perjury, burglary, robbery, larceny (a conviction for petit larceny disqualifies the defendant as a witness: Hall v. Doyle, 35 Ark. 445), receiving stolen goods, forgery or counterfeiting are incompetent to testify or contrettening are incompetent to testing except by consent of the parties. California (Civ. Code, sec. 1879). In this State, persons convicted of crime are not incompetent, but their credibility may be impeached by proof of such conviction.

Colorado (Gen. Laws, sec. 3647). In this State, those who have been convicted of crime are competent but their credibility may be impeached thereby; and the conviction may be shown for the purpose of affecting the credibility of the witness; the fact of such conviction may be proved either by the witness himself (who shall be compelled to testify thereto) or by any other person cognizant of such conviction other person cognizant of such conviction as impeaching testimony, or by any other competent testimony. Connecticut (Gen. Stat., sec. 1098). No person is incompetent as a witness by reason of his conviction of crime, but such conviction may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credit. Polygram (Layer vol. 17 ch. his credit. Delaware (Laws, vol. 17, ch. 598, sec. 3). No person is excluded from testifying as a witness by reason of his having been convicted of a felony, but evidence of the fact may be given to affect his credibility. Florida (Laws, ch. 101, sec. 28). A proffered witness may be questioned as to whether he has been con-victed of any felony or misdemeanor, and if he either denies the fact or refuses to answer, the opposite party may prove such conviction. And a certificate containing the substance and effect only of the indictment and conviction of such offence, signed by the clerk of the court where the offender was convicted, is, with proof of identity of the person, sufficient evidence of such conviction without proof of the signature of official character of the person appearing to have signed the certificate. Florida (Laws, ch. 202, sec. 5). A person convicted of perjury, although he has been pardoned or punished is incompetent to be a witness; as to other crimes (sec. 6), no person is incompetent by reason of having committed any crime unless he has been convicted thereof in that State, but the conviction of any person in any court without the State, of a crime which, if he had been convicted thereof within this State would render him an incompetent witness, may be given in evidence to affect his credibility. Georgia (Code, sec. 3854). Conviction of crime does not, in this State, exclude an offered witness. Illinois (Rev. Stat., ch. 51, sec. 1). The statute is the same as in Colorado as to civil cases; and (sec. 426, ch. 38, sec. 6) no person is disqualified as a witness in any criminal case by reason of his having been convicted of any crime. Indiana (Rev. Stat. 1888, secs. 506, 1798). A witness convicted of crime is rendered competent by the statute which enacts that any fact which might heretofore be shown to render a witness incompetent may be thereafter shown to affect his credibility. Iowa (Rev. Code, 1886, sec. 3637). And similarly, in Iowa facts which, at common law, caused the exclusion of testimony, may still be shown for the purpose of lessening its credibility; and (sec. 3548) a witness may be interrogated as to his previous conviction for a felony. But no other proof of such conviction is competent except the record thereof. Kansas (Gen. Stat. 1889, sec. 4414). No person is disqualified as a witness in any civil action by reason of his conviction of a crime; but such conviction may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credibility. Maine (Rev. Stat. 1883, ch. 82, sec. 105). No. person is incompetent to testify in any court or legal proceeding in consequence of having been convicted of an offence, but such conviction may be shown to affect his credibility. Maryland (Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 35, sec. 1). No party offered as a witness is excluded, by reason of incapacity from crime, except that no person who has been convicted of the crime of perjury shall be admitted to testify in any cause or proceeding whatever; and (sec. 5) in all cases it is competent for any of the parties to the proceedings to prove by legal evidence the conviction of a witness of any infamous crime, and in order to prove such conviction it is not necessary to produce the whole record of proceedings showing such conviction, but the certificate under seal of the clerk of the court wherein such proceedings were had, stating the fact of the conviction and for what crime, is sufficient. Massachusetts (Pub. Stat., ch. 169, sec. 19). The conviction of a witness of a crime may be shown to affect his credibility, but does not render him incompetent. Michigan (Howell's Annot. Stat., secs. 7543, 7544). No person is excluded from giving evidence in any matter civil or criminal by reason of crime, but such conviction of crime may be shown for the purpose of drawing in question the credibility of such witness. Minnesota (Stat. (Kelley) sec. 5095). Persons who have been convicted of crime are not incompetent witnesses in either civil or criminal cases, although in every case the credibility of the witness may be drawn in question; (sec. 6534) but the conviction may be proved for the purpose of affecting the weight of the testimony, either by the record or by cross-examination of the witness, upon which he must answer any proper question relevant to that inquiry, and the party cross-examining is not concluded by the answer to such question. Mississippi (Rev. Code, 1880, sec. 1600). No conviction of any person for any offence except perjury and subornation of perjury disqualifies such person as a witness, but such conviction may be given in evidence to impeach his credibility; and no person convicted of perjury or subornation of perjury shall afterwards be a competent witness in any case, although pardoned or punished for the same. Missouri (Rev. Stat. 1889, sec. 8925). No provision of statute directly affects this point, but all persons are competent, with few exceptions. Montana (Compiled Stat. Code Civ. Proc., sec. 647). Those who have been convicted of crime are competent although in every case the credibility of the witness may be drawn in question; but (sec. 648, cl. 3) persons against whom judgment has been rendered upon a conviction for a felony are incompetent, unless pardoned by the governor, or such judgment has been reversed on appeal. Nebraska (Code, p. 672, sec. 330). Facts which have heretofore caused the exclusion of testimony may still be shown for the purpose of lessening its credibility; thus admitting persons convicted of fel-ony; and (sec. 338) a witness may be in-terrogated as to his previous conviction for a felony. But no other proof of such conviction is competent except the record thereof; and (p. 839, sec. 473) no person shall be disqualified as a witness in any culty to determine precisely the crimes which render the per-criminal prosecution by reason of his conviction of any crime, but such conviction may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credibility. Nevada (Gen. Stat. 1885, sec. 3399 (s. 377). No person is disqualified as a witness in any action by reason of his conviction of felony, but such conviction may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credibility, and the jury is to be the exclusive judges of his credibility. New Hampshire (Pub. Stat. 1891 (Comm's Rep.) ch. 223, sec. 26). No person is incompetent to testify on account of his having been convicted of an infamous crime, but the record of such conviction may be used to affect his credit as a witness. New York (Code Civ. Proc., sec. A person who has been convicted of a crime or misdemeanor is, notwith-standing, a competent witness in a civil or criminal action; but the conviction may be proved for the purpose of affecting the weight of his testimony, either by the record or by his cross-examination, upon which he must answer any question relevant to that inquiry, and the party cross-examining him is not concluded by his answer to such question. Ohio (Rev. Stat. 1886, secs. 5240, 7284). No person is disqualified as a witness in any civil case or criminal prosecution by reason of his conviction of any crime. Oregon (Hill's Annot. Law, 1887, ch. 8, title III. sec. 710). Those who have been convicted of crime are competent, but in every case the credibility of the witnesses may be drawn in question, as provided by the laws. Pennsylvania (Laws of 1887, ch. 89, sec. 2). In criminal proceedings a person who has been convicted in a court of that State of perjury, which term is declared to include subornation of perjury, is not a competent witness for any purpose, although his sentence may have been fully complied with, unless the judgment of conviction be judicially set aside or reversed, or unless the proceeding be one to punish or prevent injury or violations attempted, done or threatened to his person or property, in which case he shall be competent to testify; and a similar act (sec. 5) covers civil proceedings. Rhode Island (Pub. Stat., ch. 214, sec. 38). No person is an incompetent witness because of his conviction of any crime or sentence to imprisonment therefor, but shall be admitted to testify like any other witness, except that such conviction or sentence may be shown to affect his credibility. Tennessee (Code, 1884, sec. 4562). Persons are rendered incompetent witnesses by conviction and sentence for the following crimes, unless they have been restored to full citizenship under the law provided for that purpose, viz.: Abuse of female child, arson and felonions burning, bigamy, buggery, counterfeiting or violating of the provisions to suppress the same, destroying will, forgery, house breaking, incest, larceny, perjury, robbery, receiving stolen property, rape, sodomy, stealing bills of exchange or other valuable papers, subornation of perjury. Texas (Code, Crim. Proc., art. 730). All persons who have been convicted of felony, either within or without the State, are incompetent unless such conviction has been legally set aside, or unless the convicted person has been particle of the convicted person has been person has doned for the crime of which he was convicted. But no person who has been convicted of the crime of perjury or false swearing, and whose conviction has not been legally set aside, shall have his competency as a witness restored by a pardon, unless such pardon by its terms specifically restore his competency to testify in a court of justice. But a defendant in a criminal case, who testifies in his own behalf, cannot be excluded by a conviction of felony. Williams v. State, 27 Tex. 466. Utah (Compiled Laws, 1888, vol. 2, title 10, ch. 2, sec. 3876). Those who have been convicted of crime are competent, but in every case the credibility of the witness may be drawn in question, by the manner in which he testifies, by the character of his testimony, or by evidence affecting his character for truth, honesty, or integrity, or his motives, or by contradictory evidence; and the jury are the exclusive judges of his credibility; and (Crim. Code, art. 9. sec. 5196) the rules for determining the competency of witnesses in civil actions are applicable also to criminal actions and proceedings. Vermont (Rev. Law, 1880, sec. 1008). No person is incompetent as a witness in any proceeding by reason of his conviction of a crime other than perjury, subornation of perjury, or endeavoring to incite or procure another to commit the crime of perjury; but the conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude may be given in evidence to affect the credibility of the witness. Virginia (Code, 1887, sec. 3898). Except where it is otherwise expressly provided, a person convicted of felony cannot be a witness, unless he has been pardoned or punished therefor, and a person convicted of perjury shall not be a witness although pardoned or punished.

petrator thus infamous. The rule is justly stated to require,

Except where it is otherwise expressly provided, a person convicted of felony cannot be a witness unless he has been pardoned or punished therefor; but a person convicted of felony and sentenced therefor, except it be for perjury, may by leave of court, be examined as a witness in any criminal prosecution, though he has not been pardoned or punished therefor, but a person convicted of perjury shall not be a witness in any case, although he may have been pardoned or punished. Washington (Hill's Code, vol. 2, sec. 1647). No person offered as a witness shall be excluded from giving evidence by reason of conviction of crime, but such conviction may be shown to affect his credibility; provided that any person who shall have been convicted of the crime of perjury shall not be a competent witness in any case, unless such conviction shall have been reversed, or unless he shall have received a pardon. Wisconsin (Rev. Stat. 1878, sec. 4073). A person who has been convicted of a criminal offence is, notwithstanding, a competent witness; but the conviction may be proved to affect his credibility, either by the record or by his own cross-examination, upon which he must answer any question relevant to that inquiry, and the party cross-examining him is not concluded by his answer.

Under these statutes various decisions have been reached by the courts; some of the most important of which are as follows. Under the statute which provides that no conviction for crime shall disqualify a witness, a witness who confesses that he had previously committed perjury in regard to the same things to which he testifies, is not thereby rendered incompetent, even though the rule at one time was that the confession of the witness that he had committed perjury rendered him incompetent without proof of his conviction. The court in this case argued that if the intention of the legislature was that a conviction for crime should not render the witness disqualified, still less should anything short of a record of his conviction have that effect. People v. O'Neil, 48 Hun. 36. In Kentucky it is held that under the statute of that State a person convicted of a felony anywhere in the United States, is incompetent as a witness unless he has been pardoned. Com. v. McGuire, 84 Ky. 57. Under the Louisiana statutes, making all persons of proper understanding competent witnesses in criminal matters, a conviction of a crime no longer disqualifies the witness. State v. Mack,

41 La. Ann. 1079; State v. McManus, 42 La. Ann. 1194. A statute exists in some States, by which no prisoner in a penitentiary of the State, or of any other country, shall testify in civil actions. This ground of disqualification is related to the exclusion for conviction of crime, but is wholly a creation of statute, and in Kentucky does not extend to criminal cases. Com. v. Minor, 89 Ky. 555. Under the Texas statutes, providing that a pardon makes a witness competent, a pardon which is subject to revocation by the governor of the State whenever the person holding the same has violated any of the criminal laws of the State, does not restore the witness to competency. McGee v. State, 16 South West. Rep. 422. A person who has been tried for arson, convicted, but not yet sentenced, is competent as a witness in Virginia. Brown v. Com., 86 Va. 935. In the Federal Courts it has been held that a defendant who takes the stand to testify in his own behalf is liable to exclusion on the ground that he has previously been convicted of an infamous crime, in cases where such conviction works the exclusion of the witness. United States v. Hollis, 43 Fed. Rep. 248. Some disagreement exists in the statutes of the various States in regard to the mode of proving the conviction in order to impeach the witness. Some States insist upon the record, in other States oral testimony of the conviction is admissible. See statutes, supra, at length. In all States, however, the mere fact of arrest or accusation is not admissible against the witness. Thus, in Pullen v. Pullen, 43 N. J. Eq. 139, an offer was made to make proof of criminal conduct of the witness by producing a justice of the peace with his docket, and asking the justice respecting his actions in issuing process, and then offering to prove what he had done, and the nature of the offence charged by his docket. This was held to be inadmissible. Moreover, a conviction from which an appeal has been taken, and is pending at the time of trial, cannot be shown to impeach the witness's credibility. Card v. Foot, 57 Conn. 431. When a conviction of crime has been introduced to affect the credibility of a witness, evidence of the good reputation of the witness at the present time for truth may be introduced to rebut the evidence of conviction. Gertz v. Fitchburg Railroad, 137 Mass. 77; Webb v. State, 29 Oh. St. 351; Rex v. Clarke, 2 Stark. 241; see post, sec. 376. But such evidence is that "the publicum judicium must be upon an offence, implying such a dereliction of moral principle, as carries with it a conclusion of a total disregard to the obligation of an oath." 1 But the difficulty lies in the specification of those offences. The usual and more general enumeration is, treason, felony, and the crimen falsi, In regard to the two former, as all treasons, and almost all felonies, were punishable with death, it was very natural that crimes, deemed of so grave a character as to render the offender unworthy to live, should be considered as rendering him unworthy of belief in a court of justice. But the extent and meaning of the term crimen falsi, in our law, is nowhere laid down with precision. In the Roman law, from which we have borrowed the term, it included not only forgery, but every species of fraud and deceit.3 If the offence did not fall under any other head, it was inadmissible to rebut evidence of self-contradictory statements made by the witness. Russell v. Coffin, 8 Pick. 143; Brown v. Mooers, 6 Gray, 451. The reason of its admissibility in the former case is that the evidence of the conviction of a crime is only relevant to the case, as impeaching the character of the witness. The argument is that if the witness has committed a crime he is more likely to perjure himself than if he had not committed a crime. Whatever force there is in this argument, comes from the fact that it shows a depraved character in the witness, and, since it thus attacks his character, evidence of his reputation or character for truth and integrity is admissible to rebut such attack. Gertz v. Fitchburg Railroad, supra. If the defendant in a criminal case goes on the stand as a witness, his credibility may be impeached by evidence of a conviction of crime. Com. v. Ford, 146 Mass. 131. Under the statute of Massachusetts, conviction of any crime, though only of the rank of a misdemeanor, may be shown to affect the credibility of the witness. Com. v. Ford, supra; Quigley v. Turner, 150 Mass. 108. This decision is based on the wording of the statutes of Massachusetts, which first made all persons competent witnesses, and then provided that conviction of a crime may be shown to affect the credibility of the witness. That is not in accord with the decisions in Connecticut, where the statutes provide that "no person shall be disqualified as a witness by reason of his conviction of a crime, but such conviction may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credit." Under this statute it is held that only those crimes, a conviction for which would have rendered the witness incompetent, can now be shown to affect his credibility. Card v. Foot, 57 Conn. 431. And in this the decisions in Ohio and Illinois agree. Coble v. State, 31 Oh. St. 100; Barthological College of the col mew v. People, 104 lll. 601. It was formerly held to be the rule, that where the witness was shown to have wilfully sworn falsely in a former proceeding in the case, or upon the trial, the jury should be instructed to disregard the testimony of such witness. But since the enactment of statutes by which a person convicted of any crime is, notwithstanding, a competent witness, but proof of his conviction is allowed for the purpose of affecting the weight of his testimony, the fact that a witness has sworn falsely affects his credibility only. People v. Chapleau, 121 N. Y. 275. In People v. O'Neil, 109 N. Y. 251, 266, the court refused to charge that if the jury should find that certain witnesses had in their previous testimony, in respect to the same matters, committed wilful perjury, the jury should wholly disregard their testimony given on the trial; and this was on appeal held not to be error.

called stellionatus,4 which included "all kinds of cozenage and knavish practice in bargaining." But it is clear, that the common law has not employed the term in this extensive sense, when applying it to the disqualification of witnesses; because convictions for many offences, clearly belonging to the crimen falsi of the civilians, have not this effect. Of this sort are deceits in the quality of provisions, deceits by false weights and measures, conspiracy to defraud by spreading false news,⁵ and several others. On the other hand, it has been adjudged that persons are rendered infamous, and therefore incompetent to testify, by having been convicted of forgery,6 perjury, subornation of perjury,7 suppression of testimony by bribery, or conspiracy to procure the absence of a witness,8 or other conspiracy, to accuse one of a crime, and barratry. 10 And from these decisions, it may be deduced, that the crimen falsi of the common law not only involves

By act or deed; namely, in counterfeiting or adulterating the public money,—in fraudulently substituting one child for another, or a supposititions birth,—or in fraudulently personating another,—in using false weights or measures,—in selling or mortgaging the same thing to two several persons, in two several contracts, and in officiously supporting the suit of another by money, &c., answering to the common-law crime of maintenance. Wood, Instit. Civil Law, pp. 282, 283; Halifax, Analysis Rom. Law, p. 134. The law of Normandy disposed of the whole subject in these words: "Notandum siquidem est, quod nemo in querela sua pro teste recipiendus est; nec ejus hæredes nec participes querelæ. Et hoc intelligendum est tam ex parte actoris, quam ex parte defensoris. Omnes autem illi, qui perjurio vel læsione fidei sunt infaines, ob hoc etiam sunt repellendi, et omnes illi, qui in bello succubuerunt." Jura Normaniæ, c. 62 (in Le Grand Coustumier, fol. edit. 1539). In the ancient Danish law, it is thus defined, in the chapter entitled Falsi crimen quodnam censetur. "Falsum est, si terminum, finesve quis moverit, mometam nisi venia nalo emat vendatque, vel argentum adulterinum conflaverit, nummisve reprobis dolo malo emat vendatque, vel argento adulterino." the charge of falsehood, but also is one which may injuriously affect the administration of justice, by the introduction of falsehood and fraud. At least it may be said, in the language of Sir William Scott, " "so far the law has gone affirmatively; and it is not for me to say where it should stop, negatively."

§ 374. Extent and effect of disability of infamy. In regard to the extent and effect of the disability thus created, a distinction is to be observed between cases in which the person disqualified is a party, and those in which he is not. In cases between third persons, his testimony is universally excluded. (a) But where he is a party, in order that he may not be wholly remediless, he may make any affidavit necessary to his exculpation or defence, or for relief against an irregular judgment, or the like; 2 but it is said that his affidavit shall not be read to support a criminal charge.3 If he was one of the subscribing witnesses to a deed, will, or other instrument, before his conviction, his handwriting may be proved as though he were dead.4

§ 375. Infamy proved only by judgment. We have already remarked, that no person is deemed infamous in law, until he has been legally found guilty of an infamous crime. But the mere verdict of the jury is not sufficient for this purpose; for it may be set aside, or the judgment may be arrested, on motion for that purpose. It is the judgment, and that only, which is received as the legal and conclusive evidence of the party's guilt, for the purpose of rendering him incompetent to testify.1 And it must appear that the judgment was rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction.2 Judgment of outlawry, for treason or felony, will have the same effect; 3 for the party, in submitting to an outlawry, virtually confesses his guilt; and so the record is equivalent to a judgment upon confession. If the guilt of the party should be shown by oral evidence, and even by his own admission (though in neither of these modes can it be proved, if the evidence be objected to), or, by his plea of "guilty" which has not been followed by a judgment, 4 the proof does not go to the competency of the witness, however it may affect his credibility. 5 (a) And the judgment itself, when offered against his admissibility, can be proved only by the record, or, in proper cases, by an authenticated copy, which the objector must offer and produce at the time when the witness is about to be sworn, or at farthest in the course of the trial. 6 (b)

§ 376. Judgment of foreign tribunal. Whether judgment of an infamous crime, passed by a foreign tribunal, ought to be allowed to affect the competency of the party as a witness, in the courts of this country, is a question upon which jurists are not entirely agreed. But the weight of modern opinion seems to be, that personal disqualifications, not arising from the law of nature, but from the positive law of the country, and especially such as are of a penal nature, are strictly territorial, and cannot be enforced in any country other than that in which they originated. 1 Accordingly, it has been held, upon great consideration, that a conviction and sentence for a felony in one of the United States did not render the party incompetent as a witness in the courts of another State; though it might be shown in diminution of the credit due to this testimony. 2 (c)

§ 377. How this disability may be removed. The disability thus arising from infamy may, in general, be removed in two modes: (1) by reversal of the judgment; and (2) by a pardon. The reversal of the judgment must be shown in the same manner that the judgment itself must have been proved; namely, by production of the record of reversal, or, in proper cases, by a duly authenticated exemplification of it. The pardon must be proved, by production of the charter of pardon, under the great seal. And though it were granted after the prisoner had suffered the entire punishment awarded against him, yet it has been held sufficient to restore the competency of the witness, though he would, in such case, be entitled to very little credit.3

§ 378. Pardon. The rule that a pardon restores the competency and completely rehabilitates the party is limited to cases where the disability is a consequence of the judgment, according to the principles of the common law. 1 But where the disability is annexed to the conviction of a crime by the express words of a statute, it is generally agreed that the pardon will not, in such a case, restore the competency of the offender; the prerogative of the sovereign being controlled by the authority of the express law. Thus, if a man be adjudged guilty on an indictment for perjury, at common law, a pardon will restore his competency. But if the indictment be founded on the statute of 5 Eliz. c. 9, which declares that no person, convicted and attainted of perjury or subornation of perjury, shall be from thenceforth received as a witness in any court of record, he will not be rendered competent by a pardon.2

See also Mr. Hargrave's Juridical Arguments, vol. ii. p. 221 et seq., where this topic is treated with great ability. Whether the disability is, or is not, made a part of the judgment, and entered as such on the record, does not seem to be of any importance. The form in which this distinction is taken in the earlier cases evidently § 379. Accomplices. The case of accomplices is usually mentioned under the head of Infamy; but we propose to treat it more appropriately when we come to speak of persons disqualified by interest, since accomplices generally testify under a promise or expectation of pardon or some other benefit. But it may here be observed that it is a settled rule of evidence that a particeps criminis, notwithstanding the turpitude of his conduct, is not, on that account, an incompetent witness so long as he remains not convicted and sentenced for an infamous crime. The admission of accomplices, as witnesses for the government, is justified by the necessity of the case, it being often impossible to bring the principal offenders to justice without them. The usual course is,

shows that its force was understood to consist in this, that in the former case the disability was declared by the statute, and in the latter, that it stood at common law. "Although the incapacity to testify, especially considered as a mark of infamy, may really operate as a severe punishment upon the party; yet there are other considerations affecting other persons, which may well warrant his exclusion from the halls of justice. It is not consistent with the interests of others, nor with the protection which is due to them from the State, that they should be exposed to the peril of testimony from persons regardless of the obligation of an oath; and hence, on grounds of public policy, the legislature may well require, that while the judgment itself remains unreversed, the party convicted shall not be heard as a witness. It may be more safe to exclude in all cases, than to admit in all, or attempt to distinguish by investigating the grounds on which the pardon may have been granted. And it is without doubt as clearly within the power of the legislature to modify the law of evidence, by declaring what manner of persons shall be competent to testify, as by enacting, as in the Statute of Frauds, that no person shall be heard viva voce in proof of a certain class of contracts. The statute of Elizabeth itself seems to place the exception on the ground of a rule of evidence, and not on that of a penal fulmination against the offender. The intent of the legislature appears to have been not so much to punish the party, by depriving him of the privilege of being a witness or a juror, as to prohibit the courts from receiving the oath of any person convicted of disregarding its obligation. And whether this conthe oath of any person convicted of disregarding its obligation. And whether this consequence of the conviction be entered on the record or not, the effect is the same. The judgment under the statute being properly shown to the judges of a court of justice, their duty is declared in the statute, independent of the insertion of the inhibition as part of the sentence, and unaffected by any subsequent pardon. The legislature, in the exercise of its power to punish crime, awards fine, imprisonment, and the pillory against the offender; in the discharge of its duty to preserve the temple of justice from pollution, it repels from its portal the man who feareth not an oath. Thus it appears that a man convicted of perjury cannot be sworn in a court of justice, while the judgment remains unreversed, though his offence may have been pardoned after the judgment; but the reason is found in the express direction of the statutes to the courts, and not in but the reason is found in the express direction of the statutes to the courts, and not in the circumstances of the disability being made a part of the judgment. The pardon exerts its full vigor on the offender; but is not allowed to operate beyond this, upon the rule of evidence enacted by the statute. The punishment of the crime belongs to the criminal code; the rule of evidence to the civil." See Amer. Jur. vol. xi. pp. 360the criminal code; the rule of evidence to the civil." See Amer. Jur. vol. xi. pp. 360-362. In several of the United States, the disqualification is expressly declared by statutes, and is extended to all the crimes therein enumerated; comprehending not only all the varieties of the crimen falsi, as understood in the common law, but divers other offences. In some of the States, it is expressly enacted, that the pardon of one convicted of perjury shall not restore his competency as a witness. See Virginia, Rev. Stat. 1849, c. 199, § 19; Florida, Thompson's Dig. p. 334; Georgia, Hotchkiss's Dig. p. 730. But in Ohio, competency is restored by pardon. Rev. Stat. 1841, c. 35, § 41. to leave out of the indictment those who are to be called as witnesses; but it makes no difference as to the admissibility of an accomplice, whether he is indicted or not, if he has not been put on his trial at the same time with his companions in crime.1 He is also a competent witness in their favor; and if he is put on his trial at the same time with them, and there is only very slight evidence, if any at all, against him, the court may, as we have already seen,2 and generally will, forthwith direct a separate verdict as to him, and, upon his acquittal, will admit him as a witness for others. If he is convicted, and the punishment is by fine only, he will be admitted for the others, if he has paid the fine.3 But whether an accomplice already charged with the crime, by indictment, shall be admitted as a witness for the government, or not, is determined by the judges, in their discretion, as may best serve the purpose of justice. If he appears to have been the principal offender, he will be rejected.4 And if an accomplice, having made a private confession, upon a promise of pardon made by the attorney-general, should afterwards refuse to testify, he may be convicted upon the evidence of that confession.⁵

§ 380. How far credible. The degree of credit which ought to be given to the testimony of an accomplice is a matter exclusively within the province of the jury. It has sometimes been said that they ought not to believe him, unless his testimony is corroborated by other evidence; and, without doubt, great caution in weighing such testimony is dictated by prudence and good reason. But there is no such rule of law; it being expressly conceded that the jury may, if they please, act upon the evidence of the accompliee, without any confirmation of his statement. (a) But, on the other hand, judges, in their discretion, will advise a jury not to convict of felony upon the testimony of an accomplice alone and without corroboration; and it is now so generally the practice to give them such advice, that its omission would be regarded as an omission of duty on the part of the judge. (b) And considering the respect always paid by the jury to this advice from the bench, it may be regarded as the settled course of practice, not to convict a prisoner in any case of felony upon the sole and uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. The judges do not, in eases, withdraw the cause from the jury by positive direction to acquit, but only advise them not to give credit to the testimony.

§ 381. What corroboration requisite. But though it is thus the settled practice, in cases of felony, to require other evidence in corroboration of that of an accomplice, yet, in regard to the manner and extent of the corroboration to be required, learned judges are not perfectly agreed. Some have deemed it sufficient, if the witness is confirmed in any material part of the case;

² Roscoe's Crim. Evid. p. 120; 2 Stark. Evid. 12; Rex v. Barnard, 1 C. & P. 87. For the limitation of this practice to cases of felony, see Rex v. Jones, 31 Howell's St. Tr. 315, per Gibbs, Attor.-Gen., arg. See also Rex v. Hargrave, 5 C. & P. 170, where persons present at a fight, which resulted in manslaughter, though principals in the second degree, were held not to be such accomplices as required corroboration, when testifying as witnesses.

1 This is the rule in Massachusetts, where the law was stated by Morton, J., as follows: "1. It is competent for a jury to convict on the testimony of an accomplice alone. The principle which allows the evidence to go to the jury, necessarily involves in it a power in them to believe it. The defendant has a right to have the jury decide upon the evidence which may be offered against him; and their duty will require of them to return a verdict of guilty or not guilty, according to the conviction which that evidence shall produce in their minds. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46, § 135; 1 Hale, P. C. 304, 305; Roscoe's Crim. Ev. 119; 1 Phil. Ev. 32; 2 Stark. Ev. 18, 20. 2. But the source of this evidence is so corrupt, that it is always looked upon with suspicion and jealousy, and is deemed unsafe to rely upon without confirmation. Hence the court ever consider it their duty to advise a jury to acquit, where there is no evidence other than the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. 1 Phil. Evid. 34; 2 Stark. Evid. 24; Rex v. Durham, 2 Leach, 478; Rex v. Jones, 2 Campb. 132; 1 Wheeler's Crim. Cas. 418; 2 Rogers's Recorder, 38; 5 Id. 95. 3. The mode of corroboration seems to be less certain. It is perfectly clear, that it need not extend to the whole testimony; but it being shown that the accomplice has testified truly in some particulars, the jury may infer that he has in others. But what amounts to corroboration? We think the rule is, that the corroborative evidence must relate to some portion of the testimony which is material to the issue. To prove that an accomplice had told the truth in relation to irrelevant and immaterial matters, which were known to everybody, would have no tendency to confirm his testimony, involving the guilt of the party on trial. If this were the case, every witness, not incompetent for the want of understanding, could always furnish materials for the corroboration of his own testimony. If he could state where he was born, where he had resided, in whose custody he had been, or in what jail, or to connect the accused with the crime. Gray, C. J., after giving a thorough review of the authorities and commenting on the decision in Com. v. Bosworth, says: "It thus appears that the decision in Com. v. Bosworth establishes two points: 1. That if any evidence is admitted as competent by way of corroborating an accomplice, so as to make it safe for the jury to convict, which is not legally entitled to that effect, it is a subject of exceptions and ground for a new trial. 2. That no evidence can be legally admitted as competent and sufficient for such corroboration which does not tend to confirm the testimony of the accomplice upon a point material to the issue in the sense that it tends to prove the guilt of the defendant." This case was corroborated in Com. v. Hayes, 140 Mass. 366, and it was there said that the evidence of the accomplice must tend to connect the defendant with the crime charged. In that case, the accomplice testified that he and the defendant formed a plan of stealing goods in places in one county and selling them at places in another, and that larcenies were committed in the said places and the goods disposed of as arranged. This testimony of the accomplice was corroborated by independent evidence of the commission of the lareenies. The indictment on trial was for larceny in the county where the goods were sold, said larceny being based on the asportation of the goods by the defendant in that county. It was held that this independent evidence tended to corroborate the evidence of the accomplice by showing the connection of the de-fendant with the larcenies which the ac-complice had testified to as being the beginning of the continuous act which resulted in the crime for which the defendant was indicted. In New York, the rule is enacted by statute, section 399 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which provides that "a conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice, unless he be corroborated by such other evidence as tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime." to the enactment of this section, it was customary for judges to instruct jurors that they should not convict a defendant of crime upon the evidence of an accomplice, unless such evidence was corrob-orated; and yet it was the law in this State that a defendant could be convicted upon the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice if the jury believed it. This section has changed that rule of law and simply requires that there should be corroborative evidence, which tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime. People v. Everhardt, 104 N. Y. 594. 'See also Peo-ple v. Ogle, 104 N. Y. 515. The rule embodied in the statute does not require that the whole case should be proved outside of the testimony of the accomplice. Such a rule would render the testimony of an accomplice in most cases unnecessary, and would defeat the policy of the law which permits the use of accomplices as witnesses in aid of, and in the interest of public justice. People v. Hooghkerk, 96 N. Y. 162. In a recent case in Pennsylvania, the rule as stated in the author's text is affirmed as follows: "A jury may believe an uncorroborated accomplice, and if his testimony produces in their minds a conviction of the defendant's guilt, beyond a reasonable doubt, they may convict. If the testimony of the accomplice, his manner of testifying, his appearance upon the witness stand, impress the jury with the truth of his statement, there is no inflexible rule of law which prevents a conviction." Cox v. Com., 125 Pa. St. 103.

the offence, he may have no inducement to speak falsely, but may have every motive to declare the truth, if he intends to be believed, when he afterwards fixes the crime upon the prisoner.2 If two or more accomplices are produced as witnesses, they are not deemed to corroborate each other; but the same rule is applied, and the same confirmation is required, as if there were but

§ 382. Apparent accomplices. There is one class of persons apparently accomplices, to whom the rule requiring corroborating evidence does not apply; namely, persons who have entered into communication with conspirators, but either afterwards repenting, or, having originally determined to frustrate the enterprise, have subsequently disclosed the conspiracy to the public authorities, under whose direction they continue to act with their guilty confederates until the matter can be so far advanced and matured, as to insure their conviction and punishment. The early disclosure is considered as binding the party to his duty; and though a great degree of objection or disfavor may attach to him for the part he has acted as an informer, or on other accounts, yet his case is not treated as the case of an accomplice. 1(a)

Chief Baron Joy, after an elaborate examination of English authorities, states the true rule to be this, that "the confirmation ought to be in such and so many parts of the accomplice's narrative, as may reasonably satisfy the jury that he is telling truth, without restricting the confirmation to any particular points, and leaving the effect of such confirmation (which may vary in its effect according to the nature and circumstances of the particular case) to the consideration of the jury, aided in that consideration by the obser-(which may vary in its effect according to the nature and circumstances of the particular case) to the consideration of the jury, aided in that consideration by the observations of the judge." § 383. Parties may testify to their own fraud. Whether a party to a negotiable instrument, who has given it credit and currency by his signature, shall afterwards be admitted as a witness, in a suit between other persons, to prove the instrument originally void, is a question upon which judges have been much divided in opinion. The leading case against the admissibility of the witness is that of Walton v. Shelley,3 in which the indorser of a promissory note was called to prove it void for usury in its original concoction. The security was in the hands of an innocent holder. Lord Mansfield and the other learned judges held that upon general grounds of public policy the witness was inadmissible; it being "of consequence to mankind that no person should hang out false colors to deceive them, by first affixing his signature to a paper, and then afterwards giving testimony to invalidate it." And, in corroboration of this opinion, they referred to the spirit of that maxim of the Roman law, "Nemo, allegans suam turpitudinem, est audiendus."4

To be an accomplice, one must be indictable as a participator in the offence. Com. v. Wood, 11 Gray (Mass.), 85; Com. v. Boynton, 116 Mass. 343. The practice of caution from the bench is not so uniform in the case of misdemeanors as in felonies, though the distinction is rather one of degree than of kind (Reg. v. Farler, 8 C. & P. 106); and the extent of corroboration, it has been said, will depend much upon the nature of the crime (Rex v. Jarvis, 2 M. & Rob. 40); and if the offence be a statute one, as the non-repair of a highway; or involve no great moral delinquency, as being present at a prize-fight which terminated in manslaughter (Rex v. Hargrave, 5 C. & P. 170; Reg. v. Young, 19 Cox, C. C. 371); or the action be for a penalty, — the caution has been refused. McClory v. Wright, 10 Ir. Law, 514; Magee v. Mark, 11 Id. 449.

clared that unstamped bills should neither be pleaded, given in evidence, nor allowed to be available in law or equity. The indorser was offered by the defendant as a witness to prove this fact, and the court held that he was admissible. This case might, perhaps, have formed an exception to the general rule adopted in Walton v. Shelley, on the ground that the general policy of the law of commerce ought to yield to the public necessity in matters of revenue; and this necessity was relied upon by two of the three learned judges who concurred in the decision. But they also concurred with Lord Kenyon in reviewing and overruling the doctrine of that case. The rule, therefore, now received in England is, that the party to any instrument, whether negotiable or not, is a competent witness to prove any fact to which any other witness would be competent to testify, provided he is not shown to be legally infamous, and is not directly interested in the event of the suit. The objection, that thereby he asserts that to be false which he has solemnly attested or held out to the world as true, goes only to his credibility with the § 385. Rule in the United States not uniform. The courts of some of the American States have adopted the later English rule, and admitted the indorser, or other party to an instrument, as a competent witness to impeach it in all cases where he is not on other grounds disqualified. In other States, decisions are found which go to the exclusion of the party to an instrument in every case, when offered as a witness to defeat it, in the hands of a third person; thus importing into the Law of Evidence the maxim of the Roman law in its broadest extent. In other States, the courts, referring the rule of exclusion to the ground of public convenience, have restricted its application to the case of negotiable security actually negotiated and put into circulation before its maturity, and still in the hands of an innocent indorsec, without notice of the alleged original infirmity, or any other defect in the contract. And in this case the weight of American authority may now be considered as against the admissibility of the witness to impeach the original validity of the security; although the contrary is still holden in some courts, whose decisions, in general, are received with the highest respect.¹

1 The rule, that the indorser of a negotiable security, negotiated before it was due, is not admissible as a witness to prove it originally void, when in the hands of an innocent indorsee, is sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States, in Bank of the United States v. Dunn, 6 Peters, 51, 57, explained and confirmed in Bank of the Metropolis v. Jones, 8 Peters, 12, and in the United States v. Leffler, 11 Peters, 86, 94, 95; Scott v. Mason, 2 Vt. 198, and the rule in Walton v. Shelley approved. In Ohio, the indorser was admitted to prove facts subsequent to v. Shelley approved. In Ohio, the indorser was admitted to prove facts subsequent to the indorsement; the court expressing no opinion upon the general rule, though it was relied upon by the opposing counsel. Stone v. In Mississippi, the witness was admitted for the same purpose; and the rule in Walton v. Shelley was approved. Drake v. Henly, Walker, 541. In Illinois, the indorser has been admitted, where, in taking the note, he acted as the agent of the indorsec, to whom he immediately transferred it, without any notice of the rule. Webster v. Carroll, 3 Littel, 221, where the indorsee was admitted as a witness, it is to be observed, that the note was indorsed without recourse to him, and thereby marked with suspicion; and that the general rule was not considered. More recently in New Hampshire, doctrine of Walton v. Shelley has been denied, and the rule of the Roman law has been admitted only as a rule of estoppel upon the parties to the transaction and in regard to their rights, and not as a rule of evidence, affecting the competency of witnesses; and therefore the maker of a note, being released by his surety, was held competent in an action by an indorsee against the surety, to testify to an alteration of the note, made by himself and the payee, which rendered it void as to the surety. Haines v. Denuett, 11 N. H. 180. See further, 2 Stark. Evid. 179, n. (a); Bayley on Bills, p. 586, n. b (Phillips and Sewall's ed.). But all these decisions against the rule in Walton v. Shelley, except that in New Jersey and the last cited case in New Hamp-Shire, were made long before that rule was recognized and adopted by the Supreme Court of the United States. The rule itself is restricted to cases where the witness is called to prove that the security was actually void at the time when he gave it currency as good; and this in the ordinary course of business, and without any mark or intima-tion to put the receiver of it on his guard. Hence the indorser is a competent witness, if he indorsed the note "without recourse" to himself (Abbott v. Mitchell, 6 Shepl. 356); or, is called to prove a fact not going to the original infirmity of the security (Buck v. Appleton, 2 Shepl. 284; Wendell v. George, R. M. Charlton, 51); or, if the instrument was negotiated out of the usual course of business (Parke v. Smith, 4 Watts

§ 386. Disqualification by interest in the result. Another class of persons incompetent to testify in a cause consists of those who are interested in its result.1 The principle on which these are rejected is the same with that which excludes the parties themselves, and which has already been considered; 2 namely, the danger of perjury, and the little credit generally found to be due to such testimony, in judicial investigations. This disqualifying interest, however, must be some legal, certain, and immediate interest, however minute, either in the event of the cause itself, or in the record, as an instrument of evidence, in support of his own claims, in a subsequent action.3 It must be a legal interest, as distinguished from the prejudice or bias resulting from friendship or hatred, or from consanguinity, or any other domestic or social or any official relation, or any other motives by which men are generally influenced; for these go only to the credibility. Thus, a servant is a competent witness for his master, a child for his parent, a poor dependant for his patron, an accomplice for the government, and the like. Even a wife has been held admissible against a prisoner, though she believed that his conviction would save her husband's life.4 The rule of the Roman law — "Idonei non videntur esse testes, quibus imperari potest ut testes fient." 5 - has never been recognized in the common law, as affecting the competency; but it prevails in those countries in whose juris-

& Serg. 287). So, the indorser of an accommodation note, made for his benefit, being released by the maker, is admissible as a witness for the latter, to prove that it has subsequently been paid. Greenough v. West, 8 N. H. 400. And see Kinsley v. Robinson, 21 Pick. 327.

¹ In Connecticut, persons interested in the cause are now, by statute, made competent witnesses, the objection of interest going only to their credibility. Rev. Stat. 1849, tit. 1, § 141. In New York, persons interested are admissible, except those for whose immediate benefit the suit is prosecuted or defended, and the assignor of a thing in action, assigned for the purpose of making him a witness. Rev. Stat. vol. iii. p. 769 (3d ed.). In Ohio, the law is substantially the same. Stat. March 23, 1850, § 3. In Michigan, all such persons are admissible, except parties to the record, and persons for whose immediate benefit the suit is prosecuted or defended; and their husbands and wives. Rev. Stat. 1846, c. 102, § 99. In Virginia, persons interested are admissible in criminal cases, when not jointly tried with the defendant. Rev. Stat. 1849, c. 199, § 21. In Massachusetts, the objection of interest no longer goes to the competency of any witnesses, except witnesses to wills. Gen. Stat. c. 131, § 14. See supra, §§ 327, 329, notes. §§ 327, 329, notes.

prudence the authority of the Roman law is recognized. Neither does the common law regard as of binding force the rule that excludes an advocate from testifying in the cause for his client, -"Mandatis cavetur, ut Præsides attendant, ne patroni, in causa cui patrocinium præstiterunt, testimonium dicant." 6 But on grounds of public policy, and for the purer administration of justice, the relation of lawyer and client is so far regarded by the rules of practice in some courts, as that the lawyer is not permitted to be both advocate and witness for his client in the same cause. 7

§ 387. Nature of disqualifying interest. The interest, too, must be real, and not merely apprehended, by the party. For it would be exceedingly dangerous to violate a general rule, because in a particular case an individual does not understand the nature or extent of his rights and liabilities. If he believes and states that he has no interest, the very statement of the objection to his competency may inform him that he has; and, on the other hand, if he erroneously thinks and declares that he is interested, he may learn, by the decision of the court, that he is not. Indeed, there would be danger in resting the rule on the judgment of a witness, and not on the fact itself; for the apprehended existence of the interest might lead his judgment to a wrong conclusion. And, moreover, the inquiry which would be necessary into the grounds and degree of the witness's belief would always be complicated, vague, and indefinite, and productive of much inconvenience. For these reasons, the more simple and practicable rule has been adopted of determining the admissibility of the witness by the actual existence, or not, of any disqualifying interest in the matter.1

§ 388. Honorary obligation. If the witness believes himself to be under an honorary obligation, respecting the matter in contro-

1 Phil. Evid. 127, 128; 1 Stark. Evid. 102; Gresley on Evid. p. 253; Tait on Evid. p. 351. In America and in England, there are some early but very respectable authorities to the point, that a witness believing himself interested is to be rejected as incompetent. See Fotheringham v. Greenwood, 1 Stra. 129; Trelawney v. Thomas, 1 H. Bl. 307, per Ld. Loughborough, C. J., and Gould, J.; L'Amitie, 6 Rob. Adm. 269, n. (a); Plumb v. Whiting, 4 Mass. 518; Richardson v. Hunt, 2 Munf. 148; Freeman v. Luckett, 2 J. J. Marsh, 390. But the weight of modern authority is clearly the other way. See Commercial Bank of Albany v. Hughes, 17 Wend. 94, 101, 102; Stall v. Catskill Bank, 18 Wend. 466, 475, 476; Smith v. Downs, 6 Conn. 371; Long v. Bailie, 4 S. & R. 222; Delloue v. Rehmer, 4 Watts, 9; Stimmel v. Underwood, 3 G. & J. 282; Havis v. versy, in favor of the party calling him, he is nevertheless a competent witness, for the reasons already given; and his credibility

§ 389. Interest must be in the event of the suit. The disqualifying interest of the witness must be in the event of the cause itself, and not in the question to be decided. His liability to a like action, or his standing in the same predicament with the party, if the verdict cannot be given in evidence for or against him, is an interest in the question only, and does not exclude him.1 Thus, one underwriter may be a witness for another underwriter upon the same policy; 2 or, one seaman for another, whose claim for wages is resisted, on grounds equally affecting all the erew; 3 or, one freeholder for another, claiming land under the same title, or by the same lines and corners; 4 or, one devisee for another, claiming under the same will; 5 or, one trespasser for his co-trespasser; 6 or, a creditor for his debtor; 7 or a tenant by the courtesy; or tenant in dower, for the heir at law, in a suit concerning the title.8 And the purchaser of a license to use a patent may be a witness for the patentee, in an action for infringing the patent.9

§ 390. Test of interest. The true test of the interest of a witness is, that he will either gain or lose by the direct legal operation and effect of the judgment, or that the record will be legal evidence for or against him, in some other action. 1 It must be a present, certain, and vested interest, and not an interest uncertain, remote, or contingent. Thus the heir apparent to an estate is a competent witness in support of the claim of his ancestor; though one, who has a vested interest in remainder, is not competent. 4 And if the interest is of a doubtful nature, the objection goes to the credit of the witness, and not to his competency. For, being always presumed to be competent, the burden of proof is on the objecting party, to sustain his exception to the competency; and if he fails satisfactorily to establish it, the witness is to be sworn.5

§ 391. Degree of interest immaterial. The magnitude or degree of the interest is not regarded in estimating its effect on the mind of the witness; for it is impossible to measure the influence which any given interest may exert. It is enough, that the interest which he has in the subject is direct, certain, and vested, however small may be its amount; 1 for, interest being admitted as a disqualifying circumstance in any case, it must of necessity be so in every case, whatever be the character, rank, or fortune, of the party interested. Nor is it necessary that the witness should be interested in that which is the subject of the suit; for, if he is liable for the costs, as in the case of a prochein amy, or a guardian, or the like, we have already seen,2 that he is incompetent. And though, where the witness is equally interested on both sides, he is not incompetent; yet if there is a certain excess of interest on one side, it seems that he will be incompetent to testify on that side; for he is interested, to the amount of the excess, in procuring a verdict for the party, in whose favor his interest preponderates.3

§ 392. Nature of interest in the event of the suit. The nature of the direct interest in the event of the suit which disqualifies the

³ Larbalestier v. Clark, 1 B. & Ad. 899. Where this preponderance arose from a liability to costs only, the rule formerly was to admit the witness; because of the extreme difficulty which frequently arose, of determining the question of his liability to pay the costs. See Ilderton v. Atkinson, 7 T. R. 480; Birt v. Kershaw, 2 East, 458. But these cases were broken in upon, by Jones v. Brooke, 4 Taunt. 464; and the witness is now held incompetent, wherever there is a preponderancy of interest on the side of the party adducing him, though it is created only by the liability to costs. The existence of such a rule, however, was regretted by Mr. Justice Littledale, in 1 B. & Ad. 903; and by some it is still thought the earlier cases, above cited, are supported by the better reason. witness may be illustrated by reference to some adjudged cases. Thus, persons having become bail for the defendant have been held incompetent to testify as witnesses on his side; for they are immediately made liable, or discharged, by the judgment against or in favor of the principal. And if the bail have given security for the appearance of the defendant, by depositing a sum of money with the officer, the effect is the same. I If an underwriter, who has paid his proportion, is to be repaid in the event of the plaintiff's success in a suit against another underwriter upon the same policy, he cannot be a witness for the plaintiff.2 A creditor, whether of a bankrupt, or of an estate, or of any other person, is not admissible as a witness to increase or preserve the fund, out of which he is entitled to be paid, or otherwise benefited.3 Nor is a bankrupt competent, in an action by his assignees to prove any fact tending to increase the fund; though both he and his creditors may be witnesses to diminish it.4 The same is true of Tennant v. Strachan, 1 Mood. & M. 377. So, if his certificate has been finally obtained, yet, if his future effects remain liable (as in the ease of a second been many shanned, yet, it is future enters tenam habit (as in the case of a second bankruptcy, where he has not yet paid the amount necessary to exempt his future acquisitions), he is still incompetent as a witness for the assignees, being interested to increase the fund. Kennett v. Greenwollers, Peake's Cas. 3. The same rules apply to the case of insolvent debtors. Delafield v. Freeman, 6 Bing. 294; s. c. 4 & 2 & P. 67; Rudge v. Ferguson, 1 C. & P. 253. But upon grounds of public policy and conveni-

a legatee, without a release, and also of an heir or distributee, in any action affecting the estate. 5 So, where the immediate effect of the judgment for the plaintiff is to confirm the witness in the enjoyment of an interest in possession,6 or, to place him in the immediate possession of a right, he is not a competent witness for the plaintiff. Neither can a lessor be admitted as a witness, to prove a right of possession in his lessee to a portion of land claimed as part of the premises leased.8

§ 393. Same subject. So where the event of the suit, if it is adverse to the party adducing the witness, will render the latter liable either to a third person, or to the party himself, whether the liability arise from an express or implied legal obligation to indemnify, or from an express or implied contract to pay money upon that contingency, the witness is in like manner incompetent. The cases under this branch of the rule are apparently somewhat conflicting; and therefore it may deserve a more distinet consideration. And here it will be convenient to distinguish between those cases where the judgment will be evidence of the material facts involved in the issue, and those where it will be evidence only of the amount of damages recovered, which the defendant may be compelled to pay. In the former class, which will hereafter be considered, the interest of the party is in the record, to establish his entire claim; in the latter, which belongs to the present head, it is only to prove the amount of the injury he has suffered.

