A WORD AT THE START.

For several years, often without the least provocation, I have been in the habit of reciting my army poems and singing my army songs whenever I could corral a squad of my old comrades yet possessing vitality enough to survive the affliction. So far I have escaped with my life, and with but few bruises, for which I am truly grateful to the kind providence which has stood by me.

Often after reciting some of the crude offspring of my somewhat erratic brain, I have been besieged by comrades who desired to secure copies of them, and on innumerable occasions I have been urged to group them together in a little book, so that all might secure them. Yielding to these many importunities, I have selected a few that I regard as the best of my soldier poems and songs, and I now send them forth under the title "Camp Fire Sparks."

With the earnest wish that their perusal may in a small measure light the path of many an old veteran who is nearing the picket lines of the eternal camp above, I am, comrades,

Yours in F. C. and L.

J. W. CRAWFORD,

"CAPTAIN JACK."

CAMP FIRE SPARKS.

OLD ABNER BROWN.

(Dedicated to the Gallant Volunteer Soldiers of Indiana.)

Not far from a quiet rural town,
In Indiana, dwelt Abner Brown.
Full six foot three in his home-knit socks,
He could strike a blow that would fell an ox.
His time-touched hair stood erect, and seemed,
As an iron-gray crown over eyes which gleamed,
When fired with rage, or alight with mirth,
As the coals in the fireplace over his hearth.

Two idols only old Abner had,
A good old wife and an honest lad,
A sturdy youth, who, the neighbors said,
From his cowhide boots to his shaggy head,
In voice and action and restless fire,
Was an artist's proof of his aged sire.
And the old man's love was lavished upon
The faithful mother and rugged son.

Their home was a house of rough-hewn logs,
They kept their horses and cows and hogs,
And toiled on the farm day after day,
In a sort of automatic way.
Till they grew to care but a trifle what Transpired away from that rural spot,

Yet read they carefully o'er and o'er
The news which the County papers bore.

Old Abner boasted of fighting stock,
And to patient listeners long would talk,
Of his father's deeds in the many frays
Which tinctured the old Colonial days,
And then, as a sequel, would tell how he,
Imbued with his old sire's loyalty,
On many a bloody field had fought,
'Neath Mexico's sun with Taylor and Scott.

One day when the weekly press-damp sheet,
Was thrown from the stage at old Abner's feet,
The driver cried: "There is Hell to pay!
Old Abe wants volunteers right away!"
He grasped the paper with eager hand,
And paled as its pages his keen eyes scanned,
For the angry bellow of Sumpter's gun,
Had told to the world that the war was on.

He set his teeth as in lock of death,
And curses rode on his heated breath,
For the hands of traitors had dared to fire
On the flag 'neath which had battled his sire.
His boy, just verging on manhood's dawn,
With the old man's valor and nerve and brawn,
In open-lipped wonder stood and heard
The startling dispatches word for word.

"May the God of Heaven," the old man cried,
"In His power sweep the threatened storm aside,
And unnerve the arms that would dare assail
The flag of our country with leaden hail!
May the fury of heaven envelope those,
Who have from their loyalty turned to foes—

Who have leveled with traitorous hands the gun
At the flag of my father and Washington.

"I followed Taylor that bloody day,
When our flag was planted at Monterey,
And held my place in the fierce attack,
Which humbled our foes at Chapultepec,
And now when my country calls once more,
For help for the flag our fathers bore,
My blood runs riot in every vein,
And I'll bare my breast to the storm again!"

With pallid lips his old wife replied:
"Nay, Abner, you must not leave my side.
The flash in the eyes of our brave boy there,
The tint of the coming battles' glare,
Tells all too plainly that he will go,
And meet on the field our country's foe.
Our Zack will bring not the coward's shame
On yours and your father's war-honored name.

"But one can I spare" said the loyal wife,
"For I'm drawing near to the eve of life,
And one of my loves must stay at my side,
Till I feel the chill of death's rolling tide.
Zack, my brave boy, since our country's birth,
The Browns in battle have proved their worth,
And the day now dawns when that loyal name
Demands from you a new crown of fame."

The youth's cheeks reddened with patriot fire,
As he knelt at the feet of his gray-haired sire.
His life to his country pledged he there,
For the life of the Union he'd do and dare.
Warm was the blessing the old man gave,
Warm was the kiss from the mother brave,

And sleep came not to their eyes that night,
For Zack would start at the morning light.

Drawn up at the depot the volunteers,
'Mid goodbyes and blessings, and whispered fears,
Awaited the train which should bear them down,
To the terrible shadow of war's dark frown.
There were sobs and wailings, and tearful prayers,
As the stirring drums beat the martial airs,
And the founts of grief to their depths were stirred
When the roar of the coming train was heard.

Old Abner stood like a monarch grand,
And took his son by the toil-scarred hand:
"My son do yer duty whar'ever you go,
Keep yer honest face ever toward the foe.
Guard well the honor of that good name,
Which yer sire and yer grandsire clothed with fame.
Goodbye, my loyal, beloved son—
Write an' let's know how yer comin' on."

Fiercer and fiercer the conflict raged,
And Abner chafed like a lion caged,
And murmured loud at the ties which bound
Him far away from the battle ground.
The fires of valor within his breast,
Caused his heart to throb with a wild unrest,
As the parson read to the eager groups,
The deeds of the Indiana troops.

