(2) The time of notice depends on no technical considerations nor fixed rules; the question is merely whether the time allowed was such that the opponent was fairly and truly able to obtain it, ready for production, if he had wished to:

1845, Alderson, B., in Lawrence v. Clark, 14 M. & W. 250, 253: "All these cases depend on their particular circumstances; and the question in each case is whether the notice was given in reasonable time to enable the plaintiff to be prepared to produce the document at the time of the trial"; Pollock, C. B.: "What is sufficient in one case may not be so in another; and much therefore must be left to the discretion of the presiding judge, subject of course to correction by the Court."

The matter is therefore distinctly one for the determination of the trial Court, for it must depend entirely on the circumstances of each case. The numerous rulings on the subject ought not to be treated as precedents;⁴

facts); 1816, Doe v. Grey, 1 Stark. 283 (to the wife of the defendant's attorney the night before, at her house, insufficient); 1829, Aflalo v. Foudrinier, M. & M. 334, note (notice to the attorney two days before, the documents being with the client at a distance, held insufficient); 1832, Houseman v. Roberts, 5 C. & P. 394 (should be served on the attorney); 1838, Byrne v. Harvey, 2 Moo. & Rob. 89 (notice to an attorney not in time to communicate with the client, held insufficient); 1849, R. v. Hankins, 3 Cox Cr. 434, 436 (notice to attorney, sufficient); United States: 1873, Lathrop v. Mitchell, 47 Ga. 610, 612 (notice to an agent, held insufficient on the facts); 1880, Phillips v. Lindsey, 65 id. 139, 143 (notice to attorney of an opponent out of the State, sufficient); Miss. Annot. Code, 1892, § 222 (any notice required to be served, to be as valid if served on an attorney as on the party); 1831, McPherson v. Rathbone, 7 Wend. 216 (notice to the opponent's attorney by subpoena, not sufficient as notice for documents in the party's own custody); 1837, Mattocks v. Stearns, 9 Vt. 326, 335 (opponent absconded from the State; notice to his attorney held sufficient; "the party cannot be required to follow him to the world's end").

² 1825, Taplin v. Atty., 3 Bing. 164 (to a sheriff's attorney, for a document in the under-sheriff's hands, sufficient); 1897, Morehead Bkg. Co. v. Walker, 121 N. C. 115, 28 S. E. 253 (notice in attorney's possession; notice to the client sufficient).

Distinguish the question already discussed ante, § 1200; there the inquiry is whether the custody of a third person is to be considered as the opponent's possession at all, irrespective of the proper method of notice.

³ 1834, Seely v. Cole, Wright 681 (notice by any one by authority of the offeror, sufficient).

⁴ Besides the following cases, compare the rule for documents present in Court (ante, § 1204): England: 1803, Sims v. Kitchen, 5 Esp. 46 (notice at seven o'clock the evening before trial, to a servant of the attorney, held insufficient); 1829, Tindal, C. J., in Aflalo v. Foudrinier, M. & M. 334, note ("There must be at least a possibility of getting the instruments in consequence of the notice"); 1830, R. v. Haworth, 4 C. & P. 254 (since the Assizes began, held insufficient; a reasonable time before the Assizes required); 1832, Houseman v. Roberts, 5 id. 394 (notice on Saturday, for Mouday's trial, not sufficient); 1832, Doe v. Spitty, 3 B. & Ad. 182 (notice the day before the Assizes, insufficient on the facts); 1833, Trist v. Johnson, 1 Moo. & Rob. 259 (notice served on the attorney after Assizes begun, held insufficient); 1833, R. v. Ellicombe, ib. 260 (notice served on the defendant after Assizes begun, the defendant being in jail, held insufficient); 1836, George v. Thompson, 4 Dowl. Pr. 656 (notice to the attorney the day before the Assizes, insufficient; "it is peculiarly a question for the judge at the trial"); 1836, Atkins v. Meredith, ib. 658 (notice "on the evening previous to the trial is in general sufficient"; but here to the attorney for books in the client's hands, held insufficient); 1839, Holt v. Miers, 9 C. & P. 191, 195 (the night before, insufficient); 1839, Sturge v. Buchanan, 10 A. & E. 598, 603 ("in all cases depends on circumstances"); 1840, Hughes v. Budd, 8 Dowl. Pr. 315, 317 (a notice served on Sunday, the night before the trial, on the attorney, distant from his office, held insufficient); 1840, Firkin v. Edwards, 9 C. & P. 478 (sufficiently early, on the facts; Williams, J.: "The question is whether under all the circumstances reasonable notice has been given"); 1840, Gibbons v. Powell, ib. 634 (notice the night before to the attorney, held sufficient, the document being one which he and not the client they were for the most part a wasteful expense of time for the appellate Judiciary.

Where the opponent is out of the jurisdiction, it would seem that the time of notice should not be affected by this fact, since, in general, for the purposes of a trial, a party must himself bear the risk of his absence from the scene, — especially as in the present instance the only function of a notice is to make it clear that the proponent is reasonably unable to obtain the document. Where only the document is out of the jurisdiction, however, the reasonableness of the time of notice should be affected by this circumstance; for the opponent, being otherwise ready for trial, might be equally disposed to produce the document if notified in time to obtain it.⁵ That the opponent would have); 1841, Foster v. Pointer, ib. 718 (notice the day before, held sufficient where it appeared that the document was destroyed); 1842, Lloyd v. Mostyn, 2 Dowl. Pr. n. s. 476, 480 (Parke, B.: “[the principle is] that reasonable time to produce a document must be given”; here the defendant long knew that the document would be wanted, and a notice the day before trial was held sufficient); 1845, Lawrence v. Clark, 14 M. & W. 250 (notice in London the evening before a Middlesex trial, not sufficient); 1847, Sturm v. Jeffree, 2 C. & K. 442 (since the notice is “for general convenience and for the attainment of justice,” notice during trial suffices if practically in ample time); 1849, R. v. Hankins, 3 Cox Cr. 434, 436 (the day before the trial, sufficient); 1852, R. v. Hanip, 6 id. 167, 169 (notice the day before the trial to the London agents of the country attorney, sufficient); 1853, R. v. Kitson, ib. 159 (notice the day before, at a residence thirty miles from court, insufficient); Can.: 1866, Abel v. Light, 6 All. N. Br. 423 (notice on the day before trial, held sufficient on the facts); Ala.: 1884, Littleton v. Clayton, 77 Ala. 571, 574 (“a reasonable time, — sufficiently long to enable a party to procure and produce it without due inconvenience”); Cal.: 1859, Burke v. T. M. W. Co., 12 Cal. 403, 407 (“a question of discretion”); C. C. P. 1872, §§ 1855, 1933 (“reasonable notice”); 1898, People v. Vasalo, 120 id. 168, 52 Pac. 305 (opponent’s refusal to produce within statutory time, whether that interval is needed or not; secondary proof allowed); Conn.: 1889, State v. Swift, 57 Conn. 508, 18 Atl. 664 (notice at trial, with readiness to give time for production; opponent not asking time nor producing; held sufficient); Haw.: 1876, R. v. Lenahan, 3 Haw. 714, 716 (the trial Court determines reasonableness); Ida.: Rev. St. 1887, §§ 5991, 5999 (“reasonable notice”); Ill.: 1842, Cummings v. McKinney, 5 Ill. 57 (discretion of the trial Court); 1861, Warner v. Campbell, 26 id. 282, 286 (two days before trial, sufficient on the facts); Ia.: 1859, Greenough v. Shelden, 9 Ia. 503, 506 (“reasonable time”); 1898, Brock v. Ins. Co., 106 id. 30, 75 N. W. 683 (trial Court’s discretion); La.: 1844, Hills v. Jacobs, 7 Rob. 406, 413 (notice sufficient on the facts); 1849, Plympton v. Preston, 4 La. An. 360 (notice at the trial, sufficient on the facts); Me.: 1829, Emerson v. Fisk, 6

Greenl. 200, 202, 206 (notice on the first day of the trial, the opponent’s residence being a few rods away, held insufficient, under a rule of Court requiring notice before the trial); Md.: 1836, Divers v. Fulton, 8 G. & J. 202, 208 (notice to the attorney two days before trial, held sufficient on the facts; the notice must be “reasonable in point of time”); 1852, Glenn v. Rogers, 3 Md. 312, 320 (“no precise rule can be laid down”; here notice just before drawing the jury was held insufficient); Mich.: 1888, Julius K. Optical Co. v. Treat, 72 Mich. 599, 40 N. W. 912 (time unreasonable on the facts); Minn.: 1866, Winona v. Huff, 11 Minn. 119, 129 (“depends upon the circumstances in each case, and is a preliminary matter addressed to the judgment of the Court”); Mont.: C. C. P. § 3229 (“reasonable notice”); Nev.: Gen. St. 1885, § 3449 (“reasonable notice”); Or.: C. C. P. § 759 (“reasonable notice”); S. C.: 1901, Worth v. Norton, 60 S. C. 293, 38 S. E. 605 (two hours’ notice for a document in another county, held insufficient); Tenn.: 1808, Kimble v. Joslin, 1 Overt. 379 (“reasonable notice”); 1872, Burke v. Shelby, 9 Heisk. 175, 177 (notice given in the plea, sufficient); Utah: Rev. St. 1898, §§ 3401, 3410 (“reasonable notice”).

⁵ The rulings do not always make this distinction, and are not harmonious: England: 1824, Drabble v. Donner, Ry. & Mo. 47 (four days’ notice to a person domiciled in Denmark, but present in London, the documents presumably being in Denmark, held sufficient); 1825, Bryan v. Wagstaff, 2 C. & P. 125, 127 (party abroad, notice given two months before; Abbott, C. J.: “I think that a person leaving the country and putting his case into the hands of his attorney must be taken to leave in his attorney’s hands papers material to the cause; . . . if it were not so, a man might, as soon as notice of trial was given, set sail for the East Indies, and the other party must then delay proceeding with his cause till his return”); 1840, Hughes v. Budd, 8 Dowl. Pr. 315, 317 (a week’s notice, served during opponent’s absence in the North, sufficient); 1848, Ehrensperger v. Anderson, 3 Exch. 148, 153, 154 (party from India notified while in London before the trial; intimated to be insufficient); United States: 1862, Bushnell v. Colony, 28 Ill. 204 (letter in New York; a day or two’s notice, not sufficient); 1889, Mortlock v. Williams, 76 Mich. 568, 573,

is physically or legally incapable of personal appearance is of course immaterial as regards the time of notice.⁶

(3) As to the tenor and form of the notice, first, it should be in writing,—not so much because it is thereby more correctly or surely provable, as because it is intended to procure the document and thus is more likely to attain its purpose if filed with the other papers in the cause.⁷ Next, the particularity of the description of the document desired should depend on no formal tests; it is enough if the document desired is so described that it could be readily known by the opponent and with certainty distinguished from others:

1839, Denman, L. C. J., in Rogers v. Custance, 2 Moo. & Rob. 179, 181, “said that the Court did not mean to lay down any general rule as to what the notice ought to contain; that much must depend on the particular circumstances of each case; but where enough was stated on the notice to leave no doubt that the party must have been aware the particular instrument would be called for, the notice must be considered sufficient to let in secondary evidence.”⁸

§ 1209. Same: (c) Failure to Produce; what constitutes Non-Production. It has already been seen (ante, § 1199) that the present excuse for a proponent’s non-production rests on the broad fact that he cannot obtain it from the opponent,—a fact involving three separate elements, namely, the opponent’s possession, a demand or notice to produce, and his failure to produce.

43 N. W. 592 (notice for letters in another State, insufficient on the facts); 1892, Pitt v. Emmous, 92 id. 542, 544, 52 N. W. 1004 (notice on same day, possessor being in another State, insufficient); 1893, Dade v. Ius Co., 54 Minn. 336, 56 N. W. 48 (notice at trial for documents in another State, insufficient on the facts).

⁶ 1851, R. v. Robinson, 5 Cox Cr. 183 (on the defendant in jail, sufficient; Erle, J.: “The argument [against it] . . . might be just as applicable to a case, where the notice was served on a person bed-ridden or incapable of moving”).

⁷ It always is in writing, and is so assumed to be in the preceding cases (except when given at the trial, ante, § 1204); but the decisions to that effect are rare: 1842, Cummings v. McKinney, 5 Ill. 57.

⁸ The rulings vary in their requirements, and should not be taken as precedents for the specific facts: England: 1816, Harvey v. Morgan, 2 Stark. 17, 19 (mistake in the title of the plaintiff assignees, held fatal); 1825, Jones v. Edwards, 1 McCl. & Y. 139 (“notice to produce letters and copies of letters, also all books relating to this cause,” held insufficient); 1825, France v. Lincy, Ry. & Mo. 341 (to prove notice of dishonor, a general notice of all letters, papers, etc., held insufficient); 1837, Jacob v. Lee, 2 Moo. & Rob. 33 (a notice to produce “all and every letters written by the said plaintiff to the said defendant relating to the matters in dispute in this action,” held sufficient); 1839, Rogers v. Custance, ib. 179 (a general notice to produce all books, extracts, etc., held sufficient on the facts; see quotation supra); 1841, Morris v. Hauser, ib. 392 (a general notice to produce all letters between the parties from 1837 to 1841, held sufficient); 1845, Lawrence v. Clark, 14 M. & W. 250, 251 (notice wrongly entitled as to the Court; held sufficient; Alderson, B.: “Would the notice be bad if one of the names were spelled wrong? The question is whether the party has had such a notice as to justify the Court in admitting the secondary evidence”; disapproving Harvey v. Morgan); 1847, Smyth v. Sandeman, 2 Cox Cr. 239 (notice specifying three letters “and also all others, etc., in the general words usually employed”; held insufficient, semble, as to any other than the three specified); 1858, Justice v. Elstob, 1 F. & F. 256, 258 (description of receipts held sufficient); 1858, Graham v. Oldis, ib. 262 (description of agreement held sufficient); United States: 1859, Burke v. T. M. W. Co., 12 Cal. 403, 408 (“Such description as will apprise a man of ordinary intelligence of the document desired is enough”); 1839, State v. Lockwood, 5 Blackf. 144 (terms of notice not sufficiently shown); 1840, Bemis v. Charles, 1 Metc. 440, 443 (notice sufficient where it was “impossible for the defendant to have doubted” what it referred to); 1895, McDowell v. Ins. Co., 164 Mass. 444, 41 N. E. 665 (notice to produce all letters, etc., received by defendant from plaintiff since the time of the fire alleged in the declaration, sufficient); 1873, Lockhart v. Camfield, 48 Miss. 471 (title bond already once produced on notice; ambiguous notice to produce a “deed,” sufficient); 1825, Vasse v. Miffin, 4 Wash. C. C. 519 (notice to produce all letters relating to moneys received under an award; sufficient).

The “reasonable notice” of the Codes cited supra, par. 2, would apply also to the tenor of the notice.

With this third element, as completing the fact upon which the proponent's excuse rests, we are now concerned.

(1) (a) Inquiring, first, what situation amounts to non-production, in the above sense, it may be noted that if the opponent produces a document which the proponent claims not to be the one desired, the latter is not obliged to accept it as the one in issue, so as to be precluded from proving otherwise the contents of the desired document;¹ for the opponent's production of this one alone is virtually a failure to produce the one actually desired, and the proponent has thus established his excuse and may proceed to prove otherwise the terms of the true but non-apparent document.

(b) If the opponent refuses to produce because of a privilege against self-incrimination, is this refusal insufficient, for the purpose of establishing the proponent's excuse and allowing him to prove the terms otherwise? By no means; for it is still a refusal, though an allowable one, and the proponent's excuse is equally established. The permission to the proponent to proceed to establish the document's terms by other evidence is not a violation of the privilege, for the privilege (post, § 2264) is merely that the possessor himself shall not furnish criminating evidence, and not that others shall not through their own witnesses do so.² Whether an unfavorable inference or admission should be drawn as to the contents from the claim of privilege is a different question (post, §§ 2272, 2273).

(2) It may be asked, Why should the opponent's mere failure or refusal to produce, in a case where he is not protected by a privilege, suffice to establish the proponent's excuse, namely, his inability to obtain the original? Since such an inability is the root-notion which allows him to prove the document's terms otherwise (ante, § 1199), how can he claim to be unable since by a bill of discovery, or in more modern times by a statutory order for production, he could compel the production? It is perfectly settled that this extreme step is not required of him;³ and the reasons seem to be sound, namely, first, that the inconvenience of employing an equitable bill of discovery, or even a statutory order, for every document needed, would be such that for practical purposes the opponent's mere refusal on demand puts the proponent in the position of being unable to obtain the original, and secondly, because it does not fairly lie in the mouth of an opponent, refusing production without excuse and thus himself creating the dilemma, to insist

¹ 1859, Hill v. Townsend, 24 Tex. 575, 580 (party held not bound to accept document tendered by opponent, but allowed to go on and prove contents of document desired); 1898, Helzer v. Helzer, 187 Pa. 243, 41 Atl. 40 (plaintiff had offered evidence of loss of note, and defendant then produced a document alleged to be the note; plaintiff not required either to accept it as the original or to submit it to her witness for identification).

² Accord: 1773, Attorney-General v. LeMerchant, 2 T. R. 201, note ("But it is said that this [general rule] does not hold in criminal cases, because the consequence of it would be to compel a man to produce evidence against himself. . . . But the defendant, LeMerchant, is not compellable to produce those letters against himself; for he is liable to no punishment at all if he do not, but is left at his entire liberty either to do it or not; the only consequence must be that these copies (which must be sworn to be true copies) are read against him"); 1829, R. v. Barker, 3 C. & P. 591, 593; 1897, State v. Boomer, 103 Ia. 106, 72 N. W. 424.

For the necessity of notice, even where the privilege would protect from production, see ante, §§ 1205, 1207.

³ 1852, McLain v. Winchester, 17 Mo. 49, 54; 1816, Alexander v. Coulter, 2 S. & R. 494.

upon so strict a test for judging the proponent's claim of inability to obtain the document.

§ 1210. Same: Consequences of Non-Production for the Opponent (Exclusion of Evidence; Default; Inferences). (1) Where an opponent in possession refuses to produce on demand, he is afterwards forbidden to produce the document in order to contradict the other party's copy or evidence of its contents.¹ This is in one sense a proper penalty for unfair tactics; but the original refusal may also be regarded as a judicial admission, in advance (post, § 2588), of the correctness of the first party's evidence to this extent. (2) The same penalty (and sometimes even the more serious one of judgment for default) is provided by most of the statutes which entitle a party to discovery and inspection (post, § 1858) of the opponent's documents before trial.² But the two rules are independent. (3) The jury is entitled to make certain inferences from the non-production of documents on demand; but this is the consequence of an independent principle (ante, § 291).

§ 1211. (3) Detention by Third Person; History. Historically, this excuse for non-production was one of the earliest to be established. Under the doctrine of profert (ante, § 1177) it was well settled that profert was not necessary of an instrument belonging to a third person, for the reason that the proponent "hath not any means to obtain the deed";¹ though a modi-

¹ England: 1769, Yates, J., in Roe v. Harvey, 4 Burr. 2484, 2489; 1834, Doe v. Cockell, 6 C. & P. 525, 528 (Alderson, B.: "You must either produce a document when it is called for or never"); 1835, Lewis v. Hartley, 7 id. 405 (applied to a dog; defendant not allowed to produce it later, if not produced on notice by opponent); 1840, Doe v. Hodgson, 12 A. & E. 135 ("the party who refused to produce the writing could not afterwards be at liberty to give it in evidence"); United States: 1829, Bank v. M'Williams, 2 J. J. Marsh. 256, 259, semble (failure to produce precludes other evidence); 1827, Bogart v. Brown, 5 Pick. 18 (a defendant refusing to produce an original, not allowed to use a copy admitted by the plaintiff to be correct); 1873, Doon v. Donaher, 113 Mass. 151; 1881, Gage v. Campbell, 131 id. 566 ("a party who has suppressed a written document, and refused to produce it upon notice, and so compelled the adverse party to resort to secondary evidence thereof, is not afterwards entitled to offer proof of its contents"); 1888, McGinness v. School District, 39 Minn. 499, 41 N. W. 103; 1854, Munford v. Wilson, 19 Mo. 669, 673 (where defendant set up the custody of a third person, without stating the paper to be beyond the defendant's control, a copy was taken for true); 1899, Barnes v. Lynch, 9 Okl. 11, 156, 59 Pac. 995 (rule applied against a plaintiff who had removed his books from the jurisdiction to prevent inspection by receiver); 1895, Powell v. Pearlstone, 43 S. C. 403, 21 S. E. 328. Contra: 1870, Moulton v. Mason, 21 Mich. 363, 370 (Campbell, C. J.: "It is not a rule calculated to further the eliciting of truth; it is simply an attempt to punish one party by allowing his adversary to recover what does not belong to him or to defend unjustly against a proper claim"); 1879, Tewksbury v. Schulenberg, 48 Wis. 577, 580, 4 N. W. 757.

² The statutes are collected post, § 1858; the following rulings illustrate their use: 1884, Brown v. Farley, 38 N. J. Eq. 186, 190 (defendant refusing to produce his deed for inspection and photographing, not allowed to give it in evidence, under express statute); 1897, Flemming v. Lawless, 56 id. 138, 38 Atl. 864 (similar; the statute is "a mere declaration of a power which already existed in the Court").

¹ 1537, Anon., Dyer 29 b (in trespass, defendant pleaded a lease for years from a lessee for life from the king by letters patent; and it was argued that the letters patent must be shewn; to which three judges agreed; but three others were opposed; "for a sub-collector, an undersheriff, and an incumbent do not shew the king's patents, because they do not belong to them, and they have no means to make their masters or grantors shew them"); 1568, Estofte v. Vaughan, Dyer 277 a (cestui in remainder not required to produce the deed, because it "does not belong to him but to the feoffees"); 1591, Abbot of Strata Marcella's Case, 9 Co. 24 a (defendant claimed a certain privilege under feoffment from D., who was grantee of the fee of the manor from the king, who had by statute confiscated it from an abbot, who had the privilege by charter; held, that the abbot's charter need not be shown in profert; the plaintiff conceded that profert was not necessary for the charter, "because the charter was made to a stranger"); 1602, Dagg v. Penkevon, Cro. Jac. 70 (similar to Anon., supra; profert not required); 1609, Huntingdon v. Mildmay, ib. 217 (similar to Estofte v. Vaughan, supra); 1631, Gray v. a fiction of this was also established, not excusing from production where the proponent claimed anything in the right of the grantee owning the deed.² This early form of the doctrine, however, does not serve to solve the majority of our modern cases, because since the rule of profert applied only to documents under seal, i. e. chiefly title-deeds (ante, § 1177), and since the third person owning them was privileged not to disclose his title-deeds (post, § 2211), the case presented was the clear one of a third person from whom production could not be compelled by any process of law (post, § 1213). But nowadays the greater number of documents are of a sort which would not be thus privileged under a subpoena duces tecum. In one respect, moreover, the rigor of the older rule no longer obtains; for the modification above-mentioned, by which non-production was not excused in a case of claim of right under the deed, left the proponent without the means of proving a document which it was legally impossible for him to obtain, — a result everywhere repudiated to-day, although certain analogous English rulings (post, § 1212) may be perhaps traced to the tradition of this older notion.

§ 1212. Same: (a) Person within the Jurisdiction. (1) If the person possessing the document is by reason of a privilege legally not compellable to produce it, this is clearly an excuse for non-production :

1848, Pollock, C. B., in Sayer v. Glossop, 2 Exch. 409, 410: "As the person who has the legal custody of the register is not by law compellable to produce it, the party who stands in need of the evidence which that document affords is not to suffer from its absence at the trial. . . . If in point of law you cannot compel a party who has the custody of a document to produce it, there is the same reason for admitting other evidence of its contents as if its production were physically impossible."

The only argument to the contrary could be drawn from the possibility that the privilege would not be exercised, but this is at the most a contingency, and the ascertainment of the fact of such willingness might entail too much

Fidler, Cro. Car. 209 (debt on bond assigned by bankrupt-commissioners; profert of bond not required, "because he comes in by act in law, and hath no means to obtain the obligation"); 1636, Stockman v. Hampton, ib. 441 (justification for trespass under a license from a remainderman; plea held good, "without showing the deed; first, because the deed doth not belong to him. . . . and he hath not any means to obtain the deed; and it should be mischievous to those who claim under such a deed if they should lose their estates unless they might produce it"); ante 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius, 252 ("Where a person is an utter stranger to a deed, there in pleading he is not compelled to shew it").

This doctrine is, in the earlier cases, not always to be distinguished from that of collateralness (post, § 1252).

² 1611, Dr. Leyfield's Case, 10 Co. Rep. 88 a (justification in trespass as servant of a lessee for years from a lessee for life by letters patent from the queen; it was argued that "the fee remains in the lessor or donor to whom the deed belongs and to no other, and therefore he shall not be compelled to shew the first deed"; but "the opinion of the whole Court was against the plaintiff, and the reason was because he is privy in the estate of the rent and claims by the first grant; . . . in many cases a man shall not plead a deed or release that doth not belong to him nor can have an action to recover, without shewing it; . . . so the lord by escheat shall not plead a release made to the disseisor by the disseisee without shewing it; neither shall he in remainder be received without shewing the deed; and yet it doth not belong to him, nor has he remedy to get it. . . . [But] there is another maxim in law, that where a man is stranger to a deed, and doth neither claim the thing comprised in the grant nor anything out of it, nor doth anything in the right of the grantee as bailiff or servant, there he shall plead the patent or deed without shewing it"; 1758, Titley v. Foxall, Willes 688 (justification of battery under process of a Court erected by letters patent; profert of letters not required, because the defendant was a stranger not claiming under them).

inconvenience. The orthodox doctrine is that where a privilege applies, other evidence of contents may be given.¹

(2) It is also often said that where the third person is hostile and fraudulently detains the document, this fact of itself suffices to excuse non-production,² though such an instance is perhaps often equally well disposed of by the doctrine of loss (ante, § 1194) or of the opponent's possession by the hands of an agent (ante, § 1200).

(3) Where neither of the above situations exists, and the case is an ordinary one of possession by a third person, it is clear that a demand at least must have been made; and the question as to which a difference of opinion exists is whether the compulsory process of law should also have been invoked by subpoena duces tecum. A number of Courts seem to lay down the fixed rule that a subpoena is necessary;³ direct decisions to the contrary are rare.⁴ The greater number of rulings give no definite solution, and seem to have been based on the circumstances of the case in hand.⁵ The truth is

¹ 1854, Phelps v. Prew, 3 E. & B. 430, 438 (here an attorney refused to produce his client's title-deed; held that the possibility that the client if called might have waived the privilege was not sufficient to prevent the offering of secondary evidence; here the client had given orders not to exhibit the deed; "an attorney may hold a deed for a great many persons," and it would be unreasonable to require their calling); 1861, R. v. Leatham, 3 E. & E. 658, 668 (per Hill, J., "a well-established rule of law," that production of a privileged document is excused); 1806, Richards v. Stewart, 2 Day 328, 334, 336, 338 (whether the privileged person must be subpoenaed; decision not given, but arguments set out); 1807, Lynde v. Judd, 3 id. 499 (production excused, if privileged person refuses to produce); 1808, U. S. v. Porter, ib. 283, 285 (attendance must be compelled); 1897, State v. Durham, 121 N. C. 546, 28 S. E. 26 (production excused of document in hands of wife claiming privilege).

² 1845, Blevins v. Pope, 7 Ala. 371, 375 (trover for a note, which the defendant had since given to the maker, who by collusion failed to produce it when requested; production not required); 1817, Stockdale v. Escant, 4 Mart. La. 564, 567 (opponent's vendor retaining claimant's bill of sale by collusion; production not required, though — Martin, J., diss. — no subpoena had been issued); 1862, Grimes v. Kimball, 3 All. 518 ("If a party is deprived of the possession of written instruments which belong to him, by the fraudulent representations or devices of another person, who unjustly detains or secretly disposes of them so that they cannot be found or recovered," they may be proved as if lost); 1823, Den v. M'Allister, 7 N. J. L. 46, 48, 55 (a deed affecting the opponent's title was shown to be somewhere in the hands of adversaries, not parties; and this was held sufficient); 1815, Gray v. Pentland, 2 S. & R. 23, 31 ("where it has been in the hands of a third person, who, in collusion with the adverse party or with a view of screening him, has put it out of the way," secondary proof is admissible).

³ England: 1795, R. v. Castleton, 6 T. R. 236 (where the third person had merely been asked when out of court and had replied that she could not find it); 1834, Whitford v. Tutin, 10 Bing. 395 (subpoena necessary); United States: 1835, Carlton v. Litton, 4 Blackf. 1 (subpoena necessary); 1839, Rucker v. M'Neely, 5 id. 123 (same); 1850, Beall v. Barclay, 10 B. Monr. 261, 262 (mere possession by a person amenable to process, not sufficient); 1853, Dickerson v. Talbot, 14 id. 60, 63 (possession by a third person, with notice to produce, insufficient); 1827, Gardere v. Fisk, 6 Mart. n. s. 387, 390 (receipt given by offeror to opponent's predecessor; subpoena required); 1827, Erwin v. Porter, ib. 166, 167 (similar; subpoena required); 1845, Chaplain v. Briscoe, 5 Sm. & M. 198, 207 (mere possession by a third person insufficient, since the person may be compelled by subpoena to produce); 1806, U. S. v. Long, 1 Cr. C. C. 373, semble (third person must be summoned); 1822, U. S. v. Lynn, 2 id. 309 (same); 1872, Dickinson v. Clarke, 5 W. Va. 280, 282 (document in hands of one giving deposition but refusing to file the document; copy excluded).

⁴ 1832, U. S. v. Reyburn, 6 Pet. 352, 365 (privateer's commission belonging to C.; inability to find C., sufficient on the facts; subpoena not necessary).

⁵ 1793, Smith v. Holebrook, 2 Root 45 (counterfeit note taken and kept from plaintiff by revenue-officer; insufficient); Ga. Code 1895, § 5257 (where subpoena d. t. is employed, and party "is unable thereby to procure" the document, other evidence is allowable); 1879, Bosworth v. Clark, 62 Ga. 286, 288 (service of subpoena, sufficient in trial Court's discretion); 1859, Greenough v. Shelden, 9 Ia. 503, 506 (witness subpoenaed and present with the document, but no demand made; evidence of contents excluded); 1875, Hawkins v. Rice, 40 id. 435 (assignment left by offeror with another clerk of Court, held not without offeror's control); 1899, Ruthven v. Clarke, 109 id. 25, 79 N. W. 454 (documents testified to in deposition of intervener's agent; originals required to be accounted that, while for the purposes of a general rule, it is better to require the process of subpoena, yet in the discretion of the trial Court the failure to use a subpoena, provided a demand has been made, may not be treated as fatal, if in view of the nature of the document, the residence of the possessor and his relations to the case, the risk of collusion, and other circumstances, the service of a subpoena would have been an unnecessary effort. If the document is in court, a subpoena would of course be unnecessary.⁶ If after service of subpoena the possessor is recalcitrant and refuses to obey, the proponent should be excused from production.⁷

(4) Where the desired witness possessing the document is himself also a party to the cause, on the side of the proponent, his possession is of course no excuse for non-production.⁸

§ 1213. Same: (b) Person without the Jurisdiction. It has just been seen that the amenability of the possessor to legal process should not invariably and absolutely bar the proponent from proving the document's contents by other evidence. Conversely, the mere fact of the non-amenability of the possessor to legal process should not of itself excuse non-production. Legal process cannot avail to obtain a document held out of the jurisdiction; but the object may nevertheless be attained by a request. Four possible forms of effort exist, any one or more of which may be deemed proper by a Court before excusing for non-production. If the precise whereabouts of the document is unknown, search may be made; if the possessor be ascertained, he may be requested to appear with the document; or he may be requested to for); 1824, Enre v. Pittman, 3 Hawks 364, 370 (a will traced to T.'s hands; held, that T. should have been subpoenaed duces tecum or inquiries should have been made of her, before the inference of collusion or suppression could be drawn; Henderson, J., diss.); 1833, Clark v. Longworth, Wright 89 (not clear); 1815, Tilghman, C. J., in Gray v. Pentland, 2 S. & R. 23, 31 ("It will always be a question whether with proper exertions he might not have had it in his power"); S. C. St. 1870, C. C. P. 1902, c. 12, § 419 (if an "original pleading or paper" is "withheld by any person," the Court may authorize use of copy); 1851, Williams v. Ward, 23 Vt. 369, 376 (notification posted by selectmen; not presumed to be in power of party questioning village officer's acts); 1897, Newell v. Clapp, 97 Wis. 104, 72 N. W. 367 (no measures taken to obtain the document; production not dispensed with).

The rule for loss (ante, § 1194) sometimes verges close upon the present rule.

⁶ 1847, Doe v. Clifford, 2 C. & K. 448, 451 (the third person, being in court with the deed, declined to produce it, and a copy was admitted; otherwise, if the deed had not been there).

⁷ This is implied in the rulings cited supra, note 3.

The following rulings are therefore absurd, and would hardly be followed to-day: 1835, Alderson, B., in Jesus College v. Gibbs, 1 Y. & C. 145, 156 ("You could not have proved it by secondary evidence unless the document had been in the possession of a party [i. e. person] not bound to produce it. . . . [The third person refuses.] it is true, at his own peril; but you have no remedy except against him"); 1853, R. v. Llanfaethly, 2 E. & B. 940 (Erle, J.: "The law does not admit the disobedience of a person served with a subpoena duces tecum as a sufficient excuse for not giving primary evidence of the contents of a document, where the person served is punishable for his disobedience"); 1852, Farley v. Graham, 9 U. C. Q. B. 438 (document in possession of the witness in court, but illegally refused to be produced; copy not allowed; "the party might have sought his remedy against the witness").

The following statute seems not to be intended to lay down a rule contrary to that in the text: Pa. St. 1846, Pam. L. 483, § 3, P. & L. Dig. Evid. 7 (after subpoena d. t. requiring papers, and refusal to produce, followed by imprisonment and discharge, parol evidence of contents is admissible).

⁸ 1874, Gimbel v. Hufford, 46 Ind. 125, 129 (where the person so in possession was the plaintiff himself, production was required); 1878, McLakin v. Weston, 64 id. 270, 274 (party annexing a copy to his deposition; excluded); 1877, Waterville v. Hughan, 18 Kans. 473 (document in another county in the hands of one of the plaintiffs or his attorney; production required). Compare the case of the opponent's possession out of the jurisdiction (post, § 1213, note).

deliver the document for use at the trial; or his deposition may be taken with a copy furnished by him annexed to it. No one or more of these efforts could be required as a fixed rule, nor do the Courts seem to make any such fixed requirement. The rulings fall into three general groups. In the first group, the Courts require that an effort of some sort be made, its nature depending more or less on the circumstances of the case.¹ In the second group, the Courts, either by express decision or by failing to mention any requirement, excuse the non-production although no such effort has been made, the mere fact sufficing that the document is out of the jurisdiction.²

¹ England: 1855, Boyle v. Wiseman, 10 Exch. 647 (a document was in the hands of a person in France; the plaintiff's agent, in a libel-suit in which it was suggested that this document contained an admission of authorship, went to the holder and asked him for the letter, in order to bring it to England, not stating the purpose nor asking the holder whether he would bring it personally; the holder refused; held, that its non-availability was not shown); Canada: 1894, Porter v. Hale, N. Br., 23 Can. Sup. 265, 270 (document in possession of C. in Scotland; inquiries addressed to C. and to other persons, held insufficient on the facts); United States: 1876, Londoner v. Stewart, 3 Colo. 47, 50 (there must be some effort to obtain the original; good opinion by Hallett, C. J.); 1812, Townsend v. Atwater, 5 Day 298, 306 (mere absence from the jurisdiction, insufficient; "the Court must be satisfied that the paper cannot be produced"); 1895, Waite v. High, 96 Ia. 742, 65 N. W. 397 (the Court intimated that it must also appear impossible to secure the document); 1872, Shaw v. Mason, 10 Kans. 184, 189 (contract in third person's hands in Missouri; production necessary, if nothing further is shown by way of excuse); 1829, Lewis v. Beatty, 8 Mart. n. s. 287, 289 (deed in neighboring State; no attempt made to procure it; secondary evidence excluded); 1891, Phillips v. U. S. Benef. Soc'y, 120 Mich. 142, 79 N. W. 1 (document in Canada; attempt to take deposition required); 1868, Wood v. Cullen, 13 Minn. 394, 396 (mere possession by certain opponents out of the State, held not to "excuse from diligent effort to procure it"); 1838, Haile v. Palmer, 5 Mo. 403, 417 (sworn copy of marriage register and certificate in Louisiana, excluded because it did not appear that the law of Louisiana made them official records; apparently unsonnd); 1862, Farrell v. Brennan, 32 id. 328, 333 (letters addressed by F. to his father in Ireland; evidence of search or the like required); 1842, Deaver v. Rice, 2 Ired. 280 (a constable had moved to another State, leaving some of his papers with an agent, and the document desired was not among these; held insufficient for offering oral evidence of the contents); 1886, Justice v. Luther, 94 N. C. 793, 798 (the mere residence of the depository in another State is not sufficient); S. C. St. 1870, C. C. P. 1902, c. 12, § 419 (quoted ante, § 1212); 1853, Turner v. Yates, 16 How. 14, 26 (invoice in hands of London consignees; depositions "or some proper attempt made to obtain it," required); 1857, Comstock v. Carnley, 4 Blatchf.

58 (contract in third person's custody, in another State; copy not allowed, because the person could have been examined); 1865, Blackburn v. Crawford, 3 Wall. 175, 183, 191, semble (private marriage-register in France; testimony about it excluded, where no effort was shown to obtain it or to take a copy); 1866, Dwyer v. Dunbar, 5 id. 318 (letter described by a deponent as forwarded to S. in Mexico, an agent of the opponent; original required to be accounted for); 1855, Diener v. Schley, 5 Wis. 483, 525 (letter written to a person in Germany; loss must further be shown). The following ruling is unique, and of course unsonnd: 1838, Steinkeller v. Newton, 9 C. & P. 313 (in a foreign deposition, the witness alluded to the contents of a letter; held, that the inability to compel the witness to produce the letter did not suffice to admit his reference to it).

² Eng.: 1855, Bruce v. Nicolopulo, 11 Exch. 129, 134 (a printed placard posted on a wall in Turkey by the Russian commandant; copy received); 1889, Burnaby v. Baillie, L. R. 42 Ch. D. 283, 291 (French official marriage-register, not required to be produced); Can.: P. E. I. St. 1889, § 57 (on commissions for examinations taken out of the Province, the "books of account or books of original entries" may be proved by copies "given in evidence" or extracts certified by the commissioner); Ala.: 1831, Scott v. Rivers, 1 Stew. & P. 19, 22 (grantee in possession of deed, residing out of the State; copy receivable); 1878, Snow v. Carr, 61 Ala. 363, 368 (policies cancelled and returned to England; production not required); 1879, Whilden v. Bank, 64 id. 1, 13, 30 (telegram in custody of person out of the State; production not required); 1880, Elliott v. Stocks, 67 id. 290, 300 (power of attorney in another State; production not required); 1880, Ware v. Morgan, ib. 461, 466 (bill of exchange in another State; production not required); 1883, Gordon v. Tweedy, 74 id. 232, 236 (books of a railroad company in another State; production not required); 1883, Martin v. Brown, 75 id. 442, 447 (letters in a foreign country; production not required); 1884, Pensacola R. Co. v. Schaffer, 76 id. 233, 237 (original of telegram in adjacent State; production not required); 1892, Alabama State L. Co. v. Kyle, 99 id. 474, 479, 13 So. 43 (certificate of entry out of State; copy received); Ark.: 1876, Bozeman v. Browning, 31 Ark. 364, 371 (bond filed in a Court of another State; sufficient on the facts); 1902, Ritter v. State, 70 id. 472, 69 S. W. 262 (letters in possession of a

In the third group, the effort actually made is declared to be sufficient, without laying down any rule as to its necessity.³ The proper practice is to third person, without the State; production not required); Cal.: 1856, Gordon v. Searing, 8 Cal. 49 (paper in hands of party out of the State, sufficient); 1893, Zellerbach v. Allenberg, 99 id. 57, 73, 33 Pac. 786 (letters mailed to a resident of Germany, presumed beyond the State, and thus "lost," under C. C. P. § 1963, subd. 24); C. C. P. § 1855, as amended in 1901 (copy allowable, if the original "is beyond the jurisdiction"; for the validity of these amendments, see ante, § 488); Conn.: 1853, Shepard v. Giddings, 22 Conn. 282 (mere fact of possession out of the jurisdiction, sufficient); Ga.: 1858, Goodwyn v. Goodwyn, 25 Ga. 203, 207 (execution on file out of the State; production not required); 1858, Lunday v. Thomas, 26 id. 537, 544 (in possession of a third person without the State; not required); 1869, White v. Clements, 39 id. 232, 242 (paper beyond the jurisdiction and not in the power of proponent; not required); 1871, Frauk v. Longstreet, 44 id. 178, 187 (notice served without the jurisdiction; ruling obscure); 1875, Brown v. Oatis, 55 id. 416, 419 (deed in another State; proponent not required to try and get it); 1880, Schaefer v. R. Co., 66 id. 39, 45 (freight list, original out of the State; copy admitted); 1888, Calboun v. Calboun, 81 id. 91, 93, 6 S. E. 913 (deed beyond the jurisdiction, provable by copy); 1895, Bowden v. Achor, 95 id. 243, 22 S. E. 271 (document in another State; copy allowable); 1897, Miller v. McKinnon, 103 id. 553, 29 S. E. 467 (possession of third person beyond jurisdiction; production not required); Ill.: 1855, Mitchell v. Jacobs, 17 Ill. 235 (lease sent to California with a deposition; production not required); Ind.: 1866, Thom v. Wilson, 25 Ind. 370, 372 (paper owned by a witness living abroad; copy attached to deposition, sufficient); 1881, Hall v. Bishop, 78 id. 370, 371 ("under the control of a witness not within the jurisdiction"; copy allowed); Ky.: 1838, Lemon v. Johnson, 6 Dana 399 (removal from the State by the possessor, and his death abroad; sufficient on the facts); 1847, Waller v. Cralle, 8 B. Monr. 11, 14 (release in the hands of a non-resident; sufficient); Mich.: 1888, Woods v. Burke, 67 Mich. 674, 676, 35 N. W. 798 (out of the jurisdiction, sufficient); 1890, Knickerbocker v. Wilcox, 83 id. 201, 47 N. W. 123 (bond out of the State; production not required); Minn.: 1897, Kleeberg v. Schrader, 69 Minn. 136, 72 N. W. 59 (contract in Germany; production not required); Mo.: 1845, St. Louis P. Ins. Co. v. Cohen, 9 Mo. 416, 439 (agreement in Wisconsin; production not required); 1848, Robards v. McLeau, 8 Ired. 522, 524 (the plaintiff's slave had a document which the defendant wished to prove; that the slave had escaped to another State was held sufficient, nor was the chance of finding it in his possession sufficient to require an attempt to get it); N. H.: 1836, Burham v. Wood, 8 N. H. 334, 337 (corporation books in another jurisdiction; production excused); N. J.: 1903, Hirsch v. Leatherbee L. Co., — N. J. L. —, 55 Atl. 645 (letter sent to a non-resident now deceased; copy admitted);

N. Y.: C. C. P. 1877, § 930 (foreign corporation's books may be proved by copy on ten days' notice of such intention; except by a corporation proving its own acts); Oh.: 1846, Reed v. State, 15 Oh. 217, 223 (a counterfeit bank-note out of the jurisdiction; production not required); Pa.: St. 1837, Pub. L. 110, p. 20, P. & L. Dig. Evid. 45 (certified copy of extract from certain foreign burial registers, receivable); 1886, Otto v. Trump, 115 Pa. 425, 429, 8 Atl. 786 (records in another State, not required to be produced); R. I.: Gen. L. 1896, c. 210, § 16 (will impounded in a court out of the State and not there probated, provable by certified copy); S. D.: 1896, Hagaman v. Gillis, 9 S. D. 61, 68 N. W. 192 (document out of the jurisdiction; provable without notice to holder to produce); Tex.: 1854, Clifton v. Lilley, 12 Tex. 130, 136 (the last custodian resided in another State; "it was not necessary to call on him by subpoena d. t. or otherwise"); 1888, Veck v. Holt, 71 id. 715, 717, 9 S. W. 743 (vendee out of the jurisdiction; proof of inaccessibility of bill of sale, or of demand, unnecessary); 1890, Frost v. Wolf, 77 id. 455, 459, 14 S. W. 440 (deed in a notary's office in Louisiana; production excused); 1902, Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Dilworth, 95 id. 327, 67 S. W. 88 (contents of a way-bill in Kansas, held provable by deposition, where it appeared that an effort to obtain the original would have been unavailing); U. S.: 1873, Burton v. Driggs, 20 Wall. 125, 134 (copy of a lost deposition of a witness beyond process, receivable, and a new taking of the deposition not necessary; documents in the possession of one "living in another State," provable, "without further showing," by secondary evidence); 17: 1856, Hayward R. Co. v. Duncklee, 30 Vt. 29, 39 (letter to third persons, one deceased, the other out of the State; production not required); 1900, Blaisdell v. Davis, 72 id. 295, 48 Atl. 14, semble (original out of the jurisdiction; copy sufficient); Va.: 1806, Fitzhugh v. Love, 6 Call 5, 10 (a Liverpool notary's copy of an inaccessible protest by a London notary, excluded; semble, the London notary's copy admissible).

³ 1884, McDonald v. Murray, 5 Out. 559, 570, 575 (document refused to be given up by a foreign official; production excused, without showing that by the foreign law it was irremovable); 1838, Mordecai v. Bell, 8 Port. 529, 535 (possession by one out of the State, and demand for it, sufficient on the facts); 1839, Swift v. Fitzhugh, 9 id. 39, 53 (same; deposition of holder need not be taken); 1844, Beall v. Dearing, 7 Ala. 124, 126 (demand of non-resident, sufficient; taking deposition, here equivalent to a demand); 1849, Doe v. Biggers, 6 Ga. 188, 196 (not decided); 1880, Fisher v. Greene, 95 Ill. 94, 99 (power of attorney held in New York and refused to be given up by holder; copy allowed); 1895, Bullis v. Easton, 96 Ia. 513, 65 N. W. 395 (sufficient where the possessor refused to give up the original, but this is not stated to be essential); 1898, Combs v. Breatbitt Co., — Ky. —, 46 S. W. 505 (in another leave the matter entirely in the hands of the trial Court; except that no effort need ever be required to obtain a foreign public or official document irremovable by the foreign law (post, § 1218). Whether, when the document is a public one in another jurisdiction, the proof of its contents should be by certified copy, involves a different principle (post, § 1273).

§ 1214. (4) Physical Impossibility of Removal. Production should not be required where the written characters exist on something so firmly fixed to the realty that its removal for production would be impracticable under the circumstances:

1842, Parke, B., in Jones v. Tarlton, 1 Dowl. Pr. n. s. 625, 626: "The exceptions . . . [cover things] not easily removed, as in the case of things fixed in the ground or to the freehold; for the law does not expect a man to break up his freehold for the purpose of bringing a notice into court."

Something should no doubt depend upon whether the realty is in the possession of the proponent or of a third person; for in the latter case a slight degree of injury or disturbance would suffice to render removal impracticable. The trial Court's determination should suffice in each instance.¹

county, beyond process, and after "due effort to obtain"; production not required); 1855, Montgomery v. Routh, 10 La. An. 316 (notes refused to be given up by holder out of the State; copies admitted); 1871, Binney v. Russell, 109 Mass 55 (deponent out of the Commonwealth refused to annex a document, but annexed a copy; copy admitted); 1893, Thomson-Houston E. Co. v. Palmer, 52 Minn. 174, 181, 53 N. W. 1137 (document held by deponent in Kansas, and refused to be given up; production excused); 1854, Brown v. Wood, 19 Mo. 475 (document in Wisconsin, notice to produce having been given; production excused); 1842, Ralph v. Brown, 3 W. & S. 393, 399 (deposition in the hands of one in another State who refused to give it up; production not required); 1875, American Life Ins. Co. v. Rosenagle, 77 Pa. 507, 513 (letters refused to be given up; question left undecided; here the holder was out of the jurisdiction); 1811, Bunch v. Hurst, 3 DeS. 273, 290 (deed placed in the hands of a third person who had left the State and refused to give it up; the offeror himself having given it to the third person, the case was treated as one of suppression, and production required); 1899, Sayles v. Bradley & M. Co., 92 Tex. 406, 49 S. W. 209 (refusal of witness in another county, beyond the reach of subpoena, to attach paper to deposition; production not required); 1861, Bonner v. Ins. Co., 13 Wis. 677, 687 (railroad shipping book out of jurisdiction; secondary proof allowed; whether railroad's refusal to furnish must be shown, undecided); 1879, Wisconsin River L. Co. v. Walker, 48 id. 614, 4 N. W. 803 (stock-book in Illinois, which possessor refused to deliver; secondary proof allowed). The circumstance that the possessor of the document is the opponent, and that therefore it might be obtained from abroad by legal process in the suit, is immaterial; the case falls rather under the rule of § 1199, ante: 1900, Phillips v.

U. S. Benevolent Soc'y, 125 Mich. 186, 84 N. W. 57 (insurance application filed at defendant's home office in Canada, provable by copy). Contra: 1903, Central El. Co. v. Sprague El. Co., 57 C. C. A. 197, 120 Fed. 925 (minutes of the opponent corporation, in another State; the original or a certified copy required to be produced).

For the question whether the original must be sent to a deponent out of the jurisdiction, depositing to handwriting, see ante, § 1185.

¹ Eng.: 1809, Cobden v. Bolton, 2 Camp. 108 (notice on a board inlaid in the wall of a coach-office; proved by an examined copy); 1833, R. v. Fursey, 6 C. & P. 81, 84 (notice affixed to a wall; copy admitted); 1834, Doe v. Cole, ib. 359 (tablet in a church; production not required); 1839, Bartholomew v. Stephens, 8 id. 728 (a notice painted on a board on a pole in a field; copy admitted); 1840, Mortimer v. M'Callan, 6 M. & W. 58, 63, 68 (handwriting on a wall; production not required); 1842, R. v. Edge, Wills, Circ. Evid., 5th Am. ed., 212, Maule, B. (an inscription on a coffin-plate; "being removable, it ought to have been produced"); 1842, Jones v. Tarlton, 9 M. & W. 65, 1 Dowl. Pr. n. s. 625 (a notice in a carrier's office, painted on a board fastened by a string to a nail; production required); 1848, Sayer v. Glossop, 2 Exch. 409, 411 (per Pollock, C. B., a writing pasted on a wall; per Rolfe, B., words chalked on a wall; used as examples of non-availability); 1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 12th day, Times' Rep. pt. 3, p. 159 (testimony being offered as to a notice posted up forbidding the payment of rent, it was ruled that "it is not necessary to produce the actual notices that were posted up"); U. S.: 1896, Harper v. State, 109 Ala. 28, 19 So. 857 (notices posted against trespassing; production not required); Ga. Code 1895, § 5170 (inscriptions on "walls, monuments, and other fixed objects,"

§ 1215. (5) Irremovable Judicial Records; General Principle (Records, Pleadings, Depositions, Wills, etc.; Statutory Rules). The record of a court should not be taken away from its place of custody into another court. This irremovability is often expressly enacted by statute; but, whether it is so enacted or not, the principle has always been sanctioned by the courts on grounds of policy. The removal into another court as evidence would make it impossible for the time being for others to use the records; there would be a serious risk of loss; and there would be a constant additional wear and tear upon the document. For the record of a court without the jurisdiction there is the added consideration that there is no legal means of obtaining the document. For these reasons it is well settled that the record of another court may be proved without production:

Ante 1726, Chief Baron Gilbert, Evidence, 7: "Records, being the precedents of the demonstrations of justice, to which every man has a common right to have recourse, cannot be transferred from place to place to serve a private purpose; and therefore they have a common repository, from whence they ought not to be removed but by the authority of some other court; and this is in the treasury of Westminster. And this piece of law is plainly agreeable to all manner of reason and justice; for if one man might demand a record to serve his own occasions, by the same reason any other person might demand it; but both could not possibly possess it at the same time in different places, and therefore it must be kept in one certain place in common for them both. Besides, these records, by being daily removed, would be in great danger of being lost. And consequently it is on all hands convenient that these monuments of justice should be fixed in a certain place, and that they should not be transferred from thence but by public authority from superior justice. The copies of records must be allowed in evidence, for . . . the rule of evidence commands no farther than to produce the best that the nature of the thing is capable of; for to tie men up to the original that is fixed to a place, and cannot be had, is to totally discard their evidence, . . . for then the rules of law and right would be the authors of injury, which is the highest absurdity."

1811, Nott, J., in Tobin v. Seay, 2 Brev. 470 (receiving an office copy of an execution): "An exemplification is all that a party can obtain. It is the best evidence the nature of the case admits of; because the Courts would not compel the clerks of courts to attend with the originals upon a subpoena duces tecum."

1868, Joynes, J., in Bullard v. Thomas, 19 Gratt. 14, 18: "The usual mode of proving the record of another court is by the production of a certified copy. But the copy is not produced in such cases because it is better evidence than the original; it is received only on the ground of convenience, as a substitute for the original record. The reception of a copy avoids the inconvenience of removing the original record from place to place."¹

(a) It follows that a writ, pleading, or the like, which appertains to the trial at bar in the same court and will become a part of the record in the suit, must be produced or accounted for like any other document.² Conprovable by copy); 1859, Stearns v. Doe, 12 Gray 482, 486 (name and port painted on the stern of a vessel, described by a witness; present point not raised).

¹ Compare the analogous reasons for excusing the non-production of official documents in general, post, § 1218.

² 1807, Bayley v. Wylie, 6 Esp. 85 (a recital in a deposition of the commission authorizing it, held inadmissible; the commission required); 1880, Baucum v. George, 65 Ala. 259, 266 (execution, etc.; loss required to be shown); 1854, Ernest v. Napier, 15 Ga. 306, 308 (execution in the Court below; production held necessary, being obtainable by application to that Court or by mandamus in case of refusal); 1897, Roby v. Title Co., 166 Ill. 336, 46 N. E. 1110 (only the record allowable to prove rules of court; but it

versely, a document which is part of the record in another court need not be produced, even though it is in fact in the control of the opponent and thus available.³

(b) The question will often arise whether a document is in legal theory a part of the record or is merely an incidental document which can be withdrawn from the other Court. An answer in Chancery, it was settled, need not be produced, although in strictness the Chancery in England was the central custodian of records for all Courts and although the Chancellor's permission for temporary removal was by tradition obtainable.⁴ But an affidavit, it was thought, was not a part of the record and must be produced; though this would hardly be the ruling at the present day.⁵ A will of land probated in the Ecclesiastical Court did not become a part of the record there, because that Court had no jurisdiction to render judgment upon a will of land (post, § 1238), and therefore the will must be produced at common law like any other document;⁶ but statutes have everywhere changed this by creating courts with jurisdiction equally over wills of all kinds and by permitting the use of copies.⁷ A deed offered in the other court for purposes is singular that a Court cannot take notice of its own rules); 1874, Currey v. State, 7 Baxt. 154, 155 (same as next case; here proof of loss was waived); 1880, Epperson v. State, 5 Lea 291, 294 (copy of minutes of indictment, usable on accounting for the original).

³ 1853, Fouke v. Ray, 1 Wis. 104, 108 (even where the opponent has the original in court); 1858, Dupont v. Downing, 6 Ia. 173, 176 (original not required, even where the opponent was the custodian). Contra: 1854, Millard v. Hall, 24 Ala. 209, 212, 223 (order of sale issued by clerk of another court; production required); 1855, Launsford v. Smith, 12 Gratt. 554, 563 (execution in another court, not accounted for; copy excluded).

The orthodox rule applied to records of inferior courts: 1696, Holt, C. J., in R. v. Hains, Comb. 337: "We know that it is not usual for inferior courts to draw up their records, but only short notes; and copies of these short notes, being public things, are good evidence; otherwise of private things, for copies of rent-rolls are no evidence, but the original must be produced." The docket of a justice of the peace is now provided for almost universally by statute (post, note 11). Where a lost judicial record is restored by decree, the copy restored becomes the original, and the loss of the former need not be shown (post, § 1240).

⁴ 1809, Salter v. Turner, 2 Camp. 87; 1812, Lady Dartmouth v. Roberts, 16 East 334, 340 (answer in Chancery in a suit between other parties); 1813, Hodgkinson v. Willis, 3 Camp. 401 (answer in Chancery in another suit); 1817, Hennell v. Lyon, 1 B. & Ald. 182; 1825, Ewer v. Ambrose, 4 B. & C. 25; 1840, Abinger, C. B., in Mortimer v. McCallan, 6 M. & W. 58, 68 ("formerly the actual production was required" but the inconvenience of getting the Lord Chancellor's consent on each occasion led to a change); 1830, Winans v. Dunham, 5 Wend. 47 (original of a Chancery decree, etc., need not be produced); 1817, Gibson v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 111, 120 (in a Superior Court, certified copy of judgment of General Court suffices).

⁵ 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 56 ("the reason is, because the answer is an allegation in a court of judicature, . . . but a voluntary affidavit hath no relation to any court of justice, and . . . the affidavit itself must be produced as the best evidence"); 1767, Buller, Nisi Frius, 239; 1825, Graham, B., in Rees v. Bowen, 1 McCl. & Y. 383, 389 ("I think there is a marked difference between an affidavit and an answer or anything else which is properly called a record, in the instance of which an attested copy is perfectly sufficient. . . . Answers, or other records, where they are regular, are never permitted to be removed from the files; but nothing is more usual than for a judge, where a party has occasion to make use of an affidavit, to direct it to be taken off the file for the purpose"). Contra: 1827, Highfield v. Peake, 1 M. & M. 109, Littledale, J.; 1847, Garvin v. Carroll, 10 Ir. L. R. 323, 330 ("It is a record of the Court," and need not be produced, except on a charge of perjury).

Depositions are usually provided for by the statutes governing them (post, §§ 1380-1383).

⁶ 1685, Anon., Skin 174 ("If they will not after proof deliver back the original, then this Court will intermeddle, and a proof of the will cannot be by copy"); 1697, Hoe v. Nathorp, 1 Ld. Raym. 154 (probated will of realty; copy excluded).

⁷ These statutes have been placed, to avoid repetition, under § 1681, post; they allow the use of a copy of the judgment of probate (under whatever name it goes); though in a few States they allow production of the original will to be required, e. g. on a suggestion of fraud. The following rulings were made under such statutes: 1893, Newsom v. Holesapple, 101 Ala. 682, 691 (original not required; applying the statute); 1890, Purdy v. Hall, 134 Ill. 298, 25 N. E. 645

of proof was regarded as a part of the record, temporarily at least;⁸ the question depends largely on the nature of the other proceeding and of the document.⁹ Statutes often provide for the proof by copy of sundry documents required to be filed among court records.¹⁰

(c) In most jurisdictions statutes have expressly provided that the records of courts in general need not be produced. So far as these statutes brought within the rule certain judicial proceedings (such as those of justices of the peace), they may have served to make more certain or to amplify its operation. But for the most part these statutes merely declare, as to the present subject, that which was before never questioned; and their principal purpose was usually to amplify the rule (post, § 1681), concerning the exception to the Hearsay rule for certified copies by official custodians of documents.¹¹

§ 1216. Same: Exception for Nul Tiel Record and Perjury. (a) Where the plea of nul tiel record was interposed, it seems to have been originally the practice to require production even from another court; the production being obtained through Chancery by certiorari.¹ But afterwards it came to (original must be accounted for); 1894, Nicewander v. Nicewander, 151 id. 156, 161, 37 N. E. 698 (same); 1824, Franklin v. Creyon, Harp. Eq. 243, 249 (certified copy of probated will, received, the Court records being burnt); 1856, Wardlaw v. Hammond, 9 Rich. 454 (the notice required by statute must be in writing); 1859, Gourdin v. Staggars, 12 id. 307 (statutory notice held insufficient in tenor); 1860, Sally v. Gunter, 13 id. 72, 75 (certified copy of domestic probated will, established on a copy of will probated in another State, received); 1848, Weatherhead v. Sewell, 9 Humph. 272, 283 (will required to be produced, on suggestion of fraud, etc.); 1886, Hickman v. Gillum, 66 Tex. 314, 315, 1 S. W. 339 (original not required); 1889, Rio Grande & E. P. R. Co. v. Bank, 72 id. 467, 10 S. W. 563 (same); 1826, Dickinson v. M'Craw, 4 Rand. 158, 160 (statute applied; copy sufficient).

⁸ Ante 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius, 253 (where a deed being pleaded "is tied up to one court, and is impossible to be removed, it shall be pleaded in another without shewing"); 1593, Wymark's Case, 5 Co. Rep. 75 ("If a deed be denied in one court, by which it remains there, this deed may be pleaded in another court without shewing it; for lex non cogit ad impossibilia").

⁹ 1817, Handley v. Fitzhugh, 1 A. K. Marsh. 24 (document unavailable because lodged in a court of law in another suit; whole record of that suit required to be read, to show the reason for non-production); 1849, Davidson c. Davidson, 10 B. Monr. 115 (award filed in another court of the State; original required); 1811, Miles v. O'Hara, 4 Binn. 108, 111 (judge's notes are not a record, and must be produced); 1802, Fant v. McDaniel, 1 Brev. 173 (malicious prosecution; original indictment need not be produced); 1836, Mattocks v. Bellamy, 8 Vt. 463, 467 (habeas corpus writ, in files of court, provable by copy).

The question is properly one of the nature of a record, not of any principle of evidence, and the above cases are merely a few illustrations of the range of the controversy.

¹⁰ The following statutes include only those in which the document is treated as not a part of the record and is required to be produced or accounted for; many other statutes, providing for proof by copy without producing the original, are collected, to avoid repetition, post, § 1681: Conn. Gen. St. 1887, § 450 (bond filed in Probate Court; if lost, a certified copy is admissible); Miss. Annot. Code 1892, § 1794 (in action on a writing filed in a suit brought thereon in another court, a certified copy is admissible; but if execution is denied by plea, the clerk having custody must attend with the original); N. H. Pub. St. 1891, c. 226, § 9 (copy of recorded deposition in perpetuam, usable if the original is "lost or out of the possession and control" of the party); N. C. Code 1883, § 1342 (writings "recorded or filed as records in any court," provable by keeper's certified copy under seal, unless the Court orders production of the original); Okl. Stats. 1893, § 1587 (certified copy by clerk of district court of indictment, information, or bond filed, admissible when original is "lost, destroyed, or stolen, or for any other reason cannot be produced at the trial"); R. I. Gen. L. 1896, c. 220, § 19 (bond filed in Probate Court, provable by certified copy if lost); Tex. Rev. Civ. Stats. 1895, § 2314 (in a suit on an instrument filed in another domestic court, a certified copy is admissible; but on affidavit denying execution, the clerk shall attend on subpoena with the original).

¹¹ To avoid repetition the statutes are collected post, § 1681.

¹ 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 26 ("It is regularly true that when the record is pleaded and appears in the allegations, it must be tried on the issue nul tiel record; but where the issue is upon fact, the record may be given in evidence [by copy] to support that fact. When the issue is nul tiel record, the record must be brought, sub pede

be settled that production of the record was here unnecessary, and was required only where the record in issue existed in the same court or in an inferior court.² The practice in this country seems to be to require production of a record in the same court,³ but not usually of a record in an inferior court,⁴ and of course not of a record in a foreign court.⁵

(b) On a charge of perjury in an answer in Chancery, it was customary to require the production of the answer;⁶ but this was rather because the jurat of the Master or other official did not in itself suffice to identify the accused as the signer, and the principle involved was in truth that of Authentication (post, § 2158).

§ 1217. Same: Discriminations (Dockets, Certified Copies, etc.). (1) The question will of course arise whether the docket-book, clerk's minutes, and such documents, may constitute the record instead of the original papers or the judgment-roll; this involves the nature of a judicial record, which is not a question of the law of evidence, but involves the "parol evidence" rule (post, § 2450). (2) A sheriff's deed of sale usually recites the judgment and execution upon which it is founded; whether those papers should be produced is a question involving in part the present principle, but involving also and chiefly, the admissibility under the Hearsay rule of the sheriff's official recitals (post, § 1664). (3) That the original record, if in fact available and in Court, may be used, is clear (ante, § 1186). (4) In using copies to prove the record, an exception to the Hearsay rule allows the use of copies certified out of Court by the legal custodian; the detailed rules of this exception are elsewhere dealt with (post, § 1681). (5) There are certain preferences accorded to particular kinds of copies; these involve another principle (post, §§ 1269-1273).¹

sigilli; but where the record is offered to a jury [as evidence], any of the forementioned copies are evidence"; Editor's Note: "So that the difference of the two cases is this: In the former the issue goes to the Court; for nul tiel record is an issue in which the record itself is the only proof; . . . but where the issue is on the fact, and the record is only inducement, . . . a copy may be given in evidence").

² 1742, Woodcraft v. Kinaston, 2 Atk. 317 (Lord Hardwicke, L. C.: "There is a great difference between the record itself and the tenor; for this is only a transcript or copy; indeed it must be literal, but still it is only a transcript." "If nul tiel record be pleaded, the Court cannot have the record but by certiorari, and then the tenor [i. e. a copy], if returned, is sufficient as evidence of the record, and will countervail the plea of nul tiel record; but when the record is to be proceeded upon [in a superior court], the record itself must be returned").

³ 1847, Alexander v. Foreman, 7 Ark. 252 (production required); 1850, Adams v. State, 11 Ark. 466, 473 (production required if in same court); 1796, Burk v. Tregg, 2 Wash. Va. 215 (same); 1805, Anderson v. Dudley, 5 Call 529 (same).

⁴ 1783, Allin v. Hiscock, 1 Root 88 (justice's record; certified copies used; variance appearing, the original was required); 1825, Vail v. Smith, 4 Cow. 71 (record of an inferior domestic Court may be proved by exemplification, and need not be brought by certiorari); 1808, Ladd v. Blunt, 4 Mass. 402 (Parsons, C. J.: "We never direct the record of the Court of Common Pleas to be sent us on the trial of nul tiel record, but receive copies of their records attested by the clerk"); 1851, Dyer v. Lowell, 33 Me. 260, 262 (on certiorari for quashing an order of partition; copy sufficient); 1852, Willard v. Harvey, 24 N. H. 344, 350 (certified copy sufficient).

⁵ 1820, Baldwin v. Hale, 17 John. 272 (foreign record, provable by examined copy; here of an U. S. Circuit Court); 1813, Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cr. 481, 484 (record in another State; exemplified copy sufficient); 1818, Hampton v. McConnell, 9 id. 234 (same).

⁶ 1812, Lady Dartmouth v. Roberts, 16 East 334; 1825, Ewer v. Ambrose, 4 B. & C. 25; 1847, Garvin v. Carroll, 10 Ir. L. R. 323, 330.

¹ Whether, when a lost judicial record has been re-established by a decree, the loss has to be shown otherwise than as recited in the decree, is considered post, § 1660; for the conclusiveness of the re-established record, see post, § 1347.

§ 1218. (6) Irremovable Official Documents; General Principle. For reasons similar to those applicable to judicial records, documents belonging in any public office need not be produced, but may be otherwise proved. Their removal for production in evidence would delay and hinder the official use of the files, would make it impossible for other persons to consult the absent documents, would subject them to risk of loss, and would injure them by constant wear and tear. These reasons and the general principle have long been established:

1774, Mansfield, L. C. J., in Jones v. Randall, Cowp. 17: "A copy of [the Lords' journals] may certainly be read in evidence; for the inconvenience would be endless if the journals of the House of Lords were to be carried all over the kingdom."

1817, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Hennell v. Lyon, 1 B. & Ald. 182, 184: "The admission of copies in evidence is founded upon a principle of great public convenience, in order that documents of great moment should not be ambulatory, and subject to the loss that would be incurred if they were removable. The same has been laid down in respect of proceedings in courts, not of record, copies whereof are admitted, though not strictly of a public nature"; Abbott, J.: "It is a general principle that copies are receivable in such cases without the originals, from the great inconvenience which would result if the documents were taken to different places. There would have been a danger of loss from such a practice, and besides, the documents might be wanted at different places at the same time."

1840, Abinger, L. C. B., in Mortimer v. M'Callan, 6 M. & W. 58, 69: "When the law is laid down that you cannot remove the document in which the writing is made, you are entitled to the next best evidence."

1814, Pollock, C. B., in Doe v. Roberts, 13 M. & W. 520, 530 (a statute required title-deeds, etc., to crown lands, to be deposited in a certain office): "When directed to be kept in any particular custody, and so deposited, they are provable by examined copies, not on the ground of their being books of a public nature such as that all the world may look at them, but on the ground of the great inconvenience of removing them."

1853, Lipscomb, J., in Coons v. Renick, 11 Tex. 134, 137 (holding a contract for military stores, filed with the quartermaster, to be a public document): "If Major Babbitt could be required to appear and produce the original in one of the courts, he would be equally liable to attend with his original contract all over the State, to the great hazard of a loss of the document, as well as to the great inconvenience of those interested in the contract from its being removed from the office of the quartermaster-general. It is impossible to foresee the extent of the inconvenience to the public service, if the rule should be laid down that the quartermaster could be called from his service, where his presence might be constantly necessary, to go with a document not his own but belonging to the government."¹

It was once a phrase much used that a copy is admissible where the original if produced would be evidence.² This was intended to be said of official documents; but it was not said as affording a test for the present purpose, nor could it do so; it was said with reference to the Hearsay exception for Official Statements (post, § 1630); and its meaning is that where the original document was admissible by exception as an official statement, there a copy of it would equally be admissible under the same exception to the Hearsay rule. So far as it has in later times been construed to mean that every official document admissible under the Hearsay exception may be proved by copy, it has been misunderstood;³ for the principle of non-production does not depend on admissibility (for example, a government commission's report may not be admissible) but on its presence in official custody and its irremovability.

¹ In Sykes v. Beck, — N. D. —, 96 N. W. 844 (1903), the utterly unfounded statement is made that "the right to make proof of official records and documents primarily by copy does not exist independent of statute." Perhaps the learned judge meant to say "by certified copy"; but even that is scarcely true (post, § 1677).

² E.g.: 1696, Holt, C. J., in R. v. Hains, Comb. 337 ("A copy of any original is evidence where-soever the original is evidence"); 1697, Hoe v. Northrop, 1 Ld. Raym. 154 ("Resolved per Curiam that the immediate copy of an original is good evidence where the original itself is evidence").

The conceivable scope of the principle may include several sorts of documents. (1) Where by statute or regulation a document in official custody is expressly or impliedly forbidden to be removed, it is clear that the principle applies and production is dispensed with.⁴ (2) Where the document is one of the working-documents of the office, containing the official doings or being a paper made and consulted there officially in the course of office-duty, it is equally clear that it need not be produced. (3) Where the document is one made by a private person and filed in a public office, the principle does not apply if a statute or regulation does not expressly require it to be filed and kept there; if it does so require, then the principle applies; although the rulings lay down no clear distinction on the subject, and most of the instances are dealt with by a statute in general or specific terms. (4) Where the document is one made by a private person and required by law to be recorded in the public office but not to be kept there, the principle does not at common law apply; but in many instances a statute has provided for its application. (5) Where the document is made by a public officer and is delivered, after being recorded, to a private person (as, a government land-certificate), the principle does not apply; but by statute in many instances it has either been made to apply or the record has been constituted the basis of title, so that the record, as the original, being in official custody, need not be produced.

§ 1219. Same: Specific Instances, at Common Law. No definite and comprehensive test in applying the principle seems to have obtained acceptance at common law; and the rulings are varied and not entirely consistent. It may be noted that the practice as to producing legislative journals seems never to have been settled in England;¹ though in this country production is seldom required, and a statute often expressly thus provides.² The other received without objection); 1806, Lord Melville's Trial, 29 How. St. Tr. 685 (the printed journals rejected); 1840, Abinger, C. B., in Mortimer v. M'Callan, 6 M. & W. 58, 67 (cites the preceding cases as not allowing copies, because "any one wishing to remove them could get the sanction of the Speaker to do so").

³ See, for example, the British statutes, post, § 1680.

⁴ For the question whether the original may be removed and produced, see ante, § 1186, post, §§ 2182, 2367.

¹ 1653, Faulconer's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 323, 349 (journal produced); 1662, Sir Henry Vane's Trial, 6 id. 119, 150 (book produced); 1774, Jones v. Randall, Cowp. 17 (Lord Mansfield, C. J.: "A copy [of the Lords' journals] may certainly be read in evidence"); 1781, R. v. Lord Gordon, 2 Dougl. 590, 593 (Commons' journals; copies

For the conclusiveness of the certified enrolled statute, see post, § 1350; for judicial notice of the journals, see post, § 2572; for printed copies, see post, § 1684.

² See these collected post, §§ 1680, 1684.

kinds of documents ruled upon have led to no special or enlightening controversy.³

³ England: 1720, Brocas v. Mayor, 1 Stra. 307 (election record of the City of London; copy allowed); 1721, R. v. Gwyn, ib. 401 (municipal corporate records; copy not allowed because the letter in question was not a corporate act); 1788, R. v. King, 2 T. R. 234 (assessment-books of the land-tax in London; copy allowed); 1811, Eyre v. Palsgrave, 2 Camp. 605 (license-books of the Privy Council, licenses recorded in the Secretary of State's office, provable by copy); 1812, Walker v. Wingfield, 18 Ves. 443, 444 (marriage-register, provable by copy, but intimating that the registers were so often ill-kept that production should be required); 1813, Attorney-General v. Tomkins, 1 Dow 404 (to prove a clearance, in a prosecution for clearing with an undue number of persons on board, a copy was offered of the entry signed by the master in the custom-house book of clearances; the original entry held, semble, under the particular circumstances, provable by a copy); 1834, Alivon v. Furnival, 1 Cr. M. & R. 277, 291 (a French document deposited with a notary, and by usage, though not by law, irremovable; held "in effect out of the power of the party"); 1840, Abinger, C. B., in Mortimer v. McCallan, 6 M. & W. 53, 68 (custom-house books provable by copy); 1848, Sayer v. Glossop, 2 Exch. 409 (public marriage-register; production not required); 1860, Reed v. Lamb, 6 Jur. n. s. 828 (under statute; register of voters held to be of a "public nature"); 1873, R. v. Weaver, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 85 (official register of births, held provable by copy within the statute); Canada: 1837, McLean v. McDonell, 1 U. C. Q. B. 13 (memorial upon a land-claim filed in the Governor-General's office; copy allowed); 1875, Burpee v. Carvill, 16 N. Br. 141 (public documents in Liverpool in the custom-house proved by examined copies); United States: some of the following cases were doubtless affected by statutes, and reference should be made to the statutes collected post, § 1680: Alabama: 1847, Doe v. Eslava, 11 Ala. 1028, 1037, 1041 (certain Spanish records, etc.; under statute, production not required); 1869, Monts v. Stephens, 43 id. 217, 222 (judge's certified copy of constable's bond; original not required, semble, if good as a statutory bond, but otherwise if valid only as a common-law bond); 1881, Donegan v. Wade, 70 id. 501, 506 (search required in Probate Office of written contestation-grounds, before oral evidence of contents); 1889, Stanley v. State, 88 id. 154, 156, 7 So. 273 (reports of fees by clerk of Court to Auditor, provable by certified copies); 1892, Cofer v. Scroggins, 93 id. 342, 345, 13 So. 115 (claim of exemption, filed in Probate Court; production not required); 1893, Schwartz v. Baird, 100 id. 154, 156, 13 So. 947 (husband's written consent to wife's engaging in business, filed in Probate Court; production not required); 1893, Willingham v. State, 104 id. 59, 16 So. 116 (certificate of incorporation recorded with Secretary of State; certified copy of record receivable, whether the certificate itself has been kept there or not);

Arkansas: 1892, Dawson v. Barham, 55 Ark. 286, 290, 18 S. W. 48 (swamp-land-office entries provable by certified copy); 1895, Woodruff v. State, 61 Ark. 157, 171, 32 S. W. 102 (report of State board, original being lost, proved by extracts in the Senate journal); California: 1855, Norris v. Russell, 5 Cal. 250 (municipal ordinance; notice of tax sale; production required); 1857, Hensley v. Tarpey, 7 id. 288 (regulation of public office forbidding removal of papers, sufficient); 1857, Hensley v. Tarpey, ib. 288 (grant in Surveyor-General's office; production required); 1875, Vance v. Kohlberg, 50 id. 346, 349 (articles of consolidation filed by copy; certified copy sufficient without producing original); 1877, People v. Hagar, 52 id. 171, 173, 186 (certified copy of petition for reclamation, to the Board of Supervisors; original not required; same, for the register's notice thereof to the county-recorder); 1883, People v. Williams, 64 id. 87, 91 (certificate of U. S. census officer to contents, received, without producing original records); Connecticut: 1841, Price v. Lyon, 14 Conn. 279, 290 (certificate of membership lodged with clerk of ecclesiastical society; production not required); Illinois: 1884, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Shires, 108 Ill. 617, 623 (ordinance of city in Indiana; production of original not required); Indiana: 1864, Wells v. State, 22 Ind. 241, 243 (books of county auditor; originals need not be produced); 1881, Waymire v. State, 80 id. 67, 69 (constable's bond; original not required); Iowa: 1871, Bellows v. Todd, 34 Ia. 18, 26 (letters on file in the land-office; copies sufficient); 1878, Morrison v. Coad, 49 id. 571, 573 (contract not required to be filed; statute not applicable); 1889, Lyons v. Van Gorder, 77 id. 600, 601, 42 N. W. 500 (assessment of damages recorded with town-clerk; original accounted for); 1899, McPeck v. Tel. Co., 107 id. 356, 78 N. W. 63 (governor's proclamation of reward; original not required); Kansas: 1895, Bowersock v. Adams, 55 Kan. 681, 41 Pac. 971 (statements of personal property for taxation; production not required, under Code § 372, unless proponent had control); Louisiana: 1845, White v. Kearney, 9 Rob. 495, 499 (clearance and manifest of vessel at custom-house, not an official document); Maine: 1881, State v. Wiggin, 72 Me. 425 (internal revenue record-book provable by certified copy); 1898, State v. Howard, 91 id. 396, 40 Atl. 65 (records in U. S. tax-collector's office, provable by copy); Michigan: 1876, Pierce v. Rehfuess, 35 Mich. 53 (bill of sale lawfully filed with town-clerk, provable by certified copy); 1895, People v. Clarke, 105 id. 169, 62 N. W. 1117 (election returns; loss shown); 1898, Deerfield Tp. v. Harpr, 115 id. 678, 74 N. W. 207 (return of highway-taxes filed with supervisor; production required); Mississippi: 1849, Routh v. Bank, 12 Sm. & M. 161, 185 (power of attorney authorized by Louisiana law to be kept on deposit by notary; certified copy admitted); 1855, James v. Kirk, 29 Miss. 206, 210 (same, bill of sale); Missouri: 1823, Chouteau v. Chevalier, 1 Mo. 343 (mar-

It may be noted that whether a document is an official one and need not be produced may be still a common-law question, even where a statute additionally applies; so that, if the statute is limited in its application, the original may still at common law not be required. Thus, the statutes covering the present subject have for their chief purpose (as noted in the ensuing section) to authorize custodians to give certified copies which shall be receivable in spite of the Hearsay rule, and so a statute authorizing the use of a certified copy of a given document will still leave in force the common-law principle on the present subject; so that the document may be proved by an examined copy without production.⁴

§ 1220. Same: Specific Instances, under Statutes. In a vast number of instances, statutes have expressly provided that specific documents in official custody may be proved without production, i. e. by copy. In many jurisdictions a general rule has by statute been enacted, making the same provision in general terms for official documents as a class. These statutes, however, riage-contract deposited by Spanish custom among government archives, provable by copy); 1851, Harvey v. Chouteau, 14 id. 587, 597 (will-codicil required by Louisiana law to be kept by notary, provable by copy); 1887, State v. Pagels, 92 id. 300, 310 (Illinois insane-hospital books not shown to be public); 1897, Carter v. Hornback, 139 id. 238, 40 S. W. 893 (a survey not official, and therefore not entitled to record; copy excluded); New Hampshire: 1843, Woods v. Banks, 14 N. H. 101, 109 (proprietary records need not be produced); 1850, Forsaith v. Clark, 21 id. 409, 419 (proprietary charter recorded; production not required); 1857, Willey v. Portsmouth, 35 id. 303, 309 (town records; production not required); 1858, Ferguson v. Clifford, 37 id. 86, 95 ("Books or records of this character [i. e. official registers or books kept by persons in public office], being themselves evidence, and being usually restricted to a particular custody, their contents may be proved by an immediate copy"); 1895, State v. Collins, 68 id. 299, 44 Atl. 495 (U. S. internal revenue collector's records, provable by copy); New York: 1831, Jackson v. Leggett, 7 Wend. 377 (original certificate of incorporation of a society must be produced); Ohio: 1840, Sheldon v. Coates, 10 Oh. 278, 282 (tax records; original not required); Pennsylvania: 1823, Kingston v. Lesley, 10 S. & R. 383, 387 (copy of official list in land-office; original not required); 1832, Oliphant v. Ferrant, 1 Watts 57 (statute applied to admit copies of land-office blotters); 1852, Strimpfler v. Roberts, 18 Pa. 283, 297 (same); North Carolina: 1816, Teil v. Roberts, 3 Hay v. 138, semble (postmasters' valuations, in the hands of the postmaster-general; production not required); 1817, Denton v. Foute, 4 id. 73 (enlistment-contract of a soldier, kept at the Adjutant-General's and the Treasury; production not required); Tennessee: 1869, Reeves v. State, 7 Coldw. 96 (account for expenses of taking escaped prisoner, filed with Comptroller; production of original not required, as an official paper, in showing amount of money received by accountant; otherwise if a charge of forgery or perjury was based on the paper); 1879, Amis v. Marks, 3 Lea 568, 569, semble (constable's bond offered by certified copy; original must be accounted for); Texas: 1853, Coons v. Renick, 11 Tex. 134, 136 (contract for military stores, filed in quartermaster's office; original not required); 1860, Dikes v. Miller, 25 id. (Suppl.) 281, 284, 290 (title-document filed in land-office, provable by copy, because irremovable though not lawfully filed); 1860, Highsmith v. State, ib. 137, 139 (account of assessor, etc., not lawfully a record of the Comptroller's office, not provable by copy); United States: 1830, Ronkendorff v. Taylor, 4 Pet. 349, 360 (official assessment list; original not required); 1896, Re Hirsch, 74 Fed. 928 (unlawful liquor-selling by C.; the application of C. for a Federal license to sell liquors being admissible to show intent, the fact that the document was on file in the records of the Federal deputy-collector of internal revenue, held not to excuse its production in court); 1879, Corbett v. Gibson, 16 Blatchf. 334 (documents in military headquarters of Department of the East, provable by copy); Vermont: 1862, Briggs v. Taylor, 35 Vt. 57, 59, 67 (recorded appointment of deputy-sheriff; original not required); 1887, State v. Spaulding, 60 id. 228, 233, 14 Atl. 769 (internal-revenue record-book, provable by copy); 1898, State v. White, 70 id. 225, 39 Atl. 1085 (records in U. S. tax-collector's office, provable by copy).

⁴ 1882, Shtesbury v. Hadley, 133 Mass. 242 (copy of a public marriage register sufficient, where the place of residence of parties was to be shown by the record, although a statute authorizing copies spoke only of using them to show the fact of marriage). Contra: 1889, Martin v. Hall, 72 Ala. 587 (official bond filed; proof of original's loss, etc., required for the use of any but duly certified copy; this seems unsound). Compare the cases for recorded deeds (post, § 1225); and the rule as between different kinds of copies (post, §§ 1269, 1273).

usually do no more, as regards the present principle, than the Courts would otherwise have done under the common-law principle; the chief object of such statutes being usually to amplify the common-law exception to the Hearsay rule by which certified copies by official custodians may become admissible.¹

§ 1221. Same: Exceptions at Common Law. (1) There was no exception to the general principle at common law for a case where the official document happened to be actually in court; i. e. it could still be proved by copy.¹ (2) There was no exception for an issue of non est factum,² as there was (ante, § 1216) for nul tiel record.

§ 1222. Same: Discriminations. (1) Whether a certified or other copy by an official not testifying in court may be used, instead of an examined or sworn copy by a witness testifying on the stand, is a question of the exception to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1677). (2) Whether a certified or an examined copy is preferred to oral testimony is a question of Preferred Testimony (post, §§ 1267–1275). (3) Whether an official land-title record, or the like, should be produced, depends often on whether by the land-law the official record or the official certificate issued to the owner is regarded as the investitive and original document of title; this question being determined (post, § 1239), the principles of the present subject and of deed-registration (post, § 1224), then control the result. (4) Whether a public document is forbidden to be proved, either by original or by copy, because of a privilege of official secrecy, involves other principles (post, §§ 2182, 2367).

§ 1223. (7) Private Books of Public Importance (Banks, Corporations, Title-Abstracts, Marriage-Registers, etc.). Where private documents are in such general and constant use and importance that their liability to removal for production as evidence would cause not merely individual but general inconvenience, there is ground for applying the reasons of the preceding two rules of exemption and for allowing such documents to be proved without production. No such broad principle was established by the common law;¹

¹ To avoid repetition, such statutes are collected under that subject, post, § 1680, since by one and the same enactment they exempt from producing the original (applying the present principle) and also admit certified copies (applying the Hearsay exception). Sometimes the statute distinctly repudiates the application of the present principle, by requiring the original to be accounted for before copies can be used. A few classes of statutes, however, will be found under the following heads: (a) a few in which the document is treated as of the nature of a judicial record (e. g. a probate bond filed) have been mentioned ante, § 1215; (b) those providing for the proof of a recorded conveyance are specially dealt with post, § 1225; (c) those providing for Government land-grants are placed post, § 1239.

¹ 1798, Marsh v. Collnett, 2 Esp. 665 (to prove transfer of stock, a copy of the transfer taken from the Bank-books was received, though the books themselves were in court; Lord Kenyon, C. J., said "they were public books, which public convenience required should not be removed from place to place; and, though the books were in court, he would not, for the sake of example, break in upon a rule founded on that principle of public convenience"). Contra: 1818, Butler v. Carver, 2 Stark. 434 (where the witness produces the document in court, a copy is not allowed).

² 1843, Treasurers v. Witsall, 1 Speer 220, 221 (sheriff's bond; plea, non est factum; certified copy sufficient).

¹ 1855, Pollock, C. B., in Boyle v. Wiseman, 10 Exch. 647, 654, suggested that there might be a like rule, in the case of "documents which though of a private nature are meant to be made public, such as commercial instruments," etc., as for public documents in the strict sense, e. g. court records; but he gives no reason for his view.

but some instances were recognized in which the germ of such a principle is contained; and in a few other specific instances it has been recognized by statute:

1840, Alderson, B., in Mortimer v. McCallan, 6 M. & W. 58, 67: "Then if they are not removable, on the ground of public inconvenience, that is upon the same footing in point of principle as in the case of that which is not removable by the physical nature of the thing itself. . . . The necessity of the case in the one instance, and in the other case the general public inconvenience which would follow from the books being removed, supplies the reason of the rule.

1878, Campbell, C. J., in People v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 328, 331, 1 N. W. 1027: "Banks are subject to the performance of duties to the public which might be seriously interfered with if they were compelled to carry the books needed in their business into every court or tribunal where testimony is to be introduced concerning them. Books belonging in public offices cannot be removed from their legal custody without some strong necessity for their production. While bank-books are not public to the same extent, yet the business which the corporations are required to transact cannot be done unless the books are usually preserved where they belong. The blotter . . . must be in constant demand, and we see no reason why its contents may not be shown without production of the original, in ordinary cases, where no question of genuineness is likely to arise requiring a personal inspection."

Thus, at common law in England, the books of the Bank of England (legally a private institution) were not required to be produced;² and the same principle was applied to the books of the old East India Company,³ and occasionally to other documents.⁴ In this country, the principle has been applied to banks in a few instances at common law,⁵ and in other instances by statute.⁶ It has also been applied, by statute, to unofficial marriage-

² 1840, Mortimer v. McCallan, 6 M. & W. 58, 67 (writing in the books of the Bank of England; copy receivable, since "the removal of them would be so inconvenient"; "the public inconvenience" as a principle "has been adopted in a variety of cases, and has never been questioned since"). So now, by statute, to all bankers' books: St. 1879, c. 11, §§ 3, 6, Bankers' Books Evidence Act (banker's book-entry provable by copy, verified on the stand or by affidavit; unless Court orders production); 1892, Parnell v. Wood, Prob. 137 ("The Act was passed mainly for the relief of bankers, to avoid the serious inconvenience occasioned to them by their having to produce books which were in constant use in their business").

³ 1702, Geery v. Hopkins, 2 Ld. Raym. 851 (the cash-book of "the old East India Company," required to be produced); 1775, Trial of Maharajah Nundocomar, 20 How. St. Tr. 1057 (Council proceedings of the East India Company, provable by copy, because "the bringing the books and papers may subject them to the hazard of being lost and may impede the business"); 1771, Wynne v. Middleton, cited in 2 Dougl. 593 (transfer-books of the East India Company; Lord Mansfield, C. J., said "that the reason ab inconvenienti, for holding it not necessary to produce records, applied with still greater force to such public books as the transfer-books of the E. I. Co.; for the utmost confusion would occur if they could be transported to any the most distant part of the kingdom whenever their contents should be thought material on the trial of a cause"); 1844, Parke, B., in Doe v. Roberts, 13 M. & W. 520, 532 (provable by copy).

⁴ 1724, Downes v. Mooreman, Bunbury 189, 191 (copy of an old contract in the Bodleian Library of Oxford; the University statutes prohibited the taking out of books; the copy allowed "upon the very particular circumstances of this case").

⁵ 1845, Crawford v. Branch Bank, 8 Ala. 79 (books of the State bank need not be produced); 1878, People v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 328 (see quotation supra).

⁶ Newf. St. 1897, c. 21 (bankers' books, provable by copy, on certain conditions); Mass. St. 1894, c. 317, § 49 (domestic savings bank's books, provable by affidavit copy of bank custodian); Pa. St. 1883, P. & L. Dig. Evid. 38-41 ("verified" copies of bank-book entries, receivable where bank is not a party, unless against affidavit of injustice); Wis. Stats. 1898, § 4189 b (bank-books provable, apart from special order, by copy sworn to by an officer of the bank on the stand or by affidavit; the original to be open to the inspection of the party).

registers,⁷ to abstracts of title privately owned but generally consulted,⁸ and to various specific kinds of privately-owned records in different occupations.⁹

In some jurisdictions, a statute of questionable policy has applied the rule to corporation-books.¹⁰ This line of discrimination is both unsound and unfair. That a business is managed by corporate powers, or that it is extensive and wealthy, is no reason for distinction. It is just as inconvenient for the poor man or for a small commercial house to carry off his account-books into court; and he can even less afford to suffer it. These statutes miss the real point of the rule. It implies two circumstances, namely, the frequency of litigation involving such documents, and the consequent demand for them in court by litigant third persons or opponents. Such conditions exist for the books of a business of banking, of transportation (by rail or by express), of insurance, of communication (by telegraph or by telephone), and of a few others. But they have no relation to the corporate organization of the business, or to the relative size of it. They aim merely to protect a business which is liable to be called upon in an inordinate degree to make that contribution to justice which every citizen must make as a witness when needed (post, § 2192). If then any further concession can properly be made to personal convenience, by exempting from production the account-books of an ordinary business, it should be made without discrimination. There is already,

⁷ These statutes, which also make a certain kind of copy admissible, have been collected in one place, post, § 1683; the statutes for public registers are in § 1680. There is even a common-law ruling: 1814, Stoever v. Whitman, 6 Binn. 416 (church-register allowed to be proved by sworn copy, as a "common-law proof").

⁸ These statutes are collected in one place, post, § 1705.

⁹ N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 99, § 204 (minutes of railway corporation's meetings, provable by secretary's certified copy); § 214 (so for by-laws, etc.); Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 207, § 40 (railroad by-laws and minutes of proceedings are provable by certified copy); Ind. Rev. St. 1897, § 4619 (camp-meeting corporation's records, provable by secretary's certified copy); §§ 5686, 5706 (records of telegraph and telephone companies, provable by attested copy, "when the interests of said corporation are concerned"); La. Rev. L. 1897, § 694 (books and records of railroad companies, provable by secretary's certified copy under corporate seal); Mich. Comp. L. 1897, § 6220 (by-laws of society for loaning and investing, provable by copy); § 7169 (same for printing and publishing association); § 8439 (same for corporation for treating disease); R. I. Gen. L. 1896, c. 244, § 45 (newspapers deposited with R. I. Historical Society, provable by certified copy); Wis. Stats. 1898, § 4182 a (certain insurance companies' books, not required to be produced, except by special order).

¹⁰ Canada: Dom. St. 1893, c. 31, § 12 (corporation documents or book-entries; cited post, § 1680); B. C. Rev. St. 1897, c. 71, § 13 (like Can. St. 1893, c. 31, § 12); Man. St. 1902, c. 57, § 14 (like Can. St. 1893, c. 31, § 12);

N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 11 (like Can. St. 1893, c. 31, § 12); Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 73, § 26 (documents and books of "any corporation created by charter or statute in this province" are provable by certified copy); c. 191, § 66 (corporate by-law is provable by certified copy); Ga. Code 1895, § 5236 (domestic corporation's books, provable without production, by chief officer's certified copy); 1900, Maynard v. Interstate B. & L. Assoc., 112 Ga. 443, 37 S. E. 741 (statute applied); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 15 (papers and records of "any corporation or incorporated association," provable by certified copy of clerk, etc., under corporate seal, if any); Ind. Rev. St. 1897, § 479 ("acts and proceedings of corporations," provable by sworn copy); Me. Pub. St. 1883, c. 46, § 10 (corporation-books, semble, may be proved by copy); Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 3101 (domestic corporation's records and papers on file, provable by certified copy); Nev. Gen. St. 1885, § 3449 (copy receivable "when the original is a record or other document in the custody of a public officer, or officer of a corporation"); Pa. St. 1897, May 25, Pub. L. 82, § 1 (quoted post, § 1519); 1900, Page v. Knights & Ladies, — Tenn. —, 61 S. W. 1068 (corporation books of a benefit society; originals required, except that as between stockholders and the corporation a copy certified under seal by the secretary suffices, under Code § 5569).

One Court seems to have reached the result at common law: 1858, Madison D. & P. R. Co. v. Whitesel, 11 Ind. 55, 57 (record-books of corporations, not required to be produced); 1862, Evans v. Turnpike Co., 18 id. 101, 103 (articles of association of turnpike company; original required); 1873, King v. Ins. Co., 45 id. 43, 59 (like 11 id. 55, supra).

in Canada, a class of statutes which avoid that objectionable feature.¹¹ As a radical measure, the best enactment would be one which left the general principle, in its application in a given case, to the trial Court's discretion.

§ 1224. (8) Recorded Conveyances; General Principle; Four Forms of Rule. That a deed has been lawfully recorded is of itself no reason why the ordinary rule of production should not apply where the deed's contents are to be proved. The deed, after being recorded, is returned to the grantee or other party entitled to its possession, and does not become a part of the official files so as to be affected by the principle of either of the two preceding exemptions (§§ 1218, 1223); so that, apart from other special considerations, the party offering to prove the deed's contents should either produce it or account for its absence by some one of the ordinary excuses for non-production. Such special considerations, however, in many jurisdictions, have long been acknowledged — at common law and apart from express statutory provisions — to apply to the case of a recorded conveyance.

In England, it is not entirely clear whether these considerations were ever recognized. There existed only limited provisions for the public recording of conveyances; one of these covered the old method of transfer by "bargain and sale";¹ the other consisted of a group of special statutes providing a recording system for specific districts, notably Middlesex and Yorkshire counties.² These statutes did not expressly provide that proof might be made without production of the original conveyances; and the precedents, being complicated by the consideration whether under the Hearsay rule the recorder's or register's certified copies were receivable (post, § 1650), do not indicate a final settlement of the principle; although there was apparently at one time a regular practice of not requiring production,³ and the tradition to ¹¹ B. C. Rev. St. 1897, c. 71, § 41 (commercial documents; like Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 73, § 51); Man. Rev. St. 1902, c. 57, §§ 26, 27 (substantially like Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 73, § 51, substituting three days for the counter-notice); Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 73, § 51 ("telegrams, letters, shipping-bills, bills of lading, delivery orders, receipts, accounts, and other written instruments used in business and other transactions" are provable by copy, on ten days' notice before trial to the opponent; unless the opponent, within four days after the time mentioned in the notice offering opportunity of inspection, gives notice of intention to dispute the correctness or genuineness of the copy and to "require proof of the original"); P. E. I. St. 1889, § 48 (like Ont. R. S. 1897, c. 73, § 51; but allowing only three days for the opponent to demand the original).

¹ See post, § 1650, for these statutes.

² See post, § 1650.

³ 1593, Wymark's Case, 5 Co. Rep. 75 ("Although a deed be enrolled in court, one cannot plead it in the same court without shewing it"; but otherwise of letters patent); 1613, Read v. Hide, 3 Co. Inst. 173, semble (deed-enrolled may be proved by exemplified copy of enrolment; see quotation post, § 1682); 1684, Lady Ivy's Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 555, 595 (deed enrolled, proved by examined copy); 1694, Smart v. Williams, Comb. 247 ("they held a sworn copy of a deed enrolled good evidence"); 1696, Lynch v. Clerke, 3 Salk. 154 (Holt, C. J.: "Wherever an original is of a public nature, and would be evidence if produced, an immediate sworn copy thereof will be evidence; as, the copy of a bargain and sale or of a deed enrolled, of a church register, etc."); ante 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius, 252 (an enrolment of a patent in the same court need not be proffered, though a deed enrolled must be, for the Court will take notice of the former public act, though not of the latter public act; but "by 10 Anne, c. 18, where any bargain and sale inrolled is pleaded with a proferat, the party [offering it], to answer such proferat, may produce a copy of the inrolment"); 1797, Molton v. Harris, 2 Esp. 549 (deed in opponent's hands; no notice being given, the "memorial of the conveyance" was excluded); 1826, Doe v. Kilner, 2 C. & P. 289 (after proof of loss of deed registered in Middlesex, examined copies from the registry were admitted); 1838, Collins v. Maule, 8 C. & P. 502 (Middlesex registry; a deed being shown lost, an examined copy of the registry was the same effect in the southeastern colonies is strongly corroborative of this practice.

In the United States, three kinds of results were evolved at common law; a fourth kind was added by statutory invention; and statutes also in many jurisdictions followed one or another of the common-law methods:⁴

(a) By one of these views (originating in the southeastern States) the statutory system of public registration is thought to imply, in its policy, a general resort to the public record as a source of proof, and, for the sake of public convenience, a general dispensation from the necessity of preserving as a muniment of title a class of documents whose legal importance is comparatively little apart from the record. Thus, the registration system implies that the original deed need not be produced nor accounted for in any way:

1825, Colcock, J., in Peay v. Picket, 3 McCord 318, 321: "From the earliest enactments of the British Parliament on this subject, to the present day, a period of about 280 years, it has been the established law of that country that a copy of a deed duly enrolled is as good evidence as the original itself; and I think I do not say too much when I assert that it was generally considered to be the law of this land from the first enactment on the same subject here, in 1731, to the decision of Purvis v. Robinson, a decision much to be regretted."

1831, Story, J., in Doe v. Winn, 5 Pet. 233, 241: "We think it clear that by the common law, as held for a long period, an exemplification of a public grant under the Great Seal is admissible in evidence, as being record proof of as high a nature as the original. . . . There was in former times a technical distinction existing on this subject which deserves notice. As evidence, such exemplifications of letters patent seem to have been generally deemed admissible. But where, in pleading, a profert was made of letters patent, there, upon the principles of pleading, the original under the Great Seal was required to be produced, for a profert could not be made of any copy or exemplification. It was to cure this difficulty that the statutes of 3 Edw. VI, c. 4, and 13 Eliz. c. 6, were passed, by which patentees and all claiming under them were enabled to make title in pleading by showing forth an exemplification of the letters patent as if the original were pleaded and set forth. These statutes, being passed before the emigration of our ancestors, being applicable to our situation, and in amendment of the law, constitute a part of our common law. A similar effect was given by the statute of 10 Anne, c. 18, to copies of deeds of bargain and sale, enrolled under the statute of Henry VIII, when offered by way of profert in pleading; and since that period a copy of the enrolment of a bargain and sale is held as good evidence as the original itself. Such, then, being the rule of evidence of the common law in regard to exemplifications under the Great Seal of public grants, the application of it to the case now at bar will be at once perceived, since by the laws of Georgia all public grants are required to be recorded in the proper State department."

(b) By another view, chiefly represented in New England and in the States received); 1828, Rowe v. Brenton, 8 B. & C. 737, 755 (lease of land in duchy of Cornwall, the fee of which was alternately in the Duke and in the Crown; the enrolled record was clearly sufficient for a Crown lease, "because the Crown can only grant by matter of record"; the lease here was by a clause required to be enrolled; held, that the original need not be produced; Bayley, B.: "There is a regular office and an auditor for managing these matters, whose duty it is to enrol authentic documents only"); 1844, Doe v. Roberts, 13 M. & W. 520, 530 (enrolled leases of Crown lands in Wales, held provable by examined copies, on the ground that "the original documents . . . are kept among the muniments of the Crown" and could not be removed).

Compare the English precedents as to certified copies (post, § 1650).

⁴ The earliest statutes appear to have been those of New Jersey in 1713, of Pennsylvania in 1715, and of South Carolina in 1731. Compare the history of the doctrine of certified copies (post, § 1651).

about the Ohio River (and appearing about the same time in all), the result was based on the change of custom naturally introduced into the practice for title-deeds by the registration system. The continuous handing down of prior title-deeds to each successive grantee becomes no longer necessary, and each grantee keeps his own deed and receives no prior ones. Thus, the only person who may fairly be supposed to possess a deed is the grantee; and hence it is only deeds in which the grantee is either the proponent or the opponent in the trial that can be assumed to be in either party's possession, since the prior ones are in prior grantees' hands and are likely to be no longer in existence as not being of importance:

1828, Per Curiam, in Eaton v. Campbell, 7 Pick. 10: "In England, on the conveyance of land, all the title-deeds are delivered to the purchaser, and it is reasonable to require him to produce the original deed given to a prior grantee. . . . [But] here the grantee takes only the immediate deed to himself, relying on the covenants of his grantor; he has no right to the possession of all the title-deeds of the estate; and to require him to produce all the original deeds for 20 years or more, and to bring in the subscribing witnesses, would be unreasonable and oppressive."

1854, Shaw, C. J., in Com. v. Emery, 2 Gray 80: "In all cases original deeds should be required if they can be had; but as this would be burdensome and expensive, if not impossible in many cases, some relaxation of this rule was necessary for practical purposes. . . . Our system of conveyancing, modified by the registry law, is that each grantee retains the deed made immediately to himself, to enable him to make good his warranties. Succeeding grantees do not, as a matter of course, take possession of deeds made to preceding parties so as to be able to prove a chain of title by a series of original deeds. Every grantee, therefore, is the keeper of his own deed, and of his own deed only. . . . When, then, he has occasion to prove any fact by such deed, he cannot use a copy, because it would be offering inferior evidence, when in theory of law a superior is in his possession or power; it is only on proof of the loss of the original, in such case, that any secondary evidence can be received. . . . [So also even where the opponent is the grantee of the deed, i. e.] where such original is in theory of law in possession of the adverse party, because upon notice the adverse party is bound to produce it," or allow secondary evidence.

1856, Storrs, J., in Bolton v. Cummings, 25 Conn. 410, 421: "In view of this practice [for every grantee to retain his own title-deeds], which would oftentimes render it extremely inconvenient to produce remote original title-deeds of lands, and of the provisions of our registry-system, which require those deeds to be recorded and upon official copies of the records of which reliance may safely be placed as to the contents of those deeds, our Courts have departed from the common-law rule in regard to the admission of secondary evidence of their contents, and held that where a conveyance of real estate which is required to be recorded is to a person not a party to the suit, it is competent, and sufficient in the first instance, to prove the contents of it by a copy certified by the recording officer, without laying a foundation for such proof by first accounting for the non-production of the original."

In strictness, it will be noted, this reasoning would exempt from producing only the prior title-deeds in the proponent's chain of title. The case of a collateral and accessible grantee — for example, in an action for rent against a tenant evicted by superior title, the deed of the grantee-evictor, desired to be proved by the tenant — is not covered; but in most of those jurisdictions the principle was extended to it; so that the rule became, not only that he was exempted from producing all prior deeds in his own chain of title, but from producing any deeds whatever not presumably in possession of a party to the suit.

(c) By a third view (obtaining perhaps in the greater number of jurisdictions until statutes intervened), neither the policy of the registry system nor the practices it encouraged were regarded as justifying any exemption from the ordinary rule that the deed must be produced or accounted for. The recorded deed must be accounted for like any other :

1795, Waties, J., in Purvis v. Robinson, 1 Bay 493, 494 : "If, by recording a deed, the necessity of producing it was dispensed with, then the proof of its validity would rest on the ex parte oath of one of the subscribing witnesses before any justice of the peace and without any examination. It would be very easy by this means to conceal, under the fair dress of a record, the foulest features of fraud manifest on the face of the original, and to give even to a forged deed all the effects of a valid one."

(d) The fourth type of rule (entirely statutory) exhibits a number of minor varieties ; but its substance is that the proponent may proceed without production if he first proves (often by affidavit) that the deed in question is "not within his possession or control." This rule falls short of the strict one last mentioned, in that the deed might be in the opponent's possession or in a third person's possession, and yet the proponent need make no effort to obtain it. The rule differs, too, from the second one above mentioned, in that for a non-grantee as proponent it is stricter, since he must at least make some proof that he has not control, while by the second rule this appears from the nature of the deed as alleged. The rule is, however, easier (than the second rule) for a grantee as proponent, since the proof that it is not in his "possession or control" may fall short of the proof by ordinary common-law rules that would be required of the grantee-proponent under the second rule. Furthermore, it is easier in that it does not require steps to be taken for production where the deed is in the opponent's possession (except by some statutes requiring prior notice). By one variety of this fourth form, the proponent is to show that the deed is "lost or out of his power." By another variety, he is to give notice a certain time beforehand that he intends to use a copy. Statutory enactments other than those taking the fourth form, or some variety of it, have usually adopted the first, i. e. in allowing unconditionally the use of a copy of the record without producing or accounting for the original.

§ 1225. Same : Statutes and Decisions.¹ The law is in some jurisdictions the result solely of judicial decision ; in others, of one or more statutes super-

¹ The limitations of the following collections of decisions and statutes are above-noted in the text ; these same statutes, however, are also to be consulted elsewhere in their bearings on other principles, particularly the kind of officer certifying copies and the mode of certifying by seal, etc. (post, § 1651), and the necessity of notice to the opponent before using copies (post, § 1859) :

ENGLAND: the decisions have been collected ante, § 1224 ; the statutes are placed post, § 1650.

CANADA: Dominion: Rev. St. 1886, c. 51, §§ 38 ff. (registry of title ; applicable to the Dominion Territories) ; St. 1893, c. 31, § 18 (similar to Ont. R. S. 1897, c. 73, § 32).

British Columbia: Rev. St. 1897, c. 111, § 48 (registrar's certified copy of any recorded instrument, except a will, may be used "in the absence of the original when the absence of such original is duly accounted for, and if produced by a party not having the control of the original") ; imposed upon early decisions; and in others, of statutes from the beginning. For an accurate understanding of the present validity of the earlier rulings,

c. 71, § 19 (like Can. St. 1893, c. 31, § 18); St. 1899, c. 62, § 158 (similar to Man. St. 1902, c. 148, § 161); St. 1902, c. 22, § 2 (instrument kept or registered in a land office or registry of a county or the Supreme Court; certified copy shall be evidence "of the original"); 1899, Pavier v. Snow, 7 Br. C. 81 (instruments recorded under c. 135, § 94, are admissible under § 98, without proof of loss of original).

Manitoba: Rev. St. 1902, c. 148, § 161, Real Property Act (a certificate of land title, or any instrument deposited or registered in such office, is provable by certified copy "as if the original within such office was produced"); c. 150, § 51, Registry Act (certified copy of a registered instrument, except crown grants, orders in council, mechanics' lien claims, and notices, etc., under a mortgage power of sale, shall be "prima facie evidence of the contents and execution of the original," "in case of loss, destruction, or obliteration, or partial destruction or obliteration of the original"; compare the statutes cited post, § 1651); c. 11, § 19 (bill of sale or mortgage of chattels; clerk's certified copy to be evidence of registration only); c. 57, § 17 (Quebec notarial instruments; like Can. St. 1893, c. 31, § 18).

New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1877, c. 46, § 10 (Crown grants before the erection of the Province are provable "as hereinbefore provided"; compare post, § 1680); St. 1888, c. 8 (deed or will registered in the sheriff-court books of Scotland is provable by certified copy, etc.); St. 1894, c. 20, § 34 (filed notice of sale under mortgage power of sale; certified copy admissible, on notice as infra, ib. § 60, and an affidavit that the original is on file or that it is "not in the possession of the person offering the same, his agent or attorney, and that he does not know where the same is to be found"); § 59 (duly registered instruments, other than wills, may be proved, "in the absence of the original instrument," by the registrar's certified copy, on affidavit "that such original is not under the control of the party, and that he does not know where the same may be found," and on six days' written notice to the opponent with a copy of the copy and affidavit); § 60 (when the offering party "resides out of the province, or at the time of the making of the affidavit is without the province," his agent or attorney may make affidavit that the party is non-resident and that the affiant "has not the possession of the original instrument and does not know where the same is or may be found, and that he has reason to believe that such person has not the original instrument in his possession and does not know where the same is or may be found," and that he has not left to evade making affidavit, and, on six days' notice and service of a copy of the affidavit, a certified copy may be used); § 62 (no certified copy of any registered instrument shall be received unless the original, or a duplicate original, "is in the possession of the adverse party, and not in the possession of the party offering such evidence, and that due notice shall have been given to produce the same"); St. 1897, c. 11 (instruments filed under the Bills of Sale Act of 1893 are provable by the registrar's certified copy, on affidavit that "such originals or a duplicate thereof are not under the control of the party," and after six days' notice to the opponent and service of a copy of the copy and the affidavit); 1883, McCormack v. McBride, 23 N. Br. 12 (three deeds; an affidavit that they were not under his control, etc., excluded; the affidavit should have said that neither was; Wetmore, J., diss.); 1886, Doe v. Kennedy, 26 id. 83, 88, 94 (the affidavit need not be of the party himself; Wetmore, J., diss.).

Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1892, c. 57, § 25 (a "deed or document" duly registered may be proved by certified copy, if the original is "proved to be lost").

Nova Scotia: Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 20 (crown grants provable, without production of the original, by certain certified copies); § 21 ("any deed, or any document from the books of registry" is provable by certified or examined copy, if it appears "by the affidavit of the party, his agent, or solicitor, that such original is not in the possession or under the control of the party, and that he is unable to procure the same"); § 24 ("every bill of sale or other document, filed in any registry of deeds, may be proved" by producing a certified copy); § 27 (Quebec notarial instruments; substantially like Can. St. 1893, c. 31, § 18, omitting the proviso).

Northwest Territories (see also Dominion, supra): Consol. Ord. 1898, c. 43, § 30, c. 44, § 9 (mortgages and sales of chattels are provable by certified copy "as if the original instrument was produced").

Ontario: Rev. St. 1897, c. 73, § 32 ("notarial act or instrument" in Quebec, filed, enrolled, or enregistered, is provable by notarial copy; compare the further quotation post, § 1651); § 46 ("any registered instrument or memorial" is provable by certified copy); § 47 ("in any action where it would be necessary to produce and prove an original instrument which has been registered in order to establish such instrument and the contents thereof," the foregoing certified copy may be used, on notice ten days before trial; unless the opponent within four days after receipt of notice gives notice that he "disputes the validity of the original instrument"); § 50 (for "any instrument affecting land, which may be deposited, filed, kept, or registered, in the office of the master or local master of registered titles," a certified copy under the master's seal of office "shall be prima facie evidence of such instrument and of the contents thereof"; and the original shall not be required to be produced unless by order of the judge, giving the special reasons); c. 134, § 2 (in completing contracts for the sale of land, "registered memorials of discharged mortgages" shall suffice without producing the original, unless the former are shown inaccurate; and "the vendor shall not be bound to produce the mortgages unless they appear to be in his possession or power"; for other instruments, registered memorials twenty years old suffice, unless shown inaccurate, "if the memorials purport to be executed by the grantor, or in other cases, if possession has been consistent with the registered title"; the vendor "shall not be bound to produce the original instruments unless they appear to be in his possession or power; and the memorials shall be presumed to contain all the material contents of the instruments to which they relate"; c. 148, § 24 (chattel mortgage or sale filed; certified copy shall be received, but only to prove the fact of filing).

a complete historical exposition of the course of legislation in each State would be necessary; but that is here impossible.

Prince Edward Island: St. 1889, § 42 (certified copy of a "deed or mortgage duly registered" is admissible if the Court is satisfied by the party's affidavit that the original "is not under his control, and that he does not know where the same may be found"); § 43 (seven days' notice must be given, with service of copies of the deed-copy and affidavit); § 44 (public lands commissioner's duplicate deed, provable on the same terms as in §§ 42, 43); § 45 (registered plan, provable like a deed); § 46 (Surrogate's registered license to sell real estate is provable by certified copy); § 49 (filed bill of sale or mortgage of chattels is provable by certified copy).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: Code 1897, §§ 992, 995 (conveyances, etc., duly acknowledged or proved and recorded; "if it appears to the Court that the original conveyance has been lost or destroyed or that the party offering the transcript has not the custody or control thereof," a certified transcript is to be received); § 1018 (same for conditional sales of personality); § 1544 (recorded declaration of notice of adverse possession, provable by certified copy); St. 1899, Feb. 1, No. 241 (certified transcript of conveyance duly recorded heretofore or within 12 months must be received, "if it appears to the Court that the original conveyance has been lost or destroyed or that the party offering the transcript has not the custody or control thereof"); 1831, Sommerville v. Stephenson, 3 Stew. 271, 277 (deed from opponent to offeror; production required, under the statute, which merely declared the common law); 1832, Mitchell v. Mitchell, 3 Stew. & P. 81, 84 (grantee offering; loss must be shown); 1839, Swift v. Fitzhugh, 9 Port. 39, 52, 57 (wife claiming under marriage settlement; original must be accounted for); 1844, Beall v. Dearing, 7 Ala. 124, 127 (purchaser at sheriff's sale; unrecorded deed to debtor, presumed not in purchaser's possession, on the facts); 1847, Thompson v. Ives, 11 id. 239, 243, semble (both parties claiming as vendee under execution against same person; neither party presumed to be in possession of deeds to debtor or his predecessor so that a copy could be used on notice to opponent); 1849, Potier v. Barclay, 15 id. 439, 441, 452 (dower; deed to plaintiff's husband; production by her required); 1855, Hussey v. Roquemore, 27 id. 281, 290 (grantee presumed to have possession; if he is a party, notice is necessary; here, not under the statute); 1859, Shorter v. Sheppard, 33 id. 648, 653 (deed to plaintiff's grantor-debtor, presumed to have been carried off by him when fleeing the country); 1866, White v. Hutchings, 40 id. 253, 258 (deed to offeror's predecessor in title, more than 30 years before; presumed not in offeror's control); 1872, Jones v. Walker, 47 id. 175, 183 (deed to claimant's grantor; production not required); 1875, Hendon v. White, 52 id. 597, 600 (purchaser at execution; deed to debtor presumed not in his possession); 1883, Huckabee v. Shepherd, 75 id. 342, 344 (grantee offering; required to show the original unavailable); 1884, Beard v. Ryan, 78 id. 37, 43 (deeds to his grantor and predecessors, not presumed to be in offeror's possession); 1888, Allison v. Little, 85 id. 512, 516, 5 So. 221 (similar to White v. Hutchings); 1890, Florence L. M. & M. Co. v. Warren, 91 id. 533, 537, 9 So. 384 (creditor proving tax-deed to his debtor as grantee; presumption that it remained with grantee, so as to relieve creditor from "the duty of accounting for the original"); 1891, Jones v. Hagler, 95 id. 529, 532, 10 So. 345 (offeror of deed to his grantor; original not required, but after testimony that he had never had its control); 1895, Farrow v. R. Co., 109 id. 448, 453, 20 So. 303 (deed in chain of title and in offeror's possession; production required); 1895, King v. Scheuer, 105 id. 558, 16 So. 923 (original must be accounted for); 1896, Farrow v. R. Co., 109 id. 448, 20 So. 303 (statute applied, and original required to be accounted for); 1900, Burgess v. Blake, 128 id. 105, 28 So. 963 (following Farrow v. R. Co.); 1902, Hammond v. Blue, 132 id. 337, 31 So. 357 (proponent must show not only his non-possession but also his non-control of the original).

Alaska: Civ. C. 1900, §§ 99, 106, 108 (like Or. Annot. C. 1892, §§ 3028, 3035, 3037).

Arizona: Rev. St. 1887, § 1873 ("every instrument of writing" lawfully recorded after lawful proof or acknowledgment, is provable by certified copy of record, "whenever any party to a suit shall file among the papers of the cause an affidavit stating that any instrument of writing, recorded as aforesaid, has been lost or that he cannot procure the original"); § 3144 (in ejectment, proof of a "common source" of title may be made by certified copies of "the deed or other title-papers showing a claim of title to the defendant," if filed three days before trial, with notice to opponent).

Arkansas: Stats. 1894, § 722 (recorder's certified transcript of a duly recorded deed, admissible, if the original appears to be "lost or not within the power and control of the party wishing to use the same"); § 726 (duly recorded deeds of administrator, executor, guardian, commissioner in chancery, and sheriff; the original "or a certified copy thereof," admissible); 1856, McNeill v. Arnold, 17 Ark. 154, 169, semble (production not required); 1856, Trammell v. Thurmond, ib. 206, 215 (production required, under territorial statute not expressly dispensing); 1860, Bright v. Pennywit, 21 id.

The data here to be considered include statutes and decisions affecting the production of recorded conveyances. They are therefore limited in the fol-

130, 133, 136 (deed to opponent; under the statute, offeror must show original not within his power or control; whether notice to produce must here also be given, undecided); 1885, Calloway v. Gibbins, 45 id. 81, 85 (unrecorded deed to offeror's predecessor; search held sufficient).

California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1855 (the original of a writing must be produced, except "4. when the original has been recorded and a certified copy of the record is made evidence by this code or other statute"); § 1893 (certified copy of a "public writing," admissible "in like cases and with like effect as the original writing"); § 1951, as amended March 24, 1874 (certified copy of duly recorded instrument affecting realty "may also be read in evidence with the like effect as the original, on proof, by affidavit or otherwise, that the original is not in the possession or under the control of the party producing the certified copy"); § 1951, as amended March 1, 1889 (so as to read: "he read in evidence with the like effect as the original instrument without further proof"); Civ. C. § 1207 (certain old defectively recorded instruments affecting realty, provable by certified copy); 1855, Ord v. McKee, 5 Cal. 515 (mortgage; original required; but whether the copy rejected was certified from a record does not appear); 1856, Macy v. Goodwin, 6 id. 579 (deed; a statute receiving a copy with like effect "as the originals could be if produced" does not dispense with production of the original); 1857, Gordon v. Searing, 8 id. 49 (deed; production required; here the plaintiff claimed under the grantee); 1859, Fallon v. Dougherty, 12 id. 104 (offeror of deed to predecessor; production required; search without showing his own lack of possession, insufficient); 1859, Skinker v. Flohr, 13 id. 638 (offeror not connected with deed as grantee may account for non-production by declaring it not within his control; under statute); 1862, Pierce v. Wallace, 18 id. 165, 170 (offeror of deed to predecessor; loss required to be shown by search among grantee's papers, etc.); 1862, Lawrence v. Fulton, 19 id. 683, 689 (offeror of deed to his grantor made affidavit of non-possession, but by other testimony made it probable that his grantor had it; held insufficient to exempt); 1864, Hicks v. Coleman, 25 id. 122, 129 (grantee offering deed; proof that it was lost or not in his control, held sufficient, under the statute); 1864, Landers v. Bolton, 26 id. 393, 413 (power of attorney, sufficiently shown "not under the control of the party"); 1864, Hurlbutt v. Butenop, 27 id. 50, 54 (offeror of deed to predecessor; that he had "never had control of the original deed and it was not then in his power or control," sufficient; proof of loss or search unnecessary); 1865, McMinn v. O'Connor, ib. 238, 243 (offeror of deed to grantor; under statutes of 1851 and 1860, original need not be shown out of offeror's control, or otherwise accounted for); 1866, Roberts v. Unger, 30 id. 676, 680 (offeror's grantor's claim and affidavit, under Possessory Act; certified copy received, on evidence of non-possession and search); 1866, Reading v. Mullen, 31 id. 104, 106 (married woman's recorded declaration as sole trader; production required); 1869, Garwood v. Hastings, 38 id. 216, 222 (certified copies receivable, on proof of "loss or inability of the party to produce the original"); 1869, Mayo v. Mazeaux, ib. 442, 449 (must be shown not under party's control); 1874, Canfield v. Thompson, 49 id. 210, 212 (certified copy of recorded deed, offered by successor of grantee, held "primary," under C. C. P. § 1893, i. e. semble, original need not be accounted for); 1875, Vance v. Kohlberg, 50 id. 346, 348 (certified copy of U. S. patent recorded in the county; original not required); 1877, People v. Hagar, 52 id. 171, 186 (certified copy of private writing, original not required; here, corporate by-laws); 1881, Gethin v. Walker, 59 id. 502, 506 (certified copy of deed to offeror; production not required); 1886, Brown v. Griffith, 70 id. 14, 11 Pac. 500 (comparison of C. C. P. §§ 1855, 1893, 1951; settled that a certified copy of a recorded deed, or the record of the deed, is receivable only after a showing that the original is not in the "possession or control" of the offeror, according to § 1951; Canfield v. Thompson cited as referring to transactions before the adoption of § 1951; intervening cases not cited); 1889, Marriner v. Dennison, 78 id. 202, 214, 20 Pac. 386 (preceding case approved); 1894, Green v. Green, 103 id. 108, 110, 37 Pac. 188 (original required to be accounted for).

Colorado: Annot. Stats. 1891, § 444 (recorded instrument not duly proved or acknowledged; certified copy may be "proved or acknowledged" with same effect as original, but "such certified copy so proved" is not admissible for any person "except upon satisfactory proof that the original thereof has been lost or destroyed, or is beyond his power to produce"); § 447 (duly recorded instrument in writing, provable by the record or a transcript, "upon affidavit of the [party] desiring to use the same that the original thereof is not in his possession or power to produce"); § 838 (recorder's certified copy of "all papers filed" and of records, admissible); St. 1894, p. 53, § 6 (certified copy of certificate of sale by trustee under trust deed, admissible); 1874, Sullivan v. Hense, 2 Colo. 424, 432 (statute construed as to the affidavits necessary); 1889, Coleman v. Davis, 13 id. 98, 21 Pac. 1018 (proof of loss is not necessary; the statutory requirement suffices).

Columbia (District): Comp. St. 1894, c. 20, § 33 ("deed, will, or other instrument of writing," recorded under law of place of execution, provable by certified copy); c. 70, § 17, so also c. 58, § 26 (lawfully recorded will, provable by attested copy); Code 1901, § 1071 (duly recorded deed or other instrument is provable by certified copy).

Connecticut: Gen. St. 1887, § 3895 (certified copy of recorded tax-collector's deed, admissible); 1808, Talcott v. Goodwin, 3 Day 264 (production not required of deeds to predecessor-grantees; but required of grantees themselves, lowing respects: (1) They do not include an enumeration of the various specific kinds of conveyances authorized to be recorded — chattel mortgages, and here of the grantee's assignee in bankruptcy); 1814, Cunningham v. Tracy, 1 Conn. 252 (production by ordinary grantee of deeds to predecessor, not required, the custom having been for the grantee not to take his deed; but production required of deeds to the party himself, or, as here, to the ancestor of one claiming by inheritance); 1815, Phelps v. Foot, ib. 387, 390 (production by indorser of deed to maker of note, not required, as being "not in his power"); 1842, Clark v. Mix, 15 id. 152, 161, 174 (deed of personality in probate records; production not required); 1847, Kelsey v. Hammer, 18 id. 311, 318 (like Cunningham v. Tracy); 1856, Bolton v. Cummings, 25 id. 410, 421 (general rule as above; but also declaring production necessary for a deed to the opponent; see quotation ante, § 1224); 1902, Cunningham v. Cunningham, 75 id. 64, 52 Atl. 318 (certified copy of deed to defendant, admitted for plaintiff, there being no specific objection as to the non-production of the original).

Delaware: Rev. St. 1893, c. 35, § 10 (county deed-recorder's record, or certified copy, of any instrument authorized by law to be recorded, admissible); c. 83, § 14 ("the said record or an office copy thereof shall be sufficient evidence").

Florida: Rev. St. 1892, § 1111 ("deed, conveyance, paper, or instrument of writing," lawfully recorded in a public office of this State or a county, provable by certified copy; but this shall not prevent the Court from requiring the original to be produced or accounted for, "if the same shall be deemed necessary or proper for the attainment of justice").

Georgia: Code 1895, § 5211 (record in public office, provable by certified copy); § 5212 (such copies to be secondary only, for "such documents as by law properly remain in the possession of the party"); § 5219 ("if the original of any paper properly registered is lost or destroyed," it is provable by certified copy); § 3630 (on loss or destruction of original of duly recorded deed, copy from registry admissible); § 5673, Court Rule 42 (party's oath stating "his belief of the loss or destruction of the original and that it is not in his possession, power, or custody," sufficient); 1851, Beverly v. Burke, 9 Ga. 440, 445 ("copy-deed" to be "treated as the original"); 1851, Ratteree v. Nelson, 10 id. 439, 441 (by rule of Court, the original must be sworn to as lost or destroyed and out of the party's power); 1854, Marshall v. Morris, 16 id. 368, 372 (original to be accounted for); 1858, Morgan v. Jones, 24 id. 155, 161 (same); 1858, Churchill v. Corker, 25 id. 479, 490 semble (same for a probated will); 1859, Sutton v. McLoud, 26 id. 637, 641 (original required); 1859, Brooking v. Dearmond, 27 id. 58, 61 (same); 1874, Hadley v. Bean, 53 id. 685, 688 (must show loss or destruction or failure to obtain; here also notice to opponent required); 1897, Woods v. State, 101 id. 526, 28 S. E. 970 (original must be accounted for); 1898, Hayden v. Mitchell, 103 id. 431, 30 S. E. 287 (certified copy of marriage-contract, admissible after accounting for original); 1900, Smith v. Coker, 110 id. 650, 36 S. E. 105 (statute not satisfied on the facts); 1903, Cox v. McDonald, — id. —, 45 S. E. 401 (Rule 42 of the superior courts, providing that the party's oath of loss, etc., shall be "a sufficient foundation" for a copy applies only to instruments "between the parties litigant," being in derogation of the common-law practice; Rule 42 and Code § 3630 compared).

Hawaii: Civil Laws 1897, § 1849 ("the record of an instrument duly recorded, or a transcript thereof duly certified," may be read "with the like force and effect as the original instrument").

Idaho: Rev. St. 1887, § 5998 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1951); § 5999 (writing itself must be produced, except when it is recorded and a certified copy is made evidence by statute).

Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 30, § 35 ("If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Court that the original deed so acknowledged or proved and recorded, is lost, or not in the power of the party wishing to use it," a certified copy is admissible); § 36 ("Whenever upon the trial of any cause at law or in equity in this State, any party to said cause, or his agent or attorney in his behalf, shall, orally in court, or by affidavit to be filed in said cause, testify and state under oath that the original" of any instrument affecting land, duly recorded, "is lost or not in the power of the party wishing to use it on the trial of said cause, and that to the best of his knowledge said original deed was not intentionally destroyed or in any manner disposed of for the purpose of introducing a copy thereof in place of the original," the record or recorder's certified copy is admissible); c. 95, § 5 (chattel mortgages, duly recorded, provable like conveyances of land); c. 109, §§ 2, 11 (so for plats of subdivisions recorded); St. 1897, May 1, § 39 (certified copy of an original certificate of registered title, admissible); § 58 ("in the event of a duplicate certificate of title being lost, mislaid, or destroyed," the registrar may issue a certified copy of the original in his office, and "such certified copy shall stand in the place of and have like effect" as the missing duplicate certificate); 1849, Irving v. Brownell, 11 Ill. 402, 415 ("not in the power"; statute applied); 1851, Newsom v. Luster, 13 id. 175, 180 (under statute of 1845, party's affidavit is not necessary; any kind of evidence suffices, in Court's discretion); 1858, Booth v. Cook, 20 id. 130 (an affidavit in general terms that it is "not in his power" to produce is insufficient; diligent inquiry and reasonable efforts to produce must be shown in detail); 1858, Roberts v. Haskell, ib. 59 (same); 1859, Hanson v. Armstrong, 22 id. 442, 445 ("not in the power"; statute applied); 1861, Dickinson v. Breden, 25 id. 186 (grantee's residence appearing, his deposition should be taken as to loss, etc.); 1863, Pardee v. Lindley, 31 id. 174 (affidavit; statute applied); 1864, Prettyman v. Watson, 34 id. 175 (statute of 1861 applied); 1866, Bowman v.

deeds of realty, powers of attorney, sheriffs' deeds, and the like. (2) The line of distinction between documents of the present class — conveyances —

Wettig, 39 id. 416, 421 (statute applied); 1866, Deininger v. McConnel, 41 id. 227, 232 (affidavit; statute applied); 1869, Newman v. Cobleigh, 52 id. 387 (under the statute, a showing of search made is not necessary); 1873, Richley v. Farrell, 69 id. 264 (burnt records; loss of deeds sufficiently shown); 1874, Dowden v. Wilson, 71 id. 485, 487 (principle applied to note and mortgage on foreclosure); 1880, Hardin v. Forsythe, 99 id. 312, 324, 328 (proof of contents of deed not accounted for, excluded); 1898, Scott v. Bassett, 174 id. 390, 51 N. E. 577 ("not in the power." applied); 1899, 1900, Scott v. Bassett, 174 id. 390, 51 N. E. 577, 57 id. 835 (sufficiency of party's affidavit); 1902, Glos v. Cary, 194 id. 214, 62 N. E. 555 (affidavit held sufficient); 1902, Scott v. Bassett, ib. 602, 62 N. E. 914 (collective affidavit held deficient).

Indiana: Rev. St. 1897, § 471 (record of "deeds and other instruments," provable by keeper's attested copy under seal); § 3435 (certain deeds executed more than 20 years before date of Act [Feb. 28, 1857] and recorded in wrong county, provable by certified copy); § 7660 (recorded apprentice's indenture, provable by certified copy); § 3439 (same for recorded power of attorney to convey land); §§ 5750, 5756, 5768 (same for deeds re-recorded on change of county boundaries or creation of new county); § 8396 (same for certain re-recorded deeds); 1838, Bowser v. Warren, 4 Blackf. 522, 527 (original required only "if the deed is made to the party who relies upon it, or may be presumed from its character to be in his keeping"); 1839, Rucker v. M'Neely, 5 id. 123 (grantee offering record; admitted after proof of deed's loss); 1839, Dixon v. Doe, ib. 107 (non-grantee offering record of deed; admitted without accounting for original); 1840, Doe v. Holmes, ib. 319 (same); 1842, Foresman v. Marsh, 6 id. 285 (general principle repeated); 1843, Daniels v. Stone, ib. 450 (same); 1850, Pierson v. Doe, 2 Ind. 123 (deeds of plaintiff's title; copies allowed); 1860, Lyon v. Perry, 14 id. 515 (original not required); 1860, Morehouse v. Potter, 15 id. 477 (record-copy of mortgage; expressly decided that under the statute it is immaterial whether the original is or is not in the hands of the offeror); 1865, Winship v. Clendenning, 24 id. 439, 443 (same); 1872, Bowers v. Van Winkle, 41 id. 432, 435 (original not required); 1874, Patterson v. Dallas, 46 id. 48 (same); 1876, Abshire v. State, 53 id. 64, 65 (same); 1888, State v. Davis, 117 id. 307, 30 N. E. 159, semble (unrecorded deed; original required); 1891, Adams v. Buhler, 131 id. 66, 30 N. E. 883 (mechanic's lien notice recorded in the wrong book; original required).

Iowa: Code 1897, § 4630 ("any instrument" recorded in public office by authority of law is provable by the record or duly authenticated copy, "whenever, by the party's own oath or otherwise, the original is shown to be lost, or not belonging to the party wishing to use the same, nor within his control"); 1867, Williams v. Heath, 22 Ia. 519 (original to be accounted for; the fact that the deed is to another than the offeror does not of itself suffice); 1868, Ackley v. Sexton, 24 id. 320 (statute applied); 1871, Byington v. Oaks, 32 id. 488 (same); 1873, Scarf v. Patterson, 37 id. 503, 513 (same); 1876, McNichols v. Wilson, 42 id. 385, 393 (possession by offeror's brother, within control of Court, but not subpoenaed or requested to produce; copy allowed); 1876, Ingle v. Jones, 43 id. 286, 290 (offeror not in control, on the facts); 1879, Olleman v. Kilgore, 52 id. 38, 2 N. W. 612 (offeror not in control, on the facts); 1881, Bixby v. Carskaddon, 55 id. 533, 537, 8 N. W. 354 (deeds executed to third persons; Court may presume them not in offeror's control); 1884, Jaffray v. Thompson, 65 Ia. 323, 325, 21 N. W. 659 (excluding copy of mortgage not accounted for); 1886, Laird v. Kilbourne, 70 id. 83, 85, 30 N. W. 9 (deed shown unavailable on the facts); 1886, State v. Penny, ib. 190, 30 N. W. 561 (chattel mortgage to prosecuting witness; that he did not have possession, insufficient); 1890, Collins v. Nalleau, 79 id. 626, 629, 43 N. W. 284, 44 N. W. 904 (re-record in another county from certified copy; original instrument need not be accounted for); 1890, Kreuger v. Walker, 80 id. 733, 735, 45 N. W. 871 (deeds sufficiently accounted for); 1891, Rea's Assignment, 82 id. 231, 234, 48 N. W. 78 (mortgage sufficiently accounted for); 1891, Kenosha Stove Co. v. Shedd, ib. 540, 545, 48 N. W. 933 (conveyances not in offeror's control; copies sufficient); 1894, McCollister v. Yard, 90 id. 621, 633, 59 N. W. 447 (deed of adoption; not shown unavailable on the facts); 1898, Independent School Dist. v. Hewitt, 105 id. 663, 75 N. W. 497 (statute applied; original to be accounted for); 1900, Hall v. Cardell, 111 id. 206, 82 N. W. 503 (original sufficiently shown, not in party's control).

Kansas: Gen. St. 1897, c. 97, § 2 (record of "any instrument authorized to be recorded," admissible if "the original is not in the possession or under the control of the party desiring to use the same"); § 3 (same for certified copy of any paper lawfully filed or recorded in public office); 1876, Williams v. Hill, 16 Kans. 23 (statutory showing sufficient, as being less than the common-law requirement); 1890, Stratton v. Hawks, 43 id. 538, 23 Pac. 591 (the proof of the original's not being in possession or under control is sufficient if "to the satisfaction of the Court"); 1891, McLean v. Webster, 45 id. 644, 26 Pac. 10 (deed to adverse parties, presumed not in the possession or control of the proponent); 1893, Eby v. Winters, 51 id. 777, 783, 33 Pac. 471 (delivery to opponent, sufficient to exempt); 1901, Neosho V. I. Co. v. Hannum, 63 id. 621, 66 Pac. 631 (statute applied).

Kentucky: Stats. 1899, § 519 ("certified copies of all instruments legally recorded shall be prima facie evidence"); § 1638 (instrument duly registered out of the U. S., provable by the keeper's attested copy); 1814, Gholson v. Lefevre, Litt. Sel. C. 191 (original not required of Virginia grant, under statute); 1814, Wells and those of the classes already dealt with (§§ 1215-1222) — official documents and judicial records — is sometimes obscure; certain provisions under

v. Wilson, 3 Bibb 264, 265 (copy admissible from one not a party to the deed; other cases left undetermined); 1815, Tebbs v. White, 4 id. 42 (copy admissible in all cases; here offered by the vendee of the grantee); 1820, Hood v. Mathers, 2 A. K. Marsh. 553, 558 (original not required); 1821, Brooks v. Clay, 3 id. 545, 548, semble (same); 1832, Griffith v. Huston, 7 J. J. Marsh. 385, 386 (copy offered by grantee; original required); 1838, King v. Mims, 7 Dana 267, 269 (Virginia deed; original not required); 1853, Dickerson v. Talbot, 14 B. Monr. 60, 67 (original required; but here the deed had not been legally recorded).

Louisiana: in the statutes of this State, it is somewhat difficult, for those not familiar with the theory of the French law and its phraseology, to discriminate between the provisions bearing on the present principle and those dealing with the rules of certified copies to prove the original's execution; the statutes have therefore been set out once only, under the latter head, post, § 1651; compare also the cases on notarial acts, post, § 1240. (1) The following seem to apply Civ. C. § 2258: 1827, Coleman v. Breand, 6 Mart. n. s. 407, 408 (production required; here of a Tennessee deed); 1829, Lewis v. Beatty, 8 id. 287, 289 (same; Georgia deed); 1839, Johnston v. Cox, 13 La. 536, 537 (statute applied); 1843, Wells v. McMaster, 5 Rob. La. 154, semble; original required); 1851, Winston v. Prevost, 6 La. An. 164 (deed; loss not sufficiently shown); 1854, Hall v. Acklen, 9 id. 219, 221 (warrant; loss sufficiently shown); 1857, Peace v. Head, 12 id. 582 (instrument sufficiently shown to be lost); 1853, Lawrence v. Burris, 13 id. 611 (deed; loss not sufficiently shown); 1878, Sharkey v. Bankston, 30 id. 891 (judgment; loss sufficiently shown). (2) The following apply Civ. C. § 2259: 1847, Sexton v. McGill, 2 La. An. 190, 195 (original to be accounted for); 1848, Lacey v. Newport, 3 id. 227 (statute applied); 1853, Beebe v. McNeill, 8 id. 130 (§ 2259 does not apply to destroyed instruments); 1859, Andrew v. Keenan, 14 id. 705 (statute applied; Civ. C. § 2279); 1877, Ticknor v. Calhoun, 29 id. 277 (same). (3) The following apply Civ. C. § 2268: 1893, Chambers v. Hauey, 45 La. An. 447, 450, 12 So. 621 (on the theory of a copy of a copy, production required). (4) The following require the production of an original not being a "public act": 1848, Leggo v. N. O. C. & B. Co., 3 La. An. 138; 1856, Boykin v. Wright, 11 id. 531, 533; 1857, Knight v. Knight, 12 id. 396; 1884, Hotard v. R. Co., 36 id. 450, 451.

Maine: Pub. St. 1883, c. 82, § 110 (in actions affecting realty, attested copies of a recorded deed are admissible, when the offeror is not grantee nor heir nor "justifies as servant" thereof); 1831, Woodman v. Coolbroth, 7 Greenl. 181, 185 (grantee rule, as in Massachusetts; even though the original was in fact in the possession of the offeror of the office-copy, production not required of non-grantee); 1833, Knox v. Silloway, 1 Fairf. 201, 216 (approving the preceding case); 1834, Kent v. Weld, 2 id. 459 (same; but this, semble, is allowable, under Court Rule 34, only "in actions touching the realty," "when the party offering such office-copy in evidence is not a party to the deed, nor claims as heir, nor justifies as servant of the grantee or his heirs"; not applicable, therefore, to a recorded power of attorney in an action for services rendered to an alleged agent of the defendant); 1901, Egan v. Horrigan, 96 Me. 46, 51 Atl. 246 (grantee rule applied).

Maryland: Pub. Gen. L. 1888, Art. 35, § 38 (any instrument required, by law of State or country where executed, to be registered, and lawfully registered, is provable by the keeper's certified copy); § 51 (land-office commissioner's certified copy of extract of deed transmitted by court clerk, admissible if the original deed and record are lost or destroyed); 1800, Gittings v. Hall, 1 H. & J. 14, 18 (copy of a deed not requiring enrollment, not receivable without express proof of loss, etc.); 1804, Cheney v. Watkins, ib. 527, 532 (same).

Massachusetts: Pub. St. 1882, c. 82, § 7, Rev. L. 1902, c. 78, § 4 (cemetery conveyances recorded by the corporation, provable by certified copy like registered deeds); Rev. L. 1902, c. 128, § 46 (the owner's duplicate certificate of registered title, and a certified copy of the original certificate on file, is admissible); § 104 ("if a duplicate certificate is lost or destroyed, or cannot be produced by a grantee, heir, devisee, assignee, or other person who applies for the entry of a new certificate to him or for the registration of any instrument," a new duplicate may be issued, which shall "thereafter be regarded as the original duplicate for all the purposes of this chapter"); 1828, Eaton v. Campbell, 7 Pick. 10 (grantee need not produce originals of deeds prior to that made to himself; see quotation ante, § 1224); 1829, Poignand v. Smith, 8 id. 272, 277 (mortgage belonging to an assignee; original to be accounted for); 1832, Burghardt v. Turner, 12 id. 534, 538 (rule of Eaton v. Campbell applicable to a deed made to a common ancestor, there being no reason to attribute possession of it to one party rather than the other); 1833, Scanlan v. Wright, 13 id. 523, 527 (rule applicable even where the prior grantee is within the jurisdiction; production is required only where the person proving the deed is himself the grantee or some one who must be presumed to have the deed); 1834, Ward v. Fuller, 15 id. 185, 187 (general principle as above); 1853, Blanchard v. Young, 11 Cush. 341, 345 (same; applied, in an issue of a conveyance in fraud of the defendant's creditors, to the defendant's deeds to third persons); 1854, Com. v. Emery, 2 Gray 80 (charge of being a common seller; to prove the defendant's ownership of the premises, the district attorney offered a registrar's copy of a deed to the defendant; excluded, the original being obtainable by notifying the opponent; quoted ante, § 1224); 1854, Bourne v. Boston, ib. 494 (following Com. v. Emery; to prove the plaintiff a resident of those heads might by another interpretation belong equally or better under the present subject. (3) The proof of Government grants or patents of land Boston, copies of deeds in which the plaintiff was grantee, offered by the defendant, were excluded); 1856, Pierce v. Gray, 7 id. 67 (rule applied to mortgages of personalty recorded); 1863, Barnard v. Crosby, 6 All. 327, 331 (same); 1863, Thacher v. Phiuney, 7 All. 146, 148 (rule applied to admit a copy of a deed to the defendant's grantor, offered by the plaintiff); 1870, Samuel v. Borrowscale, 104 Mass. 207, 209 (rule applied); 1870, Stockwell v. Silloway, 105 id. 517 (same); 1878, Draper v. Hatfield, 124 id. 53, 56 (copies of deeds to the opponent, excluded, because no notice had been given).

Michigan: Comp. L. 1897, §§ 8964, 8965, 8990, 8995, 8996, 9006, 9040, 9043, 9046, 9047, 9050, 9052, 1271 ("conveyances and other instruments" lawfully recorded are provable by the register's certified copy); 1863, Brown v. Cady, 10 Mich. 535, 538 (record not admissible unless lawfully recorded); 1889, People v. Swetland, 77 id. 53, 56, 43 N. W. 779 (forgery of a discharge of mortgage; record not admissible till original accounted for, "when the question of the forgery of the original instrument is in issue either in a criminal or civil suit").

Minnesota: Gen. St. 1894, § 5759 (instrument authorized to be recorded and duly acknowledged or proved, provable by record or register's certified copy); §§ 4135, 4151 (certified copy, by clerk or other proper officer, of chattel mortgage or conditional sale, admissible like the original or copy on file); 1866, Winona v. Huff, 11 Minn. 119, 127 (map of dedication recorded; loss of record and of original map required to be shown); 1885, Gaston v. Merriam, 33 id. 271, 275, 22 N. W. 614 (loss of original sufficiently shown).

Mississippi: Annot. Code 1892, § 1777 (copies of record of "all instruments of writing which by the laws of any foreign country may be admitted to record upon acknowledgment or proof thereof," duly certified, admissible; but if execution is disputed on oath, "the original shall be produced or its absence accounted for before such copy shall be read in evidence"); § 1778 (same for instrument "required or permitted to be" recorded in U. S. State or Territory or District of Columbia); § 1779 (same for instrument "required or permitted to be" recorded in this State); 1844, Haydon v. Moore, 1 Sm. & M. 605 (original statute, requiring production of deed, applied); 1845, Chaplain v. Briscoe, 5 id. 198 (same); 1846, Harmon v. James, 7 id. 111, 118 (same); here a statute of 1844, abolishing the necessity of production, as above, became applicable in the later cases; 1848, Thomas v. Bank, 9 Sm. & M. 201 (original of a document not required to be recorded must be produced); 1860, Davis v. Rhodes, 39 Miss. 152, 156 (same, for document not recorded according to law).

Missouri: Rev. St. 1899, § 933 (duly recorded instruments "conveying or affecting real estate," provable by certified copy when "it shall be shown to the Court by the oath or affidavit of the party wishing to use the same, or of any one knowing the fact, that such instrument is lost or not within the power of the party wishing to use the same"); § 941 (duly recorded instruments dealing with military-bounty lands in this State, executed out of the State but in the U. S., provable by certified copy "upon proof of the loss or destruction of the original instrument"); § 3115 (certain recorded deeds, made admissible by lapse of time, etc., under Stats. § 3147, infra, provable by certified copy when the original "has been lost or destroyed or is not in the power of the party who wishes to use it"); § 3116 (so also for transcripts of certain ancient deeds, where the original "has been lost or destroyed"); § 3147 (certain ancient documents recorded 30 years before March 28, 1874, provable by certified copy if it appears "by oath or affidavit of the party wishing to use the same, or of any one knowing the fact, that such instrument is lost or not within the power of the party wishing to use the same"); § 3128 (any "bond, contract, or other instrument," for which provision for recording has been made, provable by certified copy when the original is "lost or not within the control of the party wishing to use the same"); § 3142 (certified copy of duly recorded marriage contract, admissible, when the original "is lost or is not in the power of the party wishing to use it"); §§ 3107, 3109 (conveyances, grants, records, etc., under French or Spanish government, deposited with recorder of land-titles or county recorder, provable by his certified copy "with like effect as the original"); § 3110 (when it appears that the original of such documents, after deposit and record, "cannot be found therein, or has been lost or destroyed, or that neither the original nor a duly certified copy thereof can be obtained by the parties wishing to use it, a copy of the record of such original, duly certified by the officer having charge of such record, shall be received"); § 3115 (where certain instruments not so recorded as ordinarily to be admissible are made admissible by lapse of time, etc., a certified copy is admissible if the original "has been lost or destroyed, or is not in the power of the party who wishes to use it"); § 3116 (where deed has been recorded more than 20 years, though not duly acknowledged, etc., and has been later duly proved and read on trial, then after loss or destruction of original, a copy, preserved in bill of exceptions contained in transcript filed in certain courts, is admissible when certified under seal of clerk of proper court); § 5074 (certified copy of recorded contract of boatman's hire, admissible); § 8957 (county recorder's certified copy of recorded plat, admissible); 1851, Walker v. Newhouse, 14 Mo. 373, 377 (deed to a third person; "in most cases," perhaps, efforts to procure would be required; here not, on the facts); 1851, Bosworth v. Bryan, ib. 575, 577 (deed to offeror's predecessor; copy allowed on proof of loss); 1853, Barton v. Murrain, 27 id. 235, 238 (ordinarily, if original is presumed to be in a third person's hands, not even the preliminary oath is necessary; if the deed deals with military-is controlled by the present general principle, if it is applicable; but whether it is applicable depends upon the theory of substantive law as to which docu-

bounty land and is otherwise insufficiently recorded, then loss must be shown); 1867, Attwell v. Lynch, 39 id. 519 (original not accounted for; copy excluded); 1867, Boyce v. Mooney, 40 id. 104 (deed to trustees-plaintiffs under a marriage-contract; original not presumed out of their power); 1870, Christy v. Kavanagh, 45 id. 375 (loss not sufficiently shown on the facts; trial Court's discretion should control); 1872, Strain v. Murphy, 49 id. 337, 340 (original sufficiently accounted for); 1872, Crispen v. Hannavan, 50 id. 415, 418 (military-bounty land; loss or destruction must be shown); 1874, Totten v. James, 55 id. 494, 496 (transfer of military-bounty land made in conformity to home law; original must be shown lost or destroyed); 1875, Tully v. Canfield, 60 id. 99 (overruling the preceding case; original need not be shown lost or destroyed; except for transfers made in another State according to its law); 1877, Sims v. Gray, 66 id. 613, 615 (administrator's deed in offeror's control; certified copy excluded); 1880, Crispen v. Hannavan, 72 id. 548, 554 (certified copies of deeds defectively acknowledged but recorded 30 years; original must be shown lost or destroyed, by implication of the statute); 1882, Bongher v. Neece, 75 id. 383, 385 (deed properly acknowledged out of the State but in conformity to home law; sufficient to show original not within offeror's power); 1885, Addis v. Graham, 88 id. 197, 202 (deed shown lost); 1887, Dollarhide v. Parks, 92 id. 178, 186, 5 S. W. 3 (deed shown lost); 1887, Hammond v. Johnston, 93 id. 198, 207, 6 S. W. 83 (under Stats. § 2395, the original of a recorded sheriff's deed need not be accounted for); 1893, Frank v. Reuter, 116 id. 517, 521, 22 S. W. 812 (deed must be accounted for); 1893, Hunt v. Selleck, 118 id. 588, 593, 24 S. W. 213 (same); 1898, Cazier v. Hinchey, 143 id. 203, 44 S. W. 1052, semble (widow proving husband's chain of title; loss must be shown); 1901, Stout v. Rigney, 46 C. C. A. 459, 107 Fed. 545, 551 (certified copy of deed to military-bounty land taken in Illinois according to Missouri law, admitted; following Tully v. Canfield, supra, proof that the original was not in the party's power sufficing under Rev. St., § 933, without proof of loss or destruction); 1903, Orchard v. Collier, 171 Mo. 390, 71 S. W. 677 (original not shown on the facts to be lost or out of the party's power).

Montana: C. C. P. 1895, § 3131 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); § 3241 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1951, as amended by St. 1889, adding, for the class of instruments, "and every instrument authorized by law to be filed or recorded in the county clerk's office"); 1882, McKinstry v. Clark, 4 Mout. 370, 371 (mining location; certified copy admitted without requiring loss to be shown); 1886, Garfield M. & M. Co. v. Hammer, 6 id. 52, 64, 8 Pac. 153 (certified copy of recorded mining declaration and of deed, admissible without accounting for original); 1889, Flick v. Gold Hill & L. M. M. Co., 8 id. 298, 304, 20 Pac. 807 (principle of preceding cases approved); 1894, Maubattan M. Co. v. Swete- land, 14 id. 269, 36 Pac. 84 (originals required; repudiating the two earlier rulings above; compare the California rulings supra).

Nebraska: Comp. St. 1899, § 4105 (record of deed or certified copy, admissible "whenever, by the party's oath or otherwise, the original is known to be lost, or not belonging to the party wishing to use the same, nor within his control"); 1880, Delaney v. Errickson, 10 Nebr. 492, 500, 6 N. W. 600 (deed to offeror's grantor; presumed not in his possession, and need not be accounted for); 1888, Fremont E. & M. V. R. Co. v. Marley, 25 id. 138, 145, 40 N. W. 948 (use of record-copies to establish title is in discretion of trial Court); 1889, Hall v. Aitkin, ib. 360, 363, 41 N. W. 192 (mortgage filed; production not required); 1889, Buck v. Gage, 27 id. 360, 41 N. W. 192 (deeds not to the offeror; statute presumed satisfied by proof to the Court below); 1892, Rupert v. Penner, 35 id. 587, 591, 53 N. W. 598 (in trial Court's discretion to require production of original deeds, in ejectment suits).

Nevada: Gen. St. 1885, § 3449 (original need not be produced "when the original has been recorded, and a certified copy of the record is made evidence by statute"); § 2598 ("conveyance, or other instrument conveying or affecting real estate," duly recorded, provable by certified copy whenever "it shall be shown to the Court that such conveyance or instrument is lost, or not within the power of the party wishing to use the same").

New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 27, § 18; c. 43, § 44 (duplicate certified copies of mutilated records may be used as originals without showing loss of the latter); c. 224, § 23 (certified copy by proper officer of any document required by law to be recorded in a public office, admissible "where the originals would be evidence"); 1831, Southerin v. Mendum, 5 N. H. 420, 428 (grantee rule, following Eaton v. Campbell, Mass.; applied to powers of attorney); 1840, Pollard v. Melvin, 10 id. 554 (original dispensed with "only in a chain of title, where due proof has first been made of the execution of the last conveyance"; rule not applicable to third person's title); 1840, Loomis v. Bedel, 11 id. 74, 86 (same); 1843, Homer v. Cilley, 14 id. 85, 98 (same); 1844, Lyford v. Thurston, 16 id. 399, 404 (same; the rule held to cover copies of deeds in the chain of the opponent's as well as of the proponent's title); 1845, Andrews v. Davison, 17 id. 413, 415 (same; applicable not only in a real action, but in a suit upon a deed-covenant; in short, "in all cases where the conveyance is not immediately to himself, but he is in privity with the title conveyed by the deed"); 1844, Clough v. Bowman, 44 id. 504, 513 (rule held to admit an office-copy of a recorded deed not in the chain of title, but referred to by one of such deeds for a description); 1850, Forsaith v. Clark, 21 id. 409, 422, 424 (general principle affirmed); 1859, Farrar v. Fessenden, 39 id. 268, 276 (newspaper notice of foreclosure; "an examined copy of any instrument thus recorded"

ment constitutes the grant, i. e. the patent delivered to the grantee or the official record retained; the question thus raised — namely, the question is admissible “without proof of the original”); 1861, Wendell v. Abbott, 43 id. 68, 73 (grantee rule; general principle affirmed); 1879, Smith v. Cushman, 59 id. 27 (general principle of grantee rule affirmed).

New Jersey: Gen. St. 1896, “Conveyances,” §§ 15, 29, 31 (deeds duly recorded within 10 years from date, provable by certified copy without production, unless opponent gives 10 days’ notice before trial, and then proof must be made that “the original hath been lost, or unintentionally destroyed, or that after having made diligent search and inquiry such party hath been unable to find said original”; the Court to determine “according to the circumstances and situations of the parties, whether such diligent search and inquiry has been made”); § 90 (deed recorded not within 10 years, provable by record or certified copy, if the original is “destroyed or lost or taken out of the office” where it was kept by law); “Evidence,” § 58 (document recorded in foreign State, provable by exemplified copy of record, if so provable in that State); 1826, Fox v. Lambson, 8 N. J. L. 275, 280 (“the record or registry of a deed or other instrument is but a copy and presupposes an original”; here requiring the original of a manumission certificate to be accounted for); 1895, Chase v. Caryl, 57 id. 545, 31 Atl. 1024 (mortgage recorded in New York under statute making certified copy evidence, provable in New Jersey by certified copy).

New Mexico: Comp. L. 1297, § 3965 (“all writings conveying or affecting real estate,” when duly registered, are provable by certified copy when it is “proved to the Court that said writing is lost, or that it is not in the hands of the party wishing to use it”); § 2361 (duly recorded chattel mortgage or affidavit, provable by recorder’s certified copy when “it is shown to the Court by the oath or affidavit of the party wishing to use the same, . . . or either of them, or of any one knowing the fact, that such mortgage or affidavit is lost or not in the possession of the party wishing to use the same, or either of them”).

New York: C. C. P. 1877, § 935 (duly recorded conveyance, provable by certified copy); § 936 (same for any instrument, except bill, note, or will); § 945 (sale, etc., of vessel recorded in U. S. customs’ office, after due proof, provable by certified copy); §§ 946, 947 (conveyance of realty in another U. S. State or Territory, provable by custodian’s certified copy under seal, if recorded and authenticated according to the law of such State, etc., and if “original cannot be produced”); § 957 (certified copies must state that the original has been compared, and the whole correctly transcribed); Laws 1837, c. 150, § 27 (recorded mortgage with State loan-commissioners, provable, if lost, by attested copy); Laws 1844, c. 326, § 2 (similar, for re-recorded copy); 1829, Jackson v. Rice, 3 Wend. 180, 183 (original need not be accounted for); 1837, Van Cortlandt v. Tozer, 17 id. 338, 340 (same).

North Carolina: Code 1833, § 1251 (instrument required or allowed to be registered may be proved by registry or certified copy, “although the party offering the same shall be entitled to the possession of the original and shall not account for the non-production thereof,” unless by Court order made “upon affidavit suggesting some material variance from the original in such registry or other sufficient grounds, such party shall have been previously required to produce the original”; see also §§ 1253, 1263, 1337); § 1344 [deed by inhabitant of other State or Territory, of domestic property, provable by copy duly certified, if original “cannot be obtained for registration” in the proper county]; 1796, Park v. Cochran, 1 Hayw. 410 (an office copy of a deed to the plaintiff, excluded, unless he accounted for the original); 1834, Smith v. Wilson, 1 Dev. & B. 40 (grantee offering a copy; original required; here a statute of 1846 intervened to excuse production conditionally); 1852, Burnett v. Thompson, 13 Ired. 379 (the registration of leases for years not being required, a copy from the registry does not dispense with the production of the original); 1854, Bohanan v. Shelton, 1 Jones L. 370 (statute applied to a bond to make title); 1893, Mitchell v. Bridger, 113 N. C. 63, 71, 18 S. E. 91 (contract to offeror’s predecessor; original not required); 1902, Ratliff v. Ratliff, 131 id. 425, 42 S. E. 887 (statute applied).

North Dakota: Rev. C. 1895, § 5696 (“every instrument conveying or affecting real property,” provable by record or certified copy of record, “on proof by affidavit or otherwise that the original is not in the possession or under the control of the party producing such record or copy”); § 3597 (“the proof, recording, and deposit [of instruments under Code §§ 3565, 3579, 3581, and 3582] do not entitle the instrument, or the record thereof, or the transcript of the record, to be read in evidence”); St. 1901, c. 145 (amending so that the record or a certified copy of “all instruments entitled to record” may be “read in evidence without further proof”); 1901, American Mge. Co. v. Mouse River L. S. Co., 10 N. D. 290, 86 N. W. 965 (statute applied).

Ohio: Rev. St. 1898, §§ 4132 (2), 4143, 4156 (recorder’s certified copy of a recorded power of attorney, “deed or other instrument of writing,” and chattel mortgage, admissible); § 3322 (recorder’s certified copy of grant of way or easement to railroad, admissible); 1833, Burnet v. Brush, 6 Oh. 32 (under the original recording act of 1820, the original was not required to be produced except where it was a deed from the offeror’s immediate grantor; under the absolute terms of the act of 1831, held, that even this exception disappeared); 1839, Livingston v. M’Donald, 9 id. 168 semble (same); 1875, Kilbourn v. Fury, 26 Oh. St. 153, 161, semble (original must be accounted for).

Oklahoma: Stats. 1893, § 1621 (“all deeds, agreements, writings, and powers of attorney,” duly recorded, provable by record or certified which document is the legal original — is the chief matter of controversy and complicates most of the cases, and is dealt with elsewhere (post, § 1239).

transcript, "upon affidavit or proof of the party desiring to use the same that the original thereof is not in his possession or power to produce"; § 4262 ("all papers authorized or required to be filed or recorded in any public office," provable by certified copy "when such original is not in the possession or under the control of the party desiring to use the same"); § 4278 (records of public officers, admissible; "and when any such record is of a paper, document, or instrument authorized to be recorded, and the original thereof is not in the possession or under the control of the party desiring to use the same, such record shall have the same effect as the original"); § 6130 (proof, recording, and deposit at registry do not entitle the record or a transcript to be read in evidence); St. 1897, c. 8, § 25 (all instruments affecting real estate and duly recorded are provable by certified copy, "in all cases where copies or other instruments might lawfully be used in evidence," and when not requiring record, by copy verified by oath or affidavit).

Oregon: C. C. P. 1892, § 3028 (record or certified transcript of duly recorded conveyance, admissible "with like force and effect as the original conveyance"); § 691, par. 4 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855, par. 4); St. 1903, p. 17 (for deeds of land, duly executed in a foreign country and recorded here, the county clerk's certified copy shall "have the same effect as the original").

Pennsylvania: St. 1715, P. & L. Digest, Deeds 88 (certified copies under seal of deeds duly recorded, receivable "as the original deeds themselves"); St. 1870, ib. 68 (same for land in more than one county); St. 1841, ib. 92 (certain old unrecorded deeds, semble, to be similarly provable if recorded before a certain time); St. 1828, ib. Evid. 30 (deeds duly recorded in land-office, though not in proper county, provable by exemplification); St. 1893, ib. Deeds 77 (exemplified copy admissible for sheriffs' deeds recorded with the Court of Common Pleas); St. 1853, ib. Deeds 162, 163 (mortgage of coal-mining rights; certified copy of recorded instrument, when original is lost, receivable conditionally); St. 1887, ib. Deeds 178 (certified copies of recorded mortgages, etc., of iron ore and other specified personalty receivable); St. 1834, ib. Evid. 10 (record or exemplifications of papers lawfully recorded, receivable); St. 1846, ib. Deeds 76 (record or certified copies of duly recorded Commonwealth patents, sheriffs', coroners', marshals', and treasurers' deeds, and deeds under decree of Court, receivable); St. 1849, ib. Evid. 17 (same for deeds of county commissioners); St. 1849, ib. Evid. 18, Deeds 117 (same for assignments of mortgages and attorney-powers authorizing satisfaction of mortgages); St. 1828, St. 1866, St. 1850, ib. Evid. 19, Deeds 80-82 (duly recorded written discharges of "any legacy or recognizance charged upon lands" in the State; copies under recorder's seal, receivable; also other specified releases to executors, etc.); St. 1885, ib. Evid. 25 (letters of attorney relating to personalty, duly recorded; exemplification receivable); St. 1854, 1864, ib. Deeds 79 (letters of attorney relating to personalty, duly made abroad before a U. S. officer or a notary, and here recorded, receivable, as also an exemplification, when the original is lost; also affidavits before a proper officer, duly certified, in another domestic State); 1810, Carkhnff v. Anderson, 3 Binn. 4, 7, 9 (copy allowable, under a statute by which the original deed was kept in the recording office); 1811, Vickroy v. McKnight, 4 id. 204, 208 (here the deed was not properly proved for registry by the required two witnesses; "if a deed is recorded without the authority of law, a copy of the record is no evidence"); 1857, Curry v. Raymond, 28 Pa. 144, 149 (mortgage; production not required).

South Carolina: St. 1731, Quit Rents, § 30 (record of all grants in auditor-general's office and "all grants and deeds duly proved before a justice of the peace according to the usual method, and recorded," and also attested copies thereof, "shall be deemed to be as good evidence in the law and of the same force and effect as the original would have been if produced"); St. 1803, Gen. St. 1882, c. 86, § 2224, R. S. 1893, § 2360, Code 1902, § 2895 (certified copy of grant of land from this State or the State of North Carolina, receivable on oath that "the original grant is lost, destroyed, or out of his, her, or their power to produce," and that the offeror has not "destroyed, mislaid, or in any way willingly previous to that time "put it so out of his power with the intent to produce an office-copy"); St. 1843, ib. § 2225, R. S. 1893, § 2361, Code 1902, § 2896 (certified copy of recorded deed, receivable, "subject to the same rules" as in the preceding section, and on ten days' notice); 1795, Purvis v. Robinson, 1 Bay 493 (under the early statute above quoted, held that the loss of the original must still be shown; see a careful criticism by the reporter in a note to Peay v. Picket, post, and the quotations ante, § 1224); 1803, Turner v. Moore, 1 Brev. 236 (slight evidence of loss sufficient); 1807, Rosamond v. M'Ilwain, 2 id. 132 (copy of a grant alone, received under the statute, without copy of the plat annexed; Trezevant, J., diss., because at common law production would have been necessary, and the statute was not strictly followed); 1821, Dingle v. Bowmao, 1 McC. 177 (loss of the original must be shown); 1821, Turnipseed v. Hawkins, ib. 272, 278 (certified copy of deed, semble, receivable without accounting for the original; but here its loss was shown); 1823, M'Mullen v. Brown, Harp. 76 (loss of the original must be shown; but here lapse of time was allowed to suffice); 1825, Bird v. Smith, 3 McC. 300 (object of the statute of 1803, relating to North Carolina grants, was to substitute the party's oath for ordinary proof of loss); 1825, Peay v. Picket, ib. 318 (original required to be accounted for, following the rule in Purvis v. Robinson; see quotation ante, § 1224); 1843, Hinds v. Evans, 2 Speer 17 (copy rejected because search for original was not sufficient); 1843, Birchfield v. Bonham, ib. 62 (search for recorded deed held sufficient to admit copy); 1843, State v. Hill, ib. 150, 160 (same); 1845, McLeod v. Rogers, 2 Rich. 19, 22 ("the copy was evidence only on proof of the loss of the original; . . . Dingle v. Bowman seems to have been lost sight of"; noting the conflict of rulings); 1846, Darby v. Huffman, ib. 532 (before using an office-copy, the loss alone, and not also the existence, of the original, need be proved).

§ 1226. Same: Sundry Consequences of the Principle of not Producing Recorded Deeds. (1) If the form of proof (usually a certified copy) ex-

South Dakota: Stats. 1899, § 6539 ("every instrument in writing, which is acknowledged or proved, and duly recorded," is provable by certified copy "whenever, by the party's own oath, or otherwise, the original is shown to be lost, or not belonging to the party wishing to use the same, and not within his control").

Tennessee: Code 1896, § 3704 (certified copy of acknowledgment of release of lien, receivable); § 3711 (copy of registered copy of deed of lands in different counties, receivable); § 3748 ("Any of said instruments [i. e. deeds, etc.] so proved or acknowledged and certified and registered shall be received as evidence"); extended to old or mutilated records re-copied, §§ 3778, 3786, 3793, 5575; 1806, King v. Hall, 1 Overt. 209 (grantee by warranty-deed need not produce prior deeds, which the grantor is supposed to keep); 1809, Cook v. Hunter, 2 id. 113 (same); 1812, McClellan v. Dunlap, ib. 183 (certified copy of mesne conveyance, received on affidavit that the original was beyond control; an alleged original was in Court, but, by hypothesis being altered, could not be regarded as the original in question); 1813, Smith v. Martin, ib. 208 (proof is needed that the original mesne conveyance is out of the control of the offeror, but "not the same necessity for strictness as with other sorts of copies"; here, an affidavit of the offeror or his agent was held sufficient); 1814, Jackson v. Dillon, ib. 261, 263 ("the law will always give an easy ear to the reception of affidavits respecting the loss or non-production of original papers which are required to be registered and have actually been registered agreeably to law"); 1817, Lannum v. Brooks, 4 Hayw. 121 (deed to the defendant; copy offered by plaintiff; production not required, because the plaintiff is presumed not to have possession; nor is notice to the defendant necessary); 1823, Norflet v. Nelson, Peck 188 (production required of deed offered by grantee himself or his heir); 1827, Anderson v. Walker, M. & Y. 201 (production dispensed with "only in those cases where the warrantor, not a defendant, was supposed to keep his title by him"; but here both grantor and grantee were joined as defendants, and the grantee therefore was obliged to account for a mesne deed to the grantor); 1844, Saunders v. Harris, 5 Humph. 345 (copy of recorded bill of sale to grantee, mother of plaintiff, excluded, because the original was in his power); 1832, M'Iver v. Robertson, 3 Yerg. 84, 89 (under the original St 1809, c. 14, § 8, the offeror of a registered deed-copy must show the original not to be in his power, by express statutory provision); 1869, Walker v. Walker, 6 Coldw. 571, 573, semble (wife proving deed to deceased husband; production unnecessary, without order); 1874, Sampson v. Marr, 7 Baxt. 486, 492 (certified copy of deed to ancestor of plaintiff, the heir; production of original required, as the plaintiff was presumed to have possession).

Texas: Rev. Civ. Stats. 1895, § 2311 ("all conveyances and other instruments of writing between private individuals, which were filed in the office of any alcalde or judge in Texas previous to the first Monday in February, 1837," are provable by certified copy); § 2312 ("Every instrument of writing" lawfully proved or acknowledged and recorded with clerk of county court, is provable by certified copy "whenever any party to the suit shall file among the papers of the cause an affidavit" stating that any such instrument "has been lost or that he cannot procure the original"); § 4667 (all instruments permitted by law to be registered, and recorded before Feb. 9, 1860, provable by certified copy as if the proof or acknowledgment were in accordance with existing laws, provided it was made before certain specified officers); § 5266 (in trespass to try title, "proof of a common source may be made by the plaintiff by certified copies of the deeds showing a claim of title, etc.," if filed with the papers three days before trial and notice given "as in other cases"); in the following cases, where nothing is specially noted, the ruling concerns the statutory terms in regard to an affidavit of loss or lack of control: 1853, Styles v. Gray, 10 Tex. 503, 505 (statute applied to the record-book); 1853, Crayton v. Munger, 11 id. 234 (statute strictly applied, as to the affidavit); 1856, Graham v. Henry, 17 id. 164, 166; 1856, Fulton v. Bayne, 18 id. 50, 56 (as to the notice); 1857, Butler v. Dunagan, 19 id. 559, 566 (as to the affidavit); 1858, Bateman v. Bateman, 21 Tex. 432 (a ruling against sufficiency of proof of loss by affidavit does not preclude an additional affidavit at a later trial); 1864, Winters v. Laird, 27 id. 616 (statute does not apply to judicial records; here, a probated will; no notice necessary); 1867, Hooper v. Hall, 30 id. 154, 158 (affidavit held insufficient on the facts); 1871, Ury v. Houston, 36 id. 260, 268; 1882, Hines v. Thorn, 57 id. 98, 103; 1882, Dotson v. Moss, 58 id. 152, 154; 1883, Vandergriff v. Piercy, 59 id. 371; 1885, Kauffman v. Shellworth, 64 id. 179; 1885, Ross v. Kornrumpf, ib. 390, 394; 1888, Nye v. Gribble, 70 id. 458, 462, 8 S. W. 608; 1888, Boydston v. Morris, 71 id. 697, 699, 10 S. W. 331 (common-law rule applied to recorded chattel-mortgages); 1890, Hill v. Taylor, 77 id. 295, 299, 14 S. W. 366; 1890, Foot v. Silliman, ib. 268, 271, 13 S. W. 1032; 1898, Oxsheer v. Watt, 91 id. 402, 44 S. W. 67 (recorded mortgage; original not required).

United States: 1826, Brooks v. Marbury, 11 Wheat. 78, 82 (statute requiring record but not exempting from production of original; production required; decision by a majority of the pressly provided for by a statute is not or cannot be employed, the proceeding is not under the statute and the statutory exemption does not obtain ; so Court); 1826, Peltz v. Clarke, 2 Cr. C. C. 703 (original need not be accounted for); 1830, Beall v. Dick, 4 id. 18 (same); 1831, Doe v. Winn, 5 Pet 233, 241 (see quotation ante, § 1224; exemplification under the State seal of Georgia of a land-patent there recorded; production not required; Johnson, J., diss.); 1834, Dick v. Balch, 8 id. 30, 33 (production of original not necessary, where record is required, even though the statute does not make the copy evidence; here, the law of Maryland); 1835, Owings v. Hull, 9 id. 607, 625 (bill of sale required by Louisiana law to be kept by notary; production not required); 1860, Gregg v. Forsyth, 24 How. 179, 180 (original shown lost; copy allowed); 1901, Stout v. Rigney, 46 C. C. A. 459, 107 Fed. 545 (Missouri military-bonny land; see Mo., supra); the following rulings deal with the assignment of a patent of invention, and are to be compared with the citations under § 1657, post: 1844, Brooks v. Jenkins, 3 McL. 432, 436 (original not required, except the one under which party claims); 1848, Parker v. Ilworth, 4 id. 370 (original of first assignment not required); 1860, Lee v. Blandy, 1 Bond 361 (original of assignment to offeror, not required); 1893, Paine v. Trask, 5 U. S. App. 283, 286, 5 C. C. A. 497, 56 Fed. 233 (whether the original of a patent-assignment recorded must be accounted for; undecided); 1894, New York v. R. Co., 26 id. 7, 9 C. C. A. 336, 60 Fed. 1016 (original required).

Utah: Rev. St. 1898, § 3409 (substantially like Cal. C. C. P. § 1951); § 3410, par. 4 (like ib. § 1855); § 158 (certified copy of filed chattel-mortgage admissible "if such original be out of the control of the person wishing to use it"); 1892, Wilson v. Wright, 8 Utah 215, 30 Pac. 754 (defendant a party to the deed; production required, though another person had the custody).

Vermont: St. 1797, Stats. 1894, § 2216 (attested copy of deed recorded by county clerk, receivable "if the records of a town in which such deed or other conveyance is recorded are destroyed"); § 2222 (certified copy of recorded power of attorney authorizing deed, receivable "when the original cannot be produced"); § 2929 (sheriffs' commissions and accused's recognizances, recorded with county clerk, provable by certified copy in case of loss or destruction); 1827, Williams v. Wetherbee, 2 Aik. 329, 336 (mesne conveyances to plaintiff's grantor or predecessor; originals not presumed to be in plaintiff's possession, and therefore production not required; citing the statutes above as to county clerks' copies and powers of attorney copies; "these expressions do not necessarily imply that such copies may be read without proof that the originals are out of the parties' power; but the course has been, ever since the Act passed, to admit regular copies of such deeds as do not belong to the party wishing to use them"); 1830, Booge v. Parsons, 2 Vt. 456, 459 (same principle; here a record of deed to plaintiff's testator himself was received after proof of loss); 1834, Braintree v. Battles, 6 id. 395, 399, semble

(charter deposited in public office; loss of original required to be shown); 1850, Williams v. Bass, 22 id. 353, 356 (record of a deed "to a third person, and not to the party," suffices); 1861, Pratt v. Battles, 34 id. 391, 397 ("a party may prove the various links in his chain of title" without producing the originals, "except the deed to himself . . . because it is supposed to be in his custody"; whether or not, on a prima facie case of fraud or forgery, production would be required, undecided).

Virginia: Code 1887, § 3333 (copies of deeds imperfectly recorded under certain early statutes receivable); § 3376 (no certified copy of deed, will, account, or other original paper required to be recorded in a Court is to be used as evidence in place of a destroyed original or record, until such copy has been admitted to record in substitution); 1797, Maxwell v. Light, 1 Call 117, 121, semble (original of recorded deed must be shown unavailable); 1804, Hord v. Dishman, 5 id. 279, 284 (a copy, "by long-established usage in this country," is admissible without accounting for the original); 1815, Rowletts v. Daniel, 4 Muuf. 473, 482 (certified copy of recorded deed to offeror's predecessor in title, dated 1765, received without accounting for original); 1821, Baker v. Preston, Gilmer 235, 284, semble (certified copy of recorded deed, admissible without accounting for the original; but at pp. 286, 294, it is not clear whether this was the point decided); 1824, Ben v. Peete, 2 Rand. 539, 543, semble (search required in the recording-office, etc.; but here it turned out that the deed was not lawfully recorded); 1835, Petermans v. Laws, 6 Leigh 523, 529 ("It is not necessary to consider whether Baker v. Preston settles the law" exempting from production of a locally recorded original; here, an original recorded in another State must be accounted for, unless the law there dispenses with it); 1845, Pollard v. Lively, 2 Gratt. 216, 218, semble (certified copy receivable, "on account of the inconvenience which would be occasioned by the necessity of producing the original"); 1847, Pollard v. Lively, 4 id. 73, 80, semble (certified copy receivable; but there are intimations of a modified requirement of production).

Washington: Codes & Stats. 1897, § 6046 ("any deed, conveyance, bond, mortgage, or other writing," lawfully recorded or filed, is provable by certified copy); § 4532 (certified copy of instrument duly acknowledged abroad and recorded here, admissible "to the same extent and with like effect").

West Virginia: Code 1891, c. 130, § 4 (certain recorded deeds of Virginia, provable by copy); c. 73, §§ 7-11 a (semble, a duly recorded deed, provable by certified copy; but the contents of a recorded deed not properly acknowledged or proved for record are thus provable only in case of loss of the original).

Wisconsin: Stats. 1898, § 4156 (the record in the proper registry of every conveyance or land-patent lawfully recorded is admissible without further proof; "whenever any presumptive that the original must be accounted for according to ordinary common-law doctrines.¹ For the same reason, the original must be accounted for by common-law methods if it is in fact recorded but not lawfully recorded.² (2) Conversely, if proof is proposed to be made by common-law modes and not a statutory certified copy, any statutory requirements — for example, an affidavit or a notice of using a certified copy —, which may be more rigorous, need not be followed.³ (3) The statutory rule of some States (post, §§ 1651, 2132) exempting from proof of execution, where the opponent has failed by plea or affidavit to put the execution in issue, does not exempt from production of the original to show the contents, if under the rule for proving recorded deeds such production is required.⁴ (4) The statutory affidavit often required is merely a means of proving loss or other excuse for non-production; the affidavit does not suffice to supply the contents, which must otherwise be duly proved.⁵ (5) Where the proponent is under the present principle exempted from producing the original and uses a copy, the opponent also has the advantage of the exemption.⁶ (6) Where the original is offered, a certified copy also may be offered so far as it may throw light on the disputed contents of the original.⁷ (7) If the conveyance is recorded in another jurisdiction and according to its laws, then production should not be required if it is dispensed with by the law of that jurisdiction.⁸

§ 1227. Same: Other Principles Discriminated (Certified Copies, Affidavits, Abstracts). (1) The principle of Authentication (post, §§ 1648, 2130) requires that the execution of the recorded original be somehow proved; and an important question (for the settlement of which the foregoing statutes effect as evidence is given by law to such patent, conveyance, or instrument," such record and certified copies "shall have the like effect"); § 4713 a (certified copy of conveyance, admissible in criminal cases); 1881, Johnson v. Ashland L. Co., 52 Wis. 458, 463, 9 N. W. 464 (whether the original must be accounted for, not clear).

Wyoming: Rev. St. 1887, § 20 (record or certified copy of a duly recorded instrument concerning any interest in land in this Territory, admissible "upon the affidavit of the party desiring to use the same, that the original thereof is not in his possession or power to produce").

¹ 1858, Brogan v. Savage, 5 Sneed 689, 692 (where the certified copy was inadmissible). Compare the different result reached ante, § 1219, in the case of official documents.

But this consequence would not be proper in a jurisdiction (ante, § 1224) where the rule had been reached without the aid of express statutes.

² 1853, Dickerson v. Talbot, 14 B. Monr. 60, 67; 1800, Gittings v. Hall, 1 H. & J. 14, 18; 1863, Brown v. Cady, 10 Mich. 535, 538; 1848, Thomas v. Bank, 9 Sm. & M. 201; 1860, Davis v. Rhodes, 39 Miss. 152, 156; 1880, Crispen v. Hannavan, 72 Mo. 548, 554; 1811, Vickroy v. McKnight, 4 Binn. 204, 208. Contra: 1865, McMinn v. O'Connor, 27 Cal. 238, 244 (certified copy of deed recorded but not properly proved for record; proof of execution required, but not production of original).

³ 1859, Loflin v. Nally, 24 Tex. 565, 574; 1886, Blanton v. Ray, 66 id. 61, 7 S. W. 264; 1888, Pennington v. Schwartz, 70 id. 211, 8 S. W. 32.

⁴ 1865, Yonng v. Guilbeau, 3 Wall. 636 (Texas statute).

⁵ 1872, Bounds v. Bounds, 11 Heisk. 318, 323 (where a statutory affidavit suffices to prove loss of the original, the contents must still be proved by testimony on the stand). For this affidavit, as originally an exception to the party's disqualification, see ante, § 1196.

⁶ 1870, Samuel v. Borrowscale, 104 Mass. 207, 210 (where one party produced the copy, and the other was then allowed to testify that he had never signed such a deed, without producing the original).

⁷ 1869, Walker v. Walker, 6 Coldw. 571, 573 (where the original has an alteration, the registry copy may be looked to as an official statement of original's contents at time of registration). Compare a similar case ante, § 1190, and the cases cited ante, § 797, concerning photographic copies of handwriting.

⁸ 1852, Smith v. McWaters, 7 La. An. 145, 147; 1879, State v. Barrow, 31 id. 691, 692; 1895, Chase v. Caryl, 57 N. J. L. 545, 31 Atl. 1024; and other cases cited ante, § 1225, passim. Contra: 1875, Tully v. Caufield, 60 Mo. 99, cited ante, § 1225.

were chiefly intended) is whether under the Hearsay rule a custodian's certified copy of the recorded deed is admissible to prove the execution. This question is wholly independent of the rule of production; for example, if the rule of production be satisfied, as by showing the loss of the original, it is still to be determined whether a certified copy is proper evidence of the original's execution. This question is dealt with elsewhere (post, §§ 1651, 1682); and the distinctions between that and the present principle are there examined. (2) By most statutes touching the present subject, the proof of loss or lack of possession (if that is required) may be made by affidavit; this involves the creation of an exception to the Hearsay rule, for that rule forbids the use of affidavits; in that aspect, the subject of affidavits is elsewhere dealt with (post, § 1710).¹ (3) In some jurisdictions, a statute expressly provides for the use of abstracts of burnt records. These statutes add nothing to the present principle, since the non-production of a burnt original is always excused; but they involve the rule about a copy of a copy (post, § 1275), the rule about Completeness (post, § 2105), and the Hearsay exception for commercial documents (post, § 1705); under those heads the subject is further examined. So, also, the propriety of using a copy of a recorded conveyance, where the statutory provision for recording requires only an abstract to be recorded, involves the rule of Completeness (post, § 2105).

§ 1228. (9) Appointments to Office. There has been much difference of practice in regard to requiring the production of the written appointment to office, in proving a person to be an officer. The contents of the document would ordinarily be provable by production only, and it is upon the ground of the present principle that the rulings to that effect have proceeded.¹ But the best practice seems to have excused production, and to have done so for the specific reason either of the general inconvenience that such a rule would entail in actions for or against officers, or of the "collateral" nature (post, § 1252) of the issue.² There seems thus to be recognized this additional class of cases of exemption. But the usual sufficient proof, in the Courts where production is not required, is held to be the facts of acting as officer and of having a reputation as officer, or, in another form, of notoriously acting as officer; and the doctrine can more conveniently be considered under this presumption (post, § 2535).³

§ 1229. (10) Illegible Documents. Where a document, though still in existence, has become illegible, through tearing, rubbing, fading, or otherwise, it is for all practical purposes lost, and its contents may be proved by other evidence; though production may in discretion be required, in order to prove its legible part, if any, or to make certain that the document is really

¹ See also § 1196, ante.

² 1820, Holroyd, J., in Brewster v. Sewell, 3 B. & Ald. 296, 302.

³ 1606, Bellamy's Case, 6 Co. Rep. 38 ("If the king's fermor brings a quominus in the Exchequer, he ought to alledge that he is the king's fermor to enable him to sue there; but he need not show it to the Court, for that is meer collateral to the action").

³ For related doctrines, see also the following places: § 2168 (official character of the person signing or sealing a document, presumed); § 1625 (reputation, as evidence of incorporation); § 2576 (judicial notice of an officer).

illegible.¹ Upon this principle also is justified the use of photographic enlargements of handwriting.²

§ 1230. (11) Voluminous Documents (Accounts, Records, Copyright Infringements, Absence of Record). Where a fact could be ascertained only by the inspection of a large number of documents made up of very numerous detailed statements — as, the net balance resulting from a year's vouchers of a treasurer or a year's accounts in a bank-ledger —, it is obvious that it would often be practically out of the question to apply the present principle by requiring the production of the entire mass of documents and entries to be perused by the jury or read aloud to them. The convenience of trials demands that other evidence be allowed to be offered, in the shape of the testimony of a competent witness who has perused the entire mass and will state summarily the net result. Such a practice is well established to be proper. Most Courts require, as a condition, that the mass thus summarily testified to shall, if the occasion seems to require it, be placed at hand in court, or at least be made accessible to the opposing party, in order that the correctness of the evidence may be tested by inspection if desired, or that the material for cross-examination may be available :

1854, Bigelow, J., in Boston & W. R. Co. v. Dana, 1 Gray 83, 89, 104 (embezzlement; schedules showing the sales of tickets for certain periods were admitted) : "It appears to us that questions of this sort must necessarily be left very much to the discretion of the judge who presides at the trial. It would doubtless be inexpedient in most cases to permit ex parte statements of facts or figures to be prepared and submitted to the jury. It should only be done where books and documents are multifarious and voluminous and of a character to render it difficult for the jury to comprehend material facts without the aid of such statements. . . . In a trial embracing so many details and occupying so great a length of time as the case at bar, during which a great mass of books and documents were put in evidence, it was the only mode of attaining to an intelligible view of the cause before the jury."

The most commonly recognized application of this principle is that by which the state of pecuniary accounts or other business transactions is allowed to be shown by a witness' schedule or summary.¹ So, also, in trying an issue

¹ 1862, Dunning v. Rankin, 19 Cal. 640 (mining-claim notice on a tree, the notice now torn and illegible; production not required); 1883, Duffin v. People, 107 Ill. 113, 120 (signature faded and illegible; secondary evidence allowed); 1858, Little v. Downing, 37 N. H. 355, 365 (the ink had faded; "the record, being illegible, was lost for all practical purposes").

² Cases cited ante, § 797, post, §§ 2010, 2019.

¹ Eng. : 1817, Meyer v. Sefton, 2 Stark. 274, 276 (value of a bankrupt's property; one who had examined his accounts allowed to testify, as "from the very nature of the case, such an inquiry could not be made in Court"); 1825, Gardner Peerage Case, LeMarchant's Rep. 61 (physician, having in Court a register of 9,000 cases of parturition, allowed to refer to notes of specific relevant cases taken from the register); 1847, Johnson v. Kershaw, 1 De G. & Sm. 260, 264 (expert's statement of the results of an examination of account-books, held conditional on the books being put in evidence); Ala. : 1902, Willis v. State, 134 Ala. 429, 33 So. 226 (embezzlement; principle applied); Ark. : 1895, Woodruff v. State, 61 Ark. 157, 170, 32 S. W. 102 (testimony to a balance of voluminous accounts, received on the facts, by a majority); 1902, Ritter v. State, 70 id. 472, 69 S. W. 262 (embezzlement; expert accountant allowed to testify to the shortage shown in voluminous bank-books); Cal. : C. C. P. 1872, §§ 1855, 1937 (production excused "when the original consists of numerous accounts or other documents, which cannot be examined in Court without great loss of time, and the evidence sought from them is only the general result of the whole"); 1898, San Pedro L. Co. v. Reynolds, 121 Cal. 74, 53 Pac. 410 (expert's schedule-summaries of account-books, admitted); Colo. : C. C. P. 1891, § 356 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855);

of infringement of copyright, the material passages may be culled from the entire volume and presented in such a way as to be conveniently com-

Conn.: 1899, McCann v. Gould, 71 Conn. 629, 42 Atl. 1002 (state of accounts; summaries allowable, in trial Court's discretion, if the examination of items would consume time and confuse jury; but the originals must be produced if demanded); Del.: 1898, Curry v. Charles Warner Co., 2 Marv. Super. 98, 42 Atl. 425 (witness' schedule of results of account-books in court, allowed to be used); Ga.: 1861, Gant v. Carmichael, 31 Ga. 737, 741 (results based on invoices, etc., not introduced; excluded); Ida.: Rev. St. 1887, § 5999 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); Ill.: 1902, Bartlett v. Wheeler, 195 Ill. 445, 63 N. E. 169 (testimony that certain books of account showed a shortage, not admitted on the facts); Ind.: 1884, Rogers v. State, 99 Ind. 218, 228 (treasurer's accounts; experts' examinations of the books, received; "witnesses so testifying, to give their evidence weight, should be prepared to corroborate every statement by references to the records, in the presence of the jury, wherever either party desires it, in either the examination or cross-examination"); 1887, Hollingsworth v. State, 111 id. 289, 297, 12 N. E. 490 (defaulting treasurer; expert accountants' examination of the treasurer's books, etc., admitted, the documents being "voluminous and multifarious, and of such a character as to render it difficult for the jury to arrive at a correct conclusion as to amounts"); 1893, Equitable Acc. Ins. Co. v. Stout, 135 id. 444, 453, 33 N. E. 623 (insurance accounts; general principle sanctioned, but the pleadings here treated as excluding it); 1895, Chicago St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Wolcott, 141 id. 267, 39 N. E. 451 (expert's statement of results of complicated account-books, admitted); Ia.: 1890, State v. Cadwell, 79 Ia. 432, 441, 44 N. W. 700 (expert's statement of results of examination of accounts, the books being in evidence, allowed); Ky.: 1903, Louisville Bridge Co. v. R. Co., — Ky. —, 75 S. W. 285 (tables of tolls paid, summarizing the contents of thousands of waybills, admitted); La.: 1901, State v. Mathis, 106 La. 263, 30 So. 834 (embezzlement; an expert's statement as to the results of his examination of the defendant's books, admitted, the books being assumed to have been offered); Md.: 1893, Lynn v. Cumberland, 77 Md. 449, 458, 26 Atl. 1001 (expert's summary of tax-figures, books being in court, admitted); Mass.: 1854, Boston & W. R. Co. v. Dana, 1 Gray 83, 89, 104 (schedules of sales of tickets, admitted; see quotation supra); 1874, Walker v. Curtis, 116 Mass. 98, 100, semble (summary of estimates of days' work admitted; here the books were produced); 1894, Bicknell v. Mellett, 160 id. 328, 35 N. E. 1130 (computations by an expert from an insolvent's account-books, admissible in trial Court's discretion); Minn.: 1891, Wolford v. Farnham, 47 Minn. 95, 49 N. W. 528 (summary of accounts from the firm's books, brought into court, admitted; though "the regular way would have been to introduce the books" also formally in evidence); 1901, State v. Clements, 82 id. 434, 85 N. W.

229 (receipt of bank-deposit during insolvency; the journals being in evidence, an expert's summaries of them were received); 1902, State v. Salverson, 87 id. 40, 91 N. W. 1 (expert's summaries of a bank's books produced in court, held admissible); Miss.: 1878, State v. Lewenthal, 55 Miss. 589 (tax-collector's books; memoranda of voluminous contents excluded, because the books were not also offered); 1896, Hauenstein v. Gillespie, 73 id. 742, 19 So. 673 (account-books belonging to a witness testifying on deposition; that the books were not annexed as exhibits, but were set out by copies of entries, held proper); Mo.: 1870, Ritchie v. Kinney, 46 Mo. 298, 299 (receipts and disbursements; condensed statement showing aggregates, not admitted, the account-books not being produced); 1888, Masonic M. B. Soc'y v. Lackland, 97 id. 137, 139, 10 S. W. 895 (expert's results of an examination of account-books, admitted, the documents being in court); 1890, State v. Findley, 101 id. 217, 223, 14 S. W. 185 (tax-receipts, etc.; the papers being present, an expert was allowed to state the result of his examination); Mont.: C. C. P. 1895, § 3131 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); Nebr.: 1898, Bartley v. State, 53 Nebr. 310, 73 N. W. 744 (expert's examination of account-books, received, the books being in court); 1900, Bee Pub. Co. v. World Pub. Co., 59 id. 713, 82 N. W. 28 (state of complicated accounts; books must be present in court, for purposes of cross-examination); Neu.: Gen. St. 1885, § 3449 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); N. Y.: 1878, Von Sachs v. Kretz, 72 N. Y. 548 (witness' statement of results of examination of account-books in court, admissible in referee's discretion); Or.: C. C. P. 1892, § 691 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); 1895, State v. Reinhart, 26 Or. 466, 38 Pac. 822 (expert's summary of account-books put in evidence, admitted); 1902, Salem L. & T. Co v. Anson, 41 id. 562, 67 Pac. 1015, 69 Pac. 675 (expert's testimony to the results of an examination of voluminous accounts, admitted, the books being in court); Tenn.: 1874, Shepherd v. Hamilton Co., 8 Heisk. 380 (officer's failure to pay over funds; a witness not allowed to state "the results of his examination" of the books and vouchers); 1900, Galbreath v. Knoxville, — Tenn. —, 59 S. W. 178 (summary statement of book-balance, allowed, the books being in court); U. S.: 1873, Burton v. Driggs, 20 Wall. 125, 136 ("When it is necessary to prove the results of voluminous facts or of the examination of many books and papers, and the examination cannot conveniently be made in court, the results may be proved by the person who made the examination"); 1898, Rollins v. Board, 33 C. C. A. 181, 90 Fed. 575 (tabulated statements by an expert of records of county indebtedness, etc., the books being offered also, admitted); 1898, Northern P. R. Co. v. Keyes C. C. C., 91 Fed. 47 (similar); Utah: Rev. St. 1898, § 3410 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855).

Compare the cases cited post, § 1244, where pared.² Upon the same principle, summaries of official or corporate records might properly be presented;⁸ and testimony, by one who has examined records, that no record of a specific tenor is there contained is receivable instead of producing the entire mass for perusal in the court-room.⁴

(d) "Of the Writing Itself."

§ 1231. What is the "Original" Writing? General Principle. The fundamental notion of the general rule under consideration is that the terms of a writing must be proved by producing it and not by offering testimony about them. It is commonly said that the "original" must be produced, and not a copy. But "original" is a relative term only. When a particular paper is said to reproduce the terms of another, the former is the "copy," the latter the "original." Thus, "original" and "copy" are words correlative, with reference to the succession of existence between them, and have no necessary connection with the present rule. Given merely two papers, A and B, of which A was copied from B, and A thus is the "copy" and B the "original," we still have no light at all on the application of the present rule, i. e. on the question whether paper A can be offered without accounting for the non-production of paper B. For example, paper A might be a libellous document handed by M to N, while paper B was kept by M in his private desk; so that to prove the publication of a libel, paper A and not paper B would be the document whose production the present rule would require; yet relatively to each other paper A is a "copy" and paper B an "original." Again, paper A may have been deposited for safe-keeping with N. as bailee, and in an action for negligently injuring it, paper A is the document to be accounted for under the present rule, and paper B could be used a similar result may be reached, in some cases, by a different principle.

For the opinion rule as applied to such testimony, see post, §§ 1957, 1959, 1978.

² 1839, Lewis v. Fullerton, 2 Beav. 6, 8 (exhibits on both sides showing copied passages, etc., used by the Court to facilitate comparison); 1826, Mawman v. Tegg, 2 Russ. 385, 398 (same process sanctioned by Eldon, L. C.); 1869, Lawrence v. Dana, 4 Cliff. 1, 72 (testimony of experts as to the extent of copying in a voluminous work charged to infringe a copyright, received, although the Court also examined the original material for itself); 1897, West Pub. Co. v. Lawyers' Coop. P. Co., 25 C. C. A. 648, 79 Fed. 756 (in ascertaining the extent of a borrowing of paragraphs of syllabi, tables prepared by witnesses who had examined thousands of cases were used as evidence of their contents, after the Court had tested their accuracy).

³ 1901, Schumacher v. Pima Co., — Ariz. —, 64 Pac. 490 (expert's summaries of fee-records in probate court, admitted); 1896, Adams v. Board, 37 Fla. 266, 20 So. 266 (substance of a number of records of a Board, excluded); 1860, Thornburgh v. R. Co., 14 Ind. 499, 501 (witness producing corporation-record, allowed to state the aggregate footings); 1897, State v. Brady, 100 Ia. 191, 69 N. W. 290 (to show a system of defrauding by false warrants, more than 500 in all, a tabulated statement from the voluminous records was admitted); 1899, Plano Mfg. Co. v. McCoid, — id. —, 80 N. W. 659 (to show insolvency, a list of the recorded mortgages, etc., made by one testifying, excluded); 1902, Blum v. State, 94 Md. 375, 51 Atl. 26 (summary of claims proved under a receivership, verified by the receiver, admitted); 1903, Scott v. R. Co., — Or. —, 72 Pac. 594 (average of rainfall for 18 years, allowed to be testified to from official records without stating detailed entries); 1896, Ludtke v. Hertzog, 18 C. C. A. 487, 72 Fed. 142 (testimony to the identity of an enrolled soldier as gathered from a perusal of the various archives containing his name and doings, admitted); 1900, Jordan v. Warner, 107 Wis. 539, 83 N. W. 946 (summary of complicated land-records and tax-rolls, the originals being before the court, admitted).

⁴ 1897, Hoffman v. Pack, 114 Mich. 1, 71 N. W. 1095 (a clerk, allowed to testify that no records of a certain sort existed). The same result may be reached on the principle of § 1244, post, where other cases are cited.

Whether an official custodian may make a hearsay statement, by certificate, to the same effect, is a different question; see post, § 1678. For the opinion rule, see post, §§ 1957, 1978.

only secondarily, although the former is only a "copy" and the latter is an "original." Thus, the terms "copy" and "original," being purely relative to each other, have no inherent relation to the present rule, and the term "original" has no real significance in indicating which paper it is (of all possible papers) whose production is required by the rule. In order to state the rule, then, in terms which will indicate in the rule itself what documents are included in its scope, it must be noted that the production required is the production of the document whose contents are to be proved in the state of the issues. Whether or not that document was written before or after another, was copied from another, or was itself used to copy from, is immaterial. The question becomes: Is this the very document whose contents are desired to be, and, in the now state of the issues, by the substantive law may lawfully be proved? This inquiry is of course usually answered without hesitation; but there are numerous instances in which a difficulty of principle arises.

The cases in which a question may arise fall into four groups: (1) Cases in which the document to be proved was brought into existence in duplicate or multiplicate form, — chiefly, the case of duplicate originals; (2) cases in which a document, first made by copying from another, has since been acted upon or dealt with at other times, by the same or another person, so that for the purposes of such later acts it is the document to be proved; (3) cases in which, of two or more documents, one or another of them will be the document in issue according to the substantive law of contract, property, etc., applicable to the case; (4) cases in which, by the rule of Integration, or Parol Evidence (post, § 2429), a document which would otherwise be the one in issue has been annulled or superseded by another one, which thus becomes the only one allowable by law to be proved and therefore the one necessary to be produced.

§ 1232. (1) Duplicates and Counterparts: Either may be used without producing the Other. Where the writing constituting a bilateral transaction is executed by the parties in duplicate or multiplicate, each of these parts is "the" writing, because by the act of the parties each is as much the legal act as another. It can make no difference that one party has signed only the document taken by the other, except where it is desired to prove specifically the signature. Such a duplicate or counterpart, then, may be used without accounting for the non-production of any other, because the present rule is satisfied by the production of any one part:

1809, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Philipson v. Chase, 2 Camp. 110: "If there are two co-temporary writings, the counterparts of each other, one of which is delivered to the opposite party, and the other preserved, as they may both be considered as originals, and they have equal claims to authenticity, the one which is preserved may be received in evidence, without notice to produce the one which was delivered."

This result is generally accepted.¹

¹ 1842, Doe v. Pulman, 3 Q. B. 622 (to prove counting for the part signed by W.); 1858, W. seised, a counterpart of a lease by him Leonard v. Young, 4 All. N. Br. 111 (certain leases, held duplicate originals); 1868, Cleve-

§ 1233. Same: All Duplicates or Counterparts must be accounted for before using Copies. Conversely, since all the duplicates or multiplicates are parts of the writing itself to be proved, no excuse for non-production of the writing itself can be regarded as established until it appears that all of its parts are unavailable (i. e. lost, detained by the opponent or by a third person, or the like). This is well settled, though not always in the light of the correct reason.

1825, Best, C. J., in Munn v. Godbold, 3 Bing. 292: "When there are two instruments executed as parts of a deed, one of these parts is more authentic and satisfactory evidence of the contents of the other part than any other draft or copy. It is prepared with more care than any other copy, and the party who produces it, and against whom it is used, by taking and keeping it as a part of the deed, admits its accuracy. The Courts have therefore always required that if one part of a deed be lost, and another part be in existence, it must be produced"; but ". . . merely as secondary evidence of the part that was lost."¹

In the foregoing passage, the counterpart is treated as merely a preferred variety of copy (post, § 1273); but the same result is necessarily reached, apart from any theory of preferred copies, from the nature of the general rule.

§ 1234. Same: Duplicate Notices, Blotter-Press Copies, and Printing-Press Copies, as Originals. (1) A doctrine was early established that where a notice was made by writing it out twice, at the same sitting, the writings were in fact duplicates, though not written nor executed contemporaneously, and that thus the one retained could be used without accounting for the non-production of the one delivered.¹ This theory seems to have been in land & T. R. Co. v. Perkins, 17 Mich. 296 (contract exchanged in duplicate; either receivable); 1876, Ketchum v. Brennan, 53 Miss. 597, 605, 608 (obscure); 1865, Carr v. Carr, 36 Mo. 408, 411, semble (either receivable); 1827, Lewis v. Payn, 8 Cow. 71, 76 (two copies of a lease, each executed by both parties; "both are properly originals," on an issue of the existence of the tenancy); 1830, Jackson v. Denison, 4 Wend. 558 (counterpart of an agreement usable like the original); 1847, Bogardus v. Trinity Church, 4 Sandf. Ch. 633, 730, semble (the lessor's counterpart of a lease is the original where it is offered as containing the lessee's declarations of a holding under the lessor); 1900, State v. Allen, 56 S. C. 495, 35 S. E. 204 (school certificates); 1828, Carroll v. Peake, 1 Pet. 18, 23 (opponent's copy of an agreement of lease, held an original, on the facts).

The earlier practice seems to have been to treat the counterpart of a deed as a copy or secondary, as may be inferred from the utterances quoted post, § 1273, upon the preferred order of copies. Moreover the quotation in the next section shows the persistence of this idea.

¹ Eng.: 1740, Villiers v. Villiers, 2 Atk. 71, Hardwicke, L. C.; 1773, Ludlam's Will, Lofft 362 (Mansfield, L., C. J.: "If you cannot prove a deed by producing it, you may produce the counterpart"); 1795, R. v. Castleton, 6 T. R. 236 (indenture of apprenticeship); 1825, Munn v. Godbold, 3 Bing. 292 (quoted supra); 1834, Alivon v. Furnival, 1 Cr. M. & R. 277, 292; 1836, Doe v. Wainwright, 1 Nev. & P. 8, 12 ("a counterpart is the next best evidence"); U. S. v. Ga. Code 1895, § 5173; 1872, Breed v. Nagle, 46 Ga. 112 (lease in duplicate; in action by stranger against lessee, original of lessee, and not merely of lessor, to be accounted for); 1886, Cincinnati N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Disbrow, 76 id. 253 (duplicate contract; after accounting for both parts, a copy allowed); 1900, Rodriguez' Estate, 13 How. 202, 205 (counterparts of leases preferred to copies); 1871, White v. Herrman, 62 Ill. 73 (duplicate original of a contract, preferred to a copy); 1827, Erwin v. Porter, 6 Mart. n. s. 166, semble; 1874, Dyer v. Fredericks, 63 Me. 173 (duplicate originals of a bill of lading; rule applied); 1829, Poignard v. Smith, 8 Pick. 272, 279 (counterpart of a mortgage required). Contra: 1844, Hewlett v. Henderson, 9 Rob. La. 379, 381, semble.

¹ 1796, Gotlieb v. Danvers, 1 Esp. 455 (Eyre, C. J., said "that where two copies of any instrument or notice were made at the same time, both were to be deemed originals"; here a notice to take away a crane); 1799, Jory v. Orchard, 2 B. & P. 39 (a written statutory demand; the attorney "made out two papers for that purpose, precisely to the same effect, and signed them both for his client, one of which he delivered" and the other he kept; held that the latter, as a counterpart or "duplicate original," could be used in evidence; the analogies of a part the origin of the rule of thumb, already considered (ante, § 1206), that no notice to produce a notice need be given; but though the theory would logically extend to any kind of a document written in duplicate at the same sitting, such an extension appears not to have occurred.² The fallacy of the theory seems to lie in this circumstance, that what makes two numbers of any instrument duplicates and equivalent is that the legal act as consummated embraces them both; it is not the coincidence of writing (for the counterpart of a deed may be written after an interval), but the unity given by the final legal act. Thus, if both numbers of a notice were served, and then the server retained one, the two would indeed be duplicates; but the mere writing at one sitting, followed by a legal act of service performed with one number only, cannot make the other an equivalent "original" for the purposes of the present rule.

(2) A reproduction by blotter-press or letter-press cannot be considered as a duplicate;³ and policy here supports principle, for such reproductions are by no means uniformly identical or accurate. The same must be said of any process of machine-reproduction which consists in obtaining repeated ink-traces from a single writing so prepared as to furnish such traces by pressure or by chemical operation.

notice to quit and a notice to a justice were considered to control, and the existing practice to use the "duplicate original" was confirmed; Rooke, J., diss.; 1803, Surtees v. Hubbard, 4 Esp. 203 (copy of a notice of assignment, written at the same time and signed by the party; admitted, semble, as a duplicate original, per Ellenborough, L. C. J.); 1874, Hollenbeck v. Stanberry, 38 Ia. 325, 327 (copy of original summons served upon party, equivalent to the summons itself); 1874, Barr v. Armstrong, 56 Mo. 577, 586 (two numbers of notice written at same time and one served; each held an original); 1816, Johnson v. Haight, 13 John. 470 (notice of dishonor proved by copy made at the time, as "a duplicate original"); 1826, Eisenhart v. Slavmaker, 14 S. & R. 153, 156 ("every written notice is to be proved by a duplicate original").

² 1800, Anderson v. May, 2 B. & P. 237 (copy of a bill of costs delivered to the defendant; admitted, on the authority of Jory v. Orchard); 1809, Philipson v. Chase, 2 Comp. 110 (doctrine conceded, but held not to apply to a book entry of an attorney's bill); 1822, Kine v. Beaumont, 3 B. & B. 238, 291, semble (three judges could not see "any great difference" between "a duplicate original and a copy made at the time"); 1827, Colling v. Treweek, 6 B. & C. 394, 398 (an attorney's bill, signed; a copy, made at the same time, but not signed, but offered to be signed at the trial; undecided); 1880, Central Branch U. P. R. Co. v. Walters, 24 Kan. 504, 509 (a written demand was essential to the claim; a copy drawn up at the same time with the one served, held not equivalent to the original).

³ 1812, Nodin v. Murray, 3 Camp. 228; 1885, Spottiswood v. Weir, 66 Cal. 525, 529, 6 Pac. 381; 1890, Ford v. Cunningham, 87 id. 209, 210, 25 Pac. 403; 1876, Watkins v. Paine, 57 Ga. 50; 1873, Richards Iron Works v. Glennon, 71 Ill. 11; 1874, King v. Worthington, 73 id. 161, 163; 1883, Duringer v. Moschino, 93 Ind. 495, 499; 1887, Stare v. Halstead, 73 Ia. 376, 378, 35 N. W. 457; 1898, Seibert v. Ragsdale, 103 Ky. 206, 44 S. W. 653; 1899, Heilman Milling Co. v. Hotaling, — id. —, 53 S. W. 655; 1871, Marsh v. Hand, 35 Md. 123, 127; 1869, Goodrich v. Weston, 102 Mass. 362, semble; 1890, Smith v. Brown, 151 id. 338, 340, 24 N. E. 31 (title to a judgment; the assignment in issue); 1895, Traber v. Hicks, 131 Mo. 180, 32 S. W. 1145; 1880, Delaney v. Erickson, 10 Nebr. 492, 501, 6 N. W. 600; 1883, Ward v. Beals, 14 id. 114, 119, 15 N. W. 353; 1898, Westinghouse Co. v. Tilden, 56 id. 129, 76 N. W. 416; 1870, Foot v. Bentley, 44 N. Y. 166, 170.

Distinguish the following: 1859, Nathan v. Jacob, 1 F. & F. 452 (as an admission, a copy kept in a letter-book by the writer is equivalent to the letter itself, and is an original).

By statute the rule has sometimes been altered: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1937, as amended in 1901 ("Where an impression of a letter is taken in a letter-press copy-book before the mailing of the original, such letter-press copy must be deemed an original equally with the letter so copied, and may be read in evidence upon proof of the due mailing of the letter so copied"; for the validity of these amendments, see ante, § 488); Haw. Civil Laws 1897, § 1407 (original not required, where "any writing whatsoever shall have been copied by means of any machine or press which produces a facsimile impression or copy of such writing," on proof that the copy offered was so taken from the original).

(3) The case of a type-machine (the ordinary printing-press, or its equivalents) is different. Here, the only variances that can occur between different numbers reproduced by printing must arise from a change in the type or from the exhaustion of the ink. But the ordinary printing-press is now self-feeding in respect to ink; and, on the supposition that the type is not intentionally altered, all the reproductions from the same setting of type may be regarded for practical purposes as identical and equivalent. In those type-writing office-machines in which the paper is stationary and the hand applies a movable type or a pen, producing an impression through several sheets at once, the case is more difficult; for though the first few impressions may be identical, yet the lower sheets are likely to be imperfect.

As to these various special machines, no rulings seem to have been made.⁴ But for the printing-press having fixed type, it ought to be clear that any one of the multiply impressions obtained from a single and unaltered setting of type are equivalent, and that therefore to prove the contents of any one such impression any other one may be used without accounting for the former.⁵ In these days, to be sure, of numerous differing editions of newspapers within a single day, and even of plural editions of periodical magazines and of novels with alterations made since the printing of the first copies, the proof of the above preliminary condition, namely, the absence of alteration in the type, becomes a more difficult matter; but this aspect of the subject does not seem yet to have been recognized in judicial rulings.

A more important circumstance is that the natural operation of the above simple principle is in practice complicated and disturbed by the intervention of other principles. Thus, (a) a printed impression may or not be the writing to be proved, according as it or the manuscript draft constitutes the legal act desired to be proved (post, § 1235); (b) a specific printed impres-

* Compare the Hawaiian statute, supra.

⁵ 1817, R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. 116 (the defendant caused 500 placards to be printed and carried away 25 of them for posting; to prove the contents of those posted, one of the remainder was admitted; "every one of those worked off are originals, in the nature of duplicate originals"; "since it appears that they are from the same press, they must all be the same").

In the following case the principle was left undecided: 1837, Watts v. Fraser, 7 A. & E. 223, 232 (the defendant, to show provocation by the plaintiff's libel, offered a copy of a newspaper deposited under the law by the plaintiff at the public Stamp-Office; excluded, because knowledge of its contents by the defendant was not shown; whether, if knowledge of the contents of another number of the same issue had been shown, this number would have been received to prove contents, not decided).

In the following cases no common printing was shown, and thus the impressions in question could not be assumed to be identical: 1849, Boosey v. Davidson, 13 Q. B. 257, 266 (to prove prior publication of certain operatic pieces, production was required of copies alleged to have been seen elsewhere; for the identity of the contents with those of registered copies in court was to be shown, and there was by hypothesis no common printing); 1847, McGrath v. Cox, 3 U. C. Q. B. 332 (to prove a libel, the pamphlet charged as published could not be produced, nor was any one who had read it produced so as to be able to identify it with another pamphlet offered; a common printing was not shown, and the evidence of identity of general appearance, title-page, and dedication, was held not sufficient; Jones, J., diss.; the real error in the case lies in holding the proof of common printing insufficient; for the pamphlet was one circulated at an election, and the general evidence of correspondence sufficed to dismiss doubt for any reasonable person not sitting in the judicial atmosphere of artificial reasoning).

In the following cases the principle stated in the text was ignored or repudiated: 1817, Williams v. Stoughton, 2 Stark. 292 (to show the contents of a prospectus received by a school-patron, another printed copy was rejected); 1881, Southwestern R. Co. v. Papat, 67 Ga. 675, 686 (newspaper itself the original, not some other printed copy, in proving publication of notice of sale).

sion may by the substantive law be the only one in issue, and then it must be accounted for before another can be used (post, § 1237); (c) and in that case, a question may arise (treated ante, §§ 415, 440) as to the sufficiency of the evidence of the identity or correctness of the copy offered; (d) a printed impression may be read aloud and then the words uttered may be proved, if material under the issues, without producing the printed impression (post, § 1243);⁶ (e) and, finally, the act of sending or delivery may not require production (post, § 1248).

§ 1235. (2) Copy acted on or dealt with, as an Original for Certain Purposes (Bailments, Admissions, Bank-books, Accounts, etc.). Where an act material to be proved consists in the adoption of a paper by acting upon it or dealing with it, the rule requiring production applies to this paper, as involving the terms of the act; so that it is immaterial whether the paper was first made by copying another paper. For the purposes of proving the act in question, the specific paper dealt with is the writing to be produced. For example, in an action against a bailee for wrongful dealing with a document deposited, the document deposited, whether a copy or an original, is the document to be accounted for.¹ Again, in proving the terms of an admission by an opponent, where he orally or otherwise has acknowledged the correctness of a certain document, the document thus acknowledged (usually a bank-book) is the one to be accounted for, whether it is a copy of something else or not.² Again, in proving an account stated, the statement furnished is the document to be proved, though it may be only a copy from books of account.³ So also the criminal act to be proved may consist in the reading or posting of a document which otherwise may be but a copy from something else;⁴ and other illustrations are of frequent occurrence.⁵

⁶ Distinguish, moreover, the question of authenticating the publisher of printed matter (post, § 2150).

¹ See examples ante, § 1205.

² 1838, Lawton v. Farrat, 4 All. N. Br. 1, 8 (a written statement by a debtor was shown by him to the creditor, who copied it in his presence; whether the creditor's writing was an original, not decided); 1887, State v. Halstead, 73 Ia. 376, 377 (embezzlement; in showing deposits by defendant in a bank, his deposit-tickets are not secondary to the bank-books made up from them); 1898, Kelly v. Elevator Co., 7 N. D. 343, 75 N. W. 264 (defendant's agent's stub-entries copied from original entries and offered by plaintiff as admissions; allowed, the originals here being destroyed; but, on principle, the latter showing was not necessary); 1897, State v. McCauley, 17 Wash. 89, 49 Pac. 221, 51 Pac. 382 (to show the state of the defendant's account at a bank, the bank's books were introduced; held, that the defendant's checks need not be produced, because the defendant's examination of his pass-book, made up from the bank-books, was an admission of the latter's correctness; and thus the books came in as an admission, not as secondary evidence of the checks).

³ 1835, Vinal v. Burrill, 16 Pick. 401, 407 (account stated; to prove its contents, the account delivered, and not the books from which it was taken, is the original); 1898, Missouri, P. R. Co. v. Palmer, 55 Nebr. 559, 76 N. W. 169 (plaintiff suing for medical expenses; physician's bill rendered, treated as original, not his account-books).

⁴ 1817, R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. 116 (C. took a manuscript to a printer, who printed 500 copies as a placard; the defendant came and took away 25 of them; one of the remainder was offered, upon a trial for posting a treasonable proclamation; the rule held not to require the production of the manuscript, because the defendant "adopted the printing," and thus the printed placards became the originals); 1820, R. v. Hunt, 3 B. & Ald 566, 568, 572 (seditious resolutions read at a meeting; a copy had been given to the witness by the defendant at the time as representing what was to be read, and the witness testified that they were read as in the copy; the copy held sufficient as an original for the purpose).

⁵ 1887, Comer v. Comer, 120 Ill. 420, 430, 11 N. E. 848 (copy of letter; copy attached to contract and made a part of it becomes an original). So for a letter-press copy: ante, § 1234, note 3.

Compare the Doctrine of § 1242, post.

§ 1236. (3) Copy made an Original by the Substantive Law applicable; (a) Telegraphic Dispatches. Of two or more documents, copied one from another, the substantive law of property, contracts, crimes, or torts, may indicate a specific one as the material one under the issue. In that case, it is immaterial whether or not the one thus indicated was, when first made, a "copy" from another; it must be accounted for. The principle is essentially the same as in the foregoing class of cases; the difference is merely that here it cannot be told which document is the writing to be produced, until some point of substantive law has been determined; when that is determined, it immediately indicates the document to which the present rule of evidence applies. Since the difficulty is raised and is determined solely by the substantive law, it is not necessary here to review all the various instances; it will suffice merely to indicate the bearings of the question in the cases of chief difficulty and commonest occurrence.

(a) Whether, in proving the terms of a telegram, the dispatch sent or the dispatch delivered and received is the one to be accounted for, depends upon the substantive law involved. In an action, for example, by a customer against a broker for falsely reporting his bankruptcy to a third person, the dispatch sent would be the one to be proved; but in an action against a telegraph company by an addressee for delayed delivery, the dispatch delivered would be the material one; while in an action by an offeree against an offeror in which the acceptance of the offer is denied, the solution would depend on the rule in force as to the necessity of receipt of acceptance by the offeror; and in certain other actions both the sent and the received dispatches would have to be accounted for. These discriminations are accepted by most Courts, though in many rulings the grounds for decision are left obscure.¹

¹ Eng.: 1887, R. v. Regan, 16 Cox Cr. 203 (to prove a telegram sent by the accused, the writing handed to the telegraph office, not the copy received, is the original); N. Br.: St. 1881, c. 14, § 2 ("secondary evidence" may be given of a telegram "sent to the opposite party or shown to be in his possession" after the usual notice and failure to produce); N. Sc.: Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 30 ("as proof of the contents of the original telegraphic message" the party may introduce "the message received by him from the telegraph office," on ten days' notice to the opponent, and provided he "proves that it was received at the telegraph office of the place to which it purports to be addressed"); Ont.: 1859, Kinghorn v. Tel. Co., 18 U. C. Q. B. 60, 66 (action for failure to deliver telegram; question whether the dispatches satisfied the statute of frauds; for this purpose the dispatch as handed to the operator was considered); Ala.: 1879, Whilden v. Bank, 64 Ala. 1, 13, 30 (action on promise to pay bill of exchange; to prove telegrams sent to the defendant, the originals on file at the sending office were produced; allowed, the delivered message being out of the jurisdiction; question reserved, as to which was the original); 1884, Western Union T. Co. v.

Fatman, 73 id. 285, 292 (action for failure to deliver telegram in season; received telegram admitted as the original); 1884, Pensacola R. Co. v. Schaffer, 76 id. 233, 237 (telegram received, treated as secondary, the message being by one who delayed performance of contract); Ga.: 1893, Conyers v. P. T. C. Co., 92 Ga. 619, 622, 19 S. E. 253 (action for failure to deliver with diligence; delivered message the original); 1893, Western Union T. Co. v. Bates, 93 id. 352, 355, 20 S. E. 639 (same as the Fatman case, supra); 1894, Western U. Tel. Co. v. Blance, 94 id. 431, 19 S. E. 255 (action for failure to deliver with diligence; delivered paper the original); Ill.: 1861, Matteson v. Noyes, 25 Ill. 591 (assumpsit; dispatch sent treated as the original, and dispatch received as a copy); 1871, Morgan v. People, 59 id. 58, 61 (party telegraphing the sheriff to stop a sale; dispatch received is the original); 1888, Anheuser-Busch B. Ass'n v. Hutmacher, 127 id. 652, 657, 21 N. E. 626 (assumpsit for services; telegrams sent by defendant to plaintiff; delivered dispatch held the original); Ind.: 1874, Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hopkins, 49 Ind. 223, 227 (damages for failure to transmit message; dispatch handed to the operator treated as the original); 1888, § 1237. Same: (b) Printed Matter. If a contributor sues a magazine for an article accepted but not paid for, the manuscript accepted is the document to which the rule applies. If a person whose interview has been published in a newspaper is sued for libel, the words uttered are the thing to be proved, though the printed words would equally be provable if the printing was authorized by the defendant.¹ If the libel was charged as published in a newspaper or other printing of which multiple numbers existed, the number charged would in theory be the document to be proved,² though it would seem (on the principle of § 1234, ante), that the production of any other number printed from the same type-setting would satisfy the rule.³ In this connection, there may also be involved the principles of § 1243, post, Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Stockwell, 118 id. 98, 102, 20 N. E. 650 (that telegrams were sent by a conductor; oral testimony allowed, since it did not appear that the telegrams were in writing); Id.: 1888, Riordan v. Guggerty, 74 Ia. 688, 693, 39 N. W. 107 (whether defendant sent a telegram; copy made at the receiving office, admitted, the sent document being shown lost); Id.: 1880, Smith v. Easton, 54 Md. 138, 145 (whether a contract was made by telegraph; the promisor's telegram sent to the telegraph office, held the original, and here held not sufficiently authenticated); Mass.: 1895, Nickerson v. Spindell, 164 Mass. 25, 41 N. E. 107 (addressee's dispatch the original, unless a rule of law makes sender's dispatch binding); Minn.: 1884, Wilson v. R. Co., 31 Minn. 481, 18 N. W. 291 (to prove a hiring by telegraph, the dispatch received is the original; on proof of its loss, oral testimony of its contents is admissible); 1890, Nichols v. Howe, 43 id. 181, 45 N. W. 14 (contract by telegraph; production of the telegram required); Miss.: 1859, Williams v. Brickell, 37 Miss. 682, 686 (hiring by telegraph; plaintiff must produce the dispatch received); N. H.: 1869, Howley v. Whipple, 48 N. H. 487 (to show that J. G. had sent a telegram from Montreal, held, the dispatch as handed for transmission in Montreal was the original); N. Y.: 1883, Oregon S. Co. v. Otis, 14 Abb. N. C. 388, 100 N. Y. 446, 453, 3 N. E. 485 (contract said to be made by the defendant as agent for the plaintiff; the "original message" said to be the primary evidence; opinion obscure); S. D.: 1899, Western Twine Co. v. Wright, 11 S. D. 521, 78 N. W. 942 (contract of warranty; received dispatch from promisor, admitted for promisee, after evidence that telegraph company's rules required the destruction of originals after six months); 1902, Distad v. Shanklin, 15 id. 507, 90 N. W. 151 (breach of contract; sender's copy admitted, the original having been destroyed by the telegraph company); Tex.: 1887, Prather v. Wilkins, 68 Tex. 187, 4 S. W. 252 (no discrimination made on this point); U. S.: 1894, U. S. v. Dunbar, 60 Fed. 75 (admissions of contents of a telegram, received); 1895, Dunbar v. U. S., 156 U. S. 185, 196 (telegram received by B. and admitted by the defendant to have been sent by him, received); Vt.: 1856, Durkee v. R. Co., 29 Vt. 127, 140 (action for commissions in raising loan for the defendant; to prove the contract, telegrams were involved; Redfield, C. J.: "It depends upon which party is responsible for the transmission across the line, or in other words whose agent the telegraph is"; where the received dispatch is the legally material document, it must be accounted for; a recorded copy of it would "ordinarily" be preferable to mere recollection; and the message as handed in by the sender "perhaps" might also serve as a copy; but "where the party to whom the communication is made is to take the risk of transmission, the message delivered to the operator is the original"; 1877, State v. Hopkins, 50 id. 316, 323, 332 (to show knowledge by communication, the delivered form of a telegram delivered to the defendant was received; to prove the contents of a telegram sent by the defendant, a copy of the delivered form was received, on proof of destruction of the sent original by the telegraph company); Wis.: 1876, Saveland v. Green, 40 Wis. 431, 440 (contract by telegraph; received message here the original, under the law of contracts); 1882, Randall v. N. W. Tel. Co., 54 id. 140, 143, 11 N. W. 419 (undecided).

For authentication of telegrams, see post, § 2154.

¹ 1824, Adams v. Kelly, Ry. & Mo. 157 (libel; the defendant had told the matter to a reporter, who had taken it in writing, and it had then been published by a newspaper, which was the libel charged; held, that the newspaper statement must be shown to be the same as that which the defendant made to the reporter, and therefore the writing became an original to be produced; here the words as printed had to be shown to be authorized by the defendant).

² 1835, Johnson v. Morgan, 7 A. & E. 233 (libel by a song; the particular copy whose publication was alleged had been lost; and this showing was held requisite before other copies could be resorted to); 1847, McGrath v. Cox, 3 U. C. Q. B. 332, 337 (Robinson, C. J.: "The plaintiff [in libel], as I conceive, must be looked upon always as prosecuting for the inquiry arising from publishing some one certain libel to which particular act of publication his cause of action is confined").

³ Thus the preceding two cases would seem to be unsound. Compare the cases cited ante, § 1234.

as well as of Authentication (post, § 2150) and of Identity (ante, §§ 415, 440).

§ 1238. Same: (c) Wills and Letters of Administration. (1) At common law, the Ecclesiastical Court had jurisdiction to administer personalty and to adjudicate wills of personalty, but not to adjudicate wills of realty. Hence, a will of personalty, when probated, became a part of that Court's records, but a will of realty remained, even after probate, merely a deed taking effect after death.¹ It followed that a will of personalty need not be produced, but could be proved by the Court record or a copy of it, while a will of realty must be produced or accounted for.² Modern legislation has given Probate Courts jurisdiction over both kinds of wills; so that this distinction no longer exists; but the statutes dealing with the matter provide sometimes that the will itself, and not merely the record or a copy of it, may be required by the Court to be produced or accounted for (ante, § 1215, post, § 1658). (2) The Ecclesiastical Court's grant of letters testamentary to an executor of a will over which it had jurisdiction, or of letters of administration on intestate personalty, was a judicial act constituted by the record; so that the letters themselves, i. e. the credentials given to the representative, were merely a copy of the judicial record; hence, in proving such an appointment, the Court record became the document to be proved, and for this purpose a certified copy of the record would suffice, without producing the letters, which were themselves legally only a copy of the record.³ This also has been expressly regulated by modern statutes (ante, § 1215, post, § 1658).

§ 1239. Same: (d) Government Land-Grants, Land-Certificates, and Land-Patents; Mining Rights; Recorded Private Deeds. (1) An ordinary deed by a private party is itself the effective instrument of transfer, even under legis-

¹ 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 71 ("The probate of a will is good evidence as to the personal estate, and they are the records of that Court, and therefore a copy of them under the seal of that Court must be good evidence. . . . [But for real estate] he must have the original will, and not the probate only, for where the original is in being, the copy is no evidence, and the probate is no more than a true copy, under the seal of the Court, of a private instrument").

² 1695, Newport's Case, Skin. 431 (a copy of the record of the Ecclesiastical Court was received to show the contents of a will of personalty; "the act of the Court is the original, and the will is proved by the act of the Court, . . . and so a copy of the act of the Court is sufficient"); 1696, R. v. Haines, ib. 583 ("A copy of a probate of a will where the Court has jurisdiction is good, because the probate itself in such case is an original act of the Court"); 1837, Doe v. Mew, 7 A. & E. 240, 253 (the will with a memorandum of the surrogate that the executor had proved the will and probate been sealed, admitted irrespective of the probate, itself). Contra: 1805, Jackson v. Lucett, 2 Cai. 363, 367, semble (record of judge of probate is secondary).

VOL. II. — 31

³ 1822, Plumer, M. B., in Cox v. Allingham, Jac. 514 ("The thing which it is required to prove is to whom the Ecclesiastical Court has granted the power of administering the property. The ordinary evidence is the probate; which is a copy of the will, with a certificate under the seal of the Court that probate has been granted to the executor. It is only the act of the Ecclesiastical Court that is to be proved. Now we have here the original book containing the entry of the act of the Court. The probate is only a copy of this act; this is the original and therefore the primary evidence"). Accord: 1807, Elden v. Keddell, 8 East 187; 1826, Lane v. Clark, 1 Mo. 658; 1834, Farnsworth v. Briggs, 6 N. H. 561 (record of the Court as to granting administration is the original, of which the letters are only a copy); 1830, Jackson v. Robinson, 4 Wend. 436, 442 (records of Probate Court are the original, and therefore copies of them are receivable without showing the loss of the letters of administration); 1830, Hoskins v. Miller, 2 Dev. 360; 1831, Browning v. Huff, 2 Bail. 174, 179 (action by administrator; the ordinary's record-book sufficient, for the letter of administration is merely a certificate that the order exists).

lation making its public registration an additionally necessary element of validity. It has already been seen that, even where by common-law principles or by express statute the deed's contents may be proved by the registry or a copy of it, still the present rule is always thought of as applying to the deed itself and its production is merely excused on the ground that it is practically unavailable, by reason of its proved loss or its possession by another or the inconvenience involved in requiring it (ante, § 1224). As to other deeds of transfer than Government land-grants, it is generally accepted that the party's deed of conveyance is the constitutive document (i. e. the original to be accounted for), and that the official register is merely a copy of that original,¹ though in transfers of mining-rights there occur certain partial modifications of this principle² and the Torrens system of title-registration may involve decided alterations of this.³

(2) But where the Government itself makes the grant of land, and not merely furnishes an office for registering the grants of private persons, the question arises whether the constitutive document of grant (and therefore the document to be produced or accounted for) is the Government's own entry or record of the grant, or is the certificate, patent, testimonio, expediente, or other document delivered to the grantee by the Government as his muniment of title. Herein is involved a question of property-law, not of evidence. The rule of evidence is easily applied, as soon as the question of property-law is answered. If the first alternative above is taken, the original and constitutive document being the Government record, not removable from official custody, it may be proved by a copy therefrom (ante, § 1218) without regard to the whereabouts of the grantee's certificate, which is thus merely a copy of the official book. If, on the contrary, the latter alternative above is taken, the grantee's patent, certificate, or other document, is the original, and the Government book is merely a copy of it, so that the necessity of producing or accounting for the grantee's document depends upon the rule of the particular jurisdiction adopted for the ordinary case of a recorded conveyance (ante, § 1225). The answer to this question of property-law has differed in different jurisdictions, and it would be without the present purview to examine the reasons for this variance in the results. It is enough to note that there are three different classes of Government grants involved, namely, the ordinary land-grants of the Federal and State Governments (having several sub-varieties — "patent," "scrip," "location," etc.), the land-grants of the Spanish Government (affecting chiefly titles in Louisiana,

¹ 1826, Ewing, C. J., in Fox v. Lambson, 8 N. J. L. 275, 280 (" [The counsel] assimilates it to a common-law record, as for example of a judgment, and because such a record would be evidence he argued that the entry in question was so. But there is no analogy. The common-law record is in itself the original and supposes no other in existence. The record or registry of a deed or other instrument of writing is but a copy and presupposes an original"). Accord: 1886, Brown v. Griffith, 70 Cal.

14, 16; see post, § 2456, where the subject is treated from the point of view of the parol evidence rule.

² 1859, McGarrity v. Byington, 12 Cal. 426, 430 (same as next case); 1860, Atwood v. Fricot, 17 id. 37, 42 (record of transfer of mining-right; held an original, as showing compliance with regulations, but secondary to the document and fact of transfer); 1864, St. John v. Kidd, 26 id. 263, 270, semble (same).

³ See the statutes cited ante, § 1225.

Missouri, and Texas), and the land-grants of the Mexican Government (affecting chiefly titles in Arizona, California, New Mexico, and Texas).⁴

* Besides the following statutes and precedents directly dealing with the subject, other statutes and decisions more or less connected will be found elsewhere; (1) on letters, etc., filed in a public office (ante, § 1219, post, § 1680); (2) on recorded conveyances in general (ante, § 1225, post, § 1651); (3) on certain record-books of the land-office (post, § 1659); (4) on judicial records (ante, § 1215, post, §§ 1660, 1681); (5) on official certificates and returns (post, §§ 1672, 1674); (6) on preferred copies of records (post, § 1269); Alabama: Code 1896, § 1812 (patents of the United States or any State are admitted "without further proof"); § 1813 (land-office certificates, admissible; register's certified copy of land-office documents in this State are prima facie evidence of the facts contained therein); 1841, Hines v. Greenlee, 3 Ala. 73, 75 (certified copy of U. S. record of land-patent, received without accounting for the first patent issued; Ormond, J.: "The patent [issued to patentee] is not the title, but merely evidence; . . . [the record] is a public act, and therefore a second patent which may issue is not a copy of the first, but is rather a republication of the original"); 1872, Jones v. Walker, 47 id. 175, 178, 183 (deed of Federal government-land to plaintiff, filed at the land-office; production required); 1888, Woodstock Iron Co. v. Roberts, 87 id. 436, 438, 6 So. 349 (transcripts of land-patents; Jones v. Walker repudiated, since the document is in official files; Hines v. Greenlee followed; the original is the public record and of course cannot be produced); 1889, Ross v. Goodwin, 88 id. 390, 391, 396, 6 So. 682 (same); 1893, Beasley v. Clarke, 102 id. 254, 255, 14 So. 744 (same); 1895, Holmes v. State, 108 id. 24, 26, 18 So. 529 (same, for a letter of cancellation of entry); 1902, Hammond v. Blue, 132 id. 337, 31 So. 357 (U. S. land-patent or a certified copy is preferred to a tract book); Alaska: Civ. C. 1900, § 110 (like Or. Annot. C. § 3039); Arkansas: Stats. 1894, § 2879 (certified copy, by register or receiver of land-office of the State, of entries in books or of papers filed, admissible); § 724 (recorder's certified copy of recorded deed of commissioner of State lands, admissible); 1848, Finley v. Woodruff, 8 Ark. 323, 342 (State land-office claim-entries, etc., are primary, so that copies are receivable); 1892, Dawson v. Parham, 55 id. 286, 290, 18 S. W. 48 (entries of purchase in swamp-land-office, receivable); 1893, Steward v. Scott, 57 id. 153, 158, 20 S. W. 1088 (land-office entry, semble, held secondary to the certificate therefrom in showing title); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1925 ("A certificate of purchase or of location of any lands in this State, issued or made in pursuance of any law of the United States or of this State, is primary evidence that the holder or assignee of such certificate is the owner of the land described therein"; for the invalid amendment, see ante, § 488); 1859, Gregory v. McPherson, 13 Cal. 562, 572, 574 (the grant of land by a Mexican governor, forming part of the expediente or whole record of granting, is the original, of which the copy or certificate to the grantee is only a copy; a proof of the former may therefore be made without accounting for the latter; Mexican grant on file in U. S. Surveyor-general's office; examined copy allowed, there being an inability to remove original from office); 1860, Natoma W. & M. Co. v. Clarkin, 14 id. 544, 549 (Mexican grant on file in U. S. Surveyor-general's office; production not required, the presence of the original there being shown, and certified copy under the statute being used); 1861, Soto v. Kroder, 19 id. 87, 94 (Mexican grant on file in Surveyor-general's office; in using an examined copy at common law, the legal impossibility of taking the original from the file must be shown; but if under the statute a certified copy is used, the original need not thus be expressly accounted for); 1867, Donner v. Palmer, 31 id. 500, 509 (same as Gregory v. McPherson, for Alcalde's book of grants); 1874, Sill v. Reese, 47 id. 294, 348 (approving Donner v. Palmer); 1877, Bixby v. Bent, 51 id. 590 (translation only, without original or certified copy, of Mexican grant on file in land-office, excluded); 1891, Eltzroth v. Ryan, 89 id. 135, 139, 26 Pac. 647 (U. S. land-patent; certified copy from land-office receivable, without accounting for patentee's certificate); Colorado: Annot. Stats. 1891, § 1748 (U. S. land-office register's certificate of entry on purchase, admissible, but a patent is to be paramount title); § 1756 (recorded patent provable by copy like recorded deed); St. 1891, p. 274, § 2 (certified copy of recorded deed of State land by Governor, admissible); Florida: 1886, Liddon v. Hodnett, 22 Fla. 442 (certified copies of patents from U. S. general land-office, admitted); 1894, Sullivan v. Richardsou, 33 id. 1, 98, 14 So. 692 (early Spanish grant; the grantee's document, on the facts, treated as an original, and admissible); Georgia: Code 1895, § 5674 (party's oath that original grant is "not in his power or possession and that he knows not where it is," sufficient); 1878, Brown v. Driggers, 60 Ga. 114, 115; 62 id. 354, 355 (homestead plat given to party is the original, as against a certified copy); Hawaii: Civil Laws 1897, § 1399 (in proving "any grant of land, lease, or other conveyance of any Government land or real estate, it shall not be necessary to produce the original patent, grant, lease or conveyance," but a certified copy under the hand and official seal of the Minister suffices); Idaho: Rev. St. 1887, § 5983 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1925); Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 19, § 10 (acced, etc., affecting land by trustees of Illinois and Michigan canal or canal commissioners, provable by certified copy of record); § 11 (books and entries of sale by the same, provable by certified copy under official seal of secretary of commissioners); c. 30, § 41 (St. 1879, May 29) (on affidavit by party or agent that "the required U. S. patent conveying or concerning the title to the lands" in question "is lost, or not in the power of the party wishing to use it on such trial of any such case, and that to the best of his knowledge said patent was not in-

§ 1240. Same: (e) Tax-lists, Ballots, Notarial Acts, and Sundry Documents. Similar questions, depending wholly on some principle in another branch of

entionally destroyed, or lost, or in any manner disposed of for the purpose of introducing a copy thereof in place of the original," and if the original has been recorded with the county recorder, then the record or recorder's certified copy is admissible); c. 51, § 20 (U. S. land-office register's certificate of entry on purchase of any tract of land in his district, admissible); § 21 (land-patent to be paramount title than register's certificate); § 22 (where State land has been sold and Governor's patent issued, and "said patent has been or shall purport to be recorded" in the county "and said patent shall be lost, or out of the power of the party desiring to use the same to produce in evidence," recorder's certified copy is admissible to prove issuance and contents of patent; rule to apply to U. S. land patents and certain canal deeds); § 23 (certified copy by custodian of "book and entries" of sale of State lands, admissible; certificate of purchase or issuance of patent admissible, but patent is to be paramount title; custodian's certified copy of "books and entries" of sales of swamp and overflowed lands, admissible; officer's certificate of sale or entry thereof and execution of deed therefor, admissible in place of deed, "if the original deed be lost, or it be out of the power of the party wishing to use the same to produce it in evidence, and such original deed has never been recorded"; and whenever both the deed is lost, etc., and the books of sale, etc., "have also been lost or destroyed," and a proper return of such sales has been made to the auditor of public accounts, the auditor's certified copy under official seal of such return is admissible); c. 122, § 265 (recorded State patent for school lands, provable by certified copy); § 266 ("duplicate copies" of such certificates of purchase and patents, obtained after affidavit of "loss or destruction of the originals," admissible); 1844, Graves v. Bruen, 6 Ill. 167, 172 (an auditor's patent to public land; copy from the record in case of loss not receivable; duplicate patent necessary); 1855, Lane v. Bommelmann, 17 id. 95 (land-patent; original need not be produced because a public record); 1861, Lee v. Getty, 26 id. 76, 80 (land-office record or recorded paper; provable by exemplification); 1868, Huls v. Buntin, 47 id. 396, 397 (patent lost; certified copies of the land-office books of entry, admissible); 1883, Wilcox v. Jackson, 109 id. 261, 265, ("half-breed scrip" and locations under it); 1886, Gormley v. Uthe, 116 id. 643, 649, 7 N. E. 73; (land-office records proved by exemplified copy); Indiana: Rev. St. 1897, §§ 475, 477, 481 (records of U. S. land-office or office for sale of Canal or Michigan road lands, provable by certified copies by keeper or State Secretary or auditor); § 482 (State or Federal patents of Indiana land, and record thereof, and certified copies, admissible); 1838, Smith v. Mosier, 5 Blackf. 51, 53 (U. S. land-office patents; original must be accounted for; affidavit filed in local land-office, not being removable, copy admissible); 1842, Rawley v. Doe, 6 id. 143 (first point of preceding case followed); 1847, Stephenson v. Doe, 8 id. 508, 512 (same; but doubting for the case of a non-patentee offering the recorded copy); Iowa: Code 1897, § 4633 (U. S. land-patents recorded in county, provable by recorder's certified copy); 1853, Stone v. McMahan, 4 Greene 72 (land-office receiver's duplicate receipt is an original under the statute); 1858, Curtis v. Hunting, 6 Ia. 536 (recorded land-patent; original required); 1880, Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Lewis, 53 id. 101, 107, 4 N. W. 842 (certified copies of land-office selections, admitted); Kansas: Gen. St. 1897, c. 97, § 9 (certified copy, by register or receiver having custody, of papers lawfully deposited with U. S. land-office in the State and of official communication thereto from any Federal department, admissible like the original); § 13 (certified copies under official seal by register of deeds of U. S. land-patents recorded in county, admissible); Louisiana: Rev. L. 1897, § 1445 (recorded land patent or register's certificate, or receiver's receipt, by officers of Louisiana or of general Government, provable by recorder's certified copy; provided the party "make affidavit that the original of such patent or certificate is not in his possession or under his control," and opponent may dispute genuineness); 1823, Roman v. Smith, 1 Mart. n. s. 473 (whether the Spanish Governor's decreto or his grant was an original delivered to the grantee, or whether the official record of it was the original); 1836, Montreuil v. Pierre, 9 La. 356, 371 (Spanish notary's original, register, and traslado, examined); 1836, Vidal v. Duplantier, ib. 525 (Spanish testimonio); 1841, Lavergne v. Elkins, 17 id. 220 (Spanish land-grant); 1859, Beauvais v. Wall, 14 La. An. 199 (title-deeds filed in land-office; production not required); Maryland: Pub. Gen. L. 1888, Art. 35, § 52 (land-office commissioner's certified copy under seal of any patent, certificate, entry in book deposited, or paper filed, admissible); § 53 (same for certificate in land-office with surveyor's notes, etc.; admissible "as if it were the original paper and proved to be" in the surveyor's writing and the surveyor proved dead); Michigan: Comp. L. 1897, § 8984 (land-patent provable by certified copy of record); § 10197 (documents, etc., filed or recorded in U. S. land-office in Michigan, provable by register's or receiver's certified copy); § 1270 (same for Secretary of State's certified copy under seal of Federal approval of land selections); § 1377 (same for his copy of land-patents for internal improvements); 1856, Lacey v. Davis, 4 Mich. 140, 150 (certified copy of U. S. land-patent, received where the original was lost); 1876, Bradley v. Silsbee, 33 id. 328 (land-patents recorded in office of Secretary of State; original required, because not authorized to be so recorded); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1894, § 3963 (land-office record of patents, etc., or certified copy, admissible); § 5753 (receipt or certificate of register or receiver of any U. S. land-office as to entry, purchase, or location, to be evidence of title); § 5754 (certificate of register or receiver the law, are to be noticed in various directions. For example, whether the tax list or assessment-roll as drawn up by the assessor or as placed in the hands of any U. S. land-office within this State, as to entry under homestead, etc., laws, to be prima facie evidence of ownership); § 5756 (U. S. patents of land in this State, or duplicates from U. S. general land-office, recorded in county registry of deeds, provable by record or certified copy by register, like other conveyances of realty); § 5758 (survey-plats, provable by certified copy by register of land-office); Mississippi: Annot. Code 1892, § 1782 (certificates issued by authorized person, in pursuance of Act of Congress, founded on warrant, etc., from U. S., of land in this State, admissible); § 1784 (copies from books of land-entries "kept in any land-office in this State, or in the office of the Secretary of State, or land-commissioner, or other public office," certified by the officer having charge, admissible like the original certificate or entry); 1838, Doe v. M'Caleb, 2 How. Miss. 756, 767 (land-office certificate; original must be accounted for); 1839, Wooldridge v. Wilkins, 3 id. 360, 367 (land-patent at registry must be produced, by subpoena if necessary; but entries in the registry-books, provable by copy); 1846, Sessions v. Reynolds, 7 Sm. & M. 130, 152 (land-office certificate; copy allowed); 1896, Boddie v. Pardee, 74 Miss. 13, 20 So. 1 (as between the original certificate of entry of public land and a certified copy of the book of entries, there is under Code §§ 1782-1784 no preference for the former; both being merely copies of the entry which determines the title); Missouri: Rev. St. 1899, § 3104 (confirmations before commissioners of land claims or recorder of land titles, provable by certified copy by recorder or by lawful custodian); § 3105 (certificate of record of land-titles for New Madrid earthquake sufferers, and "all other books and papers" required to be kept in his office, provable by his certified copy); § 3107 (grants, etc., in "Livre Terrein," and other French or Spanish records and evidences of title lawfully deposited with recorder of land-titles, provable by his certified copy); § 3121 (letters from U. S. land department, land commissioner's lists of land, etc., recorded by register of lands, provable by register's certified copy); § 3122 (certain ancient archives of French or Spanish Government, affecting land-titles, and deposited with St. Louis recorder, provable by certified copy); § 8248 (certified copy of record swamp-land-patent, admissible); § 9078 (county recorder's certified copy under official seal of recorded land-patents, admissible); 1838, Waldo v. Russell, 5 Mo. 387, 394 (land-patent, proved by copy); 1858, Barton v. Murrain, 27 id. 235, 237 (patent in land-office, provable by certified copy); 1879, Avery v. Adams, 69 id. 603, 604 (land-office patent by certified copy; original need not be accounted for); Montana: C. C. P. 1895, § 3213 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1925); Nebraska: Comp. St. 1899, § 4133 (certificates, patents, etc., of U. S. land-office, locally recorded, provable by certified copy of register of deeds); § 4155 (same for county clerk's copy of certain patents); § 5985 (certificate of land-office receiver as to sale to individual, admissible if duplicate receipt is lost or destroyed; but is not proof of title against the holder of actual patent); New York: 1832, Peck v. Farrington, 9 Wend. 44 (original Federal patent need not be produced); Ohio: Rev. St. 1898, § 4115 (auditor's certified copy of State deed, admissible if the deed is "lost or destroyed by accident"); Oklahoma: Stats. 1893, § 4273 ("The usual duplicate receipt of the receiver of any land-office," or, if that be lost or destroyed or beyond the reach of the party, the receiver's certificate that the books of office show a sale, is proof "equivalent to a patent against all but the holder of an actual patent"); § 4274 (certified copy, by register or receiver of U. S. land-office in this Territory, of papers lawfully there deposited and of official communication there received from any department of U. S. Government, admissible); Oregon: Code 1892, § 3039 (record or certified transcript of duly recorded land-patent, admissible like the original); Pennsylvania: St. 1833, P. & L. Dig. Evid. 33 (record of patents for donation lands, receivable); St. 1828, ib. Evid. 30 (deeds duly recorded in the land-office, though not in the proper county, provable by exemplification); 1835, DeFrance v. Stricker, 4 Watts 327, 328 (land-patent; copy of the register "in a contest with a party not claiming under the original," receivable); Tennessee: 1813, Duncan v. Blair, 2 Overt. 213 (certified copy of warrant containing land entry; the recorded entry, not the party's location for the entry, is the original); 1899, State v. Cooper, — Tenn. Ch. —, 53 S. W. 391 (certificate of survey of land-grant, not required to be produced; affidavit of loss required, but not strictly dealt with; affidavit of a single party suffices; the opinion contains a detailed history of the land-grant laws in Tennessee); Texas: all the ensuing cases, except the last, deal with the Spanish testimonio and related documents; 1844, Smith v. Townsend, Dallam 569 (leading case); 1848, Honston v. Perry, 3 Tex. 390, 393; 5 id. 462, 464; 1851, Lewis v. San Antonio, 7 id. 288, 311; 1851, Herndon v. Casiano, ib. 322, 332; 1851, Paschal v. Perez, ib. 348 (leading case); 1852, Titus v. Kimbro, 8 id. 210, 212 (leading case); 1852, Hubert v. Bartlett, 9 id. 97, 102; 1853, Wheeler v. Moody, ib. 372, 375; 1856, Byrne v. Fagan, 16 id. 391, 398; 1859, Nicholson v. Horton, 23 id. 47; 1860, Word v. McKinney, 25 id. 258, 268; 1876, Blythe v. Houston, 46 id. 65, 77; 1877, State v. Cardinas, 47 id. 250, 286, 290; 1878, Gainer v. Cotton, 49 id. 101, 114; 1883, Houston v. Blythe, 60 id. 506, 513; 1886, Ney v. Mumme, 66 id. 268, 17 S. W. 407 (land-patent); United States: 1831, Doe v. Winn, 5 Pet. 233, 241 (exemplification under Georgia State seal of land-patent there recorded, admitted; Johnson, J., diss.; see quotation ante, § 1224); 1833, U. S. v. Percheman, 7 id. 51, 78, 84 (certified copy of Spanish land-grant, receivable, because the original decree is not issued but retained; the "copy is, in contemplation of law, an original"); 1833, Minor v. Tillotson, ib.

of the collector, is the original to be proved, depends on the theory of tax-law.¹ Whether the ballots cast at an election, or the certificate of the election-officers, is to be regarded as the proper object of proof in establishing the result of an election, involves the theory of election-law.² The traditional doctrine of notarial acts is that the notary's book-entry is the original act, and that hence the protest-copy first sent need not be produced.³ In 99 (land-grant in Louisiana; grant to patentee the original to be accounted for); 1840, U. S. v. Wiggins, 14 id. 334, 345 (certified copy of Spanish land-grant in Florida, received without accounting for the original); 1858, U. S. v. Sutter, 21 How. 170, 174 (Mexican land-grant in California; official record apparently treated as a copy; opinion obscure); 1860, U. S. v. Castro, 24 id. 346, 349 ("When therefore a party claims title to lands in California under a Mexican grant, the general rule is that the grant must be found in the proper office among the public archives; this is the highest and best evidence"; and accordingly the existence and loss of this public record must be shown; "written documentary evidence, produced by a claimant from a private receptacle" is not equivalent); 1902, Carr Land & L. S. Co. v. U. S., 55 C. C. A. 433, 118 Fed. 821 (a tract book prepared by the commissioner of the general land-office to replace the burned local records, and proved by the local register to be used as such, is not a copy which must be certified by the commissioner under U. S. Rev. St. § 2469); Utah: Rev. St. 1898, § 3398 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1925); Virginia: 1796, Lee v. Tapscott, 2 Wash. 276 (attested copy of land-patent recorded in County Court, admitted, without production of land-register or other books, here the date being old and possession having followed; Lyons, J., diss.); Washington: 1860, Ward v. Moorey, 1 Wash. Terr. n. s. 104 (land-office papers, proved by certified copies); Wisconsin: Stats. 1898, § 4151 (any record, etc., of purchase or entry of land in U. S. general land-office or land-office located in this State, provable by certified copy by secretary of the interior, commissioner of the general land-office, or register of the land-office "respectively, having the custody thereof"); § 4151 a (certified copy of document, etc., lawfully kept in office of commissioners of public lands in this State, admissible); § 4152 (lists of land certified as conveyed to the State by the President, the head of any department of the U. S. Government, the commissioner of the general land-office, or "any other officer of the Government," admissible); § 4165 (receiver's certificate of purchase of public lands, and official certificate of entry, etc., by any register or receiver, admissible to show title); Wyoming: Stats. 1890, c. 76, § 3 (if the certificate of purchase or payment by any land-office receiver be "lost or destroyed or beyond the reach of the holder, secondary evidence of its contents is proof of title to the lands therein described, equivalent to a patent against all, except the United States or a holder of a patent from the United States").

¹ See the following examples: 1836, Coman v. State, 4 Blackf. 241, 243 (assessment-roll is the original, as against the collector's transcript); 1884, Standard Oil Co. v. Bretz, 98 Ind. 231, 235 (tax-list duplicate; "each of the lists has all the force and effect of an original instrument"); 1886, Clayton v. Rhem, 67 Tex. 52, 2 S. W. 45 (assessment-roll); 1885, Battiu v. Woods, 27 W. Va. 58, 63, 72 (official list of lands redeemed from tax-sales; tax-receipts not held originals; Johnson, P., diss.). For the admissibility of the assessor's books, see post, § 1640. For testimony to the fact of an entry in such books, see post, § 1244.

Compare the statutes allowing certified copies (post, § 1680), and the parol evidence rule (post, § 2427).

² 1898, Pusch v. Brady, — Ariz. —, 53 Pac. 176 (oral testimony to contents of ballots not produced, not admissible); 1866, Wheat v. Ragsdale, 27 Ind. 191, 205 (ballot must be produced, if it is in existence and can be identified; otherwise, the voter may be asked for whom he voted; "we are aware that this course of examination would most probably be of but little practical importance, as but few voters would likely be able to identify their ticket; but, when insisted upon, it would be the proper course of examination, as being in conformity with the strict rules of evidence"); 1878, Reynolds v. State, 61 id. 392, 416, 424 (when preserved according to law, production required; certificate of canvassers is not sufficient, nor oral testimony of voters, as a substitute); 1892, Crabb v. Orth, 133 id. 11, 32 N. E. 711 (that the witness, a minor, voted for A; production of ballots unnecessary); 1880, Warren v. McDonald, 32 La. An. 987, 990; 1869, Sinks v. Reese, 19 Oh. St. 306, 319 (testimony by candidate and others that by counting ballots he had found errors in the returns; ballots, poll-book, and tally-sheet, required to be produced). For the questions whether the results shown by the ballots are to override the official canvass, or whether the official canvass may be disputed by testimony of other persons, see post, §§ 1351, 2452. For the question whether a voter may testify orally to his vote, in spite of the parol evidence rule, see post, § 2452.

³ 1851, Geralopulo v. Wieler, 10 C. B. 690, 712 ("the general rule with respect to notarial instruments, that a duplicate made out from the original — or protocol — in the notarial book, is equivalent to an original made out at the time of the entry in the book"; here admitting a duplicate protest made after trial begun, instead of requiring secondary evidence of the one sent abroad at the time); 1851, Phillips v. Poindexter, 18 Ala. 579, 582 (original protest is the entry in notary's book, which is an official book, and therefore a copy of this may be received without accounting for the protest issued

these, and in similar cases depending on some principle of another department of law,⁴ no question of evidence is raised, for the application of the rule of evidence is simple enough when the other principle of law has been decided.

§ 1241. (4) Records, Accounts, etc., as Exclusive Memorials under the Parol Evidence Rule. By the principle of Integration or Parol Evidence (post, § 2425), a particular writing becomes under certain circumstances the exclusive repository of a transaction, superseding all other writings and rendering them legally immaterial. It follows that in proving the transaction this integrated document, or exclusive memorial, is the one, and the only one, to be produced or accounted for; the production of no other will suffice. Here, again, as in the two preceding groups of cases (§§ 1235, 1236), there is no controversy about the present rule of evidence; the rule applies to whatever document is declared by the substantive law to be the one material to the issue, and when the substantive law declares that a specific document is the sole material one and that others are worthless, the rule of production plainly applies to the former. Thus, the problem involved is one of the Parol Evidence rule, not of the present rule. The question arises chiefly in two sorts of cases: (a) The law sometimes requires integration, i. e. makes a certain writing the exclusive memorial. The chief representative type of this class is the judicial record. The question thus arises whether, for example, a clerk's docket-book is the record and may be produced instead of the judgment-book, or whether an original writ is the record in the same sense.¹ (b) By act of the parties an integration may occur, i. e. the transaction may be embodied in a single written memorial, to the exclusion of all others; and then, in proving the transaction, the former must be produced, but the latter cannot be.²

(e) "Whenever the purpose is to establish its Terms."

§ 1242. General Principle; Facts about a Document, other than its Terms, provable without Production. (1) The fundamental notion of the rule re-by him to the parties); 1857, McFarland v. Pico, 8 Cal. 626, 635 (certificate of record of protest equally good with the original). Compare the statutes dealing with the admissibility of the notary's protest (post, § 1675).

In Louisiana, for sales, the notary's record has perhaps a peculiar status: 1902, Hodge v. Palms, 54 C. C. A. 570, 117 Fed. 396 (Louisiana notary's copy of his record of an "act of sale" is a duplicate original; compare the cases cited ante, § 1225).

⁴ 1824, Salte v. Thomas, 3 B. & P. 188 (to show the cause of a commitment to prison, an entry in the prison books, held merely a copy of the warrant of committitur, which was the true original); 1897, Long v. McKissick, 50 S. C. 218, 27 S. E. 636 (the sheriff's sale-book, and not the preliminary memorandum made at the sale); 1826, Catlett v. Ins. Co., 1 Paine C. C. 594, 612 (certified copy of ship's register; register the original); 1888, Lycoming F. I. Co. v. Wright, 60 Vt. 515, 521, 12 Atl. 103 (insurance license; no law requiring a record of it, the license itself is the original); 1886, Singer v. Bennett, 28 W. Va. 16, 22 (original and duplicate of agreement of incorporation filed in separate State offices are both originals).

Compare the statutes admitting certified copies of public records (post, § 1680); the rule for conclusive registers or certificates (post, § 1352); and the parol evidence rule as applied to official documents (post, §§ 2427, 2453).

¹ These questions are dealt with post, § 2450.

² Questions of this sort are dealt with post, §§ 2427, 2429; though occasionally it is difficult to distinguish whether the principle involved is that of Parol Evidence or of § 1235, ante, for example, where it is asked whether a deposit-ticket or a pass-book is the document to be proved in showing a deposit received.

quiring production is that in writings the smallest variation in words may be of importance, and that such errors in regard to words and phrases are more likely to occur than errors in regard to other features of a physical thing (ante, § 1181). Thus the rule applies only to the terms of the document, and not to any other facts about the document. In other words, the rule applies to exclude testimony designed to establish the terms of the document, and requires the document's production instead, but does not apply to exclude testimony which concerns the document without aiming to establish its terms:

1826, Mills, J., in Lamb v. Moberly, 3 T. B. Monr. 179 (allowing proof of the fact of purchase of a note, without production); "We cannot agree . . . that the production of the note was necessary. It could only be held necessary by not attending to the distinction between proving the existence and contents of a note and the sale of a note. Of the former, the note is the better evidence; but of the latter the note furnishes no evidence. . . . The existence of a note is as certainly perceived by the senses or acknowledged in conversation as that of any other article of commerce; and it might as well be urged that before the acknowledgments of a sale of any other article could be given in evidence the article itself must be produced in court in order that the Court might see that it really existed, as that a note thus sold should be produced."

1839, Green, J., in Enloe v. Hall, 1 Humph. 303, 310 (assumpsit for services in printing and publishing advertisements in a newspaper; production of the paper not required): "The work and labor for which this suit is brought was done upon the paper. . . . As well might the tailor be required to produce the coat or the watch-maker the watch as evidence that the work had been performed."

This much is generally accepted; the difficulty arises in applying the principle to specific cases. Testimony about a document cannot go very far without referring to its terms, and the instances in which some other fact about a document is material, and yet its terms are clearly not, are so few that in the other situations the natural tendency of Courts is to lean in favor of requiring production; since production would have to be made sooner or later in proving the terms as a material part of the issue. The line between testifying to terms or contents and testifying to other facts is not only thus difficult to draw in a given case, but its determination tends to become a matter of merely logical subtlety and verbal quibbling. There seems to be no way of invoking in its settlement any broad notion of policy definite enough to be useful in solving a given case. Moreover, apart from a few general classes of instances, the rulings depend generally upon the particular state of facts presented in each case and changing slightly in each instance, so that the rulings are generally of little profit as precedents.

(2) Besides this, the concurrent operation of the principle of Integration, or Parol Evidence (post, § 2429) has frequently to be distinguished. By that rule the oral part of a transaction may be legally annulled and made immaterial; so that though the oral part could be proved, so far as the present principle is concerned, without production, yet by the Integration rule the oral part is declared immaterial and ineffective and cannot be proved in any manner, so that the document becomes the exclusive transaction and must be proved and therefore produced. For example, the fact that a sheriff has served a writ or has read it aloud to the party is a fact separate from the terms of the document, and could therefore be proved without production of the writ, so far as the present principle is concerned; but, so far as the Parol Evidence rule declares that the sheriff's indorsement of service on the writ is the sole memorial of the act, the oral doings become immaterial, and in proving the act, the terms of the writing must be proved, and therefore production is necessary. In the same way, so far as the law does not recognize an oral transfer of land, the terms of the written document may alone be proved; and, so far as the parties to any contract have voluntarily embodied it in a single writing, the writing alone, and no oral matters accompanying it, may be proved. Thus, in these cases, and in many other instances to be noted, the present principle would allow proof of an oral statement without producing a document concerned in it, and the requirement to produce the document is due solely to the operation of the Parol Evidence rule, which forbids the oral matter to be proved at all. The operation of the latter rule should not mislead us to attribute the result to any exception to the present principle or to an inconsistency in the judicial application of it.

(3) For the reason just noted, the controversy that often arises as to who shall produce a contract, is usually dependent in the same way on the Integration (or Parol Evidence) rule, and not on any doubt as to the present principle. For example, A sues B for work done on B's house, and upon the cross-examination of A's witness or upon the examination of B's witness, it is testified that the contract for the work was reduced to writing by the parties, and the question then arises which party shall produce it; for the party whose duty it is to produce it can go no further in his proof of the contract's terms without producing or accounting for it. In form, this is a question under the present rule; in reality, it is not. The question really is, under the Parol Evidence rule, whose duty it is to prove the contract to have been integrated, i. e. reduced to writing; is it the duty of the claimant alleging performance, or of the opponent alleging non-performance? So soon as this question as to the duty to prove the integration is settled, the present rule comes into application without any question, i. e. if it is A's duty to prove the writing, of course it is A who must produce or account for it, and vice versa. This question is therefore dealt with elsewhere (post, § 2447).

§ 1243. Application of the Principle; (1) Oral Utterances accompanying a Document read or delivered; (2) Document as the Subject of Knowledge or Belief. (1) When an oral utterance accompanies a dealing with a document, and assuming that the oral utterance is not forbidden to be proved, by the Parol Evidence rule (as noted in the preceding section), the oral utterance may be proved as a separate fact, without producing the document:

1808, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Smith v. Young, 1 Camp. 439 (proof of a demand, in an action of trover, was oral, the witness stating that he had both orally demanded and also in writing served notice): "I may do an act of this sort doubly. I may make a demand in words and a demand in writing; and both being perfect, either may be proved as evidence of the conversion. If the verbal demand had any reference to the writing, to be sure the writing must be produced; but if they were concurrent and independent, I do not see how adding the latter could supersede the former or vary the mode of proceeding."

1875, Tilton v. Beecher, Abbott's Rep. I, 389: Witness for plaintiff: "[Mr. Tilton had written the story of the whole affair for publication and wanted Mr. Beecher to hear it before publication,] and Mr. Tilton said to Mr. Beecher, 'I will read to you one passage from this statement, and if you can stand that, you can stand any part of it,' and he read to him a passage from that statement, which was about as follows as nearly as I can recollect"; Mr. Evarts, for defendant: "The statement will speak for itself"; Mr. Fullerton, for plaintiff: "What did he read?"; Mr. Evarts: "We want that paper and the part of it that was read, as it appeared in that paper, and it is not competent to recite out of a written paper by oral proposition what the written paper is the best evidence of"; Mr. Fullerton: "I propose to show what communication was made by Mr. Tilton on that occasion to Mr. Beecher; I do not care whether it originated in his own mind, or whether it was read from a paper, printed or written; it makes no difference; what it was that he said to him is what I have a right to"; Judge Neilson: "I think the witness can state what was said to Mr. Beecher, although he stated matter that had been incorporated in writing."

This result is illustrated in a variety of cases.¹

(2) Where a person's knowledge or belief about a document is material, the knowledge or belief may be shown as a fact separate from the document's terms, without producing it.²

§ 1244. Same: (3) Identity of Document; (4) Summary Statement of Tenor of Multifarious Documents; Absence of Entries. (3) Where a document is referred to as identical with or the same as another document, or as helping to identify some transaction or some other physical object, the question is a

¹ 1801, Jacob v. Lindsay, 1 East 460 (to prove a defendant's admission of indebtedness, a witness was allowed to testify that he had taken the account-book to the defendant, gone over the items with him, and heard the defendant admit the receipt of each one; the book could not be produced, being without the required stamp; production held not necessary); 1820, R. v. Hunt, 1 State Tr. n. s. 171, 252 (sedition; resolutions read at a meeting; printed copy verified as correctly giving what was read, allowed without producing the writing actually read); 1820, R. v. Dewhurst, ib. 529, 558 (sedition; resolutions read from a paper; objection of no notice overruled; Bayley, J., "No; that has been decided over and over again; though a man reads from a paper, a person may give an account of what he hears him say"); 1839, Trewhitt v. Lambert, 10 A. & E. 470 (the plaintiff read from a writing, and the defendant assented, not seeing the writing; held, that the oral transaction might be proved); 1869, First Nat'l Bank v. Priest, 50 Ill. 321 (that a cashier, asked for returns of sales, showed the plaintiff an account of sales; production not required; the thing proved being "the answer made to the inquiry"); 1852, Glenn v. Rogers, 3 Md. 312, 321 (a written demand for payment, delivered by messenger, production required, since no oral demand accompanied it); 1873, Paige v. Loring, Holmes

749 (fraudulent transfer to creditor; to show an admission, a witness was allowed to testify to the words of the defendant who took up a letter and read it to the witness, the thing to be proved being not the contents of the letter, but "what the defendant stated to him to be the contents"). For other questions arising in such cases as R. v. Hunt, supra, where a printed document is concerned, compare ante, §§ 1233-1235, § 415.