§ 394. Same subject. Thus, in an action against the principal for damage occasioned by the neglect or misconduct of his agent or servant, the latter is not a competent witness for the defendant without a release; for he is, in general, liable over to his master or employer, in a subsequent action, to refund the amount of ence, a bankrupt is held inadmissible to prove any fact which is material to support or to defeat the fiat issued against him. Nor is a creditor competent to support the fiat, whether he has or has not availed himself of the right of proving under the bankruptcy.

damages which the latter may have paid. And though the record will not be evidence against the agent, to establish the fact of miseonduct, unless he has been duly and seasonably informed of the pendency of the suit, and required to defend it, in which case it will be received as evidence of all the facts found; 1 yet it will always be admissible to show the amount of damages recovered against his employer.2 The principle of this rule applies to the relation of master and servant, or employer and agent, wherever that relation in its broadest sense may be found to exist; as, for example, to the case of a pilot, in an action against the captain and owner of a vessel for mismanagement, while the pilot was in charge; 3 or, of the guard of a coach, implicated in the like mismanagement, in an action against the proprietor; 4 or, of a broker, in an action against the principal for misconduct in the purchase of goods, which he had done through the broker; 5 or, of a sheriff's officer, who had given security for the due execution of his duty, in an action against the sheriff for misconduct in the service of process by the same officer; 6 or, of a shop-master, in an action by his owner against underwriters, where the question was, whether there had been a deviation; 7 neither of whom is competent to give testimony, the direct legal effect of which will be, to place himself in a situation of entire security against a subsequent action. But the liability must be direct and immediate to the party; for if the witness is liable to a third person, who is liable to the party, such circuity of interest is no legal ground of exclusion.8 The liability also must be legal; for if the contract be against law, as for example, if it be a promise to indemnify an officer for a violation of his duty in the service of process, it is void; and the promisor is a competent witness, the objection going only to his credibility.9

§ 395. Same subject. The same principle applies to other cases, where the direct effect of the judgment will be to create any other legal claim against the witness. Thus, if he is to repay a sum of money to the plaintiff, if he fails in the suit he is incompetent to be sworn for the plaintiff. 1 So, in an action on a policy of insurance, where there has been a consolidation rule, an underwriter, who is a party to such rule, is not a competent witness for others.2 The case is the same, wherever a rule is entered into. that one action shall abide the event of another; for in both these cases all the parties have a direct interest in the result. And it makes no difference in any of these cases, whether the witness is called by the plaintiff or by the defendant; for, in either case, the test of interest is the same; the question being, whether a judgment, in favor of the party calling the witness, will procure a direct benefit to the witness. Thus, in assumpsit, if the nonjoinder of a co-contractor is pleaded in abatement, such person is not a competent witness for the defendant to support the plea, unless he is released; for though, if the defence succeed, the witness will still be liable to another action, yet he has a direct interest to defeat the present action, both to avoid the payment of costs, and also to recover the costs of the defence.3 The case is the same, where, in a defence upon the merits, a witness is called by the defendant, who is confessedly, or by his own testimony, a co-contractor, or partner with him in the subject of the action.4 So, in a suit against one on a joint obligation, a co-obligor, not sued, is not a competent witness for the plaintiff, to prove the execution of the instrument by the defendant; for he is interested to relieve himself of part of the debt, by charging it on the defendant. 5 And upon a similar principle, where an action was brought upon a policy of insurance, averred in the declaration to have been effected by the plaintiffs, as agents, for the use and benefit and on the account of a third person, it was held that this third person was not a competent witness for the plaintiffs; and that his release to the plaintiffs, prior to the action, of all actions, claims, &c., which he might have against them by reason of the policy, or for any moneys to be recovered of the underwriters, did not render him competent; neither could his assignment to them, after action brought, of all his interest in the policy, have that effect; for the action being presumed to have been brought by his authority, he was still liable to the attorney for the costs. 6 So, in an action on a joint and several bond against the surety, he cannot call the principal obligor to prove the payment of money by the latter in satisfaction of the debt; for the witness has an interest in favor of his surety to the extent of the costs. 7 So, also, where a legatee sued the executor, for the recovery of a specific legacy, namely, a bond; it was held, that the obligor, having a direct interest in preventing its being enforced, was not a competent witness to prove that the circumstances, under which the bond was given, were such as to show that it was irrecoverable.8

§ 396. Same subject. It may seem, at the first view, that where the plaintiff calls his own servant or agent to prove an injury to his property, while in the care and custody of the servant, there could be no objection to the competency of the witness to prove misconduct in the defendant; because, whatever might be the result of the action, the record would be no evidence against him in a subsequent action by the plaintiff. But still the witness, in such case, is held inadmissible; upon the general principle already mentioned, in cases where the master or principal is defendant, namely, that a verdict for the master would place the servant or agent in a state of security against any action, which, otherwise, the master might bring against him; to prevent which he is directly interested to fix the liability on the defendant. Thus, in an action for an injury to the plaintiff's cart, or coach, or horses, by negligently driving against them, the plaintiff's own driver or coachman is not a competent witness for him without a release.2 So, in an action by the shipper of

§ 397. Interest from liability over. Where the interest of the witness arises from liability over, it is sufficient that he is bound to indemnify the party calling him against the consequence of some fact essential to the judgment. It is not necessary that there should be an engagement to indemnify him generally against the judgment itself, though this is substantially involved in the other; for a covenant of indemnity against a particular fact, essential to the judgment, is in effect a covenant of indemnity against such a judgment. Thus, the warrantor of title to the property which is in controversy is generally incompetent as a witness for his vendee, in an action concerning the title. And it makes no difference in what manner the liability arises, nor whether the property is real or personal estate. If the title is in controversy, the person who is bound to make it good to one of the litigating parties against the claim of the other is identified in interest with that party, and therefore cannot testify in his favor. 1 And if the quality or soundness is the subject of dispute, and the vendee with warranty has resold the article with similar warranty, the principle is still the same. If the effect of the judgment is certainly to render him liable, though it be only for costs, he is incompetent, but if it is only to render it more or less probable that he will be prosecuted, the objection goes only to his credibility. But whatever the case may be, his liability must be direct and immediate to the party ealling him, and not circuitous and to some other person, as, if a remote vendor with warranty is called by the defendant as a witness, where the article has been successively sold by several persons with the same warranty, before it came to the defendant.3

§ 398. Cases of warranty. In order to render the witness liable, and therefore incompetent, as warrantor of the title, it is not necessary to show an express contract to that effect; for an implied warranty is equally binding. Thus, the vendor of goods, having possession and selling them as his own, is held bound in law to warrant the title to the vendee; 1 and therefore he is generally not competent as a witness for the vendee in support of the title.2 This implied warranty of title, however, in the case of

² Lewis v. Peake, 7 Taunt. 153. In this case the buyer of a horse with warranty resold him with a similar warranty, and, being sued thereon, he gave notice of the action to his vendor, offering him the option of defending it; to which having received no answer, he defended it himself, and failed; it was holden, that he was entitled to recover of his vendor the costs of defending that action, as part of the damages he had sustained by the false warranty. In the later case of Baldwin v. Dixon, 1 M. & Rob. 59, where the defendant, in an action on a warranty of a horse, called his vendor, who had given a similar warranty, Lord Tenterden, after examining authorities, admitted the witness. A vendor was admitted, under similar circumstances, by Lord Alvanley, in Briggs v. Crick, 5 Esp. 99. But in neither of these cases does it appear that the witness had been called upon to defend the suit. In the still more recent case of Biss v. Mountain, 1 M. & Rob. 302, after an examination of various authorities, Alderson, J., held the vendor incompetent, on the ground that the effect of the judgment for the vendor is liable over, though it be only for costs, he is not a competent witness for the vendee, the English and American decisions agree. And it is believed that the weight of English authority is on the side of the American doctrine, as stated in the text; namely, that the vendor in possession stipulates that his title is good. But where the witness claims to have derived from the plaintiff the same title which he conveyed to the defendant, and so is accountable for the value to the one party or the other, in either event of the suit, unless he can discharge himself by other proof, he is a competent witness for the defendant; unless he has so conducted as to render himself accountable to the latter for the costs of the suit, as part of the damages to be recovered against him. Thus, where, in trover for a horse, the defendant called his vendor to prove that the horse was pledged to him for a debt due from the plaintiff, with authority to sell him after a certain day, and that he sold him accordingly to the authority to sell him after a certain day, and that he sold him accordingly to the defendant; he was held a competent witness. sales by sheriffs, executors, administrators, and other trustees, is understood to extend no farther than this, that they do not know of any infirmity in their title to sell in such capacity, and therefore they are in general competent witnesses.3

§ 399. Parties to bills of exchange. In regard to parties to bills of exchange and negotiable promissory notes, we have already seen that the persons who have put them into circulation by indorsements are sometimes held incompetent witnesses, to prove them originally void.1 But, subject to this exception, which is maintained on grounds of public policy, and of the interest of trade, and the necessity of confidence in commercial transactions, and which, moreover, is not everywhere conceded, parties to these instruments are admitted or rejected, in suits between other parties, like any other witnesses, according as they are interested or not in the event of the suit. In general, their interest will be found to be equal on both sides; and in all cases of balanced interest, the witness, as we shall hereafter see, is admissible.2 Thus, in an action against one of several makers of a note, another maker is a competent witness for the plaintiff as he stands indifferent; for if the plaintiff should recover in that action, the witness will be liable to pay his contributory share; and if the plaintiff should fail in that action, and force the witness to pay the whole, in another suit, he will still be entitled to contribution.3 So, in an action against the acceptor of a bill, the drawer is in general a competent witness for either party; for if the plaintiff recovers, the witness pays the bill by the hands of the acceptor; if not, he is liable to pay it himself.4 And in an action by the indorsee of a note against the indorser, the maker is a competent witness for the plaintiff; for if the plaintiff prevails, the

So, the defendant's vendor has been held competent, in trover, to prove that the goods were his own, and had been fraudulently taken from him by the plaintiff. Ward v. witness will be liable to pay the note to the defendant; and if the defendant prevails, the witness will be liable, to the same extent, to the plaintiff.5

§ 400. Same subject. And though the testimony of the witnesses, by defeating the present action on the bill or note, may probably deter the holder from proceeding in another action against the witness, yet this only affords matter of observation to the jury, as to the credit to be given to his testimony. Thus, in an action by the indorsee of a note against the indorser, the maker is a competent witness for the defendant, to prove that the date has been altered.⁶ And in an action by the indorsee of a bill against the drawer or acceptor, an indorser is, in general, a competent witness for either party; for the plaintiff, because, though his success may prevent him from calling on the indorser, it is not certain that it will; and whatever part of the bill or note he may be compelled to pay, he may recover again of the drawer or acceptor; and he is competent for the defendant, because, if the plaintiff fails against the drawer or acceptor, he is driven either to sue the indorser or abandon his claim.7

§ 401. Liability for costs. But if the verdict would necessarily benefit or affect the witness, as if he would be liable, in one event, to the costs of the action, then, without a release, which will annul his interest in the event, he will not be admissible as a witness on the side of the party in whose favor he is so interested. Thus, the party for whose use and accommodation note or bill has been drawn or accepted, is incompetent as a witness, when adduced by him who has lent his own name and liability for the accommodation of the witness.¹ So, in an action against the drawer of a bill of exchange, it has been held, that the acceptor is not a competent witness for the defendant, to prove a set-off; because he is interested in lessening the balance, being answerable to the defendant only for the amount which the plaintiff may recover against him.2

Mainwaring v. Mytton, 1 Stark. 83. It is deemed unnecessary any further to pursue this subject in this place, or particularly to mention any of the numerous cases,</sup>

§ 402. Same subject. Where a liability to costs in the suit arises in any other manner, it is still an interest sufficient to render the witness incompetent. Thus, where the witness called by the plaintiff had himself employed the attorney, to whom he had made himself liable for the costs, he was held incompetent, without a release from the attorney.² So, where he had given the plaintiff a bond of indemnity against the costs of the suit, he was held incompetent as a witness for the plaintiff, as to any point arising in the action; even such as the service of a notice on the defendant, to produce certain papers at the trial.3 Thus, also, where an attorney,4 or an executor,5 or the tenant, on whose premises the goods of the plaintiff in replevin had been distrained for rent,6 or the principal in an administration bond, the action being only against the surety,7 have been found personally liable for the costs of the suit, they have been held incompetent as witnesses on the side of the party in whose favor they were thus interested. But if the contract of indemnity is illegal, as, for example, if it be a contract to bear each other harmless in doing wrong, it creates no legal liability to affect the witness.8

§ 403. In criminal cases. This doctrine is applied in the same manner in criminal cases, where the witness has a direct, certain, and immediate interest in the result of the prosecution. Thus, in cases of summary convictions, where a penalty is imposed by statute, and the whole or a part is given to the informer or prosecutor, who becomes entitled to it forthwith upon the conviction, he is not, at the common law, a competent witness for the prosecution. 1 So, in a prosecution under the statutes for forcible entry, where the party injured is entitled to an award of immediate in which a party to a bill or note has been held competent, or otherwise, on the ground of being free from interest, or interested, under the particular circumstances of the case. restitution of the lands, he is not a competent witness.2 This rule, however, is subject to many exceptions, which will hereafter be stated. 3 But it may be proper here to remark, that, in general, where the penalty or provision for restitution is evidently introduced for the sake of the party injured, rather than to insure the detection and punishment of the offender, the party is held incompetent.4

§ 404. Interest in the record. Having thus briefly considered the subject of disqualification, resulting from a direct, certain, and immediate interest in the event of the suit, we come now to the second branch of the general rule, namely, that of interest in the record, as an instrument of evidence in some other suit, to prove a fact therein alleged. The record of a judgment, as hereafter will be seen, is always admissible, even in an action between strangers, to prove the fact that such a judgment was rendered, and for such a sum; but it is not always and in all cases admissible to prove the truth of any fact, on which the judgment was founded. Thus the record of a judgment against the master, for the negligence of his servant, would be admissible in a subsequent action by the master against the servant to prove the fact, that such a judgment had been recovered against the master for such an amount, and upon such and such allegations; but not to prove that either of those allegations was true; unless in certain cases, where the servant or agent has undertaken the defence, or, being bound to indemnify, has been duly required to assume it. under the present head are usually classed only those eases in which the record is admissible in evidence for or against the witness, to establish the facts therein alleged or involved, in order to acquire a benefit or repel a loss; 1 and it is in this view alone that the subject will now be considered.

§ 405. Claims of customary right. The usual and clearest illustration of this branch of the rule is the case of an action brought by or against one of several persons, who claim a customary right of common, or some other species of customary right. eral, in all cases depending on the existence of a particular custom, a judgment establishing that custom is evidence, though the parties are different. Therefore, no person is a competent witness in support of such custom, who would derive a benefit from its establishment; because the record would be evidence for him in another suit, in which his own right may be controverted. Thus, where the plaintiff prescribed for common of pasture upon Hampton Common, as appurtenant to his ancient messuage, and charged the defendant with neglect to repair the fence; it was held, that another commoner, who claimed a similar prescription in right of another tenement, was not a competent witness to prove the charge; 1 and a fortiori he is not, where the prescription is, that all the inhabitants of the place have common there.2 Thus, also, an inhabitant of a town is not a competent witness to prove a prescription for all the inhabitants to dig clams in a certain place; 3 nor to prove a prescriptive right of way for all the inhabitants.4 So where the right to a seat in the common council of a borough was in controversy, and it was insisted that by prescription no person was entitled, unless he was an inhabitant and also had a burgage tenure; it was held, that, though a person having but one of these qualifications was a competent witness to prove the prescription, one who had them both was not; for he would thereby establish an exclusive right in favor of himself.5 So, where a corporation was lord of a manor, and had approved and leased a part of the common, a freeman was held incompetent to prove that a sufficiency of common was left for the commoners.6 So, one who has acted in breach of an alleged custom by the exercise of a particular trade, is not a competent witness to disprove the existence of such custom. 7 Nor is the owner of property within a chapelry a competent witness to disprove an immemorial usage, that the land-owners there ought to repair the chapel.8 And it is proper here to add, that in order to exclude a witness, where the verdict depends on a custom, which he is interested to support, it seems to be necessary that the custom should be stated on the record; for it is said, that the effect of the verdict to support the custom may be aided by evidence. 10

§ 406. Interest both in suit and record. There are some cases, in which the interest of the witness falls under both branches of this rule, and in which he has been rejected, sometimes on the ground of immediate interest in the event of the suit, and sometimes on the ground of interest in the record, as an instrument of evidence. Such is the case of the tenant in possession in an action of ejectment; who is held incompetent either to support his landlord's title, 1 or, to prove that himself, and not the defendant, was the tenant in possession of the land.2 And where a declaration was served on two tenants, in possession of different parts of the premises, and a third person entered into a rule to defend alone as landlord, it was held, that neither of the tenants was a competent witness for the landlord, to prove an adverse possession by the other of the part held by him; for as they were identified with the landlord in interest, the judgment for the plaintiff would be evidence of his title, in a future action against them for the mesne profits.3

§ 407. In criminal cases, interest in record disqualifies. So, in criminal cases, a person interested in the record is not a competent witness. Thus an accessory, whether before or after the fact, is not competent to testify for the principal. And where several were indicted for a conspiracy, the wife of one was held not admissible as a witness for the others; a joint offence being charged, and an acquittal of all the others being a ground of discharge for her husband.2 Nor is the wife of one joint trespasser a competent witness for another, even after the case is already clearly proved against her husband.3

But by Stat. 3 & 4 W. IV. c. 42, §§ 26, 27, the objection arising from interest in the record, as a future instrument of evidence, is done away; the court being directed, whenever this objection is taken, to indorse the name of the witness on the record or document on which the trial shall be had, and of the party on whose behalf he was called to testify: after which the verdict or judgment in that whose behalf he was called to testify; after which the verdict or judgment in that action shall never be evidence for or against the witness, or any one claiming under action shall never be evidence for or against the witness, or any one claiming under him. The practice under this statute seems to be not yet completely settled; but the cases which have arisen, and which it is deemed unnecessary here to examine, are stated and discussed in Phil. & Am. on Evid. pp. 108-113; 1 Phil. is rejected as incompetent, may be further illustrated by reference to some eases, in which the witness has been deemed not disqualified. We have already seen that mere wishes or bias on the mind of the witness in favor of the party producing him, or strong hopes or expectations of benefit, or similarity of situation, or any other motive, short of an actual and legal interest in the suit, will not disqualify the witness. 1 Such eireumstances may influence his mind, and affect his opinions, and perhaps may tempt him at least to give a false color to his statements; and therefore they should be carefully considered by the jury, in determining the weight or eredibility to be given to his testimony; but they are not deemed sufficient to justify its utter exclusion from the jury. It may now be further observed, that a remote, contingent, and uncertain interest, does not disqualify the witness. Thus, a paid legatee of a specific sum, or of a chattel, is a competent witness for the executor; for though the money paid to a legatee may sometimes be recovered back, when necessary for the payment of paramount claims, yet it is not certain that it will be needed for such purpose; nor is it certain, if the legacy has not been paid, that there are not other funds sufficient to pay it.2 So, also, a creditor of an estate, not in a course of liquidation as an insolvent estate, is a competent witness for the administrator; for he stands in the same relation to the estate now as he did to the debtor in his lifetime; and the probability that his testimony may be beneficial to himself, by increasing the fund out of which he is to be paid, is equally remote and contingent in both cases.³ It is only where his testimony will certainly have that effect, as in the case of a creditor to an insolvent estate, or a residuary legatee, or a distributee, that the witness is rendered incompetent.⁴ Yet in these cases, and in the case of a creditor to a bankrupt estate, if the legatee, distributee, or creditor has assigned his interest to another person, even equitably, his competency is restored.⁵ In an action of covenant against a lessee, for not laving the stipulated quantity of manure upon the land; upon a plea of performance, a sub-lessee of the defendant is a competent witness for him, to support the plea; for it does not appear that he is under the like duty to the defendant, or that a recovery by the latter would place the witness in a state of security against a similar action. The same principle, a defendant against whom a civil action is pending is a competent witness for the government on the trial of an indictment for perjury, against one who has been summoned as a witness for the plaintiff in the civil action.8

§ 409. Same subject. Thus, also, the tenant in possession is a competent witness to support an action on the case, brought by the reversioner, for an injury done to the inheritance. So, in an action against an administrator for a debt due by the intestate, a surety in the administrator's bond in the ecclesiastical court is a competent witness for him, to prove a tender; for it is but a bare possibility that an action may be brought upon the bond.² So, in an action against a debtor, who pleads the insolvent debtor's act in discharge, another creditor is a competent witness for the plaintiff, to prove that, in fact, the defendant is not within the operation of the act.³ An executor or trustee under a will, taking no beneficial interest under the will, is a good attesting witness.4 And in an action against an administrator upon a bond of the intestate, and a plea of pleni administravit by the payment of another bond debt, the obligee in the latter bond is a competent witness to support the plea.⁵ A trespasser, not sued, is a competent witness for the plaintiff, against his co-trespasser.6 In a qui tam action, for the penalty for taking excessive usury, the borrower of the money is a competent witness for the plaintiff.7 A person who has been arrested on mesne process, and suffered to escape, is a competent witness for the plaintiff, in an action against the sheriff for the escape; 8 for though the whole debt may be recovered against the sheriff, yet, in an action on the judgment against the original debtor, the latter can neither plead in bar, nor give in evidence, in mitigation of damages, the judgment recovered against the sheriff. And one who has been rescued is a competent witness for the defendant, in an action against him for the rescue. 9 So, a mariner, entitled to a share in a prize, is a competent witness for the captain in an action brought by him for part of the goods taken. 10 In all these cases, it is obvious that whatever interest the witness might have, it was merely contingent and remote; and on this ground, the objection has been held to go only to his credibility.

§ 410. Witness may testify against his interest. It is hardly necessary to observe that, where a witness is produced to testify against his interest, the rule, that interest disqualifies, does not apply, and the witness is competent.

§ 411. Exceptions to rule disqualifying by interest. eral rule, that a witness interested in the subject of the suit, or in the record, is not competent to testify on the side of his interest, having been thus stated and explained, it remains for us to consider some of the exceptions to the rule, which, for various reasons, have been allowed. These exceptions chiefly prevail either in criminal cases, or in the affairs of trade and commerce. and are admitted on grounds of public necessity and convenience, and to prevent a failure of justice. They may be conveniently classed thus: (1.) Where the witness, in a criminal case is entitled to a reward, upon conviction of the offender; (2.) Where, being otherwise interested, he is made competent by statute; (3.) The case of agents, carriers, factors, brokers, or servants. when called to prove acts done for their principals, in the course of their employment; and (4.) The case of a witness, whose interest has been acquired after the party had become entitled to his testimony. To these a few others may be added, not falling under any of these heads.

§ 412. Witnesses entitled to reward. And in the first place, it is to be observed, that the circumstance that a witness for the prosecution will be entitled to a reward from the government upon conviction of the offender, or to a restoration, as owner of the property stolen, or to a portion of the fine or penalty inflicted, is not admitted as a valid objection to his competency. By the very

statute, conferring a benefit upon a person, who, but for that benefit, would have been a witness, his competency is virtually continued, and he is as much a witness after that benefit, as he would have been before. The case is clear upon grounds of public policy, with a view to the public interest, and because of the principle on which rewards are given. The public has an interest in the suppression of crime, and the conviction of criminals; it is with a view to stir up greater vigilance in apprehending, that rewards are given; and it would defeat the object of the legislature to narrow the means of conviction, by means of those rewards, and to exclude testimony, which otherwise would have been admissible. The distinction between these excepted cases, and those which fall under the general rule, is, that in the latter, the benefit resulting to the witness is created chiefly for his own sake, and not for public purposes. Such is the case of certain summary convictions heretofore mentioned.2 But where it is plain, that the infliction of a fine or penalty is intended as a punishment, in furtherance of public justice, rather than as an indemnity to the party injured, and that the detection and conviction of the offender are the objects of the legislature, the case will be within the exception, and the person benefited by the conviction will, notwithstanding his interest, be competent.3 If the reward to which the witness will be entitled has been offered by a private individual, the rule is the same, the witness being still competent; but the principle on which it stands is different; namely, this, that the public have an interest upon public grounds, in the testimony of every person who knows anything as to a crime; and that nothing which private individuals can do will take away the public right.4 The interest, also, of the witness is contingent; and, after all, he may not become entitled to the reward.

§ 413. Or pardon. The reason of this exception extends to, and accordingly it has been held to include, the cases where, instead of a pecuniary reward, a pardon or exemption from prosecution is offered by statute to any person participating in a particular offence, provided another of the parties should be convicted upon his evidence. In such cases, Lord Ellenborough remarked, that the statute gave a parliamentary capacitation to the witness, not-withstanding his interest in the cause; for it was not probable that the legislature would intend to discharge one offender, upon his discovering another, so that the latter might be convicted, without intending that the discoverer should be a competent witness.⁵

§ 414. Or other benefit. And in like manner, where the witness will directly derive any other benefit from the conviction of the offender, he is still a competent witness for the government, in the cases already mentioned. Formerly, indeed, it was held that the person whose name was alleged to be forged was not admissible as a witness against the prisoner, on an indictment for the forgery, upon the notion that the prosecution was in the nature of a proceeding in rem, and that the conviction warranted a judicial cancellation of the instrument. And the prosecutor in an indictment for perjury has been thought incompetent, where he had a suit pending, in which the person prosecuted was a material witness against him, or was defendant against him in a suit in equity in which his answer might be evidence. opinion as to cases of perjury has since been exploded; and the party is, in all such cases, held admissible as a witness, his credibility being left to the jury. For wherever the party offers as evidence, even to a collateral point, a record which has been obtained on his own testimony, it is not admitted; and, moreover, the record in a criminal prosecution is generally not evidence of the facts in a civil suit, the parties not being the same.1 And as to the person whose name has been forged, the unsoundness of the rule by which he was held incompetent was tacitly conceded in several of the more recent cases, which were held not to be within the rule; and at length it was repealed in England by an express statute, 2 which renders the party injured a competent witness in all criminal prosecutions for forgery. In America, though in some of the earlier cases the old English rule of exclusion was followed, yet the weight of authority, including the later decisions, is quite the other way, and the witness is now almost universally held admissible.3

§ 415. Informers. The second class of cases in which the general rule of incompetency by reason of interest does not apply, consists of exceptions created by express statutes, and which otherwise would not fall within the reason of the first exception. Of this sort are cases where the informer and prosecutor, in divers summary convictions and trials for petty offence, is, by the statutes of different States, expressly made a competent witness, notwithstanding his interest in the fine or forfeiture; but of which the plan of this Treatise does not require a particular enumeration.

§ 416. Agents, factors, brokers, &c. The third class of cases excepted out of the general rule, is that of agents, carriers, factors, brokers, and other servants, when offered to prove the making of contracts, the receipt or payment of money, the receipt or delivery of goods, and other acts done within the scope of their employment. This exception has its foundation in public convenience and necessity; 1 for otherwise affairs of daily and ordinary occurrence could not be proved, and the freedom of trade and commercial intercourse would be inconveniently restrained. And it extends, in principle, to every species of agency or intervention, by which business is transacted; unless the ease is overborne by some other rule. Thus, where the acceptor of a bill of exchange was also the agent of the defendant, who was both drawer and indorser, he was held incompetent, in an action by the indorsee, to prove the terms on which he negotiated the bill to the indorsee, in order to defeat the action, though the facts occurred in the course of his agency for the defendant, for whose use the bill was negotiated; it being apparent that the witness

Rex v. Hulme, 7 C. & P. 8. But quare, and see Rex v. Boston, 4 East, 572; supra, § 362. In several of the United States, the party injured, or intended to be injured, or entitled to satisfaction for the injury, or liable to pay the costs of the prosecution, is by statute made a competent witness upon a criminal prosecution for the offence. See Missouri Rev. Stat. 1845, c. 145, § 22; Illinois Rev. Stat. 1833, Crim. Code, §§ 154, 169, pp. 208, 212; California Rev. Stat. 1850, c. 99, § 13. Poth. on Obl. by Evans, App. No. 16, pp. 208, 267. In all the cases of this class, there seems also to be enough of contingency in the nature of the interest, to render the witness admissible under the general rule.

was interested in the costs of the suit.² But in cases not thus controlled by other rules, the constant course is to admit the witness notwithstanding his apparent interest in the event of the suit.3 Thus, a porter, a journeyman, or salesman, is admissible to prove the delivery of goods.4 A broker, who has effected a policy, is a competent witness for the assured, to prove any matters conneeted with the policy; even though he has an interest in it arising from his lien.⁵ A factor, who sells for the plaintiff, and is to have a poundage on the amount, is a competent witness to prove the contract of sale. 6 So, though he is to have for himself all he has bargained for beyond a certain amount, he is still a competent witness for the seller. A clerk, who has received money, is a competent witness for the party who paid it, to prove the payment, though he is himself liable on the receipt of it.8 A earrier is admissible for the plaintiff, to prove that he paid a sum of money to the defendant by mistake, in an action to recover it back.9 So of a banker's clerk. 10 A servant is a witness for his master, in an action against the latter for a penalty; such, for example, as for selling coals without measure by the bushel, though the act were done by the servant. 11 A carrier's book-keeper is a competent witness for his master, in an action for not safely earrying goods. 12 A shipmaster is a competent witness for the defendant in an action against his owner, to prove the advancement of moneys for the purposes of the voyage, even though he gave the plaintiff a bill of exchange on his owner for the amount. 13 The eashier or teller of a bank is a competent witness for the bank. to charge the defendant on a promissory note, 14 or for money lent, or overpaid, 15 or obtained from the officer without the security which he should have received; and even though the officer has given bond to the bank for his official good conduct. 16 And an

PART III.

§ 417. Limitations of exception in favor of agents, &c. exception being thus founded upon considerations of public necessity and convenience, for the sake of trade and the common usage of business, it is manifest that it cannot be extended to cases where the witness is called to testify to facts out of the usual and ordinary course of business, or to contradict or deny the effect of those acts which he has done as agent. He is safely admitted, in all cases, to prove that he acted according to the directions of his principal, and within the scope of his duty; both on the ground of necessity, and because the principal can never maintain an action against him for any act done according to his own directions, whatever may be the result of the suit in which he is called as a witness. But if the cause depends on the question, whether the agent has been guilty of some tortious act or some negligence in the course of executing the orders of his principal, and in respect of which he would be liable over to the principal if the latter should fail in the action pending against him, the agent, as we have seen, is not a competent witness for his principal, without a release. 18

 $\S~418$. Interest, when and how acquired. In the fourth class of exceptions to the rule of incompetency by reason of interest, regard is paid to the time and manner in which the interest was acquired. It has been laid down in general terms, that where one person becomes entitled to the testimony of another, the latter shall not be rendered incompetent to testify by reason of any interest subsequently acquired in the event of the suit. 1 But though the doctrine is not now universally admitted to that extent, yet it is well settled and agreed, that in all cases where the interest has been subsequently created by the fraudulent act of the adverse party, for the purpose of taking off his testimony, or by any act of mere wantonness and aside from the ordinary course of business on the part of the witness, he is not thereby rendered incompetent. And where the person was the original witness of the transaction or agreement between the parties, in whose testimony they both had a common interest, it seems also agreed, that it shall not be in the power, either of the witness or of one of the parties, to deprive the other of his testimony by reason of any interest subsequently acquired, even though it were acquired without any such intention on the part of the witness or of the party.2 But the question upon which learned judges have been divided in opinion is, whether, where the witness was not the agent of both parties, or was not called as a witness of the original agreement or transaction, he ought to be rendered incompetent by reason of an interest subsqueently acquired in good faith and in the ordinary course of business. On this point it was held by Lord Ellenborough that the pendency of a suit could not prevent third persons from transacting business bona fide with one of the parties; and that, if an interest in the event of the suit is thereby acquired, the common consequence of law must follow, that the person so interested cannot be examined as a witness for that party from whose success he will necessarily derive an advantage.3 And therefore it was held, that where the defence to an action on a policy of insurance was that there had been a fraudulent concealment of material facts, an underwriter, who had paid on a promise of repayment if the policy should be determined invalid, and who was under no obligation to become a witness for either party, was not a competent witness for another underwriter who disputed the loss.4 This doctrine has been recognized in the courts of several of the United States as founded in good reason,5 but, the question being presented to the Supreme Court of the United States, the learned judges were divided in opinion, and no judgment was given upon the point.6 If the subsequent interest has been created by the agency of the party producing the witness, he is disqualified; the party having no right to complain of his own act.7

§ 419. Witness may divest himself of interest. It may here be added, that where an interested witness does all in his power to divest himself of his interest, by offering to surrender or release it,

In Maine, the court seems to have held the witness admissible in all cases, where the party objecting to the witness is himself a party to the agreement by which his interest is acquired. Burgess v. Lane, 3 Greenl. 165, 170; supra, 167.

which the surrenderee or releasee, even though he be a stranger, refuses to accept, the principle of the rule of exclusion no longer applies, and the witness is held admissible. Thus, in an ejectment, where the lessors of the plaintiff claimed under a will, against the heir at law, and the executor was called by the plaintiff to prove the sanity of the testator, and was objected to by the defendant, because by the same will he was devisee of the reversion of certain copyhold lands, to obviate which objection he had surrendered his estate in the copyhold lands to the use of the heir at law, but the heir had refused to accept the surrender, - the court held him a competent witness.8 So, if the interest may be removed by the release of one of the parties in the suit, and such party offers to remove it, but the witness refuses, he cannot thereby deprive the party of his testimony.9

 \S 420. Equal interest for both parties no disqualification. the witness, though interested in the event of the cause, is so situated that the event is to him a matter of indifference, he is still a competent witness. This arises where he is equally interested on both sides of the cause, so that his interest on one side is counterbalanced by his interest on the other. 1 But if there is a preponderance in the amount or value of the interest on one side, this seems, as we have already seen, to render him an interested witness to the amount of the excess, and therefore to disqualify him from testifying on that side.2 Whether the circumstance that the witness has a remedy over against another, to indemnify him for what he may lose by a judgment against the party calling him, is sufficient to render him competent by equalizing his interest, is not clearly agreed. Where his liability to costs appears from his own testimony alone, and in the same mode it is shown that he has funds in his hands to meet the charge, it is settled that this does not render him incompetent.3 So, where he stated that he was indemnified for the costs, and considered that he had ample security.4 And where, upon this objection being taken to the witness, the party calling him forthwith executed a bond to the adverse party, for the payment of all costs, with sureties, whom the counsel for the obligee admitted to be abundantly responsible, but at the same time he refused to receive the bond, the court held the competency of the witness to be thereby restored; observing, however, that if the solvency of the sureties had been denied, it might have presented a case of more embarrassment, it being very questionable whether the judge could determine upon the sufficiency of the obligors so as to absolve the witness from liability to costs.⁵ The point upon which the authorities seem to be conflicting is where there is merely a right of action over, irrespective of the solveney of the party liable; the productiveness of the remedy, in actual satisfaction, being wholly contingent and uncertain. But in such cases the weight of authority is against the admissibility of the witness. Thus, in an action against the sheriff for taking goods, his officer, who made the levy, being called as a witness for the defence, stated upon the voir dire that he gave security to the sheriff, and added that he was indemnified by the creditor, meaning that he had his bond of indemnity. But Lord Tenterden held him not a competent witness; observing that if the result of the action were against the sheriff, the witness was liable to a certainty, and he might never get repaid on his indemnity; therefore it was his interest to defeat the action. 6 So, where the money with which the surety in a replevin bond was to be indemnified, had been deposited in the hands of a receiver designated by the judge, it was held that this did not restore the competency of the surety as a witness in the cause for the principal; for the receiver might refuse to pay it over, or become insolvent, or, from some other cause, the remedy over against him might be unproductive.7 The true distinction lies between the case where the witness must resort to an action for his indemnity, and that in which the money is either subject to the order of the court, and within its actual control and custody, or is in the witness's own hands. Therefore it has been laid down by a learned judge, that where a certain sum of money can be so placed, either with the witness himself or with the court and its officers, under a proper rule directing and controlling its application according to the event, as that the interest creating the disability may be met and extinguished before the witness is or can be damnified, it shall be considered as balancing or extinguishing that interest, so as to restore the competency of the witness.8

§ 421. Objection on account of interest. In regard to the time of taking the objection to the competency of a witness, on the ground of interest, it is obvious that, from the preliminary nature of the objection, it ought in general to be taken before the witness is examined in chief. If the party is aware of the existence of the interest, he will not be permitted to examine the witness, and afterwards to object to his competency if he should dislike his testimony. He has his election, to admit an interested person to testify against him or not; but in this, as in all other cases, the election must be made as soon as the opportunity to make it is presented; and failing to make it at that time, he is presumed to have waived it for ever. But he is not prevented from taking the objection at any time during the trial, provided it is taken as soon as the interest is discovered.2 Thus, if discovered during the examination in chief by the plaintiff, it is not too late for the defendant to take the objection.3 But if it is not discovered until after the trial is concluded, a new trial will not, for that cause alone, be granted; 4 unless the interest was known and concealed by the party producing the witness.⁵ The rule on this subject, in criminal and civil cases, is the same.6 Formerly, it was deemed necessary to take the objection to the competency of a witness on the voir dire; and if once sworn in chief, he could not afterwards be objected to, on the ground of interest. But the strictness of this rule is relaxed; and the objection is now usually taken after he is sworn in chief, but previous to his direct examination It is in the discretion of the judge to permit the adverse party to cross-examine the witness, as to his interest, after he has been examined in chief; but the usual course is not to allow questions to be asked upon the cross-examination, which properly belong only to an examination upon the voir dire.7 But if, notwithstanding every ineffectual endeavor to exclude the witness on the ground of incompetency, it afterwards should appear incidentally, in the course of the trial, that the witness is interested, his testimony will be stricken out, and the jury will be instructed wholly to disregard it. 8 The rule in equity is the same as at law; 9 and the principle applies with equal force to testimony given in a deposition in writing, and to an oral examination in court. In either case, the better opinion seems to be, that if the objection is taken as soon as may be after the interest is discovered, it will be heard; but after the party is in mora, it comes too late. 10 One reason for requiring the objection to be made thus early is, that the other party may have opportunity to remove it by a release; which is always allowed to be done, when the objection is taken at any time before the examination is completed. It is also to be noted as a rule, applicable to all objections to the reception of

Where the testimony is by deposition, the objection, if the interest is known, ought regularly to be taken in limine; and the cross-examination should be made de bene esse, under protest, or with an express reservation of the right of objection at the trial; unless the interest of the witness is developed incidentally, in his testimony to the merits. evidence, that the ground of objection must be distinctly stated at the time, or it will be held vague and nugatory. 12

§ 422. Same subject. Where the objection to the competency of the witness arises from his own examination, he may be further interrogated to facts tending to remove the objection, though the testimony might, on other grounds, be inadmissible. When the whole ground of the objection comes from himself only, what he says must be taken together as he says it. Thus, where his interest appears, from his own testimony, to arise from a written instrument, which is not produced, he may also testify to the contents of it; but if he produces the instrument, it must speak for itself.² So, where the witness for a chartered company stated that he had been a member, he was permitted also to testify that he had subsequently been disfranchised.3 So, where a witness called by an administrator testified that he was one of the heirs at law, he was also permitted to testify that he had released all his interest in the estate.4 And, generally, a witness upon an examination in court as to his interest may testify to the contents of any contracts, records, or documents not produced, affecting the question of his interest.⁵ But if the testimony of the witness is taken upon interrogatories in writing, previously filed and served on the adverse party, who objects to his competency on the ground of interest, which the witness confesses, but testifies that it has been released; the release must be produced at the trial, that the court may judge of it.6

§ 423. Proof of interest. The mode of proving the interest of a witness is either by his own examination, or by evidence aliunde. But whether the election of one of these modes will preclude the party from afterwards resorting to the other is not clearly settled by the authorities. If the evidence offered aliunde to prove the interest is rejected as inadmissible, the witness may then be examined on the voir dire. And if the witness on the voir dire states that he does not know, or leaves it doubtful whether he is interested or not, his interest may be shown by other evidence.2 It has also been held, that a resort to one of these modes to prove the interest of the witness on one ground does not preclude a resort to the other mode, to prove the interest on another ground.3 And where the objection to the competency of the witness is founded upon the evidence already adduced by the party offering him, this has been adjudged not to be such an election of the mode of proof, as to preclude the objector from the right to examine the witness on the voir dire.4 But, subject to these modifications, the rule recognized and adopted by the general current of authorities is, that where the objecting party has undertaken to prove the interest of the witness, by interrogating him upon the voir dire, he shall not, upon failure of that mode, resort to the other to prove facts, the existence of which was known when the witness was interrogated.⁵ The party appealing to the conscience of the witness, offers him to the court as a credible witness; and it is contrary to the spirit of the law of evidence to permit him afterwards to say, that the witness is not worthy to be believed. It would also violate another rule, by its tendency to raise collateral issues. Nor is it deemed reasonable to permit a party to sport with the conscience of a witness, when he has other proof of his interest. But if evidence of his interest has been given aliunde, it is not proper to examine the witness, in order to explain it away.6

§ 424. Examination upon the voir dire. A witness is said to be examined upon the voir dire, when he is sworn and examined as to the fact whether he is not a party interested in the cause.7 And though this term was formerly and more strictly applied only to the case where the witness was sworn to make true answers to such questions as the court might put to him, and before he was sworn in chief, yet it is now extended to the preliminary examination to his interest, whatever may have been the form of the oath under which the inquiry is made.

 \S 425. Question of interest preliminary and for the court. question of interest, though involving facts, is still a preliminary question, preceding, in its nature, the admission of the testimony to the jury. It is therefore to be determined by the court alone, it being the province of the judge and not of the jury, in the first instance, to pass upon its efficiency. If, however, the question of fact, in any preliminary inquiry,—such, for instance, as the proof of an instrument by subscribing witnesses, - is decided by the judge, and the same question of fact afterwards recurs in the course of the trial upon the merits, the jury are not precluded by the decision of the judge, but may, if they are satisfied upon the evidence, find the fact the other way.2 In determining the question of interest, where the evidence is derived aliunde, and it depends upon the decision of intricate questions of fact, the judge may, in his discretion, take the opinion of the jury upon them.3 And if a witness, being examined on the voir dire, testifies to facts tending to prove that he is not interested, and is thereupon admitted to testify; after which opposing evidence is introduced, to the same facts, which are thus left in doubt, and the facts are material to the issue, - the evidence must be weighed by the jury, and if they thereupon believe the witness to be interested, they must lay his testimony out of the case.4

§ 426. Disqualification removed by a release. The competency of a witness, disqualified by interest, may always be restored by a proper release.⁵ If it consists in an interest vested in himself,

he may divest himself of it by a release, or other proper conveyance. If it consists in a liability over, whether to the party calling him, or to another person, it may be released by the person to whom he is liable. A general release of all actions and causes of action for any matter or thing, which has happened previous to the date of the release, will discharge the witness from all liability consequent upon the event of a suit then existing. Such a release from the drawer to the acceptor of a bill of exchange was therefore held sufficient to render him a competent witness for the drawer, in an action then pending by the payee against him; for the transaction was already passed, which was to lay the foundation of the future liability; and upon all such transactions and inchoate rights such a release will operate.² A release, to qualify a witness, must be given before the testimony is closed, or it comes too late. But if the trial is not over, the court will permit the witness to be re-examined, after he is released; and it will generally be sufficient to ask him if his testimony, already given, is true; the circumstances under which it has been given going only to the credibility.3

§ 427. Who must release. As to the person by whom the release should be given, it is obvious that it must be by the party holding the interest to be released, or by some person duly authorized in his behalf. A release of a bond debt by one of several obligees, or to one of several obligors, will operate as to them all. So, where several had agreed to bear the expense of a joint undertaking, in preferring a petition to Parliament, and an action was brought against one of them, another of the contractors was held a competent witness for the defendant, after being released by him; for the event of the suit could at most only render him

testimony, in answer to a question put to him, its execution needs not to be proved by the subscribing witnesses; but it is to be taken as a part of his testimony. If the question is asked by the party calling the witness, who thereupon produces the release, the party is estopped to deny that it is a valid and true release. But where the release is produced or set up by the party to the suit, to establish his own title, he must prove its execution by the subscribing witness. Citizens' Bank v. liable to the defendant for his contributory share.² But if there is a joint fund or property to be directly affected by the result, the same reason would not decisively apply; and some act of divestment, on the part of the witness himself, would be necessary. Thus, in an action on a charter-party, a joint-owner with the plaintiff, though not a registered owner, is not a competent witness for the plaintiff, unless cross-releases are executed between them. 4 A release by an infant is generally sufficient for this purpose; for it may be only voidable, and not void; in which case, a stranger shall not object to it.⁵ But a release by a guardian ad litem,6 or by a prochein amy, or by an attorney of record,7 is not good. A surety may always render the principal a competent witness for himself, by a release.8 And it seems sufficient, if only the costs are released.9

§ 428. Interests not removed by a release. Though there are no interests of a disqualifying nature but what may, in some manner, be annihilated, yet there are some which cannot be reached by a release. Such is the case of one having a common right, as an inhabitant of a town; for a release by him, to the other inhabitants, will not render him a competent witness for one of them, to maintain the common right.2 So where, in trover, the plaintiff claimed the chattel by purchase from B., and the defen-

ought not also to release to them his interest in the assets of the firm, so far as they may be affected by the demand in controversy. 1b.

One of several copartners, not being sued with them, may be rendered a competent witness for them by their release. Lefferts v. De Mott, 21 Wend. 136 (sed vide Cline v. Little, 5 Blackf. 486); but quære, if he ought not also to release to them his interest in the assets of the firm, so far as they dant claimed it under a purchase from W., who had previously bought it from B., it was held that a release to B. from the defendant would not render him a competent witness for the latter; for the defendant's remedy was not against B., but against W. alone.3 And in the case of a covenant real, running with the land, a release by the covenantee, after he has parted with the estate, is of no avail; no person but the present owner being competent to release it.4 Where the action is against the surety of one who has since become bankrupt, the bankrupt is not rendered a competent witness for the surety, by a release from him alone; because a judgment against the surety would still give him a right to prove under the commission. The surety ought also to release the assignees from all claim on the bankrupt's estate, it being vested in them; and the bankrupt should release his claim to the surplus.⁵ So, a residuary legatee is not rendered a competent witness for the executor, who sues to recover a debt due to the testator, merely by releasing to the executor his claim to that debt; for, if the action fails, the estate will still be liable for the costs to the plaintiff's attorney, or to the executor. The witness must also release the residue of the estate; or, the estate must be released from all claim for the costs.6

§ 429. Delivery of release not necessary. It is not necessary that the release be actually delivered by the releasor into the hands of the releasee. It may be deposited in court, for the use of the absent party. 1 Or, it may be delivered to the wife, for the use of the husband.² But in such cases it has been held necessary that the delivery of the release to a third person should be known to the witness at the time of giving his testimony.3 The objection of interest, as before remarked, proceeds on the presumption that it may bias the mind of the witness; but this presumption is taken away by proof of his having done all in his power to get rid of the interest.4 It has even been held, that where the defendant has suffered an interested witness to be examined, on the undertaking of the plaintiff's attorney to execute a release to him after the trial, which, after a verdiet for the plaintiff, he refused to execute, this was no sufficient cause for a new trial; for the witness had a remedy on the undertaking.⁵ But the witness, in such cases, will not be permitted to proceed with his testimony, even while the attorney is preparing or amending the release, without the consent of the adverse party. 6

§ 430. Other modes of restoring competency. There are other modes, besides a release, in which the competency of an interested witness may be restored. Some of those modes, to be adopted by the witness himself, have already been adverted to;1 namely, where he has assigned his own interest, or done all in his power to assign it; or, where he refuses to accept a release tendered to him by another. So, where, being a legatee or distributee, he has been fully paid.² An indorser is made a competent witness for the indorsee, by striking off his name from the back of the note or bill; but if the bill is drawn in sets, it must appear that his name is erased from each one of the set, even though one of them is missing and is supposed to be lost; for it may be in the hands of a bona fide holder.3 A guarantor, also, is rendered a competent witness for the creditor, by delivering up the letter of guaranty, with permission to destroy it.4 And this may be done by the attorney of the party, his relation as such and the possession of the paper being sufficient to justify a presumption of authority for that purpose. 5 The bail or surety of another may be rendered a competent witness for him, as we have already seen, by substituting another person in his stead; which, where the stipulation is entered into in any judicial proceeding, as in the case of bail, and the like, the court will order upon motion. may be done by depositing in court a sufficient sum of money; or, in the case of bail, by a surrender of the body of the principal.6 So, where the liability, which would have rendered the witness incompetent, is discharged by the operation of law; as, for example, by the bankrupt or the insolvent laws, or by the statute of limitations. up in bar, one of which is a prescriptive or customary right in all the inhabitants of a certain place, one of those inhabitants may be rendered a competent witness for the defendant, by his waiving that branch of the defence.8 In trover by a bailee, he may render the bailor a competent witness for him, by agreeing to allow him, at all events, a certain sum for the goods lost.9 The assignee of a chose in action, who, having commenced a suit upon it in the name of the assignor, has afterwards sold and transferred his own interest to a stranger, is thereby rendered a competent witness for the plaintiff. 10 But the interest which an informer has in a statute penalty is held not assignable for that purpose. 11 So, the interest of a legatee being assigned, he is thereby rendered competent to prove the will; though the payment is only secured to him by bond which is not yet due. 12 So, a stockholder in any money-corporation may be rendered a competent witness for the corporation, by a transfer of his stock, either to the company or to a stranger; even though he intends to repossess it, and has assigned it merely to qualify himself to testify; provided there is no agreement between him and the assignee or purchaser for a reconveyance. 13 Where a witness was liable to the plaintiff's attorney for the costs, and the attorney had prepared a release, in order to restore his competency in case it should be questioned, but, no objection being made to the witness, he was examined for the plaintiff without a release, this was considered as a gross imposition upon the court; and in a subsequent action by the attorney against the witness, for his costs, he was nonsuited. 14 These examples are deemed sufficient for the purpose of illustrating this method of restoring the competency of a witness disqualified by interest.

CHAPTER III.

OF THE EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES.

- § 431. Examination of witnesses. Having thus treated of the means of procuring the attendance of witnesses, and of their competency, we come now to consider the manner in which they are to be examined. And, here, in the first place, it is to be observed. that the subject lies chiefly in the discretion of the judge, before whom the cause is tried, it being from its very nature susceptible of but few positive and stringent rules. The great object is to elicit the truth from the witness; but the character, intelligence, moral courage, bias, memory, and other circumstances of witnesses are so various, as to require almost equal variety in the manner of interrogation, and the degree of its intensity, to attain that This manner and degree, therefore, as well as the other circumstances of the trial, must necessarily be left somewhat at large, subject to the few general rules which we shall proceed to state; remarking only, that wherever any matter is left to the discretion of one judge, his decision is not subject to be reversed or revised by another.
- \S 432. Whether separately, a matter of discretion with the court. If the judge deems it essential to the discovery of truth, that the witnesses should be examined out of the hearing of each other, he will so order it. This order, upon the motion or suggestion of either party, is rarely withheld; but, by the weight of authority, the party does not seem entitled to it as a matter of right. (a)
- ¹ In Rex v. Cook, 13 Howell, St. Tr. 348, it was declared by Lord C. J. Treby to be grantable of favor only, at the discretion of the court, and this opinion was followed
- when he may have seen the affidavits previously, because the precaution would be useless. Penniman v. Hill, supra. Generally speaking, a party, who is also a witness, may remain in court and need not withdraw with the others (Selfe v. Isaac-

(α) Penniman v. Hill, 24 W. R. 245; son, 1 F. & F. 194; Charnock v. Dewings, Nelson v. State, 2 Swan (Tenn.), 237; 3 C. & K. 378); yet in Penniman v. Hill, Supra, it was said that the court might, in its discretion, order even the party to withdraw. Cf. Ryan v. Couch, 66 Ala. 147; Cf. Heath v. State, 7 Tex. App. 464. The court will not direct a witness, who is also a party, to withdraw while affidavits are being read, when he may have seen the affidavits are. room except the one under examination, may in its discretion permit exceptions to the rule and allow some of the witnesses to remain in the court-room. Riley v. State, 88 Ala. 193; Barnes v. State, 88 Ala. 204.

The course in such cases is either to require the names of the witnesses to be stated by the counsel of the respective parties, by whom they were summoned, and to direct the sheriff to keep them in a separate room until they are called for; or, more usually, to eause them to withdraw, by an order from the bench, accompanied with notice, that if they remain they will not be examined. In the latter case, if a witness remains in court in violation of the order even by mistake, it is in the discretion of the judge whether or not he shall be examined. 2(b) The course formerly was to exclude him; and this is still the inflexible rule in the exchequer in revenue cases, in order to prevent any imputation of unfairness in proceedings between the crown and the subject. But with this exception, the rule in criminal and civil

by Lord C. J. Holt, in Rex v. Vaughan, Id. 494, and by Sir Michael Foster, in Rex v. Goodere, 17 Howell, St. Tr. 1015. See also 1 Stark. Evid. 163; Beamon v. Ellice, 4 C. & P. 585, per Taunton, J.; State v. Sparrow, 3 Murphy, 487. The rule is stated by Fortescue, in these words: "Et si necessitas exegerit, dividantur testes hujusmodi, by Fortescue, in these words: "Et si necessitas exegerit, dividantur testes hujusmodi, donec ipsi deposierint quicquid velint, ita quod dictum unius non docebit aut concitabit ecrum alium ad consimiliter testificandum." Fortesc. De Laud. Leg. Angl. c. 26. This, however, does not necessarily exclude the right of the court to determine whether there is any need of a separate examination. Mr. Phillips states it only as the uniform course of practice, that "the court, on the application of counsel, will order the witnesses on both sides to withdraw." 2 Phil. Evid. 395. And see, accordingly, Williams v. Hulie, 1 Sid. 131; Swift on Evid. 512. In Taylor v. Lawson, 3 C. & P. 543, Best, C. J., regretted that the rule of parliamentary practice, which evaluates all witnesses but C. J., regretted that the rule of parliamentary practice, which excludes all witnesses but the one under examination, was not universally adopted. But in Southey v. Nash, 7 C. & P. 632, Alderson, B., expressly recognized it as "the right of either party, at any moment, to require that the unexamined witnesses shall leave the court." It is a general rule in the Scotch law, that witnesses should be examined separately; and it is general rule in the Scotch law, that witnesses should be examined separatery; and it is founded on the importance of having the story of each witness fresh from his own recollection, unmingled with the impression received from hearing the testimony of others in the same case. To this rule, an exception is allowed in the case of medical witnesses; but even those, on matters of medical opinion, are examined apart from each other. See Alison's Practice, pp. 542-545; Tait on Evid. 420.

2 It has, however, been held, that, if the witness remains in court, in disobedience of its could be interestingly capacity on that ground along he excluded: but that it is of its order, his testimony cannot, on that ground alone, be excluded; but that it is matter for observation on his evidence. Chandler v. Horne, 2 M. & Rob. 423. As to the rule in the text, see State v. Brookshire, 2 Ala. 303, acc.