Heavy as lead seemed his great hand when
O'er the sheet he would guide the old quill pen,
Tracing the news of the home to Zack,
Of the corn in tassel, the wheat in stack
How his mother feebler and feebler grew,

How the news of their battles like wildfire flew,
And he'd close; "Write quick as you kin, my son,
An' let us know how yer comin' on."

O'er a new-made grave stood old Abner Brown,
At the fresh-laid sod gazing sadly down.
His face was drawn with the cords of pain,
As he said in a low and faltering strain:
"Goodbye, old wife—you are safe at rest,
Your loyal soul is among the blest;
While here in repose you peacefully lie,
I go to the battle, Goodbye, Goodbye."

Young Brown on guard near the sleeping camp,
Heard off in the distance a measured tramp,
And through the shadows a form drew nigh,
Like a giant outlined against the sky.
"Halt! Who comes there!" With a movement quick,
His musket hammer was heard "Click-Click!"
When a voice came forth from the hazy dawn,
"Hullo thar, Zack, how you comin' on?"

Together amid the hot battle-fire,
Shoulder to shoulder fought son and sire,
And the records in yon State House to-day,
Recount their gallantry in the fray.
And right in the cauldron of fiery hell
A fragment hurled from exploding shell,
With the shriek of a demon struck young Brown's head,
And he sank 'mid the dying and the dead.

Sank as the Southron hosts drew near,
With the rebel yell and the victor's cheer,
And the ranks of the Union were driven back,
And Abner was swept from the form of Zack.

Not long did the Hoosier boys give way,
To the charging foe on that dreadful day,
But the tide of battle they backward tossed,
And quickly regained the ground they'd lost.

When the day was won and the foe crushed back,
Old Abner sought o'er the field for Zack,
Forms turned he over with trembling hand,
And death-paled features he eager scanned.
A thousand faces his torch revealed,
As he sought through the night on that bloody field,
But the one which he feared might meet his gaze,
Was missing from out of that pallid maze.

Through the years of the war old Abner fought,
And great the slaughter his strong arm wrought;
And God in mercy hid from his ken,
The horrors of Belle Isle's prison pen,
Hid from his ken his demented son,
A pale, wan skeleton, living on,
When all of the world was dead unto
The brain which the shell-wound overthrew.

For years and years on his search intent,
To our great reunions old Abner went,
Seeking the son whom the cruel fates
Had buried beneath an asylum's gates.
In unbelief he would shake his head,
When comrades assured him his boy was dead,
And oft from his breast was the query drawn:
"I wonder how Zack is a comin' on."

Had he known what surgical skill had wrought,
Had he known how oft to the old home spot,

The home he'd abandoned long years before,
His Zack, with heart all heavy and sore,
Had sought for his sire by a hope-spark led,
Had been told, oh, so often, he must be dead,
The happy reunion for which he prayed,
Would not for the long years have been delayed.

One year ago when the veteran throng,
With joy and laughter and story and song,
In response to the annual bugle call,
Were massed at the nation's Capital,
A bent old soldier with snow-white hair,
His face all seamed with the lines of care,
Went tottering up through the busy street,
Half lifting half dragging his weary feet.

Eager the look on the wearied face,
As onward he moved with unsteady pace,
His palsied head keeping time to the beat,
Of the rattling drums in the blue-thronged street.
Eager the glances the old eyes threw
Into the faces of boys in blue,
Who hither and thither moved restlessly,
Like the murmuring waves of a rolling sea.

The spark of hope in his breast sank low,
Till he scarce could feel its encouraging glow,
As he noted each passing face was not
The face of the lost one for whom he sought.
Yet onward and onward and onward he went,
Till he stood at the door of a wide-spread tent,
Where the hours of the evening were sped along,
With speech and story and war-time song.

A voice from the song-group caught his ear,

And with expectation near drowned with fear,
He pushed his way through the merry throng,
To the fountain head of the stirring song.
With wild glad hope did his breast expand,
As, shading his eyes with his palsied hand,
He gazed on the comrades who sang in glee,
Of the days when Sherman marched to the sea.

His face grew pale as the face of death,
And faster and faster came his breath,
As the face of a brawny boy in blue,
Imprinted its lines on his aged view.
Then teardrops coursed from his dimming eyes,
As he tottered forward in glad surprise,
And cried through a smile bright as heaven's dawn,
"Hello! thar, Zack! how you comin' on!"

“WEEDS OF THE ARMY.”

Some of the papers tell us that the boys of the G. A. R.
Never smelt smoke in battle, nor went to the front in war—
They brazenly tell us our roster bears only the names of those

Who paused at the roar of conflict and northward pointed their toes.

They say that the true, brave soldiers have never entered our ranks,

That we never were known to muster but a lot of political cranks—

As one of the papers put it, we are but the weeds of the crop—

But loafers and shirks and cowards, who never heard muskets pop.

Who are these traitorous writers who are casting their venomous slime

O'er men who gave all to their country at that trying, terrible time?

They are the cringing cowards who never dared go to the front,

And stand with our fearless soldiers and help bear the battle's brunt.

They clung to the skirts of women, and soon as our backs were turned,

Our flag, our cause and our country the cowardly miscreants spurned.

Go seek them wherever they loiter, from the gulf to the northern lakes,
And you'll find them but treacherous, venomous, hideous copperhead snakes.

