INTRODUCTION.

WHEN I began my researches in the Archives of Simancas, eight years ago, the regulations then prevailing in that establishment authorized its chief officer to refuse to any historical enquirer the communication of all such documents as he thought might reflect dishonour on reigning families and other great personages, or which he considered to be unfit for publication for any other reason. Although I was at first given to understand that in my case no use would be made of this discretionary power, not many months passed before it became clear that some papers, of the number and contents of which I could form no judgment, were being kept back. If this partial suppression of historical information had no other consequences than to secure to one or other popular hero or heroine of subordinate importance a greater share of praise than was their due, I should, perhaps, have patiently acquiesced. The danger to which it exposed historical research was, however, of a much more serious-kind. Whether King Ferdinand and Queen Isabel, Henry VIII. and Wolsey, Francis I. and his mistressés, Charles V. and Gattinara, Pope Leo and Pope Adrian, were really the perfect rulers of church and state which their numerous admirers would fain make us believe, are subjects too important in themselves to be lightly dealt with. They filled places so prominent in European history that they materially influenced its development. -But, however great the personal interest attaching to them may be, it is an object of still greater moment to discover whether it was possible, more than three hundred and fifty years ago, to administer the affairs of nations on principles as pure as, or even more so than, those of our own day; all the great social, political, and moral questions as to whether mankind is improving or is in a state of decay, being intimately connected with it. To form a careful estimate of our own time belongs to the political philosopher; to bring to light facts which make a comparison with the past possible, is the first and paramount duty of the historian. And how can that be done if the shortcomings of statesmen of past centuries are concealed or explained away?

-Although unwilling to give trouble to the Spanish Government, which had so readily granted permission to search its vast depositories of historical documents, I should have neglected a duty had I not endeavoured by every means to persuade it to remove all the restrictions. To obtain redress at Simancas having proved impracticable, I addressed the Director General of Public Instruction at Madrid. It would take too much space to describe the negotiations which ensued, and which during more than six years formed the most difficult and by no means always the most pleasant portion of my labours. It may, therefore, suffice to state that when, during the last ministry of Marshal Narvaez, the department of Public Instruction was entrusted to Don Severo Catalina, now Minister de Fomento, I found him resolved to do away with the obsolete regulations regarding the Spanish archives. Instead of making any difficulties, he procured a royal order, commanding that all the historical documents in Simancas, without any reserve or limitation, should be communicated to me. It affords me special satisfaction publicly to thank him for this liberal and enlightened measure.

When assured that no kind of information would any longer be withheld, I endeavoured to ascertain whether the former volumes of my Calendar, compiled under less favourable circumstances, had received any material injury which it might seem advisable to repair. I was not long in discovering two errors into which I had been betrayed, the first relating to the private life of Queen Katharine before and after her marriage to King Henry VIII., and the other concerning the strange marriage projects of King Henry VII. with regard to Queen Juana, the widow of King Philip, and mother of the Emperor Charles V. The correction of these errors, or rather the new information which has come to light, has been thought to be sufficiently interesting to justify the publication of this volume, which forms a supplement to the first, and, to some smaller extent, to the second volume of the Spanish Calendar.

The two subjects have no other connexion than that they have been incompletely stated in the same work. I shall, therefore, speak of them separately hereafter. As to the documents regarding Queen Katharine, they require little comment; but the case of King Henry VII. and Queen Juana is of a most complicated nature. The state papers mentioned in the first volume of my Calendar admit of no reasonable doubt that King Henry was really serious in suing for the hand of the Queen, whose dowry consisted of the crown of Castile, but who, according to the unanimous verdict of history, was mad. Doctor de Puebla was not only Spanish ambassador in England, but enjoyed also in an unusual degree the confidence of the King. We have, therefore, no reason to question the accuracy of his statement when he wrote to his master that the English seemed to care little for her insanity, especially since he had assured them that it would not prevent her from bearing children;⁽¹⁾ and again when, five months later, he informed King Ferdinand that Henry and his Council desired extremely that the marriage should be concluded "even if worse things were said of her madness."⁽¹⁾

The correspondence which I am now enabled to publish throws, however, grave doubts on the insanity of Queen Juana, and the reader will find abundant materials in it to judge for himself whether she was not a victim, firstly, of the tyranny of her mother, and then of the avarice of her father, her husband, and her son. If it can be established that King Henry had sufficient reason to suspect the real state of things, he must be absolved from a stigma the most degrading which could weigh upon his memory. If, on the other hand, he believed that his intended bride was mad, although that may not have been the case, his moral guilt remains unaltered, and a group of other criminals is added to the picture. It would be superfluous to dwell on the significance which these questions have in the eyes of those who are interested in ascertaining the development of civilisation in succeeding generations. Moreover, even those who are inclined to look with indifference on the moral teachings of history must admit that truth, for its own sake, deserves to be elucidated, quite irrespectively as to whether it upholds or refutes preconceived opinions, and gratifies or hurts national or party susceptibilities.

Questions relating to the state of mind of a person affirmed to be insane are generally of an intricate nature, and this is the case with Queen Juana. It is impossible to form a judgment without reviewing the earlier part of her life, and taking into consideration all the surrounding circumstances, which either influenced the formation of her mind or explain the motives of her actions and the conduct of her opponents. To give all the documents which disclose the true character of her mother, under whose guidance she was educated, of King Ferdinand, King Philip, and Charles V., by whom she was imprisoned, would require much more space than we have at our disposal. I must, therefore, content myself with a few prefatory observations concerning the general state of things; but it has been my aim to give a complete collection of those documents which have an immediate and direct bearing on the inquiry whether, at the period in question, she was insane or falsely represented as mad, in as far as they are to be found at Simancas. The letters here published are the identical reports and orders which were respectively received and given by the very persons by whom Juana was imprisoned; not the bare recitals of casual witnesses who might be mistaken; and many of them introduce us, as it were, to the presence of the captive Queen, for in them we find her behaviour minutely chronicled and her conversations literally reported. As the documents of this period, however, are neither numerous nor very explicit on the point in question, recourse must, to a certain extent, be had to the correspondence of later times, and it will be found that the letters written during the years immediately preceding the rising of the Commons in Castile are the most curious and the most instructive. When the partisans of Charles recaptured Tordesillas, in the month of December 1520, and Queen Juana was again the prisoner of her son, the uninterrupted monotony of her prison life offers little of interest to us. I add, therefore, only a few of such documents of that period as I think serve more fully to explain former occurrences.

This volume differs in one essential point from the other volumes of the Calendar. Instead of giving mere abstracts, I have printed the state papers in full, in the original languages in which they were written, preserving the old orthography, the punctuation, and even the grammatical errors which occur in the originals. The documents are printed from transcripts which have been carefully made by the best copyists that could be obtained in Simancas, that is to say, by the officers of the Archives. The copies are deposited at the Rolls House, where they can be inspected by whosoever wishes to compare them with the printed documents. The translations do not aim at elegance, but only at as faithful a rendering of the meaning of the originals as the great difference between old Spanish and modern English permits.

QUEEN KATHARINE.

Whatever the opinions on the merits of the divorce case of Queen Katharine may be, no historian, as far as I am aware, has impeached her private character; and when I had occasion, in the first volume of my Calendar, to speak of her life after the death of Prince Arthur, I could only join in the general praise of her personal virtues. My unconditional commendation, however, was purchased at the price of a partial suppression of truth, and letters which the late keeper of the archives at Simancas had taken much care to conceal make a reversal of my former judgment an imperative duty.

It seems as though exceedingly few, if any, of the men and women who were mixed up with the public affairs of three or four hundred years ago can bear close examination without their characters being more or less lowered in our estimation. Of this Queen Katharine furnishes us with new evidence.

When Princess Dowager of Wales, she asked her father, in the year 1506, to send her a Spanish confessor. King Ferdinand was then at Naples, and as no well-qualified Spanish priest could be found in Italy, he begged his daughter to wait until his return to Spain. But before he had left Italy the Princess informed him in her letter of the 15th April 1507, that she had found an excellent confessor, and needed no other. ⁽¹⁾ As long as Doctor de Puebla was ambassador at the court of King Henry we meet with no unfavourable comment on her conduct towards her spiritual director. Whether that is due to the overprudent character of the Doctor, or to the loss or suppression of a portion of his correspondence, or whether the unfavourable reports did not obtain credit until a later period, we are unable to decide. But in the year 1508, Gutier Gomez de Fuensalida, Knight Commander of Membrilla, was sent to relieve De Puebla from his post, and not many months elapsed before he became aware that the presence of the confessor was to the last degree injurious to the reputation of Princess Katharine. It is always a delicate, often a dangerous, undertaking for a subject to tell his king and master that the honour of his daughter, and consêquently his own, is not beyond suspicion. Thus, the Knight Commander delayed speaking in his despatches of the imprudent conduct of the Princess as long as he could, trusting that he and others might be able to persuade her to behave in a more becoming manner, and to put an end to the scandalous rumours which were rife at court. He spoke with the Princess, and Juan de Cuero made representations to the confessor, but the only result was that Katharine regarded them as her greatest enemies. (1) At last, on the 4th of March 1509, the ambassador thought he could no longer delay breaking the subject to King Ferdinand. (2) That he laid the blame principally on the confessor is natural enough, but, if we understand his accusations aright, they are of such a kind as only too much to involve the Princess herself.

Fuensalida describes Fray Diego Fernandez as a monk having neither learning nor appearance, nor manners, nor competency, nor credit. He was light, haughty, and licentious to an extreme degree. On another occasion the ambassador calls him a "pestiferous" person (3) who could not too soon be removed from the presence of the Princess. But, on the other hand, he was young, and does not seem to have been deficient in aptitude for the despatch of business, as he discharged not only the duties of confessor but also those of chancellor to the Princess. He gained her confidence and her affection. The most effectual weapon in the hands of a priest is the belief of others that he is the dispenser of rewards and punishments in future life. Of this Fray Diego made a most unscrupulous use, declaring everything to be a mortal sin which displeased him, however innocent it might be.⁽¹⁾ Fuensalida gives us one striking illustration. King Henry had asked the Princess Katharine and Princess Mary to go to Richmond, where he intended to meet them. When the Princess Katharine was ready to start, the friar came into her room, and said to her, "You shall not go today." The Princess, it is true, had vomited that night, but was again perfectly well, and the distance she had to travel was at the utmost less than one league. She therefore protested that she was not ill, and did not like to be left behind alone. The friar, however, overruled her objections in a high-handed manner by his categorical command, "I tell you that upon pain of mortal sin you shall not go today." The Princess, "not daring to displease him," had no choice left, and underwent the humiliation of telling the Princess Mary, who had been waiting for her more than two hours, that she was unable to go. It is easy to imagine the feelings of the English gentlemen who, having been appointed to escort the two princesses, rode off with the Princess Mary alone, leaving their future queen behind in the company of a young Spanish monk of bad repute and a few servants, one of whom had arrived by mere chance. They could not have been deceived by her pretext of indisposition, as they had seen her at mass and at dinner in perfect health. When, on the following day, she went to Richmond, accompanied by no other living creature than three women on horseback, her maestre sala, a chamberlain, and Fray Diego, King Henry was so much incensed, that for several weeks he did not take the slightest notice of her, although during that time she really fell ill. "May God forgive me," exclaimed the ambassador, "but since I have known so well the affairs of the Princess' household, I acquit the King of England of a great and very great portion of the blame which I hitherto laid on him, and do not wonder at what he has done, but at what he does not do." (1)

Fray Diego made the infatuation of the Princess a means of obtaining pecuniary advantages. She was living in absolute poverty, and her father had strictly forbidden her to sell any portion of her plate and jewels, which were to be given in part payment of her dower to the King of England. In spite of these injunctions she sold some plate, and would have sold more had she not been prevented by her servants, in order to "satisfy the follies" of the friar; and, unmindful of her own wants, she employed the money in buying books and other things for him. (2)

All the circumstances hitherto mentioned may easily be explained as devotion carried beyond its proper limits. Unfortunately for the reputation of the Princess, her confessor himself renders this more charitable interpretation rather difficult. One day he came to the ambassador, and wished to have an explanation with him on the reports concerning himself and the Princess. The Knight Commander very properly, we think, endeavoured to avoid it, as only tending towards making her disgrace more public, but Fray Diego insisted, and at last said these formal words: "Be it so, but in this house there are evil tongues, and they have cast slanderous imputations upon me with respect not to the lowest in the house, but to the highest, which is no disgrace to me, and if it were not for the sake of contradicting them I should already be gone." (3) The highest person in the house of the Princess Katharine was evidently the Princess herself, and the scandalous reports of which the friar spoke related, therefore, to her quite as much as to him. We have translated the word infamar by slander, because it has no exact equivalent in the English language, and we were afraid of making the case worse by using too strong an expression. But infamar indicates something more infamous than slander, and if we consider the circumstances under which it was used, it would be mere affectation to pretend any doubt as to what kind of infamy was imputed to the Princess. The ambassador added, that he was so excited that he could scarcely restrain himself from laying hands on the friar. ⁽¹⁾ We readily believe him, for the so-called explanation seems to have been a coarse gratification of vanity rather than a serious denial of a report which, as he said, did not disgrace him.

And how was it possible that King Henry could permit such a state of things to continue? We must remind the reader that the King had caused his son to protest against his marriage with Princess Katharine, and thus reserved to himself the right of breaking off the engagement at any moment that might seem to him convenient. Bearing this fact in mind, it will be easy to understand the explanation of the ambassador, who stated that all the English, and especially King Henry and even Prince Henry, abhorred to see such a friar so continually in the palace and amongst the women. ⁽²⁾ The King had remonstrated with the Princess "in very strong words;" as, however, his remonstrances remained as ineffectual as those of the ambassador and the Spanish servants, he did not think it his duty to interfere more energetically. But his apparent acquiescence in what "displeased him so much," and "was constantly brought before his eyes," was "not considered as a good sign by those who knew him best." ⁽³⁾ The ambassador leaves us to interpret his oracular words as well as we can. We do not wonder at his not being more explicit when speaking to the father of the defamed lady. As we, however, are not labouring under the same disadvantage, we may ask what meaning could these phrases have, except that the ambassador intended to state that King Henry was permitting the bride of his son and heir to go on ruining her reputation in order to obtain a reasonable ground to declare her unworthy of becoming his daughter in law?

We have not yet exhausted the case of the accusation. The ambassador stated that Princess Katharine was guilty of things of "a thousand times worse kind" ⁽¹⁾ than, for instance, remaining behind with her young confessor when she was ordered to go to Richmond; and in his letter of the 20th of March to the First Secretary of State he declared that he had written only in hints, or, to use his own expression, in "parables" to the King. ⁽²⁾ His despatch of the 4th of March was sent to Spain by Juan de Ascotia, a servant of the Princess, and chosen by her to be the bearer of complaints against the ambassador. Nevertheless the Knight Commander did not hesitate to call him to witness; because, as he was living in the house of the Princess, he must have seen what had been going on in it during the last two months. If King Ferdinand after having heard the servant, and after having been informed of the complaints of the Princess against him, should wish to know the truth, he would speak without restraint, and "without lying on any point." ⁽³⁾

After having stated the accusation, we may hear the defence. The Princess Katharine was perfectly aware of the reports which were circulated about her, for she descants with great vehemence on the infamous slander against her person and the honour of her house. But the friar, she pretended, was the best confessor that ever woman in her position had, with respect to his life as well as to his holy doctrine and proficiency in letters. ⁽⁴⁾ He was serving her faithfully, giving her good advice

(1) P. 27.

(2) P. 31.

(3) P. 14.

(4) P. 19.

and a good example, and nothing grieved her more than that her poverty did not permit her to reward him as he deserved. ⁽¹⁾ No one, however, who reads the two letters of the confessor contained in this volume, ⁽²⁾ and the communications which he made to Luis Caroz, ⁽³⁾ can have any doubt that, whilst his literary attainments were very slender, his coarseness was so great that the Princess could be misled only by her great "affection" for him; and her case is certainly not improved by the circumstance that, some years later, Fray Diego, whilst still her confessor, was judicially convicted of fornication. ⁽⁴⁾

In the year 1509 the Princess Katharine was not a mere child, who might have been excused on the ground of ignorance. Born on the 15th of December 1485, she was then a widow in her twenty-fourth year, and, quite irrespectively of the question whether her marriage with Prince Arthur had been consummated or not, she must have known what the true nature of the accusation was under which she was labouring. Any woman who valued her honour would, under similar circumstances, have sent away her young confessor, and thus put an end to the scandal which had already continued far too long a time. Princess Katharine, however, adopted a different line of conduct. She informed her father that the friar had threatened to leave her. We may suspect that he was not in earnest; but the Princess believed him, and implored King Ferdinand in passionate words to prevent him, "her greatest comfort" in her troubles, who "gave her consolation and support" in her cheerless life, from carrying out his intention. Her judgment, generally very clear, forsook her so entirely on this occasion that she asked her father to write to the King of England to the effect that he had commanded the friar to remain at his post, and that he wished that he should be "well treated and humoured" by King Henry as well as by the prelates of the king-

(1) P. 19.

(2) P. 34, 44.

(4) P. 45.

dom. Not satisfied with this ardent appeal, she implored her father not to let her "perish," threatening, at the same time, to do something in her despair which neither the King of England nor her father would be able to prevent, and in her letter of the 20th of March she went so far as to hint at her imminent death. (1) Such conduct and such language could only confirm the suspicion which had been excited, and we must confess that the defence seems to us almost as damaging as the accusation.

As is usual in similar cases, we have no direct proof of a criminal intercourse of Princess Katharine with her confessor, and may absolve her from that charge. But, on the other hand, although she had declared that in pretending to the hand of Prince Henry she was consulting the interests of her father rather than her own wishes, (2) she did all in her power to bring about that marriage, and was actually living in the house of the father of her late husband and of the man to whom she had pledged her faith. If, under such circumstances, she laid herself open, through her reckless conduct, to a suspicion which is the most degrading for a woman, and involves one of the most heinous crimes a catholic can commit, we think we shall not be too severe if we pronounce her to have forfeited the right to be considered as a lady of spotless honour. She bitterly complained of the contempt with which she was treated in England; (3) but as she never hints that the disrespect shown to her might to some extent have been the consequence of her own follies, we hope that she was not conscious of undergoing a well-deserved punishment, and that thus she was spared this last humiliation.

The death of King Henry VII., which soon afterwards occurred, released her from her painful situation. The negotiations for her marriage, which had flagged for more than a year, were resumed with renewed energy. If we read the Spanish correspondence of that period again, many passages assume a clearer significance than we were hitherto able to assign to them. We now perfectly understand the reasons which prompted King Ferdinand to implore his ambassador not to speak a word about what had happened, and "for God's sake" not to complain of the Princess to any one in England.⁽¹⁾ Even his orders to corrupt some of the more influential English councillors, by paying them money, and to gain over the commissioners,⁽²⁾ become more intelligible than they have hitherto been, whilst, on the other hand, if, as King Ferdinand suspected, the confessor protested against the lawfulness of the marriage,⁽³⁾ his protestation is liable to a quite different interpretation.

Six weeks after the death of King Henry VII., the Princess Katharine was married to the new King of England. Those who believe that King Henry VIII. was a prince of great sagacity and strength of will might expect to hear nothing more of Fray Diego after the marriage. They would be mistaken. For Queen Katharine prevailed on her husband to suffer her scandalous confessor to continue his office for five or six years longer. Fuensalida was recalled, and Don Luis Caroz sent in his place. The new ambassador found that the friar still exercised an almost unbounded power over the Queen. It depended on him whom she was to see, and whether she was to receive even the representative of her father. As Fray Diego was afraid lest Luis Caroz would endeavour to deprive him of his influence, he forbade all communication between the Spanish ambassador and the Queen. Coaxing and flattery were thrown away on him, and the ambassador states that he had never seen so wicked a person, whilst on another occasion he suspected that he was not in his right mind.⁽⁴⁾

(4) P. 36, sqq.

But to us it is of more importance to ascertain whether the relations between the confessor and the Queen were still objectionably intimate. That a confessor is more thoroughly acquainted with the state of mind of his penitent than any other man may be natural; but if he boasts that a married woman gives more exact information about her bodily condition to him than to her own husband, we think that his statement, if true, detracts from his honour as well as from that of the lady. We read, therefore, with concern the letter of Fray Diego to King Ferdinand of the 25th of May 1510, in which he pretends that the Queen had communicated to him her hope soon to gladden the country with a prince, whilst she was still concealing her condition from "all the world and the King."⁽¹⁾ On the whole, the friar seems to have constituted himself the herald of her pregnancies. His descriptions are as unbecoming a priest as his assertions are preposterous. It was he to whom the inextricable confusion of the never ceasing expectations of the Queen to become a mother is due. Yet what would be too absurd for a man who dared to tell King Ferdinand that the Queen had been delivered of a still born daughter, with no other suffering than that one of her knees had pained her the night before, and that in spite of her miscarriage she had remained pregnant of another child.⁽²⁾

When, in the year 1515, in consequence of a serious quarrel between Ferdinand and Henry, followed by a reconciliation, the influence of the Catholic King in England was at its greatest height, Fray Diego was prosecuted, convicted of fornication, deprived of his office of chancellor of the Queen, and sentenced by his judges, the Bishop of Winchester⁽³⁾ and the Earl of Surrey, to be delivered up to King Ferdinand. There was no person in the world whom the friar dreaded more than the King of Spain. He therefore fled, but indited from his hiding place an undated holograph letter to King Henry, complaining of the injustice done to him, and stating that to fall into the hands of King Ferdinand would be certain death. He begged permission to return, reminding Henry that he had it in his power to divulge the secrets of his house and his government.⁽¹⁾ The letter bears no sign that it was ever delivered either to the King or any of his ministers, and its presence among the Spanish state papers would be difficult to explain on any other supposition than that King Ferdinand had discovered the friar's place of concealment, and captured him together with his papers.

In concluding this subject, we may observe, that, whatever the relations of Queen Katharine and her confessor before her marriage may have been, they could not, according to canon law, after eighteen years of married life, be used as a ground for demanding the divorce, and whether there is any reason to suppose that King Henry remembered Fray Diego when he opposed absolute silence to the solemn appeal of the Queen, calling him to witness, that he had found her an untouched virgin, we must leave to the judgment of the reader.

The letter of Don Luis Caroz, of the 28th of May 1510, contains a detailed report of a love affair of King Henry and a sister of the Duke of Buckingham⁽²⁾, which may have been the first step to the disgrace of the duke which ended in his execution.

To the letters lately discovered at Simancas is prefixed one which was found in the collections of D. Pascual de Gayangos at Madrid. It is from Don Pedro de Ayala to Queen. Isabel, and the information contained in it about the life of Katharine immediately after her marriage to Prince Arthur seems to us the more important, as the letter was written before any one could have foreseen her future ill fortune. We shall speak of its contents when we come to the divorce.

QUEEN JUANA.

In the month of July 1500 Don Juan, the only son of King Ferdinand and Queen Isabel, and their eldest daughter, together with their grandson by her, having been removed by death, their second daughter Juana thus became undisputed heiress to the crowns of Castile and Aragon. Queen Isabel was suffering from a series of long protracted illnesses. It was therefore expected that she would die before her husband, and in that case King Ferdinand would have had to content himself with the small kingdom of Aragon, leaving Castile to his daughter. His plan of forming a united monarchy of Spain would have been jeopardized, if not entirely frustrated.

Juana was married to Archduke Philip, who was to be a Queen's consort in Spain, with no right of his own to participate in its government. Although he had no great political plans, he and his councillors were exceedingly eager to appropriate to themselves the revenues of Castile.

Charles, being the eldest son of Philip and Juana, was heir presumptive to the Austrian dominions, the Burgundian states, Castile and Aragon, with their dependencies, and it was never seriously doubted that he would be the successor of Maximilian on the imperial throne. From his earliest years he had always been taught that God had vouchsafed to him so much greatness for no other purpose than that he might realise a universal Christian empire—the monarquia, so often mentioned in the state papers of the time, and by means of it “secure peace to Christendom, and defend the cause of our Saviour against both infidels and heretics.” But whilst the Burgundian dominions devolved on him in the year

1506, and it was expected that he would soon succeed his grandfather in the Austrian principalities and in the empire, if the lawful succession was to be observed, he would have had to wait for the Spanish crowns until the death of his mother, who was young, and in fact lived almost as long as he. To think of forming a universal empire without Spain would have been folly.

Thus the right of Juana to the Spanish inheritance was incompatible with the plans of her father, the greediness of her husband, and with what her son considered to be his duties towards God and the world. In the very clearness of her title, which could not be explained away, consisted her greatest danger. Her death, however, would not have benefited either King Ferdinand or King Philip. Had she died, her son, and not her father, would have been her successor in Castile, whilst her husband would have lost even the pretext he had for meddling in the affairs of Spain. Both could, therefore, gain only if she continued to live, and yet was prevented from exercising her royal prerogatives. To bring about such a state of things was certainly no easy undertaking.

To use the phrase of the time, "God interfered in favour of his truest servant." Philip died, and Juana, we are told, was so much affected by grief at the sudden death of her husband that her reason gave way, and she never recovered. Unable to govern, her father became "sovereign administrator" of Castile, and gained the time necessary for consolidating the Spanish monarchy. After his death in 1516 all the kingdoms of Juana, viz., Castile, Aragon, Naples, and Sicily, together with their dependencies in the old and new world, devolved on her son, who, by this accession, was placed from the beginning of his reign in a position earnestly to think of realising his never fulfilled but most seriously entertained day-dreams. Thus the madness of Queen Juana was, as it were, the foundation stone of the political edifice of Ferdinand and of Charles, which would have immediately crumbled to pieces if she had been permitted to exercise her hereditary right.

Philip was as hard and cruel a husband as he was a despicable prince. He robbed his wife of her dower and pension from Spain, and permitted her to live in destitution whilst he squandered her money in orgies with his minions and disreputable women. But women, before and since Queen Juana, have loved unworthy husbands, and she may have been of their number. If we, however, endeavour to inform ourselves of the circumstances of this curious case, from contemporary or nearly contemporary sources, we soon discover that the information we are able to gather is in the highest degree unsatisfactory. Maquereau, who was a servant either of King Philip or of a member of the family of Croy, gives a minutely detailed account of the death of the King, apparently as an eyewitness, but he is not even aware that the Queen had been suspected of having gone mad on that occasion. Johannes de Los, Abbot of St. Lawrence, near Liège, wrote the annals of his time. He is evidently bewildered by false rumours, for he informs us, not that the Queen, but that the King had become mad and died insane. "Rex autem Philippus per suam uxorem, ut putatur, dementatus vitam amisit et regnum." Sandoval, who wrote about a century later, but whose Historia de la vida y hechos del Emperador Carlos V. is the first work on Charles V. which deserves the name of a history, dedicates to this most important event in the life of his hero not more than thirty-seven words in a composition which, in the Antwerp edition, fills 1346 pages in folio. And even this short notice of the madness of the Queen he thought it prudent to temper by the addition "pues dicen," as it is said. It is evident he had his doubts, and did not like to speak on the subject.

The story of a young Queen losing her reason from excessive grief at her husband's death is so piquante, so sentimentally romantic, that grave philosophers, romance writers and painters, have vied with each other in depicting the most touching scenes in the most tender colours. If, however, the truth is to be told, the story of Queen Juana's madness must, we are afraid, be abandoned, and replaced by another drawn in strong, hard lines, and coloured with the darkest tints. •

The Infanta, afterwards Queen Juana, lived during the first seventeen years of her life, that is to say, until she was married to the Archduke Philip, with her mother, who superintended her education. Queen Isabel left behind her, or, more accurately speaking, acquired after her death, the reputation of having been almost a saint. A pious Queen educating her daughter is a gratifying spectacle, but unhappily the sanctity of Isabel was only of a spurious kind. Her subjects who had suffered from her iron rule had formed a widely different idea of her. When, on Tuesday, the 17th of November 1504, she died at Medina del Campo, crowds assembled under the windows of her palace, but not to bless her memory. From curious criminal proceedings instituted some years later against Sarmiento, Corregidor or mayor of Medina, we learn that he did not hesitate openly to declare "that her soul had gone direct to hell for her cruel oppression of her subjects, and that King Ferdinand was a thief and a robber." Nor was Sarmiento the only person who thought this, as the witnesses deposed that all the people around Medina and Valladolid, that is to say, where the Queen was best known, had formed the same judgment of her. ⁽¹⁾

However that may be, we are not reduced to depend upon public opinion, knowing enough of her to judge for ourselves, and to any one acquainted with the lawless times of her youthful years, it must be obvious that, had she really been so pious, so meek and self-sacrificing a princess, as her admirers would fain have us believe, she would have been trodden under foot, instead of usurping, as she did, the crown of her niece.

The history of this usurpation is one of the most disgraceful on record, the different parties entering, as it were, into a competition as to which would outdo the other in perjury, gross calumny, and treachery. None of them ever kept their sworn promises, none hesitated for a moment to accuse their adversaries of revolting atrocities. In this competition Queen Isabel was the winner, after having entered into a formal compact with the clerical faction, the Archbishop of Toledo, Alfonso Carillo, being at their head, and after having strengthened her party by her marriage with Prince Ferdinand of Aragon, who, under the guidance of his mother, Doña Juana Enriquez, had already given proofs of his eminent capacity for disembarassing himself of inconvenient competitors with a better title by, as it was generally believed, poisoning the Prince of Viana, and getting rid of his step-sister Doña Blanca in a manner more atrocious than simple murder. With such help Isabel branded the heiress to the throne with the disparaging name of la Beltraneja, forced her to flee, and seated herself on the throne of Castile. In times of great political depravity it may be an advantage if the strongest amongst the wicked destroys minor offenders, but if it be a virtue at all, it is certainly not one which entitles to a reputation for sanctity.

The so-called Beltraneja found an asylum in the neighbouring kingdom of Portugal, and the eyes of all the adversaries of Isabel were constantly turned towards her. In order to defend her illgotten kingdom, Queen Isabel was, therefore, forced to continue her disgraceful intrigues against the muchacha, the girl, as she called her niece, and could not have freed herself, even if she had wished, from the influence of the party which had raised her to the throne. Priests remained powerful at her court, and men, like Torquemada, Cisneros (Cardinal Ximenez), and others who are less known but were scarcely less influential, soon rose to pre-eminence. Into the hands of these men was given the terrible weapon of the Spanish inquisition, and the Queen, instead of feeling compassion, boasted of their cruelties. ⁽¹⁾

If, after this long, but necessary, digression, we return to the picture of a pious Queen superintending the education of her daughter, we at once perceive that the colours have considerably darkened. What an education could such a mother give to her daughter! It was not then the custom in Spain, as it became about sixty years later, for the royal family, with the whole court, to attend the Autos de Fé, in order to give them more effect. Thus Juana was spared the misfortune of being made an involuntary eyewitness of these hideous spectacles. But the court, being the central point where all the freshest news of burning and flogging and tormenting converged, and where they were commented upon in a repulsively sanctimonious tone, as edifying examples of the "love of Christ and His Holy Mother," the young Infanta was obliged to hear religious doctrines enunciated daily which must either corrupt the soul or provoke opposition, and she had too frequently presented before her mind's eye scenes which must either brutalize or horrify. The better nature in her rebelled, but, as the Marquis of Denia, who afterwards was her master of the household, informed the Emperor, her mother forced her by severe punishment, and even by the application of torture, to comply outwardly with the dictates of religion and duty, as religion and duty were understood by her. ⁽¹⁾

It would evince little knowledge of human nature, if we were astonished at hearing that such punishments inflicted under such circumstances produced a quite different effect from what Queen Isabel had intended. Scarcely had Juana been sent to Flanders when sinister rumours about her mode of life reached Spain.

In the year 1497 Queen Isabel sent the Friar Tomas de Matienzo, Sub-Prior of the Convent of Santa Cruz, to Brussels, with instructions to inform himself respecting her daughter's life, and to lead her back to the true faith, if she had erred. The friar was very coldly received. ⁽²⁾

He found the Archduchess in excellent health, more handsome than ever, and had even the satisfaction of learning that she still kept up devotional exercises in her house. But she could not be induced to confess, nor would she write even a word to her mother, nor give her the smallest token of love. ⁽¹⁾

Friar Andreas had been the tutor of Juana. He had written to her letter after letter proffering pious advice, but she had never sent him a single line in reply. At last, on the 1st of September, probably of the before-mentioned year 1497, he wrote to her for the last time, describing the felicity of the ladies in Spain, possibly meaning the sisters of Juana, who considered it a privilege when he instructed them in their religious duties. He complained of her silence, and then broke out into a passionate invective against the Parisian priests who surrounded and corrupted his former pupil. He had been told that she had given one of "those drunkards" thirty florins, that he might make good cheer. She must never do so again, and must take a confessor from a Spanish convent, a friar who does not and cannot possess even "so much as a pin" of private property. After she had left Spain, he had retired to his convent, and "there," he went on to say, "in my monastery I am more happy living on bread and water than your Highness with all you possess." ⁽²⁾ A man who dared to hold such language to a Princess who was to be his future Queen was certainly not despicable; but Juana had suffered too much from him and the party to which he belonged to be touched by his pathetic words of love, whilst his offer to leave his convent and in spite of his great age to go to Flandérs could only alarm her. She returned no answer.

If we read attentively the letters of the Sub-Prior and of Friar Andreas we plainly perceive the influences of the education to which Juana had been subjected. By nature probably more intelligent than energetic, her character had had no room for healthy growth and free development under the narrow, hard and oppressive rule of her mother. Fear, not love, predominated in her, and was the motive of her actions to a greater extent than could have been wished. But although she submitted to the domination of others, she was always conscious of the wrong done to her, and never permitted herself to be entirely conquered. Thus her life was a succession of attempts at rebellion, which, however, collapsed as soon as she was called upon to vindicate her independence by active measures. Although she was especially afraid of her mother, and would please her in small things which required no great exertion, yet in matters concerning her conscience, or such as demanded energy, she opposed to Queen Isabel a passive resistance, and an inertness which it was impossible to overcome. The Sub-Prior, judging from his standpoint of a mere creature of the Queen, was probably not entirely wrong when he accused her of a hard and pitiless heart, ⁽¹⁾ and yet she was equally right in indignantly denying it, for even her accuser was forced to confess that she was not in want of good reasons to defend her cause.⁽²⁾ That the differences between mother and daughter referred to religious questions as well as to politics can hardly be doubted. Her refusal to confess ⁽³⁾ or to accept a confessor at the hands of Queen Isabel ⁽⁴⁾, the complaints of her former tutor of the perverting influence of the Parisian theologians ⁽⁵⁾, and the accusation of the Sub-Prior that she had no piety ⁽⁶⁾, admit of no other explanation.

Her deviations from the true faith, as it was understood at the Spanish court, may appear slight to many of our readers; but we must remind them that Queen Isabel had burned hundreds of her subjects for much smaller offences. To be "not well disposed towards the true doctrine" was enough to justify death on the stake. To punish the Archduchess Juana was out of the question, because she, being the wife of a foreign sovereign, was not subject to the jurisdiction of Spain. But although Queen Isabel had no power to show "her love of Christ and His Holy Mother" on this occasion, could she allow a heretic to ascend the throne on which she was seated, and to destroy all she had spent her best years in building up? The "Holy" Inquisition was especially in danger, and she could not desert the "cause of God" without committing a mortal sin. Ferdinand, we have already seen, had personal reasons for not permitting the wrath of the Queen to cool down.

Under these circumstances it was decided to prevent Juana from becoming Queen. The plan seems to have been ripe in the year 1501, and was communicated to the Cortés, who held their sittings, in the years 1502 and 1503, first in Toledo, then in Madrid, and finally in Alcalá de Hénarez. ⁽¹⁾ To make the true reasons public would have been a humiliation, and perhaps not without danger, considering the great unpopularity of the Inquisition. Some pretext was, therefore, absolutely necessary. In the Rolls of the Cortes it is only stated that King Ferdinand, after the death of Queen Isabel, should continue to carry on the government, in case Juana should be "absent, or unable, or unwilling" to exercise her royal prerogative. ⁽²⁾ In an additional clause to her testament, the Queen ordered, once again, and more explicitly, that her husband Ferdinand should be her immediate successor, without mentioning the conditions of her daughter's "absence, unwillingness, or incapacity." ⁽³⁾ This clause was confirmed by the Cortes and by the Pope. The Rolls of the Spanish Cortes are, unhappily, as scanty as the English Rolls of Parliament of that time, and it is impossible to learn more positively from them on what grounds the exclusion of the lawful heiress was decreed. That some at least of the leading men knew the real state of things is probable, as the rumours of the supposed infidel opinions of Juana were not confined to the narrow circle of the most intimate ministers of Queen Isabel. But, on the other hand, it is not less probable that the great majority had then already been given to understand that Juana was suffering from some mental derangement.

- In November 1504 Queen Isabel died whilst Juana was in Flanders. Ferdinand on the same day mounted a large scaffolding erected in the square before the Royal palace, and announced to the assembled people that he had taken the crown of Castile from his head and given it to his daughter Juana, but that he would continue to reign in her name as "governor and administrator of Castile for life." In the Cortes which assembled not many months afterwards in Toro, he delivered an excellent speech from the throne, and his powers were confirmed by the representatives of the kingdom.

Philip, however, who, as husband of the Queen, had assumed the title of King of Castile, sent a protest from Flanders against the usurpation of his father-in-law. Speaking in a state paper addressed to Gonsalvo de Cordova, of the injuries he had received from Ferdinand, he writes that his father-in-law, in order to colour his usurpation, "takes care that a rumour be spread that the Queen " his daughter is mad, and that he is consequently " entitled to govern in her stead, (adding) that the King " (Philip) keeps her prisoner, and other lies and insinuations without end."⁽¹⁾ Thus, we not only meet during the lifetime of King Philip with the rumour of the insanity of Queen Juana, but see also from what source it proceeded, and the interest which those who originated it had that it should be believed.

After long and exceedingly unfriendly negotiations between the father and the son-in-law, Philip, accompanied by his wife, came in the spring of 1506 to Spain, with the avowed purpose of taking possession of the throne of Castile by force of arms. The Castilian noblemen were divided between the two rivals, but defection began to thin the ranks of the Catholic King as soon as his adversary advanced further into the country. Ferdinand, accustomed during many years to have his way in almost everything, yielded to his strong passions, when he saw that in this most important affair one failure was closely followed by another. Mad with rage, "he wanted to fly at King Philip with capa y spada,"⁽¹⁾ his cloak to cover him, and his sword to plunge into the breast of the hated intruder. This outbreak, however, was not of long duration. A third party was in the course of formation with the Condestable of Castile at its head. Their intention was to drive both rivals out of the country, and to set up Juana as their rightful Queen.⁽²⁾ Of the two adversaries of Ferdinand Juana was the more dangerous. She was born a Spanish Infanta, and the lawful heiress to the crown. Her government once established, would have, it might be expected, the support of all in favour of legitimate succession, whilst Philip, whatever his momentary success might be, was a stranger and a usurper, who probably would soon be forsaken by all the Spaniards. Besides, a remnant of natural feeling forbade Ferdinand to employ against his daughter such violent means as he would not scruple to have recourse to against his son-in-law, whom he had long ago accustomed himself to regard as a stranger. For these reasons he decided upon allying himself with his less dangerous against his more formidable antagonist. On the night of the 1st of June he slept in the little hamlet of Villafranca de Valcarcel, whence on the next morning he sent Cardinal Cisneros with a message of love to his son-in-law, asking for a personal interview, when they could arrange their differences.

Early in the morning of the 27th of June, Ferdinand and Philip met in the village of Villafafila. Philip had come to the rendezvous at the head of armed horsemen, whilst Ferdinand had left behind the greater portion of his attendants, and accompanied by a few of his most trusted servants mounted on peaceful donkeys, met his son-in-law with "love in his heart and peace in his hands." After the first effusion of paternal love, Ferdinand invited Philip to follow him into the village church. None of their attendants were permitted to accompany them, but those who kept watch at the entrance could occasionally see the kings and hear their voices, without being able to understand their words. King Ferdinand spoke much, with great animation and in a most earnest and impressive tone. Philip, on the other hand, was evidently perplexed. There was no doubt the Catholic King was once more achieving one of his many intellectual triumphs.

Great, therefore, was the astonishment of both parties when, the private interview over, it was known that Ferdinand, instead of raising the least difficulty, had made greater concessions to Philip than had ever been demanded of him. Two treaties were drawn up, signed, ratified, sworn to, and exchanged on the same day. In the first, Ferdinand ceded all his claims to the government of Castile to his "most beloved children," that is in fact to Philip, who in the joy of his heart proclaimed it before the ink had had time to dry. Added to it was a secret contract, in which Ferdinand and Philip stated that Queen Juana "refuses" under any circumstances to occupy herself with the government of the kingdom, but if she should change her mind and attempt to exercise her prerogatives, it would lead to the total destruction of the country, considering "her infirmities and sufferings which decency forbids to be stated here."⁽¹⁾ The contracting parties bound themselves, therefore, to prevent the Queen and her adherents by their united forces from taking part in the government. The subject of the long and impressive speech of King Ferdinand in the church was no longer a secret. It was clear that he, who had not seen his daughter for the last two years and a half, had persuaded Philip, who had lived in daily intercourse with her, that he was mistaken in denying her insanity. For the words "her infirmities and sufferings, which decency forbids to be stated," could not be and were not interpreted in any other sense than madness.

This, however, was not all. Scarcely had Ferdinand and Philip sworn on the Holy Gospels to deprive their daughter and wife respectively of her crown and freedom, than Ferdinand closeted himself with his first secretary of state, Miguel Perez Almazan, who at the same time was apostolic and imperial notary, and declared before him that, unarmed and attended by only a few servants, he had fallen into the hands of his son-in-law, who had been at the head of a great armed force. Moreover, his son-in-law had "kept prisoner his daughter, the lawful Queen of Castile." Thus, he and the Queen having been deprived of their liberty, he protested against the validity of the treaties, and declared that he did "not consent that his daughter should be deprived of her liberty, nor of her rights as hereditary Queen of the kingdom."⁽¹⁾

Ferdinand had another interview with Philip, took leave of his "beloved son" in the most touching manner, and went to Naples in order to show him that he had given up all idea of regaining the government of Castile. He had an old servant, Mosen Luis Ferrer, who being a born subject of the crown of Aragon, and having been for many years gentleman of the bed chamber of the King, enjoyed his full confidence. Mosen Ferrer was selected for the post of ambassador at the court of Philip, and instructed to take care of the interests of the Catholic King during his absence, with a special injunction to do all in his power to promote the friendship between Ferdinand and his son-in-law. These instructions, dated Zaragoza, 29th of July 1506, are extant.⁽¹⁾ Speaking of his daughter King Ferdinand admonished Philip to treat her, always with love, to gain her affection, and that they should live together as a good husband and wife ought to do.⁽²⁾ By doing so he would fulfil the will of God, improve the health of his wife, and further his own interests. Is it possible to suppose that even a man like Ferdinand would have advised Philip to live with her as a good husband and to gain her affections if she had been mad? What Ferrer did to promote matrimonial love we are not in a position to state; but as to his taking care of the interests of King Ferdinand we may observe that, before the Catholic King reached the shores of Naples, Philip died after an illness which lasted from Sunday night until 11 o'clock on Friday morning. The general opinion was that he had been poisoned, although two physicians declared that such was not the fact. But what were such declarations worth? The physicians had not even had time to examine the case, as the bowels of the deceased were buried a few hours after his death. The accusations were not only general and positive, but were declared publicly, whilst the officers of the law did not dare to call to account those who made them, for fear lest the truth of this "delicate case" might come to light.⁽³⁾

(1) P. 81, sqq.

Queen Juana being a young widow with a rich inheritance, her suitors were numerous. King Henry VII. of

(3) The case of a certain Lopez de Araoz, from Oñate, is most remarkable. He remained unpunished for other offences, because he had coupled his highly treasonable language with the assertion that they had given a bocado, a morsel, to King Philip, and the judges were afraid he might speak out more clearly. England, and the Count de Foix, a near kinsman of the King of France, were the most prominent amongst them. Ferdinand, however, it is self-evident, would object to a second marriage of his daughter on every account. To colour his refusal he wrote most affectionate letters to England and all the other courts of Europe, in which he described in great detail Juana travelling with the body of her deceased husband, and although he did not positively state in his official correspondence that she forced the great of the land to pay it respect as though it were alive, there is little doubt that he countenanced such rumours, which he himself had perhaps taken care to spread. Poor Juana! When she was represented as forcing the grandees of Spain to pay royal respect to a corpse, she was a miserable prisoner, and none of the great were permitted to approach her. The secret treaty of Villafafila indicated clearly enough that strong measures were intended against her in order to deprive her of her freedom and the comment on it, contained in the instructions of King Ferdinand to Mosen Ferrer, do not leave the least doubt that already in the month of July 1506 the question was debated whether she should or should not be locked up in some dungeon.⁽¹⁾ We are, however, not in want of more positive proofs. For when in the month of August 1520, her own servants, as they were called, her jailors, as they in fact were, could speak without fear, they declared that she had been in prison for fourteen years. Fourteen years reckoned back from the month of August 1520 would reach to the same month of 1506, that is to say, to a period when King Philip was still alive; and all uncertainty is dissipated by Cardinal Adrian, who stated that the "infamy," that is to say the imprisonment of the Queen under false pretence, was imputed to Philip as well as to Ferdinand and Charles.⁽²⁾ It is true that after the death of her husband she travelled from Burgos to Tordesillas accompanied by his corpse. But a prisoner may be removed from one place to another without recovering liberty. We are not acquainted with any authentic information concerning her removal from Burgos to Tordesillas. If, however, on that occasion precautions were taken such as were to be observed at later periods, when it was intended that she should go to Arevalo and to Toro, her journey to Tordesillas would not break the monotony of prison life. When in the year 1522 the Marquis of Denia thought that she would be better guarded at Arevalo, he proposed that she should be placed at night in a litter, and without stopping on the road, be carried to her new prison.⁽¹⁾ As to the arrangements for her intended journey to Toro, we may hear the Marquis himself: "The journey is to be performed in the manner I have already described, that is to say, her Highness must start hence at eleven or twelve o'clock at night, and go to a place three leagues distant, called Pedrosa. There she must remain the whole day. The next night at the same hour she must start again, and reach Toro before day. When she enters the town care will be taken that no one sees her. That is necessary, for, in truth, I am ashamed at what is said and done."⁽²⁾

If Queen Juana was not a free agent she cannot be made responsible for the arrangement that the corpse of King Philip accompanied her on her journey. But, besides, there was nothing absolutely unreasonable in it. Although Philip had died in Burgos, his final resting place was to be at Granada, by the side of Queen Isabel. As Tordesillas lies on the road from Burgos to Granada, a considerable amount of expense would be spared if his remains were accompanied by the same cortége which conducted the Queen. But if it is allowed to interpret this case by a later similar occurrence with which we are well acquainted, we cannot help

suspecting that pecuniary considerations were not the only grounds for the arrangement in question. The vault at Granada being unfinished, the corpse of Philip remained many years in the church of the convent of Santa Clara, at Tordesillas, only a few hundred yards distant from the palace in which Juana lived, and yet, although she often wished to visit the convent, she never expressed the least desire to visit his tomb. On several occasions she spoke of him, but never thought that he was alive or would awake from his long protracted slumber. On the contrary, she mentioned his death just as any other widow would have mentioned the decease of her husband.⁽¹⁾ It was, therefore, quite unnecessary, for her sake, to disturb the corpse of Philip in its resting-place. Nevertheless, when the Marquis of Denia wished to remove her to Aranda in the month of August 1518, one of the first things he thought of was to repair the funeral cart, in order that the dead body of Philip should accompany the Queen.⁽²⁾ A huge funeral cart, indistinctly visible in the dim torchlight, followed by a captive Queen, and startling the inhabitants of the villages in the midst of night, would have been well calculated deeply to impress the imagination of the people, and to prepare it for the most absurd rumours. The journey did not take place, but the funeral cart had, during the removal of the Queen from Burgos to Tordesillas, taken so strong a hold of the popular mind, that in the description of the night when Tordesillas was carried, which Gomez de Santillan sent to Cardinal Adrian, we again meet the Queen and the cart, although, from the more sober letter of Lope Hurtado to the Emperor, we know that she had not left her palace.⁽³⁾

During the nine years that Ferdinand survived Philip, Queen Juana was kept in such strict imprisonment that she was as completely debarred from all communication with the outer world as though she had reposed in her grave. We hear nothing of her, and she did not even learn the death of her father.⁽¹⁾ Mosen Ferrer, he who was strongly suspected of having poisoned King Philip, was her jailor, and from later letters we learn that he perpetrated horrible cruelties on her.

Ferdinand died on the 23rd of January 1516, and Cardinal Cisneros was viceroy of Castile during the absence of Charles. He sent the Bishop of Mallorca to Tordesillas, with instructions to see that the persons employed in the palace should remain in their offices, and that the arrangements of Ferdinand for watching the Queen should be continued. The Bishop, however, found such atrocities had been committed, that he thought it his duty to send a report of them to the Cardinal. On receiving it Cisneros made further inquiries, and Mosen Ferrer was suspended from his office because he "was suspected of endangering the health and life of Her Highness."⁽²⁾ He remonstrated, assuming the air of an innocent victim of a base intrigue. He could not, he said, be a bad man, else so good and wise a prince

(1) See, for instance, the letter of the Marquis of Denia to the Emperor, Numero 47, 48. The Cartas del Cardenal Don Fray Francisco Jimenez de Cisneros, dirigidas á Don Diego Lopez de Ayala, published a few months ago, at Madrid, contain a letter of the Cardinal to Ayala, dated Alcalá, 15th of January 1516, in which the presence of la rreyna nuestra senora in that place is mentioned. The learned editors are of opinion that Queen Juana, and not Queen Germaine, was meant, for, they say, the Cardinal would not have called the Queen of Aragon nuestra senora, our lady; and, besides, Queen Germaine had remained in Catalonia when King Ferdinand went to Andalusia. In the archives at Simancas, Estado, Legajo 3, f. 112, however, is a letter of the Secretary Calcena to the Cardinal, dated 28th of January 1516, in which, speaking of Queen Germaine, he calls her nuestra señora. Thus, the first argument collapses. As for the second, the same letter mentions the arrival of the Queen of Aragon at Guadalupe, where Ferdinand had died. It is therefore clear that she must have gone from Catalonia to Andalusia to see her husband, and on that journey she most naturally passed through Alcalá. Thus, there can be no doubt that Cisneros spoke of the Queen of Aragon, that is to say, Queen Germaine, and not of Queen Juana. They are, however, often confounded.

as Ferdinand would not have placed confidence in him. He could not have ill-treated Juana, because she was Queen of Aragon, and he an Aragonese. He could not restore her health, as it was not the will of God, and King Ferdinand, her father, had not succeeded in doing so, and at last, "to prevent her from destroying herself by abstinence from food, as often as her will was not done, he had to order that la cuerda should be applied to preserve her life."⁽¹⁾

La cuerda, the rope, was the form of torture then in use in Spain. The victim was suspended by a rope with weights attached to his feet. We have met with various other instances of the use of this torture, and have always found, as for example, in the famous case of Acuña, Bishop of Zamora, that the judge, before applying it, warned the prisoner that he was in danger of having his limbs broken or dislocated, and even of losing his life. We think it superfluous to add a single word of comment to such an admission as that of Mosen Ferrer.

Cardinal Cisneros sent the Count Hernando de Andrada to Brussels, to inform Charles of what was going on in Tordesillas. On the 30th of April Charles answered that it was very necessary to watch the Queen, that he would send another person from Flanders to fill the place of Mosen Ferrer, but that he had no time to make the appointment. Meanwhile, he continued, the Cardinal was answerable that the watching of the Queen should be so complete, that, whilst she was treated well, no person should have access to her who might endeavour to counteract his "good intentions." "In this," he concluded, "the greatest vigilance is necessary. For, as it belongs to no one but me to look after the honour of the Queen my lady, those who desire to meddle in this affair can have no good intentions."⁽²⁾

What was the meaning of this cautiously worded answer? Was Mosen Ferrer to continue in his office as keeper of the Queen, after having confessed that he had tortured her? Was the injunction to treat her well an empty phrase? It seems so, for the declaration of Charles that he would regard anyone who meddled in this affair as an ill-intentioned intruder could have no other meaning than that he strongly disapproved the measures of the Bishop of Mallorca, and even of the Cardinal himself.

Cisneros, however, who hated not only the Aragonese party in general, but the Ferrers, father and son, in special, was nothing daunted by the ungracious answer, and appointed Hernan Duque de Estrada governor of the house of the Queen, at the same time instructing Diego Lopez de Ayala, his political agent in Flanders, to speak again with Charles on the subject. In Flanders, however, passion was at that time running higher than even in Spain. Monsieur de Chièvres and the Chancellor Sauvage advised Ayala not to speak with Charles about the Queen, and Hernan Duque seemed to be "a ruined man." "For," Ayala declared, "according to what I see they speak here "præter formam of her (the Queen's) health, and that "not because they wish it. They are dangerous people, "and one must hold one's tongue here." (1) Nevertheless, Cisneros remained firm, Mosen Ferrer was not reinstated in his office, and Hernan Duque remained governor (2) until Charles came to Spain, when he appointed, on the 15th of March 1518, Don Bernardino de Sandoval y Rojas, Marquis of Denia and Count of Lerma, governor and administrator of the household of the Queen, with power to command and govern all persons belonging to that establishment, and the magistracy and commonalty of the town of Tordesillas. (3)

The letters of the Marquis of Denia are numerous, and we are enabled by them to form a correct idea of the manner in which Queen Juana was treated. We must, however, mention at once, that two sets of correspondence were carried on between him and his royal master, the one destined to be seen by the Privy Councillors, the other by Charles alone. The first class represented things in the light in which it was wished they should appear. They did not, indeed, go so far as positively to state that the Queen was mad, but the short allusions to her "infirmity" were conceived in such terms that it was easy to interpret the "infirmity" as insanity. The private letters, however, spoke with less reserve, and contained secrets which, with good reason, it was thought dangerous to allow to be known even to the intimate advisers of the crown. This division of the correspondence into official and most strictly secret communications was not a custom that had grown out of mere convenience. It was the consequence of a positive order of Charles "... and you shall neither talk nor write to any person about the affairs of Her Highness, except to myself, and always (send the letters) by trustworthy messengers. That is necessary; although it seems superfluous (to give this order) to so intelligent a person, and to one so much attached to my service as you, nevertheless I have thought it advisable, because the case is so delicate and of so much importance to me." (1) This letter of Charles is dated 19th of April 1518. On the 27th of the same month the Marquis answered that he was fully aware of the precaution necessary, and that he had not confided the secrets of the palace to any one but him. He added that when the Infante Ferdinand was leaving Spain, a letter was written to him. That could not be avoided, because the Infanta Catalina, who was living with her mother, had heard of the intended departure of her brother, and wished to give him a token of her love. "But if he (the Infante) were to stay a hundred years in these kingdoms, I would not write or say a single word to him about what is “going on here.”⁽¹⁾ As even the son was precluded from all knowledge of the manner of life of his mother, we must look for the truth in the most private letters of Denia to Charles, all the other correspondence on this subject being either intentional lies to give a pretext for the detention of the Queen, or containing the statements of those who had been imposed upon. The letters of the Marquis are written in an exceedingly bad hand, but only a few of them are in cipher, and of these the original decipherings, made for the Emperor, are preserved.

The ancient palace at Tordesillas was a structure of moderate size.⁽²⁾ It was fortified, and defended by a strong tower, which in the year 1522 was demolished. To the south it overlooked the bridge and the river Duero, beyond which stretched an undulating sandy plain, relieved from May to September by the foliage of vineyards. This was the only view it had, the back and both sides of the building being surrounded by poor ugly houses. It contained, according to Spanish fashion, one large room, and a great number of others, small, ill lighted, and ill ventilated. The Queen had not the whole of the palace at her disposal. The Infanta Catalina was staying with her. The Marquis and the Marchioness of Denia and their daughters occupied another portion of the building, whilst the twelve and occasionally more women who watched her day and night, and the tutor of the Infanta, and other officials, were not permitted to live in separate houses. Thus, the space occupied by the Queen was limited. The windows of her large room opened towards the river, but she was not allowed to remain in it, and never was she at liberty to look out of the windows for fear that she might be seen by a passer by or call him to her assistance.⁽³⁾ Except on extraordinary occasions, when she was most strictly watched, she was forced to retire to a back room without windows, the only light which entered being candlelight. ⁽¹⁾

The allowance for her and her household, the Princess Catalina included, was at first 30,000 scudos, irregularly paid, and afterwards reduced to 28,000 scudos, and even less. ⁽²⁾ The incomes of the Spanish grandees were then immense. The revenues of the twenty one Dukes ranged about thirty years later from 70,000 to 125,000 scudos ⁽³⁾, and even amongst the Marquises some were to be found who had 40,000 and 60,000 a year to spend, as, for instance, the Marquis del Priego and the Marquis de Vallay, of the house of Cortez. Although the fortunes of the nobles had been fast increasing during that time, we do not think we are wrong in supposing that the allowance of the Queen was considerably below the income of many of her subjects. Moreover, a portion of the salary of the Marquis of Denia, and all he wanted for the sustentance of himself and his family, was to be paid out of her grant. Under such circumstances we are not surprised that she was often suffering from poverty. The allowance was paid into the hands of her treasurer, Ochoa de Olanda, and she was not permitted to have even the smallest sum of money in her possession. As long as her father lived she received from time to time little presents, a jewel or a trinket, to gladden her. Charles, however, not only discontinued this custom, but stripped her of whatever he could convert to other uses, as on occasion of the marriages of his sisters, Eleanor and Catalina. Even the Empress, when she came to visit the Queen, carried away whatever she thought worth having, ⁽¹⁾ rendering thereby the palace or prison of her mother-in-law still more gloomy and cheerless than it had been.

Leading such a life, it is only natural that her health gave way frequently. She suffered especially during the great heat of the summer from fever and other illness, and yet she was not allowed a physician. In the spring of 1519 the Infanta Catalina had the itch. To have recourse to a medical man was a necessity. The Marquis of Denia was placed in great difficulty about devising means to introduce a physician into the palace, and yet prevent him from speaking with the Queen. When at last he found that that was impossible, he bethought himself of another expedient. In the town of Tordesillas lived a Doctor Soto, who had accompanied Juana to Flanders, and had not forgotten her when she was sunk in the deepest misery. Dismissed from his office, and deprived of his pension, he had settled not far from her. As he certainly knew the secret, or part of it, the marquis thought less harm would be done by having recourse to him than by admitting a stranger. Nevertheless, he did not regard it as superfluous to buy his silence, and asked Charles to show him favours, "for it is impossible to prevent Her Highness from speaking with Doctor Soto if he enters (the palace) and visits the Infanta." ⁽²⁾ On another occasion, when the Queen was seriously ill, and suffering for ten days from a strong fever, the Marquis wrote to Charles that he had refused her repeated demands to have medical assistance. ⁽³⁾ It is true that he added the words, "as the fever subsided," but we do not reproach him with refusing to admit a physician when the fever was over or subsiding, but for leaving her without attendance during the ten days, when, according to his own confession, it was "strong."

The number of women who watched the Queen was considerable. They amounted never to less than twelve, and sometimes to many more. The Marquis and Marchioness found it occasionally hard work to subject them to the strict rules of the house. If the Marchioness reprimanded them, they combined and mutinied "like soldiers," saying, that what was done to one was done to all of them. It was of no use to order the monteros, that is the soldiers who mounted guard in the palace, not to permit them to go out, as they were afraid of them. "They were a bad lot of women." That they were bad we readily believe. Good women would not have stooped to do the work which was exacted from them. But as to the proofs adduced by the Marquis we must demur to them. There was no marriage celebrated in the town, no christening, no burial to which they did not want to go, even if it concerned people to whom they were related only in the fourth degree. It was not an ascetical hatred of marriages, christenings, burials, and other occasions for merrymaking, which made the Marquis so strongly declaim against them. He had other reasons. "The consequence of their visiting is, that they cannot forbear talking to their husbands, and relations and friends, and gossiping of things which ought not to be known, for, indeed, secrecy is a necessity. Members of the Privy Council have written to me things which they cannot know except through the Licentiate Alarcon, husband of one of these women, called Leonor Gomez, who never can hold her tongue. None must know what passes here, and least of all those of the Privy-Council." "It is not good to have married women, and least of all wives of Privy Councillors." (1) Why not? Charles and the Marquis were taking the greatest pains to pass Queen Juana off as mad. The knowledge of any extravagance committed by her would only have confirmed their assertions. That could not be the secret. But if the secret was that she was not mad, and was kept a prisoner, it is easy to understand why it would be dangerous, if people in general, and in special the Privy Council, were to know it. In the years 1518 and 1519 Charles was not yet firmly seated on the throne.