(b) People v. Sam Lung, 70 Cal. 516; (b) People v. Sam Lung, 70 Cal. 516; Hey v. Com., 32 Gratt. (Va.), 946; Cobbett v. Hudson, 1 E. & B. 14. It has even been said to be error to exclude a witness for such a cause. Hubbard v. Hubbard, 7 Oreg. 42. Cf. Smith v. State, 4 Lea (Tenn.), 428. It has been decided in three cases in Indiana, that where the party is entirely free from fault, the testingury of a witness who disphers an eyeler. mony of a witness who disobeys an order of the court cannot be excluded. Davis v. Byrd, 94 Ind. 525; Burk v. Andis, 98 Ind. 59; State v. Thomas, 111 Ind. 516. In the first of these cases the true rule is said to be that where a party is without fault, and a witness disobeys an order directing a separation of witnesses, the party shall not be denied the right of having the witness testify, but the conduct of the witness may go to the jury upon the question of his credibility. And in Vermont, it is held that the witness is not thereby rendered incompetent, but may be proceeded against for contempt. State v. Ward, 61 Vt. 179; State v. Hopkins, 50 Vt. 316; State v. Lockwood, 58 Vt. 378; and in Georgia it has been held that if a witness remains in the court-room, under the rule, he is not thereby rendered incompetent, but may be proceeded against for contempt. Lassiter v. State, 67 Georgia, 739.

cases is the same. 3(c) But an attorney in the cause, whose personal attendance in court is necessary, is usually excepted from the order to withdraw.4 The right of excluding witnesses for disobedience to such an order, though well established, is rarely exercised in America; 5(d) but the witness is punishable for the contempt.

§ 433. Direct examination. When a witness has been duly sworn, and his competency is settled, if objected to,6 he is first examined by the party producing him; which is called his direct examination. He is afterwards examined to the same matters by the adverse party; which is called his cross-examination. examinations are conducted orally in open court, under the regulation and order of the judge, and in his presence and that of the jury, and of the parties and their counsel.

§ 434. Leading questions not permissible. In the direct examination of a witness, it is not allowed to put to him what are termed leading questions; that is, questions which suggest to the witness the answer desired. The rule is to be understood in a reasonable sense; for if it were not allowed to approach the points at issue by such questions, the examinations would be most inconveniently protracted. To abridge the proceedings, and bring the witness as soon as possible to the material points on which he is to speak, the counsel may lead him on to that length, and may recapitulate to him the acknowledged facts of the case which have been already established. The rule, therefore, is not applied to that part of the examination, which is merely introductory of that which is material. (a) Questions are also objectionable, as leading, which, embodying a material fact, admit of an answer by a

The course in the Scotch courts, after a witness is sworn, is, first, to examine him initialibus, — namely, whether he has been instructed what to say, or has received or has been promised any good deed for what he is to say, or bears any ill-will to the adverse party, or has any interest in the cause or concern in conducting it; together with his age, and whether he is married or not, and the degree of his relationship to the party adducing him. simple negative or affirmative. (b) An argumentative or pregnant course of interrogation is as faulty as the like course in pleading. The interrogatory must not assume facts to have been proved, which have not been proved; nor, that particular answers have been given, which have not been given. 2 (c) The witness, except in certain cases hereafter to be mentioned, is to be examined only to matters of fact within his own knowledge, whether they consist of words or actions; and to these matters he should in general be plainly, directly, and distinctly interrogated. Inferences or conclusions, which may be drawn from facts, are ordinarily to be drawn by the jury alone; except where the conclusion is an inference of skill and judgment; in which case it may be drawn by an expert, and testified by him to the jury.³

§ 435. Exceptions. In some cases, however, leading questions are permitted, even in a direct examination, - namely, where the witness appears to be hostile to the party producing him, or in the interest of the other party, or unwilling to give evidence; (a) or where an omission in his testimony is evidently caused by want of recollection, which a suggestion may assist. (b) Thus, where the witness stated, that he could not recollect the names of the component members of a firm, so as to repeat them without suggestion, but thought he might possibly recollect them if suggested to him, this was permitted to be done.² So, where the transaction involves numerous items or dates. So, where, from the nature of the case, the mind of the witness cannot be directed to the subject of inquiry, without a particular specification of it; as,

Co., 1 F. & F. 505. The rules regulating the examination of witnesses are applicable only to the examination of the witness by the counsel of the party who calls him and in whose favor his testimony is probably intended; the presiding judge may of course interrogate the witness in any form and to any extent he may deem important to the ends of justice. Com. v. Galavan, 9 Allen (Mass.), 271.

where he is called to contradict another, as to the contents of a letter, which is lost, and cannot, without suggestion, recollect all its contents, the particular passage may be suggested to him.3 So, where a witness is called to contradict another, who had stated, that such and such expressions were used, or the like, counsel are sometimes permitted to ask, whether those particular expressions were used, or those things said, instead of asking the witness to state what was said. 4 (c) Where the witness stands in a situation, which of necessity makes him adverse to the party calling him, as, for example, on the trial of an issue out of chancery, with power to the plaintiff to examine the defendant himself as a witness, he may be cross-examined, as a matter of right.⁵ Indeed, when and under what circumstances a leading question may be put, is a matter resting in the sound discretion of the court, and not a matter which can be assigned for error. 6(d)

§ 436. Witness may assist his memory. Though a witness can testify only to such facts as are within his own knowledge and recollection, yet he is permitted to refresh and assist his memory, by the use of a written instrument, memorandum, or entry in a

The policy of these rules, as well as of almost all other rules of the common law on the subject of evidence, is controverted in the Rationale of Judicial Evidence, by Jeremy Bentham, — "a learned writer who has devoted too much of his time to the theory of jurisprudence, to know much of the practical consequences of the doctrines he has published to the world." Per Best, C. J., in Hovill v. Stephenson, 5 Bing. 493.

6 Moody v. Rowell, 17 Pick. 498. In this case the law on this point was thus stated by the learned Chief Justice: "The court have no doubt that it is within the discretion of a judge at the trial, under particular circumstances, to permit a leading question to be put to one's own witness; as when he is manifestly reluctant and hostile to the interest of the party calling him, or where he has exhausted his memory, without stating the particular required, where it is a proper name, or other fact which cannot stating the particular required, where it is a proper name, or other lact which cannot be significantly pointed to by a general interrogatory, or where the witness is a child of tender years, whose attention can be called to the matter required, only by a pointed or leading question. So a judge may, in his discretion, prohibit certain leading questions from being put to an adversary's witness, where the witness shows a strong interest or bias in favor of the cross-examining party, and needs only an intimation, to say whatever is most favorable to that party. The witness may have purposely concealed such bias in favor of one party, to induce the other to call him and make him his witness; or the party calling him may be compelled to do so, to prove some single fact necessary to his party calling him may be compelled to do so, to prove some single fact necessary to his case. This discretionary power to vary the general rule is to be exercised only so far as the purposes of justice plainly require it, and is to be regulated by the circumstances of each case." (a) It does not seem to be necessary that the writing should have been made by the witness himself, nor that it should be an original writing, provided, after inspecting it, he can speak to the facts from his own recollection. 2(b) So, also, where the witness recollects that he saw the paper while the facts were fresh in his memory, and remembers that he then knew that the particulars therein mentioned were correctly stated.3 (c) And it is not necessary that the writing thus used to refresh the memory should itself be admissible in evidence; for if inadmissible in itself, as for want of a stamp, it may still be referred to by the

§ 437. When writings may be used to assist memory. The cases in which writings are permitted to be used for this purpose may be divided into three classes. (1.) Where the writing is used only for the purpose of assisting the memory of the witness. In this case, it does not seem necessary that the writing should be produced in court, (a) though its absence may afford matter of observation to the jury; for the witness at last testifies from his own recollection. (b) (2.) Where the witness recollects having seen the writing before, and though he has now no independent recollection of the facts mentioned in it, yet he remembers that, at the time he saw it, he knew the contents to be correct. (c) In this case, the writing itself must be produced in court, in order

Vincent, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 98. So in Dugan v. Mahoney, 11 Allen (Mass.), 572; a witness was allowed to testify to the delivery of goods, after looking at a memorandum book, in which entries were made by him in the ordinary course of business, though he had no recollection of the delivery. The court cites the second rule of Mr. Greenleaf given above, and says, "It is obvious that this species of evidence must be admissible in regard to numbers, dates, sales and deliveries of goods, payments and receipts of money, accounts and the like, in respect to which no memory could be expected to be sufficiently retentive without depending on memoranda, and even memoranda would not bring the transaction to present recollection. In such cases, if the witness on looking at the writing, is able to testify that he knows the transaction took place, though he has no present memory of it, his testimony is admissible." In Reg. v. Langton, L. R. 2 Q. B. Div. 296, 46 L. J. M. C. 136, the following were the facts: Langton was a time-keeper in a colliery, and it was his duty to make out a list of the days worked by the workmen and give it to a clerk, who entered it in the timebook, and also the wages due for the work. On pay-day, the time-keeper, Langton, read the number of days to the pay-clerk, who paid the wages accordingly. The pay-clerk also saw the entries in the timebook, while the time-keeper was reading them out. On the trial of an indictment against Laugton for obtaining money by false pretences, it was held that the pay-clerk might refresh his memory by referring to the entries in the time-book to prove the money paid by him to the workmen. that the other party may cross-examine; not that such writing is thereby made evidence of itself; but that the other party may have the benefit of the witness's refreshing his memory by every part.²(d) And for the same reason, a witness is not permitted to refresh his memory by extracts made from other writings.3 (3.) Where the writing in question neither is recognized by the witness as one which he remembers to have before seen, nor awakens his memory to the recollection of anything contained in it; but, nevertheless, knowing the writing to be genuine, his mind is so convinced, that he is on that ground enabled to swear positively as to the fact. An example of this kind is, where a banker's clerk is shown a bill of exchange, which has his own writing upon it, from which he knows and is able to state positively that it passed through his hands. So, where an agent made a parol lease, and entered a memorandum of the terms in a book which was produced, but the agent stated that he had no memory of the transaction but from the book, without which he should not, of his own knowledge, be able to speak to the fact,

Sinclair v. Stevenson, supra. But the contrary has since been held, by Bosanquet, J., in Russell v. Rider, 6 C. & P. 416, and with good reason; for the adverse party has a right to cross-examine the witness as to the handwriting. 2 Phil. Evid. 400. But if the counsel, in cross-examination, puts a paper into a witness's hand, in order to refresh his memory, the opposite counsel has a right to look at it without being bound to read it in evidence; and may also ask the witness when it was written, without being bound to put it into the case. Rex v. Ramsden, 2 C. & P. 603. (e) The American courts have sometimes carried the rule farther than it has been carried in England, by admitting the writing itself to go in evidence to the jury, in all cases where it was made by the witness at the time of the fact, for the purpose of preserving the memory of it, if at the time of testifying he can recollect nothing further than that he had accurately reduced the whole transaction to writing. sponds with the copy and his testimony, this is a fact which the jury may weigh against him. Davie v. Jones, 68 Me. 393.

In the United States Supreme Court it has been held that the writing itself is evidence (Insurance Co. v. Weides, 14 Wall. 375), and in accord with this decision is Kent v. Mason, 1 Ill. App. 466.

but on reading the entry he had no doubt that the fact really happened; it was held sufficient.4 So, where a witness, called to prove the execution of a deed, sees his own signature to the attestation, and says, that he is therefore sure that he saw the party execute the deed; that is sufficient proof of the execution of a deed, though he adds that he has no recollection of the fact. 5 (g) In these and the like cases, for the reason before given, the writing itself must be produced.6

§ 438. Date of writing so used. As to the time when the writing, thus used to restore the recollection of facts, should have been made, no precise rule seems to have been established. It is most frequently said, that the writing must have been made at the time of the fact in question, or recently afterwards. 1 At the farthest, it ought to have been made before such a period of time has elapsed, as to render it probable that the memory of the witness might have become deficient.2 But the practice, in this respect, is governed very much by the circumstances of the particular case. In one case, to prove the date of an act of bankruptcy committed many years before, a witness was permitted to recur to his own deposition, made some time during the year in which the fact happened.³ In another case, the witness was not permitted to refresh his memory with a copy of a paper, made by himself six months after he made the original, though the original was proved to have been so written over with figures as to have become unintelligible; the learned judge saying, that he could only look at the original memorandum, made near the time. 4 (a) And

§ 439. When witness is blind. If a witness has become blind, a contemporaneous writing made by himself, though otherwise inadmissible, may yet be read over to him in order to excite his recollection. 1 So, where a receipt for goods was inadmissible for want of a stamp, it was permitted to be used to refresh the memory of a witness who heard it read over to the defendant, the latter at the same time admitting the receipt of the goods.2

² Jacob v. Lindsay, 1 East, 460. In Scotland, the subject of the use and proper office of writings, in restoring the recollection of witnesses, has been well considered and settled; and the law, as practised in the courts of that country, is stated with precision by Mr. Alison, in his elegant and philosophical Treatise on the Practice of the Criminal Law. "It is frequently made a question," he observes, "whether a witness may refer to notes or memorandums made to assist his memory. On this subject, the rule is, that notes or memoranda made up by the witness he moment, or recently constructed for the fact, may be legislated in order to we fresh his memory. In if they were made after the fact, may be looked to in order to refresh his memory; but if they were made after the fact, may be looked to in order to refresh his memory; but if they were made up at the distance of weeks or months thereafter, and still more, if done at the recommendation of one of the parties, they are not admissible. It is accordingly usual to allow witnesses to look to memorandums made at the time, of dates, distances, appearances on dead bodies, lists of stolen goods, or the like, before emitting his testimony, or even to read such notes to the jury, as his evidence, he having first sworn that they were made at the time, and faithfully done. In regard to lists of stolen goods, in particular, it is now the usual practice to have inventories of them made up at the time from the information of the witness in precognition, signed by him, and libelled on as accuracy of their statements from recollec-Talbot v. Cusack, 17 lr. C. L. 213. See also Home v. McKenzie, 6 C. & F. 628; Topham v. McGregor, cited in note 3, § 438, where the author of an article in a newspaper, the MS. being lost, was allowed to refresh his memory from the printed article.

(b) So where a witness, five months after the occurrence of certain events, had, at the request of a party interested, made a statement in writing, and swore to it, he was not allowed to testify to his belief in its correctness. Spring Garden Ins. Co. v. Riley, 15 Md. 54.

Where one accused of a crime was examined before a coroner's inquest, and his testimony taken in writing, he was not allowed to use this in testifying on his trial for that crime. State v. Rhodes, 1 Houst. (Del.) Cr. Ca. 476.

§ 440. Degree of certainty. Opinions. In general, though a witness must depose to such facts only as are within his own knowledge, yet there is no rule that requires him to speak with such expression of certainty as to exclude all doubt in his mind. If the fact is impressed on his memory, but his recollection does not rise to positive assurance, it is still admissible, to be weighed by the jury; but if the impression is not derived from recollection of the fact, and is so slight as to render it probable that it may have been derived from others, or may have been some unwarrantable deduction of the witness's own mind, it will be rejected.1 And though the opinions of witnesses are in general not evidence, yet on certain subjects some classes of witnesses may deliver their own opinions, and on certain other subjects any competent witness may express his opinion or belief; and on any subject to which a witness may testify, if he has any recollection at all of the fact, he may express it as it lies in his memory, of which the jury will judge.2 Thus, it is the constant practice to receive in evidence any witness's belief of the identity of a

a production at the trial, and he is then desired to read them, or they are read to him, and he swears that they contain a correct list of the stolen articles. In this way much time is saved at the trial, and much more correctness and accuracy is obtained, than could possibly have been expected, if the witness were required to state from memory all the particulars of the stolen articles, at the distance perhaps of months from the time when they were lost. With the exception, however, of such memorandums, notes, or inventories made up at the time, or shortly after the occasion libelled, a witness is not permitted to refer to a written paper as containing his deposition; for that would annihilate the whole advantages of parol evidence, and viva roce examination, and convert a jury trial into a mere consideration of written instruments. There is one exception, however, properly introduced into this rule; in the case of medical or other scientific reports or certificates, which are lodged in process before the trial, and libelled on as productions in the indictment, and which the witness is allowed to read as his deposition to the jury, confirming it at its close by a declaration on his oath, that it is a true report. The reason of this exception is founded in the consideration, that the medical or other scientific facts or appearances, which are the subject of such a report, are generally so minute and detailed, that they cannot with safety be entrusted to the memory of the witness, but much more reliance may be placed on a report made out by him at the time, when the facts or appearances are fresh in his recollection; while, on the other hand, such witnesses have generally no personal interest in the matter, and, from their situation and rank in life, are much less liable to suspicion than those of an inferior class, or more intimately connected with the transaction in question. Although, therefore, the scientific witness is always called on to read his report, as affording the best evidences of the appearances h person, (a) or that the handwriting in question is or is not the handwriting of a particular individual, provided he has any knowledge of the person or handwriting; (b) and if he testifies falsely as to his belief, he may be convicted of perjury.3 On questions of science, skill, or trade, or others of the like kind, persons of skill, sometimes called experts, 4 may not only testify to facts, but are permitted to give their opinions in evidence. (c) Thus, the opinions

Bouvier's Law Dict. in verb. But more generally speaking, the term includes all "men of science," as it was used by Ld. Mansfield in Folkes v. Chadd, 3 Doug. 157; or "persons professionally acquainted with the science or practice" in question; Strickland on Evid. p. 408; or "conversant with the subject-matter, on questions of science, skill, trade, and others of the like kind." Best's Principles of Evidence, $346. The rule on this subject is stated by Mr. Smith in his note to Carter v. Boehm, 1 Smith's Lead. Cas. 286. "On the one hand," he observes, "it appears to be admitted that the opinion of witnesses possessing peculiar skill is admissible, whenever the subject-matter of inquiry is such, that inexperienced persons are unwhenever the subject-matter of inquiry is such, that inexperienced persons are unlikely to prove capable of forming a correct judgment upon it without such assistance; in other words, when it so far partakes of the nature of a science, as to require a course of previous habit, or study, in order to the attainment of a knowledge of it; see Folkes v. Chadd, 3 Doug. 157; R. v. Searle, 2 M. & M. 75; Thornton v. R. E. Assur. Co., Peake, 25; Chaurand v. Angerstein, Peake, 44; while, on the other hand, it does not seem to be contended that the opinions of witnesses can be received, when the inquiry is into a subject-matter, the nature of which is not such as to require any peculiar habits or study, in order to qualify a man to understand it." (d) It has been held unnecessary that the witness should be engaged in the practice of his profession or science; it being sufficient that he has studied it. Thus, the fact that the witness, though he had studied medicine, was not then a practising physician, was held to go merely to his credit. Tullis v. Kidd, 12 Ala. 648.

(a) Thus when on prosecution for an alleged sale of liquor to a minor, a witness for the prosecution described carefully the appearance, dress, and manners of the girl to whom the sale was made and who was alleged in the complaint to have been a minor, the witness was allowed to give his opinion of her age. This decision comes under the rule by which any person may give his opinion on the question of iden-tity, or his judgment of size and weight, or his estimate of distance or time. These opinions are considered to be open to all men of ordinary information and require no special training. Com. v. O'Brien, 134 Mass. 198. So evidence of identity of a person depending upon a recognition of his voice has been admitted in cases in Massachusetts, the evidence being held competent although its weight is for the jury. Com. v. Hayes, 138 Mass. 185; Com. v. Williams, 105 Mass. 62.

(b) The qualifications of a witness to testify as an expert in handwriting are to be decided by the judge, and his decision is final, unless plainly wrong in law, or there is no evidence to support it. Nunes v. Perry, 113 Mass. 274; Com. v. Williams, 105 Id. 62; Rogers v. Ritter, 12 Wall. (U.S.) 317.

(c) The preliminary question whether the witness offered as an expert has the necessary qualification of an expert is for the Court and is largely discretionary with them; so that unless it appears that there was no evidence of such qualifica-tion the admission of the witness will not be revised by the Supreme Court on appeal. Williams, 47 Vt. 222; Sarle v. Arnold, 7 R. 1. 582. If the evidence satisfies the court of the qualifications of the witness it is not bound to permit a preliminary cross-examination intended to show lack of sufficient qualification, though it would, no doubt, have a right to do so. The regular cross-examination may fully go into the question of the competency of the witness, and if it appear that he is not a qualified expert witness, his testimony will be weakened or entirely destroyed before the jury. Davis v. State, 35 Ind. 496; Goodwin v. State, 96 Ind. 550; Fort Wayne v. Coombs, supra. One expert may testify to the qualification of another. Laros v. Com., 84 Pa. St. 200.

When the subject so far partakes of the nature of a science or trade as to require a previous course of study or habit in order to the attainment of a knowledge of it, opinions of experts are admissible. the other hand, if the relation of facts and their probable results can be determined without special study or skill, the facts themselves must be given, and the opinions of experts are inadmissible. This ions of experts are inadmissible. line of distinction is well expressed in the opinion of the court in a case in New York. Ferguson v. Hubbell, 97 N. Y. 511. "It is not sufficient to warrant the introduction of expert evidence that the witness may know more of the subject of inquiry, and may better comprehend and appreciate it than the jury; but to warrant its introduction, the subject of the inquiry must be one relating to some trade, profession, science or art in which persons instructed therein, by study or experience, may be supposed to have more skill and knowledge than jurors of average intelligence may be presumed generally to have. The jurors may have less skill and experience than the witnesses and yet have enough to draw their own conclusions and do justice between the parties. Where the facts can be placed before a jury, and they are of such a nature that jurors generally are just as competent to form opinions in reference to them and draw inferences from them as witnesses, then there is no occasion to resort to expert or opinion evidence. To sort to expert or opinion evidence. require the exclusion of such evidence, it is not needed that the jurors should be able to see the facts as they appear to eye-witnesses or to be as capable to draw conclusions from them as some witnesses might be, but it is sufficient that the facts can be presented, and in such a manner that jurors of ordinary intelligence and experience in the affairs of life can appreciate them, can base intelligent judgments upon them and comprehend them sufficiently for the ordinary administration of justice. The rules admitting the opinions of experts should not be unnecessarily extended. Experience has shown that it is much safer to confine the testimony of witnesses to facts in all cases where that is practicable, and leave the jury to exercise their judgment and experience upon the facts proved. Where witnesses testify to facts they may be specifically contradicted, and if they testify falsely they are liable to punishment for perjury. But they may give false opinions without fear of punishment. It is generally safer to take the judgments of unskilled jurors than the opinions of hired and generally biased experts." In a later case in New York, Van Wycklen v. Brooklyn, 118 N. Y. 429, the rule in Ferguson v. Hubbell, supra, was quoted with approval, but the court indicates a double ground of admissibility for expert testimony, saying that witnesses who are skilled in science and art, and also those who, from experience and special study, have peculiar knowledge upon the subject of inquiry which jurors have not, may testify not only to facts but may also give their opinions as experts. And the court quotes with approval the statement of the rule in Schwander v. Birge, 46 Hun, 66, as follows: "The governing rule deduced from the cases permitting the opinion of witnesses is that the subject must be one of science or skill, or one of which observation and experience have given the party a means of knowledge which exists in reason rather than descriptive facts, and therefore cannot be intelligently communicated to others not familiar with the subject so as to possess them with full understanding of it." Although it is not always a valid objection to the expression of an opinion by a witness, that it is upon the precise question which the jury are to determine (Trans-Bellinger v. N. Y. Cent. R. R. Co., 23 N. Y. 42), yet evidence of that character is only allowed when, from the nature of the case, the facts cannot be stated or described to the jury in such a manner as to enable them to form an accurate judgment thereof, and no better evidence than such insane state of a person's mind, as collected from a number of circumstances, and as to other subjects of professional skill.5 And such opinions are admissible in evidence, though the witness founds them, not on his own personal observation, but on the case itself, as proved by other witnesses on the trial. $^{6}(e)$ But opinions is attainable. Thus, where the action is for an injury caused by defendant's negligence, and the defence sets up contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, the defence cannot generally introduce the opinion of experts as to whether the plaintiff was careless or not, for this depends upon the manner in which he conducts himself, and when that appears, the conclusion whether the accident or injury was to any extent attributable to his want of care is for the jury, and that is a question upon the determination of which the result of the action depends. The fact of care or carelessness is not one involving any question of skill or science to determine, nor is it founded upon any knowledge peculiar to any class of persons. The conduct of a person as bearing upon the question of care or want of care is susceptible of such description as to convey information of it to common un-derstanding, and to enable the jury intel-ligently to determine it and the relation it has to the question of liability. where scientific men are called as witnesses, they cannot give their opinions as to the general merits of the cause, but only their opinions upon the facts proved.7 And if the facts are doubtful, and remain to be found by the jury, it has been held improper to ask an expert who has heard the evidence, what is his opinion upon the case on trial, though he may be asked his opinion upon a similar case, hypothetically stated. 8(f) Nor is the opinion of a medical man admissible, that a particular act, for which a prisoner is tried, was an act of insanity.9 So, the subscribing witnesses to a will may testify their opinions, in respect to the sanity of the testator at the time of executing the will, though other witnesses can speak only as to facts; for the law has placed the subscribing witnesses about the testator, to ascertain and judge of his capacity. 10 (g) Seal engravers may be called to give

(f) The proper mode of taking the opinion of an expert, when he has no personal knowledge of the facts in the large in the large when the same are the same and the same are the same and the same are the same case, is by a hypothetical question. Reynolds v. Robinson, 64 N. Y. 589. When a hypothetical question is put to an expert witness, the question should be based on what has already been proved in the case.

In New York, the hypothetical question may be based on any possible or probable range of the evidence in the case. Harnett v. Garvey, 66 N. Y. 641. But purely imaginary or abstract questions, assuming facts or theories for which there is no foundation in evidence, are not admissible as matter of right. On cross-examination, special abstract or theoretical questions, not founded upon the facts of the case on trial, may be put, for the pur-pose of testing the knowledge and information of the witness as to the subject upon which he has been examined, and his comwhich he has been examined, and his counpetency to give the opinion which he may have pronounced on his direct examination. But the allowance of such questions, like other collateral inquiries touching only the credibility of the witness, rests in the discretion of the court, and, when the discretion is fairly exercised, it is not the discretion is larry exercised, it is not error to exclude them. People v. Augsbury, 97 N. Y. 505; Dilleber v. Home Life Ins. Co., 87 N. Y. 79-88; La Beau v. People, 34 N. Y. 223.

physicians of the testator may also give opinions as to his sanity, together with the acts on which their opinions are based. Hastings v. Rider, 99 Mass. 624, and in Maine, Fayette v. Chesterville, 77 Me. 32. But any facts which any person observed at that time, such as incoherence in talk, or an apparent change in the intelligence of the testator, may be testified to by such person, though he be not a subscribing witness to the will nor a medical expert. Barker v. Comins, 110 Mass. 477. And it has been further held that a witness who is not an expert in mental ailments may be asked whether a person has failed, in intelligence in a given period, on the ground that this question calls for a fact, the result of observation of a variety of details which it would be impossible to reproduce before the jury. Com. v. Brayman, 136 Mass. 439; Parker v. Boston & H. Steamboat Co., 109 Mass. 449. And the tendency in Maine has been to allow witnesses who are not experts a good deal of latitude in the expression of opinion, short of declaring their judgments upon the point mainly and directly in issue. Kent, J., in Robinson v. Adams, 62 Me. 410, says: "Certainly nothing less than a distinct expression." sion of the opinion of the witness, given as such opinion directly, comes within our rule." A witness, under the direction of the court, may be permitted to describe peculiarities, conditions and situations, conduct and changes. Fayette v. Chesterville, 77 Me. 32. In Robinson v. Adams, supra, it was deemed not objectionable for a witness to say that she did not observe any failure of mind and nothing peculiar in a person. In Stacy v. Port. Pub. Co. 68 Me. 279, it was held admissible for a witness to testify that a person was intoxicated at a time named. The rule in other States, however, is that non-experts who have had opportunities to observe a person may give their opinion of his mental capacity, at the same time stating their reasons and the facts observed on which they base their opinions, including conversations as a part of the observed facts, Chickas a part of the observed facts, Chiekering v. Brooks, 61 Vt. 554; Hathaway v. National L. Ins. Co., 48 Vt. 335; Hardy v. Merrill, 56 N. H. 227; Dove v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 348; Johnson v. Culver, 116 Ind. 289; Butler v. St. Louis L. Ins. Co., 45 Iowa, 93; McClackey v. State, 5 Tex. App. 320. In New York it is held that the witness can only state observed acts, and say whether he thought them rational. Howell v. Taylor, 18 N. N. Supreme Ct. 214; Hewlett v. Wood, 55 N. Y. 634. The rule on this point is stated in Clapp v. Fullerton, 34 N. Y. 190, as follows: "When a layman is examined as to feat within his own heaveld area." as to facts within his own knowledge and observation, tending to show the soundness or unsoundness of a testator's mind, he may characterize as rational or irrational the acts and declarations to which he testifies." "But to render his opinion admissible, even to this extent, it must be limited to his conclusions from the specific facts he discloses." The rule thus expressed was followed and approved in the cases of O'Brien v. People, 36 N Y. 282 and Hewlett v. Wood, 55 N. Y. 634; and affirmed in the case of Holcomb v. Holcomb, 95 N. Y. 316 and in the latter ease of People v. Conroy 97 N. Y. 66, the above cases were reviewed and approved. It may therefore be considered established law in that State that no layman as a witness can give his opinion of the mental capacity of a person; but can state acts and declarations seen and heard by himself, and state whether he thought them rational or irrational. Holeomb v. Holeomb, supra,

(i) The following note on the limits of expert testimony was in the previous edition of this work: But see Vandine v. Burpee, 13 Met. 288; Shaw v. Charlestown, 2 Gray, 107. The value of the reversion of land over which a railroad is located is not properly provable by experts. Boston & Worcester R. Co. v. Old Colony R. Co., 3 Allen, 142; Mish v. Wood, 34 Pa. 451. Some nice, and often difficult, questions will arise in regard to the particular matters and point with reference to which witnesses may be allowed to give testimony by way of opinion. For some excellent illustrations, see Redfield's Railways, 133, 134, and notes; Wills, part 1, §§ 37-39. But it is not practicable to make the rule more precise than a mere approximation towards definiteness. Facts which are latent in themselves, and only discoverable by way of appearances more or less symptomatic of the existence of the main fact, may, from their very nature, be shown by the opinion of witnesses as to the existence of such appearances or symptoms: such are the state of health or of the affections, as already stated. Sanity is a question of the same character. So, too, upon inquiries as to the state or amount of one's property, when the facts are too numerous and evanescent to be given in detail, those acquainted with the facts are allowed to express an opinion which is the mere grouping of the facts. So, too, as to the marketable condition and value of property, and many other questions where it is not practicable to give more definite knowledge, opinions are received. In some cases, these opinions must come from experts, who have acquired special skill in detecting the connection between certain external symptoms and their latent causes; and in other cases, all persons are supposed to have such knowledge and experience as to enti-tle their opinions to be weighed by the jury. The testimony of expert is necessary upon all such questions as require special study and experience in order to form reliable judgments. The distinction is fairly enough illustrated by the question of sickness or health. All witnesses are competent to form a reliable opinion whether one whom they have opportunity to observe appears to be sick or well at the time, or whether one is seriously disabled by a wound or a blow. But if the injury were more definite, as to the particular state of disease under which one is laboring, and its curable or fatal character; or as to the dangerous or fatal character of a wound or blow or in what particular mode, or with what species of weapon or instrument, such blow or wound was inflicted - special study, observation, and experience might be requisite in order to express an opinion entitled to the dignity of being regarded as evidence. In Ashland v. Marlborough, 99 Mass. 47, it was held that a non-expert may testify to the acts and appearance of another which indicate disease or disability, but cannot give his opinion on the subject. But in Parker v. B. & H. Steamboat Co., 109 Mass. 449, the same court held that a non-expert might testify as to the comparative health of a person. This distinction between testifying to an appearance of disease and to an opinion of it is certainly fine. What appear to one in such cases is scarcely different from his opinion. Com. v. Cunningham, 104 Mass. 545; Com. v. Dorsey, 103 Mass. 412. And subsequently the same court (Com. v. Sturtivant, 117 Mass. 122), after a careful examination of numerous cases, arrived at the conclusion that "common observ-ers, having special opportunities for observation, may testify to their opinions as conclusions of fact, although they are not experts, if the subject-matter to which the testimony relates cannot be reproduced or described to the jury precisely as it ap-peared to the witness at the time, and the facts upon which the witness is called to express his opinion are such as men in general are capable of comprehending." Sydleman v. Beckwith, 43 Com. 9. Opinions have been held admissible as to the origin of sounds (State v. Shinborn, 46 N. H. 497); as to the health of another (Wilkinson v. Moseley, 30 Ala. 562; Barker v. Coleman, 35 Ala. 221); as to the condition of another's eyesight (Adams v. People, 63 N. Y. Ct. of App. 621); whether certain hairs are human (Com. v. Dorsey, 103 Mass. 412); the meaning of certain gestures, or tones of voice, and to whom they apply (Leonard v. Allen, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 241; and see post, vol. ii. § 417, n.); the correspondence between boots and footprints (Com. v. Pope, 103 Mass. 440); that two pieces of wood are parts of the same stick (Com. v. Choate, 105 Mass. 451); but not that a piece of paper looks as if it had been used as a wadding for a gun, if the paper is produced in court (People v. Manke, 78 N. Y. 611); that a horse appears to be diseased in the foot (31 N. H. 485); or to be frightened or sulky (46 ld. 23); or that a person appears to feel sad (Culver v. Dwight, 6 Gray (Mass.) 444); or to be intoxicated (People v. Eastwood, 14 N. Y. 111 ON CARCATE (People v. Eastwood, 14 N. Y. 562); or as to the qualities of a horse (State v. Avery, 44 N. H. 392); or of one's pecuniary responsibility (Bank of Middlebury v. Rutland, 33 Vt. 414). So, also, as to values and prices (Nellis v. McCarn, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 115; Derby v. Gallup, 5 Minn. 119; Brady v. Brady, 8 Allon (Maga.) 1011 Magnesidy (Christical People v. Christies. Allen (Mass.), 101; McDonald v. Christie, 42 Barb. N. Y.) 36); so, also, opinions as to times and distances are admissible (Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44); but not an opinion as to how far a conversation, said to have been carried on in an ordinary tone, but not heard by the witness, could be heard (Hardenburgh v. Cockroft, 5 Daly, N. Y. C. C. P. 79, 1874); nor what is the highest part of a hill. Hovey v. Sawyer, 5 Allen (Mass.), 554. A witness may also give his opinion as to the age of a person who pleads infancy in an action on a contract, the witness having had an opportunity to observe the appearance of the person at the time the contract was made. Benson v. McFadden, 50 Ind. 431. Whether a non-expert is qualified to give an opinion is for the judge. farmer is qualified to give an opinion as to the effect of constructing a railroad through the farm of his neighbor, upon the convenience and expense of carrying it on. Tucker v. Mass. Cent. R. R., 118 Mass. 546. And, generally, opinions, like other testimony, are competent in the class of cases in which they are the best testimony; as where a mere description, without an opinion, would generally convey a very imperfect idea of the force, meaning, and inherent character of the things described. Non-experts may give their opinions on questions of identity, resemblance, apparent condition of body or mind, intoxication, insanity, sickness, health, value, conduct, and bearing, whether friendly or hostile, and the like. Doe, J., in State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 399, a very elaborate and valuable opinion. In Hamilton v. People, Sup. Ct. Mich., 13 Am. L. Reg. N. s. 679, it is held, upon the same ground, that the opinion of one witness as to the credibility of another is admissible. A medical expert witness may also testify as to the future results of an injury, or what he considers will necessarily or probably result, but not as to possibilities of results, for the latter evidence is speculative in character and incompetent. Strohm v. New York, Lake Erie & W. R. R. 96 N. Y. 305. It is mere speculation as to what may be the future condition of the patient resulting from the injury, and does not represent the judgment of the ex-pert as to what will be its effect. But evidence of the probable results of an injury is competent. Lincoln v. Saratoga &c. R. R. Co., 23 Wend. 425; Filer v. New York Cent. R. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 42. Evidence of that character is dependent upon the opinion of medical experts, and tween matters of opinion and matters of fact. Such a witness, it is said, is to be distrusted when he speaks to matters of opinion; but in matters of fact, his testimony is to receive a degree of credit in proportion to the probability of the transaction, the absence or extent of contradictory proof, and the general tone of his evidence.4

§ 441. Opinion as to legal or moral obligations. But witnesses are not receivable to state their views on matters of legal or moral obligation, nor on the manner in which other persons would probably be influenced, if the parties acted in one way rather than in another. (a) Therefore the opinions of medical practitioners upon the question, whether a certain physician had honorably and faithfully discharged his duty to his medical brethren, have been rejected.2 So the opinion of a person conversant with the business of insurance, upon the question, whether certain parts of a letter, which the broker of the insured had received, but which he suppressed when reading the letter to the underwriters, were generally is not susceptible of absolute certainty; but the judgment of competent physicians as to the probable consequences of an injury comes within the rule of reasonable certainty, and therefore of admissibility. Turner v. Newburgh, 109 N. Y. 301; Griswold v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. R. Co., 115 N. Y. 61.

Expert testimony is admissible on the value of lands, especially in cities where values vary so much according to locality, that it is fairly a subject of special study to learn the values. Griswold v. Gebbie, 126 Pa. St. 366; Huntington v. Attrill, 118 N. Y. 379. But in testifying as to the value of property, an expert who bases his knowledge solely upon transactions in similar property not situated in the vi-einity, is not competent to testify. The qualification of the expert depends upon his knowledge of the value of the particu-lar thing in question. And this may be inferred by him from the value of similar property in the vicinity, but not from the value of similar property in different locations. Huntington v. Attrill, supra. In

Burt v. Wigglesworth, 117 Mass. 302, though such evidence was rejected, it was rejected because the evidence was as to what the land would be worth if certain buildings were erected on it, i. e. it was a mere guess at a future value. But in the later ease of Roberts v. Boston, 149 Mass. 354, the opinion of an expert shown to have knowledge of the values of land in the immediate vicinity was rejected. Cf. Hanover Water Co. v. Ashland Iron Co., 84 Pa. St. 279; Penn. R. R. v. Bunnell, 81 Id. 414; Stone v. Covell, 29 Mich. 359; Swan v. Middlesex Co., 101 Mass. 173.

or were not material to be communicated, has been held inadmissible; 3 for, whether a particular fact was material or not in the particular case is a question for the jury to decide under the circumstances. 4(b) Neither can a witness be asked, what would have been his own conduct in the particular case.⁵ But in an action against a broker for negligence, in not procuring the needful alterations in a policy of insurance, it has been held, that other brokers might be called to say, looking at the policy, the invoices, and the letter of instructions, what alterations a skilful broker ought to have made. $^{6}(c)$

 ⁶ Chapman v. Walton, 10 Bing. 57. Upon the question, whether the opinion of a person, conversant with the business of insurance, is admissible, to show that the rate the manning would have been affected by the communication of particular facts, indees and the cases are not easily there has been much diversity of opinion among judges, and the cases are not easily reconciled. See Phil. & Am. on Evid. 899; 2 Stark. Evid. 886. But the later decisions are against the admissibility of the testimony, as a general rule. See Campbell v. Rickards, 5 B. & Ad. 840. Perhaps the following observations of Mr. Starkie, on this subject, will be found to indicate the true principle of discrimination among the cases which call for the application of the rule. "Whenever the fixing the fair price and value upon a contract to insure is matter of skill and judgment, acting according to certain general rules and principles of calculation, applied to the particular circumstances of each individual case, it seems to be matter of evidence to show whether the facts suppressed would have been noticed as a term in the particular calculation. It would not be difficult to propound instances, in which the materiality of the fact withheld would be a question of pure science; in other instances, it is very possible that mere common sense, independent of any peculiar skill or experience, would be sufficient to comprehend that the disclosure was material, and its suppression fraudulent, although not to understand to what extent the risk was increased by that fact. In intermediate cases, it seems to be difficult in principle wholly to exclude the evidence, although its importance may vary exceedingly according to circumstances." Stark. Evid. 887, 888 (3d London ed.), 649 (6th Am. ed.).
- (b) So, as the question of due care or negligence is for the jury, the witness cannot be asked whether a party to a suit exercised due care (Hopkins v. Indian. & St. Louis R. R. Co., 78 Ill. 32); or whether a person is a careful driver (Morris v. East Haven, 41 Conn. 252); nor, in an action for assault and battery, whether the defendant's act was justifiable (Barts v. Morse, 126 Mass. 226); nor, after testifying in answer to a hypothetical question, that he should consider the testator of sound mind, can be testify directly that he considered the testator competent to make a will. May v. Bradlee, 127 Id. 414.

So, it is improper to ask a witness whether a road was dangerous, in an action for personal injuries caused by the dangerous condition of the road (Stillwater Turn-pike Co. v. Coover, 26 Ohio St. 520); or whether a person accused of homicide, who sets up self-defence, was in imminent danger (State v. Rhodes, 29 Id. 171), as these are questions for the jury.

(c) The following note is taken from Judge May's edition of this book: In Joyce v. Maine Insurance Co., 45 Me. 168, it was decided that an expert in insurance matters could not be permitted to give his opinion whether "the rate of premium for insurance would be increased by vacating a dwelling-house." The condition, made part of the contract, made the insurance void and of no effect if the risk should be increased by any means whatever within the control of the insured. It was said not to be a question of science or skill. So § 442. Party vouches for his witness. When a party offers a witness in proof of his cause, he thereby, in general, represents him as worthy of belief. He is presumed to know the character of the witnesses he adduces; and having thus presented them to the court, the law will not permit the party afterwards to impeach their general reputation for truth, or to impugn their credibility by general evidence, tending to show them to be unworthy of belief. For this would enable him to destroy the witness if he spoke against him, and to make him a good witness if he spoke for him, with the means in his hand of destroying his credit if he spoke against him. 1(a)

it has been held, and for a like reason, that, under substantially similar terms of the contract, insurance experts could not be permitted to testify whether "leaving a dwelling-house unoccupied for a considerable length of time" was an increase of risk. Luce v. Dorchester Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 105 Mass. 298; Cannell v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 59 Me. 582. But in Foy v. Ætna Ins. Co., 3 Allen (N. B.), 29, such evidence was admitted without objection. And generally their opinions as to the materiality of certain facts to the risk are incompetent. Milwaukee, &c. Ry. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469; Jefferson Ins. Co. v. Cotheal, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 72; Hartford Prot. Ins. Co. v. Harmer, 2 Ohio St. 452; Hill v. Lafayette Ins. Co., 2 Mich. 476. Contra, Kern v. South St. Louis Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 40 Mo. 19. But in Schenck v. Mercer County Mutual Insurance Company, 4 Zab. (N. J.) 447, a fireman was allowed to testify whether the risk of fire was increased by certain alterations. But it was decided in the case last cited from Massachusetts, that the question whether such leaving a dwelling-house unoccupied is material to the risk, might be tested by the question whether underwriters generally would in such case charge a higher premium. And see also Merriam v. Middlesex Ins. Co., 21 Pick. 162; Daniels v. Hudson River Fire Ins. Co., 12 Cush. (Mass.) 416. The first question was said to be as to a subject within common knowledge, as to which opinions were inadmissible, while the latter related to a matter which was within the peculiar knowledge of persons versed in the business of insurance. The distinction, though fine, seems to be sound; it is between an inadmissible opinion and an admissible fact. The inference of increased risk, based upon the fact known to him of a higher rate of premium in such cases, cannot be stated by the witness; but he may state the fact, which is to him a matter of special knowledge, and from this the jury may draw the inference of increased risk. That persons having this peculiar knowledge may testify thereto is a well-settled rule of evidence. Webber v. Eastern Railroad Co., 2 Met. (Mass.) 147; Mulry v. Mohawk Valley Ins. Co., 5 Gray (Mass.), 541; Hawes v. New England Ins. Co., 2 Curtis, C. Ct. 229; Lyman v. State Ins. Co., 14 Allen (Mass.), 329; Hartman v. Keystone Ins. Co., 21 Pa. St. 466; Quin v. National Ass. In life insurance, physicians may give their opinion as to the causes of disease, and whether a particular disease or infirmity or injury or habit is the cause of death, or tends to shorten life (Miller v. Mut. Ben. Life Ins. Co., 31 Iowa, 216); but neither they nor experts in insurance can be allowed to give their opinion upon the question whether the applicant was an insurable subject, nor whether certain facts render the subject uninsurable. Rawls v. Am. Life Ins. Co., 36 Barb. 357; s. c. affirmed 27 N. Y. 282.

§ 443. Exceptions. But to this general rule there are some exceptions. For, where the witness is not one of the party's own selection, but is one whom the law obliges him to call, such as the subscribing witness to a deed, or a will, or the like; here he can hardly be considered as the witness of the party calling him, and therefore, as it seems, his character for truth may be generally impeached. (a) But, however this may be, it is exceedingly clear that the party, calling a witness, is not precluded from proving the truth of any particular fact, by any other competent testimony, in direct contradiction to what such witness may have testified; and this not only where it appears that the witness was innocently mistaken, but even where the evidence may collaterally have the effect of showing that he was generally unworthy of belief. 2(b)

§ 444. Previous inconsistent statements. Whether it be competent for a party to prove that a witness whom he has called, and whose testimony is unfavorable to his cause, had previously stated the facts in a different manner, is a question upon which there exists some diversity of opinion. On the one hand, it is urged, that a party is not to be sacrificed to his witness; that he is not rep-

cases, viz.: (1) the calling of witnesses to impeach the general character of the witness; (2) the proof of prior contradictory statements by him; and (3) a contradiction of the witness by another where the only effect is to impeach, and not to give any material evidence upon any issue in the case. And in a later case, Cross v. Cross, 108 N. Y. 629, the same rule was applied, and it was held that by calling one as a witness, the party calling him does not become forced to admit as true every fact to which he testifies; and, that while not at liberty to impeach his character for truth he was at liberty to dispute specific facts sworn to by the witness, and to confront his statement of the facts with the facts and circumstances of conduct, letters, and declarations, and let the jury determine from the whole evidence which is the truth. When one party to a suit is empowered by statute to take the testimony of the other party, he generally makes the other party his witness to that extent, and cannot impeach his credibility. Warren v. Gabriel, 51 Ala. 235.

resented by him, nor identified with him; and that he ought not to be entrapped by the arts of a designing man, perhaps in the interest of his adversary. 1 On the other hand, it is said, that to admit such proof would enable the party to get the naked declarations of a witness before the jury, operating, in fact, as independent evidence; and this, too, even where the declarations were made out of court, by collusion, for the purpose of being thus introduced.²(a) But the weight of authority seems in favor of admitting the party to show that the evidence has taken him by surprise, and is contrary to the examination of the witness preparatory to the trial, or to what the party had reason to believe he would testify; or, that the witness has recently been brought under the influence of the other party, and has deceived the party calling him. For it is said that this course is necessary for his protection against the contrivance of an artful witness; and that the danger of its being regarded by the jury as substantive evidence is no greater in such cases than it is where the contradictory declarations are proved by the adverse party. 3 (b)

Stat. c. 169, § 22), a party producing a witness may prove that he has at other times made statements inconsistent with his present testimony. Just before with his present testimony; but before this proof can be given, the circumstances of the supposed statements, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, must be mentioned to the witness, and he must be asked whether he made such statements, and be allowed to explain them. Cf. Brooks v. Weeks, 121 Mass. 433; Newell

v. Homer, 120 Id. 277; Day v. Cooley, 118 Id. 524. This statute was under consideration in Ryerson v. Abington, 102 Mass. 526, and it was held that it should be construed strictly, as abrogating the rule of the common law that the party producing a witness is deemed to hold him out as worthy of credit, and therefore cannot contradict his testimony by evidence of other previous statements of his inconsistent with his present testimony. The witness must therefore not only be asked whether he had made such contradictory statements, but the circumstances of the supposed statement in sufficient detail to designate the particular occasion referred to must be mentioned to him. The statute, also, would not extend to immaterial evidence which could not have been contradicted if given by an op-posing witness. Pointing out a particu-lar person, as the one with whom the conversation took place, does not suf-

§ 445. Cross-examination. When a witness has been examined in chief, the other party has a right to cross-examine him. 1(a) But a question often arises, whether the witness has been so examined in chief, as to give the other party this right. If the witnses is called merely for the purpose of producing a paper, which is to be proved by another witness, he need not be sworn.2 Whether the right of cross-examination, that is, of treating the witness as the witness of the adverse party, and of examining him by leading questions, extends to the whole case or is to be limited to the matters upon which he has already been examined in chief, is a point upon which there is some diversity of opinion.

ask him if he has not, on a particular occasion, made a contrary statement. (c) And the question and answer may go to the jury, with the rest of the evidence, the judge cautioning them not to infer, from the question alone, that the fact suggested in it is true. In such case, the party who called the witness may still go on to prove his case by other witnesses, notwithstanding their testimony, to relative facts, may contradict, and thus indirectly discredit, the former witness. Thus, in an action for an assault and battery, if the plaintiff's first witness testifies that the plaintiff, in conversation, ascribed the injury to an accident, the plaintiff may prove that, in fact, no such accident occurred. And if the witness denies a material fact, and states that persons connected with the plaintiff offered him money to assert the fact, the plaintiff may not only still go on to prove the fact, but he may also disprove the subornation; for this latter fact has now become relevant, though no part of the main transaction, inasmuch as its truth or falsehood may fairly influence the belief of the jury as to the whole case. Melluish v. Collier, 15 Q. B. 878.

ficiently designate the occasion referred to, but the time and place should also be stated. Com. v. Thyng, 134 Mass. 191. Similar statutes exist in many States and in England, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125; Dean v. Knight, 1 F. & F. 433; Jackson v. Thomas, 10 W. R. 42; People v. Bushton, 80 Cal. 161; Cal. Code Civ. In some states the party colling the writtees is allowed to in party calling the witness is allowed to imparty calling the witness is allowed to impeach the testimony by proof of previous contradictory statements only when the testimony of the witness is a surprise to the party calling him. Miller v. Cook, 124 Ind. 101–238; Rev. St. Ind. 507; Hull v. State, 93 Ind. 129; Conway v. State, 118 Ind. 482; Champ v. Com. 2 Metc. (Ky.) 17. In the absence of such statutes, and unless it is shown that the party calling the witness had good reason. party calling the witness had good reason to believe that the witness would testify otherwise, or that the witness had been improperly influenced by the other side, the weight of authority is that a party cannot be permitted to impeach his own witness by proof by other witnesses of prior contradictory statements, unless the witness is one whom the law obliges the party to call. Hildreth v. Aldrich, 15 R. I. 163; Cox v. Eayres, 55 Vt. 24; Hull v. State, 93 Ind. 128.

If a witness gives no testimony in his examination in chief, he cannot be cross-examined for the purpose of discrediting him. Bracegirdle v. Bailey, 1 F. & F. 536. At a preliminary hearing, to determine the competency of evidence, the judge may refuse to permit cross-examination. Com. v. Morrell, 99 Mass. 542.

England, when a competent witness is called and sworn, the other party will, ordinarily, and in strictness, be entitled to crossexamine him, though the party calling him does not choose to examine him in chief; 3 unless he was sworn by mistake; 4 or. unless an immaterial question having been put to him, his further examination in chief has been stopped by the judge. 5 And even where a plaintiff was under the necessity of calling the defendant in interest as a witness, for the sake of formal proof only, he not being party to the record, it has been held, that he was thereby made a witness for all purposes, and might be crossexamined to the whole case. 6 In some of the American courts the same rule has been adopted; (b) but in others, the contrary has been held; 8(c) and the rule is now considered by the Supreme Court of the United States to be well established, that a party has no right to cross-examine any witness, except as to facts and circumstances connected with the matters stated in his direct examination; and that if he wishes to examine him to other matters, he must do so by making the witness his own, and calling him, as such, in the subsequent progress of the cause. 9(d)

(d) In Donnelly v. State, 2 Dutcher, 463, it was decided that the defendant in a criminal prosecution could not ask the prosecutor's witness any question not conmeeted with the examination in chief, and which was material only by way of defence. But that is not consistent with

§ 446. Same subject. The power of cross-examination has been justly said to be one of the principal, as it certainly is one of the most efficacious, tests, which the law has devised for the discovery of truth. By means of it, the situation of the witness with respect to the parties, and to the subject of litigation, his interest, his motives, his inclination and prejudices, his means of obtaining a correct and certain knowledge of the facts to which he bears testimony, the manner in which he has used those means, his powers of discernment, memory, and description, are all fully investigated and ascertained, and submitted to the consideration of the jury, before whom he has testified, and who have thus had an opportunity of observing his demeanor, and of determining the just weight and value of his testimony. It is not easy for a witness, who is subjected to this test, to impose on a court or jury; for however artful the fabrication of falsehood may be, it cannot embrace all the circumstances to which a cross-examination may be extended. 1 case so far as relates to the evidence, to introduce additional evidence, by the crossexamination of the witnesses on the other side, for the purpose of more fully proving facts not already sufficiently proved; the subject being within the discretion of the judge. Com. v. Eastman, I Cush. 189, 217.