Let us pause on a shaded corner and see a procession pass
At a great Grand Army reunion, when the veterans form in mass,
Just note the dismembered bodies, the crutches and canes and scars,
That mutely tell us the story of the bloodiest of wars.
Just gaze on the flags they are bearing, all riddled with shot and shell,
The flags they carried undaunted right into the gateway of hell—
See the bodies bent and disabled, made so in the battles'
fierce blast;
Are these the weeds of the army at whom these insults are cast?

Brave Garfield, our honored martyr, wore the badge of the boys in blue.
And Hancock, the mighty soldier, was a comrade tried and true,
And Logan, our own loved Logan, undaunted in peace and war,
Was proud to be called a member in the ranks of the G. A. R.
And Grant, the intrepid chieftain, who was honored in every land,
Stood in the ranks of veterans; a comrade noble and grand,
And Sherman, our "Uncle Billy," God bless his old grizzled head,
Rejoiced in being a comrade of the boys he so valiantly led.

Go search o'er the peopled country for the heroes who fought in the war,
And you'll find on each notable bosom the eagle and flag and star—
'Tis worn as a badge of honor o'er hearts that were loyal and true,
And is borne by the greatest soldiers who ever the bright sword drew.
Glance over the mighty roster, and pause at each honored
name,
And reflect for a passing moment o'er each hero's deathless fame,
Then answer me this one question, if you find it is in your power:
If these are the weeds of the army, in God's name where is the flower?

THAR' WAS JIM.

Wildest boy in all the village,
Up to every wicked lark,
Happy at a chance to pillage
Melon patches in the dark.
Seemed a 'tarnal mischief breeder,
Fur in every wicked whim,
Put your hand upon the leader,
Thar' was Jim.

He war eighteen when the summons
Come fur Union volunteers,
An' the fife's an' the drummin's
An' the patriotic cheers,
Made us with excitement dance, sir,
Even old men, staid an' prim,
An' among the fust to answer,
Thar' was Jim.

One day when Gin'ral wanted
Volunteers to charge a place
Whar' the rebel banners flaunted
Imperdently in our face,
Seemed as though the cannons' bellers
Had no skeerishness fur him,
Fur among the foremost fellers,
Thar' was Jim.

How we cheered 'em at the startin'
On that fearful charge they made,
Fur it seemed that death was sartin
In that fiery ambuscade.
Once the smoke riz up a showin'
Them as up the hill they clim,
An' ahead, an' still a goin',
Thar' was Jim.

Git thar'? Wal, yer jest a screamin',
Nothin' could have stopped them men—
Each one seemed a howlin' demon
Chargin' on a fiery pen.
Purty tough w'en next I found him,
Fur with face all black an' grim,
Dead, with dead men all around him,
Thar' was Jim.

Friend o' mine? I reckon, sorter—
Met him fust one winter night—
Lord! but wa'n't that storm a snorter
W'en I went fur Doctor White!
W'en I heerd my wife a pleadin'
Me to come an' look at him,
Lyn' in her arms a feedin',
Thar' was Jim.

A HAPPY HIT.

Everybody shuck their heads,
In a doobious sort o' way ;
Talked about folks makin' beds,
Inter which they'd have to lay,
All because young Marcus Pike
Sort of sidled up to me,
An' because I acted like
I war' summat fond o' he.

Sister Marthy raved an' tore,
Said I would disgrace our name,
Brother Wiiliam ripped an' swore,
Father acted fur from tame.
Mother didn't seem to keer,
Fur she acted quiet like,
Jes' as if she had no fear
That I'd marry Marcus Pike.

Marthy had a strappin' beau
Clerkin' in Si Allen' store,
Six foot tall, an' seemed to know
Everything; the clothes he wore
War' the best Si Allen kep'
In his place, an' Marthy thought
That his milingtary step
Marked the hero to a dot.

Marthy war' the oldest, an'
Tol' me I had much to learn,
An' I'd better hol' my han'
Till I got a beau like her'n.
But their oppersition jest
Seemed to make me like him more.
An' I done my level best,
His affection to secure.

When the bloody war bruk out,
Mark jes' couldn't stay to hum,
An' I heerd 'im whoop an' shout,
Follerin' the fife an' drum.
When he come to say goodbye,
I kep' vowin' through my tears,
I'd have none but him ef I
Had to wait a million years.

Marthy's feller said he guessed
War 'd not agree with him—
That the fire 'at moved the rest,
War' a sort o' sudden whim.
So right in the store he stuck,
Spite o' w'at the neighbors said,
That he didn't have the pluck
Fur to face the rebel lead.

Well, all through them bloody years,
I war' true as death to Mark,
An' I kalkilate my tears
Would 'a floated Noah's ark.
Marthy's feller married her.
An' she allus kep' a sayin'

I war' jest a donkey fur
All my waitin' and my prayin'.

But at last the fight war' o'er.
An' amid the people's cheers,
An' a anvil's deaf'nin' roar,
An' us wimmen's joyful tears,
Back come Marcus an' the rest,
An', not carin' who war' seein',
I jes' hugged 'im to my breast,
Prouder than a royal queen.

How the years have seemed to fly,
Since I wed my soger boy,
He seems proud o' me, an' I
Seem to swim in ceaseless joy,
An' I reckon Marthy sees
That I made a happy hit—
Mark is jestis o' the peace—
Her ol' man's aclerkin' yit.

THE VETERAN AND HIS GRANDSON.