If there was a lack of medical assistance, there were plenty of priests. Fray Juan de Avila, guardian of the Franciscan friars, and tutor of the Infanta, was constantly residing in the palace, and the general of the Predicant friars and others were frequent visitors. The ground of their visits was that Charles had determined to convert his mother, who formerly had objected only to confession, but would now neither confess nor hear mass. Early in the year 1518 he had ordered that mass should be said in her presence. Fray Juan de Avila and Fray Antonio de Villegas were to assist the Marquis in carrying out this command. To render mass less objectionable, it was proposed, probably by one of the friars, that the altar should be erected in the corridor, that is to say, the open gallery running along the building, in the courtyard, whilst the Marquis wished it to be placed in a more dignified spot, namely, in an apartment near the room of the Queen. But whether the chapel was to be erected in the one place or the other, Queen Juana showed no readiness to comply with the wishes of her son. The Marquis, who had the discretion not to write any detailed report to Charles of the means which he employed, informed him on the 22nd of June: "Concerning mass, we are occupied " with this subject. Her Highness wishes that it should " be said in the corridor where your Highness saw her,
 " and I wish that it should be said in an apartment next
 " to her chamber; but in the one place or the other mass
 " shall be said soon." (1) More than six months later he was only able to state, "We are daily occupied in the " affair of saying mass. It is delayed in order to see " whether it could not be done with her consent, for that " would be better, but with the help of God Her High" ness shall hear it (mass) soon." (2) On the 12th of September mass was said for the first time in a little chapel

erected at the end of the corridor. No persons were admitted except the Queen, the Infanta Catalina, then twelve years old, Fray Antonio Villegas, who said mass, the guardian (Fray Juan), and a boy of the chapel. The Queen went through all the ceremonies, knelt down, said her prayers, chanted from the prayer book (oras), and was besprinkled with holy water. But when they brought her the "evangelium" and the "pax" she could not conquer herself sufficiently to accept them, and made a sign that they should be given to her daughter.⁽¹⁾

On the margin of the letter which contained these tidings, a note is written by Cobos, who was already sharing all the secrets of Charles: "Has had much pleasure, and where he and the Marchioness are, etc., and so he must continue." This short note contains the substance of the letter which was to be sent as answer to the Marquis. Its meaning was that Charles was much satisfied at hearing that news. The "etc." meant the usual phrase, that where the Marquis and the Marchioness were Charles was sure that all would be done that was best. No inquiry was made concerning the means by which the sudden conversion was accomplished.

Having been made acquainted with the cuêrda, and the insufferable pain occasioned by that torture, Juana may have submitted from fear; or, still nourishing the hope of wearing the crowns of Castile and Aragon, she may have regarded it as bad policy to carry her opposition in matters of religion too far. But, however that may be, inwardly convinced she was not. When the rising of the Castilian Commons had been suppressed, and every prospect of gaining her liberty had vanished, she did not think it any longer necessary to conceal her disdain for the ceremonies of the Church. On Christmas Day of the year 1521 Divine Service was celebrated in her chapel, the Infanta Catalina taking part in it. The Queen, however, came out of her room, made a disturbance, and took her daughter away from the altar, which she ordered to be removed.⁽²⁾ In his letter of the 23d of May, probably of the year 1525, the Marquis mentioned a similar scene.⁽¹⁾ Her women came directly in sufficient strength, and when it was threatened to employ force, the Queen retired to her apartment. On both occasions, however, the Marquis of Denia thought it proper to ask permission of his master to employ strong measures of coercion against his mother. "I have always thought that her Highness being so indisposed as she is, in punishment for our sins, nothing would do her more good than some premia, although it is a very serious thing for a vassal to think of employing it against his sovereign."⁽²⁾ In order to be secure that the premia would produce the desired effect, more priests were to be called in to assist the Marquis. What is premia? Judging from the language of the letter, it must be a very evil thing. And certainly it is, being nothing else than a more technical and forensic term for the popular word torture. The premia spoken of by the Marquis was the cuerda, the rope, which Mosen Ferrer had already employed. The Marquis was right; it was a very serious thing for a subject to ask permission so to employ it, but it was not less serious for a sovereign to grant it against his mother, whose crown he had usurped. Charles seems to have avoided giving a direct answer, recommending only in general terms that the Queen should be well treated. But if the Marquis should come to the conclusion that torture was compatible with good treatment, had he not well founded reasons to expect that his master would approve it? Although such a supposition would be extravagant if we were interpreting the conduct of honest men, there is nothing strange in it when applied to Charles and the Marquis of Denia. The Marquis did not conceal his opinion that torturing the Queen would be a "service rendered to God and to herself," that "persons in her disposition require it," for their own good, and that her mother, the pious Queen Isabel, had also tortured her.⁽³⁾ Charles, on the other hand, as we have seen, had no

(1) Pp. 177, 178.

(2) P. 406.

scruple in very plainly stating his convictions that where the Marquis and the Marchioness were no wrong could be done. Clear and positive orders would certainly have been preferable, but as the Marquis could not obtain them, he wrote at last on the 11th of October 1527, when he wished to remove the Queen by force to Toro, telling the Emperor that he was fulfilling the duties of a good son by recommending that his mother should not be ill treated, but, he added, "it is not to be supposed that I, being your vassal, could do anything except what is conducive to your service and to that of her Highness."⁽¹⁾ By means of this understanding, Charles might henceforth indulge in fine phrases, and yet be sure that his instrument would do all the most cruel things his selfishness could suggest, if any advantage could thereby be obtained. Under such circumstances, the silence of the Marquis of Denia concerning the employment of torture to force Queen Juana to hear mass, and to obey his commands in other things, is no surety that he had not had recourse to such means. But whether by reason of the persuasion of priests, and the pains produced by the cuerda , he forced her into isolated acts of submissiveness or not, this much is clear, that she was never entirely converted. Even in the last letter but one, published in this volume, the Marquis could speak only of his hope of being instrumental in the salvation of her soul.⁽²⁾

Fray Juan de Avila was not a bad priest after the fashion of Spanish monks of the 16th century. His opinion was that to secure the salvation of the soul of the Queen was the first duty incumbent on her son, and it is not probable that he would have shrunk from the employment of any means calculated to bring about that effect. Her conversion, however, once accomplished, he declared that it was the will and command of God that she should be humoured and treated with all the respect due to her.⁽³⁾ On this last point, however, he had the misfortune to differ from

Charles and from the Marquis. There was a certain thing which Charles wanted from his mother, but which he dared not to commit to paper, having given his instructions by word of mouth. Examining all the circumstances, we believe that he wished to obtain from her an act of abdication. However that may be, Fray Juan, satisfied with the Queen hearing mass in September 1518, showed his sympathy with her, and had even the courage, although in a feeble manner, yet certainly in good faith, to entreat Charles to discontinue his brutal treatment of his mother. The consequence was, that, although he had rendered valuable services during the rebellion of the Commons, he was first persecuted by the Marquis, and then driven from Tordesillas. He implored help of the Emperor.⁽¹⁾ All was in vain. His later letters remind the reader of a drowning man, whose voice grows feebler and feebler, until it is no longer heard. Fray Juan disappeared from the political theatre, and we do not know what became of him.

What we have hitherto related is bad enough, and yet the worst, in our opinion, remains to be told. Queen Juana, not being permitted to see any one who was in communication with the outer world, save the Marquis of Denia, had sometimes conversations with him which lasted four or six hours. She wished to know what was going on in Spain and in Europe, and did not even disdain flattery in order to induce him to become more communicative. When anyone well acquainted with the history of that period reads the reports of those conversations he grows confused and bewildered, and does not know what to think of them. Personages who had long reposed in their graves were constantly rising from the dead, carrying on the business of this world, and freely mingling with the living. One fancies oneself to be in a lunatic asylum. The strange statements, however, were not made by Queen Juana, but by the Marquis of Denia.

(1) Pp. 391, 392, 419, sqq.

King Ferdinand had died in January 1516. Up to the month of August 1520 the Marquis told Juana that he was still alive and King of Spain. One of his letters begins: "After having written the other letter, the Queen our lady asked me into her presence, and told me she was much dissatisfied with me because I denied that the King her lord (Ferdinand) was dead, and asked me to tell her whether he was alive, as it was of great importance to her to know it." The Marquis assured her that King Ferdinand still lived, and the Queen said, "It is well."⁽¹⁾ Charles had assumed the government of Spain immediately after the death of Ferdinand, and came to Spain as King in the year 1517. For the sake of appearances he was obliged to pay a short visit to his mother. The Marquis, who could not deny his presence in Spain, told her that he had come for no other purpose than to ask Ferdinand to treat her less cruelly.⁽²⁾ The Emperor Maximilian died in January 1519. Up to the month of August 1520 the Marquis spoke of him as a living man. After the election of Charles as Emperor, the Marquis concocted an absurdly sentimental story. The Emperor, he said, loved his grandson Charles so much that he had abdicated in his favour, and induced the Princes Electors to recognize him as German Emperor. All the information he gave the captive Queen about her children, the Infante Ferdinand, the Infanta Eleanor, etc., was entirely false. Nor was that all. He attempted to induce her to write letters to deceased persons, as, for instance, to the Emperor Maximilian, who, he said, had not only shown by his abdication his great love for her son, but had also written and inquired after her. He went even so far as show her a letter⁽³⁾ which, there can be no doubt, was a fabrication. She, however, suspected the Marquis, and refused to write the desired reply. In explanation of this tissue of lies we shall hear the Marquis himself. "I have told the Queen our lady that the King my “ lord, her father, is alive, because I say that all that is “ done and displeases her Highness is ordered and com“ manded by the King. The love which she has for him “ makes her bear it more easily than she would if she “ knew that he is dead. Moreover this is of great “ advantage in many other respects to your Highness.” ⁽¹⁾

 If we ask what these “other respects” were, the answer is not difficult to find. The story of the Queen carrying the corpse of her husband with her, and believing that he still lived, had served its purpose many years, but was now worn out. A new proof of insanity would have been very welcome. If then it could be shown that she disbelieved the death of her father and of the Emperor, and still better, if she could be induced to write a letter to one who was dead, Charles would be provided with a piece of evidence of incalculable value to justify his conduct. Nor is it impossible to understand the reason which induced the Marquis to invent the abdication of Maximilian. If he wished to induce her to abdicate, it was not unreasonable to hold up before her that imaginary act of the Emperor, as an example to be followed. Nevertheless there remains enough for which no such special reason can be assigned, and which reminds us of the words of Diego Lopez de Ayala that they wished her mad. At all events, if we consider her absolute loneliness, and all the other circumstances, we must come to the conclusion that Charles and his abettors were utterly regardless of the consequences of their conduct.

It would not be at all surprising if a perfectly sane person put in the position of Juana had soon gone mad. Let us, therefore, see whether we can discover signs of incipient insanity. The worst case mentioned in the numerous letters of the Marquis, is the following. On the evening before the day of Santiago the Queen beat two of her women. When the Marquis heard of it he entered her room, and said, “What is this, Señora? Ought your

(1) P. 197.

“ Highness to comport yourself in this way towards those “ who serve you with so much zeal? The Queen, your “ mother, never so treated her servants.” The Queen, seeing the Marquis, rose to explain her conduct, but the women thought she would beat him, and ran away. When they had left the room the Queen came up to the Marquis, and said that she was not so overbearing that she would use him ill, and assured him on her faith that she intended to treat him as her brother. ⁽¹⁾ To beat servants was then, and at a much later time, not so unusual a thing. The anecdote of Louis XIV. throwing his cane out of the window, because if he had retained it he would have beaten one of his courtiers, was circulated in the polite Versailles, more than 200 years later, as a sign of the high breeding of the Grand Monarch. Queen Isabel, the mother of Juana, more than once got so enraged that her courtiers thought it necessary to interfere, as, for instance, in the curious scene in the Aragonese Cortes, related by Mariana. But whether the behaviour of Juana was excusable, considering the provocation such women as her jailors were most likely to give her, or not, it is certainly no sign of insanity. On the contrary, her conduct towards the Marquis shows that, even in moments of passion, she was still able to control herself. The other complaints made against her are of even less weight. She did not take her meals regularly, she did not go regularly to bed, nor when she went to bed did she rise regularly. Such habits of life were prejudicial to her health, but could they be construed into signs of insanity? She was untidy, and neglected her dress. It is scarcely worth while to answer such an allegation. What inducement could the Queen have to dress if she must pass her dreary days in a dark and lonely room? There is, however, one circumstance on which the Marquis seems to have laid great stress. It was absolutely impossible, he said, to permit the Queen to see anyone except the inmates of the palace, and every occasion on which she could make her voice heard, by even

a passer-by, must be carefully avoided, because she would make a scene, which might have serious consequences. ⁽¹⁾ Certainly, if Queen Juana had had an opportunity, it was probable that she would have called upon the passers-by to liberate her, as any other person placed under similar circumstances would have done. All these allegations of the Marquis were most probably true, and, moreover, the Queen was sometimes so weary of her life that she spoke of making an end of it; but these things do not prove that she was insane.

If even the Marquis of Denia could not adduce any more substantial proof, he, on the other hand, mentions many instances of great sagacity, sound judgment, true maternal love, and kindness towards her former servants. Whilst she was suffering from want, she often inquired whether the pensions of her attendants were regularly paid, and the Marquis did not dare to confess the truth that they were discontinued.⁽²⁾ Brooding day and night over the stories the Marquis was constantly telling her, she discovered that they were not true. But where to learn the truth? In her palace or prison it was impossible. She took advantage, therefore, of every circumstance, of the climate of Tordesillas, of an access of face-ache, &c., to urge her demand to be transferred to Valladolid, or to be permitted at least to visit the convent of Santa Clara. She had been in Valladolid after her return from Flanders, and remembered the place perfectly well. Once she had her clothes brushed, dressed with more than usual care, and with her head gear on, defied the Marquis several hours, declaring that she would go to Santa Clara and hear mass. The bait of hearing mass in public was certainly alluring enough, and the Marquis confessed that he was almost persuaded to let her go, "only there are other reasons of greater importance against it."⁽³⁾

Had the Queen been mad her illusions would have more effectually prevented her from perceiving her miserable condition than did the lies of the Marquis, and she might have been less unhappy. As she, however, was fully conscious of the cruelty with which she was treated, it is not to be wondered at that she was occasionally driven to despair. Even her jailor could not always conceal his compassion for her. In an undated letter of the year 1518 the Marquis confessed that her words were so good, "tantas buenas," that he stood "aghast" how she could pronounce them, and that he and the Marchioness found it difficult to resist her.⁽¹⁾ In other letters he stated that her complaints were so touching that he could not help having compassion for her, and that her language would have "moved stones." The only consequences which he drew from these statements, however, were that it was absolutely necessary that the Queen should not be permitted to see any one, because none could resist her; that he wanted to write in cipher, that he begged the Emperor to destroy his letters, and not let them be seen by any one except by a person in whom he confided as much as in himself.⁽²⁾ How Charles could read such letters, as that for instance which bears the number 48,⁽³⁾ in cool blood, would be hardly conceivable if we did not know how hard men were three hundred and fifty years ago.

One of the most perplexing circumstances in the strange history of Queen Juana is that the Infanta Catalina was permitted to share her prison. At first sight it may appear incredible, but it is not the less true, that considerations of economy had something to do with this arrangement. Whilst the Flemish followers of Charles were enriching themselves at the expense of Spain, his exchequer was so empty that even a few thousand ducats a year seemed a great gain. Moreover, it was deemed prudent not to exasperate the Queen to the commission of some desperate act which possibly would create general indignation. The Infanta, born when her mother was already a prisoner, had never known any other than a prison life. The palace at Tordesillas was her world, the hills which confine the horizon in the direction towards Medina del Campo were her ultima Thule. When she was about twelve years of age, she began to write letters to her brother Charles, whom she had never seen, but whom she loved dearly. Her letters were somewhat stiff, it is true, there was a want of freedom discernible. But was that to be wondered at? As for the rest, she was happy. She loved her mother, she loved the Marquis and the Marchioness, her tutor Fray Juan, and did not even complain of the dreadful women. On reading her letters one wonders how it was possible that a young girl of twelve or fourteen years of age could be so entirely inured to such an atmosphere, and did not observe what was daily passing around her. At last, however, comes the solution of the riddle. In the month of August 1521, the Infanta found an opportunity of writing to her brother without the knowledge of the Marquis. All her pretty letters had been frauds. They had been written under the dictation of the Marquis and the Marchioness. In a memoir which she drew up on this occasion, she begged the Emperor not to permit the Marquis and Marchioness to maltreat her in the house of her mother. She complained that she was not permitted to see any one, nor to write to any one. She told him that the Countess of Mòdica, wife of the Admiral of Castile, had sent her a letter, and that when the Marquis and Marchioness heard of it, they wanted to "tear out her eyes," searched her, and made inquiries as to who had brought the letter. They did not allow her to speak even with her servants or those of the Queen. She begged the Emperor not to persecute the guardian (Fray Juan), but on the contrary to see that he did not forsake the Queen, "who stands in great want of consolation." The daughters of the Marquis took her robes from her, wore them, and behaved as though they were her equals. These, and several other complaints, filled pages. In the last paragraph she implored the Emperor "for the love of God" to provide that, if the Queen wished to walk for her recreation in the corridor on the river or on the other side, or if she wished to go to her large room to refresh herself, she should not be prevented from doing so. For it had become the custom at Tordesillas that when the Queen visited her daughter, the servants and daughters of the Marchioness entered unobserved the room of the Infanta, and from their place of concealment directed the women by signs not to let the Queen go to the large room, but immediately to lock her up in her dark chamber. ⁽¹⁾

Accompanying this memoir is a short letter written in another hand, but signed by the Infanta. "I implore your Majesty to believe what I write, and soon to give your orders. We, the Queen my lady and I, have no other comfort and help but your Majesty." Added by herself are the words, "I beg your Majesty to forgive me that the letter is written in a strange hand. I can no more." ⁽²⁾

From what we have stated, we believe, it will be tolerably clear that the reasoning faculties of Queen Juana were by no means impaired, and that, whatever opinion we may be inclined to form of her character and her religious convictions, we cannot pronounce her to have been insane. One important question, however, remains to be answered. How was it that, after having been imprisoned for fourteen years, and having had an opportunity to regain her liberty during the rising of the Commons in Castile, she permitted that opportunity to slip without making use of it? The answer is plain. The same persons who had deceived the world during so many years about her real state of mind succeeded also in deceiving her in the most cruel way.

Where are the grandees of Spain? Where are the nobles of my kingdoms? These questions had incessantly occupied her mind, and to devise plausible answers had taxed to the utmost the ingenuity of the Marquis.⁽¹⁾ But the Queen did not once ask, Where is my people? And yet the nobles did not make the slightest move in her favour, whilst the people rose at last in open rebellion, marched to Tordesillas, and drove away her jailors. The Commons, it is true, did not rise for that purpose, having to redress many other wrongs which more directly concerned them. Nevertheless, it would be a great error to follow the common tradition, and suppose that they made use of the name of the Queen only after their rising had taken place, to give to their revolutionary measures an appearance of legality. More than a year before the outbreak, the Marquis had complained that the secrets of the palace were oozing out, and that the people were indignant; and openly accused him of being a tyrant, who kept the Queen prisoner under false pretences.⁽²⁾

Towards the end of August 1520, Juan Padilla and other captains of the Commons were at Medina del Campo, only a few leagues distant from Tordesillas. It was known that they had orders from the revolutionary government, assembled at Avila, to rescue the Queen from the grasp of her oppressors. Tordesillas was a place of considerable strength, and had a sufficient garrison of old, well-disciplined troops. It might have been successfully defended, if the troops could have been relied upon. But the officers of the household, from the women who watched her up to the higher ranks, behaved after the usual fashion of mercenaries, and were the first to betray their ignominious taskmaster, denouncing the Marquis without reserve for his shameful conduct towards the Queen. The excitement of the citizens increased, and they gained over the garrison, who refused to fight.

The position of the Marquis of Denia was, to say the least, extremely precarious; but he was not a man easily to be daunted. When he saw that resistance by force was impossible, he betook himself to a stratagem. Frightening the Queen by telling her that the Commons were rebels of the worst description, who wanted to carry her off to some dungeon, he asked her to send an order forbidding them to enter Tordesillas. No doubt the word "rebel" fell with an unpleasant sound on her ear. Nevertheless, her distrust of the Marquis being stronger than her fear of the revolutionists, she refused to sign. Foiled in this attempt, the Marquis addressed himself to the Infanta, who, being accustomed implicitly to obey all his behests, wrote to the captains, telling them that the Queen was ill, wanted repose, and would deeply resent it if they should march to Tordesillas against her desire. On the 23rd of August 1520, however, Bernaldino de Castro, lieutenant corregidor of the town, accompanied by several other members of the town council, forced their way to the Queen, and informed her, in the presence of the Marquis, of "a great many things which had happened since " the death of her father, the Catholic King." (1) Strange though these revelations must have been to her, she did not lose her self-command, but ordered her treasurer Ochoa de Olanda to summon to her presence the Bishop of Malaga and the Licentiates Polanco and Zapata, all of them members of the privy council, because she wanted to confer with them on important matters of state. They were old servants of the crown of Spain, and she had known them in former times. Ochoa did not carry out her order; and on the following day, the 24th of August, Juan Padilla occupied Tordesillas. That the Marquis and the women who watched the Queen were not at once sent away is not surprising; for in the eyes of the uninitiated they were her servants. But although they were permitted to remain, their power was at an end. On the 29th of August the Marquis wrote to Cardinal Adrian, that he was treated almost as a prisoner, and forbidden to leave the fortress. (2)

(2) P. 210.

The first and most interesting question which the Commons had to decide was whether the Queen was suffering from such mental derangement as prevented her from carrying on the government, and it was only natural that her servants who knew her best should be examined on the subject. It is a great loss to history that their depositions are not extant. They were probably destroyed at the command of Charles when his partisans seized the papers of their adversaries. The substance of them, however, is preserved in various letters of Cardinal Adrian to the Emperor. Adrian had not only been the tutor of Charles, but at the very moment when he wrote these letters he was entrusted with the task of carrying out the Emperor's policy in Spain, and he did not obtain his information from the rebels, but from his own agents in Tordesillas. He cannot, therefore, for a moment be suspected of stating the facts in a more unfavourable light than need be, and thus accusing himself and his master of greater crimes than they had to answer for.

Nevertheless he thought it his duty to inform the Emperor on the 4th of September 1520, that almost all the servants of the Queen said that she had been oppressed and detained by force during fourteen years in the fortress of Tordesillas, as though she had been mad, when in fact she had always been in her right mind, and as prudent (prudente) as when she married.⁽¹⁾

And again, in the same letter, he stated that it was no longer a question of suffering some pecuniary losses, but that Charles was threatened with a total and perpetual downfall, "because your Highness has usurped the Royal name, and imprisoned the Queen as though she were insane, when she was not mad, according to what, as I have said, is stated."

A fortnight later, on the 14th of September, the Cardinal wrote to the Emperor that the report had been spread throughout the kingdom by her servants that the Queen was perfectly sane, and as able to govern as the Queen Isabel her mother had been, and that the Commons were of opinion that the people ought not to obey and execute the orders of the Emperor, but only those of the Queen. (1)

We could easily increase the number of similar quotations, but we think what we have stated will suffice to show that the servants of the Queen positively and consistently declared that she was not mad. It is true the Cardinal repeatedly stated his opinion that the servants were influenced by their hatred of the Marquis rather than by strict regard for veracity, and that people in general were more inclined to give credit to what was advantageous to them than to what was true. We are here, however, not concerned in what the Cardinal believed or pretended to believe, but only in what the witnesses deposed, and shall offer afterwards a few observations concerning the credit which Adrian himself deserved.

During the 103 days which intervened between the 24th of August and the 5th of December 1520, Queen Juana enjoyed almost unlimited liberty in her palace. The Marquis and the Marchioness of Denia were sent away from Tordesillas on the 19th of September, and the women who had watched her were, at her own request, dismissed a few weeks later. She was left with only one female servant to attend upon her, and yet in spite of the extremely difficult position in which she was placed, she did not commit a single act which even her most unscrupulous adversaries could construe into a proof of insanity. She was, as could not be otherwise, deeply agitated. At first she did not go to bed or take her meals, or, as the Cardinal Adrian wrote, the Commons wanted to kill her by first denying her food during three days, and then giving her all at once the meals due during that time.(2) This statement is simply preposterous. The Queen became by degrees more calm, and her life no longer appeared so gloomy to her as hitherto. In the month of November she began even to occupy herself with her long neglected toilet, dressing herself in her best robes, and seeing that her daughter was well adorned when she went out. The Cardinal sneeringly called that atarvio, finery.⁽¹⁾

As in private, so she conducted herself in public with perfect self-possession. On the 1st of September 1520, Juan Padilla, Juan Bravo, Juan Zapata, and Luis Quintanilla, commanders in chief of the several contingents from the cities and towns of Castile to the revolutionary army, knelt down before her in the presence of numerous witnesses, and asked her to permit the Junta to come from Avila to Tordesillas. She replied that she was satisfied with the Junta, that they might come, and that it would afford her great pleasure to confer with them on the measures which concerned the welfare of her kingdoms. "With all that is good," she concluded her answer, "I shall be pleased, and for all that is wrong I shall be sorry. I hope in God all will end well."⁽²⁾

The proceedings at the audience which she granted the Commons on the 24th of September 1520 are recorded in great detail. She had not the least difficulty in following the long discourses of the various deputies who addressed her, and her answers were clear, dignified, and always to the point. On certain disagreeable subjects which she could not entirely avoid, she spoke with great caution and delicacy. As for the Flemings who had plundered Spain, she did not utter a single word in their excuse, and the Marquis of Denia and the other "bad people" who had deceived her with lies fared hardly better. But whilst complaining of them, she avoided all irritating detail, and attempted to extenuate the fault of her father by hinting at the bad influence her stepmother might have had on him. With respect to her son, she did not mention a single circumstance which was unfavourable to him.⁽³⁾ There is no doubt that only a person of much higher intellectual power than the common average could have behaved as she did under similar circumstances. The proceedings during the audiences of the Queen are reported in public documents drawn up by the public notaries at the demand of the Commons. It might therefore be supposed that they would present her in a more favourable light than was compatible with truth. Such, however, was not the case. For not only did Cardinal Adrian never pretend that these attestations were false, but the reports of his own agents who were present at the audiences fully supported them; and it is certainly not an insignificant circumstance that even Adrian was forced to acknowledge she behaved with great prudence. It is true he added, that from certain statements she made it was clear that she was not perfectly in her right mind.⁽¹⁾ No wonder that a man who was unacquainted with the secret history of the palace at Tordesillas should regard as inventions of a diseased brain certain things which were stated by her to have happened during her captivity. We, however, who know at least a portion of the truth, must admit that her statements were sober and moderate.

But although the personal conduct of the Queen was marked by common sense and tact, her policy was by no means judicious. Her cruel experience had not yet taught her the stern lesson not to confide in any one who had interests opposed to her own in politics, even though he were her son.

The principal object of the Commons was to get rid of the Flemings and their partisans, who were hated for their almost unexampled insolence and greediness.⁽²⁾ By setting up the Queen, who was unconnected at that time

(2) Amongst other things, the Spaniards complained that the Flemings called them Indios, or, as we would say now, niggers, and it is certainly significant that even the Admiral of Castile, the most patriotic of the Spanish grandees, used that expression in letters to partisans of the Flemish party.

with Flanders, as their lawful sovereign, they would have attained their ends, and it was most probable that they would have been loyal subjects. Another grievance was the Inquisition, which since the nomination of Cardinal Adrian as Inquisitor General had become more insupportable than under Torquemada. His almost frantic cruelty towards the old woman Blanchina, and the shameful occurrences at Cuenca, had roused the indignation of the whole of Spain. Moreover, Lutheranism was rapidly spreading, the writings of Luther against the Roman church having been immediately translated into Spanish.⁽¹⁾ As the Queen had been a victim of her disbelief in Roman orthodoxy, it was not unreasonable to expect that she would favour the new doctrine, and thus create a fresh tie between herself and her subjects.

The Spanish nobles, on the other hand, had as many and even more cogent reasons for being opposed to a government of the Queen than the Commons had to favour it. They had been greatly enriched since the death of Queen Isabel at the expense of the public domain. Ferdinand and Charles had bought their connivance by grants. If, then, these last two governments had been declared unlawful usurpations, it was clear that the nobles would have lost their ill-gotten acquisitions. Moreover, they saw in the Commons men who were by nature inferior to them, but who endeavoured to raise themselves to an equality with them. This feeling is expressed in many documents of the time, but nowhere more strongly than in the circular letter of the Marquis of Villena, inviting the nobles to form a Junta in opposition to that of the Commons. "Our Lord," he said, "created in his justice and mercy the distinction between classes and ranks from the beginning of things," and it would therefore be impious not to trample down the rebels.⁽¹⁾ Preposterous as would be now the idea of dating the difference of rank from the creation, it was then general, earnestly believed in, and, as is the case with all honest prejudice, of great power. That the aristocracy were good Catholics can scarcely be doubted, after their solemn declarations of the 12th, 13th, and 14th of April 1521.⁽²⁾ Thus, opposed by personal interest and political as well as religious considerations to the state of things which seemed unavoidable if Queen Juana ascended the throne, they could not hope successfully to resist the popular movement unless they persevered in their assertion that she was mad. They were not numerous enough to fight single handed, and could not expect to persuade their tenantry to follow them, unless they could make them believe that the monks who were wandering through the kingdom in all directions, preaching a crusade for the deliverance of their rightful Queen, were impostors. Even as it was, we meet with more than one declaration that the peasants were only too prone to side with the Commons and the Queen against their lords and the Emperor, and resistance seemed sometimes so hopeless that the grandees thought they must inevitably submit, and accept Juana as their sovereign.

Such being the state of things, a statesman, acting from political considerations, would not have wavered for a moment as to which party he ought to espouse. In politics the right way is often attended with great difficulties. Such, however, was not the case with Queen Juana. Had she accepted the services of the Commons, and signed a single decree, declaring that she had decided to take the government of Spain into her own hands, all resistance would have been at an end. That is not a mere opinion of our own. Cardinal Adrian wrote over and over again that if the Queen signed he would have no choice, but be forced immediately to leave the country; ⁽³⁾ and all the accounts concerning the grandees and the nobles were unanimous in this respect, that they would have hastened to make their submission to the Queen, and to reconcile themselves with the Commons, without attempting any further resistance. Thus, she had her destiny in her own hands.

But the Queen was no politician, nor was she in a position to know the real state of affairs and the true intentions of the different parties. When she was no longer a prisoner, she found herself surrounded by men of one faction only, and of that faction, too, which, however justifiable their rising was, had usurped powers which by law did not belong to them. Could she believe what they stated to her? The Commons, fully aware of this disadvantage, invited Cardinal Adrian and the Privy Council to come from Valladolid to Tordesillas, to discuss with them in the presence of the Queen the measures of state which it was thought necessary to take. Had their invitation been accepted she would have been in a position to form a judgment of the merits of the plans pursued by the one and the other party; but neither the Cardinal nor the Councillors went to Tordesillas.

Left in the dark as to her true interests, the aristocratic and absolute propensities of her youth prevailed. She knew that her father had been an eminently successful prince, and she thought that the ministers of such a king could give her only good advice, not suspecting that they might be traitors to her. She had always seen that the grandees shared in the government of the country, and the thought never entered her mind that they might be in league with her enemy. But, above all, she had forgiven Charles the cruel injustice which she had suffered from him, and seemed to be more solicitous for his interests than mindful of her own advantages. From a despatch of Lope Hurtado de Mendoza, whom the Emperor had sent to Spain with special orders to tell him the truth, we learn, among other things, that when the Commons told the Queen that Charles had assumed the title of king to her prejudice, she only found excuses for him, pretending that it was a custom in Spain that the eldest son of the Queen should have that title, although she must have known that it was not true. When they accused him of having committed acts of great injustice, and caused great misery, she exclaimed, "Do not disunite me from my son. All that is mine belongs to him, and he will take good care of it."⁽¹⁾ Politically speaking, we cannot condemn this error too strongly; but, on the other hand, it is impossible not to sympathize with a mother who could not find it in her heart to believe that her son would repay with acts of consummate villany the love she bore him.

Charles, Cardinal Adrian, and the partisans of the Imperial faction availed themselves of the confidence the Queen had in them, and of her love for her son. Before the army of the Commons had occupied Tordesillas, the Cardinal sent the President of the Council of Castile to warn her not to show any favour to the insurgents, and especially not to sign any proclamation. When Tordesillas was held by the popular forces, his communications with the Queen were not interrupted, but continued to be carried on in secret. Whilst she was believing him to be a perfectly honest man, he was intentionally leading her by his advice to destruction. We have already seen that Adrian knew full well that if she had signed the proclamation which the Commons implored her to ratify by her hand she would have been Queen in reality, and for ever beyond the danger of again being imprisoned as insane. And yet, instead of being ashamed, he glorified himself because it was he who through his agents, Fray Juan de Avila, Fray Francisco de Leon, and others, prevented her from doing the only thing which could have saved her.⁽²⁾ Charles spoke only of his devotion to his mother, enlarging on his "unspeakable grief" at the insult and disrespect shown to the Queen "my lady."⁽¹⁾ The nobles of Spain imitated his example, and the Constable of Castile protested that he would sacrifice his property and life in the "holy and just" enterprise to "set at liberty" the Queen, "our Sovereign Lady," and to rescue her from the tyranny of the "barbarians."⁽²⁾ Not a word, not a hint, is to be found in these letters indicating that she was insane, and it is even doubtful whether she ever knew that it had been reported she was mad. We have no positive proofs, but it is in the highest degree probable, that the Cardinal communicated the contents of these and similar declarations of loyalty to the Queen, in order to confirm her in her erroneous conceptions. When the army of the nobles appeared before Tordesillas, they still pretended that they had come to serve her as faithful subjects, and even after the capture of that place it was thought prudent to keep up false appearances for a time. The Count of Haro, who had led the attack, when informing his father, the Constable, of the latest occurrences, wrote: "I kissed the hands " of the Queen yesterday, and told her that you had been " informed of the want of respect with which she and the " Infanta had been treated, and remembering the loyalty

 " with which our forefathers had always served the crown,
 " you had sent me and these noblemen to restore her
 " Highness to liberty. She replied that she was much " obliged to you for your solicitude for her, adding that " she was glad that I had arrived, and that she had an " opportunity of making my acquaintance."⁽³⁾

Queen Juana permitted herself to be utterly deceived. If, however, we must admit that persons of perfectly sound judgment and even of considerable perspicacity, are liable occasionally to commit such a gross error as to believe their enemies to be their friends, we may the more excuse the Queen, who had just been released from utter seclusion. As for carrying out her suicidal policy there can be no doubt that she did it with consummate skill. Had she signed a proclamation, she would have ruined the aristocratical party; had she deprived the Commons of all hope they could have chosen another sovereign. Her cousin, the so-called Beltraneja, was still living. She had a better right to the crown than even Juana, and was perfectly sure of the full support of France. There was Pedro Giron, captain general of the armies of the Commons, advancing in an underhand way his claims to the throne, as representative of the elder branch of King Alonzo, who had been driven by violence and treachery out of the country.⁽¹⁾ Either of them would have excluded all the descendants of Queen Isabel, Juana as well as Charles, from the succession in Castile. To procure for the grandees the time necessary to assemble an army, and yet not to drive the Commons to despair, was indeed no easy undertaking. Juana, however, accomplished it, putting them off from day to day and from week to week, under a variety of pretexts. One day she excused herself with failing health, another day she wanted to confer with the ministers of the crown, whom she said she had ordered into her presence; then she pointed out that the proclamation would be invalidated if it were not signed on the back by the Secretaries of State, and so on. On one occasion, when a false alarm was spread that the Constable, with an army, was at the gates of the town, and the members of the Junta were pressing her unusually hard to sign the proclamation, she answered that it was night, and that during night time it was unbecoming to transact business of state, giving them at the same time the assurance that the Constable would do harm to no one. Whenever all her reasons were exhausted she affected that her strength was worn out, and retired to her bed room.⁽²⁾ The great misery to which Juana had been subjected induces us to judge her leniently, but if we wish to form an impartial opinion of her character we cannot entirely absolve her from a certain amount of cunning, and suspect that if she had not been the victim she would most probably have victimized others.

As she had so often excused herself on the plea of ill health, it is natural enough that the Commons thought of procuring for her medical assistance, and it is not to be wondered at that ignorant priests came to Tordesillas, professing to be able to heal her by incantation.⁽¹⁾ When, however, Cardinal Adrian wrote that the Junta had recourse to conjurors,⁽²⁾ he stated a thing which he knew was not true. The Junta had ordered public prayers in the churches, a custom prevailing then, as now, in Spain and other countries during a real or supposed illness of the sovereign.⁽³⁾

At last, when the army of the nobles was really on its march to Tordesillas, the Commons made a desperate effort. They declared to the Queen that they would not give her or the Infanta anything to eat until she had signed. When they, however, saw that they could not frighten her, they went down before her on their knees, and holding up before her the proclamation, the ink and pen, implored her to sign. She refused, and finally and irrevocably rejected her only true friends.⁽⁴⁾ Two days later the grandees and cavaliers took Tordesillas by storm, plundered and burnt it. The Queen had in vain ordered the gates of the town to be opened, but she received with joy her supposed liberators at the entrance of her palace, was led up to her apartment by Don Juan Manrique and Don Geronimo Padilla, who had been the first to arrive, and had the long desired satisfaction of seeing herself surrounded by the grandees, and of conversing with them.⁽⁵⁾ The Marquis of Denia, however, was among them. A few days later he took possession of his office, and Juana was again his prisoner. That was the "holy enterprise," that was her "liberation from the tyranny of the barbarians," with which Charles, Cardinal Adrian, and the nobles of Spain had deceived her; a dark room, wherein to weep over her errors, and the torture, as an instrument of coercion, to keep her quiet and to make her hear mass.

We must add a few words on the principal actors in this tragedy, viz., the three governors or viceroys in Spain, Cardinal Adrian, Don Fadrique Enriquez, Admiral, and Don Iñigo Fernandez de Velasco, Constable of Castile.

Adrian has enjoyed in his native country, and in the northern parts of Europe in general, the reputation of having been an honest man; the Italians considered him as one of the greatest hypocrites of his age. The Spaniards spoke of him in their letters to the Emperor, before he was Pope, as a well-intentioned man, who, however, was so credulous that nothing was easier than to impose upon him. If, however, we examine the circumstances under which he was said to have been deceived, we find that he allowed himself easily to be duped whenever the acknowledgment of the truth would have exposed him to the alternative either to confess that he was doing wrong, or to act up to his duty, and to incur thereby the danger of some sacrifice or the displeasure of his master. As often, however, as the recognition of the truth was profitable to his personal interests, it was rather difficult to impose upon him. We must confess we doubt the honesty of such a man, and suspect that it was rather his aptness for accommodating himself to the worst deeds of his master which raised him by degrees from the depth of poverty to the highest dignity in Christendom. With regard to Queen Juana he behaved as might be expected from such a person. At first he informed Charles with tolerable frankness of what was said about the Queen's soundness of mind. When, however, the Marquis and Marchioness of Denia had been driven from Tordesillas, they

on the 21st of September, and had a long after-dinner conversation. It was only too convenient for the Cardinal to believe every word which the Marquis told him, and having quieted his easy conscience he did not thenceforth once mention the reported sanity of the Queen without most positively stating his disbelief of it. His real convictions may have been formed from the course of events, only that there are certain circumstances which make us suspect that he was guilty of something more reprehensible than mere credulity. Adrian came to Tordesillas in the train of the conquering army, and stayed there a considerable length of time. Knowing that the madness of the Queen was at least disputed, it certainly was his first and most imperative duty, as lieutenant of the Emperor, to assure himself by his own eyes and ears of the truth, and yet he never saw her for a moment. Was he afraid to learn an unpalatable truth?⁽¹⁾ The most practised dissemblers, however, have their unguarded moments. Thus Cardinal Adrian, in order to stimulate the energy of Charles, asked him on one occasion whether he would like to wait for the death of the Queen, his mother, before being permitted to govern in Spain.⁽²⁾ If Adrian really believed Juana to be mad, how could he suppose that, once installed on her throne, she would be able to remain at the head of the government until the end of her days? From his own words, therefore, it is clear that he knew that the motive which guided the Emperor was not the desire to prevent an insane person from doing harm to herself and to others, but the criminal purpose of a son to rob his mother of her crown; and in this he countenanced him.

* The Constable of Castile was a thorough partisan of the Marquis of Denia. This suffices to explain his conduct.

(1) We may here remind the reader, that a few years later, when Adrian was Pope, the Imperial ambassador in Rome wrote that he permitted the most scandalous corruption to be practised at his court, but avoided hearing the truth. See Spanish Calendar, Vol. II., p. cxlii. and p. 139.

The Admiral, although he had many and great failings, was on the whole a man of much more elevated character. He at first refused the offered place of governor, and accepted it only on condition that the Commons should be treated with leniency after the victory. When they were conquered, he wrote to the Emperor, on the 15th of April 1521, begging him to be a "good prince," and promising to accept his clemency towards the vanquished as an indemnification for his great private losses. With regard to the Queen, he never stooped to utter direct lies. Having had long and frequent conversations with her he had the courage, when the other grandees spoke of her insanity, indignantly to declare that she was of sound mind,⁽¹⁾ without qualifying his declaration by any depreciating addition. He endeavoured to create for her, if not an influential, at least an honourable position, and would even have assigned to her some participation in the despatch of public business. His counsel was overruled, as the Comendador Mayor, Juan de Vega, in his letter to the Constable of the 8th of December, wrote, "because it would be the greatest misfortune for Spain to have two kings."⁽²⁾ The Comendador may have been right, but, if so, what importance can we attach to the declaration in his letter to the Emperor, in which he stated that Juana was unfit for the despatch of public affairs in consequence of mental disease? It was the language of a courtier who did not dare to offend his sovereign master by giving utterance to what he knew was the truth.

The treatment of Queen Juana during her second captivity was more cruel than during her first. The Marquis and Marchioness of Denia were irritated by the slights they had received in the time of the Commons, and desired to revenge themselves. The Queen, when she saw the cruel deception to which she had fallen a victim, grew excited, and in her excitement sometimes unmanageable.

The Infanta was taken away from her mother, and married to the King of Portugal. It was expected that the Queen would not survive this separation,⁽¹⁾ but she did, dragging on a lonely and monotonous life with her keepers. Under such circumstances death is the only friend, but death came slowly. She lived five and thirty years in her second imprisonment. No wonder that by degrees her reason gave way. During the latter years of her life she believed that she was possessed by evil spirits which prevented her from being good and loving her children, or the rites of the Roman Church. She imagined that she saw a great cat lacerating the souls of her father and of her husband. But these wild fancies were not unfrequently interrupted by periods of calm and sound judgment. Physically she sank down to a deplorable state of almost brutish existence. For weeks and months sometimes she did not leave her bed, which received all the evacuations of her body, and was never cleaned. Two things she disliked until the close of her life. It was painful to her to receive a visit from any one of her family, and she wished not to be disturbed by religious ceremonies. In April 1555 it was known that she was near her end. Charles, worn out by mental and bodily sufferings, and discouraged by the ill success of the great plans for which "he had sacrificed his conscience," was meditating his abdication in Flanders, whilst his daughter Juana was at the head of the government in Spain. She might have let her grandmother die in peace, but the honour of the Imperial family required that Queen Juana should not depart without receiving the holy sacrament. Stormy scenes took place in the interior of the old palace, and the screams of the Queen were heard in the neighbouring houses. At last, Fray Domingo de Soto was summoned to Tordesillas, where he arrived in the morning of the 11th of April, and had a long conversation with the Queen without witnesses. "Thanks to our Lord," he wrote on the same day to Juan Vasquez, who was chief Secretary of State in Spain, "when we were alone, she spoke words which consoled me. Nevertheless, her Highness is not in a disposition to receive the sacrament of the eucharist, but the sacrament of the extreme unction, I think, may be given to her. Even for this, however, we must wait until she has less discernment, for that sacrament does not require much (discernment), and we are afraid that, as long as her Highness has so much judgment as she has now, she will, from considerations of honesty, refuse to submit to it. I think she will not survive this night."⁽¹⁾ In fact the Queen was sinking rapidly. At an advanced hour of the night she received the sacrament, thus sparing her children the shame of having had what they called an infidel mother, and on Good Friday, 12th of April, between five and six o'clock in the morning, she expired, "thanking our Lord that her life was at an end, and recommending her soul to Him."⁽²⁾

Such is the rough sketch of the life of one who should have been a great Queen, and was the ancestress of the Austro-Spanish dynasty. It goes far to reconcile the humblest with the lowliness and hardships of his position; but we do not know which of the two to pity the more, Queen Juana or Charles. The only alternative left to him was to choose between uprooting all human feeling from his breast, and of renouncing everything that makes life worth having, or of accusing himself, in the midst of all his Imperial grandeur, of being a mean and miserable delinquent. That was the price he had to pay for his plan of universal monarchy. It would be high at any time, but naturally was highest when right, virtue, and honour were cheapest.

Such a character as that of Charles seems to be monstrous. The giant lizards of antediluvian periods appear to us also as monsters which could not have lived, but if they were viewed amidst the nature which then surrounded them they would lose much of their monstrosity. In a similar way, Charles, considered in connexion with the world in which he lived, still remains a bad man, but not abnormally hideous. He was not the worst prince of his time. When we become acquainted not only with the smooth and by far too much polished surface of bygone ages, but also with the hidden springs and motive power, the uncontrolled passions, the unscrupulous violence, the sordid avarice, and unblushing lies which abounded in their depths, we all shall confess that we have made progress in morality as well as in learning.

We must return to the marriage projects of King Henry VII. That Queen Juana, in the year 1507, was incapacitated by insanity for matrimonial life we think will hardly any longer be pretended. But did Henry know that the rumours which were spread were false? The decision of this question we must leave for the future historian. Henry had seen the Queen a few months before the death of her husband, but at a time when reports of her mental disease had already been insidiously spread. Thus, he was in a position to judge for himself whether these earlier rumours were true. He caused the Princess of Wales to write a letter to her sister, the purport of which was a sufficiently clear declaration of his wish to marry her. Although we may think Henry capable of any sort of baseness, we cannot suppose him to have been foolish enough to send a love letter to a lady whom he believed to be mad. On the other hand, however, if Juana was not insane when she was on her way to Spain, she may have become so while staying there; and, in fact, the most accredited report was that the sudden death of King Philip had deprived her of reason. Moreover, the truth was so strictly concealed that it must have been difficult even for Henry to learn it, and if he had been really aware that the insanity of Juana was an invention, it is hardly conceivable that De Puebla could make in his name such statements as he did, concerning his not caring whether his intended bride were mad or not. That Henry should have avoided positively contradicting King Ferdinand is intelligible enough, as he did not wish to offend him, but why he should have made admissions which went even further than the assertions of the Catholic King, it would be difficult to explain, except on the supposition that he did not consider insanity to be an obstacle to marriage. Perhaps we should not be far from the truth if we were to suppose that he had formed no decided opinion on the merit of the subject, and did not care for it, but that he was quite prepared to marry Queen Juana, mad or not mad, for the sake of her dower.

1. Very high and mighty Queen, our sovereign lady,
A few days ago I wrote to your Highness by one of my servants. What has since happened I think your Majesty knows already by the letters of the señora Princess, as well as by those which doña Elvira Manuel and Doctor de Puebla have written, who, as I am informed, has sent a messenger. Nevertheless, although the letters probably have arrived, and your Highness may have heard what is going on here as well by the persons I have mentioned as by other (letters) which may have been written,
I shall not omit to state what passes here, strictly adhering to the truth, in order that your Highness may hear and learn all that is going on, and provide what your service requires.

When the feasts were over, and the Spaniards as well as the English had returned to their houses, the King pleased to occupy himself with looking after his interests. He asked Johan de Cuero to deliver to him the jewels and plate which, the doctor had said, he had been ordered to give as part of the last instalment. He answered that he had not to deliver them, but to weigh and to value them, to ask a receipt for them, and yet to guard them, as he hitherto had done. It seems that some altercations took place on this subject. Meanwhile, as the will of the King was not done, and he thought he had received an affront, having asked [the jewels and plate] before the time they were due, he was somewhat ashamed; and after having continued these negotiations during a fortnight, he came to the room of the señora Princess, where he said to her, in the presence of doña Elvira Manuel and me, the following words: "Señora, my " daughter, I have no doubt that you know that I asked

He was evidently much ashamed that he had asked that the said things be delivered to him, and that his demand was refused. He is afraid to be thought a miser. In such a disposition of mind he left the Princess that day.

Next day, having called me into his presence, he told me that he was very uneasy because it was necessary to send the Prince to Wales, and his council and the council of the Prince entertained different opinions. that he did not know what to do. He asked my advice. What I answered was, that I thought it much better that the Princess should not go, for that would be preferable in many respects, and especially because the Prince and the Princess would more easily bear being separated and [their abstinence from] intercourse if she remained with him and the Queen, who could alleviate her sorrow for being separated from the Prince, a thing which it would be much more difficult to bear if she were to live in his house in Wales, adding many other reasons which the King himself had given me only a few days before for retaining the Princess during the next two years near his person. The following day he (the King) himself spoke with the Princess, and told her the same thing he had said to me, viz., that it was necessary that the Prince should go to Wales, and what difference of opinion existed amongst his councillors, adding that he would not determine either in the one way or the other, but do only what she liked, and declaring to her that he would do only what she wished. Her answer was, that neither in this nor in any other respect had she any other will than his, and that she would be content with what he decided. He replied that he asked her not to leave the decision to him, because, although wishing to be agreeable to her, he might nevertheless determine on what would give her annoyance. As doña Elvira, it seems, had already oftentimes spoken with the doctor, who had told her that he had settled how much the señora Princess was to have for the sustenance of her household, as well as for every one of her male and female servants, and that the King had made great offers to the said doña Elvira, she asked him(2) to state what had been decided. When he heard this he was much surprised, and said that such a demand was an entirely new thing to him, for until then nothing had been mentioned to him about it, and it was the custom in this country for husbands to give to their wives all they want, which the Prince his son would do, according to his rank, and as his honour required. He would never consent, he said, that she and her servants were otherwise treated than very liberally. Adding some other reasons, he dismissed this subject. received the very greatest pleasure from all your Highnesses have done, and above all, since he knows what a person the Señora is, he considers himself a fortunate man. As he always hoped that these (the jewels, &c.) were to be delivered to him, he never provided so much as a pin for the Princess; but he is much ashamed that he has asked and met with a refusal, and that he has neglected to do that which he has left undone, because he had that hope. It is believed that the best will exists here to acquire all that can be got, and as he has already been told that, if the Princess uses all the things which she takes with her, your Highnesses will find it difficult to order afterwards that they be taken from her, and delivered to him as part payment of what is due to him, he has decided that she should go to Wales, because then she would be obliged to use all she takes with her. On my part, as I have heard something of this, it has not been neglected to advise that as much as it can be avoided these things should not be used. For it is certain that there has been no other reason of any weight for her journey, which is very contrary to the wishes of the King in other respects. I, on my part, and doña Elvira on hers, have told the King that we believe that your Highnesses, knowing the tender age of the Prince, would rather be pleased than dissatisfied if they for some time did not live together. to this observation, that he was astonished to hear it, for one of the reasons which had induced him to do it had been because one of the principal personages whom your Highnesses had sent with the Princess to serve her had spoken to him, and asked him, in the name of your Highnesses, as a man who knows your intentions, that on no condition in the world should he separate them, but send her with her husband, and that if that were not done your Highnesses would be dissatisfied, and she, he knows, would be in despair. Being much pressed he had to confess that Alexander had told him this, with the approval and according to the advice of the Doctor.

His intention, for no other can be found, is to procure her an occasion to use the said things, in consequence of her journey, and thus by what he ordered to attain his ends. Although I ought not to have the boldness to state in this or in any other case my humble opinion to your Highnesses, nevertheless, hoping that the good will with which I state it will be acceptable to you, I shall say that, if it is determined that that which is here is to be given on account of the 200,000 scudos, it would be good to order that it be delivered immediately, because I think it would serve two purposes, viz., firstly, that it would not be refused, and, secondly, that it would now be more highly valued than afterwards, and I do not doubt it would produce so good an effect that the King would give it back to her; but if it were delayed, and not delivered to him until the last instalment, in such a case I believe he would delay to assign anything to her, because she has every thing she wants as well for her own service as for that of the Prince, to whom he also has given nothing at all wherewith to furnish his house, nor any table service, nor does he intend to give, but, on the contrary, he has ordered that they live together and take their meals together, so that he must use the things of the Princess. With respect to this subject I know no other motive that could be alleged.

I think your Highness knows already that nothing has been assigned for her household, and much less have the salaries and pensions for her servants and officers been provided, but they all will manage to live as well as the revenues of the Prince permit. I do not think that your Highness has believed that this was to be the case, for if it were you would have to provide her annually with what she wants. If I am right, your Highnesses must immediately take steps that what is due to her be also settled on her, for if that is not done at the beginning it will be difficult afterwards. The señora Princess has several times ordered me to enter into negotiations about such similar subjects, but I have not obeyed her orders in this, because I have no power from your Highness.

I intend soon to write again to your Highness, and shall, therefore, not mention several things which I am told have been ordered, until I am quite sure of the truth. It seems to me that, as I have already written to your Highness the other day, you should without delay provide and order that all we who are here, men as well as women, act in unison, and that none be so bold as to entertain separate negotiations, which neither he nor any other has a right to do. Now every one reads, and asks, and speaks what he likes, and thus causes more disadvantages than advantages. When the señora Princess left, her servants were appointed for their severál places, and every one received his orders where he was to serve. They have now decided that the maestre sala should not serve in that quality, and have given him the office of usher. The same with respect to Juan Cuero. That was done after their departure from here. I did not go to Wales, because I here await letters from your Highnesses, and also, in some other respects, it is necessary that I remain here, for I am not yet. *

2. To his Highness, from the Comendador de la Membrilla, 4th of March 1509.

Catholic and most powerful Lord,

Much have I laboured to depart spotless from England, and to save your Majesty from vexation, hoping from day to day that the marriage of the Princess of Wales would take place, and that the disorders in the house of the Princess would be remedied without annoyance to your Highness. I confess that it has been an error, because if I had written in time it might have been possible to remedy it, and not have gone too far forward; but it is better late, as they say [than never]. Your Highness should know that there is much need of a person who can rule this household, and that it should be such a person whom her Highness holds in honour, and those of this house hold in respect, for now the household is governed by a young friar, whom the Princess has for confessor, and who, being in my view and in that of every one unworthy of having such a charge, causes the Princess to commit many errors. As your Highness knows how full of goodness she is, and so conscientious, this her confessor makes a sin of all acts, of whatever kind they may be, if they displease him. and thus causes her to commit many faults.

This servant of the Princess goes despatched behind my back ⁽¹⁾ to your Highness, to give time to those who wish to make complaints of me. I will not say now all the things which have need of correction, submitting to the opinion of those your Highness may order to interrogate him [the servant] as to the condition in which the house of the Princess is, and as to the things which for two months past have happened, and from his report you will know more of it than I should be able to write. If, after having been informed of their complaints of me, your Highness should desire to know the truth, although it may be against me, I will tell it to your Highness without lying on any point. Because, however, the beginning, and middle, and the end of these disorders is this said friar, I say that he is young, and light, and haughty, and scandalous in an extreme manner; and the King of England has said to the Princess very strong words about him. Because I have said something to the Princess which did not appear to me right of this friar, and the friar knew it, he has been so far able as to put me so much out of favour with the Princess that if I had committed some treason she could not have treated me worse; and I have some letters preserved to show to your Highness, which the Princess has written to me. In order that your Highness may know of what kind this friar is, I will tell you what he said to me, and they were these words exactly, without making them worse or better. He said to me: I know they have told many things of me to you. I said to him: Certainly, father, they have said nothing of you to me. He said: I know it, for he who told you told me. I said to him: Well, any one can rise as a false witness, but I swear to you by the Corpus Cristi that they have told me nothing which I remember. He said: Be it so, but in this house there are evil tongues, and they have slandered me, and not with the lowest in the house, but with the highest, and this is no disgrace to me, and if it were not for contradicting them I should already be gone. daily worse, and my life more and more insupportable, I can no longer bear this in any manner. Those [servants] whom up to this time I have had are no longer of any use to me, because my ill fortune wills it that those whom your Highness sends hither, however sufficient they might be, have always so much crippled your service, that the sending of a new ambassador is my only support and comfort. Your Highness knows already how much the King of England, who does not like to see or to hear this one, would be pleased at it. Not that he is not loyal, but I think he does not know how to treat matters. For as Doctor de Puebla conducted the affairs with too great gentleness in every thing that regarded the interests of this King, so this other behaves with too great rigour towards him and his servants, especially as I, being dependent on them, cannot make use of anything that is not done with moderation. Therefore, I beseech your Highness not to forget what I have written to you so many times, but immediately to send redress, and to determine as to the way in which your Highness desires me to live. It is impossible for me any longer to endure what I have gone through and still am suffering from the unkindness of the King and the manner in which he treats me, especially since he has disposed of his daughter in marriage to the Prince of Castile⁽¹⁾, and therefore imagines he has no longer any need of your Highness, as this has been done without your consent. He tries to make me feel this by his want of love, although in secret and without confessing it he knows that as long as he does not possess the goodwill of your Highness, he is wanting in the greatest and best part. All this causes me much pain, as being against the interest of your Highness, and if I had not any other cause, this alone would not permit me to let it pass without making you acquainted with it. God knows how much I am grieved that I have to write you always of so many troubles and difficulties. But remembering that I am your daughter, I cannot prevail upon myself to conceal them from you, and not to beg you to remedy them as your station and service require. To tell the truth, my necessities have risen so high that I do not know how to maintain myself. For I have already sold my household goods, as it was impossible to avoid it, and I do not know whence I can have anything else. Some days ago, speaking with the King about my wants, he said to me, that he was not bound to give my servants food, or even to my own self, but that the love he bore me would not allow him to do otherwise. From this your Highness will see to what a state I am reduced, when I am warned that even my food is given me almost as alms. What I feel most, is to see all my servants in such a ruined state as they are. Although not all have served me as they ought, it gives me pain and weighs on my conscience that I cannot pay them, and send those away who cause me great annoyance, especially Juan de Cuero, whose audaciousness it is very difficult for me to bear. He is the cause that others do not do what they ought to do, and I must be silent, owing to my necessities, of which I have informed your Highness. What afflicts me most is that I cannot in any way remedy the hardships of my confessor, whom I consider to be the best that ever woman of my position had, with respect to his life, as well as to his holy doctrine and proficiency in letters, as I have oftentimes written to your Highness. It grieves me that I cannot maintain him in the way his office and my rank demand, because of my poverty, during which he has always served me with such labour and fatigue as no one else would have undergone. He is very faithful in his office as well as in giving good advice and a good example, and it seems to me it would be ingratitude if I neglected to inform your Highness how badly the ambassador has behaved towards him. The service of your Highness suffers thereby, and I have been much annoyed. The reason of it is that the ambassador has strongly attached himself to the merchant Francisco de Grimaldo, whom he has brought over with him, and to a servant of mine, Francisca de Cáceres, who, by his favour, were about to marry, contrary to my wishes. And situated as I am, I had to conceal my feelings for the sake of the honour and honesty of my house. I found myself in so great a difficulty, that I could not help giving a bond for a certain sum of money, and I believe that if your Highness knew the reason which moved me to do so, you would not reproach me, but rather recognise me as your daughter. On account of the annoyance this woman has caused me I sent her away, but the ambassador of your Highness received her into his house and at his table, which did not seem well to me considering his official position as representative of the person of your Highness. He has caused me many annoyances every day with this merchant, giving me to understand that he wanted to go away and to carry off my marriage portion, unless I began to pay something of what I had promised him. But if my bond is attentively considered, it appears that I owe him nothing. Because the confessor gave me advice in all this, the ambassador has quarrelled with him, and when he saw how little reason he had to do so, he tried to excuse himself by saying that the confessor meddled in the affairs of the embassy. I swear by the life of your Highness, which is the greatest oath I can make, that that is not the case. I sent him to ask the [marriage] does not like that I should see it, I was forced to send and to ask it from him. On account of this he grew angry, and permitted himself to be led so far as to say things which are

I therefore entreat your Highness to write to him, and to give him to understand that you are not well served, and I do not consent that my confessor be treated in such a manner. Your Highness would render me a signal service if you would write to him⁽¹⁾ another letter, telling him that you are satisfied with the manner in which he serves me, and commanding him to continue and not to forsake me. For, in consequence of what the ambassador has said to him, he asks me leave every day, and I think, on no condition will he remain here if your Highness does not force him to do so. As I am in great want of such a person as he is, I implore your Highness to prevent him [from going away]; and to write also to the King that your Highness has commanded this father to stay with me, and to beg him that for the love of your Highness he should order that he be very well treated and humoured; and to tell the prelates that your Highness is pleased with his staying here. For the greatest comfort in my troubles is the consolation and the support he gives me. Your Highness may believe that I feel myself reduced to such a state, that I send almost in despair this my servant to your Highness to implore you not to forget that I am your daughter, and how much I have suffered for your service and how much [my sufferings] continually increase. From Richmond, 9th of March.

I beseech your Highness soon to send back this messenger, and to give him money for his return. In order to provide him for what was necessary for his journey there, I was obliged to sell from my wardrobe. To his Highness from the Knight Commander of Membrilla, the 20th of March '509.