1 Stark. Evid. 160, 161. On the subject of examining and cross-examining witnesses viva voce, Quintilian gives the following instructions: "Primum est, nosse testem. Nam timidus terreri, stultus decipi, iracundus concitari, ambitiosus inflari, longus protrahi potest; prudens vero et constans, vel tanquam inimicus et pervicax dimittendus statim, vel non interrogatione, sed brevi interlocutione patroni, refutandus est; aut aliquo, si continget, urbane dicto refrigerandus; aut si quid in ejus vitam dici poterit, infamia criminum destruendus. Probos quosdam et verecundos non aspere incessere profuit; nam sæpe, qui adversus insectantem pugnassent, modestia mitigantur. Omnis profuit; nam sæpe, qui adversus insectantem pugnassent, modestia mitigantur. Omnis autem interrogatio, aut in causa est, aut extra causam. In causa (sicut accusatori præcepimus), patronis quoque altius, unde nihil suspecti sit repetita percontatione, priora sequentibus applicando, sæpe eo perducit homines, ut invitis, quod prosit, extorqueat. Ejus rei, sine dubio, nec disciplina ulla in scholis, nec exercitatio traditur; et naturali magis acumine, aut usu contingit hæc virtus. * * * Extra causam quoque multa, quæ prosint, rogari solent, de vita testium aliorum, de sua quisque, si turpitudo, si humilitas, si amicitia accusatoris, si inimicitiæ cum reo, in quibus aut dicant aliquid, quod prosit, aut in mendacio vel cupiditate kedendi deprehendantur. Sed in primis interrogatio debet esse circumspecta; quia multa contra patronos venuste testis sæpe respondet eique præcipue vulgo favetur; tum verbis quam maxime ex medio sumptis; ut qui rogatur (is autem sæpius imperitus) intelligat, aut ne intelligere se

the general practice in such cases. All questions put upon cross-examination are supposed to be material only to the adversary's case. The examination in chief is supposed to have drawn out all the testimony of the witness material to the case of the party calling him. And whether the cross-examination has reference to the same points raised by the direct examination, or to others material to the defence, the witness is to be regarded as the witness of the party calling him. The only proper doubt is whether the adversary shall be allowed to open his case on cross-examination, or shall be allowed to recall the witnesses at the proper time in putting in his own case, and this rests in the discretion of the court. Post, § 447. Where a witness, cross-examined in part, without fault of the party who summoned him, disappears, so that his cross-examination cannot be completed, it is not the right of the cross-examining party to have the whole evidence stricken out. Burden v. Pratt, Sup. Ct. N. Y., 8 Al. L. J. 382.

§ 447. Extent of right to cross-examine. Whether, when a party is once entitled to cross-examine a witness, this right continues through all the subsequent stages of the cause, so that if the party should afterwards recall the same witness, to prove a part of his own case, he may interrogate him by leading questions, and treat him as the witness of the party who first adduced him, is also a question upon which different opinions have been held. Upon the general ground, on which this course of examination is permitted at all, namely, that every witness is supposed to be inclined most favorably towards the party calling him, there would seem to be no impropriety in treating him, throughout the trial, as the witness of the party who first caused him to be summoned and sworn. But as the general course of the examination of witnesses is subject to the discretion of the judge, it is not easy to establish a rule, which shall do more than guide, without imperatively controlling, the exercise of that discretion. 1(a) neget, quod interrogantis non leve frigus est." Quintil. Inst. Orat. lib. 5, c. 7. Mr. Alison's observations on the same subject are equally interesting both to the student and the practitioner. He observes: "It is often a convenient way of examining, to ask a witness, whether such a thing was said or done, because the thing mentioned aids his recollection, and brings him to that stage of the proceeding on which it is desired that he should dilate. But this is not always fair; and when any subject is approached, on which his evidence is expected to be really important, the proper course is to ask him what was done, or what was said, or to tell his own story. In this way, also, if the witness is at all intelligent, a more consistent and intelligent statement will generally be got, than by putting separate questions; for the witnesses generally think over the subjects, on which they are to be examined in criminal cases, so often, or they have narrated them so frequently to others, that they go on much more fluently and distinctly, when allowed to follow the enrrent of their own ideas, than when they are at every moment interrupted or diverted by the examining counsel. Where a witness is evidently prevaricating or concealing the truth, it is seldom by intimidation or sternness of manner that he can be brought, at least in this country, to let out the truth. Such measures may sometimes terrify a timid witness into a true confession; but in general they only confirm a hardened one in his falsehood, and give him time to consider how seeming contradictions may be reconciled. The most effectual method is to examine rapidly and minutely as to a number of subordinate and apparently trivial points in his evidence, concerning which there is little likelihood of his being prepared with falsehood ready made; and where such a course of interrogation is skilfully laid, it is rarely that it fails in exposing perjury or contradiction in some parts of the testimony which it is desired to overturn. It frequently happens, that, in the course of such a rapid examination, facts most material to the cause are elicited, which are either denied, or but partially admitted before. In such cases, there is no good ground on which the facts thus reluctantly extorted, or which have escaped the witness in an unguarded moment, can be laid aside by the jury. Without doubt, they come tainted from the polluted channel through which they are adduced; but still it is generally easy to distinguish what is true in such depositions from what is false, because the first easy to distinguish what is true in such depositions from what is talse, because the first is studiously withheld, and the second is as carefully put forth; and it frequently happens, that in this way the most important testimony in a case is extracted from the most unwilling witness, which only comes with the more effect to an intelligent jury, because it has emerged by the force of examination, in opposition to an obvious desire to coneeal." See Alison's Practice, 546, 547. See also the remarks of Mr. Evans on cross-examination, in his Appendix to Poth. on Obl. No. 16, vol. ii. pp. 233, 234.

however, who has not opened his own case, will not be allowed to introduce it to the jury by cross-examining the witnesses of the adverse party,² though, after opening it, he may recall them for that purpose. (b)

§ 448. Collateral facts. We have already stated it as one of the rules governing the production of testimony, that the evidence offered must correspond with the allegations, and be confined to the point in issue. And we have seen that this rule excludes all evidence of collateral facts, or those which afford no reasonable inference as to the principal matter in dispute. Thus, where a broker was examined to prove the market value of certain stocks, it was held that he was not compellable to state the names of the persons to whom he had sold such stocks.2 As the plaintiff is bound, in the proof of his case, to confine his evidence to the issue, the defendant is in like manner restricted to the same point; and the same rule is applied to the respective parties, through all the subsequent stages of the cause, — all questions as to collateral facts, except in cross-examination, being strictly excluded. reasons of this rule have been already intimated. If it were not so, the true merits of the controversy might be lost sight of, in the mass of testimony to other points, in which they would be overwhelmed; the attention of the jury would be wearied and distracted; judicial investigations would become interminable; the

Com. v. Lyden, 113 Mass. 452; Thomas v. Loose, 114 Pa. St. 47; Knight v. Cunnington, 13 N. Y. Supr. Ct. 100; Langley v. Wadsworth, 99 N. Y. 63. The extent to which the cross-examination of a witness as to credit may be carried must be left to the judge presiding at the trial, and if matters which are merely immaterial, or which tend to show the reasons of the witness for his opinions, or his fairness of mind, are admitted in cross-examination, there is, as a general rule, no exception. Phillips v. Marblehead, 148 Mass. 329. But there may be matters that will be error, for instance, if the party cross-examining, leads into his own case. Thomas v. Loose, 114 Pa. St. 47; Jackson v. Litch, 62 Pa. St. 451. In a recent case in New York, Langley v. Wadsworth, 99 N. Y. 63, the rule was stated to be that so far as the cross-examination of a witness relates either to facts in issue or relevant facts, it may be pursued by counsel as matter of right; but when its object is to ascertain the accuracy or credibility of a witness, its method and duration are subject to the discretion of the trial judge, and, unless abused, its exercise is not the subject of review; nor can the witness be cross-examined as to any facts, which, if admitted, would be collateral and wholly irrelevant to the matter in issue, and which would not in any way affect his credit; nor can the witness be cross-examined as to irrelevant matter in order to contradict him by showing the contents of a letter written by him. Com. v. Schaffner, 146 Mass. 514. And the latitude allowed in cross-examination should not ordinarily go so far as to permit the introduction of evidence which has no legitimate relation to any of the issues on trial, and which is at the same time of such a character as to be likely to be applied to them by the jury and improperly to affect the verdict. Sullivan v. O'Leary, 146 Mass. 322.

(b) Cf. Burke v. Miller, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 547, 550; Moody v. Rowell, 17 Pick. 499.

expenses might be enormous, and the characters of witnesses might be assailed by evidence which they could not be prepared to repel.3 It may be added, that the evidence not being to a material point, the witness could not be punished for perjury, if it were false.4

§ 449. Same subject. In cross-examinations, however, this rule is not usually applied with the same strictness as in examinations in chief; but, on the contrary, great latitude of interrogation is sometimes permitted by the judge, in the exercise of his discretion, where, from the temper and conduct of the witness, or other circumstances, such course seems essential to the discovery of the truth, (a) or, where the cross-examiner will undertake to show the relevancy of the interrogatory afterwards, by other evidence. On this head, it is difficult to lay down any precise rule.² But it is a well-settled rule that a witness cannot be cross-examined as to any fact, which is collateral and irrelevant to the issue, merely for the purpose of contradicting him by other evidence, if he should deny it, thereby to discredit his testimony. 3(b) And, if a question is put to a witness which is collateral or irrelevant to the issue, his answer cannot be contradicted by the party who asked the question; but it is conclusive against him. 4(c) But it is not irrelevant to

Roberts, 81 N. C. 605. But a question, the answer to which would merely affect the general credibility of the witness, as a question the answer to which would criminate or disgrace him, does not admit of contradiction. inquire of the witness, whether he has not on some former occasion given a different account of the matter of fact, to which he has already testified, in order to lay a foundation for impeaching his testimony by contradicting him. The inquiry, however, in such cases, must be confined to matters of fact only; mere opinions which the witness may have formerly expressed being inadmissible, unless the case is such as to render evidence of opinions admissible and material.⁵ Thus, if the witness should give, in evidence in chief, his opinion of the identity of a person, or of his handwriting, or of his sanity, or the like, he may be asked whether he has not formerly expressed a different opinion upon the same subject; but if he has simply testified to a fact, his previous opinion of the merits of the case is inadmissible. Therefore, in an action upon a marine policy, where the broker, who effected the policy for the plaintiff, being called as a witness for the defendant, testified that he omitted to disclose a certain fact, now contended to be material to the risk, and being cross-examined whether he had not expressed his opinion that the underwriter had not a leg to stand upon in the defence, he denied that he had said so; this was deemed conclusive, and evidence to contradict him in this particular was rejected. $^{6}(d)$ one link in the chain of testimony, which is to convict him, he is protected. And whether it may tend to criminate or expose the witness is a point upon which the court are bound to instruct him; 3 and which the court will determine, under all the circumstances of the case; 4 but without requiring the witness fully to explain how he might be criminated by the answer, which the truth would oblige him to give. For if he were obliged to show how the effect would be produced, the protection which this rule of law is designed to afford him would at once be annihilated. 5 (c)

3 Close v. Olney, 1 Denio, 319.

4 This point, however, is not universally agreed. In Fisher v. Ronalds, 17 Jur. 393, Jervis, C. J., and Maule, J., were of opinion that it was for the witness to say, on his oath, whether he believed that the question tended to criminate him; and if he did, that his answer was conclusive. Williams, J., thought the point not necessary then to be decided.

5 People v. Mather, 4 Wend. 229; 1 Burr's Trial, 245; Southard v. Rexford, 6 Cowen, 254, 255; Bellinger, in error, v. People, 8 Wend. 595. In the first of these cases, this doctrine was stated by the learned judge, in the following terms: "The principal reliance of the defendant, to sustain the determination of the judge, is placed, I presume, on the rule of law that protects a witness in refusing to answer a question which will have a tendency to accuse him of a crime or misdemeanor. Where the disclosures he may make can be used against him to procure his conviction for a criminal offence, or to charge him with penalties and forfeitures, he may stop in answering, before he arrives at the question, the answer to which may show directly his moral turpitude. The witness, who knows what the court does not know, and what he cannot communicate without being a self-accuser, is to judge of the effect of his answer; and, if it proves a link in the chain of testimony, which is sufficient to convict him, when the others are made known, of a crime, he is protected by law from answering the question. If there be a series of questions, the answer to all of which would establish his criminality, the party cannot pick out a particular one and say, if that be put, the answer will not criminate him. 'If it is one step having a tendency to criminate him, he is not compelled to answer.' (16 Ves. 242.) The same privilege that is allowed to a witness is the right of a defendant in a court of equity, when called on to answer. In Parkhurst v. Lowten, 2 Swanst. 215, the Chancellor held, that the

It is held that when the defendant in a criminal case voluntarily goes on the stand as a witness in his own behalf, and testifies that he did not commit the crime with which he is charged, he cannot object to being asked about the crime on cross-examination, but is held to have waived his privilege as to any question relevant to the case or to his credibility as a witness (Com. v. Nichols, 114 Mass. 285. Com. v. Talliar, 110 Ld, 212. Com. a witness (Com. v. Nichols, 114 Mass. 285; Com. v. Tolliver, 119 Id. 312. Cf. People v. Brown, 72 N. V. 571; Roddy v. Witham, 72 Me. 531); and that if a party in a civil case goes on the stand and refuses to an swer certain questions on the ground that the answers would criminate him, this refusal is evidence against him on that point. Andrews v. Frye, 104 Mass. 235. It is, however, held that a party to a suit who is interrogated by the other party, under the Massachusetts statute, need not answer questions tending to criminate him-Worthington v. Scribner, 109 Mass. self.

(c) This point has been the subject of conflicting dicta in the English courts, but was finally settled upon much consideration by the Court of Common Pleas, Cockburn, C. J., as follows: "To entitle a party called as a witness to the privilege of silence, the court must see from the circumstances of the case and the nature of the evidence which the witness is called upon to give, that there is reasonable ground to apprehend danger to the witness from his being compelled to answer - but that if the danger to the witness be once made to appear, great latitude should be allowed to him in judging for himself of the effect of any particular question." Reg. v. Boyes, I. B. & S. 311. This rule was laid down in Osborn v. London Dock Co., 10 Ex. 698, and acted on in Sidebottom v. Adkins, 5 W. R. 743, and followed in ex parte Schoneld, L. R. 6 Ch. D. 230.

But the court will not prevent the witness from answering it, if he chooses: they will only advertise him of his right to decline it.6 This rule is also administered in chancery, where a defendant will not be compelled to discover that which, if answered, would tend to subject him to a penalty or punishment, or which might lead to a criminal accusation, or to ecclesiastical censures. But in all cases where the witness, after being advertised of his privilege, chooses to answer, he is bound to answer everything relative to the transaction. $^{8}(d)$ But the privilege is his own, and defendant 'was not only not bound to answer the question, the answer to which would criminate him directly, but not any which, however remotely connected with the fact, would have a tendency to prove him guilty of simony.' The language of Chief Justice Marshall, on Burr's trial, is equally explicit on this point. 'Many links,' he says, 'frequently compose that chain of testimony, which is necessary to convict an individual of a crime. It appears to the court to be the true sense of the rule, that no witness is compellable to furnish any one of them against himself. It is certainly not only a possible but a probable case, that a witness, by disclosing a single fact, may complete the testimony against himself, and, to every effectual purpose, accuse himself entirely, as he would by stating every-circumstance which would be required for his conviction. That fact of itself would be unavailing, but all other facts without it would be insufficient. While that remains concealed in his own bosom, he is safe; but draw it from thence, and he is exposed to a prosecution. The rule which declares that no man is compellable to accuse himself would most obviously be infringed, by compelling a witness to disclose a fact of this description.' (1 Burr's Trial, 244.) My conclusion is, that where a witness claims to be excused from answering a question, because the answer may disgrace him, or render him infamous, the court must see that the answer may, without the intervention of other facts, fix on him moral turpitude. Where he claims to be excused from answering, because his answer will have a tendency to implicate him in a crime or misdemeanor, or will expose him to a penalty of forfeiture, then the court are to determine, whether the answer he may give to the question can criminate him, directly or indirectly, by furnishing direct evidence of his guilt, or by establishing one of many facts, which together may constitute a chain of testimony sufficient to warrant his conviction, but which one fact of itself could not produce such result; and if they think the answer may in any way criminate him, they must allow his privilege, without exacting from him to explain how he would be criminated by the answer, which the truth may oblige him to give. If the witness was obliged to show how the effect is produced, the protection would at once be annihilated. The means which he would be in that case compelled to use to obtain protection would involve the surrender of the very object, for the security of which the protection was sought." (d) Foster v. Pierce, 11 Cush. 437, 439. It seems that in some of the States, where the party gives testimony to part of a transaction without claiming his privilege of not testifying to what may criminate him, he may be compelled to state the whole; and to submit to a full cross-examination, notwithstanding his answers tend to criminate or disgrace him. Com. v. Pratt, 126 Mass. 462. But, in general, a witness who proceeds inadvertently, and without expecting to be asked to give testimony upon points affecting his character or subjecting him to prosecution for crime, will be accorded his privilege, when claimed, although the result should be to strike his testimony from the case after it had been partly taken down. Dixon v. Vale, 1 C. & P. 278, by Best, C. J. The witness must himself judge, in the first instance, not that of the party; counsel, therefore, will not be allowed to make the objection. (e) If the witness declines answering, no inference of the truth of the fact is permitted to be drawn from that circumstance $^{10}(f)$ And no answer forced from him by the presiding judge, after he has claimed protection, can be afterwards given in evidence against him. If the prosecution, to which he might be exposed, is barred by lapse of time, the privilege ceases, and the witness is bound to answer. $^{12}(g)$

whether the answers sought will tend to prove him guilty of a crime. Unless he is able to testify that he believes they will, he is not entitled to claim the privilege. If he informs the court, upon oath, that he cannot testify without criminating himself, the court cannot compel him to testify, unless fully satisfied such is not the fact, i. e., that the witness is either mistaken, or acts in bad faith; in either of which cases they should compel him to testify. Bartlett, 55 Me. 200. This, however, should be confined to such facts as he must be presumed to know. Devries v. Phillips 63 N. C. 53. It may be doubted whether a statute which prohibits any such inference is not nugatory, as contrary to the law of the human mind. A statute that upon proof that the sun was shining, no inference that it was light should be drawn by the jury, if not against the constitution of a State, is against the nature of things. When a co-defendant in a criminal case turns State's evidence, and testifies to facts criminating himself, he

§ 452. Exposure to pecuniary loss. (2.) Where the witness, by answering, may subject himself to a civil action or pecuniary loss, or charge himself with a debt. This question was very much discussed in England, in Lord Melville's case; and, being finally put to the judges by the House of Lords, eight judges and the chancellor were of opinion that a witness, in such case, was bound to answer, and four thought that he was not. To remove the doubts which were thrown over the question by such a diversity of opinion among eminent judges, a statute was passed,1 declaring the law to be, that a witness could not legally refuse to answer a question relevant to the matter in issue, merely on the ground that the answer may establish, or tend to establish, that he owes a debt, or is otherwise subject to a civil suit, provided the answer has no tendency to accuse himself, or to expose him to any kind of penalty or forfeiture. In the United States, this act is generally considered as declaratory of the true doctrine of the common law; and, accordingly, by the current of authorities, the witness is held bound to answer.² But neither is the statute nor the rule of the common law considered as compelling a person interested in the cause as party, though not named on the record, to testify as a witness in the cause, much less to disclose anything against his own interest.3

§ 453. Exposure to forfeiture. (3.) Where the answer will subject the witness to a forfeiture of his estate. In this case, as well as in the case of an exposure to a criminal prosecution or penalty, it is well settled that a witness is not bound to answer. And this is an established rule in equity as well as at law.2

 $\S 454$. Exposure to disgrace. (4.) Where the answer, though it will not expose the witness to any criminal prosecution or penalty, or to any forfeiture of estate, yet has a direct tendency to degrade his character. On this point there has been a great diversity of opinion, and the law still remains not perfectly settled by authorities. 1 But the conflict of opinions may be somewhat reconciled by a distinction, which has been very properly taken between cases where the testimony is relevant and material to the issue, and eases where the question is not strictly relevant, but is collateral, and is asked only under the latitude allowed in a cross-examination. In the former case, there seems great absurdity in excluding the testimony of a witness merely because it will tend to degrade himself when others have a direct interest in that testimony, and it is essential to the establishment of their rights of property, of liberty, or even of life, or to the course of public justice. Upon such a rule, one who had been convicted and punished for an offence, when called as a witness against an accomplice, would be excused from testifying to any of the transactions in which he had participated with the accused, and thus the guilty might escape. And, accordingly, the better opinion

In the arguments on the respective sides of this question are thus summed up by Mr. Phillips: "The advocates for a compulsory power in cross-examination maintain, that, as parties are frequently surprised by the appearance of a witness unknown to them, or, if known, entirely unexpected, without such power they would have no adequate means of ascertaining what credit is due to his testimony; that, on the cross-examination of spies, informers, and accomplices, this power is more particularly necessary; and that, if a witness may not be questioned as to his character at the moment of trial, the property and even the life of a party must often be endangered. Those on the other side, who maintain that a witness is not compellable to answer such questions, argue to the following effect: They say, the obligation to give evidence arises from the oath, which every witness takes; that by this oath he binds himself only to speak touching the matters in issue; and that such particular facts as these, whether the witness has been in jail for felony, or suffered some infamous punishment, or the like, cannot form any part of the issue, as appears evident from this consideration, that the party against whom the witness is called would not be allowed to prove such particular facts by other witnesses. They argue, further, that it would be an extreme grievance to a witness, to be compelled to disclose past transactions of his life, which may have been since forgotten, and to expose his character afresh to evil report, when, perhaps, by his subsequent conduct, he may have recovered the good opinion of the world; that, if a witness is privileged from answering a question, though relevant to the matters in issue, because it may tend to subject him to a forfeiture of property, with much more reason ought he to be excused from answering an irrelevant question, to the disparagement and forfeiture of his character; that in the case of accomplices stand in a peculiar situation, being admitted to give evidence only under the implied condi

seems to be, that where the transaction, to which the witness is interrogated, forms any part of the issue to be tried, the witness will be obliged to give evidence, however strongly it may reflect on his character.²

§ 455. Same subject. But where the question is not material to the issue, but is collateral and irrelevant, being asked under the license allowed in cross-examination, it stands on another ground. In general, as we have already seen, the rule is, that, upon crossexamination, to try the credit of a witness, only general questions can be put; and he cannot be asked as to any collateral and independent fact, merely with a view to contradict him afterwards by calling another witness. The danger of such a practice, it is said, is obvious, besides the inconvenience of trying as many collateral issues as one of the parties might choose to introduce, and which the other could not be prepared to meet. (a) Whenever, therefore, the question put to the witness is plainly of this character, it is easy to perceive that it falls under this rule, and should be excluded. But the difficulty lies in determining, with precision, the materiality and relevancy of the question when it goes to the character of the witness. There is certainly great force in the argument, that where a man's liberty, or his life, depends upon the testimony of another, it is of infinite importance that those who are to decide upon that testimony should know, to the greatest extent, how far the witness is to be trusted. They can-

(a) It is not relevant to ask a witness, on cross-examination, if he had not offered to suborn a witness in another case, and if he had not forged the name of the defendant to a note. Com. v. Mason, 105 Mass. 163; Smith v. Castles, 1 Gray (Mass.), 108. The fact that a man has frequently pleaded usury in defence of suits against him is not evidence impeaching his character. Pooler v. Curtiss, 3 N. Y. S. C. (T. & C.) 228; Beard v. Hale, Id. 791. This question of relevancy is utterly without any established test, though discussed, perhaps, more than any other question in the law of evidence. Of the more recent cases, Attorney-General v. Hitchcock, 1 Ex. 102, Reg. v. Burke, 8

Cox, 44, are worthy of note, as containing elaborate discussions by differing judges. In the former it was held that a witness who denied that he had said a bribe was offered him, and in the latter, that a witness who had been sworn through an interpreter and on cross-examination had denied that he understood English, could not be contradicted. In Moore v. People, 7 Alb. L. J. 91, a witness for the prisoner was asked if he had not seen a certain person with reference to the case on trial, which he denied; and evidence was allowed to show bias. See also People v. Starks, 5 Denio (N. Y.), 106; Newton v. Harris, 2 Seld. (N. Y.) 345.

not look into his breast to see what passes there; but must form their opinion on the collateral indications of his good faith and sincerity. Whatever, therefore, may materially assist them in this inquiry is most essential to the investigation of truth; and it cannot but be material for the jury to understand the character of the witness whom they are called upon to believe, and to know whether, although he has not been convicted of any crime, he has not in some measure rendered himself less credible by his disgraceful conduct.2 The weight of this argument seems to have been felt by the judge in several cases in which questions tending to disgrace the witness, have been permitted in cross-examination.

§ 456. Same subject. It is, however, generally conceded, that where the answer, which the witness may give, will not directly and certainly show his infamy, but will only tend to disgrace him, he may be compelled to answer. Such is the rule in equity, as held by Lord Eldon; and its principle applies with equal force at common law; and, accordingly, it has been recognized in the common-law courts.² In questions involving a criminal offence, the rule, as we have seen,3 is different; the witness being permitted to judge for the most part for himself, and to refuse to answer wherever it would tend to subject him to a criminal punishment or forfeiture. But here the court must see for itself, that the answer will directly show his infamy, before it will excuse him from testifying to the fact.⁴ Nor does there seem to be any good reason why a witness should be privileged from answering a question touching his present situation, employment, and associates, if they are of his own choice; as, for example, in what house or family he resides, what is his ordinary occupation, and whether he is intimately acquainted and conversant with certain persons, and the like; for, however these may disgrace him, his position is one of his own selection. 5 (a)

§ 457. Same subject. But, on the other hand, where the question involves the fact of a previous conviction, it ought not to be asked; because there is higher and better evidence which ought to be offered. If the inquiry is confined, in terms, to the fact of his having been subjected to an ignominious punishment, or to imprisonment alone, it is made, not for the purpose of showing that he was an innocent sufferer, but that he was guilty; and the only competent proof of this guilt is the record of his conviction. Proof of the same nature, namely, documentary evidence, may also be had of the cause of his commitment to prison, whether in execution of a sentence, or on a preliminary charge. (a)

obliged to submit to insult, or to answer inquiries merely impertment. Com. v. Sacket, 22 Pick. 394; Com. v. Shaw, 4 Cush. 593; Smith v. Castles, 1 Gray, 108. Greater latitude of cross-examination is allowable as against a party to the suit, as a rule, than against witnesses merely. Rea v. Missouri, Int. Rev. Record, March 21, 1874.

(a) This rule is affected by the statutes previously cited, showing that a conviction of crime may be shown to affect a witness's credibility, it being formerly held to exclude him entirely. See ante, sections 372 et seq. The conviction being now admissible as affecting the witness's credibility, it is sometimes allowable to ask the witness questions on cross-examination which tend to connect him with the conviction. Thus it is held that if the defendant in a criminal case goes on the witness-stand to testify in his own behalf, he thereby renders himself liable to be asked questions which tend to identify him as the person named in the record of a previous conviction of crime. Com. v. Morgan, 107 Mass. 205; Com. v. Sullivan, 150 Mass. 315; Spiegel v. Hays, 118 N. Y. 661. It is not, however, allowable to show by the cross-examination of the witness himself that he has been convicted of a crime, if the objection is made that the record of the conviction is the best evidence, unless, by statute, the conviction may be shown by cross-examination. Newcomb v. Griswold, 24 N. Y. 298; Real v. People, 42 N. Y. 280; People v. Irving, 95 N. Y. 541; Spiegel v. Hays, 118 N. Y. 661. The better rule now is that on cross-examination questions as to specific facts tending to disgrace the witness, and not questions as to accusations or charges, including indictments, may be asked on cross-examination, but the party asking them is bound by the answers of the witness. People v. Irving, 95 N. Y. 541; Real v. People, 42 N. Y. 281; People v. Casey, 72 N. Y. 393; Ryan v. People, 79 N. Y. 594.

questions, which do not seem to come within the reasons already stated in favor of permitting this extent of cross-examination; namely, questions, the answers to which, though they may disgrace the witness in other respects, yet will not affect the credi' due to his testimony. For it is to be remembered, that the object of indulging parties in this latitude of inquiry is, that the jury may understand the character of the witness, whom they are asked to believe, in order that his evidence may not pass for more than it is worth. Inquiries, therefore, having no tendency to this end, are clearly impertinent. Such are the questions frequently attempted to be put to the principal female witness, in trials for seduction per quod servitium amisit, and on indictments for rape, &c., whether she had not previously been criminal with other men, or with some particular person, which are generally suppressed. 1 (a) So, on an indictment of a female prisoner, for stealing from the person, in a house, the prosecutor cannot be asked, whether at that house anything improper passed between him and the prisoner. $^{2}(b)$

§ 459. Collateral facts affecting credibility. But where the question does not fall within either of the classes mentioned in the three preceding sections, and goes clearly to the credit of the witness for veracity, it is not easy to perceive why he should be privileged from answering, notwithstanding it may disgrace him. The examination being governed and kept within bounds by the discretion of the judge, all inquiries into transactions of a remote date will of course be suppressed; for the interests of justice do not require that the errors of any man's life, long since repented of and forgiven by the community, should be recalled to remembrance, and their memory be perpetuated in judicial documents, at the pleasure of any future litigant. The State has a deep interest in the inducements to reformation, held out by the protecting veil, which is thus east over the past offences of the penitent. But where the inquiry relates to transactions comparatively recent, bearing directly upon the present character and moral principles of the witness, and therefore essential to the due estimation of his testimony by the jury, learned judges have of late been disposed to allow it. 1 Thus it has been held, that a witness called by one party may be asked, in cross-examination, whether he had not attempted to dissuade a witness for the other party from attending the trial.2 So where one was indicted for lareeny, and the principal witness for the prosecution was his servant-boy, the learned judge allowed the prisoner's counsel to ask the boy, whether he had not been charged with robbing his master, and whether he had not afterwards said he would be revenged of him, and would soon fix him in jail.3 Similar inquiries have been permitted in other cases.4 The great question, however, whether a witness may not be bound in some cases to answer an interrogatory to his own moral degradation, where, though it is collateral to the main issue, it is relevant to his character for veracity, has not yet been brought into direct and solemn judgment, and must therefore be regarded as an open question, notwithstanding the practice of eminent judges at Nisi Prius, in favor of the inquiry, under the limitations we have above stated.5

 ξ 460. Questions may be asked where witness need not answer. Though there may be eases, in which a witness is not bound to answer a question which goes directly to disgrace him, yet the question may be asked, wherever the answer, if the witness should waive his privilege, would be received as evidence. been said, that if the witness declines to answer, his refusal may well be urged against his credit with the jury.² But in several cases this inference has been repudiated by the court; for it is the duty of the court, as well as the object of the rule, to protect the witness from disgrace, even in the opinion of the jury and other persons present; and there would be an end of this protection, if a demurrer to the question were to be taken as an admission of the fact inquired into.³

§ 461. Impeachment of witnesses. After a witness has been examined in chief, his credit may be impeached in various modes, besides that of exhibiting the improbabilities of a story by a crossexamination. (1.) By disproving the facts stated by him, by the testimony of other witnesses. (2.) By general evidence affecting his credit for veracity. But in impeaching the credit of a witness, the examination must be confined to his general reputation, and not be permitted as to particular facts; for every man is supposed to be capable of supporting the one, but it is not likely that he should be prepared to answer the other, without notice; and unless his general character and behavior be in issue, he has no notice. 1(a) This point has been much discussed, but may now be considered at rest.2 The regular mode of examining into the

But it should be remembered, that, if the question is collateral to the issue, the answer cannot be contradicted. In such cases, the prudent practitioner will seldom put a question, unless it be one which, if answered either way, will benefit his client. Kingfield, 1 Appleton, 275. In this last case the subject was ably examined by Shepley, J., who observed: "The opinions of a witness are not legal testimony, except in special cases; such, for example, as experts in some profession or art, those of the witnesses to a will, and, in our practice, opinions on the value of property. In other cases, the witness is not to substitute his opinion for that of the jury; nor are they to rely upon any such opinion instead of exercising their own judgment, taking into consideration the whole testimony. When they have the testimony that the reputation of a witness is good or bad for truth, connecting it with his manner of testifying, and with the other testimony in the case, they have the elements from which to form and with the other testimony in the case, they have the elements from which to form a correct conclusion, whether any and what credit should be given to his testimony. To permit the opinion of a witness, that another witness should not be believed, to be To permit the opinion of a witness, that another witness should not be believed, to be received and acted upon by a jury, is to allow the prejudices, passions, and feelings of that witness to form, in part at least, the elements of their judgment. To authorize the question to be put, whether the witness would believe another witness on oath, although sustained by no inconsiderable weight of authority, is to depart from sound principles and established rules of law, respecting the kind of testimony to be admitted for the consideration of a jury, and their duties in deciding upon it. It moreover would represent the introduction and includence in courts of witness of recreated and control of the consideration. permit the introduction and indulgence in courts of justice of personal and party hostilities, and of every unworthy motive by which man can be actuated, to form the basis of an opinion to be expressed to a jury to influence their decision." 1 Applet. 379. (b) In Massachusetts, it is discretionary with the judge to require the witness to be asked whether he knows the general reputation of the person in question (Wetherbee v. and the grounds of their opinion; or may attack their general character, and by fresh evidence support the character of his own witness. 6 (d) The inquiry must be made as to his general reputation, where he is best known. It is not enough that the impeaching witness professes merely to state what he has heard "others say;" for those others may be but few. He must be able to state what is generally said of the person, by those among whom he dwells, or with whom he is chiefly conversant; for it is this only that constitutes his general reputation or character. (e) And, ordinarily, the witness ought himself to come from the neighborhood of the person whose character is in question. (f) If he is a stranger, sent thither by the adverse party to learn his character, he will not be allowed to testify as to the result of his inquiries; but otherwise, the court will not undertake to determine, by a preliminary inquiry, whether the impeaching witness has sufficient knowledge of the fact to enable him to testify; but will leave the value of his testimony to be determined by the jury. § 462. Proof of contrary statements. (3.) The credit of a witness may also be impeached by proof, that he has made statements out of court, contrary to what he has testified at the trial. But it is only in such matters as are relevant to the issue, that the witness can be contradicted. And before this can be done, it is generally held necessary, in the case of verbal statements, first to ask him as to the time, place, and person involved in the supposed contradiction. It is not enough to ask him the general question, whether he has ever said so and so, nor whether he has always told the same story; because it may frequently happen, that, upon the general question, he may not remember whether he has so said; whereas, when his attention is challenged to particular circumstances and occasions, he may recollect and explain

Middlesworth, 4 Den. 431. Whether this inquiry into the general reputation or character of the witness should be restricted to his reputation for truth and veracity, or may be made in general terms involving his entire moral character and estimation in society, is a point upon which the American practice is not uniform. All are agreed, that the true and primary inquiry is into his general character for truth and veracity, and to this point, in the Northern States, it is still confined. But in several of the other States greater latitude is allowed. In South Carolina, the true mode is said to be, first, to ask what is his general character, and if this is said to be bad, then to inquire whether the witness would believe him on oath; leaving the party who adduced him to inquire whether, notwithstanding his bad character in other respects, he has not preserved his character for truth. Anon., 1 Hill (S. C.), 251, 258, 259. In Kentucky, the same general range of inquiry is permitted, and is thus defended by one of the learned judges: "Every person conversant with human nature must be sensible of the kindred nature of the vices to which it is addicted. So true is this, that, to ascertain the existence of one vice of a particular character, is frequently to prove the existence of more, at the same time, in the same individual. Add to this, that persons of infamous character may, and do frequently exist, who have formed no character as to their lack of truth; and society may have never had the opportunity of ascertaining that they are false, in their words or oaths. At the same time, they may be so notoriously guilty of acting falsehood, in frauds, forgeries, and other crimes, as would leave no doubt of their being capable of speaking and swearing it, especially as they may frequently depose falsehood with greater security against detection, than practise those other vices. In such cases, and with such characters, ought the jury to be precluded from drawing inferences unfavorable to their truth as witnesses, by excludi

The circumstances under which previous inconsistent statements of a witness in regard to the subject-matter of his testimony in court can be introduced to contradict or impeach his testimony, are the same whether his testimony is given orally in court before the jury, or is taken by deposition. Ayers v. Watson, 132 U. S. 404; Hammond v. Dike, 42 Minn. 273. But the courts have been somewhat liberal in giving the opposing party an opportunity to present to the witness the matter in which they propose to contradict him, even going so far as to permit him to recall and cross-examine on that subject after he has left the stand. In Ayers v. Watson, 132 U. S. 404, the court says: "This principle of the rules of evidence is so well understood that authorities are not necessary to be cited. It is so well stated with its qualifications and the reasons for it by Mr. Greenleaf in his work on Evidence, vol. 1, secs. 462 to 464 inclusive, that nothing need be added to it here except a reference to the decisions cited in his notes to those sections." When it appears that the witness has at other times made statements inconsistent with his testimony, and it is therefore plain that he must have been false at one time or the other, the party calling him cannot put in evidence to show that at still other times the witness has made statements in accordance with his testimony. Com. v. Jenkins, 10 Gray, 485, 490; Hewitt v. Corey, 150 Mass. 445. But where a witness is sought to be impeached by evidence tending to show that at the time of giving his evidence he is under a strong bias, or in such a situation as to put him under a sort of moral duress to testify in a particular way, or where an attempt is made to impeach the credit of a witness by showing that he formerly withheld or concealed the facts to which he had now testified, explanatory evidence of the behavior of the witness either by the witness himself or others is admissible.

In Massachusetts, by statute, Pub. Stat. c. 169, § 22, a party producing a witness may prove that he has made at other times statements inconsistent with his present testimony, but first, the circumstances of the supposed statement sufficient to designate the particular occasion must be mentioned to witness, and he must be asked whether or not he has made such statements, and if so, allowed to explain them. Com. v. Donahoe, 133 Mass. 407. And if the witness states immaterial facts there is no ground for exception if the judge refuses to allow evidence of prior statements of the witness inconsistent with his statement in evidence, to be put in. Batchelder v. Batchelder, 139 Mass. 1.

And this rule extends to a defendant in a criminal case, who testifies in his own behalf. Previous statements of his, inconsistent with his testimony, may be shown. Com. v. Tolliver, 119 Mass. 312.

Statements of the witness indicating a bias towards a party, or otherwise affecting his credibility, are considered relevant, so as to allow contradiction. Scott v. State, 64 Ind. 400.

witness. Now, the usual practice of the courts below, and a practice to which we are not aware of any exception, is this: if it be intended to bring the credit of a witness into question by proof of anything that he may have said or declared, touching the declared that which is intended to be proved. If the witness admits the words or declarations imputed to him, the proof on the other side becomes unnecessary; and the witness has an opportunity of giving such reason, explanation, or exculpation of his conduct, if any there may be, as the particular circumstances of the transaction may happen to furnish; and thus the whole matter is brought before the court at once, which, in our opinion, is the most convenient course. (b) If the witness denies the words or declarations imputed to him, the adverse party has an opportunity afterwards of contending that the matter of the speech or declaration is such, that he is not to be bound by the answer of the witness, but may contradict and falsify it; and, if it be found to be such, his proof in contradiction will be received at the proper season. If the witness declines to give any answer to the question proposed to him, by reason of the tendency thereof to criminate himself, and the court is of opinion that he cannot be compelled to answer, the adverse party has, in this instance, also, his subsequent opportunity of tendering his proof of the matter, which is received, if by law it ought to be received. But the possibility that the witness may decline to answer the question affords no sufficient reason for not giving him the opportunity of answering, and of offering such explanatory or exculpatory matter as I have before alluded to; and it is, in our opinion, of great importance that this opportunity should be thus afforded, not only for the purpose already mentioned, but because, if not given in the first instance, it may be wholly lost; for a witness, who has been examined, and has no reason to suppose that his further attendance is requisite, often departs the court, and may not be found or brought back until the trial be at an end. So that, if evidence of this sort could be adduced on the sudden and by surprise, without any previous intimation to the witness duced on the sudden and by surprise, without any previous intimation to the witness or to the party producing him, great injustice might be done; and, in our opinion, not unfrequently, would be done both to the witness and the party; and this is not only in the case of a witness called by a plaintiff or prosecutor, but equally so in the case of a witness called by a defendant; and one of the great objects of the course of proceeding, established in our courts, is the prevention of surprise, as far as practicable, upon any person who may appear therein." The Queen's Case, 2 Brod. & Bing. 313, 314. In the United States, the same course is understood to be generally adopted, except in Maine (Warner, Worle, 28), creen 142), and perhaps in Mescaleyetts (Tanker, r. Welsh, 17 (Ware v. Ware, 8 Greenl. 42), and perhaps in Massachusetts (Tucker v. Welsh, 17 Mass. 160). But see Brown v. Bellows, 4 Pick. 188. The utility of this practice, and of confronting the two opposing witnesses, is illustrated by a case mentioned by Mr. Justice Cowen, in his notes to Phillips on Evidence, vol. ii. p. 744 (n. 533 to Phil. Evid. 308); "in which a highly respectable witness sought to be imwilling to bring him into a contradiction, upon both being placed on the stand, furnished such a distinction to the latter as corrected his memory, and led him, in half a minute, to acknowledge that he was wrong. The difference lay in only one word. The first witness had now sworn, that he did not rely on a certain firm as being in good credit; for he was not well informed on the subject. The former words imputed to him were a plain admission that he was fully informed, and did rely on their credit. It turned out that, in his former conversation, he spoke of a partnership, from which one name was soon afterward withdrawn, leaving him now to speak of the latter firm, thus weakened by the withdrawal. In regard to the credit of the first firm, he had, in truth, been fully informed by letters. With respect to the last, he had no information. The sound in the titles of the two firms was so nearly alike, that the ear would easily confound them; and, had it not been for the colloquium thus brought on, an apparent contradiction would doubtless have been kept on foot, for various purposes, through a long trial. It involved an inquiry into a credit which had been given to another, on the fraudulent representations of the defendant." Mr. Starkie, for a different purpose, mentions another case, of similar character, where the judge understood the witness to

(b) If the witness says he cannot remember whether he spoke the words or not, this is a sufficient foundation to allow

common justice requires that, by first calling his attention to the subject, he should have an opportunity to recollect the facts, and, if necessary, to correct the statement already given, as well as by a re-examination to explain the nature, circumstances, meaning, and design of what he is proved elsewhere to have said. $^{2}(c)$ And this rule is extended, not only to contradictory statements by the witness, but to other declarations, and to acts done by him, through the medium of verbal communications or correspon-

2 Reg. v. St. George, 9 C. & P. 483, 489; Carpenter v. Wall, 11 Ad. & El. 803. On this subject, the following observations of Lord Langdale deserve great consideration: "I do not think," said he, "that the veracity or even the accuracy of an ignorant and illiterate person is to be conclusively tested by comparing an affidavit which he has made, with his testimony given upon an oral examination in open court. We have too much experience of the great infirmity of affidavit evidence. When the witness is illiterate and ignorant, the language presented to the court is not his; it is, and must be, the language of the person who prepares the affidavit; and it may be. and must be, the language of the person who prepares the affidavit; and it may be, and too often is, the expression of that person's erroneous inference as to the meaning of the language used by the witness himself; and however carefully the affidavit may be read over to the witness, he may not understand what is said in language so different from that which he is accustomed to use. Having expressed his meaning in his own language, and finding it translated by a person on whom he relies, into language own language, and miding it translated by a person on whom he relies, into language not his own, and which he does not perfectly understand, he is too apt to acquiesce; and testimony not intended by him is brought before the court as his. Again, evidence taken on affidavit, being taken ex parte, is almost always incomplete, and often inaccurate, sometimes from partial suggestions, and sometimes from the want of suggestions and inquiries, without the aid of which the witness may be unable to recall the consecution of the consecution of the consecution. nected collateral circumstances, necessary for the correction of the first suggestions of nected collateral circumstances, necessary for the correction of the first suggestions of his memory, and for his accurate recollection of all that belongs to the subject. For these and other reasons, I do not think that discrepancies between the affidavit and the oral testimony of a witness are conclusive against the testimony of the witness. It is further to be observed, that witnesses, and particularly ignorant and illiterate witnesses, must always be liable to give imperfect or erroneous evidence, even when orally examined in open court. The novelty of the situation, the agitation and hurry which accompanies it, the cajolery or intimidation to which the witnesses may be subigner accompanies it, the capterly of munitation to which the witnesses may be subjected, the want of questions calculated to excite those recollections, which might clear up every difficulty, and the confusion occasioned by cross-examination, as it is too often conducted, may give rise to important errors and omissions; and the truth is to be elicited, not by giving equal weight to every word the witness may have uttered, but by considering all the words with reference to the particular occasion of saying them, and to the personal demeanor and deportment of the witness during the examination. All the discrepancies which occur, and all that the witness says in respect of them, are to be carefully attended to; and the result, according to the special circumstances of each case, may be, either that the testimony must be altogether rejected, on the ground that the witness has said that which is untrue, either wilfully or under selfdelusion, so strong as to invalidate all that he has said; or else the result must be, that the testimony must, as to the main purpose, be admitted, notwithstanding discrepancies which may have arisen from innocent mistake, extending to collateral matters, but perhaps not affecting the main question in any important degree." (c) As has been previously said, when a party to a suit testifies in his own behalf, he stands in the same position as any witness. He is liable, therefore, to have his dence, which are offered with the view either to contradict his testimony in chief, or to prove him a corrupt witness himself, or to have been guilty of attempting to corrupt others. 3 (d)

§ 463. Mode of impeachment. A similar principle prevails in cross-examining a witness as to the contents of a letter, or other paper written by him. The counsel will not be permitted to represent, in the statement of a question, the contents of a letter, and to ask the witness whether he wrote a letter to any person with such contents, or contents to the like effect; without having first shown to the witness the letter, and having asked him whether he wrote that letter, and his admitting that he wrote it. For the contents of every written paper, according to the ordinary and well-established rules of evidence, are to be proved by the paper itself, and by that alone, if it is in existence. (a) But it is not

(d) But the witness cannot be cross-examined as to irrelevant matter in order to contradict him by showing the contents of a letter written by him (Com. v. Schaffner, 146 Mass. 514); nor if so cross-examined can he be contradicted by proof of previous inconsistent statements as to said irrelevant matter. People v. Greenwall, 108 N. Y. 301. In accordance with the statement of the general principle by the author, it is held that upon cross-examination of a witness a stenographic report of his testimony, given upon a former trial, may be put in evidence to contradict the witness, by the stenographer who took the same if the witness has been specially interrogated on the point whether his testimony is the same as he gave in the former trial, and insists that he has not changed or added to the testimony previously given. Bennett v. Syndicate Ins. Co., 43 Minn. 48. Where a witness upon a second trial contradicts his testimony on the first, he may give his reasons therefor. State v. Reed, 62 Me. 129. If a party, for the purpose of discrediting a witness, by showing a bias, offers in evidence a letter from the witness to himself, he may also, for the purpose of explaining it, read a letter from himself to which the letter of the witness is a reply. Trischet v. Hamilton Insurance Co., 14 Gray, 456. The English courts hold that it is competent to cross-examine the party when of required that the whole paper should be shown to the witness. Two or three lines only of a letter may be exhibited to him, and he may be asked, whether he wrote the part exhibited. If he denies, or does not admit, that he wrote that part, he cannot be examined as to the contents of such letter, for the reason already given; nor is the opposite counsel entitled, in that case, to look at the paper.2 And if he admits the letter to be his writing, he cannot be asked whether statements, such as the counsel may suggest, are contained in it, but the whole letter itself must be read, as the only competent evidence of that fact.3 According to the ordinary rule of proceeding in such cases, the letter is to be read as the evidence of the cross-examining counsel in his turn, when he shall have opened his ease. But if he suggests to the court, that he wishes to have the letter read immediately, in order to found certain questions upon its contents, after they shall have been made known to the court, which otherwise could not well or effectually be done, that becomes an excepted case; and for the convenient administration of justice, the letter is permitted to be read, as part of the evidence of the counsel so proposing it, subject to all the consequences of its being considered. 4(b)

§ 464. Same subject. If the paper in question is lost, it is obvious that the course of examination, just stated, cannot be adopted. In such case, it would seem, that regularly the proof of the loss of the paper should first be offered, and that then the witness may be cross-examined as to its contents; after which he may be contradicted by secondary evidence of the contents of the But where this course would be likely to occasion inconvenience, by disturbing the regular progress of the cause, and distracting the attention, it will always be in the power of the judge, in his discretion, to prevent this inconvenience, by postponing the examination, as to this point, to some other stage of

§ 465. Same subject. A witness cannot be asked on crossexamination, whether he has written such a thing, stating its particular nature or purport; the proper course being to put the writing into his hands, and to ask him whether it is his writing. And if he is asked generally, whether he has made representations, of the particular nature stated to him, the counsel will be required to specify, whether the question refers to representations in writing, or in words alone; and if the former is meant, the inquiry, for the reasons before mentioned, will be suppressed, unless the writing is produced. But whether the witness may be asked the general question, whether he has given any account, by letter or otherwise, differing from his present statement,—the question being proposed without any reference to the circumstance, whether the writing, if there be any, is or is not in existence, or whether it has or has not been seen by the cross-examining counsel, - is a point which is considered still open for discussion. But so broad a question, it is conceived, can be of very little use, except to test the strength of the witness's memory, or his confidence in assertion; and, as such, it may well be suffered to remain with other questions of that class, subject to the discretion of the judge.2

§ 466. Same subject. If the memory of the witness is refreshed by a paper put into his hands, the adverse party may cross-examine the witness upon that paper, without making it his evidence in the cause. But if it be a book of entries, he cannot crossexamine as to other entries in the book without making them his evidence. But if the paper is shown to the witness merely to prove the handwriting, this alone does not give the opposite party a right to inspect it, or to cross-examine as to its contents.² And if the paper is shown to the witness upon his cross-examination, and he is cross-examined upon it, the party will not be bound to have the paper read, until he has entered upon his own case. $^{3}(a)$

ined respecting a former statement made by him, the party who called him has a right to re-examine him to the same matter.1 The counsel has a right, upon such re-examination, to ask all questions which may be proper to draw forth an explanation of the sense and meaning of the expressions, used by the witness on eross-examination, if they be in themselves doubtful; and also of the motive by which the witness was induced to use those expressions; (a) but he has no right to go further and to introduce matter new in itself, and not suited to the purpose of explaining either the expressions or the motives of the witness.2 This point, after having been much discussed in The Queen's Case, was brought before the court several years afterwards, when the learned judges held it as settled, that proof of a detached statement, made by a witness at a former time, does not authorize proof, by the party ealling that witness, of all that he said at the same time, but only of so much as can be in some way connected with the statement proved.³ Therefore, where a witness had been cross-examined as to what the plaintiff said in a particular conversation, it was held that he could not be re-examined as to the other assertions, made by the plaintiff in the same conversation, but not connected with the assertions to which the cross-examina-

4. So if, on cross-examination, facts have been elicited which tend to shake the credibility of a witness, he may, on the credibility of a witness, he may, on re-examination, be asked such questions as tend to explain those facts. United States v. Barrels of High Wines, 8 Blatchf. 475. When the object of a question on re-examination is to obtain an explanation of what the witness meant by his testimony on cross-examination, it is not proper to do this by reciting what he has testified in chief and contrasting it with what he says on cross-examination, by way of showing the witness, unless he is an unwilling and hostile one, that he has gotten willing and hostile one, that he has gotten into difficulty and must work his way out.

It is too suggestive a method of re-examination. On such re-examination what he has said in chief should be omitted and not suggested to him. Still the question is within the discretion of the court, and error cannot be assigned because of the allowance of such interrogatory (Stoner v. Devilbiss, 70 Md. 160; Ohlsen v. Terrero, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 127; Lawder v. Lawder, 5 Ir. L. R. N. S. 27; Wells v. Jackson Iron Manuf. Co., 48 N. H. 491), unless a substantial injury is done by such ruling, in the exclusion of testimony a party might otherwise have enjoyed. Moody v. Rowell, 17 Pick. 498; Gunter v. Watson, 4 Jones (N. C.), L. 455.