Hold on! Hold on! My goodness, you take my breath, my son,

A firin' questions at me, like shots from a Gatlin' gun—
Why do I wear this eagle an' flag an' brazen star,
An' why do my old eyes glisten when somebody mentions
war?

And why do I call men "comrade," an' why do my eyes grow bright,

When you hear me tell your grandma I'm goin' to post tonight?

Come here, you inquisitive rascal, an' set on your granddad's knee.

An' I'll try an' answer the broadsides you've been a-firin' at me.

Away back thar' in the sixties, and long afore you were born,

The news come a-flashin' to us, one bright an' sunny morn,
That some of our Southern brothers, a-thinkin' no doubt
'twar right,

Had trailed their guns on our banner, an' opened a nasty fight.

The great big guns war a-boomin', an' the shot flyin' thick an' fast,

An' troops all over the southland war rapidly bein' massed,
An' a thrill went through the nation, a fear that our glorious land

Might be split an' divided an' ruined by mistaken brothers' hand.

Lord! but wa'n't there excitement, an' didn't the boys' eyes flash?

An' didn't we curse our brothers fur bein' so foolish an'
rash?

An' didn't we raise the neighbors with loud an' continued cheers,

When Abe sent out a dockyment a-callin' fur volunteers?

An, didn't we flock to the colors when the drums began to beat,

An' didn't we march with proud step along this village street?

An' didn't the people cheer us when we got aboard the cars,
With the flag a-wavin' o'er us, and went away to the wars?

I'll never forgit your grandma as she stood outside o' the train,

Her face as white as a snowdrift, her tears a-fallin' like rain—
She stood thar' quiet an' deathlike, 'mid all o' the rush an'
noise,

For the war war a-takin' from her her husband an' three brave boys—

Bill, Charley, and little Tommy—just turned eighteen, but as true

An' gallant a little soldier as ever wore the blue.

It seemed almost like murder for to tear her poor heart so,
But your granddad couldn't stay, baby, an' the boys war determined to go.

The evenin' afore we started she called the boys to her side,
An' told 'em as how they war always their mother's joy an'
pride,

An' though her soul was in torture, an' her poor heart bleedin' an' sore,
An' though she needed her darlings, their country needed
'em more.
She told 'em to do their duty whar'ever their feet might roam,
An' to never forgit in battle their mother war prayin' at home,
An if (an' the tears nigh choked her) they should fall in front o' the foe,
She'd go to her blessed Savior an' ax Him to lighten the blow.

Bill lays an' awaits the summons 'neath Spottsylvania's sod,
An' on the field of Antietam Charley's spirit went back to God;
An' Tommy, our baby Tommy, we buried one starlit night
Along with his fallen comrades, just after the Wilderness fight.
The lightnin' struck our family tree, an' stripped it of every limb,
A-leavin' only this bare old trunk, a-standin' alone an' grim,
My boy, that's why your grandma, when you kneel to the God you love,
Makes you ax Him to watch your uncles, an' make 'em happy above.

That's why you sometimes see her with tear-drops in her eyes;
That's why you sometimes catch her a-tryin' to hide her sighs;
That's why at our great reunions she looks so solemn an'
sad;

That's why her heart seems a-breakin' when the boys are so jolly an' glad ;

That's why you sometimes find her in the bedroom overhead, Down on her knees a-prayin', with their pictures laid out on the bed ;

That's why the old-time brightness will light up her face no more,

Till she meets her hero warriors in the camp on the other shore.

An' when the great war was over, back came the veterans
true,

With not one star a-missin' from that azure field of blue,
An' the boys who on field o' battle had stood the fiery test
Formed posts o' the great Grand Army in the North, South, East, an' West.

Fraternity, Charity, Loyalty, is the motto 'neath which they train,

Their object to care for the helpless, an' banish sorrow an'
pain

From the homes o' the widows, an' orphans o' the boys who have gone before,

To answer their names at roll-call in that great Grand Army Corps.

An' that's why we wear these badges, the eagle an' flag an'
star.

Worn only by veteran heroes who fought in that bloody
war ;

An' that's why my old eyes glisten when talkin' about the fray,

An' that's why I call men "comrade" when I meet 'em
every day ;

An' that's why I tell your grandma, "I'm goin' to post tonight."

For thar's where I meet the old boys who stood with me in the fight,
And, my child, that's why I've taught you to love and revere the men
Who come here a-wearin' badges to fight those battles again.
They are the gallant heroes who stood 'mid the shot and shell,
An' follered the flyin' colors right into the mouth o' hell—
They are the men whose valor saved the land from disgrace an' shame,
An' lifted her back in triumph to her perch on the dome o'
fame;
An' as long as you live, my darling, till your pale lips in death are mute,
When you see that badge on a bosom, take off your hat an' salute;
An' if any ol' vet should halt you, an' question why you do,
Just tell him you've got a right to, fur your granddad's a comrade too.

HE CHANGED HIS VIEWS

An' so you've bin to Washington to that big 'campment thar'?

An' since the hoodoo's over I suppose you want to sw'ar
Fur bein' sich a cussed fool a-wastin' of yer cash
To whoop an' yell, an' wa'r a badge, an' all sich useless trash.

It seems to me a man's an ass to squander sich a sum
To hear agin the squeakin' fife an' 'tarnal rattlin' drum,
An' see a big, hot, dusty crowd o' fellers sich as us,
An' speechify, an' sing ol' songs, an' make a howlin' fuss.