Since I wrote to your Highness by Martin Sanchez de Zamudio, ambassadors from the King of the Romans and Madame Margaret have come here. They arrived on the sixth day of March, and were eight days without seeing the King, because he was ill of the sickness of last year, and does not allow himself to be seen. The Prince received the ambassadors. Concerning this embassy, I have understood that they have moved a marriage for the Prince of Wales with the daughter of the Duke Albert of Bavaria, a daughter of the sister of the King of the Romans, assuring him (the King) that if he concludes this marriage he shall still wed with Madame Margaret, and they will give all the securities that he may desire that the match between the Prince of Castile and his daughter shall be confirmed. I have not learned this from such a source that I can hold it for certain, but as all the affairs of this court directly that they are negotiated become public, it may be that he who told it me may have heard it in a good quarter. Also I am informed that the nobles of the kingdom press the King much that he may marry his son, above all since they have seen him ill, and they do not speak for one more than for the other, but tell him that he should decide on that which he wishes, or is more profitable for him, and that he should marry the Prince, because he is already very manly, and the kingdom is in danger with only one heir. They tell me he has taken a period of two months to decide, and they are all much astonished at your Highness's great delay in answering, and at the slowness of him whom your Highness is to send.⁽¹⁾ For John Stile has written to the King that a prelate would come quickly here, and even certified that it would be Don Pedro de Ayala, Bishop of Canaria. In order that your Highness may be informed of everything, I decided to send this messenger. For it appears to me that one way or the other it would be well that your Highness should determine that which you wish in this affair. They do not cease to preach to the people, wherever they can, that because your Highness does not fulfil your obligations towards the King of England this marriage is not concluded; and although on our side we might have better preachers, they would not make them believe anything except that which they have already imagined.

Alt. tanto en responder y como tarda tanto el que V. Al. ha de ynbiar porque Juan Astil ha escrito al Rey que presto verna aqui un perlado y ahun certificadamente que sera don pedro de Ayala obispo de Canaria y porque V. Al. sea avisado de todas las cosas acorde de embiar este mensagero porque me parece que para lo uno o para lo otro seria bien que V. Alteza determinasse lo que quiere en este negocio porque estos no dexan de pedricar al pueblo y por todas las partes que pueden que por no complir V. A. con el Rey de Ynglaterra se dexa de concluir este casamiento y ahunque de nuestra parte hoviesse mejores predicadores no les farian creer otra cosa sino lo que ya tienen concebido.

I have not seen the King of England since he betrothed his daughter, because he appears to be very angry with me, and he does not say that the cause is because I did not choose to be present at the espousals of his daughter, but because I had made sinister reports to your Highness, in consequence of which your Highness has not conceded that which he asks, according as I wrote to your Majesty, and the Lord Privy Seal had sent to tell me; and on that account he did not wish to see me unless I had business on which to talk. And neither have I seen the Princess from that time, for to those who advise her Highness it does not appear good that her Highness should see me, as the King of England is not very friendly to me, and her Highness has such faith in them, that she believes what they tell her is good. And not only does her Highness feign to be angry with me, but shows herself to be so in reality. And this they have advised because they fear that, if I go to see the Princess, I shall not be able to refrain from telling her something which does not appear to me good in those who advise her this, and with this fear not only have they prevailed with the Princess that she is angry with me, and that she shows it, but they have managed on all sides, where they have been able to do so, in such a manner as to remove me so that I may not communicate with her Highness. Many things happen in her house which have need of amendment, but her Highness is so submissive to a friar whom she has as confessor, that he makes her do a great many things which it would be better not to do. Lately he made her do a thing which much grieved the King. It was this, that whilst staying in a lonely house which is in a park, the King of England wished to go to Richmond, and sent to say to the Princess that next day her Highness and Madame Mary his daughter should be at Richmond, where he would go before or after them. The Princess obeyed the order, but next day when she was about to start, and Madame Mary was waiting for her with the company deputed to go with them, the friar came and said to the Princess, "You shall not go to-day." It is true that the princess had vomited that night. The princess said, "I am well; I do not wish to stay here alone." He said, "I tell you that upon pain of mortal sin you do not go to-day." The Princess contended that she was well, and that she did not wish to stay there alone. The friar, however, persevered so much that the Princess, not to displease him, determined to remain. When Madame Mary had been waiting for more than two hours she sent to tell Madame Mary to go, but that she did not feel well. The English who witnessed this, and had seen the Princess at mass and at table, rode off with Madame Mary and went away, whilst the Princess remained alone with her women and only the Maestre Sala and her chamberlain, who had been absent and came by chance. The distance was at the utmost less than one league. There is no need to speak of the provisions the Princess had that night, for as the contingency was not expected it was not provided for, nor did they give themselves much trouble to provide for it. Next day the King of England did not again give an order to send for the Princess, as though she had been staying in such company as suited her, and they tell me that the King was very much vexed at her remaining there. The following day the Princess went [to Richmond] accompanied by no other living creature than three women on horseback, the Maestre Sala, the chamberlain, and the friar, a numerous [company]! These and other things of a thousand times worse kind the friar makes her do. It is more than 20 days since the King last saw the Princess, nor has he, since her staying away, sent to know how she is, although she had been ill. May God forgive me, but now that I know so well the affairs of the Princess's household, I acquit the King of England of a great and very great portion of the blame which I hitherto gave to him, and I do not wonder at what he has done, but at that which he does not do, especially as he is of such a temperament as to wish that in house and kingdom that be done without contradiction which he desires and orders. That the King allows these things of the friar, which appear so bad to him and which are so much brought before his eyes, to go on is not considered as a good sign by those who know him. As I have written by a servant of the Princess, whose name is Juan Azcotia, and who was despatched behind my back, I shall not dilate here on this subject, because your Highness can hear from him the truth

El camarero Juan de Cuero como buen servidor no puede estar que no diga la verdad laqual no se quiere oyr. esta la princessa con el como si le hoviesse fecho la mayor traycion del mundo y todo por que va a la mano que no vendan cada dia una pieça de plata para complir las locuras del frayle. suplico a V. of all these things if you desire to know them. He is a loyal servant of your Highness, and, as a man, being unable to endure many things which appeared bad to him, he has said something of this to the friar, for which no good has come to him. Your Highness must know that there is very great need to remedy these things of this friar, and to remove him from here as a pestiferous person, for that he certainly is.

The Chamberlain, Juan de Cuero, being a good servant, cannot do otherwise than speak the truth, which they do not desire to hear. The Princess behaves towards him as though he had committed the greatest treason in the world, and all because he hinders them from selling every day a piece of plate to satisfy the follies of the friar. I entreat your Highness to grant him the favour of an order that he whom your Highness should send may settle with him the accounts of the office which he has held, because he is very old and would not wish that death should overtake him before having accounted for all that for which he is responsible. Your Highness ought to do it, and to place a restraint on the selling, for in fifteen days they have sold gold for two hundred ducats, with which the Princess has done nothing that can be seen, nor is it known in what she spends it, except in books and the expenses of the friar. Fearing that this King should resent that your Highness commanded that the Princess should be claimed, unless he should consent to her marriage, as he has resented and known it in consequence of the little secrecy

I write to his Highness, out of every bush springs a hare, and considering, the time that has passed since you wrote to me from Alcalá del Reyno, I know not what to think of such delay, above all as the King of England had already news of the coming of him, who has to come, before I received the letters of his Highness. As they see that he delays [his coming] they make many conjectures, and prepare themselves for whatever may happen. They will not err in the answers, as they know that which we desire. For, as some days ago I wrote to his Highness, the little secrecy which there is in the chamber of the Princess has done us injury, because there is nothing which I have written recommended to secrecy which the King of England does not know as I know it, and even with some additions of the reporters. For this anxiety which I have, and in order to inform his Highness of that about which I am writing, I determine to send this messenger, and I entreat of your Honour that, if this business is to be prolonged, his Highness will withdraw me hence, because I shall not be able to serve either God or his Highness, as I am at variance with every one.

I wrote to your Lordship about a friar who is here as confessor to the Princess, who would to God he were in his monastery, and not here, because he neither brings nor has brought any good, and if he is here much longer he will bring greater injury on her Highness. For this reason I do not write more at length on the affair since he, as a man who has seen and knows it all, and as servant of the house, will be able well to tell, and he is a very loyal servant of the King and of the Princess, although such are not here held in so much esteem as good servants are worth.

I wish only to say here that this ought to be remedied by withdrawing this friar from the Princess, for he is with her Highness against the will of all the English, and especially against the will of the King and his Highness.⁽¹⁾ You ought to consider that which ought to be considered in this case, and may God destroy me if I see in the friar anything for which she should have so much affection, for he has neither learning, nor appearance, nor manners, nor competency, nor credit, and yet if he wishes to preach a new law they have to believe it.

A bill for five hundred ducats, which I have taken in exchange, I sent to your Lordship, the which I took from one Pedro Centurion, a Genoese. 6. The ambassador sends to tell me that it is very necessary for him to despatch this messenger in all haste to your Highness, because many things have been discovered to him, and as I fear that some of them may not be true, I do not like to let him go without a letter from me, beseeching your Highness that if he writes anything about my household and especially about my confessor, your Highness will not credit it. For, by my salvation, and by the life of your Highness, he does not tell the truth if he states anything except that [the confessor] serves me well and loyally. A few days ago I wrote to your Highness, by a servant of mine, although not so much in detail as I could wish; for all that the ambassador, with his disorderly tongue, has said against my person and the honour of my house, from affection for a certain Francisca de Cáceres, a former servant of mine, can not be put upon paper, and I would rather die than see what I have suffered and suffer every day from this ambassador and all my servants. I shall not believe that your Highness looks upon me as your daughter if you do not punish it, and order the ambassador to confine himself to the affairs of his embassy, and to abstain from meddling in the

7. To his Highness. From Diego Fernandez, Chancellor, 25th of May 1510.

Most high and most powerful Lord,

All the past time I did not dare to write to your Highness of the condition of the Queen my Lady, in order not to annoy her, and because all the physicians deceived themselves until time was the judge of the truth. The last day of January in the morning her Highness brought forth prematurely a daughter, without any other pain except that one knee pained her the night before. This affair was so secret that no one knew it until now, except the King my Lord, two Spanish women, a physician and I. The physician said that her Highness remained pregnant of another child, and it was believed and kept secret.

Her Highness, in order to conceal it, did not guard herself against the cold, and her uterus intumuit so much as never was seen in gravida muliere. Her Highness believed herself to be with child, although she had some doubts. It has pleased our Lord to be her physician in such a way that uterus decrevit, and by his infinite mercy he has again permitted her to be with child. This your Highness is to believe, for it is as true as I am a man. Her Highness denies it to all the world and to the King, but to me she has told it that she is since three months [pregnant], and her Highness told me that uterus suus iam intumescit multum; her Highness cannot deny it, because she is already, by the grace of our Lord, very large, so much so that all the physicians know and affirm it, and a Spanish woman who is in her private chamber told me the same thing from secret signs which they have. I pledge my word to your Highness that it is so, and I hope in God that it has been a beginning to give to your Majesty a hundred grandsons of their Graces my Sovereigns instead of one. Her Highness is very healthy, and the most beautiful creature in the world, with the greatest gaiety and contentment that ever was. The King my Lord adores her, and her Highness him. Your Highness is bound to give many thanks to our Lord that he gave you two such Christian children in their Graces my Sovereigns, so very wise, learned, and with all the natural perfections above all others. 8. [Written by Almazan :] To me from Don Luys Carroz, 29th of May, 1510.

The way in which we, the friar and I, treat one another is this: he gives me the best words that it is possible to give, but I find him very cold in deeds, and so much so, that I have not been able to make use of his help in the least little thing which has been done. I know it for certain, and he is

y el no es tan discreto que lo sepa encobrir que es receloso y temeroso de mi tanto que piensa y cree que a ninguna otra cosa yo soy venido aqua sino a echar a el desta casa. lo que yo he fecho y fago con el es esto honoralle quanto es menester y no demasiado porque no sospeche que en aquello ay engaño refirmarle a cada correo que viene quan servido es del Su Alteza en los negocios que aqua se tratan por Su Alteza y se que el los sabe se los fablo para que me ayude en ellos, y esto digole que por mandamiento de su Alteza lo fago porque sabe bien Su Alteza que en lo de su servicio mirara con la misma diligencia que yo y en fin que ninguna cosa con el me puede aprovechar que quanto mas adelante ymos peor le fallo. sin duda su entendimiento no esta bien assentado y bien se parece en sus obras. daña mucho al servicio de Su Alteza en esto que tiene ocupada la Reyna que no me puedo aprovechar dellã en ninguna cosa y es desta manera que si quiero embiar a suplicar algo a la Reyna no fallo con quien que los de casa por miedo del no lo osan fazer ni han ossado esos pocos que hay venir a verme ni en la corte topandome fablarme. si lo digo a el que lo diga a la Reyna de mi parte o lo faze en manera que no me aprovecha o me faze razones por donde no es bien fazer lo que yo quiero. en fin que concluyo con esto not so discreet that he knows how to conceal it, that he is very suspicious and fearful of me; indeed, so much so, that he thinks and believes that I am come here for no other purpose but to turn him out of this house. That which I have done and do with him is this:—to praise him as much as is necessary, but not overmuch, that he may not suspect that there is any deceit in it; to tell him, after the arrival of every courier, how pleased his Highness is with him, how much I am aware that he knows the affairs which are negotiated here, and that I speak to him about them in order that he may assist me. I tell him that I do this by order of his Highness, because his Highness knows well that in all that concerns his service he will act with the same diligence as I. Nevertheless I cannot make use of him in anything, and the more we advance the worse I find him. There is no doubt his mind is not quite right, and it is clear that he greatly injures the service of his Highness, inasmuch as he keeps the Queen engaged, so that I cannot make use of her in anything; so much so, that if I wish to send to ask a favour of the Queen, I find no one to send. For those of the household, from fear of him, do not dare to do it, nor have the few [Spaniards?] who are there dared to come and see me, or to speak to me when they meet me at court. If I beg him to tell something to the Queen, either he does it in a way that does me no good, or he gives me reasons why it is not well to do what I wish. In fine, I may conclude by stating that I have never seen a more wicked person in my life. According to what hitherto I am able to understand; we are forced to dissimulate with him, to endure him, honouring him and making him the best demonstrations that can be made. When the Queen goes out I shall speak with her, and see how to guide myself, and by whom and in what manner those negotiations with the Queen are to be carried on, which I am forced to carry on through a third person. There is here a servant of the Queen, whose name is Francisca de Cáceres. She is married to Francisco Grimaldo, and is the most attached person in the world to the service of her Highness, and the most skilful for whatever suits the Queen or the King our Lord.⁽¹⁾ The friar fears her more than can be said, and forbids this woman entering the palace, or remaining in the service of the Queen, or seeing her. I should think that two letters of recommendation and with a power for me from his Highness would be good, the one for the King and the other for the Queen. What I intend to do with them is to try whether I can persuade the Queen to take her back into her service, and if not, to obtain from the King that he takes her for Madame Mary, his sister. As soon as she is in the palace, she herself will recover her place, and, even if she does not recover it, she will render the greatest services; for now, having nobody there, I do not know, as I ought to know, what passes there. which it is well for me to know, especially as the King and the Queen are young and cannot be without novelties. What lately has happened is that two sisters of the Duke of Buckingham, both married, lived in the palace. The one of them is the favourite of the Queen, and the other, it is said, is much liked by the King, who went after her. Another version is that the love intrigues were not of the King, but of a young man, his favourite, of the name of Conton,⁽¹⁾ who had been the late King's butler. This Conton carried on the love intrigue, as it is said, for the King, and that is the more credible version, as the King has shown great displeasure at what I am going to tell. The favourite of the Queen has been very anxious in this matter of her sister, and has joined herself with the Duke, her brother, with her husband and her sister's husband, in order to consult on what should be done in this case. The consequence of the counsel of all the four of them was that, whilst the Duke was in the private apartment of his sister, who was suspected [of intriguing] with the King, Conton came there to talk with her, saw the Duke, who intercepted him, quarrelled with him, and the end of it was that he was severely reproached in many and very hard words. The King was so offended at this that he reprimanded the Duke angrily. The same night the Duke left the palace, and did not enter or return there for some days. At the same time the husband of that lady went away, carried her off, and placed her in a convent sixty miles from here, that no one may see her. The King having understood that all this proceeded from the sister, who is the favourite of the Queen, the day after the one was gone, turned the other out of the palace, and her husband with her. Believing that there were other women in the employment of the favourite, that is to say, such as go about the palace insidiously spying out every unwatched moment, in order to tell the Queen [stories], the King would have liked to turn all of them out, only that it has appeared to him too great a scandal. Afterwards, almost all the court knew that the Queen had been vexed with the King, and the King with her, and thus this storm went on between them. I spoke to the friar about it, and complained that he had not told me this, regretting that the Queen had been annoyed, and saying to him how I thought that the Queen should have acted in this case, and how he, in my opinion, ought to have behaved himself. For in this I think I understand my part, being a married man, and having often treated with married people in similar matters. He contradicted vehemently, which was the same thing as denying what had been officially proclaimed. He told me that those ladies have not gone for anything of the kind, and talked nonsense, and evidently did not believe what he told me. I did not speak more on that subject. I spoke with him in order to try whether I could not in this or that manner discuss with him some pending affairs, and [to remind him] that he never ought to consider me as a stranger in these matters, but until this time I have not found him serviceable to me. He is stubborn, and as the English ladies of this household as well as the Spanish who are near the Queen are rather simple, I fear lest the Queen should behave ill in this ado. She does so already, because she by no means conceals her ill will towards Conton, and the King is very sorry for it. According to what I have heard, it may be that even the friar should have his part in this feast, and I should not regret it. I have told all this to your Lordship, in order that you may tell it his Highness, if you think it advisable, and if not, conceal it and order me likewise not to speak any more of it, and not to lose my time in such things, unless I obtain some advantage thereby. Because I hope [to obtain some advantage thereby] I take notice of what is going on in the palace, and although the friar does not tell me anything, I have already learnt a good deal about it during the short time I have been here. And this [knowledge] I have procured, and I write it, as the Lord Chamberlain has told me that I ought to write minutely all that [happens] here, because by doing so I would render a service to his Highness. Your Lordship must know that eight days ago the friar came to tell me on the part of the Queen that she wishes me to know that she non erat gravida for more than nine weeks, and that uterus suus deminutus est. I do not know what will be done, but before this letter is closed I shall know and make mention of it. I knew it already before the friar had spoken to me. Soon after my arrival I feared that which has taken place would be the case, because, although uterus reginæ multum intumuerat et graviditas eius pro re certa habebatur, inveni aliquem qui certio rem me fecit, quinque per menses, postquam reginam gravidam esse publicatum fuerat, menstruas suas purgationes continuavisse. Res talis quamquam aliquibus contingit mulieribus gravidis, they are so few that I feared some error. When I saw the bringing forth delayed I felt sure of that which I had suspected, and your Lordship may judge for yourself how excusable the error was to affirm mulierem menstruantem esse gravidam, and to make her withdraw publicly for her delivery. The privy councillors of the King are very vexed and angry at this mistake, as they have said to me, although from courtesy they give the blame to the bedchamber women who gave the Queen to understand that she was pregnant whilst she was not. they should think of what was to be done in this case, and that they and the King should console and comfort the Queen, who perhaps might be sad and disconsolate, as she had desired to gladden the King and the people with a prince, according to what the friar has told me. Moreover, [I entreated them] to think of the account which was to be given to all the world who are expecting that bringing forth, and I shall speak with them to know what they have decided. Before this letter is closed I shall know and write it. I know that many of the privy councillors and other persons are murmuring, and they presume that, quia regina non est gravida, concipiendi incapacem eam esse. Your Lordship may believe me, the Queen has a pretty and most healthy colour in her face, but I think some irregularity in her eating and the food which she takes cause her some indisposition, the consequence of which is quod non menstruat bene, quæ res principalis est causa non concipiendi. As for her eating without care they have told me for certain that she does so. They wish she should go out and be no longer withdrawn ; it is, however, not yet known when she will go out. The friar has told me a thousand extravagant follies *de graviditate illa, et inter alia dixit, procul dubio gravidam eam fuisse, sed post menses tres abortum fecisse : regem ipsum eum vidisse ; attamen ab omnibus pro certo habitum fuisse, eam gravidam remansisse alio feto. God grant it may be so, and that we all may rejoice and recover the lost. I have spoken with the King as to what we are to say of the Queen's confinement. They find the case so difficult that they do not know what to determine. The Queen writes. It must not be known here that I have written ought of these affairs, because I have said that I do not write of them.

1. To their Highnesses from the Subprior of Santa Cruz.

We arrived here on Tuesday, the last day of July. The next Thursday we spoke with the Archduke, and after that with the Archduchess. They received us with joy, as it seemed. I stated to the Archduchess the subject of my mission. She was much pleased with it. She is very gentle, and so handsome and stout, and so much advanced in her pregnancy, that it would be a consolation for your Highnesses to see her. The following Friday I spoke again with her Highness, who, in the course of our conversation, was somewhat troubled because she had been informed from there (Spain) of several things that were said there of her. As, considering her condition, it seemed to me more reasonable to please than to cause her trouble, I said to her Highness that she had left so good a memory in Castile that it could not be lost by whatever could be said from here, ⁽¹⁾ especially as, if anything had been said, it was said only to your Highnesses, who are so good advocates of her that her presence was unnecessary. Her tender age, her want of experience, and her great love, of which you were aware, would excuse all before your Highnesses. She alleges the same excuses for herself and her husband. She is more composed. She is not in want of good reasons to defend her cause, which her servants have not written [when speaking] of her, or she [when speaking] of her servants, because they did not dare to be more explicit. This much for my second visit. Doña Marina Manuel is not here. I sent her your greetings. For the other small matters the time is not yet come. One thing your Highnesses ought to know; they do not give here anything to eat to any person in the world, so that if it is the intention of your Highnesses that I remain longer here, it will be necessary some day to provide for my expenses. Above what I get for my expenses, I received fifty-three ducats in nobles from the King of England. This (money) has been very necessary to me.

16th of August '98.

On Tuesday, the eve of the assumption of our Lady, I spoke for the third time with the Señora Archduchess. I asked her [to tell me] something of her life which I could write to your Highnesses, but she answered me that for the moment she had nothing to say, because she had written a long letter to your Highnesses. Up to this time she has not made any inquiry for any person in the whole of Spain, [and heard] only what I have told her. I can tell your Highnesses that she was not gratified by my coming, and that with good reason, for before I had arrived certain persons, and I believe it was the Countess of Camin, wrote to her from Bilbao, that I came as her confessor. [The rumour] that I came as her confessor was so public that we found in England two letters of that purport. When I assured her of the contrary she became somewhat more quiet. In conclusion she answered me, that should I remain some days longer she would take my demands into consideration. I replied see the Queen our lady. I found her in a very dangerous state, and, thanks to God, I left her in good health and very joyful. May it please God to preserve her, and to give your Highness a good delivery, which His service so much requires. All those ladies were much delighted with me, and I did my duty towards many of them, although I left a great number of them discontented, because it was the will of God that just when they stood most in want of me I left them. I am told that your Highness confesses to those sort of friars who live in Paris, and that you had given to one of them thirty florins to make good cheer, and that thou⁽¹⁾ livest with those drunkards from Paris. My opinion is that your Highness should not confess except to a friar who lives according to the rules of his convent, who has not a pin of his own, and to whom your Highness cannot give anything nor show him favour, but only to the convent in which he lives, which ought to be of the Observant Friars. Such friars as those who live in a convent of the Observant Friars will give good account to God of your soul. The father and friar who will deliver this letter to your Highness belongs to the Observant Friars. He is very good and honest, and learned. If he were not so young your Highness would do well to entrust your soul to his keeping, and not to that of those who, during many years, have not been subject to the rules of their convents, and who are swarming about there [in Flanders]. 4. Days ago I wrote to your Highness the whole course of my life from my arrival up to the confinement of the Archduchess, and sent the letter by a secretary of the Princess Madame Margaret. After her Highness had been to mass I spoke with her various times, and told her all your Highness had ordered, and, besides, all I thought it was right to tell her. Many things were said, but I stated them in the most gentle way I could, and in that loving manner your Highness has commanded me to adhere to, and not in a tone of reproach. She received it very well, thanking your Highness for your kindness in telling her how she ought to live. She thanked me also, and [said] she should be glad if I would tell her everything I thought was not good. I do not know how long that will last. I told her among other things that she had a hard and pitiless heart, and was devoid of all piety, as is the truth. She answered that she was rather weak and low-spirited, that she could never think of how far she was from your Highness without feeling the desire to cry, because she was so far from your Highness for ever. She passed New Year's Eve in such a manner that, in this respect, I am more satisfied with her than from any conversation I

In this respect she is very vigilant and deserves praise, although here (in Flanders) they believe the contrary. She has the qualities of a good Christian. In all I told her in the name of your Highness and some other trifles which I learnt here, she is improving every day. Here they have two principal complaints against this lady; in the first place that they are badly paid, and secondly that she does not occupy herself with the government of her household. I told her, and she answered that she has often spoken with the members of the Council about the pay of her servants, but that they answer that more is due to the Flemings⁽¹⁾ than to her servants. I asked her why she did not speak to the Archduke. She said, because he tells it directly to his councillors, and she receives great injury from it. As for the government of her household, she says they do not permit her to take part in it. She is so afraid and suspicious of me that, except by pure importunity, I should never have succeeded in getting a single word out of her to write to your Highness. I told her that your Highness was anxious to know her [manner of] life, the good as well as the bad, and as I intended to write very soon, she should communicate to me something I could write. She said that she would now improve and write a long letter, and in order to have something to speak of she would say nothing now. I wrote several times to your Highness that the Archduchess had decided that Doña Marina Manuel should be lady of honour to her daughter. As often as I spoke with her on this subject I found her very decided about it, and, moreover, she said that she would communicate with me, and we should all then occupy ourselves in that affair, "for I wish that it be done by the hand of the Queen, my lady." This intention lasted from the time of my arrival in the month of August until her confinement. I spoke with her concerning it ten or twelve days before her confinement, and she was more decided than ever that it should be done by the hand of your Highness. I said it was already late. She said she would keep the bishopric vacant until the order of your Highness should arrive. She wrote a great number of letters to her ⁽¹⁾ instructing her to make haste to come. Thus, she came with all her household and husband, and during her delivery she gave herself up to her, soul and body and all she possessed, and during the confinement she did not permit her to be absent as much as an Ave Maria, and even told her that the Archduke had left it to her to provide for that place. Now when I spoke with her I found her of as quite different opinion as though the idea had never presented itself to her mind. words. I am told, but do not believe it, that Muxica has been the cause of it. There is nevertheless some probability of it; for I never saw her Highness so much decided to do nothing else but this as [she was] before he arrived, and so decided to do the contrary as [she is] since his arrival. She gives him more credit than all her other servants put together, and he depends entirely on Madame d'Aloyn. When I pressed her, saying how much your Highness wished that she should have about her similar persons ⁽¹⁾ of good fame, and that she had [chosen] Madame d'Aloyn, who was just the contrary, she answered that she ⁽²⁾ was not so much ⁽³⁾ as it was said, and that Madame d'Aloyn had the servants of the Archduke and the privy councillors on her side. Thus, Madame d'Aloyn and the councillors of the Archduke and Muxica have so much intimidated this lady that she dare not raise her head. She is so poor that she has not a maravedi to give alms. This very year when she was pregnant she asked the state to give her the same grant as it was the custom to give to other ladies, and they responded to her demands with a grant of 60,000 florins payable within three years, but according to what is said she does not get anything, because the receiver of the Archduke receives them, and they are distributed as favours. Muxica asks now for the Prince of Chimay, her gentleman in waiting, one thousand florins over and above the 4,000 florins a year which he has from his office, and it is even said that they endeavour to obtain for him the 1,000 ducats which your Highness had granted to Monsieur de Bèvres. Your Highness stands in need of no advice, but I have never seen anything more hopeless than what is going on here, as your Highness can see. If this continues, nothing that your Highnesses can do will be of any use here. Only on Saturday after twelfth night they importuned a certain person to beg the Señora Archduchess to write to ask your Highnesses to give a bishopric to the Provost of Liège, who henceforth would render good services. Although the King of the Romans has lately given him a bishopric, all this does not satisfy his avarice, or prevent them from ruining these señores⁽¹⁾, persuading them to disobey their parents. Although it is said that the Archduke is already disobedient to your Highness, it is not true, at least as far as his wishes are concerned, and the Archduke to the King of the Romans.⁽²⁾ They intend to marry Madame Margaret in Germany, and I should not wonder if these señores⁽³⁾ had to pay for it. The King of the Romans does what he can to induce them to go to Germany, only to get them out of the power of these people. I do not know what he will be able to do. The Bastard and Doña Marina are here. They are very desirous to serve your Highnesses. They have spoken with me both together, and each separately, telling me how many favours they have received from your Highness. I assure your Highness that the Bastard shed tears when he spoke with me. The con-

If your Highnesses would give them wherewith to pay their meals in addition to what they possess they would constantly live here, but if not, they entreat your Highness to permit them to look out for another employment by which they can maintain themselves. Out of the four thousand florins which were formerly paid them, they have deprived them of two thousand, and the remainder they do not pay to them any more than to all the other (Spanish servants). They spoke also of a pension which your Highness was in the habit of paying them, but as that was only a favour they had not dared to ask it for many years past, and thus they live in great poverty, even greater than your Highness can imagine that such persons can live in. They demean themselves to eat humble meals, and that is already public, and yet they remain [in the position of (?)] great personages.⁽¹⁾ Although they endeavour to conceal, they cannot do it so well that, considering the importance of the case, the truth is not known. Even the Provost of Liège, who is their adversary, came to their house and told them that the Archduke had determined to give this office to Doña Marina, and although that was little for such a person as she, he was sure of it, if the Archduchess did not forsake her. She answered that, even if it were less, she would do what she was commanded ; and Madame de Rabastan, her sister-in-law, told her to do so, and not to be anxious about the Bastard, of whom she would take care, and cure him in her house if he should fall ill. The Señora Archduchess wishes so much to have her, and stands so much in need of her, that I do not know what whirlwind disturbs this. This lady ⁽¹⁾ does not speak with me openly. I can tell your Highness that if the devil did not cross it she ⁽²⁾ would already be placed in possession of her office in the palace. As she ⁽³⁾ has not dared to install Doña Marina, so she has not the courage to install another lady. I am told that Monsieur de Vergas ⁽⁴⁾ said they may choose whomsoever they like. I told her [the Archduchess] many things, showing her how badly she acted, knowing that your Highness desired that she should have Doña Marina about her person, and how much she stood in want of her. She answered, "Therefore I shall do for her what I can as soon as the Archduke, who is gone to meet the King of the Romans, returns ;" but I believe she will do nothing.

Doña Ana de Beamonte complains that she gets here little honour and less profit. Certainly she serves well, never leaves the Archduchess alone, and is a good woman. If she were to go away, this señora ⁽⁵⁾ would be entirely deserted. Your Highness ought to satisfy her, and even bestow some favour on her. All those who stay here are in so entirely hopeless a state, that it is pitiful to see how badly they are treated. I repeatedly wrote to your Highness that by this time I should have concluded all that your Highness has commanded, and so I have done. In my opinion I am no longer wanted here, but as I have no orders from your Highness, I shall remain here until I receive them.

I told the Señora Archduchess that I begged her that if she should command me to go she would give me her orders for your Highness, but she refused. Because I am in the last necessity I send the father whom I took with me as companion; to keep him here any longer would be a loss of time, and he can render better services there, but especially in order to beseech your Highness to send me the order to go, and the means to go, and even on what to go ⁽¹⁾. For not only the animals which I brought from there, but also my person, my companion, and my servant are pledged. I arrived here provided for six months, and now nine months and a half have elapsed, and I fear it will be more than fourteen months before I have an answer to this letter. In this country they think it a greater honour well to drink than well to live, and on what I pay here for my lodgings I could live in Castile. Last night I went to the palace for letters, and was told that the Archduke had said: the Archduchess may provide for the places in the household of this child, because it is a daughter; when God grants us a son I shall provide for his household. Considering the goodwill she had, and the need in which she stood ⁽²⁾, it is clear from this that it was the above mentioned persons who caused her to change her intentions; and it appears that she was only afraid to do what she much desired, and what she thought would atone for that of which your Highness complained. All this was insufficient to resist these two ⁽¹⁾.

I heard also of another distribution of money which was made without asking the Archduchess. She knew nothing of it until they sent her the paper, asking or rather ordering her to sign it. She did it and said nothing, but when they had left her she had the courage to say, "Be it so for this year, but next year I desire that they do not make grants without my consent." I think it will be always the same thing. Her servants die of starvation, and that will continue until your Highnesses provide for them. I entreat your Highness not to mention in your next letter to her Highness anything except what stands at the beginning of this letter, for her (or your) Highness considers (or may consider) that only her (or your) letters go ⁽²⁾, and would confirm her suspicion. In all the other things I think there is no remedy.

5. Clause of the Will of Queen Doña Isabel, our Lady.

I likewise herewith and very lovingly order the said Princess, my daughter, and the said Prince, her husband—in order to merit and obtain the benediction of God, of the King, her father, and of me—to be always obedient subjects to the King my lord, and never to disobey his orders, but to serve him, treat and revere him with the greatest respect and obedience, giving and causing to be given him all the honour which good and obedient children owe to their good father, following his orders and carrying out his councils. It is to be hoped that they will comport themselves in such a manner that in all that regards his Highness my absence be not observable, and as though I were alive. For besides that this [honour and reverence is due to his Highness as a father who according to the commandment of God ought to be honoured and revered, they ought to obey his orders and follow his councils, because in addition to these reasons they are bound to do so, as being beneficial and profitable to themselves and to their kingdoms. Also his Highness having so much experience in the government of these kingdoms, they and their kingdoms will greatly profit thereby. Moreover, his Highness ought to be more obeyed, and revered, and

With no less danger to his royal person he has gained the kingdom of Granada, and has driven away the enemies of our Holy Catholic Church, who during so long a time had usurped and occupied these kingdoms, to which he has secured the good government administration and justice which by the grace of God they now enjoy.

Ferdinand, father of the said Queen Juana our Lady, in his quality of administrator and governor of these kingdoms and dominions, according to the contents of the said clauses of the will and the letters patent of the said Lady Queen Isabel, and promised to keep and observe it.

This done, some discussions took place between the Procurators of the said Cortes, and then all being of the same mind they presented unanimously a petition to the said Lord, King Ferdinand, the substance of which was, that after having been particularly informed of the infirmity of the said Queen Juana, our Lady, they considered that by right as well as according to the laws of these kingdoms the lawful guardianship and administration of these kingdoms and dominions is due and belong to the said Lord, King Ferdinand, alone, as being the father of her Highness, and as according to the contents of the above-mentioned clause of the will. For, in consequence of the impossibility which follows from the said impediment, all right of guardianship and government devolves on the said Lord, King Ferdinand, in accordance with the laws and statutes of these kingdoms, and which they [the Procurators] had sworn to observe. 8. KING PHILIP to JEHAN DE HESDIN.

[Le Glay. Negotiations Diplomatiques entre la France et l'Autriche, Vol. I, p. 200. Fragment.]

Instruction pour Jehan de Hesdin, escuier, mareschal des logis du roi de Castille, de Leon, de Grenade, etc., de ce qu'il aura à dire de la part dudit seigneur roy à Gonzalve Fernando, devers lequel presentement l'envoye.

Premierement :

Lui presentera ses lettres de credence, pour l'exposicion desquelles lui dira premierement la bonne et singuliere amour et affection que ledit seigneur roy luy porte, tant pour les vertuz et leaulté qui sont en luy, comme aussi pour ce qu'il le tient pour son bon et leal vassal et subgect, et qu'il a espoir et confidence qu'il luy voudroit faire plaisir et service, ainsi que icellui seigneur roy assez a esté adverty, tant par le roy des Romains son pere, lequel luy en a fait pluseurs bons rapports, comme aussi par pluseurs autres, dont grandement le merceye.

Et à ceste cause et pour cette confidence luy a bien voulu faire dire et declairer les choses qui s'ensuyvent :—

Assavoir, comme depuis le trespas de feue la royne Ysabeau, que Dieu pardoint, le roy don Fernando, roy d'Arragon, son beau-pere, ait chercié tous moyens à luy possibles pour avoir usurpé et detenu ses royaumes de par-deçà, et en prive et deboute ledit seigneur roy, la royne sa compaigne et leur enffans, contre Dieu, droit et raison.

Et, pour ce faire, pour couverture et dissimulation, car jasmals ne se fait grant mal que soubz couleur et dissimulation de quelque bien, affin de mieux parvenir a son intencion et non se mettre de prime face en l'indignation des grans no du peuple, a, incontinent après ledit trespas de ladite feue royne, delaissié le tiltre de roy ; mais, contre ce, il a prins tiltre de gouverneur et administrateur perpetuel desdits royaumes ; tellement qu'il eust peu sembler que en nom il n'estoit riens, mais en effect, en euvre et en gouvernement il eust été le tout.

Tost après qu'il eust prins ledit tiltre de gouverneur et administrateur perpetuel, feist tenir courtès en la ville de Thore, esquelles courtès il se feist par les procuradores et autres jurer pour tel en se vantant en ce de certain testament de ladite feue royne, lequel toutesfoiz ledit seigneur roy n'a jamais peu veoir, ne autre pour luy, par copie ne autrement, quelque requeste ou poursuite qu'il en ait faite ne fait faire. Par quoy appert clerement que ce n'est que abuz, combien que, quant ores il en eust quelque chose, que ce ne peut de riens avanchier ne prejudicier quant au droit dudit seigneur roy.

Ce fait, après qu'il a esté ainsi juré gouverneur et administrateur, en a bien usé; car il a entierement disposé à sa voulenté de toutes choses, ne plus ne moins que s'il eust resté seul roy, sinon que, ès publicacions de justice qui se faisoient et en expedicions de lettrages et autres choses, faisoit dire de par la royne sa fille, comme vraye heritiere, et de par luy comme gouverneur et administrateur perpetuel, sans faire mencion nulle du roy, non plus que s'il n'y eust droit ne action quelconque.

Oultre plus, affin d'avoir plus grant couleur d'usurper ledit gouvernement et de en animer les grans et le peuple envers et à l'encontre dudit seigneur roy, feist publier et courir la voix partout que ladite royne sa fille estoit folle; par quoy il devoit gouverner pour elle, et que ledit seigneur roy son mari la tenoit prisoniere, avec autres mensongies et bourdes infinies.

Encoires plus, icellui seigneur roy d'Arragon, en toutes devises, secretement et autrement, en sa chambre et ailleurs, aussi en sermons publiques, a journallement dit, fait et souffert dire et preschier dudit seigneur roy tous les vices, opprobres et choses deshonestes que l'on pourroit dire de prince, pour par les moyens dessusdits mettre le peuple et aussi lesdits grans maistres en une horreur et hayne envers icellui seigneur roy.

Aussi a-il fait tout son povoir et par tous les moyens qu'il a peu et sceu adviser, par dons, promesses, alienacion des biens de la couronne et autrement, de gagner et attirer lesdits grans maistres à luy.

Et combien que ledit seigneur roy ait bien sceu et journallement esté adverty des choses dessusdites, lesquelles il a paceimment souffert et enduré, en se mectant tousjours en tout devoir de faire et porter audit seigneur roy d'Arragon sondit beau-pere, tout l'honneur et toute la reverence qui luy a esté possible et que bon fils est tenu de faire, esperant tousjours par douceur et amour le vaincre et luy amolyr le cœur.

Ce nonobstant, icellui seigneur roy d'Arragon, en perseverant tousjours de mal en pis et veullant spollier ledit seigneur roy et sesdits enfants de leur succession, non seulement d'Arragon et de Naples, mais de tout, s'il eust peu, s'est allé marier et alier aux François, ennemis perpetuels des couronnes de Castille et d'Arragon, et a fait ung mariaige si vitupereulx, comme chacun scet, secretement, sans le sceu dudit seigneur roy, et en entretenant cependant l'ambassadeur

d'icellui seigneur roy de belles parolles et de bourdes, nyant ledit mariaige jusques il estoit tout fait, disant tousjours qu'il vouloit tant de biens à icellui seigneur roy que merveilles, et luy estre bon pere; ce dont il a par effect monstré tout le contraire.

Encoires, non content de ce, ledit Seigneur roy d'Arragon, tost après ledit mariaige fait, a poursuy et fait poursuyr devers noster saint pere l'investiture dudit royaume du vivant de ladite feue royne Isabeau, en l'an quinze cent et ung; laquelle investiture se feist expressement pour iceulx roy don Fernando, ladite royne Isabeau et leurs enfans procrez d'eulx deux et non de l'un d'eulx.

Pardessus le droit de ladite investiture, a-il autre droit d'une part, pour ce que ledit royaume de Naples a esté gagné et conquis, non d'argent, gens ne sang d'Arragon mais de Castille, d'autre part, par le mariage de monseigneur le prince avec madame Claude a y droit acquis pour mondit seigneur le prince.

Non obstant encoires toutes lesquelles choses, ledit seigneur roy, estant pour lors occupé en plusieurs autres ses grans et urgens affaires, veant que promptement ne pavoit obvyer ne remedier aux choses dessusdites, sans avoir mis tout le royaume en guerre, à la totale destruction d'icellui, pensant tousjours vaincre par bien faire, aiant aussi quelque espoir sur les belles parolles que ledit seigneur roy son beau-pere disoit journellement, contraires toutes fois à ses euvres, mais pensoit que quelque jour il se convertiroit, feist certain traictié avec luy will see, that I have great pleasure in knowing that the affair is already in hand, etc., and that I shall continue my journey until I meet the King and the Queen, my children, and carry out my intentions in such a manner that all those who wish to disturb them shall not be able to do so. Moreover * you are to tell the Archbishop that I undertake this journey in order to follow his advice and counsel and to show confidence, and likewise because I believe that it will be beneficial with respect to all those negotiations. You are, however, to tell him also that what has been said there about certain measures which I have taken is the truth, and in fact it has already been written to him that orders had been given to make certain preparations in case of need. But when I gave those orders it was not my intention to carry them out, and I only consented to them in order to satisfy the Constable who solicited them, and incited me with great passion. I did not then believe that he did so in order to foment discord, but at all events you can say that on my part nothing of the kind has been done, nor will be done, and in the whole kingdom not a single letter or order, or even a line from me to that effect will be found. Going alone, as I go, to meet the King my son, I was persuaded that I ought not to disturb anything, and in order fully to satisfy the Archbishop, who with so holy a desire wishes to reconcile us, I send with this the papers under my signature and seal which he asks for, and I

El condestable fizo y dixo aqui muchas cosas trabaiando que otros grandes y cavalleros se juntassen y juramentassen con el para estorvar que entre mi y el Rey mi fijo no haya concordia y que en caso que no lo pudiessen estorbar que se juramentassen con el para que tomassen la boz de la Reyna contra el Rey mi fijo y contra mi y ciertamente yo no pudiera creer del tal cosa y solamente lo digo para que el Arçobispo este sobre aviso que creo que esto que aqua el condestable procurava lo procurara mejor alla porque hallara mas que le sigan para ello. tambien se dice que va con ardid de concertarse con don Juan Manuel y dar a su fijo la encomienda de approve that, as he proposes, he accepts another similar paper from the King, my son. In as far, however, as my journey is concerned, I shall not wait for the paper, nor for any other thing. As I have done nothing and sent no letters to grandees or cities, etc., or prepared any other measure, it would be well that the Archbishop, in his own name, should procure that, if the King, my son, has taken measures calculated to create discord, he should suspend them and recall his orders and messengers, if he has sent any, in order to avoid disturbances in the kingdom. When we meet we shall, with the help of God, provide for everything without producing commotions, as the peace and weal of the kingdom requires.

The Constable did and spoke many things here, asking other grandees and cavaliers to unite with him, and to swear to prevent a reconciliation between me and the King, my son, and, in case they could not prevent it, to bind themselves by oath to set up the claims of the Queen against the King, my son, and me. Certainly I can scarcely believe it, and I mention it now only in order that the Archbishop may be vigilant. I am persuaded the Constable will more easily attain there what he has endeavoured to attain here, because he will find more persons to follow him there. For this purpose, it is said, he is extremely desirous to reconcile himself with Juan Manuel, and offers his son the knight com-

12. Protestation of His Highness against the Treaties concluded in the year 1506, at Villafafila.

It is notorious to all that we, the most Serene Queen, Doña Juana, my very dear and much beloved daughter, and I, Don Fernando, by the grace of God, King of Aragon, of the Two Sicilies, Jerusalem, etc., are much injured by the conclusion of the treaty which is so prejudicial to the said most Serene Queen, my daughter, and to me and my prerogatives, and which contains the most enormous injustice towards us. The said covenant and treaty between me and the most Serene King Don Philip, my son-in-law, was obtained by force, and I am obliged to sign and swear to it, because, confiding in him and his promises and oaths, I went to see him with that good faith which ought to subsist between a father and a son, and then found myself placed in such a position through his having by my favour taken possession of these kingdoms of Castile and Leon, and assembled the grandees thereof, and united a powerful and strong army, that my royal person is in notorious and manifest danger, and consequently, considering what is going on in these times, as well as the position in which my person is placed, my kingdoms are exposed to no less danger. Thus, from fear and apprehension of what has been stated, and because the dangers cannot be avoided in any other manner, since the said King, my son-in-law, is determined entirely to usurp, as in fact he does, the administration of these kingdoms, despoiling me of the administration which on many accounts belongs to me by right, and even depriving the most Serene Queen, Doña Juana, his wife and my daughter, of her liberty and all that belongs to her as heiress and proprietress of these kingdoms: forced, as I have stated, by these dangers, and my apprehensions and fear, I am obliged today, on the 27th of June 1506, in the town of Villafila, to conclude, sign, and swear to an instrument, alliance and treaty, by which I commit to the said King Philip the government of these kingdoms. Moreover, I am forced to conclude, sign, and swear to a clause, according to which, in case the said most Serene Queen, his wife and my daughter, should determine to take part in the government, and to disturb the treaty, whether by her own decision or induced by any other persons, I am not to consent to it, but in agreement with him oppose her. The said treaty, clause, and oath [are forced from me], and I shall not conclude, sign, and swear to them of my own free will, but only to avoid the above mentioned dangers, and from fear and apprehension. Therefore, in order to preserve my right and to be able afterwards to prove in an authentic manner the reasons which induce me to sign, swear, and consent to the said treaty and clause; and further, in order to be able, when necessary, and notwithstanding them, they being null and without effect, to recover my right and government, and to do that which according to the right of nature is my duty and obligation towards the most Serene Queen, my daughter, viz., to enable her to recover her liberty and the prerogatives which belong to her as Queen, heiress and proprietress of these kingdoms; and considering that in consequence of the said dangers fear and apprehensions, I cannot protest publicly and openly, but only secretly, as a public protestation would be attended by the same dangers, and cause the same apprehensions: for all these reasons, and in presence of you, Micer Thomas Malferite, President of my Chancery, and Mosen Juan Cabrero, my Gentleman of the Bedchamber, both of my Council, and you Miguel Perez de Almazan, my Secretary, by Apostolic and Royal Authority Public Notary, I protest, denounce, and declare that I shall conclude, sign, and swear to the treaty, covenant, and clause, which is to be concluded today, under the unmistakeable before I left Spain. As, however, the money wherewith to pay, and the jewelry which was to be sold, were deposited in Castile, he had it in his power to prevent your dower from being sent. And not only in this, but in all other things which concerned me or my daughters, he was always an enemy, although I rendered him more services than a father. Since his death the most serene Queen of Castile, my daughter and your sister, in consequence of her retirement, does not occupy herself with affairs of state, and I am absent, and this business cannot be despatched whilst I am not there. This is the reason why your dower has not been sent. If it had been possible to provide for this case during my absence, it would long ago have been done; but, as I have said, it is impossible without my presence. I am determined, with the help of God, to go to Castile during this spring, because the Queen, my daughter and your sister, continually sends and begs me very pressingly to do so, and all write to me that, after God, there is no other means to preserve those kingdoms from ruin and destruction except my return to them. As they beg me very earnestly to go, and as the happiness of the most serene Queen, my daughter and your sister, and of those kingdoms greatly depend upon it, I have decided to give up my own comfort and to undergo all the labour of assisting her and her kingdoms. particular case induces me to make more haste, and as soon as I arrive there I shall, with the help of God, provide that your dower be sent. Believe me, I wish it even more than you, and you may be perfectly sure that, if it had been possible to provide for this case earlier, I would have done so. For you are not only my daughter, but I also hold your person in high esteem, and wish to see you honoured, and satisfied, and tranquil. To obtain this, I shall as resolutely set to work as for the salvation of my soul. As soon as I arrive in Castile I shall also send you the confessor whom you desire, for there is none of that nation ⁽¹⁾ here. I shall likewise send an ambassador, and if Don Pedro de Ayala should be inclined, I shall despatch him with all the diligence necessary. I shall not fail to do so, with the permission of our Lord. As for what you say, that you think the most serene King of England, my brother, will not accept the jewels, gold, and silver at the price at which they were valued, it is sufficient that he accept them at the price they are really worth according to the valuation of sworn goldsmiths. But you must remember that it is very necessary to preserve intact all the plate and gold and jewels which you took with you, for they are accounted for in your dower, and if any of them should be wanting, it would be impossible to replace them. Thus, until your marriage is consummated, it is necessary to preserve the said things. It is your interest to do so. He who is to go with the money will give such an account that the most serene King of England, my brother, will have good reason to convince himself that nothing is demanded from him except what is in conformity with the agreement and the treaty; and, finally, the ambassador will be fully informed about all you have mentioned, so that I hope all your affairs will be well arranged. Meanwhile nothing more remains to be done but that you behave prudently towards the King of England, and endeavour to obtain his goodwill. Speak of your marriage always as of a thing of which you have no doubt and no suspicion, and which God alone can undo.

I have read what the King of England, my brother, said to you about his marriage with the Queen of Castile, my daughter and your sister. I had great pleasure in learning all which you wrote to me on this subject in his name. Answer him in my name that I do not yet know whether the said Queen, my daughter, be inclined to marry again; but if she should do so, I should prefer her to marry the said King, my brother, rather than any other prince in Christendom, and above all on the conditions of the treaty which he says he is willing to conclude with me on this subject. I am determined, with the help of our Lord, to return this spring to Castile, to occupy myself in remedying the affairs of the said Queen, my daughter, and her kingdoms; and it seems to me that the King of England, my brother, ought to send me an ambassador as soon as he knows that, by the help of God, I have arrived in Castile, so that I may settle with him all that relates to the King of England and to me. When I am with the Queen, my daughter and your sister, and know her wishes, I shall be better able to arrange all things for this purpose. But take care that the affair be kept very secret; for if the Queen, my daughter, should marry again, I know that she might incline towards something else, very contrary to this. In such case, no one could dissuade her from the one and persuade her to the other, except myself. This the King, my brother, may believe me, as I know more of her than any one else does. As I have said, he must keep this secret until he knows that I am in Castile with the Queen, my daughter, and then he may send me the said ambassador.

I send with this a letter for the King of England in answer to that which he wrote to me. At the end of it I refer him to what I have written to you. Give my letter to him, together with a deciphering of this paragraph in cipher, which is for him. Have it separately deciphered by a trustworthy person.

I write also to the Doctor de Puebla something about the marriage of the King of England, referring him at the end of the letter to you. Until I send another ambassador employ

Very high and very mighty Prince, King and Lord, After having kissed the royal feet and hands of your Highness, I have to inform you that I received the letter of your Highness of the 15th of March, sent by this courier. The Señora Princess of Wales sent it me on Tuesday of the Holy Week, the 30th of March. After having deciphered and read it, I went on Wednesday to the King of England to Richmond, which is eight miles distant from London. I found him still keeping his room in consequence of his last illness, which has been a very dangerous quinsy. During six days, it is said, he could neither eat nor drink, and he was in such a state that his life was despaired of by many. Now, thanks to God, his Highness is well, but he sees only a few persons. As soon as he knew that I had arrived he ordered that I should be introduced to his room, and I remained with him rather more than two hours, communicating, showing, and explaining to him in detail what your Highness had written to me. He rejoiced much at everything, and gave infinite thanks to your Highness. At last he said that, as I was aware, we were in the Holy Week, and that I must have patience until it was over. He appointed the second day of Easter to hear and negotiate with me, and [he said] he would not take off his hands from this business until a good arrangement had been come to. I did as I was bidden, went to London, returned the second day of Easter, and during the eight following days not one passed on which I did not speak in secret first with the King alone, and then with him and a few of his privy councillors together.

As for the prorogation of the [payment] of the dower, your Highness may believe that I had great disputes about matters of fact as well as of law, but at last the King of England made up his mind to consent to what your Highness wrote to me. Your Highness will see his letter, signed and sealed, which I send enclosed in this. I think he writes to your Highness frankly respecting the negotiations which have been carried on; and your Highness may believe that what he writes is the truth, as he has often told me by word of mouth, swearing by the faith of his heart ⁽¹⁾ that it is true. Your Highness will judge for yourself whether it is convenient to show this letter of the King of England to the ambassador of the King of France who is staying there. I did not content myself with the letter which is enclosed in this,

a Vña Alteza suplico en este tiempo de la prorrogacion mande complir los c.✓. escudos y en lo del apreciar de las joyas de oro y plata en aquello no habra mucha diferencia porque es como habeis contadas pero en lo de las joyas de piedras preciosas bien soy cierto que no se tomáran aqua sino a mucho menos precio de lo que alla se piensa y esto por algunas causas que aqui dire. la una porque a fama de rico son venidas al Rey de inglaterra muchas piedras preciosas de el Rey Alonso de Napoles y de el Rey Don Fernando su hijo y de otras partes y las ha habido por poco precio. y lo otro que en la postrera capitulacion que fernan duque concluyo no se pudo otra cosa

but asked him to give another similar one to the Señora Princess, and he promised to do so, and to declare that your excuses for not having paid the dower were sufficient. With respect to the time, I could not obtain a longer adjournment than until St. Michael's Day, which is five months and a half distant. As your Highness says that, with the help of God, you will be very soon in Castile, and then immediately provide for this case, and as the Señora Princess became somewhat impatient, I did not like to occupy myself any longer in these negotiations. I entreat your Highness to acknowledge my goodwill, which has been, and is in all things which regard your service, such that in this respect no one has an advantage over me.

I entreat your Highness during the time of the prorogation to pay the one hundred thousand ducats. With respect to the valuation of the jewels of gold and of silver, there will be no great difference, for they are valued as you have put them down in the account; but the ornaments of precious stones, I feel sure, will be accepted at much less than is there⁽¹⁾ supposed. The reasons thereof I shall state here. As the King of England has the reputation of being very rich, a great quantity of precious stones have been sent to him by the King Alonso of Naples and his son the King Don Ferdinand and other persons, and he has bought them at a very cheap rate. Besides, in the last treaty which Fernandique concluded,

• it was impossible to obtain more than what the value of these jewels was ascertained to be on the oath of dealers in precious stones and gems in this country, according to the price at which they could be sold. It was impossible to obtain better conditions, because the people here had made up their mind, owing to their municipal laws, to get two hundred thousand scudos instead of one hundred thousand, as your Highness will remember. I state all this that your Highness may give such orders that there may be no default in the payment within the time of the prorogation. I am of opinion that, if the said precious stones should be valued at a very low rate, it would be best to pledge them here for the price at which they will be valued and appraised, on condition, however, that they may be redeemed within the space of one year. During that year your Highness can see what is best to do in this matter. I beg your Highness not to say that I write anything of this kind, because if the King of England, and much more the Señora Princess, were to know what I write to your Highness, I should be placed in a disagreeable position towards them, and have to bear their ill-will.

Item.—Concerning the marriage of the most Serene Queen of Castile, your Highness wrote so admirably and so prudently that it seemed very good to the King of England and to those few privy councillors [who are initiated in the matter], and certainly, as far as I am able to judge, there is no King

If the Queen were to marry him, whether she be sane or not, I think that, having such a husband as the King of England, she would sooner recover than with any other, and your Highness would have the regency sure and undisputed. And if her infirmity should prove incurable, it would be no inconvenience if she were to live here. For it seems to me they do not much mind her infirmity, since I told them that it does not prevent her from bearing children. The answer of the King of England is, firstly, to thank your Highness very much for all you have written on this subject with so much love and goodwill; secondly, as your Highness wrote to the Señora Princess that after your arrival in Castile the King of England should send an embassy to enter into negotiations about this marriage, it seems to the King and to his council that when your Highness, with the help of God, has returned to Castile and consulted the Queen about this subject, and her Highness should be inclined to hear his ambassador about this marriage, or something similar, your Highness must write to him, and he would immediately send an ambassador to Castile with full power not only to conclude with your Highness this marriage and whatever else might occur to you, but also to contract marriage per verba de presentis with the Queen. As your Highness writes that you do not know the wishes of her Highness, I most humbly beseech you that after having spoken with the Queen you would be pleased to write what your will is, and if you should say that an ambassador may be sent, he will go without delay. I shall see that the ambassadors be persons very much disposed to the service of your Highness. As your Highness wrote that the treaty should be concluded there ⁽¹⁾, I did not think it proper to say much on its conditions and have listened only to what they said to me. • I conclude from it, and it is clear that, if your Highness could persuade the Queen to come and live in England, they would in every other respect propose conditions very favourable to your Highness. And above all, they wish that your Highness should retain the government and administration of the kingdoms of Castile entirely in your hands, and that [the revenues] should be divided as might seem best to you. Firstly, he thought it was reasonable to deduct from them as much as was necessary to cover the expenses of your Highness and of the kingdoms of Castile, and to pay to the Queen such an annuity as you should think just. I feel sure that, if your Highness would concede these two points, there would be no other difficulty. If your Highness should not be able to persuade the Queen to live in this kingdom, it would be well to answer that at first the King of England should stay at Castile. If that is done, I think they will make no difficulty about doing what your Highness wishes.

Item.—The letters which your Highness has sent by this courier have produced a favourable impression in two respects: In the first place, a good and gracious settlement has been come to with respect to the prorogation, which I do not a little esteem, considering in what state things were here. Secondly, ambassadors of the King of England had been appointed to go to the King of France, but in consequence of the letters which your Highness wrote to me they were recalled, and are to wait until it is known what your Highness decides about this affair.

One thing more, Señor. Your Highness must know that since the day I was informed of the departure of your Highness from Castile until this day I have been very ill and near death. I have spent much money. During the time I have held this embassy it has been the will of God that not only my eldest son should be drowned, but also that I should be obliged to sell whatever I have acquired or inherited in this world. Not an inch of land has remained to me. As long as I had property to sell, I did not much mind being left without any provision from your Highness, whom it was natural that my despatch to your Highness should also go in his bag. I did as I was commanded. Afterwards I thought it right to send this letter in the bag of a merchant from Lucca. The reasons which induce me to do so I shall state here, viz., in the first place, I wish to inform your Highness of the whole substance of my letter which I send in the bag of the Señora Princess; secondly, I wish to state the reason why I send the said despatch; and, thirdly and principally, I wish that, as war is raging in Italy, and this courier might be arrested by French soldiers (which God forbid), your Highness should know in substance all that is done and occurs here.

As for the prorogation of the payment of the dower, I did what your Highness ordered me, and the King, considering the reasons for its not having been paid up to this time to be sufficient, sends your Highness two letters, signed and sealed, which I am sure will be found satisfactory. It is true I could not obtain a longer postponement of the payment than until St. Michael's day, which is five months and a half distant. Your Highness will find the details in the other letter.