² 1816, Wyatt v. Gore, Holt N. P. 299, 303 (in proving previous currency of similar rumors in mitigation of damages for libel, the fact of their circulation in a newspaper was offered; production not required); 1897, Kearney v. State, 101 Ga. 803, 29 S. E. 127 (whether a witness knew of a document affecting her interest, admitted without production); 1874, State v. Cohn, 9 Nev. 179, 188 (over insurance as motive for arson; amount of insurance which insured believed he had, shown without production of policies); 1897, Scullin v. Harper, 24 C. C. A. 169, 78 Fed. 460 (issue as to good faith in making a charge against an employee; the charge having been made after reading a record in a time-book, held that the book need not be produced to show what was read).

Contra: 1844, Com. v. Bigelow, 8 Metc. 235 (conversation about a bill to show the defendant's knowledge of its counterfeit character; rule applied to require production of the bill).

difficult one; and the ruling will depend upon whether in the case in hand greater emphasis and importance is to be given to the detailed marks of peculiarity or to the document as a whole regarded as an ordinary describable thing:

1845, Lawrence v. Clark, 14 M. & W. 250, 252; plea of fraud, to an action on a bill of exchange; to identify the bill spoken of as fraudulent, the bill was required to be produced; Pollock, C. B.: "The difficulty is, how do you prove the identity but by the contents?"; Rolfe, B.: "You want to show that when a certain writing took place on a certain piece of paper, certain concomitant circumstances attended it; but then you must show it to be the same writing, as that which is stated on the record."

There is here naturally some inconsistency in the rulings.¹

(4) Where the total balance of accounts is desired to be stated, as by testimony to a person's solvency, or to a year's total sales, or to a year's aggregate profits, it is possible to regard the net result as something independent of the detailed terms of the account-books, and therefore provable without production; though there is here room for much difference of opinion.² But the fact that a specific entry or item exists or was made may directly involve the terms of the document so far at least as the fact of the entry can be distinguished from a status or relation produced by it.³ On the other hand, the

¹ 1867, R. v. Elworthy, 10 Cox Cr. 579 (perjury in stating that there was no draft of a certain statutory declaration; the identity of the draft so sworn to became material, i. e. which of two drafts was referred to; for proving the contents of a document said to be the draft in question, the rule was held applicable; Bramwell, B.: "If the only question had been as to the existence of a draft, the point would not have arisen; but it was thought fit to give evidence of the contents of it," and so "the general rule applies"); 1869, Peterson v. Gresham, 25 Ark. 380, 386 (to identify a quantity of cotton, evidence that a receipt for thirty-six bales had been given was admitted, without producing the receipt); 1879, Lingenfelter v. Simon, 49 Ind. 82, 89 (identification of note; production not required); 1885, Sunberg v. Babcock, 66 Ia. 515, 24 N. W. 19 (whether an invoice seen was the same as that in controversy; production required); 1900, Myers' Estate, 111 id. 584, 82 N. W. 961 (identification of letters; production not required); 1867, Higgins v. Carlton, 28 Md. 135 ("whether the memorandum differed from the will in any other respects?" excluded); 1857, Newcomb v. Noble, 10 Gray 47, semble (that a horse at a place was the same one described in a mortgage; production of the mortgage not required merely for this purpose); 1845, St. Louis P. Ins. Co. v. Cohen, 9 Mo. 416, 439 (possession of a paper; it may be described to identify it without production); 1849, West v. State, 22 N. J. L. 212, 238 ("the witness had sworn that he believed that the deed in question was not identical with a deed which had been previously seen by him," describing the differences; production not required, because "it was a simple question of identity or diversity"); 1861, Gilbert v. Duncan, 29 id. 133, 139 (whether the note sued on or another was agreed to be given; production of the other not required); 1862, Boucicault v. Fox, 5 Blatchf. 87, 91 (copyright; whether the incidents of a drama were the same as those of a book; production of the book and the play required).

² 1791, Roberts v. Doxon, Peake 83 (one who had seen the accounts; "though he could not state the particulars of the books without producing them, yet he might speak to the general amount; . . . what from his general observation he perceived to be the general state of their accounts"); 1864, Stratford v. Ames, 8 All. 577 (amount of a bill rendered; production required); 1882, Steketee v. Kimm, 48 Mich. 322, 325, 12 N. W. 177 (aggregate amount of sales, allowed without producing the books); 1827, Pipher v. Lodge, 17 S. & R. 214, 226, per Rogers, J. ("The proof of the state of a person's pecuniary affairs is general in its nature; . . . it never was required that you should show a bill of sale for his personal property or the title-deeds of his real estate"); 1898, Murdock v. Mfg. Co., 52 S. C. 428, 29 S. E. 856 (profits of a mill, as based on the books of the mill; production required). For solvency testimony, as affected by the opinion rule, see post, §§ 1957, 1959. For dispensing with the production of voluminous accounts, see ante, § 1230. For accounts as subjected to the Integration rule, see post, § 1429 ff.

³ 1801, R. v. Coppull, 2 East 25 (whether a person was assessed for parish rates; the books must be produced); 1813, Henry v. Leigh, 3 Camp. 499 (the fact of the allowance of a certificate of bankruptcy; certificate required); 1856, Darby v. Onseley, 1 H. & N. 1, 5, 10 (whether a person's name is written in a book containing the names of members of an association; production required); 1880, Appleby v. Secord, 28 N. Br. 403 (testimony of one present at a trial, not admitted to show what the dispute

fact that an entry in a record or account-book does not exist, while in a sense it involves the document's terms, yet is usually and properly regarded as not requiring the books' production for proof; this may be justified either on the present ground or on that of the inconvenience of producing voluminous documents (ante, § 1230); it is difficult to ascertain which reason is the one judicially approved.⁴

and the decision were; production of record required); 1837, Kennedy v. Dear, 6 Port. 90, 96 (of a justice, whether a certain case was before him, allowed without production); 1855, Doe v. Reynolds, 27 Ala. 364, 376 (facts of foreclosure and sale; record must be produced); 1893, Roden v. Brown, 103 id. 324, 327, 329, 15 So. 598 (whether a bank's books showed an account with B.; production required); 1872, Burk v. Winters, 28 Ark. 6 (that a person was assignee in bankruptcy; production required); 1895, Union Pacific R. Co. v. Jones, 21 Colo. 340, 40 Pac. 892 (whether a verdict had been recovered; record required); 1811, Arnold v. Smith, 5 Day 150, 155 (that a ship had been libelled and condemned; rule applied); 1871, Supples v. Lewis, 37 Conn. 568 (the fact that an execution had been issued and given to an officer; production not required); 1829, Humphreys v. Collier, 1 Ill. 297 (that a person had been discharged in insolvency; record required); 1861, Scott v. Scott, 17 Ind. 308 (that certain persons were assessed for land; assessment roll required); 1879, Binns v. State, 66 id. 428, 430 ("the pendency of a suit, the parties to it, and its subject-matter, may be proved by parol, where the record is not the ground of the action"); 1889, Hewitt v. State, 121 id. 245, 23 N. E. 83 (maliciously killing a dog; to prove that it was listed for taxation, tax-list not required); 1892, File v. Springel, 132 id. 312, 31 N. E. 1054 (that a mortgage was held and a mortgage-suit was begun; production of mortgage and record unnecessary); 1795, Owings v. Wyant, 3 H. & McH. 393 (that the defendant was a common innkeeper, such persons being required to be licensed; production not required); Mich. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 2932, 3244, 3413 (village or city or county condemnation proceedings; register's testimony as to persons shown by records to be owners, admissible); 1899, Reynolds v. State, 58 Nebr. 49, 78 N. W. 483 (that a person was divorced; production of decree or copy required); 1849, Chambers v. Hunt, 22 N. J. L. 552, 562 (fact of a trial involves the production of the record); 1849, Browning v. Flanagan, ib. 567, 577 (proving the existence of a judgment-litig; production of the judgment required); 1848, Smiley v. Dewey, 17 Oh. 156, 159 (fact of appeal taken; record required); 1898, Stoue v. Laogworthy, 20 R. I. 602, 40 Atl. 832 (by a member of a town council, that a road was a highway, excluded); 1841, Cross v. Haskins, 13 Vt. 536, 540 (testimony by one receiving oil that he had credited H. for it on his books; the books not required to be produced); 1844, Sherwin v. Bugbee, 16 id. 439, 444, semble (existence of school district; records not required); 1874, Hubbard v. Kelley, 8 W. Va. 46, 52 (that an appeal had been taken; production required).

Compare some of the cases under § 1249, post. For the fact of conviction of crime, see post, § 1270. For appointment to office, see post, § 2535. For the fact of incorporation, see post, § 1625.

⁴ The following list includes also the few cases contra, which are expressly so noted: 1831, R. v. Backler, S. C. & P. 118 (like People v. Eppinger, Cal.); 1834, R. v. Brannan, 6 id. 326 (same); 1852, Maule, J., in Macdonnell v. Evans, 11 C. B. 930, 938 ("Suppose a man is asked whether he made an entry in his day-book, and he says No; it cannot be necessary to produce the book"); 1894, People v. Eppinger, 105 Cal. 36, 38 Pac. 538 (forgery of check on B. C. Bank in name of H. & Co.; teller's testimony that no firm of that name "kept or had any account in his books," admitted); 1853, Elkins v. State, 13 Ga. 435, 440 (clerk allowed to testify that no liquor-license had been granted to E.; no record being required to be kept, the record is not complete; where a record is required, then it must be produced to show that no such part exists); 1886, Mayson v. Atlanta, 77 id. 663, 665 (like Elkins v. State); 1899, Aspinwall v. Chisholm, 109 id. 437, 34 S. E. 568 (absence of entry in account-books; production required); 1903, Vizard v. Moody, 117 id. 67, 43 S. E. 426 (that no tax returns were found in the records where they would properly be, admitted); 1874, Chicago v. McGraw, 75 Ill. 566, 571 (that no sales of U. S. land in a district were made; production of records required); 1853, Nossaman v. Nossaman, 4 Ind. 648, 651 (by a clerk, that no such marriage-record appeared, allowed); 1864, Board v. Reinhart, 22 id. 463 (that the defendant had never before in any transactions made a certain claim; production of the written transactions not required); 1871, Lacey v. Marnan, 37 id. 168, 170 (by the U. S. land-register, that no land-entry existed, allowed); 1902, Com. v. Best, 180 Mass. 492, 62 N. E. 748 (that no warrant for an arrest had been issued, admitted from one who had searched the record); 1901, Wagner v. Supreme Lodge, 128 Mich. 660, 87 N. W. 903 (testimony of the clerk of a lodge to plaintiff's non-membership, excluded on the facts); 1883, Burnett v. McCluey, 78 Mo. 676, 689 (that a part of a record did not exist; production required; after evidence of its existence and loss by opponent, evidence of its non-existence is admissible in rebuttal); 1895, Smith v. Bank, 45 Nebr. 444, 447, 63 N. W. 796 (principle conceded; but one who has merely searched the index of a registry of deeds may not speak as to the absence of a record); 1903, Sykes v. Beck, — N. D. —, 96 N. W. 844 (attorney's testimony that the county records contained nothing of a certain tenor, excluded; the official custodian's testimony is required); 1903, Fisher v. Betts, — id. —, 96 N. W. 132 (whether the tax records did not contain a warrant of levy; the custodian required to be called, in preference to an attorney who had searched the records); 1834, Emrie v. Gilbert, Wright 764 (accounting; whether an order on K. was included in the accounts due; production not required); 1865, Blackburn v. Crawfords, 3 Wall. 175, 183, 191 (that a marriage register did not contain an entry of a certain marriage; production required).

§ 1245. Same: (5) Fact of Payment of a Written Claim; Receipts.

(a) When a payment of money is made in discharge of a written claim — as, of a bond, a judgment — or in obedience to a written order, the fact of paying, including the amount paid, is usually a fact separate from the terms of the writing thus discharged, and the latter's production is not necessary. Nevertheless, in a given instance the terms of the writing may come to be drawn indirectly into the act of payment, — as where the question arises whether one draft or another was the object of the payment. For the ordinary situation first mentioned, it is generally agreed that production is unnecessary, but in instances of the latter sort production has been in some instances required.¹ (b) The fact that a receipt was given by the other party does not change the result, so far as the present principle is concerned.² But under the Integration (or Parol Evidence) rule the question may arise whether the receipt has not become the sole memorial of the transaction, so as to exclude the parol act of payment from consideration (post, § 2432). This question is generally answered in the negative. (c) Where the medium of payment is not coin or paper-money, but a check, note, or other form of writ-

Compare the instances ante, § 1230. Whether an official custodian's certificate that no entry or document exists is admissible is another question (post, § 1678). Whether the opinion rule affects this kind of testimony is noticed post, § 1657. Whether the custodian's certificate is preferred, is considered post, § 1273.

¹ 1801, Bayne v. Stone, 4 Esp. 13 (action to recover half of a payment made to a joint obligee by a surety; the security-document not required to be produced); 1834, May v. May, 1 Port. 129 (whether payment had been made under a power of attorney to M.; to prove that the power was to S., production required); 1843, Planters' & M. Bank v. Borland, 5 Ala. 531, 543, 545 (that payment of certain drafts had been made, and that a payment on judicial process had been made; production not required, the contents not being material to the issue); 1874, Hollenbeck v. Stanberry, 38 Ia. 325, 327 (payment of judgment, provable without production); 1894, Shaffer v. McCrackin, 90 id. 578, 580, 58 N. W. 910 (same); 1861, Cramer v. Shriner, 18 Md. 140, 146 (settlement of accounts made on the basis of a memorandum; since the verbal transaction was independent of the writing, production was not required); 1876, Mason v. District, 34 Mich. 228, 234 (that money was paid out on written orders; production required); 1867, Lowry v. Harris, 12 Minn. 255, 271 (payment for deed; production not required); 1830, Benton v. Craig, 2 Mo. 198

(payment of money, but not terms of the draft paid, admitted without production); 1836, Davidson v. Peck, 4 id. 438, 444 (payment by co-defendant of judgment, and action against the other for the amount; payment of the judgment provable without producing it before the witness or reciting it in his deposition; carefully reasoned opinion); 1898, Whiteside v. Hoskins, 20 Mont. 361, 51 Pac. 739 (payment of a judgment; judgment not produced); 1903, Roberts v. Dover, — N. H. —, 55 Atl. 895 (whether certain fees had been paid, allowed without producing records); 1847, Miliken v. Barr, 7 Pa. 23 (that there was another note of similar date and indorsements, on which the payment pleaded had really been made; production of the other note required); 1811, Fairfax v. Fairfax, 2 Cr. C. C. 25 (payment of bond; production and proof of execution not required); 1827, Patriotic Bank v. Coote, 3 Cr. C. C. 169 (assumpsit for overdraft; whether a check was drawn in a firm-name; production required); 1846, Hayden v. Rice, 18 Vt. 353, 358 (action for contribution against joint promisor; to prove payment on execution, execution need not be produced).

² 1836, Wiggins v. Pryor, 3 Ala. 430, 433 (that money was paid and a receipt taken; production not required); 1877, Davis v. Hare, 32 Ark. 386, 390 (payment of taxes; the collector's books not required); 1832, Dennett v. Crocker, 8 Greenl. 239, 244 (payment of taxes provable orally, without producing the receipted bills); 1849, Chambers v. Hunt, 22 N. J. L. 552, 562 ("It is clearly competent to prove payment by parol, or rather by verbal testimony, even though there may be written evidence as a receipt or order"; but where the giving of an order of payment on a third person, and its tenor, was to be shown as payment, production was required). See also the cases cited post, § 2432.

ten obligation, the case for requiring production may be more clear (than in (a) supra), for in paying with money it is usually a mere matter of counting the number of pieces, while in paying with an instrument of obligation the terms of the writing may be of consequence; at any rate, when they do receive any emphasis under the issues, it would seem that the rule of production should apply.³

§ 1246. Same: (6) Fact of Ownership; (7) Fact of Tenancy. (6) The mere fact that a person is owner of property, whether real or personal, is a distinct thing from the terms of the document or documents by which he has become owner; although instances may be supposed in which the relation of ownership involves so directly the terms of a specific deed that the rule of production applies.¹ (7) The fact that a person occupies the relation of tenant, as to a piece of land or its owner, is a distinct fact; for he may have become tenant by parol or by writing, and the tenancy is the result of the transaction, and is not the transaction itself. Nevertheless, so far as the terms of a written tenancy are drawn into the question, the rule of production begins to be applicable.²

³ 1791, Breton v. Cope, Peake 30 (plea, payment of a bond by transfer of bank-stock to the plaintiff; rule applicable, and copy of the transfer-book required); 1803, Dover v. Maestner, 5 Esp. 92, semble (bribery; that the defendant gave the witness a £5 note, for which the witness signed a note payable on demand, admitted without producing the documents); 1880, Ware v. Morgan, 67 Ala. 461, 466 (that a payment was made by bill of exchange; production not required); 1859, Daniel v. Johnson, 29 Ga. 207, 210 (that notes were given in payment; production not required); 1858, Ohio Ins. Co. v. Nunemacher, 10 Ind. 234, 237 (that in an offer of payment by check and note of a certain tenor was made; production required); 1890, Coonrod v. Madden, 126 id. 197, 25 N. E. 1102 (that a check was given in payment of note B, and not of note A, the one in suit; production of note B not required); 1865, Cecil Bank v. Snively, 23 Md. 253, 263 (that certain notes had been paid over by being sent to a bank and collected; production not required).

¹ 1880, Street v. Nelson, 67 Ala. 504, 507 (contract for sale of personalty; title to personalty "can be proved as a fact by oral testimony," unless the question arises between the parties); 1890, Florence L. M. & M. Co. v. Warren, 91 id. 533, 537, 9 So. 384 (testimony that the witness had not title, admitted); 1892, Wolfe v. Underwood, 97 id. 375, 378, 12 So. 234 (petitioners testifying that they own stock; books not necessary); 1858, Newsom v. Jackson, 26 Ga. 241, 245 (that B.'s wife owned certain negroes; deed required); 1890, Kirkpatrick v. Clark, 132 Ill. 342, 345, 24 N. E. 71 (whether a person was owner of land; oral testimony excluded); 1897, Westfield Cigar Co. v. Ins. Co. 169 Mass. 382, 47 N. E. 1026 (whether a person owned a building; "title by deed must ordinarily be proved otherwise than by the oral testimony of the owner"; but here the objection was not properly made); 1867, McMahon v.

Davidson, 12 Minn. 357, 369 (that a person was owner of a steambot, allowed, "in the absence of any evidence that there was any writing"); 1868, Fay v. Davidson, 13 id. 523, 525 (same); 1867, Baldwin v. McKay, 41 Miss. 358, 362 (whether the plaintiff owned cotton; production of bill of sale required); 1834, Lloyd v. Giddings, Wright 694 (whether a lot was included within the boundaries of a conveyance produced; deeds adjoining the boundary not required to be produced); 1852, Strimpfler v. Roberts, 18 Pa. 283, 296 (letter claiming ownership; production of title-deeds not required); 1892, Gallagher v. Assur. Co., — id. —, 21 Atl. 115 (that a certain person owned a leasehold; production of bill of sale not required); 1871, Hart v. Vinsant, 6 Heisk. 616 (replevin for rails cut; in showing the boundary of land by title-bond, production required); 1811, Wilson v. Young, 2 Cr. C. C. 33 (title-interest in an insured ship, production required).

For testimony to ownership as objectionable under the Opinion rule, see post, § 1960.

² England: 1810, Doe v. Morris, 12 East 237 (ejection against a tenant; tenancy proved by evidence of the payment of rent); 1810, Doe v. Pearson, ib. 239, note (same; no objection raised in either case from the present point of view); 1820, R. v. Castle Morton, 3 B. & Ald. 588 (to show the value of a tenement occupied by a pauper, the writing of lease was held to be necessary); 1825, Cotterill v. Hobby, 4 B. & C. 465 (case for injury to a reversioner's interest by cutting trees; the written lease required to be produced); 1827, R. v. Holy Trinity, 7 id. 611 (to prove the occupation of a tenement, as involving the settlement of a pauper, and to prove the amount of rent paid, the rule was not applied; the fact of tenancy and the value of the rent were proved by cross-examination without producing the written lease); 1828, Strother v. Baer, 5 Bing. 136 (action for injury to the plaintiff's reversion; whether, to prove the fact

§ 1247. Same: (8) Fact of Transfer of Realty, or (9) of Personality. (8) It would seem a hard rule that would forbid a witness to say "I bought a house" without producing the title-deed; and yet how otherwise are we to avoid the argument that, since transfers of title to land must be in writing, oral testimony to such a transfer is testimony to the contents of a document not produced? The truth seems to be that much depends on the emphasis to be given in the particular instance to the detailed elements of the transfer. If, for example, a witness is qualifying as an expert in land values by stating that he has bought and sold land, the emphasis is upon the net fact that he has acted as buyer and seller, and not at all on the terms of the transfer; but if he is justifying a trespass as landlord of the premises, the emphasis is upon the fact that a document exists naming him and describing the premises; production should be required in the latter case, but not in the former. The rulings therefore vary, as might be expected; but it may be noted that the negative result is reached in some Courts by invoking the rule (§ 1252, post) as to collateral matters.¹ (9) The rule's application to the of the reversionary interest, the written agreement of lease must be shown, left undetermined, Gaselee and Park, J.J., contra, Best, C. J., and Burrough, J., pro; all the preceding cases are examined); 1830, R. v. Merthyr Tidvil, 1 B. & Ad. 29 (amount of rental; lease required to be produced; distinguishing R. v. Holy Trinity, because there the amount was merely incidental as evidence of value, while the later law of settlement of paupers made the amount of agreed rental material); 1832, Doe v. Harvey, 1 Moo. & Sc. 374 (to prove the value of the premises, in an action for mesne profits, by showing the occupation by the defendant as tenant of P. and the amount of his rent, the rule was held applicable; the fact of occupation as tenant might have been proved apart from the writing, but not the tenancy under P.); United States: 1885, Central R. Co. v. Whitehead, 74 Ga. 441, 445, 447, 452 (action for personal injury on a road said to be leased by defendant; plaintiff allowed to prove that it was leased, without producing the writing; Hall, J., diss.); 1879, Hammon v. Sexton, 69 Ind. 37, 43 (fact of tenancy or occupancy provable by parol, in action by occupant against owner for taxes paid); 1870, Gilbert v. Kennedy, 22 Mich. 5, 18 (trespass by lessee; to prove tenancy, production of lease required); 1875, Storm v. Green, 51 Miss. 103, 106 (terms of a written lease; production required); 1855, Putnam v. Goodall, 31 N. H. 419, 423 (whether a factory was leased to a specific person; production required); 1871, Taylor v. Peck, 21 Gratt. 11, 17 (unlawful detainer, brought by landlord; the defendant, to prove himself tenant in possession, offered the plaintiff's receipts for rent, without producing the lease; received, because "the terms of the tenancy or of the lease . . . was perfectly immaterial; if he held them at that time as tenant, no matter on what terms and conditions, he held them lawfully"; R. v. Holy Trinity followed).

Distinguish the question which party has the burden of showing the agreement to be in writing (post, § 2447).

¹ In the following list are included rulings upon other kinds of transfers (e. g. of slaves) required to be in writing: 1828, Cloud v. Patterson, 1 Stew. 394 (that a house and lot had been sold as the property of J. S.; production of deed required); 1896, Goodson v. Brothers, 111 Ala. 589, 20 So. 443 (that land was sold by the sheriff as the plaintiff's; production required); 1859, Raines v. Perryman, 29 Ga. 529, 534 (that a slave was given to M.; deed required); 1876, Primrose v. Browing, 56 id. 369, 371 (that a conveyance was made to X; deed required); 1860, Snapp v. Pierce, 24 Ill. 156, 158 (that a deed was executed in satisfaction of a bond; production of bond required); 1851, Trimble v. Shaffer, 3 Greene Ia. 233 (that a deed was given, allowed without production); 1838, Nancy v. Snell, 6 Dana Ky. 148, 156 (sale of slave; bill of sale required); 1868, Calhoon v. Belden, 3 Bush 674, 676, semble (in proving lost deed, a deed, not an oral transfer, must be shown); 1847, Roebuck v. Curry, 2 La. An. 998 (that a slave had been emancipated; production of written act required); 1821, Tucker v. Welsh, 17 Mass. 160, 165 (assumpsit by the assignee of a policy; to disprove the existence of a consideration for a prior assignment, the fact of a mortgage was held orally provable, as a "collateral fact"); 1866, Thompson v. Richards, 14 Mich. 172, 183 (condition to give a deed; production required, in proving that a deed was given); 1869, Clemens v. Conrad, 19 id. 170, 173 (agreement to give deed; production not required, in testifying that a deed was given); 1873, Hatch v. Fowler, 28 id. 205, 210 (sale of land; production of contract required); 1891, Showman v. Lee, 86 id. 556, 563, 49 N. W. 578 (to whom a mortgage was given; production not required); 1839, Randolph v. Doss, 3 How. Miss. 205, 214 (that an administrator had sold land; production required); 1892, Gallagher v. Land Co., 149 Pa. 25, 24 Atl. 115 (that the witness had fact of a sale of personalty depends upon the same considerations. It should be noted, however, that it is immaterial that the law does not require a writing for the sale of personalty, if in fact the sale was in writing.²

§ 1248. Same: (10) Execution of a Document; (11) Sending or Publication of a Demand, Notice, etc. (10) Where the existence or execution of a document is concerned, a good deal must depend on the emphasis in the particular instance. For example, to prove a pecuniary motive for murder, testimony that the defendant had seen the deceased receive a sum of money at the bank and give notes for it might be made without producing the notes; but, in an action for property transferred with intent to defraud creditors, the execution of other similar transfers to show intent could not be proved without producing or accounting for the documents. The rulings naturally are not harmonious; and again it is to be noted that the doctrine about "collateral" facts (post, § 1252) is often invoked to justify negative rulings.¹ bought certain houses; production not required).

Compare also some cases under § 1249, post, and the New York cases under § 1256, post.

For the bearing of the Opinion rule, see post, § 1960.

² The cases are not harmonious: 1815, Davis v. Reynolds, 1 Stark. 115 (the plaintiff had bought a consignment of goods from the consignee, taking the indorsed bill of lading; his title allowed to be shown without the bill); 1863, Towdy v. Ellis, 22 Cal. 650, 659 (sale of goods in writing; production required); 1849, Thompson v. Mapp, 6 Ga. 260 (fact and time of a written sale of personalty; production not required); 1813, Lockett v. Auderson, Litt. Sel. C. 178 (assumpsit against one who sold a false bank-note; production not required); 1818, Grimes v. Talbot, 1 A. K. Marsh. 205 (purchase of personalty; bill of sale required to be accounted for); 1826, Lamb v. Moberly, 3 T. B. Monr. 179 (assumpsit for the price of a note bought; the fact of purchase and promise proved without production); 1875, Sirrine v. Briggs, 31 Mich. 443, 446 (sale of stock of goods; production of writing not required, the terms not being material); 1898, Price v. Wolfer, 33 Or. 15, 52 Pac. 759 (tracing chain of title to personalty by successive sales and deliveries; production of bill of sale, if any, in each case, required).

¹ England: 1848, R. v. Duffy, 7 State Tr. N. s. 795, 938 (one who saw a document written, not allowed to name the author without producing the original); 1848, Sayer v. Glossop, 2 Exch. 409 (rule applies to proof of handwriting); United States: 1853, Dixon v. Barclay, 22 Ala. 370, 381 (signature of a note in payment of a debt; production not required; here, action for deceit in a sale); 1854, Spodgrass v. Branch Bank, 26 id. 161, 173 (that the witness had seen notes of S. in the bank's possession; production not required to prove "the fact of the existence of such notes"); 1876, Bell v. Deason, 56 id. 444, 448 (fact of execution of mortgage, as showing possession; production required); 1886, Hancock v. Kelly, 81 id. 368, 378, 2 So. 281 (that a written instrument "relating to her dower interest" was signed, admissible without production); 1828, Mather v. Goddard, 7 Conn. 304 ("I shipped, as per B. L."; production required); 1819, De Fusey v. Du Pont, 1 Del. Ch. 77 ("The naked fact of the execution of a paper may certainly be proved, under circumstances, without the production of the paper"; here production required in proving the fact of indorsement of notes as involving mismanagement of a partnership); 1871, Plunkett v. Dillon, 4 id. 198, 205 ("The execution of an agreement and the time, place, and circumstances of its being made, may for all purposes be proved by parol"); 1859, Holcombe v. State, 28 Ga. 66, 67 (the fact of writing a letter, admissible without production); 1870, St. Louis & C. R. R. Co. v. Eakins, 30 Ia. 279, 281 (to show performance of conditions of stock subscriptions, the fact of letting a contract, etc., proved without producing the writings); 1819, Dupez v. Ashby, 2 A. K. Marsh. 11 (existence of a written contract; rule applicable on the facts); 1889, Ranney v. Donovan, 78 Mich. 318, 325, 44 N. W. 276 (that the defendant asked him to sign a receipt of a certain tenor, that he refused, handed it back, etc.; production not required; "it was simply a part of the conversation"); 1891, Muskegon v. Lumber Co., 86 id. 625, 628, 49 N. W. 489 (whether he made a return of the tax-roll to the treasurer, allowed without production); 1830, Benton v. Craig, 2 Mo. 198 (who filed or signed a plea; production not required); 1878, Bardin v. Stevenson, 75 N. Y. 164, 166 (a witness to handwriting who had seen the defendant sign his name was allowed to say what kind of instruments he had signed, as affecting the degree of attention which the witness might have given); 1833, Ellis v. Baldwin, 6 Oh. 15 (to prove the fact of issuance of a license, production not required); 1860, Shoenberger v. Hackman, 37 Pa. 87, 92 (action on a promise to pay heirs in consideration of their signing a release; "it was simply the act of signing the paper" that was to be proved; "it was therefore a collateral matter to the issue," and production of the release was not necessary).

Compare the rules as to order of proof of execution, loss, and contents, ante, § 1189.

(11) The act of delivering, sending, or publishing a document, regarded as distinct from the terms of the document, may of course be proved without production; but, so far as such proof implies anything as to the document's terms and seeks to establish those terms by indirection, the rule is applicable and production necessary.²

§ 1249. Same: (12) Sundry Dealings with Documents, — Conversion, Loss, Forgery, Larceny, Agency, Partnership, Service of Writs, etc. In an action of trover for the conversion of a document, the existence and the taking of a document of a certain sort may be regarded as facts distinct from its detailed terms, and thus the rule of production is not applicable:

1802, Bucher v. Jarratt, 3 B. & P. 145; Heath, J.: "There is a material difference between an action of assumpsit on a promise contained in an instrument in writing and an action of trover for the instrument itself. In the former the promise must be proved as laid, and consequently can be best proved by inspection of the instrument. In the latter the gist of the action is the tort"; Rooke, J.: "Where the written instrument is to be used as a medium of proof by which a claim to a demand arising out of the instrument is to be supported, there [notice is required . . .] before evidence of its contents can be received. But this being an action of trover for the certificate of registry itself, I can see no sound reason why evidence should not be admitted of the existence of the certificate, in the same manner as evidence of a picture or other specific thing is constantly admitted where it is sought to be recovered in the same form of action."¹

² England: 1808, Smith v. Young, 1 Camp. 439 (to prove the fact of a written demand or notice, production is necessary); 1813, Doe v. Durnford, 2 M. & S. 61 (the fact of giving written notice to quit, held to require the production of the writing); United States: 1847, Bond v. Central Bank, 2 Ga. 92, 99, 107 (contents of notice in a newspaper; production required); 1849, Schley v. Lyon, 6 id. 530, 538 (same); 1851, Pierce v. Carleton, 12 Ill. 358, 364 (that a paper was published in the State by H. & S., allowed by parol); 1898, Luigle v. Chicago, 172 id. 110, 50 N. E. 192 (fact of publication of notice; provable without production); 1899, McChesney v. Cook Co. Collector, 178 id. 542, 53 N. E. 356 (fact of newspaper publication of notice; production not required); 1855, Unthank v. Turnpike Co., 6 Ind. 125, 127 (oath of publisher with one copy, sufficient to show publication on three occasions); 1866, Des Moines v. Casady, 21 Ia. 570, 572 (that an ordinance was published in a newspaper, and the number of times; provable by oral testimony, without producing the printed document; its contents being otherwise in evidence); 1869, Burlington G. Co. v. Greene, 28 id. 289 (fact of a notice given, production not required); 1886, Bish v. Ins. Co., 69 id. 184, 186, 28 N. W. 553 (that a proof of loss blank had been filled out and sent; rule not applicable); 1890, Hagan v. Ins. Co., 81 id. 321, 332, 46 N. W. 1114 (proof of loss; preparation and sending, provable without production); 1835, Miller v. Webb, 8 La. 516 (fact of publication of notice; production not required); 1837, Baker v. Towles, 11 id. 432, 438, semble (same); 1867, Beall v. Poole, 27 Md. 645, 652 (the fact that complaints had been made by letter; production required); 1886, Ponca v. Crawford, 18 Nebr. 551, 553, 23

id. 662, 668, 26 N. W. 365, 37 id. 609 (whether a petition was presented; production not required); 1803, Peyton v. Hallett, 1 Cai. 363, 365, 380 (notice of abandonment of a vessel given by letter delivered; semble, the fact of notice provable without production; case obscure); 1817, Moore v. Gilliam, 5 Munf. 346, 347 (editor's testimony to fact of publication of advertisement, received without producing it); 1863, Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Thrall, 35 Vt. 536, 546 (notice in newspaper as required by law; production of a copy of the newspaper required; "in cases where successive notices are required, we should incline to think that the production of one paper to show the contents, and proof by parole that there were successive publications of the same notice, would be enough"); 1874, Sexton v. Appleyard, 34 Wis. 235, 239 (fact of publication of notice; oral testimony sufficient).

For the use of a publisher's affidavit as an exception to the Hearsay rule, see post, § 1710; for its use as preferred to other testimony, see post, § 1339.

Compare the other cases on newspaper copies, ante, § 1234.

¹ 1794, Cowan v. Abrahams, 1 Esp 50 (trover for a bill of exchange; the declaration described it; Lord Kenyon, C. J., held the rule applicable, and the King's Bench concurred; practically overruled by the above case); 1813, Scott v. Jones, 4 Taunt. 865 (Gibbs, J.: "It used to be the practice in actions of trover for bills of exchange to give notice to produce the bill; it has very lately been held in the Court of King's Bench that such notice is unnecessary"; here, trover for an agreement for a lease); 1830, Whitehead v. Scott, 1 Moo. & R. 2 (trover for a deed; production not required). The same

The same reasoning applies in other cases where the fact to be proved is merely some dealing with the document as a material object, for example, by larceny, embezzlement, or loss;² but otherwise for forgery or counterfeiting.³

An agency may have been constituted by a written authority; but the repeated acting upon it, being equally a granting of authority, may be proved without production.⁴ By the same reasoning, the fact that a partnership exists may be proved without producing the articles of partnership.⁵ In a large number of other instances, the result seems to depend on the present principle, though the precise grounds and the classification of the opinions are open to difference of interpretation.⁶ It may be noted that where the result might be reached by treating the rule as applicable, but implying from the pleadings a notice to produce (ante, § 1205). The practical difference between the former and the latter reasonings would be that, if the document could not be produced for want of a stamp, by the former doctrine this would be immaterial, by the latter it would prevent proof by copy; but, further, that by the latter it would be necessary to show possession by the defendant.

² 1802, Anon., cited in Bucher v. Jarratt, 3 B. & P. 145 (indictment for stealing a written instrument; notice to the defendant to produce, "certainly not the practice," and intimated to have been held unnecessary); 1898, First Nat'l Bank of B. v. First Nat'l Bank of N., 116 Ala. 520, 22 So. 976 (action for loss of a package of transfers of land-certificates deposited, the claim of damages being for expense incurred in procuring substitutes; rule held not to apply to the transfers).

³ 1880, Fox v. People, 95 Ill. 71, 75 (forgery; rule applies to proof of former utterings); 1885, State v. Breckenridge, 67 Ia. 204, 25 N. W. 130 (other forged notes used to show intent; holding absolutely that production is necessary); 1886, State v. Saunders, 68 id. 371, 27 N. W. 455 (similar; holding that the document must be either produced or accounted for); 1823, People v. Lagrille, 1 Wheeler Cr. C. 412 (uttering counterfeit bills; other counterfeits must be accounted for by proof of destruction or of defendant's refusal on notice); 1847, Reed v. State, 15 Oh. 217, semble (other counterfeit bills should be produced or accounted for); 1865, State v. Cole, 19 Wis. 129, 134 (uttering counterfeit bill; to prove the uttering of other counterfeits as evidence of guilty knowledge, the bills must be produced or else accounted for by showing defendant's refusal to produce on notice or prosecution's inability to obtain them otherwise).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 1205 (notice to produce), and ante, § 318 (evidencing intent by other forgeries).

⁴ 1794, Neal v. Erving, 1 Esp. 61 (an agency proved by habitual action, without producing the instrument); 1812, Spencer v. Billing, 3 Camp. 310 (whether the plaintiff had habitually accepted bills addressed to him as partner; oral evidence allowed; otherwise, if the mode of dealing had varied, which would then involve the proof of "an individual written instrument"); 1814, Haughton v. Ewbank, 4 id. 88

(to prove an agency, the defendant's habit of paying upon such documents signed by the agent was proved orally, though the authority was in writing).

Compare the effect of the Opinion rule (post, § 1960).

⁵ Here, however, the principle may perhaps really be the one referred to ante, § 1242, par. 3, i. e. that it is the duty of the opponent to prove that written articles of partnership exist; or the principle may be that of § 1255, post, that the articles may be proved by oral admissions of the opponent; or it may be that the partnership is a "collateral" fact, under § 1252, post. The opinions are seldom clear as to the precise principle invoked: 1875, Price v. Hunt, 59 Mo. 258, 261 (production not always required; but here required, the issue being whether a contract was one of partnership); 1810, Widdifield v. Widdifield, 2 Binn. 245, 249 (though by one witness the existence of a contract of partnership was proved, another was allowed to testify to the existence of a partnership, because they might have "afterwards formed a general partnership by parol"); 1852, Cutler v. Thomas, 25 Vt. 73, 79 (suit by creditor against partner; articles need not be produced by plaintiff); 1855, Hastings v. Hopkinson, 23 id. 108, 117 (plaintiff charging a defendant as partner probably may prove the partnership as a fact independent of the articles; but a defendant defending by alleging partnership is invoking the articles and must produce them).

⁶ 1807, Horn v. Noel, 1 Camp. 61 (since a Jewish ceremony of marriage was merely the ratification of a previously written contract, to prove the fact of marriage, the contract was required); 1795, Morgan v. Minor, 2 Root 220 (that a certain prize in a lottery was drawn by his number; rule applicable); 1837, Dyer v. Smith, 12 Conn. 384, 391 (whether a person had a certain note in his possession; production not required); 1885, Harris v. Collius, 75 Ga. 97, 108 (that deeds of a certain description were deposited, given up again, etc., allowed, without production); 1858, Rawson v. Curtiss, 19 Ill. 456, 473 (that he saw a "letter of credit," excluded; production necessary); 1875, Miller v. Road Co., 52 Ind. 51, 60 (that steps were taken to organize a corporation and that articles were filed; production not required); 1811, M'Ilvoy v. Kennedy, 2 Bibb 381 (that a claim was set up under a bill of sale; production not required); 1897, Barnes v. Com., 101 Ky. 556, 41 S. W. 772

fact to be proved is some dealing with a document which goes to form a judicial record — as, the serving of a writ, the time of trial begun —, the Parol Evidence rule (post, § 2450) may forbid the parol transaction to be shown at all, because the act in legal significance is constituted solely by the return on the writ or some other appropriate part of the record.⁷

§ 1250. Same: (13) Miscellaneous Instances. For a great many instances in which the present question arises it is unprofitable to pursue analysis more minutely or to seek a solution in any of the preceding generalizations.¹

C. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE.

§ 1252. (1) “Collateral” Facts; History. It was clearly enough settled, in the era of the rule of profert (ante, § 1177), that profert need not be made of a document whose contents were but an inducement to the claim alleged or, as it was commonly said, of a document which was “meer collateral to (fact of receipt of a letter; rule not applied); 1853, Hunt v. Roylance, 11 Cush. 117 (mode of keeping accounts, etc.); production of books required); 1886, Simpson v. Waldby, 63 Mich. 439, 444, 30 N. W. 199 (that drafts were protested, not paid, and returned; production required); 1894, Hobe v. Swift, 58 Minn. 84, 88, 59 N. W. 831 (measurement of printer's ems in an advertisement; production required); 1892, Shelton v. Reynolds, 111 N. C. 525, 16 S. E. 272 (fact of showing a paper, but not the contents; production not needed); 1803, Hurt v. Davis, 1 Brev. 304 (assumpsit for services performed in pursuance of a written agreement; production required); 1812, Ford v. Whitaker, 3 id. 244 (trespass q. c. f.; evidence that the trespassing person acted under written orders from the defendant; production required); 1839, Enloe v. Hall, 1 Humph. 303, 310 (services in printing and publishing advertisements in a newspaper; production of the paper not required); 1873, Lacy v. Sugarman, 12 Heisk. 354, 363 (whether an act was done within the lines of military occupation; the fact of actual occupation provable by parol, but to prove the limits as defined by military written order, the order must be produced); 1822, Hutchinson v. Peyton, 2 Cr. C. C. 365 (expenses in procuring insurance; production of policy required); 1856, Houghton v. Paine, 29 Vt. 57 (services in “gathering data and writing a memoir”; production of the memoranda, etc., made by the plaintiff, not required); 1892, Johnson v. Marble Co., 64 id. 337, 353, 25 Atl. 441 (that the proceeds of a check were received by A and spent in a certain way; production unnecessary); 1788, Dawson v. Graves, 4 Call 127 (smuggling; testimony by W. that he had received 71 hogsheds though he had taken out a permit for 50 only; production of the permit required).

⁷ 1807, Thomas v. Ansley, 6 Esp. 80 (to prove the time of notice of a trial, the notice was required; and to prove the date of the trial at Nisi Prius, the record was required); 1837, R. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P. 297, 305 (the fact that a distraint was made under a warrant; rule not applicable); 1851, Thorne v. Mason, 8 U. C. Q. B. 236 (malicious arrest; the writ required to be produced); 1886, Foster v. Magill, 119 Ill. 75, 82, 8 N. E. 771 (evidence of an act done to take possession of property does not require production of the record; but not so of a suit brought); 1876, Stanley v. Sutherland, 54 Ind. 339, 353 (that a farm had been sold on execution for a certain debt; allowed, the validity of the sale not being disputed); 1856, Wynne v. Auburn, 23 Mo. 30 (that a mare was taken under a writ; production required); 1892, Bates v. Sabin, 64 Vt. 511, 521, 24 Atl. 1013 (services rendered in serving process; production unnecessary).

Compare the cases ante under §§ 1241, note 2, and 1244, note 3.

¹ 1845, Graham v. Lockhart, 8 Ala. 9, 25 (fact of indebtedness as consideration for a deed “may as well be proved orally as by the production of the writing”); 1892, Lavretta v. Holcomb, 98 id. 503, 510, 12 So. 789 (that a person was president of a club; minutes not required); 1858, Poole v. Gerrard, 9 Cal. 593 (to rebut evidence of marriage by habit and repute, testimony involving the terms of the contract were not received without the writing); 1871, Jones v. Hopkins, 32 Ia. 503, 506 (that a corporation was organized; rule applicable); 1830, Foster v. Wallace, 2 Mn. 231 (proving a co-signer of a bond to have signed merely as surety for the other; testimony to the fact of a debt allowable, without producing the instrument); 1835, Rank v. Shewey, 4 Watts 218 (that an apparent surety on a bond was by another bond really co-obligor; production of the second bond required); 1892, Price v. R. Co., 38 S. C. 199, 209, 17 S. E. 732 (employee's action for death; written regulation of the defendant must be produced, in proving a regulation); 1870, Smith v. Large, 1 Heisk. 5, 7 (debt on account for leather delivered; in showing the existence of a bond to deliver it, the bond must be produced).

For the case of an appointment to office, see ante, § 1228.

the action"; subject only to the qualification that profert of such a deed was nevertheless to be made if the deed was requisite ex institutione legis:

1606, Lord Coke, in Bellamy's Case, 6 Co. Rep. 38 (trespass de bonis asportatis; the defendant pleaded ownership of the land; the plaintiff pleaded a lease assigned to him; the defendant pleaded a condition not to assign without the lessor's license; the plaintiff pleaded a license by deed, without making profert; then the defendant demurred): "The reason and cause that deeds are shewed to the Court is because it belongs to the judges to adjudge of the sufficiency or insufficiency of them; yet it was resolved that the plaintiff need not shew it in this case for three reasons: 1. Because the plaintiff doth not claim by the said deed of licence any interest in the house, but the licence is meer collateral to the interest of it and pleaded only to excuse the forfeiture of the lease, and is not like a release or confirmat, for they transfer their right; 2. A good difference was taken and agreed when a deed is requisite ex institutionis legis and when ex provisione hominis; for when it is requisite ex institutione legis, there it ought to be shewed in court, although it concern a collateral claim and transfers or conveys nothing."¹

By some process of thought not clearly ascertainable, this limitation to the doctrine of profert was in England early repudiated as a limitation to the rule requiring production in evidence:

1750, L. C. Hardwicke, in Cole v. Gibson, 1 Ves. Sr. 503, 505 (bill to set aside an annuity; a bond which had been a part of the transaction was required to be produced): "A distinction is endeavored between a bill to set aside the bond or other instrument, and a case wherein it is made use of only by collateral evidence; but there is no such distinction in point of evidence; the rule being the same whether it comes in by way of collateral evidence, or the very deed which the bill is brought to impeach."²

But in the United States the exception has survived, usually more or less below the surface, and potential only in occasional instances, though in some jurisdictions fully recognized and constantly enforced.

§ 1253. Same: Principle. Such a limitation most assuredly has a justification. In the great majority of instances where the terms of a document are not in actual dispute, it is inconvenient and pedantic to insist on the production of the instrument itself and to forbid all testimonial allusion, however casual, to its terms:

¹ Accord: 1555, Throckmerton v. Tracy, Plowd. 148 (profert not required of one not privy to the deed); 1602, Dagg v. Penkevon, Cro. Jac. 70 (debt for tithes, by a lessee for years from a lessee for life from the queen by letters patent; profert of the latter not required, because "the title shewn in the declaration is but a conveyance to the action"); 1636, Stockman v. Hampton, Cro. Car. 441 (justification for trespass under a license from one having a remainder after an estate tail, the plea traversing the opponent's claim of estate in fee for his ancestor; profert not necessary, "because it is but an inducement to the traverse and is not answerable"); ante 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius, 249 ("When a man shews a good title in himself, everything collateral to that title shall be intended, whether it be shewn or not"); 1800, Banfill v. Leigh, 8 T. R. 571 (plaintiff sued as assignee of debts under power of attorney, by which he had obtained an award under arbitration which defendant had promised to pay; in an action on the award, the plaintiff need not make profert of the assignment; Kenyon, L. C. J.: "It is not universally true that a profert must be made when the party pleading a deed derives title under it; . . . it is never necessary to make a profert of a deed which is pleaded only by way of inducement; and the deed in question is only inducement to the action").

² Yet this limitation is mentioned in the treatises of the 1800s: 1829, Phillipps, Evidence, 7th ed., I, 303 ("The general rule that the best evidence is to be produced which the nature of the thing admits is to be understood as applying to deeds and agreements which form part of the issue or which are material to the issue"); 1842, Starkie, Evidence, 3d ed., I, 202; 1870, Best, Evidence, 5th ed., § 479.

1885, Mulkey, J., in Massey v. Bank, 113 Ill. 334, 338: “[The general principle] has no application to the facts above stated. We fully recognize the rule that whenever the existence of a deed or other writing is directly involved in a judicial proceeding, whether as proof of the precise question in issue or of some subordinate matter that tends to establish the ultimate fact or facts upon which the case turns, such deed or other writing itself must be produced, or its absence accounted for, before secondary evidence of its contents is admissible. Yet while this rule is fully conceded, it is also true that a witness, when testifying, may, for the purpose of making his statements intelligible, and giving coherence to such of them as are unquestionably admissible in evidence, properly speak of the execution of deeds, the giving of receipts, the writing of a letter, and the like, without producing the instrument or writing referred to. To hold otherwise would certainly be productive of great inconvenience, and in some cases would defeat the ends of justice. References to written instruments by a witness for the purpose stated are to be regarded as but mere inducement to the more material parts of his testimony. The present case well illustrates the principle in question. As remotely bearing upon the issue to be tried, the plaintiff sought to show the appellant had avowed a purpose not to pay the note [whose execution was in issue],—that he had said he was going to put his property out of his hands in order to defeat the claim. Now this, under the issue, is the important part of the answer to the question [‘whether the note was a renewal note’], if indeed any of it can be so regarded. All, therefore, that was said about the deeding of the land, the giving of the mortgage, and getting the loan of $2,000, we regard as mere matter of inducement to the more important part of the testimony.’”

Two things, however, are to be noted. (1) The term “collateral,” as a definition of the limits of this exception, is an unfortunate and elusive word, which is almost impossible of consistent application in practice. Yet a more satisfactory term or test is certainly difficult to fix upon. If we say that production is not necessary where the terms of the document are not bona fide disputed by the opponent, we go too far; for the opponent may not be prepared to dispute its terms and yet he may fairly desire the opportunity to see the document and not be obliged to accept the proponent’s testimony to its contents; moreover, it would be difficult to ascertain beforehand whether the terms of all the documents to be used would be disputed. Again, if we say that the exception shall cover all documents not material as a part of the issues under the pleadings, we go once more too far; for a document may not form an element of the issue and yet may be important enough in evidence to require production. There seems no alternative but to accept the current and traditional term “collateral” as serving to define the exception. (2) But in any case the misfortune of inconsistent precedents and the disadvantage of an obscure definition can be obviated by applying strictly that salutary doctrine of judicial discretion. Let the trial judge determine absolutely, and without review, the application of the principle to each case. Whether a document is “collateral” is practically a question whether it is important enough under all the circumstances to need production; and the judge presiding over the trial is fittest to determine this question finally (ante, § 16).

It should here be noted that the present exception has sometimes been confused with the Integration or Parol Evidence rule in a peculiar way. It is a part of that rule that an oral transaction, though reduced to writing, can be availed of where other parties are concerned, and the oral transaction is as between them the material one (post, § 2446). This does not mean that the writing's contents can be proved by oral testimony, but that the terms of the oral transaction can be shown. Having erroneously in mind this different rule, the Court of at least one jurisdiction has phrased the present exception so as to allow the terms of such a writing to be proved, between other than the parties, orally and without production.¹ This is purely a local misunderstanding; it has never elsewhere been doubted that the present applies to all writings, whether or not the parties in the case were the parties to the document.²

§ 1254. Same: Specific Instances. There is naturally little to be found by way of further generalization in collating the precedents. Each case has depended much on its own circumstances. The important thing to note is that the present doctrine has been invoked in deciding many of the cases falling under another aspect of the general principle (ante, §§ 1242-1250). For example, in proving that a defendant paid money upon a note, the payment of the money is an act separate from and not involving the terms of the document, so that to prove the payment is not to prove the document's contents, and therefore the rule of production does not apply; nevertheless many Courts express this by saying that the document is "collateral" and that hence the exception to the rule comes into play. Most of the cases in which the term "collateral" is invoked can be sufficiently explained by that principle.¹

¹ 1873, Pollock v. Wilcox, 68 N. C. 46, 49 (action to set aside a deed in fraud of creditors; the defendant was allowed to show orally the contents of notes surrendered and notes made by him as the price of the land; the rule not being applicable except between "the parties to a contract"); 1895, Carden v. McConnell, 116 id. 875, 21 S. E. 923 (action for slander of title; plaintiff's proof of a deed by him to L, allowed to be by parol, on the ground that the rule did not apply as between strangers to the deed); 1896, Archer v. Hooper, 119 id. 281, 26 S. E. 143 (title to personalty; plaintiff claimed under a bill of sale from B.; the bill not required to be produced).

² 1881, Smith v. Cox, 9 Or. 327, 331 (production required of a void deed between third persons).

¹ They have accordingly been placed there (ante, §§ 1242-1250); while the precedents below include only those rulings which more or less definitely mean to recognize a real exception of the present sort; the precedents in those sections should therefore also be consulted on all of the states of facts dealt with in the citations below; compare also a few cases cited post, § 2143 (authentication of ancient copies of deeds); Ala.: 1831, Sommerville v. Stephenson, 3 Stew. 271, 278, semble (exception recognized); 1847, Brown v. Isbell, 11 Ala. 1009, 1020, semble (action on agreement to pay deficiency of amount of a bill if not paid out of

certain funds; bill's production not required); 1876, Lewis v. Hudmon, 56 id. 186 (false representations as defence to action on premium note for policy; production of application required, as not collateral); 1877, East v. Pace, 57 id. 521, 524 (conversion of a mule; process under which it was taken, not required to be produced, being an "incidental or collateral matter"); 1884, Winslow v. State, 76 id. 42, 48 (exception recognized); 1885, Jones v. Call, 93 id. 170, 179 (rule not applicable to "mere notices"); 1892, Rodgers v. Crook, 97 id. 722, 725, 12 So. 108 (exception recognized); 1897, Torrey v. Burney, 113 id. 496, 21 So. 348 (to show the reason for ill-feeling, evidence was offered that the person had read a newspaper clipping that would cause it; the clipping required to be produced); 1898, Foxworth v. Brown, 120 id. 59, 24 So. 1 (to show notice, rule not applicable); 1901, Griffin v. State, 129 id. 92, 29 So. 783 (assault on a person assisting a constable acting under a writ; writ not required to be produced, being collateral, and its contents not being in issue); 1901, Zimmerman v. State, — id. —, 30 So. 18 (similar); 1901, Costello v. State, 130 id. 143, 30 So. 376 (production not required of a written agreement which showed a witness' interest; compare § 1258, post); 1903, Webb v. State, — id. —, 34 So. 1011 (rule not applied to a memorandum handed to witness by defendant); Ark.: 1848, Hammond v. Freeman, 9 Ark. 62, 67 (action

§ 1255. (2) Party's Admission of Contents; Principle. The proposition that production should be dispensed with where the opponent has already admitted the contents of a document to be as alleged, is a plausible one, and its denial seems at first sight a mere insistence on an unnecessary formality. The doctrine that production is in such a case exceptionally dispensed with owes its best defence and its common name to the following opinion of Baron Parke:

1840, Parke, B., in Slatterie v. Pooley, 6 M. & W. 664: "If such evidence were inadmissible, the difficulties thrown in the way of almost every trial would be nearly insuperable. The reason why such parol statements are admissible, . . . is that they are not open to the same objection which belongs to parol evidence from other sources, where the written evidence might have been produced; for such evidence is excluded from the presumption of its untruth arising from the very nature of the case where better evidence is withheld; whereas what a party himself admits to be true may reasonably be presumed to be so. The weight and value of such testimony is quite another question."

against maker by indorsee for money paid on note to subsequent indorsee; in proving the intermediate indorsement to plaintiff, production required as not collateral); 1900, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Kilpatrick, 67 id. 47, 54 S. W. 971 (expulsion by brakeman; placard on car not required to be produced, because "merely incidental"); Cal.: 1887, Marriner v. Dennison, 78 Cal. 202, 213, 20 Pac. 386 (action by promisee under contract to sell land, the promisor having persuaded him to accept other lands by representing that he had a prior contract to sell to S.; testimony of S. offered to show that his contract was in truth subsequent; production of it not required); Ill.: 1885, Massey v. Bank, 113 Ill. 334, 337 (whether a note in issue was a renewal note; incidental references to prior deed, mortgage, etc., allowed without production; see quotation supra); Ind.: 1890, Coonrod v. Madden, 126 Ind. 197, 25 N. E. 1102 (to prove a plea of payment, in an action on a note, the defendant produced a check said to have been given in payment; the plaintiff then offered to testify that it was another note that had been paid by this check, and to give the date, amount, etc., of the other note, to identify it with the check; the rule was not applied to the other note); 1896, Lumbert v. Woodard, 144 id. 335, 43 N. E. 302, semble (a lease bearing on the case in an undisclosed way; rule not applicable); Mass.: 1784, Com. v. Fairfield, Dane's Abr., c. 84, art. 2, § 3 (that a witness owned land, as indicating his standing; provable by parol); 1898, Smith v. Bank, 171 Mass. 178, 50 N. E. 545 (covenant against incumbrances; report of engineer leading to sewer assessment, held collateral); Mich.: 1864, Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241, 258 (contents of a deed; rule applies equally to collateral issues); N. J.: 1861, Gilbert v. Duncan, 29 N. J. L. 133, 139 (whether the note sued on, or a different one, was agreed to be given up on receiving a third one; production of the different one not required, because the question was collateral, because "its contents are not material to the rights of the parties in the action," nor does the proponent "seek to avail himself of its contents as proof of any fact stated in it or of any obligation created or discharged by it"); 1896, New Jersey Zinc & I. Co. v. L. Z. & I. Co., 59 id. 189, 35 Atl. 915 (a contract recited by corporation minutes, the corporate action alone being material; rule not applicable); N. Y.: 1813, Southwick v. Stevens, 10 John. 443, 446 (that a defendant was State printer and president of a bank; provable without production in an action for libel, as "collateral matter"; "it is every day's practice to give parol proof in such cases"); N. C.: 1884, State v. Credle, 91 N. C. 640, 646 (notice posted warning against buying R.'s cattle, with the killing of which the defendant was charged; production not required); 1887, State v. Wilkerson, 98 id. 696, 699, 3 S. E. 683 (false pretences in obtaining an order for money for an alleged pauper; production of the order not required, the matter being collateral); 1893, McMillan v. Baxley, 112 id. 578, 586, 16 S. E. 845 (notice of sale; rule not applicable); S. C.: 1831, Lowry v. Pinson, 2 Bail. 324, 328 (to show fraud by other voluntary conveyances at the same time, the latter, being collateral, need not be produced); 1845, Gist v. McJunkin, 2 Rich. 154 (to show fraud in a sale of land, evidence may be given of a prior deed, as a collateral circumstance, without producing it); 1898, Hampton v. Ray, 52 S. C. 74, 29 S. E. 537 (letter-envelope held collateral, on the facts); 1901, Elrod v. Cochran, 59 id. 467, 38 S. E. 122 (resulting trust; production of the contract on which the money was paid, not required); Tenn.: 1809, Stewart v. Massengale, 1 Overt. 479 ("When records, or evidence of a higher nature, are referred to incidentally, which have no effect upon or connection with the point in dispute," it is not necessary to produce such testimony of "higher nature"; here, "what was said at a trial" was testified to orally in sci. fac. against bail); Vt.: 1797, Graham v. Gordon, D. Chip. 115 (action on promise to pay, in consideration of forbearance to sue on covenant of title broken by an ejectment; record of ejectment held not collateral, and required to be produced).

But there is much to be said against the recognition of such an exception ; and the sum of these objections is found in the following passages :

1845, Pennefather C. J., in Lawless v. Queale, 8 Ir. L. R. 382, 385 : "I cannot subscribe to what was said by Parke, B., in that case. . . . The doctrine there laid down is a most dangerous proposition. By it a man might be deprived of an estate of £10,000 per annum, derived from his ancestors by regular family deeds and conveyances, by producing a witness, or by one or two conspirators, who might be got to swear they heard the defendant say he had conveyed away his interest therein by deed, had mortgaged or otherwise incumbered it; and thus, by this facility so given, the most open door would be given to fraud, and a man might be stripped of his estate through this invitation to fraud and dishonesty. It is said, it is evidence against the person himself who made this admission, and that there is no danger of untruth in what a man admits against himself. Supposing the admission to be proved, is there no danger of mistake or misconception of the terms of a written instrument? It may be long and difficult; one part or clause may explain or qualify another; an unprofessional or ignorant man may be led to believe it may be so-and-so, whereas the real and true meaning may be the very reverse or something very different. But, produce the deed or writing, litera scripta manet. On which side is the security, and why depart from the rule that, if you want to give evidence of the contents of a writing, the writing itself must be produced? Is there no danger of untruth or misrepresentation, when used against the party making the admission? That is the ground put by Parke, B., and in which I cannot agree, when I know by experience how easy it is to fabricate admissions, and how impossible to come prepared to detect the falsehood. Why are writings prepared at all but to prevent mistakes and misrepresentations? And why, having taken that precaution, with such writing at hand and capable of being produced, is the same to be laid aside and inferior and less satisfactory evidence resorted to?"

1850, Maule, J., in Boulter v. Peplow, 9 C. B. 493, 501 : "It [Slatterie v. Pooley] is certainly not very satisfactory in its reasons. . . . What the party himself says is not before the jury; but only the witness' representation of what he says."

Of the two arguments here offered in opposition, the first amounts to little. The possibility of error in an opponent's own understanding of the terms of a document is not great; and, so far as it exists, it can do little harm, because the opponent's extrajudicial admission is merely some evidence, and not conclusive (ante, § 1058); he may still prove the contents as he now knows them or may have the document produced. But the second argument—that it is easy to fabricate alleged oral admissions—is the real and serious objection to the doctrine. It may be conceded that the opponent's admission of contents is satisfactory evidence, if he made such an admission. But did he make it? Here we are left to choose between conflicting oral testimonies; and it does seem undesirable to leave the matter to depend on the credibility of this or the other witness when an inspection of the document itself would speedily settle the controversy. The proper solution of the dilemma would be this: When an admission of the contents is testified to, let production be dispensed with; but if the fact of the admission is bona fide disputed by the opponent and some testimony to that effect is put in by him, then let production be required or the document's absence be accounted for.

§ 1256. Same: Forms of Rule in Various Jurisdictions. The solution suggested in the preceding section does not seem yet to have been advanced by any Court. The results so far in the various jurisdictions have been either the entire rejection of the rule, or its entire adoption, or its recognition in a confused form.

(a) In England the rulings fluctuated until 1840, when the decision in Slatterie v. Pooley laid down the rule authoritatively.¹ That authority has ever since been accepted and followed in that jurisdiction, though often with reluctance and usually with an absurd modification, to be noticed.² In an early Irish ruling and in many jurisdictions in Canada and the United States the rule has received express and full adoption.³

¹ Compare with the following the cases on duplicate originals (ante, § 1232): 1699, Anon., 1 Lord Raym. 732 (admission of a decree, by the opponent's witness, held sufficient); 1791, Breton v. Cope, Peake 30, semble (admission by opponent in a deed of the contents of a transfer-book of stock, held sufficient); 1793, Burleigh v. Stibbs, 5 T. R. 465 (action against a master on his indenture of apprenticeship; to prove the apprentice's execution of his part of the indenture, the defendant's recitals, admitting it, in his part were received); 1806, Roe v. Davis, 7 East 363, semble (acknowledgment by a lessee, in the landlord's counterpart of a lease, of the terms of the original, admitted as against an assignee of the lease); 1811, Flindt v. Atkins, 3 Camp. 115 (the former handing of a copy of a foreign judgment by the plaintiff to the defendant in proof of his claim, held not sufficient to enable the defendant to use the copy); 1812, Scott v. Clare, ib. 236 (defence, a discharge in insolvency; the plaintiff's oral admission of it held insufficient "to prove a judicial act of this sort," as "the plaintiff might be mistaken"); 1822, Summersett v. Adamson, 1 Bing. 73 (admission of a discharge in insolvency, sufficient); 1824, Sewell v. Stubbs, 1 C. & P. 73 (contents of a note; admission sufficient); 1825, Bloxam v. Elsie, ib. 558, 563, Ry. & Mo. 187, Abbott, C. J. (oral admission insufficient); 1828, Paul v. Meek, 2 Y. & J. 116 (counterpart of a lease; admission sufficient); 1833, Earle v. Picken, 5 C. & P. 542 (contract; admission sufficient); 1835, R. v. Forbes, 7 id. 224, Coleridge, J. ("strict proof" required; here a letter admitting a former forgery was received, though the other forged bill itself was not produced); 1836, Ashmore v. Hardy, ib. 501, 503 (admission of a deed in an answer in chancery, allowed); 1840, Slatterie v. Pooley, 6 M. & W. 664 (to prove a deed of composition with creditors — which could not be produced for want of the required stamp —, the defendant's verbal admission of the contents of the instrument was received).

² 1840, Newhall v. Holt, 6 M. & W. 662 (account stated); 1841, Howard v. Smith, 3 Scott N. R. 574 (oral admission); Wollaston v. Hake-will, ib. 593, 617 (here there was notice to produce); 1848, King v. Cole, 2 Exch. 628, 632 ("admission, either verbal or in writing, of the contents of a deed," is sufficient); 1849, Toll v. Lee, 4 id. 230 (a certificate of a deed of transfer, admitted as an admission of the deed's contents); 1850, Murray v. Gregory, 5 id. 467 (oral admissions of the contents and result of an award, received); 1850, Boulter v. Peplow, 9 C. B. 493, 506 (Williams, J.: "It is impossible for us to overrule Slatterie v. Pooley, though we may think the reasoning not quite satisfactory"; here a written admission); 1851, R. v. Basing-stoke, 14 Q. B. 611 (support to a pauper; conduct held a sufficient admission of the contents of a certificate requiring such support); 1851, Pritchard v. Bagshawe, 11 C. B. 459, 463 (an abstract of deeds, received as an admission of contents); 1858, Sanders v. Karnell, 1 F. & F. 356 (Channell, B.: "The doctrine . . . is one not to be extended").

³ 1843, Lord Trimlestown v. Kemmis, 5 Ir. L. R. 380, 396 (abstract of title); 1854, Doe v. Blanche, 3 All. N. Br. 180, 182 (admissions received; following Slatterie v. Pooley); 1840, Sally v. Capps, 1 Ala. n. s. 121 (oral admission of the amount of a note, received; "the rule does not apply where the adversary has admitted the facts which are to be proved"); 1902, Barnett v. Wilson, 132 Ala. 375, 31 So. 521 (production of a copy admitted by opponent to be correct dispenses with the necessity of accounting for the original); 1893, Morey v. Hoyt, 62 Conn. 542, 556, 26 Atl. 127 (oral admission of contents of letter; Slatterie v. Pooley approved); 1847, Gay v. Lloyd, 1 Greene Ia. 78, 83 (oral admission by defendant of transcript of judgment, received); 1877, Blackington v. Rockland, 66 Me. 332, 335 (records of a city, received as admissions of a notice; approving Slatterie v. Pooley; yet not deciding more than that a written admission is receivable); 1850, Smith v. Palmer, 6 Cush. 513, 520 (oral admission of contents of a record of judgment, execution, etc., allowed); 1851, Kellenberger v. Sturtevant, 7 id. 465 (same for acknowledgment in writing of a title to premises); 1857, Loomis v. Wadhams, 8 Gray 557, 562 (same for oral statement as to the contents of a deed); 1896, Com. v. Wesley, 166 Mass. 248, 44 N. E. 228 (same doctrine); 1899, Clarke v. Warwick C. M. Co., 174 id. 434, 54 N. E. 887 ("Admissions are evidence . . . although they relate to the contents of a written paper"; here a written admission); 1847, Anderson v. Root, 8 Sm. & M. 362 (written receipt for a writing, sufficient to prove its contents); 1859, Williams v. Brickell, 27 Miss. 682, 686 (oral admission of contents of telegram, sufficient); 1878, Edgar v. Richardson, 33 Oh. St. 581, 592 (Slatterie v. Pooley approved; here, for admissions as to a record of divorce; semble, the record must be not obtainable); 1824, North v.

(b) In some later Irish rulings and in many jurisdictions in the United States, the rule is repudiated, though perhaps in some cases for oral admissions only, not for written admissions;⁴ and it should be noted that the second objection above mentioned is practically obviated where a written admission exists, — so far, at least, as that writing is proved by production or by the opponent's refusal to produce it.

(c) The limitation has been attempted, and possibly obtains, in England, that an admission of the opponent made on the stand in testifying (usually, on cross-examination) shall not suffice to excuse non-production; i. e. the precedent of Slatterie v. Pooley is confined to precisely its same state of facts, namely, an admission made out of court.⁵ An admission, however, made in testifying before judge and jury is authentic beyond dispute, and wholly escapes the above-described real objection to the doctrine, namely, the objection that testimony to the alleged admission might be easily fabricated. In other words, this proposed limitation involves the absurd result of excluding the admission in precisely the case where it might be received without danger and of admitting it in precisely the case where the danger exists.

(d) A fourth type of result, in favor in some American jurisdictions, is to allow the proof by admissions whenever the document is shown to be lost or Drayton, Harp. Eq. 34, 38 (recital of bond in mortgage, sufficient); 1894, Dunbar v. U. S., 156 U. S. 185, 196, 15 Sup. 325 (oral admission of sending a telegram, sufficient to allow a delivered copy to be used); 1871, Taylor v. Peck, 21 Gratt. 11, 19 (landlord's receipt for rent received to show a lease; Slatterie v. Pooley followed).

That the admissions need not be verbally precise or complete, see post, § 2105.

⁴ 1845, Lord Gosford v. Robb, 8 Ir. L. R. 217, semble; Lawless v. Queale, ib. 382 (positively decided; see quotation supra); 1849, Parsons v. Purcell, 12 id. 90 (admission in an answer in chancery of a release-deed); 1861, Haliburton v. Fletcher, 22 Ark. 453 (guardian's admissions of record of appointment, excluded); 1860, Grimes v. Fall, 15 Cal. 63, 65 (charging the defendant as assignee of a contract to do that which was a trespass; the defendant's oral admission that he was assignee, excluded; no authority cited); 1872, Poorman v. Miller, 44 id. 269, 275 (declarations by offeror's own predecessor, excluded; question not raised); 1824, Buell v. Cook, 5 Conn. 206, 208 (oral admission of written lease, excluded); 1871, Plunkett v. Dillon, 4 Del. Ch. 198, 205, semble (parol admissions by opponent, excluded, except, of course, where the writing is produced); 1839, Bryan v. Smith, 3 Ill. 47, 49 (oral admission of a tenancy in common under a deed, excluded); 1880, Fox v. People, 95 id. 71, 75 (forgery; former utterings are to be shown otherwise than by the defendant's admissions); 1843, Clark v. Slidell, 5 Rob. La. 330 (excluded); 1843, Bogart v. Green, 8 Mo. 115 (oral admission of summons, insufficient); 1875, Cornet v. Bertelsmann, 61 id. 118, 126 (whether a vendee had notice of an encumbrance; oral admissions held insufficient unless corroborated); 1828, Carroll v. Peake, 1 Pet. 18, 22 (lease agreement; copy made by the defendant himself, admitted, without accounting for the original).

For the rulings in New York and elsewhere on the special subject of title to land, see § 1257, post.

⁵ 1856, Darby v. Ouseley, 1 H. & N. 1, 5, 10 (Pollock, C. B.: "If a party has chosen to talk about a particular matter, his statement is evidence against himself; . . . but it does not follow that the plaintiff could be compelled to make such an admission by asking him in the witness box, 'Have you executed a release?'""); 1859, Farrow v. Blomfield, 1 F. & E. 653, Pollock, C. B. (allowing the opponent's admission on the stand to suffice without production, after St. 1854, c. 125, § 24; quoted post, § 1263); 1859, Wolverhampton N. W. Co. v. Hawksford, 5 C. B. n. s. 703 (interrogatories to opponent before trial as to contents of a document, allowed only on condition that they should not be used at the trial unless the document should be shown lost); 1862, Henman v. Lester, 12 id. 776 (question to a party as to the result of a former suit of his, admitted; Byles, J., diss.: "It can make no difference that the witness was a party to the suit; the doctrine laid down in Slatterie v. Pooley . . . cannot comprehend parol admissions of the contents of written documents extorted from parties under the pressure of cross-examination"; but Willea and Keating, JJ., thought that on a collateral matter touching credit only, the party's admission sufficed); 1857, Lynch v. O'Hara, 6 U. C. C. P. 259, 265 (a party's compulsory admissions on discovery do not suffice). There is nothing in the modern rules of privilege (post, §§ 1856, 2218) to account for this result.

*detained by the opponent.*⁶ But this is of course no longer a genuine exception; i. e. the admission as to contents does not serve to excuse the party from production; he is required to account for the non-production, and may then use the admissions, as he could any other evidence, to prove the contents.

(e) It has been suggested, though apparently nowhere accepted, that the exception should apply only to documents "collateral" to the issue.⁷

§ 1257. Same: Related Rules (Deed-Recitals; Oral Disclaimer of Title; New York Rule). (1) It is perfectly clear and well understood that, even where the rule of Slatterie v. Pooley is not accepted, a judicial admission (post, § 2588) — i. e. a formal admission for the purposes of trial — dispenses with the necessity of production; ¹ such an admission is a waiver of dispute, and suffices to concede any fact whatever in issue.

(2) In proving a partnership, the acting as partners may with reference to third persons be the source of liability irrespective of the written articles; ² or the acts of the partners as admissions of the terms of the partnership may be regarded, upon the principle of the preceding section, as dispensing with production of the articles; ³ or the fact of the partnership may be regarded as a net resultant fact independent of the articles, so that the rule of production is not applicable (ante, § 1249); it is generally difficult to ascertain the precise ground of rulings on this point.

(3) The rule that recitals in a deed are evidence, as between the parties to it or their successors, of the contents of a former deed recited, is in effect an application and recognition of the present exception. Its propriety from the present point of view has not been questioned.⁴ The controversy has been

⁶ 1850, Flournoy v. Newton, 8 Ga. 306, 310 ("You cannot ask the witness what the opposite party has said as to the contents of papers executed by him, without accounting for their non-production"); 1812, Peart v. Taylor, 2 Bibb 556, 558 (letter admitting contents of a deed, received, the deed being lost); 1817, Clevinger v. Hill, 4 id. 498 (oral admissions "perhaps" not admissible till the deed appears unavailable); 1832, Griffith v. Huston, 7 J. J. Marsh. 385, 387 (oral admissions of predecessor received after loss shown); 1832, Thomas v. Harding, 8 Greenl. 417, 419 (admitted where the opponent had failed to produce on notice); 1827, Allen v. Parish, 3 Oh. 107, 110 (admissions of opponent's grantor as to deed's contents, received as corroborative evidence, where the deed was lost).

⁷ 1845, Crampton, J., in Lawless v. Queale, 8 Ir. L. R. 382, 390. Compare the majority's opinion in Henman v. Lester, supra, note 5.

Distinguish also the parol evidence rule (post, § 2465), as applied to title-deeds, that the parties' understanding is not to vary the terms; this may exclude admissions contradicting the deed: 1847, Maloney v. Purden, 3 Kerr N. Br. 515, 525 (predecessor's admissions, contradicting a deed, as to the land included).

¹ 1845, Lord Gosford v. Robb, 8 Ir. L. R. 217, 221, per Crompton, J.; 1851, R. v. Basingstoke, 19 L. J. M. C. 99 (Patteson, J.: "It is well put by Mr. Smith, in his 'Leading Cases,' II, 426, that . . . 'the estoppel professes, not to supply the absence of the ordinary instruments of evidence, but to supersede the necessity of any evidence by showing that the fact is already admitted'").

² 1821, Doane v. Farrow, 10 Mart. La. 74, 78.

³ 1869, Edwards v. Tracy, 62 Pa. 375, 379 (admissions of a partnership, received; following Widdifield v. Widdifield, ante, § 1249).

⁴ England: 1697, Sussex v. Temple, 1 Ld. Raym. 310, 311 (answer in chancery, acknowledging a deed, held admissible against a defendant claiming title under the party answering); 1699, Sherwood v. Adderley, ib. 734 (recital of a will in the admittance to a copyhold, held admissible against the lord in favor of the devisee, without producing the will); 1704, Ford v. Grey, 1 Salk. 286, 6 Mod. 44 ("a recital of a lease in a deed of release is good evidence of such lease against the releasor and those that claim under him; but as to others [i. e. strangers], it is not, without proving that there was such a deed and it was lost or destroyed"; the latter use, i. e. as an exception to the Hearsay rule for ancient recitals in general, is considered post, § 1573; the point of the present case is accurately expounded by Story, J., in Carver v. Jackson, infra); Georgia: 1846, M'Cleskey v. Leadbetter, 1 Ga. 551, 557 (recital of a lease, admitted against the grantor's whether such recitals could be used, as hearsay evidence, against strangers to the deed (post, § 1573) and also whether such recitals were absolutely binding (ante, § 1058), and whether they were admissible if made by a predecessor in title (ante, § 1082).

(4) The rule of the Statute of Frauds forbidding proof of an oral grant or disclaimer of title is frequently difficult to distinguish from the question of the present rule. This convergence, and that of one or two other principles, is represented in a series of New York rulings, which have much influenced other Courts. Their results may be set forth as follows: (a) A declaration admitting that the declarant holds as tenant only may be used, if made by a predecessor in title, as an ordinary admission (on the principle of § 1082, ante); or, if made by a deceased person, though a stranger, as a declaration against interest (under the Hearsay exception, post, § 1458). (b) A declaration, by either the opponent's or the proponent's predecessor, claiming or disclaiming title may be used as a verbal act coloring the possession (on the principle of § 1778, post) where it is used in support of the proponent's title by adverse possession. (c) The admission, by an opponent or his predecessor, of the contents of a deed which the proponent wishes to prove in support of a documentary title, might be used under the exception to the production-rule in Slatterie v. Pooley (ante, § 1255), if that exception were recognized; but in New York that exception is recognized only in the modified form of par. (d) of the preceding section, i. e. such admissions may be used if the document is shown to be lost or in the opponent's control.⁵ (d) Where the opponent has already shown a title by deed, an oral admission of non-title (or, disclaimer of title), by himself or his predecessor, cannot be used against him to overthrow his proof of documentary title; for, though it is in one aspect merely an admission of the contents of some unspecified lost deed, yet privies); 1856, Horn v. Ross, 20 id. 210, 220 (recitals, in a settlement deed, of an ante-nuptial contract, admitted against creditors by a subsequent debt); Pa.: 1811, Penrose v. Griffith, 4 Binn. 231, 235 (recital, in a deed, of a previous deed, admissible, against the grantor and privies, not otherwise); 1814, Stoever v. Whitman, 6 Binn. 416, 418 (recitals of a former deed, admitted against one claiming under the grantor); 1816, Bell v. Wetherill, 2 S. & R. 350 (recital of a deed in a predecessor's patent, not accompanied by possession, insufficient); 1816, Stewart v. Butler, ib. 381 (recital in a patent of a previous conveyance, received against one claiming under the grantor); 1816, Downing v. Gallagher, ib. 455 (same; but only against those claiming after the former grant); 1818, Whitmore v. Napier, 4 id. 290 (recitals of title in a land-patent, receivable against one claiming by possession, not title); 1852, Gingrich v. Foltz, 19 Pa. St. 38, 40 (recitals in a land-patent as to previous warrant, etc., are evidence against one who relies on possession alone and shows no paper title, and also against one claiming under a right arising subsequent to the patent; but not against one claiming by right prior to the patent); U. S.: 1830, Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet.

1, 83 (recital of lease in deed of release is "an estoppel, and binds parties and privies, — privies in blood, privies in estate, and privies in law; but it does not bind mere strangers, or those who claim by title paramount the deed; [i. e.], it does not bind persons claiming by an adverse title or person claiming from the parties by title anterior to the date of the reciting deed"); 1832, Crane v. Morris, 6 id. 598, 611 (same; conclusive as to contents and execution); Vt.: 1836, Lord v. Bigelow, 8 Vt. 445, 460 (legislative charter reciting former grant, admitted against privies); Va.: 1830, Blow v. Maynard, 2 Leigh 29, 49 (recital, in a post-nuptial settlement-deed, of an ante-nuptial contract not otherwise evidenced, is not binding on creditors); 1849, Wiley v. Givens, 6 Gratt. 277, 283 (recitals of an entry under a purchase from R.; not received against one claiming adversely by elder patent); 1852, Walton v. Hale, 9 id. 194, 198 (preceding case approved); 1852, Hannon v. Hannah, 146, 150 (recital of a former deed, admissible against "parties and privies in blood, in estate, and law").

⁵ See the rulings infra, in 13, 17, and 18 Johnson, 7, 8, and 14 Wendell, and 68 New York.

standing as it does by itself, and no actual defeasing deed having been shown to exist, such a declaration amounts virtually to an oral defeasance or conveyance, and thus violates the Statute of Frauds requiring conveyances to be in writing. It practically sets up a title in somebody else through the sole medium of the oral declaration.⁶ Were the existence of a specific defeasing deed to be shown, and were its loss or hostile control to be proved, then, under (c) supra, these admissions of this specific document's contents might be used. — With these more or less competing doctrines in view, the rulings are at least explainable, if not always reconcilable.⁷

⁶ This doctrine, which is in itself not connected with the subject of Evidence, and is noticed only in order to discriminate it, is expounded in the following cases, besides those cited from New York in the next note: 1856, McMaster v. Stewart, 11 La. An. 546 (title to a slave; opponent's verbal admissions cannot be used to perfect title); 1846, Harmon v. James, 7 Sm. & M. 111, 118 (oral admission "that he had conveyed all his interests to M.," not received to prove a deed).

⁷ The New York series of cases illustrating the above distinctions is here first given, those of other Courts then follow; the citations in the other sections named above (§§ 1082, 1458, 1778) may be compared: New York: 1809, Jackson v. Bard, 4 John. 230 (parties claiming under competing deeds from the same person; admissions of the defendant's intermediary vendor, as to his title, received); 1810, Jackson v. Shearman, 6 id. 19, 21 (the defendant's oral acknowledgments of the plaintiff's title, excluded as "counteracting the beneficial purposes of the statute of frauds"; yet good "to support a tenancy," or "to satisfy doubts in case of possession"); the two foregoing cases thus led into two lines of decisions, each more or less ignoring the precedents of the other: 1810, Jenner v. Joliffe, ib. 9 (oral admission of an attachment, not received; principle applicable to specialties and records); 1810, Jackson v. Vosburgh, 7 id. 186 (after proof of a chain of title, the oral disclaimers of the plaintiff's lessors were not received, following Jackson v. Shearman); 1813, Hasbrouck v. Baker, 10 id. 248 (oral admission of a subpoena's contents, insufficient, where the proponent had the document in his possession); 1815, Jackson v. Belknap, 12 id. 96 (oral admissions by a predecessor of the plaintiff's title, received); 1815, Marks v. Pell, 1 John. Ch. 594, 598 (oral admissions by a deceased grantee that the deed was taken as a mortgage, excluded, as counteracting the policy of the statute of frauds); 1816, Maury v. Heffernan, 13 John. 58, 74 (oral and written admissions of the contents of a document made abroad and unobtainable, admitted); 1818, Jackson v. M'Vey, 15 id. 234, 237 (following the Shearman case); 1819, Jackson v. Cary, 16 id. 302, 306 (declarations disclaiming a larger title under certain deeds, excluded, as "parol proof to destroy or take away a title" contravening the statute of frauds); 1820, Brandt v. Klein, 17 id. 335, 339 (recitals in a deed of the contents of a will, admitted, the will being in the opponent's possession); 1820, Jackson v. M'Vey, 18 id. 330, 333 (admissions of an opponent as to a deed, receivable, semble, under the same circumstances); 1825, Jackson v. Cole, 4 Cow. 587, 593 (oral admissions by the defendant that the land belonged to his wife, whose heir the plaintiff was, admitted; the cases of exclusion are (1) parol disclaimer of title, which is forbidden by the statute of frauds, (2) admissions of the terms of written conveyances, which violate the rule requiring production; citing the Belknap and the M'Vey cases); 1827, Jackson v. Miller, 6 id. 751, 756 (defendant's oral admissions of adverse possession, excluded, a patent title having been shown); s. c. on appeal, 6 Wend. 228 (lower Court's ruling affirmed; defendant's admissions of a conveyance by him to plaintiff's ancestor, said to be receivable if the plaintiff proved his inability to produce the original); 1830, Jackson v. Denison, 4 Wend. 558, 560 (like the Cole case; the same distinctions taken); 1831, Jackson v. Livingston, 7 id. 136, 139 (oral admissions of contents of a power of attorney, received, because the document was unavailable); 1831, Jackson v. Vail, ib. 125 (same, for a lost deed); 1832, Welland Canal Co. v. Hathaway, 8 id. 480, 486 (a written receipt admitting corporate organization, excluded; "the admissions of a party are competent evidence against himself only in cases where parol evidence would be admissible to establish the same facts," i. e. where the document is unavailable); 1834, Jackson v. Myers, 11 id. 533 (admissions of defendant's grantor, that he had received his deed from P. in fraud of P.'s creditors now claiming on execution sale, received; "the doctrine that parol declarations shall not be received to divest a legal title is not applicable in this case"; approving Jackson v. Bard); 1834, Northrup v. Jackson, 13 id. 85, semble (oral admission of a written contract, excluded); 1835, Van Duyne v. Thavre, 14 id. 235 (lost mortgage set up by defendant in an action of ejectment for dowerland; admissions of the plaintiff's husband during his lifetime, as to the mortgage, received; following Jackson v. Bard and Jackson v. Myers); 1835, Corbin v. Jackson, 14 id. 619, 623, 630 (oral admissions of the contents of a power of attorney, admitted, the loss of the document being proved by the same admissions; Tracy, Sen., dissenting, especially on the latter point); 1837, Varick v. Briggs, 6 Paige 323, 327 (predecessor's declaration as to a prior conveyance by him, admitted, the loss of the deed being shown); 1844, Hunter v. Trustees,

(5) Certain minor discriminations need occasionally to be made. For example, an admission of a document's execution is always receivable;⁸ an admission of unspecified contents is worthless;⁹ an admission, though improper under the preceding section, is sufficient if brought out by the opponent's own questions.¹⁰

§ Hill 407 (title to a burying-ground claimed by dedication; plaintiff's admissions of non-ownership, received, not to "affect his paper title," but to "give character to his possessory acts"); 1848, Pitts v. Wilder, 1 N. Y. 525, 527 (admissions of defendant's predecessor, as to the title he claimed under, received); 1859, Walker v. Dunsbaugh, 20 id. 170, 172 (defendant "showed no paper title," but offered admissions of the plaintiff that they "held under a conveyance for lives," with the defendant in remainder; held, "a party cannot make title to land by a parol admission of his adversary"); 1866, Gibney v. Marchay, 34 id. 301 (declarations of defendant's predecessor in possession, admitting purchase of the land with trust funds, semble, held not admissible to overthrow a title "of record"); 1876, Mandeville v. Reynolds, 68 id. 528, 536 (oral admissions by the defendant of the existence and contents of a judgment-roll, admissible, the roll being lost); 1901, People v. Holmes, 166 id. 540, 60 N. E. 249 (grantor's oral admissions as to title, excluded where the issue was merely whether land was within the boundary of a certain lot).

OTHER JURISDICTIONS: N. Br.: 1851, Doe v. Todd, 2 All. 261, 264 (oral admissions by the plaintiff's grantor, that he had conveyed to defendant's grantor, excluded; "it would entirely destroy the effect of the statute of frauds"); N. Sc.: 1681, Fairbanks v. Kuhn, 14 N. Sc. 147, 154 (defendant's admissions of holding under a lease, not accounted for, the defendant having shown a title by deed, held not sufficient; quaere whether admissible); Ark.: 1882, Dorr v. School District, 40 Ark. 237, 242 (testimony to acknowledgment of deed, used when offered "for a collateral purpose"); Cal.: 1877, McFadden v. Ellmaker, 52 Cal. 348, 350 (question expressly reserved); 1882, People v. Blake, 60 id. 497, 503, 511 (McKee and Ross, JJ., dissented on apparently the principle of oral disclaimer in the New York cases; but the majority ignored the point); Conn.: 1837, Deming v. Carrington, 12 Conn. 1, 6, semble (plaintiff's predecessor's admissions that a deed to himself as sole grantee was for the benefit of defendant, said to be inadmissible); Ia.: 1902, Walter v. Brown, 115 Ia. 360, 88 N. W. 832 (admissible, when "not in contradiction of the record title"; here, as to knowledge of a mortgage); Mass.: 1841, Proprietors v. Bullard, 2 Metc. 363, 368 (admissions received, but here the title admitted was prescriptive merely); 1861, Osgood v. Coates, 1 All. 77, 79 (admissions received; point not raised); Mich.: 1878, Cook v. Knowles, 38 Mich. 316 (grantor's admissions that his deed was falsely antedated, received, in order to oust his record-title by notice of a prior title; Cooley, J., diss., following Jackson v. Cole, N. Y., and distinguishing between "receiving declarations to overthrow a title by deed and a title where no deed or other writing is needful"); N. H.: 1849, Cilley v. Bartlett, 19 N. H. 312, 323 (defendant's admissions of plaintiff's title, held decisive, if believed; but here the plaintiff was grantee in the deed, and the defendant claimed as beneficiary); 1858, Fellows v. Fellows, 37 id. 73, 85 (oral admissions of non-title, held receivable); 1860, Hurlburt v. Wheeler, 40 id. 73, 76 (same); N. J.: 1856, Ten Eyck v. Runk, 26 N. J. L. 513, 517 (admissions receivable so far as "the extent of the right does not appear on the face of the title-deeds"); Pa.: 1782, Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. 64 (ejectment; defendant's oral admission that he was lessee only, received); 1832, Gibblehouse v. Stong, 3 Rawle 436, 442 (declarations by a prior owner, that he had not paid the price but held in trust for another, admitted; Huston, J., diss., approving Jackson v. Shearman, N. Y., since here "the title of the plaintiff depended on facts and recorded deeds, and could not be affected by parol declarations of any prior owner"; yet declarations as to boundary would not be excluded by this rule); 1838, Criswell v. Altemus, 7 Watts 565, 578 (oral admissions of taking a lease, held sufficient as an admission of non-adverse possession); U. S.: 1873, Smiths v. Shoemaker, 17 Wall. 630, 638 (claim of title by gift of K.; letters by the claimant in possession, acknowledging the title of J. C., received); 1876, Dodge v. Freedman's S. & T. Co., 93 U. S. 379, 383 (predecessor's admissions are not receivable "to sustain or destroy the record title"; following Jackson v. Miller, N. Y.); Utah: 1902, Scott v. Crouch, 24 Utah 377, 67 Pac. 1068 (M.'s admission that he had given a deed to D., received against M.'s administrator); Vt.: 1841, Carpenter v. Hollister, 13 Vt. 552, 555 (defendant's grantor in possession and before grant; his oral admissions that his own grantor, plaintiff's intestate, was insane when granting, excluded, against an innocent purchaser for value; because one holding by title good as appears of record should not "be defeated by the private concessions of any previous owner"; allowable only when made by occupier as to "character and extent of possession," i. e. that he possessed as tenant or according to certain boundaries); 1842, Hines v. Soule, 14 id. 99, 105 (Carpenter v. Hollister approved).

⁸ 1849, Doe v. Biggers, 6 Ga. 188, 201 (oral admissions of execution, received). See post, § 2132.

⁹ 1845, Thompson v. Fry, 7 Blackf. 608 (admission that the items in a book, not produced, were correct; insufficient). But the terms of the document need not be precisely given: post, § 2105.

¹⁰ 1831, Pettigru v. Sanders, 2 Bail. 549. Compare the English rule supra, § 1256.

§ 1258. (3) Witness' Admission of Contents, on Voir Dire. When the disqualification by interest prevailed (ante, § 576), it was well settled that, where the disqualifying fact was contained in a document, its terms might be established by the opponent's examination of the witness on voir dire. The reasons given for this exception are not always the same; but the traditional and the correct one seems to be that, since the person to be called as witness might not be known in advance to the opponent, it would be practically impossible for him to have the document at hand :

1830, Weston, J., in Miller v. Mariner's Church, 7 Greenl. 51, 54: "An objection to the witness on the ground of interest is often unexpectedly made. Neither the witness, therefore, nor the party producing him can be reasonably required to have with them written papers or documents which may happen to be referred to upon such an inquiry."

1852, Counsel, arguing in Macdonnell v. Evans, 11 C. B. 930, 937: "The rule as to examinations on voire dire is thus stated in Russell [on Crimes, II, 987]: 'The party objecting could not know previously that the witness would be called, and consequently might not be prepared with the best evidence to establish his objection'; Maule, J.: "In many cases witnesses are called whom the opposite party has no reason to expect to see; the reason, therefore, given in that book is not a good one. An examination on the voire dire is for the purpose of establishing something of which the Court is to be the judge, and not the jury. It may well be, therefore, that the rule there is not so exclusive as in the case of an examination going to a jury."

That the reason above-named, rather than the reason suggested by Mr. J. Maule, in the passage just quoted, was the true reason, is indicated by a qualification, laid down in some cases, that if the incompetency was clear and could be noticed merely on objection made, and a document removing it must clearly have been known beforehand to the party offering the witness, then he could not prove the removal of the incompetency by a re-examination without producing the document—e. g. a release—removing it.¹ But the general rule, irrespective of this modification, was well settled.²

§ 1259. (4) Witness' Admission of Contents, on Cross-Examination; Rule in The Queen's Case; Principle. In the year 1820 an English decision, soon afterwards expressly annulled by legislation, but widely followed in this country in ignorance of its repudiation in the jurisdiction of origin, laid

¹ 1829, Goodhay v. Hendry, M. & M. 319, Best, C. J. (a bankrupt, desired to be shown discharged by his certificate); Anon., ib. 321, note, Tindal, C. J. (same), semble. Contra: Wandless v. Cawthorne, ib. note, Parke, B.; 1839, Lunniss v. Row, 10 A. & E. 606 (objection to competency may be removed by oral evidence of a release-document, even though the objection was revealed to the party by the pleadings). So, too, the following variation: 1818, Butler v. Carver, 2 Stark. 433 (the witness having the document in court, production was held necessary).

² 1794, Butchers' Company v. Jones, 1 Esp. 160 (a question on the counter-examination allowed to show that a disqualification had ceased); Botham v. Swingler, ib. 164 (same; restoration to competency by oral evidence, allowed); 1811, R. v. Gisburn, 15 East 57 (a witness for a township, allowed to be asked whether he was rated for taxes, without producing the rate-book); 1824, Carlisle v. Eady, 1 C. & P. 234 (a bankrupt allowed to be asked as to his certificate of discharge); 1837, R. v. Murphy, 8 id. 297, 304; 1852, Cresswell and Maule, JJ., in Macdonnell v. Evans, 11 C. B. 930, 937; 1849, Herndon v. Givens, 16 Ala. 261, 268; 1849, Robertson v. Allen, ib. 106, 108 (even by another witness); 1824, Stebbins v. Sackett, 5 Conn. 258, 262; 1863, Babcock v. Smith, 31 Ill. 57, 61 (that a judgment had been obtained against him, allowed); 1830, Miller v. Mariner's Church, 7 Greenl. 51, 54; 1868, Nuttall v. Brannin, 5 Bush 11, 18; 1844, Oaks v. Weller, 16 Vt. 63, 68 (where the witness is out of the State and his deposition is offered, another witness may testify to a release given to the deponent, without producing it).

down a rule which for unsoundness of principle, impropriety of policy, and practical inconvenience in trials, committed the most notable mistake that can be found among the rulings upon the present subject. The doctrine laid down in The Queen's Case professed to apply the rule now under consideration, namely, that when the terms of a document are to be established, the document must be produced or accounted for; and its application here took the following shape: When a witness is to be asked on cross-examination as to the terms of a document written or signed by him, the document must be at the time produced and shown or read aloud to him before he can be asked as to its contents; in other words, he cannot be asked whether or not he said such and such things in the document, but the supposed document must be first shown to him before any questions upon its contents are allowable:

1820, The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 286; the House of Lords put the following questions to the Judges: "First, whether, in the courts below, a party on cross-examination would be allowed to represent in the statement of a question the contents of a letter, and to ask the witness whether the witness wrote a letter to any person with such contents, or contents to the like effect, without having first shown to the witness the letter, and having asked that witness whether the witness wrote that letter and his admitting that he wrote such letter? . . . Thirdly, whether, when a witness is cross-examined and, upon the production of a letter to the witness under cross-examination, the witness admits that he wrote that letter, the witness can be examined, in the courts below, whether he did not in such letter make statements such as the counsel shall, by questions addressed to the witness, inquire are or are not made therein; or whether the letter itself must be read as the evidence to manifest that such statements are or are not contained therein?" Abbott, C. J., for the judges, answered the first question in the negative: "The contents of every written paper are, according to the ordinary and well-established rules of evidence, to be proved by the paper itself, and by that alone, if the paper be in existence; the proper course, therefore, is to ask the witness whether or no that letter is of the handwriting of the witness; if the witness admits that it is of his handwriting, the cross-examining counsel may at his proper season read that letter as evidence"; the second question was answered thus: "The judges are of opinion, in the case propounded, that the counsel cannot, by questions addressed to the witness, enquire whether or no such statements are contained in the letter, but that the letter itself must be read to manifest whether such statements are or are not contained in that letter. . . . [The judges] found their opinion upon what in their judgment is a rule of evidence as old as any part of the common law of England, namely, that the contents of a written instrument, if it be in existence, are to be proved by that instrument itself and not by parol evidence."

1852, Macdonnell v. Evans, 11 C. B. 930; to show that the witness had been disgraced by a charge of forgery, he was asked: "Did you not write a letter [not in question] in answer to a letter charging you with forgery?" Maule, J.: "If you want the jury to know that there was a letter containing a charge of forgery, the proper way to do so is by producing the letter itself. . . . Suppose the witness had said, 'I did write this letter in answer to another, which is in court,' good sense obviously requires that the latter should be produced, if it is wished to get at its contents. . . . This seems to me to be just the sort of case where it is sought to give secondary evidence of the contents of a document in the power of a party who does not choose to produce it"; Cresswell, J.: "Shift it as you will, it was a mere attempt to get in evidence of the contents of a written document without putting in the document itself."¹

¹ In this case, note that the witness, by the same footing as his own, under the principle answering the first letter, put its contents on of § 2102, post.

It may be noted that this doctrine was a pure creation of this decision of 1820, and had never before been advanced;² though by the pronouncement of the Judges in the House of Lords it was followed thereafter by the Courts as the law of the land.³

§ 1260. Same: Arguments against the Rule. It cannot be denied that there is a certain plausibility in the doctrine as expounded in the above passages, and this will account for its easy acceptance in other jurisdictions; and yet there are so many arguments against it and they have been so thoroughly exploited that its perpetuation in this country is somewhat surprising.

(1) In the first place, then, let it be granted for argument's sake that by asking the witness without producing the document the rule of production is broken in upon. Why not recognize for such a case an exception to the rule? (a) There can be no case in which the contents of the document could be more trustworthily established. It is the witness' own document. No one can know better than himself what is in it. If its contents as a lost document were to be proved, this person would be the very one to be called. There can be no suspicion of misstatement, first, because the witness has been called for the other party, and, secondly, because the opponent now cross-examining is (in the usual case) desirous of discrediting the witness by the document, and the last thing to be feared is that the witness will misrepresent the document in favor of the cross-examiner. If the opponent is willing to take a hostile witness' statement of contents, who else needs to fear misrepresentation? (b) But the rule of production, — is it, then, indeed so sacred and inflexible? A number of instances have been noted in which production is dispensed with as a part of the rule itself. It has also been seen that there is a long-established exception for documents collaterally in issue (ante, § 1252); and where the witness (as in the usual case) is sought to be discredited by prior written statements, the principle of that exception is certainly satisfied.¹ It has also just been seen (ante, § 1258) that another exception is well-established for the case of a witness cross-examined to interest on the voir dire; there the effect of allowing proof by questions is much more radical, for it wholly excludes the witness, while v. Taylor, ib. 726 (rule applied); 1852, Macdonnell v. Evans, 11 C. B. 930 (quoted supra).

² 1754, Canning's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 487 (doctrine not recognized); 1816, Graham v. Dyster, 2 Stark. 21, Ellenborough, L. C. J. (where the documents were part of defendant's case but in plaintiff's possession, and the defendant was not allowed to ask contents on cross-examination; but the reason was merely that it was an improper stage of the case, and no views were expressed on the point in question); 1817, Sideways v. Dyson, ib. 49, Ellenborough, L. C. J. (same situation, but defendant offered another witness to the contents, as the basis of a cross-examination; rejected, the proper time not having been reached).

³ 1837, R. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P. 297, 304 (questions as to an article in a newspaper written by the witness; rule applied); 1839, R.

¹ 1824, Starkie, Evidence, I, 203 ("It is a remarkable circumstance that the question was never, in the course of inquiry in the case which occasioned so much discussion on the subject, directly raised whether a cross-examination as to something written by the witness, for the purpose not of proving any fact in the cause but simply of trying the credit or ability of the witness, was subject to the same strict rules as governed examination for proving material facts. . . . The principle of the rule [that the best evidence should be adduced] is applicable only to evidence to prove a material fact, and is inapplicable where the object is merely to try the credit or ability of the witness"); so also Phillipps, Evidence, 302.

here it merely discredits him. It has also been seen (ante, § 1255) that another exception exists for a party's admissions of contents; and the only risk which there exists — the possibility of fabricated testimony to the admission — is here entirely obviated by the witness' admission being made on the stand. With so many recognized limitations and analogous exceptions to the rule of production, it is pedantic to treat the present question as involving a novel inroad upon a hitherto inviolable and inflexible rule. (c) But, it is said, a witness' admissions are not admissions in the sense that a party's are.² Very true; what a party says out of court is evidence, but not what a witness says out of court (ante, § 1069). But this is not said out of court; it is said in court. It is testimony, not an admission in the common significance. Moreover, it is in the usual case (as above pointed out) decidedly trustworthy testimony, for it is against interest. (d) But, again it is said, there is no precedent for it. This, to be sure, is very little of an argument from a Court which in the same case upset the traditions of the Bar on another point by establishing another novelty already examined (ante, § 1026). But on this very point the Court itself in The Queen's Case cited no precedent in its own behalf; if there was no precedent for the present contention, there was at least no precedent against it. The Court alluded to the current practice as in harmony with its ruling; but (as above noted) the practice had before then not been in harmony with it, and the vigorous protests of Mr. Starkie, Mr. Phillipps, and other practitioners made shortly afterwards, indicate that the ruling was a surprise to the Bar. Moreover, the exceptions already pointed out, for a witness on voir dire and for collateral documents were close enough in principle to serve as precedents. In sum, then, such questions should be allowed as a matter of principle, even if their allowance involved a distinct exception to the rule of production.³

(2) But in any event, the principle is misapplied. Assuming that the rule of production should suffer no exception even where the document is only collaterally to be used and even where the witness' statement is trustworthy because made against his interest, nevertheless the rule in The Queen's Case is fallacious in that it does not correctly apply the principle it professes to invoke. The rule of production, with which our concern has been, calls for possession only of a part of the contents of the written paper; and thus the Court may never be in possession of the whole, though it may happen that the whole, if produced, may have an effect very different from that which might be produced by a statement of a part." But this objection is amply disposed of: (1) in the first place, the document itself may be produced by the witness' party, if it is in court or in his possession, to show the total effect of it; (2) the witness on re-examination may testify to any other terms of the document which counteract the possible wrong impression given by a part, under the ordinary principle of Completeness (post, § 2116); (3) the whole would have to be produced, in any case, when offered.

² 1852, Counsel in Macdonnell v. Evans, 11 C. B. 937 (quoting Taylor on Evidence, "As the parol admissions of parties are now receivable in evidence although they relate to the contents of deeds or records [citing Slatterie v. Pooley], the same rule would seem to render the answers of a witness admissible in the case just put"; Cresswell, J.: "There is this striking difference between the two cases: a party is allowed to affect his own rights by parol admissions, but here the admission [by a witness only] would affect the parties in the cause").

³ The Judges in The Queen's Case also gave the following reason, based on the principle of Completeness (post, § 2102): "If the course which is here proposed should be followed, the cross-examining counsel may put the Court in

the exhibition of the document itself to judge and jury, in distinction from evidence about the document by a witness. The judge and the jury are supposed to ascertain its contents by inspection, as a source of proof superior to the assertions of witnesses. Now this production to judge and jury has nothing to do with a showing to a witness. It is not any witness that is to determine the contents of the document, but the tribunal (ante, § 1185). Yet the Judges' answer to the first question in The Queen's Case requires a showing to the witness, by virtue of the rule for production of documents.⁴ Such a showing has nothing whatever to do with that rule. There is no reason why the document should be shown to this witness rather than to any other witness in the case. It cannot be that the preliminary asking which is required in preparing to impeach by proving inconsistent statements (ante, § 1026) calls for such a showing; that requirement calls only for a fair warning as to the subject of the statement, and, in some jurisdictions, a further specification of time, place, and person; it was never supposed, nor do the Judges in The Queen's Case contend, that the showing of the document to the witness was any consequence of the rule as to impeachment by inconsistent statements. Observe, then, the fallacious and inconsequential nature of this rule that the document must be shown, as laid down by The Queen's Case: A certain principle about proving a document by production to judge and jury is said to involve a rule requiring the showing of the document to a witness; do, then, what this supposed rule dictates — namely, show the document to the witness — and thus satisfy the supposed rule; yet you are still no nearer than before to satisfying the above general principle about proving documents by production. In other words, if the cross-examiner were to show the document to the witness and put it in his pocket again, he would have satisfied the rule laid down by the first answer in The Queen's Case, and yet he would not have satisfied the general principle of production from which that answer professed to deduce that rule.⁵ This fallacy is worth noting, for it is fundamental. The showing to the witness for his perusal is precisely the thing which the cross-examiner (for tactical reasons noted later) wishes in the usual case to avoid, and this same showing is a process which is in no way properly involved in the general principle invoked in The Queen's Case.

(3) Hitherto, it has here been assumed that the principle of production does apply to require at least production, and that (as in (1) supra) the case may be met by establishing an exception to the general principle. But, in truth, in the usual case, that principle does not require production at the time of asking the witness. Let us take, as the usual case, an attempt to impeach a witness by showing that he has at a former time in writing made an inconsistent statement on a material point or expressed a bias or a corrupt design against the opponent. The rule of impeachment applicable to such an attempt requires (ante, § 1025) that he shall be asked before leaving the stand whether he has made the statement subsequently to be proved against him. Now this asking, so far as it is a requirement, is not for the purpose of then and there proving the statement, but merely for the sake of fairly notifying him that the proof is to be offered; the requirement is satisfied by the mere asking, no matter what his answer (ante, §§ 1025, 1037). The cross-examiner, then, need not, if he does not choose, take an affirmative answer as proof; he has asked merely to satisfy the rule of fairness, and will in due time make the proof by producing the other witness (if it was an oral statement) or the document (if it was a written statement). Since, then, the asking is not done for the sake of proving the statement, the rule about proving a document's contents by production is not violated by the asking; the proof of the statement will be made later by the production of the document. This is clear enough, where the witness' answer is a denial of making the statement; but it is also true even where the witness' answer is an affirmative one; for the cross-examiner is not violating the documentary rule if he does not seek to accept the witness' answer in proof but proposes later during his own case to prove the statement and satisfy the documentary rule by producing the document. If then the cross-examiner does propose to prove the statement by the subsequent production of the document, and repudiates any desire to use the witness' affirmative answer as such proof (the asking, of course, is forced upon the cross-examiner by the impeachment-rule), he is not violating the documentary rule by not producing the document at that stage. Yet The Queen's Case erroneously assumes that he is. In other words, the impeachment-rule forces the cross-examiner to ask the question, and then The Queen's Case forbids him to ask it by conclusively imputing to him an intention to use a possible affirmative answer in a way in which he does not propose to use it even if it is given. Such is another of the incongruities of that rule.⁶

⁴ Their answer to the third question, it is true, does require merely a reading of the document, which is a legitimate way to satisfy the rule of production (ante, § 1185). But there is nothing in the correct rule which requires such a reading at that stage of the case, i. e. before the witness is asked; the reading could properly wait until the cross-examiner is ready to put in his own case; and this indeed the judges prescribe as the normal rule.

⁵ It may be said that the cross-examiner must in any case show it to the witness in order to get an admission of its execution. The answer to this is (1) it would be enough for this purpose to show the signature, (2) the cross-examiner might equally well prove the execution, if he pleased, by calling the same or some other witness when he came to put in his own case.

(4) The great objection, however, to the rule of showing, laid down in the first answer in The Queen's Case is one of practical policy. The circumstance which brought about such active opposition to it at the English Bar is that it abolished a most effective mode of discrediting a witness on cross-examination. Suppose, for example, that it is desired to show that the witness has in writing made a statement contrary to his present one, or has in writing shown bias or a corrupt intent; it is no doubt something accomplished to prove this by producing the writing; but much more, perhaps the entire overthrow of the witness, can be achieved if it is also made to appear that he is ready to falsify upon the stand in denial of this statement, or that he cannot correctly remember what he then wrote. Almost every strongly-contested trial affords examples of such an exposure; and it was by the loss of this weapon that the great practitioners contemporary with The Queen's Case were most keenly touched. Their criticism was unsparing;⁷ and the following passages forcibly illustrate their objections:

⁶ It is to be noted that the above criticism is expressly made applicable to the "usual case," i. e. of attempting to discredit by proving an inconsistent or biased statement. Where, on the other hand, the attempt is to prove the contents of a document material under the pleadings, it is clear that the rule of production does forbid this, and what is said in (3) above does not apply, although some of the considerations mentioned in (1) supra are still applicable.

1824, Mr. Thomas Starkie, Evidence, I, 203: "That the permitting such a cross-examination may frequently supply a desirable test for trying the memory and the credit of a witness admits of little doubt. If, for example, a witness profess to give a minute and detailed account of a transaction long past, such as the particulars of a conversation or the contents of a written document, and consequently where much depends upon the strength of his memory, it is most desirable to put that memory to the test by every fair and competent means. . . . If he either deny that he has made any representation on the subject, or be unable to recollect what statement he has made, the circumstance tends to impeach the faithfulness of his memory, even to a greater extent than if the representation had been merely oral, inasmuch as the act of writing is more deliberate and more likely to remain impressed on the memory than a mere oral communication. . . . A cross-examination of this nature affords no mean test for trying the integrity of the witness. An insincere witness, who is not aware that his adversary has it in his power to contradict him, will frequently deny having made declarations and used expressions which he is on cross-examination ultimately forced to avow; and it often happens that by his palpable and disingenuous attempts to conceal the truth he betrays his real character; and thus his denials, his manner and conduct, become of far greater importance, and much more strongly impeach his credit, than the answer itself does which he is at last reluctantly constrained to give. Where the party is confined to the mere production and reading of the paper, without previous cross-examination, all inferences of this nature are obviously excluded."

1828, Feb. 7, Mr. Henry Brougham, Speech on the Courts of Common Law, Hans. Parl. Deb., 2d ser., XVIII, 213, 219: "If I wish to put a witness' memory to the test, I am not allowed to examine as to the contents of a letter or other paper which he has written. I must put the document into his hands before I ask him any questions upon it, though by so doing he at once becomes acquainted with its contents, and so defeats the object of my inquiry. That question was raised and decided in the Queen's case, after solemn argument, and, I humbly venture to think, upon a wrong ground, namely, that the writing is the best evidence and ought to be produced, though it is plain that the object is by no means to prove its contents. Neither am I, in like manner, allowed to apply the test to his veracity; and yet, how can a better means be found of sifting a person's credit, supposing his memory to be good, than examining him to the contents of a letter, written by him, and which he believes to be lost? . . . I shall not easily forget a case in which a gentleman of large fortune appeared before an able arbitrator, now filling an eminent judicial place, on some dispute of his own, arising out of an election. It was my lot to cross-examine him. I had got a large number of letters in a pile under my hand, but concealed from him by a desk. He was very eager to be heard in his own cause. I put the question to him: 'Did you never say so and so?' His answer was distinct and ready, — 'Never.' I repeated the question in various forms, and with more particularity, and he repeated his answers, till he had denied most pointedly all he had ever written on the matter in controversy. This passed before the rules in evidence laid down in the Queen's case; consequently I could examine him without putting the letters into his hand. I then removed the desk, and said, 'Do you see what is now under my hand?' pointing to about fifty of his letters. 'I advise you to pause before you repeat your answer to the general question, whether or not all you have sworn is correct.' He rejected my advice, and not without indignation. Now, those letters of his contained matter in direct contradiction to all he had sworn. I do not say that he perjured himself, — far from it. I do not believe that he intentionally swore what was false; he only forgot what he had written some time before. Nevertheless he had committed himself, and was in my client's power."

⁷ "Opposed as the answers were to the most elementary principles of evidence," said Mr. Best, for example.

1849, Mr. W. M. Best, Evidence, § 478: "By requiring the document containing the supposed contradiction to be put into the hands of the witness in the first instance, the great principle of cross-examination is sacrificed at once. When a man gives certain evidence, and the object is to show that he has on a former occasion given a different account, common sense tells us that the way of bringing about a contradiction is to ask him if he has ever done so. . . . Yet, according to the practice under the resolutions in Queen Caroline's Case, if the witness had taken the precaution to reduce his previous statement to writing, the writing must be put into his hands accompanied by the question whether he wrote it, thus giving him full warning of the danger he had to avoid and full opportunity of shaping his answers to meet it."⁸

These criticisms expose the great fault in the ruling in The Queen's Case. It was unsound in principle because there is no reason why an adverse witness' testimony to contents on cross-examination should not — at least in the trial Court's discretion — be sufficient proof. But it also sinned against sound policy because it unnecessarily diminished the utility and effectiveness of that great instrument for the discovery of lies, — cross-examination. In the following passages from celebrated trials may be seen the efficiency of cross-examination, when unhampered by the rule, in exposing a falsifier:

1811, Berkeley Peerage Trial, Sherwood's Abstract, 120; Mrs. Jane Price, who had formerly lived as governess in the family of Lord Berkeley, was called to testify against the claim represented by Lady Berkeley; she had been asked: "Do you entertain any malice or ill-will towards Lady Berkeley, or any one of her family?" and had said, "Oh, none, upon my oath"; she was then asked as follows: "Did you not tell Lady Berkeley you would be her greatest enemy?" "Oh, never; Lady Berkeley cannot say it, for I never did." Afterwards the following paper was shown to the witness, and she was asked, "Is not the whole of this letter your handwriting?" — "Yes, the whole of this is mine." The same was then read, as follows: "Saturday, July 20th, 1799. Mrs. Price feels herself treated so unlike a gentlewoman in every respect in Lord Berkeley's family that she begs leave to say she wishes to be no longer engaged therein; though she does not mean to quit it without first informing her Ladyship, it is in Mrs. Price's power to be her greatest enemy."

1827, M'Garahan v. Maguire, Mongan's Celebrated Trials in Ireland, 16, 26; seduction of the plaintiff's daughter, the defendant being a priest; the case was shown by the evidence to be one of mere blackmail, but this was at the outset not apparent; the chief and first witness for the prosecution was Anne M'Garahan, the supposed victim of the defendant; and upon her cross-examination by Mr. Daniel O'Connell, the following passages took place: Mr. O'Connell: "Did you ever take a false oath about the business?" Witness: "Not that I recollect"; Mr. O'Connell: "Great God, is that a thing you could have forgotten?" Witness: "I believe I did not. I am sure I did not"; Mr. O'Connell: "Oh, I see I have wound you up. Perhaps, then, you will tell me now, did you ever swear it was false?" Witness: "I never took an oath that the charge against Mr. Maguire was false. I might have said it, but I never did swear it." . . . Mr. O'Connell: "Did you ever say that your family was offered £500 or £600 for prosecuting Mr. Maguire?" Witness: "I don't recollect"; . . . Mr. O'Connell: "Did you ever say that you would get £600 for prosecuting him?" Witness: "I never did"; Mr. O'Connell: "Or write it?" Witness: "Never"; Mr. O'Connell: "Is that your handwriting?" here a letter was handed to her; Witness: "It is"; Mr. O'Connell: "And yet you never wrote such a letter!" The letter read in part: "Dear Mr. Maguire, . . . I am the innocent cause of your present persecution. . . . Is there a magistrate in this county you can safely rely upon? If there is, let him call here as it were on a journey to feed his horse; let him have a strong affidavit of your innocence in his pocket; let me in the mean while know his name, that I may have a look out for him, and while his horse is feeding, I will slip down stairs and swear to the contents; I have already sworn to the same effect, but not before a magistrate. . . . £600 have been offered our family to prosecute you, but money shall never corrupt my heart." Witness: "I did not think when you were questioning me that you were alluding to this letter. I could not have supposed Mr. Maguire would have been so base as ever to have produced this letter, after swearing three solemn oaths that he would not. If I thought he would, I should have certainly told my counsel about it." After further questioning, "the witness seemed overcome; and she turned to the defendant, exclaiming, 'Oh, you villain! you villain!'"

⁸ See also the following criticisms: 1853, Report, 20; 1820, Mr. Denman, arguing in The Common Law Practice Commissioners, Second Queen's Case, Linn's ed. I, 465.

1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 54th day, Times' Rep. pt. 14, pp. 194, 195; this was virtually an action by Mr. Parnell and others, against the London "Times," for defamation, in charging among other things that Mr. Parnell had approved the Phoenix Park assassination; this charge was based on alleged letters of Mr. Parnell, plainly admitting complicity, sold to "The Times" by one Richard Pigott, an Irish editor, living in part by blackmail, who claimed to have procured them from other Irishmen. Pigott himself turned out to have forged them; but the case for their authenticity seemed sound, until Pigott was placed on the stand for "The Times" and came under the cross-examination of Sir Charles Russell. The object of the ensuing part of the cross-examination was to bring out Pigott's shiftness in first selling the letters as genuine to "The Times," and then offering to the Parnell party for money to enable them to disprove the letters' genuineness. The letters had been first published in a series of articles entitled "Parnellism and Crime," beginning March 7, 1887, and bringing temporary obloquy to the Parnell party and causing the passing of the Coercion Act. Archbishop Walsh, mentioned in the examination, was an intimate friend of Mr. Parnell. Pigott, in his prior examination, had claimed that he had handed the letters to "The Times" merely for the latter's protection, to substantiate the articles, and that the publication of the letters "came upon me by surprise"; the falsehoods exposed in the following answers were in a sense partly immaterial, but they served all the more to show the man's thoroughly false character: Q. "You were aware of the intended publication of that correspondence?" A. "No, I was not at all aware." Q. "What?" A. "Certainly not." . . . Q. "You have already said that you were aware, although you did not know they were to appear in 'The Times,' that there were grave charges to be made against Mr. Parnell and the leading members of the Land League?" A. "I was not aware till the publication actually commenced." Q. "Do you swear that?" A. "I do." Q. "No mistake about that?" A. "No." Q. "Is that your letter (produced)? Don't trouble to read it." A. "Yes; I have no doubt about it." Q. "My Lords, that is from Anderton's Hotel, and is addressed by the witness to Dr. Walsh, Archbishop of Dublin. The date, my Lords, is March 4, 1887, three days before the first appearance of the first series of articles known as 'Parnellism and Crime.' (Reading.) 'Private and confidential. My Lord, — The importance of the matter about which I write will doubtless excuse this intrusion on your attention. Briefly, I wish to say that I have been made aware of the details of certain proceedings that are in preparation with the object of destroying the influ- ence of the Parnellite party in Parliament.' (To witness.) What were these certain proceedings that were in preparation?" A. "I do not recollect." Q. "Turn to my Lords, Sir, and repeat that answer." A. "I do not recollect." Q. "Do you swear that, writing on the 4th of March and stating that you had been made aware of the details of certain proceedings that were in preparation with the object of destroying the influence of the Parnellite party in Parliament less than two years ago, you do not know what that referred to?" A. "I do not know really." Q. "May I suggest?" A. "Yes." . . . Q. "Did that passage refer to these letters, among other things?" A. "No, I rather fancy it had reference to the forthcoming articles." Q. "I thought you told us you did not know anything about the forthcoming articles?" A. "Yes, I did. I find now that I am mistaken, but I must have heard something about them." Q. "Try and not make the same mistake again, if you please. (Reading.) 'I cannot enter more fully into details than to state that the proceedings referred to consist in the publication of certain statements, purporting to prove the complicity of Mr. Parnell himself and some of his supporters with murders and outrages in Ireland, to be followed in all probability by the institution of criminal proceedings against these parties by the government.' Who told you that?" A. "I have no idea." Q. "Did that refer, among others, to the incriminatory letters?" A. "I do not recollect that it did." Q. "Do you swear it did not?" A. "I will not swear it did not." Q. "Do you think it did?" A. "No." Q. "Very well; did you think that these letters, if genuine, would prove, or would not prove, Mr. Parnell's complicity with crime?" A. "I thought they were very likely to prove it." Q. "Now, reminding you of that opinion, and the same with Mr. Egan, I ask you whether you did not intend to refer — I do not suggest solely, but among other things — to the letters as being the matter which would prove, or purport to prove, complicity?" A. "Yes, I may have had that in mind." Q. "You can hardly doubt that you had that in your mind?" A. "I suppose I must have had." Q. (Reading.) 'Your Grace may be assured that I speak with full knowledge, and am in a position to prove beyond all doubt or question the truth of what I say.' Was that true?" A. "It could hardly have been true." Q. "Then you wrote that which was false?" A. "I did not suppose his Lordship would give any strength to what I said. I do not think it was warranted by what I knew." Q. "Did you make an untrue statement in order to add strength to what you had said?" A. "Yes." Q. "A designedly untrue statement, was it?" A. "Not designedly." Q. "Try and keep your voice up." A. "I say, not designedly." Q. "Accidentally?" A. "Perhaps so." Q. "Do you believe these letters to be genuine?" A. "I do." Q. "And did at that time?" A. "Yes." Q. (Reading.) 'And I may further assure your Grace that I am also able to point out how the designs may be successfully combated and finally defeated.' (To witness.) Now if these documents were genuine documents, and you believed them to be such, how were you able to assure his Grace that you were able to point out how the designs might be successfully combated and finally defeated?" A. "Well, as I say, I had not the letters actually in my mind at that time, so far as I can remember. I do not recollect that letter at all." Q. "You told me a moment ago without hesitation that you had both in your mind?" A. "But, as I say, it had completely faded out of my memory." Q. "That I can understand." A. "I have not the slightest idea of what I referred to." Q. "Assuming the letters to be genuine, what were the means by which you were able to assure his Grace you could point out how the designs might be successfully combated and finally defeated?" A. "I do not know." Q. "Oh, you must think, Mr. Pigott, please. It is not two years ago, you know. Mr. Pigott, had you qualms of conscience at this time, and were you afraid of the consequences of what you had done?" A. "Not at all." Q. "Then what did you mean?" A. "I cannot tell you at all." Q. "Try." A. "I cannot." Q. "Try." A. "I really cannot." Q. "Try." A. "It is no use." Q. "Am I to take it, then, that the answer to my Lords is that you cannot give any explanation?" A. "I really cannot." . . . Q. "Now you knew these impending charges were serious?" A. "Yes." Q. "Did you believe them to be true?" A. "I cannot tell you whether I did or not, because, as I say,

I do not recollect." . . . Q. "First of all, you knew then that you had procured and paid for a number of letters?" A. "Yes." Q. "Which, if genuine, you have already told me would gravely implicate the parties from whom they were supposed to come?" A. "Yes, gravely implicate." Q. "You regard that as a serious charge?" A. "Yes." Q. "Did you believe that charge to be true or false?" A. "I believed that to be true." . . . Q. "Now I will read you this passage:—'P. S. I need hardly add that did I consider the parties really guilty of the things charged against them, I should not dream of suggesting that your Grace should take part in an effort to shield them. I only wish to impress on your Grace that the evidence is apparently convincing, and would probably be sufficient to secure conviction if submitted to an English jury.' What have you to say to that?" A. "I say nothing, except that I am sure I could not have had the letters in my mind when I said that, because I do not think the letters convey a sufficiently serious charge to warrant my writing that letter." Q. "But as far as you have yet told us the letters constituted the only part of the charge with which you had anything to do?" A. "Yes, that is why I say that I must have had something else in my mind which I cannot recollect. I must have had some other charges in my mind." Q. "Can you suggest anything that you had in your mind except the letters?" A. "No, I cannot." . . . [On the next day, when Pigott resumed his examination]: Q. "Then I may take it that since last night you have removed from your mind—I think your bosom was the expression you used—that this communication of yours [to the Archbishop] referred to some fearful charge, something not yet mentioned?" A. "No, I told you so last night, but I am sure that it is not so. I will tell you my reason." Q. "You need not trouble yourself." A. "I may say at once that the statements I made to the Archbishop were entirely unfounded." . . . Q. "Then in the letters I have up to this time read—or some of them—you deliberately sat down and wrote lies?" A. "Well, they were exaggerations; I would not say they were lies." Q. "Was the exaggeration such as that it left no truth?" A. "I think very little."

1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 31st day, Times' Rep. pt. 8, p. 212; the "Times" had charged the Irish Land League and its leaders with complicity in crime and agrarian outrage; many of the witnesses to prove its case were suspected of offering testimony fabricated by themselves in the hope of finding a willing ear and obtaining a pleasant sojourn in London and good pay for their time; one Thomas O'Connor, who had presented on the stand a highly-colored story (which was claimed by the Land League to be an entire fabrication) was thus cross-examined by Sir Charles Russell: Q. "When you came over here to give your evidence did you expect any money?" A. "I expected to be sent back." Q. "Did you expect any money?" A. "Well, no; I expected that I should be sent back and paid for the time I should spend here." Q. "Anything more?" A. "Nothing more." Q. "You did not expect to make money out of The Times?" A. "No." Q. "Merely your bare expenses?" A. "Yes." Q. "You volunteered to come over solely in the interests of morality, truth, and justice?" A. "Yes, and in the hope of banishing the hell on earth that exists round my own place in Ireland." Q. "You had no thought of gain for yourself at all?" A. "I do not care about the gain." Q. "You had no thought of gain for yourself at all?" A. "No." Q. "Were you asked by anyone to make statements incriminating any of the popular leaders in Ireland?" A. "No." . . . Q. "Were you asked to tell queer things?" A. "Well, he told me to tell everything I knew." . . . Q. "Were you afraid that because you could not tell him the queer things he wanted you would not get the money which you expected?" A. "I was not afraid of that, because I did not expect any money." Q. "Take this letter in your hand. Do not read it, but look at the signature. Have you any doubt as to its being your signature?" A. "No, I have not." Sir C. Russell: "I will read this letter:—'Dear Pat,—I was here in London since yesterday morning. I was in Dublin two days. I got myself summoned for The Times. I thought I could make a few pounds in the transaction, but I find I cannot unless I would swear queer things. I am afraid they will send me to gaol, or at least give me nothing to carry me home. I would not bother with it at all, but my health was not very good when I was at home, and I thought I would take a short voyage and see a doctor at their expense. But, instead of it doing me any good, it has made me worse a little. I will be examined to-morrow, Tuesday, the 4th.' ”⁹

§ 1261. Details of the Rule. (1) The rule of showing and reading ceases, of course, to apply when the document is shown to be lost or otherwise unavailable; for then production is dispensed with, according to the principles already noticed.¹

(2) When the cross-examiner, in asking as to a prior inconsistent statement, asks merely whether the witness made such-and-such a statement, he must, if objection is made, specify either a statement made orally or a statement made in writing, so that the present rule can be enforced in the latter case.²

(3) The witness may be shown only the signature or some other part for the purpose of obtaining an admission of the execution of the document; but, for the purpose of proving the contents, the document's production at the proper time is necessary, and without it the questions as to contents cannot be asked.³

(4) The proper time for reading the letter to judge and jury is, in the absence of special considerations, the time when the cross-examiner comes to put in his own case.⁴

⁹ The following are also illustrative: 1875, Tilton v. Beecher, N. Y., "Official" Report, III, 6-8; III, 6-8, 40-41, 109-113 (Mr. Beecher's cross-examination, by Mr. Fullerton); II, 174 (cross-examination of Mrs. S. C. D. Putnam, by Mr. Fullerton).

¹ 1820, Abbott, C. J., in the answer to the first question, in The Queen's Case, ante, § 1259; Starkie, Evidence, I, 202; Phillipps, Evidence, I, 298; 1840, Davies v. Davies, 9 C. & P. 252 (an office-copy, admitted to be correct, of an affidavit in another Court; cross-examination on it allowed).

² 1820, The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 292 (Abbott, C. J.: "A witness is often asked whether there is an agreement for a certain price for a certain article . . . or other matter of that kind, being a contract; and when a question of that kind has been asked at nisi prius, the ordinary course has been for the counsel on the other side . . . to ask the witness whether the agreement referred to in the question originally proposed by the counsel on the other side was or was not in writing; and if the witness answers that it was in writing, then the enquiry is stopped, because the writing itself must be produced").

³ 1820, The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 286; 1848, Clapp v. Wilson, 5 Den. 285, 287; 1903, Treutham v. Bluthenthal, 118 Ga. 530, 45 S. E. 421.

⁴ 1820, The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 289 (Abbott, C. J.: "According to the ordinary rule of proceeding in the courts below, the letter is to be read as the evidence of the cross-examining counsel as part of his evidence

in his turn after he shall have opened his case; that is the ordinary course. But if the counsel who is cross-examining suggests to the Court that he wishes to have the letter read immediately in order that he may, after the contents of that letter shall have been made known to the Court, found certain questions upon the contents of that letter, to be propounded to the witness, which could not well or effectually be done without reading the letter itself, that becomes an excepted case in the courts below, and for the convenient administration of justice the letter is permitted to be read at the suggestion of the counsel," but as still his evidence); 1901, St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Faisst, 68 Ark. 587, 61 S. W. 374 (a writing may be read when cross-examining to lay the foundation, "if cross-examination upon the contents is desired and suggested to the Court"); 1902, Hennessy v. Ins. Co., 74 Conn. 699, 52 Atl. 490 (whether it is to be put in evidence during the cross-examination is in the trial Court's discretion); 1898, Peyton v. Morgan Park, 172 Ill. 102, 49 N. E. 1003 (to be offered after cross-examination in the cross-examiner's case); 1872, Haines v. Ins. Co., 52 N. H. 470, 471 ("such matters as the identity of the paper and of the witness, and the genuineness of the signature, are not usually in dispute; and it would be well to wait and see what objections will be made to the introduction of the deposition when it is offered at the proper time"; but "no absolute rule can be laid down, because it is a matter of fact and reasonableness"); 1872, Romertze v. Bank, 49 N. Y. 579 (document need not be offered till examiner's own case is put in; unless perhaps

§ 1262. Same: Rule as applied to Prior Statements in Depositions. When a witness' testimony is taken down at a preliminary hearing for committal by a magistrate, or is taken by a commissioner in the shape of a deposition, it seems to be generally conceded that the written report is preferred testimony to his statements, i. e. it must be produced or accounted for before testimony can be given of the witness' oral words (post, §§ 1326-1332). This is not the same as holding that the magistrate's report is the witness' testimony (instead of the witness' oral words).—though this may be so where the witness has signed the report, and it is always taken to be so in the case of a deposition (in the strict sense) taken by a commissioner. However, waiving these objections (dealt with post, § 1349, with reference to the theory of such examinations), and assuming that the magistrate's written report or the commissioner's certified deposition is a statement in writing by the examinee or deponent, the rule in The Queen's Case obviously applies; i. e. a witness upon the stand cannot be asked as to any statements made in a deposition or at a magistrate's examination without producing and showing the document. This is simple enough as to a deposition, strictly so called. But as to a magistrate's report of an examination, the rule requiring it to be used as preferred proof of the witness' answers (post, § 1326) does not make it a preferred proof where it has omitted to record the answer in question, or at least where the answer or remark was not made during the course of the examination and thus was not required to be recorded by the magistrate (post, § 1326). There may thus have been oral answers of which the magistrate's report cannot be expected to furnish the written proof. Hence it would not be proper to cross-examine a witness about these statements, until it has been made to appear that the question refers to statements which could not have been in the magistrate's report or which could have been, but in fact are not, there found.

Such was, in England, the principle and effect of the Resolutions of the Judges in 1837.¹ The question had not attracted attention before that time,² because by the Prisoners' Counsel Act,³ in 1836, a counsel's aid for the first time became available, for the purposes of cross-examination, to defendants accused of felony, and so such attempts to discredit a prosecuting witness by professional methods had just begun to be common. The bindingness of this rule was for a time disputed.⁴ The chief reason for the stand taken by the in the Court's discretion, in order to allow explanations by the witness). Compare § 1884.

For the question whether the whole of the writing must be shown to the opponent's counsel on request, see post, §§ 1861, 2125.

¹ 1837, circa February, Resolutions of Judges, 7 C. & P. 676 (1) The witness cannot be asked whether he made a statement in his deposition before the magistrate, without reading the deposition as a part of his evidence; (2) So for questions as to other statements before the magistrate; the deposition must first be read to see whether it contains them; (3) So for questions as to any self-contradictions whatever; the question must specifically negative any reference to the deposition's statements); this last rule being established, as a logical consequence of the first two, by R. v. Holden, 8 C. & P. 609 (1838) and R. v. Shellard, 9 id. 279 (1840); but R. v. Moir, 4 Cox Cr. 279 (1850) is contra to this Rule 3.

² The following case dealt with a slightly different point: 1832, Ridley v. Gyde, 1 M. & Rob. 197, Tindal, C. J. (where the witness was asked whether he had mentioned a fact when examined before the bankruptcy commissioners; rule held not applicable).

³ St. 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 114.

⁴ In R. v. Coveney, 8 C. & P. 31 (January,

Bar against them was the supposed absence of a right in the prosecuting counsel to address the jury in closing, if the defence had introduced no evidence of its own; for thus, if the defence could by mere cross-examination bring out these self-contradictions, the prosecution would have no right to make a closing address; while if the defence were obliged to put in the deposition as a part of its own case, the prosecution would gain the right to make a closing address. But it seems to have been settled soon afterwards that the prosecution had such a right in any case, though it had customarily not been exercised;⁵ and thus the chief reason for opposition ceasing to exist, the Resolutions received thereafter a general enforcement.⁶ Attempts to evade them by indirection were discountenanced. Thus, the rule was held to be violated where the witness was shown his deposition and asked to say, after reading it silently, whether he persevered in his statement just made on the stand; for in this way there is given to the jury an implication as to the contents of the deposition.⁷ But merely asking the witness to take the deposition and refresh his memory therefrom, and then to say whether after refreshing it he perseveres in his statement just made on the stand, does not necessarily convey such an implication, and would be allowable.⁸

It should, however, be noted that, irrespective of the rule in The Queen's Case (i. e. in jurisdictions where it is not in force), this use of a deposition to refresh memory raises three other and independent questions, (1) whether its use on cross-examination is dishonest under certain circumstances, as just mentioned (note 7, supra; and ante, § 764), (2) whether it may properly be done, the deposition not being a contemporary memorandum (ante, § 761), and (3) whether when done on re-direct examination it violates the rule against impeaching one's own witness (ante, § 904).

1837), Pattenon, J., had allowed the question forbidden by Rule 1 to be asked and the affirmative answer to be taken as proof.

⁵ April, 1837, R. v. Edwards, 8 C. & P. 26, 29, Coleridge, J. A compromise was in this case suggested, by which the judge should follow, deposition in hand, the witness' testimony on the stand, if he chose to do so in his discretion. But even here, "if the judge should refer to the depositions, and so introduce new facts in evidence," by questioning the witness about discrepancies, Coleridge, J., was not sure that the right to reply was lost.

⁶ 1837, R. v. Edwards, 8 C. & P. 26, per Coleridge and Littledale, JJ.; at p. 31 is given a list of unreported rulings in which other judges affirmed the Resolutions. But they seem subsequently to have been confined to strict limits: 1861, R. v. Maloney, 9 Cox Cr. 26 (on cross-examination a question allowed as to what the witness had said before the coroner, without producing the deposition, because the judges' rules applied only to examinations before a magistrate).

⁷ 1850, R. v. Newton, 15 L. T. 26; 1851, R. v. Ford, 5 Cox Cr. 184; 1863, R. v. Brewer, 9 id. 409 (proposition to have the witness peruse the deposition and then say whether he adhered to his answer, rejected; the deposition must be "put in in the regular way"; following R. v. Ford). The following ruling rests on the same principle: 1849, R. v. Matthews, 4 Cox Cr. 93 (the witness not being able to read, counsel offered to have a court-officer read his deposition aloud to him, so as to refresh his memory and see whether he adhered to it; excluded, because it would make the officer a witness to contradict). But even since the statutory abolition of the rule in The Queen's Case, R. v. Ford may still in another aspect be correct; i. e. though the witness' testimony to the fact of contradicting himself would be proper without reading the document itself, yet if the witness said that he did "persevere in his statement," the implication that he had formerly stated the contrary might be in fact unjust, — the result of the counsel's trick. On this point, see ante, § 764.

⁸ 1837, R. v. Edwards, 8 C. & P. 26, 31; 1850, R. v. Barnett, 4 Cox Cr. 269.

For the American rulings on the subject of the above section, see the notes to the next section.

§ 1263. Same: Jurisdictions recognizing the Rule in The Queen's Case. In England, the rule laid down in The Queen's Case, so far as it applied to attempts to discredit a witness by cross-examining him to prior inconsistent or biassed or corrupt utterances, was unanimously condemned by the Bar; and, when the general revision of common-law procedure took place in 1854, a statute was passed which (a) expressly abolished the really vicious and totally indefensible part of the rule, namely, the requirement that the document must be shown to the witness before asking him about it, and (b) by implication abolished the requirement of then producing and reading the document, and thus allowed any document's terms to be proved by testimony of the writer on cross-examination without subsequent production; though in case of the witness' denial, production would of course be necessary; and in any case whatever the statute authorizes a judicial discretion to order production.¹ The judicial construction of the statute seems to accept these consequences fully.²

In Canada, similar corrective statutes have been enacted; though they seem to have been by some Courts construed strictly.³

In the United States, the rule seems not to have existed before 1820; wherever it was advanced, it seems to have come directly by adoption of the ruling in The Queen's Case. The statutory abolition of the rule in England

¹ 1854, St. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, § 24 ("A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing or reduced into writing, relative to the subject-matter of the cause, without such writing being shown to him; but if it is intended to contradict such witness by the writing, his attention must, before such contradictory proof can be given, be called to those parts of the writing which are to be used for the purpose of so contradicting him; provided always that it shall be competent for the judge, at any time during the trial, to require the production of the writing for his inspection, and he may thereupon make such use of it for the purposes of the trial as he shall think fit"); extended in 1865 to criminal cases: 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, § 5; 1874, Day, Common Law Procedure Acts, 4th ed., 277 ("The effect is this: the witness in the first instance may be asked whether he has made such and such a statement in writing without its being shown to him. If he denies that he has made it, the opposite party cannot put in the statement without first calling his attention to it (showing it, or at least reading it to him) and to any parts of it relied upon as a contradiction").

It does not appear from the statute whether "calling his attention" means "showing the writing." But this is immaterial; the important thing is that the witness' readiness to lie or inability to remember can be tested by asking him before showing the writing to him.

² 1858, Sladden v. Sergeant, 1 F. & F. 322, Willes, J. (cross-examination on an affidavit made by the witness; production not necessary); 1858, Ireland v. Stiff, ib. 340 (Wilkes, J.: "Strictly, the course is, to ask first if he received a letter of a certain date; then if he received a letter commencing, etc. It will come to the same thing [i. e., as here, where counsel asked if he had received a letter in the following terms]; it is only for the purpose of identification"); 1859, Farrow v. Blomfield, ib. 653 (Pollock, C. B., allowing a question to the plaintiff on cross-examination as to the contents of a letter inconsistent with his testimony: "If a question arises as to the contents of a written instrument, and you can get a witness to come and swear that he heard the plaintiff say it contained such and such expressions, that is good evidence of the contents of the instrument without producing it. And if the plaintiff is himself in the box, you may ask him as to the contents of the document, and his answer will be as good evidence as any previous statement. . . . The judge might say that the document ought to be produced; I should do so myself in some cases"); see also North Austr. T. Co. v. Goldborough, 1893, 2 Ch. 381, 386.

³ Dom. Crim. Code 1892, § 700 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 24; adding that a purporting deposition, duly produced, shall be presumed to have been signed by the witness); B. C. Rev. St. 1897, c. 71, § 30 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 24); N. Br. Consol. St. 1877, c. 46, § 21 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 24); 1859, Lawton v. Chance, 4 All. 411 (trial Court's discretion to order production under the statute, here exercised); 1862, Campbell v. Gilbert, 5 id. 420, 426 (trial Court's discretion exercised to require production of the original document being in England, not an office copy); 1880, R. v. Tower, 20 N. Br. 168, 190, 198 (cross-examination under the statute, without offering the paper in evidence, not allowed where it did not appear that did not become known in this country except in a few quarters.⁴ The singular spectacle was presented of many Courts in this country adopting a supposed rule which had been repudiated in its jurisdiction of origin a generation before. The question has not been passed upon in all of our jurisdictions; but the rule has been adopted in most courts where the objection has been raised, although there has been little attempt to develop its details, particularly as regards the use of questions upon depositions.⁵ The unfortuthe witness himself had written, signed or seen the paper); Newf. Consol. St. 1892, c. 57, § 19 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 24); N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 153, § 44 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 24); Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 73, § 17 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 24); P. E. I. St. 1889, c. 9, § 17 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 24).

⁴ Probably because the learned author of Greenleaf on Evidence died in 1853, the year before the statute, and The Queen's Case remained elaborately treated as law in his text, while the statute was only noticed in an obscure corner of the editorial notes.

⁵ For depositions, the cases cited ante, §§ 761, 764, 904, must be compared: Alabama: 1883, Wills v. State, 74 Ala. 24 (writing must be shown and read; here, testimony before a committing magistrate); 1884, Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Muog, 78 id. 310 (same for deposition; here read aloud to witness, who could not read); 1885, Floyd v. State, 82 id. 22 (same rule; testimony before a committing magistrate); 1887, Gunter v. State, 83 id. 106 (same, preliminary examination of witness before justice of the peace); 1895, Sanders v. State, 105 id. 4, 16 So. 935 (cross-examination to former testimony reduced to writing, allowed without production); 1903, United States F. & G. Co. v. Dampskibaktieselskabet Habi, — id. —, 35 So. 344 (witness' memory of a contract tested without showing him the paper); Alaska: C. C. P. 1900, § 670 (like Or. Annot. C. 1892, § 841); Arkansas: Stas. 1894, § 2960 (if the statement "is in writing, it must be shown to the witness, and he allowed to explain it"); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 2052 (impeachment by prior self-contradiction; "if the statements be in writing, they must be shown to the witness before any question is put to him concerning them"); § 2054 (quoted post, § 1861; it perhaps affects this point); 1872, People v. Donovan, 43 Cal. 162, 165, semble (writing must be shown to the witness); 1872, People v. Devine, 44 id. 452 (former testimony at inquest; after questions as to time and place, held proper to put in the deposition, though not shown or read to the witness; present point not considered); 1875, Leonard v. Kingsley, 50 id. 628, 630 (letters; "he should have called the attention of the witness to them"); 1882, People v. Hong Ah Duck, 61 id. 387, 394 (allowing contradiction by coroner's deposition; question not raised); 1887, People v. Ching Hing Chang, 74 id. 393, 16 Pac. 201 (testimony reduced to writing in foreign language must be translated); 1893, People v. Kruger, 100 id. 523, 35 Pac. 88 (question as to former statements, allowed, without reading over the writing); 1895, People v. Dillwood, — id. —, 39 Pac. 438 (testimony before magistrate;

must be read, and shown to him if required); 1898, People v. Lambert, 120 id. 170, 52 Pac. 307 (the reading over of a deposition, if asked for by the witness as a substitute for showing, should not be allowed to cover the whole deposition, but only the self-contradictory parts); Florida: 1893, Simmons v. State, 32 Fla. 387, 391, 13 So. 896 (former testimony, reduced to writing by magistrate, must be shown to witness); Georgia: Code 1895, § 5292 ("if in writing, the same should be shown to him, or read in his hearing, if in existence"); 1853, Stamper v. Griffin, 12 Ga. 454 (letter; the writing must be shown to the witness); but notice that since in this State the ruling for asking does not apply to prior sworn statements (ante, § 1035), the present rule also does not apply to them: 1900, Taylor v. State, 110 id. 150, 35 S. E. 161 (questions as to former testimony officially reported, allowed in order to test sincerity or memory, without production of report; but before proof of the former statements by the report, its contents should be "made known to her" and the report produced); Hawaii: Civil Laws 1897, § 1423 (like Eng. St. 1854, with "or prosection" after the words "of the cause"); Idaho: Rev. St. 1887, § 6083 (like Cal. C. C. P., § 2052); Illinois: 1893, Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Feehan, 149 Ill. 202, 214, 36 N. E. 1036 (witness apparently not shown a deposition, and the deposition then excluded because the witness' admission on cross-examination sufficed); 1897, Swift v. Madden, 165 id. 41, 45 N. E. 979 (contents of deposition read to the witness; no ruling on the present point); 1898, Peyton v. Morgan Park, 172 id. 102, 49 N. E. 1003 (similar); 1902, Momence Stoue Co. v. Groves, 197 id. 88, 64 N. E. 335 (inquiry as to the contents of a written statement by the witness, held improper); Iowa: 1861, Morrison v. Myers, 11 Ia. 539 (letter; showing necessary); 1868, Callanan v. Shaw, 24 id. 454 ("the better, and probably the correct practice" is to show it); 1871, State v. Collins, 32 id. 41 ("his attention must first be drawn to the time, etc.;" nothing said about showing the document); 1879, Peck v. Parchen, 52 id. 46, 52, 2 N. W. 597 (document must be shown); 1883, Glenn v. Gleason, 61 id. 28, 33, 15 N. W. 659 (the whole of a letter must be shown, and not merely parts required to be read; asking about the contents of a letter admitted genuine, held improper); Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, § 598 ("if it [a different statement] be in writing, it must be shown to the witness, with opportunity to explain it"); § 604 (writing shown and proved must be read to jury before witness' testimony closed); 1901, Hendrickson v. Com., — Ky. —, 64 S. W. 954 (rule in The Queen's Case applied); Louisiana:

nate rule should once and for all be disposed of by a statutory measure similar to the English provision; although correct common-law principles would amply suffice to prevent its establishment.

1889, State v. Callegari, 41 La. An. 580, 7 So. 130 (testimony at a preliminary examination, reduced to writing; showing required); 1902, State v. Cain, 106 La. 708, 31 So. 300 (rule repudiated, no authority cited); Massachusetts: 1873, Com. v. Kelley, 112 Mass. 452 (a constable, sought to be discredited by the contents of his oath made in getting a search-warrant; writing must be shown); Michigan: 1868, Lightfoot v. People, 16 Mich. 513 (deposition; "If a party desires to cross-examine the witness on the subject of his former statements, he should read the entire deposition in evidence before doing so. If he does not desire to cross-examine on that topic, it is sufficient to read it at any time"); 1881, DeMay v. Roberts, 46 id. 160, 163, 9 N. W. 146 (rule applied to an affidavit); 1888, Toohey v. Plummer, 69 id. 345, 349, 37 N. W. 297 (minutes of former testimony by a stenographer, not called, read over in part to the witness; reading of the whole not required, the supposed contradiction not being in truth in writing; "the minutes are not like a deposition read to the witness and then signed by him"); 1892, Maxted v. Fowler, 94 id. 106, 111, 53 N. W. 921 (showing required); 1892, Anstrian v. Springer, ib. 343, 353, 54 N. W. 50 (questions on cross-examination about contents of a letter, allowed without producing); Minnesota: 1893, O'Riley v. Clampet, 53 Minn. 539, 55 N. W. 740 (must be not only shown but introduced in evidence); Mississippi: 1876, Scarborough v. Smith, 52 Miss. 517, 522 (mere questioning, apparently enough; nothing said about showing the paper; here, a memorandum of former testimony); 1879, Cavanah v. State, 56 id. 299, 307 (written report of former testimony must be shown to the witness); 1878, Mitchell v. Savings Inst., 56 id. 444, 448 (letter; the witness' "attention should have been directed to it"); 1891, Story v. State, 68 id. 609, 630, 10 So. 47 (cross-examination as to a telegram sent by the witness; the telegram required to be shown to him); Missouri: 1865, Gregory v. Cheatham, 36 Mo. 161 (letter; showing required); 1875, Prewitt v. Martin, 59 id. 334 (showing required); 1877, Spoonmore v. Cables, 66 id. 579 (affidavit containing a contradiction, shown to the witness); 1883, State v. Grant, 79 id. 113, 132 (affidavit to contradict one testifying by deposition; must be produced and asked about); 1883, State v. Stein, ib. 330 (letter required to be shown); 1885, State v. Matthews, 88 id. 121, 124 (after the witness' admission of genuineness, the whole writing must be read, and not merely particular passages be read and inquired about); 1889, State v. Young, 99 id. 666, 681, 12 S. W. 879 (defendant's statement before coroner reduced to writing; attention must be called); Montana: C. C. P. 1895, § 3380 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2052); 1896, State v. O'Brien, 18 Mont. 1, 43 Pac. 1091 (statute applied); Nebraska: 1879, Crosey v. Averill, 8 Nebr. 151, 157 (deposition must first be proved and read before cross-examination); 1901, Omaha L. & T. Co. v. Douglas

Co., 62 id. 1, 86 N. W. 936 (rule applied); New Hampshire: 1872, Haines v. Ins. Co., 52 N. H. 467, 470 (cross-examination upon a deposition for the purpose of impeaching or showing any inconsistency is not allowable; asking questions to prove the signature or to identify the deposition is a matter within the discretion of the trial Court as to the time of doing so, and "no absolute rule can be laid down"); New Mexico: Comp. L. 1897, § 3023 (like Eng. St. 1854, without the proviso); New York: 1832, Bellinger v. People, 8 Wend. 599 (a former examination before a magistrate, to show self-contradiction; the document must be shown or read); 1848, Clapp v. Wilson, 5 Den. 286, 288 (need not call attention to a particular passage, but must merely show the whole paper and get an admission of genuineness; but a deposition need not be shown to a witness to call his attention, "being a sworn statement in writing"); 1862, Newcomb v. Griswold, 24 N. Y. 301 (a former affidavit, whether as cross-examiner's own evidence or as a contradictory statement does not appear; documents must be shown or read); 1872, Romertze v. Bank, 49 id. 578 (a deposition de bene, used to show self-contradiction; must be shown or read; but particular passages need not be called attention to); 1872, Gaffney v. People, 50 id. 423 (must first be shown); Oregon: C. C. P. 1892 § 841 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2052); 1868, State v. Taylor, 3 Or. 10 (former testimony; the writing must be shown, even though the words asked about are in fact not in it); 1896, State v. Steeves, 29 id. 85, 43 Pac. 947 (statute applied); Pennsylvania: St. 1887, Pub. L. 158, § 3, P. & L. Dig. Witnesses, § 6 (former testimony to contradict a witness in criminal cases "may be orally proved"); Tennessee: 1872, Titus v. State, 7 Baxt. 132, 136 (deposition taken by magistrate need not be shown to witness before offering, because it is not the witness' writing; but a letter said to be the witness' must be shown); United States: 1884, The Charles Morgan, 115 U. S. 69, 77, 5 Sup. 1172 (must be shown to witness, "except under special circumstances"; "all that the law requires is that the memory of the witness shall be so refreshed by the necessary inquiries as to enable him to explain, if he can and desires to do so"; the trial Court to determine this); 1890, Chicago M. & S. P. R. Co. v. Artery, 137 id. 520, 11 Sup. 129 (The Queen's Case mentioned with approval, but on another point); 1892, Toplitz v. Hedden, 146 id. 254, 13 Sup. 70 (the plaintiff was asked whether in a former suit he had made a certain claim; an objection that the record should be produced was overruled; "if he wished to appeal to the prior record, to refresh his recollections he could call for it and do so; but the evidence as offered was competent, irrespectively of the record"); Vermont: 1862, Randolph v. Woodstock, 35 Vt. 295 (letter need not be shown; "the plaintiffs were bound to first ask the witness before they would be allowed to contradict him, even by producing the letter. The plaintiffs

D. RULES ABOUT SECONDARY EVIDENCE OF CONTENTS (COPIES, DEGREES OF EVIDENCE, ETC.).

§ 1264. In General. When the rule under consideration is satisfied, by accounting for the non-production of the document itself, the function and effect of the rule ends. The rule itself says nothing about the ways of evidencing a document not produced. The rule requires that as a preferred source of proof, the document itself be produced for autoptic inspection, and recognizes certain exemptions from production. Any rules that may obtain as to the mode of proving an unproduced document, by testimony of one sort or another, rest upon some other principle of evidence. Nevertheless, for the sake of practical convenience, such of them as can adequately be examined apart from those other general principles will be here considered, with references to the general principles under which they properly belong.

1. Rules Preferring One Kind of Testimony above Another (Degrees of Evidence, etc.).

§ 1265. General Principle. Under another head (§§ 1285-1339) it will be seen that a group of rules is recognized in our law by which one kind of witness to a certain fact is preferred above another; i. e. the former witness' testimony must be obtained if it is available, and the latter's may be used only when the former's appears to be unavailable. By one variety of such rules — less common — the one witness' testimony is absolutely preferred, i. e. it is the only kind that can be used, and the other will not be received even though the former is unavailable. The rules of this sort do not form a systematic group or a single body of doctrine; each of them owes its existence to the peculiar circumstances of some given situation making a particular kind of testimony highly desirable. It is feasible, without doing violence to the exposition of those rules in their proper place, to consider here such of them as deal with evidence of the contents of documents by preferring one kind of testimony to contents above another. The general notion underlying the group of rules as a whole is elsewhere considered (post, § 1285); but in the present place will be examined all the rules and precedents specifically dealing with testimony to the contents of a document.

These rules of preference deal with four general questions: 1. When is testimony by copy preferred to testimony by oral recollection? 2. When is testimony by official copy preferred to testimony by private copy? 3. When must of course take the witness' statements as to what he wrote, unless they were prepared to contradict him by producing the letter, and could not prove its contents by witnesses without showing its loss"); 1898, Billings v. Ins. Co., 70 Vt. 477, 41 Atl. 516 (rule repudiated); Virginia: St. 1899-1900, c. 117, § 3 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, except that after the words "contradicting him," the words are added "and the said writing shall be shown to him"; this insertion, unless very liberally construed, is likely to have the absurd and perverse effect of nullifying the only value of the statute, by requiring precisely what the original statute was intended to abolish; the framers of this legislation seem hardly to have appreciated the real problem at issue; Wisconsin: 1880, Kalk v. Fielding, 50 Wis. 339, 342 (letter received by opponent; cross-examination to contents, allowed without production; Taylor, J., diss.).

is one kind of recollection-testimony preferred to another? 4. When is testimony by direct copy preferred to testimony by copy of a copy?

§ 1266. Nature of Copy-Testimony, as distinguished from Recollection-Testimony. What is a copy, as distinguished from other testimony to contents? This is a fundamental inquiry; for a correct notion of the significance of a copy will enable us to form a just idea of the reasons for making rules of preference. A person who is qualified to testify to the contents of a document may present his knowledge in one of two ways: (1) He may, having at some time perused the document, summon up his recollection on the stand, and repeat the document's terms as furnished by that recollection. (2) Or, having in the same way perused the document, (a) he may have written down its words at the time of perusal, in successive stages, by writing the few words that he can carry precisely in his mind for the moment, and so on until the whole is transcribed; (b) or (as merely a variety of this method) he may have taken an alleged copy already made by another or by himself, and compared the original and this other, word for word or clause for clause; the only difference between these two sub-varieties (a and b) being that in the latter he has not had to carry any words in his mind during the time of transcribing, and has thus gained a greater probability of accuracy by reducing the necessary time of recollection to a minimum. Now between these two modes, (1) and (2), there is obviously a great difference in trustworthiness. By the former mode, the memory has had to be trusted for a considerable length of time, — perhaps for a day, perhaps for ten years. This recollection of the precise words of the document is sure to fade and to become less accurate than at the first moment after the perusal of each word or clause. The increasing degree of untrustworthiness (assuming the honesty and intelligence to be alike in the same witness for all kinds of testimony) will depend partly on the length of the document, partly on the circumstances likely to emphasize the words in his memory, and partly on the space of time that has elapsed between his perusal and his testimony on the stand. Thus his recollection-testimony may be highly trustworthy, and yet may be worthless. But his copy-testimony eliminates all these elements of untrustworthiness; the length of the document, the emphasis of words, the lapse of time, are all immaterial, for he transcribed or examined the copy word for word at such a time that there was practically no demand made upon his powers of memory; the transcription then permanently made in writing (and adopted on the stand as a record of past knowledge; ante, §§ 734, 739) preserves the words without any of the risk of change or disappearance that attends the operations of memory; moreover, the fact of a change, if it has occurred, is made known by the appearance of the writing.

Such being the difference in trustworthiness between copy-testimony and recollection-testimony, does the law establish any rule of preference for the former over the latter? It is common to refer to this question by contrasting "oral evidence," or "parol evidence," with a copy; but the former terms are so loose and ambiguous (post, § 2400) that their further employment for purposes of discussion would be unpardonable. The proper contrast is between copy-testimony and testimony by present recollection.

§ 1267. Is a Written Copy the Exclusive Form of Testimony? Proof of a Lost Record, Will, etc., by Recollection. Is this relative untrustworthiness of recollection-testimony so great that such testimony will never be received to prove the contents of a document, even where copy-testimony is not available? In other words, is the latter absolutely preferred (post, § 1345) to the exclusion of the former? Such a doctrine has never been suggested for ordinary writings. But it has often been urged as proper in application to judicial records, deeds, and wills. It is to be noted that the question is whether recollection-testimony is to be used, or else no evidence at all; for, by hypothesis, the original cannot be had, and copy-testimony is not available. Thus the question to be considered is whether the dangers of inaccuracy that may attend the reception of recollection-testimony are sufficiently great to over-balance the dangers attending the entire failure of evidence of the contents of lost or destroyed records and the like. On this point, it is clear that the answer must be in the negative; the considerations are well expounded in the following passage:

1799, Haywood, J., note to Haggelt v. —, 2 Hayw. 243: "When there is no record or deed, nor any copy, parol evidence will in general relate the fact truly, and is as much better than no evidence at all as records and deeds are superior to itself. It ought to be received upon the same principle as they are, not because there is absolute certainty either in the one or in the other (for a record or deed may be altered, corrupted, substituted, or the like), but because, in choosing probabilities, it is wise to take the best that offers. To require the production of a record or deed, when there is undoubted proof of its destruction, is to require an impossibility, and lex neminem cogit ad impossibilia. To say his right shall be lost with the record or deed that proves, though destroyed by invincible calamity, is to inflict punishment for the acts of Heaven, and actus Dei nemini facit injuriam. It were far better to abolish the institution of deeds and records altogether than to admit the position under consideration as a consequence of them. . . . If it be argued that the party should take and preserve a copy of the record amongst his other evidences, and then the loss of the record would not prejudice him, and that it is his own fault if he neglects to do so and the record becomes extinct, the answer is, [Firstly] that in contemplation of law he is not bound to take a copy till his occasions require it, for the law itself has undertaken to keep and preserve the record for him, to the end he may have a copy when he wants it, and therefore the not taking or not keeping a copy cannot be imputed to his negligence; Secondly, if he take a copy, that as well as the record may be lost; yet according to the controverted position, he cannot be let into parol evidence."

1850, Scott, J., in Davies v. Pettit, 11 Ark. 349, 352: "It is known that not only the existence and loss but also the contents of lost bonds, bills, notes, and other memorials of contracts and various other written instruments, from time immemorial have been allowed to be proven by parol evidence; and that many of these relate to the most important transactions among men, and that they are in general executed in privacy and comparatively but few of them are ever submitted to the public gaze. And yet the inquest of centuries has failed to present this rule to the Legislature as a public grievance in promoting perjury, and for this reason to demand its eradication from our judicial regulations. If, then, the morals, and safety of society have received no serious injury from its operation in a wide field of temptation, where the suborned are for the most part unchecked by the public eye, can it be possible that the admission of parol evidence of the loss and the effect of judgments at law, which are not produced in private like these private instruments of evidence, but are the result of the united action of the judge, jury, officers of Court, parties, their attorneys and witnesses, all under the eye of the bystanders, can be productive of the great evils apprehended from this source? On the contrary, is it not certain that of all the cases of the proof, by parol, of the contents of lost instruments of evidence, that of lost judgments, from the circumstances to which we have alluded, is most secured against the crime of perjury? — But it is supposed that a disastrous blow would be stricken against the sanctity of records, and in this that public policy would be greatly outraged. If records, while they existed, were allowed to be contradicted or established by parol, this would not fail to be the result. But how this is to result from the establishment of their tenor and effect when destroyed is not altogether clear. Surely judicial records are not so sacred that their very ashes must not be disturbed, and that, to minister to their quiet, the most important rights of men must be sacrificed, with Pagan superstition, to their manes. Such a doctrine would have better befitted the days of the old barons of England, when chirography was so much esteemed that it was an indulgence for crime, than in our own times; and it is by no means certain that it obtained even in those days. Shall personal liberty be sacrificed at this altar, and a man be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb because his plea of former acquittal cannot be established by the ashes of a conflagrated record? Shall a man be twice punished for the same offence because the record of his former conviction, under which he was punished, from its destruction, cannot be produced to protect him from a second prosecution? Or shall the convicted forger be delivered from the penitentiary and set at large upon society because the same incendiary flame that destroyed the record of his conviction at the same time consumed the material evidence of his guilt? But these and many other startling consequences are by no means the only result of this supposed doctrine; for, let it be distinctly understood that the destruction of judicial records is the end of the public and private rights depending upon them while they exist, and at once a high premium for vice and crime is held out by the law, under the influence of which just fears might be apprehended for the safety of judicial records. . . . The law would be placed in the singular predicament of openly permitting the rude hand of crime to seize upon her highest muniments of truth and right, apply the incendiary torch, and hold the blazing sacrifice in the very face of justice. We cannot think that such a scene can be enacted under the auspices of the common law, whose oracles have ever claimed for it a capacity to afford a remedy for every wrong. On the contrary, we think that its recuperative energies are fully equal to the work of setting up, by the legitimate operation of its harmonious rules, every landmark of truth and right that may be at any time prostrated, either by the hand of crime, the inevitable accidents incident to men, or by the onward wear of time.”

Such has been the rule unanimously accepted by the Courts. Since the time (ante, § 1177) when the rule of production has been conceded to be subject to certain excuses and exemptions, the proof of unproduced documents has been allowed to be made by recollection-testimony (in the absence of such copy-testimony as is otherwise required, under the rules shortly to be noticed). The proposed doctrine, that such recollection-testimony should be absolutely excluded, has been repudiated for judicial and official records,¹

¹ In some of the following cases the thing admitted was a copy, but the rule is laid down in general terms for “parol” or “oral” evidence: Eng.: 1774, Kingston v. Horner, H. Cowper 102, 109 (Lord Mansfield, C. J.: “If a foundation can be laid that a record or a deed existed and was afterwards lost, it may be supplied by the next best evidence to be had”); Cal.: 1859, Ames v. Hoy, 12 Cal. 11, 20 (judgment); 1863, Warfield’s Will, 22 id. 51, 64 (probate petition); Colo.: 1878, Hittson v. Davenport, 4 Colo. 169,

174; Conn.: 1839, Davidson v. Murphy, 13 Conn. 212, 219; Del.: 1852, Polite v. Jefferson, 5 Harringt. 388; Fla.: 1895, Edwards v. Rives, 35 Fla. 89, 17 So. 416 (must be clearly proved); Ill.: 1864, Aulger v. Smith, 34 Ill. 534 (lost deposition; recollection-evidence admitted); 1897, Gage v. Eddy, 167 id. 102, 47 N. E. 200 (deposition lost after filing; offeror may prove contents, without re-taking the deposition); Ind.: 1829, Jackson v. Cullum, 2 Blackf. 228 (judgment, etc.); 1853, Schwartz v. Osthimer, 4 Ind. 109

although it was for a time adopted in one jurisdiction;² here distinguish the impropriety of proving an oral judicial act (post, § 2450) from the propriety of proving a written judicial record by "oral" evidence. It has been reputed for deeds;³ note that this permission to prove a written conveyance (plea); 1881, Johnson v. State, 80 id. 220, 221 (summons); 1886, McCullough v. Davis, 108 id. 292, 296, 9 N. E. 276 (title-records; "much latitude is allowable"); 1886, McFadden v. Fritz, 110 id. 1, 5, 10 N. E. 120 (writ); Ia.: 1859, Higgins v. Reed, 8 Ia. 298; 1864, Davis v. Strohm, 17 id. 421, 424, 427 (bond); Ky.: 1840, Hawkins v. Craig, 1 B. Monr. 27 (writ); La.: 1841, Childress v. Allin, 17 La. 37; 1893, Landry v. Landry, 45 La. An. 1113, 13 So. 672 (completing a partly burnt deed by oral evidence); Me.: 1843, Gore v. Elwell, 9 Shepl. 442; 1848, Wing v. Abbott, 15 id. 367, 373; Mass.: 1815, Stockbridge v. W. Stockbridge, 12 Mass. 399, 402 (act of incorporation of town); 1836, Sturtevant v. Robinson, 18 Pick. 175, 179 (admitting a copy of a scire facias writ, loss being shown; "it would be as correct to say that the loss of an original deed should affect the grantee's title to land" as to exclude such proof); 1839, Pruden v. Allen, 23 id. 184, 187 (admitting a copy of a license of sale shown to be lost); 1842, Sayles v. Briggs, 4 Metc. 421, 423; 1842, Eaton v. Hall, 5 id. 287, 291 (an order of Court directing reference to arbitrators; a copy admitted, on proof of loss; "the consideration that a particular document constitutes the basis of the jurisdiction of a Court does not essentially vary the rule in regard to secondary evidence, though it may require more care and vigilance in its application"); 1851, Com. v. Roark, 8 Cush. 210, 212 (complaint and warrant); 1854, Tillotson v. Warner, 3 Gray, 574, 577; Mich.: 1857, People v. Dennis, 4 Mich. 609, 617 (indictment); 1874, Millar v. Babcock, 29 id. 526, 527 (attachment); 1878, Drake v. Kinsell, 33 id. 232, 234; 1886, People v. Coffman, 59 id. 1, 6, 26 N. W. 207; 1886, Blanchard v. DeGraff, 60 id. 107, 111, 26 N. W. 849; 1888, Cilley v. Van Patten, 68 id. 80, 83, 35 N. W. 831; Minn.: 1866, Winoua v. Huff, 11 Minn. 119, 128; Miss.: 1850, Scott v. Loomis, 13 Sm. & M. 635, 641 (justice's docket); 1868, Martin v. Williams, 42 Miss. 210, 218, semble; Mo.: 1827, Ravenscroft v. Giboney, 2 Mo. 1 ("though the record may not have been very ancient"); 1871, Fouk v. Colburn, 48 id. 225, 230; 1873, Compton v. Arnold, 54 id. 147; 1884, State v. Schooley, 84 id. 447, 454 (tax-books); 1889, Crane v. Dameron, 98 id. 567, 570, 12 S. W. 251; N. J.: 1849, Browning v. Flanagan, 22 N. J. L. 567, 571 (record); N. C.: 1813, Stuart v. Fitzgerald, 2 Murph. 255 (capias); 1835, Kello v. Maget, 1 Dev. & B. 414, 424; 1878, Rollins v. Heury, 78 N. C. 342, 347; 1887, Mobley v. Watts, 98 id. 284, 287, 3 S. E. 677; Pa.: 1782, Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. 64, 65 (lost survey); 1793, Todd v. Ockerman, 1 Yeates 295, 297 (same); 1821, Wolverton v. Com., 7 S. & R. 273, 276; 1847, Farmers' Bank v. Gilson, 6 Pa. 51, 57; Tenn.: 1816, Read v. Staton, 3 Hayw. 159 (judgment); U. S.: 1806, U. S. v. Lambell, 1 Cr. C. C. 312 (warrant); Vt.: 1852, Spear v.

Tilson, 24 Vt. 420, 423 (grand list of assessment); 1855, Brown v. Richmond, 27 id. 583 (attachment); Va.: 1832, Newcomb v. Drummond, 4 Leigh 57, 60; Wis.: 1880, Waubold v. Vick, 50 Wis. 456, 458, 7 N. W. 438, semble.

² 1799, Hargett v. —, 2 Hayw. 76 (Moo v. J.: "It is better to suffer a private mischief than a public inconvenience"; copy admissible, but oral evidence of a lost record's contents excluded); 1839, Smith v. Dudley, 2 Ark. 60, 65 (lost or destroyed record may not be proved by parol when it "constitutes the sole foundation of the proceeding or cause of action"; but only by "authenticated or sworn copy"); 1842, Williams v. Brummel, 4 id. 129, 137 (judicial record, not by parol, but only by certified copy); 1842, Fowler v. More, ib. 570, 573 (lost record may be proved by copy; at least "such portions as process and the like"); 1843, Bailey v. Palmer, 5 id. 208 (same); 1847, Alexander v. Foreman, 7 id. 252 (same); 1843, Wallace v. Collins, 5 id. 41, 48 (execution; if no objection is taken, any evidence admissible); 1849, Phelan v. Bonham, 9 id. 388, 393 (same for a notice); 1850, Davies v. Pettit, 11 id. 349, 351 (lost or destroyed judicial record may be established by parol; see quotation supra, overruling Smith v. Dudley, and the intervening cases); 1860, Gracie v. Morris, 22 id. 415, 418 (preceding case ignored; but copy of lost record allowed); 1870, Mason v. Bull, 26 id. 164, 167 (Davies v. Pettit approved); 1878, Gates v. Bennett, 33 id. 475, 489 (same); 1883, Miller v. State, 40 Ark. 488, 495 (judgment destroyed, and record not restored; secondary evidence allowed; Eakin, J., diss.); 1886, Hallum v. Dickinson, 47 id. 120, 125, 14 S. W. 477 (Davies v. Pettit approved).

³ This result was (as might be inferred from the historical development noted ante, § 1177) at first not accepted in England; but by the end of the 1700s it was fully established: 1711, Seymour's Case, 10 Mod. 8 ("The Court seemed of opinion that in case a deed was lost by some inevitable accident, that there it might be proved by a copy; but in case there was no copy, the contents of it could not be proved from the memory of those that knew the deed; and though it were hard for a man that had no copy, to lose the benefit of his deed, yet the inconveniences of admitting that sort of evidence would be greater"; but otherwise if the defendant had the deed, "for that in this case the danger of allowing this sort of evidence was none at all; for if the defendant was wronged by the parol evidence, it was in his power to set all right by producing the deed"); 1721, Dalston v. Coatsworth, 1 P. Wms. 731 (burnt deed supplied by parol testimony); 1768, Blackstone, Commentaries, III, 368 (an "attested copy may be produced or parol evidence be given of its contents"); and the citations in note 1, supra.

In the United States the propriety of such evidence is everywhere conceded: 1859, Shorter by "parol" evidence of its contents is a different thing from proving an oral or "parol" conveyance forbidden by the statute of frauds or by the "parol evidence" rule (post, § 2437);⁴ distinguish also the requirement as to the completeness of detail with which the deed's contents must be proved (post, § 2105), and the degree of positiveness which the proof must reach (post, § 2498). A missing negotiable instrument may also be proved by recollection-evidence.⁵ In the case of a missing will, it is equally well settled that recollection-testimony is admissible;⁶ but here certain other requirements apply which must be distinguished, namely, the number of witnesses by which the contents or the execution must be proved (post, § 2052), the degree of positiveness or clearness which the evidence must attain in order to suffice (post, § 2498), the completeness of the details of the contents as

v. Sheppard, 33 Ala. 648, 653; Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1937 (of private writings, "by a copy, or by a recital of its contents in some authentic document, or by the recollection of a witness"); 1794, Kelley v. Riggs, 2 Root 126, 128; 1857, St. Peter's Church v. Beach, 26 Conn. 355, 359, 365; 1887, Bush v. Stanley, 122 Ill. 406, 416, 13 N. E. 249; 1847, Chisholm v. Pen, 7 B. Monr. 408, 414 (but for the mere loss of a will, as distinguished from fraudulent suppression, circumstantial evidence does not suffice); 1885, Lane v. Cameron, 37 La. An. 250; 1901, Willett v. Andrews, 106 La. 319, 30 So. 883; 1889, Wakefield v. Day, 41 Minn. 344, 347, 43 N. W. 71; 1827, Colby v. Kenniston, 4 N. H. 262, 265; 1844, New Boston v. Dunbarton, 15 id. 201, 205 (charter); 1844, Downing v. Pickering, ib. 344; 1850, Forsaith v. Clark, 21 id. 409, 417 (proprietary charter); 1852, Neally v. Greenough, 25 id. 325, 330 ("Generally the party who is driven by the loss or destruction of a paper . . . to resort to secondary evidence is confined to no particular species of evidence; it may be more or less direct, or merely circumstantial"); 1831, Jackson v. Livingston, 7 Wend. 136, 140; 1861, Miltimore v. Miltimore, 40 Pa. 151, 154 (abstract); 1798, Frost v. Brown, 2 Bay 135, 138 ("It is very clear that the existence and loss of a deed may be presumed by a jury from circumstances"); 1895, Reusens v. Lawson, 91 Va. 226, 21 S. E. 347 (lost deed established by statements against interest in a chancery answer).

⁴ 1861, Jenkins, J., in Roe & McDowell v. Doe & Irwin, 32 Ga. 39, 51 ("It is not evidence of a conveyance by parol. It is parol evidence of a conveyance by deed, the loss or destruction of which has been proven"). Here compare the New York cases (ante, § 1257) excluding certain admissions of parties as amounting to an oral conveyance.

⁵ 1809, Jones v. Failes, 5 Mass. 101 (promissory notes); see the citations ante, § 1197.

The following ruling is peculiar: 1869, Austine v. People, 51 Ill. 236, 239 (copy of a confession, made two years afterward from recollection alone, excluded).

⁶ Eng.: 1824, Davis v. Davis, 2 Add. Eccl. 223, 224, 228; 1864, Wharram v. Wharram, 3 Sw. & Tr. 301 (pointing out the dangers of such evidence, but concluding that "at any rate" it "ought to be of a very cogent character"); 1858,

Brown v. Brown, 8 E. & B. 876 (Lord Campbell, C. J.: "It was the common case of a lost instrument; and parol evidence of the contents of a lost instrument may be received as much when it is a will as if it were any other"); 1876, Sugden v. St. Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 154, 238 (Jessel, M. R.: "Can we admit, as a matter of course, secondary evidence in proof of a will? I should have thought that there could be but one answer to that question, and had it not been for the doubt thrown out by a very eminent judge in the case of Wharram v. Wharram, I should have thought it impossible to argue the question. . . . The whole theory of secondary evidence depends upon this, that the primary evidence is lost, and that it is against justice that the accident of the loss should deprive a man of the rights to which he would otherwise be entitled. I am at a loss to discover any reason whatever for distinguishing between the loss of a will and the loss of a deed"); 1890, Harris v. Knight, L. R. 15 id. 170, 179; U. S.: 1884, Jacques v. Horton, 76 Ala. 238, 245; 1886, Skeggs v. Horton, 82 id. 353, 2 So. 110; 1882, Anderson v. Irwin, 101 Ill. 411, 415; Me. Pub. St. 1883, c. 64, § 7 (a lost will may be proved by a copy and subscribing witnesses' testimony, or by "any other evidence competent"); 1825, Clark v. Wright, 3 Pick. 66, 68; 1844, Davis v. Sigourney, 8 Metc. 487; Mon. Gen. St. 1894, § 4442 (a will lost or destroyed or out of the State and unproducible is provable by "parol or other evidence"); 1834, Graham v. O'Fallon, 3 Mo 507; 4 id. 601, 607; 1843, Kearns v. Kearns, 4 Harringt. 83; 1863, Wyckoff v. Wyckoff, 16 N. J. Eq. 401, 405; 1898, Coddington v. Jenner, 57 N. J. Eq. 528, 41 Atl. 874; 1805, Jackson v. Lucett, 2 Cai. 363, 367; 1863, Harris v. Harris, 26 N. Y. 433; 1878, Foster's Appeal, 87 Pa. 67, 75 ("Its loss or accidental destruction differs not from the loss or destruction of any other solemn instrument, such as a deed, note or bond, or a record"); 1795, Potts v. Cogdell, 1 De Sauss. 454; 1795, Legare v. Ashe, 1 Bay 464; 1818, Reeves v. Reeves, 2 Mill Const. 334; Tenn. Code, 1896, § 3911 (if the original is lost or mislaid, the trial may proceed upon a supposed copy); 1897, McNeely v. Pearson, — Tenn. —, 42 S. W. 165; 1842, Minkler v. Minkler, 14 Vt. 125, 127; 1868, Dudley v. Gardner, 41 id. 59.

thus evidenced (post, § 2106), the admissibility of circumstantial evidence, including the testator's belief as to the contents (ante, § 271), the admissibility of the testator's declarations (post, § 1734), and the conditional preference for a copy, if available, over recollection-testimony (post, § 1268).

§ 1268. Is a Written Copy conditionally preferred to Recollection? Admissibility of Recollection before showing Copy unavailable. Whether a copy must be offered, if available, i. e. whether a copy is conditionally preferred to recollection-testimony, is a question that is difficult to answer, both upon principle and upon precedent. There are strong reasons on both sides of the question, and there has been little consistency of rulings even within single jurisdictions. The following passages expound the reasons for requiring such a preference :

1839, Anon., in 4 Monthly Law Magazine, 265, 267 : " The argument relied on to show that a distinction exists among the various species of secondary evidence is a supposed equitable extension of the principle which postpones all secondary evidence until the non-production of the primary is accounted for. . . . Does it not follow, [is the claim on this behalf,] as a necessary corollary from this proposition, that if certain species of secondary evidence be manifestly better and more likely to contain a true account of what was in the original than others, a party ought not to be allowed to resort to the latter until his incapacity to produce the former be demonstrated? . . . [The argument is that] a copy, the correctness of which is sworn to by a witness who has compared it with the original is far more to be relied on than the mere memory of that witness as to the contents of the latter, — both on account of the comparative imperfection of all verbal testimony, when compared with written, and also that in such a case the utmost which any witness under ordinary circumstances can be expected to remember of the contents of a writing in which he is not interested is that he shall have a general recollection of its leading features, but that he is not likely to remember conditions, limitations, or particular words used in it, which might however have a most material effect in altering or qualifying its meaning; so that . . . [only when counterpart, copy, and abstract fail] he may then, but not till then, be allowed to resort to the dangerous and unsatisfactory proof deduced from the memory of a witness."

1849, Nisbet, J., in Doe v. Biggers, 6 Ga. 188, 199 : " Now the highest degree of secondary evidence is not required. The rule upon that point is this : When there is no ground for legal presumption that better secondary evidence exists, any proof is received which is not inadmissible by other rules of law, unless the objecting party can show that better evidence was previously known to the other and might have been produced; thus subjecting him by positive proof to the same imputation of fraud which the law itself presumes when primary evidence is withheld."

1856, Goldthwaite, C. J., in Harvey v. Thorpe, 28 Ala. 250, 262 : "[The American weight of authority requires that] the best kind of that character of evidence which appears to be in the power of the party to produce must be offered. We confess that the American rule appears to us more reasonable than the English; and we see great propriety, if there was an examined copy of an instrument in the possession of a party, in refusing to allow him to prove it by the uncertain memory of witnesses. A copy of a letter, taken by a copying press, would unquestionably be better evidence of the original than the recollection of its contents by a witness; and the same reasons which would require the production of the original if in the control of the party, would operate in favor of the production of the facsimile or of the examined copy. But in all these cases the strength of the proposition consists in the fact that there is secondary evidence in its nature and character better than that which the party offers, and that it is in his power to produce it."

The arguments against making any such distinction are thus set forth :

1840, Abinger, L. C. B., in Doe v. Ross, 7 M. & W. 102 (the question was whether an attested copy of a deed was to be preferred to the testimony of one who had read it) : " Upon examination of the cases, and upon principle, we think there are no degrees of secondary evidence. The rule is that if you cannot produce the original, you may give parol evidence of its contents. If indeed the party giving such parol evidence appears to have better secondary evidence in his power which he does not produce, that is a fact to go to the jury, from which they might sometimes presume that the evidence kept back would be adverse to the party withholding it. But the law makes no distinction between one class of secondary evidence and another ;" Alderson, B. : " The objection [to secondary evidence] must arise from the nature of the evidence itself. If you produce a copy, which shows that there was an original, or if you give parol evidence of the contents of a deed, the evidence itself discloses the existence of the deed. But reverse the case; the existence of an original does not show the existence of any copy ; nor does parol evidence of the contents of a deed show the existence of anything except the deed itself. If one species of secondary evidence is to exclude another, a party tendering parol evidence of a deed must account for all the secondary evidence that has existed. He may know of nothing but the original, and the other side at the trial may defeat him by showing a copy, the existence of which he had no means of ascertaining. Fifty copies may be in existence unknown to him, and he would be bound to account for them all."

1842, Professor Simon Greenleaf, Evidence, § 84, note : " On the other hand, it is said that this argument for the extension of the rule confounds all distinction between the weight of evidence and its legal admissibility ; that the rule is founded upon the nature of the evidence offered, and not upon its strength or weakness; and that, to carry it to the length of establishing degrees in secondary evidence, as fixed rules of law, would often tend to the subversion of justice, and always be productive of inconvenience. If, for example, proof of the existence of an abstract of a deed will exclude oral evidence of its contents, this proof may be withheld by the adverse party until the moment of trial, and the other side be defeated, or the cause be greatly delayed ; and the same mischief may be repeated, through all the different degrees of the evidence. It is therefore insisted, that the rule of exclusion ought to be restricted to such evidence only as, upon its face, discloses the existence of better proof ; and that where the evidence is not of this nature, it is to be received, notwithstanding it may be shown from other sources that the party might have offered that which was more satisfactory ; leaving the weight of the evidence to be judged of by the Jury, under all the circumstances of the case.¹ . . . The American doctrine, as deduced from various authorities, seems to be this ; that if, from the nature of the case itself, . . . there is no ground for legal presumption that better secondary evidence exists, any proof is received, which is not inadmissible by other rules of law ; unless the objecting party can show that better evidence was previously known to the other, and might have been produced ; thus subjecting him, by positive proof, to the same imputation of fraud, which the law itself presumes, when primary evidence is withheld."

1849, Lipscomb, J., in Lewis v. San Antonio, 7 Tex. 288, 315 : " It is believed that the rule sanctioned by Greenleaf is more philosophical and harmonizes better with the progress of the more enlightened jurisprudence of the age on the subject of the admissibility of evidence, — that is, to curtail and limit the objections to the competency and let the evidence in, to go to the jury to judge of its weight or credibility. In every case where a party kept back a more satisfactory kind of evidence that was in his power to have produced and within his knowledge, it would operate strongly against such as he had offered, of less certainty, with the jury. This would prevent embarrassing discussions that would often arise suddenly, at the moment when testimony would be offered, whether it was most satisfactory and carried the most weight of any that could be offered.

¹ See these arguments more fully set forth supra, where the author of the article concludes in the article in 4 Monthly Law Magazine 265, strongly against a rule of preference.

The only question should be whether it was admissible and legal; the party offering it would take the risk of its being satisfactory to prove the fact for which it was offered to the jury."

It will be seen that the conflict of arguments is due on the one hand to the conceded desirability of employing a copy as better than mere recollection, and, on the other hand, to the hardship of exacting this invariably of a proponent who may be put to excessive trouble to obtain such a copy. A simple solution, giving effect to some extent to both of these considerations, is the following: Let the proponent of recollection-testimony be required, before using it, to show that he has not within his control a copy; if he has not, then he may offer recollection-testimony; and the opponent may then, if there is any real dispute on his part as to the contents, put in a copy if one is available. This rule procures the benefit of a copy without putting an undue burden upon the proponent; for if a copy is available at all, elsewhere than in the proponent's own control, it is fitter that the opponent should have the risk and the trouble of procuring it. The rule then, briefly, would be: The party offering to prove the contents of an unavailable original document, must offer a copy, if he has one in his control, in preference to recollection-testimony.

Coming to the rule of law as judicially enforced, it may first be noted that a fallacious definiteness has often been given to the question by referring (as in the passage above quoted) to the "English" rule as distinguished from the "American" rule. There is no such distinction. The English precedents are divided, though the ruling in Doe v. Ross (quoted above) finally established a rule for one class of cases; and the American jurisdictions are also divided. Moreover, any such generality as "there are no degrees of secondary evidence"² is of no value, because it is not correct; for there are at least two or three settled distinctions in that category (as the precedents in the ensuing sections indicate); such general remarks cannot safely be trusted and must be construed merely with reference to the distinction then before the Court.

As to the state of the precedents, it is clear that the orthodox English doctrine did for deeds prefer a copy before recollection-testimony;³ and the same preference has been recognized in proving various kinds of documents, in

² 1833, Brown v. Woodman, 6 C. & P. 206 (Parke, J.: "There are no degrees in secondary evidence," except perhaps for duplicate originals); 1858, Fitzgerald v. Williams, 24 Ga. 343, 345 (there are no degrees); 1869, Goodrich v. Weston, 102 Mass. 362, semble (in general, "there are no degrees of legal distinction"); 1875, Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49, 52 ("There are no degrees of evidence, except where some document [must be produced in the original]"); 1873, Cornett v. Williams, 20 Wall. 226, 246 ("This Court has not yet gone the length of the English adjudications, which hold without qualification, that there are no degrees in secondary evidence").

³ 1773, Lord Mansfield, C. J., in Ludlam's

Will, Lofft 362 ("If you cannot prove a deed by producing it, you may produce the counterpart; if you can't produce the counterpart, you may produce a copy, even if you cannot prove it to be a true copy; if a copy cannot be produced, you may go into parol evidence of the deed"); 1740, Villiers v. Villiers, 2 Atk. 71 (Lord Hardwicke, L. C., places counterpart, copy, and parol evidence in this order); 1744, Omichund v. Barker, 1 id. 21, 49 (Lord Hardwicke, L. C., places a copy before "witnesses who have heard the deed; and yet it is a thing the law abhors to admit the memory of man for evidence"). For the rule requiring first a counterpart as equivalent to the original, see ante, § 1233.

rulings both English and American, although it does not usually appear clearly whether the preference is conditional on the copy being anywhere available or merely on its being in the proponent's control, nor whether it is for the opponent to show that such a copy is available or for the proponent to show that it is not available.⁴ On the other hand, it is clear that by the ruling in Doe v. Ross the English rule has been changed, and no preference is now accorded to a copy, for proving deeds and other private documents; and this result has been accepted in not more than a minority of the American Courts that have ruled upon the question;⁵ although it is to be remembered (as appears in § 1269, post) that such rulings must be understood as applying usually to private documents only, and that any general principle enunciated in them cannot ordinarily be construed to mean more than that.

In determining what is a copy, for the purposes of the present rule, an alleged copy submitted to the witness and verified by him as correct, though not made nor previously seen by him, would perhaps be treated as a copy;⁶

⁴ England: 1791, Breton v. Cope, Peake 30 (Bank of England stock-books; written copy required); 1810, Rhind v. Wilkinson, 2 Taunt. 237 (license to trade during war; the register of licenses at the Secretary of State's office held a preferable source to the captain's recollection); United States: 1849, Doe v. Biggers, 6 Ga. 188, 199 (copy preferred conditionally; see quotation supra); circumstantial proof of contents here allowed); 1867, Williams v. Waters, 36 id. 454, 458 (certified copies of contract, preferred to oral testimony); 1900, Shedden v. Heard, 110 id. 461, 35 S. E. 707 (use of a copy of insurance application excludes recollection-testimony of contents); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 116, § 28 (where an original conveyance, etc., is shown lost or out of the party's power, and the record is destroyed, "the Court shall receive all such evidence as may have a bearing on the case to establish the execution or contents" of the conveyance, record, etc.); 1899, Harrell v. Enterprise Sav. Bank, 183 Ill. 538, 56 N. E. 63 (after fruitless search for a record of a lost deed, memoranda, etc., showing the contents are admissible); 1858, Madison I. & P. R. Co. v. Whitesel, 11 Ind. 55, 57 (certified copy of corporation-records, preferred to oral testimony); 1861, Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Jewett, 16 id. 273 (sworn copy of corporation-records not preferred to oral testimony, where the secretary had refused to produce the original or to furnish a copy); 1875, Day v. Backus, 31 Mich. 241, 245 (whether fresh copies of a letter are preferable to oral testimony, not decided); 1900, Phillips v. U. S. Benevolent Soc'y, 125 id. 186, 84 N. W. 57 (insurance application filed in Canada; sworn or certified copy preferred); Montgomery, C. J., and Hooker, J., diss.; 1832, Smith v. Axtell, 1 N. J. L. 494, 498 (copy of written agreement preferred to oral testimony); 1862, Stevenson v. Hoy, 43 Pa. 191, 193, 196 (facsimile press copy preferred to copy from recollection); 1822, U. S. v. Britton, 2 Mason 464, 468 (examined copy, "if any such exist and can be found," preferred to oral testimony; here applied to a forged document); 1823, Riggs v.

Taylor, 9 Wheat. 483, 486 ("[He] may read a counterpart, or if there is no counterpart, an examined copy, or if there should not be an examined copy, he may give parol evidence of its contents"); 1882, Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 32, 43, 2 Sup. 313 (following Riggs v. Taylor, as to order of preference, and admitting oral testimony of contents of a deed by one who verified a certified copy not made by himself); 1899, Lloyd v. Supreme Lodge, 38 C. C. A. 654, 98 Fed. 66 (certified copy of lodge by-law, preferred to oral testimony); 1885, Cleveland v. Burnham, 64 Wis. 347, 357, 359, 25 N. W. 407 (bank-books; certain stock-certificates held better evidence than oral testimony).

⁵ England: 1807, Kensington v. Inglis, 8 East 273, 279, 289 (a memorandum book of trading licenses, kept by a governor's secretary, not preferred to his oral statement of a license's contents); 1808, Fisher v. Samuda, 1 Camp. 193 (letter; copy not preferred to recollection); 1834, Doe v. Cole, 6 C. & P. 359 (tablet on a church; oral description allowed); 1840, Doe v. Ross, 7 M. & W. 102 (as between an attested copy of a deed and the testimony of one who had read the deed, no preference was given to the former; see quotation supra); 1884, Jaques v. Horton, 76 Ala. 238, 246 (copy of a lost will, not preferable to oral testimony); 1858, Carpenter v. Dame, 10 Ind. 125, 132 (sworn copy of a bond, not preferred to oral testimony by recollection; no degrees "as a general rule" in secondary evidence; Coman v. State, 4 Blackf. 241, repudiated); 1873, Eslow v. Mitchell, 26 Mich. 500, 502 (copy not preferred to oral testimony, for private writings not existing in counterpart); 1893, Minneapolis T. Co. v. Nimocks, 53 Minn. 381, 55 N. W. 546 (supposed copy of notice not preferred to sender's recollection); 1805, Jackson v. Lucett, 2 Cai. 363, 367 (deed is provable orally or by copy); 1805, Tower v. Wilson, 3 id. 174 (notice served; no copy having been kept, it was proved orally).

⁶ 1833, R. v. Fursey, 6 C. & P. 81, 84 (a notice, Parke, J.: "The usual way in such cases is to give a copy to the witness and ask if though obviously it is not, since the witness is dependent upon his memory for verifying the correctness of the alleged copy, and his testimony is open to nearly all the possibilities of error to which ordinary recollection-testimony is open.

§ 1269. Same: (a) Copy preferred for proving Public Records. It has been noted (ante, § 1268) that the particular hardship of a rule of preference for copies lay in the circumstance that it imposed upon the proponent the burden of searching in possible places and of proving that a copy was not to be had. Such a hardship disappears when the original is kept in a known public office, whence copies may be obtained by any one upon request. This is apparently the reason for a distinction well settled in all jurisdictions, namely, that judicial records, if in existence, must be proved by copy in preference to recollection-testimony.¹ It would seem that upon the same principle a copy would be preferred for proving a document of any sort in public official custody; this is the result accepted in a majority of jurisdictions;² though the contrary view finds some support.³ Certainly some limiit is a copy of what he saw. I do not say that parol evidence is inadmissible"); see other cases post, § 1280, where the admissibility of such a copy is considered.

¹ See the cases cited ante, § 1215, and § 1244, where this is assumed, and also the citations in § 1267, and the following cases: 1810, Brush v. Taggart, 7 John. 19 (sworn copy of a writ of certiorari preferred to oral evidence); 1815, Foster v. Trull, 12 id. 456 (same, for a writ of arrest); 1836, Otto v. Trump, 115 Pa. 425, 429, 8 Atl. 786 (contents of a foreign record; a copy preferred to parol).

But when a copy has been offered, the opponent may well be allowed to dispute its correctness by recollection-testimony without endeavoring to obtain another copy; 1866, Estes v. Farnham, 11 Minn. 423, 437 (lost pleadings; incorrectness of a supposed copy may be shown by parol, where better evidence is not disclosed by the case). Contra, 1900, Shedden v. Heard, Ga., semble, cited ante, § 1268.

² Ala.: 1891, Miller v. Boykin, 70 Ala. 469, 478 (postmaster's register of mail-arrivals, etc.; not allowed to testify from memoranda of the register; a sworn or a certified copy indispensable); Ark.: 1896, Jones v. Melindy, 62 Ark. 203, 203, 36 S. W. 22 (register of mortgages testifying to contents of record not lost, excluded; proof must be by examined or certified copy); 1893, Redd v. State, 65 id. 475, 47 S. W. 119 (certified copy of pardon, if available, preferred to oral testimony of it); Cal.: C. C. P. 1872, § 1855 (for public or recorded documents, a copy is necessary; for documents lost or in the opponent's possession, "either a copy or oral evidence"); 1856, Brotherton v. Mart, 6 Cal. 488 (lost recorded deed; record copy preferred to other evidence); Ga.: Code 1895, § 5220 (on loss of record and original document, any evidence admissible "which does not disclose the existence of other and better evidence"); compare also § 5173 (examined copy preferred to oral evidence); 1873, Mobley v. Breed, 48 Ga. 44, 47 (sworn copy of assessment-proceedings, preferred to oral testimony); 1895, Bowden v. Achor, 95 id. 254, 22 S. E. 254 (document in another State; oral testimony sufficient, unless a certified copy were obtainable, as in the case of an official document); Ida.: Rev. St. 1887, § 5999 (for public records, or other documents in custody of a public officer, or recorded, a copy must be produced; for others, "either a copy or oral evidence of the contents"); Ill.: 1844, Williams v. Jarrot, 6 Ill. 120, 129 (clerk's certificate of letters of administration, preferred to oral evidence of appointment); 1848, Mariner v. Saunders, 10 id. 113, 121 (sworn or certified copy of a recorded deed, if available, preferred to recollection); Ia.: 1859, Higgins v. Reed, 8 Ia. 298, 300 (copy of a public record preferred to oral evidence); 1861, Horseman v. Todhunter, 12 id. 230, 234 (certified copy of recorded mortgage preferred to oral evidence); Mass.: 1829, Poignand v. Smith, 8 Pick. 272, 279 (registry-copy of a mortgage preferred to oral testimony); 1832, Sheldon v. Frink, 12 id. 567 (oral testimony of a record's certified copy of record not preferred to oral recollection); 1832, U. S. v. Reyburn, 6 Pet. 352, 367 (privateer's commission by Government of Buenos Ayres; sworn or certified copy from the record, not preferred to testimony of one who had seen the commission, on the facts).

³ 1835, Draper v. Clemens, 4 Mo. 52, 54 (copy of notary's register not preferred to the protest or to his testimony); 1866, Wells v. J. I. Mfg. Co., 47 N. H. 235, 256 (record in a town clerk's office; provable by parol, "where the case from its nature does not disclose the existence of other and better evidence"; here refusing to have a record made up anew); 1837, Blackburn v. Blackburn, 8 Oh. 81, 83 (lost deed;

Distinguish the principle of § 1244, ante, where the object of proof is not the terms of the record, but its net effect.

tations to such a general rule may well obtain, and there should be a judicial discretion to make exceptions.

Where the judicial or official record is no longer in existence at the time of trial, the reason for the rule falls away, and it should be enough to require the proponent to show, before using recollection-testimony, that he has no copy within his control;⁴ but the fact that the record is in another jurisdiction would not exempt from the requirement of a copy,⁵ because a copy is obtainable and because the procuring a copy is no more difficult than the procuring a perusal for recollection-testimony.

§ 1270. Same: (b) Copy of Record of Conviction, as preferred to Convict's Testimony on Cross-Examination. When it is desired to prove against a witness his conviction of crime, for the purpose either of excluding him as incompetent by infamy (ante, § 519) or of discrediting him by the conviction (ante, § 980), the object of the proof is the contents of the record embodying the judgment of conviction. A strict application, therefore, of the foregoing principle (ante, § 1269) would require the record's contents to be proved by a copy of it, and not by recollection-testimony:

1806, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in R. v. Castell Careinion, 8 East 77, 79: "It cannot seriously be argued that a record can be proved by the admission of any witness. He may have mistaken what passed in court, and may have been ordered on his knees for a misdemeanor. This can only be known by the record."

1822, Com. v. Green, 17 Mass. 514, 537: "If anything short of a record should be admitted to impeach the competency of a witness, it would be easy for parties accused to protect themselves from punishment; and it would be in most cases impossible for the witness attacked without previous notice to defend his reputation."¹

But, while it may be conceded that such should be the rule as against the recollection-testimony of a second witness called for the purpose of proving contents; a certified transcript preferred); Mich.: 1873, Platt v. Haur, 27 Mich. 167 (exemplification of U. S. land-patent, preferred to oral testimony); Mont.: 1878, Belk v. Mearzher, 3 Mont. T. 65, 72 (official copy of original title-records, preferred to recollection of witnesses as to location); N. H.: 1827, Colby v. Kenniston, 4 N. H. 262, 265, semble (record of lost deed, preferred to oral testimony); N. C.: 1835, Kello v. Maget, 1 Dev. & B. 414, 424 (for bonds, records, etc.; order of preference is a copy, an abstract, recollection); Or.: C. C. P. 1892, § 691 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); Tenn.: 1808, Hampton v. M'Ginnis, 1 Overt. 286, 294 (official list of land-entries in lost books, preferred to oral evidence of the entries); 1809, Reid v. Dodson, ib. 395, 402 (copy of recorded plat, preferred to surveyor's testimony, to prove an alteration); Tex.: 1849, Lewis v. San Antonio, 7 Tex. 288, 311 (whether a certified or sworn copy of a lost recorded original is preferred to oral testimony; discussed but not decided); 1868, Werbiskie v. McMannus, 31 id. 116, 122, semble (certified copy of letters of administration, preferred to clerk's testimony on the stand); Utah Rev. St. 1898, § 3410, par. 5 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); Wis.: 1861, Sex- smith v. Jones, 13 Wis. 565, 568 (certified copy of record of lost mortgage preferred to oral testimony); 1881, Johnson v. Ashland L. Co., 52 id. 458, 463, 9 N. W. 464, semble (same).

For cases preferring the official custodian's testimony to the absence of a record, see ante, § 1244.

⁴ 1878, Hittson v. Davenport, 4 Colo. 169, 174 (burnt judicial records; contents proved orally, the existence of better evidence not appearing); 1890, Conway v. John, 14 id. 30, 23 Pac. 170 (lost files, proved orally); 1895, Hobbs v. Beard, 43 S. C. 370, 21 S. E. 305 (oral evidence of lost record's contents, admitted where no copy appeared to be in offeror's power).

⁵ Otto v. Trump, Pa., Bowden v. Achor, Ga., in notes 1, 2, supra. Contra: 1803, Young v. Gregorie, 3 Call 446, 452 (record in a foreign country may be proved by depositions, etc., without producing a copy of the record); 1809, Hadfield v. Jameson, 2 Munn. 53, 70, 76, 78 (preceding case approved).

¹ This, however, was said only of testimony by a second witness, and not of the first witness' cross-examination.

the conviction, it is surely a straining of technical requirements to forbid proof by the testimony of the impeached witness himself, given on cross-examination. Lord Ellenborough's sober suggestion that the witness "may have mistaken what passed in court" is a refinement of apprehension, and borders nearly on the ridiculous. That there is any real risk of reaching an erroneous result by taking the witness' own admission against his credit, extracted on cross-examination, is impossible; there is in such a case no need to insist upon a copy:

1869, Cooley, C. J., in Clemens v. Conrad, 19 Mich. 175: "We think the reasons for requiring record evidence of conviction have very little application to a case where the party convicted is himself upon the stand and is questioned concerning it with a view to sifting his character upon cross-examination. The danger that he will falsely testify to a conviction which never took place, or that he may be mistaken about it, is so slight that it may almost be looked upon as purely imaginary; while the danger that worthless characters will unexpectedly be placed upon the stand, with no opportunity for the opposite party to produce the record evidence of their infamy, is always palpable and imminent."

Such, at least, was the earlier rule, when on the voir dire a witness' infamy could be proved by his own admissions.² But, by the end of the 1700s, the English Courts were discouraging, in every technical way possible, objections based on the outworn rules of incompetency; and thus it came about that, while the incompetency of infamy still existed, the absolute rule was enforced that proof must be made by a copy of the record.³ The rule thus established was usually made applicable also (except where statute had expressly intervened) for the purposes of discrediting a witness, after the statutory reforms under which infamy ceased to disqualify; though the reasons for treating with disfavor such a method of excluding a witness had little force for the mere process of discrediting him.⁴

The result is that three types of rule now obtain in the different jurisdictions: (1) the requirement of a copy in all cases; (2) the allowance of an admission on cross-examination of the witness to be impeached, but the requirement of a copy or an abstract when proof is made by another witness, — this rarely by common-law decision, but widely by statute; (3) the allowance of recollection-testimony either from the witness to be impeached or from another, — this rarely, and by statute only. The second form is the only proper one, and now obtains in the majority of jurisdictions.⁵

² 1787, R. v. Priddle, Leach Cr. L., 3d ed., I, 382 ("being examined on the voir dire, he acknowledged "a conviction, and was excluded"); 1791, R. v. Edwards, 4 T. R. 440 ("whether he had not stood in the pillory for perjury"; allowed, and witness rejected). There had been an earlier case to the contrary: 1699, R. v. Warden of the Fleet, 12 Mod. 337, 341.

³ 1763, Buller, Trials at Nisi Prius, 292 ("Note: the party who would take advantage of this exception to a witness must have a copy of the record of conviction ready to produce in Court"); 1806, R. v. Castell Careinion, 8 East 77; 1817, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in R. v. Watson,

2 Stark. 116, 151 ("When a crime is imputed to a witness of which he may be convicted by due course of law, the Court know but one medium of proof,—the record of conviction"); 1852, Cresswell, J., in Macdonnell v. Evans, 11 C. B. 930, 935.

⁴ In some Courts, however, the distinction is made; see the cases infra in Arkansas and Tennessee.

⁵ In the following list the various statutes and decisions are collected; rulings dealing with such quibbling and evasive questions as "whether he had been in jail" are included here; statutes not here quoted (though cited)

Where, for the purpose of discrediting, a judgment in a civil suit could be proved, it would seem that a similar rule should by analogy apply.⁶

are quoted ante, § 488; the statutes which allow a clerk's certificate, summarizing the record, involve the principles of §§ 1678, 2110, post, but are noted here: ENGLAND: 1851, St. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, § 13 (record of conviction or acquittal is provable by the clerk's certified abstract); 1854, St. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, § 25 ("A witness in any cause may be questioned as to whether he has been convicted of any felony or misdemeanor, and upon being so questioned, if he either denies the fact or refuses to answer, it shall be lawful for the opposite party to prove such conviction; and a certificate containing the substance and effect only (omitting the formal part) of the indictment and conviction for such offence," signed by the clerk or other custodian, shall suffice, "upon proof of the identity of the person"); 1865, St. 28 Vict. c. 8, §§ 1, 6 (extended to criminal cases); CANADA: the following statutes are like the English St. 1854, varying only as to the kind of crime (ante, § 986) thus provable: Dom. Crim. Code 1892, § 695 (substituting "any offence"); B. C. Rev. St. 1897, c. 71, § 32; N. Br. Consol. St. 1877, c. 46, § 22; Newf. Consol. St. 1892, c. 57, § 20; N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 45; Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 73, § 19 (substituting "crime" for "felony or misdemeanor"); P. E. I. St. 1889, c. 9, § 18; UNITED STATES: Ala. Code 1897, § 1796 ("A witness may be examined touching his conviction for crime, and his answers may be contradicted by other evidence"); 1892, Baker v. Trotter, 73 Ala. 277, 281 (question not allowed); 1893, Thompson v. State, 100 id. 70, 72 (same); 1895, Murphy v. State, 108 id. 10, 18 So. 557 (record required); Alaska C. C. P. 1900, § 669 (like Or. Annot. C. 1892, § 840); Ark. Stats. 1894, § 2959 (a conviction "may be shown by the examination of a witness or record of a judgment"); 1886, Scott v. State, 49 Ark. 156, 158, 4 S. W. 750 (objection to competency; judge's report of convictions, excluded); 1893, Southern Ins. Co. v. White, 58 id. 277, 279, 24 S. W. 425 (objection to competency; production required); 1899, Cash v. Cash, 67 id. 278, 54 S. W. 744 (witness' admission on the stand, sufficient); 1902, Vance v. State, 70 Ark. 272, 68 S. W. 37 (to prove disqualification, and not merely impeachment of credit, the record-copy must be produced, the witness' admission not sufficing; the statute not applying to proof of a disqualifying crime; Riddick, J., diss.); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 2051 ("it may be shown by the examination of the witness, or the record of the judgment, that he had been convicted of a felony"); 1870, People v. Reinhart, 39 Cal. 449 (question not allowed); 1870, People v. McDonald, ib. 697 (same); 1874, People v. Manning, 48 id. 335, 338 (rule not applicable to a question about an arrest);

1886, People v. Rodrigo, 69 id. 606, 11 Pac. 481 (question allowed); 1895, People v. Dillwood, — id. —, 39 Pac. 439 (question allowed); Colo. Annot. St. 1891, § 4822 (quoted ante, § 488); § 2065 ("a witness must answer as to the fact of his previous conviction for felony"); D. C. Code 1901, § 1067 (a conviction may be proved "either upon the cross-examination of the witness or by evidence aliunde"; "it shall not be necessary to produce the whole record of the proceedings containing such conviction, but the certificate, under seal, of the clerk of the court wherein such proceedings were had, stating the fact of the conviction and for what cause, shall be sufficient"); Fla. Rev. St. 1892, §§ 1096, 1097 (quoted ante, § 488); 1900, Squires v. State, 42 Fla. 251, 27 So. 864 (allowed, on cross-examination); St. 1901, c. 4966 ("such conviction may be proved by questioning the proposed witness, or if he deny it, by producing a record of his conviction"); Ga.: 1873, Johnson v. State, 46 Ga. 118 (record-copy required); 1888, Doggett v. Simms, 79 id. 257, 4 S. E. 909 (the transcript must include the accusation or indictment); 1896, Killian v. R. Co., 97 id. 727, 25 S. E. 384 (record required); 1898, Huff v. State, 104 id. 384, 30 S. E. 868 (indictment; record required); Haw. Civil Laws 1897, § 1420 ("A witness may be questioned as to whether he has been convicted of any indictable or other offence"; the remainder substantially like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125); Ida. Rev. St. 1887, § 6082 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2051); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 1 (quoted ante, § 488; applies only to civil proceedings); c. 38, § 426 (conviction of crime "may be shown" in criminal cases; no method stated); 1882, Bartholomew v. People, 104 Ill. 601, 606 (copy required in criminal cases; "at least the caption, returning of the indictment into open court by the grand jury, the indictment and arraignment," are essential; thus, a mittimus with a copy of the judgment, given to the jailer, are insufficient); 1897, Gage v. Eddy, 167 id. 102, 47 N. E. 200 (testimony by another witness, allowed); Ind.: 1877, Farley v. State, 57 Ind. 333 (excluded on cross-examination; yet left doubtful); Ind. T.: 1898, Williams v. U. S., 1 Ind. Terr. 560, 45 S. W. 116 (record required); Ia. Code 1897, § 4613 ("A witness may be interrogated as to his previous conviction for a felony. But no other proof is competent except the record thereof"); Kan.: 1886, State v. Pfefferle, 36 Kan. 90, 92, 12 Pac. 406 (record not necessary); 1891, State v. Probasco, 46 id. 310, 26 Pac. 749 (cross-examination allowed); Ky. C. C. P. 1895, § 597 (conviction may be shown "by the examination of a witness or record of a judgment"); 1892, Burdette v. Com., 93 Ky. 78, 18 S. W. 1011 ("previous case and that of a prior conviction, because either the person admits the judgment, which should suffice, or he denies it, when, apart from statute, he cannot be contradicted upon a collateral matter). Compare the rules ante, §§ 1244 and 1256.

⁶ 1862, Henman v. Lester, 12 C. B. n. s. 776 (question to party to discredit him as to losing a former civil suit; Byles, J., was for exclusion, because the record should be produced, the statute not affecting this sort of case; Willes & Keating, JJ., were for admission both in this

§ 1271. Same: (c) Copy of Foreign Statutory Law, as preferred to Recollection-Testimony. The process of proving a foreign law raises a number conviction could not be more safely and satisfactorily shown by record evidence than by admission of the person himself who was convicted"); 1901, Wilson v. Com., — id. — , 64 S. W. 457 (allowed on cross-examination, in criminal cases); 1901, Mitchell v. Com., — id. — , 64 S. W. 751 (same); La.: 1824, Castellano v. Peillon, 2 Mart. n. s. 466 (outside testimony excluded); 1900, State v. Robinson, 52 La. Au. 541, 27 So. 129 (question to the witness himself, allowable); 1903, State v. McCoy, 109 La. 682, 33 So. 730 (whether he had been convicted and sent to the penitentiary, allowed); Md. Pub. Gen. L. 1888, Art. 35, § 5 (the whole record need not be produced, but only a certificate of clerk under seal); 1885, Smith v. State, 64 Md. 25 (whether he had ever been confined in jail, allowed); 1894, McLaughlin v. Mencke, 80 id. 83, 30 Atl. 603 (question as to conviction, allowed); 1902, Gambrill v. Schooley, 95 id. 260, 52 Atl. 500 (allowed, on cross-examination); Mass.: 1769, Advocate General v. Hancock, 1 Quincy 461 (record required); 1822, Com. v. Green, 17 Mass. 514, 537 (see quotation supra); 1855, Com. v. Quin, 5 Gray 479 (record required); 1868, Com. v. Gorham, 99 Mass. 420, 421 (the record must include the final judgment, because the verdict may have been set aside); 1894, Com. v. Sullivan, 161 id. 59, 36 N. E. 583 (whether he had been in jail in Essex County; excluded); 1900, O'Brien v. Keefe, 175 id. 274, 56 N. E. 588 (upon a promise of later producing the record, the witness may be asked de bene, to identify him); Mich.: 1867, Wilbur v. Flood, 16 Mich. 44 (copy necessary for outside witness, but not for cross-examination; followed in ensuing cases); 1869, Clemens v. Conrad, 19 id. 170, 174 (see quotation supra); 1870, Dickinson v. Dustin, 21 id. 565 (here the record of an attorney's disbarment was technically defective); 1882, Driscoll v. People, 47 id. 416, 11 N. W. 221; 1886, People v. Mausannan, 60 id. 15, 21, 26 N. W. 797; 1890, Helwig v. Lasowski, 82 id. 621, 46 N. W. 1033; Comp. L. 1897, § 1046 (justice's certificate of conviction, admissible); 1903, Pratt v. Wickham, — id. — , 94 N. W. 1059 (allowed on cross-examination); Minn. Gen. St. 1894, § 6841 (quoted ante, § 483); 1888, State v. Curtis, 39 Minn. 359, 40 N. W. 263 (statute applied); Miss.: Annot. C. 1892, § 1746 (cross-examination allowable; quoted ante, § 987); 1897, Jackson v. State, 75 Miss. 145, 21 So. 707 (question allowed); Mo.: 1854, State v. Edwards, 19 Mo. 675, 676 (record required); 1878, State v. Rugan, 68 id. 214 (same); 1883, State v. Lewis, 80 id. 110, 111 (that the witness had been seen in the penitentiary as a convict, excluded); 1885, State v. Rockett, 87 id. 666, 669 (the record is the only evidence); 1890, State v. Brent, 100 id. 531, 13 S. W. 874 (excluded, on cross-examination); 1890, State v. Miller, 100 id. 606, 621, 13 S. W. 1051 (whether he had been in the penitentiary; record not required; preceding rulings ignored); 1893, State v. Taylor, 118 Mo. 153, 24 S. W. 449 (cross-examination allowed, "for the purpose of honestly discrediting him"); 1894, State v. Pratt, 121 id. 566, 26 S. W. 556 (similar); 1894, State v. Martin, 124 id. 514, 28 S. W. 12 (question as to number of times in jail; record not required); Laws 1895, p. 284, Rev. St. 1899, § 4680 (conviction is provable "either by the record or by his own cross-examination"; quoted ante, § 488); Mont. C. C. P. 1895, § 3379 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2051); P. C. § 1242 (conviction may be proved by the record "or by his examination as such witness"); 1895, State v. Black, — Mont. — , 38 Pac. 674 (undecided); Nebr. Comp. St. 1899, § 5912 (like Ia. Code § 4613); 1902, Leo v. State, 63 Nebr. 723, 89 N. W. 303 (questions held improper on the facts, because of abuse of the rule); N. H.: 1862, Smith v. Smith, 43 N. H. 536, 538 (whether a witness had been bound over to appear on a charge of perjury; not allowed); N. J. Gen. St. 1896, Evid. § 9 (conviction may be proved by "examination of such witness or otherwise," and he may be contradicted); St. 1900, c. 150, § 7 (re-enacting the terms of Gen. St. Evid. § 9); 1899, Brown v. State, 62 N. J. L. 666, 42 Atl. 811 (statute applied); N. M. Comp. L. 1897, § 3025 (substantially like Eng. St. 1854); N. Y.: 1816, People v. Herrick, 13 John. 82, 84 (question not allowed, but chiefly on account of the privilege against self-disgrace); 1817, Hilts v. Colvin, 14 id. 182, 184 (even where the record has been burnt, oral evidence is inadmissible where a certificate of its tenor was required by law to be filed in the court of Exchequer); 1862 Newcomb v. Griswold, 24 N. Y. 299 (record necessary); 1870, Real v. People, 42 id. 273, 281 (whether he has been "in jail, the penitentiary, or the State prison," admissible; but as to whether he has been convicted, "a different rule may perhaps apply"); 1877, C. C. P. § 832 (in civil or criminal cases, the conviction may be proved "either by the record or by his cross-examination"); 1881, Perry v. People, 86 N. Y. 353, 358 (oral question as to conviction improper; but if not objected to because the record should be produced, the answer is receivable); 1881, Pen. C. § 714 ("[The conviction may be proved] either by the record, or his cross examination"); 1883, People v. Noelke, 94 N. Y. 137, 144 (question on cross-examination allowed); 1889, Spiegel v. Hays, 118 id. 660, 22 N. E. 1105 (same); Oh.: 1870, Wroe v. State, 20 Oh. St. 471 (left undecided); Okl.: 1898, Asher v. Terr., 7 Okl. 188, 54 Pac. 445 (whether the witness had been in jail, allowed); 1899, Hyde v. Terr., 8 id. 69, 56 Pac. 851 (allowed on cross-examination); Or. C. C. P. 1892, § 840 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2051); R. I.: 1892, State v. Ellwood, 17 R. I. 763, 768, 24 Atl. 782 (allowable on cross-examination); S. C.: 1903, State v. Williamson, 65 S. C. 242, 43 S. E. 671 (Clemens v. Conrad, Mich., followed; here applied to a question about an indictment); Tenn.: 1895, Boyd v. State, 94 Tenn. 505, 29 S. W. 901 (record required, where the witness is to be excluded, not merely discredited); 1896, Moore v. State, 96 id. 209, 33 S. W. 1046 (record required); U. S.: 1834, U. S. v. Woods, 4

of interesting questions of principle, not always sufficiently discriminated. Some of these have already been noticed, — the experiential qualifications necessary for a witness (ante, § 564), the necessity of personal knowledge by the witness (ante, §§ 668, 690), and the exemption from the rule requiring production of the original (ante, §§ 1213, 1218). Others involve subsequent principles, — the admissibility, under exceptions to the Hearsay rule, of certified copies (post, § 1680), of official printed volumes (post, § 1684), of private reports of cases (post, § 1703), and of legal treatises (post, § 1697), the effect of the Opinion rule (post, § 1953), the presumption as to the nature of an unproved foreign law (post, § 2536), and the part of the tribunal — judge or jury — to whom evidence is to be offered (post, § 2558).

The particular question here is whether the evidence of a foreign "written law" should be presented in the shape of a copy or merely by recollection-testimony of one qualified to know it. That the "unwritten law," i. e. a customary law or a judicial decision, may be proved by the latter mode has never been questioned. But, on the principle already noted (ante, § 1269), when the law to be proved is a statute, the preferred mode of proof would be a copy of the literal terms of the official record. Is there any reason why the principle should suffer any modification in the present class of cases? The argument in the negative is presented in the following passage:

1844, Patteson, J., in Baron de Bode's Case, infra: "I quite agree that a witness conversant with the law of a foreign country may be asked what in his opinion the law of that country is. But I cannot help thinking that, as soon as it appears that he is going to speak of a written law, his mouth is closed. . . . The general rule is not denied, that when the contents of a written instrument are to be proved, the instrument itself should be produced, or, when the instrument from its nature is provable by an examined copy, then such examined copy. I cannot see why the rule should not be the same in the case of a foreign written law. . . . I think the rule would be just the same if the question related to the French code as existing at this moment. If a witness were asked what the law now is with respect to a bill of exchange in France, and were immediately cross-examined as to whether that law was not in writing, and answered that it was, I think a copy of the law must be produced."

But the answer to this is clear. It may be conceded that, if the question were purely and simply directed to the contents of a specific statute, the proof should be by copy of its terms. But in the usual case this is not the question; the inquiry is as to the state of the law at the present time or at

Cr. C. C. 484, 486 (allowed on cross-examination, but not by other testimony); 1893, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Rambo, 8 C. C. A. 6, 59 Fed. 75 (proof of the oral plea of guilty by one present in court at the time, excluded); Utah Rev. St. 1898, § 3431 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2065); Vt.: 1897, State v. Slack, 69 Vt. 486, 38 Atl. 311, semble (record required); 1902, McGovern v. Smith, — id. —, 53 Atl. 326 (allowed on cross-examination); Wash.: 1893, State v. Payne, 6 Wash. 563, 568 (record required); W. Va.: 1902, State v. Hill, — W. Va. —, 43 S. E. 160 (conviction may be proved by the witness' answer; in any case, the fact of having been in the penitentiary may be proved without the record-copy); Wis. Stats. 1898, § 4073 (quoted ante, § 488); 1859, Kirschner v. State, 9 Wis. 140, 144 (record required); 1879, Ingalls v. State, 48 id. 647, 654, 4 N. W. 785 (same); 1881, McKesson v. Sherman, 51 id. 303, 311, 8 N. W. 200, semble (same); 1900, Shafer v. Eau Claire, 105 id. 239, 81 N. W. 409 (allowed on cross-examination, but the time and place must be specified; this is merely a perversion of the rule of § 1025, ante); 1902, Cullen v. Hanisch, 114 id. 24, 89 N. W. 900 (question as to the mere fact of being in jail, excluded); 1903, Paulson v. State, — id. —, 94 N. W. 771 (oral testimony to conviction is under the statute allowed only on cross-examination).

a given time past. This inquiry can be answered only by taking into consideration the appropriate statute, if any, the pre-existing rule of custom or judicial precedent as affected by the statute, the validity of the statute under some possible constitution, and the actual effect of the statute as determined by prior and subsequent judicial application of the constitution and by judicial construction of the statutory words. In short, an answer as to the state of the law at a given moment can never be a mere reproduction, offered in place of a copy, of statutory words; it is a statement (ante, § 1242) of a net fact separate from the words of a statute, and involving many considerations in which the words of a statute are but a single element. The acceptance of a mere copy of the statute, far from securing greater accuracy, would on the contrary tend rather to mislead, by ignoring these other material elements. This view of the question was expounded in masterly opinions in Baron de Bode's Case :

1844, Baron de Bode's Case, 8 Q. B. 250; Denman, L. C. J. : "The form of the question [as to the state of the law in France in 1789] is immaterial; in effect the witness is asked to speak to the decree. It is objected that this is a violation of the general principle that the contents of a written instrument can be shown only by producing the instrument or accounting for the non-production. But there is another general rule, that the opinions of persons of science must be received as to the facts of their science. That rule applies to the evidence of legal men; and I think it is not confined to unwritten law, but extends also to the written laws which such men are bound to know. Properly speaking, the nature of such evidence is not to set forth the contents of the written law, but its effect and the state of law resulting from it. The mere contents, indeed, might often mislead persons not familiar with the particular system of law. . . . When Pothier states the law of France as rising out of an ordonnance made in a particular year, can we exclude that as being merely his account of the contents of a written instrument? I cannot conceive that in any civilized country a statement from Blackstone's Commentaries would be rejected, which set forth what the law was, when altered, and up to what time continued. Such a statement would not relate merely to the contents of the statute referred to, but to the state of the law before or after its passing"; Coleridge, J. : "What, then, do we mean by a knowledge of the law? That question seems to me to go to the foundation of the whole matter; and it must be determined, with reference to the particular question before us, by a little subdivision. We must first inquire as to the sources of our knowledge, and, secondly, as to the time over which we are to range for our knowledge. Now, with regard to the sources of the knowledge, we are to find it partly in the actual documents, the writings first existing as laws, . . . [and where these are wanting,] from text-books, reported decisions, records, and local customs prevailing in particular districts. . . . Then, next, as to the time over which our knowledge is to range. When we talk of a man having a knowledge of the law, do we mean a knowledge of the law only as it exists in the courts of justice at the present day, or do we mean that knowledge of the law and the changes it has undergone which he has acquired in the course of study that gives him the character of a scientific witness? I apprehend we clearly mean the latter. . . . The question for us is, not what the language of the written law is, but what the law is altogether, as shown by exposition, interpretation, and adjudication. How many errors might result if a foreign Court attempted to collect the law from the language of some of our statutes which declare instruments in certain cases to be 'null and void to all intents and purposes,' while an English lawyer would state that they were good against the grantor and that the Courts have so expounded the statutes!"

1844, Lord Brougham, in Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Cl. & F. 85, 115: "It is perfectly clear that the proper mode of proving a foreign law is not by showing to the House the book of the law; for the House has not organs to know and to deal with the text of that law, and therefore requires the assistance of a lawyer who knows how to interpret it."

1846, Erle, J., Cocks v. Purday, 2 C. & K. 270: "The proper course, to ascertain the law of a foreign country, is to call a witness expert in it, and ask him on his responsibility what that law is, and not to read any fragments of a code, which would only mislead."

This solution is so plain that it is singular that judicial opinion waited so long to expound it. The opposite solution had been sanctioned by English common-law Courts on a few occasions before and after the year 1800;¹ but, in spite of these rulings, the overwhelming weight of English authority of that period, representing the original tradition, did not require proof by copy.² About the year 1845, the decisions quoted above removed for England the previous uncertainty of precedent.³

But in the meantime, in the United States, the just proportion of the minority of the English rulings not being perceived, some of them served to

¹ In the following cases a copy was required: 1776, Sir G. Hay, in Harford v. Morris, 2 Hagg. Cons. 430 ("not by the opinions of lawyers, which is the most uncertain way in the world, but by certificates"); 1800, Boehtlinck v. Schneider, 3 Esp. 58 (on argument that the unwritten law, though not the written, could be proved orally, Kenyon, L. C. J., still insisted, for proof of the Russian law about stoppage in transitu, upon "an authenticated document of the laws"; and the K. B. concurred); 1812, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Clegg v. Levy, 3 Camp. 166 (but here the witness was probably incompetent); 1815, Gibbs, C. J., in Millar v. Heinrich, 4 Camp. 155 (Russian admiralty regulations). In the following cases the ruling is obscure: 1797, Alves v. Hodgson, 7 T. R. 241, Kenyon, L. C. J.; 1800, Male v. Roberts, 3 Esp. 164, Eldon, L. C. J.; 1801, Inglis v. Usherwood, 1 East 520, K. B.

² The following cases are to that effect, though some of them do not expressly apply the doctrine to a statute: 1744, Hardwicke, L. C., in Gage v. Bulkeley, Ridgw. cas. temp. Hardw. 276; 1774, Mostyn v. Fabrigas, Cowp. 161, 174 (Mansfield, L. C. J.: "The way of knowing foreign laws is by admitting them to be proved as facts, and the Court must assist the jury in ascertaining what the law is. For instance, if there is a French settlement, the construction of which depends upon the custom of Paris, witnesses must be received to explain what the custom is; as evidence is received of customs in respect to trade"; no discrimination made on the present point); 1789, Kenyon, L. C. J., in Walpole v. Ewer, Ridgw. 276, note, semble; 1791, Kenyon, L. C. J., in Ganer v. Lady Lanesborough, Peake 18 (the fact of a Jewish divorce, according to custom in Leghorn, proved orally); 1791, Kenyon, L. C. J., in Chaurand v. Angerstein, ib. 44; 1802, Sir W. Wynne, in Middleton v. Janverin, 2 Hagg. Cons. 443 (written and unwritten laws); 1806, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Picton's Trial, 30

How. St. Tr. 509 (written laws); 1807, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Richardson v. Anderson, 1 Camp. 66, semble; 1807, Buchanan v. Rucker, ib. 63 (mode of service of process in Tohago; the written law not required); 1812, Abbott, C. J., in Lacon v. Higgins, 3 Stark. 178, Dowl. & R. N. P. 44 (where also a text was offered); 1828, Trotter v. Trotter, 4 Bligh n. s. 504, House of Lords; 1834, Trimby v. Vignier, 4 Moore & S. 703 (by consent; Tindal, C. J., and Ct. of C. P.); 1834, Alivon v. Furnival, 1 C. M. & R. 291, Parke, B., and the Ct. of Exch.

³ England: 1844, Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Cl. & F. 85, 114 (expert allowed to state the law of marriage in Rome, and to refresh his memory by looking at law-books at the same time); 1845, Baron de Bode's Case, 8 Q. B. 208, 246 (expert opinion as to the law of inheritance at a particular time in Alsace, that feudal law had been there ended by a decree of the French Assembly of Aug. 4, 1789, allowed without producing a copy of the decree; Patteson, J., diss.); 1845, Nelson v. Bridport, 8 Beav. 527, 539 (expert opinion of Sicilian law "upon several points," admitted); 1846, Cocks v. Purday, 2 C. & K. 269 (whether a parol transfer sufficed in Bohemian law, allowed); 1852, R. v. Newman, 3 C. & K. 252, 262, Lord Campbell, C. J. (proof of foreign Court's jurisdiction made by parol); 1863, Di Sora v. Philipps, 10 H. L. C. 624, 633 (expert opinion as to legal effect of marriage contract in Italian law, admitted without requiring copies); Canada: Ont.: 1850, Short v. Kingsmill, 7 U. C. Q. B. 354; 1852, Arnold v. Higgins, 11 id. 446; Man. Rev. St. 1902, c. 57, § 32 (for the purpose of ascertaining foreign law judicially noticed, the judge may require "evidence upon oath," "oral or written, or by certificate or otherwise, as may seem proper").

For the British statutes providing for the use of a judicial certificate of the law as obtaining in a foreign country or in some other part of the British Dominions, see post, § 1674.

establish the erroneous view in a few early rulings in our Courts. Thus, unfortunately, in a majority of our jurisdictions the erroneous doctrine came to prevail (though later legislation has in some jurisdictions corrected it) that, wherever a statute was in any way involved, a copy of the statute was the preferred evidence required.⁴

* The cases on both sides, with the statutes, are as follows: Ala.: 1840, Innerarity v. Mims, 1 Ala. 666 (oral evidence of statute inadmissible); Ark.: 1850, Barkman v. Hopkins, 11 Ark. 168, semble (oral evidence of statute admissible); 1856, McNeill v. Arnold, 17 id. 154, 164 (oral testimony to registry-statutes, excluded); 1878, Bowles v. Eddy, 33 id. 645, 649 (same; usury statutes); 1884, Blackwell v. Glass, 43 id. 209, 211 (oral testimony to usage as to sufficiency of return, admitted); Cal.: C. C. P. 1872, § 1902 ("The oral testimony of witnesses skilled therein is admissible as evidence of the unwritten law of a sister State or foreign country"; this by implication preserves the erroneous rule); Del. Rev. St. 1893, c. 107, § 8 ("The existence and the tenor or effect of all foreign laws may be proved as facts by parole evidence; but if it shall appear that the law in question is contained in a written statute or code, the Court may, in its discretion, reject any evidence of such law which is not accompanied by a copy of such code or statute"); Fla. Rev. St. 1892, § 1108 (like Del. Rev. St. c. 107, § 8); Ida. Rev. St. 1887, § 5971 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1902; inserting "Territory"); Ill.: 1858, Merritt v. Merritt, 20 Ill. 65, 80 (oral testimony to unwritten law, admissible); 1858, Hoes v. Van Alstyne, ib. 201 (specific statute not provable orally); 1868, Merritt v. Merritt, 45 id. 80, semble (same); 1873, McDeed v. McDeed, 67 id. 545, 548 (common-law provable orally); 1874, Milwaukee & S. P. R. Co. v. Smith, 74 id. 197, 199 (same); Ind. Rev. St. 1897, §§ 489, 490 (like Del. Rev. St. c. 107, § 8, for "the laws of any foreign country"); 1840, Compant v. Jernegan, 5 Blackf. 376 (oral evidence of statute, inadmissible); 1854, Heberd v. Myers, 5 Ind. 94 (like next case); 1860, Line v. Mack, 14 id. 330 (statute of domestic State, oral testimony excluded, but for foreign States, the Court has a discretion); Ia. Code 1897, § 4652 ("unwritten or common law" provable by parole evidence); 1855, Lattourett v. Cook, 1 Ia. 1, 8 (deposition to statute excluded); 1859, Greasons v. Davis, 9 id. 223 (oral evidence of common law, admissible); 1874, Crafts v. Clark, 38 id. 241 (same); 1885, State v. Cross, 68 id. 180, 195, 26 N. W. 62 (statute as to notaries; expert testimony excluded); Kan. Gen. St. 1897, c. 97, § 18 (like Ia. Code, § 4652); 1882, Brenner v. Luth, 28 Kan. 588 (oral evidence of the law, admitted; its nature does not appear); Ky. Stats. 1899, § 1640 (the unwritten law of another of U. S. is provable by "parole evidence of persons learned in the law"; remainder substantially like Del. Rev. St. c. 107, § 8); 1831, Talbot v. Peoples, 6 J. J. M. 200 (statute as to legal rate of interest; oral evidence excluded); 1847, Tyler v. Trabue, 8 B. Monr. 306 (whether a note was negotiable; depositions allowed); La.: 1843, Rosine v. Bouuabel, 5 Rob.

163, 166 (foreign law in general; provable orally); 1847, Isabella v. Pecot, 2 La. An. 387, 391 (statute not provable orally); Me. Pub. St. 1883, c. 82, § 109 (parole evidence of foreign law which "appears to be existing in a written statute or code," may be rejected unless accompanied by copy); 1838, Owen v. Boyle, 15 Me. 149, semble (statute not provable orally); Md.: 1857, Wilson v. Carson, 12 Md. 75, semble (U. S. State statute provable orally); 1867, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Glenn, 28 id. 323 (U. S. State statute; not provable orally); 1869, Zimmerman v. Helsler, 32 id. 278 (same; both erroneously go upon Gardner v. Lewis, 7 Gill 394); Mass. Pub. St. 1882, c. 169, § 72, Rev. L. 1902, c. 175, § 76 (foreign law provable in all cases by parole, except that the Court may in discretion require also a copy of a written statute); 1811, Legg v. Legg, 8 Mass. 99, semble (foreign law not provable orally); 1817, Frith v. Spragne, 14 id. 455, semble (contra); 1825, Raynham v. Canton, 3 Pick. 293, 296 (statute provable orally; "to require [an exemplification, etc.] would put the citizens to an unnecessary burden and expense"; but statute-book preferred to oral testimony); 1829, Haven v. Foster, 9 id. 112, 130 ("if written, it must be proved by documentary evidence"); 1868, Kline v. Baker, 99 Mass. 254, semble (expert may testify to statute); Bowditch v. Soltyk, ib. 138, semble (same); Mich.: 1858, People v. Lambert, 5 Mich. 349, 360 (foreign statute not provable orally); 1863, Kermott v. Ayer, 11 id. 184 (statute not provable orally; that the law is statutory, not assumed, at least where the consequence would be the reversal of a judgment otherwise good); 1880, Kopke v. People, 43 id. 43, 4 N. W. 551, semble (statute not provable orally); Minn. Gen. St. 1894, § 5716 (unwritten or common law of any State or Territory of the U. S., provable "as facts by parole evidence"); § 5718 (like Del. Rev. St. c. 107, § 8); Miss.: 1852, Stewart v. Swanzy, 23 Miss. 502 (statute not provable orally); Mo.: 1857, Charlotte v. Chouteau, 25 Mo. 465, 473 (statute not provable orally); Mont. C. C. P. 1895, § 3190 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1902); Nebr. Comp. St. 1899, § 5970 ("the unwritten or common law" is provable by parole evidence); § 5994 (same); N. H.: 1851, Watson v. Walker, 23 N. H. 471, 496 (oral testimony excluded for written law, semble, even where it does not appear whether the law was written); 1854, Emery v. Berry, 28 id. 473, 485 (of a foreign State, only by an exemplified copy under the seal of State or by a sworn copy; of a domestic State, also by official printed copy; but not orally); 1868, Hall v. Costello, 48 N. H. 176, 179 (expert testimony to British enlistment statute, admitted); N. Y.: 1806, Kenny v. Clarkson, 1 Johns. 394 (statute not provable orally); 1829, Chanoine v. Fowler, 3 Wend. 177 (same); 1830, Hill v. Packard, 5

The provision, in most of the reforming statutes, that the Court may in its discretion require that testimony from an expert be accompanied by a copy of the statute in question, is a wise one. It may be noted, finally, that, on the one hand, oral testimony merely to the words of a statute and to nothing more has never been claimed to be proper;⁵ while, on the other hand, expert testimony to the technical construction of the words or phrases of a statute whose terms are otherwise properly proved is on all hands considered to be receivable.⁶

§ 1272. Preferences as between Recollection-Witnesses. Where no preference for a copy applies, and recollection-testimony is allowable, no further rule of preference can properly be laid down as between different kinds of recollection-witnesses, — for example, a rule preferring the writer of a lost document to a witness who had read it.¹

id. 375, 384, semble (same); 1831, Lincoln v. Battelle, 6 id. 475, 482 (same); 1840, Re Roberts' Will, 8 Paige Ch. 448, semble (same); 1880, Hynes v. McDermott, 82 N. Y. 52 (same); N. C. Code 1883, § 1338 (the unwritten or common law may be proved "by oral evidence"); N. D. Rev. C. 1895, § 5690 (same as Okl. Stats. § 4260); Oh. Rev. St. 1898, § 5244 (unwritten law is provable by parol evidence); Okl. Stats. 1893, § 4260 ("The unwritten or common law of any other State, Territory, or foreign government, may be proved as facts by parol evidence"); Or. C. C. P. 1892, § 727 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1902); Pa.: 1826, Dougherty v. Swett, 15 S. & R. 87 (statute not provable orally; but law will not be assumed to be statutory); 1840, Phillips v. Gregg, 10 Watts 161, 169 (the difficulty of obtaining information as to the Spanish or other laws in the early Louisiana territory was regarded as sufficient to admit parol evidence); R. I.: 1870, Barrows v. Downs, 9 R. I. 446 (statute provable orally; following the arguments of Baron de Bode's Case and Sunsex Peerage Case); S. C. Gen. St. 1882, c. 86, § 2218, Rev. St. 1893, § 2353, Code 1902, § 2890 (printed copies of foreign written law receivable; unwritten or common law "may be proved as facts by parol evidence"); S. D. Stats. 1899, § 6533 (like N. D. Rev. C. § 5690); Tex.: 1847, Bryant v. Kelton, 1 Tex. 436, semble (statute not provable orally); 1854, Martin v. Payne, 11 id. 292, 295 (oral testimony as to rate of interest, excluded); U. S.: 1804, Church v. Hubbard, 2 Cr. 238, semble (statute not provable orally); 1810, Livingston v. Ins. Co., 6 id. 274, 280 (foreign trade regulations not shown to be in writing, provable by parol); 1807, Robinson v. Clifford, 2 Wash. C. C. 1 (statute not provable orally); 1808, Seton v. Ins. Co., ih. 175 (same); 1808, Jaffray v. Dennis, ib. 253 (same); 1816, Consequa v. Willings, 1 Pet. C. C. 229 (same); 1843, Wilcocks v. Phillips' Ex'rs, 1 Wall. Jr. 49, 53 (same; though here the difficulty of getting a copy of a law of China was allowed to exempt from the rule); 1852, Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. 426, semble (general rule as above); 1882, Pierce v. Insdeth, 106 U. S. 551, 1 Sup. 418, semble (same); 1901, Herbst v.

Asiatic Prince, 47 C. C. A. 328, 108 Fed. 289 (law of Brazil, as to delivery of goods under the customs law, proved by a lawyer's testimony); 1902, Mexican N. R. Co. v. Slater, 53 C. C. A. 239, 115 Fed. 593, 606 (expert testimony "as to the proper construction of a statute of a foreign country and written in a foreign tongue," the terms of the statute having been proved by copy, held admissible); 1903, Badische A. & S. F. v. Klipstein, 125 Fed. 543 (testimony of German lawyers, that certain records of incorporation in Baden, proved by copy, were legally sufficient to incorporate, admitted); Utah Rev. St. 1898, § 3381 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1902, adding "Territory"); Vt.: 1803, Woodbridge v. Austin, 2 Tyl. 364, 366 ("if a written law, it must be produced"); 1827, Danforth v. State, 1 Vt. 259, 260, 266 (testimony that a deposition-caption was according to the statute of Massachusetts, received); 1855, Smith v. Potter, 27 id. 304, 307, 309 (statute not provable orally); W. Va. Code 1891, c. 13, § 4 (in noticing the law, "statutory or other," of the U. S. or any other State or country, the judge "may consult any printed book purporting to contain, state, or explain the same, and consider any testimony, information, or argument that is offered on the subject"); Wis. Stats. 1898, §§ 4138, 4139 (the common law of the U. S., a State or Territory is provable by parol; remainder substantially like Del. Rev. St. c. 107, § 8); Wyo. Rev. St. 1887, § 2592 (like Oh. Rev. St. § 5244).

⁵ This seems to have been assumed without decision.

⁶ 1857, Bremer v. Freeman, 10 Moore P. C. 362; 1857, Walker v. Forbes, 31 Ala. 10; 1837, Dyer v. Smith, 12 Conn. 384, 390; 1898, Canale v. People, 177 Ill. 219, 52 N. E. 310; 1902, Mexican N. R. Co. v. Slater, C. C. A., supra. Compare the opinion rule (post, § 1953).

¹ 1816, Liebman v. Pooley, 1 Stark. 167 (writer of original not preferred to another who had seen it, in giving parol evidence of contents); 1869, Huls v. Kimball, 52 Ill. 390, 395 (maker of mortgage not preferred to mortgagee); 1816, Las Caygas v. Larionda, 4 Mart. La. 283, 287 (official certificate of a notary's office and signature, not preferred to ordinary

§ 1273. Preference as between Different Kinds of Written Copies; Certified and Sworn Copies. Every copy (except the sort mentioned post, § 1280, par. (2)), is in strictness an "examined" copy, in the sense that the original and the copy have been examined or compared together by the witness, either in his own act of transcription or by taking some one else's transcription and comparing it with the original (ante, § 1265). But the term "examined copy" has by tradition come to be associated with a copy made by a private person not the official custodian of the document. Thus the terms "examined" or "sworn" are used for copies sworn to upon the stand as correct, in distinction from "certified" or "attested" or "office" copies, i. e. copies made in the public office by the official custodian, where the document is an official one. This distinction, however, had its origin and maintains its importance in a very different field of the law, namely, the Hearsay rule; for, under the exception for Official Statements (post, § 1677) the question arises how far such official (or "certified," "attested," "office") copies are receivable; and whenever their admission, under that exception, is not justifiable, the copy must be verified by a witness on the stand, i. e. must be a "sworn" or "examined" copy. Thus, under that exception to the Hearsay rule, but there only, the distinction between certified and sworn or examined copies is a solid one.

It is because of this distinction, created and maintained under another principle of the law of evidence, that there has been a tendency to recognize some distinction, for the present principle also, between the two kinds of copies, and to require a certified in preference to a sworn copy, in proving the contents of official documents. Such a distinction has no support, either in orthodox tradition or in reasons of policy. So far as the traditional practice is concerned, the sworn copy was in England for a long time almost the exclusive mode of proving official documents other than judicial records, because the Hearsay exception allowing the use of certified copies was there recognized (until statutory changes occurred) to only a limited extent (post, § 1677). In the United States, however, owing to the broader scope given to this common-law exception, and owing to its liberal expansion by statute at an early date, the certified copy came into more general, if not almost exclusive use; so that the youngest generation of practitioners in many jurisdictions seldom use or even see a sworn copy of an official document. Add to this that the statutes enlarging the exception to the Hearsay rule and making all kinds of official documents in almost all jurisdictions provable by certified copy have sometimes been misapprehended by the Courts; i. e. a witness); 1843, Rosine v. Bonnabel, 5 Rob. La. 163, 166 (same); 1883, Johnson v. Skipworth, 59 Tex. 473, 475 (last custodian of a lost record, not preferred to other witnesses); 1896, Brown v. Stanton, 69 Vt. 53, 37 Atl. 280 (the town clerk is not the exclusive witness of the contents of the town records; any one who has examined them may testify to the absence of a certain record). Contra: 1895, Hines v. Johnston, 95 Ga. 629, 23 S. E. 470 (deed-register's clerk is alone competent to prove existence and contents of his record, though any person may prove absence of a conveyance in record; a distinction indefensible); 1843, Whiteford v. Burckmyer, 1 Gill 127, 141 (the addressee of a letter, held a preferred witness to its contents); 1903, Sykes v. Beck, — N. D. —, 96 N. W. 844 (cited ante, § 1244, note 4); 1903, Fisher v. Betts, — id. —, 96 N. W. 132 (similar). Compare also the cases cited post, § 1278.

provision intended merely to enable such a copy to be used where it could not be used before has sometimes been ignorantly treated as though nothing not specified in the statute could be used as a copy, and thus as if the statute provided an exclusive mode (ante, § 1186; post, § 1655). In some such ways as these the notion has been sanctioned in a few jurisdictions that a certified copy should be preferred to a sworn copy. That this notion is wholly unfounded, the following passages indicate:

Ante 1726, Chief Baron Gilbert, Evidence, 15: "Objection. But if exemplifications under the Broad Seal are the highest evidence that the nature of the thing is capable of, then why are any proofs admitted but them? . . . Answer. [The rule does not mean] that nothing under the highest assurance possible should have been given in evidence to prove any matter in question. To strain the rule to that height would be to create an endless charge and perplexity, for there are almost infinite degrees of probability, one under the other; . . . a contract attested by two witnesses gains more credit than a contract attested by one, and therefore by the same argument one witness would be no good proof of a contract; and all these are plainly as good reasonings as to say that the sworn copy of a record ought not to be admitted because a copy under the Broad Seal is a stronger evidence."

1885, Peters, C. J., in State v. Lynde, 77 Me. 561, 562, 1 Atl. 687: "Examined copies are in England resorted to as the most usual mode of proving records. The mode . . . seems to have prevailed in many of the States, including Pennsylvania and New York. It was at an early date adopted in some of the Federal Courts. It is not an unknown mode of proof in New England. . . . Why not admissible? The evidence is as satisfactory certainly as a certified copy. In the latter case we depend upon the honor and integrity of an official, and in the former upon the oath of a competent witness. In either case, an error or fraud is easily detectible. Probably the reason why such a mode of proof has not been much known, if known at all, in our practice, is that it is cheaper and easier to produce [certified] copies; and if a witness comes instead, it is more satisfactory to have [as here] the officer who controls the records bring them into court."

With reference, then, to any rules of preference as between different kinds of copies, the precedents fall under the following heads:

(1) There is properly no preference for a certified or office copy over a sworn or examined copy;¹ though a few jurisdictions recognize such a preference in some instances.²

¹ N. Br. Consol. St. 1877, c. 46, § 7 (record or document recorded or deposited "in any public office in this province" may be proved by an examined copy); 1876, Blackman v. Dowling, 57 Ala. 78, 80 (statutory certified copy not preferred to examined copy); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 18 (records, etc., provable by certified copy, "may be proved by copies examined and sworn to by credible witnesses"); 1887, Union R. & T. Co. v. Shacklet, 119 Ill. 232, 240, 10 N. E. 896 (foreign administrator's appointment; certified copy not preferred to examined copy); 1837, Harris v. Doe, 4 Blackf. 369, 376 (certified copy of land-petition not preferred to sworn copy, on the facts); 1842, Rawley v. Doe, 6 id. 142, 145 (similar); 1881, Hall v. Bishop, 78 Ind. 370, 371 (tax-list; certified copy not preferred); 1820, Bowman v. Bartlett, 3 A. K. Marsh. 86, 89 (certified copy of probate of a will, not preferred); 1885, State v. Lynde, 77 Me. 561,

1 Atl. 687 (see quotation supra); 1895, State v. Collins, 68 N. H. 299, 44 Atl. 495 (internal revenue record; certified copy not preferred); 1881, Manney v. Crowell, 84 N. C. 314 (certified copy of registered lost contract for title, not preferred to a sworn copy); 1886, Otto v. Trump, 115 Pa. 425, 429, 8 Atl. 786 (certified copy under Federal statute about foreign records, not preferred to examined copy); 1887, Harvey v. Cummings, 68 Tex. 599, 602, 5 S. W. 513 (certified copy of judicial record, not preferred to examined copy). So, too, for proof of execution of the document; 1840, McConnel v. Reed, 3 Ill. 371 (certified copy of recorded deed, not preferred).

Add all the jurisdictions ante, § 1268, not preferring a copy to recollection-testimony; they would probably also not prefer a certified to a sworn copy.

² Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1907 (examined or sworn copy of foreign judicial record, receivable

(2) There is no preference for a copy judicially established under statutes³ providing a mode for establishing a record of the contents of a lost or destroyed document.⁴

(3) There is no preference for the transcriber personally over any other person competent to verify the copy.⁵

(4) There is probably, and ought to be, a preference for a copy over an abstract, i. e. a copy ought to be shown unavailable before an abstract can be used.⁶

(5) A few other miscellaneous instances of preference are now and then recognized.⁷

only when also attested by the proved seal of the Court, or if none, or if not the record of a Court, by the legal keeper's proved signature); Conn. Gen. St. 1887, § 1093 (examined copy of proceedings of any Court, community, corporation, society, or public board, admissible when clerk is absent or disabled); 1846, Bryant v. Owen, 1 Ga. 355, 363 (certified copy of probate-bond, preferred to copy established instantly); 1895, Hines v. Johnston, 95 id. 629, 23 S. E. 470 (cited ante, § 1272; the astonishing rule is laid down that while any person who has examined the records may testify that a particular conveyance is not there, yet in showing the existence and contents of a record "this fact could not be proven by any witness other than the clerk; nor by him, except by a certified copy of such record under his hand and seal"); 1877, Donellan v. Hardy, 57 Ind. 393, 402 (a certified transcript of judgment, preferred to an official printed report of decision); 1880, Jones v. Levi, 72 id. 586, 590 (a sworn copy of record ranks next to an attested copy); 1836, Davidson v. Slocomb, 18 Pick. 464, 466 (the records of a justice of the peace may be proved by sworn copies, but only where the magistrate's certified copies are unavailable); 1824, State v. Isham, 3 Hawks 185 (record of another Court provable by exemplified copy, where the Court seal's indistinctness prevented the copy from being considered); 1832, Thomson v. Gaillard, 3 Rich. 418, 425 (certificate of the clerk of a Legislative body, preferred, in proving the contents of the journal, to the testimony of another person); 1877, State v. Cardinas, 47 Tex. 250, 290 (certified copy of Mexican archives, preferred to other copies, on the facts); 1886, Clayton v. Rhem, 67 id. 52, 2 S. W. 45 (certified copy of a tax-roll in the comptroller's office, preferred to other copies in the assessor's hands); 1824, Renner v. Bank, 9 Wheat. 581, 597 (notarial copy of a note, not preferred, where the offeror is not shown to have one). Compare the North Dakota cases cited ante, § 1244, note 4.

³ For these statutes, see post, §§ 1660, 1682, where also are examined certain other questions arising under them.

⁴ 1878, Jernigan v. Carter, 60 Ga. 131, 133; 1880, Cross v. Johnson, 65 id. 717, 719; 1897, Haug v. Riley, 101 id. 372, 29 S. E. 44; 1898, Forsyth v. Vehmeyer, 176 Ill. 359, 52 N. E. 55; 1873, Nason v. Jordan, 62 Me. 480, 484 (oral evidence of a burned record of partition, not made secondary to a copy authorized to be recorded in place of the burnt record); 1878, Drake v. Kinsell, 38 Mich. 232, 235; 1874, Parry v. Waiser, 57 Mo. 169, 172; 1887, Mobley v. Watts, 98 N. C. 284, 289, 3 S. E. 677; 1893, Varner v. Johnston, 112 id. 570, 576, 17 S. E. 483 (will probated and records burnt); 1893, Williams v. Kerr, 113 id. 306, 310, 18 S. E. 501 (foreclosure, record); 1899, Cox v. Beaufort C. L. Co., 124 id. 78, 32 S. E. 381; 1883, Johnson v. Skipworth, 59 Tex. 473, 475. Compare the cases cited post, § 1347.

⁵ See the citatious post, § 1278.

⁶ 1836, Doe v. Wainwright, 1 Nev. & P. 8, 12 (Patteou, J.: "It is certainly laid down in the books that a counterpart is the next best evidence, — that a copy is the next. The abstract of a deed is the next best evidence after the copy has been accounted for"; but whether, if a copy had been shown to exist, it would have been preferred to the abstract, was expressly left undecided); 1874, Illinois Land & L. Co. v. Bonner, 75 Ill. 315, 323 (copy of lost will, sent to the proponent, preferred to an abstract).

For abstracts, as violating the principle of Completeness, see post, §§ 2105, 2107; for statutes allowing the use of abstracts of burnt records, see the same place, and also the Hearsay exception, post, § 1705. An abstract should not be preferred to an extract: 1892, Converse v. Wead, 142 Ill. 132, 136, 31 N. E. 314 (under Burnt Records Act of 1887, abstracts are not preferred to extracts or minutes in the sense that the former must first be shown unavailable).

⁷ 1705, Stillingfleet v. Parker, 6 Mod. 248 (a copy of the enrolment of a lease, required to be enrolled, preferred to a copy in an ancient book of leases); 1849, Schley v. Lyon, 6 Ga. 530, 539 (newspaper publisher's sworn copy of his files, preferred to copy by another person); N. Y. C. C. P. 1877, § 931 (examined copy of foreign corporation's books preferred; details of verification by witness, specified).

For the question whether the recitals of a sheriff's deed are admissible instead of a copy of the judgment recited, see post, § 1664.

For the question whether a printed volume of statutes is receivable instead of a certified copy of the statute, see post, § 1684.

For the question whether letters of administration or letters testamentary are preferred to a copy of the probate record, see ante, § 1238.

The preference as between clerk's docket-entries or minutes and other evidence of a judicial record involves, not a rule of evidence, § 1274. Discriminations against a Copy of a Copy; (1) in General. The phrase "copy of a copy" has long been used¹ as in itself implying some sort of disparagement. This has in some quarters given rise to the loose notion that a copy of a copy (or "mediate copy," as it may better be termed, in contrast to an immediate copy) is in itself and always an improper mode of proof of contents.² This notion, indeed, finds some countenance in a passage of an early writer, which, however, probably did not mean any more than that a mediate copy was inferior to an immediate one:

1726, Chief Baron Gilbert, Evidence, 8: "A copy of a copy is no evidence; for the rule demands the best evidence that the nature of the thing admits, and a copy of a copy cannot be the best evidence; for the farther off a thing lies from the first original truth, so much the weaker must the evidence be."

Certainly there is in the nature of a mediate copy nothing that makes it per se defective. When paper A is copied into paper B and this into paper C, the last is in theory as accurate a reproduction as B is. There is merely the possibility that an error may have occurred in the second transcription; but this possibility exists for the first also; there is merely one chance more to be added to the total number of chances. It must be concluded, then, that the discrimination, if any, against a mediate copy, is merely in the nature of a rule of preference, requiring first the use of an immediate copy, if one is available. This view is emphasized in Mr. Justice Story's classical utterance:

1835, Story, J., in Winn v. Patterson, 9 Pet. 663, 677: "We admit that the rule, that a copy of a copy is not evidence, is correct in itself, when properly understood and limited to its true sense. The rule properly applies to cases where the copy is taken from a copy, the original being still in existence and capable of being compared with it, for then it is a second remove from the original; or where it is a copy of a copy of a record, the record being still in existence by law deemed as high evidence as the original, for then also it is a second remove from the record. But it is quite a different question whether it applies to cases of secondary evidence where the original is lost, or the record of it is not in law deemed as high evidence as the original; or where the copy of a copy is the highest proof in existence. On these points we give no opinion; because this is not in our judgment the case of a mere copy of a copy verified as such, but it is the case of a second copy verified as a true copy of the original [being R.'s copy of a record-copy, the latter being made by himself and compared with the original]. . . . In effect, therefore, he swears that both are true copies of the original power, [and either would be admissible.]"

1871, Foster, J., in Cameron v. Peck, 37 Conn. 763: "The rule that a copy of a copy is not evidence properly applies [1] to cases where the original is still in existence and capable of being compared with it, or [2] where it is the copy of a copy of a record, the record being still in existence, and being by law as high evidence as the original."

§ 1275. Same: (2) Specific Rules of Preference as to Copy of Copy.
(a) In ascertaining whether there are any specific rules of preference prop-but the substantive law as to what constitutes the record; this matter is not within the purview of this treatise, but is dealt with briefly post, § 2450.

¹ One of its first appearances seems to be in 1653, Faulconer's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 323, 349, 356, cited in the next section.

² 1838, Alderson, B., in Everingham v. Roundell, 2 Moo. & Rob. 138 ("There would be no limit to the reception of secondary evidence, if that were so. . . . This is but the shadow of a shade").

erly applicable to the detriment of a mediate copy, we must first distinguish those situations in which a mediate copy would be excluded or admitted upon independent principles.

(a¹) On the one hand, assuming proof by a copy of a copy to be legitimate, the very notion implies that the intermediate document was a correct copy; and until the correctness of the intermediate document is shown, there is nothing to verify the second copy as being correct, for it is based on the anonymous hearsay of the person who made the first document, purporting to be but not shown to be really a copy of the original. Without such testimony by some one to the correctness of the intermediate document as a copy, the copy of it (on the principle of § 1278, post) is plainly inadmissible.¹

(a²) On the other hand, a copy which happens to have been first transcribed from an intermediate copy can be made itself an immediate copy, by comparing and verifying it directly from the original.² Moreover, a mediate copy used as a memorandum, by one knowing the original, to refresh recollection of the original (ante, § 760) and not offered as a copy, is not offered as a copy of a copy, and is therefore available, wherever (ante, § 1268) recollection-testimony is proper.³

(b) It then remains to ascertain what definite rules of preference apply against a mediate copy as such, i. e. assuming that it is proved to be what it purports to be. These legitimate rules of preference are based upon the general notion that, where the original is still accessible (though not producible, under § 1218, ante) for the purpose of obtaining an immediate copy, there an immediate copy may fairly be required to be obtained and offered.

(b¹) In the first place, if the original is an existing public record, and the immediate copy not, a mediate copy from the latter (it seems well settled) should be excluded; since the original is still accessible for obtaining an immediate copy.⁴

¹ 1814, Teed v. Martin, 4 Camp. 90 (to prove an affidavit of ship-ownership, an official clerk who had made an entry from a certificate of registry made by another clerk who alone had seen the affidavit, not admitted); 1884, Dyer v. Hudson, 65 Cal. 372, 4 Pac. 235 (stenographer's copy of certified copy read in evidence at former trial, original document being lost, excluded; but here the stenographer was not called to verify it, nor the reader of the certified copy); 1898, Crane Co. v. Tierney, 175 Ill. 79, 51 N. E. 715 (copy of a record which was a copy of a copy of a document not proved, excluded); 1875, Fowler v. Hoffman, 31 Mich. 215 (copy of a copy, the latter not shown to be correct, inadmissible; unless the former can be verified from recollection as correct); 1882, People v. McKiuney, 49 id. 334, 13 N. W. 619 (copy by one stenographer of another's notes without subsequent comparison of copy and original, excluded, the notes being lengthy and covering over 100 pages).

² 1859, Gregory v. McPherson, 13 Cal. 562, 574 (copy of a copy, compared anew with the original, received); 1835, Winn v. Patterson, 9 Pet. 663, 677 (copy of a record-copy of an original, both apparently being made and verified by R., receivable).

³ 1843, Dunlap v. Berry, 5 Ill. 326, 331 (copy of a copy may be used to refresh memory as to the original); 1875, Fowler v. Hoffman, 31 Mich. 215, supra, note 1.

⁴ 1685, Auon., Skin. 174 ("If the original [will] be burnt or lost, etc., a copy of their [i. e. Ecclesiastical Court's] registry hath been often given in evidence; but a copy of a copy cannot"); 1862, Sternberg v. Callanan, 14 Ia. 251 (copy of copy of declaration; excluded on the facts); 1897, Drumm v. Cessnun, 58 Kan. 331, 49 Pac. 78 (copy of judicial records should be of the originals, not of the transcript); 1869, Goodrich v. Weston, 102 Mass. 362 (Wells, J.: "Whenever a copy of a record or document is itself made original or primary evidence, the rule is clear and well settled that it must be a copy made directly from or compared with the original; . . . so long as another may be obtained from the same source, no ground can be laid for resorting to evidence of an inferior or secondary character"); 1864, Lund v. Rice, 9 Minn. 230 (record of a copy of recorded deed, inadmissible apart from statute); 1831, Lincoln v. Battelle,

(b²) In the next place, if the original and also the immediate copy are both existing public records, the same rule would seem to apply, for it is still as feasible to obtain an immediate copy from the original record, though here there is found some difference of judicial opinion and statutory rule.⁵ Where the original is out of the jurisdiction, the requirement may well be relaxed.⁶

(c) Such are the legitimate and easily defended rules of preference. There remains to be noticed certain situations, in which it would seem that no rule of preference can properly exist, i. e. situations in which the original is no longer accessible for purposes of immediate copying. Where this is the case,

6 Wend. 475, 484 (copy of a certified copy of a foreign decree, excluded); 1881, Goddard v. Parker, 10 Or. 102, 106 (certified copy of certified copy of official map, excluded); 1890, Lasater v. Van Hook, 77 Tex. 650, 655, 14 S. W. 270 (certified copy of deed-record, original being lost, preferred to examined copy of certified copy); 1843, Carpenter v. Sawyer, 17 Vt. 121, 124 ("a copy of a certified copy of a record is not evidence").

⁵ In this class of cases the commonest instance of statutory change is the allowance of the use of copies from the re-record, in another county, of a judicial record or the like: Ariz. Rev. St. 1887 § 1878 (certified copies of records of new county transcribed from records of original county, admissible); Ark.: 1851, State v. Crow, 11 Ark. 642, 656 (justice's judgment-transcript filed in Circuit Court; clerk's copy of this sufficient); Colo. Annot. Stats. 1891, § 457 (certified copies of records transcribed on formation of new county, admissible); Ill.: 1873, Miller v. Goodwin, 70 Ill. 659 (transcript of official copy of original legislative minutes, admitted); Ind.: 1876, Nelson v. Blakey, 54 Ind. 29, 35 (articles of incorporation filed with county recorder, certified copy of this record filed with Secretary of State; certified copy from the Secretary's office, excluded as a copy of a copy of a copy not authorized by the statute); Ia. Code 1897, § 4639 (documents in office of U. S. surveyor-general, though themselves copies, provable by copy); 1862, Niles v. Spragne, 13 Ia. 198, 202 (a foreign certificate of marriage must be proved by direct copy, and not by a copy of the clerk's record); Ky.: 1816, Hedden v. Overton, 4 Bibb 406 (copy of a book of record, itself containing copies of Virginia patents, admitted, under a statute admitting copies of "records and other papers" of the register's office); 1816, Owings v. Ulery, ib. 450 (Maryland will, probated there, and recorded by copy in this State; copy of record admitted); 1817, Rogers v. Barnett, ib. 480 (similar); 1818, Spurr v. Trimble, 1 A. K. Marsh. 278, 279 (copy of power of attorney, certified by Virginia notary as recorded by him, then recorded by local clerk of Court; a copy of this, excluded); La.: 1831, Lum v. Kelso, 2 La. 64, 67 (copy of record of judgment made in another court, excluded); 1851, Look v. Mays, 6 La. An. 726 (transcript of lower Court's transcript of Supreme Court's order of reversal, received); 1857, West Feliciana

R. Co. v. Thornton, 12 id. 736 (similar); 1859, Wood v. Harrell, 14 id. 61, 63 (certified copies of recorded copies received on the facts); Miss. Annot. Code 1892, § 1807 (records of county or court or office, transcribed by order of board of supervisors; copy or transcribed records to have same effect as original); Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 10197 (county surveyor's certified copy of filed certified copy of U. S. field-notes, admissible); 1827, Bettis v. Logan, 2 Mo. 2 (transcript of transcribed record filed in another court, admissible); Nev. Gen. St. 1885, §§ 304, 311 (certified copies of certain transcribed mining records, admissible); N. C.: 1824, State v. Welsh, 3 Hawks 404, 407, 409 (certified copy of a statute reciting another statute, admissible); Henderson, J., diss.; N. C. Code 1883, § 428 (certified copy of judgment recorded with county recorder, admissible); Pa. St. 1798, P. & L. Dig. Court Rec. 3 (exemplifications of Phila. County Court records of roads, copied from original record, receivable); St. 1833, P. & L. Dig. Evid. 32 (official copies of copies of official drafts of donation lands, receivable); St. 1889, P. & L. Dig. Evid. 27 (record of probated will in another county than proved, receivable in certain cases); Tex. Rev. Civ. Stats. 1895, §§ 2319, 2320 (certified copies of transcribed records for new counties, admissible); §§ 4585-4593 b (transcribed records in general; provisions for using); U. S. Rev. St. 1878, §§ 897, 898 (transcripts of certain judicial records into new books, admissible); Va.: 1814, Whitacre v. M'Ilhanev, 4 Munf. 310, 312 (copy of a record containing copies of decree, etc., excluded).

⁶ 1900, Knoxville Nursery Co. v. Com., 108 Ky. 6, 55 S. W. 691 (certified copy of a foreign corporation's certificate of incorporation locally filed, admissible; the foreign certificate is not here the original, because the local certificate is itself a new admission of corporate existence); 1900, Com. v. Corkery, 175 Mass. 460, 56 N. E. 711 (corporation commissioner's certified copy of a copy filed with him of foreign articles of incorporation, admitted); 1868, Corbett v. Nutt, 18 Gratt. 624, 633, 637 (certified copy of a will and probate from a court in D. C., where it had been probated from an authenticated copy from court of original probate, received, the second probate being out of the State; whether a copy of this second copy could be received, not decided).

a mediate copy may well be used as freely as an immediate copy, because otherwise the unfair burden (similar to that spoken of ante, § 1268) would be imposed on the proponent of searching for possible immediate copies and of proving them unobtainable. Any rule requiring in such a case the immediate copy to be accounted for must proceed on the radical principle that a mediate copy is so inferior to an immediate copy that the latter must always be used if any one pre-existing specimen can by possibility be found. It is one thing to require (as in par. b) that, where new direct copies can be obtained ad libitum, such a copy shall be procured at a definite office; but it is taking a much further step to say that, though no new ones can now be created, yet search must be made in unspecified places for any that may have been previously taken and may still exist. To such an extent very few Courts are willing to go. Four varieties of this situation may be distinguished:

(*c*¹) Where the original and the first copy are both lost or destroyed, it is clear that the mediate copy should be admitted; and this seems not to have been disputed.⁷

(*c*²) Where the original is lost or destroyed, and the first copy is not producible because it is an official record, practically the same situation as the preceding is presented, since neither original nor first copy is producible. It is generally conceded that the mediate copy may be used; and the statutes which authorize the official copying of torn or illegible records provide usually for admitting copies of these copies.⁸

(*c*³) Where the original is a deed lawfully recorded and therefore need not be produced (ante, §§ 1224, 1225), the first copy being the official record and thus also not producible, practically the same situation is again presented,

⁷ 1873, Cornett v. Williams, 20 Wall. 226, 245 (copy of a certified copy of a judgment, both original and certified copy being destroyed, admitted).

