

Concord
5 September 1838.

My dear Clough,

A very
dear honored friend of mine, Miss Elizabeth Howe, goes to spend her year in Europe. This custom of my countrymen is rarely so much honored as by this act of my friends. Who now will stay at home, when she has given them leave to go?

We do not often find you a traveller who has so much penetration, or correct taste, or so much goodness, and I am naturally ambitious that she should see the best. You must give her any advice that occurs to you for the better direction, in the first time that she stays in London. Miss

As you is well acquainted with some of your old friends here, with Mrs Lowell + Miss Jungis (Mrs Tappan) and with your new friends, that is, those who heartily thank you for verses.

I am afraid that Madame Prodicow, whom I saw, forgot on her return to advise you to come to America; and I am afraid if she did, that you have forgotten it. It is only

When you English are just out of Oxford, that there is any platticity in you.
My colors must be laid fast on surfaces that harden so quickly. We would have made a great man of you by the immensity of the demand in this vacant country; Whilff, in London, you will proudly say, see the crowd of competitors, what need of my straining myself? Are there not enough already? Charge your Clough, whom I wish I knew, not to let you flumber nor flirk. Yours affectionately, R. W. Emerson