Item.—Concerning the marriage of the Queen of Castile with the King of England he wishes to be informed of the arrival of your Highness in Castile, and he will then without delay send an embassy. Hoping in God that the courier Perote will have no difficulty, and that your Highness will see

16. Very high and very mighty Lord,

• The letters of your Highness I received by the courier who is the bearer of these. They were of so recent a date that your favour and my pleasure were doubled. I kiss the hands of your Highness, thanking you for the care you take of me. All this has been very necessary to appease the fury which was raging here before the payment of the dower had been prorogued. The date of the prorogation your Highness will learn from the letter of the King of England. God grant that this period may be long enough, and that before it is over the payment may be made, for, if that should not be the case, it might well be said "the last is worse than the first." What I wish is, that, if possible, your Highness should not wait for the end of the term which has been granted, as an anticipation of the payment would atone for the last default. Although I beg this, I know very well that I cannot urge your Highness more than you urge yourself, but I speak of it because I wish your Highness to take some means to prevent these people from telling me that they have reduced me to nothingness. It is very difficult to endure such humiliations, being the daughter, although an unworthy one, of your Highness. I therefore wish that the ambassador who is to come hither should be a man who dares to speak an honest word at the right time. Your Highness has already informed me that you will do what I have asked, and the reason why I wish that Don Pedro ⁽¹⁾ should be sent is, because I think that if he wishes to do anything, he has all the ability to do it. Besides, he knows this country. Whoever knows this country has overcome one half the difficulties. ⁽²⁾ Thus, I should be glad if your Highness would send either him or the Knight Commander of Membrilla, and not Fernandique, although he has already been here. I once more beg your Highness that the person who is to come, whoever he be, may be a man of great experience, knowledge, and high station. All this would give him authority. Your Highness may believe that nothing contributes more towards the prosperity or adverse fortune of kingdoms than

Your Highness tells me that the new ambassador will be so well instructed about everything that no difficulty can arise here. I believe it, but if your Highness has read attentively my former letters you will remember that I informed you in them of the same thing as I write in this, viz., that my necessities have been so great, and have lasted so long a time, that I have been forced to sell my plate. A portion of it is therefore deficient, and will be as long as your Highness does not provide me [with money]. Although I let my servants walk about in rags, and they live in such misery that it is shameful to think of it, I cannot so much neglect my own person; and as there are no other resources left me, I am forced to live upon what I have. ⁽¹⁾ Your Highness knowing all this, as I have written all the details to you, I do not understand how you can command me to preserve intact my gold and plate because it is to form part of my dower. I have informed your Highness of this circumstance in all my former letters, that you may remedy it, and may know that there is not any doubt that with what is here the whole dower cannot be paid unless your Highness increases the amount which you are to send hither. I tell your Highness all this in order that you may be well informed, and make such arrangements for the pay-

For all of them, men and women, no longer know what to do, and I am at a loss what to say to them. If it is true that your Highness considers services which I receive as services rendered to yourself, I think there are no persons to whom your Highness is more indebted than to my servants. From the day that I arrived in this kingdom, as I have written to your Highness, they have always served me in the hope that things would be mended, and although nothing has been remedied up to this day, they serve me still with the same good will as though I granted them every day new favours. As your Highness is returning to Castile, I hope and take it for certain that you will give them at once all that is due to them. I am so glad your Highness is returning to Castile that I forget to think of your fatigues. The advantages are very great. Not to speak of the comfort and consolation of the Queen ⁽¹⁾, although that is also of great importance, I rejoice to think that the kingdom to which the Queen my lady ⁽²⁾ succeeded is to remain in the hands of your Highness, and will lose nothing of the prosperity and security in which she left it. that I have already a very good one. I have written to the General of the Franciscan Observant Friars that some learned Spanish friars are wanted here. I now beg your Highness to send them. Concerning what your Highness ordered me to tell the King in your name in answer to [his proposals] with respect to the Queen, I wish I could write in cipher as well as decipher; but I think it better to write in common writing than to trust to any one else. His answer is, that he values very highly the good intentions of your Highness, but as for the sending of an embassy, he would not like to do it before he had some certainty of obtaining what he desired. The reason which he gives is, that it would reflect dishonour on him if he were to send [an embassy] and nevertheless it [the marriage] could not be concluded. I do not think so. He, however, told me that he is ready to send [an ambassador] about some treaty which has been concluded, and says that if your Highness will write and inform him of the intentions which prevail there, and if they should be such as he wishes them to be, he will immediately send an ambassador to your Highness, with a treaty already drawn up and containing all he has promised, and also with full powers to do all your Highness may command. But if that cannot be done, he would in such a case not like to lose the other, which suits him perfectly well. Such was his answer. Concerning the necessity to keep it secret, I told him word for word what your Highness writes to me. As for myself, I can assure your Highness that I shall keep it, and in order to be more sure I have myself deciphered your ciphering without any assistance, although I am not used to such a thing. With respect to what your Highness orders me, viz., that I should always conduct myself as though God alone could undo what has been done, I have, in fact, always behaved in this respect with great circumspection and watchfulness. In order the more to confirm it, speaking with Doctor de Puebla only a few days ago about the present state of things, I asked him to tell the King that I resented it much, although I concealed my feelings, and that the most difficult thing for me to bear was to see the Prince so seldom. As we all lived in the same house, it seemed to me a great cruelty that four months should have passed without my seeing him. The Doctor told me the King had assured him that he did it for my good; for if your Highness knew this, you would make more haste in sending the dower. Thus, nothing has improved. Your fiat. Doctor de la Puebla, my ambassador and of my council, I have seen your letters of the 15th of April and those of the most serene King of England, my very dear and very beloved brother, which you sent with them. I have been much pleased with the good news you wrote me concerning his health and his prosperity, for I love him much and sincerely, and rejoice as much at his good successes as at my own. I beg you, for my satisfaction and tranquillity, to let me always have good news of him, for I think there is no prince in the world who is so glad to hear them as I.

With regard to the prorogation of the payment of the dower of the most illustrious Princess of Wales my daughter, which the said King my brother has granted to me, tell him in my name that I am greatly pleased and thank him much. I am rejoiced to see in this as in all other things his love for me. As soon as, with the help of God, I am in Castile, I shall take care to send him the dower with as much speed as though no prorogation had been granted. As I shall write to you all that refers to this subject by the person who is to go with the money, if God permits, I shall say nothing more about it here.

Concerning the marriage of the King of England my brother with the Queen of Castile my daughter, I am pleased with all which you write on that subject. The King of England my brother thinks it best not to send an ambassador until I write to him from Castile what the wishes of the said Queen my daughter and her disposition with respect to this marriage are. It seems to me that he is right in doing so. If this affair could be settled with the Queen my daughter during my absence, I would not wait until my arrival, but without loss of time endeavour and take every measure to ascertain her wishes in this respect, so as to be able immediately to give a definite answer to the King of England my brother about her wishes and inclination with regard to the conclusion of this marriage. That, however, is impossible to accomplish when I am not there, and to try it during my absence would do more harm than good in this affair. This is the reason why I postpone opening these negotiations with the Queen my daughter until I am, with the help of our Lord, in Castile. As soon as I arrive, I shall be very careful to ascertain whether the Queen my daughter is willing to marry, and if she is, I shall do all in my power to make her marry the said King my brother, and no one else. Tell all this in my name to the King my brother, and assure him that as soon as I see the Queen my daughter, I shall let him know as quickly as possible what she thinks of it. He may feel sure that he has already gained my goodwill. And you, Doctor, do not doubt that, if the said Queen my daughter is to marry, I shall not rest until the said marriage is concluded. For from various reasons, which are clear of themselves, and especially on account of the desire of the said King my brother to settle everything to my satisfaction, this marriage would be very advantageous to me, to the Queen my daughter, to our kingdoms, and to my grandchildren during my life and after my death. As it is my intention to write to you very minutely as soon as I learn in Castile the wishes of the said Queen my daughter, it is not necessary to say more here.

I send with this my answer to the letters of the most serene King of England my brother, with credentials for the most illustrious Princess of Wales and for you. England my brother, and no one else. I shall then let him know as soon as possible in what state I find this affair there [in Castile]. He may rest assured that he has my goodwill already, owing to the love I bear him and to his excellent personal qualities, as well as because, if the Queen my daughter is to marry, I know no Prince in the world who would be so acceptable to her, to myself, and to my grandchildren, and who would offer so great advantages for preserving all our states during my life and after my death, as the said King my brother, especially as he is determined in such a case to settle all affairs to my satisfaction. As he is so virtuous, so prudent, and so powerful, it would be a great comfort and advantage to me to have him during my lifetime for a son, and I am perfectly sure that he would do all he could to preserve and increase my honour and states as well as those of the Queen my daughter, and not try to injure them as he who is now dead has done; and in [the hour of] my death I should be comforted by the idea that I was leaving my daughter, my grandchildren, and all our kingdoms in his charge and under his government and protection. Therefore, as soon as, with the help of our Lord, I am in Castile I shall endeavour to know the wishes of the Queen my daughter, and let you know in what disposition I find her, that you may in my name inform the King of England my brother. If I find her disposed as he wishes, he will see by what I shall do in this affair the love I bear him, and I am persuaded that his behaviour will bear testimony of and manifest to me the same sentiments on his part. Very high and very mighty Prince, King, and Lord,
 After kissing the royal feet and hands of your Highness I have to inform you that I received by this courier your letters from Valencia of the 22nd of July. The King of England was hunting in the country, going from forest to forest and from one chase to another. He did not remain a single day quiet in the same place. It was, therefore, necessary to let the King know that the courier had arrived, and to ask him where his Highness would give me a hearing. I sent also to the Señora Princess the letters which came for her. The King decided without delay to go to a town which is called Woodstock (?), fifty-five miles distant from London. He informed me that he would be there on the 26th of July, that I might go there, and that he would give me a hearing without delay, and despatch my business. When I knew this, I bought the horses necessary for me and my servants in order to be in the said town of Woodstock on the 26th of July. I swear by the true God I was obliged to buy ten horses and all the outfit needful for me and my servants, in addition to what I and they had already. That was necessary because the King was accompanied by the ambassadors from the Pope, the King of the Romans, the King of France, from

Flanders, Denmark, and Scotland. On the 26th of July I arrived at the said town of Woodstock. Next day the King saw me, and I explained to him the letter of your Highness. Having heard all the details and conferred with me for two or three hours, he said to me that he wished to consult and see his council. This is what happened on that day. On the fourth day, after I had told him many things and given many reasons, which in my opinion were unanswerable, he decided to do absolutely all that your Highness wished. With respect to the prorogation, that which your Highness ordered to be written to me [will be done], as you will find by the letter of the King of England which I enclose. Thus this business is in a prosperous state. I feel sure that your Highness will do in time what you ought to do, or whatever perhaps may be convenient. Nevertheless I wish to state my opinion. As you have six months' time, your Highness can provide during that period for the payment of the dower by letters of exchange. At that court⁽¹⁾ there are merchants every one of whom has sufficient credit to be able to pay the King as much as one hundred thousand ducats, especially after the lapse of five or six months. During that time the exchange could be effected on very favourable conditions. The ducat would be accepted there for what it is worth here, and perhaps for more. If your Highness should be determined to do this, I would procure that as soon as the letters of exchange arrive, the Señor Prince should marry the Señora Princess per verba de presentis, and that within a few days their wedding should be celebrated with all the solemnity befitting the occasion. If your Highness for some reasons, which are unknown to me, should not like this, I humbly beg you to pardon me, for my intentions cannot be better than they are in all that concerns your service. You may consider it as a proof thereof that I refused to marry a rich wife and to accept a bishopric, only because I was afraid that it would displease your Highness. Surely that is a proof that I am a loyal servant, especially as I swear by the true God that all I had in this world, of houses and inheritances, I have sold and spent, and that not as much land as could be covered with the hand remains to me. I am more in debt than I can say, especially in consequence of this illness of thirteen months. To physicians and apothecaries one pays in this country incredible fees. My illness and infirmity attacked me suddenly on the day when I heard that your Highness had departed from that kingdom. If your Highness knew my constancy in your service, when King Philip who is now with God was here, you would acknowledge that I have rendered you services. I therefore kiss your royal feet and hands, and beseech your Highness to assist and to grant me something, for I am much in want of it; so much so, that I was obliged to send a servant of mine there ⁽¹⁾

[Common writing.].—Item. Very mighty Prince, King, and Lord, your Highness must know that the objects for which the three embassies from the King of the Romans, the King of France, and from Flanders were sent are the following: the ambassador of the King of the Romans came to complain of the King of France, saying that he had entered into negotiations with the Princes Electors of the empire and all the other Germans, about his being made emperor, and had employed means without end to have the Cardinal of Rouen, made Pope. Moreover [he complained] that the King of France had an immense ambition, and desired to usurp and take by force the countries and dominions of his grandson. Further, he endeavoured to induce this King to declare war against the King of France. Moreover he asked this King to lend him money on good security, consisting of fortresses; and, lastly, he spoke about the marriage of Madame Margaret with this King, and about the marriage of his grandson with Madame Mary, daughter of this King.

The ambassador from Flanders is Don Diego de Guevara. [He has come] to inform this King that the King of France has declared war against all the dominions of Burgundy, and has forcibly invaded them, with the exception of Flanders and Artois, because these two provinces always recognise the King of France as their sovereign lord, and the appeals go from them to the parliament of Paris. He asks succour from this King to defend the dominions of Burgundy, and also to continue the war against the Duke of Guelderland, in whose favour the King of France has declared with all his power and might.

Item.—The embassy from the King of France came to tell this King that what the King of the Romans had published in Germany, Italy, and France, viz., that the King of France desired to be made Emperor, and then to make the Cardinal of Rouen Pope, is a gross falsehood. He has never entertained such an idea, and this King ought not to believe it. As for the Duke of Gueldres [he said] it was true that he was to assist him in defending his dominions, being obliged to do so.

As for the other things, it seems to me that this King wishes to keep peace and friendship with the King of France, especially since he saw and read the letters of your Highness, [by which he learnt] on what perfectly friendly terms your Highness lives with the King of France. He gave unbounded praise to your Highness for having so plainly informed him of this, and I assure your Highness that the ambassador of France was aware of this circumstance and thanked me very much, saying your Highness had shown that you were a true friend of his King. And as for the money, and his marriage with Madame Margaret, and that of his (the Emperor's) grandson with his daughter Mary, the answer consisted in general and courteous words without any significance.

Item.—The answer to the ambassador from Flanders was nothing but vague generalities without coming to any conclusion or effect.

that at present he would not meddle in these affairs, as they concerned the King of the Romans and others rather than him.

Very high and very mighty Prince, King, and Lord, may the most Holy Trinity preserve and prosper the life and royal estate of your Highness, and grant you many more kingdoms and dominions, and the accomplishment of all your wishes. Amen.

From Woodstock (?) on the eve of the nativity of our Lady, September of '507.

After I had finished this letter I spoke again with the King, who amongst many other things told me that, although it did not concern the King of England to defend the dominions of Flanders, as he had told me, he would, nevertheless, send an embassy to-morrow to the King of France to beg and persuade him to abstain from such a war. He sent also six horses and some greyhounds to the daughter of the King of the Romans, and showed me this French letter which I enclose for your Highness. I had no time to translate and send it in Spanish.

Your Highness' humble seryant kisses your royal feet and hands.

Muy noble Señor,

aqui escribo al Rey nuestro Señor lo que V. M. vera y en sustancia es que en lo de la prorrogacion fise y procure con este Rey fuese contento de aquello platicando primero tantas cosas y razones ynvencibles que si aqui las oviese de dezir seria largo proceso pero en fin veo a este Rey tan bien edificado como propio fijo, y por dios verdadero que si alla se pudiese concluir el casamiento para el Rey de ynglaterra seria muy cierto por cierto ⁽¹⁾ muy mejor que fue el archiduque pues si vña merced supiese los ofrecimientos y caricias deste Rey es cosa maravillosa, so cuya esperanza todo quanto se le offrece de partes de el Rey de Romanos y de el Rey de francia y de otros estima en nada y con mucha razon y si plaze a dios que esto pueda en conclusion venir grandisima cosa me parece seria y con las primeras cartas que de alla vengan en que se diga la buena ynclinacion del dicho matrimonio sin dilacion yra alla su enbaxada de el Rey de inglaterra con entero poder para lo poder fazer y concluir y quanto todo esto oviese de cessar no se ha perdido nada.

Very noble Lord,

With this I write to the King our lord, what your lordship will see. The substance of it is that I persuaded the King to consent to the prorogation. He alleged at first so many facts and insuperable reasons that it would be a long process to state them here. At last, however, the King became as well minded as a true son ⁽¹⁾, and by the true God, if the marriage of the King of England could be concluded, he would most certainly be a much better one than the Archduke was. If your lordship knew all the promises and all the love of this King, you would be astonished. Under the influence of his hope, he esteems as nothing all that is offered to him by the King of the Romans, the King of France, and others, and with good reason, for if it please God that this should take effect, I think it would be a very fine thing. As soon as the first letters from thence mention that there is an inclination to conclude the said marriage, an embassy from the King of England will leave without the least delay with full power to negotiate and to conclude the affair. Even if all this should come to nothing, nothing would be lost.

Concerning the marriage of the Señora Princess, if the King our lord sends me letters of exchange for the payment of the dower towards the end of the month of March, and if these letters of exchange are accepted, I hope in God to procure that within a few days after the arrival of these letters of exchange the Señor Prince and the Señora Princess shall marry per verba de præsenti. According to law the marriage which has been concluded has only the force of a marriage per verba de futuro, because the defect of age has not been dispensed with. Moreover, they will not only marry within a few days, but with the help of our Lord the wedding will also be celebrated with all becoming solemnity. In the letter which I write to his Highness, I mention the names of Genoese and Florentine merchants who could pay the said letters of exchange. I imagine this would be very much to the interest of his Highness.

I should be thankful if you would correct any error in these letters. Neither the place where I write nor the writing-desk are such as to enable me to write well. I was very desirous besides to satisfy the daughter ⁽¹⁾ with respect to the prorogation. She was very anxious, and imputed the fault to me, but at last I have satisfied and contented her.

I beg your lerdship to write to this most serene King by every courier whomf the King our lord sends here. His Highness values your letters very highly and [wishes] to have your good news, and besides he is such a virtuous person and without falsehood.

Item.—I write to his Highness imploring him by his boundless virtue and charity to be pleased to assist and to provide for the Doctor de Puebla⁽¹⁾, for I swear by the true God I know that he stands in greater need of it than it is permitted or modest to state here. He can be provided for by a letter of exchange; not such a one as those which I have mentioned when speaking of the payment of the dower, but one payable within six or seven months after presentation. Our Lord preserve the person and estate of your lordship, and augment and prosper it for His holy service. Amen.

tomar al Rey de ynglaterra mi Señor en este tiempo que es el de sus caças ha tardado tanto el despacho del correo por que nunca ha assentado en lugar a do con el se pudiesse negociar fasta agora, en especial estando el dotor de la puebla en disposicion que de su casa a palacio ha de ir en litiera que esto faltaba para que fuese del todo bien cunplido. el Rey de ynglaterra ha dado liberalmente el despacho segun me dixo como Vña Alteza se le demanda y segun lo que conozco antes huelga que no le pesa destas prorrogaciones puesto que muestra otra cosa, porque el en ello no pierde nada antes gana, si bien Vña Alteza lo mira, porque segun el ha dicho en tanto que con el no cumplieren piensa que tiene a mi atada y a su fijo suelto, y no es de edad para que le pese porque espere, assi que syenpre es para my la peor parte porque como a Vña Alteza tengo escrito estas dilaciones doblan mis trabajos porque no le parece que es nada suficiente que yo pueda pasar con no cumplirse con el lo assentado ni se le de nada de los inconvenientes que para ello ha habido ni hay.

Very high, &c.

[The difficulty] to catch the King of England my lord in this his hunting season, has much delayed the despatch of this courier. For until now he has never remained in any place where business could be transacted with him, especially as the Doctor de Puebla is in such a condition that he has to go in a litter from his house to the palace. With respect to that which was still wanting to complete the payment [of the dower] the King of England has given a very liberal answer, and, according to what he has told me, [granted] all your Highness' demands. Judging from my knowledge of him, he is rather glad than sorry for these prorogations, although he would make us believe the reverse. He does not lose anything thereby; on the contrary, if your Highness considers it well, he is the gainer. For, as he has told me, as long as he is not entirely paid, he regards me as bound and his son as free. He [his son] is not yet so old that delay is disagreeable. Thus mine is always the worst part; for, as I have written to your Highness, these delays double my difficulties. To him it seems that it is by no means sufficiently [bad] that I suffer by the non-fulfilment of the treaty; he takes no notice of the inconveniences which I have had and still have.

What he now does is to glorify himself for his magnanimity in waiting so long. Because your Highness has his business in your hands, he keeps himself apparently more within bounds than usual, in order that you may not oppose him; but in his deeds he has never improved. What will be in the future I do not yet know. This is what I answer to the Doctor de Puebla when he speaks to me of the goodwill the King of England now shows. I say to him that I do not know who prevents him from fulfilling his good intentions, if it is not he [de Puebla] who carries on the negotiations with him. I therefore beseech your Highness not to believe what the Doctor de Puebla writes to you, if it is not in accordance with what I state. For he is more a vassal of the King of England than a servant of your Highness, and he cannot do otherwise than praise what he has bedaubed with mud⁽¹⁾. Would God your Highness were truthfully informed of how affairs are carried on. What I beg your Highness to do is to read my former letters, and thereby judge what the present state of things must be, and then to give such orders as may seem right to you. They come every day to affront me, and to ask [payment]. Especially since your Highness sent me the two thousand ducats I am in the greatest difficulties in the world. I did not know which wants to satisfy, and thought the most necessary was to redeem the plate which I had pledged, and pay some debts which it would have been shameful not to pay. Besides, I had to buy things most necessary for myself, so that I could not pay my servants. I tell your Highness all these details, which I would rather not state, in order, that your Highness may find means to ascertain by whom I and my men and women are to be provided for. They are in absolute misery, and I know no other remedy than to inform your Highness of it, hoping that you will amend all. With respect to the marriage of the King of England, he urges me much that I should press your Highness, saying to me that at all events he wishes that there should be no delay in the answer which you have to give him. As many reasons as there are, and more, I give him, [and say] that he may confide in your Highness, that it is not necessary to urge your Highness more than you do yourself, and that he may be easy about everything which is in the power of your Highness to do. He also commanded and insisted much that I should write to the cardinal,⁽¹⁾ asking him to consider this affair as recommended to him, because he is a man who can much oppose or much favour it. I answered that he conforms himself so much to the wishes of your Highness, that all which your Highness may think right he would also consider to be right, and that I did not know whether your Highness would approve my speaking of this business, and as your Highness had above all commanded me to keep it secret, I could not communicate to him more than your Highness would tell him. Most high and mighty Lord,

I despatched a messenger on the 23rd of September by way of Flanders, with letters from me, in order that they might be committed to a courier, who would convey them from Antwerp to your Highness. On account of not being sure of the safety of letters sent from England, it would have been dangerous, or at any rate might have been considered suspicious, if it had been known that another courier had been despatched, it being so short a time since the last one set off. Therefore it was necessary for me to send my letters by the above mentioned route.

Your Highness will learn by them that the cause which induced me to write to you with so much haste was that I had discovered Doctor de Puebla had been making attempts to prevent your Highness from carrying out your intention of sending a competent ambassador to come hither together with the dowry. For that reason I made known my wishes very plainly to your Highness, although in all my former letters I had given you to understand the same thing. But I feared as abovesaid, that the Doctor would make false promises to do more than he would or could accomplish. Moreover, as your Highness is not able to see what passes here, I also feared that the Doctor might succeed in making your Highness listen to what he wished, rather than to the truth, and to what I have asked you for. On this account I have written so soon again. For I wish to undeceive your Highness respecting what is requisite for your service, and the remedy to be found for me. I assure your Highness that I have not changed from what I wrote. It seems to me that Doctor de Puebla is sending this courier to your Highness, and he has told me to make haste. But as I do not know whether what he writes be true, I beg your Highness that nothing which he may say or write to you may be credited, excepting in so far as it shall agree with what I say. For if what I say be contrary to what he reports, your Highness may be assured that what he writes is also contrary to the interests of your Highness. Your Highness must not hasten or inconvenience yourself, whatever Doctor de Puebla may say to your Highness in order to make you go beyond what I have asked. For as I have hoped for the best in the most troubled seasons, I am not going to ruin myself ⁽¹⁾ now that your Highness is in a state of such increased prosperity. This I say, because Doctor de Puebla puts more difficulties than ever in the way of my marriage being concluded. For instance, he has told me, and also the King of England, that an ambassador of his, who is in France, has written to him, saying the King of France told him that when he saw your Highness he asked you if my marriage was to take place, and that your Highness said it had not taken place, nor did you believe it would be concluded. The King of France told this to the ambassador of the King of England, that he might give his master information of it. When Doctor de Puebla said this to me, I answered nothing. But when the King of England told me, I answered that I could not bear to have such a thing said as that your Highness had spoken differently from what you had written in your letters. I also gave him to understand that your Highness could not say that a thing would not be done which was already irrevocable. I also said that, even if this were not so, your Highness knew what my wish was, namely, that I should not be taken out of the power ⁽²⁾ of the King of England even if I were to die for it,

(1) Literally to drown myself.

(2) The meaning of the Princess of Wales is that she would rather die in England than give up the marriage.

supiese morir, bastaba para poner a Va. Alteza entero contentamiento, y por aquy dixele otras muchas dulçuras con que le agradase, y todo me lo paso muy bien y me respondió que el bien sabia que Vña Alteza lo deseaba porque era lo que mas le cunplia, mas que no sabia que era la causa que aquello le avia fecho dezir, y nunca le pude sacar de afirmar que Vña Alteza lo havia dicho de lo qual me plugo mas de lo que mostre si el assi lo pensase. en fin yo le satisffize bien en muchas maneras que seria largo de decir y sienpre mostrando que esto no se podia desfacer porque por darme a conocer el que no habia nada fecho sino que Vña Alteza por su parte y el por la suya podian determinar de sus fijos en otra manera, y yo entendiendole dile a entender que no le entendia, o que no lo queria tomar por lo que el me lo dizia.

asi mismo en lo de su casamiento me dixo juntamente con esto que avia sabido como el Rey de francia enbiava enbaxadores sobre lo de Mos^{or} de fox y que tenia en este caso mucha largura la qual le es dañosa por que el esperaba presto una enbajada del Rey de Romanos en que le trayan assentado el casamiento de la duquesa de saboya para el y el del principe don Carlos para su fija, y and that that would be sufficient of itself for your Highness. ⁽¹⁾ At the same time I said many flattering things to him, with which I pleased him, and everything went off very well. He replied to me, that he well knew your Highness desired my marriage, because it was a matter that suited you well, and that he could not tell what was the cause which had led to such a thing being said. I could not draw from him the avowal that he really believed that your Highness had said it, which pleased me more than if he had believed so, but I would not show it. Finally, I satisfied him well in many ways, too long to repeat here, always showing him that my marriage was a thing which could not be undone. When he gave me to understand that there was nothing done which need prevent your Highness on your part, and him on his, from disposing of your children in another manner, I told him that I could not comprehend him, and that I did not like to take it in the sense he meant.

Also, with regard to his marriage, he told me conjointly with the other story, that he had heard how the King of France had sent ambassadors respecting the marriage of Monsieur De Foix, and that there was much delay in the answer to be given to his proposal. He said this was injurious to him because he was expecting an embassy to come shortly from the King of the Romans, who were bringing him the assent to his marriage with the Duchess of Savoy, and the marriage of Prince Charles with his daughter. It occasioned que le era mucha confusion estar indeterminado esperando la respuesta de Vña Alteza. por esso que me rogaba que escribiesse a Vña Alteza dandole mucha priessa por que cualquiera que fuesse la respuesta la desseaba para saber lo que habia de fazer, mas yo le temo sino es su voluntad porque me ha declarado parte de su grado, porque agora con este cebo como a Vña Alteza tengo escrito estan enmendadas sus muestras aunque en las obras nunca hay mudança y tambien creo que el dotor de la puebla es causa de que se me fagan agora muchas çalemas assi por lo del Rey como por tenerme contenta, pensando que no hay mas en mi de lo que yo le muestro y que no bastare para entendelle sus mañas y fazer saber a Vña Alteza la verdad de lo que cumple a su servicio, sino que me contentare con sus promesas como si no lo toviese experimentado. yo disimulo con el y loole todo lo que faze y assi mismo le digo que soy muy bien tratada del Rey y que estoy muy contenta y todo lo que veo que puede aprovechar para con el Rey pues es de su Consejo y no le osare dezir sino lo que quiero que el Rey sepa. porque en los tienpos pasados se ha probado con el lo contrario, y a me ha sido dañoso y no me ha aprovechado para haber ningun remedio que a todo lo him great perplexity, he said, to have to remain undecided while he was waiting the answer of your Highness. On this account he begged me to write to your Highness, requesting you to make haste. For that whatever the answer might prove he wished to have it, in order that he might know what to do. But I should be afraid of him if the answer were not to accord with his wishes, for he has partly declared to me his intention. I bait him with this [the marriage with Doña Juana], as I have written to your Highness, and his words and professions have changed for the better, although his acts remain the same. I also believe that Doctor De Puebla is the cause why they humble themselves so much to me, as well on account of the King ⁽¹⁾ as to keep me contented. For they fancy that I have no more in me than what appears outwardly, and that I shall not be able to fathom his designs, or to acquaint your Highness with the truth as respects what is requisite for your interests, but that I shall content myself with his promises as though I had not had experience of them. I dissimulate with him, however, and praise all that he does. I even tell him that I am very well treated by the King, and that I am very well contented; and I say everything that I think may be useful to me with the King, because, in fact, De Puebla is the adviser of the King, and I would not dare to say anything to him, except what I should wish the King to know. On former occasions I tried the contrary course with him, but it was injurious to me, nor was

I therefore considered that the better plan was to dissimulate with him, and to take no notice of his being ambassador, as he does none of the things which belong to such an office; especially now his illness has laid him so completely aside that he could be of no use even though he were to desire it. He is nearer to the other world than to this. Whenever I speak to him, he does nothing but beg me to write and assure your Highness that he is performing wonders. I tell him to have no anxiety, for I always take upon myself the office of writing to your Highness the truth respecting what he does. He has likewise told me I ought to write to your Highness, begging you that when you write to the King of England, my lord, you should also write to the Lord Chamberlain, because he is the person who can do most in private with the King. As it seems to me that to do this will be of use rather than an injury, I think it well to entreat your Highness to write to him with much love. Tell him that I have written to your Highness to ask him to see what he can do here for me, and how much your Highness will be pleased if he does so. Make him, moreover, many offers on your Highness' part and on mine, so that Doctor De Puebla may not give it out for his own doing. The great affection he has felt, and still feels, towards your Royal Highness from that time until now, is well known. I could not in truth express, even though I were to use much paper, the pleasure which my lord the King and I felt on hearing that the King, our lord and father, had returned to Castile, and was abiding there with your Highness, and that he was obeyed throughout all the kingdom, peace and concord prevailing everywhere. It is true that I have experienced, and am still experiencing, some sorrow and depression of mind on account of having heard, a few days ago, that the French have taken a large and beautiful city called Tilmote, (?) belonging to my nephew, and that all his subjects and the whole land are in great fear of the French. Wherefore, as a remedy for everything, and not less for the destruction and chastisement of the Duke of Gueldres, his rebel, I have ventured to write these lines to your Highness, entreating you to hearken to my wishes respecting this matter. I have, moreover, written to my lord the King, our father, about this business, which is of great advantage and importance to your Highness, to the increase of your state, the tranquillity and welfare of your subjects, and

In addition to all this, it will double the affection subsisting between my lord the King, our father, and my lord the King of England. Doctor de la Puebla, my Ambassador, and of my Council,

I have seen your letters of the 3rd of September and 5th of October, and the letters of the most serene King of England, my brother, which you sent me by two messengers. I had great pleasure in learning the good news respecting his health and prosperity which you write me. For, certainly,
I bear him the love of a true brother, and rejoice and am pleased to hear of his prosperity and good success as much as of my own. I am also glad to know the good news which you write me about the most illustrious Prince and Princess of Wales, my children. Our Lord guard all of them, and may
I hear always as good news of all of them as I desire.

I was also pleased with the prorogation of the payment of the dower, which the most serene King of England, my brother, sent me, and with the gracious manner in which he

granted it. Well knowing the good reasons which he had for doing so, I did not expect anything else from his Serenity. Tell him in my name the great pleasure I have received from this, and that I thank him much. I hold it for certain that before the time of this last prorogation is over I shall send him the payment of the dower, and provide for everything to his satisfaction. You did very well to inform me of the names of the merchants through whose banks the money can be sent by bills of exchange. Thus, I can choose the manner which seems best to me, but in one way or other I certainly shall, as I have said, fulfil my obligations within the time mentioned. When I send the said payment I shall write to you how I think that the marriage between the illustrious Prince and Princess, my children, is to be performed. You say that the ambassador of the King of England in France wrote that the King of France told him in secret that I had said that the marriage of the said most illustrious Prince and Princess of Wales, my children, was not concluded, and that I did not even think that it would be concluded. Such a thing has never been said or dreamt of, nor can a single word [to that effect] be remembered. On the contrary, the King of France held and holds this marriage for concluded, and I know that he would not do anything to its prejudice. The English ambassador in France wrote that the King of France has sent me an embassy about a marriage of the Queen of Castile, my daughter, with Monsieur de Foix. That is also a falsehood. I am very angry that such things are said there as never have been thought or dreamt of here. These are things which I would not do for the empire of the world, and I know well that the King of France would not tempt me in this matter on any account. As the things which the English ambassador in France writes are untrue, it is unreasonable to believe them. The ambassador whom the King of France has sent to me has only come to reside at my court, and, as we are friends, to inform me of his good news. That is true as gospel, and the King of England may be easy in this respect.

Concerning the marriage of the King of England, my brother, with the Queen of Castile, my daughter, as I have written in former letters, if the Queen, my daughter, is to marry, I shall never consent that she weds with any one else than the King of England, my brother, and shall employ with the greatest love and goodwill all my industry and energy [to promote] that. But you must know that the said Queen, my daughter, still carries about with her the corpse of King Philip, her late husband. Before I arrived they could never persuade her to bury him, and since my arrival she has declared that she does not wish the said corpse to be buried. On account of her health, and in order to content her, I do not contradict her in anything, nor wish that anything be done that could excite her; but I shall endeavour to persuade her by degrees to permit the corpse to be buried. When I arrived she had made up her mind that, on the anniversary of his death ⁽¹⁾, the usual honours should be paid to the King her husband, and until the ceremonies of the "end of the year" were performed I did not like to mention the marriage to her. When the ceremonies were over I touched on this matter, in order to know whether she was inclined to marry, without, however, mentioning any person. She answered that in everything she would do what I advised or commanded, but that she begged me not to command her to give an answer to my question until the corpse of her husband should be buried. That done [she said], she would answer me. Considering these circumstances, I do not urge her until the said corpse shall be buried, because I think it would rather produce an unfavourable impression. I have sent to Rome for a brief, in order to try whether she could thereby be persuaded to bury the corpse sooner. When it is buried I shall again speak with her, in order to know her intentions with respect to a marriage; and if I find her inclined [to marry], I shall not permit that it be with any one except with the King of England, my brother. I shall then also write what I think of the conditions, with respect to which I have great pleasure in knowing that the said King, my brother, is so ready to consult my interests and my honour. I am the more obliged to him for this.

As for the war between Flanders and the Duke of Gueldres, you know that after the Queen my daughter, the Prince Don Carlos my grandson, is my heir. For this reason, and because I consider him as my son, I wish him well, and have to take care of his interests as much as of my own. I have written about this war to the King of France, begging him and insisting that his troops may not injure or attack the dominions of the Prince, my grandson. He has answered me that out of respect for me he would like to behave towards the said Prince, my grandson, as I do; but that the Flemings began the war, took from the Duke of Gueldres two towns, and besieged a third. Being his ally, he was obliged to see that he was not destroyed. He succoured him, therefore, and the troops which were sent in aid took two towns in the county of Hainaut. It was all the fault of the Flemings, who refused any treaty of peace or truce with the said Duke of Gueldres. He has, however, ordered that his troops shall not do any more harm to the dominions of the said Prince, my grandson. If the persons who have the government of Flanders in their hands should wish it, all these difficulties could easily be arranged, and they might have a peace or truce until it was decided which party was right. It was not his fault if that was not done. I send now again to the King of France, my brother, and write him that he should bring about such a treaty, because it is not suitable for the tender age of the Prince, my grandson, to have war, but only to live in peace, and to preserve and keep his dominions free from troubles.

I have also been much pleased to hear that the most serene King of England, my brother, is so much inclined as you say to make war upon the infidel enemies of our holy religion; for that is the thing I most desire in this world. If God our Lord should be pleased that we arrange the other affairs well, I hope that in this⁽¹⁾ we shall render Him great services.

I am very sorry that you have been ill, and am glad that you are already better. May our Lord be pleased to give you good health, and you may be sure that at all times I shall consider your affairs as much recommended to me. Your servant will bring you my orders concerning your private affairs.

Very illustrious and most reverend Lord,

Your most reverend Lordship sent the Bishop of Mallorca hither (to Tordesillas) to pacify and compose the quarrels and disturbances which had taken place here, ordering that every one was to continue in the discharge of the duties which had been entrusted to him during the lifetime of the King our lord, who is now in glory. No changes or new arrangements were to be made, but everything was to remain in the same state as it had hitherto been. The Bishop, acting in the name of your most reverend Lordship, particularly ordered me to continue in my office as heretofore, and gave the same instructions to all the other (officers), communicating to them the power which he had received from your Lordship. from this town heard what had been decided upon, their malice and envy increased, and then they pretended that it was my fault that the Queen our lady was not restored to health, and that she had been a prisoner whilst the King her father lived. This is the source from which sprang all that your Lordship has heard about this affair. The Bishop, instead of reproaching and punishing them, for which purpose he had been sent, has shown the greatest favour to my rivals, enabling them to combine and to send messengers [to the Cardinal], more with the intention to do me injury than for any other purpose. And I see, from what your Lordship has ordered, you believe what they have told, and think that I am what they depict me to be. Your lordship has amidst your great occupations forgotten to consider that so wise a King, and one whom your Lordship knew and loved so much, would not have shown me such confidence if I really were so bad. How can your Lordship, being well acquainted with, and so perfectly knowing the condition and infirmity of the Queen our lady, nevertheless believe and think that I committed such a fault as to neglect the health and the service of her Highness. I have never been in fault or committed any error towards her. Her Highness having succeeded in the kingdoms of Aragon, who could hope to receive greater favours from her than I, who am a born subject of these kingdoms, and have served her Highness so long, and have continually been in the company of her Highness? But if God created her such as she is, it is impossible to effect more than His Divine Majesty permits and vouchsafes, and the King her father could never do more until, to prevent her from destroying herself by abstinence from food, as often as her will was not done, he had to order that she was to be put to the rack to preserve her life. Was that my fault? It was not in my hands nor in my power to avoid it. I cannot believe that your most reverend Lordship, who possesses all the wisdom and discretion of the world, and, I think, knows who I am, is unaware that I am prevented by malice, envy, and ambition from exercising the office I hold. When I asked your most reverend Lordship to send me permission to return to my house, you were pleased to refuse it, and to order that I should continue in my place as hitherto. Now, however, you have appointed the Doctor Soto and the Father Guardian, Fray Juan de Avila, and, together with them, no other person than the said Bishop, to give orders to the women who watch her Highness, and to do all I should have to do, removing me from [my office], and declaring me suspected [of attempts] against the health and life of her Highness. I did not expect, my Lord, such reward for my services, nor did I think that such affront would be done to my old white hairs by treating me in that manner. It would have been a better favour to concede me the dismissal from service which I had asked. If I had been called upon to account for that of which I was accused, I should have done it so thoroughly that your Lordship would have been satisfied. Unhappily I feel that I received such an affront because I was not trusted. It is true that when I remember the loss caused me by the death of the Catholic King, all other losses seem small to me in comparison. I will receive as a favour whatever your Lordship is pleased to do, but must implore you, out of respect to the memory⁽¹⁾ of the Catholic King who left me in this place, not to permit me to be treated in this manner. Since the Prince our lord, and your Lordship in his name as well as in your own, were pleased to order that I should remain here, and that no change should be made, was it right to do what has been done? As I asked to be relieved from my duties, no affront would have been done to me if my demand had been granted; but now I am dishonoured, as though I had badly served her Highness. My desire to do nothing except my duty has prevented me from leaving this place, although I see that I have nothing to perform, the office which I held being divided and confided to other persons. Wishing to be able to give a good account of myself and the office which I have held, I served faithfully and diligently the Catholic King whilst he was alive, and am ready to serve the Prince our lord, and your Lordship, who is his lieutenant, and because I have had and still have this intention, all these difficulties have been created for me. My conscience does not accuse me, and having done my duty I

I am satisfied with myself. Thus, for whatever has happened or may happen in future to me, I shall thank God and kiss the hands and feet of your most reverend Lordship, ⁽¹⁾ who may decide on my life as you are best pleased. You may command me to return to my house in an honourable way, pensioning me as my age and the time [of my service] require, ordering that in recompense of the sacrifice of my time as well as of money I shall receive wherewith to live in my house. If, however, I am to continue my services here, [I beg you] to order that I be trusted as my faithful services during so long a time and my age deserve, and to preserve to me that authority and honour which I have always enjoyed. Your most reverend Lordship may choose one of these alternatives, and I shall receive either as a signal favour. I cannot omit to remind your Lordship that during the seven or eight years in which I have been the governor of this royal household and Court, it has, God be thanked, been governed like a monastery and order of most honest friars, and now I see the consequences of it. I beseech your Lordship not to forget that I have always been your servant, and that you have offered me favours and promised to take care of me. As it is now in the power of your Lordship to fulfil your promises, I beg you to be pleased to do it, and to order that a speedy answer be sent

By the King.

I have seen what you have written to me by the Count Don Hernando de Andrada, and have heard all that he has told me by word of mouth in your name. It has afforded me great pleasure to see him, as he seemed and seems to me to be such a person as you state. A Prince who has such vassals and servants as this, in whom so many qualities concur which are desirable and even necessary for the welfare of a kingdom and the service of a King, owes great gratitude to God. All he told us in your name is of great importance; and I clearly see what great pains you take in all that concerns my service and the welfare and pacification of those kingdoms. For all this I am much obliged to you, as it is reasonable I should be,

muy encargado de vos como la razon lo requiere y como por mis obras conocera todo el mundo en las cosas que os tocaren.

sobre todo e praticado con el conde y con algunas personas de mi consejo muy largamente, pero visto que son muchas y de diversas calidades y avemos tenido ocupaciones en otras cosas grandes que buenamente no se podian ni debian diferir avemos tomado conclusion en solas tres cosas que nos parecen las que por agora tienen mas necesidad de ser proveydas.

la primera toca a la guarda de la Reyna mi Señora la qual por la diversidad de las opiniones es muy necesaria. y a parecido al conde que seria bien que de aca se enbiase una persona natural⁽¹⁾ estas tierras. por muchas razones me ha parecido bien su parecer, pero porque yo aun no e señalado persona para ello mucho os ruego y encargo que entretanto que yo nonbro y enbio alguna persona, que vos tengais manera como seyendo muy bien tratada aya aya⁽²⁾ tan buena guarda y recabdo que sy algunos quisieran alterar my buena intencion no puedan, y en esto aya gran cuydado y por que a ninguno pertenece mas mirar por la honrra contentamiento y consolacion de la Reyna mi Señora que a mi los que en esto quisieren meter la mano no ternan buena intencion.

and as I shall make known to the whole world by my deeds in everything that concerns you.

I have had long conferences on all these subjects with the Count and with some of my Privy Councillors, but as the subjects are many and of different kinds, and as we have been much occupied in other great affairs which cannot well and ought not to be delayed, we have come to a conclusion on only three points which seem to us to stand in the greatest need to be decided at once.

The first of these concerns the custody of the Queen my lady, which on account of the difference of opinions is very necessary. The Count thinks it would be best that a born subject [of] these countries should be sent from here. For various reasons I think well of his advice; but as I have not yet chosen such a person, I must beg and command you meanwhile, and until I choose and send such a person, to make arrangements that, whilst she is to be treated well, she be so well guarded and watched that if any persons should endeavour to counteract my good intentions, they shall be prevented from doing so. In this respect great vigilance is necessary. Since it belongs to nobody more than to myself to take care of the honour, contentment, and consolation of the Queen my lady, those who endeavour to meddle [in this affair] cannot have any good intention.

The second point concerns the German infantry. We think sobre el tercero articulo que toca en lo de la gente de caballo asi de ginetes como de hombres darmas con la otra posta que partio antes desta os escrebi que todo lo que haziades avia por bueno, como quiera que yo estava puesto y estoy en que se haga la menor novedad que se pudiere hazer, pero visto el celo que teneis al servicio de dios y mio y al bien y pro comun desos rreynos y que vos que sois presente veis mejor lo que es necessario, digo que todo lo remito a vos para que hagais lo que os pareciere que mas conviene a la buena administracion de la justicia y pacificacion dese rreyno. en todas las otras cosas que el conde traxo por memoriales sentendera luego y con la resolucion dellas se despachara el conde por que veemos como vos decis que su persona sera alla mas necessaria y muy provechosa.

la ciudad de malaga nos a hecho saber que en aquella costa ay muy mal proveymiento y que sino se remedia podra recibir toda aquella tierra muy gran daño. yo me tengo por dicho que your advice is good, and therefore we shall directly send Count Felix, of Wirtemberg, to enlist them. The said Count is a German, a kinsman and servant of ours, and a good captain. We are of opinion that these troops will render services in many respects, and I therefore beg and command you to give orders immediately that the money for three month's pay be sent without delay.

About the third point, that is to say the cavalry, light horse as well as men-at-arms, I have already written to you by the last courier that I approve of all you have done. Although I have been and still am of opinion that the least change possible should be made, nevertheless, considering your zeal to serve God and me, and to further the well being and common weal of these kingdoms, and considering further that you who are on the spot are better able to see what is necessary, I say that I leave all for your decision, and you may do what you think is most conducive to a good administration of justice and the pacification of the kingdom. All the other business mentioned in the memoirs which the Count brought shall soon be taken in hand, and the Count will bring you our decisions, for we think you are right in saying that his presence there is very necessary and advantageous.

The city of Malaga has informed us that that coast is ill provided for, and if it is not remedied the whole country may receive great injury. I suppose you have already taken

the necessary measures, but for my own satisfaction I beg and command you again that if you have not yet provided for this contingency you do so.

I have been much importuned on the part of the Count of Lemos to suspend the lawsuit of the Marquis of Villafranca, and to restore to him the fortresses which, as a measure of security, the King my lord took from him and sequestered. I am willing to show him favour because he is as good a person as you know that he is, and also because he served very faithfully the King, my lord and father, who now enjoys eternal glory. As, however, I am not inclined to change anything, and wish to know your opinion, which you have not stated clearly enough, I beg and command you to send me directly your advice, and meanwhile to keep the affair in the same state in which it is at present; but it must be done in such a manner as to make it appear as though it were only in consequence of the auditors being too much occupied, or from other reasons, and not in consequence of an order from us. Whilst we are absent it is necessary to temporise.

We send you also the letter about the Holy Inquisition, which is as you wish it. On all the other points we shall soon come to a conclusion.

We say nothing more on other subjects because you will have our decision on them in our letters to the Dean.⁽¹⁾

By Pedro Darrada I received a bundle of duplicates of the letters which were delivered to me at Arras. As I have already answered them, as well as [your letters] on the cruzada, I shall reply here only as to what regards the health of the Queen. Chièvres and the Chancellor were of opinion that I should not speak about it to the King. So I did not. Thinking to render a service to Hernan Duque, I am now ruining him. For according to what I see they speak here proæter formam of her health, and that not because they wish it. They are very dangerous people, and one must hold one's tongue here. daughter of the Duke of Cardona. The King has given the lieutenancy of Pamplona to Herera, and has sent [his nomination] with the courier, who had brought the news of the vacancy of Cordova. I have already informed your Lordship of the death of the King Don Juan, although it was then not yet certain. Your Lordship may believe they are very decided to retain that kingdom, and will not give a single turret belonging to it for the sake of reconciliation or for any other purpose. I learnt from a letter of the Bishop of Avila that the power which was sent for the Duke of Najera was not forwarded to him. That cannot remain a secret because it was made public here, and two servants whom he has here most probably have already written about it to the ambassadors of that kingdom who had already left. Your Lordship may provide for this case as you think best. The Constable of Navarra complains that your Lordship has taken his fortresses, etc. from him. I have told them that, considering his behaviour, it is a great favour that the King does not take his life. Those here decide everything without asking the advice of any one. I do not know what they will do. Doña Ana De Beamonte vexes them much. The letters of exchange for the 20,000 ducats caused them great pleasure, and, certainly, they hold money in higher esteem than any good government in the world. The King is much pleased with the fit precautions your Lordship took in Naples, but even more with the money you have lent. Ten days ago they sent in great haste a courier thither, I think to ask for money, but he did not take with him letters from any one. Your Lordship ought to make provisions with respect to the couriers who are sent hither, for the King learns the news earlier from other persons than from you, also about the state of the finances you must send him information sooner than any one else, because De la Nuza and the party of the Queen are pushing themselves forward in every respect. The state of things is such that all the officers of the Catholic King are received here and take service. Quintana already holds the same position as formerly, with the exception of the ciphering of [the despatches] to Rome and the affairs concerning your Lordship, which I have asked should not be entrusted to him before your wishes are known, on account of his resentment in consequence of what has been done to his father-in-law and his grandfather. The inquisitorship of Aragon is given to the ambassador⁽¹⁾ in compliance with [the wishes] of your Lordship. The same is to be said with respect to the see of Córdoba. Your supplication about Badajoz was met with goodwill. 29. Very mighty Lord,

The Queen our lady has spoken with me oftentimes, and told me that she desired to go out, and that I was to accompany her. Every time that she spoke to me on this subject, I answered that the weather was bad for her health, and her Highness ought not, therefore, to go out; but as soon as the weather should be good, I would let her know, and then she could go out. Every time that she speaks to me about her going out, and that is often, she insists on it very much, but hitherto I have prevented it, making use of the best words possible. Her Highness has likewise told me to call some grandees into her presence, because she intends to complain of the manner in which she is treated, and wishes to know about her affairs. I replied to her Highness that the grandees would do nothing in this affair, because the Catholic King and they, together with the whole kingdom, have settled the manner in which her Highness was to be treated, adding that I knew that your Highness had come to this kingdom ⁽¹⁾ principally with the intention to see that satisfaction be given to her Highness in this and in all other respects; and that although you have not succeeded in this, your Highness is still animated by the same wishes, and endeavouring to remedy the position of her Highness,

She showed great satisfaction in hearing it, but still insists on going out, and on calling the grandees into her presence. In order to persuade me to do what she desires, she speaks to me such good words that I feel aghast how one in the condition of her Highness can pronounce them, and the Marchioness and I find it difficult to withstand and to prevent these and many other things. Your Highness, however, must not be afraid. With the help of Our Lord, neither this nor any other thing that is not advantageous ⁽²⁾ to you will be done.

On the evening before the day of Santiago she beat two women with some large brooms ⁽³⁾ which she had snatched from them. When I heard of it, I entered her room and said: "What is this, Señora? Ought your Highness to comport yourself in this way towards those who serve you with so much zeal? The Queen your mother never so treated her servants." Seeing me, she rose to explain the reason why she had beaten them. The women thought she would beat us all, and ran away. When they had left the room, the

Would God our Lord that she were to continue so as it is necessary and as I wish. Where you and the Marchioness are nothing less can be expected. I beg and command you very particularly to mind the health and good treatment of the royal person of her Highness, which I know you will do. Considering the reasons you mention, I think you were right not to permit her to go out. With respect to the conversations which her Highness holds with you, you must be very careful in answering her what is suitable; and, the affairs of her Highness being of such a kind as you know, you must not consent that any of the women or any other person be present when she speaks to you about them, nor ought you to speak or write any thing concerning her Highness to any other person except to me, and always send [your letters] by trusty messengers. For that is necessary; and although it is superfluous to tell this to a person who is so prudent and so much attached to our service as you are, I nevertheless tell it you because the case is so delicate and of so much importance to me. I write to the most Illustrious Infanta my sister, telling her to follow in all things your advice and that of the Marchioness. As for her dresses, the Marchioness may make

I received the letter from your Highness of the 19th of the present month. With respect to the service and good treatment of the Queen our lady, all that your Highness commands is done and will be done in as far as it is possible. present when her Highness speaks to me, as well as by keeping the secret, as it stands to reason. As for my writing, I shall observe the orders of your Highness. Even when I wrote to your Highness to Aranda, I did so with my own hand, as your Highness has seen, because I did not trust my secretary. Thus it is that nothing from here has been written to any one except to the señor Infante, because the señora Infanta knew that he was about to depart [from Spain], and it seemed to me unavoidable to send him a message of courtesy. I wrote to him that the Queen our lady was better treated than she had been before, thinking it advantageous to your Highness that the better treatment of her Highness should be known in these kingdoms, and everywhere else, and that it was due to your Highness. Besides this I wrote to the señor Infante on the occasion of his departure what a good vassal and servant of your Highness ought to write, but if he had remained a hundred years in these kingdoms I should not have written or told him a word of what is going on here. Your Highness may believe that all that I hear [from the Queen] will be faithfully [kept secret], from respect to myself as well as to the interests of your Highness. From here I have to inform your Highness that the Queen our lady, as I have written to your Highness, has improved in eating, in going to bed and rising; she does it more regularly. 34. To His Majesty.

What Pedro de Arues, my secretary, is to tell the King, my Lord, is the following.

Hoping that the Marchioness and I were sufficient to keep these women who serve the Queen our lady in order and subjection, I have hitherto avoided giving annoyance to His Majesty, but as they have now for so long a time continued their irregularities, it is, indeed, no longer possible to conceal it from His Majesty, who ought to remedy it. Amongst other things, they go so continually out of the palace, paying visits in the town, that there is no wedding, no baptism, no burial [of people], to whom they are related in the fourth degree, to which they do not go. It has been impossible for me to prevent them from doing so, for even my orders to the guards not to let them go out have had no other effect than that they have much complained of me. And out of these visits have arisen many things which ought to be avoided. For instance, they cannot refrain from speaking to their husbands, relations, friends, and gossips, of things which ought not to be known, because in all that passes here, secrecy indeed is necessary. Members of the Council of State have told me things which they could not have known, except from the licentiate Alarcon, Relator of the Council of State, who is married to one of these women, Leonor Gomez, who is very loquacious. All that passes here ought to be a secret from all, and much more so from the Members of the Council. Another inconvenience is this, that they bring from the town so much news and so many things to speak of, and that then, in consequence of their speaking with one another about them, they come to the ears of Her Highness, who derives no advantage therefrom, and is deprived of her rest and tranquillity. Moreover, they often delay what they are bound to do, excusing themselves with their own opinions on the matter, or they do it too early and too often. They have gone so far as openly to tell the Marchioness that the King alone has the right to dismiss them. I clearly perceive that I have committed an error in not earlier informing His Majesty of this state of things. I, for one, was always of opinion that it was inconvenient to employ married women, and much more so the wife of a Privy Counsellor, who, indeed, is not one of the most moderate, but one of the most disorderly of them all. Whilst she is here, and has an opportunity of speaking with her husband and other persons, I do not know how she can be prevented from telling what ought not to be known, and from bringing news which are inconvenient. I ordered two of these women who had shown little respect to the Marchioness into my presence, in order to reprimand them, and commanded them not to leave their rooms until I should permit it, and although they have obeyed, they have combined and mutinied like soldiers, saying that what is done to one is done to all of them. The ground of all this is that they believe that I cannot dismiss them, even if they commit great faults. You are to supplicate His Majesty to be pleased to give an order empowering me to remove any of these women, and to give her place to another, in case that she does what she ought not to do, or refuses to obey what the Marchioness and I command. This is necessary, for in no other manner can the Marchioness and I fulfil our duties, nor can His Majesty avoid great injury and annoyance. His Majesty may believe that this will suffice to subject them. If I dismiss any of them, it will be from such weighty reasons that His Majesty will thank me for it. Although it may be ordered that before dismissing [any of these women] I am to inform His Majesty of it, yet the order must not contain this condition, but only state that the Marchioness and I are empowered to command what they have to do, and if any one of them does not strictly execute our orders, to dismiss her, and give her place to another woman. You can say that Maria de Cartama is not one of them, but on the contrary serves well and without interruption. I believe that without such an order we cannot serve His Majesty, nor can the secret be perserved nor that done which the case requires. You will

The health of the Queen is good, but her other indisposition is not very well during this hot weather. That is usually every year the case, during this season, for the hot weather is unfavourable for her indisposition.

As for mass, we are daily occupied in this affair. It has been delayed in order to see whether it cannot be done with her consent, for that would be much better. With the help of God, her Highness shall, however, hear it very soon.

The towns of this province are very unhealthy, and if this town, which God forbid, should be infected, his Highness must order what ought to be done in such a case. The places which are healthy, and where, it seems, her Highness could go to, are Arevalo, Madrigal, Hontiveros, Olmedo, and Zamora, if his Highness orders the Chancery to make room. If it should be necessary to go to some place in Aragon, his Highness can arrange it there, and order what is to be done.

His Highness ought to send some one to visit the Queen, and send her some object of gold or some jewelry to gladden her. The Catholic King used to do so, and her Highness was very pleased at it.

The expenses for the table plate of her Highness are one hundred and fifty thousand ⁽¹⁾ ducats a year. In the wardrobe is a good number of ornaments of gold which are of no use, and could be converted into plate. Five hundred marks would be necessary, for, according to the manner in which her Highness is served, two sets of plate would be necessary. The one hundred and fifty ducats a year would thereby be economized, and her Highness would be properly served.

The Marchioness converses sometimes with her Highness, who likes her very much, and her Highness is also pleased that the daughters of the Marquis should enter the service of the Señora Infanta.

Very high, very catholic, and very mighty Lord,

Yesterday, at 7 o'clock in the evening, I received a letter from your Highness, dated the 6th of the present month. God be praised that your Highness enjoys such good health as we desire and stand in need of. Be it so always.

The anxiety which your Highness has for the health of the Queen our lady and the Señora Infanta is very praiseworthy, and nothing else than this could be expected from your Highness, especially as our Lord is pleased to give such bad health to this province. I have taken measures of great precaution, walling up all the gates of the town, with the exception of two, at which I have placed guards, by command of the Queen our lady. Now, in obedience to the commands of your Highness, if greater precautions can be observed, the watch will be made stricter.

Seven or eight days ago I sent a servant of mine with a long letter to your Highness, in which I wrote all that had occurred here, and, among other things, I mentioned the bad health of this province, adding a list of towns where the health is still good, and where the Queen our lady and the Señora Infanta could go to in case that this place should become infected. He is probably already arrived. I beseech your Highness immediately to send me your orders what is to be done in such a case. For this is a matter which does not suffer delay, as others do. Although it is necessary to take great care of the health of the Queen our lady, the necessity [to take care of the health] of the Señora Infanta is much greater still, considering her age and her accomplishments in every respect. God protect her! The departure from here would be a very difficult thing to accomplish, and after having tried all possible good means without effect, it would be necessary to [employ] force, which cannot be done unless I have an order and the permission of your Highness, whom I entreat to let me know by letter.

After I had written to your Highness by a servant of mine that Arevalo, Madrigal, Olmedo, and Toro, if the chancery were removed from it, would be towns in one of which

Al. y sy esta sana pareceme que aquel seria el lugar donde Su Al. podria estar mejor asi porque no es grand lugar como porque no ay en el personas que puedan poner enbaraço en nada, y sy este no estuviere bueno, yo sabre luego de çamora que tal esta y lo hare saber a V. Al. como quiera que la poca salud que ay en toda parte me haze tocar en lugar fuera de proposito de lo que para Su Alteza conviene.

sy tal necesidad viniese sera menester una mula para la Reyna N. - the Queen our lady could stay, I have been informed that Madrigal is unhealthy, Olmedo surrounded by places where the mortality is great, and Arevalo is in the same predicament. Toro also is unclean, because it has not been possible for them to keep at a distance those [who come] from Valladolid. Thus they have been infected. I write by this courier to the Corregidor of Aranda to send information about the state of health in that town to your Highness, and if its sanitary conditions are good, I think that would be the place best suited for her Highness to stay at; for it is not a large place, and no persons live there who would become troublesome in any way. If this should not suit I shall soon know how Zamora is, and let your Highness know. The state of health alone is the reason why I think
- of this place, which in other respects is not suitable for her Highness.

If this should become necessary⁽¹⁾, a mule for the Queen our lady, with a saddle and trimmings of kersey, and another mule with trimmings and a saddle of black velvet for the Señora Infanta would be required. It would be best that your Highness should order them to be provided from your stables, because her Highness has no mules, and Valladolid and Medina being infected, it would be somewhat difficult to procure them.

Most serene and very powerful King and Lord,

Today, Sunday, the 12th of September, it has pleased the divine goodness of God that the Queen our lady has heard mass, and her Highness has the will to continue to do so. The Marquis and Marchioness proceed with great caution in this affair, as in all other things which concern the service of the Queen our lady and the Señora Infanta. They deserve great favour from your Highness. As the Marquis writes a long letter to your Highness about all that passes here, I refrain from annoying you any longer, and pray only to God our Lord, as much as I can, to guard your Highness, to preserve your life, and to augment your royal states for the sake of his glory and service and the welfare of these kingdoms.

Very high, very catholic, and very mighty Lord,

I received a letter from your Highness, dated 24th of August. God be praised that your Highness enjoys as good health as his vassals and servants desire. Be it always so.

What I have to tell from here is that the Queen our lady and the señora Infanta are in as good health as your Highness can wish.

From the moment that your Highness has commanded that I should see that her Highness might hear mass, I have especially occupied myself with this subject, and it has pleased our Lord to order that her Highness yesterday consented that mass should be said [in a chapel] constructed out of drapery at the end of the corridor in which your Highness saw her Highness. A canopy of black velvet and black damask had been erected for this occasion. When her Highness came out [of her rooms] she prayed at the altar, and was besprinkled with holy water. When the confession began she went down on her knees, and remained kneeling

When the sacrament was raised and received she was still on her knees, and chanted Paternosters and Ave Marias so loud that they could be heard. When the evangelium and the pax were brought to her, her Highness refused to accept them, and ordered that they should be given to the señora Infanta. When mass was concluded her Highness returned to her room; and to day she has heard mass in the same manner. With the help of God it must be procured that this be continued. None was present at mass except the priest who said it, the guardian, and a boy of the chapel. Your Highness ought to give thanks to our Lord, for although her Highness is in another disposition than your Highness according to your love and veneration for her could wish, it has pleased God to direct her on the way to His knowledge and her salvation.