² Such was the opinion of seven out of eight judges, whose opinion was taken in the House of Lords, in The Queen's Case, as delivered by Lord Tenterden, 2 Brod. & Bing. 297. The counsel calling a witness who gives adverse testimony, cannot, in re-examination, ask the witness whether he has not given a different account of the matter to the attorney. Winter v. tion related; although the assertions as to which it was proposed to re-examine him were connected with the subject-matter of the suit.4

§ 468. Extent of right. If the counsel chooses to cross-examine the witness to facts, which were not admissible in evidence, the other party has a right to re-examine him as to the evidence so given. (a) Thus, where issue was joined upon a plea of prescription, to a declaration for trespass in G., and the plaintiff's witnesses were asked, in cross-examination, questions respecting the user in other places than G., which they proved; it was held that the plaintiff, in re-examination, might show an interruption in the user in such other places. (b) But an adverse witness will not be permitted to obtrude such irrelevant matter, in answer to a question not relating to it; and if he should, the other party may either cross-examine to it, or may apply to have it stricken out of the judge's notes.6

§ 469. Contradictory statements. Where evidence of contradictory statements by a witness, or of other particular facts, as, for example, that he has been committed to the house of correction, is offered by way of impeaching his veracity, his general character for truth being thus in some sort put in issue, it has been deemed reasonable to admit general evidence, that he is a man of strict integrity, and scrupulous regard for truth. 1(a) But

Part of the prior examination was then introduced in evidence by the defendant, with a view to contradict testimony given by the plaintiff at the trial. Subsequently the plaintiff was permitted to introduce testimony to the effect that his general reputation for truth and veracity, in the neighborhood in which he lived, was good. It was held on appeal that this was in accordance with the mile. that this was in accordance with the rule, that where a witness had been impeached by showing that he has made statements out of court contradictory to those made at the trial, evidence of his general good character and good repute for truth and veracity may be introduced. In this case, a witness was asked in crossexamination for the avowed purpose of discrediting him, whether he had not been indicted and tried for setting fire to his barn, and he answered in the affirmative, and also stated that he was acquitted on the trial of the indictment. In reply to this cross-examination, and to support the credit of the witness, the party calling him offered evidence as to his reputation for truth and veracity, which was admitted under objection. The full court decided that the testimony should not have been admitted. Thomas, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "If the cross-examination of the witness showed that he had been charged with the commission of crime, it showed also that upon fair trial he had been fully acquitted. It left his character as it found it. think, therefore, the evidence as to his reputation for truth and integrity should not have been admitted. Had the effect of the cross-examination been otherwise, we are not prepared to say the reputation of the witness for truth would have been put in issue. The doctrine stated in the text-books has but slight foundation of authority to rest upon, and as matter of reason will not bear a very careful probing. The case, however, does not render a decision of the point necessary.' also Heywood v. Reed, 4 Gray, 574. "And it seems," says Judge Redfield, in his note to this section, "that the mere attempt to impeach a witness, by inquiring of another witness what was his character for truth, will justify general evidence of his good character, notwithstanding the witness inquired of said his character was good. Com. v. Ingraham, 7 Gray, 46. But in Brown v. Mooers, 6 Gray, 451, it was held that where the character of the witness is only attempted to be impeached by proving contradictory statements made by him out of court, he could not be sustained by general evidence of good character; and the court declare that the text in the preceding section of our author 'is not law.'....
The case of Brown v. Mooers is certainly too narrow in its restrictions. For if the witness is clearly shown to have made contradictory statements about the matter, he is surely far more effectually impeached than if a witness were asked for his character for truth, and declared it to be good. In the latter case, it would seem no ground had been laid for the introduction of general evidence of good character, more than if the counsel had inquired of the witness himself if he had ever been impeached in court, and he had replied in the negative. But in the former case, it is obvious the witness's character for truth is seriously damaged. In other States, general evidence of good character is received; and we must still maintain that our author is fairly warranted in saying that it should be. State v. the court refuse to go any farther than required by the exact facts of the prior cases in that State. Nor can an admission be rebutted by evidence of contrary statements. Ante § 209, n. In Deshon v. Merchant's Ins. Co., 11 Met. 199, 209, it was laid down as a clear rule of law that a witness cannot be allowed to state, on the direct examination, with the view of strengthening his testimony, that he communicated to third persons at prior times, the same or other particular facts. In Com. v. Wilson, 1 Gray, 340, where, in re-examination, similar testimony was offered for a like purpose, Shaw, C. J., said, "The rule excluding such testimony is confined to the examination in chief, and does not apply to a case where the other party has sought to impeach the witness on cross-examination. The purpose of the cross-examination in this particular having been to impeach the witness, the question may be put." See also Boston & Worc. R. R. Co. v. Dana, 1 Gray, 33, 103.

(c) Hotchkiss v. Gen. Ins. Co., 5 Hun (N. Y.), 101; State v. Thomason, 1 Jones (N. C.), L. 274; People v. Doyell, 48 Cal. 85. Thus in a case in Massachusetts, Hewitt v. Corey, 150 Mass. 445, the facts were that the plaintiff, a married woman, and for the convenience of a bore which sued for the conversion of a horse, which the defendant had attached as property of her husband. The question was, whether the horse belonged to her or to her hus-band. He testified in her behalf that he was not the owner. In order to discredit his testimony, it was shown on his crossexamination that he had formerly included it in a mortgage of personal property given by him; but he added that he did not know that the horse was included when he signed the mortgage, and that as soon as he found that it was, he went to the mortgagees and told them that the horse did not belong to him, and ought not to be embraced in the mortgage. This testimony came in without objection, and the defendant made no motion to strike it out as irrespective or incompetent. plaintiff afterwards, by way of confirmation of her husband's explanation, called one of the mortgagees, who testified, that a day or two, perhaps longer, after the mortgage was signed, the husband came to him and told him the horse did not belong to him and ought not to be in the mortgage. This, according to the testimony, was before the attachment by the defendant. The defendant excepted to the admission of this testimony by the mortgagee. The court cites the case of Com. v. Wilson, 1 Gray, 337, 340, as holding that the rule excluding such testimony does not apply to a case where the other party has sought to impeach the witness on cross-examination, and says that this decision was affirmed in Com. v Jenkins, 10 Gray, 485, 489, 490, where it is said that such confirmatory evidence is competent where a witness is sought to be impeached by evidence tending to show that, at the time of giving his evidence, he is under a strong bias, or in such a situation as to put him under a sort of moral duress to testify in a particular way; or where an attempt is made to impeach the credit of a witness by showing that he formerly withheld or concealed the facts to which he has now testified. The court, however, expressly distinguishes from this case the case where it appears that the witness has at other times made statements inconsistent with his testimony, and where it is plain that he must have been false at one time or the other. In such case he is discredited by reason of his contradictory statements at different times, and it is no restoration of his credit to show that at still other times he has made statements in accordance with his testimony. Hewitt v. Corey, supra. In some States, however, it is held that when evidence of previous statements, contradictory to the testimony of the witness at the trial upon material facts, has been introduced in evidence for the purpose of contradicting the witness, evidence of statements similar to those given by him in his evidence in chief and made about the time corresponding with those made on the trial, may be brought in to corroborate the witness; but that this rule does not allow evidence of a general confirmatory character to be introduced, but only such as is directly opposed to the contradictory evidence introduced for the purpose of impeaching the credibility of the witness. Logansport character of a deceased attesting witness to a deed or will is impeached on the ground of fraud, evidence of his general good character is admissible.4 But mere contradiction among witnesses examined in court supplies no ground for admitting general evidence as to character. 5 (d)

& Pleasant Grove Turnpike Company v. Heil, 118 Ind. 136. In prosecution for rape, if the prosecutrix, having been admitted to testify that she made complaint immediately after the fact, is impeached as to the fact of this complaint, she may be supported by proving that she has out of court narrated the facts as testified to by her at the trial. (d) There is considerable conflict in the decisions, in regard to the order of proof, and the course of trial, in the different States. In some of the States, the party is only required to make a prima facie case in the opening, and may reserve confirmatory proof in support of the very points made in the opening, till he finds upon what points his opening case is attacked, and then fortify it upon those points. Clayes v. Ferris, 10 Vt. 112. But, all his evidence in the first instance, and the plaintiff in his reply is confined to fortifying those points in his case which are attacked by defendant. And, in some of the States, it is understood, that this process of making and answering the plaintiff's case is allowed to be repeated an indefinite number of times. But, at common law, the plaintiff puts in his whole evidence upon every point which he opens, and the defendant then puts in his entire case; and the plaintiff's reply is limited to new points, first opened by defendant. And the court in banc, in passing upon the sufficiency of plaintiff's case, cannot look at the defendant's evidence. Rawlings v. Chandler, 9 Exch. 687. And it is held to rest in the discretion of the judge, subject to review in bane, at what stage in the trial evidence may be produced. Wright v. Willcox, 9 C. B. 650. The judge may recall a wit-ness at any stage of the trial, and examine or cross-examine at his discretion. v. Watson, 6 C. & P. 653.

OF WRITTEN EVIDENCE.

§ 470. Public and private writings. Writings are divisible into two crasses; namely, Public and Private. The former consists of the acts of public functionaries, in the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of government, including, under this general head, the transactions which official persons are required to enter in books or registers, in the course of their public duties, and which occur within the circle of their own personal knowledge and observation. To the same head may be referred the consideration of documentary evidence of the acts of State, the laws and judgments of courts of foreign governments. Public writings are susceptible of another division, they being either (1) judicial, or (2) not judicial; and, with respect to the means and mode of proving them, they may be classed into (1) those which are of record, and (2) those which are not of record. It is proposed to treat, first, of public documents; and, secondly, of those writings which are private. And, in regard to both classes, our inquiries will be directed (1) to the mode of obtaining an inspection of such documents and writings; (2) to the method of proving them; and (3) to their admissibility and effect.

§ 471. Inspection of public documents. And, first, in regard to the inspection of public documents, it has been admitted, from a very early period, that the inspection and exemplification of the records of the king's courts is the common right of the subject. This right was extended, by an ancient statute, to cases where the subject was concerned against the king. The exercise of this right does not appear to have been restrained until the reign of Charles II., when, in consequence of the frequency of actions for malicious prosecution, which could not be supported without a copy of the record, the judges made an order for the regulation of the sessions at the Old Bailey prohibiting the granting of any copy of an indictment for felony, without a special order, upon motion in open court, at the general jail delivery.2 This order, it is to be observed, relates only to indictments for felony. In cases of misdemeanor, the right to a copy has never been questioned.³ But in the United States, no regulation of this kind is known to have been expressly made; and any limitation of the right to a copy of a judicial record or paper, when applied for by any person having an interest in it, would probably be deemed repugnant to the genius of American institutions.4

- § 472. Paper in hands of an officer of court. Where writs, or other papers in cause, are officially in the custody of an officer of the court, he may be compelled by a rule of court to allow an inspection of them, even though it be to furnish evidence in a civil action against himself. Thus, a rule was granted against the marshal of the King's Bench prison, in an action against him for an escape of one arrested upon mesne process, to permit the plaintiff's attorney to inspect the writ by which he was committed to his custody.5
- § 473. Records of inferior tribunals. In regard to the records of inferior tribunals, the right of inspection is more limited. As all persons have not necessarily an interest in them, it is not necessary that they should be open to the inspection of all, without distinction. The party, therefore, who wishes to inspect the proceedings of any of those courts, should first apply to that court, showing that he has some interest in the document, and that he requires it for a proper purpose.1 If it should be refused, the Court of Chancery, upon affidavit of the fact, may at any time send, by a writ of certiorari, either for the record itself, or an exemplification. The King's Bench in England, and the Supreme

With respect to the general records of the realm, in such cases, copies are obtained upon application to the attorney-general. Legatt v. Tollervey, 14 East, 306. But if the copy were obtained without order, it will not, on that account, be rejected. Ibid.; Jordan v. Lewis, Id. 305, n. (b); Caddy v. Barlow, 1 M. & Ry. 275. But Lord Chief Justice Willes, in Rex v. Brangan, 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 32, in the case of a prosecution for robbery, evidently vexatious, refused an application for a copy of the record, on the ground that no order was necessary; declaring, that "by the laws of the realm every prisoner, upon his acquittal, had an undoubted right and title to a copy of the record of such acquittal, for any use he might think fit to make of it; and that, after a demand of it had been made, the proper officer might be punished for refusing to make it out." A strong doubt of the legality of the order of 16 Car. II. was also raised in Browne v. Cumming, 10 B. & C. 70.

§ 474. Quasi public records. There are other records which partake both of a public and private character, and are treated as the one or the other, according to the relation in which the applicant stands to them. Thus, the books of a corporation are public with respect to its members, but private with respect to strangers. In regard to its members, a rule for inspection of the writings of the corporation will be granted of course, on their application, where such inspection is shown to be necessary, in regard to some particular matter in dispute, or where the granting of it is necessary, to prevent the applicant from suffering injury, or to enable him to perform his duties; and the inspection will then be granted, only so far as is shown to be essential to that end.² But a stranger has no right to such rule, and it will not be granted, even where he is defendant in a suit brought by the corporation.3 In this class of records are enumerated parish books, 4 transfer books of the East India Company, 5 public lottery books, 6 the books of incorporated banking companies, 7 (a) a bishop's registry of presentations, 8 and some others of the like kind. If an inspection is wanted by a stranger, in a case not within this rule of the common law, it can only be obtained by a bill for a discovery; a court of equity permitting a discovery in some cases, and under some circumstances, where courts of law will not grant an inspection.⁹ And an inspection is granted only where civil rights are depending; for it is a constant and invariable rule, that, in criminal cases, the party shall never be obliged to furnish evidence against himself. 10

- § 475. Books of public officers. Inspection of the books of public officers is subject to the same restriction as in the case of corporation books; and access to them will not be granted in favor of persons who have no interest in the books. Thus, an inspection of the books of the post-office has been refused, upon the application of the plaintiff, in a qui tam action against a clerk in the post-office, for interfering in the election of a member of Parliament, because the action did not relate to any transaction in the post-office, for which alone the books were kept. Upon the same ground, that the subject of the action was collateral to the subject-matter and design of the books, an inspection of the books of the custom-house has been refused.² Such inspections are also sometimes refused on grounds of public policy, the disclosure sought being considered detrimental to the public interest. Upon the same principle of an interest in the books, the tenants of a manor are generally entitled to an inspection of the court-rolls, wherever their own rights are concerned; but this privilege is not allowed to a stranger.³
- § 476. No right of inspection if against public interest. But, in all cases of public writings, if the disclosure of their contents would, either in the judgment of the court or of the chief executive magistrate, or the head of department, in whose custody or under whose control they may be kept, be injurious to the public interests, an inspection will not be granted.4
- § 477. How to obtain inspection when action is pending. The motion for a rule to inspect and take copies of books and writings, when an action is pending, may be made at any stage of the cause, and is founded on an affidavit, stating the circumstances under which the inspection is claimed, and that an application therefore has been made to the proper quarter, and refused. 5(a)
- § 478. When no action is pending. But when no action is pending, the proper course is to move for a rule to show cause why a mandamus should not issue, commanding the officer having custody of the books to permit the applicant to inspect them, and take copies. The application in this case should state some specific object sought by the inspection, and be supported by an affidavit, as in the case preceding. If a rule is made to show cause why an information, in the nature of a quo warranto, should not be filed, a rule for an inspection will be granted to the prosecutor, immediately upon the granting of a rule to show cause. But if a rule be made to show cause why a mandamus should not be awarded, the rule for an inspection will not be granted, until the mandamus has been issued and returned.6

§ 479. Mode of proof. Acts of State. We proceed now to consider the MODE OF PROOF of public documents, beginning with those which are not judicial. And, first, of acts of State. It has already been seen, that courts will judicially take notice of the political constitution or frame of the government of their own country, its essential political agents, or officers, and its essential ordinary and regular operations. The great seal of the State and the seals of its judicial tribunals require no proof. 1 Courts also recognize, without other proof than inspection, the seals of State of other nations, which have been recognized by their own sovereign. The seals, also, of foreign courts of admiralty, and of notaries-public, are recognized in the like manner.² Public statutes, also, need no proof, being supposed to exist in the memories of all; but, for certainty of recollection, reference is had either to a copy from the legislative rolls, or to the book printed by public authority.3 Acts of State may be proved by production of the original printed document, from a press authorized by government.4 Proclamations, and other acts and orders of the executive, of the like character, may be proved by production of the government gazette, in which they were authorized to be printed.5 Printed copies of public documents, transmitted to Congress by the President of the United States, and printed by the printer to Congress, are evidence of those documents. 6 (a) And here it may be proper to observe, that, in all cases of proof by a copy, if the copy has been taken by a machine, worked by the witness who produces it, it is sufficient. The certificate of the Secretary of State is evidence that a particular person has been recognized as a foreign minister.8 And the certificate of a foreign governor, duly authenticated, is evidence of his own official acts. 9 (b)

§ 480. Legislative acts. Next, as to legislative acts, which consist of statutes, resolutions, and orders, passed by the legislative body. In regard to private statutes, resolutions, &c., the only mode of proof, known to the common law, is either by means of a copy, proved on oath to have been examined by the roll itself; or, by an exemplification under the great seal. But in most if not all of the United States, the printed copies of the laws and resolves of the legislature, published by its authority, are competent evidence either by statute or judicial decision; and it is sufficient prima facie, that the book purports to have been so printed. (c) It is the invariable course of the legislatures of the

(c) Printed copies of a volume printed by order of the Senate of the United States, containing letters to and from various officers of state, were held to be good evidence of the contents of the originals. Whiton v. Albany, &c. Ins. Co., 109 Mass. 30. But this is different from holding them, or the originals, evidence of facts outside. Thus, in Cushing v. Nantasket Beach R.

R. Co., 143 Mass. 78, it was held that a printed document entitled, "48th Congress, 1st session, Senate Ex. Doc. No. 74," containing a report of civil engineers employed by the government to make surveys, and stating facts about the surveys made, was inadmissible as evidence of the facts which might better be proved by the sworn testimony of engineers. As to the effect to be given to the volume termed the "Revised Statutes of Connecticut," see Eld v. Gorham, 20 Conn. 8. In Massachusetts, it is provided by statute that "all acts of incorporation shall be deemed public acts, and, as such, may be declared on and given in evidence, without specially pleading the same." Pub. St. c. 169, § 68. And it is further provided, in the same State, that copies of books, papers, documents, and records in the executive and other departments of the Common-wealth, duly authenticated by the attestation of the officer having charge of the same, shall be competent evidence in all cases equally with the originals thereof if the genuineness of the signature of such officer is attested by the secretary of the Commonwealth under its seal.

several States, as well as of the United States, to nave the laws and resolutions of each session printed by authority. (b) Confidential persons are selected to compare the copies with the original rolls, and superintend the printing. The very object of this provision is to furnish the people with authentic copies; and, from their nature, printed copies of this kind, either of public or private laws, are as much to be depended on as the exemplification, verified by an officer who is a keeper of the record. (c)

§ 481. Same subject. If in a private statute a clause is inserted, that it shall be taken notice of, as if it were a public act; this not only dispenses with the necessity of pleading it specially, but also changes the mode of proof, by dispensing with the production of an exemplified or sworn copy.³

Pub. St. c. 169, § 70. Under this statute, it is held that a document which is not authenticated by attestation of the officer having charge of the same, and which is not a copy but an original, but which has appended to it a certificate of the secretary of the Commonwealth that the signatures are genuine, is not sufficiently proved. There should be testimony as to the genuineness of the signatures. Com. v. Richardson, 142 Mass. 71.

(b) The edition of the Laws and Treaties of the United States, published by Little & Brown, is declared to be competent evidence of the several public and private acts of Congress, and of the several treaties therein contained, in all the courts of law and equity and of maritime jurisdiction, and in all the tribunals and public offices of the United States, and of the several States, without any further proof or authentication thereof. (c) The laws revised and adopted by the territorial legislature of Michigan, in 1827, were the statutes as arrangely.

(c) The laws revised and adopted by the territorial legislature of Michigan, in 1827, were the statutes as previously printed. It was held, that the printed book containing the statute is the best evidence of what the statute actually was, and that the original record is not to be received to show that the printed book is incorrect, or as evidence of the statute, as adopted and enacted at that time. Especially will this be so where the error is not discovered for a long time, and the statute is treated and considered as the actual law. Pease v. Peck, 18 How. (U. S.) 595. It is a much-mooted question, whether the courts will go behind the certificate of enactment of a statute, to inquire whether it was duly enacted. That they will not, see Speer v. Plank Road Co., 22 Pa. St. 376; People v. Devlin, 33 N. Y. 269; Auditor v. Browne, 30 Ind. 514, overruling Coleman v. Dobbins, 8 Ind. 156; Fouke v. Fleming, 13 Md. 392; Eld v. Tenant, 110 Pa. St. 484.

equally applicable to all other public records and documents; namely, that they constitute an exception to the general rule, which requires the production of the best evidence, and may be proved by examined copies. This exception is allowed, because of their nature, as original public documents, which are not removable at the call of individuals, and because, being interesting to many persons, they might be necessary, as evidence, in different places at the same time.2 Moreover, these being public records, they would be recognized as such by the court, upon being produced, without collateral evidence of their identity or genuineness; and it is a general rule, that, whenever the thing to be proved would require no collateral proof upon its production, it is provable by a copy. 3 These journals may also be proved by the copies printed by the government printer, by authority of the House.4

§ 483. Official registers. The next class of public writings to be considered consists of official registers, or books kept by persons in public office, in which they are required, whether by statute or by the nature of their office, to write down particular transactions, occurring in the course of their public duties, and under their personal observation. These documents, as well as all others of a public nature, are generally admissible in evidence, notwithstanding their authenticity is not confirmed by those usual and ordinary tests of truth, the obligation of an oath, and the power of cross-examining the persons, on whose authority the truth of the documents depends. The extraordinary degree of confidence, it has been remarked, which is reposed in such documents, is founded principally upon the circumstance, that they have been made by authorized and accredited agents appointed for the purpose; but partly also on the publicity of their subject-Where the particular facts are inquired into and recorded for the benefit of the public, those who are empowered to act in making such investigations and memorials are in fact the agents of all the individuals who compose the State; and every member of the community may be supposed to be privy to the investigation. On the ground, therefore, of the credit due to agents so empowered, and of the public nature of the facts themselves, such documents are entitled to an extraordinary degree

§ 484. Same subject. These books, therefore, are recognized by law, because they are required by law to be kept, because the entries in them are of public interest and notoriety, and because they are made under the sanction of an oath of office, or at least under that of official duty. They belong to a particular custody, from which they are not usually taken but by special authority, granted only in cases where inspection of the book itself is necessary, for the purpose of identifying the book, or the handwriting, or of determining some question arising upon the original entry, or of correcting an error which has been duly ascertained. Books of this public nature, being themselves evidence, when produced, their contents may be proved by an immediate copy duly verified. Of this description are parish registers; the books of the Bank of England, which contain the transfers of public stock;3 the transfer books of the East India Company; 4 the rolls of courts baron; the books which contain the official proceedings of corporations, and matters respecting their property, if the public at large is concerned with it; 6(a) books of assessment of public rates and taxes; 7 vestry books; 8 bishops' registers, and chapterhouse registers; 9 terriers; 10 the books of the post-office, and custom-house, and registers of other public offices; 11 prison reg-

Hadley, 133 Mass. 242, it was held that an attested copy of the town record of a marriage, which record is kept by law, and wives the residence of the parties is evigives the residence of the parties, is evidence of such residence; and the court says that in Massachusetts the rule that when a book of record is itself evidence, a certified copy has the same effect, is applied to all cases of record required by law to be kept by a public officer. Thus it has been held that a certified copy of a by-law of a town, signed by the town clerk, is proof of the by-law without any special identification of the signature of the clerk. Com. v. Chase, 6 Cush. 248. So, a copy of a mortgage or personal property certified by the recording officer, is evidence of the mortgage (Barnard v.

§ 485. Requisites of official character. It is deemed essential to the official character of these books, that the entries in them be made promptly, or at least without such long delay as to impair their credibility, and that they be made by the person whose duty it was to make them, and in the mode required by law, if any has been prescribed. When the books themselves are produced they are received as evidence, without further attestation. But they must be accompanied by proof that they come from the proper repository.2 Where the proof is by a copy, an examined copy, duly made and sworn to by any competent witness, is always admissible. Whether a copy certified by the officer having legal custody of the book or document, he not being specially appointed by law to furnish copies, is admissible, has been doubted; but though there are decisions against the admissibility, yet the weight of authority seems to have established the rule, that a copy given by a public officer, whose duty it is to keep the original, ought to be received in evidence. 3(a)

§ 486. Foreign laws. In regard to foreign laws, the established doctrine now is, that no court takes judicial notice of the laws of a foreign country, but they must be proved as facts. And the better opinion seems to be, that this proof must be made to the court, rather than to the jury. "For," observes Mr. Justice Story, "all matters of law are properly referable to the court, and the object of the proof of foreign laws is to enable the court to instruct the jury what, in point of law, is the result of the foreign law to be applied to the matters in controversy before them. The court are, therefore, to decide what is the proper evidence of the laws of a foreign country; and when evidence is given of those laws, the court are to judge of their applicability, when proved, to the case in hand." And the said records and exemplifications, authenticated as aloresaid, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court and office within the United States, as they have by law or usage in the courts or offices of the State from whence the same are or shall be taken. The earlier American authorities, opposed to the rule in the text, are in accordance with the English rule. 2 Phil. Evid. 130-134. (a) It is said in Kline v. Baker, 99 Mass. 254, that when the evidence consists of the parol testimony of experts as to the existence or prevailing construction of a statute, or as to any point of unwrit-ten law, the jury must determine what the foreign law is, as in the case of any controverted fact depending on like testimony. See ante, § 49. But the qualifications of the experts or other questions of the competency of witnesses or evidence must be passed upon by the court, and when the evidence admitted consists entirely of a written document, statute, or judicial opinwritten document, statute, or judicial opinion, the question of its construction and effect is for the court alone. 1 Church v. Hubbart, 2 Cranch, 237, 238. It is now settled in England, upon great consideration, that a foreign written law may be proved by parol evidence of a witness learned in the law of that country; without first attempting to obtain a copy of the law itself. Baron de Bode v. Reginam, 10 Jun. 217. In this case, a learned French advocate stated, on his cross-examination, that the feudal law, which had prevailed in Alsace, was abolished by a general decree of the National Assembly of France, on the 4th of August, 1789. Being asked whether he had read that decree in the books of the law, in the course of his study of the law, he replied that he had; and that it was start of the history of the law, which he leave the part of the history of the law, which he leave the part of the history of the law. part of the history of the law, which he learnt when studying the law. He was then asked as to the contents of that decree; and the admissibility of this question was the point in judgment. On this point, Lord Denman, C. J., said: "The objection to the question, in whatever mode put, is, that it asks the witness to give the contents of a written instrument, the decree of 1789, contrary to a general rule, that such evidence cannot be given without the production of the instrument, or accounting for it. In my opinion, however, that question is within another general rule, that the opinion of skilful and scientific persons is to be received on subjects with which they are conversant. I think that credit must be given to the opinion of legal men, who are bound to know the law of the country in which they practise, and that we must take from them the account of it, whether it be the unwritten law, which they may collect from practice, or the written laws, which they are also bound to know. I apprehend that the evidence sought for would not set forth generally the recollection of the witness of the contents of the instrument, but his opinion as to the effect of the particular law. The instrument itself might frequently mislead, and it might be necessary that the knowledge of the practitioner should be called in, to show that the sense in which the instrument would be naturally construed by a foreigner is not its true legal sense. It appears to me that the distinction between this decree and treaties, manorial customs, or acts of common council, is, that, with regard to them, there is no profession of men whose duty it is to make them their study, and that there is, therefore, no person to whom we could properly resort, as skilfully conversant with them. The cases which have been referred to excite much less doubt in my mind than that which I know to be entertained by one of my learned brothers, to whose opinion we are in the habit of paying more respect than to many of those cases which are most familiarly quoted in Westminster Hall." He then cited and commented on the cases of Boehtlinck v. Schneider, 3 Esp. 58; Clegg v. Levy, 3 Campb. 166; Millar v. Heinrick, 4 Campb. 155; Lacon v. Higgins, 3 Stark. 178; Gen. Picton's Case, 30 Howell St. Tr. 491; and Middleton v. Janverin, 2 Hagg. Cons. 437; and concluded as follows: "but I look to the importance of this question in a more extensive point of view. Books of authority must certainly be resorted to, upon questions of foreign law. Pothier, for instance, states the law of France, and he states it as arising out of an ordonnance made in such a year, and he gives his account of that ordonnance; and are we to say that that would not be taken as evidence of the law of France, because it is an account of the contents of a written document? Suppose a question to arise suddenly in one of our courts upon the state of the English law, could a statement in Blackstone's Commentaries, as to what the law is on the subject, and when it was altered to what it now is, be refused? And it seems to me that the circumstance of the question having reference to the period at which a statute passed, makes no difference. I attach the same credit to the witness giving his account of a branch of the French law, as I should to a book which he might accredit as a book of authority upon the law of France. I find no authority directly opposed to the admissibility of this evidence, except some expressions much

(a) In The Pawaschick, 2 Low. 142, it was said that the written law of England may be proved by printed copies, and be construed with the aid of text-books as well as of experts. In Barrows v. Downs, 9 R. I. 446, a witness was allowed to tes-

§ 488. Same subject. "In general, foreign laws are required to be verified by the sanction of an oath, unless they can be verified by some high authority, such as the law respects, not less than it respects the oath of an individual. (a) The usual mode of authenticating foreign laws (as it is of authenticating foreign judgments), is by an exemplification of a copy, under the great seal of a State; or by a copy proved to be a true copy, by a witness who has examined and compared it with the original; or by the certificate of an officer properly authorized by law to give the copy; which certificate must itself also be duly authenticated.² But foreign unwritten laws, customs, and usages may be proved, and indeed must ordinarily be proved, by parol evidence. The usual course is to make such proof by the testimony of competent witnesses, instructed in the laws, customs, and usages, under oath.3 Sometimes, however, certificates of persons in stronger than the cases warranted or required; and I find some decisions which go the whole length in favor of its admissibility; for I see no distinction between absolute proof by a direct copy of the law itself, and the evidence which is now tendered; and I think that the general principle to which I have referred establishes the admissibility of it." In regard to the effect of foreign laws, it is generally agreed that they are to govern everywhere, so far as may concern the validity and interpretation of all contracts made under or with respect to them; where the contract is not contrary to the laws or policy of the country in which the remedy is sought. An exception has been admitted in the case of foreign revenue laws; of which, it is said, the courts will not take notice, and which will not be allowed to invalidate a contract made for the express purpose of violating them. This exception has obtained place upon the supposed authority of Lord Hardwicke, in Boucher v. Lawson, Cas. temp. Hardw. 89, 194, and of Lord Mansfield, in Planchè v. Fletcher, 1 Doug. 252. But in the former of these cases, which was that of a shipment of gold in Portugal to be delivered in London, though the exportation of gold was forbidden by the laws of Portugal, the judgment was right on two grounds: first, because the foreign law was contrary to the policy and interest of England, where bullion was very much needed at that time; and, secondly, because the contract was to be performed in England; and the rule is, that the law of the place of performance is to govern. The latter of these cases was an action on a policy of insurance, on a voyage to Nantz, with liberty to touch at Ostend; the vessel being a Swedish bottom, and the vo

§ 489. Inter-State relations. The relations of the United States to each other, in regard to all matters not surrendered to the general government by the national constitution, are those of foreign States in close friendship, each being sovereign and independent. 1 Upon strict principles of evidence, therefore, the laws and public documents of one State can be proved in the courts of another only as other foreign laws. And, accordingly, in some of the States, such proof has been required. 2(a) But the courts of other States, and the Supreme Court of the United States, being of opinion that the connection, intercourse, and constitutional ties which bind together these several States require some relaxation of the strictness of this rule, have accordingly held that a printed volume, purporting on the face of it to contain the laws of a sister State, is admissible as prima facie evidence, to prove the statute laws of that State.³ The act of Congress respecting the exem-

therefore, may well stand on the ground of the admitted qualification of the general rule; and the brief general observations of those learned judges, if correctly reported, may be regarded as obiter dicta. But it should be remembered, that the language of the learned judges seems to import nothing more than that courts will not take notice of foreign revenue laws; and such seems to have been the view of Lord Denman, in the recent case of Spence v. Chodwick, 11 Jur. 874, where he said: "We are not bound to take notice of the revenue laws of a foreign country; but if we are informed of them, that is another case." And see 10 Q. B. 517. The exception alluded to was tacitly disapproved by Lord Kenyon, in Waymell v. Reed, 5 T. R. 599, and is explicitly condemned as not founded in legal or moral principle, by the best modern jurists. Wilt v. Cutler, 38 Mich. 189. Cf. Pacific Pneumatic Gas Co. v. Wheelock, 44 N. Y. Super. Ct. 566. In Massachusetts, the plification of public office books 4 is not understood to exclude any other modes of authentication which the courts may deem it proper to admit.⁵ And in regard to the laws of the States, Congress has provided, 6 under the power vested for that purpose by the constitution, that the acts of the legislatures of the several States shall be authenticated by having the seal of their respective States affixed thereto; but this method, as in the case of public books just mentioned, is not regarded as exclusive of any other which the States may respectively adopt. 7 (c) Under this statute it is held, that the seal of the State is a sufficient authentication, without the attestation of any officer or any other proof; and it will be presumed prima facie that the seal was affixed by the proper officer.8

§ 490. Relations of States to United States. The reciprocal relations between the national government and the several States, comprising the United States, are not foreign but domestic. Hence, the courts of the United States take judicial notice of all the public laws of the respective States whenever they are called upon to consider and apply them. And, in like manner, the courts of the several States take judicial notice of all public acts of Congress, including those which relate exclusively to the District of Columbia, without any formal proof. But private statutes must be proved in the ordinary mode.2

ments, when properly authenticated, admissible in evidence, their contents must be pertinent to the issue. It is also necessary that the document be made by the person whose duty it was to make it, and that the matter it contains be such as belonged to his province, or came within his official cognizance and observation. Documents having these requisites are, in general, admissible to prove, either prima facie or conclusively, the facts they recite. Thus, where certain public statutes recited that great outrages had been committed in a certain part of the country, and a public proclamation was issued, with similar recitals, and offering a reward for the discovery and conviction of the perpetrators, these were held admissible and sufficient evidence of the existence of those outrages, to support the averments to that effect in an information for a libel on the government in relation to them. 1 So. a recital of a state of war, in the preamble of a public statute, is good evidence of its existence, and it will be taken notice of without proof; and this, whether the nation be or be not a party to the war.² So, also, legislative resolutions are evidence of the public matters which they recite.³ The journals, also, of either House are the proper evidence of the action of that House upon all matters before it.4 The diplomatic correspondence communicated by the President to Congress, is sufficient evidence of the acts of foreign governments and functionaries therein recited. 5 A foreign declaration of war is sufficient proof of the day when the state of war commenced.6 Certified copies, under the hand and seal of the Secretary of State, of the letters of a public agent resident abroad, and of the official order of a foreign colonial governor concerning the sale and disposal of a cargo of merchandise, have been held admissible evidence of those transactions. How far diplomatic correspondence may go to establish the facts recited therein does not clearly appear; but it is agreed to be generally admissible in all cases, and to be sufficient evidence, whenever the facts recited come in collaterally, or by way of introductory § 492. Government gazette. The government gazette is admissible and sufficient evidence of such acts of the executive, or of the government, as are usually announced to the public through that channel, such as proclamations, 9 and the like. For, besides the motives of self-interest and official duty which bind the publisher to accuracy, it is to be remembered, that intentionally to publish anything as emanating from public authority, with knowledge that it did not so emanate, would be a misdemeanor. 10 But, in regard to other acts of public functionaries, having no relation to the affairs of government, the gazette is not admissible evidence. 11 (b)

§ 493. Official registers. In regard to official registers, we have already stated 1 the principles on which these books are entitled to credit; to which it is only necessary to add, that where the books possess all the requisites there mentioned, they are admissible as competent evidence of the facts they contain. But it is to be remembered that they are not, in general, evidence of any facts not required to be recorded in them,2 and which did not occur in the presence of the registering officer. Thus, a parish register is evidence only of the time of the marriage, and of its celebration de facto; for these are the only facts necessarily within the knowledge of the party making the entry.3 So, a register of baptism, taken by itself, is evidence only of that fact; though if the child were proved aliunde to have then been very young, it might afford presumptive evidence that it was born in the same parish.4 Neither is the mention of the child's age in the register of christenings proof of the day of his birth, to support a plea of infancy. 5(a) In all these and similar cases the register is no proof of the identity of the parties there named with the parties in controversy; but the fact of identity must be established by other evidence. 6 It is also necessary, in all these cases, that the register be one which the law requires should be kept, and that it be kept in the manner required by law. Thus, also, the registers kept at the navy office are admissible to prove the death of a sailor, and the time when it occurred, 8 as well as to show to what ship he belonged, and the amount of wages due to him. (b) The prison calendar is evidence to prove the date and fact of the commitment and discharge of a prisoner. 10 The books of assessment of public taxes are admissible to prove the assessment of the taxes upon the individuals, and for the property therein mentioned. 11 (c) The books of municipal corporations are

Waters, 4 C. & P. 375. It is said that a copy of a register of baptism, kept in the island of Guernsey, is not admissible; for which Huet v. Le Mesurier, 1 Cox, Eq. 275, is cited. But the report of that case is short and obscure; and, for aught appearing to the contrary, the register was rejected only as not competent to prove the age of the person. It is also said, on the authority of Leader v. Barry, 1 Esp. 353, that a copy of a register of a foreign chapel is not evidence to prove a marriage. But this point, also, is very briefly reported, in three lines; and it does not appear but that the ground of the rejection of the register was that it was not authorized or required to be kept by the laws of France, where the marriage was celebrated; namely, in the Swedish ambassador's chapel, in Paris. And such, probably enough, was the fact. Subsequently an examined copy of a register of marriages in Barbadoes, has been admitted. Cood v. Cood, 1 Curt. 755. (c) Com. v. Heffron, 102 Mass. 148. In Worcester v. Northborough, 140 Mass. 400, the issue being the settlement of a pauper widow of a soldier deceased, a book printed by the adjutant-general, under a resolve of the legislature, was admitted in evidence, on the issue of residence, it con-taining an entry of the deceased soldier's name as one of a regiment, with the addition "Residence or place credited to Northborough." The admissibility of this book as a public document is obvious. The entry therein was evidence of the residence of the soldier or of the place to which he evidence of the elections of their officers, and of other corporate acts there recorded. 12 (d) The books of private corporations are admissible for similar purposes between members of the corporation, for as between them the books are of the nature of public books. 13 And all the members of a company are chargeable with knowledge of the entries made on their books by their agent, in the course of his business, and with the true meaning of those entries, as understood by him. 14 But the books cannot, in general, be adduced by the corporation in support of its own claims against a stranger. 15

§ 494. Ship's register. The registry of a ship is not of the nature of the public or official registers now under consideration, the entry not being of any transaction of which the public officer who makes the entry is conusant. Nor is it a document required by the law of nations, as expressive of the ship's national character. The registry acts are considered as institutions purely local and municipal, for purposes of public policy. The register, therefore, is not of itself evidence of property, except so far as it is confirmed by some auxiliary circumstance, showing that it was made by the authority or assent of the person named in it, and who is sought to be charged as owner. Without such connecting proof, the register has been held not to be even prima facie evidence, to charge a person as owner; and even with such proof, it is not conclusive evidence of ownership; for an equitable title in one person may well consist with the documentary title at the custom-house in another. Where the question of ownership is merely incidental, the register alone has been deemed sufficient prima facie evidence. But in favor of the person claiming as owner it is no evidence at all, being nothing more than his own declaration.1

was credited, because it was one of the (d) Halleck v. Boylston, 117 Mass. facts which the resolve, under which the 469. book was printed, called for.

Thus, the act of Congress 2 provides, that if any seaman who has signed the shipping articles shall absent himself from the ship without leave, an entry of that fact shall be made in the log-book, and the seaman will be liable to be deemed guilty of descrtion. But of this fact the log-book, though an indispensable document, in making out the proof of descrtion, in order to incur a forfeiture of wages, is never conclusive, but only prima facie evidence, open to explanation, and to rebutting testimony. Indeed, it is in no sense per se evidence, except in the cases provided for by statute; and therefore it cannot be received in evidence, in favor of the persons concerned in making it, or others, except by force of a statute making it so; though it may be used against any persons to whom it may be brought home, as concerned either in writing or directing what should be contained therein. 3 (a)

§ 496. Requisites of official character. To entitle a book to the character of an official register, it is not necessary that it be required by an express statute to be kept; nor that the nature of the office should render the book indispensable. It is sufficient, that it be directed by the proper authority to be kept, and that it be kept according to such directions. Thus, a book kept by the secretary of bankrupts by order of the Lord Chancellor, was held admissible evidence of the allowance of a certificate of bankruptcy. 1 (b) Terriers seem to be admitted partly on the same principle; as well as upon the ground, that they are admissions by persons who stood in privity with the parties, between whom they are sought to be used.2

(a) On the same principle it has been held that a map of the towns and counties of a State, published by authority of the legislature of that State, is evidence of the boundaries of the towns within that State. There must be a sufficient evidence of the preliminary fact that the map is what it purports to be. Com. v. King, 150 Mass. 223. See also Worcester v. Northborough, 140 Mass. 397. So, if a material fact in the case is the location of a boundary line between two counties, a map made under authority of the State law and kept by the county authorities of one of the counties in question, being duly certified to by the Secretary of State, the authenticated document is admissible to show the location of the county line. Polhill v. Brown, 84 Ga. 342. There is great want of symmetry in the law, in regard to the admission of books of art and science to be read before the court and jury, in order to establish the laws or rules of a particular art or profession. Redf. on Wills, Part II. c. iv. § 15, pl. 17–19, pp. 146, 147. The rule seems well settled, that such books are not to be read before the jury eithers or to be read before the jury, either as evidence or argument. Com. v. Wilson, 1 Gray, 337; Washburn v. Cuddihy, 8 Gray, 430; Ashworth v. Kittredge, 12 Cush. 193. But courts often manifest the consciousness of the want of principle upon which the rule excluding such books rests, by quoting the very same books in banc which they were deciding were rightfully rejected at the trial, and thus declaring a rule of law, pertaining to the veterinary art or profession, or any other subject upon the authority of these same books, which, in the same breath, they declare to be so un-reliable as not to be evidence, either of the laws or the facts involved in the same identical point upon which the court decided solely upon the evidence of these same books. This goes upon the ground, that reading, or hearing read, such books will be entirely safe and proper while sitting in bane, but not equally so to the same judges while sitting with a jury to determine, among others, the very same questions then before the full court. This seems to give some countenance to the complaints of the learned author of the "Jurisprudence of Insanity," in his last edition, upon this point of the admissibility of medical books to prove the laws of the medical profession. CHAPTER V.

RECORDS AND JUDICIAL WRITINGS.

§ 499. Records and judicial writings. The next class of written evidence consists of Records and Judicial Writings. And here, also, as in the case of Public Documents, we shall consider, first, the mode of proving them; and, secondly, their admissibility and effect.

§ 500. Statutes. The case of statutes, which are records, has already been mentioned under the head of legislative acts, to which they seem more properly to belong, the term record being generally taken in the more restricted sense, with reference to judicial tribunals. It will only be observed, in this place, that, though the courts will take notice of all public statutes without proof, yet private statutes must be proved, like any other legislative documents; namely, by an exemplification under the great seal, or by an examined copy, or by a copy printed by authority.

§ 501. Proof of records. As to the proofs of records, this is done either by mere production of the records, without more, or by a copy. (a) Copies of records are, (1) exemplifications; (2) copies made by an authorized officer; (3) sworn copies. Exemplifications are either, first, under the great seal; or, secondly, under the seal of the particular court where the record remains. When a record is the gist of the issue, if it is not in the same court, it should be proved by an exemplification. By the course of the common law, where an exemplification under the great seal is requisite, the record may be removed into the Court of Chancery, by a certiorari, for that is the centre of all the courts, and there the great seal is kept. But in the United States, the great seal being usually if not always kept by the Secretary of State, a different course prevails; and an exemplified copy, under the seal of the court, is usually admitted, even upon an issue of nul

⁽α) Writing done with a pencil is not which must become public records. Meadmissible in public records, nor on papers serve v. Hicks, 24 N. H. 295. drawn to be used in legal proceedings, tiel record, as sufficient evidence.² When the record is not the gist of the issue, the last-mentioned kind of exemplification is always sufficient proof of the record at common law. 3(b)

§ 502. Same subject. The record itself is produced only when the cause is in the same court, whose record it is; or, when it is the subject of proceedings in a superior court. (d) And in the latter case, although it may by the common law be obtained through the Court of Chancery, yet a certiorari may also be issued from a superior court of common law, to an inferior tribunal, for the same purpose, whenever the tenor only of the record will suffice; for in such cases nothing is returned but the tenor, that is, a literal transcript of the record, under the scal of the court; and this is sufficient to countervail the plea of nul tiel record. 4 (e) Where the record is put in issue in a superior court of concurrent jurisdiction and authority, it is proved by an exemplification out of chancery, being obtained and brought thither by a certiorari issued out of chancery, and transmitted thence by mittimus. 5

§ 503. Same subject. In proving a record by a copy under seal, it is to be remembered, that the courts recognize without proof the seal of State, and the seals of the superior courts of justice, and of all courts established by public statutes. 6 And by parity

In some of the States, copies of record of the courts of the same State, attested by the clerk, have, either by immemorial usage, or by early statutes, been received as sufficient in all cases. ⁴ Woodcraft v. Kinaston, 2 Atk. 317, 318; 1 Tidd's Pr. 398; Butcher & Aldworth's Case, Cro. El. 821. Where a domestic record is put in issue by the plea, the question is tried by the court, notwithstanding it is a question of fact. And the judgment of a court of record of a sister State in the Union is considered, for this purpose, as a domestic judgment. Hall v. Williams, 6 Pick. 237; Carter v. Wilson, 1 Dev. & Bat. 362. But if it is a foreign record, the issue is tried by the jury. State v. Isham, 3 Hawks, 185; Adams v. Betz, 1 Watts, 425; Baldwin v. Hale, 17 Johns. 272. The reason is, that in the former case the judges can themselves have an inspection of the year record. But in the latter, it can only be proved by a copy, the veracity of which very record. But in the latter, it can only be proved by a copy, the veracity of which the fact, it can only be proved by a copy, the veracity of which is a mere fact, within the province of the jury. And see Collins v. Mathews, 5 East, 473. In New York, the question of fact, in every case, is now, by statute, referred to the jury. Trotter v. Mills, 6 Wend. 512; 2 Rev. Stat. 507, § 4 (3d ed.).

(c) In Com. v. Downing, 4 Gray, 29, 30, it is decided that a copy of a record of a justice of the peace need not bear a seal; the court saying, "it need not bear a seal, nor is it the practice to affix one."

(d) But the original record is compe-

would be admissible. Folsom v. Cressey, 73 Me. 270; State v. Bartlett, 47 ld. 396; Gray v. Davis, 27 Conn. 447; Britton v. State, 54 Ind. 535.

of reason it would seem that no extraneous proof ought to be required of the seal of any department of State, or public office established by law, and required or known to have a seal.2 And here it may be observed, that copies of records and judicial proceedings, under seal, are deemed of higher credit than sworn copies. as having passed under a more exact critical examination. 3 (a)

§ 504. Records of the courts of the several States. In regard to the several States composing the United States, it has already been seen, that though they are sovereign and independent, in all things not surrendered to the national government by the constitution, and, therefore, on general principles, are liable to be treated by each other in all other respects as foreign States, yet their mutual relations are rather those of domestic independence. than of foreign alienation.4 It is accordingly provided in the constitution, that "full faith and credit shall be given, in each State, to the public act, records, and judicial proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may, by general laws, prescribe the manner in which such acts, records, and proceedings shall be proved, and the effect thereof." 5 (b) Under this provision it has been enacted, that "the records and judicial proceedings of the courts of any State shall be proved or admitted, in any other court within the United States, by the attestation of the clerk and the seal of the court annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate, as the case may be, that the said attestation is in due form. And the said records and judicial proceedings, authenticated as aforesaid, shall have such faith and credit given to them, in every court within the United States, as they have by law or usage in orleans, &c. R. R. Co., 30 La. An. Pt. I. 28; Anderson v. Nagle, 12 W. Va. 98.

(b) And in a recent case in Pennsylvania, Otto v. Trump, 115 Pa. St. 430, the court says, "But let this be as it may, the Act of Congress of 1790 only prescribes a general mode of authentication of records; it does not exclude any other evidence which the courts of a particular

State may deem expedient: State of Ohio v. Hinchman, 3 Casey, 485. Other evidence, good according to established principles independent of the Act of Congress, may be admitted. Kean v. Rice, 12 S. & R. 203. As the Act of Congress has no negative words, even the records of a sister State may be established by any competent proof known to the common law. Baker v. the courts of the State from whence said records are or shall be taken." 6 By a subsequent act, these provisions are extended to the courts of all Territories subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.7

§ 505. Proof by attested copy not exclusive. It seems to be generally agreed, that this method of authentication, as in the case of public documents before mentioned, is not exclusive of any other which the States may think proper to adopt. 1 (a) It has also been held, that these acts of Congress do not extend to judgments in criminal cases, so as to render a witness incompetent in one State, who has been convicted of an infamous crime in another.² The judicial proceedings referred to in these acts are also generally understood to be the proceedings of courts of general jurisdiction, and not those which are merely of municipal authority; for it is required that the copy of the record shall be certified by the clerk of the court, and that there shall also be a certificate of the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate, that the attestation of the clerk is in due form. This, it is said, is founded on the supposition that the court, whose proceedings are to be thus authenticated, is so constituted as to admit of such officers; the law having wisely left the records of magistrates, who may be vested with limited judicial authority, varying in its objects and extent in every State, to be governed by the laws of the State into which they may be introduced for the purpose of being carried into effect.³ Accordingly it has been held, that the judgments of justices of the peace are not within the meaning of these constitutional and statutory provisions. 4 (b) But the proceedings of courts of chancery, and of probate, as well as of the courts of common law, may be proved in the manner directed by the statute. 5 (d)

§ 506. Mode of attestation. Under these provisions it has been held, that the attestation of the copy must be according to the form used in the State from which the record comes; and that it must be certified to be so, by the presiding judge of the same court, the certificate of the clerk to that effect being insufficient. (a) Nor will it suffice for the judge simply to certify that the person who attests the copy is the clerk of the court, and that the signature is in his handwriting.2 The seal of the court must be annexed to the record with the certificate of the clerk, and not to the certificate of the judge.3 If the court, whose record is certified, has no seal, this fact should appear, either in the certificate of the clerk, or in that of the judge. 4 (b) And if the court itself is extinct, but its records and jurisdiction have been transferred by law to another court, it seems that the clerk and presiding judge of the latter tribunal are competent to make the requisite attestations. 5 (e) If the copy produced purports to be a record, and not a mere transcript of minutes from the docket, and the clerk certifies "that the foregoing is truly taken from the record of the proceedings" of the court, and this attestation is certified to be in due form of law, by the presiding judge, it will be presumed that the paper is a full copy of the entire record, and will be deemed sufficient.6 It has also been held, that it must appear from the judge's certificate, that at the time of certifying he is the presiding judge of that court: a certificate that he is "the judge that presided" at the time of the trial or, that he is "the senior judge of the courts of law" in the State, being deemed insufficient. 7 (d) The clerk also who certifies the record must be the clerk himself of the same court, or of its successor, as above mentioned; the certificate of his under-clerk, in his absence, or of the clerk of any other tribunal, office, or body, being held incompetent for this purpose. 8 (e)

§ 507. Office copies. An office copy of a record is a copy authenticated by an officer entrusted for that purpose; and it is admitted in evidence upon the credit of the officer without proof that it has been actually examined. The rule on this subject is, that an office copy, in the same court, and in the same cause, is equivalent to the record; but in another court, or in another cause in the same court, the copy must be proved.2 But the latter part of this rule is applied only to copies made out by an officer having no other authority to make them, than the mere order of the particular court, made for the convenience of suitors; for if it is made his duty by law to furnish copies, they are admitted in all courts under the same jurisdiction. And we have already seen, that in the United States an officer having the legal custody of public records is, ex officio, competent to certify copies of their contents.3 (a)

the original, or with what the officer of the court or any other person read as the contents of the record. It is not necessary for the persons examining to exchange papers, and read them alternately both ways. 1 But it should appear that the record, from which the copy was taken, was found in the proper place of deposit, or in the hands of the officer, in whose custody the records of the court are kept. And this cannot be shown by any light, reflected from the record itself, which may have been improperly placed where it was found. Nothing can be borrowed ex visceribus judicii, until the original is proved to have come from the proper court. 2 (a) And the record itself must have been finally completed before the copy is admissible in evidence. The minutes from which the judgment is made up, and even a judgment in paper, signed by the master, are not proper evidence of the record. 3(b)

§ 509. Lost records. If the record is lost, and is ancient, its existence and contents may sometimes be presumed; 4 but whether it be ancient or recent, after proof of the loss, its contents may be proved, like any other document, by any secondary evidence, where the case does not, from its nature, disclose the existence of other and better evidence. 5 (c)

(b) The clerk's docket is the record until the record is fully extended, and the same rules of presumed verity apply to it as to the record. Every entry is a statement of the act of the court, and must be presumed to be made by its direction, either by a particular order for that entry, or by a general order, as by a general order, as by a general order. or by a general order, or by a general and recognized usage and practice, which presupposes such an order. § 510. Verdicts. A verdict is sometimes admissible in evidence, to prove the finding of some matter of reputation, or custom, or particular right. But here, though it is the verdiet, and not the judgment, which is the material thing to be shown, vet the rule is, that, where the verdict was returned to a court having power to set it aside, the verdict is not admissible, without producing a copy of the judgment rendered upon it; for it may be that the judgment was arrested, or that a new trial was granted. But this rule does not hold in the case of a verdict upon an issue out of chancery, because it is not usual to enter up judgment in such cases. 6 Neither does it apply where the object of the evidence is merely to establish the fact that the verdict was given, without regard to the facts found by the jury, or to the subsequent proceedings in the cause. And where, after verdict in ejectment, the defendant paid the plaintiff's costs, and yielded up the possession to him, the proof of these facts, and of the verdict, has been held sufficient to satisfy the rule, without proof of a judgment.8

§ 511. Decrees in chancery. A decree in chancery may be proved by an exemplification, or by a sworn copy, or by a decretal order in paper, with proof of the bill and answer. 1 And if the bill and answer are recited in the order, that has been held sufficient, without other proof of them.² But though a former decree be recited in a subsequent decree, this recital is not proper evidence of the former.³ The general rule is, that, where a party intends to avail himself of a decree, as an adjudication upon the subject-matter, and not merely to prove collaterally that the decree was made, he must show the proceedings upon which the decree was founded.