⁸ Add also the statutes cited infra, note 12: 1653, Faulconer's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 323, 349, 356 (a deposition being lost, but being recorded in Haberdasher's Hall, "the proper court where it ought to remain," an examined copy of the record, and another copy in the House journals, were used, though objected to as "but a transcript of a transcript, a copy of a copy"); Ariz. Rev. St. 1887, § 2556 (certified copies of transcribed defaced records, admissible); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 124, § 11 (certified copies of copies of lost enrolled laws in office of Secretary of State, admissible); Ind. Rev. St. 1897, §§ 1255-1294 (copy of copy of lost records restored, admissible); § 1343 (re-recorded mutilated, etc. records of Supreme Court, provable by clerk's certified copy under court seal); Ky. Stats. 1899, §§ 1632-1634 (transcription of torn, etc., records, equivalent to original); Md. Pub. G. L. Art. 35, § 51 (land-office commissioner's certified copy under seal of an extract from a deed transmitted by court clerk, admissible if deed and record are lost or destroyed); Mass. Pub. St. c. 37, §§ 8, 11 (certified copies of certified copies of worn, etc., records, lawfully ordered and filed, admissible); Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 9109 (re-recording of records torn, etc.; certified copies admissible); N. J. Gen. St. 1896, Conveyances, § 181 (mutilated, torn, etc., records may be proved by re-record or certified copy thereof); N. C. Code 1883, § 3662 (certified copies of old records, etc., transcribed, admissible); Oh. Rev. St. 1898, §§ 906, 907, 907*b* (copy of copies of old records re-copied, admissible); Pa. St. 1833, P. & L. Dig. Evid. 34 (certified copies of official copies of defaced ancient official papers in surveyor-general's office, receivable); St. 1844, P. & L. Dig. Evid. 15 (copies by register of probate of entries from certain Orphans' Court papers, receivable "in the event of the loss or destruction" of such papers); Vt. St. 1894, § 3007 (certified transcript of town records, to be used as originals if the originals are lost or destroyed); W. Va. Code 1891, §§ 9-15 (provision made for equal effect to be given to records reproduced from prior lost or destroyed records); St. 1872-3, c. 164 (proceedings of commissioners to establish contents of burnt records, usable when "no higher or better evidence can be had"); St. 1895, c. 15 (county clerk's certified copy of re-recorded copy of lost or destroyed record, admissible); Wis. Stats. 1898, §§ 661*a*-661*o* (certified copies of re-recorded lost records, admissible).

except that here it is still possible to copy directly from the original if it could be discovered by search. But the object of such statutory provision for recording is generally understood to be to facilitate the use of the record for the purpose of obtaining copies,—the ordinary case of a recorded deed being the typical one. Hence, whatever may be the rule as to exempting from the production of the original deed (ante, § 1225), nevertheless, whenever a copy is receivable at all,—i. e. either after or without accounting for the original,—it may be a copy from the official record; the objection that it is a mediate copy not being recognized as having force for such a case:

1835, Story, J., in Winn v. Patterson, 9 Pet. 663, 677: "It is certainly a common practice to produce in the custody of the clerk, under a subpœna duces tecum, the original records of deeds duly recorded. But in point of law a copy from such record is admissible in evidence upon the ground stated in Lynch v. Clerk,⁹ that where an original document of a public nature would be evidence if produced, an immediate sworn copy thereof is admissible in evidence; for as all persons have a right to the evidence which documents of a public nature afford, they might otherwise be required to be exhibited at different places at the same time."

1848, Stetson v. Gulliver, 2 Cush. 494, 499: "When the book of the register would be evidence, a certified copy is entitled to have the same effect; there being very little ground to apprehend any mistake from that cause, and upon consideration of the great public inconvenience which would result from having the books of record removed from their proper custody and place of security."

This is universally conceded where the first copy is contained in an official register (as with deeds of land usually), and is expressly declared in the statutes of registration (ante, § 1225). The only arguable case seems to be that of a copy required to be filed but not recorded in a book.¹⁰ It is upon this principle also, or an extension of it, that a copy from an authorized re-record in general (e. g. in another county) is receivable;¹¹ and this principle, combined with that of (*c*²) above, admits copies of re-records of conveyances

⁹ 3 Salk. 154.

¹⁰ 1694, Smart v. Williams, Comb. 247 (a copy of a will recorded at the Prerogative Office, opposed "because it is but a copy of a copy; but the Court allowed it, for the entry in the ecclesiastical books is the original quoad hoc; otherwise to make a title to lands by devise"; on the latter point, see the reason ante, § 1238); 1882, Martin v. Hall, 72 Ala. 587 (certified copy of record of official bond, required to be filed but not to be recorded, excluded); 1875, Vance v. Kohlberg, 50 Cal. 346, 349 (certified copy of officially filed copy of articles of consolidation, receivable); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1855 (for public or recorded documents, a copy of the record suffices; for documents lost or in opponent's possession, "either a copy or oral evidence"); 1873, Toledo W. & W. R. Co. v. Chew, 67 Ill. 378, 381 (corporate articles; copy filed by law; copy of this official record, admitted as copy of duplicate original); 1879, Board v. May, 67 Ind. 561, 566 (certified copy of official record of soldier's discharge, etc., admitted); 1848, Stetson v. Gulliver, 2 Cush. 494 (see quotation supra); 1869, Goodrich v. Weston, 102 Mass. 362 (same); 1876, Willamette

F. C. & L. Co. v. Gordon, 6 Or. 175, 177, semble (copy of recorded document, admissible); 1900, Hilliard v. Enders, 196 Pa. 587, 46 Atl. 839 (certified copy of a record-copy, required to be filed, of a deed, admissible). Compare the cases on foreign corporate articles, cited supra, note 6.

¹¹ Ill. Rev. St. c. 30, § 29 (certified copies of recorded certified copy of deed of lands in different counties, admissible); 1890, Collins v. Vallean, 79 Ia. 626, 629, 43 N. W. 284, 44 N. W. 904 (re-record in another county; re-record admitted); Mich. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 8997, 8999, 9000, 9004, 9031 (certain re-recorded deeds, provable by certified copy); Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 9086 (deed affecting land in another county or in new subdivided county); 1880, Crispen v. Hannavan, 72 Mo. 548, 556 (re-recorded deed provable under statute by certified copy).

No attempt is made to collect all such statutes here, because they are too numerous to be set forth accurately, and because they almost always expressly make copies admissible. It may be noted that the statutes cited under (*b*¹) supra, providing for transcribed public records in general, will thus usually cover the present case of deed-records.

whose original records are destroyed, i. e. without requiring the copy to be taken from the original conveyance though in existence.¹² The use of an abstract from such a record, however, involves the principle of Completeness, and may be better considered under that head (post, §§ 2105, 2107).

(⁴) The fourth variety of situation occurs where the original is lost or destroyed and the first copy is not an official record and is not shown to be lost or otherwise accounted for. This presents the only situation in which a supposed strict rule of preference can practically make any difference to the proponent's disadvantage. In the preceding cases there is virtually a general agreement that the mediate copy can be used because the immediate copy cannot be had; and the question here is really, Must it be shown that an immediate copy cannot be had? Is the mediate copy receivable without such a showing? The objection to such a rule, as already noted (ante, § 1275), is the excessive burden of search and proof placed on the proponent, — a burden disproportionate to the small risk of error involved in the use of a mediate copy. As regards the state of the law, it is just here that the place of really debatable and still unsettled doctrine is found. It has already been seen (in paragraph a, above) that there is no support for the extreme notion that a copy of a copy is absolutely inadmissible; it has also been seen, on the other hand (in paragraph b, above) that a copy of a copy is generally conceded not to be receivable so long as the original is accessible for direct copying, and also (in paragraphs c, *c*¹, *c*², *c*³, above) that by general concession a copy of a copy is receivable when neither original nor first copy are to be had. But none of these concessions answers the present inquiry, namely, When the original is not accessible for a direct copy, but the intermediate copy copied from (or some other pre-existing direct copy) is by possibility available, must the latter be produced or accounted for? The orthodox English doctrine seems clearly to have laid down such a rule;¹³ but, for the reasons above suggested, this unnecessarily strict requirement has been rejected by a majority of American Courts,¹⁴ although in view of

¹² The statutes almost always expressly so provide; the following list is not complete, and those cited supra (*c*²) will also usually cover this case of deed-records: Colo. Annot. Stats. 1891, § 3752 (recorder's certified copy under official seal of re-recorded documents whose original records are destroyed, admissible); Fla. St. 1901, c. 4950 (certified copies of re-recorded instruments or copies of deeds whose records have been burnt, admissible); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 116, §§ 6-8, 11, 22 (certified copies of conveyances, etc., or certified copies thereof, re-recorded to supply the loss of original records, admissible); Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 929 (re-recorded conveyances where records have been destroyed by fire, admissible); Okl. St. 1895, c. 42 (provisions for recording, as equivalent to the original, copies of lost records of deeds and other instruments).

¹³ 1767, Tillard v. Shebbeare, 2 Wils. 366 (copy of a Bishop's institution-book entry, copying a presentation; the book itself called for;

"the true point is, Might not the plaintiff have produced better evidence?"); 1816, Liehman v. Pooley, 1 Stark. 167 (letter; copy of a copy left at home, excluded); 1838, Everingham v. Roundell, 2 Moo. & Rob. 138, Alderson, B. (writ; copy of a copy left at home by the witness, excluded); 1849, Schley v. Lyon, 6 Ga. 530, 538 (witness copied from newspaper file, then copied the copy; excluded, even though files were unavailable); 1899, State v. Cohen, 108 Ia. 208, 78 N. W. 857 (copy of copy of policy, excluded, the first copy not being shown unavailable); 1782, Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. 64, 65 (copy of a certificate of a survey, excluded).

¹⁴ 1871, Cameron v. Peck, 37 Conn. 763 (admitting a copy of a press-copy of a letter); 1860, Womack v. White, 30 Ga. 696, 700 (copy of sale-advertisement, admitted; newspaper itself not required); 1869, Goodrich v. Weston, 102 Mass. 362 (lost letter; the copy of a letter-press copy, the latter not accounted for, was the numerous discriminations above noted, it can hardly be said that any clear and settled doctrine exists except in a few jurisdictions.

2. Rules as to Qualifications of Witness to Copy.

§ 1277. In general. A copy, merely as a piece of paper, has no standing as evidence. In order even to be termed "copy," it must have the support of a witness qualified to say that it represents the contents of the original document :

Ante 1726, Chief Baron Gilbert, Evidence, 96: "A copy of the deed must be proved by a witness that compared it with the original; for there is no proof of the truth of the copy, or that it hath any relation to the deed, unless there be somebody to prove its comparison with the original."

A copy, in short, is merely one mode (ante, § 799) of presenting the testimony of a witness. The witness, therefore, must be qualified; and thus the general principles of witnesses' qualifications have here certain special applications.

§ 1278. Witness to Copy must have Personal Knowledge of Original. A general principle for witness' qualifications is that he must speak from personal observation of the event or thing to be testified to, and that therefore in general a witness is not qualified who bases his testimony, not on his own personal observation, but on imagination, or inference, or the hearsay of others (ante, § 657). Upon this principle, then, a person who proposes to testify to the contents of a document, either by copy or otherwise, must have read it. He may not describe its contents merely on the credit of what another has told him it contains, even though his informant purports to have read it aloud in his presence.

This rule is not always enforced by Courts; and no doubt there are cases in which the trial Court's discretion may properly allow exceptions. But the general rule is a proper one, and is constantly invoked.¹ Upon the same accepted; "there are no degrees of legal distinction in this class of evidence"); 1890, Smith v. Brown, 151 id. 338, 340, 24 N. E. 31 (two successive assignments of a judgment; the first being lost, the second was held not preferable to a copy of the first; "if there are several sources of information of the same fact, it is not ordinarily necessary to show that all have been exhausted before secondary evidence can be resorted to"); 1821, Robertson v. Lynch, 18 John. 451, 452, 457, semble (copy of a letter-book copy, receivable); 1830, Jackson v. Cole, 4 Cow. 587, 595 (copy of a copy of appraisers' certificate received, the original being lost); 1896, Howard v. Quattlebaum, 46 S. C. 95, 24 S. E. 93 (a copy from a certified copy of a will, the will and the record having been destroyed by fire, admitted); 1813, Duncan v. Blair, 2 Overt. 213, 214 (the recorded entry of land being lost, a copy of a warrant containing a copy of the entry and a copy of an abstract of the entries was received).

¹ In the following list the cases on both sides are included: 1672, Peterborough v. Mordaunt, 1 Mod. 94 (the witness to a copy, "being asked whether he did see the very deed and compare it with that copy, he answered in the negative," whereupon his testimony was disallowed); 1830, R. v. Haworth, 4 C. & P. 254, 256 (must have read the original); 1896, Edisto Phos. Co. v. Stanford, 112 Ala. 493, 20 So. 613 (the witness must have seen the document); 1901, Lester v. Blackwell, 128 Ala. 143, 30 So. 663 (testimony of persons who had heard a deed read, admitted); 1853, Hooper v. Chism, 13 Ark. 496, 501 (one who had heard a bill of sale read, by an unspecified person; insufficient); 1878, Weis v. Tierman, 91 Ill. 27, 30 (a person who had heard or read that records were destroyed, excluded); 1848, Hodges v. Hodges, 2 Cush. 460 (one testifying from statements of the signer, excluded); 1846, Matthews v. Coalter, 9 Mo. 696, 699, 701 (one who heard a paper read, allowed to testify to the reading of contents, on the res gestæ principle); 1892, Rice v. Rice, — N. J. Eq. —, 25 Atl. 321 (copy of a letter dictated, the writer principle, testimony to contents by a foreigner or an illiterate person is ordinarily inadmissible.² It is upon this principle that a copy of a copy, as already noted (ante, § 1275, par. a), may be excluded where it does not appear that the intermediate document was really a copy.³

§ 1279. Same: Exception for Copy of Official Records; Cross-Reading not Necessary. To the preceding rule there is a classical and settled exception, covering the case of a copy made of an official record. Here it has never been doubted that, if the witness "cross-read" with another person (usually the record-keeper or his clerk) — i. e. held the copy and followed it as the other read aloud the original, then followed the original while the other read aloud the copy —, his testimony to the copy's correctness would be admissible; although it is obvious that his testimony is none the less based on hearsay. The only objection here raised has been that there should at least be a cross-reading, i. e. that a single co-reading, i. e. one or the other of the above parts of the process, is insufficient; but even this objection has been by long tradition and practice almost unanimously repudiated.¹

not seeing the original nor the dictator the copy; received, with reservation that for formal documents, essential to a claim, etc., cross-reading, or the like, might be required); 1897, Schubert Lodge v. Schubert Verein, 56 id. 78, 38 Atl. 347 (printed copy of the constitution of a secret order; the State-lodge secretary received it from the Supreme-lodge secretary; the former's testimony held sufficient); 1874, Nichols v. Kingdom Co., 56 N. Y. 618 (letter; even though the letter is now destroyed, not provable by one who has not read it); 1875, Edwards v. Noyes, 65 N. Y. 126, semble (same); 1880, Nelson v. Whitfield, 82 N. C. 46 (a lost will having been shown to be probated, its contents were proved by others who had heard read what purported to be the will or a copy); 1894, Propst v. Mathis, 115 id. 526, 20 S. E. 710 (rejecting a witness who testified to the contents of a lost will read over to him by the clerk; distinguishing Nelson v. Whitfield, supra, because here the same witness was expected to suffice for both the contents and the fact of probate); 1827, Pipher v. Lodge, 17 S. & R. 214, 221, 232 (a copy by a clerk of a deposition, not clearly shown to have been based on the original, receivable, per Tod, J., excluded, per Gibson, C. J., and Rogers, J.); 1869, McGinniss v. Sawyer, 63 Pa. 266 (lost document; witness must have seen and read it); 1870, Coxe v. England, 65 id. 212, 222 (one who saw a few words of a letter which another read aloud, not competent, because "her knowledge was hearsay"); Tex. Rev. Civ. Stats. 1895, § 1905 (lost will may be proved by one "who has heard it read"); 1871, Johnson v. Bolton, 43 Vt. 303, 304 (testimony by an illiterate who heard another person read a letter, excluded).

On the same principle it has been held that a bystander may not testify to the accuracy of a report of the examination of an illiterate accused: 1834, R. v. Chappell, 1 Moo. & R. 395 (Denman, L. C. J.: "For if the prisoner signs his name, this implies that he can read, and that he has read the examination and adopted it. But if he has not signed it, or has only put his mark, there are no grounds to infer that he can read or that he knows the contents, and no person can swear that the examination has been correctly read over to him except the person who read it"). Accord: 1834, R. v. Richards, ib. 396, n., Patteson, J. Contra: 1835, R. v. Hope, ib. 396, n., Patteson and Vaughan, JJ., for certain cases.

² 1824, Russell v. Brosseau, 65 Cal. 605, 607, 4 Pac. 643 (testimony to contents of notice by one unable to read or write, excluded); 1870, Cheek v. James, 2 Heisk. 170, 172 (a boy from 5 to 8 years old at the time of execution of a bond, held not competent to testify to its contents). Contra: 1833, Breen v. Richardson, 6 Colo. 605 (a foreigner, executing articles of partnership read over to him, allowed to testify to the contents of the destroyed original); 1872, Morris v. Swaney, 7 Heisk. 591, 597 (contents of a lost will allowed to be shown by illiterate persons who had heard it read aloud by others; the analogy of examined records invoked, in which cross reading is not necessary).

³ That a party's admission may suffice, though not based on personal knowledge, see ante, §§ 1053, 1255.

What personal knowledge is required as to the genuineness of the original from which the copy was taken is dealt with post, § 2158.

For copies of telegrams, see post, § 2154.

¹ 1808, Reid v. Margison, 1 Camp. 469 (Wood, B.: "Had the witness who was called done all that the defendant requires, still the other person engaged in the examination might by possibility have misread the copy as well as the original; and it would come to this, that to prove a copy of a record there must always be two witnesses, the man who read and the man who examined. But this would be a great public inconvenience, and there is no rule of law to require it"). Accord: 1795, M'Neil v. Perchard, 1 Esp. 264 (writ); 1808, Gyles v. Hill, 1 Camp. 471, note

§ 1280. Same: Sundry Distinctions (Press-copies; Witness not the Copyist; Double Testimony; Impression or Belief; Spoliation). (1) Where a process of copying — by blotter-press or the like — is in its general operation fairly accurate, it should be enough that the witness has gone through the process, even though he has not afterwards verified the copy with the original.¹ The same principle should apply to photographic copies (ante, §§ 793, 795).

(2) The witness to a copy need not be himself the transcriber or copyist. If he has at some time compared the original and the alleged copy made by another, he is qualified to verify the copy. If a period has elapsed between his sight of the original and his sight of the copy, so that he is virtually nothing more than a recollection-witness (ante, § 1266) — as where he is first shown the alleged copy in court and is asked to say whether it is a copy of the original as he remembers it —, then it is possible that he should be regarded as an inferior witness to a copy-witness in the strict sense (as noted ante, § 1268); but that he is at least a qualified witness has not been doubted.²

(3) On the same principle, a paper may be shown a copy by the united testimony of two persons neither of whom alone could testify to all the elements. The typical instance is that of paper A shown by one witness to be a copy of a certain paper B, another witness then showing paper B to be identical with the absent original in issue.³

(official record); 1809, Rolf v. Dart, 2 Taunt. 52 (judgment); 1833, Fyson v. Kemp, 6 C. & P. 72 (bill of costs); 1839, R. v. Hughes, 1 Cr. & D. 13 (record of conviction); 1807, Lynde v. Judd, 3 Day 499; 1852, Pickard v. Bailey, 26 N. H. 152, 169; 1830, Beardsley, Sen., in Hill v. Packard, 5 Wend. 375, 387 (“Copies of records are to be proved, as other transcripts, by a witness who has compared the copy line for line with the original, or has examined the copy while another person read the original”); 1870, Krise v. Neason, 66 Pa. 253, 260 (whether cross-reading is necessary; held not here, because the reader was the agent of both parties); 1872, Morris v. Swaney, 7 Heisk. 591, 597, ante, § 1278, note 2. Contra: 1837, Slane Peerage Case, 5 Cl. & F. 23, 42 (for public documents); 1892, Rice v. Rice, — N. J. Eq. —, 25 Atl. 321, semble, supra, note 1. Not clear: 1848, Crawford and Lindsay Peerages, 2 H. L. C. 534, 545 (cross-reading of an ancient document in Latin; both readers and the copyist called, on the facts).

That the personal knowledge of an officer giving a certified copy is not required, see post, §§ 1635, 1677.

¹ 1842, Simpson v. Thornton, 2 Moo. & Rob. 433; 1890, Ford v. Cunningham, 87 Cal. 209, 210, 25 Pac. 403; Haw. Civil Laws 1897, § 1407 (“where any writing whatsoever shall have been copied by means of any machine or press which produces a facsimile impression or copy of such writing,” the copy suffices, on proof of being so taken, “without any proof that such impression or copy was compared with the said original”).

² 1833, R. v. Fursey, 6 C. & P. 81, 84 (for proving notices, usual way is “to give a [alleged]

copy to the witness and ask if it is a copy of what he saw”); 1837, R. v. Murphy, 8 id. 297, 306, 307, 308, semble (testimony that a paper was similar to one in evidence, admitted); 1875, Lombard v. Johnson, 76 Ill. 599, 601 (the copyist himself need not come, if another qualified person can verify the copy); 1820, Barbour v. Watts, 2 A. K. Marsh. 290 (one who had first seen the copy some time after seeing the original; not decided); 1837, Dana v. Kemble, 19 Pick. 112, 116 (a paper in the handwriting of the deceased writer of an original; this paper testified to be of the same tenor as the original; held sufficient); 1851, Harvey v. Chouteau, 14 Mo. 587, 597 (the witness need not have the original before him, if the correctness of the copy is otherwise known to him); 1894, Nostrum v. Halliday, 39 Nebr. 828, 833, 58 N. W. 429, semble (copy of a plat not made by witness nor compared with original, excluded); 1832, Smith v. Axtell, 1 N. J. L. 494, 498 (“It has not been compared; the witnesses who state it to be a copy, speak only from their recollection of the original”; admitted, though a copy in the strict sense was held preferable); 1881, Kollock v. Parcher, 52 Wis. 393, 400, 9 N. W. 67 (a defective official-copy may be verified by another person so as to be admissible); 1895, Althouse v. Jamestown, 91 id. 46, 64 N. W. 423 (the fact of serving a particular notice being in existence, and the testimony of the person who made the copy offered not being available, the testimony of one who had read the original and also the copy was received).

³ 1699, Medlicot v. Joyner, 2 Keble 546 (a deed-copy “made by the witness to carry about

(4) On the principle of knowledge (ante, § 658), it is not necessary that the quality of a witness' knowledge or belief should be that of absolute certainty; his belief or impression, if fairly certain and definite, will suffice. But it is of course difficult to draw the line precisely between the sufficient and the insufficient degrees of positiveness.⁴

(5) A document's contents may be inferred from circumstantial evidence, — in particular, from spoliation or suppression by the opponent (ante, § 291).

3. Rules depending on the Hearsay Rule and its Exceptions.

§ 1281. Witness must be called, unless by Exception to the Hearsay Rule for Certified Copies, etc. A paper offered as a copy but not supported by any person's testimony in Court is a hearsay — i. e. extrajudicial — statement, obnoxious to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1362). Hence, some person must be called to the stand to verify the paper as the copy that it purports to be. A paper offered anonymously as a copy, or offered without calling some witness to verify it, is inadmissible. This principle, never disputed, is, with occasional lapses, constantly enforced in excluding supposed copies; ¹ though in earlier times there was undoubtedly more laxity in this respect.²

But there are exceptions to the Hearsay rule, under which copies made by specific classes of persons may be admitted. (1) Under the exception for Official Statements (post, § 1677), copies made by officers lawfully authorized to give copies — i. e. exemplified, certified, attested, or office copies — are receivable. (2) Upon a similar principle, statutory provision is often made for the establishment, by judicial proceedings, of a copy of a lost or destroyed document (post, § 1682). (3) There is an early and limited exception, nowadays not much invoked, allowing the use of recitals in one deed of the contents of another as evidence of the latter's contents (post, § 1573). (4) There was also once an exception recognized for ancient copies of ancient lost records (post, § 1573). (5) There is an exception in favor of private reports of judito counsel, but never examined with the original," admitted, because "this is good evidence as well as [i. e. together with] testimony of a witness of the contents of the deed burnt"); 1817, R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. 116, per Lord Ellenborough, C. J. ("When you wish to prove that a party has notice of the contents of a newspaper, you show by one witness that he had a copy of the paper and by another what the contents were"); 1885, Huff v. Hall, 56 Mich. 456, 457, 23 N. W. 88 (lost letter; B testifies to a letter shown him by A; A testifies that the letter was one received from the defendant; allowed); 1827, Bullitt v. Overfield, 2 Mo. 4 (copy verified by one witness for an original identified by another, admitted). That the witness to an examined copy of a public record must show that the document examined was really the desired record, is dealt with under Authentication (post, § 2158).

⁴ 1844, State Bank v. Ensminger, 7 Blackf. 104, 108 (copy made by clerk in such a hurry that he could not swear to accuracy; held sufficient, opponent possessing the original); 1886, Re Gazette, 35 Minn. 532, 533, 29 N. W. 347 (that a paper "seemed to be" a copy of a pleading, insufficient); see also ante, § 658.

¹ 1807, Fisher v. Samuda, 1 Camp. 190, 192 (a copy made by the plaintiff himself, incompetent from interest, excluded, because such testimony "must be of a nature which the law would receive in other instances"); 1819, Wills v. M'Dole, 5 N. J. L. 501 (copy insufficiently proved); 1885, Oregon S. S. Co. v. Otis, 100 N. Y. 446, 453, 3 N. E. 485 (the writing delivered to the telegraph office being the original, and destroyed, the transcript delivered to the sendee was taken as a copy, in the absence of any objection to its accuracy; compare § 2154, post); 1844, Kelly v. Craig, 5 Ired. 129, 131 (paper delivered by a clerk to a sheriff, purporting to be a copy of the tax-list, excluded).

² 1707, Winne v. Lloyd, 2 Vern. 603 (copies by a deceased person admitted).

cial decisions in other jurisdictions (post, § 1703), and, by statute, for copies certified by the clerks or other custodians of certain private documents such as corporate records (post, § 1683).

4. Sundry Principles.

§ 1282. Completeness of Copy; Abstracts. The general principle of Completeness (post, §§ 2105-2111) requires that, where the terms of a document are to be proved, the whole of the contents, whether in the original or by copy, be presented to the tribunal. It is impracticable to separate from the general treatment of that principle the specific rules applicable to the proof of a document's contents, and the various questions are there dealt with; in particular, the questions whether the whole of a document must be contained in the copy, and not a mere extract or an abstract, whether a copy must be stated to have been "truly" or "correctly" copied, and the like.

SUB-TITLE II: RULES OF TESTIMONIAL PREFERENCE.

CHAPTER XL.

§ 1285. Nature and Kinds of Testimonial Preference.

TOPIC I: PROVISIONAL (OR CONDITIONAL) TESTIMONIAL PREFERENCES.

§ 1286. General Nature and Policy of these Rules.

SUB-TOPIC A: PREFERENCE FOR AN ATTESTING WITNESS.

§ 1287. History.

§ 1288. Reason and Policy of the Rule.

(a) "Where the execution of any document,"

§ 1290. Kind of Document covered by the Rule; at Common Law, all Documents were included; Statutory Modifications.

§ 1291. Documents Incidentally or "Collaterally" in Issue.

(b) "Purports to have been attested,"

§ 1292. Who is an Attesting Witness.

(c) "A party desiring to prove its execution,"

§ 1293. Rule applies only in proving Execution, not in using the Document for Other Purposes.

(d) "Against an opponent entitled in the state of the issues to dispute execution," § 1294. Execution not disputable (1) because of Estoppel or other rule of Substantive Law.

§ 1295. Execution not disputable (2) because of rule of Pleading.

§ 1296. Execution not disputable (3) because of Judicial Admission.

§ 1297. Execution not disputable (4) because of Opponent's Claim under the Same Instrument.

§ 1298. Execution disputable, and rule applicable, where the Opponent merely Produces the Instrument, without Claiming under it.

(e) "Must, before using other evidence,"

§ 1299. Attester preferred to any Third Person, including the Maker of the Document.

§ 1300. Attester preferred to Opponent's Extrajudicial Admissions.

§ 1301. Attester preferred to Opponent's Testimony on the Stand.

(f) "Either produce the attester as a witness,"

§ 1302. Attester need not Testify Favorably; Witness Denying or not Recollecting.

§ 1303. Same: Discriminations (Refreshing Recollection; Implied Attestation Clause; Impugning one's Own Witness, or one's Own Attestation; Illinois Rule admitting only Attesting Witnesses in Probate).

§ 1304. Number of Attesters required to be Called.

§ 1305. Same: Rule satisfied when One Competent Witness testifies by Deposition or Affidavit.

§ 1306. Same: When All Witnesses are unavailable in Person, One Attestation only need be Authenticated.

(g) "Or show his testimony to be unavailable,"

§ 1308. General Principle of Unavailability.

§ 1309. All the Attesters must be shown Unavailable.

§ 1310. Statutory Enumerations of Causes of Unavailability.

§ 1311. Causes of Unavailability: (1) Death; (2) Ancient Document.

§ 1312. Same: (3) Absence from Jurisdiction.

§ 1313. Same: (4) Absence in Unknown Parts.

§ 1314. Same: (5) Witness' Name Unknown, through Loss or Illegibility of Document.

§ 1315. Same: (6) Illness or Infirmary; (7) Failure of Memory; (8) Imprisonment.

§ 1316. Same: (9) Incompetency, through Interest, Infamy, Insanity, Blindness, etc.

§ 1317. Same: (10) Refusal to Testify, Privileged or Unprivileged.

§ 1318. Same: (11) Document proved by Registry-Copy.

§ 1319. Same: Summary.

(h) "And also authenticate his attestation unless it is not feasible."

§ 1320. If the Witness is Unavailable, must his Signature be proved, or does it suffice to prove the Maker's?

§ 1321. Proof of Signature dispensed with, where not Obtainable.

§ 1285. Nature and Kinds of Testimonial Preference. In the preceding Chapter has been examined that sort of preference which is accorded to the original of a writing; its production before the tribunal is preferred, if feasible, instead of testimonial or circumstantial evidence about the contents. The preference now to be examined is a preference for one kind of testimonial evidence (i. e. one kind of witness) over another. The rules of preference here are of two sorts, one less stringent than the other. By one sort of preference, it is required that a particular witness or class of witnesses be called before any other can be resorted to, so that the latter cannot be used until the former is produced or is shown to be unavailable. This sort of preference may be termed provisional (or conditional).¹ By the other sort, the preferred witness or class of witnesses is not only first required, but if it is available, it is made the exclusive source of proof; that is, if the preferred witness is available, his testimony is taken as so trustworthy that no other testimony to the same point is received, nor is his testimony allowed to be shown incorrect. This sort of preference may be termed conclusive (or absolute).¹ The various rules of conditional preference are dealt with in §§ 1286-1339; the rules of absolute preference in §§ 1345-1353. They are few in number, and rest upon considerations peculiar to the case of each one.

Topic I: PROVISIONAL (OR CONDITIONAL) TESTIMONIAL PREFERENCES.

§ 1286. General Nature and Policy of these Rules. The general notion of preference which insists that a particular witness shall be called before another can be called rests on the supposed excellent position of that particular witness to obtain knowledge of the matter more accurately than any other person. His opportunities of knowledge, it must be supposed, have been not only better than those of others, but so much better that it would be a palpable risking of injustice to proceed in the trial without endeavoring to obtain him. Moreover, such a rule should be applied only where the class of witnesses thus preferred can be designated with some precision and certainty; because the party required to call him must in fairness be able to know beforehand, in order to summon them, the person or persons to whom the rule will be applied by the Court on the trial. Finally, such a rule obviously assumes nothing as to the precise nature of the witness' testimony. He may, on appearing, affirm or deny the existence of the fact in question; he is required to be used, but without any assumption that he will say the one thing or the other thing, and merely with the assumption that whatever he can contribute will be worth hearing. In other words, such a rule is a rule imposed by the law by way of insuring a supply of trustworthy testimony which otherwise the partisan interests of either side might fail to furnish.

Now the situations in which these combined considerations apply must necessarily be few. There are doubtless many classes of witnesses who might be supposed to have better opportunities of knowledge than others; but there are not many in which it can be securely assumed, for the purposes of a fixed rule, that they have had opportunities so far in excess of others that they must invariably and positively be utilized. Moreover, the precise definition of such persons by specific rules is still less often feasible. Finally, and most important of all, the cases in which the law needs, of its own motion, and independently of the litigants' efforts, to insist upon their attendance are decidedly few in number. The whole spirit of the Anglo-American system of trials is to leave the search for evidence in the hands of the parties themselves. Their interested zeal is regarded as sufficient to insure a full and exhaustive marshalling of all the evidential data on either side; and this attitude of the law, whether abstractly wise or not, has so thrown the parties upon their own efforts that in practice parties do exert themselves as effectively as could be desired.¹ In fact, our system of partisan responsibility for the purveying of evidence, while it is marked by the natural defects of partisanship, is at least more successful in the thorough canvassing of all sources of evidence than any system of judicial responsibility could be in this country, or (perhaps) than in any other country such a system actually appears to be to-day. Under such conditions, then, the cases might well be extremely few in which it would be necessary for the law to step in and to insist, independently of the parties' probable efforts, on the presence of a specific witness. Such indeed is the fact in our law; for these rules are extremely few.

¹ For the use of the phrase "best evidence" as applicable to this class of rules, see ante, § 1174.

In general, then, there may be assumed to be no place in our system of evidence for rules of testimonial preference; a few do exist; but they exist as exceptions to a general principle which leaves it to the efforts of the parties to search for and to procure any witnesses who might be supposed to be superior in testimonial equipment to others.² Apart from these few definite exceptions, there is no general principle that the "best evidence" must be procured,³ in the sense that a specific witness, presumably better qualified than other competent witnesses, must be produced or accounted for before the others can be used:

1834, Story, J., in U. S. v. Gibert, 2 Sumner 19, 81 (refusing to require the calling of one who saw a fire, in preference to one who saw it set): "It appears to me that the whole basis of the argument is founded upon a mistake of the meaning of the rule of law as to the production of the best evidence. The rule is not applied to evidence of the same nature and degree; but it is applied to reject secondary and inferior evidence in proof of a fact which leaves evidence of a higher and superior nature behind in the possession or power of the party. Thus, if the party offers a copy of a paper in evidence, when he has the original in his possession, the copy will be rejected, for the original is evidence of a higher nature. . . . But the rule does not apply to several eye-witnesses testifying to the

¹ Compare the influence of this spirit on other rules (post, §§ 1847, 2251).

² It might be thought that, of possible considerations leading to such exceptions, one might be the consideration that this preferred witness should be a person not likely to be known to one of the parties; and that another might be the consideration that the burden of showing such a witness unavailable should in fairness fall upon one party rather than the other; and these may be noticed as evidently having force in the maintenance of certain of the rules.

³ See ante, § 1174, for a further examination of the fallacies of this "best evidence" phrase.

same facts or parts of the same facts, for the testimony is all in the same degree, and where there are several witnesses to the same facts, they may be proved by one only. All need not be produced. If they are not produced, the evidence may be less satisfactory or less conclusive, but still it is not incompetent."

1875, Campbell, J., in Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49, 52 (repudiating any preference for a physician's testimony to an injured person's condition): "The term 'best evidence' is confined to cases where the law has divided testimony into primary and secondary; and there are no degrees of evidence, except where some document or other instrument exists the contents of which should be proved, by an original rather than by other testimony which is open to the danger of inaccuracy. But where living witnesses are placed on the stand, one is in law on the same footing as another. If he can testify at all, he can testify in the presence as well as in the absence of those who may be supposed wiser or more reliable. There are some questions on which some witnesses cannot testify at all, for want of knowledge. No one can be allowed to prove what he has never learned, whether it be ordinary or scientific facts. But one who can testify under any circumstances upon the facts on which he is examined may do so as well where his superiors are to be found as where he knows as much as any other."

It remains to examine the few specific rules which appear in our law as deviations from this general principle.

Sub-topic A: PREFERENCE FOR AN ATTESTING WITNESS.

§ 1287. History. The rule requiring the calling of a person who has attested a deed by his subscription comes down to us as the survival of a very early procedure. The connection by tradition is direct, though the original rule belongs to an epoch wholly alien in its ideas of proof and trial. Its history has been thus set forth:¹

1898, Professor James Bradley Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 502: "[The rule] has a clear and very old origin. Such persons belonged to that very ancient class of transaction or business witnesses, running far back into the old Germanic law, who were once the only sort of witnesses that could be compelled to come before a court. Their allowing themselves to be called in and set down as attesting witnesses was understood to be an assent in advance to such a compulsory summons. Proof by witnesses could not be made by those who merely happened casually to know the fact. However exact and full the knowledge of any person might be, he could not, in the old Germanic procedure, be called in court as a witness, unless he had been called at the time of the event as a preappointed witness. It was a part of such a system and in accordance with such a set of ideas that witnesses formally allowed their names to be written into deeds in large numbers. When jury trial, or rather proof by jury, as it originally was, came in, the old proof by witnesses was joined with it when the execution of the deed was denied; and the same process that summoned the twelve, summoned also these witnesses. The phrase of the precept to the sheriff was summono duodecim (etc. etc.) cum aliis. The presence of these witnesses was at first as necessary as that of the jury. Great delays and embarrassments attended such a requirement where the number of witnesses might be so great; the jury was cumbersome enough anyway. Accordingly, in 1318, the presence of the witnesses was made no longer absolutely necessary; they must still be summoned, but the case might go on without them. After another century and a half the process against the witness became no longer a necessity. It was not issued unless it were called for. After still another century, in 1562-3, process against all kinds of witnesses was allowed, requiring them to come in, not with the jury or as a part of the jury, but to testify before them in open court, and then the old procedure of summoning such witnesses with the jury seems to have died out; [but they must still be summoned as witnesses.] . . . As late as the early part of the eighteenth century it was doubtful whether a deed could be proved at all, if the attesting witnesses came in and denied it. Half a century later, Lord Mansfield, while reluctantly yielding to what he stigmatized as a captious objection that you must produce the witness, declared that 'It is a technical rule that the subscribing witness must be produced; and it cannot be dispensed with unless it appeared that his attendance could not be produced.'"²

¹ Substantially the same account had been given, in 1803, by Chief Justice Kent, in Fox v. Reil, 3 John. 477.

§ 1288. Reason and Policy of the Rule. This ancient rule thus continued to be enforced long after the disappearance of the primitive system of trial and the notions of proof in which it had its origin. By the end of the 1700s (ante, § 8) rules of evidence began to be argued out and to be maintained or repudiated according as they seemed to possess or to lack a reason for existence. What was the reason that sufficed to maintain this rule as a part of the new and ratiocinative system of evidence that began to be formed by the end of the 1700s? Here is found considerable difference of opinion, — a difference natural enough in view of the fact that no sound reason could in truth be furnished for the strict and entire perpetuation of the rule. Under such circumstances, insufficient and inconsistent reasons were likely to be advanced by those who could not see the way to a radical departure from long tradition.

(1) A favorite reason was that the parties to the document had agreed to make the attester their witness to prove execution :

1815, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in R. v. Harringworth, 4 M. & S. 350: "Inasmuch as they are the plighted witnesses, the knowledge they have upon the subject is essential, and if it can be procured must be forthcoming."

1851, Cresswell, J., in Gerapulo v. Wieler, 10 C. B. 690, 696: "It is not on the ground that his is the best evidence; . . . but because he is the witness agreed upon between the parties."

1853, Pollock, C. B., in Whyman v. Garth, 8 Exch. 803: "The attesting witness must be called to prove the execution of a deed for this reason, that by an imperative rule of law the parties are supposed to have agreed inter se that the deed shall not be given in evidence without his being called to depose to the circumstances attending its execution."¹

The difficulty about this reason is that no such agreement can be implied, particularly where attestation is required by law. Moreover, were such the reason, the rule would not apply between others than the parties to the document, — which is not the fact. Furthermore, this assumes that the opponent charged as obligor or maker is a party to the document, — which, if the execution is denied, is an assumption of the very point in issue :

² The function of the attesting documentary witness in the early Germanic system of proof is set forth in the following works: 1892, Brunner, Deutsche Rechtsgeschichte, I, 420-426; 1877, Ficker, Beiträge zur Urkundenlehre, I, §§ 61 ff.; 1887, Posse, Die Lehre von Privaturkunden, 70; 1889, Bresslau, Handbuch der Urkundenlehre, I, 489, 790-814.

This feature of Germanic procedure was also of great importance, in the history of our parol evidence rule, in relation to the use of the seal; and it is therefore considered more particularly post, § 2426.

¹ Accord: 1796, Grose, J., in Barnes v. Trompowsky, 7 T. R. 265; 1826, McMurtry v. Frank, 4 T. B. Monr. 39.

1807, Spencer, J., in Hall v. Phelps, 2 John. 451: "The notion that the persons who attest an instrument are agreed upon to be the only witnesses to prove it, is not conformable to the truth of transactions of this kind, and, to speak with all possible delicacy, is an absurdity."

1895, Burket, J., in Garratt v. Hanshue, 53 Oh. 482, 42 N. E. 256: "Another reason given for the rule is because the parties themselves, by selecting the witnesses, have mutually agreed to rest upon their testimony in proof of the execution of the instrument and of the circumstances which then took place, and because they know those facts which are probably unknown to others. This supposed mutual agreement is a pure fiction, and rarely, if ever, exists in fact. If in any case it has a real existence, and can be shown, it may perhaps be enforced; but the mere fiction is entitled to no weight and to no respect."²

(2) Another reason, suggested almost as often, is that the opponent is entitled to the benefit of cross-examining the attesting-witness as to the circumstances of execution; or, put in another way, that the attester may not only know more than some other person observing the execution, but may be able to speak as to fraud, duress, or other matters of defence:

1779, Ashhurst, J., in Abbot v. Plumbe, 1 Doug. 216: "[The opponent] would be deprived of the benefit of cross examining him concerning the time of the execution of the bond, which might be material."

1801, Alvanley, L. C. J., in Manners v. Postan, 4 Esp. 241: "The rule was founded on the principle that there should be an investigation from the subscribing witness of what took place at the time of the execution of the instrument."

1803, LeBlanc, J., in Call v. Dunning, 4 East 54: "A fact may be known to the subscribing witness not within the knowledge or recollection of the obligor, and he is entitled to avail himself of all the knowledge of the subscribing witness relative to the transaction."

The objections to this reason are numerous. First, it is inconsistent with the rule itself; for the rule applies even where fraud, duress, and time are not in issue, and even where the maker himself is competent as a witness. Again, the attester is in practice not usually a person who knows anything about the circumstances preceding the document's execution, or knows more than any other person who by being present would be a qualified witness. Finally, if the witness does possess special knowledge about some affirmative issue, the opponent is the proper person to call the witness, if he desires him. This reason for the rule, then, is no more capable of defence than the first.³

(3) Has the rule, then, no justification in policy? It certainly has none, in its original broad form. But in most jurisdictions it has by statute been limited to documents required by law to be attested (post, § 1290); and in this shape it seems to be entirely justifiable. In the first place, the attestation is in such cases required by law as a special precaution against forgery;⁴

² Accord: 1834, Parker, J., in Farnsworth v. Briggs, 6 N. H. 561, 565.

³ See some of these objections set forth in the following opinions: 1834, Parker, J., in Farnsworth v. Briggs, 6 N. H. 561, 565; 1895, Burket, J., in Garratt v. Hanshue, 53 Oh. 482, 42 N. E. 256. See, further, the reasons of the Common Law Procedure Commissioners, quoted post, § 1290, objecting to the scope of the rule as applicable to documents not required by law to be attested. The great critic of our evidence system has also had his say against the rule: 1827, Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. VII, c. VI (Bowring's ed., vol. VII, p. 190).

⁴ See the quotations post, § 1304.

thus the attestation itself must in any case be proved as an element in the validity of the document, and there seems to be no special hardship in obtaining the witness rather than in obtaining evidence of his signature. In the next place, such documents are, in most jurisdictions, wills of deceased persons and deeds of illiterate persons; for such documents, the maker himself being either deceased or not acquainted with writings, the attester's testimony is almost inevitably the most desirable and most trustworthy source of information as to the fact of execution; moreover, it is in such cases that the defences of fraud or undue influence are most likely to be made, and here also the attester's testimony is likely to be of use and ought to be obtained if possible. Still further, in these and all other cases where attestation is legally required, the situation is one in which by hypothesis the risk of a false document is serious, and the determination ought not to be left to the unsupported denial of the alleged maker (even assuming him competent and testifying). Finally, between the two parties, the burden of producing the witness or proving him unavailable ought fairly to be placed upon the party of whose case it is a part to prove the due execution and attestation. For these reasons, it seems unwise to dispense with the rule to any further extent.

The rule at common law may be thus stated:

Rule: (a) Where the execution of any document (b) purports to have been attested, (c) a party desiring to prove its execution, (d) against an opponent entitled in the state of the issues to dispute execution, (e) must, before using other evidence, (f) either produce the attester as a witness, (g) or show his testimony to be unavailable (h) and also authenticate his attestation unless it is not feasible.

Such is the scope of the rule as it obtained in its orthodox and broadest form. This broadest form, however, was not adopted or maintained in all jurisdictions; and certain modifications, now more or less common, are to be noticed under the various parts.

(a) "Where the Execution of any Document"

§ 1290. Kind of Document covered by the Rule; at Common Law, all Documents were included; Statutory Modifications. At common law the rule was applied to all kinds of documents whatever, when purporting to bear an attestation, whether or not the document was sealed, whether or not it was in the nature of a specialty, and whether or not the attestation was required by law as an element of the document's validity.¹

But by the beginning of the 1800s the unnecessary hardship and the mere

¹ The American rulings are placed in the next note; there was in England no question as to this proposition: 1810, Wardell v. Fermour, 2 Camp. 282, 284 (refusing to distinguish between a lease-assignment and a post-obit bond; Ellenborough, L. C. J., said it did not depend on "the nature of the deed to be proved; it must depend upon the possibility of procuring the attendance of the attesting witness, not upon the testimony he is likely to give"); 1817, Higgs v. Dixon, 2 Stark. 180 (applied to a warrant to distrain); 1848, Streeter v. Bartlett, 5 C. B. 562 (applied to the proof in the Common Pleas of a debtor's schedule required by the Insolvent Debtors' Court to be attested, but not by the insolvency-statute).

technicality of the rule in this broadness of scope began to be recognized. It may be supposed, too, that the then increasing resort to handwriting-testimony (post, § 1993) made it easier to rely less upon attesting witnesses. In 1853, the objections to it found effective expression in the following passage in the Report of a Parliamentary Commission notable for the authoritative character of its members :

1853, Common Law Procedure Commission (Jervis, Martin, Walton, Bramwell, Willes, Cockburn), Second Report, 23: "We do not purpose to meddle with the preappointed evidence of execution required either by the Legislature or by persons creating powers ; but we think it deserving of serious consideration whether this formal proof of the execution of written documents may not in other cases be dispensed with, where the execution is either admitted or capable of other proof. The principle on which the necessity for producing the attesting witness rests is that the witness is supposed to be conversant with all the circumstances under which the deed was executed. But it is notorious that in practice the attesting witness in the majority of instances knows nothing of the transaction ; the instrument having been prepared, a clerk, a servant, or a neighbor is called in to attest it. Added to which, as parol testimony is not admitted to contradict or vary the terms of a written instrument, the occasions are few indeed where the evidence of the attesting witness goes further than to prove the execution of the writing. On the other hand, the necessity of calling the attesting witness, where the execution of the document is not the real matter in dispute and where there are no concomitant circumstances to be inquired into, is often attended with difficulty and expense, and sometimes leads to the defeat of justice. Cases have occurred where, in tracing a title, numerous witnesses from distant parts have been rendered necessary to prove the formal execution of deeds, though their execution was not really in dispute and the handwriting to all might have been proved by a single witness, and doubtless would have been admitted but for the difficulty which it was thought would by the existing rule be thrown in the way of the party alleging title. It also sometimes happens in the course of a cause that the adversary's case renders it necessary to give in evidence a document which it was not supposed would be required, or a document is produced by a witness on his subpoena which turns out, contrary to the expectation of the party requiring it, to be attested ; the attesting witness is not at hand ; yet the signature of the party might be easily proved, or the witness producing the instrument may have heard him admit the execution ; nevertheless the document cannot be received, and the party requiring it loses his cause. When the genuineness of the document is not really in dispute, it is clear that the parties ought not to be limited to any particular witness to prove the execution. When the genuineness is in dispute, the party producing it will be sure to call the attesting witness, as the absence of the latter would throw the greatest discredit on the instrument. We therefore recommend that, except in cases where the evidence of attestation is requisite to the validity of the instrument, an attesting witness need not be called."²

Accordingly, in 1854, England restricted the rule thereafter to documents required by law to be attested, and this statute has been adopted in Canada also.³

² Compare the arguments set forth ante, § 1288.

³ England: 1854, St. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, § 26 ("It shall not be necessary to prove by the attesting witness any instrument to the validity of which attestation is not requisite ; and such instrument may be proved by admission, or otherwise, as if there had been no attesting witness thereto"); 1854, St. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104,

§ 526 (the attesting witness need not be called for shipping documents required by this Act to be attested) ; 1886, Re Rice, L. R. 32 Ch. D. 35 (appointment by attested deed, attestation not being requisite to validity ; Cotton, L. J. : "In petitions in lunacy and in chancery, it has been usual since the Act to require proof by the attesting witness"); Canada: the following statutes follow the wording of Eng. St. 1854,

In the United States, the common-law doctrine was recognized to have the same scope as in England; except that by a few Courts it was confined to documents under seal. In many jurisdictions, however, a statutory restriction has been enacted similar to that of England.⁴ Under such restrictions, c. 125; Dom. Crim. Code, 1892, § 696; B. C. Rev. St. 1897, c. 71, § 44; N. Br. Consol. St. 1877, c. 46, § 23; Newf. Consol. St. 1892, c. 57, § 21; N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 32; Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 73, § 54; P. E. I. St. 1889, c. 9, § 19.

⁴ Where no rulings or statutes are found, the Court would presumably apply the orthodox rule. In the following list, the statute in each jurisdiction is placed last, though in time the statute may have preceded some of the judicial rulings. In some jurisdictions (e. g. South Carolina) the statute does not go as far in restriction as the English statute; in others (e. g. Florida and California) the statute has in appearance gone farther: Ala.: 1881, Ellerson v. State, 69 Ala. 1, 3 (applies to "every private writing"; here, a contract for cropping); 1896, Martin v. Mayer, 112 id. 620, 20 So. 963 (bill of sale); 1897, Jones v. State, 113 id. 95, 21 So. 229 (mortgage of personality); 1899, Stamphill v. Bullen, 121 id. 250, 25 So. 928 (proof by joint maker, not sufficient under statute for co-maker's execution); Ark.: 1843, Brock v. Saxton, 5 Ark. 708 (applicable to all attested documents); Cal.: C. C. P. 1872, § 1940 ("any writing" is provable either by one seeing the execution, or by evidence of the maker's hand, or by a subscribing witness; but this clearly was not intended to override C. C. P. § 1315, quoted post, § 1310); Fla.: Rev. St. 1892, § 1808 (probate may be granted on the oath of the executor, or if he is interested, "of any other credible person having no interest under the will, that he verily believes the writing exhibited" to be the testator's last will); Ga.: 1878, Davis v. Alston, 61 Ga. 227 (a written contract for the sale of land; assimilated to a deed, and tested by "the rule of law applicable to deeds," i. e. about preferred witnesses); 1895, Giannone v. Fleetwood, 93 id. 491, 21 S. E. 76 (applicable to all attested documents); Haw.: Civil Laws, 1897, § 1425 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125); Ida.: Rev. St. 1887, § 5993 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1940); Ill.: Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 51 (whenever any instrument "not required by law to be attested by a subscribing witness" is offered in a civil cause, "and the same shall appear to have been so attested, and it shall become necessary to prove the execution of any such deed or other writing otherwise than as now provided by law, it shall not be necessary to prove the execution of the same by a subscribing witness to the exclusion of other evidence, but the execution of such instrument may be proved by secondary evidence without producing or accounting for the absence of the subscribing witness or witnesses"); Md.: Pub. Gen. L. 1883, Art. 35, § 6 (attested document's execution may be proved as if not attested, except for proof of will); Mass.: 1839, Valentine v. Piper, 22 Pick. 85 (rule applicable to "an instrument under seal

and commonly requiring attesting witnesses"); St. 1897, c. 386, Rev. L. 1902, c. 175, § 70 ("The signature to an attested instrument or writing, except a will, may be proved in the same manner as if it were not attested"); Mich.: Comp. L. 1897, § 10199 (an attested instrument may be proved without calling the subscribing witness, "except in cases of written instruments to the validity of which one or more subscribing witnesses are required by law"); N. Y.: 1829, Henry v. Bishop, 2 Wend. 575 (does not apply "to instruments not under seal, or at least in regard to negotiable paper"); 1829, Jackson v. Rice, 3 id. 180, 183 (applicable to instruments under seal); Laws 1833, c. 195, § 1 (the subscribing witness need not be called, except for instruments to the validity of which a subscribing witness is necessary); N. D.: 1897, Brynjolfson v. Elev. Co., 6 N. D. 450, 71 N. W. 555 (holding the rule applicable to a chattel mortgage required to be attested under Rev. Code 1895, § 4738; but not clearly declaring how far R. C. §§ 3579, 3581, 3582, providing for proof before a recorder of deeds, abrogate the common-law doctrine); St. 1897, c. 59, Rev. Code 1899, § 3888 a ("In proving any written instrument or contract to which there is a subscribing witness, or to which there are two or more subscribing witnesses, it shall not be necessary to call said witness or any one of two or more of said subscribing witnesses; but the instrument or contract may be proved, except for purposes of recording the same, by the same evidence by which an instrument or contract to which there is no subscribing witness may be proved"); 1901, McManus v. Commow, 10 N. D. 340, 87 N. W. 9 (applying § 3888 a, Rev. Code 1899); Oh.: 1877, Warner v. R. Co., 31 Oh. St. 265, 270 (applied to a contract); Or.: 1899, Hannan v. Greenfield, 36 Or. 97, 58 Pac. 888 (rule applied to agency-contract); C. C. P. 1892, § 761 (common-law rule maintained); R. I.: Gen. L. 1896, c. 244, § 43 (calling not required for "any instrument to the validity of which attestation is not requisite"; proof may be made "as if there had been no attesting witness thereto"); S. C.: 1804, Madden v. Burris, 1 Brev. 387 (St. 1802, applied to an indorsement on a note); 1806, Gervais v. Baird, 2 Brev. 37 (same applied to signature by mark); 1807, Pauley v. Snipes, 2 Brev. 200 (St. 1802; the maker's signature suffices, even though a mark, if distinguishable); 1810, Shiver v. Johnson, ib. 397 (maker's peculiarity of mark, sufficient for St. 1802); 1825, Townsend v. Covington, 3 McC. 219 (St. 1802 does not apply to a written agreement for sale of land not under seal); 1827, Edgar v. Brown, 4 McC. 91 (bond executed in another State; St. 1802 applied); 1840, Blackman v. Stogner, Cheves Eq. 175 (St. 1802 applied in Chancery suit); 1841, Trammell v. Roberts, 1 McM. 305 (here the defendant made oath, the rule comes into application chiefly for wills and for illiterates' deeds, and, in England, for powers of appointment. Moreover, even where the common-law rule obtains in strictness, the principle (post, § 1318), which dispenses with it for proof by copies of registered instruments, relieves nowadays in most instances from its harshness.

In order to apprehend the precise scope of the statutory rule, it is therefore in most jurisdictions necessary to note what documents are required by law to be attested as an element of their validity; but this is a matter of substantive law, not within the present purview. From such statutes, however, three special kinds of statutes should be distinguished. (1) A statute (as in Pennsylvania) which prescribes merely that a document shall be "proved" by (any) two or more witnesses involves a rule of Quantity (dealt with post, §§ 2048, 2049), and not a rule of preference; i. e. any two or more competent witnesses suffice, and there is therefore no preference for attesting witnesses above others.⁵ (2) A statute providing that documents presented for registration must be "proved" to the registrar by the maker's acknowledgment or the statement of an attesting witness does not in itself concern the mode of proof before a judicial tribunal, but only the conditions precedent to lawful registration, and does not make attestation a necessary element of validity so as to affect the application of the present rule.⁶ (3) The rule for proof of nuncupative wills by persons present involves both a rule of Preference and a rule of Quantity; but is better examined under the latter head (post, § 2050).

§ 1291. Documents Incidentally or "Collaterally" in Issue. Where the

and the exemption of St. 1802 did not apply); 1902, Swancey v. Parrish, 62 S. C. 240, 40 S. E. 554, semble (the Court inclined to hold the rule not applicable to documents not requiring attestation; here, a chattel mortgage); St. 1731, Gen. St. 1882, c. 86, §§ 2226, 2227, Rev. St. 1893, §§ 2362, 2363, Code 1902, §§ 2898, 2899 (deeds, bonds, etc., attested as proved before a mayor, governor, or notary of a domestic or foreign State, receivable "as if the witnesses to such deeds were produced and proved the same viva voce"; with limitation as to claims against residents of this State, conditioned on "such foreign country" according similar treatment); St. 1802, Gen. St. 1882, c. 86, §§ 2213, 2214, Rev. St. 1893, §§ 2348, 2349, Code 1902, §§ 2884, 2885 ("The absence of a witness to a bond or note" shall not be cause for postponement, "but the signature to such bond or note may be proved by other testimony," unless the opponent expressly disputes its genuineness); Tenn.: 1834, Suggett v. Kitchell, 6 Yerg. 425, 428 (will of personalty; subscribing witnesses, or at least more than one, need not be called); 1850, Moore v. Steele, 10 Humph. 562, 564, semble (subscribing witnesses to a will of personalty not preferred); 1850, Jones v. Arterburn, 11 id. 97, 101 (where there are in fact subscribing witnesses to a will of personalty, the rules of preferred witnesses are to be applied); St. 1789, c. 23, § 1, Code 1896, § 3904

("written wills with witnesses thereto," if not contested, are required to be proved by "at least one of the subscribing witnesses, if living"; if contested, every will, "written or nuncupative," by "all the living witnesses, if to be found, and by such other persons as may be produced to support it"); Va.: 1794, Turner v. Strip, 1 Wash. 319, 322 (proof of deed need not be by subscribing witness, under St. 1748); Wis.: 1846, Carrington v. Eastman, 1 Pinney 650, 656 (rule applied to a receipt).

⁵ 1784, Hight v. Wilson, 1 Dall. 94 (it is not necessary "that the proof of the will should be made by those who subscribed as witnesses," under the Act of 1705 requiring wills to be "proved by two or more credible witnesses, upon their solemn affirmation, or by other legal proof"); 1788, Lewis v. Maris, ib. 278, 288, semble (same); 1868, Carson's Appeal, 59 Pa. 493, 496 (same; under St. 1833); see also post, § 1304.

A statute, however, providing for both "proving" and attesting does involve also a rule of preference for the attestors: 1815, Clarke v. Bartlett, 4 Bibb 201 (statute requiring manumissions to be "attested and proved by two witnesses"; held, that the two proving it must be the two attesting it).

⁶ For the exemption from the rule in the case of proof by copies of a registered deed, see post, § 1318.

document whose execution is to be proved is not a document necessarily involved in the pleadings, but is a minor document coming incidentally into issue in the course of the details of proof, there is much reason in dispensing with the rule. In the first place, the document is not of such importance as to call for the rigorous precaution of the rule; and secondly, it is not possible for the proponent to anticipate every minor turn in the course of the proof, and he may thus without fault be taken by surprise and be unprepared with the attester and yet otherwise able to make sufficient proof.

This limitation to the rule was never recognized in England;¹ but in the United States it has found frequent judicial support:

1813, Brackenridge, J., in Heckert v. Haine, 6 Binn. 16, 20 (here the plaintiff wished to prove the receipt of money from A, by the defendant's intestate for the use of the plaintiff, the payor A having taken an attested receipt); "The receipt is a matter collateral to his case and not directly in issue. . . . [The witness] could not legally be supposed to be in his keeping, as a witness called by a party to subscribe a writing is supposed to be. . . . In the case of a third person, even where it is the foundation of a suit and comes in collaterally, I do not see the reason. . . . I would then restrain the rule to a case where the execution of a writing is directly in issue, unless notice shall have been given that it was material to have this proof. . . . Coming in collaterally, it would be taking a party by surprise to render it necessary to produce the subscribing witness."

1845, Gülchrist, J., in Rand v. Dodge, 17 N. H. 343, 357: "When one not a party or privy to the contract, nor claiming any benefit, or exemption from the fulfilment of its exigencies or the violation of its terms, has occasion for a collateral purpose to show that such a contract existed, . . . when the existence of the writing is of no consequence or significance but as a part of the res gestæ which a stranger seeks to prove and to characterize with reference to his own rights, then the reason of the rule entirely fails and the rule itself has no application."

Accordingly, in many jurisdictions the rule is not applied in such cases.²

¹ 1791, Breton v. Cope, Peake 30 (rule applied to a deed cancelled and offered only as containing an admission); 1801, Manners v. Postan, 4 Esp. 239 (action for penalties for usury; in proving the usury, an attested warrant of attorney, held subject to the rule).

² Accord: Ala.: 1831, Ellerson v. State, 69 Ala. 1, 3 (indictment for removing personal property subject to lien; witness to contract creating lien required to be called); 1892, Steiner v. Trainum, 98 Ala. 315, 318, 13 So. 365 (trover for a horse; note given at the sale; exempted); 1892, Lavrette v. Holcombe, ib. 503, 510 (same; affidavit); Ga.: 1890, Hudson v. Puett, 86 Ga. 341, 12 S. E. 640 (claim for rent; to show reasonable value, a contract of lease of same property to another, held not collateral); 1893, Giaunone v. Fleetwood, 93 id. 491, 493, 21 S. E. 76 (execution on property claimed under mortgage; bill of sale used to rebut evidence of fraud, held not collateral); 1895, McVicker v. Conkle, 96 id. 584, 595, 24 S. E. 23 (rule not applicable to document offered only as standard for comparison of hands); 1897, Summerour v. Felker, 102 id. 254, 29 S. E. 448 (action for rent; note given for the rent, not collateral); Code 1895, § 5244 (production not necessary if paper is "only incidentally or collaterally material to the case"); Ky.: 1816, Brashear v. Burton, 4 Bibb 442 (title to personality; bill of sale incidentally in chain of title; rule not enforced); Me.: 1830, Drew v. Wadleigh, 7 Greenl. 94 (rule not applied to document used to discredit a witness as containing an inconsistent statement); 1841, Ayers v. Hewitt, 1 Appl. 281, 285 (if it is a document "wholly inter alios, under whom neither party can claim to deduce any right, title, or interest to himself," the rule does not apply; as here, to a bill of sale corroborating a witness' testimony to a third person's insolvency); 1845, Pullen v. Hutchinson, 12 Shepl. 249, 253 (the preceding case approved; here the rule was held applicable to a bill of sale to the defendant affecting his claim); Mich.: 1880, Hess v. Griggs, 43 Mich. 397, 399, 5 N. W. 427 (plaintiff in replevin, resting on possession under a contract with a third person by the defendant; rule applied); N. H.: 1845, Rand v. Dodge, 17 N. H. 343, 357 (rule not applied to a contract making G. the agent of an ancestor or to do acts of prescriptive possession; see quotation supra); Pa.: 1813, Heckert v. Haine, 6 Binn. 16, 20 (see quotation supra); Tenn.: 1874, Demombremun v. Walker, 4 Baxt. 199 (to rebut a contention that the will under which the plaintiff claimed was procured by un-

The precise terms of this limitation are not uniformly defined, and are difficult to define; the trial judge's determination should be allowed to control. The term "collateral," often used, is elusive and unsatisfactory; and it is sometimes mistakenly employed to designate the principle of certain other cases (post, § 1293), where the rule is also not applied.

(b) "Purports to have been Attested."

§ 1292. Who is an Attesting Witness. The notion of an attesting or subscribing witness is that of a person who, at the request or with the consent of the maker, places his name on the document for the purpose of making thereby an implied¹ or expressed statement that the document was then known by him to have been executed by the purporting maker.²

(1) In the first place, then, a person who, though he saw the execution, and though his name is on the document, did not write it himself, is not an attesting witness, because he did not in fact make the attestation.³

(2) For the same reason, a fictitious person whose name is signed is not an attesting witness.⁴

(3) Again, an officer, whose signature is required by law or by rule of Court to give validity to a document or to enable it to be filed for a specific purpose, is not an attesting witness,⁵ because he signs for a different purpose;

due influence, the plaintiffs offered a former will of a similar tenor; held, that the rule did not apply, where a paper "comes incidentally in question," as here; 1874, Henly v. Hemming, 7 id. 524 (rule not applicable to a bill of sale of goods sued for in replevin); Vt.: 1849, Curtis v. Belknap, 21 Vt. 433 (the plaintiff was hired by T. to perform work, but T. abandoned the contract; the defendant then hired the plaintiff to complete the work at the same prices; held, the rule did not apply to the writing between T. and the plaintiff, which "was only incidentally in question," and of which "the parties to his contract had never constituted the subscribing witness . . . the exclusive witness of their contract").

Contra: 1826, Roberts v. Tennell, 3 T. B. Monr. 247, 250; 1831, Goodall v. Goodall, 5 J. J. M. 596, 598; 1871, Kalmes v. Gerrish, 7 Nev. 31, 34. Undecided: 1857, Com. v. Castles, 9 Gray 121 ("collaterally or incidentally"; left undecided).

¹ Distinguish the cases cited post, § 1293.

² A clause expressly using words of attestation is unnecessary, if the real purpose of signing was to attest; 1848, Chaplain v. Briscoe, 11 Sm. & M. 372, 379, 382 (persons signing in the usual place, but not named as witnesses, required to be called); and cases cited post, § 1511.

³ Distinguish the question of substantive law whether the attestation, as an element in the validity of a document required to be attested, suffices under that substantive law. See for examples: 1835, Doe v. Burdett, 4 A. & E. 1 (under what circumstances a general attestation is sufficient); 1855, Clay v. Holbert, 14 Tex. 189, 200.

Whether a person signing may under the "parol evidence" rule show that his intention was merely to attest and not to be an obligor is a different question (post, § 2419).

⁴ 1843, Cussons v. Skinner, 11 M. & W. 161, 168 (the attesting witness' name was written by another person in pencil; held, not necessary to call him; Abinger, L. C. B.: "It is not the mere presence of a person at the time of the execution of an instrument that makes him an attesting witness; for if five hundred persons were, if they do not sign as attesting witnesses, you are not bound to call one of them"); 1816, Jackson v. Lewis, 13 John. 504 (signature of a second witness by the first, treated as if attested by one only); 1814, Allen v. Martin, 1 Law Repos. N. C. 373 (the maker had himself written the witness' name; rule not applicable).

The primitive notion of an attestation was quite otherwise, under the Germanic system of proof, by which a person might write the names of any number of his absent friends to his deed and get their consent afterwards; "a witness to a deed, according to the popular conception, was not necessarily one who had seen it executed, but one who was willing to give it credit by his name"; Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 98, citing instances; 1543, Rolf v. Hampden, Dyer 53 b.; and see another instance, since published, in the Selden Society's Select Civil Pleas, I, No. 76; see also the accounts in the German writers cited ante, § 1287, particularly Bresslan, pp. 536-538, 548, 790-814.

⁵ 1791, Fasset v. Brown, Peake 23; 1805, Burrows v. Lock, 10 Ves. Jr. 470, 474.

⁶ 1844, Bailey v. Bidwell, 13 M. & W. 73 (an attorney attesting a petition in the Bank-and for the same reason an officer authorized to take an acknowledgment and to give a certificate thereof admissible as evidence under the Hearsay exception (post, §§ 1676, 1682) would not be an attesting witness.⁶

(4) A person who, though he sees the execution, does not then sign, is not an attesting witness;⁷ for the object of attestation is to secure the written record of his knowledge before any doubt can arise as to its correctness.

(5) A person who attests, but is at the time incompetent to act as attesting witness, under the substantive law prescribing the qualities of a valid attestation, is without the scope of the rule and need not be called.⁸ Whether his attestation may be used, by proving the signature, as evidence of execution, is another question (post, § 1510); as also the question whether a subsequently-arising incompetency to testify exempts from production (post, § 1316).

In all the preceding instances the rule of calling the witness does not apply, and other evidence may be used; although, the attestation being a nullity, the document may, under substantive law requiring it to be attested, be after all excluded as invalid.

(c) "A Party desiring to Prove its Execution."

§ 1293. Rule applies only in proving Execution, not in using the Document for other Purposes. The object of attestation is to provide a witness who shall be able to testify to the execution of the document by the person making it, i. e. to authenticate its genuineness. Hence, so far as the party is engaged in proving something about the document other than its mere execution — e. g. its contents, its delivery, or the like —, the attesting witness is not a preferred witness.¹ For this reason, the rule does not apply where a ruptcy Court, where such attestation was required for filing; not necessary to be called).

⁶ 1892, Lavretta v. Holcombe, 98 Ala. 503, 510, 12 So. 789 (affidavit acknowledged before a notary; held not an attesting witness requiring preference, though he might be to give validity to a document). Contra: 1902, Hayes v. Banks, 132 Ala. 354, 31 So. 464, semble (notary's defective certificate of acknowledgment).

⁷ Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1935 ("A subscribing witness is one who sees a writing executed or hears it acknowledged, and at the request of the party thereupon signs his name"); amended in 1901 (by substituting for "it acknowledged," the words "a party thereto declare that it was executed by him"; for the validity of the amendment, see ante, § 488); 1829, Henry v. Bishop, 2 Wend. 575, 577 (one who saw the execution but signed afterwards, not an attesting witness).

⁸ 1848, Doe v. Twigg, 5 U. C. Q. B. 167, 170 ("the attestation . . . is a mere nullity," and the maker's execution is to be proved otherwise); 1853, Packard v. Dunsmore, 11 Cush. 283, 285 (may be proved "as if there had been no attesting witness"). The following case is peculiar, but seems sound; 1849, Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 324, 346 (a negro, incompetent as a witness, was the interpreter making a will, and was required to be called).

¹ Besides the following cases, the authorities to the same effect, for proof of execution in general, cited post, § 2132, would be applicable; 1837, Hancock v. Byrne, 5 Dana Ky. 513 (identifying a note; on the theory that the writing itself is better than a witness, calling the witness held not necessary); 1879, Skinner v. Brigham, 126 Mass. 132 (trover for chattels obtained from the plaintiff in exchange for an invalid deed by third persons purporting to convey certain land; witnesses not required, because the delivery of a paper, not the signing of a deed, was to be proved); 1873, Eslow v. Mitchell, 26 Mich. 500, 502 (not required in proving contents); 1875, Raynor v. Norton, 31 id. 210, 213 (same); 1830, Foster v. Wallace, 2 Mo. 231 (that a co-signer of a bond had executed merely as surety for the other; production not required); 1813, Heckert v. Haine, 6 Binn. 16, 17 (to prove a written receipt the witness must be called, but not to prove the fact of payment); 1824, Babb v. Clemson, 10 S. & R. 419, 426 (same, for a bill of sale); 1826, Wishart v. Downey, 15 id. 77, 79 (same, for a receipt); 1836, Harding v. Craigie, 8 Vt. 501, 508 (a note signed by three persons, with S. as witness; to prove deed is used to show color of title or extent of claim by one claiming title through adverse possession (post, § 1778); for the claimant does not rest upon the authenticity of the deeds, but upon its contents as embodying the extent of his claim. Whether the rule should apply to one who desires to disprove the genuineness of a document is a difficult question;² but it would seem that, since by hypothesis the party alleging its execution must already have been excused or exempted from producing the witness, the party denying should not be put in a less favorable position, and the rule should not apply.

(d) "Against an Opponent entitled in the State of the Issues to Dispute Execution."

§ 1294. Execution not Disputable (1) because of Estoppel or other Rule of Substantive Law. Where the opponent by his prior conduct is estopped from denying execution, the execution cannot be put in issue by him, and the party offering the document need not in any manner evidence its execution (post, § 2132). Since the production of the attesting witness is required solely for the purpose of evidencing execution, the rule of production therefore does not apply.¹ For the same reason, whenever a rule of substantive law forbids the execution to be denied, the rule does not apply; and this seems to include the case of a document whose execution the opponent was officially bound to secure and can therefore not now deny.³

§ 1295. Execution not Disputable (2) because of a Rule of Pleading. So far as any rule of pleading requires that the execution of a document named in the declaration must be expressly traversed, the failure to plead in denial must, under such a rule, be equivalent to a confession of the allegation of execution in the declaration, and thus the execution is not in issue on the trial, and the present rule does not apply. Accordingly, at common law, so far as a plea of non est factum, or other form of specific traverse distinct from the general issue, was required for putting the execution into issue, and of course so far as the opponent failed to plead the general issue or any specific traverse, the rule for calling the attesting wit-

that S. in fact witnessed only one signature, and that the others were added after attestation, S. need not be called).

² 1854, Jordan v. Faireloth, 13 Ga. 544 (not applicable to one calling the maker to deny the genuineness of a deed in his name); 1856, Stamper v. Griffin, 20 id. 312, 320 (claim of adverse possession under a bond in the name of Z., but admitted to have been forged; claimant must call witness, "whether the object be to prove that a writing is genuine or that it is spurious," since he "is the person who knows better than all others that the writing is genuine, if it is genuine, and spurious, if it is spurious"); 1859, Wells v. Walker, 29 id. 450, 452 (deed read by defendant to jury without producing witnesses; plaintiff may then, to deny execution, call a witness other than the subscribing ones; on the principle that he should be no worse off than if defendant had not been exempted from calling them).

¹ 1849, Perry v. Lawless, 5 U. C. Q. B. 514 (representations as to genuineness of a note, made before the plaintiff's purchase).

³ 1822, Scott v. Waithman, 3 Stark. 168 (action against a sheriff for taking insufficient sureties on a replevin bond; the sheriff's duty being to take the bond, the due execution was taken as admitted by him); Ga. Code 1895, § 5244 (rule not applicable to "office bonds required by law to be approved or tested by a particular functionary").

ness did not apply,¹ though no liberality was shown in interpreting this principle.²

In more recent times, and since the improvement of common-law pleading, the place of this principle has generally been taken by statutory enactments expressly providing that the opponent's failure to put in issue a document whose execution is alleged in the opponent's pleading shall be taken as an admission of its execution, and the execution cannot be denied. These statutes provide for the taking of issue sometimes merely in the pleading, sometimes additionally by affidavit; but the principle and the effect is practically the same in all. These statutes, and the decisions interpreting them, involve a rule of pleading, and are therefore without the present purview.³

§ 1296. Execution not Disputable (3) because of Judicial Admission. For the purposes of proof, a judicial admission of the opponent — i. e. an express agreement for the purposes of the trial — has the same effect as a failure to plead in denial; it is a waiver of proof on the subject (post, § 2588). Hence when a document's execution is judicially admitted, the present rule does not apply.¹ Such judicial admissions, however, must be distinguished from ordinary or circumstantial admissions, with which they have nothing in common except the name. The use of the latter sort in the present connection raises a different question (post, § 1300).

§ 1297. Execution not Disputable (4) because of Opponent's Claim under the Same Instrument. Where the opponent's claim, as expressly set forth in the pleadings or as developed in the course of proof, predicates the genuineness of the very document which the proponent now desires to prove, it is

¹ 1818, Cooke v. Tanswell, 8 Taunt. 450 (Gibbs, C. J. : "In cases where non est factum is not pleaded, . . . I never yet heard it contended that it was necessary to call the subscribing witness").

² 1811, Williams v. Sills, 2 Camp. 519 (Ellenborough, L. C. J. : "The defendant by refraining from the plea of non est factum has only admitted so much of the deed as is expanded upon the record; and if the plaintiff would avail himself of any other part of the deed, he must prove it by the attesting witness in the common way"); 1838, Gillett v. Abbott, 7 A. & E. 783 (a plea admitting the execution of a deed of indemnity sued on, the deed's recital setting out in part a deed of trust, does not dispense with the witness to the deed of trust); 1841, Jackson v. Bowley, Car. & M. 97 (on an issue of plene administravit, in an action against an executor, the witness to a deed to the testator must be called).

³ They are further noticed under Judicial Admissions (post, § 2594).

The curious result may occur, where such a statute exists, and where the limitation about documents incidentally in issue (ante, § 1290) does not exist, that the essential documents in the case need not be authenticated at all, while minor documents must be proved according to the rigor of the present rule; e. g. 1826, Roberts v. Tennell, 3 T. B. Monr. 247, 250.

Distinguish the following: 1878, Holden v. Jenkins, 125 Mass. 446 (failure to deny a signature, under a statute requiring a specific denial, does not relieve from proof of the attesting witness' signature for the purpose of availing of a longer statutory bar for attested documents; but "might relieve" from calling the witness to prove the maker's signature).

¹ 1806, Laing v. Kaine, 2 B. & P. 85 (warrant of attorney; since "it appeared that the defendant did not merely acknowledge the instrument, but agreed [for the purpose of legal proceedings] that the plaintiff should act upon it as if the witness himself had been produced," the calling was not required); 1839, Bringloe v. Goodson, 8 Scott 71, 83, per Tindal, C. J.; 1885, Coleman v. State, 79 Ala. 49; 1890, Richmond, etc. R. Co. v. Jones, 92 id. 226, 9 So. 276; 1893, Hawkins v. Ross, 100 id. 459, 464, 14 So. 278; 1881, Jones v. Henry, 84 N. C. 320, 323; 1834, Grady v. Sharron, 6 Yerg. 320, 321, 324 (admission by counsel exempts from calling witnesses). Contra, but clearly wrong: 1844, Hylton v. Hylton, 1 Gratt. 161, 165 (admission, during trial, of the due execution of a will, not sufficient to dispense with the testimony required by law).

clear that the former is in precisely the same situation as if he had by pleading or by judicial admission conceded the document's execution. It is obviously inconsistent for him to assert its execution as an element of his present claim or defence, in one part of the proceedings, but in another part in effect to deny the execution by putting the proponent upon proof of it. So long as the opponent maintains the former attitude, he must relinquish the latter one; so long as the document is genuine for his purposes, it is also (so far as he is concerned) genuine for the proponent's purposes. The execution thus not being disputable, the rule requiring the attesting witness to prove it does not apply.

This has long been judicially conceded; although the precise terms defining the situation are not uniformly expressed, and the application of the principle to particular states of facts is open to more or less difference of opinion.¹

§ 1298. Same: Execution Disputable, and Rule Applicable, where the Opponent merely Produces the Instrument, without Claiming under it. Towards the end of the 1700s a doctrine was started that, where the docu-

¹ England: 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 98 (a claim by the opponent under a deed A reciting a deed B exempts from proof of deed B); 1818, Knight v. Martin, Gow 26 (assignor against assignee of a lease; the defendant's possession of the instrument, claiming under it, dispenses with the witness); 1819, Gorton v. Dyson, 1 B. & B. 219, 221 (action against executors; their claim under the will, held to dispense with calling the witnesses); 1821, Orr v. Morice, 3 id. 139; 6 Moore 347 (action for use and occupation against assignees in bankruptcy; the production by the defendants of the assignment, together with their occupation of the premises, held a "claim of beneficial interest," and the witness dispensed with); 1826, Docv. Deakin, 3 C. & P. 402; 1826, Burnett v. Lynch, 8 D. & R. 368, 375, 5 B. & C. 589, 600, 604 (action on the covenants of a lease, by the lessee against the assignee, who had himself assigned to a third person; per Bayley, J., "if a party has taken under a deed all the interest which the deed is calculated to give," he cannot dispute execution); 1826, Doe v. Hemming, 9 D. & R. 15 (lease to a defendant by an ancestor of the plaintiff in ejectment; the plaintiff had obtained possession of the document and refused to produce or show it until the trial; no proof of execution required, because the plaintiffs "intended to derive a benefit from the possession of the lease, and their conduct . . . was such as clearly admitted its validity"); 1831, Bradshaw v. Bennett, 1 Moo. & Rob. 143, 5 C. & P. 48 (action to get back a deposit on a sale rescinded; the rule dispensed with as to the agreement of sale, the defendant being one "taking an interest" under it); 1835, Doe v. Wilkins, 4 A. & E. 86 (ejectment, the defendant claimed under a deed which the plaintiff offered; extrinsic evidence to show this claim held proper, and proof of execution dispensed with); 1835, Carr v. Burdiss, 1 C. M. & R. 782, 784 (trover for goods taken under a fraudulent assignment; the defendants pleaded

the assignment; the plaintiff not required to call the witness to prove it, even though he was impeaching it as fraudulent; "the object which the parties have in calling for its production" is immaterial); 1836, Doe v. Wainwright, 1 Nev. & P. 8, 12 (ejectment, defendant possessing and claiming under a deed offered by the plaintiff; witness dispensable); 1839, Bringloe v. Goodson, 8 Scott 71, 83 (will; calling dispensed "where the will is recited in a deed under the seal of the party and some advantage is taken by him under it"); 1843, Bell v. Chaytor, 1 C. & K. 162 (action on a contract to employ; the defendant's claim that the contract was not broken held to dispense with the witness). Canada: 1851, Chisholm v. Sheldon, 2 Grant U. C. 178 (conveyance produced by an opponent claiming an interest thereunder; no proof of execution necessary); United States: Cal. C. P. 1872, § 1941 (quoted post, § 1300); 1860, Herring v. Rogers, 30 Ga. 615, 617 (production by opponent, and claim under it, sufficient); Ga. Code 1895, § 5243 ("The production of the paper by the opposite party, if he claims any benefit under it, dispenses with the necessity of proof"); 1898, Brown v. Mendonca, 12 Haw. 249, 251 (production by the opponent, claiming "any interest of a substantial and abiding nature," even though not concerning the subject of the suit, suffices); 1821, Lewis v. Ringo, 3 A. K. Marsh. 247; 1857, McGregor v. Wait, 10 Gray 72, 73, 75 (plea of a right of way in an action of trespass; rule not applied to plaintiff's proof of deed under which defendant claimed); 1819, Jackson v. Kingsley, 17 Johns. 158; 1829, Duncan v. Gibbs, 1 Yerg. 256, 259 (plaintiff used a deed to defendant to prove D. incompetent for defendant as warrantor; held that defendant could use the deed though not legally recorded so as to prove execution); 1827, Rhoades v. Selin, 4 Wash. C. C. 715, 719 (admissible without authentication, if the opponent producing is "a party to it or claims a beneficial interest under it").

ment to be proved was in possession of the opponent, and was produced by him on notice, the proponent need not prove its execution, and therefore, of course, need not call the attester.¹ This singular doctrine was placed, in the first ruling, on the ground that the proponent would have been ignorant of the attester's name, and therefore the attester was in effect unavailable (on the principle of § 1314, post). But in later rulings it seems to have been supported rather on a confused notion of its identity with the principle just considered (in § 1297), i. e. the opponent's claim under the document. This latter ground is certainly unsound; for there is an essential difference between the opponent's mere custody of the document and his making claim under it; the former can never in itself be equivalent to a judicial admission of genuineness. The earlier reason is scarcely more tenable. The proponent's ignorance of the names might have been remedied by a bill for discovery, or by a motion for a continuance after learning the names on production; under modern statutes, the names could always be learned by demanding inspection before trial. Moreover, it is difficult to see why, even if the ignorance was irremediable, the proponent should be excused from all proof of execution; he might be excused from calling the attesters, but not from making some other proof of execution; there is a hiatus here, which indicates that this earlier reason was not so much the real one as the later one, above noted. Finally, as a matter of policy, it does not seem fair that an opponent who happens to possess a document should be obliged to have it taken against him as genuine merely because of that chance possession. The doctrine, in short, can only be termed, in the language of Mr. Justice Washington, "a kind of legal legerdemain."

After some fluctuation of rulings the doctrine of R. v. Middlezoy was in England finally repudiated.² It had already obtained some footing in this country;³ but it has also been discontenanced in as many jurisdictions;⁴ though the question has seldom come up for adjudication.

¹ 1787, R. v. Middlezoy, 2 T. R. 41 (pauper settlement; the other parish proving a hiring in M. parish, the latter in rebuttal claimed a prior apprenticeship of the pauper in the former, and gave notice to produce the indenture; but, on its production by the opponent, offered no evidence of execution; held, unnecessary; Buller, J.: "In civil actions . . . the deed when produced [from the opponent's custody] must prima facie be taken to be duly executed, because the plaintiff, knowing who are the subscribing witnesses, cannot come prepared at the trial to prove the execution of the deed; therefore, an instrument coming out of the hands of the opposite party must be taken to be proved"; and two such unreported rulings of Lord Mansfield were cited).

² 1793, Bowles v. Langworthy, 5 T. R. 366 (R. v. Middlezoy approved; trover by assignees in bankruptcy; here the defendant had produced at the commissioners' hearing a bill of sale, claiming under it); 1807, Johnson v. Lewellin, 6 Esp. 101 (Ellenborough, L. C. J., thought that R. v. Middlezoy "appeared to have been decided without due consideration," and declined to follow it); 1807, Gordon v. Secretan, 8 East

548 (Ellenborough, L. C. J., "said that the case of R. v. Middlezoy, which was much questioned at the time, had been since overruled"; the production by the opponent "did not supersede the necessity of proving it by one of the subscribing witnesses, if any, as in ordinary cases"; counsel argued the difficulty of learning the names of the witnesses; but the Court pointed out that this was outweighed by the disadvantage that, "however questionable its execution might be, and even though he [the opponent] had impounded it because it was forged or had been obtained by fraud," yet the mere possession would in that case suffice to authenticate it; but a stay was granted to give an opportunity to call the witnesses); 1809, Wetherston v. Edgington, 2 Camp. 94 (Heath, J.: "The old rule was the sensible one, that an instrument coming from the opposite side was prima facie taken to be duly executed"; but he conceded that the rule had been changed); 1810, Pearce v. Hooper, 3 Taunt. 60 (trespass for entering a close in C.; the defendant called for the deed of C., which would show that the close was not the plaintiff's; attesting witnesses unnecessary); 1821, Orr v. Morrice, 3 B. & B.

Where the opponent refuses to produce, or otherwise suppresses the document, it would seem that his refusal would certainly (on the principle of § 291, ante) be some evidence of the document's genuineness, and might fairly dispense with the rule requiring production of the attester.⁵

(e) "Before using Other Testimony."

§ 1299. Attester preferred to any Third Person, including the Maker of the Document. By the very notion of a rule of preference, the rule for an attester's testimony prefers it in priority over the testimony of any other person present and observing the execution of the document.¹

But is the rule so rigid that even the testimony to execution of the person actually purporting to be the maker of the document (not being a party to the suit) is not to dispense with the calling of the attester? Such was the orthodox acceptance:

1815, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in R. v. Harringworth, 4 M. & S. 350 (pauper-settlement; the pauper's own testimony, not a party to the suit, to his indenture, excluded): "The rule is universal that you must first call the subscribing witness; and it is not to be varied in each particular case by trying whether in its application it may not be productive of some inconvenience."

This extreme result has been maintained in England and in most American jurisdictions.² But there seems no good reason for it. It partakes of the 139, C. P. (the fluctuations in the preceding rulings reviewed; Pearce v. Hooper regarded as taking a middle ground, i. e. possession, plus the claim of a beneficial estate; per Dallas, C. J., and Richardson, J., Gordon v. Secretan held to represent the law, qualified by Pearce v. Hooper; per Burrough, J., R. v. Middlezooy was still law; per Park, J., undecided on that point); 1826, Burnett v. Lynch, 3 D. & R. 368, 375 (lessee against assignee of the lease, who had assigned to D.; admitted, "coming as it did out of the hands of the defendant, or of a person who claimed under him," per Holroyd, J.; "the deed came out of the possession of the party," per Bayley, J.); 1841, Collins v. Bayntun, 1 Q. B. 117 (assumpsit for money had and received; plea, partnership; an alleged agreement of partnership, proved by the defendant, but produced by the plaintiff; the witness held indispensable); Canada: 1844, Joplin v. Johnson, 2 Kerr N. Br. 541 (mere production not sufficient).

³ Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1941 (quoted post, § 1300); 1884, Hobby v. Alford, 73 Ga. 791; 1828, Stevenson v. Dunlap, 7 T. B. Monr. 134, 137, semble; 1815, Betts v. Badger, 12 John. 223 (the practice here "has been in conformity with what Mr. J. Heath calls the old rule," i. e. of R. v. Middlezooy; "if the party producing the instrument is one of the parties to it," this dispenses with proof of execution); 1898, Bernhardt v. Brown, 122 N. C. 587, 29 S. E. 884

(deed and bond produced on order by defendants, presumed genuine).

⁴ 1819, Jackson v. Kingsley, 17 John. 158 (production of an instrument by one who is a party to it and claims a beneficial estate under it, necessary to dispense); 1859, Hill v. Townsend, 24 Tex. 575, 580, semble; 1827, Rhoades v. Selin, 4 Wash. C. C. 715, 719.

⁵ 1818, Cooke v. Tanswell, 8 Taunt. 450 (the opponent refused to produce on notice; "if he wished to throw on the plaintiff the burthen of calling the subscribing witness, he might have produced the deed"); 1838, Poole v. Warren, 3 Nev. & P. 693 (copy of a notice to quit; proof of execution not necessary, following Cooke v. Tanswell). This effect would certainly follow under those statutes in some jurisdictions (ante, § 1295, post, § 1859) by which an opponent may be defaulted for refusal to produce on notice.

² 1856, Tudor v. Tudor, 17 B. Monr. 383, 390 (will not provable by draughtsman); 1823, Labarthe v. Gerbeau, 1 Mart. N. s. 486 (attester preferred even to the testimony of the parish judge certifying it); 1855, Barry v. Ryan, 4 Gray 523 (excluding proof by another person present); Contra: 1895, Garratt v. Hanshue, 53 Oh. 482, 42 N. E. 256 (not referred to the officer taking the acknowledgment of the maker).

² Eng.: 1794, Johnson v. Mason, 1 Esp. 89 (maker of the deed under which the plaintiff held); 1815, R. v. Harringworth, supra; 1853, Whyman v. Garth, 8 Exch. 803 (maker of a pedantic and the obstinately technical to insist on the calling of the attester when the very person whose execution is to be proved is willing to take the responsibility of charging himself on oath with the act of execution. That he may possibly be a partisan of the proponent's is no more reason for excluding him than for excluding any other partisan witness, and is no more likely to be the case with his testimony than with that of the attester :

1858, Roberts, J., in White v. Holliday, 20 Tex. 679, 682: "When are they [the witnesses] needed? Are they needed at all when the parties are both agreed upon the same thing, about the execution and objects of the contract, and have no issue or dispute in relation to it? If it be an essential element in their creation and capacity that they must be produced when the parties are agreed, a party litigant cannot admit his deed by plea or other writing filed in court; [yet] that has never been doubted. . . . By what stronger evidence can it be made to appear that the parties to the deed do agree about its execution (and thereby dispense with the subscribing witnesses) than for the grantee to assert the execution in his petition and to procure the grantor to appear in open court on the trial and as a witness swear to the execution as alleged by the grantee? . . . [After pointing out that fraud, lack of consideration, etc., were not in issue and therefore the testimony of a witness could not be better than that of the disinterested grantor,] . . . This is not an exception under the rule that the subscribing witnesses must be called or accounted for, but a case above the rule and superseding it, and in accordance with that which enjoins that the best evidence must be adduced."

This desirable view has been accepted in a number of jurisdictions.³ It is occasionally put on the ground of the statutory abolition of parties' disqualifications; but this is erroneous, for at common law the maker, though not incompetent by interest, was nevertheless excluded. — If the attesting witness is called, but fails to testify (post, § 1302), the maker's testimony is then receivable.⁴

§ 1300. Attester preferred to Opponent's Extrajudicial Admissions. If the opponent has extrajudicially admitted the execution of the document, need the rule requiring the attester's testimony still apply? The distinction deed); U. S.: Ala.: 1881, Coker v. Ferguson, 70 Ala. 284, 286, 288; 1882, Russell v. Walker, 73 id. 315, 317 (mortgagor for mortgagee); Ga.: 1849, Tyler v. Stephens, 7 Ga. 279 (grantor); 1889, Baker v. Massengale, 83 id. 137, 142, 10 S. E. 347 (maker's testimony, as assignor to plaintiff); 1895, Fletcher v. Perry, 97 id. 368, 23 S. E. 824; Ind.: 1844, Sampson v. Grimes, 7 Blackf. 176; Ky.: 1808, Reading v. Metcalf, Hardin 535 (release to interested witness; releasee's proof of execution not sufficient); 1816, Brashear v. Burton, 4 Bibb 442; 1820, McClain v. Gregg, 2 A. K. Marsh, 454, 456, semble; 1821, McIntire v. Funk, Litt. Sel. C. 425, 427; 1823, Rees v. Lawless, 4 Litt. 218; 1826, McMurtry v. Frank, 4 T. B. Monr. 34; Mass.: 1862, Brigham v. Palmer, 3 All. 450 (mortgagee calling a mortgagor in an action against a third person; excluded); Mo.: 1847, Glasgow v. Ridgeley, 11 Mo. 34, 39.

³ Ala. Code 1897, § 1797 ("The execution of any instrument of writing attested by witnesses may be proved by the testimony of the maker thereof, without producing or accounting for the absence of the attesting witnesses"); 1902, Hayes v. Banks, 132 Ala. 354, 31 So. 464 (statute applied); Ga. Code 1895, § 5244 (attester not required if the maker "testifies to its execution"); 1874, Bowling v. Hax, 55 Mo. 447, 448, semble; 1813, Jackson v. Neely, 10 John. 374, 376 (deed; testimony of the maker sufficient); 1895, Garrett v. Hanshue, 53 Oh. 482, 42 N. E. 256; 1858, White v. Holliday, 20 Tex. 679 (grantor of a deed, not a party, called to stand; witnesses dispensed with); 1878, Wiggins v. Fleishel, 50 Tex. 57, 63 (preceding case approved; but the grantee's testimony held not to dispense with subscribing witnesses); 1879, Texas Land Co. v. Williams, 51 id. 51, 59 (approving the preceding case; but making an exception where the deed is lost; the distinction rests on a misunderstanding of the phrase "secondary evidence").

⁴ 1896, Kelly v. Sharp S. Co., 99 Ga. 393, 397, 27 S. E. 741 (maker's testimony received, where witnesses were called but could not prove execution).

between a judicial or solemn admission and an ordinary or circumstantial admission (ante, §§ 1048, 1057) is here important; the former is an absolute waiver of proof on the whole matter, and relieves the proponent from offering any evidence of execution (ante, § 1296); the latter is simply an inconsistent utterance, offerable as one piece of evidence, going with the other evidence to discredit the opponent's present claim. The proponent is therefore here not relieved from proving execution; but the question is whether, of the various sorts of evidence available to him, he must employ the attester's testimony in preference to the extrajudicial utterances of his opponent. These utterances, it may be observed, if receivable, are equally receivable whether the opponent was (as usually) himself the maker of the document or not; in the former case they are more probative; but they come in, if at all, not because he was the maker, but because he is the opponent in the suit.

Now, so far as concerns their practical trustworthiness, for the purpose of dispensing with the attesting witness, it is to be observed, as already noticed in dealing with the same evidence for proving a document's contents (ante, § 1255), that the real objection to them rests only on the possibility of fabricated testimony to oral admissions. The possibility of error in an opponent's actual admission of the document's execution is very small. If in a writing produced to the Court, such an admission clearly appears to have been made, there is no reason why such evidence should not serve at least to dispense with the evidence of the attesting witness. But where the alleged admission is an oral utterance, and the opponent denies it, and the testimony of some witness has to be believed before we can assume that the admission was really uttered, here it seems less desirable to abandon the ordinary preference for the attesting witness and to replace it by evidence open to such uncertainties. In short, where the supposed admission is contained in a writing produced to the Court, it should suffice to dispense with the attesting witness; but not where it is alleged as a mere oral utterance and is denied by the opponent.

The rulings have been by no means harmonious. No express and final settlement of the point seems to have been reached in England; but apparently a written admission was sufficient to dispense, and there is some authority to the same effect for an oral admission.¹ In the United States the

¹ 1701, Dillon v. Crawly, 12 Mod. 500 (the witness to a deed was subpoenaed but did not appear; an indorsement of the party himself on the deed, acknowledging it, was offered, but objected to; Holt, C. J.: "Can there be better evidence of a deed than to own it and recite it under his hand and seal?"; and all the Court agreed); 1779, Abbot v. Plumbe, 1 Doug. 216 (a bankrupt's extrajudicial oral acknowledgment of a bond, excluded, in an action of trover by the assignees, who wished to prove the petitioning creditor's debt); 1793, Bowles v. Langworthy, 5 T. R. 366 (trover by assignees in bankruptcy against one holding under a sale; to prove the bill of sale, as an act of bankruptcy, the defendant's admissions as to its execution were received; Abbot v.

Plumbe distinguished because the defendant was there no party to the document); 1811, Jones v. Brewer, 4 Taunt. 46 semble (admissions excluded); 1841, Wollaston v. Hakewill, 3 Scott N. R. 593, 617 (a memorial — or recorded copy — of a deed, made by one of the parties, apparently held to dispense); 1845, Lord Gosford v. Robb, 8 Ir. L. R. 217 ("no admission of a party" can dispense; here, certain conduct of a landlord held not to dispense with the proof of a power of attorney to execute the lease); 1845, Fishmongers' Mistery v. Robertson, 1 C. B. 60, 74 (undecided); same case, 6 id. 896, 903 (a subsequent memorandum on a contract, admitting execution, held to dispense); 1856, Houghton v. Koenig, 18 id. 235, 238, semble (the distinction between a written and an oral admission has seldom been taken, and the majority of Courts do not allow extrajudicial admissions to dispense with the rule.²

Distinguish here, however, (1) the exclusion of oral admissions of title, forbidden because in effect violating the Statute of Frauds (ante, § 1257); (2) the case of an attesting witness testifying to the maker's oral acknowledgment of execution on the faith of which the attester signs in attestation;³ here the rule is satisfied by calling the witness, and the maker's acknowledgment is an adoption of his previously-placed signature and is itself equivalent to execution in the attester's presence (ante, § 1292).

acknowledgment by the lessee, in the counterpart, of the holding on the terms of the lease is sufficient authentication of the lease).

² Ala.: 1833, Bennet v. Robinson, 3 Stew. & P. 227, 240 (note; admissions by the maker, defendant's intestate, not sufficient; Hall v. Phelps, N. Y., repudiated; a well-reasoned opinion); 1882, Russell v. Walker, 73 Ala. 317 (admissions excluded); 1885, Coleman v. State, 79 id. 49 (mortgage; oral admissions of mortgagor-defendant, not in justicio, excluded); 1890, Richmond, etc. R. Co. v. Jones, 92 id. 226, 9 So. 276 (admissions excluded); 1893, Hawkins v. Ross, 100 id. 459, 464, 14 So. 278 (same); Cal.: 1863, Hilborn v. Alford, 22 Cal. 482, 484 (note; Hall v. Phelps, N. Y., apparently approved); C. C. P. 1872 § 1942 (where "evidence is given that the party against whom the writing is offered has at any time admitted its execution," it is enough if the writing is more than 30 years old or is "produced from the custody of the adverse party and has been acted upon by him as genuine"; this clause unites in hopeless confusion several distinct principles, and it is not worth while to attempt to disentangle them; the ensuing amendment correctly draws the section); Commissioners' amendment of 1901 (by substituting for the entire sentence the following: "A writing may also be proved by evidence that the party against whom it is offered has at any time admitted its execution, or by evidence that it is produced from his custody and has been acted upon by him as genuine"; for the validity of this amendment, see ante, § 488); Conn.: 1794, Low v. Atwater, 2 Root 72 (admissions excluded); Ga.: 1851, Ellis v. Smith, 10 Ga. 253 (same); 1871, Mills v. May, 42 id. 623 (same); Ida. Rev. St. 1887, § 5995 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1942, omitting the clause for ancient documents); Ky.: 1816, Fearn v. Taylor, 4 Bibb 363, 365 (admissions of predecessor in title; "perhaps" witnesses must be called; here there were none); 1817, Cartmell v. Walton, ib. 488 (oral admission by defendant, excluded); 1828, Stevenson v. Dunlap, 7 T. B. Monr. 134, 137 (admissions of predecessor used on the facts); Mo.: 1826, Smith v. Monnts, 1 Mo. 671 (acknowledgment by maker of deed, excluded); Mont.: C. C. P. 1895, § 3233 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1942); N. H.: 1848, Cram v. Ingalls, 18 N. H. 613, 617 (recognition, in a deed, of an attested mortgage, evidence of its execution); N. Y.: 1807, Hall v. Phelps, 2

John. 451 ("An instrument, though attested by a subscribing witness, may be proved by the confession of the party who gave it"; here a note, by the defendant's extrajudicial admission); 1808, Fox v. Reil, 3 id. 477 (a bond by the defendant; admissions excluded; Kent, C. J., distinguished the ruling in Hall v. Phelps as applying only to a note; "the rules of evidence may be more safely relaxed in the one case than in the other"); 1819, Shaver v. Ehle, 16 id. 201 (note orally admitted genuine by the defendant-maker; excluded, because the admission did not relate specifically to the note offered); 1824, Rowley v. Ball, 3 Cow. 303, 311 (similar admissions held sufficient, because applying to the specific note); 1835, Corbin v. Jackson, 14 Wend. 619, 623, 630 (oral admissions of the execution of an attested power of attorney, held sufficient; Tracy, Sen., diss.); 1844, Hollenback v. Fleming, 6 Hill 303, 305 ("confession or acknowledgment of the party" will not dispense); N. C.: 1881, Jones v. Henry, 84 N. C. 320, 323 ("as a general rule," the admission of an obligor is not sufficient); Oh.: 1827, Zerby v. Wilson, 3 Oh. 42 (contract affecting realty; defendant's admissions not dispensatory); 1877, Warner v. R. Co., 31 Oh. St. 265, 270 (grantor's admissions, held not dispensatory); 1895, Garrett v. Haushue, 53 id. 482, 42 N. E. 256 (same); Or.: C. C. P. 1892, § 761 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1942); Pa.: 1804, Taylor v. Meekly, 4 Yeates 79 (oral and written admissions received, where one witness could not remember and the others seemed fictitious); 1849, Williams v. Floyd, 11 Pa. St. 499 (promissory note; admissions before a justice, sufficient, following Hall v. Phelps, N. Y.); R. I.: 1852, Kinney v. Flynn, 2 R. I. 319, 323 (admissions excluded); U. S.: 1802, Smith v. Carolin, 1 Cr. C. C. 99 (admissions excluded); 1820, Turner v. Johnson, 2 id. 202 (same); 1848, Savage v. D'Wolf, 1 Blatchf. 343 (party's admission of contract not under seal, sufficient, by N. Y. law); Utah Rev. St. 1898, § 3405 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1942, omitting the clause as to ancient writings); Vt.: 1802, Adams v. Brownson, 1 Tyl. 452 (note by deceased partner of defendant; deceased partner's admission allowed to dispense with witness); 1839, Hodges v. Eastman, 12 Vt. 358 (admission of note's execution, receivable in action on promise to pay in consideration of the note).

³ 1794, Powell v. Blackett, 1 Esp. 97.

§ 1301. Attester preferred to Opponent's Testimony on the Stand. When the opponent also becomes witness as well as opponent — i. e. when he is placed upon the stand or makes discovery on interrogatories —, and thus his utterances are not only ordinary admissions but also testimony, the objections against dispensing from the rule disappear entirely. The principal objection (noted ante, § 1300), that his extrajudicial oral admissions may be evidenced by fabricated testimony, is here of no force, for his testimony to the execution is delivered in the very presence of the tribunal. It is an excess of pedantry to insist on the production of the attester when the opponent himself (usually also the maker of the document) can be found testifying, on the stand or in a sworn answer, to the desired fact of execution. Nevertheless, this insistence is found in a number of jurisdictions; ¹ though others properly here dispense with the rule and do not require the calling of the attester.² The latter result has sometimes been reached as a supposed consequence of the statutory abolition of parties' incompetency (though erroneously, for the question could and did come up at common law in regard to an answer obtained by a bill of discovery); the effect thus being, on this supposition, to admit also (for example) the testimony on his own behalf of a grantee-plaintiff to his grantor-defendant's execution.³ But this result, though fair enough, is not maintainable on the same ground as the use of an opponent's testimony, and in truth goes beyond any of the foregoing principles of exemption.

(f) "Must either Produce the Attester as a Witness."

§ 1302. Attester need not Testify Favorably; Witness Denying or not Recollecting. The notion of the rule of preference for the attesting witness is that of the general desirability, in the furtherance of truth, of obtaining his knowledge on the subject (ante, § 1288). What its tenor may be,

¹ 1803, Call v. Dunning, 4 East 53, 5 Esp. 16 (admission in an answer to a bill of discovery); 1836, Ashmore v. Hardy, 7 C. & P. 501, 503 (answer in chancery, admitting execution of a deed from W. to defendant); 1853, Whyman v. Garth, 8 Exch. 803 (the opponent, the maker of the deed, was not allowed to be called; Pollock, C. B.: "If in the course of the proceedings in the cause the party to the deed admits the execution, or if by his pleadings he does not require the execution to be proved, he may be very reasonably said to have waived the [implied] agreement [to call the subscribing witness]"; but not otherwise); 1884, Askew v. Steiner, 76 Ala. 218, 221 (testimony of plaintiff-grantee under mortgage, not sufficient to exempt from production); 1890, Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Jones, 92 id. 218, 226, 9 So. 276 (even questioning the party and maker on the stand, insufficient); 1895, Winter v. Judkins, 106 id. 259, 17 So. 627; 1851, Ellis v. Smith, 10 Ga. 253 (sworn answer, insufficient); 1878, Davis v. Alston, 61 id. 225, 227 (admissions on the stand, insufficient); 1826, Roberts v. Tennell, 3 T. B. Monr.

247, 250 (answer in chancery, insufficient); 1862, Brigham v. Palmer, 3 All. 450, semble (insufficient notwithstanding the abolition of parties' disqualifications); 1874, Henly v. Hemming, 7 Baxt. 524, 526 (rule applies even since abolition of parties' disqualification).

² 1876, Doe v. Nevers, 16 N. Br. 614 (Whyman v. Garth, held not law for a deed executed since Consol. St. c. 46, § 23, quoted ante, § 1290); Ala. Code 1897, § 1797 (quoted ante, § 1299); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1942, as amended in 1901 (quoted ante, § 1300); Ga. Code 1895, § 5244 (quoted ante, § 1299); 1885, Rayburn v. Lumber Co., 57 Mich. 273, 274, 23 N. W. 811 (proof by calling the opponent, allowed without requiring the attester); 1858, White v. Holladay, 20 Tex. 679, semble (quoted ante, § 1299).

³ 1874, Bowling v. Hax, 55 Mo. 447, 448 (since parties are made competent, the witness need not be called; here, a plaintiff suing on a contract, executed by plaintiff and defendant, was allowed to prove it). Contra: 1879, Wiggins v. Fleishel, 50 Tex. 57, 63, semble (cited ante, § 1299).

remains to be seen; the object of the law is to obtain his knowledge, irrespective of the side in whose favor it may bear. Accordingly, it is not necessary, as a part of the rule, that he should testify in favor of execution. The rule is satisfied by calling him, i. e. by making his testimony available for the trial. If his testimony fails to evidence the execution, the present rule says nothing about the consequences, — whatever any other rule may say. The present rule's force is absolutely spent when the witness is produced for examination. Here also policy agrees with principle; for the practical working of the rule, if it required that the witness should not only testify but testify favorably (i. e. if the party desiring to prove execution must fail if the attesters failed to prove it) would be unfair and disastrous, especially in testamentary causes:

1839, Tucker, P., in Clarke v. Dunnivant, 10 Leigh 13, 33: "It never could have been the design of the statute to vacate a will which was duly executed, whenever the witnesses to it have forgotten any material circumstances attending the attestation. They are indeed always called upon to prove the will, not because the statute requires that they shall prove a compliance with all the requisites of the law, but because they would be most likely to prove or disprove them, and because upon principles of common law the attesting witness to every instrument must be produced if living and within the power of the Court."

1862, Denio, J., in Tarrant v. Ware, 25 N. Y. 425, 426: "Prior to any adjudication upon the subject, it might have been argued with some plausibility that the nature and objects of the provisions declaring a certain number of subscribing witnesses necessary to a valid will required that the number specified should unite in testifying to an execution and attestation of the instrument in the manner required by the act; or at least that the will could not be established if a part or all of them should deny the existence of the facts requisite to show a proper execution. The witnesses were supposed to be persons selected by the testator to bear witness that he had actually executed the paper with a knowledge of its contents and in the form prescribed by law and that he was of suitable age and capacity and not under restraint; if the persons thus selected could not or would not affirm the existence of these facts, the intention of the law (it might be said) would not be answered; . . . [and] if the testimony of the chosen witnesses, when unfavorable to the will, could be disregarded, a will may be set up and established by testimony not authorized by the statute and which the Legislature had not considered perfectly safe in ordinary cases. But, on the other hand, it was soon seen that the attesting witnesses might forget the facts to which they had once attested, and that it was not impossible that they might be tampered with by interested parties and thus be induced to deny on oath the facts which they had been selected to witness and to depose to. This view prevailed with the Courts. . . . Whether their [the witnesses'] denial of what they had attested proceeds from perjury or want of recollection, the testament may in either case be supported."

1895, Lumpkin, J., in Gillis v. Gillis, 96 Ga. 1, 15, 23 S. E. 107: "[The attesting witnesses are,] unless accounted for, indispensably necessary witnesses; but the testimony, even as to the factum of the execution, is not confined to them. The fact to be established is the proper execution of the will. If that is proved by competent testimony, it is sufficient, no matter from what quarter the testimony comes, provided the attesting witnesses are among those who bear testimony, or their absence is explained. The inquiry, as in other cases, is whether, taking all the testimony together, the fact is duly established. It is not required that any one or more of the essential facts should be proved by all, or any number, of the attesting witnesses. The right is simply to have the attesting witnesses examined, no matter what their testimony may be."

Accordingly, the failure of the attester, from lack of memory, to prove execution, is not in itself any breach of the present rule; and though the proponent has still to prove the execution in some sufficient way, he is no longer hampered by any rule about attesting witnesses.¹

For the same reason, the attester's positive denial of the facts of execution, contradicting the statements implied or expressed in his attestation, leaves the proponent still free to prove by other testimony, if he can, the facts of due execution; a permission demanded not only by principle but also by policy, inasmuch as the proponent would otherwise be defeated of his rights by a corrupt attester.²

¹ Besides the following cases, the statutes and cases in the next note are also authorities to the same effect: England: 1728, Dormer v. Thurland, 2 P. Wms. 506, 510 (obscure); 1844, Burgoyne v. Showler, 1 Roberts. Ecl. 5, 10 (even if they forget, the execution is assumed); 1848, Leach's Goods, 12 Jur. 381; United States: 1843, Lazarus v. Lewis, 5 Ala. 457, 459; 1861, Hall v. Hall, 38 id. 131, 133; 1895, Barnewall v. Murrell, 108 id. 366, 18 So. 831; 1857, Reinhart v. Miller, 22 Ga. 402, 416; 1895, Gillis v. Gillis, 96 id. 1, 14, 23 S. E. 107; 1896, Kelly v. Sharp S. Co., 99 id. 393, 398, 27 S. E. 741; 1898, Buchanan v. Grocery Co., 105 id. 393, 31 S. E. 105; 1902, Webster v. Yorty, 194 Ill. 408, 62 N. E. 907; 1832, Griffith v. Huston, 7 J. J. Marsh. 385, 387; 1840, Quinby v. Buzzell, 4 Shepl. 470, 473; 1829, Russell v. Coffin, 8 Pick. 143, 150; 1840, Dewey v. Dewey, 1 Metc. 349, 353 (if recollection were required, "the validity of a will would depend not upon the fact whether it was duly executed, but whether the testator had been fortunate in securing witnesses of retentive memories"); 1879, Abbott v. Abbott, 41 Mich. 540, 542, 2 N. E. 810; 1890, Mays v. Mays, 114 Mo. 536, 540, 21 S. W. 921 (failure to testify to sanity); 1896, Morton v. Heidorn, 135 id. 603, 37 S. W. 504; 1823, Marshall v. Gougler, 10 S. & R. 164, 167; 1832, Miller's Estate, 3 Rawle 312, 318 ("The law is not so unreasonable as to declare that the grantee must lose his right wherever they have lost their memory"; here, of a will); 1855, Welch v. Welch, 9 Rich. 133, 136 (that one subscribing witness cannot recollect the facts, immaterial, if otherwise proved; here, by the other subscribers); 1897, Gable v. Rauch, 50 S. C. 95, 27 S. E. 555 (where two of three witnesses admitted their signatures, but could not recollect the circumstances); 1839, Clarke v. Dunnivant, 10 Leigh 13, 22 (quoted supra).

² England: 1683, Hudson's Case, Skinn. 79 (two of the three swore that he was incapable and his hand was guided; but others proved the will); 1694, Dayrell v. Glascock, ib. 413; Austin v. Willes, Buller N. P. 264 ("notwithstanding the three witnesses all swore to its not being duly executed, the devisee obtained a verdict"); Pike v. Bradbury, ib. 264 ("the first and second witnesses denying their hands, it was objected he should go no farther; for it was argued that, though, if you call one witness who proves against you, you may call another, yet if he prove against you too, you can go no farther;

but the Chief Justice admitted him to call other witnesses to prove the will, and he obtained a verdict"); 1729, Rice v. Oatfield, 2 Stra. 1096 (the preceding case, cited in argument, was apparently approved); 1762, Lowe v. Jolliffe, 1 W. Bl. 365 (besides the attesting witnesses themselves, "a dozen servants of the testator all unanimously swore him to be utterly incapable of making a will," etc.); 1779, Mansfield, L. C. J., in Abbot v. Plumble, 1 Doug. 216 ("It was formerly doubted whether if the subscribing witness denies the deed, you can call other witnesses to prove it," but no longer); 1790, Ley v. Ballard, 3 Esp. 173, note (neither of the attesters had seen the execution; Kenyon, L. C. J.: "If they disavow having seen it executed, other persons who saw it executed, or can prove the party's handwriting, may be called"; so, too, even if they "prove contrary to what their attestation purport, namely, that the party did not execute it"); 1798, Kenyon, L. C. J., in Jordaine v. Lushbrook, 7 T. R. 599, 604 (approves Lowe v. Jolliffe); 1815, R. v. Harringworth, 4 M. & S. 350 (Ellenborough, L. C. J.: "His testimony is indeed not conclusive, for . . . the party may go on to prove him such [untrustworthy] and may call other witnesses to prove the execution"); 1815, Bottle v. Blundell, 19 Ves. Jr. 494, 501, 507 (Eldon, L. C.: "If they had all denied their attestation, but it could be proved by circumstances that they unjustly denied it, the will might be proved to be a good will by other circumstances"). United States: 1895, Barnewall v. Murrell, 108 Ala. 366, 18 So. 831; 1853, Rogers v. Diamond, 13 Ark. 474, 483; Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1941 ("If the subscribing witness denies or does not recollect the execution of the writing, its execution may still be proved by other evidence"); 1858, Rash v. Purnel, 2 Harringt. 448, 454; 1848, Talley v. Moore, 5 id. 57; 1857, Reinhart v. Miller, 22 Ga. 402, 416; 1895, Gillis v. Gillis, 96 id. 1, 14, 23 S. E. 107 (execution may be otherwise proved, no matter how the attesting witness testifies; see quotation, supra); Ida. Rev. St. 1887, § 5994; Ia. Code 1897, § 4619; 1827, Booker v. Bowles, 1 Blackf. 90; 1854, Barry v. Hoffman, 6 Md. 78, 87; 1834, Whitaker v. Salisbury, 15 Pick. 534, 544; 1873, Martin v. Perkins, 56 Miss. 204, 209 (their testimony as to incapacity does not conclude the propounder of a will); Mont. C. C. P. 1895, § 3232; Nebr. Comp. St. 1899, § 5917; 1830, Jackson v.

§ 1303. Same: Discriminations (Refreshing Recollection; Implied Attestation Clause; Impeaching One's Own Witness, or One's Own Attestation; Illinois Rule admitting only Attesting Witnesses in Probate). (1) May not the attester, though not actually recollecting the circumstances, adopt his signature as a record of past recollection, and base his testimony on the faith of his signature, which he would not have put there had he not witnessed the execution? That he may, is clear by the principle of Recollection (ante, § 737), under which this mode of testifying has already been considered.

(2) If the witness' testimony on the stand wholly fails through lack of recollection, may not his signature and attestation, on being proved by himself or some one else, suffice as an implied testimony to the facts of due execution? To use the attestation in this way is to use a hearsay (i. e. extrajudicial) statement, but for this case a well-recognized exception to the Hearsay rule exists. Moreover, the question arises how far this implied statement can be regarded as covering all the facts essential to due execution; both these questions, involving the existence and scope of a Hearsay exception, are better considered under that head (post, §§ 1510–1512). Whether the failure of recollection excuses from calling the witness is a different question (post, § 1315).

(3) If the attester, when called by the proponent, denies the facts of execution, in contradiction to his attestation, is it not a violation of the rule against impeaching one's own witness to allow the proponent to go on to prove due execution in spite of the attester's testimony? It is not, in truth; but even if it were a case coming under the rule, it would be excused by the exception for a necessary or compulsory witness (ante, § 917).

(4) If the supposed attester denies the genuineness of his signature, then, if this denial be taken as true, he is no attesting witness, and, the document thus not being attested, it is not necessary to call him as such (on the principle of § 1292, ante); the proponent may therefore take this as true and go on to prove execution by other testimony.¹ However, if the document is one

Christman, 4 Wend. 278, 282; 1861, Orser v. Orser, 24 N. Y. 51, 52; 1862, Tarrant v. Ware, 25 id. 425, note (quoted, supra); 1862, Auburn Seminary v. Calhoun, ib. 422, 425; 1832, Crowell v. Kirk, 3 Dev. 356, 358, per Ruffin, J.; Or. C. C. P. 1892, § 761; 1817, Pearson v. Wightman, 1 Mill Const. 336, 340 ("It would be a terrible consequence if such testimony were not admissible; for how often and how easily might witnesses be tampered with to deny their own attestation?"); 1850, Jones v. Arterburn, 11 Humph. 97, 99 (attesting witness denying signature; signature may be proved); 1860, Rose v. Allen, 1 Coldw. 23, 27 (even if all deny due execution, the fact may be otherwise proved); 1869, Alexander v. White, 7 id. 126, 128 (same); 1891, Simmons v. Leonard, 91 Tenn. 183, 190, 18 S. W. 280 (fact of attestation denied); Tex. C. Cr. P. 1895, § 793; Utah Rev. St. 1898, § 3404; 1846, Pollock v. Glassell, 2

Gratt. 439, 461; 1877, Lamberts v. Cooper, 29 Gratt. 61, 67 (sanity; witness who contradicts his attestation is to be viewed with suspicion); 1878, Cheatham v. Hatcher, 30 id. 56, 64; 1881, Webb v. Dye, 18 W. Va. 376, 380; 1878, Jenkins' Will, 43 Wis. 610.

In particular, the attester therefore need not testify to a testator's sanity; 1902, Re Wells, 96 Me. 161, 51 Atl. 868.

¹ 1792, Grellier v. Neale, Peake 146 (Kenyon, L. C. J.: "The subscribing witness not having seen the deed executed, it is the same as if there was no witness at all; and in that case the handwriting may be proved by another witness"); 1805, Burrows v. Lock, 10 Ves. Jr. 470, 474 ("If he denies that [i. e. execution in his presence], other evidence is admissible from circumstances, as where there were no attesting witnesses"); 1811, Fitzgerald v. Elsee, 2 Camp. 635 (indenture of apprenticeship; the witness

required by law to be attested as a condition of validity, then it is of no use to the proponent to take the attester's denial as true, for, if he does, the document is invalid for lack of attestation; and he must therefore (and may, under the principle of § 1302) go on if possible to prove the signature's genuineness by other testimony.²

(5) That the attester, if he admits his signature, may not testify to the falsity of his own attesting statements (for example, by denying the identity of the maker) was a notion at one time much urged, in virtue of the supposed rule nemo allegans turpitudinem suam audiendus est; but this doctrine never received final sanction (ante, § 528).

(6) In Illinois, by an odd statutory rule of early local origin, on an appeal to a Superior Court from a refusal to grant probate of a will, any other testimony to execution may be produced, but on an appeal from a grant of probate, only the attesters' testimony will be received.³

§ 1304. Number of Attesters required to be Called. The object of placing more than one attestation upon a document, whether at the parties' voluntary instance or by requirement of law, is ordinarily not to demand the combined testimony of all at the trial, but merely to provide by way of caution a number of witnesses, so that the contingencies of death, removal of residence, and the like, may be guarded against and one witness at least may be expected to be available. If a statute expressly required the document to be "proved" by a specified number (post, § 2048), the case would clearly be different. But a main object in statutes requiring attestation as an element of validity is to surround the act of execution with certain safeguards; the object of securing evidence for litigation is a secondary one. So far, therefore, as such an object exists, it can hardly be implied to have in view anything beyond what is above noted, i. e. a precautionary supply of persons from whom a testifier is likely to remain available in spite of the accidents that might have totally destroyed the supply if there had been but one person provided in advance. No doubt such statutes often negative the above view by expressly providing not only that a certain number shall attest, but also that all of the required number shall be called to testify. But, in the absence had not seen the execution; handwriting allowed; Lawrence, J.: "It is to be treated as if there were no attesting witness"); 1810, Lemon v. Dean, ih. 636 note, LeBlanc, J. (note; same ruling); 1812, M'Craw v. Gentry, 3 id. 232 (the witnesses had seen the defendant acknowledge, but not sign the note; held, that it was as if there were no attesting witness; and thus the defendant's acknowledgment sufficed).

² 1808, Phipps v. Parker, 1 Camp. 412 (the witness had not seen the execution; Ellenborough, L. C. J.: "If it was not executed in his presence, the conclusion of law is that it [a policy] was never executed as a deed, although it may have been signed by these two directors. . . . Now appearing certainly not to have been executed in the presence of the witness, I think it must be considered as invalid"; distinguishing Lowe v. Jolliffe, where the truth of the attesters was denied, and the requirements of attestation might have been in reality fulfilled).

³ 1840, Walker v. Walker, 3 Ill. 291; 1860, Duncan v. Duncan, 23 id. 365; 1867, Andrews v. Black, 43 id. 256 (explaining the principle fully); 1875, Crowley v. Crowley, 80 id. 469; 1895, Hobart v. Hobart, 154 id. 610, 615, 39 N. E. 581 (the rule excluding other testimony on appeal from grant of probate does not apply to other testimony to testator's signature where an attesting witness is dead); 1898, Thompson v. Owen, 174 id. 229, 51 N. E. 1046; 1901, Illinois Masonic Orphans' Home v. Gracy, 190 id. 95, 60 N. E. 194; 1902, Webster v. Yorty, 194 id. 408, 62 N. E. 907; 1902, Re Tobin, 196 id. 484, 63 N. E. 1021; 1902, Kohley's Estate, 200 id. 189, 65 N. E. 699. The relevant statutory clauses are printed in part post, § 1304.

of express statements, such a requirement is not properly to be implied; and it was not implied in common-law practice:

1765, Lord Camden in Doe v. Hindson, 1 Day 41, 51:¹ "The Legislature set up these witnesses as a guard, to protect the testator from fraud in that critical minute when he was about to execute his will. . . . There is a great difference between the method of proving a fact in a Court of justice and the attestation of that fact at the time it happens. . . . The new thing introduced by this statute [of Frauds] is the attestation; the method of proving this attestation stands as it did upon the old common-law principles. Thus, for instance, one witness is sufficient to prove what all three have attested; and, though that witness must be a subscriber, yet that is owing to the general common-law rule that, where a witness has subscribed an instrument, he must be always produced, because it is the best evidence. This we see in common experience; for after the first witness has been examined, the will is always read. . . . This [above distinction], I am afraid, has not always been attended to; but some persons have been apt to reason upon this point as if the statute had directed the will to be proved by three credible witnesses; forgetting the difference between the subscription and the proof of that subscription."

1834, Tindal, C. J., in Wright v. Tatham, 1 A. & E. 3, 23: "It may be observed, however, that the Statute of Frauds did not look primarily to the mode of proving the will when contested, but to the security of the testator at the time of the execution of the will;² the statute intending that three witnesses should be in the nature of guards or securities, to protect him in the execution of his will against force or fraud or undue influence. The proof of the will by the three witnesses, supposing it should afterwards come in contest, is only an incidental and secondary benefit, derived from that mode of attestation. . . . It is well settled that in an action at law it is sufficient to call one only of the subscribing witnesses, if he can speak to the observance of all that is required by the statute."

This was the view of the common law. For attested documents in general, the rule has always been that but one attester need be called.³

For wills, the rule was clearly the same in England in the common-law Courts.⁴ But in Chancery (while the precedents were not harmonious) the practice seems to have been to call all the required number of attestors,—at least unless the Chancellor's discretion was exercised to the contrary.⁵

¹ Reprinted s. v. Hinds v. Kersey, Burn's Ecclesiastical Law, IV, 118.

² So also, Temp. G. II, Allen v. Hill, Gilbert 257, 261.

³ 1733, Holdfast v. Dowling, 2 Str. 1254; 1843, Thomas v. Wallace, 5 Ala. 268, 275; 1898, Sowell v. Bank, 119 id. 92, 24 So. 585; 1888, O'Sullivan v. Overton, 56 Conn. 102, 105, 14 Atl. 300; 1896, Cooper v. O'Brien, 98 Ga. 773, 26 S. E. 470; 1815, Allen v. Trimble, 4 Bibb 21; 1800, Collins v. Elliott, 1 H. & J. 1; 1829, Russell v. Coffin, 8 Pick. 143, 150 ("unless there is some reason to believe or suspect that the instrument has been forged"); 1851, Gelott v. Goodspeed, 8 Cush. 411 ("in ordinary cases, where the mere formal execution" is involved); 1851, White v. Wood, ib. 413 (although the other witness was in court); 1860, Melcher v. Flanders, 40 N. H. 139, 157; 1809, Shepherd v. Goss, 1 Overt. 487; 1855, Harrell v. Ward, 2 Sneed 610, 612; 1849, Jesse v. Parker, 6 Gratt. 57, 61, 64.

⁴ Ante, 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 103 (one suffices, "unless they show such characters of fraud as would make it necessary to produce the rest"); 1763, Buller Nisi Prius, 264 ("The devisee need produce only one [witness], if that one prove all the requisites," the opponent being at liberty to call the others); 1816, Eldon, L. C., in Bullen v. Michel, 4 Dow 297, 331 (at common law "they usually call only one witness [to a will], . . . leaving it to the other side, if they think proper, to call the other witnesses"); 1834, Wright v. Tatham, 1 A. & E. 3, 22 (see quotation supra). Contra: 1748, Townsend v. Ives, 1 Wils. 216 ("It is a rule that all the witnesses, if living, must be examined to prove the will").

⁵ 1748, Ogle v. Cook, 1 Ves. Sr. 177 (all required, by Hardwicke, L. C.); 1752, Grayson v. Atkinson, 2 id. 454, 460 (all to be accounted for; here two testified, and the third was beyond seas; but here the fact of the execution in his presence was not otherwise proved; the plaintiff conceded that all must be called if available, but claimed that "it was formerly

In the United States,⁶ several forms of the rule find representation. The rule in perhaps most jurisdictions is to call but one attester, for probate in not required to have all the three witnesses examined; it was first established by Lord Talbot in this Court"; 1760, Binfield v. Lambert, 1 Dick. 337 (Clarke, M. R., said "that the will could not be said to be strictly proved agreeably to the statute; but his conscience being satisfied," he would not require all, but would execute the trusts of the will; here the third witness could not be found); 1780, Bird v. Butler, ib. 337, n. (same facts, though the search not so thorough; trusts carried out, but the will not declared proved); 1789, Powel v. Cleaver, 2 Bro. C. C. 499, 504 (in practice, but not by absolute rule, all are to be called); 1793, Fitzherbert v. Fitzherbert, 4 id. 231; 1800, Carrington v. Payne, 5 Ves. Jr. 404, 411, semble (all required); 1815, Bootle v. Blundell, 19 id. 494, 500, 505, 509 (Eldon, L. C.: "The rule of this Court requiring that to establish a will of real estate all the three witnesses shall be examined is not by any means, as it has been represented, a technical rule"; for after ordering an issue at law the testimony there may be reviewed, and before granting the devisee an issue at law, the witnesses may be examined; the general rule admitting necessary exceptions, and perhaps not applying where the will is not wholly, but only partially in question); 1829, Winchelsea v. Wauchope, 3 Russ. 441, 453, semble (all are not invariably required); 1831, Tatham v. Wright, 2 Russ. & Myl. 1, 8, 16 (the Court of Chancery may inform its conscience as it thinks best and may send an issue back to be tried by calling all the attesting witnesses; yet Brougham, L. C., at p. 30, speaks of "the rule which makes it imperative to call all the witnesses to a will," but regards it as applying only to a devisee who moves to establish a will, and not where an heir moves to set one aside).

Canada: P. E. I. St. 1873, c. 21, § 24 (quoted post, § 1310).

Ala.: Code 1897, § 4276 ("must be proved by one or more"); 1845, Bowling v. Bowling, 8 Ala. 538 (where probate is contested, all must be produced; where not contested, one "might be sufficient"; no statute at this time); Ariz.: Rev. St. 1887, §§ 978, 983 (in uncontested probate, the Court "may admit" on the testimony of one witness; if contested, "all the subscribing witnesses" available must be produced); Ark.: Stats. 1894, § 7416 (wills; all required by implication; quoted post, § 1320); 1843, Campbell v. Garven, 5 Ark. 435, 491, semble (both necessary); 1876, Janes v. Williams, 31 id. 175, 180 (statute applied; proof by calling one witness only, insufficient); Cal.: C. C. P. 1872, §§ 1308, 1315 (in uncontested wills, by one subscribing witness only, if he testifies to the execution "in all particulars as required by law, and that the testator was of sound mind at the time of its execution"; in contested wills, by all); Commissioners' amendment of 1901 (quoted post, § 1310); Colo.: Annot. Stats. 1891, § 4669 ("It shall be the duty of each and every witness to any will" to appear and testify); § 4670 (the will is to be allowed if "it shall satisfactorily appear by the testimony of two or more of the subscribing witnesses" that it was duly executed); Conn.: 1869, Field's Appeal, 36 Conn. 277 (one suffices for a will); Del.: 1838, Rash v. Purmel, 2 Harringt. 448 (all must be called, on an issue out of Chancery to establish a will, because the judgment is final; otherwise, in trying a will at common law in ejectment, where the heir, if defeated, may again bring ejectment); D. C.: Comp. St. 1894, c. 70, § 26 (wills of personality; if uncontested, "it shall not be necessary to examine all the witnesses, unless they voluntarily attend"; but proponent must make oath to mode of obtaining will and to non-knowledge of any other will); Code 1901, §§ 131, 132 (quoted post, § 1310); Fla.: Rev. St. 1892, § 1805 (at a probate contest, "such witnesses as the parties may produce shall be examined"); Ga.: Code 1895, § 3281 (one suffices, for probate in common form; all are necessary, in solemn form); 1855, Walker v. Hunter, 17 Ga. 364, 390, 407 (not clear); 1874, Evans v. Arnold, 52 Ga. 169, 179 (all required); Ida.: Rev. St. 1887, § 5311 (wills; like Cal. C. C. P. § 1315, but "all" is misprinted as "and"); § 5306 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1308); Ill.: Rev. St. 1874, c. 143, § 2 (a will is to be signed by two or more credible witnesses, "two of whom, declaring on oath or affirmation, before the county court . . . shall be sufficient proof of the execution"); § 3 ("It shall be the duty of each and every witness to any will . . . executed in this State, as aforesaid, to be and appear before the county court on the regular day for the probate . . . , to testify of and concerning the execution and validity of the same"); § 5 (if the county judge is an attester, he shall make oath in circuit court, and then "if there are other witnesses to said will, the county Court shall take their evidence . . . as in other cases"); § 13 (in case of refusal of probate by a county court, the proponent may support it in the circuit court "by any evidence competent to establish a will in chancery"); 1851, Rigg v. Wilton, 13 Ill. 15, 19 (at the trial of a will-issue out of chancery, the attesting-witness need not be called, because his probate deposition is usable; (see post, § 1305); but, semble, at the probating both must be called); 1886, Re Page, 113, id. 576, 578, 8 N. E. 352 (one suffices to "establish" a will); 1897, Harp v. Parr, 168 id. 459, 48 N. E. 113, semble (same); 1898, Slinghoff v. Bruner, 174 id. 561, 51 N. E. 772 (same); 1902, Kohley's Estate, 200 id. 189, 65 N. E. 699 (the two must be produced); Ind.: Rev. St. 1897, § 2805 (a will "shall be proven by one or more of the attesting witnesses"); 1871, Hayes v. West, 37 Ind. 21, 26 (one suffices); Kan.: Gen. St. 1897, c. 110, § 12 ("The Court shall cause the witnesses to the will" to come and testify); Ky.: 1819, Lindsay v. McCormack, 2 A. K. Marsh. 229 (one suffices; the later rulings are the same); 1820, Harper v. Wilson, ib. 465; 1821, Overall v. Overall, Litt. Sel. C. 501, 503;

common form, and to call all the required number, for probate in solemn form. But statutes loosely drawn have introduced some confusion. How-1822, Turner v. Turner, 1 Litt. 101, 103; 1823, Elmendorf v. Carmichael, 3 id. 473, 479; 1829, Hall v. Sims, 2 J. J. M. 509, 511; 1833, Carrico v. Neal, 1 Dana 162 (if "direct, positive, and explicit"); 1840, Swift v. Wiley, 1 B. Monr. 114, 116; 1850, Cornelison v. Browning, 10 id. 425, 427; La.: C. Pr. 1894, § 933 (a will is to be proved "by the number of witnesses required for that purpose by law"); Me.: Pub. St. 1883, c. 64, §§ 5, 7 (when there is no objection, a will may be probated on the testimony of "any one or more" of the witnesses; where the original cannot be obtained, execution may be proved by the subscribing witnesses or by "any other evidence competent"); Mt.: Pub. Gen. L. 1888, Art. 93, §§ 331, 334 (all are to be examined, for wills of realty; but not for uncontested wills of personalty); St. 1890, c. 416, St. 1892, c. 81 (quoted post, § 1310); Mass.: 1815, Sears v. Dillingham, 12 Mass. 353, 362 (all are required); 1820, Brown v. Wool, 17 id. 68, 73 (same); Miss. St. 1901, c. 242, Rev. L. 1902, c. 136, § 2 (for uncontested wills, probate may be granted upon the testimony of one witness only, by affidavit); Mich.: Comp. L. 1897, § 9279 (in uncontested probate "the Court may in its discretion" act upon "the testimony of one of the subscribing witnesses only"); 1879, Abbott v. Abbott, 41 Mich. 540, 543, 2 N. W. 810 ("Our statute does not in terms require all the subscribing witnesses to be sworn on a contest, except inferentially in the Probate Court. This requirement, if it exists, is only implied"); 1879, Fraser v. Jennison, 42 id. 203, 223, 3 N. W. 882 (question not decided); Minn.: Gen. St. 1834, § 4436 (for uncontested wills the "testimony of one of the subscribing witnesses only" suffices in the Court's discretion); Miss.: Annot. Code 1892, § 1816 (a will must be proved "by at least one of the subscribing witnesses"); 1848, Evans v. Evans, 10 Sm. & M. 402, 403 (all required); 1850, Kirk v. State, 13 id. 406 (for personalty, only one is required to attest; hence, only one need be called); 1850, Ragland v. Green, 14 id. 194, 199 (land; all must be called); 1853, Crusoe v. Butler, 36 id. 150, 169 (land; only one need be called; preceding cases not cited); Mo.: Rev. St. 1899, §§ 4619, 4620 (all are required by implication to be called); 1834, Graham v. O'Fallon, 3 Mo. 507, 510 (one suffices); Mont.: C. C. P. 1895, §§ 2330, 2343 (like Cal. C. C. P., §§ 1308, 1315); Nebr.: Comp. St. 1899, § 2655 (if not contested, the Court "may in its discretion grant probate thereof on the testimony of one of the subscribing witnesses only"); Nev.: Gen. St. 1885, § 2685 (in uncontested wills, the Court may admit on the "testimony of one of the subscribing witnesses only"); § 2687 (if contested, "all of the subscribing witnesses," if available, must be examined); St. 1897, c. 106, §§ 17, 19 (reproduces the foregoing sections); N. H.: Pub. St. 1891, c. 187, § 6 (a non-contested will may be probated on the testimony of one witness, "though the others are living and within process of the Court"); N. J.: 1806, Den v. Allen, 2 N. J. L. [24] 32 (not clear); 1902, Ward v. Wilcox, 64 N. J. Eq. 303, 51 Atl. 1094 (even for contested wills, one witness may suffice); N. M.: Comp. L. 1897, § 1982 (the judge shall "examine the attesting witnesses to the will"); N. Y.: C. C. P. 1877, § 2618 (two witnesses required, i. e. all required by law to attest; but the contestant may require the examination of all); 1822, Jackson v. Legrance, 19 John. 386 (one of the witnesses is enough, "if he can prove the execution"; "but if the witness cannot prove these requisites, the other witnesses ought to be called"); 1825, Dan v. Brown, 4 Cow. 483, 489 (one witness held sufficient; though here one of the other two names was not known); 1825, Jackson v. Luquere, 5 id. 221, 225 (one witness sufficient); 1828, Jackson v. Vickory, 1 Wend. 406, 412 (one is sufficient, "if he can prove its perfect execution," otherwise the others must be called); 1859, Hunt v. Johnson, 19 N. Y. 279, 293 (one suffices, if he can prove the necessary facts); 1862, Tarrant v. Ware, 25 id. 425, note (all required); 1862, Auburn Seminary v. Calhoun, ib. 422, 425 (same); 1867, Cornell v. Woolley, 42 id. (Keyes) 378, 379 (one suffices); N. C.: Code 1883, § 2143 (two, i. e. all required to attest, must be called); Oh.: Rev. St. 1898, § 5926 (Court is to cause "the witnesses to such will" to be examined); N. D.: Rev. C. 1895, § 6295 (uncontested will; the Court "may in its discretion grant probate . . . on the testimony of one only of the subscribing witnesses"); § 6296 (contested will; "all the subscribing witnesses" are required); Okla.: Stats. 1893, § 1189 (probate of uncontested will may be granted on testimony "of one of the subscribing witnesses only"); § 1193 (if a will is contested, "all the subscribing witnesses," if available, must be produced and examined); Or.: C. C. P. 1892, § 761 (one is sufficient); S. C.: St. 1839, Gen. St. 1882, c. 61, §§ 1870, 1871, Rev. St. 1893, §§ 2003, 2004, Code 1902, §§ 2491, 2492 (for probate in common form, one witness is sufficient; in solemn form, all are required); 1798, Hopkins v. DeGraffenreid, 2 Bay 187, 192 (one suffices "though if they are all alive it is best to produce them"); 1803, Hopkins v. Albertson, 1 Brev. 240, 2 Bay 484 (one suffices); 1818, Howell v. House, 2 Mill Const. 80, 82 (one suffices); S. D.: Stats. 1899, § 6599 (uncontested will; Court may admit to probate on testimony of one only); § 6903 (contested will; all must be "produced and examined"); Tenn.: St. 1789, c. 23, § 1, Code 1896, § 3904 ("Written wills with witnesses thereto, when not contested, shall be proved by at least one of the subscribing witnesses, if living; and every last will and testament, written or nuncupative, when contested, shall be proved by all the living witnesses, if to be found, and by such other persons as may be produced to support it"); 1812, Allen v. Allen, 2 Overt. 172 (under St. 1784 and 1789, the production of one witness suffices, where the ever, even where the entire number of those required to attest must be called, no more need be called, even though still others have in fact attested.⁷

From the above requirements of the present rule, the following doctrines must be distinguished: (1) By the substantive law prescribing the elements of a valid execution, it may be necessary to prove signing, delivery, presence of the maker, and the like. Now, if the present rule in a given jurisdiction requires but one attester to be called, and if he is unable to testify to all these elements, the present rule is satisfied, but the elements of the execution are not yet made out; so that the proponent may have to call others to prove the remaining facts of his case.⁸ This, however, is not because of the present rule, but because otherwise the requirements of his particular case under the substantive law are not fulfilled. It is to this that the common expression refers, in the rulings above cited, that "one witness suffices, provided he can prove the requisites of a valid execution."

(2) Where a statute requires that execution be "proved" by a certain number of witnesses, that number must be called, and each must presumably testify to all the elements of a valid execution. But that is merely a rule of Quantity (post, § 2048), and has nothing to do with the Preferential rule. The requirement may be, for example, that two witnesses prove execution; but these two may be any competent persons, whether or not they are the ones who have attested the document, and whether or not the document is attested at all. Statutes of this sort obtain in a few jurisdictions for proof of written wills, and in many jurisdictions for nuncupative wills.⁹

§ 1305. Same: Rule Satisfied when One Competent Witness testifies by Deposition or Affidavit. Supposing the rule in a given jurisdiction to require only one witness to be called to furnish testimony, what amounts to such furnishing of testimony? Is it necessary that he should actually take the stand at the trial? It is of course essential that he should be competent to testify.¹ But, assuming him competent, may he not testify by deposition, other claims a privilege as interested, the will being contested); 1838, Crockett v. Crockett, Meigs 95 (by St. 1789, all the witnesses are required; semble, not so before); 1850, Jones v. Arterburn, 11 Humph. 97, 103 (will of personalty; all must be produced); Tex.: Rev. Civ. Stats. 1895, § 1900 ("one of the subscribing witnesses" suffices); Utah.: Rev. St. 1898, § 3792 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1308, 1315); Vt.: Rev. St. 1839, Stats. 1894, § 2362 (for wills uncontested, one suffices); 1855, Dean v. Dean, 27 Vt. 746, 749 (if contested, all should be called); 1866, Thornton v. Thornton, 39 id. 122, 151 (all must be called; the Chancery rule followed); Va.: 1846, Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Gratt. 439, 461 (one at law, two in chancery or probate); 1877, Lamberts v. Cooper, 29 id. 61, 67, semble (all required); Wis.: Stats. 1898, § 3788 (for uncontested probate, "one of the subscribing witnesses only" suffices); 1897, Jones' Will, 96 Wis. 427, 70 N. W. 685 (holding (1) that the statute applies only to uncontested wills, (2) that by the common law one witness only is required if the other is unavailable, i. e. in effect, both must be called or accounted for); Wyo.: St. 1891, c. 70, chap. III, § 3 (quoted post, § 1310).

⁷ 1898, Lamb v. Lippincott, 115 Mich. 611, 73 N. W. 887, semble (not more than the law requires need be called); 1857, Shirley v. Fearnce, 33 Miss. 653, 664 (deed; one only being required to attest, one only need prove); 1903, Lorts v. Wash, 175 Mo. 487, 75 S. W. 95. Not decided: 1903, O'Connell v. Dow, 182 Mass. 541, 66 N. E. 788 (whether all must be called, not decided; here the trial Court's ruling that the fifth must be called, being in court, was held not improper). Compare § 1309, post.

⁸ See, for an illustration, Burrowes v. Lock, 10 Ves. Jr. 470, 474.

⁹ That they do not require the production of attesting witnesses, see the citations ante, § 1290. The general subject of these statutes is examined post, §§ 2048-2051.

¹ 1897, Houston v. State, 114 Ala. 15, 21 So. 813 (where the one called had subscribed by

if the circumstances are such that a deposition would otherwise be admissible; i. e. supposing the requirements of the Hearsay rule satisfied, which allow the use of a deposition or of testimony at a former trial on certain conditions (post, §§ 1373-1384, §§ 1401-1414), is such a mode of testifying sufficient to satisfy the present rule that the testimony of one attesting witness must be offered? There should be no doubt that it is sufficient; the only objection can come through the Hearsay rule, and this is by hypothesis satisfied:

1834, Tindal, C. J., in Wright v. Tatham, 1 A. & E. 3, 22 (not requiring a surviving witness to be called, where the testimony at a former trial of another deceased subscribing witness was offered); "[If the offer had been merely to prove the handwriting of B., the deceased subscribing witness, the survivor P. would have been preferable.] Such testimony might fairly be considered as evidence of a higher and better nature than mere presumption arising from the proof of the witness' handwriting. . . . The effect, however, of B.'s examination is not merely to raise a presumption; it is evidence as direct to the point in issue, and as precise in its nature and quality, as that of P. when called in person."

Wherever, then, by the general principles of the Hearsay rule, a deposition or former testimony would be receivable, its use will satisfy the present rule requiring an attesting witness to furnish testimony.² In some jurisdictions, a statute expressly provides for the use of attesting witnesses' prior testimony or depositions in testamentary cases (post, §§ 1411, 1413, 1416).³ The practical bearing of this principle is that otherwise the providing of testimony by deposition or former testimony would be insufficient, and some other attesting witness would have to be called or accounted for.

An affidavit is ordinarily not receivable, under the Hearsay rule; but statutes occasionally provide for their employment by attesting witnesses in testamentary cases (post, § 1710); in such instances, they would presumably satisfy the present rule.

§ 1306. Same: When all Witnesses unavailable in Person, One Attestation only need be Authenticated. Under the principles of § 1320 and § 1505, post, when none of the attesters are available in person, the execution may be evidenced by authenticating the signature — i. e. the extrajudicial statement — of the attester; and in many jurisdictions (as noted in § 1320, post) the execution must be so evidenced. In that mode of proof, then, the same doctrine of numbers ought to apply, as regards the number of attestations to be authenticated, i. e. if in the particular jurisdiction the orthodox common-law rule obtains (under § 1304) that one attester's testimony suffices, mark only, and could neither read nor write). The same result is implied in those rulings (post, § 1316) which allow proof of the witness' signature where he has become incompetent since attestation. A blind witness' testimony would apparently suffice (post, § 1316).

Distinguish the question of substantive law whether, under a statute requiring attestation of a will by "credible" witnesses, an attestation is valid if the attester subsequently becomes incompetent; in those cases it is conceded that he would be incompetent to satisfy the rule by testifying at the trial.

² But a deposition testifying to the execution of a specific document must ordinarily be made with the document before the deponent: ante, § 1185.

³ Distinguish the question post, § 1312, whether the deposition of a witness out of the jurisdiction must be taken.

then proof of one attestation also suffices; or, if the rule (under § 1304) requires the testimony of all the attesters to be furnished, then the attestations of all must be authenticated. The reason is that the attestation is in effect the extrajudicial statement of the attester to the fact of due execution, admitted under the Hearsay exception (post, § 1505), and being admissible so far as concerns the Hearsay rule, it is governed, so far as concerns the present rule, by the general principle in regard to the number of attesters required to be called. In short, if one attester suffices on the stand, one attester suffices when allowed to speak extrajudicially in the attestation-clause.

Accordingly, for attested documents in general, the rule (though perhaps once otherwise¹) has long been generally settled to be that proof of a single attester's signature suffices,² just as the calling of a single attester to the stand suffices. For wills, however, the differences of practice obtaining in regard to the number to be called to the stand (ante, § 1304) are also noticeable here in regard to the number of attesting signatures to be proved, i. e. in some jurisdictions one suffices, in others all are required, with varying distinctions.³ It will be noted that there is no objection on principle to the former rule merely from the fact that the attestation of the others is also an element in the validity of execution (as of a will); for the express or implied statement of the attester is (post, § 1511) that all the requisites of execution took place, which includes an assertion that the other attestations were made as they purport to be.

The question does not frequently occur for decision, because now by statute, in the instance of most common occurrence — the proof of a will —, an express rule as to the number of signatures to be proved is usually laid down.⁴

¹ 1694, Smart v. Williams, Comb. 247 (the two witnesses being dead, "if there be full evidence to prove one of their hands, and any evidence that endeavors have been used to find one to prove the other's hand, it is sufficient").

² In the following list, this is the doctrine maintained, except where otherwise noted: 1744, Omyehund v. Barker, 1 Atk. 21, 49, Hardwicke L. C.; 1798, Adam v. Kerr, 1 B. & P. 360; 1848, Doe v. Twigg, 5 U. C. Q. B. 167, 170; 1843, Thomas v. Wallace, 5 Ala. 268, 275; 1897, Smith v. Keyser, 115 id. 455, 22 So. 149; 1863, Webb v. Wilcher, 33 Ga. 565, 568, semble; 1829, Fitzhugh v. Croghan, 2 J. J. Marsh. 429, 434; 1852, Burnett v. Thompson, 13 Ired. 379, 381; 1798, Hopkins v. De Graffenreid, 2 Bay 187, 191; 1803, Turner v. Moore, 1 Brev. 236; 1804, Manigault v. Hampton, 1 Brev. 394, semble (though lapse of time here excused the proof of one of the hands); 1823, Young v. Stockdale, 2 McC. 531 (handwriting of both witnesses required, but that of one was here dispensed with as not attainable); 1827, Sims v. De Graffenreid, 4 id. 253 (signature of both witnesses required); 1882, Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 32, 2 Sup. 313.

VOL. II. — 38

³ 1814, Jackson v. Burton, 11 John. 64 ("There is no fixed rule requiring proof of the hand of all the witnesses"; here one was sufficient); 1822, Jackson v. Legrange, 19 id. 386, 389 (if there is no witness who can prove all the requisites of execution, semble, the hands of all or of the rest must be proved); 1825, Jackson v. Luquere, 5 Cow. 221, 225 (same, because "the testator may have acknowledged his signing to the witnesses separately"); 1828, Jackson v. Vickory, 1 Wend. 406, 412 (approving the preceding); 1837, Bethel v. Moore, 2 Dev. & B. 311, 315, semble (all required); 1803, Hopkins v. Albertson, 2 Bay 484, 1 Brev. 240 (all required, since one may be forged, "in which case it would only be witnessed by two witnesses, which is not an execution" according to law; Bay, J., diss.); 1817, Pearson v. Wightman, 1 Mill Const. 336, 344 semble (all required); 1821, Sampson v. White, 1 McC. 74 semble (one suffices); 1850, Jones v. Arterburn, 11 Humph. 97, 103 (will of personalty; handwriting of all, if feasible, must be proved).

⁴ These statutes, however, deal also with several matters involving proof by signature, and accordingly have been for convenience collected

(g) "Or show his Testimony to be Unavailable."

§ 1308. General Principle of Unavailability. The notion of a rule of preference among witnesses (ante, § 1286) is that the preferred witness must be used if he can be had. Accordingly the rule's force is spent if it appears that his testimony is not available. Conversely, the attester, if he is not produced, must be shown unavailable.

This general notion of unavailability has seldom been broadly defined in judicial opinion. The law upon the subject has usually been enunciated by rulings specifying particular situations as exempting from production: but the following passage is comprehensive:

1842, Woods, J., in Dunbar v. Madden, 13 N. H. 311, 314: "It is believed to be the well-established general rule of law on this subject, that proof of the handwriting of the witness may be given in all cases when from physical or legal causes it is not in the power of the party to produce the witness at the trial."¹

§ 1309. All the Attesters must be shown Unavailable. The rule prefers an attester as a witness; the rule's force is therefore not spent until it appears that no attester can be had; in other words, if there is more than one attester, all must be shown unavailable before resort can be had to other testimony. This is ancient and settled doctrine;¹ though it must be noted that, where the law requires a certain number to attest, no more than that number need be accounted for (on the analogy of § 1304, ante), even though more than the required number have attested.²

in a single place (post, § 1320), to which reference may be made.

Whether also the maker's signature must be proved, is a different question, dealt with post, §§ 1320, 1513.

¹ It would perhaps be more accurate to add that it must be beyond the party's power to produce the witness "for purposes of examination," for this more clearly includes the case of a witness rendered incompetent by interest.

Other broad phrasings are as follows: 1779, Abbot v. Plumb, 1 Doug. 216 (Mansfield, L. C. J.: "unless it appears that his attendance could not be procured"; Buller, J.: "unless some reason can be shown for his absence"); 1813, Logan, J., in Hart v. Coram, 3 Bibb 26 ("in a situation which renders his examination impracticable"); 1806, Taylor, J., in Baker v. Blount, 2 Hayw. 404 ("divers exceptions, founded on necessity"); 1831, Clarke v. Courtney, 5 Pet. 319, 344 (Story, J.: "dead, or cannot be found, or is without the jurisdiction, or otherwise incapable of being produced"); 1814, Hill v. Nall, 2 Overt. 241 (absence "must be accounted for in some satisfactory manner").

² 1744, Omychund v. Barker, 1 Atk. 21, 49 (Hardwicke, L. C.; 1764, Forbes v. Wale, 1 W. Bl. 532 (one dead, but the other living); 1790, Wallis v. Delancey, 7 T. R. 266, note (proof that the other witness was in foreign parts, required before going to handwriting); 1848, Doe v. Twigg, 5 U. C. Q. B. 167, 170; 1898,

Howard v. Russell, 104 Ga. 230, 30 S. E. 802; 1827, Booker v. Bowles, 1 Blackf. 90; 1829, Chambers v. Handley, 3 J. J. Marsh. 98; 1845, Woodman v. Segar, 12 Shepl. 90, 92; 1826, Jackson v. Gager, 5 Cow. 383, 385; 1830, Jackson v. Christman, 4 Wend. 278, 283; 1785, Davison v. Bloomer, 1 Dall. 123; 1835, Congregation v. Miles, 4 Watts, 146, 149. The statutes quoted post, § 1310, usually mention this part of the rule.

² 1887, Snider v. Burks, 84 Ala. 53, 57, 4 So. 225 (will; where two of the three were dead, and proof of their handwriting was allowed). The interesting question here is this: Supposing only one attester to be required to be called as a witness (ante, § 1304), and supposing him to have no recollection when called, may his signature then be proved as sufficient? This question really is: Has the rule been satisfied as to one witness? If so, the rule's force is spent. Now it would seem that at least the witness should, if called, also testify; i. e. it is immaterial (ante, § 1302) how he testifies, so far as the rule's application to himself is concerned; but so far as going on to other evidence is concerned, the other attesters must be first tried if the first attester is unavailable; and the present notion of unavailability of all as a condition precedent must be thought to include not merely an excused non-production, but also a production which through failure of recollection has resulted in no testimony at all. Accordingly, if the first one, though having no present recollection, adopts his attestation as a record of past recollection, he has in effect testified (ante, §§ 745, 754); but if he does not, he is a nullity as a witness, and the remaining attestors must be tried before other evidence can be used. Compare here the principles of §§ 1302, 1303, ante, and 1315, post.

§ 1310. Statutory Enumerations of Causes of Unavailability. Before considering the common-law doctrines as to sufficient causes of unavailability, it may be noted that statutes¹ have frequently dealt expressly with the same

¹ The statutes deal with the causes noted in the ensuing sections, but to avoid repetition are placed together here. The judicial rulings noted in the later sections, §§ 1311-1318, include those made in application of these statutes to specific causes of non-availability; but rulings merely construing the statute generally are placed here with the statute; for statutes providing that the deposition of a witness out of the State, etc., may be used, see post, § 1411, under Depositions: CANADA: N. Br. St. 1898, c. 35, § 39, replacing Consol. St. 1877, c. 52, §§ 33, 34 ("when all the witnesses to any will are dead, or some are dead and the others reside out of the province, or the whole do so reside," proof "by viva voce testimony of the handwriting of the witnesses and the testator" suffices; but on proof in solemn form and whenever the judge may deem necessary, a commission may be ordered to take the testimony of "the witnesses to the will" and others; but for witnesses in the county, the judge shall himself attend to take their evidence, if "such witness is by reason of age, illness, or other cause unable to travel"); N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 158, § 18 ("when the witnesses live out of the province, or more than thirty miles distant from the registry, or by reason of age or illness are unable to appear and give evidence in court," their depositions are receivable); P. E. I. St. 1873, c. 21, § 24 ("If the only living witness to any will be out of the jurisdiction, proof of the fact of the death of the other witness, and of the handwriting of either of such witnesses, together with that of the testator, unless he be a marksman, in which case proof of his signature may be dispensed with, shall be sufficient evidence," unless proof in solemn form is required, "in which case a commission may issue and evidence may be taken under the same in such manner as the surrogate may direct"); UNITED STATES: Alabama: Code 1897, § 4276 ("[a will] must be proved by one or more of the subscribing witnesses, or if they be dead, insane, or out of the State, or have become incompetent since the attestation," then by handwriting); § 4277 ("If none of the subscribing witnesses to such will are produced, their insanity, death, subsequent incompetency, or absence from the State, must be satisfactorily shown before proof of the handwriting of the testator or of any of the subscribing witnesses can be received"); 1895, Barnwell v. Murrell, 108 Ala. 366, 378, 18 So. 831 ("if any one or more" is unavailable, the secondary grade may be resorted to; misconstruing the statute and misunderstanding Snider v. Burks, cited supra, § 1309); Arizona: Rev. St. 1887, § 983 (in contested wills, all must be produced "who are present in the county and who are of sound mind"; if none reside in the county, other testimony may be admitted); Arkansas: Stats. 1894, §§ 7415, 7416 (quoted post, § 1320); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1308 (in uncontested wills, "the testimony of one of the subscribing witnesses" suffices); § 1315 (in contested wills, "all the subscribing witnesses who are present in the county and who are of sound mind must be produced and examined; and the death, absence, or insanity of any of them must be satisfactorily shown to the Court; if none of the subscribing witnesses reside in the county at the time appointed for proving the will, the Court may admit the testimony of other witnesses to prove the sanity of the testator and the execution of the will; and, as evidence of such execution," it may admit evidence of handwriting); Commissioners' amendment of 1901, § 1307 (replacing the former § 1308; in uncontested probates, the testimony of one subscribing witness suffices; if at the hearing "none of the subscribing witnesses resides in the county, but the deposition of one of them can be taken elsewhere, the Court must direct it to be taken, and may authorize a photographic copy of the will to be made and presented to such witness on his examination, who may be asked the same questions with respect to it and the handwriting of himself, the testator, and the other witness, as would be pertinent and competent if the original will were present. If neither the attendance in court nor the deposition of any of the subscribing witnesses can be procured, the Court may admit the testimony of any other witness as provided in § 1317"); § 1317 (replacing the former § 1315; in contested probates, the provisions of the former § 1315 are followed, down to "proving the will"; then the following is inserted: "or if any subscribing witness is incompetent, or is unable to recollect the facts as to the sanity of the testator or the execution of the will"; then at the end is inserted: "the Court may also authorize a deposition and a photograph as in C. C. P., § 1307, supra"; for the validity of these amendments, see ante, § 488); Colorado: Annot. Stats. 1891, § 4676, ("in all cases where any one or more of the witnesses to any will shall die or remove to some distant country, unknown to the parties concerned, or cannot be found, so that his or her testimony cannot be procured," other evidence is allowable); Columbia (District): Code 1901, § 131 ("all the witnesses" to a will "who are within the District and competent to testify must be produced and examined, or the absence of any of them satisfactorily accounted for"); § 132 (in wills of realty, for the testimony of a resident witness "unable from sickness, age, or subject, especially for will-witnesses. These statutes are often obscurely phrased, and seldom enumerate more than two or three causes for excuse.

other cause, to attend court, the register of wills may with such will attend upon said witness and take his testimony. If the testimony of resident attesting witnesses or witness to such will shall have been taken, and any other such witness to said will shall reside out of the District, but within the United States, it shall be sufficient to prove the signature of such witness so out of the District. If the sole witnesses to such will shall be out of said District as aforesaid, or if one or more should be within the United States and one or more be in some foreign country, then it shall be sufficient to take the testimony of any one or all within the United States, as the Court may determine, and to prove the signatures of those whose testimony is not required to be taken. If all such witnesses shall be out of the United States, then it shall be sufficient to take the testimony of such of them as the Court may require, and to prove the signature or signatures of the others"; and the testimony of those out of the District to be taken by commission, with the will annexed); Georgia: Code 1895, §§ 5244, 5245 ("if from any cause the witness cannot be produced or sworn," he need not be; when witnesses are "dead, insane, incompetent, or inaccessible, or being produced, do not recollect the transaction," then other evidence is allowable); § 3232 (they must be produced if "in existence and within the jurisdiction of the Court"); Idaho: Rev. St. 1887, § 5311 (like Cal. C. C. P., § 1315); Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 148, § 6 (where "any one or more of the witnesses of any will . . . shall die, be insane, or remove to parts unknown to the parties concerned, so that his or her testimony cannot be procured," handwriting and other evidence may be resorted to); Indiana: Rev. St. 1897, § 2805 (if "dead, out of the State, or have become incompetent from any cause," then proof by handwriting may be used); § 2806 (all the witnesses must be shown unavailable by death, etc., before proving signatures); Kansas: Gen. St. 1897, c. 110, § 13 (if "any witness" has "gone to parts unknown," or has become "incompetent" since execution, the will may be allowed "upon such proof as would be satisfactory, and in like manner as if such absent or incompetent witness were dead"); Maryland: Pub. Gen. L. 1888, Art. 93, §§ 334, 337 (examination, in wills of reality, is required "if their attendance can be had"; for wills executed out of the State and not required there to be recorded, the death of the witness exempts from using his deposition); St. 1890, c. 416, St. 1892, c. 81, amending § 334 ("all the witnesses thereto shall be examined if their attendance can be had"; the depositions may be taken "of any or all of the witnesses thereto who from any cause cannot conveniently attend to the office of said register of wills, wherever he may find such witness or witnesses, whether within the State of Maryland or beyond its jurisdiction"; and further the Orphans' Court "may in their discretion accept proof of any will in the manner prescribed in § 337 of this article, when the attendance of the witnesses thereto cannot in the judgment of the said Court be conveniently had"); St. 1892, c. 504, amending § 337 ("If any witness or witnesses to any will shall die before probate thereof, or if at the time of the probate of any will any witness or witnesses shall be non-residents or beyond the jurisdiction of the Orphans' Court, or if for any other reason their presence cannot be secured, then proof by any credible witness of the signature of the testator or of the signature of any such deceased or absent witness shall have the same effect" as if the witness had testified in court to execution); Michigan: Comp. L. 1897, § 9280, How. § 5803 ("If none of the subscribing witnesses shall reside in this State," other testimony may be admitted or proof of handwriting); id. § 9266, How. § 5789 ("their subsequent incompetency, from whatever cause it may arise," shall not prevent probate of a will otherwise proved); 1897, Sullivan v. Sullivan, 114 Mich. 189, 72 N. W. 135 (How. § 5803 refers to living witnesses; in How. § 5789, "incompetency, from whatever cause it may arise," includes sickness, death, etc.); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1894, § 4437 ("If none of the subscribing witnesses reside in this State," the Court may admit other evidence); Mississippi: Annot. Code 1892, § 1816 (one at least must prove, "if alive and resident in the State, and competent to testify; but if none of the subscribing witnesses can be produced," then other evidence may be used); Missouri: Rev. St. 1899, § 4620 (when the attesting witnesses are "dead, insane, or their residences unknown," then other evidence may be used); Montana: C. C. P. 1895, § 2343 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1315); Nebraska: Comp. St. 1899, § 2656 ("If none of the subscribing witnesses shall reside in this State" at the time, the Court may in discretion "admit the testimony of other witnesses"); § 2641 ("subsequent incompetency, from whatever cause it may arise," shall not prevent probate, if other proof is made); § 5917 (if a subscribing witness is absent from the county, other evidence is allowable); Nevada: Gen. St. 1885, c. 19, § 18, sec. 2685 (in uncontested wills, "the testimony of one of the subscribing witnesses only" suffices); ib. § 20, sec. 2687 (in contested wills, all who "are present in the county, and who are of sound mind," must be examined; "and the death, absence, or insanity of any of them shall be satisfactorily shown to the Court"); ib. § 21, sec. 2688 ("If none of the subscribing witnesses reside in the county," other testimony is admissible); St. 1897, c. 106, §§ 17, 19 (reproduces §§ 18, 20, of Gen. St. 1885; but § 21, sec. 2688, therein is now omitted); St. 1903, c. 6 (amends § 17 of St. 1897, c. 106, by adding that whenever the witness "resides at a distance of more than 25 miles" from the place of trial, his affidavit to due execution and sanity shall suffice instead of calling him in person); New Hampshire: Pub.

Whatever were the intentions of the legislators, it would be unfortunate to be obliged to construe the statutory enumeration as exhaustive; and this the Courts are apparently not inclined to do.² The statutes, therefore, leave

St. 1891, c. 187, § 12 (if attesting witnesses "become incompetent from any cause," proof may be made by "other satisfactory evidence"); New Mexico: Comp. L. 1897, § 1982 (witnesses shall be examined "if their attendance is obtainable"; "if not," evidence of signatures, etc., is admissible); New York: C. C. P. 1877, §§ 2618, 2619, 2620 (will-witness must be called, if "within the State and competent and able to testify"; death, lunacy, or other incompetency, or not being found after due diligence, exempt absolutely; but of one within the State and disabled by age, sickness, or infirmity from attending, the deposition must be taken, if he is able; and for one absent from the State, a commission must issue if by due diligence his evidence may be had; that the witness "has forgotten the occurrence" also is an excuse); §§ 2539, 2540 (if the witness is ill or in another county, the witness must be examined where he is, or before the surrogate of the other county); North Carolina: Code 1883, § 2148 (will-witness must be called "if living," but if "any one or more" are dead, or reside out of the State, or are insane, or otherwise incompetent to testify, then proof of handwriting suffices); North Dakota: Rev. C. 1895, § 6296, (witnesses "who are within the State and are competent and able to testify" must be produced); § 6297 ("Before the presence of a witness . . . can be dispensed with, it must be shown by affidavit or other competent evidence to the satisfaction of the Court that he is dead or disqualified, or that he cannot after due diligence be found within this State, or if within the State that he is so aged, sick, or infirm that his presence cannot safely be required"); Ohio: Rev. St. 1898, § 5927 (if "any witness is gone to parts unknown," or if "the witnesses to a will" have become incompetent, or if "the testimony of any witness cannot for any reason be obtained within a reasonable time," then the Court may give probate "upon such proof as would be satisfactory, and in like manner as if such absent or incompetent witness were dead"); Oklahoma: Stats. 1898, § 1193 (all of the witnesses "who are present in the county, and are of sound mind," must be produced; "and the death, absence, or insanity of any of them must be satisfactorily shown to the Court. If none of the subscribing witnesses reside in the county, and are not present at the time appointed for proving the will," other testimony may be admitted); Oregon: C. C. P. 1892, § 761 (attesting witness must be called "if he be living and within the State and can testify"); Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1896, c. 210 § 15 (non-contested will may be proved on the evidence of executors, if neither attesting witness is a resident of State); South Carolina: Gen. St. 1882, c. 61, §§ 1870, 1871, Code 1902, §§ 2491, 2492 (on probate of a will in common form, "death or removal from the State" suffices; in solemn form, it suffices if he is "dead or insane"); South Dakota: Stats. 1899, § 6903 (witnesses "who are present in the county, and are of sound mind must be produced and examined; and the death, absence, or insanity of any of them must be satisfactorily shown to the Court. If none of the witnesses reside in the county, and are not present at the time appointed," then other testimony is admissible); Tennessee: Code 1896, § 3904 (wills; if not contested, proof suffices by one witness "if living"; if contested, by "all the living witnesses if to be found"); Texas: Rev. Civ. Stats. 1895, § 1900 ("If all the witnesses are non-residents of the county, or those resident of the county are unable to attend court," the deposition of one suffices; if none are living, then evidence of handwriting is admissible); Utah: Rev. St. 1898, § 3792 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1815); Vermont: Stats. 1894, § 2363 (will-witness; if none reside in the State at the time of the testator's death, then other evidence is receivable); Washington: C. & Stats. 1897, § 6103 ("When one of the witnesses to such will shall be examined, and the other witnesses are dead, insane, or their residence unknown, then such proof shall be taken of the handwriting of the testator, and of the witnesses dead, insane, or residence unknown, and of such other circumstances as would be sufficient to prove such will"); § 6104 ("If it shall appear, to the satisfaction of the Court, that all the subscribing witnesses are dead, insane, or their residence unknown, the Court shall take and receive such proof of the handwriting of the testator and subscribing witnesses, to the will, and of such other facts and circumstances as would be sufficient to prove the will"); Wisconsin: Stats. 1898, § 3788 ("If none of the subscribing witnesses shall reside in this State . . . or if any one or more of them shall have gone to parts unknown and the Court shall be satisfied that such witness, after due diligence used, cannot be found," then other testimony is admissible); Wyoming: St. 1891, c. 70, chap. III, § 3 (for contested wills, "all the subscribing witnesses who are present in the county and who are of sound mind must be produced and examined; and the death, absence, or insanity of any of them must be satisfactorily shown to the Court; if none of the subscribing witnesses reside in the county," at the time of probate, others may be admitted; and "as evidence of the execution, it may admit proof of the handwriting of the testator and of the subscribing witnesses or any of them").

² 1849, Holmes v. Holloman, 12 Mo. 536 (heirs claimed privilege as parties; production excused; the statutory exemptions for death, etc., held not to be taken as "expressio unius exclusio alterius, but are merely a codification of what was already the common law, and a recognition of the principle upon which second-the broad principle of the common law untouched, and merely confirm or correct its precedents.

§ 1311. Causes of Unavailability; (1) Death; (2) Ancient Document. (1) If there is to be any excuse at all for not producing the attester, it is clear that death supplies it; and this is universally accepted, although the earlier reports show traces of a rigor not recognizing even this exemption.¹

(2) Where a document purports to be so old that attesters cannot be supposed to be yet alive, the same ground for exemption exists. An "ancient" document, in this sense, has long been defined by a fixed rule, i. e. a document purporting to be thirty years old. This rule applies not only to documents in general,² but also to wills.³ Not only is the production of the attester excused, even though he is alive and available,⁴ but the execution is upon certain other evidence assumed to have been valid; in this aspect, the rule for ancient documents, with the history of its peculiar limitation to thirty years, is elsewhere examined (post, §§ 2137–2146).

§ 1312. Same: (3) Absence from Jurisdiction. A person not within the jurisdiction is not compellable by the Court's process to appear, and therefore is in effect unavailable as a witness:

1842, Woods, J., in Dunbar v. Madden, 13 N. H. 311, 313: "The reason is that the process of the Court cannot reach the witness effectively in a foreign government or ary evidence may be admitted"); 1850, Jones v. Arterburn, 11 Humph. 97, 99.

¹ 1673, Phillips v. Crawly, Freeman 83 (death sufficient); 1740, Henley v. Phillips, 2 Atk. 48 (same); 1748, Grayson v. Atkinson, 2 Ves. Sr. 454, 460 (Hardwicke, L. C.: "If the witness was dead, it might possibly be sufficient; that is the act of God"); 1796, Barnes v. Troumpowsky, 7 T. R. 265 (death sufficient); 1874, Harris v. Tisereau, 52 Ga. 153, 163 (Code § 2431 does not prohibit probate of will on the death of witnesses, except by Probate Court); 1890, Maxwell v. Hill, 89 Tenn. 584, 15 S. W. 253 (death suffices).

² England: 1788, R. v. Farrington, 2 T. R. 466 (certificate of pauper settlement required to be attested); 1795, Chelsea Water Works v. Cowper, 1 Esp. 275 (bond); 1798, Marsh v. Collnett, 2 id. 665 (Yates, J., ex rel. Kenyon, L. C. J., ruled "that he would not break in upon a rule so well established as that deeds of 30 years' standing proved themselves, by requiring the subscribing witness to be called"); 1828, Doe v. Wolley, 8 B. & C. 22, 24 ("the principle . . . is that the witnesses may be presumed to have died"; he need not be called, even if in fact he is living); 1845, Lord Gosford v. Robb, 8 Ir. L. R. 217, 219, semble (per Pennefather, C. J.); 1848, Doe v. Turnbull, 5 U. C. Q. B. 129, 131 (even if the witness is in fact alive); 1864, Orser v. Vernon, 14 U. C. C. P. 573, 587, semble; United States: 1888, Allison v. Little, 85 Ala. 512, 516, 5 So. 221; Ga. Code 1895, § 5244; 1850, Settle v. Allison, 8 Ga. 201, 205 (even if the witnesses are alive); 1876, Gardner v. Granniss, 57 id. 539, 555 (same); 1858, Smith v. Rankin, 20 Ill. 14, 23 (but not if the witness is living); 1900, Cunningham v. Davis, 175 Mass.

213, 56 N. E. 2 (even if the witness is alive and in court); 1874, Shaw v. Pershing, 57 Mo. 416, 421 (even though the witnesses were alive); 1808, Jackson v. Blanshan, 3 John. 292, 295, 298, semble (even where the witness is alive); 1826, Jackson v. Thompson, 6 Cow. 178, 180; 1830, Jackson v. Christman, 4 Wend. 278, 282 (even where the witness is alive and available); 1840, Northrop v. Wright, 24 id. 221, 228 (same); 1847, Willson v. Betts, 4 Den. 201, 212; 1793, Jones v. Brinkley, 1 Hayw. 20; 1811, Garwood v. Dennis, 4 Binn. 314, 326; 1823, McGennis v. Allison, 10 S. & R. 197, 199 ("perhaps . . . even if they were in full life"); 1840, Edmonston v. Hughes, Cheves 81, 84, semble; 1830, Hinde v. Vatlier, 1 McLean 110, 116; 1835, Winn v. Patterson, 9 Pet. 663, 674 (applicable to all deeds of thirty years' standing, no matter how proved).

³ 1803, M'Kenire v. Fraser, 9 Ves. Jr. 5, semble; 1817, Raoclyffe v. Parkyns, 6 Dow 149, 202, semble; 1826, Doe v. Passingham, 2 C. & P. 440; 1826, Doe v. Deakin, 3 id. 402 (Vaughan, B.: "The rule of 30 years is founded on the presumption that the witnesses are dead"); 1828, Doe v. Wolley, 8 B. & C. 22; 1835, Doe v. Burdett, 4 A. & E. 1, 19 ("even were they all alive"); 1820, Duncan v. Baird, 2 N. & McC. 400, 408 (in the form of a presumption of death).

⁴ See the citations in the preceding notes. Distinguish the following ruling: 1815, Manly v. Curtis, 1 Price 225 (a receipt of 53 years before, offered as a hearsay statement against interest, excluded on hearsay grounds, because the writer was not shown deceased; the authentication question apparently not decided).

country, and consequently it is not within the power of the party, legally speaking, to produce him."

This general doctrine, though not positively established till the end of the 1700s,¹ is now universally accepted;² although there is considerable difference

¹ 1673, Phillips v. Crawly, Freeman 83 (attested deed; "because they did not prove the witnesses dead, nor that they were gone to sea — though they alleged it —, it was not permitted at first to be given in evidence"); 1740, Henley v. Phillips, 2 Atk. 48 (requiring stricter proof of death for witnesses living long abroad, i. e. apparently because if really alive their presence abroad would not satisfy the rule); 1779, Coghlan v. Williamson, 1 Doug. 93 (sufficient, where the witness was shown to have gone to India five years before); 1786, St. 26 Geo. III, c. 57 (where the attesting witness resides in the East Indies, proof of the handwriting of witness and party suffices); 1792, Holmes v. Pontin, Peake 99 (the witness was in France, and would not come over; Kenyon, L. C. J., referring to the preceding case: "It was considered as an innovation at the time; but was found to be so beneficial that it has since been adhered to"); 1793, Cooper v. Marsden, 1 Esp. 1 ("where it appeared that he was abroad," sufficient); 1796, Barnes v. Trompowsky, 7 T. R. 265 ("If residing abroad, by sending out a commission to examine him, or at least, by proving his handwriting, which last indeed is a relaxation of the old rule, and admitted only of late years"); 1798, Adam v. Kerr, 1 B. & P. 360 (out of the jurisdiction, sufficient).

² England: 1802, Prince v. Blackburn, 2 East 250 (here the general doctrine was for the first time definitely established; moreover, mere absence, not necessarily domicile or permanent absence, suffices); 1809, Ward v. Wells, 1 Taunt. 461 (mere absence suffices); 1815, Hodnett v. Forman, 1 Stark. 90 (mere absence, without a request by the party to the witness to attend, sufficient); 1828, Kay v. Brookman, 3 C. & P. 555 (proof of disappearance, with intention of leaving the country, sufficient); 1840, Glubb v. Edwards, 2 Moo. & Rob. 300, Maule, J. (here the point was raised because the Common Law Courts had recently been given power to issue a foreign commission); United States: here the statutes ante, § 1310, are to be compared; the fact of absence was sufficient in the following cases, except as otherwise noted: Ala.: 1851, Foote v. Cobb, 18 Ala. 585, 587 ("residing"); 1881, Allred v. Elliott, 71 id. 224, 226 (residence in another county, insufficient; "absent from the State when last heard from," sufficient); 1884, Guice v. Thornton, 76 id. 466, 473 ("absent from the State"); 1890, Caldwell v. Pollak, 91 id. 353, 359, 8 So. 546 ("residing"); 1897, Smith v. Keyser, 115 id. 455, 22 So. 149; Ark.: 1838, Brown v. Hicks, 1 Ark. 233, 242 (absence from home, to return in a few months, insufficient); 1839, Wilson v. Royston, 2 id. 315, 327 (deed executed in another State; further evidence of witnesses' absence from jurisdiction required); 1860, Tatum v. Mohr, 21 id. 349, 352 ("being out of the jurisdiction"; but in fact he resided without); Cal.: 1859, Stevens v. Irwin, 12 Cal. 306 (out of the county, not sufficient); Haw.: 1856, Bullions v. Loring, 1 Haw. 209, 213 (residence out of the kingdom, held here sufficient); Ill.: 1844, Wiley v. Bean, 6 Ill. 302, 305 (absence from the State, sufficient); 1848, Mariner v. Saunders, 10 id. 113, 121 (residence in another State, sufficient); Ind.: 1819, Jones v. Coopridger, 1 Blackf. 46 (residence in another State, sufficient); 1828, Ungles v. Graves, 2 id. 191 (same); 1845, State v. Bodly, 7 id. 355, 357 (same); 1881, Herbert v. Berrier, 81 Ind. 1, 7 (will-statute applied); Ia.: 1870, Ballinger v. Davis, 29 la. 512 (absence from the jurisdiction in unknown place, sufficient); Ky.: 1812, M'Dowell v. Hall, 2 Bibb 610, 612; 1813, Hart v. Coram, 3 id. 26 ("in a situation which renders his examination impracticable, as being absent in a foreign country or beyond the reach of the process of the Court or the Court's control"; here not shown on the facts); 1815, Clarke v. Bartlett, 4 id. 201, 203 (residence in another State, sufficient); 1816, Sentney v. Overton, ib. 445 (removal to an adjoining State, sufficient); 1817, M'Cord v. Johnson, ib. 531 (in an adjoining State on a transient visit, insufficient, though perhaps not "actual domicile" abroad would be necessary, and "long absence" might suffice); 1817, Creighton v. Johnson, Litt. Sel. C. 240 (transient absence in the adjoining State, insufficient); 1820, Bowman v. Bartlett, 3 A. K. Marsh. 86, 91 ("the absence from a State, or rather his residing abroad," suffices); 1822, Turner v. Turner, 1 Litt. 101, 104 ("out of the State"; sufficient in case of a will, provided one witness has proved the will); 1829, Kemper v. Pryor, 1 J. J. Marsh. 598 (removal from the State, and diligent inquiry, sufficient); La.: 1819, Lynch v. Postlethwaite, 7 Mart. 69, 209 (absence from jurisdiction); 1823, Crouse v. Duffield, 12 id. 539, 542 (same); 1825, Villere v. Armstrong, 4 id. n. s. 21 ("left the State"); Me.: 1840, Emery v. Twombly, 5 Shepl. 65 (absence suffices; even though they lived within 30 miles of the place of trial); Mass.: 1809, Dudley v. Sumner, 5 Mass. 439, 444, 462, semble (absence from jurisdiction); 1814, Homer v. Wallis, 11 id. 309, 311 (same); 1851, Gelott v. Goodspeed, 8 Cush. 411 (same); 1860, Ela v. Edwards, 16 Gray 91, 95 (same); Miss.: 1838, Downs v. Downs, 2 How. 915, 924 (gone from the jurisdiction, sufficient); Mo.: 1826, Little v. Chauvin, 1 Mo. 626, 631 (residence out of the State, sufficient); 1838, Maupin v. Triplett, 5 id. 422 (in another county, not sufficient); 1843, Lawless v. Guelbreth, 8 id. 139 (residence just over the State line, sufficient); 1857, Clardy v. Richardson, 24 id. 295, 296 (residence out of the State, sufficient); Nebr.: 1894, Jewell v. Chamberlain, 41 Nebr. 254, 59 N. W. 784 (absence from the State suffices under Code § 343); N. H.: 1835, Montgomery v. Dorion, 7 N. H.

of phrasing, even within the same Court's rulings, as to the sufficiency of mere temporary absence, and not permanent residence, without the jurisdiction.

It is immaterial that the proponent knew of the witness' intended absence and might have taken his deposition;³ though a collusive procurement of the witness' absence would of course annul the excuse for non-production.⁴ But at least must not the proponent have sought to obtain (by commission or otherwise) his deposition while in absence? Can it be said that the witness' testimony is unavailable, so long as it does not appear that his deposition could not with due diligence have been procured? The answer to this was at first given in the negative,—that is to say, in the period when the present excuse was with hesitation beginning to be accepted, this proviso as to taking the deposition was insisted on.⁵ But the extreme inconvenience of sending abroad for the deposition was soon recognized as disproportionate to the benefit obtained; and in most jurisdictions to-day⁶ no such 475, 483 (absence from jurisdiction); 1842, Dunbar v. Madden, 13 id. 311, 313 (same); N. C.: 1806, Baker v. Blount, 2 Hayw. 404 (the witness had fraudulently evaded process by removing from the county; held sufficient); 1826, Selby v. Clark, 4 Hawks 265, 273 (temporary absence without change of domicile, held usually not sufficient, because of the danger of collusion; but absence as a member of Congress, sufficient; permanent absence is always sufficient); 1814, Allen v. Martin, 1 Law Repos. 373 ("living beyond the process of the Court," held sufficient); 1832, Crowell v. Kirk, 3 Dev. 355, 356, per Daniel, J. (that he "is abroad," is sufficient); 1837, Bethel v. Moore, 2 Dev. & B. 311 (living in another State, sufficient); 1848, Edwards v. Sullivan, 8 Ired. 302, 305 (same); Oh.: 1824, Clark v. Boyd, 2 Oh. 280 (57) (absence from jurisdiction); 1858, Richards v. Skiff, 8 Oh. St. 586 (same); Pa.: 1807, Engles v. Burlington, 4 Yeates 345 (will; absence from jurisdiction); 1810, Clark v. Sanderson, 3 Binn. 192, 195 (bond; "it is always to be understood that there must be no fraud or collusion in getting the witness out of the way"); 1816, Hantz v. Rough, 1 S. & R. 349 (residence without the county, not sufficient); S. C.: 1902, Swancey v. Parrish, 62 S. C. 240, 40 S. E. 554 (out of the jurisdiction, sufficient); Tenn.: 1850, Jones v. Arterburn, 11 Humph. 97, 99 (the statutory phrase, for contested wills, "if to be found," includes absence from the State, as exempting from production; but if his deposition has in fact been obtained, it must be read); 1855, Harrel v. Ward, 2 Sneed 610, 613 (absence "for a temporary purpose, where the return of the witness within a limited time is reasonably certain," insufficient; though not "as an inflexible rule," e. g. where the absence has been long, no collusion is suspected, and diligence has been used); Tex.: 1854, Frazier v. Moore, 11 Tex. 755 (absence from jurisdiction); U. S.: 1804, Jones v. Levell, 1 Cr. C. C. 183 (removal from the jurisdiction, sufficient); 1805, Wellford v. Eakin, ib. 264 (residence without, sufficient); 1809, Cooke v.

Woodrow, 5 Cr. 13 (witness going out of district and last heard of in Norfolk; handwriting not allowed, without proof of inability to find at N.); Vt.: 1800, Pearl v. Allen, 1 Tyl. 4 (if residing within process of the Court, he must be produced); Va.: 1826, Nalle v. Fenwick, 4 Rand. 585, 589, semble (absence from the State, sufficient; but here it was alleged that "every legal means had been taken to procure their attendance"); 1827, Smith v. Jones, 6 Rand. 33, 37 ("removed from the State," sufficient); Wis.: 1845, Garrison v. Owens, 1 Pinney 544 (absence from jurisdiction); 1863, Silverman v. Blake, 17 Wis. 213, semble (same).

³ 1859, Jackson v. F. R. W. Co., 14 Cal. 18, 22 (lack of diligence, in not obtaining his testimony before departure, immaterial).

⁴ See Clark v. Sanderson, Harrel v. Ward, and other cases in note 2, supra.

⁵ 1748, Grayson v. Atkinson, 2 Ves. Sr. 454, 460 (Hardwicke, L. C.). "It is not necessary to presume that it is out of your power to get him if you please; . . . you may have a commission to examine the witness beyond sea; for in this Court you are not under the difficulty as in a Court of law where it must be viva voce"; 1793, Fitzherbert v. Fitzherbert, 4 Bro. C. C. 231 (witness in America; commission required); 1796, Barnes v. Trompowsky (see quotation in note 1, supra).

⁶ Besides the following cases, compare the statutes ante, § 1310; England: 1751, Webb v. St. Lawrence, 3 Bro. P. C. 640, 645 (witness in Holland; deposition not required); 1752, Banks v. Farquharson, 1 Dick. 167 (same; witness in Scotland); 1790, Wallis v. Delancey, 7 T. R. 266, note (Kenyon, L. C. J.): "The expense of sending out a commission would in many cases be more than the value of the sum in dispute"; 1800, Carrington v. Payne, 5 Ves. Jr. 404, 411 (not required; here, a will); United States: Ala. Code 1897, § 4277 (the judge "may issue a commission"); 1850, Settle v. Allison, 8 Ga. 201, 205 (not required); 1819, Jones v. Cooperider, 1 Blackf. 46 (not required); 1845, State proviso is recognized, and it is not necessary to have endeavored to obtain the absent witness' deposition.⁷

The sufficiency of the proof of absence at the time of trial has been the subject of many rulings, which cannot profitably be treated as precedents;⁸ the matter should be left entirely to the discretion of the trial Court.⁹ For one detail, however, there seems to have arisen a uniform rule, namely, that the attester's residence abroad at the time of execution — or, in another form, the occurrence abroad of the acts of execution and attestation — is sufficient proof that the attester is out of the jurisdiction at the time of the trial.¹⁰

v. Bodly, 7 id. 355, 357 (same, even though the opponent has had it taken; but if the proponent uses this deposition, it is not improper to reject proof by handwriting of the witness); 1870, Ballinger v. Davis, 29 Ia. 512 (not required); 1897, Allison's Estate, 104 id. 130, 73 N. W. 489 (same; even though the deposition is in fact obtainable, and was taken upon other points, proof of handwriting suffices; the fact of non-residence allows the use of the inferior grade); 1816, Sentney v. Overton, 4 Bibb 445, 447 (not required; "though the Court has the power to award the commission, it has no power to coerce its execution"); 1820, Bowman v. Bartlett, 3 A. K. Marsh. 86, 91 (same); 1822, Turner v. Turner, 1 Litt. 101, 104 (same); 1842, Dunbar v. Madden, 13 N. H. 311, 316 (that the witness' whereabouts is known, immaterial); 1798, Irving v. Irving, 2 Hayw. 27 (not required); 1814, Allen v. Martin, 1 Law Repos. N. C. 373 (same); 1837, Bethell v. Moore, 2 Dev. & B. 311, 314 (same); 1810, Clark v. Sanderson, 3 Binn. 192, 196 (same); 1792, Oliphant v. Taggart, 1 Bay 255 (handwriting of the witness usually sufficient; but here, the opponent producing an affidavit of the witness denying it, a commission abroad was ordered); 1804, Price v. M'Gee, 1 Brev. 373, 376 (not required); 1853, Brown v. Wood, 6 Rich. Eq. 155, 165, semble (same); 1807, Love v. Peyton, 1 Overt. 255 (if in another domestic State, deposition should be taken); 1809, Shepherd v. Goss, 2 id. 487 (same; otherwise, if he has "removed to some foreign nation"); 1818, Stump v. Hughes, 5 Hayw. 93 (preceding cases overruled; residence in another domestic State is sufficient, or absence there till the end of the trial; the delay, risk, and inconvenience of sending for a deposition are unnecessary); 1818, Den v. Mayfield, ib. 121 (same; here, absence for 10 years, unheard from); 1838, Crockett v. Crockett, Meigs 95 (neither summons by subpoena nor attempt to get deposition is necessary); 1804, Jones v. Lowell, 1 Cr. C. C. 183 (not required); 1803, Rich v. Trimble, 2 Tyl. 349 (though residing without the State, if his residence is known and is within reasonable distance, deposition required); 1888, Denny v. Pinney, 60 Vt. 525, 527, 12 Atl. 108 (the witness resided in another State, but had stayed for a few days since action begun at the testatrix' town in the State; deposition not required).

⁷ Distinguish, however, the question whether the absent witness' deposition may be taken and used. This depends on the general principles applicable to the use of depositions, post §§ 1373, 1402, 1416; statutes sometimes expressly provide for the depositions of attesting witnesses. So far as the deposition is thus allowable, its use satisfies the present rule requiring the attester's "testimony," as noted ante, § 1305.

⁸ See the rulings passim in note 2, supra, and also the following: 1790, Wallis v. Delancey, 7 T. R. 266, note (evidence that there had been abroad in 1774, at the place of execution, a person of the same name, held sufficient to show absence now); 1849, Anstin v. Rumsey, 2 C. & K. 736 (inquiry of the witness' parents, sufficient); 1842, Nicks v. Rector, 4 Ark. 251, 277 (departure from the State four years before, and no news from him, sufficient); 1862, Delony v. Delony, 24 id. 7, 11 (evidence of absence insufficient on the facts); 1849, Gordon v. Miller, 1 Ind. 531 (continued residence abroad up to 15 months previous, held sufficient); 1838, Waldo v. Russell, 5 Mo. 387, 394 ("reported and believed to have died in Texas," sufficient); 1802, Rhodes v. Rigg, 1 Cr. C. C. 87.

For the replies received while searching, as evidence of diligence, see post, § 1789, ante, § 261. For the admissibility of the witness' declarations of intent not to return, see post, § 1725.

⁹ 1876, Jones v. Roberts, 65 Me. 273, 276.

¹⁰ 1864, Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 393, 408 (attestation out of the State by non-residents, sufficient, in the absence of evidence to show that the witness ever was within the State); 1865, McMinn v. O'Connor, 27 id. 238, 245 (same); 1865, McMinn v. Whelan, ib. 300, 310 (same); 1817, Gibbs v. Cook, 4 Bibb 535, 536 (parties' residence abroad, etc., on the facts held to raise presumption of witness' absence); 1820, Bowman v. Bartlett, 3 A. K. Marsh. 86, 91 (residence of the maker abroad, etc., on the facts held to raise presumption of witness' residence abroad); 1823, Crouse v. Duffield, 12 Mart. La. 539, 542 (execution abroad; witnesses presumed abroad); 1832, Barfield v. Hewlett, 4 La. 118, 119 (same); 1839, Valentine v. Piper, 22 Pick. 85 ("If the instrument was apparently executed in a foreign country, we think that fact raised a sufficient presumption that the subscribing witnesses were not within the jurisdiction of the Court"); 1857, Clardy v. Richardson, 24 Mo.

§ 1313. Same: (4) Absence in Unknown Parts. If the attester's whereabouts cannot be discovered, he is practically unavailable; and this (though historically there was the same hesitation that has been noted for the preceding exemptions¹) is now universally recognized as an excuse for not producing him.² But it is necessary, first, to exclude the suspicion that the witness may be secreting himself by collusion with the proponent,³ and, secondly, to show that the proponent's ignorance of his whereabouts is not due to lack of effort to discover him; accordingly, it must be shown that honest and diligent search for the attester has been made.⁴ The sufficiency of this search has been dealt with in a number of rulings, not profitable for use as precedents;⁵ the matter should be left entirely to the determination of the trial Court.⁶ That the search should include a sheriff's search with 295, 297 (non-residence at time of execution raises a presumption of continued non-residence); 1858, Sherman v. Transp. Co., 31 Vt. 162, 165, 174 (witness to document executed out of the State; no evidence of the witnesses having been in the State; held properly dispensed with; Valentine v. Piper approved). Contra: 1826, Jackson v. Gager, 5 Cow. 383, 385 (power of attorney executed in Massachusetts; witnesses not presumed out of the jurisdiction).

¹ 1701, Anon., 12 Mod. 607 ("that he has made strict enquiry after them and cannot hear of them," sufficient); 1796, Barnes v. Trompowsky, 7 T. R. 265 (see quotation in note 4, infra); 1808, Crosby v. Percy, 1 Taunt. 364, 366 (Mansfield, C. J.: "The law has been much relaxed in this particular within the period of my practice; the increased commerce of the country, and the number of persons who every year go out of it, first rendered it necessary to admit secondary evidence in the case of witnesses being abroad; the dispensation was next extended to the case of witnesses who were not to be found").

² 1810, Wardell v. Fermour, 2 Camp. 282; 1875, Hartford L. Ins. Co. v. Gray, 80 Ill. 28; 1815, Powers v. M'Ferran, 1 S. & R. 44, 46; 1855, Harrel v. Ward, 2 Sneed 610, 614, semble; 1802, Broadwell v. McClish, 1 Cr. C. C. 4.

³ 1810, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Wardell v. Fermour, 2 Camp. 283: "I will watch very narrowly your proof of search. . . . If the attesting witness knows too much of the transaction, and his examination would hazard the validity of the deed, he may be sent out of the way, and we may be amused at the trial with an account of his having absconded."

⁴ Various phrasings of this requirement are as follows: 1796, Barnes v. Trompowsky, 7 T. R. 265 ("If no intelligence can be obtained respecting the subscribing witness after reasonable inquiry has been made"; . . . if he "has been sought for and could not be found, so as to furnish a presumption that he is dead"); 1802, Cunliffe v. Sefton, 2 East 183 ("due diligence without effect"; "diligent inquiry"; here the place of execution was unknown, and search at the places of obligor and obligee was held sufficient); 1808, Crosby v. Percy, 1 Taunt. 364 (Mansfield, C. J.: "In all cases it must appear to the Court that there was a fair, serious, and diligent inquiry, and no evasion, or attempt to keep the witness out of the way"; here, on inquiry at the last abode, the party had been told that the witness had absconded to escape his creditors; advertising was not required); 1811, Waring v. Bowles, 4 Taunt. 182 (the Court required the party to show, not merely diligent inquiry, but "the particular search that had been made for the witness, and where he had been last seen or known to reside, and when he was last heard of, and what endeavors had been made to find him"); 1853, Crane v. Ayre, 2 All. N. Br. 577 ("all the circumstances must therefore be looked to in each case"); 1804, Manigault v. Hampton, 1 Brev. S. C. 394 (reasonable diligence required).

⁵ England: 1810, Parker v. Hoskins, 2 Taunt. 223; 1821, Burt v. Walker, 4 B. & Ald. 697 (the witness a clerk to the defendant, and disappearing somewhat suddenly; search held sufficient on the facts); 1822, Pytt v. Griffith, 6 Moore 538 (not sufficient where the witness was merely "keeping out of the way to avoid an arrest" for debt, unless at the instance of the opponent; unsond); 1823, James v. Parnell, Turn. & R. 417; 1842, Falmouth v. Roberts, 9 M. & W. 469, 471; Canada: 1846, Tylden v. Bullen, 3 U. C. Q. B. 10; 1848, Doe v. Twigg, 5 id. 167, 170; United States: 1853, Powell v. Hendricks, 3 Cal. 427, 430; 1839, Thompson v. Wilson, 13 La. 138, 142; 1820, Whittemore v. Brooks, 1 Greenl. 57; 1879, McMillan v. Larned, 41 Mich. 521, 522, 2 N. W. 662; 1811, Mills v. Twist, 3 John. 121; 1814, Jackson v. Burton, 11 id. 64; 1828, Jackson v. Cody, 9 Cow. 140, 149; 1832, Jackson v. Chamberlain, 8 Wend. 620, 624; 1833, Pelletreau v. Jackson, 11 id. 110, 123; 1838, Van Dyne v. Thayne, 19 id. 162, 165; 1847, Truby v. Byers, 6 Pa. St. 347 (mere ignorance of abode, without search, not enough); 1892, Gallagher v. Assoc. Co., 149 id. 25, 24 Atl. 115 (search for one having no fixed place of abode and going from place to place to get employment, held sufficient on the facts).

For the admissibility of the replies received in the search, as evidence of diligence, see post, § 1789, ante, § 261.

⁶ 1845, Woodman v. Segar, 12 Shepl. 90, 92

subpœna seems unnecessary;⁷ nor, on the other hand, should a sheriff's search and return of "not found" be invariably sufficient.⁸

§ 1314. Same: (5) Witness' Name Unknown, through Loss or Illegibility of Document. It is clear that where the very name of the attester cannot be ascertained, the attester is unavailable for the purpose of furnishing his testimony. This situation occurs where the document is lost; here the proponent is exempt from producing the attester;¹ unless of course the name has otherwise before trial become known to the proponent;² for in that case his testimony, though not of great value without the document before him, might at least help to establish the fact that such a document did or did not once exist.³

Where the name of the attester is illegible, the same reason for exemption from production exists.⁴

§ 1315. Same: (6) Illness or Infirmary; (7) Failure of Memory; (8) Imprisonment. (6) When the attester is at the time of trial so ill, or so infirm from age, that it is impracticable, without danger to his life or health, to compel his attendance in Court, his production should be dispensed with.¹ There is little judicial authority on the subject, partly because statutes applicable to will-witnesses have frequently dealt with the point; in applying the statutory terms the analogies of the statutes excusing the non-attendance of deponents (post, § 1406) would be useful. But though attendance at the

("in some measure"); 1823, McGennis v. Allison, 10 S. & R. 197, 200 (Duncan, J.: "What is reasonable inquiry? There can be no fixed and settled rule; every case must stand on its own bottom; and this point must be left with some latitude of discretion").

⁷ 1829, Disukes v. Musgrove, 8 Mart. n. s. 375, 379. Contra: 1838, Crockett v. Crockett, Meigs 95 (return of subpœna, semble, necessary where the witness is not specifically shown to be out of the State).

⁸ 1836, Jerman v. Hudson, 2 Harringt. 134 (subpœna, and return "not found," sufficient); 1847, Sexton v. McGill, 2 La. An. 190, 195 (same; insufficient); 1833, M'Donald v. M'Donald, 5 Yerg. 307 ("if to be found," in St. 1789, c. 23, § 1, as to will-witnesses, is satisfied by a return of "not found" by the officer having the subpœna).

¹ 1796, Keeling v. Ball, Peake Add. Cas. 88 ("It did not appear that the plaintiff could by any possibility know who the subscribing witnesses were," and proof by the extrajudicial admissions of the maker allowed); 1853, R. v. St. Giles, 1 E. & B. 642 (per Erle, J., applying it to the case where the name is known, but the person cannot be found or identified; "it is the case of an attesting witness, unknown"); 1854, Felton v. Pitman, 14 Ga. 530, 535 (deed lost and witnesses unknown; exempted); 1887, Terry v. Rodahan, 79 id. 278, 294, 5 S. E. 38 (deed lost and witnesses dead; exempted); 1892, Turner v. Cates, 90 id. 731, 744, 16 S. E. 971 (neither witness nor maker is then preferred); 1831, Hewes v. Wiswell, 8 Greenl. 94, 96; 1833, Mellen, C. J., in Knox v. Silloway, 1 Fairf. 201, 219 (even though the witness be present; this seems unsound); 1829, Hathaway v. Spooner, 9 Pick. 23, 25; 1875, Raynor v. Norton, 31 Mich. 210, 213; 1827, Colby v. Kenniston, 4 N. H. 262, 265; 1835, Montgomery v. Dorion, 7 id. 475, 483, semble; 1832, Kingwood v. Bethlehem, 13 N. J. L. 221, 226 (indenture of apprenticeship; calling excused, "for the knowledge of them had been lost with the indenture itself"); 1819, Jackson v. Kingsley, 17 John. 158, 160, semble (witnesses' names torn off); 1831, Jackson v. Vail, 7 Wend. 125, 129; 1880, Congdon v. Morgan, 14 S. C. 587, 593. Contra: 1819, Gillies v. Smithers, 2 Stark. 528 (Abbott, C. J.: "The evidence of the attesting witnesses is essential to show that the bonds ever existed;") here they were said to have been destroyed).

² 1859, Smith v. Brannan, 13 Cal. 107, 115 (calling required, where by a copy the names of the witnesses appeared); 1819, McMahan v. McGrady, 5 S. & R. 314 (known attester must be called; repudiating the argument that it is useless to call him since there is nothing to testify to).

³ Gillies v. Smithers, Eng., McMahan v. McGrady, Pa., supra.

⁴ 1829, Kemper v. Pryor, 1 J. J. Marsh. 598.

¹ 1811, Jones v. Brewer, 4 Taunt. 46 ("even perhaps in some instances of sickness," his presence is not required, per Mansfield, C. J.; contra, semble, Heath, J.; all agreed in refusing to authorize a deposition to be taken, leaving the matter to be determined at the trial). Contra: 1796, Gordon v. Payne, 1 Mart. N. C. 72 (the witness when last heard from had been given up

trial would seem properly excused, there is no reason why at least the attester's deposition should not be taken.²

(7) A failure of memory, so far as it involves a general mental disability, organic in its nature, and analogous to insanity (post, § 1316), should excuse entirely from production of the person and of his deposition. But a mere casual failure of memory as to the facts of execution obviously cannot excuse; for it cannot be ascertained except after production to testify. When it appears after such production, other principles come into play; (a) the witness may adopt his attesting signature as a record of past recollection, and upon the faith of it verify the facts of execution as thus known to him to have occurred (ante, §§ 737, 747); (b) if he fails to do this, his signature may be otherwise proved, and his attestation taken as sufficient evidence of the facts of execution (post, § 1511); (c) in any case, upon his failure to recollect, the facts of execution may be proved by other qualified persons (ante, § 1302); whether, in case of such a failure to recollect, the other attesters must first be called, is another question (ante, § 1309).

(8) Where the attester is imprisoned under sentence of law, and it is thus legally impossible to secure his attendance, it should be excusable for the same reason as in the case of illness;³ but his deposition, if he is qualified to testify, should be taken.

§ 1316. Same: (9) Incompetency, through Interest, Infamy, Insanity, Blindness, etc. Where the attester has become, since the act of attestation, disqualified to give testimony, it would be useless to produce him, and production is therefore excused.

(a) This doctrine as applied to a supervening disqualification by interest has long been recognized, although in some early rulings it has been held not to apply where the interest had been voluntarily acquired by the attester.¹

by his physician; handwriting not allowed). There could be no doubt on this point to-day.

² 1820, Jackson v. Root, 18 John. 60, 80 (aged and infirm and unable to attend, but within the jurisdiction; deposition required). Compare § 1404, ante.

³ The statutes cited ante, § 1310, sometimes specify this cause of excuse.

¹ In the following rulings, subsequently acquired interest in general is treated as an excuse, except where a special proviso is noted: England: 1715, Anon, cited in 1 P. Wms. 239, semble; 1717, Godfrey v. Norris, 1 Str. 34 (the witness to a bond became administrator d. b. n. of the obligee; his hand allowed to be proved; so also of a witness to a will afterwards becoming devisee); 1798, Buckley v. Smith, 2 Esp. 697; 1802, Cunliffe v. Sefton, 2 East 183; 1829, Hovill v. Stephenson, 5 Bing. 493 ("We do not dispute the authority of any of those decisions," and even an interest acquired in a partnership would not be fatal, but here the interest acquired was purely in the specific contract attested, and "the plaintiff cannot complain that his witness is disqualified, when he himself has been the cause of the disqualification"); Can- ada: 1843, Hamilton v. Love, 2 Kerr N. Br. 243, 250, 253 (Parker, J., doubting); 1848, Doe v. Twigg, 5 U. C. Q. B. 167, 170; United States: 1833, Bennet v. Robinson, 3 Stew. & P. 227, 240 (interest as administrator, etc., sufficient, but not as assignee, this being purely voluntary and for personal benefit); 1848, McKinley v. Irvine, 13 Ala. 681, 706 (interest acquired by voluntary act; handwriting excluded); 1849, Robertson v. Allen, 16 id. 106, 107 (interest as legatee and heir; handwriting allowed); 1850, Cox v. Davis, 17 id. 714, 717 (in general; interest sufficient); 1826, Buad v. Buad, 5 Mart. N. s. 132, 134; 1820, Whittemore v. Brooks, 1 Greenl. 57; 1809, Dudley v. Sumner, 5 Mass. 439, 444, 462, semble; 1815, Scars v. Dillingham, 12 id. 358, 362 (will); 1811, Amlherst Bank v. Root, 2 Metc. 522, 532; 1858, Jones v. Phelps, 5 Mich. 218, 222 (justice of the peace disqualified as the trial judge; no exemption from calling him, the disability being the result of the party's act); 1856, Tinnin v. Price, 31 Miss. 423; 1849, Holmes v. Holloman, 12 Mo. 536 (otherwise, "the purposes of a testator might be defeated by events which no precaution on his part could anticipate or prevent");

This limitation is proper enough as a punishment, where by collusion with the proponent of the document the interest has been acquired with the purpose of disqualifying the attester; but otherwise it is harsh and improper, and the disqualification, however occurring, should suffice to excuse, the opponent having liberty to compel the attester to testify if there appears to be a need of it. — Where the disqualification was not acquired subsequently to attestation, but existed at the time of it, the attestation is void as such, and the person does not count for any purpose as an attester (ante, § 1292).

(b) Disqualification occurring through infamy, subsequently to attestation, is equally an excuse for non-production.²

(c) Disqualification through insanity, arising subsequently to attestation, is also an excuse.³

(d) Blindness would prevent the attester from identifying the maker's signature and his own; but it would not prevent him from testifying by recollection to the execution of such a document by such a person. Since, therefore, he is still qualified to testify in part at least, there would seem to be no reason for excusing his non-production as a rule, although upon a question purely as to the identity of a signature it would be useless to call him.⁴

§ 1317. Same: (10) Refusal to Testify, Privileged or Unprivileged.

(a) Where the attester is privileged not to testify, and is thus not compellable, the proponent should be excused from production.¹ Whether it is necessary to call him and learn whether he will claim his privilege in court, or whether it is sufficient if it appears otherwise that he will if called exercise his privilege, should be left to the determination of the trial Court.²

(b) Where the attester, though not privileged, nevertheless refuses to tes-

1792, Nelius v. Brickell, 1 Hayw. 19, semble; 1801, Hampton v. Garland, 2 id. 147; 1804, Hall v. Bynum, ib. 328 (not received, for a bond, where the witness had become assignee and had then assigned to the plaintiff; reason, the supposed danger of collusion and trickery); 1832, Crowell v. Kirk, 3 Dev. 355, 357; 1840, Saunders v. Ferrill, 1 Ired. 97, 101 (sufficient, whether acquired by law or by his own act; except for negotiable instruments); 1785, Davidson v. Bloomer, 1 Dall. 123; 1813, Hamilton v. Marsden, 6 Binn. 45, 47 (sufficient, even when acquired by his own act voluntarily); 1851, Loomis v. Kellogg, 17 Pa. 60, 63 (one who by accepting an executorship becomes incompetent may by his attestation be a "full witness"; when he is objected to as incompetent, "they put him in the predicament of a witness dead or out of reach of process"); 1852, Kinney v. Flynn, 2 R. 1. 319, semble (wife of the maker of a note); 1833, Lever v. Lever, 1 Hill Ch. S. C. 62, 68 (incompetency as executor, note signed by mark; witness' handwriting insufficient, unless note is shown to have existed before interest accrued); 1850, Jones v. Arterburn, 11 Humph. 97, 99 (the statutory phrase, "if to be found," for contested wills, "is not to be construed literally," and covers subsequent incompetency, as exempting production).

² 1729, Jones v. Mason, 2 Str. 833 ("as if dead"); 1815, Sears v. Dillingham, 12 Mass. 358, 361 (will).

³ 1804, Bernett v. Taylor, 9 Ves. Jr. 381; 1813, Currie v. Child, 3 Camp. 283.

⁴ The rulings are not harmonious: 1699, Wood v. Drury, 1 Ld. Raym. 734 semble (excused); 1833, Pedler v. Paige, 1 Moo. & Rob. 258, Parke, B. (not called; but "there is great weight in the reasons urged for calling the witness," i. e. that "the circumstances attending the execution might be proved by him"); 1839, Cronk v. Frith, 9 C. & P. 197; s. c. as Crank v. Frith, 1 Moo. & Rob. 262 (Abinger, L. C. B.; "He might from his recollection give most important evidence respecting it"; here the plea to an action on a bond set up fraud and intoxication at the time of execution); 1847, Rees v. Williams, 1 De G. & Sm. 314, 320 (not excused); 1806, Taylor, J., in Baker v. Blount, 2 Hayw. 404 (excused).

¹ 1849, Holmes v. Holloman, 12 Mo. 535 (heirs claimed privilege as parties; production excused); 1812, Allen v. Allen, 2 Overt. 172 (under St. 1784 and 1789, a claim of privilege by an interested witness exempts from producing him, even where the will is contested).

² Compare the analogous case of a privileged document, ante, § 1212.

tify, the proponent should be excused, provided it is made to appear that there is no collusion;³ for there is no reason why the innocent proponent should be punished for the witness' fault, especially as the latter's refusal may be designed to aid his own or the opponent's interests.

§ 1318. Same: (11) Document proved by Registry-Copy. Where a document's execution is allowed to be proved by a certified copy from an official registry, the document's execution having been duly authenticated to an officer before registration (post, § 1648), the attester of the document need not be called.¹ This result may be justified on three grounds: (a) The object of the registration system is to provide a convenient and speedy method of authenticating a document duly registered (post, § 1648), and among the other advantages thus intended to be secured is the freedom from the inconvenience of searching for and producing the attesters; (b) Since the original document in such a case is not required in such jurisdictions to be produced (ante, § 1225), the value of the attester's testimony without the document and the original signatures before him would be slight; (c) In those jurisdictions (ante, § 1290) where the present rule is now by statute confined to documents required by law to be attested, the rule cannot apply to documents — for example, conveyances — required to be authenticated before a notary or a registrar by an attesting witness, because that requirement does not make attestation an element in the validity of the conveyance, but merely provides a lawful mode of authenticating the instrument for registration.

But the principle should not apply to a document merely filed in a public office; the contents may be provable without production (ante, § 1218), but unless a mode of authentication has been provided by statute as a condition precedent to the filing or registration (post, § 1680), it would seem improper to dispense with the attester's testimony.²

³ 1828, Bomford v. Wilme, 1 Beatty 252 (the witness refused to be examined, even after attachment for contempt; held, that handwriting could be proved only after a hearing in which the opponent should have an opportunity to show collusion).

¹ 1844, Smith v. Millidge, 2 Kerr N. Br. 408, 413, semble; 1893, Hawkins v. Ross, 100 Ala. 459, 464, 14 So. 278; 1898, Foxworth v. Brown, 120 id. 59, 24 So. 1; 1885, Fletcher v. Horne, 75 Ga. 134, 137; 1840, Doe v. Johnson, 3 Ill. 522, 528; 1848, Job v. Tebbetts, 10 id. 376, 379 (without any other preliminary proof; repudiating the contrary obiter dictum in s. c. 9 id. 143, 151); 1828, Eaton v. Campbell, 7 Pick. 10, 12; 1829, Hathaway v. Spooner, 9 id. 23, 25, semble; 1832, Powers v. Russell, 13 id. 69, 75 ("where the production of a deed is dispensed with and an office copy is competent evidence, . . . the necessity of calling them is dispensed with," because the witness could not be expected to remember without seeing the original); 1854, Cou. v. Emery, 2 Gray 80, per Sbaw, C. J. (except where the original's production is required because in the party's hands as a grantee, according to § 1225, ante); 1870, Samuel v. Borrowscale, 104 Mass. 207, 209; 1872, Gragg v. Learned, 109 id. 167 (if "not made to either party to the action, nor presumed to be in the custody of either"; according to § 1225, ante); 1842, Moss v. Anderson, 7 Mo. 337, 340 (though evidence of identity may be required; and "cases may arise" in which a Court might require the attesting witness); 1868, Sharon v. Davidson, 4 Nev. 416; 1810, Carkhuff v. Anderson, 3 Binn. 4, 7, 10; 1821, Dingle v. Bowman, 1 McC. 177; 1845, McLeod v. Rogers, 2 Rich. 19, 22; S. Car. St. 1731, Gen. St. 1882, § 2226-7, Code 1902, §§ 2898, 2899 (quoted ante, § 1290); 1802, Edmondson v. Lovell, 1 Cr. C. C. 103; 1892, Paine v. Trask, 5 U. S. App. 283, 288; 1830, Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 82, semble; 1827, Williams v. Wetherbee, 2 Aik 329, 335 (here an original); 1864, Hinchcliff v. Hinman, 18 Wis. 130, 135.

Compare also the statutes cited ante, § 1310.

² Contra: 1873, Lee v. Wisner, 38 Mich. 82, 87 (boud filed in court).

§ 1319. Same: Summary. The foregoing various causes for exempting from production of the attester may be grouped under four general heads: (a) Cases where the attester cannot be communicated with at all, either because he is non-existent, or because his whereabouts or his identity is unknown; (b) cases where, though he can be communicated with, he cannot be brought into court; (c) cases where, though he can be brought into court, his testimony cannot be obtained; (d) cases where, though his testimony can be obtained, other considerations excuse its employment. It does not appear, however, that anything turns in practice upon the distinctions between these four classes; except that in cases under the second head, as already noted, the attester's deposition may be required in lieu of his testimony on the stand.

(h) "And also Authenticate his Attestation, unless it is not Feasible."

§ 1320. If the Witness is Unavailable, must his Signature be proved, or does it suffice to prove the Maker's? The question here is, as usually put: When the production of the attester is excused because he is unavailable, must at least his signature be authenticated, or may the maker's signature alone be proved, without proving that of the attester? The nature of the question, however, can be better understood if we recollect, and force into expression in the question, the true significance of proof of the attester's signature in such a case. What is it to prove his signature? It is in effect to offer in evidence the hearsay statement of the attester. The signing of a document in attestation by a witness, whether or not an express clause of attestation accompanies the signature, involves a statement by the attester that the person purporting to be the maker did then execute the document (post, § 1511). This extrajudicial statement, expressed or implied, is always, when the attester is unavailable, admissible by exception to the Hearsay rule (post, §§ 1505-1514). The question here is, not merely whether it is admissible, but whether it is preferred to any other testimony to the maker's execution. It is assumed that the attester is personally unavailable (for one of the causes noticed); and that the rule of preference is therefore to that extent disposed of, so that, if nothing more belonged to the rule, use could now be made of any competent testimony to prove the maker's execution. Is it, then, further, a part of the rule of preference that, before thus going to other testimony, the attester's hearsay statement must be used?

Stated in this way, the precise and singular nature appears of the supposed requirement of proving the attester's signature. That a preference should be given to any extrajudicial statement over testimony on the stand under cross-examination is an extraordinary measure, assuming for such a statement a value not at all to be attributed ordinarily to such statements. Nevertheless, such a preference unquestionably existed as a part of the orthodox common-law rule in England. The preference seems rarely to have been supported by any reason; and the following seems to be the most distinct effort to that end:

1834, Tracy, Sen., in Jackson v. Waldron, 13 Wend. 178, 197: "I acknowledge the reason of this preference is not at first glance perfectly obvious; and that it is not has induced some learned judges, without (I am now satisfied) due reflection, to question the wisdom of the rule, and by their doubts throw over it a shade of discredit. But . . . I am persuaded that good reasons may be found for maintaining it, over and above the consideration of its being so long settled and acknowledged. One of them, which strikes me as very apparent and forcible, is the greater risk a person incurs in forging the signatures of both witnesses and party than of the party alone; coupled with which consideration is the important one that in the suit on the obligation the person whose name was forged as the subscribing witness would be a competent witness to prove the forgery of his signature, while a party might be compelled to sit silently by (as I have myself witnessed) and see an instrument to which he was an utter stranger proved by evidence of his handwriting to have been executed by him."

In the United States, the rule was early perceived to have in most instances no more than a technical and traditional significance, and a number of Courts, believing that "a technical and artificial rule had prevailed over our right reason,"¹ refused to accept it, and declined to require proof of the attester's signature in preference to proof of the maker's. Their reasoning was as follows:

1851, Trumbull, J., in Newsom v. Luster, 13 Ill. 175: "Why proof of the handwriting of a subscribing witness should be better evidence of the execution of an instrument than that of the obligor is not very apparent, and the attempts to give a reason have not in my judgment been very satisfactory. . . . [Stating the argument of Senator Tracy, quoted supra, as to forgery,] No one can doubt that proof of the handwriting of both the subscribing witness and party would be more satisfactory than that of either one. But this is a begging of the question, which is not whether a person would incur greater risk in forging the signature of both witness and party than of the party alone. . . . Surely a person would incur no greater risk in forging his [the witness'] signature than that of the party. . . . Another reason given for the rule is that the witnesses who subscribe at the time of the execution are agreed upon by the parties to be the only witnesses to prove it, which, in the language of the Supreme Court of New York, . . . is an absurdity. . . . Proof of the handwriting of the grantor to a deed furnishes altogether more satisfactory evidence of its execution than would proof of the handwriting of the subscribing witness. When the attesting witness cannot be had, the law requires the next best evidence, which means the next best evidence of those facts to which the attesting witness if present would be called upon to testify, — that is, not merely that he signed the paper as a witness, but that the party executed the instrument. It is difficult to account for the signature of a party to a writing which he did not execute; but it is easy to imagine how a forged instrument might be established against him when it is only necessary to procure the name of a person as a subscribing witness to such an instrument, and then establish it by proof of the handwriting of the witness."

1895, Atkinson, J., in McVicker v. Conkle, 96 Ga. 584, 592, 24 S. E. 23: "The real question, then, upon the execution of a deed being as to the actual signing [by the maker], the primary inquiry should be as to the fact. . . . [The witnesses' handwriting] might be proven beyond controversy, and still the deed be a forgery; for, while the persons alleged to be subscribing witnesses may have signed the paper, that does not, except by inference, connect the alleged maker with the transaction, nor otherwise establish the execution of the deed by him. If, however, on the other hand, it be shown that the alleged maker in fact signed the identical paper offered in evidence, such evidence not only establishes directly the execution of the instrument, but likewise connects the maker directly with the transaction to which it relates. In the former case, the fact of execution would be established by inference only; in the latter, by direct evidence, and who will question that a rule is purely artificial and arbitrary which makes the former of higher proof than the latter?"

¹ 1849, Lumpkin, J., in Watt v. Kilburn, 6 Ga. 356, 358.

In order to ascertain the state of the law in the various jurisdictions, the following distinctions should be noted: (1) So far as concerns documents required by law to be attested, i. e. chiefly, wills, the question is ordinarily of little importance, because the attestation has to be authenticated in any case, as an element of validity. Furthermore, wherever by statutory restriction (ante, § 1290) the whole rule preferring the attester is confined to documents required by law to be attested, the present question disappears from consideration in regard to any other attested document; for the attester's signature need not be proved at all. Thus, the old controversy would to-day in such jurisdictions be of no consequence whatever, were it not for the will-statutes next to be mentioned.

(2) In many jurisdictions, the statute dealing with proof of wills lays down an express rule in regard to the proof of signatures where the attester is unavailable. Now some of these statutes prescribe proof of the signatures of "either the testator or the witnesses," "of the witnesses and the testator or any of them," and the like. Thus it may arise that, though (as above noted) the attester's signature ought to be proved as an element of the validity of the execution, yet under such a statute even this seems to be improperly dispensed with; and a Court may in this obscure state of things fall back upon the common-law rule of the jurisdiction.

(3) As regards the common-law rule itself, the decisions collected include two classes, — those which require the attester's signature to be proved in preference to the maker's and those which do not require it.² Now from this

² The rule on the present subject in the various jurisdictions may be gathered from the cases and statutes collected below.

For convenience' sake, the statutes dealing with the question of § 1306, ante (whether all the witnesses' signatures need be proved), and the question of § 1513, post (whether the maker's or testator's signature must be proved), have also been placed here once for all, as a single statutory clause usually deals with all three points: England: 1796, Barnes v. Trompowsky, 7 T. R. 265 (witness' signature preferred); Canada: N. Br. St. 1898, c. 35, § 39 (proof of "the handwriting of the witnesses and the testator" may be made); P. E. I. St. 1873, c. 21, § 24 (quoted ante, § 1310); United States: Ala. Code 1897, § 4276 ("[wills] must be proved by one or more of the subscribing witnesses, or if they be dead . . . then by proof of the handwriting of the testator and that of at least one of the witnesses to the will"); § 4277 (death, etc., must be shown, before proof of "the handwriting of the testator or of any of the subscribing witnesses" is admissible); 1842, Mardis v. Shackelford, 4 Ala. 493, 503 (bond; witness' signature not needed); 1843, Lazarus v. Lewin,

5 id. 457, 459, semble (deed; same; but here one witness was called, though he could not recollect delivery); 1850, Cox v. Davis, 17 id. 714, 717 (deed; same; the rule "appears to have been settled here"); 1887, Snider v. Burks, 84 id. 53, 56, 4 So. 225 (will; same); Ariz. Rev. St. 1887, § 983 (the Court "may admit proof of the handwriting of the testator, and of the subscribing witnesses, or any of them"); Ark. Stats. 1894, § 7415 ("when one of the witnesses to such will shall be examined, and the other witnesses are dead, insane, or their residence unknown, then such proof shall be taken of the handwriting of the testator and of the witnesses dead, insane, or absent, and of such other circumstances as would be sufficient to prove such will on a trial at common law"); § 7416 ("If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Court that all the subscribing witnesses are dead, insane, or absent, the Court or clerk shall take and receive such proof of the handwriting of the testator and subscribing witnesses to the will, and of such other facts and circumstances as would be sufficient to prove such will in a trial at law"); 1839, Wilson v. Royston, 2 Ark. 315, 328 (deed; witness' signature required); 1862, question must be discriminated a question arising under a different principle, namely, whether the maker's signature must also be proved, i. e. whether the Delony v. Delony, 24 id. 7, 11 (not required where witness signed by mark only); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1315 (if none are in the county, the Court "may admit the testimony of other witnesses," and "as evidence of the execution, it may admit proof of the handwriting of the testator and of the subscribing witnesses or any of them"); Commissioners' amendment of 1901 (quoted ante, § 1310); 1864, Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 393, 411 (witness' signature not required; laid down, after deliberation, as "a general rule"; but "this rule might not apply to instruments which the law requires to be attested by witnesses"); 1864, McMinn v. O'Connor, 27 id. 238, 245 (same); 1864, McMinn v. Whelan, ib. 300, 310 (same); Colo. Annot. Stats. 1891, § 4676 ("in all cases where any one or more of the witnesses" are unavailable, evidence is allowable "of the handwriting of any such deceased or absent witness as aforesaid, and such other secondary evidence as is admissible in courts of justice generally to establish written contracts generally, in similar cases"); D. C. Code 1901, §§ 131, 132 (quoted ante, § 1310); Del.: 1832, Boyer v. Norris, 1 Harringt. 22 (bill; witness' signature required); 1836, Jerman v. Hudson, 2 id. 134 (same; assignment of judgment); Ga. Code 1895, § 5245 (if the witnesses are unavailable, proof of the maker's signature is "primary evidence"; if that is unavailable, witnesses' handwriting "or other secondary evidence" may be admitted); § 3282 (proof "of their signatures and that of the testator," necessary for will); 1849, Watt v. Kilburn, 7 Ga. 356, 358 (witness' signature a mark only, and therefore "a nullity"; maker's signature sufficient); 1895, McVicker v. Conkle, 96 id. 584, 585, 24 S. E. 23 (witness' signature required; rule affirmed as settled; but policy doubted by Atkinson, J.); 1896, Baker v. Adams, 99 id. 135, 25 S. E. 28 (trial held before the statute, supra; the witnesses deceased; the maker's testimony admitted by consent); 1898, Standback v. Thornton, 106 id. 81, 31 S. E. 805 (witness' signature not necessary, under the statute); Ida. Rev. St. 1887, § 5311 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1315); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 148, § 6 (where one or more witnesses are dead, etc., "it shall be lawful . . . to admit proof of the handwriting of any such deceased, insane, or absent witness, as aforesaid, and such other secondary evidence as is admissible in courts of justice, to establish written contracts generally in similar cases"); 1851, Newson v. Luster, 13 Ill. 175 (witness' signature not required, for instruments not required to be attested; quoted supra); 1865, Fash v. Blake, 38 id. 363, 368, semble (deed; not required); Ind. Rev. St. 1897, § 2805 (if the witnesses are dead, etc., "then by proof of the handwriting of the testator or of the subscribing witness thereto"); 1838, Bowser v. Warren, 4 Blackf. 522, 524 (witness' signature required); 1848, Yocum v. Barnes, 8 B. Monr. 496, 498 (covenant; witness' signature not required); La.: 1832, Barfield v. Hewlett, 4 La.

118, 119, semble (witness' signature not required); 1845, Grand Gulf R. & B. Co. v. Barnes, 12 Rob. 127, 130 (same); Mo.: 1845, Woodman v. Segar, 12 Shepl. 90, 93 (not required; but here it was intimated that the proof of the witness' handwriting was dispensed with merely because he never had been in the State and the proof was not accessible); Md. Pub. Gen. L. 1888, Art. 93, § 337 (wills executed out of the State and not there required to be recorded; proof of testator's handwriting or of the subscribing witnesses' or "any of them," sufficient); St. 1890, c. 416, St. 1892, c. 81 (quoted ante, § 1310); 1864, Keefer v. Zimmerman, 22 Md. 274, semble (not required in certain cases); Mass.: 1814, Homer v. Wallis, 11 Mass. 309, 311 (witness' signature not required, for documents not required to be attested); 1839, Valentine v. Goodspeed, 8 Cush. 411 (same); 1892, Smith Charities v. Connolly, 157 Mass. 272, 276, 31 N. E. 1058 (mortgage; same); Mich. Comp. L. 1897, § 9280 (the Court "may admit proof of the handwriting of the testator and of the subscribing witnesses"); Minn. Gen. St. 1894, § 4437 (if the witnesses are not resident, the Court "may admit proof of the handwriting of the testator and of the subscribing witnesses"); Miss. Annot. Code 1892, § 1816 (if no witnesses can be produced, then "it may be established by proving the handwriting of the testator, and of the subscribing witnesses to the will, or of some of them"); 1838, Downs v. Downs, 2 How. 915, 925 (deed; grantor's signature and acknowledgment sufficient); Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 4619 (when one witness is examined, and the others are "dead, insane, or their residences unknown, then such proof shall be taken of the handwriting of the testator and of the witnesses dead, insane, or residences unknown, and of such other circumstances as would be sufficient to prove such will on a trial at common law"); § 4620 (if all the witnesses are dead, etc., then shall be taken "such proof of the handwriting of the testator and subscribing witnesses to the will, and of such other facts and circumstances as would be sufficient to prove such will in a trial at law"); neither of these carelessly constructed sections can be said to be intelligible; both evidently misunderstand the former law; and the words "common law" and "law" are ambiguous precisely where certainty was needed; 1857, Clardy v. Richardson, 24 Mo. 295, 297, semble (deed; witness' signature not required); Mont. C. C. P. 1895, § 2243 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1315); Nebr. Comp. St. 1899, § 2656 (if none of the witnesses are resident, etc., the Court "may admit proof of the handwriting of the testator, and of the subscribing witnesses"); Nev. Gen. St. 1885, § 2688 (if witnesses are not available, the Court, "as evidence of the execution, may admit proof of the handwriting of the testator, and of the subscribing witnesses, or any of them"); St. 1897, c. 106 (cited ante, § 1310 ; it omits to re-enact the foregoing provision); N. H.: 1834, Farnsworth v. Briggs, 6 N. H. 561, 563 (a note; witness' signature required; Parker, J., agreeing solely on authority, and approving the policy of requiring also proof of the grantor's signature); 1848, Cram v. Ingalls, 18 id. 613, 616 (possibly dispensable, where attestation is not required by law); N. M. Comp. L. 1897, § 1982 (if the witnesses are not attainable, others shall be examined "to prove their signatures"); N. Y. C. C. P. 1877, § 2620 (a will "may be established" upon proof of the testator's and witnesses' handwriting "and also of such other circumstances as would be sufficient to prove the will upon the trial of an action"); 1834, Jackson v. Waldron, 13 Wend. 178, 183, 197 (for a sealed instrument, the witness' signature required; "although many able judges have declared their dissatisfaction with the rule," per Walworth, C.; but Tracy, Sen., approved the rule); 1847, Willson v. Betts, 4 Den. 201, 209 (same, applied to a deed); N. C. Code 1883, § 2148 (proof of a will "may be taken of the handwriting, both of the testator and of the witness or witnesses so dead," etc., "and also of such other circumstances as will satisfy" of its execution); 1795, Jones v. Blount, 1 Hayw. 238 (grantor's signature objected to because the signature was not essential and did not import delivery; objection repudiated); N. D. Rev. Code 1895, § 6299 (the Court "may admit the testimony of any competent witness respecting the execution of the will, the capacity of the testator, or other material fact, and may also admit proof of the handwriting of the testator or of a subscribing witness and such other evidence as is admissible in courts of justice to establish or disprove written contracts in similar cases"); St. 1897, c. 59, Rev. Code 1899, § 3888 a (instruments in general; "nor shall it be permissible to prove such instrument or contract in any case by proof of the handwriting of said subscribing witness or witnesses as the case may be, but in all cases such instrument or contract must be proved in the same manner as one having no subscribing witness whatever"); Oh.: 1824, Clark v. Boyd, 2 Oh. 280 (57) ("under proper circumstances . . . either may be sufficient"); Okl. Stats. 1893, § 1193 (if the subscribing witnesses are unavailable, the Court "may admit proof of the handwriting of the testator and of the subscribing witness, or any of them"); Or. C. C. P. 1892, § 761 ("the handwriting of one of them, and that of the party, shall be proved"); S. C. St. 1839, Gen. St. c. 61, §§ 1870, 1871, Rev. St.

attester's signature alone suffices. This assumes that proof has voluntarily been made of the attester's signature, and asks whether the maker's additionally is needed. This involves the inquiry what is implied by the attestation, and whether proof of it suffices (not whether it is necessary), and is elsewhere considered (post, § 1513), in dealing with the Hearsay exception for Attesting Witnesses. Thus, though the question is there sometimes, in form, whether both must be proved, the real inquiry is whether the maker's

1893, §§ 2003, 2004, Code 1902, §§ 2491, 2492 (for probate in common form, handwriting of the testator and the witnesses "or any other secondary evidence admissible and sufficient by the rules of the common law"; for solemn form, handwriting of the witnesses and the testator); 1803, Taylor v. Meyers, 2 Bay 506, 1 Brev. 245 (under the statute exempting from calling witnesses to notes and bonds, their handwriting need not be proved; the Court's first opinion, which alone is given in 1 Brev., was to the contrary); 1806, Gervais v. Baird, 2 Brev. 37, semble (witness' handwriting not needed, under the same statute); 1821, Cornell v. Buckley, 1 McC. 466 (deed; witness' signature required); 1829, Hill v. Hill, 2 Hill 542, note (deed; proof of maker's signature not sufficient); S. D. Stats. 1899, § 6903 (like Okl. Stats. § 1193); Tex. Rev. Civ. Stats. 1895, § 1900 (if the witnesses are unavailable, probate may be granted "ou proof by two witnesses of the handwriting of the subscribing witnesses thereto, and also of the testator, if he was able to write"); U. S.: 1805, Wellford v. Eakin, 1 Cr. C. C. 264 (witness' signature not required); 1810, Whann v. Hall, 2 id. 4, semble (required); 1830, Walton v. Coulson, 1 McLean 120, 123 (required); 1831, Clarke v. Courtney, 5 Pet. 319, 344 (same); 1882, Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 32, 2 Sup. 313 (same); Utah Rev. St. 1898, § 3792 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1315); Vt. Rev. St. 1839, Stats. 1894, § 2363 (will-witnesses; if none reside in the State, the testimony of "other witnesses" may be received, and the Court "may admit proof of the handwriting of the testator and of the subscribing witnesses, in cases where the names of the witnesses are subscribed to a certificate stating that the will was executed as required in this chapter"); 1858, Sherman v. Transp. Co., 31 Vt. 162, 165, 175 (handwriting of a grantor, sufficient, where the attestation is "not required to the operative effect of the contract"); Va.: 1826, Gilliam v. Perkinson, 4 Rand. 325 (contract; witness' handwriting dispensed with where he signs by mark only; semble, in other cases also); 1829, Raines v. Philip, 1 Leigh 483 (maker's handwriting can be resorted to only when proof of witness' handwriting is unavailable; here, of a bond); Wash. C. & Stats. 1897, §§ 6103, 6104 (quoted ante, § 1310); Wis. Stats. 1898, § 3788 (if the attesters are unavailable, the Court may admit other testimony to prove sanity "and the execution of the will, and may admit proof of his handwriting and of the handwriting of the subscribing witnesses"); Wyo. St. 1891, c. 70, chap. III, § 3 (quoted ante, § 1310).

(not the witness') signature must additionally be proved. Courts requiring the maker's also, when the attester's is offered, need not be Courts requiring the attester's also if only the maker's is offered, though they frequently coincide; i. e. a Court might conceivably require a party proving the attester's to add the maker's, because of the insufficiency of the former (under § 1513, post), while the same Court, under the present principle, might not require the attester's if the maker's is offered. Accordingly, so far as such decisions require "both," in the sense that the attester's is needed, even when the maker's is offered, they belong here; while so far as they require "both," in the sense that the maker's is needed, even when the attester's is offered, they belong there (post, § 1513). Nevertheless, comparison should be made of the two sets of rulings in examining the law upon either point.

§ 1321. Proof of Signature dispensed with, where not Obtainable. Just as the rule of preference for the attester's testimony on the stand is not enforced where it appears that his testimony cannot be had (ante, § 1308), so also, in those jurisdictions where proof of his signature is next preferred, this requirement is abandoned where it appears that such proof cannot be had.

(a) The most common instance is that in which testimony to the identity of the handwriting cannot by honest and diligent search be obtained. The sufficiency of the search ought to be left to the determination of the trial Court; the rulings can seldom be taken as binding precedents; it seems generally accepted, however, that the search need not extend out of the jurisdiction.¹

(b) Where the witness has subscribed by mark, it may be thought impracticable to attempt to identify it in the same way as handwriting; and it is on this ground that a few Courts have dispensed with such evidence in the case of a subscription by mark.²

(c) Where the attesting signature is not to be had for purposes of authentication, either by the loss of the document or the illegibility of the writing, evidence of the attester's signature is impracticable.³

¹ Cal.: 1864, Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 393, 409 (attestation and residence out of the State, sufficient to show non-availability); approving Newsom v. Luster, Ill., infra; 1865, McMinn v. O'Connor, 27 id. 238, 245 (same); 1865, McMinn v. Whelan, ib. 300, 310 (same); Ill.: 1851, Newsom v. Luster, 13 Ill. 175 ("all that can be required in any case is that reasonable diligence should be used to procure evidence of the handwriting"; here a search for the witness in the neighboring State, where the deed was executed, or throughout the former State, was held unnecessary); Ind.: 1838, Bowser v. Warren, 4 Blackf. 522, 525 (diligence not shown on the facts; mere fact of delivery in Illinois near the border, insufficient to exempt from search); Ky.: 1824, Ford v. Hale, 1 T. B. Monr. 23 (need not go out of the State for testimony); N. Y.: 1833, M'Pherson v. Rathbone, 11 Wend. 96, 99 (search for evidence held sufficient on the facts); 1833, Pelletreau v. Jackson, ib. 110, 123 (search held insufficient); 1834, Jackson v. Wal- dron, 13 id. 178, 200, 223 (same); 1844, Northrop v. Wright, 7 Hill 476, 485 (a will more than 30 years old; no presumption of inability to find handwriting witnesses, and search held insufficient); 1847, Willson v. Betts, 4 Den. 201, 210 (such a presumption doubted; here search held sufficient); N. C.: 1840, McKinder v. Littlejohn, 1 Ired. 66, 71 (no "precise rule of law" can be made; and the trial Court's discretion as to the ability to find evidence should control); Pa.: 1820, Miller v. Carothers, 6 S. & R. 215, 223 (search held sufficient on the facts); S. C.: 1798, Hopkins v. De Graffenreid, 2 Bay 187, 192 (search to prove the hand of an old woman "who did not sign her name more than once probably in 50 years," held not necessary in the present case; here, the grantor's signature); 1839, Dawson v. Dawson, Rice Eq. 243, 254 (proof of witness' handwriting, unavailable on the facts).

² See the cases passim cited in § 1320.

³ 1796, Keeling v. Ball, Peake Add. Cas. 88

(d) Distinguish the case where the attestation is to be proved as an element in the validity of the document; for here (apart from any such express statutory exemption as is noted in the preceding section) the genuineness of the attester's signature must somehow be proved, like any other element; and if evidence is not offered, the proponent fails, even though it was out of his power to obtain it.⁴

(the witnesses being unknown, proof by the maker's admissions was allowed); 1853, R. v. St. Giles, 1 E. & B. 642 (Erle, J., declaring squarely that "in no case whatever, where the instrument is lost and the attesting witness is dead, can it be necessary to prove his handwriting"; Wightman and Crompton, JJ., merely holding that proof of the fact of attestation, and of identity of an attesting person and a deceased person, was in this case equivalent to proof of handwriting of the witness). Compare the general principle as to lost documents (ante, § 1314).

⁴ 1848, Cram v. Ingalls, 18 N. H. 613, 616 (not excused, semble, where instruments are required by law to be attested); and compare § 1513, post.

TOPIC I (continued): PROVISIONAL TESTIMONIAL PREFERENCES.

CHAPTER XLI.

SUB-TOPIC B: PREFERRED REPORTS OF PRIOR TESTIMONY.

- | | |
|--|--|
| § 1325. Introductory.
 § 1326. (a) Magistrate's Report of Accused's Statement; General Principle.
 § 1327. Same: Magistrate's Report not required if lost or not taken.
 § 1328. Same: Written Examination usable as Memorandum or as Written Confession. | § 1329. (b) Magistrate's or Coroner's Report of Witness' Testimony.
 § 1330. (c) Report of Testimony at a Former Trial.
 § 1331. (d) Deposition taken de bene esse.
 § 1332. (e) Dying Declarations, and other Extrajudicial Statements. |
|--|--|

SUB-TOPIC C: SUNDRY PREFERRED WITNESSES.

- | | |
|--|---|
| § 1335. Official Certificates.
 § 1336. Same: Celebrant's Certificate of Marriage as preferred to Other Eye-witnesses.
 § 1337. Same: Official or Certified Copies of Documents, as preferred to Examined or Sworn Copies.
 § 1338. Preference of Copy-Witness to Recollection-Witness. | § 1339. Sundry Preferences for Eye-witnesses and other Non-Official Witnesses (Writer of a Document, to prove Forgery; Bank President or Cashier, to prove Counterfeiting; Surveyor, to prove Boundary; etc.). |
|--|---|

Sub-topic B: PREFERRED REPORTS OF PRIOR TESTIMONY.

§ 1325. Introductory. As another exception to the general principle (ante, § 1286) that no classes of witnesses are preferred in our law, there is a well-established doctrine preferring a certain kind of witness in proving the terms of another person's testimony delivered infra-judicially prior to the trial in which it is offered. In determining the scope of this doctrine it is necessary to discriminate between five different sorts of prior testimony, (a) the examination of an accused person before a committing magistrate, (b) the examination of a witness before a committing magistrate, a coroner, or the like, (c) the testimony of a witness at a former trial, (d) the deposition of a witness taken de bene esse before an official for the purposes of the present trial, (e) dying declarations, or other statements admissible under Hearsay exceptions.

§ 1326. (a) Magistrate's Report of Accused's Statement; General Principle. The theory here is that, since the magistrate is required by law to take down in writing the statement of the accused, the written report thus made at the time is preferred to mere oral (or recollection) testimony of the terms of the statement; i. e. the official report is preferred not only to the recollection of any ordinary hearer but even to the recollection of the magistrate himself:

1722, Eyre, J., in R. v. Reason, 16 How. St. Tr. 35: "That which is set down in writing, if it be an examination taken in writing of a prisoner before a justice of the peace, you cannot give evidence of that examination viva voce, unless the examination be lost."

Ante, 1726, Chief Baron Gilbert, Evidence, 59: "What is reduced to writing by an officer sworn to that purpose, from the very mouth of the witness, is of more credit than what a stander-by retains in memory of the same oath; for the images of things decay in the memory, by the perpetual change of appearances, but what is reduced to writing continues constantly the same."

1839, Parke, B., in Leach v. Simpson, 5 M. & W. 309, 312: "The written deposition is the best evidence of what was said, and must first be produced before you can inquire by other means as to what passed on the occasion."

1850, Wilde, C. J., R. v. Christopher, 2 C. & K. 994, 1000, 4 Cox Cr. 81: "The reason why a deposition is the primary evidence of what passes before the magistrate is that the law casts a duty on the magistrate of taking down what the witnesses say, and the presumption is that he has done it. And therefore that which he so does becomes the best evidence."

Considering the easy accessibility of the testimony thus preferred, and the slightness of the burden imposed in preferring it (ante, § 1286), the rule may be regarded as a sound and satisfactory one.

But it will be noticed that it rests on two assumptions,—first, that the written report contains the entirety of what was said, and, secondly, that the report was made in pursuance of an official duty expressly imposed by law.¹

¹ The following list of statutes includes also those affecting other kinds of testimony, and will be from time to time referred to in the ensuing §§ 1327-1332, 1349: England: 1554, St. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13, § 4 ("Justices of the peace . . . shall before any bailment or mainprise take the examination of the said prisoner and the information of them that bring him, . . . and the same or as much as may be material thereof to prove the felony, shall be put in writing before they make the bailment"); 1555, St. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 10 ("The said justice or justices, before he or they shall commit or send such prisoner to ward, shall take the like examination of the prisoner and the information of those who bring him, and shall put the same in writing within two days after the said examination"); 1826, St. 7 Geo. IV, c. 64, § 2 (the justice shall take the examination of the prisoner "and the information upon oath of those who shall know the facts and circumstances of the case, and shall put the same, or as much thereof as shall be material, into writing"); 1849, St. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, § 17 (the justices shall "take the statement on oath" of the witnesses, and "shall put the same into writing," and cause the witnesses to sign these depositions); § 18 (the justice shall read these depositions to the accused and ask him whether he wishes to say anything in answer, "and whatever the prisoner shall then say in answer thereto shall be taken down in writing and read over to him and shall be signed by the said justices"; provided that nothing herein shall prevent the prosecution from introducing "any admission or confession or other statement of the person accused or charged, made at any time, which by law would be admissible as evidence against such person"; for other parts of this statute, see the quotation ante, § 848); Canada: Dom. Crim. Code 1892, § 590 (the testimony before a committing magistrate "shall be taken down in writing in the form of a deposition"); § 591 ("whatever the accused then says in answer thereto [the magistrate's warning] shall be taken down in writing"); N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 36, § 5 (the coroner "shall reduce the statement on oath of any witness to writing"); c. 100, § 121 (similar, for prosecutions for illegal sale of liquor); United States: Ala. Code 1897, § 5235 (committing magistrate must reduce testimony to writing); Alaska C. Cr. P. 1900, §§ 311, 315 (like Or. Annot. C. 1892, §§ 1598, 1602); §§ 273, 335, 338, 371 (like ib. §§ 1549, 1623, 1627, 1665); Ariz. P. C. 1887, §§ 1270, 1345, 1356 (committing magistrate is to reduce depositions to writing at time of complaint; but not at time of commitment, except by way of deposition de bene); St. 1903, No. 25, amending Rev. St. 1901, P. C. § 765 (examination of witnesses before the magistrate "must be reduced to writing as a deposition" in homicide, and in other cases on demand of the prosecuting attorney; the certified report "shall be prima facie a correct statement of such testimony"); Ark. Stat. 1894, § 1997 (committing magistrate in his minutes shall "make a general statement of the substance of what was proved"); § 756 (testimony before coroner of suspected persons "may be . . . reduced to writing"); § 757 ("the testimony of each witness, if material, shall be reduced to writing"); Cal. P. C. 1872, § 702 (threatened offence; the magistrate "must take their depositions in writing" of the informer and his witnesses); § 704 (if the charge is controverted "the evidence must be reduced to writing and subscribed by the witnesses"); § 869 (in cases of homicide, before the committing magistrate, "the testimony of each witness . . . must be reduced to writing; and in other cases, upon the demand of the prosecuting attorney, or the defendant, or his counsel"; it must be "corrected or added to until it conforms to what he [the witness] declares is the truth"; when taken in shorthand and transcribed and "certified as being a correct statement of such testimony," it "shall be prima facie a correct statement of such testimony and proceedings"; Colo. Annot. Stats. 1891, § 226 (examination of complainant and accused in bastardy "shall be taken down in writing"); § 874 (testimony before coroner "shall be reduced to writing"); Conn. Gen. St. 1887, § 2011 (coroner "shall reduce to writing" the testimony before him); § 157 (testimony at fire inquest to be reduced to writing and subscribed); § 3105 (illegal liquor-selling; testimony by intoxicated person "shall be taken down in writing by the magistrate or clerk," and subscribed); D. C. Comp. St. 1894, c. 14, § 2 (coroner "shall put in writing the effect of the evidence . . . being material"; and justices binding over witnesses "shall certify as well the same evidence as such bond or bonds in writing as he shall take"); Code 1901, § 194 (for the coroner, "it shall be his duty . . . to reduce the testimony of the witness to writing"); Del. Rev. St. 1893, c. 33, § 4 (coroner; testimony of each witness "if material, shall be reduced to writing" and signed; voluntary examination of suspected person shall "be reduced to writing" and signed by him if willing); c. 97, § 18 (committing magistrate shall reduce to writing the voluntary examination of accused, in cases of felony; he shall also reduce the witness' testimony to writing, "if material," and have it signed); Fla. Rev. St. 1892, § 3018 (at coroner's inquest, "the evidence of such witnesses shall be in writing, subscribed by him or her"); Ga. Cr. C. 1895, § 910 (defendant's statement; "it shall be the duty of the Court to reduce it to writing"); § 911 (in felony charge, "the Court shall cause an abstract of all the evidence to be made and returned"); § 1265 (coroner "shall commit to writing the substance of the testimony"); Haw. Penal Laws 1897, § 979 (testimony at an inquest "shall be reduced to writing by the Coroner or some other person by his direction"); Ida. Rev. St. 1887, § 8382 (testimony at coroner's inquest "must be reduced to writing"); § 7576 (before committing magistrate, testimony "must be reduced to writing, as a deposition"); § 7383 (testimony on information of threatened offence "must be reduced to writing"); § 7516 (information before magistrate; he "must" take witness' depositions in writing"); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 38, §§ 320, 348 (complaint to magistrate shall be reduced to writing); c. 32, § 13 (coroner is to have testimony of each witness "written out and signed by said witness"); Ind. Rev. St. 1897, § 1004 (justice must reduce to writing the woman's examination in bastardy); § 8324 (Court taking examination of witness brought by prosecuting attorney to complain "shall cause so much of said testimony as amounts to a charge of a felony or misdemeanor to be reduced to writing and subscribed and sworn to"); Ia. Code 1897, § 520 (testimony before coroner shall be reduced to writing); § 5227 (committing magistrate "shall" cause the "substance of the testimony" to be written out); § 5239 (when defendant waives examination, magistrate "shall take the evidence in writing of the State's witnesses," on county attorney's demand); Kan. Gen. St. 1897, c. 102, § 51 (committing magistrate shall reduce testimony to writing "when he shall think it necessary"); c. 27, § 141 (testimony before coroner "shall be reduced to writing"); Ky. Stats. 1899, § 530 (coroner shall "commit to writing the substance of the evidence"); La. Rev. L. 1897, § 662 (testimony at coroner's inquest "shall be reduced to writing"); Me. Pub. St. 1883, c. 139, § 7 (testimony at inquest "shall be in writing and signed by them"); c. 133, § 12 (at preliminary examination, magistrate may reduce to writing and have signed any witness' testimony, "when he thinks it necessary"); Mass. Pub. St. 1882, c. 212, § 32, Rev. L. 1902, c. 217, § 39 (witness' testimony is to be reduced to writing, and, if the Court requires, to be signed by witness); Mich. Comp. L. 1897, § 11801 (magistrate examining complainant shall "reduce such examination to writing"); § 11823 (testimony before justice at an inquest "shall be reduced to writing"); § 11853 (testimony before committing magistrate "shall be reduced to writing"); Minn. Gen. St. 1894, § 349 (testimony before coroner "must be reduced to writing"); § 7146 (testimony before committing magistrate "shall be reduced to writing"); Miss. Annot. Code 1892, § 823 (coroner "shall put in writing so much of the evidence given to the jury before him as shall be material"); Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 2454 ("in cases of homicide, but in no other," the evidence before a committing magistrate "shall be reduced to writing"); § 4621 (testimony of probate in support of will "shall be reduced to writing"); Mont. P. C. 1895, §§ 1431, 1680 (like Cal. P. C. §§ 702, 869); § 2795 (testimony before coroner "must be reduced to writing"); Nev. Gen. St. 1885, §§ 2689, 2704 (testimony at probate of will "shall be reduced to writing"); § 2262 (testimony before coroner "shall be reduced to writing"); §§ 4929, 4930 (so also for testimony compelled to be given in certain cases where privilege is abolished); § 3920 (threatened offences; magistrate shall take "deposition in writing" of complainant and his witnesses); § 3922 (when person complained of is brought before magistrate, he shall reduce to writing the evidence); § 3988 (complaint of offence committed; magistrate "may require their depositions to be reduced to writing"); § 4036 (at examination of defendant before committing magistrate, testimony by consent of parties "may be reduced to writing"); § 4041 (accused's statement must be reduced to writing"); § 4056 (deposition taken by magistrate conditionally "shall be reduced to writing"); N. H. Pub. St. 1891, c. 252, § 7 (testimony "may be reduced to writing by the magistrate, or under his direction, when he deems it necessary, and shall be signed by the witness"); §§ 8, 9 (magistrate "may take the examination in writing of the of the rule of the conclusiveness of the report (post, § 1349). Moreover, although the statutes do not in all cases expressly require the whole to accused person" where the case requires it, "if the accused after being cautioned consents thereto"; the caution warning him that "the questions and answers will be written and preserved and may be evidence upon his trial", c. 262, § 12 (testimony before coroner "shall be drawn up in writing and subscribed"); N. J. Gen. St. 1896, Coroners § 14 (the coroner "shall put in writing the effect of so much of the evidence given to the jury before him as shall be material"); N. M. Comp. L. 1897, § 3379 (magistrate committing for felony; testimony is to be "reduced to writing" by stenographer for transmission to grand jury); § 1982 (testimony of will witnesses shall be "reduced to writing"); N. Y. C. Cr. P. 1881, § 87 (testimony before magistrate must "be reduced to writing" and subscribed); § 778 (testimony before coroner "must be reduced to writing" by him); § 204 (testimony before committing magistrate must be reduced to writing and subscribed); N. C. Code 1883, § 1147 (testimony of accused before magistrate "shall be reduced to writing"); § 1150 (same for witnesses); N. D. Rev. C. 1895, § 7767 (threatened offences; evidence before magistrate "must on demand of the defendant be reduced to writing"); § 7961 (like Okl. Stats. § 5004); § 2019 (testimony before coroner "must be reduced to writing"); Oh. Rev. St. 1898, § 5615 (magistrate is to reduce to writing testimony of bastardy complainant); § 6055 (same for proceedings against one embezzling decedent's property); § 1221 (same for witnesses before coroner); St. 1903, Mar. 14, p. 56, § 3, amending Rev. St. § 1221 (the testimony before the coroner "shall be reduced to writing"); Okl. Stats. 1898, § 4890 (threatened offence; evidence must "on demand of the defendant be reduced to writing"); § 5005 (before committing magistrate, on defendant's demand "all the testimony in the case must be reduced to writing in the form of depositions"); § 1192 (testimony of subscribing witnesses to will "must be reduced to writing"); § 1207 (so also for witnesses to lost or destroyed will); § 4382 (so also for examination of insolvent debtor); § 1750 (testimony before coroner "shall be reduced to writing"); Or. C. Cr. P. 1892, § 1598 (statement of defendant before committing magistrate "must be reduced to writing"); § 1602 (testimony of witnesses "need not be reduced to writing," except that depositions are taken at time of complaint made); §§ 1549, 1623 (complaints must be reduced to writing and witnesses' depositions taken); § 1665 (testimony before coroner "must be reduced to writing"); Pa. St. 1869, P. & L. Dig., Fires § 4 (testimony of witnesses at fire inquest "shall be reduced to writing"); R. I. Gen. L. 1896, c. 287, § 17 (coroner "shall cause the testimony to be reduced to writing" and subscribed); S. C. St. 1839, Gen. St. 1882, § 2675, C. Cr. P. 1893, § 591, Crim. Code 1902, § 712 (the coroner is to take testimony of witnesses in writing); C. Cr. P. 1893, § 23 (the justice "may take" a witness' examination and have it subscribed; but this is apparently repealed in Cr. Code 1902, § 24); S. D. Stats. 1899, § 8301 (like N. D. Rev. C. § 7767); § 8419 (like N. D. Rev. C., § 7961); § 6904 (at a will-probate, "the testimony of each witness, reduced to writing and signed by him, shall be taken"); § 8897 (testimony on search-warrant proceedings must be reduced to writing); § 993 (testimony before coroner "shall be reduced to writing"); Tenn. Code 1896, §§ 7017, 7021 (accused's statement to be taken in writing by magistrate, and signed by accused or refusal noted; witness' testimony to be taken in writing by magistrate or under his direction, and signed by witness); Tex. Rev. Civ. Stats. 1895, § 1907 (testimony on will-probate "shall be committed to writing"); C. Cr. P. 1895, § 283 (accused's statement before magistrate "shall be reduced to writing"); § 288 (the witnesses' testimony also "shall be reduced to writing"); § 941 (justice of the peace examining witness for disclosure of crime "shall reduce said statements to writing"); § 1028 (testimony at coroner's inquest "shall be reduced to writing"); § 1049 (so also at fire inquest); Utah Rev. St. 1898, § 4523 (threatened injury; magistrate "may take their depositions in writing" of complainant and his witnesses); § 4528 (on the hearing, "the evidence, on demand of the person complained of, must be reduced to writing"); § 4670 (preliminary examination; like Cal. P. C. § 869, omitting "or the defendant or his counsel"); § 1229 (coroner "may require the testimony to be written"); § 3793 (testimony at will-probate "shall be reduced to writing"); Vt. Stats. 1894, § 4715 (justice at inquest "shall take the substance of the testimony of each witness in writing"); Va. Code 1887, § 3968 (committing magistrate may reduce testimony to writing if he "deems it proper"); § 3942 (coroner "shall" reduce testimony to writing); W. Va. Code 1891, c. 155, § 4 (testimony before coroner "shall be reduced to writing" and subscribed); c. 156, § 14 (testimony before committing justice shall be, "when the justice deems it proper or the accused shall desire it"); Wash. C. & Stats. 1897, § 6105 ("all the testimony adduced in support of the will [at probate] shall be reduced to writing, signed by the witnesses, and certified by the judge of the court"; so also § 6117); § 6682 (threatened offence; magistrate shall reduce testimony to writing); § 6699 (preliminary examination; testimony "shall be reduced to writing by the magistrate, or under his direction, when he shall think it necessary"); § 6708 (witness before magistrate, recognizing for appearance; magistrate "shall immediately take the deposition of such witness"); § 532 (testimony before coroner "shall be reduced to writing" "in all cases where murder or manslaughter is supposed to have been committed"); Wis. Stats. 1898, § 4790 (testimony before committing magistrate "shall be reduced to writing"); § 4818 (threatened offence; magistrate shall "reduce such be taken down, it is also true that the original English statutes under which the rule grew up did not require the whole to be taken. (2) As to the second requirement, it is clear that there is no general principle in the law of evidence which makes an official report a preferred testimony to the facts reported (ante, § 1286). On the contrary, the official duty leading to the report is merely that which suffices to make the report admissible at all, under an exception to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1632), instead of calling the reporter to the stand; the fact of an official duty barely suffices to secure admissibility, and cannot be thought in itself and in general to go so far as to create a preference. While it may be conceded, then, that the preference for the magistrate's report is in the specific instance a satisfactory rule, this result is to be regarded as an exceptional and unusual step, taken solely because of the official duty requiring the report; and therefore it is at least necessary that such an official duty should be expressly imposed by law. A report made merely by custom, or casually, and not under such a statutory duty, is not to be accorded such a preference. The terms of the statutes in the various jurisdictions have therefore to be kept in mind.

(1) As to the first requirement, its non-fulfilment would perhaps not affect the propriety of the present rule of mere preference so much as the propriety

This rule of preference, then, though not conceived of in England until the second century following the enactment of the first statute requiring the magistrate's report in writing,² has long been there established.³ In the United States, it seems to be generally accepted (with variances) wherever a statute makes it the magistrate's duty to report the statement in writing.⁴

Whether the report is conclusive, i. e. may be shown to be erroneous or incomplete, is a question dealt with elsewhere (post, § 1349).

§ 1327. Same: Magistrate's Report not required if lost or not taken. The notion of conditionally preferred testimony (ante, § 1286) is that it must be used before any other, if it can be. Hence, if the preferred testi-complaint to writing"); § 4872 (testimony before coroner "shall be reduced to writing," "in all cases where murder or manslaughter is supposed to have been committed"); Wyo. Rev. St. 1887, § 1882 (testimony before coroner "shall be reduced to writing").

² The doctrine first appears about 1720, in the time of R. v. Reason and Gilbert's treatise, quoted supra; before that time the magistrate came on the stand and testified orally, usually referring to his notes of the examination; for example: 1679, Green's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 159, 192, 194 (the officer taking the examination testifies to the utterances without reading the examination); 1682, Coningsmark's Trial, 9 id. 1, 23 (same; though the written examinations were in Court).

³ See the cases cited in the ensuing sections.

⁴ 1792, Benedict v. Nichols, 1 Root 434 (defendant's examination on oath touching possession of deceased's effects; being "officially taken," it was "not to be proved by parol testimony"); 1896, Leggett v. State, 97 Ga. 426, 24 S. E. 165 (magistrate's report of accused's testimony, preferred to oral evidence); 1874, Wright v. State, 50 Miss. 332 (written examination by justice must be used); 1835, People v. White, 14 Wead. 111, 123 (statements at examination not orally provable, unless the examination was never reduced to writing); 1836, People v. Moore, 15 id. 419, 421, semble (deposition must be produced, if taken); 1853, Alfred v. Anthony, 2 Swan 581, 590 (magistrate's writing preferred); 1902, Griminger v. State, — Tex. Cr., — 69 S. W. 583 (confession reduced to writing by the clerk of the grand jurors; writing not required to be put in). See also the cases in the ensuing sections, where the doctrine is assumed to exist; and also the cases requiring the written examination to be produced in proving an inconsistent statement to impeach the accused's testimony (ante, §§ 1262, 1263).

It has been sometimes improperly preferred where no statutory duty exists: 1879, State v. Branham, 13 S. C. 389, 396 (deposition of accused, taken without statutory authority; writing must be produced as preferred testimony, "where there was no obstacle"). But see this case explained post, § 1328.

The magistrate, if it is his duty, is presumed to have made a written report: post, § 1327.

mony is unavailable, either because it is lost or otherwise inaccessible, or because it never existed, the requirement of its use ceases. The magistrate's report, then, is not required, and any other testimony to what was said may be used, if the magistrate's report is lost or otherwise inaccessible,¹ or if it was irregularly taken so as to be inadmissible,² or if it was never taken in writing at all.³ But the party wishing to use such other testimony must show that the preferred testimony is unavailable; for, if a law imposed a duty for the magistrate to report in writing, it is properly assumed that the magistrate performed his duty and that such a report exists.⁴

§ 1328. Same: Written Examination usable as Memorandum or as Written Confession. If the magistrate's written report is inadmissible as such, because not taken regularly under the statute, it may still be employed in other aspects. (1) It may be referred to by the magistrate as refreshing his present memory or as a record of his past recollection (ante, § 737, 761):

1722, Pratt, C. J., in Layer's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 214: "Your objection would prevail if they were going to read a confession as evidence which was neither read to him nor signed by him. But if there is no examination reduced into writing and signed by the party, the consequence of that is that the witness is at liberty to give an account of what was said, and he may look to his notes to refresh his memory. . . . You say there is no precedent for it; for God's sake, recollect yourself; it is every day done at the Old Bailey; if a person confesseth and it be not in writing, they do prove his confession viva voce." ¹

(2) It may have been orally acknowledged by the accused to be correct, after it was read over to him, and may thus be receivable, not as the magistrate's report of the accused's statement, but as the statement itself in writing; an

¹ R. v. Reason, quoted ante, § 1326; and the citations in the next section; and the following cases: 1898, R. v. Troop, 30 N. Sc. 339 (witness' contradictory testimony at the preliminary hearing, allowed to be proved by one present, the magistrate's report being lost; good opinion by Henry, J.; two judges thought that its loss was immaterial); 1901, Marx v. Hart, 166 Mo. 503, 66 S. W. 260 (statements of the opponent, at the time of taking his deposition, admitted, the deposition being lost).

² 1791, Lambe's Case, 2 Leach Cr. L. 3d ed. 625 (quoted in the next section); 1835, People v. Hayman, M. & M. 403; 1838, R. v. Wilkinson, 9 C. & P. 662 (other evidence of a defendant's statement admitted, where a magistrate had merely returned a subsequent memorandum noting that the defendant had said nothing); 1843, Jeans v. Wheedon, 2 Moo. & Rob. 486.

³ 1722, Layer's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 214 (quoted in the next section); 1835, People v. White, 14 Wend. 111, 123; 1794, State v. Irwin, 1 Hayw. 112 ("There is certainly an impropriety in saying that evidence may be received of a confession made before a private man and that the same confession made before a justice shall not [be] because he hath omitted to perform his duty. This would put it in the power of a justice to make the confession evidence or not, at his election, and is a power the law never meant to give him. The Act is only directory; and if the Justice should not do his duty in the obeying it, that shall not be of so much prejudice to the State that the evidence shall be lost by it"); 1853, State v. Parish, Bushee L. 239 (oral evidence allowed, where the examination was not reduced to writing).

⁴ 1779, Jacobs' Case, 1 Leach Cr. L., 3d ed., 347 (as also in Hinxman's Case and Fisher's Case, cited in a note); 1830, R. v. Hollingshead, 4 C. & P. 242; Phillips v. Wimburn, ib. 273; 1837, R. v. Coveney, 6 id. 667 (it is presumed that all was taken); 1848, R. v. Martin, 6 State Tr. n. s. 925, 989; 1852, R. v. McGovern, Ire., 5 Cox Cr. 506, Torrens, J. (with hesitation); 1899, Overtoom v. R. Co., 181 Ill. 323, 54 N. E. 898 (a coroner, required by law to take in writing); 1874, Wright v. State, 50 Miss. 332, 335.