The father guardian, tutor of the señora Infanta, is not only a virtuous priest, but he has also done, and still does, what he can concerning the saying mass, and omits nothing to instruct the señora Infanta in the true doctrine.

which your Highness gave before leaving here will be fulfilled. For, in fact, to leave this place would be a very troublesome thing. The inconveniences would be so great that, if the señora Infanta were not here, I would rather risk anything in order to avoid the scandal which would be the consequence. I hope to God he will remedy it so that it may not be necessary [to leave this place]; but if it should be otherwise, I would let your Highness know by a flying courier, so that you could order what would have to be done. For to go to Sant Pablo de la Moraleja, as your Highness has ordered, would have two inconveniences. In the first place, a great number of villages which are infected are very near it; and, secondly, a great number of persons visit that convent twice a year, and that is in my opinion a great disadvantage, on account of the prevalence of illness, as well as on that of the disposition of her Highness. If her Highness should be obliged to leave this, your Highness should select a place for her where she can remain for ever, and where the house is convenient for her reception. If that should be the case what your Highness has commanded would be done. It is very desirable that your Highness should order the chapel ⁽¹⁾ to be finished where the corpse of the King our lord, who is in glory, can be deposited by the side of the bodies of the Catholic King and Queen, our lord and lady, who are in glory.

I am very sorry that the Emperor has died; for the King our lord has not only lost such a lord and father, as he was, but the conjuncture in which his death has occurred makes us, who desire the welfare of and an increase of power for his Highness, regret it the more. The contents of the letters which the King our lord writes to me, viz., that the negotiations are in a promising state, have given me great satisfaction. Please God our Lord that this business may be soon concluded in such a manner as the service of the King our lord requires, and that he may enjoy this ⁽²⁾ as his other kingdoms, during many years.

This affair is so important to the King our lord and to his crown, that all that can be done seems to be little in comparison of its importance. May our Lord direct it as your Lordship wishes. Your Lordship has directed and still directs this business with so much vigour and prudence, that, if you had never rendered another service to his Highness, this one alone would suffice to entitle you to higher favours, and I, as your true servant, am very proud of what I see [that you have done] in this case.

The Queen our lady continues in the same state as I have already written. It would be good if the King our

The Queen our lady has said all these days that she intends to visit [the convent of] Santa Clara during the holy week. For that purpose she has ordered that her dresses be cleaned, because she wishes to put them on when she goes out. Servants of her household and even citizens of the town affirm that I keep her Highness prisoner, because I do not permit any one to speak with her Highness, in order not ⁽¹⁾ go out on such days to the church, and hereafter I intend to prevent her by all means from going out. Should that, however, be impossible, it shall be done in such a way that, with the help of God, no inconvenience will be the consequence. Your Highness may be without fear.

After my last letter to your Highness had been written, a priest died of pestilence in two days and a half and others have been struck by it. The disease is of so serious a character that great precaution is necessary, the Queen our lady and the Señora Infanta being here; and I am the more afraid, as during the periods when the moon is growing or decreasing there have always been people who died or were attacked [by pestilence]. I beseech your Highness to order a letter to be written to me, stating what I ought to do, in order that by complying with it I may fulfil my duty.

received from the late Queen our lady, your grandmother. The Queen our lady asked him whether he received now all that which he received during the lifetime of the Queen her lady. He said yes. Your Highness may believe me that, if her Highness knew that the contrary is the case, she would much resent it, because she has known the Doctor a long time, and bears him goodwill. He would already long ago have gone to his native place, had I not told him that your Highness will do him justice. It would be good if your Highness would provide for him, because he is an honourable man and an old servant, and wherever else he might live he would gain more than here. He is an old man, and cannot live much longer. It would not sound well if it were said that, after having served so many years, he had retired because he was deprived of what formerly he had always received. Your Highness may decide. I have no other consideration in this, as in all other things, than to see what is for your interest, whose very royal person may our Lord protect and prosper, augmenting your royal states.

44. To his Highness. From Fray Juan de Avila. 8th of June.

Very catholic and very mighty Lord,

The Queen your mother and our lady, and the señora Infanta, your sister, enjoy at present good health. Her Highness asks me always to tell her whether this place is healthy, and wishes that, if it were not so, I should tell her truly. I have said to her Highness that at present it is very healthy. She continues to hear mass, and is well disposed to serve God our Lord. I beseech your Highness not to forget the duty you have to take care of the honour and service of your mother. For that is the will of God, and His holy commandments enjoin it, that first you ought to procure the salvation of her soul, and then to take great care of her honour, her service and comfort, as a servant of God and a true and blessed son. If your Highness does this, you may be certain that God will take care of your Highness and make you very happy and successful. As the Mayordomo Beltran, a servant of your Highness, goes there (to King Charles), I beg your Highness to believe what he tells you as to what is necessary for the service and household of the Queen your mother. I implore the all powerful God to guard and favour the life and states of your Highness.

A fortnight ago the Queen our Lady called me into her presence and detained me six hours. The conclusion was that she complained of her women, asked me about the health of this town, and the health of Valladolid, saying that if it [Valladolid?] was healthy her Highness would like to go [there]. I told her that the mortality there was great, and I would tell her that even if its health were good. She asked me about the grandees, saying that she wished that some of them should come, because she wanted to speak with them, and [said] that it was very wrong of me that I had not sent for them as she had asked me to do. I answered that I had sent for them, but that in consequence of the bad state of health they were not in this province. She ordered me very urgently to write again. I said that I would do so, but

For this and other reasons which would be long to write I do not permit any one to speak with her Highness. It is, however, impossible to prevent her from speaking with the Doctor Soto, who comes to visit the señora Infanta; and, besides, she asks so frequently for the High Steward, that sometimes it cannot be avoided that she speaks with him. Under such circumstances I should like that your Highness should order this business to be despatched. As for the claim of the Doctor, I have always upheld it; and with respect to the High Steward nothing is to be increased, and he will take it as a favour and be contented. Your Highness ought to order that it be despatched, because I know it will be good for your service, and that is the reason why I write to your Highness, whose royal hands I kiss. The Marquis.

The Queen our lady has been very excited during these last days. She asked in great haste for the treasurer Ochoa de Olanda, that he might give her money. She said that all was hers, and that they should give it to her, as she wanted it. I have not permitted the treasurer to enter where her Highness is. On the contrary, I have told him to go and mind his business, and he has done so.

Her Highness wishes to go out on the day of All Saints. In truth, if I had not to consider other things than the shame to which Your Majesty and your vassals would be put—although that is not to be esteemed as little—I should almost have permitted her going to Santa Clara, where her Highness intended to go, if only to undeceive the people. But there are other things of higher importance which must be considered.

Five or six days ago, the Queen our lady called me into her presence, and told me that she had asked certain sums of money from the Treasurer Ochoa de Olanda, and that he had not given them to her. She begged me to see that the money should be given to her, as she wanted it very much. I answered that I would ask the Treasurer, but that I had no power to do anything in this affair, because all that was paid to him was only for her table, and her kitchen, and her servants, and that the Treasurer says that when money was given to her Highness it was at the command of the King our lord, her father. She told me to write to his Highness begging that he should instantly order it. As to what I had said that I could do no more than ask the Treasurer, [she said] that I was not the man who had no power to do in her service what she commanded, and that I should not remain here if it were true that I had to petition for it. I replied that that [the money] which her Highness demanded was something extraordinary, and as the Treasurer was not provided with it, it was necessary to beg him to give it, and that even this would not be sufficient if the King our lord did not give it to him [the Treasurer], and order him to pay it ;

Her Highness said: it is good. She asked about the señor Infante ⁽¹⁾ [and said] that, when I told her the other day that your Majesty was Emperor, she thought that that was in consequence of the death of the señor Emperor, but as it was otherwise it was no longer necessary that the Infante, her son, should stay there ⁽²⁾, and that she wished very much to see him, and she asked me to find means that he might come. I said: Señora, the señor Infante is now staying with the Emperor, because he has brought it about that the Empire is given to the Emperor your son, and wishes that the señor Infante should, during his (Charles') absence, be there and occupy himself in despatching some affairs. For I think he feels that he is old and tired, and wishes to repose. She said, It is good; and remained a long while meditating without speaking a single word. Afterwards she said: Which grandees are staying in this province? I answered that none of them were now here, because some of them were staying with your Majesty in Barcelona, others in Malaga with the King her father ⁽³⁾, and again others in their houses. She asked which of them were in the one place and in the other. I distributed them as well as I could. This conversation lasted more than four hours. I must repeat what I have already said on other occasions, viz., that it is necessary that no one sees her Highness, because the truth is that she speaks words which would deceive every one; and this and whatever else the service of your Majesty requires will be done.

After this letter was written the Queen our lady called for me, and told me to write to the King her lord ⁽¹⁾, [asking] his Highness to order that she should be better treated, and that the things she demanded should be given to her with less difficulty; for she did not like to show him disrepect, as many of the grandees of the kingdom wish. I said: "His Highness treats your Highness as is reasonable, and your Highness ought to show him that respect which is due to him, and not mind what the grandees may like for their own interests, and not in order to serve your Highness. Who will take better care of this [your interest] than your father?" She discontinued [her complaints], and said that I spoke well, and that she would talk with me the next day. Your Majesty may believe me that she speaks words to move stones. No one knows it, and there ⁽²⁾ no one must know it, except some one in whom your Majesty places as much trust as in yourself. In fact, for writing certain things I should like to have a cipher.

Imperial, sacred, and catholic Majesty,

I have told the Queen our lady that the King my lord, her father, is alive, because whenever anything that is done displeases her Highness, I say that the King orders and commands it so; for the love she bears him makes it easier to her to endure it than it would be if she knew that he is dead. This, moreover, is in many other respects advantageous for your service.

Since I wrote my last letter to your Majesty, her Highness has twice spoken with me. She ordered me to write to the King, her lord,⁽¹⁾ telling him that she can no longer bear the life she leads, that it is so long a time that he has kept her locked up and a prisoner, and that, being his daughter, he ought to treat her in a better manner; that she wished to live where she could know what was going on, and see the noblemen of the kingdom; and that if she had wished it, a great many grandees had proposed it to her.⁽²⁾ I said that when the King chose this town for her Highness to live in, it had been because it seemed to him to be the best place where she could stay, being situated in the centre of the kingdom. Her Highness was served and treated as was reasonable, and if the King, her father, had followed some of those

But as his Highness loved her and treated her as is reasonable, her Highness should not say anything about it. She answered that she had spoken to me to lighten her heart. She also complained that the Infante ⁽¹⁾ had been taken from her, and said that since the death of her husband she had no other comfort but him and the Infanta; that they have now told her that he had gone to Flanders, and although he is there in a better land than this, she would, nevertheless, like to have her son where she could see him, and that she was afraid lest they might give him there something to kill him. On this subject she added a thousand other apprehensions. I said that Valladolid was not a place where her Highness could conveniently stay, on account of its bad sanitary condition as well as of her dress. She tells me every day that she suffers here so much from toothache that she cannot bear it. I said to her Highness that we all suffered, but that that was the fault of the weather and not of the place. She insisted so much that I said at last that, as her father had sent her to this place, no change could be made until he should come in person, or a letter were written to him. She told me to write directly [and send the letter] with great care and speed. There we stopped. She, however, afterwards called me twice into her presence, and asked when the answer will come.

In Valladolid, Medina, and other places it has been said that the Queen our lady is kept a prisoner, and that it would be good to bring her to Valladolid or to some other large town. They do not say it because they believe it, nor because they desire her good. I think your Highness ought to know this, and to consider the subject; for if there should be some disturbances in this kingdom, it would be no wonder if, in order to give a pretext for their offence, they should avail themselves of this, as has been the case in times past. Very magnificent Señores,

We have received the letter of your Lordships, and seen the testimony of what you have negotiated with the Queen our lady. We have been and still are much rejoicing at all this, and thank your Lordships for the account you have been pleased to give us. If there really was negligence on our side in not sending a speedy answer to the letter which your Lordships wrote us when you were leaving the town of Medina, we do not think that our negligence was so great, or continued so many days, as you state in your letter; for we have answered the first letter of your Lordships, and also the second. In our first letter we gave our answer to what your Lordships had written about your march to Tordesillas, and we are astonished that our letter has not come to your Lordships' hands. The same things which we wrote in it to your Lordships we wrote and answered also to their magnificent Lordships the Procurators of the General Junta in the city of Avila, who had written to us the same as your Lordships; and our answer to the one party as well as to the other was, that it was a very good and well conceived plan to go to the town of Tordesillas,—whither your Lordships were invited

That was and is our will, and so be it done. Thus we ask your Lordships that it may be done and accomplished; and as the will and command of her Highness has been declared in this matter, as it appears from the testimony which your Lordships have sent us, and as she afterwards has spoken more clearly, and answered with so much wisdom and prudence as she has done, we give many thanks for it to our Lord, because it is evidently the work of His hand. May it please God to direct us, so that we may do what is for His service, and leads to the common weal of these kingdoms, and may He will and permit that it be accomplished. For as the intention of us all who are interesting ourselves in this affair is so upright, it seems to us that the form and manner which we ought to observe in watching the person and royal household of her Highness must be concerted with the señores Procurators of the General Junta, and arranged and executed in accordance with the will and with the consent of the council,

53. To His Majesty. From the Cardinal of Tortosa. ⁽¹⁾ Last day of August.

Sacred, Imperial, Royal, and Catholic Majesty,

On the 28th of the present month I received the letter of your Highness, dated the 20th of the same month, and in answer to it I shall state minutely in this letter what is suitable. As for the affairs of this kingdom, it seems that they are on the way to utter ruin, if the hand of God does not interfere to remedy and arrange all. There is not a single town that could be reduced to obedience without a full pardon for all that has been done. The revolted cities have a great army in the field, and Valladolid, although she calls herself loyal, has sent one thousand foot in aid and succour of them. Medina, after the lamentable fire and burning, has delivered the artillery of your Majesty to Juan de Padilla and other captains, who entered Tordesillas on the 24th of this month. It is said they will carry off the Queen our Lady to some place of their choosing. The inhabitants of Tordesillas refused to admit your Majesty's troops, and now they let those of Toledo enter. They have during these tumults and disorders often asked the Queen to give orders. Her Highness has answered with prudence in some respects, although she added some things, from which it is easy to understand that her Highness is not perfectly in her right mind. The people, however, accept only what suits them and serves their purposes, and do not like to consider or take into account any thing that is contrary. It is said that the Marquis of Denia is disliked by all the servants of her Highness. He let me know on the 29th of this month that he was almost a prisoner, and had been ordered not to leave the fortress. Although they have endeavoured in various ways to induce her Highness to sign, they could never prevail upon her, nor is it believed that they will succeed. It is said that the Procurators who have assembled in Avila wish, by the authority of the Queen, to nominate a governor or governors, and detain and seize all the money, and to do other similar things. Almost all the cities, and even Burgos, Valladolid, and Guadalaxara, are ready to send Procurators to that assembly, and certainly I do not see how, nor have I means, to prevent them if your Majesty does not permit and give me power to pardon all or some, according as might seem best to us, for all that has been done, as I have stated. Every day the passions and the ill will of the towns become fiercer against all who are supposed to have been instrumental in attempting to carry out or in carrying out of these kingdoms sums of money for your Majesty. None of the Procurators who have

The President, Zapata, Vargas, Don Alonzo de Castilla, Vozmediano, and his brother, Suarez, and even the Comendador Mayor of Castile, and many others, have fled, in order to escape such danger. If all go, I must at last follow them; but we do not know where we can stay with security in Castile. I have said that I would and made up my mind to suffer for them, remaining here until all who are afraid are gone. They do not permit us to go together, and if I went first they would certainly detain the others who were left behind. All the grandees, all the wisest men of the kingdom, and I are of opinion that it is necessary to use clemency, and pardon that which in other times could not be forgiven. Otherwise worse things than have already been committed might be the consequence of their rebellion, and no other resource might be left than a great army and war, the success of which is always doubtful. I beseech your Majesty to order that an answer be given to me immediately. I will do my best to use the power which your Majesty may give me with the utmost limitation possible.

They say that your Majesty does not care for these kingdoms, and therefore does not provide in time for what is necessary. If they should once obey another king, it would be very difficult and even impossible to regain these kingdoms. They reproach me for not sending a long time ago some gentleman to your Highness in order to give information by word of mouth of all that has occurred, and of the state in which the kingdom is placed; for they do not believe that the letters which are written to your Highness are read to you, although I know, and say, and affirm that they are.

To his Majesty. From the Cardinal. 4th of September 1520.

Sacred, imperial, catholic, royal Majesty,

When I had now quite lately written to your Majesty by Rodrigo Niño, who was to inform you particularly of all the affairs of these kingdoms, things have come to such a pass that they⁽¹⁾ think to make a sacrifice, persecuting all those who have offered themselves to serve your Majesty in searching for money. They burn houses, commit robberies, and the lives of those whom they capture are not safe. The city of Jaen has also revolted, removed the magistracy, and done the same as the other rebels. The worst of all this is, that for everything they make use of the name of the Queen our lady, as of a person who is perfectly sane and able to govern, thus taking all authority from your Highness, in order that they may not be called rebels, but appear only to obey her royal commands. Quite recently, on Saturday last, first of this month, when the captains, that is to say, Juan de Padilla, for Toledo, Juan Bravo, for Segovia, Luis Quintanilla, for Medina, and Juan Zapata, for Madrid, had molested and teased her Highness with the fiction that Fonseca intended to carry her off, and bring her to another better fortified place, and to conduct the Señora Infanta to another [place], separate from her Highness, they told her that they had come to serve her, and to impede and prevent this⁽¹⁾, as well as many other things, in the interest of her service. And at last these captains wished to know from her Highness whether she ordered the Junta of the cities which have votes in the Cortes to come to Tordesillas. Her Highness answered them, Yes, and that it would please her. Two notaries drew up a public instrument, which they sent to different cities, inviting them to come to Tordesillas. It is to be supposed they will procure other mandates of a similar kind, that is to say, to dismiss the members of the Privy Council, and to order that no foreigner be permitted to be governor, that no money be exported, and other things which may occur to them. If that is done—and it is believed that it will soon be done—the whole kingdom will renounce obedience to casi todos los criados y servidores de la Reyna dicen que Su Alt. ha sido agraviada y detenida por fuerça quatorce años en aquel castillo como que no estuviera en si habiendo estado siempre en buen seso y tan prudente como lo fue en el principio de su matrimonio. dizese que por estos criados han sido yncitados y movidos otros a que pongan a Su Alteza en libertad y que con su auctoritat se provea la governacion. si la cosa passa assy luego sera el fin de mi cargo y no veo que podremos tener ciudad alguna en su rreal obediencia, y si con presteza V. M^t da facultad para remitir y perdonar todas cosas reservariamos una o dos ciudades para que pudiesemos estar seguros en alguna parte.

en el principio Vña Alteza no quiso dexar el dinero consignado, y ahora si estos mandamientos van adelante no podra haver ninguno. estoy gastando aqui lo poco que tengo y no puedo ser pagado de lo que se me deve del año passado ni de lo que enpreste a V. M^t en barcelona, ni menos de lo que esta your Highness and obey the mandates of the Queen our lady. They already say that she cannot do less than your Highness, except that she does not sign with her own hand for that they have not obtained from her Highness, as all that your Majesty has done and is doing is through others, and you approve and sign only what they have decided upon. That, they say, the Queen can do also.

Almost all the officers and servants of the Queen say that her Highness has been oppressed and detained by force in that castle during fourteen years, as though she had not been sane, whilst she has been always sane and as prudent as she was when first she married. It is said that others have been instigated and persuaded by these servants to set her Highness at liberty, and to carry on the government by her authority. If that is done, my office will soon be at an end, and I do not see how we shall be able to secure the obedience of a single town. If your Majesty sends me immediately a power to pardon all that has been done, it may be that we could preserve one or two towns where we may stay in security.

At the beginning it was not enough for your Highness to have the money assigned to you, and now, if these orders are carried out, you will have nothing. I have spent here the little I had. What is due to me for the last year, what I lent to your Majesty in Barcelona, and what is assigned to en este punto me ha venido hun criado del marques de Villena y dichome que el marques no me escribe a causa que las cartas se abren en el camino y que le mando que de palabra me dixiesse que el ayuntamiento de avila va adelante y que concorren en el todas las otras ciudades y que entienden de declarar que Vra Mag^t ha tomado contra todo derecho me for the time that I am governor, cannot be paid. As my presence here will soon be superfluous, I shall have to go, anticipating the permission of your Highness. I have not neglected nor do I neglect to do what I think profitable for the service and authority of your Highness, but considering the state of affairs in these kingdoms, it is not difficult to see what may be done in such circumstances. The principal members of the council are absent, and the want of money is so great that there is not enough to pay a courier. I am sorry that what I formerly said to your Highness about the money has been confirmed. Because you wanted to have all, you have now nothing. It is necessary that your Highness send as quickly as possible a power to pardon. This is the only medicine for this incurable malady. It is no longer the question of suffering pecuniary losses, but of a total and everlasting downfall, as though your Highness had usurped the royal name and imprisoned the Queen, pretending that she was insane, whilst she is in her right mind, as, according to what I have said, is stated.

This moment a servant of the marquis of Villena has arrived, and told me that the Marquis does not write to me because his letters are opened on the road. He has ordered him to tell me by word of mouth that the assembly at Avila goes forward, that all the other cities join it, and that it is their intention to declare that your Majesty has usurped the title of King of these kingdoms against all right. Furthermore, it is their will that they be governed in conformity with the laws of the kingdom, that is to say, by election of the persons ⁽¹⁾, as according to what they pretend the laws called Partite ⁽²⁾ contain. As he had no opportunity to let your Majesty know this, he tells it me. What I suspected long ago now becomes manifest. Your Majesty ought to order with great haste that all this be remedied, so that we may not suffer from and be injured by so much confusion, and for mercy's sake do send me a most speedy answer to this and all other [letters].

May our Lord long guard the life and royal state of your Highness in all prosperity.

In the first place you are to tell his Majesty that, because the Queen refuses to sign, they have an instrument drawn up by notaries of all she says, and receive it as her commands, as though her Highness were perfectly sane. Enclosed in this we send you one of these public instruments. Show it to his Majesty.

You are likewise to show the letter which Fray Francisco de Leon has written to us. He has been an eye witness of all that has been done in Tordesillas. His Majesty can order that it be read, but you must not tell any one except his Majesty who has written it, because this father would be in danger of being punished here or injured in his person.

As cortes will be held by the authority of the Queen, so all other things will be done by her authority, and if his Majesty does not with great haste and celerity send a power to pardon at once all the past, there will be no remedy afterwards, and he must wait until his mother dies before he will be permitted to govern in these kingdoms.

The most prudent think that a great part of these evils could be remedied, if his imperial Majesty would immediately contract marriage with the Señora Infanta of Portugal, or promise to marry her, and at the same time [send] a power to pardon all the cities which would return to his obedience.

Don Bernaldino Pimentel and Gonzalo Franco, regidores of this town, are good servants of his Majesty, and prevent many scandals and see that many evil things are avoided. I entreat his Majesty to regard them as recommended to him.

It has been said here that Don Juan holds his brother the Duke of Medina Sidonia a prisoner, and that, wishing to marry the duchess, he has offered in Rome 9,000 ducats for the dispensation, and other 9,000 ducats to certain mediators who are with his Majesty. I have enquired into this case, and found that it is an invention. . . is no question of marriage, although it is true, as I am . . . that the Duke is indisposed, somewhat troubled, and not quite right in his mind nor perfectly sane.

I send you also a memoir of the governor of Sorita. You must see that his Majesty provides for this case or sends a gracious answer.

Amongst other articles and things which the Junta intends to beg, or claim, or to provide for, is this, that no foreigner shall be governor of these kingdoms.

Answer me on all these points particularly.

57. To His Majesty. From the Cardinal 14th September. By the Doctor Guevara.

• Sacred, imperial, royal, and catholic Majesty,

After having written to your Majesty on the 9th of the present month, we received fresh letters dated the 12th of the same, by which we were informed that in Burgos they have turned the Constable out of the city, and driven him away by violence, forcing him, however, by refusing to give him food, to leave all his arms, firelocks, and powder to them. The principal cause of all this, it is said, was that he was willing to prevent the two thousand men whom the city had enlisted to do what the Junta in Avila had ordered. Moreover, they have confiscated all the property of the Doctor Çumiel, ⁽¹⁾ who loyally took care of the interests of your Majesty and the public weal of the city. Certainly, I know no en el mesmo dia me vino el consejo de las ordenes diziendome que en ocaña y tambien en hucles hay alteracion en el pueblo y que temen que si de presto no se proviese se juntarian con la rebellion de las otras universidades y por esto se ordeno que en vcles se devan salariar y pagar quarenta lanças para obviar y resistir a las malicias y rebueltas del pueblo y que para estos se devan comprar armas y porque el peligro estava en la mano hubose de proveer esto. si Vña Alt. no es servido que estas quarenta lanças se paguen de los dineros de la orden, mandemelo escrivir luego, que en la mesma hora las hare despedir, pero los del consejo piensan que si se rebellasen estos lugares mas tomarian de las rentas de lo que montaria el salario que se habria de dar a las quarenta lanças.

el conde dalvadeliste que reduzio a la ciudat de Çamora a obediencia de V. Alt. ya esta en gran peligro. el obispo de Çamora ha juntado mucha gente y tiene ayuda y socorro de la junta de Avila la qual ha de ser oy a xiiij deste en Tordesillas, y entiende el dicho Obispo de sacar por fuerça darmas al conde de Çamora. y en verdat me desplaze que este puesto en man of his condition to whom your Majesty owes more than to him, and it would be good if your Majesty would send him a consolatory and gracious letter, with promises to reward him.

On the same day came the council of the Orders, and told me that in Ocaña and also in Ucles the people had revolted, and it is to be feared that if this case is not speedily provided for they will join the rebellion of the other cities. It was therefore decided to raise and pay in Ucles forty lances, and to buy arms for them, in order to prevent or to resist the malice and the violence of the people. As the danger was so evident it was necessary to do so. If your Highness does not approve that these forty lances be paid from the revenues of the Order, ⁽¹⁾ write to me immediately, and I shall disband them within an hour's time. The councillors, however, are of opinion that if these places should again rise in rebellion they would confiscate all the revenues out of which the pay for the forty lances is to be taken.

The Count Alba de Liste, who reduced the city of Zamora, is in great danger. The Bishop of Zamora has assembled a great number of soldiers, and is succoured by the Junta in Avila, which is expected to day, the 13th, to be in Tordesillas. The intention of the bishop is to expel the count from Zamora by force of arms. I am much grieved indeed

Mt. sino solamente los de la Reyna su madre.

La xj deste el Secretario del marques de Villena fue a los oficiales de la contaduria con una cedula de V. Mt. para que assentassen aquel quento de maravedis en los registros, y despues que le llevaron con buenas palabras en dilaciones en fin llanamente ge lo negaron diziendole que no lo havian de hazer con mandamiento de V. that he is in such great trouble, because there is no other person in these kingdoms who has rendered your Highness so great services, and we cannot assist him either with soldiers or money. From fear of the commons none of the councillors dared to advise to write to the gunsmiths ⁽¹⁾ to help the said count with their moneys.

They spread a rumour throughout the kingdom that the Queen our lady is perfectly sane, and as able to command as the Queen Doña Isabel, her mother of glorious memory, was. They do not conceal that it is their intention to persuade the whole people that the orders of your Majesty ought not to be obeyed or executed, but only those of the Queen your mother.

On the 11th of this month the secretary of the Marquis of Villena went to the officers of the treasury with an order of your Majesty, asking them to enter the one million of maravedis in the registers. After having put him off with promises, they at last openly refused, saying that they could not fulfil the order of your Majesty, because they were in danger of having their heads cut off if they booked and registered that grant.

I spoke the same day with those of this town, asking them,

⁽¹⁾ Escopeteros are soldiers armed with firelocks, as well as gunsmiths. It is difficult to decide which of the two are meant. It was not quite uncommon in those times, on extraordinary occasions, to appeal to common soldiers for loans out of the pay they had received or the plunder they had got. Nevertheless it seems more probable that the gunsmiths are meant.

among other things, to let us go to the kingdom of Navarra, to occupy ourselves there in the defence of the kingdom, and in preventing the French, who are said to enlist a great army, from occupying or invading it, especially as from regard for the feelings of these kingdoms ⁽¹⁾ your Highness had forborne to send the three thousand Germans whom your Majesty had destined to form the guard and defence of that kingdom. ⁽²⁾ Your Highness may believe that it would be unbecoming to leave secretly and hospite insalutato, especially as they will give us an answer contrary to our wishes. ⁽³⁾ It is said that they have consulted the Junta of Avila, and wait for the answer as to what they are to do. Many say they will not permit us to go. They have detained the papers of Vozmediano, and ask an account from all the officers of the great sums of money which have been exported by your Majesty from these kingdoms.

The guardian confessor to the Queen our lady fears that some people may defame him there ⁽⁴⁾, telling your Majesty that he induces the Queen to assume the command and occupy herself in the government. Certainly if that should be said it ought not to be believed at all, as this father is a very conscientious man, and leads an honest and holy life. It is, however, sure that this erroneous opinion comes from the very officers and servants of the Queen, who are influenced by their great hatred of the Marquis of Denia. I have written to him to tell two things to the Queen. The first of them is that she must never believe that Fonseca was to carry her off by force, and put her into another place. She is so frightened by these lies, which they have invented to induce her to consent to what they wish, that if they say to her Highness, order this, she answers yes; and directly they have a decree drawn up by notaries. The other thing is, that he is to procure and secretly to advise the Queen never to put her signature to a paper. I hope he will do so, if the fear of losing the friendship of the captains who are in Tordesillas does not prevent him.

On the 12th of this month I spoke with Pedro Giron, and mentioned, among other things, the grounds on which the commons give themselves airs to found [their pretensions], that is to say, on the orders of the Queen, as though she were a person of sound mind. He answered me as he had done on other occasions, that he abhorred it in the highest degree, and to satisfy his conscience he would use all his power that it be no longer done. He assembles some soldiers for his personal security, and to be in a position to speak more freely and without restraint on this subject.

It is really to be wondered at that in the whole of Old Castile there is scarcely a village where we could stay in security, and which does not make common cause and combine with the other rebels. The grandees, namely, the Count of Benavente, the Duke of Albuquerque, the Marquis of Villena, and the Constable offer us their places; but it is the opinion of all that, if we went to one of the estates of the grandees, the rebellion of the commons would become worse, and, besides, it would not redound to the honour and service of your Majesty, because it would appear as though we were turned out of your territories. The Duke of Infantadgo invites us to Guadalaxara, which belongs to your Highness, and offers to defend us there. The members of the council think, however, it would not be a safe place to stay in. All are to be thanked for their offers, and especially the Duke of Albuquerque, who has been the first to propose to us one of his places, called Cuellar. According to what I hear, it would be convenient. The son of the said duke has told me that he has been falsely accused before your Majesty of having induced this town to do the same as the other rebels, and certainly he has alleged in his justification so many things which are in perfect conformity with all I have seen that I cannot doubt that he speaks the truth.

The members of the council are not satisfied with the letters and despatches which I have sent to your Majesty, and wish me to send one of their own number to explain to your Highness point for point all that has passed here. I should prefer to avoid the expense, but as all of them insisted so strongly, I thought it was not right to contradict their

I, however, am of opinion that it would be best for your Highness entirely to release me from my duties, and give the office to some Spaniard. The complaints of the commons that it is against the laws of the country that a foreigner should be governor would thereby be entirely satisfied. I certainly do not wish this office, and could not satisfactorily serve your Highness for any length of time, nor perform what is due to your authority and honour.

The King of Portugal behaves towards your Highness not only like a brother but even like a father. The whole of his kingdom is put under arms, and he offers succour or any thing else that justly could be expected from him. Your Majesty must thank him very warmly, not only as it is commonly done, but very truly, and as his great love and goodwill towards your Majesty deserve.

Do whatever we may, we cannot get here as much money as is necessary for paying the couriers. The other day we tried to obtain the money for sending a messenger to Navarra, and could not find it. To the postmaster we owe great sums, and he has no longer wherewith to continue [the postal service]. palace, where we gave the letter and a transcript of our letters of credence, signed with our names, to the Señor Marquis. We had great difficulty in obtaining an answer from him. He delayed much to give it. There it is, and your Lordships may read it. It contains much less than the Marquis had already promised us by word of mouth. He asked us also to write to you that at the same moment that your Lordships should enter the palace he would leave it and go to other lodgings. His son, Don Luis, who was present, added that although he may go, the Señora Marchioness could not leave. Moreover, he gave us his word, as he had already promised us, that he would not remain even if the Queen our lady should command him to remain.

In order that your Lordships be well informed of everything, we let you know that the Señor Marquis told us, and we knew it already, that he had sent an escrivano to the Queen our lady, in order to inform her that he was deprived of his office, and wished to take leave of her. That is what he says. What reasonably may be believed is that he [the escrivano] entered [the room of the Queen] to procure a declaration that her Highness commanded him [the Marquis] to remain. The Queen our lady would not do it nor even hear of it. She told him to leave her alone and not to speak to her.

We are of opinion that these and other inconveniences, and perhaps even bad consequences have been and will be the effect of the delay which has occurred in this affair. To stop half-way after the commission which your Lordships gave us, and after we have delivered our letters of credence to him, would be to deprive your mandates of all authority, which ought not to be, especially in a case of so much importance. The whole royal household and the people of this town are dissatisfied. The Marquis and his family do not stir, as though they never intended to depart. Your Lordships must send us now at last very determinate orders what we have to do, and what these captains have to execute. Otherwise your Lordships will lose your credit still more in this affair. May our Lord prosper the very illustrious and very magnificent persons of your Lordships and increase your power.

a xxx. de Agosto escrevi a V. Mt. y que sino lo hiziese que protestavan que todo el daño y escandalo que sobre esto oviese fuese a mi culpa. yo les respondi que yo avia venido alli con mandamiento de V. Mt. e voluntad de la Reyna nuestra Señora y que asy solian venir los que vienen a servir a los principes y aun no yrse de su servicio sin que ellos lo manden, que me parecia cosa muy nueva que ellos se entremetiesen en cosa desta calidad, que yo no avia de salir dalli syn que su Alteza y v. Sacred, imperial, royal, and catholic Majesty,

On the 30th of August I wrote to your Majesty all that had occurred until then, but such good watch was kept at the gates, before and since, that my letter could not go. What has afterwards happened is that the Procurators of the Junta of the kingdom came to Medina del Campo, whence they wrote that the Señora Marchioness and I should immediately leave, because that was necessary for the service of the Queen our lady and of your Majesty; protesting that if we would not go all the injury and scandal would be my fault. I answered that I had come hither by an order of your Majesty, and according to the wishes of the Queen our lady, and that, as those who come to serve their sovereigns are to come in such a way that they do not abandon their service unless they are ordered by them to do so, [I told them] it seemed to me a very strange thing that they should meddle in affairs of such a kind, and that I would not leave until her Highness and your Majesty commanded me. They sent me again the same message by a special envoy, Saravia, from Valladolid, who admonished me much, saying that if I did not go amicably they must employ other means. I gave the same answer,

Respondiles que veniesen alli todos y que hiziesen una de dos cosas, o preguntasen a la Reyna nuestra Señora sy mandava que yo me fuese, o me lo diesen todos firmado de sus nonbres y que desta manera yo haria lo que devia. Respondieronme que no avian de hablar a su Alteza porque sabian que en esto ni en otra cosa no avia de hazer su Alteza nada en tanto que yo alli estoviese. esto hizieron por que ya los capitanes avian preguntado a su Alteza tres vezes si mandava que me hechasen dalli y su Alteza les dixo que no, y que lo del darmelo firmado de todos no avia necesidad porque la costumbre de aquella Junta hera determinarse lo que los mas botos querian y que asy se avia hecho en este caso y que convenia que luego me saliese porque no oviese escandalo. en esto anduvimos tres dias hasta el miercoles que fueron xix. deste que venieron estos tres procuradores a las ocho de la mañana a palacio y me requirieron que dentro en media ora me saliese con mi muger e hijos y toda mi casa, y ya quando esto me dixieron estava todo palacio cercado de soldados y dentro en el patio mas de ciento. tome por testimonio todo lo que en esto ha pasado y como

Two days later arrived three Procurators, one for Leon, another for Salamanca, and the third for Segovia, making the same request, and telling me that I must leave immediately. I answered them that all of them should come and do one of these two things, viz., either ask the Queen our lady whether she commanded me to leave, or give me an order signed by all of them. If that were done I would do what they decreed. They answered that they would not speak with her Highness, because they knew that her Highness would neither in this nor in any other case do anything as long as I was there. They gave this answer because the captains had already asked her Highness three times whether she would order that I should be sent away, and her Highness had said to them no. [They further declared] that it was not necessary to give me an order signed by all of them, because it was the custom of the Junta to decide by majority of votes, and that had been done in this case. They told me to go immediately to avoid scandal. These negotiations continued three days, until Wednesday the 19th of this month, when these three Procurators came at eight o'clock in the morning to the palace, and requested me to leave it, with my wife, and children, and servants, within half an hour. When they told me this the palace was already surrounded by soldiers, and more than a hundred of them were in the courtyard. I had a declaration drawn up of all that had occurred, stating that they had forced me to go, although your Majesty had sent me hither, and although I had twice asked the Queen our lady, and her Highness had answered me that on no condition should I go. Thus we left the palace and went to the convent of St. Tomas. Next day, Thursday, we departed, and I went to Valladolid. As soon as I knew that the town⁽¹⁾ was assembled, I went to give them an account of this affair, for I knew that they had not been of this opinion, but, on the contrary, oftentimes opposed it. They were very sorry, and spoke good words to me. I said that I asked it as a favour from them that they should always remember how loyal this town had been to the royal crown, and that, although in the affairs of the King they had not combined with the other cities, they should, nevertheless, be very careful in other respects not to touch the authority and pre-eminence of your Majesty, for that would be to display different sentiments from those which loyal vassals ought to have for their Prince. I told them that [I said] because I knew that some other cities of the kingdom, forgetting their duties, are of a different opinion, but that I was very sorry for it, and as a born [Spaniard] I begged them, for mercy's sake, never to consent to such things. They gave a good answer, but I do not know what they will do. On the very day of my arrival at Valladolid I gave an account of all to the Señor Cardinal. The day before I left Tordesillas all the Procurators of the Junta arrived there. It was Wednesday, as I have already stated. On Thursday, the day when I left, they assembled in the palace to transact business, and endeavoured to speak with the Queen our lady, who, however, on that day would not hear them, saying that she was tired. When we left the palace I and the Marchioness asked the Procurators to permit us to take leave of her Highness and the Señora Infanta, but they refused. The Señora Infanta has behaved like a person of riper age in all that regards the service of your Majesty and our departure.

Mt. porque esto sería mostrar otra voluntad de la que leales vasallos deven tener a su principe, y questo les dezia porque sabia que algunas cibdades del Reyno no mirando a lo que son obligados estan de otro proposito, que yo lo sentia mucho como natural del que les pedia por merced no lo consintiesen. ellos respondieronme bien, no se lo que haran. el mismo dia que vine a Valladolid di quenta desto al Señor Cardenal. y el dia antes que yo saliesse de Tordesillas llegaron alli todos los procuradores de la Junta

Yesterday I received in Valladolid two letters from your Majesty; one of them was of the 24th of August. The letter for the town of Tordesillas which was enclosed has not been forwarded, because they do not deserve it. Had your Majesty provided in time for the custody of Tordesillas, as I had asked, many affronts which have been offered there to the Queen our lady, to your Majesty, and the Señora Infanta would have been avoided. God grant that they may not have to suffer more! The remedy for all this is the return of your Majesty. The other letter I received by Lope Hurtado. That your Majesty has appointed the Admiral and the Constable to be viceroys together with the Señor Cardinal cannot be otherwise than advantageous, because it cannot be said that they are foreigners. Moreover, although they are always obliged to do their duty in the service of your Majesty, they will now do more than is possible. (1) I go to one of my towns which is patches and the duplicate of the letter of the 24th of last month which were enclosed. I shall answer here only what is necessary.

Lope Hurtado has told me very minutely all that your Highness commanded him. As for the Junta, your Highness is to know that they proceed in such a manner that they have two or three times intimated to the Marquis of Denia that he and the marchioness must go and leave the Queen our Lady. He answered that he holds the office of guardian of her Highness and the Señora Infanta from your Majesty, and with the consent of the Queen, and that he had not the intention to go unless he were turned out by force. Seeing what was going on, the Señora Infanta cried much at the treatment of the marquis, and wrote with her own hand to those of this town, ⁽¹⁾ asking them not to permit such an affront to be offered to him. When this town was informed of it, they wrote to the Junta, asking them to leave the marquis in his office and place, as he had been appointed to it by order and authority of your Highness. Notwithstanding this, on Thursday, the 20th of this month, they drove the said marquis and marchioness away. On the 21st they passed through this place, and the marquis entered the town and dined with me. After dinner we talked a long while, and then the marquis and the marchioness took their departure for Lerma. The captains who have been many days in Tordesillas, according to what certain persons have told me who have heard it from the captains themselves, know very well that the Queen is not sane. Notwithstanding this, if her Highness, from fear or adulation, says or orders something which suits their intentions or purposes, they have an act drawn up directly, and spread the report among the people that her Highness is as able to govern as the Queen Doña Isabel her mother, of glorious memory, was. I hear that in the Junta they are deliberating and disputing whether the orders shall be given in the name of the Queen and your Highness conjointly, or only in the name of the Queen. Toledo, Madrid, Segovia, and I know not what other towns, say that the name of your Majesty on the orders ought to be suppressed and cancelled, and only the names of the Queen and commons placed on them. Valladolid, Burgos, Soria, Toro, and other places insist that the said orders ought to be given in the name of her Highness and of your Majesty. It is doubtful which party will prevail. The council and I bear many things with patience in order to maintain and preserve this town in its purpose to prevent your Highness from being deprived of the name and authority of King of Castile. Many tell us that the Junta has ordered this town to forbid me and the council to meddle with the affairs of these kingdoms, and order us to remain quiet. If these orders are obeyed, it will be indispensable and necessary to leave this place and abandon the govern-

Afterwards a Procurator of the said Junta, whose name is Francisco de Anaysa, came with a notary and witnesses whilst all the councillors were assembled in my house, and presented to us, in the name of the Junta, an intimation that all councillors, alcaldes, and a great number of secretaries and escrivanos, whether they be present in or absent from these kingdoms, were bound to give account and reason for all that has been done through them and with their assistance, and that those who are in this town shall not leave it on any condition, and that in no manner shall they assemble or despatch the business of these kingdoms until the said Junta provides for all this, as your Highness will see more in detail in the act of intimation here enclosed. The said Procurator has demanded an attestation, and the notary has testified it in presence of witnesses. The Junta is very indignant with Sevilla, Cordova, Granada, and other townships of Andalusia, because they are willing to remain in the obedience of your Majesty and your governor. They ordered to be intercepted on the road some letters which came from Sevilla for me. Whilst the Junta stopped at Medina they read, and then took and destroyed them.

The Junta endeavour to gain over the captains and the soldiers of the guards of your Highness, offering them all the arrears due to them, and besides much higher pay than they receive from your Highness. We, on the contrary, try to make arrangements to pay them a portion [of the arrears], because [to pay] the whole is impossible, as many cities withhold your royal revenues.

The president of the Chancery of Granada, who was Bishop of Mondoñedo, is dead. It is necessary for your Highness to appoint another with all speed. The Procurator of that city has asked me that the place may be given rather to a nobleman and a statesman than to a scholar; for presidents have no vote in the deliberations, and if they are noblemen, and occupy a high station, they give great authority to the court. I beg your Majesty to give the bishopric, which, as I hear, is worth little, to the Doctor Manso, Dean of Granada, and member of the Council of the Holy Inquisition. He is certainly a man of letters, leads an exemplary life, and is very welcome and acceptable to all. If your Highness gives the preferment to the said doctor all will be satisfied; and I can assure your Majesty that all the people in general will praise the good choice you have made.

The Junta has sent to day to request Suarez and Perianyes to go directly to Tordesillas for the despatch of business which concerns the service of her Highness and of the kingdom. It is believed that they wish to have the treasury there where they are, to appropriate to themselves all the moneys of the royal revenues, and to dispose of them as they like. If that should be the case, your Majesty would have no longer any business in this kingdom. This moment they tell me that they intend to demand an account for what has been spent.

This morning two hundred lances entered this town, and, it is said, they think of arresting some of the council. Thus we are all in danger, although I am not afraid for my own person. If they take my property, to be sure the loss will not be great, because there is so little. I shall remain here as long as I am able to maintain myself out of my poor means. When I have no longer whereupon I and my servants can live, and that will be very soon the case, I shall be forced within a few days to go to another place which is cheaper, and where I may find some resources; for here neither what I lent to your Majesty in Barcelona nor my salary is paid to me, and there is no possibility of getting money any where. Even Vargas has, in these parts, never obtained money nor found any one willing to lend on letters of exchange on Barcelona and Valencia. Thus, as I have stated, I shall not be able to avoid trying something else. If I remained here longer I should only be insulted which would be neither an honour nor an advantage to your Majesty, and I should not enjoy that tranquillity of which I stand in great need.

The Constable is ready to accept the office of governor on two conditions, as your Majesty will learn from the letter of Lope Hurtado.

The order for the payment of the 50,000 ducats is no longer of any use. The treasurers do not dare to pay one maravedi, nor do they think of such a thing.

It is very necessary that Diego de Vera should be here with us. As he is absent it would be good if your Highness would write him a gracious letter telling him that, postponing all other affairs, and, notwithstanding his apprehensions and the advantages which the Junta offers him, he must at all events join the governors. Your Majesty may promise to indemnify him liberally for all the losses he might suffer.

Your Majesty has commanded me to see that the debts of the Catholic King, who is in glory, be paid. Certainly for many reasons I wish much that that could be accomplished, as it is due to the memory of the late king, but as times are it is impossible even to think of such a thing. Your Highness will therefore excuse me if I do not occupy myself in this affair, for, in truth, it is impossible. May our Lord guard the

This document is printed in Sandoval's History of the Emperor Charles V., but that version is so incorrect that, without counting minor differences in the spelling of words and an arbitrary punctuation, not less than sixty one errors occur in it, some of them amounting to substituting the name of one person for another, or entirely changing the sense of a sentence. Valladolid, 23rd of September 1520.

When I had written this, I received the letters which I enclose from the Duke of Medina Sidonia, the Doctor de la Gama, and Pedro Suarez de Castilla, together with other documents, from which your Highness will learn very minutely what has happened in Sevilla. All affairs here take such a turn that I know no other remedy than the help of God and the speedy arrival of your Majesty.

The Cardinal of Tortosa.

The Procurators of the kingdom [he said] were there, and had come to serve her Highness and obey her, their Queen and lawful sovereign. They entreated her Majesty to have confidence in herself, and rule and govern her kingdoms. Other Procurators followed, bent their knees to the ground, and asked the hand of her Highness [to kiss]. Then came Doctor Zuñiga, citizen of the very noble and very loyal city of Salamanca, and professor there; he went down before her on his knees, and, as he had been nominated and selected by the said Procurators to state and make manifest to her Highness the measures which were required for the service of God and her Highness, as well as for the weal, pacification, and amendment of these her kingdoms, he said, amongst many other things to her Highness what follows. With respect to her service he told her that the Procurators of this kingdom who stood there had been induced by a holy zeal and divine inspiration to visit and to kiss the hands of her Highness, their queen and lawful sovereign, complaining of the injury and great evils which these her kingdoms had suffered and suffer by reason of the bad government of them. Since God had pleased to call into His presence the Catholic King her father, and the son of her Highness, our prince, accompanied by foreigners, whom your Highness knows better than any one else, have entered these kingdoms of your Highness, they

They likewise complain of the oppression and manner of treatment to which her Highness had been subjected, [saying] that all her kingdoms are ready to obey and serve her Highness, and place her, their queen and born sovereign, at their head, and die for her. Therefore they humbly beseech your Highness to take courage, to rule, and govern and command your kingdoms. For there is no one in the world to forbid or impede you. Being the most mighty queen and lady in the world, you can command in everything, and should not forsake all your kingdoms and subjects who are ready to die for you and in your service. On this point I appeal to the royal conscience of your Highness. When the said Doctor Zuñiga began to address his discourse to her Highness, her Majesty was standing, and the said Doctor Zuñiga on his knees on the floor before her Highness. And her Majesty ordered him to rise, saying: Stand up, that I may hear you better. The Doctor got up, and continued his discourse standing. Her Highness said: Bring me a cushion, because I want to hear him at leisure. Cushions were brought for her Majesty, and her Highness seated herself on them. her son, was the cause and occasion for placing the government of these kingdoms in the hands of strangers, by whom they have been ruthlessly plundered and tyrannized over to the great prejudice of their Majesties, and with great injury individual and general. We the Procurators of the kingdom, who are assembled in order to remedy the said injuries, through the grace of God, decided that the first measure we could and ought to take was to go to this town of Tordesillas, and to present ourselves to our Queen and lady, for two reasons, viz., firstly that the Junta may be assembled in her royal palace, showing her that respect and obedience which are due to her royal person; to give her an account of all the said injuries, and to ask her Highness that she be pleased to approve what should be decided upon for their remedy. The other reason is to procure by all means in our power the health of her Highness, in which consists, as we firmly believe, the remedy for all our present troubles. For that purpose we send for all the most famous and excellent physicians in these kingdoms. In order to be in a better condition and at greater liberty to execute our design, it has seemed to us expedient that the Marquis and the Marchioness of Denia should not remain in this town. We believe, and even know, that as they did not occupy themselves with restoring the health of her Highness during the time when they had the charge of the government of her royal person and household, so they would not aid us in our purpose. And because in so important a case the remedies which could be found by human exertion would have no other effect than to show our goodwill and loyalty, unless we have recourse to the principal and true remedy, which is God, we have consulted persons in holy orders and of holy life, and, at their advice, now order that in all the cities and towns throughout these kingdoms solemn and devout processions and public prayers be made for the health of her Highness. We inform your Lordships of this, and beg you to see that so it be done there.

We also let your Lordships know that, as the purpose for which we are here assembled is to remedy the evils which have been inflicted on these kingdoms, and to resist those who every day make new preparations, so it is impossible to carry out our design as long as the very authors and contrivers of the said evils have the power and force in their hands. Those who until this time have been members of the Royal Council do not repent what they have done, but, imitating the devil, try again with all their strength to enlist soldiers, to gain over the grandees, and to carry out their diabolical intentions. We have, therefore, during many days discussed and deliberated on this subject, and finally decided that it is necessary to suspend them from their offices, which were powers of darkness, until their Majesties pronounce on their

The kingdoms will then assume the habit and custom of keeping them, instead of, as it hitherto has done, neglecting them, unmindful of breaches of the law and its own perdition. Very reverend father in Christ, Cardinal of Tortosa, our Governor and Inquisitor General in the kingdoms and dominions of Castile, and very dear and very beloved friend,—I have seen your letter of the 23rd of September, by which you inform me of all that until then had occurred in those kingdoms. Although I had already been very sorry and very anxious, seeing what had passed there, I am now much more so, owing to the great and daring affront which has been offered to the Queen my lady in sending away from her service the Marquis and Marchioness of Denia, and I cannot express in words how much I have been grieved at this and at the intimation which has been made in your presence to the members of the Privy Council. Considering it as certain that no other measure would be sufficient to remedy things there ⁽¹⁾ except my coming, I had already ordered that all affairs here ⁽²⁾ should be despatched as quickly as possible, so that I should be able soon to go; but now, having learnt what has happened there, I have decided to leave, with the help of our Lord, as soon as I have received my first crown, ⁽³⁾ and without waiting for any length of time embark and sail in the first days of December or January. To his Majesty. From the Cardinal, 8th of October
Sacred, Imperial, Catholic, Royal Majesty,

On the 1st of this month I wrote to your Majesty all that until then had occurred in these kingdoms. Afterwards I received the letter of your Highness of the 22nd of last month, which was particularly directed to me, together with the letter for all the governors, and the despatch which came by the same courier. As for what your Majesty writes me by Lope Hurtado de Mendoza and by the Knight Commander Aguilera, concerning my remaining in this town, certainly, according to what passes every hour, the affairs of these kingdoms are on the way to utter ruin, as, notwithstanding all that is said in the instructions, and what is written to me in the letters which accompany them, without the presence and speedy arrival of your Majesty, there is no means to quiet and pacify them, as I have already written.

The letters for the governors I have sent to the Constable, who is in Birviesca⁽¹⁾. He may do and make such provisions as he thinks well. Being detained in this town, and the privy councillors being absent, I can do or think of nothing. The power for the privy councillors to condemn and en lo de la Reyna Ntra Señora ya no se puede proveer cosa ninguna por lo que V. Al. havra visto. el marques de Denia esta en Lerma y no sin afrenta por la honrra que la Junta le ha fecho. ya le he embiado la carta de V. toda diligencia se ha fecho en procurar de saber quien escrevio aca que los Spañoles no son bien tratados alla, pero no se ha pudido saber lo cierto en mas de andar sobre ello fama publica en esta corte y ahun por toda España segun me dizen.

si aprovecho poco la yda [que de mi parta hizo del comendador hiestrosa a la junta quando estava en Avila mucho menos ha sydo ahora quando vinieron a tordesyllas que les embie a los obispos de lugo y oviedo con carta mia e instruccion y tampoco no quisieron oyrles. asi que vea V. deprive any persons whatever of their offices, and for us to appoint others to the places of captains, lieutenant regidores, ventiquatrias, algazils, and other offices which have thus become vacant, is a good one however; but it will profit only as much as it can.

Concerning the Queen our lady, nothing can be done, for the reason which your Highness knows already. The Marquis of Denia is in Lerma, not without having received from the Junta an insult to his honour. I have already sent him the letter of your Highness. If the Marquis should come, the order of your Majesty will be executed, if it is possible.

I have used all diligence to learn who has written that the Spaniards are not well treated there; but it has been impossible for me to ascertain the truth, except that it is publicly reported in this residence, and indeed throughout Spain, as I am informed.

If the journey which the Knight Commander Hiestrosa undertook in my name to the Junta, when they were in Avila, profited little, much less was the profit when I sent the Bishops of Lugo and Oviedo to them with a letter and instruction from me after they had gone to Tordesillas. They refused to hear them. Thus your Majesty will see what ends they have in view, and how small is their zeal for your royal service and the pacification of your kingdoms.

en lo del marques de Villena ya he scrito a V. Al. lo que passa. ahora me ha escrito que conviene que V. To the President I sent his letters. Concerning the liberty of the privy councillors whom the Junta arrested, they have decided what your Highness will learn by the enclosed letter of the Doctor Cabrero, the Doctor Beltran, and the Licentiate Acuña. With respect to the person of Castaneda they have come to the same decision, after having taken from him the seals. In a similar manner they have treated the Secretary Juan Ramirez, whom they captured together with the others. To the Doctor Telo they seem to have shown honour, as, under threat of the punishment pronounced against the others, they have requested him to occupy himself in nothing but in the business of the Council of the Orders.

In the affair of the Marquis of Villena, I have already written to your Highness what passes. They write me now that it is necessary for your Majesty to send him a power to grant a pardon to the city of Toledo for all excesses which have been committed there, and even to other private persons of that city; and also in the name of your Highness to grant some favours to those to whom he thinks it fit to grant them, or who seem to merit them.

To Don Pedro de la Cueva I have given his letter. Certainly he is a good cavalier, and I know that he is well prepared and has the will to serve your Majesty. The letters of your Highness to Sevilla and Córdoba have been forwarded, and I have written to the same effect. Would to God that

In fact, he was now lately in great danger when he took his departure from this town. They did not wish that he should go where I sent him; and when he had left they followed him. Had they overtaken him he would have been killed. As he desires very much to be Knight of Santiago, I beg your Highness to grant him that favour, which I solicited already for him in Barcelona. And if your Majesty should appoint Spanish gentlemen for the place of gentlemen of your bedchamber, I beg you to do me the favour to choose the said Lope Hurtado; for he is loyal and will serve well in everything, like any other of his condition and habits. As the said Lope Hurtado is the bearer of an instruction of mine to tell your Highness all that has passed since I wrote the last time to your Majesty, I refer your Highness to what he will say according to his instruction.

sure that there ⁽¹⁾ more is known, I nevertheless send the letter to your Majesty.

After I had written this, I received on the 6th of the present month a letter from your Majesty, of the 24th of last month, about the affair of the Marshal of Navarra. I wrote on that subject by special messengers to Hernando de Vega that he may provide in Simancas all that is necessary. The Lieutenant himself has answered me what your Majesty will learn from the enclosed letter. Thus I believe all is safe, and as the service of your Majesty requires.

The Junta has sent to this town the mandates or proclamations, transcripts of which your Majesty will find in this bundle. An intimation has since been made to me by an escrivano in the name of the same Junta ordering me neither alone nor in common with others to meddle in the government of these kingdoms. In order that your Highness may be particularly informed of the contents of this intimation, I enclose a copy of it, together with the answer I have given.

The state of these kingdoms is such that if the danger of losing them does not induce your Highness to come soon and remedy it and pacify them, your Highness ought to do so from compassion for the Queen our lady. Do not forget that she is your mother. In fact, I am afraid she will die if she is not soon liberated from the power and hands of [the Junta]. Since they have driven away the Marquis

I have not left this town, because since the 1st of this month I am detained here by force. They think they profit thereby, but bad consequences will be the result. The iniquitous deeds and works of the Junta in Tordesillas are already abominated and abhorred; and your Majesty may believe me that the people of this town love me so much that even if the Junta should permit me to go, the boys, to use this expression, would keep me. That is the reason why many prudent persons have advised me to remain here some days longer, and thereby to satisfy the people, who desire it very much. Humouring them in this respect, we could afterwards more easily obtain what we wish. On all this I have written to the Constable, asking him to give me his counsel and advice on all that appears to him most convenient for the service of your Majesty. Our Lord give your Majesty a long life and reign with all prosperity.

To his Majesty. From the Cardinal.
21st October.

Sacred, imperial, catholic, and royal Majesty,

These days I received a letter from your Majesty, by which I was only informed of the anxiety which there ⁽¹⁾ prevailed, and of the great astonishment of your Highness that I had not written to you in detail of the affairs of these kingdoms. As your Majesty has since received other letters from me, I believe you will excuse me, and clearly see by the facts that in the affairs of this place (Spain) I have not slept, nor neglected to provide what is necessary.

Now quite of late I have not written, because the Junta had such a number of soldiers on the roads to arrest and search every person who passed, that, considering the great danger of sending letters, I not only desisted from writing, but was also very much afraid that they might intercept some courier coming from there.⁽²⁾ And although, in as far as my letters are concerned, I could protect and secure myself against bad consequences by writing in cipher, nevertheless your Majesty may believe that if in such a case they had intercepted a courier they would have been more excited, and the excitement would

Because my departure from Valladolid is desirable for the service of your Majesty, I have always secretly sought to procure it in many ways since I have been detained. Seeing that this affair took a bad turn, and considering the great troubles which Fray Alonso de Medina had lately produced in this town with his sermons (of which I send your Highness a summary that I received from a person who heard them), which were delivered before the townspeople, I requested the said town to consent and to let me go without hindrance, and if not, to excuse me if I should take my measures and do what the service of your Highness and my honour required. They answered in general terms and with compliments, but were more inclined towards detaining than towards letting me go. Such being the state of things I determined on Monday last, the 15th of the present month, at eight o'clock in the evening to try my fortune, and recommending myself to God and accompanied by only one person I left the town secretly, climbing over the wall with great danger. No one in the world knew it. When I was at a great distance from the town I mounted and rode the whole night through. and by the Adelantado, brothers of the Admiral. I went more than three leagues out of the direct way in order to avoid meeting any one, so that none might betray me. Thus I travelled more than ten leagues. As soon as I had arrived I sent a messenger to the Constable informing him of my escape, and another to the said Admiral asking him to make haste to come. We have not heard anything of him except that it has been said of late that he is in Zaragoza. I intend to remain here until I receive an answer from the Admiral, in order to see what he will say. I shall write it directly to your Majesty.