They've bin a holdin' 'campments now fur—well, fur since the war,

An' I ain't bin to ary one, an' wa't is more I sw'ar
That they kin' keep on holdin' 'em till Gabriel's bugle blows,
But 'mong the foolish fellers thar' you wont see Uncle Mose.
I work an' toil mos' 'tarnal hard for all the cash I git,
An' I ain't idiot enough to go an' squander it Fur these confounded yearly speers o' men that wore the blue—

To put it plainly, Dan, I ain't as big a fool as you.

Bill Thompson thar' an' sent his love? Big S'argent Bill?
O, no—

I got it purty straight he died a dozen years ago—
Thar' sure enough? Stop lyin', Dan, or you may feel this boot,

I swar to gosh I'd give a cow to see that ol' galoot.
How did he look? The durned ol' cuss! Gray as a rat, I guess,

Big S'argent Bill, the jolliest boy we had in all our mess,
His heart in keepin' with his bulk, a brave ol' soldier, too—
An' so you seed 'im? Wish to gosh I could a bin with you.

Who? O, shet up! Jack Allison? You didn't see ol' Jack?
If you don't stop yer lyin' Dan, I'll break yer cussed back!
God bless his ol' good natured soul! Say does he mind it much

A swoppin' off one o' his legs at Vicksburg for a crutch?
Poor Jack! That was a fearful shot! A piece of screamin'
shell

Come shriekin' like a demon from that blazin' line o' hell,
An' left the poor boy layin' thar' with one leg shattered bad,

An' swearin' like a trooper, too! Great guns, but wa'nt he mad!

You seed ol' Chaplain Stewart, too? An' Captain Doubleday?

Say, Dan, I honest don't believe a 'tarnal word you say!

Who? Go to grass! Not little Tom! the same cute rascal still?

By Jinks, I'd ruther see that boy than find a dollar bill.

An' Simon Gregg? An' Mexico? An' lengthy Oscar Plumb,
Who used to sing the song about that gal he left to hum?

An' Frank Moran, the heartless cuss as stole the Colonel's ham.

An' swore it war a colored contraband? Well-I-be-dam!

Ed Bassett thar'? I've got you, Dan! That sort o' lie don't go,

Fur Ed's a cattle ranchin' now down in New Mexico—

Come all the way to see the boys? Wal, bless his lovin, eyes—

That's Ed, though—tackle anything, no matter what the size!

Who? Aleck Pierce, as toted me a mile or more one night
When I was wounded in the hip at that durned Shiloh
fight?

An' he was thar; an' said he come a-purpose to see me?
Wal, by the Gods of War! Say, Dan, Whar'll the next 'un be?

THE LAST ROLL-CALL.

With pallid face a soldier brave lay dying,
His life-blood dampening the Southern sod,
While all around him bleeding forms were lying,
With dim and death touched eyes upturned to God.
On every side the battle roared and thundered,
And shot and shell with maddening shrieks flew by,
And many souls, from mangled bodies sundered,
Soared upward to the Master's camp on high.

"Here! Here!" the dying soldier eager muttered,
And passing comrade knelt above his form
And asked him what he wished—if he had uttered
The call for help amid the battle's storm?
"Ah!" he replied, "I need no help from mortal,
(And o'er his face a smile angelic came),
The roll is being called at heaven's portal,
And I but answered when I heard my name."

JIM'S LETTER.

I sat on the crest of a mountain high
Overlooking Jornado's plain,
The mocking-bird sang in the woods close by
In a glad and sweet refrain,
And the doves were cooing among the trees,
And the deer browsed at my feet,
With the scent of wild flowers perfuming the breeze
It was Nature in Nature's retreat.

And my heart just danced to the song-bird's tune,
And forgotten was every care,
And it seemed that balmy and flowery June
Instead of the Winter was there,
And I rolled in the grass and laughed and sang
In a joyous and glad refrain,
Till the deer ran off and the old woods rang,
And the echo came back again.

Then a shot rang out and a bang! bang! bang!
And my heart leaped again with joy,
And I laughed once more till the old woods rang,
For I knew it was Harry, my boy.
Then near to my side on his foaming mare
He stopped, and I held my breath.
His face was the picture of cold despair,
And as white as the face of death.

"Speak out! Great God, don't look like that,
With your white face dusty and grim."

Then he said, as he raised his broad-brimmed hat,
"Here's a letter from Corporal Jim."
And he stole away to a tree close by,
With his head drooping low on his breast;
I knew it was death by the tear in his eye—
Jim's letter must tell the rest.

The blood in my veins seemed its course to retrace,
And the song birds of Heaven were still,
An eclipse came over the sunny face
Of that joyous and gladsome hill.
All Nature seemed hushed as I held in my hand
That message from comrade of mine,
And I can't explain and I don't understand,
But somehow—it started the brine.

With eager eyes and with trembling hand
I gazed for an instant, and then
My heart stood still; the writing I scanned
Was from one of God's own noble men.
The seal was broken, and the mist arose
In my eyes while I read it out:
"Who'll champion us now, God only knows,
Since Logan is mustered out."