¹ Accord: 1819, R. v. Telicote, 2 Stark. 483 (noticing its availability as a memorandum for the clerk); 1825, Dewhurst's Case, 1 Lew. Cr. C. 46 (the accused neither signing nor admitting the truth of the writing, oral evidence of the accused's oral statement was given by the clerk, using the writing to refresh his memory; two other cases noted, accord); 1831, R. v. Bell, 5 C. & P. 162 (the clerk reading in the third person); 1833, R. v. Pressley, 6 id. 183; R. v. Tarrant, ib. 182; 1851, R. v. Watson, 3 C. & K. 111.

oral acknowledgment and adoption of its terms being the same in effect as a signing of it. In such a case, if the writing is produced, it is not as the preferred magistrate's report, but as the confession itself made in writing :

1791, Grose, J., in Lambe's Case, 2 Leach Cr. L. 3d ed. 625, 630 (an examination before a magistrate reduced to writing, but not signed by magistrate or accused, but orally acknowledged by the latter to be true when read over to him by the clerk): "The intention of the Legislature in passing the statute is clear and obvious. Its only object is to enable Justices of the Peace to take such information and to transmit what passes before the committing magistrate to the Court of Oyer and Terminer or Gaol Delivery, to enable the judge and jury before whom the prisoner is tried to see whether the offence is bailable, and whether the witnesses are consistent or contradictory in the evidence they give. . . . There is not a single expression in either of the statutes from which it is to be collected that the examination was directed to be taken merely as evidence against the prisoner. Nor indeed is the examination in practice ever given in evidence as a matter so required by the statutes, but containing a detail of circumstances taken under the solemnity of a public examination for a different purpose, it is more authentic on account of the deliberate manner in which it is taken. . . . The examinations which they directed to be taken became evidence, where they contained confessions, by operation of law, leaving all other confessions, good or bad, as they were before those statutes were made. . . . The examination, or paper-writing, . . . was under the circumstances of the case well received." ²

If, then, this written confession is desired to be proved, the writing must be produced or accounted for (ante, § 1230). Nevertheless, it would seem that the oral statement of the accused and his subsequent adoption of the written report are in fact two distinct statements, and therefore if it were desired to prove the first and oral one, it would not be necessary to produce the second and written one.³

It should be noted, however, that so far as the accused's statement as such is inadmissible by the rules applicable to confessions before a magistrate (ante, §§ 842-852), then both the official report and the oral acknowledgment of it are alike inadmissible.

§ 1329. (b) Magistrate's or Coroner's Report of Witness' Testimony. So far as the law imposes on a committing magistrate or a coroner the duty of making a written report of the testimony delivered before him, the principle just examined (ante, § 1326) makes this official report a preferred testimony, to be used in preference to any other :

1742, Annesley's Trial, 17 How. St. Tr. 1121; a deposition before the coroner was read; the coroner was asked: "Are these all the minutes that you took?" Coroner: "If I may say anything more from my memory, I will do it;" Counsel: "Then we will go upon the parole evidence;" Counsel for the opponent: "When an officer has taken things down in writing, it is of dangerous consequence to admit parole evidence to be given of the same things;" Counsel: "We do not insist upon it."

1839, Abinger, L. C. B., in Leach v. Simpson, 7 Dowl. Pr. 513, 515: "When testimony

² Accord: 1794, R. v. Thomas, 2 Leach Cr. L. 3d ed. 727 (after a first reading, the accused acknowledged its correctness; upon a later reading, he denied it; admitted); 1827-8, Foster's Case and Hirst's Case, 1 Lew. 46 (a confession read over, the accused not signing nor asked to sign; excluded, because "there was nothing to show that she admitted it to be true").

³ Contra: 1879, State v. Branham, 13 S. C. 389, 397 (though the magistrate has no duty to examine and report in writing, yet if he does, and the accused signs, the writing must be produced).

has been reduced to writing by a person of competent authority, the writing is in the first instance, the only proper evidence of that testimony"; Parke, B.: "That deposition is the best evidence of what was said."

1875, Brett, J., in R. v. Taylor, 13 Cox Cr. 77: "Being before the magistrates, and the law saying that the deposition is primary evidence, the deposition should be put in; but for that reason only."

This application of the principle, like the preceding one, was not recognized till the 1700s;¹ but since that time it has been unquestioned in England.² In the United States also it is accepted, with only an occasional contrary ruling; for there is no reason to discriminate between an accused's statement and a witness' testimony, except so far as the statute may in the latter case not impose the duty of reporting it in writing.³

The same qualifications here apply that have been noted for the case of an accused's statement in the preceding sections. The preference being only conditional upon the availability of the magistrate's report, any qualified witness is receivable if the official written report is lost or otherwise inaccessible,⁴ or if it is inadmissible because irregularly taken,⁵ or if it was never

¹ 1679, Wakeman's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 591, 651 (Oates' examination before the Council, proved orally by one of the Councillors); 1679, Knox's Trial, ib. 763, 789 (justice's examination proved orally by the justice).

² 1789, Warren Hastings' Trial, Lord's Journal, May 27 (Nuncomar's examination having been taken down in writing, an oral report of it was excluded); 1839, R. v. Taylor, 8 C. & P. 726; 1839, Leach v. Simpson, 5 M. & W. 309, 7 Dowl. Pr. 513 (applied to civil and criminal cases equally); 1877, R. v. Dillon, 14 Cox Cr. 4 (an information in writing before a magistrate, the charge itself being made orally; the written information required).

³ To the following, add the cases, cited ante, §§ 1262, 1263, requiring a deposition to be produced for contradicting a witness, and the cases in the next notes infra: Ark.: 1839, Dunn v. State, 2 Ark. 229, 248 (defendant's affidavit before coroner, and coroner's testimony on the stand as to the examination before him, excluded, the written report of the examination being available); 1855, Atkins v. State, 16 id. 568, 588 (witness' prior inconsistent testimony before magistrate; deposition must be produced if available); 1876, Talbot v. Wilkins, 31 id. 411, 421 (testimony before bankruptcy-commissioners; written deposition "the only admissible evidence"); 1878, Shackelford v. State, 33 id. 539, 542 (deceased witness before examining magistrate, the law requiring only a reduction of the substance in general to writing; oral evidence allowed); 1894, Cole v. State, 59 id. 50, 52, 26 S. W. 377 (defendant's inconsistent testimony at inquest; coroner's report required); Cal.: 1866, People v. Robles, 29 Cal. 421, semble (magistrate's report not required); 1872, Hobbs v. Duff, 43 id. 485, 490, semble (written record necessary; here it showed that there had been nothing to record); 1872, People v. Devine, 44 id. 452, 458 (contradiction in deposition; showing the deposition not required); 1875,

People v. Curtis, 50 id. 95 (under P. C. § 869, the magistrate's report is not preferred); Ga.: 1875, Cicero v. State, 54 Ga. 156, 158 (magistrate's examination, if taken, preferred to oral report, and must be accounted for); 1882, Williams v. State, 69 id. 11, 30 (whether the magistrate's report of testimony is preferred to any other, left undecided); 1900, Haines v. State, 109 id. 526, 35 S. E. 141 (magistrate's report, not preferred); Ill.: 1899, Overtoom v. R. Co., 181 Ill. 323, 54 N. E. 898 (coroner's report of inquest-testimony, preferred to party's stenographer's report); Ind.: 1878, Woods v. State, 63 Ind. 353, 357 (oral testimony excluded, where the examination had been reduced to writing, in accordance with the law; unless the writing is unavailable); Mich.: 1868, Lightfoot v. People, 16 Mich. 507, 513 (said to be "presumptively the best evidence"); 1889, People v. Hinchman, 75 id. 587, 589, 42 N. W. 1006 (preliminary examination; report is the "only admissible evidence," when "present in Court"); N. J.: 1824, State v. Zellers, 7 N. J. L. 220, 236 (coroner being obliged to take the testimony in writing, other evidence of it was rejected); S. C.: 1888, State v. Jones, 29 S. C. 201, 227, 7 S. E. 296 (coroner's report of testimony, termed the "best evidence"; Branham case, ante, § 1328, approved); Tenn.: 1872, Wade v. State, 7 Baxt. 80, 81, semble (any one may report the testimony, even if the magistrate has taken it in writing); 1872, Titus v. State, ib. 132, 137 (magistrate's writing is the "best evidence of what she did say").

⁴ 1722, R. v. Reason, 16 How. St. Tr. 31, 35 (magistrate's report required, "unless you show you are disabled to do it by some accident or other"; "unless the examination be lost"); 1844, Pearce v. Furr, 2 Sm. & M. 54, 58 (lost report of examination by magistrate; magistrate allowed to testify to the witness' testimony itself; but the Court assumed this to be equivalent to the contents of the paper).

⁵ 1881, Roberts v. State, 68 Ala. 515, 525

taken in writing at all;⁶ and it is assumed, until the contrary is shown, that the magistrate has done his duty by making a written report.⁷

Whether the report may be shown to be erroneous or incomplete is another question (post, § 1349).

§ 1330 (c) Report of Testimony at a Former Trial. (1) There has never been, in the practice of the common law, any person required or even authorized by law to take in writing the testimony of the witnesses. Hence, the rule from the beginning has always been that no preferred witness is recognized, in proving testimony given at a former trial; in other words, any one who heard it may testify from recollection, with or without the aid (ante, §§ 737, 761) of written notes:

1810, Mansfield, C. J., in Doncaster v. Day, 3 Taunt. 262: "What a witness has sworn . . . may be given in evidence either from the judge's notes, or from notes that have been taken by any other person who will swear to their accuracy; or the former evidence may be proved by any person who will swear from his memory to its having been given."¹

(2) The report of a stenographer is no doubt more trustworthy in the ordinary case than mere recollection; but regard being had to the serious burden of searching for a preferred source of evidence and of showing it to be unavailable (ante, § 1286), the advantage to be gained by requiring a stenographic report to be used if available does not seem worth the inconvenience; and such an innovation is properly discouraged by the Courts:

1891, McIver, J., in Brice v. Miller, 35 S. C. 537, 549, 15 S. E. 272: "While it may be true that what a witness writes down himself, or what is contained in some paper written by another and signed by himself, may be the best evidence of what the witness has said on a former occasion, it does not follow that where a third person, be he stenographer or not, takes down in writing what a witness said, this writing is the best evidence, in such a sense as to exclude any other. Stenographers are no more infallible than any other human beings, and while as a rule they may be accurate, intelligent, and honest, they are not always so; and therefore it will not do to lay down as a rule that the stenographer's notes when translated by him are the best evidence of what a witness has said, in such a sense as to exclude the testimony of an intelligent bystander who has heard and paid particular attention to the testimony of the witness."²

(reduced to writing, but not signed; any one who heard, admissible); 1880, Brown v. State, 71 Ind. 470, 475 (the testimony being taken irregularly in writing, oral report was admitted); 1840, People v. White, 24 Wend. 520, 533 (the witness' statement before the coroner may be proved orally to contradict him, where the coroner's writing was inadmissible); 1874, Alston v. State, 41 Tex. 40 (irregularly taken; oral report admissible).

⁶ 1877, Nelson v. State, 32 Ark. 192, 196 (perjury before a coroner; the testimony not being reduced to writing, oral evidence allowed); 1882, Robinson v. State, 68 Ga. 833; 1872, Wade v. State, 7 Baxt. 80, 81.

⁷ 1779, R. v. Fearshire, 1 Leach Cr. L., 3d ed., 240; and cases cited ante, § 1327. Contra: 1875, People v. Curtis, 50 Cal. 95, semble.

¹ Accord: 1685, Fernley's Trial, 11 How. St. Tr. 381, 434; Ga. Code 1895, § 5186, Cr. C.

§ 1001 (provable by "any one who heard it"); 1870, Roth v. Smith, 54 Ill. 431; 1871, Hutchings v. Corgan, 59 id. 70 (by a juror, admitted); Oh. Rev. St. 1898, § 5242 a; 1850, Kendrick v. State, 10 Humph. 479, 488.

Whether in malicious prosecution the former testimony can be proved only by the witness himself involves another question (post, § 1416).

² Accord: 1895, Sanders v. State, 105 Ala. 4, 16 So. 935, semble; 1893, Maxwell v. R. Co., 1 Marv. 199, Del. Super., 40 Atl. 945 (report of testimony taken before grand jurymen; a jurymen may testify to testimony there given yet not found in the report); 1894, German N. Bank v. Leonard, 40 Nebr. 676, 684, 59 N. W. 107; 1891, Brice v. Miller, 35 S. C. 537, 549, 15 S. E. 272 (quoted supra); 1898, Garrett v. Weinberg, 54 id. 127, 31 S. E. 341 (stenographer's report not preferred to counsel's notes); 1897, Kellogg v. Scheuerman, 18 Wash. 293, 51

That the stenographer is an official one does not make the case any stronger so far as concerns the probable accuracy of the report; nor does it bring the case within the principle of the preceding sections, for the stenographer does not act as an independent officer of the Court, but only under the orders of the judge or the State's counsel; in most jurisdictions the official duty of the stenographer has not even sufficed to admit the reports as an exception to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1669), and there seems little judicial disposition to require such reports to be produced as preferred testimony.³ — Whether former testimony may be proved at all by a judge's notes or by any other hearsay reports is another question (post, §§ 1666-1669).

§ 1331. (d) Deposition taken de bene esse; Affidavit. A deposition, in the narrow sense of the word, i. e. testimony given extrajudicially before a specially authorized officer for the purpose of subsequent use at a trial, stands upon a footing entirely different from that of the preceding sorts of testimony. In a deposition, the testimony is the writing taken down by the officer and signed by the deponent. The officer's writing is not his report of the witness' oral deposition; there is only one testimonial utterance, — the writing. It is on its face singular that this difference of theory should be so solidly established between a deposition in the narrow sense and the testimony before a committing magistrate, because in both cases the writing is commonly required to be signed by the witness. But the explanation seems to lie in the history of the two kinds of testimony. In the common-law theory of trials, the testimony was what the witness said orally before the jury or the magistrate. In the statute of 1554 (quoted ante, § 1326) the magistrate was required to reduce it to writing; but the general theory continued unaltered. But at that time, and until the 1800s, there were in common-law practice no depositions de bene (post, § 1376). The power to order these taken was conceived to be exercisable in Chancery alone, and the statutory conferring of these powers on the common-law Courts in the 1800s was merely a grant of such power and practice as had been recognized in Chancery. Now the Chancery practice was moulded after the practice of the Canon law in the Ecclesiastical Courts; and in this practice all testimony was taken in writing, and in the theory the testimony or deposition was the writing and nothing else. The result was that the statutory adoption of the Chancery deposition-practice in the common-law Courts involved naturally the adoption of its theory of testimony as applied to depositions. Thus, side by side, in the common-law Courts, was found one theory for ordinary testimony and another for depositions de bene.

Pac. 344 (stenographer's report of testimony of defendant in malicious prosecution, not preferred to defendant's own account of it); 1883, Rounds v. State, 57 Wis. 45, 51, 14 N. W. 865 (stenographic report of testimony of defendant and witnesses, not preferred). Compare the cases of contradictory testimony (ante, § 1263).

³ Not required: 1886, Brown v. State, 76 Ga. 626; 1897, Hinshaw v. State, 147 Ind. 334, 47 N. E. 157; 1876, State v. McDonald, 65 Me.

467 (it "may be proved by any one who heard and recollects it"). Required: 1894, Carrico v. R. Co., 39 W. Va. 86, 90, 19 S. E. 571 (but where the witness made an illustration not reported, it was shown by other testimony). Compare Pa. St. 1887, P. & L. Dig. Witnesses, § 6 (notes of former testimony may be used; but oral proof suffices where the testimony is used merely to contradict); and the cases cited ante, § 1263.

It results from this, of course, that the written deposition, being itself the only testimonial utterance, must be produced, like any other writing, — a rule unquestioned. Furthermore, if the written deposition is lost, the whole is lost, for there is no other testimonial utterance; hence, the terms of the lost writing are the thing to be proved, not the oral answers to the questions.¹ So, too, if the written deposition, being irregularly taken, is inadmissible, the oral answers cannot be proved.

For an affidavit, as for a deposition, the writing is the sole testimonial utterance; and the deductions from this theory applies equally to affidavits.²

§ 1332. (e) Dying Declarations, and other Extrajudicial Statements. Here it is necessary to notice three discriminations. (a) Where A orally makes a statement, and afterwards makes in writing a statement on the same subject, the two are distinct, and the oral one may be proved without regard to the writing. (b) Where A makes an oral statement, and B writes down its terms, B's writing is merely B's statement of what A has said; and unless B is a preferred witness, A's oral statement may be proved by any hearer without calling for B's writing. (c) Where A and B are negotiating, and the terms of the transaction are reduced to a writing adopted by both, the oral negotiations become immaterial and the writing, being the only act recognized in law, may alone be used, on the principle of integration (post, § 2425). With these distinctions in mind, it remains to examine the rules applicable to written testimonial statements admissible under Hearsay exceptions.

(1) Dying declarations. (a) Where an auditor has made a written statement of the declarant's oral utterances, this written statement is not preferred testimony, and therefore need not be produced;¹ for there never was any principle in the law of evidence preferring one person's written memorandum of testimony to another's oral or recollection testimony. Nor is the case changed because the person thus making a written statement was a magistrate having power to administer oaths or take testimony on a preliminary hearing;² for such a person has no duty or authority by law to report dying declarations, and it is solely by virtue of an express duty, as we have seen, that a magistrate's report of testimony is preferred to other witnesses. (b) Where a written memorandum thus taken down is read over to the declarant and signed by him, the writing becomes a second and distinct declaration by him, and therefore on principle his first and oral declaration is provable by any auditor without producing the second and written one. Such is the result accepted by a few Courts;² but the majority, misapprehending the nature of the written utterance, and proceeding apparently on the mistaken analogy of a deposition, require the writing to be produced.² Of course, if the written one is desired to be proved, it must be produced.

¹ 1840, Com. v. Stone, Thacher Cr. C. 604, 608 (a deposition in perpetuam was not recorded in season; on a charge of perjury in it, the deposition not being receivable, the parol testimony was excluded).

² 1877, State v. Kirkpatrick, 32 Ark. 117, 119 (perjury by affidavit; production required).

¹ Cases cited post, § 1450.

² Cases cited post, § 1450.

(c) Where the declarant makes one oral statement, and afterwards on a separate occasion a second statement, the latter being in writing or orally made but taken down in writing and signed, there are here clearly two distinct statements (whatever view may be held as to (b) supra), and therefore the first or oral statement may be proved without producing the other or written statement; this is generally accepted.³ Distinguish from this question the operation of the principle of Completeness (post, § 2099), which requires the whole of a single utterance to be proved, and not merely fragments; this principle has nothing to do with the mode of utterance as written or oral; it requires that the whole, whether written or oral, be proved, and it permits one separate utterance to be proved without regard to another separate utterance, whether either or both are oral or written.

(2) Other statements admitted under Hearsay exceptions. In general, as already noted, the writing down of one person's hearsay statement by another person without a legal duty to report, cannot make the latter's writing a preferred testimony.⁴ It need only be added that the statements admissible under exceptions to the Hearsay rule are in many instances originally and solely written statements, — as, entries in the course of business, certifications of copies, and the like, — so that the writing is required to be produced as the statement itself, and not merely as one person's report of another's statement.

Sub-topic C: SUNDRY PREFERRED WITNESSES.

§ 1335. Official Certificates. In general, our law of evidence regards with no special favor the certificate of an official as to a thing done or seen by him. It does not ordinarily even admit such a certificate as evidence under an exception to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1674). But so far as statutory provision has cured the objection of the Hearsay rule and made them admissible, it has done nothing more; no such weight attaches to them that in general they become a preferred source of testimony. The effect of such statutes is occasionally misunderstood, and their purpose as curing the Hearsay defect is exaggerated into a purpose to prefer them as testimony; but such rulings must be looked upon as heterodox.¹ Barring these heterodox rulings, the general principle is so well established as to need only occasional decision, that an official certificate is not a preferred source of testimony as against other witnesses.² It follows, in the spirit of the same

³ Cases cited post, § 1450.

⁴ 1855, Fackler v. Chapman, 20 Mo. 249, 253 (declarations of slaves written down by persons questioning them; writing not preferred).

¹ 1876, Fornette v. Carmichael, 41 Wis. 200 (official scaling of logs, preferred testimony); 1882, Steele v. Schrickler, 55 id. 134, 140, 12 N. W. 396 (same).

In Louisiana, where Continental legal traditions prevail and the exaltation of documentary evidence is noticeable, this doctrine has been applied to prefer the register of baptism as proof of birth: 1829, Broussard v. Mallet, 8 Mart. N. S. 269; 1834, Duplessis v. Kennedy, 6 La. 231, 242; 1836, Stein v. Stein, 9 id. 278, 280. Contra: 1886, Com. v. Stevenson, 142 Mass. 466, 8 N. E. 341; 1888, Hermann v. State, 73 Wis. 248, 41 N. W. 171 (baptismal certificate or register, not preferred to the mother's testimony).

² 1880, Com. v. Damon, 128 Mass. 423 (like the next case); 1899, State v. Vaughan, 152 Mo. 73, 53 S. W. 420 (coroner's report of post-mortem autopsy not preferred to an attendant physician's testimony); 1897, Duren v. Kee, 50

general notion, that such a certificate is not preferred to the testimony on the stand of the official himself.³

The practical difficulty, however, lies in distinguishing the application of this settled principle from the principle of the "parol evidence" rule, or rule of Integration (post, §§ 2427, 2450). By the latter principle, when an act is done in writing or is required by law to be done in writing, the only thing that can be material and provable is the writing itself. A parol act is nothing, has no legal effect, and therefore cannot be proved. The question thus often arises whether a particular official writing is merely an official report of a distinct act done in parol and legally effective in parol, or whether the official writing is the sole effective act; for in the former aspect, the official report of it is not a preferred testimony, and the parol act may be proved by any competent witness; while in the latter aspect the official writing, being exclusively the act itself, must be produced. The solution of such a question depends entirely on the substantive law defining the nature of the act; it is enough here to point out the nature of the problem.⁴

§ 1336. Same: Celebrant's Certificate of Marriage as preferred to Other Eye-witnesses. In spite of long tradition to the contrary, the effort is frequently made to persuade a Court to declare the celebrant's register or certificate of the performance of a marriage-ceremony to be a preferred testimony to that of other eye-witnesses of the ceremony. No doubt the evidence of a certificate is more trustworthy, in that to be false its falsity would involve either forgery or a crime equivalent to perjury, while that of a witness on the stand would involve only perjury. But this relative advantage is not to be considered (ante, § 1286) in view of the serious burden of search or proof of loss involved in preferring its production; while the testimony of the celebrant is in itself no more valuable than that of any credible eye-witness. That the register or certificate of marriage is not preferred to testimony of other eye-witnesses has long been settled:

S. C. 444, 27 S. E. 875 (survey by judicial order not preferred). So also a publisher's statutory affidavit of publication is not preferred: 1882, Matthews v. Supervisors, 48 Mich. 587, 12 N. W. 863; 1893, Seattle v. Doran, 5 Wash. 482, 484, 32 Pac. 105, 1002 (similar; repudiating Wilson v. Seattle, 2 id. 543, 549, 27 Pac. 474). But distinguish Iverslie v. Spaulding, 1873, 32 Wis. 394, 396 (affidavit of posting of notice of tax-sale; being a part of the record of proceedings, its production was required).

³ 1830, Jackson v. Russell, 4 Wend. 543, 547 (statutory certificate of a Surrogate that no will was filed, not preferred to other testimony; "his certificate was made evidence for greater convenience, not because it was a higher species of evidence than his oath in open court"); 1889, People v. Paquin, 74 Mich. 34, 36, 41 N. W. 852 (non-payment of liquor-tax; county treasurer's record not preferred to oral testimony of his deputy); 1824, Perry v. Block, 1 Mo. 484 (survey-plat not preferred to testimony of surveyor). Whether the official may contra- dict his own certificate is a different question (ante, § 530).

⁴ The following cases will serve as illustrations: compare the cases cited post, §§ 1352, 2427, 2453: 1859, Stearns v. Doe, 12 Gray 482, 486 (register of ship not preferred to prove ownership; possession or acts of ownership held competent); 1870, Wayland v. Ware, 104 Mass. 46, 51 (record at the War Department of enlisted volunteers credited to a town, not preferred evidence as to D.'s having been included in that enlistment; the fact being one "which may exist in and be proved by a record, but which is not necessarily so to be proved"); 1895, Com. v. Walker, 163 id. 226, 39 N. E. 1014 (prison-keeper's record of prisoner's account of himself, not preferred); 1892, Curtis v. Wilcox, 91 Mich. 229, 237, 51 N. W. 992 (clerk's note of filing of mortgage, treated as the best evidence); 1895, Nelson v. Bank, 16 C. C. A. 425, 69 Fed. 800, 32 U. S. App. 554 (notary's certificate not required in proving demand, presentment, and notice).

1840, Dr. Lushington, in Woods v. Woods, 2 Curt. Eccl. 516, 522: "A register is not to be considered the best evidence of a marriage, nor has it ever been so considered in the books and authorities bearing on the question. The rule respecting best evidence is that you are not allowed, where there is evidence of a superior character, to give inferior evidence, unless you account for the non-production of the best evidence; the effect of which is to exclude all other evidence till the absence of the best evidence is accounted for. But I am of opinion that the register is not in contemplation of law the best evidence, for these reasons: first, that registration is not necessary for the marriage itself; secondly, that no error or blunder in the register could affect the validity of the marriage; and thirdly, that registration is not like an agreement or a deed in writing and the contents of which cannot be proved by viva voce evidence, but it is a mere record afterwards of what has been done, . . . not the compact itself."¹

It has also been at times maintained that the particular persons signing the register as attesting witnesses preferred to other eye-witnesses. This, and the supposed rule that in actions for criminal conversation and prosecutions for bigamy the eye-witnesses of the marriage-ceremony must be produced (in the old phrase, that a "marriage in fact" must be proved), are in essence rules of Quantity, not of Preference, and are therefore elsewhere examined (post, §§ 2085-2088).

§ 1337. Same: Official or Certified Copies of Documents, as preferred to Examined or Sworn Copies. There have also been occasional attempts to introduce a rule of preference for an official or certified copy of a public document as against a sworn or examined copy. In the traditions of the common law, the former sort was given so little regard, obnoxious as it was to the Hearsay rule, that only in a narrow class of cases—since much enlarged by statute in later times—was it admitted at all (post, § 1677); much less did it receive recognition as a preferred source of testimony. The reasons for this, and the occasional success of the effort to lay down a rule of preference, have already been dealt with in considering the rules for proving the contents of documents (ante, § 1273).¹

§ 1338. Preference of Copy-Witness to Recollection-Witness. In proving the terms of a document not available in court, there is a decided difference of value between a witness who has written down the terms directly upon reading the original—i. e. has made a copy—and a witness who trusts wholly to recollection. Whether in any or in all cases the superior value of a copy-witness should so outweigh the burden of requiring his production that a rule of preference should be established (ante, § 1286) is a matter that has much concerned the Courts. All the questions that concern rules of preference as between copy-witnesses and recollection-witnesses, and between different kinds of copy-witnesses, have already been considered elsewhere (ante, §§ 1265-1275), in dealing with the modes of proving the contents of documents. It need here only be said that to a limited extent, and depending on special considerations, in harmony with those here noted (ante, § 1286), there is a rule of preference for copy-witnesses over recollection-witnesses. This forms therefore the third established specific rule of conditional preference.

¹ The authorities are more conveniently collected in one place, with other rules for proof of marriage (post, § 2088). For cases preferring a certificate or register of baptism or birth, see ante, § 1335.

¹ The authorities are there collected.

§ 1339. Sundry Preferences for Eye-witnesses and Other Non-Official Witnesses (Writer of a Document, to prove Forgery; Bank President or Cashier, to prove Counterfeiting; Surveyor, to prove Boundary; etc.). It has already been seen (ante, § 1286) that there is in general no principle of preference among witnesses; that such rules of preference are limited to a few definite cases, of which the attesting-witness to a document's execution, the magistrate's official report of testimony, and the copy-witness to a document's contents are the only established ones,—each of these resting on a peculiar tradition or policy. Apart from these cases, a few attempts are recorded, from time to time, to establish a rule of preference in sundry situations where one class of persons is presumably better equipped testimonially than another. These attempts for the most part invoke as authority a ruling¹ delivered under the influence of that indefinite "best evidence" notion so often invoked for various purposes up to the end of the 1700s (ante, §§ 1173, 1174). This ruling in Williams v. East India Co. has long been repudiated in England;² but for a time it tended to produce considerable effect upon the law of evidence in this country. In a few distinct lines of cases its authority was thought particularly suggestive:

(1) It was thought that for proving the genuineness of a document the alleged writer was a preferred witness;³ but it is generally conceded that no such rule of preference exists.⁴

(2) As a specially fitting application of the preceding rule, it was for a long time (until the era of State bank-currency ended) a much-agitated question whether in proving the forgery of a document—particularly a bank-note—the person whose name was forged (for example, the president or the cashier of the bank) was not a preferred witness, as against (for example) one who was familiar with the signature. This requirement received scanty judicial support,⁵ and was generally negated.⁶ Yet statutes were in many

¹ 1802, Williams v. East India Co., 3 East 193 (injury by an explosive put on board a ship without due notice; the defendant's officer delivered it, and the first mate, deceased, received it; the plaintiff was held bound to call the defendant's officer, as the only remaining eye-witness; and his failure to call him was held ground for a non-suit).

² 1826, Koster v. Reed, 6 B. & C. 19 (insurance on a ship that never arrived; a rumor being offered that the ship had foundered but the crew escaped, held that it was not necessary to call some of the crew or show diligent search for them; repudiating such an application of the best-evidence principle; Williams v. E. I. Co. was cited in argument).

³ 1796, Grose, J., in Stone's Trial, 25 How. St. Tr. 1313 ("Whenever you bring evidence for the purpose of proving a fact, you must give the best evidence. The fact intended to be proved to the jury is that this came from Mr. Stone, written by his order. Who is the best evidence to prove that? Why, the man who wrote it, in this and in every case, whether the matter be criminal or civil").

⁴ 1885, Royce v. Gazan, 76 Ga. 79; 1821, Abat v. Riou, 9 Mart. La. 465, 466 (not decided); 1873, Smith v. Valentine, 19 Minn. 452, 454 (proving a decree signed by a judge; the judge not preferred to the clerk of the court); 1836, Osborne v. State, 9 Yerg. 488 (issuing justice not preferred to a constable, to authenticate an execution); 1848, McCully v. Malcom, 9 Humph. 187, 192 (genuineness of a warrant; the issuing justice not preferred witness, though present in court).

⁵ 1830, Cayford's Case, 7 Greenl. 57, 60 (president or cashier of a domestic bank must be called; but not of a bank in another State).

⁶ 1801, R. v. M'Guire, 1 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 311, note, Chambre, J.; 1802, R. v. Hughes, ib., Le Blanc, J. (cashier, not preferred); 1886, Lefferts v. State, 49 N. J. L. 26, 27, 6 Atl. 521 (testimony of the supposed signer of a document, jurisdictions thought necessary for repudiating it.⁷ To-day, it may be supposed that no Court would sanction such a rule.

(3) It was suggested in a few jurisdictions that the surveyor of a boundary was to be preferred to any other competent witness; but this never received any sanction.⁸

as to the signature's genuineness, not preferred to one who knows his handwriting); 1831, Hess v. State, 5 Oh. 5, 7 (teller of a bank, admitted to testify to forgery of signatures of president and cashier; "there is not such a distinction between one whose knowledge is of his own handwriting and the knowledge of another's on the same subject as constitutes the former evidence of a superior degree to the latter"); 1843, Foulke's Case, 2 Rob. Va. 836, 841. Compare also the cases cited ante, §§ 570, 705, some of which imply the same result, and arose out of the same controversy.

⁷ A few of these statutes, however (as in Florida and Massachusetts), still recognize a modified preference: Can. Crim. Code 1892, § 692 (on a trial involving counterfeit coin, "any other credible witness suffices," and no mint officer, etc., need be called); Ariz. P. C. 1887, § 1657 (forgery, etc., of bill or note of corporation or bank; "persons of skill," competent to prove forged nature of document); Cal. P. C. 1872, § 1107 (forgery, etc., of bank-bill; "persons of skill," admissible to prove counterfeit nature of bill); Colo. Annot. Stats. 1891, § 1268 ("persons of skill," admissible to prove forgery of bill or note of bank or company on prosecution therefor); Fla. Rev. St. 1892, § 2910 (in prosecutions for forgery, etc., of bank-notes, "the testimony of the president and cashier of such banks may be dispensed with, if their place of residence is out of the State or more than 40 miles from the place of trial; and the testimony of any person acquainted with the signature of such president or cashier, or who has knowledge of the difference in the appearance of the true and counterfeit bills" is admissible); Ida. Rev. St. 1887, § 7868 (forging, etc., a bill, etc., of an incorporated company or bank; "persons of skill," admissible to prove forgery); Ind. Rev. St. 1897, § 1892 ("cashier of a bank purporting to have issued" a note, bill, draft, certificate of deposit, or other instrument, is a sufficient witness to genuineness); Ia. Code 1897, § 4870 (forgery of bank-bill, etc.; "persons of skill," admissible to prove bill, etc., to be counterfeit); Kan. Gen. St. 1897, c. 102, § 226 ("persons of skill, or experts" may testify to genuineness of bill, etc., "or other writing"); Mass. Pub. St. 1882, c. 204, § 10, Rev. L. 1902, c. 209, § 11 (in charges connected with counterfeit bank-bills, the testimony of president or cashier is not preferred if residing out of the State or more than 40 miles from place of trial, and testimony of other persons competent to distinguish the forgery is admissible); Mich. St. 1851, Comp. L. 1897, § 11668 (in prosecutions for forgery, etc., of bank-bills, "the testimony of the president and cashier of such bank may be dispensed with, if their place of residence shall be out of this State or more than 40 miles from the place of trial, and the testimony of any person acquainted with the signature of the president or cashier of such banks, or who has knowledge of the difference in appearance of the true and counterfeit appearance of such bills or notes" may be admitted); Minn. Gen. St. 1894, § 5763 (substantially like Mich. Comp. L. § 11668); Mont. P. C. 1895, § 2084 (like Cal. P. C. § 1107); Nev. Gen. St. 1885, § 4646 ("persons of skill," admissible to prove forged nature of bill or note of incorporated company or bank, on trial for forgery, etc.); N. M. Comp. L. 1897, § 1178 (substantially like Mich. Comp. L. § 11668); N. D. Rev. C. 1895, § 8216 (like Cal. P. C. § 1107); Okl. Stats. 1893, § 5229 (like Cal. P. C. § 1107); Or. Cr. C. 1892, § 1819 (in prosecutions for forging, etc., bank-bill, "the testimony of any person acquainted with the signature" of the officer authorized to sign, "or who has knowledge of the difference in appearance of the true and counterfeit bills or notes thereof," is admissible to prove the bill's counterfeit character); Pa. St. 1852, P. & L. Dig. Witnesses, § 7 (testimony of expert witnesses to counterfeit paper, or coin, admissible, without requiring proof "of the handwriting or the other tests of genuineness" as heretofore); R. I. Gen. L. 1896, c. 280, § 6 (counterfeit bank-bill; testimony of purporting signer shall not be required when he is out of the State or resides out of it or more than 30 miles distant, but any competent witness knowing his hand, or familiar with the difference between false and true bills and skilled therein, is admissible); S. D. Stats. 1899, § 8673 (like Cal. P. C. § 1107); Utah Rev. St. 1898, § 4857 (like Cal. P. C. § 1107); Wash. C. & Stats. 1897, § 7132 ("Persons of skill shall be competent witnesses to prove a forgery"); Wis. Stats. 1898, § 4626 (substantially like Mich. Comp. L. § 11668); Wyo. Rev. St. 1887, § 934 (on trial for forgery, etc., of bill or note of incorporated company or bank, "any person of skill may be witness" to prove the forgery).

Add also the statutes which admit the affidavit of a State or Federal treasurer to prove the forgery of government paper (post, § 1710).

⁸ 1809, Bowling v. Helm, 1 Bibb 88 (the surveyor running a boundary, not preferred to any other witness); 1818, Grubbs v. Pickett, 1 A. K. Marsh. 253 (surveyor not preferred to prove boundary-correspondence); 1860, Richardson v. Milburn, 17 Md. 67 (line of a fence-survey; the testimony of the surveyor held not preferable to that of an eye-witness); 1853, Weaver v. Robinett, 17 Mo. 459 (boundary lines provable by any one knowing them; field notes, survey, surveyor, or a witness of the survey, not preferred); 1899, King v. Jordan, 46 W. Va.

(4) Where lack of consent was an essential element in a crime, — as, the owner's lack of consent, in larceny, — it was suggested that the only person who could certainly know the fact was the owner himself, and that he should be called. This rule, however, which obtained a foothold in a few jurisdictions, seems not to be in truth a rule of Preference, and is elsewhere dealt with (post, § 2089).

(5) That which was merely a common practice in England came to be in a few American jurisdictions a fixed rule; namely, that all the eye-witnesses of a crime, so far as available, must be called by the prosecution, — a rule particularly invoked in prosecutions for homicide. It is not a rule of Preference, however, but a rule of Quantity, and is elsewhere dealt with (post, §§ 2079–2081).

(6) In a few casual instances, attempts have been made, usually unsuccessful, to introduce some specific rule of preference for which no authority exists.⁹

From all such suggested rules of preference should be distinguished (as already noted in § 1335) questions involving the principle of “parol evidence” or Integration (post, §§ 2425, 2429), i. e. whether in a given instance the act was done in writing. If an act is done in writing, the writing must be produced in order to prove the terms of the act; but if the act as legally done and effective was in parol, and the doer merely wrote down a memorandum of it, then the parol act may be proved without producing the writing, because there are no rules of preference which can require it instead of other testimony. In which of these aspects a given transaction is properly to be viewed depends entirely on the intent of the parties and the substantive law applicable; it is enough here to call attention to the nature of the problem.¹⁰

106, 32 S. E. 1022 (in ejectment, a plat or survey of the lines is not essential evidence).

That a map need not be official, nor a photograph be proved by the photographer, is noticed ante, § 794.

⁹ 1814, Beeler v. Young, 3 Bibb 520 (in proving age, a family Bible entry is not preferred to oral testimony); 1875, Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49, 52 (fact and condition of bodily injuries; medical testimony not preferred); 1825, Buckner v. Armour, 1 Mo. 535 (book-entrant not preferred, to prove items of goods sold, etc.); 1896, Domschke v. R. Co., 148 N. Y. 337, 42 N. E. 804 (the testimony of an owner, collecting his rents by an agent, as to their amount, excluded in the absence of a reason for not producing the agent, “who had personal knowledge,” the former’s testimony being “not the best evidence of the fact”); 1840, Vairin v. Ins. Co., 10 Oh. 223, 225 (authority by vendee to vendor to hold a boat as collateral security; vendee not a preferred witness to the facts).

¹⁰ The following cases will serve as illustrations: 1841, Pharr v. Bachelor, 3 Ala. 237, 246 (written appraisal of value, not preferred); 1850, Sparks v. Rawls, 17 id. 211, 212 (in voice of goods; testimony by maker as to value, received without producing invoice); 1890, Pelican Ins. Co. v. Wilkerson, 53 Ark. 353, 356, 13 S. W. 1103 (inventory required by insurance policy to be kept; upon its loss without fault, other evidence of amount of goods lost is admissible); 1899, Rissler v. Ins. Co., 150 Mo. 366, 51 S. W. 755 (account-books not preferred as evidence of sales); 1834, People v. Peck, 11 Wend. 604, 611 (register of authorized church-voters, authorized by statute, not preferred to other evidence).

SUB-TITLE II (continued): RULES OF TESTIMONIAL PREFERENCE.

TOPIC II: CONCLUSIVE (OR ABSOLUTE) PREFERENCES.

CHAPTER XLII.

§ 1345. Nature of a Conclusiv Testimonial Preference.

§ 1346. Cases involving the Integration ("Parol Evidence") Principle, distinguished (Corporate Records, Judicial Records, Contracts, etc.).

§ 1347. Cases involving the Effect of Judgments, distinguished (Judgments, Certificates of Married Women's Acknowledgments, Sheriffs' Returns, Judicially Established Copies, Land Office Rulings, etc.).

§ 1348. Genuine Instances of Rules of Conclusive Preference; General Considerations of Policy and Theory applicable.

§ 1349. Same: (1) Magistrate's Report of Testimony.

§ 1350. Same: (2) Enrolled Copy of Legislative Act; may the Journals override it?

§ 1351. Same: (3) Certificate of Election.

§ 1352. Same: (4) Sundry Official Records and Certificates (Certificates of Jurat, of Acknowledgment of Deed, of Record of Deed, of Ship Registry, of Protest of Commercial Paper; Legislative Recitals in Statutes).

§ 1353. Constitutionality of Statutes making Testimony Conclusive; General Principles.

§ 1354. Same: Application of the Principles (Liability in Tort, Contract, or Crime; Presumptions as to Tax-Collectors' Deeds, Railroad Commissioners' Rates, Immigration Officers' Certificates, Referees' Reports, Insolvency, Gaming, etc.).

§ 1345. Nature of a Conclusive Testimonial Preference. The nature of a conclusive preference as distinguished from a provisional preference (ante, § 1285) is in itself simple. In the latter, the preferred witness is to be called first, so that his knowledge, whatever it amounts to, may be availed of; but when this has been done, the field is still open for other witnesses; these may support or they may contradict the preferred witness; his testimony is in no sense final. In short, the preference for him is provisional only, and as against other witnesses it lasts only until his testimony is finished. But in the former class, the preferred witness is not merely called first; his testimony, when produced, is taken as final. No other witnesses will be allowed; the error of his testimony, if any, cannot be shown by other and contradicting witnesses. In short, his testimony is conclusive.

That such a strict and absolute effect should be conceded to any human being's testimony is indeed extraordinary, and it may well be asked whether our law of evidence recognizes any rule of preference of the conclusive sort. May not the apparent cases of conclusive preference be explainable as in truth results of other independent principles of substantive law, sometimes loosely dealt with in terms of "conclusive evidence"? No doubt this is the true explanation of most of the instances in which such a term is employed, and it remains to ascertain whether, after all such explanations, there exist any instances of conclusive preference in the shape of genuine rules of evidence. The various instances to which the term "conclusive evidence" has been more or less plausibly applied may be grouped into three classes, i. e. two classes of rules clearly non-evidential, and one class clearly evidential (so far as it has any recognition). The first two must here be briefly considered.

§ 1346. Cases involving the Integration ("Parol Evidence") Principle, distinguished (Corporate Records, Judicial Records, Contracts, etc.). There are innumerable cases in which a writing is regarded as the sole and exclusive object of proof because of the "parol evidence" or Integration principle (post, §§ 2400, 2478). This principle assumes that, by some provision of law, or by the parties' intent, the act effective in law is a single written memorial, and that no parol act is to be regarded as of any effect for the purpose. Where this is the situation, it is obvious that the terms of the writing are alone to be proved; the writing must be produced, or, if it is unavailable, its terms must be proved. Here it is clear that the writing is not "evidence," nor "conclusive evidence," of the act; for it is the act. That the writing cannot be shown to represent inaccurately some prior parol conduct, is not because the writing is conclusive evidence of what that parol conduct was, but because the parol conduct is immaterial and ineffective, and therefore (ante, § 2) cannot be proved at all. It is not because we trust conclusively to the writing's testimony of what the parol conduct was, but because we do not care what the parol conduct was, and are not allowed to ascertain.

In consequence of this principle of Integration, then, the question is constantly presented whether a specific writing has become the sole act material to the case; and this is purely a question of the substantive law applicable to the kind of transaction involved. It is not a question of a rule of evidence, — as later more particularly noted (post, § 2400). The treatment of such questions would be here out of place and impracticable. It will be enough to note some illustrations of the kind of problem presented. For example, whether a corporate record can be shown to be incorrect depends on whether by the substantive law a corporate doings to be effective must be done in writing, — even though the question may be expressed by asking whether the written record is conclusive.¹ So where a surety gives bond to answer for an official's defalcation, to hold that the State auditing books are not conclusive is to say that he, the surety, has contracted to be responsible for the actual amount missing, and not for the amount recorded in the books as missing.² So where a statute prohibited a town to maintain as a schoolmaster a person not having a certain certificate of qualifications, to hold that those qualifications could not be shown by evidence without producing the certificate is not to hold the certificate conclusive evidence of them, but to hold that the only fact material under the law was the possession of a specific writing.³ So, in a prosecution for publishing a seditious article in a newspaper, to hold that the proprietor's filing a sample copy at the registry-office as required by statute is "conclusive of publication" is merely to hold that the filing of such a copy is an act of publication for the purposes of the penal law.⁴ Again, in an issue over the boundary of land granted by the Government, a ruling that the official survey is conclusive is not necessarily a ruling as to its conclusive testimonial effect, but signifies that the survey is a part of the grantor's description of the land conveyed, and is therefore part of the deed of grant.⁵ Other illustrations are furnished in those cases where certain judicial action will be taken according as a specific document does or does not exist, irrespective of any attempt to ascertain and establish the truth of the assertions in the document. For example, a person claiming to be a foreign envoy will be treated judicially as such if the Executive has recognized him as such, irrespective of the truth of the case;⁶ a foreign commission carried by a ship will be held "conclusive" of its national character, i.e. no attempt to investigate further will be made;⁷ a judge's certificate as to what passed at a trial will be treated as "conclusive" in an application for a new trial,⁸ i.e. so far as concerns the terms for granting a new trial, one of them is that the trial judge's certificate shall state certain things. In some jurisdictions the answer of a garnishee as to how far he is chargeable shall be "conclusive,"⁹ i.e. for the purpose of allowing the use of garnishee-process, one of the terms of its allowance is that the garnishee's statements, whether true or not, shall be the basis of action. Finally it may be noted that a Court record is "conclusive" as to the proceedings of the Court, not because it is a preferred source of evidence of the things actually done in parol, but because it is itself the judicial act and the parol matters are not the judicial acts.¹⁰

¹ 1851, Greeley v. Quimby, 22 N. H. 335, 338 ("as the law required that the return of the selectmen laying out the road should be in writing, no other proof can be substituted for it"); and cases cited post, § 2451.

² 1878, State v. Newton, 33 Ark. 276, 284.

³ 1819, Com. v. Dedham, 16 Mass. 141.

§ 1347. Cases involving the Effect of Judgments, distinguished (Judgments, Certificates of Married Women's Acknowledgments, Sheriffs' Returns, Judicially Established Copies, Land Office Rulings, etc.). In considering the effect to be given to a judgment in another Court or cause, and especially a foreign judgment, when offered to sustain an action brought to enforce it or pleaded in defence to another action brought for the same claim, it is common to speak of the judgment in terms of evidence and to describe its effect by the phrase "conclusive evidence."¹ Is a judgment, then, an instance of a rule of conclusive preference, making the other Court's certificate that Doe has or has not a certain cause of action a conclusive testimony to that fact? By no means. The theory of the use of judgments is not a matter to be lightly dogmatized about; yet it seems clear that the operation of recognizing it in

⁴ 1848, R. v. O'Doherty, 6 State Tr. n. s. 831, 874.

⁵ 1901, Allmendinger v. McHie, 189 Ill. 308, 59 N. E. 517 (refusing to let a surveyor impeach a recorded plat made by statute equivalent to a deed); 1814, Ringold v. Galloway, 3 H. & J. 451, 461; 1897, Carter v. Hornback, 139 Mo. 238, 40 S. W. 893.

⁶ Post, § 2574.

⁷ 1822, Santissima Trinidad, 7 Wheat. 283, 335.

⁸ 1718, R. v. Mothersell, 1 Stra. 93; 1874, Exp. Gillebrand, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 52.

⁹ 1896, Phillips v. Meagher, 166 Mass. 152, 44 N. E. 136.

¹⁰ Post, § 2450.

¹ E.g. Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Hall v. Obder, 11 East 118 ("evidence of the debt"); Brougham, L. C., in Houlditch v. Donegall, 2 Cl. & F. 470 ("a foreign judgment is only prima facie, not conclusive evidence of a debt").

support of a plaintiff or in defence of a defendant is upon analysis not at all an employment of evidence. It is rather the lending of the Court's executive aid, on certain terms, to a claimant or a defendant, without investigation of the merits of fact. The closest analogy is that of an alias execution; when the legal effectiveness of a first execution has expired without the party's obtaining satisfaction of the judgment, he may without a new trial reinvoke the executive aid of the Court and obtain a second writ of execution, because the original judgment or order of the Court to make satisfaction has not yet been fulfilled. In such a case the Court lends its executive aid because of its own order or judgment already rendered; there is no question of re-trying the facts of the claim, but merely of whether and on what terms it will grant anew its executive aid. Now the act of the Court in giving effect through its own officers to a judgment in another Court or cause does not in its nature differ from the issuance of an alias execution; it differs only in regard to the terms upon which this effect and aid will be granted. Not upon the mere existence of another Court's judgment will the second Court lend its own aid; but only for certain kinds of judgments from the other Court. If the present Court believes that there was in the other Court a fair and full investigation of the facts, including a due summoning of parties bound to obey the summons, an opportunity for the full hearing of evidence on both sides, and an honest and intelligent deliberation by the tribunal over the evidence, then the present Court will lend its enforcing aid as if to its own judgment. The fairness, fulness, and legality of the other Court's investigation are merely the main circumstances affecting the present Court's willingness to lend its judicial aid and to treat the other Court's judgment or order as its own. That a domestic judgment is ordinarily conclusive and cannot be collaterally attacked involves in truth merely a general duty and practice of domestic Courts to aid in enforcing one another's judgments without attempting to investigate anew the truth of the facts thereby adjudged to exist. That a foreign judgment by a Court not having jurisdiction, or by a Court imposed upon by fraud, or by a Court acting itself fraudulently, will not be enforced, is a proposition which in legal theory is precisely what it purports to be; namely, not the declining to take certain testimony as conclusive, but the failure to give enforcement to an order by another Court which cannot be enforced by this Court's officers unless this Court chooses to order it. The important feature is that in either case — whether treating or not treating the judgment as conclusive — there is no process of judicial investigation, resulting in taking the judgment as the conclusive testimony to some ulterior and main issue before the Court, but there is merely a declining or a granting the Court's aid to carry out an order of another Court. If the judgment is recognized as conclusive, then the plaintiff offering it is given an order to enforce it, or, when it is pleaded in bar, is denied an order to enforce his claim. If the judgment is not recognized as conclusive, then an action or a defence based on it is rejected, and the state of facts as to the original claim is investigated in a practically distinct proceeding, in which the prior judgment plays no part except in sometimes affecting the burden of proof. The mode of dealing with a judgment, therefore, involves two alternatives. On the one hand, the Court may act upon and enforce the other Court's judgment without investigating the facts adjudged. On the other hand, it may decline to aid in enforcing the other Court's order, and may investigate the facts for itself. In neither alternative is the judgment used as conclusive evidence.²

It follows, then, that so far as any certificates, orders, findings, or other official determinations are to be assimilated to judicial judgments, they will be accepted by the Court and acted on as "conclusive," i. e. without allowing a new investigation of the facts. How far certain kinds of official determinations are thus to be assimilated to judicial judgments because of the judicial nature of the proceedings in the course of which they were rendered, is a question belonging to the law of Judgments, and not to the law of Evidence. It may, however, be noted here that there are five sorts of such documents (other than formal judgments of other Courts) as to which this question of "conclusiveness" has been most commonly raised.

(1) The certificate of the magistrate, notary, justice, or other officer, taking the privy examination and acknowledgment of a married woman that a deed signed by her was executed of her own free will and with full knowledge, was at common law not open to disproof of its correctness, because it was regarded as in the nature of a judicial determination; but other views have in some jurisdictions prevailed, often in virtue of express statutory provision.³

(2) A sheriff's return, besides being admissible as an official statement (post, § 1664), is also usually treated as conclusive (i. e. not to be shown erroneous) to the same extent that the other parts of the same judicial proceeding are conclusively determined by the judgment, i. e. as against the parties and their privies; while as against the sheriff himself it will be affected by the doctrines of estoppel.⁴

² This theory of the nature of the act of enforcing another Court's judgment seems to harmonize with that of Mr. F. Pigott in his acute and philosophic treatise on Foreign Judgments, p. 20.

³ See the different theories expounded in the following cases: 1828, Elliott v. Peirsol, 1 Pet. 328; 1880, Johnson v. Van Velsor, 43 Mich. 208, 219; 1843, McNeely v. Rucker, 6 Blackf. 391; 1870, Woodhead v. Foulds, 7 Bush 222; 1898, Heaton v. Bank, 59 Kan. 281, 52 Pac. 876 (citing cases); 1840, Harkins v. Forsyth, 11 Leigh 294, 301; 1861, Dodge v. Hollinshead, 6 Minn. 25, 39; 1898, Davis v. Howard, 172 Ill. 340, 50 N. E. 258.

The following list will give a clue to the chief distinctions and authorities: 1893, Edinburgh A. L. M. Co. v. People, 102 Ala. 241, 14 So. 656; 1885, Petty v. Grisard, 45 Ark. 117; 1856, Woods v. Polhemus, 8 Ind. 60, 66; 1859, Tatum v. Goforth, 9 Ia. 247; 1870, Ford v. Teal, 7 Bush 156; 1877, Pribble v. Hall, 13 id. 61, 65; 1873, Lockhart v. Camfield, 48 Miss. 470, 489; 1888, Mays v. Pryce, 95 Mo. 603, 612, 8 S. W. 731; 1897, Spivey v. Rose, 120 N. C. 163, 26

S. E. 701; 1862, Truman v. Lore, 14 Oh. St. 144, 151; 1903, Western Loan & S. Co. v. Waisman, — Wash. —, 73 Pac. 703.

⁴ The following cases will give a clue to the distinctions and authorities: 1809, Gyfford v. Woodgate, 2 Camp. 117 (not conclusive as to the consent of the plaintiff to an alias fi. fa.); 1848, State v. Lawson, 8 Ark. 380, 384 (conclusive against himself, and in actions between third persons, but not against the plaintiff in action against the sheriff for wasting goods levied on); 1882, Hunt v. Weiner, 39 id. 70, 75 (creditor's bill; return of nulla bona conclusive); 1827, Watson v. Watson, 6 Conn. 334 (not conclusive on execution or mesne process); 1842, Niles v. Hancock, 3 Mete. 568, 569 (return of service of copy of citation; conclusive as to the copy's correctness); 1849, Browning v. Flanagan, 22 N. J. L. 567, 573 (held conclusive as between debtor and creditor and their privies, and also against the sheriff himself always, but not in the sheriff's favor; here, not in an action for escape; cases copiously cited); 1897, Campbell Cn. v. Marder, 50 Nebr. 283, 69 N. W. 774 (not conclusive).

(3) The establishment of a copy of a lost deed by judicial proceedings allowed by statute for that purpose might be regarded as conclusive of the terms of the deed, provided the result of the proceeding were regarded as a judgment affecting all persons concerned; but such does not seem to be the effect generally conceded.⁵

(4) The obsolete "trial by certificate" (as when the fact of bastardy was determined by certificate of the bishop offered in a common-law court) was in reality the acceptance of a judgment of an ecclesiastical or other tribunal upon a matter committed to its jurisdiction.⁶

(5) The certificate or ruling of an officer of the Federal land office is, upon certain matters, in effect the judgment of a competent tribunal, and is therefore "conclusive."⁷

§ 1348. Genuine Instances of Rules of Conclusive Preference; General Considerations of Policy and Theory applicable to them. After thus discriminating those instances of conclusiveness which in reality involve some application of the principle of Integration or the principle of Judgments, it is practicable to examine the cases in which some genuine rule of conclusive testimonial preference is put forward for recognition. Certain general considerations must first be noticed.

(1) The practical mark of distinction between instances of the "parol evidence" (or Integration) principle and genuine instances of conclusive preferences is this: When the writing in the former instance is lost or otherwise unavailable in Court, then its terms must be proved by copy or otherwise, and if it never existed as required by law, then nothing can be proved (post, §§ 2425, 2453); while in a case of conclusive testimonial preference, if the preferred testimony is not to be had, then the field is open to any other evidence of the fact. For example, if a judicial record never was made, the oral proceedings cannot be proved, because the only effective judicial act is the writing;¹ and if the record was made but has been lost, then the terms of the lost writing, not the parol proceedings, must be proved.² But in the case of a magistrate's report of testimony taken before him,³ or an election commission's certificate of the result of the election,⁴ or the official enrolment of a legislative act,⁵ the effective and material legal act is still the testimony uttered, or the vote cast, or the yeas and nays voiced. Though conclusive credit may be given to the report by the magistrate, or the commission, or the presiding officer, still his document can never be legally anything more than a testifying to the act of another person; hence, though this report if available may be treated as conclusive, yet if the report was never made, then the effective act of testifying or voting may be otherwise proved,

⁵ Cases cited ante, § 1273; post, § 1660.

⁶ 1591, Abbot of Strata Mercella's Case, 9 Co. Rep. 31 a; 1628, Coke upon Littleton, 74 a; 1768, Blackstone, Commentaries, III, 333; 1793, Ilderton v. Ilderton, 2 H. Bl. 145, 156 (trial by bishop's certificate, held not applicable in a Scotch dower case; the opinion brings out the jurisdictional nature of the controversy).

⁷ 1903, De Cambra v. Rogers, 189 U. S. 119, 23 Sup. 519.

¹ Sayles v. Briggs, 4 Metc. 421; post, § 2450.

² Mandeville v. Reynolds, 68 N. Y. 528, 533; post, § 2450.

³ Ante, § 1327; post, § 1349.

⁴ Post, § 1351.

⁵ Post, § 1350.

and if the report was made but is unavailable through loss or destruction, then also the testifying or voting may be otherwise proved. The preference applies only when there exists a testimony available for the purposes of preference; and the loss of the preferred testimony therefore leaves the testifying or voting (since it is throughout the effective act for legal purposes) still provable by such evidence as remains available.

(2) Upon what general considerations of policy, if at all, should any rule of conclusive preference be recognized? It is obvious that the recognition of such a rule is an extreme step to take. It amounts almost to an abdication of the Court's judicial functions (post, § 1353). To forego investigation into the existence of a fact because a certain officer not having judicial powers or opportunities of investigation has declared it to exist or not to exist, and to accept his statement as conclusive and indisputable, is in effect to refuse to exercise, as regards that specific fact, that function of the investigation and final determination of disputes which is the peculiar attribute of the Judiciary as distinguished from the Executive and the Legislature. That the Court may, if it chooses, in dealing with evidence, take such a step seems clear,—though whether the Legislature may constitutionally oblige it to do so is another question (post, § 1353). But obviously it is a step which will not be taken except when clearly indispensable as the best practical method of settling disputes and giving stability to the interests of all concerned. It would seem, a priori, that such a rule does become the most practical solution in two kinds of situations, and in two only:

(a) A judicial judgment binds only the parties to the specific litigation, and therefore the same question of fact must be investigated anew, even innumerable times, between parties not affected by prior judgments. There may therefore be an analogous situation in which innumerable parties will be affected by a fact common to the rights or duties of all; and this fact, in the absence of a judicial proceeding binding on all, may be from time to time differently determined by different juries and judgments in successive litigations. In such a case, all the rights of the innumerable parties affected by this fact might be doomed to a perpetual instability; for no one concerned can predict what the issue will be in the possible litigation of innumerable successive adversaries. It would therefore be highly desirable, if a definite and trustworthy official certification of the fact had been authentically and openly made, for the judiciary to announce as a settled rule that this official certification would invariably be accepted in a judicial investigation as conclusive. Thus all the vital advantages of stability would be secured, and the disadvantages of possible error could be regarded as comparatively trifling. The typical, perhaps the sole case illustrating these conditions is that of the officially enrolled copy of a legislative act, used as conclusive evidence of the terms of the legislative enactment and the proceedings of its adoption (post, § 1350).

(b) It may occur that shortly after the doing of a legal act all ordinary evidence of its doing and its terms is likely to become practically unavailable, either because documents are destroyed or lost, or because witnesses are tampered with or become incompetent or non-compellable to testify. If a class of cases existed in which this dearth of satisfactory evidence habitually occurred, and if at the same time a trustworthy official statement of the fact as it was had been made close to the time of the fact and with the most satisfactory data before the officer, it might well be thought that on the whole a closer approach to the truth could be reached by accepting the official statement as conclusive, instead of by making the attempt to weigh the scanty or untrustworthy evidence that might be available for the purposes of the subsequent judicial investigation. It would be essential for such a situation that the official statement should be especially trustworthy, that the ordinary evidence subsequently available should be especially untrustworthy or scanty, and that both of these features should habitually be present in that class of disputes; but, given these three conditions, the case would seem to present a fair justification for refusing to investigate in the ordinary way and for taking the official statement as conclusive testimony to the fact in issue. The typical, and perhaps the sole case, illustrating these conditions, is that of an election officer's certificate as to the number and tenor of votes cast and the qualifications of the voters (post, § 1351).

It may be added, finally, that wherever a rule of conclusive preference can be laid down at all, it can apply only to a written official statement, not to testimony on the stand. The statement must be official, because the sanctions of the official oath should at least be present, or else the statement is no more trustworthy than any other person's. The statement must be in writing, because otherwise the recollection-testimony, even of an official, is no better than another's recollection. No one has ever thought of suggesting a rule of conclusive preference for any testimony other than official written statements.

§ 1349. Same: (1) Magistrate's Report of Testimony. Where a committing magistrate is required by law to make a written report of the statement of the accused person under examination and of the testimony of the witnesses, this report, as already noticed (ante, §§ 1326-1329), must be produced as a preferred testimony to the words of the statement and the testimony. But is this report to be given such further and paramount weight that it is to stand as conclusive and irrefragable by any evidence of its error? In the first place, it can hardly be contended that the express legal duty of the magistrate to make the report invests it with such conclusiveness; there is certainly no such general principle applicable to statements made under official duty. In the next place, the magistrate's report is not governed by the "parol evidence" theory of judicial records (post, § 2450); for testimony is not a judicial act; and the theory of judicial records is merely that the judicial act is originally done and constituted in writing, and the testimonial utterance of a witness or the accused is distinct from any judicial act done as a part of the record. Furthermore, neither of the general considerations of necessity and policy (mentioned in § 1348, ante) can apply to the present case to make it desirable to take the magistrate's report as conclusive. Finally, considering the circumstances under which such reports are drawn up and the unfair consequences that may often follow from the inability to expose their errors, policy seems rather to require that they should not be treated as conclusive :

1844, Reporter's Note, to 2 Moody & Robinson 487 (approved by Alderson, B., in 1 Den. Cr. C. 542, as "admirably discussed"): "[Questions may arise] as to the extent to which other evidence is to be excluded; in the determination of which the necessity of the case, in some instances, the purposes of the enactment, in others, must be looked to. Thus, judicial records are not only primary, but from their nature conclusive evidence of the decisions of Courts of justice. . . . [But as to depositions taken in criminal trials,] evidence is admissible by way of explanation, or to prove that the party made other statements besides those reduced into writing; otherwise the safety of prisoners and the credit of witnesses would depend on the honesty and accuracy of the clerks who take the examination. . . . Even if the entire examinations of the witnesses and the committal of a prisoner take place at the same time, it would seem most inconvenient, as well as unreasonable, to make the written examination conclusive as to all the preliminary statements of the witnesses on which it is founded."

The precedents on the subject must be considered separately for the case of an accused person's statement and that of a witness's testimony; for the doctrine has received different treatment in the two cases. In connection with both, it is to be remembered that the statutes on the subject of the magistrate's duty (ante, § 1326) often require him to take down no more than "the substance" of what was said or "so much as may be material" :

(a) The rule seems to have become settled in England during the 1800s that the magistrate's report is conclusive as to the statement of the accused.¹ But this rule has been accepted in only a few American jurisdictions.² The rule, as accepted, applies only to such utterances as the magistrate has purported to take down; hence, utterances made at another time than the formal statement, or at that time but apart from the formal statement, may be proved by other testimony; the general notion being that so far as the magistrate's report goes, it is not to be contradicted.³ It must be noted, on the

¹ 1816, R. v. Smith, 1 Stark. 242 (evidence denying the administration of the oath to the defendant when examined, excluded; Le Blanc, J., "could not allow that which had been sent in under the hand of a magistrate to be disputed"); 1833, R. v. Bentley, 6 C. & P. 148 (mistake in entering the defendant's statement as a complaint, not allowed to be shown); 1833, R. v. Lewis, ib. 161; 1836, R. v. Walter, 7 id. 267; 1839, R. v. Pikesley, 9 id. 124 (that the accused had been sworn).

² See the cases in the next note, and also these: 1874, Wright v. State, 50 Miss. 332 ("no parol evidence of what the prisoner may have said on that occasion can be received"; unless the writing cannot be had); 1898, Powell v. State, — id. —, 23 So. 266 (other testimony inadmissible, where this is available; it is "exclusive"); 1901, Cunning v. State, 79 id. 284, 30 So. 658 (Wright v. State approved).

³ Such seems to be the principle of the sometimes obscure precedents: 1835, R. v. Spilsbury, 7 C. & P. 187 (remarks by the defendant during the examination of the witnesses, and not when himself examined, admitted); 1838, R. v. Morse, 8 id. 605 (blanks cannot be filled; certain names here omitted in the clerk's written report of the testimony); 1846, R. v. Weller, 2 C. & K. 223 (remark of the defendant made while a witness was testifying, excluded); 1850, R. v. Christopher, ib. 994 (the magistrate's notes having been given to the clerk to write them up in deposition-form, the clerk at his office asked some additional questions, and wrote them in; then in Court the depositions were later read over before the defendant and signed by the witnesses; held that the answers made to the clerk could be asked for orally, as no part of the depositions); 1881, Griffith v. State, 37 Ark. 332 (testimony not allowed for answers not recorded, but allowed for magistrate's warning questions not recorded); 1790, State v. Wells, one hand, that even such utterances are not admissible if by the principles of confessions (ante, §§ 842-852) the whole statement is not receivable.⁴ On the other hand, where the report has been read over to the accused and he has expressly assented to its correctness by oral acknowledgment or by signature, the writing is thus adopted as his own and becomes a statement by him in writing; he thus can no longer deny that it represents what he said.⁵ In the absence of such an acknowledgment, the whole doctrine that the report is conclusive is (as already noted) ill-founded, and should be repudiated. It may be added that the doctrine itself applies only so long as the conclusively preferred testimony is available (ante, § 1348); and therefore if the magistrate's report was never taken or if it was lost, the case is open for ordinary testimony.⁶

(b) The doctrine was also applied in England⁷ to the magistrate's report of the testimony of a witness, but was strictly confined to the testimony taken in a criminal case before the committing magistrate.⁸ It has been occasionally recognized in this country.⁹ The limitations already noted for the report of an accused's statement would generally apply here also, mutatis mutandis; in particular, other testimony may be used to prove utterances made on a distinct occasion, or on the same occasion but not as a part of the formal testimony, or even during the formal testimony but on matters additional to and not purporting to be covered by the magistrate's report.¹⁰ The

1 N. J. L. 424, 429 (other confessions at other times receivable; but not other testimony of the statements deposited to the magistrate).

⁴ 1833, R. v. Lewis, 6 C. & P. 161; and cases cited ante, § 1328.

⁵ 1840, State v. Eaton, 3 Harringt. 554 (preferred and conclusive, but only when signed by the accused or expressly admitted true); State v. Harman, ib. 567 (same); 1896, State v. Steeves, 29 Or. 85, 43 Pac. 947 (the written record of an oral statement made by an accused, not under any statute, to a chief of police, and signed by the former; "Oral statements, intended to be reduced to writing, when committed to paper and signed by the person making them, are supplanted, and must of necessity be excluded, by the writing").

Nevertheless, on principle, the two are distinct statements (as noted ante, § 1332); and if the attempt is not to contradict the writing, but to show what the first and oral statement really was, this would seem proper. Compare the cases on dying declarations (post, § 1450).

⁶ Cases cited ante, §§ 1327, 1329, and the notes supra.

⁷ But not originally; see § 1326, ante, and the following: 1679, Langhorn's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 417, 467 (the Lords' Journal of an examination before them was offered to show that Bedlow, the informer, did not there charge the defendant; L. C. J. Scroggs: "It is but a memorial taken by a clerk, and do you think that his omission shall be conclusive to us?").

⁹ 1838, Robinson v. Vaughton, 8 C. & P. 252, 254 (applicable only in felony, "because by an act of Parliament magistrates are bound to take down what the witnesses say"); 1843, Jeans v. Wheedon, 2 Moo. & Rob. 486, Cresswell, J., semble (not applicable in malicious prosecution); 1860, Filipowski v. Merryweather, 2 F. & F. 285, 287 (where the plaintiff's silent acquiescence, as an admission of the witness' statements, was to be shown, the deposition was not required); 1896, R. v. Erdheim, 2 Q. B. 260, 269 (statute providing for the taking down of a bankrupt's examination, reading over, and signing by him; held, not exclusive of other reports of the examination; here, of oral testimony of the shorthand-writer; compare Rowland v. Ashby, infra).

⁹ 1874, Broyles v. State, 47 Ind. 251, 254 (after using report of examination before justice, oral evidence not allowed). Contra: 1881, Griffith v. State, 37 Ark. 324, 332, semble (contradicting a deceased witness by prior inconsistent statements; the magistrate's writing did not show that he had been asked about them on the examination; oral evidence of bystanders that he was asked, allowed; the preferable mode being to have the magistrate amend his return); 1875, People v. Curtis, 50 Cal. 95 (not conclusive, under P. C. § 869; at any rate, when not signed by the witness); 1868, State v. Hull, 26 Ia. 293, 297 (not conclusive).

¹⁰ 1825, Rowland v. Ashby, Ry. & Mo. 231, Best, C. J. (commissioners in bankruptcy; additions allowed, but the remarks must be shown by "clear and satisfactory evidence"); 1832, R. v. Harris, Mood. Cr. C. 338, by all the Judges (additions allowed); 1833, Venafra v. Johnson, 1 Moo. & Rob. 316, C. P. (held proper to prove "anything the party had said as a part

whole doctrine of conclusiveness, in the present application, as in the preceding, is unsound.

(c) A magistrate's report of a dying declaration involves somewhat different considerations.¹¹

(d) A magistrate's report of a deposition de bene involves a distinct theory.¹²

§ 1350. Same: (2) Enrolled Copy of Legislative Act; may the Journals override it? After a proposed bill has been reported, amended, read on different occasions, passed by the originating House, sent to the other House and there dealt with in the same way, the document thus enacted into a statute consists of one or more sheets of the original paper together with other writings or printings containing the tenor of the various legislative dealings with them. This complex, representing the net result of those dealings, is then copied out as a single document, and is certified by the presiding officers of each House, in England also by the Great Seal, and in this country usually by the Governor or President, and sometimes by a Secretary, to be the act as passed. This certified copy, or enrolment, was by English practice deposited in Chancery, but is in American practice usually deposited with the Secretary of State. When the precise terms of the act are in issue, or the legislative proceedings affecting its validity, is this enrolled copy conclusive?

(1) It seems clear, at the outset, that the enrolment is only somebody's certificate and copy, because the effective legal act of enactment is the dealing of the Legislature with the original document, i. e. the viva voce vote. The Legislature has not dealt by vote with the enrolled document; the latter therefore can be only a certificate and copy of the transactions representing the enactment.¹ The enrolment is thus not a record in the sense of a judicial record, i. e. the act done in writing (post, § 2450).

(2) Furthermore, it is clear that the legislative journals are not the original enactment, for the viva voce vote is not given upon them. They are but official statements of what has been done at a prior time, although the House may have heard them read and approved them as correct. Thus, the question whether the enrolled copy shall be conclusive as against the journal is only a question whether an official report and copy of one degree of solemnity and trustworthiness is to be preferred against another of a less degree.

of his information, beyond what was put in writing, either for the purpose of explanation or addition"); 1837, R. v. Coveney, 7 C. & P. 667, Alderson, B., and Patteson, J. ("There is a difference between adding and contradicting; I apprehend the object was to see that witnesses did not swear a thing before the magistrate and contradict it at the trial"); 1837, Resolutions of Judges, ib. 676, Rule 3 (where a deposition does not mention a statement as having been made at the examination, either the witness may be asked to admit it, or, if he denies it, other witnesses may prove it); 1839, Leach v. Simpson, 7 Dowl. Pr. 513, 5 M. & W. 309, 312 (Parke, B.: "If it appear, on production of the deposition, that any particular statement alleged to have been made is not contained in it, you may add to it by parol evidence of that statement").

¹¹ Cases cited post, § 1450.

¹² Examined ante, § 1331.

¹ 1875, Moore, J., in Blessing v. Galveston, 42 Tex. 641, 656 ("the signature of its officers and the approval of the Governor cannot, unquestionably, make that law which has not been enacted by the Legislature. They only furnish evidence, conclusive or otherwise, as may be held, of the enactment of the alleged law by the Legislature").

(3) On the other hand, it is well settled that the enrolled copy cannot be shown erroneous or invalid by any other testimony than that of the journals, — for example, the oral testimony of a member as to the number of votes or readings, or the terms of an amendment, or a draft bill.² Furthermore, it is equally conceded on all hands that the journal cannot be shown erroneous by similar testimony.³

With this preliminary survey of the limits of the problem,⁴ we are in a position to consider the question whether the copy enrolled under the hands of the presiding officers authorized thereto is conclusive in every sense so as to exclude contradiction by the testimony of the official journal.⁵

² 1898, Cutcher v. Crawford, 105 Ga. 180, 31 S. E. 139 (whether a preliminary local election had been held; the statutory preamble not to be contradicted by a minority report in the journal nor by an election return); 1890, Speer v. Athens, 85 Ga. 49, 11 S. E. 802 (that public notice had not been given for a local act; not admitted); 1884, Passaic Co. v. Stevenson, 46 N. J. L. 173, 184 (under a constitutional provision requiring public notice of a local bill, and the preservation of the evidence of notice, the fact of notice may be proved otherwise than by the act and the journals; Dixon, J., diss.); 1870, Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244, 248 (fact of no public notice of a local bill, not provable); 1855, Pease v. Peck, 18 How. 595 (whether the manuscript of a statute as reported by the commissioners should control the printed law as sanctioned by the Legislature in repeated revisions).

³ 1896, Fullington v. Williams, 98 Ga. 807, 27 S. E. 183 (as to notice of intention required before offering a bill); 1897, Cohn v. Kingsley, — Ida. —, 49 Pac. 985 (whether a bill was read the second time); 1858, McCulloch v. State, 11 Ind. 424, 430 (though where they are silent, lawful action will be presumed); 1900, Taylor v. Beckham, 108 Ky. 273, 56 S. W. 177; 1883, Koehler v. Hill, 60 Ia. 543, 560, 14 N. W. 738, 15 N. W. 609 (oral testimony by a member of the Senate, not receivable to contradict the journal, if in existence); 1887, Attorney-General v. Rice, 64 Mich. 385, 389, 31 N. W. 165 (whether a bill's title expressed its object; parol testimony to contradict the journal, inadmissible); 1889, Sackrider v. Supervisors, 79 id. 59, 66, 44 N. W. 165 (same); 1893, Re Granger, 56 Nebr. 260, 76 N. W. 588 (journals not allowed to be contradicted by original draft of bill with indorsements); 1903, Wilson v. Markley, — N. C. —, 45 S. E. 1023; 1832, State v. Moffitt, 5 Oh. 223, 5 Hamm. 358; 1886, State v. Smith, 44 Oh. St. 348, 364, 7 N. E. 447, 12 N. E. 829. Add also the cases as to bribery, post, note 11.

⁴ The following questions are also to be distinguished: (1) Whether the enrolled copy overrides a printed copy: 1883, Pacific R. Co. v. Seifert, 79 Mo. 210, 212 (a printed law imposed a fine of $20; the statute-roll reading "$90," held not to override this in action for penalty); 1896, Bruce v. State, 48 Nebr. 570, 67 N. W. 454 (the enrolled act, properly certified, approved, and deposited, is conclusive as against the official statute-book); 1870, Central R. Co. v. Hearne, 32 Tex. 546, 562 (certified copy of the enrolled act is the "best evidence," as against a printed copy); (2) Whether the journal is receivable for other purposes than to overthrow the enrolment; 1878, State v. Smalls, 11 S. C. 262, 286 (bribery by a member of the Senate; the journal received to show the matter pending); (3) Whether the original of the journal must be produced; ante, § 1219; (4) Whether the printed copy of the journals is admissible: post, § 1684; (5) Whether, if the journal may be consulted, its omissions are to be fatal or may be cured by presumption: 1898, Re Taylor, 60 Kan. 87, 55 Pac. 340; 1898, State v. Long, 21 Mont. 26, 52 Pac. 645 (under the constitutional rule requiring the fact of the signing of a bill to be entered on the journal, the omission of the journal to show the fact of signature was held immaterial); and cases cited infra, note 5; (6) Whether the enrolled copy may be impeached in a collateral proceeding: 1870, Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244, 247 (whether 30 days' notice of application for a private act had been given; the certified copy not impeachable collaterally; here, not in an application to enjoin the collection of a tax under the statute); (7) Whether a recital or preamble in a statute is conclusive: post, § 1352; (8) Whether by stipulation, or judicial admission, an unconstitutional defect in the enrolled copy can be waived: post, § 2591.

⁵ In the following summary most of the rulings against conclusiveness proceed upon the ground that the Constitution expressly requires certain legislative proceedings to be done or to appear to be done; this, as above noted, ought properly not to affect the result; nevertheless such Courts might at the same time hold the enrolment conclusive as to the tenor of the act; the nature of the fact to be proved has for that reason been noted below; but lack of space forbids noting the constitutional provisions. In point of numbers, the jurisdictions are divided almost equally pro and con the general principle (of these two or three have changed from their original position); two or three adopt a special variety of view (as in Illinois), three or four are not clear, and more than a dozen have not yet made their decision: England: 1606, the Prince's Case, 8 Co. Rep. 13, semble (enrolment conclusive); 1617, R. v. Arundel, Hob. 109 (whether a certain provision was in a private act, such acts being filed without enrolment but

The arguments in favor of allowing the journals to be consulted for that purpose are sufficiently stated in the following passage, and in the succeeding quotations dealing with the answers to them:

1852, Murray, C. J., in Fowler v. Pierce, 2 Cal. 165, "If such matters cannot be inquired into, the wholesome restrictions which the Constitution imposes on legislative and under the Great Seal; "Now suppose that the journal were every way full and perfect, yet it hath no power to satisfy, destroy, or weaken the act, which being a high record must be tried only by itself, teste meipso. Now journals are no records, but remembrances for forms of proceeding to the record; they are not [kept] of necessity, nor have they always been. They are like the docket of the prothonotaries or the particular to the King's patents. . . . The journal is of good use for the observation of the generality and materiality of proceedings and deliberations as to the three readings of any bill, the intercourses between the two houses, and the like; but when the act is passed, the journal is expired"; 1637, Hampten's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 825, 1153, 1236 (the statute de tallagio non concedendo, conceded to be a statute, though not found on the Rolls of Parliament); 1649, Bowes v. Broadhead, Style 155 ("Upon view of the Parliament Roll, . . . it was found that the Statute was rightly recited, notwithstanding what had been objected and the journal-book of Parliament produced to the contrary; . . . and the Court said they were to be ruled by the Parliament Roll, and not the journal-book"; and in another case the same day the Roll was ordered produced, "to make it appear whether an adjournment of Parliament was well recited," and the Court "would not credit the journal-book"); 1650, Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, 1 Ch. Rep., App. 52 (an account of the making up of a statute-roll and of the mode of determining a disputed text; nothing said of the journals); 1653, Streater's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 365, 387; L. C. J. Roll: "Now whereas you say, it is but an order of Parliament, and has not been three times read in the House; how can you tell but that it has been three times read? . . . But if it were but once read, we cannot call it into question, but must conceive it was on just grounds"; 1725, L. C. Macclesfield's Trial, 16 id. 767, 1334, 1388 (here it appears that under the original system there was a "parliament-roll" and a "statute-roll," but the former, from which the latter was made up, appears to have been entirely distinct from the journal); ante, 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 7, 10 ("the memorials of the legislature . . . are authentic beyond all manner of contradiction"); 1764, R. v. Robotham, 3 Burr. 1472 (a clear mistake of words in the enrolment appeared, but no resort was had to the journals); 1831, R. v. Middlesex, 2 B. & Ad. 818, 821 (until a certain statute, "if two acts of Parliament passed in the same session were repugnant, it was not possible to know which of them received the royal assent first, for there was then no indorsement on the roll of the day when bills received the royal assent"); for the modern method of drafting and enacting a bill in England, see Ilbert's Legislative Methods and Forms (1901), 89, 105; Alabama: 1868, Jones v. Hutchinson, 43 Ala. 721, 723 (whether a portion of a bill had been concurred in, etc.; journals consulted, "to ascertain whether it has a legal existence"; citing only the California and Illinois cases, with P. v. Purdy, New York, but affirming the doctrine as "well settled"); 1872, Moody v. State, 48 id. 116 (whether certain amendments as passed were omitted; journals examined); 1875, State v. Buckley, 54 id. 599, 613 (whether yeas and nays were taken; journals consulted); 1876, Harrison v. Gordy, 57 id. 49 (doctrine applied to notice of a bill); 1877, Walker v. Griffith, 60 id. 361, 364 (journals may be looked to, for ascertaining the constitutional requirements; but their silence does not require investigation; though in constitutionally specified cases their silence is conclusive); 1884, Sayre v. Pollard, 77 id. 608 (doctrine applied to error in enrolment); Moog v. Randolph, ib. 597, 600 (same); 1885, Abernathy v. State, 78 id. 411, 414 (same); Stein v. Leeper, ib. 517, 521; 1886, Hall v. Steele, 82 id. 562, 565, 2 So. 650 (doctrine applied to notice of a bill); 1898, Ex parte Howard H. I. Co., 119 id. 484, 24 So. 516 (terms of an act; journals consulted); 1899, O'Hara v. State, 121 id. 28, 25 So. 622 (whether a bill was properly signed and voted for; journals consulted); 1900, Montgomery B. B. W. v. Gaston, 126 id. 425, 28 So. 497 (whether a bill was duly passed; journals consulted; another case illustrating the practical disadvantages of this rule); 1901, Robertson v. State, 130 id. 164, 30 So. 494 (journals consulted); 1902, Jackson v. State, 131 id. 21, 31 So. 380 (same; terms of an amendment); Arizona: 1876, Graves v. Alsap, 1 Ariz. 274, 282, 310, 318, 25 Pac. 836 (whether a statute not found among the certified files was in existence; journals not examined; Dunne, C. J., diss., because the attempt was merely to show the contents of the certified statute as a lost document and not to question its evidential force); 1895, Harwood v. Wentworth, — id. —, 42 Pac. 1025 (journals not to be consulted; here the purpose was to show that two sections were omitted from the bill after passing and before enrolling); Arkansas: 1857, Burr v. Ross, 19 Ark. 250 (whether a bill was voted to passage; journals examined); 1871, Knox v. Vinsant, 27 id. 266, 278 (whether a bill was read three times; journals consulted); 1873, English v. Oliver, 28 id. 317, 320 (whether a bill was read three times, etc.; journals consulted); 1877, State v. R. Co., 31 id. 701, 711, 716 (whether an act took effect within a certain time after adjournment; journals consulted to learn the time of adjournment; whether a bill was executive action become a dead letter, and Courts would be compelled to administer laws made in violation of private and public rights, without power to interfere. The fact that the law-making power is limited by rules of government, and its acts receive judicial exposition from the Courts, carries with it, by implication, the power of inquiring how far read three times, etc.; journals consulted); 1877, Worthen v. Badgett, 32 id. 496, 511 (whether a bill was read three times, etc.; journals consulted); 1878, Smithee v. Garth, 33 id. 17, 23 (whether the votes had been entered, etc.; journals consulted); 1879, State v. Crawford, 35 id. 237, 243 (whether a bill was properly read; journals consulted); 1882, Chicot Co. v. Davies, 40 id. 200, 205 (whether a bill was read three times; journals consulted; whether the enrolled act corresponded to the bill passed; journals and original draft consulted); 1883, Smithee v. Campbell, 41 id. 471, 475 (whether an amendment was enacted; journals consulted); 1884, Webster v. Little Rock, 44 id. 536, 547 (whether a bill had been duly read; journals consulted; rule treated as settled, but disapproved); 1886, Davis v. Gaines, 48 id. 370, 384, 3 S. W. 184 (doctrine not applied to notice of a bill required by Constitution); 1887, Dow v. Beidelman, 49 id. 325, 333, 5 S. W. 297 (doctrine applied to error in enrolment); 1889, Glidewell v. Martin, 51 id. 559, 566, 11 S. W. 882 (doctrine applied to question of due reading; but disapproved); California: 1852, Fowler v. Pierce, 2 Cal. 165 (whether an act was approved after adjournment; oral evidence received; quoted supra); 1866, Sherman v. Story, 30 id. 253, 256 (whether a rejected amendment had been incorporated in the act; journals not to be consulted, nor the original bill; as to Fowler v. Pierce, "possibly it may be distinguished, . . . but if not, it must be overruled"); 1872, People v. Burt, 43 id. 560, 564 (Sherman v. Story approved); 1880, Weill v. Kenfield, 54 id. 111 (whether there was due reading; journals consulted; prior rulings ignored); 1882, Railroad Tax Case, 8 Sawyer 238, 293, per Sawyer, J. (whether a bill was finally passed; journals consulted); 1886, Oakland P. Co. v. Hilton, 69 Cal. 479, 489, 496, 11 Pac. 3 (constitutional amendment required by Constitution to be entered on journals when proposed; journals consulted; but Sherman v. Story treated as law); 1889, People v. Dunn, 80 id. 211, 22 Pac. 140 (question not decided); 1896, Hale v. McGettigan, 114 id. 112, 45 Pac. 1049 (question reserved); 1901, Yolo Co. v. Colgan, 132 id. 265, 64 Pac. 403 (whether the required number of votes had been given; journals not consulted; Sherman v. Story followed); 1901, People v. Harlan, 133 id. 16, 65 Pac. 9 (preceding case approved); Colorado: 1881, Re Roberts, 5 Colo. 525 (due passage; journals may be consulted); 1888, Hughes v. Felton, 11 id. 439, 492, 19 Pac. 444 (doctrine implied); 1894, Nesbit v. People, 19 id. 441, 446, 451, 36 Pac. 221 (whether proposed constitutional amendments were validly passed; journals consulted); 1894, Robertson v. People, 20 id. 279, 283, 38 Pac. 326 (due concurrence of vote of Houses; journals consulted); Connecticut: 1849, Eld v. Gorham, 20 Conn. 8, 15 (certified published copy of revised statutes, deposited with the Secretary of State and legislatively declared authentic, is the sole record of the law); Dakota: 1889, Terr. v. O'Connor, 5 Dak. T. 397, 415, 41 N. W. 746 (question reserved); Florida: 1884, State v. Brown, 20 Fla. 407, 419 (whether an amendment had been omitted from the enrolment, and whether due reading had occurred; journals consulted); 1888, State v. Deal, 24 id. 293, 294, 4 So. 899 (error in enrolment; journals consulted); 1893, Mathis v. State, 31 id. 291, 303, 12 So. 681 (due enactment of revised statutes; journals consulted); 1895, State v. Hocker, 36 id. 358, 18 So. 767 (that an act was not read in the Senate, and was not read by sections in either house; journals consulted); Idaho: 1895, Wright v. Kelly, — id. —, 43 Pac. 565 (journals not to be examined in a collateral proceeding; here, mandamus against county officers); 1896, Blaine Co. v. Heard, — id. —, 45 Pac. 890 (journals may be examined to see whether constitutional requirements were complied with); 1897, Cohn v. Kingsley, — id. —, 49 Pac. 485 (journals may be consulted); 1897, State v. Boise, — id. —, 51 Pac. 110 (in passing upon constitutionality, copy of the journals must be produced); Illinois: 1846, People v. Campbell, 8 Ill. 466, 468 (journals referred to on the question of a third reading, and a joint resolution held invalid); 1853, Spaogler v. Jacoby, 14 id. 297 (whether a final vote was had; journals consulted, because the Constitution required the votes on final passage to be entered in the journal); 1855, Turley v. Logan, 17 id. 151 (whether a bill was properly read; journals consulted); 1857, Prescott v. Board, 19 id. 324 (whether a bill had been amended and enacted; journals consulted); 1861, Board v. People, 25 id. 181 (whether a bill was read three times; journals consulted); 1863, People v. Hatch, 33 id. 9, 132 (adjournment before executive disapproval; journals consulted); 1864, People v. Starne, 35 id. 121, 135 (whether a bill was acted on; journals consulted; doctrine rested on the constitutional requirement as to enactment, and doubted as a matter of policy); 1865, Wabash R. Co. v. Hughes, 38 id. 174, 185 (whether a bill was presented to the Governor and returned; journals consulted); 1867, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Wren, 43 id. 77 (whether the yeas and nays were called; journals may be consulted); 1867, Bedard v. Hall, 44 id. 91 (same doctrine implied); 1871, People v. De Wolf, 62 id. 253 (whether a majority had concurred; journals consulted); 1872, Hensoldt v. Petersburg, 63 id. 157 (doctrine implied); 1873, Ryan v. Lynch, 68 id. 160, 164 (due reading; doctrine applied); 1873, Miller v. Goodwin, 70 id. 659 (whether a statute was properly passed; journals consulted); 1874, Plummer v. State, 74 id. 361, 362 (propriety of act's title; journals consulted); 1875, Larrison v. R. Co., 77 id. 11 (whether a bill was properly read, etc.; journals consulted); 1876, Binz v. Weber, 81 id. 288 (propriety of title; those exercising the law-making power have proceeded constitutionally. . . . It is said that parties would in every case dispute the existence of the law, and that such practice would lead to confusion and perjury. I have already said that this is a question for the Court. And why should not the citizen whose life, property, or liberty is made forfeit journals consulted); 1879, People v. Loewenthal, 93 id. 191, 205 (due passage of amendment; journals consulted); 1876, Ottawa v. Perkins, 94 U. S. 260 (the Illinois rule declared to admit reference to the journals to overthrow the enrolled act; four judges dissenting, but on the question whether the journals must be offered in evidence); 1881, Post v. Supervisors, 105 id. 667 (same decision); 1881, Wenner v. Thornton, 98 Ill. 156, 163 (due passage; journals consulted); 1887, Burritt v. Com'rs, 120 id. 323, 332 (due passage; journals consulted); 1902, Chicago Telephone Co. v. Northwestern T. Co., 199 id. 324, 65 N. E. 329 (prior doctrine applied); Indiana: 1851, Skinner v. Dening, 2 Ind. 558 (whether a two-thirds vote had been given; journals consulted; purporting to follow Purdy v. People, N. Y.); 1856, Coleman v. Dobbins, 8 id. 156, 159 (whether a bill was read three times; journals proper to be examined); 1858, McCulloch v. State, 11 id. 424, 429, 435 (whether a constitutional majority voted; journals examined); 1869, Evans v. Browne, 30 id. 514 (whether a constitutional quorum had voted; journals not allowed to overthrow the duly certified act; preceding rulings repudiated); 1876, Bender v. State, 53 id. 254 (whether an act was duly presented to the Governor before adjournment; enrolment conclusive); 1880, Edger v. Board, 70 id. 331, 338 (rule maintained; but journals consulted to interpret); Iowa: 1857, State v. Clare, 5 Ia. 508 (certified act on file is the "ultimate proof of the law"; here, as against a printed copy); 1859, State v. Donehey, 8 id. 396 (similar); 1861, Duncombe v. Prindle, 12 id. 1, 11 (whether a passage was omitted from the original bill; "behind this [the enrolled act] it is impossible for any Court to go for the purpose of ascertaining what the law is"); 1883, Koehler v. Hill, 60 id. 543, 558, 591 (contents of a constitutional amendment, under a requirement that the terms be entered at length upon the journal; the journal held to override the enrolled act; Beck, J., diss., in a valuable opinion); Kansas: 1874, Haynes v. Heller, 12 Kan. 381, 383, 393 (question not decided); 1875, Division of Howard Co., 15 id. 194, 211 (error in enrolment; journals may be consulted, but not engrossed bill); 1876, Commissioners c. Higgiubotham, 17 id. 62, 78 (whether a bill was duly passed; journals consulted); 1881, Constitutional Prohibitory Amendment, 24 id. 700 (proposed constitutional amendment required to be entered on journals; journals consulted); 1882, State v. Francis, 26 id. 724, 731 (whether a majority voted; journals consulted); 1882, Vanderberg's Petition, 28 id. 243, 254 (whether a two-thirds majority voted; journals consulted); 1886, Weyand v. Stover, 35 id. 545, 553, 11 Pac. 355 (whether a due reading, etc., occurred; journals consulted); 1889, State v. Robertson, 41 id. 200, 204, 21 Pac. 382 (dates of origin and passage, etc.; journals consulted);

1898, Re Taylor, 60 id. 87, 55 Pac. 340 (where certain parts of an act were duly passed; journals consulted); 1902, State v. Andrews, 64 id. 474, 67 Pac. 870 (conformity of a title; journals consulted; Ellis, J., for the majority, doubts the propriety of this rule); Kentucky: 1869, Com. v. Jackson, 5 Bush 680, 684 (question not decided); 1878, Auditor v. Haycraft, 14 id. 284, 288 (same); 1892, Norman v. Kentucky Board, 93 Ky. 537, 546, 563, 20 S. W. 901 (same; but Fryor, J., explicitly declared in favor of holding the enrolment conclusive); Louisiana: 1871, Louisiana State Lottery Co. v. Richoux, 23 La. An. 743 (whether a bill was properly read, etc.; journals not to be consulted); Maine: 1889, Weeks v. Smith, 81 Me. 538, 18 Atl. 325 (whether a bill was approved; enrolled act conclusive); Maryland: 1858, Fouke v. Douglass, 13 Md. 392, 412 (the engrossed and the printed statute corresponded; the legislative journals held not to override this); 1870, Mayor v. Harwood, 32 id. 471, 477 (the final engrossment as constitutionally attested, held conclusive as to the statute's contents); 1874, Berry v. R. Co., 41 id. 446, 463 (terms of act; journals consulted); 1874, Legg v. Annapolis, 42 id. 203, 220 (substitution of false bill in second House; journals consulted); 1877, Strauss v. Heiss, 48 id. 292, 295 (general doctrine approved; governor's testimony to time of signing two bills, received); Michigan: 1844, Green v. Graves, 1 Dong. 351, 372 (whether a two-thirds majority had been given; journals consulted, but present question not discussed); 1865, People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481, 491 (whether the vote included members not lawfully seated; journals may be consulted in general to determine validity of statutes); 1867, People v. Onondaga, 16 id. 254, 257 (error in engrossment of title; journals consulted); 1882, Pack v. Barton, 47 id. 520, 11 N. W. 367 (whether a bill was introduced in time; journals consulted); 1884, Attorney-General v. Joy, 55 id. 94, 100, 20 N. W. 806 (whether a two-thirds vote had been given; journals consulted); 1886, Callaghan v. Chipman, 59 id. 610, 617, 26 N. W. 806 (whether a bill was introduced in time; journals consulted); 1887, Attorney-General v. Rice, 64 id. 385, 31 N. W. 203 (whether a bill's title expressed its object; journals consulted); 1888, Hart v. McElroy, 72 id. 446, 40 N. W. 750 (whether the proper readings were had; journals consulted); 1889, Sackrider v. Supervisors, 79 id. 59, 66, 44 N. W. 165 (like A. G. v. Rice); 1890, Stow v. Grand Rapids, ib. 595, 597, 44 N. W. 1047 (whether an error had occurred in engrossment; journals consulted); Rode v. Phelps, 80 id. 593, 608, 45 N. W. 493 (whether errors occurred in engrossment; journals consulted); Caldwell v. Ward, 83 id. 13, 46 N. W. 1024 (whether a bill was introduced in time; journals consulted); 1891, People v. Burch, 84 id. 408, 411, 47 N. W. 765 (whether by the operation of a particular law, be allowed to show to the Court, if it is not advised of the fact, that the same was passed in violation of his constitutional rights, or that it has been placed among the archives of government by fraud or mistake, and never had a legal existence? Is there no way of ascertaining whether the approval of the executive bill had been properly voted on; journals consulted); Minnesota: 1858, Board v. Heenan, 2 Minn. 330, 338 (whether a bill had been properly read; journals consulted); 1877, State v. Hastings, 24 id. 78, 81 (whether a bill was properly read; journals consulted); 1884, Burt v. R. Co., 31 id. 472, 477, 18 N. W. 285, 289 (whether a two-thirds vote had been given; journals may be offered in evidence); 1888, State v. Peterson, 33 id. 143, 145, 36 N. W. 443 (whether a bill was properly read; journals consulted); 1891, Lincoln v. Hangan, 45 id. 451, 48 N. W. 196 (whether a proper vote was had; journals consulted); Mississippi: 1856, Green v. Weller, 32 Miss. 650, 684, 702, 735, 33 id. 735 (whether an act had been voted by the required number; journals not to overthrow the enrolled act; careful opinion; Smith, C. J., and Fisher, J., diss.); 1866, Swanu v. Buck, 40 id. 233, 295 (whether a bill was properly read; enrolled act conclusive); 1874, Brady v. West, 50 id. 68, 77 (errors in enrolment; journals consulted; "qualifying" Green v. Weller); 1886, Ex parte Wren, 63 id. 512, 528 (whether amendments were omitted; enrolled act held conclusive in a weighty opinion by Campbell, J., quoted supra; Brady v. West repudiated); Missouri: 1821, Douglas v. Bank, 1 Mo. 24 (whether an act was duly passed; journals consulted, as "better and higher testimony"); 1836, State v. McBride, 4 id. 303 (whether a proper majority had voted; journals consulted to overthrow the enrolled document); 1856, Pacific R. Co. v. Governor, 23 id. 353, 362 (propriety of proceedings after a veto; journals not to control; opinion careful and detailed); 1875, Bradley v. West, 60 id. 33, 44 (doctrine implied that journals might be consulted); 1879, State v. Mead, 71 id. 266, 270 (whether a bill was properly read and signed; journals consulted under new Constitution); 1893, State v. Field, 119 id. 593, 606, 24 S. W. 752 (whether a bill's title was contained during passage; journals examined); Nebraska: 1876, Hull v. Miller, 4 Nebr. 503, 505 (whether an act was properly voted upon; journals consulted); 1879, Cottrell v. State, 9 id. 125, 128, 1 N. W. 1008 (whether a bill was properly signed and voted on; journals consulted); 1880, State v. Liedtke, ib. 462, 4 N. W. 68 (question not decided); 1885, Ballou v. Black, 17 id. 389, 393, 23 N. W. 3 (whether a bill was properly entitled and amended; journals consulted); 1885, State v. McLelland, 18 id. 236, 25 N. W. 77 (whether an error occurred in enrolment; journals consulted); 1886, State v. Robinson, 20 id. 96, 29 N. W. 246 (similar); 1888, State v. Van Duyn, 24 id. 586, 590, 39 N. W. 612 (whether certain parts of an enrolled act were properly voted upon; journals consulted); 1893, State v. Moore, 37 id. 13, 15, 55 N. W. 299 (whether an error of terms was made in the engrossment; journals consulted); 1894, Ames v. R. Co., 64

Fed. 165, 168 (journals may be consulted under Nebraska law); 1898, Re Granger, 56 Nebr. 260, 76 N. W. 588 (terms of an act; journals consulted); 1898, Webster v. Hastings, ib. 669, 77 N. W. 127 (journals may be consulted; Irvine, C., and Sullivan, J., diss.); 1899, State v. Abbott, 59 id. 106, 80 N. W. 499 (whether certain appropriations were made in an act; journals may be referred to, but nothing else, e.g. original bill, etc.); 1900, Webster v. Hastings, 59 id. 563, 81 N. W. 510 (change of title after passage; journals consulted); 1900, State v. Frank, 60 id. 327, 83 N. W. 74 (same rule reiterated; but held not to allow the silence of a mutilated journal to overthrow the enrolment; the facts and opinion well illustrate the dangers and uncertainties to which the rule leads; that in these days the journals could be kept in the manner shown in this case is a disgrace to the State and a warning to others); 1901, Simpson v. Union Stockyards Co., C. C., 110 Fed. 799 (enrolled bill is controlled by the journals; here said of a Nebraska act); 1901, State v. Frank, 61 Nebr. 679, 85 N. W. 956 (approving the original decision, supra); Nevada: 1875, State v. Swift, 10 Nev. 176, 179 (whether a bill as enrolled was properly passed; journals not to be consulted; full and careful opinion by Beatty, J.); 1883, State v. Glenn, 18 id. 34, 38, 1 Pac. 186 (preceding case affirmed); 1887, State v. Tuffy, 19 id. 391, 12 Pac. 835 (whether a proposed constitutional amendment was entered upon the journals; journals consulted); 1895, State v. Nye, 23 id. 99, 101, 42 Pac. 866 (same as State v. Glenn); 1899, State v. Beck, 25 id. 68, 56 Pac. 1008 (whether a bill was properly read; journals not consulted); New Hampshire: 1853, Opinion of the Justices, 35 N. H. 579 (the journals are the authentic records, to be resorted to for determining whether the two Houses concurred in assent to the law); 1872, Opinion of the Justices, 52 id. 622 (same); New Jersey: 1866, Pangborn v. Young, 32 N. J. L. 29 (whether amendments made in the Senate were contained in the bill as approved; the filed and authenticated document held conclusive, and the journals not to be considered as evidence to the contrary; quoted supra); New York: 1839, Thomas v. Dakin, 22 Wend. 9, 112 (whether a law had been passed by a two-thirds vote; conclusiveness of the printed statute or of the certified original, expressly left undecided); 1840, Warner v. Beers, 23 Wend. 103, 125, 137, 168, 190 (whether a law had been passed by a two-thirds vote; Walworth, C., left the question undecided whether the printed statute's correctness could be examined on demurrer to a plea; Verplanck, Sen., was for examining both the certified original and the journals; Bradish, Pres. Sen., was for taking the certified original as conclusive, under R. S., tit. 4, ch. 7, § 11, making it "conclusive evidence"; the question was apparently decided by the Court of Errors without was forged, or whether officers have acted contrary to their constitutional obligations? It is no sufficient answer that we must rely on the integrity of the executive or other officers, and that the record of facts is conclusive evidence of the truth of such acts. Our notions of free institutions revolt at the thought of placing so much power in the hands passing upon the point); 1841, Hunt v. Van Alstyne, 25 id. 605, 611 (same question, left undecided); 1841, People v. Purdy, 2 Hill 31 (same question; left undecided; but Bronson, J., on the principle that the unconstitutional exercise of legislative power must be prevented, thought that at least the certified original could be examined); s. c. appealed, s. v. Purdy v. People, 4 id. 384, 390, 419 (Walworth, C., thought the certificate not conclusive; the Court voted against his opinion, without expressing itself on the particular point); 1845, De Bow v. People, 1 Den. 9, 14 (same question; "it seems that the journals . . . may be consulted"); 1846, Commercial Bank v. Sparrow, 2 id. 97, 101 (the printed statute-book not conclusive; the other question not raised); 1853, People v. Supervisors, 8 N. Y. 317, 327 (whether the yeas and nays had been entered on the journal; semble, the journal not to be consulted, but it was); 1865, People v. Devlin, 33 id. 269, 279, 286 (whether a bill had been passed by a three-fifths vote; semble, that the journals could not be consulted); 1873, People v. Com'rs, 54 id. 276, 279 (whether a statute had been enacted by a two-thirds vote; "the original act is conclusive"); 1883, People v. Petrea, 92 id. 128, 137, 139 (whether a statute was based on a bill reported by commissioners to revise the statutes; the journals may be resorted to); 1891, Rumsey v. R. Co., 130 id. 88, 92, 28 N. E. 763 (certificate of enrolment being defective, the journals were consulted to sustain the act; but whether a complete certificate would be conclusive is left undecided; the Court citing both People v. Purdy and People v. Devlin, and improperly leaving the matter unsettled); Laws 1892, c. 682, § 40 (presiding officer's certificate is to be "conclusive evidence" that a law was passed by the proper number of votes); North Carolina: 1870, Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244, 248, semble (enrolled statute, conclusive); 1895, Carr v. Coke, 116 id. 223, 233, 22 S. E. 16 (whether a bill was duly read; enrolled copy held conclusive, in a careful opinion); 1896, Union Bank v. Commissioners, 119 id. 214, 221, 25 S. E. 966 (whether the yeas and nays were entered on the journals as required by the Constitution; journals consulted to overthrow the act; distinguishing Carr v. Coke); 1897, Commissioners v. Snuggs, 121 id. 394, 398, 28 S. E. 539 (same ruling); 1899, Board v. Coler, 37 C. C. A. 484, 96 Fed. 284 (journal considered, under a constitutional requirement in North Carolina that for certain legislation the yeas and nays must be entered on the journal); 1901, Commissioners v. DeRosset, 129 N. C. 275, 40 S. E. 43 (Carr v. Coke approved; journals here consulted as to the several readings of a bill); 1903, Wilson v. Markley, — id. —, 45 S. E. 1023 (journals not to be consulted; except for ascertaining the due passage of certain private acts coming under the provisions of Const. Art. 2, § 14);

North Dakota: 1901, Power v. Kitching, 10 N. D. 254, 86 N. W. 737 (whether a bill was amended; journals not consulted); 1901, Pickton v. Fargo, ib. 469, 88 N. W. 90 (journals of a municipal council may be consulted); Ohio: 1854, Miller v. State, 3 Oh. St. 475, 479 (question raised but not decided); 1870, Fordyce v. Godman, 20 id. 1, 16 (whether a two-thirds vote had been given; journals consulted); 1886, State v. Smith, 44 id. 348, 363, 7 N. E. 447, 12 N. E. 829 (whether a bill was duly voted on; journals examined); 1887, State v. Kiesewetter, 45 id. 254, 256, 12 N. E. 807 (whether a bill was properly signed; journals consulted); Oregon: 1883, Mumford v. Sewall, 11 Or. 67, 72, 4 Pac. 585 (whether a bill was properly read; journals and original bill consulted); 1887, State v. Wright, 14 id. 365, 372, 12 Pac. 708 (error in an amendment; journals consulted); 1892, Currie v. Southern P. Co., 21 id. 566, 570, 28 Pac. 884 (whether a bill received a sufficient vote; journals consulted; Bean, J., hesitating; Lord, J., reserving his opinion); 1892, State v. Rogers, 22 id. 348, 364, 30 Pac. 74 (same ruling); 1897, McKennon v. Cotner, 30 id. 588, 49 Pac. 956 (journals may be consulted; an amendment appearing on the journal, it was presumed that it had been reconsidered and defeated, and thus the enrolment could be sustained); Pennsylvania: 1853, Speer v. P. R. Co., 22 Pa. 376 (the certificate is "conclusive" as to enrolment; main question not considered); 1856, Southwark Bank v. Com., 26 id. 446, 450 (the Legislature repealed a section of a pending bill; the journals consulted to identify the bill, and the section, though part of the bill as signed, treated as void); 1877, Kilgore v. Magee, 85 id. 401, 412 (whether a bill was properly entitled, read, etc.; enrolment conclusive); 1884, Com. v. Martin, 107 id. 185, 189, 204 (whether an act was properly entitled; enrolment conclusive); South Carolina: 1870, State v. Platt, 2 S. C. 150 (whether the statute required "Court to be held at Barnwell or at Blackville; the enrolled act read originally "Barnwell," which was altered to read "Blackville"; the journals consulted; the chief argument relied on is the necessity of preventing the violation of constitutional safeguards; Moses, C. J., diss.); 1879, Bond Debt Cases, 12 id. 200, 226, 233, 289 (whether a two-thirds vote had been given; journals consulted); State v. Hagood, 13 id. 46, 54, 61, 70 (whether a bill was properly read; journals consulted; McIver, J., diss. in part, in a forcible opinion); South Dakota: 1894, Somers v. State, 5 S. D. 321, 28 N. W. 804 (two statutes, approved the same day, having inconsistent provision; journal examined to see which was intended as repealing the other); 1901, Narregang v. Brown Co., 14 id. 357, 85 N. W. 602 (journals not to be consulted to impeach the enrolled act); 1901, State v. Bacon, 14 id. 394, 85 N. W. 605 (same); Tennessee: 1879, State v. Mc- of one man, with no guard upon it but his own integrity; and our Constitution has wisely so distributed the powers of government as to make one a check upon the other, thereby preventing one branch from strengthening itself at the expense of the co-ordinate branches and of the public. Such evidence should be of the most satisfactory character; and there is less to be apprehended from the subornation of witnesses, subject to the tests which the law imposes, than from the exercise of so great a power without restraint or accountability."

The answers to these arguments are represented in the following passages, dealing in various ways with one or more of the forms of argument against the conclusiveness of the enrolment:

Connell, 3 Lea 332, 341 (whether a bill was properly read; journals consulted, but the question not raised); 1880, Gaines v. Horrigan, 4 id. 608, 611 (whether an amendment was properly passed; journals consulted; but question reserved in part); Williams v. State, 6 id. 549, 553 (whether a proper majority voted; journals may be consulted); 1887, Hayes v. State (unreported oral opinion; cited in next two cases as in accord with them); 1888, Brewer v. Huntington, 86 Tenn. 733, 9 S. W. 166 (whether a bill was rejected; journals consulted); 1888, State v. Algood, 87 id. 163, 167, 10 S. W. 310 (whether a bill had passed after amendment; journals consulted); 1892, Nelson v. Haywood Co., 91 id. 596, 599, 20 S. W. 1 (whether a bill was duly passed, signed, etc.; journals consulted); Texas: 1875, Blessing v. Galveston, 42 Tex. 641, 656 (question discussed, but not decided); 1880, Houston & T. R. Co. v. Odum, 53 id. 343, 351 (whether an act was certified after adjournment; journals consulted to determine date of passage); 1886, Hunt v. State, 22 Cr. App. 396, 400 (whether a bill was properly signed; journals consulted); 1890, Ex parte Tipton, 28 id. 438, 442 (error in enrolment; journals not to be consulted, where no constitutional provision requires a matter to appear therein); 1890, Re Duncan, 139 U. S. 449, semble (the validity of a Texas statute, under the rule of Usener v. State, infra, held not to be a Federal question); 1891, Ewing v. Duncan, 81 Tex. 230, 233, 16 S. W. 1000 (whether a two-thirds vote had been given; journals consulted; none of the above cases cited); 1892, Williams v. Taylor, 83 id. 667, 19 S. W. 156 (whether a bill had been duly reported; journals not consulted; good opinion by Gaines, J.; this case practically affirms Usener v. State, 8 Cr. App. 177, and expressly affirms Ex parte Tipton, 28 id. 438, and distinguishes Ewing v. Duncan, supra, on the ground that the date of taking effect was in issue and did not furnish the data for determining whether a sufficient majority for giving immediate effect had voted); United States: 1857, Thompson's Case, 9 Op. Attorney-General, 1, 3, per Black (in a forceful opinion denying to executive officers the right of such consultation; "we must take the acts of Congress as we find them, without addition or diminution"); 1867, Gardner v. Barney, 6 Wall. 499 (the date of the President's signature to a bill not being an essential part of the record, the legislative journals may be looked to with other evidence; and whenever "the existence of a statute" is in question, the Court may look to "any source of information" that is helpful); 1891, Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 670, 12 Snp. 495 (whether a clause was omitted from the engrossed act; journals not to be consulted; whether the failure to observe the constitutional rule requiring entry of yeas and nays on the journal could be thus inquired into, not decided); for Federal rulings interpreting the law of individual States, see supra, under California, Illinois, Nebraska, and North Carolina; Utah: 1896, Ritchie v. Richards, 14 Utah, 345, 47 Pac. 670 (whether the yeas and nays were taken, the Constitution requiring the fact to be entered on the journals on demand of five members; held, that the enrolled bill, duly signed, approved, and deposited, was the final record of the statute, and the journals could not be consulted; Batch and Miner, JJ., diss.); Vermont: 1844, Re Welman, 20 Vt. 653, 656 (time when an act took effect; enrolment conclusive; though "in some instances" journals may be consulted); St. 1894, § 31 (the engrossed copy kept by Secretary of State "shall be taken to be" the act); Virginia: 1884, Wise v. Bigger, 79 Va. 269, 271, 281 (whether a two-thirds vote was given; journals consulted); Washington: 1893, State v. Jones, 6 Wash. 452, 34 Pac. 201 (whether the constitutional requirements had been fulfilled; journals not to be consulted; opinion by Hoyt, J., perhaps the best on the subject); West Virginia: 1871, Osburn v. Staley, 5 W. Va. 85, 89 (whether the required number of votes was given; journals consulted); Wisconsin: 1866, Watertown v. Cady, 20 Wis. 501 (whether a vote was properly taken; question not decided); 1878, Bonou v. R. Co., 45 id. 543, 557 (whether an act was properly passed; journals consulted); 1885, Micracle v. Down, 64 id. 323, 327, 25 N. W. 412 (same); 1891, McDonald v. State, 80 id. 407, 411, 50 N. W. 185 (whether a bill was passed as constitutionally required; journals may be consulted); Wyoming: 1872, Brown v. Nash, 1 Wyo. T. 85, 93 (whether a proper vote was given; journals may be consulted); Union Pacific R. Co. v. Carr, ib. 96, 103 (same); 1892, White v. Hinton, 3 Wyo. 753, 756, 30 Pac. 953 (whether a bill was passed and approved after expiration of the session; journals not consulted).

1841, Nelson, C. J., in Hunt v. Van Alstyne, 25 Wend. 605, 610: "There are only two modes of contradicting it [the certified enrolment]: 1. By the journals of the two Houses, and 2. by parol testimony. The presiding officer had all the benefit of the first; the ayes and noes are taken, and the journal made up, under his supervision and control. His means of ascertaining and determining the fact, when he declares the law to be passed, exceed those of any other tribunal that might be called upon to inquire into it. Besides, the hurry and looseness with which the journals are copied, and the little importance attached to the printed copies, necessarily impairs confidence in their correctness. They are most uncertain data upon which to found a judicial determination of the rights of property, much more of great constitutional questions. As to the second mode of contradicting the certificate, the evidence would if possible be still more fallible and unsatisfactory. Indeed, we can scarcely imagine a case where from its nature the proof would be so subject to the doubtful and conflicting recollection of witnesses. Nothing short of absolute necessity could justify a resort to it. It would hardly deserve much weight in contradicting the journal itself, — much less the certificate of the presiding officer affixed to the law."

1866, Beasley, C. J., in Pangborn v. Young, 32 N. J. L. 29, 34: "[1] It is impossible for the mind not to incline to the opinion that the framers of the Constitution, in exacting the keeping of these journals, did not design to create records which were to be paramount to all other evidence with regard to the enactment and contents of laws. . . . If intended for any purpose whatever in any course of judicial investigation, can any one conceive that these registers would have been left in the condition in which by the Constitution we find them? In the nature of things they must be constructed out of loose and hasty memoranda, made in the pressure of business and amid the distractions of a numerous assembly. There is required not a single guarantee to their accuracy or to their truth; no one need vouch for them, and it is not enjoined that they should be either approved, copied, or recorded. . . . [2] These are the sanctions [the signatures of the two presiding officers and of the Governor] which the Legislature has provided for the authentication of its own acts, both to the public and to the judicial tribunals; and the question is therefore presented whether such authentication must not be deemed conclusive, or in other words, whether the Legislature does not possess the right of declaring what shall be the supreme evidence of the authenticity of its own statutes. This question, in my opinion, must be answered in the affirmative. How can it be otherwise? The body that passes a law must of necessity promulgate it in some form. . . . It is the power which passes the law which can best determine what the law is which itself has created. The Legislature in this case has certified to this Court, by the hands of its two principal officers, that the act now before us is the identical statute which it approved, and, in my opinion, it is not competent for this Court to institute an inquiry into the truth of the fact thus solemnly attested. . . . [3] I think the rule thus adopted accords with public policy. Indeed, in my estimation, few things would be more mischievous than the introduction of the opposite rule. . . . The rule contended for is that the Court should look at the journals of the Legislature to ascertain whether the copy of the act attested and filed with the Secretary of State conforms in its contents with the statements of such journals. This proposition means, if it has any legal value whatever, that, in the event of a material discrepancy between the journal and the enrolled copy, the former is to be taken as the standard of veracity and the act is to be rejected. This is the test which is to be applied not only to the statutes now before the Court, but to all statutes; not only to laws which have been recently passed, but to laws the most ancient. To my mind, nothing can be more certain than that the acceptance of this doctrine by the Court would unsettle the entire statute law of the State. We have before us some evidence of the little reliability of these legislative journals. . . . Can any one deny that if the laws of the State are to be tested by a comparison with these journals, so imperfect, so unauthenticated, the stability of all written law will be shaken to its very foundations? . . . We are to remember the danger, under the prevalence of such a doctrine, to be apprehended from the intentional corruption of evidences of this character. It is scarcely too much to say that the legal existence of almost every legislative act would be at the mercy of all persons having access to these journals. . . . [4] The principal argument in favor of this judicial appeal from the enrolled law to the legislative journal . . . was that the existence of this power was necessary to keep the Legislature from overstepping the bounds of the Constitution. The course of reasoning urged was that if the Court cannot look at the facts and examine the legislative action, that department of government can at will set at defiance in the enactment of statutes the restraints of the organic law. This argument, however specious, is not solid. The power thus claimed for the Judiciary would be entirely inefficacious as a controlling force over any intentional exorbitance of the law-making branch of the government. If we may be permitted, for the purpose of illustration, to suppose the Legislature to design the enactment of a law in violation of the principles of the Constitution, a judicial authority to inspect the journals of that body would interpose not the slightest barrier against such transgression; for it is obvious that there could not be the least difficulty in withholding from such journals every fact evincive of such transgression. A journal can be no check on the actions of those who keep it, when a violation of duty is intentional. . . . [5] Besides, if the journal is to be consulted, on the ground of the necessity of judicial intervention, how is it that the inquiry is to stop at that point? In law, upon ordinary rules, it is plain that a journal is not a record, and is therefore open to be either explained or contradicted by parol proof. And yet, is it not evident that the Court could not, upon the plainest grounds, enter upon such an investigation? In the case now in hand, if an offer should be made to prove by the testimony of every member of the Legislature that the journals are false, and that as a matter of fact the enrolled law did receive in its present form the sanction of both houses, no person versed in jurisprudence, it is presumed, would maintain that such evidence would be competent. The Court cannot try issues of fact; nor, with any propriety, could the existence of statutes be made dependent on the result of such investigations. With regard to matters of fact, no judicial unity of opinion could be expected; and the consequence would necessarily be that the conclusion of different Courts as to the legal existence of laws from the same proofs would often be variant, and the same tribunal which to-day declared a statute void might to-morrow be compelled, under the effect of additional evidence, to pronounce in its favor. The notion that Courts could listen upon this subject to parol proof is totally inadmissible; and it therefore unavoidably results that if the journal is to be taken into consideration at all, its effect is uncontrollable; neither its frauds can be exposed nor its errors corrected. And if this be so, and the journal is to limit the inquiry of the judicial power, how obvious the inadequacy, if not futility, of such inquiry! . . . [6] In the frame of our State government the recipients and organs of this threefold power are the Legislature, the Executive, and the Judiciary, and they are coordinate, in all things equal and independent. Each within its sphere is the trusted agent of the public. With what propriety, then, is it claimed that the judicial branch can erect itself into the custodian of the good faith of the legislative department? It is to be borne in mind that the point now touched does not relate to the capacity to pronounce a law, which is admitted to have been enacted, void by reason of its unconstitutionality. That is clearly a function of Judicature. But the proposition is, whether, when the Legislature has certified to a mere matter of fact, relating to its own conduct and within its own cognizance, the Courts of the State are at liberty to inquire into or dispute the veracity of that certificate. . . . In my opinion, the power to certify to the public the law itself has enacted is one of the trusts of the Constitution to the Legislature of the State."

1869, Frazer, J., in Evans v. Browne, 30 Ind. 514, 524: "It is important, certainly, that the question whether the enactment of a statute is valid shall be made capable of ready and correct solution, and that it shall not depend upon doubtful or conflicting evidence. When all are bound to know the law, they should have the means of knowledge, and not merely reasons for conjecture, uncertainty, and doubt. . . . It is argued that there is an appeal to these [legislative journals], from the official attestation of the presiding officers and to the archives in the executive department. Would the journals be as satisfactory to the mind? Such journals, it is notorious, are and must be made in haste, in the confusion of business, and are often inaccurate. Their reading is frequently omitted, so that these errors go without correction. They do not show the nature of the bill as introduced, but merely the amendments which have been proposed to it. They are not required to contain anything by which it could be even identified and its passage traced. . . . By what reason or analogy can we sustain ourselves in holding that the journal should override the signatures upon the enrolled act? Surely not because it is in the nature of things more likely to speak the whole truth upon the question in hand. . . . But it is argued that if the authenticated roll is conclusive upon the Courts, then less than a quorum of each House may by the aid of corrupt presiding officers impose laws upon the State in defiance of the inhibition of the Constitution. It must be admitted that the consequence stated would be possible. Public authority and political power must of necessity be confided to officers, who being human may violate the trusts reposed in them. This perhaps cannot be avoided absolutely. But it applies also to all human agencies. It is not fit that the Judiciary should claim for itself a purity beyond all others; nor has it been able at all times with truth to say that its high places have not been disgraced. The framers of our government have not constituted it with faculties to supervise coordinate departments and correct or prevent abuses of their authority. It cannot authenticate a statute; that power does not belong to it; nor can it keep a legislative journal. It ascertains the statute law by looking at its authentication, and then its function is merely to expound and administer it. . . . If it may [look beyond the enrolled act], then for the same reason it may go beyond the journal, when that is impeached; and so the validity of legislation may be made to depend upon the memory of witnesses, and no man can in fact know the law which he is bound to obey. Such consequences would be a large price to pay for immunity from the possible abuse of authority by the high officers who are, as we think, charged with the duty of certifying to the public the fact that a statute has been enacted by competent Houses. Human governments must repose confidence in officers. It may be abused, and there may be no remedy. — Nor is there any great force in the argument which seems to be regarded as of weight by some American Courts, that some important provisions of the Constitution would be a dead letter if inquiry may not be made by the Courts beyond the rolls. This argument overlooks the fact that legislators are sworn to support the Constitution, or else it assumes that they will wilfully violate that oath. It is neither modest nor just for judges thus to impeach the integrity of another department of government, and to claim that the Judiciary only will be faithful to its obligations.”

1896, Zane, C. J., in Ritchie v. Richards, 14 Utah 345, 47 Pac. 670: “Objections may be urged to either means of proof. Minutes and memoranda may not always be correctly transcribed upon the journals. And the minutes and memoranda are sometimes made amid circumstances calculated to confuse and distract the attention, and to divert it from the business in hand. Bills may sometimes be enrolled, and signed by presiding officers, and approved by the governor, that have never been duly passed. Either source is subject to possible error. Courts and lawyers will differ as to which is the surest and best source of information. However, when statutes are published people shape their actions and conduct with respect to them; they incur obligations, acquire rights, and discharge duties in reliance upon them. If such a law, in any instance, should turn out to be void, because some requirement of the Constitution had not been observed in its passage, great injustice would be likely to follow. We must regard the enrolled bill, duly signed, approved, and deposited in the public archives, as a more accessible and convenient source of authentication, and, if referred to, less liable to overturn law, and quite as reliable as the journals of the two Houses. The people ought not to be required to ransack such journals to ascertain whether laws have been duly passed, and they cannot be expected to do so. Nor should lawyers, before advising clients, be required to search such journals. Statutory enactments should not depend nor stand upon such a sandy and uncertain foundation, if a better one can be found. Laws evidenced by the signatures of the presiding officers, and the approval and signature of the governor, and the filing in the public archives, ought not to be overthrown by memoranda on the journals which the Constitution does not require to be made."

1893, Irvine, C., in Webster v. Hastings, 56 Nebr. 669, 77 N. W. 127: "We are in this case for the first time confronted with its [i. e. the opposite rule's] mischievous results. If the fact of the due enactment of a statute is to be tried on any available evidence, certain results follow, of such character as to bid us pause and re-examine our premises. Being an issue of fact, it is to be tried by the triors of fact, — in many cases, a jury. Being an issue of fact, its determination in one court or in one case will be no bar to its retrial in other courts, or in the same court in an action where the parties are different. One jury or one judge may, on conflicting evidence, find that a statute was passed, and is therefore the law of the State. Another may find that it was not passed, and is therefore inoperative. The law will be one thing for one man, and another thing for another man, depending upon the diligence of his counsel, and the temper, or perhaps prejudice, of a jury. A city will be governed by one law when A sues it, and by a different law when B sues it. An issue of bonds will be valid after their maturity only when in a suit thereon a jury shall say that the Legislature passed the law authorizing the issue, and then they will be valid only as to the specific bonds in action. I need not amplify the illustrations. Such a state of affairs produces a confusion in our statute law suggesting anarchy."⁶

The arguments against conclusiveness seem to be reducible to three: first, the argument of legal theory, i. e. that the enrolment is not a record; second, that of practical policy, i. e. that there is danger of error and fraud; and third, that of constitutional necessity, i. e. the impossibility of securing in any other way the enforcement of constitutional restrictions on legislative action. — The first argument, on which stress is seldom laid, is met by the principle that there may be conclusive preferences for testimony, irrespective of records (ante, § 1348). — The second argument cannot for a moment stand (as the above passages make plain) against the considerations that there is equal or greater danger of error and fraud in the journals, and that the use of the latter plunges the community into the uncertainty of repeated litigation on a question never capable of final settlement; the first of the considerations already outlined (ante, § 1348 (2)) applies here in all its force. — The third argument, that of constitutional necessity, is the one most frequently pressed, and the one really responsible for almost all of the decisions against conclusiveness. But it seems, after all, to be but a spectral scruple, created by a false logic:

(1) In the first place, note that it is impossible of consistent application. If, as it is urged, the Judiciary are bound to enforce the constitutional requirements of these readings, a two-thirds vote, and the like, and if therefore an act must be declared no law which in fact was not read three times or would alone render superfluous all the other deliverances on the subject. It is not quoted here, because it does not lend itself to partial quotation; but it ought to be read in its entirety by every one desiring to make an argument on the subject.

⁶ The opinions by Hoyt, J., in State v. Jones, 6 Wash. 452, 34 Pac. 201, and Beasley, C. J., in Pangborn v. Young, 32 N. J. L. 29, are easily the best on the subject both for comprehensiveness and keenness of analysis and for clearness of exposition. The latter opinion is the one best known; but the former, though rarely cited,

voted upon by two thirds, this duty is a duty to determine according to the actual facts of the readings and the votes. Now the journals may not represent the actual facts. That duty cannot allow us to stop with the journals, if it can be shown beyond doubt that the facts were otherwise than therein represented. The duty to uphold a law which in fact was constitutionally voted upon is quite as strong as the duty to repudiate an act unconstitutionally voted upon. The Court will be going as far wrong in repudiating an act based on proper votes falsified in the journal as it will be in upholding an act based on improper votes falsified in the enrolment. This supposed duty, in short, is to see that the constitutional facts did exist; and it cannot stop short with the journals. Yet, singularly enough, it is unanimously conceded that an examination into the facts as provable by the testimony of members present is not allowable.⁷ If to support this it be said that such an inquiry would be too uncertain and impracticable, then it is answered that this concedes the supposed constitutional duty not to be inexorable, after all; for if the duty to get at the facts is a real and inevitable one, it must be a duty to get at them at any cost; and if it is merely a duty that is limited by policy and practical convenience, then the argument changes into the second one above, namely, how far it is feasible to push the inquiry with regard to policy and practical convenience; and from this point of view there can be but one answer. (2) In the second place, the fact that the scruple of constitutional duty is treated thus inconsistently and pushed only up to a certain point suggests that it perhaps is based on some fallacious assumption whose defect is exposed only by carrying it to its logical consequences. Such indeed seems to be the case. It rests on the fallacious notion that every constitutional provision is per se capable of being enforced through the Judiciary and must be safeguarded by the Judiciary because it can be in no other way. Yet there is certainly a large field of constitutional provision which does not come before the Judiciary for enforcement, and may remain unenforced without any possibility of judicial remedy. It is not necessary to invoke in illustration such provisions as a clause requiring the Governor to appoint a certain officer, or the Legislature to pass a law for a certain purpose; here the Constitution may remain unexecuted by the failure of Governor or Legislature to act, and yet the Judiciary cannot safeguard and enforce the constitutional duty.⁸ A clearer illustration may be had by imagining the Constitution to require the Executive to appoint an officer or to call out the militia whenever to the best of his belief a certain state of facts exists; suppose he appoints or calls out when in truth he has no such belief; can the Judiciary attempt to enforce the Constitution by inquiring into his belief?⁹ Or suppose the Constitution to enjoin on the legislators to pass a law upon a certain subject whenever in their belief certain conditions exist; can the Judiciary declare the law void by inquiring and ascertaining that the Legislature, or its majority, did not have such a belief?¹⁰ Or suppose the Constitution commands the Judiciary to decide a case only after consulting a soothsayer, and in a given case the Judiciary do not consult one; what is to be done? These instances illustrate a general situation in which the judicial function of applying and enforcing the Constitution ceases to operate. That situation exists where the Constitution enjoins duties which affect the motives and judgment of a particular independent department of government, — Legislature, Executive, and Judiciary. Such duties are simply beyond enforcement by any other department if the one charged fails to perform them. The Constitution may provide that no legislator shall take a bribe, but an act would not be treated as void because the majority had been bribed.¹¹ So far as the Constitution attempts to lay injunctions in matters leading up to and motivating the action of a department, injunctions must be left to the conscience of that department to obey or disobey. Now the act of the Legislature as a whole is for this purpose of the same nature as the vote of a single legislator. The Constitution may expressly enjoin each legislator not to vote until he has carefully thought over the matter of legislation; so, too, it may expressly enjoin the whole Legislature not to act finally until it has three times heard the proposition read aloud. It is for the Legislature alone, in the latter case as well as in the former, to take notice of this injunction; and it is no more the function of the Judiciary in the one case than in the other to try to keep the Legislature to its duty:

⁷ Cases cited supra, note 3.

⁸ These cases suggest the disputed question as to the Judiciary's use of the mandamus, and are therefore open to dispute.

⁹ Post, § 2369.

1877, Per Curiam, in Kilgore v. Magee, 85 Pa. 401, 412: "So far as the duty and the consciences of the members of the Legislature are involved, the law [of the Constitution] is mandatory; they are bound by their oaths to obey the constitutional mode of proceeding; . . . [it is] a question of regularity in the conduct of those who have the power to enact a law and to declare it to be such. . . . But when a law has been passed and approved and certified in due form, it is no part of the judiciary to go behind the law as duly certified to inquire into the observance of form in its passage."

1886, Campbell, J., in Ex parte Wren, 63 Miss. 512, 533: "It is the admitted province of the Courts to judge and declare if an act of the Legislature violates the Constitution. But this duty of the Courts begins with the completed act of the Legislature; it does not antedate it. . . . From necessity the judicial department must judge of the conformity of the legislative acts to the Constitution; but what are legislative acts must be determined by what are authenticated as such according to the Constitution. That instrument contains many provisions as to the passage of bills which are admitted to be addressed to ¹⁰ 1887, Day Land & C. Co. v. State, 68 Tex. 526, 4 S. W. 865 (a legislative preamble declaring an emergency to exist, justifying the suspension of the rule requiring three several readings, as permitted by the Constitution, is conclusive; "the Legislature . . . is made the sole judge whether facts exist to authorize the immediate passage of a bill").

¹¹ 1810, Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cr. 87, 123, 130, 144; 1884, Eakin, J., in Webster v. Little Rock, 44 Ark. 536, 548 ("the rule everywhere recognized"); 1849, Jones v. Jones, 12 Pa. 350, 357; 1859, Lowrie, C. J., in Sunbury & E. R. Co. v. Cooper, 33 Pa. 278, 282 ("May the Judiciary sit in judgment upon a charge that the Legislature have been faithless to their oaths, to the Constitution, and to the public interests? . . . We cannot hesitate a moment on this question"); 1891, U. S. v. Des Moines, N. & R. Co., 142 U. S. 510, 544 ("The knowledge and good faith of a Legislature are not open to question; . . . the bill [here] alleges that its [the act's] passage was induced by the [defendant] Navigation Co., by false representations and threats of suits; but that amounts to nothing"); 1893, U. S. v. Old Settlers, 148 id. 427, 466. Compare Story, Commentary on the Constitution, § 1090 (whose arguments apply to the present problem).

legislators exclusively, and for the observance of which there is confessedly no remedy which Courts can apply. . . . [They are] to be enforced by the oath required of members, and not admitted to the Courts."

The truth is that many have been carried away with the righteous desire to check at any cost the misdoings of Legislatures. They have set such store by the Judiciary for this purpose that they have almost made them a second and higher Legislature. But they aim in the wrong direction. Instead of trusting a faithful Judiciary to check an evil Legislature, they should turn to reform the Legislature. That it is no better, in the average, is the fault of the people, by whom it is sent. The sensible solution is not to patch and mend casual errors by asking the Judiciary to violate legal principle and to do impossibilities with the Constitution; but to represent ourselves with competent, careful, and honest legislators, the work of whose hands on the statute-roll may come to reflect credit upon the name of popular government.

§ 1351. Same: (3) Certificate of Election. The mode of dealing with election returns is everywhere regulated by statutes more or less voluminous, and frequently subjected to amendment; and it would be impossible to state here the condition of the law of evidence in each jurisdiction without a consideration of all the provisions of the general election law. It will be enough to note broadly the considerations recognized as affecting the evidential doctrine of conclusive testimony.

(a) The certificate of the returning officer or commission that a certain person has been elected is generally held not to be conclusive; and the Court will therefore examine, with the aid of other sources (chiefly, the ballots themselves) into the fact in issue, of which the certificate is the provisionally preferred testimony, i. e. into the total number and tenor of votes by qualified electors:

1765, Wilmot, J., in R. v. Vice-Chancellor, 3 Burr. 1647, 1649, 1661 (an order to compel the University proctors to declare who had the majority of votes): "I think it [their 'declaration'] immaterial; for the question depends not upon that, but upon the real majority of legal votes. Their declaration cannot alter or affect that. . . . Even if such their declaration had been contrary to the truth of the fair and legal right, the Court must have taken up the matter upon the true and real merits."

1835, Rogers, J., in Com. v. County Commissioners, 5 Rawle 75, 79: "It is a startling doctrine that in case of a notorious fraud or a palpable violation of the law a constable could palm an officer on the public by the force of his return, — that, by merely omitting to state the place where the election was held, he could control the election, when it was admitted that it was not in fact held at the place appointed by the act. If this be the law, it is useless to go through the mockery of an election; the constable may return whom he pleases, always taking care that his return is correct upon its face. It would be better to give the appointment to the constable at once, without the useless ceremony of an election."

1855, Whitton, C. J., in Attorney-General v. Barstow, 4 Wis. 567, 792: "The question is whether the canvass or the election establishes the right of a person to an office. It seems clear that it cannot be the former, because by our Constitution and laws it is expressly provided that the election by the qualified voters shall determine the question. . . . But it has been repeatedly contended in the course of this proceeding that, although the election by the electors determines the right to the office, yet the decision of the persons appointed to canvass the votes cast at the election settles finally and completely the question as to the persons elected, and that therefore no Court can have jurisdiction to inquire into the matter. It will be seen that this view of the question, while it recognizes the principle that the election is the foundation of the right to the office, assumes that the canvassers have authority to decide the matter finally and conclusively. . . . [As to this, we say that] Courts which have the power to entertain proceedings by quo warranto have authority to determine who has this right, without being compelled to limit the proof of the right to the acts of those who by law are appointed to canvass the votes and make statements of them ;” Smith, J. :¹ “It is said the Legislature has erected the board of State canvassers into a judicial tribunal,—supreme, final, and unquestionable. This is indeed strange doctrine. . . . Can this board of canvassers be considered a judicial tribunal when they have no power to issue a subpoena for nor to compel the attendance of witnesses, to summon parties before them, to grant a trial by jury ? . . . If the decision of one board can oust the supreme judicial tribunal of the State of jurisdiction and paralyze its functions, so can another. The clerk of a board of supervisors and two justices of the peace of his own selection become the Court of first and last resort, in which the most sacred rights of freemen are adjudged and determined without appeal; and that, too, without a chance of being heard, without process, without a jury, without the privilege of appearing before the power which may pronounce upon their rights.”²

1863, Davies, J., in People v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 45, 55: “What is it that confers title to the office and the legal right to the reception of its emoluments? It surely is the fact that the greatest number of qualified voters have so declared their wishes at an election held pursuant to law. It is not the canvass or estimate or certificate which determines the right. These are only evidences of the right; but the truth may be inquired into and the very right ascertained.”

1865, Welch, J., in Howard v. Shields, 16 Oh. St. 184, 191: “The question to be decided in an election contest is, Which party received the greatest number of legal votes? If the Court can, as it necessarily must, go behind the abstract, why should it not also go behind the poll-books and tally-sheets? . . . To hold that, when an election has been in fact held, and the majority of the legal voters have in fact and according to the prescribed forms of law cast their ballots for the candidates of their choice, the constitutional rights of the voters and of their candidates can be defeated by a mere misprision or omission of the judges or clerks, would be manifestly unjust and contrary to the plain intent and spirit of our election laws. Such a result should be permitted only in cases of necessity arising from the want of proper means to ascertain with reliable certainty the facts of the case.”

Nevertheless, when the chief source of evidence, the ballots themselves, cannot be trusted because they have been tampered with, or when by law they have been destroyed, the condition already pointed out (ante, § 1348 (2)) may exist, namely, the official certificate may become more trustworthy than any verdict that could be reached upon the scanty or suspicious evidence available. In such a situation the certificate, or some subordinate certificate such as the tally-list, may well be taken as conclusive. But this result has seldom been reached by the Courts except under express direction of a statute.³ Most Courts, however, while not treating the certifi-

¹ At pp. 781, 786.

² The most forceful exposition of the whole subject is to be found in the masterly arguments of Mr. (afterwards C. J.) Ryan, at pp. 674, 684, and Mr. Orton, at p. 703, in the above case.

³ See the following: 1897, Weakley v. Wolf,

148 Ind. 208, 47 N. E. 466 (tally-sheets and certificates to be conclusive as to unprotected ballots, which are not to be looked at or testified about; the law having provided expressly for their destruction, R. S. 1894, § 6248).

cate as conclusive, do lay down, upon the same considerations, a rule for measuring the relative value of the evidence, i. e. they refuse to decide according to the evidence of the ballots if the ballots have been so tampered with as to be untrustworthy; the chief difference of opinion here occurs merely on the question whether the ballots will be taken as reliable until the tampering is shown, or whether they will be taken as unreliable until the fact of tampering is negated.⁴

(b) The certificate includes an assertion that the person named was voted for by the required number of qualified electors. Conceding that the certificate is not conclusive testimony to the net fact that the person named was elected, may it not at least be taken to be conclusive that the votes were cast by qualified electors? The argument to this effect has occasionally been rested on the idea that the election officers were given a quasi-judicial function in determining to accept the vote of given electors. But the stronger argument, advanced in the more weighty opinions, is that the case presented involves the conditions already noted (ante, § 1348(2)) namely, a dearth of evidence for the proper investigation of the facts at a judicial trial. These remarks are set forth in the following passages:

1863, Denio, C. J., diss., in People v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 45, 77: "The real question is who, according to the arrangements which the Constitution and laws have provided for determining that question, received the greatest number of votes, and was elected to the office. If the law has left it as an open question, to be determined like ordinary matters upon which private rights depend, or, which is much the same thing, if the certificate of the canvassers is made only prima facie evidence of the state of the poll, as is argued, the right can only be definitely settled by the verdict of a jury. But the nature of the subject would lead us to conclude, a priori, that such could not be the system organized by the Legislature. . . . I am of opinion that the policy of the legal provisions which have been enacted upon this subject is to secure record evidence of the result of the election, which, save in a few exceptional cases to be presently mentioned, is conclusive upon the public and upon all individuals, and against the verity of which no allegation can be admitted. I do not proceed upon one of the grounds relied upon by the plaintiffs' counsel, namely, that the inspectors of elections are made judges of the qualifications of persons claiming to be elected and who may offer to vote. . . . But while I disclaim any reliance upon the alleged judicial character of the inspectors, I am still of opinion that, so far as the value of the vote is concerned, the voter is made a competent and effectual witness respecting his qualifications to vote. Should he swear falsely, he is liable to indictment and punishment for perjury; and the act directs the preservation of so much of the evidence of his having voted as shall be necessary to establish the fact upon the trial of an indictment. . . . The Legislature considered that if one claiming to be a voter came forward, openly and publicly, before the inspectors and the public, who would be likely to be his neighbors and acquaintances, and offered to vote and no one questioned his right, or swore positively to his qualifications if challenged, it would be quite safe to assume that he possessed the requisite qualifications; for the inspectors and the whole community would not be likely to conspire in the interest of illegal voting. The law, therefore, provided that in such a case the vote should be received without other evidence. As to those whose right should be challenged, the legislative will was that the voter should be questioned on oath by the inspectors; that if doubts as to his right should be entertained, these doubts should be stated to him and the law explained, and that then it should be left to his conscience whether to affirm upon his oath, under the peril of temporal punishment for perjury, and of such religious and moral responsibility as might affect his mind, or to abstain from voting. . . . No doubt the determination of the right is left to depend essentially upon the voter's oath, and that there is a possibility that a false or mistaken oath may sometimes be taken. But is the hazard of a perversion of the franchise, under these arrangements, so great as to require us to hold, against the plain language of the statute, that a right is implied to reëxamine the question before a jury, in case the right of the prevailing candidate shall afterwards be called in question? I think not."

⁴ The following are illustrations: Ariz.: 1898, Oakes v. Finlay, — Ariz. —, 53 Pac. 173 (ballots not controlling where not clearly shown to have been preserved unaltered); 1887, Dixon v. Orr, 49 Ark. 238, 241, 4 S. W. 774 (poll-books and tally-sheets are preferred evidence; if unavailable, other evidence by observers is receivable); 1887, Wheat v. Smith, 50 id. 266, 282, 7 S. W. 161 (original and duplicate returns being lost, the election officers' testimony of their contents was received); 1890, Jones v. Glidewell, 53 id. 161, 176, 13 S. W. 723 (contents of stolen returns shown); 1891, Merritt v. Hinton, 55 id. 12, 16, 17 S. W. 270 (contents of lost or destroyed returns shown); Cal.: 1865, People v. Holden, 23 Cal. 123, 131 (the statute providing for ballot-preservation, the tally-list of the election-officers may be overturned by the results of an inspection of the ballots themselves; ballots presumed not to have been tampered with); 1884, Coglan v. Beard, 65 id. 58, 63, 2 Pac. 737 (the election officers' certificate may be overturned by the ballots, if they are in the same condition as when delivered by the election-judges); Ill.: 1872, Knox Co. v. Davis, 63 Ill. 405, 418 (poll-books and returns having been rejected for fraud, other evidence of the votes cast was received); 1880, Kingery v. Berry, 94 id. 515 (ballots to control if not tampered with); 1887, Lawrence Co. v. Schmaulhausen, 123 id. 321, 332, 14 N. E. 255; 1897, Dooley v. Van Hohenstein, 170 id. 630, 49 N. E. 193 (neither ballot-count in Court nor election judges' return is conclusive; but the former is to be preferred where not under suspicion of tampering); 1900, Jeter v. Headley, 186 id. 34, 57 N. E. 784 (ballots control, if not tampered with); Kan.: 1877, Hudson v. Solomon, 19 Kans. 177 (Brewer, J.: "The necessities of the case make it [the certificate] prima facie evidence, but, unless expressly so declared by statute, it is never conclusive"); Ky.: 1900, Taylor v. Beekham, 108 Ky. 278, 56 S. W. 177 (refusing to review the action of the Legislature, which was here the election board); 1902, Edwards v. Logan, — id. —, 70 S. W. 852 (ballots control, if preserved intact); Mass.: 1897, Attorney-General v. Drohan, 169 Mass. 534, 48 N. E. 279; Nebr.: 1892, Albert v. Twhig, 35 Nebr. 563, 568, 53 N. W. 532 (ballots control the officers' returns, if properly preserved); N. Y.: 1825, People v. Van Slyck, 4 Cow. 297, 323 (Woodworth, J.: "The trial is had upon the right of the party holding office; the certificate is not conclusive; the Court will decide upon an examination of all the facts"); N. D.: 1899, Houser v. Pepper, 8 N. D. 484, 79 N. W. 1018; Wis.: 1899, State v. Luy, 103 Wis. 524, 79 N. W. 776.

1868, Campbell, J., in People v. Cicott, 16 Mich. 283, 294: "The first inquiry, therefore, is whether an election can be defeated as to any candidate by showing him to have received illegal votes. . . . And where the illegality consists in the casting of votes by persons unqualified, unless it is shown for whom they voted, it cannot be allowed to change the result. The question of the power of Courts to inquire into the action of the authorities in receiving or rejecting votes is, therefore, very closely connected with the power of inquiring what persons were voted for by those whose qualifications are denied. . . . The reasons why such an inquiry should be prevented do not necessarily rest on any assumption that the inspectors act throughout judicially, although under our registration system that objection has a force which would not otherwise be so obvious. Neither do they rest in any degree upon the assumption that one rule or another is most likely to induce perjury, as very hastily intimated in People v. Ferguson, 8 Cow. 102 [quoted post]. But a very strong ground for them is found in the fact that our whole ballot system is based upon the idea that unless inviolable secrecy is preserved concerning every voter's action, there can be no safety against those personal or political influences which destroy individual freedom of choice. . . . Under our statutes there is no general provision which makes the canvass for local officers conclusive in all cases, and, therefore, the rule is recognized that the election usually depends upon the ballots, and not upon the returns. These being written and certain, the result of a recount involves no element of difficulty or ambiguity beyond the risk of mistakes in counting or footing up numbers, which may in some respects be more likely in examining the ballots of a whole county, than in telling off those of a town or ward, but which involves no great time or serious disadvantage. But the introduction of parol evidence concerning single voters in a considerable district can rarely reach all cases of illegality effectually, and must so multiply the issues as to seriously complicate the inquiry. . . . No system can be devised which will prevent all illegal voting. But it cannot be said our legislation is not as likely to shut it out as any means open to judicial control would be. The registration law forbids the board from recording any name of which they have well-founded doubts, and it is practically impossible for any stranger to succeed in defrauding the law, with the publicity given to all the proceedings. Where a person applies for registration on election day, the inspectors act upon discretion, and are not compelled to admit a vote unless satisfied of its legality. The challengers on both sides, as we all know, canvass every district beforehand, and expect to challenge every one who is not known. While the inspectors cannot reject a registered voter who takes the proper oath, yet the means of previous inquiry, and the imminent risk of detection and punishment, have reduced the dangers of illegal voting within very narrow limits. . . . I am, therefore, of opinion that the election must be determined solely by the ballots received according to law; and that where the election proceedings are not irregular, and the law has been complied with in correcting the lists and preserving the ballots, the means of determining the result must be in the main arithmetical."

The arguments against the conclusiveness of the certificate as to the voter's qualifications are set forth in the following passages:

1827, Savage, C. J., in People v. Ferguson, 8 Cow. 102 (repudiating the ruling of the trial judge that a voter's testimony to the tenor of an ambiguous ballot was inadmissible because "such a principle would be of the most dangerous tendency, as it would lead to subornation of perjury"); "The elector who put in the ballot is certainly higher evidence as [to] the person designated by it than the opinion of any other. Such elector is competent, unless he is to be excluded from principles of public policy. . . . It is true, if the voter should swear falsely, you probably cannot convict him of perjury. But are we to reject every witness who comes to swear under such circumstances that, if he swears false, he cannot be convicted of perjury? I know of no such rule of evidence."

1863, Selden, J., in People v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 45, 65: "The first ground upon which this position is attempted to be sustained is, that inspectors of elections are judicial officers, whose decisions in receiving the ballots are final and conclusive. . . . Inspectors are required to decide some questions, but they are such as ministerial officers are often required to decide. A county clerk, before recording a deed, must decide whether it is legally proved or acknowledged, but his decision is not conclusive; a sheriff must decide whether the person whom he arrests is the person described in his process, but his decision is not judicial, and he acts at his peril. . . . The inspectors may be required to decide important questions, and their decisions, for the purpose for which they are made, that of determining whether the votes shall be received or rejected, are final; but I do not think they are conclusive with regard to the legality of the votes when the question is presented in an action properly instituted to try the right of persons elected to office, or defeated, by the result of the decisions. They cannot call witnesses — they can receive no oral testimony excepting the oath of the voter, and no documentary evidence, unless the challenge is based on an alleged conviction of crime. . . . Their decision leaves the question open for more deliberate adjudication whether the voter had or had not a right to vote. Great interests often depend upon these questions. They lie at the foundation of the government, and it is of the utmost importance that the means of detecting and exposing fraud and imposition, and correcting error, should be such as to secure the confidence of the people in the ultimate result of elections. . . . The greatest number of lawful votes alone gives the right to an elective office in this State; and as no adjudication can be had to determine the lawfulness of votes before they are received, that question must be open to examination by Courts afterwards, or there is no power anywhere in the government to discriminate between those which are lawful and those which are unlawful. Indeed, if the rule contended for by the plaintiffs be adopted, the distinction between lawful and unlawful votes ceases to exist when they reach the ballot-box."

1868, Christiancy, J., in People v. Cicott, 16 Mich. 283, 311: "I cannot go to the extent of holding that no inquiry is admissible in any case into the qualification of voters, or the nature of the votes given. Such a rule, I admit, would be easy of application, and as a general rule might not be productive of a great amount of injustice, while the multitude of distinct questions of fact in reference to the great number of voters whose qualification may be contested, is liable to lead to some embarrassment, and sometimes to protracted trials, without a more satisfactory result than would have been attained under a rule which should exclude all such inquiries. Still I cannot avoid the conclusion that, in theory and spirit, our Constitution and our statutes recognize as valid those votes only which are given by electors who possess the constitutional qualifications; that they recognize as valid such elections only as are effected by the votes of a majority of such qualified electors. And though the election boards of inspectors and canvassers, acting only ministerially, are bound in their decisions by the number of votes deposited in accordance with the forms of law regulating their action, it is quite evident that illegal votes may have been admitted by the perjury or other fault of the voters; and that the majority to which the inspectors have been constrained to certify and the canvassers to allow, has been thus wrongfully and illegally secured. And I have not been able to satisfy myself that, in such a case, these boards acting thus ministerially, and often compelled to admit votes which they know to be illegal, were intended to constitute tribunals of last resort for the determination of the rights of parties claiming an election. If this were so, and there were no legal redress, I think there would be much reason to apprehend that elections would degenerate into mere contests of fraud. The person having the greatest number of the votes of legally qualified electors, it seems to me, has a constitutional right to the office, and if no inquiry can be had into the qualification of any voter, here is a constitutional right depending upon a mode of trial unknown to the Constitution, and, as I am strongly inclined to think, opposed to its provisions. I doubt the competency of the Legislature, should they attempt it, which I think they have not, to make the decision of inspectors or canvassers final under our Constitution. The extent of the inquiry into the qualification of voters, and how they have voted, may be limited or qualified by other provisions of the Constitution. . . . He may, if he sees fit, testify in court to the vote which he has given. . . . And whenever the person who has voted admits that he was not constitutionally qualified, or the fact clearly appears, so that it no longer remains a question for the jury, he can claim no protection from this privilege."⁵

§ 1352. Sundry Official Certificates (Certificates of Jurat, of Acknowledgment of Deed, of Record of Deed, of Ship Registry, of Protest of Commercial Paper; Legislative Recitals in Statutes). The suggestion has been made in many other instances that an official certificate should be taken as conclusive testimony to the fact certified; but this suggestion has been almost invariably repudiated by the Courts. Such cases, however, involve the necessity of distinguishing the rules of the substantive law bearing on the issue (as already noted in § 1346), and it would be impossible here to deal justly with the various questions. A few instances only may be noted, to illustrate the nature of the problem.

(1) A recital of fact in a statute, though it may in some conditions be admissible as an official statement (post, § 1662), is not conclusive testimony. The Legislature's recitals are commonly intended merely as explanations.

⁵ See the authorities cited supra, note 4; the local statutes are so lengthy and so complicated with other rules of law that it is impracticable to collect the authorities here.

of motives and purposes, and not as determinations of controverted fact. They could not, without gross injustice, be made evidentially conclusive, and this is generally conceded.¹ As a contract or an estoppel, or otherwise, the recital may be binding;² but that would not be due to a rule of evidence.

(2) A jurat or certificate of the taking of an oath is ordinarily not conclusive testimony and may be shown erroneous.³ But in a given case the law may prescribe, as a condition precedent to certain legal consequences, that certain documentary forms of oath be observed; and then, if those forms are not observed, it is of no effect that the oath or other act was done without those forms; here all will depend on the significance of the statutory requirement.⁴

(3) For the same reason, the conclusiveness of a deed's certificate of acknowledgment will depend upon the view taken of the policy of the Legislature in requiring certain conditions for the validity of a transfer under the registration system, and also on the judicial or merely ex parte character (ante, § 1347) of the proceeding in which the acknowledgment is taken.⁵

(4) So also the theory of the substantive law (ante, §§ 1225, 1239) must disclose whether under the system of land-transfer registration the recorder's registration of a deed is conclusive as to its contents,⁶ or as to the execution

¹ Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1903 (recitals in a public statute are conclusive only "for the purpose of carrying it into effect"; in a private statute, only "between parties who claim under its provisions"); 1849, Birdsong v. Brooks, 7 Ga. 88, 92 (statutory recital not conclusive; quoted post, § 1353); 1883, Koehler v. Hill, 60 Ia. 543, 564; 14 N. W. 738, 15 N. W. 609 (preamble of a statute by one Assembly reciting the terms of an act of a former one, not conclusive).

² 1902, Frazer v. James, 65 S. C. 78, 43 S. E. 292 (under a constitutional provision permitting the Legislature to establish new counties upon certain conditions, the existence of those conditions as recited in the statute establishing a new county cannot be disputed, apart from fraud or deceit by the Legislature). Consult Eudlich, Interpretation of Statutes (1888), § 375.

³ 1700, Thurston v. Slatford, 1 Salk. 284 (a clerk's record as to an official not taking the oath; "if there be a mis-entry, it might be supplied and corrected by other evidence, for he should not be concluded by the mistake or negligence of the officer"); 1808, R. v. Emden, 9 East 437 (jurat of an affidavit, not conclusive as to the place of the swearing); 1903, Nicholson v. Snyder, — Md. —, 55 Atl. 484 (notary's certificate of oath to an answer in bankruptcy, not conclusive); 1899, Baumer v. French, 8 N. D. 319, 79 N. W. 340 (jurat of an affidavit, not conclusive).

⁴ 1898, Ryder v. Alton, 175 Ill. 94, 51 N. E. 821 (assessment commissioner's report sworn to before a notary; commissioner not allowed to deny having sworn); 1823, Hale v. Cushing, 2 Greenl. 218, 220 (oath of an assistant assessor; if not recorded, provably orally; the statutory requirement being directory only); 1831, Tripp

v. Garey, 7 id. 266, semble (certificate of a militia commander as to the clerk's appointment is by statute the exclusive evidence); 1860, Hathaway v. Addison, 48 Me. 440, 443 (oath of collector and assessor; same as Hale v. Cushing); 1876, Farnsworth Co. v. Rand, 65 id. 19, 21 (oath of a collector before a town clerk; if never recorded, provable orally); 1812, Bassett v. Marshall, 9 Mass. 312 (a justice of the peace made no record of an oath to a militia clerk; the parol fact was allowed; "since the magistrate made no record, . . . the evidence admitted was the best that could be required"); 1826, Sherman v. Needham, 4 Pick. 66 (certificate of oath of appointment of militia clerk prescribed by statute; "this is not like the case where the regular evidence has been lost and inferior evidence is admitted; the Legislature seem to have prescribed the mode of taking the oath"; and so the prescribed certificate alone would suffice); 1827, Com. v. Sherman, 5 id. 239 (same).

⁵ See the following cases: 1898, Merrill v. Syper, 65 Ark. 51, 44 S. W. 462; 1867, Hill v. Bacon, 43 Ill. 477; 1899, Tuschinski v. R. Co., 176 id. 420, 52 N. E. 920; 1902, Parlin & Orendorff Co. v. Hutson, 198 id. 389, 65 N. E. 93; 1899, Ayer v. Ahlborn, 174 Mass. 292, 54 N. E. 555. Compare § 1347, ante, and the cases there cited for a married woman's acknowledgment. Certificates of this kind may by statute be judicial acts. Compare Jonea on Mortgages, § 538.

⁶ See the following illustrations: 1856, Harvey v. Thorpe, 28 Ala. 250, 263; 1885, Gaston v. Merriam, 33 Minn. 271, 276, 22 N. W. 614; 1829, Hastings v. B. H. T. Co., 9 Pick. 80, 83; 1836, Ames v. Phelps, 18 id. 314.

of an entry of satisfaction of a mortgage,⁷ or as to the time of entry for registration,⁸ or as to other facts material to the recorded title.⁹

(5) So also a notary's certificate of protest, regarded from the point of view of evidence, is not conclusive.¹⁰ Yet it is possible for the law of negotiable paper to make a certificate in a certain form sufficient or indispensable for fixing liability, — just as it may make the mere mailing of a notice, irrespective of its receipt, sufficient for the same purpose.

These and numerous other instances illustrate that when an official certificate, entry, record, or the like is forbidden to be disputed, it is usually not a genuine instance of conclusive testimony, but rather a consequence of some rule of substantive law.¹¹ The only plain instances of a rule of conclusive testimony, recognized on common-law principles, seem to be those of the magistrate's report of testimony, the enrolment of a statute, and the return of an election officer (ante, §§ 1349–1351). It remains now to notice certain statutory rules that have been attempted.

§ 1353. Constitutionality of Statutes making Testimony Conclusive; General Principles. It has been suggested (ante, § 1348) that a Court takes an extreme step, amounting to a temporary and partial renunciation of its vital functions, when it foregoes its own investigation and accepts some person's testimony as conclusive of a fact to be judicially determined. That a Court

⁷ See the following illustrations: 1854, Fleming v. Parry, 24 Pa. 47, 51 (an entry of satisfaction of mortgage on the registry; that it was not intended as a satisfaction of the bond, allowed to be shown; the entry not being a record "to which that maxim applies, the proper application of which is to judicial records"); 1871, Lancaster v. Smith, 67 id. 427, 433 (deed-recorder's attestation of a discharge of mortgage, not conclusive; the act being that of the party and the recorder being merely the attester of the party's act).

⁸ See the following illustrations: 1817, R. v. Reed, 3 Price 495, 506, 511; 1834, Tracy v. Jenks, 15 Pick. 465, 468 (register's certificate of time of receiving and recording deed, conclusive as between creditors); 1841, Musser v. Hyde, 2 W. & S. 314 (conclusive as to time, in favor of a purchaser for value on the faith of the entry); 1803, Taylor v. Holcomb, 2 Tyl. Vt. 344 (town clerk's endorsement of time of record of deed, conclusive; but here allowed to be interpreted by his usage in recording); 1846, Morton v. Edwin, 19 Vt. 77, 80 (justice's certificate of time of record of execution, not conclusive); 1850, Chandler v. Spear, 22 id. 388, 401 (clerk's certificate of time of record of tax-sale bill, not conclusive); 1861, Bartlett v. Boyd, 34 id. 256, 261 (town-clerk's statutory certificate of date of mortgage-record and filing, not conclusive); 1868, Johnson v. Burden, 40 id. 567, 571 (town-clerk's certificate of date of filing for record, not conclusive); 1845, Horsley v. Garth, 2 Gratt. 471 (not conclusive as to date of filing and recording).

⁹ 1827, Hubbard v. Dewey, 2 Ark. 312, 315 (clerk's certificate of fact of record of deed or execution, not conclusive); 1827, Myers v. Brownell, ib. 407, 409 (clerk's certificate of filing of deed with directions to delay recording, not conclusive); 1843, Carpenter v. Sawyer, 17 Vt. 121, 123 (clerk's certificate of source of record of notices, not conclusive). On the foregoing points, compare the cases cited ante, §§ 1225, 1239.

A ship's register is ordinarily not conclusive as to title; 1830, Colson v. Bonzey, 6 Greenl. 474 (action for supplies furnished). Compare the cases cited ante, § 1240, post, § 1647.

¹⁰ 1875, Boit v. McKenzie, 54 Ala. 112; 1883, Martin v. Brown, 75 id. 442, 447; 1871, Rogers v. Stevenson, 16 Minn. 68; 1843, Wood v. Trust Co., 7 How. Miss. 609, 630; 1895, Cook v. Bank, 72 Miss. 982, 18 So. 481; 1821, Stewart v. Allison, 6 S. & R. 324.

¹¹ 1877, People v. Hagar, 52 Cal. 171, 187 (certified copy of petition on file; whether certificate of correctness of copy can be attacked, not decided); 1854, Peterson v. Taylor, 15 Ga. 483 (certificate by a clerk, as to papers filed; not conclusive); 1887, Mussel v. Tama Co., 73 Ia. 101, 34 N. W. 762 (township trustees' certificate of pauper supplies furnished, conclusive under statute, except for fraud); 1903, O'Connell v. Dow, 182 Mass. 541, 66 N. E. 788 (magistrate's certificate of taking of deposition, not conclusive). Compare the additional instances cited and distinguished, ante, §§ 1346, 1347, post, § 2453.

Whether the officer himself is forbidden to impeach his own certificate, though it is otherwise not conclusive, is a different question (ante, § 530).

may do this, when it believes the result to be a more likely approach to truth than its own investigations could obtain, cannot be doubted. But in such a case the Court acts voluntarily, and exercises its choice. Being charged constitutionally with the exclusive function of determining facts in controversy, it believes this duty to be best carried out by accepting a certain person's statement as the most satisfactory source of reliance in reaching that determination. But can such a course be forced upon the Judiciary by another department of government? Can the Legislature prescribe a rule of conclusive evidence?

(1) On the one hand, so far as a so-called rule of conclusive evidence is not a rule of evidence at all, but a rule of substantive law, it is clear that the Legislature is not infringing upon the prerogative of the Judiciary. For example, a rule that an indorser's liability can be fixed by showing a notary's certificate of protest is not necessarily a rule making the certificate conclusive evidence of demand and notice, but a rule of the law of negotiable instruments; because the law might be that no demand or notice at all was necessary for fixing an indorser's liability; to require a notary's certificate is merely to require a formal official instrument irrespective of its truth, i. e. something half-way between requiring actual notice and requiring no notice at all. Again, to make a rule that as between successive grantees the recorder's certificate of the time of filing deeds shall be conclusive, is not to make a rule of evidence, but merely to provide in the law of land-transfer that a deed found to be recorded as of a prior date shall take effect against a deed found to be recorded as of a subsequent date, irrespective of the actual time of entry and record. In such cases, and countless others, the use of the term "conclusive evidence" cannot conceal the true nature of the rule as a rule of substantive law making a certain right or obligation depend upon the existence of a certain official writing irrespective of its truth.¹ Such statutes do not in any way infringe the prerogative of the Judiciary, because they make no rule of evidence at all.

It is true that such statutes may in some other aspect be invalid because of express constitutional limitations of legislative power as to some substantive right. For example, in either of the above instances, if the statute was enacted to govern notes and deeds made prior to its passage, it might violate the constitutional prohibition against laws impairing the obligation of contracts or taking property without due process of law. Again, a law providing that an assessor's or collector's deed of land sold for taxes shall be conclusive evidence that all due proceedings have been taken in the forfeiture may be obnoxious to the prohibition against taking property without due process; for the law in effect provides that the property may be taken although in fact due proceedings have not been had, — in short, while purporting to make a rule of evidence, it really makes a rule of property-law by which certain acts are declared unnecessary which the Constitution has declared necessary.

¹ Compare § 1346, ante.

In such ways, various constitutional provisions may be violated; but the Legislative attempt is invalid, not because it deals with a rule of evidence, but because it deals with a constitutional rule of property.

(2) In order, then, to contrive a real test of the Legislature's power to make a rule of conclusive evidence in the genuine sense, there must be given a case in which fact A, said to be conclusively proved by fact B, is and remains the real and unchangeable fact in issue, to which fact B can never bear anything more than an evidential relation. Such a case, it will be seen, can hardly occur except when fact A is constitutionally preserved as the ultimate fact on which the right or obligation depends; because, were there no such constitutional sanction, all instances of such laws (except where the statute clearly showed the contrary legislative intention) would be supportable as virtually substituting fact B for fact A in the substantive law (as, where a notary's certificate is substituted for actual notice), and thus the case resolves itself into a change of a rule of substantive law, and not the making of a rule of conclusive evidence. Such instances, then, genuinely presenting a rule open only to interpretation as a rule of conclusive evidence, must be extremely rare. One instance, however, would seem to be a statute making an election certificate conclusive evidence of a candidate's election. Now constitutionally the votes actually cast are the effective facts of an election; the certificate of an official can never be anything more than evidence in relation to the fact of the votes cast. This and a few other cases present fairly the question whether the Legislature can constitutionally oblige the Judiciary to forego its own investigation and accept some person's testimony as determining the fact of election.

To this question the answer can hardly be doubtful. It is one thing for the Judiciary, while exercising in its own way its constitutional powers, to choose to accept the aid of an official certificate in reaching its determination; but it is quite a different thing for the Judiciary to be forbidden altogether to exercise its powers in a certain class of cases. The judicial function under the Constitution is to apply the law; to apply the law necessarily involves the determination of the facts; and to determine the facts necessarily involves the investigation of evidence as a basis for that determination. To forbid investigation is to forbid the exercise of an indestructible judicial function. To make a rule of conclusive evidence, compulsory upon the Judiciary, is to attempt an infringement upon their exclusive province.²

§ 1354. Same: Applications of the Principles (Liability in Tort, Contract, or Crime; Presumptions as to Tax-Collectors' Deeds, Railroad Commissioners' Rates, Immigration Officers' Certificates, Referees' Reports, Insolvency, Gaming, etc.). It remains to distinguish these two principles as they have been judicially invoked for various legislative provisions.

² 1849, Nisbet, J., in Birdsong v. Brooks, 7 Ga. 88, 92 (holding a statutory recital not conclusive; "The Legislature has no power to legislate the truth of facts. Whether facts upon which rights depend are true or false is an inquiry for the Courts to make, under legal forms. It belongs to the judicial department of the government").

(1) A statute which in reality deals with some rule of substantive law cannot be obnoxious to the present principle, although it may be obnoxious to some constitutional proviso which protects the rule of substantive law in question. Thus, a statute which makes more stringent the rule of responsibility for a tort, by substituting some other test than negligence, is constitutional.¹ So also a statute which enlarges the rules of contract by creating an estoppel is constitutional,—as when the terms of a bill of lading² or of a policy of insurance³ are declared to be “conclusive” in certain respects. On the other hand, a statute making a tax-collector's deed of property “conclusive evidence” of the validity of the tax-sale is ineffective, so far as it virtually sanctions the divestiture of property whose owner is not in default; as it is usually said, the essential facts which are constitutionally required for a “taking by due process of law” cannot be abolished by the Legislature, although the unessential details are entirely within the control of the Legislature to suspend or to abolish, conditionally or absolutely.⁴ So, too, any other statute dealing with property rights or held valid); 1898, Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 565, 19 Sup. 281 (Missouri, valued-policy statute, held valid). Legislators frequently seem to believe that something is gained by labelling such statutes as rules of evidence; e. g., Fla. St. 1897, c. 4554 (in actions on fire insurance policies, “the insurer shall not be permitted to deny that the property insured” was of the value insured; this is entitled “an act prescribing a rule of evidence”).

¹ 1899, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Kreager, 61 Oh. 312, 56 N. E. 203 (statute making a railroad company absolutely liable, regardless of negligence, for loss by “fire originating upon the land belonging to such railroad company, caused by operating such railroad,” held valid); 1896, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 22, 17 Sup. 243 (statute making railroad companies liable absolutely, without regard to negligence, for fire communicated by its engines, held valid; an instruction declaring that the setting of the fire was only prima facie evidence of negligence, held properly refused); 1897, Jones v. Brim, 165 U. S. 180, 17 Sup. 282 (statute making one who drives a herd of cattle over a highway along a hillside liable ipso facto for damage by rocks rolled down or banks destroyed, held constitutional). Contra: 1878, Little Rock & S. F. R. Co. v. Payne, 33 Ark. 816 (contra to R. Co. v. Mathews, supra, on the ground that negligence is an essential of liability, and that the Legislature cannot “divest rights by prescribing to the Courts what should be conclusive evidence”; this is an ignoring of the history of the law of negligence).

² Contra: 1902, Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Simonson, 64 Kan. 802, 68 Pac. 653 (statute making a bill of lading “conclusive proof of the amount, etc. so received by such railway company,” held unconstitutional, on the ground that such statutes precluding judicial inquiry are an “invasion of the judicial province and a denial of due process of law”; Doster, C. J., and Smith and Ellis, J.J., diss., on the ground that, though statutes which “bind interested parties by the adversary action of others” may be invalid, the above statute merely applied the doctrine of estoppel to the party's own act).

³ 1896, Daggs v. Ins. Co., 136 Mo. 382, 38 S. W. 85 (statute forbidding an insurer against fire “to deny that the property insured thereby was worth at the time of the issuing of the policy the full amount insured thereon,”

⁴ 1872, Stoudenmire v. Brown, 48 Ala. 699, 709; 1876, Doe v. Minge, 50 id. 123; 1877, Walker, J., in Cairo & F. R. Co. v. Parks, 32 Ark. 131, 145; 1864, Dillon, J., in Allen v. Armstrong, 16 Ia. 508, 513 (an element “so indispensable that without its performance no tax can be raised,” cannot be abolished by statute); 1870, Cole, C. J., in McCready v. Sexton, 29 id. 356, 388 (“This power of the Legislature extends only to those things over which it is supreme; as to the essential and jurisdictional facts, so to speak, which the Legislature cannot annul or change, it cannot excuse the non-performance of them, and of course cannot make the doing of any other thing a substitute for them or conclusive evidence of their being done. To restate the proposition succinctly: Whatever the Legislature is at liberty to authorize or not, it may waive or estop denial; but not so as to that which it must require”); 1887, Re Lake, 40 La. An. 142, 3 So. 479 (“The exercise of legislative power has never been sanctioned so as to make such deeds conclusive as to essential prerequisites”); 1876, Callanan v. Hurley, 93 U. S. 387, 392 (statute making tax-deed conclusive as to certain parts of the proceeding, held valid); 1863, Smith v. Cleveland, 17 Wis. 556, 566 (statute declaring certain irregularities in tax-sale proceedings not to invalidate the sale, held valid; “the Legislature might have fixed the time and provided for a sale without notice or advertisement; they may surely, by proper legislation in advance, guard against errors and personal rights is to be tested by the question whether any legislative alteration of those rights is constitutionally forbidden, either by the general rule against ex post facto laws⁵ or by some particular provision.⁶ In its control over the substantive criminal law, the Legislature seems to be unlimited except by the provisions against ex post facto laws, against cruel punishments, and against deprivation of life and liberty without due process⁷; it may therefore, within those limits, create and define such crimes as it thinks best.⁸ The unwritten constitutional principle, therefore, which some judges have recognized,⁹ that the Legislature cannot declare to be a crime that which is in judicial opinion not so, is no more valid for criminal law than for other departments.

(2) Turning now to statutes which genuinely deal with a rule of evidence, it seems to be generally conceded, on the grounds already noticed (ante, § 1353, par. 2), that a legislative attempt to interfere with judicial powers by forbidding investigation of facts, through declaring certain testimony or other evidential data to be conclusive, is invalid.¹⁰ The genuine instances of this cure mistakes when notice is required"). Compare the cases cited infra, note 16.

⁵ Ante, § 7.

⁶ 1880, People v. Boggs, 56 Cal. 648 (statute declaring official surveyor's county lines conclusive is constitutional, for the Legislature has merely sanctioned beforehand such lines as he runs); 1888, Meyer v. Berlandi, 39 Minn. 438, 40 N. W. 513 (statute giving a building lien, and making the landowner's failure to forbid by law conclusive evidence of consent, held invalid as "a destruction of vested rights without due process of law"); 1860, Cooper's Case, 22 N. Y. 67, 90 (statute making the grantee of the diploma of a certain law school entitled to admission to the bar, held valid, because the Legislature possessed the power of regulating the terms of admission); 1854, Webb v. Den, 17 How. 576, 578 (statute making a conclusive presumption, after 20 years' registration of a deed, that it was properly acknowledged, etc., held valid). The following case was therefore decided upon the wrong theory: 1862, Goshen v. Richmond, 4 All. 458 (statute declaring that the validity of a marriage shall not be questioned on certain grounds in a collateral proceeding, held valid is a mere change in the admissibility of evidence).

⁷ 1824, Sandford, C., in Barker v. People, 3 Cow. 686, 705 ("Though no crime is defined in the Constitution, and no species of punishment is specially forbidden to the Legislature, yet there are numerous regulations of the Constitution which must operate as restrictions upon this general power"); 1856, A. S. Johnson, J., in Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378, 420 ("There may, in respect to offences attempted to be created by legislation, a question arise, capable of being considered by Courts of justice, whether the thing forbidden is an essential part of either of those secured private rights [of life, liberty, or property] so essential that without it the right cannot exist at all").

⁸ 1892, State v. Kingsley, 108 Mo. 135, 18

S. W. 994 (a statute declaring that "every person who shall obtain board or lodging . . . by means of any trick or deception . . . shall be held to have obtained the same with the intent to cheat . . . and shall be guilty of a misdemeanor," held valid, because "it is morally wrong to obtain board by means of a trick . . . and hence it is competent for the law-making power to declare it a crime").

⁹ 1887, State v. Divine, 98 N. C. 778, 4 S. E. 477 (statute making the president, etc., of a railroad criminally liable for the killing or injury of stock by the railroad, regardless of the person's actual share in the causing of the injury, held invalid; the opinion confuses this and the prima facie question); 1882, State v. Kartz, 13 R. I. 528 (statute making it a crime to "keep a place in which it is reputed that intoxicating liquors" are kept for illegal sale, held invalid; "to introduce into the law the principle that a person can be punished for what other people say about him is to render all the constitutional safeguards of life, liberty, and property unavailing for his protection," in particular, the protection of "due process of law"). In the following case the point was not decided: 1880, State v. Thomas, 47 Com. 546 (statute making it an offence to keep a place "where it is reputed that intoxicating liquors" are illegally sold, held constitutional; but the opinion evades the real issue by holding that the reputation only when "unexplained and uncontradicted" is to be "conclusive evidence"; the argument of Mr. Curtis for the defendant is ably put).

¹⁰ Besides the foregoing rulings, which in effect assume this, are the following: 1854, Pittsfield & F. P. R. Co. v. Harrison, 18 Ill. 81 ("The Legislature may not, indeed, deprive the party of all means of establishing the facts upon which his rights depend"); 1899, Vega S. S. Co. v. Consol. Elev. Co., 75 Minn. 309, 77 N. W. 973 (Gen. St. 1894, § 7675, declaring the certificate of weight of grain, etc., by the State

sort, indeed, are rare; most statutes purporting to do this are really attempts to change the substantive law under the guise of a rule of evidence, and therefore may or may not be valid, according to the considerations already noted (supra, par. 1). In the present class, however, would belong statutes which, while plainly recognizing one fact as still dominant in the substantive law, and not desiring to change it, should make another fact conclusive proof; such a case is almost inconceivable unless the conclusiveness is attributed to human testimony of the main fact; but it is theoretically possible, and this explains some of the judicial utterances.¹¹

Assuming, though, that conclusiveness cannot constitutionally be attributed by the Legislature to any testimonial evidence as such (ante, § 1353), there still remain two apparent exceptions, in which conclusiveness can lawfully be created under some circumstances; one is the finding of an inferior court, and the other is the finding of an executive officer within his province of action. (a) So far as constitutionally the organization of courts and the prohibition of appeals is within the legislative powers of regulation, it is obvious (ante, § 1347) that a statute which merely regulates the right of appeal from inferior judicial officers is valid.¹² (b) Furthermore, so far as the function of the Executive can constitutionally include the power of decision for itself upon facts which concern the performance of its duties, the decision of these facts is no part of the Judiciary's function; and therefore a legislative sanction for the conclusiveness of a certain executive officer's decision is no interweighmaster, "shall be conclusive upon all parties," held unconstitutional, as "an arbitrary exercise of power, so as to deprive a person of his day in court to vindicate his rights"; the plaintiff was here allowed to prove the actual amount of grain delivered, in opposition to the certificate's figures); 1876, Howard v. Moot, 64 N. Y. 262, 269 ("It may be conceded, for all the purposes of this appeal, that a law that should make evidence conclusive, which was not so necessarily in and of itself, and thus preclude the adverse party from showing the truth, would be void, as indirectly working a confiscation of property or a destruction of vested rights"); 1788, Shippen, P., in Pleasants v. Meng, 1 Dall. 380, 383 ("The nature of evidence necessarily implies an adverse right to controvert and repel"). See an able and learned article by Mr. Blevett Lee, 13 Harv. Law Rev. 233, 252 ("Constitutional Power of the Courts over Admission to the Bar").

The following case, which invoked this principle, might have been decided on the theory of Federal powers (ante, § 6): 1862, Wantlan v. White, 19 Ind. 470 (Federal statute that "the oath of enlistment taken by a recruit shall be conclusive as to his age," held not to prevent a minor's guardian, demanding his release, from showing the fact).

¹¹ 1864, Dillon, J., in Allen v. Armstrong, 16 Ia. 508, 513 ("If the Legislature should pass an act declaring that merely being found in the possession of property which had been stolen should be conclusive evidence of guilt, Courts would be very apt to hold that this was an assumption and exercise of a power which it did not possess"); 1890, Mitchell, J., in Voght v. State, 124 Ind. 358, 24 N. E. 680. The following case would raise the question: 1903, Snyder v. Bonbright, C. C., 123 Fed. 817 (by a statute of 1885, making the owner of a building liable for injuries caused through lack of a satisfactory fire escape, the certificate of an inspector that the fire escape is satisfactory was conclusive; and the question of constitutionality was not here raised).

¹² 1877, Hunter v. Turnpike Co., 56 Ind. 213, 224 (the report of an inspector of a road as to the fact of completion was made conclusive by statute; held valid; but here a privilege of appeal from the report to the Court existed); 1854, Van Alstyne v. Erwine, 11 N. Y. 331, 341 (statute making the Court's appointment, on notice, of trustees for the property of an absconding debtor "conclusive evidence that the debtor therein named was a concealed, etc., debtor," applied); 1788, Pleasants v. Meng, 1 Dall. 380, Pa. (statute making a bankrupt's certificate of bankruptcy, etc., by the commissioners "sufficient evidence"; held here not to signify "conclusive evidence," i. e. without appeal to examine the proceedings of the commissioners); 1871, Chase, C. J., in U. S. v. Klein, 13 Wall. 128, 145 (here a statute making a pardon conclusive evidence of certain facts before the Court of Claims was held to be inconsistent with the right of appeal as otherwise guaranteed; Miller and Bradley, JJ., diss.).

ference with the judicial power. Where the line should be drawn may be sometimes open to argument; but the principle cannot be doubted. It has been applied to statutes making final the schedules of rates by railroad commissioners,¹³ the decisions of immigration officers,¹⁴ and of other treasury officers.¹⁵ Here the moral is that if the Legislature is willing to create petty despots, the community must seek aid through a better Legislature, and not through a denial of necessary executive functions.

(3) There remains a question which has no concern with the question of conclusive evidence, but has often been assimilated to it, and has received an undeserved importance and a needless confusion by that association, namely, the question of the constitutionality of statutes creating rules of presumption or prima facie evidence. A rule of presumption is simply a rule changing the burden of proof, i. e. declaring that the main fact will be inferred or assumed from some other fact until evidence to the contrary is introduced (post, § 2490). There is not the least doubt, on principle, that the Legislature has entire control over such rules, as it has over all other rules of procedure in general and evidence in particular (ante, § 7), — subject only to the limitations of evidence expressly enshrined in the Constitution. If the Legislature can abolish the rules of disqualification of witnesses and grant the rule of discovery from an opponent, it can shift the burden of producing evidence. Yet this elementary truth has been repeatedly questioned, and Courts have

¹³ 1888, State v. Chicago, M. & S. P. R. Co., 38 Minn. 281, 37 N. W. 782 (statute making railroad commissioners' schedule of rates conclusive as to reasonableness, held valid, on the ground that a common carrier's charges were within legislative control and hence no judicial ascertainment was necessary); 1889, Chicago M. & S. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 452, 461, 464, 10 Sup. 462, 702 (statute making railroad commissioners' schedule of rates conclusive as to reasonableness, held invalid, because the question of reasonableness "is eminently a question for judicial investigation, requiring due process of law for its determination"; Bradley, J., and two others, diss., because the question, being a legislative one, could be delegated for investigation to the commission, "and such a body, though not a court, is a proper tribunal for the duties imposed upon it; . . . due process of law does not always require a court; it merely requires such tribunals and proceedings as are proper to the subject in hand"). Here again there is a current notion that the language of the law of evidence can be used to evade the issue: Ark. St. 1901, Feb. 27, No. 24 ("An act to define a rule of evidence in certain cases: In all actions between private parties and railroad companies brought under the law establishing a railroad commission . . . [the commission's rates prescribed] shall be held, deemed, and accepted to be reasonable, fair, and just, and in such respects shall not be controverted therein").

¹⁴ 1891, Nishimura Ekin v. U. S., 142 U. S. 651, 660, 12 Sup. 336 (a Federal statute making conclusive the decision of an immigration inspector that an alien immigrant is within the classes prohibited from entering, held valid; Brewer, J., diss.); 1892, Fong Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 698, 713, 732, 742, 754, 761, 13 Sup. 1016 (preceding case approved and applied to a deportation statute; "the power of Congress to expel, like the power to exclude aliens, . . . may be exercised entirely through executive officers"; the prior cases marking the boundary between executive and judicial matters are here collected; Brewer and Field, JJ., and Fuller, C. J., diss.); 1895, Lem Moon Sing v. U. S., 158 id. 538, 15 Sup. 967 (preceding cases approved); 1901, Fok Yang Yo v. U. S., 185 id. 296, 22 Sup. 686; 1901, Lee Gon Yung v. U. S., ib. 306, 22 Sup. 690; 1901, Chin Bak Kan v. U. S., 186 id. 193, 22 Sup. 891; 1903, Kaoru Yamataya v. Fisher, 189 U. S. 86, 23 Sup. 611 (Nishimura Ekin's case followed; but the statute implies at least "an opportunity to be heard" before the executive department "upon the questions involving his right to be and to remain in the U. S."). Compare the distinction taken in Lavin v. Le Fevre, 60 C. C. A. 425, 125 Fed. 693 (1903). One cannot help regretting that the Supreme Court sanctioned the Executive usurpation which the Legislature authorized in the preceding class of statutes.

¹⁵ 1855, Murray v. Hoboken L. & I. Co., 18 How. 272, 284 (statute making a warrant of distress for debt due from a government collector to the United States conclusive evidence of the indebtedness, held valid as covering a matter not essentially one of determination by the judicial power).

repeatedly vouchsafed an unmerited attention to the question, chiefly through a hesitation in appreciating the true nature of a presumption and a tendency to associate in some indefinite manner the notion of conclusively shutting out all evidence and that of merely shifting the duty of producing it. Fortunately, sound principle has almost everywhere prevailed, though at an unnecessary expense of argument and hesitation.

Statutes giving presumptive or prima facie weight have therefore been held constitutional in application to tax-collectors' deeds, as raising a presumption of regularity of proceedings,¹⁶ to conduct indicating a banker's knowledge of insolvency;¹⁷ to conduct indicating illegal *gaming*¹⁸ or illegal *liquor-selling*¹⁹ (though here there is one line of singularly perverse decisions²⁰), to the findings of an auditor or referee in a trial,²¹ and to the schedules of rates of a railroad commission.²²

¹⁶ To the cases cited supra, note 4, which almost all concede this, add the following: 1893, McDonald v. Conniff, 99 Cal. 386, 390, 34 Pac. 71; 1894, Clarke v. Mead, 102 id. 516, 519, 36 Pac. 862; 1888, Gage v. Caraher, 125 Ill. 451, 17 N. E. 777; 1855, Hand v. Ballou, 12 N. Y. 541; 1851, Pillow v. Roberts, 13 How. 472, 476; 1893, Marx v. Hanthorn, 148 U. S. 172, 181, 13 Sup. 508; 1856, Delaplaine v. Cook, 7 Wis. 44 (well-reasoned opinion by Whiton, C. J.).

¹⁷ 1894, Robertson v. People, 20 Colo. 279, 38 Pac. 326 (statute making a bank's failure within 30 days of a deposit prima facie evidence of knowledge of insolvency, held constitutional); 1896, Meadowcroft v. People, 163 Ill. 56, 45 N. E. 303, 991 (insolvent bankers' statute, held constitutional); 1896, State v. Beach, — Ind. —, 43 N. E. 949 (statute making failure of a bank within 30 days after receiving a deposit to be prima facie evidence of intent to defraud, held constitutional); 1894, State v. Buck, 120 Mo. 479, 25 S. W. 573 (insolvent bankers' statute, held valid). So also the following: 1903, Crane v. Waldron, — Mich. —, 94 N. W. 593 (fraudulent conveyances).

¹⁸ 1888, Morgan v. State, 117 Ind. 569, 17 N. E. 154 (statute declaring the fact of gaming, etc., to a lessor's knowledge to be sufficient evidence of renting for the purpose of gaming, held constitutional); 1890, Voght v. State, 124 id. 358, 24 N. E. 680 (same statute held constitutional, and treated as merely defining a presumption); 1896, Com. v. Smith, 166 Mass. 370, 44 N. E. 508.

¹⁹ 1856, Com. v. Williams, 6 Gray 1 (statute declaring delivery of intoxicating liquor prima facie evidence of a sale, held valid; Thomas, J., diss.); 1856, Com. v. Wallace, 7 id. 222 (same; but Thomas, J., not diss.); 1859, Com. v. Rowe, 14 id. 47 (same); 1886, Board v. Merchant, 103 N. Y. 143, 149, 8 N. E. 484 (statute making the drinking of liquor on premises prima facie evidence of the occupant's sale with intent that the liquor should be there drunk, held valid); 1893, People v. Cannon, 139 id. 32, 34 N. E. 759 (statute making the possession of marked bottles without the owner's consent prima facie evidence of unlawful purchase, held valid).

²⁰ 1881, State v. Beswick, 13 R. I. 211 (statute making the "notorious character" of premises or their frequenters "prima facie evidence that said liquors are kept on such premises for the purposes of sale," held invalid, as depriving of liberty without "the law of the land," because "it virtually strips the accused of the protection of the common-law maxim that every person is presumed innocent until he is proved guilty"; yet the same ruling holds that another clause of the statute placing on the accused the burden of proof of a license is valid; the opinion discloses confused notions as to the nature of presumptions and burden of proof); 1881, State v. Higgins, ib. 330 (statute making the sale of liquor in a place "prima facie evidence that the sale is illegal," held valid, as in effect merely placing on the defendant the burden of proving a license; prior case distinguished); 1882, State v. Mellor, ib. 666 (similar case to the preceding, but apparently inconsistent); 1885, State v. Wilson, 15 R. I. 180, 1 Atl. 415 (a statute making reputation merely evidence of the character of a place as a liquor nuisance, leaving the jury "free to find the accused guilty or not," held constitutional).

²¹ 1877, Holmes v. Hunt, 122 Mass. 505, 516 (statute making the report of an "auditor," or referee in civil cases, prima facie evidence, held valid). Contra: 1860, Plimpton v. Somerset, 33 Vt. 283 (statute making a referee's report prima facie evidence in common-law cases, held invalid, because the jury's verdict "becomes but the mere recording of a verdict made for them by others"; Barrett, J., diss.). For the state of the doctrine in New Hampshire, which was rested largely on historical grounds, see the following cases: 1875, Copp v. Henniker, 55 N. H. 179; 1876, Doyle v. Doyle, 56 id. 567; 1876, Perkins v. Scott, 57 id. 55; 1876, King v. Hopkins, ib. 334, 354, 359; in the last case, the opinion of Foster, C. J., deals with the question of evidence, and, while apparently conceding the legislative power to make rules of prima facie evidence, it regards this statute as a virtual substitution of another tribunal for the jury; but his argument is labored; the answer of Cushing, C. J., is ample.

²² 1894, Chicago B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones, 149

It has occasionally been suggested that these legislative rules of presumption, or any legislative rules of evidence, must be tested by the standard of rationality, and are invalid if they fall short of it.²³ But this cannot be conceded. If the Legislature can make a rule of evidence at all (ante, § 7), it cannot be controlled by a judicial standard of rationality, any more than its economic fallacies can be invalidated by the judicial conceptions of economic truth. Apart from the Constitution, the Legislature is not obliged to obey either the axioms of rational evidence or the axioms of economic science. All that the Legislature does in such an event is either to render admissible a fact which was before inadmissible, or to place the burden of producing evidence on the opposite party. When this has been done, the jury is free to decide; or, so far as it is not, this is because the party has voluntarily failed to adduce contrary evidence. There is here nothing conclusive, nothing prohibitive. So long as the party may exercise his freedom to introduce evidence, and the jurors may exercise their freedom to weigh it rationally, no amount of irrational legislation can change the result. If the Judiciary had long ago resented as unconstitutional that ill-advised species of legislative interference which forbade them to charge juries upon the weight of evidence, they need never have cared about the evidential effect of enactments of the present sort.

Ill. 361, 37 N. E. 247 (statute making railroad commissioners' schedule of rates prima facie evidence of their reasonableness, held constitutional); 1891, Burlington C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey, 82 Ia. 312, 48 N. W. 98 (statute making railroad commissioners' schedule of rates prima facie evidence of reasonableness, held constitutional); and cases cited supra, note 13.

²³ 1896, Monks, J., in State v. Beach, — Ind. —, 43 N. E. 949 ("a statute which makes an act prima facie evidence of a crime, which has no relation to a criminal act and no tendency whatever to establish a criminal act," would be unconstitutional); 1856, Selden, J., in Wynnehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 373, 446 (statute making delivery prima facie evidence of sale of liquor, declared invalid, on the ground that "all those fundamental rules of evidence . . . are placed by the Constitution beyond the reach of legislation . . . and are of course in their nature unchangeable"; this was obiter, the other judges not noticing the point); 1893, Peckham, J., in People v. Cannon, 139 N. Y. 32, 34 N. E. 759 ("The limitations are that the fact upon which the presumption is to rest must have some fair relation to or natural connection with the main fact. The inference of the existence of the main fact, because of the existence of the fact actually proved, must be not merely and purely arbitrary, or wholly unreasonable, unnatural, and extraordinary").

TITLE II: ANALYTIC RULES (THE HEARSAY RULE).

INTRODUCTORY.

THEORY AND HISTORY OF THE HEARSAY RULE.

CHAPTER XLIII.

§ 1360. Nature of Analytic Rules. § 1361. Nature of Hearsay, as an Extrajudicial Testimonial Assertion. § 1362. Theory of the Hearsay Rule.	§ 1363. Spurious Theories of the Hearsay Rule. § 1364. History of the Hearsay Rule. § 1365. Cross-examination and Confrontation. § 1366. Division of Topics.
--	--

§ 1360. Nature of the Analytic Rules. Of the Auxiliary Rules (ante, § 1171) aiming at the amelioration of probative value, the second type is the Analytic Rule, i. e. a rule which accomplishes the desired aim by subjecting the offered evidence to a scrutiny or analysis calculated to discover and expose in detail its possible weaknesses, and thus to enable the tribunal to estimate it at no more than its actual value. Such a rule differs from a Preferential rule (ante, §§ 1171, 1286) in that it does not purport to require one kind of testimony before another can be resorted to. It differs from a Prophylactic rule (post, § 1813) in that the latter aims to prevent or eliminate beforehand the possible defects of the evidence, while the present type of rule aims at exposing those which have not otherwise been thus forestalled or eliminated. That it differs from the Synthetic or Quantitative rules (post, § 2030) is clear enough. Finally, it differs from the Simplificative rules (post, § 1863) in that it does not a priori strike out and exclude the evidence as undesirable, but merely insists on accompanying its admission by tests calculated to expose possible defects.

There is but one rule of the Analytic type, — the Hearsay rule; though this rule involves two branches or processes, Cross-examination and Confrontation. The details of these two branches can be later examined (post, §§ 1367-1418). At this point it is desirable first to examine the theory and the history of the Hearsay rule in general.

§ 1361. Nature of Hearsay, as an Extrajudicial Testimonial Assertion. When a witness A on the stand testifies, "B told me that event X occurred," his testimony may be regarded in two ways: (1) He may be regarded as asserting the event X upon his own credit, i. e. as a fact to be believed because he asserts that he knows it. But when it thus appears that his assertion is not based on personal observation of event X, his testimony to that event is rejected, because he is not qualified by proper sources of knowledge to speak to it. This involves a general principle of Testimonial Knowledge, already examined (ante, §§ 657, 665), and does not involve the Hearsay rule proper.

(2) But suppose, in order to obviate that objection, that we regard A as not making any assertion about event X (of which he has no personal knowledge), but as testifying to the utterance in his hearing of B's statement as to event X. To this, A is clearly qualified to testify, so that no objection can arise on that score. The only question, then, can be whether this assertion of B, reported by A, is admissible as evidence of the event X, asserted by B to have occurred. It is clear that what we are now attempting to do is to prove event X by B's assertion; the utterance of B's assertion being itself proved by A's testimony to it. In other words, merely the making of B's assertion is properly proved by A; but the occurrence of event X is also sought to be proved, by this assertion of B, which was uttered out of court, but is offered testimonially for the same purpose as if it were being made presently by B on the stand. This, the true significance of hearsay testimony, is brought out in the following passages:

1743, Craig v. Earl of Anglesea, 17 How. St. Tr. 1162: "If declarations of persons dead were to be admitted, they would in effect have the force of original testimony."

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. VI, c. IV: "It is of the essence of hearsay evidence to present to the notice of the judge two distinct persons in the character of witnesses: (1) a supposed percipient and extrajudicially narrating witness, stating at some antecedent point of time, in the hearing of any person not on that occasion invested with the authority of a judge, some matter of fact as having had place; and (2) a deposing, or say judicially narrating witness, who bears testimony not to the truth of that matter of fact, but to its having actually been asserted on the extrajudicial occasion in question by the extrajudicially stating or narrating witness."

1860, Chief Justice Appleton, Evidence, 174: "In all cases of hearsay the effective witness is the individual, whether party or not, whose supposed statements the narrating witness relates. The individual testifying is merely the conduit or pipe through whose agency the impressions of some one else are conveyed to the Court. The real proof is the hearsay statement."¹

It is these extrajudicial testimonial assertions which the Hearsay rule prohibits. The Hearsay rule points out that B's assertion, offered testimonially, is not made on the stand and presently, but out of court anteriorly, and challenges it upon that ground. The Hearsay rule tells us that B's assertion (even assuming B to have been qualified, by knowledge and otherwise, as witness) cannot be accepted because it has not been made at a time and place where it could be subjected to certain essential tests or investigations calculated to demonstrate its real value by exposing such latent sources of error. The Hearsay rule predicates a contrast between assertions untested and assertions tested; it insists upon having the latter.

What is the nature of the test thus required by the Hearsay rule?

§ 1362. Theory of the Hearsay Rule. The fundamental test, shown by experience to be invaluable, is the test of Cross-examination. The rule, to be sure, calls for two elements, Cross-Examination proper, and Confrontation; but the former is the essential and indispensable feature, the latter is only subordinate and dispensable (post, § 1395). The theory of the Hearsay rule is that the many possible deficiencies, suppressions, sources of error and untrustworthiness, which lie underneath the bare untested assertion of a witness may be best brought to light and exposed by the test of Cross-examination. Of its workings and its value, more is to be seen in detail (post, §§ 1367-1394). It is here sufficient to note that the Hearsay rule, as accepted in our jurisprudence, signifies a rule rejecting assertions, offered testimonially, which have not been in some way subjected to the test of Cross-examination:

¹ So also Sir J. F. Stephen, in his Report Ali and Woodroffe's edition of the Act, 1898, on the Indian Evidence Act (quoted in Syed Appendix).

1743, Craig dem. Annesley v. Earl of Anglesea, 17 How. St. Tr. 1160: the legitimacy of the plaintiff as heir was in issue; the declarations of Mrs. Piggot, a deceased intimate friend of his alleged mother, were offered. "This was objected to by defendant's counsel, who insisted that hearsay was not evidence; . . . that Mrs. Piggot is dead, and where persons are dead, the law hath not provided for their testimony, nor will it substitute a mere declaration in the place of an oath; . . . that the admitting hearsay evidence in the present affair would introduce a dangerous precedent, in regard the other side could not have the benefit of cross-examining; in some cases, it is true, hearsay evidence is admitted from the necessity of the thing; . . . that in civil cases there is not the same necessity, because a bill in equity may be filed to perpetuate the testimony of ancient witnesses, and then the evidence may be cross-examined; but Mrs. Piggot being dead, no declaration of hers can be evidence, because the defendant has no opportunity to cross-examine her: . . . The Court would not admit the hearsay of Mrs. Piggot's declaration to deponent to be made use of as evidence, on the principal reason that hearsay evidence ought not to be admitted, because of the adverse party's having no opportunity of cross-examining."

1806, Mr. (later V. C.) Plumer, arguing in Lord Melville's Trial, 29 How. St. Tr. 747: "It is a universal principle of the law of evidence (subject to certain exceptions) that what one man says, does, or writes, behind the back of another, cannot be received in any criminal court to affect anybody but himself. . . . Every individual who stands upon his trial in a British court of justice has a clear right to have the witness brought in the front of the Court, to be submitted to his cross-examination, that he may have an opportunity of interrogating him respecting all the particulars of the fact."

1881, Lord Blackburn in Dysart Peerage Case, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 503: "In England, hearsay evidence, that is to say, the evidence of a man who is not produced in court and who therefore cannot be cross-examined, as a general rule is not admissible at all."

1812, Kent, C. J., in Coleman v. Southwick, 9 John. 50: "Why not produce S. to testify what he told the defendant, instead of resorting to a bystander who heard what he said? . . . Hearsay testimony is from the very nature of it attended with all such doubts and difficulties, and it cannot clear them up. 'A person who relates a hearsay is not obliged to enter into any particulars, to answer any questions, to solve any difficulties, to reconcile any contradictions, to explain any obscurities, to remove any ambiguities; he entrenches himself in the simple assertion that he was told so, and leaves the burden entirely on his dead or absent author.' . . . The plaintiff by means of this species of evidence would be taken by surprise and be precluded from the benefit of a cross-examination of S. as to all those material points which have been suggested as necessary to throw full light on his information."

1827, Duncan, J., in Farmers' Bank v. Whitehill, 16 S. & R. 89: "The general objection to the deposition of John Buck is that it is in the nature of hearsay evidence and that the defendant had no opportunity of cross-examination."

1851, Drummond, J., in U. S. v. Maccomb, 5 McLean 286: "The ground upon which we proceed in each case is the presumption of the truth of the declarations, they being subjected to the tests which the law recognizes, — the presence of the accused and the right of cross-examination. . . . Of course it is clear that such testimony [as a mere sworn statement before a magistrate] could not be admitted in a court of law; for, first, the witness was living; and, secondly, the defendant had no opportunity of cross-examining him; and, however the authorities may differ as to the first, they all agree as to the second point, that being an indispensable prerequisite to the introduction of testimony."

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. VI, c. I, § 2: "In every instance that inferiority in respect of probative force, in consideration of which the term Makeshift [i. e. Hearsay] was found applicable with equal propriety to them all, will be seen to have for its cause the absence of one of the principal securities for correctness and completeness, viz. interrogation ex adverso at the hands of a party whose interest, in the event of its being incorrect or incomplete, may in proportion to that incorrectness or incompleteness be made to suffer by it."

In the foregoing passages, Cross-examination alone is mentioned as the test required by and involved in the Hearsay rule. In most instances, however, we find the Oath coupled with Cross-examination in the definition of the rule. That this coupling is merely accidental may easily be shown; but the following passages, naming oath and cross-examination, serve at least to exhibit the general notion that has commonly been conceded to characterize the Hearsay rule:

1716, Serjeant Hawkins, Pleas of the Crown, b. II, c. 46, § 44: "How far hearsay shall be admitted. It seems agreed that what a stranger has been heard to say is in strictness no manner of evidence either for or against a prisoner, not only because it is not upon oath, but also because the other side hath no opportunity of a cross-examination."

1773, Mr. Peckham, objecting, in Fabrigas v. Mostyn, 20 How. St. Tr. 135, to testimony about a statement of a native magistrate (or mustastaph) in Minorca: "Hearsay is no evidence. . . . Now can what he has said in Minorca to this witness be admitted as evidence here? The mustastaph is living, why don't they produce him? If they had brought him here, we could have his evidence on oath and could cross-examine him to the facts."

1837, Wright v. Tatham, 7 Ad. & E. 313, 5 Cl. & F. 689; letters were offered from absent persons, treating the testator as a competent person; Mr. Cresswell, objecting: "All the letters were inadmissible, because they presented statements which could not be verified by oath, and subjected to the test of cross-examination. . . . In a particular case the assertion, without oath, of a respectable man might influence a reasonable mind; but the rule established for the safe administration of justice in general is that evidence unconfirmed by oath and not subject to cross-examination shall not be received"; Mr. Starkie, on the same side: "The witness from whom it comes ought to be cross-examined as to the means he had of forming a judgment and the diligence and good faith with which they were applied. Here that test is wanting. . . . It may well be suggested [that the writers had other motives]. Suggestions of that kind are to be excluded only by submitting to those tests of knowledge and sincerity which the law requires. . . . The admission of evidence not on oath will be found in all cases to depend upon its being subject to tests which guarantee knowledge and sincerity"; the letters were excluded as hearsay, on the following grounds: Coltman, J.: "The administering of an oath furnishes some guarantee for the sincerity of the opinion, and the power of cross-examination gives an opportunity of testing the foundation and the value of it"; Bosanquet, J.: "If the writers of these letters were produced as witnesses and examined upon oath, their opinion would be receivable in evidence, because the grounds of their knowledge and the credibility of their testimony might be ascertained by cross-examination"; Williams, J.: "It is opinion presented in such a shape as makes it inadmissible for want of the sanction of an oath, under which evidence of opinion is always given; which sanction is required for this weighty reason, — that opinion, however imposing from the real or supposed respectability of the person expressing it, may, after diligent and patient inquiry and examination before those to whose judgment all evidence is addressed, be deemed by them to rest upon a precarious foundation or upon none at all"; Alderson, B. : "The general rule is that facts are to be proved by testimony of persons on oath and subjected to cross-examination. . . . If, therefore, the letters are to be used as proofs of the opinion of the writers respecting Mr. Marsden's capacity, the objection to their admissibility is that this opinion is not upon oath, nor is it possible for the opposite party to test by cross-examination the foundation on which it rests."

1867, O'Brien, J., in Gresham Hotel Co. v. Manning, Ir. R. 1 C. L. 125 : "The statements and declarations of opinion received in evidence in this case were made by parties not examined upon oath or subject to cross-examination, and would not . . . be exempted from the general rule excluding hearsay evidence."

1817, Swift, C. J., in Chapman v. Chapman, 2 Conn. 348 : "It is a general principle in the law of evidence that hearsay from a person not a party to the suit is not admissible; because such person was not under oath and the opposite party had no opportunity to cross-examine."

1843, Shaw, C. J., in Warren v. Nichols, 6 Metc. 261 : "The general rule is that one person cannot be heard to testify as to what another person has declared in relation to a fact within his knowledge and hearing upon the issue. It is the familiar rule which excludes hearsay. The reasons are obvious, and they are two : first, because the averment of fact does not come to the jury sanctioned by the oath of the party on whose knowledge it is supposed to rest; and, secondly, because the party upon whose interests it is brought to bear has no opportunity to cross-examine him on whose supposed knowledge and veracity the truth of the fact depends."

1868, Breese, C. J., in Marshall v. R. Co., 48 Ill. 476 : "The general rule is that hearsay evidence . . . is not admissible, for the reason that such statements are not subjected to the ordinary tests required by law for ascertaining their truth, — the author of the statements not being exposed to cross-examination in the presence of a court of justice, and not speaking under the penal sanction of an oath, with no opportunity to investigate his character and motives, and his deportment not subject to observation."

1872, Kingman, C. J., in State v. Medlicott, 9 Kan. 283, 287 : "These rules [as to hearsay] have been adopted to guard against the manifest danger to human life that is so liable to arise from the admission as evidence of declarations not made under the sanction of an oath and not offering to the party to be affected by them an opportunity of cross-examination, or to call attention to omitted facts that if stated might modify or completely overturn the inference drawn from the declarations made. . . . These rules have been found so essential as safeguards in the investigation of truth that they have become fundamental in our system of jurisprudence, and some of them have been placed for greater security in our constitutions. No matter how convincing the testimony may be to the intelligent mind, unless it can be presented under fixed rules it cannot be received."

1892, Field, C. J., in Com. v. Trefethen, 157 Mass. 185, 31 N. E. 961 : "The argument, in short, is that such evidence is hearsay. It is argued that such declarations are not made under the sanction of an oath, and that there is no opportunity to examine and cross-examine the person making them, so as to test his sincerity and truthfulness or the accuracy and completeness with which the declarations describe his intention."¹

¹ Accord: Eng. : 1811, Wood, B., in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 406; 1820, Abbott, C. J., in Doe v. Ridgway, 4 B. & Ald. 54; 1832, R. v. Davlin, Jebb Cr. C. 127; 1867, Lush, J., in Smith v. Blakey, L. R. 2 Q. B. 326; 1869, Byles, J., in R. v. Jenkins, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 193; 1876, Jessel, M. R., in Sugden v. St. Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 154; Ala. : 1830, White, J., in Drish v. Davenport, 2 Stew. 270; 1875, Manning, J., in Walker v. State, 52 Ala. 193; Ark. : 1852, Johnson, C. J., in Cornelius v. State, 12 Ark. 804; Conn. : 1860, Sanford, J., in State v. Dart, 29 Conn. 153, 155; Ill. : 1855, Skinner,

J., in Starkey v. People, 17 Ill. 20; 1862, Walker, J., in Barnes v. Simmons, 27 id. 513; 1885, Craig, J., in Digby v. People, 113 id. 128; Ind. : 1869, Ray, J., in Morgan v. State, 31 Ind. 199; Ky. : 1800, Muter, C. J., in Cherry v. Boyd, Litt. Sel. Cas. 8; 1855, Simpson, J., in Walston v. Com., 16 B. Mour. 15, 35; 1872, Hardin, J., in Leiber v. Com., 9 Bush 13; La. : 1858, Voorhies, J., in State v. Brunetto, 13 La. An. 45; Me. : 1858, Rice, J., in Heald v. Thing, 45 Me. 392; Md. : 1860, Le Grand, C. J., in Green v. Caulk, 16 Md. 572; 1874, Alvey, J., in Maitland v. Bank, 40 id. 559;

In the preceding passages, the testing required by the Hearsay rule is spoken of as cross-examination under oath. But it is clear beyond doubt that the oath, as thus referred to, is merely an incidental feature customarily accompanying cross-examination, and that cross-examination is the essential and real test required by the rule. That this is so is seen by the perfectly well-established rule that a statement made under oath (for example, in the shape of a deposition or an affidavit or testimony before a magistrate) is nevertheless inadmissible if it has not been subjected to cross-examination (post, §§ 1373-1377, 1708). In other words, a statement made under oath is, merely as such, equally obnoxious to the Hearsay rule.² Owing to the practice of requiring an oath (or its modern substitute, an affirmation) before proceeding to examination and cross-examination, the case does not happen to arise of testimony which has been tested by cross-examination and yet lacks the oath, so that the tenor of the rule as above stated cannot be demonstrated by that situation. But is sufficiently and clearly demonstrated (as above noted) by the fact that, even though an oath has been taken, the statements are still excluded if not subjected to cross-examination; as well as by the further fact that, whenever an exception to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1422) is found established, i. e. whenever statements not subjected to cross-examination are exceptionally received, it is not required that they shall have been made under oath. It is thus apparent that the essence of the Hearsay rule is a requirement that testimonial assertions shall be subjected to the test of cross-examination, and that the judicial expressions (above quoted) coupling oath and cross-examination, had in mind the oath as merely the ordinary accompaniment of testimony given on the stand, subject to the essential test of cross-examination.

Mass.: 1851, Fletcher, J., in Lund v. Tyngsborough, 9 Cush. 40; 1852, Shaw, C. J., in Com. v. Starkweather, 10 id. 60; 1856, Thomas, J., in Bartlett v. Emerson, 7 Gray 176; Miss.: 1852, Yerger, J., in Lamplsey v. Scott, 24 Miss. 539; Nebr.: 1886, Reese, J., in Ponca v. Crawford, 18 Nebr. 557, 26 N. W. 365; N. H.: 1847, Parker, C. J., in Patten v. Ferguson, 18 N. H. 529; N. J.: 1826, Ewing, C. J., in Westfield v. Warren, 8 N. J. L. 250; 1839, Beasley, C. J., in Estell v. State, 51 id. 184, 17 Atl. 118; N. Y.: 1818, Thompson, C. J., in Wilson v. Boerem, 15 John. 286; 1884, Earl, J., in Waldele v. R. Co., 95 N. Y. 274; N. C.: 1833, Daniel, J., in State v. May, 4 Dev. 334; 1842, Gaston, J., in State v. Patterson, 2 Ired. 353; 1855, Pearson, J., in State v. Shelton, 2 Jones L. 364; 1872, Rodman, J., in State v. Williams, 67 N. C. 14; 1887, Davis, J., in State v. Hargrave, 97 id. 458, 1 S. E. 774; 1894, Burwell, J., in Propst v. Mathis, 115 id. 526, 20 S. E. 710; Oh.: 1856, Bartley, C. J., in Simmons v. State, 5 Oh. St. 343; Pa.: 1813, Tilghman, C. J., in Longenecker v. Hyde, 6 Bin. 1; 1815, id., in Com. v. Stewart, 1 S. & R. 344; 1823, id., in Buchanan v. Moore, 10 id. 275; 1827, Gibson, C. J., in Moritz v. Brough, 16 id. 409; 1885, Green, J., in Rail- ing v. Com., 110 Pa. 105, 1 Atl. 314; S. C.: 1819, Cheves, J., in Drayton v. Wells, 1 Nott & McC. 248; 1844, Richardson, J., in State v. Campbell, 1 Rich. L. 126; 1846, id., in Walker v. Meetze, 2 id. 571; 1851, Evans, J., in Robinson v. Blakely, 4 id. 588; 1880, McGowan, J., in State v. Belcher, 13 S. C. 459, 462; Tenn.: 1848, Green, J., in Phillips v. State, 9 Humph. 249; Tex.: 1895, Brown, J., in Byers v. State, 87 Tex. 503, 28 S. W. 1056, 29 S. W. 761; U. S.: 1823, Story, J., in Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. 326, 333; 1869, Miller, J., in Allen v. Killinger, 8 Wall. 487; 1870, Peck, J., in Medway v. U. S., 6 Ct. of Cl. 434; 1873, Field, J., in Chaffee v. U. S., 18 Wall. 541; Vt.: 1881, Veazey, J., in State v. Wood, 53 Vt. 564; Va.: 1853, Allen, J., in Broggy's Case, 10 Gratt. 729; Treatises: 1801, Peake, Evidence, 10; 1802, McNally, Evidence, 360; 1806, Evans, Notes on Pothier, II, 250; 1810, Swift, Evidence, 121; 1843, Greenleaf, Evidence, § 124.

² 1899, Vann, J., in Lent v. Shear, 160 N. Y. 462, 55 N. E. 2 ("Declarations made under oath do not differ in principle from declarations made without that sanction, and both come within the rule which excludes all hearsay evidence").

§ 1363. Spurious Theories of the Hearsay Rule. Occasionally there have been advanced other reasons or definitions of the Hearsay rule, — though without much emphasis, and usually as supplementary only to the orthodox theory.

(1) It has been said, for example, that hearsay assertions are to be excluded because of the risk of incorrect transmission of the statements by the one reporting them :

1851, Fletcher, J., in Lund v. Tyngsborough, 9 Cush. 40 : “The danger that casual observations would be misunderstood, misremembered, and misreported, increases the number and force of the objections to the admission of hearsay.”

1868, Breese, C. J., in Marshall v. R. Co., 48 Ill. 476 (after naming the real reason) : “And the misconstruction to which such evidence is exposed from the ignorance or inattention of the hearers, or from criminal motives, are powerful additional objections.”

To this supposed reason there are two conclusive answers : (a) This theory would exclude only oral assertions ; yet the Hearsay rule excludes with equal strictness the best-authenticated written assertions of all sorts, — letters, sealed documents, affidavits, and the like, — and, of the numerous exceptions to the rule, only one or two show any special favor to written assertions. (b) Other oral statements, not offered as exceptions to the Hearsay rule, but as admissions (ante, § 1048), or as impeaching evidence (ante, § 1017), or as res gestæ utterances (post, § 1768), are never excluded because they are oral, and never admitted because they are written ; and yet they are equally obnoxious to this supposed policy of excluding that which is liable to incorrect and garbled transmission.

(2) It has been said, by eminent names, that hearsay evidence possesses some intrinsic weakness :

1813, Marshall, C. J., in Mima Queen v. Hepburn, 7 Cranch 295 : “That this species of testimony supposes some better testimony which might be adduced in the particular case is not the sole ground of its exclusion. Its intrinsic weakness, its incompetency to satisfy the mind of the existence of the fact, and the frauds which might be practised under its cover, combine to support the rule that hearsay evidence is totally inadmissible.”

1836, Story, J., in Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. 436 : “[Besides lacking oath and cross-examination, its fault is] . . . that it is peculiarly liable to be obtained by fraudulent contrivances, and above all that it is exceedingly infirm, unsatisfactory, and intrinsically weak in its very nature and character.”

The charge of intrinsic weakness, so far as this vague expression is open to interpretation, seems to mean nothing more than that such statements lack the trustworthiness that the test of cross-examination might supply. The further suggestion of a peculiar liability to fraudulent manufacture seems to mean that oral utterances of the sort can by false witnesses be placed in the mouth of absent persons ; and no doubt this is so. But, in the first place, this is not true of written statements offered and authenticated in court, and yet the Hearsay rule equally excludes these ; and, in the second place, it is just as true of the other oral and receivable utterances above named, and yet these are equally admissible with written statements. There seems to be no soundness in either of the above suggestions.

(3) The Hearsay rule has sometimes been stated in part by describing the distinct principle above named (ante, § 1361, par. 1) requiring personal knowledge as one of a witness' qualifications :

1842, Professor Simon Greenleaf, Evidence, § 98: "It is requisite that whatever facts the witness may speak to, he should be confined to those lying in his own knowledge, whether they be things said or done, and should not testify from information given by others, however worthy of credit they may be."

But here we are not regarding the reported statement of the absent person as a testimonial assertion ; we are thinking of the witness on the stand as speaking directly to the ultimate fact, and we are denying the sufficiency of his knowledge of this fact. This is not a question of the Hearsay rule, but of the witness' Testimonial Qualifications (ante, §§ 657, 1361).¹

(4) We sometimes think of "hearsay" as a merely anonymous utterance or rumor ; but such anonymity is not the source of the Hearsay rule's exclusion. An anonymous assertion would in any event be excluded, because the author is not shown to be qualified by knowledge and otherwise. The Hearsay rule assumes that the declarant is qualified as a witness (post, § 1424) ; but it still excludes the untested assertion, even though made by a qualified person.

§ 1364. History of the Rule. Under the name of the Hearsay rule, then, will here be understood that rule which prohibits the use of a person's assertion, as equivalent to testimony to the fact asserted, unless the assertor is brought to testify in court on the stand, where he may be probed and cross-examined as to the grounds of his assertion and of his qualifications to make it. The history of the Hearsay rule, as a distinct and living idea, begins only in the 1500s, and it does not gain a complete development and final precision until the early 1700s. Before tracing its history, however, from the time of what may be considered its legal birth, it will be necessary to examine a few salient features of the preceding century, in order to understand the conditions amid which it took its origin.

One distinction, though, must be noticed even before this preliminary survey, — the distinction between requiring an extrajudicial speaker to be called to the stand to testify, and requiring one who is already on the stand to speak from personal knowledge (ante, § 1361, par. 1). The latter requirement had long ago been known in the early modes of trial preceding the jury. In the days when proof by compurgation of oath-helpers lived as a separate mode alongside of proof by deed-witnesses and other transaction-witnesses, "the witness was markedly discriminated from the oath-helper ; the mark of the witness is knowledge, acquaintance with the fact in issue, and moreover, knowledge resting on his own observation."¹ Such a witness' distinctive function was to speak de visu suo et auditu.² The principle was not fully carried

¹ Judicial opinions illustrating this use of the term will be found ante, § 657.

² 1892, Brunner, Deutsche Rechtsgeschichte,

II, 397 ; 1902, Schröder, Lehrbuch der deutschen Rechtsgeschichte, 4th ed. 772.

³ 1898, Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 18, 499.

out; for a deed-witness need not have actually seen it executed, and might merely have promised by attestation to appear and vouch in court.³ But at any rate this principle, so far as it prevailed, concerned a different mode of trial, "trial by witnesses," which jury-trial supplanted.⁴ Afterwards, nearly three centuries later, when jury-trial itself had changed, and witnesses (now in the modern sense) became once more a chief source of proof, the old idea reappeared and was prescribed for them; the witness would speak to "what hath fallen under his senses,"⁵ and this became in the modern law a fundamental principle.⁶ But at the time now to be considered, when jury-trial was coming in (say the 1300s), that principle belonged in what was practically another mode of trial, and did not affect the development.

What we are here concerned with is a different notion, namely, that when a specific person, not as yet in court, is reported to have made assertions about a fact, that person must be called to the stand, or his assertion will not be taken as evidence. That is to say: suppose that A, who does not profess to know anything about a robbery, is offered to prove that B, who did profess to know, has asserted the circumstances of the robbery; here B's assertion is not to be credited or received as testimony, however much he may know, unless B is called and deposes on the stand. As to the history of this simple but fundamental notion, — the Hearsay rule proper, — it is necessary at the outset to notice briefly certain important conditions which prevailed at the beginning of the 1500s.

(a) And, first, it is clear that there was, up to about that time, no appreciation at all of the necessity of calling a person to the stand as a witness in order to utilize his knowledge for the jury. On the contrary, the leading conditions and influences of jury-trial permitted and condoned the practice of the jury's obtaining information by consulting informed persons not called into court:

1872, Professor Heinrich Brunner, The Origin of Jury Courts, 427, 452: "We may not interpret the verdict 'ex scientia,' in the domain of English law as a verdict based on personal perception. The jurors of the assize were certainly entitled to give a verdict based on the communications of trustworthy neighbors. Glanvill makes it requisite, for the jurors' knowledge, 'that they should have knowledge from their own view and hearing of the matter or through the words of their fathers and through such words of persons whom they are bound to trust as worthy.' Thus they exhibit really in their verdict the prevailing conviction of the community upon the matter in question. For ascertaining this, ample opportunity is furnished by the 'view' and by the period of time elapsing between the view and the swearing in court. If their verdict agreed with the opinion throughout the community, they had nothing to fear from an attain. . . . Thus the juror of the English law who gives a verdict ex scientia (with reference to the view of lands had) is a the earlier trait survived, as the history of the parol-evidence rule indicates (post, § 2426).

³ Thayer, ubi supra, 98; and cases cited ante, § 1292. A good additional illustration occurs in Seld. Soc., Select Civ. Pl., I, No. 76; and as late as 1543, in Rolfe v. Hampden, Dyer 53 b, a survival of this is seen in the case of two will-witnesses who "deposed upon the report of others." This was probably because such witnesses were originally transaction-witnesses, not document-witnesses, and in their latter character

⁴ Thayer, ubi supra, 17, 500; Brunner, Entstehung der Schwurgerichte, quoted infra.

⁵ 1670, Vaughan, C. J., in Bushel's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 999, 1003; 1696, Holt, C. J., in Charnock's Trial, 12 id. 1454.

⁶ Cases cited ante, § 657.

'knowledge-witness' simply, whether his knowledge rests on his own perceptions or on another's communication. . . . The English knowledge-witness [juror] is not an eye-witness, not a testis de scientia in the sense of the later Norman law."⁷

1895, Sir F. Pollock and Professor F. W. Maitland, History of the English Law, II, 622, 625: "Some of the verdicts that are given must be founded on hearsay and floating tradition. Indeed, it is the duty of the jurors, so soon as they have been summoned, to make inquiries about the facts of which they will have to speak when they come before the court. They must collect testimony. . . . At the least a fortnight had been given to them in which to 'certify themselves' of the facts. We know of no rule of law which prevented them from listening during this interval to the tale of the litigants. . . . Separately or collectively, in court or out of court, they have listened to somebody's story and believed it."

The ordinary witness, as we to-day conceive him, coming into court and publicly informing the jury, was (it must be remembered) in the 1400s a rare figure, just beginning to be known.⁸ Of persons thus called, the chief kinds were the preappointed ones, — deed-witnesses and other transaction-witnesses; and even these, with the jury, "all went out and conferred privately as if composing one body; the witnesses did not regularly testify in open court."⁹ Even where facts were involved which, as we should think, needed other testimony, the counsel stated them by allegation, and a special witness might or might not be present to sustain the allegations.¹⁰ Well into the 1400s "it was regarded as the right of the parties to 'inform' the jury after they were impanelled and before the trial."¹¹ In 1450 it is said by Chief Justice Fortescue, "If the jurors come to a man where he lives, in the country, to have knowledge of the truth of the matter, and he informs them, it is justifiable,"¹² i. e. it is not the offence of maintenance.¹³ Note that the only objection thought of is that of maintenance. In 1499 a juror, in a certain trial where a thunderstorm had caused a separation without leave, talked with a friend of one of the parties, and this, from the same point of view, was held not unlawful.¹⁴ Such practices of obtaining information from informed persons not called were a chief reliance for the early jury. In fact, the strict notions then prevailing as to the offence of maintenance tended to discourage ⁷ Professor Brunner goes on to point out (p. 453 ff.) that since in France the judicial use of "trial by witnesses" proper came early into prominence (in the 1300s and 1400s) through the civil or canonical system, and since the contrast between these two competing methods led the former to be called testes de scientia, and the jurors merely testes de credentia, the jury system became discredited as an inferior one and ultimately fell into disuse. In other words, the lack of any sharp discrimination in England as to the sources of the jury's "knowledge" was the marked feature which enabled it to survive, in contrast to the fate of its kindred institution in Normandy, where circumstances had led to the emphasizing of its inferior sources of knowledge. Compare also Glasson, Histoire du droit et des institutions de la France, VI, 544 (1895).

⁸ Note 20, infra.

⁹ Thayer, ubi supra, 97, 102; this continued probably into the 1500s.

¹⁰ Thayer, ubi supra, 121, 133.

¹¹ Thayer, ubi supra, 92; in Palgrave's "The Merchant and the Friar," there cited, an account of a trial for robbery in London in 1303 represents the sheriff as saying, when asked by the judge whether the jury is ready: "The least informed of them has taken great pains to go up and down in every hole and corner of Westminster — they and their wives — add to learn all they could concerning his past and present life and conversation."

¹² Y. B. 28 H. VI, 6, 1; cit. Thayer, 128; see also the petition quoted ib. 125.

¹³ Again, in 1504 (Y. B. 20 H. VII, 11, 21; cit. Thayer, 129), Rede, J., says: "If the jury come to my house to be informed of the truth, and I inform them, that is not maintenance."

¹⁴ Y. B. 14 H. VII, 29, 4; cit. Thayer, 132.

the coming of witnesses. In the 1400s "it was by no means freely done";¹⁵ and when, in 1562-63,¹⁶ compulsory process for ordinary witnesses was first provided, the measure came rather as a protection for the witness against the charge of maintenance than for any other reason.¹⁷ In short, as late as through the 1400s, there was not only no feeling of necessity for having every informant come to testify publicly in court, but there was still a discouragement of such a general process; and the jury might and did get a great deal of its knowledge by express inquiry from specific persons not called, or by the counsel's report of what had been or would be said by persons not called or not put on the stand.

(b) But in the meantime certain conditions were changing in a significant respect. Contrasting the end of the 1400s and the beginning of the 1600s, it appears, as the marked feature, that the proportion between the quantity of information obtained from ordinary witnesses produced in court and of information by the jury itself contributed or obtained was in effect reversed. The former element, in the 1400s, was "but little considered and of small importance";¹⁸ but by the early 1600s the jury's function as judges of fact, who depended largely on other persons' testimony presented to them in court, had become a prominent one, perhaps a chief one.¹⁹ It is necessary to appreciate that the ordinary witness (as we conceive him) did not come to be a common feature of jury trials till the very end of the 1400s.²⁰ Thus during the 1500s the community was for the first time dealing with a situation in which the jury depended largely, habitually, and increasingly, for their sources of information, upon testimonies offered to them in court at the trial.

(c) This, then, is the reason why another notion (a marked feature of the 1500s and early 1600s) should come into particular prominence at that epoch and not before. During that period much is found to be said, in the trials, about the number of witnesses, their sufficiency in quantity and quality. Juries were just beginning to depend for their verdict upon what was laid before them at the trial, and it was thus natural enough that they should begin to ask themselves, and to be urged by counsel to consider, whether they had been furnished with sufficient material for a right decision. Much begins to be thought and said, in statutes and otherwise, about having witnesses "good and lawful," "good and pregnant," "good and sufficient."²¹ There was, moreover, already in existence at that time, well known to a large proportion of the legal profession, and only waiting for a chance to be imported and

¹⁵ Thayer, ubi supra, 130.

¹⁶ St. 5 Eliz. c. 9, § 6.

¹⁷ The history of compulsory process is examined post, § 2190.

¹⁸ Thayer, ubi supra, 130.

¹⁹ For example, in 1499, Vavasour, J., says: "Suppose no evidence is given on either side, and the parties do not wish to give any, yet the jury shall give their verdict for one side or the other; and so the evidence is not material to help or harm the matter" (Y. B. 14 H. VII, 29, 4, cit. Thayer, 133); while in the early 1600s, Coke says (3 Inst. 163) that "most commonly juries are led by deposition of witnesses." Another indication is seen in the practical disuse of the attain by the end of the 1500s (Thayer, ubi supra, 138, 150, 153, 167), due largely to the fact that the jury now depended so much upon testimony in court.

²⁰ Thayer, ubi supra, 102, 121, 122, 126.

²¹ In other respects, also, this was a time significant of a desire to see to the sufficiency of the evidence placed before a jury; see Thayer, ubi supra, 179, 180, 430.

adopted, a mass of rules in the civil and canon law about the number of witnesses necessary in given cases, and the circumstances sufficient to complement and corroborate testimony deficient in number. Throughout the State trials of the 1500s and early 1600s, the accused is found insisting that one witness to each material fact is not enough.²² In spite of these repeated appeals to the numerical system of the civil law, they produced no permanent impression in the shape of specific rules, except in treason and perjury.²³ But the general notion thoroughly permeated the times, and barely escaped being incorporated in the jury system. In a particular respect it left an impression material to the present inquiry. There had hitherto been no prejudice against the jury's utilizing information from persons not produced. But now that their verdict depended so much on what was laid before them at the trial, and now that the sufficiency of this evidence, in quantity and quality, began to be canvassed, it came to be asked whether a hearsay thus laid before them would suffice. It was asked, for example, whether, if there was one witness testifying in court from personal knowledge and another's hearsay statement offered, the two together would suffice.²⁴ Again, it was discussed in Queen Mary's reign (1553), whether, of the two accusers required in treason, one could testify by reporting a hearsay.²⁵ In Raleigh's trial (1603), Chief Justice Popham, refusing to produce Cobham to testify, explained that, "where no circumstances do concur to make a matter probable, then an accuser may be heard [in court, and not merely by extrajudicial statement]; but so many circumstances agreeing and confirming the accusation in this case, the accuser is not to be produced";²⁶ that is, a hearsay statement was sufficient if otherwise corroborated. So, too, the notion that persisted in the 1600s, that a hearsay statement, though not alone sufficient, was nevertheless usable in

²² A single example must suffice; in Lord Stafford's Trial (1640), 3 How. St. Tr. 1427, 1445, 1450, he argues: "He is but one witness, and in law can prove nothing"; such "therefore could not make faith in matter of debt, much less in matter of life and death."

²³ The treason-statutes, coming in 1547-1554, will be noted later. The history of the numerical system, and of its failure to obtain a foothold in our law, is examined post, § 2032.

²⁴ 1541, Rolfe v. Hampden, Dyer 53 b (of three witnesses to a will, "two deposed upon the report of others, and the third deposed of his own knowledge," and there was no apparent objection, "though the jury paid little regard to the testimony aforesaid"); 1622, Adams v. Canon, Dyer 53 b, note (disbursement of money for P.; of two witnesses, one "deposed that he himself knew it to be true, and being examined why he would swear that, answered, 'because his father had said so'; and in this case much was said about the deposition of witnesses; first, that if one witness depose of his own knowledge of the very point in question, and the other in the circumstances, that shall be sufficient ground for the judge to pass sentence"; here the "circumstances" means the hearsay statement, as shown by Pyke v. Crouch, infra).

²⁵ 1553, R. v. Thomas, Dyer 99 b ("It was there holden for law, that of two accusers, if one be an accuser of his own knowledge, or of his own hearing, and he relate it to another, the other may well be an accuser"); 1556, Dyer, 134 a, note (under the treason statute requiring two accusers, "an accusation under the hands of the accusers or testified by others is sufficient"); 1628, Coke, 3d Inst. 25 ("The strange conceit in 2 Mar. [Thomas's Case], that one may be an accuser by hearsay, was utterly denied by the justices in Lord Lumley's Case [1572]," "reported by the lord Dier under his own hand, which we have seen, but [is] left out of the print"); approved by Hale, Pleas of the Crown (1680), I, 306, II, 287.

This notion of quantity, as associated with hearsay, is seen also in certain coeval rules on the Continent, declaring (for example) one witness upon personal knowledge to be equal to two or three going upon hearsay (Pertile, Storia del diritto italiano, 2d ed., 1900, vol. VI, pt. 1, p. 388; Esmein, Histoire de la procédure criminelle en France, 1882, pp. 269, 369).

²⁶ As reported in Jardine's Criminal Trials, I, 427.

confirmation of other testimony,²⁷ was a direct survival of this treatment of hearsay from the standpoint of numerical sufficiency. During the 1500s nothing was settled in this direction; the matter was being debated and doubted. But the important feature is that the doubt about using hearsay statements — i. e. testimony from persons not called — was merely incidental to a general canvassing of the numerical and qualitative sufficiency of testimony, which in turn was a novelty arising from the jury-conditions of the 1500s.

It appears, then, that at the entrance to the 1500s (a) there had hitherto been no conception of a special necessity for calling to the stand persons to whose assertions credit was to be given; (b) that by the 1500s the increasing dependence of the jury on the evidence laid before them in court (as distinguished from their other sources of information) gave a new importance to such evidential material; and (c) that there was thus much debate as to the sufficiency of witnesses in number and kind, and that incidentally doubt began to be thrown on the propriety of depending on extrajudicial assertions, either alone or as confirming other testimony given in court.

With this preliminary survey, the process may now be traced of making more precise and comprehensive the general notion against hearsay which thus sprung into consciousness. It will be convenient to consider, first, hearsay statements in general, and, next, hearsay statements under oath; for the rule as it affected the latter had both an earlier origin and a slower development.

I. Hearsay statements in general. (1) In the first place, then, there is no exclusion of hearsay statements. Through the 1500s and down beyond the middle of the 1600s, hearsay statements are constantly received, even against opposition.²⁸ They are often objected to by accused persons, and are some-

²⁷ Infra, note 33.

²⁸ 1571, Duke of Norfolk's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 958, Jardine's Crim. Trials, I, 157, 158, 159, 179, 201, 206, 210 (various letters and other hearsay statements are used against the accused); 1590, Stranham v. Cullington, Cro. Eliz. 228 (prohibition for suing for tithes; "they said that hearsay shall be allowed for a proof"); 1601, Webb v. Petts, Noy 44 ("the witnesses said that for a long time, as they had heard say, the occupiers . . . had used to pay annually to the parson 3s."); held that "a proof by hearsay was good enough to maintain the surmise within the statute 2 Ed. 6"; 1622, Adams v. Canon, Dyer 53 b, note (a hearsay admissible for one witness; see quotation supra); 1632, Sherfield's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 519, 536 (information in the Star Chamber against a vestryman of New Sarum for breaking a painted glass window; to show that the Bishop had warned him not to do it, one of the Court offered a letter from the Bishop, "but this being out of course, and a thing to which the defendant could make no answer, was not approved of"); 1640, Earl of Strafford's Trial, ib. 1381, 1427 ("they prove very little but what they took upon hearsays"); 1644, Archbishop Laud's Trial, 4 id. 315, 383 (argued for defendant:

"He adds what Sir Thomas Ailsbury's man said. . . . But why doth he rest upon a hearsay of Sir Thomas Ailsbury's man? Why was not this man examined to make out the proof?"), 391 (argued for defendant: "Of all which there is no proof but a bare relation what Mr. H., Mr. I., and Sir W. B. said; which is all hearsay and makes no evidence, unless they were present to witness what was said [by me to them]"), 395 (argued for defendant: "This is but Sir E. P.'s report, and so no proof, unless he were produced to justify it"), again at 399, 402, 432, 534, 538 (in all these instances the hearsay statements are received); 1663, Moders' Trial, 6 id. 273, 276 (bigamy; a witness testified that he once saw the first husband, not produced, "and the man did acknowledge himself to be so"; the Court: "Hearsays must condemn no man; what do you know of your own knowledge?" but the statement gets in); 1669, Hawkins' Trial, ib. 921, 935 (collateral charge that defendant picked N.'s pocket; N.'s statements to that effect were given by the witness, in spite of the defendant's demand that N. be called; Sir Matthew Hale was judge); 1670, Style's Practical Register 173 (citing a case of 1646).

times said by the judge to be of no value or to be insufficient of themselves, and are even occasionally excluded. In short, they are regarded as more or less questionable, and the doubt particularly increases in the 1600s; but, in spite of all, they are admissible and admitted. Nor is this result due to any abuse or irregularity peculiar to trials for treason or other State prosecutions; it is equally apparent in the rulings in the few civil cases that are reported. The practice is unmistakable.

(2) In the meantime, the appreciation of the impropriety of using hearsay statements by persons not called is growing steadily. By the second decade after the Restoration, this notion receives a fairly constant enforcement, both in civil and in criminal cases.²⁹ There are occasional lapses;³⁰ but it is clear that by general acceptance the rule of exclusion had now become a part of the law as well as of the practice. There even is found³¹ a counsel for the prosecution stopping "for example's sake" its violation by his own witness. No precise date or ruling stands out as decisive; but it seems to be between 1675 and 1690 that the fixing of the doctrine takes place.³²

²⁹ It is worth noting that the not uncommon belief which attributes most of the reforms in the rules of evidence in criminal trials to the Commonwealth of 1649 or the Revolution of 1688 is hardly well founded. In the present case, for example, the new idea comes in with the Restoration régime, 1660-1685; and this is generally true of the other matters of improvement (as noted post, §§ 2032, 2250). The Commonwealth went on with very much the same practices as the royal government which it overthrew; witness the argument (infra) of Mr. Prynne, who was one of the most vigorous opponents of Charles I. At the Restoration, much warning seems to have been taken, and it is then that the decided amelioration is apparent; the trials of the Regicides, for instance, were (contrary to the general impression) almost models of fairness, considering the prior practice. What was left to be done was done under Anne, after 1700, rather than under William. Even Scroggs, in 1678, did not much violate existing rules; and the real abuses and irregularities occurred chiefly in the terrible times of unrest and mutual suspicion, just before and after the Duke of York's accession, and at the hands of the unscrupulous Jefferies, whose faults were chiefly his own and abnormal. Compare the similar opinion of Professor Willis-Bund, State Trials for Treason, 1882, vol. II, Intro. xx.

³⁰ E. g. in the cases infra of 1680, 1681, 1682, 1686.

³¹ E. g. in Colledge's Trial, infra.

³² 1673, Pickering v. Barkley, Vin. Abr. "Evidence," P, b, 1, vol. XII, 175 (to show the mercantile usage construing a policy, "a certificate of merchants" was read in court; but "the Court desired to have the master of the Trinity-house and other sufficient merchants to be brought into court to satisfy the Court visa voce"); 1676, Rutter v. Hebden, 1 Keb. 754 (objected that a contradictory statement of a witness could not be proved because not made on oath; but allowed); 1678, Bishop Burnet on the Popish Plot, 6 How. St. Tr. 1406, 1422, 1427 (refers to a part of Dugdale's testimony as "only upon hearsay from Evers, and so was nothing in the law"); 1678, Earl of Pembroke's Trial, ib. 1309, 1325, 1336 (a deceased person's statements as to persons injuring him, received; one of the statements was offered as a death-bed declaration; and counsel adds, "there are little circumstances which are always allowed for evidence in such cases, — where men receive any wounds, to ask them questions while they are ill, about it, who hurt them"); 1678, Ireland's Trial, 7 id. 79, 105 (the defendant, to prove an alibi at St. Omer's college in France, offered to bring "an authentic writing" "under the seal of the college and testified by all in the college, that he was there all the while"; Atkins, J.: "Such evidences as you speak of we would not allow against you; therefore we would not allow it for you"; afterwards, members of the college were produced in person); 1679, Samson v. Yardley, 2 Keb. 223 (appeal of murder; what a witness, now dead, swore on the indictment was excluded; "what the witness dead had said generally, being but hearsay of a stranger, and not of a party [in] interest, they would not admit, which might be true or false"); 1680, Anderson's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 811, 865 (charge of being a priest and saying mass at the Venetian ambassador's; a letter of the ambassador, then out of the kingdom, denying his saying of mass, not admitted for the defendant); 1680, Gascoigne's Trial, ib. 959, 1019 (one Barlow being offered as a witness, but being apparently afraid to speak, one Ravenscroft offered to tell what Barlow had told him the night before; Pemberton, J.: "You must not come to tell a story out of another man's mouth"; yet after some objection he was allowed to tell the whole story); 1681, Plunket's Trial, 8 id. 447, 458 (other persons' statements of defendant's acts, admitted without objection), 461 (Witness: "Mr. L. B. told me that he did hear of the French —"; Pemberton, L. C. J.: "Speak

(3) At the same time, and along with this general rule of exclusion, there is still a doctrine, clearly recognized, that a hearsay statement may be used as confirmatory or corroboratory of other testimony.³³ Here we have the survival of that notion about sufficiency and quantity, already referred to. A hearsay statement, by itself, is insufficient as the sole foundation for a conclusion; by itself it "can condemn no man," and so, by itself, it is excluded; but, when it merely supplements other good evidence already in, it is receivable. This limited doctrine as to using it in corroboration survived for a long time in a still more limited shape, i. e. in the rule that a witness's own prior consistent statements could be used in corroboration of his testimony on the stand;³⁴ and the latter was probably accepted as late as the end of the 1700s.³⁵

what you know yourself"); 1681, Busby's Trial, ib. 525, 545 (witness offers an affidavit of a register of births; Street, B.: "You ought to have brought the man along with you to testify it"; Witness: "The sexton is an old man about 60 years of age and could not come"; Street, B.: "That does not signify anything at all"); 1681, Colledge's Trial, ib. 549, 603 (seditious publication; the Attorney-General himself stops a prosecution-witness who tells what the printer said as to the author), 623 (another counsel for the prosecution does the same; "we must not permit this for example's sake, to tell what others said"), 683 (counsel for prosecution: "You must not tell a tale of a tale of what you heard one say"); 1682, Lord Grey's Trial, 9 id. 127, 136 (hearsay statements plentifully received without objection); 1684, Hampden's Trial, ib. 1053, 1094 (hearsay statements excluded; Jefferies, L. C. J.: "You know the law; why should you offer any such thing?"); 1684, Braddon's Trial, ib. 1127, 1181, 1189 (Mr. J. Withins: "We must not hear what another said that is no party to this cause"); 1686, Lord Delamere's Trial, 11 id. 509, 548 (hearsay statements put in without check); 1692, Stainer v. Droitwich, 1 Salk. 281 (an exception to the hearsay rule discussed as such); 1693, Thompson v. Trevanion, Holt 286, Skinner 402 (a hearsay statement, received apparently as an exception); 1696, Charnock's Trial, 12 How. St. Tr. 1377, 1454 (Holt, L. C. J., alludes to the objection as well founded, and informs the jury when charging them: "Therefore I did omit repeating [to you] a great part of what D. said, because as to him it was for the most part hearsay"); 1697, Pyke v. Crouch, 1 Ld. Raym. 730 (if a testator sends a duplicate of his will to a stranger "and the stranger sends back a letter" mentioning its receipt, "after the death of the stranger such letter may be read as circumstantial evidence" to prove that such a duplicate was sent).

³³ 1679, Knox's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 763, 790 (the witness's former statement offered; L. C. J. Scroggs: "The use you make of this is no more but only to corroborate what he hath said, that he told it him while it was fresh and that it is no new matter of his invention now"); 1683, Lord Russell's Trial, 9 id. 577, 613

(L. C. J. Pemberton: "The giving evidence by hearsay will not be evidence"; Attorney-General: "It is not evidence to convict a man if there were not plain evidence before; but it plainly confirms what the other swears"); 1692, Cole's Trial, 12 id. 876 (Mrs. Milward: "My lord, my husband [now deceased] declared to me that he and Mr. Cole were in the coach with Dr. Clenche, and that they two killed Dr. Clenche"; Mr. J. Dolben: "That is no evidence at all, what your husband told you; that won't be good evidence, if you don't know somewhat of your own knowledge"; Mrs. Milward: "My lord, I have a great deal more that my husband told me to declare"; Mr. J. Dolben: "That won't do; what if your husband had told you that I killed Dr. Clenche, what then? This will stand for no evidence in law; we ought by the law to have no man called in question but upon very good grounds, and good evidence upon oath, and that upon the verdict of twelve good men." Nevertheless, he let her relate more of what her husband told her about the plot to kill Dr. Clenche; in charging the jury, he referred to it as "no evidence in law . . . especially when it is single, without any circumstance to confirm it"); 1725, Braddon, Observations on the Earl of Essex' Murder, 9 How. St. Tr. 1229, 1272 ("It is true, no man ought to suffer barely upon hearsay evidence; but such testimony hath been used to corroborate what else may be sworn").

³⁴ 1682, Lutterell v. Reynell, 1 Mod. 282 (it was proved that one of the witnesses for the plaintiff had often "declared the same things" as now; and L. C. B. Bridgman "said, though a hearsay was not to be allowed as direct evidence, yet it might be made use of to this purpose, viz. to prove that W. M. was constant to himself, whereby his testimony was corroborated"); ante 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 149 ("A mere hearsay is no evidence; . . . but though hearsay be not allowed as direct evidence, yet it may be in corroboration of a witness' testimony, to show that he affirmed the same thing before on other occasions; . . . for such evidence is only in support of the witness that gives in his testimony upon oath").

³⁵ 1767, Buller, Trials at Nisi Prius, 294; and cases cited ante, § 1123.

(4) In the meantime, the general rule excluding hearsay statements comes over into the 1700s as something established within living memory. It is clear that its firm fixing (as above observed) did not occur till about 1680; and so in the treatises of the early 1700s the rule is stated with a prefatory "It seems."³⁶ By the middle of the 1700s the rule is no longer to be struggled against;³⁷ and henceforth the only question can be how far there are to be specific exceptions to it.

What is further noticeable is that in these utterances of the early 1700s the reason is clearly put forward why there should be this distinction between statements made out of court and statements made on the stand; the reason is that "the other side hath no opportunity of a cross-examination." This reason receives peculiar emphasis in the final and comprehensive application of the rule to a peculiar class of statements made prior to the trial in hand, namely, statements made under oath. These come now to be considered.

II. Hearsay statements under oath. (1) As early as the middle of the 1500s a first step had been attempted towards requiring the personal production of those who had already made a statement upon oath. This requirement was limited to trials for treason; and the circumstances leading up to its introduction are described in the following passage:

1696, Bishop Burnet, arguing in the House of Lords, at Fenwick's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 537, 752: "There passed many attainders in that reign [of H. VIII], only upon depositions that were read in both houses of parliament. It is true, these were much blamed, and there was great cause for it. . . . In Edward VI's trial, the lord Seymour was attainted in the same manner [sc. without being heard], only with this difference, that the witnesses were brought to the bar and there examined, whereas formerly they proceeded upon some depositions that were read to them. At the duke of Somerset's trial [in 1551], which was both for high treason and for felony, in which he was acquitted of the treason but found guilty of the felony, depositions were only read against him, but the witnesses were not brought face to face, as he pressed they might be."³⁸ Upon which it was that the following parliament enacted that the accusers (that is, the witnesses) should be examined face to face, if they were alive."³⁹

The statute of 1553, thus referred to as first requiring the witness's pro-

³⁶ 1716, Hawkins, Pleas of the Crown, II, 596, b. II, c. 46, § 44 ("As to the Fifth Point, viz. of parol evidence, and how far hearsay shall be admitted. It seems agreed that what a stranger has been heard to say is in strictness no manner of evidence either for or against a prisoner, not only because it is not upon oath, but also because the other side hath no opportunity of a cross-examination"); 1736, Bacon, Abridgment, Evidence, (K) ("It seems agreed that what another has been heard to say is no evidence, because the party was not on oath; also, because the party who is affected thereby had not an opportunity of cross-examining").

³⁷ 1701, Captain Kidd's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 147, 177 (Witness: "Here is a certificate [of my reputation] from the parish where I was born;"; L. C. B. Ward: "That will signify nothing; we cannot read certificates; they must speak viva voce"); 1716, Earl of Wintoun's Trial, 15 How. St. Tr. 804, 856; 1723, Bishop Atterbury's Trial, 16 id. 323, 455; 1725, L. C. Maolesfield's Trial, ib. 767, 1137; 1743, Craig dem. Annesley v. Anglesea, 17 id. 1160 (a statement of Mrs. P., deceased, as to a material fact was offered; after some debate, the Court excluded it "on the principal reason that hearsay evidence ought not to be admitted, because of the adverse party's having no opportunity of cross-examining"); 1754, Canning's Trial, 19 id. 383, 406 (rule undisputed).

³⁸ This may be seen in the duke's trial, in 1 How. St. Tr. 520.

³⁹ Substantially the same account as Bishop Burnet's is given in Rastal's Statutes (?), I, 102, as quoted in a note to the Duke of Somerset's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 520; but no edition of any of Rastal's books seems to contain such a passage.

duction on the trial, was St. 5 Edw. VI, c. 12, § 22.⁴⁰ This was followed by a similar provision in 1554, St. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 10, § 11.⁴¹ But this early step was premature; the innovation was too much in advance of the times; and it had only a short life. From the very year of the latter enactment, until the end of the succeeding century, it remained by judicial construction a dead letter. The means by which this result was reached was another section (§ 7) in the act of Philip and Mary, providing that trials for treason should be conducted "according to the common law," i. e. without any requirement of two witnesses or of producing witnesses; so that since the requirement of § 11 applied only to trials for the treasons defined by that very statute, the Crown, by bringing prosecutions on other definitions of treason (common law or statutory), was free from any such requirement.⁴²

This judicial construction was perhaps strained, and was abandoned after the Revolution and under William III's government. Nevertheless it was clear law for a century and a half; and, when Sir Walter Raleigh insisted so urgently on the production of Lord Cobham, he was truly answered by Chief Justice Popham that "he had no law for it."⁴³

Thus this limited attempt to require personal production, instead of ex parte depositions by absent persons, perished at its very birth. So far as this statutory attempt at the beginnings of a hearsay rule is concerned, it played no

⁴⁰ "Which said accusers at the time of the arraignment of the party accused, if they be then living, shall be brought in person before the party so accused, and avow and maintain that which they have to say to prove him guilty," unless he confesses.

⁴¹ Upon arraignment for treason, the persons "or two of them at the least," who shall declare anything against the accused "shall, if they be then living and within the realm, be brought forth in person before the party arraigned if he require the same, and object and say openly in his hearing what they or any of them can against him."

⁴² 1554, Throckmorton's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 862, 873, 880, 883 (the defendant in vain invoked the treason-statute); 1571, Duke of Norfolk's Trial, ib. 958, 978, 992 (by the prosecuting Serjeant: "the law was so for a time, in some cases of treason, but since the law hath been found too hard and dangerous for the prince, and it hath been repealed"); 1586, Abington's Trial, ib. 1142, 1148 ("You stand indicted by the common law and the statute of 25 Edw. III . . . and in that statute is not contained any such proof"); 1603, Raleigh's Trial, 2 id. 16, 18; Jardine's Cr. Tr., I, 418, 420 (Popham, C. J. "Sir Walter Raleigh, for the statutes you have named, none of them help you. The statutes of the 5th and 6th of Edward VI and of the 1st Edward VI are general; but they were found to be inconvenient and are therefore repealed by the 1st and 2d of Philip and Mary, which you have mentioned, which statute goes only to the treasons therein comprised, and also appoints the trial of treasons to be as before it was at the common law");

1649, Lilburne's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 1269, 1401 (same rule). Compare the decisions by which the same result was reached for the requirement of two witnesses (post, § 2032). There was another similar statute about the same time, but it apparently was ineffective for the same reason: 1558, St. 1 Eliz. c. 1, § 27 (no person to be convicted of ecclesiastical offences or treason under this act — against heresy and foreign church authority — unless the two required witnesses, or such as are living and within the realm, "shall be brought forth in person face to face before the party so arraigned, and there shall testify and declare what they can say against the party so arraigned, if he require the same").

⁴³ The learned Mr. Jardine, in his Criminal Trials, I, 514, has vindicated this trial against the unjust criticisms of later times: "This doctrine and practice [of 1690 and later], however, though directly the reverse of those which preceded them, were not founded upon any legislative provision or any recorded decision of the Courts. But at the period of Raleigh's trial, there was, perhaps, no point of law more completely settled, than that the statute of the 1 & 2 Philip and Mary, c. 10, had repealed the provisions of the statute of the 5th of Edward VI, respecting the production of two witnesses in cases of treason. . . . If, therefore, the Judges who presided on Raleigh's trial were to abide by the solemn and repeated decisions of their predecessors, and the uniform practice of the Courts of law for centuries, they could do no otherwise, consistently with their duty, than decide as they did."

further part at all; except perhaps as furnishing a moral support for the opinion which was already working towards a general hearsay rule.

(2) That at this time, then (say, until the early 1600s), the general absence of any hearsay rule (as already noted) allowed equally the use of this specific class, namely, extrajudicial statements taken under oath, is clear enough. It appears as well in ordinary felony trials⁴⁴ as in treason trials.⁴⁵

(3) It had, of course, always been usual (though, as just seen, not essential) to have the deponent present at the trial; but in such cases the general practice in State trials seems to have been, first to read aloud his sworn statement to the jury, and then to have him confirm it by declaring that it was "willingly and voluntarily confessed without menace or torture or offer of torture."⁴⁶ This went on till well into the 1600s. The sworn statement was still the main or the sufficient thing; but it was thought proper to have it openly adopted by the witness, so as to show that the prosecution did not fear a recantation. Thus the emphasis came gradually to be transferred from the sworn statement, as the sufficient testimony, to the statement on the trial as the essential thing.

(4) About this time, however, and markedly by the middle of the 1600s (coincidentally with the general movement already considered), the notion tends to prevail, and gradually becomes definitely fixed, that even an extrajudicial statement under oath should not be used if the deponent can be personally had in court. This much has now been gained; and it is seen in civil and in criminal trials equally.⁴⁷ His statement can still be used, though, if he

⁴⁴ 1615, Weston's Trial, 2 How. St. Tr. 911, 924; 1615, Elwea's Trial, ib. 935, 941.

⁴⁵ To the instances of this already cited above, construing the treason statute, may be added the following: 1571, Duke of Norfolk's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 958, passim; 1586, Mary Queen of Scots' Trial, ib. 1162, 1183; 1590, Udall's Trial, ib. 1271, 1302; Mr. Jardine, in his Criminal Trials, I, 514, says: "At the time of Raleigh's trial, most of the circumstances objected to by Sir John Hawles [under William III, about 1696] were strictly legal and justifiable; for instance, at that time, the depositions of absent persons were read as the usual course of evidence which had prevailed for centuries in State prosecutions; this mode of proof constituted the general rule, and the oral examination of witnesses was the exception, which was in practice sometimes allowed, but was as often refused, and never permitted but by the consent of the counsel for the prosecution." He also asserts (Intro., I, 25) that "the ordinary mode of trying persons indicted for murder, robbery, or theft" forbade the use of depositions; but his only authority for this statement is Sir Thomas Smith's description of a trial, which does not sustain him; and the citations in the note above seem to disprove his belief.

⁴⁶ The following list is only a selection: 1586, Babington's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 1127, 1131; 1589, Earl of Arundel's Trial, ib. 1250, 1252; 1600, Earl of Essex' Trial, ib. 1333, 1344; 1616, Earl of Somerset's Trial, 2 id. 965, 978.

Compare the cases cited ante, § 818, under Confessions. The following case indicates a growing inclination to insist on this viva voce confirmation where the original examination was technically defective: 1631, Lord Audley's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 401, 402 ("certain examinations having been taken by the lords without an oath, it was resolved [by all the judges] those could not be used until they were repeated upon oath").

⁴⁷ The first suggestion of this view seems to occur in the following cases: 1583, Puckley v. Bridges, Choice Cases in Ch. 163, quoted 1 Swanst. 171 (witnesses deceased and beyond seas; depositions in the Star Chamber, etc., used); 1590, Udall's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 1271, 1283 (examination on oath of one T. read, T. being beyond seas; but it does not appear that the latter circumstance was essential). In Raleigh's Trial (1603), 2 id. 16, 18, Raleigh is willing to concede that Lord Cobham's deposition could have been used, "where the accused is not to be had conveniently"; yet there it was used, though Cobham was "alive, and in the House." But thereafter the precedents indicate a general acceptance of the notion stated above: 1612, Tomlinson v. Croke, 2 Rolle's Abr. 687, pl. 3 (deposition receivable if the deponent is dead, not if he is living); 1613, Fortescue & Coake's Case, Godb. 193 (depositions in chancery not to be read at law "unless affidavit be made that the witnesses who deposed were dead"); 1629, Anon., ib. 326 ("if the party cannot find cannot be had in person, — for example, because of his death (and there is much vacillation of opinion as to the sufficiency of other causes, such as absence beyond sea); and nothing is as yet said as to the further objection that the deposition was not taken subject to cross-examination. The significant feature of this stage is the thought that the hearsay statement is usable only in case of necessity, i. e. the deponent ought to be produced if he can be. But the thought that in any case there must indispensably have been an opportunity for cross-examination has not been reached.

(5) By the middle of the 1600s, the orthodox tradition in favor of allowing the use of extrajudicial sworn statements had thus become decidedly weakened and was on the point of giving way. Nevertheless, there was still a tradition of orthodoxy; and this tradition was in harmony with the practice of influential modes of trial other than trial by jury in the common-law courts.⁴⁸ A fixed rule to the contrary was consciously an innovation; and this innovation, though now on the point of prevailing, remained still to be established and to acquire orthodoxy. From the middle of the century we see the idea still progressing. The state of opinion is illustrated by one of the prosecutions conducted by the anti-Stuart party just before it obtained the upper hand and deposed Charles I:

1643, Col. Fiennes' Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 185, 214; the defendant, tried by court-martial, argued that "no paper-deposition ought to be allowed by the law, in cases of life and death, but the witnesses ought to be all present and testify viva voce": that he had not had notice of the commission "so that he might cross-examine the witnesses";

a witness," then his deposition "in an English court, in a cause betwixt the same parties," may be read); 1631, Fitzpatrick's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 419, 421 (a defendant in rape demanded that the lady be "produced face to face; which she was; who by her oath viva voce satisfied the audience"); 1638, Dawby's Case, Clayt. 62 (admitted, when dead); 1645, Lord Maguire's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 653, 672 (most of the witnesses spoke viva voce; a deposition was used of one who "was in town but he could not stay"); 1658, Mordant's Trial, 5 id. 907, 922 (all sworn except one, an escaped prisoner, whose deposition was used); 1666, Lord Morley's Case, Kel. 55, 6 How. St. Tr. 770 (depositions before a coroner might be read if the deponent were dead, or unable to travel, or detained by defendant; but not if unable to be found); 1673, Blake v. Page, 1 Keb. 36 (speaks of the affidavit of an absent person as allowable, but apparently by consent only); 1678, Bronwich's Case, 1 Lev. 180 (like Lord Morley's Case); 1678, Earl of Pembroke's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 1309, 1338 (a physician offers his prior deposition before the magistrate; the Court: "You must give it again viva voce; we must not read your examination before the Court"); 1685, Oates' Trial, 10 id. 1227, 1285 (deposition of a witness not found after search, excluded); 1692, Harrison's Trial, 12 id. 833, 851 (deposition taken by the coroner in the defendant's absence, read because the defendant had eluded the deponent).

When this necessity for the witness' absence could be foreseen (as when a deposition de bene was asked for before trial), there are some early indications that cross-examination would be a required condition: 1606, Mathews v. Port, Comb. 63 ("The witnesses may be examined [prior to trial] before a judge, by leave of the Court, as well in criminal causes as in civil, where a sufficient reason appears to the Court, as going to sea, etc., and then the other side may cross-examine them"); 1662, St. 13 & 14 Car. 11, c. 23, § 5 (in certain insurance claims, seamen being often the witnesses, an oath de bene may be administered, "timely notice being given to the adverse party, and set up in the office before such examination, to the end such witness or witnesses may be cross-examined").

⁴⁸ Ante 1635, Hudson, Treatise of the Star Chamber, pt. III, § 21, in Hargr. Collect. Jurid. 200 ("It is a great imputation to our English courts that witnesses are privately produced," in chancery; pointing out that the ecclesiastical Court does otherwise, and reciting a recent reform of L. C. Egerton that witnesses should be produced before the opponent, "that the other side might examine him also if they please"); 1637, Bishop of Lincoln's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 769, 772 (Banks, Attorney-General, arguing in the Star Chamber, says: "The proceedings in this court, as in all other courts, is by examination of witnesses returned in parchment, not viva voce").

then Mr. Prynn, for the prosecution, answered, among other things, that in the civil law and courts-martial trials were as usual "by testimoniis [i. e. depositions] as by testibus viva voce; that in the Admiralty, a civil law court, as likewise in the Chancery, Star Chamber, and English courts formed after the civil law, they proceed usually by way of deposition; that even at the common law in some cases, depositions taken before the coroner, and examinations upon oath before the chief justice or other justices, are usually given in evidence even in capital cases; that the high Court of Parliament hath upon just occasions allowed of paper depositions in such cases"; and the depositions were "upon solemn debate" admitted.

This case, to be sure, was no precedent for a common-law trial, and it occurred amidst a bitter political controversy; but it sufficiently illustrates the unsettled state of opinion and the tendency of the time.⁴⁹ Yet no final settlement came under the Commonwealth, nor under the Restoration, nor directly upon the Revolution.⁵⁰

(6) By 1680-1690 (as already noted) had come the establishment of the general rule against unsworn hearsay statements. This must have helped to emphasize the anomaly of leaving extrajudicial sworn statements unaffected by the same strict rule. By 1696, or nearly a decade after the Revolution, that anomaly ceased substantially to exist. A few rulings under the Restoration had foreshadowed this result;⁵¹ but in that year it was definitely and decisively achieved in the trials of Paine and of Sir John Fenwick. The former was a ruling by the King's Bench after full argument, and came in

⁴⁹ A reflection of the English rule in this period is seen in the following colonial records: 1660, Mass. Revised Laws and Liberties, Whitmore's ed., "Witnesses," § 2 (a witness' testimony may be taken before the magistrate, but, if the witness lives within ten miles and is not disabled, it shall not be used "except the witness be also present to be further examined about it; provided also that in capital cases all witnesses shall be present, wheresoever they dwell"; repeated in the Revision of 1672); 1692, Proprietor v. Keith, Pa. Colon. Cas. 117, 124 (affidavits were offered to prove the truth of a libel; but the Court "were very unwilling to have them read, saying it was no evidence unless the persons were present in court"; yet they permitted some to be read, since the witnesses could not be present "by reason of the extremity of the weather"). See also Browne's History of Maryland, 84.

⁵⁰ Mr. Jardine, in his Criminal Trials, Introd., I, 25, 29, says: "The ancient mode of proof by examinations [under oath of absent persons] continued to be the usual and regular course [in cases of treason or other state offences] during the reigns of Elizabeth, James I, and Charles I. . . . During the Commonwealth the practice of reading the depositions of absent witnesses entirely disappeared, and has never been since revived. . . . It is believed that not a single instance can be produced of the reading of the deposition of an absent witness on the trial of a criminal (except in cases expressly provided for by statute), since the reign of Charles I." It would seem that the instances in note 47, supra, show the practice to have been sanctioned until after the Revolution; Mordant's Trial, above cited, certainly shows that it did not cease during the Commonwealth. Mr. Jardine seems to have had a general but incorrect notion that the older methods ceased with the Commonwealth; for example, that torture did not cease, as he believes it did, has been noticed ante, § 818.

⁵¹ Ante 1668 (no date or name), Rolle's Abr., II, 679, pl. 9 (depositions taken by bankruptcy commissioners, not admitted, "in a suit in which comes in question whether he was a bankrupt or not, or to prove anything depending on it, for the other party could not cross-examine the party sworn, that is the common course"); 1669, R. v. Buckworth, 2 Keb. 403 (perjury; testimony of a deceased witness sworn at the trial where the perjury was committed, received; by two judges to one); ante 1680, Hale, Pleas of the Crown, I, 306 ("The information upon oath taken before a justice of the peace" is admissible in felony, if the deponent is unable to travel, yet in treason this is "not allowable, for the statute requires that they be produced upon arraignment in the presence of the prisoner, to the end that he may cross-examine them"); 1688, Thatcher v. Waller, T. Jones 53 (deposition before the coroner of one beyond sea, admitted; but held that a deposition before a justice of the peace should not be received; the case of the coroner standing on the ground of a record); 1694, R. v. Taylor, Skinner 403 (affidavit not admissible); and the citations at the end of note 47, supra.

January.⁵² The latter, coming in the next November,⁵³ involved a lengthy debate in Parliament; and, though the vote finally favored the admission of the deposition, the victory of reaction was in appearance only; for the weighty and earnest speeches in this debate must have burned into the general consciousness the vital importance of the rule securing the right of cross-examination, and made it impossible thereafter to dispute the domination of that rule as a permanent element in the law.⁵⁴ From this time on, the applicability of the Hearsay rule to sworn statements in general, as well as to unsworn statements, is not questioned.⁵⁵ From the beginning of the 1700s the writers upon the law assume it as a settled doctrine;⁵⁶ and the reason of the rule in this connection is stated in the same language already observed in the history of the rule in general, namely that statements used as testimony must be made where the maker can be subjected to cross-examination.⁵⁷

(7) There were, however, two sorts of sworn statements which, being already expressly authorized by statute, though not expressly made admis-

⁵² 1696, R. v. Paine, 5 Mod. 163 (libel; a deposition of B., examined by the mayor of Bristol upon oath but not in P.'s presence, was offered; it was objected that "B. being dead, the defendant had lost all opportunity of cross-examining him," and the use of examinations before coroners and justices rested on the special statutory authority given them to take such depositions; the King's Bench consulted with the Common Pleas, and "it was the opinion of both Courts that these depositions should not be given in evidence, the defendant not being present when they were taken before the mayor and so had lost the benefit of a cross-examination"; the reports of this case in 1 Salk. 281, 1 Ld. Raym. 729, are brief and obscure).

⁵³ It is a little singular that R. v. Paine is not cited by any of the numerous debaters in Fenwick's Trial. The date of the former is given as Hilary Term, 7 Wm. III, which must have been January, 1696, or ten months before Fenwick's Trial. It is cited in Bishop Atterbury's Trial, in 1723, infra.

⁵⁴ 1696, Fenwick's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 537, 591-607, 618-750 (the sworn statement before a justice of the peace of one Goodman, said to have absented himself by the accused's tampering, was offered on a trial in Parliament; a prolonged debate took place, and this deposition, termed hearsay, was opposed on the precise ground of "a fundamental rule in our law that no evidence shall be given against a man, when he is on trial for his life, but in the presence of the prisoner, because he may cross-examine him who gives such evidence," "by which much false swearing was often detected"; the deposition was finally admitted, Nov. 16, by 218 to 145 in the Commons, and the attainder passed by 189 to 156 in the Commons and by 66 to 60 in the Lords; but it is clear from the debate that many of those voting to receive the deposition did so on the theory that Parliament was not bound to follow the rules of evidence obtaining in the inferior Courts; the speeches claiming that those rules would admit it were half-hearted and evasive; moreover, the prosecution only ventured (595) to offer it as "corroborating evidence"; see supra, note 33).