The affairs in Tordesillas take such a turn, and the Junta desires so much the health of the Queen our lady, that they have taken from her all the women who had been appointed for her royal service. Thus it seems they wish entirely to finish her. And, as I have already written in another letter to your Majesty, her Highness is now worse than ever before. It is the greatest pity in the world! In order to induce her to sign they go to the last extremes and show the greatest diligence in obeying her. Because lately her Highness remained three days without eating, they gave her afterwards all the food which they ought to have given her during the three days. Concerning the order dismissing the women of her household, I have heard from the husband of one of them that it is to be in force only a few days, and that members of the Junta have said that her Highness has pro-han dicho que Su Alteza havia ofrecido a ellos que si hechasen las mujeres de su casa que dentro de quatro dias firmaria. y estos dias son passados y iamas han podido acabar con Su Alt. que firmasse, y no dude V. Mt. que si sola una firma pudiesen haver de Su Alt. pondria grandissima rebuelta y confusion en estos Reynos a mas de la que hay si mayor pudiese ser.

en la junta susodicha hay parcialidad y division, y cierto deve Vña Al. muchas gracias a dios como de fecho no le han quitado titulo de rrey en estos rreynos y como Pedro de Cartagena procurador de Burgos dezia que no se hazia cosa ninguna por Burgos en la Junta y que solamente estaban alla por testigos de lo que alli se hazia, los otros le hazian plato y le ponian al delante que a pura instancia de Burgos se trato y passò cosa de mayor importancia que jamas se concerto en esta junta, es a saber que se permitiesse o consintiesse a Vña Mt. nombre o titulo de Rey.

ahora diz que embian a Vña Mt. una carta la qual han instado se firmase por todos los procuradores, y los de Burgos no han querido firmarla porque en ella se contienen muchas cosas a las quales diz que han contradicho, y replicandoles que han jurado que lo concertado por la mayor parte se deviesse confirmar y aprovar por la otra, dixieron que el tal juramento mised to sign within four days if they would dismiss the women of her household. These four days have elapsed, and they have not been able to persuade her Highness to sign. Your Majesty may believe me, if they could obtain only one signature from her Highness the revolt and confusion of these kingdoms would become much greater than they are, if that is possible.

The said Junta is divided and disunited, and certainly your Highness ought many times to thank God that they have not completely deprived you of the title of King of these kingdoms. As Pedro de Cartagena, Procurator of Burgos, said that Burgos did not participate in the decrees of the Junta, and that they ⁽¹⁾ were present only in the quality of witnesses to see what the others did, the others have made a buckler of him and pushed him forward, so that it is due to the influence of Burgos alone that the most important thing which ever was debated in the Junta was decided [and settled in your favour], that is to say, that your Majesty was permitted to make use of the title of King which was bestowed on you.

Now it is said that they send a letter to your Majesty. They insisted that it should be signed by all the Procurators, but those of Burgos have refused to sign it because it contains many things which they say they have opposed. When they were told that they had sworn that the decisions of the majority should be accepted and approved by the minority, they said that the oath did not oblige them to sign and to muchos buenos cavalleros se han alegrado de mi salida de Valladolid esperando que mas facilmente se podran assentar las cosas destos rreynos, mas temen y recelan en grandissima manera que recoia o reciba conmigo al presidente y al obispo de burgos y a vargas, a los quales tienen en grandissimo odio, creyendo y sospechando que en presencia dellos no se podria hazer cosa buena, de lo qual estoy con mucha perplexidad de mirar si conviene mas al servitio de V. Mt. echarlos, ahunque cierto a mi parecer no lo merecen, o de admetirles en conscio, lo qual tambien traheria grandes escandalos y el pueblo mostraria star muy ofendido dello.

el corregidor de Valladolid me ha escripto que despues de mi partida en aquella villa les pesa mucho como no me trataron mejor y con mas acatamiento y obediencia de los rreales mandamientos de V. Al. y que parece que se inclinan ya a bien, porque don joan mendoça hijo del Cardenal Don Pero gonzalez estava alli procurando seditiones y levantamientos en favor de la junta le han echado y desterrado de la villa, y ahun diz que empieçan de tomar informacion contra Sarabia de algunas affix their names to the decrees and orders, as it was sufficient if the notaries and Escrivanos of the Junta testified and signed them.

A great many of the well intentioned cavaliers have been very glad that I left Valladolid, hoping that the affairs of the kingdom will now be more easily settled; but they apprehend and are in the highest degree afraid lest I take back and retain with me the President, the Bishop of Burgos, and Vargas, whom they hate very much. They believe and suspect that where these persons are nothing good can be done. I am very perplexed, and do not know whether the service of your Majesty require that they be dismissed, although in my opinion they do not deserve it; or whether they are to be admittted to the sittings of the Council, although it would produce a great scandal and much offend the feelings of the people.

The Corregidor of Valladolid has written to me that since my departure from that town they are very sorry that they have not treated me better and respected and obeyed the royal commands of your Highness. It seems they are inclined to improve. They have driven away and banished from the town Don Juan de Mendoza, son of the Cardinal Don Pedro Gonzalez,⁽¹⁾ whostayed there in order to foment seditious and risings in favour of the Junta. They are also, it is said, to take proceedings against Saravia,⁽²⁾ to whom Pero Giron has cosas que don Pero giron le ha dado de aforros de martas y pieças de plata y ahun de algunos centenares de ducados, y diz que han acordado de no acoier ni dexar entrar al don Pedro en aquella villa, y porque V. Mt. sepa el mandamiento que el mesmo don Pedro ha embiado al lugar del villar de frades que en dias passados fue quitado por el conseio rreal al conde su padre, embio traslado del con esta a V. Al. tambien me escribe el corregidor que Valladolid esta puesta en no obedecer a la junta sino en lo que tocara y cumpliere justamente al remedio de los agravios. plega a dios de lo guiar de manera que facilmente vengan a perfecta y cumplida obediencia de Vra Mt. como se le deve que con aquello esperaria que luego las otras universidades se reduzirian y tornarian a lo mesmo, ahun que los prudentes no tienen esperanza dello sin que se haga a fuerça darmas sobre lo qual tambien quiero prevenir y certificar a V. Al. que en caso que lo destos Reynos tomasse algun sossiego no se habria de tener firmeza ni confianza en ello que siempre estarian en todo peligro de perdicion, y si pensassen que V. Mt. huviesse de alargar algo su venida luego tornarian a lo passado, y estonces la recruada seria peor que la dolencia primera y quiza sin esperanza de remedio que por lo passado facilmente se podria juzgar lo porvenir.

given some linings of marten skins, pieces of plate, and even some hundred ducats. It is not believed that they will receive Don Pedro or let him enter the town. In order that your Majesty may know what the said Don Pedro has written to the town of Villar de Frades, of which the royal council had some time ago deprived the Count, his father, I send a copy of his letter to your Highness. The Corregidor writes me also that Valladolid is not willing to obey the Junta except in what is just and relates to and concerns the reformation of grievances. Would God the thing were so arranged as to induce them without difficulty to return to that state of perfect and complete obedience which they owe to your Majesty. With such an example the other Commons would soon be reduced or voluntarily submit. The prudent, however, do not entertain hopes of it unless by force of arms. I wish also to inform and certify to your Highness, that in case these kingdoms should become more quiet, no trust or confidence could be placed in such a state of things. There would be always danger of losing them. If they thought that the absence of your Majesty is to last long, they would soon repeat what they have done, and the relapse would be worse than the first illness, perhaps without hope of recovery. It is easy to judge the future by the past.

After I had written all that precedes I received two letters from your Majesty, one for all the governors, the other for me alone. Both were dated on the 7th of the present month. I have learnt from them that the preparations for your coronation are being made with great haste in order that you may soon return to these kingdoms. I kiss the royal hands of your Highness, thanking you for the favour of writing me so particularly of your determination. May it please God to guide you in such a manner that there all be well arranged, and that with your presence and speedy arrival here things may return to their normal state. But skill and might will be necessary for that. Your Majesty may believe that however soon you may arrive here, the necessities of these kingdoms are so extreme that you never can come early enough. And although now, since I have left Valladolid, affairs should take a better turn towards a state of tranquillity and obedience, I should not trust it at all. Your Highness may be sure of this, and ought not to doubt it or to believe anything else. Believe me, in writing this I fulfil my duty towards God and your Majesty and satisfy my conscience.

The revocation of the power to pardon does not seem to me seasonable, and I think that those who advised it would not like to join me in my difficult labours.

Your very humble servant,

The Cardinal of Tortosa.

[Addressed :] To his sacred, imperial, royal, and catholic Majesty.

66. To his Majesty. From the Constable of Castile. 29th of October.

Sacred, imperial, and royal Majesty.

I received the despatch which your Majesty had ordered to be sent to me in the mail box of the 15th of the present month, and at the same time the letters of your Highness directed to me. I kiss the royal hands of your Majesty for the esteem in which my services are held. Señor, all I can do and possess is little, and my life has not much [longer to last], but both are employed in your service, and if I possessed more I would act in the same way in order to fulfil my duty.

Razon tiene V. Mt. de penalle lo que aca ha sucedido especialmente por lo que toca a la Reyna mi Señora vuestra madre, que siendo quien es su persona Real este entre gente soldada y Barbaros que nunca conosco ni vio y que con espingardas la asonbran cada dia por hazelle que firme. quitaronle como escrebi a V. Mt. todas las mugeres de su servicio y dexaronla solamente con una. Agora el Cardenal me ha escripto desde Medina de Ruyseco⁽¹⁾ una carta cuyo traslado enbio a V. Mt. haziendome saber que los de la Juncta hazen mucha gente de pie y de cavallo para sacar a Su Alt. de alli y llevalla a Toledo, o a Segovia. y que el havia proveydo a los grandes y pueblos de la comarca. haziendogelo saber para que saliesen con sus gentes a estorballo. lo que yo sienpre he creydo es que si Su Alteza se quiere yr de Tordesillas no ay quien la detenga. y si no se quiere yr no ay quien la lleve. de manera que ha muchos dias que este peligro tenemos en la mano. yo provey luego de escrevir a Burgos y a Valladolid y a Palencia y demas de aquello enbio cc. lanças de aquel cavo de Burgos hazia Medina de Ruyseco⁽²⁾ y yo me doy priesa para salir de aqui con toda la gente de armas y ynfanteria y de los grandes y cavalleros desta comarca y creo que yre a Burgos. y de alli camino derecho plaziendo a nuestro Señor

Well may your Majesty be sorry for what has occurred here, and especially with respect to the Queen, my lady and your mother; for, without regard for her station, her royal person lives amongst barbarous soldiers, whom she never before knew or saw, and who frighten her every day with hand guns to make her sign. They dismissed, as I have already written to your Majesty, all her women from her service, leaving her only one. The cardinal has now written a letter to me from Medina de Rioseco—a copy of which I send to your Majesty,—letting me know that the Junta enlists a great army of foot and horse, in order to carry off her Highness from there, and to take her to Toledo or Segovia, and that he had warned the grandees and the towns of that province, informing them of this design, in order that they should march with their troops and prevent it. What I always have believed is this: if her Highness wishes to leave Tordesillas, no one can keep her there, and if she does not wish no one can carry her off. This danger has threatened us already a long time. I wrote without delay to Burgos, Valladolid, and Palencia, and moreover I sent 200 lances from Burgos to Medina de Rioseco. I do what I can to march as soon as possible from here with all the men-at-arms, the infantry, and the grandees and cavaliers of this province. I think I shall go first to Burgos, and thence with the help of our Lord, direct to Tordesillas, where I hope with His help, as the enterprise is so sacred and holy, to set at liberty the Queen our lady and the señora Infanta, and to drive away the traitors, who with so much daring and boldness have risen and still rise against your service.

The power for the government comes in good time, and was necessary; because the cardinal, being in Medina de Rioseco, and the admiral in Catalonia, I did not hold the power, although I have always acted as governor since the president and members of the council are here with me, as I have written to your Majesty.

The cardinal had sent me the general instruction, which your Majesty desired to be sent, in the correct form in which I was to have it. Now by this post I received the duplicate despatch of that which relates to the instruction. It shall be used as is most suitable for the service of your Majesty and for the pacification and quiet of these kingdoms.

Concerning the coming of the Germans, your Majesty should command that haste be made, or at least that they should be ready to come with your Majesty.

Your Majesty should also send orders to provide money, because all that can be had here by seeking has been procured. I wrote to your Majesty, letting you know how I had written to the King of Portugal, entreating that he would lend me in this necessity fifty thousand ducats. He en lo que V. Mt. me ha escripto y agora me escribe de lo que toca al perdon lo que ay que dezir es que ya V. Mt. avra visto lo que con la posta pasada le escrevi y como la negociacion de burgos traya en los terminos que V. al. veria por un plito omenaje que hize. despues de aquello los de Burgos me enbiaron sus mensajeros para que otorgase los capitulos los quales otorgue, porque me parecio que aquello convenia mas a vño servicio. si ecedi de lo que V. has answered that he will do so, as your Majesty will see by the copies of his letters which I send with this. He begged that I would enter into certain bonds, which I will do. He sent them drawn up in proper form, and I enclose them for your Majesty. It is right that your Highness should command immediately that the security which he asks be given, and besides that you should write very graciously to him, and send me the warrant, that I may give it to certain merchants who have dealings with Portugal, asking them to pay me at once as much money as can be had, and to send there [to Portugal] for the remainder. With this, and what else we have, the guardsmen and those expenses which were most necessary for this expedition shall be paid.

Mt. mandara veer por los treslados de sus cartas que aqui enbio. enbiome a pedir que haga cierta obligacion la qual hare conforme a la que de alla me enbia ordenada que tambien enbio a V. Mt. conviene que luego V. al. mande hazer la seguridad que pide y demas de aquello que se le escriba muy graciosamente y enbiarme el despacho para que yo lo enbie. a ciertos mercaderes que tienen trato en portugal he enbiado a llamar para tomar dellos todo el dinero que pudiere para que se lo den alla y enbiar por la resta. destos y de todos los demas se pagara la gente de las guardas y los gastos que mas necesarios fueren para esta jornada.

With respect to what your majesty has written and now writes again concerning the pardon, what I have to say is that which I wrote by the former post which your Majesty will already have seen. The negotiation with Burgos is now in such terms as your Highness will learn from my oath of homage which I swore to them. After that the people of Burgos sent me their messengers that I might agree to the articles, which I did agree to, because it appeared to me to be more expedient for your service. If I exceeded what your Majesty ordered me to do, it was in order to set at variance the people of Burgos with those of the Junta, and to separate them from them. For that reason alone I should have granted and conceded what-

A. avra visto, se yva dañando, y si entrara en el Reyno de granada fuera muy peor, y con aver fecho esto se sosegara o a lo menos se atajara que los males no vayan en crecimiento. crea V. Mt. que estos Vños Reynos estan tales que han menester perdon y libertades y grueso exercito para que la boz de vuestro servicio permanezca en ellos. y si algunas ciudades de las alteradas no quisieren pasar por lo que Burgos ha fecho, lo qual yo creo que avra artos, ay se terna V. ever they desired, especially as upon Burgos depend the mountain country and Biscay, and Guipuzcoa and Alava, and the Encartaciones, and other cities and towns of this province and out of it which follow her example. Unless that was done this kingdom would have been lost, and Andalusia, which, as your Majesty will already have learnt, is also infected, and if the rebellion had spread into the kingdom of Granada it would be much worse. What I have done will appease the evils, or, at the least, prevent them from increasing. Your Majesty may believe that these your kingdoms are such that pardon, immunities, and a large army are required to secure to you a permanent command of them. If some of the disturbed cities, and I hope there will be many of them, are prevented by the example of Burgos from going further, your Majesty can take your time to chastise or pardon, or to do whatever you please. It is not a small thing that with ink and paper which we now give them they may be brought back to your service. Since your happy arrival is to be so soon, it is much better that all receive you in peace and tranquillity than in any other way. After all they are your vassals, and your Majesty, being peaceably received in your kingdoms, will be able to do with the one or the other ⁽¹⁾ whichever your Highness may choose,—the which could not be effected in any other way except with a great loss of life and many disturbances. of the conditions may appear hard to you, as in truth they are, I supplicate your Highness as affectionately as I can that your Majesty will confirm and approve the treaty which I have concluded, and order it to be sent to me. If your Highness does this, and, as I have said, some of the towns can be prevented thereby from going further, which I believe, then you will have a better occasion for chastisement. In the meantime, the ruder the things they have demanded of you, and you have conceded, the more reason has your Majesty, when you have arrived in your kingdoms, to put in execution that which should appear most advantageous to your service and the welfare and peace of the kingdoms. If there (') a different opinion from what I say should prevail, I could not, nor ought any one else to, think but that God, on account of the sins of the people, permits that all shall be destroyed, and that that will be done, which, as we have seen, has been done. Your Majesty is so catholic and christian and just that you will perceive that what I have performed has been in your service, and that in no other way could it have been done. I gave in hostage my sons Don Juan de Tovar and Don Bernaldino de Velasco, and the fortresses of Villalpando and Vilhorado, and I would have given them the duchess my wife, and my other children, and all which remains to me, because this is a matter of so much importance. There is no doubt Burgos being separated from the Junta its party receives a great loss.

the same time that their Procurators were here, hoping that I should agree to the said deed. I sent it immediately by Don Alvaro de Ayala to the city. That which Don Alvaro saw there, and what passed in the city after my sons had arrived, he will, I think, write to your Majesty. The city would not reply to the letter of your highness until their Procurators had arrived. They answer what your Majesty will learn from their letter.

The suspension of the power of the cardinal and of those of the council who were with him was perfectly right. Although he has already left Valladolid and is in Medina de Rioseco, whence he writes to me, informing me of what happens in that neighbourhood, it would be better if we were together, that we might have more authority to order and decide on what is to be done.

As for the troops from the Gelves, I have already written to your Highness how difficult it was to bring those of them over to these parts who were brought over. The other companies of the guards which your Majesty mentions were with Fonseca, and are from Navarra. The Duke of Najera sent four of them from there to accompany me.

As to what your Majesty says of Fonseca I know nothing more of him, after he left Arevalo, but that they told me that he and the Alcalde Ronquillo with him had gone to Portugal, and from thence embarked to go to your Majesty. This is all I know. If he should be in these kingdoms, I would not advise him to come and join himself with me, because it might cause the complete loss of the kingdom; and he would not be safe, because the commons hate him more than the Turk. He is very well there ⁽¹⁾, if he has gone, and can return with your Majesty. As he has done what he ought to do in your service, and ventured his possessions and life, there is much reason that your Majesty should receive him well, and let him have good treatment, and endeavour to put him right with the kingdom, which is the most important thing for him. He left Coca and Alaejos very well provided. His eldest son remained at Coca. At Alaejos the people of Medina fought with the artillery of your highness. Hitherto it is said they have not done much harm. The alcalde, whom they have within, behaves so well that nothing could be better. More than 20 or 30 men have been killed and many are wounded. The greatest trouble they give him is, that it is said they are undermining [the place]. In Coca likewise, they expect every day the same thing; but they tell me that they have no fear, because they are well provided, and the fortress is very strong.

With the orders which your Majesty caused to be sent to me in blank I shall do as your Highness commands.

arrived seasonably; those which are addressed, as well as the others. I immediately despatched them as your Majesty commanded.

On that which relates to Burgos I already wrote before of what has been done.

As to the expedition against Tordesillas, I have already told your Majesty what I think must be done. If the affair were mine, it might be that the letters of your Majesty would have reached me not far from the Junta; but as it is your business I must seek all possible means to place the affair in the least possible risk.

The postmaster has been here with me for some days; and certainly he is a very competent person for the office which he holds; very diligent and a true servant of your Majesty. He tells me that much money is owing him. Your Majesty ought to give orders how he is to be paid.

The summons for the grandees and prelates I have not yet sent. I will begin to despatch them immediately. These affairs of Burgos, and the ordering of the soldiery, have obstructed me. As I had no seal of your Majesty I have caused one to be made, in order that the letters might carry greater authority. The utmost possible haste shall be made.

I immediately sent your Majesty's summons to the council

las cartas de V. A. se dieron a pedro de cartagena y antonio Sarmiento y juan de Rojas. pedro de cartagena ha servido tanto y tan bien a V. Mt. en aquella juncta y el que ha contradicho todo quanto han fecho y agora que se vino de tordesillas su venida han ⁽¹⁾ provechado mucho en Burgos. porque les ha pregonado las maldades y trayciones que aquellos intentan y ha seydo de ponelles en la division que tienen. de manera que por muchas causas es razon de tener sus servicios en mucha estima.

of the orders, and as there was no one here with me except the President, Polanco, and Don Alonso de Castilla, Aguirre, and Acuña, who is on his way to the province of Guipuzcoa, I have not told that your Highness will bring troops from there, in addition to those of the grandees and the guards. As soon as we ⁽¹⁾ are together, which will be soon, we shall come to an understanding about it, and immediately send a courier with all diligence to your Majesty with our opinion on it.

The letters of your Highness will be given to Pedro de Cartagena, Antonio Sarmiento, and Juan de Rojas. Pedro de Cartagena has served your Highness so much and so well in Tordesillas that he deserves, and it is just that he should receive, many favours. It has been he who maintained the name of your Majesty in that Junta, and who has opposed all that they have done. And now that he has come from Tordesillas, his presence in Burgos has profited much. He has proclaimed the wickedness and treason which those [of the Junta] intended, and has been the one to make the discord between them which exists there. Thus on many accounts it is just to hold his services in much esteem.

The letters which your Highness sent me in duplicate for Sevilla, Cordova, and other places shall go soon, as your Highness commands, and other decrees which the council here and I have agreed upon touching the affairs of the Junta.

The warrant concerning the disturbance at Sevilla is not gone, nor yet the order nominating the Count de Luna chief justice of that place. The letters shall go immediately; but the order I will not send, because he [Count de Luna] may be of much service to your Majesty in Leon. If we withdraw him from there it might be that every thing would go ill. Sancho Martínez is gone to Sevilla. If he is received, the affair of the Count de Luna will be arranged. Should it appear good to your Majesty that, notwithstanding, the Count de Luna shall go, write it to me, and it shall be done. Remember Sancho Martínez, for he is a person who can be useful in all things.

The despatch for the Marquis de Mondejar shall be sent, and the business of that kingdom, and of everything else which your Highness commands, shall be looked after. It is a thing of much importance.

Your Majesty should hasten in the matter of the artillery, for we stand in much need of it.

I immediately sent the Captain Lescano with your Majesty's letters and one of mine, that he might enquire about the ships and give me an account of them, as your Majesty commands. He is to embark for Flanders, and to send me the report. Directly he does so, I will despatch it by the mail

I rejoice much that Lope Hurtado had arrived, because your Majesty will know from him the condition of affairs here, which he saw with his own eyes. Every hour I expect an answer to what I wrote by him, and to the other letters which I have written to your Highness.

I have known that the members of the Junta have sent to your Majesty a messenger, who it is said is call Anton Vasquez, native of Avila, a person of bad reputation. I do not believe they could send any other for they are all of this class. If your Majesty listens to these [the Junta], I do not know what to say, except that you ought not to it, and not only not hear him nor any others whom the Junta may send, but command them to be driven from court. May it please your Majesty to remember that the cardinal sent in your name to Avila the knight commander Hinestrosa, in order that he might speak to the Procurators, and they did not choose to hear him, nor permit him to enter the city, and so sent him away. They did the same to the Bishops of Lugo and Oviedo, whom he sent to Tordesillas, and did not desire to hear them or permit them to enter within, so that they give one clearly to understand the bad will which they have towards your service.

I am informed that, as your Majesty constituted a precedent in Coruña, by giving the captain generalship of the kingdom to Fonseca, others will now ask for it. Now this office is mine, as your Majesty knows. When I shall cease to exercise

The Count of Oñate, my son, is still with the cardinal. He serves there very well in every thing that occurs. And on his departure from Valladolid he did all that he could and has never abandoned him, as I had ordered him. He is a prudent man, and inclined to serve your Majesty in any kind of employment. Your Highness will remember him when you are so disposed.

The Dean of Burgos, my nephew, and the Doctor Zumel, are in Burgos, suffering more personal danger there than can be stated here. With regard to the doctor he is of such a disposition that favours must be shown him every day. The other, who is of a different quality, might have them when an occasion offers.

I have written at other times to your Majesty to let you know of what use Juan de Rojas is, and the goodwill and desire he has for your service. He never leaves me. It is right that your Majesty should remember him.

Don Juan de Luna, captain of the continos of your Majesty, came here with some men of his company. He has served and continues to serve very well in all things which fall in his way. His coming here with the men of his company, before anybody else, was a principal cause why the troops from the Gelves came. On this account, your Highness ought to show him favour in every respect. which I now beg of your Highness is, that you will grant him the favour of the knighthood of Santiago, since in him are found all the qualities which are requisite. Your Majesty will favour me much in doing this.

The Count of Fuensalida is in Galicia, and maintains much peace and justice in that kingdom. Your Highness ought to order that he be written to, and commanded to continue to do the same.

The days that Don Alvaro de Ayala was here, he has done as he always does, that is, to serve your Majesty. He has a desire to serve you in this enterprise. He knows well how to preach that which is suitable. Your Highness will keep him in remembrance when any thing offers.

The knight commander Aguilera has written to me that the Count of Benavente has dismissed him. Do your Majesty write to the count about it, as the knight commander came here on matters concerning your service.

In order to give an account to your Majesty of all that has happened here, it appeared to me that it would be well that Don Pero Verez de Guevara should be sent to you. I beg your Majesty to hear and to give him entire credit, and send him quickly back again, because here he may be of use in all necessary things, as he is so discreet and a servant of your Majesty, whose very royal person and state may our Lord guard and prosper as your Majesty desires.

[Addressed :] Sacred and catholic Majesty, our King.67.

[Written in the hand of Cisterer, secretary of the Cardinal of Tortosa :] This is to be read to his Majesty alone.

Most reverend and very illustrious Lord,

In order that your most reverend Lordship may be well informed of all the things which pass here and regard the service of the Queen our lady, and the Emperor our lord, her son, I let you know that all these days the Procurators who are here have begged, and still very earnestly beg, her Highness to sign some decrees, which they say are very necessary. They have even insisted on the urgency of them, alleging a great many reasons. Her Highness always answers that she has sent for her councillors, who, at her command, had been here some time ago que aqui venieron el otro dia mandado de Su Alteza, y que comunicado con ellos proveeria como combenia y sobresto entre otras cosas le dixieron que estos Reynos estan destruydos e principalmente por Respeto de los del consejo y otras personas, que aconsejaron mal al Rey nuestro Señor y que por esto porque pensavan ser gravemente castigados como merecian avian huydo a partes que no se podian aver, y aun V. S. Rma. aunque por ser extranjero no podia ser governador se avia ydo escondido a Rioseco, y que alli se avia juntado con los malhechores, y procuraban de juntar gente de grandes y todo lo que podian, y asimismo el Señor condestable por ciertos poderes nuevos que el Rey Nuestro Señor le avia enbiado, y que todo ello hera en mucho deservicio de Su Alt. y para abrasarse estos Reynos y que por tanto, que pues que con su firma se podia todo remediar, mandasse firmar aquellas cartas que alli le mostravan. e su Alt. les respondió que estava informada de V. S. que hera extranjero hera buen ombre, de muy buenos deseos y vida y que los del consejo eran del tiempo del Rey Catholico. no podia ser que fuesen malos a lo menos que algunos avia que heran buenos, y que por esto queria hablar y comunicar con ellos porque heran personas esperimentadas y sabian la forma de la buena governacion del tiempo de los Reyes Catholicos, y que si alguno dellos hera malo que Su Alteza le mandaria castigar, y que en quanto a la

After having conferred with them she would decide what is suitable. Amongst other things they [the Procurators] replied that it was just these councillors and other such people who had destroyed the kingdom by giving bad advice to the King our lord. Because they were afraid of being severely punished, as they deserved, they had fled to places where they could not be caught. Even your most reverend Lordship, being a foreigner [they said], could not be governor, and had now gone secretly to Rioseco to join the evil doers, who were collecting the tenantry of the grandees and other people [under the command] of the Constable, who had received new orders from the King our lord. All that, they said, was done to her prejudice, and would kindle civil war in her kingdoms. As her signature would remedy all evil, they begged her to sign certain letters which they showed her. Her Highness said that she was informed about your Lordship, who, although a foreigner, was a good man, harbouring the best intentions, and [leading an irreproachable] life. As for the councillors, they were of the time of the Catholic King, and could not be wicked, at least not all of them. She wanted to speak and to confer with them, because they were experienced persons, and knew how the good government of the Catholic King and Queen had been carried on. If some of them should be found to be bad, her Highness would see that they should be punished. With respect to the troops which the Constable and other grandees were said to be assembling, [her Highness told them] that they ought not to believe that it was to do any wrong or evil, but only to serve her Highness as the grandees and cavaliers of her kingdoms had always done during the reign of the King and Queen her parents. They were loyal, and especially so the house of the Constable. An observation was made that the present Constable was not the same person whom her Highness had known, but his brother Don Iñigo. Her Highness replied that he would act in the same way as his predecessors. The Procurators continued their prayers, and at last her Highness said that in her rooms were certain women who ought not to be in her service. If they would dismiss them she would see what she could do. The women were dismissed. Next day the Procurators said to her Highness that as they had sent away her women, they implored her to sign. Her Highness, seated in her state room, spoke a long while with them, and they read to her the decrees which they had brought with them to be signed. When they had finished reading them she observed that such decrees must be signed first by her councillors on the back of the paper, else she could not ratify them by her signature; and this [she added] was one of the reasons why she wanted to speak with the members of her Council. She had already sent a messenger to call them into her presence, and they would soon arrive. In fact, she had given such an order to one of her servants, who, however, did not obey it. The Procurators renewed their complaints of the Council, and said that there were other persons very learned and perfectly able and willing to serve her. They would sign the decrees. Her Highness on hearing this declared that she was unwell and tired, and that she would on another day see and decide what was best; and having pronounced these words she retired to her cabinet. The same night there was a tumult in the town produced by the rumour that the Constable with a great army was near the gates. They [the Procurators] hastened to the palace, and entered where her Highness was, saying that the enemy was at the gates ready to force them. [They begged her] to sign a proclamation, else the tyrants would take her away and do her much harm. Although somewhat disturbed, she said that, as they saw, it was night, and that they might go and tell the Constable in her name that until day he should remain quiet, and do no harm to anybody; next day she would speak with him. She refused to come to any other decision that night. Next morning her Highness did not mention what had occurred, as though, I do not know why, she did not believe [in the rumour]. When the Procurators renewed their entreaties, her Highness told them not to be too much concerned and too hasty. Very soon she would go out to Santa Clara and to other places, and despatch all the business which was pending. The Procurators declared that their business could not suffer any delay, and that, until she would sign, they would not leave the room. She then retired to another apartment, but the Procurators persisted in their demands that she should at least sign a letter to the Constable and the grandees, ordering them to desist from enrolling soldiers. Her Highness, repeating that neither the Constable nor the others would do any injustice, admonished them not to be afraid. They went away very little satisfied. After some while they returned with a king-at-arms, begging the Queen to send him to the Constable. Her Highness replied, "That is not my king-at-arms. I do not know him." Thus the affair ended; and afterwards many of the Procurators said that they had returned to her Highness, and that she had ordered that a messenger should be sent to the Constable to tell him that he was not to use his forces, nor do any injury, and that he should not go forth from his house unless her Highness should order him. At this, however, I was not present. The following day arrived Don Pedro de Bazan, Don Juan de Mendoza, and a third person, to speak with her Highness in the name of the town of Valladolid. sengers being in the corridor outside spoke from behind the door to her Highness, who was in her room, and told her that the town of Valladolid had sent them to kiss her hands and feet, and humbly to beseech her that, as it was said she wished to leave Tordesillas, she would do them the favour to go to Valladolid, which was well prepared to receive and to serve her, &c. Her Highness sent somebody to tell them that she was unwell, and that they should return the following day. They did as they were ordered. Next day at noon her Highness spoke with them, and said that she was much pleased with their offer, and had always had a good opinion of that town, but that she had not yet decided on leaving Tordesillas. If she should come to such a decision, she would let them know.

The priests who came to cure her Highness are here, and endeavour, according to their office, [to do] as much as they are able. Thus the one party to cure and heal her, and the others to make her sign, use all possible haste. May God enlighten her Highness, as well for her own benefit as for the good of their Highnesses, and of their kingdoms, and her own. Where it has been possible there has not been wanting one who has advised for her good, agreeably to what your Lordship commanded, and the same will be done henceforward, God willing.

Despues de haver escrito a V. M^t de mi salida de Valladolid y de otras cosas que hasta estonces se havian ofrecido vinieron el obispo de Çamora con su caballo y çossaete y fray Alonso con alguna gente hasta el monasterio de prado con trato que tenian concertado con algunos alborotadores daquela villa para meterles dentro della con la gente que trahian y con pensamiento de proceder contra el infante de granada, y contra otros servidores de V^{ra} Mag^d, y en haviendo sabido esto la dicha villa como ya havia concertado y estava determinada en que el dicho infante sea capitan general della y no don Pedro giron pusieron sus buenas guardas a las puertas y todos muy apercebidos acordaron de resistir y no consentir la entrada dellos, y assi se fueron. y juntamente con esto tuvieron los de la villa sus diligencias en hazer y tomar pesquisa con quien se habian concertado, y plugo a nuestro Señor de encaminarles en ello de manera que hallaron que los principales dellos despues del vera y cerero que estan ausentes eran un barbero y otro bonetero. y luego prendieron al bone-

68. To his Majesty. From the Cardinal of Tortosa. 1st of November 1520.

Sacred, imperial, catholic, royal Majesty,

After having informed your Majesty of my departure from Valladolid, and of other things that had happened until then, the Bishop of Zamora, on his horse and in his coat of armour, and Fray Alonso with some troops, came as far as the convent of the Prado,⁽¹⁾ hoping that they and their soldiers would be admitted into that town, and could proceed against the Infante of Granada, and other servants of your Majesty, as they had concerted with some rebels of the town. When the town [council] knew it, as they had already decided and determined that the Infante should be their captain general, and not Don Pedro Giron, they kept very good watch at the gates, and, all very well armed, decided to resist and not to permit them to enter. Thus, they went away. At the same time the [town council] diligently inquired who the persons were that had entertained intelligence with them, and God was pleased to direct their efforts so well that they discovered that the principal persons in this affair—next to Vera and the wax chandler, who are absent—were a barber and a bonnet maker. They arrested the bonnet maker, and made him give evidence. As he could not deny the truth, he confessed many other things, for which he was hanged on the spot. Meanwhile the barber took precautions to leave the town, and went to the convent of the Prado. More than one thousand persons of the town followed him, surrounded the convent, searched it with great diligence, found and took him away, and with pipes and drums they brought him back to the town whilst it was already night, and put him into prison. As his process was already made out and concluded, the corregidor of the town and the alcaldes of the chancery passed sentence of death on him. They made him confess, conducted him with more than fifty torches to the square, and hung him there the same night, declaring him traitor and rebel, with the consent and to the great satisfaction of the whole people. What this barber has confessed is that he had brought orders from the Junta about the measures to be taken for the imprisonment of the members of the privy council; that it was he who had entered into negotiations with the Bishop of Zamora about his admission into the town; that he had occupied the gate for that purpose; that he had rung the bell of San Miguel [to produce a tumult] against the Infante, and many other things which I do not state here to avoid prolixity. Your Majesty may believe that the sentence against these two rebels has contributed and contributes a good deal towards reducing this town to due obedience. Six or seven others have

M^t que la sentencia que se hizo destos dos alborotadores ha sydo y es gran parte para reduzir aquel pueblo al estado debido. y ahunque sin estos havian prendido

Mt. que aunque es capitan de Valladolid que iamas se hizo con su voluntad desconcierto alguno en aquella villa, pero como no era parte para estorvarlo erale forçado no contraddezir la opinion del pueblo y dissimular muchas cosas que quisiera poner en egecucion para en castigo de los malos. por lo qual sera bien que V. Alt. le mande escrevir alguna buena carta graciosa.

en estos dias he henbiado a Valladolid gomez de Santyllan con cartas e instruccion de todo lo que me ha parecido cunplir al servicio de Vña Mt. con lo qual y con el traslado de la carta que tambien les he embiado sobre la venida de V. also been arrested, but as they did not find them very culpable they released them; for a great portion of the townspeople were implicated in this criminal affair, and if they had punished these they would have been obliged to punish all the others. They therefore thought it best to ignore it, especially as the [guilty] have begun to understand and amend the past, with great demonstrations of goodwill towards the service of your Majesty and obedience to your royal commands. The said Infante behaves very well, and has exposed himself to great dangers in the service of your Highness. Your Majesty may believe me that since he has been captain of Valladolid never has any fault against your service been committed in that town with his consent. As he, however, is not strong enough to prevent all, he is forced to abstain from opposing public opinion, and must leave many things undone which he would like to do, in order to punish the evildoers. It would be good if your Highness would write him a kind and gracious letter.

Some days ago I sent Gomez de Santillan with letters and an instruction to Valladolid concerning all that in my opinion would be beneficial to the service of your Majesty, together with which I have also sent the copy of the letter concerning the coming of your Majesty. I hope in God they will show their goodwill and intentions not only by punishing traitors, but that this mission also will produce some good effect, and the affairs of that town be soon and satisfactorily settled.

On the 25th of last month I received letters from Tordesillas, in which they write me that the Queen our lady is so very much worn out that it is the greatest grief in the world. I do not wonder at it, considering the reverence and good treatment she receives at the hands of the members of the Junta, who have deprived her of her women, and importune her Highness day and night asking her to sign. Your Highness ought not to have any doubt, that if they could obtain signatures from her Highness, and if it were only one, as by other letters I have already written, they would cause great tumults in these kingdoms, greater indeed than now already exist. A short time ago they endeavoured and were in great haste to try whether they could not carry off her Highness from Tordesillas, and they persist still in this purpose, as I am informed. Directly I was made aware of it, I wrote to some grandees and cavaliers who are staying in the neighbourhood, and also to Valladolid. [Valladolid] certainly has answered me very well on this subject. That town is determined to oppose it, not to consent to or permit it on any condition; so that I think the Junta will not be able to carry out their design. The Count of Benavente entered this town⁽¹⁾ on the 30th of October with 200 lances, as many sharpshooters, and, moreover, he brought with him 1,000 foot, with pikes and other arms. Next day came the Marquis of Astorga with 200 lances and 2,000 foot, well armed and well disciplined. With the Marquis came the Bishop of Astorga and the Count of el Condestable pienso que havra escrito ya a V. Mt. el concierto que ha tomado con Burgos y segun lo que me escribe espero que dentro de muy pocos dias nos veremos y estaremos juntos. estoy certificado que viene muy poderoso a mas de lo que la gente que vino de los Algerves le ha acudido. El marques de Denia me escribe que verna tambien luego con buen tropel de gente. tambien esperamos de cada dia muchos cavalleros particulares. el obispo de Burgos me ha escrito que hara venir de Coca cient lanzas que hay en aquella forta-

Altamira. Two or three days before these noblemen had arrived the men whom the Admiral keeps ready in this his town were passed in review. They are 100 very good and brilliant lances, and 500 foot, with corresponding artillery. Besides these troops, the Admiral, the Count of Benavente, and the said Marquis keep in readiness all the other men on their estates. We expect the Count Alba de Liste from day to day. It is said that he comes very well prepared. The Admiral has written to me what your Highness will learn from his enclosed letters. I think he will be here within eight or ten days.

I hope the Constable has already written to your Majesty about the treaty he has concluded with Burgos. According to what he writes to me, I expect we shall see each other in a very few days, and stay together. I am assured that he comes [with a] very strong [force] over and above the troops from the Gelves which have joined him. The Marquis of Denia writes me that he also will soon come with a goodly troop of soldiers. Besides, we expect daily many cavaliers. The Bishop of Burgos has written to me that he will order to come from Coca 100 lances who are in garrison in that fortress. I think he will come in person. I do what I can to prevent it⁽¹⁾ in order to avoid scandal, and because the result of a battle is always doubtful, and, on whichever side the

I hear the Marquis of Villena is very angry that a certain rumour, stating that he is very much the reverse of a zealous servant of your Majesty, is spread in that court. ⁽¹⁾ It would be well for your Majesty to write him very graciously, and to ignore what has passed; for in this conjuncture he can certainly render very good service to your Highness.

The revocation of your Majesty, by which we are deprived of the power to pardon and to convoke Cortes, is certainly very unseasonable. All prudent people are astonished at it (we do not dare to tell it to many from fear of the scandal it would create in the kingdom), and say that those who have advised your Highness have not well considered what is convenient, and not weighed the things which are happening now in these kingdoms. They also say that we have power to punish, and not to reward any one. I entreat your Highness to revoke the order you have commanded to be sent, and to grant again to the Constable and the Admiral the same power to pardon and convoke Cortes. As for myself I not only do not desire this office, but should consider it a favour if I were relieved from it, and indeed, Señor, let it be

The King of Tremecen, to whom your Majesty restored his kingdom, of which Barbarossa had possessed himself, and against whom afterwards the kingdom and a younger brother, who is called Muley Macot, rebelled, has died in the neighbourhood of Oran, whereto he had retired from fear of the said brother. This Muley Macot, who now possesses the kingdom, has sent to ask the same peace and treaty which your Highness had concluded with his brother. The treaty is in the hands of the Secretary Zuazolo, and it is said Lope Hurtado has concluded it. In conformity with it, we despatch and send the necessary powers to the Marquis Comares, who is captain-general of that kingdom. I write this to inform your Majesty, and send you with it a letter of the said king to you, which, I believe, speaks of this affair.

I think the bull concerning the Inquisition is not yet revoked. I beg your Majesty to write with very good ink ⁽¹⁾ to his Holiness on this subject, asking him to revoke it without delay; and to instruct Juan Manuel to solicit and procure it. Even if your Highness comes soon, it will not be as soon as the state of these kingdoms requires. As for the suspension of my power and that of the Council ⁽¹⁾ until I and another governor are together, it has not indeed been well received. It is here already said that the Council ⁽²⁾ of your Majesty advise you in the affairs of Spain like men who judge things from a distance, and, indeed, orders often arrive here which do not benefit either your Highness or the public weal of these kingdoms. With respect to the money for the expenses of my household, certainly I do not know where to get it, and if I still have a little, your Majesty may believe me that it will last a very short time, and then I shall be unable to maintain myself.

One of those friars who go about seducing and exciting the villages with their sermons has been caught. He calls himself Fray Bernardino, of the order of San Augustin. The Junta in Tordesillas has written to me what your Highness will see; but I answered them differently from what they perhaps expected, and as the service and the authority of your Majesty require.

To the Count of Benavente, the Marquis of Astorga, the Count of Alba de Liste, to Don Hernando Enriquez, to the Adelantado of Galicia, brothers of the Admiral, to Gutier de Fonseca, and Don Juan de Ulloa it is necessary that your Highness should write, thanking them very much for what they have done and do in the interest of your royal service, and exhorting them to continue as you always have expected from them. 69. To his Majesty from the Cardinal, the 13th November.

Sacred, Imperial, Catholic, Royal Majesty,

After having written on the 1st of the present month to your Majesty, I have received your letter of the 24th of last month, and by it have seen the good effect and beginning which has taken place from your consecration as King of the Romans, and with what solemnity you have received the first crown for which, as it adds to your royal authority and service, and is a preparation for your speedy arrival in these kingdoms, we have all much joy here, and have given thanks for it to our Lord, whom may it please by his divine mercy to guide you in all things to his holy service, and with all prosperity. The letters touching this which your Highness commanded me to send to certain private persons were immediately given and sent to whom they were addressed. And as now your Highness will have seen that I am now at liberty, although not without abundance of work and fatigue, I entreat your Majesty particularly to give orders in reply to all which I have written until now, as well in the matters concerning your royal estate as in those of private persons.

That which has since happened is the same as what

I have written by other letters to your Highness. It still appears to me that the affairs of these kingdoms are very doubtful and in great danger. Those of the Junta who reside in Tordesillas, with all their forces and by every means they can, try and endeavour to induce the Queen our lady to sign, which she promised to do if they would take away the women whom she had there in her service, and for this reason immediately at the same moment they removed them from her Highness, with the exception of a single slave. And now the affair is in such a condition that sometimes they have hopes of it [the signature] and at others they despair. And they always seek new modes of telling her Highness the great favour and benefit which these kingdoms would receive if she would sign, placing before her Highness, almost with a show of some fear, the difficulties which will follow if she does not sign.

Your Majesty may believe that if she signs, without any doubt the whole kingdom will be lost, and will throw off the royal obedience to your Majesty. Thus may you in mercy see in what condition and how doubtful is your royal kingdom of Spain, and the danger of postponing your royal arrival in Spain.

The Junta sent to say to the Queen our lady by the Doctor of Salamanca, that to the great prejudice of her Highness your Majesty had usurped the name and title of King of Castile, hoping and believing that being irritated at it she would prohibit obedience to your Majesty, and that she would take care to deprive you of the said title. And your Majesty may take it for certain that if some persons had not warned her Highness of the difficulties which might follow if she signed, she would have done so long ago. For all the kingdom would have mutinied more than it already has. In many things her Highness speaks very prudently, as your Highness may see by the letter which I sent to Lope Hurtado, which I received from one who was mixed up with every thing, and was present and heard it. They gave the people to understand that her Highness was tormented at Tordesillas by certain evil spirits, and to cure her they called in some priests who have given them hopes of restoring her Highness. But up to this time these exorcisms have profited nothing. In answering to what they had written me on this subject, I said to them that such a work as obtaining the recovery of her Highness was not reserved up to this time for them [to accomplish], and that it was now a long time that all endeavours had been used for that purpose and that if such a disease were curable her Highness would have been healed. They have in letters libelled me with seeking to prevent them from doing what would benefit the health of her Highness. Many suspect that there is deceit in it, to excite the people against me. And certainly notwithstanding their error, I take it in the best and most charitable part, believing that they did not seek rightly to understand my letter. But to prevent the infamy which by this means they impute to the Kings, Don Ferdinand and Don Philip, of glorious memory, and also on account of that which they preach about your Majesty, saying that they and you have not used the diligence necessary to cure her Highness, and that your Majesty, and your aforesaid grandfather and father, have kept her prisoner against her will [in Tordesillas, in order that they and you might reign, I told them in my letter that all that could be done for the health of her Highness had been done in vain in times past, and that perchance the same thing might happen to them.

For more than fifteen days past there has been a report going about that, with the hope of obtaining thereby the signature of her Highness, they would remove her from Tordesillas to some other place. We all thinking that it would be very adverse to her health, and if we did not take her by force perhaps her Highness would be in danger of dying, I appealed to some grandees and towns to prevent that [removal] in any other manner, but [if the Commons should use] force, then to oppose them by force. Some time ago the members of the Junta gathered an army, chiefly of horsemen, and the greater part of them are those who came from Africa, whom they have suborned that they may follow and join with them. They appoint magistrates, and, as if they were kings, they usurp the authority of your Majesty and the property of the kingdom, for which reason I certify to your Majesty that if we do not meet this people, they will absolutely usurp all the kingdom. Don Pedro Giron, their captain general, is said to have seven hundred lances, and he expects three hundred more from Salamanca, Toro, Avila, and Zamora, but howsoever, we do not fear danger except from our own men, many of whom favour the name of liberty for the people.

The three briefs which have been sent me I have received; that is to say, the one in which the Bishop of Zamora is cited, the other in which is committed to me the chastisement of certain ecclesiastics who stir up sedition in the kingdom, the third against the Commons. The first I endeavoured to execute, but I can find no one who dares to undertake it, because the bishop is in the field with five hundred lances and a thousand foot soldiers, amongst whom, as they tell me, there are three hundred of the clergy of his diocese, armed; and to the others who remain there, to satisfy and fulfil the duties towards the people, he has given the privilege of celebrating [mass] three times a day, and more if they could. To many it appears that we ought not to execute the other two briefs, lest that by them the people should be more stirred up and indignant against me, as they were against the president on account of the other brief. Would to God that these briefs had been sent to one of the two bishops who reside here, ⁽¹⁾ who are of Lugo and Oviedo.

The Junta threatens that it is about to come with a powerful army to overrun and besiege this town, and put to flight, or take [prisoners], those of the council whom they hold in great hatred, and principally the president, Comendador Mayor, Zapata, and Vargas, and even the Bishop of Burgos, who is alone in Astorga. Many say that as long as these [persons] shall be joined with us here, the commons will never cease from usurping the authority and royal property, and I do not know that they would even content themselves with this, for there goes about a report that those aforesaid have robbed and destroyed the kingdom, and they even begin to dislike me because I have some of them in my company. If the odium which they have for them had fallen on me your Majesty may believe that long ago I should have left Spain, which I shall be forced to do because necessity does not permit of anything else. your Majesty writes that I am to take up borrowed moneys, your Highness may believe that all those that we can obtain in your royal name are very necessary for the payment of the troops, and now very few are found who are inclined to lend, for evéry one thinks that he will have great need of all he possesses. In my own name I do not intend to borrow from anybody, because I have not from whence I could repay it. At present very little money remains to me, although the title of governor involves great expenses. If your Majesty should find it well to relieve me from this charge I might even sustain myself for three months and live on my own [means], and if not I shall wait this month; and having expended the little money that I have, I shall sell my plate, and with what I shall get from it I hope that I shall be able to go to Rome or return to those countries.⁽¹⁾

The town of Valladolid has sent me messengers with certain propositions, a copy of which goes with this, which I, by counsel of the Comendador Mayor, of Zapata and of Vargas, granted to them, in the hope that if the Junta should refuse them, that town could more simply and easily separate itself from the Junta, and return to perfect obedience. This the said messengers who came to us promised for certain, but the affair has fallen out otherwise than was expected; some persons warning that town, and telling the people that it suited the good of the commonwealth that they should not abandon the Junta, now that same town has united with the aforesaid Junta with more conformity than up to this time, and more than any other corporation of the whole kingdom, as your Highness will see by some of my letters. The same Junta desired to confer with me on all the affairs of state in Tordesillas, if I would give up the title of governor, which I think would be convenient. For two governors might do as much as three, and in this manner I might be able with more effect to persuade them, and restore the kingdom to peace. And thus it will be well that your Majesty, in order to content them, should give orders to free me from this charge. Few things fall out prosperously with us, and almost all contrary, and if your Majesty does not come with all speed and celerity without doubt the kingdom will be lost.

The Count of Benavente, the Marquis and the Bishop of Astorga, have begged me to supplicate your Majesty that, in case of the deprivation of him [the Bishop] of Zamora, your Highness will make a grant of that bishopric to the Bishop of Astorga, and that in part it may be in favour of a son of the said count. For inasmuch as these three are here, with many men, taking the side of your Majesty against those of the Junta who are very powerful with the troops ⁽¹⁾ which have come to them from the rebellious cities, it is but just that your Highness should give them all favour, much more now that all the kingdom from Toledo to this place, and almost up to the mountains, is risen. It is said openly, and I believe it is the truth, that the cause of it has been your Majesty not having recognised the services of the good nor having chastised the bad. The population is all bent upon rising, and to this also they are moved because your Majesty has taken no care to order the payment of certain acknowledged and legitimate debts, and as little [have you] sought to provide sufficiently that which is necessary for the defence of the places in Africa, where has been already lost the Peñon with much and good artillery, to the great damage of the kingdom of Granada. And moreover there is great danger of losing Algiers, where pay is in arrears for twentythree months.

On your Majesty's artillery which is in Medina you must not count. It is necessary that your Majesty should bring with you some and good [artillery] from those parts, in order that, making these subjects somewhat afraid, you may more easily draw them to reasonable conditions. For your Majesty to fight with your own vassals, this it certainly appears to me would be a horrible thing, and would cause great and perpetual hatred in the people against your Majesty. On this account it will be well to take measures to dissuade them from this wickedness, and that they may not persist in their evil purpose, and that at the same time they may begin to fear, and subdue and conform themselves to reason, and content muchos son de parecer que seria gran expediente que Vña Magestad mandasse salir la chancilleria de Valladolid y mudarla en otro lugar, como otras vezes diz que se ha fecho por los demeritos de aquella villa, porque agora en grande manera ha faltado a Vña Mag. y unidose con la Junta segund dicho es, y que tambien convendria que Vña Alteza mandasse a Medina del Campo que so pena de perdimiento del privilegio que tiene de la feria tornasse a su rreal obediencia, y a Simancas que so pena de perder sus privilegios recoia toda la gente que se le embiare paral servicio de V. Mt., pero en todo esto veo solamente un inconveniente, y este cierto me parece grande, que por ventura se endureçeran e indignaran mas con ello y procuraran que la Reyna nuestra Señora de palabra mande lo contrario en caso que no lo puedan alçanzar por su firma. mas yo espero que los oydores de la chancilleria obedeceran los mandamientos de V. themselves with justice. But when the admiral arrives here, which I believe will be this night, we shall take counsel upon it.

Many are of opinion that it would be very proper that your Majesty should order to remove the Court of Chancery from Valladolid, and change it to some other place, as in former times, they say, has been done on account of the ill deserts of that town, because now, in a great measure, it has forsaken your Majesty, and united itself with the Junta, as is reported. And also it would be well that your Highness should command Medina del Campo that, under pain of losing the privilege of the fair which it has, it must return to its royal obedience, and Simancas that, on pain of losing its privileges, it should receive all the forces which might be sent there for your Majesty's service. In all this I see only one inconvenience, and certainly it appears to me a great one, that by chance they may become hard and more inflamed by it, and endeavour [to bring about] that the Queen our lady shall command the contrary by word of mouth, in case of their not being able to obtain her signature. But I hope that the oydores of the Court of Chancery will obey the commands of your Majesty; above all, if your Highness commands to take from them the power and authority of judging and holding the court of justice in the said town of Valladolid. And if, in other places not so rebellious against your Majesty as against the grandees, it were prohibited that

But, by the grace of God, our condition is such that late or never do we take measures which in time might be of good use.

I do not know how your Majesty can repay and reward the paternal and affectionate love which the King of Portugal continually displays in the affairs of your Highness, as well with the procurators of the Junta as with the others of this kingdom. For certainly, if they saw any change in him, or any sign of little affection to your Majesty, they would have much more courage and boldness to carry on their bad purposes. But his constancy prevents and somewhat restrains them. It would be well if your Majesty wrote very affectionately to him, giving thanks for what is done, and praying that he will always continue it [his affection], as I have many times written to him, and write in the name of your Majesty.

The Marquis of Tarifa is very desirous to serve your Highness, and has offered to lend us a certain sum of money. The Count of Ayamonte also shows the same goodwill. He supplicates your Highness to grant him the favour of the

But before many days we shall be obliged to dismiss a great part of the aforesaid troops, for we cannot gather as much money as is necessary to keep them.

The people of the Junta press hard upon the fortress of Alaejos, and now recently have had a fight, but the alcalde of the [fortress] is a man of so many resources that he gives them the payment they deserve; although those who die there are killed more honourably than on account of their crimes and rashness they deserve. But with all this, I believe that the castle will not be able to maintain itself many days, according to what is said.

For the same church of Leon, the Count of Benavente and the Bishop of Oviedo urge a request in this manner. That Don Juan, son of the said count, shall have the church of Oviedo, and he of Oviedo that of Jaen, and he of Oviedo will be satisfied to assign as a pension to whomsoever your Majesty may command the whole amount that the same church of Jaen is worth beyond that of Oviedo, which, according as is said, will be three thousand ducats. If your Majesty would be pleased to assist me with this pension for the support of my servants, I should take it as a great favour; and if not, since up to this time I have not been a beggar, nor have I importuned you in matters concerning my own interest, and have maintained myself with the little substance that I have, I shall be less so now, and I hope that with the help of God I may finish with it the little time I have to live.

I believe the admiral will arrive here tomorrow. On the matter of the Constable and the affairs of Burgos I am silent, because your Highness will hear of them at length by the letters of the same Constable. As to what more may happen I will write to your Majesty, whose life and royal estate may our Lord long preserve, and in all prosperity.

I have had great pleasure, señor, in what you state, viz., that you have read my memoir to his Majesty alone, for you know its importance. I beg you to do the same with the paper here enclosed. With respect to the marriage with [the Infanta of] Portugal, as his Majesty thinks that it is not convenient to speak now of it, it must remain until it pleases his Highness. I am persuaded that he does not doubt my good intention, and you may still tell his Majesty that he owes great love and many thanks to the said King of Portugal.

And, as I have now left Valladolid, tell his Majesty to do me the favour of giving me an answer to all I have written to him concerning affairs of state, as well as of private persons, and to order that the hidalgia for Diego de Montero, about which I write to his Majesty, be despatched one of these days. The Marquis of Comares has very instantly asked me to procure it, and I should like that the order about it be sent to me. Speak with the Secretary Covos about this business.

Concerning the bishopric of Mondoñedo, you may be sure that I wish very much that the Doctor Manso should have it. As his Majesty so graciously and particularly hears you about all my concerns, tell him, on this subject, what you think

Where you, señor, are, it is not necessary to write to other persons about my affairs. I am very glad to hear that the Señor Duke of Alba is held there in so high esteem, and that he takes part in the sittings of the Council; for, indeed, he merits everything, and everything is well bestowed on him. Recommend me a thousand times to him. As he knows now what kind of corn we have reaped in these kingdoms, I beg him to urge his Highness to come soon, for otherwise (without the presence of his Highness and his Lordship) we cannot masticate, and much less swallow it many days longer.

As for the business of the benefices for my servants, for love's sake do not forget them when an opportunity offers itself.

You may believe that in Tordesillas we have taken good precautions, although things are now in so bad a state that it profits little. I am glad that your affairs proceed so prosperously. If you are made a knight I hope in God that with respect to the chamberlainship we shall also succeed. You may believe me that I shall help you and speak with his Highness by word of mouth, as that is much better than writing letters. I write to his Majesty about my money affairs, and in fact I am in so much need that I no longer find

On the 12th of this month I received information from the Prior, Don Antonio, that Juan de Padilla enlists troops with the intention to capture Ucles and to usurp the Grand Mastership of Santiago. It is also said that in the time of King Don Alonso, his younger son was proclaimed King, and remained in possession, and the said King Don Alonso, together with the heir of the elder son, driven out of the kingdom. From this heir, it is said, the house of Medina Sidonia descends in a direct line, wherefore some pretend that the royal crown belongs by right to this house, and that Pedro Giron, in the name and right of his wife, pretends to have a claim to the said crown. [One word in cipher] told me that the Procurators of the Junta base their intentions and prospects on their expectation that his Majesty will not return to these kingdoms, or if he should try to return by force of arms, that he will be prevented from doing so. Their argument is this: His Majesty will come with foreign troops or without them. If he comes without them they will be able to resist him in the same manner as now. If he comes accompanied by foreign troops, the very stones will rise up against him to offer resistance. Therefore they give the people to understand that he will bring German and foreign troops to plunder and burn the kingdom. It seems it would be well if his Majesty would write to some grandees and others in Andalusia and the kingdom of Granada, asking them to have some troops in readiness by the time of his arrival, and thanking them for remaining firm in their obedience and his service. He also ought to order the Count Ureña and the Duke of Arcos not to enlist troops, and not to undertake anything against Sevilla and Medina Sidonia during the time of his absence. The secretaries of his Highness ought to write letters in different forms, so that, according to circumstances, we can make use of them, now of the one kind, then of the other. The bishopric of Jaen is vacant. I do not know whether his Majesty will remember me. I have never asked, and even now I shall not ask. I hope he will give me at least a pension of three or four thousand ducats. You can secretly solicit this from his Majesty, and read to him the whole of this passage. Sacred, imperial, catholic, royal Majesty,

Now quite of late, on the 13th of the present month, I wrote to your Highness a very long letter. On the 14th of the same month the Admiral entered this his town, and spoke with me on the following day, telling me what he had done when staying in Zigales to calm and pacify the furor of Valladolid. All that he said was in vain, because Don Pedro Giron was already there, received by the people with great love. Moreover he said he had written to Don Pedro, telling him that he wished to speak with him. He (Don Pedro) had answered very courteously that he must first communicate on this subject with Valladolid, by which town, as I have already stated, he had been received very well and with great goodwill. Furthermore, he said he had written to the Procurators of the Junta in Tordesillas, asking them to be so good as to enter into communication with him on the means best calculated to secure peace and a reformation of the kingdom. They answered him that he would find them very ready to do so, and that they would directly send some commissioners to any place which was convenient to him, the Admiral, who will start today, Friday, for the said place, and enter into communications with them. And certainly the said Admiral

knows that all the grandees and the lower classes of these kingdoms are much inclined to favour the affairs of the Commons. He, therefore, not only thinks that the kingdom is lost, but also he is not sure whether he can trust his own vassals, and says that your Majesty must treat the affairs of these kingdoms as though nothing in them belonged to you. Everything that your Majesty acquires in them must be reckoned as a new acquisition. The first time that the Admiral came to my house he declared to me, in presence of the Comendador Mayor, of Zapata and of Vargas, that under no circumstances would he accept the office of governor, except on these two conditions previously granted: in the first place he must first have an answer from your Majesty to the letters which he says he has written to you from Catalonia about the form of government, and which, as his agent at that court⁽¹⁾ has written to him, were twice read to your Majesty, but, owing to the haste with which the courier was despatched, it was not possible to send the answer with him, and it was said that within four or five days it would be conveyed by another courier. The other condition is that full power, without any restriction, in fact as your Majesty yourself possesses it, be given to him to settle terms, to pardon, to punish, and to grant and revoke favours, according to what should seem to him best, and what he should think useful for the service of a todos estos de aqua parece que se mueve en ello con justa razon y que los que aconsejaron a Vña Alteza en limitar el poder a sus gobernadores que le han persuadido de cosa inutil y dañosa al Reyno. en el mesmo dia yo fui despues de comer a la posada del dicho almirante para visitar a la condessa, y despues me aparte alli con el y secretamente le hable dizien- dole la mucha pena que sentia que no quissiese sin estas condiciones aceptar el cargo de la governacion, porque de la dilacion se podria ofrecer mucho animo a los de la junta, y que seria en gran daño y mengua de la autoritat de Vña Mt. y de los que tenemos su parte, y que por esto no devia estar ni parar. que yo tengo creydo que vña Mt. le ha respondido y que las cartas quiza se le han perdido en el camino o le han sydo tomadas, y ofreciendole que procuraria que Vña Alt. le diesse libre y suelta la dicha governacion sin restricciones algunas, las quales cierto en este tiempo no convendrian. y al ende de todo esto le dixi como el condestable ha aceptado, como vehe, el cargo sin restricciones, y que yo tambien fui forçado de hazer lo mismo. respondiome que el condestable ha fecho lo que le cumple, porque toda su tierra se le levantava y que no tenia otro remedio para allanar y remediar aquello, sino aceptando la dicho governacion cobrando con ella la auctoridad que havia perdido en Burgos y sus tierras. pero your Majesty. To all here it seems that his demands are reasonable and just, and that those who persuaded your Highness to limit the power of your governors have advised you something unprofitable and injurious to the kingdom. I went the same day to dine with the Admiral in order to visit the Countess. ⁽¹⁾ Afterwards I spoke with him in private and told him how sorry I was that he refused to accept the office of governor without these conditions, because the delay would much encourage the members of the Junta and much injure and lower the authority of your Majesty and of us who are your servants. For these considerations he should not hold back nor stop short. I said I believed that your Majesty had answered him, but that the letters, perhaps, have been lost or intercepted on their way, promising him to procure that your Highness should give him the office of governor free and unfettered by any restrictions, which certainly at this time would be inconvenient. Moreover, I told him that the Constable had accepted the office without condition, and that I was also obliged to submit to the same. He answered that the Constable has done what is profitable to him, as all his estates have risen in rebellion, and he had no other means to arrange and remedy this, except by accepting the place of governor, regaining thereby the authority which he has lost in Burgos

algunos me dizen que el Reyno se podria algo apaciguar si yo me quisiesse juntar con los procuradores de la dicha junta y con ellos tratar los negocios del Reyno como ahora con los consejeros por ellos deputados, en lo qual muestran tener fin a dos cosas, es a saber, a echar los grandes de la governacion, a los quales sobresto tienen por sespechosos diziendo que todo lo procurarian para en utilidad y provecho dellos y en daño del Reino, lo otro es que los dichos procuradores continuen and over his estates. But he (the Admiral) was nearer the fire, and had no other strong place than this. At last he said that he could trust no one on his estates, and would lose all if he took part against these Commons, unless your Majesty would give great and strong assistance of men as well as of money, which seemed by no means likely. I answered to this that we have authority from your Highness to sell and pledge all in order to procure what is necessary. Wishing to avoid writing too long a letter, I shall briefly state that, judging from what I understood from his behaviour and words, he thinks that all this would be of no advantage; for in these tempestuous times whoever buys anything from the crown becomes at the same moment an enemy of the whole kingdom, and he who sells much more so. In the form of a loan we cannot obtain as much as is necessary for our own wants.