Oh, comrades of mine, he was dearer to me
Than the wealth of my western wild,
And the soft balmy breeze and the doves on the tree
Seemed to moan, while I wept like a child.
Yes, boys, and I want you to understand
What I say I will never take back,
And I thought it was noble and brave and grand
To cry for a hero like Jack,

To cry in the wildwood when no one was near,
Save my boy, and he joined me, you bet,

For the child of a soldier to Jack was most dear,
And his grave with their tears will keep wet.
And who, if not I, should inscribe to the name
Of that hero now gone to his rest,
A song from the wildwood, the mountain and plain,
For Black Jack was a son of the West.

Our Great Alexander, our mightiest Chief,
Every heart-throb that beat in his breast,
Was the music that chimed in his heart for relief
For our widows and orphans distressed.
Sincere in his friendship, from trickery free,
With honesty's stamp on his face,
And we ask, as we bow low to Heaven's decree,
"Lord, raise up a man in his place."

A man whom the comrades can love and revere,
A soldier and statesman combined,
Upright in deportment, unconscious of fear,
Yet modest and gentle and kind.
A man who stood with us on many a field,
When the shots wildly shrieked in the air,
A man whose convictions never would yield,
A duplicate Jack, as it were.

“WHEN BILL COME HOME.”

Hold 'im? No. A yoke o' steers
 Couldn't held that boy o' mine,
W'en the call fur volunteers
 Come a ringin' down the line.
Patriotism strong an' pure
 Hit 'im like a burstin' bomb—
Sed he'd be a gin'ral. sure,
 W'en he come home.

Course his mother up an' cried,
 Jes' as any mother would
Ef her only joy an' pride
 Went away, perhaps fur good,
But he knocked her reasonin'
 Inter sort o' honey-comb—
Sed he'd make 'er smile ag'in,
 W'en he come home.

Off he march'd, an' I suppose
 No one in the regiment
Looked so fine in soger clothes
 As our Bill the day he went.
Neighbors 'lowed he'd turn out bad,
 But we told 'm how we'd show'm
W'at a noble boy we had,
 W'en Bill come home.

Got a letter now an' then Tellin' how he got along,
How he thought o' mother w'en
Tempted fur to do a wrong.
"An'," sed he, "you'll shout so loud
That you'll shatter heaven's dome.
'Cause you'll feel so monst'ous proud
W'en Bill comes home.

'Mong his letters thar' was one
More'n all the rest, perhaps,
Pleased us, fur he said he'd won
A leftenant's shoulder straps
Fur his brav'ry in a row
Down in Georgy, front o' Rome—
Said we'd hold our heads up now
W'en Bill come home.

Purty soon the papers said,
That fur conduct o' some sort,
Owin' to the way he led
Of his sogers 'gin a fort,
Some affair was read out loud
Makin' of him "Captain" Bloom—
"Lor!" we said, "won't we be proud,
W'en Bill comes home."

Then the news went o'er the land
O' that great Atlanter fight,
An' we couldn't understand
W'y our William didn't write.
Neighbors tried ter lift us out
O' the orful cloud o' gloom—
Sed they'd come an' help us shout,

W'en Bill come home.

* * * * *

Coffin in the baggage car,
Black as ever black could be.
All the neighbors standin' thar'
Pityin' of wife an' me
Meetin' of our darlin' boy
Jes' ter put 'im in the tomb,
Give us sorrow 'stead o' joy,
W'en Bill come home.

THE TRUESTORY OF MARCHING THROUGH GEORGIA.

Now lay the good old bugle down and let me toot my horn,
And lay aside the good old song, that's getting somewhat worn;

The shoe I think will fit you if you'll all own up the corn,
As we went marching through Georgia.

We never found a chicken that could roost out of our reach,
We seldom had a chaplain that could find the time to preach,
We never saw a soldier pass a shirt hung out to bleach,
As we went marching through Georgia.

Oh, how we used to toil along right through the swamps and bogs,
And how the ladies blushed at our dilapidated togs,
And how we showed our bravery assassinating hogs,
As we went marching through Georgia.

When charging on a chicken roost, the rebel girls cried "shame!"
And said our actions would disgrace the soldiers' honored
name.
They came at us with clubs and dogs, but we got there just the same,
As we went marching through Georgia.

When coming in from foraging sometimes we would get caught,

The colonel then would paw the ground, and swear he'd have us shot,
And then he'd eye our captured fowls and fine us half we got,
As we went marching through Georgia.

Whene'er we'd catch a grandpa goose, too old and tough and strong,
And thought it was too rich for us, but good for the "bong tong,"
We'd send it to the general, and laugh both loud and long,
As we went marching through Georgia.

When ordered up some earthwork, or some battery to take,
I've seen some heavy charges, that caused the earth to quake,
They were nothing to the charges the sutlers used to make,
As we were marching through Georgia.

SCENE IN A SOLDIERS' HOME.

Adjutant, read that letter ag'in.

I kin scarcely believe my ears—
My hearin' is gettin' meaner 'n sin,

As I creep along in years,
An' it sounds blame funny fur John to say,
He wants me at home ag'in right away.

That's w'at it says, dead sartin, sure,

An' he calls me his "father dear,"
That—arter drivin' me from his door,
An' a forcin' of me here.

I reckon the Lord has tuk my part,
By givin' the boy a change o' heart.

An' his wife, she writes a line or two,

Sayin' how they miss me there,
An' how she weeps at the sad, sad view
O' my empty easy-chair.

Well, well, w'ats the world a-driving at,
W'en it brings about sich changes as that?