⁵⁵ The last remnant of hesitation is found in Bredon v. Gill, 1697, 2 Salk. 555, 1 Ld. Raym. 219, 5 Mod. 279 (question whether on statutory appeal from excise-commissioners to appeal-commissioners depositions below could be used or the witnesses should "be brought in again personally and be examined viva voce"; ruled at first that "the law does not make viva voce evidence necessary, unless before a jury; in other cases depositions may be evidence"; but afterwards, mutata opinione, the Court required examination de novo). But the persistence with which the older notion lingered on is seen in Bishop Atterbury's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 323, 463, 471, 495, 503, 523, 536, 595, 607, 608, 616, 673; here an examination before the Council, not on oath, of one since dead, was on an impeachment voted by a majority of the Lords to be received; but the vote was clearly the result of hot partisanship, and the managers of the impeachment conceded that their evidence was not legal; in this trial the first citation of R. v. Paine occurs, at p. 536.

⁵⁶ 1730, Emlyn, Preface to State Trials, 1 How. St. Tr. xxv ("The excellency therefore of our laws above others I take to consist chiefly in that part of them which regards criminal prosecutions. . . . In other countries . . . the witnesses are examined in private and in the prisoner's absence; with us they are produced face to face and deliver their evidence in open court, the prisoner himself being present and at liberty to cross-examine them"); ante 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 58 ff.; 1747, Eade v. Lingood, 1 Atk. 203 (deposition before bankruptcy commissioners, excluded).

⁵⁷ See the quotations in the preceding six notes.

sible, might be thought to call for special exemption, namely, the sworn examination of witnesses before justices of the peace in certain cases, and of witnesses before a coroner. That the rule excluding depositions taken without cross-examination should be applied to those of the former sort was not settled until the end of the 1700s.⁵⁸ That it should apply to those of the latter sort never came to be conceded at all in England,⁵⁹ — at least, independently of statutory regulation in the 1800s; and long tradition availed to preserve the use of these, though only as a distinct exception to a general rule. That general rule, from the beginning of the 1700s, was clearly understood to exclude alike sworn and unsworn statements made without opportunity to the opponent for cross-examination. From that period the rule could be broadly stated in the words of a judge writing just two centuries later: ⁶⁰ “Declarations under oath do not differ in principle from declarations made without that sanction, and both come within the rule which excludes all hearsay evidence.”

One noteworthy consequence, having an important indirect influence on other parts of the law of evidence, was the addition of a new activity to the accepted functions of the counsel for an accused person. In 1695⁶¹ counsel had been allowed, in treason only, to make full defence for the accused; but until 1836⁶² no law allowed this in felony. Yet as soon as the right of cross-examination was established, it was indispensable that trained counsel should be permitted to conduct it, if it were to be effective.⁶³ And so in a short time this practice (without technical sanction) forced itself on the judges in criminal trials:

1883, Sir James Stephen, History of the Criminal Law, 1, 424: “The most remarkable change introduced into the practice of the courts [from the middle of the eighteenth century] was the process by which the old rule which deprived prisoners of the assistance of counsel in trials for felony was gradually relaxed. . . . In Barnard’s trial [in 1758] his counsel seem to have cross-examined all the witnesses fully. . . . On the other hand, at the trial of Lord Ferrers two years later, the prisoner was obliged to cross-examine the witnesses without the aid of counsel. . . . The change [of law by the statute of 1836] was less important than it may at first sight seem to have been.”

Indirectly, this resulted speedily in a new development, to a degree before unknown, of the art of interrogation and the various rules of evidence naturally most applicable on cross-examinations, — particularly, the impeachment of witnesses.⁶⁴ Furthermore, it resulted ultimately in the breakdown of the ⁵⁸ 1739, R. v. Westbeer, 1 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 12 (deceased accomplice’s information upon oath, admitted, though it was objected that the defendant “would lose the benefit which might otherwise have arisen from cross-examination”); 1762, Foster, Crown Law, 328 (the eminent author regards a deceased deponent’s examination before either coroner or justices as admissible, not discriminating as to the accused’s presence and cross-examination); 1789, R. v. Woodcock, 2 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 500 (justice of the peace’s examination of the victim of an assault, excluded); 1790, R. v. Eriswell, 3 T. R. 707 (justice of the peace’s examination of a pauper as to his settlement; a divided Court); 1801, R. v. Ferryfrystone, 2 East 54 (the excluding opinion of the preceding case confirmed).

⁵⁹ R. v. Eriswell, supra; and cases cited post, § 1374.

⁶⁰ 1889, Vann, J., in Lent v. Shear, 160 N. Y. 462, 55 N. E. 2.

⁶¹ St. 7 & 8 Wm. III, c. 3.

⁶² St. 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 114.

⁶³ By the prosecuting counsel it had of course already been employed, e. g. 1688, Seven Bishops’ Trial, 12 How. St. Tr. 183.

⁶⁴ As noted ante, § 8.

old fixed tradition that a criminal trial must be finished in one sitting. The necessary sifting of testimony by cross-examination took double and treble the time used of yore. Under vast inconvenience, the old tradition was preserved, until at last it gave way, from very exhaustion, to the new necessities.⁶⁵

What we find, then, in the development of the Hearsay rule is: (1) A period up to the middle 1500s, during which no objection is seen to the use by the jury of testimonial statements by persons not in court; (2) then a period of less than two centuries, during which a sense arises of the impropriety of such sources of information, and the notion gradually but definitely shapes itself, in the course of hard experience, that the reason of this impropriety is that all statements to be used as testimony should be made only where the person to be affected by them has an opportunity of probing their trustworthiness by means of cross-examination; (3) Finally, by the beginning of the 1700s, a general and settled acceptance of this rule as a fundamental part of the law.⁶⁶ Such, in brief, seems to have been the course of development of that most characteristic rule of the Anglo-American law of evidence,—a rule which may be esteemed, next to jury-trial, the greatest contribution of that eminently practical legal system to the world's jurisprudence of procedure.

§ 1365. Cross-Examination and Confrontation. The essential requirement of the Hearsay rule, as just examined, is that statements offered testimonially must be subjected to the test of Cross-examination. But a process commonly spoken of as Confrontation is also often referred to as an additional and accompanying test or as the sole test. Now Confrontation is, in its main aspect, merely another term for the test of Cross-examination. It is the preliminary step to securing the opportunity of cross-examination; and, so far as it is essential, this is only because cross-examination is essential. The right of confrontation is the right to the opportunity of cross-examination. Confrontation also involves a subordinate and incidental advantage, namely, the observation by the tribunal of the witness' demeanor on the stand, as a minor means of judging the value of his testimony. But this minor advantage is not regarded as essential, i. e. it may be dispensed with when it is not feasible. Cross-examination, however, the essential object of confrontation, remains indispensable. The details of this distinction are elsewhere to be examined (post, § 1395); it is enough to note here that, so far as confrontation is an indispensable element of the Hearsay rule, it is merely another name for the opportunity of cross-examination.

⁶⁵ "Mr. Erskine made his celebrated speech in Lord George Gordon's case, 1781, after midnight, and the verdict was given at 5.15 A. M., the Court having sat from 8 P. M. the previous day. In 1794, in Hardy's case, the Court sat from 8 till past midnight" (Sir H. B. Poland, A Century of Law Reform, 1901, p. 63); Until the trial of Hardy, in 1794, "there had not yet been an instance of a trial for high treason that had not been finished in a single day" (Campbell, Lives of the Chancellors, 5th ed., VIII. 307). Compare the citations post, § 1864.

⁶⁶ It therefore does not date back so far as our judges have sometimes fondly predicated,—"to Magna Charta, if not beyond it," for instance (Anderson v. State, 89 Ala. 12, 7 So. 429; 1890).

§ 1366. Division of Topics. An exposition of the Hearsay rule embraces four general topics :

I. The Hearsay rule's requirements, and their satisfaction; i. e. the detailed rules for application of the tests of Cross-examination and Confrontation ;

II. The kinds of assertions admitted as Exceptions to the Hearsay rule ;

III. Utterances, not being testimonial assertions, to which the Hearsay rule is not Applicable ;

IV. Sundry statements to which the Hearsay rule is Applicable.

SUB-TITLE I: THE HEARSAY RULE SATISFIED.

TOPIC I: BY CROSS-EXAMINATION.

CHAPTER XLIV.

IN GENERAL.

§ 1367. Cross-examination as a Distinctive and Vital Feature of our Law.

§ 1368. Theory and Art of Cross-examination.

§ 1369. Other Rules concerning Cross-examination, discriminated.

§ 1370. Cross-Examined Statements not an Exception to the Hearsay Rule.

§ 1371. Opportunity of Cross-examination, as equivalent to Actual Cross-examination.

§ 1372. Division of Topics.

1. Kind of Tribunal or Officer, as affecting Opportunity of Cross-examination.

§ 1373. General Principle; Sundry Tribunals (Commissioners of Land-Titles, Pilotage, Bankruptcy, etc.; Arbitrators).

§ 1374. Same: Testimony at a Coroner's Inquest.

§ 1375. Testimony before a Committing Magistrate or Justice of the Peace.

§ 1376. Depositions; Effect of Other Principles discriminated.

§ 1377. Same: General Principle; Opportunity of Cross-examination required.

§ 1378. Same: Notice and Sufficient Time; Attendance cures Defective Notice.

§ 1379. Same: Plural Depositions at the Same Time and Different Places.

§ 1380. Same: English and Canadian Statutes.

§ 1381. Same: U. S. Federal Statutes.

§ 1382. Same: U. S. State Statutes.

§ 1383. Same: Depositions in Perpetuum Memoriam.

§ 1384. Affidavits; Testimony of King or Ambassador.

§ 1385. Ex parte Expert Investigations; Preliminary Rulings on Voir Dire; Testimony by an Opponent.

2. Issues and Parties, as affecting Opportunity of Cross-examination.

§ 1386. General Principle; Issue and Parties must have been Substantially the Same.

§ 1387. Issue the Same.

§ 1388. Parties or Privies the Same.

§ 1389. Deposition used by Either Party; Opponent's Use of a Deposition taken but not read.

3. Conduct of the Cross-examination itself, as affecting Opportunity of Cross-examination.

§ 1390. Failure of Cross-examination through the Witness' Illness or Death.

§ 1391. Failure of Cross-examination through the Witness' Refusal to Answer or the Fault of the Party offering him.

§ 1392. Non-Responsive Answers; General or "Sweeping" Interrogatories.

§ 1393. Sundry Insufficiencies of Cross-examination.

§ 1367. Cross-examination as a Distinctive and Vital Feature of our Law.

For two centuries past, the policy of the Anglo-American system of evidence has been to regard the necessity of testing by cross-examination as a vital feature of the law. The belief that no safeguard for testing the value of human statements is comparable to that furnished by cross-examination, and the conviction that no statement (unless by special exception) should be used as testimony until it has been probed and sublimated by that test, has found increasing strength in lengthening experience. Not even the abuses and the puerilities which are so often found associated with cross-examination have availed to overbalance its value. It may be that in more than one sense it takes the place in our system which torture occupied in the mediæval system of the civilians. Nevertheless, it is beyond any doubt the greatest legal engine ever invented for the discovery of truth. However difficult it may be for the layman or the foreign jurist to appreciate this its wonderful power, there has probably never been a moment's doubt upon this point in the mind of a lawyer of experience. "You can do anything," said Wendell Phillips, "with a bayonet — except sit upon it." A lawyer can do anything with a cross-examination, — if he is skilful enough not to impale his own cause upon it. He may, it is true, do more than he ought to do; he may "make the worse appear the better reason, to perplex and dash maturest counsels," — may make the truth appear like falsehood. But this abuse of its power is able to be remedied by proper control. The fact of this unique and irresistible power remains, and is the reason for our faith in its merits. If we omit political considerations of broader range, cross-examination, not trial by jury, is the great and permanent contribution of the Anglo-American system of law to improved methods of trial-procedure.¹ Striking illustrations of its power to expose inaccuracies and falsehoods are plentiful in our records;² and it is apparent enough, in some of the great failures of justice in Continental trials, that they could not have occurred under the practice of effective cross-examination.³ The praise of cross-examination and its efficacy as a fundamental test of truth have often been the subject of comment and exposition by our judges and jurists:

Ante 1680, Sir Matthew Hale, L. C. J., in his History of the Common Law, c. 12: "The excellency [in English law], of this open course of evidence to the jury in presence of the judge, jury, parties, and council, and even of the adverse witnesses, appears in these particulars: . . . 3dly, That by this course of personal and open examination, there is opportunity for all persons concerned, viz. the judge, or any of the jury, or parties, or their council or attornies, to propound occasional questions, which beats and bolts out the truth much better than when the witness only delivers a formal series of his knowledge without being interrogated."

1806, Mr. W. D. Evans, Notes to Pothier, II, 198: "Whoever has had an opportunity of attending courts of judicature and also of seeing the private examinations which are taken upon many of the occasions above alluded to, must be convinced of the great danger of suffering any public or private interests to be affected by such examinations. Wherever the narration of a witness may be the subject of objection on account of his veracity, the failure which justice must experience from the want of an opportunity of trying the fact by a minute examination of circumstances open to contradiction, by fixing the witness to time and place and all other topics not comprised in a general sweeping account, will be manifest to the most cursory observers. . . . But even when all suspicion of veracity is supposed to be out of the question, how very unsatisfactory is the ex parte account of a witness taken under circumstances in which the adverse party had not a fair opportunity of cross-examination. . . . The decision of the event by the materiality of facts disclosed on cross-examination is a matter of perpetual occurrence. . . . The experience of every lawyer must furnish many instances of a set of cut-and-dried depositions being unable to stand the test of an open cross-examination."

1811, Bayley, J., in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 405: "Whoever has attended to

¹ Mr. Bentham affirms this in the quotation post. Such also was the pronouncement of an eminent member of the Tokyo Bar, Mr. Masujima, who had entered the Bar at the Middle Temple, London, and had enjoyed an opportunity of comparing the methods there learned with those of his brethren who had been trained in France and Germany. In Continental practice, the examination of witnesses is in theory conducted by or through the judge, by repetition of questions, and in practice cross-examination is so casual or so feeble as to be a negligible quantity.

² See ante, §§ 782, 990-996, 1005-1006, 1260, post., § 1368, for examples.

³ For example, in some of the trials set out in the Appendix to Stephen's History of the Criminal Law, vol. I.

Conversely, in the Dreyfus trial (1899), the exposure of the prosecution's particular frauds was due almost entirely to M. Labori's cross-examination.

the examination, the cross-examination, and the re-examination of witnesses, and has observed what a very different shape their story appears to take in each of these stages, will at once see how extremely dangerous it is to act on the ex parte statement of any witness and still more of a witness brought forward under the influence of a party interested. In this case A., whose legitimacy is supposed to be in issue, has put to J. S. every question he thought fit, and has therefore obtained from him probably not the whole that J. S. knows upon the subject, but all that will benefit A. ; while B., against whom this deposition is to be read, has had no opportunity of proposing a single question to J. S., either to put his veracity to the test, or to bring out any other matter within the knowledge of J. S. which would make in his favor. . . . There may be various other considerations in point of interest to influence the father, which if exhibited by cross-examination might in a great degree impeach, if not completely destroy, the effect of the evidence he has given. So it might turn out on cross-examination that he had made other contrary declarations, perhaps equally solemn as those as to which he has been asked, and that his conduct . . . had been such as to throw an entire discredit on his present asseverations."

1824, Mr. Thomas Starkie, Evidence I, 96, 129: "The power given to the party against whom evidence is offered of cross-examining the witness upon whose authority the evidence depends constitutes a strong test of both the ability and the willingness of the witness to declare the truth. By this means the opportunity which the witness had of ascertaining the fact to which he testifies, his ability to acquire the requisite knowledge, his powers of memory, his situation with respect to the parties, his motives, are all severally scrutinized and examined. Under such circumstances it must be very difficult for a witness to interweave a false account so nicely with the truth as to make it consist and agree with all the other circumstances of the case. . . . However artful the fabrication of the falsehood may be, it cannot embrace all the circumstances to which the cross-examination may be extended; the fraud is therefore open to detection for want of consistency between that which has been fabricated and that which the witness must either represent according to the truth, for want of previous preparation, or misrepresent according to his own immediate invention. . . . The power and liberty to cross-examine is one of the principal tests which the law has devised for the ascertainment of truth, and is certainly a most efficacious test."

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. II, c. IX, and b. III, c. XX: "In the character of a security for the correctness and completeness of testimony, so obvious is the utility and importance of the faculty and practice of interrogation that the mention of it in this view might well be deemed superfluous. . . . By interrogations thus pointed, such a security for completeness is afforded as can never be afforded by any general engagement which can be included in the terms of an oath or other formula. . . . By interrogation, and not without, is the improbity of a deponent driven out of all its holds. . . . The best possible mode of extracting testimony—the mode which a considerate master of a family would employ when sitting in judgment on the conduct of a servant or a child—in a word, the mode by oral interrogation and counter-interrogation, is a production of English growth. Among those who in its native country are so cordial in their admiration of this mode of trial [by jury], there are not twenty perhaps who at this moment are aware that, in contradistinction to Roman jurisprudence, the mode of extracting evidence on this occasion is as peculiar to English procedure as the constitution of the court. The peculiarity of the practice called in England cross-examination, the complete absence of it in every system of procedure grounded upon the Roman (with the single exception of the partial and narrow use made of it in the case of confrontation), is a fact unnoticed till now in any book, but which will be as conclusively as concisely ascertained at any time by the impossibility of finding a word to render it by in any other language. . . . No political institution was ever kept more completely hidden from general observation. All mouths are open in praise of trial by jury; and this is the mode of extraction employed on a trial by jury. It has been observed that somehow or other the ends of justice were more effectually accomplished in that sort of court of which the tribunal called a jury was one feature, and the use of this mode of extracting evidence another; but to which of them the effect was principally to be ascribed is a question that seems never to have presented itself. The feature which consists in the composition of the court seems to have engrossed all the praise of it. 'Trial by jury! Ever blessed and sacred trial by jury! Juries for ever!' is the cry; not 'Trial by oral and cross-examined evidence!' It is, however, to this comparatively neglected feature that that most popular of all judicial institutions would be found to be indebted for the least questionable and most extensively efficient, if not the most important of its real merits."⁴

1806, Livingston, Sen., in Jackson v. Kniffen, 2 John. 35 (rejecting a testator's hearsay declarations): "Besides the danger of tampering with a person who may be known to have made a will, . . . the right of cross-examining is invaluable and not to be broken in upon. How often is testimony which, when first delivered, appears conclusive and irrefragable, entirely frittered away by this process,—so much so, that a witness well sifted not unfrequently proves more against than in favor of the party that produces him. If one eye-witness be worth more than ten hearsay witnesses, a still higher value must be set on proofs made in presence of both parties, compared with ex parte declarations. In one way, the whole truth comes out; in the other, no more than it may suit the witness or his friends to have disclosed. The not being under oath, although a serious objection, is not with me the greatest, because, admitting everything said to be true, so long as it is in the absence of one and at the solicitation of the other party, it should go for nothing. In what way the will was extorted, what menaces were used, why he was afraid of being murdered, . . . with many other inquiries which a public examination might have suggested, would have afforded the jury a much fairer means of arriving at the truth."

1844, Richardson, J., in State v. Campbell, 1 Rich. L. 126: "The defendant's cross-examination expresses well the searching process and practical test furnished and intended by this rule of law. . . . Experience has proved that it is, of all others, the most effective, the most satisfactory, and the most indispensable test of the evidence narrated on the witness' stand. . . . I know of no disagreement, among the expounders of evidence, upon the importance of cross-examination."

1846, Nisbet, J., in McCloskey v. Leadbetter, 1 Ga. 551, 555: "I have been thus particular in planting the power of cross-examination upon a foundation laid in authority, because of the sacred character of that right. The power of cross-examination is the most efficacious test which the law has devised for the discovery of truth. Without it, viva voce examinations, and more particularly examinations by commission, would be very unsafe; the ingenious witness, or still more ingenious examiner-in-chief, might easily evade the truth and at the same time avoid the pains and penalties of perjury. The right to be confronted with the witness, and to sift the truth out of the mingled mass of ignorance, prejudice, passion, and interest, in which it is very often hid, is among the very strongest bulwarks of justice."

1881, Ruffin, J., in State v. Morris, 84 N. C. 764: "All trials proceed upon the idea that some confidence is due to human testimony, and that this confidence grows and becomes more steadfast in proportion as the witness has been subjected to a close and searching cross-examination; and this because it is supposed that such an examination will expose any fallacy that may exist in the statement of the witness, or any bias that might operate to make him conceal the truth; and trials are appreciated in proportion as they furnish the opportunities for such critical examinations."⁵

⁴ The Common Law Practice Commissioners of 1853—a body including the eminent names of Jervis, Cockburn, Martin, Bramwell, Willes—declared "the circumstances which give to the system of English procedure its peculiar and characteristic merits" to be "viva voce

interrogation, cross-examination, publicity, examination in the presence of the tribunal."

⁵ On the other hand, the special weakness of chancery proceedings lay in its obstacles to an effective cross-examination: 1827, Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. III, c. 16

§ 1368. Theory and Art of Cross-examination. That the process of cross-examination is thus invaluable, the lawyer well knows. But why is it invaluable? Just what does it do, and how? What is the theory of its efficiency? Upon this we commonly reflect but little. Nevertheless, conscious of its power, we must also be conscious of the reasons for its power, if it is to be used intelligently and effectively. Those reasons can best be seen by contrasting cross-examination, as a stage or mode of presenting evidence, with the two other and alternative modes which co-exist with it. Cross-examination by an opponent is to be contrasted, on the one hand, with proof by direct examination of the same witness by the proponent, and on the other hand, with proof by other witnesses called by the opponent. What will cross-examination succeed in doing, which either of these modes might fail to do?

I. The Theory of Cross-examination. 1. Proof by direct examination of the same witness, contrasted. The fundamental feature is that a witness, on his direct examination, discloses but a part of the necessary facts. That which remains suppressed or undeveloped may be of two sorts, (a) the remaining and qualifying circumstances of the subject of testimony, as known to the witness, and (b) the facts which diminish and impeach the personal trustworthiness of the witness. (a) The remaining and qualifying circumstances of the subject of testimony will probably remain suppressed or undisclosed, not merely because the witness frequently is a partisan, but also and chiefly because his testimony is commonly given only by way of answers to specific interrogatories (ante, §§ 768, 785), and the counsel producing him will usually ask for nothing but the facts favorable to his party. If nothing more were done to unveil all the facts known to this witness, his testimony (for all that we could surmise) might present half-truths only. Some one must probe for the possible (and usual) remainder. The best person to do this is the one most vitally interested, namely, the opponent.¹ Cross-examination, then, i. e. further examination by the opponent, has for its first utility the extraction of the remaining qualifying circumstances, if any, known to the witness, but hitherto undisclosed by him.² (b) The facts which diminish and impeach the personal trustworthiness or credit of the witness will also, in every likelihood, have remained undisclosed on the direct examination. These it is the further function of the opponent's examination to extract. Some of them, no doubt, could be as well or sometimes better proved by other witnesses.³ But many of them can be obtained only from the witness himself,—particularly those which concern his personal conduct (Bowring's ed. vol. VI, p. 491); 1837, Story, J., in Smith v. Burnham, 2 Sumn. 612, 623; 1877, Langdell, Equity Pleading, § 56 ("It is not surprising therefore that the mode of taking testimony in equity fell into disrepute and finally broke down"); 1901, Mr. Augustine Birrell, A Century of Law Reform, p. 189; Mr. W. Blake Odgers, ib. 222 ("Cross-examination under such conditions became a farce"); and the citations post, § 1885.

¹ It is at this point that the Continental system breaks down, for the cross-interrogation is there chiefly by the judge, who has neither the strong interest nor the full knowledge that are required.

² Examples are given, infra, par. II.

³ At this point the contrast infra, par. 2, becomes important.

and his sources of knowledge for the case in hand. To this extent, again, cross-examination is vital, i. e. it does what must be done and what nothing else can do.⁴

2. Proof by other witnesses called by the opponent, contrasted. But so far as the rules of law and the circumstances of the case would permit the same facts, obtainable on cross-examination, to be equally proved by other witnesses cognizant of them, why not use the latter mode? The advantages secured by cross-examination are here mainly dramatic; but they are only less important (in the long run) than the foregoing, and they may be (in individual cases) even more emphatic. (a) The first is that the cross-examination immediately succeeds in time the direct examination. In this way the modification or the discredit produced by the facts extracted is more readily perceived by the tribunal. No interval of time elapses, to diminish or to conceal their force. Proving the same facts by new witnesses, after others of the proponent have intervened, might lose this benefit, and the counsel's argument at the close might not be able to replace it. (b) But, chiefly, the advantage is that the cross-examined witness supplies his own refutation. If qualifying or discrediting answers are extracted from him, they are the more readily believed. No other witness' credit intervenes to add a contingency of mistake. If we believed the answers on the direct examination, we must also believe the answers on cross-examination. Moreover, the dramatic contrast of the former and the latter may multiply and even exaggerate the abstract probative effect of the facts extracted. The difference between getting the same fact from other witnesses and from cross-examination is the difference between slow-burning sulphurous gunpowder and quick-flashing dynamite; each does its appointed work, but the one bursts along the weakest line only, the other rends in all directions.⁵—Cross-examination, then, will do things that cannot be done by questioning other witnesses.

What are the lessons to be drawn from this, the nature of cross-examination and its workings, to the technical use of it? The detailed rules and hints of experience for the art of successful cross-examination are without the present purview; for they involve also many considerations of human character rather than of rules of law.⁶ But at least the conclusions that depend upon the evidential theory of cross-examination may be noticed:

II. The Art of Cross-examination. Since the direct examination may not have disclosed all the remaining and qualifying circumstances of the ⁴ The foregoing two features have been analyzed and emphasized in the following work: 1885, Mr. J. C. Reed, Conduct of a Lawsuit, 2d ed., 280 ("There are at bottom but two kinds of cross-examination,—the one intended to elicit friendly evidence, . . . to make the witness give a complete narrative, if what has been kept back is favorable to your side, . . . and the other, to show the unreliability of the witness"; in the ensuing pages of the above work, this judicious and admirable author develops in detail these two aspects, from the point of view of the tactical art).

The underlying principle of this was eloquently stated by Mr. Evarts, in his epigram "Truth, if truth, will match all round, with material facts, with moral qualities," in the notable passage on the function of cross-examination, beginning "Truth comports with every fact" (Tiltou v. Beecher, Official Report, III, 674).

⁵ The quotations from Pigott's cross-examination and Judge Daly's anecdote, infra, illustrate this principle.

⁶ For a collection of references to writers on the art of cross-examination, see ante, § 768.

issue, as known to the witness, and may also have left unrevealed the deficiencies of his knowledge, the suspicions of his motives, and other elements of discredit (supra, par. 1, a and b), it remains for the cross-examiner to evoke these. But what is he about to evoke? What will be the complexion of these facts when extracted? They may be what the cross-examiner hopes. And yet they may not be. In the long run, there will be a large proportion of such facts. But for a given witness it is often otherwise. The cross-examiner may already know what is there waiting for disclosure. But if he does not, he is faced by a contingency. He may extract the most confirming circumstances for the proponent's own case, which have somehow been left unmentioned. He may demonstrate that the credit of the witness is greater, not less, than was supposed. The great axiom, then, of the art of cross-examination, as dependent on the theory, is that it is a contingency whether the facts that will actually be extracted will be favorable or unfavorable to the cross-examiner's purposes. It is here that the art (that is, the technical skill) of cross-examination enters. On this hang all the lesser rules of the art. Hence it is that it must call to its aid so many other elements than mere knowledge of law. Experience of human nature, judgment of chances, knowledge of the case, tact of manner, — all these things, and more, have to do with the art. Yet the theory of the process underlies and influences at every point. To cross-examine, or not to cross-examine, — that is the fundamental question, which springs from the essential nature of the process and arises anew for every part of every witness' testimony. The greatest cross-examiners have always stated this as the ultimate problem.

III. Illustrations of the theory and the art. The theory and the art of cross-examination, as thus outlined, are amply illustrated in the annals of recorded trials. Of these, a few examples, of manageable compass, must here suffice. With reference to the foregoing analysis (par. 1, a and b, supra), the examples may be grouped under four heads:⁷

1, a. Examples of the utility of a cross-examination, in bringing out desirable facts of the case, modifying the direct examination or otherwise adding to the cross-examiner's own case:

1856, Mr. David Paul Brown, in "The Forum," II, 456 (this celebrated Pennsylvanian advocate is describing a case of alleged infanticide by poison, administered by its mother, whose seducer had deserted her): "It was shown that a day or two before the death of her infant, the mother had sent for half-an-ounce of arsenic to a grocer's. That after the death the arsenic was taken to the grocer's, and was weighed, and had lost twenty-four grains in its weight. This circumstance, together with the opinion of the chemist, presented a strong case. Neither was sufficient in itself, but together they were dangerous. Of course, the cross-examination as to the weight was very rigid and severe. Upon this particular point it ran thus: 'When the arsenic was purchased, how did you weigh it?' 'I weighed it by shot.' 'How many shot?' 'Six.' 'Of what description?' 'No. 8.' 'When it was returned, did you weigh it in the same scales?' 'Yes.' 'Did you weigh it with the same shot?' 'I weighed it with shot of the same number — for I had no other number.' 'How much less did it weigh?' 'Twenty-four grains less.' It was plain that this testimony bore hard upon the prisoner—but at this stage of the case the Court adjourned. Immediately my colleague (Mr. Boyd) and myself visited the stores of all the grocers, and took from various uncut bags of No. 8, the requisite number of shot, subjected them to weight in the most accurate scales, and found that the same number of these different parcels of shot varied more in weight than the difference referred to as detected in the arsenic at the time of its return. The shot—the grocers—the apothecary—the scales—were all brought before the Court. They clearly established the facts stated, and enabled us fairly to contend that there had been no portion of the arsenic used,—which argument, aided by the excellent character of the prisoner, proved entirely successful, and after a painful and prolonged trial, she was acquitted; so that her life may be said to have been saved by a shot."

⁷ Almost all of these, under 1, a and b, infra. Besides the ensuing examples, others will be found quoted elsewhere under other principles (ante, §§ 782, 990-996, 1005-1006, 1260).
2, a and b, supra, and no grouping is necessary.

1885, Mr. John C. Reed, Conduct of a Lawsuit, § 400: "When your evidence is but slight and that of the other side is very strong, you may be reckless in spurring his witnesses to make a complete statement. Your case is so bad that any change in it may be for the better. We add an entertaining and apt illustration. Some time ago the writer while waiting in court watched the trial of a case where the plaintiff sought to recover damages for a breach of warranty. The defendant had sold him a horse with an express warranty that he was sound and kind and free from all 'outs.' The next day the plaintiff noticed that a shoe was loose, and he undertook to drive him to a blacksmith's shop to have him shod, when the horse exhibited such violent reluctance that he was obliged to abandon the attempt. Repeated efforts made it evident that he never would be shod willingly, and therefore he was obliged to sell him. The defendant called two witnesses. The first, an honest, clean-looking man, testified that he was a blacksmith, that he knew the horse in question perfectly well, and he had shod him about the time referred to in the plaintiff's testimony. 'Did you have any difficulty in shoeing him?' asked the defendant's counsel. 'Not the least. He stood perfectly quiet. Never had a horse stand quieter.' The other, a venerable-looking man, with a clear, blue eye, testified that he had owned the horse and that he was perfectly kind. 'Did you ever have any trouble about getting him into a blacksmith's shop?' 'Well, sir, I don't remember that I ever had occasion to carry him to a blacksmith's shop while I owned him.' The plaintiff's counsel evidently thought that cross-examination would only develop this unpleasant testimony more strongly, so he let the witnesses go. The jury found for the defendant. The next morning, as the writer was sitting in court waiting for a verdict, a man behind him, whom he recognized as the blacksmith, leaned forward and said, 'You heard that horse case tried yesterday, did n't you? Well, that fellow who tried the case for the plaintiff did n't know how to cross-examine worth a cent. I told him that the horse stood perfectly quiet while I shod him; and so he did. I did n't tell him that I had to hold him by the nose with a pair of pincers to make him stand. The old man said he never took him to a blacksmith's shop while he had him. No more he did. He had to take him out into an open lot and cast him before he could shoe him.' Of course the plaintiff's counsel should have been more searching in the examination, where he could not possibly have made his own case worse."

1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 15th day, Times' Rep., pt. 3, p. 125; the Irish Land League was charged with complicity in crime and agrarian outrage; its leaders did not deny the fact of outrages, boycotts, and the like, but did deny that the Land League had any share in them, and claimed that sundry local secret societies and individual miscreants were really responsible. James Burke testified; Direct examination: "I am a blacksmith. . . . There was a falling off in my customers. Previously to that, I had received a letter which threatened my life if I shod Birmingham's horses. I gave the letter to the police. I went before the League at Kinvarra." Q. "What for?" A. "I went to look for mercy; I was suffering from boycotting. . . . They told me it was not from there I was boycotted—it was not from the League. Afterwards I subscribed to the League, and paid 1s. Customers returned again and I have had no trouble since."

Cross-examination: "When they told me that it was not the League that was boycotting me, I believed them. The shilling I paid was the ordinary subscription." . . . Q. "It was not the League who boycotted you?" A. "No." Q. "Do you know who it was?" A. "Some blackguards, I think." Q. "There were no blackguards in the League, I hope?" A. "Not that I know of." Q. "All respectable people?" A. "Yes, I believe so."⁸

1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 37th and 43d days, Times' Rep., pt. 10, pp. 110, 113, 123, pt. 11, p. 158; a police-superintendent came to testify that at the meetings of the local Land Leagues speeches were habitually made denouncing certain persons, and that outrages upon them followed shortly, the League thus being charged with direct incitement of outrage; this witness had kept a record of the speeches and the ensuing outrages; "every meeting that occurs in the division is reported to me; . . . my record gives a summary of the language used;" and on cross-examination by Sir C. Russell, who asked him to go through the various instances "exhaustively," the witness was led through a number of cases of the sort he alleged; the connection between speech and outrage being sometimes made out by him; on a subsequent day, he was cross-examined by Mr. Davitt as follows, so as to show the slender basis for the witness' assertion of the criminal influence of the League's speeches; Q. "Your experiences of the League cover the counties of Wexford, Carlow, Kilkenny, Tipperary, Waterford — six counties altogether, I believe?" A. "No, eight counties." Q. "And this experience extends over a period of eight years?" A. "Not of all the counties; in some cases over a lesser period." Q. "About how many branches of the League are there in each of these counties?" A. "I have not the return with me. . . . I should say there are branches of the League in every parish." Q. "Then you would say there would be at least 50 branches in each county?" A. "At least that." Q. "Three hundred branches altogether in six counties?" A. "Yes." Q. "These branches meet weekly, I believe?" . . . A. "I should say practically they meet once a fortnight." Q. "That would represent a very large number of meetings of each branch every year; and for the total number of branches quite an extraordinary number of meetings — 6,000 during the year; multiply that by eight years, we have 48,000 meetings. Now at each of these meetings, I understand, a chairman presides, and if there is a resolution to be proposed it is spoken to by two speakers. That would be three speeches for each meeting?" A. "I only know the procedure from what I see in the papers." Q. "I believe that is the rule. That would be 144,000 speeches in eight years, delivered in branches of the League in these counties of which you have experience of the League and its working. About how many outrages, roughly speaking, did you particularize to Sir C. Russell yesterday as resulting directly from speeches of the Land League?" A. "I gave instances of about two dozen." Q. "About 24. Dividing 24 into 144,000, that would give a very small number of outrages for eight years, would it not?" A. "Yes."⁹

⁸ So also the examination of David Freeley, ib. 28th day, pt. 8, p. 13.

⁹ Compare also these: 1843, R. v. O'Connell, 5 St. Tr. N. s. 1, 252 (cross-examination by Mr. Hatchell); 1875, Tilton v. Beecher, N. Y., "Official" Report, II, 116 (cross-examination of Mr. R. E. Holmes, as to the Winsted scandal, by Mr. Fullerton); II, 412 (cross-examination of Mr. J. L. Gay, by Mr. Morris). The following anecdote perhaps equals any instance ever chronicled: "A certain ex-Governor had on one occasion a client who was indicted for maiming, the specific charge being that the defendant had bitten off the ear of the prosecutor. The case came on for trial and the outcome of it was not very promising for the defendant. While the defence was still being adduced, the defendant leaned over and whispered in the ear of his attorney, saying, 'Call Jack Deans; he was there; he saw the whole thing.' Thereupon in a short while Jack Deans was duly called and put upon the witness stand in behalf of the defendant. 'Now, Mr. Deans,' said the ex-Governor, after some preliminary questions, 'you say that you know the defendant and that you were present at the time of the alleged assault by him on the prosecutor. Tell us what you saw of that occurrence.' 'Well, I was coming 'long the road,' said the witness, 'and I seen 'em gitting up out of the dirt; but I did n't see the defendant hit the prosecutor, and I did n't see him kick him, and I did n't see him bite his ear off.' 'You were in plain view of the parties and you say you did not see any of these things?' asked the ex-Governor, with an expanding

1, a'. Examples of the inutility of a cross-examination, in bringing out undesirable facts of the case, strengthening the direct examination :

1878, Mr. W. V. N. Bay, Bench and Bar of Missouri, 151 : " In Parker's reminiscences of Rufus Choate is related a story of the cross-examination of a sailor who had turned State's evidence, and was relating the story of a theft of money from the ship while in a distant port. The witness declared that though he had taken the money, it was the defendant, the great advocate's client, that had instigated the theft. ' What did he say to you ? ' asked Choate. ' Why, he told us, ' replied the witness, ' that there was a man in Boston, named Choate, who would get us off even if they caught us with the money in our boots ! ' This terrible thrust produced an uproar of laughter in the courtroom. Yet it is related that Choate's countenance remained absolutely immovable."¹⁰

1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 72d day, Times' Rep., pt. 20, pp. 145, 247 ; the Irish Land League was charged with collecting funds to be used for supporting crime and outrage and armed rebellion, and Mr. Parnell was under cross-examination as to the purpose for which he collected money during his tour in America ; he admitted accepting money from all sources, including those " physical force " adherents, who favored dynamite-violence and the like, but claimed that he received it for the sole purpose of furthering the peaceable and lawful methods of the Land League ; Sir Richard Webster, the attorney-general, in cross-examining, brought up the following significant incident, but by pressing it too far gave opportunity for the witness wholly to explain away and nullify its force ; Q. " Do you remember the celebrated occasion at Troy, when a gentleman came forward and offered you ' five dollars for bread and twenty dollars for lead ' ? " A. " Yes." Q. " You did not think it necessary to refuse the twenty dollars for lead ? " A. " I was very glad to get the money, but not for lead." Q. " In your presence, then, at Troy, a man offered five dollars for bread and twenty for lead ? " A. " That was the expression used."¹¹ Q. " You understood that to mean that some one in the audience was ready to subscribe five dollars for charity and twenty dollars for fighting purposes ? " A. " Not a bit of it. I understood that he was ready to subscribe five dollars to our charitable fund and twenty dollars in support of the Land League movement." Q. " Then did you think it a fair description of your agitation to call it ' lead ' ? " A. " No, I did not think it was." Q. " Why do you think the gentleman meant the Land League by ' lead ' ? " A. " Because if he had not he would not have given the money to me." Q. " Do you represent that a public offer of twenty dollars for lead in support of your agitation and an acceptance of the sum on your side would be understood as a repudiation of physical force opinions ? " A. " At the beginning of my meetings in America I had declared that I would not receive one cent for arms or for any unconstitutional or illegal movement. . . . Having made that declaration at the outset of my tour, and having said subsequently nothing inconsistent with that declaration, I consider that no man in his senses would have offered me twenty dollars believing that the money would be used for the very purposes which I had repudiated." . . . Q. " Now, do you not know that that speech about lead was repeatedly quoted in Ireland, and that the construction put upon it was that the subscription was for physical force matters ? " A. " By your side it was quoted, I know."

chest. ' Yes, ' said the witness. Then the prosecuting attorney took a hand, and cross-examined. ' Now, Mr. Deans, ' said he, ' you have told the Governor all that you did not see of this assault ; please tell me what you did see of it. ' ' Well, ' said the witness, squirming in his chair and hesitating a long time before proceeding, ' it's so ; I didn't see the defendant bite off the prosecutor's ear. But just as I got abreast of him I seen him spit the ear out of his mouth ! ' That was enough for the prosecution and a great deal more than enough for the ex-Governor" (13 Green Bag 423). The anecdote of the old gentleman's valet, quoted post, § 2094, is also an excellent illustration of the present principle.

¹⁰ This anecdote is related in Brown's Life of Choate, 3d ed. 451, but not so pointedly. Compare the following: 1875, Tilton v. Beecher, N. Y., " Official " Report, II, 236 (cross-examination of Mr. Oliver Johnson, by Mr. Fullerton) ; II, 706 (cross-examination of Mr. James Freeland, by Mr. Fullerton) ; II, 307 (cross-examination of Mr. Samuel Wilkeson, by Mr. Beach).

¹¹ Here the cross-examiner might well have stopped.

Q. "What do you mean by my side?" A. "The Tory party." . . . Q. "Did not Boyton, the Land League organizer, quote the speech as meaning what I have indicated?" A. "I do not know that he did." Q. "Do you not know that it has been proved already in this case?" A. "I do not. The only use made of the speech in that sense was when Mr. O'Hanlon tried to break up our meeting in the Rotunda. He wrote a letter to a newspaper next day wanting to know what I had done with these twenty dollars." Q. "And suggesting that the money ought to have gone to the physical force party for the purchase of lead?" A. "Yes; he thought that I was misappropriating it."¹²

1, b. Examples of the utility of a cross-examination, in bringing out, from the witness himself, facts to lessen his credit.

1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 78th day, Times' Rep., pt. 21, pp. 225, 230, 231; the Land League having been charged with terrorizing and intimidation of the people at large, a Catholic priest who was president of one of the branches was examined for the defence as to the methods of the League; Direct examination: Q. "Was any kind of pressure or intimidation exercised to your knowledge to make people join the League?" A. "No; things were done in a very regular way. A notice was posted up asking the people to come and join the League. Those who wished to do so then came and paid their subscriptions. There was no house-to-house-visit, there was no pressure whatever; it was perfectly free." . . . Cross-examined by Mr. Murphy. Q. "Nothing particular was done, I understand you to say, to induce people to join the Land League?" A. "Nothing, in my district." Q. "Are you quite certain?" A. "Quite certain." . . . Q. "I will call your attention to some of your own speeches. On the 12th of December, 1880, speaking at Craughwell, you say, 'I tell you that the wretch who has not joined the League, that that man deserves to go down to the cold, dead damnation of disgrace.' That is pretty strong?" A. "Yes." Q. "Did you use those words?" A. "It is possible." Q. "Did you use them?" A. "I may have." Q. "Have you any doubt about it?" A. "I never saw it in print." Q. "Did you use that language?" A. "Very likely I did." Q. "Do you regard that as an invitation to join the League voluntarily or involuntarily?" A. "Well, it does not involve any intimidation." . . . Q. "'To go down to the cold, dead damnation of disgrace?'" A. "Well, it is rather a strong expression, I admit." Q. "Did you believe that that was the proper fate for anyone who did not join the League?" A. "Well, I suppose I used it in order to induce them to join." Q. "Did you use the expression in order to frighten the people?" A. "I suppose it was in order to induce them to join the League."

1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 55th day, Times' Rep., pt. 14, p. 252; certain letters, purporting to be Mr. Parnell's, and approving the Phoenix Park assassinations, had been sold to the London "Times" by one Richard Pigott, an Irish editor and informer; these letters had been in fact fabricated by Pigott himself, but until he came under Sir Charles Russell's cross-examination the case for the letters' genuineness was strong; the word "hesitency" occurred in one of the letters and this with other words had been written down by Pigott at the opening of his cross-examination; Q. "Yesterday you were good enough to write down certain words on a piece of paper, and among them was the word 'hesitancy.' Is that a word you are accustomed to use?" A. "I have used it." Q. "Did you notice that you spelt it as it is not ordinarily spelt?" A. "Yes, I fancy I made a mistake in the spelling." Q. "What was it?" A. "I think it was an 'a' instead of an 'e,' or vice versa; I am not sure which." Q. "You cannot say what was the mistake, but you have a general consciousness that there was something wrong?" A. "Yes." Q. "I will tell you what was wrong according to the received spelling. You spelt it with an 'e' instead of an 'a.' You spelt it thus—'hesitency.' That is not the received way of spelling it?" A. "I believe not." Q. "Have you noticed the fact that the writer of the body of the letter of the 9th of January, 1882—

¹² It is just to add that on the next day the cross-examiner returned to the subject with success.

the alleged forged letter — spells it in the same way?" A. "I heard that remark made long since, and my explanation of my misspelling is that having that in my mind I got into the habit of spelling it wrong." Sir C. Russell. "Did your Lordships catch that last answer?" The President. "Oh, yes." Q. "You say that your attention was called to the fact a long time ago that in the alleged forged letter 'hesitancy' was misspelt, and you fancy that, your attention having been called to the misspelling, you so got into the habit of spelling it in that way?" A. "I suppose so; I heard so much discussion about it. I never met anybody who spelt every word correctly, scarcely. (Laughter)." Q. "It had got into your brain?" A. "Yes, somehow or other." Q. "Who called your attention to it?" A. "Several people; it was a matter of general remark." Q. "Do you think that but for the fact of your attention being drawn to the way in which it had been spelt you would probably have spelt it rightly?" A. "Yes." Q. "You know that that [above] letter purports to be dated the 9th of January, 1882; you have already told me that this letter (handing [another] letter to witness) is yours?" A. "Yes, that is right; that is my letter." Q. "But you did not become possessed of this valuable [Parnell] letter, dated January 9, 1882, until the summer of 1886; and this letter [of yours] is prior to that. The wrong spelling had not got into your head then?" A. "No. I say that spelling is not my strong point." Q. "Did you notice that in this letter you spell 'hesitancy' in the same way?" A. "No, I did not." . . . Q. "How do you account for that? Your brain was not injuriously affected at that time?" A. "I cannot account for it." Q. "At all events you cannot account for it by that disturbance of your brain?" A. "No."¹³

1, b'. Examples of the inutility of a cross-examination, in bringing out facts which strengthen the witness' credit, or answers which otherwise give him a personal victory:

1840, Law and Lawyers, I, 180: "Jeffreys, the afterwards notorious chief justice and chancellor, was retained in a trial in the course of which he had to cross-examine a sturdy countryman clad in the habiliments of the laborer. Finding the evidence of this witness telling against his client, Jeffreys determined to disconcert him. So he exclaimed in his own bluff manner: 'You fellow in the leathern doublet, what have you been paid for swearing?' The man looked steadily at him, and replied: 'Truly, sir, if you have no more for lying than I have for swearing, you might wear a leathern doublet as well as I.'¹⁴

1869, Saurin v. Starr, as reported in O'Brien's Life of Lord Russell, 86 (a Sister of Mercy, being expelled for transgression of the rules of the convent, and suing for libel, her counsel was Mr., afterwards L. C. J., Coleridge): "Coleridge's case was that the breaches of discipline were trivial, contemptible. He pressed Mrs. Kennedy [the matron] on the point, asking what had Miss Saurin done. Mrs. Kennedy said, as an example, that she had eaten strawberries. 'Eaten strawberries!' exclaimed Coleridge, 'what harm was there in that?' 'It was forbidden, sir,' said Mrs. Kennedy, — a very proper answer. 'But, Mrs. Kennedy,' retorted Coleridge, 'what trouble was likely to come from eating strawberries?' 'Well, sir,' replied Mrs. Kennedy, 'you might ask what trouble was cross-examining him. Part of the questioning and the replies thereto were as follows: 'Have you any occupation?' 'No.' 'Don't you do any work of any kind?' 'No.' 'Just loaf around home?' 'That's about all.' 'What does your father do?' 'Nothin' much.' 'Does n't he do anything to support the family?' 'He does odd jobs once in a while when he can get them.' 'As a matter of fact, is n't your father a worthless fellow and a loafer?' 'I don't know, sir; you'd better ask him. He's sittin' over there on the jury.'¹⁵ (Brooklyn Eagle, 1903.)

¹³ The very effective cross-examination of the medical man, reported by Judge Daly, and the memorable cross-examination of Majocchi, in Queen Caroline's trial (quoted ante, § 995), belong here also.

¹⁴ In this same entertaining volume, other like anecdotes may be found at the same page. Of the same order is the following: "Ex-Governor Shaw, of Iowa, lately chosen to be Secretary Gage's successor at the head of the Treasury Department, tells how he once heard a small boy get the better of a lawyer who was

likely to come from eating apples; yet we know that trouble did come from it.' The answer floored Coleridge."

1878, Mr. W. V. N. Bay, Bench and Bar of Missouri, 162: "The following story is told by Edwards: On a trial at Auburn, New York, the counsel for the People, after severely cross-examining a witness, suddenly put on a look of severity, and said: 'Mr. Witness, has not an effort been made to induce you to tell a different story?' 'A different story from what I have told?' 'That is what I mean.' 'Yes, sir; several persons have tried to get me to tell a different story from what I have told; but they could n't.' 'Now, sir, upon your oath, I wish to know who those persons are.' 'Well, I guess you've tried as hard as any of 'em.'"

§ 1369. Other Rules concerning Cross-examination discriminated. We are here concerned solely with the opponent's right to have cross-examination, and with the rule which excludes testimonial statements not subjected to cross-examination. Accordingly the inquiry is whether for a given statement it has satisfied this rule or not; and for this purpose we are to pass in review the various sorts of testimonial statements as to which such a question can be raised.

From this inquiry, then, four others must be distinguished, with which cross-examination in other aspects is concerned. (1) There is sometimes a special liberality as to the kind of fact that may be asked for on cross-examination. This involves the principles applicable to the admissibility of different sorts of evidence to impeach and discredit a witness. The real problem there involved concerns the mode of proving certain facts or the kind of facts admissible. Thus, certain facts are allowed to be proved by cross-examination only, not by other witnesses; moreover, even upon cross-examination certain kinds of facts are not allowed to be brought out. This subject is elsewhere dealt with (ante, §§ 875-1144, particularly §§ 878, 990-996).

(2) In the order of presenting evidence, certain stages are to be observed; the direct examination comes first, then cross-examination, and so on. Whether a certain fact may be asked about on cross-examination may involve these rules as to the order of presenting evidence (post, §§ 1866-1900, particularly § 1885). With these rules we are here not concerned.

(3) Cross-examination is chiefly used to discredit the witness thus examined, and there is a rule which forbids the discrediting of one's own witness. Accordingly, the inquiry often arises whether a witness is one's own or the opponent's, — for example, whether one may cross-examine (i. e. discredit) a witness called by the opponent but not examined, or called only to bring documents; in cases of that sort, the rule against impeaching one's own witness is involved (ante, §§ 909-918). With that rule we are here not concerned.

(4) Cross-examination, as well as direct examination, involves certain rules as to the manner of interrogation, — whether a question may be leading, whether it may be repeated, and the like. These principles are elsewhere dealt with, under Testimonial Narration (ante, §§ 763-788).

§ 1370. Cross-examined Statements not an Exception to the Hearsay Rule. The Hearsay rule excludes testimonial statements not subjected to cross-examination (ante, § 1362). When, therefore, a statement has already been subjected to cross-examination and is therefore admitted — as in the case of a deposition or testimony at a former trial, — it comes in because the rule is satisfied, not because an exception to the rule is allowed. The statement may have been made before the present trial, but if it has been already subjected to proper cross-examination, it has satisfied the rule and needs no exception in its favor. This is worth clear appreciation, because it involves the whole theory of the rule :

1834, Tindal, C. J., in Wright v. Tatham, 3 A. & E. 3, 22 (declaring that the testimony of a deceased subscribing witness at a former trial is equivalent to calling him now and thus obviates the necessity of calling another and living subscribing witness) : “[The examination of B. at the former trial] is evidence as direct to the point in issue, and as precise in its nature and quality, as that of P. when called to the stand. . . . The evidence resulting from the written examination of the deceased witness, in the former suit between the same parties, is of as high a nature, and as direct and immediate, as the viva voce examination of one of the witnesses remaining alive and actually examined in the cause.”

1892, Mitchell, J., in Minneapolis Mill Co. v. R. Co., 51 Minn. 304, 315, 53 N. W. 639 : “The admission of the testimony of a witness on a former trial is frequently inaccurately spoken of as an exception to the rule against the admission of hearsay evidence. The chief objections to hearsay evidence are the want of the sanction of an oath and of any opportunity to cross-examine ; neither of which applies to testimony given on a former trial.”

§ 1371. Opportunity of Cross-examination, as equivalent to Actual Cross-examination. The doctrine requiring a testing of testimonial statements by cross-examination has always been understood as requiring, not necessarily an actual cross-examination, but merely an opportunity to exercise the right to cross-examine if desired. The reason is that, wherever the opponent has declined to avail himself of the offered opportunity, it must be supposed to have been because he believed that the testimony could not or need not be disputed at all or be shaken by cross-examination. In having the opportunity and still declining, he has had all the benefit that could be expected from the cross-examination of that witness. This doctrine is perfectly well settled :

1813, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Cazenove v. Vaughan, 1 M. & S. 6 : “The rule of the common law is that no evidence shall be admitted but what is or might be under the examination of both parties. But if the adverse party has had liberty to cross-examine and has not chosen to exercise it, the case is then the same in effect as if he had cross-examined. Here then the question is whether the defendant had an opportunity of cross-examining.”

1883, Rapallo, J., in Bradley v. Myrick, 91 N. Y. 296 : “The witness . . . was subject to cross-examination by the defendant’s attorney, if he chose to exercise that right, or in his absence by the Court. . . . On every trial the opposing party has the power to cross-examine. If he does not choose to appear and exercise this power, the consequences should fall on him and not on his adversary.”

1824, Mr. Thomas Starkie, Evidence, 97 : “To satisfy this principle, it is not necessary that the party on whose authority the statement rests should be present at the time when his evidence is used, in order that he may then be cross-examined ; it is sufficient if the party against whom it was offered has cross-examined or has had the opportunity of doing so, being legally called upon so to do when the statement was made. . . . If the party might have had the benefit of a cross-examination in the course of a judicial proceeding, it is the same thing as if he had actually availed himself of the opportunity.”¹

But, though this doctrine is a practically inevitable corollary of the general principle, it is worth while to note the possible consequences of its looseness, as warnings against an inconsistent strictness shown in other applications of the general principle. For, on the one hand, testimony already subjected to a cross-examination, however thorough, by a former party not in privity with the present opponent is excluded (post, § 1388); while, by the present doctrine, testimony never actually tested at all, in consequence of the carelessness, fraud, or incompetence of counsel, or of a privy in interest, is admitted, if merely the opportunity so to test it had existed. On the whole both err in attempting to create an inflexible rule. No doubt, usually, a mere opportunity to cross-examine can be trusted as a sufficient safeguard; and no doubt, usually, only a privy in interest would apply a sufficient cross-examination. But room should be allowed for the exceptional instances which will certainly occur. The trial Court should have a discretion.

§ 1372. Division of Topics. The subject of present inquiry is: What classes of testimonial statements satisfy the rule requiring an opportunity of cross-examination? The various sorts of statements may be grouped as follows, according to the circumstance in which the rule fails to be satisfied:

1. The kind of tribunal or officer, before whom the statement was made, as not furnishing a sufficient opportunity; 2. The nature of the cause, as to issues and parties, in which the statement was made, as not furnishing a sufficient opportunity; 3. The course of the examination itself, as furnishing only an incomplete opportunity.

1. Kind of Tribunal or Officer, as affecting Opportunity of Cross-examination.

§ 1373. General Principles; Sundry Tribunals (Commissioners of Land-titles, Pilotage, Bankruptcy, etc.; Arbitrators). In general the principle is clearly accepted that testimony taken before a tribunal not employing cross-examination as a part of its procedure is inadmissible; and, conversely, the kind of tribunal is immaterial and the testimony is admissible if in fact cross-examination was practised under its procedure:

1767, Buller, J., Trials at Nisi Prius, 241: “From what has been said it is evident that (as there can be no Cross-examination), a voluntary Affidavit is no Evidence between

¹ 1693, Howard v. Tremaine, 1 Salk. 278 (depositions taken in perpetuam; the opponent to the bill had refused in contempt to answer; depositions admitted); 1900, Small v. Reeves, — Ky. —, 59 S. W. 515 (deposition voluntarily not cross-examined; motion to allow cross-examination on the trial, held properly refused in discretion); Mass. Pub. St. 1882, c. 169, § 34, Rev. L. 1902, c. 175, § 36 (the Court may exclude a deposition if the “adverse party failed without fault to attend the taking thereof”).

The ruling in U. S. v. French, D. C., 117 Fed. 976 (1902), that notice to attend is not sufficient is clearly erroneous. Compare § 1377, post.

The intimation in Twohig v. Leamer, 48 Nebr. 247, 67 N. W. 152 (1896) that it must affirmatively appear, in using testimony at a former trial, that a cross-examination was had, is also erroneous; for if cross-examination is an ordinary part of the proceedings before that kind of tribunal, it must be assumed that an opportunity for it was given, and an opportunity was sufficient.

Compare the rulings post, § 1378 (notice to attend).

Strangers. . . . So where there cannot be a Cross-examination, as Depositions taken before Commissioners of Bankrupts, they shall not be read in Evidence."

1825, Graham, B., in Attorney-General v. Davison, McCl. & Y. 167: "The barrack commissioners were not required to summon the party for the purpose of examining the witnesses; and I have no doubt that they proceeded to examine the witnesses and to make their report without giving notice to the other side; and consequently, as the party had no opportunity of attending or cross-examining the witness, this cannot be legal evidence;" Garrow, B.: "In order to affect any party by oral or written testimony, an opportunity should be allowed to him of checking or correcting it by cross-examination."

1806, Thompson, J., in Jackson v. Bailey, 2 Johns. 20: "It is said that this rule ought not to be extended to testimony taken before the Onondaga commissioners [to try land-titles]. . . . Opportunity was given for cross-examining witnesses; and it appears that the title now in question was actually litigated before the commissioners."

1858, Eastman, J., in Orr v. Hadley, 36 N. H. 580: "Neither is it necessary that the former testimony should have been given on the trial of a cause in the exact technical shape of an action. It is sufficient if the point was investigated in a judicial proceeding of any kind, wherein the party to be affected by such testimony had the right of cross-examination."

Accordingly, testimony has been received or rejected on this account, i. e. because an opportunity for cross-examination was or was not a part of the procedure, when given before bankruptcy-commissioners,¹ pilot-commissioners,² marine hull-inspectors,³ barrack-commissioners,⁴ land-commissioners,⁵ county-boards,⁶ registers,⁷ and arbitrators.⁸

§ 1374. Testimony at Coroner's Inquest. In England, testimony at a coroner's inquest had been frequently admitted before the Hearsay rule was established.¹ During the 1700s, this continued as a traditional exception.² The dignity of the office was sometimes put forward as an explaining reason. But the determining circumstance was after all the tradition, as well as the early statutory provision authorizing the reporting of the testimony (though not expressly making it admissible).³ The anomaly was in effect removed in 1848 by Sir John Jervis' Act,⁴ which provided for a cross-examination and expressly made admissible in later proceedings the testimony thus obtained.

¹ Ante 1668, Anon., Rolle's Abr. II, 679, pl. 9; 1747, Eade v. Lingood, 1 Atk. 203; 1787, Fitch v. Hyde, K rby 258; 1810, Cox v. Pearce, 7 John. 298.

² 1843, Com. v. Ricketson, 7 John. 298.

³ 1896, Louisville Ins. Co. v. Monarch, 99 Ky. 578, 36 S. W. 563.

⁴ 1825, Att'y-Gen'l v. Davison, McCl. & Y. 167, quoted supra; 1802, Davis v. Batty, 1 H. & J. 264, 282, semble.

⁵ 1806, Jackson v. Bailey, 2 John. 20, quoted supra; 1797, Montgomery v. Snodgrass, 2 Yeates 230 (deposition before a board of property, excluded; "the witness had been cross-examined," yet the board "are not vested with the powers essentially necessary to such a tribunal" as a court); 1798, DeHaas v. Galbreath, ib. 315 (deposition before the same board, excluded).

⁶ 1899, Dunck v. Milwaukee Co., 103 Wis. 371, 79 N. W. 412.

⁷ 1899, Payne v. Long, 121 Ala. 385, 25 So. 780.

⁸ 1858, Orr v. Hadley, 36 N. H. 580 (see quotation supra); 1845, Bailey v. Woods, 17 id. 372; 1794, White v. Bisbing, 1 Yeates 400; 1824, Forney v. Hallagher, 11 S. & R. 203; 1850, McAdams v. Stilwell, 13 Pa. 90, 96.

It was excluded in Jessnp v. Cook (1798), 1 Halst. 438; but here the witness was not shown unavailable, under § 1402, post.

¹ 1666, Lord Morly's Case, Kelyng 55; 1692, Harrison's Trial, 12 How. St. Tr. 852; cited ante, § 1364.

² 1754, Robins v. Wolseley, 2 Lee Eccl. 135, 421, 442 (referring to the common law); 1790, R. v. Eriswell, 3 T. R. 707.

³ 1554, St. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13; 1555, St. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 10; 1826, St. 7 Geo. IV, c. 64. It is not certain whether St. 1 Wm. IV, c. 22 (1830) was to be regarded as applying to coroners; but testimony before the coroner continued to be admitted: 1840, Sills v. Brown, 9 C. & P. 601, 603.

⁴ St. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. It would seem that the English Courts would now exclude testimony not thus taken under cross-exami-

In the United States, the question has been re-considered upon principle and apart from the traditional English exception, and the proper conclusion has been reached that the lack of cross-examination as an element in coroner's procedure makes such testimony inadmissible:

1842, Bronson, J., in People v. Restell, 2 Hill N. Y. 297: "It is said that depositions taken by the coroner on holding an inquest are evidence, although the defendant was not present when they were taken. This doctrine has been gravely questioned, and I am strongly inclined to the opinion that it cannot be maintained. The great principle that the accuser and the accused must be brought face to face and that the latter shall have the opportunity to cross-examine can never be departed from with safety."

1858, Napton, J., in State v. Houser, 26 Mo. 436: "It is true that there may be a few cases in which depositions taken before coroners in England, without any opportunity of cross-examination, have been used against the accused, where the witness subsequently died; but the authority of such cases is questioned, even in that country, by their ablest writers on common law — Starkie, Roscoe, Russell —, and it is doubtful whether such testimony would be now received. At all events, such testimony has never been permitted in this country, and in England its admissibility has been altogether placed upon the peculiar dignity and importance attached to the office of coroner; and no such reasons exist here."⁵ § 1375. Testimony before Committing Magistrate or Justice of the Peace.

Similar considerations apply to proceedings before a committing magistrate or a justice of the peace. If there was under the procedure of that official an opportunity of cross-examination, the testimony is admissible; otherwise not. There never has been any doubt on this point since the establishment of the general doctrine (ante, § 1364) in R. v. Paine, in 1696,¹ except in the special case of justices of the peace acting as committing magistrates under the statutes of Philip and Mary (ante, § 1374). The statutory provision for such examination, though not expressly making the testimony admissible, was thought by some during the 1700s² to imply a special exception, as in the case of coroners' examinations. But even this supposed exception: 1830, R. v. Wall, Russell on Crimes, b. IV, c. IV, § 3; 1866, R. v. Rigg, 4 F. & F. 1085.

⁵ Accord: 1881, Sylvester v. State, 71 Ala. 17, 24; 1891, Jackson v. Crilly, 16 Colo. 103, 26 Pac. 331 (death of a passenger; testimony of a deceased witness before the coroner, under cross-examination and in the presence of "the respective counsel," excluded, because it did not appear "in whose behalf, in what capacity, nor for what purpose the respective counsel were present"; unsound); 1885, Pittsburgh C. & St. L. R. Co. v. McGrath, 115 Ill. 172, 3 N. E. 439 (depositions excluded); 1852, State v. Parker, 7 La. An. 83, semble; 1883, Insurance Co. v. Schmidt, 40 Oh. St. 112 (testimony excluded); 1881, McLain v. Com., 99 Pa. 97; 1844, State v. Campbell, 1 Rich. L. 125 (O'Neill, J., diss.); 1888, State v. Jones, 29 S. C. 225, 227, 7 S. E. 296. Contra: 1881, State v. McNeil, 33 La. An. 1333. Of course, if the coroner's practice does include a right of cross-examination, e. g. by an accused person present, the testimony is admissible: Ark. Stats. 1894, § 758 (testimony before a coroner, admissible "on the trial of any person present at his examination"); Del. Rev. St. 1893, c. 33, § 4 (deposition before a coroner, usable "on the trial of any person present at the examination"); Tex. C. Cr. P. 1895, § 814 (quoted post, § 1375); 1894, Meyers v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 204, 216, 26 S. W. 196 (before a coroner, the defendant present and privileged to cross-examine; admitted).

¹ 5 Mod. 165; quoted supra, also ante, § 1364.

² E. g. in R. v. Eriswell (1790), 3 T. R. 707, per Buller, J. (the examination of a pauper, as to his place of settlement, before two justices of the peace was offered at the Quarter Sessions; the judges of the King's Bench were equally divided, but the opinion of Lord Kenyon subsequently prevailed in R. v. Ferryfrystone, 2 East 54, 1801; Kenyon, L. C. J.: "Examinations upon oath, except in the excepted cases, are of no avail unless they are made in a cause or proceeding depending between the parties to be affected by them and where each has an opportunity of cross-examining the witness").

tion was by the 1800s repudiated in England.³ On principle, as has often been pointed out, the question in all such cases depends simply upon whether there was an opportunity of cross-examination :

1696, R. v. Paine, 5 Mod. 165 : "It was the opinion of both Courts [King's Bench and Common Pleas], that the depositions should not be given in evidence, the defendant not being present when they were taken before the mayor and so had lost the benefit of a cross-examination."

1817, Richards, C. B., in R. v. Smith, Holt N. P. 615, "observed that the statute did not mention the prisoner's presence at all. Undoubtedly, however, the decisions established the point that the prisoner ought to be present that he might cross-examine. But here he had the advantage offered him and omitted to use it."

1835, Johnson, J., in State v. Hill, 2 Hill S. C. 609 : "If the accused is present and has an opportunity of cross-examining the witness, the depositions, according to the rule, are admissible. . . . We know, too, how necessary a cross-examination is to elicit the whole truth from even a willing witness ; and to admit such evidence, without the means of applying the ordinary tests, would put in jeopardy the dearest interests of the community."⁴

§ 1376. Depositions ; Effect of other Principles Discriminated. (1) A deposition is not receivable unless taken by an officer or other person authorized by

³ 1817, R. v. Smith, Holt N. P. 615, quoted post ; affirmed in R. & R. 340 by all the judges ; accord, 1817, R. v. Forbes, Holt N. P. 599 ; 1838, R. v. Arnold, 8 C. & P. 621 ; 1838, R. v. Errington, 2 Lew. Cr. C. 142, per Patteson, J. (answering the objection that St. 7 Geo. IV, c. 64, s. 2, did not require the accused's presence). The statutes in England now require an opportunity of cross-examination : 1848, St. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42 ; 1867, St. 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, § 61. In R. v. Beeston (1854), 6 Cox Cr. 430, Jervis, C. J., said : "[The statute of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42] adds a rule which the judges had previously engrafted upon the old statutes of P. & M., that there must be full opportunity of cross-examination ;" the statute was applied in (1886) R. v. Griffiths, 16 Cox Cr. 46.

So also in Canada : Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 90, § 10 (on a trial at the general sessions, a deposition taken before the magistrate at the original hearing may be used if the accused was present "and he, his counsel or solicitor, had a full opportunity of cross-examining the witness") ; Can. Crim. Code 1892, § 687 (quoted post, § 1380, note 3) ; Que. : 1854, R. v. Peltier, 4 Low. Can. 22.

⁴ Accord : Ariz. St. 1903, No. 25, amending Rev. St. 1901, P. C. § 765 (preliminary hearing before a magistrate) ; 1883, Harris v. State, 73 Ala. 497 ; 1895, McNamara v. State, 60 Ark. 400, 30 S. W. 762 ; Cal. see the statutes and cases cited post, § 1413 ; Del. Rev. St. 1893, c. 97, § 18 (committing magistrate shall examine the witnesses in the accused's presence) ; 1882, Robinson v. State, 68 Ga. 833 ; 1883, Smith v. State, 72 id. 115 ; 1899, Hardin v. State, 107 id. 718, 33 S. E. 700 ; 1880, State v. Wilson, 24 Kans. 189, 194 ; 1869, O'Brian v. Com., 6 Bush 563, 570 ; La. Rev. L. 1897, § 1439 (record by the recorder of New Orleans, or a justice of the peace, of testimony at fire inquest, taken on notice to the occupant, owner, agent, or custodian of property, admissible) ; 1895, State v. George, 60

Minn. 503, 63 N. W. 100 ; N. Y. C. Cr. P. 1881, § 8 (testimony before committing magistrate admissible only if there was cross-examination or the opportunity) ; 1842, People v. Restell, 2 Hill 300 ; N. C. Code 1883, § 1157 (examinations taken by a committing magistrate, usable only if the accused was present and had an opportunity to hear and cross-examine) ; 1847, State v. Valentine, 7 Ired. 225, 226 ; 1865, Houser v. Com., 51 Pa. 338 ("notwithstanding the above-named statute [2 & 3 P. & M. c. 10] had been extended to Pennsylvania, it was displaced by our Constitution, and no ex parte testimony could be given against a prisoner in a capital case") ; 1876, Johnson v. State, 1 Tex. App. 333, 338 (good opinion) ; Tex. C. Cr. P. 1895, § 814 (depositions before an "examining Court or jury of inquest," admissible if defendant was present and had the privilege of cross-examination) ; 1851, U. S. v. Macomb, 5 McLean 286 (justice of the peace) ; 1845, State v. Hooker, 17 Vt. 658, 669 (magistrate) ; 1897, Pooler v. State, 97 Wis. 627, 73 N. W. 336 (depositions of accomplices excluded, because the defendant was not present at their examination). In the United States the only instance in which to-day any statutory exception seems to have been made is that of the examination of the complainant in bastardy ; but it is not clear that an examination taken in the defendant's absence and without some sort of notice given him (post, §§ 1378, 1382) would be admissible unless expressly so declared by the statute : Del. Rev. St. 1893, c. 77, § 16 (the mother's deposition in a bastardy charge may be taken in the defendant's absence if the constable returns "that he cannot be found") ; N. J. Gen. St. 1896, Bastards, § 16 (examination of the mother in a bastardy charge may be in the defendant's absence, unless he demands the contrary) ; compare the statutes quoted post, § 1417.

law. It can be conceived that cross-questions put informally and recorded in writing might be as effective as a formal cross-examination. But cross-examination in its proper scope signifies a probing and testing under certain safeguards and opportunities for compelling answers, which can exist only in a formal proceeding governed by a settled procedure and enforced by vested authority; hence, that cross-examination which satisfies the rule must be a cross-examination, if not before a regular judge or magistrate, at least before an officer or other expressly authorized person proceeding according to prescribed forms. In what concerns the kind of officer or other person thus authorized, the question involved is one of the constitution of Courts and their officers.¹ Statutes have provided a variety of ways, more or less formal, in which depositions may be taken. So far as the admissibility of a deposition depends upon its being taken by an authorized person, the question is one of judicial machinery, the organization of Courts, and is beyond the present purview.

(2) By Chancery practice, common-law practice, and statutes, a preliminary order to authorize the taking of a deposition is usually obtainable only upon certain conditions, — the illness or the impending departure of the deponent, and the like. But statutes have often removed these conditions in certain classes of cases. This process of securing in advance the evidential material for a trial is a part of the preliminary procedure of courts, — just as is the process of obtaining discovery from an opponent. These questions of preliminary procedure are without the present purview.² The admissibility of a deposition already taken is the limit of the scope of these investigations.

(3) When a deposition is offered, the principle of Confrontation requires that the witness' personal attendance be shown impracticable before the deposition may be used. The conditions thus required are dealt with under that principle (post, §§ 1401-1418).

(4) The document offered as a deposition is the testimony of the deponent in writing. Testimony by deposition can be only in writing, not oral, and the writing, moreover, must be made and transmitted according to a detailed mode prescribed by statute or by practice. So far as the manner of interrogation is involved, the principle is that of the Mode of Testimonial Narration, already dealt with (ante, §§ 799-805).³

§ 1377. Same: General Principle: Opportunity of Cross-examination required. The principle of the Hearsay rule, as applied to the use of a deposition, is precisely the same as for testimony obtained in other tribunals, in the instances already reviewed (ante, §§ 1373-1375). The mere speaking under oath is nothing; the essential condition is that the person against whom the sworn statement is offered should have had an opportunity to cross-examine the deponent (ante, § 371). This is universally conceded as a common-law principle :

¹ For the officers having power to compel answers, see post, § 2195.

² The statutes bearing on the subject may be found from the citations collected post, §§ 1380-1383. For the statutes granting discovery from an opponent, see post, §§ 1856, 1859.

³ For the conclusiveness of the magistrate's report of testimony, see ante, §§ 1326, 1349. For the use of the magistrate's report without calling the magistrate in person, see post, § 1667. For the authentication of a deposition or magistrate's report, see post, §§ 1676, 1681, 2164.

1763, Buller, J., Trials at Nisi Prius, 240: "If the Witness be examined de bene esse, and, before the coming in of the Answer, the Defendant not being in Contempt, the Witness die, yet his Deposition shall not be read, because the opposite party had not the Power of Cross-examination, and the rule of the Common Law is strict in this, that no Evidence shall be admitted but what is or might have been under Examination of both Parties."

1777, Mansfield, L. C. J., in Goodright v. Moss, Cowper 592: "[As to] offering a deposition or an answer in evidence against a person not a party to the original suit. That cannot be done for this reason, because such person has it not in his power to cross-examine."

1790, Kenyon, L. C. J., in R. v. Eriswell, 3 T. R. 707: "Examinations upon oath, except in the excepted cases, are of no avail unless they are made in a cause or proceeding depending between the parties to be affected by them and where each has an opportunity of cross-examining the witness. . . . [In this case the deposition] was ex parte, obtained at the instance of those overseers whose parish was to benefit by it, and behind the backs of the parish against whom it has now been used, without having an opportunity of knowing what was going on or attending to have the benefit of a cross-examination. I regard the question as of the last importance and as putting in danger the law of evidence in which every man in the kingdom is deeply concerned."

1811, Lawrence, J., in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 412: "A deposition is considered a partial representation of facts, as to all persons who have no opportunity of bringing out the whole truth by cross-examination."

1863, Per Curiam, in Waterson v. Seat, 10 Fla. 333 (after pointing out that no notice of a deposition had been given to the opponent, "so as to enable him to cross-interrogate"): "We can conceive of no circumstances under which the notice may be dispensed with. The plainest principles of natural justice, as well as our statute, require it. It is stated by one of the earliest writers¹ (to enforce the rule on the subject) that even the Almighty would not proceed to pronounce sentence against our great ancestor without giving him notice, and therefore first called to him, 'Where art thou, Adam?'"²

§ 1378. Same: Notice and Sufficient Time; Attendance cures Defective Notice. The opportunity of cross-examination involves two elements, (1) notice to the opponent that the deposition is to be taken at the time and place specified, and (2) a sufficient interval of time to prepare for examination and to reach the place.

(1) Where a deposition is taken for pending litigation, the parties to whom notice is to be given are definitely ascertainable, and the requirement of it, apart from statutory exceptions, is indispensable.¹ But where a deposition is taken with a view to use in litigation not yet begun — in perpetuum memoriam —, it may not be possible to ascertain the names of all the interested

¹ The learned judge's reference here is probably not, as might be imagined, to Genesis III, 9, but to Fortescue, De Laudibus Legum Angliæ (1470), where the famous chief justice alludes to the above passage in Genesis.

² The rule in Chancery was not so strict, presumably because (ante, § 1367, note 5) cross-examination in Chancery was almost futile: 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius, 240; 1827, Story, J., in Gass v. Stinson, 3 Sumner 98, 104 (examining the authorities); 1842, St. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.

But the principle existed: 1859, Rehden v. Wesley, 26 Beav. 434 (Romilly, M. R. . "This is clear, that if you intend to use the answer of one defendant against another defendant, the latter must have the right of cross-examination").

¹ See the statutes and cases post, §§ 1380-1382. Apart from statute, the notice may be oral: 1847, Milton v. Rowland, 11 Ala. 732, 736 ("the form or manner of notice is of no importance, when one in point of fact is proved").

parties, and the question may thus arise whether a deposition so taken may be used against a person who never received any notice and could not by diligence have been notified. This question does not seem to have been judicially decided;² but, so far as a statute has authorized a mode of notice by advertisement or the like, it would seem that this by implication sanctions the use of such a deposition, as a necessary deviation from the strict requirements of principle.

(2) The requirements as to the interval of time are now everywhere regulated by statute (post, §§ 1380-1383), and the rulings in regard to the sufficiency of time are thus so dependent on the interpretation of the detailed prescriptions of the local statutes that it would be impracticable to examine them here.³ But whether or not the time allowed was supposedly insufficient or was precisely the time required by statute, the actual attendance of the party obviates any objection upon the ground of insufficiency, because then the party has actually had that opportunity of cross-examination (ante, § 1371) for the sole sake of which the notice was required.⁴ On the other hand, the failure of the opponent to attend, after sufficient notice, leaves it still true that there has been the necessary opportunity,⁵ which is sufficient on the same principle (ante, § 1371).

§ 1379. Same: Plural Depositions at Same Time and Different Places. The principle requiring an opportunity of cross-examination is clearly violated in the case of plural depositions appointed by one party for the same time at different places, so that it becomes impossible for the opponent to attend in person for cross-examination at both. Here he is deprived of the opportunity for cross-examination in one at least of the depositions:

1881, Gray, C. J., in Cole v. Hall, 131 Mass. 90: "The manifest design of the Legislature is that the adverse party shall have opportunity to attend in person, or at least by his attorney duly instructed in the cause, to cross-examine the witnesses. . . . If depositions are taken at different places at or near the same time, it is within the power of the court, when the depositions are offered in evidence, to suppress the depositions of those witnesses whom the adverse party has thereby been deprived of reasonable opportunity to

² See the statutes and cases cited post, § 1383.

³ See some of them cited post, § 1381; see also Wade on Notice, §§ 1221-1252; Foster, Federal Practice, 3d ed., §§ 286-290.

⁴ 1862, Aicardi v. Strang, 38 Ala. 326, 328 (applied to written interrogatories); 1849, Caldwell v. McVicar, 9 Ark. 418, 422 ("Where the party appears, by himself or attorney, and makes his appearance, cross-examines, objects to a question, to the competency of the witness, or does any substantive act connected with the taking of the depositions, and it so appears in the depositions regularly certified, the party will not at the hearing of the cause be allowed to object that no legal notice had been given"); 1858, Jones v. Love, 9 Cal. 68, 70 ("Having appeared and cross-examined, it was too late afterwards to make the objection" of short notice); 1895, Ryan v. People, 21 Colo. 119, 40 Pac. 777; 1850, Greene Co. v. Bledsoe, 12 Ill. 267, 271; 1844, Connersville v. Wadleigh, 7 Blackf. 102, 104; 1847, Doe v. Brown, 8 id. 443, 444; 1859, Nevan v. Roup, 8 Ia. 207, 210; 1859, Mumma v. McKee, 10 id. 107, 110, semble; 1811, Talbot v. Bradford, 2 Bibb 316; 1888, Md. Pub. Gen. L. art. 35, § 28; 1868, State v. Bassett, 33 N. J. L. 26, 31; 1860, McCormick v. Irwin, 35 Pa. 111, 118; 1862, Cameron v. Cameron, 15 Wis. 1, 5. Contra: 1861, Hunt v. Gaslight Co., 1 All. 343, 348 (on the fallacious ground that "it was impossible for them [the opponent] to say with certainty that the deposition would not be admitted"; this assumes that the law could not be known beforehand, — an assumption which would confuse all legal rules).

For the time of objections to competency and relevancy, see ante, §§ 18, 486, 586.

⁵ Cases cited ante, § 1371; and the following: 1895, Moore v. Triplett, — Va. —, 23 S. E. 69 (but in the special class of statutory proceedings here covered, i. e. sale of infant's lands, etc., under Code §§ 2435, 2619, actual presence was held necessary).

cross-examine. . . . In this, as in many other matters concerning the introduction of evidence, much must be left to the discretion of the judge presiding at the trial."

1895, Allen, J., in Evans v. Rothschild, 54 Kan. 747, 39 Pac. 701: "Where testimony is taken by deposition, it is in one sense a part of the trial of the cause, and the only chance given to the opposing party to confront the witnesses whose depositions are taken under the notice is to attend before the officer who takes them. The only opportunity to apply the tests necessary to correct errors or detect falsehood in the statements drawn out on direct examination is that afforded by cross-examination at the same time. A party to an action has a right, if he deems it necessary, to be personally present when depositions are being taken affecting his interests. He is not required to employ a multitude of attorneys to protect his interests at different places on the same day, nor does the fact that he chooses to intrust his interests to the care of an attorney (other than the one who tries the case for him) at one place, require him or his principal counsel to attend on the same day at another place."

Under such circumstances, that deposition should be suppressed for which the opponent lost the opportunity of cross-examination, i. e. he is allowed to attend either, and the one not attended is excluded.¹ If in fact he succeeds in having representatives at both, then both become admissible, for there has been for both an actual opportunity of cross-examination.² But where he refrains from attending either, he practically waives the opportunity (ante, § 1371) as to both, and therefore both are admissible.³ The policy of excluding both, merely because the appointments are incompatible,⁴ cannot be supported.

§ 1380. Same: English and Canadian Statutes. The requirement of an opportunity for cross-examination has been almost invariably preserved in its integrity in the statutory regulation of the subject. The few deviations have occurred chiefly in provisions respecting notice to absent or unknown parties, and respecting the discretion that may properly be allowed a trial Court in making exceptions. This statutory regulation became necessary for the main purpose of vesting the common-law Courts with that power which, with singular ineptitude, they conceived themselves to lack or to be somehow prevented from exercising with due freedom, — the power of authorizing depositions to be taken before appointed officers.¹ The statutes conferring the power have thus usually also specified the requirements to be observed

¹ 1861, Hankinson v. Lombard, 25 Ill. 573; 1879, Collins v. Richart, 14 Bush 625; 1897, Cross v. Cross, — Ky. —, 41 S. W. 272 (notice to take on the same day that the opponent was taking another in the same suit on a previous notice, insufficient); 1867, Fant v. Miller, 17 Gratt. 187, 226; and cases quoted supra.

² 1878, Latham v. Latham, 30 Gratt. 340.

³ 1879, Hay's Appeal, 91 Pa. 268; see Blair v. Bank (1850), 11 Humph. 88.

⁴ Ia. Code 1897, § 4688 ("if notices are given in the same case by the same party of the taking of depositions at different places on the same day, they shall be invalid"); 1815, Waters' Heirs v. Harrison, 4 Bibb 89; 1856, Scammon v. Scammon, 33 N. H. 60; Me. Pub. St. 1883, c. 107, § 14 (if notice of two depositions at the same time and place is given, or if deceptive means are used to prevent attendance, the Court "may reject them"). The following ruling is sound: 1893, Wytheville B. & I. Co. v. Teeger, 90 Va. 277, 282, 18 S. E. 195 (notice on same day of deposition in another State in another suit in which proponent of present deposition was not a party though his counsel was engaged; admitted).

¹ A deposition could be authorized by the cumbersome methods either of the personal attendance of a judge of the Court (1606, Matthews v. Port, Comb. 63), or of a postponement of trial till the opponent consented (1774, Mansfield, L. C. J., in Mostyn v. Fabrigas, Cowp. 161, 174); but otherwise the party must sue out a commission in chancery (1827, L. C. Eldon, in Macauley v. Shackell, 1 Bligh n. s. 96, 119, 131).

in giving notice to the opponent. In England this statutory reform came piecemeal. The chief enactments have been five: (1) in 1830-31, St. 1 Wm. IV, c. 22, giving to all superior Courts the power of authorizing depositions both abroad and at home;² (2) in 1867, St. 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, § 61, extending the power to criminal proceedings for indictable offences; (3) under the Judicature Act of 1873, St. 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, the Rules of Procedure, No. 36; (4) under the Judicature Act of 1875, St. 38 & 39 Vict. c. 77, § 17, the Rules of the Supreme Court (Order XXXVII), superseding the foregoing Rules and covering the same ground; and (5) in 1883, the Rules of the Supreme Court (Order XXXVII), made under authority of the same Act (c. 77, § 17), and superseding all prior civil regulations.³ Under the statute of 1830-31, the

² This was narrowly construed as applying to civil cases only: 1847, R. v. Upton St. Leonards, 10 C. B. 834.

³ The relevant English Rules of 1883 are as follows:

RULES OF THE SUPREME COURT, 1883 (under 38 & 39 Vict. c. 77, § 17), ORDER XXXVII: "I. Evidence Generally: 1. In the absence of any agreement between the solicitors of all parties, and subject to these Rules, the witnesses at the trial of any action or at any assessment of damages shall be examined viva voce and in open court, but the Court or a Judge may at any time for sufficient reason order that any particular fact or facts may be proved by affidavit, or that the affidavit of any witness may be read at the hearing or trial, on such conditions as the Court or Judge may think reasonable, or that any witness whose attendance in court ought for some sufficient cause to be dispensed with, be examined by interrogatories or otherwise before a commissioner or examiner; provided that where it appears to the Court or Judge that the other party bona fide desires the production of a witness for cross-examination, and that such witness can be produced, an order shall not be made authorising the evidence of such witness to be given by affidavit." (This first appeared in the Rules of 1873.)

ORDER XXXVIII: "Affidavits and Depositions: 1. Upon any motion, petition, or summons evidence may be given by affidavit; but the Court or a Judge may, on the application of either party, order the attendance for cross-examination of the person making any such affidavit." (This was contained in substance in the Rules of 1873.)

ORDER XXXVII, Rule 20: "Any party or witness having made an affidavit to be used or which shall be used on any proceeding in the cause or matter shall be bound, on being served with such subpoena [from the opposite party], to attend before such officer or person [appointed by the Court] for cross-examination." (This first appears in the Rules of 1883.)

ORDER XXXVII: "II. Examination of Witnesses. . . . 5. The Court or a Judge may, in any cause or matter where it shall appear necessary for the purposes of justice, make an order for the examination upon oath before the Court or Judge or any officer of the Court, or any other person, and at any place, of any witness or person, and may empower any party to any such cause or matter to give such deposition in evidence therein on such terms, if any, as the Court or a Judge may direct." (This first appeared in the Rules of 1875.) "6. An order for a commission to examine witnesses shall be in the Form No. 36 in Appendix K." (The form provides fully for notice and cross-examination.) "6 a. If in any case the Court or a Judge shall so order, there shall be issued a request to examine witnesses in lieu of a commission." (This is the mode usually employed for foreign countries and sometimes for India and the Colonies; the form, No. 37, provides for notice and cross-examination.) "10, 11. Where any witness or person is ordered to be examined before any officer of the court, or before any person appointed for the purpose, . . . the examination shall take place in the presence of the parties, their counsel, solicitors, or agents, and the witnesses shall be subject to cross-examination and re-examination." (The provisions of 6, 6 a, 10, and 11 first appear in the Rules of 1883; though they may be considered as an adaptation of the provisions of the Chancery Practice Act of 1852, St. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.)

CANADA: Dom. Rev. St. 1886, c. 135, § 99 (Exchequer and Supreme Courts); Crim. Code 1892, § 683 (commissions out of Canada; rules to conform to those of civil trials, "as nearly as practicable"); § 686 (depositions of sick persons; reasonable notice and a full opportunity of cross-examination is required); § 687 (deposition at a preliminary investigation, if it is proved that it was "taken in the presence of the accused, and that he, his counsel, or solicitor, had a full opportunity of cross-examining the witness"); St. 1900, c. 46 (amends Crim. Code 1892, § 687, by omitting "he" before "his counsel"); B. C. Rev. St. 1897, c. 52, § 134 (provisions for notice); Man. Rev. St. 1902, c. 40, Rule 464 (depositions admissible on terms); R. 469 (cross-examination of affiants); R. 486, R. 492 (testimony taken on commission), c. 38, § 135 (judge may require cross-examination of affiants, in county Courts); N. Br. Consol. St. 1877, c. 37, § 185 (provisions for notice); c. 53, § 30 (St. John City Court); c. 37, §§ 185, 188, (Supreme Court); c. 49, § 77 (Supreme Court in equity); Newf. Consol. St. 1892, c. 50, Rules mode of taking depositions was left to the discretion of the Court; but it does not appear that any change of practice actually ensued. Under the final Rules of 1883, the essential requirement of an opportunity for cross-examination was safeguarded, while at the same time a certain just amount of flexibility was provided for; so that the English system now represents a thoroughly practical and successful regulation of the subject. In brief, it deals with the requirement of an opportunity of cross-examination as follows: (a) Depositions must be taken subject to cross-examination before the officer appointed; (b) within certain limits the Court has a discretion to accept ex parte sworn statements; but even in these cases the opponent is entitled to a subsequent cross-examination of the deponent before decision rendered. These Rules have been adopted in substance in several of the Canadian jurisdictions.

The practice of English Courts since the adoption of these rules indicates a disposition to preserve the principle of cross-examination so far as possible, and to use the discretionary powers of dispensation as little as possible.⁴

§ 1381. Same: U. S. Federal Statutes. In the two types of ordinary deposition dealt with in the Federal statutes (depositions de bene esse, i. e. on an order for conditional taking, and dedimus potestatem, i. e. a special commission), the principle is preserved that there must have been an opportunity of cross-examination.¹ By the original act of 1789 (c. 20, § 30), regulating the

of Court 33, par. 10 (provisions for notice); N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 159, § 41 (municipal Courts); Rules of Court 1900, Ord. 35, R. 3 B, R. 10 (provisions for notice); N. W. Terr. Consol. Ord. 1898, c. 21, Rule 263 (like Ont. Rules, § 483); Rules 271, 272 (opportunity of cross-examination provided); Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 60, § 143 (provisions for notice); Rules of Court 1897, § 483 (the Court may authorize testimony by affidavit or before an examiner; "but where the other party bona fide desires the production of a witness for cross-examination, and such witness can be produced," no affidavit shall be authorized); § 485 (depositions; rules assimilated to the practice for discovery from parties); §§ 501-504 (rules for commissions); P. E. I. St. 1887, c. 4, §§ 2-4 (rules for notice).

Compare the statutes admitting affidavits (post, § 1710).

⁴ On applications for the issuance of an order to take a deposition, the question whether it shall issue is entirely different from that of the admissibility of a deposition when taken, as pointed out post, § 1401. But sometimes a ruling on such an application may involve a ruling that such a deposition, even if taken, would be inadmissible; such a ruling was the following, in which the requirement of cross-examination is insisted upon as indispensable: 1882, Crofton v. Crofton, L. R. 20 Ch. D. 760 (Fry, J., refused to issue a commission to examine a witness in France, because the mode of examination there, which would control, left the putting of questions to the judge's discretion: "He is a witness who ought to be subjected to the most drastic cross-examination, and . . . I decline to delegate my discretion to any other tribunal. If under the commission the witness would have been subject to cross-examination in the ordinary way, I should have thought it desirable to issue it").

¹ U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 863 (for depositions de bene esse, "reasonable notice must first be given in writing"; and "whenever, by reason of the absence from the district and want of an attorney of record or other reason, the giving of the notice herein required shall be impracticable, it shall be lawful to take such depositions as there shall be urgent necessity for taking, upon such notice as any judge authorized to hold courts in such circuit or district shall think reasonable and direct"); § 866 (for depositions by dedimus potestatem "to prevent a failure or delay of justice," the provisions of the above section "shall not apply").

Rules of the Federal Supreme Court, No. 13 (for new evidence in maritime cases before the Supreme Court, no commission shall issue except on notice and a copy of interrogatories); Federal Equity Rules, No. 67, as amended 1893 (rules prescribed for notice and cross-examination in taking testimony by commission); No. 68 (testimony by deposition under statute; "if no notice is given to the adverse party," he shall upon motion "be entitled to a cross-examination of the witness, either under a commission or by a new deposition under the Acts of Congress, if a Court or a judge thereof shall under all the circumstances deem it reasonable"); No. 70 (for commissions before issue reached, notice is required).

former class, the notice and opportunity to cross-examine was not necessary if the opponent or his attorney was not within one hundred miles of the place; but this defect is remedied (R. S. § 863) in the present statute. The statute authorizing the latter class of depositions (R. S. § 866) has also been construed to require notice and opportunity for cross-examination;² but the terms of the statute are so complicated with local State usage that it is not possible to say that all depositions offered in Federal Courts must be tested by that requirement.³

§ 1382. Same: U. S. Statute. The requirement of notice and opportunity to cross-examine has been generally preserved in all the various State statutes. Only a few deviations are found here and there.¹

² For the manner and time of the notice under these statutes, see the following: 1897, American E. N. Bank v. First N. Bank, 27 C. C. A. 274, 82 Fed. 961 (reasonableness depends on the circumstances of the case); 1900, U. S. Life Ins. Co. v. Ross, 42 C. C. A. 601, 102 Fed. 722 (notice to a corporate agent to accept service after the revocation of his authority but before appointment of another, held good); 1901, Foster, Federal Practice, 3d ed., §§ 286-290; Gould and Tucker, Notes on Revised Statutes, §§ 863, 866.

³ The situation is as follows: The dedimus potestatem section (§ 866) prescribes that "common usage" shall control the mode. This "common usage" was for some time construed to permit the adoption of local statutory and common-law modes: U. S. v. Cameron, 15 Fed. 797 (McCrary, J., 1883); Warren v. Younger, 18 id. 859 (McCormick, J., 1884). Contra, Randall v. Venable, 17 id. 162 (Turner, J., 1884). Then in Ex parte Fisk, 113 U. S. 725, 5 Sup. 724 (1884), the Supreme Court refused to recognize such a construction for the purpose of enforcing an order to take under a peculiar State law, and intimated, though expressly reserving the point, that the deposition, had it been already taken and were it offered in evidence, would be rejected on the same grounds. Finally, by St. 1892, c. 14, the Federal lower Courts were authorized to take (and presumably to admit in evidence) depositions according to the mode allowable in the State of the trial; thus apparently annulling the effect of Ex parte Fisk, supra. The doubt thus remained whether the new statute, going beyond the dedimus potestatem section (§ 866), operates also to relax the detailed requirements of § 863 concerning de bene depositions. Compare the statutes cited post, § 1410, and the rule as to the applicability of State law in Federal Courts (ante, § 6).

¹ In the following list a few of the judicial rulings in regard to the requirement of notice have been placed after the respective statutes; where the requirement is not merely of "reasonable notice," but of notice in a specific way, the result depends almost entirely upon the wording of the local statute; where not otherwise stated, the statute requires notice and prescribes details; compare here the statutes cited post, § 1413 (former testimony) and § 1710 (affidavits); Ala. Code 1897, §§ 1834-1836; §§ 5290, 5293 (criminal cases); 1895, Wisdom v. Roeves, 110 Ala. 418, 18 So. 13 (no notice necessary in proceedings under § 2803); Alaska C. C. P. 1900, §§ 646, 650, 652, 657 (like Or. Annot. C. 1892, §§ 817, 821, 823, 828); Ariz. P. C. 1887, §§ 2069, 2091 (depositions taken by accused); Rev. St. §§ 1834-1837 (civil cases); Ark. Stats. 1894, §§ 2987 ff. 2999; § 2117 (rule applied to depositions taken for accused in criminal case); § 7414 (no notice required of attesting witness' deposition for will-probate, unless contested); Cal. P. C. 1872, §§ 1338, 1339, 1353, as amended in 1880 (defendant's depositions in criminal case); § 882, as amended in 1878 (prosecution's depositions); C. C. P. 1872, §§ 2024, 2031, 2033 (civil cases); in 1901, § 2033 of the original code was omitted by Commissioners' amendment, and its substance was added to §§ 2021, 2030; for the validity of these amendments, see ante, § 488); Colo. Const. 1876, art. II, § 17, Annot. Stats. 1891, § 4833 ("reasonable notice" required in criminal cases); C. C. P. 1891, §§ 342, 349, 354 (in general); § 2300 (before irrigation-commissioners); §§ 2650, 2651 (before justices); Conn. Gen. St. 1887, § 1068 (in general); § 1074 (commission to take a deposition of one in military or naval service); D. C. Comp. St. 1894, c. 71, §§ 27-29 (deposition taken by defendant in a criminal case); c. 70, § 33 (depositions of will-witnesses); c. 20, § 2 (depositions in civil causes; reasonable notice required; when it is "impracticable," and there is "urgent necessity," such notice as judge shall think to be "reasonable and direct"); Code 1901, § 132 (notice of commission to take testimony of attesting witnesses to a will need not be given, unless the probate is opposed); §§ 1058, 1060 (in general); Fla. Rev. St. 1892, §§ 1124, 1134 (in general); §§ 2913 ff. (deposition for accused person); St. 1899, c. 4727, § 2 (in general); Ga. Code 1895, §§ 5299-5301 (commissions on interrogatories); § 5313 (depositions without commission); Haw. Civil Laws 1897, §§ 1379-1382 (domestic depositions); Ida. Rev. St. 1887, §§ 6061, 6067, 6069, 7588, 8163, 8182 (in general); St. 1899, Feb. 10, §§ 2, 31 (in general); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, §§ 24-28, c. 148, § 4 (in general); Ind. Rev. St. 1897, §§ 428-430 (in general); St. 1899, c. 74 (probate proceedings); Ia. Code 1897, §§ 4687-4689, 4693-4699 (in general); § 5222 (accused's depositions); Kan. Gen. St. 1897, c. 95, §§ 363, 364, c. 102,

§ 1383. Same: Depositions in Perpetuam Memoriam. The principle requiring notice and opportunity of cross-examination applies equally to depositions taken in view of future litigation, in perpetuam memoriam; and it is preserved in the statutes as well as enforced in the judicial rulings.¹ Where a

§ 171 (in general); 1893, Peterson v. Albach, 51 Kan. 150, 32 Pac. 917 (time of notice); Ky. Stats. 1899, § 4855 (for depositions of attesting will-witnesses, notice required only to the party contestant); C. Cr. P. 1895, § 153 (defendant's depositions in criminal cases); C. C. P. 1895, §§ 566-569 (in general); La. Rev. L. 1897, §§ 615, 621, C. Pr. 1894, §§ 425-430, 436 (in general); St. 1896, No. 124, Wolff's Rev. L. 278 (criminal cases); 1903, State v. Jackson, 111 La. 343, 35 So. 596 (depositions taken for the prosecution under St. 1896, No. 124, admitted; the statute construed); Me. Pub. St. 1883, c. 107, §§ 5-9 (in general); Md. Pub. G. L. 1888, art. 35, §§ 15, 16, 19, 22, 28 (in general); art. 84, § 9 (depositions in shipping cases); 1800, Gittings v. Hall, 1 H. & J. 14, 18 (notice necessary for depositions under the act of 1723, c. 8, for land commissions); Miss. Pub. St. 1882, c. 169, §§ 25, 43, Rev. L. 1902, c. 175, §§ 27, 45 (notice required; unless notice was impossible under the circumstances); St. 1883, c. 188, St. 1899, c. 123, Rev. L. 1902, c. 175, § 43 (where the adverse party does not appear to defend, no notice is required); Mich. Comp. L. 1897, § 10136 (in general); 1897, Drosowski v. Chosen Friends, 114 Mich. 178, 72 N. W. 169 (reasonable notice; trial Court's discretion approved); Minn. Gen. St. 1894, §§ 5669-5675, 5685, 5688 (in general); Miss. Annot. Code 1892, §§ 1750-1764 (in general); Mo. Rev. St. 1899, §§ 2883-2891, 2902 (in general); 1894, Glenn v. Hunt, 120 Mo. 333, 336, 25 S. W. 181 (notice not necessary under R. S. 1889, § 4435, for an opponent out of the State); Mont. C. C. P. 1895, §§ 3354, 3363 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2028, 2034); P. C. §§ 2483, 2504, 2506 (like Cal. P. C. §§ 1338, 1353, 1355); § 1692 (deposition before a magistrate of a witness not giving recognition); Nebr. Comp. St. 1899, §§ 5952-5954, 7187 (in general); Nev. Gen. St. 1885, §§ 3430, 3434, 4438 (in general); §§ 3910, 4056 (deposition of a witness for the people, admissible if it is taken in the defendant's presence, and the defendant has had "an opportunity to cross-examine"); N. H. Pub. St. 1891, c. 225, §§ 4, 5, 14 (in general); N. J. Gen. St. 1896, Evidence, § 25 (in general); § 30 (notice of eight days required for a commission out of the State, unless by consent or by judge's order); §§ 38, 66 (for depositions before a judge, commissioner, etc., out of the State, terms of notice prescribed); § 63 (same, deposition in foreign State); St. 1900, c. 150, §§ 31, 38, 45 (former provisions repeated); St. 1902, c. 135 (in a proceeding for divorce or annulment, where no appearance is entered, a deposition in another State or Territory may be taken and used "ex parte and without notice"); N. M. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 3037-3040 (in general); N. Y. C. Cr. P. 1881, § 219 (in depositions for the prosecution, two days' notice must be given); § 632 (in depositions for accused, notice as specified by the judge);

C. C. P. 1877, §§ 896, 899 (notice prescribed); N. C. Code 1883, § 1357 (in general); St. 1891, c. 522 (depositions taken by accused); 1896, State v. Finley, 118 N. C. 1161, 24 S. E. 495 (under c. 522, St. 1891, a co-defendant need not be notified); N. D. Rev. C. 1895, §§ 5677-5679 (civil cases); §§ 8378, 8388 (criminal cases); Oh. Rev. St. §§ 5273, 5274 (in general); § 7293 (in criminal cases, the judge's order may prescribe terms of notice); Okl. Stats. 1893, §§ 4242, 4243, 5287, 5351, 5362; Or. C. C. P. 1892, §§ 817, 821, 822, 823, 828 (in general); Pa. St. 1895, Pub. Laws, 279, § 1; R. I. Gen. Laws, 1896, c. 244, §§ 21, 24, 28; St. 1902, c. 998; 1851, Hazard v. R. Co., 2 R. I. 62 (no notice required under statute, for an opponent more than 100 miles distant); S. C. Rev. St. 1893, §§ 2333, 2342, Civ. C. 1902, §§ 2869, 2878 (ten days' notice required for depositions on commission or before a court clerk); ib. §§ 2345 and ib. 2881 ("reasonable notice, not less than ten days," unless notice is impracticable, required for certain depositions); ib. §§ 891 and ib. 992 (justice Court rule); the statutes are applied in the following cases: 1900, Henderson v. Williams, 57 S. C. 1, 35 S. E. 261; 1901, Wallingford v. Tel. Co., 60 id. 201, 38 S. E. 443; S. D. Stats. 1899, §§ 6520-6521 (civil cases); §§ 8812, 8823 (criminal cases); Tenn. Code 1896, §§ 5627, 5640-5647 (notice to be as the Court may order, or according to detailed rules provided); § 5632 (if cross-examination is omitted, it may be had afterwards); § 7356 (rules for civil cases made applicable to defendant's depositions in criminal cases); Tex. Rev. Civ. Stats. 1895, §§ 2274-2276 (in general); C. Cr. P. 1895, §§ 797, 805, 808 (in general); Utah Rev. St. 1898, §§ 3450, 3456-3461, 5031, 5042 (in general); Vt. St. 1894, §§ 1264, 1265, 1924 (reasonable notice is to be given; for non-residents having no attorney in the State, no notice is necessary); §§ 153, 155 (notice required in election contests); 1868, Kimpton v. Glover, 41 Vt. 284 (time of notice); Va. Code 1887, §§ 3362, 3363 (in general); Wash. C. & Stats. 1897, §§ 6019, 6020, 6024, 6708 (in general); W. Va. Code 1891, c. 130, § 35 (in general); c. 50, § 106 (depositions before justices); c. 121, § 3 (specific rules for service of notice on non-residents); c. 77, § 27 (deposition of subscribing witness to will; notice necessary only to a party opposing probate); Wis. Stats. 1898, §§ 4086, 4096, 4102, 4114, 4115 (in general); Wyo. Rev. St. 1887, §§ 2621, 2622, St. 1895, c. 96, §§ 2, 4 (in general).

¹ ENGLAND: Rules of Court 1883, Ord. 37, r. 5 (quoted ante, § 1380; presumably suffices for this purpose); CANADA: Compare the statutes cited ante, § 1380, and post, § 1388; UNITED STATES: Notice is prescribed, except as otherwise stated; compare also the statutes cited post, § 1388, as to identity of parties and issues; Ala. Code 1897, §§ 1863, 1864, 1870, 1873; Alaska C. C. P. 1900, § 685; Ariz. Rev. St. 1887,

deposition is offered against one who has not been notified and could not have been, even by due diligence (as is likely to occur in cases where the parties to the future litigation are still unknown), it may be thought that a case of necessity exists, dispensing with the requirement; the statutes sometimes provide expressly that a deposition may be or shall not be used against such a party.² In some jurisdictions, the statute requires that this kind of deposition shall be publicly recorded, the object being to secure as wide a notice of it as possible, so that counter-testimony may be availed of if desired; an object analogous to that of the requirement of notice for cross-examination.³ Under such a statute an unrecorded deposition would be inadmissible.⁴

§ 1384. Affidavits; Testimony of King or Ambassador. Upon the prin-

§ 1839; Ark. Stats. 1894, §§ 3017 ff. (notice required; if the adverse party is an infant, non-resident, unknown, or for four months absent from the State, the Court may appoint a cross-examiner); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 2084; Colo. C. C. P. 1891, § 366; Conn. Gen. St. 1887, § 1080; D. C. Comp. St. 1894, c. 20, §§ 6, 7, 11 (notice required); § 14 (any deposition in perpetuam may in Court's discretion be admitted); Del. Rev. St. 1893, c. 56, § 2 (boundary cases; notice to owners and tenants required); Fla. Rev. St. 1892, § 1138; Ga. Code 1895, § 3961 (the Court is to provide for "the most effectual notice"); Haw. Civil Laws 1897, § 1390; Ida. Rev. St. 1887, §§ 6117-6119; St. 1899, Feb. 10, § 24; Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, §§ 39-44 (notice required, and details prescribed; if the ordinary requirements seem to the Court insufficient, "the Court may order such reasonable notice to be given as it shall deem proper"); Ind. Rev. St. 1897, §§ 450-451 (in general); §§ 1272, 1280 (testimony to perpetuate a lost deed, record, etc., before the recorder, etc.; no notice apparently required); Ia. Code 1897, §§ 4718-4720 (notice required; if personal notice is impossible, the Court is to appoint a cross-examiner); Kan. Gen. St. 1897, c. 95, §§ 384, 385 (notice required; if personal notice is impossible, a cross-examiner is to be appointed by the Court); Ky. C. C. P. 1895, § 611 (notice to the "expected adverse party," required); La. C. Pr. 1894, § 440; Me. Pub. St. 1883, c. 107, §§ 22, 27; Md. Pub. G. L. 1883, art. 35, § 31 (land-boundaries; notice is to be posted in "the most public places in the county" 20 days before, and where all persons interested are known and any one lives out of the county, by newspaper advertisement 40 days before); Mass. Pub. St. 1882, c. 169, §§ 47, 54, 62; Rev. L. 1902, c. 175, §§ 48-62; Mich. Comp. L. 1897, § 10140; Minn. Gen. St. 1894, §§ 5694, 5701; Miss. Annot. Code 1892, §§ 1767-1771; Mo. Rev. St. 1899, §§ 4528-4531, 4551; 1866, Patterson v. Fagan, 38 Mo. 70, 80 (notice necessary); Mont. C. C. P. 1895, § 3421; Nebr. Comp. St. 1899, § 5996 (notice prescribed, as the judge directs; if personal notice is impossible, the judge is to appoint a cross-examiner); Nev. Gen. St. 1885, §§ 3439-3442; N. H. Pub. St. 1891, c. 226, §§ 3-5; N. M. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 3050-3055; N. D. Rev. C. 1895, § 5709; Oh. Rev. St. 1898, §§ 5874-6 (in general); §§ 1169, 1188, 1193 (county surveyor may take and return testimony to marks, etc., on notice to the adverse party); Okla. Stats. 1893, §§ 4281, 4282 (notice required; the Court to prescribe details, and to appoint an attorney to cross-interrogate in case no personal notice can be given); Or. C. C. P. 1892, §§ 860, 865 (notice required, and details prescribed; the officer himself to cross-examine, if no opponent appears); R. I. Gen. L. 1896, c. 244, §§ 32, 33; S. D. Stats. 1899, § 6549 (the judge to prescribe terms of notice; and to appoint a cross-examining attorney where the parties cannot be notified); Tenn. Code 1896, §§ 5671, 5672; Tex. Rev. Civ. Stats. 1895, § 2277; U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 867 (quoted post, § 1388); § 866 (provisions of § 863 as to depositions de bene do not here apply); 1897, Green v. Compagnia, 82 Fed. 490, 495 (excluded, if taken without notice; here, a corporation in a foreign country, witnesses being sailors about to leave this country); Utah Rev. St. 1898, §§ 3467-3469; Vt. St. 1894, §§ 1274, 1275; Va. Code 1887, § 3369 (reasonable notice required to "the persons who may be so affected"); Wash. C. & Stats. 1897, § 6035; W. Va. Code 1891, c. 130, § 39 (reasonable notice to be given to "the persons who may be so affected"); Wis. Stats. 1898, §§ 4118, 4125, 4128, 4131; Wyo. Rev. St. 1887, § 3069 (notice required; the Court to appoint a cross-examiner, where personal notice cannot be given).

² See the statutes in § 1388, post.

³ Mass. Rev. L. 1902, c. 175, §§ 51, 63; 1840, Thacher, J., in Com. v. Stone, Thacher Cr. C. 604, 607 ("Why does the statute require that a deposition in perpetuam should be recorded? It is to preserve its purity and integrity, as well as the testimony itself. The record is a publication and serves to make it known as well as remembered. If it should contain errors or falsehoods, the parties in interest will have an opportunity to guard against them in season, either by taking the deposition de novo, or by putting on record the deposition of others to contradict or explain its contents").

⁴ 1814, Bradstreet v. Baldwin, 11 Mass. 229, 233; 1822, Braintree v. Hingham, 1 Pick. 245, 247; 1840, Com. v. Stone, Thacher Cr. C. 604, 607.

ciples already examined, it is perfectly clear that a mere affidavit — i. e. a statement sworn to before an officer — is inadmissible :

1767, Buller, J., Trials at Nisi Prius, 241 : “From what has been said, it is evident that, as there can be no cross-examination, a voluntary affidavit is no evidence between strangers.”

1853, Common-Law Practice Commissioners, Second Report, p. 31 : “All applications to the Courts for their summary intervention in what may be termed incidental matters are founded on testimony contained in affidavits. If resisted, the evidence in opposition is brought before the Court in the same manner. Now it must be admitted that this species of evidence is of all others the most unsatisfactory. All the circumstances which give to the system of English procedure its peculiar and characteristic merits — vide voce interrogation, cross-examination, publicity, examination in the presence of the tribunal, whereby an opportunity is afforded of observing the demeanor of the witness — are here wanting; and not only this, but the testimony is often not the spontaneous statement of the witness; the affidavit is prepared for and sworn to by the deponent, often without the sense of responsibility which would be felt by a witness when delivering a statement in his own words. Another very serious objection to affidavit-evidence is that there is no effectual mode of ascertaining the means of knowledge or the grounds on which general conclusions sworn to have been arrived at.”

1851, Grier, J., in Walsh v. Rogers, 13 How. 287 (referring to ex parte depositions): “Testimony thus taken is liable to great abuse. At best it is calculated to elicit only such a partial statement of the truth as may have the effect of entire falsehood. The person who prepares the witness and examines him can generally have just so much or so little of the truth, or such a version of it, as will suit his case.”

1870, Thornton, J., in Becker v. Quigg, 54 Ill. 390, 394 (rejecting an affidavit to prove loss of a document): “One serious objection to the admission of ex parte affidavits is that the opposite party is denied the privilege of cross-examination. This is a most efficacious test for the discovery of truth, and should never be departed from, except from necessity. A witness subjected to this test cannot easily impose on the Court or fabricate falsehood.”

This principle has been constantly recognized and enforced judicially.¹ There are, however, a number of instances (post, §§ 1709–1711), which form special exceptions to the Hearsay rule. They are briefly these: (1) a common-law exception for disqualified parties (when that form of incompetency prevailed), admitting the affidavit of the loss of a document proved by copy; this has been perpetuated in some statutes; (2) a common-law exception in Pennsylvania for an affidavit of a copy of a foreign register, in certain cases; (3) a statutory exception, widely in favor, for an affidavit of publication of a newspaper notice; (4) statutory exceptions in sundry unrelated cases. The use of affidavits in interlocutory and ex parte proceedings is not within the present

¹ 1691, R. v. Taylor, Skinner 403; 1838, Pickering v. Townsend, 118 Ala. 351, 23 So. 703; 1883, Smith v. Feltz, 42 Ark. 355, 357; 1899, People v. Plyer, 126 Cal. 379, 58 Pac. 904 (affidavit not admissible to prove death of former witness in order to use his testimony); 1889, Shreve v. Cicero, 129 Ill. 226, 228, 21 N. E. 815 (affidavit of inspection of registry of deeds, excluded); 1871, State v. Felter, 32 Ia. 49, 51; 1893, Hudson v. Appleton, 87 id. 605, 607, 54 N. W. 462 (even where the affiant has become ill and mentally incompetent); 1894, Democrat

P. Co. v. Lewis, 90 id. 304, 57 N. W. 869 (affidavits usable before a certain board, here excluded); 1866, Patterson v. Fagan, 38 Mo. 70, 82; 1898, Supreme Lodge v. Jaggars, 62 N. J. L. 96, 40 Atl. 783; 1845, Harper v. Burrow, 6 Ired. 33; 1893, Allen v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cl. 141, 145.

Distinguish the following: 1889, Graham v. McReynolds, 88 Tenn. 240, 247, 12 S. W. 547 (affidavit by plaintiff, offered as ratifying attorney's action in prosecuting suit; admitted).

Distinguish also the use of the opponent's affidavit as an admission (ante, § 1075).

purview, which is confined to adversary proceedings in the nature of common-law trials.

At common law, in England, the king's testimony as an individual seems to have been receivable without attendance for cross-examination, thus forming an exception to the Hearsay rule.² On the same principle it would seem that the testimony of an ambassador (privileged from attendance under the principle of § 2372, post) should be receivable; nevertheless, no exception is recognized, i. e. the ambassador's testimony must be taken, if at all, in the form of a deposition subjected to cross-examination, — in criminal cases at least.³

§ 1385. Ex parte Expert Investigations; Preliminary Rulings on the Voir Dire; Testimony by an Opponent. (1) Of late years, the fallacious suggestion has sometimes been made by unreflecting counsel that the rule requiring an opportunity of cross-examination applies to forbid the use of a diagram or model or map, or of a chemical analysis or other expert investigation, prepared or made out of court without notice to the other party. The suggestion is erroneous, for the reason that there is afforded in such cases the required opportunity of cross-examination, namely, when the witness who has made the model or the analysis takes the stand at the trial to testify to the results of his work. No more can be demanded. The map or model or analysis is not in itself testimony (ante, § 793); it is nothing until adopted by a competent witness as a part of his testimony and a mode of communication. One might as well demand that an opportunity of cross-examination be had at the time of the occurrence of an affray, or at the time that a witness is collecting his thoughts or doing any other act in preparation for testimony. The suggestion in question has been universally and properly repudiated by the Courts:

1886, Henry, C. J., in State v. Leabo, 89 Mo. 247, 253, 1 S. W. 288 (examination of corpse by experts): "There is but a slight, if any, analogy between the examination by an expert or any one else of physical objects with a view of testifying to the result of his observations, and the deposition of a witness, as regards notice; the notice in the latter case is required in order that the opposite side may have an opportunity to cross-examine the deponent upon the facts testified to by him; the expert, when he comes to testify, is subject to that cross-examination."

1894, Burg v. R. Co., 90 Ia. 106, 118, 57 N. W. 680: "It is not the law that in making such tests, measurements, etc., the opposite party is entitled to notice in order that he may be present. It is the right of each party, in the preparation for trial, to take all legal steps in the way of being able to meet the issues of fact by proofs; and in preparing for the presentation of his evidence, no notice to the adverse party is required."¹

² The cases are collected post, § 1674.

³ The cases are collected post, § 1407.

¹ Accord: 1881, Augusta & S. R. Co. v. Dorsey, 68 Ga. 234 (model prepared ex parte, admissible); 1894, Burg v. R. Co., 90 Ia. 106, 118 (quoted supra); 1886, State v. Leabo, 89 Mo. 247, 253, 1 S. W. 288 (quoted supra); 1887, State v. Brooks, 92 id. 542, 579, 5 S. W. 257, 330 (similar); 1881, State v. Morris, 84 N. C. 756, 760 (notice to a defendant, not necessary; here, a witness who had examined boot-tracks; to admit the opposite contention "is to put an end to all inquiry into the commission of offences depending upon the introduction of circumstantial evidence"); 1887, State v. Whitacre, 98 id. 753, 3 S. E. 488 (diagrams made ex parte, received); 1903, State v. Nagle, — R. I. —, 54 Atl. 1063 (expert's experiments with a pistol); 1885, Lipes v. State, 15 Lea 125 (testimony from witnesses who examined the defendant's feet for the express purpose of seeing whether they fitted tracks, admissible); 1886,

No doubt a part of the notion leading to the making of such an objection is the distrust which must be felt for testimony coming from one who has been employed as a partisan and must therefore have been interested to reach results of a certain tenor. But this element in the objection is in truth directed, not against the absence of notice and cross-examination, but against the competency of a hired and partisan expert witness.² Since today no interest can disqualify, the objection fails in this aspect also.³

(2) In preliminary rulings by a judge on the admissibility of evidence, the ordinary rules of evidence do not apply. Hence there is no absolute right to cross-examination.⁴ Nevertheless, it is customary and proper to hear evidence on both sides before the ruling is made. Some Courts, however, are inclined erroneously to apply the specific right of cross-examination to that situation.⁵

(3) The interrogation of an opponent, by way of discovery (post, § 1856), is in itself in the nature of a cross-examination, and secures all the benefits of it. But the manner and subject of the interrogatories may be limited by the rule against impeaching one's own witness (ante, § 916), when the opponent is examined by deposition or on the stand like other witnesses. By the same rule, the interrogation of even an ordinary witness may be restricted (ante, §§ 910-915); and this question is sometimes loosely and improperly referred to as involving the general "right to cross-examine," as if that right were not recognized. So, also, the same improper phrase is sometimes applied to the rule forbidding to deal with the subject of one's own case on cross-examination (post, § 1885).⁶

Mississippi & T. R. Co. v. Ayres, 16 id. 725, 727 (expert examination ex parte of an injured person, made pendente lite, admissible; that "the evidence of an expert is rendered incompetent because based upon an ex parte examination," repudiated); 1894, Byers v. Railroad, 94 Tenn. 345, 352, 29 S. W. 128 (test made ex parte as to the time required for stopping a train, admitted; preceding cases approved); 1896, Moore v. State, 96 id. 209, 33 S. W. 1046 (examination of the deceased by two physicians called to him just after the affray; that this was done without notice to defendant, is no objection); 1898, Day v. U. S., 30 C. C. A. 572, 87 Fed. 125 (witnesses who had examined certain horses, though not for the express purpose of determining their satisfaction of a contract, admitted); 1902, Moran Bros. Co. v. Snoqualmie F. P. Co., 29 Wash. 292, 69 Pac. 759 (model of a regulator-box for a power-plant); 1901, Mauch v. Hartford, 112 Wis. 40, 87 N. W. 816 (X-ray photograph); 1902, Hayes v. State, 112 id. 304, 87 N. W. 1076 (exhumation and post-mortem examination).

For the use of an ex parte surveyor's return, under statute, see post, § 1665.

² It is this consideration which was had in mind by Messrs. Wharton & Stillé, Medical Jurisprudence, § 1246, in a passage which was probably the original source of the objection in question.

³ 1898, Sanborn, J., in Day v. U. S., — U. S. App. —, 87 Fed. 125: "The measure of the competency of a witness is not the view or purpose with which he obtained his information, but the extent and character of the knowledge he obtained. The question is not why he obtained his knowledge, but what amount of knowledge he acquired."

For a consideration of the propriety of reform in the system of expert witnesses, see ante, § 562.

For the rule of notice to the opponent for evidence in general, see post, § 1845.

⁴ 1868, Com. v. Morrell, 99 Mass. 542, 543; 1895, Com. v. Hall, 164 id. 152, 41 N. E. 133.

⁵ Compare the citations ante, § 487 (qualifications of witnesses), § 861 (confessions), § 1258 (documentary originals), post, § 1451 (dying declarations), § 2550 (judge and jury).

⁶ Distinguish also the question whether there is a right of cross-examination on an affidavit denying common source of title in ejectment; here the affidavit is really only a sworn pleading: 1884, Thatcher v. Olmstead, 110 Ill. 26 ("an oath of this character is not evidence").

2. Issues and Parties, as affecting Opportunity of Cross-examination.

§ 1386. General Principle: Issue and Parties must have been Substantially the Same. A testimonial statement may still not satisfy the Hearsay rule even where it has been made before a tribunal or officer at which there was cross-examination, or the opportunity, for the then opponent; because the cross-examination, for which there must have been an opportunity, must have been an adequate one. Unless the issues were then the same as they are when the former statement is offered, the cross-examination would not have been directed to the same material points of investigation, and therefore could not have been an adequate test for exposing inaccuracies and falsehoods. Unless, furthermore, the parties were the same in motive and interest, there is a similar inadequacy of opportunity, for the present opponent cannot be fairly required to abide by the possible omissions, negligence, or collusion, of a different party, whose proper utilization of the opportunity he has no means of ascertaining:

1726, Chief Baron Gilbert, Evidence, 68: "When you give in evidence any matter sworn at a former trial, it must be between the same parties, because otherwise you dispossess your adversary of the liberty to cross-examine."

1767, Buller, J., Trials at Nisi Prius, 239: "A Deposition cannot be given in Evidence against any Person that was not a Party to the Suit; and the Reason is because he had not Liberty to cross-examine the Witness, and it is against natural Justice that a Man should be concluded by Proofs in a Cause to which he was not a Party."

1777, Mansfield, L. C. J., in Goodright v. Moss, Cowper, 592: "[As to] offering a deposition or an answer in evidence against a person not a party to the original suit. That cannot be done, for this reason, because such person has it not in his power to cross-examine."

1845, Gilchrist, J., in Bailey v. Woods, 17 N. H. 372: "We do not understand that the admissibility of such evidence depends so much upon the particular character of the tribunal as upon other matters. If the testimony be given under oath in a judicial proceeding, in which the adverse litigant was a party and where he had a right to cross-examine and was legally called upon to do so, the great and ordinary tests of truth being no longer wanting, the testimony so given is admitted in any subsequent suit between the parties. It seems to depend rather upon the right to cross-examine than upon the precise nominal identity of the parties."

1856, Bartley, C. J., in Summons v. State, 5 Oh. St. 343: "The main reason for the exclusion of hearsay evidence is to be found in the want of the sanction of an oath, of legal authority requiring the statement, and an opportunity for cross-examination. Where these important tests of truth are not wanting, and the testimony of the statements of the deceased witness is offered on a subsequent trial between the same parties, touching the same subject-matter, and open to all the means of impeachment and objection to incompetency which might be taken if the deceased person could be present as a witness, there would not appear to be any sound and satisfactory ground for its exclusion."

1862, Hinman, C. J., in Lane v. Brainerd, 30 Conn. 579: "As that was a trial between different parties, having different rights and with whom the plaintiff had no privity, and as he had no opportunity to examine or cross-examine the witnesses, it would be contrary to the first principles of justice to bind or in any way affect his interests by the evidence given on that occasion."¹

¹ For the mode of proving former testimony, by stenographers' notes, judges' reports, etc., see post, §§ 1666-1669. For the rule that only the substance or a part need be proved, see post, §§ 2098, 2103, 2115.

§ 1387. Issue the Same. The issue on the occasion when the former testimony or deposition was given must have been substantially the same, for otherwise it cannot be supposed that the former statement was sufficiently tested by cross-examination upon the point now in issue. Conversely, it is sufficient if the issue was the same, or substantially so with reference to the likelihood of adequate cross-examination, because the opponent has thus already had the full benefit of the security intended by the law.

The general rule in this shape is nowhere disputed. But there is naturally much variance shown in the strictness of its application in specific cases.¹ It

¹ In the following list, those rulings which rest on complicated facts peculiar to the special case, or which merely apply the general rule to facts not stated, are noted without any detailed statement of the ruling: England: 1817, R. v. Smith, R. & R. 339 (testimony on charge of assault and robbery, admitted on a subsequent charge of murder for same act); 1834, Alderson, B., in Doe v. Foster, 1 A. & E. 791, note (ejection for one piece of land, then for another, but the issue in both being the same, viz., who was A. B.'s heir; admissible); 1850, R. v. Ledbetter, 3 C. & K. 108 (testimony on a charge of assault, not received on a trial for felonious wounding, the act being the same; the ruling is in effect repudiated by later cases); 1852, R. v. Dilmore, 6 Cox Cr. 52 (testimony on a charge of felonious wounding, admitted on a charge of manslaughter for the same act); 1854, R. v. Beeston, ib. 425, Dears. Cr. C. 405 (deposition on a charge of felonious wounding with intent to do bodily harm, admitted on a trial for murder, the act being the same; Jervis, C. J.: "The presiding judge must determine in each case whether the prisoner has had full opportunity of cross-examination; and if the charges were entirely different, he would not decide that there had been that opportunity; but where it is the same case, and only some technical difference in the charge, the accused generally has had full opportunity of cross-examining;" Alderson, B.: "The question really is whether the deposition was taken under such circumstances that the accused had full opportunity of cross-examination"); 1864, R. v. Lee, 4 F. & F. 63 (testimony on a charge of robbery, admitted on a charge of murder, the assault being the same); 1874, R. v. Castro (Tichborne Case), Charge of Cockburn, C. J., II, 305 (testimony in a civil case admitted at the trial of the then claimant for perjury at the former trial); 1876, Brown v. White, 24 W. Rep. 456, Jessel, M. R.; Canada: Man.: 1898, R. v. Hamilton, 12 Man. 354 (abortion; deposition taken "on another charge of the same purport and in connection with the same unlawful purpose," admitted); N. Br.: 1862, Bennett v. Jones, 5 All. 342 (the issue being substantially the same, for board of the plaintiff's wife, her former testimony was admitted); 1896, Hovey v. Long, 33 N. Br. 462, 467 (testimony at a former trial between the same parties on the same issues, admitted); United States: Ala.: 1850, Davis v. State, 17 Ala. 357 (testimony on a charge of larceny by stealing a mule, excluded on a charge of stealing a buggy; the act of taking being the same); 1851, Long v. Davis, 18 id. 801, 802 (former issue, plea in abatement in an action on a note; present issue, a plea to merits; admitted); Ark.: 1895, Woodruff v. State, 61 Ark. 157, 32 S. W. 102; Cal.: 1873, Pico v. Cuyas, 47 Cal. 174, 179; for the peculiar rule in this State as to testimony before the committing magistrate, see post, § 1398; Colo.: 1902, Woodworth v. Gorsline, 30 Colo. 186, 69 Pac. 705 (testimony in replevin suit against a sheriff, held admissible in a subsequent action of trover for the same goods against the creditor jointly liable); Conn.: 1864, Spear v. Coon, 32 Conn. 292 (deposition used on petition for new trial, admissible on the new trial; the two are "parts of the same proceedings"); 1902, Mechanics' Bank v. Woodward, 74 id. 689, 51 Atl. 1084 (action for money paid to the defendant's use on notes forged by his wife; testimony at the prior trial of an action, founded on the same transaction, after which an amended complaint had been substituted for the present suit, held admissible); Del.: 1838, Rash v. Parnel, 2 Harringt. 448, 456 (issue out of probate devisavit vel non; deposition taken on an application for review of a former issue on the same will, admitted); Ga.: 1849, Crawford v. Word, 7 Ga. 445, 456; 1872, Gavan v. Ellsworth, 45 id. 283, 288 (former trial a criminal complaint for the same assault as the present civil action; admitted); 1881, Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Venable, ib. 697, 699 (former action, by a mother for personal injuries; present action, by a child for her death from those injuries; admitted); 1900, Whitaker v. Arnold, 110 id. 857, 36 S. E. 231; 1900, Hooper v. R. Co., 112 id. 96, 37 S. E. 165 (testimony in a suit for personal injury by a minor through his father as next friend, not admitted in a suit by the father for loss of service caused by the same injury); 1901, Radford v. R. Co. 113 id. 627, 39 S. E. 108 (answers to interrogatories in a former suit between the same parties for the same claim, but dismissed and now renewed, admitted); Ill.: 1854, Doyle v. Wiley, 15 Ill. 576, 578 (depositions taken before amendment and filing of new bill, admitted); Kan.: 1880, State v. Wilson, 24 Kans. 189, 194 (testimony on charge of assault with intent to kill B., admitted on trial for murder of B.); Ky.: 1820, Brooks v. Cannon, 2 A. K. Marsh. 525 (successive bills for the same cause; admitted); 1850, Heth v. Young, 11 B. Mour. 278, 280; Md.: 1808, Hopkins v. Stump, 2 H. & J. 301, 303 is enough to suggest that the situation is one that calls for common sense and liberality in the application of the rule, and not a narrow and pedantic illiberality. On the whole, the judicial rulings show a liberal inclination to receive testimony already adequately tested; but there is yet room for much improvement.

A statute sometimes attempts to provide for the admission, under the present rule, of testimony at a former trial,² as well as of ordinary deposi-

(depositions on a former dismissed bill for same cause and same parties, admitted); 1821, Bowie v. O'Neale, 5 id. 226, 231; 1900, Baltimore Consol. R. Co. v. State, 91 Md. 506, 46 Atl. 1000 (the deponent being present and testifying at the first trial, the deposition was not used; when offered at the second trial, the deponent being absent, it was excluded, because "his deposition should be retaken for use at that trial, so that the opposing party may have the opportunity, at the execution of the second commission, to avail of the witness' antecedent admissions and contradictions [at the first trial]"; this is unpractical and over-refined reasoning; the opponent in such case can obtain the same benefit by proving the witness' testimony given at the first trial, or if that would be forbidden by the rule of § 1032, ante, he could himself have taken a second deposition to put the question); Mass.: 1828, Melvin v. Whiting, 7 Pick. 81 (fishery controversy in both suits, but in the former a claim of free fishery, in the latter a claim of several fishery; excluded); 1871, Weatherby v. Brown, 106 Mass. 338 (deposition before amendment of declaration, admitted); Minn.: 1899, Watson v. R. Co., 76 Minn. 358, 79 N. W. 308 (death by wrongful act; issues after amendment held substantially the same); Miss.: 1902, Dukes v. State, 80 Miss. 353, 31 So. 744 (murder; testimony of the deceased at a prior trial for the robbery which resulted in the death, excluded; this ruling is over-strict); Mo.: 1865, Jaccard v. Anderson, 37 Mo. 91, 95; Nebr.: 1897, Ord v. Nash, 50 Nebr. 335, 69 N. W. 964 (testimony at any one of two or more prior trials, admissible); N. H.: 1863, Leviston v. French, 45 N. H. 21; N. Y.: 1848, Osborn v. Bell, 5 Denio 370, 377 (implied assumpsit for goods tortiously seized and sold; testimony in a former action of trover by plaintiff's intestate for the same taking, admitted); N. C.: 1839, M'Morine v. Storey, 4 Dev. & B. 189 (testimony in D.'s action to recover slaves transferred to J., not admitted in an action by D.'s creditor against J.'s administrator as executor de son tort); 1898, Mabe v. Mabe, 122 N. C. 552, 29 S. E. 843 (ejectment; deposition in another State between the same parties in a suit on a note for the price of the same land, the matters being "connected," received); Okl.: 1897, Watkins v. U. S., 5 Okl. 729, 50 Pac. 88 (perjury; testimony in the civil cause in which the perjury was charged, excluded); Pa.: 1851, Jones v. Wood, 16 Pa. 25, 43 (suits involving different land but the same boundaries; admitted); 1853, Wertz v. May, 21 id. 274, 279 (previous action terminated by a non-suit; admissible); 1860, Haupt v. Henninger, 37 id. 138, 140 (depositions taken for application to a judge in chancery, admissible in a feigned issue before jury on same point); S. C.: 1850, Bishop v. Tucker, 4 Rich. L. 178, 182; 1902, Oliver v. R. Co., 65 S. C. 1, 43 S. E. 307 (deposition at a first trial, admitted at the second; re-taking not required); Tex.: 1880, Dunlap v. State, 9 Tex. App. 179, 188 (testimony on charge of assault with intent to murder, admitted on trial for murder); 1901, People's N. Bank v. Mlkey, 94 Tex. 395, 60 S. W. 753 (depositions taken between the same parties, except one, in a prior suit on the same issue begun in a justice's court but dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, excluded, because the statute merely allowed their use "in any suit in which they are taken"; unsound); U. S.: 1896, Seeley v. K. C. Star Co., 71 Fed. 554 (a deposition taken in a suit in a State court, not admissible after voluntary withdrawal of the suit and reinstitution for the same cause of action and against the same party in the Federal court; going upon R. S. § 861, limiting the taking of depositions to causes "pending in a district or circuit court"; the Federal Court here being bound to proceed under the Federal statute not sound; compare § 1381, ante); 1900, Metropolitan St. R. Co. v. Gumby, 39 C. C. A. 455, 99 Fed. 192 (loss of services of plaintiff's son; testimony of deceased witness for the son in his former action by a guardian for his own injury, not admitted for the plaintiff here, the parties and issues being different); 1900, U. S. Life Ins. Co. v. Ross, 42 id. 601, 102 Fed. 722 (admitting a deposition lawfully taken in Texas, before removal of the cause, of a witness residing out of the county, though not under the Federal statute more than 100 miles distant; in the Federal court the witness' death afterwards made it admissible); Va.: 1903, Reed v. Gold, — Va. —, 45 S. E. 868 (action by a receiver against delinquent stockholders of the corporation; testimony of a now deceased person in the prior chancery proceedings against the corporation, excluded, because the issues were not substantially the same); Wis.: 1864, Charlesworth v. Tinker, 18 Wis. 633, 635 (testimony on a criminal complaint for assault, admitted against plaintiff in a civil action for same cause).

² Compare also the statutes cited post, §§ 1413, 1416, 1417, particularly for testimony in issues of wills and bastardy: CANADA: Dom. Crim. Code 1892, § 688 (depositions are admissible in a prosecution "for any other offence" by the same person in all respects as they might be "according to law" on the trial of the charge for which they were taken); N. Br. Consol. St. 1877, c. 46, § 29 (former testimony, admissible "between the same parties or those tions, taken in the same or other proceedings,³ and of depositions taken in claiming under them"); Newf. Consol. St. 1892, c. 50, Rules of Court 33, par. 24 (former testimony may be used "in any subsequent proceedings in the same cause or matter"); N. Sc. Rules of Court 1900, Ord. 35, R. 24 (all testimony may be used "in any subsequent proceedings in the same cause or matter"); UNITED STATES: Ariz. St. 1903, No. 25, amending Rev. St. 1901, P. C. § 765 (testimony at the preliminary hearing before a magistrate is admissible "upon any subsequent trial of such defendant for the offence for which he is held"); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1870 (8) (testimony in a "former action between the same parties relating to the same matter," admissible); § 1316 (testimony at a probate is admissible "in any subsequent contests concerning the validity of the will or the sufficiency of the proof thereof"); Commissioners' amendment of 1901 (re-enacts C. C. P. § 1316 as 1303, and substitutes a new section; quoted ante, § 1310, under the rule for attesting witnesses); P. C. 1872, § 686 ("In a criminal action the defendant is entitled . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him in the presence of the Court, except that, where the charge has been preliminarily examined before a committing magistrate and the testimony taken down by question and answer in the presence of the defendant, who has, either in person or by counsel, cross-examined or had an opportunity to cross-examine the witness, or where the testimony of a witness on the part of the people, who is unable to give security for his appearance, has been taken conditionally in like manner in the presence," etc. as above, "the deposition of such a witness may be read" if dead, etc.; see the qualifying decisions cited post, § 1398; they seem to hold that testimony at a former trial, as distinguished from an examination before a committing magistrate, is inadmissible); Colo. Annot. Stats. 1891, § 2426 (testimony taken "before any former referee," admissible on hearing before the referee for a decree of appropriation of water); Conn. Gen. St. 1887, § 1094 ("in actions by or against the representatives of deceased persons, in which any trustee or receiver is an adverse party, the testimony of the deceased, relevant to the matter in issue, given at his examination, upon the application of said trustee or receiver, shall be received in evidence"); D. C. Code 1901, § 1065, as amended by U. S. St. 1902, c. 1329 (on the death, etc. of a party, his testimony given at a trial may be used "in any trial or hearing in relation to the same subject-matter between the same parties or their legal representatives"); Ga. Code 1895, § 5186, Cr. C. § 1001 (former testimony, admissible if "upon substantially the same issue and between substantially the same parties"); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 148, § 7 (testimony at a preliminary probate; see post, § 1413; for decisions construing it, see post, § 1417); Ind. Rev. St. 1897, § 1008 (written examination of complainant in bastardy before the justice may be used on the trial in Circuit Court); § 2831 (recorded testimony at probate of a will, admissible "upon any controversy concerning any lands devised by such will");

Ky. Stats. 1899, § 4643 (former testimony admissible, in trial Court's discretion, "in any subsequent trial of the same [civil] case between the same parties"); Me. Pub. St. 1883, c. 82, § 114 (former testimony as to execution or acknowledgment of a deed, admissible in another civil cause, "involving the same question," if the parties are the same, or if one is the same and the present opponent was agent for the opponent in the former suit); Mont. C. C. P. 1895, § 3146 (8) (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870 (8)); Nev. Gen. St. 1885, § 3910 (where the defendant has had "an opportunity to cross-examine" a witness before a committing magistrate, and the testimony has been taken in writing and subscribed in defendant's presence, it is admissible on the witness' death, etc.); N. J. Gen. St. 1896, Evidence, § 12 (on new trial in action revived after party's death, his former testimony is admissible); St. 1900, c. 150, § 11 (in a new trial of a civil action, the official stenographic report of the testimony of a witness who has since died is admissible); N. Y. C. C. P. 1877, 2653 a (testimony of will-witnesses at probate, admissible on contest in Supreme Court; see also id. § 2651); § 830 (testimony of a party or witness, since deceased or insane or incompetent, "taken or read in evidence at the former trial or hearing may be given or read in evidence at the new trial or hearing"); St. 1899, c. 352 (amending C. C. P. § 830, by inserting after "new trial or hearing," the words "or upon any subsequent trial or hearing of the same subject-matter in an action or special proceeding between the same parties, who were parties to such former trial or hearing or their legal representatives, by either party to such new trial or hearing or to such subsequent action or special proceeding"); Or. C. C. P. 1892, § 706 (8) (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870 (8)); Pa. St. 1887, Pub. L. 158, § 3, P. & L. Dig. Witnesses, § 6 (testimony of deceased, etc. witness, taken when defendant was present and had opportunity to cross-examine, admissible on a subsequent trial "of the same criminal issue"); Utah Rev. St. 1898, §§ 3475, 5013 (official stenographer's report may be read "in any subsequent trial or proceeding had in the same cause").

³ Compare also the statutes cited post, §§ 1411, 1416, 1417; Can. N. Br. Const. St. 1877, c. 37, § 185 (depositions taken "when the title to land shall be in question" may be read "in all future causes between the same parties or persons holding under them for the same land"); Alaska C. C. P. 1900, § 658 (like Or. Annot. C. 1892, § 829); Cal. P. C. 1872, § 686 (quoted supra, note 1); C. C. P. 1872, § 2034 (deposition "in any other action between the same parties upon the same subject," admissible); amended in 1901 (by changing the number to § 2021, and by inserting after "same parties," the words "or their privies or successors in interest"); Colo. C. C. P. 1891, § 344 (a deposition may be read "in any stage of the same action or proceeding"); Fla. Rev. St. 1892, § 1146 (a deposition is usable, after discontinuance or non-suit, in another suit "for the same cause between the same parties or their respective representatives," if it has remained on file); Haw. Civil Laws 1897, § 1388 (deposition is admissible, after nonsuit or discontinuance, in another suit "for the same cause between the same parties or their representatives"); Penal Laws 1897, § 678 ("depositions taken in the preliminary or other investigation of any charge against any person may be read as evidence in the prosecution of the same or any other offence whatever, upon the like proof" as in the prosecution in which they were taken); Ida. Rev. St. 1887, § 6670 (usable "in any stage of the same action or proceeding, or in any other action between the same parties, upon the same subject"), St. 1899, Feb. 10, § 22 (deposition duly filed may be used in another action, after dismissal, for the same cause, "between the parties or their assignees or representatives"); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 48 (all testimony taken by commissions of surveyors to establish corners "may be read in evidence in all suits in reference to said corners hereafter"); Ind. Rev. St. 1897, § 449 (when another action is "commenced for the same cause" after dismissal of the first, a deposition is usable "in the second or any other action between the parties, or their assignees or representatives, for the same cause"); Kan. Gen. St. 1897, c. 95, § 376 (usable "in any stage of the same action or proceeding, or in any other action or proceeding upon the same matter between the same parties"); Me. Pub. St. 1883, c. 107, § 19 (after nonsuit or discontinuance, depositions are usable in an action for the same cause between the same parties or their representatives); Mich. Comp. L. 1897, § 10142 (depositions are usable "on appeals and re-trials of the same cause of action"); Minn. Gen. St. 1894, § 5681 (a filed deposition is usable "when the plaintiff in any action discontinues it, or it is dismissed for any cause, and another action is afterward commenced for the same cause between the same parties, or their respective representatives"); Mont. C. C. P. 1895, § 3363 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2034); Nebr. Comp. St. 1899, § 5957 (a deposition is usable "in any stage of the same action or proceeding, or in any other action or proceeding, upon the same matter between the same parties"); Nev. Gen. St. 1885, § 3432 (usable "in any stage of the same action or proceeding"); N. Y. C. C. P. 1877, § 881 (deposition may be used in any subsequent action "between the same parties or between any parties claiming under them or either of them"); N. D. Rev. C. 1895, § 5682 (like Okl. Stats. § 4247); Oh. Rev. St. 1898, § 5278 (a deposition is usable "in any stage" of the action, "or in any other action or proceeding upon the same matter between the same parties"); Okl. Stats. 1893, § 4247 (admissible "in any stage of the same action or proceeding, or in any other action or proceeding upon the same matter between the same parties"); Pa. St. 1814, P. & L. Dig. Evidence, § 1 (a deposition is usable in "any subsequent cause in which the same matter shall be in dispute between the same parties, their heirs," etc.); S. D. Stats. 1899, § 6524 (like N. D. Rev.

perpetuam memoriam.⁴ But it is worth noting that usually the effect of the

C. § 5682); Utah Rev. St. 1898, § 3459 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2034); St. 1899, c. 57 (a deposition of a witness, taken de bene in a criminal case, may be used "upon any subsequent trial of the case in the district court on appeal"); Vt. Stats. 1894, § 1273 (on discontinuance by reason of death, depositions, not of parties, may be used in a subsequent suit between the same parties or their representatives involving the same subject-matter); Va. Code 1887, § 3362 (for actions pending in the same court between the same parties "depending upon the same facts, or involving the same matter of controversy, in whole or in part," a deposition taken in one may be read in all); Wash. C. & Stats. 1897, § 6029 (depositions are usable, after discontinuance or dismissal, in another action "for the same cause between the same parties, or their respective representatives"); § 6030 (depositions are usable on new trial on appeal and on change of venue); Wis. Stats. 1898, § 4093 (a deposition is usable "in any trial, inquiry, or assessment" in the action, and "in any other action between the same parties, including their respective legal representatives, involving the same controversy," if filed, etc.); Wyo. Rev. St. 1887, § 2626 (like Oh. Rev. St. § 5278).

⁴ Compare also the statutes cited post, § 1412; Can. N. St. Rules of Court 1900, Ord. 35, R. 35 (in proceedings in which the Attorney-General is made a party for the Crown, depositions in perpetuam are admissible though the Crown was not a party to the action in which it was taken); Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 324, § 15 (similar); Ala. Code 1897, § 1867 (admissible on trial "between the persons described in the affidavit as parties, actual or expectant, or their successors in interest"); Alaska C. C. P. 1900, § 690 (like Or. Annot. C. 1892, § 863); Ariz. Rev. St. 1887, § 1839 (usable "in any suit which may be hereafter instituted by or between any of the parties to the statement [affidavit] or those claiming under them"); Ark. Stats. 1894, § 3022 (admissible on a trial "between the persons named in the affidavit as expected parties, or their successors in interest"); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 2088 (usable "between the parties named in the petition as parties expectant, or their successors in interest, or between any parties wherein it may be material to establish the facts which such depositions prove"); Colo. C. C. P. 1891, § 370 (usable "if a trial be had between the parties named in the petition as parties expectant, or their successors in interest, or between any parties wherein it may be material to establish the facts which such depositions prove or tend to prove"); Conn. Gen. St. 1887, § 1083 (admissible in the cause for which they were taken and "in all other causes" with same subject-matter and with same parties or between heirs or representatives of petitioner and the other parties); D. C. Comp. St. 1894, c. 20, § 14 (any Court may in its discretion admit "in any cause before it any deposition taken in perpetuam"); Del. Rev. St. 1893, c. 56, § 2 (boundary cases; notice to owners and tenants required; depositions usable "against the parties to the petition and their privies in any suit or controversy in which the bounds which they concern shall come in question"); Fla. Rev. St. 1892, § 1141 (usable in suits "between the person at whose request it was taken and the persons named in the said written statement, or any of them, who were notified as aforesaid, or any persons claiming under either of the said parties, respectively, concerning the title, claim, or interest set forth in the statement; or, if notice by advertisement hereinbefore provided for shall have been given, then between the person at whose request it was taken, or any person claiming under him, concerning the claim, title, or interest set forth in the statement, and any other person"); Ga. Code 1895, §§ 3961, 3963 (the Court is to provide "for the most effectual notice"; but testimony "may be used against all persons, whether parties to the proceeding or not"); Haw. Civil Laws 1897, § 1393 (admissible in a trial "between the parties named in the petition or their privies or successors in interest touching the matter of controversy set forth in the petition"); Ida. Rev. St. 1887, § 6121 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2088); St. 1899, Feb. 10, § 28 (depositions may be used "in any cause between the parties named in the affidavit or in any cause between persons claiming under either of said parties"); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 46 (admissible "in any case to which the same may relate"; "and parties notified 'as unknown owners' . . . shall be bound to the same extent as other parties"); Ind. Rev. St. 1897, § 455 (usable "in any cause between the parties named in the affidavit [for taking], or in any cause between persons claiming under either of said parties"); Ia. Code 1897, § 4723 (usable on a trial "between the parties named in the petition, or their privies or successors in interest"); Kan. Gen. St. 1897, c. 95, § 387 (usable "if a trial be had between the parties named in the petition, or their privies or successors in interest"); Ky. C. C. P. 1895, § 611 (notice to the "expected adverse party" required; testimony usable in trial between the "expected parties or their representatives or successors"); Mass. Pub. St. 169, § 64, Rev. L. 1902, c. 175, § 64 (deposition in perpetuam, taken "so that it may be used against all persons," according to the statutory mode, "may be used by the person at whose request it was taken, or by any person who claims under him, against any person whatever, in any action or process, wherein is brought in question the title, claim, or interest set forth in the statement upon which the commission was founded"); Minn. Gen. St. 1894, §§ 5697, 5704 (usable in an action "between the person at whose request it was taken, and the persons named in the written statement, or any of them, or any person claiming under either of the said parties respectively, concerning the title, claim, or interest, set forth in the statement"); Miss. Annot. Code 1892, § 1775 (admissible "in any suit between the parties described in the written statement for procuring such testimony or their privies in interest"); Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 4540 (admissible "in any cause or judicial proceeding to which they relate, in favor of any parties thereto, or any or either of them, or his or their executors or administrators, heirs or assigns, or their legal representatives"); § 4557 (when taken to establish land-corners, admissible "in all cases to which they may relate"); Mont. C. C. P. 1895, § 3425 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2088); Nebr. Comp. St. 1899, § 6000 (admissible on a trial "between the parties named in the petition, or their privies or successors in interest"); Nev. Gen. St. 1885, § 3444 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2088); N. H. Pub. St. 1891, c. 226, § 9 (may be used in any cause where the matters concerned are in question); N. M. Comp. L. 1897, § 3064 (admissible "in any cause or judicial proceeding to which they relate, in favor of any parties thereto, or any or either of them, or their executors or administrators, heirs or assigns, or their legal representatives"); N. D. Rev. C. 1895, § 5711 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2088); Oh. Rev. St. 1898, § 5878 (admissible in a trial "between the parties named in the petition or their privies or successors in interest"); Okla. Stats. 1893, § 4284 (admissible "if a trial be had between the parties named in the petition, or their privies or successors in interest"); Or. C. C. P. 1892, § 863 (usable on a trial "between the persons named in the petition as parties actual, expectant, or possible, or their representatives or successors in interest"; see Hill's Codes for different provisions in an unenacted statute of 1870); S. D. Stats. 1899, § 6552 (like Okla. Stats. § 4284); Tenn. Code 1896, §§ 5671, 5672, 5682 (notice to the "opposite party" required; admissible, "in any suit between the parties to the petition" or their "privies in interest"); Tex. Rev. Civ. Stats. 1895, § 2277 (usable "in any suit which may be thereafter instituted by or between any of the parties to the statement, or those claiming under them"); U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 867 ("Any court of the U. S. may, in its discretion, admit as evidence in any cause before it any deposition taken in perpetuam rei memoriam, which would be so admissible in a court of the State wherein such cause is pending, according to the laws thereof"); Utah Rev. St. 1898, § 3471 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2088); Wash. C. & Stats. 1897, § 6038 (usable on a trial "between the person at whose request the deposition was taken and the person named in the statement, or any of them, or their successors in interest"); Wis. Stats. 1898, § 4121 (usable in an action "between the person at whose request it was taken and the persons named in the said written statement, or any of them, who were notified as aforesaid, or any person claiming under either of the said parties respectively concerning the title, claim, or interest set forth in the statement"); § 4134 (deposition taken by special form of notice as against all persons "may be used by the person at whose request it was taken or by any person claiming under him against any person whatever in any action or proceeding wherein shall be brought in question the title, claim, or interest set forth in the statement"); Wyo. Rev. St. 1887, § 3071 (admissible on a trial "between the parties named in the petition, or their privies or successors in interest").

common-law principle would be even broader than the statutes' terms, and

would suffice to admit even where the case is not covered by the phraseology of the statute; i. e. the statute merely secures admissibility in certain instances, and is not intended to forbid admission in other instances.

It is to be noted that a deposition or former testimony, not offered as such, is not subject to this rule requiring identity of issues. Where the other testimony is offered, not as evidence of the truth of the facts asserted in it, but merely as an utterance having an indirect bearing, it is not hearsay (post, § 1789) and the ruling requiring cross-examination and identical issues does not apply. (1) Thus, testimony in another cause may be proved in a trial for perjury so far as it indicates the materiality in that cause of testimony now charged to be perjured.⁵ (2) In an action for malicious prosecution, the testimony on the original prosecution is not admissible from that point of view, because it could not have served as "probable cause" before it was delivered; yet it would be admissible in the ordinary way as testimony at a former trial, provided the witness is deceased or otherwise unavailable, and this principle, so long as parties were disqualified in their own behalf, would always admit the defendant's own testimony given at the original trial.⁶ (3) Where the deposition or testimony embodies an admission by the opponent, it is not subject to the present rule.⁷

§ 1388. Parties or Privies the Same. It is commonly said that the parties to the litigation in which the testimony was first given must have been the same as in the litigation in which it is now offered. But this limitation suffers in practice many modifications; and properly so, for it is not a strict and necessary deduction from the principle. At first sight, indeed, it seems fair enough to argue even that a person against whom former testimony is now offered should have to be satisfied with such cross-examination as any other person whatever, in another suit, may have chosen to employ. It is entirely settled that in some such cases he must be satisfied, namely, in cases where the other person was a privy in interest with the present party. The reason for such cases is that there the interest to sift the testimony thoroughly was the same for the other person as for the present person. The principle, then, is that where the interest of the person was calculated to induce equally as thorough a testing by cross-examination, then the present opponent has had adequate protection for the same end. Thus, the requirement of identity of parties is after all only an incident or corollary of the requirement as to identity of issue. It ought, then, to be sufficient to inquire whether the former testimony was given upon such an issue that the party-opponent in that case had the same interest and motive in his cross-examination that the present opponent has; and the determination of this ought to be left entirely to the trial judge.

Nevertheless the Courts have not, in name at least, often gone so far as to accept so broad a principle.

⁵ 1893, People v. Lem Yon, 97 Cal. 224, 226, 32 Pac. 11 (because "all that was sought to be proven here was the mere fact that certain testimony had been given").

⁶ The cases involve other distinctions, and are collected post, § 1417.

⁷ Cases cited ante, § 1075; 1855, Williams v. Cheney, 3 Gray 215, 217, 220.

(1) It is well settled that the former testimony is receivable if the difference of parties consists merely in a difference of nominal parties only, or in an addition or subtraction on either side of parties not now concerned with the testimony.¹

(2) It is well settled that the former testimony is receivable if the then party-opponent, though a different person, had the same property-interest that the present opponent has. The application of this doctrine is usually thought to involve a resort to the technicalities of the substantive law determining privity in interest. It is, of course, often necessary to consider to some extent the rules of substantive law that may be pertinent to show the interest of the prior party; for example, where the prior opponent was the present opponent's intestate or grantor, one cannot determine that the interests are sufficiently the same without considering the law of property. But it does not follow that the rules of property should be resorted to as affording mechanically a solution of the question in evidence. That question is merely whether a thorough and adequate cross-examination has been had. It is conceivable that, by an excessively strict application of the rule, only a prior cross-examination by the very same party, with the same counsel, might have been deemed sufficient (ante, § 1371). So pedantic a strictness could not be maintained; but such relaxation as is conceded must be made with a sole view to the substantial fulfilment of the principle involved, and not with a view to any extrinsic and unrelated rules. Whether the test of the evidence-principle would or would not in a given instance lead to the same result as the property-rule is immaterial. There is no necessary dependence of the former upon the latter. The latter should be kept in its place, and should be the servant, not the master, of the principle of evidence. In spite of all this, there is an unfortunate judicial inclination to reverse the true relations of the rules, and to ignore the living principle of evidence while resorting to the doctrines of substantive law to obtain a merely mechanical rule for solution. Two aspects of this tendency may be noticed:

(a) It is sometimes said, for example, that "the same rule applies as in cases of res judicata and estoppel";² it is asked whether the present oppo-

¹ For example: 1834, Wright v. Tatham, 1 A. & E. 3 (T. claimed against W. as heir of J. M., while W. claimed under a will of J. M. T. first filed a bill in Chancery against W. and three others, and evidence was taken on an issue framed at law in which W. was plaintiff. Then T. brought an ejectment action against W., in which John Doe was the nominal plaintiff. It was held, when the testimony of a deceased witness B. at the former trial was offered in the second action, that (1) the nominal difference in the parties on T.'s side, and (2) the addition of three new parties on W.'s side, could not prevent the use of the testimony as between T. and W.; Tindal, C. J.: "Mr. T., the lessor of the plaintiff in this action, had precisely the same power of objecting to the competency of B., the same right of cross-examination, and of calling witnesses to discredit or contradict his testimony, on the former trial, as he would have had if Mr. W. had been the sole plaintiff in that suit or as he would have had now if B. had been alive and subpoenaed as a witness").

² 1866, Morgan v. Nicholl, L. R. 2 C. P. 117 (the plaintiff's son, supposing the plaintiff dead and claiming as heir, had brought an action of ejectment for the same property against the defendant's father, now dead; testimony at the former trial was rejected; Erle, C. J.: "The present plaintiff is for this purpose as distinct a person from his son as a perfect stranger; he does not in any way claim through him, and he cannot be injured by anything his son may have done at a former trial").

ment is "bound" by the former proceeding;³ and the niceties of property-law are frequently investigated in order to ascertain whether the prior opponent held by a title precisely coincident with the present opponent's. Now, this resort to extraneous rules is, for the reasons above suggested, fallacious in theory and misleading in practice. In Morgan v. Nicholl,⁴ for example, it is perfectly apparent that the son in the prior suit was a person having precisely the same interest to litigate as the present father, and therefore that the son's cross-examination would have been an adequate one; although the judgment against the son could not, by the rules of res judicata, bind the father. Again, in litigation by a tenant for life, involving only the validity of a will or of a prior grant, it is clear that nothing will turn on the precise quantity of his estate, and that his cross-examination to the points in dispute will be adequate to justify the use of the testimony against the remainderman in his subsequent litigation involving the same issue; yet the judgment against one would not bind the other, because the one does not claim under the other. Again, there is no privity between the parties to a criminal prosecution and a civil action for the same injury; yet testimony given at the former ought to be admitted in the latter. It is thus apparent that the proper application of the principle of evidence cannot be mechanically restricted by the rules of judgments and land-titles.

(b) Again, proceeding upon the same fallacious notion, it is sometimes said that there must be "reciprocity" or "mutuality," i. e. that former testimony, already cross-examined by B, cannot now be offered by A against B unless B could now have offered it against A.⁵ But for this there is not a shadow of justification. The sole question is whether B has had an adequate opportunity by cross-examination to sift this testimony; this, by hypothesis, he has had; and so the rule is satisfied. It is quite immaterial whether A would have been able to object (for example, because he came afterwards into the suit) to its use against him; the testimony is not offered against A, but by A; and the whole object of the present rule is to protect the opponent against whom the testimony is offered, i. e. B, and B has already been thus protected. To exclude the testimony against B, who has been protected, now plaintiffs, assignees of A. S.'s firm, could not use them, because "there is no reciprocity"); 1836, Humphreys v. Pensam, 1 Myl. & C. 580, 586 (same litigation; same ruling by L. C. Cottenham, but here the plaintiffs are said to be the assignees of only one A. C., one of the partners of A. S.); 1835, Norris v. Momen, 3 Watts 470 (Huston, J.: "Certain other heirs of J. N. had brought a former ejectment against the present defendant to recover their respective shares. . . . The present defendant could not use depositions taken in that cause against the present plaintiffs, for they had no opportunity to cross-examine, and it must be reciprocal"); 1821, Boudereau v. Montgomery, 4 Wash. C. C. 186. This doctrine goes back a long distance: 1669, Rushworth v. Pembroke, Hardr. 472.

³ 1747, Eade v. Lingood, 1 Atk. 203 (bill by creditors against T. L. and his daughter M. L., charging fraud in pretending that an estate in his daughter M. L.'s name was bought with her money, not his; the examination of the daughter M. L. as a witness in bankruptcy proceedings against T. L. shortly before was rejected, because "M. L. is not at all bound by the proceedings in a commission of bankruptcy against T. L.").

⁴ Note 4, supra.

⁵ 1836, Atkins v. Humphreys, 1 Moo. & Rob. 523 (whether a conveyance to A. S. or partner was bona fide as against the defendants interested in the grantor's estate; in a suit by A. S. against these defendants to set aside the conveyance, depositions taken by A. S. had been used by these defendants; held, that the

because A, who does not need or want protection, has not been protected, is as absurd as it would be to forbid A to use against B a witness disqualified for B by interest, on the ground that A could have objected to B's production of the witness on B's behalf, — which no one ever thought of maintaining. The fallacious doctrines of the foregoing limitations have been properly criticised in the following passage :

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. VI, c. XII (Bowring's ed. vol. VII, p. 171): "Another curious rule is, that, as a judgment is not evidence against a stranger, the contrary judgment shall not be evidence for him. If the rule itself is a curious one, the reason given for it is still more so: 'Nobody can take benefit by a verdict, who had not been prejudiced by it, had it gone contrary': a maxim which one would suppose to have found its way from the gaming-table to the bench. If a party be benefited by one throw of the dice, he will, if the rules of fair play are observed, be prejudiced by another; but that the consequence should hold when applied to justice, is not equally clear."

The rulings in the different jurisdictions exhibit varying degrees of liberality; and naturally the result depends much on the facts of the particular case.⁶

⁶ In the following list, rulings of no service as precedents have not been stated in detail; statutes dealing additionally with the subject have been placed in the notes to the preceding section: England: 1664, Terwit v. Gresham, Freem. Ch. 184, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 227, Cas. Ch. 73 (depositions in former cause on same subject, admitted, though the parties did not claim under the former parties, but "the tenants were then parties"); 1669, Rushworth v. Pembroke, Hardr. 472 (tenant and lord of manor, in respective suits; excluded); 1686, Coke v. Fountain, 1 Vern. 413 (depositions in action against father, not read against son not claiming as heir); 1695, Bath v. Bathersea, 5 Mod. 9 (depositions in former suit against plaintiff by other parties, admitted "because the defendant shelters himself under the other's title"); 1702, Lord Peterborough v. Duchess of Norfolk, 1 Vern. 264, 3 Brown P. C. 539, 545, semble (depositions against a tenant for life, not usable against a reversioner or remainder-man); 1703, Nevil v. Johnson, 2 Vern. 447 (depositions on bill of testator's creditors to set aside fraudulent conveyance, read upon legatees' bill for same cause against same grantees); 1747, Eade v. Lingood, 1 Atk. 203 (see note 3, supra); 1810, Banbury Peerage Case, in App. to LeMarchant's Gardner Peerage Case, 410 (issue of legitimacy; testimony under bill to perpetuate, filed in 1640, excluded; inadmissible "in any cause in which the parties were not the same parties as the parties in the cause in Chancery, or did not claim under some or one of them"); 1826, Pratt v. Barker, 1 Sim. 1, 5 (depositions not read against parties afterwards joined); 1826, Doe v. Passingham, 2 C. & P. 440, 445 (tenant for life and remainder-man as privies; not decided as to this point); 1826, Goodenough v. Alway, 2 Sim. & St. 481; 1827, Williams v. Broadhead, 1 Sim. 151; 1834, Wright v. Tatham, 1 A. &

E. 3 (see note 1, supra); 1834, Doe v. Derby, ib. 783, 786; 1836, Atkins v. Humphreys, 1 Moo. & Rob. 523 (see note 5, supra); 1836, Humphreys v. Pensam, 1 Myl. & C. 580, 586 (see note 5, supra); 1852, Hulin v. Powell, 3 C. & K. 323 (admitting testimony formerly given for the defendant R. in a suit for the same land by the same plaintiff against R., whose expenses were paid by the present defendant, also a claimant; Williams, J., "The admissibility of depositions in cases of this kind does not depend on mere technical grounds; and one question is, Had the lessor of the plaintiff an opportunity of cross-examining the witness? He certainly had, and I see no fair reason for supposing that the cross-examination would have been to a different effect, whether the lessor of the plaintiff knew or did not know whether Mr. P. was the real defendant"); 1866, Morgan v. Nicholl, L. R. 2 C. P. 117 (see note 2, supra); 1881, Llanover v. Homfray, L. R. 19 Ch. D. 229; 1894, Printing Tel. & C. Co. v. Drucker, 2 Q. B. 801 (action for capital instalments; plea, false representations inducing to become a shareholder; testimony in a similar action by the same plaintiff against another person pleading the same defence, excluded); Canada: 1877, Domville v. Ferguson, 17 N. Br. 40, semble (successive actions against agent and principal for wrongful detention of goods; the principal's testimony in the first suit, held admissible in the second); 1900, Carte v. Dennis, 5 N. W. Terr. 32, 40 (an examination of a defendant, on discovery, is admissible against a co-defendant if the latter has had an opportunity of cross-examination; here a rule of Court applied in part); 1894, Walkerton v. Erdman, 20 Ont. App. 444, 23 Can. Sup. 352 (action for injuries in a ditch, the defendants being a municipal corporation and H.; the deceased person's deposition was taken, after notice to the former defendant only, and the action was abated by death, and renewed by his representative under the statute ; held, by three judges to two, that the deposition was admissible against the former defendant, because the testimony related to an issue of claim the same in substance, and because the judgment might be rendered against the former defendant only ; good opinion by King, J.) ; United States : Ala. : 1847, Holman v. Bank, 12 Ala. 369, 408 ; 1851, Long v. Davis, 18 id. 801, 802 (former party deceased, represented here by administrator ; admitted) ; 1850, Clealand v. Huie, ib. 347 (similar) ; 1883, Goodlett v. Kelly, 74 id. 219 (in the former suit the present parties were reversed, except that a now defendant K., transferee of the others, was not then a party ; admitted) ; 1886, Turnley v. Hanna, 82 id. 139, 143, 2 So. 483 ; 1896, Wells v. Mge. Co., 109 id. 430, 20 So. 136 (defendant administrator succeeded by administrator d. b. n., and a new claimant added as defendant after revivor of the bill ; testimony in the preceding stage admitted against them) ; 1897, Smith v. Keyser, 115 id. 455, 22 So. 149 (the plaintiff acted in the one suit individually, in the other as executrix ; admitted) ; 1901, Simmons v. State, 129 id. 41, 29 So. 929 (testimony at a trial of another person for the same offence, excluded) ; Cal. : 1887, Fredericks v. Judah, 73 Cal. 604, 608, 15 Pac. 305 (former party executrix, present party heir ; admitted) ; 1889, Marshall v. Hancock, 80 id. 82, 85, 22 Pac. 61 ; 1889, Briggs v. Briggs, ib. 253, 22 Pac. 334 (present party claiming under deed of gift of former party ; admitted) ; 1897, Lyons v. Marcher, 119 id. 382, 51 Pac. 559 (action by L. against F. A. M. and C. A. M. ; deposition in former suit by L. against F. A. M., C. A. M., D. L. M., and A. E. M., offered by L., excluded ; ruling not sound) ; 1898, McDonald v. Cutter, 120 id. 44, 52 Pac. 120 ; 1899, Wolters v. Rossi, 126 id. 644, 59 Pac. 143 (actions consolidated by Court order ; depositions in each mutually admissible) ; Del. : 1866, Dawson v. Smith, 3 Honst. 335, 340 ; Ga. : 1878, Haslam v. Campbell, 60 Ga. 650, 654 ; 1881, Hughes v. Clark, 67 id. 19, 23 ; 1881, Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Venable, ib. 697, 699 (former party, a mother suing for personal injuries ; present party, her child suing for her death from those injuries ; admitted) ; Ill. : 1857, Wade v. King, 19 Ill. 301, 308 (successors in interest ; admitted) ; 1864, Goodrich v. Hanson, 33 id. 498, 508 (former party, an agent pleading property in principal, in replevin ; present party, the principal suing in trover ; admitted) ; 1871, Hutchings v. Corgan, 57 id. 71 (intestate and administrator are privies) ; Ind. : 1876, Indianapolis & S. L. R. Co. v. Stout, 53 Ind. 158 (deceased and representative are privies) ; Ia. : 1869, Shaul v. Brown, 28 Ia. 37, 50 ; 1884, Atkins v. Anderson, 63 id. 739, 743, 19 N. W. 323 (former party the assignor of present party ; admitted) ; 1897, Krueger v. Sylvester, 100 id. 647, 69 N. W. 1059 (assault and battery ; testimony on a prior criminal charge, of assault with intent to commit bodily injury, for the same act, admitted ; “the admissibility of such evidence seems to turn on the right to cross-examine, rather than on the precise identity of the parties”) ; 1897, Brown v. Zachary, 102 id. 433, 71 N. W. 413 (deposition taken before opponent's joinder as party, excluded) ; 1897, State v. Smith, ib. 656, 72 N. W. 279 (former charge of murder against T. ; the testimony of a deceased witness there offered by the State, now received from this defendant to prove the circumstances of the same killing) ; Ky. : 1830, Ardery v. Com., 3 J. J. Marsh. 183 ; 1871, Kerr v. Gibson, 8 Bush 129 (new party joined by amendment ; deposition not admitted as to him) ; 1895, Oliver v. R. Co., — Ky. —, 32 S. W. 759 (excluding, in an action by a wife, joining husband, for personal injuries, a deposition taken in a former action by the husband for loss of service by the same injuries ; Lewis, J. : “While reason for the rule mentioned does not exist to the same extent as if there had been different occurrences or transactions, we can very well see how disregard of it by the Court might have taken defendant by surprise, and deprived it of the advantage of developing, on cross-examination, admissions and confessions of the wife it was not permitted to show in the other suit”) ; La. : 1826, Hennen v. Monroe, 4 Mart. n. s. 449, 451 (action by a shipper against a vessel owner for general-average contribution ; in a prior action for loss of the goods in question charging the defendant as carrier, defendant had succeeded ; testimony of deceased and absent witnesses at that trial was now offered and admitted) ; 1901, State v. N. O. Waterworks Co., 107 La. 1, 31 So. 395 (excessive water-rates ; testimony at a former suit, brought by private persons on the same contract proceeded upon by the State in the case at bar, and involving the same issues, admitted) ; Ma. : 1843, Mitchell v. Mitchell, 1 Gill 66, 83 (proponent deceased, and administrator not then made a party ; a deposition taken then on behalf of that side, though with notice, insufficient under St. 1828, c. 165, the deposition not being taken by “either party”) ; Mass. : 1843, Warren v. Nichols, 6 Metc. 261 (general principle stated) ; 1873, Yale v. Comstock, 112 Mass. 268 (transferee and transferor of land are privies) ; Mich. : 1902, Waterhouse v. Waterhouse, 130 Mich. 89, 89 N. W. 585 (testimony in a former trial, one of the then parties in interest being now only a next friend ; excluded) ; Minn. : 1890, Lougee v. Bray, 42 Minn. 323, 44 N. W. 194 (H. and B. coming in by separate pleas as intervenors, but tendering the same issue, a deposition taken by H. was admitted for B.) ; Miss. : 1877, Strickland v. Hudson, 55 Miss. 235, 241 ; Mo. : 1870, Parsons v. Parsons, 45 Mo. 265 (discontinued suit by son against father, revived against latter's widow ; admitted) ; 1872, Coughlin v. Hanesler, 50 id. 126 ; 1879, Adams v. Raigner, influence of the preceding fallacies — that where the party taking a deposition has not chosen to put it in as evidence, the opponent, against whom it was taken, is not at liberty to do so. So far as the present principle is concerned, there is no support for this prohibition. The chief reliance of the few Courts that enforce it seems to be an opinion weighted with the great name of Chief Justice Shaw :

§ 1389. Deposition used by Either Party ; Opponent's Use of a Deposition taken but not read. It has sometimes been thought—perhaps under the

1837, Shaw, C. J., in Dana v. Underwood, 19 Pick. 99, 104 : “ Where one party takes a deposition, it is at his option to use it or not, as he thinks fit; and it has been held that, where a deposition taken by one party is returned and filed, and the party taking it does not think proper to use it, it cannot be read by the other party without consent. One reason for this, among others, is obvious: the parties are under very different rules in the mode of putting their questions to a deponent. The taker is restrained from asking leading questions; the adverse party may put a leading question. A party may try the experiment of taking the deposition of a person known to be a willing witness for the other side, or, believing that he is favorable to his own side, finds the contrary in the progress of the examination; the adverse party, finding him a willing witness on his side, puts leading questions and gets out answers which he could not do if he were his own witness; now if this deposition, instead of being used at the option of a taker, may be used by the adverse party without and against his [the taker's] consent, it would be wholly reversing the rules of examination and going counter to the reasons on which those rules were established. . . . The strong, and in our judgment the decisive objection, is, the 69 id. 363 (successor in title; admitted); 1879, Bredden v. Feurt, 70 id. 624 (administrator reviving intestate's suit; admitted); Nebr. : 1870, Holmes v. Boydston, 1 Nebr. 346, 354 (depositions taken before amendment by adding former partners as plaintiffs, admitted); N. H. : 1858, Orr v. Hadley, 36 N. H. 580; N. Y. : 1806, Jackson v. Bailey, 2 John. 20 (general principle); 1818, Jackson v. Lawson, 15 id. 544; 1829, Jackson v. Crissey, 3 Wend. 252 (transferee of land, held not privies); 1880, Wood v. Swift, 81 N. Y. 31 (testimony taken before referee before compulsory joining of new party opponent, not admitted against him, even though liberty to re-cross-examine had been allowed; clearly erroneous); N. C. : 1884, Bryan v. Malloy, 90 N. C. 503, 510; 1891, Stewart v. Rossiter, 108 id. 588, 591, 13 S. E. 234; Oh. : 1884, Bryan v. O'Connor, 41 Oh. St. 368, 372 (depositions not admissible against parties brought in after the taking); 1891, McClaskey v. Barr, 47 Fed. 155, 165 (deposition of life-tenant, taken to show ownership of fee, admitted under Ohio statute in partition-suit to show identity of co-tenants out of possession); Pa. : 1824, Watson v. Gilday, 11 S. & R. 342; 1827, Walker v. Walker, 16 id. 379, 381 (depositions in suit against one only of present defendants holding by separate title, not admitted against the other); 1828, M'Cully v. Barr, 17 id. 445, 451; 1839, Cooper v. Smith, 8 Watts 536, 539 (ejectment against successor in interest; admissible); 1861, Wright v. Cumpsty, 41 Pa. 111; 1882, Galbraith v. Zimmerman, 100 id. 374, 376 (former party represented by heirs; admitted); S. C. : 1847, Mathews v. Colburn, 1 Strobb. 269; 1903, State v. Milam, 65 S. C. 321, 43 S. E. 677 (trial of M., followed by a second trial of M. & McC., for the same offence; testimony of a deceased witness at the first trial, held admissible, as against M., though not as against McC.); S. D. : 1896, Smith v. Hawley, 8 S. D. 363, 66 N. W. 942; 1897, Salmer v. Lathrop, 10 id. 216, 72 N. W. 570 (deposition taken by the plaintiff; the addition before trial of two nominal plaintiffs, held not to prevent its use against the defendant); U. S. : 1821, Bondreau v. Montgomery, 4 Wash. C. C. 186 (five heirs as parties in one action, and all, about one hundred, in the present action; excluded); 1832, Boardman v. Reed, 6 Pet. 328, 340; 1851, Philadelphia W. & B. R. Co. v. Howard, 13 How. 307, 335 (one co-plaintiff in former suit now lacking; admitted); Va. : 1799, Rowe v. Smith, 1 Call 487.

The statute making survivors incompetent to testify against deceased opponents may have bearing here; see Speyer v. Bennett, 79 Pa. 445; for the effect of such disqualification on the use of the survivor's former testimony, see post, § 1409.

How far the use of a judgment between other parties is allowable (particularly, a conviction of a principal against an accessory) is not a question of evidence (as noted ante, § 1347); see the following cases: 1832, R. v. Turner, 1 Mood. Cr. C. 347 (“many of the judges appeared to think” that the conviction of a principal was not receivable); 1899, Kirby v. U. S., 174 U. S. 47, 19 Sup. 574 (a statute making the judgment of conviction of principal in embezzlement or larceny conclusive evidence of the fact of embezzlement or larceny of such goods, in a prosecution against a knowing receiver of such stolen or embezzled goods, held unconstitutional).

party would be allowed to introduce a deponent as his own witness whom he has had the right to cross-examine and the adverse party has not.”¹

The answers to this argument are not difficult to discover: (1) The vital assumption of the above opinion is incorrect, namely, that leading questions would have been forbidden to the taker of the deposition; for it is well settled (ante, §§ 773, 774) that, if the deponent had proved to be an unwilling or hostile witness, the taker could have put leading questions. (2) The objection stated in the opinion, even if it were correctly stated, would apply equally to one calling a hostile witness to the stand; yet no one supposes that in such a case the calling party, on discovering the witness' hostility, could withdraw him and compel the opponent to call him; so that, on the theory of the above opinion, a party taking a deposition would be given a peculiar advantage in suppressing testimony, which he would not have if he called the same witness to the stand. (3) Finally, the whole notion of cross-examination refers to one's right to probe the statements of an opponent's witness, not one's own witness; thus, if A has taken X's deposition or called X to the stand, and B has cross-examined, it is not for A to object that he has not had the benefit of cross-examination; that benefit was not intended for him nor needed by him; it was intended only to protect against an opponent's witness, who would be otherwise unexamined by A; and if A has had the benefit of examining a witness called on his own behalf, he has had all that he needs, and the right to probe by cross-examination is B's, not A's. In the following passages the correct doctrine is vindicated:

1822, Tilghman, C. J., in Gordon v. Little, 8 S. & R. 532, 548: “I do not perceive the force of this distinction between plaintiff and defendant. When the deposition is taken it ought to be filed; it is not the property of the party on whose behalf it was taken; nor has he any right to withhold it. But it often happens that the party at whose instance it was taken finds himself mistaken and the testimony proves to be unfavorable to him; in such case the adverse party has a right to make use of it [subject only to the condition of showing the witness personally unavailable].”

1846, Goldthwaite, J., in Stewart v. Hood, 10 Ala. 600, 607: “The question, then, comes to this: Can the adverse party, who has cross-examined, use the deposition taken at the instance of the other party? We do not well see what reasonable objection there is to such a course. If the witness was examined in open court, it is very certain we should never hear the objection of interest from the party offering him; and there certainly is no good to result from a practice which will permit a party first to ascertain by actual examination what a witness will swear, and then admit or exclude him at pleasure.”

1849, Williams, C. J., in Nash v. State, 2 Greene Ia. 286, 298: “Has he [the accused] been denied the benefit of this right [of confrontation of the witnesses]? The testimony was of his own procurement. The witnesses were selected by himself, and he propounded the questions which were answered by them. At his instance the depositions were returned and filed in the court, as a part of the case for hearing and in order to sustain his defence on the issue joined. The evidence, if relevant and material, was in the possession of the Court by his own act. . . . When filed, it was in the custody of the Court as evidence in the case. We cannot see under the circumstances how a moral wrong or injustice in fact was done to the prisoner."

¹ Accord: 1889, Anderson v. State, 89 Ala. 12, 7 So. 429 (in criminal cases, against the accused; here the deposition had been taken but not used by him); 1854, Sexton v. Brock, 15 Ark. 345, 351 (opponent's deposition not usable because “he may be taken at a disadvantage, because he was restrained from putting leading questions on his examination in chief, and . . . could not impeach or discredit them”); 1854, Norvell v. Oury, 13 Tex. 31 (excluded, where no cross-interrogatories had been filed, under a statute allowing either party to use “all depositions where cross-interrogatories have been filed and answered”); 1856, Harris v. Leavitt, 16 id. 340, 343 (similar).

1895, Torrance, J., in Ansonia v. Cooper, 66 Conn. 184, 33 Atl. 905: "In most cases, depositions are taken for the purpose of being used by the party taking them. The cases where they are not so used are comparatively few in number; but in such cases, if the right to use the depositions be denied to the adverse party, it may work a great hardship and injustice. It will seldom be known in advance of the actual trial whether the party taking the depositions does or does not intend to use them, and, when it is known that he will not use them, it will usually be too late for the adverse party to avail himself of the testimony of the deponents in any way, although he may have relied on that testimony in support of his case. If this right be denied to the adverse party, it will in very many cases necessitate the taking of two sets of depositions of the same witnesses, involving a useless expenditure of time and money. We see no good reason why this should be done; at least, not in cases like the present, where the depositions were filed with the clerk, in whose custody they must, by statute, remain, unless suppressed by the Court, until final judgment in the cause."²

² Such is the result now practically everywhere accepted; in some jurisdictions a statute expressly so provides: Eng. 1825, M'Intyre v. Layard, Ry. & Moo. 203 (plaintiff allowed to use answers to interrogatories on a commission, given by defendant's witnesses but not put in by defendant; but the ruling was apparently with hesitation); 1836, Procter v. Lanson, 7 C. & P. 629 (Abioger, L. C. B.: "Under a judge's order, they are examined as much for one side as the other"); Ala. Code 1897, §§ 1867, 1871 (for depositions in perp. mem.); 1846, Stewart v. Hood, 10 Ala. 600, 607 (see quotation supra); 1903, Curtis v. Parker, 136 id. 217, 33 So. 935; Alaska C. C. P. 1900, § 656 (like Or. Annot. C. 1892, § 827); Ariz. P. C. 1887, §§ 2075, 2097 (in criminal cases, for depositions taken by accused); Rev. St. 1887, § 1849 (in civil cases, when cross-interrogatories have been filed and answered); § 1359 (testimony before committing magistrate); Cal. P. C. 1872, §§ 1345, 1362; C. C. P. 1872, §§ 2028, 2034, 2088; Commissioners' amendment of 1901 (the number of § 2034 changed to § 2021; the § 2028 repealed in 1901 and its substance enacted in § 2021; for the validity of these amendments, see ante, § 488); Colo. C. C. P. 1891, § 343 (usable by either party "against any party giving or receiving the notice"; compare ib. § 344); § 370 (depositions in perpetuum, usable by either party); Haw. Civil Laws 1897, § 1392 (depositions in perpetuum); Ida. Rev. St. 1887, §§ 6066, 6070, 6121, 8169, 8189; Ill.: 1877, Adams v. Russell, 85 Ill. 284, 287 ("unless he obtains leave before the trial and withdraws it"); Ind.: 1872, Woodruff v. Garner, 39 Ind. 246, semble (the non-taker, after reading the deposition, allowed to introduce another taken by himself from the same witness); Ia. Code 1897, § 4723 (for in perpetuum memoriam depositions); 1849, Nash v. State, 2 Greene 286, 298 (accused's depositions allowed to be used by the prosecution; here prescribed by statute, but also independently decided as a constitutional question); 1854, Crick v. McClintic, 4 id. 290; 1859, Pelamourges v. Clark, 9 Ia. 1, 21; 1862, Wheeler v. Smith, 13 id. 564; 1876, Hale v. Gibbs, 43 id. 380, 382; 1884, Brown v. Byam, 65 id. 374, 21 N. W. 684; 1885, Citizens' Bank v. Rhutasel, 67 id. 316, 319, 25 N. W. 261; Kan. Gen. St. 1897, c. 95, § 387 (depositions in perp. mem.); 1887, Rucker v. Reid, 36 Kan. 468, 13 Pac. 741; Ky.: 1817, Rogers v. Barnett, 4 Bibb 480 (objection that a deposition was taken at the instance of the appellant, the party not using it, overruled); 1850, Young v. Wood, 11 B. Monr. 123, 134 (same ruling); 1861, Musick v. Ray, 3 Metc. 427, 431; 1869, Weil v. Silverstone, 6 Bush 698, 700; 1871, Sullivan v. Norris, 8 id. 519, 520; 1903, St. Bernard Coal Co. v. Southard, — Ky. — , 76 S. W. 167; La. Rev. L. 1897, § 617 (civil cases); Me.: 1837, Polleys v. Ins. Co., 14 Me. 141, 147, 153 (by a majority; a deposition left on file after the first term may be read by the opponent); Mass.: 1852, Linfield v. O. C. R. Co., 10 Cush. 562, 570 (the non-taker may compel the reading of the answers to a deposition taken but not used by the opponent; unless, the deposition having been taken for the purpose of meeting the testimony of an opposing witness who is after all not introduced, the taker has given prior notice of his conditional purpose); Minn.: 1886, Smith v. Capital Bank, 34 Minn. 436, 26 N. W. 234 (even under a stipulation "to be introduced. . . on behalf of said" party taking it); Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 4540 (depositions in perpetuum); 1846, Greene v. Chickering, 10 Mo. 109, 111 (deposition filed may be read by the opponent); 1862, McClintock v. Curd, 32 id. 411, 417 (nor is notice required); Mont. C. C. P. 1895, §§ 3360, 3362, 3425 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2028, 2034, 2088); P. C. §§ 2490, 2513 (like Cal. P. C. §§ 1345, 1362); Nebr.: 1883, Converse v. Meyer, 13 Nebr. 190, 15 N. W. 340; 1901, Ulrich v. McConghey, 63 id. 10, 88 N. W. 150; 1901, Hamilton B. S. Co. v. Milliken, 62 id. 116, 86 N. W.

But the propriety of allowing the non-taker's use of the deposition, so far as the present principle is concerned, must be distinguished from the propriety of allowing its use with reference to wholly distinct rules of evidence. The contrariety of rulings on the subject is chiefly due to the circumstance that different results may be reached according as one or another rule of evidence is being invoked. There are, besides the present rule, three others which may have to be considered. (a) The rule of Confrontation (post, § 1395) requires the deponent to be produced in person, if he can be, and this rule applies as well to the non-taker as to the taker of the deposition; so that, before using it, the non-taker must show that the deponent is deceased or otherwise unavailable.³ (b) The deponent may be disqualified by interest as a witness for the non-taker; in that case, it is necessary to inquire whether the taker, by the mere taking without using, has so made the deponent his own witness that he is barred from objecting to the deponent's disqualification for the non-taker; this involves the whole doctrine of impeaching one's own witness, and has been already dealt with elsewhere (ante, §§ 909, 913). (c) The non-taker may offer the deposition, not as the testimony of the deponent (i. e. from the present point of view), but as an assertion adopted by the taker and made his own by using it on a former occasion, i. e. as an admission by the party taking it and then using it; in this view the limitations of the present subject — as to parties, issues, cross-examination — disappear entirely, and the only question is whether the taker's former use of the deposition has been such that he can fairly be said to have adopted its statements as his own. This is a question of Admissions, dealt with elsewhere (ante, § 1075).⁴

913; Nev. Gen. St. 1885, §§ 3431, 3432, 3444, 4036; N. J.: 1903, Wallace M. & Co. v. Leber, — N. J. L. —, 55 Atl. 475; N. M. Comp. L. 1897, § 3046; N. Y. C. C. P. 1877, § 830, as amended by St. 1899, c. 352 (testimony at a former trial may be read "by either party"); § 911, C. Cr. P. 1881, §§ 631, 657; N. C.: 1805, Collier v. Jeffreys, 2 Hayw. 400; 1880, Strudwick v. Broadnax, 83 N. C. 401, 404; N. D. Rev. C. 1895, § 5711 (in perpetuum); §§ 8383, 8397 (criminal cases); 1902, First Nat'l Bank v. Minneapolis & N. E. Co., 11 N. D. 280, 91 N. W. 436 (statute applied); Okl. Stats. 1893, §§ 5357, 5371 (depositions taken for accused); Or. C. C. P. 1892, §§ 827, 863; 1902, Tobin v. Portland F. M. Co., 41 Or. 269, 68 Pac. 743; Pa.: 1822, Gordon v. Little, 8 S. & R. 532, 548; 1867, O'Connor v. American I. M. Co., 56 Pa. 234, 238; R. I. Gen. L. 1896, c. 244, § 27; S. D. Stats. 1899, § 6552 (in perpetuum); §§ 8818, 8832 (criminal cases); Tenn.: 1872, Brandon v. Mullenix, 11 Heisk. 446, 449; 1897, Saunders v. R. Co., 99 Tenn. 130, 41 S. W. 1031; Tex. C. Cr. P. 1895, § 797, 798 (accused's depositions, taken not on the ground of non-residence or age or infirmity, cannot be used by him except after giving his consent "that the entire evidence or statement of the witness may be used against him by the State on the trial"); Rev. Civ. Stats. 1895, § 2288 ("When cross-interrogatories have been filed and answered," either party may use the depositions); compare the earlier Texas citations, supra, note 1; U. S.: 1809, Yeaton v. Fry, 5 Cr. 335, 343 (defendant objected to plaintiff using defendant's deposition because defendant had not given plaintiff proper notice; Marshall, C. J.: "The admission of notice by the plaintiff is certainly sufficient, if notice to him was necessary"); Utah Rev. St. 1898, §§ 3454, 3459, 3471, 5037; so also for former testimony: §§ 3475, 5013; Va. Code 1887, § 3367; 1826, M'Mahon v. Spangler, 4 Rand. 51, 56, semble; Wash. C. & Stats. 1897, § 6027; W. Va. Code 1891, c. 130, § 37; 1869, Echols v. Staunton, 3 W. Va. 574, 578; Wis. Stats. 1898, § 40; 1862, Jumneau Bank v. McSpedon, 15 Wis. 696 (good opinion by Paine, J.); 1873, Hazleton v. Union Bank, 32 id. 34, 44; Wyo. Rev. St. 1887, § 3071 (depositions in perpetuum).

³ The authorities are collected in § 1416.

⁴ Moreover, such use of a deposition by the non-taker does not authorize the use of testimony contained in the deposition but not in itself admissible: 1832, Wilson v. Calvert, 5 Sim. 194 (deposition taken by the plaintiff but not used by him, not admitted for the defendant, because it concerned a conversation of the de-

3. Conduct of the Cross-examination itself, as affecting Opportunity of Cross-examination.

§ 1390. Failure of Cross-examination through the Witness' Death or Illness.

There may have been an adequate opportunity of cross-examination (ante, § 1371), so far as depends upon the nature of the tribunal or the state of the issues and parties; yet the required opportunity may nevertheless practically have failed, through circumstances connected with the conduct of the examination. These circumstances may be distinguished under five heads: (1) the witness' death or illness intervening to prevent or curtail cross-examination; (2) the witness' refusal to answer on cross-examination or the party's prevention of his answer; (3) the witness' answering the direct examination "non-responsively," i. e. without dealing with the subject of the question; (4) the framing of the direct examination so as to prevent adequate cross-examination; (5) sundry circumstances preventing adequate cross-examination.

(1) Where the witness' death or lasting illness would not have intervened to prevent cross-examination but for the voluntary act of the witness himself or the party offering him — as, by a postponement or other interruption brought about immediately after the direct examination, it seems clear that the direct testimony must be struck out.¹ Upon the same principle, the same result should follow where the illness is but temporary and the offering party might have reproduced the witness for cross-examination before the end of the trial.² But, where the death or illness prevents cross-examination under such circumstances that no responsibility of any sort can be attributed to either the witness or his party, it seems harsh measure to strike out all that has been obtained on the direct examination. Nevertheless, principle requires in strictness nothing less. The true solution would be to avoid any inflexible rule, and to leave it to the trial judge to admit the direct examination so far as the loss of cross-examination can be shown to him to be not in that instance a material loss.³ Courts differ in their treatment of this difficult situation;⁴ except that, by general concession, a cross-examination begun but pendant which was usable as an admission against him but not in his favor); 1880, Forbes v. Snyder, 94 Ill. 374, 378.

For the prohibition against the opponent's using a cross-examination when the direct examination has been excluded, see post, § 1893.

For the rule about putting in the whole of a deposition, see post, §§ 2103, 2115.

¹ 1880, Sperry v. Moore's Estate, 42 Mich. 361, 4 N. W. 13 (at the former trial, the examination of the witness had been stopped just before cross-examination, in order that the party offering might put on another witness; but the former witness died shortly after and before an opportunity for cross-examination was had; Graves, J.: "There was here no such opportunity [to cross-examine], and the want of it was caused by the claimant [the party offering], and the estate was in no way answerable for it, and the testimony was excluded); 1844, Forrest v. Kissam, 7 Hill N. Y. 470.

² 1815, Clements v. Benjamin, 12 John. 299.

³ As in Scott v. McCann, Md., infra.

⁴ Eng.: 1828, Jones v. Fort, 1 M. & M. 196 (defendant's examination in bankruptcy was offered by plaintiff; the cross-examination had been postponed at the commissioners' request, and in the meantime the deponent was stricken with apoplexy; yet the examination was received, probably as containing admissions, and not as being strictly a mere witness' deposition); 1837, R. v. Hagan, 1 Jebb Cr. C. 127, Ire. (a witness fainted shortly after his cross-examination began; held, by a vote of 7 to 5 judges, that the direct examination should be received, the case standing "upon the same principle [as death], fatality or the act of God"; the leading case, with good opinions on both sides); 1892, unfinished suffices if its purposes have been substantially accomplished. Where, however, the failure to obtain cross-examination is in any sense attributable to the cross-examiner's own consent or fault, the lack of cross-examination is of course no objection,⁵—according to the general principle (ante, § 1371) that an opportunity, though waived, suffices.

§ 1391. Failure of Cross-examination through the Witness' Refusal to Answer or the Fault of the Party offering him. (2) Where the witness, after his examination in chief on the stand, has refused to submit to cross-examination, the opportunity of thus probing and testing his statements has substantially failed, and his direct testimony should be struck out.¹ On the

R. v. Mitchell, 17 Cox Cr. 503 (dying woman examined, and after the cross-examination "had continued for about ten minutes," the magistrate stopped it on account of her condition; she died a few minutes later; held inadmissible, unless the cross-examination was being continued merely as a pretext); Conn.: 1899, Randall v. Atkinson, 30 Ont. 242 (deposition of defendant, who had died pending adjournment and before cross-examination, without fault on either side admitted; exhaustive opinion by Rose, J.; but the analogies of chancery practice and of the statutory affidavit practice are emphasized); U. S.: 1892, Scott v. McCann, 76 Md. 47, 24 Atl. 536 (the deponent-party died during adjournment and before cross-examination; admitted, partly because of chancery precedents, partly because the surviving opponent had testified, and partly because the cross-examination was not "likely to modify his testimony in chief"; a sensible ruling); 1855, Fuller v. Rice, 4 Gray 343 (a witness fell ill at the 19th cross-interrogatory; testimony received; Shaw, C. J.: "No general rule can be laid down in respect to unfinished testimony. If substantially complete, . . . it ought not to be rejected"); 1858, Lewis v. Ins. Co., 10 id. 511 (failure of memory through illness; testimony admitted); 1879, Heath v. Waters, 40 Mich. 471 (Campbell, C. J.: "There are cases in which a failure to respond on cross-examination will justify the exclusion of at least so much of the direct testimony as it might have qualified"); 1894, People v. Kindra, 102 id. 147, 151, 60 N. W. 458 (witness dismissed by the judge after cross-examination at length; admitted, though the cross-examiner for unspecified reasons had asked for further cross-examination); 1844, Forrest v. Kissam, 7 Hill 470, overruling Kissam v. Forrest, 25 Wend. 652 (the witness died after direct examination, pending adjournment by consent; though it was otherwise inadmissible, the judges differed as to the sufficiency of the present ground); 1871, People v. Cole, 43 N. Y. 513 (the witness fainted at the end of the direct examination and became too ill to permit of cross-examination; Grover, J.: "The common-law rule . . . should be adhered to, although in some cases there may be an apparent hardship. No injustice is done to the party seeking to avail himself of the evidence to require that before its admission its truth shall be subjected to such tests as the experience of ages has shown were necessary to render reliance thereon at all safe; and where this has been prevented without any fault of the adverse party, to exclude the evidence"; Forrest v. Kissam declared to be no authority, because the decision was rested on different grounds by different judges); 1875, Sturm v. Ins. Co., 63 id. 87 (Folger, J.: "It may be taken as the rule that, where a party is deprived of the benefit of the cross-examination of a witness by the act of the opposite party or by the refusal to testify or other misconduct of the witness, or by any means other than the act of God, the act of the party himself, or some cause to which he assented, the testimony given on the examination-in-chief may not be read"); 1876, Hewlett v. Wood, 67 id. 396 (the witness was ill and after repeated adjournments no cross-examination could be had; semble, that the fault of the witness or his party, or "any matter of substance," would exclude a deposition; People v. Cole and Sturm v. Ins. Co., not mentioned); 1868, Pringle v. Pringle, 59 Pa. 290, semble (inadmissible, if cross-examination is prevented by act of God).

⁵ 1848, R. v. Hyde, 3 Cox Cr. 90 (the witness, a child, was very ill, and after the substance of the story had been obtained for the prosecution in taking the deposition, further questioning was abandoned; the counsel for the defendant declined to cross-examine, "as the child is evidently not in a fit state to answer," but did not ask for a postponement; the witness signed the deposition, and died shortly afterwards; Platt, B., conceded that "an attorney cannot shut out a deposition by abstaining from cross-examination"; but the argument that the condition of the child had precluded a satisfactory examination left him in doubt on the whole case); 1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 7th day, Times' Rep. pt. 2, p. 66; 1896, People v. Pope, 108 Mich. 361, 66 N. W. 213, semble (here the witness fainted; but the opponent failed to move to strike out the direct testimony; held, admissible); 1879, Hay's Appeal, 91 Pa. 265, 268 (the plaintiff witness became disqualified, by the death of the opponent, after the direct examination and during adjournment, the opposing counsel having declined cross-examination before adjournment, on account of his client's absence; direct examination admitted, on the ground of waiver).

¹ 1885, Rieger's Succession, 37 La. An. 104 (note 2, infra); 1842, Smith v. Griffith, 3 Hill circumstances of the case, the refusal or evasion of answers to one or more questions only need not lead to this result.² When such a refusal, however, occurs in answer to the written interrogatories of a deposition (taken on the Chancery model), the situation may require more strictness, for the deponent is not in a position to be coerced by the Court's summary process, and the opportunity of further probing the witness and of investigating the motive of the refusal and the materiality of the loss of evidence is not so abundant:

1838, Shaw, C. J., in Savage v. Blanchard, 20 Pick. 167, 172: "So far as the objection goes upon the assumption that a deposition must be rejected because some of the questions of the adverse party are not answered, as a general rule it is untenable. . . . [But] cases may be supposed where, if a witness is manifestly favorable to the party taking the deposition and declines answering pertinent and material questions to facts apparently within his knowledge, it would be a good ground for excluding the deposition altogether. It would show that the witness had violated his duty and his oath in not telling the whole truth, and the deposition would in effect be taken ex parte."

1846, Nisbet, J., in McCloskey v. Leadbetter, 1 Ga. 551, 555: "This rule does not mean that a party shall be deprived of the benefits of his witness' testimony by failure of the other party to exercise the privilege of cross-examination, or by the dereliction of the commissioners, or by the contumacy of the witness. But it does mean that a party seeking the privilege of cross-examination shall not be forced to trial without it. It certainly does mean that interrogatories ought not to be read where cross-questions are filed and

N. Y. 333; 1879, State v. McNinch, 12 S. C. 95; 1896, Millikan v. Booth, 4 Okl. 713, 46 Pac. 439; so also the cases cited ante, § 1390.

² Ala.: 1845, Gibson v. Goldthwaite, 7 Ala. 281, 294 (failure to answer a question not material; deposition admitted); 1846, Spence v. Mitchell, 9 id. 744, 749 (failure to answer two questions directly, held not fatal, on the facts); 1857, Harris v. Miller, 30 id. 221, 224 (deposition suppressed, one answer being "evasive and incomplete"); 1861, Black v. Black, 38 id. 111, 112 (answer held not evasive, merely for referring to former direct answers); 1902, Electric Lighting Co. v. Rust, 131 id. 484, 31 So. 486 (deposition suppressed for evasive answers on material points); D. C.: 1896, Clark v. Harner, 9 D. C. App. 1, 5, 7 (the witness was partly cross-examined, and then upon adjournment was requested by counsel to return on the next Court day, but no notice was given of this to the Court; the witness not re-appearing at all, the Court refused to strike out his testimony); Ga.: 1849, Williams v. Turner, 7 Ga. 348, 350 (deposition suppressed, for failure to answer one question; "it will not do to permit a witness to judge what questions he shall answer and what not"); 1850, Thomas v. Kinsey, 8 id. 421, 425 (answer held sufficient on the facts); 1858, Heard v. McKee, 26 id. 332, 342 (similar); 1895, Senior v. State, 97 id. 185, 22 S. E. 404 (the complainant in a rape case refused to point out which of two persons was the assaulter, and her testimony was excluded); Ky.: 1899, Flannery v. Com., — Ky. —, 51 S. W. 572 (child's refusal to answer one question, not sufficient to justify exclusion); La.: 1885, Rieger's

Succession, 37 La. An. 104 (witness excused after direct examination, on the ground of illness, but repeatedly failing, when apparently able, to re-appear for cross-examination; excluded); 1888, Townsend's Succession, 40 id. 67, 73, 3 So. 488 (witness ordered to appear for further cross-examination, but failing to do so; admissible in trial Court's discretion); Wis.: 1882, Trowbridge v. Sickler, 54 Wis. 306, 309, 11 N. W. 581 (oral interrogatories; evasive answers held not to justify suppression of the deposition, on the facts; the cross-examiner "can repeat the questions or put others until the witness is forced to answer the precise point required, or fairly refuse; of course, refusal or evasion might be so gross as to indicate corruption and authorize a suppression of the whole deposition").

But a refusal to answer on a privileged subject cannot justify suppressing the direct examination; for the latter is equally liable with cross-examination to be balked by the privilege, and it is a mere accident on which side the privileged topic occurs: 1800, Barber v. Gingell, 3 Esp. 60, 62 (a witness' direct examination is not to be forbidden, because his cross-examination will probably include questions which he may be privileged not to answer). Contra: 1896, McElhannon v. State, 99 Ga. 672, 26 S. E. 501 (on the facts of the case, the witness claiming on cross-examination his privilege on material points, the testimony was struck out).

Distinguish the controversy whether the question can be put (or read, in a deposition) even though the answer claims privilege (post, § 2268).

unanswered (provided they are such as by law ought to be answered), until the processes of the Court are exhausted to compel the witness to answer."

Courts treat this situation with varying degrees of strictness. It should be left to the determination of the trial judge, regard being had chiefly to the motive of the witness and the materiality of the answer.³

§ 1392. Non-Responsive Answers; General or "Sweeping" Interrogatories. (3) When a deposition is taken on written interrogatories filed beforehand, and the witness in an answer to a direct interrogatory departs from the subject of the question, the cross-examiner may be virtually deprived of cross-examination, because by not anticipating this answer he will not have framed his cross-interrogatories to probe the witness on that subject. This objection is obviously applicable to written interrogatories only;¹ but to that extent it has a just foundation :

1876, Hallett, C. J., in Marr v. Wetzel, 3 Colo. 2, 6: "In taking evidence upon interrogatories attached to the dedimus or commission, the rule which requires that the witness shall answer the question put, without more, should be somewhat strictly applied. In such case the party against whom the deposition is to be used has no opportunity to cross-examine, except that which is afforded by filing cross-interrogatories to be attached to the commission. In drawing them he must often be governed entirely by the direct interrogatories filed by his adversary; and if these last give no light as to the subject upon which the witness is to be examined, he will be unable to cross-examine. Of this the deposition in the record affords an illustration. In the direct interrogatories there is nothing calling for the witness' knowledge as to the service of the process on the defendant in the State of Missouri, and yet such evidence was elicited. As to this the defendant had no opportunity to cross-examine."

Nevertheless, whether there has been a substantial failure of cross-examination will depend much on the materiality of the answer, the facts of the case as known to the cross-examiner, and the tenor of the cross-interrogatories; so that no fixed rule can be laid down. Apart from the present

³ 1846, McCloskey v. Leadbetter, 1 Ga. 551, 555 (deposition to impeach another witness, excluded because a single material question was left unanswered; quoted supra); 1880, Schaefer v. R. Co., 66 id. 39, 43 (substantial answering of cross-interrogatories, sufficient); 1859, Nicholson v. Desobry, 14 La. An. 81, 83 (in the trial Court's discretion, the failure to answer a material interrogatory is ground for exclusion); 1838, Savage v. Blanchard, 20 Pick. 167 (quoted supra); 1863, Robinson v. B. & W. R. Co., 7 All. 393, 395 (deposition suppressed, for a single evasive answer); 1864, Stratford v. Ames, 8 All. 577 (failure to answer one question does not exclude all, "unless his answer is so imperfect or evasive as to induce the Court to believe that he willfully kept back material facts within his knowledge"); 1867, McMahon v. Davidson, 12 Minn. 357, 367 (answers must appear "fully and fairly given, without the suppression of any fact material to the case"); 1821, Withers v. Gillespy, 7 S. & R. 10, 16 (incomplete answers; rejected on the facts); 1867, Crossgrove v. Himmelrich, 54 Pa. 203, 208 (refusal to answer an irrelevant question, held no ground for suppression); 1811, Richardson v. Golden, 3 Wash. C. C. 109 (there was "no answer given to or notice taken of the general interrogatory"; excluded); 1816, Nelson v. U. S., Pet. C. C. 235 (letters rogatory; deposition not suppressed, where the interrogatories were "substantially, though not formally" all answered); 1837, Gass v. Stinson, 3 Sumn. 98 (where the Chancery authorities are elaborately examined by Story, J.); 1898, Bird v. Halsy, 87 Fed. 671, 674 (refusal to answer a question suffices to exclude; but here admitted for the opponent's failure to compel answer or otherwise to make proper objection); 1894, Hadra v. Bank, 9 Utah 412, 414, 35 Pac. 508 (refusal to answer a question affecting the admissibility of the entire testimony; deposition excluded); 1882, Trowbridge v. Sickler, 54 Wis. 306 (cited supra, note 2).

¹ 1876, Marr v. Wetzel, 3 Colo. 2, 6 (see quotation supra); 1872, Greenman v. O'Connor, 25 Mich. 30 (for a non-responsive answer on a material point, the testimony was held improperly admitted; "the right of cross-examination would ground, there is no inherent objection to a non-responsive answer; in particular, the direct examiner cannot object to it, nor can the cross-examiner object to it when it is evoked by his own interrogatory.²

(4) A direct interrogatory may be so general or "sweeping" as to enable the witness, while responsively answering, to range over a variety of topics whose tenor the cross-examiner cannot by possibility have anticipated. In this way, for the same reason just noted, he may be substantially deprived of his right. Such a general interrogatory, to be sure, is often useful and has been traditionally employed to close a deposition taken by written interrogatories.³ Nevertheless, its capability of abuse is well understood; and the trial judge should have discretion to strike out the answer to it if a substantial injustice would result:

1897, Fish, J., in McBride v. Macon T. P. Co., 102 Ga. 422, 30 S. E. 999: "Strictly speaking, this was not an interrogatory at all, but a mere request or demand for general information in addition to that sought to be elicited by the preceding specific questions propounded to the witness. We cannot approve of this method of examination, as applied to a witness whose testimony is taken by interrogatories, notwithstanding it may be in accord with a practice commonly pursued by counsel in this State. Every interrogatory addressed to a witness should be sufficiently explicit to indicate to the opposite party the nature of the testimony expected. Obviously, a full and intelligent cross-examination of the witness is not possible, unless the questions propounded to him on his direct examination indicate with reasonable certainty the particular points as to which his testimony is desired. As strict matter of right, therefore, a party suing out a set of interrogatories cannot claim that the response of the witness to such a sweeping interrogation (if it may be called such) as that above quoted has been legitimately drawn forth, and is in consequence admissible in evidence. On the other hand, if the reply of the witness does not include matter not suggested by the preceding interrogatories put to him, the opposite party will not have been prejudiced by an abridgment of his right to a full opportunity to cross-examine the witness, and accordingly cannot justly complain in the event the Court declines to rule out the testimony thus elicited. Under such circumstances, the trial judge may very properly exercise his discretion in the premises, to the end that complete justice may be done as between the respective parties to the litigation."⁴ be thereby defeated entirely, because no cross-interrogatories can be expected to enter upon subjects not opened by the direct ones"); 1874, Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173, 185 (the rule is confined to "settled written interrogatories"; "no such difficulty can arise where the witness is examined openly and orally").

² Cases cited ante, § 785.

³ Federal Equity Rules, No. 71 (the last written interrogatory shall be, in substance: "Do you know, or can you set forth, any other matter or thing which may be a benefit or advantage to the parties at issue in this case, or either of them, or that may be material to the subject of this your examination or the matters in question in this cause? If yes, set forth the same fully and at large in your answer").

⁴ The rulings have naturally varied much: 1848, Yarborough v. Hood, 13 Ala. 176, 180 (answer to a general interrogatory, held improperly excluded); 1877, Blunt v. Strong, 60 id. 572, 577 ("To such interrogatory no answer should be allowed of matter that is not germane to the subject of some special inquiry, and in a measure the complement of testimony previously given"); 1898, McBride v. Macon T. P. Co., 102 Ga. 422, 30 S. E. 999 ("State all the facts that will inure to the benefit of the plaintiff or the defendant in this case," held not a proper interrogatory in a deposition; quoted supra); 1820, Perceival v. Hickey, 18 John. 257, 264, 289 (Spencer, C. J.: "I perceive no abuse likely to follow from allowing the witnesses to state every material fact, under that interrogatory, not before drawn forth by the special interrogatories"); 1854, Commercial Bank v. Union Bank, 11 N. Y. 203, 210 (deposition not suppressed, for a general interrogatory with answers "pertinent to the matters in issue"; the opponent should have applied beforehand to remedy any surprise "either by a further examination of the same witnesses or otherwise"); 1827, Rhoades v. Selin, 4 Wash. C. C. 722 (answer to a general interrogatory, admitted).

So far as the mode of direct interrogation may in any other way deprive the opponent of the adequate exercise of his right of cross-examination, through rendering it impossible to anticipate the subject, the trial judge may properly exclude the direct examination, to the extent of its impropriety.⁵

§ 1393. Sundry Insufficiencies of Cross-Examination. (1) (a) Where the cross-examination is hampered by the witness' organic defects of speech, hearing, or the like, the admissibility of the testimony should be left entirely to the trial judge.¹

(b) The party's own presence in the court-room during cross-examination can hardly be deemed essential; for his appearance by counsel gains him the benefit of the right. Nevertheless, some Courts have thought it improper (partly from the present point of view) to compel the party to retire from the room during the trial.²

(c) Where the witness testifies in a foreign language, the accused is entitled to understand it, so as to be able to cross-examine the witness. But if somehow such an understanding is attained, either by his own or his counsel's knowledge of the language or by the help of an interpreting third person, the precise mode of attaining it is immaterial.³

(d) Whether there has been a substantially adequate cross-examination where a deposition written down in the accused's absence has been afterwards read over to him by the magistrate in the witness' presence with liberty then

⁵ 1902, Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 133 Ala. 381, 32 So. 124 (divorce; on interrogatories propounded by the chancellor ex mero motu to the defendant, the plaintiff was held entitled to notice for purposes of cross-examination); 1848, Stagg v. Pomeroy, 3 La. An. 16 ("any further enquiries propounded by the plaintiff's counsel before the commissioner were ex parte, and to the disadvantage of the defendants, who had no opportunity of counteracting them by cross-examination"); 1897, Anderson v. Bank, 6 N. D. 497, 72 N. W. 916, semble (amendment of a declaration after deposition taken; the defendant not allowed to suppress the deposition because of no cross-examination on the amended pleading); 1884, First National Bank v. Wirebach's Ex'r, 106 Pa. 44 (deposition admitted, though new matter came up on the trial, as to which the deponent had not been cross-examined).

For the question whether more than one counsel on a side may cross-examine, see ante, § 783.

For the question whether a witness who has been merely subpoenaed or merely asked one question may be cross-examined, or must be called as his own witness by the cross-examiner, see post, § 1892.

¹ 1882, Quinn v. Halbert, 55 Vt. 228 (receiving testimony where the witness was dumb and could merely shake his head in assent or dissent, and the opportunity of cross-examination was thus very limited).

² Cases cited post, § 1399 (confrontation), § 1841 (sequestration of witnesses), and the following: 1876, Crowe v. Peters, 63 Mo. 429, 433 (on a suggestion that the defendant was by gestures and looks intimidating a witness, he was ordered from the room; held, erroneous, because it prevented his aid in the cross-examination; but a change of position, etc., might have been required; this is unsound, because it was the party's own fault).

For intimidation by the cross-examiner, see ante, §§ 781, 786.

³ 1888, R. v. Ah Har, 7 Haw. 319 (the constitutional right "is not complied with unless the accused is in some way made to understand their evidence," in order to avail himself of the right of cross-examination; but "if the accused has counsel who understands the evidence, whether directly from the witnesses or through an interpreter, the constitutional requirement is complied with, though the accused himself may not understand it"; yet the Court may, on request in such a case, order interpretation to the accused of the testimony as given by each witness; a request not made till the close of the prosecution's case is not seasonable); 1899, Republic v. Yamane, 12 id. 189 (R. v. Ah Har followed, and held equally applicable to capital cases); 1903, Com. v. Lenousky, 206 Pa. 277, 55 Atl. 977 (testimony of an absent witness, given originally at a preliminary hearing, in the presence of the accused, a foreigner who understood the witness' language, held inadmissible, because he had no counsel to tell him that he had the right to cross-examine; unsound). Compare § 811, ante, § 1810, post (interpreters).

to cross-examine, is a question that has been several times discussed in England. It would seem that, under the circumstances of a given case, such an opportunity might be adequate.⁴

⁴ 1817, R. v. Smith, R. & R. 339 (admissible); 1817, R. v. Forbes, Holt 599, Chambre, J. (inadmissible); 1845, R. v. Hake, 1 Cox Cr. 226 (the witness' deposition was taken and authenticated on the 28th; on the 29th, the defendant and two co-defendants being present for the first time, and the witness also being present, the deposition was read over to all the defendants; it was not re-signed by the magistrates; Erle, J.: "The reading of it in the prisoner's presence is equivalent to a taking of it in his presence. . . . The object is to afford to the party charged an opportunity for cross-examination. Such an opportunity has been held to be afforded by a reading over of the deposition where there is one prisoner only; that object is not the less secured because there are many prisoners"); 1852, R. v. Day, 6 id. 55, Platt, B. (the mere reading over to the accused a deposition already taken is not enough). Whether the loss of a document whose genuineness is disputed should exclude the testimony of an expert who has studied it, by reason of the consequent impossibility of cross-examining him upon its details, is a question involving the principles of handwriting testimony (ante, §§ 697, 1185, post, § 2015).

SUB-TITLE I (continued): THE HEARSAY RULE SATISFIED.

TOPIC II: BY CONFRONTATION.

CHAPTER XLV.

1. General Principle of Confrontation.

§ 1395. Purpose and Theory of Confrontation.

§ 1396. Witness' Presence before Tribunal may be Dispensed with, if not Obtainable.

§ 1397. Effect of Constitutional Sanction of Confrontation.

§ 1398. Same: State of the Law in the Various Jurisdictions.

§ 1399. Confrontation, as requiring the Tribunal's or the Defendant's Sight of the Witness.

2. Circumstances of Necessity making the Witness' Personal Presence Unavailable.

§ 1401. Preliminary Distinctions; (a) Deposition and Testimony; (b) Civil and Criminal Cases; (c) Taking and Using a Deposition.

§ 1402. General Principle of Necessity or Unavailability.

§ 1403. Specific Cases of Unavailability: (1) Death.

§ 1404. Same: (2) Absence from Jurisdiction.

§ 1405. Same: (3) Disappearance; Inability to Find; (4) Opponent's Procurement.

§ 1406. Same: (5) Illness, Infirmary, Age, preventing Attendance.

§ 1407. Same: (6) Imprisonment; (7) Official Duty or Privilege; (8) Distance of Travel.

§ 1408. Same: (9) Insanity, or other Mental Incompetency.

§ 1409. Same: (10) Interest.

§ 1410. Same: (11) Infamy.

§ 1411. Same: Statutes affecting Depositions de bene esse.

§ 1412. Same: Statutes affecting Depositions in perpetuum memoriam.

§ 1413. Same: Statutes affecting Former Testimony.

§ 1414. Proof of Unavailability of Witness.

§ 1415. If Witness is Available for Testifying, Deposition is not Usable.

§ 1416. Same: Rule not Applicable (1) to Deposition of Party-Opponent, or (2) to Deposition containing Self-Contradiction; but applicable (3) to Deposition of Opponent's Witness, and (4) to Former Testimony in Malicious Prosecution.

§ 1417. Same: Exceptions to the Rule for (1) Chancery and analogous Proceedings; (2) Commissions by Dedimus Potestatem; (3) Deposition in Perpetuum Memoriam; (4) Will-Probat; (5) Bastardy Complaints.

§ 1418. Anomalous Jurisdictions in which No Necessity suffices to admit.

1. General Principle of Confrontation.

§ 1395. Purpose and Theory of Confrontation. In the period when the Hearsay rule is being established, and ex parte depositions are still used against an accused person (ante, § 1364), we find him frequently protesting that the witnesses should be "brought face to face," or that he should be "confronted" with the witnesses against him. The final establishment of the Hearsay rule, in the early 1700s, meant that this protest was sanctioned as a just one,—in other words, that Confrontation was required. What was, in principle, the meaning and purpose of this Confrontation? So far as there is a rule of Confrontation, what is the process that satisfies this rule?

It is generally agreed that the process of confrontation has two purposes, a main and essential one, and a secondary and subordinate one. (1) The main and essential purpose of confrontation is to secure the opportunity of cross-examination. The opponent demands confrontation, not for the idle purpose of gazing upon the witness, or of being gazed upon by him, but for the purpose of cross-examination, which cannot be had except by the direct and personal putting of questions and obtaining of immediate answers. That this is the true and essential significance of confrontation is demonstrated by the language of counsel and judges from the beginning of the Hearsay rule to the present day:

1680, L. C. J. Hale, Pleas of the Crown, I, 306 (commenting on St. 5 & 6 Edw. VI, c. 12, § 12 (1552)); "which said accusers [of treason] at the time of the arraignment of the party accused, if they be then living, shall be brought in person before the party so accused, and avow and maintain that that they have to say to prove him guilty"); "Yet in case of treason, where two witnesses [i. e. accusers] are required, such an examination [before a justice of the peace] is not allowable, for the statute requires that they be produced upon the arraignment in the presence of the prisoner, to the end that he may cross-examine them."

1696, Fenwick's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 591, 638, 712 (before the House of Commons); Sergt. Lovel (for the prosecution): "We have Mr. Goodman's examination under the hand of Mr. Vernon; we pray it may be read"; Sir B. Shower (for the accused): "Mr. Speaker, . . . I humbly oppose the reading of this examination, as not agreeable to the rules of practice and evidence, and that which is wholly new. . . . No deposition of a person can be read, though beyond sea, unless in cases where the party it is to be read against was privy to the examination and might have cross-examined him or examined to his credit, if he thought fit. . . . Our law requires persons to appear and give their testimony via voce; and we see that their testimony appears credible or not by their very countenances and the manner of their delivery; and their falsity may sometimes be discovered by questions that the party may ask them, and by examining them to particular circumstances which may lay open the falsity of a well-laid scheme, which otherwise, as he himself had put it together, might have looked well at first; and this we are deprived of, if this examination should be admitted to be read. . . . We oppose it at present for that we were not present nor privy nor could have cross-examined him"; Sir T. Powis, arguing: "How contrary this is to a fundamental rule in our law, that no evidence shall be given against a man, when he is on trial for his life, but in the presence of the prisoner, because he may cross-examine him who gives such evidence; and that is due to every man in justice."

1720, Duke of Dorset v. Girdler, Finch's Prec. Ch. 531: "The other side ought not to be deprived of the opportunity of confronting the witnesses and examining them publicly, which has always been found the most effectual method for discovering of the truth."¹

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. III, c. XIX: "Under the head of Confrontation may be found whatever advances (scanty indeed they will be seen to be) have been made in Roman procedure towards the introduction of that universal and equal system of interrogation above delineated and proposed, — consequently whatever part has been covered by the Roman law of the ground covered by the operation called Cross-examination in English law. The operation has two professed objects: one is the establishing the identity of the defendant, viz. that the person thus produced to the deponent is the person of whom he has been speaking; the other is that an opportunity may be afforded to the defendant, in addition to whatever testimony may have been delivered to his disadvantage, to obtain the extraction of such other part (if any) of the facts within the knowledge of the deponent as may operate in his favour. . . . [It is in Continental law] an imperfect modification of cross-examination, . . . a faint shadow of it."

1856, Bartley, C. J., in Summons v. State, 5 Oh. St. 341: "Evidence of the statements of a deceased witness on a former trial . . . would seem to be now confined to cases where opportunity for cross-examination had been afforded, and therefore to cases where the accused had been confronted by the deceased witness when the testimony was given on the former trial."

¹ See also Blackstone, Commentaries, III, 373.

1865, Woodward, C. J., in Houser v. Com., 51 Pa. 337: "Confronting witnesses does not mean impeaching their character, but means cross-examination in the presence of the accused. When the common law of England was transported to these colonies, it gave a person charged with a capital crime no compulsory process to obtain witnesses and entitled him to no examination by himself or his counsel of witnesses brought against him. . . . To remedy this state of the law, our constitutions all declared — what statutes had then provided in England — that the accused should have an impartial trial by jury, should have process for witnesses and be entitled to counsel to examine them, and to cross-examine those for the prosecution in the presence of (confronting) the accused."

1876, Boreman, J., in U. S. v. Reynolds, 1 Utah 322: "On the former trial she was under oath, and subject to cross-examination by the defendant, and then he was confronted by the witness. The main objects of producing the witness upon the stand had been attained."

1891, Earl, J., in People v. Fish, 125 N. Y. 150, 26 N. E. 319: "It is quite a valuable right to a prisoner to be confronted upon his trial with the witnesses against him, so that he may cross-examine them and the jury see them and thus judge of their credibility. . . . The evidence of the witness was taken in his presence where he had the opportunity to cross-examine him, where he did in fact cross-examine him, and thus he had all the protection that the Bill of Rights and the Constitution were intended to secure him."

Thus the main idea in the process of confrontation is that of the opportunity of cross-examination; the former is merely the dramatic feature, the preliminary measure, appurtenant to the latter.

(2) There is, however, a secondary advantage to be obtained by the personal appearance of the witness; the judge and the jury are enabled to obtain the elusive and incommunicable evidence of a witness' deportment while testifying, and a certain subjective moral effect is produced upon the witness.² This subordinate advantage has been expounded in the following passages:

1836, Putnam, J., in Com. v. Richards, 18 Pick. 437: "[Even] if you get the whole, it is very defective; for you cannot have a true representation of the countenance, manner, and expression of the deceased witness, which either confirmed or denied the truth of the testimony."

1857, Ryland, J., in State v. McO'Blenis, 24 Mo. 421: "There are many things, aside from the literal import of the words uttered by the witness while testifying, on which the value of his evidence depends. These it is impossible to transfer to paper. Taken in the aggregate, they constitute a vast moral power in eliciting the truth, all of which is lost when the examination is had out of court and the mere words of the witness are reproduced in the form of a deposition."

1882, Campbell, J., in People v. Sligh, 48 Mich. 56: "The production of witnesses in open court is one of the best means of trying their credit; and every one knows how difficult it is to judge from written testimony of the demeanor and appearance which strike those who examined them. Still more difficult must it be to have the testimony reproduced."

² In the earlier and more emotional periods, this confrontation was supposed (more often than it now is) to be able to unstring the nerves of a false witness; the following is merely one example: 1678, Atkins' Examination, 6 How. St. Tr. 1473, 1481 (one Captain Atkins was the chief witness against the accused, also named Atkins; the accused tells that at his examination, Lord Shaftesbury said, "'Pray look one another in the face,' so we gazed very earnestly, and my lord Shaftesbury went on, speaking to Captain Atkins, 'Come, Captain Atkins, confess truly and ingenuously, have you belyed Mr. Atkins or no?' . . . After this sort my lord Shaftesbury pressed Captain Atkins very home; and while he was doing so, and we looking steadfastly upon each other, Captain Atkins' countenance changed very white; which I taking notice of, and observing to the lords, my lord marquis of Winchester cried, 'Where, where? I don't see it!')

1860, Chief Justice Appleton, Evidence, 220: "The witness present, the promptness and unpremeditatedness of his answers or the reverse, their distinctness and particularity or the want of these essentials, their incorrectness in generals or particulars, their directness or evasiveness, are soon detected. . . . The appearance and manner, the voice, the gestures, the readiness and promptness of the answers, the evasions, the reluctance, the silence, the contumacious silence, the contradictions, the explanations, the intelligence or the want of intelligence of the witness, the passions which move or control — fear, love, hate, envy, or revenge —, are all open to observation, noted and weighed by the jury."³

This secondary advantage, however, does not arise from the confrontation of the opponent and the witness; it is not the consequence of those two being brought face to face. It is the witness' presence before the tribunal that secures this secondary advantage, — which might equally be obtained whether the opponent was or was not allowed to cross-examine. In other words, this secondary advantage is a result accidentally associated with the process of confrontation, whose original and fundamental object is the opponent's cross-examination.

§ 1396. Witness' Presence before Tribunal may be Dispensed with, if not Obtainable. The question, then, whether there is a right to be confronted with opposing witnesses is essentially a question whether there is a right of cross-examination. If there has been a cross-examination, there has been a confrontation. The satisfaction of the right of cross-examination (under the rules examined ante, §§ 1371–1393) disposes of any objection based on the so-called right of confrontation.

Nevertheless, the secondary advantage, incidentally obtained for the tribunal by the witness' presence before it — the demeanor-evidence — is an advantage to be insisted upon wherever it can be had. No one has doubted that it is highly desirable, if only it is available. But it is merely desirable. Where it cannot be obtained, it need not be required. It is no essential part of the notion of confrontation; it stands on no better footing than other evidence to which special value is attached; and just as the original of a document (ante, § 1192) or a preferred witness (ante, § 1308), may be dispensed with in case of unavailability, so demeanor-evidence may be dispensed with in a similar necessity. Accordingly, supposing that the indispensable requirement of cross-examination has been satisfied, the only remaining inquiry is whether the demeanor-evidence, to be obtained by the witness' production before the tribunal, is available.

This inquiry — the conditions of unavailability of demeanor-evidence, by reason of death, illness, and the like — remains now to be made. But first the effect must be considered of the constitutional sanction, in the United States, of the principle of confrontation; for this has often erroneously affected the judicial attitude towards demeanor-evidence.

§ 1397. Effect of Constitutional Sanction of Confrontation. In the United States, most of the Constitutions have given a permanent sanction to the principle of confrontation, by provisions requiring that in criminal cases the accused shall be "confronted with the witnesses against him" or "brought face to face" with them.¹ The question thus arises whether these consti-

³ So also Blackstone, III, 373.

¹ Ala.: 1875, Art. I, § 7 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused has a right . . . to be confronted by the witnesses against him"); Ark.: 1874, Art. II, § 10 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him"); Cal.: 1879, Art. I, § 13 ("The Legislature shall have the power to provide for the taking, in the presence of the accused and his counsel, of depositions of witnesses in criminal cases, other than cases of homicide, when there is reason to believe that the witness, from inability or other cause, will not attend the trial"); P. C. § 686 ("In a criminal action the defendant is entitled . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him, in the presence of the Court"; except as quoted ante, § 1388); Colo.: 1876, Art. II, § 16 ("In criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); § 17 ("Such deposition [of a witness in criminal cases] shall not be used, if, in the opinion of the Court, the personal attendance of the witness might be procured by the prosecution, or is procured by the accused"); Conn.: 1875, Art. I, § 9 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have the right . . . to be confronted by the witnesses against him"); Del.: 1831, Art. I, § 7 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused hath a right . . . to meet the witnesses in their examination face to face"); Art. VI, § 16 ("In civil causes, when pending, the Superior Court shall have the power, before judgment, . . . of directing the examination of witnesses that are aged, very infirm, or going out of the State, upon interrogatories de bene esse, to be read in evidence in case of the death or departure of the witnesses before the trial, or inability by reason of age, sickness, bodily infirmity, or imprisonment, then to attend; and also the power of obtaining evidence from places not within the State"); Fla.: 1887, Decl. of R., § 11 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); Ga.: 1877, Art. I, § 1, par. 5 ("Every person charged with an offence against the laws of this State . . . shall be confronted with the witnesses testifying against him"); so also Cr. Code 1895, § 8; Ill.: 1870, Art. II, § 9, ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses face to face"); Ind.: 1851, Art. I, § 13 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses face to face"); Rev. St. 1897, § 1876 (like Const. § 13); Ia.: 1857, Art. I, § 10 ("In all criminal prosecutions, and in cases involving the life or liberty of an individual, the accused shall have a right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him"); Kan.: 1859, Bill of R., § 10 ("In all prosecutions, the accused shall be allowed . . . to meet the witness face to face"); Ky.: 1891, § 11 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused has the right . . . to meet the witnesses face to face"); La.: 1879, Art. VIII ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him"); 1898, Art. IX (similar); Me.: 1819, Art. I, § 6 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have a right . . . to be confronted by the witnesses against him"); Md.: 1867, Decl. of R., Art. XXI ("In all criminal prosecutions every man hath a right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him, . . . to examine the witnesses for and against him on oath"); Mass.: 1780, Decl. of R., Art. 12 ("Every subject shall have a right to produce all proofs that may be favorable to him; to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); so also Pub. St. 1882, c. 201, § 4; Mich.: 1850, Art. VI, § 28 ("In every criminal prosecution, the accused shall have the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him"); Comp. L. 1897, § 11796 (to "meet the witnesses who are produced against him face to face"); Minn.: 1857, Art. I, § 6 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him"); Miss.: 1890, Art. III, § 26 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have a right . . . to be confronted by the witnesses against him"); Mo.: 1875, Art. II, § 22 ("In criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); Mont.: 1889, Art. III, § 16 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); § 17 ("In criminal proceedings, if a witness cannot give security, his deposition shall be taken in the manner prescribed by law, and in the presence of the accused and his counsel, or without their presence, if they shall fail to attend the examination after reasonable notice of the time and place thereof. Any deposition authorized by this section may be received as evidence on the trial, if the witness shall be dead or absent from the State"); P. C. 1895, § 1355 (like Const. Art. III, § 16); Nebr.: 1875, Art. I, § 11 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); Nev.: Gen. St. 1885, § 3910 ("In a criminal action, the defendant is entitled . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him in the presence of the Court"; but provision is made for use of testimony taken on preliminary hearing); N. H.: 1793, Part I, art. 15 ("Every subject shall have a right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); N. J.: 1844, Art. I, § 8 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to be confronted with the witness against him"); N. M.: Comp. L. 1897, § 3765 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused . . . shall be confronted with the witnesses against him"); § 1047 ("to meet the witnesses face to face"); N. C.: 1875, Art. I, § 11 ("In all criminal prosecutions, every man has the right . . . to confront the accusers and witnesses with other testimony"); Oh.: 1851, Art. I, § 10 ("In any tutional provisions affect the common-law requirement of confrontation, otherwise than by putting it beyond the possibility of abolition by an ordinary legislative body. The only opening for argument lies in the circumstance that these brief provisions are unconditional and absolute in form, i. e. they do not say that the accused shall be confronted "except when the witness is deceased, ill, out of the jurisdiction, or otherwise unavailable," but imperatively prescribe that he "shall be confronted." Upon this feature the argument has many times been founded that, although the accused has had the fullest benefit of cross-examining a witness now deceased or otherwise unavailable, nevertheless, the witness' presence before the tribunal being constitutionally indispensable, his decease or the like is no excuse for dispensing with his presence.

That this argument is unfounded cannot be doubted; and the answer to it may be put in several forms: (1) There never was at common law any recognized right to an indispensable thing called confrontation as distinguished from cross-examination. There was a right to cross-examination as indispensable, and that right was involved in and secured by confrontation; it was the same right under different names. This much is clear enough from the history of the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1364), and from the continuous understanding and exposition of the idea of confrontation (ante, § 1395). It follows that, if the accused has had the benefit of cross-examination, he has had the very privilege secured to him by the Constitution.²

(2) Moreover, this right of cross-examination thus secured was not a right

trial, in any Court, the party accused shall be allowed . . . to meet the witnesses face to face"); Okl. Stats. 1893, § 4874 ("In a criminal action the defendant is entitled . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him in the presence of the Court"); Or. : 1859, Art. I, § 11 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses face to face"); Pa. : 1874, Art. I, § 9 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused hath a right . . . to meet the witnesses face to face"); R. I. ; 1842, Art. I, § 10 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him"); S. C. : 1882, Art. I, § 13 ("Every person shall have a right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); 1895, Art. I, § 18 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him face to face"); S. D. : 1889, Art. VI, § 90 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); Stats. 1899, § 8285 (a defendant is entitled "to be confronted with the witnesses against him in the presence of the court"); Tenn. : 1870, Art. I, § 9 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused hath the right . . . to meet the witnesses face to face"); so also Code 1896, § 7355; Tex. : 1876, Art. I, § 10 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused . . . shall be confronted with the witnesses against him"); U. S. : 1787, Amendment VI ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him"); Utah : 1895, Art. I, § 12 ("In criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to be confronted by the witnesses against him"); Rev. St. 1898, § 4513 (like Cal. P. C. § 686); Vt. : Ch. I, Art. 10 ("In all prosecutions for criminal offences, a person hath a right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses"); so also Stats. 1894, § 1861; Va. : 1869, Art. I, § 10 ("In all capital or criminal prosecutions, a man hath a right . . . to be confronted with the accusers and witnesses"); 1902, Art. I, § 8 (same, omitting "capital or"); Wash. : Art. I, § 22 ("In criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); W. Va. : Art. III, § 14 ("In all such trials [of crimes and misdemeanors], the accused shall . . . be confronted with the witnesses against him"); Wis. : Art. I, § 7 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right . . . to meet the witnesses face to face"); Wyo. : 1889, Art. I, § 10 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him").

² This first answer plainly disposes of all objections to the use of cross-examined depositions and former testimony. But the use of dying declarations and other exceptional statements can only be met by the further answers set forth in (2) and (3).

devoid of exceptions. The right to subject opposing testimony to cross-examination is the right to have the Hearsay rule enforced; for the Hearsay rule is the rule requiring cross-examination (ante, § 1362). Now the Hearsay rule is not a rule without exceptions; there never was a time when it was without exceptions. There were a number of well-established ones at the time of the earliest constitutions, and others might be expected to be developed in the future. The rule had always involved the idea of exceptions, and the constitution-makers indorsed the general principle merely as such. They did not care to enumerate exceptions; they merely named and described the principle sufficiently to indicate what was intended,—just as the brief constitutional sanction for trial by jury, though absolute in form, did not attempt to enumerate the excepted cases to which that form of trial was appropriate nor to describe the precise procedure involved in it,—just as the brief prohibition against “abridging the freedom of speech” was not intended to ignore the exception for defamatory statements,—just as the brief guarantee of the right to have counsel was not intended to prohibit a prosecution where no counsel could be found by the accused,—just as the prohibition against involuntary servitude does not abolish the father’s common-law right to the services of his child. The rule sanctioned by the Constitution is the Hearsay rule as to cross-examination, with all the exceptions that may legitimately be found, developed, or created therein.

(3) The net result, then, under the constitutional rule, is that, so far as testimony is required under the Hearsay rule to be taken infra-judicially, it shall be taken in a certain way, namely, subject to cross-examination,—not secretly or ex parte away from the accused. The Constitution does not prescribe what kinds of testimonial statements (dying declarations, or the like) shall be given infra-judicially—this depends on the law of evidence for the time being,—but only what mode of procedure shall be followed—i. e. a cross-examining procedure—in the case of such testimony as is required by the ordinary law of evidence to be given infra-judicially.

These answers are represented in the following passages:

1852, Lumpkin, J., in Campbell v. State, 11 Ga. 374: “The admission of dying declarations in evidence was never supposed in England to violate the well-established principles of the common law that the witnesses against the accused should be examined in his presence. The two rules have co-existed there certainly since the trial of Ely in 1720, and are considered of equal authority. . . . The right of a party accused of a crime to meet the witnesses against him face to face is no new principle. It is coeval with the common law. Its recognition in the Constitution was intended for the twofold purposes of giving it prominence and permanence.”

1852, Yerger, J., in Lambeth v. State, 23 Miss. 322, 357: “The admission of these [dying] declarations was established as a rule of evidence by the Courts of the common law, almost coeval with the foundations of that law itself. The general principle of the common law, with few exceptions, has always been that ‘hearsay evidence’ could not be admitted. But simultaneous with the adoption of this rule, an exception was made to it in the case of the ‘dying declarations’ of the deceased on the trial of a party charged with his murder. . . . When the bill of rights was adopted by the framers of our Constitution, they were aware of this rule of evidence of the common law. They found it adopted into and forming a part of the jurisprudence of the country. The object they had in view, in adopting the clause referred to, was not to introduce a new or abolish an old rule of evidence. Their intention was not to declare or specify the nature, character, or degree of evidence which the Courts of the country should admit. Their aim was simply to re-assert a cherished principle of the common law which had sometimes been violated in the mother country in political prosecutions; leaving to the Courts to decide, according to the rules of law, upon the nature and kind of evidence which a witness, when confronted with the accused, might be permitted to give."

1856, Bartley, C. J., in Summons v. State, 5 Oh. St. 341: "This right . . . has application to the personal presence of the witness on the trial and not to the subject matter or competency of the testimony to be given. . . . If the right secured by the bill of rights applied to the subject matter of the evidence, instead of the witness it would exclude in criminal cases all narration of statements or declarations by other persons heretofore received as competent evidence."

1857, Leonard, J., in State v. McO'Brien, 24 Mo. 416, 435: "The purpose of the people was not, we think to introduce any new principle into the law of criminal procedure, but to secure those that already existed as part of the law of the land from future change by elevating them into constitutional law. . . . It was never supposed in England, at any time, that this privilege was violated by the admission of a dying declaration, or of the deposition of a deceased witness under proper circumstances; nor, indeed, by the reception of any other hearsay evidence established and recognized by law as an exception to the rule. . . . These exceptions to the general rule were never considered violations of the rule itself; they grew out of the necessity of the case, and are founded in practical wisdom; Ryland, J.: "The provision . . . does not make a new rule of evidence; it does not declare what may be or may not be proper and lawful evidence on the trial of a criminal prosecution; it relates to the position of the witness in lawfully detailing such facts as may be lawfully submitted to the jury in a criminal prosecution. . . . He must be in court. So must the accused. He shall not detail his knowledge of the facts in a dark or secret chamber, in the absence of the accused, to be afterwards read against the accused before the jury."³

1892, Cassoday, J., in Jackson v. State, 81 Wis. 127, 131, 51 N. W. 89: "The right of the accused to meet the witnesses face to face was not granted, but secured, by the constitutional clauses mentioned. It is the right, therefore, as it existed at common law that was thus secured. That right was subject to certain exceptions."

It is important to appreciate this, the true interpretation of the constitutional provisions, because the erroneous answer has occasionally been advanced, the "witness" who is to be brought face to face is merely the person now reporting another's former testimony or dying declaration, and that thus the constitutional provision is satisfied by the production of that second person.⁴ The fallacy here is that the statements of the former witness or dying declarant are equally testimony, since they are offered as assertions offered to prove the truth of the fact asserted (ante, § 1361), and the question must therefore still be faced whether these testimonial statements are covered by the constitutional provision.⁵ That they are not so covered is a conclusion

³ 1900, State v. Moore, 156 Mo. 204, 56 S. W. 883 ("The discussion in that case [State v. McO'Brien] . . . constitute a chapter in our judicial history which will forever command the admiration of the bench and bar of our State").

⁴ 1837, Smith, J., in Woodside v. State, 2 How. Miss. 665 ("[In dying declarations] the murdered individual is not a witness. . . . His declarations are regarded as facts or circumstances connected with the murder. . . . It is the individual who swears to the statements of the deceased that is the witness, not the deceased").

⁵ 1858, Napton, J., in State v. Houser, 26 Mo. 437 ("To say that the witness who must meet the accused 'face to face' is he who re-

which can only be reached by the other and safer answers already noticed. It is well to have the sound theory fully understood and accepted, because, if the other should temporarily prevail, its overthrow and the exposure of its fallacies might be thought to involve the overthrow of the exceptions to the Hearsay rule. The revision and extension of the exceptions is gradually progressing, and it is well to appreciate fully that there is in this progress nothing inconsistent with constitutional sanctions. So bold are nowadays the attempts to wrest the Constitution in aid of crime, and so complaisant are the Courts in listening to fantastic and unfounded objections to evidence, that the permissibility of such changes should not be left in the slightest doubt.

§ 1398. Same: State of the Law in the Various Jurisdictions. (1) In dealing with depositions and former testimony, our Courts have almost unanimously received them in criminal prosecutions, as not being obnoxious to the constitutional provision. The leading opinions were rendered chiefly between 1840 and 1860. Up to 1886, apparently the only contrary precedent not overruled was an early Virginia case,¹ afterwards often cited, which professed to decide the question merely on English precedent, and not on constitutional grounds, and proceeded on the authority of an earlier English treatise,² which in turn went upon the authority of Fenwick's Trial, — a parliamentary decision precisely to the opposite effect,³ and misunderstood by the writer of the treatise. This early Virginia ruling, of so little weight in itself, served however to keep a doubt alive; and in the last generation a few ill-considered rulings in other jurisdictions have followed it.⁴ Apart from these rulings, it is well and properly settled that such evidence — assuming always that there has been a due cross-examination — is admissible for the State in a criminal prosecution, without infringing the Constitution.⁵ peats what the dying man has said, is a mere evasion. . . . [He is not] the witness whose testimony is to affect the life or liberty or property of the accused. It is the dying man who is speaking through him, whose evidence is to have weight and efficacy sufficient, it may be, to take away the prisoner's life. The living witness is but a conduit-pipe, — a mere organ, through whom this evidence is conveyed to the Court and jury”).

¹ 1827, Finn v. Com., 5 Rand. 708.

² Peake, Evidence, 60 (1801).

³ See the trial fully considered ante, § 1364.

⁴ Ala.: 1889, Anderson v. State, 89 Ala. 12, 7 So. 429 (here the statute expressly required consent of the defendant; but in this case the deposition had been taken by the defendant, and was not put in by him); Ark.: 1895, Woodruff v. State, 61 Ark. 157, 32 S. W. 102, semble (depositions; but see the earlier cases in the next note); Ill.: 1887, Tucker v. People, 122 Ill. 583, 593, 13 N. E. 809 (said obiter that the use of depositions in a criminal case “would be a direct denial of the right to meet the witnesses face to face”; no authority cited; see the contrary later case in the next note); Ia.: 1871,

State v. Collins, 32 Ia. 36, 40 (see the contrary later case in the next note); Kan.: 1897, State v. Tomblin, 57 Kan. 841, 48 Pac. 144, semble; Ky.: 1886, Kaelin v. Com., 84 Ky. 354, 368, 1 S. W. 594 (said obiter; no precedent cited; see contra the case cited in the next note); Mont.: 1893, State v. Lee, 13 Mont. 248, 33 Pac. 690 (but see the later case in the next note); Okl.: 1897, Watkins v. U. S., 5 Okl. 729, 50 Pac. 88; Tex.: 1896, Cline v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. App. 320, 36 S. W. 1099 (apparently attempting, in a singularly unenlightened opinion, to overrule the long line of Texas precedents cited in the next note); Va.: 1827, Finn v. Com., 5 Rand. 708; 1853, Com. v. Brogy, 10 Gratt. 722, 732 (Finn's Case approved; but nothing said of the constitutional question).

⁵ Besides the following cases, many others cited in the sections post, after § 1402, use such evidence in criminal cases without expressly passing upon the constitutional question: Ala.: 1875, Horton v. State, 18 Ala. 488, 495; Ark.: 1860, Pope v. State, 22 Ark. 372; 1881, Green v. State, 38 id. 304, 321; 1894, Vaughan v. State, 58 id. 353, 370, 24 S. W. 885; 1895, McNamara v. State, 60 id. 400, 30 S. W. 762;

(2) The same result has been reached with regard to the constitutionality of evidence admissible by way of exception to the Hearsay rule. The use of dying declarations has been often thus passed upon, and without any dissenting rulings.⁶ A like consequence must of course also follow for the other exceptions to the Hearsay rule, and has been expressly sanctioned for official

Cal.: 1872, People v. Murphy, 45 Cal. 137; 1884, People v. Oiler, 66 id. 101, 4 Pac. 1066; 1893, People v. Douglass, 100 id. 1, 5, 34 Pac. 490, semble; 1895, People v. Chin Hane, 108 id. 597, 41 id. 697; 1897, People v. Sierp, 116 id. 249, 251, 48 Pac. 88; (because the Constitution has no confrontation-clause); 1897, People v. Cady, 117 id. 10, 48 Pac. 908; for a peculiar statutory distinction in this State, see the end of this note; Colo.: 1895, Ryan v. People, 21 Colo. 119, 40 Pac. 775 (under Const. art. 2, sects. 16, 17); Del.: 1855, State v. Oliver, 2 Houst. 589; Ga.: 1856, Williams v. State, 19 Ga. 403; Ida.: 1890, Terr. v. Evans, 2 Ida. 627, 632; Ill.: 1870, Barnett v. People, 54 Ill. 325, 330 (former testimony); 1898, Gillespie v. People, 176 id. 238, 52 N. E. 250; Ia.: 1894, State v. Fitzgerald, 63 Ia. 272, 19 N. W. 202; Ky.: 1855, Walston v. Com., 16 B. Monr. 35; La.: 1876, State v. Harvey, 28 La. An. 105; 1903, State v. Kline, 109 La. 622, 33 So. 618; 1903, State v. Banks, 111 id. 22, 35 So. 370; 1903, State v. Wheat, ib. 860, 35 So. 955 (the rule is not different under the Constitution of 1898); Mass.: 1836, Com. v. Richards, 18 Pick. 437; Mich.: 1895, People v. Case, 105 Mich. 92, 62 N. W. 1017; Minn.: 1895, State v. George, 60 Minn. 503, 63 N. W. 100; Miss.: 1837, Woodside v. State, 2 How. 665; 1836, Owens v. State, 63 Miss. 450, 452 (former testimony; probably overruling Dominiges v. State, 7 Sm. & M. 475); 1899, Lipscomb v. State, 76 id. 223, 25 So. 158; 1902, Dikes v. State, 80 id. 353, 31 So. 744, semble; Mo.: 1857, State v. McO'Blenis, 24 Mo. 416 (see quotation supra); 1858, State v. Houser, 26 id. 433; Mont.: 1895, State v. Byers, 16 Mont. 565, 41 Nev. 708; Nev.: 1877, State v. Johnson, 12 Nev. 123; N. Y.: 1876, Howard v. Moot, 64 N. Y. 262, 268 (St. 1821, c. 19, relating to the perpetuation of testimony, without cross-examination, held constitutional); 1902, People v. Elliott, 172 id. 146, 64 N. E. 837; Oh.: 1855, Summons v. State, 5 Oh. St. 341; 1857, Robbins v. State, 8 id. 163; Pa.: 1873, Brown v. Com., 73 Pa. 321, 325; 1892, Com. v. Cleary, 148 id. 26, 38, 23 Atl. 1110; Tenn.: 1838, Anthony v. State, Meigs 265; 1850, Kendrick v. State, 10 Humph. 484 (overruling, in effect, State v. Atkins, 1 Overt. 229); 1885, Baxter v. State, 15 Lea 660; 1871, Greenwood v. State, 35 Tex. 537, 591; Tex.: 1876, Johnson v. State, 1 Tex. App. 333, 338, 344 ("the constitutional objection . . . is now no longer an open question"); 1876, Black v. State, ib. 363, 383; 1879, Sullivan v. State, 6 id. 319, 339; 1880, Dunlap v. State, 9 id. 179, 188; 1837, Steagald v. State, 22 id. 464, 490; 1888, Gilbreath v. State, 26 id. 315, 318; U. S.: 1851, U. S. v. Maccomb, 5 McLean 286; 1895, Mattox

v. U. S., 156 U. S. 237, 240, 15 Sup. 337; 1897, Brown, J., Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 id. 275, 17 Sup. 326; Utah: 1876, U. S. v. Reynolds, 1 Utah 322; Wash.: 1897, State v. Cushing, 17 Wash. 544, 50 Pac. 412; W. Va.: 1894, Carrieco v. R. Co., 39 W. Va. 86, 89, 19 S. E. 571 (left undecided); Wis.: 1892, Jackson v. State, 81 Wis. 127, 130, 51 N. W. 89.

In California there is a limitation of some sort, supposed to rest upon P. C. § 686 (quoted ante, § 1388) and apparently excluding testimony at a former trial, while admitting testimony given before a committing magistrate, because the statute in terms authorizes the latter only: 1881 People v. Chung Ah Chue, 57 Cal. 567; 1881, People v. Qurise, 59 id. 343; 1893, People v. Gardner, 98 id. 127, 131, 32 Pac. 380; 1893, People v. Gordon, 99 id. 227, 233, 33 Pac. 901; 1898, People v. Brennan, 121 id. 495, 53 Pac. 1098 (charges of rape, extortion, etc.; testimony at the preliminary examination excluded; reason obscure); 1901, People v. Bird, 132 id. 261, 64 Pac. 259 (testimony at a former trial is inadmissible for the prosecution, by reason of the omission to enumerate such a case in P. C. § 686; but the accused may use such testimony).

In U. S. v. Zuecker, 163 U. S. 710, 16 Sup. 641, the Court merely decided that a suit by the Government for duties payable (the plaintiff not having chosen to prosecute criminally for the evasion of the tax) was not a "criminal prosecution" under U. S. Const. Am. 6, and hence the question whether a deposition was properly taken in France was not affected by that clause.

⁶ 1853, People v. Glenn, 10 Cal. 36; 1852, Campbell v. State, 11 Ga. 374 (see quotation supra); 1893, Govt. v. Herring, 9 Haw. 181, 189; 1858, State v. Nash, 7 Ia. 377; 1855, Walston v. Com., 16 B. Monr. 34; 1853, State v. Brunetto, 13 La. An. 45; 1853, Com. v. Carey, 12 Cush. 246; 1852, Lambeth v. State, 23 Miss. 322, 357 (see quotation ante, § 1397); 1893, People v. Corey, 157 N. Y. 1024, 51 N. E. 1024; 1850, State v. Tighman, 11 Ired. 554; 1890, State v. Kindle, 47 Oh. St. 361, 24 N. E. 485; 1902, State v. Wing, 66 id. 407, 64 N. E. 514 (for the exceptions in general); 1886, State v. Saunders, 14 Or. 300, 12 Pac. 441; 1889, State v. Murphy, 16 R. I. 533; 1900, State v. Jeswell, 22 id. 136, 46 Atl. 405; 1857, Burrell v. State, 18 Tex. 731; 1876, Black v. State, 1 Tex. App. 368, 384; 1895, Mattox v. U. S., 156 U. S. 237, 243, 15 Sup. 337; 1897, Brown, J., in Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 id. 275, 17 Sup. 326; 1896, State v. Baldwin, 15 Wash. 15, 45 Pac. 650; 1870, Miller v. State, 25 Wis. 386; 1877, State v. Dickinson, 41 id. 299, 308; 1892, Jackson v. State, 81 id. 130, 137, 51 N. W. 89.

statements,⁷ and for reputation.⁸ The anomalous recent contrary rulings noticed under the former head and in the preceding paragraph above are interesting instances of that finical wisdom which looks back over a century of unquestioned professional practice and imagines sophomorical quiddities which the fathers of the profession, living at the Constitution's birth, never dreamed of.

(3) The constitutional provision, so far as it may apply in a given case for lack of cross-examination, may of course be waived by the accused.⁹

§ 1399. Confrontation, as requiring the Tribunal's or the Defendant's Sight of the Witness. So far, then, as the essential purpose of confrontation is concerned, it is satisfied if the opponent has had the benefit of full cross-examination. So far, furthermore, as a secondary and dispensable element is concerned, the thing required is the presence of the witness before the tribunal so that his demeanor while testifying may furnish such evidence of his credibility as can be gathered therefrom. In asking whether these two requirements are fulfilled, the inquiry, for the first element, is determined by the rules already examined (ante, §§ 1373-1393). For the second element, there is little room for dispute in the application of the principle; it is satisfied if the witness, throughout the material part of his testimony, is before the tribunal where his demeanor can be adequately observed. It is possible to quibble over the precise fulfilment of this requisite in a given instance;¹ but it will ordinarily

⁷ 1887, Tucker v. People, 122 Ill. 583, 593, 13 N. E. 809 (certificate of marriage; the constitutional provision "has no reference to record evidence which may during the progress of a criminal trial become necessary to establish some material fact"); 1886, State v. Matlock, 70 Ia. 229, 30 N. W. 495 (county marriage records, not excluded by the Constitution); 1883, State v. Smith, 74 id. 580, 583, 38 N. W. 492 (approving State v. Matlock); 1894, State v. Behrman, 114 N. C. 797, 804, 19 S. E. 220 (the use of official records does not violate the constitutional prohibition; here, a foreign marriage certificate was otherwise objectionable as unauthenticated); 1869, Reeves v. State, 7 Coldw. 96, 101, 108 (official paper on file; McClain, J., diss., but the majority take the untenable stand that "the paper is the witness," and that production of a certified copy, where by law the original need not be produced, is in effect a confrontation). Contra: 1868, State v. Reidel, 26 Ia. 430, 436 (notary's certificate of protest, not receivable in a criminal case to show no funds); 1887, People v. Foster, 64 Mich. 717, 720, 31 N. W. 596 (official signal-service record of weather; entrant required to be produced in a criminal case, upon the present principle); 1903, People v. Goodrode, — id. —, 94 N. W. 14 (clerk's certificate of no record of marriage, excluded, under the Constitution; distinguishing People v. Jones, supra).

The following seem to belong here: Ky. Stats. 1899, § 4643 (official stenographic report not usable in criminal case except by defendant's consent); 1899, Cutler v. Terr., 8 Okl. 101, 56 Pac. 861 (statutory permission for use of official reporter's stenographic notes does not allow them to be used in a criminal case except by calling the reporter).

⁸ 1888, State v. Waldron, 16 R. I. 192, 14 Atl. 847.

⁹ 1870, State v. Polson, 29 Ia. 133, 135; 1884, State v. Fooks, 65 id. 452, 21 N. W. 561; 1898, State v. Olds, 106 id. 110, 76 N. W. 644; 1881, State v. McNeil, 33 La. An. 1332, 1335; 1896, State v. Mitchell, 119 N. C. 784, 25 S. E. 783 (ex parte examination of bastardy-prosecutrix; failure to object is a waiver); State v. Rogers, 119 id. 793, 26 S. E. 142 (same). Compare § 1371, ante.

The testimony of an absent witness, received by consent of the prosecution to avoid a continuance, is therefore not within the prohibition: 1900, Ruiz v. Terr., 10 N. M. 120, 61 Pac. 126 (but here it was put upon the ground that the witness' agreed testimony turned out to be favorable to the defendant).

¹ The following are instances of amusing legal pedantry: 1896, Bennett v. State, 62 Ark. 516, 36 S. W. 947 (holding erroneous the action of the trial Court in proceeding with the examination of witnesses during the accused's absence in the watercloset); 1899, State v. Mannion, 19 Utah 505, 57 Pac. 543 (a witness for the State claiming to be afraid of the defendant, the Court placed him back in the room, out of sight and hearing of the witness; held improper, on the absurd ground that the dictionaries define "confront" as meaning "to bring face to face," and that the constitutional provision was thus violated); Bartch, C. J., dissenting as to the reasoning). Compare the cases cited ante, § 1393.

be easy to determine whether in substance the desired object of the law has been obtained.²

2. Circumstances of Necessity making the Witness' Personal Presence Unavailable.

§ 1401. Preliminary Distinctions; (a) Deposition and Testimony; (b) Civil and Criminal Cases; (c) Taking and Using a Deposition. Before examining the circumstances of that necessity which dispenses with the witness' personal presence for testifying (ante, § 1396), it is desirable to notice certain distinctions which here play a more or less important part.

(a) There is on principle no distinction between a deposition and former testimony as to the conditions upon which either may be used at the trial. So far as the circumstances make it impossible to obtain the witness' personal presence for testifying, by reason of his death, illness, absence from the jurisdiction, and the like, the impossibility exists in precisely the same degree for a deposition and for former testimony, — supposing, of course, that in each case there has been cross-examination. There is on principle not the slightest ground for failing to recognize all the dispensing circumstances as equally sufficient for both kinds of testimony. Nevertheless, there is in most jurisdictions more or less inconsistency on this subject; and it can never be safely assumed that a Court will treat both kinds in the same way. There are usually independent lines of precedents for the two kinds of testimony. This is due, of course, to the peculiar inability of the common-law Courts to authorize depositions (ante, § 1376), in consequence of which the treatment of depositions has been handled apart by itself as a special legislative problem. The statutes, in granting the power to order depositions, have usually specified the conditions of necessity allowing their admission, and this statutory specification has rarely been sufficiently thoughtful of all the possible kinds of necessity; the result is an unfortunate patchwork of statutes and decisions. Presumably the statutory enumeration will not be treated as intended to exclude other causes unenumerated; this ought to be the construction.

As between depositions de bene esse and in perpetuam memoriam, there are also to be found differences uncalled for on principle. The statutes authorizing depositions of the latter sort have seldom enumerated the conditions of use, and the judicial precedents are rare. The precedents and statutes will therefore here be distinguished according as they apply to former testimony and to depositions de bene esse and in perpetuam memoriam.

(b) There is on principle no distinction, as to the conditions of necessity

² 1630, Earl of Stafford's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 1293, 1341 (Stafford: "I beg your lordships that he may look me in the face"; the witness was turned to the Court; "I desire the letter of the law, which says my accuser shall come face to face"; L. H. S. Finch: "My lord, you do see the witness; that is enough for face to face"); 1836, Skaggs v. State, 108 Ind. 57, 8 N. E. 695

(the prosecutrix, in a rape case, was deaf and dumb, and being shocked at a question put to her, ran out into an adjoining room; the interpreter followed her, obtained an answer, and returned with her, in about one minute, and then reported the answer to the Court; held, that no substantial right was prejudiced).

for using depositions and former testimony, between civil and criminal cases. If absence from the jurisdiction (for example) is a necessity in the one class of cases, it is equally a necessity in the other. The needs of public justice are as strenuous as those of private litigation. It is even more necessary that an offender against the community be duly punished than that a debtor discharge his private obligation. Our traditional tenderness for accused persons explains to some extent the prevalence of this distinction in some jurisdictions. But there are also two legal principles that chiefly account for the distinction where it is found: (1) The constitutional provision requiring the confrontation of witnesses with the accused is regarded in a few jurisdictions (ante, § 1398) as preventing any use, by the prosecution in criminal cases, of depositions and former testimony; (2) the statutory authorization for taking depositions has in some jurisdictions culpably failed to give that power on behalf of the prosecution in criminal cases; accordingly, if such a deposition is there offered, it is rejected for the simple reason that there never was authority in any officer to take it; the deposition is legally non-existent.¹

(c) There is a distinction to be observed between the statutory conditions upon which an order to take a deposition may be granted and those upon which it may be used when taken. The statutes empowering Courts to order the taking of depositions usually specified also the cases in which such an order could issue, — the witness' illness, or impending departure, or the like. Now there may be, by the time of the trial, no actual necessity for using a deposition taken merely in anticipation of a possible necessity; hence, the conditions of necessity for using the deposition are in law independent of the conditions of policy on which the order for taking may have issued. The order for taking concerns a preliminary stage of the trial, the machinery of preparing evidence; they are therefore without the present purview. Until the deposition is offered on the trial, the question of admissibility is not raised. The statutes prescribing the mode of taking prescribe also usually the conditions of admissibility; but they sometimes make no provisions of the latter sort, and then resort may have to be had to the provisions of the former sort to ascertain the legislative intention.

§ 1402. General Principle of Necessity or Unavailability. The principle upon which depositions and former testimony should be resorted to is the simple principle of necessity, — i. e. the absence of any other means of utilizing the witness' knowledge. If his testimony given anew in court cannot be had, it will be lost entirely for the purposes of doing justice if it is not received in the form in which it survives and can be had. The only inquiry, then, need be: Is his testimony in court unavailable? We may of course distinguish further between testimony unavailable by any means whatever and testimony unavailable without serious inconvenience. The common-law rulings certainly stopped at unavailability of the former sort; conditions of the latter sort rest wholly on statutory sanction. But the common-law principle clearly went in theory as far as the former line, i. e. there are indications of a principle broad enough to sanction any case in which the present testimony is in fact unavailable by any means whatever. Such a broad principle was never fully and consistently enforced in practice; but it clearly existed in gremio legis:

¹ The cases depending upon this reason are placed post, § 1418.

Ante 1726, Gilbert, C. B., Evidence, 61: "In this case the deposition is the best that can possibly be had, and that answers what the law requires."

1812, Eldon, L. C., in Andrews v. Palmer, 1 Ves. & B. 22: "The depositions, if published, could not be read at law unless it was proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the witness could not be examined at the trial."

1835, Johnson, J., in State v. Hill, 2 Hill S. C. 609: "What a deceased witness, or one who from other causes has become incapacitated to give evidence, has sworn upon a former trial, is admitted on the principle that it is the best of which the case admits."

1898, Green, J., in Wells v. Ins. Co., 187 Pa. 166, 40 Atl. 802: "The cause of the subsequently accruing incompetency is not material. It may arise from absence, from sickness, from interest, from death, or from a newly-created statutory incompetency; but the principle controlling them all is that if, at the time the deposition or testimony was taken, the witness was competent, it may be given in evidence after the incompetency had arisen. Such is the sense of all the modern decisions, and we think the conclusion is reasonable and just."

1842, Professor Simon Greenleaf, Evidence, § 168: "The same principle will lead us farther to conclude that in all cases where the party has without his own fault or concurrence irrecoverably lost the power of producing the witness again, whether from physical or from legal causes, he may offer the secondary evidence of what he testified in the former trial. If the lips of the witness are sealed, it can make no difference in principle whether it be by the finger of death or by the finger of the law."

It remains to examine the precedents dealing with specific instances of unavailability. Some of these rulings have been rendered under the terms of express statutes (post, §§ 1411–1413); but it is not always practicable to distinguish whether a statute affected the ruling. The possible cases may be grouped under three heads, according as the witness (a) is not available even for the purpose of serving legal process to attend, or (b) is available for the purpose of process, but not of actual attendance, or (c) is available for the purpose of process and attendance, but not of actually testifying.

§ 1403. Specific Cases of Unavailability; (1) Death. This has always been the typical and acknowledged case of unavailability, and is equally conceded to suffice for depositions and for former testimony.¹ The jurisdictions in which, by anomaly, it is not deemed sufficient are those (post, § 1418) in which, for constitutional or other reasons, no use at all is permitted, in criminal cases, of either depositions or former testimony.

§ 1404. Same: (2) Absence from Jurisdiction. Where the witness is out of the jurisdiction, it is impossible to compel his attendance, because the process of the trial Court is of no force without the jurisdiction, and the party desiring his testimony is therefore helpless.¹ Three conditions, however, have been by some Courts suggested as essential in order that the present testimony may be regarded as unavailable in the fullest sense :

¹ For early illustrations, see the history of the Hearsay rule, ante, § 1364. For others, see ante, § 1398. For the use of reputation to evidence the witness' death, see post, § 1626.

¹ 1705, Lord Holt, C. J., in Altham v. Anglesea, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 18.

(a) The absence, it is sometimes said, must be by way of residence, not merely of temporary sojourn, because otherwise the trial could be postponed until his return.² This, however, seems too strict a rule; by his absence he is at the time actually unavailable, no matter when he is to return; and, if the witness is not of such importance as to require a postponement until his return, still more if the opponent does not desire or consent to a postponement, there is no reason for distinguishing between temporary and permanent absence.

(b) It is sometimes said that an effort should have been made to persuade the witness' voluntary attendance;³ and no doubt the trial Court's discretion might occasionally make such a requirement; but it is unnecessary to prescribe this as a general rule.

(c) It has also been suggested⁴ that an effort should have been made to obtain the witness' deposition by commission; but this is futile, for a deposition is no better than his former testimony.

This ground of admission, then (absence from the jurisdiction of trial), is generally accepted for testimony at a former trial;⁵ a few Courts, following

² See the Alabama cases, infra.

For the person's declarations as evidence of intent not to return, see post, § 1725.

³ 1877, Rothrock, C. J., in Shisser v. Burlington, 47 Ia. 302.

⁴ Shisser v. Burlington, supra; 1870, Berney v. Mitchell, 34 N. J. L. 341.

⁵ Eng. : 1737, Fry v. Wood, 1 Atk. 445; Can. : 1852, Roe v. Jones, 3 Low. Can. 58; 1859, Sutor v. McLean, 18 U. C. Q. B. 490, 492 (resident out of the jurisdiction, admitted); 1866, Abel v. Light, 6 All. N. Br. 423, 427; Ala. : 1851, Long v. Davis, 18 Ala. 803 ("permanent absence"); 1860, Mims v. Sturtevant 36 id. 64; 1888, Lowe v. State, 86 id. 47, 50, 5 So. 435 (absence for an indefinite time, sufficient, even in criminal case); 1888, South v. State, ib. 617, 620, 6 So. 52 (permanent absence, sufficient); 1888, Perry v. State, 87 id. 30, 33, 6 So. 425 (permanent or indefinite absence, sufficient); 1890, Pruitt v. State, 92 id. 41, 9 So. 406 (absence "for such an indefinite time that his return is merely contingent or conjectural," sufficient); 1891, Lucas v. State, 96 id. 51, 11 So. 216 (preceding definition held not here satisfied on the facts); 1893, Lowery v. State, 98 id. 45, 50, 13 So. 498; 1894, Thompson v. State, 106 id. 67, 75, 17 So. 512 (same); 1894, Burton v. State, 107 id. 68, 73, 18 So. 240 (indefinite absence, sufficient); 1895, Thompson v. State, 106 id. 67, 17 So. 512; ("left the State permanently; or for such an indefinite time that his return is contingent and uncertain"); 1897, McMunn v. State, 113 id. 86, 21 So. 418; 1897, Mitchell v. State, 114 id. 1, 22 So. 71; Burton v. State, 115 id. 1, 22 So. 585; 1898, Dennis v. State, 118 id. 72, 23 So. 1002; 1900, Lett v. State, 124 id. 64, 27 So. 256 (non-residence in jurisdiction sufficient); 1900, Birmingham N. Bank v. Bradley, — id.