"The whole record," says Chief Baron Comyns, "which concerns the matter in question, ought to be produced." 4 But where the decree is offered merely for proof of the res ipsa, namely, the fact of the decree, here, as in the case of verdicts, no proof of any other proceeding is required.⁵ The same rules apply to sentences in the admiralty and to judgments in courts baron, and other inferior courts.6

§ 512. Answers in chancery. The proof of an answer in chancery may, in civil cases, be made by an examined copy.7 Regularly, the answer cannot be given in evidence without proof of the bill also, if it can be had.8 But in general, proof of the decree is not necessary, if the answer is to be used merely as the party's admission under oath, or for the purpose of contradicting him as a witness, or to charge him upon an indictment for perjury. The absence of the bill, in such cases, goes only to the effect and value of the evidence, and not to its admissibility.9 In an indictment for perjury in an answer, it is considered necessary to produce the original answer, together with proof of the administration of the oath; but of this fact, as well as of the place where it was sworn, the certificate of the master, before whom it was sworn, his signature also being proved, is sufficient prima facie evidence. 10 The original must also be produced on a trial for forgery. In civil cases, it will be presumed that the answer was made upon oath. 11 But whether the answer be proved by production of the original, or by a copy, and in whatever case, some proof of the identity of the party will be requisite. This may be by proof of his handwriting; which was the reason of the order in chancery requiring all defendants to sign their answers; or it may be by any other competent evidence. 12

And as the proceedings in these courts are not usually made up in form, the minutes, or examined copies of them, will be admitted, if they are perfect. 1(a) If they are not entered in books, they may be proved by the officer of the court, or by any other competent person.2 In either case, resort will be had to the best evidence, to establish the tenor of the proceedings; and, therefore, where the course is to record them, which will be presumed until the contrary is shown, the record, or a copy, properly authenticated, is the only competent evidence.3 (b) The caption is a necessary part of the record; and

Wells v. Stevens, 2 Gray, 115, 118. See also Kendall v. Powers, 4 Met. 553. The law of the different States, as to what is competent evidence of judicial records within the same State, is a good deal relaxed from the requirements of the act of Congress or of the common law. It has been held that the records of an inferior court may be proved by production of the original, or by copy duly authenticated, or by production of the original papers. State v. Bartlett, 47 Me. 396. And the copy is sufficiently authenticated by the words, "a true copy," signed by the magistrate at the end of the copy. Com. v. Ford, 14 Gray, 399. § 514. Foreign judgments. The usual modes of authenticating foreign judgments are, either by an exemplification of a copy under the great seal of a State; or by a copy, proved to be a true copy by a witness who has compared it with the original; or by the certificate of an officer, properly authorized by law to give a copy, which certificate must itself also be duly authenticated. If the copy is certified under the hand of the judge of the court, his handwriting must be proved.² If the court has a seal, it ought to be affixed to the copy, and proved; even though it be worn so smooth, as to make no distinct impression.³ And if it is clearly proved that the court has no seal, it must be shown to possess some other requisites to entitle it to credit. 4 If the copy is merely certified by an officer of the court, without other proof, it is inadmissible. 5(a)

- § 515. Inquisitions. In cases of inquisitions post mortem and other private offices, the return cannot be read, without also reading the commission. But in cases of more general concern, the commission is of such public notoriety as not to require proof.6
- § 516. Depositions in chancery. With regard to the proof of depositions in chancery, the general rule is, that they cannot be read, without proof of the bill and answer, in order to show that there was a cause depending, as well as who were the parties, and what was the subject-matter in issue. If there were no cause depending, the depositions are but voluntary affidavits; and if there were one, still the depositions cannot be read, unless it be against the same parties, or those claiming in privity with them. 1 But ancient depositions, given when it was not usual to enroll the pleadings, may be read without antecedent proof.² They may also be read upon proof of the bill, but without proof of the answer, if the defendant is in contempt, or has had an opportunity of crossexamining, which he chose to forego.3 And no proof of the bill or answer is necessary, where the deposition is used against the deponent, as his own declaration or admission, or for the purpose of contradicting him as a witness.4 So, where an issue is directed out of chancery, and an order is made there, for the reading of the depositions upon the trial of the issue, the court of law will read them upon the order, without antecedent proof of the bill and answer, provided the witnesses themselves cannot be produced.⁵
- § 517. Depositions under commission. Depositions taken upon interrogatories, under a special commission, cannot be read without proof of the commission under which they were taken, together with the interrogatories, if they can be found. absence of the interrogatories, if it renders the answers obscure, may destroy their effect, but it does not prevent their being read.6 Both depositions and affidavits, taken in another domestic tribunal, may be proved by examined copies.7

of that jurisdiction, generally styled courts of probate, but in some States known by other designations, as orphans' courts, &c. There are two modes of proof, - namely, the common form, which is upon the oath of the executor alone, before the court having jurisdiction of the probate of wills, without citing the parties interested, and the more solemn form of law, per testes, upon due notice and hearing of all parties concerned. The former mode has, in the United States, fallen into general disuse. common law, the ecclesiastical courts have no jurisdiction of matters concerning the realty; and therefore the probate, as far as the realty is concerned, gives no validity to the will.2 But in most of the United States, the probate of the will has the same effect in the case of real estate as in that of the personalty; and where it has not, the effect will be stated hereafter. This being the case, the present general course is to deposit the original will in the registry of the Court of Probate, delivering to the executor a copy of the will, and an exemplification of the decree of allowance and probate. And in all cases where the Court of Probate has jurisdiction, its decree is the proper evidence of the probate of the will, and is proved in the same manner as the decrees and judgments of other courts.4 A court of common law will not take notice of a will, as a title to personal property, until it has been thus proved; 5 and where the will is required to be originally proved to the jury as documentary evidence of title, it is not permitted to be read unless it bears the seal of the Ecclesiastical Court, or some other mark of authentication. 6 (a)

of administration, therefore, is of the nature of an exemplification of this record, and as such is received without other proof. But where no formal record is drawn up, the book of acts, or the original minutes or memorial of the appointment, or a copy thereof duly authenticated, will be received as competent evidence.7

§ 520. Examinations in criminal cases. Examinations of prisoners in criminal cases are usually proved by the magistrate or clerk who wrote them down.8 But there must be antecedent proof of the identity of the prisoner and of the examination. If the prisoner has subscribed the examination with his name, proof of his handwriting is sufficient evidence that he has read it; but if he has merely made his mark, or has not signed it at all, the magistrate or clerk must identify the prisoner, and prove that the writing was duly read to him, and that he assented to it.9

§ 521. Writs. In regard to the proof of writs, the question whether this is to be made by production of the writ itself, or by a copy, depends on its having been returned or not. If it is only matter of inducement to the action, and has not been returned, it may be proved by producing it. But after the writ is returned it has become matter of record, and is to be proved by a copy from the record, this being the best evidence.1 If it cannot be found after diligent search, it may be proved by secondary evidence, as in other cases.2 The fact, however, of the issuing of the writ may sometimes be proved by the admission of the party against whom it is to be proved.3 And the precise time of suing it out may be shown by parol.4

next place to consider the admissibility and effect of records as instruments of evidence. The rules of law upon this subject are founded upon these evident principles or axioms, that it is for the interest of the community that a limit should be prescribed to litigation; and that the same cause of action ought not to be brought twice to a final determination. Justice requires that every cause be once fairly and impartially tried; but the public tranquillity demands that, having been once so tried, all litigation of that question, and between those parties, should be closed forever. It is also a most obvious principle of justice, that no man ought to be bound by proceedings to which he was a stranger; but the converse of this rule is equally true, that by proceedings to which he was not a stranger he may well be held bound.

§ 523. Parties. Under the term parties, in this connection, the law includes all who are directly interested in the subject-matter, and had a right to make defence, or to control the proceedings, and to appeal from the judgment. This right involves also the right to adduce testimony, and to cross-examine the witnesses adduced on the other side. Persons not having these rights are regarded as strangers to the cause. 1(a) But to give full effect to the principle by which parties are held bound by a judgment, all persons who are represented by the parties, and claim under them, or in privity with them, are equally concluded by the same proceedings. We have already seen that the term privity denotes mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property.² The ground, therefore, upon which persons standing in this relation to the litigating party are bound by the proceedings to which he was a party is, that they are identified with him in interest; and wherever this identity is found to exist, all are alike concluded. Hence, all privies, whether in estate, in blood, or in law, are estopped from litigating that which is conclusive upon him with whom they are in privity. 3(b) And if one covenants for the results or consequences of a suit between others, as if he covenants that a certain mortgage, assigned by him, shall produce a specified sum, he thereby connects himself in privity with the proceedings, and the record of the judgment in that suit will be conclusive evidence against him.4

§ 524. Both parties bound, or neither. But to prevent this rule from working injustice, it is held essential that its operation be mutual. Both the litigants must be alike concluded, or the proceedings cannot be set up as conclusive upon either. For if the adverse party was not also a party to the judgment offered in evidence, it may have been obtained upon his own testimony; in which case, to allow him to derive a benefit from it would be unjust. Another qualification of the rule is, that a party is not to be concluded by a judgment in a prior suit or prosecution, where, from the nature or course of the proceedings, he could not avail himself of the same means of defence, or of redress, which are open to him in the second suit.2

§ 525. Cases in rem excepted. An apparent exception to this rule, as to the identity of the parties, is allowed in the cases usually termed proceedings in rem, which include not only judgments of condemnation of property, as forfeited or as prize, in the Exchequer or Admiralty, but also the decisions of other courts directly upon the personal status or relations of the party, such as marriage, divorce, bastardy, settlement, and the like. These decisions are binding and conclusive, not only upon the parties actually litigating in the cause, but upon all others; partly upon the ground that, in most cases of this kind, and especially in questions upon property seized and proceeded against, every one who can possibly be affected by the decision has a right to appear and assert his own rights by becoming an actual party to the proceedings; and partly upon the more general ground of public policy and convenience, it being essential to the peace of society that questions of this kind should not be left doubtful, but that the domestic and social relations of every member of the community should be clearly defined and conclusively settled and at rest. (a)

§ 526. Judgments of a public nature excepted. A further exception is admitted in the case of verdicts and judgments upon subjects of a public nature, such as customs, and the like; in most all of which cases, evidence of reputation is admissible; and also in cases of judgments in rem, which may be again mentioned hereafter.²

§ 527. Collateral facts. A judgment, when used by way of inducement, or to establish a collateral fact, may be admitted, though the parties are not the same. Thus, the record of a conviction may be shown, in order to prove the legal infamy of a witness. So, it may be shown, in order to let in the proof of what

(a) The decree of a court of competent jurisdiction dismissing for want of proof a libel filed by a wife against her husband, after having left his house, for a divorce from bed and board for extreme eruelty, is not conclusive evidence of her having unjustifiably left his house, in an action by a third person against him for necessaries furnished the wife. Burlen v. Shannon, 3 Gray, 387, 389. In giving the opinion of the court in this case, Shaw, C. J., said: "We have no doubt that a decree upon a libel for divorce, directly determining the status of the parties, that is, whether two persons are or are not husband and wife; or, if they have been husband and wife; or, if they have been husband and wife, that such a decree divorcing them, either a vinculo or a mensa, would be conclusive of the fact in all courts and everywhere, that they are so divorced. If it were alleged that a marriage was absolutely void, as being within the degrees of consanguinity, a decree of this court, on a libel by one of the parties against the other, adjudging the marriage to be void, or valid, would be conclusive everywhere. So, under the Rev. Stat. 76, § 4, where one party alleges and the other denies the subsistence of a valid marriage between them, the adjudication of a competent tribunal would be conclusive. The legal, social relation and condition of the parties, as being husband and wife or otherwise, divorced or otherwise, is what we understand by the term status. To this extent the decree in question had its full effect, by which every party is bound. It did not establish, but it recognized and presupposed, the relation of husband and wife as previously subsisting; and as the final judgment was, that the grounds on which a divorce a mensa was claimed were not established in proof, and the libel was dismissed, which was a final judgment, no change in the status of the parties was effected, and they stood, after the judgment, in the relation in which they stood at the commencement of the suit, — that of husband and wife. Beyond this legal effect of a judgment in a case for divorce — that of determining the status of the parties — the law applies, as in other judicial proceedings; viz., that a judgment is not evidence in another suit, except in cases in which the same parties or their privies are litigating in regard to the same subject of controversy." Authenticated copies of decrees of certain courts in the Russian province of Lithuania, on a question of pedigree, of which they have jurisdiction, are conclusive evidence of the facts adjudicated against all the world. was sworn at the trial, or to justify proceedings in execution of the judgment. So, it may be used to show that the suit was determined; or in proper eases, to prove the amount which a principal has been compelled to pay for the default of his agent; or, the amount which a surety has been compelled to pay for the principal debtor; and, in general, to show the fact, that the judgment was actually rendered at such a time, and for such an amount. $^{3}(a)$

§ 527 a. Judgments as admissions. A record may also be admitted in evidence in favor of a stranger, against one of the parties, as containing a solemn admission, or judicial declaration by such party, in regard to a certain fact. But in that ease it is admitted not as a judgment conclusively establishing the fact, but as the deliberate declaration or admission of the party himself that the faet was so. It is therefore to be treated according to the principles governing admissions, to which class of evidence it properly belongs. Thus, where a carrier brought trover against a person to whom he had delivered the goods intrusted to him, and which were lost, the record in this suit was held admissible for the owner, in a subsequent action brought by him against the earrier, as amounting to a confession in a court of record, that he had the plaintiff's goods. 1 So, also, where the plaintiff, in an action of trespass quare clausum freqit, claimed title by disseisin, against a grantee of the heirs of the disseisee, it was held, that the count, in a writ of right sued by those heirs against him, might be given in evidence, as their declaration and admission that their ancestor died disseised, and that the present plaintiff was in possession.² So, where two had been sued as partners, and had suffered judgment by default, the record was held competent evidence of an admission of the partnership, in a subsequent action brought by a third person against them as partners.3 And on the same ground, in a libel by a wife for a divorce, because of the extreme cruelty of the husband, the record of his conviction of an assault and battery upon her, founded upon his plea of "guilty," was held good evidence against him, as a judicial ad-

§ 528. Ground of conclusiveness of judgments. The principle upon which judgments are held conclusive upon the parties requires that the rule should apply only to that which was directly in issue, and not to everything which was incidentally brought into controversy during the trial. We have seen that the evidence must correspond with the allegations, and be confined to the point in issue. It is only to the material allegations of one party that the other can be called to answer; it is only upon such that an issue can properly be formed; to such alone can testimony be regularly adduced; and upon such an issue only is judgment to be rendered. A record, therefore, is not held conclusive as to the truth of any allegations, which were not material nor traversable; but as to things material and traversable, it is conclusive and final. The general rule on this subject was laid down with admirable clearness, by Lord Chief Justice De Grey, in the Duchess of Kingston's case, and has been repeatedly confirmed and followed, without qualification. "From the variety of cases," said he, "relative to judgments being given in evidence in civil suits, these two deductions seem to follow as generally true: First, that the judgment of a court of concurrent jurisdiction, directly upon the point is, as a plea, a bar, or, as evidence, conclusive between the same parties, upon the same matter, directly in question in another court; secondly, that the judgment of a court of exclusive jurisdiction, directly upon the point, is, in like manner, conclusive upon the same matter, between the same parties, coming incidentally in question in another court, for a different purpose.2 But neither the judgment of a concurrent nor exclusive jurisdiction is evidence of any matter, which came collaterally in question, though within their jurisdiction; nor of any matter incidentally cognizable; nor of any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment." 3 (a)

§ 529. Judgment must be final. It is only where the point in issue has been determined, that the judgment is a bar. If the suit is discontinued, or the plaintiff becomes nonsuit, or for any other cause there has been no judgment of the court upon the matter

§ 530. And upon the merits. So, also, in order to constitute the former judgment a complete bar, it must appear to have been a decision upon the merits; and this will be sufficient, though the declaration were essentially defective, so that it would have been adjudged bad on demurrer. 1(c) But if the trial went off on a technical defect,2 or because the debt was not yet due,3 or because the court had not jurisdiction,4 or because of a temporary disability of the plaintiff to sue, or the like, the judgment will be no bar to a future action.

§ 531. Former recovery. It is well settled, that a former recovery may be shown in evidence, under the general issue, as well as pleaded in bar; and that when pleaded, it is conclusive upon the parties. 6 (a) But whether it is conclusive when given in evidence is a point which has been much doubted. It is agreed, that when there has been no opportunity to plead a matter of estoppel in bar, and it is offered in evidence, it is equally conclusive, as if it had been pleaded.7 And it is further laid down, that when the matter, to which the estoppel applies is alleged by one party, and the other, instead of pleading the estoppel, chooses to take issue on the fact, he waives the benefit of the estoppel, and leaves the jury at liberty to find according to the fact.3 This proposition is admitted, in its application to estoppels arising from an act of the party himself, in making a deed or the like; but it has been denied in its application to judgments recovered; for, it is said, the estoppel, in the former case, is allowed for the benefit of the other party, which he may waive; but the whole community have an interest in holding the parties conclusively bound by the results of their own litigation. And it has been well remarked, that it appears inconsistent, that the authority of a res judicata should govern the court, when the matter is referred to them by pleading, but that a jury should be at liberty altogether to disregard it, when the matter is referred to them in evidence; and, that the operation of so important a principle should be left to depend upon the technical forms of pleading in particular actions. 4 And notwithstanding there are many respectable opposing decisions, the weight of authority, at least in the United States, is believed to be in favor of the position, that where a former recovery is given in evidence, it is equally conclusive, in its effect, as if it were specially pleaded by the way of estoppel. 5 (b)

volved in the present controversy, it must, to be eonelusive, be pleaded strictly as an estoppel, and the record vouched in support of the plea must contain, upon its face, evidence that the particular fact was in issue, and was found by the triers. And if the record do not show this, and it becomes necessary to resort to oral evidence to show it, the matter cannot be pleaded as an estoppel, but it becomes a question for the jury; but, nevertheless, if it be proved to the satisfaction of the jury that the fact was determined in the former controversy between the same parties, it is equally conclusive, both upon the parties and the jury, as if it appeared of record. Perkins v. Walker, 19 Vt. 144, where the subject is very ably discussed by Bennett, J.

⁵ This point was briefly, but very forcibly, argued by Kennedy, J., in Marsh v. Pier, 4 Rawle, 288, 289, in the following terms: "The propriety of those decisions, which have admitted a judgment in a former suit to be given in evidence to the jury, on the trial of a second suit for the same cause between the same parties, or those claiming under them, but at the same time have held that the jury were not absolutely bound by such judgment, because it was not pleaded, may well be questioned. The maxim,

⁽b) Krekeler v. Ritter, 62 N. Y. 372. Cf. Thompson v. Roberts, 24 How. (N. Y.) Pr. 233. This question is carefully examined by Redfield, J., in a case in Vermont (Gray v. Pingry, 17 Vt 419), and the earlier cases reviewed. The form of pleading an estoppel is there considered, and that adopted in Shelley v. Wright, Willes, 9, approved. But it is there said, that when a former adjudication is relied upon, as having determined the entire controversy now in hand, it need never be pleaded as an estoppel, but is an equitable defence, and in many actions may be given in evidence under the general issue; and when required to be pleaded with greater strictness than any other plea in bar. But when the former trial is relied upon as settling some collateral matter of fact, in-

§ 532. Identity of issue. When a former judgment is shown by way of bar, whether by pleading, or in evidence, it is competent for the plaintiff to reply, that it did not relate to the same

'nemo debet bis vexari si constet curiæ quod sit pro una et eadem causa,' being considered, as doubtless it was, established for the protection and benefit of the party, he may therefore waive it; and unquestionably, so far as he is individually concerned, there can be no rational objection to his doing so. But then it ought to be recollected that the community has also an equal interest and concern in the matter, on account of its peace and quiet, which ought not to be disturbed at the will and pleasure of every individual, in order to gratify vindictive and litigious feelings. Hence it would seem to follow, that, wherever on the trial of a cause from the state of the pleadings in it, the record of a judgment rendered by a competent tribunal upon the merits in a former action for the same cause, between the same parties, or those claiming under them, is properly given in evidence to the jury, it ought to be considered conclusively binding on both court and jury, and to preclude all further inquiry in the cause; otherwise the rule or maxim, 'expedit reipublicæ ut sit finis litium,' which is as old as the law itself, and a part of it, will be exploded and entirely disregarded. But if it be part of our law, as seems to be admitted by all that it is, it appears to me, that the court and jury are clearly bound by it, and not at liberty to find against such former judgment. A contrary doctrine, as it seems to me, subjects the public peace and quiet to the will or neglect of individuals, and prefers the gratification of a litigious disposi-tion on the part of suitors, to the preservation of the public tranquillity and happiness. The result, among other things, would be, that the tribunals of the State would be bound to give their time and attention to the trial of new actions, for the same causes, tried once or oftener, in former actions between the same parties or privies, without any limitation, other than the will of the parties litigant, to the great delay and injury, if not exclusion occasionally, of other causes, which never have passed in rem judicatam. The effect of a judgment of a court, having jurisdiction over the subject-matter of controversy between the parties, even as an estoppel, is very different from an estoppel arising from the act of the party himself, in making a deed of indenture, &c., which may, or may not, be enforced at the election of the other party; because, whatever the parties have done by compact, they may undo by the same means. But a judgment of a proper court, being the sentence or conclusion of the law, upon the facts contained within the record, puts an end to all further litigation on account of the same matter, and becomes the law of the case, which cannot be changed or altered, even by the consent of the parties, and is not only binding upon them, but upon the courts and juries, ever afterwards, as long as it shall remain in force and unreversed." A similar view, with the like distinction, was taken by Huston, J., in Kilheffer v. Herr, 17 S. & R. 325, 326. See also to the point, that the evidence is conclusive, Shafer v. Stonebraker, 4 G. & J. 345; Cist v. Zeigler, 16 S. & R. 282; Betts v. Starr, 5 Conn. 550, 553; Preston v. Harvey, 2 H. & Mun. 55; Estill v. Taul, 2 Yerg. 467, 471; King v. Chase, 15 N. H. 9. In New York, as remarked by Savage, C. J., in Wood v. Jackson, 8 Wend. 24, 25, the decisions have not been uniform, nor is it perfectly clear, where the weight of authority or of argument lies. But in the later case of Lawrence v. Hunt, 10 Wend. 83, 84, the learned judge, who delivered the opinion of the court, seemed inclined in favor of the conclusiveness of the evidence. See, to the same point, Hancock v. Welsh, 1 Stark. 347; Whately v. Menheim, 2 Esp. 608; Strutt v. Bovsame matter, and becomes the law of the case, which cannot be changed or altered, Hancock v. Welsh, 1 Stark. 347; Whately v. Menheim, 2 Esp. 608; Strutt v. Bovingdon, 5 Esp. 56-59; Rex v. St. Pancras, Peake's Cas. 220; Duchess of Kingston's Case, 20 Howell's St. Tr. 538; Bird v. Randall, 3 Burr. 1353. The contrary decision of Vooght v. Winch, 2 B. & Ald. 662, was cited, but without being approved, by Best, C. J., in Stafford v. Clark, 1 C. & P. 405, and was again discussed in the same case, 2 Bing. 377; but each of the learned judges expressly declined giving any opinion on the point. This case, however, is reconciled with other English cases, by Mr. Smith, on the ground that it means no more than this, that where the party might plead the record by estoppel, but does not, he waives its conclusive character. See 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 434, 444, 445. The learned author, in the note here referred to, has reviewed the doctrine of estoppels in a masterly manner. The judgment of a court-martial, when offered in evidence in support of a justification of imprisonment, by reason of military disobedience and misconduct, is not regarded as conclusive; for the special reasons stated by Lord Mansfield in Wall v. McNamara, 1 T. R. 536. See acc. Hannaford v. Hunn, 2 C. & P. 148.

property or transaction in controversy in the action, to which it is set up in bar; and the question of identity, thus raised, is to be determined by the jury, upon the evidence adduced.1 And though the declaration in the former suit may be broad enough to include the subject-matter of the second action, yet if, upon the whole record, it remains doubtful whether the same subject-matter were actually passed upon, it seems that parol evidence may be received to show the truth. 2 (a) So, also, if the pleadings pre-

J., in delivering the opinion of the court in this case, said: "One valid judgment by a court of competent jurisdiction, between the same parties, upon considerations as well of justice as of public policy, is held to be conclusive, except where a review, an appeal, or rehearing in some form, is allowed and regulated by law. No man is to be twice vexed with the same controversy. 'Interest reipublicæ ut finis sit litium.'

"To ascertain whether a past judgment is a bar to another suit, we are to consider, first, whether the subject-matter of legal controversy which is proposed to be brought before any court for adjudication, has been drawn in question, and within the issue of a former judicial pro-ceeding which has terminated in a regular judgment on the merits, so that the whole question may have been determined by that adjudication; secondly, whether the former litigation was between the same parties, in the same right of capacity litigating in the subsequent suit, or their privies respectively, claiming through or under them, and bound and estopped by that which would bind and estop those parties; and, thirdly, whether the former adjudication was had before a court of competent jurisdiction to hear and decide on the whole matter of controversy, embraced in the subsequent suit.

"It is no objection that the former suit embraced more subjects of controversy, or more matter than the present; if the entire subject of the present controversy was embraced in it, it is sufficient, it is res judicata.

"Nor is it necessary that the parties should be in all respects the same. If by law a judgment could have been given in that suit for this plaintiff against this defendant, for the present cause of action, it has passed into judgment. Suppose trespass for assault and battery against five, and verdict and judgment for all the defendants; then a new suit for the same trespass, by the same plaintiff, against one of the defendants, the former judgment is a good bar. In actions of tort, the cause of action is several, as well as joint; and if, upon the evidence, one defendant was chargeable with the trespass, a verdict and judgment might have been rendered against him severally in the first suit, although the other defendants had a verdict.

"Nor is it essential that the two tribunals should have the same jurisdiction in other respects, provided the court was of competent jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the entire matter in controversy, in the subsequent suit. Whether it be a court of law or equity, of admiralty or of probate, if in the matter in controversy between the parties, with the same object in view, that of remedy between them, the court had jurisdiction to decide, it is a legal adjudication binding on these parties."

To render a former judgment between the same parties admissible in evidence in another action pending between them, it must appear that the fact sought to be proved by the record was actually passed upon by the jury in finding their verdict in the former suit. It is not necessary that it should have been directly and specifically put in issue by the pleadings; but it is sufficient if it is shown that the question which was tried in the former action between the same parties is again to be tried and settled, in the suit in which the former judgment is offered in evidence. And parol evidence is admissible to show that the same fact was submitted to, and passed upon by, the jury in the former action; because, in many cases, the record is so general in its character, that it could not be known, without the aid of such proof, what the precise matter of controversy was at the trial of the former action. Thus, where the fact sought to be established by the plaintiffs in a suit is the existence of a co-partnership between the defendants, under a certain name, a former judgment recovered by the same plaintiffs against the same defendants, as co-partners, under such name, on a note given at the same time with the one in suit, is admissible, although not conclusive, evidence of that fact. Dutton v. Woodman, 9 Cush. 255, 261; Eastman v. Cooper, 15 Pick. 276, 279, 285. But, in an action of replevin for a piano, a former judgment between the same parties, in an action of trespass quare clausum, in which the taking away of the same piano was alleged by way of aggravation, is not conclusive as to the ownership of the piano; as the question of the title to the piano was only indirectly involved. Gilbert v. Thompson, 9 Cush. 348, 350; Potter v. Baker, 19 N H.

in a writ of right, a plea in bar that the same title had been the sole subject of litigation in a former action of trespass quare clausum fregit, or in a former writ of entry, between the same parties, or others privy in estate, was held to be a bad plea. Whether the judgment in an action of trespass, upon the issue of liberum tenementum, is admissible in a subsequent action of ejectment between the same parties, is not perfectly clear; but the weight of American authority is in favor of admitting the evidence. 7(d)

A sued out a writ of entry to foreclose a mortgage given by B to secure the payment of five promissory notes. B defended, pleading the general issue, and defended, pleading the general issue, and specifying certain grounds of defence. A trial was had, and a verdict found for A, upon which conditional judgment was subsequently rendered for him; and the amount thereof not being paid, A took possession of the mortgaged premises. Pending the foregoing proceedings, A brought an action against B on one of the five promissory notes, and B put in his answer, defending on the same grounds as answer, defending on the same grounds as he had defended the action on the mortgage. The suit on the note came to trial after judgment was entered in the former action; and it was held, that B was estopped by said judgment from again availing himself of the grounds of defence upon which he had before insisted. Burke v. Miller, 4 Gray, 114, 116. See also Sargent v. Fitzpatrick, Id. 511, 514. A contracted with B to forward and deliver certain goods belonging to A. B entrusted them to a carrier, who failed to deliver them. A brought trover against the carrier; and the carrier obtained in this action a judgment on the merits against A. B also sued the carrier for the non-delivery of the goods, and it was held that the judgment in the suit brought by A was a bar to the suit by B. Greene v. Clarke, 2 Kernan (N. Y.), 343. To an action by A against

B on a promissory note given by B to A in payment for goods, B pleaded want of consideration by reason of false representations of A concerning the value of such goods. A recovered judgment for part only of the note. It was held that this was a bar to a subsequent action brought by B against A to recover damages for such false representations. Burnett v. Smith, 4 Gray, 50. In replevin by a tenant against his landlord, who had distrained for rent in arrear, it was held that a verdiet in summary proceedings instituted by the landlord, to remove the tenant for default in the payment of vent, that no rent was due, was conclusive on that point, — the same rent being in question in both proceedings. White v. Coatsworth, 2 Selden (N. Y.), 137. An action brought for a part of an entire and indivisible demand, and a recovery therein, will bar a subsequent suit for the residue of the same demand. Where it appears at a trial in this State (New York), that, in a former suit between the same parties in a sister State, the causes of action here specially declared on, and all growing out of the same subject-matter, could have been proved in that suit, and that the same proof offered here was, in the former suit, properly introduced and considered on the nerits, and judgment rendered for the defendant, such judgment is a bar to the second suit. § 533. Former recovery in actions of tort. The effect of former recovery has been very much discussed, in the eases where different actions in tort have successively been brought, in regard to the same chattel; as, for example, an action of trover, brought after a judgment in trespass. Here, if title to the property was set up by the defendant in the first action, and it was found for him, it is clearly a bar to a second action for the same chattel; 1 even though brought against one not a party to the former suit, but an accomplice in the original taking.2 So, a judgment for the defendant in trover, upon trial of the merits, is a bar to an action for money had and received, for the money arising from the sale of the same goods.3 But, whether the plaintiff, having recovered judgment in trespass, without satisfaction, is thereby barred from afterwards maintaining trover against another person for the same goods, is a point upon which there has been great diversity of opinion. On the one hand, it is said that, by the recovery of judgment in trespass for the full value, the title to the property is vested in the defendant, the judgment being a security for the price; and that the plaintiff cannot take it again, and therefore cannot recover the value of another.4 On the other hand, it is argued, that the rule of transit in rem judicatam extends no farther than to bar another action for the same cause against the same party; 5 that, on principle, the original judgment can imply nothing more than a promise by the defendant to pay the amount, and an agreement by the plaintiff that, upon payment of the money by the defendant, the chattel shall be his own; and that it is contrary to justice and the analogies of the law, to deprive a man of his property without satisfaction, unless by his express consent. "Solutio pretii emptionis loco habetur." The weight of authority seems in favor of the latter opinion.6

§ 534. Judgment conclusive, if point at issue was necessarily included. It is not necessary, to the conclusiveness of the former judgment, that issue should have been taken upon the precise point which is controverted in the second trial; it is sufficient, if that point was essential to the finding of the former verdict. Thus, where the parish of Islington was indicted and convicted for not repairing a certain highway, and afterwards the parish of St. Paneras was indicted for not repairing the same highway, on the ground that the line dividing the two parishes ran along the middle of the road; it was held, that the former record was admissible and conclusive evidence for the defendants in the latter case, to show that the road was wholly in Islington; for the jury must have found that it was so, in order to find a verdict against the defendants.7

§ 535. Who are parties. We have already observed, in general, that parties in the larger legal sense, are all persons having a right to control the proceedings, to make defence, to adduce and crossexamine witnesses, and to appeal from the decision, if any appeal lies. Upon this ground, the lessor of the plaintiff in ejectment, and the tenant, are the real parties to the suit, and are concluded in any future action in their own names, by the judgment in that suit.8 So, if there be a trial between B.'s lessee and E., who recovers judgment; and afterwards another trial of title to the same lands, between E.'s lessee and B., the former verdict and per Wilde, J.; Claxton v. Swift, 2 Show. 441, 494; Jones v. McNeil, 2 Bail. 466; Cooper v. Shepherd, 2 M. G. & S. 266. The just deduction from all the authorities, as well as the right conclusion upon principle, seems to be this, — that the judgment in trespass or trover will not transfer the title of the goods to the defendant, although it is pleadable in bar of any action afterwards brought by the same plaintiff, or those in prigity with him against the same defaulant or those in prigity with him. it is pleadable in bar of any action afterwards brought by the same plaintiff, or those in privity with him, against the same defendant, or those in privity with him. See 3 Am. Law Mag. pp. 49-57. And as to the original parties, it seems a just rule, applicable to all personal actions, that wherever two or more are liable jointly and not severally, a judgment against one, though without satisfaction, is a bar to another action against any of the others for the same cause; but it is not a bar to an action against a stranger. As far as an action in the form of tort can be said to be exclusively joint in its nature, this rule may govern it, but no farther. This doctrine, as applicable to joint contracts, has been recently discussed in England, in the case of King v. Hoare, 13 M. & W. 494, in which it was held that the judgment against one alone was a bar to a subsequent action against the other.

judgment will be admissible in evidence in favor of E.'s lessee against B.; for the real parties in both cases were B. and E.9

§ 536. Privies. The case of privies, which has already been mentioned, is governed by principles similar to those which have been stated in regard to admissions; 1 the general doctrine being this, that the person who represents another, and the person who is represented, have a legal identity; so that whatever binds the one, in relation to the subject of their common interest, binds the other also. Thus, a verdict and judgment for or against the ancestor bind the heir.2 So, if several successive remainders are limited in the same deed, a judgment for one remainder-man is evidence for the next in succession.3 But a judgment, to which a tenant for life was a party, is not evidence for or against the reversioner, unless he came into the suit upon aid prayer.4 So, an assignee is bound by a judgment against the assignor, prior to the assignment.⁵ There is the like privity between the ancestor and all claiming under him, not only as heir, but as tenant in dower, tenant by the curtesy, legatee, devisee, &c. 6 A judgment of ouster, in a quo warranto, against the incumbent of an office, is conclusive evidence against those who derive their title to office under him.7 Where one sued for diverting water from his works, and had judgment; and afterwards he and another sued the same defendants for a similar injury; the former judgment was held admissible in evidence for the plaintiffs, being prima facie evidence of their privity in estate with the plaintiff in the former action.8 The same rule applies to all grantees, they being in like manner bound by a judgment concerning the same land, recovered by or against their grantor, prior to the conveyance.9

§ 537. Judgments in criminal cases. Upon the foregoing principles, it is obvious that, as a general rule, a verdict and judgment in a criminal case, though admissible to establish the fact of the mere rendition of the judgment, cannot be given in evidence in a civil action, to establish the facts on which it was rendered. (a) If the defendant was convicted, it may have been upon the evidence of the very plaintiff in the civil action; and if he was acquitted, it may have been by collusion with the prosecutor. beside this, and upon more general grounds, there is no mutuality; the parties are not the same; neither are the rules of decision and the course of proceeding the same. The defendant could not avail himself, in the criminal trial, of any admissions of the plaintiff in the civil action; and, on the other hand, the jury in the civil action must decide upon the mere preponderance of evidence, whereas, in order to a criminal conviction, they must be satisfied of the party's guilt, beyond any reasonable doubt. same principles render a judgment in a civil action inadmissible evidence in a criminal prosecution.2

¹ Mead v. Boston, 3 Cush. 404.  2 1 Bull. N. P. 233; Rex v. Boston, 4 East, 572; Jones v. White, 1 Stra. 68, per Pratt, J. Some of the older authorities have laid much stress upon the question, whether the plaintiff in the civil action was or was not a witness on the indictment. Upon which Parke, B., in Blakemore v. Glamorganshire Canal Co., 2 C. M. & R. 139, remarked as follows: "The case being brought within the general rule, that a verdict on the matter in issue is evidence for and against parties and privies, no exception can be allowed in the particular action, on the ground that a circumstance occurs in it, which forms one of the reasons why verilicts between different parties are held to be inadmissible, any more than the absence of all such circumstances, in a particular case, would be allowed to form an exception to the general rule, that verdicts between other would be anowed to form an exception to the general rule, that vehicles between other parties cannot be received. It is much wiser, and more convenient for the administration of justice, to abide as much as possible by general rules." A record of judgment in a criminal case, upon a plea of "guilty" is admissible in a civil action against the party, as a solemn judicial confession of the fact; and, according to some authorities, it is conclusive. But its conclusiveness has since been doubted; for the plea may thes, it is conclusive. But its conclusiveness has since been doubted; for the plea may have been made to avoid expense. See Phil. & Am. on Evid. 523, n. (4); 2 Phil. Evid. 25; Bradley v. Bradley, 2 Fairf. 367; Reg. v. Moreau, 12 Jur. 626; 11 Q. B. 1028; Clark v. Irvin, 9 Ham. 131. But the plea of nolo contendere is an admission for that trial only, and is not admissible in a subsequent action. Com. v. Horton, 9 Pick. 206; Guild v. Lee, 3 Law Reporter, p. 433; supra, §§ 179, 216. In Reg. v. Moreau, which was an indictment for perjury in an affidavit in which the defendant had sworn that the prosecutor was indebted to him in £40, and the civil suit being submitted to arbitration, the arbitrator awarded that nothing was due, the award was offered in avidage. tration, the arbitrator awarded that nothing was due, the award was offered in evidence against the prisoner, as proof of the falsity of his affidavit; but the court held it as merely the declaration of the arbitrator's opinion, and therefore not admissible in a criminal proceeding.
- (a) But a judgment is admissible and conclusive evidence in another criminal case against the same defendant, as to any facts decided in the judgment. Com. v. Evans, 101 Mass. 25. Cf. Dennis's Case, 110 Id. 18. The record of the conviction of a thief, on his plea of "guilty" to an indictment against him alone for stealing certain property, is not admissible in evidence to prove the theft, on the trial of a receiver of that property, upon an indictment against him alone, which indictment does not aver that the thief has been convicted. Com. v. Elisha, 3 Gray (Mass.),

§ 538. Judgments as facts. But, as we have before remarked.5 the verdict and judgment in any case are always admissible to prove the fact, that the judgment was rendered, or the verdict given; for there is a material difference between proving the existence of the record and its tenor, and using the record as the medium of proof of the matters of fact recited in it. In the former case, the record can never be considered as res inter alios acta; the judgment being a public transaction, rendered by public authority, and being presumed to be faithfully recorded. It is therefore the only proper legal evidence of itself, and is conclusive evidence of the fact of the rendition of the judgment, and of all the legal consequences resulting from that fact, whoever may be the parties to the suit in which it is offered in evidence. Thus, if one indicted for an assault and battery has been acquitted, and sues the prosecutor for malicious prosecution, the record of acquittal is evidence for the plaintiff, to establish that fact, notwithstanding the parties are not the same. But if he were convicted of the offence, and then is sued in trespass for the assault, the record in the former case would not be evidence to establish the fact of the assault; for, as to the matters involved in the issue, it is res inter alios acta. (a)

§ 539. Same subject. The distinction between the admissibility of a judgment as a fact, and as evidence of ulterior facts, may be further illustrated by the instances in which it has been recog-Thus, a judgment against the sheriff for the misconduct of his deputy is evidence against the latter of the fact, that the sheriff has been compelled to pay the amount awarded, and for the cause alleged; but it is not evidence of the fact upon which it was founded, namely, the misconduct of the deputy, unless he was notified of the suit and required to defend it. So it is in other cases, where the officer or party has a remedy over.2 So, where the record is matter of inducement, or necessarily introductory to other evidence; as, in an action against the sheriff for neglect, in regard to an execution; 3 or to show the testimony of a witness upon a former trial; 4 or where the judgment constitutes one of the muniments of the party's title to an estate, as where a deed was made under a decree in chancery, or a sale was made by a sheriff, upon an execution. 6 So, where a party has concurrent remedies against several, and has obtained satisfaction upon a judgment against one, it is evidence for the others. 7 So, if one be sued alone, upon a joint note by two, it has been held, that the judgment against him may be shown by the defendants, in bar of a second suit against both, for the same cause, to prove that, as to the former defendant, the note is extinct. 8 So a judgment inter alios is admissible, to show the character in which the possessor holds his lands.9

 $\S 539 \ a$. Judgment against joint and several contractors. where the contract is several as well as joint, it seems that the judgment in an action against one is no bar to a subsequent action against all; nor is the judgment against all, jointly, a bar to a subsequent action against one alone. For when a party enters into a joint and several obligation, he in effect agrees that he will be liable to a joint action, and to a several action for the debt. In either case, therefore, the bar of a former judgment would not seem to apply; for, in a legal sense, it was not a judgment between the same parties, nor upon the same contract. The contract, it is said, does not merely give the obligee an election of the one remedy or the other, but entitles him at once to both, though he can have but one satisfaction.¹⁰

§ 540. Foreign judgments. In regard to foreign judgments, they are usually considered in two general aspects: first, as to judgments in rem; and, secondly, as to judgments in personam. The latter are again considered under several heads: first, where the judgment is set up by way of defence to a suit in a foreign tribunal; secondly, where it is sought to be enforced in a foreign tribunal against the original defendant, or his property; and, thirdly, where the judgment is either between subjects or between foreigners, or between foreigners and subjects. 11 But, in order to found a proper ground of recognition of a foreign judgment, under whichsoever of these aspects it may come to be considered, it is indispensable to establish, that the court which pronounced it had a lawful jurisdiction over the cause, over the thing, and over the parties. If the jurisdiction fails as to either, it is treated as a mere nullity, having no obligation, and entitled to no respect beyond the domestic tribunals. 12 (a)

§ 541. Foreign judgments in rem. As to foreign judgments in rem, if the matter in controversy is land, or other immovable property, the judgment pronounced in the forum rei sitæ is held to be of universal obligation, as to all the matters of right and title which it professes to decide in relation thereto. 1 "The same principle," observes Mr. Justice Story, 2 "is applied to all other cases of proceedings in rem, where the subject is movable property, within the jurisdiction of the court pronouncing the judgment.3 Whatever the court settles as to the right or title, or whatever disposition it makes of the property by sale, revendication, transfer, or other act, will be held valid in every other country, where the same question comes directly or indirectly in judgment before any other foreign tribunal. This is very familiarly known in the cases of proceedings in rem in foreign courts of admiralty, whether they are causes of prize, or of bottomry, or of salvage, or of forfeiture, or of any of the like nature, over which such courts have a rightful jurisdiction, founded on the actual or constructive possession of the subject-matter.4 The same rule is applied to other or country, in their own tribunals. Graham v. Whitely, 2 Dutcher, 254; Goulding v. Clark, 34 N. H. 148. But where the question of jurisdiction is established, the same favorable presumption should be applied to all judgments. State v. Hinchman, 27 Pa. St. 479.

⁽a) Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 457; Guthrie v. Lowry, 84 Pa. St. 533. There seems to be no such presumption in favor of the jurisdiction of foreign courts, or of inferior domestic tribunals, according to the maxim "omnia præsu-muntur rite esse acta," as that which exists in favor of the superior courts, in a state courts proceeding in rem, such as the Court of Exchequer in England, and to other courts exercising a like jurisdiction in rem upon seizures.⁵ And in cases of this sort it is wholly immaterial whether the judgment be of acquittal or of condemnation. both eases it is equally conclusive. 6 But the doctrine, however, is always to be understood with this limitation, that the judgment has been obtained bona fide and without fraud; for if fraud has intervened, it will doubtless avoid the force and validity of the sentence. 7 So it must appear that there have been regular proceedings to found the judgment or decree; and that the parties in interest in rem have had notice, or an opportunity, to appear and defend their interests, either personally, or by their proper representatives, before it was pronounced; for the common justice of all nations requires that no condemnation shall be pronounced, before the party has an opportunity to be heard." 8

§ 542. Judgments in trustee process. Proceedings also by creditors against the personal property of their debtor, in the hands of third persons, or against debts due to him by such third persons (commonly called the process of foreign attachment, or garnishment, or trustee process), are treated as in some sense proceedings in rem, and are deemed entitled to the same consideration. 1 But in this last class of cases we are especially to bear in mind, that, to make any judgment effectual, the court must possess and exercise a rightful jurisdiction over the res, and also over the person, at least so far as the res is concerned; otherwise it will be disregarded. And if the jurisdiction over the res be well founded, but not over the person, except as to the res, the judgment will not be either conclusive or binding upon the party in personam, although it may be in rem.2

§ 543. Judgments in rem, how far conclusive. In all these cases the same principle prevails, that the judgment, acting in rem, shall be held conclusive upon the title and transfer and disposition of the property itself, in whatever place the same property may afterwards be found, and by whomsoever the latter may be questioned; and whether it be directly or incidentally brought in question. But it is not so universally settled, that the judgment is conclusive of all points which are incidentally disposed of by the judgment, or of the facts or allegations upon which it professes to be founded. In this respect, different rules are adopted by different States, both in Europe and in America. In England, such judgments are held conclusive, not only in rem, but also as to all the points and facts which they professedly or incidentally decide. In some of the American States the same doctrine prevails. While in other American States the judgments are held conclusive only in rem, and may be controverted as to all the incidental grounds and facts on which they profess to be founded.2

§ 544. Decrees affecting personal status. A similar doctrine has been contended for, and in many cases successfully, in favor of sentences which touch the general capacity of persons, and those which concern marriage and divorce. Foreign jurists strongly contend that the decree of a foreign court, declaring the state (status) of a person, and placing him, as an idiot, or a minor, or a prodigal, under guardianship, ought to be deemed of universal authority and obligation. So it doubtless would be deemed, in regard to all acts done within the jurisdiction of the sovereign whose tribunals pronounced the sentence. But in the United States the rights and powers of guardians are considered as strictly local; and no guardian is admitted to have any right to receive the profits or to assume the possession of the real estate, or to control the person of his ward, or to maintain any action for the personalty, out of the States, under whose authority he was appointed, without having received a due appointment from the proper authority of the State, within which the property is situ-

§ 545. Marriage. In regard to marriages, the general principle is, that between persons sui juris, marriage is to be decided by the law of the place where it is celebrated. If valid there, it is valid everywhere. It has a legal ubiquity of obligation. valid there, it is invalid everywhere. The most prominent, if not the only known, exceptions to this rule, are marriages involving polygamy and incest; those prohibited by the public law of a country from motives of policy; and those celebrated in foreign countries by subjects entitling themselves, under special circumstances, to the benefit of the laws of their own country. 1 As to sentences confirming marriages, some English jurists seem disposed to concur with those of Scotland and America, in giving to them the same conclusiveness, force, and effect. If it were not so, as Lord Hardwicke observed, the rights of mankind would be very precarious. But others, conceding that a judgment of a third country, on the validity of a marriage not within its territories, nor had between subjects of that country, would be entitled to credit and attention, deny that it would be universally binding.2 In the United States, however, as well as in Scotland, it is firmly held, that a sentence of divorce, obtained bona fide and without fraud, pronounced between parties actually domiciled in the country, whether natives or foreigners, by a competent tribunal, having jurisdiction over the case, is valid, and ought to be everywhere held a complete dissolution of the marriage, in whatever country it may have been originally celebrated.3

§ 546. Foreign judgments in personam. "In the next place, as to judgments in personam which are sought to be enforced by a suit in a foreign tribunal. There has certainly been no inconsiderable fluctuation of opinion in the English courts upon this subject. It is admitted on all sides, that, in such cases, the foreign judgments are prima facie evidence to sustain the action, and are to be deemed right until the contrary is established; 1 and, of course, they may be avoided, if they are founded in fraud, or are pronounced by a court not having any competent jurisdiction over the cause.2 But the question is, whether they are not deemed conclusive; or whether the defendant is at liberty to go at large into the original merits, to show that the judgment ought to have been different upon the merits, although obtained bona fide. If the latter course be the correct one, then a still more embarrassing consideration is, to what extent, and in what manner, the original merits can be properly inquired into."3 But though there remains no inconsiderable diversity of opinion among the learned judges of the different tribunals, yet the present inclination of the English courts seems to be, to sustain the conclusiveness of foreign judgments. 4 (a)

(a) The following observations upon this general subject are by Judge Red-

"We have lately had occasion carefully to review the law upon this subject, and we beg leave here to repeat what we then said. Story, Confl. Laws (Redf. ed.), §§ 618 a-618 k. There is no title connected with the general subject of the conflict of laws, more embarrassing than that which we are now considering. It has undergone considerable discussion since the lamented decease of our author. We have therefore felt compelled to state, as far as we could, the present state of the English law in regard to it.
"Whenever it becomes important to determine what is the law of a foreign country, the decisions of the highest judicial tribunals of that country are held conclusive in regard to it. This is partly upon the ground, that the question turns upon a fact, and that fact is the true state of the law of the country, which is but another name for the decisions of the highest legal tribunals of the country: so that in truth, the law and the decisions of these tribunals thus become identical.