Some say that the kingdom would be pacified to some extent if I united with the Procurators of the said Junta, and despatched the business of the kingdom with them, in the same manner as I despatch it now with the councillors chosen for that purpose. By this they aim at two things; that is to say, to turn the grandees out of the government, whom, they say, they suspect would do all that is profitable to themselves and detrimental to the kingdom; and the other thing at which they aim is to preserve the Procurators in the Government, and thus to enable them to

Lo que en grande manera me mueve en çufrir estos trabajos es *que desta manera pueda sacar estos procuradores de tordesyllas para que no insten mas en que la reyna nuestra Señora firme que este es un solo punto con el qual se perderia todo el Reyno mas de lo que ya lo esta como por otra lo he escrito a V. mandeme Vña Alt. escrevir sobresto su parecer y voluntad con toda presteza porque en ninguna cosa puede ser mayor peligro para Vña Mt. que en la perdicion deste Reyno al qual *sin duda perderia V. dismiss the councillors, who they say are thieves and robbers. I have answered to some of them that there is nothing in the world I desire more than the pacification of the said kingdom, and that to bring it about I should not refuse to do any amount of labour, although I wish more than anything else to be relieved from this office, and solicit and supplicate your Highness every day to do so. Notwithstanding this I should be ready to transact with the Procurators all the business they desire, but only on condition that that were done without injury or affront to your Majesty. The principal reason which induces me to undergo these labours is that in that manner I could get the Procurators away from Tordesillas, and thus prevent them from insisting any more that the Queen our lady should sign; for this one thing⁽¹⁾ would suffice to raise the whole kingdom still more than it is already, as I have written to your Majesty.

I beg your Highness to write to me your opinion and commands as quickly as possible, for in no other thing is there so much danger to your Majesty of losing this kingdom, which no doubt your Majesty would lose if her Highness should sign. She has often promised to do it, and if a few good men had not dissuaded her from signing she would have done so long ago. They have told me to-day that her Highness begins to dress in good robes and finery, and ordered

They beg her to do all these things in order to be able to spread the rumour throughout the kingdom that her Highness is sane and in good health, and that all ought to obey her royal mandates, which they say she may either sign or give by word of mouth, as the escrivanos draw up an instrument and testify to her words. Many towns, in fact almost all, ask succour against the rebels, who are in a position to constrain and even compel them. The Alcalde of Ucles has been requested by Toledo to deliver to them that fortress. We have sent a captain and some troops, but it is said that Juan de Padilla assembles a great army to conquer it. We are surrounded on all sides by many dangers, and the confidence we can have in our men is so small that I think that above all things we ought to be afraid of fighting or of a battle, and remain on the defensive only. Bad people are so numerous that their lies produce more effect than our speaking the truth. If your Highness does not come with all speed, I am afraid you will find the kingdom worse than King Alonso found it when he returned to these kingdoms after his election for the empire which then took place.

Your Highness would do well to write to the King and Queen of Portugal, thanking them very warmly; for in consequence of the favour shown by them, and owing to a certain fear of them, which, as your Majesty knows, these kingdoms have, these Procurators abstain and refrain from doing other worse things; and, besides, it seems to the councillors who are staying with me that your Majesty should write to the said King and Queen, asking them to answer and to reprimand the Junta severely for all the lies which they have written by a special messenger in prejudice of your Majesty, and to inform them of the truth. good horse, of which we had a great number. I sent a king-at-arms to request the town to surrender. They asked me to give them some time for answering. They did this because night was near at hand, and they hoped to be succoured by Don Pedro Giron. The surrounding villages had already sent their contingents. Some while afterwards I sent again a king-at-arms, but again without effect. When we saw this we decided immediately to give battle, and arranged our plan of attack. I took the batalla real ⁽¹⁾, but went also to the other troops, composed of the men of the lords. At joining battle our men behaved well, but afterwards they lost so much heart that I was the most discomfited man in the world, and many of the lords were of opinion that we should retreat. Whilst things were in this state it pleased God that the place was carried when it was already growing dark. The first troop that entered was that of the Count of Benavente, then came those of the Count of Alba de Liste, of the Marquis of Astorga, and that of Haro, and I do not know how many more. The men-at-arms dismounted and behaved very well, as did other cavaliers. When we saw the standard we moved with the batalla real. Whilst things were in this state they [the towns people] set fire to some houses near the gate where the battle raged, and pressed hard on the troops. A great portion of the foot who had remained outside were such cowards that it was impossible to make them enter even if one had goaded them a thousand times with a lance. Of those who had entered we heard nothing. There appeared some fires on the other side of the river, and as we could not know what they signified, we thought that an army of the Junta was there, because those who were in the place had never ceased ringing the bells and making signals. God was then already pleased that they were exchanging with the townspeople thrusts with pikes and with swords, and at one time they drove many of those who defended the place out of it through the gate (?) by which we had entered. This lasted a good while. The Count of Oñate, the Marquis of Falces, and the Marshal de Flomesta then entered on another side. The Count of Benavente and other lords and cavaliers entered a little later by an opening which had been made. The horsemen began to be a little troubled, for by night fear is always stronger than shame, and it is true that I had placed battalla real real a little nearer the place than I should have done. When, however, victory began to incline on our side, the troops who had remained outside were so eager to enter and to plunder that no one could restrain them. Thus it could not be avoided that great injury was done. Although the infantry was in the town there was no possibility of getting the artillery within. The horsemen were occupied in opening a gate, which took them a long while. At last an opening was made through which the artillery and the horse could go in. It was about one o'clock when I entered.

I could not rest that night, because I knew that the place remained open on different sides.

Next day these lords decreed that all the Procurators who were there should be arrested, and one of them, of the name of Gomez de Avila, should go to the Junta and tell them to disband their troops.

Yesterday we received the news that troops of the Junta had marched to Medina de Rioseco. The fact is that they marched past that place, fired some shots, and went then the direct way to Valladolid, stealing some cattle from those of Castromonte. It is said they are ready to hang themselves because they have been driven from here.

The Admiral hastened to write the news from here to cities and grandees. Another advantage almost as great as this we have narrowly missed, that is to say, to take their artillery. It was near Alaejos, but they withdrew in time.

Yesterday I kissed the hands of the Queen, and told her that your Lordship had been informed of the want of respect with which she and the Infanta were treated, and remembering the loyalty with which our forefathers had always served the crown, had sent me and these noblemen to restore her Highness to liberty. She replied that she was much obliged to you for your solicitude for her, [adding] that she was glad I had arrived and that she had an opportunity of making my acquaintance. I did not like to go further in this matter. The Admiral spoke with her last night. I was not present, but many of the lords who were told me that what he said to her (?) was, that those of the Junta had done great damage in these kingdoms. She answered, that she had always ordered the Procurators of the cities to do no injury to any one, and that she had also commanded that they should disband their troops. The Admiral ordered an attestation to be drawn up. Some think that it was superfluous.

Very illustrious and very magnificent Lord,

The night on which we entered this place I did not write to your Lordship, because the Count ⁽¹⁾ did not tell me that he was sending a messenger, and I was too much tired to inquire about it. What has since happened is that, as we were informed last night, the army of the commons is afraid lest we should take Valladolid. They therefore left Villalpando, and, so we are told, marching in great haste past this place the greater part of the troops was expected to reach no lo sabemos bien cierto. nosotros agora entendemos en rreparar y fortalecer esta villa, no para que con la gente que aqui esta sea menester reparo para defendella, sino para que con mucho menos se pueda defender y estar segura. y en ello se porna toda diligencia porque lo tengo yo por negocio ynportante.

enbio el Señor Conde de haro ayer al conde de Oñate con ciento y cinquenta lanças y quatrocientos ynfantes a estar en Simancas. partio tarde. no hemos sabido aun si esta ya dentro, pero creo yo que si hubiera algun desman que me lo hubieran escripto.

teniendo gente aqui y en Simancas y en torre de lobaton y en Villalva y en Arevalo, como lo esta, y en portillo, que se podria poner, pareceme que tenemos las mejores guarniciones que ay en Castilla.

los rrebeldes no pueden elegir sino uno de dos caminos, o venirnos a cercar y esto pareceme que seria locura porque la gente que hablava ayer en dalles batalla no se ha de pensar que la an de tomar por conbate, y el campo agora no estaria para ellos muy apacible. o an de creer que juntando mucha gente en Valladolid y en medina y poniendola aca tambien a la parte de toro que nos quitaran los mantenimientos, y a mi ver

Valladolid yesterday. We do not, however, as yet know it for certain. We are occupied in repairing and fortifying this town. Not that repairs were necessary for its defence with the troops which are now here, but we do it with great diligence in order that it might be defended and safe with a much smaller garrison. I consider it as a matter of importance.

We are also occupied in supplying the place with the necessary provisions.

The Count of Haro sent the Count of Oñate yesterday with one hundred and fifty lances and four hundred foot to Simancas to remain there. He left late, and we do not yet know whether he has arrived, but I think if anything had gone wrong they would already have written to me.

Having troops here, in Simancas, Torre Lobaton, Villalba, and Arevalo, and being able to send forces to Portillo, I think we have the best garrisons in Castile.

The rebels have no other alternative than this: they can come and besiege us. That, however, as it seems to me, would be madness, because troops which only yesterday spoke of giving battle cannot be reduced by a siege, and [camping in] the field is now by no means pleasant. Or they may hope by assembling large bodies of troops in Valladolid and Medina, and sending them also to the neighbourhood of Toro, to intercept our provisions. In my opinion they would not succeed in this manner any more than in the other ; for we have many more horse than they, and better quarters where to place them.

Thus, in as far as I am able to judge, they have no means to defeat us, if we do not defeat ourselves. The true medicine for the evil is, however, money wherewith to maintain ourselves, and of that we have not a maravedi nor any way to procure it. I shall state here what I think your Lordship ought to order to be done. If I am wrong, either in part or in the whole, I can be corrected.

It is said that they have to pay to your Lordship at the fair at Medina twenty five thousand ducats, as part of the loan from the King of Portugal. Issue an order for them to pay and bring the money hither. I am not of opinion that it should be handed over to the Admiral, because I do not know whether he would spend it properly, on account of the many applications which would be made to him and which he could not refuse ; nor to the Count of Haro for the same reason. But you should send hither an intelligent officer of the Licentiate Vargas, and order him to receive and disburse the money.

Item.—You should order Alonso Gutierrez and Vozmediano to come hither to do what they can to collect the revenues, the first from the estates of the military orders, the latter those of the Cruzada, and help with what they get to defray the expenses of the enterprise.

y pues como he dicho a mi parecer esta es ya la mejor estancia que podemos tener los que aca estamos, debria V. S. dar orden como viniese aqui el cardenal y tres u quatro de los del consejo y oficiales de contadoria por manera que se pudiese proveer en toda esta parte de aca en lo de la hazienda y justicia y governacion y con esto y con la gente que tenemos de cavallo creo que aprovecharia mucho para poder cobrar hazienda con que nos pudiesemos sostener. y sin ello ni tenemos aviso ni manera de provision para podernos aprovechar de nada. y yo como tengo ya por cierto que sosteniendose lo de aqui se sostiene V. S. alla me alargo en las provisiones y seria de parecer que se hiziesen todas quantas V. S. pudiese para questo no cayese, porque cayendo seria la misma regla que V. S. ternia mucho que hazer en no caer alla. n̄tro Señor la muy ylle. y muy mag^{ca}. persona y estado de V. S. guarde y prospere. de tordesillas a viij. de dizienbre.

And as, according to what I have stated, we who are here have the best place which we can have, your Lordship ought to give orders that the Cardinal and three or four of the members of the council, together with the officers of the Treasury, should come hither, so that all the decrees concerning finance, administration of the law and government be issued from here. This and the horsemen we have would contribute much towards collecting the revenues, with which we could maintain ourselves. Otherwise we should remain without counsel and without the means of sustaining ourselves, as we could not make use of anything. As I am persuaded that in maintaining ourselves here we support your Lordship there, I speak at large of the measures to be taken, and state my belief that your Lordship should do all that is in your power to prevent us from being overcome. For if we were defeated it is only natural that your Lordship would find it difficult to avoid being also defeated there. Our Lord preserve and prosper the very illustrious and magnificent person and state of your Lordship.

Last night the Admiral started a matter which was not necessary, and in my opinion very mischievous, that is to say, he asked the Queen to order the troops of the Junta to do no injury to the estates of the grandees, and to disband. She answered that it should be done, and an attestation was drawn up before the two escrivanos who used to authenticate the attestations of the Junta. This is as much as to

Last night the Admiral started a subject which, although he had no bad intention, was, in my opinion, very superfluous and not a little dangerous. The case was this. in presence of the two escribanos who used to draw up the public instruments for the Junta. It seemed to me to be very inconvenient, for, in the first place, it implied an approbation of the doings of the Commons, who, when they wanted to excuse themselves with the pretext that the Queen had ordered anything, observed the same formalities; and secondly and principally, not the least mention should be made of the Queen, because her Highness is not in a position to occupy herself with the affairs of government. When I heard of it, I asked the Count of Benavente, who is more intimate with the admiral than any one else, to prevent the testimonies from being made use of. He spoke with him. The testimonies were retained, and not sent. I shall do all that is possible that they be not sent, nor any other thing of a similar character be done, for, in my opinion, that is a business from which very great inconveniences might result. It seems to me that your Majesty would do well to write to the admiral, to the Count of Benavente, the Marquis of Astorga, and the Count of Haro, not to meddle in any affairs touching the Queen, except to see that she be at liberty, as she at present is, and well treated and served as it becomes her royal person, because they know what disposition of mind our Lord has been pleased to give her.

Very Illustrious and most Reverend Lord,

I wrote to your most reverend lordship on Thursday last when this town had been taken. In order to be more sure, I sent the letter by a man from here; but as he has not yet returned, I am afraid that he has not arrived there, and therefore I send another messenger to inform you again of what I have already written, and of what has since occurred.

Your most Reverend Lordship will remember that I have told you at various times that the thing which would most benefit these affairs, and much contribute towards the pacification of the kingdom, would be to take this town. From various reasons, I was of opinion that it could be done with the army which was there ⁽¹⁾ assembled, and I think that my audacity has been justified. It seems to me that, with the help of God, this which we have done will be sufficient to settle the affairs, if they are conducted with as much dexterity as they ought to be.

We arrived before this town on Wednesday at 10 o'clock in the morning, and waited there for the troops of the Count of Haro until one o'clock. As soon as he arrived, the army was drawn up in divisions and squadrons. Whilst that was being done they sent a king-at-arms, two trumpeters, and a secretary of the admiral to request the town to open the gates to the grandees, who had come to kiss the hands of the Queen our lady. They delayed their answer because they hoped for the succour which was on the way. The Lords sent again a king-at-arms, the secretary, and the trumpeter, telling them that they must give their answer immediately; and at the same time our troops were ordered to draw nearer the town. They gave a worse answer than the first time, declaring that they would oppose the entry. As they, however, wished still to delay the decision, they were requested a third time, and again without effect. It was then necessary to lead the men to the walls. They advanced very well and with great energy, the horsemen a little too much in advance. Fighting began at half-past three. During one hour we did not obtain any advantage, but suffered considerable losses. I gave to a foot soldier a pickaxe, and told him to undermine some walls. He did it so well that in a short time he made a hole through which we entered the town. Whilst he was making the hole we set fire to a gate which was obstructed from within. As soon as we entered the town through the hole, those who were inside set some houses on fire which were not far off joining to the wall. They thus rendered the entry a little difficult. From the moment that we entered until the moment when the whole town was taken, two hours and a half elapsed. Soon they began to flee over the bridge. Some foot and horse had entered the place the same day, and other succour arrived too late. Of foreigners there were within [the town] more than eighty lances and four hundred foot. All these lords behaved very well, and some of them excellently, as I shall tell your Lordship when I see you. Many are the killed and wounded on either side. During the confusion her Highness and the señora Infanta left the palace, and went as far as a church which is not distant. She commanded the cart to be brought on which to carry away the corpse of King Philip our lord, who is in glory, and she took also with her a chest containing her jewelry. Gomez de Avila, Procurator for Avila, had gone on Friday to Pedro Giron and the bishop, to tell them, in the name of those other Procurators, to disband the troops, and to conclude peace, for the good of the kingdom. He returned last night, and said that they menace in an arrogant manner, Don Pedro Giron not so much as the others. Valladolid and Medina collect ammunition and warlike stores. In Medina a certain Gonzalo Perez was arrested, whom these lords had sent, I believe, to speak about the artillery. The troops of Zamora have gone, and those of Valladolid are in the place.⁽¹⁾ It is believed that the contingents of the other cities will soon go.

It seems to me, my Lord, that it would be good, for a satisfactory conclusion of these affairs, and for the speedy pacification of the kingdom, that your most Reverend Lordship, together with the Council, and even the Señor Constable, should soon come to this place, and write from here to the cities of the kingdom, to pacify them, and send such commissioners as are fit for that purpose, to inquire into the wants of the kingdom, and to redress what is wrong. As a loyal servant, I say what I think, and if I were in your presence I should say more. I remain here until your Lordship sends me other orders. Our Lord protect the life and the very illustrious estate of your most Reverend Lordship.

To His Majesty. From Lope Hurtado.

Sacred, Imperial, and Catholic Majesty,

On the 6th of this month I informed you that this place had been attacked, conquered, pillaged, and ruined.
When Don Pedro Giron heard of it he marched towards Valladolid, and arrived there with his army on the 7th of the present month. It is said that he entered the town to exculpate himself for not having succoured this place, and intended to remain there in garrison. They answered that they did not want his excuses at present, and that it would be very inconvenient to quarter the troops in the town.
Thus, it is said, he is now in some of the villages near the town.
It is reported that he has written to the Commons asking them to get out all the banners, and to march with all the men they have to this place. Here it has been decided to

Al. ha de venir que syn su benida nada aprovecha. el almirante ha escripto a las cibdades diendoles cuenta de lo que se ha hecho y de la prision de los procuradores que aqui estan como mas le ha parecido que conbenia. no han respondido. un procurador de los presos que es de Avila pidio licencia para ir a hablar con don pedro y los otros capitanes deziendo que el haria por que se derramase la gente. alla fue y no quisieron e asy se torno. en este estado esta la cosa hasta oy.

la Reyna nuestra Señora dixo muy buenas cosas a los que aqui estaban quando le dixieron que V. Mt. se llamava Rey en perjuicio de Su Alteza. dixo que asy se acostunbraba por auttoridad del Reyno. quando le dixieron que avia hechos muchos daños en el, dixo que no la Rebolbiese nadi con su hijo que todo lo que tenia era suyo y que el miraria por ello. quando benimos a combatir mando que abriesen las puertas deziendo que bien sabia Su Alteza que no harian daño syno que antes todos venian a servirla. salio Su Alteza y la Señora send the Count of Oñate to Simancas with two hundred lances and five hundred foot. I believe they will erect new fortifications, repair the place,⁽¹⁾ and wait to see what [the enemy] will do without taking the field, and only defending this [place], because [to preserve Tordesillas] is as much as to gain everything; that is to say, if your Highness comes, for without your presence all is in vain. The Admiral has written to the Commons as best it seemed to him, and given them an account of what has occurred, and of the imprisonment of the Procurators. They have not answered. One of the Procurators, who is from Avila, has asked permission to go and speak with Pedro Giron and the other captains, promising that he would induce them to disband their troops. He went, but they refused, and he has returned. This is the state in which things are today.

The Queen our lady spoke very good words to those who have been here when they told her that your Majesty styled yourself King in prejudice of her Highness. She answered that such was the custom of the kingdom. When they said that [your Majesty] had caused great injury to it, she replied that no one shall set her at variance with her son, and that all that belonged to her was his, and he would take good care of it. When we came to give battle she ordered the gates to be opened, saying that she well knew that we would not do any harm, but, on the contrary, came to serve her. When all was disorder her Highness and the Señora Infanta went to the court-yard, and there they were found by Don Juan Manrique and Don Geronimo de Padilla, who were the first to arrive at the palace, and led her Highness directly to her rooms. It is said she rejoiced at seeing the grandees and speaking with them. The Señora Infanta is the most beautiful lady in the world. It would be good if your Majesty would write to her, for they have told her that your Highness is dissatisfied with her. She is the most queenly thing⁽¹⁾ that can be seen.

I send your Highness a list of the Procurators who were taken prisoners here. The other day I had no time to inquire how many there were. They are not in prison, live together, and Suero de Aguila is even permitted to walk about in the town. Your Highness should order that they be put into prison and well watched. More compassion is shown to them than is necessary.

The papers of the treasurers have been found here in possession of Christoval de Avila and Vasquez. Many documents have been discovered which contain the knaveries ordered by them. The Marquis of Astorga captured a box belonging to Don Pedro Laso full of them, as your Majesty will learn from his letter. The night when we entered a letter of Don Pedro Laso was intercepted which he wrote from Villalpando to Juan de Ayala, giving him notice of the march of the army to this place. He tells him that they were little satisfied with Don Pedro Giron, that they were disunited and had Segun lo que algunos destos criados de Su Alteza han hecho pienso que el marques suplicara a V. A. que mude algunos y creo que querria poner algunos suyos. V. The pillage has been so general that not a single servant of her Highness escaped. Even the mule of the Señora Infanta [has been stolen]. All are very sorry for it, but it was impossible to prevent it. It is expected that the enemy will make great clamour about this in the kingdom, and many think that, although the [people] of this town do not deserve it any more than most of the servants of her Highness, yet as others have behaved as they ought, your Majesty should write directly, stating that you are sorry for the losses of the servants of the Queen our lady and of this town, and ordering to inquire in what they have consisted, that they may be repaid.

Owing to what some of these servants of her Highness have done, I think the Marquis will ask your Highness to dismiss many of them, and I believe that he wishes to appoint some of his people. Your Highness ought well to consider this, for there are many servants of the Catholic King and Queen and of the Señor Infante who live in misery, and whom it would be good to appoint, if changes are to be made; for it is necessary to feed them.

These grandees and cavaliers wish that I should go to your Highness to give an account of their services, and

It is quite certain that all have behaved very well, as I have written to your Majesty. Since we entered this place the Count of Benavente has done a good thing in supplying provisions. He has even gone so far as to grind corn, of which we stood in great need, and to punish his people for the pillage. Your Majesty ought to send him and all the others your thanks. They deserve it.

The Duke of Infantazgo wrote that he sends one hundred and fifty men-at-arms and fifty light horse. He also sends money to the Admiral for the pay of fifteen days, and letters to the agents of his estates to send twenty thousand men in succour to wherever they may be required. Villena offered money. I do not know what Albuquerque will do after the last occurrences. Don Beltran and Don Luis are here. They have no troops. It is said the duke their father will come. When writing this letter I was informed by a person who was present that two days before the siege of Tordesillas the Queen our lady was importuned by the Junta to sign. They told her that if she did not sign they could not give her or the Señora Infanta anything to eat; and when they were besieged [they said] that the whole town of Tordesillas would be burnt, and her Highness carried off a prisoner by the partisans of your Majesty to the castle of Benavente. By a miracle she refused to do it,⁽¹⁾ although they presented to her the letters which she should sign, together with the pen and the inkstand. I inform your Highness of this in order that you should know exactly what passes here.

That they sent to the cities the articles which the Admiral had offered them before the fall of Tordesillas, because it seemed to the Admiral that in order to come to an understanding with them nothing should be revoked, although the affairs of your Majesty had taken so favourable a turn. That the Admiral works much and renders good services, and it appears now that the course he followed towards the Junta is advantageous, because the knaveries of the traitors become manifest, and some rebellious places begin already to be quelled. The Admiral is inclined to conclude peace with the Junta on any conditions. He says he wishes it, because there are no means to sustain the troops which are here. He caused the Queen to declare in presence of a great many cavaliers that she commanded all the troops of the Junta to be disbanded. Of this [order] he had an attestation drawn up, and sent it to Pedro Giron and the cities. The Count of Benavente, the Marquis of Astorga, the Count of Miranda, and the Comendador Mayor were not present. As soon, however, as the Comendador Mayor heard of this affair, he took care to remedy it. They went to the Admiral, and the testimony was destroyed. He did not consent, but, on the contrary, was rather annoyed; and whilst he was still in that state of mind he said that he was persuaded that the Queen was sane. He grows angry a thousand times every day, the consequence of which, I am afraid, will be that some day a very disadvantageous peace will be concluded. Your Highness ought to write to him, and, committing to him the whole affair, beg him that, as he has already placed it in so good a condition, he will preserve it in that state, and see that no peace be concluded in prejudice of the royal prerogatives. mudança hasta la venida de V. Mt. sino sostenerlo en el estado en que esta, porque dizen que trae determinacion de rebolvello todo y segun la pasion que tiene y la mala voluntad con que le reciben, creo que no seria bueno lo que hiziesse.

el Almirante esta agora en aceptar la governacion que dize que la terna entretanto que se haze correo a V. Mt. para que le enbie los poderes como los pide. ni querria que la aceptasse ni que V. Mt. le enbiase los poderes porque no tiene sosiego para tal cargo, que cada dia muda el pensamiento en mill cosas y todavia tiene fin a fazer por el Reyno. si lo aceptase V. Mt. mandara proveer lo que conviene.

el conde de haro haze el oficio de capitan como las otras cosas. como ay aqui muchos Señores son malos de concertar, para lo que es menester especialmente el Almirante y el conde de benabente que tienen unas salidas por donde ay muy mala orden en este exercito y la gente muy mal mandada como es de muchos que es el mayor temor que tenemos. cada ora se tiene por mayor ventura tomar este lugar porque segun la manera que ay creo que todo se perdiera si esto no se acertara que esta muy desordenado todo.

would be good if he did not make any changes until your Majesty comes, but only continue the state of things as it is. It is said that he is determined to change everything; and according to his passion, and the ill will with which he is received, I believe anything he did would not be good.

The Admiral is now disposed to accept the office of governor. He says that he will hold it provisionally, and that a courier will be sent to your Majesty for such power as he desires. I am of opinion that your Majesty should not accept him, nor send the powers, because he has not sufficient steadiness for that office. Every day he changes his mind in a thousand respects, and it is still his intention to do by the kingdom ⁽¹⁾. If your Majesty accept, suitable orders must be given for this case.

The Count of Haro fulfils [the duties of] his office of commander in chief as he does other things. As there are many noblemen here, it is difficult to keep them united in those things which are necessary, especially the admiral and the Count of Benavente, who have more their own way. The consequence thereof is, that the discipline of the army is bad, and the troops are very badly commanded. This causes much fear to many. Every hour the advantage of having taken this place is better understood. According to the present state of things, I believe that all will be lost if order is not soon restored. The disorder in everything is very great.

a unos parece que seria bien que el cardenal e algunos del consejo y contadores viniesen aqui, y que de aqui se usase de justicia y de hazienda, y que el condestable sostuviese lo de burgos con las montanias y otros que este lugar quedase proveydo, y con la gente que era menester para guardarle, y que los gobernadores consejo y contadores se juntassen en burgos. para esto ay un gran inconveniente estar el marques de denia tan mal quisto aqui de los criados de la Reyna nuestra Señora y de todo el lugar, y que si quedase otro agraviarseia. V. Md. lo mande mirar todo y mandar proveher lo que mas fuere su servicio.

Some are of opinion that it would be good if the Cardinal and some of the councillors and auditors would come to this place, and if the affairs of law and finance were despatched here, that the Constable ⁽¹⁾ ought to support Burgos with the mountaineers ⁽²⁾, and others [think] that this place ⁽³⁾ ought to remain well garrisoned with as many troops as are necessary to guard it, and the governors, the council, and the treasurers should assemble in Burgos. There is, however, one great inconvenience in this. The Marquis of Denia is so much disliked by all the servants of the Queen our lady, as well as by the townspeople, that if he remained another would be aggravated ⁽⁴⁾. Your Majesty must decide all this, and order what is best for your service.

On Christmas day a courier arrived at Burgos with a letter from the Cardinal for the Constable and for the president, and another for the licentiate Polanco [to tell him] that at once and without delay he should come to Tordesillas, and there occupy himself in despatching the business which might occur. He went immediately. The business is despatched in the following manner. All the law business is remitted to the council. The affairs of administration and of grace are despatched here. The Cardinal alone signed the decrees, which now, however, are sent to the Constable, who signs them conjointly with the Cardinal to give them greater authority. The affairs which it would be inconvenient to delay are despatched by the Cardinal alone. The admiral, moved by right considerations, has now accepted the office of governor, and the decrees are despatched under the signature of both. Some of them, the delay of which involves no danger, are sent to Burgos that they may be signed by all three of them. More of them could be sent. There is very much to be despatched, especially with respect to the war and the complaints of the soldiers desiring payment. The licentiate Polanco has not kissed the hands of her Highness, as it did not seem to him necessary. During the time when the Junta was here her Highness was much seen and visited, especially by one of the lawyers who was staying here. Juan de Padilla, with some cavalry and a great number of foot and the greater portion of the artillery, has drawn near Empudia. The aim of the Junta and all those people is to endeavour to recover this town and place which they held, and which they lost through the grace and favour of our Lord. What can be most positively written and communicated from here is that the troops of your Majesty diminish every day, and the soldiers of the Junta again increase. The sermons and labours of the Bishop of Zamora move many hearts, and [to punish] us who are here for our sins the numbers of the believers is great, because they consist of the greater portion of the peasants, and amongst the hidalgos and squires there are a great many. A large, and even the larger portion, especially of the village priests, are very obstinate. In the open country and in the free towns where the bishop has been loyalty has been much damaged. Yesterday, Wednesday, the 16th of this month of January, the admiral spoke to the cardinal at great length, and with much zeal and desire to render good service. All the other troops should march from here to join the garrisons from all the frontier towns, and that he, the grandees and cavaliers, at the head of the united forces, should go in search of the enemies of your Majesty, so that this state of things might not continue long. For, the cause being so just, it is to be hoped in our Lord that he will give victory to the army of your Highness. Many of the grandees and cavaliers are of the same opinion; but the cardinal did not come to a conclusion, and the matter will be considered again. Other grandees and cavaliers thought it should not be done in this manner, but that greater forces ought to be collected, and more money procured from the King of Portugal, as well as from other sources, (which is very difficult,) and that done, things should be so arranged here that the army of the Junta may give up their damned purposes. The Junta sent for the ambassador of the King of Portugal,

forces and his money he would powerfully succour the army of your Majesty. He is not yet come. To morrow or next

Of the state of affairs in Burgos your Majesty will be waiting for your consent to the articles, and it is believed they will prove a great remedy. It would certainly be a great satisfaction to all if they were ratified; this, however, is not to be understood of some of them regarding the royal preeminence of your Majesty, which ought not and cannot be touched. The true remedy and the true articles, however, are solely in the happy advent of your Majesty, which will repair and put to rights everything, by the favour of our Lord, to whom your Majesty owes so much obligation, and from whose hand alone you have received so many favours. May your Majesty hasten your coming, and meanwhile certify and

That would be the greatest service you can render to His Divine Majesty, and the greatest benefit that any king or prince has ever bestowed on his kingdoms. If it should chance, which God forbid, that there should be delay, it would cause the utter destruction of these kingdoms; and although your Majesty is holily, justly, and greatly occupied in the affairs of the Holy Empire, still occupation in the affairs of these kingdoms will be most just, most sacred, and most necessary, and cannot, without great offence to our Lord, be ignored or delayed. By divine as well as by human law, your Highness is obliged to give help where it is most needed, where the danger is greatest, and where, if no remedy is applied at once, things cannot be mended hereafter. Sacred, imperial, catholic, royal Majesty,

On the 16th of the present month I wrote to your Highness a long letter in answer to yours of the 17th of last month, which I then had received, as you will know already when this letter arrives. Somewhat later I received other letters from your Majesty, dated the 1st of this month. As I have already answered in my last letter of the 16th to most of what the letters of your Highness to the governors in general, and to me in particular, contained, I refer you to its contents, and shall only answer here what is necessary, informing you of what up to this time has happened and occurred.

I told the admiral and all the other cavaliers in the most amiable manner possible what your Highness had commanded me, and your reasons for ordering me to go to Burgos to join there the Constable and the council, not, however, without satisfying the admiral. All this I did as your Majesty had ordered. As soon as I spoke of going [to Burgos] the admiral grew angry, swearing that as soon as I leave the town by the gate of Burgos he would leave it by another gate, and return to his house, abandoning the affairs of this place. I begged him to take some time to consider what he was saying, offering to consult with him afterwards. He said he had already considered and decided, and did not want to think any more on this subject; and if I had told him before he would not have asked his wife the countess to come to this place. She had arrived some days ago. I remonstrated, but without any other effect than to confirm him more in his purpose. I have spoken in secret with the other cavaliers, asking their opinion as to what I could do without endangering these affairs, and prejudicing the service of your Highness. Many of them thought I should go to Medina de Rioseco, and wait there to see what will be done by Juan de Padilla, who yesterday possessed himself of Empudia by capitulation, and forced Torre de Mormojon to pay him one thousand five hundred ducats by threatening to burn the place. The Count of Benavente has written this news, asking that the town be indemnified for its losses, as the cause of them was that it had received Don Frances de Beamonte and his troops, who afterwards abandoned it, although he could well have defended it if he had chosen. I do not know whether the admiral will be satisfied if I leave Tordesillas and go to Medina de Rioseco. I do not like that place, because I have been exposed there to so many dangers. And now it seems they would be

As our nation is so much detested by the Spaniards, it would not be good if I made use of your order to take money for my use for that would increase their hatred. Nevertheless, I shall remain here as long as I can, sustaining myself on what my friends lend me, and when that and the small amount of plate I possess are spent, then I must take leave of Spain, and go where, with the help of God, I can live and enjoy repose.

Your Highness may believe that no use was made of the attestation of the order of the Queen our lady to the commons to disband their troops, and the case was much considered from different sides with respect as well to what has happened as to what may happen. All that concerns the service of the Queen our lady and the señora Infanta and their servants, has been entrusted to the Marquis of Denia, as your Highness has commanded. The marquis is a great friend of mine, but as all complain of him it is sometimes necessary to moderate a little his zeal in these affairs.

the chancery of Granada has been well received here. The bishop went some days ago to Madrigal. I have sent him his nomination and the letter of your Highness. It is not yet known whether he will accept the place.

We are already occupied with the affairs of Sevilla. We shall do what we can to preserve that city in its loyalty to your Highness.

Your Majesty may be easy, nothing will be decided here without first asking your Highness and informing you of our opinion.

The gate of this town, which is known under the name of the fortress, and which was held by Quintanilla, will be demolished when it is time, although I believe the Count of Benavente will be very angry.

We are occupied in succouring the fortress of Segovia, but the great want of money does not permit us to do all that the service of your Highness requires. Thus we do only what is most necessary, although that fortress is of great importance, and one of the first of these kingdoms.

Concerning the removal of the chancery we have not yet done any thing, because we have not received orders.

Whilst writing this letter I learn that there is great diversity of opinion about my going to Burgos. I do not know what to do, and have therefore determined to send this [Cipher.] As the Constable and most of the councillors are very much hated by the commons who have rebelled, many tell me that if I go to Burgos I shall also be detested by them. In as far as my person is considered, I should not mind it, and it is only my zeal for your royal service and the wish to preserve your power and authority which induce me to inform your Highness of it. Your Majesty may consider whether my journey to Burgos may not perhaps do some injury to your service, but on no account must I afterwards be accused of having preferred the one or the other place, for I am ready to remain or to go wherever the service of your Majesty requires my presence.

There is a want of alcaldes and algaziles, because most of the usual ones have been and are absent, and we have appointed some alcaldes and algazils de corte at the pleasure of your Highness. It would be good not to confirm any one of them until, with the help of God, your Highness comes to Spain, although I have given to some of them letters of recommendation, which cannot always be refused. A few days ago I gave a letter of recommendation to Gaspar Villafranca,

[Deciphering.] These days the admiral intended to enter into negotiations with the rebels, in prejudice to the authority of your Majesty, and even of us who are here. We, the Comendador mayor and I, have not consented to this nor to any other thing that seems to us opposed to the service of your Majesty

Four days ago the admiral entered the room of the Queen our lady, and asked her to sign, because [otherwise] the kingdom would be lost. Her Highness answered that she could not, and that she was occupied. He insisted. At last, as her Highness did not do it,—and she shall never do it as long as I have power [to prevent it]—I said to him, in presence of the cardinal, that he ought not to ask her Highness [to sign], as he knows how much that is against the service of God and your Majesty. He answered, “Forsooth, if my queen does not sign, the Queen of Fez may.” I said to him that, if her Highness were in a condition to do it, we should all exert ourselves and do what we could, and the King our lord would beg her [to sign]; but, being in the condition she is, it would be wrong to think of it, and much more so to ask her. We desire you to know that through various channels has been forwarded to these your kingdoms and seignories the intelligence of the discord and schism which the heresiarch Martin Luther has sown in Germany amongst the subjects and vassals of your Majesty, which has caused and still occasions to all of us, as catholic Christians and supporters of the faith and the service and honour of your Majesty, great pain and grief; especially because we have been certified that that seducer, not content with having perverted and deceived Germany, is endeavouring with his malignant and diabolical cunning to pervert and contaminate these your kingdoms and seignories of Spain. And to this end, at the instigation and with the aid of some persons of these parts, who desire to hinder and weaken the holy office of the Inquisition, he has procured means for translating and putting into the Castilian tongue his heresies and blasphemies, and to send them to be spread and published in this catholic nation. From a little spark, most christian lord, may spring and burst forth a great fire. If your Majesty does not speedily find a remedy for things which do such dishonour to God our Lord and are so dangerous to the holy catholic faith, a great scandal may the more easily be caused, and a still greater flame, and one which afterwards it may not be easy to extinguish, be kindled, since some cities of these kingdoms are

87. Credentials of the Grandees to the Duke of Alba, concerning the affairs of Luther.

What the Duke of Alba, in the name of the governors and the other grandees, prelates, cavaliers, and principal persons of these kingdoms, is to say to his Imperial Majesty, the King our lord, to whom they write the letter which accompanies this, and which his Lordship will deliver with his own hand, is as follows.

In these kingdoms and dominions of his Majesty has been made known through different channels the discord, schism, and venomous perversity which the heresiarch Martin Luther has sown in Germany and in those northern countries; from the which all these grandees, prelates, and cavaliers, as catholics and maintainers of the faith and honour of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer and Lord, have endured great grief and pain, especially as they have been informed that the perverse man spoken of above, not content with having infected a great portion of Germany with his false and damnable doctrine, is also endeavouring to infect and pervert these his kingdoms and dominions of Spain with his diabolical cunning, and that for this reason, inspired with a desire that his malignant intent

Ruegan a su merced a quien han elegido para esto como a cavallero de Christo y zelador de su honrra y de su vicario y como a varon de Illustre estado y muy accepto a Su Magt. Cesarea le quiera hazer relacion de todo lo susodicho y de lo que mas a este proposito le parecera, y de su parte y la destes Señores le suplique que como christianissimo principe emperador Catholico Rey e Señor nuestro protector y defensor de la Iglesia Romana nuestra madre ymitando las pisadas de sus

We know that from small sparks a great fire may be kindled if in such matters as these, which are an offence against our Lord and a subversion of our holy catholic faith, the right remedy be not employed in time, and that especially when some communities of these kingdoms are in a disturbed state, so great scandals and innovations may be caused and kindled that it would be difficult afterwards to extinguish them. Therefore, for the remedy of these evils, these governors, grandees, prelates, and cavaliers, zealous for the holy catholic faith and the service and honour of his Imperial Majesty, beg your lordship, whom they have elected for this purpose as a champion of Christ, a zealous supporter of his honour and that of his vicar, as a man of illustrious name and very acceptable to his Imperial Majesty, to make a relation to him of all that has been said above and of what else may seem to you to be to the purpose. You will beg him, in your own name and in the name of us, these Lords, that being a most Christian Prince and Emperor, the catholic King, our Lord, protector and defender of the Roman church our mother, and following

Moreover, he should command Martin Luther to be chastised as a perverse heresiarch, together with all the abettors, followers, and adherents of that damnable sect. And to this end his imperial Majesty ought to command that all the necessary letters and provisions be despatched, in order that all that is necessary be carried out to full effect, according as it may seem best to your lordship. And may it especially be provided that no one shall dare, under the heaviest penalties, to introduce into Spain, or to hear read, or to read, the damnable writings of the above named sect. And may the same be also prohibited in the other countries and dominions which his Majesty there possesses. And may letters be written and all the princes and potentates of the neighbouring states, where this great pestilence has entered or may enter, be persuaded to flee from it and not to accept or tolerate it in any way.

Item. The said governors, grandees, prelates, and cavaliers beg it as a favour of your Lordship, in order that the above stated may be better fulfilled and executed, to unite with the nuncios and ambassadors of his Holiness, and with other lords of this nation who are staying at the court of his Majesty, and conjointly with all of them to beg him in the name of all these kingdoms of Spain that he would be pleased to remedy the above, and to extirpate this abominable heresy; because it seems to them that it would be a great reproach to his Majesty if at the beginning of his most happy reign, his Majesty, being so catholic a prince, and so zealous in the service of God, and our Lord having given him so many and such great and powerful kingdoms and dominions, he should permit so great a schism in the church of God to be made by the hand of such a mean, obstinate, and devilish⁽¹⁾ person.

Over and above this your lordship will speak with the cardinals, Princes Electors, and grandees, who are staying with his Majesty, at his court and in those countries and provinces, in order that all may unite together and show favour and lend aid for this purpose. With respect to this, your Lordship will say and do whatever may seem best for the good furtherance of this matter, and the service of God our Lord, and the preservation of our holy catholic faith. Sacred, imperial, and catholic Majesty,

Through briefs of our most Holy Father, and letters from the Cardinal of Tortosa, governor of these kingdoms, and from other persons, we have heard of the errors and heresies which Martin Luther, a German, has raised against our holy catholic faith, and we have heard of the great grief felt by your Majesty as soon as this matter came to your notice, and with how much care and diligence you commanded that a remedy should be found for it. Because we are informed that all which your Highness did, and all which his Holiness commanded and provided, against this heretic, was not sufficient to turn him from his errors and heresies, but, on the contrary,

A. y con la obligacion que como Christianos tenemos a la defension de su fe traeremos a la memoria de V. Mt. la que el tiene como rrey Catolico de esta nuestra españa y despues como enperador de Alemaña, porque dexando aparte lo que V. A. como principe Christiano es tenuto⁽¹⁾ a hazer en semejante caso por defension de la fe en el castigo deste malvado herege es tambien muy grande la obligacion que a ello tiene como rrey y Señor destes rreynos y sucesor en ellos como nieto de aquellos gloriosos y Catholicos Reyes don fernando y doña ysabel vuestros aguelos que como V. Not that we have not entire confidence and certainty that your Majesty will constantly endeavour to extirpate these errors and heresy, and defend our holy faith and the Apostolic See, and the Vicar of Christ, but, in order to fulfil our duty towards God and your Highness, and because of the obligation we are under as Christians to defend the faith, we remind your Majesty of what is due from you, the catholic King of this our Spain, and the Emperor of Germany. For, not to mention what your Highness is bound to do, as a Christian prince, in such a case for the defence of the faith and the punishment of this wicked heretic, very great is your obligation as king and lord of these kingdoms, and successor and grandson of those glorious and catholic King and Queen, Don Ferdinand and Doña Isabel, your ancestors, who, as your Majesty knows, from the beginning of their most happy reign, with great diligence applied themselves to the chastisement of heretics, and the rooting out of all kinds of heresy from their kingdoms, instituting to this end the office of the Holy Inquisition. Wherefore our Lord, as a reward for such signal services and such holy and right intentions and such catholic works, extended their kingdoms and dominions, and always gave them victory over their enemies. This was the cause why your royal succession was so powerful, and why you have so many kingdoms as you possess.  heretics. Of this proof is given by the laws and sacred constitutions which were made by them in favour of ecclesiastical liberty, the repression and punishment of heretics, and the quantity of blood shed by the Germans to extirpate heresy out of Bohemia. The obligation under which your Majesty lies to chastise this heretic is doubled and rendered much
 these invincible Emperors, but also from the catholic king

Although the matter is of the kind that all supplications with respect to it made to your imperial Majesty are superfluous, as we all of us hold it for certain that you will provide a remedy for it, as is to be expected from your most christian and royal conscience, yet in order to fulfil that which was commended to me, and to do that which as ecclesiastics we ought for the defence and preservation of the Catholic faith, and the reverence and obedience due to our Lord, the Pope and his holy apostolic see, with the greatest affection and devotion which I ought and can feel, and in the name of all the prelates of these your kingdoms and in my own name, I very humbly pray your Majesty that as most Christian Emperor, Catholic King and lord, and defender of the Catholic Church, you would procure and command so

Sacred, imperial, and catholic Majesty,

I have many times written to your Majesty the news worth knowing about her Highness. At present there is nothing more to be said than what your Majesty has learnt and knows already. She is well. As she has not accepted the service of any woman, I have now to do all. I have served her Highness, as your Majesty knows, before and since you came to rule these your kingdoms, and have fulfilled my duties with all possible fidelity and diligence, as is known to all. If your Majesty permits me to discharge my labours and services, I shall be satisfied, and the marquis may enjoy ease and repose. As I have never begged of your Majesty in my letters any other worldly reward except what your Majesty should be pleased and inclined to bestow on me, performing my labours for God's sake, it would not be too much if the marquis, although for conscience sake he does not abstain from creating difficulties for me, would do so in order not to force me to complain to your Majesty. He wishes me to discontinue the service, which by visiting and consoling her, of which she is in so great need, I render to her Highness, and also to the señora Infanta, or at least that I should do it in such a manner as he desires. I beseech your Majesty for God's sake to order the marquis and the marchioness to treat me well and not to molest me, as you commanded them when you departed from here, and not to prevent me from doing my duty towards your Majesty, your mother, and your sister, as I am bound in conscience and by the command of God, because of the trust your Majesty has placed in me. He says that the Queen our lady is well, although she has been suffering some time ago, because her loneliness when the women were sent away did her much harm. They have now returned, and her Highness has been prevailed upon, although with great difficulty, to dress and to go to bed.

The señora Infanta is also well, and is very thankful for the letters from your Majesty, who always should write to her.

Many of those who deserted the service of your Majesty in the time of the commons, and when they saw that their fortune was waning returned to your obedience, are better treated than your faithful servants. They should not be allowed to escape punishment.

formerly. Your Majesty will remember how satisfied you were with the manner of bringing up the señora Infanta. This good opinion of your Majesty was an ample reward for the labour I had had in serving her Highness. Now, mighty lord, everything is much changed. Although the señora Infanta is the best intentioned person in the whole world, her age gives opportunity to those who are near her Highness to prejudice in some degree the service and education of her Highness. The Queen our lady does not permit any one, except Juana Cortes, and her nurse, and two or three others who entertain the same opinions, to enter the bedroom of her Highness. Thus I cannot render myself as useful as I would in the service of the señora Infanta. To witness this is the thing which gives me the greatest pain. I thought it my duty to let your Majesty know it, to relieve my conscience, and that your Majesty may order what you think may be for your interest. In truth, señor, duty to God and your Majesty renders it necessary. I beseech your Majesty that nothing of what I write to your Majesty may be known here, for that would be equal to destroying the little [authority] which I still have.

Sacred, imperial, and catholic Majesty.

I have written several letters to your Majesty, and all of them have been as the marquis and the marchioness desired, because they have not and do not give me permission to do anything else. Memoir of the Señora Infanta.

Memoir of the Señora Infanta for his Majesty.

I know it has been written to your Majesty that I disserved you during the time when the Junta was in Tordesillas, and your Majesty wrote to me on that subject more severely than I deserved. The truth is that I spoke with and knew some of them when they came [into this place]. As when they entered they had the command of everything, I could not avoid their speaking to me and to the Queen my lady, although I did not wish it. I spoke with them at first, and wrote them a letter, because the marquis and the marchioness forced me to write to them before they had arrived, and when they were here to ask them not to drive them ⁽¹⁾ away. I did in this respect all I could, as though my life depended on it. When they ⁽¹⁾ had been sent away I spoke with them ⁽²⁾, and

They ⁽¹⁾ spoke to me about those with whom they were dissatisfied, and when Juan de Padilla had left, gave me a letter to sign, calling him back, as that was said to be in the interest of the service of the Queen my lady. On this account they ⁽²⁾ wrote to your Majesty accusing me of complying with their ⁽¹⁾ wishes. The truth is that I had no malice nor did I intend [to do harm], and, as I wrote to them ⁽²⁾ to Lerma in secret when the Junta was here, I was ready to do all I could for them, although I did not know in what a world I was living. It was not necessary to write other sentiments than I had and have, because I have no other will than to serve your Majesty as much as God. When they ⁽²⁾ gave me the letter of your Highness I should have answered, had they not taken it from me, to send it where they wished. The letter which I wrote in answer to that of your Majesty was given to me by them already drawn up, and I had only to sign it.

Hitherto I have avoided giving annoyance to your Majesty with my letters about what is going on here, because the marquis and the marchioness watch me so closely that I cannot write anything but what they like. God has given me your Majesty to fill the place of a father, and I know that it is

Until the commons came to this place I have suffered all in order not to give annoyance to your Majesty. Now, since they (1) have returned, being angry with everyone, they do not like me to speak with any of the servants of the Queen my lady, men or women, at least not with those whom the governors left here, and with whom I have been brought up. Because I speak with them when they are attending upon me or some come to visit me, and because the Countess of Modica, wife of the admiral, writes to me and I write to her, owing to the great compassion she had for me, and the good example she gave when she was here, the marchioness wants to tear out my eyes, searches me, and makes enquiries by whom I send and who brings me letters from the countess and her sisters. They set guards over me to prevent my speaking or writing and do many other things very different from what is due to me. Your Majesty must know that for me such things are not necessary, and would God that the society which they procure me were not more injurious than that from which they separate me. I can give nothing but words to those who wish to be agreeable to me, and think only of serving your Majesty as I serve God. As she is my teacher of embroidery, and does it very well, I beg you to command the marquis to permit her to receive a reward, and if he writes to you, to remember that I have recommended her.

Item.—Your Majesty ought to order the guardian on no condition to discontinue seeing and consoling the Queen my lady, as often as she calls for him, or as he thinks it proper. For the marchioness and her daughters having entered the closet without being seen by the Queen, they direct the women not to let her go to the large room or to the corridors, but lock her up in her chamber where no other light enters except candlelight, and there is no room whither she could retire from that chamber. That his Majesty should provide that which is for his service, and that it seems to him that the Infanta, until she is a woman, should obey the marchioness.

When we were in Tordesillas I observed the señora Infanta very closely, and certainly she appeared to me very prudent and of great and excellent virtues, as she really is, and, as she is already of such an age, it seems right that she should occupy herself in and procure certain things which may contribute towards the service and comfort of the Queen our lady, and the good and honour of her person. As that, however, does not agree with the intentions of the marquis, he opposes her. I have seen a memoir on this matter, and, if it should be sent to your Majesty, I beseech you to command that it be read, and orders given that all the respect and consideration be shown to the person and authority of the señora Infanta, which is reasonable and due to her, and to command the marquis to take the same care of the guardian, confessor of the Queen our lady, as of his own servants, and to see that all be paid to him which your Majesty and her Highness have ordered to be paid.

to speak with them, and to be informed of the affairs of the kingdom and despatch them. I answered that they are all occupied in affairs which concern the service of her Highness and of your Majesty, and that they cannot come. As soon as I should learn that they are unoccupied, I would ask them in her name to come. Sometimes she is satisfied, but at other times she scolds because they do not come immediately. In this respect I shall use all the delay and artfulness which your service requires. But your Majesty may believe me she is so much spoilt by the conversations which they ⁽¹⁾ had with her Highness since we came to this place, and so haughty in consequence of the offers which were made to her, that there is no man who has not great difficulty with her. In order to remove her Highness from this neighbourhood, and because this town has not been so faithful to your service as it ought, I have been and am of opinion that your Majesty should command peremptorily that her Highness should go to Arevalo, which is a good town, strongly fortified, and they have been loyal servants of your Majesty. Considering what has happened in this kingdom, and would happen again if any occasion offered, which God forbid, this affair ought not to be delayed, and your Majesty may take it for granted that it cannot be done with the consent of her Highness. For as she refuses to do anything required for her life and her soul, and does exactly the contrary, I do not know how she can consent to this. In truth, if your Ma-

Persons who are in her frame of mind require it, and the Queen your grandmother served and treated in this way the Queen our lady, her daughter. Your Majesty may do what seems best in this case.

The manner in which the removal of her Highness from here should be effected seems to me to be this. First, all means of persuasion ought to be employed in order to see whether her Highness would not do it of her own will, and if that does not suffice the President of the council ought to come with an order from your Majesty to all the persons who are here. He is to take her Highness, to put her by night into a litter, and to carry her without stopping to Arevalo. I say the President, because I know that he would do this and anything else your Majesty may command au pied de la lettre. Two or three councillors should also come with him, that it may seem as though it were done with the consent of the whole council and the whole kingdom. I shall keep everything ready, but as I am to remain in the service of her Highness it would be inconvenient for me to take part openly in this affair, because I should thus be much disliked by her Highness. Your Majesty may believe me that this ought to be done, for the disposition of this kingdom is now as bad as it was when they showed it by their deeds, and whenever they have opportunity to speak with her Highness they will find means to commit greater errors. For these reasons your Majesty ought to procure and to wish that her Highness live in a place where she is very well attended and very well watched, and out of the way of these and many other inconveniences which might arise. Even now one ought not to confide in a letter, notwithstanding it be written in cipher.

On Christmas eve, when matins were celebrated in the chapel she came out [of her room], took away the señora Infanta, who was hearing them, and cried out that the altar and all that had been erected should be taken away. We led her Highness back with all courtesy, but with great difficulty. Sometimes she goes to her corridor which has the river aspect, and calls upon some people to go and fetch the soldiers and the captains who are here that they might kill one or the other. Her Highness being in this condition your Majesty can judge for yourself what is convenient for your service and what we suffer who are here.

The Cardinal, the Constable, and the Admiral have written to me about the removal of her Highness. I have answered what I think is right, and told them that I am writing to your Majesty about the measures which ought to be used.

[Lo demas de la carta claro.] yo he hecho relacion a V. Mt. de todo lo que aqui pasa y de lo que conviene para servicio de Su Alt. y de Vra Mt. y de la Señora ynfante y de lo que se debe haser en el castigo y gratificacion de los desta casa. a esto no me ha respondido Vra Mt. ni he visto que lo aya mandado proveer. a Vra Mt. suplico que lo mande proveer por lo que conviene a su servicio.

Arzeo despensero mayor de Su Alt. y Carquiçano rebolvieron todas las maldades desta casa e fueron causa que juan de padilla y los otros traydores viniesen aqui y un hijo de Carquiçano andava en todo esto con su padre que es ya onbre. soltaron y perdonaron a estos dos como tengo escripto a V. Mt. y dan cartas cada dia para que se torne a su hijo de Carquiçano el oficio de repostero de plata yo no las he cunplido por que se que este herro en las culpas de su padre y porque pareceria mal quel hijo del traydor tuviese oficio en esta casa aun quel no hubiese herrado quanto mas siendo culpado, que aun quando juan de padilla y los otros traydores estaban en Torrelobaton, el hera carcelero de los servidores de V. [Common writing.] I have reported to your Majesty all that passes here and all that the service of her Highness, of your Majesty, and of the señora Infanta requires; and also about the punishments and rewards of those who are employed in this household. To that letter your Majesty has sent me no answer, nor do I know what you have commanded. I beseech your Majesty to command that orders for what is required for your service be given.

Arzeo, the chief butler of her Highness, and Carquizano, stirred up all the disturbances of this house, and were the instigators of the coming of Juan de Padilla and the other traitors, and a son of Carquizano, who is already grown up, took part in all that his father did. They set the two at liberty, as I have already written to your Majesty, and write letters every day that the son of Carquizano may be restored to his place of keeper of the plate. I have not obeyed them because I know that he committed the same offences as his father, and it would not appear well if the son of a traitor held an office in this household, even if he had not committed any fault, and how much more so being guilty of having been the jailor of the servants of your Majesty who had been taken prisoners when Juan de Padilla and the other traitors were in Torre Lobaton. Your Majesty will command what is to be done in this matter.

I likewise beseech your Majesty to command me to punish Arzeo and Carquizano. Believing that they were to be punished for the treasons they had committed against you, I did not speak until now of what regards me, although that also concerns your Majesty. For what they did was done because I served your Majesty. I beseech your Majesty to order that they be punished according to law, and that the case be decided either by your council or by the alcaldes of your court without partiality. For the decision which has been come to here has been an arbitrary one of partisans, and not according to law.

Your Majesty will remember that you have ordered the governors not to meddle in the affairs of this household, and the consequences of some contraventions are not favourable to the service of your Majesty. The admiral has given the place of chief butler to a servant of his, and the licentiate Polanco procured the place of butler for one of his servants, and in a similar way other offices have been given away. I have paid no respect to these nominations, nor shall I do so until your Majesty gives your orders. In this house there ought to be only servants of your Majesty, very trustworthy ones, rewarded by your own hands and by no one else. But if others are to be employed, it would be more just to employ my servants on account of the confidence which your Majesty has in me, as well as because I and they have laboured and suffered in doing our duty. I beseech your Majesty not to permit that servants of others enter this house, for not only should I be aggrieved thereby, but you also would be more so, as it is incompatible with the service of your Majesty.

I have learnt now that the governors have given orders about the offices of this household. They despatch and register the letters patent concerning the offices which the cardinal and the admiral gave away when they were here, although I do not accept them as valid, having shown them the letters of your Majesty by which you command me to appoint others to the offices which are necessary for the service of her Highness. As I have done this, and as your Majesty has commanded them not to meddle in these affairs, I beg your Majesty to send me an order commanding the said officers not to register such letters patent, notwithstanding the orders of the governors, and if they have registered them to declare them null and void, and that the appointed persons shall not be paid or receive warrants, nor be admitted to their offices. Your Majesty may believe me that in this as in all other respects it is necessary that your commands be executed to the very letter.