—, 30 So. 546 (former testimony of one who had "removed from the State and was at the time without the jurisdiction," admitted); 1902, Jacobi v. State, 133 id. 1, 32 So. 158 (removal from the State "permanently or for an indefinite time," suffices); 1902, Jacobi v. Alabama, 187 U. S. 133, 23 Sup. 48 (by the law of Alabama, the testimony is receivable if the witness is "beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, whether he has removed from the State permanently or for an indefinite time"); 1903, Southern Car & F. Co. v. Jennings, 137 Ala. 247, 34 So. 1002 (witness "staying indefinitely at M. in this State," not sufficient); Ark. : 1874, Hurley v. State, 29 Ark. 23; 1883, Dolan v. State, 40 id. 461; 1894, Vaughan v. State, 58 id. 353, 370, 24 S. W. 885; 1900, Wilkins v. State, 68 id. 441, 60 S. W. 30; Cal. : 1873, People v. Devine, 46 Cal. 48; 1894, Benson v. Shotwell, 103 id. 163, 168, 37 Pac. 147; Ga. : 1869, Adair v. Adair, 39 Ga. 75, 77; 1878, Eagle & P. M. Co. v. Welch, 61 id. 445; 1893, Pittman v. State, 92 id. 480, 17 S. E. 856; 1893, Atlanta & C. A. R. Co. v. Gravitt, 93 id. 369, 371, 20 S. E. 550 (whether a witness is "inaccessible" under Code § 3782 is for the trial judge's determination); 1900, Owen v. Palmour, 111 id. 885, 36 S. E. 969; Ia. : 1877, Shisser v. Burlington, 47 Ia. 302 (provided an effort has been made to secure the witness' voluntary attendance or his deposition); 1890, Bank v. Gifford, 79 id. 311, 44 N. W. 558 (residence in another county, sufficient, by statute); Kan. : 1902, Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Osborn, 64 Kan. 187, 67 Pac. 547; Ky. : 1895, Reynolds v. Powers, 96 Ky. 481, 29 S. W. 299; 1896, Louisville Water Co. v. Upton, — id. —, 36 S. W. 520; La. : 1882, State v. Douglass, 34 La. An. 523, 524; 1882, State v. Jordan, ib. 1219; 1898, State v. Madison, 50 id. 679, 23 an early New York ruling, refuse to recognize it at all;⁶ a few others refuse to recognize it in criminal cases particularly.⁷ For depositions this cause was at common law established as sufficient,⁸ subject in occasional rulings to

So. 622 (residence out of the State, sufficient); 1901, State v. Banks, 106 La. 480, 31 So. 53 (permanent absence is necessary); 1903, State v. Kline, 109 id. 603, 33 So. 618 (absence from the State, with no reasonable probability of a return, held sufficient); 1903, State v. Banks, 111 id. 22, 35 So. 370 (permanently absent from the State; testimony at a preliminary hearing admitted; the prior ruling, supra, was made in construing a special statute, No. 123 of 1898, applying to certain New Orleans criminal courts); Md.: 1829, Rogers v. Raborg, 2 G. & J. 60; Mich.: 1878, Howard v. Patrick, 38 Mich. 799; 1899, Wheeler v. Jennison, 120 id. 422, 79 N. W. 643; Minn.: 1892, Minneapolis M. Co. v. R. Co., 51 Minn. 304, 315, 53 N. W. 639; (not necessary to try first for his deposition); 1893, King v. McCarthy, 54 id. 190, 195, 55 N. W. 960 ("not likely to return within the jurisdiction," sufficient); 1898, Hill v. Winston, 73 id. 80, 75 N. W. 1030 (residence in another State, sufficient); Mont.: 1903, Reynolds v. Fitzpatrick, — Mont. —, 72 Pac. 510 (absence not sufficiently shown, on the facts); Nebr.: 1893, Omaha v. Jensen, 35 Nebr. 68, 52 N. W. 833; 1894, Omaha S. R. Co. v. Elkins, 39 id. 480, 53 N. W. 164 (mere absence sufficient); 1896, Lowe v. Vaughn, 48 id. 651, 67 N. W. 464; 1897, Ord. v. Nash, 50 id. 335, 69 N. W. 964; 1899, Wittenberg v. Molyneaux, 59 id. 203; 80 N. W. 824, semble; Or.: 1900, Wheeler v. McFerron, 38 Or. 105, 62 Pac. 1015; P.v.: 1813, Magill v. Kniffin, 4 S. & R. 317; 1824, Forney v. Hallagher, 11 id. 203; 1898, Giberson v. Mills Co., 187 Pa. 513, 41 Atl. 525 (sufficient; nor need efforts be made to secure his attendance); Tex.: 1879, Sullivan v. State, 6 Tex. App. 319, 333; 1897, Steagald v. State, 22 id. 464, 488, 3 S. W. 771; 1887, Conner v. State, 23 id. 378, 384, 5 S. W. 189; 1833, Gilbreath v. State, 26 id. 315, 318, 9 S. W. 613; U. S.: 1897, Chicago St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Myers, 25 C. C. A. 486, 80 Fed. 361 (if his personal attendance cannot be secured); Vt.: 1902, McGovern v. Smith, — Vt. —, 53 Atl. 326 (nor is it necessary to try to procure his attendance or to search for him).

⁶ 1826, Wilbur v. Selden, 6 Cow. 164; 1834, Crary v. Sprague, 12 Wend. 45; 1874, Berney v. Mitchell, 34 N. J. L. 341; 1876, Collins v. Com., 12 Bush 273. In Cassady v. Trustees, 105 Ill. 567 (1883), the testimony was excluded on the facts of the case.

⁷ 1836, Owens v. State, 63 Miss. 450, 452; 1853, State v. Houser, 26 Mo. 439; 1843, People v. Newman, 5 Hill N. Y. 296; 1827, Finn v. Com., 5 Rand. 708; 1853, Com. v. Brogy, 10 Gratt. 722, 732 (not sufficient in a criminal case, even for defendant); 1881, U. S. v. Angell, 11 Fed. 43. In Alabama, the rulings in Dupree v. State, 33 Ala. 388, and Harris v. State, 73 id. 497, are superseded by the later ones in note 5, supra.

⁸ Eng.: 1688, Thatcher v. Waller, T. Jones 53 (deposition before coroner of one beyond sea, admitted; it was "all one as if he were dead"; for earlier English rulings, see ante, § 1364); 1705, Altham v. Anglesea, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 18; 11 Mod. 212; 1729, Patterson v. St. Clair, 1 Barnard. K. B. 263; 1744, Ward v. Sykes, Ridgw. t. Hardw. 193; 1772, Birt v. White, Dick. 473; 1806, Fonsick v. Agar, 6 Esp. 92 (deposition of one already on board ship, admitted); 1808, Falconer v. Hanson, 1 Camp. 172; 1841, Robinson v. Markis, 2 Moo. & Rob. 376 (mere inability to find does not suffice to establish absence); 1849, Varicas v. French, 2 C. & K. 1008 (absence in Australia, held sufficiently proved); 1856, R. v. Austen, 7 Cox Cr. 55 (mere absence in the witness' own country, without a showing of inability to secure his presence by request, not sufficient); 1873, Ex parte Huguet, 12 id. 551 (a French witness refusing to stay, and returning to France; admissible, per Martin, B. and, semble, Pollock, B.; semble, contra, Kelly, C. B.); Can.: 1900, R. v. Forsythe, 4 N. W. Terr. 398 (the evidence of absence must be such as reasonably to satisfy the trial judge); Ala.: 1839, McCutchen v. McCutchen, 9 Port. 650, 654 (that the witness had "started to move to the State of Arkansas with his family," though he expected to stop on the way in another county with relatives, sufficient); 1851, Long v. Davis, 18 Ala. 801, 803 (permanent absence, sufficient; no effort to obtain him necessary); Conn.: 1854, Larkin v. Avery, 23 Conn. 304, 318 (absence on a journey other than the one contemplated at the taking of the deposition, sufficient; semble, fact of absence is determinable by trial Court); Ida.: 1890, Terr. v. Evans, 2 Ida. 627, 632, 23 Pac. 232 (overruled by State v. Potter, — id. —, 57 Pac. 431, cited post, § 1418); Ind. T.: 1899, Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 2 Ind. T. 407, 51 S. W. 1038 (deposition by railroad employee, residing out of the jurisdiction, but frequently coming within it during their employment, admitted); Ill.: 1897, Gardner v. Meeker, 169 Ill. 40, 48 N. E. 307 ("non-resident" includes one residing in another county but within the State, and his deposition on oral interrogatories may be received); Mass.: 1850, Kinney v. Berran, 6 Cush. 394 (mere inability to find is not sufficient to prove absence); N. C.: 1897, Cunningham v. Cunningham, 121 N. C. 413, 28 S. E. 525 (evidence of absence held sufficient, the trial Court having discretion); P.v.: 1819, Carpenter v. Groff, 5 S. & R. 165; Vt.: 1839, Johnson v. Sargent, 42 Vt. 195; W. Va.: 1897, Hoopes v. DeVaughn, 43 W. Va. 447, 27 S. E. 251 (non-residence may appear from the deposition itself as well as from the statutory affidavit at the time of application). Contra: 1897, State v. Tomblin, 57 Kan. 841, 48 Pac. 144 (and in spite of the fact that the defendant himself had caused the

the distinctions above noted; and by statute it has been almost universally provided for.⁹

§ 1405. Same: (3) Disappearance; Inability to Find; (4) Opponent's Procurement. (3) If the witness has disappeared from observation, he is in effect unavailable for the purpose of compelling his attendance. Such a disappearance is shown by the party's inability to find him after diligent search. The only objection to recognizing this ground of unavailability is the possibility of collusion between party and witness; but supposing the Court to be satisfied that there has been no collusion and that the search has been bona fide, this objection loses all its force. For *former testimony*¹ taking; this is indeed using the law to shield crime); 1893, State v. Humason, 5 Wash. 499, 504, 32 Pac. 111 (not sufficient in criminal cases for either party).

The rule has been held to be the same for the deposition of the party himself, though this seems erroneous: 1896, Standard L. & A. Ins. Co. v. Tinney, 73 Miss. 726, 19 So. 662 (party out of State; admissible). Compare § 1416, post.

⁹ The statutes are collected in § 1411, post. The statute's omission should not injure the established common-law principle. But if the statute has not even given the power to order a deposition taken out of the State it would seem to be inadmissible because legally non-existent; 1886, Kaelin v. Com., 84 Ky. 354, 367, 1 S. W. 594 (statutory limits held exclusive; therefore the accused cannot take the deposition of a person abroad).

¹ Eng.: 1623, Anon., Godbolt 326: ("If a party cannot find a witness, then he is as if were dead unto him," and his former testimony may be read, "so as the party make oath that he did his endeavor to find his witness, but that he could not see him nor hear of him"); 1685, Oates' Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 1227, 1285 (Oates: "My lord, I will then produce what he swore at another trial;" L. C. J. Jeffreys: "Why, where is he? Is he dead?"; Oates: "My lord, it has cost a great deal of money to search him out; but I cannot anywhere meet with him, and that makes my case so much worse that I cannot, when I have done all that man can do to get my witnesses together. I sent in the depth of winter for him, when I thought my trial would have come on before; but I could never hear of him;" L. C. J.: "Look you, though in strictness, unless the party be dead, we do not use to admit of any such evidence, yet if you can prove anything he swore at any other trial, we will indulge you so far"); 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 60; Ala.: 1895, Thompson v. State, 106 Ala. 67, 17 So. 512; 1897, Mitchell v. State, 114 id. 1, 22 So. 71 ("after diligent search is not found within the jurisdiction of the Court," sufficient; mere inability to find at the usual residence or in the county, not sufficient); 1902, Jacobi v. State, 133 id. 1, 32 So. 158 (a "fruitless search for him in every county in which there is any apparent likelihood of his being found," may suffice, as amounting to proof of removal from the jurisdiction; requirements of such a search considered); Ark.: 1873, Shackelford v. State, 33 Ark. 539; 1886, Sneed v. State, 47 id. 186, 1 S. W. 68; 1894, Vaughan v. State, 58 id. 353, 370, 24 S. W. 885 ("upon diligent inquiry cannot be found"; the trial Court's discretion to control); 1895, McNamara v. State, 60 id. 400, 30 S. W. 762; 1896, Harwood v. State, 63 id. 130, 37 S. W. 304; Conn.: 1902, Mechanics' Bank v. Woodward, 74 Conn. 698, 51 Atl. 1084 (former testimony of a witness "who has since gone to parts unknown," admitted, under Pub. Acts 1895, p. 503, c. 116); Ga.: 1880, Gunn v. Wades, 65 Ga. 537, 541 (after which, Williams v. State, 19 id. 403, is probably of no consequence); 1890, Atlanta & S. R. Co. v. Randall, 85 id. 302, 314, 11 S. E. 706; Ia.: 1896, Spaulding v. R. Co., 98 Ia. 205, 67 N. W. 227 (information given to an officer serving a subpoena, as indicating the sufficiency of search on which to base a return of not found); La.: 1876, State v. Harvey, 28 La. An. 105; 1884, State v. Coudier, 36 id. 291; 1894, State v. White, 46 id. 1273, 1276, 15 So. 623; 1898, State v. Timberlake, 50 id. 308, 23 So. 276; Minn.: 1898, Hill v. Winston, 73 Minn. 80, 75 N. W. 1030 (person's declarations as to residence, and sheriff's return of not found, received); Pa.: 1895, Seitz v. Seitz, 169 Pa. 510, 32 Atl. 594, semble; Tex.: 1879, Sullivan v. State, 6 Tex. App. 319, 342; U. S.: 1899, Motes v. U. S., 178 U. S. 458, 20 Sup. 993 (testimony of one who had escaped through the negligence of the prosecuting officers, excluded); Utah.: 1902, State v. King, 24 Utah 482, 68 Pac. 418 (under Rev. St. 1898, § 4513). Contra: 1837, R. v. Hagan, 8 C. & P. 169; 1834, Crary v. Sprugue, 12 Wend. 45 (Nelson, J.: "Even diligent inquiry, without being able to find the witness, is not sufficient, though it is obvious there can be scarcely a shade of difference between the two cases, death and absence, either in principle or hardship"); 1902, State v. Wing, 66 Oh. 407, 64 N. E. 514 (prior testimony of a witness not found after diligent search, and believed to be without the State, held not admissible in a criminal case, unless the absence was due to the accused's connivance).

For the admissibility of statements made to the searchers, as evidence of inability to find, see post, § 1789; and compare the rulings for lost documents, ante, § 1196.

this cause of unavailability has long been recognized. It ought equally to suffice for depositions.²

(4) If the witness has been by the opponent procured to absent himself, this ought of itself to justify the use of his deposition or former testimony,³ — whether the offering party has or has not searched for him, whether he is within or without the jurisdiction, whether his place of abode is secret or open; for any tampering with a witness should once for all estop the tamperer from making any objection based on the results of his own chicanery.

§ 1406. Same: (5) Illness, Infirmary, Age, preventing Attendance. Any physical incapacity preventing attendance in court, except at the risk of serious pain or danger to the witness, should be a sufficient cause of unavailability; and this has been almost universally recognized by Courts.¹ Certain distinctions, however, have from time to time received special notice. (a) The duration of the illness need only be in probability such that, with regard to the importance of the testimony, the trial cannot be postponed.² (b) As to the degree of the illness, the traditional phrase, “so ill as not to be able to travel,” sufficiently indicates the requirements of common sense; and the “ability” is to be considered with reference to the risk of pain or danger to the witness. That the illness should be such as to make it impracticable to take the witness’ deposition at his home has been said by one Court to be the correct limitation;³ but this is certainly incorrect, for a deposition obtained from a person during illness could not be any better than his former cross-examined testimony or deposition, and would probably be much less trustworthy.⁴ There is no reason why the application of the general principle in a given instance should ever come before a Court of Appeal; to the trial Court should be left the determination of the existence of the necessity in a particular case.

There is further no distinction properly to be made between former testi-

² 1895, Burton v. State, 107 Ala. 63, 18 So. 240; 1903, People v. Witty, 138 Cal. 576, 72 Pac. 177; 1823, Tompkins v. Wiley, 6 Rand. 242 (due diligence not shown on the facts); 1818, Pettibone v. Derringer, 4 Wash. C. C. 219. Contra: 1666, Lord Morly’s Case, Kelyng 55 (“Agreed, that if a witness who was examined by the coroner be absent, and oath is made that they have used all their endeavors to find him and cannot find him, that is not sufficient to authorize the reading of such examination”; compare this case ante, § 1364, note 47); 1851, R. v. Scaife, 5 Cox Cr. 243, 17 Q. B. 243.

³ 1692, Harrison’s Trial, 12 How. St. Tr. 851; 1851, R. v. Scaife, 5 Cox Cr. 243 (procurement by a co-defendant, held not sufficient as to a defendant not procuring); 1893, Peddy v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 547, 21 S. W. 542 (removal by contrivance of a private prosecutor does not affect the use by the State); 1876, U. S. v. Reynolds, 1 Utah 322, 98 U. S. 158. Contra: 1856, Bergen v. People, 17 Ill. 427.

¹ Contra, for former testimony: 1827, Doe v. Evans, 3 C. & P. 221, Vaughan, B.; 1893, Com. v. McKenna, 158 Mass. 207, 210, 33 N. E. 389 (for criminal cases).

² 1891, Mitchell, J., in Thornton v. Britton, 144 Pa. 130, 22 Atl. 1048: “The determination of this question in each case as it arises rests largely in the discretion of the Court. On a trial for murder, for instance, the judge presiding would feel it his duty to enforce the attendance of a witness having knowledge of the crucial facts, even at some risk to the witness’ health or life; while in a civil action he might feel free to hold that a much smaller risk to the witness would be sufficient to excuse him from personal attendance.”

³ 1870, Berney v. Mitchell, 34 N. J. L. 341.

⁴ 1828, Mathews, J., in Miller v. Russel, 7 Mart. n. s. La. 268.

mony⁵ thus rendered necessary, and depositions; ⁶ although the statutes (post, § 1411) have dealt with the latter in almost every jurisdiction.

§ 1407. Same: Attendance prevented by (6) Imprisonment, (7) Official Duty or Privilege; (8) Distance of Travel. (6) The witness' imprisonment for crime, supposing him not to be disqualified for infamy, is no reason for excusing his non-production; for his production can presumably be obtained

⁵ The rulings recognizing this ground for using former testimony are as follows: Eng.: 1737, Fry v. Wood, 1 Atk. 445; 1831, R. v. Savage, 5 C. & P. 143; the ensuing rulings are under St. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, allowing testimony before a committing magistrate to be used when the witness is "so ill as not to be able to travel"; most of them are obstinately narrow; 1850, R. v. Harris, 4 Cox Cr. 440 (bowel-complaint, not sufficient on the facts); 1850, R. v. Harney, ib. 441 (woman's confinement a week before, sufficient); 1850, R. v. Ulmer, ib. 441 (cold; not sufficient); 1862, R. v. Stephenson, 9 id. 156 (woman daily expecting confinement; sufficient in trial Court's discretion); 1862, R. v. Welton, ib. 296 (illness must be proved by medical man); 1871, R. v. Bull, 12 id. 31 (bowel complaint two days before, not sufficient); 1874, R. v. Farrell, 12 id. 606; L. R. 2 Cr. C. R. 116 (the witness was "very nervous and 74 years of age"; "it might be dangerous for her to be examined at all," and particularly in open court; but the deposition was held not admissible); 1876, R. v. Thompson, 13 id. 182 (the witness was 87 years of age and "in such a great state of nervous excitement that it would be attended with great risk to her life to bring her into court to give evidence"; "it might bring on an attack of apoplexy; there is no actual disease or illness, only a predisposition to it"; but the deposition was excluded); 1878, R. v. Heesom, 14 id. 42 (deposition of a woman in daily expectation of confinement was admitted); 1878, R. v. Wellings, L. R. 3 Q. B. D. 428 (same; here it was pointed out that the degree of illness should be left to the discretion of the trial judge); 1887, R. v. Prunty, 16 Cox Cr. 344 (unsworn statement of child, under St. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, post, § 1828, not receivable as a deposition in her absence through illness, under St. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42); La.: 1828, Miller v. Russel, 7 Mart. N. S. La. 268 (see citation supra); 1832, State v. Granville, 34 La. An. 1088 ("lying sick in hospital," sufficient on the facts); 1903, State v. Wheat, 111 La. 860, 35 So. 955 (testimony before the committing magistrate, of one since become too ill to be able to attend, admitted; the trial Court's determination of the facts is generally to control; on a rehearing, the testimony was held inadmissible because the witness could attend at the next term and because the prosecution had misled the defence by applying for a continuance); Md.: 1829, Rogers v. Raborg, 2 G. & J. 60; Mich.: 1878, Howard v. Patrick, 38 Mich. 795, 799; 1900, Siefert v. Siefert, 123 id. 664, 82 N. W. 511 (temporary illness, not sufficient); N. J.: 1870, Berney v. Mitchell, 34 N. J. L. 341 (see citation supra); Pa.: 1827, Pipher v. Lodge, 16 S. & E. 214, 221 (inability to travel, not sufficiently shown on the facts); 1874, Emig v. Diehl, 76 Pa. 373; 1881, McLain v. Com., 99 id. 97 (for civil cases; for criminal cases, question reserved); 1891, Thornton v. Britton, 144 id. 130, 22 Atl. 1048 (supra, note 2); 1893, Perrin v. Wells, 155 id. 299, 300, 26 Atl. 543 (too ill to be present, sufficient).

⁶ Eng.: 1666, Lord Morly's Case, Kelyng 55 (before coroner); 1682, Lutterell v. Reynell, 1 Mod. 282; 1709, Altham v. Anglesea, 11 id. 212, per Gould, J.; 1719, 2 Lilly's Pract. Reg. 703 ("A witness who by reason of sickness, extreme age, or other cause, cannot come to a trial, may by order of Court be examined in the country, before any judge of the Court where the cause depends, in the presence of the attorneys of each side; and the testimony so taken shall be allowed to be given in evidence at the trial"); 1752, Bradley v. Crackenthorp, Dick. 182 ("the witness being aged and infirm and unable to travel," it sufficed); 1785, Jones v. Jones, 1 Cox 184 (deposition of one "above 80 years of age and unable to attend in person" admissible); 1868, Palmer v. Aylesbury, 15 Ves. Jr. 176 ("in such a state of health as not to be capable of attending"); 1813, Corbett v. Corbett, 1 Ves. & B. 335, 342 (order in chancery made for depositions to be read at law if the deponent proved "unable to attend" the trial by reason of illness; Lord Eldon lays down the conditions on which such an order will be made beforehand in chancery); 1817, Morrison v. Arnold, 19 id. 672 ("sick, incapable of travelling, or prevented by accident," is sufficient; said of depositions in perp. mem.); Conn.: 1775, Avery v. Woodruff, 1 Root 76 ("The deposition of a woman who lived within 20 miles of the court, that had a child of a month old, dangerously sick so that the mother could not leave it" was admitted, as "within the reason of the statute"); Ga.: 1874, Baker v. Lyman, 53 Ga. 339, 341, 350 (excluding a deposition where the witness was not too ill to be able to testify); N. H.: 1859, Hayward v. Barron, 38 N. H. 366; N. C.: 1903, Willeford v. Bailey, 132 N. C. 402, 43 S. E. 928 (witness "unable to talk and physically unable to remain in court"; deposition received); Okl.: 1897, Hanley v. Banks, 6 Okl. 79, 51 Pac. 662 ("infirmity" does not include the case of a wife kept at the bedside of her sick husband by the necessity of attending him); Vt.: 1869, Johnson v. Sargent, 42 Vt. 195 (old age); Va.: 1898, Taylor v. Malory, 96 Va. 18, 30 S. E. 472.

by order of Court.¹ So far, of course, as this is not the case, there is good reason for using his former testimony or deposition;² a new deposition, obtained in prison, could be no better than either of this.³ In some jurisdictions a statute specifically regulates the matter.

(7) An official duty may be sufficient cause for not producing the witness engaged in that duty; the sufficiency should be left to the trial Court.⁴ Where the witness, exercising a privilege as an official (post, §§ 2206, 2370–2372) refuses to attend and his attendance is not compellable, the case falls under the present principle of impossibility of compelling attendance, and an excuse for non-production clearly exists.⁵

(8) On grounds of the personal inconvenience of attendance from a distance, statutes (post, §§ 1411, 1412) have almost everywhere provided, for the case of depositions, that residence beyond a certain number of miles, or without the county, shall allow the use of a deposition; the same cause should be equally sufficient for using former testimony, though this has rarely been provided.⁶ In a few statutes (post, § 1411) this notion of personal inconvenience has been given such consideration that in cities of a certain size depositions are in general admissible on the ground that “to require the personal attendance of witnesses would involve them in great pecuniary loss and involve a sacrifice of their personal interests without any corresponding personal advantage.”⁷ This policy is a poor one. In the first place, there is no reason for exalting the sacrifices of a wholesale merchant or a banker above those of a farmer; one deserves no more consideration than the other; moreover, the sacrifice in rural districts may be even greater, for it may require a whole day for a farmer to travel to and from the court, while a city merchant may easily be kept informed by his clerk by telephone of the course of a trial and need usually not give up more than an hour or two for the purpose. In the second place, the notion that any citizen’s private interests

¹ 1896, State v. Conway, 56 Kan. 682, 44 Pac. 627 (former testimony admissible, semble, where by a life-sentence of imprisonment civil death has ensued, but not here where a year’s sentence produced no such result and a deposition could have been taken in prison or the prisoner brought into court; opinion obscure).

² 1851, Switzer v. Boulton, 2 Grant U. C. 693 (witness in the penitentiary and refusing to be re-examined, knowing that he could not be punished for contumacy more severely than by imprisonment; former testimony received).

³ 1900, People v. Putnam, 129 Cal. 258, 61 Pac. 961 (conditions determined for granting order to produce convicts under statute).

⁴ 1796, Mushrow v. Graham, 1 Hayw. 361 (deposition of a Collector of Imposts received, as one of those “the duties of whose offices oblige them to attend at a particular place for the discharge thereof”); 1828, Noble v. Martins, 7 Mart. N. S. 282 (deputy sheriff officially engaged elsewhere; admitted).

⁵ Distinguish the following: 1856, Dubois’ Case, Wharton, Digest of International Law, I,

663, Lawrence’s Wheaton’s International Law, 393 (upon the Netherlands minister’s consenting to give his deposition out of court, but not subject to cross-examination, the district-attorney at Washington declined to take it, as “it would not be admitted as evidence”). For the case of the King, see ante, § 1384.

⁶ Most of the following cases have reference to one of the statutes given post, § 1411: Former testimony: 1883, Broach v. Kelly, 71 Ga. 698, 704 (in adjacent county, insufficient); 1896, Spaulding v. R. Co., 98 Ia. 205, 67 N. W. 227 (absence from the county, sufficient); 1855, State v. Allen, 37 La. An. 685 (not in the parish, semble, sufficient); Deposition: 1848, McLane v. State, 4 Ga. 335 (deposition by commission taken for defendant of persons within the State, excluded, because the authorizing statute covered civil cases only); 1869, Riegel v. Wilson, 60 Pa. 388, 392, semble (residence more than 40 miles distant, sufficient).

⁷ 1896, Atkinson, J., in Western & A. R. Co. v. Bussen, 95 Ga. 584, 23 S. E. 207, quoted post, § 1417.

should override his duty to the community is a false one. The principle that the whole community, and every member of it, should join in rendering all possible aid to the establishment of truth and justice is a fundamental one in civilized society (post, § 2192). An occasional reminder of these duties is a wholesome thing; and the attendance for that purpose upon a session of a court of justice tends vividly to strengthen the appreciation of this vital principle. That the citizen should by law be encouraged and abetted in shirking his fundamental duty to aid in the vindication of the rights of his fellow-citizens is reprehensible. Such statutes should nowhere be imitated.

§ 1408. Same: (9) Insanity, or other Mental Incompetency. A witness who has become insane is no longer qualified; his testimony in court is no longer available; and by universal concession his former testimony¹ or deposition² may therefore be used. So also the loss of any one of the faculties necessary for testimony (ante, § 478) furnishes an equal reason, whether the loss occurs through disease or through senility. This may be the case where the lost faculty is that of speech,³ or (under certain circumstances) of sight,⁴ or of memory;⁵ and it would seem that a total loss of memory through lapse of time alone should equally suffice, providing the Court is entirely satisfied of the fact of the loss.⁶

§ 1409. Same: (10) Disqualification by Interest in the Cause. A disqualification by subsequently-acquired interest makes the witness' present testimony unavailable, and hence should suffice to allow resort to his deposition or former testimony. This doctrine was not accepted in early English common-law practice,¹ followed by our Courts in a few in-

¹ 1880, Marler v. State, 67 Ala. 62 (Somerville, J.: "There is no real or practical difference between the death of the mind and the death of the body"); 1895, Thompson v. State, 106 id. 67, 17 So. 512; 1868, Cook v. Stout, 47 Ill. 531; 1892, Walkup v. Com., — Ky. —, 20 S. W. 221; 1878, Howard v. Patrick, 38 Mich. 799; 1883, Whitaker v. Marsh, 62 N. H. 478 (in effect overruling a contrary statement in State v. Staples, 47 id. 119).

² 1790, R. v. Eriswell, 3 T. R. 707; 1841, R. v. Marshall, Car. & M. 147 (even where temporary only).

³ 1857, R. v. Cockburn, 7 Cox Cr. 265 (stroke of paralysis rendering the witness unable to hear or to speak; sufficient).

⁴ 1705, Kinsman v. Crooke, 2 Ld. Raym. 1166 (the witness had become blind; his deposition in chancery was used for those parts of his testimony which depended on his consultation of documents); 1883, Houston v. Blythe, 60 Tex. 509, 512 (sufficient, where the witness had lost his eyesight and the testimony necessarily involved the examination of documents).

⁵ 1861, R. v. Wilson, 8 Cox Cr. 453 (illness of the brain affecting memory, sufficient); 1895, Central R. & B. Co. v. Murray, 97 Ga. 326, 22 S. E. 972 (loss of memory by old age); 1874, Emig v. Diehl, 76 Pa. 373 ("such a state of senility as to have lost his memory of the past"); 1879, Rothrock v. Gallagher, 91 id. 112 ("bereft of memory by senility or sickness"); 1819, Drayton v. Wells, 1 Nott & McC. 247; 1879, Railroad v. Atkins, 70 Tenn. 250.

⁶ The difficulty is that the witness must be called in order that this fact may appear, so that in practical application there would be no dispensation of his presence; moreover, he might in some cases be able to use the deposition or report of testimony as a record of past recollection (ante, §§ 737, 761). Sanctioning the above cause: 1901, State v. N. O. Waterworks Co., 107 La. 1, 31 So. 395 (former testimony of a witness who, "by reason of the lapse of time, 15 years, and his age, was no longer able to remember the facts testified to," held admissible; following Jack v. Woods, Pa., infra); 1857, Jack v. Woods, 29 Pa. 378, semble. Repudiating it: 1868, Cook v. Stout, 47 Ill. 531, semble; 1861, Robinson v. Gilman, 43 N. H. 297; 1883, Velott v. Lewis, 102 Pa. 326, 333; 1819, Drayton v. Wells, 1 Nott & McC. 248.

¹ 1702, Holcroft v. Smith, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 224 (Common Pleas); 1718, Baker v. Fairfax, 1 Str. 101. So also for depositions in perpetuum memoriam: 1703, Tilley's Case, 1 Salk. 286 (the witness had by inheritance become interested; "Trevor, C. J., held that they ought stances.² But it was well established in English chancery practice,³ and would probably be generally followed in our Courts.⁴ The analogies of the case of an attesting witness (ante, § 1316) are in harmony with this result.

§ 1410. Same: (11) Disqualification by Infamy. The same principle recognizes disqualification by infamy as cause for using a deposition or former testimony;¹ but this has been denied by a few Courts,² apparently upon the notion that competency at the time of trial is essential. If this were true, then death itself, as well as insanity and interest, would be insufficient to allow the use of a deposition. There is no support for such a notion; the time of the witness' testifying is here the time of the deposition or former testimony; his qualifications then to speak the truth are alone concerned.³

§ 1411. Same: Statutes affecting Depositions de bene esse. The conditions of necessity in which a witness' present testimony in court cannot be had are now in almost every jurisdiction dealt with, in part at least, by statutes.¹ The causes enumerated in such statutes are seldom more than three

[to be read]; for that he was disabled to give evidence by the act of God, so that it was in effect the same thing as if he were dead. Tracy and Blencow contra"; and the K. B. agreed with the majority).

² 1892, Messimer v. McCray, 113 Mo. 332, 389, 21 S. W. 17 (deponent incompetent since taking of deposition, excluded); 1848, Eagin v. Cooley, 17 Oh. 44, 50; 1808, Irwin v. Reed, 4 Yeates 512; 1828, Chess v. Chess, 17 S. & R. 412 (these Pennsylvania cases are no longer law; see the cases in note 4, infra); 1896, Moore v. Palmer, 14 Wash. 134, 44 Pac. 142 (party made incompetent by opponent's death).

The following ruling seems erroneous: 1859, Hayward v. Barron, 38 N. H. 371 (liability to self-incrimination, not sufficient).

³ 1702, Holcroft v. Smith, 2 Freem. 260, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 224; 1715, Gosse v. Tracy, 2 Vern. 699, 1 P. Wms. 287; 1743, Haws v. Hand, 2 Atk. 615 (interest sufficient, though the interest arose by the witness' own act in becoming administrator and therefore plaintiff; Hardwicke, L. C.); 1750, Glynn v. Bank, 2 Ves. Sr. 42; 1774, Brown v. Greenly, Dick. 504.

⁴ 1898, Bowie v. Hume, 13 D. C. App. 286, 318 (testimony of one disqualified by survivorship, admitted); 1804, Gold v. Eddy, 1 Mass. 1; 1843, Sabine v. Strong, 6 Metc. 277; 1875, Evans v. Reed, 78 Pa. 415, 84 id. 254 (party becoming incompetent as survivor; former testimony admissible); 1876, Pratt v. Patterson, 81 id. 114 (same; former testimony); 1880, Walbridge v. Knipper, 96 id. 50 (same); 1879, Hay's Appeal, 91 id. 265, 268 (deposition; same); 1882, Galbraith v. Zimmerman, 100 id. 374 (same; former testimony); 1898, Wells v. Ins. Co., 187 id. 166, 40 Atl. 802 (physician becoming subject to privilege by passage of state; deposition admitted).

¹ 1847, State v. Valentine, 7 Ired. 225, 227.

² 1887, St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Harper, 50 Ark. 157, 159, 6 S. W. 720 (subsequent infamy does not admit; but here the Court added a touch of the absurd by ruling that even the ensuing death by hanging of the convicted felon did not admit his deposition); 1893, Redd v. State, 65 id. 475, 47 S. W. 119; 1817, LeBaron v. Crombie, 14 Mass. 235; 1882, Webster v. Mann, 56 Tex. 119.

³ Compare §§ 483, 583, ante.

⁴ For certain decisions and other statutes which concern bastardy and probate of wills, see post, §§ 1413, 1417; for the following statutes in their bearing on the rules of notice and cross-examination, see ante, §§ 1380-1382:

ENGLAND: In criminal cases: 1867, St. 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, § 2 (admissible if the witness is dead or if "there is no reasonable probability that such person will ever be able to travel or to give evidence"); in civil cases, the following series of statutes were progressively enacted, the Rules of 1883 being now in force (these statutes are cited more fully ante, § 1380): 1830-1, St. 1 Wm. IV, c. 22, § 10 (deposition may not be read unless "the deponent is beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or dead, or unable from permanent sickness or other permanent infirmity to attend the trial"); 1873, Rules of Procedure, under Judicature Act of 1873, c. 66, No. 36 (depositions are allowed where the witness' attendance in court "ought for some sufficient cause to be dispensed with"); 1875, Rules of Supreme Court, under Judicature Act of 1875, c. 77, Order XXXVII, Rule 4 ("where it shall appear necessary for purposes of justice" depositions may be authorized and received in evidence); Rule 18 ("Except where by this Order otherwise provided, or directed by the Court or a Judge, no deposition shall be given in evidence at the hearing or trial of any cause or matter without the consent of the party against whom the same may be offered, unless the Court or Judge is satisfied that the deponent is dead or beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, or unable from sickness or other infirmity to attend the hearing or trial"); 1883, Nadin v. Bassett, L. R. 25 Ch. D. 21 (personal identity of plaintiff; commission to take plaintiff's testimony in New Zealand, refused on the facts); 1887, Bur- or four in number, and never include all those recognized by the Courts at common law. It would therefore be an error to treat the statutory enumeraton v. Railway, 35 W. R. 536, Kay, J. (the witness, under the above Order, must be "incapable of being examined").

CANADA: Dom. Rev. St. 1886, c. 135, §§ 96, 102, 103 (in proceedings in the Supreme or Exchequer Court, any person's deposition may be ordered when in the Court's opinion it is "owing to the absence, age, or infirmity, or the distance of the residence of such person from the place of trial, at the expense of taking his evidence otherwise, or for any other reason, convenient to do so"; the depositions may be used without further proof, "saving all just exceptions"); Crim. Code 1892, § 683 (depositions on commission out of Canada; the rules for criminal cases to be "as nearly as practicable" the same as in civil cases); § 686 (the deposition of a sick person taken under ib. § 681 is admissible if the person is dead or if "there is no reasonable probability that such person will ever be able to attend at the trial to give evidence"); § 687 (a deposition at a prior investigation of the charge is admissible if the witness "is dead, or so ill as not to be able to travel, or is absent from Canada"); B. C. Rev. St. 1897, c. 52, § 134 (county courts; like Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 60, § 143); § 137 (like ib. § 144); c. 56, § 55 (Supreme Court; "on special grounds," the Court may order that viva voce testimony be dispensed with); c. 62, §§ 30, 31 (special rules prescribed for divorce); Man. Rev. St. 1902, c. 40, Rule of Court 464 (deposition may be admitted on terms directed by the Court); Rules 469, 470 (production of affiant for cross-examination may be required); Rules 485, 499 (depositions taken on commission of any "aged or infirm person resident within Manitoba, or of any person who is about to withdraw therefrom or who is residing without the limits thereof," may be taken; they may be given in evidence "without any other proof of the absence from this country" than the solicitor's or agent's affidavit of belief); c. 38, § 135 (affidavit of a party or witness without the judicial district or the province may be received, in county courts; but "where it is reasonably practicable," the judge may require his appearance); c. 41, § 59 (Surrogate Court may allow testimony by deposition, where the witness "is without the limits of Manitoba, or where by reason of his illness or otherwise the Court does not think fit to enforce the attendance of the witness in open court"); N. Br. Consol. St. 1877, c. 53, § 30 (in the St. John City Court, depositions may be read, provided it appear "that such witness is not then within the said city and county, or that he is sick or infirm, and unable to attend the trial"); c. 37, § 186 (Supreme Court; depositions of witnesses taken in the Province by reason of illness, etc., are receivable; but if they "shall at the time of the trial be in the Province and able to travel, they shall be required to give their testimony viva voce at such trial"); § 194 (Supreme Court; other depositions and commissions; the examination shall not be read unless the deponent "is out of the Province, or dead, or unable from sickness or other infirmity to attend the trial"); c. 49, § 78 (Supreme Court in equity; depositions may be read as in c. 37, § 194); Devf. Cons. St. 1892, c. 50, Rules of Court 33, par. 1 (like Ont. Rules, § 483); par 17 (except as otherwise ordered, no deposition shall be received unless the witness "is dead, or beyond the judicial district in which the court is held, or at such a distance as in the opinion of the Court or judge shall justify the admission of the deposition instead of the attendance of the witness, or is unable from sickness or other infirmity to attend"); N. W. Terr. Consol. Ord. 1898, c. 21, Rule 263 (like Ont. Rules, § 483); Rule 267 (deposition may be received "on such terms if any" as the Court directs); Rule 280 (except as otherwise directed, no deposition shall be received unless "the deponent is dead or beyond the jurisdiction of the court or unable from sickness or other infirmity to attend"); N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 41 (the deposition of a judge of the Supreme Court may be used "if he is, owing to official business, unable to attend such trial"); c. 159, § 41 (in municipal courts, a deposition may be read when the witness is "absent from the county, aged, infirm, or otherwise unable to travel"); Rules of Court 1900, Ord. 35, R. 1 ("any witness whose attendance in court ought for some sufficient reason to be dispensed with" may by order of Court be examined before a commissioner); R. 4 (the Court may empower a party to give a deposition in evidence "on such terms if any as the Court or judge directs"); R. 17 (except as otherwise provided in this Order or directed by a judge, no deposition shall be given in evidence without consent, unless the deponent "is dead, or beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or unable from sickness or other infirmity to attend the hearing or trial"); Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 11, § 26 (in controverted elections, the depositions taken before the examiner may be used); c. 59, § 29 (in the Surrogate's Court, a deposition may be taken where the witness "is without the limits of Ontario, or where by reason of his illness or otherwise the Court does not think fit to enforce the attendance of the witness in open court"); c. 60, §§ 141, 142 (the deposition of a person without the Province may be taken, but, if he is the party applying or an employee of his, not unless "a saving of expense will be caused thereby, or unless it is clearly made to appear that the person is aged, infirm, or unable from sickness to appear as a witness"); § 143 (a deposition may be taken, if it appears that "a material and necessary witness residing within the Province is sick, aged, or infirm, or that he is about to leave the Province, and that his attendance at court as a witness cannot by reason thereof be procured"; it "may be used upon the trial, saving all just exceptions"); § 144 ("a witness who resides in a remote part of the Province and at a great distance from the place of trial, if it be clearly made to appear tions as exhaustive; they can seldom be construed as other than declaratory of rules already recognized. Nor is there any objection on principle to this that his attendance cannot be procured, or that the expense of his attendance would be out of proportion to the amount involved in the action, or would be so great that the party desiring his attendance, should not under the circumstances be required" to incur it, may be examined by deposition); c. 90, § 10 (on a trial at the general sessions, a deposition taken before the magistrate at the original hearing may be used if the deponent "is dead, or is so ill as not to be able to attend and give evidence, or is absent from Ontario," or "after diligent inquiry cannot be found to be served with a subpoena"); Rules of Court 1897, § 483 (affidavit not to be authorized, if the witness "can be produced"; quoted ante, § 1380); § 485 (deposition to be admitted "on such terms as may seem just" to the judge); P. E. I. St. 1889, § 56 (depositions shall not be read unless the witness "is beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or dead, or unable from permanent sickness or infirmity or other sufficient cause to attend the trial").

UNITED STATES: Alabama: Code 1897, § 1833 (deposition may be taken (1) if witness is a woman, or (2) "from age, infirmity, or sickness, is unable to attend court," or (3) resides "more than 100 miles from the place of trial, computing by the route usually traveled, or resides out of or is absent from the State," or (4) is "about to leave the State and will probably not return until after the trial," or (5) when "the claim or defense, or a material part thereof, depends exclusively on the evidence of the witness," or (6) when the witness is "the Governor, secretary of State, State treasurer, State auditor, attorney-general, superintendent of education, commissioner of agriculture, examiner of public accounts, or the head of any other department or bureau of the State government, chancellor, judge, or clerk of any court of record, register in chancery, or sheriff; or president, director, or other officer of a bank incorporated in this State; postmaster or other officer of the United States; or practicing physician or lawyer; or a person constantly employed on any steamboat or other water-craft, or on any turnpike, or manufactory, or about the engine or other machinery of a railroad, or is a superintendent, secretary, treasurer, master of road repairs, or conductor of any railroad; or is a telegraph operator; or a teacher of a public or private school actually engaged in teaching, or a minister of the gospel, or pastor of a religious society in charge of any diocese, parish, church, district, or circuit"); § 1846 (deposition not usable "if it appear at the trial that the cause for which it was taken, or some other cause, does not then exist, unless such witness is dead or of unsound mind"); § 1847 (where the witness resides in county and affidavit of necessity of personal attendance is made, deposition must be suppressed, "unless the witness, from age, infirmity, or sickness, is unable to attend court"); § 2681 (in justices' courts, depositions may be taken also of witnesses residing out of county and 10 miles distant); § 5289 (in criminal cases, defendant may take the deposition of "any witness who from age, infirmity, or sickness, is unable to attend court; or who resides out of the State, or more than 100 miles from the place of trial, computing by the route usually traveled; or who is absent from the State; or where the defense, or a material part thereof, depends exclusively on the testimony of the witness"); § 5291 (so also for prosecution's witness within the State, on defendant's written consent filed); § 5292 (a deposition is not admissible "if it appear that the witness is alive and able to attend court and within its jurisdiction"); § 5293 (convict's deposition may be taken by defendant); Alaska: C. C. P. 1900, §§ 644, 657, (like Or. Annot. C. 1892, §§ 814, 823, except that § 644, subd. 3, substitutes "about to go more than 100 miles beyond the place of trial"); Arizona: P. C. 1887, § 2075 (deposition of witnesses in Territory taken by accused, admissible if the witness "is unable to attend, by reason of his death, insanity, sickness, or infirmity, or of his continued absence from the Territory"); § 2097 (deposition of a witness residing out of Territory, taken by accused, admissible if "the witness is unable to attend from any cause whatever"); Rev. St. 1887, § 1850 (in civil cases, "no deposition of a witness, except when the witness is a female, shall be permitted to be read in evidence unless the party offering the same, his agent, attorney, or some competent person, shall first make oath that the witness is without the limits of the county where the suit is pending, or that such witness is dead, or that by reason of age, sickness, infirmity, or official duty, such witness is unable to attend court"); §§ 984, 999 (testimony on contested probate of will, admissible in subsequent contests over the will if the witness "is dead or has permanently removed from this Territory"); Arkansas: Stats. 1894, § 2978 (deposition is usable (1) "where the witness does not reside in the county where the action is pending, or in an adjoining county, or is absent from the State, or is in the military service of the United States, or of this State"; (2) "where the witness is the Governor, Secretary of State, auditor or treasurer of this State, a judge or clerk of a court, a president, cashier, teller, or clerk of a bank, a practicing physician, surgeon, or lawyer, or keeper, officer, or guard of the penitentiary"; (3) "where, from age, infirmity, or imprisonment, the witness is unable to attend court, or is dead"; (4) "where the witness resides 30 miles or more" from the place of trial, "unless the witness is in attendance on the court"); § 2980 (the Court may order personal attendance, on affidavit that his testimony "is important, and that the just and proper effect of his testimony cannot, in a reasonable degree, be obtained without an oral examination before the jury"); § 2118 (depositions for the accused in criminal cases are usable "upon the death of the witness or his becoming mentally result. So far as the statute confers a judicial power to order the taking of a deposition, the power exists only so far as specified by the statute, be-incapable of testifying, or physically incapable of attending the trial or giving his testimony, or a non-resident of the State, or absent therefrom, so that he could not be summoned"; but in last two cases defendant's affidavit "that he has tried in good faith to procure the attendance of such witness and been unable to do so" is necessary); § 7414 (on a will-probate, the attesting-witness' deposition is admissible if he resides out of State, or is confined in "another county or corporation" under legal process, or is "unable from sickness, age, or other infirmity, to attend," or resides more than 50 miles distant); § 7425 (testimony on application for probate, and "any deposition lawfully taken out of Court," "of witnesses who cannot be produced at a trial afterward before a jury," is admissible); California: C. C. P. 1872, §§ 2020, 2021 (deposition of a witness out of the State may be taken; that of a witness in the State may be taken, 1, when he is a party, or an officer or member of a corporation-party, or a beneficiary of the action; 2, when he resides out of the county; 3, when he is "about to leave the county . . . and will probably continue absent when the testimony is required"; 4, when he, "otherwise liable to attend the trial, is nevertheless too infirm to attend"; 5, for a motion or like proceedings; 6, when the witness "is the only one who can establish facts or a fact material to the issue; provided that the deposition of such witness shall not be used if his presence can be procured at the time of the trial"); § 2032 (if taken under subd. 2, 3, or 4, above, "proof must be made at the trial that the witness continues absent or infirm, or is dead"); Commissioners' amendment of 1901 (by substituting for the entirety of § 2021 a provision that depositions taken and returned may be read except as provided in § 2032, and then by prescribing in § 2032 that "the deposition cannot be read unless proof be made at the trial that the witness is absent from the county in which his testimony is to be used, or resides out of such county and more than 30 miles from the county seat thereof, or that he is too infirm to attend the trial, or is dead; but such proof need not be made when the witness is a party to the action or proceeding, or, when his deposition was taken, resided out of the county and more than 30 miles from the county seat, nor when the testimony is produced on a motion, or in any other case where the oral examination of the witness is not required"; for the validity of this amendment, see ante, § 488); § 1997 (production of a witness imprisoned in the county may be required); P. C. 1872, § 686 (testimony before a committing magistrate, or a deposition taken conditionally for the prosecution, admissible if the witness is "dead, or insane, or cannot with due diligence be found within the State"; see the interpreting decisions cited ante, § 1398); § 1204 (motion for mitigation or aggravation of sentence; depositions allowed, under certain conditions); § 1345

(depositions taken for the accused, usable if the witness is "unable to attend, by reason of his death, insanity, sickness, or infirmity, or of his continued absence from the State"); § 1346 (deposition of a jail-prisoner may be taken, subject to the foregoing); § 1362 (depositions taken on commission out of the State by the accused may be read upon a showing "that the witness is unable to attend from any cause whatever"); Colorado: C. C. P. 1891, § 341 (deposition may be taken where the witness (1) is a party or a beneficiary, (2) "resides out of the county," (3) "is about to leave the county . . . and will probably continue absent when the testimony is required," (4) "though otherwise liable to attend the trial, is nevertheless too infirm to attend," (5) "is for any other cause expected to be unable to attend the trial"); § 343 ("If the deposition be taken by reason of the absence, or intended absence, from the county of the witness, or because he is too infirm to attend, proof by affidavit or oral testimony shall be made at the trial that the witness continues absent or infirm, to the best of deponent's knowledge or belief. The deposition thus taken may also be read in case of the death of a witness"); Const. 1876, Art. II, § 17, Annot. Stats. 1891, § 4834 (deposition by either party in a criminal case, admissible, unless "in the opinion of the Court, the personal attendance of the witness might be procured by the prosecution or is procured by the accused"); § 4674 (depositions of witnesses to a will, "non-resident" or "resident out of the county" of application for probate, admissible); § 4679 (testimony of witnesses at probate to be admissible on contest in chancery); § 2650 (deposition may be taken for trial before justice of the peace of witness "unable to attend on account of sickness, age, or other cause"); § 2651 (same for witness residing out of the county); Columbia (District): Comp. St. 1894, c. 70, § 33 (wills; if "any of the witnesses to the same shall reside out of the district, or be temporarily absent therefrom at the time, when the will or codicil shall be so exhibited," their testimony by deposition may be taken and used); c. 71, § 19 (testimony taken by commission of a witness residing out of the District, admissible, without any conditions specified); § 25 (deposition of a witness residing more than 100 miles from Washington may be taken on commission by defendant in criminal case); c. 20, § 4 (deposition in a civil cause not usable, "unless it appears to the satisfaction of the Court that the witness is then dead, or gone out of the United States, or to a greater distance than 100 miles, . . . or that by reason of age, sickness, bodily infirmity, or imprisonment, he is unable to travel and appear at court"); Code 1901, § 1058 (depositions de bene may be taken of witnesses more than 100 miles distant, infirm or aged, etc.; but "if at the time of the trial the witness can be produced to testify in open court, the deposition shall not be read in evi-

cause the power did not exist at common law (ante, § 1376). But where a deposition had been lawfully taken — before a common-law judge in person, dence; but if the attendance of the witness can not be produced, then the said deposition shall be admissible in evidence"); § 1060 (depositions taken on commission shall not be admitted at the trial "if at the time the witness be present in the District, and his attendance can be obtained by the process of the court"); Connecticut: Gen. St. 1887, § 1063 (depositions may be taken, in civil actions, of persons (1) living out of the State, (2) living more than 20 miles from place of trial, (3) "going to sea or out of the State," (4) "by age or infirmity unable to travel to court," (5) confined in jail; but nothing is said as to their admission); § 1069 (for persons more than 60 years old, depositions may be taken, and used if deponent is "unable to attend and testify"); Delaware: Rev. St. 1893, c. 77, § 16 (the mother's deposition in a bastardy case, admissible "if her attendance cannot be procured"); Florida: Rev. St. 1892, §§ 1123, 1132 (deposition may be taken if the witness "reside out of the county" or "be bound on a voyage to sea, or be about to go out of the State to remain until after the trial," or "be very aged or infirm," or upon affidavit that party "believes that a material part of his claim or defence depends upon the testimony of such witness"; no conditions of admissibility specified); § 1142 (deposition may be taken of an attesting-witness to a will residing out of the State); § 1618 (on adjournment or continuance before a justice of the peace, depositions of witnesses in attendance may be taken and used on trial "as if such testimony were given at the trial"); § 1805 (at a probate contest, a deposition is usable if "the personal attendance of any witness cannot be obtained, or if it be manifested inconvenient for any witness to attend"); § 2912 (accused person may take depositions of absent persons whose testimony is material and necessary, if they "reside beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or are so sick and infirm that with diligence their attendance cannot be procured at the same or the next succeeding regular or special term at which the case may be tried"); § 2917 (such a deposition is not to be read "when the attendance of the witness can be procured," or if the deponent "has absented himself by the procurement, inducement, or threats of the accused, or of any person in his behalf"); Georgia: Code 1895, § 5297 (deposition may be taken in a civil cause on interrogatories, if the witness (1) resides out of the county, (2) "from the condition of his health, from age or otherwise, he cannot attend the court, or from the nature of his business or occupation it is not possible to secure his personal attendance without manifest inconvenience to the public or to third persons, — such as postmasters, public carriers, physicians, school-teachers, etc.,"; (3) is about to remove from the county, or to leave home on business, for a sojourn or a tour, which will extend "beyond the term of the Court"; (4) "all female witnesses"; (5) "the only witness to a material point in the case"; but nothing is provided as to the conditions of receiving these depositions); § 5313 (in counties of 20,000 people, any witness' deposition may be taken; no conditions provided for receiving); Hawaii: Civil Laws, 1897, § 1374 (depositions are not to be read "unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Court" that the deponent is the opposite party, "or is beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or is resident in another circuit, or dead, or unable from permanent sickness or other permanent infirmity to attend"); Idaho: St. 1899, Feb. 10, § 6 (deposition may be used "in the trial of all issues, in any action, in the following cases: first, when the witness does not reside in the county, or when he resides in a county adjoining and more than 30 miles from place of trial, or is absent from the State; second, when the deponent is so aged, infirm, or sick as not to be able to attend the court or place of trial, or is dead; third, when the depositions have been taken by agreement of parties, or by the order of the court trying the cause; fourth, when the deponent is a State or county officer, or a practising physician, or attorney-at-law, and the trial is to be had in any county in which the deponent does not reside"; for the statutes repealed by this Act, see Rev. St. 1887, §§ 6059-6062, 8166-8189); Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 25 (in suits at law, depositions of witnesses resident in the State may be taken wherever the witness "resides in a different county from that in which the court is held, is about to depart from the State, is in custody on legal process, or is unable to attend such court on account of advanced age, sickness, or other bodily infirmity"); § 26 (dedimus potestatem commission, allowed in civil causes for a witness residing in the State more than 100 miles distant, or not residing in the State, or engaged in the military or naval service of the United States or this State and out of this State); § 34 (every deposition duly taken and returned "may be read as good and competent evidence in the cause in which it shall be taken, as if such witness had been present and examined by parol in open court, on the hearing or trial thereof"); c. 143, § 4 (when an attesting-witness to a will "shall reside without the limits of this State," or the county in which probate is desired, "or shall be unable to attend said court," a deposition by commission may be taken and used); Indiana: Rev. St. 1897, §§ 432, 441 (deposition is usable when the deponent (1) does not reside in the county, or adjoining county, of trial, or is absent from the State; (2) is "so aged, infirm, or sick, as not to be able to attend," or is dead; (3) when the deposition is taken by agreement or by Court order; (4) when the deponent is "a State or county officer, or a judge, or a practicing physician, or attorney-at-law," and the trial is in a county of non-residence); § 1896 (defendant in a criminal case may by leave of Court have depositions taken of witnesses residing out of the State, but must first enter consent for similar deposior before a master in chancery —, the conditions on which it could be used in a common-law court were a simple question of the admissibility of evi-

tions by prosecution on the same matter); § 434 (if a witness "is produced in Court," his deposition is not to be read, unless taken by agreement or by Court order); § 1061 (in divorce causes, the Court may "for good cause shown" receive depositions, though the witnesses could attend); Iowa: Code 1897, § 4684 (in a civil action, a deposition may be taken if the witness resides in a different county, or "is about to go beyond the reach of a subpoena," or is "for any other cause expected to be unable to attend court at the time of trial"); § 4709 (unless the record discloses a cause for taking, the proponent must show that "the witness is a non-resident of the county, or such other fact as renders its taking legal"); § 3285 (in a will probate, depositions are allowable of subscribing witnesses residing out of the State or judicial district); § 5224 (depositions taken by the accused "may be read in evidence"; no conditions named); Kansas: Gen. St. 1897, c. 95, §§ 357, 375, c. 102, §§ 171, 169 (depositions usable only "when the witness does not reside in the county" of trial, or "when from age, infirmity, or imprisonment the witness is unable to attend court, or is dead," or upon a motion, etc.); Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, § 554 (deposition is usable if the deponent resides 20 miles or more away; is absent from State; is its Governor, secretary, register, auditor, or treasurer; or is judge or court clerk; or is postmaster, or bank president, cashier, teller, or clerk; or is practising physician, surgeon, or lawyer; or is keeper, officer, or guard of penitentiary; or is dead; or has become of unsound mind; or is prevented by infirmity or imprisonment from attendance; or is in the Federal or State military service); § 556 (on affidavit that the testimony is important and its "just and proper effect" cannot "in a reasonable degree" be attained otherwise, the Court may order personal attendance); C. Cr. P. 1895, § 153 (defendant's depositions in criminal cases are usable only in case of death, absence from State, or physical inability to attend for examination); Stats. 1899, §§ 4855, 4863 (attesting-witness to a will; deposition may be taken if he resides out of the Commonwealth, or is confined under legal process in another county or corporation, or is unable from sickness, age, or other infirmity to attend, or resides more than 50 miles away; this may be used on the jury trial if the witness "cannot be produced"); Louisiana: Rev. L. 1897, §§ 615, 617 (depositions may be taken by the clerk of court whenever the party desires; no conditions of using specified); § 3941 (deposition is allowable for a witness residing out of the parish of trial); § 3942 (deposition of a member of the religious order of Saint Ursuline Nuns in New Orleans); C. Pr. 1894, § 352 (party residing out of the parish may be examined on interrogatories without attendance); §§ 138, 425-439 (provision for taking depositions of non-residents, infirm persons, etc.); and "parties in all cases, except criminal and civil jury cases, may take testimony of witnesses out of court, who reside in the parish where the cause is pending"); St. 1896, No. 124, Wolff's Rev. L. 278 (in criminal cases the deposition of a witness taken under detention is admissible "in case of the death or departure of said witness from the parish or other inability to attend court," but not "when the presence of said witness can be procured by subpoena"); Maine: Pub. St. 1883, c. 107, §§ 4, 17 (deposition shall not be used if the cause for taking no longer exists; those causes are (1) "so aged, infirm, or sick, as to be unable to attend"; (2) residence or absence out of the State; (3) being bound to sea on a voyage, or about to go without the State or more than 60 miles away, and not to return in season; (4) being a judge and prevented by official duty from attendance; (5) residing in another town; (6) residing in the same town, provided he is dead or permanently removed from the town at the time of trial; (7) being confined in prison until after the trial); c. 134, § 19, St. 1885, c. 307 (defendant and prosecution may take and use certain depositions as in civil causes; but the prosecution may not use its own if the defendant does not use his); c. 64, § 4 (admissible in probate proceedings when a will-witness lives out of the State, or more than 30 miles distant, or "by age or indispotion of body" is unable to attend); Maryland: Pub. Gen. L. 1888, Art. 35, §§ 15, 16 (depositions of witnesses "who cannot be brought" before Court or of non-resident witnesses "shall be admitted"; no conditions specified); § 19 (deposition of any witness taken may be used "in case only" of his death, or of party's "inability to procure the attendance of such witness at the time of trial and probable continuance of such inability" until the next term); § 25 (certain depositions usable, if the deponent is dead or out of the State or "cannot be had to attend"); Art. 84, § 9 (deposition of master or "other transient person," in shipping offences, admissible if not within jurisdiction at time of trial); Massachusetts: Pub. St. 1882, c. 169, §§ 24, 34, Rev. L. 1902, c. 175, §§ 26, 36 (the reasons for taking are: residence more than 30 miles away; and intention to go out of the Commonwealth and not return in time for the trial; "so sick, infirm, or aged, as to make it probable that he will not be able to attend"; the deposition is not to be used "if it appears that the reason for taking it no longer exists"; except the party producing it "shows a sufficient cause then existing"); Michigan: Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10136, 10142 (deposition may be taken if witness "is about to go or resides out of the State," or "more than 50 miles from the place of trial," or "beyond the jurisdiction of the court," or "when the witness is sick, aged, or infirm, or where there is reasonable cause for apprehension that his testimony cannot be had at the trial," or where "the purposes of justice will be aided thereby"; the deposition may be read, but nevertheless the Court may order "the production of the witness, if within the jurisdence, and were constantly dealt with by the common-law courts, as the rulings in the foregoing sections indicate; hence, the principles already diction"; and in any case either party may compel his attendance "if he is within the jurisdiction of the court and able to attend"; Minnesota: Gen. St. 1894, § 5668 (in civil causes, the deposition of a witness in the State may be taken if the witness "lives more than 30 miles from the place of trial, or is about to go out of the State and not to return in time for trial, or is so sick, infirm, or aged as to make it probable that he will not be able to attend at the trial"); § 5679 ("no deposition shall be used if it appears that the reason for taking it no longer exists," unless the party offering "shows any sufficient cause then existing for using such deposition"); § 5690 (deposition of a witness out of the State may be read on the trial); § 5005 (before a justice of the peace, a deposition is usable if the witness (1) is dead or resides without the county, (2) "is unable or cannot easily attend . . . on account of sickness, age, or other bodily infirmity," (3) "has gone out of the county without the consent or collusion of the party"); Mississippi: Annot. Code 1892, § 1747 (deposition in a civil case may be taken of a witness in the State, if he (1) is "about to depart from the State, or by reason of age, sickness, or other cause shall be unable, or likely to be unable, to attend the court"; (2) "when the claim or defense, or a material point thereof, shall depend upon the testimony of a single witness"; (3) when he is a judge of the Supreme Court, or circuit court, or chancellor, or "any other officer of the government of the State or of the United States, who, on account of his official duties, cannot conveniently attend"; (4) "when the testimony of the clerk of any court of record, or of any sheriff or justice of the peace, shall be required beyond the limits of the county of his residence"; (5) when a "female"; (6) when residing more than 60 miles distant); § 1748 (in a civil cause before a justice of the peace, allowable also for any witness residing in another county); § 1751 (commission may issue for non-residents); § 1756 (depositions to be admissible; but the opponent "may procure the attendance of such witness" and put him on the stand); § 1759 (deposition for a chancery bill may be taken if the witness is "sick, aged, infirm, or about to leave the State"); § 1763 (chancery deposition of "a party or other interested witness" is not to be admitted if the opponent file an affidavit ten days before trial that oral examination is "necessary to the attainment of justice," and if the witness "be alive at the time of trial and not unable to attend court on account of disability from permanent sickness, physical injury, or from weakness and disability incident to old age"); § 1764 (in causes testamentary, etc., in chancery, the party may examine in open court; but this is not to change "the rule as to non-resident witnesses or cases in which depositions generally are authorized"); § 1819 (non-resident subscribing witness to a will may testify by deposition); § 2245 (in habeas corpus proceedings, "whenever the personal attendance of a witness cannot be procured, his affidavit, taken on reasonable notice to the adverse party, may be received"); Missouri: Rev. St. 1899, § 2567 (the accused may take the deposition of a witness who "resides out of the State, or, residing within the State, is enceinte, sick or infirm, or is bound on a voyage or is about to leave this State, or is confined in prison under sentence for a felony"); § 2568 (such depositions are to be read "in like cases" as in civil suits); § 2569 (the accused may also take conditional examinations by commission as in civil cases); § 2877 (civil suits; any witness' deposition may be taken conditionally); § 2904 (depositions are usable, "first, if the witness resides or is gone out of the State; second, if he be dead; third, if by reason of age, sickness, or bodily infirmity, he be unable to or cannot safely attend court; fourth, if he reside in a county other than that in which the trial is held, or if he be gone to a greater distance than 40 miles from the place of trial without the consent, connivance, or collusion of the party requiring his testimony; fifth, if he be a judge of a court of record, a practicing attorney or physician, and engaged in the discharge of his official or professional duty at the time of the trial"); § 4617 (if an attesting witness to a will "shall reside without the United States, or out of this State and within the United States, or within this State and more than 40 miles" from place of probate, "or if such witness shall be prevented by sickness from attending at the time when any will may be produced for probate," his deposition may be taken); § 4625 (on the trial of a will's validity, the oath of a subscribing witness at probate is admissible if he "be deceased or cannot be found"); Montana: C. C. P. 1895, §§ 3342, 3361 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2021, 2032); P. C. §§ 2490, 2491 (like Cal. P. C. §§ 1345, 1346); § 2513 (like ib. § 1362); § 1692 (deposition before a committing magistrate of a witness not giving an undertaking, admissible if the witness "be dead or absent from the State"); Nebraska: Comp. St. 1899, § 3277 (the mother's examination on a bastardy complaint before a magistrate, admissible on the trial); § 5946 (a deposition is usable "only in the following cases": first, when the witness does not reside in the county or is absent from it; second, "when, from age, infirmity, or imprisonment, the witness is unable to attend the court, or is dead"; third, on a motion or where oral examination is not required); § 5960 (deposition not to be read unless, for a cause specified in ib. § 5946, the "attendance of the witness cannot be procured"); Nevada: Gen. St. 1835, § 3429 (witness in the State; like Cal. C. C. P. § 2021, par. 1, 2, 3, 4, adding in the last: "or resides within the county but more than 50 miles from the place of trial"); § 3431 ("If the deposition be taken by reason of the absence or intended absence from the county of the witness, or because he is too infirm to attend, proof by affidavit or oral established for this purpose at common law remain in force unless expressly changed by statute. Those principles have nothing to do with the lack of testimony shall be made at the trial that the witness continues absent or infirm, to the best of the deponent's knowledge or belief"; the witness' death also admits the deposition); § 3433 (witness out of the State; no conditions prescribed for using); § 3422 (deposition allowable for a witness imprisoned in jail); § 3910 (deposition of a witness for the People, taken conditionally, is admissible if it is "satisfactorily shown to the Court that he is dead or insane, or cannot, with due diligence, be found in the Territory"); § 4431 (defendant in a criminal case may take the deposition of a witness who "is about to leave the State, or resides out of the State, or has departed from the State and his or her place of abode is known, or is so sick or infirm as to afford reasonable grounds for apprehending that he or she will be unable to attend the trial"); § 4450 (such a deposition is usable "upon it being shown that the witness is unable to attend from any cause whatever"); New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 225, § 1 (any deposition may be used in a civil cause unless the adverse party procures the witness' attendance); § 13 (depositions for the accused in criminal cases may be used in the Court's discretion when necessary for justice); New Jersey: Gen. St. 1896, Evidence, § 42 (a deposition is usable if the witness "resides or is out of the State, or is dead, or by reason of age, sickness, or bodily infirmity is unable to attend"; see also Justices' Courts, § 116); § 64 (deposition of a party is not to be taken in his own behalf, except by consent or by judicial order); § 67 (deposition of a party residing out of the State may be taken like that of any witness); St. 1900, c. 150, § 51 (re-enacts St. Evidence, § 42, supra); New Mexico: Comp. L. 1897, § 3036 (civil cases; a deposition may be taken (1) "when by reason of age, infirmity, sickness, or official duty, it is probable that the witness will be unable to attend the court"; (2) when he "resides without the Territory or the county in which the suit is pending"; (3) when he "has left or is about to leave" the Territory or county, "and will probably not be present at the trial"); § 3048 (it may be read in evidence; no conditions named); § 220 (at the original probate of a will, the deposition of a witness may be taken when he is "not a resident of the county in which such will is offered for probate, and also whenever any witness is incapacitated from sickness or age from attending upon such court"; the deposition when filed to have the same effect as if the witness testified in person); New York: C. C. P. 1877, § 836 (a physician or surgeon attached to hospital, etc., may testify before a referee to the condition of a patient in an action for personal injury, the judge having discretion to order his examination in court); § 882 (a deposition, except one of an adverse party or one taken by stipulation, is not to be used unless the witness is dead, or "unable personally to attend by reason of his insanity, sickness, or other infirmity," or is imprisoned, or is absent from the State so that attendance "could not with reasonable diligence be compelled by subpoena"; see also § 910); C. Cr. P. 1881, § 8 (depositions are admissible against the accused, if the witness is dead, insane, or cannot with due diligence be found in the State); §§ 219, 631 (a deposition taken on either side in a criminal case may be used if witness is "unable to attend, by reason of his death, insanity, sickness, or infirmity, or of his continued absence from the State"); North Carolina: Code 1883, § 1358 (depositions are admissible if the witness (1) is dead or has become insane, (2) is a resident of a foreign country or another State and is not present, (3) is confined in prison beyond the county, (4) is "so old, sick, or infirm as to be unable to attend court," (5) is the Federal president or head of a department, or Federal judge, district attorney, or clerk, and the trial occurs during term of his court, (6) is the State Governor or head of a department or president of the university or other incorporated college, (7) is a State Supreme court judge, or a judge, presiding officer, clerk, or solicitor of a court of record, and the trial occurs during the court's term, (8) is a member of Congress or the General Assembly, and the trial occurs during a session, (9) if the witness, being summoned, is out of the State or more than 75 miles distant by usual mode of travel, without the offeror's procurement or consent); St. 1891, c. 522 (depositions taken by the accused may be read on above conditions); North Dakota: Rev. C. 1895, §§ 5671, 5685 (like Okl. Stats. §§ 4236, 4250); §§ 8383, 8384, 8396 (criminal cases; like Cal. P. C. § 1345, 1346, 1362); Ohio: Rev. St. § 5265, 5281 (a deposition is usable when the witness (1) "does not reside in or is absent from" the county; (2) "is dead, or from age, infirmity, or imprisonment, is unable to attend court"; it is also usable on motions or "where the oral examination of the witness is not required"; § 5946 (in probating a lost or destroyed will, the deposition may be taken of a witness residing out of the jurisdiction, or infirm and unable to attend court); § 5928 (same, for ordinary probate); § 7293 (in criminal cases, the defendant may have a deposition taken of a witness who (1) resides out of the State; (2) is sick or infirm, (3) is about to leave the State, or (4) is confined in any prison of the State; nothing said as to admissibility); Oklahoma: Stats. 1893, § 4236 (a deposition is usable only (1) when the witness does not reside in the county of trial or is absent from it; (2) when "from age, infirmity, or imprisonment, the witness is unable to attend court, or is dead"; (3) when the case is one in which oral testimony is not required); § 4250 (on offering a deposition, it must appear that for "any cause specified" in the above section "the attendance of the witness cannot be procured"); § 5287 (on a hearing for mitigation or aggravation of sentence, depositions may be used if the witness is "so sick or infirm as to be unable to attend"); judicial power to initiate the taking of a deposition. It would be unfortunate if the patchwork legislation of the statutes on this subject should be thought to alter the already well-established principles of the common law.

§ 5349 (in criminal cases the deposition of a material witness may be taken for defendant if the witness is "about to leave the Territory, or is so sick or infirm as to afford reasonable grounds for apprehending that he will be unable to attend the trial"); § 5357 (such a deposition is usable "upon its appearing that the witness is unable to attend by reason of his death, insanity, sickness, or infirmity, or of his continued absence from the Territory"); §§ 5359, 5371 (the deposition of a material witness for defendant residing out of the Territory may be read "upon it being shown that the witness is unable to attend from any cause whatever"); § 5358 (the deposition of a material witness for defendant may be taken if the witness is prisoner in a Territorial prison or in a jail of a county other than that of trial); Oregon: C. C. P. 1892, § 814 (a deposition in the State may be taken when the witness (1) is a party, (2) is privileged from attendance under ib. § 795 by reason of distance, (3) is "about to leave the county and go more than 20 miles beyond the place of trial," (4) "though otherwise liable to attend the trial, is nevertheless too infirm to attend"; and (5) on a motion or otherwise where oral examination is not required); § 828 (when taken under (2), (3), or (4) of ib. § 814, not usable unless proof is made "that the witness did reside beyond the service of a subpoena, or that he still continues absent or infirm, as the case may be"); Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1896, c. 244, §§ 20, 27 (apparently no restrictions whatever as to accounting for witness' absence; but by § 36 any Court "may order the oral examination of witnesses in open court"); § 38 (viva voce testimony required in divorce cases, unless in case of physical disability to attend, residence and presence out of the State, or a deponent before a master in chancery); South Carolina: Rev. St. 1893, §§ 2332, 2334, 2335, Code 1902, §§ 2868, 2870, 2871 (a deposition may be taken under commission, if the witness (1) resides out of the State or county, (2) or resides more than 100 miles from court, (3) or is about to remove from the State before trial expected, (4) or cannot personally be procured "by reason of indispensable attendance on some public official duty or professional duty as an attorney at such time," or (5) "by reason of such sickness or infirmity as incapacitates such witness or witnesses from traveling in order to appear and testify"; nothing is said as to conditions of admissibility; except that by § 2334 personal attendance may be compelled of any deponent residing within the county or not more than 30 miles from court house; and by § 2335 the attendance of an officer of a lunatic asylum in a civil cause is to be required only when "justice cannot be done" without it); R. S. § 2341, C. § 2877 (a commission shall issue for "persons unable to leave home by reason of age, infirmity, sickness, or bodily hurt"); R. S. § 2342, C. § 2878 (any party's or witness' deposition may be taken in civil causes before the clerk of court, subject to either party's right to require personal attendance); R. S. § 2345, C. § 2881 (depositions may be taken de bene before a judge, clerk, notary, etc., if the witness (1) lives without the county, (2) lives more than 100 miles away, (3) is bound to sea, (4) is about to leave the State or the county or to go 100 miles away, or (5) is aged or infirm; but by § 2347 such depositions are to be used only if it appears that the deponent is dead or out of the county or State or 100 miles away, or is by reason of age, sickness, bodily infirmity, or imprisonment, unable to travel and appear; for justices' courts, see ib. § 891); South Dakota: Stats. 1899, §§ 6514, 6527 (like N. D. Rev. C. §§ 5671, 5685); §§ 8818, 8832 (criminal cases; like Cal. P. C. §§ 1345, 1362); Tennessee: Code 1896, § 5624 (deposition in a civil action may be taken if the witness (1) "from age, bodily infirmity, or other cause," is incapable of attending; (2) resides out of the State; (3) resides out of the county; (4) is obliged to leave the State before issue; (5) is about to leave the county and "will probably not return until after the trial"; (6) is "the only witness to a material fact"; (7) is "an officer of the United States, an officer of this State or of any county in this State," clerk of another court of record, member of the General Assembly in session or a clerk or officer thereof, a practising physician or attorney, or a jailer or prison-keeper of another county; (8) is a notary public; (9) when the suit is brought in forma pauperis); § 5625 (a female witness may testify by deposition, unless sufficient cause be shown for compelling her attendance); § 5626 (the deposition of any person in the county may be taken, but the opponent may summon him to attend); § 5631 (the opponent may compel attendance in the above cases, except where the witness is by law privileged not to attend); § 7356 (rules for civil cases, applicable to defendant's depositions in criminal cases); §§ 7574-7576 (a convict not being removable for a civil case, his deposition may be used; defendant in a criminal case may also use it); Texas: Rev. Civ. Stats. 1895, § 2273 (depositions may be taken in all civil suits; "provided, the failure to secure the deposition of a male witness residing in the county in which the suit is pending shall not be regarded as want of diligence where diligence has been used to secure his personal attendance by the service of subpoena or attachment, under the rules of law, unless by reason of age, infirmity, or sickness or official duty, the witness will be unable to attend the court, or unless he is about to leave or has left the State or county in which the suit is pending, and will not probably be present at the trial"); § 2290 (deposition may be read; no conditions prescribed); § 1900 (at the probate of a will, "if all the [subscribing] witnesses are non-residents of the county, or those resident of the county are unable to attend court," their depositions may be used; where the subscribing witnesses are dead, the witnesses to handwriting may testify "by deposition"; C. Cr. P. 1895, § 797 (the accused may take the deposition of any witness, not to be used except on giving consent to use by the State; and also of a witness who resides out of the State or is aged or infirm); § 812 (such depositions "shall not be read, unless oath be made that the witness resides out of the State, or that since his deposition was taken the witness has died; or that he has removed beyond the limits of the State; or that he has been prevented from attending the court through the act or agency of the defendant, or by the act or agency of any person whose object was to deprive the defendant of the benefit of the testimony; or that by reason of "age or bodily infirmity such witness cannot attend"); § 813 (the foregoing oath "may be made by the district or county attorney or any other credible person" for the State; for the defendant "the oath shall be made by him in person"); United States: Rev. St. 1878, § 861 ("The mode of proof in trials of actions at common law shall be by oral testimony and examination of witnesses in open court, except as hereinafter provided"); § 863 (in civil cause in a district or circuit court a deposition may be taken "when the witness lives at a greater distance from the place of trial than 100 miles, or is bound on a voyage to sea, or is about to go out of the United States, or out of the district in which the case is to be tried, and to a greater distance than 100 miles from the place of trial, before the time of trial, or when he is ancient and infirm"); § 865 ("Unless it appears to the satisfaction of the Court that the witness is then dead, or gone out of the United States, or to a greater distance than 100 miles from the place where the court is sitting, or that, by reason of age, sickness, bodily infirmity, or imprisonment, he is unable to travel and appear at court, such deposition shall not be used in the cause"); § 866 ("In any case where it is necessary, in order to prevent a failure or delay of justice, any of the courts of the United States may grant a dedimus potestatem to take depositions according to common usage; . . . and the provisions of sections 863, 864, and 865, shall not apply to any deposition to be taken under the authority of this section"); for the construction of the foregoing provisions, see particularly post, § 1417, ante, § 1381; Utah: Rev. St. 1898, § 3454 (the deposition of "a witness out of the State" is usable, without conditions specified); § 3455 (witness in the State; like Cal. C. C. P. § 2021, par. 1 to 5, omitting the second clause of par. 1); § 3457 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2032); § 4513 (criminal cases; like Cal. P. C. § 686); § 3429 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1997); § 4917 (mitigation or aggravation of sentence; like Cal. P. C. § 1204); §§ 5037, 5051 (like Cal. P. C. §§ 1345, 1362); St. 1899, c. 57 (a deposition taken de bene in a criminal case may be used if the witness "is either dead or out of the State"); Vermont: Stats. 1894, § 1257 (a deposition may be taken of a person (1) residing more than 30 miles distant, (2) about to leave the State, not to return before trial, (3) incapable of traveling and appearing, through "age, sickness, or other bodily infirmity," (4) residing out of the State, (5) confined in jail, (6) being a judge of the Supreme Court, going out of his residence-county on official duty, not to return before trial; no provision as to the conditions of using such depositions); § 2343 (in probate proceedings, a deposition may be taken where the person resides out of the probate district, or is unable to attend through age or bodily infirmity); Virginia: Code 1887, § 3365 (a deposition is usable if the witness is "dead, or out of this State, or one of its judges, or a superintendent of a lunatic asylum distant more than 30 miles from the place of trial, or in any public office or service the duties of which prevent his attending the court, or be unable to attend it from sickness or other infirmity, or be more than 100 miles from the place of trial"; but in the last instance the Court may require attendance); § 2537 (if a will-witness is "unable from sickness, age, or other infirmity to attend," or in case of his confinement in another county or corporation in the State under legal process, his deposition may be taken); § 2546 (testimony on a motion to probate a will, or depositions taken thereunder, of witnesses who "cannot be produced at a trial afterwards before a jury," are admissible); § 413 (deposition of certain officers, not compellable to leave the office to testify in State bond-coupon suits, admissible); Washington: C. & Stats. 1897, § 6017 (a deposition may be taken when the witness (1) "resides out of the county and more than 20 miles from the place of trial," (2) "is about to leave the county and go more than 20 miles from the place of trial, and there is a probability that he will continue absent when the testimony is required," (3) "is sick, infirm, or aged, so as to make it probable that he will not be able to attend at the trial," (4) "resides out of the State"); § 6028 ("If it appear at the trial that the reason for taking the deposition no longer exists, the deposition shall not be read in evidence, unless the party offering it shows that another of the causes specified by § 6017 then exists, or that the witness is dead, or cannot safely attend at the trial on account of sickness, age, or other bodily infirmity"); § 6101 (the deposition of an attesting witness to a will may be taken when he is "prevented by sickness from attending at the time when any will may be produced for probate, or resides out of the State or more than 30 miles from the place"); § 6708 (a witness for the prosecution, released on recognizance; his deposition taken by a magistrate may be read on the trial "if the witness is not present when required to testify in the case"); § 6749 (before a justice of the peace, a deposition cannot be used unless the witness "1, is dead, or resides more depositions in perpetuam memoriam in specifying the conditions of necessity allowing their use.¹ There is, however, no need for a separate treat-

§ 1412. Same: Statutes affecting Depositions in Perpetuum Memoriam. It has been customary, in statutory enactments, to deal separately with

than 20 miles from the place of trial; or, 2, is unable, or cannot safely attend before the justice on account of sickness, age, or other bodily infirmity; 3, that he has gone more than 20 miles from the place of trial without the consent or collusion of the party offering the deposition"); § 6925 (on a criminal trial, confrontation is necessary, but wherever witnesses whose depositions have been lawfully taken by a committing magistrate "are absent, and cannot be found when required to testify in such case, so much of such deposition" as is competent is admissible); § 6003 (the deposition of one confined in jail may be taken); West Virginia: Code 1891, c. 130, § 36 (a deposition is usable if the witness be "dead, or out of this State, or one of its judges, or in any public office or service the duties of which prevent his attending the court, or be unable to attend it from sickness or other infirmity, or be out of the county"; but in the last case attendance may for good cause be required); c. 50, § 111 (before a justice of peace, it is usable if the witness is absent from county, sick, or otherwise unable to attend); c. 159, § 1 ("every deposition" in a criminal case, taken by the accused, may be read by him; it may be taken of one non-resident or absent from the State, or aged and infirm so as to be unable to attend); c. 77, § 27 (subscribing witness to a will; the deposition may be taken and used if he is out of the State, confined under legal process in another county, or unable to attend from sickness, age, or other infirmity); Wisconsin: Stats. 1898, § 4086 ("In all criminal or quasi-criminal cases in courts of record," the defendant may obtain leave to take the deposition of "any material witness within the State who is in imminent danger of death or who is without the State"); § 4089 ("No deposition shall be used if it shall appear that the reason for taking it no longer exists, unless the party producing it shall show other sufficient cause then existing for its use"); § 4095 (the deposition of a party may be taken for himself for the same causes as that of any witness); § 4101 (the deposition of a witness within the State may be taken when the witness (1) lives more than 30 miles distant or beyond the reach of subpoena, (2) is about to "go out of the State, not intending to return in time for the trial or hearing," (3) "is so sick, infirm, or aged as to make it probable that he will not be able to attend," (4) is a member of the Legislature and his House or a committee is in session, (5) "when his testimony is material to any motion or other similar proceeding pending in any court of record, and he shall have refused voluntarily to make his affidavit"); § 4110 (the deposition of any witness without the State may be taken); § 4113 (a deposition by commission for a witness without the State may be taken (1) after issue of fact joined, (2) after no answer or demurrer filed in due time, (3) before issue of fact joined, "when the witness is so sick, infirm, or aged as to afford reasonable ground to apprehend that he may die or become unable to give his testimony, or when he is about to remove so that his testimony cannot conveniently be taken, or for any other cause which shall be deemed sufficient by the Court"); (4) "when required for use on any trial or hearing or upon any motion or proceeding before or after judgment"); Wyoming: Rev. St. 1887, §§ 2613, 2629 (like Oh. Rev. St. §§ 5265, 5281); § 3293 (like ib. § 7293; for depositions before justices of the peace, see §§ 3457-3460).

¹ With the following, compare the statutes cited ante, § 1383, for notice and cross-examination as required for such depositions: Ala. Code 1897, §§ 1867, 1871 (usable "upon proof of the death or insanity of the witness," or his non-residence in the State); §§ 1872, 1874 (depositions perpetuated by heirs or distributees to prove kinship with a decedent, may be taken "when the witness is over 60 years of age, or is infirm, or resides out of the State, or is about to go beyond the United States, or when the claim of such person depends exclusively on the testimony of such witness or witnesses," and are apparently usable unconditionally); Alaska C. C. P. 1900, § 690 (like Or. Annot. C. 1892, § 863); Ariz. Rev. St. 1887, § 1839 (usable "in like manner as" other depositions); Ark. Stats. 1894, § 3022 (usable "where the witness is dead or insane, or, if alive and of sound mind, where his attendance for oral examination cannot be required"); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 2088 (usable "upon proof of the death, or insanity of the witnesses, or that they cannot be found, or are unable by reason of age or other infirmity to give their testimony"); Colo. C. C. P. 1891, § 370 (admissible "upon proof of the death or insanity of the witness or witnesses, or of his or their inability to attend the trial by reason of age, sickness, settled infirmity, or for any other cause"); Del. Rev. St. 1893, c. 56, § 2 (deposition to perpetuate in boundary cases, admissible "in case of the death of the witnesses or inability to procure their attendance"); D. C. Comp. St. 1894, c. 20, § 8 (usable if the witness "die before such arbitration or trial, or cannot be had to attend the same, of which satisfactory proof shall be made"); § 14 (any U. S. court may in discretion admit any deposition in perpetuam); Fla. Rev. St. 1892, § 1141 (usable on the same conditions as if taken pro lite); Ga. Code 1895, § 3966 (usable "de bene esse, if, at the time the litigation arises, no more satisfactory examination of the witness may be had"); § 3961 (they "shall be afterward used only from the necessity of the case"); Hav. Civil Laws 1897, § 1392 (receivable "where the witness or witnesses are insane or dead, or their attendance for oral examination cannot be required or obtained"); Ida. St. 1899, Feb. 10, § 28 (usable "upon the proof of death, insanity, or absence from the State of such witness, or distant more than 30 miles from the place of trial, or inability by reason of age or infirmity to attend"); Ill. Rev. St. c. 51, § 46 (admissible

ment; whatever causes are sufficient for the one suffice equally for the other class. The common-law principles applicable to depositions in perpetuam memoriam never reached a full development (§ 1417, post); but it would be proper, where the statute was silent, to apply the principles dealt with in the foregoing sections.

§ 1413. Same: Statutes affecting Testimony at a Former Trial. Statutes dealing with this class of evidence are comparatively few in number.¹ It is as if originally taken in the suit); Ind. Rev. St. 1897, § 455 (usable upon "the death, insanity, or absence from the State of such witness, or inability by reason of age or infirmity to attend"); §§ 1272, 1280 (testimony before a recorder, etc., to perpetuate a lost deed, record, etc., usable apparently unconditionally); Ia. Code 1897, § 4723 (usable "where the witnesses are dead or insane, or where their attendance for oral examination cannot be had as required"); Kan. Gen. St. 1897, c. 95, § 387 (usable "where the witnesses are dead or insane, or where attendance for oral examination cannot be had or required"); Ky. C. C. P. 1895, § 613 (depositions usable on the conditions provided for de bene depositions); La. C. P. 1894, § 440 (usable "should the witness examined be dead or absent"); Mass. Pub. St. 1882, c. 169, §§ 50, 64, Rev. L. 1902, c. 175, §§ 52, 64 (admissible on the same conditions "as if it had originally been taken" for the suit); Mich. Comp. L. 1897, § 10140 (the testimony "may be used in case it cannot again be obtained at the time of trial"); Minn. Gen. St. 1894, §§ 5697, 5704 (usable on the same conditions as if originally taken for the action); Miss. Annot. Code, 1892, § 1775 (admissible in case of "death, insanity, subsequent incompetency, or departure to some place unknown"); Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 4540 (admissible, "first, if the deponent is dead, second, if he be unable to give testimony, by reason of insanity or imbecility of mind; third, if he be rendered incompetent, by judgment of law; fourth, if he be removed, so that his testimony cannot be obtained"); § 4557 (depositions taken to establish land-corners, admissible; no conditions specified); Mont. C. C. P. 1895, § 3425 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2088); Nebr. Comp. St. 1899, § 6000 (usable "where the witnesses are dead, or insane, or where their attendance for oral examination cannot be obtained or required"); Nev. Gen. St. 1885, § 3444 (usable "upon proof of the death or insanity of the witness, or of his inability to attend the trial by reason of age, sickness, or settled infirmity"); N. M. Comp. L. 1897, § 3064 (admissible if the deponent is dead, or "unable to give testimony by reason of insanity or of imbecility of mind," or "rendered incompetent by judgment of law," or "removed out of the Territory so that his testimony cannot be obtained"); N. D. Rev. C. 1895, § 5711 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2088); Oh. Rev. St. 1898, § 5878 (receivable if the witness is dead or insane or his "attendance for oral examination cannot be required or obtained"); § 1191 (deposition taken by a county surveyor in proof of old marks, etc., admissible only if the witness is dead or without the jurisdiction); Okl. Stats. 1893, § 4284 (admissible "where the witnesses are dead or insane, or where attendance for oral examination cannot be obtained or required"); Or. C. C. P. 1892, § 863 (admissible on proof "of the death or insanity of the witness, or that he is beyond the State and his residence unknown, or of his inability to attend the trial by reason of age, sickness, or settled infirmity"; but in equity this proof is unnecessary; see Hill's Codes for different provisions in an unenacted statute of 1870); R. I. Gen. L. 1896, c. 244, § 32 (usable in case of death, unsound mind, absence from the State, or inability to attend); S. D. Stats. 1899, § 6552 (like Okl. Stats. § 4284); Tenn. Code 1896, § 5678 (admissible on the witness' "death, insanity, or departure to some place unknown"); §§ 5624, 5682 (in case of a notary, admissible if he should "die or remove out of the State"); U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 867 (quoted ante, § 1387); § 866 (provisions as to depositions de bene do not here apply); Utah Rev. St. 1898, § 3471 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2088); Wash. C. & Stats. 1897, § 6038 (usable "upon proof of the death or insanity of the witness, or his inability to attend the trial by reason of age, sickness, or settled infirmity"); Wis. Stats. 1898, §§ 4121, 4129, 4134 (usable on "the same conditions" as depositions taken pending action); Wyo. Rev. St. 1887, § 3071 (admissible "when the witnesses are dead or insane or when their attendance for oral examination cannot be required or obtained").

¹ With the following, compare the statutes just cited in § 1411, for the word "deposition" is sometimes used to signify the magistrate's report of testimony; compare also the citations ante, § 1388, for identity of issues and parties; for statutes affecting probate and bastardy proceedings, see the interpreting decisions cited post, § 1417; Eng. 1849, St. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, § 17 (testimony before a committing magistrate, taken in writing, on a charge of an indictable offence may be used if the deponent "is dead, or so ill as not to be able to travel"); Can. N. Br. Consol. St. 1877, c. 46, § 30 (former testimony admissible, if the witness "is dead, or out of the Province, or from sickness or infirmity is unable to attend"); Ala. Code 1897, § 4300 (testimony of subscribing witnesses at a will-probate is admissible on a contest in chancery); Ariz. St. 1893, Mar. 6, No. 4 (official report of testimony of witness at a former criminal trial of the same cause, admissible for either party, if the witness "shall die or be beyond the jurisdiction of the Court in which the cause is pending"); St. 1903, No. 25, amending Rev. St.

here even clearer than in the case of depositions (ante, § 1411) that the statutory enumeration of conditions of admissibility is not to be taken as exclusive.

1901, P. C. § 765 (testimony at the preliminary hearing before a magistrate is admissible if the witness "is dead, or insane, or when such witness is shown by the return of the sheriff on a subpoena duly issued for his appearance to be out of the jurisdiction of the Court"); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1870, par. 8 ("testimony of a witness deceased, or out of the jurisdiction, or unable to testify," is admissible); § 1316 (testimony at a will-probate is admissible in subsequent contests, "if the witness be dead, or has permanently removed from the State"); Commissioners' amendment of 1901 (quoted ante, § 1310, under the rule for attesting witnesses; it re-enacts C. C. P. § 1316 as § 1308, and substitutes a new section); P. C. 1872, § 686 (see the quotation ante, § 1411; for the decisions denying the application of this to former testimony at a regular trial, see ante, § 1398); Conn. St. 1895, May 7, c. 116 (testimony of a witness who "is beyond the reach of the process of the courts of this State or cannot be found," is admissible in civil causes "on a subsequent trial of said case," by a sworn certified copy of court stenographer's notes); Del. Rev. St. 1893, c. 33, § 4 (deposition before a coroner, admissible, if the witness is dead); c. 97, § 18 (testimony before a committing magistrate, admissible, if the witness is dead); D. C. Code 1901, § 1065 (if a party "shall die or become insane or otherwise incapable of testifying," his testimony at a former trial is admissible); Ga. Code 1895, § 5186, Cr. C. § 1001 (admissible if the witness is "deceased, or disqualified, or inaccessible for any cause"); Ida. Rev. St. 1887, § 5312 (testimony at the probate of a will; like Cal. C. C. P. § 1316); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 148, § 7 (after probate of a will in the county court, and on trial by jury in the circuit court, "the certificate of the oath of the witnesses at the time of the first probate shall be admitted as evidence"; compare the cases cited ante, § 1303, post, § 1417); Ind. Rev. St. 1897, § 1004 (the written examination of the complainant in bastardy, usable "to sustain or impeach the testimony of such witness"); § 1008 (on the death of the complainant in bastardy, her written examination before the justice "may be read in evidence"); § 2831 (recorded testimony at the probate of a will, admissible in a controversy about lands devised, if the witnesses "are dead, out of the State, or have become incompetent" since probate); Kan. Gen. St. 1897, c. 110, § 22 (testimony before a probate court, admissible on the trial of a contest in the district court, if the witness is out of the jurisdiction, or dead, or has become incompetent since probate); Ky. Stats. 1899, § 4643 (official report is usable in the trial Court's discretion "where the testimony of such witness or witnesses cannot be procured"); La. Rev. L. 1897, § 1439 (testimony at a fire inquest, admissible, apparently unconditionally); C. Pr. 1894, § 586 ("All the testimony taken in writing in the parish court shall be used as evidence in the district court [on a trial de novo on appeal]"); § 599 (same provision; testimony usable "without being obliged to produce the witnesses in person"); the two foregoing sections are annotated by the editor as "inoperative," without citing authority; § 1042 (testimony in writing before a probate court "may be read on the appeal"); § 943 (depositions of witnesses at the time of probating a will are admissible "in case the will is subsequently attacked, although such witness be dead or removed permanently from the State"); Me. Pub. St. 1883, c. 82, § 114 (former testimony of a subscribing witness, in certain actions, admissible on his death); Mass. Pub. St. 1882, c. 212, § 41, Rev. L. 1902, c. 217, § 49 (a witness' deposition before a magistrate may be read "if he is unable to attend at the time of the trial, by reason of his death, insanity, or any infirmity, or if he is absent from the State so that he cannot be compelled to attend by subpoena or attachment"); Miss. Annot. Code 1892, § 253 (testimony of the deceased mother before a justice on a bastardy complaint, admissible on the trial); Mont. C. C. P. 1895, § 2344 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1316); § 3146, par. 8 (like ib. § 1870, par. 8); Nev. Gen. St. 1885, § 2689 (testimony at the probate of a will is admissible "in any subsequent contests concerning the validity of the will, or of the sufficiency of the proof thereof, if the witness be dead, or has permanently removed from this Territory"); § 4036 (testimony on examination before a committing magistrate may be used on the trial "when the witness is sick, out of the State, dead, or when his personal attendance cannot be had in court"); § 3910 (testimony before a committing magistrate, reduced to writing and subscribed, is admissible if it is "satisfactorily shown to the Court that he is dead or insane, or cannot, with due diligence, be found in the Territory"); N. J. Gen. St. 1896, Bastards, § 19 (the mother's examination in a bastardy case, admissible, if she is dead, or insane, or has left the State); N. M. Comp. L. 1897, § 1982 (the testimony of a will-witness, reduced to writing, is admissible in future contests, "if the attendance of the witnesses cannot be procured"); N. Y. C. C. P. 1877, § 830 ("where a party or witness has died or become insane since the trial of an action or the hearing upon the merits of a special proceeding, the testimony of the decedent or insane person, or of any person who is rendered incompetent by the provisions of the last section," as quoted ante, § 488, may be read at a subsequent trial); § 2653 a (the testimony of a will-witness at the probate is admissible at the contest in the Supreme Court if he is dead, out of the jurisdiction, or incompetent since testifying; see also § 2651); St. 1897, c. 104 (on appeal from the surrogate, the testimony of witnesses who are now "out of the jurisdiction, dead, or have become incompetent," is admissible); C. Cr. P. 1881, § 8 (testimony at a § 1414. Proof of Unavailability of Witness. The proponent of the former testimony or the deposition is of course ordinarily the party to prove the necessity of resorting thereto in consequence of the witness' unavailability in person. Where former testimony is offered, no difficulty arises in applying this principle. But where a deposition is offered, it is usually the case that the proponent, in applying for authority to take the deposition, has already had occasion to make proof of the same cause as that now alleged by him to prevent the witness' non-attendance. In such cases — chiefly, illness, absence from the jurisdiction, and residence beyond a certain distance — must the proponent show at the trial that the cause upon which the taking was authorized still continues as a reason for non-attendance? On principle, he must, for the admissibility of the deposition depends on the existence of that cause and the question is for the first time before the trial Court for determination.¹ Nevertheless, it is practically desirable and proper, where the cause for taking was a probably permanent one — for example, residence without the limits — to presume that it continues, and to leave it to the opponent to show (if such is the case) that the cause has ceased.²

commitment is admissible against the accused, in case the witness is dead, insane, or cannot with due diligence be found in the State); § 864 (bastardy; the mother's testimony on examination before the magistrate is admissible if she is dead or insane); N. C. Code, 1883, § 1157 (examinations taken by a committing magistrate are admissible if the deponent is "dead, or so ill as not to be able to travel, or by procurement or connivance of the defendant hath removed from the State, or is of unsound mind"); Oh. Rev. St. 1898, § 5242 a (former testimony is admissible if the witness is dead, beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, insane, unable "through any physical or mental infirmity" to testify, or "has been summoned but appears to have been kept away by the adverse party," or "cannot be found after diligent search"); § 5628 (in bastardy proceedings, the testimony of the deceased mother before the magistrate is admissible); § 5863 (the testimony of a witness at a will-probate is receivable on the trial if the witness is dead or out of the jurisdiction or has become incompetent); Okl. Stats. 1893, § 1194 (testimony at a will-probate is admissible "in any subsequent contests or trials concerning the validity of the will, or the sufficiency of the proof thereof, if the witness be dead, or has permanently removed from this Territory"); Or. C. C. P. 1892, § 706, par. 8 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870, par. 8); St. 1889, Feb. 25, § 5 (official reporter's transcript of testimony, admissible as a witness' deposition "in the cases mentioned in § 829 of the C. C. P."); Pa. St. 1887, Pub. L. 158, § 3, P. & L. Dig., Witnesses, § 6 (testimony in criminal proceeding is admissible if the witness "die, or be out of the jurisdiction so that he cannot be effectively served with a subpoena, or if he cannot be found, or if he become incompetent to testify for any legally sufficient reason"); S. D. Stats. 1899, § 6904 (testimony at a will-probate; like Okl. Stats. § 1194); Tex. Rev. Civ. Stats. 1895, § 1908 (testimony at a will-probate is usable "on the trial of the same matter in any other court when taken there by appeal or otherwise"); C. Cr. P. 1895, § 814 (depositions before an examining court or jury of inquest are admissible on the same conditions as depositions de bene, set forth ante, § 1411); Utah Rev. St. 1898, §§ 3475, 5013 (official stenographer's report may be read when the witness "shall die or be beyond the jurisdiction of the court"); § 4513 (committing magistrate; like Cal. P. C. § 686); § 3793 (probate testimony; like Cal. C. C. P. § 1816); Wash. C. & Stats. 1897, § 6113 ("In all trials respecting the validity of a will, if any subscribing witness be deceased, or cannot be found, the oath of such witness, examined at the time of probate, may be admitted as evidence"); Wyo. Rev. St. 1887, § 3062 (on the contest of a will in the district court, the testimony at the probate of witnesses who "are out of the jurisdiction of the court, dead, or have become incompetent since the probate," is admissible); St. 1891, c. 70, ch. III, § 4 (in probate trials, the former testimony of an attesting witness is receivable if he "be dead, has permanently removed from the State, or is otherwise incompetent"); St. 1895, c. 96, § 5 (a deposition taken in a criminal case may be read, "should the witness fail to appear at the hearing or trial").

¹ 1839, Weguelin v. Weguelin, 2 Curt. Eccl. 263 (deposition of one in danger of death; new affidavit of illness required at trial); 1825, Read v. Bertrand, 4 Wash. C. C. 559 (similar).

² 1859, Nevan v. Roup, 8 Ia. 207 (the deponent had stated that he was a non-resident but intended to be present if alive and well; held, admissible, "unless it is shown that the witness is present in court"); 1878, Cook v. Blair, 50 id. 128 (deposition taken on the ground of expected absence at the time set for trial, that

§ 1415. If Witness is Available for Testifying, Deposition is not Usable. No one has ever doubted that the former testimony of a witness cannot be used if the witness is still available for the purpose of testifying at the present trial. But, in the case of a deposition, authorized as it is by statute to be taken for subsequent use in the trial, a notion has sometimes been formed that the authorized taking involves an absolute authority to use the deposition, unconditionally and without showing the witness' unavailability at the trial. Such a notion is entirely opposite to the orthodox principle of the common law. A deposition was taken de bene esse, i. e. conditionally. The fundamental notion was that it was taken as a provision against the loss of the evidence at the trial, so that if the witness was after all at the time of the trial available for testifying, the deposition was not needed and was not admissible. But for this principle, all the inquiries, above examined, as to the sufficiency of death, illness, insanity, and the like, would have been meaningless :

1839, Dr. Lushington, in Weguelin v. Weguelin, 2 Curt. Eccl. 263 (affidavit of continuing illness required) : "The very meaning of the phrase de bene esse implied that it was conditional, and that the witness must be re-examined if capable."

1863, Campbell, J., in Dunn v. Dunn, 11 Mich. 292 (appeal in Chancery from a decree dismissing a divorce-bill, based on the verdict in an issue framed for a jury) : "The deposition of E. L. was allowed to be read when she was present in Court. This was also illegal. It is very well settled that the order usually made [in Chancery for trying an issue by jury] that the depositions may be [there] read, is only designed to remove legal objections which might exist by reason of the trial at law being technically a separate proceeding, which, until our Courts were entrusted with jurisdiction both at law and in equity, was in another tribunal. But trials before a jury of issues from Chancery are governed by rules of courts of law, which do not permit depositions to be read when the witness is present."

1892, Maxwell, C. J., in Everett v. Tidball, 34 Nebr. 803, 806, 52 N. W. 816 : "It is the right of the adverse party to have the witness produced in court, unless for some of the causes mentioned above he cannot be present. The appearance of the witness, his manner of testifying, his apparent fairness or interest or bias in the case, are facts for the consideration of the jury in judging of the credibility of the witness. In addition to these, in case the witness testifies to a wilful falsehood, he may more readily be prosecuted for perjury where the parties reside and the facts are known than at some distant point, perhaps in another State."

It is clear, therefore, that if the witness is present in the court-room at the time when his deposition is offered, the deposition is inadmissible, because there is no necessity for resorting to it.¹ So also if the witness is within reach time having afterwards been postponed; admitted, "unless the witness was in court"); 1887, Sax v. Davis, 71 Ia. 406, 32 N. W. 403 (deposition of one temporarily disabled a year before, the trial having been postponed nearly a year; the proponent required to show the witness' inability to attend); 1887, Sells v. Haggard, 21 Nebr. 357, 32 N. W. 66 (non-residence of deponent presumed to continue to the time of trial); 1897, Kaufman v. Caughman, 49 S. C. 159, 27 S. E. 16; 1831, Patapsco Co. v. Southgate, 5 Pet. 616 (absence 100 miles away);

1894, Hennessy v. Ins. Co., 8 Wash. 91, 93, 35 Pac. 585. Contra: 1876, Bowie v. Findly, 55 Ga. 604 (after dismissal of the original case, the cause for the deponent's non-attendance must be shown anew); 1894, Atkinson v. Nash, 56 Minn. 472, 53 N. W. 39 (because the taking officer was not authorized to certify to the cause).

For the time of making objections to a deposition, see ante, §§ 18, 486.

¹ To the express statutory provisions, ante, § 1411, add the following: 1877, Mobile L. Ins. Co. v. Walker, 53 Ala. 290; 1883, Humes v.

of the court-process and is not shown to be unavailable by reason of illness or the like, the deposition is inadmissible.² Where the witness, at some time since trial begun and prior to the moment when his deposition is offered, has been within reach of process, but is not at the precise moment, the deposition's admissibility would seem to depend on whether the witness' absence is due in any respect to bad faith on the proponent's part; but here the rulings are not harmonious.³ The opponent's waiver of cross-examination by failure to attend (ante, §§ 1371, 1378) would not be a waiver of the right to require the witness to be shown unavailable.⁴

A few Courts, ignoring the above principle, take the extraordinary attitude of nullifying the conditional nature of a deposition, by admitting it even when the witness is in the court-room.⁵

O'Bryan, 74 id. 77; 1896, Neilson v. R. Co., 67 Conn. 466, 34 Atl. 820; 1863, Dunn v. Dunn, 11 Mich. 292 (see quotation supra); 1893, Schmitz v. R. Co., 119 Mo. 256, 271, 24 S. W. 472; 1896, Benjamin v. R. Co., 133 id. 274, 34 S. W. 590 (but his arrival in court after the deposition is read does not require it to be struck out); 1896, Barber Co. v. Ullman, 137 id. 543, 38 S. W. 458; 1871, Gerhauser v. Ins. Co., 7 Nev. 189; 1821, State v. McLeod, 1 Hawks 344; 1901, Salley v. R. Co., 62 S. C. 127, 40 S. E. 111; 1901, Texas & P. R. Co. v. Watson, 50 C. C. A. 230, 112 Fed. 402; 1801, Doe v. Adams, 1 Tyl. 197.

² 1702, Anon., 2 Salk. 691 (prior examination, on a rule of Court, of a witness going to sea; if he has not gone when the trial comes on, "he must appear; for the rule was made on supposal of his absence"); 1847, Blagrave v. Blagrave, 1 De G. & Sm. 252, 259 (the deponent must be shown unavailable; distinguishing London v. Perkins, 1734, 3 Bro. P. C. 602, where the ground of decision is obscure); 1885, Baldwin v. R. Co., 68 Ia. 37, 25 N. W. 918 (a statute making shorthand notes admissible, held not to take away the necessity of "showing an excuse for not producing the witness in court"); 1895, Frankhouser v. Neally, 54 Kan. 744, 39 Pac. 700; 1894, Munro v. Callahan, 41 Nebr. 849, 60 N. W. 97; 1859, Morgan v. Halverson, 9 Wis. 271.

³ 1864, Spear v. Coon, 32 Conn. 292 (admitted, where a non-resident deponent was merely "a short time before the trial in the place" of taker's residence); 1849, Hammock v. McBride, 6 Ga. 178 (excluded, where the witness "has resided within the county a sufficient time previous to the trial for his personal attendance to be coerced by process of subpoena," provided the taker had notice thereof); 1887, Waite v. Teeters, 36 Kan. 604, 14 Pac. 146 (deponent residing in another county and therefore not compellable to attend; his temporary presence in the county on the morning of trial, without further showing as to the proponent's ability to secure him, not sufficient to exclude the deposition); 1893, Eby v. Winters, 51 id. 777, 33 Pac. 471 (non-resident deponent, present at the trial; deposition admitted, neither the proponent nor the Court being shown aware of his presence until after the deposition was read, and the deponent being afterwards placed on the stand); 1894, McFarland v. Accid. Ass'n, 124 Mo. 204, 221, 27 S. W. 436 (the witness was present during plaintiff's testimony in chief, then went home; the deposition was offered in rebuttal, though properly testimony in chief; admitted, no collusion being shown); 1896, Benjamin v. R. Co., 133 Mo. 274, 34 S. W. 590 (mere presence in the jurisdiction, at the time of trial, of one whose deposition was taken without it, does not exclude); 1892, Everett v. Tidball, 34 Nebr. 803, 805, 52 N. W. 816 (witness temporarily absent, but for some time before the trial present in the county; excluded); 1843, Starksboro v. Hinesburgh, 15 Vt. 200 (witness present at the time first set for trial, but not available at the adjourned date when his testimony was called for; admitted); 1869, Johnson v. Sargent, 42 id. 195 (same).

⁴ 1829, Carrington v. Cornock, 2 Sim. 567.

That a stipulation expressly waiving attendance is constitutional, see post, § 2591.

⁵ 1894, Western & A. R. Co. v. Bussey, 95 Ga. 584, 23 S. E. 207 (a deposition taken under Code § 3893, admitted without regard to personal inability to attend; the witness here was present in court); 1856, Bradley v. Geiselman, 17 Ill. 571; Frink v. Potter, ib. 408 (but these seem inconsistent with Cook v. Stout, 47 id. 531, cited ante, § 1408, note 6; the statutory wording in this State is likely to mislead); 1898, Edmonson v. R. Co., — Ky. —, 46 S. W. 679; 1899, Louisville v. Muldoon, — id. —, 49 S. W. 791; 1835, Phenix v. Baldwin, 14 Wend. 62, semble; 1850, Ford v. Ford, 11 Humph. 89, 90 (the opponent's statutory right to summon deponents out of the county does not prevent the deposition being received, subject to cross-examination, when the witness is present); 1908, Sherrod v. Hughes, — Tenn. —, 75 S. W. 717 (under Code, § 5626, the deposition may be read by the taker, even though the opponent has produced the witness in court; settling the prior conflict of rulings in this State); 1861, Thayer v. Gallup, 13 Wis. 539, 541 (left to the trial Court's discretion).

§ 1416. Same: Rule not applicable (1) to Deposition of Party-Opponent, or (2) to Deposition containing Self-Contradiction, but applicable (3) to Deposition of Opponent's Witness; and (4) to Former Testimony in Malicious Prosecution. (1) The general principle that the witness must be shown unavailable for testifying in court does not apply to a party's use of his party-opponent's deposition (taken, as is usual, under statutes allowing in common-law courts a process similar to a bill for discovery), — for the simple reason that every statement of an opponent may be used against him as an admission without calling him (ante, § 1049); the opponent's sworn statement, though called a deposition, is no less an admission than any other statement of his:

1888, Brace, J., in Bogie v. Nolan, 96 Mo. 85, 91, 9 S. W. 14: The Legislature . . . did not intend to narrow the scope of inquiry . . . by abrogating that ancient, well-recognized, and hitherto unquestioned rule of evidence that the declarations of a party to the suit may be given in evidence against him. . . . There can be no difference in the character of the evidence whether the declarations are made in the deposition of a party taken in his own case then on trial, his deposition taken in another case to which he was a party, or taken as a witness in a case in which he was not a party and had no direct interest. They are admissible in each case for the same reason, not as the deposition of a witness under the statute, but as the declaration of a party to the suit."¹

But this allowance of the use of a party's deposition as an admission presupposes that it is the party-opponent's; a party's statements offered in his own favor are of course not admissions, and hence there is no reason why a party should be allowed to put in his own deposition instead of taking the stand.²

(2) So also the use of a deposition to show in it a contrary statement of the deponent, who has already testified on the stand, is allowable even though the witness be present and available; for the deposition is here used not as substantive testimony (ante, § 1018), but only as containing a statement inconsistent with the same witness' testimony already given.³

(3) But the use of the deposition of an opponent's witness — i. e. a deposition taken by the opponent but not used by him — which, as already noted, is in other respects allowable (ante, § 1389), is not the use of an opponent's admission. It is offered as the substantive testimony of that witness, whose testimony has not as yet been heard. There is therefore no reason why one

¹ Accord: 1887, Newell v. Desmond, 74 Cal. 46, 15 Pac. 369 (under §§ 2021, 2032, plaintiff's deposition taken by defendant may be read, though plaintiff be present); 1897, Adams v. Weaver, 117 id. 421, 48 Pac. 972; 1880, Moore v. Brown, 23 Kan. 269; 1855, Kritzer v. Smith, 21 Mo. 296; 1858, Charleston v. Hunt, 27 id. 34; 1882, Pomeroy v. Benton, 77 id. 64, 82; 1885, Priest v. Way, 87 id. 16, 28 (contra); 1888, Bogie v. Nolan, 96 id. 85, 9 S. W. 14 (overruling the preceding case; see quotation supra); 1903, Profile & F. H. Co. v. Bickford, — N. H. —, 54 Atl. 699; 1885, Schmick v. Noel 64 Tex. 406, 408; 1891, Lee v. Hill, 87

Va. 497, 504, 12 S. E. 1052, semble (testimony of a now disqualified opponent at a former trial); 1894, Denny v. Sayward, 10 Wash. 422, 428, 39 Pac. 119.

² 1895, State v. Oliver, 55 Kan. 711, 41 Pac. 954 (former testimony); 1896, Moore v. Palmer, 14 Wash. 134, 44 Pac. 142 (even though originally taken by opponent; but semble, if the party had died or become incompetent, the deposition of course would be admissible). Contra, but erroneous: 1890, Johnson v. McDuffee, 83 Cal. 30, 23 Pac. 214.

³ 1896, People v. Hawley, 111 Cal. 78, 43 Pac. 404.

party rather than the other should be allowed to resort to a deposition without showing the deponent unavailable in person; and this the non-taker, as well as the taker, must do before using it:

1822, Tilghman, C. J., in Gordon v. Little, 8 S. & R. 532, 548: "The defendants say that it was the business of the plaintiff [who took the deposition] to subpoena his own witness, and therefore they did not do it. But in this they were wrong. The plaintiff might not like the evidence, and, if he did not, he was under no obligation to summon the witness. If the defendant thought this testimony favorable to himself, it was his business to secure it, by taking out a subpoena for the witness and endeavoring to procure his personal attendance."

1854, Watkins, C. J., in Sexton v. Brock, 15 Ark. 345, 349: "It is argued that this [filing for security] was also designed to make them common property, so as to entitle either party to use them at pleasure. . . . But all depositions in common-law cases are taken de bene esse, and can only be read as if the witnesses 'were present and examined in open court,'—as, if it be shown the witness is dead, sick, or infirm, or residing without the county, and the like, so as to excuse his personal attendance; . . . [they are] but a substitute, and an imperfect one, for the personal attendance of the witness when that is impossible or inconvenient to be obtained. . . . Depositions are not in the first instance original evidence, though a substitute for it; the party taking it upon due notice may be entitled, upon showing the death, infirmity, or absence of the witness from the county, to read it. There is no reason, from the necessity of the case, why the opposite party, if he desired the testimony, could not have procured it by deposition or enforced the attendance of the witness. . . . [In this case, the plaintiff was wrongly allowed to read a deposition, filed by the opponent,] without showing any compliance with the conditions prescribed by statute or any effort to procure the attendance of the witnesses by subpoena."

Distinguish, however, from the above principle, the use of a deposition or affidavit of an opponent's witness used and adopted by the opponent on a former occasion. So far as the opponent has thus by adoption made it his own statement, it may be used as the opponent's admission (on the principle examined ante, § 1075), and the deponent therefore need not be shown unavailable.

(4) Where in malicious prosecution the former testimony of a witness on the original prosecution is offered, the present principle is no less applicable than in other cases, and the witness must be shown to be deceased or otherwise unavailable.⁴ The apparent exception, early established, that the now defendant's own former testimony could be used,⁵ serves merely to "prove

⁴ 1876, Fitch v. Murray, Wood Man. 74, 89 (admissible, if the witness is absent); 1865, Chapman v. Dodd, 10 Minn. 350, 357 (malicious prosecution; magistrate's report of the testimony before him, excluded, the witnesses not being shown unavailable; good opinion, by McMillan, J.); 1830, Burt v. Place, 4 Wend. 591 (cited infra); 1827, Richards v. Foulke, 3 Oh. 52 (the testimony of other witnesses than the defendant, at the former trial, excluded, as being merely "secondary evidence").

The objection of difference of parties and issues ante, § 1387 might also be raised; but the difference does not seem to be substantial.

⁵ 1705, Johnson v. Browning, 6 Mod. 216

(L. C. J. Holt admitted the testimony of the now defendant's wife, given at the former trial, she being now disqualified; "for otherwise, one that should be robbed, etc., would be under an intolerable mischief; for if he prosecuted for such robbery, etc., and the party should at any rate be acquitted, the prosecutor would be liable to an action for malicious prosecution, without the possibility of making a good defence"); 1767, Buller, Trials at Nisi Prius, 19; 1810, Swift, Evidence (Conn.) 131; 1830, Burt v. Place, 4 Wend. 591, 596, 601 (the witnesses not being deceased, the defendant was not allowed to prove the testimony delivered for him at the prior trial, as evidence of probable cause; but the rule"; for at common law the now defendant would have been disqualified as a witness in the second trial, and thus he would be unavailable as a witness (on the principle of § 1409, ante). It has, however, sometimes been thought that the former testimony might be used (without accounting for the witnesses) not as testimony of the facts recited in it, but as evidence of the grounds of belief of the then prosecutor, now the defendant (on the principle of § 258, ante).⁶ It is true, in some varieties of the action for malicious prosecution, that this use would be correct.⁷ But ordinarily the theory of it is not applicable, because testimony delivered after prosecution begun cannot be said to have served as probable ground for a belief which must have existed before prosecution begun.⁸

§ 1417. Same: Exceptions to the Rule for (1) Chancery and analogous Proceedings, (2) Commissions by Dedimus Potestatem, (3) Depositions in Perpetuam Memoriam; (4) Will-Probate; (5) Bastardy Complaints. (1) According to the traditional chancery practice, all evidence was taken and presented to the Court of Chancery in the form of written depositions; there was no requirement of viva voce testimony on the trial. The chancery practice is not within the present purview. But in a few jurisdictions such a practice appears to have been introduced by statute, in certain cases, for common-law trials.¹ So far as such a procedure has been expressly sanctioned by statute, it is clear that the trial may proceed upon written depositions without showing the deponent unavailable in person. But certainly this effect should not be judicially attributed to a statute by mere implication. The fragmentary introduction of such chancery practice into a common-law trial is an unfortunate measure. The impropriety of the unfair discrimination and of the

"where the prosecution alleged to have been malicious was for a crime, and the defendant was a witness," he would be allowed to "show what was his testimony"; 1798, Moody v. Pender, 2 Hayw. N. C. 29 ("defendant's former testimony admitted, on the ground of necessity; otherwise, perhaps, "had any other witness sworn to the same facts and circumstances"); 1813, Scott v. Wilson, Cooke Tenn. 315 (the testimony of the now defendant, given at the former trial, may be admitted, even concerning facts not "alone confined to his knowledge," on the ground of necessity). Presumably this exception would no longer be law, the defendant being now a qualified witness.

⁶ 1903, Kansas & T. Coal Co. v. Galloway, — Ark. —, 74 S. W. 521 (malicious prosecution by arresting for contempt of an injunction; testimony of E. in the contempt proceedings allowed to be proved without calling E.; good opinion by Bunn, C. J.); 1849, Bacon v. Towne, 4 Cush. 217, 238 (malicious prosecution before magistrate; testimony before the magistrate admitted, because "the knowledge that he would so testify might have been one of the grounds on which the defendants made their complaint").

⁷ 1814, Burley v. Bethune, 5 Taunt. 580 (in an action against a magistrate for malicious conviction without probable cause, the testimony before the magistrate, being material, may be proved; whether without producing the witnesses, not decided).

⁸ 1844, Newton v. Rowe, 1 C. & K. 616 (libel in charging the plaintiff with falsely and maliciously accusing R.; plea, truth; testimony before the magistrates, held not material for the defendant to show the plaintiff's malice); 1865, McMillan, J., in Chapman v. Dodd, 10 Minn. 350, 358 ("The testimony delivered upon the hearing could not have influenced the action of the prosecution in commencing the proceedings, for at that time it had no existence"); 1827, Richards v. Foulke, 3 Oh. 52 (the question to be decided being that of probable cause, "this the jury were required to decide, not upon the evidence given before the justice, but upon the facts of the case and the defendant's knowledge of these facts"); 1834, Huidekoper v. Cotton, 3 Watts 56, 58.

No doubt, when sometimes it has been said that the "evidence" in the first trial is also admissible in the second one, it was merely meant that the facts to be proved would be the same in the latter; e. g. 1902, Perkins v. Spaulding, 182 Mass. 218, 65 N. E. 72.

¹ Ante, § 1415, note.

underlying policy of the typical statutes of this class has already been noticed (ante, § 1407).

(2) Under the *Federal statutes*² a deposition taken de bene esse cannot be used unless the witness is shown to be unavailable in one of the specified ways.³ Even under the Act of 1892 (ante, § 1381) empowering Federal Courts to order the taking of depositions "in the mode prescribed by the laws of the States in which the courts are held,"⁴ it is ruled that, even in a State in which depositions may be used without showing the witness unavailable, such a showing must still be made according to the Federal statute.⁵ But the depositions under the dedimus potestatem clause⁶ stand upon a different footing. These are taken under a commission, supposed to be grantable wherever it is necessary to prevent a failure or delay of justice; and, when once allowed to be taken, are unconditionally admissible; so that there is no need at the trial to account for the witness as unavailable.⁷ It does not appear that this anomalous theory is applied in other jurisdictions to dedimus potestatem depositions.

(3) Depositions in perpetuam memoriam ought to stand on precisely the same footing as other depositions, i. e. they are taken conditionally, to be used at the trial only in case the witness is not available.⁸ Yet the contrary view has occasionally been hinted at judicially,⁹ or sanctioned by statute.¹⁰

(4) In some States the statutes providing for a jury trial or chancery hearing, on appeal from the preliminary probate of a will in the probate court, are so worded that the formal (and usually ex parte) testimony of the subscribing witnesses delivered and reduced to writing at the preliminary probate, is receivable absolutely at the later trial, i. e. without accounting for the witnesses' absence.¹¹ But this is anomalous and accidental.

² U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 865; quoted ante, § 1411.

³ 1831, Patasco Co. v. Southgate, 5 Pet. 616; and the cases in note 5.

⁴ St. 1892, c. 14, Mar. 9, 27 Stats. 7 ("in addition to the mode of taking the depositions of witnesses in causes pending at law or equity in the district and circuit courts of the United States, it shall be lawful to take depositions or testimony of witnesses in the mode prescribed by the laws of the State in which the courts are held").

⁵ 1895, Mulcahey v. R. Co., 69 Fed. 172; 1899, Texas & P. R. Co. v. Wilder, 35 C. C. A. 105, 92 Fed. 953 (depositions taken in a State Court cannot be used on removal in a Federal Court unless the witness is unavailable under § 865, in spite of St. March 9, 1892). Compare the ruling cited in § 1381, ante.

⁶ U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 866, quoted ante, § 1411.

⁷ 1819, Sergeant v. Biddle, 4 Wheat. 511; 1875, Jones v. R. Co., 3 Sawyer 527, Deady, J. Compare Rhoades v. Selim, 4 Wash. C. C. 724 (1827), under a rule of Court.

⁸ 1618-19, Order in Chancery, No. 73, Bacon, L. C. ("No benefit shall be taken of the deposition of such witnesses in case they may be brought viva voce upon the trial, but only to be used in case of death before the trial, or age or impotence [preventing attendance], or absence out of the realm at the trial"); 1720, Dorset v. Girdler, Finch Prec. Ch. 532 ("these depositions cannot be made use of so long as the witnesses are living and may be had to be examined before a jury"); 1732, Benson v. Olive, 2 Stra. 919; 1817, Morrison v. Arnold, 19 Ves. Jr. 672; 1856, Booker v. Booker, 20 Ga. 777, 780.

⁹ 1766, Apthorp v. Eyrea, 1 Quincy 229 (by three judges to two; but chiefly because it was treated as an affidavit and the issue was not to a jury).

¹⁰ E. g. in Michigan, cited ante, § 1412.

¹¹ The statutes are placed ante, §§ 1411, 1413; some of the rulings applying them are as follows: 1851, Rigg v. Wilton, 13 Ill. 15, 18; 1897, Harp v. Parr, 168 id. 459, 48 N. E. 113 (the statute applied; but here one subscribing witness was called at the contest in chancery); 1899, Entwistle v. Meikle, 180 id. 9, 54 N. E. 217; 1903, Baker v. Baker, 202 id. 595, 67 N. E. 410 (at the chancery contest, the "certificate of the oath" of witnesses at the first probate may be either in affidavit form or in the form of questions and answers).

(5) Similarly, the mother's testimony before the magistrate in a bastardy complaint is sometimes by statute made absolutely receivable at the later and regular trial; ¹² though most statutes expressly condition this on the mother's disease or insanity.

§ 1418. Anomalous Jurisdictions in which No Necessity suffices to admit. There may be jurisdictions in which no cause whatever of unavailability will suffice to admit a deposition or former testimony. The reasons for this have already been noted, but may here be summarized. (1) So far as the constitutional provision securing the right of confrontation to an accused person is held, as it erroneously is in some jurisdictions (ante, § 1398), to preclude the use of depositions or former testimony by the prosecution, it is obvious that no cause, even the witness' death, will suffice to admit them. (2) So far as the statute has not empowered the Court to order the taking of depositions in a given class of cases, a deposition taken in such a case is unlawfully taken and has therefore no legal existence (ante, § 1401); such a deposition therefore is inadmissible.¹

¹² 1841, Walker v. State, 6 Blackf. 1, 4; 1874, Hoff v. Fisher, 26 Oh. St. 8; and cases and statutes cited ante, § 1413.

Compare the rule about accusations in travail (ante, § 1141).

¹ 1899, State v. Potter, — Ida. —, 57 Pac. 431 (depositions taken on preliminary examination by the State, not to be used at all at the trial, because not expressly authorized by statute; the opinion ignores the common-law practice, ante, § 1375; this is in truth not a deposition at all, but testimony at a former trial); 1886, Kaelin v. Com., 84 Ky. 354, 367, 1 S. W. 594 (deposition, taken by the accused, of a person abroad, not authorized by statute; excluded).

SUB-TITLE II: EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE.

INTRODUCTORY.

CHAPTER XLVI

§ 1420. Principle of the Exceptions to the Hearsay Rule.

§ 1421. First Principle: Necessity.

§ 1422. Second Principle: Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness.

§ 1423. Incomplete Application of the Two Principles.

§ 1424. Witness-Qualifications, and other Rules, also to be applied to Statements admitted under these Exceptions.

§ 1425. Outline of Topics for each Exception.

§ 1426. Order of the Exceptions.

§ 1420. Principle of the Exceptions to the Hearsay Rule. The purpose and reason of the Hearsay rule is the key to the exceptions to it. The theory of the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1362) is that the many possible sources of inaccuracy and untrustworthiness which may lie underneath the bare untested assertion of a witness can best be brought to light and exposed, if they exist, by the test of cross-examination. But this test or security may in a given instance be superfluous; it may be sufficiently clear, in that instance, that the statement offered is free from the risk of inaccuracy and untrustworthiness, so that the test of cross-examination would be a work of supererogation. Moreover, the test may be impossible of employment — for example, by reason of the death of the declarant —, so that, if his testimony is to be used at all, there is a necessity for taking it in the untested shape. These two considerations — a Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness, and a Necessity for the evidence — may be examined more closely, taking first the latter.

(1) Where the test of cross-examination is impossible of application, by reason of the declarant's death or some other cause rendering him now unavailable as a witness on the stand, we are faced with the alternatives of receiving his statements without that test, or of leaving his knowledge altogether unutilized; and the question arises whether the interests of truth would suffer more by adopting the latter or the former alternative. Whatever might be thought of the general policy of choosing the former alternative without any further requirement, it is clear at any rate that, so far as in a given instance some substitute for cross-examination is found to have been present, there is ground for making an exception. The mere necessity alone of taking the untested statement, instead of none at all, might not suffice; but if, to this necessity, there is added a situation in which some degree of trustworthiness more than the ordinary can be predicated of the statement, there is reason for admitting it as not merely the best that can be got from that witness, but better than could ordinarily be expected without the test of cross-examination. We thus come to consider the second essential element.

(2) There are many situations in which it can be easily seen that such a required test would add little as a security, because its purposes had been already substantially accomplished. If a statement has been made under such circumstances that even a sceptical caution would look upon it as trustworthy (in the ordinary instance), in a high degree of probability, it would be pedantic to insist on a test whose chief object is already secured. Supposing that such a situation exists, the statement could properly be received, especially if no other evidence from that person was now available. The law of evidence properly assumes that such situations can and do exist, and the exceptions to the Hearsay rule are concerned with defining them.

A perception of these two principles and their combined value has been responsible for most of the Hearsay exceptions. Each exception, to be sure, has come into existence and been maintained independently and amid considerations peculiar to itself alone. There has been no comprehensive carrying-out of a system of principles. Yet the results may be co-ordinated under those two heads. There has rarely been any judicial summing-up of the principles; yet their existence has been fully perceived and often judicially stated. The following utterances illustrate this recognition:

1876, Jessel, M. R., in Sugden v. St. Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 154: "So inconvenient was the law upon this subject, so frequently has it shut out the only obtainable evidence, so frequently would it have caused a most crying and intolerable injustice, that a large number of exceptions have been made to the general rule. . . . Now I take it the principle which underlies all these exceptions is the same. In the first place, the case must be one in which it is difficult to obtain other evidence; for no doubt the ground for admitting the exceptions was that very difficulty. In the next place, the declarant must be disinterested; that is, disinterested in the sense that the declaration was not made in favor of his interest. And, thirdly, the declaration must be made before dispute or litigation, so that it was made without bias on account of the existence of a dispute or litigation which the declarant might be supposed to favor. Lastly, and this appears to me one of the strongest reasons for admitting it, the declarant must have had peculiar means of knowledge not possessed in ordinary cases.¹ Now all these reasons exist in testifying both as to matters of public and general interest, and as to matters of pedigree, and some, if not all of them, exist in the other cases to which I have referred."

1810, Swift, C. J., Evidence, 121: "The law has therefore very wisely rejected all such evidence, excepting where it is impossible in the nature of things to obtain any other, and where this is sufficient to establish the matter in question."

1811, Tilghman, C. J., in Garwood v. Dennis, 4 Binney 328: "It is objected that, however impressive the declaration of a man of character may be, yet the law admits the word of no one in evidence without oath. The general rule certainly is so; but subject to relaxation in cases of necessity or extreme inconvenience."

1826, Ewing, C. J., in Westfield v. Warren, 8 N. J. L. 251; "The general rule of evidence excludes all hearsay. From necessity and from the impracticability, in some instances, of other proof, exceptions to this rule have been made."

1852, Johnson, C. J., in Cornelius v. State, 12 Ark. 804 (stating that hearsay lacks the securities of oath and cross-examination): "Where, however, the particular circumstances of the case are such as to afford a presumption that the hearsay evidence is true, it is then admissible."

¹ The learned judge, in this fourth element, is referring merely to the requirement that the hearsay witness must possess the ordinary knowl-

edges-qualifications of every witness. This is therefore not peculiar to the Hearsay exceptions (post, § 1424).

1881, Loomis, J., in Southwest School District v. Williams, 48 Conn. 507: "The law does not dispense with the sanction of an oath and the test of cross-examination as a prerequisite for the admission of verbal testimony, unless it discovers in the nature of the case some other sanction or test deemed equivalent for ascertaining the truth."²

§ 1421. First Principle: Necessity. The scope of the first principle may be briefly indicated by terming it the Necessity principle. It implies that since we shall lose the benefit of the evidence entirely unless we accept it untested, there is thus a greater or less necessity for receiving it. The reason why we shall otherwise lose it may be one of two. (1) The person whose assertion is offered may now be dead, or out of the jurisdiction, or insane, or otherwise unavailable for the purpose of testing. This is the commoner and more palpable reason. It is found in the exception for Dying Declarations and in the five ensuing ones. The principle is not always fully and consistently carried out in the rules; but the general notion is clear and unmistakable, and it is acknowledged in these exceptions with more or less directness and strictness. (2) The assertion may be such that we cannot expect, again or at this time, to get evidence of the same value from the same or other sources. This appears more or less fully in the exception for Spontaneous Declarations, for Reputation, and in part elsewhere. Here we are not threatened (as in the first case) with the entire loss of a person's evidence, but merely of some valuable source of evidence. The necessity is not so great; perhaps hardly a necessity, only an expediency or convenience, can be predicated. But the principle is the same.

§ 1422. Second Principle: Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness. The second principle, which, combined with the first, satisfies us to accept the evidence untested, is in the nature of a practicable substitute for the ordinary test of cross-examination. We see that under certain circumstances the probability of accuracy and trustworthiness of statement is practically sufficient, if not quite equivalent to that of statements tested in the conventional manner. This circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness is found in a variety of circumstances sanctioned by judicial practice; and it is usually from one of these salient circumstances that the exception takes its name. There is no comprehensive attempt to secure uniformity in the degree of trustworthiness which these circumstances presuppose. It is merely that common sense and experience have from time to time pointed them out as practically adequate substitutes for the ordinary test, at least, in view of the necessity of the situation.

May we, however, generalize any further among the different exceptions and find any more detailed principles involving the reasons why these circumstances suffice as substitutes? Though no judicial generalizations have been made, there is ample authority in judicial utterances for naming the following different classes of reasons underlying the exceptions:

² Mr. Starkie (Evidence, I, 45), in 1824, was the first writer to state plainly the philosophy of the Exceptions.

- a.* Where the circumstances are such that a sincere and accurate statement would naturally be uttered, and no plan of falsification be formed ;
- b.* Where, even though a desire to falsify might present itself, other considerations, such as the danger of easy detection or the fear of punishment, would probably counteract its force ;
- c.* Where the statement was made under such conditions of publicity that an error, if it had occurred, would probably have been detected and corrected.

As to these, it may be said, first, it is not always that an exception is founded merely on a single one of these considerations. Often it rests on the operation, in different degrees, of two of them. For example, the exceptions for Declarations of Mental Condition, Spontaneous Declarations, and Declarations against Interest rest entirely on Reason a ; while the exception for Declarations about Family History (Pedigree) rests largely upon Reason a, though partly also on Reason c. The exception for Dying Declarations rests entirely on Reason b (the fear of divine punishment). The exception for Regular Entries rests chiefly on Reason b, though partly also on Reasons a and c. The exception for Official Statements rests chiefly on Reasons b and c, though a also enters. Mixed considerations have thus often prevailed. Secondly, the exceptions have been established casually in the light of practical good sense, and with little or no effort (except in modern times) at generalization or comprehensive planning. The Courts have had in mind merely to sanction certain situations as a sufficient guarantee of trustworthiness. As elsewhere in the development of Anglo-American law generally, they have not (until recently) looked ahead, or behind, or about, to make comparisons and obtain unity of theory. Nevertheless, in analyzing the notions on which the exceptions have proceeded, we may distinguish clearly the three separate types of reason above set forth. This is no more than saying that the exceptions are and were to that extent rational; for wherever a reason is given for a result, it is possible to analyze and classify the results according to the nature of the reason.¹

§ 1423. Incomplete Application of the Two Principles. These two principles — Necessity and Trustworthiness — are only imperfectly carried out in the detailed rules under the exceptions. It would be strange if it were otherwise, in a legal system formed as ours is, partly on precedent and partly on principle, at the hands of judges of varying disposition and training. The two principles are not applied with equal strictness in every exception; sometimes one, sometimes the other, has been chiefly in mind. In one or two instances one of them is practically lacking. Nevertheless they play a fundamental part. It is impossible without them to understand the exceptions. In these principles is contained whatever of reason underlies the exceptions. What does not present itself as an application of them is the result of mere precedent, or tradition, or arbitrariness. It is the proper office of an expounder of the law of evidence to note this element of living principle, and to distinguish its applications from rulings which are merely arbitrary. It is through the failure to do this strictly that a general appearance of unreason and unpracticalness has been given to the Hearsay rule and its exceptions. In the following expositions of the exceptions, the mode of treatment will consist in clearly separating that which can be directly placed to the credit of these two leading principles from that which remains as mere precedent and tradition. It may be affirmed that this residuum is on the whole decidedly a minor portion.

¹ The judicial utterances illustrating the above reasons will be found under the several exceptions.

In making this separation, regard must strictly be had to the judicial utterances. There should be no forcing, no infusion of that which cannot be found in the authorities. The office of the commentator is to expound rules of law as he finds them declared and enforced; and, where he finds a rule without a principle, to note this with equal fidelity. But this fidelity is wanting where he neglects to distinguish between rules which rest on principle and rules which do not. What the judges supply is the rule and its principle if any. What the commentator is usually left to supply is a systematic analysis and a comprehensive grouping; and this must not merely be forgiven to him,—it must be demanded of him.¹

§ 1424. Witness-Qualifications, and other Rules, also to be applied to Statements admitted under the Exceptions. The Hearsay rule is merely an additional test or safeguard to be applied to testimonial evidence otherwise admissible. The admission of hearsay statements, by way of exception to the rule, therefore presupposes that the assertor possessed the qualifications of a witness (ante, §§ 483-721) in regard to knowledge and the like. These qualifications are fundamental as rules of relevancy, and can never be dispensed with.¹ Thus these extrajudicial statements may be inadmissible because of their failure to fulfil the ordinary rules about qualifications, even though they meet the requirements of a hearsay exception. For example, in the Pedigree Exception there are rules about membership in the family which rest solely on the necessity of knowledge in the person whose statement is offered,—i. e. a rule of Testimonial Qualifications. However, in applying these principles to hearsay exceptions, special situations arise, and the rules that depend upon merely the usual testimonial qualifications for witnesses on the stand come naturally in practice to be bound up with the rules about hearsay exceptions as special details of those exceptions. In the following chapters, for clear-

¹ How little the judges can be expected to supply this element is seen in the present instance by the fact that until the Master of the Rolls, Sir George Jessel, uttered his memorable generalization, in 1876 (ante, § 1420), nothing of the same sort had been given us by a judge. Some dozen distinct exceptions are expounded in the following chapters; but upon even such an elementary point as the number of the exceptions there has been a total absence of correct judicial appreciation. The following enumerations have been made: Mansfield, C. J., in 4 Camp. 401 (1811), two; Best, C. J., in 2 Moo. & R. 25 (1828), two; Lord Campbell, in 11

Cl. & F. 85 (1844), three; Mellor, J., in L. R. 2 Q. B. 326 (1867), two; Lord Blackburn, in 5 App. Cas. 623 (1880), and Brett, M. R., in 13 Q. B. D. 818 (1884), five; Marshall, C. J., in 7 Cranch 295 (1813), five; Skinner, J., in 17 Ill. 20 (1855) and McGowan, J., in 13 N. C. n. s. 462, one in criminal cases.

² 1881, Lord Blackburn, in Dysart Peerage Case, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 489, 504: It is impossible to say that if a person said something, and could not himself if alive have been permitted to give testimony to prove it, he can by dying render that statement admissible. I think that is a self-evident proposition."

ness' sake and convenience of reference, these rules involving the application of ordinary testimonial qualifications will be examined at the same time, instead of being relegated to the general treatment of those principles. It must be understood, however, that the principles involved have in their nature nothing to do with the Hearsay rule.

For similar reasons, testimony received under a hearsay exception being none the less testimony, the opponent may desire to discredit or to corroborate the declarant in the ways appropriate to discrediting or corroborating an ordinary witness (ante, §§ 875-1144). The application of such principles to hearsay exceptions can most conveniently be dealt with under the different exceptions.

In the same way, the allowance of an exception to the Hearsay rule does not of itself dispense with the application of the other Auxiliary Rules of Policy (ante, § 1171), of which the Hearsay rule is only one. For example, when a written entry is offered under an exception to the Hearsay rule, the rule about Producing the Original of a Document (ante, § 1177) comes into application and must be observed; in offering a dying declaration, the rule of Completeness (post, § 2095) may come into play; and the rules of Testimonial Preference (ante, §§ 1286, 1325, 1335, 1345) are often invoked throughout the exceptions. These, with the rule of Authentication (post, §§ 2129-2169) and the rule of Integration or Parol Evidence (post, § 2400) are the auxiliary rules that find most frequent application to testimony admitted under hearsay exceptions. For purposes of practical convenience, their application here will be treated under the different exceptions, instead of under the heads of the respective auxiliary rules.

§ 1425. Outline of Topics of each Exception. Under each exception, then, the general order of topics will be as follows:

- a. The Necessity principle, and its applications in the Exception in hand;
- b. The principle of a Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness, and its applications in the Exception in hand;
- c. The rules based on the independent principles of Testimonial Qualifications, Primariness, Authentication, and the like, as applied to the class of statements admitted; and, finally,
- d. Arbitrary limitations and modifications not resting on any principle whatever.

This order of treatment must occasionally be slightly varied, but it serves as a general plan to be followed.

§ 1426. Order of the Exceptions. Owing to the mode of development of the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1364), it is scarcely possible to predicate a definite order of historical origin for the exceptions to the rule; we merely find that, after the time that the rule comes to be established (the early 1700s), certain classes of hearsay statements continued to be received as before. Recorded cases under some of these classes are found earlier in some instances than in others, but this, for the above reason, does not entitle us to say that such statements, as exceptions to the rule, are older in recognition than the others. It can be said definitely that most of the exceptions were recognized during the 1700s, and that the few remaining ones were not recognized until the 1800s; but that is all.

A more profitable order of arrangement is one based upon the differing nature of the Necessity principle (ante, § 1421) as recognized in the different exceptions. In several of them, the notion of Necessity is satisfied only where the particular declarant is shown to be personally unavailable as a witness, by reason of death or the like. In the others, the resort to the hearsay statement is allowed without showing the personal unavailability of the declarant at all. A grouping based on this radical difference seems to be the only one in any way dictated by the nature of the exceptions; and within these two groups the further arrangement may be left to be determined merely by convenience of orderly exposition.

The arrangement, then, is as follows, the first six forming the first group above mentioned, and the seventh bridging the gap to the remaining seven, which fall into the second group:

1. Dying Declarations; 2. Statements against Interest; 3. Declarations about Family History; 4. Attestation of a Subscribing Witness; 5. Regular Entries in the Course of Business; 6. Sundry Statements of Deceased Persons; 7. Reputation; 8. Official Statements; 9. Learned Treatises; 10. Sundry Commercial Documents; 11. Affidavits; 12. Statements by a Voter; 13. Declarations of a Mental Condition; 14. Spontaneous Exclamations.

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE.

TOPIC I: DYING DECLARATIONS.

CHAPTER XLVII.

§ 1430. History; Statutes.

1. The Necessity Principle.

§ 1431. Scope of the Principle.

§ 1432. Rule Applicable in certain Criminal Cases only.

§ 1433. Death in Question must be Declarant's.

§ 1434. Circumstances of the Death related.

§ 1435. Further Limitations rejected.

§ 1436. Foregoing Limitations Improper.

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee.

§ 1438. In general: Solemnity of the Situation.

§ 1439. Consciousness of the Approach of Death; Subsequent Confirmation.

§ 1440. Certainty of Death.

§ 1441. Speediness of Death.

§ 1442. Consciousness of Approaching Death; how determined.

§ 1443. Revengeful Feelings; Theological Belief.

3. Testimonial Qualifications, and Other Independent Rules of Evidence.

§ 1445. Testimonial Qualifications (Infamy, Insanity, Interest, Recollection, Leading Questions, Written Declarations, etc.).

§ 1446. Testimonial Impeachment and Rehabilitation.

§ 1447. Rule against Opinion Evidence.

§ 1448. Rule of Completeness.

§ 1449. Rule of Producing Original of a Document.

§ 1450. Rule of Preferring Written Testimony.

§ 1451. Judge and Jury.

§ 1452. Declarations usable by Either Party.

§ 1430. History. This exception, as such, dates back as far as the first half of the 1700s, — the period when the hearsay rule was coming to be systematically and strictly enforced (ante, § 1364) and at the same time certain excepted cases were coming to be recognized and defined. The ruling of Lord Mansfield in Wright v. Littler, in 1761 (post, § 1431), is generally taken as the leading early case, though the notion that special trust may be imposed in deathbed statements was already long understood.¹

The exception has in some jurisdictions been recognized by statutes.²

¹ Compare Shakespeare's allusion, about 1595, quoted post, § 1438. The earliest reported passages in trials seem to be the following: 1603, Sir Walter Raleigh's Trial, Jardine Crim. Tr., I, 435 (the accused argues, "Besides, a dying man is ever presumed to speak the truth"); s. c. 2 How. St. Tr. 18 (Serjt. Philips: "Nemo moriturus presumitur mentiri"); 1678, Earl of Pembroke's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 1309, 1335 (murder; the deceased's statements after the assault though apparently not made in consciousness of approaching death, were received, the counsel promising that "the sayings of a dying man in such circumstances are remarkable"); 1691, Lord Mohun's Trial, 12 id. 967, 975, 987 (murder); 1722, R. v. Reason, 16 id. 24 ff.; 1760, Earl Ferrers' Trial, 19 id. 918, 936 (described by counsel as "the declarations of the deceased, while a dying man, and after the stroke is given"); 1765, Lord Byron's Trial, ib. 1191, 1197, 1201, 1205 (the dying explanations of Lord Byron's antagonist, Mr. Chaworth, in the duel); 1791, R. v. Dingler, Leach Cr. C. 300, Gould, J.; 1793, R. v. Callaghan, McNally, Evidence 385; Downs, J.; 1793, R. v. Trant, ib. 385, Downs, J.; 1800, R. v. Minton, ib. 386.

² Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1870, par. 4 ("in criminal actions, the act or declaration of a dying person, made under a sense of impending death, respecting the cause of death," is admissible); Ga. Cr. Code 1895, § 1000 ("made by any person in the article of death, who is conscious of his condition, as to the cause of his death and the person who killed him," admissible in evidence "in a prosecution for homicide"); Mont. C. C. P. 1895, § 3146, par. 4 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); Or. C. C. P. 1892, § 706, par. 4 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); Tex. C. Cr. P. 1895, § 788 ("The dying declarations of a deceased person may be offered in evidence, either for or against a defendant charged with the homicide of such deceased person, under the restrictions hereafter provided. To render the declarations of the deceased competent evidence, it must be satisfactorily proved:

These, however, were seldom intended to alter in substance the details of the common-law rule.³

1. The Necessity Principle.

§ 1431. Scope of the Principle. The requirements of this principle, as generally accepted in the beginning, were simple. The notion was that, since the witness had died, there was a necessity for taking his only available trustworthy statements,—his dying declarations. The necessity, then, lay simply in the death of the witness, and that was all that need be shown. Conceivably, there might still be a necessity if the witness, though supposed to be dying, had recovered and had since left the jurisdiction, but this case had never occurred, and the question never arose.

By the 1800s, however, another interpretation of the Necessity principle had arisen, and this came to prevail. It is artificial and inconsistent with precedent and with itself, and its rules are now in fact nothing more than arbitrary. Nevertheless, as they purport to be logical deductions from a supposed principle, they must be treated as rational rules, and not as merely arbitrary limitations.

1. First, then, the original, orthodox, and only legitimate limitation was that the witness whose declarations it was desired to use should be unavailable by death. This is amply shown by the cases up to the beginning of the 1800s,¹ as well as by the treatises of the same period.² In particular,

1, that at the time of making such declaration he was conscious of approaching death and believed there was no hope of recovery; 2, that such declaration was voluntarily made, and not through the persuasion of any person; 3, that such declaration was not made in answer to interrogatories calculated to lead the deceased to make any particular statement; 4, that he was of sane mind at the time of making the declaration").

² For statutes altering specific details, see post, § 1432.

¹ 1761, Wright v. Littler, 3 Burr. 1244 (in an action of ejectment, the genuineness of a will being in issue, evidence was received by Mansfield, L. C. J., that one of the subscribing witnesses on his deathbed declared it a forgery, the other judges concurring); 1769, Camden, L. C., and Mansfield, L. C. J., in the Douglas Peerage Case, 2 Hargr. Collect. Jurid. 387, 389, 397 (receiving "dying declarations" of Lady Douglas as to the paternity of the claimant, apparently on a general principle; "Would she have died with a lie in her mouth and perjury in her right hand?"); 1784, R. v. Drummond, Leach Cr. L. 4th ed., 337 (on an indictment for robbery, the dying confession of another person, recently executed, that he was the true robber, was rejected solely because of the deceased's incompetence as a convict); ante 1805, Anon., cited in 6 East 195, per Ellenborough, L. C. J., as occurring under Heath, J. (action on a bond; dying confession of forgery by a witness admitted); approved (1805) by Ellenborough, L. C. J., ubi supra, (1808) by the same, in 1 Camp. 210; 1836, Stobart v. Dryden, 1 M. & W. 615 (Parke, B.: "Both then [coram Lord Mansfield] and at the time of the Nisi Prius trial before Mr. Justice Heath, an opinion prevailed (which is now properly exploded) that any declaration in extremis was admissible, on the ground that the solemnity of the occasion was equivalent to a declaration on oath").

² 1802, McNally, Evidence, 381, 386 ("In exception to the general rule that 'no evidence can be received against a prisoner but in his presence,' it has been repeatedly determined and is unquestionably law, that on a trial for murder the declarations of the deceased, after the mortal wound is given, conscious of approaching death, may be received in evidence against the prisoner, although such declaration was not made in his presence. . . . In civil cases the rule of receiving as evidence the dying declaration of a person in extremis hath also been adopted, and on the same principle as in criminal cases"); 1810, Swift, Evidence, 125 ("In civil cases the rule of receiving as evidence the dying declarations of a person in extremis has also been adopted, and on the same principle as in criminal cases"). The distinction had been suggested as early as 1743, by counsel in Craig dem. Annesley v. Anglesea, 17 How. St. Tr. 1161 (ejectment); but the absence of any settled distinction was in 1744 conceded by Mr. Chute, arguendo in Omichund v. Barker, 1 Atk. 38 ("A man, as he is just leaving the world, may be supposed to have a greater regard to truth").

there is found no distinction between civil and criminal cases, or between different kinds of criminal cases.

2. But at this point (as has more than once happened), the misconstrued words of a treatise-writer, followed by a nisi prius decision or two, started a heresy which in the next generation obtained full sway, and must now be taken as orthodox. The language of Serjeant East seems to have been the unwitting source of the heresy :

1803, Serjeant East, Pleas of the Crown, I, 353 : “ Besides the usual evidence of guilt in general cases of felony, there is one kind of evidence more peculiar to the case of homicide, which is the declaration of the deceased, after the mortal blow, as to the fact itself, and the party by whom it is committed. Evidence of this sort is admissible in this case on the fullest necessity ; for it often happens that there is no third person present to be an eye-witness to the fact ; and the usual witness on occasion of other felonies, namely, the party injured himself, is gotten rid of.”³

This language led to a change of practice in England, and its influence is clearly to be traced in subsequent American cases. Finally, in 1860, a note of Chief Justice Redfield, in his edition of Professor Greenleaf’s treatise, gave it the widest credit and led to its general acceptance :

1857, Ogden, J., in Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 617 : “ Such declarations are received as evidence from necessity, for furnishing the testimony which in certain cases is essential to prevent the manslayer from escaping punishment. When a death-wound is inflicted in secret, as was done in this case, no person can be expected to speak to the fact except the victim of the violence.”

1860, Redfield, C. J., in Greenleaf, Evidence, I, § 156, note : “ It is not received upon any other ground than that of necessity, in order to prevent murder going unpunished. What is said in the books about the situation of the declarant, he being virtually under the most solemn sanction to speak the truth, is far from presenting the true ground of the admission. . . . And although it is not indispensable that there should be no other evidence of the same facts, the rule is no doubt based upon the presumption that in the majority of cases there will be no other equally satisfactory proof of the same facts. This presumption and the consequent probability of the crime going unpunished is unquestionably the chief ground of this exception in the law of evidence.”⁴

This orthodox heresy, with its narrow view of the necessity for such evidence, has been applied with some attempt at consistency, the result of which is the following limitations.

§ 1432. Rule Applicable in Certain Criminal Cases only. (1) The proceeding in which the statements are offered may not be a civil case.¹

³ It was natural, in a chapter on Homicide, to call special attention to these considerations ; but Mr. East did not and could not cite any authority for confining the evidence to such cases, and probably had no intention of making such an absolute statement.

⁴ The same view of the Necessity principle is illustrated in the following cases : 1835, State v. Ferguson, 2 Hill S. C. 624 ; 1852, Campbell v. State, 11 Ga. 375 ; 1855, Walston v. Com., 16 B. Monr. 34 ; 1868, Marshall v. R. Co., 48 Ill. 476 ; 1869, Morgan v. State, 31 Ind. 198 ; 1872, Schell v. Stephens, 50 Mo. 374 ; 1881, State v. Wood, 53 Vt. 564 ; 1884, Waldele v. R. Co., 95 N. Y. 274 ; 1885, Railing v. Com., 110 Pa. 105, 1 Atl. 314.

¹ 1836, Stobart v. Dryden, 1 M. & W. 615 ; 1865, Daily v. R. Co., 32 Conn. 357 ; 1869, Wooten v. Wilkins, 39 Ga. 223 ; 1886, East Tenn. Valley & G. R. Co. v. Maloy, 77 id. 237, 2 S. E. 941 ; 1869, Duling v. Johnson, 32 Ind. 155 ; 1896, Thayer v. Lombard, 165 Mass. 174, 42 N. E. 563 ; 1871, Brownell v. R. Co., 47 Mo. 245 ; 1806, Jackson v. Kniffen, 2 John. 36 ; 1818, Wilson v. Boeren, 15 id. 286 ; 1854, Barfield v. Britt, 2 Jones L. 43 (overruling McFarlane v. Shaw, 2 N. C. Law Repos. 105).

The following cases are therefore practically

(2) It must be a public prosecution for the specific crime of homicide.²

(3) It must be a prosecution, not merely for an act which has resulted in fact in death, but for an offence involving legally the resulting death as a necessary element. This limitation is a refinement evolved from the earlier and simpler form of statement that "death must be the subject of the charge." When the evidence was offered in a prosecution for attempted abortion and like offences, where the woman's death resulted, the earlier form of statement became capable of opposite interpretations. Generally the narrower one has been adopted.³ Through this pedantic refinement much labor has been wasted, and justice has often been hampered and defeated, for it is obvious that the evidential need and value of the statement is precisely the same, whatever the determination reached. We see here that the strictly evidential question has been entirely lost sight of, and the exclusion or admission of the statements is made to depend arbitrarily on the terms of a particular criminal statute. In at least three jurisdictions the aid of the Legislature has been invoked to stop the further defiance of common sense by the Courts over such monstrous trivialities.⁴

§ 1433. Death in question must be Declarant's. Again, not any death may outlawed: 1806, Jackson v. Vradenburgh, 1 John. 159, 163 (wife's dying declarations as to her husband's will; left undecided, as to the present point); 1859, People v. Blakely, 4 Park. Cr. C. 184 (admitting a declaration that a note had been signed; "It is true this is said only in regard to criminal cases; but the rules of evidence in criminal cases are in most respects the same as in civil cases"; here the declaration was in any case admissible as against interest).

See § 1141, ante (Corroboration by Similar Statements for the Delaware statute treating a bastard's mother's declaration in travail as a dying declaration.

² Excluded in the following cases: 1824, R. v. Mead, 2 B. & C. 605 (perjury); 1830, R. v. Lloyd, 4 C. & P. 233 (robbery); 1874, Johnson v. State, 50 Ala. 459 (rape); 1876, State v. Barker, 28 Oh. St. 583; 1866, Hudson v. State, 3 Coldw. 359 (robbery); 1871, Crookham v. State, 5 W. Va. 514 (assault with intent to kill).

In some of the statutes cited ante, § 1430, the scope is extended to "criminal actions" in general, though the subject of the declaration must be "the cause of death."

^a 1822, R. v. Hutchinson, 2 B. & C. 608, note, Bayley, J. (administration of drugs to a pregnant woman); 1860, R. v. Hind, 8 Cox Cr. 300, Pollock, C. B. (attempt to procure a miscarriage); 1891, Com. v. Homer, 153 Mass. 344, 26 N. E. 872; 1900, State v. Meyer, 64 N. J. L. 382, 45 Atl. 779 (excluded on a charge of abortion in which the woman's death was not of the essence of the crime, though it affected the punishment); 1874, People v. Davis, 56 N. Y. 95; 1878, State v. Harper, 35 Oh. St. 78; 1885, Railing v. Com., 110 Pa. 103, 1 Atl. 314. Contra: 1881, Montgomery v. State, 80 Ind.

345 (Elliott, C. J.: "We conclude, where death results from the unlawful attempt to produce an abortion, that death is the subject of the enquiry and that dying declarations are competent. If we adopt any other view, we shall sacrifice principle to a mere form of words. . . . We regard the statute as clearly intending that death shall be deemed a controlling element of the offence, and in this respect it differs from the statutes of New York and Ohio, as construed by the courts of those states. . . . If in reality the offence is homicide and the subject of enquiry the manner of the deceased's death, the settled rules of evidence which prevail in such cases should be enforced"); 1903, Seifert v. State, 160 id. 464, 67 N. E. 100; 1900, State v. Meyer, 65 id. 237, 47 Atl. 486 (even where abortion is a crime, though the death did not result from that cause, the woman's dying declaration is admissible; approving Montgomery v. State); 1877, State v. Dickinson, 41 Wis. 308.

The following are distinguishable: 1901, Worthington v. State, 92 Md. 222, 48 Atl. 355 (causing abortion followed by mother's death; dying declaration admitted, because abortion consists in killing the unborn child); 1894, State v. Pearce, 56 Minn. 226, 233, 57 N. W. 652, 1065 (manslaughter by procuring abortion; admitted).

⁴ Mass. St. 1889, c. 100 (dying declarations of a woman dying from abortion, admissible in prosecutions for the offence alleging death); 1893, Com. v. Thompson, 159 Mass. 56, 59, 33 N. E. 1111 (statute applied); N. Y. St. 1875, c. 352 (similar); Pa. St. 1895, June 26, Pub. L. 387, § 1 (similar, with peculiar and lengthy wording; the prosecution must first show the declarant's "sound mind," and there must be corroboration of the declaration).

be the subject of the charge; the deceased declarant must be the person whose death is the subject of the charge:

1875, Kingman, C. J., in State v. Bohan, 15 Kan. 418: "Mr. Redfield states that this evidence is not received upon any other ground than that of necessity, in order to prevent murder going unpunished. . . . Its admission can be justified only on the ground of absolute necessity, growing out of the fact that the murderer, by putting the witness, and generally the sole witness of his crime, beyond the power of the Court by killing him, shall not thereby escape the consequences of his crime. . . . Necessity, then, being the only ground on which such testimony can be admitted, it remains to be seen whether that necessity exists so generally, or to so great an extent, where the death of any one else than the declarant is the subject of the inquiry, as to justify the adoption of a rule admitting such testimony"; and in a trial for the murder of T. A., declarations were rejected of W. A., shot at the same time with T. A., but surviving him a few hours.¹

§ 1434. Circumstances of Death related. Finally, the declaration may not concern any and all topics. It must concern the facts leading up to or causing or attending the injurious act which has resulted in the declarant's death; for it is only as to such facts that the supposed necessity for the statements can exist.¹ Here again there is prolific opportunity for quibbling.

¹ Excluded: 1893, Mora v. People, 19 Colo. 255, 262, 35 Pac. 179 (declarations by an accomplice resisting arrest); 1867, State v. Fitzhugh, 2 Or. 227, 232 (declarations of F., killed in the same affray); 1873, Brown v. Com., 73 Pa. 329 (husband and wife murdered in different places about the same time; excluding at the trial for the killing of the former the latter's declarations); 1878, Poteete v. State, 9 Baxt. 270 (third person killed in the same affray); 1894, Radford v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 520, 526, 27 S. W. 143 (husband and wife killed at the same time; on a charge of murder of the husband, the wife's declarations excluded).

Admitted: 1837, R. v. Baker, 2 Moo. & Rob. 53 (declarations of one poisoned at the same time as the person whose death was charged); 1871, State v. Wilson, 23 La. An. 559 (declarations of J. S., shot at the same time as W. D., for whose murder the accused was on trial); 1859, State v. Terrell, 12 Rich. L. 329 (declarations of one poisoned at the same time with him whose death was the subject of the charge).

¹ Ala.: 1849, McLean v. State, 16 Ala. 672, 676 ("whether he had forbade the prisoner walking the road that morning, immediately preceding the time that prisoner had shot him," admitted); 1860, Mose v. State, 35 id. 421; 1861, Ben v. State, 37 id. 105; 1881, Reynolds v. State, 63 id. 506; Cal.: 1883, People v. Fong Ah Sing, 54 Cal. 253; 1881, People v. Taylor, 59 id. 640, 648; 1897, People v. Wong Chuey, 117 id. 624, 49 Pac. 833; Fla.: 1901, Clemmons v. State, 43 Fla. 200, 30 So. 699 (the scope of the declarations is the "res gestæ"); Ga.: 1893, Wilkerson v. State, 91 Ga. 729, 739, 17 S. E. 990 (killing of a husband by the wife's paramour; the husband's declaration that he had found them in adultery, admitted); 1898, Perry v. State, 102 id. 365, 30 S. E. 903 (declarations as to the relations of deceased and defendant

some time before, excluded); 1899, Bush v. State, 109 id. 120, 34 S. E. 298 (declarations as to defendant's threats immediately preceding, admitted); Ind.: 1903, Seifert v. State, 160 Ind. 464, 67 N. E. 100 (death by abortion; deceased's declarations as to the defendant's incitement to the act and furnishing of an instrument, admitted); Ia.: 1903, State v. McKnight, 119 Ia. 79, 93 N. W. 63 (declaration as to prior assaults by the defendant on the deceased; excluded); Kan.: 1899, State v. O'Shea, 60 Kan. 772, 57 Pac. 970 (sundry statements as to prior relations of deceased and defendant, excluded); Ky.: 1872, Leiber v. Com., 9 Bush 13; 1888, Peoples v. Com., 37 Ky. 500, 9 S. W. 509, 810; 1899, Redmond v. Com., — id. —, 51 S. W. 565 (that he had no pistol, admitted); 1899, Baker v. Com., — id. —, 50 S. W. 50 ("I want all you people to swear the truth about this," excluded); Mo.: 1903, State v. Parker, 172 Mo. 191, 72 S. W. 650 ("I never made any threats against him in my life," "I never had a quarrel with him," excluded, though the defendant had introduced evidence of recent threats by the deceased; this ruling is absurd, and disfigures the law of evidence in Missouri, — the more emphatically because a new trial was ordered solely because of the admission of these parts of the declaration); N. Y.: 1902, People v. Smith, 172 N. Y. 210, 64 N. E. 814 (declaration as to an occurrence of three hours before the fatal injury, excluded; the ruling is unsound); N. C.: 1899, State v. Jefferson, 125 N. C. 712, 34 S. E. 648 (declarations about a precedent quarrel, etc., with defendant, whom deceased did not recognize at time of shooting, excluded); Or.: 1874, State v. Garand, 5 Or. 216, 219; S. C.: 1895, State v. Petsch, 43 S. C. 132, 20 S. E. 993 (circumstances of preceding dispute, beginning two weeks before, semble, admissible); Wash.: 1897, State v. Moody, 18 Wash. 165, 51 Pac. 356 (declara-

§ 1435. Further Limitations rejected. The foregoing limitations, it will be observed, are logically required by the principle as introduced by Serjeant East (ante, § 1431). But two further and equally necessary results of it have never been accepted:

(1) If the killing was not secret, or if other and adequate testimony as to the circumstances of the death is at hand, nevertheless the dying declaration is admissible, even though in strictness it is not needed:

1898, Williams, J., in Com. v. Roddy, 184 Pa. 274, 39 Atl. 211: “[The defendant] alleges that the Commonwealth was under no necessity to use the dying declarations, and therefore had no right to use them. This rests on a misapprehension of the rule relating to their admission. The ‘necessity’ to which the text-books and the cases refer is not the exigency of any particular case, but a public necessity, which civilized society feels the pressure of, for the protection of human life by the punishment of manslaughter. . . . [The evidence] is competent, not in a particular case, where the defendant could not otherwise be convicted, but in all cases, no matter how ample the evidence of identification through other sources may be.”¹

This again shows the historical unsoundness of the spurious principle; for, had it originated in the reason given, the first and fundamental rule would have been to distinguish between cases in which other evidence was or was not attainable.

(2) Where the fact of the killing is conceded, the dying declaration, under the spurious principle, is by hypothesis unnecessary; nevertheless, this result is not recognized; the declaration is admitted, even where the killing is conceded.²

§ 1436. Foregoing Limitations Improper. All of the foregoing limitations, except the death of the declarant, are unsound; and for the following reasons:

(1) The orthodox policy of the Hearsay exceptions in general (ante, § 1421) is to interpret the “necessity” for the evidence as meaning, not the absence of other evidence from any source, but merely the absence of other evidence from the same source, i. e. the declarant. (2) The spurious principle, even so far as carried out, rests on wrong assumptions; for it is of as much consequence to the cause of justice that robberies and rapes be punished and torts and breaches of trust be redressed as that murders be detected. The notion that a crime is more worthy the attention of Courts than a civil wrong is a traditional relic of the days when civil justice was administered in the royal courts as a purchased favor, and criminal prosecutions in the king’s name were zealously encouraged because of the fines which they added to the royal revenues. (3) The sanction of a dying declaration’ is equally efficacious whether it speaks of a murder or a robbery or a fraudulent will; and the necessity being the same, the admissibility should be the same. (4) The tion as to a prior threat of defendant, excluded); 782; 1833, Payne v. State, 61 Miss. 163; 1857, Wyo.: 1903, Foley v. State, — Wyo. —, 72 Pac. 627 (statement as to quarrels within the spurious principle is recognized as unworkable in logical strictness, and, when fairly carried out, comes into conflict with convenience and good sense. (5) Its limitations are heresies of the present century, which have not even the sanction of antiquity. They should be wholly abolished by legislation.¹

Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 627.

² 1886, State v. Saunders, 14 Or. 305, 12 Pac. 441. Contra: 1895, Saylor v. Com., 97 Ky. 184, 30 S. W. 390.

¹ Accord: 1881, Reynolds v. State, 68 Ala. 506; 1903, Enqua v. Com., — Ky. —, 73 S. W.

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee.

§ 1438. In general; Solemnity of the Situation. All Courts have agreed, with more or less difference of language, that the approach of death produces a state of mind in which the utterances of the dying person are to be taken as freed from all ordinary motives to mis-state. The great dramatist expressed the common feeling long before it was sanctioned by judicial opinion.¹ In the following passages will be found the now classical sentences of the earlier English judges, as well as later ones pointing out clearly how the situation supplies a circumstantial guarantee of accuracy equivalent to that of the tests of oath and cross-examination:

1789, Eyre, C. B., in Woodcock's Case, Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 500. "The general principle on which this species of evidence is admitted is that they are declarations made in extremity, when the party is at the point of death and when every hope of this world is gone; when every motive to falsehood is silenced, and the mind is induced by the most powerful considerations to speak the truth; a situation so solemn and so awful is considered by the law as creating an obligation equal to that which is created by a positive oath administered in a court of justice."

1837, Alderson, B., in Ashton's Case, 2 Lew. Cr. C. 147: "When a party comes to the conviction that he is about to die, he is in the same practical state as if called on in a court of justice under the sanction of an oath, and his declarations as to the cause of his death are considered equal to an oath, but they are nevertheless open to observation. For, though the sanction is the same, the opportunity of investigating the truth is very different, and therefore the accused is entitled to every allowance and benefit that he may have lost by the absence of the opportunity of more full investigation by the means of cross-examination."

1858, Voorhies, J., in State v. Brunetto, 13 La. An. 45: "The reason for the rejection of hearsay evidence is that the party against whom it militates has not had the benefit of a cross-examination, and because the declarant did not speak under the sanction of an oath. An exception to this rule obtains in cases of dying declarations, the sense of impending dissolution being considered as offering the necessary guarantees that the declaration is in accordance with the truth."

1880, Mulkey, J., in Tracy v. People, 97 Ill. 106: "There are certain guarantees of the truth of dying declarations, growing out of the solemnity of the time and circumstances under which they are made, which in contemplation of law are supposed to compensate for the fact that they are not sanctioned by an oath and the party against whom they are used has had no opportunity to cross-examine."

1896, Gray, J., in People v. Craft, 148 N. Y. 631, 43 N. E. 80 (the trial judge told the

¹ Courts have here and there expressed dissatisfaction with these limitations: 1815, Taylor, C. J., in McFarland v. Shaw, 2 N. Car. L. Repos. 105; 1861, Davies, J., in Caujolle v. Ferrié, 23 N. Y. 94; 1869, McCay, J., in Wooten v. Wilkins, 39 Ga. 223; 1873, Barrows, J., in State v. Wagner, 61 Me. 195.

² About 1595: King John, V, 4:

Melun: "Have I not hideous death within my view,
Retaining but a quantity of life,
Which bleeds away, even as a form of wax Resolveth from his figure 'gainst the fire?
What in the world should make me now deceive,
Since I must lose the use of all deceit?
Why should I then be false, since it is true
That I must die here and live hence by truth?"

jury that a dying declaration "is given all the sanction which the law can give to evidence"): "Dying declarations are of the nature of hearsay, or second-hand, evidence. . . . It never has been, and it is not to be, supposed that they have all the guaranties which surround evidence given under oath in a court of justice. . . . It is, of course, true that such declarations are considered to be equal to an oath taken in a court of justice; but that is because of the circumstances surrounding them when made. It is assumed that, being made in extremity, when the party is at the point of death, and believes that all hope in this world is gone, they have some guaranty for their truth, in view of the solemnity of the occasion, or as much as an oath in court would have. But it is clear that their value as evidence rests upon an assumption; and hence it is that, while the law recognizes the necessity of admitting such proof on a par with an oath in a court of justice, it does not and cannot regard it as of the same value and weight as the evidence of a witness given in a court of justice, under all the tests and safeguards which are there afforded for discovering the truth, the object of judicial inquiry;² for there the accused has the opportunity of more fully investigating the truth of the evidence by the means of cross-examination, and the jury have the opportunity of observing the demeanor of the person whose testimony is relied upon. The power of cross-examination is quite as essential, in the process of eliciting the truth, as the obligation of an oath; and where the life or the liberty of the defendant is at stake the absence of the opportunity for cross-examination is a serious deprivation; which differentiates in nature and in degree the evidence of a dying declaration from that which is direct and given upon the witness stand. . . . Speaking in a strict sense, the sanction of an oath and the sanction of such declarations are deemed to be the same, when the state of mind of the person is considered; but, as it was said by Baron Alderson, in Ashton's Case, 'though the sanction is the same, the opportunity of investigating the truth is very different, and therefore the accused is entitled to every allowance and benefit that he may have lost by the absence of the opportunity of more full investigation by the means of cross-examination.'"³

Such being the nature of the guarantee, certain rules follow from the principle.

§ 1439. Consciousness of the Approach of Death; Subsequent Confirmation. As the guarantee consists in the subjective effect of the approach of death, it is essential that the declarant should appear to have had a consciousness of the approach of death:

1829, Park, J., in R. v. Pike, 3 C. & P. 598: "We allow the declaration of persons in articulo mortis to be given in evidence, if it appear that the person making such declaration was then under the deep impression that he was soon to render an account to his Maker."

1869, Ray, J., in Morgan v. State, 31 Ind. 199: "As this class of evidence forms an exception to the general rule; as there can be no cross-examination of the declarant; as the accused cannot often meet his accuser face to face; and as there must of necessity exist great danger of abuse; it must clearly appear that the statements offered in evidence have been made under a full realization that the solemn hour of death has come."

This consciousness must of course have been at the time of making the ² On this point, see also a good opinion in Lambeth v. State, 23 Miss. 322, 358 (1852).

³ Compare also: 1844, Forrest v. Kissam, 7 Hill N. Y. 474, Forrest, Sen.; 1852, Campbell v. State, 11 Ga. 374, Lumpkin, J.; 1855, Starkey v. People, 17 Ill. 20, 21, Skinner, J.; Scates, C. J.; 1858, Godfrey v. State, 31 Ala. 323, Rice, C. J.; 1859, State v. Terrell, 12 Rich.

L. 329, O'Neill, J.; 1864, People v. Sanchez, 24 Cal. 17, 24, Sanderson, C. J.; 1868, Whitley v. State, 38 Ga. 70, Harris, J.; 1871, Hill v. State, 41 Ga. 503, Lochrane, C. J.; 1871, Com. v. Roberts, 108 Mass. 301, Chapman, C. J.; 1872, State v. Williams, 67 N. C. 14, Rodman, J.; 1892, Mattox v. U. S., 146 U. S. 152, 13 Sup. 50, Fuller, C. J.

declaration.¹ It follows, on the one hand, that a subsequent change of this expectation of death, by the recurrence of a hope of life, does not render inadmissible a prior declaration made while the consciousness prevailed,² although a repetition of the declaration during the subsequent inadequate state of mind would not be admissible;³ and, on the other hand, that a declaration made during an inadequate state of mind may become admissible by a subsequent affirmation of it made when the realization of impending death had supervened.⁴

§ 1440. Certainty of Death. It follows, from the general principle, that the belief must be, not merely of the possibility of death, nor even of its probability, but of its certainty. A less stringent rule might with safety have been adopted;¹ but this is the accepted one. The tests have been variously phrased; there must be "no hope of recovery"; "a settled expectation of death"; "an undoubting belief." Their general effect is the same. The essential idea is that the belief should be a positive and absolute one, not limited by doubts or reserves; so that no room is left for the operation of worldly motives:

1851, Pigot, C. B., in R. v. Mooney, 5 Cox Cr. 318: "These declarations would not be evidence unless she was under a clear impression that she was in a dying state."

1860, Willes, J., in R. v. Peel, 2 F. & F. 22: "There must be a settled, hopeless expectation of death in the declarant."

1869, R. v. Jenkins, L. R. 1 Cr. C. R. 192; Kelly, C. B.: "The result of the cases is that there must be an unqualified belief in the nearness of death, a belief without hope that the declarant is about to die." Byles, J.: "The authorities show that there must be no hope whatever."

1888, Beasley, C. J., in Peak v. State, 50 N. J. L. 222, 12 Atl. 701: "[The declarant] shall have a complete conviction that death is at hand. . . . Death, shortly to ensue, must be an absolute certainty, so far as the consciousness of the person making the declaration is concerned."²

¹ 1835, R. v. Spilsbury, 7 C. & P. 190; 1875, Walker v. State, 52 Ala. 195; 1876, May v. State, 55 Ala. 41; 1857, Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 618.

² 1881, R. v. Hubbard, 14 Cox Cr. 565; 1894, State v. Reed, 53 Kan. 767, 773, 37 Pac. 174; 1893, State v. Shaffer, 23 Or. 555, 560, 32 Pac. 545.

³ 1899, State v. Sadler, 51 La. An. 1397, 26 So. 390 (statements made the day after admissible statements; excluded, because consciousness of impending death was not shown to continue; an illiberal ruling); 1896, Carver v. U. S., 160 U. S. 553, 16 Sup. 388.

⁴ 1872, R. v. Steele, 12 Cox Cr. 168, 170; 1894, Johnson v. State, 102 Ala. 1, 16 So. 99 (even though it is not read over to him); 1901, Wilson v. Com., — Ky. —, 60 S. W. 400; 1902, Smith v. Com., — id. —, 67 S. W. 32; 1894, State v. Evans, 124 Mo. 397, 409, 28 S. W. 8; 1901, State v. Garth, 164 id. 553, 65 S. W. 275. Contra: 1901, Harper v. State, 79 Miss. 575, 31 So. 195 (no authority cited).

¹ In the following cases a strong probability only was required: 1765, Lord Byron's Trial,

19 How. St. Tr. 1205, 1206, semble; 1840, R. v. Perkins, 9 C. & P. 395 (before thirteen judges).

² Examples: Eng.: 1826, R. v. Craven, 1 Lew. Cr. C. 77 ("I am afraid, doctor, I shall never get better"; admitted); 1831, R. v. Crockett, 4 C. & P. 544; 1829, R. v. Simpson, 1 Lew. Cr. C. 78 ("I fear I am in great danger"; admitted); 1837, Ashton and Thornley's Case, 2 id. 147 ("I think I will not recover," after a similar statement by the surgeon; admitted); 1838, Errington's Case, ib. 149 ("I think myself in great danger"; excluded); 1881, R. v. Osman, 15 Cox Cr. 1, 3 ("a settled hopeless expectation of immediate death"); 1888, R. v. Gloster, 16 id. 471, 476; U. S.: 1902, Milton v. State, 134 Ala. 42, 32 So. 653; 1880, People v. Hodgdon, 55 Cal. 77; 1881, People v. Taylor, 59 id. 648; 1882, People v. Gray, 61 id. 175; 1893, Graves v. People, 18 Colo. 170, 176, 32 Pac. 63 (inadmissible, if there is an expectation of recovery); 1870, Dixon v. State, 13 Fla. 640; 1896, Lester v. State, 37 id. 382, 20 So. 232 ("no hope whatever," "entirely without hope"); 1901, Green v. State, 43 id. 552, 30 So. 798; 1902, Collins v. People, 194

§ 1441. Speediness of Death. It follows, also, that the expectation must be of a speedy death. All men are mortal, and know it. An expectation of ultimate but distant death is obviously, in experience, not calculated to produce that sincerity of statement which is desired. Nevertheless, no definition of time can be fixed; the determination must vary with each case, after all the circumstances are considered:

1829, Hullock, B., in R. v. Van Butchell, 3 C. & P. 631: "A man may receive an injury from which he may think that he shall ultimately 'never recover'; but still that would not be sufficient to dispense with an oath."

1869, Byles, J., in R. v. Jenkins, L. R. 1 Cr. C. R. 193: "In order to make a dying declaration admissible, there must be an expectation of impending and almost immediate death."¹

But the actual period of survival after making the declaration is immaterial. The necessary element is a subjective one,—the declarant's expectation; and the subsequent duration of life, whatever it may turn out to be, has no relation to his state of mind when speaking:

1857, Pollock, C. B., in R. v. Reaney, 7 Cox Cr. 209, 212: "In truth, the question does not depend upon the length of interval between the death and the declaration, but on the state of the man's mind at the time of making the declaration and his belief that he is in a dying state."

Accordingly, there seems to be no case in which the time of survival was deemed to exclude the declaration; and various periods have been passed upon as not too long.²

§ 1442. Consciousness of approaching Death; how determined. In ascertaining this consciousness of approaching death, recourse should naturally be Ill. 506, 62 N. E. 902; 1872, State v. Medlicott, 9 Kan. 288; 1901, Worthington v. State, 92 Md. 222, 48 Atl. 355; 1781, Com. v. Roberts, 108 Mass. 301; 1896, People v. Beverly, 108 Mich. 509, 66 N. W. 379; 1896, People v. Weaver, ib. 649, 66 N. W. 567 ("I make these statements in full view of my probable death"; admitted); 1901, Harper v. State, 79 Miss. 575, 31 So. 195; 1903, People v. Conklin, 175 N. Y. 333, 67 N. E. 624; 1900, State v. Jagers, 58 S. C. 41, 36 S. E. 434; 1848, Smith v. State, 9 Humph. 17 ("fully conscious of that fact, not as a thing of surmise and conjecture or apprehension, but as a fixed and inevitable fact"); 1853, Brakefield v. State, 1 Sneed 218. Asking for a physician does not necessarily show that there is no hope of recovery: 1844, R. v. Howell, 1 Denison Cr. C. 1; 1894, McQueen v. State, 103 Ala. 12, 15 So. 824; 1894, State v. Evans, 124 Mo. 397, 28 S. W. 8. Contra, but unsound: 1892, Matherly v. Com., — Ky. —, 19 S. W. 977.

¹ 1881, R. v. Osman, 15 Cox Cr. 1, 3 ("immediate death"); 1888, R. v. Glover, 16 id. 471, 477 (same); 1858, McHugh v. State, 31 Ala. 323 ("that despair which is naturally produced by an impression of almost immediate dissolution"); 1898, Titus v. State, 117 id. 16, 23 So. 77 (that he "said he would die," insufficient; but "believed he would soon die," sufficient); 1896, Lester v. State, 37 Fla. 382, 20 So. 232 ("imminent and inevitable"); 1893, U. S. v. Schneider, 21 D. C. 381, 404 ("speedily"); 1895, Saylor v. Com., 97 Ky. 184, 30 S. W. 390 ("I shall not get well"; excluded on the facts); 1898, State v. Ashworth, 50 La. An. 94, 23 So. 270 ("bound to die," "could not live much longer"; received); 1893, State v. Welsor, 117 Mo. 570, 579, 21 S. W. 443 ("immediate dissolution"); 1897, State v. Dalton, 20 R. I. 114, 37 Atl. 673 ("impending," not necessarily "immediate").

² 1834, R. v. Bonner, 6 C. & P. 386; 1869, R. v. Bernadotti, 11 Cox Cr. 316 (nearly three weeks' survival; admitted); 1893, Boulden v. State, 102 Ala. 78, 84, 15 So. 341 (two months' survival; admitted); 1880, Jones v. State, 71 Ind. 74; 1902, Burton v. Com., — Ky. —, 70 S. W. 831 (death eleven days later; admitted); 1879, State v. Daniel, 31 La. An. 95; 1862, Com. v. Cooper, 5 All. 497; 1871, Com. v. Roberts, 108 Mass. 301; 1879, Com. v. Haney, 127 id. 457; 1897, State v. Craine, 120 N. C. 601, 27 S. E. 72 (five months before death, admitted); 1896, Moore v. State, 96 Tenn. 209, 33 S. W. 1046 (five days before death; admitted); 1875, Swisher's Case, 26 Gratt. 971.

had to all the attending circumstances. It has been contended that only the statements of the declarant could be considered for this purpose; or, less broadly, that the nature of the injury alone could not be sufficient, i. e., in effect, that the declarant must have shown in some way by conduct or language that he knew he was going to die. This, however, is without good reason. We may avail ourselves of any means of inferring the existence of such knowledge; and, if in a given case the nature of the wound is such that the declarant must have realized his situation, our object is sufficiently attained. Such is the settled judicial attitude:

1789, Eyre, C. B., in Woodcock's Case, Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 500: "My judgment is that inasmuch as she was mortally wounded and was in a condition which rendered almost immediate death inevitable; as she was thought by every person about her to be dying, though it was difficult to get from her particular explanations as to what she thought of herself and her situation; her declarations made under these circumstances ought to be considered by a jury as being made under the impression of her approaching dissolution; for, resigned as she appeared to be, she must have felt the hand of death and must have considered herself as a dying woman."

1790, R. v. John, 1 East's Cr. L. c. 5, § 124, p. 358; all the judges agreed that "if a dying person either declare that he knows his danger, or it is reasonably to be inferred from the wound or state of illness that he was sensible of his danger, the declarations are good evidence."

1850, Dargan, C. J., in Oliver v. State, 17 Ala. 594: "The Court must look to all the circumstances under which they were made; and if they be sufficient to induce the belief that the deceased made them under the sense of impending death, the declarations are admissible."¹

It must be said, however, that in ascertaining generally the existence of a knowledge of approaching death, Courts are now and then found making

¹ Accord: 1873, R. v. Smith, 23 U. C. C. P. 316; 1849, McLean v. State, 16 Ala. 672, 674; 1841, Dunn v. State, 2 Ark. 247; 1900, Newberry v. State, 68 id. 355, 58 S. W. 351; 1897, Wagoner v. Terr., — Ariz. —, 51 Pac. 145; 1882, People v. Gray, 61 Cal. 175; 1894, State v. Cronin, 64 Conn. 293, 302, 29 Atl. 536 ("Lord, have mercy"); 1896, Lester v. State, 37 Fla. 382, 20 So. 232; 1852, Campbell v. State, 11 Ga. 377; 1878, Dumas v. State, 62 id. 58; 1902, Young v. State, 114 id. 849, 40 S. E. 1000; 1893, Govt v. Hering, 9 Haw. 181, 188; 1865, Murphy v. People, 37 Ill. 447, 456, semble; 1869, Morgan v. State, 31 Ind. 199; 1877, State v. Elliott, 45 Ia. 488; 1883, Peoples v. Com., 87 Ky. 496, 9 S. W. 509, 810; 1889, Com. v. Matthews, 89 id. 292, 12 S. W. 333; 1857, State v. Scott, 12 La. An. 274; 1895, State v. Jones, 38 id. 792, 18 So. 515; 1871, Com. v. Roberts, 108 Mass. 301; 1882, People v. Simpson, 48 Mich. 477, 12 N. W. 662; 1895, Bell v. State, 72 Miss. 507, 17 So. 232; 1894, State v. Evans, 124 Mo. 397, 23 S. W. 8; 1893, State v. Russell, 13 Mont. 164, 168, 32 Pac. 854; 1895, Collins v. State, 46 Nebr. 37, 64 N. W. 432; 1857, Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 500, 618; 1855, State v. Shelton, 2 Jones L. 360; 1893, State v. Fletcher, 24 Or. 295, 297, 33 Pac. 575; 1858, Kilpatrick v. Com., 31 Pa. 215;

1848, Smith v. State, 9 Humph. 20; 1892, Mattox v. U. S., 146 U. S. 140, 151, 13 Sup. 50; 1897, Carver v. U. S., 164 id. 694, 17 Sup. 228 (the administration of extreme unction by a priest, admitted to show that the deceased knew she was dying); 1898, Re Orpen, 86 Fed. 760, 764; 1831, Vass' Case, 3 Leigh 363. Contra, semble: 1875, R. v. Morgan, 14 Cox Cr. 337 (Denman, J., and Cockburn, C. J., thought that "there was no case in which the judge had admitted the statement entirely upon an inference drawn from the nature of the wound itself and from giving the deceased credit for ordinary intelligence as to its natural results," and offered to reserve the case, but the evidence was withdrawn; here the man's head was all but cut off, the windpipe and chief blood-vessels severed; being unable to speak, he motioned for paper and wrote on it; he died in ten minutes after writing; query, whether any but two lawyers could have doubted that the man was aware of his horrible plight?).

So, also, if the statement is taken in writing (post, § 1450), the writing need not contain a statement of the expectation of death: 1847, R. v. Hunt, 2 Cox Cr. 239; 1897, People v. Yokum, 118 Cal. 437, 50 Pac. 686, semble; 1897, Austin v. Com., — Ky. —, 40 S. W. 905.

rulings at which common sense revolts. Moved either by a disinclination to allow the slightest flexibility of rule in applying principles to circumstances, or by a general repugnance to exceptions to the Hearsay rule, they have recorded decisions which can only be derided by laymen and repudiated by the profession.² It is the narrow and over-cautious spirit of such decisions which tends to stunt the free development and application of living principles, to hamper the administration of justice, and to undermine public confidence in legal procedure; and no opportunity ought to be omitted of censuring the manifestations of this spirit.

No rule can here be laid down. The circumstances of each case will show whether the requisite consciousness existed; and it is poor policy to disturb the ruling of the trial judge upon the meaning of these circumstances.³

² 1851, R. v. Mooney, 5 Cox Cr. 318 (the evidence was that "the clergyman had warned her to prepare for death; she had not told any person that she knew she was dying; but she had been heard recommending her soul to God"; Pigot, C. B., held that the proof of her being aware that she was dying was not sufficient); 1852, R. v. Nicolas, 6 Cox Cr. 121 (testimony: "I believe he knew he was dying. I cannot recollect that he said anything about dying before he began his statement. As he finished it, he said, 'Oh, God! I am going fast; I am too far gone to say any more'; Cresswell, J.: "It being possible that this man did not discover the extent of his weakness till he had made the statement, and that it was only after he had made it he for the first time discovered that he was going fast, there is not, consequently, that clear ascertainment of his consciousness of his state, before he made it, to render it admissible"). See also the following: 1835, R. v. Spilsbury, 7 C. & P. 190; 1848, Smith v. State, 9 Humph. 22, 23; 1854, R. v. Peltier, 4 Low. Can. 22. For an example of liberal treatment, see Peoples v. Com., 87 Ky. 495, 9 S. W. 509, 810 (1888).

³ In the following cases various states of fact, useless as precedents, were passed upon; the profession should not have been burdened by a judicial opinion on them: Eng.: 1865, R. v. Smith, 10 Cox Cr. 82, 95; 1866, R. v. Forester, ib. 368; 1868, R. v. Mackay, 11 id. 148; 1887, R. v. Smith, 16 id. 170; Can.: 1897, R. v. Woods, 5 Br. C. 585, 589; 1903, R. v. Louie, 8 id. 1, 7; Ala.: 1892, Justice v. State, 99 Ala. 180, 182, 13 So. 658; 1895, Cole v. State, 105 id. 76, 16 So. 762; 1895, Clark v. State, ib. 91, 17 So. 37; 1898, Fuller v. State, 117 id. 36, 23 So. 688; 1899, Dubose v. State, 120 id. 300, 25 So. 185; 1900, Gibson v. State, 126 id. 59, 28 So. 673; 1903, Smith v. State, 136 id. 1, 34 So. 163; 1904, Walker v. State, — id. —, 35 So. 1011; Ark.: 1893, Evans v. State, 58 Ark. 47, 54, 22 S. W. 1026; Cal.: 1899, People v. Fuhrig, 127 Cal. 412, 59 Pac. 693; 1901, People v. Lem Deo, 132 id. 199, 64 Pac. 265; 1903, People v. Dobbins, 138 id. 694, 72 Pac. 339; Fla.: 1900, Richard v. State, 42 Fla. 528, 29 So. 413; Ga.: 1898, Parks v. State, 105 Ga. 242, 31 S. E. 580; 1900, Wheeler v. State, 112 id. 43, 37 S. E. 126; Ill.: 1894, Simons v. People, 150 Ill. 66, 73, 36 N. E. 1019; 1897, Kirkham v. People, 170 id. 9, 48 N. E. 465; 1901, Hagenow v. People, 188 id. 545, 59 N. E. 242; Ind.: 1900, Green v. State, 154 Ind. 655, 57 N. E. 637; Ia.: 1898, State v. Young, 104 Ia. 730, 74 N. W. 693; 1902, State v. Phillips, 118 id. 660, 92 N. W. 876; 1903, State v. Dennis, 119 id. 688, 94 N. W. 235; Kan.: 1902, State v. Morrison, 64 Kan. 669, 68 Pac. 48; Ky.: 1898, Jones v. Com., — Ky. —, 46 S. W. 217; 1901, Barnes v. Com., 110 id. 348, 61 S. W. 733; 1896, State v. Smith, 48 La. An. 533, 19 So. 452; 1899, State v. Sadler, 51 id. 1397, 26 So. 390; 1904, State v. Brown, 111 La. 696, 35 So. 818; Mass.: 1895, Com. v. Brewer, 164 Mass. 577, 42 N. E. 92; Mich.: 1899, People v. Lonsdale, 122 Mich. 388, 81 N. W. 277; Miss.: 1895, Bell v. State, 72 Miss. 507, 17 So. 232; 1898, Lipscomb v. State, 75 id. 559, 23 So. 210, 230; 1898, Joslin v. State, 75 id. 838, 23 So. 515; Mo.: 1893, State v. Umble, 115 Mo. 452, 461, 22 S. W. 378; 1893, State v. Johnson, 118 id. 491, 503, 24 S. W. 229; 1894, State v. Necton, 121 id. 537, 549, 26 S. W. 551; 1899, State v. Garrison, 147 id. 548, 49 S. W. 508; Nebr.: 1895, Basye v. State, 44 Nebr. 261, 63 N. W. 811; N. C.: 1893, State v. Whitt, 113 N. C. 716, 720, 18 S. E. 715; 1896, State v. Finley, 118 id. 1161, 24 S. E. 495; 1896, State v. Mace, ib. 1244, 24 S. E. 798; Or.: 1874, State v. Garrard, 5 Or. 216, 218; Pa.: 1894, Com. v. Silcox, 161 Pa. 484, 497, 29 Atl. 105; 1895, Com. v. Mika, 171 id. 273, 33 Atl. 65; S. C.: 1880, State v. Belcher, 13 S. C. 459, 463; 1896, State v. Arnold, 47 id. 9, 24 S. E. 926; 1900, State v. Taylor, 56 id. 360, 34 S. E. 939; Tenn.: 1896, Lemons v. State, 97 Tenn. 560, 37 S. W. 552; Tex.: 1894, Meyers v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 204, 216, 26 S. W. 196; Va.: 1901, O'Boyle v. Com., 100 Va. 785, 40 S. E. 121; Wash.: 1894, State v. Eddon, 8 Wash. 292, 298, 36 Pac. 139; 1901, State v. Power, 24 id. 34, 63 Pac. 1112; Wis.: 1901, Hughes v. State, 109 Wis. 397, 85 N. W. 333. In the following courts the determination of the trial judge is said to control: 1899, Baker v. Com., — Ky. —, 50 S. W. 54; 1896, Com. v. Bishop, 165 Mass. 148, 42 N. E. 560; 1895, Basye v. State, 44 Nebr. 261, 63 Mo. 811.

§ 1443. Revengeful Feelings; Theological Belief. It remains to examine more closely the nature of the circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness. It is separable (as may be seen from the judicial language already quoted) into three elements. (1) The declarant, being at the point of death, "must lose the use of all deceit," — in Shakspeare's phrase. There is no longer any temporal self-serving purpose to be furthered. (2) If a belief exists in a punishment soon to be inflicted by a Higher Power upon human ill-doing, the fear of this punishment will outweigh any possible motive for deception, and will even counterbalance the inclination to gratify a possible spirit of revenge. (3) Even without such a belief, there is a natural and instinctive awe at the approach of an unknown future, — a physical revulsion common to all men, irresistible, and independent of theological belief. In view of these three elements, what may be laid down as to the condition of the declarant's mind at this moment before dissolution?

First, the declarant may exhibit such strong feelings of hatred or revenge that the effect of all the above influences appears to be lacking. If he is in such a frame of mind, the supposed guarantee of trustworthiness fails, and the declaration should not be admitted:

1880, Mulkey, J., in Tracy v. People, 97 Ill. 105: "The fact sought to be shown [profane language] was important in another point of view. It strikes at the very foundation of the reasons upon which dying declarations are admitted at all. There are certain guaranties of the truth of dying declarations, growing out of the solemnity of the time and circumstances under which they are made. . . . It was clearly the right of the accused to show . . . that the deceased in making the statement was not in that frame of mind which the law presupposes and requires in such cases, . . . that the deceased . . . was in a reckless, irreverent state of mind, and entertained feelings of ill-will and hostility towards the accused."

Secondly, if we suppose the second element to be essential, and not merely usual, then a theological belief of a particular sort — a belief in a punishment in a future state — must be required. Yet if (as seems better) the third element — the physical revulsion peculiar to the moment — is to be regarded as the essential element of the guarantee, then the theological belief is immaterial. This distinction has not been expressly passed upon by the Courts. The majority of the few cases hold that the theological belief is material.¹

¹ 1829, R. v. Pike, 3 C. & P. 598 (Park, J.: "As this child was but four years old, it is quite impossible that she, however precocious in her mind, could have had that idea of a future state which is necessary to make such a declaration admissible. . . . [Her remark] does not show that she had any idea of a future state; indeed, I think that from her age we must take it that she could not possibly have had any idea of that kind"); 1880, Tracy v. People, 97 Ill. 105 (Mulkey, J.: "The vital inquiry before the Court was as to the real condition of the mind of the deceased when making the statement under consideration. . . . The use of profane language immediately preceding the statement is hardly to be reconciled with the assumption that he was at the time of sound mind and impressed with a sense of almost immediate death. . . . It is hard to realize how any sane man who believes in his accountability to God can be indulging in profanity when at the same time he really believes that in a few short hours at most he will be called upon to appear before Him to answer for the deeds done in the body"). Accord: 1840, R. v. Perkins, 9 C. & P. 395 (dying declaration of a child of ten received; here he said that he expected "to go to hell if he told a lie, and to heaven if he told the truth"); 1857, Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 507, 620; 1829, Phillips, Evidence, 7th Eng. ed., 236; 1843, ib.

But this question must be distinguished from that of the declarant's capacity to take an oath. If in the jurisdiction a witness is no longer affected by the common-law rule requiring an oath and the capacity to take an oath, i. e. the possession of a specific theological belief (post, § 1829), the declarant's belief is immaterial in determining his oath-capacity. But even where this common-law rule is abolished, his belief may still become material, with reference to the admissibility of this specific class declaration. In several cases, however, the Courts, ignoring this double aspect of the question, have been satisfied with pointing out the abolition of the common-law rule affecting capacity to take the oath, and have without further question admitted the declarations.² In a few cases it is said that the declarant's belief goes only to the weight of his statements; but the Courts here seem still to have had in mind only the question of common-law competency to take an oath.³

3. Testimonial Qualifications, and other Independent Rules of Evidence, as applied to this Exception.

There remain certain rules (ante, § 1424) which have nothing to do with the Hearsay exception as such, but are merely instances of general principles otherwise established.

§ 1445. Testimonial Qualifications (Infancy, Insanity, Interest, Recollection, Leading Questions, Written Declarations, etc.). In general, for testimonial qualifications, the rules to be applied are no more and no less than the ordinary ones, already examined (§§ 483-812), for the qualifications of other witnesses:

1857, Ogden, J., in Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 620: "Whatever would disqualify a witness would make such [dying] declarations incompetent testimony."

1864, Sanderson, C. J., in People v. Sanchez, 24 Cal. 26: "They stand upon the same footing as the testimony of a witness sworn in the case, and are governed by the same rules, except as to . . . leading questions."

1874, Campbell, J., in People v. Olmstead, 30 Mich. 434: "They [the declarations] are substitutes for sworn testimony, and must be such narrative statements as a witness might properly give on the stand if living."

1885, Elliott, C. J., in Boyle v. State, 97 Ind. 322; 105 Ind. 470: "Dying declarations are admissible in a case where the evidence would be competent if the declarant were on the witness stand. . . . The question here is . . . whether the declarant's statement was one that a witness on the stand would have been allowed to make."

(1) Insanity, Infancy, Interest. If the declarant would have been dis-

C. & H.'s Notes, No. 457, p. 611. Contra: 1871, Nesbit v. State, 43 Ga. 249 (Lochrane, C. J.): "If a man . . . [dies] without belief in God or in the divine revelation . . . his declarations would be admissible"; 1897, Carver v. U. S., 164 U. S. 694, 17 Sup. 228, semble (disbelief in a future state of rewards and penalties does not exclude).

² 1872, People v. Sanford, 43 Cal. 34 (Wallace, C. J.): "The common-law rule in that respect [incompetence of a witness lacking a religious sense of accountability] has been abrogated. It mattered not, therefore, upon the point of the mere competency of the evidence, even had it appeared that the deceased had no religious belief"; 1877, State v. Elliott, 45 Ia. 489 (the declarant "believed in no God or future conscious state"); 1880, State v. Ah Lee, 8 Or. 218.

³ 1886, Hill v. State, 64 Miss. 440, 1 So. 494; 1861, Gcodall v. State, 1 Or. 335.

qualified to take the stand, by reason of infancy,¹ insanity,² or interest,³ his extrajudicial declarations must also be inadmissible.

(2) Knowledge. The declarant must have had actual observation or opportunity for observation of the fact which he relates.⁴

(3) Recollection. The declarant's capacity of recollection, and his actual recollection, must have been sufficiently unimpaired to be trustworthy.⁵ The allowance of leading questions to stimulate recollection is sometimes here said to be by way of exception to the general rule against leading questions (ante, § 769). But in truth there seems to be no exception. The situation is not that of a presumably partisan witness offered in court, and questions leading in form will often have to be asked in order to obtain the information from a dying person unable to express himself except by a brief "yes" or "no." The mere fact, then, that questions leading in form are asked does not infringe the principle which forbids the supplying of a false memory (ante, § 778). There is thus no general rule here against leading questions.⁶ Nevertheless, where, in a particular case, the interrogators might seem to be really supplying a false memory, the answers should be excluded.⁷

(3) Communication. (a) Any adequate method of communication, whether by words or by signs or otherwise, will suffice, provided the indication is positive and definite, and seems to proceed from an intelligence of its meaning:

¹ 1784, R. v. Drummond, Leach Cr. L. 4th ed. 337; 1896, State v. Baldwin, 15 Wash. 15, 45 Pac. 650; for the general rules, see ante, § 492.

² 1898, Lipscomb v. State, 75 Miss. 559, 23 So. 210, 330, 25 So. 158 ("not insane or delirious, but spoke with discernment, reason, and intelligence"); 1897, State v. Reed, 137 Mo. 125, 38 S. W. 574 (possession of proper mental faculties need not be shown in advance); Tex. C. Cr. P. 1895, § 788 (quoted ante, § 1430); for the general rules, see ante, § 519.

³ 1806, Jackson v. Vredenburg, 1 John. 159, 163; for the general rules, see ante, § 576.

For oath-capacity, see ante, § 1443.

⁴ 1882, Walker v. State, 39 Ark. 225; 1889, Jones v. State, 52 id. 347, 12 S. W. 704 (declarations rejected because it was impossible for the declarant to have seen who shot him, and he had therefore no adequate source of knowledge); 1901, Jones v. State, 79 Miss. 309, 30 So. 759 (declaration, by one shot in the back through a window at night, that J. shot her, because he had said that he was going to do so, held inadmissible because of lack of personal knowledge; yet the declaration as to J.'s threat should have been admitted, as concerning a part of the transaction); 1897, State v. Reed, 137 Mo. 125, 38 S. W. 574 (admissible as to whatever the deceased could testify to if on the stand); 1898, Com. v. Roddy, 184 Pa. 274, 39 Atl. 211 (dying identification of murderer; declarant held qualified on the facts). For the general rules, see ante, § 656. Compare the cases cited post, § 1447, some of which can be supported on the present principle.

⁵ 1880, Mockabee v. Com., 78 Ky. 379 (the declarant affirmed a paper previously written, and this was admitted on condition that his memory as to its contents was then clear); 1856, Brown v. State, 32 Miss. 448 (Smith, C. J.: "There are strong reasons for believing that the deceased did not fully understand the declarations as read to him, or that his faculties were so much impaired by the wounds under which he suffered that he was incapable of remembering with distinctness or stating with accuracy the facts and circumstances of the rencontre which resulted in his death"); 1831, Vass' Case, 3 Leigh 863, semble. For the general rules, see ante, § 725.

⁶ 1835, R. v. Fagent, 7 C. & P. 238; 1849, McLean v. State, 16 Ala. 672, 675; 1864, People v. Sanchez, 24 Cal. 26; 1898, State v. Ashworth, 50 La. An. 94, 23 So. 270 (mere asking of specific questions does not exclude); 1901, Worthington v. State, 92 Md. 222, 48 Atl. 355; 1892, Mattox v. U. S., 146 U. S. 152, 13 Sup. 50; 1885, People v. Callaghan, 4 Utah 49, 6 Pac. 49. Contra: Tex. C. Cr. P. 1895, § 788 (see quotation ante, § 1430).

⁷ 1892, R. v. Mitchell, 17 Cox Cr. 503, 507⁺ (dying declarations made in answer to unrecorded questions, excluded, partly because the questions might have been leading); 1899, People v. Fuhrig, 127 Cal. 412, 59 Pac. 693 (long typewritten statement read over without stopping, and then assented to, excluded on the facts). Contra, semble: 1872, People v. Knapp, 26 Mich. 116 (Campbell, J.: "Where they are taken under suspicious circumstances, or drawn out by doubtful means, they are not excluded, but go to the jury for what they are worth").

1880, Hines, J., in Mockabee v. Com., 78 Ky. 332: "Dying declarations are not necessarily either written or spoken. Any method of communication between mind and mind may be adopted that will develop the thought, as the pressure of the hand, a nod of the head, or a glance of the eye."⁸

(b) When the declaration is in writing, the question may arise whether it is his narration at all (ante, § 799). If the declarant has written it, or has signed or otherwise approved it after reading it, or hearing it read aloud to him, it may be offered as his declaration.⁹ Otherwise it is not his declaration, but merely the written statement of the person taking the declaration; and it cannot in such a case be put in as being itself the dying person's declaration;¹⁰ though it may of course be used to refresh the writer's recollection, or may be put in as embodying the writer's recollection (under the principles of §§ 744-764, ante).¹¹ Whether this writing must be offered, instead of an auditor's testimony by recollection, is a different question (examined post, § 1450).

§ 1446. Testimonial Impeachment or Rehabilitation. The dying declaration being in effect a testimonial statement made out of court (ante, § 1424), the declarant is open to impeachment and discrediting in the same way as other witnesses (ante, § 885), so far as such a process is feasible. Thus, impeachment by bad testimonial character (ante, § 922) is allowable,¹ or by ⁸ 1872, R. v. Steele, 12 Cox Cr. 168 (the deceased had told Dr. Patchett his story; then, when dying, and being asked what happened, he said, "Tell him, Patchett"; and P. repeated the story in the declarant's presence; P.'s statement was admitted; Lush, J.: "It is equivalent to aying it himself"); 1903, R. v. Louie, 10 Br. C. 1, 3, 9 (nodding the head, held sufficient); 1858, McHugh v. State, 31 Ala. 323 (the attorney put questions, the attending friends made answers, and the deceased nodded his head to them; excluded, the Court not believing on the facts "that he either perfectly understood the language or was able to have detected the erroneous inference as to his meaning which his friends may honestly have drawn"); 1858, Godfrey v. State, 31 id. 321 (the declarant merely nodded his head to questions by friends, his mind being also weak and lethargic at the time; rejected, because it did not appear that he understood their words or could know what they understood as his meaning); 1897, Wagoner v. Terr., — Ariz., —, 51 Pac. 145 (when asked why the defendant shot him, the deceased said, "You know why"; held admissible, when interpreted by the circumstances as applying to his wife's adultery with the defendant); 1853, Com. v. Casey, 11 Cush. 420 (pointing with a finger, so as to convey a meaning clearly, held sufficient). Compare Luby v. Com., 12 Bush 6 (1876). For the general rules, see ante, §§ 789, 811.

It has been ruled that the expressions must be in form assertive, i. e. that mere exclamations are not to be admitted: 1874, People v. Olmstead, 30 Mich. 435. But this is without reason. If a definite assertive effect is conveyed the form is immaterial.

⁹ 1898, Perry v. State, 102 Ga. 365, 30 S. E. 903 (that it is reduced to writing by another and signed by the deceased, does not exclude); 1900, Freeman v. State, 112 id. 48, 37 S. E. 172 (the deceased's signature is not necessary); 1896, State v. Parham, 48 La. An. 1309, 20 So. 727 (written by a physician, signed by the deceased, and authenticated by a magistrate, admitted); 1885, People v. Callaghan, 4 Utah 49, 6 Pac. 49 (like the next case); 1897, State v. Carrington, 15 id. 480, 50 Pac. 526 (not signed, but assented to on hearing it read over; admitted); 1896, State v. Baldwin, 15 Wash. 15, 45 Pac. 650 (the statement as written down need not be in the deceased's exact language).

¹⁰ 1875, State v. Fraunburg, 40 Ia. 557 (a running memorandum of the statement written by a magistrate, and not read over or signed by the declarant, held not admissible); 1903, Foley v. State, — Wyo., —, 72 Pac. 627 (a memorandum not read over or signed by the deceased, and therefore usable only to refresh the writer's recollection, held not technically itself admissible).

¹¹ 1903, Fuqua v. Com., — Ky., —, 73 S. W. 782 (writing not signed by the deceased, used to aid the writer's memory).

¹ 1896, Lester v. State, 37 Fla. 382, 20 So. 232; 1896, Redd v. State, 99 Ga. 210, 25 S. E. 268; 1898, Perry v. State, 102 id. 365, 30 S. E. 903; 1897, Carver v. U. S., 164 U. S. 694, 17 Sup. 228.

So also for other impeaching qualities (ante, § 933): 1847, State v. Thawley, 4 Harringt. 562 (admitting general evidence of his intemperate habits and of his low state of health at the time).

conduct showing a vengeful or irreverent state of mind at the time (ante, § 950),² or by conviction of crime (ante, § 980),³ or by prior or subsequent inconsistent statements (ante, § 1017).⁴ So also he may be corroborated by evidence of similar consistent statements, so far as this is allowable by the principles of that subject (ante, § 1122).⁵

§ 1447. Rule against Opinion Evidence. The Opinion rule has no application to dying declarations. The theory of that rule (post, § 1918) is that, wherever the witness can state specifically the detailed facts observed by him, the inferences to be drawn from them can equally well be drawn by the jury, so that the witness' inferences become superfluous. Now, since the declarant is here deceased, it is no longer possible to obtain from him by questions any more detailed data than his statement may contain, and hence his inferences are not in this instance superfluous, but are indispensable. Nevertheless, Courts seem to accept the Opinion rule as applicable. Moreover, the rule is by some Courts applied here with more than the ordinary absurdity of results found in the use of that rule; some of the rulings, in their pedantic technicality, would be a scandal to any system of evidence supposed to be based on reason and common sense.¹

² 1899, State v. O'Shea, 60 Kan. 772, 57 Pac. 970 (that the deceased "used profanity" just before his death, admitted); 1897, Carver v. U. S., 164 U. S. 694, 17 Sup. 228 (that the deceased did not believe in future rewards and punishments, admitted). Compare § 1443, ante.

³ 1896, State v. Baldwin, 15 Wash. 15, 45 Pac. 650. Compare § 1445, note 1, ante.

⁴ The authorities are collected ante, § 1033, where the special objection to this kind of evidence, that no prior question can be asked of the declarant, is discussed in detail.

So also impeachment by contradiction (ante, § 1000) may be allowable: 1900, State v. Stuckey, 56 S. C. 576, 35 S. E. 263 (whether irrelevant facts in the declaration could be disproved for impeachment, as an exception to § 1003, ante; not decided).

⁵ But the usual limitations seem to be not always strictly observed: 1858, People v. Glenn, 10 N. C. 32, 36 (even in chief, without any impeachment); 1879, State v. Blackburn, 80 id. 474, 478 (similar statements in support after impeachment by contradiction, admitted); 1897, State v. Craine, 120 id. 601, 27 S. E. 72 (an affidavit made on the same day, admitted).

¹ It must be noted that so far as the declarant's "opinion" is construable as a mere guess, not based on personal observation, it is inadmissible on other principles (ante, §§ 1445, 658), and this may account for some of the following rulings; others also may be supported on the rule (ante, § 1434), that the declarations must relate to the circumstances connected with the death; Ala.: 1893, Sullivan v. State, 102 Ala. 135, 142, 15 So. 264 ("he cut me for nothing," admitted; "I pray God to forgive him," excluded); 1901, Gerald v. State, 128 id. 6, 29 So. 614 ("he killed me for nothing," admitted); Ark.: 1897, Berry v. State, 63 Ark. 382, 38 S. W.

1038 (that the whiskey which the defendant gave him was poisoned, excluded); Ga.: 1868, Whitley v. State, 38 Ga. 70; 1897, White v. State, 100 id. 659, 28 S. E. 423 ("he shot me down like a dog," received); 1897, Kearney v. State, 101 id. 803, 29 S. E. 127 (that the wound was accidentally inflicted by the defendant, excluded); Ind.: 1874, Binns v. State, 46 Ind. 311; 1885, Boyle v. State, 105 id. 469, 472, 5 N. E. 203 (that there was no cause for the killing, allowable); 1898, Lane v. State, 151 id. 511, 51 N. E. 1056 (that the deceased made no attempt to injure the defendant, admitted); 1900, Shankenberger v. State, 154 id. 630, 57 N. E. 519 (that she was "poisoned by my mother-in-law," admitted); Ia.: 1866, State v. Nettlebush, 20 Ia. 257; 1900, State v. Wright, — id. —, 84 N. W. 541 (that the defendant did not intend to shoot him, and that the defendant was crazy, excluded); 1902, State v. Sale, 119 id. 1, 92 N. W. 680, 95 N. W. 193 (declaration of deceased that "he was to blame," excluded; this well shows the absurdity of applying the Opinion rule here); Kan.: 1899, State v. O'Shea, 60 Kan. 772, 57 Pac. 970 (that the deceased and the defendant were the "best of friends," etc., excluded); Ky.: 1876, Collins v. Com., 12 Bush 272; 1889, Com. v. Matthews, 89 Ky. 293, 12 S. W. 333; 1898, Jones v. Com., — id. —, 46 S. W. 217 (that the defendant had shot him "for nothing," excluded); 1903, Henderson v. Com., — id. —, 72 S. W. 781 ("I know that one of the two shot me," admitted); La.: 1898, State v. Ashworth, 50 La. An. 94, 23 So. 270 ("that he was to blame with his own death," admitted, the accused offering them); Miss.: 1883, Payne v. State, 61 Miss. 163; 1897, Powers v. State, 74 id. 777, 21 So. 657 ("You have killed me without cause," admitted); 1898, Lipscomb v. State, 75 Miss. 559, § 1448. Rule of Completeness. The application of the doctrine of Completeness (post, § 2094) is here peculiar. The statement must not convey a part only of the whole affair as it exists in the declarant's recollection; it must be complete as far as it goes. But it is immaterial how much of the whole affair of the death is related, provided the statement includes all that the declarant wished or intended to include in it. Thus, if an interruption (by death or by an intruder) cuts short a statement which thus remains clearly less than that which the dying person wished to make, the fragmentary statement is not receivable, because the intended whole is not there, and the whole might be of a very different effect from that of the fragment; yet if the dying person finishes the statement he wishes to make, it is no objection that he has told only a portion of what he might have been able to tell:

1873, Barrett, J., in State v. Patterson, 45 Vt. 308, 313: "What we understand is . . . not that the declarant must state every thing that constituted the res gestæ of the subject of his statement, but that his statement of any given fact should be a full expression of all that he intended to say as conveying his meaning as to such fact."¹

§ 1449. Rule of Producing Original of a Document. The rule that, where a writing is desired to be proved, the original must be produced or else

23 So. 210 ("(1) I am going to die; I have been dead; the good Lord has sent me back to tell you that (2) Dr. L. has killed me, has poisoned me with a capsule he gave me to-night, (3) that G. J. had insured his life, and had hired Dr. L. to kill him"; these words were uttered between convulsions; held, by a majority that (1) and (3) could be separated, and that (2) was admissible, not being opinion evidence, Magruder, J., diss.; the dissenting opinion is a pitiable instance of the barren quibbling to which this question leads; and the reprehensible practice of allowing a minority judge to write the chief opinion makes it difficult to unearth the points decided); N. Y.: 1875, People v. Shaw, 63 N. Y. 40; 1878, Brotherton v. People, 75 id. 159; N. C.: 1872, State v. Williams, 67 N. C. 12, 17 ("It was E. W. who shot me, though I did not see him," excluded); 1896, State v. Mace, 118 id. 1244, 24 S. E. 798 ("They have murdered me," solemnly held not to be "an expression of opinion with respect to the degree of the homicide"); 1902, State v. Dixon, 131 id. 808, 42 S. E. 944 (that the assailant looked like defendant, allowed); Oh.: 1870, Wroe v. State, 20 Oh. St. 469; Or.: 1886, State v. Saunders, 14 Or. 305, 12 Pac. 441 ("he shot me down like a dog," admitted); 1893, State v. Foot Yon, 24 id. 61, 75, 32 Pac. 1031, 33 Pac. 537 (positive identification, admitted; opinion in general excluded); S. C.: 1900, State v. Lee, 58 S. C. 335, 36 S. E. 706 ("he shot me for nothing," admitted); Utah: 1897, State v. Kessler, 15 Utah 142, 49 Pac. 293 ("he shot me down like a rabbit," admitted); 1897, State v. Carrington, 15 id. 480, 50 Pac. 526 (a statement as to the intent of a person performing an operation on the womb of a deceased, excluded on the principle of § 1964, post); Wash.: 1894, State v. Gile, 8 Wash. 12, 22, 35 Pac. 417 (that he was "butchered," admitted); W. Va.: 1900,

State v. Burnett, 47 W. Va. 731, 35 S. E. 933 (a declaration that "I think C. B. did the shooting, because he has threatened to do it," excluded as opinion; here properly excluded, on the principle of § 658, ante).

¹ Accord: 1849, McLean v. State, 16 Ala. 672, 675 ("the declaration in this case was complete, and it is not shown that he intended or desired to connect it with any other fact or circumstance explanatory of it"; admitted); 1846, Ward v. State, 3 Blackf. 101, 102 (the substance suffices); 1866, State v. Nettlebush, 20 Ia. 260; 1898, State v. Ashworth, 50 La. An. 94, 23 So. 270 (the statement must be complete "to the extent that the deceased desired to make it"; but that it consists of several remarks between which other conversation took place is immaterial); 1901, 1902, State v. Carter, 106 La. 407, 30 So. 895, 107 id. 792, 32 So. 183 ("a dying declaration must go in as a whole, and is not rendered inadmissible because some of its statements of themselves, and if standing alone, would be inadmissible"); 1850, Nelms v. State, 13 Sm. & M. 505 (the substance of his statement suffices); 1893, State v. Johnson, 118 Mo. 491, 504, 24 S. W. 229 (obscure statement); 1831, Vass' Case, 3 Leigh 864; 1870, Jackson v. Com., 19 Gratt. 668. Compare the cases cited, post, §§ 2097, 2099.

If a part only is proved, the opponent may prove the remainder: 1892, Mattox v. U. S., 146 U. S. 140, 152, 13 Sup. 50; compare the cases cited post, § 2115.

If the statement was given by answers to questions put, it is not indispensable that the questions should be offered also; 1903, R. v. Louie, 10 Br. C. 1, 8; 1900, Com. v. Birriolo, 197 Pa. 371, 47 Atl. 355 (a dying statement written down by another person may be used, though it contained the answers only and not the questions).

accounted for (ante, § 1179), applies here as everywhere, and is not disputed. It must be noted, however, that this rule applies even where the document is not regarded (under the principle of the following section) as the exclusive evidence of the declaration. That is, if in such a jurisdiction a bystander's oral account of the declaration is offered, the writing need not be produced; but if it is the substance of the writing which he purports to give, the absence of the writing must first be accounted for.¹

§ 1450. Rule of Preferring Written Testimony. The principles which determine whether a written report of another person's statement is to be preferred to oral testimony, and must therefore be produced, have already been examined in their general applications (ante, §§ 1326, 1332). It is, however, more convenient to consider here their application to dying declarations.

(a) Where an auditor of a dying declaration makes in written form a note or report of the oral utterances, this written statement of the auditor is not preferred evidence, and need not be produced; for there is not and never was any principle of evidence preferring a person's written memorandum of testimony to his or another's oral or recollection testimony.¹ Nor is the case different when the person thus making the written report was a magistrate having power to administer oaths or take testimony on a preliminary examination;² for such a person has no duty or authority by law to report dying declarations, and it would be solely by virtue of an express duty that a magistrate's report could be preferred to other witnesses (ante, § 1326).

(b) Where a written memorandum or report thus made is read over to the declarant and signed or assented to by him, the writing thus becomes a second and distinct declaration by him. The first oral statement is not merged in the later written one, because, since the transaction is not a contract or other legal act between two parties thereto, the rule of Integration, or Parol Evidence rule (post, § 2425), has no application. The first and oral declaration is therefore provable without producing the later written one.³ Nevertheless,

¹ Compare the general principle, ante, § 1231.

² To the following add the cases in note 3, infra, as also involving the same ruling: 1835, Anderson v. State, 79 Ala. 5, 8 (declaration reduced to writing, but not read over to deceased or signed; writing not preferred); 1903, Jarvis v. State, — id. —, 34 So. 1025 (similar); 1879, State v. Sullivan, 51 Ia. 142, 146, 50 N. W. 572 (declaration reduced to writing but not signed; writing not preferred); 1885, State v. Holcomb, 86 Mo. 371, 377 (written down by another; writing not preferred); 1881, Allison v. Com., 99 Pa. 17, 33 (declaration reduced to writing, but not read over to the deceased nor signed; writing not preferred). Contra: 1880, Epperson v. State, 5 Lea 291, 297 (where there is but one declaration, and a bystander reduces it to writing, this is preferred; but perhaps not, in proving "an independent declaration at the same interview"). The question came up, but was avoided, in 1765, in Lord Byron's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 1222.

³ 1838, Beets v. State, Meigs 106, semble

(written notes of a dying declaration sworn to before a justice, not preferred). Contra: 1722, R. v. Reason and Tranter, 16 How. St. Tr. 33 (assumed by all the judges as law; quoted in note 5, infra). For the rule that the magistrate must be called to the stand, and not merely his writing used, see post, § 1667.

³ 1879, Com. v. Haney, 127 Mass. 455 (declarations reduced to writing and signed by deceased; the writer allowed to testify to oral declarations, using the writing to refresh his memory; Ames, J.: "The words used by the deceased were none the less primary evidence for having been taken down by a bystander in writing; they may be testified to by any one who heard and remembers them; the written statement was a contemporary memorandum of what he said"); 1892, State v. Whitson, 111 N. C. 695, 697, 16 S. E. 332 (declaration taken in writing by A, and used by A to refresh memory; writing not the preferred evidence, though signed and sworn to by deceased); 1838, Beets v. State, Meigs 106, semble (cited in note 2, supra).

the majority of Courts, accepting the superficial analogy of the Parol Evidence rule or of Depositions (ante, §§ 799, 802), require the writing to be used, excluding testimony to the oral statement.⁴ It may be noted that of course so far as the proponent is offering to prove the terms of the writing, not of the oral utterance, the writing must be produced (ante, § 1449).

(c) Where the declarant makes one oral statement, and afterwards at another time a second statement, the latter being in writing or reduced to writing, there are here two distinct statements, and either one may be offered without testifying to the other; for the principle of Completeness (ante, § 1448) requires only that the whole of a single utterance should be offered together, and in the present instance the declarant, though referring to the same occurrence, is nevertheless making distinct statements, each of which is independently admissible. It is thus clear (1) that separate oral utterances are admissible, even though the written one has been proved; (2) that, even before or without proving the written one, the separate oral ones are admissible, — though on the latter point the Courts are not always explicit.⁵

(d) That a magistrate's report of the declaration should be regarded as conclusive, so as to forbid a showing by other testimony of what was really

⁴ 1835, R. v. Gay, 7 C. & P. 230, Coleridge, J. (declaration taken down, then signed by the declarant; the writing preferred to the writer's oral testimony); 1893, Boulden v. State, 102 Ala. 78, 84, 15 So. 341 (declaration "reduced to writing" in an unspecified way, preferred, if available); 1858, People v. Glenn, 10 Cal. 32, 37 (declaration reduced to writing and signed, preferred to oral testimony; oral declarations at a different time also allowed, the written one being first proved); 1860, State v. Tweedy, 11 Ia. 350, 359 (declaration reduced to writing at the time and signed; the writing preferred; but oral statements at other times admissible); 1895, Saylor v. Com., 97 Ky. 184, 30 S. W. 390; 1892, King v. State, 91 Tenn. 617, 650, 20 S. W. 169; 1876, People v. Tracy, 1 Utah 343, 346 (called "the best evidence"; here signed by the declarant).

⁵ 1722, R. v. Reason and Tranter, 16 How. St. Tr. 33 (Pratt, L. C. J.: "You know in the Court of Chancery, when the party is examined on his oath, he gives in a first answer, and on exceptions taken to it he gives in a second, and so a third; all these are taken but as one answer and entire confession of the party. . . . [Now in this case of alleged murder] this minister came to enquire of this [dying] gentleman about the circumstances of his death; after that, the same gentleman is present when the justices of the peace come; thereupon the justices of the peace desire him to take it in writing; he asks the same questions as he did before, and they are taken in writing; he takes it designing to make the first examination more authentic to charge the person that gives the examination. Now really, when all this is done, the examination of him before the justice, taken in writing by the same person that enquired of him before, and all this done in order to perfect and consum-mate the examination, whether you will not take them both together as one entire account given by the deceased?"; Fortescue, J., thought differently: "I think we should allow what was said at other times to be given in evidence, because the first is no examination, because no justice of the peace then present, so that the examination stands distinctly by itself," and this opinion prevailed); 1859, Collier v. State, 20 Ark. 36, 44 (declarations made on three different occasions, on the last two being reduced to writing; the first statements received, without producing the others); 1858, People v. Glenn, 10 Cal. 32, 37 (see note 4, supra); 1868, People v. Vernon, 35 id. 49; 1900, Morrison v. State, 42 Fla. 149, 28 So. 97 (any one of separate written statements, admissible without the others); 1898, Dunn v. People, 172 Ill. 582, 50 N. E. 137 (statements at several times; reduction to writing on one occasion does not exclude oral testimony of the statements "on other occasions"); 1898, Lane v. State, 151 Ind. 511, 51 N. E. 1056 (other and oral statements not excluded); 1860, State v. Tweedy, 11 Ia. 350, 359 (see note 4, supra); 1903, Hendrickson v. Com., — Ky. —, 73 S. W. 764 (other statements made "about or subsequent to the drafting" of the paper signed by the deceased, admitted); 1882, People v. Simpson, 48 Mich. 474, 478, 12 N. W. 662 (oral declarations at different times, admissible, semble); 1880, Epperson v. State, 5 Lea 291, 297, semble (see note 1, supra); 1897, State v. Carrington, 15 Utah 480, 50 Pac. 526 (oral declarations, afterwards reduced to writing and assented to; all admissible); 1902, Herd v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 575, 67 S. W. 495 (other statements, made at the same time with one reduced to writing and signed, held admissible; Henderson, J., diss.).

said by the declarant, has already been noted as an unsound principle (ante, § 1349). It seems not to have been applied to dying declarations.

§ 1451. Judge and Jury. (a) That the judge is to pass on the preliminary conditions necessary to the admissibility of evidence is unquestioned (post, § 2550). It follows, as of course, that, since a consciousness of impending death is according to the foregoing principles legally essential to admissibility, the judge must determine whether that condition exists before the declaration is admitted.¹

(b) After a dying declaration, or any other evidence, has been admitted, the weight to be given to it is a matter exclusively for the jury. They may believe it or may not believe it; but, so far as they do or do not, their judgment is not controlled by rules of law. Therefore, though they themselves do not suppose the declarant to have been conscious of death, they may still believe the statement; conversely, though they do suppose him to have been thus conscious, they may still not believe the statement to be true. In other words, their canons of ultimate belief are not necessarily the same as the preliminary legal conditions of admissibility, whose purpose is an entirely different one (ante, § 29). It is therefore erroneous for the judge, after once admitting the declaration, to instruct the jury that they must reject the declaration, or exclude it from consideration, if the legal requirement as to consciousness of death does not in their opinion exist. No doubt they may reject it, on this ground or on any other;² but they are not to be expected to follow a definition of law intended only for the judge. Nevertheless, this heresy has obtained sanction in a few jurisdictions;³ it is analogous to that already discussed in reference to a jury's use of confessions (ante, § 861).

§ 1452. Declarations usable by Either Party. Owing to the present peculiar limitation of this evidence to public prosecutions for homicide, and

¹ A contrary ruling was made by L. C. B. Eyre, in 1790, R. v. Woodcock, Leach Cr. L., 3d ed., 563; but this was subsequently repudiated in England, and the principle as stated above does not seem to have been since doubted: 1816, R. v. Hucks, 1 Stark. 521 (Ellenborough, L. C. J., said this was the "unanimous opinion" of the judges here, on a consultation from Ireland; "it might as well," Mr. Starkie adds, "he left to a jury to say whether a witness ought to be sworn, or whether he is not incapacitated by ignorance or infamy or any other cause from giving evidence upon oath"); 1896, Com. v. Bishop, 165 Mass. 148, 42 N. E. 560; 1887, People v. Smith, 104 N. Y. 491, 504, 10 N. E. 873 ("It cannot be left to the jury [in the first instance] to say whether the deceased thought he was dying or not, for that must be decided by the judge before he permits the declaration to be given in evidence").

So also for the opinion rule: 1901, Jones v. State, 79 Miss. 309, 30 So. 759 (whether a declaration is matter of opinion is for the Court to determine before submission to the jury; State v. Williams, N. C., infra, note 2, distinguished).

² 1899, Bush v. State, 109 Ga. 120, 34 S. E. 298 (the jury, "in passing upon the value and weight of the evidence," are to consider whether declarant was at the point of death and conscious of it); 1902, State v. Phillips, 118 Ia. 660, 92 N. W. 876 (the jury are to reconsider it under all the circumstances); 1898, State v. Sexton, 147 Mo. 89, 48 S. W. 452 (the judge passes on admissibility, but the jury may be allowed to weigh the value); 1872, State v. Williams, 67 N. C. 12, 17 (the judge must pass on admissibility).

³ 1876, Jackson v. State, 56 Ga. 235 (instruction to the jury to decide whether the statement was made at the point of death, held proper); 1878, Dunnias v. State, 62 id. 58, 62 (same); 1899, Smith v. State, 110 id. 255, 34 S. E. 204 (instruction that, if jury thought the declarant not at point of death nor conscious of it, they must not consider the declaration, held proper); 1903, Anderson v. State, 117 id. 255, 43 S. E. 835; 1903, Smith v. State, 118 id. 61, 44 S. E. 817; 1895, Com. v. Brewer, 164 Mass. 577, 42 N. E. 92 (an instruction "You are not to consider the statement . . . unless you are satisfied . . . that he believed that there was no hope of life," held proper); 1899, Hopkins v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 53 S. W. 619 (the trial Court allowed to "submit the question to the jury").

the tenor of the declarations usually made by the dying person, it has sometimes been argued that the declarations cannot be used by the accused. But the argument has no foundation whatever, and has been generally repudiated.¹

¹ 1848, Moore v. State, 12 Ala. 767; 1898, People v. Southern, 120 Cal. 645, 53 Pac. 214; 1886, State v. Saunders, 14 Or. 304, 12 Pac. 441; 1892, Mattox v. U. S., 146 U. S. 151, 13 Sup. 50. Contra, semble: 1836, R. v. Scaife, 1 Moo. & Rob. 552, 2 Lew. Cr. C. 150 (a declaration was after doubt received in favor of the prisoner, but as influencing the amount of punishment); 1872, People v. McLaughlin, 44 Cal. 435, per Wallace, C. J. (the declarations cannot be offered by the accused).

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE.

TOPIC II: STATEMENTS OF FACTS AGAINST INTEREST.

CHAPTER XLVIII

§ 1455. In general; Statutes.

1. The Necessity Principle.

§ 1456. Death, Absence, Insanity, etc., as making the Witness Unavailable; Receipts of a Third Person.

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee.

§ 1457. General Principle.

§ 1458. Statements predicating a Limited Interest in Property.

§ 1459. Same: Other Statements (Admissions, etc.) about Land, discriminated.

§ 1460. Statements predicating a Fact against Pecuniary Interest; Indorsements of Payment; Receipts.

§ 1461. Statements of Sundry Facts against Interest.

§ 1462. The Fact, not the Statement, to be against Interest.

§ 1463. Facts may or may not be against Interest according to Circumstances, or according to the Parties in dispute.

§ 1464. No Motive to Misrepresent; Preponderance of Interest; Credit and Debit Entries.

§ 1465. Statement admissible for All Facts Contained in it; Separate Entries.

§ 1466. Against Interest at the Time of the Statement; Creditor's Indorsement of Payment.
§ 1467. Statement to be made Ante Litem Motam.

§ 1468. Disserving Interest to be shown by Independent Evidence.

§ 1469. Statements may be Oral as well as Written.

3. Testimonial Qualifications and Other Independent Rules of Evidence and Substantive Law.

§ 1471. Testimonial Qualifications.

§ 1472. Authentication.

§ 1473. Tenant's Statements used against Landlord's Title.

§ 1474. Principal's Statements as against Surety.

§ 1475. Distinction between Statements against Interests, Admissions, and Confessions.

4. Arbitrary Limitations.

§ 1476. History of the Exception; Statement of Fact against Penal Interest excluded; Confessions of Crime by a Third Person.

§ 1477. Same: Policy of this Limitation.

§ 1455. In general; Statutes. This exception may be traced back as early as any of the others, namely, to the early 1700s. The historical development can be more particularly noted under certain details of the rule (post, §§ 1464, 1476). The exception presupposes, like most of the others, first, a Necessity for resorting to hearsay (ante, § 1421), i. e. the death of the declarant, or some other condition rendering him unavailable for testimony in court; and, secondly, a Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness (ante, § 1422),— in this instance, the circumstance that the fact stated, being against the declarant's interest, is not likely to have been stated untruthfully. There is also to be considered (ante, § 1424) the bearing of other independent rules of evidence; and finally, there are certain arbitrary limitations resting on no reason at all.

In a few jurisdictions there are statutory enactments purporting to deal with this exception.¹ They are, however, for the most part obstructive or

¹ Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1946 ("The entries and other writings of a decedent, made at or near the time of the transaction and in a position to know the facts stated therein" are admissible

"1, When the entry was made against the interest of the person making it"); § 1853 ("The declaration, act, or omission of a decedent, having sufficient knowledge of the subject, against confusing rather than helpful, for they either merely restate, in a form too concise to be useful, the established common-law rule, or they mingle in inextricable confusion certain fragments of this and other exceptions. Their specific contributions to the details of the exception may be noted under the respective details.

There was a time when the present exception was by some supposed not to exist in this country at all;² but even at that time it had in fact received recognition in sundry rulings; and it is to-day everywhere fully accepted, except perhaps in the courts of Maine.³

1. The Necessity Principle.

§ 1456. Death, Absence, Insanity, etc., as making Witness Unavailable. The Necessity Principle (ante, § 1421), as here applied, signifies the impossibility of obtaining other evidence from the same source, the declarant being unavailable in person on the stand. Whenever the witness is practically unavailable, his statements should be received. Death is universally conceded to be sufficient:

1833, Williams, J., in Fitch v. Chapman, 10 Conn. 11: "The cases where such evidence is admitted seem to proceed generally upon the principle that, by the decease of the person, better evidence cannot be had."¹

The principle of necessity is broad enough to assimilate other causes; but the rulings upon causes other than death are few. They are ill-judged, so far as they do not recognize the general principle of unavailability. *Illness*² and *insanity*³ should be equally sufficient to admit the statements; as well his pecuniary interest, is also admissible as evidence to that extent against his successor in interest"; § 1870, par. 4 ("The act or declaration of a deceased person, done or made against his interest in respect to his real property" is admissible); Ga. Code 1895, § 5180 ("Declarations of a person in possession of property, in disparagement of his own title, are admissible in favor of any one, and against privies"); § 5181 ("The declarations and entries of a person, since deceased, against his interest, and not made with a view to pending litigation, are admissible in evidence in any case"); Ida. Rev. St. 1887, § 5996 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946); Ia. Code 1897, § 4622 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946); Mont. C. C. P. 1895, §§ 3129, 3146, par. 4, 3237 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1853, 1870, par. 4, 1946); Nebr. Comp. St. 1899, § 5919 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946); Or. C. C. P. 1892, §§ 689, 706, par. 4 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1853, 1870, par. 4); § 767 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946, inserting after "deceased" "or without the State," and after "writings," "of a like character"); Utah Rev. St. 1898, § 3406 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946).

² Smith's Leading Cases, American notes, 1st ed., II, 233 (1844), 8th ed., II, 381. It was also ignored, not repudiated, in a few early cases, such as Longenecker v. Hyde, 6 Binn. 1 (1813).

³ 1886, Libby v. Brown, 78 Me. 492, 7 Atl. 114.

¹ 1815, Manby v. Curtis, 1 Price 229; 1839, Phillips v. Cole, 10 A. & E. 106; 1825, Barrows v. White, 4 B. & C. 328; 1829, Spargo v. Brown, 9 id. 936, semble; 1855, Papendick v. Bridgwater, 5 E. & B. 178; 1896, Bertrand v. Heaman, 11 Man. 205, 210; 1884, Trammell v. Hudmon, 78 Ala. 223; 1864, Mahaska Co. v. Ingalls, 16 Ia. 81; 1860, Currier v. Gale, 14 Gray 504; 1860, Webster v. Paul, 10 Oh. St. 536; 1846, Lowry v. Moss, 1 Strobb. 64; 1840, Davis v. Fuller, 12 Vt. 189. In two early Nisi Prius rulings, long outlawed by time and later cases, the statements of living witnesses were admitted: 1795, Walker v. Broadstock, 1 Esp. 458; 1803, Doe v. Rickarby, 5 id. 4.

² Contra, 1813, Harrison v. Blades, 3 Camp. 458 (the declarant had suffered an apoplectic fit and was by physicians said to be in extremis; Ellenborough, L. C. J.: "No case has gone so far [as to admit such evidence] and I am afraid to establish a precedent. It is difficult to determine when a patient is past all hope of cure. If such a relaxation of the rules of evidence were permitted, there would be very sudden indispositions and recoveries").

³ 1864, Mahaska Co. v. Ingalls, 16 Ia. 81, semble; 1881, Jones v. Henry, 84 N. C. 324.

as absence from the jurisdiction.⁴ Supervening incompetency through interest stands on the same ground.⁵

The written receipt of a third person, acknowledging payment of money, is undoubtedly a statement of a fact against interest (post, § 1461); but it cannot be received, under the present principle, unless the receptor is deceased or otherwise unavailable.⁶

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee.

§ 1457. In General Principle. The basis of the exception is the principle of experience that a statement asserting a fact distinctly against one's interest is entirely unlikely to be deliberately false or heedlessly incorrect, and is thus sufficiently guaranteed, though oath and cross-examination are wanting:

1861, Blackburn, J., in Smith v. Blakey, L. R. 2 Q. B. 326: "When the entries are against the pecuniary interest of the person making them, and never could be made available for the person himself, there is such a probability of their truth that such statements have been admitted after the death of the person making them."

1879, Fitzgibbon, C. J., in Lalor v. Lalor, 4 L. R. Ire. 681: "The interest against which the statement appears to be made . . . [is required] in order to supply that sanction which, after the death of the party, is accepted as a substitute for an oath."

1832, Rogers, J., in Gibblehouse v. Stong, 3 Rawle 437: "The principle is founded on a knowledge of human nature. Self-interest induces men to be cautious in saying anything against themselves, but free to speak in their own favor. We can safely trust a man when he speaks against his own interest."

1841, Gibson, C. J., in Addams v. Seitzinger, 1 W. & S. 244: "[It rests on] the principle which allows entries or memorandums which were prejudicial to the interest of the writer to be evidence, . . . thus substituting for the sanction of a judicial oath the more powerful sanction of a sacrifice of self-interest."

1879, Cofer, J., in Mercer's Adm'r v. Mackin, 14 Bush 441: "Experience has taught us that when one makes a declaration in disparagement of his own rights or interests it

⁴ 1826, Shearman v. Atkins, 4 Pick. 293; 1903, Pound, C., in South Omaha v. Wrzensinski, — Nebr. —, 92 N. W. 1045 (in a concurring opinion; admitting the letter of a city clerk absent from the jurisdiction); Doubling: 1851, Williams, J., in Gerapulo v. Wieler, 10 C. B. 690, 696. Contra: 1831, Stephen v. Gwenap, 1 Moo. & Rob. 120 (flight of a bankrupt under a criminal charge); 1864, Mahaska Co. v. Ingalls, 16 Ia. 81, semble.

⁵ 1841, Pugh v. McRae, 2 Ala. 394; 1831, Dwight v. Brown, 9 Conn. 93; 1833, Fitch v. Chapman, 10 id. 11; Contra: 1825, Burton v. Scott, 3 Rand. 409.

⁶ 1844, Joplin v. Johnston, 2 Kerr N. Br. 541 (mortgagee's receipt for rent); 1839, Newell v. Roberts, 13 Conn. 63, 72; 1826, Shearman v. Atkins, 4 Pick. 283, 293 (assumpsit by guardians against the ward's estate for money spent; receipts for the sums in question were admitted; the referee allowing this only for such persons as were not "alive and within the Commonwealth"); 1896, Silverstein v. O'Brien, 165 Mass. 512, 43 N. E. 496 (receipts for rent, signed by tenants, to show that the offering party was owner, excluded); 1885, Ferris v. Boxell, 34 Minn. 262, 25 N. W. 592 (receipt of third person is not evidence; nor made so by a statute exempting it from authentication if properly recorded); 1818, Cutbush v. Gilbert, 4 S. & R. 551, 555 (receipts by third persons not called, excluded; "his oath is better"); 1825, Morton v. M'Glaughlin, 13 id. 107. Contra: 1796, Alston v. Taylor, 1 Hayw. N. C. 381, 395 (counsel's receipt for a bond taken to sue upon, admitted as given in "the course of business"); 1853, Reed v. Rice, 25 Vt. 171, 186, per Redfield, C. J. (misunderstanding Gilson v. Gilson, 16 id. 464, where the receipt was by an agent of the party). The following passage probably led to misunderstanding on this point: 1842, Greenleaf, Evidence, § 147, note 3: "In auditing the accounts of guardians, administrators, etc., the course is to admit receipts as prima facie sufficient vouchers"; but the authorities cited do not bear this out.

Of course, such receipts of a party-opponent would be receivable as admissions: ante, § 1049.

is generally true, and because it is so the law has deemed it safe to admit evidence of such declarations."¹

The specific applications of this broad principle to the different kinds of facts against interest come now to be considered.

§ 1458. Statements predicating a Limited Interest in Property. A statement predicating of oneself a limited interest instead of a complete title to property asserts a fact decidedly against one's interest, and has always been so regarded. In particular, assertions that one's estate is a leasehold, not a freehold, or that one's possession is not as owner, but merely as agent or as trustee for another, are admissible :

1861, Blackburn, J., in R. v. Birmingham, 1 B. & S. 763 : "Is such a statement [cutting down an interest in realty] admissible to the same extent and for the same purposes as where the effect of the statement is to charge the person with the receipt of money? I neither find any distinction taken between them in any of the cases, nor can I in principle see any. The probability that a man would speak truth (which is the reason assigned for admitting the evidence) is equally great whether the tendency of the declaration is to establish liability for money or to deprive a man of real estate."¹

Such statements may be used in so far as they tend to prove the matter against interest, for example, that some other person is the owner of the higher estate. But they could not be received to prove the matter as to which they were not against interest,—for example, the ownership of the limited estate asserted.²

¹ So also Blackburn, J., in R. v. Birmingham, 1 B. & S. 763; Somerville, J., in Humes v. O'Bryan, 74 Ala. 79.

² Accord: Eng.: 1795, Walker v. Broadstock, 1 Esp. 458; 1803, Doe v. Rickarby, 5 id. 4; 1808, Doe v. Jones, 1 Camp. 367 (whether a locus was part of a copyhold of the defendant; a writing by the deceased former owner of the copyhold, then occupying the locus, that he did not own it but paid rent for it, was admitted for the plaintiff) 1811, Peaceable v. Watson, 4 Taunt. 16; 1835, Carne v. Nicoll, 1 Bing. N. C. 430; 1845, Baron de Bode's Case, 8 Q. B. 243; 1847, Doe v. Langfield, 16 M. & W. 513; 1865, Smith v. Blakey, L. R. 2 Q. B. 326; Can.: 1862, Powell v. Wathen, 5 All. N. Br. 258 (deceased's disclaimer of title, admissible for one charged as executor de son tort of the deceased); U. S.: 1873, Turner v. Tyson, 49 Ga. 165, 169 (admission by the heir, of the genuineness of an ancestor's divesting deed, received); 1892, Lamar v. Pearre, 90 id. 377, 17 S. E. 92 (declarations by a possessor in apparent ownership, that the land had been purchased with trust funds from the sale of other land, admitted); 1846, Doe v. Evans, 1 Blackf. 322 (by a possessor, that he was tenant only, admitted); 1867, Robinson v. Robinson, 22 Ia. 427, 433 (trust declarations, admitted); 1902, Walsh v. Wheelwright, 96 Me. 174, 52 Atl. 649 ("declarations of a deceased occupant of land, made while occupying, in the course of his occupation, as to the character of his occupation, and against his own pecuniary interest, are admissible"); 1860, Currier v. Gale, 14 Gray 504 (statements as to land, admitted); 1843, Pike v. Hayes, 14 N. H. 20; 1845, Rand v. Dodge, 17 id. 359 (declarations indicating possession as agent or tenant merely, not owner, admitted); 1880, Perkins v. Towle, 59 id. 584; 1894, Lyon v. Ricker, 141 N. Y. 225, 36 N. E. 189 (conditions of delivery of a deed; the deceased grantor's declarations, while in possession, that he had made and delivered the deed on certain conditions, admitted); 1880, Melvin v. Bullard, 82 N. C. 37; 1895, Swerdferger v. Hopkins, 67 Vt. 136, 31 Atl. 153 (as to land boundaries, admitted); 1890, Dooley v. Baynes, 86 Va. 644, 10 S. E. 974 (deceased possessor's declarations that he had only a life-estate and could not transfer a fee, admitted); 1901, First National Bank v. Holland, 99 Va. 495, 39 S. E. 126 (husband's declarations of a gift to wife, made when free from debt, admitted).

² 1897, Hollis v. Sales, 103 Ga. 75, 29 S. E. 482 (declaration by a husband that he made a deed to his wife because he was in debt to her, excluded, as not against interest on the question whether the deed was for a valuable consideration).

In Crease v. Barrett, 1 C. M. & R. 931 (1835), and Pike v. Hsyey, 14 N. H. 20 (1843), a declaration as to the extent of one's land was said to differ from a declaration as to the limits of one's interest in it, and to be inadmissible. But both must stand on the same footing; the former should be admitted as indicating that neighboring estates extended at least up to the point named. Accord: 1795, Walker v. Broad- § 1459. Same: Other Statements (Admissions, etc.), about Land, discriminated. There has been in some jurisdictions much confusion through a failure to distinguish certain principles, distinct in themselves, but all finding an application to declarations about land-possession and having only that superficial feature in common.¹ (1) If the issue involves a prescriptive title and adverse possession, the nature of the possession alleged is important, and under the doctrine of Verbal Acts (post, §§ 1778, 1779) the statements and conduct of the possessor are admissible as giving character to the possession and indicating whether it is adverse or not. Here the statements are not taken as assertions, and the Hearsay rule is not applicable. Their chief limitation is that they must accompany the possession which they are supposed to characterize; but the declarant's decease is not a condition. (2) Under the principle of Admissions, the statements of a party-opponent, or his predecessor in title, acknowledging an inferior or different title, may be used (ante, § 1082). Here the main requirements are that the admittor must have had title at the time, and that the admission shall be used only against himself or his successors; but the admittor need not be deceased before the statement can be used. Here, too, no Hearsay exception is involved. (3) In statements offered under the present exception to the Hearsay rule, the declarant must be deceased. Moreover, there must have been an interest at the time to say the contrary, but the statements may be used in any controversy, without regard to the parties concerned. (4) Still dealing with Hearsay exceptions, there are, further, two American doctrines admitting declarations as to boundaries (treated post, §§ 1563-1570); by one of these, obtaining generally, the declarant must not have been an interested party (for example, an owner), and he need not have been in possession; but by the other, in vogue in a few Atlantic jurisdictions, he must have been an owner and must have been on the land at the time. A more detailed analysis of the discriminations between these and other superficially related statements about land is elsewhere made (ante, § 1087, post, § 1780), as well as of the distinction of theory between statements against interest, admissions, and confessions (post, § 1475). There is also to be distinguished the doctrine of substantive law forbidding a tenant to dispute his landlord's title (post, § 1473).

§ 1460. Statements predicating a Fact against Pecuniary Interest; Indorsements of Payments; Receipts. Statements of a fact against pecuniary interest furnish the greatest number of illustrations,¹ and of difficulties as well.

stock, 1 Esp. 458. A unique application of the principle is found in the following: 1855, Allegheny v. Nelson, 25 Pa. 334 ("It was against the interest of N. to expend his time and money in taking out a title for the land as an island, if it was not one. His application therefore was evidence that it was an island").

¹ E. g.: 1845, Smith v. Martin, 17 Conn. 401; 1855, Plimpton v. Chamberlain, 4 Gray 321; 1898, Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Logan, 31 C. C. A. 172, 87 Fed. 637.

¹ The following are miscellaneous instances:

1900, German Ins. Co. v. Bartlett, 188 Ill. 165, 53 N. E. 1075 (creditors' suit for property conveyed to wife by deceased husband; declarations by him before the transfer, that he was indebted to her, admitted); 1898, Keesling v. Powell, 149 Ind. 372, 49 N. E. 265 (statements by a deputy-treasurer that taxes had been paid in, admitted); 1890, Vogely v. Bloom, 43 Minn. 163, 45 N. W. 10 (consideration for a note; entry of a deceased payee of another note, as to its discharge and the making of a new note, admitted); 1903, Quinby v. Ayers, — Nebr. —, 95 N. W.

Perhaps the oldest form was the account kept by a steward or bailiff of sums collected from tenants.² Another instance was the entry of receipt of a tithe-payment in a vicar's books.³ Money-receipts in general have always been conceded to fall under the rule.⁴ Another typical instance was the indorsement, on a note, a bill, or a bond, of payments received;⁵ it would evidence the payment (under this rule), and the act of payment would serve as an acknowledgment of existing debt (or new promise) by the debtor, and this in turn would be sufficient to remove the bar of the statute of limitations.⁶ Other objections, however (noted post, § 1466), impose special restrictions on the use of this class of statements.

§ 1461. Statements of Sundry Facts against Interest. There are many facts which in their ultimate effect may be against proprietary or pecuniary interest, though in their immediate and narrow aspect there may be no such clear character. These facts, however, may nevertheless be facts so decidedly against interest that no one would be inclined falsely to concede their existence. If so, on the general principle (ante, § 1457) they should therefore be admitted. No more precise test can well be formulated, except in the suggestion that the interest injured or the burden imposed by the fact stated should be one so palpable and positive that it would naturally have been present in the declarant's mind.¹ It has by one Court been said that the 464 (deceased's statements that he was insolvent, admitted); 1874, Livingston v. Armonx, 56 N. Y. 519 (receipt by a sheriff admitted).

² See the citations post, § 1476.

³ 1810, Perigal v. Nicholson, 1 Wightw. 63.

⁴ See the cases cited ante, § 1456.

⁵ 1728-29, Searle v. Lord Barrington, 2 Stra. 826, 3 Bro. P. C. 593; 1900, Cunningham v. Davis, 175 Mass. 213, 56 N. E. 2 (mortgagee's indorsement on an original mortgage note, showing discharge, admitted). A credit in an account-book has been held not to have this effect: 1836, Hancock v. Cook, 18 Pick. 32; 1886, Libbey v. Brown, 78 Me. 792, 7 Atl. 114. Compare § 1466, post.

⁶ 1841, Addams v. Seitzinger, 1 W. & S. 244 (Gibson, C. J.: "It is impossible to conceive of a motive for fabricating such a memorandum while the right of action remains unimpaired. To suppose that a creditor would set about the commission of what is at least a moral forgery, to obviate the anticipated consequences of his own apprehended supineness, when he might by bringing immediate suit prevent the occurrence of those consequences altogether, is absurd. . . . It is not to be supposed that a creditor could so far mistake his interest as to sacrifice a part of his debt to save the residue when no part of it was in danger. It is possible that a weak man might do so; but it is inconsistent with the ordinary course of human action").

¹ The following are sundry rulings applying the principle: Eng.: 1861, Smith v. Blakey, L. R. 2 Q. B. 326 (a letter by a clerk, notifying the employer of the arrival of B.'s draft, "with three huge cases, at the office," and going on to state the terms of the contract with B., was rejected; Blackburn, J.: "It is no more than an admission that he has the care of the three chests which have arrived at the office, and the possibility that this statement might make him liable in case of their being lost is an interest of too remote a nature to make the statement admissible in evidence"; 1877, Sly v. Sly, L. R. 2 P. D. 91 (declaration by one raising a loan that his estate was a life interest under a will, admitted to show the existence of the will); 1891, Flood v. Russell, 29 L. R. Ire. 96 (declarations by a wife as to the existence of a will of her husband by which she profited less than by his intestacy, admitted); Can.: 1902, Yuill v. White, 5 N. W. Terr. 275, 291 (the mere statement of the terms of a contract is not of a fact against interest); U. S.: 1899, Georgia R. & B. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 108 Ga. 507, 34 S. E. 316 (wife's action for husband's death; the husband's statement of his careless conduct, admitted); 1901, State v. Alcorn, 7 Ida. 599, 64 Pac. 1014 (declarations as to pregnancy, by one seeking an abortion, admitted, chiefly on this ground); 1876, Ross v. McQuiston, 45 Ia. 147 (a testator's declaration, when sane, that he had not been in his right mind for twenty years, admitted); 1898, Moehn v. Moehn, 105 id. 710, 75 N. W. 521 (declaration by an indorser of a note, that it was not paid and that it belonged to his wife, held not against interest); 1898, Walker v. Brantner, 59 Kan. 117, 52 Pac. 80 (action for the death of the plaintiff's husband, a railway engineer; declarations of the husband, after the injury, that he could have avoided it by keeping a lookout, admitted); 1889, Horsford v. Rowe, 41 Minn. 247, 42 N. W. 1018. (Dickinson, J.: "Declarations by a person to liability involved in the fact stated must not be a mere conditional or contingent one.² But this limitation cannot be supported, and would, if consistently carried out, practically nullify the exception in this respect. The liability to pay conditionally is none the less a liability; moreover every contract is subject to some conditions imposed by implication of law. The incurring of a contract liability of any sort is on principle a fact against interest.³

§ 1462. The Fact, not the Statement, to be against Interest. It must be remembered that it is not merely the statement that must be against interest, but the fact stated. It is because the fact is against interest that the open and deliberate mention of it is likely to be true. Hence the question whether the statement of the fact could create a liability is beside the mark.¹

§ 1463. Facts may or may not be against Interest according to Circumstances or according to the Parties in dispute. A fact thus stated may or may not be against interest according to the circumstances. For example, a statement that one is not a partner in a certain firm states a fact which favors one's interest if the firm is insolvent (and a deficit is therefore to be made up), but disfavors one's interest if the firm is solvent (and profits are thus to be shared); while a statement that one is a partner in the firm is for and against interest in just the reverse situations.¹

Again, the same fact may or may not be against interest according to the parties' situation in the case in which it comes into dispute; it may be against interest in one aspect, but in favor of interest in another.²

show that he had executed a will, or that he had not executed a will, or that he had revoked his will, . . . are not to be regarded, in general, as declarations against interest, for the acts to which the declarations relate, and the consequences of such acts, are wholly within the control of the person whose declaration is in question"); 1902, Halvorsen v. Moon & K. L. Co., 87 id. 18, 91 N. W. 28 (deceased employee's statement that a fire in a room in his charge had been caused by an act of negligence on his part, admitted; good opinion); 1894, Farrell v. Weitz, 160 Mass. 288, 35 N. E. 783 (admissions of paternity by a deceased person, not receivable for the defendant in bastardy); 1896, Lucas v. U. S., 163 U. S. 612, 16 Sup. 1168 (a statement that the declarant did not belong to the Choctaw Nation, excluded; but the subject is confused with that of Admissions); 1881, Tate v. Tate's Ex'r, 75 Va. 532 (a memorandum of the receipt of bonds deposited with the writer as bailee without reward, held not sufficiently against interest).

² 1843, R. v. Worth, 4 Q. B. 134 (the entry was: "April 4th 1824, W. Worsell came [as farm-hand]; and to have for the half-year 40 s." Lord Denman, C. J.: "The book here does not show any entry operating against the interest of the party. The memorandum could only fix upon him a liability on proof that the services had been performed.")

³ 1850, White v. Chouteau, 10 Barb. 209 (incurring an obligation to reimburse a surety); 1859, People v. Blakeley, 4 Park. Cr. C. 185

(executing a note); 1889, Hosford v. Rowe, 41 Minn. 247, 42 N. W. 1018 (a husband said that he had destroyed an antenuptial agreement reserving to himself power to will away from his wife more than the statute permitted).

¹ This has been misunderstood in the following case: 1869, Western Maryland R. Co. v. Manro, 32 Md. 280 (Brent, J., rejecting a statement by a collector that he had received money from X. in payment of stock-subscriptions: "How the declaration offered was against the interest of M. [the collector], we have been unable to discover. It did not create a debt or establish a liability on his part to pay a sum of money to any person or body corporate. It did not furnish any ground, or pretext even, upon which he might have been sued or proceeded against either in law or equity").

² 1857, Raines' Adm'r v. Raines' Cred'rs, 30 Ala. 428; 1883, Humes v. O'Bryan, 74 id. 79.

³ 1883, Chase v. Smith, 5 Vt. 557 (the plaintiff sued for services rendered when a minor; the defendant offered an entry in his books crediting the plaintiff's services, but to his father, who owed the defendant money, and not to the plaintiff; it was rejected. Here the entry was against his interest so far as concerned the rendering of the services. But that was not disputed. As to whether the contract was with the plaintiff or his father, it was obviously the defendant's interest to attribute it to the father, against whom he had a set-off; hence on this point the entry was not against his interest).

§ 1464. No Motive to Misrepresent; Preponderance of Interest; Credit and Debit Entries. It has sometimes been said, loosely and in analogy to other Hearsay exceptions, that there must be no motive to misrepresent; this being put as an additional requirement.¹ But there is no such additional requirement. The real object of this mode of statement is to furnish a test for a not uncommon situation, — the situation in which, along with the disserving interest, there is also a more or less palpable interest to be served by the fact. The real question is: Shall we attempt to strike a balance between the two opposing interests and admit the statement only if on the whole the disserving interest preponderates in probable influence? Or shall we regard the disserving interest as sufficient to admit, and leave the other merely to affect the credit of the statement? The former alternative seems the proper one, and is generally followed.² It must be noted, however, that so great a judge as Sir George Jessel has said that the latter alternative is the proper one, i. e. the counter-interest should affect only the weight of the evidence.³

A common illustration of this question is the use of a merchant's credit entry of payment received (thus against his interest) which at the same stroke has included (thus in favor of his interest) the debit entry of his claim leading to the payment; and, conversely, an agent's debit and credit account in which the receipts creating liability are on the whole equalled or exceeded by the payments or credits in his favor. When, in the former case, the entry of payment received, or, in the latter case, of an item creating liability, is sought to be used, the argument has been made that since, taking both sides of the account together, the writer is not left with any liability and perhaps appears to have a claim for a balance, the matter cannot be said to be against his interest. This argument, accepted at Nisi Prius in Doe v. Vowles,⁴ has since been repudiated. The answer to it is that the entrant's interest in making

¹ 1833, Gleadow v. Atkins, 3 Tyrw. 301; 1837, Marks v. Lahee, 3 Bing. N. C. 408, Vaughan, J.; 1864, County of Mahaska v. Ingalls, 16 Ia. 81; 1831, Gilchrist v. Martin, 1 Bailey's Eq. 503.

² 1821, Sbort v. Lee, 2 Jac. & W. 477, 489 (entries by one of a college of vicars, who was also proctor or collector, of dues for the college, were objected to; Sir T. Plumer, M. R.: "Though the proctors were members of the body of vicars, that does not affect the ground on which such entries are admitted; there being evidently a balance of interests, and the interest in making the entry the smallest. . . . If we look to the set-off of the opposite interests, the preponderance being against making false charges, reduces him to the situation of any other proctor or collector"). Accord: 1841, Clark v. Wilmot, 1 Y. & C. 54; 2 Y. & C. 259, note; 1862, Ganton v. Size, 22 U. C. Q. B. 483; 1886, Confederation Life Ass. v. O'Donnell, 13 Can. Sup. 225, 229; 1895, Freeman v. Brewster, 93 Ga. 648, 21 S. E. 165. Compare Massey v. Allen, L. R. 13 Ch. D. 562 (1879).

³ 1876, Taylor v. Witham, L. R. 3 Ch. D. 605 (Jessel, M. R.: "It must be prima facie against his interest; that is to say, the natural meaning of the entry standing alone must be against the interest of the man who made it. Of course, if you can prove aliunde that the man had a particular reason for making it, and that it was for his interest, you may destroy the value of the evidence altogether; but the question of admissibility is not a question of value. The entry may be utterly worthless when you get it, if you show any reason to believe that he had a motive for making it, and that though apparently against his interest, yet really it was for it; but that is a matter for subsequent consideration when you estimate the value of the testimony"). Accord: 1857, Raines' Adm'r v. Raines' Cred'rs, 30 Ala. 428.

⁴ 1833, Doe v. Vowles, 1 Moo. & R. 261 (a receipt for payment for work done was objected to because the single entry of the claim and the release could not be against interest, as "this left the writer just in the same situation as before;" this objection was sustained).

the favoring items does not really affect, as a counter-motive, his interest against the individual charging-items; the entries of the latter, taken by themselves, are to be trusted:

1828, Rowe v. Brenton, 3 M. & Ry. 266; it was objected by Mr. Brougham, against a toll-keeper's book, that "where in the same document in which the charge appears, a discharge also appears, which squares the account, or it may be leaves a balance in his favor, then taking the whole together—both sides of the account, the charge and the discharge,—the reason fails, because it no longer is a declaration of a party against his own interest; it may be a declaration for his own interest"; the argument was disapproved; Littledale, J.: "A man is not likely to charge himself for the purpose of getting a discharge"; Tenterden, L. C. J.: "Almost all the accounts that are produced are accounts on both sides. That objection would go to the very root of that sort of evidence."⁵

§ 1465. Statement admissible for All Facts Contained in it; Separate Entries. Since the principle is that the statement is made under circumstances fairly guaranteeing the declarant's sincerity and accuracy (ante, § 1457) it is obvious that the situation guarantees the correctness of whatever he may say while under that influence. In other words, the statement may be accepted, not merely as to the specific fact against interest, but also as to every fact contained in the same statement.¹ As for the limits which it thus becomes necessary to set, these must be largely a matter of judgment in each case. For the phrasing of a rough general test, different language has been used by different judges:

1851, Pollock, C. B., in Percival v. Nanson, 7 Exch. 1: "If the entry is admitted as being against the interest of the party making it, it carries with it the whole statement."

1861, Blackburn, J., in Smith v. Blakey, L. R. 2 Q. B. 326: "[It is] admissible as evidence not merely of the precise fact which is against interest, but of all matters involved in or knit up with the statement."

1869, Hayes, J., in R. v. Exeter, L. R. 4 Q. B. 344: "The principle that a declaration against interest was evidence as to all that formed an essential part of it was long since settled"; here the entry "Paid Brook balance of a quarter's rent due on 24 June last, 3 l." was against proprietary interest, and was admitted to show the payment.²

It may be doubted, however, whether for really difficult cases any additional light is gained from such phrases as "all matters knit up with or involved

⁵ Accord: 1838, Williams v. Greaves, 8 C. & P. 592; 1843, Coleridge, J., in R. v. Worth, 4 Q. B. 134 ("Accounts are evidence, though the writer upon the whole discharges himself"; here admitting an entry of payment after an entry of hiring and agreeing to pay); 1876, Taylor v. Witham, L. R. 3 Ch. D. 605, per Jessel, M. R. The language of Gibbs, C. B., in Bullen v. Michel, 2 Price 413 (1816) is indecisive as to the general principle.

¹ The leading case is Higham v. Ridgway, 10 East 109 (1808); an entry of services rendered as man-midwife, followed by a note "pd. 25th Oct., 1763," was admitted to show the date of the child's birth; Ellenborough, L. C. J.: "It is idle to say that the word paid only shall be admitted in evidence without the context, which explains to what it refers; we must therefore look to the rest of the entry, to see what the demand was which he thereby admitted to be discharged. By the reference to the ledger, the entry there was virtually incorporated with and made a part of the other entry, of which it is explanatory."