I'll tell you, Adjutant, how it was:

John married two years ago,
An' said it was fur my good, because

I was gittin' old, you know,
An' he reckoned we needed a woman there
To 'tend the house and give me some care.

She seemed like an angel sproutin' wings,
Under John's trainin', I guess,
An' she humped around an' looked arter things,
With remarkable quickliness ;
An' to me she was just as good an' kind
As any man's darter you could find.

W'en John came in from the field one day
He sez to me, "Father," sez he,
"You're a-gittin' old, an' in feeblish way,
W'y not deed the farm to me?
Then you'll have no care, an' me 'n my wife
Will see to your comfort all your life."

Well, Adjutant, that looked proper, quite,
An' I told him I was agreed,
An' he went to town to a lawyer that night,
An' had him make out the deed.
An' then I lolled back in my old arm-chair,
An' thanked the Lord that I hadn't a care.

All at once Amandy got awful cross,
An' never give me a smile,
An' John begun to tear 'round an' boss
In a most presumptuous style,
An' if I'd attempt fur to interfere,
He'd crush me by sayin', "I'm master here."

Things kep' a gittin' wuss an' wuss,
An' it come in my head one day,
Like a shot from an ol'-time blunderbuss,
That the ol' man was in the way,
An' now that they had the property,
The nex' move was how to get rid of me.

An' so they made a hell on earth
O' the home I loved so dear,
An' the boy I'd doted upon since his birth
Insisted on sendin' me here,
An' Amandy chipped in, sayin' spitefully,
'Twas the only place fit for such as me.

An' now they are sorry. Say, Adjutant,
Jest write 'em a letter fur me,
How happy they've made me, and how I want
To return to them instantly;
An' tell 'em I thank the good Lord above
For fillin' their hearts with the ol'-time love.

But hol' on! Aha! I see it now—
Tear that up, and write 'em that I Am happy an' satisfied here, an' how
I'll stay right here till I die—
That two thousand dollars back pension I got
Is the Lord that's a-movin' their hearts. Eh? What?

CHEERS FOR THE LIVING, TEARS FOR THE DEAD.

When we gather around the camp fire
 To talk of battles fought,
Of the camps, the sieges and marches,
 And our Union so dearly bought,
Let us not forget our comrades,
 Who their warmest life-blood shed—
When we sound a cheer for the living,
 Let us drop a tear for the dead.

When the post room rings with laughter,
 Or resounds with the rattling song,
And we feel so gay and jolly,
 As the moments speed along,
Let us pause in our merry making,
 And reverent bow each head,
And still our cheers for the living
 While we drop a tear for the dead.

In the blazing front of battle,
 Where shot and shell flew fast,
Where the very ground was reeling,
 Like a tree before the blast,
The boys who have gone before us,
 Their blood in the great cause shed—
Then while we cheer for the living
 Let us drop a tear for the dead.

In the bivouac of heaven,
On the banks of the sparkling stream,
Where the tree of life is waving,
Their camp fires radiant gleam,
And there they watch for our coming,
With the spirits' martial tread—
Then while we cheer for the living
Let us drop a tear for the dead.

SUNSHINE.

I never like to see a man a 'rastlin' with the dumps
'Cause in the game of life he doesn't always catch the trumps,
But I can always cotton to a free and easy cuss,
As takes his dose, and thanks the Lord it isn't any wuss.
There ain't no use o' kickin' and swearin' at your luck,
You can't correct the trouble more'n you can drown a duck.
Remember, when beneath the load your sufferin' head is bowed,
That God 'll sprinkle sunshine in the trail of every cloud.

If you should see a fellow-man with trouble's flag unfurled,
And lookin' like he didn't have a friend in all the world,
Go up and slap him on the back, and holler "how d' you do,"
And grasp his hand so warm he'll know he has a friend in you.

Then ax him what's a hurtin' 'im, and laugh his cares away,
And tell him that the darkest night is just afore the day.
Don't talk in graveyard palaver, but say it right out loud,
That God 'll sprinkle sunshine in the trail of every cloud.

This world at best is but a hash of pleasure and of pain,
 Some days are bright and sunny, and some all sloshed with rain,

And that's just how it ought to be, for when the clouds roll by

We'll know just how to 'preciate the bright and smilin' sky.

So learn to take it as it comes, and don't sweat at the pores
 Because the Lord's opinion doesn't coincide with yours,

But always keep rememberin', when cares your path enshroud.

That God has lots of sunshine to spill behind the cloud.

SLEEP, SOLDIER, SLEEP.

[A Memorial Day Song.]

Sleep, soldier, sleep, thy warfare is o'er,
 War's dread alarms shall wake thee no more,
 Sleep, calmly sleep, 'neath the flowering sod,
 Waiting the reveille sounded from God.
 Over thy resting place bright flowers we twine,
 Gratitude's emblems on loyalty's shrine,
 Fruits of your valor we gratefully reap,
 Freedom and liberty—sleep—sleep—sleep.

Beautiful flowers of Spring,
 Lovingly here we bring,
 Sacred thy memory ever we'll keep,
 Under the grassy sod,
 Waiting the call from God,
 Sweetly and peacefully—sleep—sleep—sleep.

Rest, soldier, rest, thy peace thou hast earned,
On the red fields where the battle fires burned—
Rest, sweetly rest, for aweary wert thou,
Winning the laurels which circled thy brow.
Soon will the trumpeter wake thee again,
Sounding "Assembly" on heaven's bright plain,
There with your comrades in realms of the blest,
Through all eternity, rest, sweet rest.

