WMPH Statement on the English Wikipedia's Blackout

On January 18, after gathering the input of over 1,800 editors, the English Wikipedia property. All of a sudden, we were made to "imagine a world without free knowledge every single day."

The Stop Online Piracy Act (SOPA) and the Protect Intellectual Property Act (PIPA) hardly care about, but the repercussions of these bills, once enacted into law, with the rest of the Wikimedia community, fears that these will severely impair the ever-connected world as the passage of SOPA and PIPA will absolutely reverberate as a bastion of free speech and expression.

In the interest of protecting American intellectual property against pirates, we and media forms that aim to foster global understanding and the bridging of diverse people, Wikimedia Philippine would not accede to.

We hope that this blackout will deliver a very important message: that the internet should understand the importance of the internet's freedom in providing information. Wikipedia's content has been, is, and will always be neutral." But our content and contributors like you have done will be jeopardized by laws like SOPA and PIPA that we love.

The Filipino Wikimedia community is one with the entire Wikimedia community in support of internet freedom. We seek everyone's support and understanding in our quest for free knowledge.

Mabuhay ang Wikipedia!
