Submarine Navigation .- A late French paper states that the minister of Marine has inspected a machine invented and patented by M. des Andol ves, by which he thinks he has obviated the difficulties heretofore encountered in attempts at submarine navigation. The imprisoned air is made to assist in moving the boat both on the surface and beneath the water, as well as to supply an atmosphere in which the persons employed can breathe. It is greatly compressed, so that a cubic foot contains 60 feet: and small quantities of it are allowed to escape through a valve. When necessary, the boat may be raised 6 plastres 50 cents. Parties de chaque to the surface for a fresh supply. A public experiment was shortly to be made, to test the performance of the machine.