Concerning the decrees which they give or have given, I have already sent to the cardinal asking him to remember what your Majesty has commanded them and me. He answered that I should not obey what they order. It seems to me it would be better for them to obey the commands of your Majesty than to give me occasion to disobey what they

Your Majesty informs me that my petition for the knight commandership of Monreal for my brother Don Hernando arrived late. I have learnt that your Majesty bestowed it on the Marquis of Villafranca, and have received it as a reward bestowed on myself. For every favour your Majesty shows to the Duke of Alba and his sons, who are such loyal servants of your Majesty, is a very great favour shown to myself.

I have written to your Majesty about another knight commandership, begging you to give it to my brother, and that which he holds now to Don Hernando de Tovar, my nephew. It is only the truth to say that he has served very well with his person, and spent all the property he had with which he could have bought estates worth as much as what he now begs to have given him for life.

With respect to myself your Majesty postpones your decision until your arrival in these kingdoms. It is true that it [the arrival] is so necessary that, owing to my obligations and the goodwill I bear to your service, I should consider myself rewarded and paid by it [the arrival] for all my services and expenses. As it [the arrival], however, is delayed by the occupations your Majesty has there and which occur, I beseech your Majesty not to permit that I entirely ruin my family. For it is the truth that I have not married my

The five millions three hundred and seventy-five thousand maravedis ⁽¹⁾ which your Majesty ordered to be paid to me in Coruña out of the grant which these kingdoms conceded to your Majesty are not paid to me because the grant is not paid. As they constitute a recognised debt for the relief of the souls of the catholic King and Queen, grandparents of your Majesty, who are in glory, I beg your Majesty to command that they be paid to me this year, out of the ordinary revenues of these kingdoms, so that I may marry my daughter, whose marriage portion, as I have stated, I have spent in the service of your Majesty.

The señora Infanta is well, and writes to your Majesty. In truth she behaves in every respect very well and as she ought. If she has committed some errors it was and is more the fault of other persons than of her Highness.

I have been told that letters have been written from here to your Majesty that the marchioness and I do not serve and treat her Highness with the respect which is due to her. If that were the case, it would be a greater fault in us than in other persons, on account of the goodwill and obligation we have to serve her, being the daughter and granddaughter of her parents and grandparents, and sister of your Majesty.

Besides, having attended upon royal personages during so long a time, we cannot excuse ourselves with saying that we do not know how to behave in their service. Your Majesty may believe me, we have attended and are attending to her Highness in everything that is for your service and hers, and if in some respects her Highness has not been and is not satisfied with us, the reason has been that we wished the better to serve your Majesty and her Highness. I hope in God that when her Highness is of riper age she will acknowledge it herself, and I ask no other reward from our Lord, but that her Highness may be in every respect the daughter and granddaughter of her parents and grandparents, and the sister of your Majesty.

When last year the estimate was made for the necessary expenses of this household, two thousand ducats were assigned to her Highness. I said that one thousand ducats were sufficient, and last year this sum only has been paid. Her Highness is, God be thanked, already a woman, and it is reasonable that your Majesty should increase her revenue and allowance. Her Highness and all here must know that she receives that favour at the hands of your Majesty. The reason which I then had was that the favour and the increase of it should come from the hand of your Majesty. It would be good, if your Majesty is pleased, to order that her allowance be now increased to the sum of two thousand ducats until the happy time when your Majesty comes to these your kingdoms, and to tell her that your Majesty has

Her Highness ⁽¹⁾ has felt very much the death of the King of Portugal on account of the loss to the Queen her sister, and because your Majesty has lost in him a good brother. Her Highness has sent the maestro Fray Miguel, who is preacher here in the place of Villegas, to visit her Highness ⁽²⁾. For the same reasons I have been and am very sorry for his death, and if it were not for my occupations in the service of the Queen my lady and the señora Infanta, which detain me here, I should go and visit and serve her Highness in her troubles. Your Majesty ought to take measures to preserve relations with the King and with that kingdom, because it is more advantageous to these [kingdoms] than any other. I have recommended to the maestro Fray Miguel to ascertain by all means possible whether France entertains intelligence with Portugal, and who are the persons near the King, what their persuasions are, and towards which party they are inclined. The fortress was already demolished when the letter of your Majesty arrived. As I knew that it was ordered many years ago, and that it was suitable to the service of your Majesty, I should have done it earlier, if the governors had permitted it. But now it is already reduced to its proper state in consequence of an order of the governors.

I have received a decree of your Majesty ordering that an inhabitant of this town be appointed chaplain of the Queen my lady. There are few here who have been loyal servants, and this one is not of their number. He is very young, has little authority, and would not be sufficient to fill the place of a boy of the chapel. I have [not] obeyed and carried out the order of your Majesty for these reasons, as well as because others who have served better than he and his relations would think themselves aggrieved if they learn that they receive no favours, whilst those receive them who have done no service. Your Majesty may order what is for your interest. Although I am obliged to tell you what is compatible with your service I shall do what your Majesty commands.

I arrived at Tordesillas on Wednesday, and occupied myself immediately in executing the command of your Majesty. Having investigated into the case, the conclusion is that, in [my opinion], it seems that the señora Infanta is at liberty in her conscience to marry whomsoever your Majesty should choose. Her marriage, which was concluded with the Duke of Saxony, is annulled, and without any binding force, because she protested in time and in the form required by law. Her first marriage, which she concluded in the year nineteen with the Marquis of Brandenburg, is without any binding force, in foro conscientia, although she was then twelve years of age, as we have found in the true registers, because the marquis and the marchioness [told her] to sign the parchments written in Latin, which had been sent from Bar[celo]na, saying to her Highness that they concerned a certain renunciation of her right of inheritance which the service of your Majesty required. They intentionally concealed her marriage with the Marquis of Brandenburg from her, and did not tell her a single word about it, in order not to excite her, and because her nurse declared to them that she was by no means of sufficient age. Thus the señora Infanta knew of her marriage as much as of what is done in Persia. Until I arrived here such a thing has never been thought of by her. As for the conclusion of marriage a free and positive consent is required, it is clear before God none of the former [marriages] has been concluded. Thus the señora Infanta is free to obey your Majesty with respect to Portugal, and it seems to me that your Majesty should come and hold the cortes in Valladolid, whence, being near at hand, you can with less difficulty, more gently, and with the consent of the kingdom, get the señora Infanta out of the hands of her mother. From Burgos this could not be done in such a manner as is necessary, in order that, if anything happens to endanger the life of the Queen, your Majesty may remain blameless in the eyes of all. If you should think that the time assigned for the meeting of the cortes is too short for making any change, it would be no inconvenience to delay it until ten days later, as this matter so much regards your service. May God give your Majesty a long life, with repose for your soul and body.

The Queen our lady is as usual. About a month ago she went to the corridor, and began to scream. In order that her Highness should not be heard I ordered the women to beg her to return to her room, and if she would not go, to conduct her there by force. When she saw that they were ready to do so she entered [her room], and remained so orderly that she does all we ask her. She dines every day. During the last fortnight she has undressed three times, gone to bed, and dressed again. I have always thought that her Highness, being so indisposed as she is, in punishment for our sins, nothing could do her more good than some torture,⁽¹⁾ although it is a very serious thing for a vassal to think of employing it against his sovereign. before Fray Juan Hurtado was to come, I had ~~already~~ thought of inviting him for this purpose. For he is not only a good priest, but also a loyal servant of your Majesty, and I wish that as much could be said of all who speak with her Highness. Your Majesty has to decide, and if [my proposal] is approved, your Majesty may order a good priest to come here. Sacred, imperial, and catholic Majesty,

I received the letter and the despatch, concerning the removal of the Queen our lady to Toro, which your Majesty ordered to be sent to me. Your Majesty commands that it be done with all the reverence due to the Queen. I write to the secretary Covos on this subject. If your Majesty says this, being her son, it seems to me very well; but it is to be supposed that I, being your vassal, am not to do anything but what is conducive to your service and that of her Highness. May your Majesty order that an answer be sent, informing me of your command. For, if the removal is to be effected without annoyance to her Highness, I know it will be as much delayed as the other things which her Highness does and which give her less trouble. Sacred, imperial, and catholic Majesty,

I wrote to your Majesty a short time ago. What has since occurred is, that three persons have died and a young woman is dying. There is nothing else worth mentioning. I have not begged the Queen our Lady to leave this place, for during the last five or six days she has refused to eat anything except bread and cheese. She usually does this if her will in anything is not done, and if it were done she would ask other things more prejudicial to her. As the removal would much disturb her, it has been delayed in order to wait until her Highness takes food, and to see whether the health of the place will not improve. If that should not be the case, which our Lord forbid, her Highness will remove to Toro. Her departure must, however, be effected in the manner which I have stated; that is to say, her Highness will start from here at eleven or twelve o'clock at night, and go to a place three leagues distant from here which is called Pedrosa. There she is to stay during the day, and the next night at the same hour she will start again, and reach Toro before day. When she enters the town care will be taken that no one sees her Highness. That is necessary, for, in truth, I am ashamed of myself, of what I see and what is said and done.

I sent Don Hernando de Tovar, my nephew, and the mayordomo Beltran to Toro, as I have written to your Majesty, to examine the houses of Don Gutierrez de Fonseca and Juan Rodriguez de Fonseca. In neither of them, nor in both together, can her Highness stay. For the apartment which could be given to her Highness is too public. Every one could see her Highness there, which ought not to be. Moreover, her Highness demands other things which could not be procured except where all could see her. Thus, there is no other house there where her Highness could be lodged, except that of Antonio de Fonseca. It contains good apartments, and moreover is situated in a little frequented part [of the town]. The room which her Highness could have there is very good, and she could rest in it without seeing any one. It would be good if your Majesty would command Antonio de Fonseca to be written to to quit the house, and if repairs have to be made to render it inhabitable, which will be little, to have it repaired at once.

The Marchioness has postponed her journey to her mother until it is known whether the health of the place will improve or her Highness go to Toro. I pray our Lord to guard your imperial and catholic Majesty in happiness, and to augment your royal crown.

CALENDARS OF STATE PAPERS, &c.

As far back as the year 1800, a Committee of the House of Commons recommended that Indexes and Calendars should be made to the Public Records, and thirty-six years afterwards another Committee of the House of Commons reiterated that recommendation in more forcible words; but it was not until the incorporation of the State Paper Office with the Public Record Office that the present Master of the Rolls found himself in a position to take the necessary steps for carrying out the wishes of the House of Commons.

On 7 December 1855, he stated to the Lords of the Treasury that although "the Records, State Papers, and Documents in his charge constitute the most complete and perfect series of their kind in the civilized world," and although "they are of the greatest value in a historical and constitutional point of view, yet they are comparatively useless to the public, from the want of proper Calendars and Indexes."

Acting upon the recommendation contained in the Reports of the House of Commons above referred to, he suggested to the Lords of the Treasury that to effect the object he had in view it would be necessary for him to employ a few persons fully qualified to perform the work which he contemplated.

Their Lordships assented to the necessity of having Calendars prepared and printed, and empowered the Master of the Rolls to take such steps as might be necessary for this purpose.

The following Works have been already published under the direction of the Master of the Rolls :—

These volumes contain summaries of all State Papers and correspondence relating to the reign of Henry VIII., in the Public Record Office, of those formerly in the State Paper Office, in the British Museum, the Libraries of Oxford and Cambridge, and other Public Libraries; and of all letters that have appeared in print in the works of Burnet, Strype, and others. Whatever authentic original material exists in England relative to the religious, political, parliamentary, or social history of the country during the reign of Henry VIII., whether despatches of ambassadors, or proceedings of the army, navy, treasury, or ordnance, or records of Parliament, appointments of officers, grants from the Crown, &c., will be found calendared in these volumes.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, FOREIGN SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF EDWARD VI., preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by W. B. TURNBULL, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, and Correspondant du Comité Impérial des Travaux Historiques et des Sociétés Savantes de France. 1861.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, FOREIGN SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF MARY, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by W. B. TURNBULL, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, and Correspondant du Comité Impérial des Travaux Historiques et des Sociétés Savantes de France. 1861.

The two preceding volumes exhibit the negotiations of the English ambassadors with the courts of the Emperor Charles V. of Germany, of Henry II. of France, and of Philip II. of Spain. The affairs of several of the minor continental states also find various incidental illustrations of much interest.

A valuable series of Papers descriptive of the circumstances which attended the loss of Calais merits a special notice; while the progress of the wars in the north of France, into which England was dragged by her union with Spain, is narrated at some length. The domestic affairs of England are of course passed over in these volumes, which treat only of its relations with foreign powers.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, FOREIGN SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF ELIZABETH, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office, &c. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham. 1863-1867.

Vol. I.—1558-1559.

Vol. II.—1559-1560.

Vol. III.—1560-1561.

Vol. IV.—1561-1562.

Vol. V.—1562.

These five volumes contain a calendar of the foreign correspondence of Queen Elizabeth, from her accession in 1558, to 1562, of which the originals, drafts, or contemporary copies, are deposited in the Public Record Office. These documents are of the greatest value as exhibiting the position of England at one of the most interesting periods of history, in regard to its relations with France, Scotland, Spain, and Germany. They are of especial importance as illustrating not only the external but also the domestic affairs of France during the period which immediately preceded the outbreak of the first great war of religion under the Prince of Condé and the Duke of Guise.

CALENDAR OF THE CAREW PAPERS, preserved in Lambeth Library. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London; and WILLIAM BULLEN, Esq. 1867-1868.

Vol. I.—1515-1574.

Vol. II.—1575-1588.

The Carew Papers relating to Ireland deposited in the Lambeth Library are not only unique in themselves, but are of great importance. Two volumes of the Calendar of these valuable Papers have been published, extending from 1515 to 1588, which cannot fail to be welcome to all students of Irish history. Another volume is in the press.

CALENDAR OF LETTERS, DESPATCHES, AND STATE PAPERS, relating to the Negotiations between England and Spain, preserved in the Archives at Simancas, and elsewhere. Edited by G. A. BERGENROTH. 1862-1868.

Vol. I.—Hen. VII.—1485-1509.

Vol. II.—Hen. VIII.—1509-1525.

Supplement to Vol. I. and Vol. II.

Mr. Bergenroth is engaged in compiling a Calendar of the Papers relating to England preserved in the archives of Simancas in Spain, and the corresponding portion removed from Simancas to Paris. It was deemed essential that Mr. Bergenroth should also visit Madrid, and examine the Papers there, bearing on the reign of Henry VIII. The first volume contains the Spanish Papers of the reign of Henry VII., and the second volume the Papers of the first portion of the reign of Henry VIII. The Supplement to Vols. I. and II. contains new information relating to the private life of Queen Katharine of England; and to the projected marriage of Henry VII. with Queen Juana, widow of King Philip of Castile, and mother of the Emperor Charles V.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS AND MANUSCRIPTS, relating to ENGLISH AFFAIRS, preserved in the Archives of Venice, &c. Edited by RAWDON BROWN, Esq. 1864-1867.

Vol. I.—1202-1509.

Vol. II.—1509-1519.

Of the Papers in the Venetian archives, Mr. Rawdon Brown has already published two volumes of his Calendar, extending from 1202 to 1519, and has made considerable progress in the third volume. Mr. Brown's researches have brought to light a number of important documents relating to the various periods of English history, and his contributions to historical literature are of the most interesting and important character.

THE CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF GREAT BRITAIN

[ROYAL 8vo., half-bound. Price 10s. each Volume or Part.]

On 25 July 1822, the House of Commons presented an address to the Crown, stating that the editions of the works of our ancient historians were inconvenient and defective; that many of their writings still remained in manuscript, and, in some cases, in a single copy only. They added, "that an uniform and convenient edition of the whole, published under His Majesty's royal sanction, would be an undertaking honourable to His Majesty's reign, and conducive to the advancement of historical and constitutional knowledge; ~~that the House therefore humbly besought His Majesty, that He would be graciously pleased to give such directions as His Majesty, in His wisdom, might think fit, for the publication of a complete edition of the ancient historians of this realm, and assured His Majesty that whatever expense might be necessary for this purpose would be made good.~~"

The Master of the Rolls, being very desirous that effect should be given to the resolution of the House of Commons, submitted to Her Majesty's Treasury in 1857 the plan above referred to for the publication of the ancient chronicles and memorials of the United Kingdom, and it was adopted accordingly. In selecting these works, it was considered right, in the first instance, to give preference to those of which the manuscripts were unique, or the materials of which would help to fill up blanks in English history for which no satisfactory and authentic information hitherto existed in any accessible form. One great object the Master of the Rolls had in view was to form a corpus historicum within reasonable limits, and which should be as complete as possible. In a subject of so vast a range, it was important that the historical student should be able to select such volumes as conformed with his own peculiar tastes and studies, and not be put to the expense of purchasing the whole collection; an inconvenience inseparable from any other plan than that which has been in this instance adopted.

Of the Chronicles and Memorials, the following volumes have been published. They embrace the period from the earliest time of British history down to the end of the reign of Henry VII.

1. THE CHRONICLE OF ENGLAND, by JOHN CAPGRAVE. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGESTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1858.

John Capgrave was prior of Lynn, in Norfolk, and provincial of the order of the Friars Hermits of England shortly before the year 1464. His Chronicle extends from the creation of the world to the year 1417. As a record of the language spoken in Norfolk (for it is written in English), it is of considerable value.

2. CHRONICON MONASTERII DE ABINGDON. Vols. I. and II. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham, and Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1858.

This Chronicle traces the history of the great Benedictine monastery of Abingdon in Berkshire, from its foundation by King Ina of Wessex, to the reign of Richard I., shortly after which period the present narrative was drawn up by an inmate of the establishment. The author had access to the title-deeds of the house, and incorporates into his history various charters of the Saxon kings, which are of great importance as illustrating not only the history of the locality but that of the kingdom at large. The work is now printed for the first time.

3. LIVES OF EDWARD THE CONFESSOR. I.—La Estoire de Seint Aedward le Rei. II.—Vita Beati Edvardi Regis et Confessoris. III.—Vita Æduuardi Regis qui apud Westmonasterium requiescit. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1858.

The first is a poem in Norman French, containing 4,686 lines. It is addressed to Alianor, Queen of Henry III., and was probably written in the year 1245, on the occasion of the restoration of the church of Westminster. Nothing is known of the author.

The second is an anonymous poem, containing 536 lines, written between the years 1440 and 1450, by command of Henry VI., to whom it is dedicated. Though it does not throw any new light on the reign of Edward the Confessor, yet it is valuable as a specimen of the Latin poetry of the time.

The third, also by an anonymous author, was apparently written for Queen Edith, between the years 1066 and 1074, during the pressure of the suffering brought on the Saxons by the Norman conquest. It notices many facts not found in other writers, and some which differ considerably from the usual accounts.

4. MONUMENTA FRANCISCANA; scilicet, I.—Thomas de Eccleston de Adventu Fratrum Minorum in Angliam. II.—Adæ de Marisco Epistolæ. III.—Registrum Fratrum Minorum Londoniæ. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1858.

This volume contains original materials for the history of the settlement of the order of Saint Francis in England, the letters of Adam de Marisco, and other papers connected with the foundation and diffusion of this great body. It has been the aim of the editor to collect whatever historical information could be found in this country, in the British Museum, or elsewhere, towards illustrating a period of the national history for which only scanty materials exist. None of these have been before printed.

5. FASCICULI ZIZANIORUM MAGISTRI JOHANNIS WYCLIF CUM TRITICO Ascribed to THOMAS NETTER, of WALDEN, Provincial of the Carmelite Order in England, and Confessor to King Henry the Fifth. Edited by the Rev. W. W. SHIRLEY, M.A., Tutor and late Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford. 1858.

This work derives its principal value from the fact that it is the only contemporaneous account of the rise of the Lollards. At the time when it was written, the disputes of the schoolmen had been extended to the field of theology, and they appear both in the writings of Wycliff and in those of his adversaries.

Wycliff's little bundles of tares are not less metaphysical than theological, and the conflict between Nominalists and Realists rages side by side with the conflict between the different interpreters of Scripture. The "Fasciculi Zizaniorum" gives a good idea of the controversies which were carried on at the end of the 14th and the beginning of the 15th centuries.

6. THE BUIK OF THE CRONICLIS OF SCOTLAND ; or, A Metrical Version of the History of Hector Boece ; by WILLIAM STEWART. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. B. TURNBULL, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. 1858.

This is a metrical translation of a Latin Prose Chronicle, and was written in the first half of the 16th century. The narrative begins with the earliest legends, and ends with the death of James I. of Scotland, and the "evil ending of the traitors that slew him." Strict accuracy of statement is not to be looked for in such a work as this ; but the stories of the colonization of Spain, Ireland, and Scotland are interesting if not true ; and the chronicle is valuable as a reflection of the manners, sentiments, and character of the age in which it was composed.

The peculiarities of the Scottish dialect are well illustrated in this metrical version of Boece's work, and the student of language will here find ample materials for comparison with the English dialects of the same period, and with modern lowland Scotch.

7. JOHANNIS CAPGRAVE-LIBER DE ILLUSTRIBUS HENRICIS. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGESTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1858.

This work is dedicated to Henry VI. of England, who appears to have been, in the author's estimation, the greatest of all the Henries. It is divided into three distinct parts, each having its own separate dedication. The first part relates only to the history of the Empire, and extends from the election of Henry I., the Fowler, to the end of the reign of the Emperor Henry VI. The second part is devoted to English history, and extends from the accession of Henry I. in the year 1100, to the year 1446 which was the twenty-fourth year of the reign of King Henry VI. The third part contains the lives of illustrious men who have borne the name of Henry in various parts of the world.

Capgrave was born in 1393, in the reign of Richard II., and lived during the Wars of the Roses, for the history of which period his work is of some value.

8. HISTORIA MONASTERII S. AUGUSTINI CANTUARIENSIS, by THOMAS OF ELMHAM, formerly Monk and Treasurer of that Foundation. Edited by CHARLES HARDWICK, M.A., Fellow of St. Catharine's Hall, and Christian Advocate in the University of Cambridge. 1858.

This history extends from the arrival of St. Augustine in Kent until 1191. Prefixed is a chronology as far as 1418, which shows in outline what was to have been the character of the work when completed. The only copy known is in the possession of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. The author was connected with Norfolk, and most probably with Elmham, whence he derived his name.

9. EULOGIUM (HISTORIARUM SIVE TEMPORIS) : Chronicon ab Orbe condito usque ad Annum Domini 1366 ; a Monacho quodam Malmesbiriensi exaratum. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by F. S. HAYDON, Esq., B.A. 1858-1863.

This is a Latin Chronicle extending from the Creation to the latter part of the reign of Edward III., and written by a monk of the Abbey of Malmesbury, in Wiltshire, about the year 1367. A continuation, carrying the history of England down to the year 1413, was added in the former half of the fifteenth century by an author whose name is not known. The original Chronicle is divided into five books. It contains a history of the world generally, but more especially of England to the year 1366. The continuation extends the history down to the coronation of Henry V. The Eulogium itself is chiefly valuable as containing a history, by a contemporary, of the period between 1356 and 1366. The notices of events appear to have been written very soon after their occurrence. Among other interesting matter, the Chronicle contains a diary of the Poitiers campaign, evidently furnished by some person who accompanied the army of the Black Prince. The continuation of the Chronicle is also the work of a contemporary, and gives a very interesting account of the reigns of Richard II. and Henry IV. It is believed to be the earliest authority for the statement that the latter monarch died in the Jerusalem Chamber at Westminster.

10. MEMORIALS OF HENRY THE SEVENTH: Bernardi Andreæ Tholosatis Vita Regis Henrici Septimi; necnon alia quædam ad eundem Regem spectantia. Edited by JAMES GAIRDNER, Esq. 1858.

The contents of these volumes are—(1) a life of Henry VII., by his poet laureate and historiographer, Bernard André, of Toulouse, with some compositions in verse, of which he is supposed to have been the author; (2) the journals of Roger Machado during certain embassies on which he was sent by Henry VII. to Spain and Brittany, the first of which had reference to the marriage of the King's son, Arthur, with Catharine of Arragon; (3) two curious reports by envoys sent to Spain in the year 1505 touching the succession to the Crown of Castile, and a project of marriage between Henry VII. and the Queen of Naples; and (4) an account of Philip of Castile's reception in England in 1506. Other documents of interest in connexion with the period are given in an appendix.

11. MEMORIALS OF HENRY THE FIFTH. I.—Vita Henrici Quinti, Roberto Redmanno auctore. II.—Versus Rhythmici in laudem Regis Henrici Quinti. III.—Elmhami Liber Metricus de Henrico V. Edited by CHARLES A. COLE, Esq. 1858.

This volume contains three treatises which more or less illustrate the history of the reign of Henry V., viz.: A Life by Robert Redman; a Metrical Chronicle by Thomas Elmham, prior of Lenton, a contemporary author; Versus Rhythmici, written apparently by a monk of Westminster Abbey, who was also a contemporary of Henry V. These works are reprinted for the first time.

12. MUNIMENTA GILDHALLÆ LONDONIENSIS; Liber Albus, Liber Custumarum, et Liber Horn, in archivis Gildhallæ asservati. Vol. I., Liber Albus. Vol. II. (in Two Parts), Liber Custumarum. Vol. III., Translation of the Anglo-Norman Passages in Liber Albus, Glossaries, Appendices, and Index. Edited by HENRY THOMAS RILEY, Esq., M.A., Barrister-at-Law. 1859–1862.

The manuscript of the Liber Albus, compiled by John Carpenter, Common Clerk of the City of London in the year 1419, a large folio volume, is preserved in the Record Room of the City of London. It gives an account of the laws, regulations, and institutions of that City in the twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and early part of the fifteenth centuries.

The Liber Custumarum was compiled probably by various hands in the early part of the fourteenth century during the reign of Edward II. The manuscript, a folio volume, is also preserved in the Record Room of the City of London, though some portion in its original state, borrowed from the City in the reign of Queen Elizabeth and never returned, forms part of the Cottonian MS. Claudius D. II. in the British Museum. It also gives an account of the laws, regulations, and institutions of the City of London in the twelfth, thirteenth, and early part of the fourteenth centuries.

13. CHRONICA JOHANNIS DE OXENEDES. Edited by Sir HENRY ELLIS, K.H. 1859.

Although this Chronicle tells of the arrival of Hengist and Horsa in England in the year 449, yet it substantially begins with the reign of King Alfred, and comes down to the year 1292, where it ends abruptly. The history is particularly valuable for notices of events in the eastern portions of the kingdom, which are not to be elsewhere obtained, and some curious facts are mentioned relative to the floods in that part of England, which are confirmed in the Friesland Chronicle of Anthony Heinrich, pastor of the Island of Mohr.

14. A COLLECTION OF POLITICAL POEMS AND SONGS RELATING TO ENGLISH HISTORY, FROM THE ACCESSION OF EDWARD III. TO THE REIGN OF HENRY VIII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A. 1859-1861.

These Poems are perhaps the most interesting of all the historical writings of the period, though they cannot be relied on for accuracy of statement. They are various in character; some of them are upon religious subjects, some may be called satires, and some give no more than a court scandal; but as a whole they present a very fair picture of society, and of the relations of the different classes to one another.

The period comprised is in itself interesting, and brings us, through the decline of the feudal system, to what may be considered the beginning of our modern history. The songs in old English are of considerable interest to the philologist.

15. The "OPUS TERTIUM," "OPUS MINUS," &c., of ROGER BACON. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1859.

This is the celebrated treatise--which, up to this time, had never been printed--so frequently referred to by the great philosopher in his works. It contains the fullest details we possess of the life and labours of Roger Bacon. The volume also contains a fragment by the same author, supposed to be unique, the "Compendium Studii Theologie."

16. BARTHOLOMÆI DE COTTON, MONACHI NORWICENSIS, HISTORIA ANGLICANA; 449-1298: necnon ejusdem Liber de Archiepiscopis et Episcopis Angliæ. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1859.

The author, a monk of Norwich, has here given us a Chronicle of England from the arrival of the Saxons in 449 to the year 1298, in or about which year it appears that he died. The latter portion of this history (the whole of the reign of Edward I. more especially) is of great value, as the writer was contemporary with the events which he records. An Appendix contains several illustrative documents connected with the previous narrative.

17. BRUT Y TYWYSOGION; or, The Chronicle of the Princes of Wales. Edited by the Rev. JOHN WILLIAMS AB ITHEL, M.A. 1860.

This work, which is also known as "The Chronicle of the Princes of Wales," has been attributed to Caradoc of Llancarvan, who flourished about the middle of the twelfth century. It is written in the ancient Welsh language, begins with the abdication and death of Caedwala at Rome, in the year 681, and continues the history down to the subjugation of Wales by Edward I., about the year 1282.

18. A COLLECTION OF ROYAL AND HISTORICAL LETTERS DURING THE REIGN OF HENRY IV. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGESTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1860.

This volume, like all the others in the series containing a miscellaneous selection of letters, is valuable on account of the light it throws upon biographical history, and the familiar view it presents of characters, manners, and events of the time. The period (1399 to 1404) required much elucidation; to which the volume will materially contribute.

19. THE REPRESSOR OF OVER MUCH BLAMING OF THE CLERGY. By REGINALD PECOCK, sometime Bishop of Chichester. Vols. I. and II. Edited by CHURCHILL BABINGTON, B.D., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1860.

The "Repressor" may be considered the earliest piece of good theological disquisition of which our English prose literature boast. The author was born about the end of the fourteenth century, was consecrated Bishop of St. Asaph in the year 1444, and translated to the see of Chichester in 1450. While Bishop of St. Asaph, he zealously defended his brother prelates from the attacks of those who censured the bishops for their neglect of duty. He maintained that it was no part of a bishop's functions to appear in the pulpit, and that his time might be more profitably spent, and his dignity better maintained, in the performance of works of a higher character. Among those who thought differently were the Lollards, and it is against their general doctrines that the "Repressor" is directed. Pecoek took up a position midway between that of the Roman Church and that of the modern Anglican Church; but his work is interesting chiefly because it gives a full account of the views of the Lollards and of the arguments by which they were supported, and because it assists us to ascertain the state of feeling which ultimately led to the Reformation. Apart from religious matters, the light thrown upon contemporaneous history is very small, but the "Repressor" has great value for the philologist, as it tells us what were the characteristics of the language in use among the cultivated Englishmen of the fifteenth century. Pecoek, though an opponent of the Lollards, showed a certain spirit of toleration, for which he received, towards the end of his life, the usual mediæval reward—persecution.

20. ANNALES CAMBRIÆ. Edited by the Rev. JOHN WILLIAMS AB ITHEL, M.A. 1860.

These annals, which are in Latin, commence in the year 447, and come down to the year 1288. The earlier portion appears to be taken from an Irish Chronicle, which was also used by Tigernach, and by the compiler of the Annals of Ulster. During its first century it contains scarcely anything relating to Britain, the earliest direct concurrence with English history is relative to the mission of Augustine. Its notices throughout though brief, are valuable. The annals were probably written at St. Davids, by Blegewryd, Archdeacon of Llandaff, the most learned man in his day in all Cymru.

21. THE WORKS OF GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. Vols. V. and VI. Edited by the Rev. JAMES F. DIMOCK, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. 1861-1868.

The first three volumes contain the historical works of Gerald du Barry, who lived in the reigns of Henry II., Richard I., and John, and attempted to re-establish the independence of Wales by restoring the see of St. Davids to its ancient primacy. His works are of a very miscellaneous nature, both in prose and verse, and are remarkable chiefly for the racy and original anecdotes which they contain relating to contemporaries. He is the only Welsh writer of any importance who has contributed so much to the mediæval literature of this country, or assumed, in consequence of his nationality, so free and independent a tone. His frequent travels in Italy, in France, in Ireland, and in Wales, gave him opportunities for observation which did not generally fall to the lot of mediæval writers in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, and of these observations Giraldus has made due use.

The Topographia Hibernica (in Vol. V.) is the result of Giraldus' two visits to Ireland. The first in the year 1183, the second in 1185-6, when he accompanied Prince John into that country. Curious as this treatise is, Mr. Dimock is of opinion that it ought not to be accepted as sober truthful history, for Giraldus himself states that truth was not his main object, and that he compiled the work for the purpose of sounding the praises of Henry the Second. Elsewhere, however, he declares that he had stated nothing in the Topographia of the truth of which he was not well assured, either by his own eyesight or by the testimony, with all diligence elicited, of the most trustworthy and authentic men in the country; that though he did not put just the same full faith in their reports as in what he had himself seen, yet, as they only related what they had themselves seen, he could not but believe such credible witnesses. A very interesting portion of this treatise is devoted to the animals of Ireland. It shows that he was a very accurate and acute observer, and his descriptions are given in a way that a scientific naturalist of the present day could hardly improve upon.

The Expugnatio Hibernica was written about the year 1188, and may be regarded rather as a great epic than a sober relation of facts occurring in his own days. No one can peruse it without coming to the conclusion that it is rather a poetical fiction than a prosaic truthful history.

Vol. VI. contains the Itinerarium Kambriæ et Descriptio Kambriæ.

22. LETTERS AND PAPERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE WARS OF THE ENGLISH IN FRANCE DURING THE REIGN OF HENRY THE SIXTH, KING OF ENGLAND. Vol. I., and Vol. II. (in Two Parts). Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham, and Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1861–1864.

The letters and papers contained in these volumes are derived chiefly from originals or contemporary copies extant in the Bibliothèque Impériale, and the Dépôt des Archives, in Paris. They illustrate the line of policy adopted by John Duke of Bedford and his successors during their government of Normandy, and such other provinces of France as had been acquired by Henry V. We may here trace, step by step, the gradual declension of the English power, until we are prepared to read of its final overthrow.

23. THE ANGLO-SAXON CHRONICLE, ACCORDING TO THE SEVERAL ORIGINAL AUTHORITIES. Vol. I., Original Texts. Vol. II., Translation. Edited and translated by BENJAMIN THORPE, Esq., Member of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Munich, and of the Society of Netherlandish Literature at Leyden. 1861.

This Chronicle, extending from the earliest history of Britain to the year 1154, is justly the boast of England; for no other nation can produce any history, written in its own vernacular, at all approaching it, either in antiquity, truthfulness, or extent, the historical books of the Bible alone excepted. There are at present six independent manuscripts of the Saxon Chronicle, ending in different years, and written in different parts of the country. In the present edition, the text of each manuscript is printed in columns on the same page, so that the student may see at a glance the various changes which occur in orthography, whether arising from locality or age.

24. LETTERS AND PAPERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE REIGNS OF RICHARD III. AND HENRY VII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by JAMES GAIRDNER, Esq. 1861–1863.

The Papers are derived from MSS. in the Public Record Office, the British Museum, and other repositories. The period to which they refer is unusually destitute of chronicles and other sources of historical information, so that the light obtained from these documents is of special importance. The principal contents of the volumes are some diplomatic Papers of Richard III.; correspondence between Henry VII. and Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain; documents relating to Edmund de la Pole, Earl of Suffolk; and a portion of the correspondence of James IV. of Scotland.

25. LETTERS OF BISHOP GROSSETESTE, illustrative of the Social Condition of his Time. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1861.

The Letters of Robert Grosseteste (131 in number) are here collected from various sources. They range in date from about 1210 to 1253, and relate to various matters connected not only with the political history of England during the reign of Henry III., but with its ecclesiastical condition. They refer especially to the diocese of Lincoln, of which Grosseteste was bishop. These Letters have not hitherto been collected, and a large portion of them is printed for the first time.

26. DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE OF MANUSCRIPTS RELATING TO THE HISTORY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND. Vol. I. (in Two Parts); Anterior to the Norman Invasion. Vol. II.; 1066-1200. By THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY, Esq., Deputy Keeper of the Public Records. 1862-1865.

The object of this work is to publish notices of all known sources of British history, both printed and unprinted, in one continued sequence. The materials, when historical (as distinguished from biographical), are arranged under the year in which the latest event is recorded in the chronicle or history, and not under the period in which its author, real or supposed, flourished. Biographies are enumerated under the year in which the person commemorated died, and not under the year in which the life was written. This arrangement has two advantages: the materials for any given period may be seen at a glance; and if the reader knows the time when an author wrote, and the number of years that had elapsed between the date of the events and the time the writer flourished, he will generally be enabled to form a fair estimate of the comparative value of the narrative itself. A brief analysis of each work has been added when deserving it, in which the original portions are distinguished from those which are mere compilations. When possible, the sources are indicated from which such compilations have been derived. A biographical sketch of the author of each piece has been added, and a brief notice has also been given of such British authors as have written on historical subjects.

27. ROYAL AND OTHER HISTORICAL LETTERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE REIGN OF HENRY III. From the Originals in the Public Record Office. Vol. I., 1216-1235. Vol. II., 1236-1272. Selected and edited by the Rev. W. W. SHIRLEY, D.D., Regius Professor in Ecclesiastical History, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. 1862-1866.

The letters contained in these volumes are derived chiefly from the ancient correspondence formerly preserved in the Tower of London, and now in the Public Record Office. They illustrate the political history of England during the growth of its liberties, and throw considerable light upon the personal history of Simon de Montfort. The affairs of France form the subject of many of these letters, more especially in regard to the province of Gascony. The entire collection consists of nearly 700 documents, the greater portion of which is printed for the first time.

28. CHRONICA MONASTERII S. ALBANI. — 1. THOMÆ WALSINGHAM HISTORIA ANGLICANA; Vol. I., 1272-1381; Vol. II., 1381-1422. 2. WILLELMI RISHANGER CHRONICA ET ANNALES, 1259-1307. 3. JOHANNIS DE TROKELowe ET HENRICI DE BLANEFORDE CHRONICA ET ANNALES, 1259-1296; 1307-1324; 1392-1406. 4. GESTA ABBATUM MONASTERII S. ALBANI, A THOMA WALSINGHAM, REGNANTE RICARDO SECUNDO, EJUSDEM ECCLESIE PRÆCENTORE, COMPILATA; Vol. I., 793-1290; Vol. II., 1290-1349. Edited by HENRY THOMAS RILEY, Esq., M.A., of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge; and of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1863-1867.

In the first two volumes is a history of England, from the death of Henry III. to the death of Henry V., written by Thomas Walsingham, precentor of St. Albans and prior of the Cell of Wymundham, belonging to that abbey. Walsingham's work is printed from MS. VII. in the Arundel Collection in the College of Arms, London, a manuscript of the fifteenth century, collated with MS. 13 E. IX. in the King's Library in the British Museum, and MS. VII. in the Parker Collection of Manuscripts at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

In the third volume is a Chronicle of English History, from 1259 to 1306, attributed to William Rishanger, monk of Saint Albans, who lived in the reign of Edward I., printed from the Cottonian Manuscript, Faustina B. IX. (of the fourteenth century) in the British Museum, collated with MS. 14 C. VII. (fols. 219-231) in the King's Library, British Museum, and the Cottonian Manuscript Claudius E. III., fols. 306-331: Also an account of transactions attending the award of the kingdom of Scotland to John Balliol by King Edward I., 1291-1292, from MS. Cotton. Claudius, D. VI., attributed to William Rishanger above mentioned, but on no sufficient ground: A short Chronicle of English History, from 1292 to 1300, by an unknown hand, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: A short Chronicle from 1297 to 1307, Willelmi Rishanger Gesta Edwardi Primi Regis Angliæ, from MS. 14 C. I. in the Royal Library, and MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI., with an addition of Annales Regum Angliæ, probably by the same hand: A fragment of a Chronicle of English History, 1299, 1300, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: A fragment of a Chronicle of English History, 1295 to 1300, from MS. Claudius D. VI.: and a fragment of a Chronicle of English History, 1285 to 1307, from MS. 14 C. I. in the Royal Library.

In the fourth volume is a Chronicle of English History, by an anonymous writer, 1259 to 1296, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: Also Annals of King Edward II., 1307 to 1323, by John de Trokelowe, a monk of St. Albans, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: A continuation of Trokelowe's Annals, 1323, 1324, by Henricus de Blaneforde, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: Also a full Chronicle of English History, by an anonymous writer of St. Albans, 1392 to 1406, from MS. VII. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge: and an account of the past benefactors of St. Albans, written in the early part of the fifteenth century, from MS. VI. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

In the fifth volume begins a history of the abbots of St. Albans, from 793 to the close of the fourteenth century, compiled by Thomas Walsingham, præcentor of St. Albans, from MS. Cotton. Claudius E. IV., in the British Museum. This is continued in the sixth volume.

29. CHRONICON ABBATIE EYESHAMENSIS, AUCTORIBUS DOMINICO PRIORE EYESHAMIE ET THOMA DE MARLEBERGE ABBATE, A FUNDATIONE AD ANNUM 1213, UNA CUM CONTINUATIONE AD ANNUM 1418. Edited by the Rev. W. D. MACRAY, M.A., Bodleian Library, Oxford. 1863.

The Chronicle of Evesham illustrates the history of that important monastery ~~from its foundation by Egwin, about 690, to the year 1418.~~ Its chief feature is an autobiography, which makes us acquainted with the inner daily life of a great abbey, such as but rarely has been recorded. Interspersed are many notices of general, personal, and local history which will be read with much interest. This work exists in a single MS., and is for the first time printed.

30. RICARDI DE CIRENCESTRIA SPECULUM HISTORIALE DE GESTIS REGUM ANGLIÆ. Vol. I., 447-871. Edited by JOHN E. B. MAYOR, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1863.

Of the compiler of this work, which is in four parts, very little is known. In the prologue he calls himself Richard, a monk of Westminster, and at the end of the first part, Richard of Cirencester, a monk of St. Peter's, Westminster. One volume only, containing the first three books, has been published, the remainder is in the press, and will shortly appear. There is a continuation of the work down to the year 1348, which in due time will also be printed.

31. YEAR BOOKS OF THE REIGN OF EDWARD THE FIRST. Years 20-21, 30-31, and 32-33. Edited and translated by ALFRED JOHN HORWOOD, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1863-1866.

The volumes known as the "Year Books" contain reports in Norman-French of cases argued and decided in the Courts of Common Law. They may be considered to a great extent as the "lex non scripta" of England, and have been held in the highest veneration by the ancient sages of the law, and were received by them as the repositories of the first recorded judgments and dicta of the great legal luminaries of past ages. They are also worthy of the attention of the general reader on account of the historical information and the notices of public and private persons which they contain, as well as the light which they throw on ancient manners and customs.

32. NARRATIVES OF THE EXPULSION OF THE ENGLISH FROM NORMANDY, 1449–1450.—Robertus Blondelli de Reductione Normanniæ: Le Recouvrement de Normendie, par Berry, Hérault du Roy: Conférences between the Ambassadors of France and England. Edited, from MSS. in the Imperial Library at Paris, by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham. 1863.

This volume contains the narrative of an eye-witness who details with considerable power and minuteness the circumstances which attended the final expulsion of the English from Normandy in the year 1450. The history commences with the infringement of the truce by the capture of Fougères, and ends with the battle of Formigny and the embarkation of the Duke of Somerset. The whole period embraced is less than two years.

33. HISTORIA ET CARTULARIUM MONASTERII S. PETRI GLOUCESTRÆ. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. H. HART, Esq., F.S.A., Membre correspondant de la Société des Antiquaires de Normandie. 1863–1867.

This work consists of two parts, the History and the Cartulary of the Monastery of St. Peter, Gloucester.

The history furnishes an account of the monastery from its foundation, in the year 681, to the early part of the reign of Richard II., together with a calendar of donations and benefactions. It treats principally of the affairs of the monastery, but occasionally matters of general history are introduced. Its authorship has generally been assigned to Walter Froucester, the twentieth abbot, but without any foundation.

34. ALEXANDRI NECKAM DE NATURIS RERUM LIBRI DUO ; with NECKAM'S POEM, DE LAUDIBUS DIVINÆ SAPIENTIÆ. Edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A. 1863.

Neckam was a man who devoted himself to science, such as it was in the twelfth century.

In the "De Naturis Rerum" are to be found what may be called the rudiments of many sciences mixed up with much error and ignorance. Neckam was not thought infallible, even by his contemporaries, for Roger Bacon remarks of him, "this Alexander in many things wrote what was true and useful; but he neither can nor ought by just title to be reckoned among authorities."

Neckam, however, had sufficient independence of thought to differ from some of the schoolmen who in his time considered themselves the only judges of literature. He had his own views in morals, and in giving us a glimpse of them, as well as of his other opinions, he throws much light upon the manners, customs, and general tone of thought prevalent in the twelfth century.

The poem entitled "De Laudibus Divinæ Sapientiæ" appears to be a metrical paraphrase or abridgment of the "De Naturis Rerum." It is written in the elegiac metre; and though there are in it many lines which violate classical rules, it is, as a whole, above the ordinary standard of mediæval Latin.

35. LEECHDOMS, WORTCUNNING, AND STARCRAFT OF EARLY ENGLAND ; being a Collection of Documents illustrating the History of Science in this Country before the Norman Conquest. Vols. I., II., and III. Collected and edited by the Rev. T. OSWALD COCKAYNE, M.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1864–1866.

This work illustrates not only the history of science, but the history of superstition. In addition to the information bearing directly upon the medical skill and medical faith of the times, there are many passages which incidentally throw light upon the general mode of life and ordinary diet. The volumes are interesting not only in their scientific, but also in their social aspect. The manuscripts from which they have been printed are valuable to the Anglo-Saxon scholar for the illustrations they afford of Anglo-Saxon orthography.

36. ANNALES MONASTICI. Vol. I. :—Annales de Margan, 1066–1232 ; Annales de Theokesberia, 1066–1263 ; Annales de Burton, 1004–1263. Vol. II. :—Annales Monasterii de Wintonia, 519–1277 ; Annales Monasterii de Waverleia, 1–1291. Vol. III. :—Annales Prioratus de Dunstaplia, 1–1297 ; Annales Monasterii de Bermundeseia, 1042–1432. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, and Registry of the University, Cambridge. 1864–1866.

The present collection of Monastic Annals embraces all the more important chronicles compiled in the different religious houses in England during the thirteenth century. These distinct works are seven in number, and the extreme period which they embrace ranges from the year 1 to 1432, although they refer more especially to the reigns of John, Henry III., and Edward I. Some of these narratives have already appeared in print, but others are printed for the first time.

37. MAGNA VITA S. HUGONIS EPISCOPI LINCOLNIENSIS. From Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, and the Imperial Library, Paris. Edited by the Rev. JAMES F. DIMOCK, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. 1864.

This work contains a number of very curious and interesting incidents, and, being the work of a contemporary, is very valuable, not only as a truthful biography of a celebrated ecclesiastic, but as the work of a man who, from personal knowledge, gives notices of passing events, as well as of individuals who were then taking active part in public affairs.

The author, in all probability, was Adam Abbot of Evesham. He was ~~domestic chaplain and private confessor~~ of Bishop Hugh, and in these capacities he was admitted to the closest intimacy. Bishop Hugh was Prior of Witham for 11 years before he became Bishop of Lincoln. His consecration took place on the 21st September 1186 ; he died on the 16th of November 1200 ; and was canonized in 1220.

38. CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF THE REIGN OF RICHARD THE FIRST. Vol. I. :—ITINERARIUM PEREGRINORUM ET GESTA REGIS RICARDI. Vol. II. :—EPISTOLÆ CANTUARIENSES ; the Letters of the Prior and Convent of Christ Church, Canterbury ; 1187 to 1199. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Vicar of Navestock, Essex, and Lambeth Librarian. 1864–1865.

The authorship of the Chronicle in Vol. I., hitherto ascribed to Geoffrey Vinesauf, is now more correctly ascribed to Richard, Canon of the Holy Trinity of London. The narrative extends from 1187 to 1199 ; but its chief interest consists in the minute and authentic narrative which it furnishes of the exploits of Richard I., from his departure from England in December 1189 to his death in 1199. The author states in his prologue that he was an eye-witness of much that he records ; and various incidental circumstances which occur in the course of the narrative confirm this assertion.

The Letters in Vol. II., written between 1187 and 1199, are of value as furnishing authentic materials for the history of the ecclesiastical condition of England during the reign of Richard I. They had their origin in a dispute which arose from the attempts of Baldwin and Hubert, archbishops of Canterbury, to found a college of secular canons, a project which gave great umbrage to the monks of Canterbury, who saw in it a design to supplant them in their function of metropolitan chapter. These letters are printed, for the first time, from a MS. belonging to the archiepiscopal library at Lambeth.

39. RECUEIL DES CRONIKES ET ANCHIENNES ISTORIES DE LA GRANT BRETAGNE A PRESENT NOMME ENGLETERRE, par JEHAN DE WAURIN. Vol. I., Albina to 688. Vol. II., 1399-1422. Edited by WILLIAM HARDY, Esq., F.S.A. 1864-1868.

40. A COLLECTION OF THE CHRONICLES AND ANCIENT HISTORIES OF GREAT BRITAIN, NOW CALLED ENGLAND, by JOHN DE WAURIN. Albina to 688. (Translation of the preceding Vol. I.) Edited and translated by WILLIAM HARDY, Esq., F.S.A. 1864.

This curious chronicle extends from the fabulous period of history down to the return of Edward IV. to England in the year 1471, after the second deposition of Henry VI. The manuscript from which the text of the work is taken is preserved in the Imperial Library at Paris, and is believed to be the only complete and nearly contemporary copy in existence. The work, as originally bound, was comprised in six volumes, since rebound in morocco in 12 volumes, folio maximo, vellum, and is illustrated with exquisite miniatures, vignettes, and initial letters. It was written towards the end of the fifteenth century, having been expressly executed for Louis de Bruges, Seigneur de la Gruuthuyse and Earl of Winchester, from whose cabinet it passed into the library of Louis XII. at Blois.

41. POLYCHRONICON RANULPHI HIGDEN, with Trevisa's Translation. Vol. I. Edited by CHURCHILL BABINGTON, B.D., Senior Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1865.

This is one of the many mediæval chronicles which assume the character of a history of the world. It begins with the creation and is brought down to the author's own time, the reign of Edward III. Prefixed to the historical portion of the work is a chapter devoted to geography, in which is given a description of every known land.

To say that the Polychronicon was written in the fourteenth century is to say that it is not free from inaccuracies. It has, however, a value apart from its intrinsic merits. It enables us to form a very fair estimate of the knowledge of history and geography which well-informed readers of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries possessed, for it was then the standard work on general history.

The two English translations, which are printed with the original Latin, afford interesting illustrations of the gradual change of our language, for one was made in the fourteenth century, the other in the fifteenth. The differences between Trevisa's version and that of the unknown writer are often considerable.

42. LE LIVRE DE REIS DE BRITTANIE E LE LIVRE DE REIS DE ENGLETERE. Edited by JOHN GLOVER, M.A., Vicar of Brading, Isle of Wight, formerly Librarian of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1865.

These two treatises, though they cannot rank as independent narratives, are nevertheless valuable as careful abstracts of previous historians, especially "Le Livre de Reis de Engleterre." Some various readings are given which are interesting to the philologist as instances of semi-Saxonized French.

It is supposed that Peter of Ickham must have been the author, but no certain conclusion on that point has been arrived at.

43. CHRONICA MONASTERII DE MELSA, AB ANNO 1150 USQUE AD ANNUM 1406. Vols. I. and II. Edited by EDWARD AUGUSTUS BOND, Esq., Assistant Keeper of the Manuscripts, and Egerton Librarian, British Museum. 1866-1867.

The Abbey of Meaux was a Cistercian house, and the work of its abbot is both curious and valuable. It is a faithful and often minute record of the establishment of a religious community, of its progress in forming an ample revenue, of its struggles to maintain its acquisitions, and of its relations to the governing institutions of the country. In addition to the private affairs of the monastery, some light is thrown upon the public events of the time, which are however kept distinct, and appear at the end of the history of each abbot's administration. The text has been printed from what is said to be the autograph of the original compiler, Thomas de Burton, the nineteenth abbot.

44. MATTHÆI PARISIENSIS HISTORIA ANGLORUM, SIVE, UT VULGO DICITUR, HISTORIA MINOR. Vols. I. and II. 1067-1245. Edited by Sir FREDERIC MADDEN, K.H., Keeper of the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum. 1866.

The exact date at which this work was written is, according to the chronicler, 1250. The history is of considerable value as an illustration of the period during which the author lived, and contains a good summary of the events which followed the Conquest. This minor chronicle is, however, based on another work (also written by Matthew Paris), which gives fuller details, and which has been called the 'Historia Major.' The chronicle here published, nevertheless, gives some information which is not to be found in the greater history.

45. LIBER MONASTERII DE HYDA: A CHRONICLE AND CHARTULARY OF HYDE ABBEY, WINCHESTER, 455-1023. Edited, from a Manuscript in the Library of the Earl of Macclesfield, by EDWARD EDWARDS, Esq. 1866.

The "Book of Hyde" is a compilation from much earlier sources, which are usually indicated with considerable care and precision. In many cases, however, the Hyde chronicler appears to correct, to qualify, or to amplify—either from tradition or from sources of information not now discoverable—the statements which, in substance, he adopts. He also mentions, and frequently quotes from, writers whose works are either entirely lost or at present known only by fragments.

There is to be found, in the "Book of Hyde," much information relating to the reign of King Alfred which is not known to exist elsewhere. The volume contains some curious specimens of Anglo-Saxon and Mediæval English.

46. CHRONICON SCOTORUM: A CHRONICLE OF IRISH AFFAIRS, from the EARLIEST TIMES to 1135; with a SUPPLEMENT, containing the Events from 1141 to 1150. Edited, with a Translation, by WILLIAM MAUNSELL HENNESSY, Esq., M.R.I.A. 1866.

There is, in this volume, a legendary account of the peopling of Ireland and of the adventures which befell the various heroes who are said to have been connected with Irish history. The details are, however, very meagre both for this period and for the time when history becomes more authentic. The plan adopted in the chronicle gives the appearance of an accuracy to which the earlier portions of the work cannot have any claim. The succession of events is marked, year by year, from A.M. 1599 to A.D. 1150. The principal events narrated in the later portion of the work are the invasions of foreigners and the wars of the Irish among themselves. The text has been printed from a MS. preserved in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, written partly in Latin, partly in Irish.

47. THE CHRONICLE OF PIERRE DE LANGTOFT, IN FRENCH VERSE, FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD TO THE DEATH OF EDWARD I. Vols. I. and II. Edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A. 1866-1868.

It is probable that Pierre de Langtoft was a canon of Bridlington, in Yorkshire, and that he lived in the reign of Edward I., and during a portion of the reign of Edward II. This chronicle is divided into three parts; in the first is an abridgment of Geoffrey of Monmouth's "Historia Britonum," in the second, a history of the Anglo-Saxon and Norman kings, down to the death of Henry III., and in the third a history of the reign of Edward I. The principal object of the work was apparently to show the justice of Edward's Scottish wars.

The language in which the chronicle is written is singularly corrupt, and is a curious specimen of the French of Yorkshire.

48. THE WAR OF THE GAEDHIL WITH THE GAILL, OR, THE INVASIONS OF IRELAND BY THE DANES AND OTHER NORSEMEN. Edited, with a Translation, by JAMES HENTHORN TODD, D.D., Senior Fellow of Trinity College, and Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University, Dublin. 1867.

The work in its present form, in the editor's opinion, is a comparatively modern version of an undoubtedly ancient original. That it was compiled from contemporary materials has been proved by curious incidental evidence. It is stated in the account given of the battle of Clontarf that the full tide in Dublin Bay on the day of the battle (23 April, 1014) coincided with sunrise; and that the returning tide in the evening aided considerably in the defeat of the Danes. The fact has been verified by astronomical calculations, and the inference is that the author of the chronicle, if not himself an eye-witness, must have derived his information from those who were eye-witnesses.

The contents of the work are sufficiently described in its title. The story is told after the manner of the Scandinavian Sagas, with poems and fragments of poems introduced into the prose narrative.

49. GESTA REGIS HENRICI SECUNDI BENEDICTI ABBATIS. THE CHRONICLE OF THE REIGNS OF HENRY II. AND RICHARD I., 1169-1192; known under the name of BENEDICT OF PETERBOROUGH. Vols. I. and II. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, Oxford, and Lambeth Librarian. 1867.

This is a chronicle of the reigns of Henry II. and Richard I., known commonly under the name of Benedict of Peterborough, and is one of the best existing specimens of a class of historical compositions of the first importance to the genuine student.

50. MUNIMENTA ACADEMICA, OR, DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATIVE OF ACADEMICAL LIFE AND STUDIES AT OXFORD (in Two Parts). Edited by the Rev. HENRY ANSTEY, M.A., Vicar of St. Wendron, Cornwall, and lately Vice-Principal of St. Mary Hall, Oxford. 1868.

The purpose of this work is to supply materials for a History of Academical Life and Studies in the University of Oxford during the 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries.

51. CHRONICA MAGISTRI ROGERI DE HOVEDENE. Vol. I. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, and Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. 1868.

This work has long been justly celebrated, but not thoroughly understood until Mr Stubbs' edition. The earlier portion, extending from 732 to 1148, appears to be a copy of a compilation made in Northumbria about 1161, to which Hoveden added little. From 1148 to 1169—a very valuable portion of this work—the matter is derived from another source, to which Hoveden appears to have supplied little, and not always judiciously.

From 1170 to 1192 is the portion of the work which corresponds with the Chronicle known under the name of Benedict of Peterborough (see No. 49); but it is not a copy, being sometimes an abridgment, at others a paraphrase of it; occasionally the two works entirely agree, showing that both writers had access to the same materials, but dealt with them differently. From 1192 to 1201 may be said to be wholly Hoveden's work; it is extremely valuable, and an authority of the first importance.

WORKS PUBLISHED IN PHOTOZINCOGRAPHY.

DOMESDAY BOOK, OF THE GREAT SURVEY OF ENGLAND OF WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, 1086 ; fac-simile of the part relating to each county, separately (with a few exceptions of double counties). Photozincographed, by Her Majesty's Command, at the Ordnance Survey Office, Southampton, Colonel SIR HENRY JAMES, R.E., F.R.S., &c., Director. 35 Parts, imperial quarto and demy quarto (1861-1863) boards. Price 4s. 6d. to 17. 1s. each part, according to size ; or, bound in 2 vols., 18l.

This important and unique survey of the greater portion of England* is the oldest and most valuable record in the national archives. It was commenced about the year 1084 and finished in 1086. Its compilation was determined upon at Gloucester by William the Conqueror, in council, in order that he might know what was due to him, in the way of tax, from his subjects, and that each at the same time might know what he had to pay. It was compiled as much for their protection as for the benefit of the sovereign. The nobility and people had been grievously distressed at the time by the king bringing over large numbers of French and Bretons, and quartering them on his subjects, "each according to the measure of his land," for the purpose of resisting the invasion of Canut, King of Denmark, which was apprehended. The commissioners appointed to make the survey were to inquire the name of each place ; who held it in the time of King Edward the Confessor ; the present possessor ; how many hides were in the manor ; how many ploughs were in demesne ; how many homagers ; how many villeins ; how many cottars ; how many serving men ; how many free tenants ; how many tenants in soccage ; how much wood, meadow, and pasture ; the number of mills and fish-ponds ; what had been added or taken away from the place ; what was the gross value in the time of Edward the Confessor ; the present value ; and how much each free-man or soc-man had, and whether any advance could be made in the value. Thus could be ascertained who held the estate in the time of King Edward ; who then held it ; its value in the time of the late king ; and its value as it stood at the formation of the survey. So minute was the survey, that the writer of the contemporary portion of the Saxon Chronicle records, with some asperity—"So very narrowly he caused it to be traced out, that there was not a single hide, nor one virgate of land, nor even, it is shame to tell, though it seemed to him no shame to do, an ox, nor a cow, nor a swine was left, that was not set down."

Domesday Survey is in two parts or volumes. The first, in folio, contains the counties of Bedford, Berks, Bucks, Cambridge, Chester and Lancaster, Cornwall, Derby, Devon, Dorset, Gloucester, Hants, Hereford, Herts, Huntingdon, Kent, Leicester and Rutland, Lincoln, Middlesex, Northampton, Nottingham, Oxford, Salop, Somerset, Stafford, Surrey, Sussex, Warwick, Wilts, Worcester, and York. The second volume, in quarto, contains the counties of Essex, Norfolk, and Suffolk.

Domesday Book was printed verbatim et literatim during the last century, in consequence of an address of the House of Lords to King George III. in 1767. It was not, however, commenced until 1773, and was completed early in 1783. In 1860, Her Majesty's Government, with the concurrence of the Master of the Rolls, determined to apply the art of photozincography to the production of a fac-simile of Domesday Book, under the superintendence of Colonel Sir Henry James, R.E., director of the Ordnance Survey, Southampton. The fac-simile was completed in 1863.

Part I., with translations and notes (William the Conqueror to Henry VII.), 1865.

Part III. (Mary and Elizabeth), 1867.

The first Part extends from William the Conqueror to Henry VII., and contains autographs of the kings of England, as well as of many other illustrious personages famous in history, and some interesting charters, letters patent, and state papers. The second Part, for the reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI., consists principally of holograph letters and autographs of kings, princes, statesmen, and other persons of great historical interest, who lived during those reigns. The third Part contains similar documents for the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth, including a signed bill of Lady Jane Grey.