² Further examples are as follows: 1792, Stead v. Heaton, 4 T. R. 670 (the receipt was acknowledged, in a town account-book, of money paid by parties disputing a customary payment; a preceding entry on the same page, describing the apportionment of the customary dues, was admitted); 1824, Doe v. Cartwright, Ry. & M. 62; 1840, Davies v. Humphreys, 6 M. & W. 153; 1861, R. v. Birmingham, 1 B. & S. 763 (to prove the amount of rent, a declaration that the declarant was a tenant at the rent of £20 per year was admitted).

in the statement," or "all that forms an essential part of it." These tests give more or less arbitrary results. Going back to the living principle, a more useful test appears to be this: All parts of the speech or entry may be admitted which appear to have been made while the declarant was in the trustworthy condition of mind which permitted him to state what was against his interest. This being the fundamental principle, any reference to collateral records which amounts to a repetition or an incorporation of them would make them a part of the admissible statement.³

In any case, the line of distinction clearly excludes entries made at a subsequent and separate occasion, when the original entry was complete, even though the subsequent entry was made in the same place:

1849, Coltman, J., in Doe v. Beviss, 7 C. B. 504 (the account-roll of a bailiff was offered; the entries charging himself were admitted; the entries discharging himself by payments were rejected): "The reeve has no interest in speaking falsely when he is charging himself; but it is obviously his interest to falsify the account quoad the discharging part of it. . . . Where the charging part of the account refers to the discharging part, it may be necessary to read the whole. So where the latter contains anything explanatory of the former, that may render the whole account admissible. But that is not the case here"; Maule, J.: "It may be that a person, in charging himself, makes a declaration which is not intelligible without looking at the other side of the account; and in that case recourse must necessarily be had to both sides. . . . But the items of discharge in the accounts in question which were not referred to in, or necessary to explain, the items of charge which were admitted and read were properly rejected. The presumption that these entries are false is at least as strong as the presumption that the others are true"; Cresswell, J.: "If the discharging part of the account be necessarily resorted to for the purpose of explaining the charging part, it may be evidence."⁴

§ 1466. Against Interest at the Time of the Statement; Creditor's Indorsement of Payment. The fact stated must of course have been against interest at the time of the statement; else the influence for correctness would not operate.¹ The chief application of this corollary is to indorsements of payment on bonds or notes (ante, § 1460). Here it is obviously of the highest interest to the creditor to have the debt revived after the statutory period of limitation or the time of presuming payment has elapsed; thus a partial payment after that time is on the whole in his interest; and therefore the indorsement of payment must appear to have been made before the period ended:

1809, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Rose v. Bryant, 2 Camp. 322: "I think you must prove that these indorsements were on the bond at or recently after the times when they bore date, before you are entitled to read them. Although it may seem at first sight against

³ As was said by Coleridge, J., in Doe v. Wittcomb, 15 Jur. 778 (1851): "It was a short mode of re-entering it, exactly the same as if it had all been written over again."

⁴ Accord: 1830, Doe v. Tyler, 4 Moo. & P. 381 (a steward rendered an account showing a balance due his employer; at the foot was a further and subsequent entry of the payment of the balance by him; held, per Tindal, C. J., that the former part could not bring in the last entry, which was the evidential one desired); 1840, Knight v. Waterford, 4 Y. & C. 294 (a steward made a debit-entry of rent received and afterwards on the opposite page a credit-entry of a sum paid the tenant as poor-rates; the latter entry was rejected).

¹ Eng.: 1829, Middleton v. Melton, 10 B. & C. 317; 1851, Percival v. Nanson, 7 Ex. 1, per Parke, B.; 1879, Lalor v. Lalor, 4 L. R. Ire. 681, per Fitzgibbon, L. J.

the interest of the obligee to admit part payment, he may thereby in many cases set up the bond for the residue of the sum secured. . . . I am of opinion they cannot be properly admitted unless they are proved to have been written at a time when the effect of them was clearly in contradiction to the writer's interest."²

But in some jurisdictions the possibility of the abuse, by creditors, of the present sort of evidence has led to its prohibition by the Legislature. This prohibition, however, does not imply a repudiation of the principle; it means rather that, since the effect of the indorsement, to be against interest at the time, depends on whether it was made before the statutory period expired, and since the opportunity for antedating is so likely to be abused without possibility of exposure, the whole practice is dangerous:

1882, Berry, J., in Young v. Perkins, 29 Minn. 173, 176, 12 N. W. 515: "The holder of a note, or any person interested in it, can manufacture false evidence of part payment as well after as before the statute of limitations has in fact run against the note, and in this way he can make out a case for himself to which the maker or his representatives must yield, unless he or they can overcome it by opposing evidence. This seems to us to be giving the holder an advantage to which he is not entitled, either in reason or in sound policy or by any analogy of the law of evidence."

Such statutes therefore prohibit the use of indorsements in the creditor's hand.³ The indorsement may, under these statutes, usually be employed if ² Cases cited ante, § 1460, and the following: 1739-40, Turner v. Crisp, 2 Str. 327; 1750, Glynn v. Bank of England, 2 Ves. 43; 1821, Short v. Lee, 2 Jac. & W. 488; 1833, Gleadow v. Atkins, 3 Tyrwh. 301; U. S.: 1903, Small v. Rose, 97 Me. 286, 54 Atl. 726 (deceased payee's entry of part payment in a cash account, dated after the statute had begun to run, excluded under Pub. St. 1883, c. 81, § 100, infra); 1819, Roseboom v. Billington, 17 John. 185 (excluded, because not shown to have been made before the time of limitation); 1871, Bland v. Warren, 65 N. C. 373; 1841, Addams v. Seitzinger, 1 W. & S. 244 (quoted ante, § 1460); 1855, Allegheny v. Nelson, 25 Pa. 334; 1823, Gibson v. Peebles, 2 McCord 419. The cases in Missouri are not in accord; 1869, Carter v. Carter, 44 Mo. 195 (admitted; mode of authenticating the actual time of indorsement, considered); Contra: 1873, Phillips v. Mahan, 52 id. 197 (excluded, not citing Carter v. Carter, supra, and misunderstanding Roseboom v. Billington, N. Y.).

Distinguish the following: 1892, Arbuckle v. Templeton, 65 Vt. 205, 208, 25 Atl. 1095 (action on a note, by T. and M.; indorsement by the plaintiff before statutory bar, of $50 received from T., excluded, because not made on personal knowledge).

Where the obligee is not deceased, the indorsement can of course not be put in, by reason of the principle of § 1456, ante; this was the case in Gupton v. Hawkins (1900), 126 N. C. 81, 35 S. E. 229. But this decision exhibits the fallacy of ignoring the principle of this section; for the Court declares the indorsement of a deceased obligee admissible when offered by the obligor as being "a declaration against interest," and yet inadmissible for the obligee because a "declaration in his favor." Now the time to be considered is the time of making, and if it is then a declaration against interest (as it is when the statute has not run), it is always admissible. Admissibility does not here depend on whether the obligor or the obligee happens afterwards to be the offering party. The obligee cannot offer it if he is living, for the reason of § 1456, ante; but if he is deceased his representative may do so; and if that had not been the case, many of the foregoing precedents on this subject would not be in existence.

³ Eng.: 1823, St. 9 Geo. IV, c. 14, § 3 ("No indorsement or memorandum of any payment written or made [hereafter] . . . upon any promissory note, bill of exchange, or other writing, by or on behalf of the party to whom such payment is made, shall be deemed sufficient proof of such payment, so as to take the case out of the operation of either of said statutes [of limitation]"); B. C. Rev. St. 1897, c. 123, § 14 (similar); Newf. Consol. St. 1892, c. 85, § 5 (similar); N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 167, § 8 (similar); Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 146, § 4 (similar); Mc. Pub. St. 1883, c. 81, § 100 (like the English statute, with the words "or purports to be made" inserted after the words "payment is made"); this statute began as Rev. St. 1841, c. 146, § 23, and changed the rule as laid down in 1835, in Coffin v. Bucknam, 12 Me. 471; compare § 1460, ante; Mass. Pub. St. 1882, c. 197, § 16, Rev. L. 1902, c. 202, § 13 (substantially like the Maine statute); this statute began as St. 1834, c. 182, § 3, and changed the rule as recognized in 1836, in Hancock v. Cook, 18 Pick. 32 (where the rule was not directly involved, and the entry was the debtor assented to it; but in that case it is dealt with directly as an acknowledgment by the debtor himself, and not as the creditor's entry against interest.⁴

§ 1467. Statement to be made Ante Litem Motam. It is sometimes said that the statement (as in other hearsay exceptions) must have been made before litigation began.¹ But this is only saying that the declarant's partisan attitude during litigation must be regarded as counterbalancing the interest prejudiced by the fact stated (ante, § 1464). This, however, might not be so in a given instance, and each case should be judged on its merits.

§ 1468. Disserving Interest to be shown by Independent Evidence. The fact that the matter stated was against interest must be shown by independent evidence,¹ — like every fact preliminary to the introduction of testimony.

§ 1469. Statement may be Oral as well as Written. An oral statement of fact against interest is admissible.¹ It was early held in Massachusetts that the statements must be written, not oral, and furthermore must be in the form of account entries or formal documents, not mere letters.² But this distinction is wholly devoid of support in either principle or precedent, and no attempt has elsewhere been made to introduce the distinction. Moreover, oral declarations against proprietary interest are freely admitted in the same jurisdiction of Massachusetts.³

dated in 1816); Vt. St. 1894, § 1216 (the indorsement must be in payor's hand; applicable to all writings).

The same object has been attained, in one State, by the judicial construction of a permissive statute: Minn. Gen. St. 1894, § 5752 ("An indorsement of money received, on any promissory note, which appears to have been made when it was against the interest of the holder to make it, is prima facie evidence of the facts therein contained"); 1882, Young v. Perkins, 29 Minn. 173, 12 N. W. 515 (under the above statute, there must be other evidence than the mere purport of the indorsement that it was actually made at the time when it was against interest; quoted supra).

Note that these statutes merely forbid the use of the indorsement as showing an acknowledgment sufficient to take the debt out of the statute of limitations. Its use to indicate a part-payment which relents the presumption of payment after a certain lapse of time (post, § 2517) seems still to remain.

⁴ There are also statutes, generally in vogue, which forbid the limitation to be removed except by an express acknowledgment or new promise in writing by the debtor; the effect is to cut off the use of the implied acknowledgment found in a payment by the debtor, and thus indirectly to result equally in the exclusion of the creditor's entry; the following is an example: Conn. Gen. St. 1887, § 1094 (in actions against deceased persons, the acknowledgment or new promise must be in writing made or signed by the party to be charged); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 83, § 16 (the new promise or the payment must be "made in writing"). But in some jurisdictions the statute which thus requires writing for an express acknowledgment or promise makes special provision for the survival of the common-law rule as to implying an acknowledgment or promise from a payment; and it is thus that the creditor's entry still becomes available; for example: S. C. C. C. P. 1893, § 131 (the acknowledgment or new promise must be in writing; but "payment of any part of principal or interest is equivalent to a promise in writing"). Then, of these statutes, a few make the additional restriction on creditors' entries, already noticed above, in note 3; thus: Mass. Pub. St. 1882, c. 197, §§ 15, 16; Rev. L. 1902, c. 202, §§ 12, 13 (the acknowledgment or promise must be "in some writing signed by the party chargeable"; yet this shall not "alter the effect of a payment of principal or interest"; but "no indorsement . . . by the party to whom such payment has been made . . . shall be deemed sufficient proof of the payment").

¹ Ga. Code, 1895, § 5181 (quoted ante, § 1455); 1864, Mahaska Co. v. Ingalls, 16 Ia. 81.

² 1831, Davies v. Morgan, 1 C. & J. 591.

³ 1861, R. v. Birmingham, 1 B. & S. 768.

⁴ 1824, Framingham Mfg. Co. v. Barnard, 2 Pick. 532 (Parker, C. J.: "The case of verbal declarations or of letters is totally different [from book-entries], the first being easily misapprehended and misrepresented, and the second being too easily fabricated, to make them safe sources of evidence"); 1840, Lawrence v. Kimball, 1 Metc. 527. See, also, Phillips on Evidence, Cow. & H.'s Notes, 260 (1843). The doubt on this point in the English case of Furdon v. Clogg (1842), 10 M. & W. 572, never had any foundation.

⁵ 1851, Marcy v. Stone, 8 Cush. 9; 1852,

3. Testimonial Qualifications, and Other Independent Rules of Evidence and Substantive Law.

§ 1471. Testimonial Qualifications. (a) The qualifications of the declarant (ante, § 1424) with reference to Testimonial Knowledge of the fact stated are those of the ordinary witness; the phrases of different judges vary.¹ It has once or twice been loosely said that the declarant must have "peculiar knowledge;" but so far as this may mean a knowledge better than that ordinarily required of witnesses, i. e. the usual knowledge by personal observation (ante, § 656), it is not law. (b) The statement must also, conformably with the principles of Testimonial Narration (ante, §§ 766, 789, 811), distinctly import the fact of which it is offered as an assertion.²

§ 1472. Authentication. The principles of Authentication (post, §§ 2129–2169) must appear to have been satisfied. In particular, (a) a written entry must be clearly shown to have been executed by the person alleged to be the declarant.¹ Either the signature or the body of the entry must be in the declarant's handwriting; but not necessarily both.² (b) Documents thirty years old may be assumed, under the usual conditions (post, § 2137), to be authentic.³ (c) So, too, the rule about producing originals (ante, § 1179), and all other rules applicable to proof of writings, may be invoked.

§ 1473. Tenant's Statements used against Landlord's Title. The rule of substantive law, that a tenant may not dispute by plea or by claim the superior right of his landlord, has occasionally been erroneously applied in the Stearns v. Hendersass, 9 id. 502; 1860, Currier v. Gale, 14 Gray 504.

¹ 1812, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Doe v. Robson, 15 East 34 ("a competency in them to know it"); 1821, Plumer, M. R., in Short v. Lee, 2 Jac. & W. 488 ("persons having a competent knowledge, or whose duty it was to know"); 1826, Eldon, L. C., in Barker v. Ray, 2 Russ. 76 ("persons who have a complete knowledge of the subject"); 1829, Parke, J., in Middleton v. Melton, 10 B. & C. 317 ("a party cognizant of a fact"); 1833, Gleadow v. Atkins, 3 Tyrw. 302 (Bayley, B., "a person having peculiar means of knowledge"; Vaughan, B., "having peculiar knowledge of the fact at the time," "with perfect cognizance of the fact"); 1837, Marks v. Lahee, 3 Bing. N. C. 420 (Park, J., "means of knowledge"; Vaughan, J. ("full knowledge of the transaction"); 1851, Parke, B., in Perceval v. Nauson, 7 Ex. 1 ("peculiar means of knowing a fact"); 1864, Dillon, J., in Mahaska Co. v. Ingalls, 16 Ia. 81 ("a matter concerning which the declarant was immediately and personally cognizable [sic?]"). In Bird v. Hueston, 10 Oh. St. 423 (1859), the declarations were rejected of one who was H.'s son, attorney, and business agent, because the statements concerned services rendered H. as manager of a farm and distillery; the ruling is far-fetched.

² 1810, Haddow v. Parry, 3 Taunt. 303 (a bill of lading signed "contents unknown" was rejected as being in effect no declaration of what the chests contained); 1829, Plaxton v. Dare, 10 B. & C. 19 (payment indicated by crosses placed against names); 1847, Doe v. Langfield, 16 M. & W. 514 (the assertion of an estate "by life-interest" only was regarded as ambiguous and inadmissible). In Doe v. Burton, 9 C. & P. 254 (1840), an entry of payment from B. for building a cottage was held not receivable to prove that B. built the cottage.

¹ 1821, Short v. Lee, 2 Jac. & W. 467 (Plumer, M. R.: "In all these cases [of books by bailiffs, etc.], the first point is to prove the character of the individual who wrote them; if you fail in this they cannot be evidence. . . . In all the private relations of life you do not presume the existence of the particular character, nor does a person's acting in that character prove that he possessed it. . . . It would let in a dangerous latitude if the Court were once to dispense with that which is an essential preliminary before any writing, not verified on oath, can be made evidence, and which must be established aliunde." In general, add: 1808, Doe v. Lord Thynne, 10 East 209; 1815, Manby v. Curtis, 1 Price 228; 1816, Bullen v. Michel, 2 Price 427; 1835, Baron de Rutzen v. Farr, 4 A. & E. 56; 1849, Doe v. Bevis, 7 C. B. 486. Compare the cases cited post, § 2144.

² 1792, Barry v. Babbington, 4 T. R. 514 (Kenyon, L. C. J.: "If the entry be not in the handwriting of the steward, undoubtedly it must be signed by him; but here all these entries were written by the steward himself"). Accord: 1833, Doe v. Stacey, 6 C. & P. 139; 1831, Dwight v. Brown, 9 Conn. 93.

³ 1821, Wynne v. Tyrwhitt, 4 B. & Ald. 376.

domain of Evidence, and has been supposed to forbid, as a rule of evidence, the use of a tenant's declarations against his proprietary interest, so far as they tend to cut down the landlord's right.¹ It is difficult to see how such an application can be invoked. The inexpediency of allowing tenants to litigate against titles which they have, by implication, agreed to accept as good, has nothing to do with the desirability of using the evidence of a deceased tenant, in a litigation to which he is not a party and on a matter as to which he has knowledge and has made a trustworthy statement.²

§ 1474. Principal's Statements used against Surety. It was once ruled that the statements of a deceased principal debtor against his interest could not be used against the surety.¹ This came from a confusion of the rule concerning Admissions, which may be used only against parties or privies in interest, with the present Hearsay exception, which has in fact nothing to do with such restrictions. But the error has been corrected by the repudiation of the earlier ruling.²

§ 1475. Distinction between Statements against Interest, Admissions, and Confessions. (1) A statement of a fact against interest is receivable on the ground that such a statement is one which would not be made unless truth compelled it, and that it is therefore as trustworthy as if made on the stand under cross-examination (ante, § 1457).

(2) But is not a statement by a party-opponent credited for substantially the same reason? Such certainly is the fact, in most instances of the sort (ante, §§ 1048, 1049). Why, then, is not a party's admission merely one sort of the statements against interest receivable under the Hearsay exception? Such is the notion often found judicially advanced, especially in the earlier rulings, when the principle of the present exception was not fully established. But there are two decisive answers which demonstrate its fallacy. (a) In the first place, under modern law, the party-opponent in a civil case may be summoned as a witness; if, then, the Hearsay exception be invoked, the opponent's extrajudicial statements are inadmissible, unless he is shown to be deceased or otherwise unavailable,—as every other declarant must be, in order that his statements against interest may be received (ante, § 1456). But this is never required as preliminary to using an opponent's admissions (ante, § 1049); hence, it is clear, they enter independently of the present Hearsay exception. (b) Secondly, an opponent's admission is receivable even though the fact as stated by him was then not against his interest, i. e. even though he was then making a claim in his favor. This principle (ante, § 1048) shows clearly that opponents' admissions, though they are usually of facts then against their interest, need not be; and thus, again, their use rests on a principle distinct from that of the present exception to the Hearsay rule.

¹ 1855, Papendick v. Bridgwater, 5 E. & B. 176.

² 1894, Lyon v. Ricker, 141 N. Y. 225, 36 N. E. 189 (Papendick v. Bridgwater commented on).

¹ 1821, Goss v. Watlington, 4 B. & B. 138.

² 1829, Middleton v. Melton, 10 B. & C. 317; 1864, Mahaska Co. v. Ingalls, 16 Ia. 81; 1833, Hinkley v. Davis, 6 N. H. 210; 1811, Assignees of S. v. Boucher, 2 Wash. C. C. 473.

(3) The statements of an accused in a criminal case may be either confessions, in the narrow sense, or admissions, in the broader sense; the distinction has already been examined (ante, §§ 816, 1650). So far as they are admissions (i. e. of facts not necessarily against interest, but merely inconsistent with his present defence), they enter like the admissions of a civil opponent; the first distinction above (a) does not apply, because the accused cannot be called to the stand by the prosecution; but the second distinction (b) does apply, for exculpatory statements of facts not at the time against his interest are nevertheless admissible (ante, § 821). But so far as his statements are direct confessions of crime, they fulfil both the main requirements of the present exception; the declarant is not available as a witness for the prosecution, and the fact of the crime as confessed is directly against his interest. Thus, the direct confessions of an accused person are receivable, not only as included in the general principle of Admissions (ante, § 1048) but also as covered by the doctrine of the present exception to the Hearsay rule. This particular aspect of them, as the chief source of their credit, has been dwelt upon by many judges and jurists.¹ It is worth emphasizing here, because it shows the fallacy of the supposed exclusion (post, § 1476), under the present exception, of statements of facts against penal interest.

4. Arbitrary Limitations.

§ 1476. History of the Exception; Statement of Fact against Penal Interest, excluded; Confessions of Crime by a Third Person. It is to-day commonly said, and has within two generations been expressly laid down by many judges, that the interest prejudiced by the facts stated must be either a pecuniary or a proprietary interest, and not a penal interest. What ground in authority there is for this limitation may be found by examining the history of the Exception at large.

The Exception appears to have taken its rise chiefly in two separate rivulets of rulings, starting independently as a matter of practice, but afterwards united as parts of a general principle. On the one side, it early became customary, shortly after the Hearsay rule was established (ante, § 1364) to

¹ The following are only a few of many instances: 1726, Gilbert, Evidence 137 ("As persons interested are utterly removed from being evidence for want of integrity, so on the other side the voluntary confession of the party in interest is reckoned the best evidence; for if a man's swearing for his interest can give no credit, he must certainly give most credit when he swears against it"); 1791, Lambe's Case, 2 Leach, Cr. L., 3d ed., 628 (Grose, J., for the twelve judges: "Confessions of guilt . . . are at common law received in evidence as the highest and most satisfactory proof of guilt, because it is fairly presumed that no man would make such a confession against himself if the facts confessed were not true"); 1846, State v. Kirby, 1 Strobb. 156 (Evans, J.: "There is no legal principle better established than that a free and voluntary confession is deserving of the highest credit; for it is not to be presumed that one will falsely accuse himself of a crime especially when he knows that a conviction of it will incur a forfeiture of his life"); 1847, State v. Cowan, 7 Ired. 246 (Ruffin, C. J., "[We may] proceed upon the common experience of men's motives of action and of the tests of truth. Now few things happen seldomer than that one in the possession of his understanding should of his own accord make a confession against himself which is not true"); 1875, Levison v. State, 54 Ala. 525 (Brickell, C. J.: "The confession is admissible on the presumption that a person will not make an untrue statement criminating himself and militating against his own interest").

receive in evidence the account-entries of a deceased person's (particularly a bailiff or steward) charging himself with the receipt of money.¹ No distinct reason appears to have been expressed; but the practice was well-established, and its traces as an independent doctrine are found at a late period.² Analogous to this, and yet in origin probably independent, were the practices, already referred to (ante, § 1460), of receiving entries in a vicar's tithe-book and indorsements of payments on notes and bonds. On the other side, a practice obtained, in an independent series of rulings, of receiving declarations, usually oral, in disparagement of one's proprietary title.³

These lines of precedent proceeded independently till about the beginning of the 1800s, when a unity of principle came gradually to be perceived and argued for.⁴ This unity lay in the circumstance that all such statements, in that they concerned matters prejudicial to the declarant's self-interest, were fairly trustworthy and might therefore (if he were deceased) be treated as forming an exception to the Hearsay rule. This broad principle made its way slowly. There was some uncertainty about its scope; but it was an uncertainty in the direction of breadth; for it was sometimes put in the broad form that statements by a person "having no interest to deceive" would be admissible. This broad form never came to prevail. But acceptance was gained, after two decades, for the principle that all declarations of facts against interest (by deceased persons) were to be received. What is to be noted, then, is that from 1800 to about 1830 this was fully understood as the broad scope of the principle. It was thus stated without other qualification; and frequent passages show the development of the principle to this point.⁵

¹ 1787, Manning v. Lechmere, 1 Atk. 453 (rental-roll receipts by bailiff); 1792, Barry v. Bebbington, 4 T. R. 514 (steward's receipts); 1792, Stead v. Heaton, 4 T. R. 670 (town account-books).

² 1811, Holladay v. Littlepage, 2 Munf. 320; 1815, Manby v. Curtis, 1 Price 229; 1832, Ward v. Pomfret, 5 Sim. 475.

³ 1787, Davies v. Pierce, 2 T. R. 54 (declarations of tenancy by lessees); 1808, Doe v. Jones, 1 Camp. 367 (charging one's self with rent due).

⁴ The case by which the argument was inspired was Warren v. Greenville, 2 Stra. 1129 (1740); to show the fact of a surrender of a life-estate, the books of a deceased attorney, charging for services in drawing and engrossing the surrender, and acknowledging payment therefor, were admitted; "it was a circumstance material upon the inquiry into the reasonableness of presuming a surrender; and not [to] be suspected to be done for this purpose; that if E. was living he might undoubtedly be examined to it, and this was now the next best evidence." But the broad argument seems not to have been deliberately recognized until 1808, in Ivat v. Finch, 1 Taunt. 141; here, the plaintiff's acquisition of ownership from the deceased W. being in issue, W.'s declaration that she had given the property to him was admitted; Mansfield, C. J.: "The evidence ought to have been received. . . . The admission, supposed to have been made by Mrs. W., was against her own interest."

⁵ In 1808, Lord Ellenborough speaks (Higham v. Ridgway, 10 East 109) of "the broad principle on which receivers' books have been admitted, namely, that the entry made was in prejudice of the party making it." In Roe v. Rawlings, 7 East 290 (1806), the same judge had said that "there are several instances in the books where the declaration of a person having no knowledge of a fact and no interest to falsify it, has been admitted as evidence of it after his death." He then goes on to point out that in the case in hand there was even an interest that would be injured by the fact stated. But he makes no distinct separation, as a class, of statements against interest. Yet in 1811 (Stanley v. White, 14 East 341) he appears to recognize such a class. In 1812 again (Doe v. Robson, 15 East 34), he phrases it that "the ground upon which this evidence has been received is that there is a total absence of interest . . . to pervert the fact." Bayley, J., in the same case, however, puts it as "an established principle of evidence," that the entries are admissible "because it is against his own interest." But the broadest form never obtained acceptance. In

But in 1844, in a case in the House of Lords, not strongly argued and not considered by the judges in the light of the precedents, a backward step was taken and an arbitrary limit put upon the rule. It was held to exclude the statement of a fact subjecting the declarant to a criminal liability, and to be confined to statements of facts against either pecuniary or proprietary interest.⁶ Thenceforward this rule was accepted in England;⁷ although it was plainly a novelty at the time of its inception; for in several rulings up to that time such statements had been received.⁸ The same attitude has been taken by many American Courts,⁹ excluding confessions of a crime, or other statements

1826, in Barker v. Ray, 2 Russ. 76, where the counsel had argued as if the rule required merely "total absence of interest" (in Lord Ellenborough's words), Lord Eldon said: "The only doubt I have entertained was as to the position that you are to receive evidence of declarations where there is no interest. At a certain period of my professional life, I should have said that that doctrine was quite new to me. I do not mean to say more than that I still doubt concerning it." Thenceforward, however, and up to the fourth decade of the century, the phrase "against interest" was used without limitation. Bayley, B., says, in 1829 (Middleton v. Melton, 10 B. & C. 317): "It is a general principle of evidence, that declarations or statements of deceased persons are admissible when they appear to have been made against their interest." Litledale, J., in the same case, speaks of "this general principle, that where a person has peculiar means of knowing a fact, and makes a declaration or written entry of that fact, which is against his interest at that time, it is evidence of the fact as between third persons after his death." Parke, J., uses identical language.

⁶ 1844, Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Cl. & F. 109 (declarations of a clergyman that he had performed a marriage which would subject him to a prosecution were rejected; Lyndhurst, L. C.: "A is indicted for murder; B, who is dead, made while living a declaration that he was present at the murder; that declaration is against his own interest, and would, had he lived, have subjected him to a prosecution. It is in principle the very case supposed in the argument, and it is not possible to say that such a declaration would have been receivable in evidence").

⁷ 1844, Davis v. Lloyd, 1 C. & K. 276, Lord Denman, C. J.; 1855, Papendick v. Bridgwater, 5 E. & B. 180, Erle, J. ("It is contended that there is a wide and universal principle that the declaration of a dead person, made against his interest, is admissible. No doubt many judges do use that language; but I think that the principle must be limited [giving the above limits]. . . . The argument in support of the evidence has almost gone the length of asserting that the declaration becomes admissible where any hope or fear might have prompted a contrary assertion; but it was admitted that the rule could not go so far; and in the case in the House of Lords . . . it was said that the interest, to make the declaration admissible, must be either pecuniary or proprietary").

⁸ These rulings were not considered in the Sussex Peerage Case: 1660, Hulet's Trial, 5 How. St. 1185, 1192 (charged as being the executioner of King Charles; it was disputed—and has never been clearly known—whether Gregory Brandon, the common hangman, officiated on that occasion, the executioner being masked; the defendant Hulet tried to prove that Brandon did the deed; Witness: "When my lord Capell, duke of Hamilton, and the earl of Holland, were beheaded in Palace-Yard, in Westminster, my lord Capell asked the common hangman, said he, 'Did you cut off my master's head?' 'Yes,' saith he. 'Where is the instrument that did it?' He then brought the ax. . . . My lord Capell took the ax, and kissed it, and gave him five pieces of gold. I heard him say: 'Sirrah, wert thou not afraid?' Saith the hangman, 'They made me cut it off; and I had thirty pounds for my pains'"); 1680, Hale, Pleas of the Crown, I, 306 ("In relation to the manner of their testimony, . . . if it be a hearsay from the offender himself confessing the fact, such a testimony upon hearsay makes a good witness within the statute [of treason]"); 1791, Standen v. Standen, Peake 32 (a marriage-register entry recited the publication of banns; the clergyman's confession that he had married without banns, received; Kenyon, L. C. J., pointing out that a false entry was a felony: "He put himself in a dangerous situation by making such a confession"); 1833, Powell v. Harper, 5 C. & P. 590 (libel, charging the plaintiff with being a receiver of stolen goods; the declarations of A that he had stolen them, received).

⁹ The following rulings to this effect are further commented on post, § 1477: Can.: 1842, Blair v. Hopkins, 1 Kerr N. Br. 540 (confession of a third person that he and the plaintiff committed the felony, excluded; here the third person was not accounted for); Ala.: 1846, Smith v. State, 9 Ala. 995 (declarant not deceased); 1887, Snow v. State, 58 id. 375; 1884, West v. State, 76 id. 99; 1892, Welsh v. State, 96 id. 92, 11 So. 450 (confession of L., not accounted for, excluded); Cal.: 1892, People v. Hall, 94 Cal. 595, 30 Pac. 7 (confession of K., killed while escaping from arrest for the same charge, excluded); Conn.: 1889, Benton v. Starr, 58 Conn. 285, 20 Atl. 450 (bastardy; confessions of paternity by a third person, excluded; here his absence was unaccounted for);

of facts against penal interest, made by third persons; although there is not wanting authority in favor of admitting such statements.¹⁰

Ga.: 1857, Lyon v. State, 22 Ga. 399 (declarant not accounted for; treated in terms of admissions); 1880, Daniel v. State, 65 id. 199 (declarant not accounted for); 1889, Kelly v. State, 82 id. 441, 9 S. E. 171 (like the Lyon case); 1896, Delk v. State, 99 id. 667, 26 S. E. 752; 1897, Lowry v. State, 100 id. 574, 28 S. E. 419 (the third person here not accounted for); 1901, Robinson v. State, 114 id. 445, 40 S. E. 253 (joint indictment of R. and H.; before trial, H. disappeared; his declaration confessing the killing and exonerating R., not received); Ind.: 1878, Jones v. State, 64 Ind. 473, 484 (declarant not accounted for; treated on the principle of admissions); 1897, Hank v. State, 148 id. 238, 46 N. E. 127, 47 N. E. 465 (abortion; a letter of the deceased asserting that she had herself attempted to produce it, excluded); Ia.: 1902, State v. Sale, 119 Ia. 1, 92 N. W. 680, 95 N. W. 193 (murder; deceased's statement that "he was to blame," excluded, ignoring the present point of view); Ky.: 1893, Davis v. Com., 95 Ky. 9, 23 S. W. 535 (confession of P., deceased, excluded); La.: 1893, State v. West, 45 La. An. 928, 929, 13 So. 173 (the confession of B., killed while resisting arrest for the charge, excluded); 1901, State v. Young, 107 La. 618, 31 So. 993 (confessions of one G., not accounted for, held inadmissible); Me.: 1855, Pike v. Crehore, 40 Me. 503, 511 (to disprove the receipt of money sent by mail, the alleged payee offered the confession of the letter-carrier in that town, made while in prison, that he had taken the money; excluded, the letter-carrier being presumably available as a witness); Md.: 1880, Munshower v. State, 55 Md. 11, 18 (not admissible, even to discredit the declarant testifying for the State); Mass.: 1804, Com. v. Chabcock, 1 Mass. 144 (declarant not shown to be deceased); 1866, Com. v. Densmore, 12 All. 537 (Bigelow, C. J., excluding declarations of the deceased offered by the defence on a trial for manslaughter: "We are not aware that the exception [against interest] has ever been extended further, so as to render competent declarations which are not otherwise against the interest of the party who made them except that they tend to throw on himself some degree of blame or criminality in relation to a particular transaction and to exonerate others therefrom"); 1894, Farrell v. Weitz, 160 Mass. 288, 35 N. E. 783 (bastardy; admission of paternity by another person not accounted for, excluded); 1899, Com. v. Chance, 174 id. 245, 54 N. E. 551; Mich.: 1882, People v. Stevens, 47 Mich. 411, 11 N. W. 220 (one defendant in court admitted his guilt and offered to withdraw his plea of not guilty, yet apparently did not go on the stand; excluded); Miss.: 1890, Helm v. State, 67 Miss. 572, 7 So. 487 (declarations of the deceased, on a trial for murder, inculcating himself, were offered as declarations against interest, but rejected on precedent and also on the rather curious ground that "how any declarant can be said to be against the interest of a man already passed into the other world . . . is wholly incomprehensible by us"); Mo.: 1874, State v. Evans, 55 Mo. 460 (declarant not accounted for); 1893, State v. Duncan, 116 id. 288, 311, 22 S. W. 699 (declaration of S., admitting the shooting, excluded); 1893, State v. Hack, 118 id. 92, 98, 23 S. W. 1089 (confession of a co-defendant, not accounted for, excluded); N. Y.: 1881, Greenfield v. State, 85 N. Y. 75, 86, 88 (declarant in court and not called); N. C.: 1833, State v. May, 4 Dev. 332 (larceny; declarant absconded); 1846, State v. Duncan, 6 Ired. 239 (declarant not shown deceased); 1873, State v. White, 68 N. C. 158 (like State v. May); 1874, State v. Haynes, 71 id. 84 (same); 1875, State v. Bishop, 73 id. 44 (same); Or.: 1893, State v. Fletcher, 24 Or. 295, 300, 33 Pac. 575 (murder; confession of a third person, who had fled, excluded); Tenn.: 1836, Wright v. State, 9 Yerg. 344 (declarant not deceased); 1837, Rhea v. State, 10 id. 260 (same); 1870, Sible v. State, 3 Hick. 137 (larceny; confessions of a co-indictée, incompetent as a witness, not admitted for the defendant); 1887, Peck v. State, 86 Tenn. 259, 6 S. W. 389 (confession of a person not accounted for, excluded); Vt.: 1900, State v. Totten, 72 Vt. 73, 47 Atl. 105 (indefinite confession by a third person, not accounted for, excluded); Wyo.: 1896, Reavis v. State, 6 Wyo. 240, 44 Pac. 62 (perjury in testifying that C. did not commit an assault; confession of C., unaccounted for, not admitted for the prosecution; treated on the principle of admissions).

¹⁰ 1846, Smith v. State, 9 Ala. 995, cited supra, (Goldthwaite, J., dissenting: "When the other facts and circumstances connect the party with the act, and the confession is made under circumstances which repel the suspicion of any motive, I can see no reason why a doubtful crime may not be thus fixed on the confessing person, though the fact of that confession may tend to exculpate another, to whom the circumstances equally point as the guilty person"); 1898, Masons' F. A. A. v. Riley, 65 Ark. 261, 45 S. W. 684 (policy on accidental death; confession of S., shortly after the death, that he had killed the deceased, admitted, perhaps on the res gestæ grounds, post, § 1747); 1850, Coleman v. Frazier, 4 Rich. L. 152 (a third person's statement that he had stolen money was admitted; O'Neal, J.: "This is not of a matter of business, like those spoken of in that case, but was a criminal act. . . . The admission of such testimony arises from necessity, and the certainty that it is true from the want of motive to falsify. Both these are apparent here. . . . Here we have every guaranty of its truthfulness—the grave consequences of infamy, and at the least ten years' imprisonment, would certainly insure the truth of the speaker"); 1894, Martin v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 317, 26 S. W. 400 (perjury in falsely testifying to larceny by S. and P.; confessions of B. and C. that they committed the larceny, admitted).

§ 1477. Same: Policy of this Limitation. It is plain enough that this limitation, besides being a fairly modern novelty, is inconsistent with the broad language originally employed in stating the reason and principle of the present exception (ante, §§ 1457, 1476) as well as with the settled principle upon which Confessions are received (ante, § 1475).¹ But, furthermore, it cannot be justified on grounds of policy. No plausible reason of policy has ever been advanced for such a limitation.² Furthermore, the practical consequences of this unreasoning limitation are shocking to the sense of justice; for, in its commonest application, it requires, in a criminal trial, the rejection of a confession, however well authenticated, of a person deceased or insane or fled from the jurisdiction (and therefore quite unavailable) who has avowed himself to be the true culprit. The absurdity and wrong of rejecting indiscriminately all such evidence is patent.

The rulings already in our books cannot be thought to involve a settled and universal acceptance of this limitation. In the first place, in almost all of the rulings the declarant was not shown to be deceased or otherwise unavailable as a witness, and therefore the declaration would have been inadmissible in any view of the present exception (ante, § 1456). Secondly, in some of the rulings (for example, in North Carolina) the independent doctrine (ante, §§ 139–141) was applicable that, in order to prove the accused's non-commission of the offence by showing commission by another person, not merely one casual piece of evidence suffices but a prima facie case resting on several concurring pieces of evidence must be made out. Finally, most of the early rulings had in view, not the present exception to the Hearsay rule, but the doctrine of Admissions (ante, §§ 1076, 1079) that the admissions of one who is not a co-conspirator cannot affect others jointly the prisoner whose examination it purported to be was not attained [he had pleaded guilty, but sentence had not been passed], and might therefore be put into the box and examined as a witness, which would give the prisoner's counsel an opportunity of cross-examining her on oath"; the confession was rejected, without indicating the grounds).

¹ The limitation is apparently supported by the doctrine (ante, §§ 1076, 1079) that the confessions of an accomplice are not to be used by the prosecution against the accused except so far as they are the admissions of a co-conspirator; for A's confession implicating himself and B, the accused, is at least against his own penal interest, and therefore might seem to fall under the present supposed principle. But (1) the interest of A in obtaining a pardon by confessing and betraying his co-criminals is in such cases usually so important that, according to the doctrine of preponderance of interest (ante, § 1464), the statement would not even under the present exception be admissible; (2) the question has usually been dealt with according to the doctrine of Admissions (Tong's Case, quoted infra, note 3), and the present aspect has not been considered; (3) the accomplice must, according to the present exception, be shown deceased or otherwise unavailable, and this showing has usually not been attempted in such cases; the following case shows its application: 1832, R. v. Turner, 1 Lew. Cr. C. 119 (the confession of one of the other prisoners, on examination before a magistrate, it was objected to, "secondly, that it was not the best evidence that the circumstances of the case admitted of, inasmuch as

² The following suggestion, to be sure, is found: 1857, McDonald, J., in Lyon v. State, 22 Ga. 399, 401: "All one defendant would have to do would be to admit that his guilty accomplice was innocent and that he himself had perpetrated the crime, absent himself so as to enable the party on his trial to have the benefit of his admission, and after his acquittal appear, demand his trial, and prove by the evidence of the acquitted party that he was in fact the guilty person." That any judge could believe such a scheme to be within the possibilities of successful accomplishment seems curious. Besides, if it were, that is no reason for refusing such evidence in cases where the defendant may be entirely innocent; if the evidence in truth is not concocted, as supposed by this fantastic suspicion, then the judge is perhaps an instrument in that harshest of tortures, — the refusal to allow an innocent man to prove his innocence.

charged.³ It is therefore not too late to retrace our steps, and to discard this barbarous doctrine, which would refuse to let an innocent accused vindicate himself even by producing to the tribunal a perfectly authenticated written confession, made on the very gallows, by the true culprit now beyond the reach of justice. Those who watched with self-righteous indignation the course of proceedings in Captain Dreyfus' trial should remember that, if that trial had occurred in our own Courts, the spectacle would have been no less shameful if we, following our own supposed precedents, had refused to admit what the French Court never for a moment hesitated to admit,—the authenticated confession of the escaped Major Esterhazy, avowing himself the guilty author of the treason there charged.

³ 1663, Tong's Case, Kelyng 18 ("Such confession [before a justice or a privy councillor on examination] so proved is only evidence against the party himself who made the confession, but cannot be made use of as evidence against any others whom on his examination he confessed to be in the treason").

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE.

TOPIC III: DECLARATIONS ABOUT FAMILY HISTORY (PEDIGREE).

CHAPTER XLIX.

§ 1480. In general; Statutory Provisions.

1. The Necessity Principle.

§ 1481. Death, etc., of Declarant or of Family.

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee.

§ 1482. General Principle.

§ 1483. Declarations must have been before Controversy.

§ 1484. No Interest or Motive to Deceive.

3. Testimonial Qualifications and other Independent Rules of Evidence.

§ 1485. (1) Testimonial Qualifications.

§ 1486. (a) Sufficiency of the Declarant's Means of Knowledge; General Principle.

§ 1487. Same: Declarations of Non-Relatives.

§ 1488. Same: Reputation in the Neighborhood or Community.

§ 1489. Same: Declarations of Relatives; Distinctions between Different Kinds of Relatives.

§ 1490. Same: Declarant's Qualifications must be shown.

§ 1491. Same: Relationship always Mutual; Connecting the Declarant with Both Families.

§ 1492. Same: Relationship of Illegitimate Child.

§ 1493. Same: Testimony to one's Own Age.
§ 1494. Same: Statements of Family History, to Identify a Person.

§ 1495. (b) Form of the Assertion (Family Bibles or Trees, Tombstones, Wills, etc.).

§ 1496. (2) Authentication; Proving Individual Authorship.

§ 1497. (3) Production of Original Document; Preferred Writings.

2 and 3. Kind of Fact that may be the Subject of the Statement.

§ 1500. General Principle.

§ 1501. Statements as to Place of Birth, Death, etc.

§ 1502. Sundry Kinds of Facts.

4. Arbitrary Limitations.

§ 1503. Kind of Issue or Litigation involved.

§ 1480. In general; Statutory Provisions. This is one of the oldest of the exceptions. In the 1800s, little difficulty was made about accepting reputation-evidence generally. It could hardly be otherwise when the jury-practice had just been freed (ante, § 136±) from the traditional notion that the jury themselves represented the reputation or community-knowledge of the neighborhood. Soon, however, the use of reputation became limited to what had doubtless been its commonest instances, — matters of prescriptive possession and of pedigree or genealogy. From the former was then developed the exception for Reputation to Land-Boundaries (post, § 1582); from the latter, the present exception. Here the notion of general reputation as the distinguishing form of the evidence has long since disappeared. The evidence may be in the form of individual declarations; though it may also be in the form of family reputation. In general, the scope of the present exception has been much enlarged during the past century in this country. Occasionally a statute has attempted to define its terms.¹

¹ Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1852 ("The declaration, act, or omission of a member of a family who is a decedent, or out of the jurisdiction, is also admissible as evidence of common reputation, in cases where, on questions of pedigree, such repu-

tion is admissible"); § 1870, par. 4 ("the act or declaration, verbal or written, of a deceased person in respect to the relationship, birth, marriage, or death of any person related by blood or marriage to such deceased person" is admissi-

1. The Necessity Principle.

§ 1481. Death, etc., of Declarant or of Family. The Necessity principle (ante, § 1421) is here satisfied by the general difficulty of obtaining any other than traditionary evidence in matters of family history. The following passages illustrate the accepted judicial attitude :

1806, L. C. Erskine, in Vowles v. Young, 13 Ves. 140 : "Courts of law are obliged in cases of this kind to depart from the ordinary rules of evidence, as it would be impossible to establish descents according to the strict rules by which contracts are established and subjects of property regulated, [by] requiring the facts from the mouth of the witness who has the knowledge of them. In cases of pedigree, therefore, recourse is had to a secondary sort of evidence, — the best the nature of the subject will admit, establishing the descent from the only sources that can be had."

1811, Lawrence, J., in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 409 : "From the necessity of the thing, the declarations of members of the family in matters of pedigree are generally admitted, . . . [the rejection of which] would often be the rejection of all the evidence that could be offered"; Mansfield, C. J. : "In matters of pedigree, it being impossible to prove by living witnesses the relationships of past generations, the declarations of deceased members of the family are admitted."

1836, Story, J., in Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. 434 : "In cases of pedigree, [hearsay] is admitted upon the ground of necessity, or the great difficulty and sometimes the impossibility of proving remote facts of this sort by living witnesses, . . . there being no lis mota or other interest to affect the credit of their statement."

1886, Woods, J., in Fulkerson v. Holmes, 117 U. S. 389, 29 Sup. 915 : "This exception has been recognized on the ground of necessity; for as, in inquiries respecting relationship or descent, facts must often be proved which occurred many years before the trial and were known to but few persons, it is obvious that the strict enforcement in such cases of the rules against hearsay evidence would frequently occasion failure of justice."

1891, Peckham, J., in Eisenlord v. Clum, 126 N. Y. 552, 27 S. E. 1024 : "In many cases it will readily be seen such evidence may under the circumstances be the only evidence which can be obtained. . . . Traditional declarations become the best evidence sometimes, when those best acquainted with the fact are dead."

It will be noticed that the language here used offers opportunity for choice between three distinct and competing rules in the application of the Necessity principle.

(1) First, there are references to "past generations," "many years before," "lapse of time," "after one generation has passed away," and the like. These imply that the exception comes into play only where the matter is "ancient," i. e. of a past generation; and that therefore, on the one hand, matters of recent occurrence may not be so proved, whether or not there are ble); § 1870, par. 13 ("entries in family Bibles or other family books or charts; engravings on rings, family portraits, and the like, as evidence of pedigree," are admissible; see also § 1872, par. 11, cited post, § 1580, under Reputation;) Commissioners' amendments of 1901 (in C. C. P. § 1852, after "pedigree," insert, "birth, parentage, age, marriage, death, or relationship"; in C. C. P. § 1870, after "in respect to the," insert as a substitute, "pedigree, birth, parentage, age, marriage, death, or relationship," etc.; in C. C. P. § 1870, par. 13, insert at the end the same words, following "pedigree," and then add, "of any member of such family"); for the validity of these amendments, see ante, § 488; Ga. : Code 1895, § 5177 ("Pedigree, including descent, relationship, birth, marriage, and death, may be proved either by the declarations of deceased persons related by blood or marriage, or by general repute in the family, inscriptions, 'family trees,' and similar evidence"); Mont. C. C. P. 1895, §§ 3128, 3146, par. 4, 11, 13 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1852, 1870); Or. C. C. P. 1892, §§ 688, 706, par. 4, 11, 13 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1852, 1870).

living witnesses, and, on the other hand, that matters of a time whose witnesses are likely to have passed away may be so proved, whether or not living witnesses are available. But there appears to be in fact no rule of such a form, in spite of the implication of the above language. The tendency is against such a narrowness for the rule.¹

(2) Secondly, a similar but slightly broader rule may be seen indicated by the phrases, "no living witnesses can be had," "the great difficulty of procuring living witnesses," and by the statements that such evidence is admissible because living witnesses can "often" or "usually" not be had. The implication is that where any living witness to the same matter, particularly a member of the family, can be had, no hearsay statement of any deceased persons can be received. This form of rule, which has had some support in decisions,² is perhaps appropriate enough where the evidence is offered in the shape of family reputation; for there is in strictness no necessity for resorting to the hearsay of the family as such, until it appears that members of the family cannot be had to testify on the stand.

(3) But where the evidence offered is the declaration of an individual member of the family, the necessity for this person's hearsay lies merely in the impossibility of procuring the declarant himself to testify on the stand; i. e. the death, absence, insanity, or the like, of the declarant alone suffices. Such is the rule dictated by the analogies of the other Hearsay exceptions admitting individual statements (for example, Dying Declarations, Statements against Interest, Regular Entries). In the exception for Reputation

¹ 1870, Scharff v. Keener, 64 Pa. 379 (semble, that the recent date of the occurrences is immaterial).

² 1847, White v. Strother, 11 Ala. 724 (excluded, where other members of the family were alive); 1890, Traveler's Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, 85 Ga. 751, 779, 12 S. E. 18 (insurance claim; family reputation as to the fact of death, the time being less than a year before, the members of the family still surviving, excluded); 1884, Ross v. Loomis, 64 Ia. 432, 20 N. W. 749 (present reputation at M.'s place of residence "among the relatives and family" of M., as to his decease, the wife being alive, excluded); 1846, Covert v. Hertzog, 4 Pa. St. 146 (hearsay declarations were rejected as evidence of "a comparatively recent marriage," where "there was abundance of such evidence by living witnesses"); 1859, Campbell v. Wilson, 23 Tex. 252 (unidentified entries in a family Bible were rejected, where the father was dead but the mother was alive and in the jurisdiction); 1896, Hurlburt's Estate, 68 Vt. 366, 35 Atl. 77 (H. went to Dakota in 1882; reputation in the family, consisting of sister, mother, and brother, the father alone being dead, as to the fact of H.'s death, excluded; "when all the facts relative to a question of pedigree are within the knowledge of living witnesses, and none of such facts are derived from the declarations of deceased members of the family, there is no necessity for resorting to so-called 'family reputation,' created wholly by the living, any more than in any other kind of case not involving pedigree"). In the following cases peculiar modifications of this rule were laid down: 1883, Harland v. Eastman, 107 Ill. 538 (several members of the family were living and available; Dickey, J.: "They are all living and their sworn testimony is better than their unsworn statements. It follows that the witness cannot properly be allowed to state his conclusion from such unsworn statements, unless all of them taken together, with their surroundings, enable him to say such was the accepted state of the case in the family or such was the uncontradicted repute in the family"); 1818, Crouch v. Eveleth, 15 Mass. 305 (family hearsay of the existence of children as heirs was rejected because no effort had been made to obtain the record of marriage and no showing that it was lost; this would hardly be followed).

If a person's testimony as to his own age is to be treated as a report of family hearsay (post, § 1495), this rule would require that the members of his family be accounted for. Contra: 1880, Cherry v. State, 68 Ala. 30 (a person's statement as to his age was treated as based on pedigree hearsay; but no specific decease was required to be shown). In the same State the ruling of Rogers v. De Bardelaben Co., 97 Ala. 154, 12 So. 81, that a brother and a brother-in-law could not testify on the stand to the plaintiff's age, because third persons whose declarations are offered must be deceased, is incomprehensible.

(post, § 1580) there is some support for the notion that the necessity must consist in the lack of other evidence of any sort; but where individual declarations are receivable, no claim can be made for such a broad idea of necessity. Accordingly the only sound rule for the use of individual declarations is that the declarant himself must be shown to be unavailable.³

It should be noted that since entries in a family Bible, or the like, may usually be treated as representing either the entrant's individual assertion or the family's reputation, it should therefore be enough, if the entrant is identified, to show the entrant alone to be unavailable, and not to show also the unavailability of other members of the family.

(4) Supposing the evidence offered to be the declaration of an individual, it is clear that at least the declarant must be shown unavailable, by decease or otherwise.⁴ Here the analogies of the other exceptions, as well as the nature of the necessity-principle itself, indicate that not only death, but other circumstances — such as insanity, absence from the jurisdiction, and the like — may create such a necessity. On this point, however, the rulings are few.⁵

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee.

§ 1482. General Principle. The circumstantial guarantee for trustworthiness (ante, § 1422) has been found in the probability that the "natural effusions" (to use Lord Eldon's often-quoted phrase) of those who talk over family affairs when no special reason for bias or passion exists are fairly trustworthy, and should be given weight by judges and juries, as they are in the ordinary affairs of life. The sentence of Lord Eldon's in Whitelocke v. Baker has become the classical passage on this subject:

1790, Ashhurst, J., in R. v. Eriswell, 3 T. R. 720: "It is natural for persons to talk of their own situations and of their families. The evidence is in its nature of an unsuspecting kind; it is generally brought from remote times, when no question was depending or even thought of, and when no purpose would apparently be answered."

1807, L. C. Eldon, in Whitelocke v. Baker, 13 Ves. 514: "Declarations in the family, descriptions in wills, descriptions upon monuments, descriptions in Bibles and registry

³ 1860, Crauford v. Blackburn, 17 Md. 54 (Bartol, J.): "This exception to the general rule had its origin in the necessity of the case. . . . It is objected that . . . the necessity did not exist [for a husband's declarations as to the marriage], there being a party to the alleged marriage [the wife] living and competent to testify. . . . This objection arises from a misapprehension of the rule. Such declarations are not held to be admissible or inadmissible according to the necessity of the particular case; but . . . by the established rule of law, which, though said to have its origin in necessity, is universal in its application".

⁴ Eng.: 1859, Butler v. Meuntgarret, 6 H. L. C. 648; Can.: 1848, Doe v. Servos, 5 U. C. Q. B. 284, 288; U. S.: 1897, People v. Mayne, 118 Cal. 516, 50 Pac. 654 (a family-Bible entry, made by the mother; excluded, the mother being alive and available); 1899, James' Es- tate, 124 id. 653, 57 Pac. 579, 1008; 1817, Chapman v. Chapman, 2 Conn. 349; 1870, Greenleaf v. R. Co., 30 Ia. 303; 1828, Waldron v. Tuttle, 4 N. H. 378; 1854, Mooers v. Bunker, 29 id. 432; 1854, Emerson v. White, ib. 491; 1829, Leggett v. Boyd, 3 Wend. 379; 1851, Robinson v. Blakely, 4 Rich. 588 (a father's entry in a family register, and a father's declarations, the father being still alive and in the jurisdiction, excluded); 1834, Peterson v. Ankrom, 25 W. Va. 56, 62.

⁵ 1897, May v. Logie, 27 Can. Sup. 443, 445 (statements of a father, living in England, excluded, since his deposition might have been obtained); 1884, Ross v. Loomis, 64 Ia. 432, 20 N. W. 749 (statements as to M.'s decease, by M.'s wife, living in another jurisdiction, excluded); 1859, Campbell v. Wilson, 23 Tex. 252, semble (absence from the jurisdiction sufficient); and the Codes quoted ante, § 1480.

books, all are admitted upon the principle that they are the natural effusions of a party who must know the truth, and who speaks upon an occasion when his mind stands in an even position, without any temptation to exceed or fall short of the truth."¹

1811, Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 406, 409, 420; Lawrence, J.: "Where the relator had no interest to serve, and there is no ground for supposing that his mind stood otherwise than even upon the subject, . . . we may reasonably suppose that he neither steps short nor goes beyond the limits of truth in his spontaneous declarations respecting his relations and the state of his family"; Wood, B.: "The admission of hearsay evidence of the declarations of deceased persons in matters of pedigree is an exception to the general law of evidence; and it has ever been received with a degree of jealousy, because the opposite party has had no opportunity of cross-examining the persons by whom the declarations are supposed to have been made. But declarations, to be receivable in evidence, . . . must have been the natural effusions of the mind of the party making them, and must have been made on an occasion when his mind stood in an even position, without any attempt to exceed or fall short of the truth"; Eldon, L. C.: "If the entry be the ordinary act of a man in the ordinary course of life, without interest or particular motive, this, as the spontaneous effusion of his own mind, may be looked at without suspicion and received without objection. Such is the contemporaneous entry in a family Bible, by a father, of the birth of a child."

1840, Verplanck, Sen., in People v. Fire Ins. Co., 25 Wend. 220: "In order to adhere as closely as possible to the policy of shutting out all vague, second-hand, and unauthenticated evidence, such exception is made in favor of proof of declarations and reputation [of family history] only where the persons whose opinion and declarations are relied upon, besides being those most likely to be well informed as to the facts, were also, so far as appears, free from all possible inducement to misrepresent the truth themselves or from any danger of being misled by others so interested. . . . It is then received . . . because ordinarily they could have no temptation to falsehood or misrepresentation on such a subject."

1819, Pearson, J., in Moffitt v. Witherspoon, 10 Ired. 192: "[Pedigree] is a matter about which they [the members of a family] are presumed to be particularly interested to ascertain and declare the truth. Every one from a feeling of nature endeavors to know who his relations are and will seldom declare those to be his kinsmen who are not."

In applying this principle, what specific rules have been deduced?

§ 1483. Declarations must have been made before Controversy. First, declarations made during the course of a controversy are to be regarded as lacking in the guarantees of trustworthiness. In the traditional phrase, the declarations, to be receivable, must have been made ante litem motam:

1811, Heath, J., in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 413: "When the contest has originated, people take part on one side or the other; their minds are in a ferment, and if they were disposed to speak the truth, facts are seen by them through a false medium. . . . It would hold out an invitation to fabricated testimony if declarations could be received in evidence which have been made when the contest was actually begun."

1831, L. C. Brougham, in Monkton v. Attorney-General, 2 Russ. & M. 160: "If there be lis mota, or anything which has precisely the same effect upon a person's mind with litis contestatio, that person's declaration ceases to be admissible in evidence. It is no longer what Lord Eldon calls a natural effusion of the mind. It is subject to a strong suspicion that the party was in the act of making evidence for himself. If he be in such circumstances that what he says is said, not because it is true, not because he believes it, but because he feels it to be profitable or that it may hereafter become evidence for him or for those in whom he takes an interest after his death, it is excluded. . . . "The question then always will be, . . . Was the evidence in the particular circumstances manufactured, or was it spontaneous and natural ?”

¹ Approved by Lord Cranworth in Butler v. Mountgarret, 6 H. L. C. 644 (1859).

On two occasions, judges have doubted the expediency of this limitation ;¹ but it is entirely in analogy to the limitations in other exceptions, and, so long as the Hearsay rule is enforced in its present form, this limitation has a legitimate place.²

Principle requires, however, that the dispute, if it is to exclude the statements, should have been more or less over the precise point to which the statements refer ; else no bias could be supposed to affect it. There is opportunity for much latitude in applying this limitation. Judges' opinions have differed ;³ but it should be a matter for the trial Court's discretion whether under the circumstances of each case bias can be supposed to have existed :

1840, Verplanck, Sen., in People v. Fire Ins. Co., 25 Wend. 215, 224 : “ If the rule that actual litigation or litigious controversy without actual suit always vitiates the hearsay declaration of those in whose family it existed be narrowed down to controversies upon the very point afterwards sought to be ascertained, and strictly and legally involving it, the reason of the rule is lost sight of. The result would be to exclude such family traditions when the parties had an accurate knowledge of their legal rights or the legal grounds of their claim, whilst it would admit them in cases where the claim pursued with equal ardor and interest is erroneously understood by the parties themselves, and where, for that very reason, they and their friends are more disposed to see the whole question and its evidence through a false medium, and to suffer their wishes and feelings to disturb or discolor their recollections or relations of facts. The spirit and reason of the rule in my judgment, therefore, apply to every ancient controversy involving or affected by the question afterwards in litigation or supposed at the time to be involved in it or affected by it.”

On the other hand, it is not necessary that litigation should actually have begun at the time of the declaration. The element to be avoided is a bias in the mind of a declarant ; and this is sufficiently probable if a dispute or controversy is actually in progress, even though it may not have reached the stage of legal proceedings :

¹ 1811, Graham, B., in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 408 ; 1821, Boudereau v. Montgomery, 4 Wash. C. C. 190 (Washington, J., admitting depositions in a previous cause : “ It is not without great diffidence that I venture to dissent from the reasoning of the judges in the Berkeley Peerage Case. But it seems to be rather artificial than solid, when directed against the admissibility of the evidence ; although I acknowledge that the possibility of an undue bias having been produced by the existence of a controversy might with propriety be urged against the credit to be given to the evidence, where the proofs in the cause are contradictory and to be weighed. I am apprehensive that great mischief and injustice might be the consequence of excluding the only species of evidence which circumstances not within the control of the parties interested may have left to them, on the ground of a presumed bias created by an existing or even presumed controversy”).

² Limitation recognized : Eng. : 1816, Freeman v. Phillipps, 4 M. & S. 397 ; 1881, Dysart Peerage Case, L. R. 2 App. Cas. 489, 503 ; U. S. : 1817, Chapman v. Chapmau, 2 Conu. 349 ; 1859, Collins v. Grantham, 12 Ind. 444 ; 1881, De Haven v. De Haven, 77 id. 236, 237 ; 1840, People v. Fire Ins. Co., 25 Wend. 210 ; 1825, Morgan v. Purnell, 4 Hawks 97 ; 1900, Nehring v. McMurrin, 94 Tex. 45, 57 S. W. 943 ; 1839, Stein v. Bowman, 13 Pet. 209, 220.

³ The following cases apply the rule : 1816, Freeman v. Phillipps, 4 M. & S. 397 ; 1857, Gee v. Ward, 7 E & B. 511 ; 1860, Shedden v. Patrick, 2 Sw. & Tr. 170, 188 (“ if a controversy exist, it must be on the very point in respect of which the declarations are sought to be used ” ; here there had been controversy about the legitimacy of children, but not about a cohabitation or a deathbed marriage, with which the admitted letter dealt) ; 1828, Elliott v. Peirsol, 1 Pet. 337.

1831, L. C. Brougham, in Monkton v. Attorney-General, 2 Russ. & M. 160: "Prove that . . . the person concocting or making the declaration took part in the controversy. Show me even that there was a contemplation of legal proceedings, with a view to which the pedigree was manufactured, and I shall hold that it comes within the rule which rejects evidence fabricated for a purpose by a man who has an interest of his own to serve."

1859, Willes, J., in Bulter v. Mountgarret, 6 H. L. C. 641: "The lis would surely have dated at least from the time when the parties had respectively assumed a hostile attitude. . . . A suit is not necessary to constitute lis."⁴

The fact that no controversy existed, being preliminary to the admission of the evidence, must be shown by the party offering it.⁵ But, as this is in effect proving a negative, slight evidence should suffice.

§ 1484. No Interest or Motive to Deceive. The existence of a controversy is only one circumstance (though the most common one) likely to produce a bias fatal to the trustworthiness of the declaration. Judicial opinion seems to hold, and properly, that other considerations may under certain circumstances operate to exclude the declarations. In general, they would be excluded where there is any specific and adequate reason to suppose the existence of a motive inconsistent with a fair degree of sincerity. In Lord Eldon's words, they must appear to be the natural effusions of a party standing in an even position:

1861, Channell, B., in Plant v. Taylor, 7 H. & N. 237: "Perhaps the learned judge was right in rejecting the evidence on the ground that any declaration made by Thomas Taylor, the father, . . . would be a declaration by a person whose mind could not be free from bias. It was manifestly in many ways directly for his interest to make a declaration tending to disavow his first marriage, or having a tendency to show that it was an illegal marriage and consequently did not invalidate the second. No case has been cited in which the declaration of a deceased person obviously for his interest has been received."¹

⁴ Compare the opinions of the other law lords, and the opinion of Greene, B., in the same case below, in 6 Ir. C. L. 94.

It was once said by Baron Alderson (1834, Walker v. Beauchamp, 6 C. & P. 561) that it was sufficient if at the time of the declaration the state of facts existed (for example, the birth of a child) as to which the controversy afterwards arose. This, however, obviously cannot be sound; for it is to the controversy, and to nothing else, that the bias is to be attributed. Mr. Baron Alderson's opinion has been more than once repudiated, and has apparently never been confirmed: 1843, Reilly v. Fitzgerald, 6 Ir. Eq. 344 (Sugden, L. C.: "The point of inquiry respecting the admissibility of such evidence is, not the existence of a state of facts out of which a claim has arisen, but the existence of a controversy or dispute respecting that claim"; here the question depended on whether a child was born alive or not, but no one supposed till several years afterwards that anything depended on the child's birth). Accord: 1856, Pigot, C. B., in Butler v. Mountgarret, 6 Ir. C. L. 107; 1836, Shadwell, V. C., in Slaney v. Wade, 7 Sim. 615; 1860, Shedden v. Patrick, 2 Sw. & Tr. 170, 187.

⁵ 1825, Morgan v. Purnell, 4 Hawks 97;

1890, Hodges v. Hodges, 106 N. C. 374, 11 S. E. 364.

It has been held that the existence of a controversy between certain members of the family is sufficient to condemn declarations by a member who was himself ignorant of the controversy and therefore quite unbiassed: 1811, Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 417 (Mansfield, C. J.: "I have now only to notice the observation that to exclude declarations you must show that the lis mota was known to the person who made them. There is no such rule. . . . If an inquiry were to be instituted in each instance, whether the existence of the controversy was or was not known at the time of the declaration, much time would be wasted and great confusion would be produced"). But this is against the reason of the rule, and cannot be supported: 1860, Shedden v. Patrick, 2 Sw. & Tr. 170, 187 (Cresswell, J.: "We must judge of the feelings of the party from what he knew at the time").

¹ Accord: 1828, Doe v. Randall, 2 Moo. & Rob. 25; 1831, Monkton v. Attorney-General, 2 Russ. & M. 147; 1843, Reilly v. Fitzgerald, 6 Ir. Eq. 345; 1817, Chapman v. Chapman, 2 Conn. 349; 1828, Waldron v. Tuttle, 4 N. H. 378; 1895, Byers v. Wallace, 87 Tex. 503, 29 S. W. 760 (excluding the statements of

But this principle must not be pushed too far. Cautions have more than once been given to avoid excluding evidence merely because there might have been a bias :

1847, L. C. J. Denman, in Doe v. Davies, 10 Q. B. 325: “[A declaration in a deed] was objected to on account of the interest they had in making out things to be as there represented, and at least this intention of disposing of property was said to be equivalent to a lis mota. But we think this objection also fails. . . . The parties did what they had a right to do if members of the family. Almost every declaration of relationship is accompanied with some feeling of interest, which will often cast suspicion on the declarations, but has never been held to render them inadmissible.”

1840, Walworth, C., in People v. Fire Ins. Co., 25 Wend. 215: “The declarations of deceased relatives are not to be absolutely rejected because there is room for a suspicion that they may have been made for a sinister purpose, if the party making them has no interest in their truth.”²

In particular, as to the entry of a birth declared to be legitimate, the mere circumstance that the entry was made with a view to perpetuating evidence of legitimacy or of the date of birth should not exclude the entry; otherwise very few such entries would be receivable, and the chief and honorable purpose of making them would be defeated :

1801, Mansfield, C. J., in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 418 (for all the Judges, respecting an entry in a family Bible): “The father is proved to have declared that he made such entry for the express purpose of establishing the legitimacy of his son and the time of birth, in case the same should be called in question after the father’s death. The opinion of the Judges is that the entry would be receivable in evidence, notwithstanding the professed view with which it was made. Its particularity would be a strong circumstance of suspicion; but still it would be receivable, whatever the credit might be to which it would be entitled.”³

Finally, the offeror of the evidence must perhaps show the absence of motive to deceive; ⁴ but slight evidence should suffice.

3. Testimonial Qualifications, and Other Independent Rules of Evidence.

§ 1485. (1) Testimonial Qualifications. As in the other exceptions to the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1424), there are here found certain requirements resting upon the general principles of Testimonial Qualifications which are applicable to all testimonial statements and have been already examined for testimony in general. Chiefly there arise here questions as to the means of one asserting the death of a nephew whose sole heir he was; superseding Fowler v. Simpson, 79 id. 611, 614, 15 S. W. 682; 1899, Turner v. Sealock, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 594, 54 S. W. 358 (same; sister’s declarations as to brother’s death, excluded); 1899, Lewis v. Bergess, 22 id. 252, 54 S. W. 609 (same; mother’s declarations excluded).

Compare the cases cited post, §§ 1492, 1493, which are sometimes wrongly placed on this principle.

² Accord: 1831, Shields v. Boucher, 2 Russ. & M. 147, per Brougham, L. C.

³ Accord: 1777, Goodright v. Moss, 2 Cowp.

594, semble, Lord Mansfield, C. J.; 1857, Gee v. Ward, 7 E. & B. 511; 1840, People v. Fire Ins. Co., 20 Wend. 211, Cowen, J. Contra: 1817, Chapman v. Chapman, 2 Conn. 349 (Swift, C. J.: “When they are made for the express purpose of being given in evidence on a question of pedigree, they will not be received. If a person were to take up a Bible, and, having the idea that it was afterwards to be produced in evidence, were to write down at once the births and deaths of his children, such an entry would not be admissible”).

⁴ 1854, Emerson v. White, 29 N. H. 491; and cases supra, semble, §§ 1432, 1433.

Knowledge (ante, § 656) of the declarant, and the form of Communication (ante, § 766) of his knowledge.

§ 1486. (a) Sufficiency of the Declarant's Means of Knowledge; General Principle. The ordinary principle applicable to the situation would be (ante, §§ 654, 656) that the declarant must appear to have had fair knowledge, or fair opportunities for acquiring knowledge, on the subject testified to. This principle, as applied to the facts of family history, indicates that the qualified persons will be found chiefly, if not exclusively, within the family circle; for they alone may be expected to have fairly accurate information. It is of course not to be expected that personal observation shall be demanded, i. e. that only from those who were present at the birth, wedding, or death, shall hearsay statements be received; this would be to misconceive the theory of the exception. That theory is that the constant (though casual) mention and discussion of important family affairs, whether of the present or of past generations, puts it in the power of members of the family circle to be fully acquainted with the original personal knowledge and the consequent tradition on the subject, and that those members will therefore know, as well as any one can be expected to know, the facts of the matter. It is not that they have, each and all, a knowledge by personal observation, but that they at least know the fact as accepted by family understanding and tradition, and that this understanding, based as it was originally on observation, is prima facie trustworthy. This has always been accepted as the sufficient reason for predicating sufficient testimonial qualification:

1807, L. C. Eldon, in White Locke v. Baker, 13 Ves. 514: "It was not the opinion of Lord Mansfield, or of any judge, that tradition, generally, is evidence even of pedigree; the tradition must be from persons having such a connection with the party to whom it relates that it is natural and likely from their domestic habits and connections that they are speaking the truth, and that they could not be mistaken."

1811, Mansfield, C. J., in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 416: "General rights are naturally talked of in the neighborhood, and family transactions among the relations of the parties. Therefore, what is thus dropped in conversation upon such subjects may be presumed to be true."¹

¹ Personal knowledge of the facts is therefore not requisite: 1831, Monkton v. Attorney-General, 2 Russ. & M. 165 (Brougham, L. C.: "The declarations tendered in evidence may either refer to what the party knew of his own personal knowledge, or, as is much more frequently the case, to what he had heard from others to whom he gave credit"). Accord: 1879, Van Sickle v. Gibson, 40 Mich. 173; 1843, Jewell's Lessee v. Jewell, 1 How. 231. Nor need the knowledge, such as it is, be exact in its details; for example, the declaration, in affirming relationship, need not particularize as to the degree, where that is not material in the case: 1806, Vowles v. Young, 13 Ves. 147, L. C. Erskine; 1828, Doe v. Randall, 2 Moo. & R. 25, Burrough, J.

The following rulings therefore seem sound: 1899, Rothwell v. Jamison, 147 Mo. 601, 49 S. W. 503 (a person testifying on the stand to family history must have personal knowledge, unless he professes merely to give family repute upon the subject); 1903, Grand Lodge v. Barter, — Nebr. —, 96 N. W. 186 (wife's statement of her deceased husband's age, based solely on the statement of the priest at the time of marriage, excluded). The following ruling seems unsound: 1873, Deedes v. Giles, 17 Sol. J. 420, 7 Alb. L. J. 269 (statements by a deceased grandfather about his own grandfather, who died before his birth, excluded, because it did not appear that the former's information was obtained from members of the family). The following case is hardly a ruling of exclusion: 1841, R. v. Lydeard, St. Lawrence, 11 A. & E. 616 (pauper settlement; a witness' statement, "I was born in the parish of L. St. L., as I have heard and believe," held not to be of itself sufficient to prove the place of his birth; Patterson, J.: "It does not appear when or where the son was born, except by his own evidence; he could not know these facts; and they do not

The difficulties, then, that arise are concerned with drawing the line between declarants that may fairly be supposed to be thus qualified and those that may not. The questions here are of two general sorts: First, Shall a line be drawn between those who are relatives, i. e. strictly members of the family circle, and those who are not, i. e. servants, friends, neighbors, and the like? Secondly, Shall any line be drawn between different kinds of relatives, for example, according as they are near or distant, or as they are related by consanguinity or by affinity?

Before considering these two great classes of questions, it is desirable to examine the language of the Courts and observe what general notions, if any, are expressed, as to the scope of this knowledge-qualification:

1790, L. C. J. Kenyon, in R. v. Eriswell, 3 T. R. 707: "I admit, declarations of the members of a family, and perhaps of others living in habits of intimacy with them, are received in evidence as to pedigrees; but evidence of what a mere stranger has said has ever been rejected in those cases."

1806, L. C. Erskine, in Vowles v. Young, 13 Ves. 140: "[A pedigree declaration] is evidence from the interest of that person in knowing the connections of the family. Therefore the opinion of the neighborhood or what passed among acquaintance will not do."

1817, Swift, C. J., in Chapman v. Chapman, 2 Conn. 349: "The declaration must be from persons having such a connection with the party to whom it relates that it is natural and likely, from their domestic habits and connexions, they are speaking the truth and cannot be mistaken. . . . The opinion of deceased neighbors or acquaintances of the family are not evidence in a question of pedigree; for they cannot be supposed to have that certain knowledge which can be relied on. . . . From this it appears that the deceased relative whose declarations are given in evidence is to be considered as standing on the foot of a witness, and the hearsay declarations admitted in lieu of his testimony. It is therefore essential that the relative whose declarations are given in evidence should be named, so that the Court may be enabled to know whether his relationship or connexion with the family whose pedigree is in question was such that he may be supposed to know the truth of the declarations."

1883, Dickey, J., in Harland v. Eastman, 107 Ill. 538: "What has been said by deceased members of the family is admissible upon the presumption that they knew from the general repute in the family the facts of which they speak."

§ 1487. Same: Declarations of Non-Relatives. The required qualification, then, in general may be supposed to be present whenever (following the judicial phrases) there are found persons "likely to know the facts," "having an opportunity to know the facts," or "holding a relation rendering it very probable that he would learn them truly." If this is so, the line need not be drawn strictly at relatives. But the language of Lord Erskine (quoted above), "the interest of the person in knowing the connections of the family" does require the line to be drawn there.¹

ask his father, who probably knew and was examined"; that the testimony was regarded as absolutely inadmissible does not clearly appear).

¹ Accordingly, this uncertainty of phrasing has led to conflicting rulings; note, however, that several of the rulings excluding the statements of non-relatives do so on the ground that the declarant was not shown deceased (ante, § 1481) or that the particular declarant was not qualified on the facts of the case: England: 1743, Craig dem. Annesley v. Earl of Anglesea, 17 How. St. Tr. 1160 (the godmother of an alleged child, intimate friend of the mother; her hearsay to the child's existence and legiti-

Yet, after all, such a narrow test seems too narrow, at least for this country. Even in England, where so much of personal advancement and material prosperity for the individual depends upon his family rank and his rights of inheritance, it seems too much to say that only those who have this immediate property-interest in learning the family history can possibly have adequate information; for family physicians and chaplains, old servants, and intimate friends may, in cases, be equally and sufficiently informed. In this country at least, the conditions are such, for the mass of the population, that the macy, not allowed); 1754, Robins v. Wolseley, 2 Lee Eccl. 135, 421, 442 (deceased vicar's affidavit of the time of a marriage by him, admitted; whether by common law or canon law does not appear; compare § 1476, ante); 1776, Duchess of Kingston's Trial, 20 How. St. Tr. 355, 592 (bigamy; the widow of parson Annis testified to knowing the defendant; Q. "Were you privy to her marriage in your husband's lifetime?" A. "I was not at the wedding; but I have heard my husband say he married them"; and a Lord: "That is not evidence"; no ruling was made or asked for); 1811, Berkeley Peerage Case, Min. Ev. 655, quoted in Hubback, Succession, 246 (declaration of a deceased clergyman, chaplain to the Earl, that the Earl and Countess were married by him, and that a certain person was their legitimate son, excluded, by all the judges); 1812, Walker v. Wingfield, 18 Ves. 443, 446 (Eldon, L. C.: "The question whether a physician or a servant who has attended the family can be admitted as one of the family has not, I conceive, been decided"); 1824, Johnson v. Lawson, 2 Bing. 86 (quoted post); 1843, Casey v. O'Shanghnessy, 7 Jur. 1140 (Roman Catholic priest, excluded); 1879, Polini v. Gray, L. R. 12 Ch. D. 426, per James, L. J. (intimate friends, excluded); Canada: 1848, Doe v. Auldjo, 5 U. C. Q. B. 175 (declarations of an old body-servant, excluded, by two judges to one). In the British Indian Code, drawn by Sir James Stephen, declarations by persons having "special means of knowledge" are made admissible: Whitley-Stokes' ed. II, 875, § 32. United States: 1867, Wilson v. Brownlee, 24 Ark. 539 (it was conceded that declarations by others than members of the family were admissible; but declarations by persons as to whose knowledge nothing whatever was shown were rejected); 1817, Chapman v. Chapman, 2 Conn. 347 ("declarations of the deceased members of a family, or those who have lived in the family and may from their connexion with it be supposed to know the state of it," are admissible; but not "of deceased neighbours or acquaintances of the family," "for they cannot be supposed to have that certain knowledge which can be relied on"); 1901, Alston v. Alston, 114 Ia. 29, 86 N. W. 55 (declarations of F. and his wife, friends in whose family the plaintiff, the illegitimate child of a mother D., was brought up from a time shortly after his birth, were admitted to show plaintiff's paternity); 1811, Jackson v. Cooley, 8 John. 130 (Thompson, J.: the declarations of

"persons who from their situation were likely to know are competent evidence"; and a reputation among acquaintances of the family was admitted; Spencer, J., dissented, but apparently on the chief ground that the acquaintances were not shown to be deceased); 1820, Jackson v. Browner, 18 id. 39 (Spencer, C. J., rejected declarations from acquaintances of a particular ancestor in Ireland, because the witnesses "have not derived their information from such persons as had any connection or particular acquaintance with the family from which John M'Neil sprang"); 1902, Dinan v. Supreme Council, 201 Pa. 363, 50 Atl. 999 (health board's certificate, undertaker's coffin-plate, and newspaper obituary notice, stating the deceased's age, and founded on conflicting statements of various members of the family, excluded); 1889, Howard v. Russell, 75 Tex. 171, 176, 12 S. W. 525 (recitals in an ancient masonic lodge-record, as to the domicile of a visitor, received, as involving a question of pedigree); 1899, Turner v. Sealock, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 594, 54 S. W. 358 (declarations as to H.'s death, by persons who were with him, admitted); 1899, Lewis v. Bergess, 22 id. 252, 54 S. W. 609 (declarations of a friend who went with H. to the Mexican war, that he served in the army and died there unmarried, admitted); 1839, Stein v. Bowman, 13 Pet. 209, 220 (statements of "many old persons" in Germany, as to the plaintiff being brother to G. S., deceased, excluded, partly because the declarants were living, partly because the statements "do not appear to have been made by members of the family or by persons who had such connexions with the deceased as to have a personal knowledge of the facts stated"); 1876, Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Schenck, 94 U. S. 98 (an entry of age in the minute-book of a lodge of Odd Fellows, of which the deceased was a member, was rejected, as being the statement of a "stranger"); 1896, Flora v. Anderson, 75 Fed. 217, 222 (declaration of one who was a servant in the household for an unspecified time, as to the birth of an illegitimate child to a daughter in the house; semble, excluded); 1884, Peterson v. Ankrom, 25 W. Va. 56, 61, 63 (affidavit of an intimate friend; undecided).

Distinguish the following, which seems to involve the principle of § 1788, post: 1897, Posey v. Hanson, 10 D. C. App. 497, 507 (in rebutting the presumption of death, the fact of the person being "heard from" may include the hearsay of persons not members of the family).

interest in family rank and inheritance cannot require such a narrowing of the test.

It is not necessary to maintain that the statements of any friend are always admissible; but it is desirable to disavow any limitation which would exclude the statements of one whose intimacy with the family could leave no doubt as to his sufficient acquaintance, equally with the family members, of the facts of the family history:

1848, Robinson, C. J., in Doe v. Auldjo, 5 U. C. Q. B. 175 (holding admissible testimony from a member of the family that an old body-servant, now deceased, had returned from Africa and told them of the death there of his master, an explorer, the ancestor in question): "There is therefore no improbability in the servant's relation, which seems to have been credited at the time and ever since . . . and after fifty years parties are relieved from the necessity of attempting to account for him. . . . No better evidence would be required than the account brought back by his faithful servant to his family, and accredited by them and by the government which employed him."

The only reasoned defence of the narrower rule is found in the following opinion:

1824, Johnson v. Lawson, 2 Bing. 86; declarations of one who had been a housekeeper in the family for 24 years were rejected; Best, C. J.: "Evidence of that kind must be subject to limitation, otherwise it would be a source of great uncertainty; and the limitation hitherto pursued, namely, the confining such evidence to the declarations of relations of the family, affords a rule at once certain and intelligible. If the admissibility of such evidence were not so restrained, we should on every occasion, before the testimony could be admitted, have to enter upon a long inquiry as to the degree of intimacy or confidence that subsisted between the party and the deceased declarant."

It may be noted, as to this reasoning, first, that its result is inconsistent with the general language used in earlier judicial opinions (ante, § 1486), and is supportable only on the narrow test of Lord Erskine before mentioned; secondly, that the special reason given, namely, the inconvenience of an investigation into sources of knowledge, is anomalous in the law of evidence; for no Court is allowed to decline to investigate the sources of a witness' qualifications so far as may be necessary, while in each case the investigation need be no more tedious than the judge's discretion permits; and, finally, that the proof of intimacy in the household would surely be no more tedious than proof of family membership is often found to be.

§ 1488. Same: Reputation in the Neighborhood or Community. The use of declarations of individual friends and intimates is to be distinguished from the use of reputation in the neighborhood or community. The elements of trustworthiness that are found in a community-reputation, and are recognized as sufficient to render it evidential in certain classes of cases are examined under the Reputation-Exception to the Hearsay rule, and the application of that principle to facts of family history (such as race-ancestry, marriage, birth, and death), can there best be dealt with (post, § 1605). In the Courts recognizing the use of neighborhood-reputation for the present class of facts, the recognition has historically been reached often as a direct extension of the principle of family-reputation.

§ 1489. Same: Declarations of Relatives; Distinctions between Different Kinds of Relatives. Is there any reason for excluding any class of relatives as not having probable adequate information?

1. First, there has been no attempt to rule out specific consanguines because of the remoteness of relationship. This might, perhaps, well be done in a given case; but the rule has apparently crystallized with this arbitrary limit.

2. Next, should any distinction be made between a relation by blood and a relation by marriage, to the disadvantage of the latter? All that can be said for such a distinction is that relations by marriage are likely to be less intimate in the family circle and to have little or no interest depending upon a chance of inheritance. But the general likelihood of their being correctly informed is perhaps quite as great as for distant consanguineous relations, and is sufficient in the ordinary instances. As a matter of precedent, the statements of one who is a party to a marriage are regarded as acceptable (i. e. statements regarding the other marital party's family history). Historically, this was first settled for the case of a declarant husband:

1806, L. C. Erskine, in Vowles v. Young, 13 Ves. 140: "The law resorts to hearsay of relations upon the principle of interest in the person from whom the descent is to be made out. . . . As far as hearsay is evidence of anything within the knowledge of a man, no man can be supposed ignorant of the reputation of the descent of his wife. . . . But it must be considered whether that can extend to mere collateral declarations of this kind [a wife's illegitimacy], where there is no interest in the husband. . . . Consider, then, whether the knowledge of the husband as to the legitimacy of his wife is not likely to be more intimate, and his interest stronger, than that of any relation however near in blood. First, if she has an estate tail, he is tenant by the curtesy. Has he not an interest in knowing her legitimacy, his expectation depending upon it? So as to her personal estate, he is entitled to all that comes to her. Is not that a strong interest?"¹

Then, tardily, it was settled for the case of a declarant wife.² Furthermore, in general, the declaration of any person connected on one side of a marriage concerning relationship in the family on the other side would probably be received, unless the probable absence of adequate information should be made to appear in a given instance:

1828, Best, C. J., in Doe v. Randall, 2 Moo. & P. 25: "Consanguinity, or affinity by blood, therefore, is not necessary, and for this obvious reason, that a party by marriage is more likely to be informed of the state of the family of which he is become a member than a relation who is only distantly connected by blood, as by frequent conversation the former may hear the particulars and characters of branches of the family long since dead."³

¹ Accord: 1825, Doe v. Harvey, 1 Ry. & Moo. 297; 1843, Jewell's Lessee v. Jewell, 1 How. 231.

² 1857, Shrewsbury Peerage Case, 7 H. L. C. 22, 26; presumably superseding Davies v. Lowndes, 1843, 7 Scott N. R. 188, and confirming Doe v. Randall, 1828, 2 Moo. & P. 25.

³ Accord: Codes cited ante, § 1480; 1840, People v. Fire Ins. Co., 25 Wend. 209 (admitting declarations by deceased members of the family of a grandson of a maternal uncle of W., the propositus, as to the non-existence of collateral relatives of W. on the paternal side); 1894, Pickens' Estate, 163 Pa. 14, 28 Atl. 875. Contra: 1895, Turner v. King, 98 Ky. 253, 32 S. W. 941 (a family Bible of the testator's mother's father, to show the testator's age, excluded as not being the reputation of the testator's family; this is unsound; is not a grandchild a member of the grandfather's blood-family?).

§ 1490. Same: Declarant's Qualifications must be shown. Upon the general principle for testimonial knowledge (ante, § 654), the qualifications of the deceased declarant — his relationship, or whatever is relied upon as equipping him with information — must be shown in advance.¹ In other words, the relationship of the declarant to the family whose history he refers to must be shown by evidence independent of his mere declaration; otherwise, there would be a begging of the question. The only apparent exception is found in the case of a declarant speaking of his own personal history, — for example, of his marriage.² But obviously a person is qualified to speak of himself; it is only where a relationship with others is involved that the fact must be made to appear independently.

§ 1491. Same: Relationship always Mutual; Connecting the Declarant with Both Families. It follows, in applying the foregoing principle, that where an alleged relationship between Doe and Roe is to be testified to, a relation of Doe may speak to it, because it concerns the relationships of Doe's family, while a relation of Roe may equally speak to it, because it concerns the relationships of Roe's family; hence, all that is required of the declarant is a connection with either one or the other, but not with both.

This truth, however, has been obscured by what must be regarded as erroneous rulings. The question being whether Doe is related to Roe (for example, so as to share in Roe's inheritance), the argument has been that it would be idle to require merely that the declarant should be shown to be related to Doe alone, because then any family could connect itself with any other by its members' mere assertion of the relationship. But the proper way to approach the question seems to be a different one, and is as follows: Any member of Doe's line may declare as to the relationships (i. e. memberships) of that family, and any member of Roe's line may declare as to the relationships (i. e. memberships) of that family; and the qualifications of the declarant, as such member, must of course be shown beforehand, like the qualifications of any witness (ante, § 1486). Thus, before declarations of a supposed member of Doe's family can be admitted, the declarant's membership in Doe's family — for example, that he is Doe's son — must be shown. But that is the whole effect of this requirement. The further question, if any, is, whether a declaration of Doe's son that Doe is related to Roe

¹ 1810, Banbury Peerage Case, 2 Selw. N. P. 764, and in App. to LeMarchant's Gardner Peerage Case, 410, 412; 1848, Doe v. Servos, 5 U. C. Q. B. 284, 289; 1882, Wise v. Wynn, 69 Miss. 592; 1901, Young v. Shulenberg, 165 N. Y. 385, 59 N. E. 135; 1880, Thompson v. Woolf, 8 Or. 463; 1884, Sitler v. Gehr, 105 Pa. 592; 1886, Fulkerson v. Holmes, 117 U. S. 389, 6 Sup. 780. Of course, also, it must be shown that the witness on the stand, reporting the family reputation, has sufficient acquaintance with the family to know what that reputation is; this, again, is an ordinary question of the testimonial qualifications, i. e. of the witness on the stand, and is not peculiar to the Hearsay exception: 1883, Harland v. Eastman, 107 Ill. 539; 1854, Emerson v. White, 29 N. H. 491; 1820, Jackson v. Browner, 18 John. 29; 1814, Barnet's Lessee v. Day, 3 Wash. C. C. 243; 1869, Eaton v. Tallmadge, 24 Wis. 222. But the witness on the stand need not be related to the family of the declarant: 1900, Elder v. State, 124 Ala. 69, 27 So. 305.

² 1819, Allen v. Hall, 2 Nott & McC. 114 (partition; defendants claiming against a grantee from their ancestor's alleged wife were allowed to show their ancestor's declarations that he was not married). Compare § 268, ante (conduct as evidence of marriage), and § 2063, post (testimony to illegitimacy of offspring during marriage).

(for example, is Roe's cousin) is a declaration as to Doe's family at all,—i. e. whether it is not, for the case in hand, solely a declaration about Roe's family-relationships, as to which Doe's son is by hypothesis not yet shown to be a qualified declarant. Now the state or condition of relationship must always in effect, though not in form, be double or mutual;¹ i. e. the fact that Doe is cousin to Roe is also the fact that Roe is related as cousin to Doe. Hence, a statement of Doe's son that Doe is cousin to Roe, though in one form an assertion of Roe's relationships, is also and equally a declaration that one of the relations of Doe (i. e. one of the members of Doe's family) is Roe,—for example, that one of the grandsons of Doe's grandfather is Roe. It is therefore a declaration upon which Doe's son is qualified to speak. The doubt, then, can only be as to whether it should make any difference that in the case in hand it is Roe's descendants who are seeking Doe's estate or Doe's who are seeking Roe's estate. This surely cannot affect the evidential value of the declarations; for that must depend on the circumstances at the time of making, and no one has ever contended that, apart from the lis mota and kindred limitations (ante, §§ 1483, 1484), it makes any difference whether the declarant belongs to a poor or obscure branch of the family or to a rich and notorious one. Moreover, it is usually at a later date only that it has become apparent which branch would have a pecuniary interest in connecting itself with the other. The difference, then, is a matter of the form of statement only, and such assertions as the above must be treated as in substance declarations as to Doe's family-relationships; whether it is Doe's or Roe's family that now happens to be seeking the inheritance is immaterial.² Any other rule would produce this singular inconsistency, that if in 1863,

¹ L. C. Brongham, in Monkton v. Attorney-General, cited infra: "It is not more true that things which are equal to the same thing are equal to one another than that persons related by blood to the same individual are more or less related to each other."

² Accord: 1831, Monkton v. Attorney-General, 2 Russ. & M. 147 (declarations of J. T. as to the relationship of S. T. and G. T. were admitted, J. T.'s kinship with G. T., but not with S. T., being first shown; Lord Brongham, L. C.: "I cannot go to the length of holding that you must prove him to be connected with both the branches of the family touching which his declaration is rendered"); 1901, Manu v. Cavanaugh, 110 Ky. 776, 82 S. W. 854 (recitals of grantors' heirship of J. C. in an ancient deed by J. J. C. and others, held sufficient to prove J. C. the ancestor of J. J. C.); 1884, Sitler v. Gehr, 105 Pa. 577, 592 ("The declarants were A. M. G. and John G.; the plaintiff's ancestor was Joseph G.; the deceased ancestor was Balsler G., of Berks County. It was not denied that the declarants were of the family of Joseph G., and it was attempted to show by their declarations that the above-named Joseph G. and Balsler G. were related to each [other]. . . . The plaintiffs in error contend, not only that the declarants must be shown by evidence aliunde to be related to the family as to which declarations were made, but also that they must be thus shown to be related to the person who died seised. . . . Although there is some conflict in the cases, the weight of authority seems to be that while a declarant must be shown by evidence aliunde to belong to the family, it does not appear to be necessary to show that he belongs to the same branch of it"; Monkton v. Attorney-General followed); 1891, Robb's Estate, 37 S. C. 19, 22, 33, 36, 16 S. E. 241 (declarations of G., son of M. M., whose sister was J. M., that R. was the son of R. and J. M., admitted; the family to which it was necessary to connect the declarant being that of M., not R.) Compare the cases cited post, § 1573 (recitals of heirship in ancient deeds), which often give the same result.

Where the declarant is the intestate himself, his declarations may be received as admissions of a predecessor in title (ante, § 1082), and the present question need not arise; e. g.: 1901, Malone v. Adams, 113 Ga. 791, 39 S. E. 507 (one claiming as niece and heir, allowed to prove her relationship to the decedent by the decedent's declarations; distinguishing Greene v. Almand, 111 id. 735, 36 S. E. 957, which, however, seems contra).

Doe and Roe being both poor, Doe's son James mentions Roe in a letter as his father's cousin, and then dies in 1864, and if in 1884 litigation arises and James is proved to be the son of Doe, his letter would be received if Doe had become the wealthy one and Roe's relatives were claiming a share, but would be rejected (without other proof) if Roe had happened in the mean time to become the wealthy one and Doe's relatives were seeking a share. Yet this seems to be the logical consequence of the doctrine laid down by the Federal Supreme Court.³

§ 1492. Same: Relationship of Illegitimate Child. It has been ruled in England that where the relationship claimed and to be testified to is that of an illegitimate child, the father's relations are not qualified declarants, because (apparently) the claimant is legally not of the declarant's family.¹ But this seems a mere juggling with legal rules. The question is, Was the declarant in such a position as to be likely to know something of this alleged fact of family history? Whether the illegitimate child is or is not a lawful heir according to the rules of the substantive law about succession, is quite beside the point in determining the evidential question of the declarant's probable information. The principle of the ruling has been disapproved in England,² and ought not to be followed in this country.³ It seems never to have been doubted that the declarations of the parents themselves, or the repute in the household where the child lived, as to a child's legitimacy or illegitimacy, are receivable;⁴ although it is obvious that upon the false theory of Crispin

³ The following cases take the stricter view: 1849, Dunlop v. Servos, 5 U. C. Q. B. 288 (here the plaintiff claimed as heir of J. D., and declarations of A. D., the plaintiff's father, that the plaintiff was the heir, were offered; it was held that A. D.'s relationship to J. D. must first be shown); 1896, Jennings v. Webb, 8 D. C. App. 43, 56 (Blackburn v. Crawfords, U. S., followed); 1882, Wise v. Wynn, 59 Miss. 588, 592 (C. W.'s estate being claimed by children of an alleged brother T. W., C. W.'s declarations that he had a brother T. W., admitted; but they would have been excluded if the claim here had been by C. W.'s children to T. W.'s estate); 1865, Blackburn v. Crawfords, 3 Wall. 187 (declarations by A., sister of B., that B. was married to X., the brother of Y., whose property-succession was in issue, were rejected, because the declarant did not belong to the family whose pedigree was in issue). In Plant v. Taylor, 1861, 7 H. & N. 226, 237, the reasoning is hopelessly confused.

¹ 1863, Crispin v. Doglioni, 3 Sw. & Tr. 44 (declarations of J. as to the relationship of illegitimate son which the plaintiff claimed with J.'s brother were excluded, by Sir C. Cresswell, because "the plaintiff according to his own account is filius nullius by our law"). Accord: 1837, Doe v. Barton, 2 Moo. & Rob. 28 (declarations of B., an illegitimate son, as to the death of an illegitimate brother, excluded).

² 1879, Murray v. Milner, L. R. 12 Ch. D. 849 (admitting declarations in a will as to the naturalness of a child, semble). The following ruling seems to require too much: 1871, Hitchins

v. Eardley, L. R. 2 P. & D. 248 (whether M. was the legitimate child of J. and L.; M.'s declarations admitted, after a prima facie case of legitimacy was otherwise made out).

³ It has however been at least twice approved: 1844, Northrop v. Hale, 76 Me. 312 (approving Crispin v. Doglioni; but here admitting declarations of the mother's sister, because a bastard is legally of his mother's family); 1896, Flora v. Anderson, 75 Fed. 217, 234 (following Crispin v. Doglioni). Compare Barnum v. Barnum, in the next note.

⁴ 1777, Goodright v. Moss, Cowp. 594 (quoted post, § 1497); 1791, Goodright v. Saul, 4 T. R. 356 ("the reputation in the family of the son's being a bastard," received without question); 1901, Heaton's Estate, 135 Cal. 385, 67 Pac. 321 (claim of inheritance as illegitimate child of H.; declarations of H., in whose family the claimant lived, held admissible); 1903, Heaton's Estate, 139 id. 237, 73 Pac. 186 (preceding ruling affirmed); 1874, Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Miller, 2 Colo. 442, 453, 460; 1862, Niles v. Spragne, 13 Ia. 198, 207; 1899, Watson v. Richardson, 110 id. 673, 80 N. W. 407; 1901, Alston v. Alston, 114 id. 29, 86 N. W. 55 (declarations as to paternity of a conceded illegitimate child, admitted); 1848, Copes v. Pearce, 7 Gill 247, 264; 1875, Barnum v. Barnum, 42 Md. 251, 304 (declarations of the mother of R. as to the non-marriage of R. and C., and the illegitimacy of their child J., admitted); 1894, Jackson v. Jackson, 80 id. 176, 30 Atl. 752 ("declarations of deceased parents are

v. Doglioni, the father's declarations of illegitimacy would be inadmissible. There is a danger of being too nice in the logical application of the substantive law of relationship to the present testimonial rule, which rests rather upon the moral probabilities of trustworthiness in the declarant.

§ 1493. Same: Testimony to one's Own Age. Testimony to one's own age may be treated in one of two ways. (1) The objection may be made that the statement on the stand (for example, "I am twenty years of age," or, "I was born January 1, 1860") is not founded on adequate knowledge. Whether it is so, although not based on personal observation and direct memory, but on hearsay sources, is a question of Testimonial Qualifications. From this point of view, it should nevertheless be regarded as admissible; and is therefore accepted by most Courts (ante, § 667). (2) But if it is not, it may still be admissible, under the present Exception, as in effect an assertion of the family reputation. Some Courts so treat it, and therefore admit it.¹ The only question can then be whether it is necessary to show that all the members of the family are unavailable (ante, § 1481).

§ 1494. Same: Statements of Family History to Identify a Person. Where a mere question of identity of person is involved, i. e. whether J. S., formerly of Millville, is the same person as J. S. deceased in San Antonio, all the personal marks of the two become relevant (ante, § 411). From this point of view the person's history, and in particular his beliefs and utterances, may have a bearing, and therefore his claims of relationship may be receivable. They are not offered testimonially, and therefore are not obnoxious to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1791). It is true that their testimonial use will tend to be employed by indirection, especially if in the case there is also an issue as to relationship. Yet, even when offered testimonially, it would seem that they are receivable without connecting the declarant to a particular family by other evidence, if they concern merely the declarant's personal doings admitted as evidence to prove the legitimacy of their children"); 1862, Haddock v. R. Co., 3 All. 293 (deceased mother's statement that her daughter was illegitimate, admitted); 1890, Woodward v. Blue, 107 N. C. 407, 410, 12 S. E. 453 ("Was not the violent grief of David, the king, upon the death of the child, some corroboration that he, and not Uriah, was its father?"). If the declarant is available, such statements are of course inadmissible: 1825, Stegall v. Stegall's Adm'r, 2 Brockenb. 256, 262.

Compare the cases cited ante, § 269 (parents' conduct as evidence of legitimacy).

Distinguish the question whether a parent may testify to facts of non-access as evidencing the illegitimacy of a child born after marriage, post, § 2063.

For community-reputation of illegitimacy, see post, § 1605.

¹ 1880, Cherry v. State, 68 Ala. 30; 1888, Kreitz v. Behrensmeyer, 125 Ill. 141, 185, 17 N. E. 232 ("What was your reputed birthday in the family?"), allowed, the father being out of the jurisdiction); 1892, Houlton v. Manteuffel, 51 Minn. 185, 187, 53 N. W. 541; 1894, State v. Cougot, 121 Mo. 463, 26 S. W. 566 ("that a witness may be permitted to state his or her own age, subject to cross-examination as to the sources of his or her information, is the settled practice"; but here excluded because it appeared to rest solely on perusal of a church record); 1897, State v. Marshall, 137 id. 463, 39 S. W. 63, semble; 1891, State v. Best, 108 N. C. 749, 12 S. E. 907; 1845, Watson v. Brewster, 1 Pa. St. 383; 1884, Sitler v. Gehr, 105 id. 592; 1877, Hart v. Stickney, 41 Wis. 630, 638 ("It was a matter of repute in the family when the defendant was born, and though he could not have any personal knowledge of [the date of] his birth, yet he might testify as to his age as he had learned it from his parents and relatives"; yet the point was not "absolutely decided"). Contra: 1847, Doe v. Ford, 3 U. C. Q. B. 352 (deceased person's statement as to his own age, excluded, as not based on "personal knowledge"; here his testamentary capacity was involved). Compare the cases cited ante, § 1486.

(ante, § 1489). In any event, they are independently receivable so far as they serve legitimately the purpose of identifying one person with another.¹

§ 1495. (b) Form of the Assertion (Family Bibles or Trees, Tombstones, Wills, etc.). According to the general testimonial principle (ante, §§ 789, 799), the testimonial statement may be in any form. It may be oral or written; it may consist in words or in conduct;¹ it may be made by the declarant's own writing, or by assenting to or adopting the writing of another. This is equally true, whether the statement offered be an individual's assertion or the family repute:

1777, Lord Mansfield, C. J., in Goodright v. Moss, Cowper 594: "Suppose from the hour of one child's birth to the death of its parent it had always been treated as illegitimate, and another introduced and considered as the heir of the family, that would be good evidence. An entry in a father's family Bible, an inscription on a tombstone, a pedigree hung up in a family mansion (as the Duke of Buckingham's was), are all good evidence."

1806, Erskine, L. C., in Vowles v. Young, 13 Ves. 140: "Inscriptions upon tombstones are admitted, as it must be supposed the relations of the family would not permit an inscription without foundation to remain. So engravings upon rings are admitted upon the presumption that a person would not wear a ring with an error upon it."

1811, Mansfield, C. J., in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 416: "If the father is proved to have brought up the party as his legitimate son, this is sufficient evidence of legitimacy till impeached, and indeed it amounts to a daily assertion that the son is legitimate."

1880, Lord Blackburn, in Sturla v. Freccia, L. R. 5 App. Cas. 641: "Such statements by deceased members of the family may be proved not only by showing that they actually made the statements, but by showing that they acted upon them or assented to them, or did anything that amounted to showing that they recognized them."

That the document containing the assertion is a formal one — as, a deed or will — does not make the assertion inadmissible.² That the assertion is made in the course of a deposition or trial-testimony is immaterial, so long as the litigation does not involve a controversy rendering the statement biassed and untrustworthy.³ An assertion may have necessary implications which should be given full effect by natural interpretation; for example, an assertion by a woman that she is a widow implies clearly enough that her husband is deceased.⁴ Even the failure to make an express assertion, where it would

¹ 1900, Young v. State, 36 Or. 417, 59 Pac. 812, 60 Pac. 711 (John F.'s property was escheated; plaintiff claimed it as heir of Jonas F., identical with John F.; declarations of John F. as to his family relationships with persons of plaintiff's family, admitted, as identifying circumstances); and cases cited ante, §§ 270, 413, post, § 1791. Compare also some of the cases cited post, § 1502.

The practical difference between the present rule and that of the principles above cited would be that the death of the declarant must here be shown.

² For conduct, as evidence of marriage and legitimacy, see also ante, §§ 268, 269.

³ 1867, Smith v. Tebbitt, L. R. 1 P. & D. 354 (deed); 1879, Murray v. Milner, L. R. 12 Ch. D. 849 (will); 1901, Heaton's Estate, 135

Cal. 385, 67 Pac. 331 (will); 1900, Summerhill v. Darrow, 94 Tex. 71, 57 S. W. 942 (will).

For recitals of pedigree in ancient deeds, see post, § 1573.

⁴ Cases cited ante, §§ 1483, 1484. The opinion of the judges in the Banbry Peerage Case, 1809 (extracted in 2 Selwyn's Nisi Prius, c. 18, 11th Eng. ed., p. 765), excluding a certain bill in chancery, as a "declaration respecting pedigree," is supportable on the ground that the fact of legitimacy, asserted in the bill, was apparently already in controversy, for the bill was filed to perpetuate testimony of that fact. For the use of depositions, bills, and answers, as parties' admissions, see ante, §§ 1065, 1075.

For certificates and registers of marriage, birth, or death, see post, § 1642.

⁵ 1897, Harman v. Stearns, 95 Va. 58, 27

naturally have been made if the fact existed, may (on the same principle as in § 1071, ante) be construed as an assertion that the fact does not exist.⁵

§ 1496. (2) Authentication; Proving Individual Authorship. The principles of Authentication (post, § 2129), as applicable to proof of the execution or genuineness of a writing, are in general applicable to a writing offered under the present exception. No special considerations here need attention, except as regards the necessity of proving the handwriting of entries in family Bibles or the like. The fundamental idea of Authentication is to connect the writing with the person alleged to be its author. Now under the present exception the testimonial statement may be the assertion either of an individual member or of the family. Hence, it is not necessary, where a family Bible or family tree is offered as embodying the family repute, to prove the entry to be that of an individual member, for its adoption by the family makes it a family assertion:

1860, Bigelow, C. J., in North Brookfield v. Warren, 16 Gray 174 (speaking of a pedigree-chart): "They are in their nature public, openly exhibited, and well-known to the family, and therefore may be presumed to possess that authenticity which is derived from the tacit and common assent of those interested in the facts which they record."

1876, Alvey, J., in Jones v. Jones, 45 Md. 160: "Proof of the handwriting or authorship of the entries is not required when the book is shown to have been the family Bible or Testament, for then the entries, as evidence, derive their weight not more from the fact that they were made by any particular person than that, being in that place as a family registry, they are to be taken as assented to by those in whose custody the book has been kept."¹

On the other hand, if the signature of a specific member of the family can be authenticated, proof of this general family-recognition, by a public exposure of the writing, is not needed:

1831, L. C. Brougham, in Monkton v. Attorney-General, 2 Russ. & M. 163 (admitting a signed chart): "It is urged . . . that the principle of all those cases would exclude such

S. E. 601 (recital in a deed by a woman that she was a widow, admitted to show the fact of her husband's death); 1899, James' Estate, 124 Cal. 653, 57 Pac. 579 (declarations of intestate, that he was unmarried, not admissible for heirs denying the alleged wife's claim; unsound, because the intestate virtually declared that there was in his family no person who was his wife).

A statement that a person is the declarant's "sister" or the like is to be construed as asserting legitimate relationship: 1867, Smith v. Tebbitt, L. R. 1 P. & D. 354.

⁵ 1812, Doe v. Griffin, 15 East 293 (that an absent family-member had never been heard of in the family as married, admitted); 1852, Crouch v. Hooper, 16 Beav. 182, 186 (omission of entry in baptismal register, though other children were entered, admitted); 1848, Copes v. Pearce, 7 Gill 247, 265 (lack of entry of alleged illegitimate child's name in family Bible; not given weight on the facts).

¹ 1846, Perth Peerage Case, 2 H. L. C. 876 (held sufficient, where the documents had been hung up on the wall of a room of a family relative, the room being a general reception-room to which all visitors had access); 1866, Hubbard v. Lees, L. R. 1 Exch. 258 (family Bible); 1896, People v. Ratz, 115 Cal. 132, 46 Pac. 915 (a family Bible with entries in English; the fact that the mother, who authenticated it, could not read or write English, held immaterial); 1898, People v. Slater, 119 id. 620, 51 Pac. 957 (family Bible received to show the date of a child's birth); 1879, Weaver v. Leiman, 52 Md. 719; 1848, Eastman v. Martin, 19 N. H. 157; 1896, Union Ins. Co. v. Pollard, 94 Va. 146, 26 S. E. 421 (family Bible admissible, no matter who made the entry). Contra, but erroneous: 1897, Supreme Council v. Conklin, 60 N. J. L. 565, 38 Atl. 659 (family Bible, used in the family, with entries in different handwriting and in different inks; "there is no evidence showing when the dates were placed in the book or by whose authority"; not received to show the deceased father's age; no precedents cited); 1897, State v. Hairston, 121 N. C. 579, 28 S. E. 492 (handwriting of the mother in a Bible, spoken of as material).

a pedigree as this, which was not hung up or in any way made public. . . . But why is it that the publicity is relied upon in those cases? Why is it that the family Bible, the public wearing of a ring, the public exposure of an inscription upon a tombstone, and the public hanging up of the family pedigree in the mansion, are all relied upon in respect of their publicity? It is because in all those cases the publicity supplies a defect, there existing but not here existing, — the want of connection between the pedigree, the tombstone, the ring, or the Bible with particular individuals, members of the family. . . . The presumption is, it would not be suffered to remain if the whole of the family did not more or less adopt it and thereby give it authenticity.”

Moreover, even where it is offered as an individual's assertion, the individual's personal execution of the writing is not always essential; for he may have adopted something written by another, — as, by wearing a ring engraved with a marriage-date, or by ordering a tombstone to be carved, or by carrying about a certificate of marriage.²

§ 1497. (3) Production of Original Document; Preferred Writings. If the statement offered is in the form of a writing, the general rule requiring the production of the writing itself (ante, § 1179), is of course applicable.¹ But if the object of the offer is an oral declaration of an individual, or the general unwritten family repute, the terms of no writing are in question, and the rule of production is not applicable. Furthermore, it has been already seen (ante, § 1335) that there is no general principle preferring written statements above oral statements; hence, the mere existence of a written statement, in the form of a Bible-entry or the like, does not render it necessary to use that writing in preference to independent oral statements otherwise admissible.

2 and 3. Kind of Fact that may be the Subject of the Statement.

§ 1500. General Principle. In considering what sort of facts it is that may be the subject of the declarations, it is seen that the limitations must rest partly on the principles of both the second and the third groups just considered; that is, (2) the circumstantial guarantee that ordinary family conversation will be indifferent and sincere is true of certain topics only, namely, the ordinary incidents of family life; while (3) the probability that the various members of the family will have fair information (i. e. will be testimonially qualified) is also true for certain topics only, namely, the topics that are most likely to be the subject of repeated conversation and of fairly definite knowledge.¹ The combined effect of these two principles, therefore, is to limit the topics with which the declarations may be concerned to the events

² 1874, Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Miller, 2 Colo. 442, 453, 461 (extracts from parish register, passport, etc., found among deceased's effects, and reciting his marriage and the birth and names of his children, admitted as statements of the deceased); 1900, Hall v. Cardell, 111 Ia. 206, 82 N. W. 503 (leaves of a family Bible, with entries said to be copied from another Bible, admitted).

¹ 1873, McDeed v. McDeed, 67 Ill. 545, 559

(leaf of Bible “blotched” but legible; production required); 1888, Kreitz v. Behrensmeyer, 125 id. 141, 185, 17 N. E. 232 (production of family-record required).

¹ “Family transactions,” says Mansfield, C. J., in the Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 416, “are naturally talked of among the relations of the parties. Therefore what is thus dropped in conversation upon such subjects may be presumed to be true.”

regarded commonly as of importance in the family life. This certainly includes the fact and date of birth, marriage, and death, and the fact and degree of relationship, — as has always been conceded. But there has been more or less fluctuation and uncertainty about the exact limits to be applied, and upon certain classes of facts some doubt still unnecessarily exists.

§ 1501. Declarations as to Place of Birth, Death, etc. The place of birth or death — something more than the fact of birth or death — has by some Courts been thought to be an inadmissible subject. But there is no apparent reason to conclude that a statement on this topic is, from either of the above points of view, less trustworthy :

1847, Knight-Bruce, V. C., in Shields v. Boucher, 1 DeG. & Sm. 53 (declaring in favor of statements concerning the place of birth, place of residence, and the like, so far as material in a pedigree case): “I own myself not convinced that the reasons and grounds (so far as I can collect and understand them) upon which births and times of births, marriages, deaths, legitimacy, illegitimacy, consanguinity generally, and particular degrees of consanguinity and of affinity, are allowed to be proved by hearsay (from proper quarters) in a controversy merely genealogical, are not as applicable to interrogatories . . . like the present. . . Who generally is more likely to know whence a man or a family came than the man or the family? Does the emigrant, living or dying, forget his native soil? Is a woman less likely to state her country than her age with accuracy? . . . Nor are there, perhaps, any recollections or traditions of the old more readily communicated or more acceptable to an auditor of descendants than the original seat of the family, its former residences and possessions, its migrations, its local and other distinctions of the past, its advancement or its decay. If such topics are not strictly genealogical, they are at least intimately connected with genealogy . . . and in the most striking manner with the reason [of the rule].”

Such is the conclusion to-day generally and properly accepted.¹ The truth seems to be that the doubt as to receiving declarations of place was originally due solely to a misunderstanding of the obscure language of the ruling in R. v. Erith (post, § 1503); in that case the ruling actually proceeded on the nature of the issue involved (post, § 1503) — a pauper’s settlement — and not on the kind of fact stated. In England this misunderstanding has now been recognized;² but in the United States it has had considerable influence, and a few Courts have excluded declarations as to place.³

§ 1502. Sundry Kinds of Facts. There is in truth no definite or formal limitation as to the kind of fact that may be the subject of the statement. The general inquiry, as already indicated (ante, § 1500), should be: Were the circumstances named in the statement such a marked item in the ordi-

¹ 1812, Doe v. Griffin, 15 East 293 (ejectment; family repute that a member had died in the West Indies, admitted); 1844, Rishton v. Nesbitt, 2 Moo. & Rob. 554; 1861, Attorney-General v. Köhler, 9 H. L. C. 686; 1882, Wise v. Wynn, 59 Miss. 588, 591; 1818, Jackson v. Boneham, 15 John. 227; 1884, Hammond v. Noble, 57 Vt. 193, 203, semble.

² 1847, Knight-Bruce, V. C., in Shields v. Boucher, 1 DeG. & Sm. 40 (“If the place of birth in Rex v. Erith had been a genealogical fact, as it was not, — had been material, namely, for any genealogical purpose, which it was not, Lord Ellenborough and the Court of King’s Bench might possibly have dealt with the evidence differently”). See also Lord Brougham, J. C., in Monkton v. Attorney-General, 2 Russ. & M. 156. Contra in Canada: 1885, Currie v. Stairs, 25 N. Br. 4, 10 (entries in a family Bible, not admitted to prove the place of birth).

³ 1821, Brooks v. Clay, 3 A. K. Marsh. 550; 1826, Wilmington v. Burlington, 4 Pick. 175; 1876, Tyler v. Flanders, 57 N. H. 618, 624; 1827, Independence v. Pompton, 4 Halst. 212; 1875, Carter v. Montgomery, 2 Tenn. Ch. 229.

nary family history and so interesting to the family in common that statements about them in the family would be likely to be based on fairly accurate knowledge and to be sincerely uttered? There is ample authority for a broad application of this principle, although the rulings are by no means in harmony.¹

4. Arbitrary Limitations.

§ 1503. Kind of Issue or Litigation involved. On principle, the kind of issue involved in the litigation ought to have no bearing on the admission of the present class of declarations. A deceased father's entry in a family Bible is equally trustworthy or untrustworthy whether the issue subsequently arising happens to be framed upon a claim to an inheritance, a plea of infancy to a promissory note, or an application to appoint a guardian. But historically these declarations were first customarily (though not exclusively) used in inheritance cases, where the pedigree or genealogy of a claimant was directly a part of the issue; and this traditional use served to give the impression to many Courts that the rule had crystallized into an arbitrary shape. This rule, thus interpreted, says that declarations, otherwise satisfactory, can nevertheless be used in those cases only where the issue involves as material a question of pedigree, i. e. genealogy, — chiefly, therefore, in inheritance cases:

1807, Lord Ellenborough, C. J., in R. v. Erith, 8 East 539 (settlement of a pauper; the father's declarations as to his bastard birth and the place of birth were rejected): "The only doubt which has been introduced into this case has arisen from improperly considering it as a question of pedigree. The controversy was not, as in a case of pedigree, from what parents the child has derived its birth; but in what place an undisputed birth, derived from known and acknowledged persons, has happened. The point thus stated turns on a single fact, involving no question but of locality, and therefore not falling within the principles of or governed by the rules applicable to cases of pedigree."

1891, Earl, J., in Eisenlord v. Clum, 126 N. Y. 552, 27 N. E. 1024: "A case is not necessarily one of that kind [pedigree], because it may involve questions of birth, parentage, ¹ Admitted: 1844, Rishton v. Nesbitt, 2 Mee. & Rob. 554 (the existence of relatives in a certain town); 1861, Attorney-General v. Köhler, 9 H. L. C. 686 ("events in the early life of J. G. which identify him with G. K.," such as his trade, enlistment in the army, running away from home, sending home money, etc.); 1904, Locklayer v. Locklayer, — Ala. —, 35 So. 1008 (the declarant's negro race); 1900, Woolsey v. Williams, 128 Cal. 552, 61 Pac. 670 (enlisting in the Federal army in the civil war, and being there killed); 1820, Walkup v. Pratt, 5 Harr. & J. 56 (the purchase and sale of a slave; here, in order to identify the alleged ancestor and trace descent); 1879, Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206, 214, 235, 3 N. W. 882 (that two brothers came from Michigan together, and were the only two brothers of the family that came); 1818, Jackson v. Boneham, 15 John. 227 (the death in war and the place of death of an ancestor); 1900, Young v. State, 36 Or. 417, 59 Pac. 812, 60 Pac. 711 (that the declarant had enlisted, gone to Washington, deserted, etc.; here, on the theory of identifying circumstances); 1848, Story v. Saunders, 8 Humph. 667, semble (that S. had died in the revolutionary army); 1894, Byers v. Wallace, 87 Tex. 503, 28 S. W. 1059 (that a person went to Texas, and enlisted in the army, and was killed at the Fannin massacre; overruling Smith v. Shinn, infra); 1869, Webb v. Richardson, 42 Vt. 465, 471 (time of death); 1872, Du Pont v. Davis, 30 Wis. 178 (that A. was killed by the explosion of a powder-mill in 1855 or 1856). Excluded: 1903, Wright v. Com., — Ky. —, 72 S. W. 340 (family tradition, to show ancestral and collateral insanity); 1870, Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 83 (the existence of heirs; failure of heirs being in issue); 1826, Jackson v. Etz, 5 Cow. 319 (the circumstances of the finding and burial of a body); 1897, People v. Koerner, 154 N. Y. 355, 48 N. E. 750 (family reputation as to insanity); 1882, Smith v. Shinn, 58 Tex. 1 (service in war). Compare the Codes quoted ante, § 1480, and the cases cited ante, § 1494. For neighborhood-repute to this class of facts, see post, §§ 1605, 1623-1626.

age, or relationship. Where these questions are merely incidental, and the judgment will simply establish a debt, or a person's liability on a contract, or his proper settlement as a pauper, and things of that nature, the case is not one of pedigree."¹

This strict limitation was probably a novelty of Lord Ellenborough's;¹ though it came to prevail in England and in some courts of the United States.² But in the majority of American jurisdictions this limitation is ignored; the declarations are now admitted whatever the general nature of the issue, and whether or not the issue is one of genealogy, pedigree, or descent.³ This is a just result. Any such arbitrary and unreasoning limitation places the rules

¹ 1664, Herbert v. Tuckal, T. Raym. 84 (devisor's capacity to make a will; father's entry of age in almanac, admitted). In settlement cases (which were notoriously esoteric in their practice) Lord Ellenborough appears to have gone directly against the previous practice: 1744, R. v. Greenwich, Burr. Settl. Cas. 1, 343; 1772, R. v. Nutley, id. II, 701; 1782, R. v. Holy Trinity, Cald. Just. Peace (Settl. Cas.), 141.

² 1841, Figg v. Wedderburne, 11 L. J. Q. B. 46, semble (contract; plea of infancy); 1884, Haines v. Guthrie, L. R. 13 Q. B. D. 818 (contract (plea of infancy)); 1897, People v. Mayne, 118 Cal. 516, 50 Pac. 654, semble (rape on a child under 14); 1873, Union v. Plainfield, 39 Conn. 564 (pauper settlement); 1882, Com. v. Felch, 132 Mass. 22 (criminal charge of abortion); 1896, State v. Marshall, 137 Mo. 463, 36 S. W. 619 (criminal action for seduction where the offence could by statute be committed only upon a person under 18 years of age); 1826, Westfield v. Warren, 8 N. J. L. 251 (pauper settlement); 1891, Eisenlord v. Clum, 126 N. Y. 552, 27 N. E. 1024 (quoted supra); 1902, Washington v. Bank, 171 id. 166, 63 N. E. 831 (action for money in the defendant savings bank, deposited by the plaintiff's intestate in the name of certain alleged sons, the plaintiff claiming that the beneficiaries were fictitious, and the defendant denying this; held, that the issue was as to "the right of succession to the personal property of a deceased person" and therefore one of pedigree); 1903, Danley v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 71 S. W. 958, semble (the statement of a brother, not shown to be deceased, as to the age of a prosecutrix in rape, excluded); 1876, Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Schenck, 94 U. S. 593 ("The present case [an action on a life-insurance policy] involves no question of pedigree; the proof of age was not offered for the purpose of proving parentage or descent, both of which were impertinent to the issue between the parties"); 1902, Fidelity Mutual L. Ass'n v. Mettler, 185 id. 308, 22 Sup. 662 (insurance policy; death of the insured); 1856, Londonderry v. Andover, 28 Vt. 428 (pauper settlement).

³ 1880, Cherry v. State, 68 Ala. 30, semble (selling liquor to a minor); 1867, Wilson v. Brownlee, 24 Ark. 589 (action on a promissory note; plea in abatement that one of the joint payees was dead); 1874, Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Watson, 2 Colo. 442, 453, 461 (action by administrator for damages for death); 1874, Southern Life

Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 53 Ga. 547 (entries in a family Bible; the issue being as to the age of the insured in an action on an insurance policy; § 3772 of the Code was perhaps slightly involved); 1859, Collins v. Grantham, 12 Ind. 444 (plea of infancy to a note); 1860, Carnes v. Crandall, 10 Ia. 379 (scire facias to revive a judgment; hearsay as to the fact of the defendant's death was rejected on grounds not affecting the nature of the issue); 1870, Greenleaf v. R. Co., 30 id. 302 (declarations of a father as to the son's age, in an action for death by a brakeman's carelessness, were held admissible, though ruled out for other reasons); 1879, Fraser v. Jenkinson, 42 Mich. 206, 235, 3 N. W. 882 (will-contest); 1891, Lamoreaux v. Attorney-General, 89 id. 146, 50 N. W. 812 (mandamus to institute quo warranto proceedings as to the right to exercise a sheriff's office); 1892, Houlton v. Mantuffel, 51 Minn. 185, 187, 53 N. W. 541 (plea of infancy to action on note; point not raised); 1840, Carskadden v. Poorman, 10 Watts 84 (action against a magistrate to recover a penalty for marrying a minor); 1845, Watson v. Brewster, 1 Pa. St. 333 (action on a note, with a plea of infancy); 1846, Ford v. Ford, 7 Humph. 98 (a testator devised to negroes, and his sanity was impeached; hearsay was accepted to show that they were his illegitimate children, and thus to sustain his capacity); 1883, Swink v. French, 11 Lea 79 (in an action on a note, a contract to extend the time was alleged, and infancy was alleged in reply; hearsay of the date of birth was admitted); 1851, Primm v. Stewart, 7 Tex. 178, 182 (whether W. was dead when a power of attorney from him was executed; rule held not confined "to cases where the question is one of pedigree"); 1900, Summerhill v. Darrow, 94 id. 71, 57 S. W. 942 (vendor's lien; whether the statute of limitations was suspended by coverture; hermother's will-recitals admitted); 1872, Masons v. Fuller, 45 Vt. 30 (bastardy complaint); 1884, Hammond v. Noble, 57 Vt. 193, 203, semble (petition for new trial, because of a juror's alienage; family declarations admitted); 1872, Du Pont v. Davis, 30 Wis. 178 (the death of A. was shown, as indicating the non-necessity of joining him as a party plaintiff in a suit relating to land of which he was assumed to be joint-tenant); 1877, Hart v. Stickney, 41 id. 630, 638 (plea of infancy to a promissory note; defendant's testimony to the family repute of his age, admitted; yet the point was not "absolutely decided").

of evidence on a par with the rule of chess that a king may move one square only, or the rule of whist that the card played must follow the suit led,—rules, that is, which justify their existence because they add complexity, and therefore interest, to the game. If a trial upon evidence is a game, such limitations have a place in the law of evidence; if it is the employment of rational and practical methods in the discovery of truth, such limitations should be discarded without scruple :

1860, Bigelow, C. J., in North Brookfield v. Warren, 16 Gray 175 (admitting evidential declarations where the main issue was as to a pauper's settlement): "Upon principle we can see no reason for such a limitation. If this evidence is admissible to prove such facts at all, it is equally so in all cases whenever they become legitimate subjects of judicial inquiry and investigation."

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE.

TOPIC IV: ATTESTATION OF A SUBSCRIBING WITNESS.

CHAPTER I.

§ 1505. Theory of the Exception.

1. The Necessity Principle.

§ 1506. Attester must be Deceased, Absent from Jurisdiction, etc.

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness.

§ 1508. General Principle.

§ 1509. Who is an Attester; Definition of Attestation.

3. Testimonial Principles.

§ 1510. Attester must be Competent at time of Attestation.

§ 1511. Implied Purport of Attestation; (1) All Elements of Due Execution implied.

§ 1512. Same: Lack of Attestation-Clause is Immaterial.

§ 1513. Same: (2) Must the Maker's Signature or Identity also be otherwise proved?

§ 1514. Attester may be Impeached or Supported like other Witnesses.

§ 1505. Theory of the Exception. It has long been unquestioned that the attestation of an attesting or subscribing witness to a document may be used, when the attester is unavailable in person, as evidence of the document's execution; and according to the orthodox form of the Preferred Witness rule (ante, § 1320), the attestation must even be used in preference to other testimony. There was apparently a time, to be sure, when the testimony of the attester in person was so rigorously required that even his death could not excuse his absence (ante, §§ 1287, 1311), and in that period it cannot be said that the present exception to the Hearsay rule (if indeed there existed then any Hearsay rule) was recognized. But the recognition unquestionably came by the second half of the 1700s, and this use of an attestation has since then been unquestioned.

What has not been always clearly understood is that such a use of an attestation is in truth an exception to the Hearsay rule, i. e. is the testimonial use of an extrajudicial assertion as evidence of the truth of the fact asserted (ante, § 1362). In practice, the dramatic feature of the evidence has tended to obscure the legal principle; that is to say, the mode of using it consists merely in proving the genuineness of the attester's signature to the document. That this is after all nothing less than offering the attester's written statement, expressly or impliedly made at the time of execution, that the document was seen by him to be executed as it purports to be, seems too clear for argument. It was always assumed in judicial opinion, until the following perverse utterance from an eminent judge shook the faith of the profession:

1836, Stobart v. Dryden, 1 M. & W. 615; declarations of a deceased attesting witness M., whose handwriting had been proved, were offered as amounting to an acknowledgment of forgery, but were rejected; Counsel: "Proving the signature of the deceased witness is no more than [proving] a declaration on his part that he saw the party execute the deed. . . . If the plaintiff is permitted to prove declarations of M. to sustain the deed, the defendant may use them also to impugn it. If the signature does not amount to a declaration that the witness saw the party sign, it amounts to nothing"; Lord Abinger, C. B.: "Is it not an assumption of yours that the signature is a declaration? It is a fact"; . . . Parke, B. (for the Court): "One of the grounds [of argument] was that as the plaintiff used the declaration of the subscribing witness, evidenced by his signature, to prove the execution, the defendant might use any declaration of the same witness to disprove it. The answer to this argument is that evidence of the handwriting in the attestation is not used as a declaration by the witness, but to show the fact that he put his name in that place and manner in which in the ordinary course of business he would have done if he had actually seen the deed executed. A statement of the attesting witness by parol, or written on any other document than that offered to be proved, would be inadmissible. The proof of actual attestation of the witness is therefore not the proof of a declaration, but of a fact."

As to this, it may be said (1) that all evidential data whatever are merely "facts"; the testimonial utterance of a witness on the stand is merely a "fact," i. e. we are asked to believe that A struck B because of the evidential "fact" that M, a competent observer, is willing to assert under oath on the stand that A struck B (ante, § 475). (2) If, however, by "fact" the learned judge be supposed to have meant an extrajudicial utterance, and to have looked upon all such statements as circumstantial evidence in distinction from testimonial evidence, then it must be answered that the distinction between testimonial and circumstantial evidence admits of no such significance (ante, §§ 25, 479). The Hearsay rule, to be sure, draws a distinction between testimonial utterances made upon the stand and made off the stand (ante, § 1362); but a human assertion offered as evidence of the truth of the assertion is testimonial evidence, no matter where it is uttered. (3) If, finally, by "fact" the learned judge meant that the act of subscribing in attestation, when proved in Court for the purpose of establishing the maker's execution, is a mere act or circumstance and not an implied assertion of the fact of execution, his notion is clearly not correct. It might as well be argued that, because a deponent merely signs his name to a deposition, his act is mere circumstantial evidence and not testimony.

That this singular aberration of Stobart v. Dryden is unfounded is shown by the constant judicial treatment of the whole subject as indicated in the following sections (particularly in §§ 1511-1513); but the error is especially repudiated in the following passages:

1824, Per Curiam, in Clark v. Boyd, 2 Oh. 280 (57): "The proof of the handwriting of the witness is quasi bringing him into Court. . . . It proves as much as the subscribing witness can prove himself in many cases."

1842, Nelson, C. J., in Losee v. Losee, 2 John. 609: "Proof of the signature of a deceased subscribing witness is presumptive evidence of everything appearing upon the face of the instrument relative to its execution; as it is presumed the witness would not have subscribed his name in attestation of that which did not take place. . . . The attestation comes in by way of substitute for his oath"; note by Mr. Nicholas Hill (afterwards judge): "The act of attesting an instrument is regarded as a written declaration of the subscribing witness, to which the law, in the event of his death or absence, yields a reluctant credit by way of necessary substitute for his oath."

1867, Thompson, J., in Kirk v. Carr, 54 Pa. 285, 290: "Memory can no more be kept alive than the body, and hence the law allows the attesting signature to speak when the tongue may be silent."

1867, Wright, J., in Boyens' Will, 23 Ia. 354, 357: "The witnesses to a will become such from the moment they sign it. They testify from that moment, and hence, though they should die before the testator or before the probate of the will, it is still good."¹

The attestation, then (when proved to have been made), by establishing the genuineness of the signature, comes in as an extrajudicial or hearsay assertion of the attester.² What are the limitations to its use, upon the general principles of the Hearsay exceptions as already expounded?

1. The Necessity Principle.

§ 1506. Attester must be Deceased, Absent from Jurisdiction, etc. Upon the general principle already noted for the preceding Exceptions (ante, § 1421), the attester's hearsay statement cannot be used unless the attester is unavailable for the purpose of giving testimony in person. The various situations which fulfil this condition — death, absence from the jurisdiction, insanity, illness, etc. — have already been fully examined in connection with the rule of Preferred Witnesses (ante, §§ 1309–1319), and therefore need not be again considered here. The case of failure of memory of an attester, called to the stand, is later examined (post, § 1511).

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness.

§ 1508. General Principle. Unquestioned as the reception of this hearsay statement has been, no judicial attempt seems to have been made to define the reasons for the trustworthiness thus accorded, by exception, to this class of hearsay statements.¹ The question is virtually this (ante, § 1422): What guarantee is there that the attester did not sign his name as attester to a document which he did not see executed by the purporting maker? The circumstances tending to trustworthiness seem to be four. (1) The occasion is a formal one, and the statement requires a writing; and there is commonly a radical disinclination to take part in a false transaction of such a sort. (2) The concoction of a false document will either fix an innocent party with a false obligation or will divest legitimate heirs of their rights, and there is a natural repugnance to giving assistance in such a wrong. (3) The

¹ Accord: 1903, Farleigh v. Kelley, — Mont. —, 72 Pac. 756 (good opinion by Holloway, J.); 1860, Boylan v. Meeker, 28 N. J. L. 274, 294; 1832, Daniel, J., in Crowell v. Kirk, 3 Dev. 356; 1847, Gibson, C. J., in Hays v. Harden, 6 Pa. St. 412 ("the equivalent of the witnesses' oath"); 1848, Rogers, J., in Harden v. Hays, 9 id. 156.

² Of course, it may be proved without any attempt to use it testimonially, as where the law requires an attestation as an element in the validity of the document and the party desires merely to show that the elements of validity exist; 1860, Boylan v. Meeker, 28 N. J. L. 274, 295 (where the signature was proved merely to show the statutory requirement fulfilled, and the will's execution was otherwise proved).

¹ The following suggestions are found: 1819, Kirkpatrick, C. J., in Newbold v. Lamb, 2 South. N. J. 449, 451 ("The only reason why the proof of the handwriting of the subscribing witness is taken as sufficient proof of the execution of a deed is founded upon the presumption that what an honest man hath attested under his hand is true"); 1823, Gibson, J., in Crouse v. Miller, 10 S. & R. 158 ("The handwriting of a witness, . . . standing in the place of the oath, derives its claim to respect from the consideration that the law presumes every man honest till the contrary appears").

making of a false attestation, whether or not it is in criminal law a forgery or a perjury, is popularly supposed to be such, and the attester would probably be at least an accomplice in a forgery; so that the subjective sanction deterring from a crime would probably operate to prevent a false attestation. (4) The attester knows that he is liable at any time to be called upon in Court to substantiate his attestation; and not only is his falsity likely there to be exposed by the opponent's witnesses, but he will there be obliged either to commit perjury by swearing to the fact of execution or to undergo the disagreeable ordeal of recanting and confessing his falseness. There is thus a combination of circumstances which easily account for the establishment of this Exception to the Hearsay rule.

§ 1509. Who is an Attester; Definition of Attestation. An attesting or subscribing witness, then, is a person who, at the request or with the consent of the maker, places his name on a document for the purpose of making thereby an express or implied statement that the document was then known by him to have been executed by the purporting maker. Only such a signature can be used as a hearsay statement. Thus, it cannot be used if the person did not write it himself, or not at the time, or if he did not sign as an attester but for some other purpose. These and related questions have been already treated in examining the notion of an attesting witness under the rule of Preferred Witnesses (ante, § 1292), and their solution would probably be the same for the present subject. The kind of issue in which the attestation is offered is immaterial, so long as it is offered to prove the execution of a document.¹ But the only statement admissible as made under circumstances of trustworthiness is the written statement in the document, either expressed or implied by the signature; so that any oral statement otherwise made is not receivable;² except when offered as a self-contradiction to impeach the written statement (post, § 1514). The statement need not be expressly written in full; the placing of the signature implies an assertion of execution (post, § 1511).

3. Testimonial Principles.

§ 1510. Attester must be Competent at time of Attestation. The attestation is offered as the statement of the attester made at the time of attestation. (1) Hence, if he was at that time not qualified as a witness,¹ his statement in the attestation is not admissible. The usual instance of

¹ Contra: 1895, Walker v. State, 107 Ala. 5, 18 So. 393 (perjury for falsely swearing that he had not signed a conveyance; evidence of the handwriting of a deceased attesting witness was not admitted to show that the defendant had signed it; "upon this question he was entitled to be confronted by the witnesses against him, and not be prejudiced by evidence that the paper bore the names, as attesting witnesses, of persons who are not examined on the trial"; this is unsound; on such a doctrine no exceptions to the Hearsay rule could ever exist; see ante, §§ 1397, 1398).

² 1866, Boardman v. Woodman, 47 N. H. 120, 135 (excluding statements by the deceased witness as to the sanity of the testator; such statements are not an implied part of the attestation).

¹ Whether in such a case, under the Preferred Witness rule, he may be disregarded as not an attester, and need not be called or accounted for, is a different question, treated ante, § 1292.

this has been the case of a disqualification by interest.² (2) If the attester was then qualified, but has since become disqualified to take the stand, his attestation is receivable, because it speaks as from a time when he was qualified.³ Whether in this case the attestation is valid as an element of execution, under statutes requiring the attester to be a credible witness, is a matter of substantive law not here involved.⁴

§ 1511. Implied Purport of Attestation; (1) All Elements of Due Execution implied. When the attester's signature is identified as genuine, what does the attester thereby purport to testify to? Does he purport to testify at all? Assuming that the signature is appended to a clause of attestation expressly stating the facts of execution, it is clear that the signed attestation is a testimonial assertion of all the facts thus required to be stated. This has never been doubted for the case of an attester deceased or otherwise unavailable in person. But it has not been always so easy to appreciate in the case of an attesting witness who on being called to the stand is found to have forgotten all the circumstances. In such a case, it is not doubted that the proponent may, if he pleases, prove the facts of execution by other witnesses (ante, § 1302). But, apart from that, does not the signed attestation serve as some testimony of the facts, the attester's failure of memory having practically made his present testimony unavailable? On this point there can be no doubt:

1839, Tucker, P., in Clarke v. Dunnivant, 10 Leigh 13, 30, 35: "[If the witness is dead, or the like,] his attestation is a sufficient ground for presuming that the instrument has been executed with all the solemnities and ceremonies required by the law. . . . It is then a question for the jury whether under the circumstances of the case it is probable that all the formalities of the statute were regularly observed. . . . The question still recurs whether, as the witnesses have been actually examined and have failed to prove a compliance with all the requisitions of the statute, that compliance can be inferred from their attestation. . . . [This is answered in the affirmative, by the precedents,] nor do I apprehend any evil from this decision. It may perhaps sometimes lead to the establishment of wills not duly executed, as doubtless may be the case also where the witnesses are all dead or absent, and everything is presumed from their attestation. But far greater mischiefs would arise from a contrary decision, which should make the rights of every devisee and legatee depend not only upon the honesty but also upon the slippery memory of witnesses. Under such a decision, no man could be sure of dying

² 1793, Swire v. Bell, 5 T. R. 371 (interest existing at the time of attestation and since; handwriting not allowed, the case of a subsequent incompetency being distinguished); 1841, Amerst Bauk v. Root, 2 Metc. 522, 532; 1813, Hamilton v. Marsden, 6 Binn. 45, 50, per Yeates, J.; 1820, Miller v. Carothers, 6 S. & R. 215, 222 (will); 1852, Harding v. Harding, 18 Pa. St. 340, 342; 1859, Jones v. Jones, 12 Rich. 116, 120. This question seldom arises under the present rule of evidence, because the same incompetency usually makes the attestation, and therefore the document, void in substantive law.

³ The cases are collected ante, § 1316, in dealing with the excuses for not calling the attesting witness.

That his good character need not first be shown in any case is clear: 1850, Chaffe v. Cupp, 5 La. An. 684 (Slidell, J., diss., being apparently the only person who ever doubted). Compare § 1104, ante.

⁴ Compare the following: 1865, Sparhawk v. Sparhawk, 10 All. 155 (Bigelow, C. J.: "It is to be borne in mind that the question to be determined in this case is, not whether the witness objected to at the trial was competent to give evidence in the case, but whether he was competent according to the rules of the common law to act as a subscribing witness. If he was, then the will was duly attested; but if he was not, then the will cannot be admitted to probate, because it was not subscribed in the presence of the testator by three competent witnesses").

testate, since the forgetfulness of a witness would frustrate all his precaution; and a question of title by will, which in the spirit of the statute of frauds, the Legislature designed to rest upon written evidence alone, would after all depend upon the integrity and the memory of those who were called on to attest the instrument. . . . It would tend, I have no doubt, to multiply the attempts, already too common, to set aside wills; since the chances of success must be very much increased if the frailty of human memory is to be called in to the aid of the discontented heir."

1849, Gibson, C. J., in Greenough v. Greenough, 11 Pa. St. 489, 498: "What avails it that the man is living, if his memory is dead? If it were blotted out by paralysis, or worn out by decay, his attestation would stand for proof by a witness; but it must be immaterial how or by what means it lost its tenacity."¹

That the attestation may thus, in all cases where the witness is unable to testify in person, be taken as evidence of the fact of execution is not doubted.² The matter of controversy has usually been merely the effect of such evidence, i. e. whether it should be given the force of a presumption or merely suffices as evidence to go to the jury (post, §§ 2490, 2520), — a matter not here involved.

As to the specific facts to be taken as a part of the assertion, — delivery, presence, request, publication, and the like —, there is perhaps some room for doubt. Assuming that there is on the document an attestation-clause of some sort, it is generally said that the attestation is evidence of all the facts essential to a due execution of the document under the substantive law applicable to that kind of document.³ A few Courts have here and there hesi-

¹ Accord: 1846, Hitch v. Wells, 10 Beav. 84, 89 (in this case "where one witness is dead, [and] another is not to be believed [in denying attestation], and the third is an ignorant man whose recollection fails him, you must supply it [publication] by presumption"); 1895, Gillis v. Gillis, 96 Ga. 1, 23 S. E. 107; 1898, Thompson v. Owen, 174 Ill. 229, 233, 51 N. E. 1046; 1873, Kellum's Will, 52 N. Y. 517, 519 ("a mere failure of memory on the part of the witnesses shall not defeat a will, if the attestation clause and other circumstances are satisfactory to prove its execution"). So, too, from another point of view, the failure of memory of an attester called to the stand excuses the party under the Preferred Witness rule, as if through death or the like his attendance could not be had (ante, § 1315).

² Whether the attestation suffices under the Quantity rule, requiring two witnesses not necessarily attestors, is noted post, § 2048.

³ England: 1739, Croft v. Pawlet, 2 Stra. 1109 (the attestation clause to a will said nothing about the witnesses' signing in the testator's presence; and it was objected that "the hands of the witnesses could only stand as to the facts they had subscribed to"; but the Court left it to the jury to say whether there was "a compliance with all circumstances [required]"); 1808, Milward v. Temple, 1 Camp. 375 (debt on bond; the plaintiff put in a paper, signed by the defendant's attorney, whereby the signatures of the defendant and the attesting witness to the bond were admitted; L. C. J. Ellenborough at first doubted whether the delivery of the bond by the defendant as his deed ought not also to have been admitted, or must not still be proved to entitle the plaintiff to a verdict; but upon consideration, "his lordship said, as the attesting witness' handwriting was admitted, this might be taken as a presumptive admission of all he professed to attest and would have been called to prove"); 1834, Tindal, C. J., in Wright v. Tatham, 1 A. & E. 3, 22 ("the presumption [is] that he witnessed all that the law requires for the due execution of a will"); Canada: 1843, Hamilton v. Love, 2 Kerr 243, 250 (on the facts); 1874, Hanlou's Will, 15 N. Br. 136, 140; United States: Ga.: 1900, Underwood v. Thurman, 111 Ga. 325, 36 S. E. 788 (the clause "raises a presumption that such paper was executed with all the requisite legal formalities"); Ill.: 1895, Hobart v. Hobart, 154 Ill. 610, 614, 619, 39 N. E. 581 (proof of handwriting presumes due attestation); 1898, Thompson v. Owen, 174 id. 229, 233, 51 N. E. 1046; Ia.: 1898, Scott v. Hawks, 107 Ia. 723, 77 N. W. 467 (proof of handwriting is proof of due execution, even where the testator signs by mark); 1902, Hull's Will, 117 id. 738, 89 N. W. 979; Ky.: 1829, Pate v. Joe, 3 J. J. Marsh. 113, 116; 1847, Chisholm v. Ben, 7 B. Monr. 408, 410, semble; Mass.: 1853, Nickerson v. Buck, 12 Cush. 332, 342 (the signature is to be taken as "put there for the purpose stated in connection with the signature"); Mich.: 1860, Lawyer v. Smith, 8 Mich. 411, 414, 423 (identification of his signature by the witness, sufficient to go to the jury); Miss.: 1857, Fatheree v. Lawrence, 33 Miss. 585, 618; 1858, Nixon v.

tated in regard to its application to individual kinds of facts; but the principle as above stated is the orthodox one and is in general acceptance. It has commonly been extended to imply an assertion of the maker's sanity.⁴ But it could not cover facts not ordinarily known to the attester at the time of execution.⁵

§ 1512. Same: Lack of Attestation-Clause is Immaterial. It cannot be material, for this purpose, whether the signature is accompanied by an at-

Porter, 34 id. 697, 706; N. J.: 1819, Newbold v. Lamb, 2 South. 449, 451 (an attestation-clause not specifying sealing and delivery, held not sufficient to show that a scroll-seal was made before attestation; Southard, J., diss.); 1858, Mundy v. Mundy, 15 N. J. Eq. 290, 293 ("the attestation-clause . . . is prima facie evidence of the facts stated in it"); 1872, Alpangh's Will, 23 id. 507 (death or non-recollection; "the attestation-clause must be taken as true"); 1875, Allaire v. Allaire, 37 N. J. L. 312, 325 ("proof of their signature will be evidence that what they attested in fact did take place"); 1876, Tappen v. Davidson, 27 N. J. Eq. 459 (similar); 1882, Turnure v. Turnure, 35 id. 437, 440 (publication also, if recited, is presumed); 1886, McCurdy v. Neall, 42 id. 333, 7 Atl. 1566; 1887, Ayres v. Ayres, 43 id. 565, 569, 12 Atl. 621; 1888, Elkinton v. Brick, 44 id. 154, 167, 15 Atl. 391; 1892, Farley v. Farley, 50 id. 435, 439, 26 Atl. 178; N. Y.: 1841, Remsen v. Brinckerhoff, 26 Wend. 325, 338 (attestation-clause is "good presumptive evidence . . . and sufficient to prove the will, if not refuted"; but see ib. p. 332); N. C.: 1832, Crowell v. Kirk, 3 Dev. 356, semble; Or.: 1902, Skinner v. Lewis, 40 Or. 571, 62 Pac. 523, 67 Pac. 951; Pa.: 1847, Hays v. Harden, 6 Pa. St. 409, 412 (attestation is "prima facie evidence of execution"; here, of the testator's signing); 1849, Greenough v. Greenough, 11 id. 489, 498 (attestation presumes "compliance with the requisitions of the statute"; here, that the testator's name was written by his express direction); 1847, Barr v. Graybill, 13 id. 396, 399 ("his memory, in respect of it, was extinct, and he himself legally dead; . . . his attestation would have stood for proof by a witness"; but in this case there was not such a failure of memory); 1856, Barker v. McFerran, 26 id. 211, 214 (attestation presumes "everything else necessary to establish the will"; here, that the testator's name was written by his express direction); 1858, Vernon v. Kirk, 30 id. 218, 224 (like Greenough v. Greenough; attestation implies "that everything else necessary to give the instrument validity existed"; the Court may treat this as a presumption to control the jury); 1865, McKee v. White, 50 id. 354, 360 (like Greenough v. Greenough); 1867, Kirk v. Carr, 54 id. 285, 290 (same); 1867, Leckey v. Cunningham, 56 id. 370, 373 ("proof of attestation proves the will"; here, held to imply a signing in the witness' presence); 1868, Hamsher v. Kline, 57 id. 397, 402, semble; S. C.: 1817, Pearson v. Wightman, 1 Mill Const. 336, 341 (publication may be presumed); 1831, McElwee v. Satton, 2 Bail. 128, 129 (attestation imports "the testimony which the law presumes him to give"; "the proof of his handwriting after his death established the deed as a true and genuine paper, on presumptions, 1st, that if it had not been so, he would not have witnessed it, and 2d, that if he had been alive, he would have given all the evidence necessary to support it"); 1839, Dawson v. Dawson, Rice Eq. 243, 254 ("Attestation is evidence of what it professedly declares"; here an attestation of signing and sealing was held not to imply delivery); 1840, Edmonston v. Hughes, Cheves 81, 83 (the grantor's "signature, seal, and delivery are proved when the handwriting of the witnesses is proved"); 1892, Re Brock, 37 S. C. 348, 353 (attestation presumes all essential facts); St. 1839, Gen. St. 1882, § 1871, Code 1902, § 2492 (attestation and testator's signature are prima facie evidence "that the testator did execute the will in question in the presence of the witnesses thereto"); Tenn.: 1877, Beadles v. Alexander, 9 Baxt. 604, 609 (attestation raises a presumption of the presence of testator); 1830, Crane v. Morris, 6 Pet. 598, 616 (Story, J.: "[There arises] only a presumption of the due execution of the deed from the mere fact that the signature of the witness is to the attestation clause"); Vt.: R. S. 1839, Stats. 1894, § 2363 (the handwriting of the witnesses is usable "where the names of the witnesses are subscribed to a certificate stating that the will was executed as required in this chapter"); 1901, Clafin's Will, — Vt. —, 50 Atl. 815 (the attestation clause is evidence of due execution); Va.: 1799, Bogle v. Sullivant, 1 Call 561, semble; 1846, Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Gratt. 439, 464, semble (attestation is evidence of a "compliance with all the circumstances"); W. Va.: 1881, Webb v. Dye, 18 W. Va. 376, 388 (attestation suffices to show all the requirements of execution); 1898, Thompson v. Halstead, 44 id. 390, 29 S. E. 991; Wis.: 1903, Gillmor's Will, 117 Wis. 302, 94 N. W. 32.

⁴ 1900, Stevens v. Leonard, 154 Ind. 67, 56, N. E. 27 ("The witness must be understood to attest, not merely the act of signing, but also the mental capacity of the testator to sign"); 1830, Scribner v. Crane, 2 Paige 147, 149 (attestation implies sanity); 1871, Sellers v. Sellers, 2 Heisk. 430 (same). Contra: 1856, Baxter v. Abbott, 7 Gray 71, 82; 1848, Flanders v. Davis, 19 N. H. 139, 148 (attestation does not imply testimony to a grantor's sanity). Compare the cases cited ante, § 689 (attesting witness qualified to speak to sanity).

⁵ 1838, People v. McHenry, 19 Wend. 482, 484 (where it appeared that the signature of the debtor was not in his handwriting, the proof of the subscribing witness' signature was held not to imply that the person signing for the debtor had a power of attorney).

testation-clause expressly stating all the facts; for, in the first place, the sole object of the signature is to attest the facts of execution; secondly, the maker and the witness may not know these facts to be essential or may not suppose it necessary to state them in writing, although the facts have occurred; and, thirdly, experience teaches that, if heed were given to the contrary possibility, more genuine and properly-executed documents would fail of proof than forged or improperly executed documents would be established by proof of the mere signature:

1777, Lord Mansfield, C. J., in Graft v. Lord Bertie, Peake, Evidence, 72: "Dadley's [the deceased attesting-witness] hand is proved as evidence of all he would have said if living."

1872, McCay, J., in Deupree v. Deupree, 45 Ga. 415, 443: "As a matter of course, the presumption is stronger or weaker according to any material facts connected with the case; and if it was recited, this would strengthen it. But it is a wise rule of law that such a presumption should exist. How many wills do not come up for probate until many years after the execution of them! Sometimes the witnesses can only recognize their own handwriting; sometimes they can only remember the fact that the testator signed, and perhaps only that they signed. Who was present, and all the other details, have passed from memory. To say that under such circumstances the will is not to be probated would be a death-blow to wills. . . . I only say that if the jury had been told there was a presumption of the presence of the testator . . . , it is possible they might have come to a different conclusion [than they did here in finding against the will]."

Such seems always to have been the rule in England;¹ and it obtains, with scarcely an exception, in all the American jurisdictions in which the question has arisen.²

¹ 1694, Dayrell v. Glascock, Skinner 413 (that a will-witness will not swear to execution, held, not fatal; "if proved to be his hand, and that he set it as a witness to the will, it is sufficient to satisfy the statute"); 1736, Hands v. James, 2 Comyns 531 (the clause did not recite the witnesses' signing in testator's presence; per Curiam: "In case the witnesses be dead, . . . the proof must be circumstantial, and here are circumstances: 1. Three witnesses have set their names, and it must be intended that they did it regularly; 2. One witness was an attorney of good character, and may be presumed to understand what ought to be done, rather than the contrary. . . . It being a matter of fact, was proper to be left to them [the jury]"); 1737, Brice v. Smith, ib. 539, Willes 1 (apparently, similar); 1844, Burgoyne v. Showler, 1 Rob. Eccl. 5; 1859, Thomas' Goods, 1 Sw. & Tr. 255; 1860, Trott v. Skidmore, 2 id 12; 1890, Harris v. Knight, L. R. 15 P. D. 170 (by two judges to one; a profitable case for study; Lopes, L. J.: "The inference to be drawn in cases of this kind depends upon a number of circumstances peculiar to the cases in which they arise").

The following is apparently the only contrary expression: 1855, Roberts v. Phillips, 4 E. & B. 450, 457 (Lord Campbell, C. J.: "What effect then arises from the entire absence of a testimonium clause? A testimonium clause not being indispensable, we conceive that the absence of it would only make a difference in the extrinsic evidence which would be required to prove that the witnesses had seen the testator execute the will and that they signed it with the intention of attesting it at his request and in his presence").

² To the following cases, add a few of those noted in the preceding section, where the doctrine is apparently adopted to the present extent: 1900, Woodruff v. Hundley, 127 Ala. 640, 29 So. 98; 1898, Tyler's Estate, 121 Cal. 405, 53 Pac. 928 (all the statutory requisites presumed); 1838, Pennel v. Weyant, 2 Harringt. 501, 506 (attestation implies all necessary formalities; but not ordinarily for a foreign will, where the requirements of execution may differ from those of the forum); 1847, McDermott v. McCormick, 4 id. 543 (signature as witness does not imply all the requisites for a will, but does for other documents); 1872, Denpre v. Deupree, 45 Ga. 415, 441 (see quotation supra); 1860, Ela v. Edwards, 16 Gray 91, 97 (mere signature may suffice, if the tribunal is "reasonably satisfied of the fact of a proper attestation from other sources and the circumstances of the case"); 1865, Elit v. Eliot, 10 All. 357 (preceding case approved); 1843, Chaffee v. Baptist M. C., 10 Paige 85, 90, 91 ("the fact of such compliance may be . . . inferred from circumstances"); 1903, Mendenhall's Will, — Or. —, 73 Pac. 1033; 1865, McKee v. White, 50 Pa. 354, 359 ("The name of the deceased witness stands for

§ 1513. Same: (2) Must the Maker's Signature or Identity also be otherwise proved? It has often been contended that the signature of the maker also, as well as that of the attester, must be proved. This contention means in effect that another witness to the maker's signature must be called; for (as has just been noted) the attestation is the attester's testimony to the fact of execution, i. e. the placing of the signature by the purporting maker. If, then, it is necessary to call a second witness to the maker's signature, this must be on the supposition that the testimony of the attestation, taken alone, does not go far enough in its implied or expressed statements. This is indeed the ground upon which in part the above contention has been rested. It argues, first, that the attestation, while asserting execution by a person of a certain name, does not sufficiently identify that person with the party in the case. It argues, furthermore, from the point of view of policy, that a person might be bribed to make a false attestation to a forged maker's signature, and then to abscond, leaving it feasible to prove the document against a deceased person by establishing the attester's genuine signature. These arguments are presented in the following passages:

1833, Bayley, B., in Whitelocke v. Musgrove, 1 Cr. & M. 520: "I always felt this difficulty, that that proof alone [of the subscribing witness' handwriting] does not connect the defendant with the note. . . . What is the effect which, with the greatest degree of latitude can be given to the attestation of the subscribing witness? It is that the facts which he has attested are true. Suppose an attestation of an instrument which describes the person executing it as A. B. of C. in the county of York. Then the utmost effect you can give to the attestation is to consider it as establishing that A. B. of C. in the county of York executed the instrument. But you must go a step further and show that the defendant is A. B. of C. in the county of York, or in some manner establish that he is the person by whom the note appears to be executed. Now what does the subscribing witness in this particular case attest? Why, that this instrument was duly executed by a person of the name of Francis Musgrove. There may be many persons of that name, and if you do not show that the defendant is the Francis Musgrove who executed the instrument, you fail in making out an essential part of what you are bound to prove. It is not sufficient for the subscribing witness merely to prove that he saw the instrument executed. . . . Why? Because it is an essential part of the issue, which you are bound to prove, that the instrument was executed by the defendant in the suit. It seems to me, therefore, on principle, that you must give some evidence of the identity of the defendant with the party who has signed the instrument."

1828, Porter, J., in Dismisses v. Musgrove, 7 Mart. n. s. 58, 63: "The only case that can be readily imagined where this rule would produce hardships is that of a stranger, whose handwriting was little known, coming into the country and exacting obligations before witnesses who after his departure died. No general rule can be laid down that will not do injury in some particular cases. But that just spoken of, in our judgment, is nothing in comparison with the danger that might result from sanctioning the other doc-his solemn declaration that it was executed as it appears; . . . in all such cases, the proof of the signature by the witness proves the instrument"; here held to imply the testator's signature, request, etc.); 1839, Clarke v. Dunavant, 10 Leigh 13, 22, 30 ("all the necessary requisites [may be implied] . . . although the memorandum of attestation is silent as to material ones"; Brooke, J., diss., except where the witnesses are unavailable; see the quotation in the preceding section); 1855, Dean v. Dean, 27 Vt. 746, 750 (the signature, with no attestation-clause, is evidence "of all those facts which he was required to attest"; but see the statute quoted in the preceding section); 1888, O'Hagan's Will, 73 Wis. 78, 82, 40 N. W. 649 (the signature only is sufficient to show due execution). But whether a genuine presumption is raised by the signature alone might be differently decided.

trine. The facility of proving any instrument under it is obvious. Whether forged or not, nothing more is necessary than to procure a non-resident of the State to put his name to it as a witness; and thus, a paper false in itself might be established by proving nothing but the truth in a court of justice."¹

These arguments may be answered as follows. As to the first, it is at least an objection which may equally be made when the attester is called to the stand; for he may have known A. B. to execute the document, but he may not know him to be identical with A. B., a deceased party to the cause. Furthermore, sameness of name is always some evidence, and perhaps even raises a presumption, of identity of person;² so that his attestation-statement that A. B. executed the document is at least sufficient evidence of the identity of that and this A. B. As to the second argument, it is also equally, though not so strongly, available against an attesting witness on the stand; for it is equally possible, though perhaps more difficult, to bribe an attester to give false testimony on the stand to a forged maker's signature. Furthermore, the supposed requirement merely asks that another witness be brought to testify to the maker's signature; yet a proponent who has bribed an attesting-witness and forged a maker's signature will presumably not lack the scruple and the means to supply a false witness to meet this additional requirement. Finally, to fail to impose this requirement, merely relieves the proponent of an extra burden; it does not sanction his supposed forgery, and does not prevent the opponent, any more than before, from exposing the forgery, if it is one. These answers to the above arguments on behalf of such a requirement are in part represented in the following passages:

1808, Marshall, C. J., in Murdock v. Hunter, 1 Brockenb. 135, 140: "If the plaintiff, by proving the death and handwriting of the subscribing witness, was only let in to prove the execution of the bond by other testimony, it would seem to be sufficient to prove the death of the subscribing witness and to identify his person by any other proof than that of his handwriting, — as, for instance, that he was the only person of that name in a situation to render it probable that he could have attested the bond. [But] since it is not only necessary to prove the death, but to prove the handwriting of the subscribing witness, it would seem that something further than the mere permission to establish the execution of the bond by other testimony was gained by this proof. This can only be the inference, which is drawn by the law, that if the person who attested the bond was present he could and would prove its execution. . . . It would seem, then, . . . that a naked case, standing singly on this proof, would be in favor of the plaintiff. But this evidence, which is merely circumstantial, may be met by other circumstantial evidence. Whatever deducts from it may and ought to be weighed against it. It is therefore always advisable to support it by other testimony, if such testimony be in the power of the plaintiff. . . . The Court is inclined to the opinion that, in a case unsupported and unopposed by any other circumstance whatever, this proof would be deemed sufficient to establish the execution of the bond."

1838, Nelson, C. J., in Kimball v. Davis, 19 Wend. 442: "It seems to me, if proof of the signature of the witness amounts to anything, it must be carried in the first instance as far as an acknowledgment goes; otherwise it affords no evidence of the execution at all, because so much is essential to make out what the face of the deed purports, or any proof of the execution by the grantor."

¹ Further expositions of the same notion will also be found here and there in the quotations in § 1320, ante; a good opinion is that of Gantt, J., in Plunket v. Bowman, 2 McCord 139, 140 (1822).

² Post, § 2529.

These arguments, it would seem, should conclude us against imposing such a requirement as a general rule. The preferable rule is to allow the attester's signature to suffice, in the absence of special circumstances which might justify the trial Court, in its discretion, in exacting something more. At the same time, where the alleged maker is deceased (as in the case of wills), and therefore the counter-proof may likely be less available, it would be proper enough to insist on the present requirement.

So far as concerns the state of the law in the various jurisdictions, the requirement has been by some Courts repudiated, by others sustained; and the jurisdictions are fairly divided on the question; except that statutes almost always sanction the requirement for wills.³ Of those jurisdictions

³ The rulings in the various jurisdictions are as follows; but the statutes, which in the case of wills often expressly prescribe a rule, have been collected in one place, to avoid repetition, ante, § 1320 (where they are involved in the rule of Preferred Attesting Witnesses); the cases on the Presumption from Identity of Name (post, § 2529) may also be profitably consulted: England: ante 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius 171 ("Proof that one who called himself B. executed is not sufficient if the witness did not know it to be the defendant"; said of a witness on the stand); 1779, Coghlan v. Williamson, 1 Dougl. 93 (Mansfield, L. C. J., allowed proof of both signatures, but it does not appear that he required it); 1798, Buller, J., in Adam v. Kerr, 1 B. & P. 360 ("The handwriting of the obligor need not be proved; that of the attesting witness, when proved, is evidence of everything on the face of the paper; which imports to be sealed by the party"); 1790, Wallis v. Delancey, 7 T. R. 266, note (bond executed abroad; Lord Kenyon, C. J., ruled that the handwriting of the obligor as well as of one witness must be proved); 1817, Parkins v. Hawkshaw, 2 Stark. 239, Holroyd, J. (an attesting witness saw execution by a person introduced as H.; held, further evidence necessary); 1817, Bayley, J., in Nelson v. Whittall, 1 B. & Ald. 19, 21 ("If the attesting witness himself gave evidence, he would prove, not merely that the instrument was executed, but the identity of the person so executing it"; and he required the same when the attester's signature was used); 1827, Page v. Mann, Moo. & M. 79 (the attesting witness' signature having been proved, evidence that the defendants were the parties whose signature he had attested was held unnecessary; Tenterden, L. C. J., would not follow Bayley, J., in Nelson v. Whittall: "The practice has been otherwise; . . . if I am wrong, I may be corrected"); 1828, Kay v. Brookman, 3 C. & P. 555, 556 (a power of attorney; Best, C. J.: "It has been the uniform practice only to prove the handwriting of the attesting witness, and I am of opinion that it is the most convenient course"); 1833, Whitelocke v. Musgrove, 1 Cr. & M. 520 (Exchequer; see quotation supra; other evidence of maker's identity required; Bolland, B.: "It is a question as to which eminent judges have certainly entertained different opinions. It seems clear from the case of Wallis v. Delancey that Lord Kenyon was of opinion that such evidence was necessary; and it is clear that Lord Ellenborough had not made up his mind upon the subject, because in Nelson v. Whittall he did not take upon himself to say what would be the case if no evidence of identity had been given. The opinion of Lord Tenterden was certainly invariably the other way, and Lord Chief Justice Best acted on the same view of the subject as Lord Tenterden"); 1841, Jones v. Jones, 9 M. & W. 75 (King's Bench; the attesting witness testified to the maker's signature "Hugh Jones," but could not identify him with defendant, and it appeared that the name was there a common one; further evidence of identity held necessary; Parke, B.: "This point must be considered as settled by the case of Whitelocke v. Musgrove"); 1841, Greenshields v. Crawford, ib. 314 (bill drawn on "Charles Banner Crawford" and accepted "C. B. Crawford"; held sufficient; Alderson, B.: "It is quite a different question whether . . . [proof of an attesting witness' signature suffices]; I agree that in such a case there should be some additional evidence"); United States: Ala.: 1887, Snider v. Burks, 94 Ala. 53, 56, 4 So. 225 (other evidence of testator's signature, not required for wills); 1897, Smith v. Keyser, 115 id. 455, 22 So. 149 (witness' signature sufficient; here, a deed); Del.: 1837, Layton v. Hastings, 2 Harringt. 147 (witness ignorant of the maker's identity, but proving his own signature; proof also of the maker's handwriting, sufficient); Ga.: 1849, Watt v. Kilburn, 7 Ga. 356, 358 (witness' signature suffices); 1850, Settle v. Allison, 8 id. 201, 206 (same); 1861, Howard v. Snelling, 32 id. 195, 202 (other evidence of maker's signature, not required; but here the maker signed by mark); 1895, McVicker v. Conkle, 96 id. 584, 586, 24 S. E. 23 (proof of the maker's signature not necessary; but the policy of this doubted by Atkinson, J.; the maker's signature held necessary where it was to be used merely as a standard for comparison of hands); Ill.: 1851, Newsom v. Luster, 13 Ill. 175 ("evidence of the handwriting of both party sustaining the contention, some require, having respect to the first argument above noted, that other evidence of the maker's identity be offered; some and witness would be requisite" for documents required by law to be attested); 1895, Hobart v. Hobart, 154 id. 610, 615, 39 N. E. 581 (whether the testator's signature also must always be proved, undecided); Ind.: 1828, Ungles v. Graves, 2 Blackf. 191 (not decided); Ia.: 1898, Scott v. Hawk, 105 Ia. 467, 75 N. W. 368 (not decided; will); La.: 1828, Dismukes v. Musgrove, 7 Mart. n. s. 58, 60 (other evidence of maker's signature required); 1836, Tagiasco v. Molinari, 9 La. 512, 521 (same; except where the maker signs by mark); 1837, Madison v. Zahriskie, 11 id. 247, 251 (same); 1847, Harris v. Patten, 2 La. An. 217 (approving the preceding cases); 1849, Rachal v. Rachal, 4 id. 500 (not required; preceding cases not noticed); 1850, Chaffe v. Cupp, 5 id. 684 (required; earlier cases followed with hesitation; rule not applied where the obligor signs by mark); 1851, Smith v. Gibbon, 6 id. 684 (not clear); 1854, Wattles v. Conner, 9 id. 227 (required; earlier cases followed); 1857, McGowan v. McLaughlin, 12 id. 242 (same); Md.: 1800, Collins v. Elliott, 1 H. & J. 1 (signatures "of the testator and of all the witnesses," required for a will); 1864, Keefer v. Zimmerman, 22 Md. 274 (St. 1825, c. 20, making it lawful not to call the attesting witness, does not make proof of the grantor's signature preferable, and allows proof of the witness' signature as before); Mo.: 1874, Gallagher v. Delargy, 57 Mo. 29, 36 (witness' handwriting, no dispute as to identity, and direct testimony of execution; sufficient); N. H.: 1848, Cram v. Ingalls, 18 N. H. 613, 616 (for a mortgage, where witnesses are required by law, the grantor's and both witnesses' signatures must be proved); N. J.: 1832, Kingwood v. Bethlehem, 13 N. J. L. 221, 226 (indenture of apprenticeship; other evidence of the maker's signature required); N. Y.: 1800, Mott v. Doughty, 1 John. Cas. 230 (bond; the obligor's handwriting need not be proved; here the witness was dead); 1809, Sluby v. Champlin, 4 John. 461, 467 (same; here the witness was in foreign parts); 1822, Jackson v. Legrange, 19 id. 386, 389 (will; other evidence of testator's signature required); 1825, Jackson v. Luquere, 5 Cow. 221, 225 (same); 1828, Jackson v. Vickory, 1 Wend. 406, 412 (same); 1833, M'Pherson v. Rathbone, 11 id. 96, 99 (requirement repudiated for a deed); 1834, Jackson v. Waldron, 13 id. 178, 197, per Tracy, Sen. (preceding case approved); 1838, Kimball v. Davis, 19 id. 437, 442 (deed; requirement as to maker's identity repudiated; see quotation supra); 1840, s. c., appealed, s. v. Brown v. Kimball, 25 id. 259, 270, 273 (Verplanck, Sen., in cases where there was "anything to raise a counter-presumption of fraud or even of doubt," required additional evidence of either the signature or of the identity of the grantor; but whether he meant by "identity," the bearing of the signed name by the grantor, or the grantor's identity with another person, was not stated; Walworth, C., and Edwards, Sen., thought proof of the witness' signature was sufficient; by 11 to 9 the former opinion prevailed); 1844, Northrop v. Wright, 7 Hill 476, 493 (preceding case questioned); N. C.: 1792, Nelius v. Brickell, 1 Hayw. 19 (bond; other evidence of the maker's signature required); 1793, Jones v. Brinkley, ib. 20, semble (bond; contra); 1798, Irving v. Irving, 2 id. 27 (bond; like the first case); 1818, Stump v. Hughes, 5 id. 93, semble (witness' handwriting, and either grantor's handwriting or an admission of signature, or the handwriting of both witnesses, required); Oh.: 1824, Clark v. Boyd, 2 Oh. 280 (57) ("under proper circumstances . . . either may be sufficient"); 1858, Richards v. Skiff, 8 Oh. St. 586 (other evidence not required); Pa.: 1810, Clark v. Sanderson, 3 Binn. 192, 196 (bill; other evidence of the maker's signature, suggested as desirable but not as settled law); 1813, Hamilton v. Marsden, 6 id. 45, 47, 50 (requirement repudiated; here for a lease); 1815, Powers v. M'Ferran, 1 S. & R. 44, 46 (requirement repudiated; here for a deed); 1847, Hays v. Harden, 6 Pa. St. 409, 412 ("[The witness' signature], when it is all that can be had, is an equivalent of the witness' oath; and, being prima facie evidence of execution, it is not indispensable that it be followed by evidence of the handwriting of the grantor, obligor, or drawer of a bill or note"; here applied to a will); 1857, Transue v. Brown, 31 id. 92, semble (same); 1868, Hansher v. Kline, 57 id. 397, 402 (signature of the witness, with evidence of identity of the maker's name, sufficient); S. C.: 1798, Hopkins v. DeGraffenreid, 2 Bay 187, 192 (for a "bond or deed," and here for a will, other evidence of maker's signature required); 1803, Turner v. Moore, 1 Brev. 236 (release; witnesses absent; proof of their handwriting held sufficient, without proof of the obligor's); 1810, Shiver v. Johnson, 2 id. 397 (witness' hand alone, sufficient, even where the maker signs by mark); 1820, Bussey v. Whitaker, 2 N. & McC. 374 (note signed by mark; subscribing witness' signature, sufficient); 1822, Plunket v. Bowman, 2 McC. 139 (bond; signature of both witness and maker required for all documents); 1827, Sims v. DeGraffenreid, 4 id. 253 (deed; both required); 1840, Edmonston v. Hughes, Cheves 81, 83 (other evidence of the grantor's signature not necessary; "but it is usual to prove his handwriting, and where it can be done, it is safest and best to prove it"); 1841, Trammell v. Roberts, 1 McM. 305, 307 (both required at common law; here for a note); 1858, Russell v. Tunno, 11 Rich. 303, 318 (other evidence of the maker's handwriting or "something else to connect him with the instrument," necessary in addition to the witness' signature; here applied to an assignment; Plunket v. Bowman followed); 1859, Jones v. Jones, 12 id. 116, 120 (preceding case approved); 1878, Lyons v. Holmes, 11 S. C. 429, 432 (handwriting of the two witnesses to a maker signing by mark, held sufficient, without other evidence of the mark, there being corroborating evidence besides; require, having in view the second argument, that other evidence of the maker's signature be offered; some, again, require that evidence be offered of either the one or the other; and there are more sub-varieties of rule. In England, there was for a long time a varying practice, until finally a requirement apparently became fixed that other evidence of the maker's identity should be offered. In this country, the requirement, when any has been made, has usually been of other evidence of the maker's signature; though a few Courts have properly left the matter to depend on the circumstances of each case.

Whether the attester's signature must be proved, or the maker's alone suffices, is a different question, involving the rule of Preference for Attesting Witnesses, and has been examined under that head (ante, § 1320).

§ 1514. Attester may be Impeached or Supported like other Witnesses. Since the attestation is offered as testimonial evidence of the attester speaking at the time of attestation (ante, § 1505), his statement, though he himself is not on the stand, may be impeached or supported as any witness' statements may be:

1860, Whelpley, J., in Boylan v. Meeker, 28 N. J. L. 274, 294: "Whenever the attestation is offered in evidence as proof of the execution of the instrument, any evidence which would have been competent against the witness, had he been sworn, will be competent to overthrow the force of his declaration offered in evidence instead of his testimony."

(1) Thus his moral character as a witness may be impeached in the way (ante, §§ 920, 977) appropriate for an ordinary witness.¹ He may also be impeached by evidence of bias or interest,² or of self-contradictions or inconsistencies,³ or by other appropriate evidence.

Russell v. Tunno not overruled, but regarded as not to be extended; here there was such additional evidence as Russell v. Tunno required; 1892, Martin v. Bowie, 37 id. 102, 115, 15 S. E. 736 (deed; witness' proof of his own and the maker's signature, not enough; a singular novelty); Tenn.: 1850, Jones v. Arterburn, 11 Humph. 97, 103 ("the signature of the testator, though not absolutely essential, ought to be superadded"); 1855, Harrel v. Ward, 2 Sneed 610, 612, semble (other evidence of the maker's signature not necessary, unless required to prove identity); Tex.: 1878, Gainer v. Cotton, 49 Tex. 101, 118 (not clear); U. S.: 1808, Murdock v. Hunter, 1 Brockenb. 135, 139 (signature of the witness, usually enough; see quotation supra); 1823, Spring v. Ins. Co., 8 Wheat. 268, 283 (where both are dead, other evidence of the signature of the party is required); 1830, Walton v. Coulson, 1 McLean 120, 124 (not required, "in ordinary cases"); 1882, Stebbins v. Duncau, 108 U. S. 32, 2 Sup. 313 (on objection that "as the testimony to establish its execution was the proof of the handwriting of subscribing witnesses, it was necessary to prove the identity of the grantor," the identity was then proved by other evidence).

¹ 1836, Doe v. Harris, 7 C. & P. 330, Cole-ridge, J. (here for "the attorney who prepared the will"; but the notion in the Court's mind is evidently the general one); 1868, Chamberlain v. Torrance, 14 Grant Ch. U. C. 181, 184 (deed attempted to be proved by thirty years' age); Me. Pub. St. 1883, c. 82, § 114 (former testimony of deceased subscribing witness, admissible in certain suits, may be impeached like that of a living witness); 1843, Lawless v. Guelbreth, 8 Mo. 139, 142; 1903, Farleigh v. Kelley, — Mont. — , 72 Pac. 756 ("the petitioner may not have the benefit of the testimony of the two witnesses . . . without having such witnesses subject to be discredited"; here, by bad reputation for honesty and integrity); 1842, Losee v. Losee, 2 Hill 609, 611; 1854, State v. Thomason, 1 Jones L. 274, semble; 1848, Harden v. Hays, 9 Pa. St. 158; 1820, Gardenhire v. Parks, 2 Yerg. 23. This is of course allowable where the witness is on the stand: 1832, Vandyke v. Thompson, 1 Harringt. 109 (a subscribing witness who merely testifies to execution may be impeached).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 68 (character of a third person alleged to have forged a will).

² 1868, Chamberlain v. Torrance, 14 Grant Ch. U. C. 181, 184 (bias).

³ The authorities will be found ante, § 1033, because the question is complicated by the supposed necessity of inquiring of the witness before proving the inconsistent statement.

(2) The party offering his attestation may in turn endeavor to rehabilitate him, by evidence of his good character,⁴ or otherwise, according to the principles applicable to the corroboration and rehabilitation of witnesses (ante, §§ 1100-1144).

⁴ 1801, Doe v. Walker, 4 Esp. 50, Kenyon, L. C. J. (deceased witnesses to a will; by the testimony of the survivor of three, the conduct of all appeared fraudulent; the good character of the deceased two was admitted); 1829, Provis v. Reed, 5 Bing. 435, 438 (deceased attorney who had prepared the will and was attesting witness; good character received in support, after imputations cast upon it; Best, C. J.: "The two decisions which have been cited, one of them from no less an authority than Lord Kenyon, are clearly in point; I have repeatedly tendered such evidence myself in similar cases when at the bar; I have had it tendered on the other side and have never objected; and the common practice of Westminster Hall has always been to receive it"; Park, J., reaffirmed this, and Burrough, J., referred to Doe v. Wood, unreported); 1784, Com. v. Fairfield, Mass., Dane's Abr. c. 84, art. 2, § 3, semble; 1838, People v. Rector, 19 Wend. 569, 580 (good character received, after imputations of fraud); 1823, Crouse v. Miller, 10 S. & R. 158 (same); 1839, Braddee v. Brownfield, 9 Watts 124 (admissible; but whether merely because he is deceased, or not until his character is impeached, or in what way it must be impeached, does not appear).

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE.

TOPIC V: REGULAR ENTRIES.

CHAPTER LI.

- § 1517. In general.
- § 1518. History of the Two Branches of the Exception.
- § 1519. Statutory Regulation.

A. REGULAR ENTRIES IN GENERAL.

1. The Necessity Principle.

- § 1521. Death, Absence, etc., of the Entrant.

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee.

- § 1522. Reasons of the Principle.
- § 1523. Regular Course of Business; (1) Business or Occupation.
- § 1524. Same: English Rule; Duty to a Third Person.
- § 1525. Same: (2) Regularity.
- § 1526. Contemporaneous with the Transaction.
- § 1527. No Motive to Misrepresent.
- § 1528. Written or Oral Statement.

3. Testimonial Qualifications, and Other Independent Rules of Evidence.

- § 1530. Personal Knowledge of Entrant; Entries by Bookkeeper, etc., on report of Salesman, Teamster, etc.
- § 1531. Form or Language of the Entry Impeaching the Entrant's Credit.
- § 1532. Production of Original Book.
- § 1533. Opinion Rule.

B. PARTIES' ACCOUNT-BOOKS.

- § 1536. In general.

1. The Necessity Principle.

- § 1537. Nature of the Necessity.
- § 1538. Not admissible where Clerk was Kept.
- § 1539. Not admissible for Cash Payments or Loans.
- § 1540. Not admissible for Goods delivered to Others on Defendant's Credit.
- § 1541. Not admissible for Terms of Special Contract.

- § 1542. Not admissible in Certain Occupations.

- § 1543. Not admissible for Large Items, or for Immoral Transactions.

- § 1544. Rules not Flexible; Existence of Other Testimony in Specific Instances does not exclude Books.

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee.

- § 1546. General Principle; Regularity of Entry in Course of Business.
- § 1547. Regularity, as affecting Kind of Occupation or Business.
- § 1548. Same, as affecting Kind of Book; Ledger or Daybook.
- § 1549. Same, as affecting Kind of Item or Entry; Cash Entry.
- § 1550. Contemporaneousness.
- § 1551. Book must bear Honest Appearance.
- § 1552. Reputation of Correct and Honest Bookkeeping.

3. Testimonial Qualifications, and Other Independent Rules of Evidence.

- § 1554. Party's Suppletory Oath; Cross-Examination of Party; Use of Books by or against Surviving Party.
- § 1555. Personal Knowledge of Entrant; Party and Salesman verifying jointly.
- § 1556. Form and Language of Entry; Absence of Entry.
- § 1557. Impeaching the Book; Opponent's Use of the Book as containing Admissions.
- § 1558. Production of Original Book; Ledger and Daybook.

4. Present Exception as affected by Parties' Statutory Competency.

- § 1559. Theory of Use of Parties' Books as Hearsay.
- § 1560. Statutory Competency as Abolishing Necessity for Parties' Books; Using the Books to aid Recollection.
- § 1561. Relation of this Branch to the main Exception; Books of Deceased Party; Books of Party's Clerk.

§ 1517. In general. To this Exception there are two branches. Historically, they are separate, yet traceable to a common origin. Theoretically, they are by no means identical, yet closely related in principle. The main branch has a legitimate and living place among the Hearsay Exceptions. The other branch (for parties' account-books) has no longer on the whole any justification for a separate existence, and remains only as a fixed tradition, surviving, in a form more or less modified by statute, after the reasons for its establishment have passed away. The former involves a general exception in favor of regular entries made in the course of business (but in England only in the course of a specific duty), the entrant being no longer available as a witness on the stand. The latter sanctions the admission of a narrower class of regular entries, i. e. made by a party to the suit, whether available as a witness or not. The history of the two branches of the Exception must be considered before examining the tenor and limitations of each.

§ 1518. History of the Two Branches of the Exception.¹ (1) (a) First, there appears in England, at least as early as the 1600s, a custom to receive the shop-books of "divers men of trades and handicraftsmen" in evidence of "the particulars and certainty of the wares delivered"; and this whether the books were kept by the party himself or by a clerk, and whether the entrant were living or dead. But there was more or less abuse of this evidence, in "leaving the same books uncrossed and any way discharged" and still suing for the claim. Moreover, the whole proceeding was also discredited as involving the making of evidence for one's self, for "the rule is that a man cannot make evidence for himself." In 1609, then, a statute,² after reciting these considerations, forbade this use of parties' shop-books "in any action for any money due for wares hereafter to be delivered or for work hereafter to be done," except (a) within one year after the delivery of the wares or the doing of the work, (b) where a bill of debt existed, (c) "between merchant and merchant, merchant and tradesman, or between tradesman and tradesman," for matters within the trade. The higher Courts, applying the principle that a man cannot make evidence for himself, ultimately made this exclusion complete, by refusing to recognize these books at all, after the expiration of the year.³ In the lower courts, it is true (the Small Causes Court of London and provincial Courts of Request, succeeded by the County Courts), where the jurisdiction was limited to small claims, the use of these books continued to be a common practice, in many if not in all, — where indeed the general rules of evidence were perhaps, in the absence of counsel, more or less relaxed.⁴ But, apart from this local usage, the books of a party ceased after the 1600s to form the subject of a hearsay exception at common

¹ The history of the exception was first expounded by Professor Thayer, in his Cases on Evidence, 1st ed., 471, 506, 516.

² 1609, St. 7 Jac. I, c. 12, continued by St. 3 Car. I, c. 4, § 22; St. 16 Car. I, c. 4; Rev. St. I, 691.

It would seem, however, that this English statute was merely falling in with a movement which had for a generation been proceeding, all along the line, in other headquarters of the mercantile world. The precise features of the statute, namely, exclusion of mercantile books from evidence above a certain sum and beyond a certain time, are found in numerous Italian and French ordinances of the same epoch, several of which dated between 1575 and 1609 (Pertile, Storia del diritto italiano, 2d ed., 1900, vol. VI, pt. 1, pp. 421, 423); e. g. in 1575, "ad fraudem occasiones tollendas, aromatariario libris, ultra tres annos fides in judiciis ne habeatur," etc.; in 1582, "s'abbi da dare intera fede in giudizio insino alla somma di 10 scudi."

The practice of receiving the books appears considerably earlier in England, in the ecclesiastical Courts at least: 1552, Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum, tit. De fide, c. 5.

³ Crouch v. Drury, 1 Keble 27 (1661); Smart v. Williams, Comb. 247 (1694); Glynn v. Bank of England, 2 Ves. 38 (1750); Lefebure v. Worden, 2 Ves. 54 (1750); Digby v. Stedman, 1 Esp. 328 (1795); Sikes v. Marshall, 2 id. 705 (1798).

⁴ Thayer, ubi supra, ex relatione an English judge (Thomas Hughes).

law in England. They came in again only under statutory rules of the late 1800s.⁵

(b) Next, however, it appears that before the end of the same century of the above statute (1600) the entries of a deceased clerk (even a clerk of a party) began to be admitted, on a principle distinctly that of the preceding Hearsay exceptions (ante, §§ 1421, 1422), — necessity and trustworthiness. At that time there was hardly a conscious and definite recognition of the scope of the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1364), but the idea was the fundamental idea of its exceptions. The admission of these books was treated as anomalous, and it was distinctly understood that their use, though affording some concession to parties, was an essentially different thing from the use of books kept by a living party himself. The cases begin with the 1700s;⁶ Price v. Lord Torrington is the one most frequently taken as the landmark of the rule. The attitude of the Courts at this time may be gathered from the following language of Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, in 1750, in Lefebure v. Worden :

“It must be admitted that by the rules of evidence no entry in a man’s own books by himself can be evidence for himself to prove his demand. So far [nevertheless] the Courts of justice have gone (and that was going a good way, and perhaps broke in upon the original strict rules of evidence), that where there was such evidence by a servant known in transacting the business, as in a goldsmith’s shop by a cashier or bookkeeper, such entry, supported on the oath of that servant that he used to make entries from time to time and that he made them truly, has been read. Farther, where that servant, agent, or bookkeeper has been dead, if there is proof that he was the servant or agent usually employed in such business, was intrusted to make such entries by his master, [and] that it was the course of trade, — on proof that he was dead and that it was his handwriting, such entry has been read (which was Sir Biby Lake’s Case). And that was going a great way; for there it might be objected that such entry was the same as if made by the master himself; yet by reason of the difficulty of making proof in cases of this kind, the Court has gone so far.”

The admission thus far made covered only the books of the clerk of a party. But already there were instances foreshadowing a wider principle. In several rulings, books regularly kept by persons then deceased had been admitted, his death and the regularity of the book being more or less explicitly recognized as the grounds of admission.⁷ Finally, in 1832, in Doe v. Turford,⁸ following one or two minor cases, the doctrine was placed on a firm footing, and the general scope of the exception was recognized. (It was understood to cover all entries made “by a person, since deceased, in the ordinary course of his business,” whether a person wholly unconnected with the parties, or the clerk of a party, or the party himself; and it is this general exception that to-day is universally recognized.

⁵ See the quotations in the next section. Meantime, it is true, there was some recognition in chancery practice: 1828, L. C. Hart, in Kilbee v. Sneyd, 2 Moll. Ire. 186, 196 (used by the Chancellor “to inform his mind, although perhaps not absolutely to govern his decision”).

⁶ Pitman v. Maddox, 1 Ld. Raym. 722 (1698–99); Price v. Lord Torrington, 2 id. 873 (1703);

Sir Biby Lake’s Case, Theory of Evidence, 93 (1761); Glynn v. Bank of England, supra; Lefebure v. Worden, supra.

⁷ Smart v. Williams, Comb. 247 (1694); Woodnoth v. Lord Cobham, Bunbury 180 (1724); Sutton v. Gregory, Peake’s Add. Cas. 150 (1797).

⁸ 3 B. & Ad. 890.

(2) (a) The history of the doctrine was widely different in the United States. The English statute of 1609, or a similar one, for parties' shop-books, was in force, to a considerable extent, in the Colonies. In the Plymouth Laws, as well as in the later laws of Massachusetts, Connecticut, and other New England States, the use of parties' account-books was limited, but still authorized, by statutes; a special action of "book-debt" was in some places authorized.⁹ In New York and New Jersey the use seems clearly traceable to Dutch practice,¹⁰ which however did not vary in essentials from the English. In most of the jurisdictions (though not in all) the party was allowed and required to verify the accounts by a "suppletory" oath; but in all jurisdictions, though there were practically no limitations of time (as there were in England) to the use of the books, there were many restrictions as to the kind of business, the kind of transaction, and the like, which rested on the same distrust of a party's own evidence and seriously limited the use of the books. But a cardinal feature of the attitude of the Courts, peculiar to the United States, was that the evidence was treated on the same grounds already set forth (ante, §§ 1421, 1422) as underlying the Hearsay exceptions generally, — the principles of necessity and of a circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness. The necessity was the fact that so many small traders, in the then condition of the country, keeping no clerk, and being as parties incompetent to take the stand, were totally bereft of any means of proof except their own extrajudicial statements in these books (post, § 1537). The guarantee of trustworthiness was that which we now recognize in the regularity of the entries (post, § 1522). What is to be noticed, then, is that the books were received practically on the footing of a special Hearsay exception. By keeping in mind that the party was unavailable as a witness for himself, and that there was thus a necessity for using his past, extrajudicial, i. e. hearsay statements, — that in short the judicial attitude was the same to this as to ordinary Hearsay exceptions, it is easy to follow out the rationalized form which this branch of the exception took, — a form usually, but incorrectly, regarded as merely arbitrary.

(b) At that time (i. e. up to the earliest part of the 1800s) no other exception of the sort appears to have been recognized in the United States, — that is, there was no using of regular entries except this limited use of a party's shop-books.¹¹ But a knowledge of the doctrine of Price v. Lord Torrington (1703) seems to have been then brought about by the English deci-

⁹ These statutes for the New England Colonies, will be found quoted or cited in Thayer, ubi supra, 506, 515. To those citations add, for North Carolina, St. 1756, and for South Carolina, St. 1721 (post, § 1519). These early statutes are not here set out, because nothing turns upon their wording; for either (as in New England) the statutes have fallen into desuetude and the rulings of the Courts since the Revolution have become the source of the law, or (as in North Carolina) a modern statute has superseded the early one.

¹⁰ This is pointed out by Mr. Justice Charles

P. Daly, the learned historian of New York, in his History of the Court of Common Pleas, in 1 E. D. Smith xxx; also in 4 id. 397. Possibly (on the lines suggested by Mr. Douglas Campbell, in his Puritan in England, Holland, and America) the English usage of Elizabeth's time was itself learned from the Dutch merchants.

¹¹ The following belongs under the older tradition: 1792, Lewis v. Norton, 1 Wash. Va. 76 (entries in the appellee's "store-books, which were proved to be in the handwriting of one of the appellee's bookkeepers, then dead," admitted).

sions of *Pritt v. Fairclough*¹² and Hagedorn v. Reid,¹³ rendered in 1812 and 1813; and shortly after this time two well-considered rulings, following these authorities, established on a firm footing the large and general principle of admitting regular entries by deceased persons, — the cases of Welsh v. Barrett,¹⁴ in Massachusetts, in 1819, and Nicholls v. Webb,¹⁵ in the Federal Supreme Court, in 1823. In these two decisions the Exception found a recognition entirely independent of the use of parties' books; and it was only in the course of time, especially through Professor Greenleaf's treatment in his work on Evidence, that the two branches of the exception became associated and their analogy recognized. When this relation came to be appreciated, certain difficulties had to be solved; for example, one of the questions presented to American Courts was whether the books of a deceased or an absent party should be treated according to the parties'-books doctrine or from the point of view of the broad and inclusive exception admitting regular entries of deceased persons generally. Another and analogous question was the place to be assigned to books kept by a deceased clerk of a party. These questions concerning the delimitation of the two divisions still trouble the waters of precedent.

By these stages the two parts of the Exception reached their present development in England and in the United States. It will be seen that in England there now exists (apart from statute) only the broad principle admitting regular entries of any sort by deceased persons generally; while in the United States there have grown up two branches, — one, the same general principle, the other, an analogous principle covering parties' account-books only.

§ 1519. Statutory Regulation. The main branch of the Exception — regular entries by persons deceased or the like — has seldom been intentionally dealt with in statutes. But the branch applicable to parties' books has been in many jurisdictions the subject of legislation.¹ In England this legislation

¹² 3 Camp. 305.

¹³ 3 Camp. 377.

¹⁴ 15 Mass. 380.

¹⁵ 8 Wheaton 326. There were one or two earlier cases, such as Clarke v. Magruder, 2 H. & J. 77 (Md., 1807), and Sterrett v. Bull, 1 Binn. 237 (Pa., 1808); but the former two were those chiefly esteemed by other Courts in establishing the doctrine.

¹ The statutes for books of a corporation are noted ante, § 1074; ENGLAND: 1883. Rules of Court, Ord. XXX, enacted 1894, Rule 7 ("On the hearing of the summons, the Court or judge may order that evidence of any particular fact, to be specified in the order, shall be given . . . by production of documents or entries in books, or by copies of documents or entries or otherwise as the Court or judge may direct"); Ord. XXXIII, Rule 7 ("The Court or judge," in directing an account, "may direct that in taking the account, the books of account in which the accounts in question have been kept shall be taken as prima facie evidence of the truth of the matters therein contained"); 1879, St. 42 Vict.

c. 11, Bankers' Books Evidence Act, § 3 (entries in a "banker's book" are to be prima facie evidence of "the matters, transactions, and accounts therein recorded"); § 4 (provided the book "was at the time of making the entry one of the ordinary books of the bank, and that the entry was made in the usual and ordinary course of business, and that the book is in the custody of the bank"); CANADA: Dom. St. 1900, c. 46, adding § 701a to Crim. Code 1892 (in proving the age of a young person, on certain charges, "any entry or record by an incorporated society or its officers having had the control or care" of the person about the time of his being brought to Canada, is admissible, if made before the offence committed); B. C. St. 1902, c. 22, § 5 (in actions in a county court for a demand not for tort and not exceeding $250, the judge "on being satisfied of their general correctness" may receive in evidence "the books of the plaintiff," or for a payment or set-off or counterclaim, those of the defendant); Man. Rev. St. 1902, c. 38, § 135 (in any action "for a debt or demand, not being for tort, the judge, on being has merely restored, in broad and indefinite language, something of the usage which for two centuries had ceased to be a part of the common law. In the satisfied of their general correctness, may receive in evidence the books of the plaintiff," or, for a set-off or counter-claim or payment, the books of the defendant); N. Br. Consol. St. 1877, c. 49, § 91 (on a reference, "the books or writings of either party, or of any person or party represented by him or under whom he claims, may also be used in evidence for or against the party producing them"); St. 1895, c. 16 (on an issue as to the estate of a deceased person, "entries in the books of accounts of such deceased persons shall on proof of their being in the handwriting of the deceased or of a clerk who is deceased" be admissible and be prima facie proof, if the Court is satisfied "that they were made in the ordinary course of business"); Newf. Consol. St. 1892, c. 50, Rules of Court 30, par. 3 (parties' books of account, admissible in certain cases); St. 1897, c. 21 (entries in bankers' books made admissible, on certain conditions); N. Sc. Rules of Court, 1900, Ord. 32, R. 3 (in directing an account, the judge may direct that "the books of account in which the accounts in question have been kept shall be taken as prima facie evidence," with liberty to object); Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 60, § 148 ("in an action for a debt or demand, not being for tort and being under $25"; the judge may admit the plaintiff's books, and also, for a set-off or payment, the defendant's books); P. E. I. St. 1889, § 52 ("Proof of the handwriting of any clerk, shopman, or servant, or other person, of any entry in any original book of entry, and made in the ordinary course of business, stating the delivery of goods, the payment of money, or the performance of labor," shall be evidence thereof, "in the absence from this Province of such clerk," etc., as if he were dead); UNITED STATES: Ala. Code 1897, § 1808 ("The original entries in the books of a physician are evidence for him in all actions brought for the recovery of his medical services, that the services were rendered, unless the defendant in open court deny on oath the truth of such entries, but the physician is required to prove the value of such services"; a denial by the opponent's representative may be on belief only); § 1809 ("Books of account kept by a deceased executor, administrator, guardian, or trustee, or entries or memoranda made by him in the course of business or duty, are admissible evidence; and if such book or memoranda be lost, a copy thereof, supported by the oath of the person making it, is admissible evidence"); Ark. Stats. 1894, § 2893 ("The regular and fairly kept books of original entries of a deceased merchant or regular trader, or any person keeping running accounts for goods, wares, merchandise, or other property sold or labor done, accompanied by the affidavit of the executor or administrator of such deceased person, or some creditable person for him, setting forth that they are the books or accounts of his testator or intestate, shall be evidence to charge the defendant for the sum therein specified, subject to be repelled by other competent testimony"); § 2894 ("To entitle the party to introduce such evidence, he must first establish, to the satisfaction of the Court, that the testator or his intestate had the reputation of keeping correct books"; § 2895 (statute not to apply to "hawkers or peddlers"); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1946 ("The entries and other writings of a decedent, made at or near the time of the transaction and in a position to know the facts stated therein, may be read as prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein, . . . 2, when it [the entry] was made in a professional capacity, and in the ordinary course of professional conduct; 3, when it was made in the performance of a duty specially enjoined by law"; amended by the Commissioners in 1901, by inserting in clause 3, after "law," the words "contract or employment"; for the validity of this amendment, see ante, § 488); § 1947 ("When an entry is repeated in the regular course of business, one being copied from another at or near the time of the transaction, all the entries are equally regarded as originals"; amended by the Commissioners in 1901, by inserting at the beginning: "Entries in original books of account or other business records, made in the regular and ordinary course of business, and at or near the time of the transaction, may be read as prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein, though the person making such entries is not deceased, if it appears that they were made as provided in this section and that they were intended to be correct"; for the validity of this amendment, see ante, § 488); Colo. Annot. Stats. 1891, § 4817 (when in any civil action "the claim or defense is founded on a book account, any party or interested person may testify to his account-book and the items therein contained; that the same is a book of original entries, and that the entries therein were made by himself and are true and just, or that the same were made by a deceased person, or by a disinterested person, a non-resident of the State at the time of the trial, and were made by such deceased or non-resident person in the usual course of trade, and of his duty or employment to the party so testifying"); Del. Rev. St. 1893, c. 107, § 11 (a "book of original entries, regularly and fairly kept," offered with plaintiff's oath or affirmation, is admissible to charge the defendant "with the sums therein contained for goods sold and delivered, and other matters properly chargeable in an account," or is admissible, with defendant's oath or affirmation, to establish a set-off; "cash items are not properly so chargeable"; "provided that the party proving his book of original entries shall be subject to cross-examination touching the same and the entries therein and the transactions to which such entries relate"); Fla. Rev. St. 1892, § 1120 ("In all suits the shop-books and books of account of either party, in which the charges and entries shall have been originally made, shall be admissible in evidence in favor of such party," the jury to judge of credibility); Ga. Code 1895, § 5182 ("The books of account of any merchant, shopkeeper, physician, blacksmith, or other person doing a regular business and keeping daily entries thereof, may be admitted in evidence as proof of such accounts, upon the following conditions: 1. That he kept no clerk, or else the clerk is dead or otherwise inaccessible, or for any other reason the clerk is disqualified from testifying; 2. Upon proof (the party's oath being sufficient) that the book tendered is his book of original entries; 3. Upon proof (by his customers) that he usually kept correct books; 4. Upon inspection by the Court, to see if the books are free from any suspicion of fraud"; Ida. Rev. St. 1887, § 5996 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 3 ("Where in any civil action, suit, or proceeding, the claim or defense is founded on a book account, any party or interested person may testify to his account-book, and the items therein contained; that the same is a book of original entries, and that the entries therein were made by himself, and are true and just; or that the same were made by a deceased person, or by a disinterested person, a non-resident of the State at the time of the trial, and were made by such deceased or disinterested person in the usual course of trade, and of his duty or employment to the party so testifying; and thereupon the said account-book and entries shall be admitted as evidence in the cause"); 1872, Presbyterian Church v. Emerson, 66 Ill. 269, 271 ("This section is a repeal of the common-law rule as to the admissibility of an account-book"); 1892, House v. Beak, 141 id. 290, 297, 30 N. E. 1065 ("Section 3, which was first passed in 1867 (Laws of 1867, § 3, p. 184), adds to and enlarges, but does not repeal the common law; a contrary statement made in Presbyterian Church v. Emerson, 66 Ill. 269, was mere dictum, and not necessary to the decision of the case"); Ia. Code 1897, § 4622 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946, with "or" instead of "and," in the second class of cases); § 4623 ("Books of account, containing charges by one party against the other, made in the ordinary course of business, are receivable in evidence only under the following circumstances. . . . First, the books must show a continuous dealing with persons generally, or several items of charges at different times against the other party in the same book or set of books; Second, it must be shown, by the party's oath or otherwise, that they are his books of original entries; Third, it must be shown in like manner that the charges were made at or near the time of the transaction therein entered, unless satisfactory reasons appear for not making such proof; Fourth, the charges must also be verified by the party or the clerk who made the entries, to the effect that they believe them just and true, or a sufficient reason must be given why the verification is not made"); Kan. Gen. St. 1897, c. 95, § 378 ("Entries in books of account may be admitted in evidence when it is made to appear by the oath of the person who made the entries that such entries are correct, and were made at or near the time of the transaction to which they relate, or upon proof of the handwriting of the person who made the entries in case of his death or absence from the county"); Ky. C. C. P. 1895, § 606, par. 7 (quoted ante, § 488); La. Rev. Civ. C. 1888, § 2248 ("The books of merchants cannot be given in evidence in their favor"); Mich. Comp. L. 1897, § 10192 ("In all trials . . . books of account, containing charges or entries for money paid, laid out, or furnished, shall be received and admitted as evidence, and deemed to be evidence of such charges and entries, and that such moneys were so paid, laid out, furnished, or lent, as is in such books charged or entered, and of the liability of the person charged therefor, in the same manner and to the same extent as books of account containing charges for goods, wares, or merchandise sold and delivered, are received and admitted as evidence of sale and delivery of such goods and merchandise, and of the liability of the person charged therefor; provided, this section shall not apply to cases where persons acting or having acted as commission merchants or agents for the sale of produce, grain, or other property, unless accompanied by a voucher or receipt for the money so claimed to be laid out, lent, or furnished"); Minn. Gen. St. 1894, § 5738 (party's account-books admissible, when he produces them "and proves that the said books are his books of account kept for that purpose; that they contain the original entries of charges for moneys paid, or goods or other articles delivered, or work and labor or other services performed, or materials furnished; that the charges therein were made at the time of the transactions therein entered; that they were in the handwriting of some person authorized to make charges in said books, and are just and true as the person making such proof verily believes; the witness by whom said books are sought to be proved being subject to all the rules of cross-examination, and said books subject to all just exceptions as to their credibility"); § 5739 ("Where a book has marks which show that the items have been transferred to a ledger, the book shall not be testimony unless the ledger is produced"); § 5740 ("Any entries made in a book by a person authorized to make the same, he being dead, may be received as evidence, in a case proper for the admission of such book as evidence, on proof that the same are in his handwriting, and in a book kept for such entries, without further verification"); § 5741 (where a deposition is used, production of such books to the officer suffices, and copies of entries may be attached); Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 4652 (quoted ante, § 488); Mont. C. C. P. 1895, §§ 3237, 3238 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1946, 1947); Nebr. Comp. St. 1899, § 5919 (substantially like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946, substituting "or" for "and" in the second class, and "presumptive" for "prima facie"); § 5920 (like Ia. Code, § 4623, with "or set of books" omitted at the end of the first proviso); N. M. Comp. L. 1897, § 3031 (in civil causes, "the books of account of any merchant, ern States new statutes from time to time re-stated the terms of the rule; and in the legislation of many Western States this part of the exception shopkeeper, physician, blacksmith, or other person doing a regular business and keeping daily entries thereof, may be admitted as proof of such accounts upon the following conditions: First, that he kept no clerk, or else the clerk is dead or inaccessible; Second, upon proof, the party's oath being sufficient, that the book tendered is the book of original entries; Third, upon proof, by his customers, that he usually kept correct books; Fourth, upon inspection by the Court to see if the books are free from any suspicion of fraud"); 1898, Everts v. Robinson, 9 N. M. 427, 54 Pac. 932 (the foregoing statute supersedes the common law); N. C. Code 1883, § 591; St. 1756, c. 57 (in claims "for goods, wares, and merchandise by him sold and delivered or for work done and performed," on the claimant's oath that the matter is a book account and "that he hath no means to prove the delivery of any of the articles which he then shall propose to prove by himself but by this book," and that "it doth contain a true account of all the dealings or the last settlement of accounts" and that "all the articles therein contained and by him so proved were bona fide delivered, and that he hath given the opposing party all just credits," the book and oath are admissible for articles delivered within two years before action begun, but not "for any greater amount than sixty dollars"); § 592 (similar provisions for an executor, etc., using deceased's book, on oath that "there are no witnesses to his knowledge capable of proving," etc.; the matters to be within three years before suit begun and two years before the death of the deceased); § 593 (a copy of an account may be used instead of the original, unless the opponent has given ten days' notice to produce); Oh. Annot. Rev. St. 1898, § 5242, par. 6 (quoted ante, § 488); Okl. Stats. 1893, § 4277 ("Entries in books of accounts may be admitted in evidence, when it is made to appear by the oath of the person who made the entries that such entries are correct, and were made at or near the time of the transaction to which they relate, or upon proof of the handwriting of the person who made the entries, in case of his death or absence from the county"); Or. C. C. P. 1892, § 767 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946, inserting, after "deceased," "or without the State," and after "writings," "of a like character"); § 768 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1947); Pa. St. 1883, June 22, P. & L. Dig. "Evidence," 39, 40, § 1 ("book entries of any bank or banker doing business at the time" of the evidence required are provable by copy); § 2 (in admitting this copy, "there must be an affidavit or the testimony of an officer of the bank stating that the book is one of the ordinary books of the bank used in the transaction of its business, that the entry is as was originally made at the time of its date, and in the usual course of its business, that there are no interlineations or erasures, and that the copy has been compared with the book, and is a correct copy of the same, and such book shall be open to the inspection of any interested party"); § 3 (this statute shall not apply to "any suit to which the bank or bankers is a party"); St. 1897, May 25, Pub. L. 82, § 1 ("Hereafter in any suit or action brought in any Court within this commonwealth in which the accounts kept by any common carrier, railroad company, chartered storage or transportation company, or other public corporation doing business within this commonwealth are involved in an issue between other parties, and in the result of which such common carrier, railroad company, chartered storage or transportation company, or other public corporation, has no direct or pecuniary interest, a copy of the books of account of original entry of such common carrier, railroad company, chartered storage or transportation company, or other public corporation, under the oath or affirmation of an officer or employee in charge of the books of such common carrier, railroad company, chartered storage or transportation company, or other public corporation, filed within ten days of the date of the trial or hearing of the issue in said suit or action, shall be and become prima facie evidence"); S. C. St. 1721, Gen. St. 1882, § 2228, Code 1902, § 2900 ("Books of original entry kept by farmers and planters relating to the transactions of their farms or plantations shall be receivable in evidence in all trials in which the business or transactions of their farms or plantations shall be called in question, as between the farmer or planter and his employees, in the same manner as books of merchants and shopkeepers are"); St. 1827, G. S. § 2229, Code 1902, § 2901 ("The books of accounts of tavern-keepers, shopkeepers, or retailers of spirituous liquors shall not be admitted, allowed, or received as evidence, in any court having a right to try the same, of any debt contracted, or moneys due, for spirituous liquors sold in less quantity than a quart"); Tenn. Code 1896, § 5562 (in actions for goods sold and delivered or for work and labor, the plaintiff's books of account are to be admissible to prove sale and delivery of "articles not exceeding seventy-five dollars in value, which were delivered within two years before the action brought, if the plaintiff make oath (1) that the matter in dispute is a book account, (2) that he has no means to prove the delivery of such articles as he shall then propose to prove by his own oath, but by his book, (3) that the book contains a true account of all the dealings or last settlement of account between them, (4) that all the articles therein contained and by him so proved were really delivered, and (5) that he has given the defendant all just credits"); § 5563 (a deceased creditor's representative may use the book on swearing (1) that he believes the account just, (2) that there are no witnesses who can prove it, (3) that he "found the book with the account so stated," and (4) that he "knows of no further or other credit to be given"); § 5564 (a copy may be used unless the defendant has given notice, at the time of issue joined, to produce the book); § 5565 (if both parties are deceased per-was also embodied in statutes. The history of this Western legislation is obscure; but it seems to have come about in general by way of imitation or adaptation of the Southern statutes familiar to many of the early emigrants. Much of it preceded the abolition of parties' disqualification (ante, § 577), and was intended to alleviate that rule. The Western legislation, however, was often broader in language than the Southern statutes, which usually did not do much more than perpetuate the original colonial practice with its narrow limitations. Moreover, at the time of the Western enactments, the main branch (or general exception for deceased persons' entries) was already fully recognized by the Courts; so that the language of these statutes often shows traces of this main exception, and in some respects serves to admit evidence which would ordinarily have been already available under the judicial exception. It is therefore sometimes difficult to know whether the statute is to be regarded as merely declaratory of the common law in those respects, or whether it must be taken as a substitute replacing and excluding the common-law principle. Having regard to the history of the parties'-books ex-sons' representatives, the deceased opponent's book may be admitted to disprove charges); Utah Rev. St. 1898, § 3406 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946); Vt. Stats. 1894, §§ 1237, 1239 (quoted ante, § 488); Wis. Stats. 1898, § 4186 ("Whenever a party in any cause or proceeding shall produce at the trial his account-books and swear that the same are his account-books, kept for that purpose; that they contain the original entries of charges for goods or other articles delivered, or work or labor or other services performed or materials found, and that such entries are just, to the best of his knowledge and belief; that said entries are in his own handwriting, and that they were made at or about the time said goods or other articles were delivered, said work and labor or other services were performed, or said materials were found, the party offering such book or books as evidence, being subject to all the rules of cross-examination by the adverse party that would be applicable by the rules to any other witness giving testimony relating to said book or books, if it shall appear upon the examination of said party that all of the interrogatories in this section contained are satisfactorily established in the affirmative, then the said book or books shall be received"); § 4187 ("Whenever the original entries mentioned in the preceding section are in the handwriting of an agent, servant, or clerk of the party, the oath of such agent, servant, or clerk may in like manner be admitted to verify the same, and said books shall be testimony" as in § 4186; provided that under neither section shall a book "be admitted as testimony of any item of money delivered at one time exceeding five dollars, or of money paid to third persons, or of charges for rent"); § 4188 (a book with marks showing a posting in a ledger is inadmissible "unless the ledger be produced"); § 4189 ("Any entries made in a book by a person authorized to make the same, he being dead, may be received as evidence in a case proper for the admission of such books as evidence. Entries in a book or other permanent form, other than those mentioned in §§ 4186 and 4189 b, in the usual course of business, contemporaneous with the transactions to which they relate and as part of or connected with such transactions, made by persons authorized to make the same, may be received in evidence when shown to have been so made upon the testimony either of the person who made the same, or if he be beyond the reach of a subpoena of the trial Court or insane, of any person having custody of the entries and testifying that the same were made by a person or persons authorized to make them in whose handwriting they are, and that they are true and correct to the best of his knowledge and belief. In case such entries are, in the usual course of business, also made in other books or papers as a part of the system of keeping a record of such transactions, it shall not be necessary to produce as witnesses all of the persons subject to subpoena who were engaged in the making of such entries; but before such entries are admitted, the Court shall be satisfied that they are genuine" and fulfil the above rules); § 4189 b ("Whenever any evidence shall be required . . . from the books of any bank or banker doing business at the time," copies of entries are admissible, with a bank officer's affidavit or testimony that the book is "one of the ordinary books of the bank used in the transaction of its business," that the entry "was originally made therein at the time of its date and in the usual course of the business of the bank, that there are no interlineations or erasures, that the book is in the custody or control of the bank"); § 3932 (after the decease of an executor or administrator, his books of account "as such executor or administrator, appearing to have been kept in his own handwriting," are admissible to prove receipts, disbursements, and services); Wyo. Rev. St. 1887, § 2590, par. 6 (quoted ante, § 488).

New England States, the original colonial statutes fell into desuetude, and the practice was perpetuated by judicial rulings. But in some of the South-

ception, it seems safer and more correct, as it certainly is more advantageous, to regard these statutes as intended to enlarge or to replace merely the parties' books branch of the exception; so that whatever principle there was at common law for the main exception (for regular entries by deceased persons in general) remains unabolished by these statutes. Their clauses, therefore, which deal with such entries of persons deceased or absent, are merely declaratory and cumulative, and the remaining limitations or elements of the main exception at common law, unmentioned in the statute, remain in force as at common law. The result of these statutes, as affecting in general the existence of either of the branches of the Exception, is later dealt with (post, § 1561).

The statutes in their details may affect any of the topics of the ensuing sections, particularly in the branch dealing with parties' books. Though they have been collected here at the outset, the common-law limitations examined in the following sections must be understood to be subject to the local control of these statutes.

A. REGULAR ENTRIES IN GENERAL.

1. The Necessity Principle.

§ 1521. Death, Absence, etc., of the Entrant. On the principle of necessity (ante, § 1421), this Exception sanctions the use of statements by persons whose testimony, though not necessarily the sole evidence available on the subject, is yet the only testimony now available from that person. Hence the usual rule applies that the person must be unavailable as a witness :

1750, Hardwicke, L. C., in Lefebvre v. Worden, 2 Ves. Sr. 54 : "On proof that the declarant was dead, such entry has been read; . . . by reason of the difficulty of making of proof in cases of this kind, the Court has gone so far."

1819, Parker, C. J., in Welsh v. Barrett, 15 Mass. 380 : "The question was thought to fall within the general rule which requires the best evidence the nature of the case admits of. . . . It is analogous to the exceptions to other general rules of evidence."

1823, Story, J., in Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. 326 : "It is the best evidence the nature of the case admits of. If the party is dead, we cannot have his personal examination upon oath, and the question then arises, whether there shall be a total failure of justice, or secondary evidence shall be admitted to prove facts where ordinary prudence cannot guard us against the effects of human mortality."

As is frequent in these Hearsay exceptions, the principle of unavailability has not been fully and consistently carried out. Certain specific situations have from time to time been ruled upon as sufficient or insufficient.

(1) It is of course at least necessary that the witness should be somehow unavailable. Where the absence of the desired witness is not somehow accounted for (except when a party, under the other branch of the rule), the entries cannot be used.¹

¹ To the following, add the cases infra, notes 2-6; 1891, Terry v. Birmingham N. Bank, 93 Ala. 608, 9 So. 299 (stock-exchange books excluded); 1896, Tennessee & C. R. Co. v. Danforth, 112 id. 80, 20 So. 502 (estimates of cost

by a constructor not accounted for, excluded); 1874, Bartholomew v. Farwell, 41 Conn. 109 (requiring the entrant to be produced or shown to be unavailable; on this point overrules Bntler v. Iron Co., 1853; 22 Conn. 360, an anomalous

(2) Of the various facts sufficiently excusing from production, death, as in other Hearsay exceptions, is the common and universally conceded instance.² Insanity should be equally sufficient.³ Illness effectively preventing the attendance of the witness should suffice.⁴ Absence from the jurisdiction should admit the statements, and this is generally conceded ;⁵ the offeror might in a particular case be required to show the witness' unwillingness to return and testify, or perhaps the inability to obtain a deposition ; but this requirement is not sanctioned. The other cases of unavailability may no doubt be presented ; to all of them applies the broad language of Chief Justice Shaw :⁶ "The ground is the impossibility of obtaining the testimony, and the cause of such impossibility seems immaterial." In some of the statutes (quoted ante, § 1519), other grounds of unavailability are expressly named ; occasionally the broad principle is laid down that the statements are usable "if sufficient reason is given" for the entrant's non-production.⁷

The practical impossibility, on grounds of mercantile inconvenience, of pro-

ruled) ; 1862, Barnes v. Simmons, 27 Ill. 512 ; 1901, State Bank of Pike v. Brown, 165 N. Y. 216, 59 N. E. 1 (bank-books excluded, the makers not being accounted for) ; 1899, Baird v. Reilly, 35 C. C. A. 78, 63 U. S. App. 157, 92 Fed. 884 (hospital record by person not called, excluded). The following case should have been placed on this ground : 1884, Watrous v. Cunningham, 65 Cal. 410, 4 Pac. 408 (here the books of account of one L. S., called as a witness, were rejected, but on the absurd ground that "the entries in this book did not bind defendants" ; no authority cited).

If the entrant is present in court, he should use the entries to assist his recollection (post, §§ 1530, 1560).

² A. v. : 1895, Sands v. Hammel, 108 Ala. 624, 18 So. 489 ; Conn. : 1842, Livingston v. Tyler, 14 Conn. 498 ; 1852, Stiles v. Homer, 21 id. 511 ; 1857, Ashmead v. Colby, 26 id. 310 ; 1874, Bartholomew v. Farwell, 41 id. 109 ; Mass. : 1807, Clarke v. Magruder, 2 H. & J. 77 ; 1838, Washington Bank v. Prescott, 20 Pick. 342 ; N. M. : 1885, Price v. Garland, 3 N. M. 289, 6 Pac. 472 ; N. Y. : 1843, Sheldon v. Benham, 4 Hill 131 ; 1865, Leland v. Cameron, 31 N. Y. 121 ; 1876, Fisher v. Mavor, 67 id. 77 ; Pa. : 1808, Sterrett v. Bull, 1 Bin. 237 ; 1821, Patton's Adm'rs v. Ash, 7 S. & R. 125.

³ 1886, Bridgewater v. Roxbury, 54 Conn. 217, 6 Atl. 415 (books of a physician, who "had become mentally incompetent to testify," admitted ; "it is the same as if he were dead") ; 1825, Union Bank v. Knapp, 3 Pick. 109.

⁴ In Taylor v. E. Co., 80 Ia. 435, 46 N. W. 64 (1890), where it was a railroad-employee's duty to make an entry of certain things and the entrant was kept away by illness, the entries were rejected ; but the opinion does not indicate an apprehension of the real points involved.

⁵ 1833, North Bank v. Abbot, 13 Pick. 471 ; Shaw, C. J. : "It was satisfactorily proved, not merely that the witness was out of the jurisdiction of the Court, but that it had become impossible to procure his testimony. We cannot distinguish this, in principle, from the case of death or alienation of mind. The ground is the impossibility of obtaining the testimony, and the cause of such impossibility seems immaterial." Accord : 1837, Moore v. Andrews, 5 Port. 108 (permanent absence) ; 1884, Elliott v. Dycke, 78 Ala. 157 ; 1890, McDonald v. Carnes, 90 id. 147, 7 So. 919 ("indefinite absence from the State" suffices) ; 1893, St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Henderson, 57 Ark. 402, 21 S. W. 878 (absence from jurisdiction, sufficient ; but here no effort had been made to find him, and the entries were excluded) ; Cal. C. C. P. 1872, as amended 1901, § 1947 (regular entries made admissible, "though the person making such entries is not deceased" ; see the quotation ante, § 1519) ; 1874, Bartholomew v. Farwell, 41 Conn. 109 ; 1889, Culver v. Marks, 122 Ind. 565, 23 N. E. 1036 ; 1871, Karr v. Stivers, 34 Ia. 125 ; 1877, Poor v. Robinson, 13 Bush 290, 294 ("died or absconded" suffices) ; 1902, Cameron Lumber Co. v. Somerville, 129 Mich. 552, 89 N. W. 346 ; 1808, Sterrett v. Bull, 1 Bin. 237 ; 1823, Elms v. Cheirs, 2 McC. 349 ; 1896, Rigby v. Logan, 45 S. C. 651, 24 S. E. 56 ; 1865, Fennerstein's Champagne, 3 Wall. 149, semble ; 1883, Vinal v. Green, 21 W. Va. 313 (temporary absence does not suffice). Contra : 1793, Cooper v. Marsden, 1 Esp. 1 ; 1849, Browning v. Flanagan, 22 N. J. L. 567, 572 ; 1826, Wilbur v. Selden, 6 Cow. 163 ; 1902, McKeen v. Bank, — R. I. —, 54 Atl. 49 (account-books of a third person out of the State, excluded ; but the Court proceeds also on the ground that the entries must be against interest ; this radical misconception of the whole principle of this Exception is scarcely palliated by the circumstance that it rests on a further misunderstanding of Mr. Greenleaf's original language on this point) ; 1894, Little Rock Granite Co. v. Dallas Co., 13 C. C. A. 620, 66 Fed. 522, semble.

⁶ Quoted in note 5, supra.

⁷ Applied in Volker v. Bank, 26 Nebr. 605, 42 N. W. 732.

ducing all the clerks, salesmen, teamsters, or the like, who have contributed their knowledge in making up the items of voluminous accounts is by some Courts recognized as a sufficient ground for non-production; but this ground can better be examined in considering the use of entries resting on the combined knowledge of two or more persons (post, § 1530). The policy of these rulings, so far as it exempts from the production of all but one verifying person, on the ground of mercantile convenience, is deserving of common adoption. The general principle should recognize practical inconvenience as an excuse, subject to the judge's discretion to require the entrant's production for cross-examination where the nature of the dispute renders it desirable.

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness.

§ 1522. Reasons of the Principle. The reasons justifying the admission of this class of statements, untested as they are by cross-examination, have not been as clearly defined by the judges as in other Hearsay exceptions; but they seem fairly clear. They fall within the second general type already described (ante, § 1422), i. e. the situation is one where, even though a desire to state falsely may casually have subsisted, more powerful motives to accuracy overpower and supplant it. In the typical case of entries made systematically and habitually for the recording of a course of business dealings, experience of human nature indicates three distinct though related motives which operate to secure in the long run a sufficient degree of probable trustworthiness and make the statements fairly trustworthy:

(1) The habit and system of making such a record with regularity calls for accuracy through the interest and purpose of the entrant; and the influence of habit may be relied on, by very inertia, to prevent casual inaccuracies and to counteract the casual temptation to mis-statements. This reason has been referred to in the following passage:

1835, Tindal, C. J., in Poole v. Dicus, 1 Bing. N. C. 649: "It is easier to state what is true than what is false; the process of invention implies trouble, in such a case unnecessarily incurred."

(2) Since the entries record a regular course of business transactions, an error or mis-statement is almost certain to be detected and the result disputed by those dealing with the entrant; mis-statements cannot safely be made, if at all, except by a systematic and comprehensive plan of falsification. As a rule, this fact (if no motive of honesty obtained) would deter all but the most daring and unscrupulous from attempting the task; the ordinary man may be assumed to decline to undertake it. In the long run it operates with fair effect to secure accuracy.

(3) If, in addition to this, the entrant makes the record under a duty to an employer or other superior, there is the additional risk of censure and disgrace from the superior, in case of inaccuracies,—a motive on the whole the most powerful and most palpable of the three. This reason has been more than once mentioned:

1835, Tindal, C. J., in Poole v. Dicas, 1 Bing. N. C. 649: "The clerk had no interest to make a false entry; if he had any interest, it was rather to make a true entry; . . . a false entry would be likely to bring him into disgrace with his employer. Again, the book in which the entry was made was open to all the clerks in the office, so that an entry if false would be exposed to speedy discovery."

1819, Parker, C. J., in Welsh v. Barrett, 15 Mass. 380: "What a man has said when not under oath may not in general be given in evidence when he is dead. . . . But what a man has actually done and committed to writing, when under obligation to do the act, it being in the course of the business he has undertaken, and he being dead, there seems to be no danger in submitting to the consideration of the jury."

1865, Swayne, J., in Fennerstein's Champagne, 3 Wall. 149: "The rule rests upon the consideration that the entry, other writing, or parol declaration of the author, was within his ordinary business. . . . In all [the cases] he has full knowledge, no motive to falsehood, and there is the strongest improbability of untruth. Safer sanctions rarely surround the testimony of a witness examined under oath."

This last motive was most highly thought of in the earlier stages of the exception's history, and in England it has come to be regarded as indispensable.

From these general motives and reasons, forming the policy on which the principle rests, are developed certain specific requirements and limitations.

§ 1523. Regular Course of Business; (1) Business or Occupation. The first general requirement is that the entry must have been made in the regular course of business. The judicial phrasings of this requirement vary in terms.¹

The entry must have been, therefore, in the way of business. This may be defined to mean a course of transactions performed in one's habitual relations with others and as a natural part of one's mode of obtaining a livelihood. It would probably exclude, for instance, a diary of doings kept merely for one's personal satisfaction; but it would not exclude any regular record that was helpful, though not essential nor usual in the same occupation as followed by others.² There is, therefore, no special limitation as to the nature of the occupation.³ Since it is thus not essential that the occupation should be a occupation"); 1875, State v. Phair, 48 Vt. 378 (Royce, J., "made by him in the regular course of business and it was his business to make them").

¹ 1832, Doe v. Turford, 3 B. & Ad. 890 (Parke, J., and Taunton, J.: "in the ordinary course of business"); 1835, Poole v. Dicas, 1 Bing. N. C. 649 (Tindal, C. J., "made in the usual course and routine of business"); 1860, Rawlins v. Rickards, 28 Beav. 373 (Romilly, M. R., admitting a solicitor's books: "in the exercise of his business and duty, . . . and in the regular course of his business"); 1823, Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. 326 (Story, J., of a notary's book of protests: ". . . an employment in which he was usually engaged; . . . memorandums in the ordinary discharge of their duty and employment; . . . memorandums, made by a person in the ordinary course of his business, of acts which his duty in such business requires him to do for others"); 1844, Watts v. Howard, 7 Metc. 481 (Shaw, C. J.: "in the usual and ordinary course of their business, in relation to acts coming within the scope of their authority and duty"); 1848, Dow v. Sawyer, 29 Me. 119 ("as he had occasion to make them in the course of his business"); 1865, Kennedy v. Doyle, 10 All. 161 ("in the ordinary course of his business

² 1876, Fisher v. Mayor, 67 N. Y. 77 (Andrews, J.: "It is sufficient if the entry was the natural concomitant of the transaction to which it relates, and usually accompanies it").

³ The following have been admitted: 1816, Champneys v. Peck, 1 Stark. 326 (memorandum of delivery of copy of a bill by a clerk who usually made such a memorandum upon the copy kept); 1835, R. v. Cope, 7 C. & P. 726 (indorsement of service on an order of the aldermen, the writer's duty being to serve orders and indorse them when served); 1886, Bridgewater v. Roxbury, 54 Conn. 217, 6 Atl. 415 (physician's entries of services rendered); 1853, Sasscar v. Farmers' Bank, 4 Md. 418 (notary's entries); 1858, Perkins v. Augusta Co., 10 Gray, 324 (certificate of a marine inspector as to a vessel's condition); 1875, De Armond v. Neasmith, 32 Mich. 233 (weather-record at an insane asylum); 1894, Hart v. Walker, 100 Mich. 406, 410, 59 N. W.

mercantile or industrial one, nor even that it should be a secular one, it follows that a register of marriages or the like, kept by a priest or minister, is admissible.⁴ The admission of a non-official marriage-register, however, is not recognized in England, partly because of another principle (post, § 1524), nor in some of the American courts; and such books are therefore admissible in those courts so far only as they are made under a legal duty, i. e. on the principle of Official Statements.⁵ A ship's log-book is admissible under the present exception; but as it is in some jurisdictions required by statute to be kept, it is thus also admissible as an Official Statement.⁶

§ 1524. Same: English Rule; Duty to a Third Person. The further limitation exists in England and Canada that there should have been a duty to a third person, in the course of which the report or record was made.¹ A suggestion of this appears in the language of the early American cases;² but, though it did not with us survive, it was in England later emphasized and insisted upon. Its requirements are strict. First, there must have been a duty to do the very thing recorded.³ Secondly, there must have been a duty to record or otherwise report the very thing.⁴ Thirdly, the duty must have been to record or otherwise report it at the time.⁵ This limitation is a reminiscence of the early history (ante, § 1517), and is needlessly strict.

§ 1525. Same: (2) Regularity. The entry offered must of course be a part of a system of entries, not a casual or isolated one. This is necessarily in-

174 (weather-records kept at an asylum, received); 1899, Roberts v. Rice, 69 N. H. 472, 45 Atl. 237 (insurance-agent's register of policies); 1822, Halliday v. Martinet, 20 John. 172 (notary's record of protests); 1831, Nichols v. Goldsmith, 7 Wend. 161 (cashier's notice of non-payment of note); 1865, Leland v. Cameron, 31 N. Y. 121 (entry in a lawyer's record-book of the proceedings in a cause); 1874, Livingston v. Arnoux, 56 id. 518 (receipt by a sheriff for money paid by a judgment-debtor in redemption of land sold on execution); 1876, Fisher v. Mayor, 67 id. 77 (attorney's books); 1895, Dickens v. Winter, 169 Pa. 126, 32 Atl. 292 (time-book of teaming done).

For a notary's entries, see further post, §§ 1525, 1675.

For prices current, see post, § 1704.

For corporation-books, see ante, § 1074.

For surveyors' notes, see further post, § 1524, 1566, 1665.

⁴ 1865, Gray, J., in Kennedy v. Doyle, 10 All. 161 ("An entry made in the performance of a religious duty is certainly of no less value than one made by a clerk, messenger, or notary, an attorney or solicitor, or a physician, in the course of his secular occupation").

⁵ The cases are collected post, § 1644.

⁶ The cases are collected post, § 1641.

¹ England: 1831, Chambers v. Bernasconi, 1 C. & J. 451; on app. 1 C. M. & R. 347; 1843, R. v. Worth, 4 Q. B. 132 (rejecting a farmer's book of his farm-laborers' work done, because not "made in the discharge of some duty for which he is responsible"; "actually in the discharge of a duty to another person"); 1887, Lyell v. Kennedy, 35 W. R. 725; Canada: 1877, O'Connor v. Dunn, 2 Ont. App. 247 (deceased surveyor's notes made as a part of his regular entries, not admitted on the facts); 1883, Canada C. R. Co. v. McLaren, 8 id. 564 (engineer's entry in a repairs-book, made in the course of duty after a fire; opinions inconclusive).

² E. g. Story, J., in Nichols v. Webb, quoted ante, § 1523.

³ 1867, Smith v. Blakey, L. R. 2 Q. B. 332 (Blackburn, J.: "The duty must be to do the very thing to which the entry relates, and then to make a report or record of it"); 1879, Polini v. Gray, L. R. 12 Ch. D. 431; 1887, Lyell v. Kennedy, supra, per Bowen, L. J.; 1885, McGregor v. Keiller, 9 Ont. 677 (deceased surveyor's field notes, not made in execution of a specific duty, excluded).

⁴ 1831, Chambers v. Bernasconi, supra (rejecting a deputy's return of the place of arrest, because "it may be the duty of the sheriff's officer to make a return to the sheriff that he has made the arrest, but it is not a necessary part of that duty that he should state the particular place of the arrest"; "the statement of other circumstances, however naturally they may be thought to find a place in the narrative, is no proof of those circumstances"); 1867, Smith v. Blakey, supra; 1879, Polini v. Gray, L. R. 12 Ch. D. 420, 426, 431; 1879, Trotter v. McLean, L. R. 13 id. 579; 1879, Massey v. Allen, ib. 558; 1887, Lyell v. Kennedy, supra.

⁵ 1867, Smith v. Blakey, supra; 1879, Polini v. Gray, supra.

volved in the reasons (ante, § 1522) on which the rule is founded. Thus, a single entry in a book, made after it has been closed or put away, or without using it again, or a memorandum casually made, would not answer this requirement.¹ This regularity of the record may be evidenced by inspection of the book; and the fulfilment of this requirement is for the Court to pass upon in each case.²

§ 1526. Contemporaneous with the Transaction. The entry should have been made at or near the time of the transaction recorded,¹ — not merely because this is necessary in order to assure a fairly accurate recollection of the matter, but because any trustworthy habit of making regular business records will ordinarily involve the making of the record contemporaneously. The rule fixes no precise time; each case must depend on its own circumstances.

§ 1527. No Motive to Misrepresent. It is often added that there must have been no motive to misrepresent.¹ This does not mean that the offeror must show an absence of all such motives; but merely that if the existence of a fairly positive counter-motive to misrepresent is made to appear in a particular instance the entry would be excluded. This limitation is a fair one, provided it be not interpreted with over-strictness. The exclusion of the notorious Fleet registers of marriage (post, § 1642) illustrates the kind of circumstances that call for the application of this requirement.

§ 1528. Written or Oral Statement. That the statement admissible under the present exception must be a written statement has been generally assumed in this country in the judicial phrasings of the rule.¹ In England, however, it seems to be settled that an oral statement is equally admissible.² Since in that jurisdiction the third motive of trustworthiness (ante, § 1522) is regarded as most important, and the statement must be made under a duty to a third person (ante, § 1524), it may be conceded that an oral statement

¹ 1816, Dickson v. Lodge, 1 Stark. 226 (bill of lading signed by a captain, not received to show the shipping of goods for the plaintiff); 1865, Barton v. Dundas, 24 U. C. Q. B. 275 (excluding a notice sent in unusual course); 1880, Lilly v. Larkin, 66 Ala. 115 (admitting an attorney's indorsement to a note among an administrator's papers, stating the date of the account-settlement); 1895, Culver v. R. Co., 108 id. 330, 18 So. 827 (written report on a railroad accident by an employee to his employer, the maker not being accounted for, excluded); 1875, Kibbe v. Bancroft, 77 Ill. 19 (entry made in an account-book not used for ten years, and laid aside in the meantime, excluded); 1874, Walker v. Curtis, 116 Mass. 101 (memoranda by a surveyor in the course of his employment on a particular enterprise, admitted); 1901, Sexton v. Perrigo, 126 Mich. 542, 85 N. W. 1096 (under Comp. L. § 2635, a deceased notary's certificate of protest is not admissible as a regular entry, when the fact of notice is denied by affidavit); 1897, Barley v. Byrd, 95 Va. 316, 28 S. E. 329 (memorandum by Bushrod Washington, as agent for James Wilson, receipting for the possession of a deed; excluded, because not found in a book of "entries of the daily business regularly made"); 1901, Kelley v. Crawford, 112 Wis. 368, 88 N. W. 296 (Stats. § 4189 applied, to exclude entries not shown to be in the usual course of business, etc.).

For stenographic reports of testimony, see post, § 1669.

² 1848, Dow v. Sawyer, 29 Me. 119.

¹ 1816, Champneys v. Peck, 1 Stark. 326; 1832, Doe v. Turford, 3 B. & Ad. 890. Compare the citations post, § 1550, under the other branch of the exception; 1878, Ray v. Castle, 79 N. C. 580.

¹ 1835, Poole v. Dicas, 1 Bing. N. C. 649; 1839, Malone v. L'Estrange, 2 Ir. Eq. 16; 1879, Polini v. Gray, L. R. 12 Ch. D. 430, per Brett, L. J.; 1854, Lord v. Moore, 37 Me. 220; 1865, Kennedy v. Doyle, 10 All. 161; 1890, Lassone v. R. Co., 66 N. H. 345, 354, 24 Atl. 902.

¹ But see the passage from Swayne, J., in Fennerstein's Champagne, ante, § 1522.

² 1844, Lord Campbell, in Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Cl. & F. 113 ("a declaration by word of mouth or by writing made in the course of the business"); 1873, R. v. Buckley, 13 Cox Cr. 293 (oral report of a constable).

would be scarcely inferior to a written one in trustworthiness. In this country, however, where that limitation does not obtain, the trustworthiness of an oral statement would seem to be far inferior to that of a written one, especially as affected by the second reason for the rule (ante, § 1522). Nevertheless, in the actual conduct of business by subordinates in mercantile or industrial houses (practically the only class of persons by whom oral reports are regularly made), the element of duty (as required in England) does in fact exist; and where it does exist, the case seems a proper one for the adoption of the broader English rule admitting oral statements. Apart from the above considerations, there is no reason for distinguishing between oral and written statements to the disadvantage of the former; no such distinction is made in most of the other Exceptions. In those Courts admitting entries based on joint knowledge (post, § 1530) there is in effect an acceptance of oral reports.

3. Testimonial Qualifications, and Other Independent Rules of Evidence.

§ 1530. Personal Knowledge of Entrant; Entries by Bookkeeper, etc., on report of Salesman, Teamster, etc. (1) There can be no doubt that the general principle of testimonial evidence (ante, § 657) should apply here as elsewhere, namely, that the person whose statement is received as testimony should speak from personal observation or knowledge. This principle has often been invoked in excluding entries made by a person who had no personal knowledge of the supposed facts recorded.¹

(2) But does this principle necessarily exclude all entries made by persons not having personal knowledge of the facts entered? May not this lack of personal knowledge on the part of the entrant be supplemented by the personal knowledge of some other person whose knowledge is in fact represented in the entry? In other words, if the element of personal knowledge can somehow be adequately supplied by a third person, it is material that the entrant himself did not have this personal knowledge? In order to work out this problem, it is necessary to keep in mind the results already established in connection with the doctrine about memoranda of past recollection (ante, § 751). It was there noticed that a memorandum whose correctness was established by composite testimony could be used; for example, if S has made a written memorandum of a transaction done by him, and has

¹ 1873, Avery's Ex'rs v. Avery, 49 Ala. 195. Peters, J.: "Such a book must contain the registration of some fact . . . by one who would at the time have been a competent witness to the fact which he registered." Accord: 1842, Batre v. Simpson, 4 Ala. 312; 1880, Davis v. Tarver, 65 id. 102 (entries by a clerk of an alleged lunatic were not admitted to show that the goods received were necessities and were the consideration of a note); 1890, McDonald v. Carnes, 90 id. 148, 7 So. 919 ("all matters within the knowledge of the person making the entries"); 1900, Walling v. Morgan Co., 126 id. 326, 28 So. 433 (bank-book containing an account with W., not admitted on the mere testimony of a cashier who did not keep it or receive or pay the money); 1842, Livingston v. Tyler, 14 Conn. 498; 1854, Lord v. Moore, 37 Me. 220; 1873, Chaffee v. U. S., 18 Wall. 542 (entries excluded of a collector of freight noting arrivals of whiskey, but made merely on a perusal of the B. L. offered by the ship-captain, who themselves had no personal knowledge that the freight had even been shipped); 1876, Connecticut M. L. I. Co. v. Schwenk, 94 U. S. 598 (entry by a lodge secretary of the age of a member, in a minute-book of an Odd Fellows' Lodge, excluded).

given the writing to B, who has copied it and destroyed the original, then if S swears the original to have been accurately made, and if B swears the copy to be correct, the copy produced is thus by their joint testimony rendered an accurate record of the transaction, although B alone has no personal knowledge of the transaction and although S alone does not know the copy to be correct. Furthermore, it was seen to be the generally and properly accepted extension of that doctrine that the same result ensues where S's original statement to B was an oral report, not a written memorandum, as in the typical case of a salesman and a bookkeeper; because in this case S swears that his report of the transaction to B was an accurate statement of what he did, and B swears that his entry was a correct record of what B reported to him; B's written entry thus being in truth a copy of S's report, as effectually as it would have been a copy of a memorandum. Now this doctrine suffices only for cases where both S and B are produced, and by their joint testimony on the stand verify the writing as a memorandum of past recollection (under § 751, ante). If either S or B does not come to the stand, then the offer contains an element of hearsay assertion, and therefore the writing can be admissible, if at all, only under the present Exception. Is there any fatal objection in the way of this? By no means. There are three possible situations:

(1) Suppose B, the entrant, to be deceased; here, if S, the actor in the transaction, swears to the correctness of his original memorandum or oral report, the element of personal knowledge is sufficiently supplied; and the entry of B is then admissible if it was made in the regular course of business.

(2) Suppose S, the transactor, to be deceased, but B, the entrant, to swear to the entry as correctly representing B's memorandum or oral report; here B's entry, if based on a memorandum, would be sufficient, as supplying the element of S's personal knowledge, if made in the regular course of business; its production being impossible by destruction, and S being unavailable by decease. If S's statement were an oral report (as often in the case of salesmen, teamsters, foremen, tallymen, and the like), it would be none the less made in the regular course of business; but here, although, as already seen (ante, § 1528), the Exception does not ordinarily in the United States cover oral statements, nevertheless the reasons of the Exception (ante, § 1522) apply to admit it. In the first place, it is made in the course of a duty to a third person, which in England suffices to admit oral statements; secondly, the immediate reduction to writing by B removes in the main the objections which might otherwise exist to admitting merely oral statements, and brings into play with practically full effect the two reasons already mentioned (ante, § 1522) as obtaining for written entries. In short, there is every reason for taking as admissible these oral reports of a deceased person in the regular course of business and duty, supplying the element of personal knowledge, and correctly recorded in the entry sworn to by B.

(3) Suppose both B and S, entrant and transactor, to be deceased; here there is presented merely the first and the second cases combined ; if we concede admissibility for those two cases, it must be conceded for this also.

One more consideration remains to be noted. The supposition in the above cases was that B or S or both were deceased. But suppose, instead, that S, the salesman, teamster, or the like, is otherwise unavailable ; is the result to be any different ? It need not be. In the language of Chief Justice Shaw, already quoted (ante, § 1521) : "The ground is the impossibility of obtaining the testimony, and the cause of such impossibility seems immaterial." Now the ordinary conditions of mercantile and industrial life in some offices do in fact constantly present just such a case of practical impossibility. Suppose an offer of books representing transactions during several months in a large establishment. In the first place, the employees have in many cases changed and the former ones cannot be found ; in the next place, it cannot always be ascertained accurately which employee was concerned in each one of the transactions represented by the hundreds of entries ; in the third place, even if they could be ascertained, the production of the scores of employees, to attend court and identify in tedious succession the detailed items of transactions would interrupt and derange the work of the establishment, and the evidence would be obtained at a cost practically prohibitory ; and finally, the memory of such persons, when summoned, would usually afford little real aid. If unavailability or impossibility is the general principle that controls (ante, § 1521), is not this a real case of unavailability ? Having regard to the facts of mercantile and industrial life, it cannot be doubted that it is. In such a case, it should be sufficient if the books were verified on the stand by a supervising officer who knew them to be the books of regular entries kept in that establishment, and the production on the stand of a regiment of bookkeepers, salesmen, shipping-clerks, teamsters, foremen, or other subordinate employees, should be dispensed with. No doubt much should be left to the discretion of the trial Court ; production may be required for cross-examination, where the nature of the controversy seems to require it. But the important thing is to realize that upon principle there is no objection to regarding this situation as rendering in a given case the production of all the persons practically as impossible as in the case of death.

The conclusion is, then, that where an entry is made by one person in the regular course of business, recording an oral or written report, made to him by one or more other persons in the regular course of business, of a transaction lying in the personal knowledge of the latter, there is no objection to receiving that entry under the present Exception, provided the practical inconvenience of producing on the stand the numerous persons thus concerned would in the particular case outweigh the probable utility of doing so. Why should not this conclusion be accepted by the courts ? Such entries are dealt with in that way in the most important undertakings of mercantile and industrial life. They are the ultimate basis of calculation, investment, and general confidence in every business enterprise ; nor does the practical impossibility of obtaining constantly and permanently the verification of every employee affect the trust that is given to such books. It would seem that expedients which the entire commercial world recognizes as safe could be sanctioned, and not discredited, by Courts of justice. When it is a mere question of whether provisional confidence can be placed in a certain class of statements, there cannot profitably and sensibly be one rule for the business world and another for the court-room. The merchant and the manufacturer must not be turned away remediless because methods in which the entire community places a just confidence are a little difficult to reconcile with technical judicial scruples on the part of the same persons who as attorneys have already employed and relied upon the same methods. In short, Courts must here cease to be pedantic and endeavor to be practical.

In the following judicial passages are expounded some of the reasons that have led Courts to sanction the principles here involved :

1853, Lumpkin, J., in Fielder v. Collier, 13 Ga. 499: "Shall the plaintiffs be compelled to go behind the books thus verified by the clerks who kept them, and resort to each of the sub-agents who participated in the transaction and sale of this produce? Are not the entries thus made in the usual course of the business of this extensive trading establishment, and as a part of the proper employment of the witnesses who prove them, not only the best, but the only reliable evidence which it is practicable to secure? We have no hesitation in holding that propriety, justice, and convenience require it to be admitted. The weighers, wharfingers, and numerous subordinates who handled this cotton kept no books. They report to the clerks who keep the books of the concern, and their functions are performed. It is not reasonable to suppose that they can remember the multitude of transactions thus occurring every day. . . . To impose a different rule upon these establishments, whether at home or abroad, and to require them at all times, within the statutory period of limitations, to be prepared with original aliunde evidence to prove the terms of sale of all the property consigned to them, each item of expense, etc., would trammel commerce and amount to a denial of justice."

1895, Thayer, J., in Nelson v. Bank, 16 C. C. A. 425, 69 Fed. 805 (books of camp-scalers; the scalers measured the logs and entered the amounts on cards; each day these cards were copied into the scale-book; inspectors periodically verified them by measuring a portion of the logs sufficient to test the book's accuracy; the scale-book was sent to the log-owner, and payment made by him on the faith of it to the log-cutters; the inspectors testified to the book's correctness; the opinion quotes from the Court below): "'It is said that the camp-scalers should have been hunted up and their testimony introduced. . . . When the scalers made the count and measurement, two records thereof were made, — one in the memory of the scaler, the other in the scale-book. Which is now the best evidence? Years have elapsed. The entries on the scale-book remain unchanged; they are now just what they were when originally made. Can the same be said of the record made upon the memory of the scalers? If the scalers had been produced and had testified that . . . as they now remembered it the number and quantity were so and so, but upon the production of the scale-books they showed a different quantity and measurement, which should control? . . . It cannot be maintained that there is more reliable evidence than the scale-book.' For the reasons so well stated by the trial judge, we entertain no doubt that the scale-books in question were properly received in evidence. They appear to have been kept under conditions that were calculated to prevent mistakes therein, and to ensure a high degree of accuracy. They were also identified by witnesses who were familiar with their contents, and whose special duty it was to see that they were properly and accurately kept."

1902, Wilkes, J., in Continental National Bank v. First National Bank, 108 Tenn. 374, 68 S. W. 497 (holding a bank's books sufficiently verified by the cashier, without calling the bookkeeper): "We think it not necessary that the bookkeeper who made the entries should be examined as to their correctness. At most he could only testify that the entries made by him are true entries of transactions reported to him by others. In other words, he could only testify that he wrote down what others told him. The Court knows, as a matter of common information, that there are many persons in the employ of banks, and each has his different department, and each transaction passes through the hands of several — it may be, of many — persons. We take a deposit, for instance. It goes into the hands of the receiving teller, thence into the hands of a journal clerk, thence to the individual bookkeeper, or such other officials as perform the functions of these officers. When it reaches the hands of the bookkeeper, who makes the final entry, which stands as the true statement between the bank and depositor, it has gone through the hands of a dozen parties, perhaps; and the last party only records what comes to him through so many hands, and knows nothing, it may be, of the actual transaction. It would seem that the cashier, whose function it is to overlook all transactions at the counter and over the books, and test each transaction through all its stages, would be the person most competent to produce the books and vouch for their accuracy."

The rulings upon the subject are, as may be imagined, not harmonious.

- (a) There are, first, a number of decisions accepting with practical completeness the conclusion above reached, i. e. in given cases admitting verified regular entries without requiring the salesman, time-keeper, or other original observer having personal knowledge, to be produced or accounted for.²
- (b) There are rulings admitting verified regular entries after a showing that the original observer was deceased; possibly absence from the jurisdiction, insanity, or the like, would equally have sufficed.³
- (c) There are rulings

² 1892, U. S. v. Cross, 20 D. C. 379 (the marshal's office kept a record of measurements of convicted persons, the clerk writing down the measurement as called out by the subordinate taking it; the clerk C. alone was called; Cox, J.: "It was said that it was hearsay on the part of Carroll, because he did not take the measurement. . . . In a complicated transaction in which two persons participate, we do not think it is essential that each one should have personal knowledge of all the steps in the transaction. For example, a merchant in his store selling goods calls out the price and the character of his goods, and his clerk writes them down; that is in the regular course of business; and it would not be necessary that the clerk should follow the merchant around and have a personal knowledge of all that passed between him and his customer"); 1853, Fielder v. Collier, 13 Ga. 496, 499 (see quotation supra); 1880, Schaefer v. R. Co., 66 id. 39, 43 (witness making records of receipts and shipments of cotton by his subordinates in the office; admitted, without accounting for the others, on the ground of public convenience; following Fielder v. Collier); 1896, Chisholm v. Machine Co., 160 Ill. 101, 43 N. E. 796 (workmen made out time-slips of work done, foremen examined and checked them, and bookkeepers entered them in time-books, errors being checked and corrected throughout; the bookkeepers testified to the correctness of the books, and the foremen the slips, but not the workmen; the books were held admissible); 1893, Donovan v. R. Co., 158 Mass. 450, 452, 33 N. E. 583 (train-sheet, made up by combined reports of operators at various stations, and showing whereabouts of trains; received on verification by the collector, without accounting for operators); 1895, Nelson v. Bank, 16 C. C. A. 425, 69 Fed. 805 (see quotation supra); 1898, Northern P. R. Co. v. Keyes, C. C., 91 Fed. 47 (tables of railroad business prepared under direction of general officers by 40 or 50 clerks; officers called, but clerks not called, though available and willing to testify; admitted; good opinion); 1902, Continental Nat'l Bank v. First Nat'l Bank, 108 Tenn. 374, 68 S. W. 497 (bank account-books held to be sufficiently verified by the cashier, without calling the bookkeeper; see quotation supra); 1903, United States v. Venable C. Co., C. C., 124 Fed. 267 (a constructing engineer's tables of work and materials, based chiefly on the regular written reports of numerous subordinates, admitted, without calling the latter); 1897, Dohmen Co. v. Ins. Co., 96 Wis. 38, 71 N. W. 69 (to show the amount of goods on hand, a set of books properly verified by the bookkeeper and the manager of the business, held admissible, though neither has actual knowledge of the specific transactions; the opinion specifies in full certain conditions, and is worth careful reading); Wis. Stats. 1898, § 4189 (quoted ante, § 1519).

³ 1897, Stanley v. Wilkerson, 63 Ark. 556, 39 S. W. 1043 (salesmen's books were burned and the salesmen deceased; journal and ledger copies, verified by the bookkeepers, were admitted); 1902, Meyer v. Brown, 130 Mich. 449, 90 N. W. 285 (record of car-weights, testified to

excluding such entries because the original observer was in no way accounted for, or declaring that he must be produced, without deciding what excuse, if any, for non-production would suffice.⁴ (d) Finally, a few rulings inexorably exclude such entries even where the original observer is accounted for as absent from the jurisdiction, or the like, i. e. declining to excuse his non-production on such grounds, and thus inconsistent with the general principle (ante, § 1521).⁵

§ 1531. Form or Language of the Entry; Impeaching the Entrant's Credit. Apart from the general rule, already dealt with (ante, § 1528), that the statement must be in writing, there is no limitation as to the mode of written expression. Any mark or sign that is interpretable as having a definite meaning will suffice.¹ The absence of an entry, where an entry would naturally have been made if a transaction had occurred, should ordinarily be equivalent to an assertion that no such transaction occurred, and therefore should be admissible in evidence for that purpose;² the same question arises for other kinds of evidence (post, §§ 1556, 1639).

by the weighmaster, admitted without calling the weigher, the original card being lost and the weigher's identity impossible to ascertain); 1823, McNeill v. Elam, Peck Tenn. 268 (deceased notary made protests and notices, and his daughter entered them under his instructions; admitted; whether the daughter was called does not appear); 1896, American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 18 C. C. A. 644, 72 Fed. 470 (a ledger of receipts and payments kept by the bookkeeper of a bank, from checks and deposit-tags handed him by the teller, and representing the moneys received and paid out by the teller; the teller being dead, the bookkeeper verified his entries, which were received to show the amounts received and paid out by the teller).

⁴ 1869, Leslie v. Hanson, 1 Han. N. Br. 263 (book made from numbers marked by different persons on logs sawn, not admitted, in the absence of satisfactory testimony from all the persons who had measured and marked the logs); 1899, Butler v. Estrella R. V. Co., 124 Cal. 239, 56 Pac. 1040 (salesbooks kept by witness from report of manager not called, excluded); 1902, Whitley Grocery Co. v. Roach, 115 Ga. 918, 42 S. E. 282 (an inventory made by three persons, one or two examining the articles and one or two entering the items, but only two of the three testifying, held not admissible); 1902, Meadows v. Frost, ib. 1002, 42 S. E. 390 (books kept by one who merely copied slips handed to her by another person not called, held inadmissible); 1898, Pennsylvania Co. v. McCaffrey, 173 Ill. 169, 50 N. E. 713 (book kept by a desk-sergeant of police made from reports of accidents by other policemen based on hearsay, excluded; probably correctly, because the policemen themselves had not personal knowledge); 1857, White v. Wilkinson, 12 La. An. 360 (bookkeeper and salesman; apparently oral reports by the latter); 1897, Swan v. Thurman, 112 Mich. 416, 70 N. W. 1023 (books testified to by a bookkeeper, who made the entries upon the salesman's reports; excluded, as not founded upon personal know-edge); 1901, Carlton v. Carey, 83 Minn. 232, 86 N. W. 85 (book made up by A on information furnished by memoranda from a workman B, excluded, as not based on personal knowledge; but here neither A nor B was called or shown to be unavailable); 1903, Price v. Standard L. & A. Ins. Co., — id. —, 95 N. W. 1118 (hospital register, with entries by a superintendent based on reports of a physician, but verified by the former only, without calling the latter, excluded); 1896, New Jersey Zinc & I. Co. v. L. Z. & I. Co., 59 N. J. L. 189, 35 Atl. 915 (bookkeeper's entries of deliveries of which he knew nothing, excluded); 1886, Mayor of New York v. R. Co., 102 N. Y. 572, 7 N. E. 905 (sub-foreman's oral reports to foreman); 1894, The Norma, 15 C. C. A. 553, 68 Fed. 509 (foreman and bookkeeper); 1894, Tingley v. Land Co., 9 Wash. 34, 42, 36 Pac. 1098 (entries in book made by witness from memoranda partly by scalers of logs, excluded).

⁵ 1854, Kent v. Garvin, 1 Gray 150 (drayman orally reporting to clerk, the former being in California); 1894, Chicago Lumberine Co. v. Hewitt, 12 C. C. A. 129, 64 Fed. 314 (tallies of logs reported in writing by F., copied by M.; F. had disappeared, through what the Court considered the negligence of the party offering the books).

For the same question arising for parties' books, see post, § 1555; the cases are not usually discriminated, and indeed involve the same principle.

¹ 1833, North Bank v. Abbot, 13 Pick. 471. Compare the same principle applied to parties' books, post, § 1556.

² 1886, Bridgewater v. Roxbury, 54 Conn. 217, 6 Atl. 415 (said obiter); 1896, State v. McCormick, 57 Kan. 440, 46 Pac. 777 (a book of depositors, admitted to show that J. was not a depositor); 1901, Bastrop State Bank v. Levy, 106 La. 586, 31 So. 164 (bank's deposit-entries, held evidence that no other sums than there recorded had been received by it). Contra: 1903, Vandyke v. R. Co., — Ky. —, 71 S. W.

The rules for impeaching the credit of the entrant would presumably be those accepted for parties' books (post, § 1557).

§ 1532. Production of Original Book. The general rule requiring the production of the original of a writing (ante, § 1179), applies no less to entries offered under this Exception than to other writings;¹ but the rule is of course satisfied where the original is accounted for as lost or otherwise unavailable.² As between different kinds of account-books, — a ledger, a journal, and the like —, the question will arise which of them is to be considered as the original; and upon this point the rules developed for parties' books (post, § 1558) would presumably be regarded as here applicable.

§ 1533. Opinion Rule. The Opinion rule (post, § 1917) doubtless applies in theory to this class of testimonial evidence as to others. But as the entrant is not before the Court, being deceased or otherwise unavailable, the rule will usually not properly exclude the entry, since (as already noted for Dying Declarations, ante, § 1447, there is no opportunity by questions to obtain from the witness the data of bare facts separated from his inference or opinion thereon. To apply the much misused Opinion rule in this connection can hardly ever be justified.¹

B. PARTIES' ACCOUNT-BOOKS.

§ 1536. In General. The history (ante, § 1518) of that branch of the Exception which admits parties' account-books or shop-books gave to it a development and a series of precedents distinct from that of the general Exception. Nevertheless, the principles upon which this branch was developed in the Courts of the United States show equally a recognition of the two traditional features of hearsay exceptions in general, namely, the Necessity principle (ante, 1431), and the Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness (ante, § 1422). The application of the principle of necessity lay in this, that since a party was disqualified as a witness for himself, and since in certain classes of transactions he was thus totally without evidence obtainable from others, certain past statements of his must be admitted by very necessity. Moreover, his own shop-books were regarded as being more or less trustworthy, for reasons analogous to those already examined (ante, § 1522). Thus, the principle of necessity and the principle of a circumstantial guarantee were both recognized; and the case stood on the ordinary footing of an exception to the Hearsay rule, without reference to other specific exceptions. When parties were made competent, on their own behalf, a main reason —

441 ("usually admitted only as affirmative evidence"); 1860, Sanborn v. Ins. Co., 16 Gray 448, 452, 455 (absence of an entry in a risk-book regularly kept, not received to show that the contract was not made).

¹ 1859, Churchill v. Fulliam, 8 Ia. 45; 1879, Peck v. Parchen, 52 id. 46, 54, 2 N. W. 597; 1826, Herring v. Levy, 4 Mart. n. s. 386.

² 1831, Holmes v. Marden, 12 Pick. 171 (original burned); 1896, Rigby v. Logan, 45

S. C. 651, 24 S. E. 56 (ledger admitted, the original entry being burned); 1873, Burton v. Driggs, 20 Wall. 135 (original out of the jurisdiction).

Consult the rules and citations ante, §§ 1192-1230.

¹ 1888, Bradford v. S. S. Co., 147 Mass. 57, 16 N. E. 719 (report of an appraiser, made in the regular course of employment, stating the amount of damage, excluded).

the necessity — disappeared ; but the form of the rule was established before this change was made ; and its limitations can therefore be understood only by keeping in mind that the original attitude of the Courts in establishing it was precisely analogous to their attitude towards other Hearsay exceptions.

It may be noted here that in a few jurisdictions this branch of the Exception was never judicially recognized,¹ apart from modern statutes.

1. The Necessity Principle.

§ 1537. Nature of the Necessity. The foundation of the admission of parties' shop-books or account-books in the United States was a necessity, resting in two circumstances ; first, the disqualification of the party to take the stand as a witness, and, secondly, the conditions of mercantile and industrial life in the early days, which left the party generally without other evidence than his own statements in the books. This appears in the language of the judges in all the jurisdictions and epochs ; and the specific rules of limitation grew directly out of this living principle :

1808, Tilghman, C. J., in Starrett v. Bull, 1 Binn. 237 : "In consideration of the mode of doing business in the infancy of the country, when many people kept their own books, it has been permitted from the necessity of the case to offer these books in evidence. . . . No such necessity exists when the fact is that clerks have been employed and the entries made by them."

1810, Swift, C. J., Conn., Evidence, 81 : "This provision of the statute is grounded on the necessity of the thing ; for in many instances it would be very difficult to obtain other or better proof."

1816, Parker, C. J., in Faxon v. Hollis, 13 Mass. 427 : "[The exception] is necessary for the security of tradesmen and small dealers, who are generally unable to support clerks on whose testimony they might establish their claims."

1838, Hitchcock, J., in Cram v. Spear, 8 Hamm. 497 : "The mischief to be remedied was the extreme difficulty, and in many cases the utter impossibility of proving the quantity, quality, or delivery of articles passing from one person to another upon credit and which are ordinarily charged upon book. The merchant does not always keep a clerk by whom this proof could be made ; the farmer or mechanic rarely if ever. Hence the necessity of the statute."

1882, Devens, J., in Pratt v. White, 132 Mass. 477 : "It has been sanctioned as an exception to the general rule of law, as it formerly existed, that a party should not be a witness in his own cause, and from supposed necessity in order to prevent a failure of justice, that he shall be allowed to produce the record of his daily transactions, to many of which, on account of their variety and minuteness, it cannot be expected there will be witnesses."

1892, Andrews, J., in Smith v. Rentz, 131 N. Y. 169, 30 N. E. 54 : "It was founded upon a supposed necessity, and was intended for small traders who kept no clerks."¹

What, then, were the specific rules of limitation growing out of this principle of necessity ?

¹ Ala. : 1842, Nolley v. Holmes, 3 Ala. 642 ; 1845, Grant v. Cole, 8 id. 521 ; 1846, Turnipseed v. Goodwin, 9 id. 378 ; 1873, Avery's Ex'rs v. Avery, 49 id. 195 ; Fla. : 1852, Higgs v. Shehee, 4 Fla. 385 ; Ind. : 1836, De Camp v. Vandegriff, 4 Blackf. 272 ; La. : 1844, Martinstein v. Creditors, 8 Rob. 8 ; Md. : 1833, Owings v. Low, 5

G. & J. 142 ; Mo. : 1855, Hissrick v. McPherson, 20 Mo. 310.

¹ Accord : 1860, Landis v. Turner, 14 Cal. 575 ; 1825, Beach v. Mills, 5 Conn. 496 ; 1832, Terrill v. Beecher, 9 id. 348 ; 1833, Dunn v. Whitney, 10 Me. 14 ; 1852, Cole v. Dial, 8 Tex. 349.

§ 1538. Not admissible where a Clerk was Kept. The party must have been his own bookkeeper;¹ moreover he must have had no clerk helping him;² for if he had, the clerk could be called if living, or, if deceased, his book-entry could be used.

This limitation has been enforced even in recent times. But the tendency has been to lose sight of it,—a result partly due to the legislation on the subject (ante, § 1519), which in many jurisdictions has expressly provided in the same statutory passage for the admission of a party's books and also of books kept by a deceased clerk. Now the entries of a clerk were already admissible at common law, either as memoranda of a past recollection verified by the clerk on the stand (ante, § 745), or, the clerk being deceased or otherwise unavailable, as regular entries in the course of business, under the main Exception just treated (ante, §§ 1521-1529). The result, then, of the statutory enactments, so far as entries by a clerk are effected, is left uncertain. Either it may be thought that the statute merely sanctioned in part the common-law exception for regular entries by a deceased person; or it may be thought that the statute abolished for parties' books the limitation to persons having no clerk and acting as their own bookkeepers. The latter would be the more natural inference, and would involve less doubt and confusion as to the effect of the change.³ Nevertheless, the limitation in some statutes to clerks deceased or absent is inconsistent with this interpretation. The truth is that the statutory enactments often leave it impossible to say what is the precise significance of the change. It hardly matters, for the books of the clerk, living or dead, are available in any event, in the modes above noted.

§ 1539. Not admissible for Cash Payments or Loans. On the same principle of necessity, it was usually held that entries of cash payments or loans could not be used; because notes or receipts would have been or ought to have been taken, and thus other evidence would be extant:

1852, Potts, J., in Inslee v. Prall's Executor, 23 N. J. L. 463; Potts, J. (rejecting a series of cash entries): "We must endeavor to solve the question by a resort to first principles. . . . The consideration of necessity introduced the rule in reference to the

¹ 1871, Kerr v. Stivers, 34 Ia. 125. Contra: 1882, McGoldrick v. Traphagen, 88 N. Y. 334, 338 (lack of a "clerk" does not mean lack of a mere bookkeeper, but of "one who had something to do with and had knowledge generally of the business of his employer with reference to goods sold or work done, so that he could testify on that subject, . . . and thus is able to prove an account"; two judges diss.).

² Cal.: 1860, Landis v. Turner, 14 Cal. 576; 1886, Watrous v. Cunningham, 71 id. 32, 11 Pac. 811; Mich.: 1860, Jackson v. Evans, 8 Mich. 476, 481; Ill.: 1841, Boyer v. Sweet, 3 Scam. 122; 1859, Waggeman v. Peters, 22 id. 42, semble; 1869, Ruggles v. Gatton, 50 Ill. 416; Me.: 1833, Dunn v. Whitney, 10 Me. 14; N. Y.: 1815, Vosburgh v. Thayer, 12 John. 461; 1834, Linnell v. Sutherland, 11 Wend. 568; 1838, Sickles v. Mather, 20 id. 74; 1900, Smith v.

Smith, 163 N. Y. 168, 57 N. E. 300 (but a wife is not a clerk). Contra, semble: 1831, Martin v. Fyffe, Dudley Ga. 16.

In the following cases entries actually made by clerks were treated as the party's: 1845, Littlefield v. Rice, 10 Metc. 209; 1834, Rhoads v. Gaul, 4 Rawle 407; 1841, Cummings v. Fullam, 13 Vt. 439.

Of course if there is a clerk, who made the entries, he may take the stand and use them as his own memoranda of recollection; 1853, Humphreys v. Spear, 15 Ill. 275; and cases cited post, § 1561.

³ 1892, House v. Beak, 141 Ill. 290, 297, 30 N. E. 1065 ("It was not the intention of the statute to prohibit the introduction in evidence of books of account kept by a clerk," if living in the State and able to testify). Compare § 1561, post.

admission of books of account. . . . I hold, first, that there is not and never was a necessity for making books of entry evidence of the payment or the lending of money. There is no such great and overruling amount of inconvenience in requiring that men should take a receipt for money when they pay it, or a note or memorandum for money when they lend it, as that the safe, sound principle of legal evidence should be overturned on account of it. It is the ordinary mode in which all careful, prudent men transact such business."¹

Nevertheless, a few Courts, while applying the same principle, have regarded it as leading to the opposite result, i. e. they have thought that there is as much necessity for admitting cash entries as for admitting others :

1858, Lumpkin, J., in Ganahl v. Shore, 24 Ga. 24: "In the nature of things no such principle can be maintained. . . . The business of banking is confined almost entirely to money items; so of the books of factors and commission merchants; so of brokers. Large pecuniary advances are made by commission houses to planters, in anticipation of crops; the customer sends an order for a thousand dollars; it is forwarded and charged to the planter's account; true, the factor has the written order, but the cash advanced depends upon the evidence of his books. Whatever doctrine may have obtained formerly upon this subject, the world is too much in a whirl, there is too much to be done in the twenty-four hours now, to allow of the particularity and consequent delay in the obtaining of receipts, etc. . . . He that so affirms [the rejection of money items] is half a century behind the age in which he lives; and to get up with it, he must forget the things that are behind, and press forward, for it will never stop or come back to him."