This is illustrated in a recent case. Scott This is little that a feeder case. Scott v. Pilkington, 2 B. & S. 11; 8 Jur. N. s. 557. And a similar conclusion was arrived at in a later case. Crispin v. Doglioni, 9 Jur. N. s. 653. In the case of Scott v. Pilkington, it was determined, that, where the defendant, domiciled in England and having his place of Justiness England, and having his place of business there, gave a letter of credit to parties in New York, authorizing them to draw bills of exchange on his house in Liverpool, such letter being delivered to the defendant in New York, and intended to be exhibited to purchasers of such bills as authority for drawing the same, the claim of a drawer of such bills upon the defendant in the same of th dant for non-acceptance of the same was a contract subject to the law of New York, as to its validity, force, and construction, and not to be judged of by the law of England in any respect. And when in such case an action had been brought in the case an action had been brought in the courts of New York, and the defendant appearing by attorney, it had been ad-judged that, by the law of that State, the defendant was liable, and judgment had been rendered thereon against him, such judgment was conclusive as to the matter, § 547. Same subject. "The general doctrine maintained in the American courts, in relation to foreign judgments in personam,

although if the contract had been subject to the English law, and the New York court had mistaken it, the judgment would not have concluded an English court. The case of Crispin v. Doglioni involved the right of succession to personal estate in Portugal by one domiciled in that country, and the matter having been definitely settled by the decision of the highest judicial tribunal of that country, it was held conclusive everywhere.

"But it was said in Scott v. Pilkington, that where the foreign court, in giving judgment, and as one of the elements upon which the same was based, assumed or decided a question of English law, by which the cause of action was ruled, and, in doing so, mistook its true import, in such case the judgment of the foreign courts will be of no force or validity in an English court. Scott v. Pilkington, 2 B. & S. 11; S Jur. N. S. 557; Simpson v. Fogo, 9 Jur. N. S. 403. In the case of Simpson v. Fogo, the effect of foreign judgments is very extensively discussed, and the following propositions declared, which may be regarded as embracing the present recognized principles of English

"A judgment of a foreign court is conclusive, inter partes, where there is nothing on the face of the judgment which an English court can inquire into. But the courts of England may disregard such judgment, inter partes, if it appears on the record to be manifestly contrary to natural justice; or to be based on domestic legislation not recognized in England or other foreign countries; or is founded upon a misapprehension of what is the law of England; or if such judgment proceeds upon a distinct refusal to recognize the laws of the country under which the title to the subject-matter of the litigation arose. And a somewhat similar enunciation of the exceptions to the conclusiveness of foreign judgments is found in Bank of Australasia v. Nias, 16 Q. B. 717; 4 Eng. L. & Eq. 252.

"There are some cases where foreign decrees have been held to operate in rem, and thus to transfer an effectual and absolute title to property sold under an order or execution from the foreign courts; but where in other cases very similarly situated, it has been held that only the title of the judgment debtor passed under the sale. The true distinction in this class of cases seems to be, that where the court assumes to allow adverse claimants to interpose objections to the sale, and to determine the validity of such claims, and to pass a perfect title to the thing sold, it must be taken as a proceeding in rem, and as having effectually foreclosed all claim of title from any party who did in fact submit his claim to adjudication before the court, or who had his domicile at the time within the jurisdiction of the court, and who might therefore have been heard there, provided proper notice appears. Imrie v. Castrique, 8 C. B. N. s. 406; 7 Jur. N. s. 1076; Simpson v. Fogo, supra; Woodruff v. Taylor, 20 Vt. 65.

"And it will not exonerate the defendant in a foreign judgment, that he became a party to the proceedings merely to prevent his property being seized, and that the judgment is erroneous in fact and in law on the merits; whether the plea alleges, that the error does or does not appear upon the face of the judgment. Nor can the defendant plead, that the enforcement of the judgment in England is contrary to natural justice, on the ground that the defendant had discovered fresh evidence, showing that the judgment is erroneous in fact or in law upon the merits, or that evidence was improperly admitted. De Cossè Brissac v. Rathbone, 6 H. & Nor. 301.

6 H. & Nor. 301.

"But a plea in bar of a suit, that the same matter has been adjudged between the parties in a foreign court, must show that the judgment is final and conclusive between the parties, according to the law of the place where such judgment is pronounced. Frayes v. Worms, 10 C. B. N. s. 149. And the judgment of the foreign court may always be impeached by showing any facts whereby it is made to appear that the court had not jurisdiction by the laws of the country where rendered. But no facts can be shown, by way of defence to such judgment, which might have been urged in the foreign court. Vanquelin v. Bouard, 9 L. T.

court. Vanquelin v. Douard, N. s. 582.
"These cares, mostly of recent occurrence, have carried the doctrine of the conclusive force of foreign judgments considerably beyond the point maintained certainly is, that they are prima facie evidence; but that they are impeachable. But how far, and to what extent, this doctrine is held the contrary opinion, that it was conclusive; and also gave a very elaborate judgment upon the point, in which he reviewed the principal authorities. Of course, the learned judge meant to except, and did except in a later case (Price v. Dewburst, 8 Sim. 279, 302), judgments which were produced by fraud. See also Don v. Lippman, 5 Clark & Finn. 1, 20, 21; Story, Confl. Laws, §§ 545-550, 605; Alivon v. Furnival, 1 C. M. & R. 277, 284. "It is, indeed, very difficult," observes Mr. Justice Story, "to perceive what could be done, if a different doctrine were maintainable to the full extent of opening all the evidence and merits of the cause anew, on a suit upon the foreign judgment. Some of the witnesses may be since dead; some of the vouchers may be lost or destroyed. The merits of the case, as formerly before the court, upon the whole evidence, may have been decidedly in favor of the judgment; upon a partial possession of the original evidence, they may now appear otherwise. Suppose a case purely sounding in damages, such as an action for an assault, for slander, for conversion of property, for a malicious prosecution, or for a criminal conversation; is the defendant to be at liberty to retry the whole merits, and to make out, if he can, a new case, upon new evidence? Or, is the court to review the former decision, like a court of appeal upon the old evidence? In the case of covenant, or of debt, or of a breach of contract, are all the circumstances to be reexamined anew? If they are, by what laws and rules of evidence and principles of justice is the validity of the original judgment to be tried? Is the court to open the judgment, and to proceed ex equo et bono? Or is it to administer strict law, and stand to the doctrines of the local administration of justice? Is it to act upon the rules of evidence acknowledged in its own jurisprudence, or upon those of the loreign jurisprudence? These and many more questions might be put to show the intrinsic difficulties of the subject. Indeed, the rule, that the judgme

by the earlier cases, and even so late as within the last thirty years, when it was held, by the courts in Westminster Hall, that such judgments were merely prima facie evidence of debt, and did not operate as an absolute and conclusive merger of the cause of action. Story, Confl. of Laws, § 599; Smith v. Nicolls, 5 Bing. N. C. 208. But it was formally held, by the common consent of counsel, in the House of Lords, as early as 1845, that a judgment of the highest judicial tribunal of France, upon the same subject-matter, in favor of the present defendant, amounted to res judicata, and was therefore an effectual merger of the cause of action, 'the foreign tribunal having jurisdiction over the matter, and both the parties having cardo v. Garcias, 12 Cl. & Fin. 368. So that now it may be proved. that now it may be regarded as fully established in England, that the contract resulting from a foreign judgment is equally conclusive, in its force and operation, with that implied by any domestic judgment.
"But there is still a very essential and

"But there is still a very essential and important distinction between the two. Domestic judgments rest upon the conclusive force of the record, which is absolutely unimpeachable. Foreign judgments are mere matters en pais, to be proved the same as an arbitration and award, or an account stated; to be established, as matter of fact before the jury; and by consequence subject to any contradiction or impeachment which might be urged against any other matter resting upon oral proof. Hence any fraud which entered into the concoction of the judgment itself is proper to be adduced, as an answer to the same; but no fraud which occurred, and was known to the opposite party, before the rendition of such foreign judgment, and which might therefore have been brought to the notice of the foreign court, can be urged in defence of it.

"It is proper to add, that while the English courts thus recognize the general force and validity of foreign judgments, it has been done under such limitations and qualifications, that great latitude still remains for breaking the force of, and virtually disregarding, such foreign judgments as proceed upon an obvious misapprehension of the principles governing the case; or where they are produced by partiality or favoritism, or corruption, or where upon their face they appear to be at variance with the instinctive principles of universal justice. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 1575–1584, and cases cited; Boston India Rubber Factory v. Hoit, 14 Vt. 92. But these are the rare exceptions."

to be carried, does not seem to be definitely settled. It has been declared that the jurisdiction of the court, and its power over the parties and the things in controversy, may be inquired into; and that the judgment may be impeached for fraud. Beyond this, no definite lines have as yet been drawn."4

§ 548. Judgments of other States. We have already adverted to the provisions of the constitution and statutes of the United States, in regard to the admissibility and effect of the judgments of one State in the tribunals of another. 1 By these provisions, such judgments, authenticated as the statutes provide, are put upon the same footing as domestic judgments.2 "But this," observes Mr. Justice Story, "does not prevent an inquiry into the jurisdiction of the court, in which the original judgment was rendered, to pronounce the judgment, nor an inquiry into the right of the State to exercise authority over the parties, or the subject-matter, nor an inquiry whether the judgment is founded in, and impeachable for, a manifest fraud. The constitution did not mean to confer any new power upon the States; but simply to regulate the effect of their acknowledged jurisdiction over persons and things within their territory. It did not make the judgments of other States domestic judgments, to all intents and purposes; but only gave a general validity, faith, and credit to them as evidence.³ No execution can issue upon such judgments, for the plaintiff, would be a mere delusion, if the defendant might still question it, by opening all or any of the original merits on his side; for, under such circumstances, it would be equivalent to granting a new trial. It is easy to understand that the dewould be equivalent to granting a new trial. It is easy to understand that the defendant may be at liberty to impeach the original justice of the judgment, by showing that the court had no jurisdiction; or, that he never had any notice of the suit; or, that it was procured by fraud: or, that upon its face it is founded in mistake; or, that it is irregular, and bad by the local law, Fori rei judicatæ. To such an extent, the doctrine is intelligible and practicable. Beyond this, the right to impugn the judgment is in legal effect the right to retry the merits of the original cause at large, and to put the defendant upon proving those merits." See Story, Confl. Laws, § 607; Alivon v. Furnival, 1 C. M. & R. 277.

The American cases seem further to agree, that when a foreign judgment comes incidentally in question, as, where it is the foundation of a right or title derived under it, and the like, it is conclusive. If a foreign that when a foreign judgment comes incidentally in question, as, where it is the foundation of a right or title derived under it, and the like, it is conclusive. If a foreign judgment proceeds upon an error in law, apparent upon the face of it, it may be impeached everywhere; as, if a French court, professing to decide according to the law of England, clearly mistakes it. without a new suit in the tribunals of other States. And they enjoy not the right of priority, or privilege, or lien, which they have in the State where they are pronounced, but that only which the lex fori gives to them by its own laws, in the character of foreign judgments."4

§ 549. Foreign judgments at common law. The common law recognizes no distinction whatever, as to the effect of foreign judgments, whether they are between citizens, or between foreigners, or between citizens and foreigners; deeming them of equal obligation in all cases, whoever are the parties.1

§ 550. Decrees of ecclesiastical courts. In regard to the decrees and sentences of courts, exercising any branches of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction, the same general principles govern, which we have already stated.1 The principal branch of this jurisdiction, in existence in the United States, is that which relates to matters of probate and administration. And as to these, the inquiry, as in other cases, is, whether the matter was exclusively within the jurisdiction of the court, and whether a decree or judgment has been passed directly upon it. If the affirmative be true, the decree is conclusive. Where the decree is of the nature of proceedings in rem, as is generally the ease in matters of probate and administration, it is conclusive, like those proceedings, against all the world. But where it is a matter of exclusively private litigation, such as, in assignments of dower, and some other eases of jurisdiction conferred by particular statutes, the decree stands upon the footing of a judgment at common law.2 Thus, the probate of a will, at least as to the personalty, is conclusive in civil cases, in all questions upon its execution and validity. 3 (a) The grant of letters of administration is, in general, prima facie evidence of the intestate's death; for only upon evidence of that fact ought they to have been granted. 4(b) And if the grant of administration turned upon the question as to which of the parties was next of kin, the sentence or decree upon that question is conclusive everywhere, in a suit between the same parties for distribution.⁵ But the grant of administration upon a woman's estate determines nothing as to the fact whether she were a feme covert or not; for that is a collateral fact, to be collected merely by inference from the decree or grant of administration, and was not the point directly tried.6 Where a court of probate has power to grant letters of guardianship of a lunatic, the grant is conclusive of his insanity at that time, and of his liability, therefore, to be put under guardianship, against all persons subsequently dealing directly with the lunatic, instead of dealing, as they ought to do, with the guardian.7

§ 551. Decrees in chancery. Decrees in chancery stand upon the same principles with judgments at common law, which have already been stated. Whether the statements in the bill are to be taken conclusively against the complainant as admissions by him, has been doubted; but the prevailing opinion is supposed to be against their conclusiveness, on the ground that the facts therein stated are frequently the mere suggestions of counsel, made for the purpose of obtaining an answer, under oath. 1 If the

(b) A decree of the probate court, granting letters of administration, is not admissible in proof of the death of the intestate, as between strangers, nor even in an action brought by the person who has been appointed administrator, in his individual capacity, but it is admissible in an action by the administrator in his official capacity on a debt due the supposed de-ceased, as evidence that the plaintiff has a right to collect the debt; or in an action

De Bernales, 1 Russ. 301, the general practice was stated and not denied to be, to admit the letters of administration, as sufficient proof of the death, until impeached; but the Master of the Rolls, in that case, which was a foreign grant of administration, refused to receive them; but allowed the party to examine witnesses to the fact.

bill has been sworn to, without doubt the party would be held bound by its statements, so far as they are direct allegations of fact. The admissibility and effect of the answer of the defendant is governed by the same rules.2 But a demurrer in chancery does not admit the facts charged in the bill; for if it be overruled, the defendant may still answer. So it is, as to pleas in chancery; these, as well as demurrers, being merely hypothetical statements. that, supposing the facts to be as alleged, the defendant is not bound to answer.3 But pleadings, and depositions, and a decree, in a former suit, the same title being in issue, are admissible as showing the acts of parties, who had the same interest in it as the present party, against whom they are offered. 4 (a)

§ 552. Depositions. In regard to depositions, it is to be observed, that, though informally taken, yet as mere declarations of the witness, under his hand, they are admissible against him, wherever he is a party, like any other admissions; or, to contradiet and impeach him, when he is afterwards examined as a witness. But, as secondary evidence, or as a substitute for his testimony viva voce, it is essential that they be regularly taken, under legal proceedings duly pending, or in a case and manner provided by law. 1 (b) And though taken in a foreign State, yet if taken to be used in a suit pending here, the forms of our law, and not of the foreign law, must be pursued.2 But if the deposition was taken in perpetuam, the forms of the law under which it was taken must have been strictly pursued, or it cannot be read in evidence.³ If a bill in equity be dismissed merely as being in its substance unfit for a decree, the depositions, when offered as secondary evidence in another suit, will not on that account be rejected. But if it is dismissed for irregularity, as, if it come before the court by a bill of revivor, when it should have been by an original bill, so that in truth there was never regularly any such cause in the court, and consequently no proofs, the depositions cannot be read; for the proofs cannot be exemplified without bill and answer, and they cannot be read at law, unless the bill on which they were taken can be read.4

§ 553. Depositions. Cross-examination. We have seen, that in regard to the admissibility of a former judgment in evidence it is generally necessary that there be a perfect mutuality between the parties; neither being concluded, unless both are alike bound. 5 (a) But with respect to depositions, though this rule is admitted in its general principle, yet it is applied with more latitude of discretion; and complete mutuality, or identity of all the parties, is not required. It is generally deemed sufficient, if the matters in issue were the same in both cases, and the party, against whom the deposition is offered, had full power to crossexamine the witness. Thus, where a bill was pending in chancery, in favor of one plaintiff against several defendants, upon which the court ordered an issue of devisavit vel non, in which the defendants in chancery should be plaintiffs, and the plaintiff in chancery defendant; and the issue was found for the plaintiffs; after which the plaintiff in chancery brought an ejectment on his original evidence against him. Cockburn, C. ^{162;} Vaughan v. Fitzgerald, 1 Sch. & Lefr. 316.

⁽a) In the King's Bench, it was held by two of the judges, one dissenting, that where a party makes use of the depositions of witnesses in a suit with another party, in regard to the same subject-matter, that he, by thus making use of the deposition as true, knowing its contents, so far affirms its truth, that it may be used as

own demise, claiming as heir at law of the same testator, against one of those defendants alone, who claimed as devisee under the will formerly in controversy; it was held, that the testimony of one of the subscribing witnesses to the will, who was examined at the former trial, but had since died, might be proved by the defendant in the second action, notwithstanding the parties were not all the same; for the same matter was in controversy, in both cases, and the lessor of the plaintiff had precisely the same power of objecting to the competency of the witness, the same right of calling witnesses to discredit or contradict his testimony, and the same right of cross-examination, in the one case, as in the other.6 If the power of cross-examination was more limited in the former suit, in regard to the matters in controversy in the latter, it would seem that the testimony ought to be excluded.7 The same rule applies to privies, as well as to parties.

§ 554. In equity. But though the general rule, at law, is, that no evidence shall be admitted, but what is or might be under the examination of both parties; 1 yet it seems clear, that, in equity, a deposition is not, of course, inadmissible, in evidence because there has been no cross-examination, and no waiver of the right. For if the witness, after his examination on the direct interrogatories, should refuse to answer the cross-interrogatories, the party producing the witness will not be deprived of his direct testimony. for, upon application of the other party, the court would have compelled him to answer.² So, after a witness was examined for the plaintiff, but before he could be cross-examined, he died; the court ordered his deposition to stand; 3 though the want of the cross-examination ought to abate the force of his testimony.4 So, where the direct examination of an infirm witness was taken by the consent of parties, but no cross-interrogatories were ever filed. though the witness lived several months afterwards, and there was no proof that they might not have been answered, if they had

§ 555. Depositions relating to custom. Depositions, as well as verdicts, which relate to a custom, or prescription, or pedigree, where reputation would be evidence, are admissible against strangers; for as the declarations of persons deceased would be admissible in such cases, a fortiori their declarations on oath are so.8 But in all cases at law, where a deposition is offered as secondary evidence, that is, as a substitute for the testimony of the witness viva voce, it must appear that the witness cannot be personally produced; unless the case is provided for by statute, or by a rule of the court.9

§ 556. Inquisitions. The last subject of inquiry under this head is that of inquisitions. These are the results of inquiries, made under competent public authority, to ascertain matters of public interest and concern. It is said that they are analogous to proceedings in rem, being made on behalf of the public; and that therefore no one can strictly be said to be a stranger to them. But the principle of their admissibility in evidence, between private persons, seems to be, that they are matters of public and general interest, and therefore within some of the exceptions to the rule in regard to hearsay evidence, which we have heretofore Whether, therefore, the adjudication be founded on oath or not, the principle of its admissibility is the same. And, moreover, it is distinguished from other hearsay evidence, in having peculiar guaranties for its accuracy and fidelity.2 The general rule in regard to these documents is, that they are admissible in evidence, but that they are not conclusive except against the parties immediately concerned, and their privies. Thus, an inquest of office, by the attorney-general, for lands escheating to the government by reason of alienage, was held to be evidence of title, in all cases, but not conclusive against any person, who was not tenant at the time of the inquest, or party or privy thereto, and that such persons, therefore, might show that there were lawful heirs in esse, who were not aliens.3 So, it has been repeatedly held that inquisitions of lunacy may be read; but that they are not generally conclusive against persons not actually parties.4 But inquisitions, extrajudicially taken, are not admissible in evidence.5

CHAPTER VI.

OF PRIVATE WRITINGS.

§ 557. Private writings. The last class of written evidence which we propose to consider is that of private writings. And, in the discussion of this subject, it is not intended separately to mention every description of writings comprised in this class, but to state the principles which govern the proof, admissibility, and effect of them all. In general, all private writings produced in evidence must be proved to be genuine; but in what is now to be said, particular reference is had to solemn obligations and instruments, under the hand of the party, purporting to be evidence of title; such as deeds, bills, and notes. These must be produced, and the execution of them generally be proved, or their absence must be duly accounted for, and their loss supplied by secondary evidence.

§ 558. Proof of, when lost. And first, in regard to the PRODUCTION of such documents. If the instrument is lost, the party is required to give some evidence that such a paper once existed, though slight evidence is sufficient for this purpose, and that a bona fide and diligent search has been unsuccessfully made for it in the place where it was most likely to be found, if the nature of the case admits such proof; after which, his own affidavit is admissible to the fact of its loss. The same rule prevails where the instrument is destroyed. What degree of diligence in the search is necessary it is not easy to define, as each ease depends much on its peculiar circumstances; and the question, whether the loss of the instrument is sufficiently proved to admit secondary evidence of its contents, is to be determined by the court and not by the jury. 2(a) But it seems that, in general, the party is expected to show that he has in good faith exhausted, in a reasonable degree, all the sources of information and means of discovery which the nature of the case would naturally suggest, and which were accessible to him. 3 (b) It should be recollected, that the object of the proof is merely to establish a reasonable presumption of the loss of the instrument, and that this is a preliminary inquiry addressed to the discretion of the judge. If the paper was supposed to be of little value, or is ancient, a less degree of diligence will be demanded, as it will be aided by the presumption of loss which these circumstances afford. If it belonged to the custody of certain persons, or is proved or may be presumed to have been in their possession, they must, in general, be called and sworn to account for it, if they are within reach of the process of the court.4 And so, if it might or ought to have been de-

was held to be immaterial, and to rest in the discretion of the court. It is sufficient, if the party has done all that could reasonably be expected of him, under the circumstances of the case, in searching for the instrument. Kelsey v. Haumer, 18 Conn. 311. After the loss of a deed has been established, the secondary evidence of the contents or substance of the contents of its operative parts must be clear and direct, and its execution must be distinctly proved. And the declarations of the grantor are admissible, in corroboration of the other evidence. Metcalf v. Van Benthuysen, 3 Comst. 424; Mariner v. Saunders, 5 Gilm. 113.

While it is a general rule that the affidavit of the plaintiff must be produced where a paper is alleged to be lost, of which he must be presumed to have the autody before custody, before secondary evidence of its contents can be admitted, yet the rule is not inflexible. Where the nominal party to the record is not the party actually seeking to recover, and the party interested has used due diligence to find the plaintiff and produces proof that he has absconded posited in a public office, or other particular place, that place must be searched. If the search was made by a third person, he must be called to testify respecting it. (c) And if the paper belongs to his custody, he must be served with a subpæna duces tecum to produce it.5 If it be an instrument which is the foundation of the action, and which, if found, the defendant may be compelled again to pay to a bona fide holder, the plaintiff must give sufficient proof of its destruction to satisfy the court and jury that the defendant cannot be liable to pay it a second time. 6 And if the instrument was executed in duplicate, or triplicate, or more parts, the loss of all the parts must be proved in order to let in secondary evidence of the contents.7 Satisfactory proof being thus made of the loss of the instrument, the party will be admitted to give secondary evidence of its contents.8 (d)

⁵ The duty of the witness to produce such a document is thus laid down by Shaw, C. J.: "There seems to be no difference in principle between compelling a witness to C. J.: "There seems to be no difference in principle between compelling a witness to produce a document in his possession, nnder a subpana duces tecum, in a case where the party calling the witness has a right to the use of such document, and compelling him to give testimony, when the facts lie in his own knowledge. It has been decided, though it was formerly doubted, that a subpana duces tecum is a writ of compulsory obligation, which the court has power to issue, and which the witness is bound to obey, and which will be enforced by proper process to compel the production of the paper, when the witness has no lawful or reasonable excuse for withholding it. Amey v. Long, 9 East, 473; Corsen v. Dubois, 1 Holt, N. P. 239. But of such lawful or reasonable excuse the court at Nisi Prius, and not the witness, is to judge. Where secondary evidence is resorted to, for proof of an instrument which is lost or destroyed, it must, in general, be proved to have been executed. Jackson v. Frier, 16 Johns. 196; Kimball v. Mortally Castle 1628. But if the secondary evidence is a copy of the instrument which appears to have been attested by a witness, it is not necessary to call this witness. Poole v. Warren, 3 Nev. & P. 693. See also ante, § 509. In case of the loss or destruction of the instrument,

(c) But in Smith v. Smith, 10 Ir. Rep. Eq. 274, it was held that a party might show that he made inquiries of certain persons who would be likely to have the document, and what their answers to the inquiries were, without calling them to testify. To the same effect is Reg. v. Inhabitants of Kenilworth, 7 Q. B. 642.

(d) A machine copy of a letter of the plaintiff to a third party was received as evidence of an admission on his part, although not admissible as a letter. Nathan v. Jacob, 1 F. & F. 452. Morris, 22 Ark. 415. So a copy sworn to be correctly made from a press copy is evidence of its contents, without producing the press copy. Goodrich v. Weston, 102 Mass. 362.

§ 559. Production, how secured. The production of private writings, in which another person has an interest, may be had either by a bill of discovery, in proper eases, or in trials at law by a writ of subpæna duces tecum, directed to the person who has them in his possession. The courts of common law may also make an order for the inspection of writings in the possession of one party to a suit in favor of the other. The extent of this power, and the nature of the order, whether it should be peremptory, or in the shape of a rule to enlarge the time to plead, unless the writing is produced, does not seem to be very clearly agreed; 2 and, in the United States, the courts have been unwilling to exercise the power except where it is given by statute. (a) It seems, however, to be agreed, that where the action is ex contractu, and there is but one instrument between the parties, which is in the possession or power of the defendant, to which the plaintiff is either an actual party or a party in interest, and of which he has been refused an inspection, upon request, and the production of which is necessary to enable him to declare against the defendant, the court, or a judge at chambers, may grant him a rule on the defendant to produce the document, or give him a copy for that pur-

(a) By the act of Sept. 24, 1789 (1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 82), it is provided that the courts of the United States "shall have power in all actions at law, on motion and due notice thereof being given, to require the parties to produce books or writings in their possession or power, which contain evidence pertinent to the issue, in cases and under circumstances where they might be compelled to produce the same by the ordinary rules of proceeding in chancery;" and in case of the non-production thereof upon such order the court may direct a nonsuit or default. Under this statute, an order to produce may be applied for before trial, upon notice. A prima facie case of the existence of the paper and its materiality must be made out; and the court will then pass an order nisi, leaving the opposite party to produce or to show cause at the trial, where alone the materiality can be finally decided. Iasigi v. Brown, 1 Curtis C. C. 401. For other decisions under this section of the statute, see Hylton v. Brown, 1 Wash. C. C. 298; Bas v. Steele, 3 Id. 381; Dunham v. Riley, 4 Id. 126; Vasse v. Mifflin, Id. 519. In England, under a statute authorizing interrogatories to the opposite party as to any matter about which discovery may be sought, it is held that the interrogatories should be confined to such matters as might be discovered by a bill in equity. Whateley v. Crowter, 5 E. & B. 712. See also post, vol. iii. § 290.

pose.³ Such order may also be obtained by the defendant on a special case; such as, if there is reason to suspect that the document is forged, and the defendant wishes that it may be seen by himself and his witnesses.4 But, in all such cases, the application should be supported by the affidavit of the party, particularly stating the circumstances. 5 (b)

§ 560. When in hands of adverse party. When the instrument or writing is in the hands or power of the adverse party, there are, in general, except in the cases above mentioned, no means at law of compelling him to produce it; but the practice, in such cases, is, to give him or his attorney a regular notice to produce the original. Not that, on proof of such notice, he is compellable to give evidence against himself, but to lay a foundation for the introduction of secondary evidence of the contents of the docu-

(b) In England, it has been held that, under the Common-Law Procedure Act (1854), 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, the court will not grant a discovery of documents except upon the affidavit of the party to the suit; the affidavit of the attorney not being sufficient, although the party himself is abroad. Herschfield v. Clark, 11 Exch. 712. But in the case of a corporation, the affidavit may be made by attorney. Bull v. Clarke, 15 C. B. N. s. 351. Before a party can be called upon to produce a document for the purposes of evidence, it must be shown that it is in his possession. Laxton v. Reynolds, 18 Jur. 963. It is not an answer to an application for an order for a discovery of documents, that they are privileged from being produced; if such be the fact, it must be shown in the affidavit made in obedience to the order. Forshaw v. Lewis, 10 Exch. 712. The right of a plaintiff under the statute (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99) to inspect deeds in the defendant's custody, where such a right exists, is not limited by what is necessary to make out a prima facie case; but it extends to any deeds which may tend to support or strengthen the case on the part of the plaintiff. The rule that one party has no right to insert the that one party has no right to inspect documents which make out the title of the other does not apply, if they also make out his own. Coster v. Baring, 29 Eng. L. & Eq. 365. And it seems that in most cases the defendant will be entitled to an inspection of his own letters, in the hands of the opposite party, when the action is based upon evidence conthe action is based upon evidence contained in them, where no copies were retained and the inspection was necessary to the defence. Price v. Harrison, 8 C. B. N. s. 617. And so also in the case of a plaintiff, who claimed damages of a railway company for dismissing him from the office of superintendent, it was from the office of superintendent, it was held that he was entitled to have an inspection of all entries or minutes in the company's books having reference to his employment. Hill v. Great Western Railway Co., 10 C. B. N. s. 148. But the defendant is not entitled to inspect his own letters to the plaintiff, in an action for breach of promise of marriage, upon an affidavit that the promise, if any, was contained in the letters. Hamer v. Sowerby, 3 Law T. N. s. 734. And the court will not grant an inspection of documents produced at the trial, with a view to discover grounds to move a new trial. Pratt v. Goswell, 9 C. B. N. s. 706.

6 2 Tidd's Pr. 802; 1 Paine & Duer's Pr. 483; Graham's Practice, p. 528. Notice to produce the instrument is not alone sufficient to admit, the party to give secondary evidence of its contents. He must prove the existence of the original. Sharpe v. Lambe, 3 P. & D. 454. (c) He must also show that the instrument is in the possession, or under the control, of the party required to produce it. Smith v. Sleap, 1 Car. & Kirw. 48. But of this fact very slight evidence will raise a sufficient presumption, where the instrument exclusively belongs to him, and has recently been, or regularly ought to be, in his possession, according to the course of business. Henry v. Leigh, 3 Campb. 499, 502; Harvey v. Mitchell, 2 M. & Rob. 366; Robb v. Starkey, 2 C. & K. 143. (d) And if the instrument is in the possession of another, in privity with the party, such as his banker, or agent, or servant, or the like, notice to the party himself is sufficient. Baldney v. Ritchie, 1 Stark. 338; Sinclair v. Stevenson, 1 C. & P. 582; Burton v. Payne, 2 C. & P. 520; Partridge v. Coates, Ry. & M. 153, 156; Taplin v. Atty, 3 Bing. 164. If a deed is in the hands of an attorney, having a lien upon it, as security for money due from his client, on which ground he refuses to produce it in obedience to a subpæna duces tecum, as he justly may (Kemp v. King, 2 M. & Rob. 437; Reg. v. Hankins, 2 C. & K. 823), the party calling for it may give secondary evidence of its contents. Doe v. Ross, 7 M. & W. 102. So, if the deed is in court, in the hands of a third person as mortgagee, who has not been subpœnaed in the cause, and he declines to produce it, secondary evidence of its contents is admissible; but if the hands of a third person as mortgagee, who has not been subpœnaed in the cause, the person having custody of the deed must only state the date and names of the parties, in order to identify it. Doe v. Clifford, 2 C. & K. 448. The notice to produce may be given verbally. Smith v. Young, 1 Campb. 440. After notice and refusal to produce a paper, and sec

(c) Although some proof must be given to the judge of the existence of the paper, yet, where his decision on the non-existence of the paper would in effect decide the case, the judge will not hear evidence to prove that the instrument never existed, e. g. when the action is based on a policy of insurance which the plaintiff alleges is in the defendant's possession. Stowe v. Querner, L. R. 5 Ex. 155.

(d) The proof that the instrument is in the possession of the other party is addressed to the judge, as that fact is a preliminary to the introduction of the evidence of the contents of the instrument. Dix v. Atkins, 128 Mass. 43. As to what proof is sufficient, see that case, and Roberts v.

Spencer, 123 Mass. 397.

(c) Where the plaintiff gave notice to the defendant to produce at the trial an original contract, and affixed what purported to be a copy of it to the notice, and, although the pretended copy was not in all respects correct, secondary evidence was allowed on the neglect of the defendant to produce the original, it was held, that the defendant could not use the copy attached to the notice, although certified to be correct by the plaintiff, while he had the original in his possession. Bogart v. Brown, 5 Pick. 18. In New York, it has been held that certain courts have authority to compel a defendant in a suit pending therein to produce and discover books, papers, and documents, in his possession or power, relating to the merits of such suit; and if the defendant refuses to comply, his answer may be stricken out, and judgment rendered against him as for a neglect to answer. Gould v. McCarty, 1 Kernan, 575. In Georgia, a party may be required, in a proper case, to produce documents to be annexed to interrogatories propounded by the party calling for them, the courts requiring that a copy of the documents shall be left in the place of the original, to be used as such in case the original be not returned, and that the party calling for the document shall give security to the party producing it, for its being safely returned. Faircloth v. Jordan, 15 Ga. 511. Where the counsel in a case have agreed that either party shall produce, upon notice at the trial, any papers which may be in his possession, the failure of the plaintiff (the agent in America of a firm in London) to produce upon such notice an invoice of goods consigned to his principals in London, is not such a failure to comply with the agreement as will admit parol testimony of the contents

§ 561. Notice to produce. There are three cases in which such notice to produce is not necessary. First, where the instrument to be produced and that to be proved are duplicate originals; for, in such case, the original being in the hands of the other party, it is in his power to contradict the duplicate original by producing the other, if they vary; 1 secondly, where the instrument to be proved is itself a notice, such as a notice to quit, or notice of the dishonor of a bill of exchange; and, thirdly, where, from the nature of the action, the defendant has notice that the plaintiff intends to charge him with possession of the instrument, as, for example, in trover for a bill of exchange. And the principle of the rule does not require notice to the adverse party to produce a paper belonging to a third person, of which he has fraudulently obtained possession; as where, after service of a subpæna duces tecum, the adverse party had received the paper from the witness in fraud of the subpæna.2

² 2 Tidd's Pr. 803. Proof that the adverse party, or his attorney, has the instrument in court, does not, it seems, render notice to produce it unnecessary: for the object of the notice is not only to procure the paper, but to give the party an opportunity to provide the proper testimony to support or impeach it. Doe v. Grey, 1 Stark. 283; Exall v. Partridge, Id. cit.; Knight v. Marquis of Waterford, 4 Y. & Col. 284. (a) The rule, as to dispensing with notice, is the same in equity as at law. 2 Dan. Ch.

concession without proof by the defendant that it was so, preclude him from afterwards objecting that proof was not given. Turner v. Yates, 16 How. (U. S.) 14.

(a) But this rule has been abrogated (if it ever was law, which seems doubtful) in England. It is now held there that the object of a motion to produce in such a case is merely to give the opposite party sufficient opportunity to produce, if he pleases, and not to enable him to prepare evidence to explain, nullify, or confirm it; and, therefore, when the document is in court, at the time of the trial, a notice to produce it immediately is an flaint to a relative to the trial of trial of the trial of trial of trial of the trial of the trial of trial is sufficient to render secondary evidence of its contents admissible, if it be not produced. Klein, 17 Johns. 335; Rhoades v. Selin, 4 Wash. C. C. 718. A notice need not be given when the adverse party has fraudulently or forcibly obtained possession of it, as when, after action brought, he has received it from a witness in fraud of a duces tecum. Leeds v. Cook, 4 Esp. 256; Doe v. Doe v. Morris, 3 A. & E. 46. A rule of court, that a notice to produce a paper must precede parol evidence of its contents, is waived by a party's offering to produce it. If he then fails to find it, but asks for no further time, the parol evidence is admissible. Dwinell v. Larrabee, 33 Me. 464. For § 562. To whom directed. The notice may be directed to the party or to his attorney, and may be served on either; and it must describe the writing demanded, so as to leave no doubt that the party was aware of the particular instrument intended to be called for. the purpose of proving that the defendant has fraudulently conveyed his real estate to third persons, copies of the deeds thereof from the registry are admissible, the originals not being presumed to be in the possession of either party to the suit. Blanchard v. Young, 11 Cush. 341, 345. But a registry copy of a deed of land is not admissible in evidence against the grantee, without notice to him to produce the original. Com. v. Emery, 2 Gray, 80, 81; Bourne v. Boston, Id. 494, 497. In delivering the opinion of the court in Com. v. Emery, ut supra, Shaw, C. J., said, "The rule, as to the use of deeds as evidence, in this Commonwealth, is founded partly on the rules of common law, but modified to some extent by the registry system established here by stat-nte. The theory is this: that an original deed is in its nature more authentic and better evidence than any copy can be; that a copy is in its nature secondary; and therefore in all cases original deeds should be required, if they can be had. But as this would be burdensome and expensive, if not impossible, in many cases, some relaxation of this rule was necessary for practical purposes. The law assumes that the grantee is the keeper of deeds made directly to himself; when, then, he has occasion to prove any fact by such deed, he cannot use a copy, because it would be offering inferior evidence, when in theory of law the superior is in his own possession or power. It is only on proof of the loss of the original, in such case, that any secondary evidence can be received. Our system of conveyancing, modified by the registry law, is, that each grantee retains the deed made immediately to himself, to enable him to make good his warranties. Succeeding grantees do not, as a matter of course, take possession of deeds made to preceding parties, so as to be able to prove a chain of title, by a series of original deeds. Every grantee, therefore, is the keeper of his away dood and of his cyrn deed and his own deed, and of his own deed only. But there is another rule of practice arising from the registry law, and the usage under it, which is, that all deeds, before being offered in evidence as proof of title, must be registered. The register of deeds, therefore, is an officer of the law, with competent authority to receive, compare, and record deeds; his certificate verifies the copy as a true transcript of the original, and the next best evidence to prove the existence of the deed; though it follows as a consequence, that such copy is legal and competent evidence, and dispenses with original proof of its execution by attesting witnesses. In cases, therefore, in which the original, in theory of law, is not in the custody or power of the party having occasion to use it, the certified office copy is prima facie evidence of the original and its execution, subject to be controlled by rebutting evidence. But as this arises rebutting evidence. But as this arises from the consideration, that the original is not in the power of the party relying on it, the rule does not apply, where such original is, in theory of law, in possession of the adverse party; because upon notice the adverse party is bound to produce it, or put himself in such position, that any secondary evidence may be that any secondary evidence may be given. Should it be objected that, upon notice to the adverse party to produce an original, and the tender of a paper in answer to the notice, the party calling for the deed might deny that the paper tendered was the true paper called for, it would be easy to ascertain the identity of the paper, by a comparison of the contents of the paper tendered with the copy offered, and by the official certificate, which the register of deeds is residually to the content of th quired to make on the original, when it is recorded. This construction of the rule will carry out the principle on which it is founded, to insist on the better evidence when it can practically be had, and allow the secondary only when it is necessary." See, as to fraud, or the form of the action, excusing notice to produce papers in the hands of the adversary, Nealley v. Greenough, 5 Foster, 325. But where the notice is an act of posterior than the state of the state o session, warning others of the plaintiff's claim, a copy is not evidence, until the absence of the original is accounted for. Lombardo v. Ferguson, 15 Cal. 372.

can be laid down, except that it must be such as to enable the party, under the known circumstances of the case, to comply with the call. Generally, if the party dwells in another town than that in which the trial is had, a service on him at the place where the trial is had, or after he has left home to attend the court, is not sufficient.2(a) But if the party has gone abroad, leaving the cause in the hands of his attorney, it will be presumed that he left with the attorney all the papers material to the cause, and the notice should therefore be served on the latter. The notice, also, should generally be served previous to the commencement of the trial.3 (b)

§ 563. When papers may be called for. The regular time for calling for the production of papers is not until the party who requires them has entered upon his case; until which time the other party may refuse to produce them, and no cross-examination, as to their contents, is usually permitted.4(c) The production of papers, upon notice, does not make them evidence in the cause, unless the party calling for them inspects them, so as to become acquainted with their contents; in which case, the English rule is, that they are admitted as evidence for both parties.⁵ The reason is, that it would give an unconscionable advantage to enable a party to pry into the affairs of his adversary for the purpose of compelling him to furnish evidence against himself, without, at the same time, subjecting him to the risk of making whatever he inspects evidence for both parties. But in the American courts, the rule on this subject is not uniform. 3 (b)

§ 564. Alterations. If, on the production of the instrument, it appears to have been altered, it is incumbent on the party offering it in evidence to explain this appearance. Every alteration on the face of a written instrument detracts from its credit, and renders it suspicious; and this suspicion the party claiming under it is ordinarily held bound to remove.2 If the alteration is noted in

The Roman civil law on the subject of alterations agrees in the main with the common law; but the latter, in this as in other cases, has greatly the advantage, in its facility of adaptation to the actual state of the facts. The general rule is the same in both codes. "Rasa scriptura falsa præsumitur, et tanquam falsa rejicitur; præsertim quando rasura facta est per eum, qui utitur instrumento raso." Mascard. vol. iv.; Concl. 1261, n. 1, 3. But if immaterial, or free from suspicion, an alteration or rasure does not vitiate. "Si rasura non sit in loco substantiali, et suspecto, non reddit falsum instrumentum." Id. n. 9. If it appeared, on its face, to be the autography of the notary who drew the instrument, that is, a contemporaneous act, it was by some deemed valid; "quamvis scriptura sit abrasa in parte substantiali, sed ita bene rescripta, ut aperte dignoscatur, id manu ejusdem Notarii fuisse." Id. n. 14. But others contended, that this was not sufficient to remove all suspicion, and render the instrument valid, unless the alteration was mentioned and explained at the end of the instru-ment. "Si Notarius erravit in scriptura, ita ut oporteat aliquid radere et reponere, vel facere aliquam lineam in margine, debet ad evitandam suspicionem, in fine scripturæ ac chirographi continuando facere mentionem, qualiter ipse abrasit tale verbum, in tali linea, vel facit talem lineam in margine." Id. n. 16. But, in the absence of all evidence to the contrary, it seems that alterations were presumed to be contemporaneous with the execution of the instrument. "In dubio autem hujusmodi abrasiones raneous with the execution of the instrument. "In dubto anten hujusmodi abrasiones seu cancellationes præsumuntur semper factæ tempore conceptionis scripturæ, antequam absoluta fuerit." Id. n. 18. If the suspicion, arising from the alteration when considered by itself, were removed, by taking it in connection with the context, it was sufficient; — "cum verba antecedentia et sequentia demonstrant necessario ita esse legendum, ut in rasura scripturæ reperitur." Id. n. 19. The instrument might also be held good at the discretion of the judge, if the original reading were still apparent, — "si sensus rectus percipi potest," — notwithstanding the rasure, Id. n. 20; or if the part erased could be ascertained by other instruments; — "si per alias scripturas pars abrasa declarari possit." Id. n. 21. If the instrument were produced in court by the adverse party upon legal compulsion, no alterations apparent, upon it were permitted adverse party, upon legal compulsion, no alterations apparent upon it were permitted to operate to the prejudice of the instrument, against the party calling for its production. And if a written contract or act were executed in duplicate, an alteration of one of the originals was held not to operate to the injury of the other. (b) The English rule is followed in Maine (Blake v. Russ, 33 Me. 360), but Massachusetts (Clark v. Fletcher, 1 Allow Hampshire (Austin v. Thomplen, 53; Long v. Drew, 114 Mass. 77. Cf. Reed v. Anderson, 12 Cush. 481), and the attestation clause as having been made before the execution of the instrument, it is sufficiently accounted for, and the instrument is relieved from that suspicion. And if it appears in the same handwriting and ink with the body of the instrument, it may suffice. So, if the alteration is against the interest of the party deriving title under the instrument, as, if it be a bond or note, altered to a less sum, the law does not so far presume that it was improperly made as to throw on him the burden of accounting for it. 3 And, generally speaking, if nothing appears to the contrary, the alteration will be presumed to be contemporaneous with the execution of the instrument. 4 But if any ground of suspicion is apparent upon the face of the instrument, the law presumes nothing, but leaves the question of the time when it was done as well as that of the person by whom, and the intent with which. the alteration was made, as matters of fact, to be ultimately found by the jury upon proofs to be adduced by the party offering the instrument in evidence.5

But where a farm was devised from year to year by parol, and afterwards an agreement was signed, containing stipulations as to the mode of tillage, for breach of which an action was brought, and, on producing the agreement, it appeared that the term of years had been written seven, but altered to fourteen; it was held that this alteration, being immaterial to the parol contract, need not be explained by the plaintiff, Earl of Falmouth v. Dorrance, 2 Dall. 306. And see Pullen v. Hutchinson, 12 Shepl. 249, 254; Wikoff's Appeal, 3 Am. Law Jour. N. s. 493, 503. In Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. 67, and Prevost v. Gratz, 1 Pet. C. C. 364, 369, it was held, that an alteration should be presumed to have been made after the execution of the instrument; but this has been overruled in the United States as contrary to the principle of the law, which never presumes wrong. The reporter's marginal notes in Burgoyne v. Showler, 1 Robb. Eccl. 5, and Cooper v. Bockett, 4 Moore, P. C. C. 419, state the broad proposition, that alterations in a will, not accounted for, are prima facie presumed to have been made after its execution. But, on examination of these cases, they are found to turn entirely on the provisions of the Statute of Wills, 1 Vict. c. 26, § 21, which directs that all alterations, made before the execution of the will, be noted in a memorandum upon the will, and attested by the testator and witnesses. If this direction is not complied with, it may well be presumed that the alterations were subsequently made. And so it was held, upon the language of that statute, and of the Statute of Frauds respecting wills, in Doe v. Palmer, 15 Jur. 836, 839; in which the ease of Cooper v. Bockett was cited by Lord Campbell, and approved, upon the ground of the statute. The application of this rule to deeds was denied in Doe v. Catamore, 15 Jur. 728; 5 Eng. Law & Rep. 349 [and cases cited in note]; where it was held, that if the contrary be not proved, the interlineation in a deed is to be presumed to have been made at the time of its execution. And see Co. Lit. 225 b, and note by Butler; Best on Presumptions, § 75.

In the c

Butler; Best on Presumptions, § 75.

In the case of alterations in a will, it was held, in Doe v. Palmer, supra, that the declarations of the testator were admissible to rebut the presumption of fraud in the alterations.

§ 565. Same subject. Though the effect of the alteration of a legal instrument is generally discussed with reference to deeds, raised as to the genuineness of an altered instrument, whether it be apparent upon inspection, or made so by extraneous evidence, the party producing the instrument, and claiming under it, is bound to remove the suspicion by accounting for the alteration. It is also generally agreed, that inasmuch as fraud is never to be presumed, therefore, if no particular circumstances of suspicion attach to an altered instrument, therefore, if no particular circumstances of suspicion attach to an altered instrument, the alteration is to be presumed innocent, or made prior to its execution. Gooch v. Bryant, 1 Shepl. 386; Crabtree v. Clark, 7 Shepl. 337; Wiekes v. Caulk, 5 H. & J. 41; Gillet v. Sweat, 1 Gilm. 475; Doe v. Catamore, 15 Jur. 728; 5 Eng. Law & Eq. 349 [and cases cited in note]; Co. Lit. 225 b, note by Butler. (a) In Jackson v. Osborn, 2 Wend. 555, it was held, that the party claiming under a deed was bound to account for the alterations in it, and that no presumption was to be made in its favor; but in Bailey v. Taylor, 11 Conn. 531, it was held, that nothing was to be presumed either way, but the question was to be submitted freely to the jury.

But an exception to this rule of the presumption of innocence seems to be admitted.

But an exception to this rule of the presumption of innocence seems to be admitted in the case of negotiable paper; it having been held, that the party producing and in the case of negotiable paper; it having been held, that the party producing and claiming under the paper is bound to explain every apparent and material alteration, the operation of which would be in his own favor. Knight v. Clements, 8 Ad. & El. 215; Clifford v. Parker, 2 M. & G. 909; Simpson v. Stackhouse, 9 Barr, 186; Mc-Micken v. Beauchamp, 2 Miller (La.), 290. See also Henman v. Dickinson, 5 Bing. 183; Bishop v. Chambre, 3 C. & P. 55; Humphreys v. Guillow, 13 N. H. 385; Hills v. Barnes, 11 N. H. 395; Taylor v. Mosely, 6 C. & P. 273; Whittield v. Collingwood, 1 Car. & Kir. 325; Davis v. Carlisle, 6 Ala. 707; Walters v. Short, 5 Gilm. 252; Cariss v. Tattersall, 2 M. & G. 890. But in Davis v. Jenney, 1 Met. 221, it was held that the burden of proof was on the defendant. Clark v. Eckstein, 22 Penn. St. 507; Paine v. Edsell, 19 Id. 178. (b)

Another exception has been allowed, where the instrument is, by the rules of practice, to be received as genuine, unless its genuineness is denied on oath by the party, and he does so; for his oath is deemed sufficient to destroy the presumption of innocence in regard to the alteration, and to place the instrument in the condition of a suspected paper. Walters v. Short, 5 Gilm. 252.

It is also clear, that it is for the court to determine, in the first instance, whether the alteration is so far accounted for, as to permit the instrument to be read in evidence to the jury, who are the ultimate judges of the fact. Tillou v. Clinton, &c. Ius. Co., 7 Barb. 564; Ross v. Gould, 5 Greenl. 204. (c) But whether, in the absence of all other evidence, the jury may determine the time and character of the alteration from inspection alone, is not universally agreed. In some cases they have been permitted to do so. Bailey v. Taylor, 11 Conn. 531; Gooch v. Bryant, 1 Shepl. 386; Crabtree v. Clark, 7 Shepl. 337; Doe v. Catamore, 15 Jur. 728; 5 Eng. Law & Eq. 349; Vau-horne v. Dorrance, 2 Dall. 306. (d) And see Wickes v. Caulk, 5 H. & J. 41; Pullen v. Shaw, 3 Dev. 238; in which last case it was held, that where the alteration was apparently against the interest of the holder of the instrument, it should be presumed to have been made prior to its execution. But in some other cases, the courts have required the exibition of some adminicular proof, being of opinion that the jury ought not to be left to conjecture alone, upon mere inspection of the instrument. See Knight v. Clements, Clifford v. Parker, and Cariss v. Tattersall, supra.

Other cases, in accordance with the rules above stated, are the following: Cumber-

(a) Boothby v. Stanley, 34 Me. 515; North River Meadow Co. v. Shrewsbury Church, 2 N. J. Eq. 424. In an action to foreclose a mortgage, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show that the interlineations, alterations, and crasures therein were made before, or at the time of, its execution, and there is no presumption that they were so made, or that they were made without fraud. vet the principle is applicable to all other instruments. (a) The early decisions were chiefly upon deeds, because almost all written engagements were anciently in that form; but they establish the general proposition, that written instruments which are altered, in the legal sense of that term, as hereafter explained, are thereby made void. 1(b) The grounds of this doctrine are twofold. first is that of public policy, to prevent fraud, by not permitting a man to take the chance of committing a fraud without running any risk of losing by the event when it is detected.2 The other is, to insure the identity of the instrument, and prevent the substitution of another without the privity of the party concerned.3 The instrument derives its legal virtue from its being the sole repository of the agreement of the parties, solemnly adopted as such, and attested by the signature of the party engaging to perform it. Any alteration, therefore, which causes it to speak a language different in legal effect from that which it originally spake, is a material alteration.

§ 566. Alteration and spoliation. A distinction, however, is to be observed between the alteration and the spoliation of an instrument as to the legal consequences. An alteration is an act

Hanion, 1 N. & McC. 554; Haffelfinger v. Shutz, 16 S. & R. 44; Beaman v. Russell, 20 Vt. 205. In this last case the subject of alterations is very fully considered and the authorities classed and examined in the able judgment delivered by Hall, J. Where an alteration is apparent, it has been held, that the party impeaching the instrument may prove colleteral facts of a general above. that the party impeaching the instrument may prove collateral facts of a general character, such as alterations in other notes, which formed the consideration for the note in question, tending to show that the alteration in it was fraudulent. 3 Sanderson v. Synonds, 1 B. & B. 430, per Dallas, C. J. It is on this ground that the alteration of a deed, in an immaterial part, is sometimes fatal, where its identity is put in issue by the pleadings, every part of the writing being then material to the identity. See supra, §§ 58, 69; Hunt v. Adams, 6 Mass. 521.

(a) Entries in books of account are not instruments within the meaning of the rule. Adams v. Coulliard, 102 Mass. 167. An entry in an account-book, afterwards altered, is, in the absence of explanation, to be presumed to be in accordance with the facts at the time of entry. Sheils v. West, 17 Cal. 324.