Beautiful flowers of Spring,
Lovingly here we bring,
Sacred thy memory ever we'll keep,
Under the grassy sod,
Waiting the call from God,
Sweetly and peacefully—sleep—sleep—sleep.

WHO THE HEROES WERE.

You "never was scared in battle?" Here,
Old comrade, don't make a break like that!
The man don't live who was free from fear
When the vicious bullets began to spat,
And the cannons belched from their iron throats
The deafening notes of the song of war—
The frightful, terrible, thundering notes
That caused the eternal earth to jar.

I've heard men say they were just as cool
In the heat of battle as they would be
In a quiet seat in a Sabbath school,
But they couldn't find a believer in me.
I never flinched, never shirked a call,
But several times in the war swept south
If I'd been shot through the heart the ball
Would have had to hit me square in the mouth.

It's the silliest sort of talk we hear—
And hear from soldiers of solid worth—
That they stood in the front and felt no fear
When the rumblings of battle convulsed the earth.
I hold that our bravest men were those
Who felt alarm at the cannon's roar,
Yet never rearward pointed their toes,
But stood like men till the battle was o'er.

NOT A SIN TO LIE THAT WAY.

The old vets now will often sit and tell their loving wives
Of many stirring incidents that crossed their soldier lives—
The marches, camps and sieges, the battles hard they fought,
And how they stood up gallantly amid the storms of shot;
But raids on chicken rendezvous they'll swear they never made,

Nor never helped assassinate a hog in Southern glade,
Nor never "beat" the Sutler when they drew their monthly pay—

They seem to think it not a sin to lie that way.

They'll talk of great privations they were called on to endure,
And how they'd laugh at hardships which their "kicking" couldn't cure—

The beating rains, the driving snows, and many a dire distress

They will relate in sentences of glowing vividness.

They'll scowl with indignation at hint of how they shirked,
And how the many "soldier" games successfully they worked;
They never dodged guard duty, but were always prompt,
they'll say,

And seem to think it not a sin to lie that way.

They'll tell of how from blanket beds their truant thoughts would roam

Unto the dear, good, loyal girls they left in distant home,
And how their martial hearts would throb with rapture at the thought

Of sweethearts' loving welcome when the battles all were fought.

Just hint to one that he was sweet on some fair Southern girl,

He'll shake his head emphatic and his lip will scornful curl;
He'll say that to his own love he was loyal every day,
And seem to think it not a sin to lie that way.

With faces tinged with sorrow as memory takes them back, They'll tell of pangs of hunger when the rations would get slack,

And how the corn from mules they'd filch, so desp'rate did they grow,

While staring in starvation's face in chase of Southern foe.
And then with look of innocence they'll tell of many a raid
Their more ungodly comrades on the big plantations made,
But raiding was a crime which at their own doors didn't lay—

They seem to think it not a sin to lie that way.

"THE SUNSHINE STATE."

When Governor Prince was asked if New Mexico had a pet name he replied that it had not, but that when the crown of statehood was placed upon the brow of the fair Territory he could think of no appellation which would be so appropriate as "The Sunshine State." This name at once became popular with the people of the Territory, and at the christening of the new state it will no doubt be conferred upon it.

From the Raton mountains on the north to the Texas line on the south, and from the eastern to the western boundaries of New Mexico, every city, town, village and ranch is a health resort. Especially is this true in lung troubles, the pure, dry atmosphere exerting its healing influence like magic on all pulmonary diseases. In all parts of the Territory can be found men who went there but living skeletons awaiting the summons from death, but who are now strong, robust men in the full enjoyment of magnificent health. In that unsurpassed climate the flush of health was quickly wooed back to their pale, emaciated faces, and the old-time strength renewed its reign in their shrunken limbs. The day is not far distant when New Mexico will be the great Mecca for consumptives, for no climate on the face of the broad earth is so effective for the cure of pulmonary diseases.

Not only as a health but as a pleasure resort is New Mexico destined to become famous. The days are but seldom uncomfortably hot, and the nights are delightfully cool—so cool that in midsummer a heavy blanket is required for the comfort of the sleeper. The great diversity of scenery, mountain and plain, valley and rolling prairie, deep, picturesque canons and dashing mountain streams of crystalline beauty, alive with trout, make of it the most beautiful and attractive land for the pleasure seeker along the whole southwestern border. The severity of a northern winter is never known in that land of perpetual sunshine, and, excepting in the higher mountain localities, snow is rarely seen.

I cannot here give space to deservedly mention its farming, gardening and fruit growing industries. There are no crop failures, for irrigation is yet required, and water is run upon the growing crops whenever necessary. As has been the case in all newly settled localities rains are becoming more frequent, and irrigation ditches will ere long only be necessary in cases of drouth.

Deer, bear, elk, mountain-sheep, antelope and other species of large game can be found in abundance, and jack and cottontail rabbits, turkey, grouse, quail, ducks, geese, etc., are found in almost every locality. It is indeed a sportsmen's paradise.

My home has been in that sunny land for fourteen years, and there I expect to remain until called to the only land which can surpass it in loveliness.

The land beyond the dark and rolling river,
Where faithful ones like you and I will cluster,
In rapturous joy forever and forever—
Provided we can pass the final muster.