1822, Kirkpatrick, C. J., in Wilson v. Wilson, 1 Halst. 99: "Upon principle I can see no reason why a book should be lawful evidence of one item and not of another; why it should be evidence of goods sold and delivered, and not of money paid or advanced. Why should there be witnesses called or receipts taken in the one case more than in the other? If necessity be pleaded for the one, may it not for the other also? For they are both transactions in the common course of business, equally necessary and, I should think, equally frequent or nearly so."²

In many Courts, the use of cash entries is commonly considered, not from the present point of view, but from that of the principle of regularity in the course of business; and cash entries are admitted or excluded according as they are thought to fulfil that principle or not (post, § 1549).

§ 1540. Not admissible for Goods delivered to Others on the Defendant's Credit. Entries of goods delivered to third persons but charged to the

¹ Accord: 1861, Bank v. Plannett, 37 Ala. 222, 226 (excluded, where the bank's custom was "to pay out moneys on the checks of its depositors, and not otherwise"); 1899, Harrold v. Smith, 107 Ga. 849, 33 S. E. 640; 1851, Braunin v. Foree's Admrs, 12 B. Mour. 509; 1901, Waldron v. Priest, 96 Me. 36, 51 Atl. 235 (lawyer's office docket, with entry of payment); 1887, Oberg v. Breen, 50 N. J. L. 145, 12 Atl. 203; 1898, Hauser v. Leviness, 62 id. 518, 41 Atl. 725; 1892, Smith v. Rentz, 131 N. Y. 169, 30 N. E. 54; 1794, Ducoign v. Schreppel, 1 Yeates 347; 1819, Juniata Bank v. Brown, 5 S. & R. 231. Accord, without giving a reason: 1857, Le Franc v. Hewitt, 7 Cal. 186; 1841, Boyer v. Sweet, 3 Scam. 122; 1869, Ruggles v. Gatton, 50 Ill. 416; 1862, Maine v. Harper, 4 All. 115. In Massachusetts, Maine, and New Hampshire, cash entries of amounts above 40s. or $6.66 are excluded: 1901, Waldron v. Priest, 96 Me. 36, 51 Atl. 235; 1825, Union Bank v. Knapp, 3 Pick. 109; 1833, Burns v. Fay, 14 Pick. 12; 1840, Bassett v. Spofford, 11 N. H. 267; 1860, Rich v. Eldredge, 42 id. 158; so too in Wisconsin, for amounts over $5: 1903, Brown v. Warner, 116 Wis. 358, 93 N. W. 17.

² Admitted: 1887, Hancock v. Kelly, 81 Ala. 368, 2 So. 281 (entries of the drawing of a bill of exchange and its payment, admitted); 1893, Peck v. Pierce, 63 Conn. 310, 313, 28 Atl. 524; 1869, Taliaferro v. Ives, 51 Ill. 247 (books admitted to show "how he had paid the notes"); 1902, Stephen v. Metzger, 95 Mo. App. 609, 69 S. W. 625; 1893, Gleason v. Kinney, 65 Vt. 560, 563, 27 Atl. 208; 1896, Hay v. Peterson, 6 Wyo. 419, 45 Pac. 1073.

defendant as the guarantor or the principal, and, in general, entries of a guaranty by the defendant, cannot be used; for the third person's evidence is available and there is no necessity for a resort to the books.¹

§ 1541. Not admissible for Terms of Special Contract. Where there were special terms to the contract, the entry cannot be used, because there would usually be a writing between the parties, containing the terms of the special contract, and the book-entry would be unnecessary.¹

§ 1542. Not admissible in Certain Occupations. The principle of necessity may, by the nature of the occupation, exclude entirely books in certain occupations. Thus, a schoolmaster's books have been excluded:

1823, Colcock, J., in Pelzer v. Cranston, 2 McC. 128: "The Court have always kept in view the necessity of the evidence. Now there are few persons in business who are furnished with as many witnesses as a schoolmaster may command, and there is no necessity for admitting his books to be produced in evidence."

Yet the books of an attorney have been admitted:

1850, Wells, J., in Codman v. Caldwell, 31 Me. 561: "One objection . . . is that from the nature of the case, there must be better evidence [in existence]. But the book and oath of a party are often received to prove sales or services known to other persons and provable by them. . . . The demands of attorneys are sustainable by any mode of proof applicable to other descriptions of persons."¹

§ 1543. Not admissible for Large Items, or for Immoral Transactions. The foregoing are the chief limitations generally acknowledged. But sundry different transactions have been from time to time ruled upon as exemplifying the necessity or non-necessity of using the entries.¹ So far as any further

¹ Conn.: 1836, Green v. Pratt, 11 Conn. 205; Mass.: 1808, Prince v. Smith, 4 Mass. 458; 1838, Fauce v. Gray, 21 Pick. 247; 1852, Keith v. Kibbe, 10 Cush. 36; 1861, Gorman v. Montgomery, 1 All. 416; 1873, Somers v. Wright, 114 Mass. 174; 1875, Field v. Thompson, 119 id. 151; 1887, Kaiser v. Alexander, 144 id. 71, 78, 12 N. E. 209; Pa.: 1788, Poultney v. Ross, 1 Dall. 238; 1795, Tenbroke v. Johnson, Cox 288; 1819, Juniata Bank v. Brown, 5 S. & R. 231; Tenn.: 1872, Black v. Fizer, 66 Tenn. 50; Vt.: 1830, Skinner v. Conant, 2 Vt. 454; Wis.: 1903, Brown v. Warner, 116 Wis. 358, 93 N. W. 17 (money paid to third persons). Contra: 1899, Coleman v. Ins. Ass'n, 77 Minn. 31, 79 N. W. 588 (plaintiff's books of purchases and sales from and to third persons, admitted under statute to show the amount of stock on hand); 1897, Richmond U. P. R. Co. v. R. Co., 95 Va. 386, 28 S. E. 573 (to whom credit was furnished; admitted).

In general, the transaction must have been with the defendants: 1819, Rogers v. Old, 5 S. & R. 408; 1869, Wall v. Dovey, 60 Pa. 212. Compare the cases cited post, § 1544.

¹ 1901, Snow Hardware Co. v. Loveman, 131 Ala. 221, 31 So. 19; 1832, Terrill v. Beecher, 9 Conn. 348; 1870, Hart v. Livingston, 29 Ia. 221; 1833, Dunn v. Whitney, 10 Me. 15; 1889, Ward's Estate, 73 Mich. 225, 41 N. W. 431; 1900, Collins v. Shaw, 124 id. 474, 83 N. W.

146; 1838, Danser v. Boyle, 16 N. J. L. 395; 1896, Wait v. Krewson, 59 id. 71, 35 Atl. 742; 1841, Loneragan v. Whitehead, 10 Watts 249; 1842, Nickle v. Baldwin, 4 W. & S. 290; 1898, Hall v. Woolen Co., 187 Pa. 18, 40 Atl. 986, semble (treated as secondary evidence to the contract's terms); 1896, Hazer v. Streich, 92 Wis. 505, 66 N. W. 720. But this does not forbid using the entry to show the delivery of goods, under a special contract otherwise proved: 1843, Cummings v. Nichols, 13 N. H. 425; 1860, Swain v. Cheney, 41 id. 236.

¹ Accord: 1861, Wells v. Hatch, 43 N. H. 248, semble. Contra, semble: 1864, Hale's Ex'rs v. Ard's Ex'rs, 48 Pa. 22. Books in the following occupations have been ruled on: 1820, Frazier v. Drayton, 2 Nott & McC. 472 (a ferryman; admitted); 1896, Fulton's Estate, 178 Pa. 78, 35 Atl. 880 (physician; left undecided). Compare the rulings upon the kind of occupation as affected by the principle of regularity, post, § 1547. For corporation books, see ante, § 1074.

¹ Excluded: 1856, Lynch v. Cronan, 6 Gray 532 (mechanic's lien); 1851, Batchelder v. Sanborn, 22 N. H. 328 (collateral purposes generally); 1823, Swing v. Sparks; 2 Halst. 61 (loss by injury to property); 1811, Wilmer v. Israel, 1 Browne Pa. 257 (wharfage dues); 1871, Godding v. Orcutt, 50 Vt. 56 (sundries).

generalizations can be made, two may be noticed: (1) Where the item involves so large an amount of goods sold that other evidence of its delivery must have existed, the entry cannot be used;² (2) Where the transaction is one not to be encouraged on general grounds of morality or policy, there is no necessity for helping to the recovery of the charge by admitting the entry.³ But it cannot be said that these applications of the principle are generally accepted.

§ 1544. Rules not Flexible; Existence of Other Testimony in Specific Instance does not exclude Books. The principle of necessity leading to these limitations naturally suggests the question whether the principle is to be applied as an open one outside of the above accepted applications, and whether in those classes it is to be regarded as a fixed rule of thumb or whether the question of necessity may be raised anew in a given case under its particular circumstances. The answer to both questions is in the negative; the rules are no longer flexible; in certain classes the entries are once for all excluded, in others admitted:

1836, Williams, C. J., in Peck v. Abbe, 11 Conn. 210: "This necessity is not the necessity of the individual case on trial, but of the class of cases to which it belongs. One man sells a bushel of corn to his neighbor, no other being present; he charges it on his book; and could never recover, unless his book or his oath or both were sufficient evidence. Necessity, therefore, requires this evidence. Another sells corn to his neighbor, surrounded with his family; of course, the same necessity of his oath or book does not exist. Still the charge is of the same class with the other, and may be supported in the same way. . . . The enquiry is not whether the party in that case could not have other testimony, but whether the case itself is of the class or character which will support the action."

It follows that it is immaterial, in a given case in the admissible classes, that other witnesses of the transaction are actually available, or that, in a case in the excluded classes, other witnesses were in fact not available.¹ There are contrary rulings;² but the general judicial attitude seems to be plain.

² 1876, Petit v. Teal, 57 Ga. 145 (rejected for large items, e. g. $50, except where usage authorizes, as in banking); 1882, Carr v. Sellers, 100 Pa. 170 (Mercur, J.: "We will not now designate the maximum sum for which a book may be received in evidence. . . . Much more depends on the nature and character of the subject matter of the item, and on the evidence, outside of the book, which naturally exists to prove the items"); 1872, Winner v. Bauman, 28 Wis. 563, 566 (statute applied to exclude large items).

³ 1897, Frank v. Pennie, 117 Cal. 254, 49 Pac. 208 (a gambler's "Poker Book" of accounts, excluded); 1826, Boyd v. Ladson, 4 McC. 76 (billiard-games; excluded); this case probably overrules Herlock's Adm'r v. Riser, 1821, 1 McC. 481 (whiskey sales; admitted).

¹ 1844, Mathes v. Robinson, 8 Metc. 271; 1825, Eastman v. Moulton, 3 N. H. 156; 1838, Sickles v. Mather, 20 Wend. 75.

² (On each occasion the absence of other evidence must be sworn to: 1869, Neville v. Northcutt, 47 Tenn. 296. In particular cases, entries of a guaranty of credit may be received: 1847, Ball v. Gates, 12 Metc. 493; 1851, Tremain v. Edwards, 7 Cnsh. 415.

It has also been ruled that if the work was done by a servant of the plaintiff, the entry was inadmissible; but this would probably not be followed in other jurisdictions; 1811, Wright v. Sharp, 1 Browne 344 ("It is from necessity that a book of original entries, proved by a plaintiff's oath, is admitted in evidence at all; and where the work has been done by a third person, this necessity does not exist"); 1840, Lonergan v. Whitehead, 10 Watts 249 (entries of delivery of goods, as performance of prior contract, excluded; "the reasons on which the cases cited are ruled do not apply, for there is no necessity to resort to such proofs, and it is not according to the usual course of business; the delivery is a matter of notoriety, done through the agency of others, and therefore easily proved through disinterested witnesses"); 1842, Nickle v. Baldwin, 4 W. & S. 290 (same); 1898, Hall v. Woolen Co., 187 Pa. 18, 40 Atl. 986 (delivery

Usually, it may be added, this sort of attitude is to be deprecated; it results in deadening and mutilating the living principles of evidence, and serves no good purpose. But here the general principle itself is a mere survival, without any living function in the law of evidence; and there can be no object in attempting to develop further that which has no reason for development, and no harm in accepting it, so long as it survives, in its fixed and traditional limitations.

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness.

§ 1546. General Principle; Regularity of Entry in Course of Business. The general principle which suffices to admit parties' books as fairly trustworthy is the same as that recognized for the main Exception for regular entries. The motives and results by which that principle is supposed to operate have already been sufficiently considered (ante, § 1522).¹ In general, it is thought that the regularity of habit, the difficulty of falsification, and the fair certainty of ultimate detection, give in a sufficient degree a probability of trustworthiness. The particular element of self-interest and partisanship that might be supposed to diminish trustworthiness in the case of a party himself is supposed to be balanced by certain additional requirements here made for this class of books, — for example, the existence of a reputation for honest bookkeeping, the fair appearance of the books, and the like.

In applying the general principle of Regularity of Entry, different circumstances may come into question, — the kind of occupation, the kind of book, the kind of item. These circumstances may now be taken in order.

§ 1547. Regularity, as affecting Kind of Occupation or Business. There can be no definite limitations as to the business or occupation of the entrant. The Court should decide, for each occupation, whether it involves the regular keeping of books:

1858, Lumpkin, J., in Ganahl v. Shore, 24 Ga. 17: "We hold that any occupation which makes it necessary for books to be kept as the record of its transactions, the monuments of its daily business, — as factories, foundries, forges, gas-works, banks, factorage, no matter what, — if books are required ex necessitate rei to be kept, these books are to be let in under the law . . . for the same purpose and to the same extent that a merchant or shop-keeper's books are received in evidence; and that is, to prove those matters which appertain to the ordinary business of the concern, which require to be charged, and which in fact constitute its res gestae."¹

Courts have ruled from time to time in the different jurisdictions upon of large quantities of goods; books rejected; "Lovergan v. Whitehead has been followed ever since it was decided").

¹ Compare additionally the following: 1822, Kirkpatrick, C. J., in Wilson v. Wilson, 1 Halst. 98 ("The credit to which a book of the sort last mentioned is entitled as matter of evidence is derived from the presumption that though a man in the warmth of controversy or the heat of passion, might be disposed to raise up false charges against his adversaries, yet that no one is so abandoned as in his cooler moments, without such excitement and in the course of his daily business, deliberately to contrive and meditate a fraud against his neighbor").

¹ Accord: 1846, Taylor v. Tucker, 1 Kelly 233, per Nisbet, J.; 1838, Sickles v. Mather, 20 Wend. 75 (Cowen, J.: ". . . whether he be a merchant or engaged in any other business").

various occupations.² In general, a mere casual rendering of services is not enough; there must be a regular occupation.³ The principle of Necessity, it must be noted, may also affect the kind of occupation in which books are allowed to be used (ante, § 1542). Moreover, statutes have in many instances (ante, § 1519) expressly defined the kinds of occupation.

§ 1548. Regularity, as affecting the Kind of Book; Ledger or Daybook. Any form of book, if regularly kept, is sufficient. A mere individual memorandum does not satisfy this principle; but obviously there may be separate books for separate classes of transactions, and of these a regularity can be predicated. It is thus often difficult to distinguish between books which are properly admissible because, though not comprehensive, they are nevertheless a complete and regular record of an integral series of transactions, and books which are inadmissible because they appear to have been kept apart from the general course of bookkeeping and thus are not likely to be affected by the considerations (ante, § 1522) that give trustworthiness to the ordinary records of transactions.¹

The fact that the book is kept in ledger-form, with each person's account separate, or in daybook form, with the items in the actual order of the transactions, is immaterial; though it may perhaps lessen the credit to be given to the book.² But a ledger-book may be open to the independent objection that it is not the original book, and may on that ground be excluded (post,

² Admitted: 1856, Richardson v. Dorman's Ex'r, 23 Ala. 681 (physician; under the Code); Excluded: 1899, Remick v. Rumery, 69 N. H. 601, 45 Atl. 574 (diary of services performed, expenses paid, etc., by plaintiff as employee of defendant's intestate); 1790, Spence v. Sanders, 1 Bay 119 (physician); 1818, Thomas v. Dyott, 1 Nott & McC. 186 (printer); 1901, Bass v. Goibert, 113 Ga. 262, 38 S. E. 834 (books of a party not doing any "regular business"); 1835, Thayer v. Deen, 2 Hill S. C. 677 (pedlar).

³ 1871, Karr v. Stivers, 34 Ia. 127; 1898, Atkins v. Seeley, 54 Nebr. 688, 74 N. W. 1100 (continuous dealing, etc., not shown); 1839, Walter v. Bollman, 8 Watts 544.

¹ 1901, Thompson v. Ruiz, 134 Cal. 26, 66 Pac. 24 ("private memorandum-book" of money collections, excluded); 1893, Barber's Appeal, 63 Conn. 393, 410, 412, 27 Atl. 973 (ordinary diary, excluded); 1868, Ward v. Leitch, 30 Md. 326, 333 (entries made by one casually employed for the purpose and doing it "once a week and sometimes once a fortnight," not admissible; unsound); 1844, Mathes v. Robinson, 8 Metc. 270 (a time-book of work done by laborers, admitted); 1885, Costello v. Crowell, 139 Mass. 592, 2 N. E. 698 (memorandum-book, excluded); 1895, Riley v. Boehm, 167 id. 183, 45 N. E. 84 (small pocket-memorandum-book used for sundry memoranda, held not improperly excluded); 1894, Countryman v. Bunker, 101 Mich. 218, 59 N. W. 422 (book not covering all transactions with the opponent, excluded); 1897, Anderson v. Beeman, 52 Nebr. 387, 72 N. W. 361 (there must be "a continuous dealing with persons generally"); 1851, Richardson v. Emery, 23

N. H. 223 (excluding separate books kept for different lots of wood sold, thus "not affording security against interpolations" that a single book would give); 1896, Fulton's Estate, 178 Pa. 78, 35 Atl. 880 (a separate book from the regular books, containing charges against one person only, excluded); 1872, Callaway v. McMillian, 11 Heisk. 557, 560 (entries in a private memorandum-book, excluded); 1886, Barber v. Bennett, 58 Vt. 483, 4 Atl. 231 (entries of account upon "a loose strip of paper" found in a desk, excluded); 1893, Gleason v. Kinney, 65 id. 560, 563, 27 Atl. 208 (entry in a diary, of money paid, there being a separate book of accounts, admitted; the nature of the item, not of the book, being material; this seems erroneous); 1896, Re Diggins' Estate, 68 id. 198, 34 Atl. 696 (a small book dealing with a special stock of goods, admitted); 1900, Post v. Kenerson, 72 id. 341, 47 Atl. 1072 (entries held to form a regular book, on the facts); 1896, Hay v. Peterson, 6 Wyo. 419, 45 Pac. 1073 (a calendar containing two entries of payment, excluded, because not a regular account-book, and because the entries were not continuous). Compare the cases cited ante, § 1525.

² 1806, Coggswell v. Dolliver, 2 Mass. 221 (per Sewall, J.: "though the one method leaves a greater opening to fraud and falsehood than the other"); 1860, Swain v. Cheney, 41 N. H. 234; 1861, Wells v. Hatch, 43 id. 248; 1869, Hoover v. Gehr, 62 Pa. 136; 1850, Toomer v. Gadsden, 4 Strobb. L. 195. But a general account drawn up at a later date is inadmissible: 1808, Prince v. Smith, 4 Mass. 458.

§ 1558). Finally, the record offered being a collected series of entries, it does not matter of what material the record is made, nor whether it is a record to which in ordinary parlance the word "book" would be applied.³

§ 1549. Regularity, as affecting the Kind of Item or Entry; Cash Entry. In the first place, the entry must have been a part of a regular series of entries, — not, for example, a casual sale of an article not regularly dealt in, nor a casual entry at the beginning of a blank book or at the end of a book already finished and laid aside.¹ Again, the entry is not usable if it shows that it embraces in one item a number of separate transactions, or is in any other way so loosely made that regularity of entry cannot be predicated.²

The question already examined, from the point of view of the principle of Necessity, namely, whether entries of cash payments are admissible (ante, § 1539), is often by some Courts discussed instead from this point of view; and here, as before, opinions differ in the application of the principle. The better opinion is that while as a general rule such entries are not to be regarded as admissible, yet in particular cases the ordinary course of business may involve cash entries and they may then be used:

1838, Hitchcock, J., Cram v. Spear, 8 Hammond 497: "Money lent or paid is not ordinarily charged upon book. The person lending or paying usually takes a note or receipt. An individual, it is true, might be engaged in a business that would seem to justify such charges, and in such case I am not prepared to say that he might not be examined as a witness."

1859, Stockton, J., in Veiths v. Hogge, 8 Ia. 187: "The general rule is clearly established by these authorities that a charge for money paid or money lent cannot be proved by a party's book of accounts, that such transactions are not usually the subject of a charge in account, and that charges of that nature are not such as are made in the ordinary course of business by one party against another. . . . An individual might be engaged in business that would seem to justify such charges, as where one's ordinary business may be said to consist in receiving money on deposit and paying it out for others. . . . This would not, however, apply to the case of a party engaged in the mere business of keeping a retail store, whose customers purchase goods of him on credit, which are charged to them in a running account. . . . They would not ordinarily expect to find themselves charged in their accounts with sums of money lent or paid. . . . Yet if the jury should judge that small money-charges were legitimately made in the ordinary course of business, we should not be inclined to hold that they might not so determine."³

³ 1846, Taylor v. Tucker, 1 Kelly 231 (slips of paper); 1836, Kendall v. Field, 14 Me. 30 (shingle).

¹ 1825, Beach v. Mills, 5 Conn. 496 (receipt of rent); 1864, Davis v. Sanford, 9 All. 216; 1822, Wilson v. Wilson, 1 Halst. 95; 1888, Stuckslager v. Noel, 123 Pa. 60, 16 Atl. 94; 1786, Lynch v. M'Hugo, 1 Bay 33; 1835, Thayer v. Deen, 2 Hill S. C. 677; 1901, Rowan v. Chenoweth, 49 W. Va. 287, 38 S. E. 544 (book made up "several years after the business").

² 1842, Winsor v. Dilloway, 4 Metc. 222; 1849, Henshaw v. Davis, 5 Cush. 146 (three months' services in one item, excluded); 1853, Bustin v. Rogers, 11 id. 346; 1882, Pratt v. White, 132 Mass. 477 (measure, weight, and quantity lacking; but admitted); 1889, Woolsey

v. Bohn, 41 Minn. 238, 42 N. W. 1022; 1840, Bassett v. Spofford, 11 N. H. 267; 1825, Sawycr v. Miller, 3 Halst. 139; 1794, Ducoin v. Schrepel, 1 Yeates 347; 1882, Carr v. Sellers, 100 Pa. 171; 1893, Cargill v. Atwood, 18 R. I. 303, 305 ("lump" charges, excluded); 1818, Lynch's Adm'r v. Petrie, 1 Nott & McC. 731; 1859, Johnson v. Price, 40 Tenn. 549; 1887, Baldrige v. Penland, 68 Tex. 441, 4 S. W. 565.

³ Accord: 1902, Harmon v. Decker, 41 Or. 587, 68 Pac. 11, 1111 (large cash items, held not provable by the party's books, unless custom sanctions such entries in a particular business); 1893, Cargill v. Atwood, 18 R. I. 303, 304 (admissible, provided such transactions formed part of the ordinary course of business).

But the general tendency of Courts is to regard such entries as absolutely excluded, without any allowance for exceptional cases in special occupations.⁴ On the same principle, an entry of payment by note given would seem to be inadmissible.⁵

§ 1550. Contemporaneousness. Not merely regularity is required; the entry must have been fairly contemporaneous with the transaction entered.¹ This is another circumstance very properly required as tending to accuracy, and is similar to the requirement in the general Exception (ante, § 1526) as to entries by deceased persons. But no unvarying limitation need be fixed; the entry must merely have been made near enough to indicate a likelihood of accuracy; and thus each ruling must depend chiefly on the circumstances of the case:

1834, Sergeant, J., in Jones v. Long, 3 Watts 326: "The entry need not be made exactly at the time of the occurrence; it suffices if it be within a reasonable time, so that it may appear to have taken place while the memory of the fact was recent, or the source from which a knowledge of it was derived, unimpaired. The law fixes no precise instant when the entry should be made."

1852, Bigelow, J., in Barker v. Haskell, 9 Cush. 221: "The rule does not fix any precise time within which they must be made. There is no inflexible rule requiring them to be made on the same day. In this particular, every case must be made to depend upon its own peculiar circumstances, having regard to the situation of the parties, the kind of business, the mode of conducting it, and the time and manner of making the entries. Upon questions of this sort much must be left to the judgment and discretion of the judge who presides at the trial."

§ 1551. Book must bear an Honest Appearance.¹ The appearance of the ⁴ Conn.: 1803, Bradley v. Goodyear, 1 Day 104; Ia.: 1859, Young v. Jones, 8 Ia. 222; 1859, Sloan v. Ault, ib. 230; 1859, Snell v. Eckerson, ib. 284; 1892, Security Co. v. Graybeal, 85 id. 543, 546, 52 N. W. 497 (register of loans); 1894, M. S. Bank v. Burson, 90 id. 191, 193, 57 N. W. 705; 1894, Shaffer v. McCracken, ib. 578, 580, 58 N. W. 910 (payment to attorney); N. H.: 1825, Eastman v. Moulton, 3 N. H. 156; 1851, Richardson v. Emery, 23 id. 223; N. J.: 1830, Carman v. Dunham, 6 Halst. 191 (single entry of cash lent in a regular book of entries containing no other dealings with the alleged debtor); N. Y.: 1811, Case v. Potter, 8 John. 212; Pa.: 1898, Fifth Mut. B. Soc. v. Holt, 184 Pa. 572, 39 Atl. 293 (entry of consideration received); Tex.: 1852, Cole v. Deal, 8 Tex. 349; 1872, Kotwitz v. Wright, 37 id. 83. Compare the cases cited ante, § 1539.

⁵ 1899, Estes v. Jackson, — Ky. —, 53 S. W. 271 (entry that an account was settled by note, excluded). Contra: 1898, Borgess Inv. Co. v. Vette, 142 Mo. 560, 44 S. W. 754 (admitting an entry of a note secured by deed of trust).

¹ 1899, Lane v. M. & T. Hardware Co., 121 Ala. 296, 25 So. 809; 1895, St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Murphy, 60 Ark. 333, 30 S. W. 419; 1860, Landis v. Turner, 14 Cal. 575 (admitted, where the transfer from a slate to the book was made irregularly, but generally in from one to three days afterwards); 1881, Redlick v. Bauerlee, 98 Ill. 134, 138 ("the authorities do not establish any precise length of time"; here entries transferred monthly from memoranda at the time of manufacture were admitted); 1858, Anderson v. Ames, 6 Ia. 488; 1887, Ramsey v. Telephone Co., 49 N. J. L. 325, 8 Atl. 290; 1818, Curren v. Crawford, 4 S. & R. 3; 1829, Kessler v. McConachy, 1 Rawle 441; 1839, Walter v. Bollman, 8 Watts 544; 1865, Yearsley's Appeal, 48 Pa. 535.

² 1861, Caldwell v. McDermit, 17 Cal. 466 (excluded, "when suspicious circumstances exist upon the face of the entries, and these circumstances are not explained by disinterested persons"); 1810, Swift, Evidence, Conn., 81; 1880, Robinson v. Dibble's Adm'r, 17 Fla. 462; 1899, Harrold v. Smith, 107 Ga. 849, 33 S. E. 640 (unfastened portion of a book, with leaves mutilated or missing, excluded); 1896, Guthrieless v. Ripley, 98 Ia. 290, 67 N. W. 109; 1806, Cogswell v. Dolliver, 2 Mass. 221, per Scwall, J.; 1844, Mathes v. Robinson, 8 Metc. 270; 1832, Pratt v. White, 132 Mass. 477; 1878, Robinson v. Hoyt, 39 Mich. 405 (entries all on the last page of a book having many pages blank and many torn out, held "insufficient" for proof); 1896, Levine v. Ins. Co., 66 Minn. 138, 68 N. W. 855; 1825, Eastman v. Moulton, 3 N. H. 156; 1863, Funk v. Ely, 45 Pa. 444, 448 ("The Court examines it to see if it appears prima facie to be what it purports to be. If there are erasures and interlineations, and false or impossible dates, touching points that are book of entries must be honest; no suspicion of false dealing must be apparent. But the trial Court's determination of this ought to be final.²

§ 1552. Reputation of Correct and Honest Bookkeeping. The tradition requires also that preliminary testimony be offered as to the good reputation of the party for correct and honest accounting.¹ Whether this would always be required is in some jurisdictions doubtful to-day, apart from express statute.²

3. Testimonial Qualifications, and Other Independent Rules of Evidence.

§ 1554. Party's Suppletory Oath; Cross-examination of Party; Use of Books by or against Surviving Party. (1) Since the preliminary facts rendering evidence admissible must of course always be proved somehow in advance of its admission, the identity and character of parties' books, as fulfilling the foregoing conditions, must first be shown. But if the books were, by hypothesis, kept by the party himself, and without a clerk, it is obvious that they cannot be satisfactorily shown to be his books without calling in the aid of his own testimony. By very necessity, therefore, and for the purpose of identifying the books, the party, though otherwise disqualified (under the older law) as a witness, was allowed¹ to make a so-called suppletory oath of identification.² Moreover, this oath, by way of precaution, material, or if for any reason it clearly appears not to be a legal book of entries, the Court may reject it"). But a mere error need not exclude: 1866, Schettler v. Jones, 20 Wis. 412, 415 (entries charged against a person not the opponent are admissible "if such mistake is fairly and satisfactorily explained by other competent evidence").

² 1806, Cogswell v. Dolliver, 2 Mass. 223 (Sedgwick, J.: "The true ground . . . is that the judge or court before whom the case is tried, should on inspection, determine that the book was proper for that purpose, and that such determination renders it competent evidence. . . . To suffer our inquiries to go behind that decision would be throwing things into too loose a state").

¹ The precise tenor of this requirement varies; some Courts hold that the proof must be by persons who have settled with the party, and that, too, directly upon his books; Ark.: 1898, Atkinson v. Burt, 65 Ark. 316, 46 S. W. 986, 53 S. W. 404 (must be shown correctly and contemporaneously kept); 1895, St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Murphy, 60 id. 333, 30 S. W. 419; Cal.: 1860, Landis v. Turner, 14 Cal. 576; 1886, Watrous v. Cunningham, 71 id. 32, 11 Pac. 811; 1894, Webster v. Lumber Co., 101 id. 326, 329, 35 Pac. 371 (absconding of the party's bookkeeper, who had falsified the books to defraud him, not sufficient to exclude); Ill.: 1841, Boyer v. Sweet, 3 Scam. 122; 1869, Ruggles v. Gattou, 50 Ill. 416; 1876, Patrick v. Jack, 82 id. 32; 1892, Hoose v. Beak, 141 id. 290, 299, 30 N. E. 1065 (held here not essential, where the opponent had admitted the correctness of the account); Mich.: 1860, Jackson v. Evans, 8 Mich. 476, 487 (the rule is "to require evidence of the correctness and fairness of the books offered, founded on information gained by an actual inspection of and settlement by them," and not merely of "the character of the party whose books they are"); 1893, Seventh D. A. P. A. v. Fisher, 95 id. 274, 276, 54 N. W. 759 (may be shown by himself, without calling others); N. Y.: 1815, Vosburgh v. Thayer, 12 John. 461; 1834, Linnell v. Sutherland, 18 Wend. 568; 1855, Morrill v. Whitehead, 4 E. D. Smith 241; 1882, McGoldrick v. Traphagen, 88 N. Y. 334, 336 (proof by several witnesses testifying to settlement by bills, and by another witness to settlement by the books themselves, held sufficient, the last witness being the bookkeeper of the party himself; two judges diss.); 1900, Smith v. Smith, 163 id. 168, 57 N. E. 300; Tex.: 1868, Werbiskie v. McManns, 31 Tex. 116, 124 (proof required that "his reputation as an honest man and correct bookkeeper is untarnished").

² 1888, Montague v. Dougan, 68 Mich. 98, 100, 35 N. W. 840 (proof by other persons, held not necessary "since the statute allows parties to testify generally in the case"). This amounts to no more than a verification of correctness on oath (post, § 1554).

¹ Except in New York and New Jersey, where perhaps the Dutch tradition (ante, § 1518) accounts for the omission: 1838, Sickles v. Mather, 20 Wend. 75; 1859, Conklin v. Stamler, 8 Abb. Pr. 395.

² 1824, 3 Dane's Abr., Mass., Hutchinson's ed., 318; 1860, Landis v. Turner, 14 Cal. 573; 1886, Roche v. Ware, 71 id. 379, 12 Pac. 284; 1869, Neville v. Northcutt, 47 Tenn. 296; 1872, Marsh v. Case, 30 Wis. 531.

was made to involve an assertion that the books were correctly kept, and from this point of view the oath was not only allowed but required; it could only be dispensed with where the party was dead, or insane, or out of the jurisdiction.³ In many of the statutes (ante, § 1519) that have dealt with the subject, this suppletory oath is still retained as a requirement.

(2) As a necessary concession to the allowance of the suppletory oath, it was thought proper in a few jurisdictions by statute to allow a cross-examination of the party upon the transactions represented in the entries.⁴

(3) The modern statutory exception to a party's qualification, namely, the exclusion of a survivor from testifying to a transaction with a deceased opponent. (ante, § 578) is commonly not thought to apply to the use of a party's books of account under the present Exception, for reasons elsewhere explained (post, § 1559). It follows that the surviving party may offer his books as against a deceased opponent;⁵ and also that the use of a deceased party's books by his representative is not such a "testifying" by the representative as amounts to a waiver under the statute and permits the surviving opponent to take the stand against them.⁶

§ 1555. Personal Knowledge of Entrant; Party and Salesman verifying jointly. The use of a party's entries, like that of all the Hearsay exceptions, must be subject to the ordinary principles of testimonial qualifications (ante, § 1424). When the party is the entrant, then, he must have the elementary qualification, a personal knowledge of the transaction recorded (ante, § 657). This he would ordinarily have, in the situations for which the exception was peculiarly adapted and to which he is restricted in the ways just noticed. But it will often happen, even where the party is his own bookkeeper, that the goods are delivered or the services rendered by salesmen or workmen in his employ, and that thus the party, though the recorder, has no personal knowledge of the consummation of the transaction. This situation can be met in the way already examined (ante, § 751), in cases where a witness on the stand swears to the accuracy of a record but has no knowledge of the transaction recorded; i. e., by calling the other person, whose knowledge thus supplies the missing element and completes the testimony. This is a proceeding which, though correct on principle, has only with difficulty ob-

³ See post, § 1561.

⁴ In addition to the statutes, ante, § 1519, see the following rulings: 1875, New Haven & H. Co. v. Goodwin, 42 Conn. 231; 1857, Betts v. Stevens, 6 Wis. 400 (no questions are to be asked the party except those authorized by the statute). In South Carolina the rulings varied: 1786, Foster v. Sinkler, 1 Bay 40; 1790, Spence v. Sanders, ib. 117; Douglass v. Hart, 4 McCord 257; 1850, Thomson v. Porter, 4 Strobbh. Eq. 65.

⁵ 1886, Roche v. Ware, 71 Cal. 373, 12 Pac. 284, semble; 1901, Haines v. Christie, 28 Colo. 502, 66 Pac. 883; 1902, Chapin v. Mitchell, — Fla. —, 32 So. 875; 1894, Dysart v. Furrow, 90 Ia. 59, 57 N. W. 644; 1867, Anthony v. Stinson, 4 Kan. 220; 1861, Dexter v. Booth, 2 All. 559, 561 (but not admissible "for other purposes." e. g. to prove to whom credit was given); 1862, Green v. Gould, 3 id. 465, 467 (similar principles); 1893, Cargill v. Atwood, 18 R. I. 303, 304. Contra: 1899, Nance v. Callender, — Tenn. —, 51 S. W. 1025; 1893, Wyman v. Wilcox, 66 Vt. 26, 30, 28 Atl. 321 (plaintiff's entries made after decease of opponent's intestate, excluded).

⁶ 1870, Kelton v. Hill, 58 Me. 116; 1889, Sheehan v. Hennessey, 65 N. H. 101, 18 Atl. 652; 1895, Stevens v. Moulton, 68 id. 254, 38 Atl. 732 (since the amendment of 1889, there is still no "election" to testify where an administrator offers and identifies the deceased's account-books).

As already stated (ante, § 578), there is here no attempt to collect fully the rulings interpreting this particular class of statutes.

tained recognition in the case of ordinary memoranda of a past recollection (ante, § 751). But, long before that recognition, it was perceived and adopted in the case of parties' entries. Where, then, the party has made the record but has not personal knowledge of the delivery of the goods or the rendering of the services charged, he may call the person having knowledge and use the latter's supplementary testimony.¹ If the salesman or teamster is deceased, or otherwise unavailable, or if the party is, or if both are, or if the conditions of the business make it impolitic to require the calling of every person concerned, still this need not prevent the use of the entry-book. The reasons for this conclusion have already been examined in considering the same problem for the main Exception for Regular Entries (ante, § 1530); here, as there, the rulings are not harmonious.²

§ 1556. Form and Language of the Entry; Absence of Entry. The general principles already examined (ante, §§ 766-812) as to the mode of testimonial communication, or narration, have here also a certain application. First, the entry must purport to record the whole of the transaction as alleged; in other words, a mere order-book or an entry of an order, not showing the delivery of the alleged goods or the rendering of the alleged services, could not be

¹ 1857, Harwood v. Mulry, 8 Gray 250 (one partner delivered the goods, the other made the charge in the books; Dewey, J.: "It is proper to introduce as witnesses all those persons who are thus connected with the transaction and whose testimony is necessary to establish those facts which would require to be proved by a single person"). Accord: 1880, Smith v. Law, 47 Conn. 431, 435 (entries made by the plaintiff's bookkeeper on report by a salesman, the salesman also testifying); 1892, House v. Beak, 141 Ill. 290, 299, 30 N. E. 1065 (entries by H., on reports of sales, etc., by B., H. and B. testifying); 1902, Place v. Baugher, 159 Ind. 232, 64 N. E. 852 (books of log-measurement, kept by plaintiff, the measurements being made by plaintiff and M, and both testifying thereto); 1831, Smith v. Sanford, 12 Pick. 140 (one partner sold and made a note, the other entered; both testified); 1900, Smith v. Smith, 163 N. Y. 168, 57 N. E. 300 (husband-party making deliveries, wife entering from his memoranda, and both testifying); 1823, Ingraham v. Bockius, 9 S. & R. 285 (clerk delivered and party entered; both testified); 1831, Clough v. Little, 3 Rich. L. 353 (same); 1850, Thomson v. Porter, Stroh. Eq. 65 (same); 1892, Taylor v. Davis, 82 Wis. 455, 459, 52 N. W. 756 (shipping-book of lumber, entered by the bookkeeper from scale-bills handed to him, the bookkeeper, and the scaler testifying).

² 1844, Mathes v. Robinson, 8 Metc. 269 (time-book kept by plaintiff for labor of himself and apprentice; held not necessary to call the apprentice); 1849, Morris v. Briggs, 3 Cush. 343 (workmen made memoranda and plaintiff copied them into the book; workmen not required to be called); 1852, Barker v. Haskell, 9 id. 218 (plaintiffs, partners, made entries of work done by workmen; plaintiffs both gave the suppletory oath; workmen not required to be called; 1887, Miller v. Shay, 145 Mass. 162, 13 N. E. 468 (plaintiff kept a book of loads of sand delivered; teamster and plaintiff testify to items; said obiter that the teamster's testimony was "necessary"); 1860, Jackson v. Evans, 8 Mich. 476, 484 (entries of brick delivered, made by the party on reports from a foreman-teamster, the foreman-teamster who tallied the loading, being called, but not all the individual teamsters who hauled; held, that on the facts all the teamsters should be called or accounted for); 1901, Taylor-Woolfenden Co. v. Atkinson, 127 id. 633, 87 N. W. 89 (ledger made up from sale slips; admitted on certain conditions); 1903, Union Central L. Ins. Co. v. Prigge, — Minn. —, 96 N. W. 917 (plaintiffs' entries based on memoranda furnished by the defendant, excluded; probably erroneous); 1892, Anchor Milling Co. v. Walsh, 108 Mo. 284, 18 S. W. 904 (plaintiff's manager kept a shipping-book, in which most of the entries of deliveries were made on the knowledge of a shipping-clerk; the clerk had left the plaintiff's employment and was not called; admitted); 1901, Diament v. Colloty, 66 N. J. L. 295, 49 Atl. 455, 808 (books founded on slips containing reports from workmen, admitted, together with the slips, apparently without calling the workmen); 1834, Jones v. Long, 3 Watts 326 (like Morris v. Briggs, Mass.); 1897, Union Electric Co. v. Theatre Co., 18 Wash. 213, 51 Pac. 366 (books of an electric light company, recording the light furnished a theatre, made up from newspaper reports of number of performances per week and from collectors' reports, excluded); 1862, Lynch v. State, 15 Wis. 40, 44 (certain voluminous accounts, testified to by the bookkeeper and a party, who had personal knowledge of most of the transactions, admitted).

received.¹ Next, as to the mode of recording, any material or means will suffice.² The entry must, however, be fairly intelligible; it must distinctly communicate the fact alleged; this requirement being satisfied, any kind of marks, capable of being interpreted, will suffice.³

The absence of a debit-entry, in a book containing both debits and credits, should be regarded as in effect a statement that no such goods or services had been received, and should therefore be admissible;⁴ but some Courts, as also under the main Exception (ante, § 1531), take the opposite view.⁵ Where however, the book is offered by the opponent (post, § 1557), the absence of an entry of the transaction as claimed may properly be regarded as an admission that there was no such transaction (ante, § 1072).

§ 1557. Impeaching the Book; Opponent's Use of the Book as containing Admissions. (1) The party's book being virtually his testimonial assertions (ante, § 1361), the rules for impeaching testimonial evidence (ante, §§ 875-1087), so far as applicable, may be invoked. In particular, the party's general character for veracity (ante, § 920) may be impeached;¹ and the untrustworthiness of the book may be evidenced by demonstrating specific errors (ante, § 1000) in the entries.²

(2) A party's own statements may always be used against him as admissions (ante, § 1048); hence the opponent may always offer the party's books as containing admissions favoring the opponent's claim of facts.³ In such a

¹ 1882, Hancock v. Hintrager, 60 Ia. 376, 14 N. W. 725; 1834, Rhoads v. Gaul, 4 Rawle 467; 1835, Fairchild v. Dennison, 4 Watts 258; 1841, Parker v. Donaldson, 2 W. & S. 19; 1882, Laird v. Campbell, 100 Pa. 165. This rests perhaps equally on the principle of § 1541, ante.
The price need not be entered: 1835, Jones v. Orton, 65 Wis. 9, 14, 12 N. W. 172.

² That the entry need not be on paper or with ink has been noticed ante, § 1548.

³ 1865, Barton v. Dundas, 24 U. C. Q. B. 275; 1887, Miller v. Shay, 145 Mass. 162, 13 N. E. 468; 1843, Cummings v. Nichols, 13 N. H. 425; 1872, Marsh v. Case, 30 Wis. 531.

⁴ 1893, Peck v. Pierce, 63 Conn. 310, 314, 28 Atl. 524 (issue as to payment of interest on note; deceased's book contained entries of interest-payments to others, though not all; lack of entry of payment to P., admissible); 1903, Volusia Co. Bank v. Bigelow, — Fla. —, 33 So. 704; 1901, Waldron v. Priest, 96 Me. 36, 51 Atl. 235; 1902, Huebener v. Childs, 180 Mass. 483, 62 N. E. 729 (passbook and ledger admitted, to show no receipt of cash; "not every book of entries, if admitted, would lead to any inference from the omission of a matter; but we must assume that this book on inspection manifestly purported to contain all C.'s receipts, and if so it was a declaration by him, only less definite than if expressed in words, that he had received no other sums"; this book was admitted without specific reference to the present Hearsay exception).

⁵ 1893, Shaffer v. McCracken, 90 Ia. 578, 580, 58 N. W. 910 (negative not to be proved by lack of entry in one book only out of several); 1874, Lawhorn v. Carter, 11 Bush 10; 1855, Morse v. Potter, 4 Gray 292; 1896, Riley v. Boehm, 167 Mass. 183, 45 N. E. 84; 1852, Alexander v. Smoot, 13 Ired. 462; 1901, Scott v. Bailey, 73 Vt. 49, 50 Atl. 557.

¹ 1823, Crouse v. Miller, 10 S. & R. 155, 158 ("his character was open to the same kind of animadversion that it would have been subject to if he had been a witness in the cause"); 1863, Funk v. Ely, 45 Pa. 444, 448 ("the plaintiff who swears to his original book of entries puts his general character for truth and veracity, and the general character of his book for honesty and accuracy, in evidence, and invites attack upon either or both"). Contra: 1853, Winne v. Nickerson, 1 Wis. 1, 6 (impeachment of the party's character "for truth and veracity," held proper at common law; but the statute making them "prima facie" evidence held to forbid this; absurd); 1854, Nickerson v. Morin, 3 id. 243 (foregoing case approved); 1872, Winner v. Banman, 28 id. 563, 567 (same).

² 1863, Funk v. Ely, 45 Pa. 444, 448 ("It is competent for the adverse party to show its [the book's] general character by pointing to charges and entries affecting other parties, and by calling witnesses to prove such entries false and fraudulent. That this investigation may not run into excessive departure from the issue on trial, the Court should limit it to the time, or near the time, covered by the account in suit, and should suffer no more examination of collateral cases than would bear directly on the general character of the book").

³ 1899, Zang v. Wyant, 25 Colo. 551, 56 Pac. 565 (bank's account-books); 1902, Whisler v. Whisler, 117 Ia. 712, 89 N. W. 1110 (partition between heirs and devisees; ancestor's bookcase, none of the foregoing limitations as to the kind of book or entry stand in the way; for the book is not offered under the present exception.⁴

§ 1558. Production of Original Book; Ledger and Day-book. The general rule requiring the production of the original of a writing (ante, § 1179), here as elsewhere, must be satisfied; i. e. the entry offered must be an original; if the original cannot be had, as determined by the ordinary rules (ante, §§ 1192-1230), a copy may be used.¹

It therefore becomes necessary to distinguish between the different processes and the different classes of books employed in bookkeeping, in order to determine whether the one offered is or is not the first and original book of regular entries. A ledger, though otherwise not objectionable (ante, § 1548), will usually not be the first book entered up; nevertheless, if the first book be in fact kept in ledger form, it will be none the less admissible. Furthermore, the record admissible is one consisting of a regular series (ante, § 1548); hence, the first regular and collected record is the original one, and it is immaterial that it was made up from casual or scattered memoranda preceding it. The application of the principle must depend much on the circumstances of the particular case.²

entries of advancements); La. Rev. Civ. C. 1888, § 2248; 1868, Ward v. Leitch, 30 Md. 326, 333; 1902, Globe Savings Bank v. Nat'l Bank, 64 Nebr. 413, 89 N. W. 1030; 1903, Gross v. Scheel, — id. —, 93 N. W. 418; 1893, Doolittle v. Stone, 136 N. Y. 613, 616, 32 N. E. 639.

* Compare some of the cases cited under Admissions, ante, §§ 1060, 1072, 1073, 1074 (corporation or partnership books), 1082 (predecessor in title). Whether the whole of an account may or must be offered is dealt with under Completeness (post, §§ 2104, 2118).

¹ 1898, First N. Bank v. Chaffin, 118 Ala. 246, 24 So. 80; 1879, Peck v. Parchen, 52 Ia. 46, 2 N. W. 597 (copy attached to a deposition, excluded); 1848, Smiley v. Dewey, 17 Oh. 156; 1831, Furman v. Peay, 2 Bail. 394; 1887, Baldrige v. Penland, 68 Tex. 441, 4 S. W. 565; 1845, Downer v. Morrison, 2 Gratt. 250, 256 (books in New York, proved by copy annexed to a deposition). Undecided: 1882, Hancock v. Hintrager, 60 Ia. 376, 14 N. W. 725. Not clear: 1876, Woodbury v. Woodbury's Estate, 50 Vt. 156. Contra, but clearly wrong: 1807, Cooper v. Morrel, 4 Yeates 341 (original in England; copy excluded).

The party's failure to produce his book, when it would be relevant, may justify an inference: 1860, Harrison v. Doyle, 11 Wis. 233, 235, and cases cited ante, § 291.

² Admitted: 1896, Plummer v. Mercantile Co., 23 Colo. 190, 47 Pac. 294 (entries made in pencil on sheets of paper, then copied into a book); 1881, Redlich v. Banerlee, 98 Ill. 134, 138 (entries transferred from a slate to the book; the book held an original); 1816, Faxon v. Hollis, 13 Mass. 427 (entries made on a slate and transcribed into a ledger); 1831, Smith v. Sandford, 12 Pick. 140 (chalking sales on a butcher-cart and then entering them on the book when the cart returned); 1852, Barker v. Haskell, 9 Cush.

218 (entries on a slate, copied into a day-book); 1854, Kent v. Garvin, 1 Gray 148 (entries from a drayman's book into an account-book); 1887, Miller v. Shay, 145 Mass. 162, 13 N. E. 468 (transferred to the book from marks on a sand-cart); 1860, Jackson v. Evans, 8 Mich. 476, 482 (account-book of brick delivered, made up from a tally-book or slate); 1896, Levine v. Ins. Co., 66 Minn. 138, 68 N. W. 855 (books founded on temporary slips furnished by salesmen); 1853, Winne v. Nickerson, 1 Wis. 1; 5 (there being two books of original entries, only one was required to be produced, on the facts).

Excluded: 1881, Fitzgerald v. M'Carty, 55 Ia. 702, 8 N. W. 646 (ledger not admitted to show a single item not entered in the original books; but the Court declared it allowable for counsel to use the ledger in aiding the jury "the more readily to find the items charged in the account in the books of original entry"); 1895, Way v. Cross, 95 id. 258, 63 N. W. 683 (a ledger not showing the kind of goods sold, and made up directly from sale-slips); 1854, Breinig v. Metzler, 23 Pa. 159 (a journal copied from a blotter).

Further illustrations are as follows: 1861, Caulfield v. Sanders, 17 Cal. 569, 573; 1874, Bentley v. Ward, 116 Mass. 337; 1889, Woolsey v. Bohn, 41 Minn. 239, 42 N. W. 1022; 1856, Pillsbury v. Locke, 33 N. H. 96; 1887, Rumsey v. Telephone Co., 49 N. J. L. 325, 8 Atl. 290; 1838, Sickles v. Mather, 20 Wend. 76; 1882, McGoldrick v. Traphagen, 88 N. Y. 334, 336; 1823, Ingraham v. Bockius, 9 S. & R. 285; 1834, Patton v. Ryan, 4 Rawle 410; 1836, Forsythe v. Norcross, 5 Watts 432; 1869, Hoover v. Gehr, 62 Pa. 136. In Prince v. Sweet, 2 Mass. 569, (1793) and Bonnell v. Mawha, 22 N. J. L. 198 (1874), the anomalous ruling was made that the ledger or copy-entries also must be produced, if the entries had been posted into it from another book.

4. Present Exception as affected by Parties' Statutory Competency.

§ 1559. Theory of Use of Parties' Books as Hearsay. That there is in modern times a new adjustment to be made arises from the fact that the party, being formerly disqualified and unavailable as a witness, and allowed only by the necessity of the case to use his extrajudicial or hearsay entries (ante, § 1537), has now everywhere been made competent by statute; so that the change of the law has removed the necessity for using such hearsay statements and has taken away the reason of the Exception. The question arises how far this result has been recognized by the Courts since the change of the law, and what its effects are with regard to the mode of using parties' entries.

In ascertaining this, it is necessary to keep in mind the extent to which, under the original practice, the entry was treated as hearsay. That it was so treated has already been noticed (ante, § 1537) and appears throughout the general tenor of this branch of the Exception. The consequences of this attitude were strictly followed out. If the party did not appear on the stand as a witness, if the entries are merely extrajudicial, hearsay statements, it followed that none of the consequences attached to a party's taking the stand could be enforced against him. This theory was so firmly implanted that when the statutes, which made parties competent, left a surviving party incompetent against a deceased opponent (ante, § 578), the use of parties' account-books was still not considered as a "testifying," within the statute; so that (as generally held) the surviving party's use of his books was not forbidden, on the one hand, and, on the other hand, the executor's use of the deceased opponent's books was not a testifying which amounted to a waiver and qualified the surviving party to take the stand (ante, § 1554). This result may well be questioned; but at least it shows the nature of the earlier theory.

Again, the suppletory or verifying oath of the party (ante, § 1554), by which he took the stand for the purpose of identifying the books and swearing that they contained true and just accounts, was expressly declared not to make the party a witness. It was treated as only a preliminary guarantee required as a matter of caution; and in effect it merely related back to the time of the entries and showed them to be proper for admission. His entries in the book, moreover, taken as made at a past time, were not entries made as a party; for he was not a party when he made them; and they thus could not be treated as tainted with his interest. Whatever may be thought to-day of the real effect of such an oath as incorporating the books into the party's infra-judicial statement and making them infra-judicial testimony, the Courts at any rate refused to take this view and accepted them as extrajudicial statements.¹

¹ 1844, Little v. Wyatt, 14 N. H. 26: "It is the book which is the evidence, and the party testifies in chief only to verify it. The party is not a witness who testifies to facts and then appeals to his book in corroboration of his story; but the book is the source of information."

The subjection to cross-examination (ante, § 1554) was a real inroad on the theory that the party was not a witness in his books; but it was made in a few States only, and by statute; and the fundamental theory was maintained as far as possible, for the liability of the party to cross-examination extended only to matters connected with the entries.

§ 1560. Statutory Competency as Abolishing the Necessity for Parties' Books; Using the Books to aid Recollection. Such being the consistent attitude of the Courts — that the books were used as hearsay or extrajudicial statements, and that the party did not take the stand as a witness —, how far is this branch of the Exception affected by the statutory abolition of a party's disqualification to take the stand? What has occurred is that the necessity for using his hearsay or extrajudicial statements in his books has been removed; he is free to relate as a witness all his knowledge on the subject of the transaction. Thus, the necessity having ceased, the whole basis of the Exception falls. There is now no excuse for offering his extrajudicial entries, not tested by cross-examination, while his infra-judicial testimony, given under oath and subject to cross-examination, is available.

This does not mean that the party cannot use his entries at all. As a recorded past recollection (ante, § 745) he may swear to the accuracy of the book and use it to the fullest extent, incorporating it with his testimony and handing it to the jury as a part thereof (ante, § 754). The entries are no longer hearsay; they are adopted by the witness on the stand, and he is subjected to full cross-examination on that as on all other parts of his testimony. At the present day, then, the correct view is that the Hearsay exception in favor of parties' entries has disappeared with the parties' incompetency, and that the party uses them, if at all, as records of a past recollection adopted on the stand. A few Courts have recognized this result explicitly; others have ruled more or less in harmony with it:

1859, Daly, J., in Conklin v. Stampler, 8 Abb. Pr. 400: "The important change recently made in the law of this State, by which a party may testify the same as any other witness, has obviated the difficulty that was supposed to exist when the rule was made, and there is now no occasion for resorting to the books, unless it may be to refresh the party's memory as to the items, or in cases where there is a failure of recollection. In the latter case the books, if they contained the original entries of the transaction, would still, I apprehend, be evidence within the rule recognized in Merrill v. I. & O. R. Co.,¹ — that is, if the party who made the entries has entirely forgotten the facts which he recorded, but can swear that he would not have entered them if he had not known them at the time to be true, and that he believes them to be correct."

1875, Per Curiam, in Nichols v. Haynes, 78 Pa. 176: "Questions relating to books of entry as evidence, since the Act of 1869 making parties witnesses, stand upon a different footing from that on which they stood before. . . . The party now stands by force of the act on the same plane of competency as the stranger stood upon, and therefore may make the same proof as a stranger could."

1898, Harrison, J., in Bushnell v. Simpson, 119 Cal. 658, 51 Pac. 1080: "At the time when parties to an action were not competent witnesses in their own behalf, their books of account were admitted in evidence, upon a proper showing of the mode in which they had been kept, and were treated as original evidence of the matters for which they were introduced; but, since parties have been allowed to testify concerning all the facts for which the books were formerly offered, their testimony in reference thereto constitutes primary evidence of these facts, and the books of account become merely secondary or supplementary evidence. The books are not excluded as incompetent, but will be received, either in corroboration of the testimony of the parties as entries made at the time, or upon the principles by which inferior evidence is received where the party is unable to produce evidence of a higher degree."

¹ 16 Wend. 586; cited ante, § 736.

In several other Courts the tendency seems to be to put the use of such books on their natural footing of records of past recollections.² Yet the existence of statutes expressly sanctioning the use of parties' books (although these statutes in the older States were enacted before parties' incompetency was abolished) naturally renders it more difficult to reach the conclusion that the Hearsay exception covered by these statutes is abolished by implication from other statutes.

The important circumstance, however, is that whether or not the use of the books under the Hearsay exception is abolished, at any rate their use by the party as memoranda of recollection in connection with his testimony is now at his option, and that, when used from that point of view, the books would be subject to none of the restrictions of the present Exception (ante, §§ 1537-1552) regarding clerks, cash payments, credit guaranties, special contracts, kind of occupation, size of item, regularity of entries, reputation of correct bookkeeping, and the like. A survey of those restrictions seems to leave it certain that in no single respect is any advantage to be gained by using the book under the present Exception. Even when the book satisfies all these limitations, there appears to be no contingency in which the entry could be used under this branch of the Exception and yet could not also be used by ² The following decisions treat the use of parties' entries from the point of view of records of past recollection, usually without complete recognition of the abolition of their use in the old manner: Ala.: 1880, Dismukes v. Tolson, 67 Ala. 386; 1886, Hancock v. Kelly, 81 id. 378, 2 So. 281; 1892, Bolling v. Fannin, 97 id. 619, 621, 12 So. 59; Cal.: 1886, Roche v. Ware, 71 Cal. 378, 12 Pac. 284, semble; 1898, Bushnell v. Simpson, 119 id. 658, 51 Pac. 1080 (action for salary and expenses as president of a corporation; plaintiff's books of account excluded as parties' books); but compare White v. Whitney, 1889, 82 id. 166, 22 Pac. 1138; Conn.: 1896, Plumb v. Curtis, 66 Conn. 154, 33 Atl. 998; Ill.: 1875, Wolcott v. Heath, 78 Ill. 434; Mass.: 1875, Field v. Thompson, 119 Mass. 151; Mich.: 1888, Montague v. Dougan, 68 Mich. 98, 35 N. W. 840; 1886, Brown v. Wightman, 62 id. 557, 29 N. W. 98; yet compare Lester v. Thompson, 1892, 91 id. 250, 51 N. W. 893; Minn.: 1893, Culver v. Lumber Co., 53 Minn. 360, 365, 55 N. W. 552; 1892, Anchor Milling Co. v. Walsh, 108 Mo. 284, 18 S. W. 904 (plaintiff's shipping-book, sworn to by the general manager, admitted as justified by the doctrine of memoranda of recollection); 1892, Robinson v. Smith, 111 id. 205, 20 S. W.

29 (bank-books of plaintiff admitted, following the preceding case); 1897, Walsher v. Wear, 141 id. 443, 42 S. W. 928 (books by G., a contractor guaranteed by the defendant, receivable from the defendant; following Anchor Milling Co. v. Walsh); 1898, Borgess Inv. Co. v. Vette, 142 id. 560, 44 S. W. 754; Nebr.: 1892, St. Paul, F. & M. I. Co. v. Gotthelf, 35 Nebr. 351, 356, 53 N. W. 137; N. H.: 1860, Swain v. Cheney, 41 N. H. 237; 1855, Putnam v. Goodall, 31 id. 425; 1883, Pinkham v. Benton, 62 id. 690; N. J.: 1887, Rumsey v. Telephone Co., 49 N. J. L. 326, 8 Atl. 290; N. M.: 1885, Price v. Garland, 3 N. M. 505, 6 Pac. 472; Pa.: 1888, Stuckslager v. Neel, 123 Pa. 61, 16 Atl. 94; Wis.: 1866, Schettler v. Jones, 20 Wis. 412, 416; 1869, Riggs v. Weise, 24 id. 545 (preceding case approved); 1872, Winner v. Bauman, 28 id. 563, 567 (same); 1887, Curran v. Witler, 68 id. 16, 23, 31 N. W. 705 (same).

But under a statute declaring account-books to be "prima facie evidence," it has been held that their improper admission is a material error, even though they could have been used as memoranda to assist the memory: 1872, Winner v. Bauman, 28 id. 563, 567. Such a statute is anomalous and impolitic.

adoption as a record of past recollection. Under the few anomalous rulings in which a clerk's entries were admitted as the party's, and in which the party's entries were held not to need personal knowledge, and under certain of the statutory enlargements (ante, § 1519), this might not be true. But apart from these and taking the Exception as it is applied at common law by orthodox authority, it is always decidedly preferable to offer the entries from the modern point of view. If the party himself made them, as the common law required (ante, § 1538), he may now take the stand with them; if a clerk made them, as permitted by some of the statutory enlargements (ante, § 1519), the clerk may take the stand with them. It is perhaps singular that counsel have so frequently submitted to employ parties' books under the hampering restrictions of the present Exception. As for the Courts, their slowness in recognizing the full force of the change above judicially expounded is no doubt chiefly due to a rooted tendency to regard the books as independent or "original" evidence, distinct from the party's own testimony on the stand and thus to apply to them the only rule under which, in that view, they could be receivable.

§ 1561. Relation of this Branch to the main Exception; Books of Deceased Party; Books of Party's Clerk. The relation of this branch of the Exception, in favor of parties' entries, to the general Exception (ante, §§ 1521-1533) in favor of regular entries by persons in general, remains to be considered. (1) The question arises first in this way: How shall we treat an offer of regular entries by a deceased party? On principle, they should be treated from the latter point of view; i. e. they should be treated as the ordinary case of a regular entry by a deceased person. This seems to have become the practice in England,¹ where the special Exception for parties' entries was (except by statute) not recognized (ante, § 1518). But in the United States there has naturally been some confusion. One tendency is to rank them as parties' entries and to test them by the restrictions peculiar to the original practice in that branch of the Exception.² But several Courts have treated them according to the general exception in favor of regular entries by deceased persons.³ In this view, absence from the jurisdiction,⁴ as well as other circumstances (ante, § 1521), may suffice to admit the entries. No Court, however, seems to have declared

¹ 1812, Pritt v. Fairclough, 3 Camp. 305.

² 1871, Bland v. Warren, 65 N. C. 373; 1817, Ash v. Patton, 3 S. & R. 303; 1869, Hoover v. Gehr, 62 Pa. 136. In this view, the only difficulty is the lack of the suppletory oath (ante, § 1554). But in the foregoing cases the decease was regarded as a sufficient reason for dispensing with the oath. Absence from the jurisdiction ought equally to suffice; Contra: 1827, Douglass v. Hart, 4 McCord 257 (entries rejected; distinguishing Foster v. Sinkler, 1786, 1 Bay 38, and Spence v. Saunders, 1790, 1 Bay 119, and expressly refusing to assimilate the case to that of entries by absent clerks and other third parties; but in the later Thompson v. Porter, infra, the entries of a deceased partner were admitted).

Insanity ought equally to suffice: 1850, Holbrook v. Gay, 6 Cush. 216 (Dewey, J.: "The same necessity which justifies the introduction of the books of the party . . . alike seems to require and justify the admission of them where the party has become incapacitated to take the oath by reason of insanity").

³ 1889, Setchel v. Keigwin, 57 Conn. 478, 18 Atl. 594; 1837, Leighton v. Manson, 14 Me. 208; 1845, Odell v. Culbert, 9 W. & S. 67, semble; 1850, Thompson v. Porter, 4 Strobb. Eq. 65, semble.

⁴ 1875, New Haven & H. Co. v. Goodwin, 42 Conn. 231; 1786, Foster v. Sinkler, 1 Bay 40 (but see the later Douglass v. Hunt, supra, contra).

with sufficient explicitness that this is the proper treatment;⁵ though there can be no doubt of it, either as a matter of principle (because the party, when he made the entries, was not then a party), or as a matter of expediency for the person wishing to encounter the fewest restrictions for the evidence. For regular entries, then, by deceased or otherwise unavailable parties, the general exception (ante, § 1521) is the proper one to employ. (2) Under the common law limitations of this branch of the Exception, books kept by the party's clerk were not admitted as the party's books (ante, § 1538). There was thus at common law no confusion, as to a clerk's books, between the two branches of the Exception; they could come in only under the main Exception, if the clerk were deceased (ante, §§ 1521-1533), or to aid the recollection of the clerk, if living, who must then be called to the stand.⁶ But many of the statutes dealing with parties' books (ante, § 1519) contain a clause admitting books kept by a clerk; sometimes the clerk is specified as the party's, sometimes as a "disinterested" person. In either case the question is presented whether the statute is to be construed as applying to the parties' books Exception and therefore as practically abolishing the exclusion of clerks' books (ante, § 1538), or whether it is to be construed as attempting to re-state a portion of the general Exception for deceased persons' entries and therefore as merely declaratory of the common law on that point. This question, with the few rulings on the subject, has already been considered (ante, §§ 1519, 1538). It is perhaps vain to attempt to construe statutes whose framers themselves seem not to have understood precisely the bearing of their enactments.

⁵ In some modern decisions, it may be added, the two branches are hopelessly confounded; e.g., 1889, Culver v. State, 122 Ind. 562; 1883, Vinal v. Green, 21 W. Va. 308.

⁶ E.g.: 1880, Ford v. R. Co., 54 Ia. 723, 730,

7 N. W. 126 (time-books kept by defendant's officers or employees; persons keeping them required to be called); and cases cited ante, § 1521.

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE.

TOPIC VI: SUNDRY STATEMENTS OF DECEASED PERSONS.

CHAPTER LII.

A. DECLARATIONS ABOUT PRIVATE BOUNDARIES.

- § 1563. History of the Exception.
- § 1564. General Scope of the Exception.
- § 1565. Death of Declarant.
- § 1566. No Interest to Misrepresent; Owner's Statement, excluded.
- § 1567. Massachusetts Rule: Declaration must be made (1) on the Land, and (2) by the Owner in Possession.
- § 1568. Knowledge of Declarant.
- § 1569. Opinion Rule.
- § 1570. Form of Declaration; Maps, Surveys, etc.

§ 1571. Discriminations as to Res Gestæ, Admissions, etc.

B. ANCIENT DEED-RECITALS.

- § 1573. Ancient Deed-Recitals, to prove a Lost Deed, or Boundary, or Pedigree.
- § 1574. Other Principles Discriminated.

C. STATEMENTS BY DECEASED PERSONS IN GENERAL.

§ 1576. Statutory Exception for all Statements of Deceased Persons.

At this point may be considered a few Exceptions, recognized in a limited number of jurisdictions, admitting certain kinds of statements of individuals deceased or otherwise unavailable. These Exceptions are related to the general group of the foregoing ones, in that the admissibility of the statements depends on the declarant being deceased or otherwise unavailable, and they are thus distinguished from all the ensuing Exceptions, in which the declarant need not be shown unavailable; they are distinguished from the Exception next following (Reputation), in that they involve individual statements, not reputation.

A. DECLARATIONS ABOUT PRIVATE BOUNDARIES.

§ 1563. History of the Exception. The use of individual declarations about private boundary must be carefully distinguished from the use of Reputation to prove boundaries, in the ensuing Exception (post, § 1582); historically, the former grew out of the latter, in some jurisdictions; but they now exist as separate, each with its peculiar limitations. Reputation, whether about boundaries or about other things, stands on its own ground as fulfilling the requirements of a distinct Hearsay Exception. The present Exception is concerned with ordinary individual statements, which in themselves show neither the kind of Necessity nor the kind of Circumstantial Guarantee later to be considered with reference to Reputation.

The present Exception had historically three sources, these distinct origins being now lost in one blended form. (1) In some of the Southern States, the Reputation Exception for land boundaries and customs (post, § 1582), as stated in early English and American treatises, was misunderstood or deliberately expanded, and came to be regarded as justifying the reception of individual statements, taken solely on the credit of the individual declarant.¹ (2) In Massachusetts, the res gestæ doctrine, whether in the general and loose sense of something done (post, § 1795) or in some special relation to an adverse possessor's declarations (post, § 1778), was regarded as covering these statements.² (3) In New Hampshire, and perhaps elsewhere, the custom of periodical perambulations of town boundaries (brought over from England) was recognized as one vehicle of introducing reputation evidence (post, § 1592), and then statements of individuals, particularly surveyors, were taken as being of equal value with these perambulations.³

§ 1564. General Scope of the Exception. In the following passages from opinions in the various jurisdictions the general tenor and purpose of the Exception may be seen :

1813, Tilghman, C. J., in Caufman v. Cedar Spring, 6 Binn. 62: "Where boundary is the subject, what has been said by a deceased person is received as evidence. It forms an exception to the general rule."

1832, Henderson, C. J., in Sasser v. Herring, 3 Dev. L. 342: "We have in questions of boundary given to the single declarations of a deceased individual as to a line or corner the weight of common reputation. . . . Whether this is within the spirit and reason of the rule it is now too late to inquire."

1844, Parker, C. J., in Smith v. Powers, 15 N. H. 563: "It is true that the decisions in England seem to restrict the evidence of the declarations of deceased persons respecting boundaries . . . to what the deceased said relative to the public opinion respecting the boundary. But the testimony has not been limited in this country. . . . The declarations of a person deceased, who appeared to have had means of knowledge and no interest in making the declarations, are competent evidence upon a question of boundary, even in a case of private right."¹

§ 1565. Death of Declarant. The principle of necessity (ante, § 1421) was found in the usual lack of other sufficient evidence for proving boundaries. The perishable nature of the landmarks, and the incompleteness of the records, rendered it necessary to resort to such statements, oral or written, as could be had from deceased persons having competent knowledge. Though the changed conditions of life in the later history of our communities have greatly diminished this necessity, it sufficed in the beginning to establish the exception in the law :

¹ See the quotations in the next section.

² See the citations in § 1567, post.

³ 1829, Lawrence v. Haynes, 5 N. H. 36 (Richardson, C. J. "It would be very singular if the circumstance that a line has been perambulated and marked as the true line by men who had the means of knowing whether it was the true line or not and whose duty and whose interests bound them to perambulate and mark no line but the true one, must be held to afford no evidence of its being the true line. It is in all cases evidence").

¹ Besides the rulings in the following sections, naming the specific limitations, the rule is recognized in the following cases: Ga. Code 1895, § 5183 (quoted post, § 1587); Md.: 1735, Howell's Lessee v. Tilden, 1 Harr. & McH. 84; 1766, Bladen v. Cockey, ib. 280; 1770, Redding's

Lessee v. M'Cubbin, ib. 368; 1774, Hawkins v. Hanson, ib. 531; 1778, Weems' Lessee v. Disney, 4 id. 156; N. C.: 1805, Harris v. Powell, 2 Hayw. 349; 1837, Hartzog v. Hubbard, 32 Dev. & B. 241; 1859, Scoggin v. Dalrymple, 7 Jones L. 46; 1886, Bethea v. Byrd, 95 N. C. 310, and intervening cases cited; Pa.: 1815, Hamilton v. Menor, 2 S. & R. 73; 1898, Mineral R. & M. Co. v. Auten, 188 Pa. 568, 41 Atl. 327 (ancient survey); S. C.: 1825, Spear v. Coate, 3 McCord 229; 1886, Sexton v. Hollis, 26 S. C. 231, 236, 1 S. E. 893; Tenn.: 1812, Beard's Lessee v. Talbot, 1 Cooke 142; Tex.: 1866, Stroud v. Springfield, 28 Tex. 666; 1878, Hurt v. Evans, 49 id. 316; 1887, Tucker v. Smith, 68 id. 478, 3 S. W. 671; Va.: 1837, Harriman v. Brown, 8 Leigh 712; Vt.: 1896, Martyn v. Curtis, 68 Vt. 397, 35 Atl. 333.

1859, Manly, J., in Scoggin v. Dalrymple, 7 Jones L. 46: "Traditionary evidence has long been received by the courts of North Carolina in questions of private boundaries as well as public. . . . The necessity for such a departure from the common law principle grew out of the inartificial manner in which the lands of the State were originally surveyed and marked, making it necessary, in order to fix the position of the respective parcels, to resort more frequently to tradition, and to give this kind of evidence greater efficiency by enlarging its limits."

1864, Pierpont, J., in Wood v. Willard, 37 Vt. 387: "In many of the States, and especially in this State, the territory within their limits was first divided into townships, and these were soon after subdivided into small lots and distributed between the several proprietors. Almost the only evidence left upon the land, to indicate the location of the lines either of the townships or of the divisions between the proprietors, was marks upon the trees standing thereon, and these evidences, from lapse of time, accidental causes, and the cutting off of the timber, are almost entirely obliterated. . . . If it be said that the lines must be established by witnesses who have personal knowledge of their original location, they cannot be proved at all, as in the great majority of cases all such persons are now dead."

Nevertheless, in fulfilling this condition of necessity, it was never required that the absence of other satisfactory evidence should in a given case be shown. That absence being assumed to be a general feature commonly existing, the only requirement was that the decease of the specific person whose declarations were offered should be shown;¹ in other words, there was a necessity for all the evidence that could be had, and, if this person were deceased, the only evidence available from him was his hearsay statements. It would seem, however, that insanity, or absence from the jurisdiction, would here not suffice (as it does for some of the foregoing Exceptions); because the necessity in general is predicated of titles and boundaries of long standing, for which the lapse of time has operated to destroy other evidence; and hence if the matter is one of the present generation, or if the evidence in question comes from the present generation (as it would if the declarant were merely absent), this necessity could hardly be presumed to exist.

§ 1566. No Interest to Misrepresent; Owner's Statement excluded. The general principle of a circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness (ante, § 1422) is seen in the requirement that the declarant shall have had no interest or no motive to misrepresent; the words "interest" and "motive" being here used by the Courts interchangeably. The general notion is that he must stand in such a position that the Court cannot see any reason to expect misrepresentation:

1870, Nesmith, J., in Smith v. Forrest, 49 N. H. 239: "The party or declarant must have no interest to misrepresent. . . . It will be for the Court and jury to determine . . . whether they had any motives to misrepresent by a statement too favorable to their own pecuniary interest. . . . The evidence tends to show that the location of the bound where the father says it was established was in disparagement of the declarant's title; therefore it conveys or implies no purpose to misrepresent."¹

¹ This is mentioned in all the cases; see the quotations in the preceding section, and the following cases: 1901, Barrett v. Kelly, 131 Ala. 378, 30 So. 824 (declarations of a person not shown to be deceased, excluded; the statement of the rule is hopelessly confused); 1901, O'Connell v. Cox, 179 Mass. 250, 60 N. E. 580 (excluded, because the decease of the declarant was not shown).

¹ Accord: 1888, Lawrence v. Tennant, 64

In particular, a statement by an owner himself about his own boundaries would thus be inadmissible:

1827, Richardson, C. J., in Shepherd v. Thompson, 4 N. H. 215: (excluding declarations as to the boundary of their own land): "It must be presumed to have been their interest to extend the boundaries of the lot, and their declarations in favor of their interest were clearly not admissible."²

Nevertheless, a few Courts will admit even an owner's declarations, provided he appears to have had at the time no motive to misrepresent.³ This feature of the general rule distinguishes it sharply from the Massachusetts variant next noticed.

§ 1567. Massachusetts Rule; Declaration must be made (1) on the Land, and (2) by the Owner in Possession. The general rule, as first established in the Southern States and thence widely adopted elsewhere (ante, § 1563) made no other limitations than the preceding. But two other limitations, one of them in conflict with the preceding, obtained originally in Massachusetts; these were due to the associated notions of res gestæ and verbal acts (post, § 1778) which in that jurisdiction, as already noticed (ante, § 1563), served as the parent for the present Exception.

(1) The declarant must have been, at the time of the declaration, on the land and engaged in pointing out the boundaries mentioned. This originally was purely a Massachusetts variant, of long standing.¹ Though it once obtained a footing in New Hampshire and Vermont, it has there since been repudiated.² But, by a not unnatural misunderstanding of the local nature of this limitation, it has since unfortunately been adopted thence N. H. 540, 15 Atl. 543; 1886, Bethea v. Byrd, 95 N. C. 310; 1825, Spear v. Coate, 3 McCord 229; 1901, Tracy v. Eggleston, 47 C. C. A. 357, 108 Fed. 324 (declarations as to boundary by a deceased public surveyor, made on the land while pointing out a mound, admitted; Pardee, J., diss., because the declarant was at the time interested in a controversy as to the boundaries); 1864, Wood v. Willard, 37 Vt. 387; 1868, Powers v. Silsby, 41 id. 291; 1878, Child v. Kingsbury, 46 id. 53; 1837, Harriman v. Brown, 8 Leigh 713; 1895, Reusens v. Lawson, 91 Va. 226, 21 S. E. 347, semble; 1877, Hill v. Proctor, 10 W. Va. 84.

² Accord: 1793, Porter v. Warner, 2 Root 23; 1832, Sasser v. Herring, 3 Dev. L. 342; 1885, Halstead v. Mullen, 93 N. C. 252; 1888, Taylor v. Glenn, 29 S. C. 292, 297, 7 S. E. 483; 1897, State v. Crocker, 49 id. 242, 27 S. E. 49 (lines on a plot inserted by the surveyor at the direction of a claimant, excluded); 1898, Scaife v. Laud Co., 33 C. C. A. 47, 90 Fed. 238 (by an heir of the estate, excluded); 1887, Tucker v. Smith, 68 Tex. 478, 3 S. W. 671; 1880, Evarts v. Young, 52 Vt. 334.

³ 1895, Robinson v. Dewhurst, 15 C. C. A. 466, 68 Fed. 336 (but it will be noticed that this case, as cited post, § 1567, also follows the Massachusetts variant, and has evidently confused the two forms); 1899, Turner F. L. Co. v. Burns, 71 Vt. 354, 45 Atl. 896 (declarations of owners, admitted on the facts); 1883, Corbleys v. Ripley, 22 W. Va. 154 (owner's declarations inadmissible, unless at the time he had no interest to misrepresent); 1897, High v. Paucake, 42 id. 602, 26 S. E. 536.

There have also been attempts to apply the post litem motam restriction of other Hearsay exceptions: 1888, Taylor v. Glenn, 29 S. C. 292, 297; 1853, Smith v. Chapman, 10 Gratt. 445, 455.

¹ 1832, Van Dusen v. Turner, 12 Pick. 532; 1842, Daggett v. Shaw, 5 Metc. 226; 1856, Bartlett v. Emerson, 7 Gray 175; 1856, Ware v. Brookhouse, 7 id. 454; 1857, Flagg v. Mason, 8 id. 556; 1857, Whitney v. Bacon, 9 id. 206; 1864, Morrill v. Titcomb, 8 All. 100; 1875, Long v. Colton, 116 Mass. 414; 1886, Peck v. Clark, 142 id. 440, 8 N. E. 335. But declarations not referring to boundaries, but merely asserting some title, are not hereunder admissible: Ware v. Brookhouse, Morrill v. Titcomb.

² N. H.: 1870, Smith v. Forrest, 49 N. H. 237; overruling Melvin v. Marshall, 1851, 22 id. 382; Vt.: 1868, Powers v. Silsby, 41 Vt. 291, repudiating the dictum in Wood v. Willard, 1864, 37 Vt. 387; but a later case looks backward again: 1899, Turner F. L. Co. v. Burns, 71 id. 354, 45 Atl. 896, semble (must be made "upon or in the vicinity of the boundaries, and pointing them out").

in Maine,³ New Jersey,⁴ Pennsylvania,⁵ and perhaps in other jurisdictions also.⁶

(2) In Massachusetts, further, an anomalous and meaningless restriction is observed that the declarant must also have been, at the time of the declaration, in possession as owner; ⁷ for example, a mere surveyor's statement will not be received; this doctrine, again, being due historically (ante, § 1563) to the parental relationship, in this jurisdiction, of the res gestæ rule. It will be noted that this limitation is precisely the reverse of that of the usual rule (ante, § 1566); i. e. an owner's declaration is by that rule excluded, but by the Massachusetts rule is admitted; and vice versa for a surveyor's statement. This element of the variant rule has apparently been adopted in only two other jurisdictions.⁸ It is to be hoped that in due time this and the preceding anomaly of the Massachusetts rule will cease to vex the legitimate course of precedent elsewhere, and that other Courts will fully appreciate that the rulings in that jurisdiction and its few followers must be wholly ignored in applying the present Exception.

§ 1568. Knowledge of Declarant. The declarant, upon general testimonial principles (ante, §§ 1424, 653) must appear to have had knowledge of the boundary spoken of, or to have been in a position to acquire such knowledge:

1837, Tucker, C. J., in Harriman v. Brown, 8 Leigh 713: "[Such declarations are admissible] provided such person had peculiar means of knowing the fact; as, for instance, ³ 1888, Royal v. Chandler, 81 Me. 119, 16 Atl. 410; 1899, Wilson v. Rowe, 93 id. 205, 44 Atl. 615.

⁴ 1886, Curtis v. Aaronson, 49 N. J. L. 77, 7 Atl. 886.

⁵ 1856, Bender v. Pitzer, 27 Pa. 335 (Knox, J.: "Nor was the boundary actually shown to the witness when the declaration was made"); followed in Kennedy v. Lubold, 88 id. 255 (1878); Kramer v. Goodlander, 98 id. 369 (1881).

⁶ U. S.: By a misunderstanding of the Texas rule, which has no such limitation (ante, § 1566), this element was required in Hunnicut v. Peyton, 1880, 102 U. S. 364; but it is doubtful since Clement v. Packer, 1887, 125 U. S. 325, 8 Sup. 907, whether this requirement would be insisted on where the law of the State did not prescribe it; in Ayres v. Watson, 1890, 137 U. S. 596, 11 Sup. 201, the doubt was left unsolved; in Robinson v. Dewhurst, 1895, 15 C. C. A. 466, 68 Fed. 336, it was held, thinking of this doctrine, that the declaration must be made while on the land and pointing out, or at least must be not a mere casual recital; so also Martin v. Iughes, 1898, 33 C. C. A. 198, 90 Fed. 632 (for Pennsylvania; declarant must be on the land; here a deceased surveyor).

Ala.: 1902, Southern Iron Works v. Central of G. R. Co., 131 Ala. 649, 31 So. 723 (declarations as to private boundaries, held inadmissible, except when made by persons in possession and pointing out boundaries; following Hunnicut v. Peyton, U. S., and adopting the Massachusetts rule); 1900, Smith v. Glenn, 129 Cal. 18, 62 Pac. 180 (owner's declarations while in possession and surveying, admitted).

It is regrettable that this abnormal Massachusetts rule should be given such notice by other Courts to the confusion of the simple and settled rule of orthodox tradition.

⁷ The full statement of the Massachusetts rule is as follows: 1842, Hubbard, J., in Daggett v. Shaw, 5 Metc. 226: "Declarations of ancient persons, made while in possession of land owned by them, pointing out their boundaries on the land itself, and who are deceased at the time of the trial, are admissible in evidence, where nothing appears to show that they were interested in thus pointing out their boundaries." Accord: 1856, Bartlett v. Emerson, 7 Gray 175; 1857, Whitney v. Bacon, 9 id. 206; 1882, Boston Water P. Co. v. Hanlon, 132 Mass. 483 (deceased surveyor's field notes and plottings, excluded); 1886, Peck v. Clark, 142 id. 440, 8 N. E. 335, and cases ante, par. 1. Compare the cases cited post, § 1573, which rest on a different doctrine.

⁸ 1891, Royal v. Chandler, 83 Me. 152, 21 Atl. 842; 1899, Wilson v. Rowe, 93 id. 205, 44 Atl. 615; 1886, Curtis v. Aaronson, 49 N. J. L. 77, 7 Atl. 886.

In Canada, no certain rule appears in the cases: 1847, Doe v. Murray, 3 Kerr N. Br. 335 (declarations of a deceased surveyor while pointing out boundaries, admitted, "as part of the res gestæ"); 1864, Sartell v. Scott, 6 All. N. Br. 166 (declarations of an owner in possession while pointing out the boundary of land he was selling, excluded); 1877, O'Connor v. Dunn, 2 Ont. App. 247 (deceased surveyor's notes, not admitted).

the surveyor or chain carrier who were engaged upon the original survey; or owner of the tract, or of an adjoining tract calling for the same boundaries; and so of tenants, processioners, and others whose duty or interest would lead them to diligent inquiry and accurate information of the fact.”

1856, Lee, J., in Clements v. Kyles, 13 Gratt. 478 (rejecting hearsay statements): “It is said that the declarant was living on the land at the time, but in what character is not stated. . . . That his living within the bounds of the survey gave him the opportunity to see trees marked as corners of some survey, found accidentally or otherwise, would surely not be sufficient, unless some duty or interest can be traced to him by which he would have been prompted to make diligent inquiry and to obtain accurate information, within the meaning of the rule as propounded in Harriman v. Brown.”¹

§ 1569. Opinion Rule. The Opinion rule (post, § 1956), for the reasons already indicated under the Exception for Dying Declarations (ante, § 1447), can hardly be thought to apply to these extrajudicial statements of deceased persons. Nevertheless, it is occasionally invoked.¹

§ 1570. Form of the Declaration; Maps, Surveys, etc. The declaration may be either oral or written; and statements in the form of maps, plans, surveys, and the like, have been constantly admitted under the present Exception.¹ From this is to be distinguished the use of surveys or maps under the Exception for Reputation (post, § 1592), and under the Exception for Official Statements (post, § 1665).

§ 1571. Discriminations as to Res Gestæ, Admissions, etc. From the use, under this Exception, of a deceased person's declarations as to boundaries, are to be discriminated other kinds of declarations about land, coming under other principles; these are chiefly (1) declarations by deceased persons offered as the vehicle of reputation (post, § 1584); (2) declarations by deceased persons of facts against their proprietary interest (ante, § 1458); (3) declarations by a party or privy constituting admissions of title (ante, § 1082); (4) declarations made as verbal acts, coloring the nature of possession of land (post, §§ 1778-1780). The practical differences in the operation of these distinct principles are elsewhere more fully pointed out (ante, §§ 1459, 1087, post, § 1780).

¹ Accord: 1860, Morton v. Folger, 15 Cal. 279; 1870, Smith v. Forrest, 49 N. H. 237; 1902, Westfelt v. Adams, 131 N. C. 379, 42 S. E. 823 (declarations, as to a corner tree, not in view at the time of the declaration, admissible, if identification is practicable); 1856, Bender v. Pitzer, 27 Pa. 335 (“It was no part of the offer that A. J. had made the boundary, or that he was present when it was made, or that he had subsequently examined it, or had run the lines of either survey. . . . It was the mere declaration of one who did not appear to have correct information on the subject”); 1888, Taylor v. Glenn, 29 S. C. 292, 297 (declarations of a neighbor, not having special knowledge, excluded); 1900, Montgomery v. Lipscomb, 105 Tenn. 144, 58 S. W. 306 (declaration of former owner or surveyor, admissible; obscure); 1887, Tucker v. Smith, 68 Tex. 478, 3 S. W. 671; 1880, Hunnicut v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 364; 1895, Binson v. Dewhurst, 15 C. C. A. 466, 68 Fed.

336; 1864, Wood v. Willard, 37 Vt. 387; 1868, Powers v. Sibley, 41 id. 291; 1873, Hadley v. Howe, 46 id. 142; 1895, Fry v. Stowers, 92 Va. 13, 32 S. E. 500 (the son of an adjacent owner and a chain-bearer upon a different survey, excluded); 1877, Hill v. Proctor, 10 W. Va. 84.

¹ 1853, Smith v. Chapman, 10 Gratt. 445, 455 (chain-carrier's statement as to “the waters on which the P. survey should lie,” excluded, as opinion); 1897, High v. Pancake, 42 W. Va. 602, 26 S. E. 536 (“We must have a declaration establishing a fact, as a corner tree or particular marked line, not simply a statement that the land is within his boundary or the same conveyed in a certain deed, or that a line would cross a creek at a certain point, without more”). Compare the cases cited post, § 1956.

¹ Examples: 1860, Morton v. Folger, 15 Cal. 279; 1870, Smith v. Forrest, 49 N. H. 239; 1866, Stroud v. Springfield, 28 Tex. 665; 1867, Welder v. Carroll, 29 id. 333.

B. ANCIENT DEED-RECITALS.

§ 1573. Ancient Deed-Recitals, to prove Lost Deed, or Boundary, or Pedigree. There is a limited use of deed-recitals, by way of exception to the Hearsay rule, which has its root in orthodox and ancient tradition, and yet has never received great encouragement; and finds recognition in only a small number of precedents. This use of deed-recitals seems to have been recognized for three different purposes.

(1) Where in one deed the contents of another deed are recited, the rule requiring production of the original (ante, § 1179) must of course first be satisfied; but, supposing it to be satisfied by proof that the other deed once existed and was lost, then the recital, according to an early and unquestioned ruling, is admissible as evidence of the contents and the execution of the lost deed.¹ This precedent has been justified by eminent American judges in the following language:

1811, Tilghman, C. J., in Garwood v. Dennis, 4 Binn. 314, 327 (admitting recitals, in an ancient deed, of the existence and contents of another deed, afterwards lost, by a predecessor in title ante litem motam, the reciter being a trustee to make partition): "The assertion of such persons must make a strong impression. But it is objected that, however impressive the declaration of a man of character may be, even without his oath, yet the law admits the word of no one in evidence without oath. The general rule certainly is so; but subject to relaxation in cases of necessity or extreme inconvenience. How is it expected that a deed like the present is to be proved, when the subscribing witnesses have been dead eight and twenty years and the deed itself is not to be found? . . . Is it not necessary to resort to secondary evidence without oath?"

1830, Story, J., in Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 83: "There are cases in which such a recital may be used as evidence even against strangers. If, for instance, there be the recital of a lease in a deed of release, and in a suit against a stranger the title under the release comes in question, there the recital of the lease in such release is not per se evidence of the existence of the lease; but if the existence and loss of the lease be established by other evidence, there the recital is admissible as secondary proof in the absence of more perfect evidence, to establish the contents of the lease; and if the transaction be an ancient one and possession has been long held under such release and is not otherwise to be accounted for, there the recital will of itself materially fortify the presumption from lapse of time and length of possession of the original existence of the lease."²

¹ 1704, Ford v. Grey, 6 Mod. 44, 1 Salk. 285 ("A fine was produced, but no deed declaring the uses; but a deed was offered in evidence which did recite a deed of limitation of the uses; and the question was whether that was evidence. And the Court said, that the bare recital of a deed was not evidence, but that if it could be proved that such a deed had been, and [was] lost, it would do if it were recited in another").

² Accord: 1900, Norris v. Hall, 124 Mich. 170, 82 N. W. 832 (recitals in a deed, a power of attorney, and a court order, of 1846, that title passed on S.'s death to survivors, etc., admitted); N. J. Gen. St. 1896, Conveyances, § 194 (recital of a letter of attorney in a deed recorded for ten years, admissible to prove its existence, on oath by the claimant that he has seen the letter); 1811, Garwood v. Dennis, 4 Binn. 314, 327, 332, 340 (but Tilghman, C. J., alone takes this reason; Brackenridge, J., seems to take another reason, noted ante, § 1133; and Yeates, J., dissents); 1900, Dorff v. Schmunk, 197 Pa. 298, 47 Atl. 113 (after evidence of loss, a recital in a deed of 1860 was admitted to prove the lost deed); 1830, Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 83 (admissible to show contents, if the original's existence is otherwise shown, and loss proved; see quotation supra); 1832, Crane v. Morris, 6 id. 598, 610 (same; lapse of time may be sufficient evidence of execution and loss); 1866, Deery v. Cray, 5 Wall. 795, 797, 805 (recital of a will, of seisin, etc., admitted; Carver v. Jackson followed).

It would seem to be implied in this doctrine that the lost deed must be an ancient one (post, § 2137), or at least that no other evidence of execution or contents is available. Moreover, a few cases seem to impose the additional condition, analogous to that required for authenticating ancient deeds (post, § 2141), that the premises claimed should have been in possession of the claimant, as a necessary corroborative circumstance.³ That such a recital is not admissible where the original deed recited is not accounted for as lost or the like, seems unquestioned.⁴

(2) In Massachusetts, a series of precedents admits a recital in an ancient deed to show the location of a boundary or monument,⁵ though possibly the scope of the exception may prove to be somewhat larger. But the basis of the rule is the probability of the recital's truth by reason of its having been acted upon in contemporaneous transactions; and this limitation is strictly applied.⁶

(3) A recital, in an ancient deed, of a pedigree of inheritance is by some Courts treated as admissible to show the state of the relationship.⁷ Here also

³ 1860, McKinnon v. Bliss, 21 N. Y. 206, 211 (recitals in a will of the plaintiff's predecessor, excluded; "assertions of title or claims of ownership made in deeds or wills may in some rare cases be evidence, . . . but only in connection with other proof of a long-continued and undisputed possession in accordance with the right or title claimed"); 1798, Frost v. Brown, 2 Bay 135, 138 (recital, in a deed by the offeror's ancestor W., of a lost deed from S. to W., offered in corroboration, to show the latter deed's existence; the offeror not being in possession; the Court equally divided); 1831, Sims v. Meacham; 2 Bail. 101 (recitals in an old deed of a State grant of a certain date, the public records of that year being lost, held "insufficient" to raise a presumption of such grant).

⁴ 1885, Calloway v. Cossart, 45 Ark. 81, 85 (recitals of payment and receipt of patent, excluded); 1823, Hite v. Shrader, 3 Litt. 445, 447; 1810, Bonnet v. Devebaugh, 4 Binn. 175, 178, 190 (recitals in warrant dated 1763, of survey on proprietaries' order, excluded, apparently because loss of original was not shown); 1856, Watrous v. McGrew, 16 Tex. 505, 513.

The following case stands on peculiar grounds: 1837, Jones v. Inge, 5 Port. 327, 335 (grantee of fee-patent from the U. S., the patent reciting that it was given to the grantee as purchaser from an Indian reservee; evidence of the Indian's incapacity to reserve and his infancy when selling was offered; held, (1) that recitals in general are not evidential against strangers; (2) that under the Indian treaties, the U. S. patent-recitals were intended to be admissible and indisputable as against strangers; (3) but that nevertheless the deed from the Indian to the patentee must be accounted for).

Compare the rules about grantor's admissions (ante, § 1082), and oral admissions of a deed's contents (ante, § 1256).

⁵ 1840, Sparhawk v. Bullard, 1 Metc. 95, 101 ("Recitals in ancient deeds are always competent evidence"; here, of a boundary); 1870,

Morris v. Callanan, 105 Mass. 129 (description of boundary in a deed more than 50 years old, admitted); 1879, Drury v. R. Co., 127 id. 571, 581 (plans of 1805 and 1816, showing the position of a creek, admitted); 1882, Randall v. Chase, 133 id. 210 (deed of 1839 admitted, reciting location of a way).

⁶ 1882, Boston Water Power Co. v. Hanlon, 132 Mass. 483 (the document must be "of such a character as usually accompany transfers of title or acts of possession, and purport to form a part of actual transactions referring to coexisting subjects by which their truth can be tested, and there is deemed to be a presumption that they are not fabricated"; here excluding a deceased surveyor's field-notes and plottings, because not "acted on"); 1896, Whitman v. Shaw, 166 id. 451, 44 N. E. 333 (a plan and field-notes, made in 1818, by a surveyor under the direction of the predecessors in title of either plaintiff or defendant, the latter claiming by adverse possession, as well as by deed, and the dispute involving a boundary line, admitted, as representing "actual transactions").

⁷ Haw.: 1901, Mist v. Kapiolani Estate, 13 Haw. 523 (deceased grantor's recitals of relationship, in a deed later than 1853; "after a relationship and the death had been established by evidence aliunde, the recitals were properly admitted"); N. Y.: 1830, Jackson v. Russell, 4 Wend. 543, 548 (recitals in an old deed, used to show death of persons in interest); 1901, Young v. Shulenberg, 165 N. Y. 385, 59 N. E. 135 (recitals in an ancient deed, admitted to prove relationship; but the Court inconsistently proceeds to apply the limitations of the pedigree exception, ante, § 1480); Pa.: 1782, Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. 64, 67 (recital "with respect to a pedigree," but not recital of another deed, admissible); 1795, Paxton v. Price, 1 Yeates 500 ("recitals in a conveyance are evidence of pedigree, the rules in general being much relaxed in this particular"); 1844, James v. Letzler, 8 W. & S. 192 ("There is an exception in the case of

the antiquity of the deed depends upon the rules of Authentication (post, § 2137). Moreover, in most of the precedents, the analogous requirement is mentioned (post, § 2141) that possession of the premises under the deed must also have existed as a corroborative circumstance.

§ 1574. Other Principles Discriminated. From the foregoing use of deed-recitals as a hearsay exception, the application of certain other principles must be discriminated.

(1) From the hearsay use of ancient deed-recitals to prove the contents of another deed must be distinguished (a) the use of deed-recitals as admissions of the other deed's contents (ante, § 1082). The practical differences in the rules' limitations are three; by the former the deed must be ancient, but not by the latter; by the former the deed must be lost or destroyed, but probably not by the latter, though here there is much controversy (ante, § 1257); by the former the recitals are usable for or against any one, as is all evidence under hearsay exceptions, while by the latter they are usable only against the party whose predecessor or privy in title made the deed. (b) The use of recitals of other deeds in the deed of a sheriff, trustee, or other official (post, § 1664) must also be distinguished; for the latter are admissible under the Exception for Official Statements, and very different conditions of admissibility there apply. (c) The use of a party's self-serving statements as explaining away his admissions (ante, § 1133) may also serve to admit deed-recitals which would not be admissible under the present Exception.

an ancient deed containing a recital, where the possession has accompanied such deed; . . . in deeds there are often recitals of marriages, births, or deaths without issue, and other facts incident to the conveyance," which thus become admissible; here, a recital of one P.'s attainder and forfeiture); 1867, Bowser v. Cravener, 56 Pa. 132, 142 (approving Paxton v. Price); 1870, Scharff v. Keener, 64 id. 376, 378 (recitals of pedigree in an ancient deed accompanied by possession, admitted); Tex.: 1863, Chamblee v. Tarbox, 27 Tex. 139, 145 (marriage); U. S.: 1826, Stokes v. Dawes, 4 Mason 268, Story, J. ("after 60 years, it is not too much to say that a fact of heirship, stated in a deed under which possession was held without question for 30 years, may well be admitted"); 1866, Deery v. Cray, 5 Wall. 795, 805 (heirship); 1886, Fulkerston v. Holmes, 117 U. S. 389, 399, 6 Sup. 780 (preceding case approved; but the rule is treated as if governed by the pedigree exception); 1902, Stockley v. Cissna, 56 C. C. A. 324, 119 Fed. 812, 824 (recitals of heirship in a deed of 1897, not admitted against a stranger; Carver v. Jackson, supra, approved); Vt.: 1841, Potter v. Washburn, 13 Vt. 558, 564 (mere recital of heirship in a deed, not receivable, "especially where the deed is of recent date"); 1842, Bell v. Porter, 14 id. 307, 309 ("However it may be with such a recital uncorroborated," the sequence of 30 or 40 years' possession by subsequent grantees here sufficed for admission); Wis.: St. 1901, c. 28 ("Whenever any deed, mortgage, land contract, or other conveyance, shall contain a recital in respect to pedigree, consanguinity, marriage, celibacy, adoption, or descent, and shall have been recorded in the proper register's office for 20 years," and is otherwise admissible, it shall be received as evidence of the facts recited; so also a recital in "any will of real estate, or a copy thereof, foreign or domestic," if duly probated); 1885, Watts v. Owens, 62 Wis. 512, 524, 22 N. W. 720, semble (admissible). Contra: Eng.: 1826, Fort v. Clarke, 1 Russ. 601 (recitals of pedigree in a deed of 1793, excluded); semble, admissible if possession had been shown in the predecessors thus named); 1836, Slaney v. Wade, 1 Myl. & Cr. 338, 345, 358, per Eldon, L. C. (recitals of pedigree in an old deed, excluded); Ga.: 1900, Dixon v. Monroe, 112 Ga. 158, 37 S. E. 180 (recital of heirship, excluded); Pa.: 1838, Murphy v. Loyd, 3 Whart. 538, 549 (recitals by a grantor of his own pedigree in an ancient deed, excluded); Tex.: 1898, Watkins v. Smith, 91 Tex. 589, 45 S. W. 560 (recitals of heirship in predecessors' deeds, not admissible).

Compare the rule for hearsay statements of a deceased member of a family (ante, §§ 1480-1503).

A Canadian statute seems to introduce an exception of large and indefinite scope: Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 134, § 2 (in completing contracts for sale of land, "recitals, statements and description of facts, matters and parties, contained in deeds, instruments, acts of Parliament or statutory declarations 20 years old at the date of the contract" are evidence).

(d) The use of copies of ancient deeds not verified by a witness on the stand (ante, § 1281, post, § 2143) must also be distinguished. (e) The use of recitals of a power of attorney in an ancient deed, as sufficient evidence of the power's existence, falls under another head (post, § 2144).

(2) From the use under the present Exception of ancient deed-recitals to prove boundary (as in Massachusetts) must be distinguished (a) the use, under the foregoing branch of the Exception, of declarations by deceased persons about private boundary, particularly the Massachusetts form of the rule (ante, §§ 1564, 1567); and also (b) the use of reputation to prove boundary, under the next Exception (post, §§ 1587, 1592), by which ancient deeds, leases, maps, and the like, become admissible so far as they can be construed as the vehicle of reputation. (c) Moreover, where adverse possession is relied upon, the ancestor's making of a deed, reciting the extent of his claim, may be admissible as a verbal act coloring possession (post, § 1778). (d) Finally, in proving acts of adverse possession, the question may arise whether the mere making of a deed or lease is evidence of possession (ante, § 157).

(3) From the use of deed-recitals of pedigree, under the present Exception, must be distinguished the use of declarations of relationship by a member of the family, under the Family History Exception (ante, §§ 1480, 1497). The difference is that under the present Exception it is not necessary that the reciter should be related to the persons mentioned. Nevertheless, most of the recitals admitted under the present Exception would have been admissible under the former; and it is possible that the present one grew out of passages in earlier writers stating the former in loose language.

C. STATEMENTS BY DECEASED PERSONS IN GENERAL.

§ 1576. Statutory Exception for all Statements of Deceased. There was a time, in the early 1800s, when it came near to being settled that a general exception should exist for all statements of deceased persons who had competent knowledge and no apparent interest to deceive;¹ but this tendency was of short duration and was decisively negated.² Nevertheless, such an exception, uniting as it does the essential requirements of an exception to the Hearsay rule (ante, §§ 1420-1424), commends itself as a just addition to the present sharply defined exceptions, and foreshadows undoubtedly the enlightened policy of the future:

1876, Mellish, L. J., in Sugden v. St. Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 154: "I have not the least hesitation in saying that I think it would be a highly desirable improvement in the law if the rule was that all statements, made by persons who are dead, respecting matters of which they had a personal knowledge, and made ante litem motam, should be admitted. There is no doubt that by rejecting such evidence we do reject a most valuable source of evidence. . . . [But] it appears to me that it would be better to leave it to the Legislature to make the improvement, which in my opinion ought to be made, in our present rules with regard to the admissibility of evidence of that description."

¹ Cases cited ante, § 1476.

1092 (statements by a deceased attesting witness, excluded).

² 1844, Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Cl. & F. 85; 1901, Morell v. Morell, 157 Ind. 179, 60 N. E.

1879, Cockburn, L. C. J., in R. v. Bedingfield, 14 Cox Cr. 342: "I regret that according to the law of England any statement made by the deceased should not be admissible."

1886, Herschell, L. C., in Woodward v. Goulstone, L. R. 11 App. Cas. 469: "No doubt there are many countries, and indeed Scotland is one of them, where the law permits declarations of persons who are dead to be given in evidence in all cases where they were made under circumstances in which such evidence ought properly to have been admitted if the person had been living; and there is much to be said for that law as compared with our own."³

1860, Appleton, C. J., Evidence, 190: "It is equally desirable that all testimony should have all possible and conceivable securities for trustworthiness; but if from any cause the attainment of one or more of those securities becomes physically impracticable, that will not suffice for the rejection of such evidence thus obtained, if it have any the slightest probative force. . . . The best evidence, the highest securities for testimonial veracity, are required; but the best theoretic evidence, the best theoretic securities, may be unattainable. . . . If, then, these principles be adopted, it would seem to follow that when the witness is dead, his declarations in whatsoever form attainable should be received. . . . The epistles of Paul, the journal of Columbus, the letters of Washington, would not be adjudged competent to establish any fact which being in issue might be determined by their production. . . . Were Paul or Columbus or Washington living, the reasoning by which this testimony would be excluded might be considered unanswerable; dead, their evidence thus delivered, satisfactory to everybody else, to the judge alone seems without force."

Recommendations of such an enlargement had been made more than two generations ago.⁴ But no effect was given them until fairly recent times. To-day are found statutes in three jurisdictions; and these experiments have sufficiently shown that the example is safe to follow.

These statutory exceptions are found in two forms, the one being of a limited scope only. (1) In Connecticut a statute admits all statements of a deceased person in an action by or against his representatives or those claiming under him.⁵ The avowed purpose of this statute was merely to place the deceased party's case on an equal footing, in respect to sources of proof, with that of the surviving opponent.⁶ Regarded as a substitute for the stat-

³ "[The French lawyers] laughed, not without reason, at our strictness in excluding all hearsay evidence" (Life of L. C. Campbell, I, 364).

⁴ A proposal to this effect had been made in England as long ago as 1828, by Lord (then Mr.) Brougham, in his great Speech on the Courts of Common Law, 18 Hans. Parl. Deb. 2d Ser. 218, 227, who proposed that "any deceased person's books or memorandums may be received, provided it appear that they were not prepared with a view of making evidence for his successors but plainly alio intuitu." This proposal was probably based on Bentham's suggestion, in his Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. VI, c. II, § 1, b. I, c. XIII, § 5.

⁵ Conn. Gen. St. 1887, § 1094 ("In all actions by or against the representatives of deceased persons, the entries, memoranda, and declarations of the deceased, relevant to the matter in issue, may be received in evidence"); § 1095 ("In all actions . . . in which the entries and written memoranda of deceased persons would be admissible in favor of the representatives of such deceased persons, such entries and memoranda may be admissible in favor of any person claiming title under or from such deceased person").

⁶ 1893, Baldwin, J., in Rowland v. R. Co., 63 Conn. 415, 417, 28 Atl. 102 ("The act of 1848, by removing the common-law disqualification of interest, brought two important witnesses, the plaintiff and defendant, into the trial of almost every suit. Two years of practice under its provisions convinced the Legislature that, when the accident of death had withdrawn one of these witnesses, the testimony of the other gave him as a party an undue advantage. The act of 1850 [now Gen. St. § 1094] was intended to restore, so far as might be, the footing of equality between him and the representatives of the decedent which had existed at common law").

utory rule common in other jurisdictions (ante, § 578), whereby the survivor is disqualified as a witness, this rule deserves universal imitation. The policy of disqualifying the survivor has already been noticed (ante, § 578) as unenlightened and unpractical, and is so thoroughly to be condemned that there is no excuse for not employing the present rule as a more effective and rational expedient to attain the same end. The Connecticut statute has been in operation more than fifty years, and the trifling number of rulings required to interpret and apply it⁷ merely puts in a more discreditable light the thousands of quibbling decisions that have been rendered necessary by the arbitrary and complicated wording of the other group of statutes. In Massachusetts and Oregon, statutes of more limited scope have followed the Connecticut example.⁸

(2) In Massachusetts, a statute has gone the full length of the doctrine above mentioned as advanced in the early 1800s, by adding a general exception for statements of deceased persons.⁹ The exception has thus far been found to work well, and its general extension would confer great benefit upon litigation.

⁷ 1865, Bissell v. Beckwith, 32 Conn. 509, 517 (the classes of writings named include ordinary letters, and are not confined to documents of purely mercantile or legal purpose); 1893, Barber's Appeal, 63 id. 393, 412, 27 Atl. 973 (statute does not admit diaries of a testator in a probate appeal, this not being an "action"; unsound; such a ruling tends to reintroduce technicalities of enumeration); 1893, Rowland v. R. Co., 63 id. 415, 417, 28 Atl. 102 (where an injured plaintiff's deposition has been taken in action begun before his death, the exception for these extrajudicial statements fails); 1899, Brown v. Butler, 71 id. 576, 42 Atl. 654 (statute applied); 1900, St. Regis Lumber Co. v. Hotchkiss, — id. —, 44 Atl. 11 (statute applied).

⁸ Mass. St. 1896, c. 445 ("In the trial of an action against an executor or against an administrator of a deceased person in which the cause of action is supported by oral testimony of a promise or statement made by said deceased person, evidence of statements written or oral made by said deceased person, memoranda and entries written by him, and evidence of his acts and habits of dealing, tending to disprove or to show the improbability of such statement or promise having been made, shall be admissible"); 1901, National Granite Bank v. Whicher, 179 Mass. 390, 60 N. E. 927 (statute applied); 1902, Huebener v. Childs, 180 id. 483, 62 N. E. 729 (statute applied to evidence advanced on re-examination); Or. St. 1893, p. 134 (amends Code § 711, quoted ante, § 488, by adding to par. 2: "provided that when a party to an action or suit by or against an executor or administrator appears as a witness in his own behalf, statements of the deceased concerning the same subject in his own favor may also be proven"); 1894, Grubbe v. Grubbe, 26 Or. 368, 38 Pac. 182 (statute applied).

⁹ Mass. St. 1898, c. 535, Rev. L. 1902, c. 175, § 66 ("No declaration of a deceased person shall be excluded as evidence on the ground of its being hearsay, if it appears to the satisfaction of the judge to have been made in good faith before the beginning of the suit and upon the personal knowledge of the declarant"); 1900, Brooks v. Holden, 175 Mass. 137, 55 N. E. 802 (statute does not apply in restriction of any other exceptions to the rule); 1901, Stocker v. Foster, 178 id. 591, 60 N. E. 407 (grantor's declaration as to intent of executing deed, admitted); 1901, Dixon v. R. Co., 179 id. 242, 60 N. E. 581 (deceased officer's statement admitted); 1902, O'Driscoll v. R. Co., 180 id. 187, 62 N. E. 3 (written report of deceased physician to the defendant, admitted); 1902, Green v. Crapo, 181 id. 55, 62 N. E. 956 (deceased's copying of letters in a press, said to "import a declaration that they are in the course of transmission," and seem to be within the statute as such); 1902, Boyle v. Columbian F. Co., 182 id. 93, 64 N. E. 726 (statute applied); 1903, Hayes v. Pitts-Kimball Co., 183 id. 262, 67 N. E. 249 (statute applied; see citation post, § 2099).

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE.

TOPIC VII: REPUTATION.

CHAPTER LIII.

§ 1580. In General.

A. LAND-BOUNDARIES AND LAND-CUSTOMS.

1. The Necessity Principle.

§ 1582. Matter must be Ancient.

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee.

§ 1583. General Principle; Reputation as Trustworthy.

§ 1584. Reputation, but not Individual Assertion.

§ 1585. Reputation not to Specific Acts.

§ 1586. Reputation only to Matters of General Interest.

§ 1587. Same; Application of the Rule to Private Boundaries, Title, and Possession.

§ 1588. Reputation as (1) Post Litem Motam, or (2) from Interested Persons, or (3) Favoring a Right.

3. Testimonial Qualifications, and Other Independent Rules of Evidence.

§ 1591. Reputation must come from a Competent Source; Reputation in Another District.

§ 1592. Vehicle of Reputation; Old Deeds, Leases, Maps, Surveys, etc.

§ 1593. Same: Jury's Verdict as Reputation.

§ 1594. Same: Judicial Order or Decree, or Arbitrator's Award, as Reputation.

§ 1595. Negative Reputation.

B. EVENTS OF GENERAL HISTORY.

§ 1597. Matter must be Ancient; Statutory Regulation.

§ 1598. Matter must be of General Interest.

§ 1599. Discriminations; (1) Judicial Notice; (2) Scientific Treatises.

C. MARRIAGE, AND OTHER FACTS OF FAMILY HISTORY.

§ 1602. Reputation of Marriage; General Principle.

§ 1603. Same: What constitutes Reputation; Divided Reputation; Negative Reputation.

§ 1604. Same: Sufficiency of Reputation-evidence, discriminated.

§ 1605. Reputation of other Facts of Family History (Race-Ancestry, Legitimacy, Relationship, Birth, Death, etc.).

D. MORAL CHARACTER (PARTY OR WITNESS).

§ 1608. Reputation and Actual Character, distinguished.

§ 1609. Reputation not a "Fact," but Hearsay Testimony.

§ 1610. General Theory of Use of Reputation as Evidence of Character.

§ 1611. Reputation, distinguished from Rumors.

§ 1612. Reputation must be General; Divided Reputation.

§ 1613. Same: Majority need not have Spoken.

§ 1614. Same: Never Hearing anything Against the Person.

§ 1615. Reputation must be from Neighborhood of Residence.

§ 1616. Same: Reputation in Commercial or other Circles, not the Place of Residence.

§ 1617. Time of Reputation; (1) Reputation before the Time in Issue.

§ 1618. Same: (2) Reputation after the Time in Issue.

§ 1619. Other Principles affecting Reputation, discriminated (Character in Issue, Witness' Knowledge of Reputation, Belief on Oath).

§ 1620. Kind of Character: (1) Chastity, (2) House of Ill-fame; (3) Common Offender.

§ 1621. Same: (4) Sanity; (5) Temperance;

(6) Expert Qualifications; (7) Negligence;

(8) Animal's Character.

E. SUNDRY FACTS.

§ 1623. Reputation to prove Solvency; or Wealth.

§ 1624. Reputation to prove Partnership.

§ 1625. Reputation to prove (1) Legal Tradition, (2) Incorporation.

§ 1626. Reputation to prove Sundry Facts.

§ 1580. In General. At the time of the definite emergence of the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1364) — that is, by the end of the 1600s —, there remained in existence a practice, more or less loose, of receiving the repute of the community on various matters. At that time, the jury's traditional right to resort to common repute as a source of its knowledge was still a real part of trial-practice. It can be easily understood that the exclusion, when offered in court as evidence, of a repute which the jury could in any case have considered, had they otherwise known of it, would be unnatural and improbable.¹ But with the final shaping of the Hearsay rule's limits, and the conscious statement of specific exceptions, in the first half of the 1700s, and with the progress and final settlement, in the same century, of the doctrine that the jury could consider no information not presented to them as evidence in court (post, § 1800), the use of common repute came to be limited to specific excepted cases. The excepted cases thus surviving from the older loose practice included at that time (1) land-boundaries and land-customary-rights and verdicts in other litigation, (2) events of general history, (3) personal character, and (4) marriage, and other facts of family history. Since that time a few other isolated classes of facts — for example, insolvency — have in various jurisdictions been treated as properly provable by reputation; these instances, however, do not represent historically a continuous survival of earlier practice, but a reasoned application of a general principle.

The precedents for these various groups of facts form for the most part separate and independent series. Nevertheless, they all rest equally on a more or less conscious recognition of a common and rationalized principle, which in a broad way is found to be satisfied alike in all of them and to justify the maintenance of the exceptions. This principle is the twofold one already indicated (ante, § 1420) as the basis of all the exceptions to the Hearsay rule, namely, the principle of Necessity and the principle of a Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness. (a) The necessity is here to be found in the general dearth of other satisfactory evidence of the desired fact, by reason of which we are thrown back upon reputation as a source of information. In the exceptions for land boundaries and customs this necessity is found to exist where the matter is an ancient one, and thus living witnesses are not to be had. In the exceptions for character and marriage the necessity lies in the usual difficulty of obtaining other evidence than reputation. (b) The circumstances creating a fair trustworthiness are found when the topic is such that the facts are likely to have been generally inquired about and persons having personal knowledge have disclosed facts which have thus been discussed in the community; and thus the community's conclusion, if any has been formed, is likely to be a trustworthy one. This, under different conditions, is the common ground of trustworthiness for reputation on land boundaries and customs, for events of general history, and for character and marriage. There is therefore, on the whole, a certain underlying unity of principle for all the recognized uses of reputation.

In a few jurisdictions, legislative enactments have attempted to adopt and restate the first two branches of the exception; but these statutory attempts usually fail to distinguish the limitations of the different exceptions, and can hardly be said to be successful.²

¹ "It was natural," says Professor Thayer, "that what the Courts clearly recognized as a proper basis for the jury's action, when they picked up their own information, i. e. reputation or traditional declarations in matters of prescription, should be allowed to be offered to them by the statement of witnesses in court" (Cases on Evidence, 1st ed., 420).

² The statutes are collected post, § 1597.

A. LAND-BOUNDARIES AND LAND-CUSTOMS.

1. The Necessity Principle.

§ 1582. Matter must be Ancient. In the effort to put a limit to the use of reputation-evidence, and to phrase the conditions of necessity in which it could be resorted to in default of better evidence, the element of antiquity came to be made the fundamental characteristic of this branch of the Exception. When the phrase about "best evidence" began to be invoked (ante, § 1173), and its corollary was referred to, that the "best evidence" might be dispensed with if it could not be had, one of the specific rules sometimes associated with it was the present one; that is to say, in ancient matters of certain sorts the "best evidence" obtainable was reputation-evidence. An "ancient" matter would ordinarily be a matter upon which no living witnesses having personal knowledge were attainable; so the reputation is often predicated as coming merely from deceased persons, or deceased old persons. The phrasing varies loosely; but the common idea is the same, namely, that it is to be the reputation of a past generation, and thus is to deal with a matter of which there can be no witnesses of the present generation having a personal knowledge. The following passages illustrate the general thought:

1811, Mansfield, C. J., in the Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 415: "The declarations of deceased persons, who are supposed to have had a personal knowledge of the facts, and to have stood quite disinterested, are received in evidence. In cases of general rights, which depend upon immemorial usage, living witnesses can only speak of their own knowledge to what has passed in their own time; and to supply the deficiency, the law receives the declarations of persons who are dead."

1855, Lord Campbell, C. J., in R. v. Bedfordshire, 4 E. & B. 535: "The admissibility of the declarations of deceased persons in such cases is sanctioned, because these rights and liabilities are generally of ancient and obscure origin, and may be acted on only at distant intervals of time; direct proof of their existence therefore ought not to be required."

1810, Swift, C. J., Evidence, 121: "The law has therefore wisely rejected all hearsay evidence, excepting where it is impossible in the nature of things to obtain any other. . . . This happens in matters of long standing, where the witnesses who were knowing to them are not in being. Such are . . . the ancient boundaries of land."

1860, Selden, J., in McKinnon v. Bliss, 21 N. Y. 218: "The fact sought to be proved being of too ancient a date to be proved by eye-witnesses, and not of a character to be made a matter of public record, unless it could be proved by tradition there would seem to be no mode in which it could be established. It is a universal rule, founded in necessity, that the best evidence of which the nature of the case admits is always receivable."

In the United States the question came up most frequently with reference to boundaries of land, and the special necessity of reputation-evidence in such cases was often noticed:

1797, Per Curiam, in Montgomery v. Dickey, 2 Yeates 213: "It must be obvious that when the country becomes cleared and in a state of improvement, it is oftentimes difficult to trace the lines of a survey made in early times. The argument ex necessitate rei will therefore apply."

1837, Tucker, C. J., in Harriman v. Brown, 8 Leigh 707: "Questions of boundary, after the lapse of many years, become of necessity questions of hearsay and reputation. For boundaries are artificial, arbitrary, and often perishable; and when a generation or two have passed away, they cannot be established by the testimony of eye-witnesses."

What, then, may to-day be said to be the results of this requirement, so far as specific rules can be laid down? The authorities of modern date are few, owing perhaps in this country to the changes in the conditions of life and the methods of administration of land-records in the past half-century, and it is not easy to predict the exact form in which Courts may choose to apply the principle. But the following rules may be ventured:

(1) The matter to be proved must be ancient, i. e. of a past generation. The custom, boundary, etc., must either be a former one, or, if it is still in existence, its existence in a previous generation must be the subject with which the reputation is concerned:

1855, Baltzell, C. J., in Daggett v. Willey, 6 Fla. 511: "Reputation or hearsay, taken in connection with other evidence, is entitled to respect in cases of boundary when the lapse of time is so great as to render it difficult, if not impossible, to prove the boundary by the existence of the primitive landmarks or other evidence than that of hearsay."¹

(2) The reputation offered must also be ancient, i. e. of a past generation.²

(3) If the reputation is shown by means of the reported statements of individuals (post, § 1584), the persons whose statements are reported must be shown to be deceased.³

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness.

§ 1583. General Principle; Reputation as Trustworthy. The element here operating to supply a fair degree of trustworthiness is the third already noticed (ante, § 1422), namely, the consideration that the prolonged and constant exposure of a condition of things to observation and discussion by a whole community will in certain cases sift the possible errors and will bring the resulting belief down to us in a residual form of fair trustworthiness. These conditions are usually found where the matter is one which in its nature affects the common interests of a number of persons in the same locality, and thus necessarily becomes the subject of active, general, and intelligent discussion; so that whenever a single and definite consensus has been reached in the shape of common reputation, it may be supposed to have considerable evidential value. This principle underlies the willingness of the Courts to give credit to such a reputation in all the branches of the present Exception, and has often been stated specifically for this branch, though sometimes more or less imperfectly; the passages quoted from Lord Campbell and Mr. Justice Loomis express it in a form which leaves nothing to be desired:

¹ Accord: 1886, Clark v. Hills, 67 Tex. 152, 2. S. W. 356.

² 1852, Adams v. Stanyan, 24 N. H. 412 (maps); 1862, Dobson v. Finley, 8 Jones L. 495, 499 (a call in a grant of B. in 1798, admitted; death of B. and his surveyor need not be shown; antiquity is sufficient "without enquiring as to whether the parties . . . are living or dead"); 1872, Shutte v. Thompson, 15 Wall. 161.

³ 1843, R. v. Milton, 1 C. & K. 62.

Compare the statutes cited post, § 1597.

1837, Wright v. Tatham, 7 A. & E. 358; on appeal, in 5 Cl. & F. 720: Coltman, J.: "Where boundary is proved by reputation, what is the guarantee for sincerity?" Mr. Starkie, of counsel: "The publicity of the transaction and the general interest in the fact being rightly ascertained. . . . Coltman, J.: "The principle on which I conceive the exception [of reputation as to public rights] to rest is this, — that the reputation can hardly exist without the concurrence of many parties interested to investigate the subject, and such concurrence is presumptive evidence of the existence of an ancient right, of which in most cases direct proof can no longer be given." Alderson, B.: "There are, no doubt, exceptions to this rule, in which hearsay evidence is admissible. One such exception is to be found in the case of public rights. There the general interest which belongs to the subject would lead to immediate contradiction from others, unless the statement proved were true; and the public nature of the right excludes the probability of individual bias and makes the sanction of an oath less necessary."

1855, Campbell, L. C. J., in R. v. Bedfordshire, 4 E. & B. 535: "The admissibility of the declarations of deceased persons in such cases is sanctioned . . . because in local matters in which the community are interested all persons living in the neighborhood are likely to be conversant; because, common rights and liabilities being naturally talked of in public, what is dropped in conversation respecting them may be presumed to be true; because conflicting interests would lead to contradiction from others if the statements were false, and thus a trustworthy reputation may arise from the concurrence of many parties unconnected with each other who are all interested in investigating the subject."

1881, Loomis, J., in Southwest School District v. Williams, 48 Conn. 507: "The law does not dispense with the sanction of an oath and the test of cross-examination as a prerequisite for the admission of verbal testimony, unless it discovers in the nature of the case some other sanction or test deemed equivalent for ascertaining the truth. The matters included in the class under consideration are such that many persons are deemed cognizant of them and interested in their truth, so that there is neither the ability nor the temptation to misrepresent that exists in other cases; and the matters are presumably the subject of frequent discussion and criticism, which accomplishes in a manner the purpose of a cross-examination. . . . After passing such an ordeal, it is reasonably safe to accept the result as an established fact."

This being the well-accepted foundation for receiving a common reputation as trustworthy, certain limitations are deducible as a necessary consequence.

§ 1584. Reputation, not Individual Assertion. What is offered must be in effect a reputation, not the mere assertion of an individual. This follows from the nature of the foregoing principle, and is the thought running through the language of all the judges. But reputation is made up of and is often learned through the assertions of individuals, and it is therefore constantly necessary to distinguish between (a) assertions involving mere individual credit and (b) assertions involving a community-reputation. The common form of question put to a reputation-witness was: "What have you heard old men, now deceased, say as to the reputation on this subject?" The judges constantly speak of "reputation from deceased persons."¹ Thus, though in form the information may be merely what deceased persons have been heard to say about a custom, yet in effect it comes or ought to come from them as a statement of the reputation.²

¹ E. g., 1813, Weeks v. Sparke, 1 M. & S. 689 ("Evidence is to be admitted from old persons . . . of what they have heard other persons, of the same neighborhood, who are deceased, say respecting the right"); 1808, Higham v. Ridg- way, 10 East 120 ("Reputation is no other than the hearsay of those who may be supposed to have been acquainted with the fact, handed down from one to another"); see also the quotations ante, § 1582.

This aspect of the rule is frequently found stated in the form "the reputation must be general"; in other words, the hearsay statement "I know the right or custom to be such-and-such" is not receivable; but "I understand the general acceptance of the custom by the community to be such-and-such" is admissible. The deceased individual declarant is merely the mouthpiece of the reputation. Whenever, therefore, individual declarations are offered, they must appear to be, in the words of Baron Wood, "the result of a received reputation":

1822, Wood, B., in Moseley v. Davies, 11 Price 180: "It must be proved that the declarations establishing the reputation, and the acts done [by the community] in consequence, were the result of a received reputation. . . . The principal use of evidence of this sort is to show that the act done or declaration made was not a new thought adapted to serve some particular occasion, but the consequence of a received notion of the existence of a custom requiring the performance of the act, and accounting for or explaining it by such declaration. Such evidence should always be general."

1837, Denman, L. C. J., in R. v. Bliss, 7 A. & E. 550 (rejecting testimony that R., now deceased, had planted a willow in a certain spot to show where the boundary had been of a way alleged to be public): "He does not assert that he has heard old people say what was the public road; but he plants a tree and asserts that the boundary of the road is at that point. It is the mere allegation of a fact by an individual. . . . That is, he knew it to be so from what he had himself observed, and not from reputation."³

It follows, conversely, that the form in which the reputation is presented is immaterial; whatever form it takes — individual writings, maps, leases, or the like — suffices if in truth it represents common repute; this application of the principle is later examined (post, § 1592).

But this exclusion of individual assertion, whenever it does not serve as the vehicle of reputation, applies of course only where the evidence is offered under the present Exception. Under the Exception for Private Boundaries, already examined (ante, § 1563), such declarations are in many American jurisdictions unquestionably admissible, merely as individual statements, and not associated with reputation. That Exception, historically, was mainly derived from the present one; but each now has its separate existence and peculiar limitations.

§ 1585. Reputation not as to Specific Acts. Furthermore, where a custom or right is to be shown, the reputation must be as to the custom or right itself, and not as to particular occasions of its exercise. It is obvious that as to such particular occasions or acts of its exercise there can be no fair opportunity for a reputation to arise. It can arise only as to the existence or validity of the right or custom in general. There may legitimately be a common reputation as to whether (for example) a general duty existed for the townspeople of Wilton to pay a fee at a certain tollgate; but not whether John Doe paid it on a particular occasion. It is sometimes said, misleadingly, that the reputation cannot be received as to a particular fact; ¹ but this expression is inconclusive, because the line of a certain boundary is a "particular fact." This phrase, so far as used, has meant that, in proof of local customs, hearsay as to a particular individual act in exercise of the general custom would not be received. The latter form of phrasing is the more accurate (as used by Mr. Peake, infra); but, subject to explanation, the loose phrase occasionally found in judicial language need not mislead:

² As well put by Knox, J., in Bender v. Pitzer, 27 Pa. 335, "The declaration did not amount to general reputation; for one man's declaration of the existence of a fact does not prove that the allegation is generally reputed to be well founded."

³ See also the following instances: Eng.: 1831, Davies v. Morgan, 1 C. & J. 590; 1835, Drinkwater v. Porter, 2 C. & K. 182; 1844, Earl of Carnarvon v. Villebois, 13 M. & W. 332; 1903, Brocklebank v. Thompson, 2 Ch. 344, 352 (a certain memorandum, excluded); Can.: 1885, Vankoughnet v. Denison, 11 Ont. App. 699, 707 (reputation, as indicated by a city map, apparently not admitted to show the location and extent of a public square).

1801, Mr. Peake, Evidence, 13: "A witness may be permitted to state what he has heard from dead persons respecting the reputation of the right; but not to state facts of the exercise of it which the dead persons said they had seen."

1810, Macdonald, C. B., in Harwood v. Sims, Wightw. 112 (admitting evidence of reputation from deceased persons as to a tithe payment): "I take this to be the distinction as to evidence of reputation: if they confine it to the fact of payment, it would not be evidence; unless the tradition that came with it was a reputation that that had always been the case."

1800, Muter, C. J., in Cherry v. Boyd, Litt. Sel. Cas. 8: "Such hearsay evidence [of general customs and the common repute about them] is safe, because if not true, it can be disproved by other evidence of the same kind. But even in these cases hearsay is restricted from being evidence of particular facts; because in such instances, although the evidence should be false, yet counter evidence could not be expected."²

§ 1586. Reputation must relate only to Matters of General Interest. The question next arises, About what sorts of matters may reputation be received as trustworthy? The principle already examined (ante, § 1583) prescribes the answer, — that the matter must be in its nature one about which a trustworthy common reputation could fairly arise, i. e. about which an active, constant, and intelligent discussion by the members of a community would result in a residuum of fairly trustworthy conclusions. As a rough-and-ready test, we may thus say that the matter should be one of public, or general, or public and general, interest; and this is the common phrasing; though it varies thus loosely. But this is still only a rule of thumb. To decide difficult cases it is necessary still to seek the living principle, and ask anew whether the matter is of such general interest to the community that by the thorough sifting of active, constant, and intelligent discussion a fairly trustworthy reputation is likely to arise. That this is the method actually followed by the Courts in ruling upon doubtful cases, and that the application of the principle is not narrowly to be made merely by defining the set terms "public" or "general," is seen in the following passages:

¹ 1837, Coleridge, J., referring to the evidence excluded in R. v. Bliss, quoted ante, § 1584 ("It is a rule that evidence of reputation must be confined to general matters and not touch particular facts," i. e. the act of planting the willow).

² Accord: 1805, Nicholls v. Parker, 14 East 331 (evidence admitted of what old persons had said concerning the boundaries of the parishes and manors; though not as to particular facts or transactions); 1793, Outram v. Morewood, 5 T. R. 122; 1836, Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. 437.

1835, R. v. Antrobus, 2 A. & E. 793 (evidence was rejected of reputation as to an exemption of the sheriffs of Chester county from executing criminals); Counsel for defendant: "The proper criterion as to the admissibility of reputation is whether the custom if it existed would be matter of public discourse." Denman, L. C. J.: "Reputation is admitted where a public interest is concerned; but I cannot see how the public are interested in the question which sheriff is to perform this duty."

1855, Campbell, L. C. J., in R. v. Bedfordshire, 4 E. & B. 535 (admitting reputation whether the county or private owners were bound to repair a bridge): "Let us now upon these principles examine whether . . . evidence of reputation ought to be admitted. It does involve matter of private right. . . . But does it not likewise relate to matters of public and general interest within the received meaning of the words? . . . [After showing the community's interest in the question, and using the language quoted ante, § 1583], the question therefore is almost sure to be discussed in the neighborhood, and a true reputation upon the subject is likely to prevail."

1881, Loomis, J., in Southwest School District v. Williams, 48 Conn. 507 (after stating the general reason as above, and using the language quoted ante, § 1583): "But if the fact to be proved is a particular date, [here, of the existence of a school-house,] though connected incidentally with a public matter, it is easy to see that it could not stand out as a salient fact for contemporaneous criticism and discussion so as to furnish any guaranty for its correctness."

In the application of this general principle the typical classes of facts regarded as provable by reputation were boundaries of public land-divisions and customs affecting the rights and liabilities of the community in some governmental subdivision, — roughly speaking, public land boundaries and customs. But these kinds of facts, as the above quotations indicate, were merely typical and representative, not definitive. Sundry other facts of various sorts were also thus provable. In the following passage is a sufficiently full and correct enumeration of the settled practice in England:

1895, Seymour, J., in Robinson v. Dewhurst, 15 C. C. A. 466, 68 Fed. 336: "The exception raises a question regarding that exception to the general rule excluding hearsay evidence which permits such evidence to be given, under certain limitations, in cases of ancient boundaries. The exception, as it originated in the English courts, was confined to such boundaries as were matters of public concern, and was part of a larger exception to the rule. On questions respecting the existence of manors; manorial customs; customs of mining in particular districts; a parochial modus; a boundary between counties, parishes, or manors; the limits of a town; a right of common; a prescriptive liability to repair bridges; the jurisdiction of certain courts, — matters in which the public is concerned, as having a community of interest, from residing in one neighborhood, or being entitled to the same privileges, or subject to the same liabilities, — common reputation and the declarations of deceased persons are received, if made, ante litem motam, by persons in a position to be properly cognizant of the facts."¹

¹ In the following additional cases reputation-evidence was admitted: 1899, Evans v. Merthyr Tydfil, 1 Ch. 241 (whether a piece of land was subject to commonable rights); 1901, Klinkner v. Schmidt, 114 Ia. 695, 87 N. W. 661 (street boundary); 1883, State v. Vale Mills, 63 N. H. 4 (the former line of the road which the plaintiff was charged with obstructing); 1874, Cox v. State, 41 Tex. 4 (county lines); 1824, Ralston v. Miller, 3 Rand. 49 (street lines). In the following cases additional reputation-evidence was rejected: 1795, Withnell v. Gartham,

1 Esp. 325 (right of nomination to the place of schoolmaster); 1867, Hall v. Mayo, 97 Mass. 417 (possession or habitancy of a house); 1875, Adams v. Swansea, 116 id. 596 (same); 1882, Boston Water Power Co. v. Haulon, 132 id. 483 (same). The applicability of an Indian name to a given white person in a grant in a treaty was held not provable by hearsay, because the fact of identity would not "be likely to excite public interest," in Stockton v. Williams, 1 Dougl. Mich. 568 (1845).

The following ruling is anomalous: 1900,

§ 1587. Same: Application of the Rule to Private Boundaries, Title, or Possession. In the application of the foregoing principle, the subject of special controversy has been the ownership — in particular, the boundaries — of private property. May reputation be admitted of the boundary-locations of private property? In England the answer has been in the negative:

1811, Kenyon, L. C. J., in Morewood v. Wood, 14 East 329: "Evidence of reputation upon general points is receivable because, all mankind being interested, it is natural to suppose that they may be conversant with the subjects and that they should discourse together about them, having all the same means of information. But how can this apply to private titles? . . . How is it possible for strangers to know anything of what concerns only these private titles?"¹

This conclusion was reached by a reasoned consideration of the principle on which reputation-evidence rests. But the correctness of the application may be questioned; for if such evidence may be offered to show customs and boundaries of a private manor, boundaries of a parish, and tithe-duties,² the principle may well cover any other property-rights in which a number are interested in general inquiry and discussion, whether the right is in substantive law called a public or a private one. Thus, in Weeks v. Sparke, decided shortly after Morewood v. Wood, supra, the argument was accepted that any fixed and (for this purpose) arbitrary distinction between "public" and "private" rights should be repudiated, and a flexible test be applied in each case, — this test being whether the matter affected the interests of a large number of persons:

1813, Weeks v. Sparke, 1 M. & S. 690 (a right of common being in issue), Bayley, J.: "I take it that where the term 'public right' is used, it does not mean 'public' in the literal sense, but is synonymous with 'general' —, that is, what concerns a multitude of persons; Dampier, J.: "[Reputation-evidence] has been extended to other rights which strictly cannot be called public, such as manors, parishes, and a modus, which comes the nearest to this case. That, strictly speaking, is a private right, but has been considered as public, as regards the admissibility of this species of evidence, because it affects a large number of occupiers within a district."

This reasoning might have led ultimately in England to the admission of reputation-evidence for private-property matters; but the case was practically repudiated by Baron Parke, in 1850,³ and subsequent English practice has checked all further advances. The rule may there be said to be determined by the distinction (for this purpose more or less arbitrary) between "public" and "private" property-rights;³ i. e. the "public interest" which is required to exist is taken as meaning the legal liability or right which is vested in each Shepherd v. Turner, — Cal. —, 62 Pac. 106 (reputation not admitted to show a road a public way).

¹ Accord: 1811, Doe v. Thomas, 14 East 323.

² 1819, Stell v. Prickett, 2 Stark. 466, Abbott, C. J.; and cases infra, n. 3, and post, § 1592.

³ 1850, Dunraven v. Llewellyn, 13 Q. B. 809 (a right of common for individuals, not for the community, was involved: Parke, B.: "Reputation is not admissible in the case of such separate rights, each being private, . . . unless the proposition can be supported that, because there are many such rights, the rights have a public character. We think this position cannot be maintained. It is impossible to say in such a case where the dividing point is. What is the number of rights which is to cause their nature to be changed and to give them a public character? . . . The number of these private rights does not make them to be of a public nature"); 1855, R. v. Bedfordshire, 4 E. & B. 535.

member of the community as such, — not as meaning merely a motive of any sort stimulating the mass of the community to a concern in the matter.

In the United States the result has been otherwise. The earliest English practice had clearly been to admit reputation as to private titles,⁴ and it is therefore natural to find, on questions of private boundary, that reputation was regularly admitted without question in the early American cases.⁵ Then, when the English cases of the early 1800s became known to our judges, and the question was argued on its merits as a matter of principle, the decision was reached — entirely in harmony with the conditions of life at the time — that the rule ought to admit reputation-evidence of the landmarks of private title:

1837, Tucker, P., in Harriman v. Brown, 8 Leigh 708: "Because we have not manors, shall we therefore lose the benefit of the rule which considers boundary as matter of reputation and permits hearsay evidence of its locality? If a like state of things exists among us, if the principle will be found to apply in its utmost strictness, shall we reject the evidence because the case is not identical? By no means. . . . [After quoting Lord Kenyon's language, supra,] If reputation is admissible to establish the boundaries of a manor because all the tenants of a manor are interested therein and naturally conversant about the boundary, and may be presumed to discourse together about it, what shall we say in the case of our wild lands, which were covered with early adventurers whose chief concern was to make themselves acquainted with the lines and corners of all around them? . . . Every one knows that such subjects were not only the familiar topics of conversation, but that they were the all-absorbing topics. I will venture to conjecture that for one discussion in private conversation about the boundaries of an English manor, there have been a hundred animated and interested debates about the situation of a corner tree in our western counties. I take it therefore that every motive for the admission of hearsay testimony as to boundary in case of a manor applies with equal force to its admission in questions of boundary with us."

1860, Field, C. J., in Morton v. Folger, 15 Cal. 279: "In this country the admissibility of this kind of evidence . . . has been uniformly maintained when the tract originally surveyed was large, and was subsequently subdivided into numerous farms, the boundary of the original tract serving as a boundary of the several farms. In cases of this kind, the principle upon which the evidence is received has been regarded as similar to that which relates to boundaries of a manor or parish."

1860, Selden, J., in McKinnon v. Bliss, 21 N. Y. 218: "That hearsay or reputation is admissible as evidence . . . upon questions respecting the boundaries of lands, is a familiar doctrine. But there are no doubt other cases in which the same kind of evidence may be received for the purpose of establishing a mere private right, when the fact to be proved is one of a quasi-public nature, that is, one which interests a multitude of people, or an entire community. . . . The Royal Grant, as it is called, is an extensive tract, embracing an entire township and parts of several others; and everything relating to the original document upon which the title depended would necessarily affect the interests of every occupant of the tract"; and common report as to the disposition of the patent would be admissible.

The result has been that, except in Maine and Massachusetts,⁶ it is now

⁴ Thayer, Cases on Evidence, 1st ed., 421, note.

⁵ 1823, Dane's Abr. III, 397 (citing some cases before 1800).

⁶ 1853, Chapman v. Twitchell, 37 Me. 62; 1867, Hall v. Mayo, 97 Mass. 417; 1875, Long v. Colton, 116 id. 416 (abandoning the early Massachusetts practice). In an early case in Kentucky, no longer law, it was excluded for the unique reason that the matter did not lie in parol and could not be proved by parol: 1800, Cherry v. Boyd, Litt. Sel. Cas. 8.

everywhere accepted in the United States as a legitimate application of the general principle, that reputation, so far as it definitely exists, may be admissible to prove the location of private boundaries.⁷ But this application of the principle is confined to reputation of boundaries. That title cannot be so evidenced is generally conceded.⁸ There may however be cases in which possession should be thus provable, where adverse possession is to be shown.⁹

It must be noted that, even in those jurisdictions where public boundaries alone are thus provable, the fact that the private boundary is alleged to be identical with the public one does not prevent the use of reputation to prove the latter, the identity being then otherwise shown.¹⁰

⁷ To the following, add the statutes cited post, § 1597 : 1873, Shook v. Pate, 50 Ala. 92 ; 1897, Taylor v. Fomby, 116 id. 621, 22 So. 910 ; 1833, Higley v. Bidwell, 9 Conn. 451 ; 1839, Wooster v. Butler, 13 id. 315 ; 1845, Kiuney v. Farnsworth, 17 id. 363 ; 1855, Daggett v. Willey, 6 Fla. 511 ; 1881, Holbrook v. Debo, 99 Ill. 385 ; 1819, Smith v. Prewitt, 2 A. K. Marsh. 158 ; 1822, Smith v. Nowells, 2 Litt. 160 ; 1894, Thoen v. Roche, 57 Minn. 135, 139, 58 N. W. 686 (allowable for U. S. survey lines ; acceptance of U. S. doctrine undecided) ; 1827, Shepherd v. Thompson, 4 N. H. 215 ; 1886, Curtis v. Aaronson, 49 N. J. L. 78 ; 1793, Standen v. Bains, 1 Hayw. 238 ; 1820, Tate v. Southard, 1 Hawks 47 ; 1825, Taylor v. Shufford, 4 id. 132 ; 1838, Mendenhall v. Cassells, 3 Dev. & B. 49, 51 (rejecting it here as too indefinite) ; 1896, Shaffer v. Gaynor, 117 N. C. 15, 23 S. E. 154 (but where it relates not merely to landmarks or lives, but to a location being within a certain grant, evidence of "muni-ments of title" must accompany it) ; 1886, Sexton v. Hollis, 26 S. C. 231, 236, 1 S. E. 893 ; 1866, Stroud v. Springfield, 28 Tex. 666 ; 1886, Clark v. Hills, 67 id. 152, 2 S. W. 356, semble ; 1818, Conn v. Penn., 1 Pet. C. C. 511 ; 1887, Clement v. Packer, 125 U. S. 321, 8 Sup. 907. The reason of Mr. J. Story in Ellicot v. Pearl, 10 Pet. 435 (1836), given for a contrary view, that in regard to private rights the acts of possession and assertion are capable of direct proof, but in public rights the acts of people not in privity with each other "cannot be explained to be in furtherance of a common public right," is vague, and, so far as intelligible, is without support.

⁸ 1848, Moore v. Jones, 13 Ala. 303 (that an occupier was a lessee only) ; 1889, Ross v. Goodwin, 88 id. 390, 393, 396, 6 So. 682 (title by prescription) ; 1896, Goodson v. Brothers, 111 id. 589, 20 So. 443 (ejectment) ; 1839, South School District v. Blakeslee, 13 Conn. 227, 235 (reputation of a house as "J. A.'s school-house," excluded ; "a man's general character may be proved by reputation, but not his title to real estate") ; 1836, Green v. Chelsea, 24 Pick. 71, 75, 80 ; 1863, Howland v. Crocker, 7 All. 153 (title by adverse possession ; that a piece of land was known as "the Barney Crocker lot," not admitted to show title in him) ; 1886, Sexton v. Hollis, 26 S. C. 231, 235, 1 S. E. 893 ; 1899, Hiers v. Risher, 54 id. 405, 32 S. E. 509.

Contra : Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1693 (it is to be presumed "that a person is the owner of property, from exercising acts of ownership over it, or from common reputation of his ownership").

⁹ Admitted : 1895, Vernon Irrig. Co. v. Los Angeles, 106 Cal. 237, 39 Pac. 762 (reputation admitted to show an ancient claim of ownership and actual control by the city) ; 1830, Jackson v. Miller, 6 Wend. 228 (that a lot of land was commonly known by the name of an individual, — as "Smith's Lot," or "The Duke's Farm," or "The Queen's Farm," was admitted to show that the person in question was at the time in occupation, personally or by agent, of the property) ; 1847, Bogardus v. Trinity Church, 4 Sandf. Ch. 633, 732 (same). Excluded : 1852, Benje v. Creagh, 21 Ala. 151, 156 ; 1888, Woodstock Iron Co. v. Roberts, 87 id. 436, 442, 6 So. 349 ; 1898, Carter v. Clark, 92 Me. 225, 42 Atl. 398.

But reputation may be otherwise admissible, in an issue of title by adverse possession, under the principle of § 254, ante, as evidence of the probable knowledge by the other party of the existence of the adverse claim, and therefore of acquiescence.

¹⁰ 1837, Thomas v. Jenkins, 6 A. & E. 525 (the boundary of a farm being in issue, and its identity with the hamlet-boundary being testified to, reputation as to the hamlet-boundary was admitted ; Coleridge, J. : "The objection comes to this, that evidence shall not be given as to the boundary of a hamlet in the same mode as on other occasions because the proof is in the particular case only subsidiary. But I never heard that a fact was not to be proved in the same manner, when subsidiary, as when it is the very matter in issue") ; 1893, Mullaney v. Duffy, 145 Ill. 559, 564, 33 N. E. 750 (where a private depends on a public boundary, the latter may be shown by reputation) ; 1839, Abington v. N. Bridgewater, 23 Pick. 174 (admitting declarations as to a boundary line with reference to proving, not a public right, but the situation of a house where a pauper lived) ; 1879, Drury v. Midland R. Co., 127 Mass. 581 (allowing reputation as evidence of the location of a creek "notorious and public in its nature," which in one view of the case was a dividing line between counties, and in another was in issue as a private boundary). Contra, semble : 1894, R. v. Berger, 1 Q. B. 823, 827 (obstructing a highway ; dispute as to boundary ; old map held admissible

§ 1588. Reputation as (1) Post Litem Motam, or (2) from Interested Persons, or (3) Favoring a Right. Certain additional limitations have been suggested, as affecting the trustworthiness of the reputation; but only one of them has received any sanction.

(1) The limitation, already noticed as obtaining in other Hearsay exceptions, that the reputation, to be admissible, must have arisen ante litem motam, is well established; and its propriety cannot be doubted.¹

(2) It was once argued that one's interest as a member of the community would involve bias, and hence statements of reputation as to a customary right in a community, coming from a deceased member of the community, could not be received. But such a declarant speaks merely of the current and undisputed reputation, and moreover is usually not personally interested in any important degree; and the argument against admission has not prevailed.²

(3) For the same reason, it is immaterial whether the reputation favors or disparages the existence of the custom or boundary; because, although members of the community may be interested and biassed in favor of a public right, nevertheless there is almost invariably an equal opposite interest in many as individuals in favor of a private claim, excluding the public one; so that the reputation, as it finally settles down in a definite form, represents the result of conflicting claims, and not merely a one-sided opinion.³

2. Testimonial Qualifications, and Other Independent Principles of Evidence.

§ 1591. Reputation must come from a Competent Source; Reputation in Another District. The principle that the witness must appear to have been in a position to obtain adequate knowledge (ante, § 653) finds an application to the present Exception. The reputation, to be admissible, must obviously have been formed among a class of persons who were in a position to have sound sources of information and to contribute intelligently to the formation of the reputation:

1813, LeBlanc, J., in Weeks v. Sparke, 1 M. & S. 689: "The only evidence of reputation which was received was that from persons connected with the district, . . . such evidence being confined to what old persons who were in a situation to know what these rights are have been heard to say concerning them."¹ to show that land was a highway, but not to show the boundaries; unsound).

¹ Accord: 1805, Nicholls v. Parker, 14 East 331, note; 1811, Mausfield, C. J., and Lord Redesdale, in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 416, 421; 1813, R. v. Colton, 3 id. 44, Dampier, J.; 1830, Richards v. Bassett, 10 B. & C. 661; 1832, Duke of Newcastle v. Broxtowe, 4 B. & Ad. 279; 1852, Adams v. Stanyan, 24 N. H. 412; 1902, Westfelt v. Adams, 131 N. C. 379, 42 S. E. 823 (reputation after 1886, not admitted in the trial of an action begun in 1891); 1886, Clark v. Hills, 67 Tex. 152, 2 S. W. 356. Contra, for a verdict as reputation (post, § 1593): 1816, Freeman v. Phillipps, 4 M. & S. 491; 1877, Duke of Devonshire v. Neill, L. R. Ir. 2 Exch. 156.

Compare the more fully developed definition of lis mota under the Family History (Pedigree) exception (ante, § 1483).

² 1810, Harwood v. Sims, Wightw. 112; 1822, Moseley v. Davies, 11 Price 175.

³ 1835, Drinkwater v. Porter, 2 C. & K. 182; 1830, Russell v. Stocking, 8 Conn. 240.

¹ In the following case the ruling was too strict; the knowledge might have been presumed: 1854, Hammond v. Bradstreet, 10 Ex. 396 (a map of county boundaries from an old survey by J. and W. K. was rejected).

In particular, the reputation must be offered from the particular district or the particular class of persons affected:

1835, Parke, B., in Crease v. Barrett, 1 C. M. & R. 928: "In cases of rights or customs which are not, properly speaking, public but of a general nature and concern a multitude of persons . . . it seems that hearsay evidence is not admissible unless it is derived from persons conversant with the neighborhood. . . . But where the right is really public — a claim of highway, for instance — in which all the King's subjects are interested, it seems difficult to say that there ought to be any such limitation. In a matter in which all are concerned, reputation from any one appears to be receivable; but of course it would be almost worthless unless it came from persons who were shown to have some means of knowledge, as by living in the neighborhood or frequently using the road in dispute."²

§ 1592. Vehicle of Reputation; Old Deeds, Leases, Maps, Surveys, etc. It is of course immaterial what form the reputation takes. That it may come in the shape of an individual's assertions, provided they genuinely purport to represent reputation, has already been noticed (ante, § 1584); and many other forms are to be recognized in the precedents. For example, the official return of an assembly of the homage (or tenants of a manor), rehearsing customs, fees, and the like, was always regarded as equivalent to a reputation among the tenants, and therefore as receivable.¹ In the same way, old *maps*² and old surveys,³ so far as they have been used and resorted to by the community in dealing with the land, may be taken as representing, after this test of use and criticism, the settled reputation of the community as to the correctness of the tenor of the map or the survey. So also, muniments of private title, such as old deeds and leases,⁴ may, in a given case, just as effectually be the vehicle of reputation.⁵ The use of history-books in this way is elsewhere considered (post, § 1598).

§ 1593. Same: Jury's Verdict as Reputation. That the verdict of a jury may amount to a statement of reputation has often been maintained, and the

² 1849, Duke of Beaufort v. Smith, 4 Exch. 467, 469 (to prove a custom, an alleged survey of 1650 by a jury of the manor was excluded; Parke, B.: "The question is whether a jury of the manor are not presumed to be acquainted with its customs, so as to bring the case within the rule laid down in Crease v. Barrett"; answering in the negative); 1852, Daniel v. Wilkin, 7 Exch. 437; 1860, McKinnon v. Bliss, 21 N. Y. 218, per Selden, J.

¹ 1786, Goodwin v. Spray, 1 T. R. 473, per Ashhurst, J.; 1793, Beebe v. Parker, 5 T. R. 14.

² 1843, R. v. Milton, 1 C. & K. 62 (a map of parish boundaries made from information of one old man); 1898, Taylor v. McGonigle, 120 Cal. 123, 52 Pac. 159; 1852, Adams v. Stanyan, 24 N. H. 411; 1879, Drury v. Midland R. Co., 127 Mass. 581; and cases cited passim in the foregoing sections.

³ 1816, Bullen v. Michel, 4 Dow 297; 1870, Smith v. Earl Brownlow, L. R. 2 Eq. 252; 1852, Adams v. Stanyan, 24 N. H. 411.

For maps and surveys, see also the exception for deceased surveyors (ante, § 1570), and the exception for official surveyors (post, § 1665). Most rulings about maps involve merely the question whether a deed has by reference incorporated a map, — not a question of evidence; compare §§ 1777, 1778, post (verbal acts), §§ 2464-2466, post (interpretation by usage).

⁴ 1832, Henderson, C. J., in Sasser v. Herring, 3 Dev. L. 342: "We have also received private deeds and mesne conveyances . . . under the idea that they are common reputation. A fortiori should grants from the State be admitted, for they are something more than the declaration of private individuals." Accord: 1819, White v. Lisle, 4 Madd. 223; 1829, Coombs v. Coether, 1 M. & M. 399; 1829, Plaxton v. Dare, 10 B. & C. 19 (it was argued for admission that "the fact recited in the leases . . . was equivalent to declarations made by the deceased landlords and the tenants"); 1829, Brett v. Beales, 1 M. & M. 418 (a deed under the seals of the University and Corporation of Cambridge); 1890, Weld v. Brooks, 152 Mass. 297, 305, 25 N. E. 719 (deed of 1860, between parties now deceased, admitted as reputation to evidence "the existence and location of a public way"). Compare the use of old deeds as circumstantial evidence of possession (ante, § 157).

⁵ For perambulations as reputation-evidence, see ante, § 1563.

original practice, where the matter was of a public nature, was to admit verdicts upon this theory:

1801, Lawrence, J., in Reed v. Jackson, 1 East 357: "Reputation would have been evidence as to the right of way in this case; a fortiori, therefore, the finding of twelve men upon their oaths."

But the practice may be said not to have obtained in the United States, and has now in effect been discredited in England. The truth is that it has to-day no possible justification under the present Exception. Its allowance up to the early part of the 1800s was merely "a relic of the time when a jury's verdict was a conclusion upon their own knowledge."¹ The jury's verdict did once represent the reputation of the neighborhood.² But in the modern practice neither a jury's verdict nor a judge's decree can well be regarded as a vehicle of reputation in any true sense. In the first place, if the judge or the jury were to be brought into court and asked, "What appeared to you to be the reputation among the witnesses?", the answer might in some cases involve reputation. But even here the difficulty is that neither judge nor jury do come into court as sworn witnesses to reputation. Next, the statement involved in a verdict or a decree does not necessarily or probably involve an answer to the above question. The verdict or the decree may have gone merely upon the preponderance of testimony; or it may have taken an old deed or other document as of superior and controlling value; or there may have been no evidence at all that could amount to a reputation. No doubt a previous verdict or decree should properly have an evidential value which the present form of the Hearsay rule does not concede it; but it is certainly not to be forced into evidence under the present exception.

That its acceptance was anomalous in modern practice came to be perceived in England in the middle of the century; it was admitted on precedent and half-heartedly, as "a sort of reputation."³ Finally, when in 1882 such evidence was again received, and by the House of Lords, it was not under the Reputation exception, or as hearsay at all under any exception, but as a "verbal act" (post, § 1778),—i. e. not as testimonial assertion, but as an act of possession in the course of the exercise of a public right by the people of the neighborhood.⁴ This seems to dispose of its use under the present exception.

¹ Thayer, Cases on Evidence, 1st ed., 422; Preliminary Treatise, 90 ff., 168 ff.; post, § 1800.

² 1840, Alderson, B., in Pim v. Curell, 6 M. & W. 254 (answering the citation of earlier cases): "That was when the jury was summoned de vicineto, and their functions were less limited than at present."

³ 1838, Brisco v. Lomax, 8 A. & E. 211 (Littledale, J.: "It is not reputation; but it is as good evidence as reputation"; Patterson, J.: "Now it is certainly difficult to say that a verdict can be received merely as evidence of reputation; for a jury are summoned from the body of the county at large, and are not themselves likely to know the matter. . . . Yet where a matter has been before a jury, the verdict is generally given in evidence as a sort of reputation, if I may so term it"; Coleridge, J.: "It is not precisely evidence of reputation"); 1840, Pim v. Curell, 6 M. & W. 266, per Abinger, C. B.

⁴ 1882, Neill v. Duke of Devonshire, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 147 (Selborne, L. C.: "Such evidence, admissible in cases in which evidence of reputation is received, is not itself in any proper sense evidence of reputation. It really stands upon a higher and a larger principle, especially in cases, like the present, of prescription; . . . it comes within the category of res

§ 1594. Same: Judicial Order or Decree, or Arbitrator's Award, as Reputation. In connection with the earlier doctrine, just examined, that a jury's verdict might be used as involving reputation, the attempt was sometimes made to treat a judge's or arbitrator's order or award as also admissible in the same way. But for the reasons just stated, as well as upon the principle of lack of Knowledge (ante, § 1591), such a use of orders or decrees has generally been repudiated.¹

§ 1595. Negative Reputation. It would seem, on the analogy of other instances (ante, §§ 1071, 1497, 1531, 1556, post, 1614), that an assertion may be made by silence, and that therefore the absence of a reputation (i. e., the fact that no one in the region had ever heard of the right, custom, or boundary being as alleged) should be admissible as a negative reputation.¹

B. EVENTS OF GENERAL HISTORY.

The general principles of this branch of the exception do not differ materially from those of the preceding one; but the line of precedents is a separate one, and the scope of application is in some respects broader; so that it seems more profitable to regard it as a distinct branch of the exception.

§ 1597. Matter must be Ancient; Statutory Regulation. The principle of necessity, allowing the use of this class of evidence, is the same as that already examined (ante, § 1582), namely, the matter as to which the history or other treatise is offered must be an ancient one, or one as to which it would be unlikely that living witnesses could be obtained. In other words, it must be a matter concerning a former generation.¹ Statutory declaration of the geste and of declarations accompanying acts. . . . The effect of this evidence . . . is extremely strong to establish a state of possession and enjoyment of the fisheries"; Lord O'Hagan: "I think the proceedings were admissible, not as evidence of reputation, which I agree they are not, but of something higher and better than reputation, . . . of the possession in fact at the time of the bills being filed of the several fishery. . . . Evidence of acts and proceedings with reference to the river generally—the leases, the covenants and reservations, the actions, the judgments, the licenses, and the successful assertions of right under the patents—was properly admitted"; Lord Blackburn agreed that the Court decree "is perhaps not properly evidence of reputation," but is "as strong or stronger than reputation"; 1869, Hollister v. Young, 42 Vt. 403, 407 (verdict in trespass or ejectment as indicating a claim of title).

¹ 1831, Rogers v. Wood, 2 B. & Ad. 256 (excluding a decree of court by certain judges, offered as reputation; "here the persons acting as judges had no knowledge of the fact [i. e. the customary rights of a city] except what they derived in the course of that proceeding); 1832, Duke of Newcastle v. Braxtowe, 4 id. 279 (orders of sessions made by the justices of the peace assembled in sessions were admitted as evidence of reputation as to a local custom, because, per Parke, J., "though they were not proved to be resiants in the county or hundred, they must, from the nature and character of their offices alone, be presumed to have sufficient acquaintance with the subject to which their declarations relate"); 1839, Evans v. Rees, 10 A. & E. 155 (Denman, L. C. J.: "[The opinion of an arbitrator as to a boundary is] formed not upon his own knowledge, as declarations used by way of reputation commonly are").

In the following cases a chancellor's decree was thus admitted: 1838, Laybourn v. Crisp, 4 M. & W. 326, per Parke, B.; 1877, Duke of Devonshire v. Neill, L. R. Irs. 2 Exch. 153.

¹ 1835, Drinkwater v. Porter, 2 C. & K. 182; 1842, Anglesey v. Hatherton, 10 M. & W. 239, 244, semble.

¹ 1833, Morris v. Lessees, 7 Pet. 558; 1871, Whiton v. Insurance Cos., 109 Mass. 31 (Appleton's American Cyclopaedia, offered to prove that a certain island was reputed to be a guano island, was rejected because the facts were of recent occurrence). The same result is reached in construing Code provisions: 1885, Gallagher v. R. Co., 67 Cal. 15, 6 Pac. 869 (McKee, J., construing C. C. P. § 1936: "What are 'facts of general notoriety and interest'? We think the term stands [1] for facts of a public nature, either at home or abroad, not existing in the memory of men, as contradistinguished from [2] facts of a private nature existing within the knowledge of living men, and as to which they may be examined as witnesses").

rule, however, has sometimes ignored this, partly through a failure to discriminate properly between the present exception, in this and the foregoing branch, and that which has been created for Learned Treatises in general (post, § 1693).²

§ 1598. Matter must be of General Interest. When a treatise on history is offered as embodying a reputation of the community upon the fact in question, the treatise, in the first place, cannot be regarded as more than the statement of the individual author, unless it is a work so widely known, so long used, and so highly respected, that it can be said to represent the assenting belief of the community. In the next place, the facts for which such an opinion or reputation can be taken as trustworthy must (on the principle of § 1583, ante) be such facts as have been of interest to all members of the community as such, and therefore have been so likely to receive general and intelligent discussion and examination by competent persons, that the community's received opinion on the subject cannot be supposed to have reached the condition of definite decision until the matter had gone, in public belief, beyond the stage of controversy and had become settled with fair finality. This much of a general principle can be said to be beyond dispute. But for the application of the principle, it seems impossible to say that any more definite limitations have been accepted as law :

1696, Steyner v. Droitwich, Skinner 623, 1 Salk. 281 : "Camden's Britannia was offered in Evidence to prove a Reputation Ninety-two years ago that Salt ought to be made only at the three Pits of the Burgesses [of Droitwich] and that all others were excluded. And it was said that the Sayings of antient Persons who are dead is always allowed, and this amounts to as much as the saying of an old Man at least, and that Camden was a publick Person, being Historiographer Royal, etc., and that a Gravestone had been allowed as Evidence. Sed non allocatur; for if one part of Camden be allowed, another part ought to be, and if Camden, then another Historian as well as him, and there would not be any certainty. . . . And the Court said that an History may be evidence of the general history of the Realm, but not of a particular Custom; and therefore secundum subjectam materiam it may be good Evidence or not."

1833, Story, J., in Morris v. Lessees, 7 Pet. 558 : "Historical facts of general and public notoriety may indeed be proved by reputation, and that reputation may be established by historical works of known character and accuracy. But evidence of this sort is confined . . . to cases where from the nature of the transactions, or the remoteness of the period, or the public and general reception of the facts, a just foundation is laid for general confidence."

² Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1870, par. 11 ("common reputation existing previous to the controversy, respecting facts of a public or general interest more than 30 years old, and in cases of pedigree or boundary," is admissible); par. 12 ("monuments and inscriptions in public places, as evidence of common reputation," is admissible); § 1936 ("Historical works, books of science or art, and published maps or charts, when made by persons indifferent between the parties, are prima facie evidence of facts of general notoriety and interest"); Ga. Code 1895, § 5183 ("declarations of deceased persons as to ancient rights, made before litigation arose," admissible to prove "matters of public interest in which the whole community are supposed to take interest and to have knowledge"); § 5185 ("traditionary evidences as to ancient boundaries and landmarks," admissible); Ida. Rev. St. 1887, § 5990 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1936); Ida. Code 1897, § 4618 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1936); Mont. C. C. P. 1895, § 3146 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); § 3227 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1936); Nebr. Comp. St. 1899, § 5916 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1936, substituting "or" for "and" in the last clause, and "presumptive" for "prima facie"); Or. C. C. P. 1892, § 706 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); § 758 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1936); Utah Rev. St. 1898, § 3400 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1936).

1847, Sandford, V. C., in Bogardus v. Trinity Church, 4 Sandf. Ch. 724: "The statements of historians of established merit . . . are from necessity received as evidence of facts to which they relate, . . . restricted to facts of a public and general nature."

1860, Selden, J., in McKinnon v. Bliss, 21 N. Y. 216: "Such evidence is only admissible to prove facts of a general and public nature, and not those which concern individuals and mere local communities. . . . History is admissible only to prove history, that is, such facts as being of interest to a whole people are usually incorporated in a general history of the state or nation."¹

In some instances the principle has been applied too narrowly, for example, in excluding county-histories;² for on certain matters there may be a general and settled county-reputation which will be quite as trustworthy as a national reputation upon national matters. There should therefore be no arbitrary line excluding local histories.

§ 1599. Discriminations; (1) Judicial Notice; (2) Scientific Treatises.

(1) The paucity of rulings upon this class of evidence is probably due to the consideration that when a fact — for example, the date of Washington's birth or of Lincoln's assassination — is one of such general interest as to render an accepted historical treatise admissible upon the present principle, the fact is also of such notoriety that it will be assumed as true by the Court, upon the principles of Judicial Notice (post, § 2565). In such a case, if the judge is actually not certain of the precise truth as to the fact alleged, but it is of a class capable of being judicially noticed, he may consult an accepted treatise as the basis of his ruling (post, § 2569); and thus the treatise is in fact used bois and others' works, consulted as to the existence of slavery of Indians in America in the 1700s); 1836, Com. v. Alburger, 1 Whart. 469, 473 (a letter of William Penn confirming a certain grant; its mention "in Proud and various other historical works" treated as sufficient, the matter being ancient); 1869, Baird v. Rice, 63 Pa. 489, 496 (in determining the ancient plan of London's streets, etc., so as to interpret Penn's plan of Philadelphia, the following works were consulted: Maitland's History of London, 1754; Bohn's Pictorial Handbook of London, 1854; Great London Directory, 1855); 1811, Hadfield v. Jameson, 2 Munf. 53, 71, per Tucker, J. (Edwards' History of the West Indies, used to show the government of Hispaniola).

¹ Other examples are as follows: England: 1672, St. Katherine's Hospital, 1 Vent. 151 ("It was shewn out of Speed's Chronicles, produced in Court, that at that Time Queen Isabel was under great Calamity and Oppression, and what was then determined against her was not so much from the Right of the Thing as the Iniquity of the Times"); 1682, Broncker v. Atkyns, Skinner 14 ("Speed's Chronicle was given in Evidence to prove the Death of Isabel, Queen Dowager to E. II; and though Maynard seemed to oppose it, and Dobbins said it was done by Consent; yet the Chief Justice said he knew not what better Proof could be made. And Wallop said that in the Lords' House it was admitted by them as good evidence in the Lord Bridgewater's Case"); 1684, L. C. J. Jeffreys, in Lady Ivy's Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 555, 625 (rejecting a history offered to show the date of Charles V's abdication and Philip and Mary becoming king and queen of Spain, over a century before: "Instead of records, the upshot is a little lousy history . . . Is a printed history, written by I know not who, an evidence in a court of law?"); 1718, Proceedings respecting the Education, etc., of the Royal Family, 15 How. St. Tr. 1202, 1203, 1206, 1209 (the Judges drew up an opinion upon the King's prerogative in the matter, and cited precedents on the exercise of the prerogative from Rymer's Fœdera, Lord Clarendon's History, Cotton's Record, Kennett's History of England, Burnet's History of the Reformation); United States: 1834, Marguerite v. Chouteau, 3 Mo. 540, 555 (DuPratz, Barbé Mar-

² 1834, Evans v. Getting, 6 C. & P. 586 (to show the boundary between two counties, Brecon and Glamorgan, Nicholl's History of Brecknockshire was offered; Alderson, B.: "This is a history of Brecknockshire. The writer of that history probably had the same interest in enlarging the boundaries of the county as an other inhabitant of it. It is not like a general history of Wales. I shall not receive it;") the fault of this decision is that it seems to proceed upon the principle that local interest excludes reputation, — a principle seen ante, § 1589, to have been repudiated; the above ruling largely influenced the two ensuing); 1860, McKinnon v. Bliss, 21 N. Y. 216 (rejecting Benton's History of Herkimer Co.); 1887, Roe v. Strong, 107 id. 356, 14 N. E. 294 (rejecting Thompson's History of Long Island).

and trusted without being offered formally in evidence to the jury. An equivalent result is by indirection attained; and it can hardly be doubted that, while in practice little inconvenience is felt, yet in theory there is a lurking inconsistency.

(2) In a few jurisdictions, by way of a special exception, the use of scientific treatises in evidence has, with certain limitations, been sanctioned (post, § 1690); so that an historical treatise not admissible under this exception might be receivable under that one. Nevertheless, the modern judicial tendency has been to construe the statutes in question as intended merely to re-state the present exception and not to create a new one.¹

C. MARRIAGE, AND OTHER FACTS OF FAMILY HISTORY.

§ 1602. Reputation of Marriage; General Principle. The use of reputation, by exception to the Hearsay rule, to evidence marriage, fulfils both of the ordinary prerequisites already noted, the necessity principle (ante, § 1421) and the principle of trustworthiness (ante, § 1422).

The necessity, however, here lies not, as for land-boundaries (ante, § 1582), in the antiquity of the matter to be proved and the consequent dearth of living testimony, but in the absence of satisfactory testimony, directly to the act of exchanging marriage consent. At common law the persons said to have been married, being usually parties or otherwise interested in the cause, would consequently have been disqualified as witnesses; and, when they were only third persons not interested (as in a contest over the inheritance of their property) would usually have been deceased and therefore unavailable. Furthermore, the procurement of the celebrant of their marriage, as a living witness, would usually not be feasible; and the use of a written record, in the shape of a certificate or a register-entry, was to a great extent not permissible by law, owing chiefly to the defective regulation of such records in English and American communities (post, §§ 1642-1645). Finally, the latter source of evidence was in the United States likely to be even more scanty, first, because of the constant migration of families over wide regions, and, next, because a marriage was here almost universally treated as valid without a ceremonial celebration, and therefore no record of it would exist for all such informal marriages. Practically, therefore, the chief available sources of evidence were two only. One of these was the conduct of the persons themselves as husband and wife; this was used as circumstantial evidence indicating a prior exchange of consent, and has already been examined (ante, § 268); it was commonly spoken of as "habit." The other was the present kind of evidence, namely, reputation in the community as married persons.

As to its trustworthiness, for ordinary practical purposes, there could equally be no doubt. The relation of husband and wife has important consequences, social and legal, for those who deal with persons purporting to be such. The community has decidedly an interest to ascertain the fact; and this interest in ascertaining the truth has been already seen to be the ground for exceptionally admitting other kinds of hearsay statements (ante, §§ 1482, 1486, 1586) as from persons sufficiently qualified. The adequacy of this ground in the present instance has been expounded in the following passages:

¹ See the rulings cited post, §§ 1693, 1697-1699.

1867, Lord Cranworth, in the Breadalbane Case, L. R. I H. L. Sc. 199: "The great facility which the law of Scotland affords for contracting marriage has given rise to rules and principles which have been sometimes considered peculiar to that law. By the law of England, and, I presume, of all other Christian countries, where a man and woman have long lived together as man and wife, and have been so treated by their friends and neighbors, there is a prima facie presumption that they really are and have been what they profess to be. If after their deaths a succession should open to their children, any one claiming a share in such succession as a child would establish a good prima facie case by showing that his parents had always passed in society as man and wife, and that the claimant had always passed as their child. If the validity of the parents' marriage should be disputed, it might become necessary for the person claiming as their child to establish its validity, and, inasmuch as in England all marriages are solemnized in public and publicly recorded, it is reasonable to require the claimant to give positive evidence of its celebration, or else to explain why he is unable to do so. The principle is the same in Scotland; but as marriage there is not necessarily celebrated in public or recorded, it is much more probable than it would be in England that there may have been a marriage, but that there may be no means of giving direct proof of it. Those who have to decide, after the death of parents, on the legitimacy of children must much oftener than in England have to rely solely on the prima facie evidence afforded by the conduct of the parties towards one another and of their friends and neighbors towards them. This sort of evidence is spoken of in Scotland as habite and repute. Persons are sometimes said to be married persons by habite and repute. I agree, however, with the argument of the Appellant (speaking with deference to those who think otherwise), that this is an inaccurate mode of expression. Marriage can only exist as the result of mutual agreement. The conduct of the parties and of their friends and neighbors, in other words, habite and repute, may afford strong, and, in Scotland, attending to the laws of marriage there existing, unanswerable evidence that at some unascertained time a mutual agreement to marry was entered into by the parties passing as man and wife. I cannot, however, think it correct to say that habite and repute in any case make the marriage. Repute can obviously have no such effect. It is, perhaps, less inaccurate to speak of habite creating marriage, if by the word habite we are to understand the daily acts of persons living together which imply that they consider each other as husband and wife, and it may be taken as implying an agreement to be what they represent themselves as being. It seems to me, however, even here to be an improper use of the word to say that it makes marriage. The distinction is perhaps one rather of words than of substance; but I prefer to say that habite and repute afford by the law of Scotland, as indeed of all countries, evidence of marriage, — always strong, and, in Scotland, unless met by counter evidence, generally conclusive."

1844, Mr. J. Hubback, Succession, 244: "Reputation of marriage, unlike that of other matters of pedigree, may proceed from persons who are not members of the family. The reason of the distinction is to be found in the public interest which is taken in the question of the existence of a marriage between two parties; the propriety of visiting or otherwise treating them in society as husband and wife, the liability of the man for the debts of the woman, the power of the latter to act suo jure, and their competency to enter into new matrimonial engagements, being matters which interest not their relations alone, but every one who by coming into contact with them may have occasion to regulate his conduct according as he understands them to be married or not."

1882, Finch, J., in Badger v. Badger, 88 N. Y. 546, 552: "The reputation attending this cohabitation in the neighborhood where it existed and was known among those brought into its presence by relationship, business, or society, was that which ordinarily attends the dwelling together of husband and wife. It has been well described as the shadow cast by their daily lives. In the general repute surrounding them, the slow growth of months and years, the resultant picture of forgotten incidents, passing events, habitual and daily conduct, presumably honest because disinterested, and safer to be trusted because prone to suspect, we are enabled to see the character of the cohabitation and discern its distinctive features. It is for that reason that such general repute is permitted to be proven. It sums up a multitude of trivial details. It compacts into the brief phrase of a verdict the teaching of many incidents and the conduct of years. It is the average intelligence drawing a conclusion."¹

Accordingly, it has been universally conceded that reputation in the community is always admissible to evidence the fact of marriage; there does not seem to have been any time when this was disputed.

§ 1603. What constitutes Reputation; Divided Reputation; Negative Reputation. (1) It does not appear that the reputation must be such as exists in the neighborhood; i. e. the limitation generally laid down (post, § 1615) for the use of reputation to moral character is not here applied. The fact of marriage may be of interest to many others than mere neighbors. To them chiefly it may be of social interest; but to others it may be of legal interest and equally important. There seems to be no settled formula of inquiry; in general, it may be assumed that the reputation may be one existing among any persons who know the parties said to be married:

1832, Evans v. Morgan, 2 Cr. & J. 453, 456; assumpsit on a note made by a woman before coverture; the only evidence of the marriage "was that of a person who did not appear to be related to them, or to live near them, or know them intimately; and he proved only that he knew the defendant J. M. when she was J. R. and that he had heard that she had since married M.;" this witness was not cross-examined. Counsel argued that "it has never been held that such loose evidence as this amounts to evidence of reputation"; Bayley, B.: "It goes to show the reputation of the neighborhood"; Lyndhurst, L. C. B.: "If you do not cross-examine on such point, you must take those expressions in the ordinary sense;" Vaughan, B.: "I think that there was prima facie evidence of reputation of a marriage."¹

(2) The reputation must be a consensus of opinion; it must not be a divided reputation:

1814, Lord Redesdale, in Cunningham v. Cunningham, 2 Dow 482, 511: "The parties must be reputed and holden to be married. It must not be an opinion of A in contradiction to an opinion of B, and of C in opposition to D; it must be founded not on singular, but on general opinion. That species of repute which consists in A, B, and C, thinking one way, D, E, F, another way, is no evidence on such a subject. . . . The conduct of the parties must be such as to make almost every one infer that they were married."

This much, in theory, may be conceded; it is analogous to the rule laid down

¹ Compare the following cases: 1874, Lyle v. Ellwood, L. R. 19 Eq. 107; 1876, De Thoren v. Attorney-General, L. R. 1 App. Cas. 686.

¹ 1791, Standen v. Standen, Peake N. P. 33 (that the deceased clerk of the parish had said the banns were published, admitted by Lord Kenyon "as evidence of the general reputation"); 1847, Jones v. Hunter, 2 La. An. 254, 256, semble (reputation in a place where the parties had only "lately arrived," insufficient).

for reputation to moral character (post, § 1612).² But the difficulty comes in applying it. If the witnesses all agree that some of the community thought the persons married while others thought them not married, there is in truth no reputation, no consensus of opinion, and the individual opinions would be inadmissible as a reputation. But if, as will usually happen, the witnesses pro and con assert each that the general opinion in the community, as observed by them, was respectively affirmative and negative of marriage, this is not a case of divided reputation; there is or is not a genuine and universal reputation according as one or the other set of witnesses is believed; and the evidence should therefore go to the jury to determine the witnesses' credibility.³ The attempt to apply any technical restriction of admissibility based on division of reputation seems therefore to be futile and unwise.⁴

(3) The reputation, assuming it to exist in definite form, may equally be a negative one, i. e. a reputation that certain persons living together are not married.⁵

§ 1604. Sufficiency of Reputation-Evidence, distinguished. Whether reputation is admissible at all, is the only question with which the Hearsay rule is concerned. But there are other rules which concern the sufficiency of admissible evidence, — rules of Quantity; and one of these declares reputation, or reputation together with habit, is insufficient at common law in prosecutions for bigamy and actions for criminal conversation. The testimony of an eye-witness is indispensable, i. e. the oral testimony of a bystander or the celebrant or a party to the marriage or the hearsay testimony of a certificate or register entry. These rules, which form a special class by themselves, are elsewhere dealt with (post, §§ 2082-2086).

§ 1605. Reputation of Other Facts of Family History (Race-Ancestry, Legitimacy, Relationship, Birth, Death, etc.). May not neighborhood-reputation be often sufficiently trustworthy to be received in evidence of certain other facts of family history likely to be notoriously canvassed and hence to become known with a sufficient degree of accuracy?¹ In communities of more

² 1875, Barnum v. Barnum, 42 Md. 251, 297 ("where reputation in such case is divided, it amounts to no evidence at all"); 1877, Jones v. Jones, 48 id. 391, 403 (Barnum v. Barnum affirmed); 1899, Williams v. Herrick, 21 R. I. 401, 43 Atl. 1036 (must be general and uniform).

³ This seems to have been the view taken in the following cases: 1883, Powers v. Charmsbury, 35 La. An. 630, 634; 1894, Jackson v. Jackson, 80 Md. 176, 30 Atl. 752.

⁴ The rule should rather be that a divided reputation, though admissible, is insufficient for proof: 1902, Heminway v. Miller, 87 Minn. 123, 91 N. W. 428.

⁵ 1874, Lyle v. Ellwood, L. R. 19 Eq. 98, 106; 1868, Boone v. Pnnell, 28 Md. 607, 629; 1842, Re Taylor, 9 Paige 611, 616 (reputation of non-marriage was admitted; but the Chancellor declared that reputation after certain "stories were set afloat" was "not legal evidence to rebut the presumption," "as it was not a part of the res geste"; this is a confusion of thought, but at any rate does not declare the reputation inadmissible). Contra: 1885, Northrop v. Knowles, 52 Conn. 522 (title depending on legitimacy; after proof by certificate of marriage, reputation of the relation as adulterous was excluded; perhaps allowable, in proof by reputation, to show divided reputation in disproof); 1882, Badger v. Badger, 88 N. Y. 546, 554, semble (reputation of non-marriage of the man among persons with whom he lived as a bachelor, concealing his connection with the woman, held inadmissible; to be admissible "it does not and cannot go beyond the range of knowledge of the cohabitation"). Undecided: 1859, Hill v. Hill's Adm'r, 32 Pa. 511 (dower; reputation that claimant had been "called in her neighborhood" Mrs. W., not Mrs. H., excluded, as here being only individual declarations; general question reserved).

¹ Distinguish the use of declarations by indi-

primitive conditions, where social life continues stable amid constant and fixed surroundings, the neighborhood-reputation is unquestionably of some value. Such was formerly the almost universal state of things in England, on the Continent, and in the United States. Such is still the state of things in rural communities almost everywhere (except in our newly-settled regions), and notably in the small towns of New England and the South. That it has ceased to exist in the metropolitan communities does not indicate that neighborhood-reputation, where it arises, is less trustworthy; it merely indicates that amid the isolated individualism and kaleidoscopic changes of the metropolitan horde no neighborhood-reputation is likely to exist. Moreover, the frequent migrations of American life have in one respect made reputation-evidence even more necessary than in stable communities as a source of knowledge; for in countless families the only means of knowledge for them of the career of their migrated members is the reports brought back, at times, of the fate or fortune reputed to have overtaken them in the distant community where they took up a new home. In the typical cases coming before the courts, where, for example, one who was in California with John Doe, who emigrated from New England in 1850, testifies that Doe was commonly reputed in Sandy Gulch to have been killed in a brawl and to have been then and there buried, does not this serve to support belief? If it is the fear of imposition that stands in the way, would it not be equally possible to procure some perjurer to come from California and tell upon the stand a concocted story about the death of Doe as witnessed by him? It is not a question of absolute proof; it is a question of the admissibility of a single piece of evidence, which may or may not prove to be sufficient. It seems finical to exclude from any consideration whatever, in a legal investigation, a class of evidence which is not only much relied upon in practical affairs, but is also sufficiently within the general principle of two exceptions (Reputation and Family History) to the Hearsay rule. Such evidence was once in England considered orthodox enough;² and its use has been vindicated, on grounds of policy and of principle, by many American Courts, as admissible in certain classes of cases:

1821, Mills, J., in Birney v. Hann, 3 A. K. Marsh. 326: "From the sayings of the parents or members of the family, Courts progressed at last to the admission of the general recognition or reputation of the heirship by others. It is admitted that it is difficult to lay down any precise rule on this subject. The kinds of evidence which are calculated to prove the consanguinity or affinity of one person to another are various, and all may be proper after a lapse of time. . . . Lapse of time, or distance of place, may furnish grounds for greater latitude and admit tradition, reputation, and recognition of a neigh-viduals (friends and intimates) not being family-relations, under the Family History Exception (ante, § 1487).

² It was always admitted to show place of birth, as fixing nationality: 1696, Vaughan's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 485, 509, 512, 515; 1704, Lindsay's Trial, 14 id. 987, 996; 1717, Francia's Trial, 15 id. 897, 962. So also for time of birth: 1649, Duke of Hamilton's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr.

1155, 1170 ("common report" admitted that defendant was a postnatus, i. e. born after the accession of James I of England). The practice probably continued till the 1800s: 1792, Grose, J., in Morewood v. Wood, 14 East 330, note: "I remember the case of a pedigree tried at Winchester, where there was a strong reputation throughout all the country one way, and a great number of persons were examined to it."

borhood, or the use of documents, records, and inscriptions, which may disclose the connexion by blood or marriage to him from whom a right is claimed."

1834, Catron, C. J., in Flowers v. Haralson, 6 Yerg. 496: "Reputation of pedigree is the result of the public mind, founded upon actual knowledge of the whole community; and experience and knowledge in the nature and habits of man teach the unerring certainty of the public knowledge and conclusion in relation to family history. Individuals may fail in their investigations of particular facts; but where marriages, births, and deaths are the facts to be learned, human curiosity saves us the trouble and expense of proving the occurrences by witnesses present or by the hearsay of those who were, or of the family connexion. No individual investigations or testimony can generally be equal in certainty to the curious' scrutiny; and if secrecy be attempted, public curiosity sets on foot an anxious search for the truth. General reputation of such facts is not only competent, but highly credible."

1869, Lawrence, J., in Ringhouse v. Keener, 49 Ill. 471 (admitting testimony of friends that "his death was announced in the newspapers and he was spoken of by his acquaintances as dead"): "In a population as unstable as ours, and comprising so many persons whose kindred are in distant lands, the refusal of all evidence of reputation in regard to death, unless the reputation came from family relatives, would sometimes render the proof of death impossible, though there might exist no doubt of the fact, and thus defeat the ends of justice."

1875, Cooper, C., in Carter v. Montgomery, 2 Tenn. Ch. 227: "In England it is now well settled that hearsay evidence is resorted to in matters of pedigree . . . upon the ground of the interest of the declarants in knowing the connections of the family. The rule is consequently restricted to the declarations of deceased persons who were related by blood or marriage to the person from whom the descent is claimed, and general repute in the family proved by a surviving member. . . . It is obvious that while the English rule may be most consonant to sound principle, and may answer the ends of justice in a dense population and settled community, yet it scarcely suffices in a sparsely inhabited country with a migratory and rapidly changing population. It would be utterly inadequate in matters relating to a slave population, where the family is not legally recognized, and, for the same reason, to the settlement of the rights of illegitimates. Where would the negro have been in suits for freedom, after a few years, on a change of domicile by the master, with the presumption of slavery against them by reason of color, if the English rule had been rigidly adhered to? . . . Under our decisions so much of the testimony in this case, based upon hearsay or reputation, as relates to the pedigree of James M. Garrett is admissible, whether it comes from members of the family or third persons, to be weighed according to the sources of information, the opportunities of witnesses, and the surrounding circumstances."

This sanction of neighborhood-reputation has not been universal. It is illustrated in many rulings; but there is still in many other Courts an entire refusal to accept it. There are certain classes of facts for which it is entirely appropriate; there are others for which it may not be. The matter is one in which it should be left to the discretion of the trial Court to admit such a reputation wherever the meagreness of other evidence, or the difficulty of obtaining it, renders it desirable to accept that which is offered.

On no one point is there a general agreement in the rulings. They may be grouped according as they deal with the admissibility of reputation as evidence of legitimacy or the opposite;³ of relationship, to a family or to an individual,⁴ or of birth,⁵ or of death or its place or time,⁶ or of race-ancestry (i. e. whether slave or free, whether white, negro, or Indian),⁷ or of sundry facts of family history.⁸

³ England: 1743, Craig dem. Annesley v. Anglesea, 17 How. St. Tr. 1139, 1174, 1439, et passim (admitted); 1744, Heath's Trial, 18 id. 1, 77 (same controversy; excluded); 1810, Banbury Peerage Case, in App. to LeMarchant's Gardner Peerage Case, 447, 470, 481 (Lord

D. MORAL CHARACTER (PARTY OR WITNESS).

§ 1608. Reputation and Actual Character distinguished. That actual character is distinct from reputation of it, and the latter is merely evidence to prove the former, ought to be a truism. But the common use of the word "character" in the senses both of actual disposition and of reputation has Redesdale: "General reputation of legitimacy would have been evidence in favor of the legitimacy of Nicholas; so general reputation that there existed no issue of Lord Banbury was evidence against such legitimacy. . . . The reputation at home and abroad, the belief of relations, friends, and neighbors, was the evidence which ought to have been resorted to"; United States: 1901, Heaton's Estate, 135 Cal. 385, 67 Pac. 321 (reputation in the community, excluded; C. C. P. § 1870, par. 11, quoted ante, § 1597, "never was intended to broaden the common-law rule upon this subject"); 1857, Richardson v. Roberts, 23 Ga. 220 (reputation that the plaintiff's child was a hastard, etc., as alleged in an utterance charged as defamatory, excluded); 1881, DeHaven v. DeHaven, 77 Ind. 236, 239 (reputation as to paternity, excluded); 1899, Watson v. Richardson, 110 Ia. 673, 80 N. W. 407 (current reports in the community of deceased that the claimant was his illegitimate son, excluded; except so far as by statute the putative father's recognition in substantive law must be "notorious"); 1862, Haddock v. R. Co., 3 All. 298 (reputation of child's illegitimacy, excluded); 1898, Erwin v. Bailey, 123 N. C. 628, 31 S. E. 844 (reputation to show legitimacy, excluded); 1846, Ford v. Ford, 7 Humph. 98 (admitted); 1875, Carter v. Montgomery, 2 Tenn. Ch. 227 (admitted; see quotation supra); 1825, Stegall v. Stegall's Adm'r, 2 Brockenb. 256, 263, Marshall, C. J. (it "cannot be entirely disregarded," but its weight "depends on the circumstances of the case"; said of reputation to legitimacy); 1826, Stokes v. Dawes, 4 Mason 268, 270, Story, J. (admitted without question); 1896, Flora v. Anderson, 75 Fed. 217, 233 (neighbors' reputation as to illegitimate child, excluded).

Distinguish the use of reputation under a statute requiring a putative father's recognition to be "notorious"; here the reputation is a part of the issue under the substantive law and is admissible on that ground (ante, § 70): 1899, Watson v. Richardson, Ia., supra; 1901, Alston v. Alston, 114 Ia. 29, 86 N. W. 55.

⁴ 1899, Elder v. State, 123 Ala. 35, 26 So. 213 (reputation in the neighborhood to show relationship, excluded); 1899, Lamar v. Allen, 108 Ga. 158, 33 S. E. 958 (reputation of neighborhood to show relationship, excluded); Me. Pub. St. 1883, c. 27, § 49 (in actions against liquor-seller for damage to family, general reputation is admissible to show plaintiff's relationship to the intoxicated person); 1811, Jackson v. Cooley, 8 John. 130 (cited ante, § 1487); 1834, Ewell v. State, 6 Yerg. 364, 372 (admitted).

⁵ Citations supra, note 2.

⁶ 1869, Ringhouse v. Keener, 49 Ill. 471 (admissible; see quotation supra); 1860, Carnes v. Crandall, 10 Ia. 377 (reputation among C's friends and neighbors in California that he had died there in 1851, excluded; no authority cited); 1885, Blaisdell v. Bickum, 139 Mass. 250, 1 N. E. 281 (reputation of death of Q. before marriage with E. Q., excluded; no authority cited); 1902, Welch v. R. Co., 182 id. 84, 64 N. E. 695 (general repute, brought home to the family, held admissible to prove death); 1826, Jackson v. Etz, 5 Cow. 319 (time of death; admissible); 1898, Arents v. R. Co., 156 N. Y. 1, 50 N. E. 422 (whether M. was the only surviving child of C. in 1849; reputation of the neighborhood received to show the death of certain other children); 1834, Flowers v. Haralson, 6 Yerg. 496 (admissible; see quotation supra); 1851, Primm v. Stewart, 7 Tex. 178 (reputation that W. had died some years before, admitted); 1831, Scott v. Ratliffe, 5 Pet. 81, 86, semble (reputation admitted); 1890, Hurlburt v. Hurlburt, 63 Vt. 667, 22 Atl. 850, semble (reputation in Dakota as to death of an emigrant, excluded); 1896, Hurlburt's Estate, 68 id. 366, 35 Atl. 77 (reputation among friends and acquaintances, in the place of residence, as to death, excluded).

⁷ 1904, Locklayer v. Locklayer, — Ala. —, 35 So. 1008 (inheritance of an alleged negro); 1856, Bryan v. Watson, 20 Ga. 480 (freedom of a person of color); 1864, Nave v. Williams, 22 Ind. 368 (mixed blood; admissible); 1839, Chancellor v. Milly, 9 Dana 24 (colored slave ancestry; admissible); 1827, Vaughan v. Phebe, Mart. & Y. 19 (admissible, to show free or slave ancestry; leading opinion, by Crabb, J.); 1806, Hudgins v. Wrights, 1 Hen. & M. 134, 137, 142 (Indian ancestry; admissible); 1808, Pegram v. Isabell, 2 id. 205 (similar).

⁸ 1851, State v. Seawell, 18 Ala. 616 (reputation to prove a party out of the State, excluded); 1858, Griffin v. Wall, 32 id. 149, 160 (reputation to prove a voter's residence, inadmissible); 1897, Mitchell v. State, 114 id. 1, 22 So. 71 (the absence of a witness from the jurisdiction, excluded); 1898, Albion v. Maple Lake, 71 Minn. 503, 74 N. W. 282 (reputation as to the residence of a pauper, excluded).

led to occasional obscurity of language in judicial opinions, and has thus tended to remove the emphasis from the distinction. When we argue that a defendant probably did not commit a forgery because his disposition was honest (ante, § 55), or that a witness probably is speaking falsely because he is mendacious in disposition (ante, § 922), we are arguing from his actual moral constitution, which in its turn becomes a fact to be proved; and when we then resort to reputation or individual opinion or particular conduct, we are resorting to it as evidence from which we may make some inference to the nature of the actual trait. The distinction has already been referred to elsewhere (ante, §§ 52, 920); but the following passages remind us of its importance:

1851, Caldwell, J., in Bucklin v. State, 20 Oh. 23: "The term 'character,' when more strictly applied, refers to the inherent qualities of the person, rather than to any opinion that may be formed or expressed of him by others; the term 'reputation' applies to the opinion which others may have formed and expressed of his character; so that, as has been remarked in some of the books, when treating on this subject, a man's character may really be good when his reputation is bad, and, on the other hand, his reputation may be good when his character is bad. But, as we have before intimated, the terms when used in connection with this subject are generally used in contradiction to this distinction, — the term 'general character' being used in legal signification, as it is frequently used in common parlance, to express the opinion that has generally obtained of a person's character, the estimate the community generally has formed of it. When you ask a witness, then, in this sense of the term, what a man's general character is for truth and veracity, he is called on to answer as to what opinion is generally entertained and expressed of him by those acquainted with him."

1855, Durfee, C. J., in State v. Wilson, 15 R. I. 180, 1 Atl. 415: "Doubtless there is a distinction observed by careful writers between 'character' and 'reputation'; 'character' (where the distinction is observed) signifying the reality, and 'reputation' merely what is reported, or understood from report, to be the reality, about a person or thing."

1895, Jordan, J., in Wright v. Crawfordsville, 142 Ind. 636, 642, 42 N. E. 227 (admitting specific acts to prove character): "Counsel seemingly confuse real character — that which is actually impressed by nature, traits, or habits upon a person — with what is generally termed reputed character. Reputation may be evidence of character, but it is not character itself. That which a person really is must be distinguished from that which he is reputed to be."

1885, Mr. Richard Grant White, Words and their Uses, 9th ed., p. 99: "Character, Reputation. These words are not synonymes; but they are too generally used as such. . . . We know very little of each other's characters; but reputations are well known to us (except our own). Character, meaning first a figure or letter engraved, means secondarily those traits which are peculiar to any person or thing. Reputation is, or should be, the result of character. Character is the sum of individual qualities; reputation, what is generally thought of character, so far as it is known. Character is like an inward and spiritual grace, of which reputation is, or should be, the outward and visible sign. . . . Sheridan errs in making Sir Peter Teazle say, as he leaves Lady Sneerwell's scandalous coterie, 'I leave my character behind me.' (His reputation he left; but his character was always in his own keeping.)"

§ 1609. Reputation not a "Fact," but Hearsay Testimony. It follows, since reputation is looked to merely as evidence of the character reputed, that the reputation is hearsay testimony, for it is the expression of an opinion on the part of the community, used testimonially, but uttered out of Court and not under cross-examination (ante, §§ 1361, 1362). It is therefore receivable, if at all, as an exception to the Hearsay rule. It has been said, in an opinion often quoted,¹ that reputation is admissible as a "fact," i. e. as circumstantial evidence; but this is the merest error. Reputation is testimonial evidence, i. e. the assertion of a number of persons used as the basis of an inference to the truth of the fact asserted (ante, § 25); and the true nature of this use cannot be obscured by calling it a "fact":

1815, Tilghman, C. J., in Com. v. Stewart, 1 S. & R. 344 (rejecting neighborhood-reputation-evidence as to the character of an alleged disorderly house): "It is agreed on all hands that this is not one of those cases in which hearsay evidence can be admitted. But it is contended that the complaint of the neighborhood is a matter of fact, and therefore, when the witness proves the complaint, she only proves a fact within her own knowledge. I am not satisfied with this ingenious distinction, which gets round and avoids an important rule of evidence; in the same way all hearsay evidence may be introduced, for it is always a fact that the witness hears the other person speak, and it is a fact that the words spoken by that person were heard by the witness."

It is true that reputation is not always and necessarily used as hearsay, i. e. as a testimonial assertion. It may be a part of the very issue, as where the reputation of a plaintiff is in issue to determine the damages in an action for defamation, or where the reputation of a house of ill-fame is in issue; in these and similar cases (ante, §§ 70-79), the reputation is the fact to be proved, irrespective of the actual character reputed. Moreover, reputation may be evidential circumstantially, as where it is offered to show probable knowledge by a creditor of a debtor's insolvency or to show probable belief by a defendant in the violent character of the deceased on a trial for homicide; in these and similar cases (ante, §§ 245-261), the reputation is used merely as a circumstance from which it may be inferred that some other person obtained a knowledge or a belief. But when reputation is offered as a ground for inferring that the character affirmed by the reputation to exist does actually exist, then what we are asked to receive is testimonial evidence, precisely as it would be (by general concession) if the offer was to prove the extrajudicial belief and utterance of John Doe to the same character. Whenever the offer is to prove what Doe, or Doe and Roe, or Doe and Roe and five hundred others, think and say of J. S.'s character, as a mode of proving J. S.'s actual character, the evidence is hearsay, and must come in, if at all, under a hearsay exception.

§ 1610. General Theory of Use of Reputation as Evidence of Character. There was perhaps a time when reputation alone was not regarded as admis-

¹ 1877, Lord, J., in Walker v. Moors, 122 Mass. 504 (dealing with a witness to reputation for mercantile credit; "Was his testimony the statement of a fact, or was it simply what is ordinarily designated as hearsay evidence? The distinction between reputation and hearsay evidence is sometimes a difficult practical question. . . . General reputation is a fact. The mere declaration of one or many is hearsay. . . . The question is a simple one of fact, Is there a general reputation?"). So also Pollock, C. B., in R. v. Rowton, 1865, Leigh & C. 526 ("What you pick up of a man's reputation in the neighborhood in twenty years is not hearsay").

sible to prove character. There certainly was a time when the personal knowledge and opinion of acquaintances was regarded as a superior source of evidence.¹ But at any rate, for more than two centuries, it has been settled that reputation in the community is a proper source of evidence.

(1) That there is a necessity for this kind of evidence, according to a fundamental principle of Hearsay exceptions (ante, § 1421), appears not merely from the fortuitous circumstance that the personal opinion of intimates is by the present law of most jurisdictions improperly held to be inadmissible (post, §§ 1983, 1985); but also from the settled rule that particular acts, as evidence of character, are not to be resorted to at all against a defendant in a criminal case (ante, § 194) nor against a party in most civil issues (ante, §§ 199-212), and not against a witness except by cross-examination or by judgment of conviction for crime (ante, §§ 977-981); and furthermore from the probable scantiness and indefiniteness of evidence of the latter sort as compared with the fulness and solidity of material represented in a reputation based on a person's constant and repeated exhibition of his character in conduct as daily observed by the community. The last reason has been well set forth in the following passage:

1823, Gibson, J., in Brindle v. M'Ilwaine, 10 S. & R. 282, 285 (excluding reputation to prove intemperance): "That kind of depravity which renders a man unworthy of belief, and which is proved, not by particular instances, but by general reputation, is of a moral kind, and is evinced by a variety of acts and a long course of general bad conduct, the particular instances of which (if they were not inadmissible for other reasons) could not in the nature of things be expected to be treasured up in the recollection of witnesses and spoken of in detail to enable a jury to draw their own conclusions; and therefore an inference of moral destitution drawn from this source by the public at large, which is nothing else than general reputation, is not secondary but the best evidence of the fact of which the nature of the case is susceptible. But the causes of physical depravity of the mental faculties are susceptible of a particular description by those who have witnessed them, and are to be proved by the ordinary evidence of any other fact."

(2) That there is, in the community's reputation, a circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness, fulfilling another fundamental requisite for Hearsay exceptions (ante, § 1422), is found in the same considerations already mentioned as justifying the use of reputation on matters of general interest (ante, § 1583). Those considerations are that, where the subject matter is one in which all or many of the members of the community have an opportunity of acquiring information and have also an interest or motive to obtain such knowledge, there is likely to be such a constant, active, and intelligent discussion and comparison that the resulting opinion, if a definite opinion does result, is likely to be fairly trustworthy. That these considerations apply to a reputation of personal character cannot be doubted. No fact is more open to general observation, no fact is of more legitimate interest to the community as an object of knowledge, and consequently no fact is more the theme of general discussion, criticism, and comparison of views, than moral character as exhibited in conduct. The community relies upon this reputation as evidence in social, commercial, and professional relations, and the law of evidence relies upon it. Erskine's description of reputation is celebrated:

¹ Post, § 1981.

1794, Mr. Thomas Erskine, arguing, in Thomas Hardy's Trial, 24 How. St. Tr. 1079: "You cannot, when asking to character, ask, What has A. B. C. told you about this man's character? No; but, what is the general opinion concerning him? Character is the slow-spreading influence of opinion, arising from the deportment of a man in society. As a man's deportment, good or bad, necessarily produces one circle without another, and so extends itself till it unites in one general opinion, that general opinion is allowed to be given in evidence."

No doubt reputation is often misleading; but so are all sources of evidence. No doubt actual character is not ascertainable by reputation beyond a few broad traits grossly marked, clearly exhibited, and easily observed; but the law does not attempt to use it beyond this point. No doubt actual character does not always merit the estimation which reputation puts upon it; but, nevertheless, there is a certain inevitableness in the revelation of character by conduct, and a certain sureness of apprehension even in the rough popular judgment. Confucius said² in a warning to his disciples: "How can a man conceal his character! How can a man conceal his character!" Emerson expounded it as a cardinal truth of life:³ "A man passes for what he is worth. Very idle is all curiosity concerning other people's estimate of us; and all fear of remaining unknown is not less so. The world is full of judgment-days, and into every assembly that a man enters, in every action he attempts, he is gauged and stamped. 'What has he done?' is a divine question which searches men, and transpierces every false reputation. A fop may sit in any chair of the world, nor be distinguished for his hour from Homer and Washington; but there need never be any doubt concerning the respective ability of human beings. Human character evermore publishes itself." That was a keen answer of Murray, Lord Mansfield, when Mr. Cowper remarked, arguing about reputation-evidence:⁴ "I have heard it said, as a common profligate observation of Colonel Charteris, that he would give twenty thousand pounds to be thought an honest man, — though he would not give twenty farthings to be one"; upon which the great judge commented: "His money could not have been worse laid out; for he would have lost his good character in half an hour afterwards."

(3) A third element, to be regarded in all Hearsay exceptions because required of all testimonial evidence (ante, § 1424), is that principle which excludes testimony not founded on adequate sources of knowledge. This requirement, though an independent one, is satisfied whenever the foregoing one is satisfied; but its bearing here is particularly seen in the rule limiting reputation to that community in which the person resides (post, § 1615).

§ 1611. Reputation, distinguished from Rumors. Reputation, being the community's opinion, is distinguished from mere rumor in two respects.

² Analects, book II.

³ Essay on Spiritual Laws.

⁴ 1783, Bembridge's Trial, 22 How. St. Tr. 135.

On the one hand, reputation implies the definite and final formation of opinion by the community; while rumor implies merely a report that is not yet finally credited. On the other hand, a rumor is usually thought of as signifying a particular act or occurrence, while a reputation is predicated upon a general trait of character; a man's reputation, for example, may declare him honest, and yet to-day a rumor may have circulated that this reputed honest man has defaulted yesterday in his accounts. The distinction in the latter aspect has already been sufficiently illustrated (in the passages quoted ante, § 74). The distinction in the former aspect is the more important one to be emphasized in the present connection:

1852, Bell, J., in Dame v. Kenney, 25 N. H. 320: "People usually form their opinions of the characters of men from what they know of them personally and from what is said of them by those who have the means of knowledge and whose opinions are entitled to confidence. . . . [Mere rumors and reports], if numerous and repeated, too often gain credit, and the general character may, in consequence of that credit, be seriously affected. The reports themselves prove nothing as to general character. They may be entirely discredited and disbelieved where the party assailed is known. The point of inquiry in relation to general character is not whether a man has been attacked; but, how does he stand now, when rumor has spent its force upon him?"¹

§ 1612. Reputation must be General; Divided Reputation. It is commonly said that the reputation must be "general"; that is, the community as a whole must be agreed in their opinion, in order that it may be regarded as a reputation. If the estimates vary, and public opinion has not reached the stage of definite harmony, the opinion cannot yet be treated as sufficiently trustworthy. On the other hand, it must be impossible to exact unanimity; for there are always dissenters. To define precisely that quality of public opinion thus commonly described as "general" is therefore a difficult thing. The requirements of modern Courts are apparently more strict than in the earlier practice; and there is something to be said for the liberality of the latter:

1780, Maskall's Trial, 21 How. St. Tr. 684: "Do you know anything more of him [the witness Richard Ingram]?" "I have been in several companies where he has been mentioned, and wherever his name was mentioned, he was generally known by the appellation of Lying Dick." To another witness: "What character does he bear?" "There is a diversity of opinions respecting him; some give him a good character, and some a very indifferent one." "Which is the most prevalent of the two?" "I hear that he is a most notorious liar." "Is the opinion more general of his being a liar than otherwise?" "I have heard them that know him a good deal say so."

1884, Campbell, C. J., in Pickens v. State, 61 Miss. 566: "General reputation consists in what is generally thought of one by those among whom he resides and with whom he is chiefly conversant. 'Common opinion'; 'that in which there is general concurrence'; 'the prevailing opinion in that circle where one's character is best known'; 'what is generally said by those among whom he associates and by whom he is known'; 'common report among those who have the best opportunity of judging of his habits and integrity';

¹ Accord: 1879, Haley v. State, 63 Ala. 86; 1855, Pleasant v. State, 15 Ark. 624, 653 ("rumor and belief," excluded); 1877, State v. Laxton, 76 N. C. 216 (excluded; here offered by the prosecution in rebuttal of a defendant's good character); 1903, Harrison v. Garrett, 132 id. 172, 43 S. E. 594; 1846, Ford v. Ford, 7 Humph. 101.

'common reputation among his neighbors and acquaintances,'—are so many forms of expression by which an effort has been made to define wherein consists general reputation."

1895, McSherry, J., in Jackson v. Jackson, 82 Md. 17, 33 Atl. 317: "A reputation, to be a provable reputation at all, must be a general reputation. It may be either one of two opposites; for instance, either good or bad. It cannot be intermediate, — that is, partly one, and partly the other; for that would not be general, and there would then be no general reputation either way. If it is generally good or generally bad, or, as applicable to the case at bar, if a man and woman are generally reputed to be married, or if the converse is generally asserted, a general reputation, one way or the other, exists; and of a general reputation, and none other, the law allows evidence to be given. But, if it be not general, then, obviously, it does not exist as a fact, and evidence cannot be received to show a partial, limited, or qualified repute. The existence of a diversity of opinion is one of the means by which a witness may know there is a general reputation, but this means of knowledge, apart from the fact that there is or is not a general reputation, and as a totally independent circumstance, is not the thing to be proved."

In applying this principle, a great variety of forms of question are to be found, sanctioned or disapproved, all of them involving efforts, more or less successful, to carry out more definitely the fundamental and unquestioned notion that the reputation must be "general."¹ There is on this subject often an attempt at nicety of phrase which amounts in effect to mere ¹ 1846, Sorrelle v. Craig, 9 Ala. 539 ("what is generally said of the person by those among whom he dwells or with whom he is chiefly conversant"); 1848, Hadjo v. Gooden, 13 id. 720, 722 ("it is not necessary to know all his neighbors"); 1885, Jackson v. State, 78 id. 473 (reputation "in the upper portion of the neighborhood," admitted); 1903, Vickers v. People, — Colo. —, 73 Pac. 845 (testimony excluded, where the witness, a non-resident, had talked with only three persons); 1845, Regnier v. Cabot, 7 Ill. 40 (the witness knew of the opinion of three persons only; excluded); 1859, Crabtree v. Kile, 21 id. 183 (what is "generally said"); 1861, Crabtree v. Hagenbaugh, 25 id. 233, 238 (what "a majority of his neighbors said"); 1864, Fahnestock v. State, 23 Ind. 231, 238 (character founded on "report of his neighbors," excluded, as not involving the "general opinion of the neighborhood"); 1879, Meyncke v. State, 68 id. 404 ("the word 'general' is an essential requisite in an impeaching question of this kind"); 1891, Coates v. Sulan, 46 Kan. 341, 26 Pac. 720 (a question as to the "reputation in this community," not inadmissible if properly understood by the witness as involving generalness, though the word "general" was not used); 1869, Vernon v. Tucker, 30 Md. 456, 462 (what "several" of the neighbors said, excluded); 1856, Webber v. Hanke, 4 Mich. 198 ("what people acquainted with him say," held improper; "what is generally said" is proper); 1878, Lenox v. Fuller, 39 id. 271 (apparently approving the preceding case); 1892, Sanford v. Rowley, 93 id. 119, 122, 52 N. W. 1119 (numerously signed indorsement of petition for office, excluded); 1859, Powers v. Presgroves, 38 Miss. 227, 241 ("what is generally said"); 1885, French v. Sale, 63 id. 386, 392, 394 (the testimony is "usually and necessarily indefinite" as to the number of persons; the witness must be able "as a matter of conscience" to give the "common or general opinion"); 1877, Matthewson v. Burr, 6 Nebr. 312, 316 (not "what two or three persons only may think or say," but "the general estimation in which he is held by his neighbors and acquaintances"); 1851, Hersom v. Heuderson, 23 N. H. 498, 506 ("Do the neighbors call him Lying Josh?," excluded); 1843, State v. O'Neale, 3 Ired. 88 (inquiries as to "what a majority of neighbors said," and "in what estimation E. was held," excluded; the estimation must be general); 1843, State v. Parks, ib. 296 (the witness "had heard a great deal said about his character"; "did not know whether a majority of those he heard speak of it spoke well or ill of it"; "had heard a great many respectable men speak well of L's character, and a great many, equally respectable, speak ill of it"; excluded, as not amounting to a general reputation); 1853, French v. Millard, 2 Oh. St. 44 ("reputation" means "general reputation"); 1892, State v. Turner, 36 S. C. 534, 539, 15 S. E. 602 (the reputation must be "general," the number of persons included depending largely on circumstances, in the trial Court's discretion); 1851, Wayne, J., in Gaines v. Relf, 12 How. 555 (not merely what some say, but the general saying); 1898, State v. Marks, 16 Utah 204, 51 Pac. 1089 ("the word 'general' should always be used," and directed to the reputation in the community of residence).

It follows that, on direct examination, the witness cannot be asked to name individuals who have spoken: 1872, State v. Perkins, 66 N. C. 127. For allowing this on cross-examination, see ante, §§ 988, 1111.

quibbling, because the witness ordinarily will not appreciate the discriminations; such requirements of definition should be avoided as unprofitable.²

§ 1613. Same: Majority need not have Spoken. The reputation, as just indicated, must involve the general opinion, not a partial or fragmentary one. Nevertheless that opinion may exist as a general one, entertained by the community as a whole, although no utterance by that general mass of its members, or even by a majority of them, has been made. In other words, a general reputation may by inference be believed to exist, although the utterances actually heard by the witness, and used as the basis of his inference, may be and usually are those of a representative minority only:

1884, Campbell, C. J., in Pickens v. State, 61 Miss. 567: "It was not necessary for him [the witness] to have heard a majority, or any given proportion, of that undefined and undefinable circle, designated as the 'neighborhood' or 'community,' say what they thought of G. . . . While a witness should be cautious on this subject, and not be encouraged to testify that he is acquainted with the general reputation of another unless he knows the generally prevalent sentiment of those most conversant with him, he is not to be repressed by telling him he must know what a majority say of him about whom he is called to testify. . . . He may have heard a sufficient number express themselves to be willing to say he knows the general concurrence in one view of a number great enough to be regarded as a fair index to the community. One may know the general reputation of Sargent S. Prentiss as a matchless orator, although he has heard a small proportion of those who felt the thrill of his unrivalled eloquence say what they thought of him."¹

§ 1614. Same: Never Hearing anything Against the Person. Upon the same principle, the absence of utterances unfavorable to a person is a sufficient basis for predicating that the general opinion of him is favorable. A witness to good reputation may therefore testify by saying that he has never heard anything said against the person:

1865, R. v. Rowton, Leigh & C. 520, 535, 536; Erle, C. J.: "The best character is that which is the least talked of"; Cockburn, C. J.: "Negative evidence, such as 'I never heard anything against the character of the man,' is the most cogent evidence of a man's good character and reputation, because a man's character is not talked about till there is some fault to be found with it. It is the best evidence of his character that he is not talked about at all."

1854, Benning, J., in Taylor v. Smith, 16 Ga. 10: "Certainly the sort of silent respect and consideration by which one is treated and received by those who know him is some index of what they think of him as a man of veracity; and indeed, if he is a person whom they think very highly of, this is about the only index. The character for truth of such a person is never discussed, questioned, 'spoken of.' To discuss, question, or even perhaps to speak of one's reputation for truth, is to admit that two opinions are possible on that point. Suppose the question were, What was the character of Washington among

² 1859, Bell, J., in Boon v. Wethered, 23 Tex. 675, 681; 1880, Stone, J., in Sullivan v. State, 66 Ala. 50 ("The question of general character or reputation is one of difficult solution to a majority of witnesses. Counsel should be allowed to vary the phrasology, or sever the constituent parts or members of the sentence, so as to place the subject within the comprehension of the witness").

¹ Accord: 1878, Robinson v. State, 16 Fla.

835 (not necessary that a majority of the neighbors should have spoken on the subject); 1902, Cunningham v. Underwood, 53 C. C. A. 99, 116 Fed. 803, 810. Yet the number of occasions may indicate in a given case that the witness has not sufficient knowledge (ante, § 692) of the community's opinion: 1883, Com. v. Rogers, 136 Mass. 158 (hearing the character spoken of on two occasions; excluded).

his neighbors for truth? Could the answer be anything but this; 'I never heard it questioned, discussed, spoken of; and yet I know it to have been the most exalted?'¹

But it is obvious that this form is no sufficient indication for a reputation of bad character.² Moreover, so far as the answer "I never heard his character discussed" implies that the witness has not had opportunities for learning what the reputation was, he is not a qualified witness to reputation (on the principle of § 692, ante).³

§ 1615. Reputation must be in Neighborhood of Residence. That discussion and comparison which contribute to the complete estimate and lead to the general consensus (ante, § 1610) must in the beginning obtain its data from the experience of those who have had direct contact with the person in question; and it is these data of personal observation which are indispensable as a foundation of the final reputation. Such experience of observed instances is to be found only among those with whom the person ordinarily associates, — that is, among the members of the community in which he resides and acts:

1887, Brace, J., in Waddingham v. Hulett, 92 Mo. 533, 5 S. W. 27: "[The witness to reputation] must be able to state what is generally said of the person by those among whom he dwells, or with whom he is chiefly conversant, — not by those among or with whom he may have sojourned for a brief period, and who have had neither time nor opportunity to test his conduct, acts, or declarations, or to form a correct estimate of either. A man's character is to be judged by the general tenor and current of his life, and not by a mere episode in it."

Accordingly, it is commonly said that the place or community of which the reputation is predicated must be the "neighborhood" where he has "resided."

¹ Accord: 1796, Leary's Trial, 26 How. St. Tr. 337, 338; 1848, Hadjo v. Gooden, 13 Ala. 720, 722; 1853, Dave v. State, 22 id. 23, 37 (disapproving an instruction asking for a knowledge of what "the majority of the neighbors" said or thought; because a majority may not have expressed themselves); 1876, Childs v. State, 53 id. 28, 29; 1888, Hussey v. State, 87 id. 129, 6 So. 420 (admitting the question whether he had ever heard of the defendant having any other "difficulty" than the one in question); 1888, Moulton v. State, 88 id. 121, 6 So. 758; 1902, People v. Adams, 137 Cal. 580, 70 Pac. 662; 1854, Taylor v. Smith, 16 Ga. 7; 1888, Flemister v. State, 81 id. 768, 771, 7 S. E. 642; 1892, Hodgkins v. State, 89 id. 761, 15 S. E. 695; 1897, Powell v. State, 101 id. 9, 29 S. E. 309; 1882, State v. Nelson, 58 Ia. 208, 12 N. W. 253; 1895, State v. Case, 96 id. 264, 65 N. W. 149; 1900, State v. Keenan, 111 id. 286, 82 N. W. 792; 1891, Day v. Ross, 154 Mass. 14, 27 N. E. 676 (compare the citations infra); 1878, Lenox v. Fuller, 39 Mich. 271; 1895, Conkey v. Carpenter, 106 id. 1, 63 N. W. 990; 1876, State v. Lee, 22 Minn. 407, 409 (admissible, if the witness has been "acquainted with the accused for a considerable time, under such circumstances that he would be more or less likely to hear what was said about him"); 1886, Bingham v. Bernard, 36 id. 114, 116, 30

N. W. 404 (an instruction referring to this as the "very best evidence," held not improper); 1885, French v. Sale, 63 Miss. 386, 393; 1878, State v. Grate, 68 Mo. 26; 1893, State v. Brandenburg, 118 id. 181, 185, 23 S. W. 1080; 1898, State v. Shafer, 22 Mont. 17, 55 Pac. 526; 1902, Matushevitz v. Hughes, 26 id. 212, 66 Pac. 939, 68 Pac. 467; 1877, Matthewson v. Burr, 6 Nebr. 312, 317; 1880, State v. Pearce, 15 Nev. 188, 190; 1900, State v. Saidell, 70 N. H. 174, 46 Atl. 1083; 1839, People v. Davis, 21 Wend. 315; 1873, State v. Speight, 69 N. C. 72, 75, semble: 1860, Gandolfo v. State, 11 Oh. St. 114, 117; 1850, Morss v. Palmer, 15 Pa. 51, 57; 1898, Milliken v. Long, 188 id. 411, 41 Atl. 540; 1859, Boon v. Weathered, 23 Tex. 675, 681; 1902, Foerster v. U. S., 54 C. C. A. 210, 116 Fed. 860; 1880, Davis v. Franke, 33 Gratt. 425; 1870, Lemons v. State, 4 W. Va. 755, 760. Contra: 1877, Walker v. Moors, 122 Mass. 502 (a confused opinion, but apparently excluding such a form of answer); 1867, Lyman v. Philadelphia, 56 Pa. 488, 502, semble.

² 1884, Pickens v. State, 61 Miss. 563, 567, semble; 1885, French v. Sale, 63 id. 386, 393.

³ In Com. v. Lawler, 12 All. 585 (1866), the question, "Have you heard his character called in question?" was excluded merely because the witness seemed to know nothing of the reputation.

The phrasings and definitions of this community and of the time of sojourn vary considerably; but nothing should turn upon precise words; and the general idea may be with sufficient correctness phrased in various forms.¹

§ 1616. Same: Reputation in a Commercial or other Circle, not the Place of Residence. In a community where the ordinary person's home is under the same roof as his store or workshop, or where the stores, workshops, offices, and homes are all collected within a small village or town group, and one's working associates are equally the neighbors of one's home, there is but one community for the purpose of forming public opinion, and there is but a single capacity in which the ordinary person can exhibit his character to the community. In other words, he can there have but one reputation. But in the conditions of life to-day, especially in large cities, a man may have one reputation in the suburb of his residence and another in the commercial or industrial circles of his place of work; or he may have one reputation in his place of technical domicile in New York and another in the region of the mines of Michigan or the iron-foundries of Ohio where his investments call him for supervision for long portions of time. There may be distinct circles of persons, each circle having no relation to the other, and yet each having a reputation based on constant and intimate personal observation of the man. There is no reason why the law should not recognize this. The traditional phrase about "neighborhood" reputation was appropriate to the conditions

¹ 1852, Boswell v. Blackman, 12 Ga. 593 (reputation in a county, i. e. a district larger than the mere neighborhood, admitted); 1863, Aurora v. Cobb, 21 Ind. 510 ("friends and neighbors"); 1877, Rawles v. State, 56 id. 441 (limiting it definitely to the neighborhood of residence; not accepting it from "the neighborhood where she is best known"); 1879, Smock v. Pierson, 68 id. 405 ("neighborhood where he resides"); 1887, Hanners v. McClelland, 74 Ia. 322, 37 N. W. 389 (in a town near by, admitted); 1895, State v. Brown, 55 Kan. 766, 42 Pac. 363 (a twenty-four hours' stay in a place, held sufficient to found a reputation for unchastity; "there is no fixed time within which a reputation may be gained; . . . she may have gained considerable notoriety in twenty-four hours"); 1859, Henderson v. Haynes, 2 Metc. Ky. 342, 348 ("those among whom he dwells or with whom he is conversant"); 1895, Combs v. Com., 97 Ky. 24, 29 S. W. 734 (in a county where he did not reside, excluded); 1889, State v. Johnson, 41 La. An. 574, 7 So. 670 ("general reputation," held improper, without the addition "in the neighborhood in which he lived"); 1859, Powers v. Presgroves, 38 Miss. 227, 241 (the reputation must be "where he is best known," "by those among whom he dwells or with whom he is chiefly conversant," but no definite limits to that neighborhood can be set); 1885, French v. Sale, 63 id. 386, 392, 394 (the testimony is "usually and necessarily indefinite" as to the dimensions of the neighborhood; the witness must be able to say "as a matter of conscience that he knows the common or general opinion of the community or neighborhood on the subject"); 1874, Warlick v. Peterson, 58 Mo. 408, 416 (must be at place of residence); 1887, Waddingham v. Hulett, 92 id. 533, 5 S. W. 27 (reputation at a place where the person visited 3 months, etc., excluded); 1893, State v. Pettit, 119 id. 410, 414, 24 S. W. 1014 (reputation where the deceased had lived only 8 or 9 months, held receivable in trial Court's discretion); 1899, State v. McLaughlin, 149 id. 19, 50 S. W. 315 (residence for 6 or 8 months, sufficient); 1900, State v. Cushenberry, 157 id. 168, 56 S. W. 737 (reputation where he resided only a few weeks, allowed on the facts); 1860, Kelley v. Proctor, 41 N. H. 140, 146 (the question "Are you acquainted with F.'s reputation for truth in the vicinity or neighborhood where he resides?" was urged by counsel as the proper form; Sargent, J.: "No doubt the form of the question as insisted on by the defendant is substantially correct; . . . but a man's neighborhood extends for these purposes as far as he is well known, — as far as people are acquainted with him and his character"; and the question, "Are you acquainted with F.'s reputation for truth?" was held sufficient); 1862, Griffin v. State, 14 Oh. St. 63 (excluding a reputation in a town 26 miles from the defendant's home, in a community "not having the means of forming from personal acquaintance an intelligent judgment on the subject"); 1859, Boon v. Weathered, 23 Tex. 675, 686 ("in the community where he lives or is best known"); 1896, State v. Cushing, 14 Wash. 527, 45 Pac. 145 (reputation in a town a few miles from the witness' home, admitted).

of the time; but it should not be taken as imposing arbitrary limitations not appropriate in other times. Alia tempora, alii mores. What the law then and now desired was a trustworthy reputation; if that is to be found among a circle of persons other than the circle of neighbors about a sleeping-place, it should be received. This modern application of the traditional principle was foreshadowed in the following exposition of one of the greatest American judges:

1855, Lumpkin, J., in Keener v. State, 18 Ga. 221 (murder in a brothel, by a railway-conductor): "We distinctly repudiate the doctrine that a man may not have different general characters, adapted to different circumstances and localities, — that is, a character for rail-cars and a character for the brothel, a character for the church and one for the street, a character when drunk and a character when sober. . . . A schoolmaster is indicted for an assault and battery upon one of his pupils; he defends himself under his acknowledged right to inflict moderate correction; the charge puts in issue the character of the teacher for violence; and where, pray, would you go to ascertain that character, — among his fellow-men, or in the school-room? There can be but one response to this question. An officer in the army or navy is tried for cruelty to a soldier or sailor; what has his reputation in the community generally to do with the trait of character involved in the issue? It is in the barracks and on board the man-of-war that we look for what we wish to learn."

1903, Fish, J., in Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Reynolds, 117 Ga. 47, 43 S. E. 456: "As the general reputation of a man is usually formed in the neighborhood where he spends most of his time, and most frequently comes in social and business contact with his fellow-men, it is usual to limit the inquiry as to a witness' general character to his general reputation in the neighborhood where he lives; that is, where he has his home. We do not think, however, there is any hard and fast rule which requires this to be done in every possible case. The very reason for so limiting the inquiry generally may be a good reason for allowing more latitude in an exceptional case. The reason for so limiting the inquiry generally, as already indicated, is that the place in which to ascertain a man's true reputation is the place where people generally have had the best opportunities of forming a correct estimate of his character. It is obvious that this may not, in every instance, be the neighborhood where a man's home is situated. . . . We apprehend that there may be cases in which a person has established no general reputation in the immediate neighborhood of his home, but has established such a reputation elsewhere. This may arise from the fact that his home is located in one place and his daily business or work is carried on in another, in which latter place he spends nearly all of his time, and hence is well known to people generally, while he rarely comes in social or business contact with people, outside of his family circle, in the neighborhood of his home."

The judicial rulings on this class of questions show frequently a defiance of common sense. "The rules of evidence," said Lord Ellenborough,¹ "must expand according to the exigencies of society." It is to be hoped that the due expansion will here be found.²

¹ 1812, Pritt v. Fairclough, 3 Camp. 305.

² The cases on both sides are as follows: 1864, Turner's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 565, 607 (robbery; defendant's reputation "upon the Exchange" asked for); 1860, Mosc v. State, 36 Ala. 211, 229 (a family of eight or ten whites and about fifty blacks; the reputation of a slave therein, admitted, because in such cases "it is a general character and often the only character which the slave has"); 1883, People v. Mark- ham, 64 Cal. 157, 163, 30 Pac. 620 ("general reputation" among the police-officers of a certain town, excluded; reputation must be "amongst his neighbors" or "amongst those who have had opportunities of ascertaining his reputation as generally estimated"); 1901, Giordano v. Brandywine Granite Co., 3 Pennewill Del. 423, 52 Atl. 332 (reputation among fellow-workmen, allowed to be shown by their expressed refusal to work with him because incompetent;

§ 1617. Time of Reputation; (1) Reputation before the Time in Issue. A reputation to character must ordinarily be thought of as contemporary with the character, i. e. as predicating the person, then existing in the community, to possess a certain trait. There is thus no objection, so far as concerns the reputation-element, to using a prior reputation, — for example, of Doe, in 1895, for peaceableness as evidential on a charge of murder in 1900; for the reputation in 1895 predicates the trait as then existing, and does not pretend to predicate anything as to 1900; and the real question to be met is a question of relevancy, namely, whether the existence of the trait in 1895 is evidence of its existence in 1900. That it is evidential for that purpose is unquestionable (ante, §§ 60, 191, 927). The judicial views thereon have already been considered in dealing with Witness' Character in Impeachment (ante, § 928).

§ 1618. Same: (2) Reputation after the Time in Issue. Where the reputation offered is of a time subsequent to the time of the act in issue, the objection is of a different sort, and involves directly the trustworthiness of the reputation-evidence. There is here no difficulty from the point of view of the relevancy of character; a man's trait or disposition a month or a year after a certain date is as evidential of his trait on that date as his nature a month or a year before that date; because character is a more or less permanent quality and we may make inferences from it either forward or backward (ante, §§ 60, 921). Assuming, then, that we could ascertain the actual disposition (for example) of Doe one year after the time of a murder charged, there is no objection to using it as a basis for inferring his disposition a year before. But can we assume that it is his real disposition or trait, one year later, which is before us? Is his reputation, as obtaining one year later, then a trustworthy index to his actual character? This question may be answered differently for a party and for a witness.

sensible opinion; Lore, C. J., diss); 1903, Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Reynolds, 117 Ga. 47, 43 S. E. 456 (reputation "up and down the W. A. L. Railroad, where he worked," admitted; quoted supra); 1890, Sage v. State, 127 Ind. 15, 27, 26 N. E. 667 (reputation in H. at a time when the witness had been seven years confined in jail at L., excluded); 1902, Bonaparte v. Thayer, 95 Md. 548, 52 Atl. 496 (reputation for veracity "among his business associates," excluded); 1878, State v. Clifton (30 La. An. 951 (reputation for honesty in the defendant's boarding-house, excluded); 1876, Thomas v. People, 67 N. Y. 224 (reputation in prison, admitted; "there was a large community there, and a man can have a general character there as well as elsewhere"); 1897, Youngs v. R. Co., 154 id. 764, 49 N. E. 1106, 77 Hun 612 (reputation among fellow-employees, not received to show the fact of incompetency); 1898, Park v. R. Co., 155 id. 215, 49 N. E. 674 (same); 1903, Lamb v. Littman, 132 N. C. 978, 44 S. E. 646 (reputation of a boss, for incompetence, among mill hands, admitted; but this was a fellow-servant case); 1877, Snyder v. Com., 85 Pa. 519, 522 (the complaints of the defendant's children about his cruelty to them, held not equivalent to a reputation); 1897, Williams v. U. S., 168 U. S. 382, 18 Sup. 92 (extortion by a custom-house officer; the defendant's bad reputation "in the Custom House," excluded, because it prevailed only "among the limited number of people employed in a particular public building"; this is not an enlightened ruling; the place where a reputation would be best founded is the place of daily employment); 1900, State v. Hilberg, 22 Utah 27, 61 Pac. 215 (reputation "in that precinct," excluded; unsound).

In the following two cases, trial instructions too long to be quoted, dealing with a reputation among criminals, gamblers, etc., were passed upon: 1896, Smith v. U. S., 161 U. S. 85, 16 Sup. 483; Brown v. U. S., 164 id. 221, 17 Sup. 33; the rulings of the majority opinion are possibly correct in theory; but in so far as they disapproved the well-worded instructions of Mr. J. Parker, one of our greatest American trial judges, they are lamentable quibbles; compare § 21, ante.

Distinguish the use of an employee's reputation to show the employer's knowledge of incompetence (ante, § 249).

(a) Where the desired character is that of a party — for example, the defendant in a criminal charge, the prosecutrix in a rape charge, or the plaintiff in a statutory action for seduction —, it is obvious that after the charge has become a matter of public discussion, and partisan feeling on either side has had an opportunity to produce an effect, a false reputation is likely to be created, — a reputation based perhaps in part upon rumors about the very act charged or upon the interested utterances of either party. The safeguards of trustworthiness are here lacking :

1863, Battle, J., in State v. Johnson, Winston 151 : “Upon principle, it ought to be confined to the time when the charge was first made. A different rule will expose the defendant to the great danger of having his character ruined or badly damaged by the arts of a popular or artful prosecutor, stimulated to activity by the hope of thus making his prosecution successful. Evidence of character is of the nature of hearsay ; and the general rule in relation to that kind of testimony is that it shall not be received if the hearsay be post litem motam.”

1882, Hines, J., in White v. Com., 80 Ky. 486 : “The only reason for stopping the inquiry at either point [time of discovery or time of arrest] is that the probabilities of innocence derived from previous good character may not be destroyed or embarrassed by the fact that the offence under consideration has been committed. . . . After the discovery that an offence has been committed, a previous good character may be destroyed and a bad one created by discussion of the circumstances connected with the offence, as well before as after the formal charge by legal proceeding is had.”

Accordingly, it is generally agreed that a reputation at any time after a charge published, or other controversy begun, is not admissible.¹ But, since the above reasoning is directed against the risk of an unduly hostile reputation, it would seem that a party might properly be allowed to invoke in his favor a good reputation post litem motam.²

(2) In the case of a witness, the conditions above pointed out do not usually affect his reputation, because his conduct is not the subject of the

¹ 1871, Brown v. State, 46 Ala. 175, 184 (of defendant, after the time of the alleged crime, excluded); 1896, White v. State, 111 id. 92, 21 So. 330 (defendant's character while in jail, excluded; the time must be at or before the crime charged); 1882, White v. Com., 80 Ky. 485 (bad reputation of a defendant, limited to the time before discovery of the offence charged); 1873, People v. Brewer, 27 Mich. 133, 135 (seduction; the woman's reputation post litem, excluded); 1861, State v. Forscher, 43 N. H. 89, 90 (rape; bad reputation of the prosecutrix for chastity, as formed since the time of the alleged rape, excluded, as “inducing attempts to destroy the character of a prosecutrix in order to defeat the prosecution”); 1900, State v. Spragne, 64 N. J. L. 419, 45 Atl. 788 (rape-assault; defendant's bad reputation for violence after the time of arrest, or of commission of the offence — the opinion not clearly distinguishing —, inadmissible; the rule not to apply to the reputation of a witness or of a defendant as witness); 1877, State v. Laxton, 76 N. C. 216, 218 (of defendant, after charge made, excluded); 1851, Cincinnati & F. M. Ins. Co. v. May, 20 Oh. 224 (of a pilot, confined to the time before the accident in issue); 1870, Wroe v. State, 20 Oh. St. 472 (of defendant, after the time of the offence, excluded); 1893, State v. Kenyon, 18 R. I. 217, 223, 26 Atl. 199 (reputation of deceased for quarrelsomeness, since his death, excluded); 1900, State v. Taylor, 57 S. C. 483, 35 S. E. 729 (prosecutrix in rape; reputation after the date charged, excluded); 1897, State v. King, 9 S. D. 628, 70 N. W. 1046 (seduction; reputation after accusation made, excluded); 1895, Lea v. State, 94 Tenn. 495, 29 S. W. 900 (of defendant, after charge made, excluded); 1898, Spurr v. U. S., 31 C. C. A. 202, 87 Fed. 701 (defendant's reputation since the time of the act charged, excluded); 1819, Carter v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 169 (of defendant, after charge made, excluded). Contra, but missing the point: 1839, Com. v. Sackett, 22 Pick. 396 (“it may be of little weight, but still it will have some bearing, as commonly the descent from virtue to crime is gradual”).

For the exclusion of reputation after publication of a defamatory charge, offered to mitigate damages in an action for defamation, see ante, § 74.

² Contra: 1896, Moore v. State, 96 Tenn. 209, 33 S. W. 1046.

controversy. Moreover, although a witness may sometimes be so related to the controversy or to the parties as to have suffered in consequence from partisan feeling, yet the situation hardly requires that as a general rule a limitation to reputation ante litem motam should be enforced. Accordingly, the reputation of a witness even up to the time of testifying is generally regarded as admissible.³ Where the witness is also the party, it would seem that the rule applicable to parties should apply.⁴

§ 1619. Other Principles affecting Reputation, discriminated (Character in Issue, Witness' Knowledge of Reputation, Belief on Oath). (1) That reputation is distinct from character has already been noted (ante, § 1608). Hence, where "character" is in issue upon the pleadings, it is important to observe whether by the nature of the case it is the actual character or the reputation that is in issue. If the latter, then reputation is provable as a fact in issue; if the former, then reputation, though not in issue, is admissible under the present exception as evidence of the actual character. The classes of cases involving such questions have already been examined (ante, §§ 70-80, 202-212).

(2) The witness who testifies to reputation must, like other witnesses, have had opportunities to acquire personal knowledge of the fact to which he testifies. Hence it is commonly said that he must be a resident of the neighborhood or otherwise so placed as to be acquainted with the reputation; this principle has already been examined (ante, § 692).

(3) A witness to reputation may on cross-examination be tested, like other witnesses, as to the sources of his knowledge; whether he may be asked what persons he has heard speak unfavorably, or be otherwise so tested, rests on principles already examined (ante, §§ 988, 1111).

(4) Whether a witness testifying that he would not believe another upon oath may base that belief upon the other's reputation, is dealt with elsewhere, under the Opinion rule (post, § 1980), in treating of personal opinion to character.

³ 1899, Thrawley v. State, 153 Ind. 375, 55 N. E. 95 (bad reputation of defendant's wife at time of trial, admissible, even though affected by the charge against defendant); 1878, Fisher v. Conway, 21 Kan. 18, 25 (holding that the basing of the reputation upon rumors circulated by enemies, etc., goes merely to the weight of the evidence); 1858, Mask v. State, 36 Miss. 77, 89 (testimony to bad reputation admitted, though the witness had never heard it called in question till after the present dispute); 1838, State v. Howard, 9 N. H. 486 (although a concerted attempt to injure the witness' reputation was alleged to have been made by the opponent); 1881, Dollner v. Lintz, 84 N. Y. 669 (reputation at the time of trial, admissible to show reputation at the time the deposition was taken); 1897, Smith v. Hine, 179 Pa. 203, 36 Atl. 222 (that the reputation is founded on partisan opinions goes to weight only); 1900, Fossett v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 400, 55 S. W. 497; 1868, Stirling v. Sterling, 41 Vt. 80, 96 (bastardy; complainant's reputation since controversy begun, admitted); 1882, Amidon v. Hosley, 54 id. 25 (holding, conversely, that a person offering his witness' good character may confine his inquiry to the time before suit begun). Contra: 1864, Reid v. Reid, 17 N. J. Eq. 101 (opinions obtained by an agent sent to the neighborhood to make inquiries); 1879, Johnson v. Brown, 51 Tex. 65, 76 (reputation arising from the very will-contest before the court, excluded). Compare the cases ante, § 692, excluding testimony by one sent to a neighborhood to investigate reputation; in part they proceed upon this ground.

In general, a reputation may be stated to have been good up to a certain time, and then bad thereafter: 1858, Quinsigamond Bank v. Hobbs, 11 Gray 252, 257.

⁴ 1898, State v. Marks, 16 Utah 204, 15 Pac. 1089 (not after time of offence, "or at least," time of arrest; here applied to a defendant as witness). Contra: 1889, Com. v. Hourigan, 89 Ky. 313, 12 S. W. 550; 1900, State v. Sprague, N. J., supra, note 1; 1900, Renfro v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 393, 56 S. W. 1013.

§ 1620. Kind of Character; (1) Chastity; (2) House of Ill-fame; (3) Common Offender. That species of character of which reputation is strictly and properly a trustworthy evidence is moral character, i. e. traits of permanent moral constitution, such as peaceableness, honesty, veracity, and the like, or their opposites. But obviously the line between those personal qualities which are properly provable by reputation and those which are not is a difficult one to draw; it cannot be definitely fixed by way of deduction from principle. The considerations of principle (noted ante, § 1610) still leave it arguable in some classes of cases whether reputation is a proper source of proof within the general scope of the principle.

(1) As to chastity or its opposite, no doubt has ever arisen, except in a single and peculiar action. In the statutory action or prosecution for seduction of a woman of "previously chaste character," the question first arises whether this "character" is actual character or reputation. Assuming the former view to be taken, then, although actual character is the fact in issue, there is no reason why reputation should not be admissible, as in all other issues, to prove the chaste or unchaste character.¹ But in some jurisdictions the Court's adoption of the view that actual character is the fact in issue has led it erroneously to exclude reputation as evidence of that character.² It may be added that reputation is of course not admissible to prove a specific act of fornication,³ or a condition of pregnancy.⁴

(2) On a charge of keeping a house of ill-fame or a disorderly house, the same distinction between actual character and reputation serves to solve the difficulty. (a) So far as the offence involves in the issue the kind of persons resorting to it, it is possible to maintain that either their reputation or their actual character is the fact in issue; if the former, then those persons' reputation is of course admissible as being in issue;⁵ if the latter, then their reputation is admissible under the present exception as evidence of their personal moral character, and upon this point, naturally, no doubt has ever arisen. (b) So far as the habitual use or "character" of the house itself is concerned, the same question again arises, whether the fact in issue is the "fame," i. e. reputation of it, or the actual habit and character of it. If we accept the former view (and here much depends on the statutory wording),

¹ 1897, Carroll v. State, 74 Miss. 688, 22 So. 295 (where chastity is essential, in a charge of seduction, reputation is evidence of actual chastity).

² 1888, Hussey v. State, 86 Ala. 34, 36, 5 So. 484; 1871, State v. Shean, 32 Ia. 88, 92 (because actual chastity is required, reputation is excluded, either of unchastity or chastity, its use as hearsay to prove the actual character being ignored; but then, to disprove the commission of acts of lewdness charged, the actual character is declared relevant, and reputation is received to prove it; a paradoxical ruling); 1899, State v. Reinheimer, 109 id. 624, 80 N. W. 669 (unchaste repute, excluded); 1898, State v. Summar, 143 Mo. 220, 45 S. W. 254 (bad repute excluded, because by statute chastity was im-material); 1863, Kenyon v. State, 26 N. Y. 203, 208 ("It could not have been intended to substitute reputation for character in this its primary and true sense"; but Balcom, J., diss.). Contra, sensu: 1893, State v. Lenihan, 88 Ia. 670, 673, 56 N. W. 292 (good repute, admitted in rebuttal); 1892, State v. Lockerby, 50 Minn. 363, 52 N. W. 958 (admissible "in corroboration" of the complaining witness).

For this difference of statutes and their interpretation, see more fully ante, § 205.

³ 1822, Treat v. Browning, 4 Conn. 408, 414 (fornication and the having a bastard child); 1839, Overstreet v. State, 3 How. Miss. 328 (charge of fornication).

⁴ 1835, Boies v. McAllister, 12 Me. 308.

⁵ The cases are collected ante, §§ 78, 204.

then reputation is of course admissible as being in issue.⁶ But if we take the latter view, then, the actual use and character of the house becoming the issue, the question arises whether reputation is admissible under the present exception to prove it. The subject of the reputation is not an individual's moral trait, and therefore is without the ordinary scope of the present exception. Nevertheless, having regard to the circumstances from which such a reputation arises, and the difficulty of obtaining other evidence in the ordinary way from unimpeachable witnesses, it seems unquestionable that reputation should be admitted as trustworthy and necessary evidence.⁷

(3) The offence of being a common thief, or a common gambler, or other common offender, or of keeping a common nuisance, is one which by some Courts, sometimes under statute, has been regarded as provable by reputation;⁸ but perhaps the notion here enters that reputation is a part of the issue. The mode of proving such an offence by specific acts has already been noticed (ante, § 203).

Whether the foregoing offences can lawfully be constituted by repute alone is a constitutional question already dealt with (ante, § 1354).

§ 1621. Same: (4) Sanity; (5) Temperance; (6) Expert Qualifications; (7) Negligence; (8) Animal's Character. (4) So far as the principle of necessity (ante, § 1610) is concerned, there is usually ample available evi-

⁶ The cases are collected ante, § 78.

⁷ Admitted: 1901, Re Fong Yuk, 8 Br. C. 118, 120 (deportation of a prostitute; reputation of the house in which the woman formerly lived, admissible); 1899, Demartini v. Anderson, 127 Cal. 33, 59 Pac. 207 (lease for a house of prostitution; reputation of the house, admitted); 1885, Hogan v. State, 76 Ga. 82; Ia. Code 1897, § 4944 (on a charge of keeping a house of ill-fame, the prosecution may introduce "general reputation of such house as so kept" to shew its character); 1896, Egan v. Gordon, 65 Minn. 505, 68 N. W. 103 (in an action to recover rent); 1895, State v. Hendricks, 15 Mont. 194, 39 Pac. 94 (provided there is corroboration by facts of such use); 1838, State v. McDowell, Dudley 345, 350 ("In a case in which character is its very gist, I am willing to make that which everybody says the evidence"); Wis. Stats. 1898, § 4581*g* (in prosecutions for keeping a house of ill-fame, etc., "common or general reputation" is admissible). Excluded: 1876, Weoster v. State, 55 Ala. 221; 1903, Ramsey v. Smith, — id. —, 35 So. 325 (sale of a piano to a plaintiff for use in a house of prostitution; reputation not admitted to show the character of the house); 1846, Caldwell v. State, 17 Conn. 467, 472; 1900, Howard v. People, 27 Colo. 396, 61 Pac. 595 (keeping a house of ill-fame; petition of citizens to city council, inadmissible as constituting reputation); 1898, Shaffer v. State, 87 Md. 124, 39 Atl. 313 (keeping a disorderly house; its reputation inadmissible, until St. 1892, c. 522); 1885, Handy v. State, 63 Miss. 208; 1864, State v. Feley, 45 N. H. 466; 1863, Kenyon v. State, 26 N. Y. 203, 209 ("The general rule is that hearsay evidence is incompetent to establish any specific fact which is in its nature susceptible of being proved by the witnesses who speak from their own knowledge"); 1897, Nelson v. Terr., 5 Okl. 512, 49 Pac. 920; 1815, Com. v. Stewart, 1 S. & R. 342; 1833, U. S. v. Jourdine, 4 Cr. C. C. 338, overruling U. S. v. Gray, 1826, 2 id. 675; 1895, State v. Plant, 67 Vt. 454, 32 Atl. 237; 1894, Barker v. Com., 90 Va. 820, 20 S. E. 776.

So, also, excluding reputation of the defendant himself as keeper (compare the cases cited ante, § 78, note 3): 1858, State v. Hand, 7 Ia. 411; 1833, U. S. v. Jourdine, 4 Cr. C. C. 338; U. S. v. Warner, ib. 342.

It may be noted that in these cases it is not always easy to determine whether the Court proceeds upon the present principle or that of § 78, ante.

⁸ 1901, Kissel v. Lewis, 156 Ind. 233, 59 N. E. 478 (disorderly beer-garden as a nuisance; reputation admitted, partly as affecting the depreciation of the value of plaintiff's premises); Ia. Code 1897, § 5003 ("general reputation" of a place, admissible for prosecution to show the character of the place on a charge of keeping an opium resort); 1878, World v. State, 50 Md. 49, 54 (reputation admissible under St. 1864, c. 38, to show a defendant to be a "common thief"; and though the reputation must be shown to exist within the statutory period, reputation before that time is relevant to show it); Or. Cr. C. § 1924 (opium offences; "general reputation shall be received in evidence to establish the character of any building as an opium den"); Vt. St. 1894, § 4529 (general reputation admissible to prove a place a liquor-nuisance). Contra: 1834, Com. v. Hopkins, 2 Dana Ky. 419 (common gambler).

dence of sanity or insanity other than reputation. So far as the principle of trustworthiness (ante, § 1610) is concerned, although all the conditions that obtain for moral character obtain equally for sanity, yet opinions upon a standard of sanity differ so much that a reputation, without the opportunity to test its ground by cross-examination, would hardly be trustworthy. It is thus generally agreed that reputation is not admissible for this purpose:

1849, Nisbet, J., in Foster v. Brooks, 6 Ga. 290: "If reputation of insanity is competent, then reputation of sanity must be also. By this kind of evidence a fool may be proved a wise man, and a philosopher a fool. Public opinion declared Copernicus a fool when he promulgated the planetary system, and Columbus a fool when he announced the sublime idea of a New World. Hazardous in the extreme would it be to the rights of parties under the law, if they were allowed to depend upon the opinion of a neighborhood of the sanity of individuals. Hearsay evidence is excluded because a witness ought to be subjected to cross-examination, that being a test of truth. It ought to appear what were his powers of perception, his opportunities of observation, his attentiveness in observing, the strength of his recollection, and his disposition to speak the truth."¹

The use of a verdict or other inquisition of lunacy rests on a different principle (post, § 1671).

(5) A person's character or habit as temperate, or the reverse, in the use of intoxicating liquor, is sufficiently open to other sources of proof; and reputation is therefore unnecessary.²

(6) The qualifications of an expert or professional man, whether as a witness testifying on matters of skill, or as a party charged with lack of skill, ought to be provable by reputation. So far as personal opinion by witnesses is excluded (post, § 1984), there remains practically no other mode of proof than the present, except such tests as can be obtained on the stand by cross-examination (ante, §§ 938, 992). Moreover, professional (not popular) reputation is usually highly trustworthy. The rulings have generally excluded reputation;³ but the question arises comparatively seldom, partly because

¹ Accord: 1832, People v. Pico, 62 Cal. 53; 1880, State v. Hoyt, 47 Conn. 518, 539 (here for paternal insanity); 1900, Snell v. U. S., 16 D. C. App. 501, 511; 1860, Choice v. State, 31 Ga. 424, 470; 1838, Yeates v. Reed, 4 Blackf. 463, 466; 1885, Walker v. State, 102 Ind. 507, 1 N. E. 856; 1876, Ashcraft v. De Armond, 44 Ia. 233 (rumor in a neighborhood, inadmissible); 1868, Townsend v. Pepperell, 99 Mass. 40, 46 (settlement of insane pauper; common speech of the neighborhood as to her insanity, excluded); 1884, Barker v. Pope, 91 N. C. 168; 1894, State v. Coley, 114 id. 879, 885, 19 S. E. 705; 1875, Lancaster Co. Nat'l Bank v. Moore, 78 Pa. 407, 415; 1881, Yanke v. State, 51 Wis. 469, 8 N. W. 276. Contra: 1760, Earl Ferrers' Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 932, 937 (confinement in a private asylum, admitted); 1868, Com. v. Andrews, Mass., Davis' Rep. 134 (murder; insanity of deceased ancestors, held provable by reputation); 1859, State v. Christmas, 6 Jones L. 471, 475 (admissible to prove hereditary insanity of other members of the family, so as to avoid complicated issues as to particular conduct).

² 1893, Stevens v. R. Co., 100 Cal. 554, 570, 35 Pac. 165 (as to intemperance, excluded; the opinion misunderstands the point); 1894, Cosgrove v. Pitman, 103 id. 268, 273, 37 Pac. 232, semble (reputation not sufficient to prove a habit of intemperance); 1823, Brindle v. M'Ilvaine, 10 S. & R. 285 ("causes of physical depravity of the mental faculties are susceptible of a particular description by those who have witnessed them").

³ Excluded: 1870, DePune v. State, 44 Ala. 39 (witness); 1886, Holtzman v. Hoy, 118 Ill. 534, 8 N. E. 832 (negligent treatment by a physician; professional skill held to be in issue, but not provable for defendant by his reputation "in the community and amongst the profession"; the opinion is unsatisfactory, because it ignores the offer of reputation in the profession; no authority cited); 1901, Clark v. Com., 111 Ky. 443, 63 S. W. 740 (abortion; de-

the character of parties in this respect is seldom relevant or in issue (ante, § 64), partly because it is usually not profitable by such evidence to discredit skilled witnesses, and partly because of the reluctance of professional men to bear such testimony.

(7) Character as to negligence or care is provable when it is in issue (ante, §§ 80, 208); and is also usable evidentially, under certain conditions, to show the doing or not doing of a specific act (ante, § 65). The character thus relevant has always been regarded as properly provable by reputation.⁴ From such a hearsay use of reputation, distinguish its use circumstantially to show notice, for example, by an employer, of the employee's character (ante, §§ 246-260).

(8) That an animal's character, as properly as that of a human being, may be the subject of a trustworthy reputation, for reasons similar to those already noted (ante, § 1610), would seem a just conclusion.⁵

E. SUNDRY FACTS.

§ 1623. Reputation to prove Solvency or Wealth. When the fact to be proved is the condition of a merchant's pecuniary resources as to solvency — that is, the ability practically to pay at maturity an ordinary debt —, considerations analogous to those already noted (ante, §§ 1586 and 1610) as making reputation a necessary and a trustworthy source of evidence seem to be here fulfilled. The argument has been well expounded in the following passages:

1845, Goldthwaite, J., in Lawson v. Orear, 7 Ala. 786: "Insolvency is rather the conclusion which the law deduces from other facts, than the fact itself, and therefore it is quite probable that a witness would not be permitted to state this conclusion independent of the facts from which it was to be inferred. But in most cases, where the question of insolvency is collaterally involved [here the question was whether a purchase was made with notice of insolvency], it is nothing more than the attempt to show that the particular individual is not in a condition to be trusted as a debtor. In all such cases the common question which suggests itself to every mind is, Why is he not to be so trusted? or, What is his condition as to property or credit or the want of either? . . . From the very nature of things it is scarcely possible that there can be any certain means of acquiring exact information upon such a subject. . . . In all, or in a very large majority of all fendant's reputation as to skill as a surgeon, excluded; no authorities cited); 1897, People v. Holmes, 111 Mich. 364, 69 N. W. 501 (reputation not admissible to show an expert's competence). Compare the cases cited ante, §§ 64, 67, 199, 208.

⁴ See the citations in the sections above mentioned, where this is assumed. The only excluding decision seems to be Baldwin v. R. Co., 1855, 4 Gray 333 (character as a careless driver).

⁵ The rulings differ: 1901, Jones v. Packet Co., — Miss. —, 31 So. 201 (pedigree of a jack, allowed to be proved by reputation); 1865, Whittier v. Franklin, 46 N. H. 23, 27 ("the character of a person for truth, it may well be presumed, cannot be bad without being known to the public; but it may be otherwise in respect to the vicious propensities of the horse"); 1852, Heath v. West, 26 id. 191, 199 (to the value of a horse, excluded); 1872, McMillan v. Davis, 66 N. C. 539 (Reade, J., admitting reputation of foal-getting qualities, value being in issue: "We suppose that with all stock-raisers there are two principal inquiries in selecting a sire: What is his pedigree?, and, Is he a sure foal-getter? Other qualities are judged of by inspection; these cannot be. How are these inquiries to be answered? The most usual and satisfactory, if not the only way, is by reputation").

For the use of a registry of pedigree of an animal, see post, § 1706. For the admissibility of the animal's character itself, see ante, §§ 68, 201.

the trading classes, the information of the seller as to the ability of the purchaser to pay is derived from reputation and most generally from no other source whatever. To shut out from the jury the same evidence upon which the entire community acts would present a singular result.¹

1863, Atwater, J., in Nininger v. Knox, 8 Minn. 140, 147: "It would seem that the fact of insolvency, from its nature, must usually exclude direct proof, as no one save the person himself could ordinarily safely swear that a man had no property, or insufficient to meet his liabilities, at a given time. . . . The fact of insolvency is of such a nature that the opportunities of the public for forming a correct judgment in the matter must be usually as ample as those existing to form a judgment of character in any other respect, and indeed more so."

In the greater number of jurisdictions, reputation is accordingly admissible to show insolvency or solvency.² Distinguish the circumstantial use of reputation as evidence of knowledge by a purchaser of a debtor's insolvency (ante, § 253).

It has also been held occasionally that the wealth of a party (usually in proving damages for breach of promise of marriage) may be evidenced by reputation;³ but this seems unsound.

§ 1624. Reputation to prove Partnership. The use of reputation to prove the existence of an agreement of partnership does not seem justifiable either by the necessity of the case or by the trustworthiness of the evidence; for not only may the testimony of the alleged partners, their admissions, and the written agreement if any, be ordinarily obtained, but the possibilities of a misleading reputation are particularly strong. These considerations have been more than once clearly set forth judicially:

1835, Waite, J., in Brown v. Crandall, 11 Conn. 92, 95: "[The rule is that] hearsay evidence is incompetent to establish any specific fact which fact is in its nature susceptible of being proved by witnesses who speak from their own knowledge. . . . [If reputation here were admissible,] a person of doubtful credit might cause a report to be circulated that another was in partnership with him, for the very purpose of maintaining his credit. His creditors also might aid in circulating the report for the purpose of furnishing evidence to enable them to collect their debts. There is nothing in the nature of the fact to be proved requiring the admission of such testimony."

1838, Cowen, J., in Halliday v. McDougall, 20 Wend. 81, 90 (after quoting the reason-

¹ Citing Weeks v. Sparke, ante, § 1587.

² Accord: 1845, Lawson v. Orear, 7 Ala. 786, per Goldthwaite, J.; 1861, McNeill v. Arnold, 22 Ark. 482, semble; 1871, Hayes v. Wells, 34 Md. 518; 1864, Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241, 252; 1863, Nininger v. Knox, 8 Minn. 140, 147 (quoted supra); 1875, Burr v. Wilson, 22 id. 206, 211; 1893, West v. Bank, 54 id. 466, 469, 56 N. W. 54; 1895, Hahn v. Penney, 60 id. 487, 62 N. W. 1129; 1900, Garrett v. Weinberg, 59 S. C. 162, 37 S. E. 51; 1846, Hard v. Brown, 18 Vt. 97 (where the solvency of R. was material in determining the adequacy of his note as "sufficient security" under a contract); 1860, Noyes v. Brown, 32 id. 430; 1860, Bank of Middlebury v. Rutland, 33 id. 430. Contra: 1837, Ward v. Herndon, 5 Port. 382, 385 (undecided; here, of a debtor guaranteed by the defendant); 1843, Branch Bank v. Parker, 5 Ala.

736; 1858, Price v. Mazange, 31 id. 701, 708 (fraudulent mortgage); 1876, Holten v. Board, 55 Ind. 199; 1903, Wolfson v. Allen B. Co., 120 Ia. 455, 94 N. W. 910 (financial condition of vendee procured by the plaintiff as commission agent for the defendant); 1903, Coleman v. Lewis, 183 Mass. 485, 67 N. E. 603 (but here admitted to corroborate testimony to an indorser's waiver of presentment).

³ Accord: 1895, Stratton v. Dole, 45 Nebr. 472, 63 N. W. 875; 1864, Kniffen v. McConnell, 30 N. Y. 285, 289; in State v. Cochran, 1828, 2 Dcv. 65, reputation was thus admitted on another issue. Contra: 1894, Bliss v. Johnson, 162 Mass. 323, 38 N. E. 446 (not received to show lack of means of one claiming to have loaned money); 1902, Birum v. Johnson, 87 Minn. 362, 92 N. W. 1.

ing in Brown v. Crandall, supra): "It may be added that, independent of sinister misrepresentations, there is scarcely a question upon which common reputation is more fallible. A contract of partnership is in nature incapable of being defined by laymen; and whether an apparent partnership be really so or a contract of some other character is often a most embarrassing legal question with the ablest lawyer. General reputation of the more ordinary contracts, the legal nature and effect of which are understood by men of business in general, would be a much more proper subject of proof by general report; this the law always rejects, and yet I am not aware that there is a necessity for a resort to such proof in the one case more than the other."

Accordingly, it is to-day almost everywhere agreed that reputation is not admissible to prove the existence of a partnership.¹

But in two other ways reputation may here become admissible. (1) By the substantive law of partnership liability, one holding himself out as partner may be charged as such, though no agreement was actually made; and to suffer a reputation of partnership to exist may in law amount to a holding out; thus, the existence of such a reputation may become itself a fact in issue, irrespective of the truth of the matter reputed:

1889, Earl, J., in Adams v. Morrison, 113 N. Y. 152, 156, 20 N. E. 829: "When there is a general reputation that two or more persons are copartners, and they know it, and permit other persons to act upon it, and to be induced thereby to give credit to the reputed firm, these facts may be proved and may be sufficient sometimes to estop the reputed members of the firm from denying the copartnership in favor of outside parties."

(2) For the purpose of establishing knowledge by a customer of the dissolution of a partnership, the reputation of its dissolution may be admissible as circumstantial evidence of such knowledge (ante, § 255).

§ 1625. Reputation to prove (1) Legal Tradition, (2) Incorporation. (1) So far as the custom and consent of the legal profession is of weight in determining the application of a principle of law, it seems to have been recognized that common opinion or reputation in the profession may be taken as evidence of this custom or consent.¹

(2) By statute in many jurisdictions, reputation has been made evidence

¹ 1893, Knard v. Hill, 102 Ala. 570, 574, 15 So. 345 (excluded); 1900, St. Louis & Tenn. R. P. Co. v. McPeters, 124 id. 451, 27 So. 518; 1853, Sinclair v. Wood, 3 Cal. 98, 100 (excluded); 1835, Brown v. Crandall, 11 Conn. 92, 95 (inadmissible; quoted supra); 1871, Bowen v. Rutherford, 60 Ill. 41 (excluded); 1809, Bryden v. Taylor, 2 H. & J. 396, 400 (reputation held "not sufficient"); 1835, Goddard v. Pratt, 16 Pick. 412, 434 (not admitted to show a dissolution); 1842, Grafton Bank v. Moore, 13 N. H. 99 (excluded); 1817, Whitney v. Sterling, 14 John. 215 (admitted); 1833, M'Pherson v. Rathbone, 11 Wend. 96 (same); 1838, Halliday v. McDougall, 20 id. 81, 89; 22 id. 264 (held inadmissible, without other evidence; quoted supra); 1842, Smith v. Griffith, 3 Hill 333, 336 (inadmissible); 1889, Adams v. Morrison, 113 N. Y. 152, 156, 20 N. E. 829 (reputation not admissible in any case to prove the fact); 1850, Inglebright v. Hammond, 19 Oh. 343 (excluded); 1898, Farmers' Bank v. Saling, 33 Or. 394, 54 Pac. 190 (excluded); 1824, Allen v. Rostain, 11 S. & R. 362, 363, 373 ("not evidence, except in corroboration of a previous testimony"); 1845, Hicks v. Cram, 17 Vt. 449, 456 (inadmissible).

¹ 1761, Buckinghamshire v. Drury, 2 Eden Ch. 60, 64 (Lord Hardwicke, L. C.: "The opinion of conveyancers in all times, and their constant course, is of great weight"; here, as to whether an infant is bound by a marriage jointure); 1892, Venable v. R. Co., 112 Mo. 103, 125, 20 S. W. 493 ("common consent and opinion of the profession," considered to show that dower may be barred in eminent domain).

Distinguish the reference to mere contemporaneous usage as an aid to interpretation: 1821, Packard v. Richardson, 17 Mass. 122, 144; 1873, Scanlan v. Childs, 33 Wis. 663, 666; and cases cited post, § 2464.

of the existence of a corporation or of certain kinds of incorporation;² and this is not inconsistent with the general considerations of policy already noted (ante, § 1610).

§ 1626. Reputation to prove Sundry Facts. Apart from the classes of cases above enumerated, there seem to be none which fulfil the requisite considerations of policy already noted (ante, §§ 1586 and 1610), as justifying the resort to reputation; and in the remaining rulings the use of reputation to prove sundry specific acts or conditions has usually been repudiated.¹

² Ariz. P. C. § 1657 ("general reputation" admissible to prove incorporation, on charge of forgery of bill or note of company); Ark. Stats. 1894, §§ 2906, 2907 (banking company's existence, etc., in criminal cause, provable by "general reputation"); Cal. P. C. 1872, § 1107 (forgery, etc., of bank-bill; incorporation provable by general reputation); Colo. Annot. Stats. 1891, § 1267 ("general reputation," admissible to prove incorporation of bank or company in prosecution for forgery of its bill or note); Ida. Rev. St. 1887, § 7868 (forging, etc., a bill, etc., of incorporated company or bank; "general reputation," admissible to prove incorporation); Ia. Code 1897, § 4870 (general reputation, admissible to prove incorporation of bank, etc., on charge of forging bill, etc.); Kan. Gen. St. 1897, c. 102, § 223 (banking corporation in criminal cause; incorporation provable by reputation); Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 2634 (in criminal causes, the "existence, constitution, or powers of any bank company or corporation" are provable by "general reputation"); 1860, State v. Fitzsimmons, 30 Mo. 237, 239 (statute allowing in criminal cases the existence, etc., of a banking company to be proved by reputation; applied on a trial for selling counterfeit notes); Mont. P. C. 1895, § 2084 (like Cal. P. C. § 1107); § 2086 (so also for any criminal case in proving corporate existence, powers, or constitution); Nev. Gen. St. 1885, § 4645 (on trial for forgery, etc., of bill or note of "incorporated company or bank," general reputation admissible to prove incorporation); N. D. Rev. C. 1895, § 8216 (like Cal. P. C. § 1107); 1846, Reed v. State, 15 Oh. 217, 224 (existence of a foreign banking corporation, in prosecutions for counterfeiting); Okl. Stats. 1893, § 5229 (like Cal. P. C. § 1107); S. D. Stats. 1899, § 8673 (like Cal. P. C. § 1107); Utah Rev. St. 1898, § 4857 (like Cal. P. C. § 1107); § 4859 (like Mont. P. C. § 2086); Wyo. Rev. St. 1887, § 933 (on trial for forgery, etc., of bill or note of incorporated company or bank, incorporation is provable by "general reputation").

¹ 1872, DeKalb Co. v. Smith, 47 Ala. 412 (action for personal harm done by disguised assailants; "rumor" admitted to show that the plaintiff had many enemies, in corroboration of the plaintiff); 1888, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hall, 87 id. 708, 715, 722, 6 So. 277 (that a person had been killed at a low bridge; excluded); 1889, State v. Evans, 33 W. Va. 417, 424, 10 S. E. 792 (excluded for showing one man's "influence" over another); 1903, Louisville & N. T. Co. v. Jacobs, 109 Tenn. 727, 72 S. W. 954 (reputation as to ownership of locomotives causing a nuisance, excluded). Statutes have sometimes interfered: Oh. Rev. St. 1898, § 4427, par. 6 ("The character of the trust or combination alleged [as illegal] may be established by proof of its general reputation as such"); Tex. P. C. 1895, §§ 983, 988 c (character of illegal trust or combination, provable by "its general reputation as such").

END OF VOLUME II.