(b) A probate bond executed by a principal and two sureties was altered by the judge of probate with the consent of the principal, but without the knowledge of the sureties, by increasing the penal sum, and was then executed by two additional sureties who did not know of the alteration, and was approved by the judge of probate; and it was held that the bond, probate; and it was held that the bond, though binding on the principal, was void as to all the sureties. Howe v. Peabody, 2 Gray, 556. See Taylor v. Johnson, 17 Ga. 521; Phillips v. Wells, 2 Sneed (Tenn.), 154; Ledford v. Vandyke, Busbee, Law, 480; Burchfield v. Moore, 25 Eng. Law & Eq. 123; 3 El. & Bl. 683. A note materially altered in its amount, or otherwise, is thereby avoided in 101 as a security. is thereby avoided in toto as a security, so that no action can be maintained upon it, even for the amount promised before the alteration. Meyer v. Huneke, 55 N.Y.

done upon the instrument by which its meaning or language is changed. If what is written upon or erased from the instrument has no tendency to produce this result, or to mislead any person, it is not an alteration. The term is, at this day, usually applied to the act of the party entitled under the deed or instrument, and imports some fraud or improper design on his part to change its effect. But the act of a stranger, without the participation of the party interested, is a mere spoliation or mutilation of the instrument, not changing its legal operations so long as the original writing remains legible, and, if it be a deed, any trace remains of the seal. If, by the unlawful act of a stranger, the instrument is mutilated or defaced, so that its identity is gone, the law regards the act, so far as the rights of the parties to the instrument are concerned, merely as an accidental destruction of primary evidence, compelling a resort to that which is secondary; and, in such case, the mutilated portion may be admitted as secondary evidence of so much of the original instrument. Thus, if it be a deed, and the party would plead it, it cannot be pleaded with a profert, but the want of profert must be excused by an allegation that the deed, meaning its legal identity as a deed, has been accidentally, and without the fault of the party, destroyed. And whether it be a deed or other instrument, its original tenor must be substantially shown, and the alteration or mutilation accounted for, in the same manner as if it were lost.

§ 567. Immaterial alterations. In considering the effect of alterations made by the party himself, who holds the instrument, a further distinction is to be observed between the insertion of those words which the law would supply and those of a different character. If the law would have supplied the words which were omitted, and were afterwards inserted by the party, it has been repeatedly held, that even his own insertion of them will not vitiate the instrument; for the assent of the obligor will, in such cases, be presumed. It is not an alteration in the sense of the law, avoiding the instrument; although, if it be a deed, and to be set forth in hæc verba, it should be recited as it was originally written.³

§ 568. Same subject. It has been strongly doubted whether an immaterial alteration in any matter, though made by the obligee himself, will avoid the instrument, provided it be done innocently, and to no injurious purpose. (a) But if the alteration be fraudulently made by the party claiming under the instrument, it does not seem important whether it be in a material or an immaterial part; for, in either case, he has brought himself under the operation of the rule established for the prevention of fraud; and, having fraudulently destroyed the identity of the instrument, he must take the peril of all the consequences. But here, also, a further distinction is to be observed between deeds of conveyance and covenants; and also between covenants or agreements executed and those which are still executory. For if the grantee of land alter or destroy his title-deed, yet his title to the land is not gone. It passed to him by the deed; the deed has performed its office as that the alteration was immaterial, and that it did not effect the validity of the note. Arnold v. Jones, 2 R. I. 345. The making a note payable at a particular place is a material alteration. Dunbar, 8 Pick. 246. ² If an obligee procure a person, who was not present at the execution of the bond, to sign his name as an attesting witness, this is prima fucie evidence of fraud, and voids the bond. Adams v. Frye, 3 Met. 103. But it is competent for the obligee to rebut the inference of fraud, by proof that the act was done without any fraudulent purpose; in which case the bond will not be thereby rendered void. Ibid. And see Homer v. Wallis, 11 Mass. 309; Smith v. Dunbar, 8 l'ick. 246. But this latter point was decided otherwise in Marshall v. Gougler, 10 S. & R. 164. And where the holder of a bond or a note under seal procured a person to alter the date, for the purpose of correcting a mistake in the year and making it conform to the truth, this was held to avoid the bond. Miller v. Gilleland, S. C. Pa., 1 Am. Law Reg. 672, Lowrie and Woodward, JJ., dissenting.

⁽a) Reed v. Kemp, 16 Ill. 445. A promissory note was made payable to a partnership under one name, and was so indorsed by a surety. It was afterwards altered by the payee and maker, without the knowledge of the surety, so as to be payable to the same partnership by a different name. In an action on the note by the payee against the surety, it was held, an instrument of conveyance, and its continued existence is not necessary to the continuance of title in the grantee; but the estate remains in him until it has passed to another by some mode of conveyance recognized by the law.³ The same principle applies to contracts executed in regard to the acts done under them. If the estate lies in grant, and cannot exist without deed, it is said that any alteration by the party claiming the estate will avoid the deed as to him, and that therefore the estate itself, as well as all remedy upon the deed, will be utterly gone.4 But whether it be a deed conveying real estate or not, it seems well settled that any alteration in the instrument, made by the grantee or obligee, if it be made with a fraudulent design, and do not consist in the insertion of words which the law would supply, is fatal to the instrument, as the foundation of any remedy at law, upon the covenants or undertakings contained in it.5 And, in such case, it seems that the party will not be permitted to prove the covenant or promise by other evidence.6 But where there are several parties to an indenture, some of whom have executed it, and in the progress of the transaction it is altered as to those who have not signed it, without the knowledge of those who have, but yet in a part not at all affecting the latter, and then is executed by the residue, it is good as to all.7

§ 568 a. Alterations by consent. In all these cases of alterations, it is further to be remarked, that they are supposed to have been made without the consent of the other party. For, if the alteration is made by consent of parties, such as by filling up of blanks, or the like, it is valid. (a) But here, also, a distinction has been taken between the insertion of matter essential to the existence and operation of the instrument as a deed, and that which is not essential to its operation. Accordingly, it has been held that an instrument which, when formerly executed, was deficient in some material part, so as to be incapable of any operation at all, and was no deed, could not afterwards become a deed by being completed and delivered by a stranger, in the absence of the party who executed it, and unauthorized by an instrument under seal.2 Yet this rule, again, has its exceptions, in divers cases, such as powers of attorney to transfer stock, a navy bills, 4 custom-house bonds, 5 appeal bonds, 6 bail bonds, 7 and the like, which have been held good, though executed in blank and afterwards filled up by parol authority only.8

This decision was questioned by Mr. Preston in his edition of Shep. Touchst. p. 68, and it was expressly overruled in Hibblewhite v. McMorine, 6 M. & W. 215. It is also contradicted by McKee v. Hicks, 2 Dev. Law, 379, and some other American cases. But it was confirmed in Wiley v. Moor, 17 S. & R. 438; Knapp v. Maltby, 13 Wend. 557; Commercial Bank of Buffalo v. Nelson, 2 Brockenbrough, 64, 74, 75, which was the case of a paymaster's bond, executed in blank and afterwards filled up, Chief Justice Marshall, before whom it was tried, felt bound, by the weight of authority, to decide against the bond; but expressed his opinion, that in principle it was valid, and his belief that his judgment would be reversed in the Supreme Court of the United States; but the cause was not carried farther. Instruments executed in of the United States; but the cause was not carried farther. Instruments executed in this manner have become very common, and the authorities as to their validity are distressingly in conflict, but upon the principle adopted in Hudson v. Revett, 5 Bing. 368, there is very little difficulty in holding such instruments valid, and thus giving full effect to the actual intentions of the parties, without the violation of any rule of law. In that case, the defendant executed and delivered a deed, conveying his property to trustees to sell for the headit of his creditors the particulars of whose demands. erty to trustees, to sell for the benefit of his creditors, the particulars of whose demands were stated in the deed; but a blank was left for one of the principal debts, the exact amount of which was subsequently ascertained and inserted in the deed, in the gran-tor's presence, and with his assent, by the attorney who had prepared the deed and had it in his possession, he being one of the trustees. The defendant afterwards recognized the deed as valid, in various transactions. It was held that the deed was not intended to be a complete and perfect deed, until all the blanks were filled, and that the act of the grantor in assenting to the filling of the blank, amounted to a delivery of the deed, thus completed. No formality, either of words or action, is prescribed by the law as essential to delivery. Nor is it material how or when the deed came into the hands of the grantee. Delivery, in the legal sense, consists in the transfer of the possession and dominion; and whenever the grantor assents to the possession of the deed by the grantee, as an instrument of title, then, and not nutil then, the delivery is complete. The possession of the instrument by the grantee may be simultaneous with this act of the grantor's mind, or it may have been long before; but it is this assent of the grantor which changes the character of that prior possession, and imparts validity to the deed. Mr. Preston observes that "all cases of this sort depend on the inquiry whether the intended grantor has given sanction to the instrument, so as to make it conclusively his deed." 3 Preston on Abstracts, p. 64. And see Parker v. Hill, 8 Met. 447; Hope v. Harman, 11 Jur. 1097; post, vol. ii. § 297. The same effect was given to clear and nnequivocal acts of assent cn pais, by a feme mortgagor, after the death of her husband, as amounting to a redelivery of a deed of mortgage, executed by her while a feme covert. Goodright v. Strapham, Cowp. 201, 204; Shep. Touchst. by Preston, p. 58. "The general rule," said Mr. Justice Johnson, in delivering the judgment of the court, in Duncan v. Hodges, "is, that if a blank be signed, sealed, and delivered, and afterwards written, it is no deed; and the obvious reason is, that as there was nothing of substance contained in it, nothing could pass by it. But the rule was never intended to prescribe to the grantor the order of time, in which the several parts of a deed should be written. A thing to be granted, a person to whom, and the sealing and delivery, are some of those which are necessary, and the whole is consummated by the delivery; and if the grantor should think proper to reverse this order, in the manner of execution, but in the end makes it perfect before delivery, it is a good deed." See 4 McCord, 239, 240. Whenever, therefore, a deed is materially altered, by consent of the parties, after its formal execution, the grantor or obligor assents that the grantee or obligee shall retain it in its altered and completed form, as an instrument of title; and this assent amounts to a delivery or redelivery, as the case may require, and warrants the jury in finding accordingly. Such plainly was the opinion of the learned judges in Hudson v. Revett, as stated by Best, C. J., in 5 Bing. 388, 389; and further expounded in West v. Steward, 14 M. & W. 47. See also Hartley v. Manson, 4 M. & G. 172; Story on Bailments, § 55.

And to the same effect, Lefferts v. State, 49 N. J. L. 27.

In regard to instruments duly attested, the rule in the text is applied where the instrument is the foundation of the party's claim, or he is privy to it, or where it purports to be executed by his adversary; but not where it is wholly inter alios, under whom neither party can claim or deduce any right, title, or interest to himself. Stat. 1852, c. 106, § 5.

LAW OF EVIDENCE.

Various reasons have been assigned for this rule; but that upon which it seems best founded is, that a fact may be known to the subscribing witness not within the knowledge or recollection of the obligor, and that he is entitled to avail himself of all the knowledge of the subscribing witness relative to the transaction.² The party, to whose execution he is a witness, is considered as invoking him, as the person to whom he refers, to prove what passed at the time of attestation.3 The rule, though originally framed in regard to deeds, is now extended to every species of writing attested by a witness. 4(a) Such being the principle of

In South Carolina, the signature to a bond or note may be proved by any other person, without calling the subscribing witness; unless the defendant will swear that it is not his signature, or that of his testator or intestate, if the case be such. Stat. at Large, vol. v. p. 434. And foreign deeds, bonds, &c., attested to have been proved on oath before a notary or other magistrate qualified therefor, are admissible in evidence without proof by the subscribing witnesses; provided the courts of the foreign State receive similar evidence from this State. Id. vol. iii. p. 285; vol. v. p. 45.

In Virginia, foreign deeds or powers of attorney, &c., duly acknowledged, so as to be admitted to the record by the laws of that State; also policies, charter-parties, and copies of record or of registers of marriages and births, attested by a notary, to be made, entered, or kept according to the law of the place, are admissible in evidence in the courts of that State, without further proof. Rev. Stat. 1849, c. 121, § 3; ld. c. 176, § 16. A similar rule, in substance, is enacted in Mississippi. Hutchinson's Dig. c. 60, art. 2. And see infra, § 573, n.

(a) Barber v. Terrell, 54 Ga. 146; Warner v. Balt. & Ohio R. R. Co., 31 Ohio St. 265. This rule is not affected by the statutes making the parties to a suit competent witnesses in the suit. The execution of the paper must still be proved by the attesting witness, if there is any. Whyman v. Garth, 8 Exch. 803; Brigham v. Palmer, 3 Allen (Mass.), 450. Whether the rule is affected by a statute which declares that any signature to a written instrument declared on or set forth as a cause of action shall be taken as admitted unless its genuineness is specially denied, is said to be doubtful in Holden v. Jenkins, 125 Mass. 446.

Where the instrument which the plaintiff offered as part of his case was a lease not under seal, executed on the part of the lessor by an attorney, in the presence of an attesting witness, it was held, that the testimony of the attorney was inadmissible to prove the execution of the lease, without first calling the attesting witness, or accounting for his absence. "The person whose signature appeared to it as attorney of the supposed lessor could not affect the rights of the defendants, who objected to it, by way of admission or confession, for he never represented, or was entrusted by, the defendants for any purpose. His handwriting was secondary evidence only, and could not be proved until the plaintiff had proved that the testimony of the attesting witness could not be obtained. The attorney, therefore, stood in the same position as any other person not a subscribing witness, who might have happened to be present at the execution of the instrument. The evidence was incompetent and rightly rejected." By Shaw, C. J., Barry v. Ryan, 4 Gray, 523, 525. Where one witness testifies that the other witness and himself were present and saw the execution of a deed, it is not necessary to call such other witness. Melcher v. Flanders, 40 N. H. 139. Names of persons not parties to the deed, in the usual place for subscribing witnesses, though not said to be witnesses, will be presumed to be such. Chaplain v. Briscoe, 19 Miss. 372.

the rule, its application has been held indispensable, even where it was proved that the obligor had admitted that he had executed the bond,⁵ and though the admission were made in answer to a bill of discovery.6

§ 569 a. Who is subscribing witness. A subscribing witness is one who was present when the instrument was executed, and who, at that time, at the request or with the assent of the party, subscribed his name to it as a witness of the execution. If his name is signed, not by himself but by the party, it is no attestation. Neither is it such, if though present at the execution, he did not subscribe the instrument at that time, but did it afterwards, and without request, or by the fraudulent procurement of the other party. But it is not necessary that he should have actually seen the party sign, or have been present at the very moment of signing; for if he is called in immediately afterwards, and the party acknowledges his signature to the witness, and requests him to attest it, this will be deemed part of the transaction, and therefore a sufficient attestation.7

§ 570. Ancient instruments prove themselves. To this rule, requiring the production of the subscribing witnesses, there are several classes of exceptions. The first is, where the instrument is thirty years old; in which case, as we have heretofore seen, it is

Harringworth, 4 M. & S. 353. The admission of the party may be given in evidence; but the witness must also be produced, if to be had. This rule was broken in upon, in the case of the admitted execution of a promisory note, in Hall v. Phelps, 2 Labra, 451, but the rule was afterwards recomized as binding in the case of a deed

1 Supra, § 21, and cases there cited. See also Doe v. Davis, 10 Q. B. 314; Crane v. Marshall, 4 Shepl. 27; Green v. Chelsea, 24 Pick. 71. From the dictum of Parker, C. J., in Emerson v. Tolman, 4 Pick. 162, it has been inferred that the subscribing witnesses must be produced, if living, though the deed be more than thirty years old. But the case of Jackson v. Blanshan, 3 Johns. 292, which is there referred to, contains no such doctrine. The question in the latter case, which was the case of a will, was, whether the thirty years should be computed from the date of the will, or from the time of the testator's death; and the court held, that it should be computed from the time of his death. But on this point Spencer, J., differed from the rest of the court; time of his death. But on this point Spencer, J., differed from the rest of the court; and his opinion, which seems more consistent with the principle of the rule, is fully sustained by Doc v. Deakin, 3 C. & P. 402; Doe v. Wolley, 8 B. & C. 22; McKenire said to prove itself, the subscribing witnesses being presumed to be dead, and other proof being presumed to be beyond the reach of the party. But such documents must be free from just grounds of suspicion, and must come from the proper custody,2 or have been acted upon, so as to afford some corroborative proof of their genuineness. 3(a) And, in this case, it is not necessary to call the subscribing witnesses, though they be living.4 This exception is co-extensive with the rule applying to ancient writings of every description, provided they have been brought from the proper custody and place; for the finding them in such a custody and place is a presumption that they were honestly and fairly obtained and preserved for use, and are free from suspicion of dishonesty.5 But whether it extends to the seal of a private corporation has been doubted, for such a case does not seem clearly to be within the principle of the exception.6

§ 571. Witness not required when the instrument is produced by adverse party. A second exception to this rule is allowed where the instrument is produced by the adverse party, pursuant to notice, the party producing it claiming an interest under the instrument. In this ease, the party producing the instrument is not permitted to call on the other for proof of its execution; for, by claiming an interest under the instrument, he has admitted its execution.1 The same principle is applied where both parties claim similar interests under the same deed; in which case, the

In some cases proof of possession, under the deed, or will, seems to have been deemed indispensable; but the principle pervading them all is that of corroboration merely; that is, that some evidence shall be offered, auxiliary to the apparent antiquity of the instrument, to raise a sufficient presumption in its favor. fact of such claim may be shown by parol.² So, where both parties claim under the same ancestor, his title-deed, being equally presumable to be in the possession of either, may be proved by a copy from the registry. 3 But it seems that the interest claimed in these cases must be of an abiding nature. Therefore, where the defendant would show that he was a partner with the plaintiff, and, in proof thereof, called on the plaintiff to produce a written personal contract, made between them both, as partners of the one part, and a third person of the other part, for labor which had been performed, which was produced accordingly, the defendant was still held bound to prove its execution.4 The interest, also, which is claimed under the instrument produced on notice, must, in order to dispense with this rule, be an interest claimed in the same cause. Therefore, where, in an action by an agent against his principal for his commission due for procuring him an apprentice, the indenture of apprenticeship was produced by the defendant or notice, it was held that the plaintiff was still bound to prove its execution by the subscribing witness; and that, having been nonsuited for want of this evidence, he was not entitled to a new trial on the ground of surprise, though he was not previously aware that there was a subscribing witness, it not appearing that he had made any inquiry on the subject.⁵ So, where the instrument was taken by the party producing it, in the course of his official duty, as, for example, a bail bond, taken by the sheriff, and produced by him on notice, its due execution will prima facie be presumed. Subject to these exceptions, the general rule is,

Gow, 26.

³ Burghardt v. Turner, 12 Pick. 534. It being the general practice, in the United States, for the grantor to retain his own title-deeds, instead of delivering them over the person making the person States, for the granter to retain his own title-deeds, instead of delivering them over to the grantee, the grantee is not held bound to produce them; but the person making title to lands is, in general, permitted to read certified copies, from the registry, of all deeds and instruments under which he claims, and to which he is not himself a party, and of which he is not supposed to have the control. Scanlan v. Wright, 13 Pick. 523; Woodman v. Coolbroth, 7 Greenl. 181; Loomis v. Bedel, 11 N. H. 74. And where a copy is, on this ground, admissible, it has been held that the original might be read in evidence, without proof of its formal execution. Knox v. Silloway, I Fairf. 201. This practice, however, has been restricted to instruments which are by law required to be registered, and to transmissions of title inter vivos; for if the party claims by descent from a grantee, it has been held that he must produce the deed to his claims by descent from a grantee, it has been held that he must produce the deed to his ancestor, in the same manner as the ancestor himself would be obliged to do. Kelsey v. Hanmer, 18 Conn. 311. Where proof of title had been made by a copy from the registry of an officer's levy of an execution, and the adverse party thereupon produced the original return, in which were material alterations, it was held that this did not affect the admissibility of the copy in evidence, and that the burden of explaining and accounting for the alterations in the original did not rest on the party producing the copy. that where the party producing an instrument on notice is not a party to it, and claims no beneficial interest under it, the party calling for its production and offering it in evidence must prove its execution.7

§ 572. When witness cannot be found, or is incapable. A third class of exceptions to this rule arises from the circumstances of the witnesses themselves, the party, either from physical or legal obstacles, being unable to adduce them. Thus, if the witness is proved or presumed to be dead; 1(a) or cannot be found after diligent inquiry; 2 or, is resident beyond the sea; 3 or, is out of the jurisdiction of the court; 4(b) or, is a fictitious person, whose name has been placed upon the deed by the party who made it;5 or, if the instrument is lost, and the name of the subscribing witness is unknown; 6 or, if the witness is insane; 7 or, has subsequently become infamous; 8 or, has become the adverse party; 9 or, has been made executor or administrator to one of the parties, or has otherwise, and without the agency of the party, subsequently become interested, or otherwise incapacitated; 10 or was instruments, namely, the testimony of the subscribing witnesses; but when they are taken from the proper public repository, it is only necessary to prove the identity of the obligor with the party in the action. Whether this exception, recently asserted, will be generally admitted, remains to be seen.

§ 573 a. Proof of instrument by handwriting of the signer. A further exception to the rule requiring proof of handwriting has been admitted, in the case of letters received in reply to others proved to have been sent to the party. Thus, where the plaintiff's attorney wrote a letter addressed to the defendant at his residence, and sent it by the post, to which he received a reply purporting to be from the defendant; it was held, that the letter thus received was admissible in evidence, without proof of the defendant's handwriting, and that letters of an earlier date in the same handwriting might also be read, without other proof.²

§ 573 b. When the instrument is not directly in issue. A fifth exception to the rule requiring proof by the subscribing witness is admitted, where the instrument is not directly in issue, but comes incidentally in question in the course of the trial; in which case, its execution may be proved by any competent testimony, without calling the subscribing witness. 3 (a)

¹ Kello v. Maget, 1 Dev. & Bat. 414. The case of deeds enrolled would require a distinct consideration in this place, were not the practice so various in the different States, as to reduce the subject to a mere question of local law, not falling within the plan of this work. In general, it may be remarked, that, in all the United States, provision is made for the registration and enrolment of deeds of conveyance of lands; and that, prior to such registration, the deed must be acknowledged by the grantor, before the designated magistrate; and, in case of the death or refusal of the grantor, and in some other enumerated cases, the deed must be proved by witnesses, either before a magistrate, or in a court of record. But, generally speaking, such acknowledgment is merely designed to entitle the deed to registration, and registration is, in most States, not essential to passing the estate, but is only intended to give notoriety to the conveyance, as a substitute for livery of seisin. And such acknowledgment is not generally received, as prima facie evidence of the execution of the deed, unless by force of some statute, or immemorial usage, rendering it so; but the grantor, or party to be affected by the instrument, may still controvert its genuineness and validity. But where the deed falls under one of the executions, and has been proved per testes, there seems to be good reason for receiving this probate, duly authenticated, as sufficient prima facie proof of the execution; and such is understood to be the course of practice, as settled by the statutes of many of the United States. § 574. Search for subscribing witness. The degree of diligence in the search for the subscribing witnesses is the same which is required in the search for a lost paper, the principle being the same in both cases.4 It must be a strict, diligent, and honest inquiry and search, satisfactory to the court, under the circumstances of the case. It should be made at the residence of the witness, if known, and at all other places where he may be expected to be found; and inquiry should be made of his relatives, and others who may be supposed to be able to afford information. And the answers given to such inquiries may be given in evidence, they being not hearsay, but parts of the res gestæ.5 If there is more than one attesting witness, the absence of them all must be satisfactorily accounted for, in order to let in the secondary evidence.6

receipt of the goods; but there was no other proof that this person was the defendant. In the latter case, which was against Henry Thomas Ryde, as the acceptor of a bill of exchange, it appeared that a person of that name had kept cash at the bank where the bill was payable, and had drawn checks, which the cashier had paid. The cashier knew the person's handwriting by the cheeks, and testified that the acceptance was in the same writing; but he had not paid any check for some time, and did not personally know him, and there was no other proof of his identity with the defendant. The court, in both these cases, held that the evidence of identity was prima facic sufficient. In the latter case, the learned judges gave their reasons as follows: Lord Denman, C. J., "The doubt raised here has arisen out of the case of Whitelock v. Musgrove (1 C. & M. 511; s. c. 3 Tyrwh. 541); but there the circumstances were different. The party to be fixed with hability was a marksman, and the facts of the case made some explanation necessary. But where a person, in the course of the ordinary transactions of life, has signed his name to such an instrument as this, I do not think there is an instance in which evidence of identity has been required, except Jones v. Jones (9 M. & W. 75). There the name was proved to be very common in the country; and I do not say that evidence of this kind may not be rendered necessary by particular circumstances, as, for instance, length of time since the name was signed. But in cases where no particular circumstance tends to raise a question as to the party being the same, even identity of name is something from which an inference may be drawn. If the name were only John Smith, which is of very frequent occurrence, there might not be much ground for drawing the conclusion. But Henry Thomas Rydes, are not so numerous; and from that, and the circumstances generally, there is every reason to believe that the acceptor and the defendant are identical. The dictum of Bolland, B. (3 Tyrwh. 558), has been already answered. Lord Lyndhurst, C. B., asks (3 Tyrwh. 543), why the onus of proving a negative in these cases should be thrown upon the defendant; the answer is, because the proof is so casy. He might come into court, and have the witness asked whether he was the man. The supposition that the right man has been sued is reasonable, on account of the danger a party would incur, if he served process on the wrong; for, if he did so wilfully, the court would no doubt exercise their jurisdiction of punishing for a contempt. But the fraud is one which, in the majority of cases, it would not occur to any one to commit. The practice, as to proof, which has constantly prevailed in cases of this kind, shows how unlikely it is that such frands should occur. The doubt now suggested has never been raised before the late cases which have been referred to. The observations of Lord Abinger and Alderson, B., in Greenshields v. Crawford (9 M. & W. 314), apply to this case. 'The transactions of the world could not go on, if such an objection were to prevail. It is unfortunate that the doubt should ever have been raised; and it is best that we should sweep it away as soon as we can." — Patteson, J.: "I concur in all that has been said by my lord. And the rule always laid down in books of evidence agrees with our present decision. The execution of a deed has always been proved, by mere evidence of the subscribing witness's handwriting, if he was dead. The party executing an instrument may have changed his residence. Must a plaintiff show where he lived at the time of the execution, and then trace him through every change of habitation, until he is served with the writ? No such necessity can be imposed." — Williams, J.: "I am of the same opinion. It cannot be said here there was not some evidence of identity. A man of the defendant's name had kept money at the branch bank; and this acceptance is proved to be his writing. Then, is that man the defendant? That it is a acceptance is proved to be his writing. Then, is that man the defendant? That it is a person of the same name is some evidence, until another party is pointed out who might have been the acceptor. In Jones v. Jones (9 M. & W. 75), the same proof was relied upon; and Lord Abinger said: 'The argument for the plaintiff might be correct if the case had not introduced the existence of many Hugh Joness in the neighborhood where the note was made.' It appeared that the name Hugh Jones, in the particular part of Wales, was so common as hardly to be a name; so that a doubt was raised on the evidence by cross-examination. That is not so here; and therefore the conclusion must be different." therefore the conclusion must be different.'

§ 576. Proof by comparison of handwritings. In considering the proof of private writings, we are naturally led to consider the subject of the comparison of hands, upon which great diversities of opinion have been entertained. This expression seems formerly to have been applied to every case, where the genuineness of one writing was proposed to be tested before the jury, by comparing it with another, even though the latter were an acknowledged autograph; and it was held inadmissible, because the jury were supposed to be too illiterate to judge of this sort of evidence; a reason long since exploded.1 All evidence of handwriting, except where the witness saw the document written, is, in its nature, comparison. It is the belief which a witness entertains, upon comparing the writing in question with its exemplar in his mind, derived from some previous knowledge.2 The admissibility of some evidence of this kind is now too well established to be shaken. It is agreed that, if the witness has the proper knowledge of the party's handwriting, he may declare his belief in regard to the genuineness of the writing in question. He may also be interrogated as to the circumstances on which he founds his belief.3 The point upon which learned judges have differed in opinion is, upon the source from which this knowledge is derived, rather than as to the degree or extent of it.

§ 577. Same subject. There are two modes of acquiring this knowledge of the handwriting of another, either of which is universally admitted to be sufficient, to enable a witness to testify to its genuineness. The first is from having seen him write. It is of the obligor was held not regularly to be offered, unless the party was unable to prove the handwriting of the witness. But in Valentine v. Piper, 22 Pick. 90, proof of the handwriting of the party was esteemed more satisfactory than that of the witnesses. The order of the proofs, however, is a matter resting entirely in the discre-

6 Pullen v. Hutchinson, 12 Shepl. 249.

1 The admission of evidence by comparison of hands, in Col. Sidney's Case, 9 Howell's St. Tr. 467, was one of the grounds of reversing his attainder. Yet, though it clearly appears that his handwriting was proved by two witnesses, who had seen him write, and by a third who had paid bills purporting to have been indorsed by him, this was held illegal evidence in a criminal case.

held sufficient for this purpose, that the witness has seen him write but once, and then only his name. The proof in such case may be very light; but the jury will be permitted to weigh it. (a)The second mode is, from having seen letters, bills, or other documents, purporting to be the handwriting of the party, and having afterwards personally communicated with him respecting them; (b) or acted upon them as his, the party having known and acquiesced in such acts, founded upon their supposed genuineness; or, by such adoption of them into the ordinary business transactions of life, as induces a reasonable presumption of their being his own writings; evidence of the identity of the party being of course added aliunde, if the witness be not personally acquainted with him.²(c) In both these cases, the witness acquires his knowl-

v. § 579. Same subject. A third mode of acquiring knowledge of the party's handwriting was proposed to be introduced in the case of Doe v. Suckermore; 4 upon which, the learned judges being equally divided in opinion, no judgment was given; namely, by first satisfying the witness, by some information or evidence not falling under either of the two preceding heads, that certain papers were genuine, and then desiring the witness to study them, so as to acquire a knowledge of the party's handwriting, and fix an exemplar in his mind; and then asking him his opinion in regard to the disputed paper; or else, by offering such papers to the jury, with proof of their genuineness, and then asking the witness to testify his opinion, whether those and the disputed paper were written by the same person. This method supposes the writing to be generally that of a stranger; for if it is that of the party to the suit, and is denied by him, the witness may well derive his knowledge from papers, admitted by that party to be genuine, if such papers were not selected nor fabricated for the occasion, as has already been stated in the preceding section. It is obvious, that if the witness does not speak from his own knowledge, derived in the first or second modes before mentioned, but has derived it from papers shown to him for that purpose, the production of these papers may be called for, and their genuineness contested. So that the third mode of information proposed resolves itself into this question; namely, whether documents, irrelevant to the issues on the record, may be received in evidence at the trial, to enable the jury to institute a comparison of hands, or to enable a witness so to do.5

§ 580. Same subject. In regard to admitting such evidence, upon an examination in chief, for the mere purpose of enabling the jury to judge of the handwriting, the modern English decisions are clearly opposed to it. For this, two reasons have been as-

⁴ 5 Ad. & El. 703. In this case, a defendant in ejectment produced a will, and, on one day of the trial (which lasted several days), called an attesting witness, who swore that the attestation was his. On his cross-examination, two signatures to depositions, respecting the same will, in an ecclesiastical court, and several other signatures, were respecting the same will, in an ecclesiastical court, and several other signatures, were shown to him (none of these being in evidence for any other purpose of the cause), and he stated that he believed them to be his. On the following day, the plaintiff tendered a witness, to prove the attestation not to be genuine. The witness was an inspector at the Bank of England, and had no knowledge of the handwriting of the supposed attesting witness, except from having, previously to the trial and again between the two days, examined the signatures admitted by the attesting witness, which admission he had heard in court. Per Lord Denman, C. J., and Williams, J., such evidence was receivable; per Patteson and Coleridge, JJ., it was not.

It has been held that a paper proposed to be used as a standard cannot be proved to be an original and a genuine signature merely by the opinion of a witness that it is so; such opinion being derived solely from his general knowledge of the handwriting of the person whose signature it purported to be. Com. v. Eastman, 1 Cush. 189, 217; Martin v. Maguire, 7 Gray, 177; Bacon v. Williams, 13 Gray, 525, but this question is in the discretion of the trial judge, see infra. An expert may testify, whether in his opinion a signature is a genuine one or simulated, although he has no knowledge of the handwriting of the party whose signature it is claimed to be. Withee v. Rowe, 45 Me. 571. The question of the genuineness of the signature to be used as a comparison is not one for the jury but for the court. The court should determine whether the signature is a genuine one or not; if not genuine, exclude it from the jury; if genuine, let it be used by them in comparison with the disputed It is the better rule that the court should determine the question as a preliminary one, and not perplex the jury with so many questions as would arise where a party wished to use a great many signatures by way of comparison: Costelo v. Crowell, 139 Mass. 590; Com. v. Coe, 115 Mass. 481; Rowell v. Fuller, 59 Vt. 691. The questions involved in this rule of admitting standards of comparison were discussed with great clearness in a recent case in Maine. State v. Thompson, 80 Me. 196. In that case the defendant was tried upon an indictment for libel. In the trial of the case the government offered certain writings as being in the handwriting of the defendant, for the purpose of being used as a standard of comparison. Two witnesses, claiming to have seen the defendant write, and to be acquainted with his handwriting, were introduced to testify that the writings thus offered were in the handwriting of the defendant. Thereupon the court admitted the writing, for the purpose for which they were offered, against the defendant's objection. Afterwards, during the trial, expert testimony was introduced by the government, and these writings were used by them as a standard of comparison, to which the de-fendant also objected. To the ruling and decision of the court admitting the writings as a standard of comparison, and their use by experts, the defendant excepted; and the court says: "The rule in England is now the same as in Massachusetts and Vermont. For centuries, however, it was otherwise, and the English courts denied the admissibility of such testimony altogether, until 1854, when Parliament, by 17 and 18 Victoria, c. 125, passed what is known as 'The Common Law Procedure Act,' which provides that 'comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine, shall be permitted to be made by witnesses; and such writ-ings, and the evidence of the witnesses respecting the same, may be submitted to the court and jury as evidence of the genuineness, or otherwise, of the writing in dispute.' Under this rule, when any writing is proved to be genuine to the satisfaction of the presiding judge, it shall be admitted as a standard of comparison. By the English rule under this statute the jury need not consider or inquire into the genuineness of the writing introduced for the purpose of comparison, as the statute obviates the necessity of any such inquiry, and makes the finding of the judge conclusive on that point. In the light of the authorities, and the decisions in those jurisdictions where the same rule prevails as in this State, in relation to proof of handwriting by comparison, we believe the rule adopted by them, upon the question by whom the genuineness of the standard is to be determined, to be the more correct and satisfactory one. Notwithstanding that, however, there are courts of high standing, and for whose decisions we have great respect, which have adopted a difterent rule, and which hold that the jury should ultimately pass upon the question. Such is the rule in New Hampshire, where, as it is well understood, the doctrine of proof of handwriting by comparison has always clung more tenaciously to the conservative and English common law rule, than ever appeared satisfactory to the courts of Maine, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont, and some of the other States. . . . In the case before us the testimony in proof of the genuineness of the standard, came from witnesses, who, if they are to be entitled to credit, were qualified to testify in relation to the genuineness of the defendant's handwriting. It was in accordance with the well settled doctrine of this State as laid down in Woodman v. Dana, 52 Maine, 13, where the court in an exhaustive and carefully considered opinion by Rice, J., reviewed the authorities, and stated, as a principle well established, that the handwriting of a person may be proved by any person who has acquired a knowledge of it, as by having seen him write, from having carried on a correspondence with him, or, as was decided in Hammond's Case, 2 Maine, 33, from an acquaintance gained from having seen handwriting acknowledged or proved to be his. Page v. Homans, 14 Maine, 481; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 577. The New Hampshire courts speaking of what proof is necessary in establishing the genuineness of the standard, say that any competent evi-dence tending to prove that the paper offered as a standard of comparison is genuine, is to be received, whether the evidence be in the nature of an admission, or the opinion of a witness who knows his handwriting, or of any other kind whatever. And in Vermont, in the case of Rowell v. Fuller, 59 Vt. 691, already cited, it was insisted in argument that the evidence was legally insufficient to warrant the court in admitting the standard in evidence as genuine; but the court say, that while great care should be taken that the standard of comparison should be genuine, yet any evidence pertinent to the issue is admissible. In the case under consideration there was the testimony of two witnesses who stated their knowledge of the handwriting of the specimens offered, and that the handwriting was that of the defendant. It was upon this evidence that the court admitted the same as a standard of comparison, and for no other purpose as stated by the court, and as the exceptions themselves show. The decision of the judge presiding was based upon certain elements of fact, as to whether the specimens of writing were sufficiently proved to have been written by the defendant to allow them to be introduced and submitted to the jury as a standard." In Minnesota, in the case of Morrison v. Porter, 35 Minn. 425, the questions were upon the admission in evidence of an instrument not otherwise relevant, containing a signature of the plaintiff admitted to be genuine, to enable a comparison to be made between that signature and the disputed signature in issue; and expert witnesses were allowed to give their opinions, based upon comparison, the court saying: "Upon the question thus presented, as to whether a writing admitted to be in the hand of the person whose signature is in issue may be received in evidence for the purpose of comparison, the authorities are so at variance that we are at liberty to adopt the rule of evidence which seems to be most consistent with reason, and conducive to the best results. At common law, and generally in the United States, it has been the rule that where other writings admitted to be genuine, are already in evidence for other purposes in the case, comparison may be made between such writings and the instrument in question. If such a comparison is conducive to the ends of truth, and is allowable, there would seem to be but little reason for refusing to allow a comparison with other writings admitted to be genuine, although not in evidence for other purposes. The objections which have been urged to receiving other instruments, for the purpose of comparison, have been the multiplying of collateral issues; the danger of fraud

or unfairness in selecting instruments for that purpose, from the fact that handwriting is not always the same, and is affected by age, and by various circumstances which may attend the writing; and the surprise to which a party against whom such evidence is produced may be subjected. When the writings presented are admitted to be genuine, so that col-lateral issues are not likely to arise, nor the adverse party to be surprised by evidence which he is unable to meet, these objections seem to us to be insufficient as reasons for excluding the evidence. If such evidence has apparent and direct probative force, it should not be excluded unless for substantial reasons. In general, and from necessity, the authenticity of handwriting must be subject to proof by comparison of some sort, or by testimony which is based upon comparison, between the writing in question and that which is in some manner recognized or shown to be genuine. This is everywhere allowed, through the opinions of witnesses who have acquired a knowledge, more or less complete, of the handwriting of a person, as having seen him write, or from acquaintance with papers authenticated as genu-In such cases the conception of the handwriting retained in the mind of the witness becomes a standard for comparison, by reference to which his opinion is formed, and given in evidence. It would seem that a standard generally not less satisfactory, and very often much more satisfactory, is afforded by the opportunity for examining, side by side, the writing in dispute and other writings of unquestioned authenticity; and this, we think, is in accordance with the common judgment and experience of men. The evils that may be suggested as likely to arise from the selection of particular writings for the purposes of comparison, may be left, as all unfair or misleading evidence must be, to be corrected by other evidence, and by the intelligent judgment of the court or jury." The statute on this point in New York is somewhat peculiar (Stats. 1880, c. 36), and has been the subject of discussion in several cases. In the case of Sudlow v. Warshing, 108 N. Y. 522, an expert in handwriting called as a witan expert in handwriting, called as a witness for the defendants, was asked by their counsel this question: "What evidence, if any, do you find in the signatures to the disputed deed of their being simulated imitations instead of genuine signatures?" The question was allowed, and the witness answered "none whatever." Plaintiffs excepted to the allowance of this question, and based their exception on the case of Kowing v. Manly, 49 N. Y. 192, decided in 1872. That case decided that where the plaintiff had not introduced any evidence to show that a paper, produced and relied upon by the defendants, was a simulated handwriting, but had merely testified that it was not written by him, it was not competent for the defendants to offer evidence to prove that the paper was not in a simulated handwriting. In the case of Sudlow v. Warshing, supra, the facts were that two of the grantors in a deed were dead, namely, the widow and a son of John W. Sudlow. The plaintiffs, while denying the genuineness of the signatures to the disputed deed, testified that they bore a resemblance to their signatures and to those of the deceased grantors, and, in at least one instance, the witness testified to the signature being a fair imitation of his own. Comparisons of the disputed deed with other writings, conceded to be genuine, were also made through the witnesses. It was held that these facts were sufficient to warrant the allowance of the question. In Miles v. Loomis, 75 N. Y. 288, it was decided that it was competent for experts, upon a comparison of signatures without any other knowledge of the testator's writing, to express an opinion as to whether the disputed writing appeared a natural or simulated hand. Since the decision in Kowing v. Manly, chap. 36 of the Laws of 1880, was passed, by which the rules of evidence in respect of disputed handwritings were enlarged beyond what had been permitted under then existing rules. Peck v. Callaghan, 95 N. Y. 74. In this last case (Peck v. Callaghan), the evidence objected to was the introducof a decedent, offered for the purpose of enabling experts to give their opinions as to the genuineness of her signature to the will by comparisons with such specimens, and excepted to the decision of the surrogate admitting such evi-The evidence was admitted, and the court says of chapter 36 of the Laws of 1880: "This act was evidently intended to enlarge the rules of evidence and extend the facilities for testing the handwriting of a party, the genuineness of whose signature was disputed, beyond the opportunities afforded by the then existing rules. It was therefore competent to give the evidence of experts as to the genuineare papers belonging to the witness, who was himself previously acquainted with the party's handwriting, and who exhibits them in confirmation and explanation of his own testimony. 2 (b)

A press copy of a letter might furnish a very unsatisfactory standard of comparison by which to determine whether another paper, the handwriting of which was in controversy, was written by the same person; but, although incompetent as a means of comparison, by which to judge of the characteristics of a handwriting which is in dispute, it might still retain enough of its original character to be identified by a witness, when its own genuineness was called in question. Bigelow, C. J., in Commonwealth v. Jeffries, 7 Allen, 562.

ness of handwriting by comparison with other specimens of the party's handwriting, which would have been admitted in evidence for other lawful purposes on the trial; but it would not have been competent to introduce such specimens for the sole purpose of comparison. Miles v. Loomis, 75 N. Y. 288. . . . The act in question leaves the character, number, and sufficiency of identification of the specimens offered in evidence for the purposes of comparison entirely to the discretion of the court, and thus attempts to obviate the objections formerly existing to this species of evidence. The language of the act, however, which permits the introduction of specimens of a person's handwriting, for the purpose of comparison, when proved to the satisfaction of the court, authorizes only the admission of such writings as purport to be the handwriting of the person, the genuineness of whose signature is disputed. The disputed writing referred to in the statute relates only to the instrument which is the subject of controversy in the action, and the specimens of handwriting admissible thereunder are those of the person purporting to have executed the instrument in controversy. Any other construction would place it within the power of a contestant to introduce in evidence specimens of the handwriting of as many persons as he should see fit to charge with the act of forging the signature in dispute."

Doe r. Wilson, 10 Moo. P. C. 502; Cobbett v. Kilminster, 4 F. & F. 490; King v. Donahoe, 110 Mass. 155. In Com. v. Allen, 128 Mass. 46, the decision in King v. Donahoe was affirmed and the principle stated to be, that the presiding judge may, in his discretion, allow signatures to be written at the trial by one of the parties, for comparison, or he may refuse to allow such signatures to be written. Cf. Reg. v. Taylor, 6 Cox, C. C. 58. In Williams v. State, 61 Ala. 33, it was held error to allow a witness to write his name, in order to corroborate his testimony, but it was said to be admissible on cross-examination (referring to King v. Donahoe, and Stranger v. Searle), and on cross-examination this was allowed in Bronner v. Loomis, 14 Hun, 341. Cf. Chandler v. Le Barron, 45 Me. 534. In determining the question of the authorship of a writing, the resemblance of the characters is by no means the only test. The use of capitals, abbreviations, punctuation, mode of dividing into paragraphs, of making erasures and interlineations, idiomatic expressions, orthography, grammatical constructions, style of composition, and the like, are all elements upon which to form the judgment: The Handwriting of Junius, &c., by Chabot. At the Greenwich County Court, a plaintiff denied that a receipt thus worded, "Received the Hole of the above," was in his handwriting. On being asked to write a sentence in which the word "whole" occurred, he wrote it "Hole," and then ran away to escape a prosecution for perjury. A press copy, and duplicates made by a copying ma-chine, have been held to be inadmis§ 581 a. Same subject. A distinction, however, has been recently taken, between the case of collateral writings offered in evidence to prove the general style or character of the party's autograph, and of similar writings when offered to prove a peculiar mode of spelling another person's name, or other words, in order to show from this fact that the principal writing was his own. Thus where, to an action for a libel, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff had sent to him a libellous letter, and, to prove this, gave in evidence the envelope, in which the defendant's name was spelt with a superfluous t, and then offered in evidence some other letters of the plaintiff, in which he had spelt the defendant's name in the same peculiar manner; which last-mentioned letters Patteson, J., rejected; it was held that the rejection was wrong, and that the letters were admissible.

Brookes v. Tichbourn, 14 Jur. 1122; 2 Eng. Law & Eq. 374. In this case, Parke, B., after stating the case, observed as follows: "On showing cause, it was hardly disputed that, if the habit of the plaintiff so to spell the word was proved, it was not some evidence against the plaintiff, to show that he wrote the libel; indeed, we think that proposition cannot be disputed, the value of such evidence depending on the degree of peculiarity in the mode of spelling, and the number of occasions in which the plaintiff had used it; but it was objected, that the mode of proof of that habit was improper, and that the habit should be proved as the character of handwriting, not by producing one or more specimens and comparing them, but by some witness who was acquainted with it, from having seen the party write, or corresponding with him. But we think this is not like the case of general style or character of handwriting; the object is not to show similarity of the form of the letters and the mode of writing of a particular word, but to prove a peculiar mode of spelling words, which might be evinced by the plaintiff having orally spelt it in a different way, or written it in that way, once or oftener, in any sort of character, the more frequently the greater the value of the evidence. For that purpose, one or more specimens written by him, with that peculiar orthography, would be admissible. We are of opinion, therefore, that this evidence ought to have been received, and, not having been received, the rule for a new trial must be made absolute." In Jackson v. Phillips, 9 Cowen, 94, where the facts were of a similar character, the collateral deed was offered and rejected on the sole ground of comparison of hands; the distinction in the text not having been taken or alluded to.

sible as standards of comparison. Commonwealth v. Eastman, I Cush. (Mass.) 189. A photographic copy of a pay-roll is not admissible from which to prove its forgery, when the original is procurable. Blatchford, J., in U. S. v. Messman, U. S. D. C. So. Dist. N. Y. February, 1874. But in Tichborne's Case, photographs of letters and documents were used in facilitating the comparison of handwriting, for the purpose of identifying the writer; and this would seem to be the better law. Photographs are not strictly copies, but rather facsimiles. Magnified copies were admitted in Marcy v. Barnes, 16 Gray (Mass.), 161. In Tome v. Parkersburg Br. R. R. Co., 39 Md. 36, photographs of genuine and forged signatures were offered, but rejected, not on the ground that they were photographs, but on the ground that the genuineness of a signature could not be proved by a comparison of two writings.

§ 583. Effect of private writings. The effect of private writings, when offered in evidence, has been incidentally considered, under various heads, in the preceding pages, so far as it is established and governed by any rules of law. The rest belongs to the jury,

§ 584. Conclusion. Having thus completed the original design of this volume, in a view of the principles and rules of the law of evidence, understood to be common to all the United States, this part of the work is here properly brought to a close. The student will not fail to observe the symmetry and beauty of this branch of the law, under whatever disadvantages it may labor from the manner of treatment; and will rise from the study of its principles, convinced, with Lord Erskine, that "they are founded in the charities of religion - in the philosophy of nature - in the truths of history - and in the experience of common life." 2

 2 24 Howell's St. Tr. 966. [It may be convenient here to advert to six practical rules of some importance, all of which will be found applicable to evidence of every description. First, where evidence is offered for a particular purpose, and an objection description. First, where evidence is offered for a particular purpose, and an objection is taken to admissibility for that purpose, if the court pronounces in favor of its general admissibility in the cause, a court of error, on exceptions taken (a bill of exceptions cannot be tendered on a criminal trial, R. v. Esdaile, 1 Fost. & Fin. 213, 223, per Ld. Campbell), will support the decision of the court below, provided the evidence be admissible for any purpose. The Irish Society v. Bp. of Derry, 12 Cl. & Fin. 641, 665. The proper course for the opposing counsel to take in such a case would seem to be, to call upon the judge to explain to the jury, that the evidence, though generally admissible in the cause, furnishes no proof of the particular fact in question; and then, should the judge refuse to do so, his direction might be the subject of a distinct exception, or an application might be made to the court above for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. Id. 672-674, per Ld. Brougham. Secondly, where inadmissible evition, or an application might be made to the court above for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. Id. 672-674, per Ld. Brougham. Secondly, where inadmissible evidence is received at the trial vithout objection, the opposite party cannot afterwards object to its having been received, Reed v. Lamb, 29 L. J. Ex. 452; s. c. 6 H. & N. 75; or obtain a new trial on the ground that the judge did not expressly warn the jury to place no reliance upon it, Goslin v. Corry, 7 M. & Gr. 342; Doe v. Benjamin, 9 A. & E. 644. Thirdly, where evidence is objected to at the trial, the nature of the objections must be distinctly stated, whether a bill of exceptions be tendered or not: and, on either moving for a new trial, on account of its improper admission, or on arguing the eventions the coursel will not be permitted to rely on any other objections than those exceptions, the counsel will not be permitted to rely on any other objections than those taken at Nisi Prius. Williams v. Wilcox, 8 A. & E. 314, 337; Ferrand v. Milligan, 7 Q. B. 730; Bain v. Whitehaven & Furness Junct. Ry. Co., 3 H. of L. Cas. 1, 15–17, per Ld. Brougham. Fourthly, where evidence is tendered at the trial on an untenable
- (a) The rule in England has been stated to be at present "that the law recognizes no degrees in the various kinds of such evidence," and that if a paper, whether it be a will or deed, be lost, or in the hands of the adversary, who, after notice, refuses to produce, the party giving the notice may at once have recourse to parol testimony, "though it appear that he has in his possession a counterpart, a ne has in his possession a counterpart, a copy, or an abstract of the document." Cf. Hall v. Ball, 3 M. & G. 242; Brown v. Woodman, 6 C. & P. 206; Jeans v. Wheedon, 2 M. & Rob. 486; Brown v. Brown, 27 L. J. (Q. B.) 173; Quick v. Quick, 33 L. J. (P. & M.) 146; Johnson v. Lyford, 37 L. J. (P. & M.) 65. ground, and is consequently rejected, the court will not grant a new trial merely because it has since been discovered that the evidence was admissible on another ground; but the party must go much further, and show, first, that he could not by due diligence have offered the evidence on the proper ground at the trial, and, next, that manifest injustice will eusue from its rejection. His position, at the best, is that of a party who has discovered fresh evidence since the trial. Doe v. Beviss, 18 L. J. C. P. 128; s. c. 7 Com. B. 456. Fifthly, where evidence is rejected at the trial, the party proposing it should formally tender it to the judge, and request him to make a note of the fact; and, if this request be refused, he should then tender a bill of exceptions. If this course has not been pursued, and the judge has no note on the subject, the counsel cannot afterwards complain of the rejection of the evidence. Gibbs v. Pike, 9 M. & W. 351, 360, 361; Whitehouse v. Henmant, 27 L. J. Ex. 295; Penn v. Bibby, 36 L. J. Ch. 455, 461, per Ld. Chelmsford, Ch. Lastly, where evidence has been improperly admitted or rejected at Nisi Prius, the court will grant a new trial, unless it be clear beyond all doubt that the error of the judge could have had no possible effect upon the verdict, in which case they will not enable the defeated party to protract the litigation. Wright v. Doe d. Tatham, 7 A. & E. 330; Baron de Rutzen v. Farr, 4 A. & E. 53, 57; Crease v. Barrett, 1 C. M. & R. 919, 933; Doe v. Langfield, 16 M. & W. 497. These cases overrule Doe v. Tyler, 6 Bing, 561; s. c. 4 M. & P. 377; a dictum of Ld. Tenterden in Trywhitt v. Wynne, 2 B. & Ald. 559; and one by Sir J. Mansfield in Horford v. Wilson, 1 Taunt. 14. See Mortimer v. M'Callan, 6 M. & W. 75; Edwards v. Evans, 3 East, 451. It may further be stated, that the wrongful reception of evidence will not furnish less available ground for a new trial, although the jury accompany their verdict with a distinct and positive statement that they have arrived at it independ
